Since Mr. Alexander the preachers at Ashley have been Revs. Asa Bowdish, J. G. Eckman, J. F. Wilbur, W. S. Wentz, and J. Underwood, the present pastor.

The class here was known as the "Pees neighborhood class." The members were Elijah Richards, leader; Louisa Richards, Samuel and Lydia Pees, Thomas and Maria Brown, Joseph and Sarah Barnes, Phebe and Deborah Williams, Christian Saum, Hannah Miller and Rachael Crosby. The first official board was appointed in 1848, as follows: John Labar and William C. Morse, local preachers; Andrew Lutz, exhorter; Harvey Holcomb, Lorenzo Ruggles, Ziba Kremer, Elisha Blackman and Stephen Lee, stewards.

In 1868 the society built the present church, of brick, on Main street. It is forty by seventy feet, with basement, and cost $8,000. It was dedicated in November, 1869, by Rev. B. I. Ives. The society at present numbers 150 members. The parsonage on the lot adjoining the church was built in 1870, at a cost of $3,000. The church property is valued at $20,000.

The Sunday-school was organized simultaneously with the society, and in 1851 Andrew Lutz was superintendent, and there were sixty scholars. John White was superintendent from 1855 to 1866. J. K. P. Fenner is the present superintendent, and the school numbers over 200 scholars.

COALVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

About 1834 a Sabbath-school was organized by William E. Gildersleeve, son of Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve, in the old log school-house that stood on the left side of the road leading over to Buttonwood. There had been occasional preaching in this school-house by the Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Mr. May of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. Mr. Owen of the M. E. Church. Sometimes services were held in the barn of Samuel Pease, near by. Before any church was built at Coalville, as it was then called, Mr. Gildersleeve and his family taught Sunday-school in the vicinity for about ten years, and during his sickness for two years Samuel Huntington took charge of the school, with Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt for assistants.

The log school-house having become too small, a church was built in 1844. The building committee consisted of Frederick Detrick, Daniel Frederick, and David W. Inman. The lot was donated by George Lazarus, of Buttonwood, on condition that there should be no night meetings held. The church was finished in October, 1844, and the pulpit occupied by Rev. John Dorrance, of the Wilkes-Barre Presbyterian Church. After the death of Mr. Dorrance the church grew into importance only as the town increased in population. The deed for the church lot was obtained of the Baltimore Coal Company, Dec. 11th, 1849. The pulpit was occupied for some time by Rev. Thomas P. Hunt, the celebrated temperance advocate. Rev. Jacob Weidman served this church, Nanticoke, and Shickshinny for five years, closing his labors in 1865. The present pastor, William J. Day, began his ministry as an evangelist, in July, 1865. The church was organized January 17th, 1866, by the Presbytery of Luzerne, with 17 members. Daniel Frederick, Robert H. Johnson, and Robert Brown were chosen elders.

In April, 1868, subscription for a new church was opened and $400 was immediately subscribed. The new church was dedicated February 15th, 1860, Rev. Dr. J. T. Duryea, of Brooklyn, preaching the dedicatory sermon. The church complete cost $8,500. The old church was remodeled at a cost of $768, and dedicated November 13th, 1871, by Rev. H. H. Wells, of Forty Fort. It is occupied by the large and flourishing Presbyterian Sunday-school. Rev. William J. Day was called as the pastor September 17th, 1873. In the summer of 1879 the church was repaired. The church property is valued at $10,000.

The membership in 1844 was five, as follows: Mrs. Mary Steele (mother of Mrs. Daniel Frederick), Samuel Huntington and wife, Mrs. Preston, and John Foust. The present membership, including Mountain Top and Sugar Notch, is 260.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

ODD FELLOWS.

Coalville Lodge, No. 689, I. O. O. F. was instituted December 11th, 1869, with 22 charter members. The officers installed at the organization were: N. G., J. W. Cole; V. G., E. O'Neill; secretary, James Black; assistant secretary, F. H. Clark; treasurer, John Campbell. The present officers are: N. G., Henry Skillman; V. G., E. P. Henwood; secretary, E. O'Neill; assistant secretary, S. N. Ruth; treasurer, Jacob Drumheller. The list of past grands comprises the names of J. W. Cole, E. O'Neill, John Campbell, H. S. Dennis, L. H. Carle, Wilson Beers, A. C. Fisher, S. B. Watson, C. B. Stivers, John Schwab, C. E. Goble, F. H. Clark, J. Drumheller, Elijah Doney, James Gilbert, W. F. Kreidler, Benjamin McIntosh, George Belles and T. C. Williams.

The lodge meets every Wednesday night in Odd Fellows' Hall. It has 111 members, and is in a flourishing condition.

MASONIC.

Coalville Lodge, No. 474, Ancient York Masons was instituted October 27th, 1870. The charter members were Amzi Lebar and the following first officers: James M. Snyder, W. M.; James Flemmings, S. W.; David H. Dotterer, J. W.; John Campbell, treasurer; John C. Wells, secretary; Rev. William J. Day, S. D.; Jeremiah N. Gettle, J. D., and Peter Rudranft, pursuivant.

The succeeding masters of the lodge have been: James M. Snyder, James M. Flemmings, David H. Dotterer, John C. Wells, Morris J. Keck, William D. White, Benjamin F. Tucker, William H. Taylor and John H. Hunt.

The regular communications are held on Tuesday evening on or before the full moon in each month, in Masonic Hall.

The officers for 1879 were: Thomas C. Williams, W. M.; Daniel O. Eroh, S. W.; Lines E. Tennant, J. W.; John B. Graham, treasurer; Benjamin F. Tucker, secretary. The present membership is 83.

AMERICAN MECHANICS.

Ashley Council, No. 149, Junior Order United American Mechanics.—This council was organized May 18th, 1874, with the following charter members: George A. Coles, E. W. Cole, W. V. Warner, John A. Jones, Charles Beltz, Robert Dunlap, G. W. Jones, G. Leggett, T. W. Clark, Jerry Sassaman, W. F. C. Buchanan, Arthur E. Detto, J. F. Kibler, John Warner and Eldy Slacker.

The first officers of this council were: C. D. Herring, councillor; A. E. Detto, vice-councillor; John A. Jones, recording secretary; Charles Beltz, assistant recording secretary; E. W. Cole, financial secretary; E. Slacker, treasurer; Robert Dunlap, conductor; George A. Coles, warden; John Warner, inside sentinel; G. W. Jones, outside sentinel; trustees—John A. Jones, Charles Beltz and George A. Coles.

November 15th, 1874, the hall in which the council met was destroyed by fire, together with the property of the council. Meetings are now held on Monday evening of each week in the Ashley Bank Hall. The membership is 36, with a surplus capital of $500.

Ashley Council, No. 268, O. U. A. M. was organized December 14th, 1875, with the following named persons as charter members: William Swank, James Metz, Russell Buchannon, Edward O'Neill, John Young, Simon Miller, Charles Keener, F. H. Clark, Charles R. Berry, John H. Johnson, Michael Warner, E. P. Henwood, John D. Johnson, J. H. Buchannon, John W. Johnson, Arthur E. Detto, Charles Nye, Elijah Halderman, M. E. Tiffany, Frank Pugh, David F. Reed.

The officers serving the first term, commencing December 14th, 1875, were: C., E. O'Neill; V. C., F. H. Clark; R. S., J. H. Johnson; A. R. S., M. E. Tiffany; F. S., John Young; treasurer, E. P. Henwood; Ind., James Metz; Ed., Russell Buchannon; I. P., J. D. Johnson; O. P., J. H. Buchannon; trustees—W. Swank, 18 months; F. H. Clark, 12 months; E. O'Neill, 6 months.

The subsequent councillors have been as follows: 1876, F. H. Clark; 1877, J. H. Johnson and E. P. Henwood; 1878, J. D. Johnson, John Young; 1879, J. W. Johnson, E. W. Breyer.

The council meets every Friday night in Mechanics' Hall, Main street.

NANTICOKE BOROUGH.

UP to the advent of the "paleface" this place was occupied by the Nanticoke tribe of Indians; hence the name. They were attracted by the productive shad fishery. Near the river, on the west side of the creek, was the old camp of the Nanticokes. Upon and around the old camp ground have been found many relics of the red-man's skill. The Nanticokes' burial ground was between Broadway and the river, a little below the iron bridge. The plot of ground was a little elevated and mound-shaped. Here also many relics of the Indians have been found, including their bones.

In 1778 John and Mason F. Alden built a forge near Col. Washington Lee's grist-mill on Nanticoke creek. The forge contained one hammer and only one fire. The hammer was brought from Philadelphia to Harrisburg in a wagon, and from there to Nanticoke in a Durham boat. The works were abandoned soon after 1828, having been in operation at least fifty years.

The site of the borough was formerly owned by William Stewart, who in 1798 surveyed it into town lots (Main street being laid out 100 feet wide), which were sold during that and a few succeeding years. He then sold the balance of the town to Matthias Hollenback, who sold to John Mills and others. Stewart paid his patent or land grant fees by labor performed in 1825 on the Wilkes-Barre bridge.

As late as 1820, when Silas Alexander located here, the whole of the territory south of Main street was a dense wilderness, and between Main street and the river the land was a swamp, considered worthless. There were then but two or three houses. John Mills located west of Spring street, and Esq. Campbell east of Walnut street. Esq. Jennison and Washington and James Lee came about the same time.

Mr. Silas Alexander says that he has assisted in taking from the river at one haul of the net 9,999 large shad. The price of shad at that time (1820-25) was from 5 to 8 cents each according to size, or one drink of New England rum per shad.

The first coal mined at this place was mined by Col. Washington Lee about 1825. He opened his mine near the river, and as there was no market up the river for coal he shipped a little down the river in Durham boats. The Stiver mine was opened about 1825.

The first school-house was built of logs, before 1820, on the site of the old union church, in the east part of the borough. The first teacher was Eliphalet Buckley, and in 1820 Silas Alexander was the teacher. Among the men who sent children to Alexander's school were Colonel Washington Lee, James S. Lee, Isaac Ripple, John Mills and Thomas Bennett.

The first tavern was kept by Matthias Gruver, on Main street, nearly opposite where O'Neill's store stands. In 1820 Thomas Bennett kept a tavern where Mrs. Rouse lives, and the wing part of the present building was the old tavern.

In 1820, and for several years after, the site of the Nanticoke Hotel and Alexander's block was used for coal pits for the manufacture of charcoal. At that time the site of the Susquehanna Coal Company's works, on the flats in the north part of the borough, was a worthless swamp, which was subsequently drained at the expense of the State.

The pioneer grist-mill, saw-mill, oil-mill and forge, or triphammer shop, were built in 1820 by John Oint, and sold to Colonel Washington Lee at or before completion. Lee built a distillery and store at the same place about 1825. These establishments were on Newport creek, near the depot of L. & S. railroad, and some of the same sites are now occupied by the Susquehanna Coal Company's breaker No. 1, engine house and other buildings.

The first blacksmith was Thomas Bennett. His shop stood opposite his tavern, where the National Hotel now stands. The coal he used was taken from the bank of the creek, near the iron bridge. He also tried the experiment of burning coal in a grate in his house. He used steamboat instead of stove or grate coal, therefore his parlor fire was not a success.

The first resident physician was Alden I. Bennett, who came here in 1825. He was succeeded by Drs. Thompson, Robbins and Harry Hakes.

The first postmaster, David Thompson, was appointed in 1830, and kept the office at his house on the hill, near where C. M. Richards now lives. In 1838 Mr. Thompson and Daniel Stiles built a store where Washington Lee's banking house now stands. The post-office was kept there a few years.

In 1838 Henry Stains built a store on the site of the Susquehanna Company's store. In 1845 there was a small tannery on the site of the Fountain Hotel. In 1851 there were but 56 dwellings within the present limits of Nanticoke. In 1880 the population was 3,884.

INCORPORATION AND OFFICERS.

The charter for Nanticoke borough was granted January 31st, 1874, and the first borough election was held at the Fountain Hotel, kept by Xavier Wernett, on Tuesday, February 17th, 1874. E. N. Alexander and Patrick Shea were the inspectors. Lewis C. Green was elected burgess; Xavier Wernett, E. N. Alexander, Patrick Shea, George T. Morgan, Orin Council, Samuel Lines, William Fairchild, L. W. Carey, Thomas R. Williams, Joseph Shepherd and George Ahrs, school board; Samuel Keithline, justice of the peace; George Hill, assessor; Samuel Line, L. W. Carey and Dr. A. A. Lope, auditors; L. W. Carey, clerk of the town council. The successive burgesses have been as follows:

1875, 1877, Lewis C. Green; 1876, Milton Stiles; 1878, 1879, I. D. Williams. The present town council consists of Thomas McNeish, John H. James, William Bayless, Alexander Thompson, Frank Micklass and John Dunn; Robert J. Lanning clerk. The following justices of the peace have been elected in the borough: Samuel Keithline, 1874; Isaac D. Williams, 1878; Florence D. McCarty, 1879.

THE SUSQUEHANNA COAL COMPANY

in 1878, as officially reported, operated slopes 1, 2 and 4, tunnels 1, 2 and 4 and shafts 1 and 2 at Nanticoke, of which Joseph Stickney was general superintendent; Owen Richards assistant superintendent and general outside foreman, with H. M. Frederick as outside foreman. George T. Morgan was inside foreman, and the mine bosses were: slope 1, Timothy Downing; tunnels 1 and 2, David W. Evans; slopes 2 and 4, George Feltmeyer; tunnel 4, Samuel Witson; shaft 1, John Parry; shaft 2, Thomas R. Williams.

The coal from these different mines was passed through breakers 1 and 2 at Nanticoke. The men and boys employed in connection with breaker No. 1, inside the mines, numbered 282, and on the surface 222. The total production of coal for 1878 was 82,294 tons. In connection with No. 2 there were 408 men and boys employed underground, and 203 on the surface. With 184 days worked, there were produced 254,638 tons of coal, or 1,383 tons per day.

A new coal breaker of the Susquehanna Coal Company, at Nanticoke was duly "christened" April 3d, 1880, and will be known as "No. 5." The structure is one of the finest in these coal regions, embracing all the latest and most modern improvements in this species of architecture. It was erected under the supervision of Mr. J. H. Bowden, engineer and architect of Wilkes-Barre. The capacity of the breaker is from 1,600 to 1,800 tons per day when in full running order, and it will employ about 150 hands.

PRESENT INSTITUTIONS OF NANTICOKE.

Nanticoke contains seven churches, four hotels, six dry goods and grocery and two hardware and grocery stores, a merchant tailor's establishment, two cabinet shops, three blacksmith and two wagon shops, three jewelry and three drug stores, four physicians (A. A. Lape, William G. Robbins, R. T. Hylton and S. L. Holley), a banking house, a printing office, a graded school and four other schools, three coal breakers, and a company store where all kinds of goods are sold. The place is well provided with railroad facilities by the Lehigh and Susquehanna & D. L. and W. roads. The present postmaster is Silas Alexander. He was appointed by Postmaster General Wickliff.

THE PRESS OF NANTICOKE.

The first number of the Nanticoke Chronicle was issued January 4th, 1879, by Snyder & Gibson. The paper is 15 by 20 inches and is issued weekly, with a present circulation of 500. May 1st, 1879, the firm of Snyder & Gibson was dissolved. North M. Hartman became and remained editor and publisher.

CHURCHES OF NANTICOKE.

Besides the churches whose histories are given below there are at Nanticoke the St. Stanislaus Roman Catholic church and the Primitive Methodist society, of which we were unable to obtain data for histories.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

About the year 1812, when Nanticoke was yet a wilderness and a swamp, such itinerants as Benjamin G. Paddock, Ralph Lanning, Ebenezer Doolittle, Joseph Kinkaid, Israel Chamberlain, Abram Lawson, Israel B. Cook, Thomas McGee, Alpheus Davis, Benjamin Bidlack, John Rhodes and Marmaduke Pearce visited Nanticoke. A class was formed, composed of David and Susan Thompson, Martha and Priscilla Lee, Mary Miller, Richard Keithline, Hannah E. Stiles, James and William Thompson and Elizabeth Mills. Class and prayer meetings were held at the log cabins of the settlers till a log school-house was built on the site of the old union church. The latter was built in 1830, with a basement for the district school and the upper part for church purposes. It was about 24 by 36 feet, one story high, with no gallery, and the entrance was at the rear of the building. This church was to be for the use of the Methodists and Presbyterians particularly, but other orthodox denominations could occupy it when not wanted by the other two. The lot was deeded to David Thompson, James Lee, Henry Linn, Silas Alexander, Washington Lee and others.

From 1861, when the present Presbyterian church was completed, both congregations worshiped in that until 1874, when the Nanticoke class was incorporated under the title of "Nanticoke Methodist Episcopal church," with Thomas Hill, George O. Williams, John Puckey, John Letcher and Luther Curtis as trustees.

About this time the two societies separated, the Methodists holding their services in a hall during 1875. The corner stone of the present church edifice was laid in 1876 by G. R. Hair, then presiding elder of the Wyoming district, assisted by Rev. T. C. Roskelly, preacher in charge. In the latter part of 1876 the basement was completed and occupied, although the church was not finished until April, 1880. It was dedicated March 5th, 1880, by Bishop Thomas Bowman, assisted by W. H. Oliver, P. E., and other clergymen. It is of wood, 45 by 60 feet, and can seat 450. It cost about $4,500. The lot was deeded by the Susquehanna Coal Company to Luther Curtis, John Puckey, George O. Willever, John Letcher and Thomas Hill, trustees.

In 1877 the society built a parsonage on the lot adjoining the east side of the church, at a cost of $500. The present value of the church property is $10,000. In January, 1880, the membership numbered 87.

The preachers who have served this people from 1874 to this writing are: Rev. George M. Colville, 1874; Rev. A. W. Hood, 1875; Rev. T. C. Roskelly, 1876 to 1879, and Rev. Levi Jennison, who was appointed to this charge in April, 1879.

NANTICOKE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

In the opening of this century a few hard working farmers in Hanover and Newport townships met for worship in a school-house near Mr. Conrad Lines's. On the 27th of November, 1829, Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve and Rev. Nicholas Murray (the celebrated author of Kirwan's letters to Bishop Hughes), who was then or became soon afterward pastor of the Wilkes-Barre Congregational Church, met the people at the above named school-house to organize a church. Mr. Murray preached, after which certificates of dismissal were granted to the following members of the Wilkes-Barre congregation with a view to their uniting in a new organization: John Schleppey, Anderson Dana, jr., Henry Styer, Elizabeth Fairchild, Mary Line, Mary Lueder, Christian Schleppey, Anna Styer, John Sorber, Solomon Mill, Abraham Arnold, Sarah Schleppey, Clara Sorber, Elizabeth R. Styer, Elizabeth J. Thomas, Rachel Whipple, Lorenda Dilly, Margaret Fairchild.

These persons voted to organize a Presbyterian church to be called the Presbyterian Church of Hanover and Newport. John Schleppey, Anderson Dana, jr., and Henry Styer were elected elders, and J. Schleppey deacon.

At this time Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve officiated as minister in charge.

The years of service for each minister appear on the records of the church only as presiding as moderators of sessional meetings. From these sources we find in 1832 Rev. Wm. Rhods presiding; in 1836, Rev. M. Corse; 1837, Rev. E. H. Snowden. September 14th, 1839, Robert Robins, sen., was added to the eldership.

May 31st, 1843, Rev. E. H. Snowden closed his connection with the church. July 1st, 1843, Rev. W. Hunting became stated supply. From May, 1845, the church was served by Rev. E. H. Snowden and Rev. Thomas P. Hunt. Darwin Cook, then stationed at Conyngham valley, was invited to come one-half of his time and preach alternate Sabbaths for one hundred dollars salary. April 20th, 1847, we find the church under his active labors, with an earnest missionary spirit, and 26 members on the roll. Rev. D. Cook began his labors May 31st, 1846. In 1848 he closed them. In 1849 and up to 1854 Rev. E. H. Snowden appears as minister.

April 14th, 1860, a committee consisting of Rev. John Dorrance, Rev. Thomas P. Hunt and Hon. Orestus Collins, elder of the Wilkes-Barre church, was sent by the presbytery to ascertain the condition of the church. The committee unanimously resolved to reorganize the church.

The old members remaining were John Schleppey, Susan Schleppey, Susan Rumbach, Elizabeth Fairchild, Mary Lines, John S. Robbins, S. Robbins, Lavina Espy, Elizabeth Lape, Elizabeth Rasely, Susan Kocher, Mrs. Silas Alexander and Margaret Lutsey. To these were added by dismission from the church of Wilkes-Barre Mrs. Elizabeth Alexander, Miss Phoebe A. Alexander (now Mrs. T. McNeish), John Fairchild, Martha Fairchild and Catherine Koerner. Beside these Mrs. Sarah Lee

(Miss Anderson), Miss and Annie Fairchild were received into membership on profession. The next Sabbath, April 15th, 1860, after a sermon by Rev. John Dorrance, John Fairchild, elder elect, was ordained, the Lord's Supper administered, and the church fully organized under the name of the Nanticoke Presbyterian Church.

The church was supplied by Rev. Jacob Weidman, of the Board of Missions.

In September, 1862, the work of building a new church was begun. The church was finished and dedicated in the fall of 1863.

July 16th, 1865, Rev. William J. Day began his labors. During the winter of 1871 a union revival service resulted in the accession of 22 members, besides 7 others received under instruction. The labors of Rev. W. J. Day continued until 1874, after which the church was served by Rev. H. H. Wells and Rev. Arthur Johnson. The present pastor of the church is Rev. J. P. Harsen, who came as stated supply, preaching his first sermon November 23d, 1879. The elders are George A. Pehle and James A. McFarland; trustees—O. F. Ferris (president), A. A. Enke (secretary), H. S. Fairchild (treasurer), W. H. Bates and E. B. Decker. Sunday-school superintendent, O. F. Ferris. Number of scholars, 145.

NANTICOKE WELSH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This society was organized May 29th, 1870, by a few of the Welsh inhabitants of the borough, under the title of "United Society of Congregationalists and Calvinistic Methodists." The original members were David N. Williams, John Mathews, William L. Evans, William Mathews, Mary Mathews, Mary Thomas, Mary Jones, Ann Evans, Gwenllian Lewis, Jennett Davies and Richard Williams.

Meetings were held in the old school-house until 1874, when the society built its present church on Main street, which is of wood, twenty-five by forty-five feet. It cost $2,400, and was dedicated in November, 1874. The membership is 66. The value of the church property is $3,000. Thomas F. Jacobs is the clerk of the church.

Rev. George Hill was pastor from 1872 to 1876. Since then the church has been supplied by ministers from other places.

The Sunday-school was organized with the society, and is in a flourishing condition, with an average attendance of 75 scholars.

NANTICOKE WELSH BAPTIST CHURCH.

In June, 1870, the Baptists of this place assembled in a private house to consider the organization of a church. Most of them were members of the Welsh Baptist church of Wilkes-Barre. About twelve of those present went the following Sunday to Wilkes-Barre, and were organized by the pastor, the Rev. Theophilus Jones, into a regular Baptist church. Job Samuel and John Williams were at the same time ordained deacons.

The members at first worshiped in private houses. They engaged the Rev. Mr. Jones as pastor for the first year to preach once a month; he was to receive $200 as salary.

For the first twelve months the church prospered as well as could be expected. The summer of 1871 brought quite a number of new members. After this accession it was determined that a meeting-house should be built. The lot, the northwest corner of Slope and Main streets, was a gift of the Susquehanna Coal Company, through its agent, Mr. Stickney. Soon the foundation was laid, and the wood-work was commenced early in July, 1871. By the end of September a house was ready for use. It was twenty-four by thirty-four feet, and cost $1,000, and it was not long before it was free from debt. By the time the society was ready to move to the building the Rev. Mr. Jones had resigned. Rev. D. Davies, from Cardiff, South Wales, who had just arrived in this country, was unanimously called to be pastor in June, 1872. He left to take charge of the Parsons Baptist church, and Rev. J. P. Harris, from Cattaraugus, N. Y., was called. He moved to Nanticoke early in 1873, and remained the pastor until March, 1877, when he removed to take charge of the Providence Baptist church. In May, 1878, W. F. Davies, an old member of the church, and a licentiate, who was studying for the ministry, was called to be the pastor, and accepted. He was ordained in August, 1878, and he is now the pastor.

Much work has been done in connection with the Sunday-school. The school now has 17 classes and an average attendance of 125 scholars.

The church has licensed three to preach the gospel, namely W. F. Davis, the present pastor, I. D. Williams and Henry Hill. Besides its different pastors and licentiates, other preachers have been members of this church, namely Rev. J. J. Morris, late pastor of the Houtzdale Welsh Baptist church of Clearfield county, Pa., and Enoch Richard, now a member of the Centennial Baptist Church of Wilkes-Barre.

The preaching has been Welsh and English alternately from the beginning. Another meeting-house, for the English portion of the church, is soon to be built.

THE REFORMED CHURCH.

The members of the Reformed and Lutheran churches organized and constituted the congregations which secured the property and built the Hanover church "at the green." There were two congregations, but the property was held jointly, and the services alternately.

On the Reformed side the ministers were at first occasional supplies from a distance, prominent among them Rev. Dr. T. L. Hoffeditz from Northampton county. The first settled pastor, Rev. John N. Zeiser, came in 1821. He confirmed his first class of catechumens, 13 in number, October 26th, 1822, and the day following 55 persons communed. He died in 1840. His successor was the Rev. Abraham Berke. Then Rev. John W. Leshar, was pastor from 1844 to 1855. After a vacancy of several years Rev. Frederick Strassner took charge. He records a membership of 60 in 1863. His successor was the Rev. Dr. G. W. Glessner.

In 1876 a separate Lutheran congregation was organized. The larger part of the old congregation, however, held together, and retained the services of Rev. Rudolph Kunz, of Wilkes-Barre, who had been pastor for some time before the division took place. His successor in Zion's Reformed church, Rev. F. K. Levan, held services for this people several times during 1878.

With the opening of 1879 it was agreed that the congregation should be Reformed thereafter, and be served in connection with Zion's church, Wilkes-Barre. Worship had all along been held in the old school-house. Preparations were made in 1879 to build a suitable church in 1880. The confirmed membership numbers nearly 100. Several nationalities are represented. Rev. F. K. Levan, of Wilkes-Barre, is the present pastor.

ST. FRANCIS ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Previous to 1876 Nanticoke and the other mining towns in this vicinity were mission fields, attended from Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. In the year 1876 Father O'Haran, of Wilkes-Barre, was convinced that the borough of Nanticoke, which had been attended from Wilkes-Barre, ought to have a church to accommodate the large and rapidly increasing number of Catholics living there, and determined that he would do all in his power to have a worthy structure erected. One Sunday morning he held an open air meeting under a large willow tree near Mr. McGrath's residence, and unfolded his project. The plan was heartily approved, and quite a large sum of money was immediately subscribed. Subsequent collections and subscriptions brought in sufficient money to warrant the construction of a fine edifice. The church is a fine, large brick building. It stands on a hill back of Main street, in a commanding position, and can be seen from all parts of the borough. Work was begun in August, 1876, by E. T. Long, and was finished by William O'Malley. The architect was E. T. Durang, of Philadelphia. The inside walls are finished in white. The windows, of stained glass, were all gifts. In the church are two beautiful clocks, presented by D. Davidsburg and Thomas C. Parker. There is a fine organ in the gallery. The cost of the church at the time of its dedication is estimated at $10,000.

The ceremonies of dedication were performed by Bishop O'Hara, of Scranton, on Sunday, December 21st, 1879. Rev. Father A. C. Mattingley is the present pastor.

Kosciusko Guard.—This organization was formed in 1879. The name indicates the nationality of the men.

SUGAR NOTCH BOROUGH.

THIS borough was incorporated April 3d, 1867, and the first meeting of the town council was held March 26th, 1868, when George H. Parrish, burgess, administered the oath of office to H. B. Plumb, David Caird, Samuel Roberts, Adam Schiedel and George Cyphus. The council was organized by electing David Caird president and Austin Gallagher secretary of the board. David Whitworth was appointed street commissioner and tax collector.

The following have been burgess of the borough: 1867-69, George H. Parrish; 1870-74, Thomas Cassedy; 1875, 1876 and 1878, Patrick Convery; 1877, David Steller; 1879, Thomas Bennetto.

The officers for 1880 were: Burgess, Levi Kintza; council—David Steller, John E. Monohan, Michael Fahey, Thomas W. Jones, James E. Roderick and John B. Brislin, with J. T. Conway as secretary.

Sugar Notch shaft, at Sugar Notch borough, is operated by the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company; Sugar Notch slope is also worked by that company. M. L. Tiffany and D. C. Tiffany are outside foremen, and William T. Smyth inside foreman. The mine boss is William Haskins. There were in 1878 three hundred and seventy-two men and boys employed under ground, and one hundred and fifty-two on the surface. The breaker was worked one hundred and seventy-two days in 1878. Total coal shipped for the year one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred and sixty-two tons.

The population of the borough in 1880 was 1,580, against 724 in 1870.

RELIGIOUS INTERESTS AT SUGAR NOTCH.

Methodist Episcopal Class.—From the opening of the Sugar Notch mines, about 1860, there was occasional preaching by Methodist ministers in the school-house until March, 1878, when the Rev. Mr. Underwood, of Ashley, formed a class, with William Vance and Thomas Prisk as leaders, and with the following other members: Mrs. Vance, Mrs. H. Floyd, Mrs. I. Hoskins, George Lewis and wife, Noah Pursell and wife, John Fowler and wife, William Carpenter and wife, William Reese and wife, James Thomas and wife, William Netherton and wife, Thomas Fulton and Ernest Floyd.

Public services are held every alternate Sabbath by Mr. Underwood, in the hall over Conyngham's store.

Union Sabbath-school.—In the spring of 1865 a Methodist Sabbath-school was organized by C. D. Linskill as superintendent in a school-house on the main road where the large boarding-house now stands or just below it. Since the fall of 1866 the school has been kept in the company store building, and it now occupies the whole of the upper part of the store. In the fall of 1866 Samuel Roberts was elected superintendent, and the school became a union school. Mrs. Roberts took charge of the infant school, and she has made it one of the most orderly and progressive infant schools in the Wyoming valley. Owing to a falling off of the mining population the school was abandoned for a short time. In 1871 it was reorganized by Mr. Kind, who was connected with the Episcopal church of Ashley. He was superintendent through 1872. Mr. Samuel Roberts succeeded him. The school prospered from this time more than ever, and the rooms were newly carpeted, furnished and decorated, Mr. Roberts donating many articles. In October, 1874, Mr. O. Esser was appointed superintendent and he served through 1875, Mrs. Esser taking charge of the infant school. In 1876, 1879 and 1880 David Steller was superintendent; 1877, Mr. Mott, and 1878, William Vance. Rev. William J. Day has been preaching in the Sabbath-school room since January, 1867. Excepting the year 1871 the M. E. minister has preached occasionally. The first of all, Rev. Mr. Swallow, preached in 1866. The Episcopal minister, Rev. Mr. McElrey, and Rev. John Burrows preached a short time. During the winter of 1877-8, a number of additions to the Methodist Episcopal church and the Presbyterian church were made.

St. Charles Boromeo Catholic Church, of Sugar Notch, was organized early in 1875, at the house of Mrs. Robert Yates, under the supervision of Rev. Father O'Haran, of Wilkes-Barre, who had been ministering in the place. Measures were at once taken for the building of a church edifice, and it was finished that year, standing on a lot obtained from Mr. Charles Parrish. It is of wood, about forty by seventy feet, with basement, and has a seating capacity of 700. Service had sometimes been held at the house of Peter O'Donnell. Previous to 1879 Sugar Notch was a mission, attended from Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. August 15th, 1879, it was formed into a parish, and Rev. Thomas Rea was appointed its pastor.

In 1879 the society built a parsonage on the lot adjoining the church.

The membership of the society is 1,000. The value of the church property is $14,000.

The Sunday-school was organized at the same time as the church, with 250 scholars. Father Rea has charge of the school.

SUGAR NOTCH SOCIETIES.

Father Matthew C. T. A. B. Society No. 1 was organized April 8th, 1872, with the following named persons as charter members: John McGrane, James Corrigan, James Rairden, Conday O'Donnell, John Quillan, Patrick Quillan, John I. Lavell, William Gallagher, Thomas Correll and John Kenny.

The original officers of the society were: Patrick McGrane, president; William Collens, secretary, and James Dolan, treasurer.

The regular meetings of the society are held semi-monthly, in the St. Charles Boromeo Roman Catholic Church at Sugar Notch. The membership is 80.

The present officers of the society are: Peter T. Reilly, president; Luke Welsh, vice-president; John H. Lenahan, recording secretary; James Coffrey, corresponding secretary; Cornelius O'Donnell, treasurer; James McGrane, marshal.

Court Golden Miner, No. 5,877, Ancient Order of Friendly Foresters was organized in Elliott's Hall, Warrior Run, July 28th, 1874, with the following charter members: John Elliott, Henry Parkins, Isaiah Rhinehammer, Edward Rugar, Samuel Coleman, Robert Looney, Joseph Miller, Alexander Keithline, William James, William Barnes, Thomas Tudgay, Job Verm, John B. Jones, Charles Britton, Frank Bergman, Robert Francis, William Bate, William Lewis, John Williams, William Vivian, Daniel Roberts and Jacob Jones.

The first officers of the court were as follows: John Elliott, C. R.; Henry C. Parkins, S. C. R.; Isaiah Rhinehammer, treasurer; Samuel Coleman, secretary; Joseph Miller, senior W.; Alexander Keithline, junior W.; Edward Rugar, senior B.; Robert Looney, junior B.

The regular meetings of the court are held on the first and third Saturday evenings of each month. They were held in Elliott Hall, at Warrior Run, till May, 1879, when the hall was destroyed by fire. Since then they have been held in Shields Hall. The membership is twenty five.

Pride of the Valley Lodge, No. 658, I. O. of G. T.—This lodge was organized September 28th, 1878, with the following charter members: William Vance, W. H. Hosking, sen.; John Murrish, W. H. Hosking, jr., David Wylie, jr., Iago Jones, Walter Magee, Jonathan Greenwood, Ernest Floyd, John Slacker, William Shoemaker, Samuel Lewis, A. P. Magee, Jane Faucet, Jane Whitworth, Mrs. S. Lewis and Mrs. J. Murrish.

The first officers of the lodge were as follows: William Vance, W. C. T.; A. B. Magee, W. V. T.; Samuel Lewis, W. Chap.; Thomas Murrish, W. S.; John Slacker, W. F. S.; John Murrish, W. A. S.; W. H. Hosking, sen., W. Tr.; Mrs. J. Murrish, W. D. M.; David Wylie, W. I. G.; William S. Shoemaker, W. O. G.; Jane Whitworth, W. R. H. S.; Jane Faucet, W. L. H. S.; and Iago Jones, W. P. C. T.

The regular meetings are held Monday evenings of each week in the hall over Conyngham's store. The membership is 30.

The officers for 1880 were as follows: W. C. T., John Murrish; W. V. T., A. B. Magee; W. S., William Vance; W. Treas., Joseph Williams; W. F. S., Frederick Mott; W. chaplain, Hugh Jones; W. L. deputy, David Stetler; W. I. G., Emma Worder; W. O. G., Frank Searfoss; W. M., Jonathan Greenwood.

THE "CAVE-IN" AT NO. 10 SLOPE.

On the morning of April 23d, 1879, it was learned that the roof of the mine reached by No. 10 slope had fallen in and imprisoned William Hawkins, Edward Price, Patrick Green, John Green, Barney Riley, John Clark, a door boy, and William Kinney, the mule driver, who were working at the farther end of the gangway, over a mile from the top of the slope. Measures were at once taken by Mr. Charles Parrish, operator of the mines, to sink a shaft for their rescue, and by incessant labor for five days and nights the men and boys were rescued, having saved themselves from starvation by butchering a mule employed in the mine.

WARRIOR RUN.

The post-office at this place, established in March, 1880, with George H. Pehle as postmaster, goes by the name of Peely; though the station on each of the railroads is named as above.

WARRIOR RUN COLLIERY,

in the southwest corner of Sugar Notch borough, is operated by A. J. Davis & Co., Mr. Davis being general superintendent, James E. Roderick inside foreman, Robert F. Lloyd outside foreman, and John C. Jones mine boss. The men and boys employed inside the mines in 1878 numbered 146, and outside 107. The coal mined amounted to 56,453 tons.

The mines at Warrior Run were opened in 1837, where the lands were owned by George Cocker. Samuel Holland and Colonel Hillman obtained permission to open the mines and build a railroad to the Susquehanna, a distance of about three miles; also to construct a basin at the river for loading boats with coal. John Rheinheimer, who cut the first tree preparatory to opening these mines, is still employed here as one of the outside men, is preparing ties and other wood work used here. The first opening was made at what is now the red ash slope, near the Lehigh Valley railroad. They afterward opened a drift farther down the stream. The railroad was built with wooden rails, and served the purpose. Down at the basin, which is near the Dundee shaft, they had a store, managed by John Merrick, son-in-law of Mr. Holland. Soon after the mine was opened the Mauch Chunk Coal Company became the operators, and after two or three years the mines were abandoned. During the winters the coal was piled up at the basin for want of transportation. From about 1840 there was nothing done here till 1865, when the Warrior Run Coal Company commenced operations with Martin Coryell as superintendent. In December, 1869, the property was leased to A. J. Davis, the present operator.

FIRST PESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF HANOVER.

This church was organized in January, 1871, at the house of James E. Roderick at Warrior Run, where regular services were held for the first year and a half, after which they were held at the office of the Warrior Run Coal Company till November, 1874. The original members were Robert F. Lloyd, Edward J. Edwards and wife, James E. Roderick and wife, and William Jones. The first preacher was Rev. William D. Jenkins.

In 1874 Hon. Hendrick B. Wright gave this people a lot at Warrior Run near the old Indian trail, upon which to build a church. The church was built in 1874, of wood, 24 by 40 feet, at a cost of $4,000, and was dedicated in November of the same year, by Rev. Joseph Davis, D.D., assisted by Revs. E. J. Hughes, T. J. Phillips, W. H. Williams and W. D. Jenkins.

The present membership is 60. Value of church property $4,000. The preachers since Mr. Jenkins have been Rev. E. J. Hughes and Rev. Joseph E. Davis, D.D. The latter, who is the present pastor, has served since 1874. The present deacons are Robert F. Lloyd and E. J. Edwards; church clerk, James E. Roderick; trustees, J. E. Roderick, James F. Jones and Robert F. Lloyd.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1871, with 12 pupils, and Robert F. Lloyd as superintendent. The present superintendent is John Evans. The total number of scholars is 70, the average attendance 60.

HAZLE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was taken from Sugarloaf in August, 1839, and a part of Butler was added to it November 6th, 1856. The township derives its name from Hazle creek, which rises on the east border of Hazleton; and it is said that the creek was so named from the fact that many hazel bushes grew on its banks near its source.

The Hazleton mine, just west of the borough limits, was opened in 1836. Soon after this other mines were opened, and in a short time this coal basin, number 3, became a vast mining district, and soon afterward basin number 4, north of Council ridge, on the Big Black creek, was explored and found to contain large quantities of the black diamonds. As soon as coal was discovered, the population of the township began to increase and mining villages sprung up. In 1804 the Lehigh and Susquehanna Turnpike Company was chartered, and soon afterward the road was surveyed and laid out 100 feet wide, from Mauch Chunk to Berwick, the route running through this township. That portion of it running through Hazleton now forms East and West Broad streets. This was the first road laid out in the township.

Justices in this township have been elected as follows: David Travis, 1840; Conrad Horn, 1840, 1852; William Kisner, 1843, 1848; David Martz, 1849; George Fenstermacher, 1852; Adrian Parber, 1857; Joseph Haywood, 1862; James W. Rhoads, 1865; M. G. McFadden, 1867; Charles McCarran, 1869; Malcom Ferguson, 1872; William M. Jones, 1877.

The census of 1880 made the population of Hazle 10,550.

MINES AND MINING VILLAGES.

Latimer has a company store and post-office, a Methodist church, and about 1,000 inhabitants. Latimer colliery is owned by the Black Creek Improvement Company, and operated by Pardee Brothers & Co., with M. M. Cooper as superintendent. In 1878 there were mined at this colliery 114,870 tons of coal. There were employed at slope No. 2 140 men and boys, under ground, and 153 on the surface. Both at breaker No. 1, and slope No. 2 there are five engines, with a total of 280 horse power.

South Sugarloaf has about 350 inhabitants. South Sugarloaf colliery is owned by the Diamond Coal Company.

Laurel Hill also has a population of about 350. Laurel Hill colliery, located here, is owned by the L. V.

R. R. Co., and operated by A. Pardee & Sons, with C. Pardee as superintendent. At this slope are seven engines, with a total of 285 horse power. In 1878 there were employed under ground 133 men and boys, and 105 on the surface.

Sugarloaf is another village of about 350 inhabitants. Sugarloaf colliery is owned by the Diamond Coal Company and operated by A. Pardee & Co., with C. Pardee as superintendent. There is but one slope here, which in 1878 produced 30,903 tons of coal. There were employed under ground 73 men and boys, and 61 on the the surface. There are six engines, of 280 horse power.

Japan is a small mining town, of about 400 population; with a store and school-house.

Oakdale colliery is at Japan, and is owned by the Union Improvement Company and operated by G. B. Markle & Co., with G. B. Markle as superintendent. There are two slopes, and the total product for 1878 was 124,109 tons. There are six engines, of 220 horse power. In 1878 there were employed at both slopes 241 men and boys under ground, and 118 on the surface.

Harleigh is another of the small mining towns for which Hazle township is noted. There are two taverns, a company and one or two other small stores, a Protestant school and a school under the supervision of the Sisters of Mercy. This place has a population of about 600. Harleigh colliery is located here, owned by the Big Black Creek Improvement Company, and operated by McNair & Co., with James McKee as superintendent. In 1878 this mine produced 35,000 tons of coal, and employed 70 men under ground, and 76 on the surface. There are three engines, with 130 horse power.

Beaver Brook, on the Carbon county line, has a company store, a post-office, a blacksmith shop, two or three groceries and about 800 inhabitants. Beaver Brook colliery is owned by the Beaver Brook Coal Company, and operated by C. M. Dodson & Co., with E. S. Bullock as superintendent. In 1878 the company mined 65,362 tons of coal and employed 169 men and boys under ground, and 114 on the surface. At the two slopes there are six engines, with a total of 210 horse power.

Cranberry contains a mining population of about 500. Cranberry colliery is owned by the estate of A. S. and E. Roberts, and operated by A. Pardee & Co., with C. Pardee as superintendent. In 1878 there were mined at this colliery 106,420 tons of coal. There were 97 men and boys employed under ground, and 85 on the surface. There are four engines at this slope, of 40 horse power each.

Crystal Ridge is a mining village of about 400 population. Crystal Ridge colliery turned out in 1878 about 120,000 tons of coal. There were 62 men and boys employed under ground, and 72 on the surface. There are at this slope three engines, with a total of 145 horse power.

Jeansville is a mining village two miles south of Hazleton, on the county line. It was named from Mr. Joseph Jeans, of Philadelphia, one of the original proprietors of the mines here. The place was first settled in 1848 by William Milnes, who opened the first coal mine. There are three churches—Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal and Welsh Congregational; a hotel, a store, two schools, and 1,600 inhabitants. Mrs. Tubbs is the present postmistress. Spring Mountain colliery is located at this place. It is owned by the Spring Mountain Coal Company, and was operated in 1879 by J. C. Hayden & Co. There are three slopes at the colliery, two of which produced in 1878 168,929 tons of coal. There were 238 men and boys employed under ground, and 173 on the surface. At the two slopes there are thirteen engines, with a total of 535 horse power.

Stockton was named in honor of Commodore Stockton, of New Jersey, whose liberality had done much for the people. The mines were opened here in 1851 by Messrs. Packer, Carter & Co., and the first coal was shipped June 8th, 1852. A sad calamity happened here December 18th, 1869. The pillars of the gangway running east and west had been so much "robbed" as to cause the caving in of the gangway for nearly half a mile, carrying down everything upon the surface to the depth of twenty-five or thirty feet, among other things the dwelling occupied by the Rough family, and two of the Swank family. The bodies were never recovered, as the house took fire from the upsetting of the stove and the inmates were consumed by the flames. The spot where the house stood has been filled up to a level with the ground, and a neat marble slab laid, with the date of birth of each of the victims and date of death inscribed thereon, as follows:

"Elizabeth Rough, May 18th, 1796. Margaret Rough, January 18th, 1837. Isaac Rough, January 22nd, 1839. Elizabeth Rough, March, 1869. George Swank, 1819. William Swank, 1850. December 18th, 1869."

There are at this place a store, a tavern, several saloons, a church, two schools, car repair and blacksmith shops, and about 1,500 inhabitants. The first postmaster at this place was Ralph Tozer, appointed in 1860. The present postmaster is William Smith.

East Sugarloaf colliery is located at Stockton, and is owned by Smith, Roberts & Packer and the Tench Cox estate, and operated by Linderman, Skeer & Co., with William Airey as superintendent. There are three slopes here, which in 1878 produced a total of 177,393 tons of coal. They employed 358 men and boys under ground, and 220 on the surface. There are 18 engines, with a total of 690 horse power.

Mount Pleasant has a population of about 500. There is a company store at this place. The mails are received by carrier from Hazleton. In 1878 44,198 tons of coal were mined at Mount Pleasant colliery. The colliery is owned by the estate of C. Koons and others, and is operated by Pardee & Sons. There are five engines, of 165 horse power. There were employed in 1878 77 men and boys under ground, and 67 on the surface. C. Pardee is superintendent of this colliery.

At Humboldt there are about 450 inhabitants and a company store. Humboldt colliery is owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, and operated by Linderman, Skeer & Co., with William Airey as superintendent.

In 1878 there were mined at this slope 22,476 tons of coal. There were employed 44 men and boys under ground, and 56 on the surface. There are four engines, of 145 horse power.

Hollywood has a population of nearly 400. There is a company store here. Hollywood colliery is owned by the Black Creek Improvement Company and operated by Calvin Pardee & Co., with C. Pardee as superintendent. In 1878 there were mined at this slope 49,078 tons of coal, and 68 men and boys were employed under ground and 87 on the surface. There are 3 engines, with a total of 160 horse-power.

Milnesville was settled and the mines opened about 1850 by William Milnes, after whom the place is named. There is a Methodist church here, a company store, and a post-office, with William Monroe as postmaster. The population is not far from 1,500. Milnesville colliery is owned by the Porter estate, and operated by the Stout Coal Company, with Charles Kerbaugh as superintendent. Only one slope was worked in 1878, and from this were mined 66,330 tons of coal. There were employed 105 men and boys under ground and 74 on the surface. At this slope there are 5 engines, with a total of 290 horse power.

Jeddo borough was formed from Foster and Hazle townships, Oct. 23d, 1871; its population is 350. Here is the Woodside colliery, owned by the Jeddo Coal Company and operated by Coxe Bros. & Co.

Ebervale has a church, a school-house, a company store, a hotel, a post-office, with Cyrus Young postmaster, and about 1,500 population. Ebervale colliery is located here, owned by the Union Improvement Company, operated by the Ebervale Coal Company, and superintended Thomas P. McFarland. The number of men employed under ground in 1878 was 305, and on the surface 220. The coal mined in 1878 at the two slopes amounted to 158,314 tons. At both slopes there are 16 engines, with a total of 955 horse power, and one locomotive under ground.

The Hazleton mines are located on the north border of the borough, owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, and operated by A. Pardee & Co., with C. Pardee superintendent. They produced in 1878 142,152 tons of coal. There were 84 men employed under ground and 75 on the surface. Hazleton mine No. 3 is abandoned. It is related that in 1826 John Charles, a hunter, while digging for a ground hog discovered coal at what is now known as the "Old Hazleton" mine, which led to further explorations and finally to the organization of the Hazleton Coal Company. This was the first company that was organized in that portion of the eastern middle coal fields lying in Luzerne county.

Drifton, like Upper Lehigh, is a neat little town, and in appearance an exception to the general rule in the mining districts. It has one hotel, three churches—Protestant Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal and Roman Catholic; an opera house, built by Coxe Bros. for the use of their employes; a company store, school-house, railroad depot, "Major Charles S. Coxe Post G. A. R.," several civic societies and about 1,000 inhabitants. The town is well supplied with water, brought in pipes from a hill near by. Cross Creek collieries No. 1 and 2 are located at this place, and owned and operated by Coxe Bros. & Co. The mines in 1878 yielded 285,320 tons of coal.

Drifton Lodge, No. 246, D. O. H. was instituted by grand officer Major C. J. Volkenand, who installed the following officers of the lodge for 1880: Martin Steinhiser, E. B.; Jacob Bechtlof, O. B.; George Brandon, U. B.; Robert Fuchs, S.; Charles Hordt, A. S.; Jacob Nagle, T.

RAILROADS OF HAZLE.

The Beaver Meadow Railroad and Coal Company was chartered April 7th, 1830, and merged in the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company July 8th, 1864. There are about two and a half miles of road in Hazle township, crossing the line between Beaver Brook and Jeansville, and leaving the township on the line east of Jeansville.

The Danville, Hazleton & Wilkes-Barre (formerly Wilkes-Barre & Pittston, and now merged in the Lehigh Valley Railroad) Company was chartered April 18th, 1867. This road enters the township from Sugarloaf township, near where Black creek crosses the line; runs through the borough of Hazleton and village of Stockton, and leaves the township a little east of Lumber Yard station, running about ten miles.

The Hazleton & Jeansville Passenger Railway Company was chartered March 30th, 1873. The road has not been built. It was to be a local road between these two points, running around the east side of the mountain, passing through Stockton and Lumber Yard.

The Hazleton Railroad Company was chartered March 9th, 1865, and merged in the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company May 25th, 1868. This road runs from the old Hazleton mines to the top of the planes near Penn Haven Junction, nearly six miles being in this township.

The Jeddo and Carbon County Railroad Company was chartered March 23d, 1854, the name changed to Lehigh and Luzerne Railroad Company February 12th, 1856, and it was merged in the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company June 16th, 1868. About one mile of this road was built in the east end of this township from the lumber yard north. It extended from Jeddo borough to Japan, Ebervale, Harleigh, Milnesville and Latimer in this township about six miles additional.

There are also about twenty-five miles of coal mine branch road in Hazle.

HAZLETON BOROUGH.

THIS is the largest and most enterprising town in the middle coal field region. It is on a broad table land, 1,700 feet above tide water. The borough is abundantly supplied with pure spring water by the Hazleton Water Company. The water is obtained upon one of the hills southeast of the town and conveyed in terracotta pipes. The altitude of Hazleton, the purity of the air and water, with the perfect system of sewerage and drainage and the enforcement of strict sanitary measures, make it one of the exceedingly healthy towns of the State. The water company has in course of construction an artesian well, which when completed will add largely to the water supply.

There are located at this place the locomotive and machine shops of David Clark, the extensive burial casket manufactory of L. W. Drake, the wholesale furniture manufacturing establishment of G. Reinhart, the Mountain foundry of H. W. Montz & Brother, the Phoenix planing mill of John Daniels, the Hazleton lime kilns of Casper Shaffer, several carriage, wagon and sleigh manufactories, and the Lion brewery, all of which employ annually a large number of men, and whose pay rolls aggregate annually over $1,000,000. There are also a large number of extensive dry goods, grocery, hardware, clothing and drug stores, cigar factories, and many other business concerns. The principal hotels are the Central and Hazleton. There are nine churches, with an aggregate membership of 5,789. There are twenty-one schools within the limits of the borough. Hazleton has also four weekly and two daily newspapers. The population of the borough is 6,893, against 4,317 in 1870. James James is the present postmaster.

As near as can be ascertained the first house built in Hazleton stood very near the site of David Clark's residence, on East Broad street. It is known that Jacob Drumheller kept a tavern at that place as early as 1809. The next building stood where Henry Dryfoos now lives, on the northwest corner of West Broad and Vine streets. This was called the "Old State House," since it stood at the crossing of the turnpike by the old State road running from Wilkes-Barre to McKeansburgh. Mr. Daniel P. Raikes, now living at Hazleton, knew this place in 1817, when the two houses mentioned were the only ones; and as late as 1834 the increase had been but two or three. The next tavern after Drumheller's was built in 1836, by Lewis Davenport, on the site of the Hazleton House; it was subsequently burned, and immediately rebuilt.

The first store in Hazleton was on the site of A. Pardee & Co.'s store, at the southwest corner of West Broad and Wyoming streets. It was built by Ingham Brothers, who sold it to Mr. Cooper, and he to Pardee, Miner & Hunt. The last named was the first operator of the old Hazleton mines. The first blacksmith shop was on the old turnpike, near where David Clark's repair shop now stands. The first resident physician was a Doctor Lewis, who lived up what is now West Boad street.

CORPORATE HISTORY.

The borough was incorporated in accordance with an act approved April 3d, 1851, and a supplemental act approved April 22nd, 1856. The first election for borough officers was held at the hotel of Thomas Lawall, on the corner of Broad and Wyoming streets, where the Hazleton House now stands, on the 27th of March, 1857, and resulted as follows: Burgess, Abraham Jones; high constable, John Kahler; councilmen, Joseph Hamburger, George Brown, John Schreck, Andrew Ringleben, George B. Markle and William Ulrich. The council elected as president George B. Markle; secretary, F. A. Whitaker; treasurer, Charles H. Meyers; supervisor, John Kahler. At a meeting of the council April 30th, 1857, the first police force was appointed, as follows: D. Kroft, O. M. Martin, Emanuel Dunn, William Kortz, R. B. Conner, Henry Schultz, Frederick Knyriam, Reuben Kulb, John Staffenburg, J. M. Whitaker, John A. Barton, J. P. Salmon and John Hademick. At a meeting of the town council held August 31st, 1857, a contract was made with George Brown for building a stone "lock-up" at a cost of $300. It is 16 by 20 feet, 12 feet high, with walls two feet thick, and stands on the northwest corner of Mine and Cedar streets.

Acts were passed by the General Assembly, and approved April 15th, 1867, and April 9th, 1870, authorizing the council of Hazleton to borrow $20,000, and issue bonds therefor, for the purpose of purchasing apparatus for extinguishing fires, grading and repairing streets, and making and repairing culverts and sewers. An act was also passed and approved April 9th, 1870, for the division of the borough into two wards, dividing the wards and fixing places for holding elections; also an act to organize a police force approved by the governor April 15th, 1871.

December 11th, 1869, the boundaries of the borough were enlarged so as to take in the lands of William Kortz and forty-nine other proprietors, lying between the lands of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and the Diamond Coal Company, northwest of the old boundary line.

At a special meeting of the borough council held December 30th, 1873, the police force was changed from the old volunteer system to a paid force, similar to those of large cities. Four men were at first employed and uniformed, one of whom should act as chief. Since the incorporation of the borough the following persons have served as chief burgess and clerk of the council for the years named:

The following persons have served as president of the borough council: 1857 and 1858, George B. Markle; 1859-63, William Kisner; 1864 and 1865, A. Silliman; 1866, F. Lauderburn; 1867-69, Thomas S. McNair; 1870, John A. Barton; 1871, A. R. Longshore; 1873 and 1874, Stephen D. Engle; 1875-79, David Clark.

The following named persons have served as clerk of the borough council, and for the years named: 1857-64, F. A. Whitaker; 1864 and 1865, Cyrus G. Young; 1866-68, J. S. McNair; 1869, W. P. Courtright; 1870-72, John E. Mears; 1873, E. S. Doud; 1874, M. B. Fowler; 1875, John Gorman; 1876-79, A. M. Eby.

The present borough council consists of David Clark, Justus Altmiller, Elias Bachman, Sylvester Engle, Peter Heidenreich and Philip Linderman.

The borough has elected justices as follows: Frank A. Whittaker 1857; William Kisner, 1861; J. A. Yoder, 1862; John Gorman, 1865 and 1877; Alfred R. Longshore, 1865, 1878 and 1879; William P. Courtright, 1868; Henry Mears, 1870; Thomas Coburn, 1872; William F. Roberts, 1874 and 1875; Charles Schutter, 1875; Jacob P. Kreider, 1875.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school-house was built by the Hazleton Coal Company in 1837. It was a frame building, and stood on the northwest corner of Church and Green streets. This is the school-house referred to in the history of the M. E. church. Miss Fannie Blackman was the first teacher, and among her immediate successors were N. D. Cortright, of Mauch Chunk, and Isaac H. Baldwin, now deceased. In 1843 Lewis Ketchum, afterward a member of the California senate, took charge of the school. He was succeeded in 1845 by his brother, H. H. Ketchum. Previous to this and for some time afterward the school was kept open part of the year by private subscription. The first building for a private school was erected by A. Pardee in 1847. This school was kept about two years. The building stood on the south side of Broad street, between Wyoming and Laurel.

The first public school-house stood on the northeast corner of Cedar street and Spruce alley. In August, 1853, the school-house on the corner of Church and Green streets was burned, when the store on the southeast corner of Broad and Wyoming streets, now occupied by Mrs. Engle, was rented for school purposes. The two-story brick school building on the north side of Green, between Church and Laurel streets, was opened in February, 1855, with Abel Marcy as principal. This was the first graded school in Luzerne county. While Mr. Marcy was principal four teachers were employed, and after 1866 the length of the school term was eight months. Mr. M. was elected superintendent of the county in 1860.

In the spring of 1857 the borough elected the first school board. In 1859 C. L. Rynearson was elected principal of the schools and five teachers employed, and the school term increased to ten months. H. Hutchinson was principal of the schools from 1865 to 1867. In 1866 the frame school-house on the southeast corner of Poplar and Chestnut streets was built, and it was occupied for school purposes in January, 1867. Two additional teachers were then employed. Mr. Hutchinson was afterward (1868-71) a teacher in the grammar schools. Up to this time the persons who had served longest in the school board were A. Pardee, William Kisner and Joseph Grenawald. In 1867 B. C. Youngman was elected principal. In 1868 a frame building was erected on the northeast corner of Poplar street and Spruce alley, in which Mr. Youngman conducted a private school until 1871. From 1868 to 1873 the number of schools increased from eight to sixteen; the salary of the principal was raised to $1,200. In 1868 the brick school-house on the corner of Church and Walnut streets was built. An additional school was opened in 1873, and another in 1874. In 1874 and 1875 the commodious two-story brick school building on Pine, between Oak and Hemlock streets, was built. During the school year 1875-76 great improvements were made; the nucleus for a school library was formed, and the number of schools increased to twenty-one. In June, 1876, the board voted to establish the borough superintendency, but from the time the schools were graded up to this time the principal of the schools had acted as district superintendent.

In 1866 a select school was opened in a building on the private grounds of A. Pardee. In 1874 the Roman Catholic citizens of the place built a school building on Wyoming street, and in the fall of the same year the Sisters of Mercy opened a school therein. From that time the educational interests of the borough and township have advanced with the necessities of an increased population. The following is the present school board: T. S. McNair, president; E. S. Doud, John Schwartz, James O'Donnell and Christian Specht. A. P. Supple is the present superintendent of schools.

The township school board is composed of Messrs. C. G. Young, E. Turnbach, J. H. McHale, Robertson, Thomas and Thompson.

THE PRESS OF HAZLETON.

The Hazleton Sentinel was the first newspaper published here. It was established by John C. Stokes, and the first number was issued January 18th, 1866, as a seven-column folio. In the summer of 1868 Mr. Stokes sold his interest in the paper to Messrs. Pardee, Markle & Grier, when Henry Wilson became editor. The paper was subsequently sold to Messrs. Moore & Sanders, and J. S. Sanders became editor. Subsequently Mr. Sanders became sole proprietor. The paper was then consolidated with the Daily News and the Anthracite Record, and called the Anthracite Hazleton Sentinel, by which name it is still published weekly. The paper again changed hands in September, 1879, when C. B. Snyder became publisher and editor. Politics, Republican; circulation, 1,500.

The Daily News was established and the first number issued September 15th, 1870, by J. C. Fincher. In the consolidation with the Sentinel in 1875 the name was changed to Hazleton Sentinel, and it is now published as a Republican morning paper by C. B. Snyder. Circulation, 2,000 daily.

The Middle Coal Field Advertiser.—The first number of this paper was issued September 19th, 1874, by George Mancy, as a weekly, with a limited circulation and on a cash capital of $250. With increasing patronage the Advertiser continued on its mission until December 10th, 1878, when it was changed to the Daily Bulletin, with Mr. Mancy as business manager of the Bulletin Publishing Company.

The Hazleton Journal, a German paper, was established in July, 1876, by R. F. Stutzbach, who is still publisher and editor. It is issued every Saturday, at $2 per year. Its columns are devoted to humanity, education, literature and general information. Present circulation 600.

The Mountain Beacon was established by John C. Stokes, of Hazleton, and the first number was issued October 25th, 1877, as a six-column folio. Meeting with unexampled success, the paper was enlarged May 30th, 1878, to an eight-column folio. It is a non-partisan and independent journal. In August, 1879, Alfred F. Stokes became publisher and editor, under whose management it fully sustains the high moral character to which it had previously attained. Present circulation, 1,500.

The Hazleton Volksblatt, published in German, was first issued April 16th, 1872, by Moore & Sanders, who continued its publication till October 29th, 1872, when Mr. Moore retired from the firm. Mr. Sanders continued its publication till April 1st, 1873, when P. Dershuck and R. F. Stutzbach became publishers and editors. In 1874 Mr. Stutzbach retired from the firm, when Mr. Dershuck enlarged the paper to eight columns. In 1875 R. F. Stutzbach became publisher and editor, and April 1st, 1876, was succeeded by P. Dershuck. October 1st, 1877, the latter changed the paper to a seven-column semi-weekly. October 1st, 1878, it was again changed to a weekly, and July 1st, 1879, again enlarged to an eight-column paper. It is issued every Saturday morning, and has a circulation of 800.

The Daily Bulletin was first issued December 10th, 1878, under the title of the Evening Bulletin, and February 25th, 1879, the name was changed to Daily Bulletin. It is published by the Bulletin company. Circulation, 1,200. S. B. Macquade, editor; G. Mauey, business manager; W. Sebretch, foreman.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The fire department of Hazleton was authorized by the town council March 15th, 1869, when the following named persons were organized into a fire company:

Thomas S. McNair, Thomas Monroe, J. Sharon McNair, Alexander McAllister, T. Hall, John A. Barton, C. F. Barton, J. C. Tomlinson, John Lee, S. B. Macquade, P. B. Conner, C. S. Longshore, S. D. Engle, Col. James Fitzpatrick and Calvin Pardee. There had been an organization, but not under the supervision or protection of the "city fathers." In 1867 a steam fire engine was purchased of Neafie & Levy, of Philadelphia, for $4,500. The council also bought of the Taylor Hose Company a hose carriage, hose and attachments for $2,346.50. In 1868 the town council built the present engine house, which is occupied by the engine, hose and hook and ladder companies. The upper rooms of the building are used both for the fire department and the council. The building is of brick, located on the east side of Wyoming street, between Green and Maple streets, and cost $4,700. Jacob Eroh was the builder. Hazleton has at present a well organized and efficient fire department, with John C. Tomlinson as chief engineer, and Charles Schutter and Samuel Barnes as assistants.

MILITARY.

Hazleton organized in 1870 several military companies—Zouaves, Captain Coburn; Liberty Guards, Captain Rosenstock; National Rifles, Captain Volkenand, and the Hazle Troop, Captain J. E. Giles. These companies have been disbanded. Company H, 9th regiment N. G. of Pennsylvania, was originally organized with headquarters at Conyngham, under Captain C. H. Kneely. In July, 1877, M. J. Keck was commissioned as captain, and ordered to report immediately with his company for duty. The order was promptly obeyed, and the officers and men performed their duty in suppressing the railroad riots. In September, 1878, the 9th was disbanded, and this company attached to the 12th, under Col. Stead, with company headquarters at Hazleton. In June, 1879, it was attached to the new 9th regiment, under Col. G. M. Reynolds. Captain Keck was promoted paymaster of the 12th regiment, and October 30th, 1879, elected lieutenant colonel of the 9th. The present officers of the company are: Captain, Wilson W. Wenner; first lieutenant, Frank N. Day; second lieutenant, L. S. Allison.

HAZLETON GAS COMPANY.

This company was incorporated March 14th, 1872, and the subscription books were opened April 22nd, 1872. The commissioners named in the act of incorporation were C. Pardee, W. A. M. Grier, Sylvester Engle, R. F. Russell, John Bond and James James. The first officers were: President, C. Pardee; secretary and treasurer, W. A. M. Grier. The gas works were built in 1872 by Deily & Fowler, of Philadelphia, and the first gas was made early in November of the same year. The main building is of brick, 30 by 60 feet, and on the north end there is a frame addition 30 feet square. Adolph Meyer is superintendent of the works. The average quantity of gas consumed in Hazleton at present is about 150,000 cubic feet per month, of which about one-third is burned in the street lamps. The cost in October, 1879, was $3 per 1,000 cubic feet. The directors and officers for 1879 were as follows: Directors, David Clark, Calvin Pardee, Dr. J. R. Casselberry, James James and W. A. M. Grier; president, David Clark; secretary and treasurer, W. A. M. Grier; superintendent of gas works, Adolph Meyer.

BANKING.

The banking house of Pardee, Markle & Grier was opened by Ario Pardee, George B. Markle and W. A. M. Grier, in the room over the general offices of the firm, in the building on the corner of West Broad and Wyoming streets, May 1st, 1867. The firm in 1872 built and occupied their present bank building, on the north side of Broad, between Wyoming and Laurel streets. The building is of brick with an ornamental iron front, and is three stories high. Besides the banking office, which occupies one-half of the first floor, there is a store 16 by 60 feet. The basement story is occupied by the Hazleton Sentinel printing office, while the upper story is devoted to various offices.

The Hazleton Savings Bank was established May 23d, 1871, with a capital of $30,000, divided in $50 shares. The first officers and directors were as follows: President, William Kisner; vice-president, W. R. Longshore; cashier, N. H. Shafer; directors, E. C. Vincent, G. Ulmer, C. F. Hill, W. Kisner and W. R. Longshore. The bank was opened at its present location, October 2nd, 1871. The present directors are W. Kisner, G. Ulmer, C. L. Lambertson, E. P. Kisner and G. F. Kisner; president, W. Kisner; vice-president, G. Ulmer; cashier, E. S. Doud.

LEADING INDUSTRIES OF HAZLETON.

Phoenix Planing Mills.—These works were erected by Messrs. Longshore & Hofficker in 1869, and rebuilt in 1876, after being burned. They are on Juniper, between Church and Vine streets. The main building is 80 by 100 feet, two stores and attic. There is a brick engine house 25 by 30 feet; a dry house, paint shop and lime house. Mr. John Daniels bought an interest in the mills in 1876, and the balance January 1st, 1878.

Hazleton Lime Kilns.—These kilns, situated along the Lehigh Valley railroad, about three squares west of the station, were built in 1875, by Mr. Casper Schaffer. The limestone is brought from Allentown and Freemansburg, Pa. The kilns have a daily capacity of 250 bushels, and are kept constantly burning.

Mountain Foundry.—This foundry, on the corner of Church street and Cranberry alley, was built in 1867, by Montz, White & Co. The original buildings were 30 by 45 feet. In 1871 an addition was built, 40 by 45 feet and two stories high. The engine-house is also attached to the foundry. The concern includes a first-class machine shop. From ten to fifteen men are ordinarily employed. The present firm is H. W. Montz & Brother.

Hazleton Planing Mill and Casket Manufactory.—These extensive works are located on the corner of Pine and Green streets. They were built by Messrs. Dryfoos, Grier & Youngman, and have passed into the hands of L. W. Drake. Burial caskets are a specialty in his very extensive business.

Hazleton Machine Shops.—These shops, on the east border of the borough, cover an area of 56,864 square feet. The dimensions are: machine shop, 50 by 450 feet; foundry, 56 by 104; car-wheel shop, 36 by 80, with wing 36 by 36; boiler shop, 52 by 102; forge or steam trip hammer shop, 50 by 50; blacksmith shop, 40 by 80; car shop, 50 by 95, with addition 63 by 95. These are exclusive of offices, round houses, etc. There are 250 hands employed, who receive an average total monthly pay of $9,500. The round house, nearly adjoining the shops, furnishes room for twenty-one locomotives. There are 110 hands employed on this division of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, whose monthly pay constitutes an important factor in the business interests of Hazleton. The annual product of these shops is about $500,000 worth of locomotives, cars, and mine machinery. There were 4,000,000 pounds of hot blast anthracite iron, and 20,000 pounds of brass castings made during 1878, and 9,000,000 pounds of charcoal pig iron used. There were made the last year 300,000 pounds of forgings, composed of mine and railroad axles, pump and engine connecting rods and straps, driving axles, line and counter shafting, etc.

HAZLETON'S INVENTORS.

The ingenious devices of Stephen D. Engle are mentioned in his biographical sketch, to which the reader is referred.

Charles F. Hill is another of Hazleton's inventors. His "folding Sunday-school book case" is one of the great conveniences in that branch of church work. His most important invention is a new and improved grate, to be used in an ordinary parlor stove for burning refuse coal, now being wasted in large quantities in mining. The device consists in so arranging the draft that the fine coal will not clog and prevent natural draft. He is also the patentee of an improved school desk and chair.

Martin Bock is the inventor of an improvement in heels for rubber shoes. It consists in a wire spring fastened to the heel of the leather boot or shoe, to hold the rubber and prevent its slipping off. His more important invention is a novel combination of devices whereby a time movement, striking movement and alarm movement, in a small clock, are carried in and by a single frame, making the time piece cheap and substantial.

John E. Giles is the patentee of a reversible stationary steam engine, which is a model of ingenuity. By the moving of a lever the motion can be reversed instantly. He is also the inventor of an improved machine for utilizing electric light, whereby large towns and cities can be lighted at very little expense.

THE CHURCHES OF HAZLETON.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first Presbyterian preaching in Hazleton was in 1836 or 1837, by Rev. Richard Webster, of Mauch Chunk. The services were held in the school-house. From 1838 to 1844 Rev. Daniel Gaston, of Beaver Meadow, preached here once or twice a month, and from 1845 to 1848 every alternate Sabbath afternoon Rev. James Green Moore preached. From 1848 to 1852 Rev. Daniel Harbison preached every Sabbath morning, and Rev. John Johnson occasionally in the afternoon and evening. Rev. Mr. Baker then preached until 1854, when a new brick church was built.

The members of the session at the time of the organization were Henry A. Mears and Robert F. Russell. From the fall of 1854 Rev. John Armstrong was pastor ten years. He was succeeded by Rev. E. I. Newlin. In 1868 and 1869 the present church edifice was built. In the spring of 1871 Mr. Newlin resigned the pastorate, and he was succeeded in October, 1871, by Rev. I. A. Maxwell. The present pastor, Rev. A. B. Jack, was installed in July, 1874. The church edifice is of brick, two stories, and the auditorium seats 500.

The church and parsonage are on West Broad street, between Church and Vine streets, and valued at $15,000.

There is a flourishing Sunday-school connected with the church.

GRACE REFORMED CHURCH (GERMAN).

This church was organized about 1845. The first pastor was Rev. C. Solomon, from Germany, as were nearly or quite all the members. All the services are held in German. In 1847 the society secured a lot at the corner of Broad and Cedar streets, and built a church 40 by 60 feet. It was built as a union church, but in 1861 a portion of the congregation withdrew from Grace, and formed a second German church. After a few years most of them returned. In 1869 the society bought an organ costing $3,500. The present value of the church property is $15,000. The membership is 900; number of families attending, 170; number of Sunday-school pupils, 360. The following have been the pastors since 1861: Rev. Messrs. Brandt, Krahn, Waldbridge, Frankel, Furdling and Kunz, the present pastor.

SALEM CHURCH OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

This church is on the south side of West Broad between Vine and Locust streets. The society was organized in 1859, by Revs. J. Frey and I. E. Knerr, with the following members: Conrad, Ernestina and Lizzie Lohr, John, Louisa and Sophia Rippel, John and Catharine Berge, George and Catharine Itter, George and Margaret Outch, Valentine Bock, Adam Hoffsommer and Peter Kellmer.

The meetings for two years were held at the residence of Conrad Lohr, nearly opposite the church site, and for the next year and a half in the school-house in the east part of the borough. During this time the society belonged to Ashland circuit, East Pennsylvania Conference, and in 1863 was constituted a mission, and was under the charge of Rev. I. E. Knerr for two years. In 1864 the lot was purchased for a church building, which was finished and dedicated in 1865, under the ministry of Rev. T. A. Plattenberger. The parsonage, standing in the rear of the church, was built in 1874. In 1879 the church was enlarged, a steeple put on, and the grounds improved, at a cost of $800. Mr. P. Kellmer donated a bell in 1879. The pastors have been as follows: 1859 to 1864, Revs. J. Frey and I. E. Knerr; 1865, 1867, T. A. Plattenberger; 1867-69, A. Shultz; 1869, 1870, C. Myers; 1870-72, W. R. Wiand; 1872-75, D. Z. Kember. Rev. J. M. Rinker, the present pastor, came in the spring of 1877. The membership is 140. The Sunday-school was organized in 1860, with 6 pupils, and Valentine Bock as superintendent. The present superintendent is Peter Kellmer. There are 225 scholars, and an average attendance of 200.

ST. PAUL'S METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first M. E. church in Hazleton was built in 1860. It was a plain frame structure, thirty-six by fifty feet, on the site of the Methodist parsonage. It was dedicated by Rev. Thomas Reese, then presiding elder of the district, assisted by Rev. G. H. Day, the pastor. Previously the congregation held services in the Green street school-house, immediately east of the parsonage, and before that in a small school-house on the northwest corner of Church and Green streets, which long since passed away. Bishop Thomas Bowman and Dr. John H. Vincent, the leading Methodist Sunday-school worker, have preached in the old school-house. Methodism here owes much to Father Moistee, a local preacher. Joseph A. Ross, James Owens, Gideon H. Day, Thomas H. Switzer, William Gwynn, P. F. Eyer and Elisha Butler (by whom the church was begun in 1859), and some others, preached in Hazleton as traveling preachers on the old Luzerne (afterward Jeannette) circuit. All the above are still living except T. H. Switzer, who died in 1877 or 1878. This circuit was then in the East Baltimore Conference. In 1869 it was put in the Central Pennsylvania Conference.

Since the first church was built, in 1860, the following pastors have been stationed here, and in the order in which they are named: G. H. Day, Josiah Forrest (deceased), Watson Case, J. C. Hagey and James F. Porter. Mr. Porter died after having served the church only six months. Rev. G. H. Day preached the rest of the year. In March, 1867, Hazleton was made an independent station. At this time E. T. Swartz was appointed pastor, and he remained two years. In the spring of 1869 D. Sheffer was appointed, and six months later Rev. F. E. Green for the next year; he was reappointed for the ensuing year.

In 1871 Rev. E. H. Yocum was appointed. Under his three years' administration a new church was begun. In 1874 Rev. W. W. Evans was appointed. During the first of his three years the church was completed, at a cost of $20,000, and dedicated September 27th by Rev. B. I. Ives, of Auburn, N. Y. It is a frame structure forty-five by ninety feet, with two towers. C. S. Weitzell, of Danville, was the architect.

In 1876 a beautiful and commodious parsonage was built on the site of the old church, at a cost of $3,000. In March, 1879, Rev. G. T. Gray, the present pastor, was appointed to this station.

The church property is valued at $20,000. The membership numbers 200. The trustees are H. E. Sutherland, S. Smith, J. S. Sanders, James Whitaker, Thomas Dickinson, Charles W. Kline, James G. Howe, Charles F. Hill and William Llewellyn.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1861. S. Smith was superintendent until July, 1879. The school has been successful. It has had more than 3,000 scholars upon its rolls. It now numbers 350 scholars.

CHRIST'S GERMAN EVANGELICAL PROTESTANT LUTHERAN CHURCH.

In 1861 a number of Christians belonging to the "Union Grace Church" organized a new congregation, and resolved to build a church. The building committee consisted of Nicolaus Stocker, George Gioking and Peter Breihof. The first church council was composed of elders, John Kohlhaas and Philip Kerschner; deacons, Tobias Kaufman and John Miller; trustee, John Schreck. The corner stone of the church, which is on the south-west corner of Church and Green streets, was laid September 28th, 1861, by Rev. R. S. Wagner, pastor; J. F. Bayer, of Tamaqua, and D. M. Henkel, of Danville. The church was dedicated in 1861 by Rev. R. S. Wagner, the pastor. It is a frame building, 41 by 61 feet, with a steeple and bell. The basement story is used by the Sunday-school. The upper room seats 600.

The original members were mostly immigrants from Germany, Lutheran or Reformed, and they united harmoniously, adopting the Lutheran faith. In 1864 Rev. R. S. Wagner left this congregation, and Rev. Dr. W. Hasskarl, who had preached here several years before, in the Union church, was called by the congregation. He served eight years, during the last of which a commodious parsonage was built on the lot next south of the church. Mr. Hasskarl was succeeded June 2nd, 1872, by the present pastor, Rev. E. A. Bauer. The following are the members of the church council: Jacob Kinsly, Daniel Kisthart, Frederick and Anton Wagner, Martin Gebhart, Philip Lindeman, George and John Kirshner, Jacob Rommel, Andreas Ammon, Tobias Kaufman, Casper Weigand, Henry Bachman, Henry Hahn, George Starkroth, Christian Heller, Frederick Wetlosan, George Rohrbach and Peter Seiroth.

The church numbers 500 communicants. The Sunday-school was organized in 1861, with Peter Heidenreich as superintendent (who continues in the same office), and 360 pupils, with 38 teachers, the same as at present. The German language is used mainly in the church services and exclusively in the Sunday-school.

SAINT GABRIEL'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Rev. Father Maloney first visited the few Catholics here and formed the nucleus of this church. Subsequently Rev. Father Michael L. Scanlon took up his residence at Beaver Meadow, and Hazleton became one of his missions. Later he removed to Hazleton. In 1863 a plot of about eleven building lots on the west side of Wyoming street, south of Broad, was donated by Mr. Ario Pardee, on which was built a frame church edifice the same year. At the death of Father Scanlon Father Michael Quilan succeeded to the pastorate of this charge. A large and commodious church, of brick, which was commenced in 1868, was dedicated Sunday, October 16th, 1870, by Bishop William O'Hara, of Scranton, assisted by Bishop Shanahan, of Harrisburgh, and several other clergymen. Father Quilan resigned in 1869, and Rev. Thomas C. O'Hara was pastor until the appointment of Rev. R. E. Hemmeny, in 1876. Toward the close of 1877 Rev. J. J. Commisky, the present pastor, assumed control.

In connection with the church is a large school building, in which about 350 children are instructed daily, irrespective of denomination. The school is conducted by Sisters of Mercy from Buffalo, N. Y., who also keep a branch school at Harleigh, where the attendance averages about 150. There is connected with this church a commodious parsonage. The church has a membership of 3,500. The property is valued at $50,000.

ST. PETER'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was chartered as the "Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Peter's Church, of Hazleton, Luzerne county," December 31st, 1864, with the following official members: Wardens, Frederick Lauderburn and Henry Mears; vestrymen, Alexander Silliman, James H. McKee, William Glover, Francis Bright, Theodore H. Knight, and William Taggart. It is believed that the first service was held by Bishop Henry A. Onderdonk before 1840. In 1849 a missionary was appointed for the region of the upper Lehigh, who held several meetings in Hazleton. During 1859 Rev. Peter Russell, who lived at Eckley, and Rev. A. Pryor, who had become associated with him, held services here on alternate Sundays. In 1860 Mr. Russell made occasional visits here until the latter part of the summer, when Rev. W. S. Heaton took charge for eighteen months. Mr. Russell then held occasional services here until about Christmas, 1862. Rev. Thomas W. Steele was in charge until the summer of 1863. Rev. Henry S. Getz commenced missionary labors here, and was rector from September 1st, 1864, to May 1st, 1867.

The church lot, at the corner of Chestnut and Laurel streets, was donated by the Hazleton Coal Company, together with $150 toward building the church. The corner stone was laid Nov. 28th, 1864, by Bishop Stevens. The parish was organized December 21st of the same year. The first service was held in the new church on Sunday, October 8th, 1865. The church edifice cost about $400, and was consecrated by Bishop Vail, April 15th, 1866. The parish was admitted to the convention in the same year. The font was bought with a collection taken by Miss Mamie McKee; the Bible was a present from a number of ladies, and the prayer-book for the chancel from Mrs. McGaw, of Philadelphia. The communion service was donated by St. Stephen's Church, of Wilkes-Barre.

Rev. Faber Byllsby was rector from June 1st, 1867, to July 1st, 1868. The church was then closed until June 18th, 1870, when Rev. Charles H. Van Dyne became rector.

In the autumn of 1871 a vestibule was added to the church, a furnace put in, the floors carpeted, and seats cushioned; the expense being paid by the ladies of the parish. Rev. J. M. Williams took charge of the parish in November, 1873, and resigned in March, 1875. The church was then closed until June 4th, 1876, when Rev. John Hewit entered upon the rectorship. He resigned in July, 1877, since which time the church has been without a rector. Since January 1st, 1879, Mr. J. Nevine Hill, a lay reader, has supplied the place of rector. The present number of communicants is 48. Value of church property, $4,000.

ST. JOHN'S PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.

This was formed July 28th, 1872, with about 20 members, prominent among whom were Mr. R. Stevens and

Mr. B. Reese. Rev. D. Savage, of Tamaqua, assisted in the completion of the organization, when Rev. Ralph Fothergill was appointed pastor. The first services were held in the Laurel Hill school-house, with much success. Services were subsequently held in what was then a school-house, standing near Clark's car shops, now used as a dwelling house. Mr. Fothergill continued pastor until April, 1874, during which time the society grew in influence and numbers. Rev. G. Parker was then pastor a few months, and in April, 1875, Rev. William B. Bache was appointed. He at once commenced operations for the building of a suitable house of worship. A lot was purchased on the corner of Poplar and Juniper streets. The church was dedicated in the fall of 1876, having cost $6,000. It is well lighted and warmed, and has seats for 350. Rev. Thomas Rent was pastor for ten months from May, 1877. In April, 1878, the present pastor, Rev. W. H. Yarrow, was appointed. During his ministry the society and congregation have greatly advanced in numbers and influence, and the services are largely attended.

The membership is over 100, and with branch societies at Mount Pleasant and Cranberry amounted to 151 in September, 1879. The church property is valued at $6,000.

The Sunday-school has an average attendance of 130. It has a fine library and organ. Miss Lizzie Schallhammer is the organist.

TRINITY EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This church was organized July 13th, 1873, at a meeting held for that purpose in the "Sons of America" Hall, by Rev. J. Wagner, who has been the pastor from the first. The church council for two years consisted of Charles Kerbaugh and Henry J. Schleppey as elders, and R. S. Beishline and Jeremiah Miller, deacons. Mr. Miller was soon succeeded by Levi Deitrich. The original members were Charles Kerbaugh, R. S. Beishline, Levi Deitrich, Jeremiah Miller, George Pettit, William Yeager, Otto Kessler, John Pottorf, Henry J., William F., and Mrs. Barbara Schleppey, Mrs. Eliza Deitrich, Mrs. Lana Miller, Mrs. Mary Miller, Mrs. Amanda Deitrich, Mrs. Kate Bryant, Mrs. Alice Yeager, Mrs. C. Pottorf and Miss Rachael Miller.

The congregation worshiped in Sons of America Hall till July 5th, 1874, when the Immanuel German Reformed Church was leased for one year. On the expiration of the lease the Presbyterian congregation kindly allowed the use of their church until the erection of the church building on the corner of Laurel and Oak streets, which was consecrated December 17th, 1876. The church is a neat frame building, 35 by 50 feet, with a recess in the rear. It is tastefully finished and carpeted, and has seats for 250. The membership is 100, and is earnest and devoted, united and harmonious.

The Sunday-school was organized in July, 1874, with 30 pupils, and Henry J. Schleppey as superintendent. At present the school numbers 200, and is in a most flourishing condition. Eli Lamberson is its efficient superintendent.

A Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, composed of members of the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, was organized April 7th, 1879. Its object is "to spread the knowledge of the mission work in this and in foreign lands; to create more interest in the work, and to secure funds to prosecute it." The officers for 1879 were: Mrs. B. Schleppey, president; Mrs. M. E. Hons, vice-president; Miss Mary Lubrecht, recording secretary; Miss Laura Helman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Dr. Nyer, treasurer. The present membership is 35. The regular meetings are held on the third Wednesday evening in each month in the Evangelical Lutheran Church.

ASSOCIATIONS.

HAZLETON CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

This association has control over about twelve acres in the northwest corner of the borough, donated by the old Hazleton Coal Company. The ground has been beautifully laid out. Among the most attractive features is the greenhouse, with all modern appliances for growing the choicest varieties of flowers during the whole year. The grounds are enclosed by a neat and substantial fence. The present trustees are A. Pardee, L. W. Drake, John A. Barton, W. W. James and J. Bond.

SINGING SOCIETIES.

The first singing society organized in Hazleton was the Germania, on the 4th of October, 1854; the teacher was Henry Strang.

In February, 1857, about ten members left the Germania and organized the Harmonia, Philip J. Kline becoming the teacher. In 1860 they became one society, called the Concordia, with Philip J. Kline as teacher. Since 1878 Mr. Joseph Keller has been the teacher. During the time of its existence, however, there have been many other teachers, among them Henry Gliem, Lewis Kreyscher, Charles Mehlbeer and Frederick Keping.

The Concordia now has 75 members, and holds weekly meetings in Concordia Hall.

The Hazleton Mænnerchor, composed entirely of Germans, was organized Oct. 7th, 1869, at the Washington Hotel. The first officers of the society were: President, Frederick Knyrein; vice-president, George Heidenrich; treasurer, William Schwartz; secretary and teacher, Max Von Asseburg. The presidents have been F. Knyrein; G. Heidenrich, W. Schwartz, J. C. Kornig, W. Hartig and George Steinheiser. There are 19 active and 75 contributing members. At the annual election held October 7th, 1879, the following officers were elected: President, George Steinheiser; vice-president, W. Felber; secretary, W. Schwartz; assistant secretary, H. J. Hebel; treasurer, F. Zullick; teacher, W. Schwartz; trustees, G. Heidenrich and H. Hebel. The regular meetings of the active members are held on Monday evening of each week in Liberty Hall.

HAZLETON LIBERTY CORNET BAND.

This band was organized in Hazleton in 1856, under the leadership of John Gliem, with the following named members: Justus Altmiller, John Lapp, Simon Gliem, George Reinhart, George Schmidt and George Grebe. The band kept up its organization till the breaking out of the Rebellion, through which the members served in the army. They have since kept the organization intact. The following were the officers for 1879: Musical director, Justus Altmiller; president, George Grebe; secretary and treasurer, John Schwartz.

HAZLETON MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETY

was organized January 1st, 1860, as a beneficiary society, with the following officers: President, Anthony Ringleben; V. P., Charles G. Schumacher; secretary, Henry Klee; V. S., Frederick Wetterau; treasurer, Louis Schmidt; charter members: J. N. Eistle, Ignats Steinman, Casper Prell, Daniel Lammert, John Klee, John Schorache, John Platt, Michael Gulach, George Heidenreich, Justus Pearson, Daniel Kisthard, George Happ, John Clausius, William Ringleben, Henry Lindeman and Dr. Christian Arnold.

The present officers are as follows: President, Christian Beck; V. P., Nicholas Lorgheim; secretary, Henry Martin; treasurer, John Kirschner; trustees, Peter Brinhoff, William Koch and Nicholas Weigand.

Cash in treasury, October, 1879, $1,726; membership, 84. The regular meetings of the society are held in Liberty Hall, every alternate Wednesday evening.

HAZLE HALL ASSOCIATION.

This association was organized January 11th, 1866, when the following officers were elected: President, E. J. Newell; secretary, J. S. McNair; treasurer, J. A. Barton; directors, J. A. Barton, C. Pardee, Rev. E. J. Newell, William Kisner, G. B. Markle, W. Taggart, Gen. A. Pardee and T. S. McNair. The capital stock subscribed was $30,000. The association was incorporated April 12th, 1866. Its object was the building of a suitable block and hall for public meetings, lectures, &c. During 1866 and 1867 the association built the present block on the corner of West Broad and Wyoming streets, in which Hazel Hall is located on the second floor, with a seating capacity of 600, and stage and scenery suitable for theatrical purposes. The main floor is occupied by four spacious stores on Broad street. In the third story are Masonic and Odd Fellows' halls, where several societies meet. The present directors are Calvin Pardee, Gen. William Lilly, A. Pardee, jr., J. O. Mandeville, J. A. Barton, William Glover, W. W. James, W. Kisner and T. S. McNair. Officers: President, J. O. Mandeville; secretary, T. S. McNair; treasurer, J. A. Barton.

HAZLETON LITERARY ASSOCIATION.

This association was formed January 12th, 1866, when the following officers were elected: President, F. Lauder-burn; recording secretary, H. Hutchison; corresponding secretary, William James; treasurer, Sampson Smith.

G. A. R.

Robinson Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, was chartered December 24th, 1866. The following named persons were the charter members: Robert Boston, Thomas Munroe, James W. Smith, Alexander Patterson, Robert Munroe, Robert Wattson, William Airey, John A. Lyman, Frederick Lauderburn, C. S. Longshore, M. R. Longshore, John C. Stakes, J. P. Kreider, George Moodie and Frederick Spohn.

The regular meetings of the post are held in Hazle Hall, on the first and third Friday evenings of each month. The present membership is 50.

The officers for 1880 were: J. Sharon McNair, P. C.; Edward Overender, S. V. C.; H. McDonald, J. V. C.; George H. Troutman, adjutant; John Gorman, Q. M.; Andrew Lee, O. D.; John A. Mason, chaplain; J. C. Stokes, surgeon; Robert Munroe, quartermaster sergeant; D. Shearer, I. sentinel; H. Weaver, O. sentinel; James Munroe, O. G.; C. Volkenand, sergeant major; H. McDonald, E. Overender and A. Cutler, trustees. Thomas Munroe, delegate; G. H. Troutman, alternate.

THE HAZLETON BUILDING, LOAN AND TRUST ASSOCIATION

was organized April 14th, 1869. The following persons were named in the charter: F. Lauderburn, R. F. Russel, H. L. Freas, T. S. McNair, Frederick Knyrim, Jacob Kinzley, J. A. Barton, Reuben Kolb, James McHale, J. C. Youngman, Sampson Smith and C. F. Hill.

The capital stock of the association was not to exceed 2,500 shares, of $200 each. The object was to assist those in want of homes, who were unable to pay the amount of purchase money required by land owners and holders. The officers of the association are as follows: F. Lauderburn, president; J. O. Mandeville, vice-president; James H. McHale, secretary; J. C. Youngman, treasurer; Peter Derschuck, Enoch Bartles, John Fernan, Casper Weigant and Justus Altmiller, directors. The stated meeting of the association is the fourth Saturday of each month, at Hazleton.

THE RELIEF SAVING FUND ASSOCIATION

was chartered November 16th, 1870. The following persons were named in the act of incorporation: D. C. Swank, George D. Gorman, William Kisner, W. L. Hoffecker, C. F. Hill, J. C. Youngman, R. F. Russel, A. Behrens, W. R. Longshore, M. D., and E. P. Kisner.

The objects of this association were similar to those of the one first mentioned. The stated meetings are held on the third Saturday of January in each year, in Hazleton. The incorporators named were the directors for the first year, and the number of shares was limited to 2,500, at $200 each. The officers for 1879 were as follows: President, J. O. Mandeville; vice-president, Joseph Gren-awalt; treasurer, William Kisner; secretary, G. D. Gorman; directors, Ernst Bartels, Peter Breihof, Charles F. Hill, E. S. Doud, John Fernan and Philip Linderman.

THE WEST HAZLETON BUILDING AND LAND ASSOCIATION was incorporated February 12th, 1872, with the following named incorporators and directors: Charles F. Hill, W. L. Hoffecker, Henry Klinger, W. R. Longshore, Asher Jacobs, W. Kisner, G. W. Meixell, Jacob Rosenstock, Conrad Horn, Herman Gabriel.

The object of this association is both to lend money to and build houses for its members. The houses are to be paid for by monthly installments or payments on the stock. This plan has furnished not only comfortable but elegant homes in this borough to some who might otherwise have been without homes.

The following were the directors and officers for 1879: Directors—J. C. Youngman, G. F. Kisner, Malachi Doud, Charles McCarron, William Kneiss, Richard Smith, E. Bartels, S. J. Schumacker, and L. W. Drake. President, J. C. Youngman; vice-president, Charles McCarron; secretary, Charles F. Hill; attorney, E. P. Kisner. The stated meetings of the association are held in Hazleton, on the fourth Saturday of each month.

FATHER MATTHEW T. A. B. SOCIETY.

This society was organized in 1869, with Rev. Michael Filan as president, and about 40 members. The presidents since then have been as follows: 1870, 1871, 1874-1876, Hugh Conohan; 1872, 1873, Frank T. Slattery; 1877, 1878, Peter Donnelly; 1879, Michael Kelly. The society is in a flourishing condition, and at present numbers 100 members.

HAZLETON LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

This association was fully organized Monday evening, March 4th, 1872, by the election of the following directors: For three years, C. Pardee, W. H. Harris, John Bond, and J. C. Fincher; two years, Rev. M. Franklin, W. A. M. Grier, J. C. Hayden, and H. E. Sutherland; one year, Rev. J. A. Maxwell, J. S. Sanders, G. B. Markle and W. B. Fowler. The library purchased was subsequently turned over to the Young Men's Christian Association, which now has charge of it.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

On Monday evening, May 29th, 1876, at St. Paul's M. E. Church, a constitution for a Y. M. C. A. was adopted, and a number of signatures secured. On June 5th the organization was perfected by the election of the following officers for one year: President, L. W. Grubb; vice-presidents, C. W. Kline and J. R. Rote; recording secretary, W. F. Roberts, jr.; corresponding secretary; H. K. Connor; treasurer, E. S. Doud; librarian, W. F. Schleppey. There were then about 20 members. The reading room and library of the Hazleton Library Association, over the store of Pardee & Co., are in charge of the association and kept open to the public Wednesday and Saturday evenings of each week. Business meetings are held in this room on the first Monday evening in each month. The officers for 1879 were as follows: President, J. F. Barber; vice-presidents, A. J. Swalm and J. S. Rote; treasurer, C. C. Heller; recording secretary, W. F. Schleppey; corresponding and financial secretary, H. H. Lee; librarian, Walter Dick. The present membership is 60. Regular meetings are held on Tuesday evening of each week.

HOLLENBACK TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was taken from Nescopeck in August, 1845, and named in honor of the late Matthias Hollenback. In 1870 its population was 1,303; June 7th, 1875, the north half was taken off and named in honor of the late Judge Conyngham, and in 1880 Hollenback had only 736 inhabitants.

Three men have been elected justices of the peace of this township, as follows: Peter Hart, 1846, 1851, 1856, 1861, 1867, 1877; John Fenstermacher, 1850, 1856, 1861, 1868, 1873; John A. Hart, 1877, 1878.

Henry Whitebread, father of B. Whitebread, located in 1807 on the farm now occupied by Tobias Hess, about a mile south of Hobbie. Other settlers came in that and the succeeding year, including John Bachman, who located where M. Fox now lives, in Hobbie. Abram Shortz located where John Hart lives, two miles southwest of Hobbie, and John Balliett where Mr. Chipple now lives, in the southeast part of the township. Mr. Balliett (who was the first blacksmith in the township) came from Switzerland; hence the name "Switze Hill" for that portion of the township. David Eroch, located near the Ballietts, on the "Switze."

The first saw-mill was built by a Mr. Craig, on the Shortz place, and went to decay long ago. The pioneer grist-mill was built on the Big Wapwallopen, near the site of the upper works of the Dupont Powder Mills. The first and only tannery was built by Samuel Snyder, on the creek, where J. Harter now lives. Both mill and tannery have gone to decay. The first store was opened about 1825, by Amasa Shoemaker, where John Fox now lives. The first tavern was opened in what is now Hobbie, about 1825, by Peter Goode. John Harter built the first frame house, in 1848, where Wesley Hess now lives. Bernard Whitebread, now living half a mile southeast of Hobbie, assisted in raising the frame. The first postmaster was Henry Gruver. He was appointed in 1852, and kept the office where Grover's store now is, in the village of Hobbie. The first road laid out was the one running down the creek from Hobbie to Berwick. The pioneer horticulturist was Henry Whitebread. He set out an orchard in 1808. He brought the trees from his old home at Holmesburgh, on the Pennypack creek, eight miles below Philadelphia. David Bachman set out an orchard on his place the following year. The pioneer preacher in this section was Rev. Mr. Adams, a Presbyterian minister, whose departure was hailed with as much joy as his advent.

was settled about 1815. The land was owned by Peter Goode. He sold it to Nathan Beach, who had it surveyed into town lots and sold. There are at this place two stores, a school-house, a hotel, a blacksmith and wagon shop, a church and about 100 inhabitants.

The postmaster is Amos Shaver. E. A. Santee is the resident physician.

DUPONT POWDER WORKS.

G. P. Parrish & Co. built four powder mills on Big Wapwallopen creek, and operated them for a few years. They then sold to Dupont Brothers, of Wilmington, Del., in 1857, who enlarged the works, making them one of the largest establishments of the kind in the country. There are three rolling mills, one of which is the largest ever built; weight, 51,000 pounds. These three mills make 12,500 pounds of powder daily. There are two hydraulic presses used, of a capacity of 800 kegs per day. The total capacity of the works is 1,000 kegs of 25 pounds.

The buildings connected with these works are scattered along the gorge of the Wapwallopen for nearly a mile. A narrow-gauge railroad was built from the works to the Lackawanna & Bloomsburg railroad, crossing the river by means of a ferry. This has been abandoned.

The concern is under the general superintendence of C. A. Belin, of Wilkes-Barre. W. J. Scott is in charge at the works. About 200 men and boys are employed.

CHURCHES.

St. Peter's Reformed Congregation was organized in 1825 or 1826 by Rev. John N. Zeizer, pastor. On Whitsunday in 1826 the first church edifice was dedicated. Mr. Zeizer preached the dedicatory sermon. Twenty-four male members on that day subscribed to a church constitution. In 1853 another church was built by this congregation in union with the Lutherans, in which both are now worshipping.

St. Peter's congregation has the same pastor as Conyngham or Wapwallopen congregation. The ministers serving successively to the present time have been Revs. John N. Zeizer, Isaac Shellhammer, Henry Hoffman, A. R. Hottenstein and Tilghman Derr.

The membership has continually increased, though it now includes but few of the original twenty-four men. The congregation numbers about one hundred communicant members. The elders are Washington Moyer and Philip Peter, and the deacons Silas F. Raddler and Daniel Shelhammer.

Evangelical.—In 1847 Revs. E. Kohr and A. Valenshamp, then traveling Columbia circuit, by invitation, came to Hollenback township and took up an appointment in the Peters school-house, where they continued to preach and hold meetings for two years. Daniel Gruver then donated a lot, on which was built a church, and quite a congregation was gathered; at the end of the second year the society numbered 30 communicants. Then followed in succession Rev. Messrs. Brepler, McKisson, Hice, Binder, Wolf, Reeser, Miller, Clair, Hartzler Deitrich, Greham, Pines, Luende, Morris, Kepner, Orwig, Rhodes, Burson, Kreemer and Price.

In 1867, under J. M. Morris, the society built a new church on land likewise donated by Daniel Gruver, where the congregation still worships. The same year a parsonage was built. The church numbers 60 communicants.

HUNLOCK TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from parts of Union and Plymouth townships, January 8th, 1877. Hiram Croop and William Pritchard have been elected justices of the peace. The population in 1880 was 759.

Before the Indians left a white family named Boggs settled on the site of the home of Abram Vanhorn; made some improvements, erected dwellings of logs and cleared and farmed land several years. They lived near a village of Indians, probably Shawnees, who also raised crops on the plain. Mr. Boggs joined the army and was probably away from his home when the family was driven off or massacred at the time of the invasion in 1778. The friendly Indians who lived near them probably shared the fate of the Boggs family, as no reliable account of them can be found. Improvements were made near the mouth of the creek and just below by Edward Blanchard and Jonathan Hunlock prior to 1778, in which year they were also driven out. They returned to their homes probably about 1790. Soon after Frederick Croop settled near the river, on the farm now owned by I. Davenport.

John Croop and a large family of Sorbers about the same time moved in back of the mountain and up the creek, where they built dwellings, saw-mills, and other necessary improvements.

It is thought that Jacob Sorber, the father of the family, built the first saw-mill, on the site of Hiram Croop's mills, about a mile up the creek from its mouth. Philip Sorber, a son of Jacob, soon after built one a mile further up the creek. The Sorbers and Croops have carried on lumbering until the present time, and available timber is pretty much exhausted. The Croop and Sorber settlement was early enlarged by the addition of other German families from the valley of the Upper Delaware—the Miller, Cease, Davenport, Cragle, Diets and Brader families—who proved a valuable accession, and among whom were farmers and good mechanics.

In 1797 Joseph Dodson, a native of Northampton county, but who had lived in Plymouth several years and had married Susanna, daughter of Joshua Bennet, of that township (whose name is in the list of taxable inhabitants of that township in 1796), moved into Hunlock, having bought eight hundred acres about five miles up the creek, where he brought up a large family, who became useful, respectable citizens, farmers, mechanics and professional men. One of the sons, Joseph B. Dodson, still retains the old homestead, where he was born in 1805. The other sons and the daughters have passed away. Many of their descendants still live near and several on the original farm of eight hundred acres. Samuel Dodson and his sister's husband, Isaac Vanhorn, were among the early inhabitants, though coming a few years later; they all spent long, useful lives in Hunlock. The health of the township is vouched for by the long and industrious lives of those pioneers and families, as many of them reached four score years, and several near five score years of age.

MANUFACTURE AND TRADE.

In 1857 an iron-smelting furnace was built near the mouth of the creek, by William Koons, who owned and operated it several years, making some very good pig-iron. Only the ruins remain. The first flouring mill was built in 1843, by Frederick Hartman, about three miles up the creek. It is owned and operated by Ransom Monroe, and still does a fair business. About four miles up the creek a saw and feed mill was built by Leonard Ritchie, in 1850. In 1857 George Gregory bought Mr. Pritchard's mill, which in 1858 was rebuilt and enlarged at a cost of $5,000, by George and Benjamin Gregory, who still own and operate it. In 1869, Jacob Rice built a mill about a mile above the mouth of the creek, which is now used as a feed and chopping mill, being not yet prepared for making flour. There are several saw-mills in the township, and other small mills for the manufacture of shingles, lath, and various kinds of wood work.

Hiram Croop, a grandson of both John Croop and Philip Sorber, is a large operator in the lumber business, owning several good mills and employing many hands. His residence and office is about a mile from the depot of Hunlock's Creek.

Ransom Pringle has for several years been engaged in merchandizing and has succeeded in establishing an active, prosperous business, a short distance above the depot. Hiram Croop is a thriving merchant near Croop's mills. Darius Whitesell and Alexander Dodson are also in trade.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Education was generally neglected and books were not considered of much importance in the training of the young for many years. If the sons could mark lumber and count the profits and proceeds of the saw-mill, they were thought proficient in all that was required as practical business men.

Until the public school system was enforced many of the children grew up with limited, inadequate facilities for requiring much general knowledge. Now all have accessible schools, and they are all pretty well attended about half the year; books, newspapers and magazines are extensively read, and the literature of the best writers studied and appreciated.

A good church was built in 1873 in the northwestern part of the township, near Whitesell's, named "Rockville Church," and a flourishing Sunday-school gathered there; all belonging to the Methodist Episcopal society. The cost of the building was over $1,000.

In 1876 the Baptist society built a church, costing $1,200, in the eastern part of Hunlock, about two miles from the river, called "East Union;" which also is occupied by a Sunday-school weekly. Several school-houses are also used as places of worship in other neighborhoods.

SOLDIERS OF THE UNION.

When the booming of the purloined cannon and the shouts of traitors at Fort Sumter resounded throughout the country, the echoes struck many gallant hearts, whose impulsive responses said, "We'll rally 'round the flag, boys!" The following names were inscribed as defenders of the Stars and Stripes. Some of the men named fell in the service, and their names are followed by an asterisk:

Sharpe, Daniel Sorber, Nathaniel Sorber, Peter B. Sites, Jefferson Turpin, Wilson Turpin, James Vanhorn, George Wildoner.

HUNTINGTON TOWNSHIP.

THIS is one of the seventeen "certified townships" laid out by the Susquehanna Company and confirmed by acts of the Assembly passed in 1799. Under the Connecticut title, previous to 1776, it was known as "Bloomingdale township," and the name was changed to Huntington in 1799 in honor of Samuel Huntington, a native of Windham, Conn., who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

This township lay across an ancient and well trodden path of the red man, and in his travel to and from the western frontier during the dark days of border warfare, the few settlers suffered greatly in the loss of some of their number, who were murdered or taken prisoners, to say nothing of the stock and provisions taken and destroyed by the savages.

The first settler was John Franklin. He came from Connecticut in the spring of 1775, as one of the Susquehanna proprietors, under the Connecticut claim. He located on Huntington creek below what is now Hublersville, where he built a log house and spent most of the summer with his family. He returned to his native State in the autumn on account of the difficulties arising between this country and Great Britain.

Levi Seward, from Connecticut, located in 1776 in the north part of the township, and from him has sprung a large and respectable family. Nathaniel Goss came in 1776 and located on the farm now known as the Howard Hotel property at Hublersville. The tract of 334 acres on which he settled was granted to Henry Marks by letters patent dated April 4th, 1775. In 1782 or 1783 Abraham Hess settled near the head waters of Fishing creek, in the northwest part of the township. He came from New Jersey and was the progenitor of a large and influential family. Stephen Kingsbury was one of the pioneers locating where J. W. Kingsbury now lives, near Town Hill. He was a surveyor, and assisted in the original survey of Huntington township. Reuben Culver arrived from Connecticut February 14th, 1795, and located in the west part of the township, where Oliver Culver now lives. The latter was born March 18th, 1795, on his present farm. Reuben Culver was the father of a numerous family who have married into some of the first families of this county. Abel Fellows, Stephen Harrison and Samuel and Amos Franklin in 1777 located in the southwest part of the township, where many of their descendants still reside. From 1778 Thomas Williams, one of the pioneers who escaped from Forty Fort, lived at the foot of Knob mountain during the remainder of his life.

Solon Trescott was born in Sheffield, Mass., in 1750, and located in Huntington in June, 1778. He built a log house near where Colonel E. L. Trescott now lives. About a month after he came he and Solomon Gas and Thomas and Samuel Williams were warned by the military authority to appear at Forty Fort for the defence of the inhabitants against the Indians and Tories. There they were taken prisoners, but escaped the same night, and reached their homes in Huntington on the night of the third day. They sought safety in Connecticut in the autumn of that year. After a few years Mr. Trescott returned, to find that a chestnut tree had grown up through the middle of his mansion. He left it as a monument to mark the place of his pioneer hut, and built another and better log house a short distance from the old one, which he occupied for many years. His father, Samuel Trescott, held a proprietary right in Huntington under the Connecticut claim, and was one of the original surveyors of the township.

Colonel Edward L. Trescott was one of the early settlers in this township, and was actively interested in local military affairs, serving as major fourteen years, lieutenant colonel seven years, and colonel seven years, and in his last years was an aide on the staff of Governor Bigler, of this State. He was a great hunter, and killed with his own rifle more than a thousand deer in this township, besides a large number of bears and panthers.

John Dodson was born in Northampton county, Pa., February 26th, 1771, and located in Huntington in 1796. He was the first Pennsylvanian who settled in this township, all other settlers having come from States east of this. He was a prominent and enterprising farmer, and died May 9th, 1859, leaving a widow and eighteen children. Joseph Dodson located in Huntington township in 1806, on the farm where he died in 1851. He was prominently identified with all the progressive interests of his adopted township. He was the father of twelve children.

John Koons located in what is now New Columbus borough in 1819, and became one of the most prominent men in this part of the township. He was largely interested in the Nanticoke and Hughesville and the Susquehanna and Tioga turnpikes. In 1836 he was appointed postmaster of New Columbus, and in 1858 became interested in the building of the Academy and Normal Institute at that place. He was appointed by Governor Shonk one of the judges for Luzerne county. He built the Wyoming Valley Canal from Shickshinny to the Search farm. He was a justice of the peace from 1871 to 1876. He was a surveyor and a merchant at New Columbus. He died February 13th, 1878.

Jabez Matthias and Reuben Williams were also early settlers. Jabez came in 1798. John Johnson located near or on the town line road, east side of the township, and was soon followed by Earl Tubbs and Stephen Davenport. Jonathan Westover located near Pine creek, in the northwest part of the township, and Peter Wygant on the hill above Jameson Harvey's place. The Monroe family were early settlers on Huntington creek. Amaziah Watson settled just below the Scott house, on the Huntington creek road. Other settlers were William Brandon, a Methodist preacher, and William, Jared and John Edwards, who immigrated from Ireland soon after the close of the Revolutionary war.

Thomas Patterson, born in Scotland and educated in Ireland, located in Huntington about 1799, in the northeast part of the township. Mrs. Minerva T. Patterson now lives on the old homestead. Her grandmother, Margaret Louise, was a cousin of Louis XIV. of France. The grandmother of Thomas Patterson was a sister of Lord Montgomery, of Scotland. Thomas Patterson's wife was a daughter of Colonel Nathan Denison, of Wyoming valley fame.

Among the other early settlers previous to 1800 were Amos, Samuel and Silas Franklin, Richard Williams, David Woodward, Stephen C. Kingsbury, Thomas Tubbs, John Chapin, George Stewart, Peter Chambers, Nathan Tubbs, Jonathan Fellows, E. Wadsworth, Benjamin Fuller, Robert Wilson, Stephen Sutliff, Stephen Harrison (in 1796) and Levi Seward, who came here in 1776.

Obadiah Scott, who settled on Huntington creek, about two miles below Hublersville, built the first frame house. It is still standing, and is known as the "old Scott house." John Koons had a cloth-mill at an early date, and was also engaged in the mercantile business, besides carrying on a large farm. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. He is now living at New Columbus.

Epenetus Wadsworth, grandfather of P. C. Wadsworth, located in 1794 near Town Hill. He was the first blacksmith in Huntington. He burned charcoal for himself and others. He was also the pioneer horticulturist, having set out an orchard on his lot in 1799, in which most of the trees are still in bearing and afford a good quality of fruit. The Indian trail from Shickshinny to Williamsport crossed his farm near the brick school-house of Town Hill. The well beaten path is still visible. Mr. Wadsworth was an extensive land operator for those days, and was also a local preacher.

Thomas Harvey, an Englishman, located at Harveyville and opened a shop, where he carried on blacksmithing several years. This was soon after the advent of "Deacon Wadsworth." The pioneer tanner and shoemaker was Benjamin Fuller. He located near Huntington creek, not far from the Larned place. The first grist-mill was a log structure, built in 1788, with one run of stones, by Mr. Hopkins, at the mouth of Marsh creek. He built a saw-mill at the same place. Nathaniel Goss, grandfather of the present Nathaniel Goss, built a grist-mill on the stream that empties into Huntington creek from the north, on the north side of the old Goss farm, now owned by A. Howard. It would grind about three bushels of corn per day. It was first run by hand, and subsequently by water power. Nathaniel Goss, jr., built the mill known as the Workheiser mill, which stands on the opposite side of the stream from the old one. The land on which Hopkins's mill stood was donated for mill purposes by the Susquehanna Company. In 1798 Nathan Beach built the Rogers mill on Marsh creek. Bacon's carding and fulling-mill was built on Huntington creek in 1817. The grist-mill at Harveyville was originally built in 1798, and replaced in 1837 by a new one, which was subsequently burned, and the present one built in 1869.

The taxable inhabitants of Huntington in 1796 were:

Elijah Austin, Ralph Austin, James Bensecoter, Elam Boname, Henry Baker, Anthony Bensecoter, Andrew Blancher, Isaac Bensecoter, Daniel Culver, Aaron Culver, Reuben Culver, Reuben Blish, Darius Callender, John Chapin, James Earles, John Evans, John Fayd, Silas Ferry, Abiel Fellows, Ovil Fellows, Samuel Franklin, Daniel Fuller, Benjamin Fuller, George Fink, Amos Franklin, Nathaniel Goss, Elijah Goodwin, Doctor Gaylord, Philip Goss, Timothy Hopkins, Stephen Harrison, William Harrison, Caleb Hoyt, Samuel Hover, Emanuel Hover, Nathan Jennings, Joseph Kingsbury, Samuel King, Moses Lawrence, Elias Long, John Long, Rufus Lawrence, jr., Rufus Lawrence, sen., Joseph Moss, Nathan Monroe, John Miller, Solon Trescott, Gideon Post, Joseph Potter, John Potter, Jerry Prestoo, Loyd Marshall, Elijah Wood, sen., Elijah Wood, jr., Abel Sutliff, Miles Sutliff, Thomas Stephens, Jonathan Stevens, Amos Seward, Barney Sutliff, Eli Seward, Enos Seward, jr., Enos Seward, sen., Gad Seward, Obadiah Scott, Jesse Scott, Obadiah Scott, jr., Abraham Smith, Thomas Tubbs, Thomas Taylor, Nathan Tubbs, Earl Tubbs, Nathan Tubbs, jr., Job Tripp, Jabez Williams, Uriah Williams, Thomas Williams, Tarball Whitney, Daniel Warner, John Wandall and David Woodward.

ROADS.

The old turnpike running from Berwick to Towanda was chartered June 9th, 1808, and ran across the north part of this township, passing through the village of Cambra. The road was built about 1820; daily lines of stages passed over it each day. It was abandoned as a stage route about 1840, and as a toll road about 1845.

The first road laid out in this township was the one through the Huntington creek valley. Soon other roads were surveyed and worked.

April 1st, 1836, a charter was granted to the Nanticoke and Hughesville Turnpike Company, the road to run from Nanticoke Falls to Hughesville, Lycoming county, passing through New Columbus.

The Union Turnpike Road Company was formed in 1875, and was chartered in 1876. The charter allows the company to extend its road from Shickshinny through the township of Huntington to Fairmount Springs. The road is now completed about six and a half miles from Shickshinny, to the Huntington creek valley, at a cost thus far of $12,000. The stockholders are N. B. Crary, J. W. Stackhouse, B. D. Koons, William A. Campbell, F. A. B. Koons, S. F. Monroe and D. G. Larned. The officers of the company are N. B. Crary, president; B. D. Koons, secretary, and D. G. Larned, treasurer.

JUSTICES.

The following have been the justices of the peace elected for this township since the constitution of 1838:

John Dodson, 1840; Jonathan Westover, 1840; Jared Harrison, 1849; Silas Dodson, 1849, 1850; Benjamin Harvey, 1849; Dyer L. Chapin, 1853, 1858; Thomas Patterson, 1854; G. C. McWaine, 1859, 1864; Barnard Suttiff, 1860, 1865; P. C. Wadsworth, 1869, 1874, 1879; William H. Trescott, 1870; H. D. Watson, 1875.

CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.

Methodist Episcopal Church of Town Hill.—The clouds of Revolutionary strife had not fairly blown away before the itinerant's familiar tin horn was heard resounding through the valleys, echoing over the hills and re-echoing through the forests of Huntington, calling the people together for worship. Meetings were held in barns and houses as occasion required, and as soon as possible in school-houses. The first building used as a church by the Methodists was an old school-house southeast of Town Hill, on the road toward Shepherd's and Newton's. It was built in the style peculiar to those early days, for the accommodation of both school and church, with doors in the middle of the building hinged to the ceiling, and dropped when it was desired to make a small room for school purposes. This house was used many years for this double purpose.

In 1794 the little band was reinforced by Rev. Epentus Wadsworth, a local preacher, who settled in the immediate vicinity, and was always diligent and faithful in the performance of his Christian duties.

About 1836 the society built a small church on the corner southwest of Town Hill, near J. M. Shaw's. In 1873 this was taken down and rebuilt at Town Hill village, where it now stands. The society also owns a parsonage at Town Hill. The present value of the church property is $3,000. The trustees in 1879 were G. W. Huff, J. W. Stevens, John Shepherd, W. W. Belles and P. C. Wadsworth.

Nelson M. E. Chapel, at Huntington Mills, was built in 1871, and was dedicated by and named in honor of the late Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., principal of the Kingston Seminary, and afterward head of the Methodist Book Concern at New York. The building is of wood, finished and furnished in modern style, and cost $1,500. The membership of the society is 20.

Dodson M. E. Chapel, in the southwest part of this township, was built in 1876, of wood, and is 33 by 40 feet, of modern architecture, and substantially finished and furnished, costing $1,600. It was dedicated December 24th, 1876, by Rev. Aaron M. Kester. The membership here is 40. The trustees for 1879 were William, J. W., W. J. and R. F. Chapin, S. C. and E. H. Kingsbury, E. L. Phillips, Paul Fullmer and Hiram Markle.

Methodist Ministers.—These Methodist societies are in the Bloomingdale circuit of the Wyoming Conference.

Two or three preachers have always been on the circuit at once, and therefore a great number from first to last. A complete list since 1804 has been preserved by Mrs. Sarah Harvey and her daughter, Mrs. Bethia W. Brown, of New Columbus. Those since 1850 have been as follows:

J. W. Hanghawout, 1850, 1861, 1862; T. M. Goodfellow, 1850; T. M. Barnhart, 1851, 1852; A. M. Barnitz, 1851; J. A. Demoyer, 1852; Franklin Dyson, 1853, 1854; Jacob Eyre, 1853; B. P. King, 1854, 1860-71; Thomas H. Switzer, 1855, 1856; Asbury W. Gwyer, 1855; Samuel Shannon, 1856; Eliza Butler, 1857, 1858; A. M. Kester, 1857, 1858; J. F. Porter, 1859, 1860; P. B. Ruch, 1859; Isaac Austin, 1860; H. C. Pardoe, 1861; Emory Swartz, 1862; David Castleman, 1863, 1864; Isaac Austin, 1863; Watson Case, 1864; Charles Cleaver, 1865; P. F. Eyre, 1865, 1866; M. P. Croswaithe, 1866, 1867, 1868; E. McVey Chilcoat, 1867; A. C. Croswaithe, 1868, 1869; J. Y. Shannon, 1870-72; Henry Wilson, 1872-74; M. C. Brittain, 1873, 1874; J. Guss, 1875; J. P. Brenford, 1875; J. F. Brown, 1876, 1877; I. T. Morehead, 1876; Reuben Loveland, 1877, 1878; W. A. Carver, 1878; Richard H. Gilbert, 1878, 1879; John Horning, 1879; Benjamin H. Mosser, 1879.

Pine Creek Methodist Protestant Church, known as the "Webster Chapel," was built in 1869, and dedicated in 1870, by Rev. Mr. Webster; is located on Pine creek northeast from New Columbus, at what is known as Hess's Mills. The present trustees of the church are Josiah Van Horn, Thomas L. Dodson, Nathan Hartman and Gilbert Colander.

The First Universalist society was organized in 1846, with the following members: John Shively, John Koons, William J. Carman, Lewis Stiles, Hugh Watson, Fletcher B. Dodson, Jorad Harrison, James E. Shively, Mary Shively, Emeline Migrath, Margaret Shively, Rachel Seicum, Joseph Hedden, Andrus Fellows, Silas Dodson, Jacob Boston, H. H. Seicum, Eveline A. Koons, Elvira Haynes.

Standing committee: A. Fellows, Esq. Dodson, Esq. Harrison, James Hedden, H. Watson, John Koons, clerk; John Shively, treasurer

EDUCATIONAL.

The Columbus Male and Female Academy was built in 1858, with funds raised by subscription for stock of the concern. One hundred and fifty-two shares at $10 each were subscribed for by seventy-four persons. The necessary buildings were erected, and the school opened with fair prospects, but as an academic school it has not been a success.

The Huntington Mills Educational Society was organized in 1878. An acre of land for a building lot was purchased of Amos Howard for $180. The building is of wood, two stories high, and conveniently arranged for an academic school. It cost $2,000, and was completed in July, 1878. The first term was opened September 2nd, 1878, with one hundred pupils, under charge of Prof. J. W. Swingle, assisted by W. W. Van Horn. The stockholders of the association are F. A. B. Koons, S. H. Dodson, Franklin Monroe, Perry Monroe, Clinton Bacon, M. D., Gove Larned, Amos Howard, George Remaly, William Workhiser and Redmond Koons. The officers are S. H. Dodson, president; F. A. B. Koons, secretary; George Remaly, treasurer.

In 1878 there were twelve schools in the township and in New Columbus, and twenty teachers employed, besides the academic school at Huntington Mills.

BORING FOR SALT AND PETROLEUM.

In 1825 the Huntington Salt and Iron Manufacturing Company was organized, with a capital of $10,000, in shares of $25. The salt boring was commenced on Pine creek, two miles east of Cambra, near a large natural deer lick. At a depth of 480 feet the boring rod broke and the enterprise was abandoned.

In 1865 the "Green Creek Petroleum Company" was organized, and work resumed in the old bore with a view to striking oil. Several efforts have been made here, and in this vicinity, with the hope of striking salt, oil or iron, but with no paying results.

HAMLETS IN THE TOWNSHIP.

Cambra was at one time a central point of trade for this section. There are here at present two stores, kept by James McHenry and William Belles, a hotel by M. H. Daily, a blacksmith shop by Alfred McHenry, a church, a school-house and a wagon and sleigh shop.

At Pine creek settlement, locally known as Hess's Mills, there is a good water power, by which M. E. Hess operates a grist-mill and saw-mill owned by him. There are also at this place a church (Methodist Protestant), a school-house, the store and shoe shop of A. H. Wolfe, the carriage and sleigh factory of J. W. Brittain, the blacksmith shop of D. H. Bogart, and a tub factory owned and operated by J. Van Horne, and J. Brittain is a dealer in agricultural implements.

At Harveyville there are at present a church (Methodist Episcopal), a grist-mill, a saw mill, a school-house and a store and post-office.

Huntington Mills is the chief business place of the township. It was settled in 1775 by Henry Marks. It has a church (Methodist Episcopal), an academy, a store kept by F. A. B. Koons, a hotel by Amos Howard, on the old Marks place, two blacksmith shops by William Wilson & Sons and William B. Fritz, a cabinet shop and grain cradle factory by C. H. Gramps, a boot and shoe shop by Frank Belles and the grist and carding mills of William Werkhiser. The Huntington paper-mills, a little farther up the stream, are owned and operated by F. A. B., M. L. and J. R. Koons. They commenced the manufacture of paper in 1867. The building was formerly a grist-mill, and converted by them into a paper-mill, where they now manufacture 3,500 pounds every 24 hours.

Town Hill was settled in 1794 by Epenetus Wadsworth. The place has a church (Methodist Episcopal), the store of George W. Huff, two physicians, Charles Huff and E. F. Kamerly, the steam tannery of J. C. Harman, the blacksmith shop of A. B. Bogart, the wagon and sleigh shop of W. F. Bogart, and the harness shop of E. L. Moore.

NEW COLUMBUS BOROUGH.

THE borough of New Columbus was formed from part of Huntington township, April 11th, 1859. Justices of the peace for the borough have been elected as follows: Emory Ink, 1860; Dyer L. Chapin, 1864, 1869, 1874; John Koons, 1866, 1871; Edmund Carey, 1876; John Yapple, 1879.

There are in the borough two churches, Methodist Episcopal, and Baptist; one hotel, the old academy, two general dry goods and grocery stores, kept by C. M. Swazey & Co. and D. L. Chapin; one boot and shoe shop, by W. Heddon; two blacksmith shops, by David Bogart and T. F. Long; and one harness shop, by George W. Osborn. C. M. Swazey is the present postmaster. The population is 267.

Integrity Lodge I. O. of O. F., No. 234, was moved from Harveyville to New Columbus in 1867, where it meets in the hall weekly.

EARLY SETTLERS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

A family named Boston was probably the first to clear up a farm and put up buildings, and John Boston lived here many years, dying when almost a century old.

— John Koons was married to Anna A. Fellows June 21st, 1819, and soon after commenced to clear up the wilderness on the site of the village. Other neighbors soon after commenced clearing off the luxuriant growth of timber, and a few years sufficed for the dense forests to disappear.

Elias Dodson bought a large tract near the creek, where he built saw-mills and a small mill for flour and feed. In 1834 he and Eliphalet Edson built a larger grist-mill, which cost them near $5,000. After the death of Elias Dodson the mill, with part of the farm, was bought by Frederick Hartman; but the old family homestead is still retained by his son, Thomas L., and his daughter, Mabel Dodson. Other heirs also possess part of the old farm.

Samuel Culver cleared up a good farm in the north-eastern part of the borough, now owned by G. W. Bowman. Fletcher Bowman long possessed a large farm between Culver's and the village, with excellent buildings, orchards, etc. The Dodson mills are now owned by Daniel Edgar and C. P. Fulmer. There are two saw-mills in the borough, owned by G. W. Bowman and Edmond Carey.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

A union church was built soon after 1830; it is still used by different denominations.

Elias Dodson was an active and useful Baptist preacher, of the order known as Disciples. His efforts, seconded by John Koons and others, succeeded in erecting the church which still stands as a testimonial of their philanthropy and zeal for the public good. In 1857 the Methodist Episcopal society built its present church in the southern part of the borough.

In 1856 a new academy was opened, which has flourished until the present time. The first trustees were John Koons, James Tubbs, D. L. Chapin, Sydney H. Warner, M. D., N. D. Stiles, B. M. Stevens, John Yapple and Freese Brown. The school has been taught by the following named gentlemen as principals: James Anderson, H. D. Walker, A. J. Furman, Prof. Bingham, P. M. Bickley, J. L. Killgore, Thomas Farquar, M. C. Brittain, James Coughlin and the present principal, Prof. Denis O'Coughlin. The academy is a good school for the study of classical and scientific branches, and for business education. There is also a good public school, supported by taxation.

VOLUNTEERS OF 1861-65.

A spirit of patriotism was inherited and cultivated in most of the descendants of the Revolutionary patriots, and when the call for help to save our free institutions from anarchy and overthrow was sounded from our nation's capital in 1861, this village was not found lacking in bravery and devotion to our cherished institutions. A response of personal sacrifice was offered by Fletcher Bowman, Benjamin Harvey Bowman, Joseph Bogart, Bateman Carey, Silas, Wesley and Edward Cavenagh, Alfred and Alonzo Drake, Myron Fellows, Miner Hoover, Livingston and Redmond Koons, John Miller, Wesley Piatt, Fletcher B. Wilson and Fletcher D. Yapple.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

THIS township, named in honor of General Jackson, was set off from Plymouth in 1844. It has a population of 660.

The first settlement was made by Palmer Ransom in 1795. During this and the following year Samuel Allen, David Allen, Jesse Brown, William Baker, Jared R. Baldwin, Jude Baldwin, Asahel Drake, Rufus Drake, Jehial Fuller, Thomas Lamoreux, John Lamoreux, Edon Ruggles, Joseph Reynolds and Matthias Van Loon settled in Jackson township. They were followed by Griffin Lewis in 1800; Thomas Case, Joseph Reynolds and Levi Bronson in 1804, and Anson Carskadden about 1806, Jared R. Baldwin in 1819 and Joseph Howard in 1821. The first settler in the western part of the township was Henry Cease, who settled on Harvey's creek in 1830.

The first frame house was built by the Fullers at Huntsville, and is owned by Dr. J. J. Rogers. The next oldest is now owned by Ziegler & Wilcox, at Huntsville. Griffin Lewis built a frame house about 1800.

Philetus Fuller, who was killed by a falling tree in 1796, was the first person buried in Jackson township. He was buried in the woods east of Huntsville, where the cemetery now is.

Jesse Brown was the first carpenter. The first blacksmith was Benjamin Higgins. Ira Bronson was also a blacksmith. The first saw-mill was built by Asahel & Rufus Drake, on the farm now owned by J. M. Nesbitt, as early as 1795. There have been three mills on this place, but they are all gone. Jared and Jude Baldwin built a saw-mill at Huntsville about the same time, and the Fullers one near the Baldwin mill within a year after that was built. The mill of Ziegler & Wilcox stands on the site of the Baldwin mill, which was burned. George P. Ransom built a mill in 1815. This becoming useless, his son Chester erected the present mill in 1840. John Lamoreux and Daniel Davenport erected a saw-mill on Bidlack's creek about 1823. Henry Cease built a mill on the site of the one owned by Josiah Cease, on Harvey's creek, in 1830. Sanford Parsons built the mill now owned by Harvey Fuller, at Huntsville, about 1847. Jeremiah Fuller and Truman Atherton added a grist-mill to their saw-mill at Huntsville as early as 1805. Henry Cease built the Gregory mill, on Harvey's creek, in 1830. Harvey Fuller rebuilt his saw-mill at Huntsville, and added a grist-mill in 1863. The mill now owned by Ziegler & Wilcox was first built by Truman Atherton, Green Atherton and Egbert Bogardus. This is a saw and grist-mill, with one water power.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house was a log building, erected as early as 1800, where the M. E. church stands. Another was built in 1829, where the Van Buren school-house now stands. The log house at Huntsville was followed by the present frame structure, built by the inhabitants as a meeting and school-house. Prior to 1846 the schools were kept up by private subscription. In March, 1846, the township adopted the school law, and elected directors, who levied a tax of $65, which was divided among the four schools of the town. There is still a fund in this township arising from the sale of the lands set apart by the proprietors for educational purposes. There are at present five schools in the township, with one hundred and thirty-eight pupils. The total expense for 1878 for school purposes was $903.13.

HUNTSVILLE POST-OFFICE.

Prior to 1879, when an office was established at Cease's Mills, with Austin Gregory as postmaster, Huntsville was the only office in the township. Truman Atherton was the first postmaster. Mails are brought from Kingston twice a week. The postmaster is H. M. Hatfield. The first store here was kept by Mr. Hunt, after whom the post-office was named. He was hunted by Obed Baldwin, J. I. Bogardus and Sanford Parsons prior to 1830. There are two stores, two blacksmith shops, two grist-mills, two saw-mills and a wagon shop here now. Dr. J. J. Rogers, who has lived here thirty years, is the only physician who ever located in Jackson.

TOWNSHIP OFFICERS.

The township records have been well kept, especially by J. R. Baldwin, Esq., who has been town clerk fourteen years. The officers of the township have been as follows:

Supervisors.—M. Brown, 1845; J. Murphy, 1845; Obed Baldwin, 1846, 1853; Conrad Miller, 1846, 1848; Truman Atherton, 1847; Absalom Case, 1847, 1859, 1872; Joseph Wilcox, 1848; C. W. Cease, 1849; T. Brown, 1849; Peter Cease, 1850, 1857; Miles Hall, 1850; Oliver Davenport, 1851; Ira Maudeville, 1851, 1861; Levi Learn, 1852; Wesley Lamoreux, 1852, 1861, 1872; Alexander Lamoreux, 1853, 1860; G. W. Benedict, 1854, 1857; G. W. Schofield, 1854; Sidney Bryant, 1855; John Covert, 1855; Chester Ranson, 1856; Green Atherton, 1856; M. Allen, 1858, 1864, 1865; George Cease, 1858, 1861, 1865; P. N. Foster, 1859; J. M. Nesbitt, 1860; Elias Shaver, 1862; Martin Myers, 1862; John Case, 1869; Joseph Sweitzer, 1863; Abram Frisbee, 1866, 1869; William Booth, 1866, 1870, 1871; C. B. Mandeville, 1867; Jacob Cease, 1867; W. H. Myers, 1868; J. O. Snyder, 1868, 1869; L. S. Simons, 1870, 1876; I. H. Hale, 1871, 1874; E. W. Shaver, 1873, 1874; Fletcher Cease, 1873; George Harliss, 1875, 1878; M. Brown, 1875, 1879; Jacob Gable, 1877; M. M. Lamoreux, 1879.

Town Clerks.—C. C. Curtis, 1846, 1848; M. Brown, 1847; J. C. Elston, 1849, 1850; J. R. Baldwin, 1851 to 1854, and 1868 to 1879; W. Lamoreux, 1855, 1858; D. McNeil, 1857; Charles Brown, 1859, 1864; Philip Cease, 1864, 1867; J. J. Rogers, 1877; Josiah Cease, 1879.

Justices (with years of election).—Calvin W. Cease, 1845, 1850, 1856, 1861, 1867; Hiram Drake, 1846; Truman Atherton, 1850; William M. Houser, 1853; John Elston, 1855; P. N. Foster, 1859; J. R. Baldwin, 1865, 1872, 1877.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

The early religious teachings were by resident Baptist preachers, prominent among whom were Joel Rogers, Griffin Lewis, and one of the Drakes. At the same time Universalist preachers, among whom were Rev. Mr. Coffin and Rev. Mr. Crooker, used to preach and had a large following. The "Christian" society sent preachers to Huntsville as early as 1830. Joseph Badger, Seth Marvin and G. W. Richmond were the first preachers of that denomination. All these societies held services in the school-houses.

Van Loon M. E. Church.—A society of Methodists was formed in Jackson township as early as 1820. The ministers, as far as can be ascertained, were Morgan Sherman, Joseph Castle, John Copeland, Philo Barbery, George Peck, S. Stocking, Miles H. Gaylord and Silas Comfort to 1828. There is no record from this date to 1850. Since then the pastors have been as follows: Charles Perkins, Joshua S. Lewis, — Chubbuck, — Morse, C. W. Griffin, P. Holbrook; D. Personius, 1863-65; George Greenfield, 1867-69; Isaac Austin, 1869-72; F. A. King, 1872-75; J. B. Santee, 1875; R. C. Gill, 1876-78; and David Larrish, the present pastor.

In 1877 the society built a fine wooden church building. It was dedicated November 22nd, 1877, by Rev. W. H. Olin, D. D. It takes its name from James Van Loon, of Kingston, who contributed very largely toward the building of the edifice.

Baptist Church.—The following persons took letters from the Plymouth and Lehman Baptist churches, and organized a church December 18th, 1864.

Deacon Hosea Hall, Milton Brown, Henry Cease, Jacob Cease, John Elston, George Cease 1st, George Cease 2nd, Oliver Davenport, S. A. Davenport, Peter Steele, Darius Lamoreux, Benjamin Higgins, Peter Marsh, William Hunter, Morgan Allen, William Lamoreux, Joseph Cease, Thomas Lamoreux, William Turpin, Daniel Turpin, Christopher Elston, Abram Cease, Martha Lamoreux, Matilda Campfield, Maria Lamoreux, Sarah Turpin, Amelia Lamoreux, Marilla Marsh, Amelia Case, Oliver Ackley, Keziah Allen, Lucinda Davenport, Elizabeth Davenport, Lucy Davenport, Sarah Lamoreux, Caroline Hall, Eliza Foygerson, Betsey Welday, Lydia A. Brown, Barbara Cease, Anna Fruett, Anna Elston, Almira Lamoreux, Christiana Cease.

The first minister, George W. Schofield, had charge from January 1st, 1845, to March, 1846. He was followed by James Clarkson, 1846-51; G. W. Schofield, 1856, 1857; W. M. Gay, 1859-61; E. N. Whitney, 1862; Benjamin Shearer, 1869-71; P. S. Brewster, 1872, R. C. H. Catterall, 1875, 1876.

The society has never had a church, but has held service in the union school-house. Jacob Cease is the present Sunday school superintendent and deacon of the church.

JENKINS TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was taken from Pittston June 24th, 1852, and named in honor of Colonel John Jenkins, one of the prominent settlers of the Wyoming valley. About one-half of the township is cleared, and very nearly the whole of it is owned by the Pennsylvania and Lehigh coal companies, being underlaid with anthracite. Only that portion lying between the Susquehanna river and Gardner's creek has been settled, leaving two-thirds of the territory without a human inhabitant. The population is 2,203 against 2,505 in 1870.

Justices of the peace for Jenkins have been elected as follows Samuel Hodgson, jr., 1855; Peter Winter, 1855 and 1860; Michael Phillin, 1860; Thomas L. McMillan, 1865; Edward Riley, 1866; Theodore T. Hall, 1870 and 1876; Henry Jopling, 1871; James Donaghoe, 1875.

EARLIEST INHABITANTS AND INSTITUTIONS.

Joseph Gardner and Isaac Gould were the pioneer settlers on Gardner's creek. They located near where the creek crosses the township line into Plains, a little below where the Lafin powder mills stand. Here they built the pioneer grist-mill in 1794.

The first saw-mill was a portable one, built by Daniel Seeley on Gardner's creek, near the opening of the Everhart coal mines. Jesse Thomas had a small saw-mill above the site of the powder mills. These saw-mills have gone to decay.

James, John, Isaac and Joseph Thompson lived in the hollow below Sevastopol, on the Wilkes-Barre road toward Inkerman. The pioneer blacksmith, John Stout, had a shop on the hill between the school-house and Yatesville. He located here in 1824. The first brick house was built by George Price, in 1846, on the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road. Mr. Price was a son-in-law of George Cooper, one of the early settlers. The house is still standing, and is occupied by a Mr. Butler. It is interesting to think of the time when Mr. Price interviewed Mrs. Cooper on the subject of becoming a mother-in-law; as it was soon after the war of 1812, and Price was a "freshman" from His Majesty's dominions, while in Mrs. Cooper's veins flowed the blood of a true Connecticut Yankee matron, who wondered at the audacity of that "Britisher" in asking the hand of her daughter. The reader can imagine the scene. However, the union of the two nationalities was arranged, and Jenkins township was none the worse for it.

Among the other early settlers along the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road were Joseph, James and Jacob Swallow, near the southwest border of the township. Jesse Gardner located back on Gardner's creek; Isaac Tompkins, James and Joseph Armstrong farther down toward the river. William, Jacob and Daniel La Bar, Peter Miller, Anthony Lcoe, Abram, Thomas and John Hess and a Mr. Goode were among the number.

The first school-house was built about 1810 or 1812, near where the brick school-house now stands, on the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road, in Sevastopol. The old school-house is now in use as a work-shop, having been sold to Francis Yates. It stands opposite his residence at Yatesville. The first teacher was Joel Hale. There was a log school-house at Inkerman, on the hill above Port Blanchard. John Blanchard and his sisters and George Cooper were among the early pupils. Roswell Hale was the first teacher at Inkerman.

The oldest cemetery is the Cooper burying ground, in the northwest corner of the township. We find upon the tombstones the following names and dates: Conrad Schiffern, born May 18th, 1744, died May 18th, 1820; Rachel Schiffern, born June 27th, 1742, died January 23d, 1810; Adam Wagner, born 1754, died 1806; Margaret Tedrick, died June 6th, 1811; Peter Sailor, died March 18th, 1809, aged 39; Mary Ann Sailor, died May 26th, 1814; Elizabeth Good, died February 27th, 1825, aged 30; Eve La Bar, died January 10th, 1809, aged 36; Rensselaer Billina, died April 1st, 1806; Margaret Winter, died February 14th, 1833, aged 81; Peter Winter, died March 11th, 1814, aged 65; James Swallow, died February 2nd, 1804, aged 50; Elizabeth Swallow, died April 15th, 1814, aged 60; Mary David, died January 26th, 1816, aged 36; Nancy Blanchard, died September 24th, 1809, aged 18; Cordelia Blanchard, died December 27th, 1794; Henry Cortright, jr., died February 2nd, 1828; William Day, born in England in 1740, died February 7th, 1829, aged 89.

COAL INTERESTS OF JENKINS.

This township is in the eastern district of the Wyoming coal fields, and a large majority of the coal lands belong to the Pennsylvania Coal Company and the Everhart Coal Company.

At the Everhart colliery there are employed on the inside 78 men and boys, and 58 on the outside. In 1878 this colliery produced 32,276 tons of coal in the 124 days worked.

Slope No. 2 of the Pennsylvania Coal Company produced 35,177 tons of coal in 1878 in 176 days. There were employed 80 men and boys on the inside, and 14 on the surface. Slope No. 4 of the same company, near Inkerman, employed in 1878 121 men and boys inside, and 24 on the outside, and produced 53,311 tons of coal. Shaft No. 5 produced in the same year 55,431 tons of coal. There were employed under ground 114 men and boys, and 59 on the surface. Shafts Nos. 6 and 11 and the coal breaker of the Pennsylvania Company are at Inkerman. No. 6 employed during 1878 114 men and boys inside, and 57 on the surface, and produced 44,899 tons of coal in 192 days. At shaft No. 11 there were mined in 146 days 25,071 tons.

THE LAFLIN POWDER MILLS.

These mills, seven in number, are on Gardner's creek, near the southwest border of the township, half a mile above where the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad crosses the creek. The buildings are nearly in line, extending 1,430 feet along the creek in a beautiful grove of white oak, which in case of an explosion of any one of the mills would serve as a protection for the rest. The engine-house, which is nearly in the center of the line of buildings, is built of stone, and from it run eleven hundred feet of four-inch iron shafting, extending to the different buildings where motive power is required. The storehouse is the building farthest up the creek, where the stock for the manufacture of powder is kept. A track from the railroad runs alongside the storehouse, into which freight is taken directly from the cars. From the storehouse the material is transported on hand cars to the different mills through which it has to pass until it reaches the graining mill. Here the powder is placed in revolving cylinders, and dried by air which is heated in a furnace a short distance from the graining mill and forced through pipes into the cylinders while they are in motion. On the right bank of the creek, and nearly opposite the graining mill, are four brick coal pits, where are annually consumed 600 cords of wood in making the charcoal which is required in the manufacture of powder. These mills were commenced in 1872, by H. D. Laflin and C. M. Rouse, the present proprietors, and completed in 1873, at a cost of $100,000. They employ 16 men, and manufacture 75,000 pounds of blasting powder annually. C. M. Rouse, Esq., one of the proprietors, is superintendent of the mills, and has had nearly thirty years' experience in the business.

VILLAGES.

PORT GRIFFITH was thus named in honor of one of the original stockholders of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, one of whose mines is at this place. It was then the terminus of the company's railroad. It was for several years quite a flourishing place, and is at present an ordinary mining town. There is a store kept by Patrick Moylan, who is also the postmaster; a station of the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad, a school-house, several small groceries and about 300 inhabitants.

PORT BLANCHARD is a railroad station about three-quarters of a mile farther down the Susquehanna, where there are now a hotel, a school-house and a few dwellings, with about 100 inhabitants. This place was named in honor of John Blanchard, an early resident and one of the first coal operators in this township.

The first settler here was Captain Jeremiah Blanchard. He built a log house in the corner of the lot east of Mrs. Blanchard's, and subsequently built the house where Ebenezer Blanchard now lives. The house is known as the old "mansion house." In 1823 John Blanchard located here, and in 1817 built the house now occupied by Mrs. Blanchard.

The east part of the hotel was built soon after the Blanchard house, and it was opened as a hotel in 1845. It was kept by Samuel Hodgson, father of the present proprietor. Mr. Hodgson was appointed postmaster about the time he opened his tavern, and held the office while he

J. R. Williams

THE WILLIAMS FAMILY.

Thaddeus Williams, of Fairfield county, Conn., was no doubt a descendant of Robert Williams of Roxbury, Mass., who emigrated to this country from England in 1637. Thaddeus married Frances Case, of Hartford, Conn., and moved with his family to the Wyoming valley at an early day. He was driven from the valley at the time of the massacre, but returned and settled in Wilkes-Barre. Miner's History of Wyoming (page 262) gives the following account of an attack on his house in March, 1779: "A party of Indians made an assault on the house.

The father, sick and confined to his bed, was unable to lend any assistance. Sergeant Williams and a brother quite young were the only persons capable of offering the least resistance. Twice the Indians rushed up to the door and attempted in vain to force an entrance. Several balls were fired into the house through openings in the logs, one of which severely wounded the sick father. He had two guns, one of which the lad loaded while he fired the other. Watching his time and taking careful aim, one of the Indians fell and was dragged away. Redoubling their shouts the Indians returned with brands of fire, but another discharge wounded their leader and finally repelled them, leaving Sergeant Williams victor and his aged father and mother rescued from death." Thomas Williams, son of Thaddeus Williams, was six years in the Revolutionary struggle. Thaddeus died April 11th, 1796. His wife died in August, 1815, and was buried in the Gore burying ground, in what is now Plains township. The gallant Sergeant Thomas Williams married Elizabeth Robertson, of Bethel, Conn., about the year 1782, and reared a family of six sons and four daughters. He lived near Bridgeport until the spring of 1790, when he removed to Wyoming valley, where he accumulated a handsome property in the part of Wilkes-Barre which is now Plains. His wife died December 6th, 1835, aged 71 years. He died November 12th, 1839, aged 83 years. Their remains are buried in the Hollenbeck cemetery, Wilkes-Barre. His descendants are numerous. But one son, the youngest, Jonathan Robertson, survives. He was born in old Wilkes-Barre township, December 5th, 1809. He has been twice married: in 1831 to Maria Robertson, who died in January, 1876, and to Miss Lillie Bell, of Plains, July 30th, 1879. Though declining political honors he has held the honorable position of director of two or more banks in Wilkes-Barre for a number of years. He is a farmer, and lives in a beautiful residence on his farm in Plains, near where he was born.

Francis Yates

FRANCIS YATES.

Francis Yates was born in the parish of Herlaton, Yorkshire, England, November 11th, 1791. On the 9th of June, 1817, he left England for America, landing in Philadelphia on the 22nd of the following month. He returned to England after a short visit to America, and remained until after his marriage. His wife was Miss Mary Pratt, also a native of Yorkshire, England, who was born on the 18th of January, 1789. They were married March 24th, 1819, and during the following May left England for America, arriving at Philadelphia June 5th. Mr. Yates very soon moved into Camden, where they remained two or three years. In 1822 he moved his family into Hanover, Pa., and in 1825 to Yatesville. They had seven children, four of whom survive. The eldest, John P. Yates, now a farmer of Fond du Lac, Wis., was born April 18th, 1820. The second son, Francis Yates, jr., was born July 28th, 1824. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Mary A. Banker, of Pittston, was born September 1st, 1826, and the youngest, Mrs. Jane Jones, of Mill Creek, April 27th, 1831. Mr. Yates came into this county when the land which has since yielded its vast stores of wealth was but a wilderness. The now thriving city of Wilkes-Barre consisted of a few rude houses, and but three stores were kept. Mrs. Yates, who still survives, living at the homestead farm with her son Francis, tells of the toils, the hardships, and the pleasures as well of their pioneer experiences. Mr. Yates was fully identified with all the enterprises of his day, and anything which tended to promote the interests of the county in which he lived received his hearty co-operation. Especially was he interested in the prosperity of the Methodist church, of which he was a member from March 18th, 1820, until his death, which occurred March 27th, 1862. What is now the village of Yatesville was once a part of his farm. Here his son kept the first store. The church here was built through his instrumentality, and here his son has built, during the last year, a Methodist parsonage. The interest in the public welfare which was manifested during his life by Francis Yates, sen., is maintained by his son Francis at present. He has held the most important elective offices in the township and borough, and was for many years the largest taxpayer in the township. He is now a farmer, builder, and general agent at Yatesville for the Lehigh Valley Coal Company.

lived when it was removed to Port Griffith, and Patrick Moylan was appointed.

George Cooper located a little west of the Blanchard farm, and families named Doty and Berger near Blanchard's about 1800.

INKERMAN.—This mining town, on the old Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road, was settled by Peter Winter about 1810 or 1812. He had a blacksmith shop at this place. At present there are two school-houses (one two-story structure built in 1879), two stores, several groceries and a population of 600. Shafts No. 6 and No. 11 and the only breaker in this township are located here.

SEVASTOPOL is a small hamlet, formerly known as the Thompson settlement, at the intersection of the Yatesville road with the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road. It contains a school-house and about twenty-five dwellings, with 150 inhabitants.

YATESVILLE BOROUGH.

N the 20th of May, 1878, this borough was formed from Jenkins township and incorporated, and the first borough election was held June 1st, 1878, when the following officers were elected: Burgess, T. T. Hale; town council—Thomas Natrass, John Shields, George Faircloth, William Learch, Alexander Frazer, Alfred Day. At a meeting of the town council held June 4th, 1878, George Faircloth was elected president and Thomas Natrass secretary. John H. Monk was elected street commissioner, Matthew Harrison chief of police, and W. D. Hale collector. T. T. Hale is the present burgess, having held the office continuously since his first election. The present town council consists of Alexander Frazer, sen., Thomas Natrass, Alfred Day, W. A. Read, William Gowan, sen., and Charles Serton. The rest of the borough officers for 1880 are: School directors, John Harding, James Carpenter and Charles Hale; high constable, John Harding; auditor, George Faircloth; assessor, Francis Yates; inspectors, William Gowan, jr., and George R. Smith; register assessor, Thomas Natrass. The last named was elected justice of the peace March 27th, 1879.

SETTLEMENT AND GROWTH.

Joel Hale, in 1809, built the first frame house here. It is now occupied by John Monk, sen. Mr. Hale owned most of the sites of the business portion of the borough. It was soon divided into smaller lots to suit purchasers.

The next settlers here were H., Frederick and George Day, David Reese, James Cooper, Isaac and George Naphus, Joseph and John Stout, and James Thompson, all of whom came in 1809 or 1810.

The first tavern was built and kept by William D. Hale in 1859, on the corner of Main street and Stout road. It is now kept by John H. Monk. The pioneer store was opened in 1855. The school-house on the west side of the Stout road was built in 1851. The Wesleyan church on the east side of the school-house was built in 1864. It is now the property of the Young Men's Debating Association, and locally known as the Theatre.

Those who located here between 1812 and 1825 were John and Isaiah Hale, John Yates, Asa and Morris Naphus, and in 1825 Francis Yates, sen. The latter, after whom the borough was named, was born in England and came to America in 1817. He bought 90 acres of land of Theophilus Brooks, on which was a log house standing just above the old house between Francis Yates's and the railroad station; and in 1832 built the frame house standing up the road from Francis Yates's house. His wife is still living, aged 91 years, and is actively engaged in the lighter household duties. The farms of the early and later settlers are all owned by the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and are nearly all abandoned for farm purposes. The first anthracite coal used at this place was used by Francis Yates and the Hale family. The coal cropped out near the surface, and they used a plow and scraper to uncover it. After clearing the dirt from a large surface they commenced digging and drawing out the coal with an ox team and sled. In this way they took out enough for their own use, besides selling large quantities, for those days, to their neighbors. This was the first coal mining in Yatesville. There are now two tunnels and one slope in the borough, where many thousands of tons are annually mined. The Pennsylvania Coal Company commenced operations here in 1847, and with the mining business came an increase of population.

The borough now has one church (Methodist Episcopal), two stores, kept by T. T. Hale and John Shields; a hotel, a school-house, a blacksmith shop, a tin shop, a shoe shop, and 413 inhabitants. The valuation of the borough for 1879 was $34,644. A post-office was established January 15th, 1879, with Mrs. Sarah R. Hale as postmistress. Previous to this the post-office was Pittston.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF YATESVILLE.

This society covers the territory lying between Pittston and Plainsville on the east side of the Susquehanna river. It grew out of the "Thompson neighborhood" class, of which Francis Yates was leader in 1825. The original members were Francis Yates, Daniel Bowman, Jesse Garner, George Price, William Day and John Thompson and their wives.

The meetings were held in private houses until the Thompson school-house was built, then in that until 1852; the place of meeting was then changed to the Yatesville school-house and another class formed, consisting of Francis Yates and wife, Joseph Natrass and wife, George Robinson and wife, Sarah Learch and Rosetta Monk. These persons held their membership with the Pittston M. E. church, and under the leadership of Father Yates the membership of the class increased, and a Sabbath-school was organized.

In 1862 a portion of the society withdrew and formed a society of "Wesleyan Methodists," built a small church, and for a short time had preaching. In a few years most of them returned.

Until 1874 the preachers at Yatesville were Revs. M. Mead, G. M. Peck, O. M. McDowell, W. J. Judd, Y. C. Smith, I. T. Walker and T. Harroun.

During the pastorate of Rev. T. Judd at Pittston the M. E. society at Yatesville commenced building church, and the basement was used in 1865, Rev. Mr. Sturdevant preaching the first sermon here. The society worshiped until 1874, when the church was completed and dedicated. The sermons were preached by Rev. T. Harroun, of Pittston, and Rev. W. J. Judd.

In 1874 Yatesville was set off as a station. Rev. J. G. Stephens was pastor one year. The trustees were George Robinson, Thomas Natrass and Francis Yates. The stewards were George Robinson, Thomas Natrass, James Teasdale, John W. Worden, William Learch and James Jones (recording steward). There were then about 20 members.

In 1875 Rev. G. M. Colville was appointed here, and under his pastorate of two years the membership increased to 60, and the Sabbath-school in proportion. From the spring of 1877 Rev. Wilson Treible was pastor till the spring of 1880. A parsonage was built in 1880, costing $1,000.

The Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition. Moses McGee is superintendent; George Monk and Mary Harrison secretaries, and John Hewit librarian. The total number of scholars is 150. Average attendance 100.

ORDER OF FORESTERS.

Court Rose of the Valley, No. 5,517, Ancient Order of Foresters was instituted December 12th, 1871, under the jurisdiction of the English High Court. December 15th, 1874, this court seceded from the High Court of England, and united with the Independent High Court of Foresters of America, and since then has been known by the name of Court Rose of the Valley, No. 8, I. O. of F. It has an endowment fund, out of which $1,000 is paid to the heirs of deceased members.

The presiding officers since 1874 have been George Faircloth, Samuel Monk, Thomas Hoskins, Charles Sartin, William J. Monk, George Robinson, John Harding, G. R. Smith, George Charlton and William Smerdon.

The officers for the first term of 1880 were: Charles Sartin, C. R.; John Shields, treasurer; George Faircloth, secretary. The present number of members is 40.

KINGSTON TOWNSHIP.

IN 1790 this township was one of the eleven Susquehanna townships into which old Luzerne county was divided. It is in the very heart of the far-famed Wyoming valley, embracing within its 29 square miles the most productive agricultural and mining lands in the valley. It has within its boundaries some of the most interesting localities and objects in the State.

Among the forty persons who came to the valley in 1769, under the auspices of the Susquehanna Company, was Ezra Dean, Esq., whose wife was a native of Kingston, Rhode Island. From that town this one took its name. In 1796 this township included Dallas and parts of Lake and Franklin, and it then contained only 100 taxable inhabitants, 78 horses and 24 head of horned cattle. The population in 1870 was 2,825, and in 1880 5,881.

In 1786 Forty Fort was a formidable rival of Wilkes-Barre for the honor and advantages of being the county seat.

In 1840 there were but eleven persons engaged in mining in this township, and only 273 in agriculture.

The taxable inhabitants above referred to were the following:

James Atherton, Elisha Atherton, John Allen, Joseph Brown, Oliver Biglow, Alexander Brown, William Brown, Daniel Burney, Andrew Bennoett, Josephus Barber, Caleb Brundage, Samuel Breese, Laban Blanchard, Almon Church, Gilbert Carpenter, Jonathan Carver, Samuel Carver, James Carpenter, Tunis Decker, Jesse Dickerson, Benjamin Dorrance, John Dorrance, Nathan Denison, Christian Cornigh, Joshua Fuller, Benajah Fuller, Hallet Gallog, William Gallog, Peter Grubb, John Gore, James Gardiner, Lewis Hartsoff, John Horton, Peter Hartsoff, Daniel Hoyt, William Hurlbert, Elijah Harris, Joseph Hillman, John Hinds, Stephen Hollister, Philip Jackson, John Joseph, John Keely, Samuel Landon, Nathaniel Landon, David Landon, James Landon, James Love, William Little, Isaiah Lucas, Lawrence Myers, Philip Myers, Nathan Mulford, Lewis Mullison, John Montoney, Isaac Montoney, Joseph Montoney, Andrew Miller, Elisha Matterson, Anning Owen, Abel Pierce, John Pierce, Joseph Pierce, Elias Pierce, Oliver Pettibone, David Perkins, Aaron Perkins, John Rosenkrans, Aaron Roberts, Benjamin Roberts, Nathan Roberts, James Rice, Sherman Smith, Daniel Spencer, Martin Smith, Luke Sweetland, Joseph Sweetland, James Scofield, Comfort Shaw, Alexander Swartwout, Elijah Shoemaker, Abraham Shoemaker, Adam Shafer, Peter Shafer, Frederick Shafer, Peter Shale, Henry Tuttle, John Tuttle, Joseph Tuttle, William Trucks, Isaac Tripp, Israel Underwood, Gideon Underwood, Abraham Van Gordon, Lemuel Wakely, John Wart, Ashel Fish, Benjamin Smith.

Justices of the peace have been elected as follows for the township of Kingston since the adoption of the constitution of 1838: Addison C. Church, 1840; Alvah C. Phillips, 1840; John Johnston, 1841; Anson Atherton, 1845; Henry Woodhouse, 1846, 1851, 1856, 1861 and 1866; Reuben Jones, 1850 and 1855; William C. Hagan, 1858; Milton G. Phillips, 1859; William L. Rice, 1864, 1869, 1874; John J. Jenkins, 1875; Steuben Jenkins, 1875; Eugene S. Cooper, 1879.

ANTHRACITE INTERESTS.

Long before the present mammoth breakers were dreamed of coal was mined at or near Toby eddy, near the mouth of Toby creek. A wharf was built at the mouth of the creek, and another at the mouth of Tuttle creek, for shipping coal. Israel Skeer was one of the pioneer navigators of the Susquehanna. He mined his coal at what is now Maltby, and shipped it at the wharf last mentioned.

Kingston Coal Company.—The first opening by this company in this township was made at shaft No. 1 in 1864, by Waterman & Beaver, and breaker No. 1 was built the same year and David Morgan appointed superintendent. The opening at shaft No. 2 was made and the breaker built in 1872. In 1877 the name of the firm was changed to the present style of Kingston Coal Company (limited). Daniel Edwards, the present superintendent, succeeded Mr. Morgan in 1868. He is also inside and general outside foreman. In 1878 Daniel R. Davis and Morgan D. Rosser were mine bosses, and Thomas L. Morgan and M. D. Rosser outside foremen. There were employed at these two shafts 295 men and 73 boys under ground, and 80 men and 144 boys on the surface. There were mined in that year 235,302 tons of coal.

Maltby Colliery, at Maltby station, on the D. L. & W. Railroad, is operated by C. S. Maltby, with Oscar A. Fowler as general superintendent, Charles Smith mine boss, and A. B. Tyrell outside foreman. In 1878 this colliery employed 118 men and 11 boys under ground, and 44 men and 72 boys on the surface, and in 107 days worked produced 30,000 tons of coal.

Forty Fort Colliery, near Wyoming village is operated by the Forty Fort Coal Company; J. H. Swoyer is superintendent; Charles Leonard, assistant superintendent and general outside foreman; William McCulloch, inside, and — Patten, outside foreman; Phillip McCabe, mine boss. In 1878 this colliery was worked 137 days, and produced 127,250 tons of coal. There were employed during the year 214 men and 48 boys under ground, and 53 men and 75 men on the surface.

The East Boston Coal Mine was opened and the breaker built in 1862. In 1878 there were employed at this mine 168 men and boys on the inside, and 97 on the outside. In 189 days 99,048 tons of coal were mined. This colliery is operated by William G. Payne & Co. W. G. Payne is superintendent; E. F. Payne, outside and inside foreman; Thomas L. Jones, inside foreman and mine boss.

The Hutchinson Shaft and Breaker were constructed in 1871 and 1872. There were employed in 1878 192 men and boys on the inside, and 90 on the outside. The mine was worked only 38 days, producing 19,947 tons. This colliery is operated by Charles Hutchinson, with J. C. Hutchinson as superintendent; John Thomas is mine boss, and William McCulloch outside foreman.

The Raub Mine was opened in 1875; the breaker was built in 1878, and commenced breaking coal January 10th, 1879. It is known as the Raubville breaker.

The Willow Grove Breaker is located over the hill west of Mill Hollow. This colliery is a diminutive affair compared with those operated by steam, as the breaker at this place is operated by horse power. The mine was opened in 1879 by Messrs. Lloy & Williams, who are the present owners and operators.

WYOMING.

This village, located in the northeast corner of the township, has become memorable in song and story because of the battle of July 3d, 1773, which is spoken of at length in the general history of Luzerne county. Perhaps the most conspicuous feature of the village is the monument that perpetuates the record of this most memorable event in the history of the Wyoming valley.

The inscription on the front tablet of the monument reads as follows:

"Near this spot was fought, on the afternoon of Friday, the 3d of July, 1778, the battle of Wyoming; in which a small body of patriotic Americans, chiefly the undisciplined, the youthful and the aged, spared, by inefficiency, from the distant ranks of the republic, led by Colonel Zebulon Butler and Colonel Nathan Denison, with a courage that deserved success boldly met and bravely fought a combined British, tory and Indian force of thrice their number. Numerical superiority alone gave success to the invader, and wide-spread havoc, desolation and ruin marked his savage and bloody footsteps through the valley. This monument, commemorative of these events and of the actors in them, has been erected over the bodies of the slain by their descendants and others who gratefully appreciate the services and sacrifices of their patriotic ancestors."

The motto over the names of the slain is "Dulce est decorum est pro patria mori." The names are as follows:

Officers.—Lieutenant Colonel George Dorrance, Major Jonathan Waite Garrett, Captains James Bidlack, jr., Aholiab Buck, Robert Durkee, Rezin Geer, Detrick Hewitt, William McKarrachen, Samuel Ransom, Lazarus Stewart and James Wigton, Lieutenants A. Atherton, Aaron Gaylord, Perrin Ross, Lazarus Stewart, jr., Flavius Waterman, Stoddart Bowen, Timothy Pierce, Elijah Shoemaker, Asa Stevens and James Welles, and Ensigns Jeremiah Bigford, Silas Gore, Jonathan Otis, Asa Gore, Titus Hinman and William White.

Privates.—Jabez Atherton, Christopher Avery, — Ackke, A. Benedict, Jabez Beers, Samuel Bigford, David Bixby, Elias Bixby, John Boyd, John Brown, Thomas Brown, William Buck, Joseph Budd, Amos Bullock, Asa Bullock, Henry Bush, Enos Brockway, John Caldwell, Josiah Carman, Joseph Carey, Joel Church, William Cofferin, James Cofferin, Samuel Cole, Isaac Campbell, — Campbell, Robert Comstock, Kingsley Comstock, three Cook brothers, Christopher Courtright, John Courtright, Anson Corey, Jenks Corey, Rufus Corey, Joseph Crocker, Samuel Crocker, D. Denton, Anderson Dana, Conrad Davenport, George Downing, James Devine, Levi Dunn, William Dunn, — Dutcher, Benjamin Finch, Daniel Finch, John Finch, Elisha Fish, Cornelius Fitchett, Eliphalet Follett, Thomas Faxon, John Franklin, Stephen Fuller, Thomas Fuller, George Gore, — Gardner, Benjamin Hatch, William Hammond, Silas Harvey, Samuel Hutchinson, Cyprian Hebard, Levi Hicks, John Hutchins, James Hopkins, Nathaniel Howard, Elijah Inman, Israel Inman, Jamuel Jackson, Robert Jameson, Joseph Jennings, Henry Johnson, Joshua Landon, Daniel Lawrence, William Lawrence, Francis Ledyard, James Lock, Conrad Lowe, Jacob Lowe, William Lester, C. McCartee, Nicholas Manville, Nero Matthewson, Alexander McMillan, Job Marshall, Andrew Millard, John Murphy, Robert McIntire, Joseph Ogden, Abel Palmer, Silas Parker, William Parker, John Pierce, Henry Pencil, Noah Petebone, jr., Jeremiah Ross, jr., Elisha Richards, William Reynolds, Elias Roberts, Timothy Rose, Abram Shaw, James Shaw, Joseph Shaw, Constant Searle, Abel Seely, Levi Spencer, Eleazer Sprague, Aaron Stark, Daniel Stark, Darius Spofford, James Spencer, Joseph Staples, Reuben Staples, Rutus Stevens, James Stevenson, Nailer Sweed, Ichabod Tuttle, Abram Vangorder, John Van Wie, Elihu Waters, Jonathan Weeks, Bartholomew Weeks, Philip Weeks, Peter Wheeler, Stephen Whiton, Eben Wilcox, Elihu Williams, jr., Rufus Williams, Aziba Williams, John Williams, John Ward, John Wilson, Parker Wilson, William Woodring, — Wade, Ozias Yale, Gershom Prince, colored. Killed on the approach to Wyoming—William Crooks, Miner Robbins, Benjamin Harding, Stukely Harding, James Hadsall, James Hadsall, jr., Wm. Martin, Quocko, colored.

On the rear of the monument, over the door, are inscribed the following names of the survivors:

Officers.—Colonels Zebulon Butler and Nathan Denison, Lieutenants Daniel Gore and Timothy Howe, Ensigns Daniel Downing, Matthias Hollenback and Jabez Fish, Sergeants Phineas Spafford and — Gates.

Privates.—John Abbott, Gideon Baldwin, Zerah Beach, Rufus Bennett, Solomon Bennett, Elisha Blackman, Nathan Carey, Samuel Carey, George Cooper, Joseph Elliott, Samuel Finch, Roswell Franklin, Hugh Forsman, Thomas Fuller, John Garrett, Samuel Gore, Lemuel Gustin, James Green, Lebbeus Hammond, Jacob Haldron, Elisha Harris, Ebenezer and William Heberd, Richard Inman, David Inman, John Janison, Henry Lickers, Joseph Morse, Thomas Neill, Josiah Pell, Phineas Pierce, Abraham Pike, John N. Skinner, Giles Slocum, Walter Spencer, Edward Spencer, Roger Searle, Gamaliel Twiesdale, Cherrick Westbrook, Eleazer West, Daniel Washburn. Prisoners taken from Wyoming—John Gardner, Daniel Carr, Samuel Carey, Daniel Wallen, Daniel Rosenkrans, Elisha Wilcox, — Pierce.

FOUNDING AND GROWTH OF THE VILLAGE.

As soon as peace had been assured after the Revolution settlers began to return and others to migrate hither, and about 1780 the vicinity of Wyoming began again to show signs of life. "New Troy" was the name by which the place was known up to within the memory of many living.

As early as 1780 or 1781 Benjamin Carpenter, from Connecticut, located on Abram's creek, at the lower end of the gorge where the creek breaks through the Kingston mountains. Here he built a grist-mill on the site of the present one, also a house, which is still standing and is occupied by Mrs. Riley. The west wing of what is now the Pollock House was built by Mr. Carpenter, and in 1829 the main part of the hotel was built by a Mr. Allenbach. Mr. Carpenter also built the woolen factory at this place, and the Carpenter family sold it to Mr. Anibal, and he to Jacob I. Shoemaker, sen. This locality, now known as Shoemaker's Mills, was for many years known as Carpenter's Mills and Carpenter Town, which latter name it retained long after it came into the possession of the Shoemakers. In 1807 Mr. Carpenter sold out all his interests to Isaac C. Shoemaker and moved to Ohio. There was about that time an ax factory further up the creek, the foundation of which is still visible. There was a small foundry a little below the grist-mill. The grist-mill was rebuilt in 1840 by Jacob I. Shoemaker, sen., when all the improvements invented up to that time were added. Other improvements, besides steam power, have since been introduced.

In 1820 John Jones located here and engaged in the blacksmithing business, and the same year Thomas J. Halsey, M. D., located in this vicinity, where he practiced several years. Dr. John Smith was also one of the early resident physicians.

In 1802 or 1803 Mrs. Gordon, mother of James A. Gordon, Esq., of Plymouth, taught school in an old school-house on or near the corner where Laycock's Wyoming House now stands.

William Swetland, who was postmaster in 1830, was also one of the early merchants. He kept his store a little below the present residence of Payne Pettibone, Esq., on the main road from Kingston to Wyoming. John Gardner was the pioneer cabinet maker at Carpenter Town, locating there as early as 1820, in the building now occupied as a dwelling on the corner opposite the Pollock House, known as the "old store-house;" and he was succeeded in 1830 by Charles Barney, who still continues the business in the building adjoining. The "old store-house" was occupied as early as 1820 by Charles Tuttle, who was among the early merchants. The property is now owned Daniel Van Scoy. As late as 1830 the flat between Shoemaker's Mills and Wyoming was a dense wilderness.

At Wyoming there are now two churches (Methodist and Presbyterian), two general stores, two grocery stores, a drug store, a carriage factory, a blacksmith shop, a shovel factory, terra cotta works, the hotel of Colonel H. A. Laycock, the Luzerne county fair grounds, a two-story school-house, a railroad depot, barber, shoe, harness, millinery, and other shops, and one physician, Dr. Knapp. J. B. Schooley is the present postmaster.

At Shoemaker's Mills there are a hotel, a store, blacksmith, cabinet, jeweler's and shoe shops, a grist-mill and woolen manufactory. The population of the two places is about 1,000.

WYOMING M. E. CHURCH.

The Wyoming charge was originally one of the preaching places on the Wyoming circuit, which in 1880 embraced within its limits Wilkes-Barre, Kingston, Plains, Forty Fort, Pittston, Providence, Plymouth, Dallas, Hanover and Stoddardsville, with numerous preaching places besides these chief appointments.

Prior to 1842 there was a class in the neighborhood, worshiping in the district school-house. About 1840 the "Christians" put up a church building. It was sold by the sheriff. The purchaser sold it to the trustees of the M. E. church in 1842. In 1848 Wyoming was made a separate charge (New Troy). Rev. Bostwick Hawley was appointed preacher in charge. During his pastorate the house of worship was remodeled and improved and a basement built for Sunday-schools. In 1848, under the pastorate of Rev. C. W. Giddings, a parsonage lot was bought, and a barn for the use of the pastor and sheds about 150 feet in length were constructed for the teams of the congregation. Early in 1850 the parsonage was built, Rev. C. W. Giddings being the first occupant.

On the organization of the New Troy station there were about 130 members and probationers, including Forty Fort and West Pittston. The following have been the preachers appointed here since the formation of the "New Troy" charge: 1848, 1849, Bostwick Hawley; 1849, 1850, C. W. Giddings; 1850-52, B. W. Gorham; 1852-54, Levi D. Tyron; 1854-56, George M. Peck; 1856, 1857, A. H. Schoonmaker; 1857-59, H. Brownscombe; 1859, 1860, A. Brooks.

At the conference of 1860 Kingston and Wyoming were united under the name of New Troy and Kingston circuit. In 1860 and 1861 A. Brooks and W. T. Judd were the preachers. The conference of 1861 changed the title to Wyoming and Kingston circuit. In 1861 and 1862 W. Judd was the pastor; in 1862, L. Cole. At the conference of 1864 the circuit was again divided, and this charge has since been known as Wyoming charge. The pastors since the last named have been as follows: 1864-66, John La Bar; 1866, 1867, Henry Wheeler; 1867-70, A. J. Van Cleft; 1870-72, S. W. Weiss; 1872-74, R. W. Van Schoick; 1874-77, J. C. Leacock; 1877-80, Frederick L. Heller; 1880, James C. Shelland.

The members and probationers in 1879 numbered 169; Sunday-school scholars, 203; Sunday-school teachers and officers, 26; volumes in library, 782. There was expended for the school during that year $117. The amount raised for ministerial support was $1,170; for benevolent collections, $320.

The church is valued at $4,000, and the parsonage and sexton's house, with barn and sheds, at $3,000.

REV. DR. COPELAND.

Rev. David Copeland, Ph. D., D. D., was born in Braintree, Vt., December 31st, 1832. His ancestors were from England, and landed in Boston in 1630. They bore an honorable part in the hardships and struggles incident upon the early history of this country. His father was for many years an honored Methodist minister in the Vermont Conference, and three of his uncles were also ministers in the Methodist Episcopal church. Dr. Copeland prepared for college in the Newbury Seminary, in Vermont, and graduated from the Wesleyan University, in Middletown, Conn., in 1855. Being elected principal of the Henrietta Academy, in western New York, he at once entered upon the work of teaching. Although very young and with but little experience, his administration of the affairs of the school was very successful, the number of students increasing threefold in a few months. In 1857 he became professor of mathematics and natural science in the Falley Seminary, in Fulton, N. Y., and soon after married Miss Sarah Wheelock, daughter of Hon. David Wheelock, of Royalton, Vt. Feeling that it was his duty to enter upon the pastorate, he resigned his professorship in the fall of 1858, and joined the Genesee Conference. But the church demanded his services still in the teacher's chair, and he was immediately appointed principal of the Springville Academy, in Erie county, N. Y. Under his management the school rapidly gained a high reputation, and the increased patronage soon made it necessary to reconstruct and enlarge the building. At the expiration of seven years Dr. Copeland was elected president of the Hillsborough Female College, in southern Ohio, and, greatly to the regret of the friends of the academy, accepted the position. In his new field of labor he soon acquired the reputation of being a superior educator and careful disciplinarian, and the school advanced rapidly in the estimation of the people. Here, too, Dr. Copeland remained seven years, at the end of which time he was called to the principalship of the Wyoming Seminary, in Kingston, Pa. Here he had a very difficult position to fill. His predecessor, Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., had been in charge of the school for about twenty-eight years, and by his great success in building up the seminary had gained great reputation as an educator. To follow such a man was no easy matter, and many very naturally feared that the new principal would prove a failure. Soon, however, these fears gave way. Under the new administration the school fully retained its previous standing, both as to members and scholarship. Dr. Copeland has now been at the head of the school for over eight years, and he continues to have the confidence and esteem of all who know him. Honors have come to him from high sources. Lafayette College gave him the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1875, and Syracuse University and Wesleyan University the degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1877; and recently his conference elected him a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THE DORRANCE FAMILY.

The first account we have of the Dorrance family in America tells us that in 1722 Rev. Samuel Dorrance, a Scotch Presbyterian, was invited to preach to the people of Voluntown, Conn., from December till the following May. He had lately arrived from Ireland; had graduated at Glasgow University in 1709, was licensed to preach in 1711 by the Presbytery of Dumbarton, and had brought with him satisfactory testimonials of ministerial character and standing from several associations in Scotland and Ireland. He was so well liked that on the 17th of April, 1723, the people of Voluntown gave him a formal call without a dissenting voice, and were to give him "£60 per year for the present and £50 in species suitable to promoting his building and settling." On the 23d of October following he was duly ordained, notwithstanding some slight opposition "because he is a stranger among us." Beside him his brothers George and John, and John, Jr., were then found on the church rolls. Time soon wrought a change, so that the Rev. Mr. Dorrance was no longer "a stranger" among his people, and he and a part of his descendants have lived in that town from that time to the present, while others have migrated to other parts. He is found in the ministry at Voluntown at 1760, and at that time his salary had risen to £300. In that year James Dorrance was chosen elder in his church. He died November 12th, 1775, aged ninety years. He married Elizabeth Smith August 1st, 1736. She died September 10th, 1750.

Those of the Dorrance family who came to Wyoming were John and George, sons of Rev. Samuel. John, born July 12th, 1733, died January 9th, 1804. He was never married. He was the defendant in the celebrated test case for the title to lands at Wyoming between the Pennamites and Yaukees, known as Van Horne's Lessee vs. Dorrance, reported in 2 Dallas, 304, on which Governor Hoyt has published a very elaborate and learned brief, reviewing not only all the questions at issue between the parties but their conduct during its progress.

George, born March 4th, 1736, slain July 4th, 1778, was twice married. By his first wife he had Sarah Susannah, who married Samuel Tubbs, and Elizabeth, who married Dr. Seth C. Whitney February 21st, 1809.

By his second wife he had:

Robert, who served in the war against the Indians under Governor St. Clair, and was killed at St. Clair's defeat, November 4th, 1791.

Benjamin, born 1767, died August 24th, 1837. He lived at Kingston. He was the most popular man of his day; was elected county commissioner, high sheriff of the county and seven times to the Legislature of the State; was the first president of the Wyoming Bank at Wilkes-Barre, the safest and most popular institution of the kind in the country. He might have enjoyed other marks of popular favor, but he refused them.

Gershom, who went back to the old home at Voluntown, where he married and had three sons and two daughters.

George Dorrance was a lieutenant colonel of the militia at Wyoming, and as such went out with that little band of heroes who thought to drive their insolent invaders from the valley. He was severely wounded on the field of battle while gallantly riding along the broken lines and laboring to restore the men to order and position. He was the only one of the wounded who was saved from death on the field or at the hellish orgies of the succeeding night. His feeble condition on the next day making him a burden to his captors, they slew him and divided his garments and arms among them.

Benjamin Dorrance married Nancy Buckingham, of Windham, Conn., her native place. They had three children—John, Charles and George, the latter of whom died young.

John Dorrance was a minister of the Presbyterian church, who after laboring for some time in other localities succeeded Rev. Dr. Nicholas Murray in the charge of the Presbyterian church at Wilkes-Barre in August, 1833, and continued in that charge until his death in 1861. He was a man of much more than ordinary talent and character, and was honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity by the College of New Jersey, at Princeton. He was born in 1800. He married Penelope Mercer, of New Orleans, by whom he had eight children, only two of whom (daughters) survive.

Charles Dorrance, born January 4th, 1805, married Susan E. Ford, youngest daughter of Hon. James Ford, of Lawrenceville, Penn., by whom he has five children living, four sons and one daughter.

Colonel Charles Dorrance was born and has lived on the old homestead farm of the family, which has lost none of its attractiveness or value, but which has been largely added to in extent, taste and value since it passed into his hands. His home has ever been the abode of a large and generous hospitality, dispensed with all the grace and dignity befitting his surroundings. He has ever been a farmer, and, commencing his active business life with a liberal education, has kept up that intercourse with his fellow men and given that attention to the affairs of the day which bring out his genial and warm-hearted nature, and add a charm to his society.

The Dorrance farm has long been the model farm of the valley, and the colonel, farming for pleasure as well as profit, has succeeded in acquiring both results from his labors. He early introduced the short horn cattle on his farm, and has taken great pains to keep the stock in its original purity. From his herd the strain has gone out into all the country round about, and a great improvement in stock is the happy result.

He has never sought official position, except possibly that of captain of the Wyoming volunteers, from which he rose through the various grades to the rank of colonel, which title he has enjoyed for about forty years. It was a youthful fancy that led him into military life, awakened by fireside tales of the early days of Wyoming, in which were recounted the gallant deeds of his ancestor. Yet the colonel's life has not been barren of official honors. When the Luzerne county agricultural society was organized, in 1858, by unanimous choice he was elected president of the society, which position he filled with honor and dignity for ten years, and its success during that period was largely due to his uniform courtesy and his superior skill in disposing of knotty subjects, as well as in the management of the business affairs of the society. He was, in conjunction with A. C. Laning, appointed by the late Judge Conyngham, as his last official act, a commissioner of the Luzerne county prison, which position he held by successive yearly appointments until it was disposed of as a reward for political services. He was chosen and acted as president of the board during his entire official term.

When the patriotic citizens of Wyoming met to effect an organization for the proper commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the battle and massacre of Wyoming Colonel Dorrance was, without a dissenting voice or thought, made the president of that organization. How well and with what grace and liberality he performed the duties of that position, and how largely his means and his hospitalities were taxed to meet the requirements of the great occasion, is attested by all. It is a singular coincidence that the father should have been the first president of the Wyoming Bank, and that after the lapse of half a century his son should now hold the same trust. Fifty years are said to bring great changes, but in this case it has but cast the mantle of the father upon the shoulders of the son, who wears it with equal grace and dignity with the ancestor. Time and space will not permit to name all the positions of trust and honor he has been called upon to fill in an active life of three score years. Whatever they may have been he has filled them all with honesty and fidelity, and now at the age of three score and fifteen he enjoys the reputation of an honest and honorable man, in whom dwell all the sweet and tender elements of humanity, which, as occasion has offered, have welled out to the comforting and blessing of all who have come in contact with him. Blest in his family, blest in his store and blest in all his surroundings, long may he live to enjoy the blessings of a well spent life, which has diffused its sweet savor on all who have enjoyed the pleasure of kindly intercourse with him.

We append the following obituary notice, which appeared in the United States Gazette, of Philadelphia, of September 6th, 1887, copied from the Wyoming Republican:

Colonel Benjamin Dorrance is no more. The place on earth that once knew him shall know him no more forever. On Thursday, August 24th, while conversing cheerfully at his own house with a member of his family, he was seized with an apoplectic fit; he fell, and in a moment the vital spark was extinct. There are few indeed whose departure could have occasioned so deep a void, so wide a chasm in society. Universally known, everywhere respected and beloved, not by his relations alone, but by a numerous circle of friends, the bereavement is deeply felt. Yet why should sorrow prevail? Who in life has been more successful? Who more useful in his day and generation? How few, with his fine health, live to so great an age? Colonel Dorrance was about seventy years old. He was born in Plainfield, State of Connecticut, in 1767, and came to Wyoming when quite a lad with his father's family. In the Indian battle his father, Lieutenant Colonel George Dorrance, who was third in command, standing next to Butler and Denison, was slain. The day after, when Forty Fort was surrendered, the object of this notice was in the fortification, and used to describe with graphic clearness the entry of the British at one gate and of the Indians at the other. But this belongs rather to his biography than to an obituary paragraph. Colonel Dorrance was a man of sterling good sense, remarkably pleasing in his manners, eminently hospitable, liberal and benevolent. The offices of sheriff, commissioner and member of Assembly, as often as he would accept a seat, show the estimation in which he was held by his fellow citizens. No man enjoyed society and the good things of this life with a higher relish than Colonel Dorrance; yet using them as subservient, and never allowing pleasure to mislead from the moral path, or to interfere with health or business. If asked who, for the last half century, has been the happiest man in the county, the county, I think, would say Colonel Dorrance. Yet was he careful, active, intelligent and shrewd in business—a strict economist—and was abundantly blessed with this world's good. In fine, Colonel Dorrance was an extraordinary man—mingling in his character the pleasant and the useful, liberal expenditures with fair and steady acquisition, sweetening labor with enjoyment, and heightening pleasure by a prompt and energetic devotion to business; and throughout life popular without envy, without an enemy, and never yielding his independence or integrity. Honor and affection to his memory. His funeral took place on Saturday the 26th. A sermon suited to the solemn occasion was preached by the Rev. Mr. Snowden. The remains were attended to their last resting place by a very large concourse of friends. It is said to have been the largest funeral procession ever seen in the valley.

THE JENKINS FAMILY.

The Jenkins name has been intimately connected with the history of Wyoming from its first attempted settlement by the whites. John Jenkins the elder was here in the fall of 1753, on a trip of exploration; was at Albany in 1754, when the purchase of the country was made from the Indians, in the negotiations for which he took an active part; was in the valley in 1755, making surveys, taking latitude and longitude; was at the head of the settlement made in 1762, and was driven out at the massacre October 15th, 1763. He returned again in January, 1769, as one of the committee who brought in the forty settlers of the town of Kingston, and was conspicuous in the Pennamite war and struggles previous to the Revolutionary war. He called the first meeting, August 1st, 1775, to declare the position of the settlers on the controversy with Great Britain, in which they resolved "that they will unanimously join their brethren in America in the common cause of defending their liberty." He was the chairman of that meeting and drew its resolutions. The war over, and liberty and independence assured, the Pennamite war again assumed an unpleasant shape, and put on all the heat and strife of actual conflict. He took an active part in behalf of the settlers in this war; was their principal scribe and counselor; was five times their representative in the Legislature of Connecticut, and in every respect a leading man among them. Driven out by the Pennamites in May, 1784, in a cold spring storm, he took a severe cold, which taking the form of rheumatism and settling in a wound in his knee which he received from a ball at the taking of Louisburg in 1745, he suffered on until the month of November following, when he died, a victim to Pennamite injustice and cruelty. He was born in East Greenwich, R. I., February 15th, 1728, and was the son of John Jenkins, of that place, who was a justice of the peace under George II. and member of the colonial Legislature of that colony for three years, and also a commissioner of boundaries of the colony. His three brothers, Jonathan, Palmer and Stephen, also came to Wyoming in 1769-70, but did not make a permanent settlement. He married Lydia, daughter of Stephen Gardner, of New London, previously of East Greenwich, in February, 1751, and had seven children, the oldest of whom was John, known to the history of Wyoming as Colonel John Jenkins. He first settled in Kingston, February 1st, 1769, and then in Exeter (now West Pittston), about the first of May, 1772, which town was granted to him with others about that time. He was a school teacher, surveyor and conveyancer, justice of the peace and president judge of the first county court of Wyoming in 1777.

Colonel John Jenkins, his son, was born November 27th, 1751, at Gardner's Lake, in New London, Conn. He also was a surveyor and conveyancer, and school teacher, constable, agent of the Susquehanna Company at Wyoming, farmer, merchant and ironmonger. He came to the valley with his father in 1769, and at once took an active part in the Pennamite and Revolutionary wars. He was taken prisoner by the Indians and Tories in the latter part of November, 1777; carried to Niagara, and in the spring to Montreal and Albany, whence they proposed taking him to Kanndaseago to a grand council for disposition. On the way he escaped, and after great fatigue and suffering from hunger reached home on the 2nd of June, 1778, before the advent of the force under Butler and Grant, and of whose coming he brought intelligence. He was in command of Forty Fort when the settlers marched out to meet and turn back the invaders. He subsequently joined Captain Spalding's company as a lieutenant; went with Colonel Hartley to Tioga Point in the latter part of September, 1778, through an almost impenetrable wilderness, with streams, swollen by the equinoctial rains then prevailing, and was an active participant in the battle at Indian Hill, below Wyalusing. The next year, in April, he waited on General Washington and with him planned the Sullivan campaign. He served throughout that campaign as chief guide of the army, and received the thanks of Sullivan in general orders for his gallant conduct and important services in the battle of Newtown, August 29th, 1779. On the 25th February, 1781, he set out with his company to join General Washington at headquarters on the Hudson, and arrived on the 11th of March; was engaged in the battle of King's Bridge July 3d, 1781; and when the army marched for Yorktown accompanied them; was at the surrender of Cornwallis, October 17th, 1781, serving under Baron Steuben. Returning with the army to the Hudson that same fall, and the war being really at an end, and becoming tired and disgusted with the inactivity and weariness of camp life, he, on the 1st of March, 1782, resigned his commission and returned home to the defense of his family and friends from the barbarity of the savages and Pennamites, who still infested that locality. He was an active leading man in all the struggles of the settlers against the Pennamites, firm and unyielding in his adherence to their rights, never compromising, never surrendering; and when the rights of the settlers were in good part gained he refused to accept because it was not all he claimed and believed their due. He was one of the most popular men of his day. Under the artful lead and intrigue of Colonel Timothy Pickering, who showed that the way to preferment at Wyoming was through the Federal party, Luzerne county set off with a vote of two to one in its favor. Colonel Jenkins was a Democrat of the strictest sect, and was a leader in the party; and notwithstanding the heavy odds against him he was elected high sheriff of the county (though a Federalist, who was second on the return, received the commission), county commissioner and member of Assembly. He was several times nominated and run for other offices, and though defeated ran far ahead of his ticket. After the Revolutionary war he settled in Exeter, on the battle-field, where he died on the 19th of March, 1827. He married Bethiah Harris, of Colchester, on the 23d of June, 1788, and had eight children. The eldest, Lydia, married Jabez Hyde, Jr., a native of Norwich, Conn. He was elected sheriff of Luzerne county in 1810, member of Assembly in 1813; was prothonotary, register, recorder and clerk of courts of Susquehanna county from 1816 to 1820; member of Assembly in 1822 and 1823; delegate to constitutional convention in 1837, judge of Susquehanna county in 1840 and died holding that office.

Harris Jenkins, son of Colonel John Jenkins, was a merchant and farmer, colonel of militia, collector of U. S. internal revenue in 1815, recorder of deeds and register of wills and justice of the peace.

James Jenkins, his youngest son, was a farmer and merchant, postmaster at Wyoming, and a leading founder and ten years vice-president of the Luzerne County Agricultural Society. He was the largest contributor to the building of the Luzerne Presbyterian Institute; a man of sterling qualities and unimpeachable integrity.

Three generations of the family residing at Wyoming have been treated of and we now come to the fourth. Of this generation Steuben Jenkins, of Wyoming, is the best and most widely known, and a brief notice of him must close this sketch. He was born on the 28th of September, 1819, on the Wyoming battle-field. The tales of early times to which he listened around the fire-side of his grandfather, and on the field as recounted to and by visitors, gave his mind a bent in the direction of gathering up the sad and mournful history of the sufferings of the early settlers. His knowledge of the events of those times is perhaps more intimate and correct than that of any other person living. He has written much for the periodicals of the day, and for various historical publications, besides addresses; and he indulges the hope, which other people have long since yielded up, that he will yet write a history which shall contain all that anyone may wish to know of the early days of Wyoming. He prepared and delivered the historical address at the monument on the occasion of the commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the massacre of Wyoming, in which he gave the most complete account of that occurrence that has yet been given to the public. It has been used as the text of the account of that event contained in this work. The historical and genealogical material gathered by him is immense, and enables him to furnish information on these subjects when all other sources fail.

He is a lawyer by profession; has held many public offices and trusts, all of which he discharged with signal ability, fidelity and honor. It is hoped that he may be spared to complete the history for which he has labored so many years in gathering the material, and that it may be all that can be desired both in manner and matter.

WILLIAM LOVELAND.

William Loveland was born in Kingston, Pa., August 5th, 1821. His father was Elijah Loveland, one of the early settlers of Kingston and an energetic and public spirited citizen. On his mother's side he is of the ninth generation of descendants of Thomas Buckingham, a Puritan settler in America, who came from England to Boston, Mass., in June, 1637, and who was the ancestor of all of the American Buckinghams. Mr. Loveland has always been a farmer. At his father's death he assumed control of the family homestead, in Kingston. He has aided to develop and sustain the most important local interests. As a business man he has ever been active and prominent. The Loveland family are and have for years been connected with the Presbyterian church. Elijah Loveland was an elder in the Kingston church, and all of his sons—Thomas B., of Lock Haven, Pa., William and George, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Henry, of Steuben county, N. Y., and the late John Loveland, of Pittston—have at different times held the same position in societies of that denomination. Of the Kingston church William has long been an influential official member and a liberal supporter. Formerly a Whig politically, Mr. Loveland identified himself with the Republican party at its organization, and has been deeply interested in its progress to the present time, though since 1862 he has not been an active politician. June 17th, 1856, Mr. Loveland married Lydia Hurlburt, of Arkport, N. Y., who was born there May 20th, 1829, and is a granddaughter of Christopher Hurlburt, a surveyor well known in the Wyoming valley in the pioneer days. They have had seven children, of whom four survive. George E., son of Henry B. and Nancy Loveland (brother of William Loveland and sister of Mrs. William Loveland respectively), has been a member of the family of his uncle and aunt from infancy. The only daughter of Mr. Elijah Loveland not previously mentioned is the wife of Governor Henry M. Hoyt, now a resident of Harrisburg, Pa.

REV. REUBEN NELSON, D. D.

The Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., was born in Andes, N. Y., December

16th, 1818, and died at his home in New York city, February 20th, 1879. He joined the Methodist Episcopal church when sixteen. In 1840 he successfully commenced the work of the ministry in the Oneida Conference. He soon left the pastorate, however, and gave his attention to teaching. For about two years he was principal of the Otsego Academy, at Cooperstown, N. Y. He commenced his work as principal of the Wyoming Seminary in the fall of 1844, and with the exception of one year held the position till the close of the academic year of 1872. Under his guiding hand a great school grew up from small beginnings. As the chief executive officer of the seminary he manifested unusual tact and sagacity in availing himself of the resources within his reach for the upbuilding of the institution. During the years that the school was struggling with adversity he thought and planned and labored from early dawn till late at night, never abating his tireless labors till success was assured. When new buildings were to be erected he planned them, purchased the materials and superintended the work. In addition to all this almost every Sabbath found him in the pulpit earnestly preaching the gospel. As a teacher this one idea was always dominant in his mind—to make out of his pupils strong and noble men and women. In his estimation, to be learned and not religious was to be a failure; and so he labored most assiduously for the conversion of the youth who were placed under his care. As an educator Dr. Nelson had few equals. Under his management the seminary became one of the largest and best sustained academic institutions in the land, and to-day it stands as a worthy monument of his wise forecast, patient toil and tireless energy. As a preacher Dr. Nelson was always interesting, and often eloquent. There was a tender emotion running through his sermons which gave them great power over the masses. He was ten times elected secretary of his conference. Five times he was sent at the head of his delegation to the General Conference. In each of these General Conferences his influence was prominently felt. In May, 1872, he was elected to succeed Dr. Carlton in the charge of the church publishing interests in New York. Under the careful management of Dr. Nelson and J. M. Phillips the great publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal church maintained its credit so as to command the confidence of both the church and the business public. A unanimous re-election of both agents in 1876 by acclamation showed how fully the church appreciated and trusted them. Dr. Nelson also was treasurer of the missionary society of the church, serving with signal success till his death.

HON. HUBBARD B. PAYNE.

The subject of this sketch was born in Kingston, Pa., where he now resides, July 20th, 1839. His parents were Bester and Polly Payne, and he is the only one of their children now living. His father was very generally known throughout the counties of Luzerne, Columbia, Wyoming, Susquehanna and Bradford, Pa., as a lead water pipe layer. Until he attained the age of eighteen Mr. Payne lived at home, working with his father in the lead pipe manufactory, or by the day for the farmers of his neighborhood, or attending the schools in Kingston. He prepared for college at the Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, and in August, 1857, entered the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn. There his life struggle really began. The means of his parents being limited, he sought to aid them, and during his college course taught district school three successive winter terms of eighteen weeks each, at Rocky Hill, Conn., keeping up his studies at the same time. In college he took an active part in the literary societies. He was a member of the Psi Upsilon secret society and the Pythologian Society, and by the faculty he was chosen a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society. In June, 1861, he graduated, standing number four in his class.

In August following his graduation Mr. Payne entered the office of Hon. Charles Dutton, of Wilkes-Barre (afterwards a member of Congress for three terms), as a law student. While pursuing his legal reading he taught a district school during the winter of 1861 in Cinder Alley, Wilkes-Barre, and a public school of boys in a store-room of the Hillard block during the winter of 1862. In August, 1863, he was admitted to the bar of Luzerne county, and at once secured a desk in the office of Hon. W. W. Ketcham, then solicitor of the United States Court of Claims and entered upon that struggle known only to a young lawyer who, without means or influential friends, attempts to build up a practice. With the closest attention to business and with a strong determination to deserve success, it was yet four years before his income equaled his expenses, small though they were. But, as they invariably do, industry, integrity and frugality prevailed finally, and with Mr. Payne it became a question not how to get business but how to attend to that he had, and his practice has been lucrative and successful.

Politically, Mr. Payne has been from the first a decided, active and outspoken Republican. Beginning with the Presidential campaign of 1854, he has since taken an active part for his party in local and general elections, working on committees and publicly addressing the people. In 1874 he was nominated without opposition for the State Senate, and, to his own surprise and that of many others, was elected by over 1,200 majority. During his term in the Senate he was active in the business of the session, serving on the committees on "judiciary general," "judiciary local," "mines and mining," and "new counties. In 1876 he was nominated without opposition for Congress in the 12th Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and at the time of his nomination had every prospect of election. But his opponent, Hon. Hendrick B. Wright, endorsed by both the Democratic and Greenback parties, was elected by a small majority. In June, 1880, Mr. Payne, having passed the interval in the practice of his profession, was nominated without opposition by the Republican party for the office of law judge, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of president judge Garrick M. Harding, and his prospects for election (September, 1880) seem as promising as those of any of his opponents.

February 22nd, 1865, Mr. Payne married Miss Elizabeth Lee Smith, only child of Mr. Draper Smith, an old resident of Plymouth, Luzerne county. From this union four children have been born—a daughter, Louisa S. Payne, and three sons, Charles B., Hubbard B. and Paul D. Payne. All are living but Charles, who, October 3d, 1876, while Mr. Payne was engaged in his Congressional campaign, fell from a tree while gathering nuts and was killed. For many years Mr. Payne has been an active member of the Presbyterian church of Kingston, and he is now serving his fifteenth year as superintendent of its Sabbath-school. He has also been active as a free mason, and is now a past master by service of Kingston Lodge, No. 395, A. Y. M. Two years he also served as district deputy grand master for the district of Luzerne county.

The above is, briefly, an outline of the career of Mr. Payne. It has been thus far the career of a selfmade man with an honest purpose, and interwoven day by day with hard labor and persevering endeavor. Such lives bring their legitimate rewards, and are fitting examples for emulation to the youth of our country.

PAYNE-PETTEBONE.

John Pettebone, of French extraction, emigrated from England during the turbulent time of Oliver Cromwell, and was registered as a landholder in Windsor, Hartford county, Conn., in 1658. February 16th, 1664, he married Sarah Eggleston, by whom he had nine children, three born at Windsor and six at Simsbury, in the same county, where he removed about the time of the birth of his son Stephen, which occurred October 3d, 1669, locating on lands now (1880) in possession of some of his descendants. The name of Noah Pettebone is found attached to a petition to the Assembly of Connecticut dated March 29th, 1853, for permission to buy lands of the Indians on the Susquehanna at Wyoming. In 1745 he married Huldah Williams, by whom he had eight children, all born in Connecticut. He was first at Wyoming in 1769, with his three sons—Noah, jr., Stephen and Oliver. In 1772 he settled on meadow lot No. 22, where his descendants have continued in regular succession to the present, making considerable additions to the homestead. Sometime after the massacre of July 3d, 1778, he returned to Connecticut and Massachusetts, where his married daughters resided, but after a year or two returned to the homestead at Wyoming, where he died March 28th, 1791. The children of Noah Pettebone, all born at Simsbury, Conn., were: Esther, born in June, 1847, married William Alworth; Huldah, born in August, 1749, married Benjamin Atwater; Noah, jr., born in November, 1751, married Lucy Scott, May, 1778, and was killed in the battle of Wyoming, July 3d, 1778; Hannah, born in October, 1753, married Joseph Shaw; Stephen, born in September, 1755, was in Sullivan's army and honorably discharged, and after returning to Wyoming killed by Indians, February 16th, 1779, on Kingston Flats; Dolly, born in June, 1757, married Timothy Stevens in 1777; Lydia, born in December, 1759, married John Vaughn; Oliver, born May 13th, 1762, married Martha Paine, December 21st, 1783. All of the daughters settled in the Lackawanna region, and had considerable families.

Oliver Pettebone, the youngest son of Noah, born May 13th, 1762, was a boy sixteen years old at the time of the massacre, and with others was in Forty Fort. He counted the force as it went out and made the number 382. The second day after the massacre he returned to Connecticut, but subsequently removed to Amenia, Dutchess county, N. Y., December 21st, 1783, where he married Martha, daughter of Dr. Barnabas Paine (the family name is now spelled with a y). He settled on Livingston manor, where three children were born—Oliver, jr., Esther and Payne. He returned to Wyoming in April, 1788, and purchased the lot adjoining his father's homestead, both of which lots, with added acres, are owned and occupied by his descendants. After his return to Wyoming ten additional children were born to him, and all, except two who died young, raised quite large families. He was a prudent, industrious, systematic farmer, and kept everything in perfect order till his death, March 17th, 1832. His wife died December 25th, 1833. Their children were: Oliver, jr., born September 9th, 1784; Esther, September 15th, 1785; Payne, January 24th, 1787; Joshua, August 31st, 1788; Marcia, November 3d, 1790; Lucy, September 12th, 1792; Mary, October 21st, 1794; Nancy, November 13th, 1796; Noah, July 27th, 1798; Huldah, February 14th, 1801; Henry, October, 5th, 1802; Martha, December 30th, 1804, and Stephen, February 2nd, 1807.

Marrying Sarah Tuttle, Payne, son of Oliver Pettebone, was the immediate ancestor of Stoughton Pettebone, a prominent paper manufacturer residing at Niagara Falls, N. Y., born April 9th, 1812, and Payne Pettebone, of Wyoming, born December 21d, 1813, in Kingston, where Payne Pettebone, sen., had located with his family; his father-in-law (Joseph Tuttle), with his family, having settled on Abraham's creek at the point since known as Tuttle's Mills, where the settlers on their way to the battle of Wyoming stopped for deliberation. When young Payne Pettebone was only eight months of age his father died and he was left to the care of his maternal grandfather, Joseph Tuttle, where he remained until fourteen, doing the varied and almost ceaseless work of a farmer's boy and attending the winter schools in the old school-house, with slab benches, located near the residence of the late Colonel Elijah Shoemaker, his studies being limited to Webster's spelling book, Daboll's arithmetic, the old English reader and the rudimentary principles of Murray's grammar. For a time succeeding his fifteenth year he was a tavern boy-of-all-work, but so firmly grounded were his principles of right and propriety that he did not suffer any in consequence of the contaminating influences by which he was surrounded. He was subsequently clerk in a store at Tunkhannock, Wyoming county, from 1828 to 1831, at a pittance of from $5 to $10 per month, where, amid adverse circumstances and in bad society, he preserved his character unblemished; and, when his employer at Tunkhannock failed in business, declined an offer to enter mercantile life as a principal in partnership with Colonel Montanye before he was eighteen. Returning to his former agricultural employments with his grandfather he was soon offered an opportunity to engage on trial for two weeks as a clerk in the store of Swetland & Baldwin, of Wyoming. This position he occupied and gave such satisfaction to his employers that his services were retained by this firm, and subsequently by William Swetland, at $175 to $200 per annum and board; and as evidence that he had early learned to appreciate the value of money saved it is only necessary to state that out of this meagre salary he laid up about $100 a year. After the dissolution of the firm of Swetland & Baldwin, in July, 1832, young Pettebone was offered service by each of the partners, and upon considering the advisability of going into another line of business was proffered an interest in the store of Mr. Swetland; and in September, 1834, entered as an equal partner with him under a contract drawn up by himself, covering less than one page of foolscap, which limited the partnership to such a length of time as the two could agree. This was in September, 1834, before Payne Pettebone had attained his majority. The partnership was so mutually satisfactory that it was dissolved only by the death of Mr. Swetland, September 27th, 1864. During the early years of their partnership they were familiar by every-day labor with all of the details of duties which subsequently devolved on porters and junior clerks.

To the ties of mutual interest which united Mr. Swetland and Mr. Pettebone were added those of family relationship when, October 3d, 1837, Payne Pettebone married Caroline M., daughter of William Swetland, who has borne him six children, two of whom are living. These are Kate, who married A. H. Dickson, an attorney, residing in Wilkes-Barre, and Robert Treat, just past his majority and occupying the responsible position of superintendent of the Wyoming Shovel Works. By the will of Mr. Swetland the surviving partner was made executor of his estate, which he managed for fifteen years, greatly increasing its value.

With the various local interests of the town in which he lives Mr. Pettebone has always been closely identified, and all enterprises having in view the education, evangelization and general advancement of his fellow men have always found in him a willing and a liberal supporter. He has never held public office except local township offices, having repeatedly refused the use of his name in nominating conventions when his party was largely in the majority; but with such marked success has he conducted his private business that he has from time to time been burdened with the cares of enterprises of a public character. In 1844 he was appointed a member of a committee with General William S. Ross and Jonathan J. Slocum, by the State authorities, for the sale of the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Canal, and aided to effect the sale of the same at Philadelphia. From 1854 to 1863 he was treasurer of the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg Railroad Company, during the trying years of the financial embarrassment of that corporation and the construction of the road. During that period occurred the severest strain and pressure of his business life, and he retired from the position only when safety from loss was assured to the managers of the road, who were chiefly neighbors and friends of his. He was subsequently elected a director of the railroad company, and continued in that office until the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg Railroad was consolidated with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. Mr. Pettebone has been prominently concerned in various other business and many benevolent, scientific and educational enterprises, representing several as president. Among these may be mentioned the old Pittston Bank, the Wyoming Shovel Works, of which himself and son are sole proprietors, the Wyoming Terra Cotta Works, board of trustees of Wyoming Seminary, Wyoming Bible Society, Wyoming Camp Meeting Association, Forty Fort Cemetery Association and Wyoming Historical and Geological Society. He is director of the Washington Life Insurance Company, of New York, the First National Bank of Pittston, and Wyoming National Bank and the Miners' Savings Bank of Wilkes-Barre, and was president and director of the Wilkes-Barre Savings Bank, now in liquidation. He is trustee of Wyoming University and the Drew Theological Seminary, and resigned the trusteeship of the Wesleyan University, of Middletown, Conn., from inability to attend the meetings of the board. Until 1884 the Wyoming monument grounds remained in a neglected condition. At a meeting of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society that year it was resolved "that Payne Pettebone, Hon. William S. Ross and Colonel Charles Dorrance be a committee to collect funds to defray the expense of finishing Wyoming monument, enclosing and improving the grounds of the same." His duties on such committee Mr. Pettebone discharged with his accustomed ability, energy and success. In 1878 he was chairman of the committee on finances of the Centennial Memorial Association, and to his management was the success of the enterprise in no small measure due. A pleasant incident connected with this event was the entertainment, at the residence of Mr. Pettebone, of President Hayes and his family and cabinet, Governor Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, and his wife and suite, and many other prominent men of the State and nation. Mrs. Hayes, in giving expression to her pleasant recollections of the visit, sent Mrs. Pettebone the following spring a case of rare flowers. To the varied employments above mentioned, which have demanded his time, personal attention and financial support, from time to time have been added the cares of interests in coal mines, farming operations and an extensive sugar plantation, in Louisiana, where the experiment is being tried of keeping negro laborers in contentment by prompt pay and fair treatment.

At the altar of prayer in the old Forty Fort church, at the age of twelve or thirteen, as a seeker after salvation, Mr. Pettebone received lasting impressions for good; impressions which sustained him through the critical period of boyhood and young manhood, left indelibly upon his mind those principles of integrity which marked his whole career and contributed in no small degree to his success in life; though for years thereafter he was not a professor of religion. The most interesting and highly cherished event of his life was his conversion to God in March, 1848, at the great revival in the Methodist Episcopal church at Wyoming, under the pastorate of Rev. Thomas N. Pearne, assisted by Rev. R. Nelson. As a member of the church since that time he has been continually in the official board, serving in the several departments as leader, steward, trustee, Sunday-school superintendent and delegate to the General Conference.

It is a source of pleasure to Mr. Pettebone to recall the fact that in his younger and less prosperous days he was never ashamed of any kind of honest labor. Work of any kind was acceptable to him so long as it soiled his hands only and not his character. On the solid foundation of industry, perseverance, integrity and respect for his fellow creatures and reverence for sacred things he built, and built surely. A marked trait of his character is gratitude to those who aided him with a helping hand or cheered him with a friendly word during the rough experiences of his boyhood. The influences of kind deeds rendered him in childhood have so impressed him that as he approaches the close of life he has a smile and a pleasant word for boys and girls entering upon its checkered experiences, and in grateful remembrance he holds the friends of his youth and the wise counselors of his young manhood.

WILLIAM SWETLAND (DECEASED).

The old Swetland homestead in Kingston is a landmark in the Wyoming valley, but it was not there that the original settlement of the family in this section was made. Luke Swetland was one of the Connecticut settlers of Wyoming and one of the proprietors under the Connecticut claim, who signed the agreement dated June 20th, 1778, and by the advice of the proprietors' committee, "pitched" on land some thirty miles above Wyoming, near Mehoopany, where the family settled after returning from their old home in Kent, Litchfield county, Conn., where they had taken refuge during the war. In the winter of 1777 Luke Swetland was a member of Captain Durfee's independent company of patriots encamped at Morristown, N. J., having enlisted while a resident of the valley, September 17th, 1778. At the time of the battle of Wyoming, on account of some disability, he was in Forty Fort and did not participate in the engagement. August 25th, 1778, he was captured, with a neighbor, Joseph Blanchard, by the Indians, at the mouth of Fishing creek, and remained for a considerable period a prisoner at different Seneca villages in the State of New York. In 1800 he removed with his family from Mehoopany to the old Swetland farm at Wyoming, where he died January 30th, 1823. "In later days," wrote Charles Miner, "I knew and could not but esteem the good old man. His taste and pride took a right direction and were of much value to the settlement. I refer to his establishment of a nursery for fruit and his introduction from New England of various kinds of apples selected with care." He was born June 16th, 1723, in Lebanon, Windham county, Conn., and married Hannah Tiffany, of that place, April 1st, 1762. She died January 8th, 1809. Belding Swetland, the oldest son, was born January 14th, 1763, and was with his father in Forty Fort at the time of the battle of Wyoming. He married Sally Gay, in Sharon, Conn., in 1787, and died at Wyoming July 22nd, 1816.

William Swetland, the oldest child of Belding Swetland, was born in Sharon, Litchfield county, Conn., June 26th, 1789. He accompanied the family to Kingston, thence to Mehoopany and thence to the Swetland homestead in Wyoming, where his early life was passed as a farmer's boy with very limited opportunities for education. About 1812 he engaged as assistant in the store of Elias Hoyt, uncle of Governor Henry M. Hoyt, in Kingston, doing odd jobs and making himself generally useful in doors and out, and ultimately superseding an over-nice head clerk who was in the store when his term of service began. In 1815 Mr. Swetland erected the old portion of the store building on the homestead and engaged in trade on his own account with a capital limited to $300.

About a year later Belding Swetland died, leaving twelve children, of whom William was the oldest; and to him the farm was left, with provision for the support of his brothers and sisters during their minority and the payment to each of a specific sum upon arrival at majority, a responsibility which, while it was cheerfully assumed as a duty by the young merchant, could not have been otherwise than onerous. Continuing in the mercantile business, which was from time to time enlarged and extended, at the old stand, he had as a partner from 1830 to 1832 David Baldwin, and from 1834 to the time of his death Payne Pettebone. On Abraham's creek, in the notch of the mountain, on the road from Wyoming to North Moreland, Mr. Swetland had a grist-mill, a saw-mill and a distillery, the products of which were sent by teams to the localities of improvement and business operations in all directions, commercial relations having been established by Mr. Swetland with various portions of Luzerne, Wyoming, Lackawanna and Wayne counties. The distillery was closed about 1840; the mills were exchanged for coal lands on the Lackawanna in 1846. The customers at his store for many years came from Mehoopany, Meshoppen, Skinner's Eddy and other points in Wyoming county, from various parts of Luzerne county and to some considerable extent from the valley of the Lackawanna. At different dates during his business life Mr. Swetland was engaged in other important enterprises. In the early period of the history of the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg Railroad he was president of the board of managers for several years, joining with others in pledging large sums in aid of the enterprise during days of great financial uncertainty. He was president of the Pittston Bank, established under the old State banking laws, and subsequently a director of the First National Bank of Pittston. He was efficient in the organization of the Forty Fort Cemetery Association and was chosen its first president. About 1844, in making an effort to assist some kinman at Hyde Park in business, he was obliged to secure his own interests by assuming the proprietorship of about forty acres of coal lands. He added to these possessions from time to time, extending the boundaries of his acreage there, now constituting the property of the Swetland heirs and Payne Pettebone, and known as the Swetland plot and Mount Pleasant colliery.

Mr. Swetland was reared in the Democratic school politically, and was an early and generous contributor to the success of that party, giving largely toward the establishment of the Republican Farmer in Wilkes-Barre, a once prominent advocate of old time Democracy. He was one of the Luzerne county commissioners three years. In conjunction with Hon. George W. Woodward and Dr. A. Bedford he represented Luzerne county in the constitutional convention of 1836; but, becoming impatient at the slow progress of the deliberations of that body, he resigned before the close of the session. He voted the Democratic ticket until 1860, when he became an active and enthusiastic supporter of war measures and the men prominent in introducing and advocating them, giving of his means with no stinted hand toward the enrollment and equipment of troops.

Early in life Mr. Swetland saw the folly of loose business habits. Prompt, true to his word, energetic, untiring, of an indomitable will, frank, friendly and generous, he won a reputation which was the basis of a splendid credit, which he enjoyed uninterruptedly from first to last. Among things common in his day and ours which he utterly eschewed were tobacco and spirituous liquors. His habits were regular and his life methodical. Assuming the care of his brothers and sisters, as he did early in manhood at the solemn request of his dying mother, he became accustomed to think much of the welfare of his relatives and friends, and most of them at different times found in him a friend in need. In 1845, at a grand religious awakening in the Methodist Episcopal church at Wyoming, at a series of meetings conducted by Rev. Thomas H. Pearne, he sought and found spiritual salvation, and was ever afterward an active and liberal member of the church of his choice, and most of the time an official, having served as trustee and steward and in other capacities, and as president of the Wyoming Bible Society. In his will he provided for the repair and painting of the old Forty Fort church. A liberal contributor to all benevolent objects, he took a deep interest in Wyoming Seminary, and became a trustee of that institution. Becoming acquainted with Rev. Dr. Reuben Nelson, then principal, and noting the zeal, industry and business sagacity with which he was managing the affairs of the seminary under adverse circumstances, Mr. Swetland's sympathy was aroused, and he became one of the most thoughtful and generous friends of the institution. When the buildings burned down he decided to erect one of the halls (now known as "Swetland Hall") at his own expense, and he made many other very considerable contributions toward the re-erection of the buildings and the payment of the indebtedness of the institution thus incurred; and at the time when the burden of financial obligation which had so long and so grievously oppressed it was lifted he gave the sum of $5,000, one half the sum required for that object, the check for the same being the last to which he ever signed his name.

Mr. Swetland married Catharine Saylor, daughter of Dr. Peter Saylor, of Williams township, Northampton county, Pa., September 28th, 1819, who bore him four children: Carolus (Mrs. Payne Pettebone); Mary, who died young; George W., who married Mary Polen and died in 1860; and Margaret A., who married William H. Brown, a merchant of Philadelphia, and is now dead. He died in the old family home at Wyoming, September 27th, 1864, deeply regretted by a very large circle of relatives, friends and business acquaintances.

WYOMING PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first step toward permanent organization was taken by the Presbyterians of Wyoming in 1833, when they built in the front of the village cemetery, on a lot given by Mrs. Elizabeth Shoemaker, a neat little frame chapel in which to hold their services. Wyoming at this time constituted with Kingston one pastoral charge, under Rev. Alexander Heberton, but was granted an independent organization in April, 1847, on the petition of Thomas F. Atherton, Peter Barber, Charles Fuller, Henry Hice, Andrew Miller, George Wurts, M. D., R. E. Marvine, Margaret Schooley, Sarah Ann Marvine, Mary Barber, H. L. Marvine, Lucinda C. Smith, Christine Polen, Harriet A. Marvine, L. G. Ensign and Mr. Miller. A committee of the presbytery met at Wyoming on Tuesday, May 4th, 1847, and organized the church. The sermon was preached by Rev. Jacob Belville, of the Presbytery of Baltimore, after which the following named elders were elected and inducted into office: Henry Hice, Charles Fuller, R. E. Marvine and L. G. Ensign.

The pulpit was supplied by the Rev. J. D. Mitchell, D. D. On the 22nd of November following "the school of the Wyoming Presbyterian Church" was opened with 25 pupils, Francis I. Smith being employed as teacher. This school was at last merged in the "Luzerne Presbyterian Institute," which was opened in May, 1849, when Dr. Mitchell resigned his charge of the church and became principal in the institute.

Rev. Paul Eugene Stevenson, of Williamsburg, N. Y., was on the 19th of May, 1850, installed as pastor. A parsonage lot was donated by Mr. David Perkins and his daughter, Mrs. Jane Ann Carpenter, and by November, 1850, the building was ready for occupancy.

On November 18th, 1850, this church and the Methodist church of Wyoming organized the first Bible society ever established in this part of the valley, viz., the Wyoming Bible Society, auxiliary to the Pennsylvania Bible Society. This institution has still a flourishing existence, holding meetings annually, maintaining missionary visitation and the distribution of books. Mr. Stevenson resigned his charge in March, 1854. Rev. N. S. Prime, D. D., preached from April until the following September, and Rev. Thomas P. Hunt from November until May, 1855.

During the summer of 1854 the "chapel" was demolished by lightning, and the congregation worshiped in the large room of the institute building about three years. In June, 1855, Rev. J. D. Mitchell was again secured as stated supply. Messrs. William Henry, William S. Shoemaker, L. G. Ensign, Thomas F. Atherton and Steuben Jenkins were appointed a building committee, and the present church building was begun. It was dedicated October 22nd, 1857. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Nicholas Murray, D. D., of Elizabeth, N. J.

Mr. Mitchell resigned in December, 1856, and Rev. Thomas P. Hunt preached until May, 1857. Rev. William L. Moore was pastor from July 22nd, 1857, until March, 1858. Rev. Frederick L. King followed as stated supply. From the first Sabbath of May, 1859, the Rev.

Henry Rinker was pastor until February, 1861, and he preached as stated supply until the following April. From January, 1862, the Rev. H. H. Welles supplied the pulpit six months, when Rev. Albert B. King was engaged. He was installed October 25th, 1863, and served until January 1st, 1873. Rev. Lewis H. Bœhler then preached eight months. Rev. Scott Stites was ordained and installed pastor of Wyoming October 2nd, 1873. He resigned April 1st, 1877, to assume the pastoral care of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg.

January 2nd, 1878, the present pastor, Rev. George Wells Ely, then a student in the theological seminary at Princeton, was called. He was ordained and installed April 30th, 1878.

The most notable revival in this church occurred during the spring of 1848, when the church was strengthened by the accession of thirty new members upon profession.

During the past few years the congregation has repaired the church building, built a comfortable sexton's house and an addition to the parsonage, and otherwise improved the church property. The church is in a prosperous condition. The present membership is 79; that of the Sunday-school, 144.

CEMETERY ASSOCIATION OF WYOMING.

The first interment in the grounds of this association was that of the remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Shoemaker, wife of Isaac C. Shoemaker, occurred in or about 1837. The original ground, containing 2,400 square feet, on which was a church, was deeded December 12th, 1837, by Jacob I. Shoemaker, sen., for $50, to the "trustees, elders and pastor of the Presbyterian congregation of Kingston," for the exclusive use of that congregation. This lot was used until 1864 as a public burial ground.

June 30th of that year an association with the above title was formed. The grounds were enlarged by lands purchased of Dr. Wertz and George Lazarus. The first trustees under the charter were Isaac S. Shoemaker and John Brees. The first officers of the association were: President, Isaac C. Shoemaker; secretary, John Brees; treasurer, Thomas Hutchins.

The present officers of the association are: William S. Shoemaker, president; Jacob I. Shoemaker, secretary and treasurer.

SECRET SOCIETIES AT WYOMING.

Wyoming Lodge, No. 468, A. Y. M. was instituted in May, 1870, with the following charter members and officers: H. A. Laycock, W. H.; P. H. Polon, S. W.; S. J. Sharks, secretary; S. R. Shoemaker, J. W.; Henry Polen, treasurer; R. H. Laycock, Miller Patterson, W. J. Bennett, J. J. Breese.

Laycock, George S. Richmond, J. P. Smith; medical examiner, C. P. Knapp, M. D. The lodge meets on Wednesday nights.

MANUFACTORIES AT WYOMING.

Wyoming Terra Cotta Works.—These works are located on the north side of the village of Wyoming, beside the track of the D., L. & W. railroad. An association was organized in July, 1874, by Nathan Van Horn, who obtained stock to the amount of $18,000 and conducted the business till February 1st, 1876, when he sold out to Thomas Hutchins & Son and Calvin Detrick, who became the sole owners. In February, 1878, Mr. Detrick sold his interest to William S. Shoemaker, and the firm became Hutchins, Shoemaker & Co., by whom the manufacture of sewer pipes, fire-brick and chimney tops is now carried on, with a capital of $18,000. There are twelve men employed in the works, who make annually about $20,000 worth of terra cotta ware.

The Wyoming Shovel and Edge Tool Manufacturing Company, whose shops are at Wyoming, was organized under the manufacturing laws of Pennsylvania September 26th, 1874. It started with a capital of $20,000, increased afterwards to $28,000. Mortgage bonds were issued April 9th, 1877, amounting to $25,000.

The managers were Payne Pettebone, Steuben Jenkins, James P. Atherton, William S. Shoemaker, Thomas Hutchins, John Sharps, James D. Green, George Ricart, and William Allen. The president was Payne Pettebone, the secretary Steubin Jenkins, and the treasurer Jacob I. Shoemaker. The property has recently been closed out on the mortgage, and is now owned by Payne Pettebone and Robert Treat Pettebone, doing business under the firm name of Payne, Pettebone & Son. Extensive improvements have been made in the machinery, dies and patterns, and with the facilities now provided the work of manufacturing is progressing on a largely increased scale, under the supervision of a thoroughly experienced foreman, turning out shovels, spades and scoops that will compare favorably with any manufactured in the country. This location for manufacturing purposes has the advantage of cheap fuel, cheap rents and cheap living; and the proprietors may reasonably expect to maintain successful competition in supplying their full share in the market.

MILL HOLLOW.

The pioneer settler here was Zachariah Hartsive, from New Jersey. He came as early as 1790, and Adam Shafer soon after. A settlement grew up known as "Hartsive Hollow." John Bowman built a blacksmith shop near the creek in 1805, and subsequently put in a trip-hammer, and utilized the water power for doing heavy work. Andrew Raub, from New Jersey, in 1817 located where Samuel Raub now lives, and built a distillery. About the same time Henry Buckingham built a paper mill farther down the stream. It was subsequently owned by one of the Hollenbacks, who about 1835 leased it to Peter McGuire and James Mather. They continued in the paper business till 1840, when the mill was taken down. About 1835 the Louisa Furnace was built by Jacob Howe and George Little. It was named in honor of Mrs. Louisa Little. It stood a few rods below Wright's grist-mill, and the railroad track now running to Raub's coal breaker crosses its site. The furnace was purchased by Smith Gaylord, who carried on the business a short time. In 1850 it was abandoned and torn down. The ore used was brought from Danville to Wilkes-Barre in boats, thence by wagons to the furnace. David Laphy, the pioneer tailor in Hartsive Hollow, was born here August 19th, 1804, and practiced his trade for thirty years from 1834. He was married February 20th, 1829, to Sarah H. Reese, of Kingston township, and died in Mill Hollow December 28th, 1879. An oil mill was built by one Hollenback on the site of the present chop mill near their on bridge about 1830. He sold it to John Bartholomew, who changed it into a plaster and chop mill, which is now owned and operated by H. N. Schooley. The steam grist-mill now operated by Thomas Wright was built by Samuel Raub, a part of the frame used in the old foundry being used. The old red mill of David Atherholt was built by Judge William Hancock. The first building on that site was put up by Reuben Holgate, and used for a carding and fulling mill several years, when it was destroyed by fire. Mr. Holgate soon built another mill, which was subsequently burned, when the property was sold to William Hancock, who built the present flouring and chop mill. The old "white mill" in the upper part of the village, built early in this century, and known for many years as the Hicks mill, is probably the oldest mill on the stream. It is now owned by Raub & Fuller, who purchased it in March, 1880.

The post-office was established in May, 1866, when E. W. Abbott, the present postmaster, was appointed, and the name of the place changed from Hartsive Hollow to Mill Hollow.

Among the early settlers at Hartsive Hollow was David Lafa, who was born in New Jersey in 1767, married Miss Ann Reed, located here in 1792 or 1793, and was a hunter and trapper. He was a member of the "Kingston Volunteers," under Captain Thomas, and a few days before the company was to leave for the frontier he died from injuries received on his last bear hunt by falling down a cliff, after which fall, however, he killed a bear and two cubs.

The first school-house was built about 1820, on the island where the present school-house has stood for forty years or more. The first resident physician was Dr. W. H. Faulds, who moved here in 1876.

In 1856 Jacob Hoover discovered iron ore along the bank of Toby's creek a little above where the toll house now stands, on the lands of Mrs. Brisbin, of Wilkes-Barre. The late Dr. Brisbin opened the mine in 1857, with Mr. Hoover as foreman, and several tons of the ore were sent to Danville, Pa., to be tried in the furnaces there. The mine is not worked. The foundry of Boyd & Engle was built in 1852 by Robinson Boyd, who was a boss moulder in the Louisa furnace and foundry.

The oldest house in this village is between the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. It was built in 1820, by Morris Craner, who occupied it until 1874, when he died. He was a member of the M. E. Church over 30 years, and was a private in Capt. Thomas's company of Kingston volunteers in 1812.

There were at this place in April, 1880, two churches, (Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian), two school-houses; three collieries—the Hutchinson and East Boston, in the lower part of the village, and Raub's, in the upper part; four stores—Payne & Perrin, Thomas Waddell, Charles Atherholt, and Phineas Watts; a tobacco store, two shoe shops, two blacksmith shops; two hotels—one kept by A. C. Church, and the other by James Williams; four grist mills, two markets, several saloons, a tin shop, the foundry of Boyd & Engle; one physician, Dr. W. H. Faulds; a post-office, and 179 dwellings.

MILL HOLLOW METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

A Methodist class as early as 1825 met in the old school-house on the island. The present church building was begun in the fall of 1873, and dedicated July 5th, 1874, by Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., assisted by Rev. J. Madison, the pastor. The church was built by S. W.

Bennett, on contract, and cost nearly $4,000. It has seats for about 400. The lot was donated by Mrs. Sarah Bennett, widow of the late Charles Bennett, of Wilkes-Barre. The trustees at the time of the dedication of the church were John Bartholomew, John Mathers, Joseph Welter, Thomas C. Reese, S. D. Fisk, Charles Lapha, Daniel Harris, George Rice and James Thomas.

The present officers are: Stewards, John Thomas, Jesse T. Welter, Thomas Kline, Peter Austin and S. D. Fisk; trustees, John Bartholomew (president), John Mathers (treasurer), William Mathers (secretary), James Thomas, John Thomas, Calvin Perrin, S. D. Fisk, Charles Lapha and Jesse T. Welter; class leaders, John Thomas, Thomas Kline and William H. Crocker. The present pastor is John Labar; membership, 75. Mrs. Sarah H. Laphy, widow of the late David Laphy, is the oldest member of the church now living, having joined the church in 1823.

The present Sunday-school organization consists of Peter Austin, superintendent; William H. Crocker, assistant superintendent; William Mathers, secretary; J. T. Welter, assistant secretary; S. C. Welter, librarian; Alfred Wolf, assistant librarian; and John Thomas, treasurer. The number of scholars is 187; average attendance, 90.

BENNETT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This congregation first met in the brown school-house, on the Pringle farm, early in 1874, with Rev. A. C. Smith as pastor; and then in the school-house on the island, in which the present church was organized June 6th, 1874, with eleven members dismissed by letter from the Kingston Presbyterian church. The church thus formed worshiped in Walker's Hall until the basement of the present church edifice was ready for occupancy. The latter building was dedicated September 24th, 1876, by Rev. T. P. Hunt, of Wilkes-Barre, assisted by Rev. E. H. Snowden. The lot was donated by Mrs. Charles Bennett, of Wilkes-Barre. The cost of the building was $6,000.

The Sabbath-school numbers about 250 members, and was made up of three small schools. The pastor, Rev. A. C. Smith, is superintendent.

Church; financial reporter, Calvin Perrin, jr. The officers for 1880 were the same as the first board, with the addition of William Moses for treasurer

FORTY FORT.

This village bears the name of the historic old fortress from which the patriot band marched on the morning of the fatal 3d of July, 1778, to meet the invading foe. As near as can be ascertained, by digging down and finding the charred remains of the old stockade, the fort was a rectangle, eighty by two hundred and twenty-five feet.

The south line ran through the center of the site of the old house built by William Culver in 1815. The house stands on the north side of the road leading down to the ferry. The present highway, or "Forty Fort" road, as it is locally known, runs diagonally through the site of the old fort. At the centennial of the Wyoming massacre, celebrated on these grounds in July, 1878, Mr. M. Marshall contributed the large cedar flag staff now standing near where is supposed to have been the center of the fort. There was also presented a national flag, upon which was painted the following inscription: "Presented by the lady descendants, living in Wilkes-Barre, of Anderson Dana, Esq. The centennial anniversary of the battle and massacre of Wyoming, Forty Fort, 1878." Mrs. David Culver is the custodian of the flag, which is of English bunting and of the regulation size. The old log house in which the articles of capitulation for the surrender of the fort were signed is still standing, adjoining the house occupied by Gordon Shook.

The old Shoemaker store is now kept by John Batteredton. The old Forty Fort tavern, the south wing of which was built in 1812, is now kept by Fuller Reese, and the store opposite, that of Crandall Major, is of more recent date. Samuel Pugh's grocery is one of the old buildings of the place.

The old ferry way, at the south of the cemetery, which was used by the early settlers, has long since been abandoned, and the ferry from Forty Fort to Port Bowkley, in Plains township, is owned and operated by David Culver.

Hon. John B. Smith's church, built for the "Christian," is now occupied by the Methodist Episcopal society.

This was probably the first settlement in the township of Kingston. There are at this place the old church, built in 1806 by the Methodists and Presbyterians; the Forty Fort Hotel, two stores and a grocery, a rope ferry owned and operated by David Culver, Hon. John B. Smith's church, a school-house, two resident ministers (Revs. E. Hazard Snowden and Henry Hunton Welles), the parsonage of the Forty Fort and Mill Hollow M. E. society, blacksmith, shoe, tailor and millinery shops and a population of about 500.

FORTY FORT CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

This association was organized and chartered March 6th, 1860. The trustees were Steuben Jenkins, William Swetland, Thomas P. Hunt, Hiram Denison, Charles D. Shoemaker, Charles Dorrance and William G. Case. William Swetland was chosen president, and Henry Woodhouse secretary and treasurer. The grounds, of about five acres, formerly under control of the agents of the proprietors of the township of Kingston, were by them decided to this association, and were surveyed into burial lots in July, 1861, by J. Allebach. In 1876 about four acres adjoining on the north were bought and surveyed by Irving A. Stevens.

The present directors of the association are Payne Pettebone, L. D. Shoemaker, Steuben Jenkins, Frank Helm, Lawrence Myers, George Shoemaker and A. J.

TRUXVILLE.

Truxville was settled about 1809 or 1810, by David Trux, who bought a large tract of land and built the first house at this place. In 1814 Jacob Rice, from New Jersey, bought 600 acres of land of Mr. Trux, upon which Truxville is situated. The same year he built a grist-mill, on the site of Isaac Rice's mill, and he also built a saw-mill a short distance below. In 1822 William C. Hagaman engaged in the tailoring business. The pioneer blacksmith was Albert Skeer, who came in 1826.

The Methodist Episcopal church was built in 1844, and cost about $1,500, which was raised by subscription, Jacob Rice donating the church lot and $100 in cash towards the enterprise. This church became part of the Carverton circuit in 1858; it then had 45 members, and William Booth was class leader.

The first school-house was built in 1825 on the site of the present one.

In 1825 Mr. Rice built the pioneer store; it was burned and he built on the same site the present one, now occupied by J. P. Rice, who formerly kept a store in the house now occupied by Mr. Harder. Isaac Rice was in trade at the same time in the old store where J. P. Rice now is. In 1830 Jacob Rice, Esq., built a chop and plaster-mill, now owned by Henry M. Hagaman. About 1836 Levi C. Rice had a turning lathe in the old chop and plaster-mill, for the manufacture of broom handles, chair stuff, &c. In 1833 Isaac Rice built a small tannery on the lot now owned by H. M. Hagaman. The business was abandoned in a few years, and the tannery went to decay. In 1827 J. P. Rice and Mr. Kirkendall built a small cloth-mill between the grist-mill and the chop-mill, which in a few years went to decay. The lot is now owned by H. M. Hagaman. In 1830 the old grist-mill was sold to James Sitgreaves, who used it as a distillery and a dwelling a number of years. In 1833 J. P. Rice built another cloth-mill farther down the stream, which is now William L. Rice's woolen factory. Dr. J. R. Lewis has lived at Truxville since 1833. In 1835 J. P. Rice built a saw-mill about a mile above Truxville, on Toby's creek. It is now owned and operated by Ziba and George Rice.

The "Ice Cave" Hotel, about a mile below the village, was built in 1867, by Daniel Harris, for a dwelling, and subsequently sold to Mr. Harder, who converted it into a hotel. The property is now owned by Dr. Throop, of Scranton. It is a pleasant summer resort.

At present there are at Truxville a church (M. E.), a school-house, a woolen factory, a wagon and blacksmith shop, the store of J. P. Rice, and the stone quarry of Dr. J. R. Lewis. The population is about 400.

CARVERTON CIRCUIT.

Carverton circuit has an area of about 100 square miles, and comprises the Carverton, Truxville, Mt. Zion, (Exeter) and Dallas churches and two detached classes.

The circuit was formerly connected with Northmoreland and Lehman. It was organized as it now exists in 1858, and comprises six appointments. Rev. John La Bar was the first pastor and remained two years. The following have been the succeeding pastors: C. L. Rice, one year; W. Munger, two years; Y. C. Smith, one year; A. J. Van Cleft, two years; John La Bar, three years; Joseph Madison, three years; Isaac Austin, three years; Stephen Elwell, three years; F. A. King, the present pastor, on his third year.

The following was the board of stewards in 1858: John P. Rice, William C. Roushey, Jacob Rice, jr., George Frantz, Samuel Durland, Evi D. Wilson, Levi C. Lewis, R. Ryman, Chester Harris.

The following have been local preachers: Abram Chandler, J. P. Rice, Elisha Harris, Daniel Harris.

The Mount Zion M. E. church, built in 1852, is in Exeter township. It had at the time it became connected with Carverton circuit 80 members. George Holmes was then class leader.

Dallas M. E. church was built in 1854. It is located in the borough of Dallas. It had in 1858 80 members. Jacob Rice, jr., was then class leader.

Carverton M. E. church, which was built in 1854, is in Carverton. It had in 1858 42 members. James Eaton was then class leader.

Harris class meets in a school-house in the Harris neighborhood, Kingston township. It had in 1858 19 members. Hiram Harris was class leader.

Demond class meets in a school-house in Dallas. It was organized in 1860, with 24 members. R. Ryman was class leader. The membership of these appointments all told is now 305. The four churches mentioned are valued each at $1,500.

There is a Sabbath-school at each appointment, and they all flourish well during the summer; but, because of the bad roads, making it inconvenient for the children to attend from the distances at which they live, they suspend during the winter; except those at Dallas and Truxville, where they are maintained during the entire year. The number of officers and teachers in all the Sunday-schools on the circuit is 38; number of scholars, 291.

The M. E. parsonage at Carverton was built in 1860. The first minister who occupied it was Rev. C. L. Rice. It is valued at $900.

KINGSTON BOROUGH.

A FEW brief paragraphs, beginning with 1857, when the village was incorporated, would compass its history as a borough. Its early history, however, beginning with 1769, is rich in incidents connected with the first settlement of this territory by the colonists under the patronage of the Susquehanna Company and the State of Connecticut.

It is not now certainly known who was the first settler at the village of Kingston, but one of the first settlers of the township in 1769 settled within the limits of the borough, namely, James Atherton, who, with his sons James Atherton, jr., Asahel and Elisha Atherton, built the first log house, nearly opposite the site of the old academy, on Main street. There the father resided to the time of his death, in 1790. His son Elisha occupied the old homestead until 1817, when he died. The old log cabin then disappeared.

This portion of the township was the last to be occupied by the settlers from abroad, and up to 1803 there were but three houses between those of James Atherton and Lawrence Myers, the latter at the corner where now stands the store of Abram Goodwin. Previous to 1796 there was a small one-story house directly opposite the present residence of Abram Reynolds, Esq. It was painted red, and for many years was occupied by Epaphras Thompson, a silversmith and a Baptist of the hard-shell order. He left here about 1818, and the house disappeared about 1835. It was the first frame house built within the limits of the borough.

Up to 1818 the old township line road was the only avenue to Wilkes-Barre; it was reached by the extension of the Main Kingston road, 99 feet wide, and was then known as the Wilkes-Barre and Blind Town road, as it led from the ferry opposite the foot of Northampton street, Wilkes-Barre, to Blind Town, separating the townships of Kingston and Plymouth. Near the point of intersection of these roads was a swing gate across the Blind Town road. There were no fences at that day on these extensive bottom lands to protect the crops from trespassing cattle, and every person passing was enjoined by stringent laws, with heavy penalties, to close the gate after him. This gate was maintained from 1770 up to the time of building the Wilkes-Barre bridge and the opening of the present avenue from the bridge to Kingston, in 1818, when the old road from Eleazer Loveland's to the ferry was vacated, the old gate was unhung, and owners of lands had to build fences for the protection of their crops.

The road leading from Goodwin's corner to the Blind Town road, at the old Eleazer Loveland place, was not laid out in the original survey of the township, but was opened by Esquire Myers and Hallett Gallop, through their own lands, on the completion of the bridge in 1818. William Gallop built the first house (of logs) on the site where now stands the residence of the late Giles Slocum.

At the junction of the new road given by Myers and Gallop with the Blind Town road, on the Plymouth side, was a small log house as late as 1802. From this point to where the railroad now crosses the Blind Town road there was but a single residence, which was occupied by Darius Williams. On the Kingston side of the Blind Town road there was not a residence up to 1796 between the Myers and Gallop road and Toby's creek, where Peter Grubb had a grist-mill and a saw-mill and lived on the site of the Kingston Coal Company's shaft No. 1 from 1790 to 1807. The mills subsequently became the property of Thomas Borbridge, who took them down in 1826. These were the only grist or saw-mills ever built with the limits of the borough of Kingston.

On the triangle, in the rear of the old stone house, at quite an early day were a small tannery, a shop, and a dwelling house. The date of their erection is unknown, but in 1815 the property came into the possession of General Samuel Thomas, and he built thereon a frame dwelling, which is now standing. Here he kept his justice's office from March 20th, 1816, till his removal to Illinois, when he sold the property to Ziba Hoyt. In this house Governor Henry M. Hoyt was born. In 1817 Levi Hoyt built his house on the triangle, a short distance southwest from his brother's. This house is also still standing. The old homestead of Lawrence Myers (of hewn logs) was probably built as early as 1787 by his predecessor. Lawrence Myers was appointed a justice of the peace July 7th, 1790. In this log house he held his courts and continued to dispense justice to the litigants of Kingston up to the time of his death in 1810. He was succeeded by Stephen Hollister, who left the township in 1816. The latter was followed by Samuel Thomas, and he by Sharp D. Lewis, who retired about 1840.

Henry Buckingham, from Connecticut, opened the first store, where Jacob Sharps now lives, and in or about 1804 he built a dwelling and store on the lot now owned and occupied by Abram Reynolds, east of McPike's Hotel. Here he did business till 1821, and after him Thomas Borbridge, from Philadelphia, several years. William C. Reynolds was then the merchant here until his death. In 1807 or 1808 Sidney Tracey opened a short-lived store in the Giles Slocum house. In 1811 Elias Hoyt & Thomas Bartlett opened a store on Main street, a short distance above the Exchange Hotel; and in 1818 Hoyt built and for many years occupied the store now occupied by Laycock & Pringle. A. O. Chahoon and one Lanning succeeded Hoyt & Bartlett. Goods were brought from Philadelphia and New York on the old-fashioned Conestoga wagons, each drawn by four, five or six horses. Derrick Bird, Joshua Pettebone and John Shafer were among the old pioneer teamsters. James Barnes had a little book store connected with his other business about 1820. He owned all the land from Toby's eddy to Larksville, which is now worth millions of dollars.

Tradition tells us that at the time of the Wyoming massacre a man by the name of Tracey kept a tavern near the corner where now stands Mr. Pike's Hotel. He was both schoolmaster and poet. He was the author of the ballad entitled "The Massacre of Wyoming." In 1804 John Ebeit began building the present Exchange Hotel. He left the country in 1807, and James Wheeler built and finished the house, and kept it until 1809 or 1810. Naphthali Hurlbut then occupied the house several years. His successors were Archippus Parrish and Oliver Helm. William Johnson, John Sax and Frank Helm have also kept the old tavern, which was a popular resort for all the old settlers. Elnathan Wilson, about 1820, opened a tavern where McPike's Hotel now stands, and the building was occupied subsequently by Thomas Myers & Co. as a store.

About 1808 or 1810 there was a distillery, built of logs, standing opposite the old Exchange, on Main street, where whiskey was manufactured from potatoes. It was aptly called the "Devil's Hog Pen."

Dr. Asa C. Whitney was the first resident physician. He married a Miss Inman, and lived where Mrs. Samuel Hoyt now lives. He died in 1824, and was succeeded by Dr. Joseph Wright, who in 1830 was commissioned a surgeon in the regular army.

With the bounty of the Susquehanna Company, and private subscriptions, schools were kept up until 1833, when the present common school system was inaugurated. In 1812 the people here built the Kingston Academy. The first teachers in order were Thomas Bartlett, John Bennett, a Mr. Seivers and a Mr. Bissell, who was afterward governor of Illinois. At one time the late Judge Ketchum was principal.

Several of the old Kingston homesteads date back to quite a remote age. The "stone house" was built in 1818 for a store and dwelling by James Barnes, on land belonging to Lawrence Myers, and was known as "Myers's cocked hat," from the peculiar three-cornered shape of the lot. It was subsequently occupied by Thomas Borbridge, Thomas Myers and others. The lower part of this house was once used as a foundry, and subsequently reconverted into a dwelling, and the building is now used as a store, justice's office and dwelling.

There are at least three "old Hoyt" houses. The one on "Goose island," standing on the extension of Main street, west from Railroad avenue, is the ancestral home of Governor Hoyt. Another is on the road leading to Forty Fort, and the other is on the Plymouth road, west of Goodwin's store. The old Loveland house has been modernized, but the old frame stands yet, at the intersection of the old Myers and Gallup, or Plymouth road and the Blind Town road, and it is now owned by William Loveland.

The cemetery known as "the old burying ground," on what was formerly known as the William Gallup farm, lot No. 2, was the first in the borough. The first interment was of the remains of Nathaniel Gates, who came from Connecticut with the pioneer settlers, and died November 7th, 1793, aged 37 years. The ground is neglected and many of the bodies have been removed. A few of the remaining tomb stones are still standing, to mark the last resting place of some of the pioneers of this borough. Among the inscriptions we find the following: Eunice, wife of Aaron Dean, died November 8th, 1795. Elizabeth Grub, died July 28th, 1796. Peter Grub, Esq., died July 23d, 1807. William Gallup, died April 8th, 1803, aged 79. Judith, wife of William Gallup, died January 1st, 1815, aged 81. Betsey, wife of Peter Clark, died January 25th, 1807. Hallet Gallup, died October 5th, 1804. Mary, wife of Hallet Gallup, died October 6th, 1804. Israel Skeer, died October 14th, 1804. Hannah, wife of Aseph Jones, born in 1772, died in 1864.

WYOMING SEMINARY.

This well known and justly popular institution of learning, located in the classic valley of Wyoming, has a history well worthy of note.

The friends of education in the old Oneida M. E. conference, after establishing on a broad and permanent basis a seminary at Cazenovia, N. Y., in the northern portion of their territory, determinedly entertained the project, over thirty years ago, of providing for the increasing educational demands of the southern portion of the work. With a commendable foresight they devised measures for the erection of an institution of learning in northeastern Pennsylvania. At the session of the Oneida Conference held in Wilkes-Barre August 9th, 1843, the matter was fully discussed, and the necessary preliminary steps taken by the appointment of David Holmes, jr., Lucian S. Bennett, Thomas Myers, Madison F. Myers, Lord Butler, Sharp D. Lewis and Silas Comfort as "trustees of a contemplated seminary of learning, to be located either in Wilkes-Barre or Kingston," according to the amount of subscription obtained in each place within a given time. Kingston, providing the largest subscription, was the chosen locality. At the first meeting of the board of trustees David Holmes was elected president, Silas Comfort secretary, and Madison F. Myers treasurer. The first building, a brick structure of three stories, 37 by 70, was erected and opened for students in 1844. The size of the chapel was 24 by 29; recitation room, 13 by 29, and room for primary department, 20 by 29, with some twenty rooms in all for students; cost of the building, about $5,000. Such was the beginning of this educational enterprise—one building, two teachers and fifty scholars. The trustees secured as their first principal Rev. Reuben Nelson, A. M., then a young man, but who afterward abundantly demonstrated his fitness to inaugurate and carry forward such an enterprise to a successful consummation. Under such leadership, seconded by the energetic co-operation of a noble-minded and self-denying board of trustees and a corps of efficient teachers, the institution attained a popularity and influence second to none of its class in the land.

In half a dozen years after the erection of the first edifice, such was the patronage obtained that an additional building was demanded. In the spirit of an unselfish liberality, the late William Swetland volunteered to erect the projected additional building at his own expense. The second building was named by the trustees Swetland Hall, in memory of the respected donor. At the same time Hon. Ziba Bennett contributed $1,000 as a foundation for a library. This was thereafter called, in honor of the giver, the Bennett Library.

In the early spring of 1853 additional facilities were deemed essential, and the building of a wing or wings to the main building was contemplated, with a view to afford accommodation to a larger number of students. On the 15th of March, 1853, the seminary buildings were burned down. While the brick and stone and ashes were yet warm the trustees, with undaunted heroism, in their meeting on the day of the fire resolved that a committee of three be appointed to draw plans and specifications for the rebuilding of the seminary. This showed the stuff these men were made of. Again did the tried friend of the cause, William Swetland, come to the rescue, and he nobly undertook, at his own expense, the work of rebuilding and enlarging Swetland Hall. Through the liberality of P. Pettebone, George Swetland, A. Y. Smith, and Isaac C. Shoemaker, a third building was erected about the same time, to which the name Union Hall was given. Thus, through fire and disaster, larger and better buildings were erected, and the three blocks, "Wyoming Seminary" in the center, with "Swetland Hall" on the left, and "Union Hall" on the right, stood a noble monument of the energy and liberality of the men of Wyoming valley.

In a few years afterwards the ladies' boarding hall was destroyed by fire. Then a fierce tornado swept over the place and unroofed the building. Then a flood did more or less damage to the seminary property. Yet with heroic spirit the board of trustees measured up to every exigency, so that repeated difficulties have been overcome, financial embarrassments removed, and the whole machinery kept moving without intermission and without a jar.

The civil war seemed for a brief period to interfere with the wonted success of the institution. Yet even with this temporary drawback the trustees projected other plans for the success of the school. A commercial department was added in 1863; Professor W. S. Smyth, afterward principal of Cazenovia Seminary, was secured to take charge of the commercial college, and under his efficient supervision it proved a decided success. Professor L. L. Sprague has been the head of this department for seven years, and under his management it has developed into an institution equal to the best schools of the kind in the country.

At the close of the war it was found that the enlargement of the seminary was absolutely required. The three buildings had already been united by the addition of wings, yet this did not meet the demand for room. In the year 1866, the centennial of American Methodism, it was determined to erect a memorial building, to be named "Centenary Hall." This was commenced in 1867 and completed in 1868, at a cost of about $25,000. The buildings are all under one roof, three and four stories high, with 350 feet frontage. The edifice, as a whole, is an ornament to the valley, and an honor to the country and the church. There are ample accommodations for 175 boarding students and 250 day scholars.

At the general conference of the M. E. church held in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1872, Rev. Dr. Nelson, after serving as principal for a period of nearly thirty years, during which time he developed his skill as an educator and financier, was elected senior book agent at New York, and resigned his position as principal. He was succeeded by Rev. D. Copeland, A. M., Ph. D., president of the Female College of Hillsboro, Ohio, a gentleman whose literary tastes and attainments, acknowledged abilities and extended experience as an educator, render him pre-eminently fitted for the important and responsible position of principal of an institution of this grade. Never was the institution more successful. The course of study is most thorough and elevated. The curriculum will compare favorably with that of the highest institutions of its class. Notwithstanding the depressing influence of monetary panics, and the business derangement arising from the recent general suspension in the anthracite regions, this time honored and deservedly popular institution receives its full share of patronage, and under its present efficient management is destined to exert a still more potent influence in the education of the youth of our land.

The system of instruction adopted is thorough, and designed to prepare the students for the active duties of life, or for a course of professional or collegiate study. There are nine departments of study provided, and eight courses of study are arranged in order to meet the various wants of students: The common English course, course in literature and science, classical course, college preparatory course, musical course vocal and instrumental, and commercial course. As an evidence of the high grade of scholarship of young men prepared here for college, today they stand among the first at the best colleges in the country. Many leading men now distinguished in church and State have been educated in this seminary, including Hon. W. W. Ketcham, Governor H. M. Hoyt, Hon. H. W. Palmer and Hon. H. B. Payne, Rev. L. C. Floyd and Rev. P. Krohn, and that fine pulpit orator Rev. W. P. Abbott, now of New York.

The faculty of the institution is as follows:

Rev. David Copeland, Ph. D., D. D., principal, intellectual and moral science.

Ellen R. Martin, A. M., lady principal, belles lettres.

Rev. Levi L. Sprague, principal of commercial college and lecturer on commercial law.

Rufus B. Howland, B. C. E., mathematics and natural science.

Rev. Cyrus C. Lovejoy, A. M., ancient languages.

Hugo V. Stadler, instrumental and vocal music.

Willis L. Dean, plain and ornamental penmanship, book-keeping and telegraphy.

Sarah M. Soule, English branches.

Rev. Henry Wheeler, lecturer on commercial ethics.

R. H. Tubbs, M. D., and P. B. Cook, M. D., lecturers on health.

Rufus B. Howland, librarian.

Competent teachers in art and modern languages will also be provided.

MUNICIPAL HISTORY.

The borough of Kingston was established November 23d, 1857. The petition to the Court of Luzerne county for the creation of a borough was signed by the following:

Robert H. Tubbs, F. Helme, Reuben Jones, Thomas Pringle, Richard Hutchins, William N. Raymond, A. H. Reynolds, Reuben Marey, A. C. Church, William C. Morris, M. G. Whitney, George E. Hoyt, Abram Nesbitt, William Perigo, P. M. Goodwin, Abram Goodwin, Jr., Abram Goodwin, Thomas Myers, Francis A. Page, Anson Atherton, Isaac Tripp, M.

R. Nelson

F. Myers, H. S. Butler, George Sealy, Thomas Somers, Charles Raymond, F. C. Woodhouse, H. C. Silkman, R. Nelson, Sam Griffin, William Loveland, Z. B. Hoyt, Thomas Sloenn, Albert Skeer, H. M. Hoyt, Samuel Hoyt, Bester Payne, R. H. Little, Conkling Robbins, Ira W. Dilley, Thomas Fender, James Grenawalt, John Keller, William C. Reynolds, E. W. Reynolds and Joshua Belding.

The court appointed the first election "at the house of Thomas Wambold," on the 15th of December, 1857, between the hours of one and six o'clock, and named Ira Carl as judge, and Reuben Marcy and Abram Nesbitt inspectors of the election. On the day indicated the following officers were elected: Burgess, Reuben Jones; town council, Bestor Payne, Marshal G. Whitney, Reuben Marcy, Thomas Pringle and Richard Hutchins; high constable, Edward A. Pringle. At a meeting of the town council held December 22nd, 1857, Thomas Pringle was chosen president, and Abram Nesbitt secretary. At a meeting of the council, July 10th, 1858, C. W. Boughtin, John Remell and John Jackson were appointed policemen.

The burgesses of the borough have been as follows: From December, 1857, to March, 1860, Reuben Jones; 1860, 1865, 1869, 1872, 1874, 1877, 1879, 1880, Ira Carl; 1866-68, Reuben Jones; 1873, Henry Van Scoy; 1878, C. W. Boone. The town council for 1880 consisted of John Hoyt (president), Charles Graham, Abram Nesbitt, Bowen Baldwin, John Pettebone, Henry Van Scoy and E. J. Davis (clerk).

The following are the names and years of election of the justices of the peace for Kingston borough: Reuben Jones, 1858, 1862, 1867, 1872; Zebulon B. Hoyt, 1858; Alfred Daste, jr., 1866, 1871; Ira Carle, 1875; C. W. Boone, 1877.

THE VILLAGE IN 1880.

The business interests of the borough are in the hands of comparatively few persons. There are two churches, Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian. Here is located the Wyoming (M. E.) Conference Seminary, and there are three district school-houses with four schools. Mercantile business is carried on by Edwards & Co., C. P. Dodson & Co., and R. H. Dodson & Brother, on Railroad avenue; Laycock & Pringle, on Main street; J. C. Hutchinson, on the Blind Town road; and Hayward, on Page street. The large three-story brick store, on Main street, occupied by C. P. Dodson & Co. was built in 1873, and that of Edwards & Co. in 1876. The druggists of the borough are A. Goodwin, Main street and Railroad avenue; R. H. Tubbs, Main street; and Evans & Son, Railroad avenue. The hardware merchants are A. J. Root and H. F. Johnson, Main street; and B. B. Root Chestnut street. The merchant tailors are Christian Bach, on Main street, and T. Somers, on Railroad avenue. Mrs. C. A. Wambold is engaged in the cabinet and upholstering business, and the harness business is carried on by George F. Kutz, on Main street, and Charles Turpin, on Railroad avenue. The blacksmiths are Jacobs & Van Horn, and C. W. Boughtin, Main street, opposite McPike's Hotel. The boot and shoe business is conducted by Joel Walp, on the west side of Railroad avenue. The marble works on Main street are owned and operated by Chandler & Pringle. The steam planing mill and lumber yard on Railroad avenue is owned and operated by John Keller. The hotels are McPike's, at the corner of Main street and Railroad avenue, built in 1878, of brick; the Kingston House, kept by P. Wolcott, near the railroad depot; and the Exchange Hotel, on Main street. Shops of the D., L. & W. railroad are located here, with Charles Graham as superintendent. They employ on an average 220 men annually.

The population of the borough is 1,426.

CHURCHES OF KINGSTON BOROUGH.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

In 1788, four years after the Methodist denomination was regularly organized in the United States, Rev. Anning Owen, the pioneer Methodist preacher, organized the first "class" at Rose Hill. Occasional lectures and sermons by Methodist itinerants were had until the beginning of the century, among the preachers being Revs. Valentine Cook, Alward White, Marmaduke Pearce and Elias Bowen. From 1800 to 1840 Kingston was included in a "circuit," and was served from year to year by regularly appointed preachers, the place of meeting being a small building erected for the purpose on what was known as Plymouth street. Among the ministers during these forty years were Revs. H. T. Rowe, King Elwell, A. J. Crandall, George H. Blakeslee, F. H. Stanton, E. Owen, V. Coryell, and William Rounds.

In 1840 Rev. John B. Benham was appointed. During his pastorate, in 1841, the society erected its first church edifice very near the site of the present one. The stockholders unanimously chose as building committee Madison F. Meyers, Thomas Pringle, and William Hancock. The corner stone was laid in July. The edifice was built by R. Marcy, Esq., was 50 feet long and 36 feet wide, and cost $2,300; the entire expense being covered by subscription, with no debt. From this time the growth of the society was constant. The following named ministers served the society, as nearly as can be ascertained: 1840, 1841, John B. Benham; 1842, 1843, L. S. Bennett and William Reddy; 1844, George H. Blakeslee; 1845, 1846, P. G. White; 1847, Thomas Pearne; 1848, P. Worden.

In 1848, during the pastorate of Mr. Worden the society was legally incorporated. The incorporation act bears date April 3d, 1848, and is signed by Henry W. Boughton, Thomas Pringle, Bester Payne, William Hancock and Madison F. Myers. From 1849 to 1876 the following ministers served the society: 1849, E. P. Williams; 1850, H. R. Clark; 1851, Asel Bronson; 1852, C. H. Harvey; 1853, T. D. Walker; 1854, C. W. Giddings; 1855, S. S. Kennedy; 1856, W. W. Welsh; 1857, J. J. Pearce; 1858, C. Perkins; 1859, Asa Brooks; 1860, 1861, William J. Judd; 1862, 1863, L. Cole; 1864-66, Byron D. Sturtevant.

During the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Sturtevant the church edifice was enlarged by the addition of twenty-seven feet to the rear, making it seventy-seven feet by thirty-six feet. It was also remodeled inside.

From 1866 to 1872 the following clergymen served as pastors: 1867-69, Ira T. Walker; 1870-72, George R. Hair.

February 10th, 1872, the church was burned. With commendable promptness and zeal the society began to agitate the project of a new edifice, and meanwhile worshiped in the seminary chapel. The project was favorably received, and this effort resulted in the immediate erection of the present elegant building, with a seating capacity of 800, at a cost of $58,000. The building committee consisted of Alexander J. Pringle and Abram Nesbitt. The service of dedication was conducted by Rev. William Penn Abbott, D. D., of New York city, and Rev. B. I. Ives, D. D., of Auburn, N. Y. At this service a large proportion of the expense of building was subscribed by the people. A large and handsome parsonage on the same lot was built about the same time, at an expense of $6,000. From 1872 to 1880 the society was served by the following named clergymen: 1873, H. V. Talbott; 1874, 1875, Philip Krohn; 1876-78, Henry Wheeler; 1879, 1880, O. W. Scott.

At the Wyoming Conference of 1879 the following statistics of the Kingston society were reported: Members, 270; probationers, 37; members of Sunday-school, 211; collected for the benevolent work of the denomination, $356; preacher's support, $1,300 and parsonage.

During a greater part of the history of the society a Sunday-school has been maintained. Madison F. Myers was the first superintendent; P. M. Carhart has served in this capacity for the last six years.

The ladies of the church maintain an "Aid Society," which has the following officers: President, Mrs. L. L. Sprague; vice-presidents, Mrs. Rev. O. W. Scott, Mrs. John Van Loon; secretary, Mrs. George K. Powell; treasurer, Miss Martha Locke. This society is very active in raising funds to assist in church work. There is also a ladies' missionary society here, auxiliary to the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. denomination. The officers are: President, Mrs. Rev. O. W. Scott; vice-president, Mrs. A. Safford; secretary, Mrs. C. C. Lovejoy; treasurer, Mrs. John Van Loon.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF KINGSTON.

The Church of Christ of Wilkes-Barre and Kingston, a Congregational church from which sprung the Presbyterian churches of Wilkes-Barre and Kingston, included in its membership a number of people living on the westerly side of the Susquehanna. In 1818, through the preaching of two missionaries—Rev. Eleazer Barrows and Rev. Hutchins Taylor—a revival of religion was had resulting in the conversion of many people, chiefly in the township of Kingston. The members living in Kingston were given a separate organization by a council of ministers at the house of Daniel Hoyt March 2nd, 1819. The original members were twenty-four in number, of whom twenty were received on certificates of dismissal from the church of Wilkes-Barre and Kingston, viz.: Mary R., Daniel, Abel, Sylvania and Rucy Hoyt, Nehemiah and Betsey Ide, Henry and Hartiet Buckingham, Asa C. Whitney, Elijah Loveland, William and Salome Ticknor, John Huff, John Gore, Nancy Dorrance, Clarissa Brown, Abigail and Silas H. Orcutt and Sybil Wheeler; the remaining four being received on profession of faith, viz., Ebenezer Brown, Hannah Hughes, Lucy Smith, Parthena Gordon.

The church elected Daniel Hoyt and William Ticknor deacons, Daniel Hoyt moderator and Henry Buckingham clerk. It was incorporated on the 23d of March, 1819, under the name of the "Presbyterian Congregation of Kingston," making it the first distinctively Presbyterian congregation established in Luzerne county. Notwithstanding its name, however, and the fact that it sent a delegate regularly to the meetings of the Susquehanna Presbytery—deacon Daniel Hoyt being the first one sent—the church continued to be Congregational in its government until the 6th of July, 1823, when John Gore, Henry Hise, Abel Hoyt, George Albright and Elijah Loveland were duly set apart to the office of ruling elder; and from that time the church has been Presbyterian in government as well as doctrine.

The Kingston church in its early days was a mission church, occupying the territory from Plymouth to Exeter and as far back as Lehman and Bowman's Creek, where lived some of its members. Until 1842 it held its meetings in different places, often at the house of Daniel Hoyt, on the corner of Main and Pringle streets, also at the academy, which was located on Main street near the present residence of Mrs. Elijah Reynolds. Sometimes they are held at the old Forty Fort church, and sometimes in the village of Wyoming, at a small meeting house erected by Jacob Shoemaker on a lot now included in the cemetery at that place. In 1841 the congregation fixed upon a spot on the main road near the northern line of the present borough of Kingston, where they erected a tasty frame church capable of seating about 300 people, and costing about $2,500, which they dedicated on the 13th of November, 1842, and occupied until January, 1876.

The upper portion of the congregation was organized into a church at Wyoming in 1847. A lecture-room was built, at a cost of about $1,000, in the borough of Kingston in 1853 for evening service and Sabbath-school purposes. The new brick church on the corner of Railroad and Maple streets was dedicated on the 26th of January, 1876. This church is capable of seating about 500 people, and cost, including lot, about $48,000.

For more than two years after its organization the church had no pastor, but depended for preaching upon the missionaries who visited the valley, chiefly the Rev. H. Taylor. In August, 1821, Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve was installed as its first pastor, in conjunction with the Wilkes-Barre church; from which time, with occasional intermissions, it has had a pastor and stated public service. The following is a list of the pastors, with date of service: Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve, August 2nd, 1821, to 1827; Rev. Nicholas Murray, 1829-33; Rev. Alexander Heberton, 1833, 1834; Rev. E. H. Snowden, 1837-45; Rev. J. Delville Mitchell, 1845-47; Rev. J. Jermain Porter, 1847-50; Rev. Henry H. Wells, 1851-71; Rev. W. P.

From 1834 to 1837 the congregation had stated preaching by Rev. C. C. Corss, who occupied a large missionary field.

The following is a list of the ruling elders, with the year of their ordination: 1823, John Gore, Henry Hise, Abel Hoyt, George Albright and Elijah Loveland; 1828, Horace Parker; 1836, Charles Fuller; 1838, Ezra Hoyt; 1844, Charles D. Shoemaker and Ziba Hoyt; 1853, James W. Abbott and George W. Loveland; 1858, Samuel G. Ladd and Marshall G. Whitney; 1863, George Reith; 1867, Frederic Corss and T. H. B. Lewis; 1871, James Vannan and William Loveland; 1877, H. B. Payne and William R. Brink; 1880, M. B. Fowler, William F. Church and Amos Shortz.

The following is a list of the deacons, with the year of their appointment: 1819, Daniel Hoyt and William Ticknor; 1823, John Gore; 1873, B. J. Cruser, Amos Shortz and Charles Hutchinson.

The membership has ranged from 60 to 170, its present number.

The Sabbath-school has long been a prominent feature of this church. Prior to 1819 there had been established a neighborhood or union Sabbath-school, which met at the academy in the upper end of the village of Kingston until the year 1842. About this time the Methodists, having erected a house of worship in the village, established a school of their own, and the Presbyterians removed their school into their new church, where it continued until removed into the new lecture-room in the village, in 1853, and finally into the new Maple street church in October, 1875. In its early days the leading spirits in the work seem to have been Henry Buckingham, Elijah Loveland and William Barker, a very large majority of the admissions to church membership on confession of faith having come from the Sabbath-school. Since Mr. Loveland the superintendents have been: Samuel G. Ladd, 1858-61; H. B. Payne, 1861-73; T. H. B. Lewis, 1873-78 and H. B. Payne, from 1878 to this time. The school now consists of 4 officers, 18 teachers and an average attendance of 160 pupils. The library contains about 500 volumes. Five of the eight ruling elders are officers and teachers. During the pastorate of Rev. J. J. Porter a branch school was maintained for a while at Mill Hollow, and again in 1868 a school was established there under the superintendency of T. H. B. Lewis, assisted mainly by Mrs. Margaret Denison and Mrs. Amelia D. Abbott. This school continued for about two years, and became afterward the Sabbath-school of the Bennett Presbyterian Church.

LODGES AT KINGSTON VILLAGE.

KINGSTON LODGE, NO. 395, F. AND A. M.

This lodge was instituted August 8th, 1867. The charter members were Charles Graham, R. S. Adams, Thomas H. Niven, William Bryden, Forbes H. Vannan, James Vannan, Edward R. Preston, Peter Woolcot, David Miles, David I. Sligh and James P. Wilkinson.

The charter officers were: Charles Graham, W. M.; Royal S. Adams, S. W.; Thomas H. Niven, J. W.; Edward R. Preston, secretary; James Vannan, treasurer (now the oldest mason in the State).

The regular meetings of the lodge are held on Wednesday evenings on or before the full of the moon in each month, in Masonic Hall, corner of Main and Plymouth streets.

The list of past masters is as follows: Charles Graham, Erastus Hill, Frederick Corss, Alfred Darte, jr.; William H. Squarey, Alanson B. Tyrrell, Charles Hutchinson, Hubbard B. Payne, William Bryden, William F. Church, P. Butler Reynolds, James H. Franck, Conrad Z. Warnick.

The officers for 1880 were: George H. Flanagan, W. M.; Luther C. Darte, S. W.; John Grant, J. W.; Alanson B. Tyrrell, treasurer; William F. Church, secretary.

KINGSTON LODGE, NO. 709, I. O. O. F.

This lodge was instituted May 19th, 1870, with 20 charter members.

The first officers were: A. Kline, N. G.; J. H. Franck, V. G.; J. Milton Nicholson, secretary; Amos Shortz, assistant secretary; P. McPike, treasurer.

The presiding officers since the organization have been J. H. Franck, Amos Shortz, D. R. Prendergast, F. F. Franck, S. P. Harder, J. H. Labar, Wm. Cortright, J. C. Van Loon, John Wallace, Alexander Nicol, J. H. Harder, Richard Payne, Alexander Scott, Robert Cooper, Robert Wallace, J. N. Colver, Joel Walp, Charles Wiggins and Ira De Silva.

The officers in 1880 were: W. J. McCreary, N. G.; Christian Bach, V. G.; Alexander Nicol, secretary; C. W. Fairchild, assistant secretary; J. H. Franck, treasurer.

There are 54 members. Meetings are held Tuesday evening of each week in Keller's Hall.

KINGSTON LODGE, NO. 1,797, KNIGHTS OF HONOR.

This lodge was organized September 26th, 1879, with 21 charter members.

The original officers of the lodge were: Dictator, A. B. Tyrrell; assistant dictator, E. C. Green; vice-dictator, J. C. Van Loon; reporter, T. L. Newell; financial reporter, R. A. Hutchinson; treasurer, N. A. Laycock; chaplain, M. B. Fowler; G., J. A. Linn; guard, C. Wiggins; sentinel, E. C. Starbird; past dictator, C. W. Broughton.

The regular meetings of the lodge are held on the evenings of the second and fourth Wednesday of each month in Odd Fellows' Hall. The present membership is 22.

The officers in April, 1880, were: Dictator, E. C. Green; vice-dictator, J. C. Van Loon; assistant dictator, Charles Wiggins; reporter, T. L. Newell; financial reporter, R. A. Hutchinson; treasurer, N. H. Laycock; G., J. A. Sinn; guard, J. R. Wright; S., H. F. Johnson; chaplain, H. C. Conover; past dictator, A. B. Tyrrell.

LAKE TOWNSHIP.

LAKE township, so called from Harvey's lake, was formed from Lehman and Monroe in 1841. A small part was set back in Monroe at the division of the county in 1841. The soil, except on the mountains, is fertile, and fine fruit is raised along the base of the mountains. The population is 863, though but 597 in 1870.

Harvey's lake covers 1,285 acres; the water is of great purity. Perch and trout are indigenous; pike were placed in the lake by Hollenback & Urquhart, who owned nearly the whole of Lake township at one time. Salmon were put in the lake in 1876, by the State authorities.

FIRST INHABITANTS.

The first white man who lived in Lake township was Matthew Scouten, who was employed by the owners of the land to look after the property, as early as 1792. He cleared a small tract, where Jacob Sorber afterward settled, and set out a few apple trees.

Daniel Lee settled at the head of Pike's creek in 1806, and the marsh is called Lee's pond, from him. He was employed by the farmers of Plymouth to care for cattle, which were driven here to graze during the summer.

Otis Allen came from Jackson township in 1836, and began clearing in the vicinity of Lee's pond. He brought his family in the spring of 1838. During this year Josiah, Nathan and Stephen Kocher, brothers, moved into the township from Hunlock township, and John Jackson, Andrew Freeman, Thomas Lewis and Ephraim King arrived. In 1839 Jonah Roberts, Elon Davenport, Daniel Casebear, David Moss and John Fosnot came, and in 1840 Moses C. Perrigo, Jacob Sorber, Jonah Bronson and Jonathan Williams. Previous to 1845 Clarke Wolfe, Jesse Kitchen, George P. Shupp, James Hawley and Edward Ide became residents.

BUSINESS HISTORY.

Hollenback & Urquhart built a saw-mill on the outlet of Harvey's lake in 1839. Joseph Frantz built the mill known as the Wildrick mill in 1843. It burned in 1879. Nathan Kocher built a small mill a mile below the site of the Beaver Run tannery in 1845. The mill now owned by S. Raub was built by Mr. Benjamin in 1847. A lath and shingle mill is connected with this one. Jonathan Williams built a small mill on Harvey's creek for Kocher & Urquhart in 1849. One was built by Otis Allen in 1860 on Pike's creek. George Snyder and Ira B. Sorber built the mills now owned by them in 1866. F. A. and E. Williams erected a steam portable mill on the site of the Wildrick mill in 1879. The first grist-mill was put up by Hollenback & Urquhart in 1840. They built a new one in 1860 just below. A planing-mill was erected by the same parties. All the mills formerly belonging to Hollenback & Urquhart are now (1879) the property of the Hoffman Lumber Company.

The first road through the township was chopped out by the proprietors about 1795 to induce settlement, and ran from Wilkes-Barre to Bradford county.

All the early settlers lived in log houses except Otis Allen and Jacob Sorber, who built block houses. The first frame dwelling was erected by Josiah Kocher in 1843. The Kocher brothers were carpenters, as were the sons of Otis Allen. The Allens were also millwrights. Stephen Kocher was the first blacksmith in Lake township.

The first store was kept by Hollenback & Urquhart for the benefit of the men in their employ from about 1850 until 1860. F. N. Ruggles established a store near the southeast corner of the township in 1872, and sold out in 1874 to his brother C. W. Ruggles, who still continues the business. James Sorber kept a store at Booth's Corners in 1863-65. Ruggles & Shonk have a store in connection with their tannery. Simeon Lewis has kept store since 1871.

The Ruggles & Shonk tannery was built in 1874. The firm had built a saw-mill in 1872, which burned in the fall of that year and was rebuilt in 1873. The tannery building is 225 by 24, and 2½ stories high, and contains 46 vats. The beam house is 24 by 60. There are 14 men employed at the tannery and 7 around the mill. The tannery uses 1,200 cords of bark per year, which is peeled in the vicinity.

The Lake House, on the east shore of Harvey's lake, was built by Henry Hancock and Jonathan Husted in 1857. It is 86 by 36, with a wing 52 by 32. The proprietor, J. W. Rhoads, has a large number of boats, and the lake is a popular resort for fishing and gunning.

CEMETERIES.

The first person buried in Lake township was Otis Allen, who died in January, 1842, aged 56 years. He was buried in the Allen cemetery. In September, 1842, Samuel C. Allen was buried here. The first person buried in the Kocher cemetery was Stephen Kocher, who died in September, 1842. The first in the West Corner cemetery was Mrs. Sarah Perrigo, wife of Moses C. Perrigo, June 26th, 1852; the next Martin M., son of Moses C. Perrigo, May 2nd, 1853, aged 4 years. The first burial in the White cemetery was that of Eva A., daughter of Theodore Wolfe, who died August 2nd, 1872, aged 2 months; then Gabriel Valentine, a stranger who died in the vicinity. The third was Mrs. Margaret Snyder, wife of Henry Snyder, who died September 2nd, 1872, aged 79.

SCHOOLS.

The first school in Lake was taught by Jonathan Williams at the house of Otis Allen during the winters of 1842 and 1843 and 1843 and 1844. A school-house was built during the summer of 1844 on the farm of Henry Ide. The first school-house at West Corner was taught by a Mr. Williams in the winters of 1847 and 1848 and 1848 and 1849, in the house of Nathan Kocher. A school-house was built here in 1849, and Miss Eliner Montross engaged as teacher. Mr. Williams also taught the first school at the outlet, during the winter of 1849 and 1850. In 1878 there were seven schools, with an average attendance of 119 pupils, and $1,002.21 were expended for educational matters.

MAIL FACILITIES.

Lewis Allen was the first postmaster. The office was called Lake. This office has been moved several times and is now at the Outlet Mills. J. C. Morgan is postmaster. The other offices are Ruggles, Josiah Ruggles, postmaster; Pike's Creek, C. W. Ruggles postmaster; Fade's Creek, L. Hawley postmaster, and Loyalville, W. I. Booth postmaster. Mails are brought to Lake and Ruggles from Kingston three times a week; to Pike's Creek, Fade's Creek and Loyalville from Nanticoke once a week.

Aldrich, 1850; Josiah Kocher, 1851-54, 1858, 1860; Joseph A. Booth, 1852-54; Henry Ide, 1854, 1855; John B. Kocher, 1856, 1860; Garret Durland, 1856; G. P. Shupp, 1857, 1862; Joseph Worden, 1857; F. A. Williams, 1859, 1860; J. G. Sutton, 1859, 1879; Joseph L. Bilby, 1860; S. Anderson, 1861; J. D. Whitesell, 1862; Moses C. Perrigo, 1863; William Gray, 1864; Nathan Beard, 1864; J. R. Brown, 1865; Antony Foss, 1866; L. R. Williams, 1867; Nathan Kocher, 1867-75; G. H. Bronson, 1869-72, 1874, 1875; Peter Wentz, 1873; Edward Williams, 1878, 1877; John Weber, 1878; George Hoover, 1877; L. D. Kocher, 1878; Simon Belles, 1878, 1879.

Town Clerks.—Curtis Allen, 1843; William Allen, 1844; J. Williams, 1852, 1853, 1855-61; G. H. Bronson, 1854; Joel Roberts, 1861-63; David Kocher, 1865; Stephen Scott, 1866; T. T. Kocher, 1867-70; W. J. Booth, 1870, 1871; H. Delong, 1872, 1873; F. N. Allen, 1874-77; B. W. Ide, 1878; A. J. Meeker, 1879.

Justices (with years of election).—Ira Bronson, 1842; Nathan Kocher, 1844, 1860, 1865; Jonathan Williams, 1847, 1852; Horace Hawley, 1850; John G. Sutton, 1855; Levi N. Hawley, 1859; Helan Davenport, 1864; C. B. Durland, 1869; F. A. Williams, 1870; Thomas T. Kocher, 1872; L. N. Hawley, 1875; C. H. Anderson, 1877.

CHURCHES.

The people of Lake depended entirely upon preachers from other towns for several years. Meetings were held at the houses of the different settlers until the erection of school-houses. The first preacher was Elder Clark, a "Christian" minister from Plymouth. After him came a Methodist named Davie. These men preached wherever the people would come out to hear.

Methodist Episcopal.—A class was formed in 1845, consisting of James Hawley, Amanda Hawley, Horace Hawley, Sarah Hawley, J. R. Bronson, Elizabeth Bronson, George Levally and wife, William H. Edwards and wife, and Welcome Fisk. Meetings were held in the school-house until 1872, when the society erected a church building costing about $2,250. The church was dedicated in January, 1873. The following ministers have been stationed on the different circuits to which this class has been attached: John Malkey, George Parton, Erastus Smith, G. W. Griffin, P. Holbrook; D. Personius, 1863-65; George Greenfield, 1865-67; J. C. Laycock, 1867-69; Isaac Austin, 1869-72; F. A. King, 1872-75; J. B. Santee, 1875; R.

C. Gill, 1876-78, and P. Honck, the present incumbent. A Sunday-school was established in 1847, with Barton Mott as superintendent, followed by William H. Edwards, who was the first class leader. There are at present about 65 pupils.

Lake First Baptist Church.—This society was organized March 12th, 1856, with Clark and Althea Wolfe, Thomas and Mary Lewis, Garrett and Eliner Post, and John and Catharine Crispell as members. Meetings were held in the school-house until 1878, when a church was erected, at an expense of $2,500. It was dedicated June 27th, 1878. The first minister was Rev. G. W. Schofield, from 1856 to 1858; followed by Benjamin Shearer, 1858-60; E. N. Whitney, 1866-68; Benjamin Shearer, 1868-70; Mark Parks, 1870-73; R. C. H. Catterall, 1876-79, and E. N. Whitney, the present pastor.

Union Church.—A church building was erected near the Outlet Mills by Hollenback & Urquhart about 1860, and was intended for the Presbyterian society. As one was never formed the building is used by all denominations.

LEHMAN TOWNSHIP.

LEHMAN township was set off from Dallas in 1829, and comprised the present township of Lehman, and the greater part of what is now Lake.

Abram or "Indian" Pike came into this township from Plymouth in the spring of 1780 to make sugar. His camp was where Pike's swamp now is. March 29th, 1780, he was surprised and captured by Indians, together with his wife and an infant child. The savages had captured Jonah Rogers, a boy of fourteen, a boy named Pence, and Moses Van Campen in Plymouth on the previous day. They spent the night at the camp of Pike. In the morning the child was rolled up in a blanket and thrown on top of the cabin, when the Indians started for Niagara with their prisoners. Arriving at the top of the mountains they painted the face of Pike's wife and released her, when she returned to the cabin, and taking her child made her way to Plymouth. About the 3d of April the band encamped for the night on the Susquehanna river, near Tioga point. Young Rogers, being left unbound, obtained the knife of the chief and cut the bonds of Pike, who soon released the others. Placing themselves at the head of the sleeping savages, Pike and Van Campen made an attack with tomahawks. Three were killed outright. The rest sprang to their feet to do battle with their late prisoners, but a shot by young Pence which killed one and wounded two more sent them flying into the woods. The whites followed the river back to their homes. For this deed Pike was called "Indian Pike." He lies in one corner of the Ide cemetery in this township.

The first permanent settlement was made by Nehemiah Ide and Jeremiah Brown, who came from Stockbridge, Mass., in 1801. A man named Avery came the same year, but did not remain. William Fuller came from Jackson in 1802. His brother, Isaac, followed in 1804. Joseph Worthington settled on the shore of Harvey's lake in 1806. William Newman also came this year. John Whiteman settled in the western part of the township in 1813, and J. I. Bogardus and Ogden Mosely in 1814. Minor Fuller and Fayette Allen came from Jackson township about 1819. Thomas Major, an Englishman, came from Wyoming in 1821, with his sons. Oliver Mekeel came from Plymouth in 1823.

The first frame house was built by William Fuller, in 1801 or 1802, opposite the residence of his son, Chester Fuller. Isaac Fuller built a house in 1804; S. P. Ide, in 1807; J. I. Bogardus and Ogden Mosely, in 1814; Ezra Ide, in 1819. Fayette Allen was the first carpenter in the township; Daniel Whiteman, Nehemiah Ide and Oliver Ide were others. Jonathan Heusted was the first blacksmith; his shop stood near the line of Jackson township at Huntsville. David Gordon began blacksmithing in 1839, near where Z. G. Gordon now lives. He was in partnership with Ira Lain, a cooper, and they carried on both trades. William Gordon was the first shoemaker. He lived where William Wolfe now resides. Dr. J. J. Rogers, now of Huntsville, was the first physician. He was followed by Dr. Moody about 1857.

The first school-house was a log building, built as early as 1810, near the site of W. H. Ide's house. J. I. Bogardus and Obed Baldwin were the earliest teachers, and were followed by Julius Pratt, Burr Baldwin, Mr. Perry and Elijah Worthington. The first school-house at Lehman Center was built in 1836 by Daniel and Oliver Ide. Ellen Pugh and Maria Fuller were the first teachers here. Miss Fuller is now Mrs. A. Ketcham of Lehman township. The next school-house was the West Lehman school-house, erected in 1842 by Nathan and Oliver Ide.

The first mill was erected in 1837 by Lewis Hoyt, Frederick Hartman builder, on Harvey's creek. George Sorber built one this year, which was purchased by Jameson Harvey in 1840. This was burned in 1876, and Mr. Harvey built the present mill on the site. Mills were built by J. Harris in 1838; by Frederick Hartman, on the C. B. Major farm, in 1838, for Ephraim King; by Robert Major in 1836; by R. W. Foster and Ansel Hoyt in 1840; by Rice & Mumford in 1844; by George Shupp in 1856, and by the Rice Brothers in 1873. Several of these mills have been burned, and some are entirely gone. Of the present mills Morris Lain's stands where J. Harris built his; I. Rice of Kingston owns the mill built by R. W. Foster; Jefferson Miers rebuilt the Ansel Hoyt mill in 1856, and it is now the property of M. V. Bogart; Sidney Major rebuilt the Rice & Mumford mill, which is now owned by Jameson Meeker; the George Shupp mill was burned in 1873, and is now owned by W. O. Ruggles.

The first store was opened about 1848, by Daniel Urquhart and Edward Shott, near where the Lehman Center school-house now stands. They sold to Bogardus & Fisher, who sold to Flick & Flannigan. Mr. Flick sold his interest to Flannigan, who kept the store in his own name for a long time and then sold to R. A. Whiteman, who now carries on the business on the corner at Lehman Center—now the only store in Lehman.

The first post-office was established about 1820, with John Whiteman as postmaster. Mails were brought from Kingston once a week. R. A. Whiteman is the postmaster.

The first person buried in the township was Nehemiah Ide, who died February 8th, 1823, at the age of seventy-seven years and was buried in the cemetery near the Presbyterian church. The next was Annie Brown, daughter of Amos Brown, who died July 23d, 1823, aged fourteen years, and was also buried in this cemetery. The first burial in the cemetery near Lehman Center was that of two children of Thomas Major, jr. As there are a great many graves unmarked in this cemetery the names of the first adults buried here cannot be ascertained with certainty.

There are now three blacksmith shops, two wagon shops and one shoe shop in the township. In 1878 there were seven schools, with an average attendance of 140 pupils, and $1,600.77 was expended on educational interests. The population is 942. Dr. W. Colley is the only physician in the township.

CHURCH HISTORY.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Ides and Browns, from Massachusetts, were Presbyterians while those who came from Jackson township were either Methodists or Baptists. For a long time there was no preaching regularly, and the people were connected with churches in adjoining townships. It is related of Nehemiah Ide that each third Sunday he would ride to the Kingston Presbyterian church, where he was a deacon. The Methodists were the first to send preachers into this township, as the Plymouth circuit was extended so as to embrace the territory of Lehman. Morgan Sherman and Joseph Castle came in 1824, followed by John Copeland and Philo Barbery, George Peck, S. Stocking, Miles H. Gaylord, Joseph Castle and Silas Comfort. There is no record to show the ministers from then up to about 1850.

In 1852 the society built a parsonage at Lehman Center, costing about $800, and in 1856 a church, which cost about $1,500. The ministers who have been in charge of this circuit have been Revs. Charles Perkins, Joshua S. Lewis, — Chubbock, — Morse, G. V. Griffin, P. Holbrook; D. Personius, 1863-65; George Greenfield, 1867-69; Isaac Austin, 1869-72; F. A. King, 1862-75; J. B. Santee, 1875; R. C. Gill, 1876-78; and D. Larrish, the present pastor. This circuit, known as the Lehman circuit, comprises five charges, of which three are in Lehman township the Lehman class, Ide school-house class and Forest school-house class. Sunday-schools are held at each place. Elijah Ide was the first class leader in Lehman.

In 1848 Amos Brown gave land on which to build a church, and a building was erected costing about $1,000. A parsonage was erected, also costing $1,000.

E. F. Ide is the present superintendent of the Sunday-school, which has about 25 pupils.

HUNTSVILLE "CHRISTIAN" CHURCH.

The society of "Christians" sent a minister named G. W. Richmond to preach to the people of Jackson and Lehman township in 1832. He organized a society composed of citizens of both townships, but as their church building stands in Lehman their history will be given here. The organization dates from October 15th, 1845, with Truman Atherton, Reuben Lain, Obed Baldwin, Fayette Allen, S. Snyder, Joseph and Peter Allen as the first members.

Elder William Lane was the first regular preacher, and he was followed by Job Harvey and S. Montgomery. For a long time there was no minister. Rev. L. B. Hyatt, of Kingston, was the last one. In 1848 Truman Atherton gave the land on which to erect a church edifice. This was to be used by all denominations. It is now owned and controlled by the "Christian" denomination.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The first preachers were Rev. Messrs. Parker and Mott, who came from New York State in 1831, as missionaries. The society was formed by them in 1834, with the following members: Thomas Major, John Ide, Sarah Ide, Nehemiah Ide, jr., Lola Foster, Lucy A. Trux, Josiah Lamoreux, Mary Major, Minor Fuller, Thomas Major, jr., Francis Major, Ellen Lamoreux and Mary Fuller.

The next preacher was D. D. Gray, but there are no records showing when he came. After him the following officiated: James Clark; G. W. Schofield, 1842 to 1845; P. P. Frink, 1845; Benjamin Shearer, 1858-60; E. N. Whitney, 1860-68; Benjamin Shearer, 1868-70; Mark Parks, 1870-73; P. S. Brewster, 1873-76; R. C. H. Catterall, 1876-79; and Jacob Gessner, the present pastor. There have been other ministers, but the records do not show their names.

LEHMAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Although the first settlers were Presbyterians, that denomination was the last one to organize a church. This society organized in February, 1862, with G. W. Oliver, elder; Z. S. Weeley, deacon; Matthew Brown and wife, Robert Norton and wife, Mrs. G. W. Oliver, Mrs. Z. S. Weeley, John Whiteside and J. B. Adams as the first members. The first minister was J. S. Ferguson, who preached for three years, and was followed by Charles E. Van Allen in 1868, Ashbel G. Harned in 1869, Charles K. Canfield in 1871, and W. B. Darrach in 1878, who still continues to officiate. The church has a membership of twenty-five.

MARCY TOWNSHIP.

IN quarter sessions of the court of Luzerne county, Monday, January 19th, 1880, it was decreed that the township of Marcy be formed from the townships of Old Forge, Ransom and Pittston, the boundaries to be according to a report of commissioners filed in December, 1879. The population was found by the census of 1880 to be 1,159.

The following officers were appointed to serve until the election in February, 1881, and until their successors should be qualified: Charles A. Price, town clerk; Gilbert Alexander, John Holgate, F. B. Dills, Evan J. Evans, Michael Callahan and James Gallagher, school directors; Robert Oliver, William G. Evans and John S. Marcy, auditors; Eben Foot and George T. Chester, supervisors of highways; John S. Marcy, constable; William Anderson, assessor; Gilbert Sullivan, judge of election; Patrick Filbin, majority inspector of elections; Joseph Curtis, minority inspector of elections.

June 26th, 1880, the court confirmed the report of commissioners dividing Marcy township into two election districts; all that portion formerly comprised in the townships of Ransom and Old Forge to be designated the north district, and all that portion formerly comprised in the township of Pittston the south district. Until otherwise ordered, the court fixed the polling place of the south district at No. 3 school-house, near Daniel Mosier's house. The court appointed the following election officers: Gilbert Alexander judge of election, Patrick Philbin majority inspector, and Joseph Curtis minority inspector for the south district; and J. S. Marcy judge of elections, Eben Foote majority inspector, J. B. Diel minority inspector for the north district.

The new township was named in honor of Zebulon Marcy, who emigrated from Connecticut in the spring of 1770 and located about three miles above Pittston borough, on the left side of the road leading up the valley. Choosing this spot for his residence, upon the warrior's path, his rude log hut soon became famous for convenience and for the genial hospitality of its host. Mr. Marcy became a man of local importance and was elected in January, 1772, the first constable of Pittston township.

When Conrad Weiser, a celebrated Indian interpreter, visited Wyoming in 1754, he found an Indian village called "Asserughney" on the banks of the Susquehanna between the mouth of the Lackawanna river and Campbell's Ledge, near the site of the depot of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. It was a small village, hunting and fishing being the main sources of support. The summit of Campbell's Ledge, towering above, afforded an uninterrupted lookout over the valley below, and was used by the Indians not only in watching over their wigwams nestled along the river, but as a place to kindle their beacon or signal fires. This castle or encampment was the upper one of the Delawares in the Wyoming valley. It was a point of importance because of its favorable location for trading purposes. The great war path from the inland lakes of New York to Wyoming and the south, and the trail down the Lackawanna from the Minisink homes on the Delaware, passed through it.

The far-famed Campbell's Ledge is situated on the west border of the township, where the Susquehanna seems to have broken through the mountain barrier, forming a wide gorge. The ledge was formerly called Dial Rock, from the fact of its presenting a nearly perpendicular face of considerable length, lying directly north and south, and being first illuminated when the sun reaches the meridian. The Indians and the white people of the upper end of the valley thus had a timepiece, more serviceable than many town clocks.

The name Campbell's Ledge is understood to have been given in honor of the author of "Gertrude of Wyoming." There is a legend, however, which seeks to otherwise account for the name. It is to the effect that a man named Campbell, being pursued by the Indians, took refuge in the ravines of this mountain, where are many living springs and where the thick foliage seems to afford a safe shelter. But the fierce red man, his old enemy, is on his track, and he is singled out as a subject for special torture. He knows his fate if taken, and tries every path that winds out into the deeper forest, but without success. He is hemmed in like the roe by a pack of relentless wolves. He does not hesitate, but springs forward to the verge of the overhanging rock. One glance behind shows him there is no escape. The yells of the savages pierce his very soul as they rush upon their prey. With a scream of defiance, he leaps from the ledge into the friendly arms of death.

METHODIST CHURCH OF MARCY.

The early meetings of the Methodists in what is now Marcy township were held in the little old log school house that stood where the present building stands, on the township line, near the brick church. The pioneer class was formed here as early as 1815, and we find among the early leaders the names of Rufus Miller, Charles Wright and Deodat Smith. Ebenezer Marcy and Jonathan Marcy were also among the original members.

The society continued its meetings in school-houses till about 1850, when the present church was built, a brick structure, 40 by 60 feet, costing about $2,000. It was commenced under the pastorate of Rev. Charles W. Giddings, and finished and dedicated in August, 1853. The site of the church and parsonage was purchased at a nominal sum from Ebenezer Marcy.

We are indebted to John D. Miller, Esq., who has been a member of this church 48 years, for the following list of preachers who have served this people since 1832: Revs. Marmaduke Pearce, Benjamin Ellis, William Rounds, William Reddy, Charles W. Giddings, Erastus Smith, John D. Safford, Perry G. White, Abel Barker, ——— Pilbean Joshua S. Lewis, Timothy D. Walker, Taylor D. Swartz, Isaac Austin, R. S. Rose, John La Bar, Joseph Madison, John C. Laycock, J. R. Wagner and N. J. Hawley, the present pastor.

The present membership is 100. Joseph Holland is class leader.

The church property is valued at $7,000.

A Sunday-school was organized in 1825, which is still in existence, with 140 pupils and an average attendance of 80. Carpenter Gates is the present superintendent.

The following contributed to the support of this work in the townships here represented: W. A. Baucher, William W. Cooper, J. A. Hart, W. S. Heller, Philip Weiss.

PHILIP ROBINSON, JR.

Philip Robinson, jr., was born at Lauterbrecken, in Bavaria, in 1841. He came to this country with his parents in 1854 and located in Scranton with his father, Philip Robinson, who, together with his sons, engaged in the business of brewing. The brewery was situated on Cedar street. In 1868 the firm was dissolved. Philip Robinson, jr., became the sole proprietor of the business, which was carried on in his name up to the time of his death, which occurred September 20th, 1879. Without taking a prominent part in party politics he was always a Democrat and was occasionally called upon to fill local offices, especially such as required clear business judgment and strong integrity, and he always justified the public trust. At the time of his death he was the Democratic candidate for county treasurer and was regarded as being by far the strongest man on the ticket. To his friends, to his family and those of the poor in his immediate vicinity, Mr. Robinson was endeared by his goodness of heart, his kindness and his generous liberality. He was charitable without display, generous without seeking publicity, and his business integrity was of that sterling order which believes in the honorable fulfillment of all obligations. He was a man of abrupt address and often made antagonisms by his manner with those who did not know him well; but the undercurrent of real kindness and benevolence that moved him to liberal charities and helpfulness held to him in strong bonds of friendship all who knew him well. He was a member of Schiller masonic lodge and also of the Turnverein and Liederkranz societies.

In 1862 he married Miss Mina Schimpff, of Scranton, Pa. Children were born to them as follows: Philip, August 24th, 1864; Edmund, March 17th, 1868; Robert, December 18th, 1869; Minnie, July 6th, 1873; Otto, June 28th, 1875; Lena, August 15th, 1878.

C. H. Fisher

DR. C. H. FISHER.

Dr. Charles H. Fisher was born at Owego, Tioga county, N. Y., June 12th, 1837. He is of German and English extraction, tracing his ancestry on his mother's side back to the landing of the "Mayflower," while his great-grandfather, Leonard Fisher, emigrated from Germany and was one of the early settlers of New York city.

Leonard Fisher was a dentist and was the first to practice that profession in New York city, if not in the New World. He served with distinction as a lieutenant during the Revolution and died at New York at an advanced age, leaving a large family of children. Dr. C. H. Fisher's grandfather, Brigadier General George Fisher, was one of the earliest pioneers of Tioga county, N. Y., and his father, Doctor George L. Fisher, was a dentist and for nearly twenty years practiced in Scranton.

Doctor Fisher received a thorough academic course at the Owego Academy and was prepared to enter the sophomore class in college when the Rebellion broke out. He at once abandoned the idea of taking a collegiate course, and with a view of entering the medical department of the army he placed himself under the private tuition of Professor H. N. Eastman, of Geneva Medical College, and took his first course of lectures at that institution in the fall and winter of 1862 and 1863. At the close of the course he proceeded to Washington, D. C., and having passed an examination before the U. S. medical board was appointed medical cadet U. S. A., and assigned to duty at General Field Hospital No. 1, Murfreesboro, Tenn. He served under Rosecrans during the campaign which terminated with the battle of Chickamauga, and was then assigned to duty at General Hospital No. 1, Nashville, Tenn. While on duty at this hospital he attended his second course of lectures and graduated at the University of Nashville Medical College, in the spring of 1864. His term of service as medical cadet having expired, he was appointed acting assistant surgeon U. S. A., in which capacity he served at Hospital No. 1 and Cumberland Hospital until August, 1865. Then, having passed a second examination before the U. S. A. examining board at Nashville, he was promoted to a full surgeoncy and assigned to duty as surgeon of the 96th regiment U. S. C. T., Department of the Gulf. He was honorably mustered out of the service with his regiment at New Orleans, January 28th, 1866. Being tendered a position as surgeon in the Freedmen's Bureau he accepted, and was assigned to duty as surgeon in charge of Freedmen's Hospital, at Shreveport, La. He resigned this position in the fall of 1866, and returning north attended a third course of lectures at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York. Having determined to devote his attention principally to diseases of the eye and ear, he took a private course under Professor Noyes, at the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, and in the spring of 1867 hung out his shingle in the city of Scranton. He has been in continuous practice since that time and has won a wide and deserving reputation as an oculist and aurist. In 1878 he founded the Scranton Eye and Ear Infirmary, associating with himself Doctor R. A. Squire and Doctor B. H. Throop as consulting surgeons. This institution supplies a long-felt want in the Lackawanna coal regions, and although not strictly eleemosynary does a large amount of charity business. Doctor Fisher was for a number of years a member of the Luzerne County Medical Society and is a charter member of the Lackawanna County Medical Society. He took an active part in the organization of the Lackawanna Hospital, at Scranton, and for several years was connected with its medical staff. When the new county of Lackawanna was erected Doctor Fisher was appointed county physician, and he is now serving his second term in that capacity. He is also post surgeon of Lieutenant Ezra S. Griffin Post G. A. R. Doctor Fisher married Miss Mary J. Miner, of Hudson, N. Y., May 12th, 1869. Their children are: Jessie May, aged 10; Maud, aged 8; and Mary A., aged 4.

JONATHAN APGAR AND FAMILY.

Jonathan Apgar was born in Cokesburg, Hunterdon county, N. J., November 29th, 1811. He was the fifth in a family of ten children of William Apgar—seven sons and three daughters. Mr. Apgar received a good common school education in his native town. By trade he was a carpenter. December 20th, 1834, he married Cornelia Wiggins, of Mount Hope, Morris county, N. J. She was born at Mount Hope, February 15th, 1805. After marriage he settled in Flanders, Morris county, N. J., where besides working at his trade he carried on a farm, as he did subsequently at Chester, Morris county.

In April, 1853, having sold his property in New Jersey, he removed to Dunmore, and purchased and settled on the place now occupied by his daughter, Mrs. Nye. He continued to work at his trade and upon his farm in Dunmore up to the time of his death, which occurred December 6th, 1872. His wife survived him seven years, dying February 21st, 1879. She was a member of the Dunmore Presbyterian Church, and of the Rockaway Presbyterian Church in Morris county, N. J.

Their children were as follows :

Melissa, born September 25th, 1835; married to Philip Gulick March 3d, 1858; living at Clinton, Hunterdon county, N. J.

Robert D., born July 13th, 1838; died October 31st, 1842.

William W., born September 11th, 1840; died August 31st, 1841.

Lettie C., born December 27th, 1843; died September 24th, 1844.

Cornelia W., born January 29th, 1845; married to George Couch January 2nd, 1866; living at Phillipsburgh, N. J.

Susan A., born January 5th, 1849; married October 5th, 1875, to Irvin Nye. The latter was born at Laceyville, Wyoming county, Pa., March 22nd, 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Nye own and live at the homestead in Dunmore. They have two children—Harry Apgar, born October 4th, 1876, and George C., born April 27th, 1878.

NESCOPECK TOWNSHIP.

NESCOPECK township, named from Nescopeck creek, was set off from Newport in 1792 and then comprised also Hollenback and Conyngham. Nescopeck creek it is said takes its name from its dark color, caused by coal veins near its source; the name signifying "deep black waters" in the Indian tongue. The population of the township was 968 in 1870 and 1,205 in 1880.

The first settler, George Walker, located near the site of the grist-mill of Benjamin Evans, as early as 1786. He made improvements here, and attempted to build a mill, but was washed out by the great freshet of October, 1786, known as the "pumpkin flood." A family settled on the farm now owned by Michael Raber. They were killed by the Indians, and it was claimed that the savages were incited to the deed by Walker, who was jealous of neighbors. The feeling against him among the people of adjoining townships was so strong that he thought it safer to go west.

A road was laid out from Nescopeck falls to the Lehigh in 1787, which followed very nearly the course of the present turnpike. It was opened by authority of the commonwealth, and Evan Owens, proprietor of Berwick, was appointed to superintend its construction. The road was completed in 1789. The turnpike was chartered about 1803.

The first land grant was of that part of the Campania tract lying west of Big Wapwallopen creek, which was surveyed to Daniel Grant in 1769, and patented by George Campbell in 1773. The next was of the land on which the Evans mill stands, to Jacob Bittenbender, in 1808. Several tracts had been taken up previous to this, but the patents were not taken out.

In 1791 Jacob Smithers, Jacob Shover, Martin Aton and Jacob Seyberling settled along the banks of the Nescopeck creek. In 1807 Henry Dewespecht, Michael Harrier, Conrad Bloos, Jacob Bittenbender, jr., William Moore, Thomas Cole, Conrad Reiderich, John Henry, Caspar Henry, Michael Whitenecht, Michael Nauss, Conrad Bingheimer, Peter Clingeman, Bernard Snyder, John Rooth, George Bittenbender, George Keens, John Buss, — Daly, — Bassinger, and a surveyor by the name of Chesney had settled in Nescopeck. They were nearly all from Northampton county. From this time settlers came in rapidly. The Fortners, Sloyers and Smiths came about 1828, and the families of Evans and Williams soon after. Jonas Buss, who settled here in 1807, is now living at Mifflin, Columbia county, at the age of eighty-nine. He still retains his memory of early events in a remarkable degree, and we are indebted to him for many facts concerning the early history of the township.

William Rittenhouse, who owned large tracts of land in this and adjoining towns, built a small log grist-mill on Nescopeck creek about 1795, as an inducement for settlers to purchase his lands. He sold to Jacob Rittenhouse in 1808. Nathan Beach built a small log mill on Wapwallopen creek about 1795, near the place called "Powder Hole." There were three mills on this site, and all burned by accident. A still was connected with the second one. Samuel Mifflin built a saw-mill near the mouth of the Nescopeck creek in 1795. Logs floating down the river were caught and sawed at this mill. In 1824 Henry Bowman built a large three-story grist-mill, using the same dam and water privilege. He sold this to Daniel Evans in 1838, who added a plaster mill. The mill is still the property of the heirs of Daniel Evans. John McMutria built a grist-mill above the Evans mill about 1853. He sold to J. Johnson in 1860.

A saw-mill was built by H. Haschner about 1867. A wool-carding and fulling mill was built by John T. Davis, on a branch of Nescopeck creek in 1840. J. Stephenson bought it in 1860, and still operates it, employing four persons, and making yearly $3,000 worth of satinnet and cloth, flannel and yarn.

E. and J. Leidy built a forge on Nescopeck creek in 1830, containing two hammers and three fires. They made bar iron and blooms, from ore dug in Columbia county and from pig metal. Hon. Simon Cameron once had an interest in this forge. It finally passed into the hands of S. F. Headly, who enlarged the works and operated them successfully several years. The forge has been idle since 1854.

Theodore and George Naugle built a tannery on Nescopeck creek about 1858, which was operated until 1870. Their present saw-mill was built in 1851.

Previous to 1796 the people traded at Sunbury, going and returning in canoes. At this time Samuel Mifflin started a small store near the bank of the river, on the site of the village of Nescopeck. William Baird had charge as agent, and lived in the same building, which was the first frame building in the township. The first blacksmith shop was on the bank of the river near the present residence of William Harter, and was owned by George Rough. The first hotel was kept by one Steiner, in a small log house at the ferry. John Myers built the first frame hotel in 1807. Another was built by John Rothermel in 1815. His son, the painter of the celebrated picture "The Battle of Gettysburg," was born here. In 1817 Christian Kunkle built the stone house now owned by the Cooper heirs, in Nescopeck village, burning the brick for the chimneys, and for a three-story building in Berwick, on the ground. Michael Raber built the first brick dwelling and burned the brick for all the rest.

The bridge across the Susquehanna was built in 1816, at a cost of $36,000. A flood swept the bridge away in 1836, and the following year it was rebuilt by Millard & Ephraim Edson, for $27,500. It is 1,250 feet long.

The first school was taught by William Coder, about 1810, near the residence of Martin Frey. The house was built by gatherings of the men of the neighborhood. Teachers were hired by the quarter, or term of three months. Each man paid according to the number of children sent to school by him. The first school on the river was taught by Thomas Miller, a tailor, in 1828. The first building for a free school was built in 1838, by Joseph Schlusser, on the site of the brick school-house in Nescopeck village. A new, two-story, graded school building has just been completed near Nescopeck village. In 1878 there were five schools taught in the township, with an average attendance of 216 pupils, and a total expenditure of $2,130.42 for educational matters.

John Briggs, jr., appointed in 1811, was the first postmaster in Nescopeck. Mails were carried from Berwick to Easton, on horseback, by one Smith. There are now two post-offices, one at Nescopeck, Milton Williams postmaster; and the other at Briggsville, on the turnpike, A. G. Briggs postmaster. Mails are now carried from Berwick to Conyngham and from Nescopeck to Slocum twice a week.

NESCOPECK VILLAGE.

The village of Nescopeck was laid out at an early day by Isaiah Chapman, who had a large frame store-house on the river bank. The village contains nearly a hundred dwellings. Samuel Williams keeps the only hotel. There is one store, kept by J. Williams & Son. A. Wantz has a blacksmith shop, and a small pottery for the manufacture of flower pots was started by August Thiel in 1879. Nearly all the men are employed during the day in the shops at Berwick.

The Nescopeck Mutual Fire Insurance Company, organized in August, 1857, has its office here. The officers are: Michael Raber, president; Benjamin Evans, secretary.

THE REFORMED CHURCH.

The Reformed congregation in Nescopeck took its rise in 1811. On September 3d of that year the corner stone of the first church edifice was laid by Rev. Jacob Dieffenbach, from Berks county. There was no regular Reformed pastor. This church was completed in 1814. Rev. Thomas Pomp, a Reformed minister of Easton, preached the consecratory sermon. In 1815 Rev. Jacob Dieffenbach, having located at Bloomsburg, Columbia county, became pastor of this congregation, and he served it for a number of years. Afterward Rev. John Nicholas Zeizer became pastor, succeeded by Rev. Isaac Shellhammer, and he by Rev. Horace Daniel. From the fall of 1857 Rev. Henry Hoffman was pastor nine years, and Rev. A. R. Hottenstein ten years from 1866. In the fall of 1876 Rev. Tilghman Derr, the present pastor, was called. There were intervals of several years when the congregation had no Reformed pastor. In 1868 this congregation, in union with the Lutherans, built the present commodious brick church. There are sixty communicant members. The elders are Michael Raber and Thomas Bower; deacons, Philip Fenstermacher and Milton Smith.

SUPERVISORS AND JUSTICES.

The first township officers were elected in 1806, being Michael Weiss and Martin Hirst, supervisors; Ambrose

Tille, clerk; and John Henry, auditor. Since 1806 the following persons have held the office of supervisor:

William Moore, 1807; Michael Weiss, 1807, 1810, 1817, 1824; Thomas Kocher, 1808; Abram Shertz, 1808, 1828; Jacob Hess, 1809, 1812, 1826; Jacob Bittenbender, 1809, 1815, 1816, 1823, 1826, 1831; Jacob Smithers, 1810; Philip Fenstermacher, 1811, 1815; John Bittenbender, 1811, 1817; John Buss, 1812; Peter Rockel, 1813, 1836; George Henry, 1813; Philip Radler, 1814; Conrad Line, 1816; Henry Whitebread, 1818; Martin Harter, 1818, 1830, 1842, 1843; Jacob Weiss, 1819; George Rough, 1819; William Hess, 1820; Jonas Buss, 1820; Philip Meixell, 1821, 1831; John Henry, 1821, 1838; Jeremiah Hess, 1822; Peter Good, 1822, 1857; Peter Mowery, 1823; Daniel Rough, 1823; Christian Stout, 1824; William Henry, 1824, 1876; James Dodson, 1827; John Boughman, 1827; John Cool, 1828; John Briggs, 1829; John Baugher, 1829; John Whitebread, 1830; George Fenstermacher, 1832; Jacob Hart, 1833, 1845; Daniel Wall, 1833; Benjamin Smith, 1834; Abraham Keen, 1834; John M. Whitebread, 1879.

Ambrose Tille held the office of town clerk for the years 1806 and 1807, since which time there has been none. Justices have been designated as follows:

Jacob Bittenbender, 1800; George Drum, 1810; William Baird, 1811; John Buss, 1813; Valentine Senvell, 1814; Daniel Ritter, 1817; Abram Shirtz, 1818; George Drum, jr., 1824; Jonas Buss, 1826, 1844; Christian Kunkle, 1828; Moses S. Brudage, 1832; Henry Yost, 1832; John Briggs, 1834; John Fenstermacher, 1840; Benjamin Evans, 1850, 1855, 1860, 1865, 1870, 1875; Joseph Hampton, 1851, 1856; A. G. Briggs, 1861, 1866.

NEWPORT TOWNSHIP.

THE township of Newport, which formerly comprised Newport, Slocum, Dorrance, Hollenback, Conyngham and Nescopeck, was one of those laid out by the Susquehanna Company.

It is now reduced to an area of nineteen square miles, and has a population of 1,531. All the farms are owned by coal companies, and are either worked by men in the employ of the companies or by tenants on leases for one year. The short lease holds out no inducement to the tenant to improve the land, and consequently the farms are in an impoverished state.

SETTLEMENT AND EARLY CORPORATE ACTION.

The first settler in the township was Major Prince Alden, who settled on Newport creek in 1772. He was followed by his sons, Mason F. and John, and a Mr. Chapman, and they by other settlers, as the following copy of the minutes of a township meeting will show. The result of the investigation ordered, which is appended in tabular form, was arrived at June 13th, 1877.

"NEWPORT TOWNSHIP.—At a meeting legally warned and held at the house of Mr. Prince Alden, on Saturday, June 9th, 1787, made choice of Mr. Prince Alden moderator, and Mason F. Alden clerk.

"1st. Came to the following resolutions, viz: Whereas, the survey of this town was utterly lost at the destruction of this settlement, it is therefore resolved that a committee of three persons be appointed to carefully inspect into and ascertain the proprietors and actual settlers of the town of Newport at or before the decree of Trenton; and also to erect the pounds, which were burnt down since the town was allotted out, and also to find out the numbers of the lots.

"2d. Voted, that Mr. Prince Alden, Masoo F. Alden and Captain John P. Schott be appointed for the purpose aforesaid, as a committee; and also to allot out the third division, which will comprehend the whole of 300 acres to each proprietor of said town, in one or more lots, as they shall think most convenient.

"3d. Voted, that the proprietors will pay each committee man one dollar per day when on duty, and for the purpose a tax to be laid on each right to defray the expense."

The last seven are noted as being non-resident owners. The costs of the survey, amounting to £16 19s. 6½d., were divided among the owners of rights at the rate of 7s. 10½d. to each right. It was voted that this should be paid in produce, at the market price, to be delivered at the house of John P. Schott, in Wilkes-Barre, or at the house of Mason F. Alden, in Newport, on or before the first day of November, 1787.

July 7th, 1787, Prince Alden and Captain John P. Schott were appointed agents of the town, to lay out the lands, and to accompany the surveyors. Shubart Bidlack and Ichabod Shaw were appointed chain-bearers, and Elisha Bennet ax-man, to mark the lines. It was voted to pay each agent 10s. and each chain-bearer or ax-man 5s. per day, to be paid in produce, to be delivered at such place as the agents might direct.

September 15th, 1790, William Jackson, Isaac Bennet and Silas Smith were appointed a committee to take care of the public lands, and in case of any damage being done to summon the proprietors to a meeting, that steps might be taken to prosecute the offenders. John Hagerman was appointed to revise the records of Newport township. It was voted that the proprietors of Newport should thereafter in voting be each entitled to as many votes as the number of "rights" they owned or had charge of.

In 1792 William Jackson, John Fairchild, Mason F. Alden, M. Smith, Daniel McMullen and Abram Smith were appointed a committee to lay out roads. Christopher Hurlbut did the work.

August 23d, 1794, it was voted to sell part of the public lands to defray the expenses of the land trials with the Pennsylvania claimants. Isaac Bennet, Sidney Drake, John Fairchild, Jonathan Smith and William Jackson were appointed a committee to do any township business they might think necessary, and were empowered to lease public lands for a term of nine hundred years. October 4th, 1794, the committee, by virtue of the authority granted them, leased lot No. 18, 2nd tier, 1st division, to Elias Decker, for nine hundred years, at a yearly rental of one pepper corn per year, if demanded, to be paid into the town treasury. Also to Jacob Crater lot No. 49, 3d division, for the same time and at the same rate. November 28th, 1791, a bill of Putnam Catlin for expenses of land trials, amounting to £25 17s. 3d. was allowed. March 15th, 1800, the committee leased to John Alden lot No. 25, 3d division, for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, for $43, to be paid before the expiration of the lease, and $2.58 per year, to be paid to the town treasurer; to Henry Schoonover lot No. 1, 3d division, for the same time at $82; to Abram Setzer lot No. 13, 2d division, for $61; to Andrew McClure lots Nos. 26 and 43, 2nd division, for the same time, at $180 and a yearly sum of $10.80.

In all these leases the lessee was bound to pay all taxes on the lands, and the lessor agrees to defend against all parties claiming under the Susquehanna Company.

February 25th, 1805, at a town meeting the following persons bound themselves, their heirs and assigns, to abide by the lines and surveys as established by William Montgomery, surveyor to the committee under the confirming act:

The early settlers of this township, were engaged in the Indian and Pennamite wars. The names of Captain Schott, Major Prince Alden, and others, will often be met with in the history of the early troubles of the country. The inhabitants of Newport had to depend entirely upon the grist-mill of Mr. Chapman, on Nanticoke creek, for the grinding of their grain. This mill was threatened by the Indians in 1780, and was saved by a lieutenant, a sergeant and nine privates. After this mill had become useless William Jackson built one on Newport creek. This was the last grist-mill in the township. John Schleppey (since spelled Slippey) built a saw-mill about a mile west of Wanamie, which he afterward changed into a foundry and cast ploughs as early as 1820. There are now no mills of any kind in the township. In 1778 Mason F. and John Alden erected a small forge on Nanticoke creek near the mill of Mr. Chapman. It contained a single fire and one hammer. The ore of Newport produced thirty-three per cent. of metal; it was manufactured into bar iron and afforded the only supply for the smiths of that day. It is declared to have been equal to the best Center county iron. In 1828 Colonel Lee sold iron from this forge at $120 per ton of 2,000 pounds.

The first store was kept by Jacob Rambach, on the road leading from Wanamie to Nanticoke. Until lately Newporters had to trade at Wilkes-Barre. The first post-office was at Newport Centre, and mails were carried through the township by coaches from Wilkes-Barre to Conyngnam. This office has long been abandoned. The first stone-house was built by Michael Gruver, who came into the township from Northumberland county in 1812. It is now occupied by D. P. Keency. Daniel Rambach built the first brick house. The first hotel was kept by Adam Labach, near where the Lines hotel now is. The first blacksmith was George Frantz. Dr. William Thompson, who lived near the line of Hanover, was the only physician who ever lived in the township. The first road was the State road from Wilkes-Barre to Conyngnam, in Sugarloaf township.

In September, 1796, Jonathan Smith deeded to the town half an acre off the east side of his and Sidney Drake's lots for burial purposes. This, the only cemetery in the township, holds the remains of many of the early settlers. The graves are unmarked. Jonathan Coe was the first man buried here. Previous to the establishment of the cemetery the dead were buried on a knoll near the Hanover line, which is now plowed over and the mounds effaced.

SCHOOLS.

As early as 1803 there was a school-house on the Middle road opposite the cemetery. There is no record of any of the early teachers, and no one now living can remember them. January 3d, 1806, it was voted that the interest of the public monies for the three years past be appropriated to the benefit of the schools. Six trustees were appointed to divide the township into three school districts. The committee reported, January 6th, 1806, that the north division had 51 children; the south division 72, and the west division 34. Schools were then established in each division. There are now six schools in the township, with an average attendance of 206 pupils. The total expenditure of the township for educational matters during 1878 was $2,888.43. The township provides all pupils with books, thus insuring a uniform series.

RELIGIOUS ENTERPRISES.

March 1st, 1810, it was voted that the interest of the public monies be appropriated to build a meeting-house. This, however, was not done until 1826, when, by the united efforts of the Reformed and Lutheran congregations, a wooden church edifice was erected. This was used by both societies several years; but the lands were bought up by the coal companies, the old families moved away, and neither denomination now has an organization.

A church was built early in this century for the Reformed and Lutheran congregations. The pastors at Hanover were pastors at Newport. The first church stood on the site of the present Newport graveyard. The present building is used by the Methodists, who have a class here. The minister is Rev. William Davis, who resides at Hanover.

There is a society of Welsh Baptists at Wanamie, who have their own minister and hold meetings in the school-house.

MINING INTERESTS.

The present interests of the people are entirely connected with the operations of the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, at their mines at Wanamie. In 1868-69 Hendrick B. Wright, who owned a large share of the coal lands in Newport, built a branch of the Lehigh & Susquehanna railroad to Wanamie and began operations there. He soon sold to the present owners, who built two large breakers, now known as Wanamie Nos. 1 and 2, or as Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Nos. 18 and 19.

Breaker No. 1 has a daily capacity of 1,500 tons, and No. 2, 7,000 tons. The company owns 125 tenant houses at this place, and employs about 400 men and boys. The officers of the company at Wanamie are: W. T. Leas, superintendent; James M. Norris, accountant; R. O. Leas, outside foreman; Morgan R. Morgans, inside foreman.

WANAMIE.

Wanamie is almost entirely a village of tenement houses. The mines and offices of the Wanamie colliery are here. The principal store is that of H. H. Ashley & Co.; George P. Lindsey superintendent, A. W. George bookkeeper, David J. Jenkins and J. E. Hassler clerks. The only other store is that of John A. Gruver. W. C. Gruver keeps the only hotel in Wanamie. C. S. Fargo has charge of the railroad affairs at this place.

Justices.—Appointed: Christian Stout, 1812; Francis McShane, 1813; Isaac Hartzell, 1814; Jacob Rambach, 1819; Samuel Jameson, 1822; Bateman Downing, 1823; Thomas Williams, 1831; John Vandermark, 1838; John Forsman, 1839. Elected: John Vandermark, 1840, 1845, 1858; Jacob Rambach, 1840; David Thompson, 1845; Philip Myers, 1847, 1852; William Belles, 1850; William A. Schleppey, 1855; William Belles 2nd, 1856; Simon P. Vandermark, 1860, 1865, 1870; Andrew J. Smith, 1873; E. N. Adams, 1874; William Morgan, 1878.

LODGE HISTORIES.

Wanamie Lodge, No. 867, I. O. O. F. was instituted March 5th, 1874, with the following charter members: Past grand, William Barnes; J. U. Oplinger, John Semmer, Joseph Burley, George Burley, John W. James, Thomas Parker, William Morgan, John Elliott, Gomer Jones, Evan T. Jones, S. P. George, C. S. Fargo, John W. Crane, E. N. Adams, J. P. Fine, S. Bradley, A. Lape and George Seager.

The first officers were: George Burley, N. G.; John Elliott, V. G.; William Morgan, secretary; Joseph Burley, A. S.; John Semmer, treasurer. The following persons have presided in this lodge: Joseph Burley, Thomas Parker, John D. Williams, Daniel J. Lewis, C. S. Fargo, W. L. Jones, S. H. Oplinger and Dr. William Barnes.

The present officers are: William L. Jones, N. G.; Daniel Lloyd, V. G.; C. S. Fargo, secretary; J. P. Fine, A. S.; J. M. Norris, treasurer. Meetings are held each Saturday night at Wanamie.

Golden Chain Lodge, No. 332, K. of P. was instituted November 29th, 1871. The charter members were William S. Williams, David Edwards, Abenego Reese, John G. Phillips, Evan J. Jones, Thomas J. Davis, William F. Giles, Thomas A. Stevens, John F. Good, Thomas Halfpenny, Reese Thomas, William Jenkins, David Williams, William C. Dunn, G. Matthews, Thomas York, Evan P. Evans and William Reese. The first officers were: T. J. Edwards, W. C.; A. Reese, V. C.; Thomas Halfpenny, V. P.; Thomas York, W. G.; William Davis, W. B.

The past chancellors of this lodge are T. J. Edwards, A. Reese, Thomas Halfpenny, George York, John York, Thomas York, C. S. Fargo, William Morgan, J. W. Crowe and John Folo.

The present officers are: Evan B. Jones, C. C.; Henry M. Davis, V. C.; William Morgan, K. of R.; C. S. Fargo, M. of E. Lodge meets at Wanamie.

Sons of Temperance.—A division of this order was established at Wanamie March 21st, 1879, with James Thomson, Dr. John Gendell, Samuel Salmon, George L. Morgan, James A. Young, Addie Fairchild, Jane Morgan, Elizabeth Gendell and Addie Montgomery as charter members. The officers were: William Morgan, W. P.; E. N. Adams, R. C.; Samuel Salmon, F. S.; Mrs. E. N. Adams, I. G., and James A. Youngs, O. G. The division meets at the M. E. church.

A Workingman's Association was organized in April, 1869, with John L. Davis president, James Burns vice-president, Richard Richards secretary. After passing through various vicissitudes, and playing an important part in the strifes between the men and the company, the association was disbanded in 1872.

PITTSTON TOWNSHIP.

THIS is one of the original Connecticut townships which retained its name at the time of the second division, in 1790. It was first called Pittston in honor of Sir William Pitt.

It is situated on the left bank of the Susquehanna, immediately below the mouth of the Lackawanna, and contains the remaining thirty-six square miles of old Pittston, one of the five townships which the Susquehanna Land Company, in 1768, resolved to survey in the heart of Wyoming valley. The flood of March, 1784, swept away the surveyor's landmarks, and on the 17th of that month an act was passed to provide for ascertaining and confirming to certain persons, called Connecticut settlers, the title gained prior to the decree of Trenton. The lands in Pittston township certified to be in constructive possession of Connecticut settlers became certified Pittston. In 1790 John Phillips, David Brown, J. Blanchard, Caleb Bates, John Davidson and J. Rosin appear as a board with authority to lay out public highways in the township.

The pioneers of Pittston were principally Connecticut Yankees, with a small complement of New Jersey people, some of whom came here by way of the older settlements farther down the valley. The settlements on this side of the river must date from as early as 1770, for in 1772 John Jenkins, Isaac Tripp, Jonathan Dean and others established a ferry across the river to connect this with the settlement at Wyoming and Exeter; and the following year James Brown, Lemuel Harding and Caleb Bates were constituted directors of the township, with authority to assess and collect taxes.

A list of the people who were assessed in 1796 in what was then Pittston preserves the names of a large part of the settlers prior to that date. The list, as copied by Mr. Pearce in his Annals of Luzerne, is appended:

Searle, Miner Searle, James Stephens, Elijah Silsby, Elijah Silsby, Jr., Comfort Shaw, Jonathan Stark, James Thompson, Isaac Wilson, John Warden, Crandall Wilcox, Thomas Wright.

The settlers on this side of the river in 1778 bore their part in the common defence, for we find records and traditions of at least two forts or stockades here, one near Patterson's lumber-yards and the other not far from the stone grist-mill at the ferry bridge.

Dr. Nathaniel Giddings was the first physician in the settlement. He came from Connecticut in 1787, and practiced medicine here until his death, in 1851. He set one of the first orchards in the township on his farm, near the Ravine shaft. About the time he came Z. Knapp, grandfather of Dr. A. Knapp, located in that vicinity. William Searle came from Connecticut before the massacre, and occupied a farm near those just mentioned. Rodger Searle's first house stood where the Ravine shaft is, but in 1789 he moved to Pleasant Valley. David Brown, mentioned as assessed in 1796, had settled the D. D. Mosier place as early as 1790. Some of the trees he set for an orchard on this farm are still standing, and mark the spot where he lived. His son, Richard Brown, settled Thomas Benedict's farm. Samuel Miller's farm was in this immediate vicinity. His date is 1789. Elijah Silsbee was here in 1778. His residence was on the north side of Parsonage street, opposite James L. Giddings. William Slocum lived where Edward Morgan now does, and the Benedict family lived near Mr. Morgan's stone quarry. One of the first clearings in what is now the lower part of Pittston borough was made where the depot and the Farnham House now are. One of the early orchards was here. Another was set by Mr. Benedict near where the Pittston knitting-mill stands, and Rodger Searle set another at the same time on his place.

For sixty years after the settlements were begun in Pittston the Yankee element predominated in the population of the township, but with the discovery of coal began the great influx of the various European nationalities that make up the heterogeneous population as it is found to-day.

The Scotch came in large numbers in 1850-55, although many of the most experienced miners came to America before coming to Pittston, attracted by the gold mining of California.

The inroad of the Welsh was more gradual, as they had previously come to the older mines at Carbondale, and came down the valley as the coal fields were developed.

The English element, less numerous than the others, came here at various times with the growth of the place. Old Erin and Germany are represented here by prosperous and substantial people.

The population of the township is 2,666.

MINING IN PITSTON BOROUGH AND TOWNSHIP.

The growth of Pittston and the boroughs surrounding it are as purely the result of the discovery of coal here as is the prosperity of any place in the anthracite region. Before the opening of the canal in 1832, Calvin Stockbridge and Col. James W. Johnson had sent considerable quantities of coal down the river to tide water in "arks" as they were called. These arks were roughly built boats eighteen feet wide and eighty or ninety feet long, and would carry eighty tons. They were usually built and loaded on the shore during low water and "run" during the freshets, after the manner of rafting.

Col. Johnson sold his works to William R. Griffith and associates, who also purchased the franchises of the Washington Railroad Company and, by a consolidation of charters, formed the Pennsylvania Coal Company, a corporation which operates a large proportion of all the collieries in this vicinity.

The Erie railroad owns, under the name of the Hillside Coal and Iron Company, an extensive colliery at Pleasant Valley.

The Ontario colliery, at Pleasant Valley, consisting of two tunnels, one slope and a shaft, is owned by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company.

The Pittston Coal Company was organized in 1875 by parties who had bought the property of the old Pittston and Elmira Company. They operate the Seneca slope, the Ravine shaft and the twins.

The Columbia mine, at the head of the canal, opened in 1862, is worked by Grove Bros., Danville, Pa. The Phœnix Coal Company is operating in this vicinity.

J. McFarlane & Co. sunk the Eagle shaft at Tompkins colliery in 1850. Alvah Tompkins, the present owner, succeeded them in 1855.

The Butler Coal Company is operating the old Butler mines, which were opened in 1835 by John L. & Lord Butler. Judge Mallory, of Philadelphia, a brother-in-law of the Butlers, became a partner, and their canal shipping port at Pittston thus came to be called Port Mallory—a name also applied to the old hotel at that point. The company has about one hundred and fifty acres, with one shaft and one breaker. About twenty acres of their old workings are on fire, and the pillars and abandoned coal are burning. No value is being destroyed, although a good deal has been written of the burning mine. They are working the Marcy vein immediately under the fire.

HUGHESTOWN BOROUGH.

THIS new borough was formed from the part of Pittston township situated between Pleasant Valley on the east and Pittston borough on the west. It was chartered on the 19th of April, 1879, and the same month the first borough election was held.

J. J. Schmaltz was elected burgess; Cuthbert Snowdon, Gotlieb Schmaltz, John B. Clarke, Charles Mathewson, George Gill and John W. Williams, councilmen; T. J. Snowdon, clerk; Aaron Oliver, chief of police; Daniel S. Mosier, treasurer, and John B. Mosier, justice.

The principal business of the borough is that carried on in connection with the Pennsylvania Coal Company's extensive collieries located here. The population is 1,200.

PITTSTON BOROUGH.

On the 5th of January, 1853, the grand jury of Luzerne county was petitioned by a majority of the freeholders to incorporate a portion of Pittston township as a borough. The judgment of the grand jury was favorable to the petitioners, and April 11th, 1853, the court confirmed the judgment of the grand jury and the borough was organized, and the following year the boundaries were extended.

Although several of the earliest settlements of the township were within the present borough lines, yet in 1828 there were but fourteen heads of families living within the present limits of the borough. These were John Alment, Calvin T. Richardson, Calvin Stockbridge, John Stewart, who kept a hotel, Nathaniel Giddings, John Benedict, Jacob Lance, who came from New Jersey in 1820, Samuel Miller, Solomon Brown, a blacksmith, Adam Belcher, Amos Fell, Ishmael Bennett, a blacksmith, and Frank Belcher.

When the borough was laid out there was a deep ravine crossing Main street, near the present office of the Pennsylvania Coal Company. This was bridged by a tressle forty or fifty feet high, and since then, after at least one stage load of passengers had been precipitated through it, the whole ravine has been graded in, and a well paved street and substantial buildings cover the spot. When the Pittston and Wilkes-Barre plank road was built, in 1851, a large tressle work was put in near Patterson's lumber yard, to straighten the street by crossing the ravine. Grading here too has since taken the place of the tressle. Parsonage street, by the way of Hughestown, was the old original Scranton road. The formation of the municipal government was completed on the 30th of April, 1853, by the election of John Hosie, burgess; J. V. L. Dewitt, H. P. Messenger, George Daman, Theodore Strong and James McFarlane, councilmen; John Kelchner, constable; D. P. Richards, John Sax and Ralph D. Laco, assessors; Smith Sutherland, Valentine Rowe, overseers of poor; Alvah Tompkins, Nathaniel Giddings, James M. Brown, Levi Barnes, J. A. Hann, John Love, school directors; Jesse Williams, C. R. Gorman, H. S. Phillips, auditors; Nathaniel Giddings, Joseph Knapp, Michael Reap, inspectors of election.

The following is as complete a list of burgesses as the imperfect condition of the borough records can furnish: E. B. Evans, 1854; William Furgeson, 1855; Charles R. Gorman, 1856, 1857; J. B. Fisher, Abram Price; M. Reap, 1861-65; James Brown; P. Sheridan, 1867; John B. Smith, 1868; James Walsh, 1869; Andrew Law, 1870; J. P. Schooley, 1871; James L. McMillan, 1872; James

The population of the borough in 1880 was 7,472 against 6,760 in 1870.

HOTELS.

The first attempt at tavern keeping at Pittston was made about 1799, by Colonel Waterman Baldwin, on the lower side of Main street, above the Seneca store. Under the huge antlers that surmounted the bar, Miner Searle, Jacob Bedford, John Sax and Calvin T. Richardson have since stood and ministered to the demands of thirsty travelers. The Baltimore House was the next. It stood on the east side of Main street, near House's saloon. Beginning with 1805 the landlords of old times were Peter Decker, Eleazer Cary, Asaph Pratt and William Hart. The Bull's Head was built by John Benedict, sen., near Edward Morgan's stone quarry. Thomas Benedict's father kept it several years, and finally it was occupied by John C. Doty as a dwelling. The Stockbridge Hotel was built in 1830 by Calvin Stockbridge, a contractor on the canal. The Butler Coal Company became the owners, and Judge Garret Mallory, a partner in the company, named the hotel Port Mallory. Subsequently a large swan was displayed as the sign, and it came to be known as the Swan Hotel. George Lazarus kept it until 1848, when he built the Eagle Hotel, now kept by Julius Scott. James D. Fonsman next kept the Swan, and subsequently Mrs. Ehret has kept it as the Farmers' Hotel. Mr. Fonsman in 1849 built the Butler House, now kept by Robert Green. The principal hotels now are the Farnham House, by L. F. Farnham, and the Eagle Hotel, both well furnished and well kept as first-class houses of the modern style.

POSTAL FACILITIES.

When the weekly mail route was established, in 1797, between Wilkes-Barre and Owego, the mail for Pittston was distributed from the houses of William Slocum and Doctor Giddings, and this irregular arrangement continued until 1810 as a sort of branch, by way of the ferry, from the regular mail route, which was on the opposite side of the Susquehanna. In 1811 a post-office was established and Eleazer Cary was appointed postmaster. A route from Scranton to Wilkes-Barre supplied the office with a weekly mail. Deodat Smith and Zephaniah Knapp were the mail carriers on this route until about 1821. Zephaniah Knapp, the second post-master here, caused the removal of the office to Babylon, and soon afterwards the Pittston Ferry post-office was established, with John Alment as post-master. Alment was an Irish Quaker, blind in one eye and deaf in one ear. He had kept an early store in a log house near the Hughestown cemetery. The boys had robbed him and made his business quite unprofitable, so he bought a frame building on Parsonage street and moved it to the site of Pugh Bros.' store on Main street. In this building he kept the post-office, and at that time it was the most southerly building but one on Main street. The successive postmasters have been Abram Bird, Dr. Anson G. Curtis, William S. Ridin, Charles R. Gorman, James Searle, James Walsh, George M. Richart, Benjamin Ensign and J. B. Shiffer, the present incumbent.

JOURNALISM IN PITSTON.

The Pittston Gazette was established in August, 1850, by G. M. Richart and H. S. Phillips, both practical printers. It was a twenty-eight-column paper, twenty-four by thirty-eight, and received from the first a cordial support. The paper was Whig in politics until the Whig party was supplanted by the Republican, when it took a leading position in the new ranks. In November, 1853, Mr. Richart bought out his partner. He published the paper until March, 1857, at which time he sold to Dr. John Henry Puleston, of New York. Dr. Puleston, who is now a member of the British Parliament, was a Welshman of refined manners and liberal education, and his labors in the Fremont campaign had given him a wide and favorable reputation. He was a ready and forcible writer, so that under his management the good standing of the Gazette was fully sustained. In the spring of 1860 Dr. Puleston sold to G. M. Richart, Benjamin D. Beyea and Abel C. Thompson. The firm of Richart, Beyea & Thompson contended until the fall of 1863, when Mr. Richart for the second time assumed the sole proprietorship of the paper. In June, 1869, Mr. Richart leased for one year to J. W. Freeman, and again took possession in June, 1870. In June, 1874, a half interest in the Gazette office was sold to Theo. Hart, jr. The firm of Richart & Hart continued until the 1st of May, 1878. Mr. Hart has since been the sole editor and proprietor. Under his management the Gazette is wielding strong influence in the public affairs of the Wyoming valley, and maintains its position as a substantial factor in local journalism. It is now the oldest paper under its original title in the Lackawanna and Wyoming valleys. Up to the winter of 1867 the Gazette was printed on a No. 4 Washington hand press, when Mr. Richart purchased a new cylinder, and enlarged to thirty-two and subsequently thirty-six columns. As early as 1854 he put into the Gazette office a ruling machine, and in 1858 added to his job printing office a power job press. These two machines were the pioneers of their kind in the Lackawanna and Wyoming valleys.

The Pittston Herald, a small Democratic paper, was started in the winter of 1855 by Edward S. Neibell, a young printer from Wayne county. In a few weeks some persons unknown invaded the office at night and "pied" the type. Soon afterward an incendiary fire completely demoralized things again, and Mr. Neibell sold his material to Mr. Richart, of the Gazette, and removed.

The Pittston Free Press, a seven-column weekly, independent in politics, was published a few months in 1859 by Lieutenant Arnold C. Lewis.

The Wyoming Valley Journal was established in 1871 by J. M. Armstrong, B. F. Hughes and George D. Leisinger. It was a well-equipped paper at the outset. After a few months Mr. Armstrong bought out his partners, and employed at different times as editors Col. D. C. Kitchen, W. J. Bruce, Col. W. W. Shore and others. He also issued for a short time a small evening paper called the Daily Journal. These papers were independent in politics, and in moral sentiment always high-toned. After some two years the concern was leased to J. W. Freeman, who consolidated it with the Pittston Comet, which he had started in 1870. The consolidated paper was known as the Pittston Comet and Wyoming Valley Journal, and was a decidedly live element in local journalism. It acquired a large circulation and a State reputation. In 1877 it was discontinued and the material sold to Lewis Gordon.

Next in order comes the Luzerne Leader, a Democratic paper, started in 1876 by E. A. Niven and Charles H. Chamberlin. After some months' existence here it was bought by parties in Wilkes-Barre, to which place it was removed. It was subsequently consolidated with the Luzerne Union, and, as the Union-Leader, has become the leading Democratic paper of Luzerne county.

The Evening Press was started in 1877 by W. B. Keller, in the job printing office of Lewis Gordon. Mr. Keller retired after a few months, being succeeded by Messrs. Yost & Sutton, later by Messrs. Tinker & Russell, and in the spring of 1880 by Lewis Gordon, the present publisher.

The Sunday Plain Dealer was established in 1878 by J. C. Coon, and in a few months removed to Wilkes-Barre, where the paper is still published by Mr. Coon under the title of the Sunday News Dealer. It is issued simultaneously in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre.

The Pittston Express, a very neat evening paper, was published during the latter half of August, 1878, by J. T. Sutton and W. H. Rutledge.

The publication of the Daily Watchman, a five-column local evening paper, was begun May 26th, 1885, by Charles Tinker and S. J. Richards.

FERRIES AND BRIDGES.

The first bridge across the Susquehanna between Wilkes-Barre and Tunkhannock was built here in 1850 by the Pitts Ferry Bridge Company, succeeding the old rope ferry near the same point. This first bridge was replaced in 1864 by a covered wooden bridge, which was destroyed in the ice flood of 1875. Within eleven months the King Iron Bridge Company, of Cleveland, put up the beautiful iron bridge now standing. It belongs to the Ferry Bridge Company and cost about $72,000.

The Depot Bridge Company in 1874 built another bridge to span the river at Pittston. It cost $75,000 and was partially destroyed on the 17th of February, 1875. It was rebuilt the same year, at a cost of $45,000.

The iron bridge belonging to the Bloomsburg railroad was built in 1874, in the place of a covered wooden bridge which had been built when the railroad was opened. This was also seriously damaged in the flood of 1875 and rebuilt.

The destruction of these means of river transit made room for two or three steamboats for a short time.

MISS SUSAN EVELYN DICKINSON.

Miss Susan Evelyn Dickinson, whose initials are familiar in the pages of the New York Graphic, the Philadelphia Press and other prominent journals, where her delightful letters from the interior of Pennsylvania are eagerly scanned by a large clientage, is one of the most diligent workers of the day, and has done more than any other writer to present to the world the bright and best side of life in the coal regions. Previous to her advent to the Wyoming valley many metropolitan readers were inclined to doubt whether there was any bright side to the coal fields. The dark side had been given in all its sombre depth, and it remained for Miss Dickinson to show the silver lining. From her home among the willows of West Pittston she took long trips up and down the valley in quest of information for whatever theme she proposed writing upon, deeming no amount of personal privation or inconvenience too great in getting at some new phase in the social condition of the mining masses. No one could be more industrious than this fair little woman, pushing her way like a messenger of light among the grime and dust of coal breakers, the roar of machinery, or along the subterranean chambers of the mine; while her face is familiar at all the Eistatffutan or literary and musical gatherings of the Welsh, as well as the Father Matthew and other temperance conventions of the Irish. The result of her observation and research is shown in her admirable letters to the papers already named. She writes with the earnestness of profound conviction, and her style is incomparable for its amplitude and elegance. She has not sought the surface, like many of her sex of much inferior ability, who have become noted writers of fashion and gossip; because she feels it her duty even in the ordinary pursuit of life to be doing good—righting some wrong, correcting some error, suggesting some reform by which men and women would be their better selves.

She has not ventured on the uncertain sea of popular applause, but, enjoying life most when she worked the hardest, has preferred that sphere—

“That can, the world eluding, be itself
A world enjoyed, that wants no witnesses
But its own sharers and approving heaven:
That, like a flower deep hid in rocky cleft,
Smiles, though 'tis looking only at the sky.”

Susan Evelyn Dickinson was born at the old homestead in Berks county, but as her life from childhood was passed in Philadelphia she delights in being known as a Philadelphian. Her ancestors came to this country in William Penn's time, and she was brought up in the Society of Friends, but joined the Protestant Episcopal church after leaving school. Her talent as a writer was developed early—even as a school girl—and her verses over the signatures of “Bible Evergreen” and “Ada Vernon,” in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, and “Violet May” in the Boston True Floy attracted attention and favorable comment. Subsequently she discontinued writing for several years, the earlier ones being occupied as teacher in the public schools of Philadelphia. In 1872 her pen was employed during the Greeley campaign, and in 1874 she accepted an engagement on the New York Herald staff, beginning with the admirable report of the great Empire mine fire at Wilkes-Barre. Since then she has done some excellent special department work on that journal, and furnished it with occasional correspondence from the coal region, besides contributing a valuable series of northeastern Pennsylvania letters to the Graphic and Philadelphia Press and writing several pleasant sketches and short stories. Justly proud of her sister Anna's brilliant talents, Miss Susan E. Dickinson in another and equally important sphere is still exerting, by means of her facile pen, her power for good on the public mind, and residing with her venerable mother in the romantic retirement of fair Wyoming.

ANDREW BRYDEN.

Andrew Bryden, whose portrait appears in this work, is a native of Ayrshire, Scotland. He was born January 27th, 1827. After coming to this country he engaged in mining, and married Miss Ann Law, of Carbondale, Pa. Mr. Bryden is now employed by the Pennsylvania Coal Company and is associated with William Law as mine superintendent at Pittston.

E. L. ELLITHORP.

Emmet L. Ellithorp was born in Edinburgh, Saratoga county, N. Y., December 6th, 1840, and was married to Miss Susan Gilmore, of Cohoes, Albany county, N. Y. Mr. Ellithorp served as lieutenant during the Rebellion and has filled various official positions. He is engaged in the manufacture of knit shirts and drawers at the West Pittston Knitting Mills.

J. D. GREEN.

John D. Green, stove manufacturer, Pittston, was born at Scranton, July 1st, 1850. Mrs. Green, formerly Miss Hattie A. Jones, is also a native of Scranton.

DANIEL HARDING (DECEASED).

The Harding family, which has been identified with the affairs of the Wyoming valley from its early settlement, is of English extraction. The name is traceable in English records as early as 1280. There are thirteen males of the family registered in New England in 1630, and it is probable that they came with the John Endicott company. Thomas Harding of Connecticut was the father of James Harding, who came to Exeter in 1807. James's family consisted of seven children, of whom Daniel—the subject of this sketch, was the oldest son. He was born in Connecticut, in 1802, and hence was but five years of age when his father removed to Exeter. His early years were spent on the farm with his parents, and there, under the stern tutorage of necessity, he formed as a boy the habits of industry and frugality which were traceable throughout his subsequent career as a man. Socially his life was an eventful one. On December 2nd, 1831, he was married to Nancy, daughter of Gould Whitlock, one of the early settlers of the township. In July, 1848, she died, and in October of the following year he was married to Nancy Lee. Her death on the 17th of May, 1858, left Mr. Harding alone with a family of five children. Eight years later, on the 2nd of February, 1866, Abigail Sutton, daughter of George Sutton, from Connecticut, came to his home as the wife of his declining years. Here she survives him, deservedly enjoying a competence from the ample estate which Mr. Harding's correct business habits had enabled him to accumulate. Mr. Harding's death occurred in April, 1880. Politically he was a lifelong Democrat, and though prominent as such, we find those who were politically opposed to him to have been among his firmest friends and most ardent admirers. He was called by the people to the important duties of treasurer of Luzerne county at a time when the financial troubles of 1838-42 had left the finances of the county in a critical condition. He discharged the duties in a masterly manner and made hundreds of lifelong friends. Being a large stockholder in the Pittston Ferry Bridge Company, he was called to supervise its affairs as president, which position he filled until a short time before his death. Mr. Harding was regarded as one of the most public spirited and best read men of his township. The charitable acts by which his life was characterized have embalmed his name in the hearts of all the poor who knew him, and more than justify this passing tribute to a man whose life work was a worthy pattern for posterity.

HENRY HARDING.

Henry Harding, deceased, a son of John Harding, was born in 1801, and married in 1825 to Sally, daughter of Andrew Montanye, sen. Mr. Harding died in 1868, after a useful life. His widow occupies the homestead, a view of which is given elsewhere in this work.

GEORGE HICE.

George Hice, a son of Henry Hice, who came from New Jersey to the Wyoming valley about 1817, was born at Wyoming, in 1823. He came to his present farm in Exeter in 1850. The same year he was married to Emily Mathers, of Wyoming. Their family consists of two sons, John F., in Kansas, and Charles F., operating the home farm.

J. T. KERN.

J. T. Kern, a gardener at the head of the Wyoming valley, is the son of Henry Kern, jr., and grandson of Henry Kern, who came from New Jersey about 1812. He was born in 1830, and married in 1864 to Mary Honawell, of Dallas, Pa.

WILLIAM LAW.

William Law is one of the representative men of Scottish birth who form so prominent an element of the present population of Pittston. He was born December 8th, 1824, and after coming to America married Catharine Bryden, of Carbondale, a sister of Andrew Bryden. Mr. Law has been for years in the employ of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and is now superintendent (associated with Andrew Bryden) of the company's work in and around Pittston.

JAMES McMILLAN

is a native of Scotland, and was born at Wanlockhead, in the county of Dumfries. After completing the usual course of Scottish boys' education at the village school he passed through the practical course of a lead miner. In a few years he emigrated to the United States. Several members of the family had preceded him to America, and their settlement at Pittston determined his public career. He came to the Wyoming valley in the autumn of 1853, worked for a number of years as a miner in the works of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and revisited his native country in 1857, taking advantage of an older brother's residence in Edinburgh to pursue some practical studies in that city. Returning to Pennsylvania in 1858, he went after a time to the California gold fields, but soon abandoned the rough life of that newly opened country for the quieter if less lucrative engagements of the anthracite coal fields. His careful education stood him in good stead and he soon found a suitable sphere for its exercise. After having been occupied for a time on the county survey of Luzerne he entered on a situation of trust in the Pennsylvania Coal Company's service, from which, after some years, he retired to carry on business on his own account. For a number of years he has been a partner in the firm of Law & McMillan, Pittston, managing the Pleasant Valley branch of the business. Mr. McMillan has been postmaster at Murr since the establishment of an office in that village, and has taken a leading part in all the ecclesiastical, educational and political affairs of the district.

JAMES O'DONNELL.

James O'Donnell, burgess of Pittston borough in 1879, was born in Ireland, in 1823, and came to this country in 1847. He was one of the originators of the Miners' Saving Bank of Pittston. He was formerly a farmer in Wayne county, Pa., but since 1860 has been in commercial business in Pittston.

REV. N. G. PARKE.

The Rev. Nathan Grier Parke comes of a good old American stock, in which Scottish and English blood, with the Presbyterianism of the one and the Puritanism of the other, are very fairly mingled. He is in a double sense "a son of the manse," his mother having been a daughter of the Rev. Nathan Grier, for many years pastor of Brandywine Manor church, Chester county, and his father the Rev. Samuel Parke, pastor of Slateridge church, in York county, Pa. His father's parsonage was a good school for a boy, and his training developed a vigorous, self-reliant character. He graduated from Jefferson College before he had completed his twentieth year; and four years later, in the spring of 1844, he received his diploma in theology from Princeton. Immediately after graduation Mr. Parke entered on his life-work at Pittston, and under circumstances which vividly illustrate the changes wrought during the last forty years. The church at Wilkes-Barre was then the center of Presbyterian influence in the Wyoming and Lackawanna valleys. North of the Susquehanna, as far up as Carbondale, the "forest primeval" was almost unbroken. The Lackawanna poured its full flood of clear, limpid, trout-abounding waters along a chanel overshadowed with mighty pines and hemlocks, and through glades of grand old beeches and maples and oaks. A few scattered homesteads with their patches of cultivated cornfield and meadow dotted the wilderness. The old forge at Babylon was a sort of exchange, where the farmers for many miles around used to congregate for the transaction of business. Half a dozen families clustered on the hillside overlooking Slocum Hollow, with its sparse settlements of lumbermen. Scranton was not. Beyond the flats of Capoose, on the edge of the mountains, the village of Providence nestled amid its leafy dells. The hunter, the trapper and the woodman had the upper reaches of the Lackawanna all to themselves. A man of far-seeing penetration and true missionary spirit chanced to be forty years ago minister of Wilkes-Barre. Dr. John Dorrance cared for the scattered families away out in the wilderness as well as for the flock safely housed in the fold. He was like-minded with the Rev. Cyrus Gilderslove, his predecessor in the charge of Wilkes-Barre, who, as early as 1821, added to his other labors those of a teacher and evangelist in the cottages and hamlets along the Lackawanna. He foresaw the future of the valley, and unable personally to supply the means of grace to the scattered settlers, he employed missionaries to labor among them under his direction. He was fortunate in the men whom he called to his aid. Most notable among those early Presbyterian evangelists was Father Hunt, a man altogether unique, who so lately as the winter of 1876, in a ripe old age, passed to his reward. One still survives, honorably retired from the ministry, the Rev. Charles Evans, of South Bend, Indiana. It was in succession to Mr. Evans that Mr. Parke entered on his life work in the Lackawanna valley. To a young man of high spirit and fresh from the seminary there was little inviting in the position of an evangelist among the Moosic mountains; and possibly had the offer of a permanent appointment been presented to him the young preacher might have declined it. But Dr. Dorrance made his proposal in the first instance to a college friend of Mr. Parke, who, being at the moment not free to accept the engagement, begged the future minister of Pittston to occupy that outpost until he should himself be ready to enter the field. Thus it came to pass that young Parke came to the valley as a substitute for one for whom by the time he was ready to enter personally on the ministry Providence had prepared another and not less important sphere in the far northwest. John W. Sterling, whom Dr. Dorrance had designed to be his coadjutor in the gospel among the farmers and lumbermen of Lackawanna, has spent an active life and still works with unabated vigor as a leading educationalist in the State University of Wisconsin. Nathan Grier Parke, whom Sterling sent to Lackawanna as his locum tenens, remains there, holding the fort, with all the dew of his youth upon him, for Christ and His gospel. It was in the spring of 1844 that the young preacher left his father's manse at Slateridge, mounted on horseback, and a ride of two hundred miles across mountain and forest brought him after some days to Wilkes-Barre. There was little of the "domine" in the young man's aspect. The toll keeper at Wilkes-Barre bridge exacted his accustomed fare as he passed the receipt of custom, handsomely apologizing afterward for the levy on the ground that the rider did not look like a preacher. But the preacher learned to like the people among whom his lot had been thus cast, while the people took at the same time a strong liking for the preacher. Nor have well nigh forty years of mutual intercourse altered the estimate which so early each formed of the other. One hundred dollars a year guaranteed by the board of home missions was the sole income of Mr. Parke on his entrance to the ministry. But Elisha Atherton had a prophet's chamber, in which for the space of three years the young minister was hospitably lodged, and the stout steed which had borne him from his father's manse shared with his master the best of the farmer's fodder. So, unburdened with anxiety as to what he should eat or what he should drink, or as to raiment—what he should put on, with a true apostolic spirit he set himself to teach and to preach, journeying far and near, up the valley and across the mountains, ministering at cottage firesides and roadside schoolrooms at Pittston, then a straggling village; at Old Forge, the main commercial center of the region; at the hamlet of Taylorville, amid the swamps of Harrison (as Scranton was then called), to the lumbermen at Hyde Park, to the villages of Providence, and over the hills in Abington and Newton. Father Hunt used to tell that two years of continuous itinerating in the same field brought him, in addition to his allowance from the mission board, a supplemental salary from his scattered flock in the shape of a finely dressed skunk's skin and several pairs of stockings. Mr. Parke fared better indeed during these early years of itineracy, but the utmost ever raised in aid of his salary left him still passing rich on less than two hundred dollars. All the same with a light purse he bore about with him a light heart. His bread was ever given him, and the pleasure of the Lord prospered in his hand. Three years passed of earnest, continuous, painstaking work, and now it became plain that Pittston must be the center of Mr. Parke's work. A substantial brick building, now used as a public school, situate near the head of the old canal, was erected and dedicated. Into this new church the congregation already gathered passed from the old red school-house close by, where they used to meet and where, on the 7th of July, 1846, Mr. Parke was ordained. Here for eleven years the Presbyterian congregation of Pittston continued to worship, until the present edifice received the largely increased flock which waited on his ministry. Scranton had developed its great proportions, and demanded all the care that a separate pastor could bestow, and in due season Pleasant Valley, away up in a wooded hollow among the hills, began to attract a large working population of miners; while the west side of the Susquehanna offered special inducements to the wealthy citizens of Pittston to seek a pleasant home amid its shades. In Scranton, Pleasant Valley and West Pittston thriving Presbyterian churches under their several pastors have been organized and established. But amid all changes, and in spite of these successive migrations from the original home, the church of Pittston holds its own, strong in numbers and intelligence and Christian activities, while Mr. Parke stands facile princeps among his brethren, a true Presbyterian bishop by the will of man and none the less by the grace of God.

In 1847 Mr. Parke was married to Miss Ann Elizabeth Gildersleeve, a granddaughter of the old minister of Wilkes-Barre, by whom he has had a family of seven children, of whom three sons and a daughter survive.

MICHAEL REAP.

Michael Reap was born in Ballycastle, county Mayo, Ireland, on the 21st of September, 1821, and died in Pittston, Luzerne county, Pa., May 11th, 1878. On landing in this country, in 1840, he had only two British pennies in his pocket, and had had but limited opportunities for education in his boyhood. He immediately sought and obtained work on the Erie Canal. Subsequently he labored on a farm in Blakely township, and in the fall of 1842 obtained employment at a blast furnace in Scranton, where by his industry and application he reached the position of keeper of the furnace, at $1.50 per day, which compensation was large in comparison with the prices paid for labor at that time. After leaving the furnace he opened a small grocery, and in 1851, in connection with Mr. Thomas Benedict, started in Pittston a general country store under the firm name of Reap & Benedict. In 1855 Mr. Benedict retired and Mr. Reap continued the business until 1867, when he was succeeded by his son and nephew. He retired from his mercantile pursuits having accumulated, by his own indomitable energy and good business qualifications, what was considered a snug fortune. He gave generously of his time and money to aid in building up his adopted town, Pittston. He was seven times elected Burgess of the borough. He was active and instrumental in introducing gas and water into the borough, and was president of the Pittston Gas Light Company and treasurer of the Pittston Water Company. In 1869 he was one of the organizers of the Miners' Savings Bank of Pittston, and its vice-president until 1872, when, the president, Mr. J. B. Smith, retiring, he was elected his successor, which position he retained until failing health, a few months previous to his death, compelled him to resign. During the panic caused by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. it was reported in the local papers that the bank had failed; but the report was false, and how zealously its president guarded the interest of its depositors was demonstrated on that occasion, when he nobly pledged his own estate and stood in the gap ready to secure any and all who had deposited their hard earned earnings in his care. The bank, however, passed through the ordeal unscathed and came forth with the still greater confidence of the public. In 1844 Mr. Reap was married to Miss Honora Connor, an Irish lady then living at Carbondale, and in 1849 to Miss Mary Bowlin, who survives him. He was always a great friend to education—having been deprived of its advantages in his youth—and his first care for his children was to see that they were well educated; and at his death he left a legacy for the founding of a convent school in Pittston. He was a consistent and good Catholic and was always attentive to his Christian duties. His success in life was attributed to his determination to rise in the world, aided by his never tiring industry; always cautious, never venturing beyond his depth and not given to wild speculation, but confining himself to a safe, legitimate business, he is without doubt a true type of the self-made man.

WILLIAM SCHOOLEY.

William Schooley, a resident of Exeter for sixty-two years, was born in New Jersey, in 1816, and came to Exeter with his father when only two years of age. He was married in 1844 to Sarah Breese, who was born in Kingston in 1819. Their only child is Mrs. J. H. Andrews. Although Mr. Schooley has been a farmer all his life he is not without the spirit of public enterprise; he was one of the original stockholders and officers of the Pittston Ferry Bridge Company, and is a director at the present time. He is now in the sixty-fifth year of his age, and completed his harvest of the year 1880, for the first time in his life, in the month of June, doing nearly all the labor himself. His father, Joseph Schooley, was one of the pioneer farmers of the valley. In 1823 he took from the bed of the Susquehanna half a ton of coal, drew it sixty-seven miles to Easton, and sold it to a blacksmith for $10.

HON. GEORGE B. SEAMANS, M. D.

Hon. George B. Seamans, M. D., was born November 11th, 1830, at Abington, Pa., and graduated from the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1853. He practiced at Dunmore until 1870, when he removed to Pleasant Valley. He was coroner of Luzerne county three years, and in 1876 was elected senator from the twentieth district. In 1878 he was re-elected for the long term, which he is serving.

THE SLOCUM FAMILY.

On the records of the town of Warwick, R. I., is found the following entry: "These lines may certify that Jonathan Slocum and Ruth Tripp, both of the town of Portsmouth, county of Newport, Rhode Island, were lawfully married in Warwick on 23d of February, in the year 1758, by me, Ebenezer Slocum, justice of the peace."

On the 6th of November, 1775, Jonathan Fitch conveys to Jonathan Slocum, blacksmith, of Warwick, Kent county, R. I., lot No. 15, 2nd division, Wilkes-Barre town plot. Jonathan Slocum moved into Wyoming valley in November, 1777, with seven sons and three daughters, and settled on the lot he had bought of Fitch. On the 2nd of November, 1778, his daughter Frances was carried into captivity by Indians, and never returned. After a long search by relatives she was found living near Logansport, Ind., where her brothers and other relatives visited her in 1837. See Minor, pages 247, etc., and Peck, pages 234, etc. She was married to an Indian and had children. She died on the Missisnawa, near Peru, Wabash county, Ind., at her residence, on the 23d of March, 1847. JOHN VANDERBERG, a carpenter for the Pennsylvania Coal Company, was born in Pittston in 1840, and married Mary Sheppard, of Pittston. He served three years in the 50th Pennsylvania infantry.

A. J. VAN TUYLE, farmer, was born in 1828, at Eaton, Pa., and married Emma, daughter of George Miller, in 1844. He is the son of Hiram and grandson of Jonathan Van Tuyle, who came from Orange county, N. Y., about 1820. Mr. Van Tuyle has held most of the township offices and is now clerk of the school board of Exeter.

HON. THOMAS WADDELL, coal operator, is a native of Scotland. He married Jannet Wallace, and in 1850 came to the Wyoming valley. He was engaged in gold mining in California from 1855, to 1858, and began to operate in coal in 1859. He was a member of the Legislature in 1873 and 1874.

CHARLES M. WAGNER, of Pittston, son of Peter and Amy Wagner, was born at Wyoming, Pa., August 5th, 1860.

JOHN WARDON, of English and Dutch descent, was born in Hanover township, in 1798. He married Susannah Morrison, of Lowery Town, on the Lehigh, in 1826. He lost two sons in the late war. His grandfather, Conrad Lines, came to Wyoming before the massacre; was apprized of the danger by an Indian girl, and his family with others escaped over the mountains.

JAMES WATSON, mine boss for the Pennsylvania Coal Company, was born in Scotland, in 1828. In 1849 he was married to Ann Law, and in 1854 he emigrated to America and engaged in mining at Pittston.

WILLIAM L. WATSON, cashier of the First National Bank of Pittston, was born in Wanlockhead, Scotland, November 6th, 1850. He married Miss Jean H. Law, of Pittston. He was formerly a bookkeeper with Law & McMillan.

WILLIAM WEBBER, of Pleasant Valley, was born in England, in 1835, and came to this country in 1852. His wife was Ellen Foley, of New York. He was for fourteen years a conductor. Since 1866 he has been engineer at No. 3 plane. He was in the 177th and 187th regiments Pennsylvania volunteers.

WILLIAM H. WETHERBEE is a native of Huntington township, Pa. His wife, Lucy, is a daughter of Henry and Sally Harding. Mr. W. enlisted in Schooley's Battery in August, 1862, and through several promotions was made 1st lieutenant; he was discharged in 1866.

JOSEPH WHIPP was born in Lancashire, England, February 3d, 1811. He was married on his 25th birthday to Anna Dugdale, a native of the same place. They arrived in America June 14th, 1841, and came to Exeter the same year. His occupation is farming.

JOHN W. WILLIAMS was born at Carbondale, in 1847. He was formerly a blacksmith and miner, but in 1879 he started in business at Hughestown in groceries, provisions and novelties. His wife was Helen Simpson, of Pittston.

JOHN WILLIAMS was born in Carnarvonshire, North Wales, in 1815. His wife was Eleanor Jones, of the same place. He was formerly a quarryman, but is now pastor of the Welsh Congregational Church at Pittston.

JAMES R. WRIGHT, carpenter for the Pennsylvania Coal Company, was born in Susquehanna county, in 1844, and married Emily Coon, of Scranton, in 1868. In 1873 he came to Pittston and engaged with the Pennsylvania Coal Company. He was an orderly sergeant in the 4th Pa. cavalry. He served four years.

HENRY ZIEGLER and Catharine Weiskercher, natives of Germany, were married in 1851. Mr. Ziegler has served as supervisor and school director of Pittston township. He is a real estate broker and lumber dealer.

The following citizens of the townships and boroughs here represented also contributed their support to this publication: William Allen, J. H. Andrews, C. J. Barrett, Thomas Benedict, Benjamin Bevan, F. Brandenburg, M. Brehony, John G. Bryden, Andrew Brydie, Michael L. Carmody, John Christie, Peter J. Connor, P. J. Cooper, E. A. Coray, M. F. Crane, A. McI. De Witt, Z. Du Bois, John B. Dymond, Thomas J. Elms, L. H. Evans, D. W. Evans, W. G. Evans, J. W. Evans, F. L. Farnham, William Gee, George R. Gill, A. Griffin, T. D. Headley, J. M. Headley, Morris Hughes, John S. Jenkins, Peter Joyce, Miss Ellen Kern, George H. Kirkland, D. S. Koon, R. D. Lacey, E. G. La France, John F. McLaughlin, P. I. O'Malley, Robert S. Porle, G. M. JAMES F. STARK.

THE STARK FAMILY.

Christopher, James and Henry Stark were the father, grandfather and great grandfather of James and John Stark, well known as prominent residents of Plains for many years. All three are buried in the family burying ground northwesterly from the road, nearly a mile from the Pittston line. The family were originally from England, three brothers having emigrated to New England at an early date. General Stark, the hero of Bennington, was a descendant of one of them, and a relative of those of the name in the Wyoming valley. "On the enlistment of the independent companies of Durkee and Ransom," says Miner, "James Stark, son of James and brother of Henry (whose burial place we have designated) joined the army and marched to meet the enemy." Three of the name, Daniel, Aaron and James, were in the battle, the latter only escaping death.

"The first, and for many years the largest and best frame house in Upper Wilkes-Barre, belonged to the Stark family," Miner wrote, in 1845. "Painted red more than half a century ago, situate on the first rise from the river, commanding a pleasant prospect of the Susquehanna and the large meadows, it was quite an object, in the old times, of curiosity and attention." James and John Stark were long magistrates in Upper Wilkes-Barre, and the former was instrumental, at a comparatively early day, in introducing choice sorts of fruit in the valley.

Henry Stark, son of James, was born April 19th, 1762, and died January 22nd, 1807. Another son was Paul Stark. Both were driven from the valley at the time of the massacre; both returned, Henry becoming the owner of a large tract of land now in the township of Plains, Paul removing at a comparatively early date to New York, thence to Ohio.

Elizabeth, wife of Henry Stark, was born April 12th, 1773, and died December 24th, 1851. They had nine children, of whom James Stark was the eldest, born April 4th, 1792, on the Stark homestead. He married Mary Wagner for his third wife, February 23d, 1823. The eldest son by this marriage was James F. Stark, born in the home of his forefathers, January 7th, 1824. He married Helen Stocker, of Plains, and died June 6th, 1872, and was buried in Hollenback cemetery, Wilkes-Barre, a larger concourse of people assembling at his funeral than ever before or since attended a funeral in Plains. Honor and integrity characterized his daily intercourse with his fellow men, who sought him for advice and counsel, and always found in him a true friend and a wise adviser. In the affairs of the township he was a leading man during his active career, and while he loved the comfort and retirement of his home better than the honors of public life and never sought political preferment, he was often made official custodian of the best interests of his fellow townsmen, discharging all duties devolving upon him with remarkable fidelity and signal success. A lover of books and an ardent seeker after knowledge, he was an active friend of all educational movements in the vicinity; and, though he never united with any religious denomination, he was a liberal supporter of neighboring churches and the friend of the deserving poor wherever found.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

Pittston is the trade center for a population of fully 20,000 people. Prior to 1805 there was very little business done here.

The first merchants were Wright & Duane, in 1799.

In 1847 James Searle established the first jewelry business in Pittston, in a building on the site of Leon Sacks's clothing house. Five years later he built on the site of the First National Bank a wooden building, then the best in town. It is yet standing on the same lot. Mr. Searle, W. L. McDougall and W. W. Berry are the jewelers at the present time.

The clothing business is represented by Henry Cohen, David Anthony, G. David, Leon Sacks and Lewis Cohen. Henry Cohen began business in 1849 and is the leading dealer in town. J. W. Nimmo is the leading merchant tailor. David Anthony, Lewis Cohen and several others either learned the business or formerly worked at it with Mr. Cohen.

In 1866 the firm of Miller & Ross, wholesale dealers in grain, flour and feed, began business on upper Main street, in the brick building opposite the Central Hotel. They subsequently built the building that was recently occupied by Charles Pugh as a grocery jobbing house, and in 1869 removed their business to it. Two years later Mr. Miller retired, and K. C. Ross, the junior partner of the firm, continued the business under the name of Ross & Co. About this time they abandoned their trade in grain and feed, confining their operations exclusively to provisions and pork, in which branch they soon became the largest dealers in this section of the State. The trade soon demanded larger storehouse accommodations, and in 1874 the lot was purchased at the corner of Water and Crone streets and their large, substantial brick building was erected, where they have warehouse and packing rooms to accommodate their trade, which is the only wholesale provision business in Pittston and the largest in this section of the State.

Union Stove and Manufacturing Company.—In 1867, on the site of the fine structure of this enterprising company, represented in the accompanying cut, was a small foundry owned by William Lester. In 1868 the building was burned. Lester became financially embarrassed and the property was sold by the sheriff in March, 1869. Monies & Pughe, of Scranton, bought it, and in July, 1869, organized a company with a capital of $40,000. The first president was Hon. Lewis Pughe; secretary and treasurer, I. J. Vincent. The first year's business aggregated $17,000. In 1879 that increased to $75,000, the company having made and sold over 4,000 ranges and stoves. Smyth's Patent Duplex and Grate, the most convenient and economical in use, is put in all their stoves, which has added much to the success of this industry, together with the fine casting and superior finish of all the goods manufactured. The buildings extend 250 feet on William street and the whole block on Foundry street. The store, pattern and office building is 60 feet square, built of solid masonry and brick, five stories high, a model of neatness and utility, with elevator from the basement to the upper floor. The machine and finishing shop on Foundry street is 100 by 60 feet, three stories, built of brick, with slate roof. In this building is the machinery for grinding, polishing and fitting stoves, ranges and furnaces. On the third floor are the pattern and tin shops. The moulding shops are on Foundry street, adjoining the machine shop. One is 100 by 75, with an addition 80 by 60. The whole moulding floor is 180 by 135 feet. The engine house is stone and brick. It contains a splendid engine of 45 horse power, built by the Dickson Manufacturing Company, of Scranton; also two large boilers. There is in the rear of the machine shop a building 40 by 60 feet, for store and lumber room. There are on the property four dwelling houses to accommodate employes. The buildings and improvements cover about one acre. This industry has steadily increased under the present able management, until the goods are sought for by dealers in northeastern Pennsylvania and the adjoining States, and the concern stands in the trade as the foremost stove works in the State outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. The present capital is $40,000; surplus $41,000; directors—William N. Monies, Thomas Orchard, C. L. McMillan, Judge Cool, Lewis Pughe, John D. Green and E. E. Thomas; president, Colonel W. N. Monies; vice-president, C. L. McMillan; treasurer and general manager, John D. Green.

The Pittston Knitting Company was organized in January, 1879, with a capital of $25,000; officered by R. J. Wisner, president; William Allen, secretary; J. E. Pattison, treasurer. The factory is on North Main street. A sixty horse-power engine is used for running the machinery. The produce of the mill is twenty dozens cardigan jackets per day, worth from $14 to $40 per dozen. They take the wool in the bale and put it through all the steps of scouring, coloring, carding, spinning and knitting, furnishing employment for one hundred operatives. Their pay roll is about $1,800 per month.

The terra cotta works were established in 1869 by William Lee & William Woods, and that year they made the first terra cotta ever made in this section of the State.

The clay is easily obtained from the mines, where it is counted as refuse. Another quality, which is used now for extra work, is obtained from New Jersey. Since 1878 Mr. Lee has had the business alone, and is manufacturing house-tile, chimneys and fire-brick.

About thirty-four years ago Messrs. Howarth & Law built the Dock Street Ale and Porter Brewery, having a capacity of about twenty-five barrels per day. In 1860 H. R. & M. Hughes purchased the property, increased the capacity to sixty barrels per day, and added a malt-house capable of malting 18,000 bushels in a season. In 1878 they purchased the Forest Castle Lager Brewery in Exeter, where they are brewing forty-five barrels per day. This brewery was built in 1875 by J. A. A. Burschell. The vault is one of the finest in the State, being a tunnel twelve by fifteen feet driven fifty yards into the solid rock.

The Pittston Bank was incorporated May 5th, 1857, with George Sanderson president, and T. M. Burton cashier. The stock consisted of five hundred shares, of $100 each. On the 28th of November, 1859, the officers resigned, and William Swetland and Thomas F. Atherton were elected to fill their respective places. The capital was increased to $200,000 on the 29th of April, 1862. On November of the following year the president died, and Payne Pettebone succeeded him.

The First National Bank (No. 478) was opened on the 6th of July, 1864, with a capital of $150,000. B. D. Beyea was made cashier, H. S. Phillips teller, and R. D. Lacoé vice-president. The Pittston Bank was merged in the First National September 16th, 1865, at which time the capital of the National was increased to $500,000. Thomas Ford succeeded Mr. Lacoé as vice-president, and W. L. Watson followed Mr. Beyea as cashier. In 1876 the elegant bank building at the corner of Main and William streets was erected. Theodore Strong has been president since the organization.

The People's Savings Bank was organized April 1st, 1872, and began business at No. 16 North Main street, in its present building. C. S. Stark was elected president, Samuel Price vice-president, and H. C. Dewey was chosen cashier. The capital, then $56,250, has been increased to $74,000. Four per cent. interest is paid on deposits, and the stock yields two semi-annual dividends of four per cent. each. The present officers are the first incumbents. The death of Mr. Stark occurred early in 1880. The present directors are Samuel Price, Benjamin Price, A. Armstrong, D. D. Mosier, William Allen, R. B. Cutler, H. Cohen, J. I. Shoemaker, G. J. Sharps, B. Sharkey, W. H. Cool and M. L. Perrin.

The Miners' Savings Bank was organized on the 1st of November, 1869, with John B. Smith president, Michael Reap, vice-president, and A. A. Bryden, cashier. The capital was $30,000, which was doubled in 1874. From 1871 Mr. Reap was president until December 10th, 1877, and since the election of January 16th, 1878, A. A. Bryden has been president; James L. McMillan vice-president and Frank P. Reap cashier. The stock has yielded six annual dividends of ten, one of eight, two of nine and one of seven per cent.

In 1854 F. Brandenburg began the first bakery in Pittston. There was not demand enough for bread at two dozen loaves per day to make it pay, so beer was added to the trade; but finally bread won, beer was banished, and now, with two large ovens and three bakers, the average is 400 loaves per day. His present place of business was built in 1863.

SCHOOLS.

The first public school in Wyoming valley was taught in Pittston. John Jenkins is known to have taught a school near the Ravine colliery for several winters prior to 1781. In 1810 a school-house was built not far from the up-town brick school-house, but on the opposite side of Main street. It was used for religious meetings and was furnished with a loft and elevated pulpit.

March 21st, 1810, "at a meeting of the subscribers for building a school-house near Jedediah Collins's," William Slocum presided and John Phillips, William Slocum and Nathaniel Giddings were elected a committee to buy or lease a lot from said Collins and have a school-house built. They sold the building contract by auction, at $215, to Miner Searle.

An early school was taught by Mrs. Blakely Hall on "The green," a portion of the present borough between the L. V. depot and Main street. This building was purchased by the railroad company and used for a depot until it was displaced by their present depot building.

The township of Pittston has now twelve public schools, and Pittston borough has twenty-one schools, kept in five school buildings. T. S. Briggs is principal of the Uptown school; W. S. Stevens, Butler Hill school; W. S. Neville, Welsh Hill school; J. T. Rutledge, Market street school; C. J. Barrett, Oregon school. Prof. Barrett has one assistant; each of the others has four assistants.

LODGES, CLUBS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

ODD FELLOWS.

Gohonto Lodge, No. 314, was instituted on the 18th of June, 1848, in compliance with a petition of John Kernaud, John Sax and the following, who were the first officers: John W. Davies, treasurer; Jesse Williams, N. G.; Thomas E. Curtis, V. G.; Ephraim Johnson, secretary; Joseph Knapp, assistant secretary. Mr. Davies is the only remaining charter member.

In October, 1854, about twenty members withdrew and became the charter members of Thistle Lodge, No. 512, from which twenty-one members withdrew in 1870 and instituted Luzerne Lodge, No. 721. In 1874 five members obtained dismissals from this lodge to institute Bennett Lodge, No. 907; and in 1876 sixteen of the former members of Gohonto Lodge instituted Pittston Lodge, No. 941.

The present membership of these five lodges is about 450, with a surplus capital to sustain their charities of not less than $30,000. The fraternity has a very well selected library of general literature, accessible to its members.

MASONIC.

Saint John's Lodge, No. 233, was instituted on the 17th of April, 1848, and opened the same day in the next month in a hall in the attic of the old White Swan Hotel. The first master was William S. Reddin, and the now venerable and always venerated Elisha Blackman was the first secretary. He is now the only survivor left in Pittston of the original members of this lodge. The first board of officers also included Thomas Tully, R. A. Oakford, William Stang, Frederick Helf, Peter Winters and Gilman Converse. Temple Lodge, No. 248, of Tunkhannock, Hiram Lodge, No. 122, of Providence, Kingston Lodge, No. 395, of Kingston, and Wyoming Lodge, No. 468, of Wyoming, were composed principally of members from St. John's. Several worshipful masters have served more than one term. In the following list the names occur in the order of their first election: William S. Reddin, R. A. Oakford, Frederick Hepler, L. B. Ensign, Henry Cohen, H. K. Ebert, Henry Evans, Alexander A. Bryden, Charles R. Gorman, Alexander Craig, William Abbott, John Merritt, David McKown, G. Cadman, J. J. Kelchner, Charles H. Footer, James B. Bryden, Adam A. Bryden, Joseph Langford, Charles L. McMillan.

The officers for 1880 were: John Portius, W. M.; John B. Smith, S. W.; John W. Thompson, J. W.; Thomas Ford, treasurer; Theodore Hart, jr., secretary.

Valley Lodge, No. 499, F. and A. M. was chartered on the 22nd day of January, 1872, and included in its membership some who had been members of St. John's Lodge, above referred to, and some formerly members of the lodge at Tunkhannock. It was chartered as a West Pittston lodge, but the meetings are held in the masonic hall at Pittston. Official posts were filled by the following gentlemen: Thomas E. Grier, W. M.; J. J. Hurlbut, S. W.; Thomas B. Lance, J. W.; G. W. Farrer, treasurer; Joel Brenton, secretary. The regular communications are held on the evening of the Wednesday preceding the full moon in each month.

During the history of this lodge the following-named members have occupied the oriental chair: Thomas E. Grier, Addison K. Howe, Henry T. Hepler, John S. Hurlbut, Thomas B. Lance, Isaac E. La Barre, W. McL. Ostrander and Charles Howitz.

At the election of December 24th, 1879, John B. Law was elected W. M.; T. W. Kyte, S. W.; William D. Evans, J. W.; Alexander McDougal, treasurer; and Thomas J. Snowdon, secretary.

Royal Arch Chapter No. 242 was instituted February 18th, 1878, with sixteen members. First officers: Thomas E. Grier, H. P.; Charles R. Gorman, K.; D. McKown, scribe; John S. Hurlbut, treasurer; L. B. Ensign, secretary.

The past high priests are: Thomas E. Grier, David McKown, James Davis, Charles R. Gorman, Addison K. Howe and John Merritt.

Stated meetings are held on the last Thursday of each month. The present officers are: Dr. W. McL. Ostrander, M. E. H. P.; Jesse B. Carpenter, K.; John B. Law, S.; D. McKown, treasurer; L. B. Ensign, secretary.

THE CALEDONIAN CLUB.

This association was organized in 1863 by a company of Pittston Scots, for athletic sports and mutual improvement. A library has been established, valued at $2,000. The club holds regular meetings monthly for the transaction of the usual business. Yearly celebrations are held under its auspices in honor of their national bard, Robert Burns. Annual games or Scottish pastimes have been held for the past seventeen years on Everhart's island. The meeting of the North American association as guests of this club in July, 1880, was a marked event in their history. The Highland games, presided over by the honored chief Thomas Waddell, were participated in by Scots from all parts of the United States and Canada.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

In May, 1870, the Father Mathew T. A. B. A. was organized, with twenty-eight members, and it was chartered April 24th, 1871. The membership is about 400. The spiritual director is Rev. John Finnan. The first officers were: Richard Leahy, president; John McLee, vice-president; M. J. Reddington, secretary; James FitzPatrick, treasurer. The society meets on alternate Sundays at Catholic Hall. The present officers are: John A. Collier, president; M. J. McAndrews, vice-president; F. J. Conlan, secretary; M. J. Walsh, corresponding secretary; John Grady, financial secretary; M. W. Morris, treasurer.

This society has made liberal contributions to the various enterprises of the church, among which was $250 toward the $50,000 monument at Philadelphia.

St. John's Cadets is an auxiliary to this society, and contains about 300 children between nine and sixteen years of age.

There are several Good Templar lodges also doing efficient work.

About sixteen years ago, by a united effort of the Protestant churches the Band of Hope was organized in Pittston and West Pittston, and it has since been very successfully carried on. The working of this society is under the direction of a board of council consisting of Charles Cool and James Searle.

FIRE COMPANIES.

Eagle Hose Company, No. 1, was chartered in October, 1858. The Pennsylvania Coal Company subsequently donated a building lot on Kennedy street, where the company erected a substantial brick building which is occupied also by Thistle Band. The company owns three hose carriages and 2,000 feet of hose.

The officers for 1880 were: William Quinn, president; C. F. Sutherland, vice-president; L. K. Streng, foreman; R. M. Hughes and Samuel Sands, assistant foremen; C. H. Cutler, secretary; and R. C. Hitchner, treasurer. The board of directors, consisting of twelve members, has general charge of the company property. The president of this board is Frederick Weiskerger.

Niagara Steam Fire Engine Company, No. 2, was organized on the 27th of July, 1875. The following were the first officers: President, Frank C. Mosier; vice-president, Peter Henry; secretary, James P. Reap; treasurer, Patrick Battle, and foreman, James S. Baker. The steam fire engine was built by the Silsby Manufacturing Company, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., and cost $5,000. It was presented to the company by the borough authorities on the occasion of the company's first anniversary, July 27th, 1876. The company has rendered valuable services and saved thousands of dollars' worth of property.

The present officers are: President, Benjamin Price; vice-president, Thomas W. Haines; secretary, John H. Mullen; treasurer, Cornelius Donnelly, and foreman, James S. Baker. The engine-room is on Water street, adjoining the town hall, and is a substantial brick structure erected by the borough authorities.

KNIGHTS OF HONOR.

This is a fraternity for purposes of mutual life insurance. It has a total membership in the United States of about 70,000, and in Pennsylvania of about 4,800.

Wyoming Lodge, No. 68, was instituted January 26th, 1875, with Charles B. Tinker as P. D.; S. H. Rhoades, D.; J. D. McMillan, V. D.; George H. Hagadone, A. D.; Samuel Barber, R.; William Kerr, F. R.; Joel Brenton, chaplain.

Black Diamond Lodge, No. 169, was instituted October 14th, 1876. The following-named gentlemen filled the offices of the lodge during the first term: G. L. Field, J. H. Houck, L. G. Wildoner, C. C. Porter, S. M. Field, jr., T. Howell, S. M. Field, B. Harding, C. L. Brown, James A. Space, E. F. Ballanger, Dr. J. N. Rice.

The membership of this lodge amounts to fifty-four.

Equity Lodge, No. 1,350, was organized January 20th, 1879, with twenty-seven charter members. The following officers were elected: Dictator, J. W. Artley; V. D., John Merritt; P. D., F. Weiskerger; A. D., D. L. Macfarlane; chaplain, H. Searle; guide, J. C. Barber; reporter, G. F. Sharkey; financial reporter, W. H. Young; treasurer, J. D. Green; guardian, J. H. Mosier; sentinel, W. H. Kerr. Meets second and fourth Monday nights of each month in the hall, on Main street.

THE ROYAL ARCANUM.

This is one of the numerous mutual life insurance fraternities of recent origin. Pittston Council, No. 134, was the first council organized in the Lackawanna or the Wyoming valley. At its organization, August 1st, 1878, the membership was composed of some of the most prominent citizens of the borough, and the following corps of officials was elected: James L. McMillan, P. R.; James H. Mosier, R.; John D. Green, V. R.; John G. Bryden, O.; Alexander Bryden, secretary; W. H. Young, collector; John Merritt, treasurer; B. G. Cooper, chaplain; Robert Bryden, guide; William B. Miller, warden; Cyrus T. Meaker, sentinel. Regular elections are held at the last stated meeting in December of each year. The present number of members is fifty, and is largely on the increase.

The leading officers in January, 1880, were: John

Merritt, R.; John W. Howarth, V. R.; John D. Green, P. R.; William B. Miller, orator; Willis Brenton, secretary; W. H. Young, collector; A. J. Griffith, treasurer; John Scrimgeour, chaplain; T. W. Kyte, guide; Robert Bryden, warden; J. H. Mosier, sen.; Dr. J. N. Rice, medical examiner; James H. Mosier, D. D. G. R.

Regular meetings of the council are held on the first and third Monday of each month at Royal Arcanum Hall, South Main street.

PITTSTON CHURCH HISTORIES.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church was organized in December, 1776, with thirty-two members, by the Rev. Mr. Benedict, from Warwick, Orange county, N. Y., and two of his parishioners. The membership included twelve who had been members of the Warwick church, namely: Jonathan Weeks, Abigail Weeks, Daniel Cash, Mary Cash, Ephraim Sanford, Samuel Roberts, Sarah Roberts, Daniel Roberts, Hezekiah Roberts, Ebenezer Roberts, Abigail Roberts, and Mary Roberts. Among the earliest, if not constituent members, were Sarah Mitchell (afterwards Frear), Abraham Frear, John Phillips, Isaac and Eleanor Tripp, Aulda Bates, Elisha and Martha Harding, David Brown, and Elijah and Lucinda Silsbee.

The Wyoming massacre scattered and nearly broke up the church, and though some of the members returned to their homes but few meetings were held at this time. In 1786 the church was reorganized—through the efforts of Elders Benedict and Finn—and took the name of the Pittstown Baptist Church.

It was united with the Philadelphia Baptist Association until 1801, when, no delegate appearing to represent the church, its name disappeared from their list.

From 1806 it was connected for twenty-seven years with the Abington Baptist Church, but retained all the privileges of an independent body, except that of the exclusion of members.

September 3d, 1833, this connection was dissolved. During the summer of that year meetings had been held in the church, resulting in the addition of a number of members. After the reorganization Rev. Charles Brown preached until the spring of 1834. In the same year the church joined the Bridgewater Association, reporting a total membership of 41. Elder W. K. Mott, of Hyde Park, was pastor from 1834 to 1848, preaching a part of the Sabbath once in two weeks. After this the church was destitute of ministerial labor much of the time, being supplied for a time by Elder John Boyd, of the Wilkes-Barre church, until 1853, when Elder Sanford Leach was called. He was pastor two years. The second protracted meeting was held in the winter and spring of 1855, and increased the membership. From the 22nd of November, 1865, Elder A. Francis preached in what was known as the "School-house on the Green," near the site of the present building, until June, 1857, and 52 were added to the church. From August following Elder S. J. Thomas was pastor about six months. After this Elder Mott was again called to the pastorate, in connection with the Hyde Park church, preaching here once every Sabbath until the spring of 1860. After 1860 Elder E. M. Alden, of Wilkes-Barre, supplied the church with great acceptance until December, 1863.

For eighty-seven years this church worshiped in private houses. December 27th, 1863, Elder John R. Shanafelt was called to the pastorate, and during the succeeding year, through the energy and perseverance of the ladies' society, a parsonage was built and occupied by the pastor. September 27th, 1865, the corner stone of the present church edifice was laid with appropriate exercises; addresses being delivered by the pastor, by Rev. T. D. Anderson, D. D., and Rev. H. G. Weston, D. D., of New York, and Rev. Dr. Bevan, of Scranton. On the 27th of June, 1867, the house was dedicated, Rev. Thomas Armitage, D. D., of New York, preaching the sermon. The whole cost of the house was about $14,000, of which Mr. Elisha A. Corey gave $5,000, and its erection marked a new era in the history of the church. In 1867 the total membership reported was 150.

Elder Shanafelt's pastorate closed November 1st, 1867. Rev. B. D. Thomas—recently from Wales—was called to the pastorate November 23d, 1868, and held it two years and seven months. The membership of the church increased to 209. From his departure until April, 1872, preaching was maintained by supplies. Rev. Emerson W. Bliss was then pastor three years. During his administration the house of worship was renovated and improved at an expense of $2,500.

For four months the church was again without a pastor. Rev. G. S. Bailey, D. D., was pastor from August 1st, 1875, until April, 1878. The following month the church called Rev. A. D. Willifer, who has been the pastor since June 1st, 1878. In this connection we present the names and date of service of the pastors of the church from its organization: James Benedict, 1776-85; James Finn, 1786-92; William Bishop, 1794-1806; John Miller, 1806-33; P. P. Brown and Charles Brown, 1833, 1834; William K. Mott, 1834-48; John J. Carey, 1853—6 months; John Boyd, 1853, 1854; Sanford Leach, 1854-56; E. A. Francis, 1856, 1857; S. J. Thomas, 1857, 1858; William K. Mott, 1858-60; E. M. Alden, 1860-63; J. R. Shanafelt, 1864-68; Benjamin D. Thomas, 1868-71; Emerson W. Bliss, 1872-75; Gilbert S. Bailey, 1875-78; A. D. Willifer, since 1878.

Probably from 1,000 to 1,200 persons have at some time been members of this church. The present membership is 360.

THE FIRST M. E. CHURCH OF PITSTON

dates back to the heroic days of Methodism. The earliest records of this circuit are of 1791, when Pittston was a part of the Wyoming charge. A class was formed here about 1806. Mrs. Fanny S. Carey, of Wyoming, joined this class in 1809, when there were but ten members, namely: The leader, Roger Searles; Mr. Miles and wife, Jared Marcy and wife, Jesse Gardner and wife, Lucy Drake, Elizabeth Bennett and Sarah Collins.

While this is the earliest record, it is possible that a class was formed and Methodist meetings held still earlier. There is no complete record of the class from 1813 to 1825, but it is remembered that Rev. George Peck preached his first sermon at Forty Fort August 9th, 1818, the day after his twenty-first birthday; and on Thursday, August 20th of that year, he preached at the house of Ebenezer Marcy, near the site of Pittston borough, and subsequently filled a regular preaching appointment at the Marcy house. In 1828 a class was organized by Rev. Joseph Castle at the house of Joseph Thompson, near where the Yatesville road intersects the road leading to Plains.

Meetings were held in private houses and school buildings until 1849. In August, 1846, a building committee consisting of James McFarlane, John D. Stark and Elisha Blackman was appointed. A site was donated for a church by Messrs. Johnson & Bennett, on Broad street. The church was dedicated in 1850. At that time Pittston station formed a part of Pittston circuit, but in 1856 it was made a separate station. Selah Stocking, a supernumerary or superannuated preacher, was in charge two years. The first parsonage was built in 1850 and 1851, on Parsonage street. In 1866 this was sold and a house and lot on Church and Broad streets bought for $4,600. The church property has been rated at $6,000, the parsonage at $5,000.

In connection with this charge is a church at Yatesville, which was built in 1865; a building thirty-two by forty feet, with basement, and when first completed valued at $2,500.

Among the pioneers of the church in Pittston were: William Ford, Rev. Thomas V. Tear (a local preacher) and his wife, who still survives; also Elisha Blackman, who at eighty-two years is still a faithful and devoted member of the church. This church has a membership of 314; a flourishing Sabbath-school with 275 pupils, under the efficient superintendence of C. R. Patterson. The following is a list of the preachers stationed at Pittston since it became a separate charge: 1856 and 1857, S. Stocking; 1858 and 1859, A. P. Mead; 1860 and 1861, Geo. M. Peck; 1862 and 1863, O. M. McDowall; 1864-66, W. J. Judd; 1867-69, Y. C. Smith; 1870-72, Ira T. Walker; 1873-75, Thomas Harrom; 1876-78, J. O. Woodruff; 1879, L. W. Peck; 1880, S. C. Fulton.

The first trustees of the Pittston church were Edwin F. Ferris, Elisha Blackman, James McFarlane, David Richards, William Ford, Francis Yates, Francis Watson, Isaac Thompson and Miner Swallow. The first board of the Yatesville church were William Perrin, Thomas Wattress, John Shields, Francis Yates, James Teasdale, Richard Boslock, Robert Shields, Alfred Day.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF PITSTON.

The first stated preaching in the valley by a Presbyterian minister was in Wilkes-Barre, in 1821. His appointments were for the most part in private houses. He received very considerable accessions to his church from Pittston. Pittston members would go down on Saturday afternoon to preparatory lecture, and remain until the Sabbath with hospitable Wilkes-Barre friends. The Presbyterian church of Wilkes-Barre has always been a kind of mother to her Pittston child.

This church was organized on the 25th of February, 1842, by the Presbyterians of Susquehanna, as the Presbyterian Church of Lackawanna, with 30 members, namely: John M., Eleazer and Catharine Atherton, Maria Coon, Jacob Whitbeck, Ruth Diltz, Myria Giddings, Fannie McCalpin, Sarah Austin, Parthenia Gordon, Nancy Race, Sarah Blackman, Anna Decker, Richard and Phebe Hollenback, John M. and Catharine Moore, Hanna Phillips, Nancy Kennedy, Sarah Shafer, Phebe Vandenberg, Hermon B. and Hannah Dailey, Maria Fellows, Mary Jeffreys, James W. Sands, Elijah Couch and wife, and James Helm. February 29th Elijah Couch and John M. Atherton were chosen elders, and Thomas B. Dailey deacon. They were ordained by Rev. John Dorrance.

Shortly after this the Presbytery of Luzerne was formed, and the church of Lackawanna was placed under its care. This church was incorporated January 22nd, 1848, as the First Presbyterian Church of Pittston. The organization was effected in what was then Harrison, now Scranton, in a small school-house that stood on the north side of Roaring brook, near where the large furnaces of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company stand. The church afterward moved into the old red school-house in North Pittston.

Until 1844 the preacher was the Rev. Charles Evans, a missionary. Since 1844 the church has been under the pastoral care of Rev. N. G. Parke.

A house of worship was built in 1846, and was a substantial brick building, costing about $2,000. In 1856 it was found to be too small, and not in the right place, and in 1857 the congregation left it for the house down town. A large proportion of the money for building the new house was collected outside of the congregation, chiefly in Wilkes-Barre, Easton, Belvidere, and Elizabeth. The principal contributors in the congregation were Zenus Barnum, Theodore Strong, Elisha Atherton and Peter Wagner. Others, including those residing in Scranton, did what they could. John D. Butler, Rev. John Dorrance, Mrs. Chester Butler and Mrs. Emily Hollenback aided nobly in the work; but for their sympathy and encouragement the enterprise would have failed. The building was dedicated free of debt. There is a flourishing Sabbath-school connected with this church.

The church very early established Sabbath-schools throughout the mission field. In Pittston there was a flourishing school, conducted by Mr. Strong in the old red school-house near the Junction in North Pittston. It was a union school, and the only Sabbath-school at the time (1844) in the township. There was a union school also in Scranton. Between these two points several schools were established, including one in the Hollenback school-house, not far from Taylorville, which at one time numbered over a hundred scholars.

In the Melanie Chapel, in North Pittston, erected recently and controlled by this church, a union Sabbath-school is maintained, and also a preaching service.

PITSTON WELSH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1847, and for nearly two years met in the dwellings of the members, most of whom lived in that portion of Pittston generally known as Welsh Hill. Late in 1849 a chapel was dedicated on Pine street, and David R. Lewis became the first settled pastor. His successors have been Evan B. Evans, Cadwallader Jones, Edward R. Lewis, John R. Williams, Owen Owens David Davis, Evan R. Jones, and since 1876 the present pastor, Rev. John Williams.

In 1860, during the pastorate of C. Jones, the Pine street chapel was sold to the borough for a school-house, and the present comfortable church edifice was erected on Lagrange street, at a cost of $3,000.

ST. JAMES EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The records of this parish trace back its beginning to "two or three" theological students of the Alexandria Seminary, in Virginia, who spent their vacation in 1848 as licensed colporteurs, and reported the names and need of the few Episcopalians whom they found to the Rev. W. Miles, of St. Stephen's church, Wilkes-Barre, by whose labors the parish came into existence. In the summer of 1849 the first service was held in the Welsh church; and on the 12th of August that year an organization was effected, under the name of St. James Church. The incorporators were 42 in number, as follows:

William S. Reddin, Benjamin D. Beyea, J. Williams, John R. Keeler Edward B. Hughes, J. H. Babeock, Henry Protvys, John Baker, John Howarth, jr., Thomas Simons, M. L. Everitt, George Everitt, C. R. Gorman, George W. Siekler, J. H. Bailey, Stephen B. Jenkins, Edward Clarkson, George Damon, Charles F. Ingham, William Tompkins, William R. Griffiths, William Ferguson, George Lazarus, Daniel Lloyd, Lagrange Damon, Miles Jacobs, T. B. Day, Joseph Knapp, Robert S. C. Knapp, Cornelius Stark, H. M. Damon, R. J. Wisner, R. S. Cox, E. J. Curtis, O. Johnson, John Love, William Howarth, Abram Bird, G. Underwood, H. A. Dow, Lewis M. Ketcheson, jr., and J. P. Schooly, jr.

Of these only Mr. R. K. Wisner is now a member. The first visit of the bishop, Alonzo Potter, took place in July, 1851, and the first confirmation June 12th, 1855, the candidates being Mrs. Anna E. Wisner and Mrs. Elizabeth Damon. In May, 1852, the parish was admitted into union with the diocesan convention of Pennsylvania. In that year the Rev. John Long, as a missionary, had charge of Pittston a few months. It was not till September, 1857, that a minister, the Rev. W. C. Robinson, succeeded Mr. Long. His ministry lasted a little over a year. During this time the congregation worshiped "in various school-houses on either side of the river," until a room was secured on the east side, over the store of Mr. Charles Law, which was fitted up for this purpose. The present church edifice was commenced on the 23d of February, 1858. Mr. Robinson found 23 families and 45 individuals "favorable to the church and attendants upon her worship." During his ministry the number was increased to "55 families, comprising over 100 persons." The Sunday-school then had 120 scholars and ten teachers, the scholars including fifty belonging to Methodists and Presbyterians. Mr. H. L. Phillips became the superintendent in the spring of 1858. In the latter part of 1858 Mr. Robinson resigned. From January, 1859, Rev. John A. Jerome was rector three years. March 27th, 1859, the congregation met for the first time in the basement of the church, and May 15th the church was formally opened.

From the autumn of 1862 Rev. Chandler Hare was the rector till May 22nd, 1871. He found the parish "in a very decrepit condition." His salary was only $300, with a missionary stipend of $175. The church building was in a neglected condition, "unfenced" and "unconsecrated," and had been sold for debt and was owned by R. J. Wisner and Henry Evans. Mr. Hare raised $1,200 to pay the debt, and on the 30th of June, 1863, the church was consecrated and thirty persons were confirmed. The salary was raised to $1,000. In 1870 the pew rental amounted to $1,350. Mr. Hare added an organ to the church, improved the site of the building by a wall and fence and enlarged its capacity by a transept, established a parochial school, and during his ministry two hundred and sixty persons were baptized and ninety-three confirmed. The number of communicants was largely increased and there was an active charity in all departments of church work. Mr. Hare ended his faithful ministry on the evening of the 22nd of May, 1871. He was succeeded by the Rev. S. H. Boyer, and he by the Rev. John K. Karcher. The Rev. George C. Foley, in the latter part of 1875, succeeded Mr. Karcher. He found the parish in a troubled state, but soon succeeded in restoring unity, and in gaining the affectionate regard of the congregation. He left at Easter, 1879, and was succeeded in August, 1879, by the Rev. George A. Kirkland.

The last report to the bishop showed one hundred and ten communicants; one hundred and fifty Sunday-school scholars, under sixteen teachers; offerings for the year $1,988.13, of which $1,730.59 were for parochial expenses. There are two societies connected with the church, the Ladies' Aid and the St. James Guild. The present wardens of the church are Messrs. Thomas E. Grier and John Howell.

THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH OF PITTSTON was organized in the spring of 1852, with a small membership, as the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Pittston. The first official board consisted of James Challenger, Obadiah B. Fear, Benjamin Harding, William Chivers, Mark Hilbert, James Brown, Thomas Fear and William Harding.

The congregation worshiped a number of years in a small building on Scotch hill. In 1861 a building lot was secured, and a small church built, on Broad street, near Foundry. In 1874 the church, to accommodate the increased membership, was enlarged to its present seating capacity of about 300. About 500 members have been connected with the church since its organization. The society is free from debt. The church is valued at $4,500, and the parsonage in the rear of it is worth $1,500.

The following ministers have officiated here: Revs.

George R. Hoer, John Gregory, Harvey Lounsberry, William West, George B. Dotson, Henry Palmer and Z. Du Bois Baird, the present pastor. The membership is 168.

The Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition. Its report for the year ending October 7th, 1879, gives the following figures; Scholars, 100; teachers, 13; officers, 6; volumes in library, 708; conversions during the year, 11, all of whom have joined the church in full membership.

In connection with the church there is a total abstinence organization, called the "Pittston Band of Hope," numbering 370 members, who abstain from tobacco as well as intoxicants.

In the fall of 1878 the church joined the New York Methodist Protestant Conference, having previously received its ministers from the Syracuse and Pittsburgh conferences.

ST. JOHN EVANGELIST CHURCH (ROMAN CATHOLIC)

on William street, Pittston, was built during the pastorate of Rev. John P. O'Shaughnessy, who was in charge from 1853 to 1859. It was dedicated October 17th, 1858. Mr. O'Shaughnessy was succeeded in May, 1869, by Rev. Patrick A. Prendergast, who was pastor until his death, Nov. 12th, 1861. His successor was the present pastor, Rev. John Finnen, who had been assistant to each of the previous pastors. Many improvements have been made under the present pastor. In 1864 a double brick building next the church was purchased and remodeled for school and Sisters' dwelling. In it the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart have taught a select school during the past fifteen years. An addition to the church was built in 1870, which made its seating capacity about 1,050. In the same year a commodious brick pastoral residence was erected, and in 1880 a new brick school was built, a portion of which is devoted to the use of the societies connected with St. John's church.

The Father Matthew Total Abstinence Benevolent Society was established in 1870 and is in a flourishing condition, having a larger roll of membership than any other Catholic total abstinence society in the State. The Young Men's Catholic Literary and Benevolent Society, established in April, 1872, has a membership of 200 and a library of 450 volumes.

GERMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The German Catholics of Pittston built a church in 1865. The first mass in it was on the last Sunday of May, 1865. Rev. Father P. C. Nagel, from Wilkes-Barre, supplies the pulpit.

ST. JOHN'S AND ST. PETER'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCHES.

On the 22nd of November, 1857, Rev. G. H. Vossler, then pastor in Wilkes-Barre, came to Pittston and organized a church with 50 members. Their meetings were held seven years in the school-house at Hamtown, a portion of Pittston township adjacent to Pittston borough. When a church building was contemplated dissensions arose regarding a location, and the congregation was divided; one part, under the old name, St. Peter's, erected a church building in Hamtown, and the other part organized as St. John's, and built the church on Wood street, in Pittston borough, at a cost of $2,000, the corner stone being laid on the 30th of October, 1863. The first sermon was preached the 16th of the following October. The ladies subsequently furnished the church, and the young men's society raised funds for a bell and an organ, the aggregate cost being $1,000. A Sunday-school was organized on the 27th of November, 1864, with 34 scholars and 8 teachers.

The St. Peter's building was also erected in 1864, and dedicated the 22nd of September. The ladies' society of this church raised funds to furnish the church and supply a bell. A Sunday-school has been maintained here since 1857. It now numbers 80 pupils and 12 teachers. Since its organization it has been under the superintendency of C. Schule.

Rev. G. H. Vossler was succeeded as pastor of St. Peter's church in 1858 by C. M. Gaeger; August 19th, 1861, C. Speidel; July 6th, 1862, C. Oefinger; October 11th, 1868, L. Gluber; May 1st, 1872, A. Sommer; September 26th, 1875, A. Richter; January 14th, 1877, F. Ehinger; August 1st, 1879, G. A. Struntz, the present pastor. Since the division these churches have been served on alternate Sabbaths by the same pastor.

PLEASANT VALLEY BOROUGH.

A PORTION of the township of Pittston was incorporated as Pleasant Valley borough under an act passed May 24th, 1871. The first meeting of the common council was held May 25th, 1872. The council has consisted of three members since the borough was organized. The president for each year is mentioned first, the secretary next.

The following gentlemen have been elected burgess: M. C. Early, 1872; P. F. Callahan, 1873; Henry P. Shales, 1874; William Schoonover, 1875; P. B. Brehony, 1876, 1877, 1879; Robert Scott, 1878; P. W. Early, 1880.

The population in 1880 was reported as 1,914.

EARLY SETTLERS.

Among the earliest settlers were James Brown, sen.; Aaron Riddle, who lived in an old farm house near the depot; and John Mitchel, in an old farm house near where No. 3 plane crosses Main street. Jacob Lidy had settled at Little York. James L. Giddings lived in a log house, and a Mr. Ellis on Thomas Weir's lot. He afterward built the house owned by James and William Brown. Mr. McAlpin and William Rau were also among these early settlers.

BUSINESS HOUSES.

A. McAlpin built a shop here in 1837 for making half bushel and peck measures by water power; subsequently a steam power was added and the manufacture of kegs and cigar boxes. This building was burned in 1854, and the new one erected was blown up in 1872, and immediately rebuilt. In 1874 the firm name was changed to McAlpin & Son, and the manufacture of pails and powder kegs was added to the business. C. A. McAlpine bought the shop in 1879, and the business is now the manufacture of kegs, butter packages, &c. The capacity of the machinery is 500 kegs and 500 pails per day.

Martin F. Reap was the first merchant. His store was on the site of Hollister's brick store, which was built by Mr. Reap in 1871. In 1869 Law & McMillan established a branch store at Marr. James McMillan was made a partner, and the firm name of James McMillan & Co. was adopted. The building occupied was erected in 1869, burned in 1875 and immediately rebuilt and enlarged. James Maloney established a general merchandise business here in 1873, making a specialty of groceries and provisions; his store was built in 1875. John King, formerly a clerk with James Maloney, established a similar business in 1876. Thomas McLaughlin began building a store here in 1871, but his death prevented its completion until 1875. It is now occupied and a good business done by his sons. In 1871 J. H. Swoyer built the store now owned by Charles A. Jones. It was then known as the company store. From 1870 to 1873 Mr. Swoyer was very prominently identified with the business interests of Pleasant Valley. In 1877 Mr. Jones was manager for Mr. Swoyer. The next year he bought a half interest in the store, and January 1st, 1879, succeeded to the whole of the business.

SCHOOLS.

There are six well organized public schools in the borough, with an average daily attendance of 425 pupils. Two gentlemen and four lady teachers are employed.

POSTAL FACILITIES.

The earlier residents were accommodated with mail by the office at Pittston. Subsequently the department established a mail route from Pittston to Pleasant Valley. James McMillan was appointed postmaster in April, 1871, and Andrew L. Flock carried the mail daily until July, 1872. The office was named Marr in allusion to James H. Marr, the chief clerk in the first assistant postmaster general's office.

In 1873 a daily mail route was established from Old

Forge to Marr, and now a daily mail is supplied to all these communities by rail.

LODGES, SOCIETIES AND COMPANIES.

Nay Aug Lodge, No. 784, I. O. O. F. was instituted on the 19th of December, 1871, with twenty charter members. The first officers were: William Barnes, N. G.; Lyman K. Drake, V. G.; John House, R. S.; John B. Swartz, A. S.; James B. Wood, treasurer; G. M. Snyder, S. P. G.

The present officers are: James Webber, N. G.; Theodore Smith, V. G.; John Hailstone, R. S.; John Hastie, F. S.; David Muir, A. J.; C. E. Rolls, treasurer.

The lodge meets each Saturday evening at Odd Fellows' Hall, which was built in 1875.

The Emerald Benevolent Association is represented at Pleasant Valley by branch No. 36, which was organized on the 5th of October, 1873, with 25 members. The object of this society is to furnish relief for the family of deceased members, and weekly benefits to the needy and disabled. It is under the auspices of St. Mary's church, Rev. M. F. Crane being the spiritual director. Michael Whalen was elected first president; M. T. Hoban, secretary; Lawrence Morrahan, treasurer; John D. McCarthy, marshal.

The membership is now about 175. The present officers are: John D. McCarthy, president; John Mead, secretary; James Dougherty, treasurer; John McKeone, marshal. The stewards in charge of disbursements are Patrick Loughery and John McCabe; John Mead, James Ward and Patrick Doran, trustees.

Marr Lodge, No. 1,131, I. O. G. T., was instituted April 28th, 1876, chiefly through the efforts of Mr. James Graham. The first officers were: Robert Oliver, W. C. T.; Mrs. James McMillan, W. V. T.; James Hastie, W. Chap.; Andrew Flock, W. R. S.; John Anderson, W. A. S.; John Hastie, W. F. S.; James McMillan, W. T.; William Dick, W. M.; S. O. Ella Flock, W. D. M.; James Graham, W. I. G.; Robert Anderson, W. O. G.; Mrs. Allan McDonald, W. R. H. S.; John Connor, P. W. C. T.

The present officers, in the same order as the first, are: Robert Anderson, Mrs. Simon Bouse, James Hastie, James Anderson, S. O. Ella Flock, John Sutcliffe, Mrs. Andrew Flock, Frank Snyder, Mary McMillan, Marion Graham, Charles Cranston, Frances Porter, Jean McCrindle, John McCrindle.

The lodge meets Tuesday evening of each week, at Webber's Hall, and for a time had 108 members in good standing, the largest membership in the county.

Father Matthew T. B. A.—A preliminary meeting was held in school-house No. 1 on the 26th of October, 1876, when about thirty Catholic young men enrolled themselves as the nucleus of a Temperance Beneficial Association. John Meade was chosen president, with P. B. McKune, secretary and P. B. McKune, scn., treasurer.

On the 5th of the following month Rev. M. F. Crane administered the pledge of total abstinence to thirty-five members, and he became the spiritual director of the society. The membership has nearly doubled, and a suitable hall has been provided for their meetings on the first and third Sundays of each month.

The present officers are: Rev. M. F. Crane, spiritual director; John McHale, president; John McKune, secretary; Patrick Doran, treasurer.

The Father Matthew Cadets is an auxiliary to the T. B. A., numbering about seventy Catholic boys, who as they arrive at the proper age are eligible to membership in the latter. This society was organized in the autumn of 1879, and is under the spiritual direction of Rev. M. F. Crane.

Knights of Honor.—On the evening of November 23d, 1876, Pleasant Valley Lodge, 170, of this order was formed. From a membership of fifty-three the following officers were elected: Gilbert Alexander, past dictator; G. M. Snyder, dictator; David Cranston, vice-dictator; F. J. Boon, assistant dictator; John H. Christian, reporter; James Morse, financial reporter; Thomas McCrindle, treasurer; George W. Schales, chaplain; William Brown, guide; James Allen, guardian; George Lampman, sentinel.

The present leading officers are: James Allen, D; David Cranston, reporter, and Gilbert Alexander treasurer. Lodge meetings are held in Odd Fellows' Hall.

Band.—The Father Matthew Silver Cornet Band is a brilliant young band of fifteen pieces, organized in 1872. James Gilhooley is president; James Jennings secretary, and William Sammon leader.

The Emmet Guards.—In June, 1879, this company was organized in Emmet Hall, with thirty-eight of the most enterprising young men of Irish descent as members. The list increased to forty-five, and in July James Quinn was elected captain, P. W. Early first lieutenant, and James Quinlan 2nd lieutenant. The non-commissioned officers are P. H. Flaherty, Patrick Chambers, Peter Farrell, Edward Murphy and Thomas Herbert, sergeants; John Walsh, Frank McGuire and John Flaherty, corporals. The company is fully uniformed and equipped, armed with Springfield rifles.

Company E, 9th Regiment, P. S. M. contains 60 privates and a full corps of officers. It was uniformed in August, 1879, and during the following month was armed with Springfield rifles. The following is the list of officers: Chaplain, Charles A. Jones; 1st lieutenant, Charles W. Fisher; 2nd lieutenant, Ebenezer Frew; sergeants—J. Wesley Sanders, Charles A. McAlpine, James Morse, Adelbert M. Sanders, Thomas F. Currie; corporals—George Lampman, Eugene McAlpine, Thomas M. Cranston, Michael Reap, Simon Rumage, John T. Mitchell, Lemuel B. McAlpine, James Murdock.

CHURCHES.

St. Mary's congregation numbers about 250 families, in the borough and the adjoining townships of Marcy and Lackawanna. It formerly belonged to St. John's congregation, Pittston, and was regularly attended by the priests of that place till November, 1875, when as a separate parish it was placed in charge of its present pastor, Rev.

M. F. Crane. Previous to 1874 service was occasionally held, amid many difficulties and inconveniences, in No. 1 school-house. Rev. John Finnan, pastor St. John's, Pittston, secured from the New York & Pittston Coal Company two building lots, on which he caused to be built the present beautiful and substantial frame church. It is in the Roman style of architecture, 48 by 96 feet, and has seats for over 700 persons. The corner stone was laid in 1871 by Bishop O'Hara, and three years later the church was dedicated by him under the patronage of the ever blessed Virgin.

Since Rev. Father Crane has been placed in charge the congregation has erected a pastoral residence equal to any other dwelling in the borough, and has bought and enclosed, at a cost of $1,500, five acres of ground for burial purposes, and made many improvements around the church and pastoral residence.

Langcliffe Presbyterian Church.—About the middle of the village, in a spacious open lot beautified with shade trees, is the Langcliffe Presbyterian church. An old and honorable English family, the Dawsons of Langcliffe, held an interest some years ago, as partners in the New York and Pittston Coal Company, in the lands now worked by the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and the name of this church commemorates the interest which they took in the religious welfare of the people settled on the coal lands. Soon after the opening of the mines a member of the family took steps toward forming a church. Those interested were chiefly Presbyterians of Scottish birth and members of the church at Pittston, but others of American birth and Presbyterian faith acted with them. Among these persons may be mentioned James McMillan, William MacCrimble, Thomas Weir, George M. Snyder and Albert MacAlpine. They were authorized to select a lot on the company's estate. The lot chosen, 150 by 300 feet, together with $600 from Miss Dawson, was donated to trustees of the Presbyterian church. The handsome edifice which Miss Dawson suggested, and to which she had so liberally contributed, appropriately bears the name of her English patrimonial estate "Langcliffe."

Mr. Edwin F. Brown of New York, was another early benefactor, furnishing the parsonage lot for a merely nominal sum, and giving an elegant silver communion service, consisting of four patens, four cups and a flagon, in memory of his son.

The entire cost of church and parsonage was $6,000. The property is unencumbered.

The congregation was fully organized as a Presbyterian church on the 18th of September, 1870, by a committee of the Presbytery of Lackawanna, twenty-four persons presenting letters of dismissal from the church at Pittston. William Anderson, lately elder of the United Presbyterian church at Creetown, Scotland, was the first elder, Thomas Weir, a Scotchman from Lanarkshire, being associated with him. Early in 1872 Rev. Archibald S. Stewart was installed as joint pastor. He graduated in theology at Princeton, New Jersey, in 1856, and preached at Farmville, Fort Washington and Grefton, Wis., and at Wallburg, N. Y., before coming here. He died in his 57th year at Langcliffe parsonage January 1st, 1876. On the 16th of June, 1876, Rev. Andrew Brydie was installed, having been called from Scotland. He is a Master of Arts of the University of Edinburgh and a graduate of the New College of Edinburgh.

The several organizations of the church for Christian work are vigorously maintained. The membership has increased from 24 to 102. The Sabbath-school is effectively officered. The attendance is about 150.

A wing of the church and Sabbath-school of Langcliffe has been established in Moosic. Mr. Brydie holds service there every Sunday afternoon, and a flourishing Sunday-school is carried on by Mr. William E. Olds, of the Moosic Powder Company. The library, maintained by the generosity of an individual, is one of the finest in the county.

PLAINS TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed November 10th, 1851, from Wilkes-Barre and Pittston, and covers an area of 15 square miles.

It was originally owned and occupied by the Wanamie tribe of the Delaware Indians, whose chief was named Jacob. He lived on that level portion of the township near the borough of Parsons, and the name Jacob's Plains was given to that locality; but upon the formation of the township the old Indian's name was left out.

The original Wyoming settlers, who came from Connecticut in the summer of 1762, located in Plains. They arrived, to the number of about two hundred, in August, and settled just above the mouth of Mill creek, building a village of small cabins. The Delaware Indians, who were familiar and friendly, had been cultivating some small clearings, but except these the pioneers found the forest prevailing. They sowed a few acres of wheat and in November returned to New England. Early the next spring they returned with their families and others, bringing some live stock and provisions.

During the summer of 1763 a number of the Iroquois came among the Delawares in the garb of friendship, and fired the dwelling of Teedyuscung, which was consumed, and the venerable Delaware chieftain perished in the flames. The culprits charged the crime upon the colonists, and the aggrieved Delawares resolved to avenge themselves. On the 15th of October they fell upon the unsuspecting pioneers in the fields, killed twenty or thirty of them, took several prisoners, and drove off the live stock. The survivors who were not captured fled to the mountains, while the savages burned their houses. The fugitives, destitute of every preparation for a journey, had no alternative but to strike out into the wilderness for a trip of two hundred and fifty miles to their old homes in New England, and for several succeeding years the history of Plains is a blank.

In January, 1769, Amos Ogden, John Jennings and Charles Stewart leased of the proprietaries 100 acres of land, and came on and took possession of the improvements made by the Connecticut people who were driven away by the Indians in 1763. Near the mouth of Mill creek Ogden and his party built a block house, which was called Fort Ogden. The Connecticut people, learning of the action of the Ogden party, returned in the spring of 1769, and from that time till the final adjustment of the difficulties between the Susquehanna Company and the proprietaries of Pennsylvania, there was an almost continuous series of victories and defeats for each claimant.

Thus it will be seen that Plains, in point of settlement, is the senior township in the valley; and that her soil was the first to be moistened by the tears of affliction and sorrow, and drank the blood and entombed the bodies of the first victims of savage hate in the bloody annals of the Wyoming valley.

Notwithstanding the reverses which the pioneers had suffered, the year 1773 found them in possession of Plains and Mill creek. Yet in the spring their provisions were so nearly exhausted that five persons were selected to go to the Delaware river near Stroudsburgh for supplies, that being the nearest point at which meal and flour could be obtained. John Carey, then a lad of sixteen, volunteered as one of the party. On this journey fifty miles of mountainous forest, intersected by deep ravines and numerous streams, including the rapid and ice-burdened Lehigh, had to be traversed. The destitution relieved by this arduous expedition gave way to plenty when the shad-fishing season arrived, and a permanent supply of breadstuffs was insured by the construction of a grist-mill by Nathan Chapman in the spring of 1773. He was granted the site of the Hollenback stone mill and forty acres around it. "The irons for the mill were brought by Mr. Hollenback, in his boat, from Wright's ferry, and on the way up the river Lazarus Young was drowned."

Very soon after this, by a vote of the people, "all the privileges of the stream called Mill creek, below Mr. Chapman's mill was granted to Stephen Fuller, Obadiah Gore, jr., and Mr. Seth Marvin, to be their own property, with full liberty of building mills and flowing a pond—but so as not to obstruct or hinder Chapman's mills—provided they have a saw mill ready to go by the first day of November, 1773; which gift shall be to them, their heirs and assigns forever." This was the first saw-mill built on the upper waters of the Susquehanna. As soon as the mills were built and in operation, a ferry was established at the mouth of Mill creek, to Forty Fort, which is still in existence.

The old Indian fortifications, as they are called, were on the river flats, on what is now known as the Hancock property, and on a direct line from Swoyer hill to the Susquehanna river, just northwest from the Burroughs colliery. The outlines of the works are still visible. The form was that of a four-bastion battery, well calculated for defence if properly located.

There are three places in the township that were once known as burying grounds. The Gore burying ground was on the flats, between the old plank road and the canal, northeast of the Henry colliery. Another was near the M. E. church, in the northern part of the township, and the third in Wilcox's field, near Plains village. These grounds have long since been abandoned, and no stone marks the resting place of the dead.

The pioneer "weaver of the Plains" was James Campbell, a Scotch-Irishman. He was an expert in the art of weaving, and was noted for the fancy work that he turned out from his loom. In 1815 George Gore worked at blacksmithing on the flats, near the Gore burying ground.

The Wilkes-Barre Water Works reservoir, on Laurel hill, a short distance above the borough of Parsons, was built in 1858. Calvin Parsons, of Parsons borough, was one of the commission that located it (appointed in 1852), and the only one living in 1880.

The following justices of the peace have been elected for the township of Plains: James Williams, 1857 and 1862; John J. Thompson, 1864; John C. Williams, 1867, 1874; Patrick Cox, 1870; Jenkins B. Jones, 1872; M. C. Vaughn, 1876; Evan T. Morgan, 1877; Thaddeus M. Conniff, 1879.

The population of the township in 1880 was 5,354, against 4,018 in 1870.

THE ANTHRACITE OF PLAINS TOWNSHIP.

We are indebted to Pearce's Annals of Luzerne for a few items in relation to the use of anthracite coal in this township. "In 1769 Obadiah Gore and his brothers came from Connecticut with a body of settlers, and the same year used anthracite coal in his blacksmith shop." This appears to be the first coal known to have been used in this township. Gore's shop was on the river flats, near where Enterprise colliery is located.

"In 1876 two Durham boats were sent from below to Wyoming for coal, which was purchased from Mr. R. Geer, and mined from the opening, now the property of Mr. John Wells Hollenback, above Mill creek." This appears to have been the first shipment of coal from this township.

In 1808 Henry Stark, of this township, having witnessed the burning of anthracite coal in the grate at Judge Jesse Fell's, returned home and tried the experiment with success, and became the pioneer coal burner of Plains township.

"In 1813 Col. George M. Hollenback sent two four-horse loads of coal from the mine now worked by Colonel H. B. Hillman, above Mill creek, in this county, to Philadelphia." This appears to have been the first shipment of coal from this township to Philadelphia, and the first sent out by teams.

"In 1813 Colonel G. M. Hollenback employed Daniel Gould to mine two ark loads of coal from the bed above Mill creek, at 75 cents per ton."

"In 1814 Crandall Wilcox entered the trade and sent several ark loads of coal down the river from the old Wilcox mine in Plains township."

The Hillman shaft and breaker are in the northwest part of the township, in Mill creek valley. There were employed at this shaft in 1878 66 men and boys inside, and 27 outside the mine. The coal mined (in 107 days) amounted to 30,000 tons. This mine was operated by H. B. Hillman, who was also the general superintendent. George Faurick was mine boss, and George H. Hillman outside foreman.

Enterprise colliery is on the south side of the canal, below Swoyer's hill, and in 1878 produced 64,500 tons of coal. There were employed inside the mine 171 men and boys, and 90 men and boys outside. The number of days worked was 106. The colliery is operated by the Forty Fort Coal Company, with J. H. Swoyer as superintendent, and Charles Leonard as assistant. William McCulloch was inside and John Eustice was outside foreman, and Robert Hyslop mine boss.

Wyoming colliery is located at what is known as Port Bowkley, on the North Branch canal, and is operated by the River Side Coal Company, who in 1878 employed 262 men and boys inside the mine, and 128 on the outside. They worked 134 days, and mined and shipped 127,250 tons. J. H. Swoyer is the general superintendent; William McCulloch inside foreman, Jenkins B. Jones mine boss, and Philip Wintersteen outside foreman.

The Henry colliery is north of Wyoming colliery, on the canal. There are employed inside the mine 254 men and boys, and 88 on the outside. The mines were worked 160 days in 1878, and there were mined 110,000 tons of coal. The colliery was operated by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, with Frederick Mercur as superintendent, Thomas E. Lewis mine boss, and William E. Lines outside foreman.

Mineral Spring colliery is on the line of the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad, southeast side of the township, and is operated by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, with Frederick Mercur superintendent. This colliery was idle during 1878.

Midvale colliery is also operated by the same company, and was idle in 1878.

Mill Creek colliery is operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, with A. H. Vandling as general superintendent, and C. Scharar as assistant and inside foreman. John E. Cook is mine boss, and William Foote outside foreman. There were employed in 1878 251 men and boys on the inside, and 134 on the surface. The mine was worked 154 days, and produced 158,478 tons of coal.

Pine Ridge colliery employed in 1878 on the inside 259 men and boys, and 132 on the surface. The mine was operated in 1878 by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. A. H. Vandling was general superintendent, John T. Moore mine boss, S. W. Franklin outside foreman, and Christopher Scharar inside foreman. This mine produced in 1878 114,066 tons of coal.

Laurel Run colliery was operated in 1878 by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, with A. H. Vandling as superintendent. Hugh McDonald was mine boss, D.

W. Kemble outside foreman, and C. Scharar inside foreman and assistant superintendent. There were employed in the mine 196 men and boys, and 106 on the outside. The mine was worked 125 days, and produced 100,978 tons of coal.

Baltimore slope was worked in 1878 with 196 men and boys inside, and 122 on the outside. In 137 days they mined 102,818 tons. The slope was operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. A. H. Vandling was general superintendent, C. Scharar assistant superintendent and inside foreman, Thomas Tamblin mine boss, and John Bowers outside foreman.

Hollenback colliery was operated in 1878 by R. S. Pool, who was also general superintendent and mine boss, and John Bowers outside foreman. There was no coal shipped from this mine in 1878.

Prospect colliery, in the southwest corner of the township, near the mouth of Mill creek, is operated by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, with Frederick Mercur as general superintendent, and Charles Leonard assistant; William Samuel is mine boss, and William Patten outside foreman. In 1878 there were 289 men and boys employed under ground, and 167 on the surface. The mine was worked 150 days, and produced 135,000 tons.

The Wilcox colliery is in Plains village. It is a small colliery, and not reported by the mine inspector.

WELSH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized in the school-house of school district No. 3, in May, 1869, by Rev. David Davies, D. D., late of London and at that time pastor of the Welsh Congregational church at Pittston, and the Rev. David Parry, of Providence, Pa. The original members were George D. Price and wife, Hopkins J. Jenkins and wife, Evan E. Davies and wife, William Samuel, William Griffith, David W. Davies, Thomas Butler, Evan R. Davies and Mrs. Jenkins B. Jones.

The first officers of the church were Hopkins J. Jenkins, deacon and treasurer, and William Samuel, secretary.

The school house in district No. 3 was used by the society about two years. The work of building a church was commenced in February, 1871, the miners (who were then out of work on a strike) quarrying the stone for and building the foundation walls. Most of the carpenter work was also done by the miners, under the supervision of Andrew A. Williams and Hiram Shiffer, and in a short time a church 24 by 36 feet was completed at a cost of less than $500 in cash. Previous to the building of the church the society was without a regular pastor, being served only by the three local preachers belonging to the church, viz., George D. Price, Jonathan J. Jones and David J. Jones. In 1871, soon after the completion of the church edifice, Rev. Dr. Davies, of Pittston, was engaged as pastor. He served two years. During 1873 and 1874 there was no pastor. Deacons Griffith and Jenkins died, and the membership decreased rapidly. In 1875 Jenkins J. Lewis and George Tasker were elected deacons, and Rev. John W. Williams, of House built by LORD BUTLER, Corner Northampton and River Str's., Wilkes-Barre, Pa., about the year 1787, taken down in March 1867.

Parsons, the present pastor, was engaged, and the church revived.

Early in 1877 the church building was moved from Miner's Station to Miner's Hill, about three-fourths of a mile. John Samuel, of Taylorsville, did the work for $235. In June the church was again ready for occupancy, having been enlarged and modernized. It is valued at $2,000. The membership of the society numbers 96. Deacons J. J. Lewis and George Tasker were killed by an explosion of gas at Prospect shaft, October 8th, 1878. The present deacons are William R. Jones and Thomas R. Powell, and David J. Morgan is church clerk. The Sunday-school was organized in the spring of 1871, by Jenkins B. Jones, the present superintendent, and had an average attendance of 40 pupils, meeting in the school-house occupied by the society. It now has services in the church, and numbers 120 members.

PLAINS VILLAGE.

Plains, known for many years as Jacob's Plains and Plains Post-Office, was no doubt settled about as soon as any portion of the township northeast from the mouth of Mill creek. Among the early settlers were John Cortright, Elisha Blackman, James Stark, Thomas Williams, — Richardson and Samuel Carey.

The first tavern we have any account of was kept by John Cortright, in 1815, on the site now occupied by Hancock & MacKnight's store, on the south corner of Main and Merritt streets. Elisha Blackman and a Mr. Richardson kept tavern here at an early date. The first blacksmith in Plains village was James Canady. His shop stood where is now the west side of Jonathan R. Williams's door-yard, next to Dr. Shive's yard. His house was on the site now occupied by Mr. Williams's house, on the west corner of Main and Merritt streets.

The pioneer store was kept by James Stark, on the hill above the village. This was in 1812 or 1813. The first frame school-house was built here about 1820, and stood near the site of the present school-house. The first school was kept in the house standing north of the present school-house, owned by Crandall Wilcox. There is now a two-story school-house, in which a graded school is kept. It was built in 1866 and 1867. The pioneer postmaster was one Cortright. He kept the office at his residence, about a mile north of the present office. The present postmaster is O. B. MacKnight. In 1808 Henry Stark, of Plains, succeeded in burning anthracite coal in a grate. This was the second successful attempt, and was undertaken soon after Judge Fell's success. The first resident physician was Dr. P. C. Shive, who resides on Main street, nearly opposite the Presbyterian church. He came in 1867.

The village now boasts six churches, one general dry-goods and grocery store (Hancock & MacKnight's), several groceries, one hardware store, two physicians (Drs. P. C. Shive and A. A. Barton), two blacksmith and wagon shops, a tailor shop, and the Wilcox mine or slope, opened in 1874-75 by John D. Wilcox, and now worked by Mr.

Cortright. The coal is drawn from the slope to the small breaker by horse power attached to a windlass.

CHURCHES OF PLAINS VILLAGE.

Methodist Episcopal.—Previous to 1843 the Methodist Episcopal society at Plains village was a part of a charge which is now three societies, viz.: Plainsville, Plains and Parsons. In 1843 that portion of the old society living at and near what is now Plains decided to form a society at that place and build a church. The following extract is taken from the original records of the society at Jacob's Plains:

"At a meeting held at the Plains school-house April 11th, 1843, to take into consideration the erection of a house for public worship, the following were present: James Hancock, James Stark, John Abbott, Jonathan R. Williams, Warren Wilcox, Ezra Williams, William Apple, Samuel Wilcox, John Searle, William Abbott, B. Bailey, D. G. Bailey, Benjamin Cortright and S. F. Abbott. The meeting was organized by placing Rev. John Seys, the preacher in charge, in the chair, and D. G. Bailey secretary. Decided—we are able and willing to build a meeting house. The question arising shall it be a Methodist or a union house, after consideration it was agreed that it be a Methodist Episcopal house, with the understanding that all truly religious denominations of Christians have a right to occupy the house by asking and obtaining leave of the trustees, at any time that may not interfere with the regular appointment of the Methodist preacher in charge."

April 15th, 1843, James Stark, John Carey and James Hancock were appointed a building committee. They contracted with Gilbert Barnes to build the church, except the foundation, for $940. It was built on a lot north of the present parsonage, donated by John Carey, and subsequently moved to its present location, on Main street.

July 7th, 1843, Benjamin Bailey, John Carey, James Stark, John Searle, and William Apple were elected trustees. The church was completed and dedicated December 14th, 1843, by Rev. Silas Comfort, then presiding elder.

The following named preachers have served this society in connection with the Plainsville or brick church, which is a part of the charge: Rev. John Seys, 1843, 1844; Ira Wilcox, E. B. Tewney, John Mulchahey, O. P. Morse, Erastus Smith, Asa Brooks, William Reddy, Charles Giddings, George Peck, Roger Moyster, a local preacher; Samuel M. Bronson, Jonathan K. Peck, Henry Wheeler, Luther Peck, William Kealy, Miner Swallow, J. S. Lewis, Jacob D. Woodruff, F. A. King, N. J. Hawley, W. J. Hill, H. H. Dresser and J. L. Race, the present pastor, who was appointed in the spring of 1879. The local preachers residing on the charge are J. C. Williams, W. A. Wagner and James Jones. The class leader at Plains is James Jones. The trustees are John Wilcox, O. B. MacKnight, W. A. Wagner, W. H. Bennett, J. C. Williams, Thomas Laidler and W. S. Stark. The value of the church property (which is unencumbered) is, including the parsonage, $3,500. The membership of the church is 90. The Sunday-school has been kept up from about the time the church was built. The superintendent is W. E. Doron, and J. H. Race is assistant. There are 200 scholars.

Presbyterian Church of Plains.—November 18th, 1869, Revs. N. Park, F. B. Hodge and A. C. Smith met at Plains village by recommendation of the Presbytery, and organized the following named persons into the "First Presbyterian Church of Plains": James Steele and wife, James Allen and wife, Mrs. Jane Smith, Maggie Smith, John Granlow, Abraham True, Mrs. Annie True, William Hazle and wife, and E. M. Jones. The ruling elders elected were James Allen and James Steele.

The corner stone of the present church edifice was laid November 19th, 1871. The building is of wood, with a brick basement in which are suitable rooms for Sunday-school, lectures and social meetings. The auditorium can seat 350. The edifice was dedicated in October, 1872, having cost $7,200 for building and furniture.

Rev. A. C. Smith was pastor from the organization of the church till 1876; then Rev. A. L. Loder, until the summer of 1879. Rev. Henry H. Welles, of Forty Fort, has since supplied the pulpit. The membership is about 60. The ruling elders are E. M. Jones and Garvin Burt. The church property is estimated to be worth $8,000.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1869, with Edward M. Jones as superintendent, and about 40 scholars and teachers. The present superintendent is Matthew Gray. The school now numbers about 75 scholars and teachers, with an average attendance of 60.

Primitive Methodist.—The Primitive Methodist society at Plains was organized in 1870, by Rev. J. H. Acornly, with the following members: John Brew and wife, John Hays and wife, Aaron Hilbert and wife, Daniel Lewis and wife, John Goss and wife, Samuel Beven and wife, — Walker and wife, John Hays, jr., Joseph Goss and William Hilbert.

The first meetings were held at the residences of John Carnell and John Ward, in the village of Plains. Then Kaufman Hall was used about two and a half years. In 1873 the present church was built, at a cost of $1,300, and dedicated by Rev. J. Barker. It was built on land owned by John D. Wilcox, and in 1879 was moved to its present lot, donated to the society by Hon. C. A. Miner. The cost of moving and repairing the building was $800.

The society was chartered in 1876, with the following trustees, who are still in office: John Wall (president), Evan T. Morgan (secretary), William Hilbert, Daniel Lewis, John Brew, John Bath and Joseph Goss.

The membership in 1880 was 35. The value of the church property is put at $2,500.

The following preachers have served this church and congregation: Rev. John H. Acornly, from the organization of the society till the dedication of the church in 1873; Rev. C. H. McKechnie, from that time until 1875. Rev. J. Beach then preached six months, and Rev. H. Russell until the annual conference of 1879, when Rev. Moses Harvey, the present pastor, was appointed.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1873, with Samuel Beven as superintendent. The present membership is 85. Evan T. Morgan is superintendent, and the average attendance is 67 pupils.

Advent Christian Church.—This church was organized Nov. 2nd, 1875, by Elder I. N. Wilfong, of Philadelphia. In 1876 the society built a chapel in Plains village, seating 200. It was of wood, cost $1,400, and was dedicated October 15th, 1876, by Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, Mass. The lot was donated by William T. Merritt, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. At the dedication the membership of the society had more than doubled. Rev. John E. Cook, one of the elders of the church, has filled the pulpit nearly all the time since the dedication of the church, with satisfaction to the congregation, and is the present pastor. The membership is 24; value of church property $2,000. The Sunday-school was organized about 1876; there are 60 pupils and 10 teachers.

SECRET SOCIETIES AT PLAINS.

Sodi Lodge, No. 670, I. O. of O. F. was instituted July 19th, 1869, with the following charter members, who were also the first officers of the lodge: Mark Walker, N. G.; William H. Young, V. G.; Joseph Embleton, secretary; Peter Reisorck, A. S.; Mark Wilson, treasurer; L. D. Mott, S. warden; John E. Cook, conductor; Silas Derr, J. warden; John Scott, O. G., and Samuel Maiden, I. G.

For the first year meetings were held in the hall over the shop of J. Bell. Since then the lodge has occupied the upper story over Hancock & MacKnight's store. The regular meeting is held each Tuesday evening. The lodge has 106 members. The presiding officers have been Mark Walker, William H. Young, John E. Cook, Mark Wilson, William H. Bennett, Silas Derr, James H. Jones, James D. Patten, David J. Morgan, Stern G. Learn, Evan T. Morgan, Edward Ayers, John Wall, James Martin, William Hurn, Simpson Wharton, Robert S. Mulligan, Richard Moore and James Gartley.

The elective officers of the lodge in 1880 were: John Ralston, N. G.; Thomas Edwards, V. G.; James Martin, recording secretary; Thomas Davies, assistant secretary; and John D. Wilcox, treasurer.

Star of America Encampment, I. O. of O. F. of Pennsylvania, was instituted December 14th, 1871, with the following charter members and officers: Peter C. Shive, C. P.; William H. Bennett, H. P.; William S. Stark, S. W.; John E. Cook, J. W.; James H. Jones, scribe; Mark Wilson, treasurer; and Robert Hayes, sentinel.

The regular communications of the encampment are held in Odd Fellows' Hall, on the second and fourth Friday evening of each month. The encampment numbers thirty-five members.

The following were the elective officers for 1879: Silas Derr, C. P.; William George, H. P.; John Ralston, S. W.; William Pennhale, J. W.; David Morgan, scribe; John D. Wilcox, treasurer.

True Ivorites Order.—"Rhys Ap Tervdur," No. 17, of subdivision C, was instituted in the hall of J. B. Jones, September 23d, 1873, with the following-named charter members as first officers: President, David M. Jones; vice-president, James Herring; secretary, David J. Jones; treasurer, David Lewis; steward, David S. Morgan; conductor, John D. Hopkins; watchers, John Hughes and Daniel D. Hopkins; trustees, Jonathan Jones and George D. Price.

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

JENKINS AND PLAINS TOWNSHIPS, PARSONS AND YATESVILLE BOROUGHES.

JOHN ABBOTT.

John Abbott, whose portrait we give, was born in Wilkes-Barre township, Luzerne county, Pa., April 8th, 1800. His father, Stephen Abbott, was the son of John Abbott who came to the valley in 1769 and built the first dwelling house in the borough of Wilkes-Barre. In 1812 the old fire-place was still to be seen on the corner lot of Northampton and Main streets, from whence he removed to the Plains in 1774 and settled on the same farm afterward occupied by Stephen Abbott during his life, and where he died. After the battle of Wyoming, in 1778, John Abbott returned to his previous home on the Plains, with a view to gather and save of his crops what the Indians had left; and while engaged in this work in company with Isaac Williams, a brother of the late Thomas Williams, was attacked and shot by a party of Indians.

On the maternal side the subject of this memoir was descended from Constant Searle, a member of Captain Hewet's company, who was slain at the battle of Wyoming, July 3d, 1778, at the very commencement of the action. His granddaughter was the mother of our John Abbott, who, it will be seen, has abundance of martyr blood in his veins.

Mr. Abbott continued with his father, going to school and working on the farm, until he had attained his majority, when he, like many other young men, went to Mauch Chunk and entered the service of the Lehigh Navigation and Coal Company, in which he continued for about ten years. This was before the company had made their canal navigation, and his business was to run the old rude coal boxes to Philadelphia down the slackwater navigation and through the "bear-trap" locks. Skill was required in this work and Mr. Abbott very soon acquired the reputation of an expert, and a popularity along the line for the dry wit and humor which he always had at command. In 1829 he left Mauch Chunk and returned to his farm on the Plains with $1,500, the net savings of his nine years of hard service. In 1830 he was married to Hannah Courtright, the daughter of Cornelius Courtright, Esq., a prominent citizen of Luzerne county. From this time Mr. Abbott was engaged in farming, in which he was very successful, up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 23d of November, 1861. His widow, one son and two daughters still survive him.

The prominent traits of John Abbott's character may be written in a few lines. He was a good neighbor and friend, a first rate financier in making his investments, and a most industrious business man.

E. A. HANCOCK.

Elisha A. Hancock was born in Plains township, Luzerne county, Pa., in June, 1839. He served in the 9th Pennsylvania cavalry from its organization in the fall of 1861 until the close of the war. He lost a leg at the battle of Averyville, N. C. His regiment was the only one of Pennsylvania cavalry which accompanied Sherman on his march to the sea. He is at present attached to the staff of Governor Henry M. Hoyt as quartermaster general of the State of Pennsylvania. He is a member of the firm of Hancock, Beels & Co., who are doing a large shipping and commission business in Philadelphia. In the spring of 1886 he associated himself in business at Plains with O. B. Macknight, under the firm name of Hancock & Macknight, and from a small beginning, in a new building, which was intended to be used as a small store and large hotel, their business kept increasing until the entire building is controlled by them.

O. B. MACKNIGHT.

O. B. Macknight was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in July, 1839. He was a member of the 9th Pennsylvania cavalry, and served from its organization in 1861 until its muster-out, at Lexington, N. C., July, 1865. He joined as an enlisted man, and through gradual promotion was mustered out with the rank of captain. At the close of the war he settled at Plains; married, and entered into business with E. A. Hancock, under the firm name of Hancock & Macknight; doing a general merchandising business. He is postmaster; is a member of the board of county auditors of Luzerne county, and one of the directors of the peer for the central peer district.

JOHN MITCHELL.

John Mitchell, of Plains, Luzerne county, is a native of Scotland, having been born in Ayrshire, in 1816. He is a son of Robert Mitchell and Mary Brown Mitchell, who came to West Pittston in 1851, where they resided until the death of Robert Mitchell in 1862. He had lived to the advanced age of seventy-five years. His wife, who survived him, died in 1875, at the age of eighty-four. Their son, the subject of this article, came to the coal fields of Pennsylvania in 1849, and since that time his career has been so eventful and successful that a passing mention of his life and character should not be omitted from the pages that record the growth and development of the industry in which he has been prominent. When he was but a mere child—a boy of eight years—he began working as a slate-picker in the mines of Scotland, where he spent about five years. In 1829 he went from home and made himself a home in Nova Scotia, where he resided until his removal to the Wyoming valley in 1849. During the twenty years of his residence in Nova Scotia he was married to Miss Isabella Smith, a native of that province. She died in September, 1878. Mr. Mitchell's first work in this State was done at Port Griffith for the Pennsylvania Coal Company. For eight years he worked as a miner, but in 1857 he began a more independent career by taking a contract from the North Branch Coal Company to mine, prepare and deliver their coal in coal barges for eighty-five cents per ton. He subsequently made similar contracts with Thomas Fender, of Plymouth, and in 1860 he leased a coal property in Plains of Volney Maxwell, Esq., and became a coal operator. The following year he leased another property at very favorable rates, and from these two properties he amassed during the first three years of the civil war a large part of the magnificent estate which he has since retired to enjoy. In 1864 Mr. Mitchell sold his rights under these leases and invested the proceeds in valuable coal lands in the same vicinity, which he now leases. After becoming a citizen under the American government he cast his first vote for John C. Fremont, and he has ever since been identified with the Republican party. He was one of the Presidential electors elected by the Republicans in 1880. He has lived to see his children—three sons and four daughters—all well situated in pleasant homes.

CALVIN PARSONS.

Calvin Parsons was born April 2nd, 1815, where he now lives. He was married August 17th, 1837, to Miss Ann Parsons, of Enfield, Hartford county, Conn. Mrs. Parsons was born June 22nd, 1814. Their children are: Oliver A., born May 11th, 1838; Louisa A., May 4th, 1840; Almeda A., July 31st, 1843; Annie D., July 24th, 1848, and Hezekiah, October 20th, 1854. Mr. Parsons was for many years a manufacturer of woolen goods at Parsons and is now a farmer. He was commissioned in 1835 as captain of the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston Rifle Blues, an independent company.

JOHN AND MARY SEARLE.

John Searle, deceased, was a son of Rodger Searle, who was in the Wyoming massacre, and a grandson of Constant Searle, from Connecticut. He was born February 15th, 1795, and died in 1863. He drove stage from Wilkes-Barre to Montroce in an early day and was interested in stage and mail routes until his death. He was married in September, 1822, to Mary, daughter of the late Henry Stark. She was born at Plains, February 16th, 1800, in the old house that stood where the shaft of the Enterprise colliery is sunk, on the farm where she now resides. This house was built by her father, who was one of the early settlers of the township. Mr. Searle's family consisted of two sons and six daughters. His son, John Rodger, was a lieutenant in the 58th Pennsylvania and died in the service December 13th, 1862.

PETER C. SHIVE, M. D.,

of Plains, one of the most successful business men of this section, is of German extraction and one of the third generation of his family born in America. He was born in Bucks county, Pa., August 18th, 1830. His early years were spent on a farm, and as he approached his majority his time was divided between farming and school teaching. November 11th, 1852, he was married to Elizabeth Delp, of Bucks county. She died November 25th, 1862, and he was married October 15th, 1861, to Miss Hannah Seiple. His early educational advantages were only such as the common schools afforded, with the exception of eight months at an academy. Rarely is the title "a self made man" so deservedly given as in the case of Dr. Shive. By diligent application and untiring effort he overcame obstacles which to a less positive, determined nature would have seemed insurmountable; pursued his studies when any possible time could be secured, and March 2nd, 1861, received the degree of M. D. from the medical department of the Pennsylvania University, of Philadelphia. He located at Plains in March, 1867. There was then no resident physician between Wilkes-Barre and Pittston. He brought with him such a stock of medicines as was then necessary to his practice. To this he has gradually added until he has one of the most attractive and best stocked drug stores in the county. His store and residence, a view of which is found elsewhere, is the finest building in his vicinity. It was erected in 1877. During his residence at Plains the doctor has seen at least a dozen rival physicians come and go, while he has enjoyed the increasing confidence of the people to the present time.

THOMAS STOCKER.

Thomas Stocker, whose portrait appears elsewhere, was born in Forks township, Pa., July 29th, 1800, the fourth child of a family of eleven—a son of John and a grandson of Adam Stocker, of German stock, prominent citizens and landowners at Stockertown, Pa.—and was of the third generation of American descendants. In 1816 he removed to Luzerne county with his father's family, and in 1821 married Catharine Ann Hartman, of Reading, Pa., a woman remarkable for her beauty and her many amiable qualities, who through a career of rigid economy, marked by the sterling industry and strict integrity which characterized him as an eminently self-made man, was a wise counselor and a worthy helpmeet to him. His father was a large landowner in Plains, his possessions consisting of over two hundred acres and covering millions of dollars' worth of coal. They were purchased for an old shot-gun, and on account of their uncultivated and unproductive state Mr. Stocker, not knowing their value, permitted them to be sold for taxes. The son was a carpenter by trade, and at an early day assisted to construct dams at Easton, Pa. As the years went by he prospered and eventually became the owner of considerable real estate, which increased in value as the interests of the section were developed. He was noted far and wide as a successful hunter and a staunch Democrat. Reared in the German Reformed faith, he with his family became identified with the First Presbyterian Church of Wilkes-Barre, in which he was long an elder, and later with that at Plains, the house of which was erected largely at his expense. He was charitable and beloved by the poor, especially the miners living in his neighborhood, many of whom sought his advice and counsel. He died January 7th, 1878; his wife January 24th, 1880. They had four daughters—Mrs. William Spear, Mrs. Helen Stark, Mrs. D. D. Wilcox and Tammie H. Stocker.

WILLIAM W. AMSBRY is a native of Binghamton, N. Y., and was born September 18th, 1841. He was married in 1869 to Miss Mary H. Mitchell, of Plains, who was born February 17th, 1846. Mr. Ambsry is general agent for several coal land owners in this township.

MRS. SARAH BLANCHARD, widow of the late John Blanchard and daughter of George Lazarus, one of the early settlers of Hanover township, was born in Monroe county, Pa., June 16th, 1803, and married to John Blanchard February 9th, 1823. Mr. Blanchard died July 23d, 1853, in Jenkins. Mrs. Blanchard has occupied her present residence at Port Blanchard for the last fifty-seven years. She is the mother of eleven children, the oldest and the youngest of whom are still living.

GEORGE D. CLARK, who is a native of Plainsville, was born August 19th, 1842, and was married December 26th, 1866, to Miss Lizzio Tisdell, of North Moreland, Wyoming county, Pa. Mrs. Clark was born April 25th, 1846. Their children are Anna May, born December 19th, 1871, and Sarah Emily, born November 11th, 1874. Mr. Clark is a farmer.

JOHN CLARK, a native of Wilkes-Barre, was born February 28th, 1791. When he was eight months old his parents located in this township, on the farm now occupied by his grandson, George D. Clark, where he lived over eighty years. He then moved to the house now occupied by his daughters, Misses Parma and Sybil Clark, where he died in December, 1878. Mr. Clark was one of the founders and supporters of the Methodist Episcopal church of Plains township. He was the father of four sons and three daughters.

JOHN D. COLVIN was born in Abington, Pa., June 25th, 1835, and married April 18th, 1867, to Miss Olive S. Richards, who was born in Providence, Pa., April 21st, 1846. They have three children. Mr. Colvin enlisted in Company C of the 47th Pennsylvania volunteers in July, 1861, and in October, 1861, was transferred to the U. S. signal corps, and mustered out as lieutenant September 23th, 1865. He is a Knight Templar, Knight of Honor, and a member of Ely Post, No. 97, G. A. R. He is first lieutenant of Company C 9th regiment N. G. Pennsylvania. For the past fourteen years he has been foreman for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and the Lehigh Valley Coal Company.

JASON P. DAVIS, fire boss, Baltimore mine, was born in Pembroke-shire, South Wales, May 17th, 1821, and in 1849 was married to Mary Jenkins, of Swansea, Glamorganshire, South Wales. He has been school director and secretary of Parsons borough.

J. H. ERHEAR, a native of Plainsville, Pa., was a soldier with Company G 1st New Jersey cavalry. Enlisting in 1851 he served until July 28th, 1861, when he lost a leg in consequence of a wound. He was elected clerk of county courts, Luzerne county, in the fall of 1879.

PATRICK GOLDEN was born in Carbondale, Pa., in 1840.

T. T. HALE, a native of Pittston township, was born June 4th, 1838, and on the 18th of December, 1859, married Miss Sarah R. Phillips, of Benton, Pa., who was born July 27th, 1836. He is a merchant at Yatesville. He has been Burgess of Yatesville since it was chartered as a borough and is a justice of the peace. Mrs. Hale was appointed post-mistress at Yatesville January 13th, 1880.

WILLIAM D. HALE was born in Yatesville, April 15th, 1831, and was married January 3d, 1856, to Miss Elizabeth Leach, of Pittston township. Mrs. Hale was born in Newport, Pa., December 13th, 1838. They have a family of eight children. Mr. Hale is a mine carpenter. His father, John Hale, was one of the early settlers at Yatesville.

Henry Isaac Jones

HENRY ISAAC JONES.

Henry Isaac Jones is a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh; licentiate of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, Glasgow; licentiate in Midwifery of Edinburgh; member of the American Medical Association, the Pennsylvania Medical Society and the Lackawanna County Medical Society; five years surgeon for H. M.'s Indian army and late surgeon for the National Steamship Company, and the South Wales Iron and Coal Company. He was born at Tremedoc, Carnarvonshire, North Wales, September 22nd, 1844. His father, Robert Isaac Jones, chemist and druggist, is a celebrated poet and literateur, known to the Welsh speaking people of the world under the nom de plume "Alltud Eifion." Dr. Jones is the third son. On the father's side he is descended from a race of distinguished surgeons known through Wales for centuries; on his mother's side from a race of fine farmers. He attended the national school in his native town; afterward Mr. Rushby's grammar school, Farn Hill, near Chester. At 15 years of age he was apprenticed to his profession at the Quarry Hospital, Festiniog, Merionethshire, North Wales. During this time he went to Glasgow, Scotland, and passed the preliminary examination in arts, and in returning took French leave and ran the blockade in 1861 to Wilmington, N. C. He soon returned; attended college, Anderson University, Glasgow, one term; then joined the Confederate cruiser "Georgia," under Lieutenant W. L. Maury, and went for a cruise from March, 1863, to May, 1864, around the world. After this he went to the Glasgow University, and studied closely until 1866, when he graduated as a surgeon and physician. Immediately after this he was appointed to take charge of government emigrants in the ship "Escort," to New York from Liverpool. On his return, in June, 1866, he was appointed assistant surgeon for the Aberdare Iron and Coal Company, then surgeon at the Amman Iron Works, Caernarthenshire, and Ynysgedwyse Iron Works. Then he was appointed surgeon in the National Steamship Company's fleet. Leaving the company through sickness in December, 1868, he assisted several surgeons in Essex, Wiltshire, after which he competed for the appointment of surgeon in H. M.'s Indian medical service. He was successful and was sent to Her Majesty's Royal Victoria Hospital to study military medicine under McLean; military surgery under Professor Longmore; military hygiene under the late Professor E. A. Parkes, and pathology under Professor W. Aitken. Here he had the opportunity of seeing and treating invalid soldiers from every part of the world (British), assisted by a magnificent library, museum, laboratory, microscope rooms—in fact everything that a rich government could buy to assist its medical men to become efficient officers for the welfare of Her Majesty's troops in India. Here he had to pass another six days' competitive examination, at which he was successful, receiving a royal commission from Queen Victoria and also the honor of being presented to the Queen by the Duke of Argyle, then Secretary of State for India. He set sail for Madras, East Indies, in April, 1870. He served with the native troops at Trichenopoly, southern India; was also in charge of a lunatic asylum. Next he was acting civil surgeon of Coimbatore and of Chitore jail and district. For two years he was garrison surgeon of Bangalore, Mysore district; then was appointed surgeon of the 8th regiment Madras native infantry. Dr. Jones did short service with the 16th lancers and 45th infantry. He fell sick with the 8th regiment at Nagpore, Central Province, and left for Europe round the Cape of Good Hope, arriving in Europe in October, 1874. The English climate did not suit him after the four years of heat in India. He set sail for the United States, and landed in New York Thanksgiving day, 1874. He practiced for a little while in Brooklyn, L. I. Finding a better field amongst his countrymen in Scranton, he arrived at the latter place March 31st, 1875. He married (August 16th, 1875) Mary Amelia Boardman, of Bridgeport, Conn.

The regular meetings are held in Tasker hall, on the first and third Saturday evenings of each month. The following were the officers named in the charter: President, B. Hughes; vice-president, David T. Davies; secretary of the order, Morgan Evans. The lodge numbers forty-two members.

The officers for 1880 were as follows: President, Jenkins J. Jones; vice-president, Richard Roberts; financial secretary, George D. Price; recording secretary, David T. Jones; steward, Edward F. Reese; conductor, John Hughes; watchers, Evan A. Price and Thomas Powell; committee to visit the sick, Edward F. Reese and Evan A. Price; treasurer, Jenkins B. Jones; trustees, Jenkins J. Jones, Thomas W. Lewis and Thomas H. Thomas.

PLAINSVILLE.

Plainsville is a station on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near the northwest corner of the township. The place has a store, tavern and a post-office; Robert C. Mitchell is the postmaster. A Methodist Episcopal church edifice stands near the village.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF PLAINSVILLE.

This society seems to have been organized about 1830, with George Cooper as class leader, and the following named persons members of the class: Jerusha Cooper, Miner, Mary and Joseph Swallow, Mrs. Hannah Sailor, Benjamin Sailor and wife, George Swallow and wife, John Clark, Sarah Hale, John Carey and wife, and William La Bar and wife. For several years the Methodist "circuit riders" had been traveling through this region, preaching at different points, including the old red school-house on the cross road between the Wilkes-Barre and Pittston road and the river, or plank road.

The school-house was a frame building, filled in with brick, the first of its kind in this part of the county. Here the parent class was formed, out of which have grown the societies of Plainsville and Plains.

In 1844 the society decided to build a church, and Conrad Saxe donated the lot. The church was built the same year, of brick, at a cost of $1,000, and was dedicated February 13th, 1845, by Rev. D. A. Shepherd, assisted by Rev. Silas Comfort and Rev. Ira Wilcox. The building committee were Miner Swallow, George Cooper and William Apple.

The first trustees were John Clark, George Cooper, William Apple, William La Bar and Miner Swallow. Lewis Ketchum, father of the late Judge Ketchum, did the painting of the church inside and out.

Among the Methodist preachers who early visited the place it is believed Vincent M. Coryell, John Copeland and Marmaduke Pearce were the first. Then Samuel Griffin, a local preacher, living in Abington, preached occasionally. The preachers following Mr. Griffin previous to the building of the church were as follows, as nearly as can be ascertained: Abel Barker, Erastus Smith, Peleg G. White, Benjamin Ellis, Epenetus Owen, William Raum, Thomas Wilcox and William Philbin, which brings us down to 1845, when Ira Wilcox was the pastor. Since then the preachers and the order of their succession have been as follows: E. B. Tenney, John Mulchahey, O. S. Morse, Erastus Smith, Asa Brooks, William Reddy, Charles Giddings, George M. Peck, Rodger Moyster, a local preacher, Samuel M. Bronson, Jonatham K. Peck, Henry Wheeler, Luther Peck, William Keatly, Minor Swallow, J. S. Lewis, Jacob D. Woodruff, F. A. King, N. J. Hawley, W. J. Hill, H. H. Dresser and J. L. Race, the present pastor, who was appointed to this charge in the spring of 1879.

The present trustees of the Plainsville church are John C. Williams, William A. Wagner, John D. Wilcox, O. B. MacKnight, William H. Stark and William H. Bennett. The church property is valued at $1,500.

The Sunday-school was organized about 1830, by George Cooper, who was the first superintendent. His successors have been Miner Swallow, J. J. Meixell, John C. Williams and Charles I. A. Chapman, the present superintendent. There are about 80 pupils on the roll and an average attendance of sixty scholars and teachers.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The Catholics of Plainsville were attended from St. Mary's church, Wilkes-Barre, until April 1880, when Father O'Haran, of Wilkes-Barre, purchased an extensive lot, on which is being built a beautiful edifice. Service has been held in an old building not constructed for church purposes.

MINING HAMLETS.

The Enterprise colliery is between Swoyer's hill and the river at the foot of the hill. J. H. Swoyer is general superintendent, and the place was named after him. Here are three or four groceries and a school-house.

Mill Creek has a school-house, a company store, a church (Independent) and two coal breakers.

Miner's has a tavern, several stores and a school-house. The place was named in honor of Hon. Charles A. Miner.

At Pine Ridge is C. A. Miner's grist-mill, with steam as the principal motor.

Port Bowkley is the site of the Wyoming and Henry collieries. Several small groceries are the other principal business establishments.

PARSONS BOROUGH.

AS late as 1819 the site of the flourishing borough of Parsons was covered by a dense forest, inhabited only by wild beasts, except a spot here and there, where a brave pioneer had made a "pitch."

In 1785 Daniel Downing, from Connecticut, located on the site of the residence of Thomas Goven. Mr. Downing's was the first house in Parsons. In 1800 he built a saw-mill across the run, opposite the site of the residence of Calvin Parsons. This mill was in constant use until 1842, when it was rebuilt by Calvin Parsons, who had purchased the property. In 1876 the mill was taken down by Mr. Parsons.

In the spring of 1813 Hezekiah Parsons built the main part of the house now occupied by his son, Calvin Parsons. The house was then but one story high, and was the first framed house in Parsons. Hezekiah Parsons was a clothier by trade, and built a cloth-dressing mill on the north side of Laurel run, a short distance from his house. In 1814 he associated with him in business Jehoida P. Johnson, and they built a carding-mill, and carried on both branches of business until 1820, when Mr. Parsons became sole proprietor. He continued the business till 1850, when he sold all the machinery to J. P. Rice, who removed it to Truxville, where it is still in operation. In or about 1810 Jehoida P. Johnson built a grist-mill near Laurel run, below where the carding-mill was built. In 1812 John Holgate built a turning-mill below Johnson's grist-mill. They were both on what is now known as the Johnson property; they went to decay many years ago.

The pioneer school-house was built in 1818, on the road between Johnson's and Miner's grist-mills. It was of round logs, and was well ventilated. The first teacher was Sylvester Dieth, an eccentric Yankee and a good teacher. The old log school-house was used summers till 1824 or 1825, when the school was kept in Mr. Parsons's house until 1829; then the little white school-house was built. This was a frame building, twenty by twenty-four feet, lathed and plastered, and was at that time the best school-house in this part of the country. Asahel P. Gridley, a graduate of the seminary at Cazenovia, N. Y., was the first teacher. This building served until 1869, when a two-story house, twenty-two by forty feet, was built, which is occupied by five schools.

In 1832 Hiram McAlpine built a turning-mill on Laurel run, near Mr. Parsons's house, for the manufacture of scythe snaths; in 1839 the machinery was moved to Wilkes-Barre. The first resident blacksmith in Parsons borough was Rufus Davidson. He worked in McAlpine's shop. In 1838 Captain Alexander built a powder-mill on the site of Laurel Run coal breaker. It was blown up several times, last in 1864 or 1865, when owned by Captain Parrish. In 1844 the Johnson heirs built a powder-mill just above the side of the grist-mill on Laurel Run. This mill was blown up in 1848 and was never rebuilt. J. P. Johnson and C. Parsons manufactured powder kegs on Laurel run from 1838 until 1858.

The first store in the borough was kept by Golden & Walsh, on the corner of Main street and Watson avenue; and the first tavern was the Eagle Hotel, kept by Lewis R. Lewis, on the corner of Main street and Hollenback avenue. The next hotel was kept by Morgan Morgan, on Main street, between Hollenback and Welles avenues.

The pioneer postmaster was Samuel Davis. He kept the post-office at the corner of Main street and George avenue. The next postmaster was John W. Watkins, who was succeeded by G. A. Freeman, and he by Hezekiah Parsons, who keeps the office in his store, on George avenue.

The first successful coal mining in Parsons was done in 1866, when the Mineral Spring mine was opened, and the coal breaker built by the Mineral Spring Coal Company. The spring from which this company takes its name was on the lands of Calvin Parsons. It had gained some notoriety by the curative quality of its waters, and an effort was made but a year or two before the opening of the coal mines to buy the property, in order to establish a water cure. When the mining commenced in 1866 the source of the spring was tapped, and it was destroyed.

The next coal mine in this borough was opened in 1867 or 1868 by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, at the Laurel Run breaker.

Besides the two coal mines at Parsons, with the large business connected with the production of at least 150,000 tons of coal per year, there are three large stores and several small groceries, a drug store, the depot of the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad, two physicians, offices, four churches, three blacksmith and wagon shops, a graded school, a union Sunday-school, four taverns and 1,500 inhabitants.

The borough was chartered March 23d, 1879. Patrick Cox and M. M. D. Shoemaker have been the justices.

BOROUGH HISTORY.

Parsons borough was formed January 17th, 1876. John D. Calvin was the first burgess and the councilmen were William Smurl (president), O. A. Parsons, G. W. Mitchell, A. A. Fenner, H. McDonald and Philip Harris. Richard Buchanan was clerk.

The following have served as burgess: 1877, William Sword; 1878, John Trethaway; 1879, A. W. Bailey; 1880, Patrick Cox.

The present town council consists of Oliver A. Parsons, president; D. W. Kemble, A. C. Johnson, William Smurl, George W. Lewis and D. M. Jones; Thomas Sholton is the clerk of the council.

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS OF PARSONS.

The Union Sunday-school.—In 1812 John Holgate located in Parsons, and his house, as well as the hospitable home of Hezekiah Parsons, was at the disposal of the pioneer preacher.

The first religious organization was the union Sunday-school, organized in 1817, at the house of John Holgate, who was the first superintendent. There were but ten or twelve pupils. In 1826 Judge Mallory built a new barn near by, and the Sunday-school was held in that, as well as the preaching services. After Mallory's barn was occupied by the school Sally Jewett was superintendent many years. The little white school-house, as it was called, was used by the Sunday-school from 1829 until 1869, when the school was moved into the upper room of the school-house now known as the old one, where it still meets. There is an average attendance of 75 pupils. Rev. Thomas M. Phillips is superintendent. The school is under the fostering care of Calvin Parsons, who has been a member since its organization in 1817.

Parsons Welsh Baptist Church.—This church was organized in March, 1869, at the old Laurel Run school-house, with the following original members: William, Ann and Mary McGregor, James, John A. and Barbara John, Jonah and Margaret Griffiths, William and Jane Thomas, William C. and Ellen Williams, John and David Pugh and William and Martha Evans.

In 1871 the society built the present church edifice, of wood, forty by fifty-six feet, with a seating capacity of 500, at a cost of $5,500. The corner stone was laid in March, 1871, by John A. John and Jonah Griffiths. The church lot, on Hollenback avenue, was donated by John W. Hollenback. The membership of this church numbers 130. The church property is valued at $5,000. The first local preacher was Rev. James Reese. He was with the charge about the time of its organization. The first pastor, Rev. Jonathan Nicholas, a graduate from Lewisburg, was ordained in the old Laurel Run school-house, and remained about two years. Rev. D. Davies, from Wales, was then pastor two years, and Rev. John Seth Jones, of Danville, Pa., two years. The next pastor was Rev. D. T. Phillips, of South Wales. The church in 1880 had no pastor.

The Sunday-school was organized February 14th, 1869, with 40 scholars. William Thomas was and is the superintendent. There is an average attendance of 125 scholars.

Primitive Methodist Church.—At the house of Joseph Williams, in 1871, Rev. J. H. Acornly assisted in forming a class consisting of the following named persons: James Brinn, John and Mary Grattan, Isabella Moore, Joseph and Ann Williams, W. H. Thompson, Ann Keates, Mary Trethaway, Hugh Thomas, Thomas and Margaret Purcell, John Geen and Thomas M. Phillips. The last was appointed leader. In 1872 the society built its present church on Hollenback avenue, at a cost of $800. The building is of wood, 26 by 40 feet, and was dedicated in the fall of 1872.

The following have been the pastors: Revs. J. H. Acornly, Charles McKechnie, T. C. Bates, H. G. Russell and the present pastor, M. Harvey.

The present trustees of the church are Thomas M. Phillips, George Carter, James Frezise, Henry Felton, William Mitchell and John Geen. The church property is valued at $1,000. The membership is 22. The Sunday-school was organized in 1870, with 40 scholars, and Henry Jones as superintendent. The membership is now 100, with an average attendance of 90. William Mitchell is the superintendent.

Zoar First Congregational Church was organized in 1871, at what is known as "Baltimore Patch," by David Evans, Thomas E. Lewis, James S. Davies, Mrs. William Roberts, Jane L. Davies and Mrs. Harriet Llewellyn, at the house of Mr. James S. Davies. Here they held regular services for two months. George D. Price and Jonathan Jones, local preachers from Mill Creek, assisted. Rev. Mr. Davies, of Pittston, visited them once a month to administer the Lord's Supper. The services were subsequently held in a private house at "Brewery Hill," by Rev. E. B. Evans, of Hyde Park. Next services were held at the office of the Mineral Spring Coal Company a few weeks. The society then used the old school-house near Parsons railroad station about a year. In this time, Thomas E. Lewis, James S. Davies and John G. Jones were elected deacons, and David Evans treasurer of the church. Rev. E. B. Evans, of Carbondale, was engaged to preach one Sunday in a month.

Early in 1872 the society was incorporated as Zoar First Congregational Church of Parsons. The congregation and membership had increased beyond the seating capacity of the school-house, and Durkin's Hall was used a few months. It was then burned and St. George's Hall was rented and used a year and a half.

During the occupancy of this hall it was decided by the congregation to build a church. At this time (1874) Rev. John W. Williams, of Ohio, was ordained as pastor of the church, and during the year 1874 a building lot was bought of Calvin Parsons, on Oliver street, and the corner stone of a substantial church edifice was laid. The church building has not been formally dedicated. The membership of the church is 37. It is without a pastor. The deacons are William Morgan and Jason P. Davies; Jason P. Davies, secretary; William Morgan, treasurer.

The Sunday-school was organized at the same time and place as the church, with James S. Davies as the superintendent, and about 20 scholars. The present superintendent is Edward R. Mason. There is an average attendance of 35 pupils.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This society was organized June 1st, 1872, in the school-house. Parsons was then a part of the Plains charge, under Rev. N. J. Hawley. The following persons were appointed a building committee: Calvin Parsons, president; D. W. Kemble, secretary; John D. Colvin, treasurer; O. C. Barnard, Simon Deeks, F. M. Deeks and Rev. N. J. Hawley. July 5th Mr. Calvin Parsons donated lot No. 25, 50 by 100 feet, on Oliver street, to John Clark, Simon Deeks, William A. Wagner, John J. Meixell, John C. Williams, William H. Bennett and John D. Wilcox, as trustees. He also gave $1,000 in cash and furnished the corner stone, which was laid in November, 1872. The building committee met June 10th, and decided to build the church of wood, 44 by 60 feet, with a bell tower in front 10 by 16 feet, and with a basement of stone and brick. July 6th Jeremiah Shiffer was awarded the contract for laying the stone and brick. October 14th, 1872, Mark Wilson was awarded the contract for the superstructure for $3,765.

In the spring of 1873 this appointment was set off from the Plains charge, and April 10th, 1866, the society was incorporated as the Methodist Episcopal Church of Parsons, Pa., with John D. Colvin, John Alderson, S. W. Franklin, Simon Deeks, F. M. Smith and O. C. Barnard as trustees. March 4th, 1880, an application was made to the courts to change the name to The William Abbott Methodist Episcopal Church of Parsons, Pa.

The present membership is seventy-four. The trustees are John D. Colvin, W. A. Gustin, John Alderson, William Sward and D. W. Kembel. The value of the church property is $7,000.

The pastors who have served this church are: N. J. Hawley, 1872; J. W. Hill, 1873; G. M. Chamberlain, 1874, 1875; Rev. H. Brownscombe, the present pastor, who was appointed in 1876.

The Sunday-school was organized May 18th, 1873, with Simon Deeks as superintendent, and John D. Colvin librarian, which position he still holds. The number of scholars at the organization was 70. The present superintendent is W. A. Gustin. The average attendance is 90 pupils.

SOCIETIES AT PARSONS.

Laurel Run Lodge, No. 569, I. O. of G. T. was instituted January 4th, 1871, in the Methodist Episcopal church at Plains, and subsequently occupied Odd Fellows' Hall at that place one year, when the lodge was removed to Parsons. The original officers were: Calvin Parsons, W. C. T.; Rev. T. M. Phillips, W. C.; Evan T. Morgan, W. A. S.; J. Embliston, W. T.; A. J. Ward, W. D. M.; S. D. Mitchell, W. O. G.; Laura Croop, W. L. S.; Mrs. Kate Laidler, W. V. T.; M. G. Smith, W. S.; M. O. Chamberlain, W. F. S.; R. K. Laidler, W. M.; R. Hayes, W. I. G.; Anna Deeks, W. R. S.; Simon Deeks, P. W. C. T.

The regular meetings are held in Saint George's Hall, on Friday evening of each week. The present elective officers are: Calvin Parsons, W. C. T.; A. W. Bayley, secretary; Peter Burt, F. S.; Alice Rhodes, I. G.; A. W. Bayley, lodge deputy; Lizzie Shoemaker, W. V. T.; Mrs. Eliza Cutler, treasurer; William Gardner, marshal; George Yarnes, O. G.

Laurel Run Building Association.—This organization was chartered July 25th, 1871. The first officers were: Nathaniel Heft, president; H. C. Johnson, secretary; Calvin Parsons, treasurer. The object of such an association is mutual benefit, by loaning sums of money to members of the association to assist those in moderate circumstances to provide homes for themselves and families. The present officers are: President, D. W. Kimball; secretary, A. C. Johnson; treasurer, Calvin Parsons.

Coal Brook Lodge, No. 411, Knights of Honor was instituted December 15th, 1876, with 39 charter members.

The first officers were as follows: John C. Williams, P. D.; John D. Colvin, D.; George W. Reeder, V. D.; Richard Stear, A. D.; Richard Martin, chaplain; M. J. Hall, Rep.; H. McDonald, F. R.; A. F. Fenner, treasurer; L. D. Austin, guide; James Giles, guardian.

The regular meetings of the lodge are held in Richards Hall, on the first and third Monday evenings of each month.

The officers for 1880 were as follows: Samuel Nixon, P. D.; Joseph Stephens, D.; John Snedden, V. D.; Richard Martin, A. D.; H. McDonald, chaplain; Thomas Shotton, Rep.; A. F. Fenner, F. R.; John C. Williams, treasurer; S. Nixon, guide; George M. Lewis, guardian;

H. Parsons, sentinel; Dr. W. H. O'Neal, medical examiner; trustees—Thomas Shotton, John C. Williams and Samuel Nixon.

Laurel Run Lodge, No. 103, A. P. A.—This lodge of the American Protestant Association was organized in 1872, and reorganized in October, 1879, with the following officers, who are now serving: G. D. Price, W. M.; E. R. Mason, W. D. M.; William E. Lloyd, M. D., W. R. S.; D. W. James, W. A. S.; William Gough, F. S.; James Brinn, W. T.; Thomas McGregor, chaplain; J. Pugh, A. C.; George Richards, I. T.; J. Jones, O. T.; Reese Lloyd and John Williams, trustees.

The lodge numbers 28 members, and is in a flourishing condition. The regular meetings are held on Thursday evening of each week in Fenner's Hall.

PLYMOUTH TOWNSHIP.

THIS is one of the original five townships formed by the Susquehanna Company, in accordance with a resolution passed by the directors at Hartford, December 28th, 1768. The township was originally five miles square, but was enlarged by the Legislature of Pennsylvania to include what is now Plymouth and Jackson. By the setting off of Jackson township in 1844, and of a part of Hunlock in 1877, Plymouth has been reduced to an area of about 21 square miles. The population was 4,669 in 1870, and 7,323 in 1880.

The surface is underlaid with rich veins of coal near the river, while the soil of the uplands produces fine crops; thus making Plymouth one of the richest townships in Luzerne county.

SETTLEMENT.

The settlement period, in the history of Plymouth, extends from 1768 till after the close of the Revolutionary war. The first attempt at a settlement was made in 1769. The Susquehanna Company allotted lands in Plymouth township to 40 settlers, most of whom came during this year and settled along the river where the borough of Plymouth now stands.

By an enrollment of the resident inhabitants of the valley, made in 1773, in the handwriting of Col. Zebulon Butler, the following persons are known to have been settlers in Plymouth: Noah Allen, Peter Ayres, Captain Prince Alden, John Baker, Isaac Bennett, Daniel Brown, Naniad Coleman, Aaron Dean, Stephen Fuller, Joseph Gaylord, Nathaniel Goss, Comfort Goss, Timothy Hopkins, William Leonard, Jesse Leonard, Samuel Marvin, Nicholas Manville, Joseph Morse, James Nesbitt, Abel Pierce, Timothy Pierce, Jabez Roberts, Samuel Sweet, John Shaw, David Whittlesey and Nathaniel Watson.

Immediately after this enrollment Caleb Atherton, James Bidlack, Henry Barny, Benjamin Harvey, Samuel Ransom, David Reynolds, Benedict Satterlee, Noah

Wadhams, Silas Wadhams and Elijah Wadhams came into the township, if some of them were not there before. An old deed is mentioned by Hendrick B. Wright, in his "Sketches of Plymouth," as having been found in the valley archives, bearing date November 5th, 1773, from "Samuel Love of Connecticut to Samuel Ransom, late of Norfolk, Connecticut, now living at Susquehanna." This is thought to have been for the Ransom homestead property. Another deed, bearing date September 29th, 1773, from Henry Barney to Benedict Satterlee is to be seen among the same collection.

Between this time and the year 1777 Mason F. Alden, Isaac Benjamin, Benjamin Clark, Gordun Church, Nathan Church, Price Cooper, Charles Gaylord, Ambrose Gaylord, Daniel Franklin, Asahel Nash, Ira Sawyer, John Swift, Aziba Williams, Thomas Williams, Jeremiah Coleman, Jesse Coleman, Benjamin Harvey and Seth Marvin came into the township.

The growth of the settlement was very slow from this time until about 1800, the settlers being greatly harassed by the Indians, the Pennamites and the British and tory forces during the Revolutionary war. In 1796 the following names appear in the list of taxables:

Samuel Allen, Stephen Allen, David Allee, Elias Allen, William Ayres, Daniel Ayres, John Anderson, Moses Anderson, Isaac Bennett, Benjamin Bennett, Joshua Bennett, Benjamin Barney, Daniel Barney, Henry Barney, Walter Browo, Jesse Browo, William Baker, Philemon Bidlack, Jared Baldwin, Jude Baldwin, Amos Baldwin, Jonah Bigsley, Peter Chambers, William Craig, Jeremiah Coleman, Thomas Davenport, Asahel Drake, Rufus Drake, Aaron Dean, Henry Decker, Joseph Dodson, Leonard Descans, Joseph Duocan, Jehiel Fuller, Peter Grubb, Charles E. Gaylord, Adolph Heath, John Heath, Samuel Hart, Elisha Harvey, Samuel Harvey, Josiah Ives, Josiah Ives, jr., Crocker Jones, T. and J. Lamoreux, John Leonard, Joseph Lenaberger, Samuel Marvin, James Marvin, Timothy Meeker, Ira Manville, Ephraim McCoy, Phineas Nash, Abram Nesbitt, Simon Parks, Samuel Pringle, Michael Pace, David Pace, Nathan Parrish, Oliver Plumley, Jonah Rogers, Elisha Rogers, Edon Ruggles, Hezekiah Roberts, David Reynolds, Joseph Reynolds, George P. Ransom, Nathan Rumsey, Michael Scott, Lewis Sweet, Elam Spencer, William Stewart, Jesse Smith, Ichabod Shaw, Palmer Shaw, Benjamin Stookey, John Taylor, John Turner, Abraham Tilbury, Mathias Van Loon, Abraham Van Loon, Nicholas Van Loon, Calvin Wadhams, Noah Wadhams, Moses Wadhams, Jagersol Wadhams, Amariah Watson, Darius Williams, Rufus Williams and John Wallen.

None of these were living at the time of the publication of the "Sketches of Plymouth" by H. B. Wright, in 1873.

About 1815 Joseph Keller, Peter Snyder, George Snyder, Stephen Devens, Leonard Devens, a Mr. Cooper and one Howard settled northeast of the village, around the location of the Boston mines. The settlement of that part of Plymouth lying between Jackson and Hunlock townships was not begun until 1827, when Henry Cease, George Sorber and Jacob Sorber moved into the woods and began clearing land. They all sold out and moved farther into the woods.

The first school-house in the lower end of the township was built by Jameson Harvey, near the mouth of Harvey's creek, in 1834. Miss Anna Homer was the first teacher here. She had taught one summer, previous to the building of the school-house, in a wash-house of Mr. Harvey's. In 1879 there were nineteen schools, having an average daily attendance of 620 pupils. Schools are kept open nine months at an annual cost of over $6,900.

EARLY WAR TIMES.

The people of Plymouth bore their full share of the hardships of those times. On the breaking out of the Revolution they erected a small fort on "Garrison Hill," in the lower part of the present Plymouth borough. The only use to which this fort was put was defense against Indians.

On December 4th, 1785, was fought the most serious of all the battles of the Pennamite war, known as Plunkett's battle. The rocks along the river just above the mouth of Harvey's creek were the battle field, and Plymouth furnished the majority of the fighting men under Colonel Butler, who commanded the settlers.

It is not known how many were killed in this battle, but as the people of the town of Westmoreland voted (on December 29th, 1785), to collect "the charity of the people for the widow Baker, the widow Franklin and the widow Ensign," Baker and Franklin being known to have been Plymouth men, it is known that they were killed. August 24th, 1776, "at a meeting legally warned and held, in Westmoreland, Wilkes-Barre district," it was voted to build forts for the defense of the people. In accordance with this resolution the people of Plymouth proceeded to erect a fort upon "Garrison Hill," Captain Samuel Ransom hauling the first log and Benjamin Harvey planting the flag upon the turret. Samuel Ransom was appointed a captain by Congress, August 26th, 1776, with authority to raise a company to be "stationed in proper places for the defense of the inhabitants of said town." Relying upon the promise of Congress that they should not be called away from home, the men of Plymouth and neighboring townships soon enrolled themselves to the number required, eighty-four, to make up the company.

But on December 12th, 1776, Congress ordered Captain Ransom to report to General Washington with all possible expedition. The names of the following Plymouth men appear in the list of Captain Ransom's company: Caleb Atherton, Mason F. Alden, Isaac Benjamin, Olmer Bennett, Benjamin Clark, Nathan Church, Pierce Cooper, Daniel Franklin, Charles Gaylord, Ambrose Gaylord, Timothy Hopkins, Benjamin Harvey, Asahel Nash, Ebenezer Roberts, George P. Ransom, Samuel Sawyer, Asa Sawyer, John Swift, Thomas Williams, Aziba Williams, Jeremiah Coleman, Jesse Coleman, Nathaniel Evans, Samuel Tubbs and James Gould.

It is very probable that other Plymouth men enlisted in the companies of Captains Wisner and Strong, which had been previously recruited in the valley. It is certainly known that Benjamin Bidlack served through the entire war, but his name appears in none of the lists. Many of the Plymouth men, leaving the army in June, 1778, arrived in time to take part in the bloody battle of Wyoming. Captain Asaph Whittlesey, with 44 men from Plymouth, was engaged in the battle. Of these forty-four the names of Samuel Ransom, Asaph Whittlesey, Aaron Gaylord, Amos Bullock, John Brown, Thomas Fuller, Stephen Fuller, Silas Harvey, James Hopkins, Nathaniel Howard, Nicholas Manville, Job Marshall, John Pierce, Silas Parke, Conrad Davenport, Elias Roberts, Timothy Ross, — Reynolds, James Shaw, Joseph Shaw, Abram Shaw, John Williams, Elihu Williams, jr., Rufus Williams, Aziba Williams and William Woodring appear upon the Wyoming monument as having been slain in the battle.

The women and children of Plymouth fled down the river the night of the battle, making their way to Fort Augusta, at Sunbury. The savages destroyed all the houses, and Plymouth was but little better than a wilderness. As soon as the enemy had retired from the country the people began to find their way back to their homes, and to build new houses where their former ones had stood. By the fall of this year all were comfortably housed in log buildings. Depredations were committed by the savages for some time after this. John Perkins was killed November 17th, 1778, in the lower end of the township. Elihu Williams, Lieutenant Buck and Stephen Pettibone were killed in March, 1779, and Captain James Bidlack, jr., was taken prisoner. He made his escape about a year afterward.

The elder Mr. Harvey, Elisha Harvey, Miss Lucy Bullford, Miss Louisa Harvey and George P. Ransom were captured. The women were set at liberty upon the arrival of the Indians at the top of the Shawnee mountains. Mr. Harvey was tied to a tree and the young Indians cast their tomahawks at his head. As they failed to hit him, the chief set him at liberty, declaring him to have a charmed life. Elisha Harvey was released in an exchange of prisoners about two years afterward. George P. Ransom, after enduring cruelties and indignities without number, succeeded in making his escape from an island in the St. Lawrence river, and with two others made his way through the forests to Vermont, and thence to Connecticut. No person was killed by the Indians in Plymouth after this date.

During the winter of 1872 and 1873 the men returned from the army of Washington, and they spent the following summer in preparing the ground for winter grains. But they were not to reap the fruit of their labors. On March 13th and 14th, 1784, occurred the greatest ice floods ever known in the Susquehanna river. There were eight or nine dwellings upon "Garrison Hill," which were swept away, together with nearly all the other buildings in the place. Rev. Benjamin Bidlack was carried away with his house. After being tossed about by huge cakes of ice during the whole night he effected a landing on the lower end of Shawnee flats. This time of trouble was seized upon by Alexander Patterson, the civil magistrate of Wilkes-Barre, as a fit opportunity to dispossess the Connecticut settlers of their lands. The suffering people were driven from their homes by soldiers, and not even allowed to pass over the road leading along the river, but compelled to take the road over the mountains toward Stroudsburg and the Delaware. May 15th, 1784, witnessed the departure of the suffering settlers, old men, women and children, on foot and without provisions for the journey. The bridges were all gone, and the road torn by the late flood. Several of the unhappy people died in the wilderness. A poor widow of a fallen soldier, with her family of children crying for the food which she could not give them, was among the rest. One of her children died on the journey.

This cruel act aroused the sympathies of the people of Pennsylvania in favor of the settlers, and the authorities of the State directed the sheriff of Northumberland county to place them in possession of their lands. Messengers were sent to the Delaware, inviting them to return and giving assurance of protection. Nothing daunted, they set out on their return, but on their arrival at the top of the Wilkes-Barre mountains, they halted and sent forward a committee to see how matters stood. These men were seized by Patterson, and cruelly beaten with iron ramrods. Proceeding cautiously to their homes, the settlers began to make preparations to gather their crops planted in the spring. While engaged in this work they were attacked by a body of Patterson's men, on the western slope of Ross hill. A skirmish ensued, in which Elisha Garrett and Chester Pierce were killed on the side of the settlers. Now fully aroused, the settlers placed themselves under the command of John Franklin and, marching through the Shawnee country, effectually cleared the place of the tory element. This was the last serious trouble of the Plymouth settlers.

INDUSTRIAL AND COMMERCIAL HISTORY.

The lands of Plymouth were surveyed by the Susquehanna company into lots 22 rods in width, and extending back over the mountains a distance of about five miles. Thus each settler had both river flat and mountain lands. The Shawnee flats being found free from trees, all farming was done there. Each settler had his strip of land extending across the flats.

After the great flood of 1784 no fences were built on the flats, except one fence inclosing the whole tract to protect the crops from cattle. One road was used by all the farmers owning lands on the flats, and where this road left the main road a gate was erected, known as the swing gate. This was kept locked, and was opened in the early morning when the men and boys wended their way to their labors, carrying their dinners that they might spend the entire day in the labors of the field. A large square inclosure around an area of about one thousand square feet was erected as a pound. (In this inclosure, which stood on the lands of the late Colonel Ransom, at the junction of the flat road with the principal street, were placed all cattle found running at large during the day. The owners were obliged to pay a fine of about twenty-five cents per head to obtain their release. This was paid to the "key keepers," of whom Thomas Heath was the first, having been appointed at a meeting of the people of the town of Westmoreland, March 2nd, 1774. It was the duty of the "key keeper" to carry the keys of the church, fort, school-house, pound and swing gate.

Farming was conducted in the most primitive style, no machinery being known. The winters were passed in threshing the grain and hauling it to Easton, the only market within reach of the early settlers. Benjamin Harvey, who lived in the lower end of the township, near the mouth of Harvey's creek, used the surface of a large flat rock as a threshing floor. This rock, which was one of the defences used by the settlers at "Plunkett's" battle, has been broken up and carried away. Each farmer had his plot of flax, and the cloth for the clothes of the men and boys was made at home.

The first mills were built about 1780, Robert Faulkner having erected a log grist mill on Shupp's creek; while Benjamin Harvey in the same year built a log grist-mill and residence on Harvey's creek. The Harvey mill was occupied by Abram Tilbury, the son-in-law of Mr. Harvey. The first saw-mill was also built in that year, by Hezekiah Roberts, on Ransom's creek, and in 1795 Samuel Marvin built a saw-mill on Whittlesey's creek. Philip Shupp built a grist-mill on Shupp's creek below the site of the old Faulkner mill, that Colonel Wright thinks must have been built as early as 1800, and in the time of his boyhood was the principal flouring mill in the town. The only mill now in operation in the township is the grist-mill on Harvey's creek at West Nanticoke. This was built by Henry Yingst, a German from Dauphin county, for Joshua Pugh, about 1833. Mr. Yingst was the first miller employed in this mill. The mill has passed through the hands of several persons.

Previous to 1774 the settlers of Plymouth depended entirely on getting their supplies of such articles as were absolutely necessary from Wilkes-Barre or Sunbury. In this year Benjamin Harvey, jr., established a small retail store in the log house of his father, near the site of the present "Christian" church building. "Here, for a couple of years, he dealt in a small way in articles of absolute necessity—salt, leather, iron ware, a few groceries, etc. At that time, and for many subsequent years, all articles of merchandise were transported upon the river in 'Durham boats.' Ten or twelve miles up the stream was considered a fair day's work." Until the completion of the Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike, in 1807, no other means of transportation was known. "After the enlistment of Mr. Harvey in the United States army his father took charge of his small stock of goods and sold them out, but the store was never replenished." From this time to 1808, a period of thirty-two years, there was no store kept in Plymouth. Joseph Wright, father of Colonel Hendrick B. Wright, now of Wilkes-Barre, and author of "Sketches of Plymouth," came into Union township with his father, Caleb Wright, from New Jersey, in 1795. He married and settled in Plymouth, where he started a small retail store in the east room of the Wright homestead, now standing just below the limits of the present borough of Plymouth. The first sale made in this store was of a Jew's harp to Jameson Harvey, who paid a sixpence in cash. The first entry upon the books of Mr. Wright, now in the possession of his son, Colonel H. B. Wright, is dated February 26th, 1808, and reads: "Abraham Tilbury, dr., to one qt. of rum, at 7-6 per gallon, £0 1s. 10½d." As only the necessaries of life were then kept, rum must have been considered essential.

Mr. Harvey, who bought the Jew's harp when a boy, is now living, at the advanced age of 82 years, and is undoubtedly the only person now living who traded at this store during the first year of its existence. The "Conestoga wagon" had been added to the means of transportation, and goods were now brought overland from Easton as well as by water from Sunbury. All goods were brought into the valley by one or the other of these means of carriage until the opening of the canal in 1830. Rev. George Lane bought the store of Joseph Wright in 1812, and kept it nearly a year, when he entered into a partnership with Benjamin Harvey, son of Elisha Harvey. The new firm did business in a small frame building on the site of Smith's Opera House until 1816, when Mr. Lane went to Wilkes-Barre, and Mr. Harvey to Huntington. Immediately after the sale of his store to Mr. Lane, Joseph Wright entered into a partnership with Benjamin Reynolds and Joel Rogers. They opened a store in a small frame building on the east side of the road, opposite the present (1873) residence of Henderson Gaylord." This firm dissolved in October, 1814, and the business was continued by Joel Rogers & Co. up to 1816, then by Reynolds, Gaylord & Co. to December, 1818, then by Mr. Gaylord to the fall of 1824, when he entered into a ten years' partnership with the late William C. Reynolds. Gaylord & Reynolds established a branch at Kingston. From 1836 Mr. Gaylord and Draper Smith formed a partnership to 1839. From 1816 to 1827 the business stand was on the premises now occupied as a hotel by John Deane. In 1827 Mr. Gaylord built a store across the street, in which he and Mr. Smith traded till they dissolved, and Mr. Gaylord to 1856, when he retired.

About 1828 John Turner opened a store where Turner Brothers now are. Soon after that he sold his stock to Gaylord & Reynolds. Asa Cook commenced business in the Turner store, and was soon followed by John Turner, and the establishment has been continued down to the present time either in his name or the name of his sons. Samuel Davenport and Elijah Reynolds opened a store in 1834. This firm was dissolved in 1835, and the business continued by Samuel Davenport to 1840, then by him and John B. Smith till 1850, and for several years succeeding by Mr. Smith. Ira Davenport opened his store in 1845. Jameson Harvey opened a store at West Nanticoke about 1843.

As the saw-mill of Marvin was built in 1795, it is altogether probable that frame houses were constructed soon after, and that several were built about the same time. Of these first houses there are now standing the old red house, or Ransom homestead, the Davenport homestead, the widow Heath house and the Joseph Wright house. The first stone house was built by Mr. Coleman in 1806, and is now known as the "Hodge house." In digging the cellar of this house the bones of Indians were exhumed. The first coal ever burned in Plymouth, for domestic purposes, was burned in this house, by Abijah Smith, who boarded there while working his mine. Freeman Thomas built the stone house that is now occupied by M. Garrahan in 1830. The first brick building was built by Matthias Nesbitt in 1847. This was a story and a half dwelling and was afterward burned. Samuel Davenport built a brick dwelling in 1848, and the J. B. Smith homestead was erected in 1849.

George P. Smith kept tavern in the old red house, as did the widow Heath in the old house now standing by the old elm tree, which was probably the first tavern in the township. Oliver Davenport kept tavern where the Hon. J. J. Shonk lives, as early as 1822. A hotel was built by Mr. Deitrich where the Eley house now stands, and was kept by several persons. This was afterward burned. Daniel Carey built a Hotel about 1832, where the Harvey's Creek Hotel now stands. He afterward built a large house where the canal barn now stands, which was moved in 1839 by Joseph Edwards and George Mack to where it now stands. It is the Harvey's Creek Hotel, James J. Ruch proprietor.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

Plymouth, being one of the districts of the town of Westmoreland, was governed by the digest of rules and regulations prepared by the Susquehanna Company, under which the principal authority as to township government was vested in a board, "to be composed of three able and judicious men among such settlers." These were elected on the first Monday of December of each year, and were "to take upon them the direction of the settlement of each town, under the company, and the well ordering and the governing of the same." These directors were required to meet on the first Monday of each month, with their peace officers, and to take into consideration the good of the people, as well as to hear and decide such disputes as might be brought before them. They were empowered to inflict punishment upon offenders, either by reproof and fine, or fine and corporal punishment. The directors of all the towns were required to meet quarterly, to take into consideration the good of the whole people, or of any particular town; to hear the appeal of any who might think themselves aggrieved by the award of the directors of their own town; and to come to such resolutions as they might think for the general good. No appeal lay "from the doings of such quarterly meeting, or their decrees, to the Susquehanna Company, save in disputes as to land."

Phineas Nash, Captain David Marvin and J. Gaylord, elected in December, 1774, were the first directors of Plymouth. March 1st, 1774, it was voted that "Plymouth, with all ye land west of Susquehanna river, south and west to the town line, be one district, by the name of Plymouth district." Samuel Ransom was appointed selectman; Asaph Whittlesey, collector of rates; Elisha Swift, Samuel Ransom and Benjamin Harvey, surveyors of highways; John Baker and Charles Gaylord, viewers of fences; Elisha Swift and Gideon Baldwin as listers, to make enrollments; Phineas Nash and Thomas Heath, as grand jurors; Timothy Hopkins, tithing man, and Thomas Heath, key keeper. It was "voted at this meeting that for ye present ye tree that stands northerly from Captain Butler's house shall be ye town sign-post." March 24th, 1786, it was voted "that all such houses as are within the limits or this common-field, and occupied with families, be removed out of said field by the tenth of April next; the committee to give speedy warning to any such residents and see it is put in execution. The house now occupied by the widow Heath excepted, provided the said widow Heath shall run a fence so as to leave her house without said field." The best authorities locate the "common-field" on the brow of Ant hill, as the old frame house still standing and occupied by William Jenkins was the property of widow Heath. The schoolhouse which stood on the opposite side of the road, and a little below the old elm tree, was most probably the place in which all public meetings were held, and the old elm tree the sign and whipping post of old Plymouth.

The records of the township officers of Plymouth under the Pennsylvania jurisdiction extend no further back than 1828, and even these are but poorly kept. It is known, however, that Joseph Wright and Henderson Gaylord, both men of signal ability, kept an eye on the business of the township and straightened many a tangled account for the township officers between the years 1807 and 1828. But the records of their work, if any were made, have all been lost. The following have been the principal township officers of Plymouth, as far as can be ascertained:

Supervisors.—William Hunt, 1828; John Smith, 1828; Isaac Fuller, 1829; James Nesbitt, 1829; Samuel Ranson, 1830, 1841; Joseph Keller, 1831, 1834, 1835, 1837; James Hayward, 1831; Benjamin Reynolds, 1830; Hiram Drake, 1832; Joseph L. Worthington, 1832, 1833, 1841, 1847-49; Jared L. Baldwin, 1833; Freeman Thomas, 1834-36, 1840; Jonathan McDonald, 1836-38; Samuel Van Loan, 1838; William Hansom, 1839; Oliver Davenport 2nd, 1839; John Elston, 1840; James Van Loan, 1842; Truman Atherton, 1842; Henry Sears, 1843; Samuel Coons, 1845, 1863, 1864; John Moyer, 1845; Caleb Atherton, 1846; Samuel Davenport, 1847; William Nesbitt, 1848; J. F. Reynolds, 1849; Ira Davenport, 1850, 1854; Benjamin Duran, 1850; Joel Gabriel, 1851; Oliver Davenport, 1852, 1853, 1855; Hiram Davenport, 1852, 1853; Benjamin Devens, 1854; Clark Davenport, 1855-61, 1863-66; George Davenport, 1856-58, 1860-62; George Hoover, 1858; Gardner Nesbitt, 1862; John Jessup, 1865-67; Thomas Harris, 1867; Joseph Jaquish, 1868-71; Samuel Harrison, 1869, 1870; J. R. Linn, 1872; Henry L. Hughes, 1872; Owen Doyle, 1873, 1874; Owen McDonald, 1874; Daniel Fraze, 1875; William Charles, 1875; Patrick Cowell, 1876; Martin Collins, 1876; Joseph Linn, 1877; Hiram Labar, 1877; Patrick Roan, 1875; Abram Deets, 1878; William P. Evans, 1879; H. Smith, 1879.

Justices.—Appointed: James Sutton, July 4th, 1808; David Perkins, September 30th, 1808; William Trnx, March 30th, 1809; Moses Scovel, July 12th, 1809; Stephen Hollister, June 30th, 1810; Charles Chapman, January 18th, 1813; Samuel Thomas, March 20th, 1816; Jacob I. Bogardus, January 9th, 1817; Dr. John Smith, August 2nd, 1819; Benjamin Reynolds, August 17th, 1820; Alva C. Phillips, November 15th, 1852; John Bennett, November 1st, 1825; Thomas Irwin, December 11th, 1826; Reuben Holgate, November 24th, 1829; James Nesbitt, December 16th, 1831; Simeon F. Rogers, December 10th, 1831; Fisher Gay, December 4th, 1832; J. R. Baldwin, May 27th, 1833; Watson Baldwin, December 30th, 1833; Sharp D. Lewis, April 18th, 1835; J. I. Bogardus, July 15th, 1836; Caleb Atherton, September 30th, 1837; John P. Rice, September 30th, 1837; Peter Allen, October 25th, 1838; Henderson Gaylord, October 29th, 1838; Addison C. Church, May 10th, 1830. Elected for terms of five years: Samuel Wadhams, 1840; Ebenezer Chamberlin, 1840, 1845, 1856, 1861; Hiram Drake, 1841; John Ingham, 1845; George Brown, 1845; Samuel Davenport, 1851; Caleb Atherton, 1851; Elijah C. Wadhams, 1855, 1860, 1865; E. L. Prince, 1855; John B. Smith, 1861; Joseph Ives, 1867, 1872; John C. Jaquish, 1868; Harrison Nesbitt, 1873; James Stookey, 1875; William L. Pritchard, 1878.

HAMLET'S.

The hamlet of West Nanticoke, situated at the mouth of Harvey's creek, contains about twenty dwellings, the Harvey's Creek Hotel, James J. Ruch proprietor; the store of William Yingst and a grist-mill. James Stookey, Esq., is postmaster at this place.

At Grand Tunnel are most of the houses connected with the Susquehanna Coal Company's mine, and, it being at the head of the Pennsylvania Canal, the business of shipping coal is done here. The post-office is in the store of Hildreth & Co.; John M. Lyon superintendent of the store and postmaster.

Larksville is the meeting place of Wahoo Tribe, No. 119, I. O. R. M. which was instituted March 30th, 1870, by Grand Sachem Charles C. Conly, of Philadelphia, with the following charter members: John C. Jaquish, Harrison Nesbitt, George Kelley, David Shipp, D. R. Pendergrast and S. D. Robbins.

The first officers were: David Shipp, S.; John C. Jaquish, S. S.; Harrison Nesbitt, J. S.; George Kelley, C. of R.; D. R. Pendergrast, R. of W.

The past sachems are David Shipp, John C. Jaquish, Harrison Nesbitt, Peter Brown, J. L. Samison, James Hayward, Isaac Samison, William Blackman, David L. Davis, John Powell, Daniel S. Davis and Edwin Howe.

The present officers are: Stephen Dodson, S.; David Shipp, C. of R.; Harrison Nesbitt, R. of W. The lodge meets each Saturday night at Snyder's Hall.

CHURCHES OF THE TOWNSHIP.

Methodist Class of Larksville.—The Methodists formed a class at Larksville or Blind Town at an early day, but owing to the loss of all the early class books no record of the original members can be given. John Culvert was the first class leader, and after him Joseph Jaquish acted in that capacity up to the time of his death. The ministers were supplied from the Kingston church, of which this class formed a part. In 1873 a church was erected at a cost of about $4,000. This was soon afterward sold at sheriff's sale, and bought by the "Christian" society. Since that time the meetings have been held in the school-house. The preachers have been supplied by the Kingston Seminary, Mr. Morish, a student of that institution, being the present minister.

Snowden Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Larksville.—The Presbyterians of Larksville organized a church society May 27th, 1870, with the following as the original members: Mrs. Charles Hughes, Mrs. Ellen Keller, Mrs. John Keller, Mrs. William Bryden, Mrs. Samuel Diggery, Mrs. John Bersch, Miss Pantha Keller and J. Warden and wife.

Although the members of the church were nearly all ladies their husbands freely gave their money for the support of the church, as the fact that they built a church in 1872 costing from $3,000 to $4,000 will prove. The first service held in the church was the funeral of Mrs. Samuel Vanette, March 26th, 1872; the next being the funeral of Hiram Hunter, March 28th, 1872. Rev. Dr. Roberts, of New Jersey, preached the dedicatory sermon, July 30th, 1872. The church property is located at Larksville, a place which was named in memory of Mrs. Polly Lark, who owned the land on which the village is located, was very liberal with her property and died at the age of one hundred and six years.

This church was named "Snowden Memorial church" from the fact that it was the third Presbyterian church in the valley for which Rev. E. Hazard Snowden had been instrumental in providing sanctuaries. Two of these, the Plymouth and Larksville congregations, were gathered from the world and organized by Mr. Snowden.

The church edifice is pleasantly situated on an elevated plateau, where it meets the eye in all directions; the lot is 120 feet square and was donated to the congregation by the Northern Coal and Iron Company.

The church was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Lackawanna at its stated meeting in September, 1879. Mr. Snowden continues pastor, although over seventy years old. The Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition.

"Christian" Church of Larksville.—In 1832 Rev. G. W. Richmond, a "Christian" minister, formed a church here, including the Snyders and a part of the Keller family.

Meetings were held in the school-house until the purchase of the building erected by the Methodist society about 1875. This church has the same minister as the "Christian" church in Plymouth borough.

Welsh Congregational Church.—The Welsh Congregationalists residing on the eastern slope of Ross' hill, in Plymouth township, completed the organization of a church society November 18th, 1868. The members of the society at this time were William L. Roberts and wife, Edward Hopwood, John T. Davis and wife, David S. Isaacs and wife, Isaac Jones and wife, Isaac Thomas, Reese Jones and wife, William Hatchwell and wife, Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Joseph Reeves. Meetings were held in one of the houses of the Kingston Coal Company for some time. In 1871 the congregation erected a fine wooden edifice, costing about $7,000. The dedicatory services were held in March, 1872. There were present Revs. David T. Davis, T. C. Edwards, Edward T. Lewis, D. Daniels, D. E. Evans, S. R. Jones, and — Hare.

The first minister was Rev. David T. Davis, pastor from 1871 to 1874; Rev. John G. Evans from September, 1875, to 1877, when Rev. T. C. Edwards was placed over the church, who continues to preach to the congregation.

Isaac Jones was the first Sunday-school-superintendent. There is now an attendance of 225 pupils.

First Welsh Baptist Church of Kingston—This church, on Ross hill, was organized by the Welsh miners working in the vicinity, in June, 1871. Daniel Griffith was elected deacon and William Samuel clerk. The other members were Mrs. Daniel Griffith, Mrs. William Samuel, David Pritchard and wife, Morgan Williams and wife and Thomas D. Davis.

Meetings were held in the Yellow-wash school-house. The church was supplied by different ministers, but principally by Rev. Theophilus Jones, of Wilkes-Barre, until August 18th, 1876; since then James R. Price has been the pastor.

A neat and commodious church, costing $2,000, was opened for service November 9th, 1879, and dedicated on Christmas day, 1879. Henry Jenkins was the first superintendent of the Sunday-school. About 90 children attend the school.

COAL MINING IN PLYMOUTH TOWNSHIP.

Daniel Davenport was engaged in the mining of coal in Plymouth as early as 1826. In 1828 Freeman Thomas began driving what is known as the "grand tunnel," which was the first rock tunneling ever done in the Wyoming valley. After three or four years of persevering labor he struck the big red ash vein, much to the astonishment of his neighbors, who had laughed at his efforts. Jameson Harvey began operations on his property below the "grand tunnel" in 1832, and mined coal for several years.

Among the early coal operators of Plymouth were Ziba Davenport, Thomas Borbridge, Francis J. Smith, John Ingham, John Flanigan and Martin Brennan; and of a later day John J. Shonk, W. L. Lance, E. C. Wadhams, John B. Smith and others. There are now no individual operators in Plymouth, all the mines being worked by some one of the large coal companies, except one operated by a company of three men.

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA & WESTERN RAILROAD CO.

This company operates two breakers in Plymouth, the Boston and Avondale, under lease.

The Boston Mine, situated near Larksville, was opened in 1857, by the Boston Coal Company, who operated the mine one year and then leased the works to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company. The Boston Coal Company sold to the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company in 1868, and the latter now owns the mine, subject to the lease of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western. The breaker, located near the river, and just above the old cemetery, is reached by a railroad nearly two miles in length, over which the coal is hauled by a twenty ton locomotive. Robert Hutchinson is superintendent, with H. P. Davis as inside boss. There are 111 men and boys employed outside, and 167 inside. The mine is working the "Cocper" and "Patent" veins, forming the "Baltimore" vein. There are 36 tenant houses connected with the works.

The Avondale Mine was leased by John C. Phelps, of Wilkes-Barre, June 13th, 1863, of William C. Reynolds, Henderson Gaylord and others. In January, 1866, Mr. Phelps assigned it to the Steuben Coal Company, which was subsequently merged with the Nanticoke Coal and Iron Company. The latter erected the breaker and leased to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company.

One of the most frightful accidents that ever occurred in America took place here September 9th, 1869. The breaker burned, and there being but one outlet, and that through the breaker, two hundred and eight men were suffocated. The coroner's jury returned a verdict declaring that the men came to their deaths from "the exhaustion of atmospheric air and the prevalence of sulphuric and carbonic acid gases in the said Avondale mine, caused by the burning of the head house and breaker at said mines." By this accident seventy-two widows and one hundred and fifty-three orphans were left to mourn the loss of husband and father. Relief committees were organized in various towns, and by October 2nd the subscriptions amounted to $155,825.10. Thomas W. Williams, of Plymouth, and David Jones, of Grand Tunnel, lost their lives in the attempt to reach the men in the mines. A new breaker was erected at once, and the mine has been operated ever since. Conrad Lee is outside foreman, and T. J. Philips inside boss; 240 men and boys are employed inside, and about 150 outside. About 800 tons of coal are mined daily.

CHAUNCEY BREAKER.

This mine is situated between the Avondale mine and the Susquehanna Coal Company's breaker. Charles Hutchinson & Co. began work here in 1860. They sold to Albrighton & Co., and the present owners bought in August, 1868. The capacity is 200 tons daily, but the production is only 125 tons, fifty men and boys being employed. Thomas P. Macfarlane is outside foreman and Buckley Allebach mining boss.

SUSQUEHANNA COAL COMPANY'S BREAKER NO. 3

is situated on the "grand tunnel" property of Freeman Thomas, and also works the coal from the lands of Jameson Harvey. The company erected the present breaker, as the old workings were farther from the river, coal having been hauled to the river and shipped without being prepared.

The Buck mountain vein, with its red ash benches, is worked. The machinery consists of 5 rolls, 15 screens, 2 hauling engines of 370 horse power, with a capacity of 840 tons daily; 3 pumps with a capacity of 400 gallons per minute, and 20 boilers of 800 horse power. One hundred and eighty men and boys are employed inside, under Worthy Carver, mining boss, and 150 outside, under James W. Macfarlane, outside foreman. O. K. Bennett has charge of the office of the company at this place.

James Macfarlane opened the Macfarlane shaft in 1857, between the Susquehanna breaker and the Union mine. The breaker burned down in 1865, and the mine having been connected with the workings of the Susquehanna Coal Company, it is worked through their breaker.

KINGSTON COAL COMPANY'S BREAKER NO. 2.

This breaker is located on the eastern slope of Ross hill in Plymouth township, and the mine is worked by Waterman & Beaver. Morgan D. Rosser is mining boss, and about 225 men and boys are employed inside and 150 outside. Some 1,250 tons of coal are mined daily. The shaft is about half a mile from the breaker, the coal being hauled by mine locomotives. John J. Morgan has charge of the office connected with the breaker.

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

PLYMOUTH TOWNSHIP AND BOROUGH AND JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

E. J. ACHENBACH, ticket agent for the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, Plymouth, was born August 3d, 1849, at Three Rivers, Michigan, and married Miss Kate Weiss, of Bloomsburg, Columbia county, Pa.

F. HOWARD ARMSTRONG, clerk, formerly a farmer, was born in Rileysville, Wayne county, Pa., January 8th, 1844, and married Hannah E. Jaquish, of Plymouth. Mr. Armstrong served in the army during the civil war and was mustered out as second lieutenant of Company F 2nd Pennsylvania cavalry.

J. R. BALDWIN, a farmer of Jackson township, was born in Newark, N. J. He married Mary Baker, who died in 1844. May 2nd, 1864, he married Anna Pratt, of Nicholson, Wyoming county. He was county commissioner's clerk from 1844 to 1860.

E. D. BARTHE was born in Philadelphia, September 7th, 1829, and married Margaret Collins, of the same city. During the Rebellion he served as sergeant in the 26th Pennsylvania volunteers. He has for some time published the Plymouth Star (office Main street, east ward), and has been Burgess of Plymouth.

A. F. BATES, stable boss, Plymouth, was born in Luzerne county, February 18th, 1846. His wife was formerly Sarah Dreher, of Stroudsburg, Pa.

E. W. BECKWITH, photographer, was born May 1st, 1830, in Windsor, Broome county, N. Y., and married Miss Julia Chamberlain, of Great Bend, Pa.

JAMES BIRD, agent for the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad at Nanticoke, was born in Bear Gap, Northumberland county, Pa., December 7th, 1855, and married Lillie F. Nicely, of Shickshinny, Luzerne county.

ELIAS BITTENBENDER, who was formerly engaged in shoemaking, now an engineer in the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, was born in Nescopeck township, February 2nd, 1834, and married Elizabeth Frantz, of Berwick, Columbia county, Pa.

BRICE S. BLAIR, justice of the peace and assistant Burgess, Plymouth, was born in Candor, N. Y., December 25th, 1833. His wife was Miss Florence E. Davenport, of Plymouth.

J. H. CAMPBELL, wheelwright, now foreman in the employ of the Pennsylvania Canal Company, was born in Nescopeck, March 4th, 1843, and married M. M. Post, of Union.

WORTHY CARVER, mining foreman, West Nanticoke, was born in England, in 1835. His wife was Hannah Williams, of Schuylkill county.

CALVIN W. CASE, a life-long resident of Jackson township, was born March 18th, 1812. He married Miss Olive L'Amoreux, also of Jackson. He is engaged in farming and bee-keeping, and has served as justice of the peace twenty years.

REV. RALPH C. H. CATTERALL, pastor of the Baptist church at Plymouth, was born in Lancashire, England, May 3d, 1840. His wife was Miss Caroline Reid, of Staffordshire, England.

GEORGE CEASE, farmer and manufacturer of lumber, was born in Beach Haven, Pa., August 24th, 1812, and married Jane L'Amoreux, of Jackson township. He has served as supervisor.

PLYMOUTH BOROUGH.

NOVEMBER 30th, 1865, the petition of John B. Smith, Peter Shupp, H. Gaylord, Draper Smith, J. W. Eno and fifty-three others was filed in court, asking that a borough might be incorporated, and that its name should be Plymouth. The grand jury reported the same day in favor of granting the petition, and April 23d, 1866, the Court of Quarter Sessions granted a charter, and appointed Oliver Davenport judge, and J. J. Shonk and Ira Davenport inspectors, to hold an election for borough officers on the 2nd Tuesday of May, 1866. At this election, E. C. Wadhams was elected burgess, and the following persons as town council: Samuel Wadhams, Henderson Gaylord, Peter Shupp, Ira Davenport and Frank Turner. Theodore Renshaw was elected high constable, and J. W. Eno auditor. August 3d a full code of regulations for the borough government was adopted. The borough was divided into two wards in 1872, and in 1876 into eight wards. The population in 1870 was 2,684, and in 1880 6,065.

EARLY SCHOOLS AND TEACHERS.

The settlers of Plymouth, early recognizing the importance of education, established schools as soon as the country became quiet after the Revolution. Two school-houses were built, one near the common-field and the other near Ransom's creek. Jonah Rogers was one of the first teachers and commenced teaching about 1800. A Mr. Hamilton, from Connecticut, taught in the lower school-house in 1806; followed by one Hazleton. The old academy was built in 1815. The early teachers in this building were Jonah Rogers, Thomas Patterson, Dr. Thomas Sweet and Charles C. Curtis. "The languages were first taught in the old academy as early as 1829" by Benjamin M. Nyce. Nyce and Patterson taught three or four years, and then Mr. Seivers, the last teacher who taught the dead languages in the old academy. A school was established in a building which stood nearly opposite the residence of George Snyder, in Larksville, as early as 1825. This was afterward removed to the location of the present school-house. The borough has sixteen schools. In 1876 it had fourteen, with an average attendance of 628 pupils. Schools were kept seven months, at an expense of $6,584.89.

The old academy is still used, and a fine brick building has been erected in the west end of the borough. Prof. P. Bacon has been principal of the high school for several years. There are over 600 children in daily attendance, and more than $6,500 is annually expended on educational matters.

EARLY DOCTORS AND LAWYERS.

Dr. William H. Smith was the earliest practitioner of medicine. He was not a resident of the town, however. Dr. Anna Morse, formerly Mrs. Heath, practiced medicine early in the present century. She used herbs, calomel and jalap as her principal remedies. She was succeeded, about 1814, by Dr. Moreland, who lived here two years. Dr. Ebenezer Chamberlin came into the town in 1816, and continued in the practice of medicine until his death in 1866. Dr. Charles E. Gaylord, the son of one of the original "Forty," was the first native of Plymouth to study medicine. He did not practice here, but returned here to spend his old age with his son, dying in February, 1839.

James A. Gordon, the oldest member of the Luzerne county bar, resides here, and Hendrick B. Wright, the next oldest, was born here, and only left when he went to Wilkes-Barre to practice his profession. Thomas Nesbitt was the first resident lawyer. He was followed by James A. Opp, H. C. Magee, C. W. McAlarney and George W. Shonk.

BUSINESS GROWTH.

The business of Plymouth borough has increased wonderfully during the last fifteen years, as the following list of the principal brick business places will prove. The first brick store in the borough was built by E. C. Wadhams about 1850, and is now used by the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, as an office. George P. Richards built a brick two-story hotel building, which he still occupies. Peter Shupp erected the three-story brick block at the corner of Main street and Center avenue, in 1867. His son Charles now occupies the building for a store. G. P. Richards put up in 1868 the building occupied by C. W. Jenkins as a hardware store. In 1871 D. K. Spy erected the block where R. Robert's drug store now is. J. B. Smith's opera house was begun in 1871 and finished in 1872. In 1872 Orange Gould erected a two-story brick store, having Lewis Boughton's wagon and blacksmith shop under the same roof. In this year G. P. Richards built the Plymouth House and the store occupied by Reese D. Williams, and Antony Duffy built the Duffy block, occupied by Sol. Hirsch as a dry goods store. In 1873 Henry Lees built his store; James Lynchkill, the building occupied by D. K. Spy as a drug store; James McAlarney, the block he now occupies; the Odd Fellows, the block adjoining McAlarney's, and now owned by J. J. Shonk and D. K. Spy; and Mark Duffee the store occupied by Hanes Brothers. In 1874 Daniel Antony built the store now occupied by A. F. Levi as a book store; William Davis, a double store; J. Dennis, the building now occupied by the Star drug store, and Samuel Snyder the store occupied by McKinney & Simons. In 1875 McKinney & Simons built the store now occupied by A. Reese, and J. J. Davis his music store. In 1876 D. P. Williams built the double store now occupied by W. C. Sponsler and Thomas Roberts; Richard Lewis, a double store; J. J. Shonk, the store occupied by F. Schwartz; and S. Snyder, a two-story building now used as a barber shop. In 1878 S. F. William built his drug store. In 1879 Lee Brothers, James B. Davis and Abram Straus, each erected two-story brick stores, and Joseph Sweitzer a double two-story brick store.

The principal hotels are the Parrish House, Milton Charles proprietor; the Ely House, James Ely proprietor; and the Frantz House, Luther C. Frantz proprietor.

The Wren Iron Works, built in 1871, by John Y. Wren, a native of Scotland, are principally occupied in the casting of mine machinery. Iron fences and other ornamental castings are also made at these works, which have a capacity equal to the work of twenty-five men. Owing to the dullness of the trade, but a small force is now engaged. John Y. Wren is superintendent and manager.

Harvey Brothers & Co.'s planing-mill began in April, 1871, in a building 229 by 70 feet, that had formerly been used as a machine shop. The capital invested was $48,000. The works are principally occupied in making doors, mouldings, sash, &c., and can employ, when running to their full capacity, 65 men. The machinery is driven by one thirty-five horse-power engine, with three boilers 32 feet long and 32 inches in diameter. The works are under the immediate superintendence of John Kern, one of the firm.

The first bank in Plymouth was the First National Bank, which was chartered December 10th, 1864. The capital stock was $100,000, in shares of $100. The first officers were J. B. Smith, president, and Henderson Gaylord, cashier. J. B. Smith is now president, Draper Smith vice-president, and J. W. Chamberlin cashier. The bank is located in a brick building owned by its proprietors on Main street.

Plymouth Savings Bank was incorporated in 1871; authorized capital, $250,000; capital taken, $25,000. Officers: Ira Davenport, president; Peter Shupp, vice-president, and W. W. Deitrick, cashier.

THE COAL INTEREST.

FIRST USE, MINING AND SHIPMENTS.

To Plymouth belongs the honor of having sent the first anthracite coal to market, and to Abijah Smith the greater honor of having been the pioneer of the great anthracite coal trade of Pennsylvania. He came to Plymouth in 1806, and bought 75 acres of coal land on the east side of Ransom's creek. In 1807 he began mining, and coal has been mined from the opening made by him nearly every year since. In this year he bought of John P. Arndt, for $24, an "ark" that had been used in bringing plaster down the river, and loaded it with about fifty tons of coal, mined on the lands of Calvin Wadhams by stripping off the earth. Late in the season he ran the ark to Columbia, Lancaster county. This was the first anthracite coal ever offered in the market. In the spring of 1808 Abijah Smith and his brother John, who had come to Plymouth from Derby, Conn., and bought an adjoining tract of 120 acres of coal land, loaded two arks and took them to Columbia; but they could not sell it, as the people declared the black stones to be worthless. Not to be discouraged they again loaded their arks, and the next year went again to Columbia, but this time provided with a grate. This was put up in the presence of the spectators and a fire built with coal. Doubt was dispelled, and an opening made for a small trade.

Coal was then quarried rather than mined. Teams drove right into the Smith mine and loaded; six loads being considered a day's work. The arks in which the coal was shipped were built on the bank of the small stream that crosses the street near the blacksmith shop of A. Gabriel. The Smiths had constructed a basin near the mouth of this stream, where the arks were built, and all the men in the neighborhood assisted in launching them. Coal was sent to market in lump, and was broken by the consumer with hammers. The first coal-breaker was driven by horse power. It was in Plymouth that powder was first used in coal mining in Pennsylvania. Abijah Smith got John Flanigan, from Milford, Connecticut to begin blasting in March, 1818.

LEHIGH AND WILKES-BARRE COAL COMPANY.

This company first began mining coal in Plymouth in 1874, having leases of the Lance breaker, Nottingham shaft and Washington breaker. The superintendent of the works of the company in Plymouth is F. E. Tiffany, with E. M. Marple as accountant and J. Jones machinist. The company has seventy-three tenant houses in connection with its different works. It put its mines under contract to Charles Parrish, January 1st, 1871, and he now operates them.

The Lance Breaker, also known as Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company's Breaker No. 11, was first opened by John J. Shonk and W. L. Lance in 1864. Mr. Shonk sold to Mr. Lance in 1866, and he to Samuel Bonnell in 1871. The present owners bought of Mr. Bonnell. James Linn is outside foreman, and Daniel Reese mining boss. The breaker has a capacity of 875 tons daily, but in October, 1879, was only worked up to 700 tons. The "Bennett" vein is being worked. Ninety men and boys are employed outside, and two hundred and thirty inside.

Nottingham Breaker (Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company's No. 15) was first opened by the Nottingham Coal Company, who sank the shaft to the "7-foot" vein, and then leased to Thomas Broderick & Co., in August, 1869. Broderick & Co. sank the shaft to the red-ash or "B" vein, and sold their lease to the Lehigh Navigation and Coal Company, April 1st, 1872. This company sold to the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, January 1st, 1874. This breaker employs two hundred and fifty men and boys, under the charge of George R. Conner, outside foreman. Five hundred men and boys are employed inside, under James B. Davis, inside boss. The breaker is one of the largest in the valley, having a capacity of 1,700 tons daily, and is now working to 1,500 tons.

Washington Breaker (Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company's No. 16) was first opened by John Shay, about 1854, who partly erected the breaker, drift and inclined plane. He then formed a company under the title of Shutz, Shay & Heebner, who operated the mine for a time, with John B. Smith as superintendent. Thomas Broderick & Co. obtained a lease of these works August, 1869, and sold their lease April 1st, 1872, to the Lehigh Navigation and Coal Company, who sold to the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company January 1st, 1874. The works employ one hundred and twenty men and boys outside, under Peter H. Garrehan, outside foreman, and two hundred inside, under David W. Evans, mining foreman. The breaker has a capacity of six hundred tons per day, and the mine, situated on the hill one-fourth of a mile away, is worked to the full capacity of the breaker.

DELAWARE AND HUDSON CANAL COMPANY.

This company has five breakers in Plymouth township and borough. It first began mining here in 1872, by shipments from No. 2 breaker. It has one hundred and ten tenant houses. E. R. Peckins is general superintendent in Plymouth, and Isaac Mark machinist.

Delaware and Hudson No. 1 was opened by Robert Hutchinson & Brother in 1855, for a company of Philadelphia men, under the name of the Plymouth Coal Company. They sold to the Northern Coal and Iron Company in 1869, and they to the present owners. The breaker burned in 1877, since which time the mine has been idle. There are four engines with an aggregate of one hundred and forty horse power.

Delaware and Hudson No. 2, about a quarter of a mile from No. 1, was opened by the present owners in 1861. The breaker was not erected until 1864. The outside foreman is Charles Van Loon, and William Copley is mining boss. The mine has a capacity of about seven hundred tons per day, and employs two hundred men and boys inside, and one hundred and twenty outside. The works are operated by five engines of an aggregate of two hundred and ten horse power. The mine was opened in the "Cooper" vein.

Delaware and Hudson No. 3, on the railroad leading from the Boston mine to the Boston breaker, and about a mile from the river, was opened to the "Cooper" vein in 1870-71. The shaft was only rock over one-half of its area, the other half being quicksand. The breaker has a capacity of 800 tons daily, but stood idle from its completion to October, 1879. It has four engines, with an aggregate of one hundred and sixty-five horse power, and one Cornish bull pump of ten feet stroke.

Delaware and Hudson No. 4 was worked by Patten, Fenderson & Co. up to 1850, when they were closed out at sheriff's sale, and the property bought by A. C. Laning & Co. In 1860 J. J. Shonk, Payne Pettebone and William Swetland bought the mine, and they worked it till 1863, when they sold to the Jackson Coal Company, which now owns the land, and which leased to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in 1878. This breaker has a capacity of over 700 tons per day, and employs about 90 men and boys outside, and 230 inside. The works are operated by five engines, aggregating 195 horse power, and include three pumps, with a capacity of 45 barrels per minute. The outside foreman is Charles Lawson, the mining boss Edward Hahn. The breaker is in Poke Hollow, Plymouth township.

Delaware and Hudson No. 5 was begun in 1858, by the Plymouth Coal Company, under the superintendence of J. C. Fuller. That company sold to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in 1865. The breaker is on the railroad running to No. 4, and is within the borough limits. The outside foreman is August Schnell, and the mine boss Caleb Shonk. The breaker produces about 400 tons daily, and employs 90 men and boys outside, and 130 inside. There are 5 engines, with an aggregate of 185 horse power. There is a slope inside 2,100 feet in length

DODSON SHAFT.

This breaker, on the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg railroad, was opened in 1869 by Fellows, Dodson & Co., who operated the mine until 1872. They then sold their lease to the Wilkes-Barre Coal and Iron Company, who operated the mine until they went into the hands of a receiver, in 1877. The works remained idle from this time to October 1st, 1878, when the Plymouth Land Company—J. J. Shonk and J. W. Eno, the lessors—again got control of the lands and leased to J. C. Haddock, G. W. Shonk and E. F. Stevens, who now operate the mine. E. F. Stevens is superintendent and Michael Shonk inside boss. There are about 200 men and boys employed about the works. The power is furnished by two eighty horse power hoisting engines, one forty horse power breaking engine, one pair twenty-five horse power slope engines and one bull pump. There are fifty tenant houses belonging to the works. The capacity of the breaker is 200 tons daily. A slope is being driven to a lower vein, when the capacity will be greatly increased.

GAYLORD COAL COMPANY.

This company's mine, northwest of Delaware and Hudson breaker No. 4, was opened by Henderson Gaylord about 1854. The property was leased to Van Homer & Fellows for several years; then to Mr. Hedstrum, of Buffalo; then to the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company. The works were idle four years, after which Mr. Gaylord took them into his own hands. March 15th, 1879, the breaker burned down. The old breaker had a capacity of 500 tons daily, and employed 55 men and boys. A new breaker is now being built under the supervision of A. B. Tyrrell, of Kingston, contractor, which will have a capacity of 1,500 tons, and be able to employ 150 men and boys. There will be thirteen engines. The general superintendent is Daniel Edwards, with David Isaacs as outside foreman and George Pictou inside boss. The company has 270 acres of coal.

THE PRESS OF PLYMOUTH.

In 1856 James Murill Denn published twenty-one numbers of the Plymouth Register, on basswood paper manufactured by W. L. Lance, at Rupert's Station, Columbia county.

The Plymouth Star was started in January, 1869, by E. D. Barthe, who still continues its publication. The Star was Republican one year, and has since been independent. In January, 1879, the title was changed to the Weekly Star. The Star is an eight-page, six-column paper.

The Temperance Record was published in 1872 by O. I. Leach. About a year after, A. F. Levi and others took charge of it and changed the title to the Plymouth Index. From the fall of 1873 Levi & O'Hara published it until 1874, then H. D. Bixby and A. F. Levi a few weeks, then A. H. & H. D. Bixby a short time, when the publication stopped. It was revived under the name of Plymouth Herald, by Snyder & Cooker, November 30th, 1878. In February, 1879, the latter retired, and N. M. Hartman was associated with Frank R. Snyder. The paper was under this management until May 1st, 1879, when Mr. O'Hara was associated with Mr. Snyder until November 1st, 1879. J. S. Sanders, formerly of the Hazleton Sentinel, then purchased the establishment, and he continued to publish the paper.

Frank R. Snyder published the Plymouth Enterprise a short time during 1878.

SHAWNEE CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

The Shawnee Cemetery Association was chartered September 5th, 1873, with Draper Smith president, Peter Shupp treasurer, and R. N. Smith secretary, who still serve. The capital was $10,000, in shares of $50. Land was bought of Ira Davenport, John B. Smith and Oliver Davenport, on the hill back of the borough, in Plymouth township, and improvements commenced immediately. The first person buried here was a child of William Shock, aged two years, buried October 27th, 1863. The next was William Jones, who was killed by cars November 6th, 1873.

Previous to the establishment of this cemetery burials were made on a knoll near the Boston breaker. The Davenport, Hodge and Reynolds families each had their family cemeteries. The bodies are being removed from these old burying grounds to Shawnee cemetery as rapidly as possible. The affairs of the association are being conducted by the following board of managers: John B. Smith, Ira Davenport, Peter Shupp, James McAlarney, John J. Shonk, James B. Pierce, Brice S. Blair, William Davis and A. S. Davenport.

GAS AND WATER COMPANIES.

The Plymouth Gas Company was chartered in 1875, with a capital of $20,000 in shares of $50. The first officers, who have held their offices to the present, were: Draper Smith, president; J. W. Chamberlin, secretary and treasurer, and DeHaven Lance, superintendent. Gas is made from naphtha by what is known as the Paten process. The main pipes are all four inches in diameter.

The Plymouth Water Company organized June 12th, 1875, with Draper Smith, president; J. W. Chamberlin, secretary and treasurer, and DeHaven Lance, superintendent, all still serving. The capital is $50,000, in shares of $50. The reservoir is just below the depot in Plymouth village. The water is collected from streams fed by springs in the mountains of Plymouth township, one and one-half miles from the center of the borough, and is of great purity. It is collected by a series of dams, each one being filled by the surplus water overflowing the one above. Dam No. 1 is of stone, fifteen feet high. The water has a fall of two hundred and seventy-five feet from this dam to the gauge in the company's office in the village. The main pipe leading from this dam is twelve inches in diameter. The pipe running up Main street is eight inches, and the one in Back street is six inches. There are five four-inch pipes, running from Back street to Main street. All these pipes have gates which allow of their being washed out at any time. Dam No. 2 is about one hundred rods above No. 1, on the same stream, and is twenty feet high. No. 3, forty rods further up, is twenty feet high, and No. 4, one hundred and fifty rods above this is now building, and will be thirteen feet high. All these dams are built of stone, in the best possible manner, with a view to durability. There are no pipes above No. 1.

PRINCIPAL BOROUGH OFFICERS.

The following persons have served as burgesses: E. C. Wadhams, 1866-69; J. W. Eno, 1870, 1871, 1873, 1874; C. H. Cool, 1872; E. D. Barthe, 1875; S. L. French, 1876, 1877, 1879; J. Y. Wren, 1878.

The list of justices, with dates of commission, is as follows:

Josiah W. Eno, April 9th, 1867; E. C. Wadhams, November 6th, 1869; Josiah W. Eno, April 9th, 1872; John E. Halleck, east ward, April 15th, 1873; Bryce S. Blair, west ward, April 15th, 1873; J. W. Eno, first ward, March 17th, 1877; C. S. Nesbitt, first ward, first Monday in May, 1878; J. E. Halleck, second ward, first Monday in May, 1879; Richard M. Roberts, third ward, March 11th, 1876; Abel Moss, third ward, first Monday May, 1879; Augustus Schnell, fourth ward, March 11th, 1876; William Gwynne Jones, fourth ward, first Monday May, 1879; Draper Smith, fifth ward, March 11th, 1876; Ziba Van Loon, sixth ward, March 17th, 1877; Bryce S. Blair, seventh ward, first Monday May, 1878; Samuel Albrighton, eighth ward, March 11th, 1876; D. C. Neagley, second ward, first Monday May, 1879.

The officers in 1879 were: S. L. French, burgess; A. F. Levi, H. H. Ashley, Ira Davenport, Thaddeus Eddy, — Powell, D. K. Spy and Frank Turner, councilmen; Samuel Shaffer, clerk.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

Count Zinzendorf, the Moravian missionary, is known to have preached to the Indians on the site of Plymouth as early as 1742. He spent several days here, preaching to the Shawnees, through an interpreter. The tent of Count Zinzendorf is known to have stood directly opposite the site of the "Christian" church.

The early settlers had no regular meeting place, but met at the most convenient private houses. Most of the people and all of the preachers for several years were Presbyterians. Rev. George Beckwith, of Lyme, Mass., came in 1769. He was succeeded in 1770 by Rev. Jacob Johnson, of Groton, Conn., and the latter in a few months by Rev. Elkanah Holmes. In 1772 Rev. Noah Wadhaus, of Litchfield, Connecticut, a graduate of Princeton College, first preached in Plymouth. Meetings were held in barns, school-houses and private dwellings, Mr. Wadhams often preaching in his own house on the back road, where he died in 1802.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Rev. Noah Wadhams, who came from Litchfield, Conn., in 1789, was originally a Congregationalist, but soon after settling in Plymouth he became a Methodist, and united with that church, at the forming of a class, in 1791. No records are extant showing the full membership of this class; but it is known that Noah Wadhams, Moses Wadhams, Calvin Wadhams, Mrs. Benjamin Harvey, Mrs. Turner, Mrs. Davenport, Mrs. Pugh, Joshua Pugh, Peter Pugh and Thomas Pringle were members of the early class, or before 1795.

By the accession of families from New York and New Jersey the Methodists became the leading denomination in Plymouth township. A class was formed as early as 1803, known as the Ross Hill class, which, from the showing in the steward's book of the amount paid by each class, was one of the largest in the jurisdiction of the quarterly conference. This class met in a school-house, while the Plymouth or Shawnee class met in the school-house or the dwellings of its members.

The Plymouth class continued small to 1847. The same preacher had supplied both Plymouth and Kingston, but the Plymouth class then got a minister from New Jersey. All meetings had been held in the academy since 1815, but in 1853 the Plymouth class was reorganized and began building a church. It was dedicated in 1856. There had been a Sunday-school for a long time under the general direction of the Methodists; but at this time a distinct Methodist Sunday-school was formed, which has been kept up ever since. From this time the church began to increase in numbers.

In 1877 an elegant brick church was erected at a cost of $34,000. The dedication took place on January 9th, 1878. There are now about 300 members in the congregation, and 420 pupils connected with the Sunday-school.

The following ministers are known to have been in charge of the Plymouth class at the time stated:

James Campbell, 1791; William Hardesty, 1792; William Colbert and Antony Turch, 1793; James Paynter, 1794; A. White, 1795; Roger Benton, 1797; William Colbert and David Stevens, 1798; James Moore and Benjamin Bidlack, 1799; Ephraim Chambers, Edward Larkins and Asa Smith, 1800-02; James Polhemus and Hugh McCurdy, 1803; Morris Howe and Robert Bursch, 1804; James Paynter and Joseph Carson, 1805; Christian Frye and Alfred Griffith, 1806; Gideon Draper and William Butler, 1807; James Ridley and Henry Montouth, 1808; George Lane and Abraham Dawson, 1809; Thomas Wright and Elijah Metcalf, 1810; Noah Bigelow and William Brown, 1811; Joho Kimberlin and Elisha Bibbins, 1812; Marmaduke Pearce, 1813; Benjamin G. Paddock, 1814; George W. Densmore, 1815; Elias Bowden, 1816, 1817; George Peck, 1818; Marmaduke Pearce, 1819; Elisha Bibbins, 1820, 1821; J. D. Gilbert and W. W. Rundell, 1822; George Lane and Gaylord Judd, 1823; Morgan Sherman and Joseph Castle, 1824; John Copeland and Philo Barbery, 1825; George Peck and Philo Barbery, 1826; S. Stocking and Miles H. Gaylord, 1827; Joseph Castle and Silas Comfort, 1828; Leonard Cole, 1856, 1857; A. H. Schoonmaker, 1858, 1859; John W. Munger, 1860, 1861; C. L. Rice, 1862, 1863; John G. Eckman, 1864; C. W. Todd, 1865, 1866; I. N. Pardee, 1867, 1868; J. La Bar, 1869-71; Leonard Cole, 1872-74; S. C. Fulton, 1875; E. W. Caswell, 1876-78; and F. S. Brown, the present minister.

WELSH INDEPENDENT CHURCH.

The nucleus of this church existed from about 1855 in the persons of David Levi, William Charles, David Morris and Enoch Powell. Preaching and prayer meetings were had in private houses. In 1864 the congregation had increased to about forty-five members, mostly Welsh Presbyterians. Rev. T. J. Phillips, superintendent of the Jersey mines, preached in an old house at the foot of Coal street. In 1865 the congregation bought a lot of Mr. Gaylord and built a church at a cost of about $2,000. For some time the church was occupied by the Welsh Independents, Welsh Presbyterians and Welsh Baptists, all uniting in divine service. Revs. T. J. Phillips and William Davis, of Plymouth, E. B. Evans, of Hye Park, and D. E. Evans, of Providence, preached on alternate Sabbaths.

The officers of the church at this time for the Independents were David Levi, William Charles and David George; for the Baptists, Peter Roberts.

The congregation became too large for the house and the Baptist portion in 1866 began separate services in the school-house at the foot of Coal street. In 1867 the Presbyterians separated themselves and worshiped in the old academy.

The Welsh Independents were left in possession of the church, with about 45 members. William D. Rogers and David Jones were added to the list of officers.

In 1868 the church had the first minister who was wholly sustained by the Independent congregation, Rev. John Pentyrch Evans, who had just completed a course at one of the colleges in Wales. He was ordained at Hyde Park, in September, 1868, and installed pastor. During the winter of 1868 and 1869 by a revival some 25 names were added to the church rolls. This church lost 7 members in the Avondale disaster. Rev. J. P. Evans going to Yale College in the fall of 1869, the church depended on neighboring pastors for preaching for fifteen months.

September 15th, 1871, Rev. B. E. Evans, the present pastor, responded to the call of the church. The church then numbered 150 members, and rapidly increased. A large number left during the dull times, but there still remain nearly 200. A gallery, seating 150 persons, was added in 1872, at a cost of $150. A lot was bought in 1873, and a church building, forty by sixty, erected in 1874, by Harvey Brothers, contractors. Church and lot cost about $10,300.

The church established a night grammar school, under the direction of D. E. Evans, and as a result four young men were sent to Bangor, Me., for seminary preparation. Two Sunday-schools have been kept up; one in the church, with 200 pupils, and one on Welsh hill, with about 65 pupils.

The present officers are: Deacons—William Charles, Edward Hopwood, Isaac Thomas, Isaac Edwards, John E. Jones and John Walton; secretary, Thomas Jones, and pastor, Rev. D. E. Evans.

ST. VINCENT'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

A Roman Catholic society was first organized in November, 1872, with the above title, having been a part of the parish of St. Mary's, of Wilkes-Barre, and under the pastoral charge of Rev. Father O'Haran. A brick church was built in 1872. Rev. Richard Hennessey had charge from 1872 to January, 1876; then Father Patrick Torer until May, 1877, when Father O'Haran again took charge, services being performed by priests from the cathedral at Scranton.

Rev. Father T. J. Donahue has been pastor since September 1st, 1877. The society built a parsonage costing $3,000. The Sunday-school has 400 pupils, and there are over 1,200 communicants connected with the church.

ST. STEPHEN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

An Episcopal society was organized in Plymouth in April, 1856, and Rev. George D. Miles, rector of St. Stephen's church of Wilkes-Barre, held services for some time, but the society fell through for lack of support. It was again organized in April, 1873. Charles Parrish donated a building that had belonged to the Wadhams estate and been used for a school-house. This building, which stands by the side of the Presbyterian church, was fitted up at an expense of $1,200. Rev. R. H. Williams, of St. Stephen's church, Wilkes-Barre, held occasional services for some time. Rev. W. S. Heaten was rector from February to November, 1874, and from February, 1875, Rev. J. R. Furey was rector until June, 1875. From this time to August, 1878, there were no regular services. Then Rev. H. L. Jones, of Wilkes-Barre, held services up to July, 1879. The parish was then connected with Wilkes-Barre and Rev. Horace E. Hayden, assistant rector of St. Stephen's church, holds services once each Sunday.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first organization of Presbyterians in Plymouth was effected in 1856, although several ministers of that denomination had previously labored here. September 17th, 1856, a petition was presented for the organization of "The First Presbyterian Church of Plymouth," by Louisa B. Eno, Thomas W. Prosser, Mary F. Lewis, Ann D. Lewis, Ann D. Rhys, William Stont, Hannah Stont, Elizabeth Stont, Charles Hutchinson, Agnes Hutchinson, Archibald Hutchinson, Margaret Hutchinson, Jane Hutchinson, Ann Hutchinson, William McGuffie, Ellen McGuffie, Robert Hutchinson, Jane Hutchinson, Ellen Wright, Joseph Lind, Jane Lind, James Lind, as members of the church and Robert Love, Agnes Love, James Hutchinson, George F. Cook, Sarah Ann Cook, Charles Bowie, Robert Bowie, Thomas Wier, Margaret Wier, Robert Hutchinson, Isabella McGuffie and Josiah W. Eno. October 5th, 1856, a committee of the presbytery organized the First Presbyterian Church of Plymouth. Charles Hutchinson and William Stont were elected elders, but Mr. Stont not being present, he was never ordained to the office. J. W. Eno, William Stont, Stewart Craig, Charles Hutchinson and Robert Love were elected trustees. Rev. E. H. Snowden preached as stated supply for fifteen years. He preached here once in two weeks, alternating with North Moreland. Rev. William P. White has been pastor since July, 1870. The membership is over two hundred.

The foundation of the present church building on Church street was laid in 1866, but the building was not completed until two years later. It is of wood, forty by sixty feet, with a gallery in one end, and cost $4,000. The church was dedicated June 13th, 1868, Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, preaching the dedicatory sermon. Rev. N. G. Parke read the Scriptures. Rev. E. H. Snowden (as was most fitting, the erection of the edifice being mainly due to his labors) pronounced the dedication.

A Sabbath-school was early organized in the school-house at the lower end of the town. Charles Hutchinson was the first superintendent, and Mrs. L. B. Eno assistant. There are now 200 pupils. Branches were established on Welsh hill and Boston hill, and there is one with about 50 scholars now at Avondale, under the charge of M. Garrahan.

ZION PRIMITIVE METHODIST.

This church, whose house of worship is on Church street, Plymouth, was organized early in 1871 with 12 members. The first meeting was held on Temperance hill, in a public school-house. The first minister was Rev. Francis Gray, who served first as a local preacher, as also did Revs. Henry Gray, Henry Jones and J. W. Morgan. Six months from beginning Rev. Francis Gray was engaged as preacher, and served the church until the next annual conference, which was held in May, 1872. The church recommended him as a candidate for the ministry, with a strong request that he should be appointed for another year. He accepted on probation, and was restationed. Preaching was then commenced in Shupp's Hall, Main street, Plymouth, and congregations were large and attentive. Two Sunday-schools were kept up and two preaching services at Temperance hill and Plymouth. This society also established preaching service at Nanticoke, Pittston, Pleasant Valley Plains, Laurel Run, Coal Brook and Wilkes-Barre. From Plymouth sprang all the Primitive societies in these places, with Rev. F. Gray as minister and a staff of local preachers.

At the conference of 1873 Mr. Gray was removed to St. Clair, Schuylkill county, Pa., and Revs. W. B. Beach and J. H. Acornley were appointed on the Plymouth circuit, Mr. Beach living in Plymouth. During his two years ministry the present church was built, a neat frame building, seating about 300. Rev. T. C. Beach and Rev. C. Spurr each served two years, after which Rev. Francis Gray again had charge. The church being considerably in debt, he gave his services for one year, during which time over $600 indebtedness was paid; the church is now prosperous financially and spiritually.

There are three Sunday-schools, the principal one being at Plymouth borough. There is an average attendance of 125 scholars. Rev. Francis Gray is the superintendent. Rev. H. G. Russell is the present minister.

The officers are: William Davis, D.; C. H. Wilson, P. D.; E. J. Achenbach, V. D.; S. U. Shaffer, R.; C. S. Nesbitt, F. R.; F. E. Spry, Ch. The lodge meets on the first Wednesday night of each month at Richards Hall.

ROSS TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed in January, 1842, from Union and Lehman, and named in honor of General William S. Ross, then one of the judges of the county. The township has an area of about forty-six square miles, and a population of 1,053, against 990 in 1870.

Justices of the peace for this township have been elected as follows: John A. Hess, 1843; Philip Callender, 1855; George A. Crockett, 1845, 1850; John Blanchard, 1850, 1855, 1860; Sylvester White, 1860; A. W. Wilkinson, 1865; James Crockett, 1865, 1870, 1875; H. C. Harvey, 1870; Ira Rood, 2nd, 1875.

As early as 1795 Abram Kitchen, from Connecticut, located on the farm now occupied by James Crockett, on "Broadway," made considerable improvements, in 1795 setting out an orchard, some of the trees of which are still standing.

In 1808 Francis Irvin, from Connecticut, located in the south part of the township. He had the first horse team in Ross. Paul Wolf located in the south part of Ross in 1806. Timothy, Aaron and Jacob Meeker settled west of Grassy pond about 1796, and in 1800 sold to G. M. Pringle and Hiram Berth.

Daniel Devore, who came to this township in 1793, is still living, aged one hundred and four years. Farming was his occupation while in active business.

The pioneer store was kept by Alvin Wilkinson in 1835, at Bloomingdale, and Josiah Ruggles was the pioneer merchant and first postmaster at Sweet Valley.

The first school-house was built in 1820. Joseph Moss and Anna Turner were the pioneer teachers, Mr. Moss teaching the first winter and Miss Turner the first summer school.

Years ago Mr. George A. Crockett, while plowing his garden, struck a large flat stone covering a walled-up grave, containing bones supposed to be those of an Indian. Another grave was found a few years ago, near North pond, in which were the bones of an Indian whom Mr. L. T. Myers told Nathaniel Goss that he killed. While out hunting he was chased by Indians into a swamp near North pond, shot and wounded one of them, but was captured and compelled to assist in carrying the wounded Indian to about the spot where this grave was found. One of the Indians was left in charge of Myers and the wounded man. The second night the wounded Indian died, and Myers escaped and returned to his family.

In former accounts of Indian tragedies it is reported that Philip Goss was killed near Wapwallopen by the Indians. In conversation with the Goss family, now living in Fairmount, it was learned that it was David Goss instead of Philip who was so killed, and they authorize this correction.

CITIZEN SOLDIERS.

Archibald Berth was a patriot soldier in the Revolutionary war, after escaping from the British service. He settled in Ross in 1800, died in 1820, and was buried in the Arnold burying ground in Union township.

John Wandel, who located in the south part of this township about 1800, was also a soldier of the Revolution, and was present at the surrender of Burgoyne. He has descendants still living in this township.

Benjamin Franklin Wesley was a volunteer soldier and sailor of the war of 1812. He was taken prisoner at Queenstown. He died in Ross in 1830, leaving a number of descendants in this township.

Ebenezer Wilkinson, late of Ross township, was one of the volunteers of the war of 1812. Some of his classmates still reside here.

As near as can be ascertained the following list comprises the soldiers representing the town of Ross in the war of the Rebellion:

Colonel R. P. Crockett, Captain James Davenport; George W. Holmes, killed; Wilson Long, Luther Dodson, I. R. Dodson, Abiel Sutliff, Andrew Sutliff, A. W. Sutliff; William Thompson, died in service; A. S. Rood, James Henry, I. M. Culver, I. P. Long, C. Rood, Almon Rood, James Rood, Henry Sutliff, D. W. Seward, J. R. Seward, S. H. Sutliff, J. Blanchard, Elijah Moon, I. B. Stevens, Wilbur Stearns, H. H. Holmes, J. M. Holmes, Isaac Naphus, Sidney Naphus, Thomas Shaw, John Shaw, Cyrus Rummage, Lewis Rummage, Jordan Wolf, Edward Mott, Lafayette Haun, William Edwards, Thomas Long, Nathaniel Wolf; W. F. White, killed; Lorenzo Ruggles, William Nagle, Wesley Hontz, Josiah Hontz; Henry White, died in service; Alonzo F. White, wounded; Aaron Phillips, Richard Morris; Charles Wesley, killed; Weston D. Millard, killed; John Rood, Silas Nevil; James Nevil, lost an arm; Jacob Nevil, killed; Webster Long, killed; Samuel P. Wandel, Samuel Montgomery; C. Moore, wounded in eye; Warren Mott, killed; George Moore, killed; Henry Kitehen, P. D. Edwards, Clark Edward, David Ross, Miles Ross, William Lewis, Abram Agnew, J. W. Davenport, William Wesley, Benjamin Wesley, Edward Wilkinson, Joseph Totten, James Congleton, Jonah Post, — Post, — Post, Zephaniah Long; Morris Hatten, wounded; Jerome Hatten; Aaron Freeman, wounded; John Freeman.

INSTITUTIONS OF TO-DAY.

At Bloomville there are a store, a post-office, a school-house, an M. E. church, a saw-mill, a blacksmith shop and about 75 inhabitants. At Sweet Valley there are a store and a post-office, a "Christian" church, a blacksmith shop, a saw-mill, a school-house and about 75 inhabitants. At what is known as Broadway there are a church ("Christian"), a school-house, a shoe shop and a few dwellings.

There are in the township seven school-houses, in each of which school is kept six months in each year. Farming is carried on to some extent in the south part of the township, and the most extensive farm is that of G. A. Crocker & Sons, who have over three hundred acres, on which are large apple and pear orchards, and a large vineyard.

RELIGIOUS INTERESTS.

Methodism in Ross township dates back to 1796, when the itinerant who traveled the old Berwick circuit preached in a log school-house near where the Methodist Episcopal church now stands, at Bloomingdale. In 1800 a class of seven persons was formed here, with E. Wadsworth as leader, and taken into the Wyoming circuit by Rev. Ephraim Chambers, who was then traveling the circuit with Rev. William Brandon. For several years there was occasional preaching by ministers of other denominations. From 1820 Jonathan Nicholson was in Ross about six years, preaching on Sundays wherever he could find hearers.

In 1846 the Methodist Episcopal church at Bloomingdale was built. It is of wood, of modern architecture, and seats about 300.

The Muhlenburg circuit of the Methodist Episcopal church was a part of the Bloomingdale circuit until the spring of 1869, when it was set off. At the time of its organization the only church on the circuit was that at Bloomingdale. This was a good substantial frame building. Rev. E. H. Yocum was the first pastor, one year from March, 1869. The circuit then embraced Bloomingdale church, and the Muhlenburg, Cragle Hill, Van Horn and Rock school-houses. The local preachers then were Revs. Robert Aylesworth and John Holmes. After Mr. Yocum Rev. H. B. Fortner preached two years, followed by W. M. Reilly and Rev. W. W. Reese. During the latter's pastorate, the "Oakville" church was built, at Red Rock. In 1874 and 1875 the pastor was Rev. William Moses. In 1874 a parsonage was bought half a mile northeast of Muhlenburg Corners, in Union township on the Hunlock road. After Mr. Moses, Rev. N. B. Smith preached two years. Rev. Owen Hicks, the present pastor, was appointed in March, 1878.

When this circuit was organized it embraced only four preaching places, while there are now eight, with seven classes. The preaching places are the Bloomingdale and Oakville churches, and the Marsh, Muhlenburg, Van Horn, Croop, Cragle Hill and Sorber school-houses.

The local preachers are Rev. Robert Aylesworth and Rev. E. B. Dodson; exhorter, T. F. Wolfe. The membership is 200. The church property is valued at $3,000. There are seven Sunday-schools, numbering about 400 officers, teachers and scholars.

Rev. Owen Hicks, pastor as above mentioned, was born in Macham, Monmouthshire, England, in May, 1842; came to this country with his parents in 1847, and settled in the central part of Pennsylvania. He served in the Union army three years. He joined the M. E. Church when 13 years old; was licensed as an exhorter at 16; entered the traveling ministry in 1866, and preached in the South nine years. After being repeatedly mobbed by the ex-rebels, and losing his health, he was transferred to Pennsylvania in the spring of 1876.

Two "Christian" churches were built in 1870. There are Sunday-schools held in all the churches in the township, besides four or five in the school-houses.

SALEM TOWNSHIP.

THIS is one of the original townships, and retained its name as one of the eleven townships into which old Luzerne county was divided in 1790. The name adopted was that of a town in Windham county, Conn., from which the early settlers came. The area remains the same (about twenty-nine square miles) as in 1793, after Huntington was taken off. The population was 1,525 in 1870 and 1,448 in 1880.

We have been permitted to extract the following facts from the original records of the township. At a meeting of the Susquehanna proprietors, held April 1st, 1793, at Windham, Connecticut, Capt. Aaron Cleveland moderator, "Nathaniel Wales ye 3d" and Ebenezer Gray, jr., were appointed a committee "to repair to Susquehanna river and make a pitch for a township and survey and lay out the same, Mr. Wales to receive six shillings per day from the time he sets out." Thomas Gray was chosen "clerk of this town and treasurer"; and the name Salem was adopted.

"At a meeting of the proprietors of the town of Salem on Susquehanna river, legally warned and held at Windham, July 7th, 1793." "the report of the doing of Messrs. Nathaniel Wales 3d and Ebenezer Gray, jr., who were appointed a committee to lay out said town of Salem, and who have laid out the same," was accepted.

It was "voted that the 7th lot in the first division now laid out belong to Mr. Nathan Beach * * * because he now lives on the same; and said Beach is to have an equal share with other proprietors in the remainder of the land that is undivided in said town of Salem; provided the said Beach pay his equal proportion of the cost of laying out said town and other necessary charges."

Lots 51, 52 and 53 "that are laid out in the first division" were declared "the three rights that was voted by the Susquehanna company to be laid out in each town for the public use."

A meeting of the proprietors of Salem was held in Windham November 7th, 1774, at which the following action was taken:

"Voted, That Messrs. Ebenezer Lathrop, jr., and Asa Edgerton be a committee to repair to and lay out the town of Salem in lots in the following manner: viz. to lay out in the best manner on the most fertile lands one hundred and six one hundred acre lots; viz. two one hundred acre lots to each proprietor and to each public right, and the remaining land to divide equally to every proprietor and public right; and then to make each division equal by numbering the lot, that is by putting the good and bad to the same number, so as to do justice to each proprietor in the division of said township: and that Thomas Gray be collector."

"Voted, That for the future Samuel Gray, Jacob Lymao, Esqs., and Prince Traey be a committee to warn meetings of this proprietary and to take care of the prudential matters of this township."

February 8th, 1775, it was voted "to accept of the doings of Messrs. Ebenezer Lathrop, jr., and Asa Edgerton, surveying and laying out 53 100-acre lots in this town according to the plan that they have made thereof, with a reserve for a needful highway through the lots from No. 33 to No. 41 inclusive, and also with a reserve for a needful highway through the lots from No. 42 to No. 48 inclusive."

At a meeting of the proprietors at Windham, October 13th, 1787, Joseph S. Kiff moderator, Colonel Ebenezer Gray was appointed their agent and "invested with full power and authority to appear before any court, judges or commissioners, or any other persons who are or shall be authorized to quiet the settlement and establish the title to said township, and there to prosecute the same to effect and final issue with power of substitution." One dollar was levied on each right to defray the expense of the agency.

The introduction of ballots in town meetings occurred at the one held "at the house of James Campbell" March 2nd, 1816, when Alexander Jamison was so elected town clerk. As a committee "to settle the business of the township for this year," Sebastian Sibert, James Santee and Joseph Jamison were elected. They were authorized to divide the township into school districts, which was done July 5th, 1817, and at the meeting of the proprietors held at the house of Henry Hepler March 28th, 1818, the division was confirmed. The numbers of children in each district were as follows: First district, 64; second, 82; third, 72; fourth, 75; fifth 46; total, 344. The sixth district was not formed till June 5th, 1839. The present school directors of Salem are Paul Grover, George Thomas, Samuel Pollock, jr., F. E. Brockway, Thomas E. Moore (president) and Stephen Hill (secretary).

Nathan Beach was the pioneer settler, locating on the farm now owned by Jona Gould. He was long one of the most distinguished men of Luzerne county. He was for many years a justice of the peace, and for a long time postmaster at Beach Grove, being the first postmaster of this township. He also represented Luzerne county in the Legislature. He was a Revolutionary soldier. He was always in the front rank of every enterprise, including building turnpikes and mills. He took an active part in the construction of the Wyoming Valley Canal, and was one of the party that broke ground for that enterprise.

Elisha Cortright, a native of New Jersey, located in Beach Haven about 1787, and opened a tavern, the first in this township. Michael Seeley located at Beach Haven the same year. Samuel and John Seeley came soon after the others, locating near Belbend. They raised and marketed the first wheat soid from Salem township. Elisha Cortright had the first spring wagon. It was then looked upon as a great luxury.

David Thompson, who now resides at the celebrated Iona farm, witnessed the burning of the first coal fire where anthracite coal was successfully used, at the tavern of Judge Jesse Fell, in Wilkes-Barre, in 1808.

James Lockhart was an early settler in Beach Haven, and one of the prominent men of this township from 1795 to 1830.

Doctor Mason Crary, a native of Stonington, Conn., located about 1795. He married a daughter of Nathan Beach, and was the first resident physician.

Joseph Walton, from Bucks county, Pa., located in 1803 at Beach Grove, where he carried on blacksmithing and farming, buying his land for $2.50 per acre. The early settlers along the river had regular shad fishing grounds, from which their less fortunate neighbors were excluded, except on payment of a fee. Mr. Walton bought up several of those grounds, paying $1,000 for the fishing grounds of Gould's island, in the river above Hick's Ferry. The sales of shad averaged for several years nearly $50 per day during the fishing season. There are now but few if any shad at these once famous fishing grounds.

John A. Harmon was born in Salem township, October 19th, 1795, near Stephen Hill's present farm, north of Beach Haven. From youth he lived on a farm northwest from where he was born until his death, in 1878.

The Copes, Seyberts, Pollocks, Kecks, Rosses and Braders were among the early settlers in the west part of the township; and the Hesses, Starks, Hills, Thomases and Miffins settled in the east part of the township.

The following are the names of the taxable inhabitants of Salem in 1796:

Sebastian Sibert, now spelled Seybert, settled about 1780 near the mouth of Seybert or Varner's creek, about a mile west of Beach Haven. Here he built a grist-mill, saw-mill, clothiery and distillery. The grist-mill was of logs, had but one run of stones, and could grind only from four to six bushels of grain a day. The saw-mill was of the old "flutter wheel" style, and would cut about 1,000 feet of lumber in twenty-four hours. The clothiery was of the most primitive kind, and the distillery was the best that could be built at that day. They have all gone to decay, except the grist-mill, which is now owned by Edward Lutz.

From 1825 Uriah Seybert had a grist-mill and a saw-mill farther up the stream for a few years. The grist-mill at Beach Haven was built in 1847 or 1848 by A. T. McClintock. The original water power proved insufficient, and subsequently steam was applied. The capacity of the mill is 100 barrels of flour per day. The saw-mills at the head waters of Mill creek were built since 1840. The upper mill is owned by S. Pollock, and the one farther down the stream by Daniel Hill. There are also two saw-mills at the head waters of Seybert creek. The tannery at Beach Haven was built by Albert Hinsey in or about 1847. It is now owned by Andrew Seeley and has been abandoned as a tannery.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

The following is a list of justices of the peace elected in this township since the adoption of the State constitution of 1838, together with the years of election:

Andrew Cortright, 1845; John Kisner, 1840, 1845; William Hicks, 1841; Isaac Courtright, 1846; Jacob Seeley, 1850; Isaac Courtright, 2nd, 1851; Daniel G. Driesbach, 1855; John R. Anderson, 1856; James Belford, 1859, 1864, 1869; Samuel H. Hicks, 1860; Daniel Brader, 1863, 1868; F. E. Brockway, 1873, 1878; J. W. Meixell, 1874, 1879.

CHURCH HISTORIES.

Beach Haven M. E. Church.—Long before there was a church, or even a Methodist class here, the church-going people would meet at the old stone church about a mile and a half northwest from Beach Haven, and listen to either a Lutheran or Reformed preacher, or occasionally a Methodist itinerant. Two men, named Tobias and Loder, after hearing the quaint old "circuit rider," met at the house of Mrs. Catherine McGraw, at Beach Haven, and arranged for Methodist preaching at the school-house. This resulted in the building of a union church on the west side of Mill creek, between the highway and where the railroad now runs. The building lot was donated by Josiah T. Beach.

In 1848 a Methodist Episcopal society was formed, which continued to worship in the union church till early in 1870. In 1869 the society built the present brick church on East Main street, forty by sixty feet, at a cost of $2,700. It was dedicated in February, 1870.

The first preacher was Adam Brittain. Beach Haven was attached to the Baltimore Conference; then to East Baltimore and finally to the Central Pennsylvania Conference. The successive ministers on this charge have been as follows: 1868, 1869, P. F. Eyre; 1870-72, Adam Brittain; 1873, 1874, John Stiner; 1875-77, H. B. Fortner; 1878, Adam Brittain; 1879, R. L. Armstrong.

The following appointments are connected with the Beach Haven church: Beach Grove school-house, Walton school-house, Dodson or Shickshinny valley school-house, Kenzie school-house and the Sloyer church. The Beach Haven circuit was organized in 1875. The present trustees are Daniel Brader, J. F. Hicks, William Edwards, Nathan Robert and William Keiner. The value of the church property is $2,500.

The union church above referred to was accidentally burned in 1877.

The Evangelical Society of Beach Haven is of recent organization, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Ettinger of Berwick. Its public services are held in the brick school-house.

The old "Stone Church," about a mile and a half northwest from Beach Haven, is occupied alternately by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations. Rev. Mr. Steck is pastor of the Lutheran congregation, and Rev. Mr. Derr of the Reformed. Rev. Mr. Dixon, Presbyterian, preaches here occasionally. The church lot was donated by Christian Bielhemer.

BEACH HAVEN.

This village was named in honor of Nathan Beach, who owned the land. Mr. Beach was a native of Connecticut, and became one of the proprietors of this township under the Connecticut title, locating here in the early part of 1773.

One of the first settlers in Beach Haven was John Kulp. He is understood to have lived on the site of the old log house, with stone chimney, now standing in the lot opposite J. F. Hicks's store on Main street.

Mr. Beach had a town plot surveyed soon after the public highway or "river road" was laid out. Beach Haven grew slowly until the completion of the Wyoming valley canal. Then came an increase of business, as this point soon became the boat yard for the entire length of the canal, giving employment to hundreds of men. With the advent of the railroad the business on the canal began to increase, and boat building declined, until at present but an occasional boat is built here, and comparatively few are repaired. The large flouring mill built here in 1847 or 1848, manufacturing and shipping one hundred barrels of flour per day, has dwindled down to an ordinary custom mill. The lumber trade has ceased, the available supply of timber being exhausted. Of half a dozen stores once doing a large and profitable business now only those of J. F. Hicks, A. W. Holloway and Wesley Robert do a general business. Boat repairing is done by Daniel Brader at the old boat yard. There are two hotels, the Beach Haven House, kept by G. W. Fisher, and the Union Hotel, by I. Hess. There is one church (Methodist Episcopal), one two-story brick school building, and a railroad depot. W. G. Dreisbach is the station agent, telegraph operator and postmaster. J. W. Meixell is collector of tolls on the canal. He has passed through the lock at this place as many as 4,500 boats in one season. There is also a weigh lock here.

FERRIES.

Salem Ferry Company was organized in May, 1878. A one-and-a-quarter-inch wire rope, 1,950 feet in length, is used, which cost $1,100. The officers and directors of the company are: President, George W. Fisher; secretary, Daniel Brader; treasurer, John Miffen; directors, Daniel Brader, George W. Fisher, William G. Morris, Andrew Seeley, Samuel Miffen, F. E. Brockway and J. M. McCale.

The rope ferry at Hicks Ferry was built as early as 1825; it was a private enterprise and for many years afforded the only means of crossing between Nanticoke and Berwick. It was put in operation by William Hicks, one of the early settlers, who owned the land in the bend of the river at this point. The property is now owned by the powder company whose mills are in Hollenback township, about one mile from the ferry, on the Big Wapwallopen creek.

SLOCUM TOWNSHIP.

THE township of Slocum was separated from Newport in 1854. It has a farming population numbering 377, a gain of 60 since 1870. The township is divided into five school districts. In 1878 there were five months' school, and 125 pupils in attendance. The whole amount of money expended in that year for educational purposes was $1,116.59. The average wages paid to teachers was $30 per month.

PIONEER TIMES.

John Lutsey settled in the township about 1785, near where William Lutsey now lives. His sons William, Henry and Joseph, came with him. William Lutsey, grandson of John Lutsey, is now living in the township, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years. The Lutseys were soon followed by others, and in 1799 the following persons were rated as taxables in the township, then Newport, viz.: John Alder, John Lutsey, James Millage, Jacob Mullen, James Mullen, James Mullen, jr., Henry Fritz and Jeremiah Vandermark. Soon after the year 1800, Ira Winters, John Ogin, Jacob Weiss, Jacob Paine, Richard Paine, Jacob Finks, John Rosencrans, one Fredricks and one Delemater moved into the township.

The early settlers were compelled to go to Newport and Wapwallopen to do their trading and milling, going one day and returning the next. In many cases the men were compelled to carry the grain on their backs. A saw-mill was built by John Rosencrans about 1836. Since that time there have been several small water-mills, and one steam mill, owned by Aaron Boyd. There are no mills in operation in the township at the present time.

Silas Alexander opened a small store, where Mr. Stackhouse now lives, about 1848. This was the first store in Slocum. Mr. Alexander was followed in a few years by B. Lear, Esq., who moved into the town from Bucks county. He was followed by P. J. Myers, Esq., who is the present postmaster and keeps the only store. At an early day a post-office, called Lutsey, was established, with John Rosencrans as postmaster. The name of the office was afterwards changed to Slocum. Mails were formerly brought from Nescopeck once a week. They are now brought from there twice a week.

A building was erected just below the residence of P. J. Myers, Esq., in 1838, to be used as a meeting and school house. Mr. Myers gave the lot. John Rosencrans was the first teacher, and many of the older people speak of that as the first school they ever attended.

The first frame house was built by William Lutsey, about 1837. Hiram Rosencrans was the first blacksmith. B. Lear is the only one in the township now.

The land for the cemetery was left to the town by John Ogin in his will. His wife was the first person buried in Slocum township. She died about 1836, and was buried on a knoll west of the cemetery; but Mr. Ogin, not liking the location, had her body removed to the present site, where he was himself buried in 1844, being the second person to be buried in the cemetery.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

Previous to the organization of this society all religious meetings were held in school-houses. For many years the Evangelists and German Reformed had sent their ministers to preach to the people of Slocum. January 19th, 1869, the society organized with the following members: B. Lear, Samuel Stair, Eliza Stair, John Myers, Lydia Myers, Mary A. Ogin, Lydia Myers, jr., Priscilla Hoch, E. A. Boyd, R. J. Myers, Mary A. Myers, LaFayette Stair, Rebecca Stout, Margaret Myers, P. J. Myers, Mary J. Lear, Patience Lear, Ellen Brown, Rosanna Paine, Henry Defrain, Catherine Defrain, Zura Simms, Catherine Simms, J. Simms, Anna Boyd and B. F. Wilson.

The first minister in charge was Rev. T. M. Morris, who was followed in 1870 by Rev. D. Kepner. Mr. Kepner preached two years, Rev. P. S. Orwig two years, Rev. W. H. Rhoads two years, Rev. Mr. Barson three years and Rev. A. Kreamer one year. The present minister is Rev. J. M. Price.

In 1860 a wooden church building was erected on the corner opposite the house of W. Brown, by the united efforts of the people of Slocum, without regard to sect. The church was built by W. H. Brader, and cost $500. It is used by all denominations who may have occasion to hold services.

The following persons were commissioned as justices in the years given, viz.: Benjamin Lear, 1856, 1861, 1866, 1872, 1877; Philip J. Myers, 1857, 1868; Aaron Boyd, 1863.

The following have served as supervisors: Philip Hoch, seven years; Benjamin Vandermark, one year; William Lutsey, three years; Thomas Lutsey, three years; George W. Keyser two years; Jacob Lutsey, one year; Aaron Boyd, one year; Jacob Kester, four years; Jesse Rosencrans, one year; Philip Meyers, two years; Isaiah Jones, one year; George Myers, one year; Abraham Jones, five years; Thomas Fink, two years; Zura Simms, one year; Frederick Seigle, two years; William Brown, two years; Samuel Stair, one year; Nathan Hontz, one year; William Arnold, two years; W. S. Moore, one year, and John Sponenberger, one year. C. B. Jones was town clerk one year; Charles Weiss one year, James M. Moore two years, James Jackson five years.

The present justice is B. Lear; clerk, Enos Hontz; supervisors, William Arnold and John Sponenberger.

SUGARLOAF TOWNSHIP.

HIS township derives its name from Sugarloaf mountain. It was formed from Nescopeck in April, 1809, and formerly embraced the townships of Butler and Hazle, which were taken off in August, 1839, and Black Creek, which was taken off August 8th, 1848. The population in 1870 was 1,240, and in 1880 1,390.

Settlement began between 1775 and 1780, although grants of land had been given as early as 1769. The earliest grant or patent was from Thomas and John Penn to John Foreman. The application for the same is numbered 3,701, and was entered August 3d, 1769. This grant was 311 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres, and the consideration was £15 11s. 9d. The tract was called in the conveyance "Newberg," and was west from Seybertsville. Most of it is now (1879) occupied by William Seiwel, in whose possession is the original deed given by the Penns. This was subsequently deeded to John Maxwell Nesbitt, and by him to Redmond Conyngham, who deeded to Valentine Seiwel, father of the present owner. The Seiwells located on this place in 1811.

The Osterdock family located near the site of the toll-house of the Lehigh and Susquehanna turnpike, half a mile above Conyngham. It is believed they were here at the time of the massacre in 1780, and if not participants in that bloody transaction were fully cognizant of the facts. The Shaffer family were here at the same time, and located a little farther south along the side of the mountain.

The first carding-mill was built by Abraham Stahr in 1814, on the farm now owned by Mrs. Engle. There was also a saw-mill at the same place. Both have gone to decay. About 1809 there was a carding-mill on the north-east side of the Little Nescopeck, where it crosses the Butler road from Conyngham. There was also a saw-mill, the foundations of which are still visible.

The first farm cleared to any extent was William Seiwel's, and Mrs. Engle's the next.

The first road through the town was made, or rather called a road, before 1800. It was the Owens road, from Berwick to Mauch Chunk, and passed through the farm now owned by William Seiwel. The next road of any importance, the Lehigh and Susquehanna turnpike, from Berwick to Mauch Chunk, was chartered March 19th, 1804, and constructed about 1810. It must have been surveyed between 1804 and 1808, as lots in the village of Conyngham were bounded by the center of this turnpike. The first bridge was where the turnpike crosses the Nescopeck.

The grist-mill now owned by Mrs. Jesse Johnson, south of Seybertsville, was built in 1820 by George Koenig. Benjamin Koenig built one at Seybertsville, on the Little Nescopeck, in 1815, and Richard Allen built a saw-mill above the site of the grist-mill in 1798. They both went to decay many years ago. The first blacksmith, Jacob Mace, lived on the farm now owned by William Seiwel, and was one of the first settlers. The next blacksmith, a Mr. Law, lived on the Black Creek road from Conyngham. The first shoemaker was George Rupert. He lived near the west line of the township. The first brick house was built by Daniel Brown, and it is now part of the Brown estate. The first steam mill in this township was built by Stephen Yost in 1865, on the road from Black Creek to Conyngham.

THE SUGARLOAF VALLEY MASSACRE.

The victims of this butchery by the "noble red men" were not the loving mother and the innocent babe, but a party of thirty-three "seven months men" on their way to the Wyoming valley. They had come up from the southeastern part of the State, crossing over Broad and Buck mountains, passed down through the ravine south-east from Conyngham, and halted at the spring on E. Frederick's lot, north of the road and west of the Little Nescopeck creek, where it crosses the Butler road, on the east side of Conyngham. Feeling, no doubt, a degree of safety, the little band set their guns around a tree, and were refreshing the inner man with the pure water from the spring. While thus employed they suddenly found themselves separated from their trusty old firelocks by a band of Indians, with here and there a heartless tory among them. The enemy had come down through the same ravine, and taking the troops at such disadvantage completely discomfited them.

The accounts given in former histories of this bloody transaction differ materially from the facts given by those who in former times conversed with some of the party that escaped, and by those who were sent to bury the dead. The Gilbert family were captured in the spring of 1780, and with them was Abigail Dodson, who was taken to Canada. The massacre occurring after her capture, she obtained her information from a prisoner whom the savages spared and turned over to the British; and she told the story as here given. A great uncle of the Engle brothers now living in Hazleton escaped over the Nescopeck mountains, and reached Fort Jenkins. Abram Klader, a brother of the officer in command of the patriot party, escaped by concealing himself in the Little Nescopeck creek, clinging to a tree that had fallen across the stream, and keeping only his face above water, until the savages had disappeared. Frederick Shickler escaped over Buck mountain, avoiding the Indian trail, and finally reached the settlement in the Lehigh valley. The number of whites killed is given by Miner as fourteen. Both Miner and Pearce say that the company of seven months men were commanded by Captain Myers, while Chapman says that William Moyer was in command; but the most reliable tradition and testimony of descendants of the murdered men declare that Captain Daniel Klader was in command. After performing deeds of valor that caused his name afterward to inspire feelings akin to veneration, he was finally killed and scalped by the savages, and subsequently buried, as were also others of the party, on what is now the farm of Samuel Wagner, half a mile east of Conyngham. No trace is to be seen of the grave of Klader. The oak tree under which he was laid, and upon which were cut the initials of his name, was sacrilegiously cut down several years ago, and even the stump is decayed and gone. He sold his life as dearly as possible, killing several Indians. An old flintlock and gun barrel were plowed up on Klader's grave several years ago, and they are now in possession of Hon. George W. Drum, of Conyngham.

SUGARLOAF RIFLE COMPANY.

As soon as the population of this township had become sufficiently numerous there was organized, May 6th, 1822, the "Sugarloaf Rifle Company." The following is a copy of the old muster roll:

Captain, Jacob Drumbellor; first lieutenant, John Balliet; second lieutenant, George Klinger. Privates—George Drum, jr., George Betterly, Abraham Stanner, Archibald D. Murray, Samuel Balliet, Abram Miller, George Stahr, George Wenner, Jacob Fether, Leonard Wener, John Henry, Marthen Smith, John Dombach, Jacob More, ITEMS OF CIVIL HISTORY.

In 1810 there were sixty-seven taxable inhabitants, and the total tax levied was $110.05. The township then included Black Creek, Sugarloaf, Butler, Hazle, and a part of Foster. The amount of taxes for Sugarloaf for 1879 was $6,000.

The following is a copy of the poll list kept at a general election held in the school-house at Conyngham, October 13th, 1818, when the township included Sugarloaf, Black Creek, Butler and Hazle.

Valentine Seiwel, Henry Gidding, John Wolf, John Gidding, Jacob Drumheller, jr., Conrad Harman, Casper Horn, Henry Winter, Jeremiah Heller, Jacob Keifer, Philip Woodring, James Lormison, Archibald Murray, Jacob Drum, Richard Allen, Andrew Decker, George Drum, jr., Joseph McMertrie, George Drum, Sr., Abraham Smith, Daniel Shelhamer, Samuel Harman, Phineas Smith, James Smith, Andrew Wolf, John Merrick, Michael Funtou, Henry Yost, Michael Beesline, Jacob Spaid, Henry Beesline, Jacob Beesline, Daniel Maurer, jr., George Fenig, Sr., Christian Weaver, George Clinger, Anthony Weaver, Andrew Oxrider, Philip Yost, Michael Markley, Peter Stoehr, Michael Frous, Samuel Yost, George Wener, Valentine Line, John Cool, Philip Drum, George Thresher, Michael Shrieder, Archibald Murray, Jacob Foose, Peter Claiss, Jacob Thresher, Conrad Bellasfelt, Abraham Miller, Philip Root, George Hoofman, George D. Strain, Solomon Stroam, Jacob Taffecker, Abraham Steiner, John Adam Winters, David Seickard, Jacob Drumheller, Sr., Christian Wenner and John McMertrie. Total sixty-six.

In 1835 there were 158 voters in the same territory. In 1879 there were 3,425, and in the present township of Sugarloaf 242. The justices of the township, with the years of their election, have been as follows:

Jackson S. Harrison, 1840; Jacob Drumheller, 1840, 1845, 1850; Jesse Hart, 1843; John Andreas, 1851; George H. Gardner, 1855; William Engle, 1855; Robert F. Brown, 1859; Daniel Brown, 1860; George W. Drum, 1860, 1865, 1870, 1875; Oliver P. Kester, 1866, 1871; William S. Miller, 1876; N. D. Smith, 1879.

CHURCHES.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

John Rhodes was the first to plant the banner of Methodism in the Sugarloaf valley. He wended his way over mountains, down ravines, through stream and forest, until he reached what is now Conyngham. His preaching drew the settlers from far and near. Four acres of land were deeded by Redmond Conyngham to Archibald Murray, George Drum, jr., Jacob Drumheller, Philip Woodring and Peter Scheide, as trustees; and a long church building was put up, just south of the English burying ground, on the site of the school-house in the north part of Conyngham. One half of it was to be used by all the religious denominations for preaching, and the other half as a school-house. There were large doors in the middle of the building, hinged at the top, so as to be swung up and fastened to the ceiling, in order to make double room for extra occasions.

Here was formed the first Methodist class in this township. Mr. Rhodes was the preacher, Charles Bowman the first leader of the class, and a Mr. Witherstine assistant leader. David Richards and wife, James Smith and wife, Sarah McMurtie, Mary McMurtie, Phebe Troy Catharine Troy, Mary Cowley and John Cowley were among the first members of the class.

In 1866 the society built their present church, in the north part of the village of Conyngham, at a cost of $2,500. The church lot was donated by Dr. Casselberry, of Hazleton. The church is of wood, 40 by 50 feet, with seats for three hundred.

The old union church was moved in 1854 or 1855 down the street, opposite the Phoenix Hotel, and it is now occupied by Henry Shepperly as a stove and tin shop.

Mr. Rhodes was succeeded by Kevs. Messrs. Shepherd and Thomas, Oliver Ege, Charles Brown, John Lloyd, George Bergstresser, Thomas Bowman, G. H. Day, A. Britton, T. H. Switzer and John Nicholson. In 1852 Rev. Messrs. Barnhart and Elisha Butler were on this charge. This brings us down to the church records of 1860, when we again find G. H. Day appointed; 1862, B. P. King; 1864, Josiah Forrest and J. C. Hagey; 1866, James F. Porter; 1867, Henry S. Mendenhall; 1868, James B. Cuddy, C. L. Bencotten and Pemberton Bird; 1870, A. S. Bowman and N. W. Colburn; 1873, J. Farron Brown and J. B. Moore. In 1874 J. Horning came in place of Mr. Moore. G. B. Savage, T. H. Tubbs and William A. Carver were also on this district. In 1874 the old Jeansville circuit was divided, leaving the townships of Butler, Sugarloaf and Black Creek in one charge. In 1875 Rev. J. Stine was appointed here, and in 1877 G. M. Larned, the present pastor. The present value of the church property is $2,000.

The first Sunday-school was organized by Asher Stout, soon after the old union church was built. The present superintendent is M. T. Boston, with W. F. Tressler as assistant. The total number of scholars is 116; of teachers, 16; average attendance of scholars, 75; volumes in the library, 492.

CHRIST CHURCH.

This church is owned jointly by the Reformed and Lutheran congregations. These organizations were formed simultaneously about the year 1800, when all denominations held their meetings in the old union church, and obtained of Redmond Conyngham a deed of the lot for Christ Church. The deed was given to Peter Stare, Philip Woodring, Stephen Balliett, Samuel Yost and Valentine Sewell, trustees, and dated November 16th, 1820. In 1826 the two congregations built thereon a log church, the corner stone of which was laid May 15th, 1826, by Rev. John N. Zeizer of the Reformed church, and Revs. Peter Kessler and George Eister of the Lutheran. The elders were John A. Winter and Jacob Getting; deacons, Peter Klees, Peter Oxrider and John Seiwel; building committee, Henry Yost and Jacob Drumheller. The members of the church at the time were the following:

Abraham Minig, Jacob Oxenrider, George Koenig, George Drum, jr., Casper Horn, Charles Keck, John Bergy, Peter Brisel, Abraham Klotz, Peter Stahr, George Hoffman, Conrad Fisher, Henry Oxrider, John Yost, John Smith 2nd, Jacob Speth, Michael Kuns, jr., George Diter, Andrew

Maurer, Valentine Seiwel, Samuel Yost, George Stabr, Jacob Billheimer, Michael Koontz, sen., Christian Henry, Christian Shadle, John Charles, John Miller, George Shadle, Benjamin King, Jacob Mahs, jr., John Turnbach, Jacob Klaehs and Abraham Miller, jr.

In the old log church the congregations continued to worship alternately until 1872, when they built a framed church, a little south of the old one, at a cost of $7,000. The corner stone was laid June 2nd, 1872. The building committee consisted of Samuel Benner, Nathan Snyder, and John Gitting of the Reformed, and William Disthorst and Samuel Wagner of the Lutheran church. The new church was dedicated October 6th, 1872. This edifice was burned January 11th, 1873, after which the two congregations again worshiped in the old log church until a new church was built the following summer, at a cost of $6,000. The corner stone of this building was laid June 15th, 1873, and it was dedicated January 18th, 1874.

The following ministers of the Reformed church have served this people: John N. Zeizer, Isaac Shellhamer, John A. Reubelt, John W. Leshner, Samuel Seibert, who resigned in 1855; John B. Porner, Henry Hoffman, who left in the spring of 1871, and the present pastor, John M. Clemens, who was installed in the autumn of 1871.

The Lutheran preachers have been: Revs. George Eyster, John Benninger, Jeremiah Shindle, Rev. C. F. F. Sallmon, 1842-56; Rev. William Haskarl, 1857, 1858; Rev. R. S. Wagner, 1859-64. The Lutherans were without a pastor until the autumn of 1867, when Rev. S. S. Kline was installed. He remained till the autumn of 1873. In the spring of 1874 Rev. Jacob H. Neiman, the present pastor, was installed. The present trustees of the church are: William Seiwel and Jacob J. Minnick, Reformed, and Samuel Wagner and Christian Else, Lutheran.

The present membership of the Reformed church is 250 and that of the Lutheran 235. The church property is valued at $6,000.

The union Sunday-school of these churches grew out of the school organized by Asher Stout in the old school-house soon after it was built. Samuel Benner is superintendent; S. B. Drum, secretary; E. P. Snyder and W. Heller, librarians; Anna Benner and E. P. Snyder, managers. The total number of scholars is 113; average attendance, 75.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CONYNGHAM.

This church was organized by a committee of the Presbytery of Newton, December 19th, 1841, and composed of eighteen members received by letter from the Presbyterian church of Beaver Meadow, Pa., viz.: Philip Winterstene, William T. Rhoads, Archibald Delaney, James Gilmore, Mary Winterstene, Amy Rhoads, Letitia McCarty, Jane Sterling, Martha Shelhammer, Mary Muncey, Keziah Brundage, Cornelia Godfrey, Martha Kan, Mary Sterling, Margaret Winterstene, Sarah Ann Miller, Jane Miller and Elijah Cramer.

Philip Winterstene was installed as ruling elder. The first pastor, Rev. Daniel Gaston, served from 1841 to 1844. The first place of meeting was the Pine Grove school-house, Seybertsville. A branch society of about a dozen members was formed at the same time at Drum's. The first and only church building was built of brick on the hill north of Seybertsville.

From 1841 to 1844 Daniel Gaston was pastor; Robert Steele, a licentiate, then served three months; Rev. Darwin Cook was stated supply from 1845 to 1847; Rev. John Johnson from 1848 to 1871, and Rev. C. Bridgman six months in 1873 and 1874. Since then Rev. Homer S. Newcomb has been pastor. The membership is 51; value of church property, $2,000.

IMMANUEL EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1858, in the old school-house at Conyngham. The original members were Thomas Houseknecht and his wife Nancy Houseknecht, Elijah McMurtrie and a Miss Root. The regular services were held once in two weeks, alternately by Revs. Messrs. Culler, E. A. Sharretts and George Bergstresser. In the spring of 1860 Rev. R. H. Fleck became pastor. The place of preaching was now changed to the old Pine Grove school-house at Seybertsville. The following winter a number were converted there and united with this church. After Mr. Fleck Rev. Mr. Crebbs preached a short time, and next Rev. George Eicholtz. During his administration (in 1865) the society built its present church edifice in the village of Seybertsville, at a cost of $1,300. Mr. Eicholtz was succeeded by Rev. J. B. Shoup. Seybertsville, Black Creek and Butler were then known as the "Conyngham charge." During his administration a large number were added to the church. Rev. George S. Battersby was then pastor until 1871. From 1871 to 1874 the church was supplied by different ministers and theological students. Since June, 1874, Rev. J. Wager has been pastor. The membership is about 60.

CONYNGHAM.

This town plot was surveyed as early as 1806. The land was owned formerly by John Maxwell Nesbitt, who received it by patent dated July 4th, 1787. September 26th, 1803, it was willed to David Hayfield Conyngham. September 27th, 1806, the land passed from John Godfried Watchmuth to Benjamin Rush, who deeded it May 11th, 1809, to Redmond Conyngham, who was one of the most prominent men of his time in the township. He had the village site surveyed, and named CONYNGHAM. July 1st, 1809, Conyngham deeded to Jacob Drumheller lot No. 6, in the south part of this plot, now owned and occupied by Samuel Wagner. Lot No. 7, now occupied by Thomas Bowman, was deeded in 1808 by Benjamin Rush to Philip Drum.

The first tavern at Conyngham was built on the site of the Conyngham Hotel in 1815. It was partly of logs and partly framed. Soon afterward Samuel Harmon built a tavern of hewn logs on the site of the Phoenix Hotel. He had a trout pond in the rear of where William Charles's store now stands.

Mr. Harmon was the first postmaster. William Drum kept the office in 1830, where C. H. Kneely now lives.

A tannery on the site of Nathan Radler's larger establishment was built in 1820 by a Mr. Lomison. The iron foundry was built in 1842 by M. Hutton, and is now owned by James Getting.

Conyngham has two churches, Methodist Episcopal and Christ Church (German Reformed and Lutheran); three physicians, a school-house, two hotels, two stores, two harness shops, two tin shops, two blacksmith shops, a tailor shop, two milliner shops, a planing mill recently built, and an iron foundry. The population is 400.

During the spring of 1880 the Black Ridge Coal Company was engaged in "proving coal" near Conyngham station, preparatory to putting up a breaker. The company owns two 400-acre tracts. The westerly one contains Conyngham station.

Coxe Bros. & Co. were lately building a wagon road from the Conyngham Station road to Gowen. They control all the land, except one tract at Tomhicken, for nearly 15 miles westward from the Conyngham station tract, and are sinking a slope just east of Tomhicken.

Conyngham Lodge, No. 308, Independent Order of Odd Fellows was instituted in 1848. The lot and building where Odd Fellows' Hall now stands, near Christ Church, were donated by Jacob Drumbheller. The old building was enlarged, a lodge room arranged overhead; and the lower room fitted up for a store, the whole costing about $1,000, which was put into stock and taken by the members of the lodge, who number about 60.

The first lease of water privilege was given by Conrad and Sarah Harman, September 1st, 1814, for fifty years, "the inhabitants of Conyngham to have free ingress and egress to and from the spring." The spring thus leased is a little south of the present post-office. The property is now owned by G. H. Knelly.

The next lease for water for the village was obtained by John Cool and George Drum from the Conyngham family, and ran for 30 years from August 16th, 1821, with a rental of one shilling a year. The spring covered by this lease is on the side of the mountain, southeast of the village. The first pipe, consisting of logs, was laid to supply the town with water. Each person or family using the water paid, or was to pay, twenty cents per month for it. This rate did not keep up needed repairs, and the shilling a year to Conyngham was never paid. Before the lease expired John N. Conyngham sold the land upon which the spring is located, to Mordecai Hutton. Hutton was sold out by the sheriff in 1853 and left the country, and the old company by their heirs have had control of the water.

January 3d, 1880, the Conyngham Water Company was chartered, with a capital of $2,000, divided into 100 shares. The directors are Samuel Benner, Frank M. Brundage, J. D. Getting, John F. Robbins, Thomas Bowman, George W. Drumbheller, G. H. Knelly, William F. Tressler and Hon. G. W. Drum. President, John F. Robbins; treasurer, F. M. Brundage; secretary, Samuel Benner. Iron pipes of sufficient size were laid in 1880 to supply the town of Conyngham with water.

SEYBERTSVILLE.

This village was settled as early as 1811 or 1812.

The first tavern here was built by Benjamin Koenig in 1825, where Henry Dryfoos's house now stands, on the northeast corner of the crossing. It was rebuilt in 1835.

The first school-house was built by subscription in 1836 or 1837, and stood where the present one stands, a little west from the corners.

The first store was kept by Henry Seybert in 1833, on the southeast corner, where Mrs. Billhamer now lives. Henry Seybert was the first postmaster. Samuel Balliett is the present one, and the office is kept in W. Santee's store, on the southeast corner.

The present grist-mill was built in 1861, by Jacob Billhamer, and it is now owned by Henry Bird.

The place has a hotel, one physician, two churches (Presbyterian and Evangelical Lutheran), a harness shop, a store, two blacksmith shops, a wagon shop, a school-house, a grist-mill and 150 inhabitants.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

UNION township was formed of part of Huntington at the quarter sessions of the court of Luzerne county in July, 1813. It extends along the Susquehanna river about three miles, and back from the river northwest five or six miles. The population was 1,687 in 1870, and 920 in 1880.

The earliest settlement is believed to have been made about 1790, by Peter Gregory and George Fink, who had married each other's sisters, and had formerly lived in the valley of the Delaware. They settled on a large tract, embracing a beautiful and fertile valley, on the northwest side of the river mountain. The east branch of the Shickshinny creek furnished power for mills and other machinery, which was soon used. The first mills were built on their claim, which is yet nearly all in possession of their descendants. Soon afterward Stephen Arnold and Moses Derby, brothers-in-law, located where Muhlenburg now is. They were Yankees from Connecticut, and soon cleared farms. Deer and other animals were often shot in their small clearings. In 1793 both settlements made hospitable resting places for the emigrants to Huntington valley, where they were cared for without being asked for any recompense. During that year, and several succeeding years, a large immigration to Huntington valley was continued by people from Connecticut. The moving was generally accomplished in the winter, on sleds drawn by oxen, with occasionally a horse hitched before as leader, and when the Hudson river was frozen, crossing that and other streams on the ice. The roads were the old Indian paths, slightly improved, and nearly impassable by wagons. In 1797 Stephen Roberts, from Plymouth, settled about midway between the other settlements, and shortly Marvins, Culvers and Shaws were making pleasant homes in the wilderness.

About the same time the families of James Van Scoter (now called Benscoter) and his sons Anthony and John, also three then unmarried sons, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, were added to the Dutch settlement; all left numerous descendants. About the same time also the Bellas, Dav-enport, Hans, Muchler, Huff and Cragle families were added.

In 1799 William Moore, an Irishman from Maryland, with a large family, settled at the place now known as Mooretown. His descendants still own the farm. A granddaughter, Mrs. John Harned, now lives there. The Huffman, Harned, Post, Bonham, Wolfe, Johnson and Santee families came soon after 1800, and nearly all homes then formed are still retained in the families of descendants.

December 24th, 1801, Shadrach Austin, a son of the first occupant of Shickshinny, married Mary Gregory, daughter of Peter Gregory, sen., and bought the present Austin homestead, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was a teacher and a leader among his neighbors, and during a long, active life "Uncle Shadrach" was almost universally spoken of as an exemplar worthy of imitation. He was born July 12th, 1770, and died December 26th, 1850.

In 1815 John Hartman, of Northampton county, bought a farm and moved into a house where Samuel Huff had lived several years, which is now owned by his son Stephen Hartman. As the land could be bought at a low price and proved very productive, other old neighbors from Northampton and Lehigh counties soon followed, and a German settlement was formed, as the Masters, Hobbes, Baer, Adelman and Neville families all obtained land near the Hartmans, and long retained many of the customs and characteristics of the German population of the Lehigh valley.

Peter Gregory, jr., and Richard Gregory, sons of the first settler, bought and occupied farms. Richard is still living, aged ninety-two years. Joseph Gregory and John Gregory, sons of Peter, own and occupy parts of the old homestead.

In 1813 James Search bought of Philip and Margaret Hann the place near the river now known as the Jessup farm, where he raised his family. His son Lot married Christina Fink, and settled just above Shickshinny. A very good quarry of building and flag stones is now owned and worked by his son-in-law, A. C. Nicely, on the place where he raised his family and built a large stone house and other good buildings, which have all been abandoned for several years past, as all the children made homes in Shickshinny.

TEACHERS, SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

One generation grew up without suitable provision for instruction, though many succeeded in learning to read and write, and some attained to more intellectual elevation. Shadrach Austin was a teacher. Jonah Rogers taught some time in the Marvin and Roberts neighborhood with good success. Truman H. Clark, from New York State, was a popular and useful teacher many years. Miss Caroline Turner, Miss Anne Turner, Mrs. M. L. T. Hartman, Miss Leah Santee and other educated women were of much benefit to the young, and assisted in infusing a general desire for their advancement in mental culture.

Now the public schools are well attended by industrious pupils. There are seven school-houses, in which schools are taught six or seven months each year. There are Sunday-schools held in four school-houses and two churches.

Zerah Marvin, an early resident, spent a long, useful life as farmer, merchant and preacher, assisted by others of the Baptist faith—Joel Rogers, Elias Dodson and Samuel Chapin, in Huntington, and Griffin Lewis, of Plymouth. Their labors each Sunday, places for preaching and other ministrations, were mutually arranged, and extended over nearly half the county. They worked without pay. All lived comfortably on farms, and each reached near four-score years. If the needy asked assistance, temporally or spiritually, they were sure of meeting with brotherly regard.

There are two churches in the township, both built in 1850; one by the Baptists, near Muhlenburg, and the other by the Methodists, near Mooretown; each costing $1,000 or $1,200. The M. P. church has preaching and other services at school-houses. All support salaried ministers.

SOCIETIES.

Muhlenburg Lodge, No. 899, I. O. of O. F. was instituted in 1875, January 28th. The present officers are: R. M. Edwards, N. G.; Arthur S. Hartman, V. G.; J. L. Glace, secretary; William H. Masters, treasurer; past officers, J. L. Glace, Charles B. Gregory, T. M. Bonham, T. M. Brown, John Harnet, A. H. Allen, J. K. Lunger, A. S. Hartman and Elisha Roberts. Meetings are held weekly at the hall, on Saturday evenings.

McKendree Grange was organized September 29th, 1876, with J. Miner Woodworth, M.; R. M. Edwards, O.; T. F. Shepherd, L.; M. L. T. Hartman, C.; R. A. Harrison, P.; S. A. Woodworth, F.; Addie H. Edwards, L. A. S.; B. B. Harrison, Chap.; J. B. Benscoter, S.; J. C. Tubbs, A. S.; William H. Harrison, Sec.; Joseph H. Harrison, Treas.; J. Masters, G. K.; committee for business, Washington Wheeler, Silas Benscoter, Dodson Culver. It continues in good working order, with much benefit to the membership and neighborhood. It meets weekly—Thursday evenings.

JUSTICES.

Soon after the formation of Union township John T. Miller was appointed justice of the peace, under the constitution of 1790, for life or during good behavior.

In 1818 Ichabod Shaw was appointed; 1820, Shadrach Austin; 1832, Lot Search. The last two appointees served until 1840, when the office became elective. John Blanchard and Truman H. Clark were elected for five years from April 14th, 1840. By the division of

J. F. BRIGGS, M. D.

J. F. Briggs, M. D., of Shickshinny, was born in Hollenback, February 28th, 1836, and is a physician and druggist. He married Miss Sallie Whitebread, of Hollenback. He was a member of Company C 178th Pa. volunteers during the war of the Rebellion.

MRS. M. L. T. HARTMAN.

Mrs. M. L. T. Hartman, a daughter of Luther Trescott, was born in Huntington, September 7th, 1817. She received such education as the schools of those days afforded. By a judicious course of reading and close observation she has become eminent for her intelligence and conversational powers. At intervals for the last forty years she has been engaged in teaching. A majority of the inhabitants of Union township between ten and thirty-five years of age have at some time been her pupils. She divides her time between the duties of a farmer's wife and those of press correspondent, local historian and poetess. She married Stephen Hartman, July 2nd, 1840.

WILLIAM KOONS.

William Koons, miller and farmer, was born in Monroe county, Pa., April 14th, 1800, and when about seventeen came to Luzerne county, where he carried on a mercantile business over forty years. He has been twice married, Miss Sarah Fuller, of Huntington township, being his first wife, and Susan Horton (formerly Susan Bacon, daughter of Septimus Bacon) his second. Mr. Koons had a family of eight sons and one daughter. In 1835 he was elected to the office of county commissioner, and in 1847 to that of sheriff. His residence is at Stone Bridge, one mile west of Shickshinny.

GEORGE W. ABBOT, boat builder and wagon maker, was born in Light Street, Columbia county, Pa., September 15th, 1825. He is the son of Jonas Abbot, who died in that county June 20th, 1859. Mr. Abbot married Jane McCarty, who died, and he was subsequently married to Miss Margaret McNeal, of Millville, Columbia county, Pa. He served in Company C 209th Pa. volunteers during the Rebellion. Mr. Abbot's grandfather on his mother's side, John Jacob Johnston, served through the Revolutionary war in Colonel Baker's cavalry, and was wounded five times. He died at the advanced age of one hundred and two.

REV. R. L. ARMSTRONG, son of John Armstrong, was born in Chambersburg, Pa., May 22nd, 1843. He was converted in 1865, entered Dickinson College, Carlisle, in 1863, and became a member of the M. E. conference of central Pennsylvania in 1872. He married Lizzie C. Peffer, of McConnellsburg. He is the present pastor of the Methodist church at Beach Haven.

SHICKSHINNY BOROUGH.

SHICKSHINNY borough was formed of parts of Union and Salem townships, November 30th, 1861. The line of those townships formerly ran near Shickshinny creek. The name given to this locality by the Indians signified the place where five mountains meet, referring to the River mountain, the Knob mountain, Rocky mountain, Lee's mountain and Newport mountain. This was a favorite hunting and fishing resort for the Indians, and there are still traces of their paths leading toward the notch from all directions.

The population of the borough in 1880 was 1,068, a gain of 23 from 1870.

OCCUPATION BY WHITE SETTLERS.

The first permanent settlement was made under the claim of Connecticut, by Ralph Austin and a family named Crossley, who fled to Connecticut after the battle of Wyoming. After a few years the Austin family returned, put up log buildings and otherwise improved the place, and became farmers and inn-keepers. The parents and several children were buried on the mountain side, on the place now known as Rockview, where their graves with others could be seen but a few years since, but now no trace remains. Matthias Hollenback came into possession of the place under the Pennsylvania claim. The farm, 256 acres, covers nearly all of the present borough. It afterward passed into possession of Mrs. Cist, a daughter of M. Hollenback, who became the wife of Chester Butler; and after her death the estate was sold by her heirs to the present company, as proprietors of Shickshinny, in 1857. The names of the company were George W. Search, Lot Search, Nathan B. Cray and Nathan Garrison; by them the present town was planned and partially built, lots sold and other improvements commenced. Nathan Garrison, dying in 1862, was succeeded by his widow, Rachel Garrison, and heirs. The present proprietors paid $20,000 for the tract.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

The tenants of the farm were inn-keepers. They were Ralph Austin, William Bellas, George Muchler — Coates, William Hoyt, Headley & Wilson, who had a temperance house kept by different men until they, in 1850, gave possession to William Koons; B. D. Koons, Edward Barnan, Jacob Laycock, William A. Tubbs and H. J. Yapple, who is the present landlord, near where the first log hotel was built. William Shoemaker occupies a part of the house more recently built, in which he still continues the business, but by changing and straightening streets it is left some distance from the old river road or Main street.

After the opening of the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg railroad Caleb Atherton built a brick hotel near the depot for the accommodation of business men and railroad employes, which has been well patronized. It is owned by Jacob Gould and kept by William Davenport.

The first store house was built by Stephen Vaughn for Mrs. Cist soon after the Pennsylvania canal was chartered, and a store was kept in it by Vaughn for several years. The old store house is now occupied as a dwelling, owned by heirs of A. Heller. After Vaughn the Cray Brothers kept the store until 1841; then Miller & Chapin, until Headley & Wilson leased the property in 1846. William Koons kept the store from 1850 to 1856. He was followed by Thomas Davenport, who was the last merchant here, as in planning the present town the old historic house was left without a street near enough for business purposes, and was changed into a dwelling house. The first store outside the old store house was started by Nathan Garrison and Andrew J. Eldon in June, 1857. After a few months Eldon was intrusted with the money to purchase new goods, as they were doing a cash business. The goods came on, but not paid for, and the dishonest partner was soon on his way to China with about $3,000 of Garrison's money. Nathan Garrison was forced to close business and sold to the present merchant, Nathan B. Cray. In the shipping disasters Eldon was reported about two months later as lost in a storm, having so much gold on his person that he sank while trying to reach a life boat.

At present there are five stores of dry goods and general merchandise kept in the borough, two drug stores, four groceries, two hardware and tin shops, three millinery stores and one cabinet warehouse, all doing a fair business for the town and surrounding country. A post-office has been kept at this place many years, as it was on the stage route along the Susquehanna from Wilkes-Barre south.

Within the limits of the borough the only buildings were those necessary for the farm, and the store (except the workmen's shanties during the making of the canal, from 1828 to its completion) until 1846, when Headley & Wilson leased land and built a charcoal furnace and other buildings for business and tenement houses. The iron ore and lime were brought in boats from Columbia county, and the charcoal was burned on the neighboring mountains. The furnace made very good pig iron. Headley & Wilson and their employes built up an active, progressive business. They sold their lease to William Koons, who carried on the business from 1850 until 1856, when the furnace and part of the buildings were moved to Hunlock's Creek, and most of the people also left the place before the purchase of the property by the Shickshinny company in 1857.

An excellent flouring mill was built in 1865 by George W. and Lot Search, costing $5,000 and containing four runs of stones. It employs several men and does a profitable business.

A foundry was built by Jesse Beadle, L. T. Hartman and Frederick Beach in 1866, a few rods above the railroad depot and between the railroad and canal, costing near $3,000. It was run by a steam engine; is now operated by Luther T. Hartman.

The planing-mill between the depot and foundry was built by Amos Hess in 1874, 36 by 60 feet in area and costing $6,000.

The Mountain Echo was first issued in 1873 by C. A. Boone and M. E. Walker, and transferred in 1875 to the present editor and proprietor, R. M. Tubbs, who has improved it in tone and literary merit; claiming neutrality in politics it is free to censure all parties and administrations.

There are three blacksmith shops, two of which are connected with wheelwright establishments, owned and operated respectively by Miner Brown and Henry Wagner.

MINES AND MINING.

Coal was first found on Rocky mountain about 1830, on land owned by Nathan Beach, by Humphrey Davenport, who was employed by Beach to prospect for it. Veins were struck in several places and small amounts mined by Davenport. The coal was hauled off the mountain with teams for several years. In 1840 Darwin Crary, a grandson of Nathan Beach, commenced improvements by which the coal might be brought to the canal at less cost; a chute was constructed, through which the coal was run for several months. In 1842 James A. Gordon built the first plane for Beach & Crary, which did good service for several years. Afterward the mines were operated by Truman H. Clark and other lessees several years. In 1865 John M. Stackhouse and Matthew Wier bought the mines and made improvements.

In 1866 Cyrus Stackhouse bought Wier's stock, and assisted his brother in the management until 1869, when it passed into the hands of the Paxton Coal Company, who built breakers, etc. In 1873 the present firm, known as the "Salem Coal Company," was formed. The yearly production averages 65,000 tons, employing near two hundred men and boys.

In the Newport mountain, on the opposite side of the Susquehanna, are rich deposits of superior coal, which was mined several years successfully.

BRIDGES, ROADS AND MAILS.

In 1857 a company was formed for the purpose of mining in the Newport mountain and building roads and bridges to connect with the Lackawanna & Bloomsburg railroad. The company's works were managed by Jedediah Irish, Jesse Hart, Henry C. Carey and other active, enterprising men, who opened mines, built roads, and a bridge over the river. The superstructure was built by Luther and William H. Trescott, and opened for travel in 1859. March 17th, 1865, a flood swept off the superstructure except one reach, and the works passed soon afterward into the hands of the Mocanaqua Company. A new bridge was built, but was worn out and went down. Travel is now accommodated by a ferry, managed by a company of stockholders.

Shickshinny creek is crossed on Main street by a good iron bridge, built partly by the county commissioners. Main street was long known as the river road, and was a stage and mail route until superseded by the railroad.

A turnpike from Shickshinny to places back of the mountain is chartered and partly constructed.

MORAL AND RELIGIOUS INFLUENCES.

A Sunday-school was maintained by employes of the furnace company from 1846 until 1856. When the population, which had been quite numerous although necessarily transient, was scattered, schools, Sunday-schools and churches or associations for worship were nearly all discontinued.

John McCaully, the superintendent of the furnace, was also a local preacher of the M. E. church. Thomas Care, a class leader, and other zealous and efficient members of that church soon organized societies, and meetings for religious services were regularly attended during their stay at Shickshinny.

Samuel F. Headley, one of the proprietors, was a strict prohibitionist, and a very popular temperance lecturer; he kept watch on every grogshop started, and drunkenness and dissipation were discountenanced and kept under tight reins.

After the exit of the furnace population and the advent of the present proprietors, Rosaline Gordon, wife of Lot Search, started a union Sunday-school in the school-house. This opened the way for preaching, by different denominations, in the school-house.

The first church was built by the Methodist Protestants and Presbyterians, in 1860, at a cost of $800, shared equally by those two denominations. The trustees were Peter Masters, A. C. Nicely, Henry Baer, George W. Search and Lot Search. It was used by all denominations for several years, and is now by the Methodist Protestants.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation built a brick church in 1870, costing $11,000, which is large and commodious, with a basement, containing rooms for Sunday-school and class meetings, also a very good library, costing $500.

The pastors of this M. E. church have been E. H. Yocum, George W. Miller, John A. Gere, Joseph King, Aaron Kester, John Morehead and George Warren. The present membership is 180; Sunday-school pupils, 200.

The trustees were John M. Stackhouse, Cyrus Stackhouse, M. W. Millard, George Rustay, Thomas Senior, John Thomas, W. F. Kline, N. B. Crary, James Post and Daniel Baer.

The Presbyterians built a very neat church of wood, with a basement of stone, costing $4,700. In 1874 the basement was finished and dedicated, and it was used for all needed purposes until March 7th, 1878, when the audience room, nicely finished and furnished, was dedicated.

The church in its earlier stages was ministered to by James Ferguson, William J. Day and others, who lived at a distance and could only give a small part of their time and service. From May, 1871, Rev. W. B. Darrach was pastor until 1878, when the present pastor, Arthur Johnson, was installed November 6th.

The membership numbers about 100, and the Sunday-school 130. The elders are G. W. Search, Charles A. Boone, Miner Brown and Dr. M. B. Hughes. Trustees—John R. Bertels, Thomas Montgomery, Lot Search, C. A. Boone, Dr. M. B. Hughes and G. W. Search. A good library is kept up for the benefit of its members.

The Evangelical or German Methodists have quite a numerous society and Sunday-school, with a stationed minister and regular services, held in a room rented for the purpose, but have not yet built a church.

In 1876 Rev. W. M. Croman, then serving Berwick mission, made an appointment in Shickshinny, and at the close of the year 1877 the communicants numbered 80. In 1878 Rev. Mr. Hernberger succeeded him, and at the conference session of 1879 Shickshinny, with 75 members, was added to Luzerne circuit, Rev. J. M. Price pastor.

The Methodist Protestant church has 45 members and 75 in the Sunday-school. Rev. J. Farrah is the pastor.

During the ten years of the occupation of the place by the furnace company good schools were kept in different places, no house for the purpose being built until 1858, when Union township built the brown school-house now used for the primary school, on Main street. A few years later a house containing two large school-rooms was built on Church street, in which are taught the higher and intermediate grades, under the care of carefully selected teachers. The present principal is Professor Ned Ross.

The moral status of Shickshinny is above the average of towns of its size; the borough having been favored in all the institutions of society with the influence of many excellent women residing there, including Mrs. Rachael Garrison, Mrs. Rosaline and Elizabeth Search, Mrs. Anna Beadle, Mrs. Lucinda Sleppy, Mrs. J. F. and Elizabeth Nicely, Miss Emily V. Gordon, Miss Elizabeth Gordon and others.

PHYSICIANS.

The first resident physician, L. C. White, practiced several years from 1846. Since 1847 his brother-in-law, Charles Parker, has resided in the borough. Others, as Drs. D. Crary, J. B. Culver and E. A. Santee, were here short periods. Since 1862 William D. Hamilton, M. D., formerly of Baltimore, has been in practice here. Since 1869 M. B. Hughes, M. D., has practiced here. Soon afterward Jacob Briggs, M. D., opened an office. He also keeps a drug store, assisted by Dr. Harding, a brother-in-law.

SUNDRY ORGANIZATIONS.

The Shickshinny Cornet Band was organized November, 1865, with William J. J. Sleppy as leader. In 1868 it reorganized, with Chester B. Clark as leader. In September, 1878, J. W. Shoemaker was chosen leader. The members meet for practice Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. T. Wetherill and D. Brooks are the teachers.

Shickshinny Lodge, No. 180, I. O. of O. F. was organized April 22nd, 1846. The first officers were: Samuel F. Headly, N. G.; Hiram Wilson, V. G.; James S. Campbell, secretary; E. A. Leclere, A. S.; Jacob Sorber, treasurer. The officers for 1879 were: H. C. Kingler, N. G.; R. M. Tubbs, V. G.; F. A. Seabert, secretary; Daniel Shoemaker, A. S.; James Post, treasurer. The lodge meets each Saturday evening. A Josephine Rebecca degree lodge was organized June 29th, 1869, with the following officers: F. A. Seabert, N. G.; Carrie B. Post, V. G.; B. D. Koons, secretary; Lucinda Sleppy, A. S.; Sallie Briggs, treasurer. The meetings were held in Odd Fellows' Hall, on Thursday evenings. The lodge is not in working order.

Sylvania Lodge, No. 354, A. Y. M. was instituted June 29th, 1865, with the following officers: Jedediah Irish, W. M.; John F. Nicely, S. W.; A. B. Weil, J. W.; G. W. Search, secretary; A. C. Nicely, treasurer. The officers for 1879 were: Joseph Wandel, W. M.; M. B. Crary, S. W.; Joseph M. Turner, J. W.; C. A. Boone, secretary; G. W. Search, treasurer; and Monday evening, on or before full moon, is the time of meeting.

Quindara Lodge, No. 483, I. O. of G. T. was organized December 29th, 1867. The first officers were: Dr. James L. Killgore, W. C. T.; Fannie Millard, W. V. T.; John Thomas, W. C.; Elizabeth E. Gordon, W. S.; W. D. Gar-

W. F. S.; C. A. Boone, treasurer; Emily V. Gordon, W. M.; R. B. Nicely, G.; Winfield Scott, S. The officers for 1879 were: Rev. George Warren, W. C. T.; Hattie Arnold, W. V. T.; J. R. Bidleman, W. C.; R. M. Tubbs, W. S.; J. M. Stackhouse, W. T.; J. W. Miller, W. F. S.; May Winans, W. M.; Lottie Sunderland, W. G.; Charles W. Laycock, S.

Shickshinny Council, No. 115, O. U. A. M. was instituted May 17th, 1869. The first officers were: A. H. McWayne, C.; J. W. Romich, V. C.; G. W. Briggs, R. S.; J. M. Snyder, A. S.; N. B. Allegar, F. S.; Aaron Briggs, E.; J. H. Rhone, O.; J. L. Winner, treasurer. The present officers are: George W. Youells, C.; N. C. Laning, V. C.; John S. Prince, R. S.; W. W. Smith, A. S.; A. M. Everhart, F. S.; V. E. Chapin, E.; S. A. Welsh, O.; P. Weiss, treasurer. The council meets weekly at Mechanics' Hall, East Union street.

Knapf Lodge, No. 209, K. of P. was organized December 10th, 1869. The first officers were: B. D. Koons P. C.; A. McDowell, C. C.; E. W. Stiles, V. C.; John F. Caslon, K. R. S.; H. M. Briggs, M. E.; M. J. Sdyder, M. F.; C. A. Boone, M. A.; J. H. Rhone, I. G.; G. C. McWayne, O. G. The officers for 1879 were: B. D. Koons, P. C.; John F. Caslon, C. C.; Edward S. Hartman, V. C.; J. S. Sunderland, P.; W. Miller, M. E.; Luther T. Hartman, M. G.; M. B. Hughes, K. R. S.; Hiram Dietrick, M. A.; C. W. Dietrick, I. G.; P. M. Koons, O. G. The lodge meets weekly at Mechanics' Hall, Monday evenings.

CIVIL WAR TIMES.

During the efforts to suppress the Rebellion Shickshinny was a general rallying point and recruiting station. At the first call for volunteers, Henry M. Gordon, Charles B. Post,* John Minich, Emanuel Dietrich and J. C. Turner responded, and joined the first company raised in the county in April, 1861. Afterward their noble example was followed by James Post, W. A. Tubbs,* Thomas Davenport, Frank A. Seabert, James McNeal,* William J. McNeal, Martin McNeal, I. & W. Scott,* George Wildoner, Conrad Jumper, H. S. Clark, W. F. Kline, Levi Arnold, William Weatherwax,* Moses Springer, J. L. Winner, Joshua McAfee, Elijah Dietrick,* Hiram Dietrick, William Wright,* George Youells, Andrew H. McWayne,* N. B. Fitzgerald, Isaac B. Titus, Bowman Garrison, — Garrison.

WRIGHT TOWNSHIP.

HIS township was formed from Hanover, April 12th, 1851, and named after Hon. Hendrick B. Wright, of Wilkes-Barre. The population was 603 in 1870, and 881 in 1880.

The first white inhabitant was James Wright, from the Wyoming valley. He had to chop out a road before his ox team to his place, on the Big Wapwallopen creek, about a mile southwest of Penobscot station. He built a log cabin and at various times three saw-mills, which have gone to decay. The next settler was Harvey Holcomb, from Connecticut. He located a short distance down the creek from Wright's. Samuel B. Stivers and William Vandermark soon afterward located in the northwest part of the township, a little south of Triangle pond. They were natives of this county, and their families still live where they first located. John Hoffman, about the same time as the two last named, located near Stivers's place. Elias Carey, from the Wyoming valley, in 1833 bought the Holcomb improvements. He had a large family of children. Cornelius Garrison was the next settler. He built a saw-mill on the Big Wapwallopen creek, in the southwest part of the township, on the site of the only one now in this township. He also raised the first crop of grain and set out the first orchard.

The first road was the Wilkes-Barre and Hazleton turnpike, running diagonally across the township from Solomon's Gap to where N. Hildebrand now lives; the surveyor was Harry Colt, of Wilkes-Barre.

The first school-house was built of logs, in 1840, and stood near S. B. Stivers's, in the northwest part of the township. The first teacher was Charles Fine. The surviving pupils are Eleazer, George and Andrew Carey, Hiram Arnold and Benjamin and Elizabeth Vandermark. The first store was kept by Stephen Lee, near S. B. Stivers's. James Wright kept the first tavern, where he first located. Another was kept by a Mr. Willis, where R. Conedy now lives. Almost every one kept liquors to stimulate the weary traveler.

The first graveyard was located in the southwest part of the township, where E. Lines now lives.

The pioneer blacksmith, Stephen Lee, worked in connection with his store, near Samuel B. Stivers's place. The next blacksmith was George Garrison, whose shop was where the Big Wapwallopen crosses the west township line.

The pioneer postmaster was William G. Albert. His office was where J. Shafer now lives, on the west side of the township. The mails came at first once a week, on horseback. Afterward Horton & Gilchrist, of Wilkes-Barre, started a stage line between Wilkes-Barre and Hazleton, and then the mails were received three times a week.

At the first town-meeting Eleazer Carey was elected assessor. He held the office for eight years. Mr. Carey is now superintendent of the roundhouse of the Central railroad at Penobscot. Morris Bush was the supervisor and collector for 1879.

Justices of the peace for this township have been elected as follows: George Carey, 1852; Stephen Lee, 1858; Willard Ruger, 1868; Peter Miller, 1870; John B. Glover, 1874.

BUSINESS CENTERS OF TO-DAY.

Summit Station is a hamlet of about 40 inhabitants. There are a hotel and a school-house at this place.

Penobscot contains about 200 inhabitants. Here is the depot for engines employed in assisting freight trains over the mountain and for hauling trains of coal mined at Solomon's Gap. Here are repair shops and round house for the accommodation of 16 engines. Dr. J. M. Crede is the resident physician, paid by an assessment on the employes of the road living at this place.

At Solomon's Gap (post-office Mountain Top) are the engine house and turn-table of the Lehigh Valley road, and station for its extra engines for mountain work. There is also a coal breaker in the Gap. There are two stores; and a post-office, with William Schoonover as postmaster.

At South Fair View there are twelve dwellings and a hotel.

The number of persons in Wright liable to pay a tax in 1879 was 64. G. D. Harris, of this township, is one of the present county commissioners.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF MOUNTAIN TOP.

In May, 1876, a committee consisting of John B. Gloman, John M. Chase and others was sent by the people of Solomon's Gap, Fairview and Penobscot to Rev. William J. Day, of Ashley, to invite him to come up to Mountain Top and organize a Presbyterian Sunday-school. A day was fixed and the Sunday-school organized, with John B. Gloman superintendent; D. F.

Deitrick, assistant superintendent and H. Deitrick, secretary. Rev. W. J. Day preached there in the school-house of that district every two weeks after the close of the Sabbath-school exercises. In June, 1879, collections were made for the purpose of building a church. In August 1879, the Lehigh Navigation and Coal Company donated the church a fine lot 100 by 190 feet, on the Penobscot road, for the site of a church.

The church edifice, which is the only one in the township, was built largely through the efforts of Mr. Day. He offered to raise $1,500 if $500 should be raised by others interested, and the necessary funds were collected by him and Miss Nellie Chesney. In September ground was broken for the new church. The ladies raised $126 for the bell. The total cost of the building was $3,160. It was dedicated in the evening of February 20th, 1880. Rev. F. B. Hodge, of Wilkes-Barre, preached the sermon, and $782 was then subscribed to complete payment for the edifice. A special train on the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad carried many persons to the meeting free from Wilkes-Barre and intermediate points.

The building committee consisted of G. B. Stewart, Jacob Brong, William T. Small and John M. Chase.

The elders of the church are John M. Chase and Daniel Deitrick. There are some 25 members. Mountain Top being the great outlet of the Wyoming valley coal carrying companies, it will be an important location for a church for long years to come.

LACKAWANNA COUNTY.

CHAPTER I.

NAME—FIRST INHABITANTS—COUNTY ORGANIZATION—
OFFICIALS.

THE American Indians rarely, if ever, gave arbitrary names to persons or places. A locality was designated by a word expressive of some peculiarity in or about it, of some historical event connected with it, or of something directly or remotely pertaining to it. The name Lackawannock, or Lackawanna, is derived from the Delaware language, and it has come to its present form through many corruptions. The original meaning of the word is the place where two streams of water meet, and it was applied to the locality at the confluence of the Susquehanna and Lackawanna rivers. From this the river took its name, as did also the valley through which it runs and ultimately the county which includes it.

When the Lackawanna valley was settled by the whites there were two Indian settlements or villages within its limits. One of these was Asserughny, at the confluence of the Susquehanna and Lackawanna rivers, under Campbell's Ledge. The other was about ten miles up the Lackawanna, near the mouth of the Nay Aug (now Roaring brook). It was called Capoose, after a chief of that name, who came from New Jersey about the year 1700 and who was noted for his peaceful character. Trails ran from this village to Wyoming, to Cochection and to Oquago, now Windsor, Broome county, N. Y. The Indians inhabiting these villages were Monseys. They left the valley after the massacre of Wyoming. In addition to these, traces were found of five other Indian villages that had long previously been inhabited and abandoned, all located on the west bank of the stream.

Of the settlement of this county mention is made in the histories of the different townships and other municipalities. The settlers obtained the titles to their lands by warrants from the State.

In April, 1878, the Assembly passed an act to provide for the formation of new counties. The result of an election on the 13th of the following August in the present territory of Lackawanna county was a vote of 9,615 in favor of the new county and 1,986 against it. The following officers were at once appointed: A. I. Ackerly, sheriff; F. L. Hitchcock, prothonotary; Joshua B. Thomas, clerk of the courts; A. Miner Renshaw, recorder; J. L. Lee, register; W. N. Monies, treasurer; P. M. Walsh, surveyor; Leopold Schumpff, coroner; F. W. Gunster, district attorney; H. L. Garge, J. C. Kiersted and Dennis Tierney, county commissioners; Thomas Phillips, E. J. Lynett and Duncan Wright, auditors. A. B. Stevens was afterward appointed sheriff, and Horace F. J. Barrett county commissioner, in place of Messrs. Ackerly and Kiersted, who were ineligible because of being representatives. Robert Reeves and William J. Lewis were appointed auditors in place of Messrs. Phillips and Wright, who declined to act.

An ample area of the ground, near the center of the city of Scranton, was donated as a site for the county buildings and a public park, by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company and the representatives of the Susquehanna and Wyoming Railroad and Coal Company. Courts were at first held in the Washington Hall building, on the corner of Lackawanna and Penn avenues, and the county offices kept in the Second National Bank building, directly opposite, on Lackawanna avenue. The temporary jail is a three-story brick storehouse, securely fitted up for the purpose, in the rear of Lackawanna avenue, between Washington and Adams avenues.

The present county officers are: John Handley, president judge; Alfred Hand, additional law judge; Jason H. Welles, court clerk; H. H. Coston, court stenographer; E. W. Simrell, district attorney; A. B. Stevens, sheriff; Henry Summers, prothonotary; Ezra H. Ripple, treasurer; W. G. Daniels, clerk of the courts; Thomas R. Lathrop, recorder; George Farber, register of wills; W. J. Daniels, coroner; H. F. Barret, R. C. Drum, Dennis Tierney, commissioners; G. L. Newton, mercantile appraiser; Richard Evans, surveyor; W. L. Halstead, P. J. Philbin, jury commissioners; A. C. Sisson, W. W. Williams, Francis Johnson, auditors.

In the civil war of 1861-65 the people of this county which was then a part of Luzerne, sustained their full share of the burden which fell on that county; and the history of Luzerne in the war of the Rebellion necessarily embraces the history of this county, which cannot be separated from it.

CHAPTER II.

THE DELAWARE AND HUDSON CANAL COMPANY—RAILROADS OF LACKAWANNA COUNTY.

THE history of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company is so entirely identified with that of the coal trade that it is given in connection with the latter, on page 79. During the war of the Rebellion the company was very prosperous, and in 1864 its capital stock was increased to ten millions of dollars. During the decade from 1860 to 1870 the policy of extending the railroad communications of the company and the purchase or lease of other lines was vigorously pursued, while at the same time additional coal lands and collieries were acquired. The company was thus enabled to enter into successful competition with other companies in various markets in the interior, as well as at tide water, where most of its trade had been. The same policy had been pursued since 1870, and among the important lines thus acquired are the Albany and Susquehanna and the Rensselaer and Saratoga road and its branches.

In 1849 the Lackawanna and Lanesboro railroad was chartered. This was in fact a revival of the lapsed charter of the Lackawannock and Susquehanna railroad. It passed into the hands of the New York and Erie Railway Company in 1851, and soon afterward the Jefferson branch of the New York and Erie was built. About six miles of this road pass through the townships of Carbondale and Fell in this county. It is operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company.

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Plans for an avenue of transportation and travel through the Lackawanna valley were conceived during the time of its early settlement. In 1817 a company was organized for improving the navigation of the Lackawanna river, but the project was never carried into effect.

In 1826 a plan was formed and a charter obtained by Henry W. Drinker for a transportation route along the Lackawanna river by canal and railroad, the planes of the latter to be operated by water power and horses to be used between the planes. Nothing was done toward the accomplishment of this project beyond the appointment of commissioners and preliminary survey of a route, with which the southern division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad is mainly coincident.

Another road was projected from the mouth of Leggett's creek, in Providence, to Great Bend, on the Susquehanna river. It was called the Lackawannock and Susquehanna Railroad, and was popularly known as the Meredith road. The Leggett's Gap Railroad was chartered about the same time, and a company was organized in 1832 for the construction of this road and much was done on paper, but nothing more.

In 1838 a perpetual charter was obtained for a road from Pittston to the New York State line, and it was hoped that the New York and Erie Company would adopt the route of this and the Susquehanna and Delaware Canal and Railroad Company's surveyed route; but this hope was not realized, and during ten years there seemed scarcely more prospect of the construction of these roads than at the beginning.

In March, 1849, the charter of the Leggett's Gap road, which had not been permitted to lapse, was purchased, and a new charter granted during the same month. The company was organized in January, 1850, and the construction of the road prosecuted with such vigor that it was open for use in the autumn of 1851. In April of that year, by an act of Assembly, the corporate title of the company was changed to "The Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company." This became the northern division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. In April, 1849, a charter was granted to the Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad, which was to extend between Scranton and the Delaware river, via Cobb's and the Delaware Gap. This company was also organized in 1850, and it subsequently became the southern division. In March, 1853, the two companies were by an act of Assembly consolidated as the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, and the construction of the southern division was prosecuted with energy. The northern division, from Scranton to Great Bend, has a length of fifty miles, and the southern, between Scranton and the Delaware sixty-one. These constitute the original main line of the road.

Of the immense shops of this company an account is given elsewhere. The policy of the company, like that of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, has been to acquire extensive coal territory and establish and conduct collieries. It has also by purchase and lease acquired the control of many other railroads, and it is thus enabled to compete successfully with other companies in all parts of the country.

PENNSYLVANIA COAL COMPANY'S RAILROAD.

The Pennsylvania Coal Company was chartered by an act of the Legislature in 1838, and was organized by the commissioners appointed in the act in the spring of 1839. It was proposed to form a connection by railroad between the Susquehanna near Pittston and the Delaware and Hudson Canal, at some point on the Wallenpaupack creek, in Wayne county, and thus make an outlet in either direction for the coal mined by the company.

At about the time of chartering this company the charter of the Washington Coal Company was granted to some parties in Honesdale. In 1847, after a repose of nine years, this charter was sold to Messrs. Wurts and others.

"An act incorporating the Luzerne and Wayne Railroad Company, with a capital stock of $500,000, with authority to construct a road from the Lackawaxen to the Lackawanna," was passed in 1846. The charter of this company and that of the Washington Coal Company were purchased, and by an act of the Legislature merged in the Pennsylvania Coal Company in 1849.

The road was commenced in 1847, and completed in 1850. It has a length of forty-seven miles between Port Griffith and Hawley. It passes through Lackawanna, Scranton, Dunmore, Roaring Brook and Jefferson, in this county. It is a gravity road. The ascent of the mountains is made by a series of planes, with stationary engines, and the descent by gravity over another track. The road is used almost wholly for the transportation of coal, which it is found can be thus transported with less expense than by any other means. From Dunmore to Hawley passengers are carried, though not in large numbers. Tourists and pleasure seekers frequently pass over this portion in summer to enjoy the romantic scenery which is presented along the route. Connections are made at Port Griffith with the Lehigh Valley, at Dunmore with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, and at Hawley with the Hawley branch of the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroads. The present capacity of this company's mines and of the road is estimated at 1,800,000 tons per annum.

John B. Smith has been superintendent since the commencement of the road, and it is not too much to say of him that in his administration of the business he has been without reproach.

CHAPTER III.

THE 13TH REGIMENT OF THE NATIONAL GUARD OF PENNSYLVANIA.

THE 13th regiment N. G. P. was organized in October, 1878, at the time of the general re-organization of the State militia, upon the foundation offered by the battalion of the Scranton City Guard. The four companies composing the S. C. G., now companies A, B, C and D of the 13th regiment, were the outgrowth of the brave and historic "Citizen Corps" recruited upon the call of Mayor McKune for the preservation of law and order at the time of the labor troubles in the summer of 1877; forty of whose members hastily assembled at a moment's notice, under the leadership of Captain Bartholomew of the present Company B, and dispersed the mob that had attacked the mayor. The original officers of the regiment were:

Field and Staff.—Major H. M. Bolea, commandant; First Lieutenant F. L. Hitchcock, adjutant; Captain H. A. Kingsbury, commissary; First Lieutenant James Ruthven, quartermaster; First Lieutenant N. Y. Leet, assistant surgeon; chaplain, S. C. Logan, D. D.

Non-Commissioned Staff.—H. N. Dunnell, sergeant major; S. G. Kerr, quartermaster sergeant; G. H. Maddox, commissary sergeant; W. W. Ives, hospital steward; M. D. Smith and Edward Brady, principal musicians; John J. Coleman, battalion clerk.

Line Officers.—Company A: Captain, A. Bryson, jr.; first lieutenant, H. A. Knapp; second lieutenant, E. J. Smith. Company B: Captain, R. E. Merriam; first lieutenant, D. Bartholomew; second lieutenant, William Kellow. Company C: Captain, H. A. Coursen; first lieutenant, James E. Brown; second lieutenant, L. A. Watres. Company D: Captain, E. H. Ripple; first lieutenant, J. A. Linen; second lieutenant, Samuel Hines.

In August of that year the Honesdale Guard (Company E—Captain, George F. Bentley; first lieutenant, D. R. Atkinson; second lieutenant, H. G. Young) and the Van Bergen Guards (Company F, of Carbondale—Captain, John O. Miles; first lieutenant, Thomas M. Lindsay; second lieutenant, William M. Thompson) were recruited and added to the battalion, which was subsequently organized as a regiment by the addition of the Zouaves of Susquehanna (Company G—Captain, James Smith; first lieutenant, S. L. French; second lieutenant, George A. Post) and Captain Boone's company of the old 9th regiment from Pleasant Valley (Company H.)

In 1878 the Pleasant Valley company was disbanded and a new Company H organized in Providence, under the command of Captain E. W. Pearce, former major of the old 9th, with Frank Courtright first lieutenant, and R. E. Westlake second lieutenant. The regiment has a fine band, whose uniform and instruments belong to the Scranton City Guard, and carries a handsome State color presented by the ladies of Scranton to the S. C. G. It was highly commended by the adjutant general of the State, in his report for 1878, for its discipline and drill, and has gained an enviable reputation all over the State. Colonel Boies was the first regimental commander in the State to organize and institute a system of rifle practice in his command, and probably has contributed largely to encourage the cultivation of a taste for this gentlemanly science among the guardsmen of the State. As a result of the first year's practice 51 members of the Scranton City Guard companies were qualified as marksmen, and were presented with badges by the governor and staff on the evening of the annual inspection, December 6th, 1878. The following year 135 members of the regiment were qualified as marksmen, under the rules of Wingate's Manual, Company D qualifying 79 per cent. of all on its rolls.

The regiment went into camp for instruction and drill at Long Branch, N. J., in August, 1879, for seven days, where its appearance and demeanor were highly commended by many military men and the newspapers generally. The following is the present roster of the officers:

Field and Staff.—Colonel Henry M. Boies, commandant; lieutenant colonel, F. L. Hitchcock; major, E. H. Ripple; Major H. N. Dunnell, surgeon; Captain H. A. Kingsbury, commissary; First Lieutenant James Ruthven, quartermaster; Captain George L. Breck, paymaster and Inspector of rifle practice; First Lieutenant R. Macmillan, adjutant; First Lieutenant W. H. Cummings, assistant surgeon; chaplain, S. C. Logan, D. D.

Non-commissioned Staff.—E. F. Chamberlin, sergeant major; M. I. Corbett, quartermaster sergeant; L. M. Horton, commissary sergeant; — Walters, hospital steward; Frederick Becker, jr., principal musician.

Line Officers.—Company A: Captain, H. A. Knapp; first lieutenant, E. J. Smith; second lieutenant, J. C. Highriter, jr. Company B: Captain, D. Bartholomew; first lieutenant, William Kellow; second lieutenant, H. R. Madison. Company C: Captain, H. A. Coursen; first lieutenant, L. A. Watres; second lieutenant, Samuel Hines; second lieutenant, J. A. Linen; first lieutenant, T. F. Fenman. Company D: Captain, J. A. Linen; first lieutenant, Samuel Hines; second lieutenant, E. S. Jackson. Company E: Captain, G. F. Bentley; first lieutenant, D. R. Atkinson; second lieutenant, H. G. Young. Company F: Captain, Thomas M. Lindsay; first lieutenant, Sheldon Norton; second lieutenant, W. H. Langfelder. Company H: Captain, E. W. Pearce; first lieutenant, F. Courtright; second lieutenant, R. E. Westlake.

THE CITY OF SCRANTON

AND DUNMORE BOROUGH.

THE TOWNSHIP OF PROVIDENCE.

WITHIN the limits of the city of Scranton are included the former boroughs of Hyde Park, Scranton and Providence, and a portion of Dunmore as formerly bounded. The land now embraced by the boundaries of Scranton and Dunmore was formerly included in the township of Providence, now extinct. Hence a necessary introduction to the history of Scranton and Dunmore will be a sketch of that of Providence.

Providence, named from Providence, R. I., was formed in 1770, the sixth of the townships allotted by the Susquehanna Company to the Connecticut settlers. That portion of the Lackawanna valley between the Delaware town of Asserughney, near the mouth of the river, and "Capoose," the Monsey village, the site of which is within the Scranton city limits, was explored as early as 1753. When Pittston was laid out it extended from the junction of the Lackawanna with the Susquehanna five miles up the valley, and Providence, which was surveyed five miles square, occupied the valley for the same distance up from the northeast boundary of Pittston, its remotest limit being ten miles from the mouth of the Lackawanna.

The township was under the ordinances adopted by the Susquehanna Company at a meeting at Hartford, June 2nd, 1773, until they were annulled; and at the time and place above referred to Gideon Baldwin, Timothy Keyes and Isaac Tripp were appointed directors and proprietors of Providence, to serve until the first Monday of the following December.

PROVIDENCE IN "YE NORTH DISTRICT."

From the erection of Westmoreland to the Trenton decree, eight years later, Providence was within its civil jurisdiction. At the first town meeting held in Westmoreland, at which the town was divided into eight districts, Providence was included, with "Exeter and all the lands west and north of ye town line," in "ye North District." The following were chosen to fill the offices mentioned for the ensuing year: Isaac Tripp, selectman; John Dewitt, surveyor of highways; John Abbott, fence viewer; Gideon Baldwin, lister; Barnabas Garey and Timothy Keyes, grand jurors; James Brown, tithing man. The names of some of those mentioned above will be recognized as those of some of the earliest settlers within the present limits of Scranton, at "Capoose Meadows." Isaac Tripp refused to serve.

At the same meeting it was "voted that ye Indian apple tree, so called, at Capoose shall be ye town sign post for ye town of New Providence." Each of the seventeen townships had a tree recognized as the town sign post, and all notices affixed to it were considered as legal and binding as the seal of a court of common pleas can make a notice now. In the absence of a printing press within the county such notices were always written. This apple tree, planted more than a century and a half ago, perhaps by the peaceful hand of Capoose, yet stands by the roadside between Scranton and Providence, but a few hundred feet above the site of the wigwams of Capoose. Under its shelter the settlers met for business purposes until the valley was depopulated by the massacre of 1778. August Hunt and Frederick Vanderlier, because they acted with the Pennamites, were expelled from the township.

December 20th, 1775, there was an important meeting held under the Indian apple tree to draw for lots in the township of Putnam (now Tunkhannock). Among those who drew lots were John Gardner, Paul and Job Green, William West, Zebulon Marcy and Isaac and Job Tripp.

A TOWNSHIP IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND LUZERNE COUNTIES.

After the decree of Trenton, in 1782, Providence became one of the townships of Northumberland county which had been organized in 1772 and embraced the territory in dispute between Connecticut and Pennsylvania. Upon the erection of Luzerne county, four years later, it was included within its boundaries; but it was not organized as a township of said county until 1792, when it was separated from Pittston. As a township, Providence has lost its identity. In April, 1819, a portion was set off as a part of Blakeley; January 4th, 1829, the western portion was reannexed to Pittston township; March 14th, 1849, Providence borough was erected from its territory; Hyde Park borough, May 4th, 1852; Scranton borough, February 14th, 1856; Dunmore borough, April 10th, 1862; April 23d, 1866, Scranton city, which includes all of the boroughs named except the greater portion of Dunmore and what little of the original township had not been included in their limits.

The justices of the peace in the districts of which the township of Providence formed the whole or a part previous to the adoption of the constitution of 1838 have been mentioned on page 56. The incumbents of the office after that date until the extinction of the township are named below, the term of office being five years from about the middle of April in the year given: John Vaughn, 1840; Alva Heermans, 1840; Silvester Bristol, 1842; Ebenezer Leach, 1845; Benjamin Fellows, 1846; Charles W. Potter, 1850; Daniel Ward, 1851; Henry W. Derby, 1855; Calvin Spencer, 1856, 1860; Thomas Collins, 1857, 1862; Patrick Collary, 1863.

In October, 1854, there were 2,137 taxable inhabitants in the township of Providence.

CAPOOSE AND THE MONSEYS.

The earliest occupants of any portion of the land now within the borders of the city of Scranton were the Monseys, or an important branch of that tribe of Indians, who left the Minisink as early as any authentic history of the Lenni-Lenapes is known to us. Between Scranton and Providence, on the flat west of the Lackawanna, was located their chief village, though they were scattered through the valley. This locality was known to the early white inhabitants as "Capoose Meadow," in honor of Capoose, a chief of the Monseys, who is said to have been friendly and partially civilized. Count Zinzendorf visited this village in 1742, and the date of its first occupancy by the Monseys must have been thirty years before. The old Scranton race-course lies within its limits. A quarter of a mile up the river, on the high bank of the Lackawanna, was their burial place, long since obliterated by the cultivation of the spot by the whites. Here in 1795 were discovered a number of Indian graves, which were opened, according to Hollister, "by a party of settlers in search of antiquarian spoil." He continues: "As one of the mounds seemed to have been prepared with especial attention, and contained, with the bones of the warrior, a great quantity of the implements of the deceased, it was supposed, erroneously, no doubt, to have been the grave of the chieftain Capoose. These graves, few in number, perhaps pointed to the last of the group of Monsey warriors who had offered incense and sacrifice to the great spirit of 'Capoose.'"

On a low piece of land through which passes the Scranton and Providence Street Railway, east of the track, stands the apple tree previously mentioned, and a monument, it is supposed, to whatever of civilization was possessed by the Monseys. This tree, which is large, is the last remaining one of an orchard. Evidences that there had at one time been permanent residents in the vicinity were discovered by the first whites who visited the valley. Other apple trees were cut down early in the present century. One hundred and fifty concentric circles were counted in one felled in 1801. "The domestic habits of the Monsey tribe," says Hollister, "when not engaged in warfare were extremely simple and lazy. Patches of open land or 'Indian clearings' early were found in the valley, where onions, cantaloupes, beans and corn, and their favorite weed, tobacco, were half cultivated by the obedient squaw." The Monseys accompanied the Delawares to Ohio, and subsequently were merged in the latter tribe.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first whites who located in Providence, as originally bounded, were Timothy Keyes, Andrew Hickman and Solomon Hocksey, in 1771. They erected a cabin where Taylorville now is, on the bank of the creek which has since been named in honor of Mr. Keyes. Mrs. Hickman was one of the first five women in Wyoming. The lands of "Capoose" originally fell into the hands of Captain John Howard, as a purchase from the Susquehanna Company. He was unacquainted with their location or their suitability for immediate cultivation. They had been to a considerable extent cleared by the Monseys, and where they had not been cleared the heavy timber had much of it been blown down by whirlwinds. Captain Howard interested Christopher Avery and Isaac Tripp with him in the lands. Both of these men were among the "wild Yankees," and came to Wyoming as early as 1769. Near the vacated wigwams of the Indians Mr. Tripp built his log cabin in 1771, and without clearing a foot of land planted and raised a crop of corn the first season, on the plantation deserted but a short time before.

Like Tripp, John Stevens was one of the proprietors of the Susquehanna Company, his land lying in "ye township called ye Capoose Meadow." He bequeathed to his step son, John Youngs, a "settling right" at "Capoose Meadow." A lot surveyed to Colonel Lodwick Ojdirk passed into the hands of Jonathan Slocum in 1771, on account of Slocum's "Doeing ye Duty of a settler" for Ojdirk. August Hunt, before mentioned, was a settler in 1782. Major Fitch Alden purchased lot No. 2, containing 370 acres, of John Stevens, of Wilkes-Barre, for £15. Other purchasers in the township between 1772 and 1775 were Solomon Strong, Christopher Avery (before mentioned), John Aldren, Major Fitch, Jonathan Slocum, John Stevens, Gideon Baldwin, James Leggett, Ebenezer Searles, Matthew Dalson, Benjamin Bailey, Thomas Pukits, Solomon Johnson, Isaac Tripp, jr., Frederick Curtis, Andrew Hickman and John Dewitt. Strong, Fitch, Searles, Aldren and Stevens, like Ojdirk, had no interest in the township other than a speculative one.

In 1775 James Leggett emigrated from New York and located at the mouth of the creek now bearing his name. He was the first to make an improvement above Providence village. In the Connecticut Susquehanna Company's original plat of the township this spot had been allotted to Abraham Stanton, in 1772. The next year it was transferred by Stanton to John Staples. On account of some dereliction of duty Staples's claim was declared forfeited, and in 1774 it was granted to Davis Thayer. When he sold it to Leggett, in June, 1775, with several other tracts of land in the vicinity, the forest with which it was covered was unbroken. Benjamin Bailey, who has been mentioned as an early purchaser, bought a lot of Solomon Strong, below Leggett's location, in 1775, and in 1776 sold it for a flintlock gun and a not very valuable lot of furs (about the same consideration for which he had purchased it), to Mr. Tripp. The next year Matthew Dalsen, who had come some time previously, purchased 375 acres adjoining Leggett's southern boundary, which purchase included the lands since known as "Uncle Joe Griffin's farm." A new-comer in 1774 was Isaac Tripp, a grandson of the Isaac Tripp already mentioned. He was then quite young. Isaac Tripp 3d came from Rhode Island in 1786, accompanied only by his son Stephen, then ten years old. In 1788 his family made their permanent residence at Capoose.

During the same year Enoch Holmes erected the first house on the site of Providence village, near what is now the corner of Oak and Main streets. It was a double log cabin and no doubt an imposing structure for the time and locality. Settlers in 1790 were Conrad Lutz, John Gifford, Constant Searles, John House, Jacob Lutz, Benjamin Pedrick, Solomon Bates and the Athertons. This year Holmes removed north of Leggett's creek, after leading a precarious life for two years, consumed in cultivating the land in the spring, summer and autumn, and the manufacture of brooms, baskets and snow shoes in the winter, which he carried to Wilkes-Barre to exchange for necessities at the store. Daniel Waderman, of Hamburg, Germany, was the second settler on the village site. He had been seized by a press gang in London in 1775, and compelled to serve with the forces of the English until 1779, when he was captured by the Americans and served with them until the close of the war with great credit. He erected a rude cabin in 1790 on the site since occupied by the residence of Daniel Silkman. Twenty-one years later he removed further up the valley, where he died in 1835.

The Griffin family have from an early date been well known in Providence. The first of the name in the township was Stephen, who came from Westchester county, N. Y., in 1794 and located near Lutz's fordway. In 1811 Thomas Griffin came; James in 1812 and Joseph and Isaac in 1816. Says Hollister: "The far-seen hill below Hyde Park, crowned on its western edge by a noble park reserved for deer, is known throughout the valley as 'Uncle Joe Griffin's place,' where he lived for half a century. He filled the office of justice of the peace for many years. In 1839-40, conjoined with the late Hon. Charles Butler, he represented the interests of the county in the State Legislature with credit. With the exception of Isaac Tripp, sen., sent to Connecticut from Westmoreland in 1777, Joseph Griffin, Esq., was the first man thus honored by the people of the valley."

The Tripps, who have been briefly referred to, are deserving of more particular mention. "Isaak Tryp," as the name was spelled in the Westmoreland records, was, says Hollister, "one of the proprietors of the Susquehanna Company. He had seen some service in French and Indian wars." Coming to Wyoming in 1769, he served prominently in the Pennamite war.

In the Revolutionary war the British, for the purpose of inciting the savages to more murderous activity along the frontier and exposed settlements, offered large rewards for the scalps of Americans. From the reliable source previously quoted we learn that "as Tripp was a man of more than ordinary efficiency and prominence in the colony, the Indians were often asked by the British why he was not slain. The unvarying answer was that Tripp was 'a good man.' He was a Quaker in his religious notions, and in all his intercourse with the Indians his manner had been so kind and conciliatory that when he fell into their hands as a prisoner the year previous, at Capoose, they dismissed him unharmed, and covered him with paint, as it was their custom to do with those they did not wish to harm. Rendering himself inimical to the Tories by the energy with which he assailed them afterward in his efforts to protect the interests of the Wyoming colony at Hartford, whither he had been sent to represent its grievances, a double reward was offered for his scalp; and, as he had forfeited their protection by the removal of the war paint, and incurred their hostility by his loyal struggles for the life of the republic, he was shot and scalped the first time he was seen; this was in 1799, near the Wilkes-Barre fort. Isaac Tripp 2nd also eventually died at the hands of the savages. Colonel Ira Tripp is a descendant of this historical pioneer family.

In 1809 or 1810 H. C. L. Von Storch, a German, settled in the township. He had previously located in Blakeley, and had passed some time in Philadelphia as a clerk in a store. Afterward he traveled through the country selling goods to the inhabitants and gaining the confidence of all with whom he dealt. At the date mentioned he located across the road from where the residence of his son Theodore stands. There he opened a store. He bought land below Hyde Park, above the site of Carter's factory, where he erected his dwelling and store. On account of failing health he was obliged to abandon business, and died in 1826. He amassed a considerable fortune. Many of his descendants are living in the vicinity. The Von Storchs were among the earliest in this section to engage in the coal trade. There were outcroppings on the bank of the river. Mr. Von Storch mined coal to burn in his own house, as did many other of the early residents. His sons mined and sold coal in limited quantities from 1830 to 1854. At the latter date their land was leased to the Von Storch Coal Company. In 1859 the leases were transferred to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company.

We now proceed to the consideration of the settlement at "Deep Hollow," as the site of the Scranton beginning was early known. Early in 1788 Philip Abbott, a native of Connecticut, who had come to Wyoming before the Revolution, owned land under the Connecticut title, which he transferred to his brother James, and had been expelled, with the latter, by the Tories and Indians in 1778, came to the Hollow from his old home in Windham, Conn., where he had spent most of the interim, and in May marked out his clearing. He erected a log hut, the first domicile where Scranton afterward grew up, on a ledge of rocks near the locality of the old Slocum house. He was joined by his brother James in the following October, and in the spring of 1789 Reuben Taylor came to the Hollow and built the second house there, on the bank of the brook a little below Abbott's. A clearing was made on the elongated point of land between Roaring brook and the Lackawanna, on which a crop of wheat and corn was harvested that year. Taylor had previously located on land which included the Uncle Joe Griffin place, only a few acres of which he redeemed from the forest, and which he disposed of for a trifle.

The Howes, two brothers John and Seth, purchased the improvements made at the Hollow. John had a family. Seth was unmarried and lived with them in the house vacated by Taylor. In July, 1798, Ebenezer Slocum and James Duwain purchased of the Howes the undivided land at "Deep Hollow." Duwain was soon succeeded by Benjamin Slocum. This transfer on the part of the Howes, who had settled at the Hollow with the intention of making it their permanent abiding place and a theatre for the exercise of their energy and enterprise, was hastened, says Hollister, by a domestic tragedy. "Lydia, the eldest born of John Howe, depressed by some disappointed visions of girlhood, was found dead in her chamber, having hanged herself with a garter attached to her bedpost. The effect of this suicide—the first in the valley—removed every speculating consideration or cavil from a trade which placed the mill and the wild acres around it in the hands of the Slocums." The father of the new owners of the land at the Hollow was Jonathan Slocum, who emigrated from Rhode Island to Wyoming in November, 1777, and was slain and scalped by the Indians near the Wilkes-Barre fort, with Isaac Tripp, his father-in-law, in December, 1778; and the Slocum brothers were nephews of Frances Slocum, the Indians' captive and adopted daughter, whose name is familiar wherever the pioneer history of our country is known.

A noteworthy landmark at Slocum Hollow was the old Slocum house. It was erected by Ebenezer Slocum in 1805, and during its existence was the oldest house in Scranton. It stood on a stone foundation which with the chimney and other mason work was built by Chester Kimball. The main part was 17 by 44 feet, and had a wing at the rear 17 by 34 feet. The upper portion was burned April 10th, 1869, and repaired in the following month. In a room over the kitchen was organized the first lodge of Odd Fellows in Scranton. It was torn down in 1865 to enlarge the yard of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's works. The second frame house was built by Benjamin Slocum, who at the time of his advent at the Hollow and for some years later was a single man.

He married Phebe La France, daughter of an early settler. Ebenezer had been married for a considerable time to a daughter of Doctor Davis, who joined him at the Hollow in 1800. Another early settler was Elisha Hitchcock, in 1809.

The old road through the Lackawanna valley passed near the foot of the Hyde Park hill and about on the line of Wyoming street. Preserved Taylor lived on land now covered by the culm pile of the Mount Pleasant colliery, and Holden Tripp's residence was several rods northeast of the same. A little south from where the street railway diverges from Wyoming street stood another dwelling and a distillery. About 1790 the course of the road was changed here and laid upon the present line of Main street, or nearly so. About the same time a Mr. Lindley made a clearing and built a log house a short distance northerly from the corner of Main and Washington streets, about where the Calvin Washburn house now stands. A Mr. Dolph made a clearing and built nearly opposite, on what has since been known as the Knapp place. Another of the same name settled near the westerly corner of Main street and Sixth avenue, on the site of the residence of the late Benjamin Fellows, Esq. Later came William Bishop, a Baptist preacher and school teacher, who cleared the land and built a house on the ground occupied by the residence of the late Judge Merrifield, one of the apple trees planted by him remaining. These were the first settlements made on the hill. Originally that whole section was a dense forest, thickly marked by lofty pines, many of the stumps of which have been removed within the last thirty years. The houses were all built of logs. Joseph Fellows, Esq. (father of Joseph, Benjamin, Henry and Sylvester Fellows and Mrs. Knapp), Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Heermans came about 1795. He seems to have been a contractor for most of the lands about Hyde Park, as his son Joseph subsequently paid for and received the titles to the same. In 1814 came Philip, father of Sylvanus, John and Edmund Heermans. He lived at first in the Bishop house, and afterward built, on the northerly corner of Jackson and Main streets, the house which was later so long known as "the old white tavern." This was the first framed house erected in the place, and after being considerably enlarged remained the principal hotel for many years.

The locality of the thriving borough of Dunmore was often explored by passers between Connecticut and Wyoming in the early days; but no settlers made an opening in the forest at this point until the advent of William Allsworth, from New York State, in 1783.

PIONEER EXPERIENCES.

Doctor Hollister gives the following incidents in the conflict of this pioneer family with the wild beasts which everywhere abounded in the primitive wilderness:

"From the Lackawanna settlement, on the Paupaek, some four and twenty miles from the cabin of Allsworth, there stood but two habitations in 1783, one at Little Meadows, the other at Cobb's, both kept as houses of entertainment. The need of more places of rest to cheer the emigrants toiling toward Wyoming with heavy burdens, drawn by the sober team of oxen, induced Mr. Allsworth to fix his abode at this spot. While he was building his cabin from trees felled for the purpose of gaining space and material, his covered wagon furnished a home for his family. At night heaps of logs were kept burning until long after midnight to intimidate wolves, bears, wildcats and panthers inhabiting the chaparral toward Roaring brook and Capoose. Deer and bears were so abundant for many years within sight of his clearing that his family never trusted to his rifle in vain for a supply of venison or the substantial haunches of the bear. In the fall and winter months wild beasts made incursions with such frequency that domestic animals at night could be safely kept only in palisaded inclosures. These were a strong stockade made from the well driven sapling, and generally built contiguous to the dwelling, into which all kinds of live stock were driven for protection after nightfall. Every farmer in the township of Providence unwilling to see his home invaded and occupied by the common enemy at the dead of night took this precaution less than eighty years ago. And even then they were not exempt from depredation at Mr. Allsworth's. At one time, just at the edge of evening, a bear groped his way into the pen where some of his pigs were slumbering, seized the sow in his brawny paws and bore the noisy porker hurriedly into the woods, where it was seen no more. The affrighted pigs were left unbarmed in the pen. At another time, during the absence from home of Mr. Allsworth, a large panther came to his place before sundown in search of food. This animal is as partial to veal as the bear is to pork. A calf lay in the unguarded inclosure at the time. Upon this the panther sprang, when Mrs. Allsworth, alarmed by the bleat of the calf, seized a pair of heavy tongs from the fire-place, and, with a heroism distinguishing most of the women of that day, drove the yellow intruder away without its intended meal. The same night, however, the calf was killed by the panther, which in return was captured in a trap the same week, and slain."

LOCAL INCIDENTS OF THE MASSACRES OF 1778 AND 1779.

Alarmed in 1778 by the increasing enmity of the Indians, who were incited to lawless deeds by the Tories and British, most of the settlers in Providence fled to Stroudsburg or sought fancied safety at Wyoming; but Isaac Tripp, Timothy Keyes, James Hocksey and Andrew Hickman and his wife remained. Hickman and his wife and child were killed. Keyes and Hocksey were taken prisoners and were tomahawked and scalped in the forest above Leggett's gap (now Abington), while Isaac Tripp the younger, taken at the same time, was released.

During the autumn of 1778 some of the settlers came back to Capoose and saved a small portion of their crops. On this and the abundant game, which could be had for the killing, they lived comfortably and unmolested through the following winter. In March, 1779, however, Isaac Tripp, jr., who had escaped death only at the caprice of his savage captors the previous year, "was shot in his own house on the flats; and three men named Jones, Avery and Lyons were carried away in the forest and never heard of afterward." It was not until after Sullivan's campaign that the majority of the settlers who had removed ventured back to Providence to rebuild their cabins, and for the second time set up their homes in the township; and even then, intimidated by the Pennamites, they were unable to make very rapid advances towards improvements and civilization for several years.

TAX ASSESSMENT IN 1796.

In 1796 the number of persons liable to taxation in the township, which then embraced the entire settlement from Pittston to Rix's gap, was ninety, twenty-nine of whom were non-residents, as is indicated by the following assessment roll for that year:

EARLY TOWN MEETINGS UNDER THE COUNTY ORGANIZATION—BALLOTS.

Town meetings in the early days were held at the house of Stephen Tripp. The first of which there is any record was in 1813. The entire vote of the township then extending jurisdiction over the subsequently organized towns of Lackawanna, Covington, Blakeley, Jefferson, Scott and Greenfield was as follows in the years mentioned: 1813—Federal vote 46, Democratic 36; 1814—Federal 47, Democratic 36; 1815—Federal 51, Democratic 44. The voters were few, and the elections had no stirring interest.

THE PIONEER DOCTOR AND PREACHER.

According to Hollister, "the general history of the township contains little of general interest. Roads were few and rugged, and the inhabitants, priding themselves in assiduous labor and frugality, lived and died contented. They enjoyed neither churches nor school-houses, for none had yet emerged from the clearings; were annoyed by few and only light taxes; * * * the general health was good, with no prevailing sickness until 1805, when the typhus fever or 'black tongue,' as it was termed, carried its ravages into settlements just beginning to feel the impulse of prosperity along the borders of the Susquehanna and the Lackawanna. Drs. Joseph Davis and Nathaniel Giddings (the latter of whom settled in Pittston in 1783) became the healing Elishas to many a needy household." The first named was the pioneer physician in the township. He settled in 1800 at "Slocum Hollow," though he had originally located near Spring brook. He was born in New Haven, Conn., in 1732, and graduated at Yale College. Such was his ability and force of character that, in spite of uncouth manners and eccentric habits, he controlled almost the entire surgical practice of the two valleys and a large extent of country for a hundred and fifty miles around. As he grew old the doctor became a persistent hoarder of money, and quite a sum of silver dollars was found in an old wooden chest some years after his death, which occurred July 30th, 1830, at the extraordinary age of 98. In 1823 Dr. Silas B. Robinson came into the township, where he practiced his profession until his death, in 1860. It is said that his manners were blunt, his heart kind and his life blameless. He was well known and everywhere welcome.

William Bishop, who has been alluded to as the first settler at Hyde Park, was the first preacher who took up his residence in the township, and was a Baptist.

EARLY ROADS.

One of the three war paths of the Indians leading out of Wyoming terminated at Cochection, a small Indian settlement on the upper Delaware, and passed through Providence, following the course thus minutely described by Doctor Hollister: "Leaving the valley at Asserughney village, standing at the mouth of the stream, it followed the eastern bank of the Lackawanna up to Spring brook, Stafford Meadow and Nay Aug, or Roaring brook, crossing the last two named ones a short distance below the present location of Scranton, and passed into the Indian town of Capoose. Here one path led off to Oquago, New York (now Windsor), through Leggett's gap and the Abingtonian wilderness; while the other, diverging from Capoose in an easterly direction, passing along where Dunmore now stands up the mountain slope to its very summit" crossed the Moosic range and emerged through Salem to the low Wallenpaupack country beyond. The first road from Pittston to the Delaware, passing on the line of the old warrior's trail through Providence, was commenced in November, 1772; and "every person owning a settling right in the valley, or on 'ye east branch of the Susquehanna river,' from the Indian village of Capoose to the mouth of the stream, assisted toward its construction." The wages paid were one and three shillings per diem, according to the locality, those east of the great swamp (now known as "Shades of Death") receiving the higher rate. Isaac Tripp was appointed to oversee the work and was paid five shillings a day. The next road of importance was the Drinker turnpike, chartered in 1819 and completed in 1826. The Luzerne and Wayne county turnpike was constructed the same year, and intersected the former at Providence village.

There was no bridge spanning the Lackawanna at Providence until the year just mentioned, the only means of crossing the river there previously having been supplied by fording places; though in 1796 Joseph Fellows, sen., aided by the Capoose farmers, had thrown one of a single span across the river lower down, on the flats, where a fordway now marks the spot.

PRIMITIVE MILLS.

James Leggett has been mentioned as a settler in 1775. After getting his improvement under some advancement he removed to White Plains, N. Y., where he remained until the close of the Revolutionary war, when he returned to Providence and not long afterward erected a saw-mill on Leggett's creek, as the stream is called in his honor. That it was a very small affair and very simple in construction may well be imagined. For several years after that grain could not be milled until it was carried twenty miles away in the Wyoming valley, unless, as was frequently the case, recourse was had to the "hominny flock" so common in the days of our pioneer forefathers.

The manifest necessity of a grist mill nearer home led Philip Abbott to build on Roaring brook, in 1788, the first establishment of the kind in the vicinity. The construction of this establishment was simple in the extreme. It soon became evident that capital was requisite to enlarge and improve the mill. In October of the same year Mr. Abbott's brother James joined him in the enterprise, and the firm was further strengthened by the admission of Reuben Taylor in the spring of 1789. A year later, however, they sold the mill and their other property at the Hollow to John and Seth Howe, who in July, 1798, sold the same with their improvements, as has been stated, to Ebenezer Slocum and James Duwain. A saw-mill was built early by Captain John Stafford on Stafford Meadow brook about half a mile below Scranton, which Hollister states was planned in 1790. That it was not immediately constructed and put in running order is evident from the statement that the plank used upon the bridge built by Joseph Fellows, sen., and others in 1796 were "the first production of this mill."

In 1796 a small grist-mill was built by Isaac and Stephen Tripp, on Leggett's creek, in Providence. The dam was three times built and washed away, in consequence of defective construction; and thus proving a failure the mill was abandoned. About the same time or a little later the same parties established two stills on Tripp's flats, which were in successful operation for some time.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE SLOCUMS.

The grist-mill at the Hollow was enlarged and improved and a distillery added to it in 1798 and 1799. During the latter year Slocum and his partner, James Duwain, built a saw-mill a little above the grist-mill. A log blacksmith shop was erected near the creek. This, with the mills and distillery, four or five rude houses and a cooper shop constituted all that was visible in the way of architecture of the settlement of Slocum Hollow in the early part of 1800. In that year, after consultation with Dr. William Hooker Smith (who, having faith in the deposits of iron ore in the vicinity, had established a forge at the locality known as "Old Forge" in the spring of 1789), the Slocum brothers (Duwain having withdrawn from the firm, discouraged by the loss of the two mill dams by the spring freshet, and his place having been filled by Benjamin Slocum) constructed a forge at the Hollow, which, as the day of anthracite was yet in the future, depended solely on charcoal as a heating agent. The forge had two fires and one trip hammer and smith shop attached, worked by Peter La France, foreman, and John Gordon, Thomas Williams, George Worten and Henry Stark (the latter two being colored, and at that time slaves), who wrought from the ore and iron all of the needed implements of the country for many miles around. The iron ore was placed in stone furnaces, where it was mixed with the proper quantity of charcoal and melted and separated from the slag. It was again heated and formed into balls, making a fair quality of iron, said to have been strong and worked into any desired shape by means of the trip hammer.

The dams were speedily rebuilt by a "bee," in which every farmer in the township participated, and consequently the proprietors did not lose much by the disaster by which they were swept away, and the public suffered little inconvenience. The grist-mill was a success. It was patronized by the settlers far and wide. Elisha Hitchcock was a young and energetic man and a millwright by trade. He repaired the mill and in 1811 married Ebenezer Slocum's eldest daughter, Ruth. Mr. Hitchcock remained in the place of his early business experiences, became identified in after years with other enterprises and died much esteemed by all who knew him. His wife survived him. In 1811 the Slocums put a second still in operation, and while the wood-choppers cleared the land about the Hollow the place turned out such quantities of iron, lumber, flour, feed and whiskey as to bring the settlement before the country as one of promise and importance. "All transactions here and all transactions upon my father's books," states the venerable

Joseph Slocum, a son of Ebenezer Slocum (now in his eighty-first year, a resident of Scranton) "bear the name of Unionville as late as 1828; but the place was known far and near as Slocum Hollow, and was so named in 1816 by a jolly Dutchman named James Snyder. That year was known as the 'cold season.' Little or no corn escaped the ravages of the frost, which killed all perishable vegetation. This Dutchman, who was fond of whiskey and convivial sports, employed at the forge, had ever before called the place Skunk's Misery; but when this frost, with its disastrous breath, froze everything it could reach, he indignantly exclaimed that this spot was fit only for a Slocum to live in, and he should name it Slocum Holler." The Slocums kept many teams on the road carting whiskey, pork, beef, flour and feed to Easton, Wilkes-Barre, Montrose, Paupack and Bethany. From 30 to 50 men were employed about the works. The coal and ore were moved by ox teams. The first collier who supplied the forge with coal was a man named Ostin. The Slocum Hollow iron was used and held in high esteem in all directions, but the product of the forge gradually diminished as the ore began to fail, and June 10th, 1822, the last iron was made by the Slocums. "Up to this time," remarks Hollister, "these primitive iron works were, in the hands of these unobtrusive men, yielding their conquests and diffusing a spirit of enterprise amidst accumulative difficulties, in a valley having no outlet by railroad, no navigable route to the sea other than shallow waters long skimmed by the Indian's canoe." Rival forges and furnaces sprung up, reducing the demand for the Slocum Hollow iron; the cost of transporting the ore over roads at times impassable was an item of much importance in the competition; and the works, which had been in constant use for over a quarter of a century, had become unequal to the purpose for which they were intended. The last whiskey was made at the Hollow in December, 1826. Jacob Myers, in 1824, and William Johnson, in 1826, were the last distillers there. The succession of harvests throughout the surrounding country, together with the absence of an available grain market and the frequent calls for whiskey from abroad, had rendered the stills not only a profitable property to their owners, but a commercial necessity to the community.

Ebenezer and Benjamin Slocum dissolved partnership in the spring of 1826, and the latter removed to Tunkhannock, Wyoming county, where he died in 1832. The decline and abandonment of the business at the Hollow by Ebenezer Slocum has been thus commented on by his son, Joseph Slocum:

"As business slackened and declining years came over father, and wishing to divide the property, one still-house was abandoned and a division of the lands effected. April 15th, 1828, I took my father's place in business here, in connection with my brother Samuel. The stone store-house, cooper shop and other improvements were in a tolerably good condition, excepting two or three log houses, abandoned in 1817. We erected a new barn in the rear of the Slocum house and carried on farming and business generally. By father's advice Mr. Hitchcock put in a tub water wheel and gearing for the saw-mill, which, proving a failure, prevented the use of the mill for nearly a year. Father's death, July 25th, 1832, placed the entire property in the hands of Merritt Slocum, administrator, who turned the still-house into a dwelling and proceeded to apportion and divide the estate into four shares. Lot No. 1, or saw-mill lot, consisting of 503 acres, valued at $4,415, fell into the hands of Alva and Sylvanus Heermaas, was afterwards owned by Messrs. Merrifield, Albro and Rickerson, and from them passed to the Scrantons. Lot No. 2, or grist-mill lot, of 372 acres, valued at $7,500, went to Ebenezer Slocum, jr., and Aaron Brown, and after two other changes was sold to the Scrantons. Lot No. 3, or house lot, of 388 acres, valued at $3,500, and No. 4, or Griffin lot, of 595 acres, valued at $1,700, passed to Joseph and Samuel Slocum conjointly. We dissolved partnership in 1837."

Mr. Joseph Slocum erected a saw-mill in 1848, which he sold to Thomas P. Remington, who failed to pay for it. It was sold at sheriff's sale and bid in by Mr. Slocum, who sold it to John Beekman in 1858. It has long since gone to decay, and the only work of the Slocums now left to view is the grist-mill dam built in 1800, the frame of which is substantially the same as then. The grist-mill was torn down in the summer of 1856. During their active career at the Hollow the Slocums had become possessed of over 1,800 acres of land, nearly all of which was underlaid with coal.

The abandonment of active operations by the Slocums in 1826, and the relapse into inactivity of the stills and forge, seriously checked the progress of the settlement.

EARLY TAVERNS.

The earliest tavern in the township of which any information can be obtained was the house of Stephen Tripp, so called, though it is doubtful if the accommodations were either many or remarkable. The house of William Allsworth, at Dunmore, was another pioneer candidate for public patronage. Jonathan Dolph opened his house at Hyde Park as a tavern at an early date. Travelers were entertained at the homes of the Slocums and other of the more prominent early comers. In 1810 Philip Heermans opened a tavern at Hyde Park, in compliance with a demand for a public house at which town meetings and elections could be held.

HOW THE TOWNSHIP APPEARED IN 1804.

The following, condensed from a description of the Lackawanna valley furnished to Doctor Hollister by the late Elder John Miller, will be found of interest: Along the path from Keyes creek to Providence the woods retained their native aspect until the "Uncle Joe Griffin farm" came into view. There stood a log cabin with its roof running to the ground, occupied at that time by Reuben Taylor. Mr. La France held a possession right immediately above Taylor's, while the residence of Joseph Fellows, sen., was visible on the slope of the hill. Elder William Bishop's unhewn log cabin stood on the site of the residence of Hon. William Merrifield. Only one acre was cleared where Hyde Park afterward grew up. With the exception of the Indian clearing and a little additional chopping around it the central portion of "Capoose Meadow," or "Tripp's Flats," was covered with tall white pines. The road lay along the brow of the hill for nearly half a mile from Bishop's, when it reached the two-roomed log tavern of Stephen Tripp, whose distillery was near at hand. About midway between this point and the river, a little northeast of the present location of the Diamond mines, was a small tract of land only then recently purchased by Lewis Jones from John Gifford and William Tripp. Gifford was a son-in-law of Isaac Tripp, and lived there at the time. John Staples occupied the widow Griffin farm. The Von Storch clearing was not far distant. Between it and the cabin of Enoch Holmes was a belt of pine timber. Holmes's cabin stood on the site of the village of Providence. Where now stands the cottage of Daniel Silkman lived Henry Waderman. James Bagley lived on the flats now known as the Rockwell farm. Selah Mead cultivated a narrow interval at the mouth of Leggett's creek, while Mr. Hutchins occupied a patch of land rising from the brook, known now as the McDaniels farm. The next clearing was that of Ephraim Stevens. A traveler over that part of the township of Providence at present bounded by the city limits of Scranton would have seen, besides the improvements mentioned, only those at Slocum Hollow and elsewhere, previously described.

In 1828 hopes began to be entertained of the extension of the North Branch Canal from Pittston to Slocum Hollow. The expectations of the hardy veterans of the forest with regard to the canal having been chilled, "they still had in their minds an idea of a railroad. It was but the budding of something to come, and was called the Drinker Railroad; and, while it never came in the manner and shape originally looked for, still it carried along with its excitement a man by the name of William Henry, who never tired studying over it and planning out its route somewhere through 'Drinker's Beech.'" During his constant traveling and surveying over the proposed route he learned that the region contained large quantities of iron ore, which would some day enrich the country; but he foresaw that it would require strong hearts and willing hands to render it commercially available.

Mr. Henry, then a resident of Stroudsburg, was a man of enterprise, but of an obstinate will and inclined to over-sanguine views, a combination which prevented his ever attaining great success in life. When the possibilities of the Lackawanna region were revealed to him he determined that its resources should be developed, and to that end he worked untiringly. Mr. Drinker was the owner of the district known as "Beech Woods," or "Drinker's Beech." He was a man of perception and culture, and he was one of the leaders in the improvements of that early day. His mind was active in contemplating projects by which an outlet to the more extensively settled regions of Easton, New Jersey and New York could be reached, and in 1819 he explored the country from the Susquehanna at Pittston to the Delaware Water Gap, with a view of connecting the two points by a railroad, to be operated by hydraulic power where nature favored that means of locomotion, and by horses in sections not admitting the employment of that means. Of course the interests of Drinker's Beech were uppermost in his mind, though the contemplated route of the proposed road was by way of Slocum Hollow. "Messrs. Drinker and Henry, undismayed by the cold, solemn avowal of the inhabitants occupying the valleys of the Delaware and Susquehanna that no such road was possible, or necessary to their social condition, taking advan-age of the speculative wave of 1836, called the friends of the road to Easton at this time, says Hollister, "to devise a practical plan of action. Repeated exertions in this direction had hitherto yielded a measure of ridicule not calculated to inspire great hopes of success. At this meeting, prolonged for days, Mr. Henry assured the members of the board that if the old furnace of Slocum's at the 'Hollow' could be reanimated and sustained a few years, a village would spring up between the unguarded passes of the Moosic calling for means of communication with the seaboard less inhospitable and tardy than the loitering stage coach." The plan was a novel one, but it did not strike a majority of those present as promising any adequate return for the capital it would be necessary to invest. Mr. Clark states that "the boldness of the scheme staggered them all but one, whose name has hitherto received little mention at the hands of local writers" (though Dr. Hollister does him justice). Edward Armstrong, the one favorably inclined listener referred to, was a gentleman of considerable wealth and of great benevolence and courtesy, who resided on the Hudson river, and whose financial transactions occasionally called him to the Hollow.

The selection of a site for a furnace was left by Mr. Armstrong wholly to the discretion of Mr. Henry, the former offering to share with the latter any responsibility and financial investment and any consequent profit or loss; and Mr. Henry chose as the location of the furnace a spot a few rods above the ruins of Slocum's forge, a quarter of a mile from the mouth of Roaring brook—"the very spot," Mr. Clark remarks, "that would have gratified the spirit of Ebenezer Slocum." In March, 1840, Messrs. Henry and Armstrong purchased 503 acres of land of William Merrifield, Zenas Albro and William Ricketson for $8,000, a price remarkable at the time for its liberality. The purchase money was to be paid by Mr. Armstrong, who required the deed to be made in his name. Mr. Henry, by whom the details of the business were conducted, gave as the first payment a draft for $2,500 on Mr. Armstrong, in favor of the owners of the property, payable in thirty days. Mr. Armstrong died very suddenly before its maturity and his administrators, having little confidence in the Slocum Hollow scheme, requested Mr. Henry to forfeit the contract, regardless of their knowledge of the fact that Mr. Armstrong had gone into the venture deliberately and earnestly. Crushing as such an unexpected blow might well have been, it did not daunt the determination of Mr. Henry. Securing an extension on the obligation for thirty days, he proceeded to New Jersey to consult with parties who had wished to embark in an enterprise of the character of that to which he was devoting his energies. He met his son-in-law, Selden T. Scranton, at Oxford Furnace, New Jersey, and after some discussion persuaded him to assist him in carrying out the plans he and Mr. Armstrong had formed. Mr. Scranton enlisted his brother George W. Scranton in behalf of the enterprise, and they determined to accompany Mr. Henry to the Lackawanna valley. They started August 17th, 1840, but before leaving New Jersey prevailed upon Sanford Grant, of Belvidere, to follow them in the exploration. On both sides of Roaring brook, lying between two veins of coal, they found abundant quantities of ball or kidney ore visible. The surrounding country, and particularly Roaring brook and Hyde Park, were speedily explored, and the day after their arrival (August 20th, 1840) titles for the land purchased by Mr. Henry were executed and a company was formed, the members of which were George W. and Selden T. Scranton and Sanford Grant. It being desirable to further strengthen the company, Mr. Phillip Mattes was soon afterward admitted and the firm was announced as Scrantons, Grant & Co., William Henry being named as agent. The capital represented was $20,000, of which George W. and Selden T. Scranton invested $10,000, Sanford Grant $5,000 and Philip H. Mattes $5,000. In thirteen days from the date of the title to the land Mr. Henry employed Simon Ward to do the first day's work, at 75 cents, in the interest of what is now known as the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company. Mr. Ward has stated that he borrowed a crowbar of Mr. Elisha Hitchcock and commenced prying out stone at a spot near the north corner of the brick engine house of the furnace containing the vertical engines. The work of laying the foundation of the first furnace (afterwards for a time known as No. 1) was begun September 20th. Mr. Henry removed from Stroudsburg to Hyde Park, and under his management the work was pushed forward to completion.

SCRANTONS & PLATT.

The first and second efforts to start the furnace were abortive, owing to ignorance in the use of anthracite coal. The third and successful attempt was made in December, 1841. On the 18th of January, 1842, the furnace was blown in. The blast ended February 26th, and about seventy-five tons of iron had been made.

The ball ore found near at hand was found to be too expensive to mine. In the spring of 1841 a large amount of iron ore was discovered on the slope of the Moosic mountain, only about three miles distant, which with the intervening land was purchased by the company. The additional expense thus involved, in a great measure unprovided for, and the early difficulty in starting the furnace, exhausted the company's capital and plunged it in debt. At this juncture, Mr. Henry's management not being successful, George W. Scranton came in the fall of 1841, to assume the responsibility of a large portion of the business of the company. Sanford Grant had removed to the Hollow early in the previous spring, and Mr. Charles F. Mattes, son of Mr. P. H. Mattes, representing the latter's interest, in April. The most earnest efforts of the company had in many quarters been received with sneers. The enterprise was dubbed a "Jersey humbug." But the comparatively successful blast of the winter of 1841-42 inspired the public with more confidence, and those who had any interest in the vicinity began to anticipate good fortune as the result of what would follow.

One difficulty was the lack of facilities for transportation. It was necessary to haul the product in wagons either to Pittston, on the North Branch Canal, seven miles, or to Carbondale, on the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's line, fifteen miles, and the roads were bad. An added disadvantage was the financial embarrassment of the period, which menaced the destruction of manufacturing interests in all quarters. The first year's product of the furnace was shipped over the North Branch and Tide Water Canals, via Havre-de-Grace, to New York and Boston, at a time when the price of iron was depreciating daily. Since the commencement of the forge, in the fall of 1840, iron had fallen in value more than forty per cent., and Lackawanna valley iron had no reputation and no prestige in the markets. The credit system was common in the valley, but, having begun to lose faith in the future of the iron enterprise, the citizens of the surrounding country refused to accord it to the company. "The darkest period in the history of the partnership," says Hollister, "was seen in 1842-43. In a remunerative sense the iron speculation had proved a failure and left the treasury worse than empty. Without character, money or credit, its affairs began to look hopeless. Their notes given to individuals in lieu of money were daily offered to farmers at forty per cent. discount in the uncurrent tender of Pennsylvania currency. Every petty claim of indebtedness was urged and pressed before the justices of the township with an earnestness really annoying." In this strait Joseph H. and Erastus C. Scranton, then of Augusta, Georgia, interposed to avert the impending disaster by advancing funds to bolster up and sustain the enterprise; and September 7th, 1843, a new partnership was formed, by which the title Scrantons & Grant was retained and Joseph H. and Erastus C. Scranton were admitted to the firm without the withdrawal of any of the former members. But, notwithstanding the relief thus afforded, it became more and more plainly manifest that unless some more profitable element could be introduced, the business would continue to be a losing one and eventually fail; and the idea was conceived of the erection of a rolling mill and nail factory on Roaring brook below Nay Aug falls, which by converting the company's iron into bars and nails would enhance its value at least twenty-five per cent; though without additional capital this measure, however promising in its results, was impracticable. G. W. Scranton was sent to New York and succeeded in interesting Mr. John H. Howland in the project to the extent of $20,000. Later John Howland, a son of the above mentioned, became a partner and brought more capital to the company.

The erection of the rolling-mill and nail factory (which was begun in 1843 and finished in February, 1844,) by the aid of New York capital led to the subsequent investment in the Lackawanna coal field of $150,000,000 from the same quarter. In 1841 the company had erected a building which served the purposes of store and office and a dwelling for Mr. Grant. In the winter of 1844 and 1845 a brick store was built near the furnace, and occupied in 1845. In 1847 and 1848 it was enlarged, the main building then being 26 by 100 feet, with a wing 25 feet square. At various times the offices were enlarged until they occupied a floor space of 85 by 25 feet. The store was under the management of Mr. Grant. From time to time dwellings had been put up for employes as occasion required. In March, 1844, Selden T. Scranton took up his abode at the Lackawanna Iron Works, and his brother George W. Scranton returned to New Jersey and succeeded him in the management of Oxford furnace. In September, 1845, Joseph H. Scranton, who, as already narrated, had previously advanced money largely to sustain the wavering fortunes of the concern, bought out Mr. Grant and E. C. Scranton, and came to the valley to reside permanently early in 1847. Quiet, unobtrusive and indifferent as to who got the credit for what he did, so long as the work was done, he was a man of most indomitable energy, iron will and executive capacity; and, though new to the iron business, rapidly mastered its details and by his force of character, his wide and valuable acquaintance, at once assumed a leading position in the firm, quickly taking, by common consent, general charge of its manufacturing and mining operations and of the ever increasing new constructions, furnaces, mills and their adjuncts, to which these operations led. With his arrival on the scene began the era of permanent, solid construction, and of steady growth based on sound judgment. Except some parts of the old store, little remains of work built previous to his coming.

In 1845 the first T rail was manufactured in the United States. The attention of the company was directed to this new branch of the iron industry during the construction of the New York and Erie Railway. Thus far rails had been imported from England by the Erie contractors at a cost of $80 per ton. The Scrantons agreed with the Erie Railway Company to furnish 12,000 tons of iron rail, to weigh fifty-six pounds to the yard, and be delivered to the railway authorities at the mouth of the Lackawaxen during 1847 and 1848 at $70 and $80 per ton. This important undertaking made another demand for increased capital, which was loaned to the Messrs. Scranton, on their personal security, to the amount of $100,000 by several wealthy capitalists, who had the success of the Erie Railway at heart. New machinery (which had been carted by mules sixty or seventy miles over mountains and through forests) was put into their rolling-mills. "Until now," writes Hollister, "the means of transportation to market of the now largely increased annual product of iron remained as difficult as at the commencement, with the exception of the extension of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's railroad from Carbondale to Archbald, which reduced the hauling by teams to nine miles; the iron ore was carted three miles and a half from the mines; the limestone and extra pig iron needed by the mill, purchased at Danville, drawn from the canal at Pittston; and the railroad iron, now the principal product of the works, was drawn to Archbald upon heavy wagons, requiring the use of over four hundred horses and mules. Even this large force, gathered from the farmers of Blakeley, Providence and Lackawanna, sometimes at the expense of agricultural interests, was able to move the first rail only with provoking tardiness." The first 1,500 tons of the 12,000 contracted were delivered at the place designated. The balance, in accordance with an amendment to the contract, were delivered at different points on the line of the Delaware division of the road, thus enabling the railway company to construct that portion of the road four days before a date specified at which, if it should be so constructed, the State of New York was to appropriate $3,000,000 toward the completion of the railroad. The promptness and energy of the Scranton company thus, as Mr. Loder, president of the Erie company, afterward avowed, saved the railway company from failure or suspension; and at the same time not only brought the Scranton works into notice but aided to hasten the day when they would be no longer obliged to reach the markets with such tardiness and at such an undue expense as they had had to incur heretofore. In 1846 Mr. J. C. Platt, a brother-in-law of J. H. Scranton, was admitted to the firm and assumed the position of store-keeper, and the company was reorganized November 7th, 1846; George W., Joseph H. and S. T. Scranton and J. C. Platt being the general and several wealthy gentlemen of New York the special partners of the firm of Scrantons & Platt, the capital being increased by the reorganization. October 1st, 1848, a new partnership was entered into, which included the same general and more special partners. G. W. Scranton gradually withdrew from active participation in the affairs of the iron works to look after the railroad interests of the partnership, and, later, to enter political life, and after 1850 had little to do with the business. When, in 1853, the firm of Scrantons & Platt was merged in the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, and S. T. Scranton was made president, Joseph H. Scranton took the place of general superintendent, and pushed actively to completion much projected and unfinished work. When the company was again and for the last time brought to the very brink of ruin during the panic of 1857, Mr. S. T. Scranton having resigned and returned once more to New Jersey (where he later started and managed the well-known Oxford Iron Company, which failed so disastrously in 1879), Joseph H. Scranton was elected president of the company, with full charge of its interests, financial and manufacturing. Never was corporation more fortunate in the choice of an officer. With immense capacity for work, devoted to and delighting in his business, master of its details, and with a fierce determination to make it succeed, he touched the corpse of the company's credit and it was reanimated. The company was quickly relieved from its embarrassments, its debts were paid, its bonds taken up, it commenced the payment of dividends to its long suffering stockholders, and long before the fourteen years of Mr. Scranton's administration were terminated by death he had the satisfaction of knowing that the stock, which when he assumed the presidency was all but valueless, was selling in open market at 300; that the concern had not one dollar of debt; that he had raised the product of the mills from 10,000 tons of rails to 50,000 tons, and had the construction of another still larger mill commenced, which later in the hands of his son was to increase the capacity of the concern 80,000 tons more; and that the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company not only ranked as one of the two largest, but was also generally known in the trade as the best paying and most ably managed concern of its kind in the United States.

Upon Mr. Scranton's death, in 1872, he was succeeded in the presidency of the Iron Company by Moses Taylor, of New York; and in the management of affairs at Scranton till September, 1874, by his brother-in-law, J. C. Platt. Then Mr. Scranton's son W. W. Scranton was made general manager, and he still remains so. During his administration the Bessemer steel works have been built, the steel rolling mill has been completed, the blast furnaces made larger, the new blast engine house built, additions made to the foundry, machine shop and collieries, and the productive capacity of the concern considerably more than doubled; so that it ranks to-day among the seven or eight large iron works of the world.

Owing to the death of Joseph H. Scranton and his cousin George, and to the removal to New Jersey of S. T. Scranton and G. W. Scranton's sons, the sons of Mr. Joseph H. Scranton, Joseph A. and W. W. Scranton, are the only men of the name now residing in the city.

THE BOROUGH OF PROVIDENCE.

The village of Providence, two miles from Scranton, although incorporated into the first and second wards of the city, preserves its name, its post-office and other independent features. As a village its growth was tardy until 1826, when it consisted of but seven dwellings and was called "Razorville" or "the corners."

EARLY INTERESTS.

Large numbers of sheep were raised in the township, and the inhabitants, depending wholly upon their own woolen goods for raiment, early gave attention to carding and fulling mills. The hardy pioneer women were ever busy in dealing out their warp and filling for frocks, coats, trowsers and flannel petticoats, and these mills were regarded as equally important to the weal of the neighborhood with the grist-mill and the saw-mill. A carding and fulling mill was built a little above Providence in 1808 by John Watres, and passed into the hands of Messrs. Carter & Miller in 1841. The earlier exports of Providence were grain, lumber and whiskey. Of the latter a large quantity was manufactured at Tripp's still, half a mile below the village.

During 1826 Colonel Henry W. Drinker, of "Drinker's Beech" gave a brisk impulse to the village when he, with trifling State aid, crossed the valley with the Philadelphia and Great Bend turnpike and opened communication with New York city by a tri-weekly stage. Passengers could then go from Providence to

New York by way of Stroudsburg in three days. The Lackawanna was first bridged here by Drinker in 1826.

BUSINESS PROGRESS—POST-OFFICE.

On what has since become the southwest corner of Market and Main streets, in Providence, in 1828 Messrs. Elisha S. Potter and Michael McKeal opened a country store. During the same year Mr. Potter and Nathaniel Cottrill bought fourteen acres of the Enoch Holmes tract, which included the water privileges of that locality. Not long subsequently Mr. Cottrill purchased the interest of the late Mr. Potter, and thus controlling the whole property, in 1829 erected a grist-mill upon it. He also built a tavern, still standing and known as the Bristol House, in 1828. In 1830 another hotel was erected in the village.

The second store was on the corner opposite the Potter & McKeal store, by Alexander Jeffreys, an eccentric Scotch bachelor, who filled it with such a heterogeneous stock of merchandise as has perhaps never before or since been gathered under one roof. Dr. Hollister states that "books, drugs, hard and soft ware and every conceivable thing from a pulpit to a pig-yoke stood upon the shelves." The drugs were sold in 1843 to Dr. Benjamin H. Throop.

The post-office in Slocum Hollow was removed to Providence in 1829. John Vaughn, jr., was appointed postmaster. The following named gentlemen have since been postmaster of the village: Voltaire Searles, J. R. Bloom, H. Reichardt, D. S. Koon, S. Easterbrooks, H. Hollister, B. P. Couch, J. R. Bloom and H. Roberts, in the order named, the latter being the present incumbent (1880).

FIRST CHURCH—LEADING CITIZENS—A FLOOD.

In the days of its infancy the village laid no especial claim to piety, and yet one of the first churches in the valley was planned, raised and partially completed there when the great hurricane of 1834 blew it down and swept the rafters half a mile away. It was never rebuilt.

During the few years succeeding 1840 Providence developed an extensive country trade. Among the merchants then or subsequently in business there may be named James J. Clayton, John Vaughn, Bennett & Weaver, Artemas Miller, Sylvanus Easterbrooks, Charles T. Atwater, W. W. Winton, Winton & Dunning, John Harding, William M. Champion & Co., Gardner & Couch, B. H. Throop, Kennedy & Osterhout, Silas Osterhout, Osterhout Brothers, Samuel Wycoff, Mulley & Benjamin, Ambrose Mulley, H. B. Rockwell, Gillespie Brothers, Von Storch & Co. and Rockwell & Hurlburt. The first newspaper in the present city was established at Providence in 1845, and the last journalistic venture in the city to date was begun there in 1879. A temporary check was given the growth of the village about 1845 by an overflowing of the Lackawanna which swept away the dam and carried away the bridge and Jerison White's ax factory and several other buildings, causing a great destruction of property. In the summer of 1866 the street railway between Scranton and Providence was opened.

CIVIL HISTORY.

Providence borough was incorporated by act of Assembly March 14th, 1849. The following were the first borough officers: J. R. Wint, burgess; W. W. Winton, S. Gardner, Asa Coursen and Ira Tripp, councilmen; Francis Fuller, constable; David S. Koon, justice of the peace; Theodore Von Storch, assessor; Jacob R. Bloom and William H. H. Crandall, inspectors of election; Nathaniel Cottrill, judge of election; and C. T. Atwater, S. Easterbrooks and D. R. Randall, school directors. The succeeding burgesses were as follows: N. D. Green, 1850; A. B. Dunning, 1851, 1852; Sanford Grant, 1853; E. Leach, 1854; Theodore Von Storch, 1855-57; E. S. M. Hill, 1858; E. Leach, 1859; Daniel Silkman, 1860; Theodore Von Storch, 1861, and re-elected each subsequent year until borough elections ceased to be held on account of the incorporation of the borough with the city of Scranton.

The justices of the peace commissioned in Providence borough in different years were as follows: David S. Koon, 1850; E. Leach, 1850, 1855, 1860, 1865; Theodore Von Storch, 1854, 1859; G. W. Miller, 1865.

HYDE PARK BOROUGH.

The Heermans House, or "old white tavern," has been referred to as long a place of popular resort. At this place the elections in Providence were often held before the boroughs of Providence, Scranton, Hyde Park and Dunmore were formed, and it was the scene of many a fierce and exciting contest. It was the changing place and dinner station on the stage route between Wilkes-Barre and Carbondale, and after the establishment of the daily line of four-horse coaches presented a lively appearance about noonday. Under the proprietorship of Norvel D. Green, and afterward of John Merrifield and Samuel Slocum, it achieved a notable reputation as a hostelry. The second tavern built in Hyde Park was erected by Anson H. Wood in 1831, on the north corner of Main and Franklin streets, on land now owned by the Catholic church. It was known for many years as "the yellow tavern," and was burned in 1868. The first school-house in Hyde Park was erected in 1816 or thereabout, on the westerly corner of Main street and that upon which the public school-house is located. It served several years as a meeting-house, and Elder Richmond often held meetings there.

PROGRESS OF SETTLEMENT.

As late as 1820 Hyde Park had not attained to the size of a village. A blacksmith and wagon shop stood opposite the Heermans tavern. Between that and Mr. Washburn's, who came during that year, timber grew on both sides of the street; opposite Washburn's Zephaniah Knapp lived; in the next house, below and across the way from the school-house, lived Robert Merrifield, who

HON. WILLIAM MERRIFIELD.

Hon. William Merrifield, prominently connected with the early history and growth of the Lackawanna valley, was born at Pine Plains, Dutchess county, N. Y., April 22nd, 1806. His ancestry upon his mother's side were of German descent; upon his father's English. His great-grandfather, Robert Merrifield, was born in England, in 1703, and emigrated with a brother or brothers to America, settling in Rhode Island. His grandfather William, an only son, was born in the latter State, in 1752, and came with his father to Dutchess county, N. Y. He was a school teacher and continued to live in Dutchess and Columbia counties until his death, in 1836. Robert, father of William the subject of the present sketch, was born in Columbia county, in 1778; emigrated with his family to Pennsylvania in 1819, and settled in the then township of Providence, subsequently Hyde Park. Here he engaged in the business of clearing away the forest and farming. He was assisted by his son William, whose axe in boyhood helped to fell the gigantic trees that once towered where now are hundreds of human habitations. Robert Merrifield died universally beloved, at the advanced age of nearly eighty-seven years.

The education of William was limited to district schools, but his mind was sufficiently stored to enable him to teach, and for five winters he engaged in this occupation. While teaching at Wyoming he married Almira, sister of the late William Swetland, and soon after engaged in the mercantile business at Centre Moreland, Luzerne county. Before going there he had been instrumental in getting a post-office established at Hyde Park, and was appointed the first postmaster in 1831. He remained at Centre Moreland about one year, returned to Hyde Park, was reappointed postmaster and held the office about ten years. At the same time he erected a store building, and followed the business of a merchant almost uninterruptedly until 1864.

He early foresaw the advantages of this section as a mining and manufacturing center, and in 1837 became a joint owner of the main portion of the lands where is now built the central part of Scranton. He at once commenced operations, through correspondence and otherwise, toward calling the attention of capitalists to this point; and in 1838 the tract was disposed of to Colonel George W. Scranton and others, by whose energy and perseverance it received the impetus that has made it a flourishing city.

In 1843 he was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, to which he was returned for three successive terms. As a legislator he was regarded as a safe adviser, his opinion being frequently sought and highly respected. Besides serving on other committees he was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means; at one session was chairman of the Committee on Banks, at another on Inland Navigation and Public Improvements, at the time considered among the most responsible positions in the House. His struggles for the welfare of the Lackawanna valley exhibit him on the legislative records as the ablest champion ever sent from this locality. This is particularly true because of the intriguing attempts made at that time by other sections of the State to burden the anthracite region with onerous taxation. A speech upon this question made by him during the session of 1846 was considered a masterly effort, replete with good sense and full of such a well considered array of statistical information as to virtually effect the defeat of the measure. But his greatest effort was in behalf of the proposed new county of Lackawanna, the bill for which he succeeded in passing through the lower house, and was only defeated in the Senate by a tie vote. He was an earnest worker in favor of the extension of the North Branch Canal; also for the project of slackwater navigation on the Susquehanna and Lackawanna rivers with a view of opening up the Lackawanna coal fields.

He was an enthusiastic friend and supporter of the public schools of his neighborhood, and contributed liberally toward the erection of the churches. He officiated as school director at the time of the building of the first frame school-house in Hyde Park, and again during the construction of the more recent graded school building. He was among the first to give an impetus to the growth of the town, by plotting his tract of land, in the central portion thereof, into village lots, subsequently laying out another tract in the westerly part, known as "Merrifield's plot of lots in Keyser's valley."

In 1856 he was elected associate judge of Luzerne county, serving at the time the late lamented Judge Conyngham presided, with whom he held the most pleasant relations. He had been an attentive reader of law books, and while occupying this position his general knowledge of law came well in play, as he was called upon to hear important matters at chambers, in the disposition of which he acquitted himself with ability.

In 1870 he was chosen president of the Hyde Park bank, which during his life was a flourishing institution, enjoying the confidence of the entire community. At his death the board of directors, at a meeting called upon that occasion, unanimously passed a flattering series of resolutions, expressing their confidence in his ability and integrity, and deploring their great loss.

As a politician he belonged to the old Democratic school, and was ever known as a conscientious advocate of purity in public affairs, his wishes always being for the welfare and prosperity of the nation. The public offices that were conferred upon him were given in every instance without solicitation upon his part, and were invariably administered to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

Judge Merrifield was emphatically the architect of his own fortune. Aside from the financial ability that had made him comfortable in his declining years, he was a ripe scholar in all that pertains to an English education. He was a profound historian and well versed in science and general literature; indeed, he was so diligent a reader even after having passed his three score and ten that it is believed to have been the predisposing cause of his death.

On the 4th of June, 1877, after an illness of a little more than two months, he died, universally respected and mourned by the entire community; and as the solemn funeral cortege passed through the principal street business was entirely suspended as a token of respect to his memory.

There were few men who possessed more fully the entire confidence of acquaintances, his chief characteristics being those of honesty and integrity and a conscientious discharge of all duties entrusted to him. Not a breath of suspicion ever tainted his character, and he will long be remembered for his manly virtues and kindness of heart. It was in the home circle, around his own fireside, that his intelligence and goodness shone pre-eminently, and made the father and husband the idol of his home. His life presents a record which proves conclusively that the right road to success in life is that of unceasing labor and undeviating integrity.

COLONEL W. N. MONIES.

Scotland has contributed many an active brain to the development of American resources, but none more active, earnest, or industrious than that of William N. Monies. Nurtured in an atmosphere that gave to the world a Sir Walter Scott, a Robert Burns and a Thomas Carlyle, his nature seems to have imbibed the imagery of the author of Kenilworth, the warm-heartedness of the "Bard of Ayr," and the common sense of the admirer of Frederick the Great, together with his hearty detestation of shams. At this time of writing, in the year 1880, when he stands in the vigor and prime of life, one would hardly think that the possessor of such a robust manhood and genial nature had such an eventful history. There are few men who, having passed through so many dangers, borne so many afflictions, encountered such a series of reverses and successes, can, with William N. Monies, "look back and smile at perils past." Yet, despite his checkered career, attrition with life's battles seems to have brought out the brighter qualities of his nature and given them an added lustre instead of wearing them out as is the case with the majority of men.

William N. Monies was born in the village of New Dully, Ayrshire, Scotland, on the 10th of May, 1827; attended the village school at the age of four, and was apprenticed to a baker at ten years of age. His young mind gave evidence of early development. His school days were full of earnest work, and foreshadowed the activity which has ever since characterized an unusually busy life. At the age of eighteen he began business on his own responsibility in the town of Dalmeilington, in his native shire, and carried it on successfully for two years. His ambition and inherent love for a wider sphere of action naturally prompted him to turn his thoughts toward the United States, and he came to this country in 1849. His wife, Mary Kirk, crossed the ocean in the same ship with him, and the young lovers crowned their romantic trip by being united in marriage on their arrival in Carbondale, Pa.

On settling in Carbondale Mr. Monies obtained employment with Andrew Law at his trade as a baker, earning $6 a week, and worked there for six months. At the end of that time he started business on his own responsibility in the same town, and carried it on until 1852; when, becoming interested in the gold discoveries of California, his natural love for adventure led him to organize an expedition by the overland route to the rich region toward which so many were hurrying. All the sailing vessels found the voyage a tedious and highly perilous one at that time. It required no small share of courage in those days to dare the dangers of a journey of such magnitude and involving so many hazards and hardships. Yet the indomitable pluck and heroism of Mr. Monies led him to get together his hardy little band of eighteen and prepare for the journey. When everything was in readiness for the start so gloomy did the outlook appear that the expedition was abandoned by all his companions with the exception of five, and with these he started out for the land of gold. The entire population of Carbondale turned out to wish the little party God speed on their dangerous and supposed foolhardy journey. The gold hunters proceeded to Great Bend, the nearest railway station, by Morrison's team, and then took passage on an emigrant train to Dunkirk, N. Y., whence they crossed Lake Erie in a somewhat primitive boat, such as was then in use. Then proceeding by the Michigan Central to Chicago, they took a canal boat to La Salle and went by steam to St. Louis. From this point they journeyed by boat on the Missouri river to St. Joseph. Here they remained a few days in a log cabin preparing for the roughest part of the journey. They purchased twelve oxen and two wagons, loaded their traps, laid in provisions, and struck out through the Indian country now known as Nebraska. The journey lasted five months and four days, leading through a wild and desolate region. The history of this adventure alone would fill a volume with hairbreadth escapes and incidents of a thrilling character. Suffice it to say that the party arrived in California almost devoid of clothing, footsore, hungry, yet full of hope. Three hundred miles before reaching California the party was out of provisions, and managed itself as best it could by trading and giving such assistance as it could to others found in distress by the way. On reaching California Mr. Monies obtained employment at his trade, receiving $5 a day, and continued to work at it a year, after which he engaged in river-mining for gold. Here he invested his savings in the construction of dikes and dams, which were no sooner completed than they were swept away by a freshet. Thus the project in which his earnings and energies were concentrated was suddenly annihilated, and he was once more penniless. This incident broke up the party. By the aid of some friends Mr. Monies was enabled to take the contract for a hotel, and in a few months cleared $1,100. The desire to see his wife then caused him to turn his thoughts homeward, and he returned to Carbondale, where he received an enthusiastic welcome. After remaining at home a few weeks he went back to California, once more engaging as a baker on the steamship "Yankee Blade." In these two adventures occurred the greatest struggles of his life, but he rose triumphant above all adversities and came through the ordeal unscathed. On reaching California the second time the subject of our sketch started a bakery and boarding-house in the gold region, and in less than a year and a half secured a handsome competency. He then sold out his business and returned to Pennsylvania. When he reached Carbondale he engaged in business, and had considerable success. The spring following his return he was elected poormaster of the city, and three years later he went into the milling business at Providence—now a part of the city of Scranton—with Joseph Gillespie. This was in 1858. In 1859 he was elected Burgess of the borough of Providence, and in 1860, feeling desirous of seeing his native land, he returned to Scotland on a visit to the scenes of his childhood. After a short absence he returned and in the spring of 1862, when the civil war was raging, his heart beat in sympathy with the cause of the Union, and he organized a company in less than three days. Hastening to Harrisburg, he was appointed captain of Company B 130th Pennsylvania volunteers. The enlistment was for nine months' service, but eleven months elapsed before Captain Monies's company was mustered out, after having engaged in the stormy struggles of Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and many exciting skirmishes. He then came back to the "music of the mill." The war still raged, and the life of the Republic was threatened. Governor Curtin called for volunteers to defend the State. In twenty-four hours after the famous proclamation was issued Captain Monies was in Harrisburg with 130 men, offering his sword and his services once more to his country. He had the distinguished honor of being the first to respond to the call of the war governor. The morning after his arrival at the State capital men began to pour in from all parts of Pennsylvania, and by the recommendation of the governor and adjutant general at a meeting of the officers Captain Monies was elected colonel of a regiment. The regiment was at once formed, and numbered the 30th Pennsylvania volunteers, afterwards known as the "Monies Tigers." At the skirmishes of Oyster Point and Carlisle the "Tigers" rendered effective service, for which they received the thanks of the governor. In about three months the emergency that called the regiment into existence culminated at Gettysburg, and Colonel Monies returned to the peaceful pursuit of milling, which he carried on with his characteristic energy. In 1865 he purchased the bakery of Mr. Charles Schlager, corner of Lackawanna and Washington avenues, Scranton. At that time he disposed of his interest in the mill to his son-in-law, Mr. John B. Gillespie, and formed a partnership in the baking business with Mr. Lewis Pugh, under the firm name Monies & Pugh, which still exists.

In the year 1869 he was elected Mayor of the city of Scranton for three years, an honor all the greater considering the fact that he was a Republican and the city had a Democratic majority of 1,200. He served as mayor with great credit during one of the most trying periods of the city's history, growing out of the labor troubles. Meanwhile he continued his business and engaged with his partner and others in the purchase of large tracts of coal lands, realizing handsome profit from the investment. In 1874 he again visited his native country, and made a tour of the continent. His love of enterprise had previously led him, in company with several others, into the purchase of a foundry at Pittston, which has grown rapidly and at this writing is one of the largest and best equipped stove foundries in Pennsylvania, Colonel Monies being president of the company. The firm Monies & Pugh has also invested largely in silver mines in the celebrated San Juan country, Colorado. Colonel Monies went in person to examine and locate them. The trip was made in company with Governor Hoyt, of Pennsylvania, and others, and several members of the party were severely injured by the upsetting of the coach and the running away of the horses in crossing the mountains. In the forty-years fight for the creation of the new county of Lackawanna from a portion of Luzerne Colonel Monies was an active participant from time to time, and when the new county act was finally passed he was appointed the first treasurer of the county. His management of its financial affairs was signalized by honesty and efficiency, and at the close of his office his accounts with the State department were settled to the cent. Subsequently he was nominated for the same office by the Republican party, and elected by a handsome vote. The Supreme Court of the State decided that there was no election at the time, and his appointment continued over the term. It was fortunate for the new county to have a man of such sterling worth for its first financial office. His books were admirably kept, and his accounts with State and county closed satisfactorily on the last day of his term, thus setting a noble example for his successors in office. After settling up his affairs as treasurer of Lackawanna county he took an extended tour in 1880 through Scotland, England and Ireland, and his impressions of the trip, which have found their way into print, are decidedly interesting and original.

Colonel Monies is now actively engaged in pushing forward his numerous business enterprises. He is well known and highly esteemed not only in the Wyoming and Lackawanna valleys but throughout Pennsylvania, and even beyond the borders of the Keystone State. He is regarded by hosts of friends as a social, pleasant gentleman. He is in the fullest sense a public-spirited, representative man, who has won his way through "iron fortune" to a position of competency and esteem. But success has not spoiled him, for his warm heart and generous disposition still stamp him as one of Nature's noblemen.

came in 1819. Just below lived old "Squire" Joseph Fellows and his sons Benjamin and Henry. Above the tavern on the right hand side of the road, about half way between Jackson and Franklin streets, was a dwelling house; the Bishop house had been destroyed by fire. Farther up were the homes of Preserved Taylor and Holden Tripp; and there may have been one or two other families in the neighborhood. Shortly after this period Philip Heermans, with the assent of his brother-in-law Joseph Fellows, who resided in Albany, laid out a few lots of about ten acres each, which measure may be said to have marked the commencement of the village. It received a name between 1825 and 1830. Harvey Chase, who came from Hyde Park, Dutchess county, N. Y., lettered the name "Hyde Park" on a board and stuck it up in the yard of one of the neighbors, from which time the village was known by that name.

THE POST-OFFICE—EARLY STORE.

July 14th, 1832, a post-office was established under the now well known name, and William Merrifield was appointed postmaster. Previously there had been a post-office at Slocum's, on the Scranton side of the river, but it had now been abandoned, and the postmaster was directed to receive the papers and key to the mail pouch from Pittston. The appointment was resigned shortly after, and Robert Merrifield was commissioned, under date of August 9th, 1832. William Merrifield was reappointed June 5th, 1834, and held the office about nine years. The first store was erected in 1833 by William Merrifield, the old building yet standing on Main street opposite the Methodist church. The Judge Merrifield residence was built about the same time. Prior to that Charles Atwater had kept a few goods for sale, occupying a dwelling house near where the McKeever block now stands; but practically Merrifield's was the pioneer mercantile establishment in the place. The second store was built by David Benedict about 1836, where the McGarrah block now stands. Here he conducted business for a year or two, when he moved down to the Fellows corners. There he was succeeded by William Blackman & O. P. Clark. This was about 1840, when the village contained, besides the church and school-house, two stores, two taverns, two blacksmith and wagon shops, a cabinet and one or two shoemaking establishments, and not more than twenty dwellings.

MEN OF ENTERPRISE.

April 4th, 1833, Calvin Washburn donated the land on the north corner of Main and the street leading to the school building, where was built the first meeting house. It was generally recognized as belonging to the "Christian" church, but other denominations were permitted to worship in it. Rev. Wm. Lane, a noted and able "Christian" preacher, was at one time the regular occupant of the pulpit, but did not remain longer than two years. Rev. William K. Mott was an early settler in Hyde Park, and preached in this church most of the time during its occupancy.

Dr. Silas B. Robinson at first settled in Hyde Park, living on the easterly side of Main street, about midway between Troy street and Lackawanna avenue. Here he remained about ten years, when he moved a mile and a half up the road toward Providence village. From that time there was no resident physician until Dr. Pier came in 1846.

Charles H. Silkman, subsequently a noted lawyer and politician, came about 1835, and shortly after married the daughter of Holden Tripp. At this time the value of the coal deposits was little appreciated, all the lands about having no money value other than for farming purposes. Silkman and William Merrifield devoted a great deal of their leisure time, by correspondence and otherwise, towards drawing attention to the great wealth buried underneath the valley, and the advantages existing at and near this section for manufacturing. In 1838 Mr. Merrifield, William Ricketson and Zenas Albro became the purchasers of the site of the iron works and the largest portion of Scranton proper. The development of this property by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, to the pioneers of which it was sold by the gentlemen named, is the realization of their hopes for the future of the locality. From the time of that transaction Hyde Park improved slowly; but it was not until the northern division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad was commenced that the village increased in size and population with much rapidity. In 1850 William Merrifield and B. S. Tripp, who owned adjoining lands, embracing nearly all the property lying between Main and Wyoming streets east and west and Jackson street and Lackawanna avenue north and south, laid them out into village lots, most of which were readily sold. Mr. Merrifield prevailed upon his brother-in-law, William Swetland, who was the owner of the Mount Pleasant colliery property, to lay out a portion of the same in lots in 1852, from which time the growth of the place has been steady and rapid. Edmund Heermans was an active and earnest worker for the benefit of Hyde Park; he it was that induced his uncle Joseph Fellows to plot that body of land embracing nearly all the southern portion of the town, and he made extensive improvements which had a tendency to facilitate its progress. Similar measures on a more or less liberal scale were projected by W. W. Winton at a later date. The population of Hyde Park is made up partially of Americans, Irish and Germans, but mostly of Welsh; indeed, the latter people have given the place a distinctive characteristic. By their prudence, exemplary conduct and general intelligence they have done much to add to its welfare and prosperity.

CIVIL HISTORY.

The borough of Hyde Park was incorporated May 4th, 1852. Judge William Merrifield was the first burgess and probably served two years. According to the records of the borough Joseph Fellows was elected to that position in 1854 and re-elected in 1855 and 1856. His successors have been as follows: 1857, William Smith; 1858, Joseph Fellows 2nd; 1859, 1860, 1864 74, E. Heermans; 1861, Joseph T. Fellows; 1875-79, A. B. Stevens. Owing to unsettled local business the borough organization of Hyde Park is continued, though the territory embraced within its limits is incorporated with the city of Scranton. As soon as the outstanding business is adjusted borough elections will be discontinued.

The following named persons were commissioned as justices of the peace in Hyde Park borough from the date of its incorporation to that of its inclusion in the city: William Pier, 1853; William P. Stephens, 1854; Sheffield Reynolds, 1857; C. H. Wells, 1858; Hiram Stark, 1862; S. Reynolds, 1863.

THE BOROUGH OF SCRANTON.

The beginning and growth of the village among the hills which afterwards became known as the borough of Scranton were coincident with the inception and progress of the successive enterprises which culminated in the formation of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company. At the time Messrs. Scrantons, Grant & Co. began their initial operations at the Hollow there were only five dwellings, a cooper shop; a school-house, a saw-mill and a grist-mill there. These and the debris of the old forge constituted all that then existed of the subsequent important borough of Scranton; and within the present city limits and those of Dunmore borough there were only two stores, two taverns and twenty-eight dwellings. Gradually after the iron works were established there sprung into existence near by a rude row of houses on either side of an equally rough and unsightly roadway extending from the site of the Adams Avenue Methodist church to the entrance of the railway tunnel near the Lehigh and Susquehanna depot; which from the fact, it is said, that the women living along it often appeared outside their doors in groups all clad in their home-made petticoats, each of which was very like all the others, which with only one other garment from the waist to the shoulders completed, so far as was observable, the costume of each, came to be called "Petticoat Alley." The course of this early street was nearly coincident with a portion of that of the present Lackawanna avenue.

VILLAGE NAMES—THE POST-OFFICE.

The village had a population of 100 in 1840, and was laid out on a circumscribed scale in 1841 by Captain Stott, a Carbondale civil engineer. William Henry, whose sterling perseverance had sowed the seeds of progress at the Hollow, was deeply interested in the election of William Henry Harrison to the presidency of the United States, and in honor of his favorite candidate he gave the embryo city the name of Harrison in 1845, at which time the population was 500. The people were not ready to adopt it and the old name of Slocum Hollow still clung to the locality, even after it had attained a population of 2,730 and been rechristened in honor of its active founders Scranton; which name, likewise, did not fit nicely to the lingual capacities of the denizens of the Hollow, although it had been given to the post-office upon its re-establishment, after much difficulty had been overcome, April 1st, 1850. The postmaster was Mr. John W. Moore, for many years a merchant and now a retired resident of Scranton. Mr. J. C. Platt received the first letter and the first newspaper through the office. January 27th, 1851, the name of the post-office was shortened to Scranton; and so the borough and city have justly been known since. Postmasters since Mr. Moore have been appointed as follows: Joel Amsden and B. H. Throop, 1853; L. S. Fuller, 1857; D. H. Jay, 1861; William H. Pier, 1865; James S. Slocum, 1869; J. A. Scranton, 1876. The post-office was opened in 1850 in a building near the iron works. It was removed to Amsden's block early in 1853, and soon afterward to a building which stood on the ground now occupied by the tobacco house of Messrs. Clark & Snover. In 1855 it was removed to Fuller's drug store; in 1857 to the corner of Wyoming avenue and Center street; in July of the same year to Fuller's drug store; in 1861 to a building on the site of the First National Bank; in 1864 to a building on the site of 310 Lackawanna avenue; in 1865 to the corner of Center street and Penn avenue; and in 1871 to its present location on Wyoming avenue.

GENERAL PROGRESS.

The road between Scranton and Providence is one of the oldest highways within the city limits. It formerly ran by way of the Presbyterian church to the locality of the Forest House stables, across the lower outlet of the swamp, diagonally to the present course of the city streets. Penn avenue was cut out after Lackawanna avenue was opened, and it is said that the stumps were visible in the street for years. Ten years after the first circumscribed survey of the village, as it then was, by Captain Stott, another and a more extensive survey (which was afterward adopted by the borough authorities as the survey of the borough) was made by Joel Amsden, under direction of Mr. J. C. Platt, of the firm of Scrantons & Platt, proprietors of the site of the village, in 1850-51; and to the foresight of Mr. Platt and the able judgment of Mr. Amsden must credit be given for the width and regular arrangement of the streets. The first sale of lots was effected in the fall of 1851 to Messrs. Grant, Champin & Chase, who purchased two lots on the north corner of Wyoming and Lackawanna avenues for $2,000.

The first brick building of any importance erected in Scranton was the Wyoming House, which was justly regarded as the boldest architectural attempt in the valley. Says Mr. Clark:

"The spirit of the Iron and Coal Company exhibited its daring and its faith in the future of the young city when, in 1850, it planted in the forest the largest hotel outside of the great cities of that day. During the same year Messrs. Grant, Champin & Chase erected a brick structure on the corner opposite, now used as a wholesale clothing store by Messrs. Cramer & Goldsmith. About the same time the corner below, now known as the Coyne House, was finished by Mr. Lewis. The next building in the block was the one which to-day is the lowest one in the row, occupied by Jonas Lauer as a clothing store. Before these had been built Dr. Throop had erected a small house in the pines, on the location recently occupied by Kent's market. Where Doud's hardware store now stands there commenced a row of one-story frame houses, extending up nearly to the residence of Colonel George W. Scranton, now occupied by his son-in-law, Mr. G. A. Fuller."

The Amsden block, as the wooden structure at the corner of Lackawanna and Washington avenues came to be known afterwards, was erected in 1851 and 1852, and occupied during the latter year, the rear portion as a dwelling by Joel Amsden, the proprietor, and three small stores in front by lessees. In the corner store was opened in 1853 the first book-store in Scranton, by Mr. Amsden and Dr. Leavitt. The adjoining building up the street was erected a little later by Jacob Lehman, who lived in the back part and rented the front as a grocery. The other structures now constituting the row were built soon afterwards. The pioneer drug store was erected by Dr. B. H. Throop, where Clark & Snover's tobacco establishment now stands. The store was kept a short time by Doctors Throop and Sherrerd, and was sold to Messrs. L. S. & E. C. Fuller, who are well-known dealers in the same line to-day. The next year after the erection of the Wyoming House Simon Jones put up in the woods the first house on Penn avenue, at the corner of Spruce street. The pioneer on Mifflin avenue was Mr. Dotterer, and on one occasion, when the woods in that locality were burning, the people had to turn out and fight the fire in order to save his house from destruction. W. N. Jenks's gothic cottage at the corner of Wyoming avenue and Spruce street was built in 1854. A brick store was opened at the corner of Lackawanna and Washington avenues by Charles Schlager, January 9th, 1856. July 11th, 1857, J. C. Platt's house, on Ridge row and Jefferson avenue, was completed and occupied, two days after that of C. F. Mattes on Jefferson avenue. The residence of W. W. Manness, on the same avenue, was completed and occupied December 4th, 1856. Mr. Manness's was the first, and Mr. Mattes's the second family on that street. The residence of James Archbald, on Ridge row, was occupied August 8th, 1857. A building known as Tewksbury's brick block was erected in 1857 at the south corner of Lackawanna and Adams avenues. The residence of Joseph Slocum was built in 1859. These residences have been mentioned because they were the first in their respective localities, or are entitled to attention on account of their cost and elegance. The residence of the late Joseph H. Scranton was erected in 1867 and 1868.

GREEN RIDGE.

The residence of Elisha Hitchcock in 1840, and for some years afterward, was at what is now the east corner of Monroe avenue and Linden street, on the old road to Dunmore. To Hon. George Sanderson is due much credit for opening a not inconsiderable portion of the present city. Mr. Sanderson, while in the Senate of 1853, made the acquaintance of Colonel George W. Scranton, at whose solicitation he visited Scranton for the first time in 1854, and again in 1855; and in April of that year he bought the Hitchcock farm, of about 220 acres. He gave $65,000, and sold an undivided half a few weeks later for that sum. In 1856 he became a permanent resident. He began to lay out streets, and opened Washington, Adams and Wyoming avenues from Spruce street to Vine. This part of Scranton is one of the wealthiest in the city in aggregated capital, is marked by many fine residences, and is known locally as Sanderson's Hill. Here he erected for his own use the residence now owned by James Blair, and near by several others, and he donated for the public use the lots on which the central school building stands. He next purchased that portion of the city now known as Green Ridge, and surveyed it into large lots suitable for sites for costly residences, and it has become one of the most attractive parts of the city.

Two well-known natural features of the city topography have disappeared. Reference is made to the "lily pond" or swamp in the centre of Scranton, surrounded by Spruce street, Wyoming avenue, Linden street and Adams avenue, and the rock which reared itself some twelve or fifteen feet at the intersection of Jefferson and Lackawanna avenues and Ridge row. Adams avenue was graded across the swamp early in the summer of 1857 and was then first passable there. In January, 1858, the work of grading Washington avenue across the swamp was begun. A large portion of the swamp has since been graded up to a level with the surrounding land, by the use of ashes and other refuse from the iron rolling-mill, conveyed to the locality by a tunnel cut through a vein of coal for that purpose, which terminated at the corner of Bank and Linden streets, and which, having served its purpose, is now (1880) being closed. The grading of the rock was begun June 24th, 1861, by the united efforts of the borough authorities, the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company and the Odd Fellows' Hall Association. The work was continued from time to time until February 5th, 1867, when the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company removed the last of the rock, which had filled nearly all of the triangle formed by the junction of the three streets mentioned. Much of the rock was used by the city authorities in grading and in otherwise improving portions of the city. The grading of Ridge row by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company was finished August 10th, 1861, the rock being used as ballast. The grading of Bank street was begun December 4th, 1857. Linden street was staked out from Madison to Monroe avenue in April, 1858. The next year the first bridge over Roaring brook and one over the tail race of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's foundry were built, affording communication between the center of the borough and Slocum Flats by way of Washington avenue. Later, bridge communication between Scranton and Hyde Park was established.

BUSINESS MEN OF SCRANTON BOROUGH.

Early in December, 1852, the following named firms and individuals had stores in Scranton; Scrantons & Platt, near the blast furnaces; Champin & Chase, Lackawanna and Washington avenues; Hawley & Barton, where No. 505 Lackawanna avenue now is; T. F. Hunt, (just opened) on Lackawanna avenue; — Durfee, late Durfee & Welsh, on the Flats; S. W. Thompson (then closing out his stock at auction), south of Roaring brook; George Washington, clothing, site of 504 Lackawanna avenue; W. G. Doud, hardware, site of 509 Lackawanna avenue; Peckens and a partner, whose name is believed to have been Phillips, Penn avenue and Vine street; Dr. B. H. Throop, drugs, Lackawanna avenue and Mattes street, near what is now (1880) the south corner of Lackawanna and Adams avenues; Dr. Sherrerd, drugs, Lackawanna and Washington avenues; and five or six insignificant groceries. At the same time the following medical men were located in the village: Drs. B. H. Throop, W. H. Pier, J. E. Leavett, C. Gorman, George W. Masser, and a German, lately from Wisconsin; and T. J. Folsom and — Pierce, dentists.

The razing of Dr. Sherrerd's drug store, above mentioned, a three-story brick building at the corner of Lackawanna and Washington avenues, early in 1880, for the purpose of replacing it with one better adapted for mercantile use, suggested the following reminiscences, which appeared in the Daily Republican of March 9th, 1880:

"It was the third brick building erected on Lackawanna avenue, the Wyoming House and the store opposite it on Wyoming and Lackawanna avenues being the two first. The building, originally a drug store and dwelling, was an enterprise of Dr. John B. Sherrerd; was occupied by him until his death, and still belongs to his heirs. It was built in 1851 and 1852. * * * In its third story, now crumbling under the destroying hand of the artisan, was the first select school of the then scattered village, and from its second story for years hung the banner of our first daguerrean. * * * In its day it was a pretentious structure, and even at this time, in its exterior appearance, compares favorably with all but the most modern fronts on the avenue."

The following business directory is said to include the names of all those engaged in business in the borough in 1857:

Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's officials and principal employes: Selden T. Seranton, president; Joseph H. Seranton, general superintendent; James Hunter Phinney, secretary; J. C. Platt, real estate agent; C. G. Saxon, bookkeeper; E. P. Kingsbury, cashier; C. F. Mattes, superintendent of furnaces; J. M. Davis, time keeper of furnaces; W. H. Platt, time keeper of rolling mill; Simon Jones, foreman of foundry; Abner Tisdell, machinist; David Major, boiler maker; G. S. Schott, bookkeeper; B. F. Henry and John Ward, carpenters; John Bawin, blacksmith; Daniel Williams, heater in rolling mills; A. H. Coursen, clerk; Charles Fuller, general time keeper. Officials and principal employes of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad: John Brislin, superintendent; James Archbald, general agent; William N. Jenks, general ticket agent; R. A. Henry, general freight agent; James J. Albright, general coal agent; F. J. Leavenworth, paymaster; Watts Cook, master mechanic; H. L. Marvine, manager of machine shops; John Grier, engineer of machine shops; A. Frothingham, extra conductor; J. Amsden, resident engineer; A. W. Rogers and G. H. Wilson, superintendent and conductor Lackawanna and Bloomsburg Railroad. Scranton Boiler and Machine Shop: Dickson & Co., C. T. Puzon. Planing Mill and Car Factory: R. A. Oakford, E. H. Kerlin and B. Goodshall. Hotels: Wyoming House, S. Bristol proprietor; Mansion House, J. W. Humphrey; Eagle Hotel, F. Locher; Franklin Hotel, F. Weichel; Washington Hotel, A. Fasold. Attorneys: Lathrope & Jones, E. N. Willard, Daniel Rankin (Providence). Physicians: William E. Rogers, George W. Masser, A. P. Meylert, R. A. Squire, J. Sullivan. Dentists: W. A. Chittenden, P. C. Morgan. Druggists: L. S. & E. C. Fuller, George B. Boyd. Real estate dealers: George Sanderson, Lathrope & Jones, Michael Meylert, Richard Drinker. Bankers: Mason, Meylert & Co., George Sanderson & Co. (James C. Wright clerk). Dealers in dry goods and groceries: Doubleday & Dunham, Hawley & Barton, Lewis Lewis, L. Scott, W. C. Kiser, Phinney & Schott, Joseph Chase, A. C. Fetherman, J. W. Brock, Birney & Co., M. M. Grady. Dealers in hardware, &c.: Hunt Brothers, C. H. & W. G. Doud. Clothiers and merchant tailors: D. Morris & Co., P. Shively, David Bashore, P. Gangelhoff & Co., Barbe & Aub. Liquor dealers: J. T. Braons, J. J. Postens. Livery and exchange: A. Kenner, C. S. Niver. Butchers: J. Jiffkins & Son, J. Imberry. Carpenters and builders: A. B. and Daniel Silkman. Jacob Bryant, Samuel Shopland, Joseph L. Harrington & Co. Miscellaneous: M. D. Engle, jeweler; Dana L. Scott, boot and shoe dealer; Charles Schlsger, baker and grocer; Joseph Fellows 2nd, agent for L. S. R. R. and dealer in coal; J. Robinson, brewer; G. H. Walter, stationer; A. W. Gunster, cabinet maker; J. Harrington, undertaker; J. A. Moss & Brother, dealers in leather and provisions; George Cone & Co., dealers in flour and provisions; W. J. Walker, tobacconist; Charles A. Paine, oyster and vegetable market; Adams & Davis, publishers of the Herold of the Union. Gas and Water Company: J. H. Seranton, president; C. D. Rockwell, superintendent; George Sanderson, treasurer; Edward Kingsbury, secretary.

The population of the borough at this date was 10,000; the number of taxable inhabitants was 2,200.

CIVIL HISTORY OF SCRANTON BOROUGH.

Scranton was incorporated as a borough February 14th, 1856. The first council, organized on the evening of March 27th, 1856, at the house of D. K. Kressler, consisted of James Harrington, J. C. Platt, John Hinceheler, D. K. Kressler and William W. Ward. The successive burgesses were elected as follows: Joseph Slocum, 1856; George Sanderson, 1857, 1864; George W. Scranton, 1858; William H. Pier, 1859; L. S. Fuller, 1861; Frederick Simons, 1862; Adam L. Horn, 1863; James Ruthven, 1865; J. W. Gregory, 1866. The latter was re-elected in 1867 and served one year, as the borough council existed about two years after the incorporation of the city. The last council consisted of William Stein, Joseph Godfrey, Philip Weichel, James Mullin and John Zeidler.

The following persons were commissioned justices of the peace in Scranton borough: 1856, 1861, 1866, Benjamin Jay; 1856, Martin L. Newman; 1860, Richard A. Oakford; 1863, Henry Wilbur; 1864, P. J. Coyne; 1859, 1864, Thomas J. Walsh; 1859, Matthias Gaines; 1861, James Mullin; 1866, Thomas D. Kelley; 1864, Matthias Gehen; 1865, Samuel Dolph.

For the first time in the history of Providence township four election polls were opened October 11th, 1853, the voting places being Scranton, Providence, Hyde Park and Dunmore. The elections at Providence were borough elections. Scranton and Dunmore were the voting places for what at that time remained of Providence township. Some of the voters in the northwestern part of the township came through Hyde Park to the polling place at Scranton, where 255 ballots were deposited. March 16th, 1855, the Providence township election was held at the Scranton House, kept by David K. Kressler, and the total roll of the township, exclusive of the boroughs of Providence and Hyde Park, was 165. March 27th, 1856, the first borough election of the newly incorporated borough of Scranton was held at Kressler's. May 12th following the first borough assessment roll was presented to the council, and exhibited an assessed valuation of $453,280. The total vote in the borough at the presidential election held November 4th that year was 951.

The borough council contracted for two lots on the corner of Adams avenue and Mechanics' street (since closed), and early in 1857 had a building erected thereon the first floor of which was used as a lock-up, the office and council room being above, where the council met for the first time February 2nd, 1857. The first prisoner was confined in the lock-up January 21st preceding. February 10th the building was burned, as was supposed from some defect in the stove or stove-pipe, and Frederick Hurd, an occupant of the lock-up, perished.

HOTELS.

The first store and offices of the iron company were in a building which they erected near the first furnace in 1841, and which also served as a dwelling for Sanford Grant and his family. This was abandoned in 1845, after the erection of larger and more convenient quarters, and was occupied as a hotel and boarding house by Joseph Snyder until 1848, under the name of the "Home." This was the first public house in the borough of Scranton. David K. Kressler took possession of the building in 1848, named it the Scranton House and kept it open as a hotel until the autumn of 1856, when it was torn down by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company. The work of destruction was begun September 22nd of that year and Mr. Kressler vacated the building October 18th.

The Forest House, so named early in its history from its then sylvan environments, was erected by a Mr. Sprague, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and was in use for a time as a boarding house. It was opened as a hotel by Joseph Godfrey and managed by him until 1866, when he sold out to Spencer J. Reed, from Binghamton, N. Y., who has been succeeded by the present proprietor, Mr. U. G. Schoonmaker. An engraving of this hotel appears herewith.

The Wyoming House was built in 1850. J. C. Burgess, who died in October, 1879, became the owner of the house, and under various managers it has ever been popular. The present proprietor is Mr. J. B. Stark.

The St. Charles House was erected by Miller & Cliff, and opened July 4th, 1859, by David D. Kressler, the former landlord at the Scranton House. In 1868 it was purchase by D. B. Brainard, an early employe of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, who is the present proprietor.

The Lackawanna Valley House was built by Jacob Robinson in 1867, and was opened by E. B. Burnham. It has several times changed hands and is now managed successfully by I. Eugene Whipple.

The Susquehanna House is of comparatively recent date, having been opened as a hotel a few years ago in a reconstructed mercantile block. The present proprietor is Oscar Carpenter. The Scranton House was erected a few years ago by L. Koch and subsequently sold to Victor Koch.

There are other public houses of more or less prominence, but those mentioned are the most popular and most liberally patronized.

DUNMORE BOROUGH.

The settlement of William Allsworth on the site of this now flourishing borough has been adverted to. His rude cabin, brush-roofed and its bar-room "fortified with long pickets extending to the ceiling," stood upon the spot now occupied by the brick store of John D. Boyle. In after years it came to be known as "the old tavern." Allsworth was succeeded as landlord in turn by Philip Swartz, Isaac Dolph, J. D. Bloom, Henry W. Drinker and Samuel De Puy.

EARLY EVENTS IN DUNMORE.

It is conceded that to no one person is the early improvement of Dunmore due more than to Hon. John B. Smith, of the Pennsylvania Coal Company. Up to 1847 or 1848 Dunmore consisted of but four houses. The place had been named about the time of the construction of the Drinker turnpike, by Henry W. Drinker, who acquired the ownership of much of the land within the limits of the present borough.

John Allsworth and Philip Swartz came in 1816. Among other early settlers were Edward Lunnun, John West, Isaac and Charles Dolph, Levi De Puy and James Brown.

The oldest native resident of the Lackawanna valley is Allen Secor, son of John Secor, who was born in Blakeley, about two miles from Dunmore, in March, 1804, and now lives in Dunmore. He has spent his whole life in this valley. He helped to erect the first log house in Carbon-dale, and he ran the last raft that descended the Lackawanna.

About 1820 a store was opened at "the Corners," as the locality came to be called, under the impulse given to the section by the Drinker turnpike project. It was a small affair. The pioneer wagon maker and repairer was James Yates; Joseph Tanner was the first blacksmith. The first store of any pretensions was opened in 1845 by C. W. Potter. It was occupied by Atwater & Swartz from 1848 to 1853; then by Ward & Swartz till 1870, since when Daniel Swartz has been sole proprietor. About 1853 J. D. Boyle erected his brick store on the ground formerly occupied by the pioneer tavern, and he has since traded there. Two saw-mills were in operation in 1857, owned by Daniel Swartz and E. Spencer respectively.

POST-OFFICE AND SCHOOLS.

The post-office at Dunmore was established in 1848. G. P. Howell was the first postmaster and soon resigned in favor of Daniel Swartz, who served until 1853. The succeeding incumbents have been, in the order named, Francis Quick, N. Sommes, George Black, S. W. Ward, N. Sommers and D. W. Himrod.

The first school-house was built in 1825, and though rude and small was ample. It was also used occasionally for church purposes. With the influx of population educational facilities have kept pace. There are now seven school-houses in the borough and a large number of scholars are accommodated.

CIVIL HISTORY.

Dunmore borough was incorporated April 10th, 1862, from portions of Providence township and Scranton borough.

The following justices of the peace for Dunmore have been elected in the years specified: Edward Loughlin, 1865; N. W. Warner, 1867, 1872, 1877; Anthony Horan, 1870; David McDonnell, 1875.

The burgesses have been as follows: 1863, 1864, Calvin Spencer; 1865, G. W. Simpson; 1866, R. P. Savage; 1867, Anthony McDonnell; 1868, 1872, Peter Burschel; 1869, 1871, Anthony McDonnell; 1870, N. W. Warner; 1873, Thomas Cawley; 1874, Lewis Minnich; 1875, Thomas Widdowfield; 1876, D. P. Barton; 1877, Owen Flynn; 1878-80, F. D. Chambers.

THE CITY OF SCRANTON.

Following the consideration of the boroughs of Providence, Scranton, Hyde Park and Dunmore naturally is that of the city of Scranton, the limits of which embrace all of the first, second and third, and a portion of the latter as formerly bounded.

To the courtesy of Hon. Lewis Pughe, president of the board of trade, we are indebted for much of the following descriptive and statistical matter:

The city of Scranton occupies a succession of hills and eminences, the most important of which is Hyde Park hill, from which a magnificent view of the place and surrounding scenery may be obtained. The rapid strides in population, wealth and in permanent prosperity of Scranton have heretofore attracted attention. Situated upon the highlands of northeastern Pennsylvania, in the northern anthracite coal field, and within about one hundred and fifty miles of New York, and nearly the same distance from Philadelphia, Scranton is admirably located to command an influence and growth larger than it has yet experienced. The city is surrounded by small towns of from 1,500 to 4,000 inhabitants, and Scranton is the natural center of trade and travel. Underlying the whole section is what is known as the northern anthracite coal field, comprising 198 square miles, or 126,720 acres of this valuable deposit, which is variously estimated to contain from 50,000 to 100,000 tons to the acre. These enormous figures are conclusive evidence of the stability and development of the future, as this great resource appears to be almost inexhaustible. With the advantage of from thirty to fifty feet of solid coal, which all the industries and the households of the world demand, it is difficult to predict any limit to the prosperity of the locality. The process of mining or producing coal is carried on at a rate of which the general public have little conception. From 25,000 to 35,000 tons are daily shipped by the different carrying companies that center here.

According to the latest published commercial reports, there are 989 business establishments in the city, where are sold nearly every variety of articles for the use of the people of this section. The mercantile buildings are fine structures, and the operations of trade, particularly in the leading dry goods houses, are conducted upon the most approved plan.

The population of Scranton borough in 1853 was 3,000; in 1860, 9,223; in 1870 the population of the city was 35,092; in 1880, 45,925. The unprecedented and unrepeated advance in population between 1860 and 1870 was due to the incorporation of Providence and Hyde Park and a portion of Dunmore with Scranton; and the figures of a later date indicate the population of the three former boroughs combined, together with that of such other territory as was included within the city limits. Mr. W. W. Winton has contributed considerably to the extension of the populous portions of the city by his additions to Scranton, Hyde Park and Providence.

THE SCRANTON BOARD OF TRADE.

The organization of the Scranton Board of Trade was completed December 12th, 1867, the following firms through their representatives signing as charter members: D. B. Oakes & Co., J. Phillips & Co., Monies & Pughe, Fisher, Sutphin & Co., F. J. Fisher & Co., Cone & Lent, Phelps & Chase, David Patterson, Dale & Keene and George Coray & Co. An election held the first Tuesday in January, 1868, resulted in the choice of the following named officers and directors: Elisha Phinney, president; George Coray, vice-president; Lewis Pughe, secretary; D. Cone, treasurer; directors—M. Dale, T. J. Fisher, D. Patterson, George Fisher, Lewis Pughe and J. C. Phelps. The board was incorporated February 4th, 1871. The annual income from estate held by the corporation was limited to $10,000.

Up to the date of the first annual election under the act of incorporation the following members of the board had served as president: Elisha Phinney, 1863, 1869; Lewis Pughe, 1870, 1871; secretaries—Lewis Pughe, 1868; F. L. Hitchcock, 1869; Walter W. Winton, 1870; F. L. Hitchcock, 1871. January 1st, 1872, the following officers were elected: George Fisher, president; T. F. Hunt, vice-president; F. L. Hitchcock, secretary; G. A. Fuller, treasurer. The successive presidents since that time have been: George Fisher, re-elected, 1873, 1874; G. A. Fuller, 1875, 1876; Lewis Pughe, 1877-80. F. L. Hitchcock was re-elected secretary in 1873. His successors have been as follows: H. A. Vail, 1874; E. L. Fuller, 1875; A. D. Holland, 1876-78 (resigning in March of the latter year); I. F. Fuller, 1878, 1879; John B. Owens, 1880. The officers not mentioned above, elected for 1880, were: Vice-president, R. W. Luce; treasurer, A. W. Dickson; assistant secretary, J. M. Hunt. Messrs. G. A. Fuller, William H. Perkins and William Connell are the trustees.

The following are the names of members of the Board of Trade representing individual interests: C. E. Chittenden, H. A. Coursen, George Fisher, G. W. Fritz, A. G. Gilmore, J. M. Hunt, N. A. Hulbert, C. J. Johnson, J. Kemerer, Thomas Lucas, F. E. Nettleton, M. Norton, L. B. Powell, Joseph Chase and W. T. Smith. The following members represent the firms or corporations mentioned in connection with their names:

William H. Allen, Allen & Powell; Henry Battin, Connell & Battin; William Connell, Alexander Connell; A. H. Coursen, A. H. & E. G. Coursen; M. H. Dale, Dale & Co.; A. M. Decker, Stowers Pork Packing Company; A. W. Dickson, Weston Mill Company, limited; E. A. Forrester, Forrester Brothers; G. A. Fuller, G. A. Fuller & Co.; E. L. Fuller, Hunt Brothers & Co., limited; E. C. Fuller, L. S. & E. C. Fuller; M. Goldsmith, Goldsmith Brothers; J. H. Gunster, Seranton City Bank; B. A. Hill, Hill & Keiser; S. P. Hull, G. M. Hull & Co.; A. D. Holland, H. & A. D. Holland; C. F. Jones, Jones Brothers; B. E. Leonard, Leonard Brothers; R. M. Lindsay, Lindsay & Liddle; R. W. Luce, C. G. Courtright & Co.; T. J. Luce, Luce & Shoemaker; R. J. Matthews, Matthews Brothers; M. Maloney, Maloney Manufacturing and Gas Light Company; Lewis Pughe, Monies & Pughe; J. A. Price, Seranton Stove Works; C. E. Pryor, Pryor & Thompson; W. H. Perkins, Dickson Manufacturing Company, Simon Rice, Simon Rice & Brother; W. H. Richmond, Elk Hill Iron and Coal Company; J. H. Stelle, Beadle & Stelle; D. Silkman, Silkman, Winton & Co.; T. C. Snover, Clark & Snover; T. G. Smith, Smith & Clearwater.

The board of trade has one honorary member, Mr. J. C. Platt, who was early and has been long identified with the mercantile and commercial interests of the Lackawanna valley. In addition to the usual objects the Scranton Board of Trade has a distinctive benefit in a commercial agency department, which is attached to the institution under charge of the secretary, which is confined to the use of the members of the board, its operation and influence covering the territory canvassed by the wholesale dealers.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

This board consists of five members, including the mayor, who acts as president ex officio. The first board was elected June 1st, 1878, two members being chosen for one year and two for two years. The term of office is two years. June 11th, 1878, the board met, with the mayor as chairman, and perfected the organization, with George B. Boyd, M. D., as health officer, and George B. Foster as secretary, and necessary committees. The books were opened October 1st for the collection of statistics relating to the sanitary condition of the city, embracing a record of marriages, births and deaths; also the licensing of persons to act as scavengers, and the keeping of complaint books.

HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS.

In response to a call from the members of the Young Men's Christian Association of Scranton, a public meeting of ladies was held September 27th, 1871, at the rooms of that society to inaugurate a movement in behalf of friendless women and children of the city. A house containing eight rooms, at the corner of Franklin avenue and Linden street, had been leased temporarily and partially furnished and fitted up with money provided by the city poor directors. Seven women and nine children had been admitted. A committee of ten ladies was chosen to take preliminary steps for the organization of a society for a home for the friendless. October 4th, at a public meeting, a constitution was adopted and fifty ladies signed it and paid the yearly dues ($3); three, by the payment of $50 each, became life members. Officers were elected as follows: Mrs. C. H. Doud, president; Mrs. Thomas Moore and Mrs. C. F. Mattes, vice-presidents; Mrs. William Brock, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. B. Powell, recording secretary; Mrs. H. B. Rockwell, treasurer.

In the following April the Home was removed to a house near the corner of Jefferson avenue and Linden street. October 26th, 1873, "the Society of the Home for Friendless Women and Children of the City of Scranton" was chartered. Some lots on Adams avenue were secured, on which a commodious, substantial and conveniently arranged building was erected in 1874 at a cost of a little over $8,000. This institution is now in a flourishing condition financially. The number of inmates, June 15th, 1879, was thirty-seven, of whom sixteen were male children, eighteen female children and three adults.

The officers elected for 1879 were: Mrs. H. S. Pierce, president; Mrs. James Blair, vice-president; Mrs. Thomas Moore, chief manager; Mrs. H. F. Warren, recording secretary; Mrs. C. P. Matthews, corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. L. Dickson, treasurer; Mrs. Helen Owen, matron.

THE LACKAWANNA HOSPITAL.

An act approved May 18th, 1871, incorporated William N. Monies, John B. Smith, William F. Hallstead, B. H. Throop, R. A. Squire, A. Davis, E. C. Fuller, William Merrifield, Henry Griffin, Charles Doud and W. W. Winton, and their associates and successors, under the title of the Lackawanna Hospital of Scranton, Pennsylvania. The following named persons constituted the first board of directors: Col. William N. Monies, Hon. John B. Smith, William F. Hallstead, B. H. Throop, M. D., R. A. Squire, M. D., A. Davis, M. D., E. C. Fuller, William Merrifield, Henry Griffin, Charles Doud and W. W. Winton.

A building on Franklin avenue was secured and opened as a hospital. It is a brick structure 40 by 60 feet and three stories high, standing on a pleasant lot 120 by 160 feet, and has accommodations for fifty patients. The hospital has been constantly open since this time, and the following summary of the number of patients treated will afford an idea of the amount of work it has accomplished for the cause of humanity during its brief career: From January, 1872, to January, 1875, ward patients, 225, dispensary patients 211; 1875, ward patients 85, dispensary patients 480; 1876, ward patients 111, dispensary patients 531; 1877, ward patients 89, dispensary patients 621; 1878, ward patients 144, dispensary patients 1,636; total to January, 1880, 6,524 patients treated.

Three appropriations from the State have been received, amounting to $35,000. The officers of the hospital are (January 1st, 1880): Thomas Phillips, president; James Ruthven, secretary; E. C. Fuller, treasurer; James O. Brown, steward; D. N. Green, J. C. Platt, James Ruthven, Nicholas Washburn and Thomas Phillips, executive committee; Hon. Alfred Hand, Rev. Moses Whitty, J. C. Platt, D. N. Green, James Ruthven, Thomas Phillips, Nicholas Washburn, E. C. Fuller and William Connell, directors. Doctors William H. Heath, J. W. Gibbs, L. H. Gibbs, William F. Pier, J. E. O'Brien and William H. Pier constitute the medical staff.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

In 1812 a large tract was donated by the original proprietors of Providence township for educational purposes, but owing to protracted litigation between the boards of the different school districts of this city the proceeds of the grant have afforded very little benefit to the cause of education.

The cause of public education in Scranton has advanced in proportion to everything else in this city of almost mushroom growth. The school districts belonging to Providence, Hyde Park and Scranton boroughs were under entirely distinct and separate managements from the time of their establishment until 1877, when, by the adoption of the new charter, making Scranton a city of the third class, the different school districts were consolidated. In 1818 the first school-house in Providence township was erected a short distance from the Holmes house; it is still standing, though not used for educational purposes. Before the erection of this building the children were instructed in private houses, and during the summer time often in the open air under the shade of a tree.

During 1834 another school building was erected in the township, and was known as the Bell school-house, from its having the first bell in the valley. On account of a political strife arising between the Whigs and the Democrats a third school-house was erected in 1836 on the opposite side of the Lackawanna river, in which several well known persons have taught, including the late Judge Ketchum, D. R. Randall, Ann Stephens and W. W. Winton.

At the time of the consolidation of the school districts in 1877 the Providence district, in connection with the second school district, contained nine school buildings, six of which were framed and three brick, with an attendance of about 1,300 pupils. The Hyde Park, or as it was more generally termed the third, school district was comprised in what is now the fourth, fifth, sixth, fourteenth, fifteenth and eighteenth wards of Scranton. In 1852, at the time Hyde Park was incorporated as a borough, there were but two school-houses in the district. One of these was erected probably before 1820, near the southwesterly corner of Main street, and was used for religious as well as educational purposes. Prior to this many of the children attended the schools at Providence. The other was built in 1837, on the site of the Methodist church. It was quite a pretentious building for those days and became somewhat celebrated for the character of the schools maintained there. Among the teachers in this building may be mentioned William Ricketson, D. R. Randall and John L. Richardson. The public schools of the district were closed during the winter of 1854 and until the fall of 1855 on account of the resignation of the principal teacher, Mr. Tallman. A brick school building was erected in 1858 on the site of school-houses Nos. 14 and 15, to take the place of one which had been sold to the Methodist society; and in this building were established the first graded schools in the district. Two school buildings were erected between 1860 and 1870, and in 1871 a borough superintendent was elected. At the time of the consolidation this district contained several school buildings, five of which were framed and two brick, fully equipped with teachers and having a large number of pupils enrolled.

There were five schools reported in the Scranton or fourth school district at the beginning of 1857, held in five one-story frame buildings, each building representing a sub-district. During this year the site of the high school building was secured, and a brick building two stories high was opened for school January 1st, 1858. This was designated the central building and contained four rooms, in which were established the first graded schools in the city, primary, intermediate, grammar and high school. E. D. Rawson, elected January 1st, 1858, was the first principal of these graded schools. From November, 1858, E. A. Lawrence was principal four years, during which time many important changes were made in the condition of the schools. The directors brought the different sub-districts under one management and appointed Mr. Lawrence principal of all the schools in the borough, which position he held for three years. During this administration two brick buildings were erected, an addition was made to the central building, which increased the number of rooms to six, and three new sub-districts were established, making a total of eight sub-districts and sixteen schools.

Joseph Roney was superintendent of the schools in the fourth district from March, 1868, until the consolidation of the districts. During this interval two more school buildings were erected, making eleven, nine of which were first class, with sittings for 3,000 pupils; the number of teachers was increased from 22 to 74; the central building was enlarged to eleven rooms, with suitable recitation rooms connected with each school; a depart-

D. W. CONNOLLY.

D. W. Connolly, the Democratic and N. G. L. candidate for Congress in the XIIth Congressional district, was born in the village of Cocheton, Sullivan county, N. Y., on the 24th day of April, 1847. His father, John Connolly, well known in this section of the county for twenty-five years before his death, which occurred in 1873, as a railroad contractor, was born in Ireland, and removed to this country with his parents when he was about eight years old. He lived in New York city until he attained his majority. About that time the Albany and Boston Railroad Company commenced the construction of their road in Massachusetts, and John Connolly accepted a position as foreman with Mr. O'Neill, his brother-in-law and a prominent contractor, for a portion of the road near Springfield, Mass. While engaged in this position, as foreman, near the town of Montgomery, Mass., Mr. Connolly became acquainted with Miss Ann Adelia Allyn, the daughter of Deacon David Allyn, a thriving and highly respected farmer of Montgomery, and their marriage followed soon after. Some of the best blood of New England flows through Mrs. Connolly's veins. Her ancestors came from England early in the seventeenth century, and settled at a place now called Allyn's Point in Connecticut. Her grandfather, David Allyn, was a Revolutionary soldier, having fought under General Washington in the war for independence. Her grandmother was named Tyler and was a near relative of John Tyler, President of the United States.

In the spring of 1868 D. W. Connolly entered upon the study of law in Scranton. At the end of the prescribed term of service Mr. Connolly passed a very creditable examination before Judges Lewis Jones, Alfred Hand and W. G. Ward, and was admitted to practice in the Mayor's Court for the city of Scranton and in the several courts of Luzerne county in May, 1870.

Since his admission to the bar, as well as previous to that time, Mr. Connolly has been a close student. His mind is built on a broad gauge; he possesses the faculty of grasping all the points in a case on presentation of the facts, and it was not long before the most able lawyers of old Luzerne confessed that with Mr. Connolly on the other side of a case they had a foeman worthy of their steel. To-day he stands in the front rank of the able lawyers of northeastern Pennsylvania. He is a wise counselor, manages a case with adroitness and good judgment and has a clear and perspicuous style of presenting facts to a jury.

No lawyer was ever more faithful to the cause of a client than Mr. Connolly. The writer of this sketch had the pleasure of being for some time intimately connected with him, and he knows whereof he speaks when he says that if Mr. Connolly takes a case he goes into the work with his whole heart and soul. No motives of personal comfort or convenience are allowed to distract him from the work in hand, and if the case is lost it is not because of either lack of ability or inattention on his part.

Through all the years of his active life Mr. Connolly has borne an unblemished reputation. His record will bear the closest scrutiny. It is because of his untarnished reputation and eminent abilities that he is universally respected by all classes.

Mr. Connolly's parents located at Hyde Park in 1849, when the subject of this sketch was only two years old. No man more fully possessed the confidence and respect of those with whom he came in contact than John Connolly, and when he died, in October, 1873, the whole community mourned his loss.

D. W. Connolly received his education in the public schools of Hyde Park. He was always bright and intelligent and stood high in his class. At the age of seventeen years he left school and removed with his parents to Little Neck, Long Island. Here he was engaged as clerk and book-keeper in a country store, and remained in that position for about six months. Returning to Scranton he entered the office of the Lackawanna Herald, a Democratic paper, edited by the late Hon. E. S. M. Hill, where he filled the position of clerk and proof-reader. He remained with Mr. Hill for some time, and upon leaving received a most flattering letter of recommendation from his employer.

In 1872 considerable opposition was shown to the tickets nominated by the Democratic and Republican parties in the city of Scranton, and a new party was formed under the name of the "Labor Reform party." This party placed a ticket in the field with Mr. Connolly for district attorney. Although defeated he received a vote 600 in excess of that for the Republican candidate. In his own district, which was strongly Republican, he received a large majority. In 1878 Mr. Connolly was nominated by the Democratic and National Greenback Labor parties of Lackawanna county for president judge. His opponent was Judge Benjamin S. Bentley, of Williamsport. Again his popularity was shown by his receiving a much larger vote than any other candidate upon the ticket. Although elected by a large majority a question was raised as to a vacancy existing in the office of president judge, and the matter was carried to the Supreme Court, where it was decided that no vacancy existed. By this decision Mr. Connolly was deprived of his seat upon the bench.

This gentleman was born in [Salem, Wayne county, Pa., November 2nd, 1822. His parents, Alanson and Sally Hollister, came from Connecticut some years previous, and made their way into the Salem forest before the wolf and the bear had deigned to leave its solitude. He was reared amidst the peaceful scenes of his father's farm, receiving a common school education at his home and an academic one at Bethany and Honesdale in 1840-43. He spent the summers of 1837 and 1838 in boating on the North Branch canal, Union canal and Schuylkill canal as Captain Hollister, transporting general merchandise from Philadelphia to Wilkes-Barre and Pittston, with whiskey, staves and grain as return freight. He then read medicine alternatively with Doctor Charles Burr, of Salem, Dr. Ebenezer T. Losey, of Honesdale, and Dr. Benjamin H. Throop, then of Providence; graduated at the University of the City of New York in March, 1846, entering at once into the practice of his profession in Providence, Pa., where for the last thirty-four years he has devoted his time and talent to the often thankless duties of his profession with acknowledged fidelity and skill. In the original five-mile-square township of Providence, of which the city of Scranton embraces but a part, no physician but the late Silas B. Robinson and Dr. Hollister essayed to practice medicine as late as 1846, where now some fifty medical men sustain their own animation. Dr. Throop had temporarily removed to Carbondale. The subject of our sketch is of an original and somewhat eccentric character, blunt and even rude in his manners, yet kind, true and benevolent. His literary taste and thorough knowledge of the valley have enabled him to write the "History of the Lackawanna Valley," "Coal Notes," "History of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company," "Recollections of our Physicians" and many newspaper and magazine articles of interest. He is also proprietor of "Dr. Hollister's Family Medicines", which have great local repute. The doctor is a great student and lover of archæological matters. No person within the commonwealth of Pennsylvania has given such assiduous attention to collecting and arranging the Indian stone relics of the country as has the doctor; whose immense collection, open and free to all, acknowledged to be the largest and most complete in Europe or America, embraces 20,000 pieces of stone, burned clay, bone and copper, representing every known weapon of Indian warfare and every variety of stone implement once used by the skin-clad savages. The collection is valued at $10,000, and yet an insurance company willing for years to renew the policy and receive the premium annually declared through its agent that Indian relics had no value and if burned up they would be worth just as much! The late Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington, and his learned successor Prof. Baird, made repeated and unsuccessful efforts to obtain this unequaled collection for that institution. Dr. Hollister affiliates with no church, accepts no creeds, dogmas or doctrines recognized by the majority, believes in the golden rule and looks carefully and gratuitously after the physical needs of all ministers of the gospel, indigent widows and children living within his precinct. He is a member of several State historical societies; a nephew of P. G. Goodrich, author of the History of Wayne County, Pa., and brother of Mrs. Harriet G. Watres, of Scranton—"Stella of Lackawanna," a poetess whose tender songs and sonnets will carry her name far into the future.

Henry Roberts M.D.

DR. HENRY ROBERTS.

We have presented an admirable likeness of Dr. Henry Roberts, of Scranton, a man who has been prominently identified with the interests of this county for more than thirty years. He took up his residence in Providence in May, 1850, when it was but a rural village, and when the land now composing Scranton was an almost uninhabited swampy forest. Though naturally retiring and modest he has ever been active in promoting what in his judgment seemed to be for the pecuniary, political and moral interests of the county. He was born of Welsh and English parents, on the 14th of June, 1821, in the township of Eaton, Wyoming county, Pa. The history of his family is easily traceable four generations back, to the latter part of the sixteenth century, when three brothers from the north of Wales came to America, two of whom settled, lived and died in New England. A third one followed a life upon the sea till all traces of his whereabouts were finally lost. Dr. Henry Roberts is a direct descendant of one of the two brothers who early in life took up their abode in Massachusetts. His grandfather when a young man moved from Orange county, N. Y., to Tague's Hill, now Washington township, Wyoming county, Pa. From thence he moved to Providence township, now Hyde Park, Lackawanna county, Pa. Having resided there about twelve years he moved to the township of Pittston, from whence shortly afterward he moved to the township of Eaton, Wyoming county.

Hon. Henry Roberts, father of the subject of our sketch, was born on Tague's Hill, July 28th, 1794. March 16th, 1817, he married Miss Nancy Wilson, daughter of Rev. John Wilson, and in the summer following they moved on to the farm formerly occupied by his mother's father, David Morehouse, Esq. It is here he has already spent more than sixty years of his life, and where at the present time, with his wife, he is still in the enjoyment of unusual health, and with remarkable vigor is able to prosecute the work incidental to the life of the agriculturist. Though aspiring only to be a prosperous farmer he has all his life occupied various positions of trust and confidence in the community. He was one of the first commissioners of Wyoming county, for many years associate judge in the courts of Wyoming county, postmaster at Falls during several terms, and for a long time justice of the peace, the duties of which he discharged with promptness and unusual favor. Indeed it is not overdrawing the picture to say that for nearly three quarters of a century he has enjoyed the uninterrupted respect of all who have known him, and that stranger and friend have ever been welcome to the hospitality of his home.

Dr. Henry Roberts is the third of a family of fourteen children (eight brothers and six sisters), all of whom excepting one brother and two sisters are now living. His early years were spent at the home of his parents, where he received the ordinary advantages of a common school education. At the age of nineteen he entered the store of Sinton, Tracey & Co., at Wilkes-Barre, as a clerk. It was while in the employ of this firm that he made the acquaintance of the Hon. L. D. Shoemaker, then a rising young lawyer, through whose friendship and counsel he was greatly benefited in the prosecution of studies preparatory to a contemplated entry upon the study of medicine. In the year 1842 he entered, as a student, the office of I. M. Roberts, his uncle, of Cardington, Ohio, with whom he remained until the fall of 1843, when he entered the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. Having faithfully and successfully followed the course of instruction there he graduated with honor in 1845, and in the succeeding summer located at Laceyville, Wyoming county, Pa., where he entered upon an extensive practice in his profession. Three years afterward, on the 14th of June, 1848, his twenty-eighth birthday, he was married to Lucetta H. Hartley, daughter of Judge William Hartley, of Susquehanna county, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Everett E. Guild, of Wayne county. From this happy union have been born six children, three of whom are now living, the eldest being the wife of Dr. Furman B. Gulick, of Scranton. Having passed five years in the practice of his profession at Laceyville he disposed of his property there and spent the winter of 1849-50 at Philadelphia in hospital study and practice. In the following May he took up his residence in Providence, his present home. The year of 1853 and part of 1854 he spent in New York city. In the summer of 1854 he embarked in mercantile business at Fleetville, Pa., with Hon. William Hartley, where he remained four years. At the end of this time he disposed of his interests at that place and removed to Illinois, near Dixon, from which point he was engaged in 1859 in fitting out a party to Pike's Peak and across the plains to California. The object of the expedition was to explore that vast section of country lying west of Missouri and extending in wildness even to the Pacific coast. The doctor with his party celebrated the 4th of July, 1859, at Independence Rock—so named by Captain John C. Fremont in his memorable expedition through that then unexplored country. It was just after this that, while in camp at the fifth crossing of the Sweetwater river—a tributary of the Platte—a thousand miles beyond the Missouri, on the eve of July 11th he was wounded, resulting in the loss of the use of his right arm, by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a friend and companion, from whom he received the closest attention during a long suffering in that wild, romantic country. Shortly after the accident he was carried to South Pass, an Indian trading post, where he received kind hospitality at the hands of General Landers, who at that time was opening a government wagon road from this point into the Walla-Walla valley. Here he remained about two months, when he removed to Salt Lake City, where he for a short season was the guest of Brigham Young's family physician. From Salt Lake he pursued a southerly and entirely new route to California, reaching there late in the fall of 1859. After a six months sojourn among the principal cities and various places of interest in that State he returned east by way of Panama. In the spring of 1861 he again took up his residence in Providence, where he resumed the practice of medicine, and where ever since he has been regarded as a physician of eminent judgment and success. Perhaps nowhere are the sterling worth, candid judgment and extraordinary mental capacity of Dr. Roberts more clearly seen than in his public life of more than a quarter of a century. At the present time the American people are inclined to treat with suspicion the name of nearly every one associated with the public interests of a community, especially when those interests are of a political nature. It has been observed that for the past twenty-five years many men who have lived honest lives while private citizens have in public office been utterly disregarding of either honesty or shame. But as Dr. Roberts has been in private life—thoroughly conscientious and open in all his dealings—so has he ever been in public life. When as a representative of the community he has had in charge any of its interests his course has been regarded with respect by both friends and opponents. There is hardly one in his section of the State whose judgment has been so constantly consulted by men of every class as his, and whose counsel has been so universally approved; and this is not saying too much, even though we bear in mind that he has taken a prominent part in the encouragement of railroad facilities, in the establishment of schools, in securing proper accommodation for the poor of the county and promulgating through the county and State—in their purity—the principles of a republican form of government. In politics he was in the earlier part of his life of the Clay and Webster school, and took an active part as a young man in the Henry Clay campaign of 1844. Clay was the first Presidential candidate for whom he voted, and from that time until the old Whig party days ended he was conspicuous in the organization. He attended the last Whig convention in Luzerne county, and was foremost in the organization of the Republican party in this section of the State, which immediately followed the national convention assembled at Chicago in 1856 and which adopted that name for the party.

In 1857, along with the late Henderson Gaylord, of Plymouth, and Daniel Driesbach, of Beach Haven, he was the unanimous choice of a convention of representatives of the new party as their first candidate for election to the Legislature. His great popularity is observed in the result of that contest, when he received—excepting sixteen—the combined vote of all parties in the borough of Providence, and in the county over three hundred more than David Wilmot, candidate for governor.

Early in the war he was appointed one of the State marshals for enrolling men subject to military duty. During the invasion of the State in 1863 he enrolled in less than twenty-four hours a full company of men for the emergency, and accompanied them immediately to Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg, where he organized the 30th regiment Pennsylvania State troops, with W. N. Monies as its colonel, and with it served as volunteer surgeon until the discharge of the regiment. In 1864 he was appointed a commissioner to the army for supplying blanks and gathering the returns of the elections held in the army. In April of the same year he was commissioned by President Lincoln an examining surgeon for claimants for pensions, which position he continues to hold as president of the Scranton board. In 1866 he was elected a member of the select council of the newly formed city of Scranton, and was re-elected to that office for nine consecutive years. In April, 1868, he was appointed by Hon. John A. J. Cresswell, then Postmaster-General, as postmaster at Providence, and he now holds his fourth commission, signed by President Rutherford B. Hayes, and dated in January, 1880. As has been said, Dr. Roberts comes of the good old Whig stock and was an active worker in the party; likewise when the Republican party came into existence he was at once one of its leaders, and he has never wavered in his devotion to the principles, policies, and measures of that party; and seldom indeed does it happen that we find a man who has ever been as willing as he to sacrifice self interest for the welfare of his party. In 1878 he accepted through conferees the nomination for Congress from the XIIth district of Pennsylvania; and as an evidence that he has more than sustained his well deserved popularity it is noticed that in a canvass of three weeks he secured not only his full party vote, but drew largely from the ranks of the opposite party.

Dr. Roberts is still in the prime of life and continues to take deep interest in whatever concerns the social, moral and political interests of the county and community; always stands ready with a word of caution or encouragement according as in his judgment the circumstances of the case may deserve. In social life he is exceptionally cordial and sincere, being easy of approach and winning the implicit confidence of all who come in contact with him. He retains with unusual affection the associations and associates of his younger days, but enjoys none the less friendships formed more recently in life and scenes that have marked his later years. In a single sentence,—Dr. Henry Roberts is a man; and that, says an old philosopher of the Greek school, is exceptionally true among men.

HON. J. A. SCRANTON.

Joseph Augustine Scranton, journalist, born July 26th, 1838, at Madison, Conn., is the only son of Joseph H. Scranton by his first wife, Eliza Maria, daughter of Colonel J. S. Wilcox, of Madison, Conn. He was liberally educated in New England schools, fitted for college under Dr. Taylor at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., graduating in the class of 1857, and entered Yale College in the class of 1861. Hemorrhage of the lungs compelled his withdrawal from college during the freshman year and terminated his educational course. He married Ada Elizabeth, eldest daughter of General A. N. Meylert, of Scranton, Pa., July 23d, 1863. They have two children, Robert Meylert, born June 11th, 1865, and Eliza, born July 20th, 1868.

Mr. Scranton was internal revenue collector in 1862-66, under President Lincoln, for the XIIth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, which then comprised the counties of Luzerne and Susquehanna. In September, 1867, he purchased an interest in the Scranton Republican and founded the daily edition of that paper, issuing the initial number on the 1st of November following. In March, 1869, he assumed sole proprietorship of the concern, which, under his personal supervision, has become a large and successful establishment. In 1871 he built the elegant and commodious printing-house on Wyoming avenue since occupied by his extensive business. His paper is the leading journal in northeastern Pennsylvania, and has been of signal and generally recognized service to the Republican party.

Mr. Scranton was appointed postmaster of Scranton by President Grant April 1st, 1874, and received a re-appointment from President Hayes in 1878. He has been active in politics for twenty years, always a Republican. He was a delegate to the national Republican convention at Philadelphia in 1872; has repeatedly been a delegate to State and county conventions, and a successful chairman of county committees in both Luzerne and Lackawanna counties. He was elected as a Republican in 1880 to represent the XIIth district, comprising parts of Luzerne and Lackawanna counties, in the Forty-seventh Congress, receiving 13,455 votes to 10,948 for D. W. Connolly, Democrat and National Greenback-Labor, and 4,174 votes for Hendrick B. Wright, independent Democrat.

Very Truly Yours

ment called preparatory was established, intermediate between the grammar and high school departments, and the annual graduation of a class from the high school was inaugurated with suitable commencement exercises at the close of the school year of 1876-77.

The school boards of the separate districts consolidated at the commencement of the year ending June 1st, 1878. In November, 1878, Joseph Roney was commissioned city superintendent of the Scranton school district. Under him the grades were classified alike, a uniform system of books was adopted throughout the city, and a semi-monthly teachers' institute was established. The report for the term ending with January, 1880, shows the number of school buildings in the Scranton school district to be 29, 16 of which are frame and 13 brick; number of teachers 158; number of pupils enrolled 7,673.

THE PRESS AND BOOKS AND LITERARY PEOPLE.

No printing press was set up within the present city limits until the winter of 1845, when a paper called the Providence Mirror and Lackawannian was issued at Providence. It was a bright sheet, everywhere welcomed, but the good it did was more than counterbalanced by the hostile feeling it engendered against the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, then mining coal in Archbald. Franklin B. Woodward, who two years later found a grave in Virginia, was the editor. The paper was established to advocate the erection of a new county, and if possible prevent the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company from beginning any mining operations below the village of Archbald. Harrison (as Scranton was then called) was represented by only one advertisement in this paper. Its publication ceased in 1846 or 1847.

February 5th, 1853, Charles E. Lathrop issued a prospectus for an independent weekly paper. The first number appeared April 3d following. It was called the Lackawanna Herald, and was the first journalistic venture in the borough of Scranton. January 25th, 1855, the first issue of a Democratic paper named the Spirit of the Valley appeared. It was published a year by Thomas A. Alleger and J. B. Adams, from an office next door to that of the Lackawanna Herald. At the expiration of that time it was consolidated with the Lackawanna Herald under the title of the Herald of the Union. This paper was purchased by Ezra B. Chase, a gentleman of superior literary attainments, who on account of failing health disposed of it to Dr. A. Davis and J. B. Adams. Dr. Davis purchased the interest of Mr. Adams in the spring of 1859 and sold it to Dr. Silas M. Wheeler, and the two physicians published a paper into which they infused, it is said, "a degree of originality and spiciness rarely seen in a country newspaper." February 1st, 1855, the initial number of a paper called the Tri-Weekly Experiment was issued, ostensibly by F. Dilly, from the office of the Lackawanna Herald. It was never anything but an experiment, and if it was in existence at the time of the consolidation of the Herald and the Spirit, it probably lost its identity then. In 1866 J. B. Adams begun the publication of a daily called the Morning Herald, which had a brief career. The last number of the Herald of the Union under that title appeared January 27th, 1860; but it had a subsequent existence in the Scranton Register, owned by E. S. M. Hill, who established the Daily Register, edited in its local department by J. B. Adams, which he sold in the summer of 1868 to Carl & Burtch. It subsequently passed into the hands of J. H. Burtch, Mr. Carl selling out and returning to Binghamton, whence he had come in 1868, and its publication ceased about a year later.

In August, 1856, when the Know-Nothing party was in its glory, and the whole country was in a heated Presidential contest, the first number of the Scranton Republican, a sheet 22 by 32 inches, was issued by Theodore Smith, of Montrose. The Lackawanna Herald, a Know-Nothing organ, was its only local opponent. The campaign in this section was a bitter one, and by its opposition to the Know-Nothing ticket the Republican gained somewhat in public favor; but progressed indifferently until the spring of 1858, when it was purchased by F. A. Macartney, who enlarged it and made other material changes and improvements. It was ably conducted by Mr. Macartney from 1858 to 1863, though not a successful financial enterprise, and in the summer of 1863 Thomas J. Alleger purchased the concern, and published a very inferior paper until 1866. In March of that year Mr. F. A. Crandall came from Utica, N. Y., and purchased a half interest with Mr. Alleger, and shortly afterwards became sole proprietor. During the same year Mr. Crandall disposed of a half interest to Mr. R. N. Eddy, of Cazenovia, N. Y., and in September, 1867, Mr. J. A. Scranton, the present proprietor, purchased Mr. Eddy's interest, and the first number of the Morning Republican was issued the first of the following November.

February 5th, 1868, the office was burned, with nearly all its contents. Fifteen days later the publication of the paper was resumed, and it has since been continued uninterruptedly. In March, 1869, Mr. Scranton purchased the interest of Mr. Crandall and he has since been sole proprietor. The general business of the Republican so steadily increased that in 1871 Mr. Scranton commenced the erection of the imposing and costly five-story brick and stone structure known as the Republican building, which stands as a monument to his tact, ability, enterprise and perseverance. The total value of the establishment, including the building, amounts to $100,000. The editorial and reportorial staffs of the Republican have always been chosen from competent grades, and have done much to mould opinion in the two coal valleys. The corps of paid writers, reporters and correspondents is much larger than that of any other Pennsylvania journal outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and its political utterances are a power in its party. The annual outlay for telegraphic news and special reports is large, and the unrivaled circulation of the daily in Democratic localities is the best evidence of its value as a newspaper.

The Scranton Wochenblatt, a German Democratic paper, was established by E. A. Ludwig, in January, 1865. It was sold to F. Wagner and by him to August Stutzbach, the present proprietor and publisher.

The Scranton City Journal was established in March, 1867, by E. A. & G. W. Benedict, who came from Carbondale. In 1869 Mr. S. D. Baker of Carbondale was admitted to the firm, the style of which was changed to Benedict Brothers & Baker. Mr. Baker retired at the expiration of a year and a half, the business being continued by Benedict Brothers. In 1875 G. W. Benedict purchased the interest of his brother and changed the name of the paper to the Scranton Journal. It is an independent family newspaper with Republican proclivities. A paper was issued the same year by J. D. Reagan, which was afterwards merged in the Democrat. The Examiner was published in 1868 by J. D. Reagan. It was purchased by J. B. Adams and its title was changed to the Democrat. It was a popular weekly paper several years, but has gone out of existence. It has been described as a "bold, original ultra Democratic paper." The Daily Democrat, an evening paper, was published for a time. The Baner America (American Banner), the pioneer Welsh paper of Scranton, was established in 1869. It was owned by a corporation and at different times edited by H. M. Edwards, T. B. Morris, W. S. Jones, D. J. Evans and E. R. Lewis. In 1874 it was sold to Thomas Phillips, and in 1876 to D. J. Evans, and was published and edited by him for a year, when he sold it to Messrs. Lewis & Holmes, Mr. Lewis assuming editorial charge. Its publication was discontinued in 1879. It was Republican politically and was at one time an influential party journal. It was a large, eight-page paper, neat typographically and at times ably and vigorously edited.

The Daily Times was founded in 1870 by a company. It was first edited by J. A. Clark for a few months; then by W. H. Stanton till September 1st, 1872, and since by Aaron Augustus Chase. It is published every week-day morning and is Democratic politically. The Weekly Times, founded in 1873, is published every Thursday. It is Democratic and is edited by Aaron Augustus Chase. The Law Times was founded in 1873. It is a law magazine, published every Friday; Aaron Augustus Chase editor.

The Sunday Morning Free Press, the pioneer Sunday newspaper of northeastern Pennsylvania, was started by an association of practical printers known as the Co-operative Printing Association. The first number was issued June 10th, 1872. To compensate for the lack of mail facilities, the association at once projected pony express routes to all points within twenty miles of Scranton, which have ever since been maintained and been more than doubly extended by the present management. F. A. Beamish, its present proprietor, was the first subscriber on its list. The paper was purchased by F. E. Clark February 15th, 1873, and continued in his possession until May 11th, 1874, when it was purchased by Mr. F. A. Beamish, who has since been its editor and proprietor. Its job office was burned December 14th, 1876, necessitating a removal to the Baner America office. In the spring of 1878 an entire new outfit of type and material was procured at considerable expense, and the Free Press was enlarged from a twenty-eight to a thirty-two column paper. The columns were also lengthened, increasing its size about one-fourth. July 15th, 1878, the publication office was removed to the republican building, on Wyoming avenue. The Free Press is independent-Democratic in politics, has always advocated the cause of the people and has a circulation equaled by few papers in the State outside of the large cities.

In 1873 the Hyde Park Visitor was established by Mr. E. R. Williams, better known by his nom de plume of "Jenkins." It was racy, witty and sensational, and its local news department was excellent. It was issued regularly for about eight months, gaining rapidly in popular favor and circulation. Its publication ceased on account of the sudden death of its projector and publisher.

The Scranton Herald, the official German Republican organ of Lackawanna county, was established in 1874. Mr. Nicholas Kiefer is the sole editor and proprietor. It circulates in Lackawanna, Wayne, Wyoming, Pike, Luzerne, Carbon and other counties. The Avalanche was published as a Democratic campaign paper in 1876, by the Co-operative Printing Company, J. C. Coon manager. The publication of a small paper called the Daily Observer was begun in 1877. In 1878 it passed into the hands of Messrs. Holmes & Jones, who changed its name to the Evening Star and continued its publication a short time.

The People's Shield (Tarian y Bobe), another Welsh paper, was issued in 1877 by John Morris, editor and proprietor. Its political proclivities were Republican. It was a neatly printed weekly sheet, sprightly and newsy, and its editorial department was vigorous. Some of the best Welsh writers contributed to its columns. Its publication was discontinued in 1878, owing to a change in the politics of the Welsh people of the counties of Luzerne and Schuylkill, who were its chief supporters. During 1877 a comic paper, the Welsh Punch (Y Pionch), was started; but its matter was obnoxious to a large class of the Welsh population, and its life was short.

November 1st, 1878, Reagan & Higgins issued the first number of the Sunday Visitor, the publication of which was continued about six months. In the fall of 1877 the Industrial Advocate was established by the Industrial Advocate Publishing Company. It appeared regularly for about a year. In 1878 the initial number of the Daily Advocate was issued. It suspended in four or five months.

The Workingman's Banner (Baner y Gweithiwr) is owned and edited by D. J. Evans. It is a Welsh Republican paper, well printed, interesting and spicy. It is creditably edited and has a corps of able contributors. It has a large and increasing circulation. Its publication was begun in May, 1879. The Lackawanna Union was the name of a daily campaign paper published a few months in 1879 in the interest of William H. Stanton, then a candidate for additional law judge of the 45th judicial district. The Sunday Breeze was published two weeks in 1879 by the Breeze Publishing Company. It was merged in the News-Dealer, a Sunday paper published simultaneously at Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. The Scranton department is ably conducted by Mr. Frank P. Woodward. Several Welsh campaign papers have been issued at various times. The Providence Echo was started in 1879. It is probable that mention of some papers which have had an ephemeral existence has been omitted, but it is thought that all journals which have ever been established and become well known have received due attention. A paper in the interest of the Knights of Pythias was published in Scranton for a short time. An advertising sheet was published in the interest of the business men of Scranton by Mr. John T. Howe during 1877. It had a large gratuitous circulation, and was issued monthly.

The Christmas Argosy, an annual, containing many valuable articles of high literary character, was issued during the holidays of 1879-80 by John E. Barrett and Frank P. Woodward. Captain O'Brien's Monthly Magazine first appeared February 4th, 1880. It is a neat brochure of romance, poetry and news of the day. Its motto is "to serve God, aid mankind and make money," and it will be issued on the last Saturday of every month. The legal fraternity of Lackawanna county have supported several law publications, which have been or are issued in Scranton.

A love for business and a taste for literary matters are opposites, generally speaking. Scranton has fostered the one and not the other; the result is few writers and authors within its limits.

Richard Drinker, who died in Scranton a few years ago, was a quaint writer of poetry and prose of unquestioned merit. He published no books, and it is to be regretted that his effusions were not collected and preserved in a printed volume for posterity, for they well deserve a place in all libraries. Rev. George Peck, D. D., a pioneer Methodist Episcopal minister in this portion of Pennsylvania and an author of national reputation, wrote and published the "History of Wyoming," "Early Methodism" and many other religious and historical works of great labor and value, which are everywhere regarded as standard publications. The city of Scranton may well feel proud of the literary achievements of this remarkable man, who has gone to his reward. "Contributions to the History of the Lackawanna Valley," a volume of 328 pages, issued in 1857, and "The History of the Lackawanna Valley," entirely re-written and enlarged to 442 pages, published in 1869 and 1875 by H. Hollister, M. D., are well known works of rare historical merit and more than local popularity. For the last thirty years the doctor has contributed many articles to the magazines and newspapers of the country. He is now preparing the history of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. Mrs. Harriet G. Watres, wife of Alderman Lewis S. Watres, of Scranton, whose tender and patriotic sonnets have been widely read, under the nom de plume of "Stella of Lackawanna," has adorned many literary magazines and newspapers with her poetic gems. In her poetry, which as yet has never been published in book form, are pictured real scenes of nature in rare pathos, sometimes radiant with sunshine, but oftener tinged with a pathetic sadness. Her "Centennial Ode," at Wyoming, July 4th, 1878, was not only original and grand in its character, but in the language of that fine critic the Rev. Abel Barker, of Wyoming, "it was a poem that Longfellow himself might be proud of." "The Wyoming Valley, Upper Waters of the Susquehanna and the Lackawanna Coal Region," by James Albert Clark, appeared first in pamphlet and then in book form in 1875. It is an attractive and valuable work, illustrated with twenty-five photographs. The chapters devoted to railroad and mining history evince much painstaking research. The work is well written and is valued by those interested in local history.

The most versatile writer in Scranton is recognized in the local editor of the Scranton Daily Republican, Hon. John E. Barrett, who for the last six years has given this department of the paper spirit, popularity and character. No man in Scranton can take the raw material of daily events and transfer them so readily and in so life-like a way to paper as this gentleman. He lays no claim to the gift of beautifying creation in poetry, but his sensibilities are so fine as to be in themselves poetical. If he excels in any one branch of literary work it is as a novelist, all of his stories having been widely and some of them extensively read. Frank P. Woodward, who manages the Scranton office of the Sunday News-Dealer and is one of the editors of that paper, is a graceful writer of tales, many of which have appeared in the popular journals of the day. As a writer of historical and statistical articles on Scranton and the Lackawanna valley Hon. Lewis Pughe is well known. Colonel H. M. Boies is a contributor to magazines, writing on military and kindred topics.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

May 10th, 1855, Mason, Meylert & Co. opened the first bank in the city at the corner of Wyoming avenue and Center street. The building now occupied by the Scranton Savings Bank was erected and occupied by this firm about 1860. There were two or three changes in the organization of the firm, which continued business until about 1864, Gordon F. Mason and Michael and A. N. Meylert being the partners.

The Lackawanna Valley Bank had its origin in the private banking house of George Sanderson & Co., who began business in November, 1855. In August, 1873, the institution was incorporated as a State bank, with a paid-up capital of $83,500. The original policy of sustaining a department for general banking business and a department devoted exclusively to savings deposits, bearing interest payable semi-annually, is continued by the Lackawanna Valley Bank. In 1880 George Sanderson was president and W. E. Watkins cashier.

The Second National Bank of Scranton was established in the latter part of 1863, and is now in the hands of a receiver. The officers chosen at the time of organization were as follows: President, T. F. Hunt; vice-president, Doctor John Wilson; cashier, W. W. Winton. The receiver is Mr. G. S. Goodale. In 1865 the First National Bank of Providence was organized. It was consolidated with the Second National Bank of Scranton.

The First National Bank of Scranton was organized May 30th, 1863, with a capital of $200,000. The directors were Joseph H. Scranton, Thomas Dickson, John Brisbin, Joseph J. Albright and Joseph C. Platt; president, Joseph H. Scranton; vice-president, Joseph J. Albright; cashier, William Cushing. John Brisbin removed to New York in 1864 and George L. Dickson was elected to fill the vacancy. William Cushing, cashier, resigned in June, 1865, and James A. Linen succeeded him. Joseph H. Scranton died at Baden Baden, Germany, June 6th, 1872, and Joseph J. Albright was elected president, Joseph C. Platt vice-president, and James Blair director. Dividends of ten per cent. were made from the date of organization to 1869; from 1869 to 1872, twelve per cent.; from 1872 to 1874, sixteen per cent.; from 1874 to 1880, twenty per cent., and in addition the bank has accumulated a surplus of $255,000. Edward S. Jackson has been teller since 1867.

The Scranton Savings Bank was incorporated February 26th, 1867. T. F. Hunt, George Fisher, J. H. Sutphin, S. Grant, John Hadley, C. P. Matthews and all other subsequent stock holders were named as the incorporators. August 5th, 1867, James Blair subscribed for one hundred shares of capital stock, and S. Grant, T. F. Hunt, George Fisher, J. H. Sutphin, John Handley, J. S. Slocum, Charles P. Matthews and A. E. Hunt fifty shares each, making 500 at a par value of $100 each, and the amount subscribed $50,000, fifty per cent. of which was paid in then, and the balance July 6th, 1870.

September 10th, 1867, the following permanent organization was effected; James Blair, president; James Archbald and John H. Sutphin, vice-presidents; T. F. Hunt, secretary; Oscar C. Moore, cashier; the first four and John Handley, S. Grant, Daniel Howell, George Fisher and James S. Slocum directors and trustees. The bank was opened October 7th, 1867, at No. 309 Lackawanna avenue. In June, 1869, the building No. 120 Wyoming avenue, known as the "Meylert Banking House," was purchased and the bank removed thereto, where it has since been located.

George H. Birdsall succeeded Mr. Moore as cashier January 1st, 1876, and H. A. Vail succeeded Mr. Birdsall April 20th, 1878. Of the original managers only James Blair, George Fisher and James S. Slocum remain. The management in 1879 consisted of John I. Blair, James Blair, George Fisher, A. M. Decker, G. H. Catlin, James Archbald, jr., G. A. Fuller, James S. Slocum and H. A. Vail, directors and trustees; James Blair, president; H. A. Vail, secretary and cashier. The original managers (practically) continued in office until June, 1877, the bank doing a remunerative business; but the hard times obliged some of them to resign. The new managers who (in June, 1877, and later, in 1878,) followed remain directors and trustees.

The resignations mentioned and the rumors and suspicions thereby excited culminated in June, 1877, in a three weeks run upon the bank by depositors, during which the bank paid out about $62,500. The new management increased the capital stock to $100,000, of which amount $99,000 have been paid in. The bank transacts a general banking business, and deals in foreign and domestic exchange and government bonds and sells steamship tickets.

The Scranton Trust Company and Savings Bank, organized January 1st, 1870, is now in the hands of an assignee.

The Merchants and Mechanics' Bank of Scranton was organized August 6th, 1870, succeeding in business John Handley & Co., with the following directors: John Handley, Daniel Howell, Thomas Moore, D. T. Richards, Patrick M. Cann, Edward Jones, D. B. Brainard, J. H. Gunster, M. M. Kearney, D. B. Oakes and Peter Burschel. Hon. John Handley was elected president, J. C. Burgess vice-president, and W. H. Fuller cashier. The paid-up capital of the bank was $125,000; the authorized capital $500,000. The place of business was and is at No. 420 Lackawanna avenue. May 18th, 1871, R. T. McCabe was elected cashier in place of Mr. Fuller, resigned, and in March, 1873, the capital stock was increased to $250,000. In 1875 Mr. Handley retired from the presidency, having been elected judge of Luzerne county, and E. Phinney succeeded him. In 1876 R. T. McCabe was elected treasurer of the Pennsylvania Anthracite Coal Company, and John T. Richards became cashier. The present officers are: Daniel Howell, president; Thomas Moore, vice-president; John T. Richards, cashier. The directors are Daniel Howell, Thomas Moore, Edward Jones, James Jordan and D. B. Brainard. Up to February 1st, 1880, the bank had paid in dividends to its stockholders $150,000, besides adding a surplus of $50,000, and paying to depositors $75,290.51 as interest, and $22,963.50 in taxes.

The Third National Bank of Scranton was organized March 1st, 1872, by the election of the following directors: Alfred Hand, John Jermyn, Lewis Pughe, J. A. Scranton, Henry M. Boies, William Matthews, George H. Catlin, James Archbald, William Connell, Frederick W. Gunster and Edward C. Lynde. The following officers were chosen: President, Alfred Hand; vice-president, George H. Catlin; secretary and temporary cashier, Edward C. Lynde. March 16th, 1872, N. H. Shafer was elected cashier. The bank began business April 15th, 1872, at 504 Lackawanna avenue, with a capital of $200,000, and removed to the Republican building July 29th, 1872. The present commodious building was erected by the bank and occupied November 1st, 1877. Hon. Alfred Hand was appointed additional law judge in March, 1879, and resigned the presidency of the bank. Lewis Pughe, vice-president (since January, 1875), acted as president the remainder of the year. January 13th, 1880, the board of directors was reduced from eleven to nine, and the following persons were elected directors for the ensuing year: William Connell, George H. Catlin, John Jermyn, Lewis Pughe, H. M. Boies, James Archbald, Fred. W. Gunster, Henry Belin, jr., and W. H. Richmond. The officers elected were: William Connell, president; George H. Catlin, vice-president; N. H. Shafer, secretary and cashier. The capital is $200,000; surplus, $35,000.

LACKAWANNA VALLEY HOUSE.

I. E. WHIPPLE.

I. Eugene Whipple, son of Isaac and Emma (Lathrop) Whipple, was born in Jackson, Susquehanna county, Pa., February 19th, 1849. His great-grandfather, Ebenezer Whipple, a native of Connecticut, came to Susquehanna county and settled near Montrose in 1793, upon a farm which he cleared up, and upon which he resided until his death, being more than eighty years of age. He had three sons who came with the family, all of whom married and reared families. The eldest, Ebenezer, jr., was one of the first settlers in Iowa. Hiram, a farmer, settled in Susquehanna county, where he died in 1872, aged seventy-eight years. Cyrus lived in Susquehanna county until he was nearly seventy years of age, when he moved to Iowa, where his sons had resided several years. He died in 1878, aged eighty years. Isaac, the father of the subject of our sketch, is a physician, and has been in practice for several years in Stevensville, Bradford county, Pa. He had seven children—four sons and three daughters—all living. I. Eugene, the eldest, spent his boyhood at home and in the schools of his native town. He completed his education at the Stevensville Academy, where he was a student for three years. After he became of age he purchased the stage business between Laceyville and Montrose, which he carried on for one year, when he sold out and entered the boot and shoe trade in Stevensville. After continuing the business a year he sold out and was engaged as clerk in the Eagle Hotel, Pittston, which position he filled three years, when (in 1876) he became the proprietor of the St. Charles Hotel in the same place. In 1878 he came to Scranton and leased the Lackawanna Valley House, of which he is at present the popular proprietor; a view of the house may be seen above.

On October 11th, 1876, he married S. Ophelia, daughter of Evan Evans, of Jackson Valley, Susquehanna county, Pa. She was born August 27th, 1854. Mr. Whipple is a Republican in politics, but never sought political preferment. He is identified with the Baptist church, of which both his parents have been members for several years.

E. W. Simrell

EUGENE W. SIMRELL.

Eugene W. Simrell was born in Scott township, Luzerne (now Lackawanna) county, October 3d, 1851, the eldest child of Warren W. and Frances C. (Decker) Simrell. His great-grandfather, William Simrell, emigrated with his family from Ireland and settled in Rhode Island. His grandfather, Nathaniel Simrell, was born in Rhode Island, married Lydia Wall, moved from Rhode Island and settled in Scott township, Luzerne county, about the year 1800, and raised a large family there.

Warren W. Simrell, E. W. Simrell's father, was born in Scott, and married Frances C. Decker, daughter of Stephen and Louisa (Giddings) Decker. By this union there were seven children, three of whom are deceased. Henrietta, Myra and Lydia, three daughters, are living at home.

Eugene W. Simrell was brought up on a farm. He received his education in the common school at Scott, Gardner's Commercial College at Scranton, Kingston Seminary and the Bloomsburg and Mansfield State normal schools. In 1873 he entered the Albany law school, from which institution he was graduated in 1874, receiving the degree of LL. B. He opened a law office in Scranton in the fall of the same year, and has practiced his profession there since.

In politics Mr. Simrell is a Republican. In 1875 he was appointed by the U. S. Circuit Court commissioner for the western district of Pennsylvania, which position he held up to January 1st, 1880. He received the nomination of the Republican party for district attorney in 1878 and was elected; but by the decision of the Supreme Court the election being declared void, he did not serve. At the election in 1879, having again received the nomination of his party to the office, he was elected, and he is the present incumbent of the office, the duties of which he has filled to the entire satisfaction of the community. Of the many young attorneys who largely compose the membership of the Lackawanna county bar, it may well be said that none have made a better record or give greater promise of future success in the profession than Eugene W. Simrell.

The Scranton Savings Bank and Trust Company was organized December 13th, 1873, and opened for business June 10th, 1874, with a capital of $250,000, and with the following directors and officers: John Handley, E. A. Coray, F. D. Collins, U. M. Stowers, E. N. Willard, Thomas Phillips and Rev. Moses Whitty, directors; E. N. Willard, president; John Handley and Rev. Moses Whitty, vice-presidents; L. A. Watres, cashier. January 4th, 1875, John Handley, having been elected law judge of Luzerne county, resigned the presidency and E. N. Willard was elected in his stead. A good business is now (1880) being done under the following management: Directors, E. N. Willard, William M. Silkman, E. P. Kingsbury, Hon. F. D. Collins, M. J. Wilson and L. A. Watres; president, E. N. Willard; vice-president, William M. Silkman; secretary, L. A. Watres; cashier, A. H. Christy.

The Scranton City Bank was incorporated in 1873. The capital is $500,000. The president is Victor Koch; the cashier, J. H. Gunster.

The Miners and Mechanics' Loan and Banking Association, of Hyde Park, was organized in May, 1874, with the following named officers: Hon. George Sanderson, president; A. B. Stevens, secretary and treasurer; H. T. Sawyer, cashier. Mr. Sawyer was succeeded by L. Reynolds in 1876. Mr. Reynolds died in November, 1877, and was succeeded by the present cashier, A. B. Eynon.

The Citizens and Miners' Savings Bank and Trust Company of Providence, now in the hands of assignees, had its origin in the private banking firm of Winton, Clark & Co. There have been from time to time private banking offices opened in different parts of the city.

INCORPORATION AND CIVIL HISTORY.

The city of Scranton was incorporated April 23d, 1866, and embraces within its territorial limits all that then remained of the ancient township of Providence and the boroughs of Providence, Hyde Park and Scranton.

The act of incorporation provided for the division of the city into twelve wards, constituted as follows: 1st ward, that part of the borough of Providence lying northeast of East Market street and the old road leading to Scranton; 2nd ward, the remaining portion of the borough of Providence, lying southwest of said street and road; 3d ward, the remaining portion of the township of Providence; 4th ward, that part of the borough of Hyde Park lying northeast of Jackson street and the road leading to Scranton; 5th ward, that portion of Hyde Park borough lying southwest of the said street and road and west of the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg Railroad track; 6th ward, the remaining portions of the borough of Hyde Park, lying east of said railway and south of the road to Scranton; 7th ward, all that portion of Scranton borough lying north of Pine brook; 8th ward, that portion of the said borough lying south of Pine brook and north of Roaring brook between the Lackawanna river and Washington avenue; 9th ward, that portion of the said borough lying north of Roaring brook and between Washington avenue and the southeasterly borough line, except so much of said territory as was included in the tenth ward; 10th ward, that portion of the said borough bounded on the southwest by Olive street, on the northwest by Clay avenue, on the northeast by the borough line and the boundary line of said borough on the southeast; 11th ward, that portion of the said borough lying south of Roaring brook, between the Lackawanna river and Pittston avenue; 12th ward; the remaining portion of the said borough lying southwest of Roaring brook and southeast of Pittston avenue. In 1875 the 2nd, 4th, 5th, 8th and 9th wards were divided, creating the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th wards. The 13th was formed from a part of the second and a small portion of the borough of Dunmore; the 14th was taken from the 4th, the 15th from the 5th, the 16th from the 8th and the 17th from the 9th. In 1876 the 6th and 12th wards were divided, creating the 18th from the former and the 19th and 20th wards from the latter. The 3d ward was divided in 1877, forming the 21st.

Under the act of April 23d, 1866, each of the wards was entitled to one member in the select and two members in the common council, to be elected at the annual municipal elections, held on the first Tuesday of June. An act supplementary to that above referred to was passed March 30th, 1867, reducing the number of members of the common council so that each ward should have only one representative in that branch. This apportionment continued in force until April 4th, 1877, when the new charter, under the act of May 23d, 1874, was adopted, by authority of which each ward was again entitled to two members of the common council and an additional member for every four hundred taxable inhabitants and fraction thereof exceeding three hundred.

The successive mayors, with their terms of service under the first charter, were as follows: E. S. M. Hill, 1866-69; William N. Monies, 1869-72; M. W. Loftus, 1872-75; R. H. McKune, 1875-78.

The first select council was organized June 9th, 1866, at the office of Hand & Post. S. G. Oram was unanimously chosen chairman and E. N. Willard secretary. The following were the members of the council: 1st ward, Henry Roberts; 2nd, Frank B. Marsh; 3d, S. G. Oram; 4th, A. B. Stevens; 5th, Edmund Heermans; 6th, Patrick Mahon; 7th, Patrick Scanlon; 8th, Samuel Shopland; 9th, Alfred Hand; 10th, Maurice Taner; 11th, Jacob Robinson; 12th, Darby Melvin.

The first common council was organized at Washington Hall, June 23d, 1866. J. H. Gunster was chosen chairman and Charles Du Pont Breck secretary. The members were T. F. Hunt, George Græber, George Griffin, D. Evans, James Brogan, John Waller, H. O. Silkman, Walter Phillips, Joseph Westhausen, William P. Connell, Thomas Watkins, Patrick Walsh, Paul Jones, Michael Corbett, Charles Schlager, Thomas E. Geddis, L. Toomey, Peter Gallagher, F. W. Watson, Adam Koch, George Hartman, John Walsh, J. H. Gunster and J. T. Walsh.

Under the act of April 23d, 1866, the select council exercised the functions of ex officio commissioners, and as such had complete control of the city finances, making contracts, levying taxes and disbursing all public money. Under the act of May 23d, 1874, the select and common councils have equal power in passing bills, enacting ordinances and the transaction of other business formerly belonging to the select council only. After claims are presented against the city they must pass both councils, and afterward the mayor and the controller must both approve them before they can be paid; and the controller is empowered to take legal evidence and demand that any claim shall be sworn to if he has any reason to suspect it.

The new charter was adopted by the council March 16th, 1877. The action of the councils was as soon as practicable reported to the governor of Pennsylvania, who approved the same and issued letters patent to the city April 4th following. Charles Du Pont Breck was elected first controller. He was succeeded by E. P. Kingsbury. The first mayor elected under the new charter, T. V. Powderly, was elected in 1878 and re-elected in 1880.

According to the report of the controller of the city, the following is the financial statement of the resources and indebtedness for the year ending March 31st, 1879: Bonded debt, $326,300; floating debt, represented by warrants outstanding, $18,797.43; unsettled claims to date, $8,001.69; total $353,099.09; less resources ($154,026.70), $199,072.39, the net debt; showing an actual decrease in the net debt of $47,789.39 since the controller's last annual report.

The following is a list of the aldermen elected in the different wards of the city:

First ward—G. W. Miller, 1870, 1875. Second—Ebenezer Leach, 1870, 1875; J. L. Lawrence, 1877. Third—Michael Gallagher, 1867, 1873; Thomas Dougherty, 1875. Fourth—David M. Jones, 1868, 1873; Richard K. Cranfield, 1877. Fifth—Benjamin Slocum, 1866; John Levi, 1871; M. L. Blair, 1876. Sixth—Patrick Coroner, 1869; John Timlin, 1871; P. Mahon, 1875, 1876. Seventh—Matthew W. Loftus, 1866, 1871, 1877; John Barrett, 1873. Eighth—Benjamin Jay, 1871; Frederick Fuller, 1871; Francis E. Loomis, 1875; C. W. Roesler, 1876. Ninth—Lewis S. Watres, 1866, 1871, 1876. Tenth—John Butterman, 1867. Eleventh—Freeman Moore, 1869; Leopold Schimpff, 1874. Twelfth—Thomas D. Kelly, 1871; Michael J. Mahon, 1874; James Hannon, 1875. Thirteenth—G. P. McMillan. Fourteenth—John Cawley. Fifteenth—John Levi. Sixteenth—Frederick Fuller. Seventeenth—Isaac L. Post. These last five were commissioned March 21st, 1876. Eighteenth—James M. Brogan, 1876; John Kelly, 1877. Nineteenth—James Hannon, 1877. Twentieth—Patrick Monre, 1877; Patrick Roach, 1878.

SCRANTON POOR DISTRICT.

In this district (formerly known as Providence township), as elsewhere in the then county of Luzerne, the poor were before the incorporation of the district cared for by the township and were farmed out to the lowest bidder. This annual hiring or letting out of the paupers is said to have been the occasion of much competition, and inasmuch as they were awarded to the lowest bidder it usually happened that the price was low and the fare correspondingly meagre. As time went on greater attention here as in other portions of the country was given to the subject of public charities, and the gradual development of the present and prospective facilities for the care of the poor is the result. In April, 1862, a law was enacted by the legislature "to authorize the erection of a poor house by the borough of Dunmore, borough of Scranton and township of Providence." The incorporators and first commissioners were Edward Spencer, of Dunmore; Joseph Slocum and David K. Kressler, of Scranton; and Henry Griffin, of Providence. On the 30th of June, 1862, the district purchased a farm (now known as the "Hillside farm") in the township of Newton, about nine miles from Scranton. Additions to this have since been made and it now consists of about 148 acres, the original cost of which was $9,020.50. The farm house was first used as a poor house, but later another was erected. It was a wooden building 30 by 60 feet, two stories in height above the basement, and the farm house has since been used as the superintendent's residence. The insane hospital, 30 feet square, two stories in height, stands 60 feet in the rear of the old poor-house. In 1878 a new poor-house was completed. It is of brick, 50 by 100 feet and four stories in height. The dining room, kitchen, etc., are in the basement and the dormitories and other rooms in the other stories. It is heated by steam and each floor is supplied with both cold and hot water. Throughout it is well finished and it is capable of accommodating 250 paupers. The cost of the building and fixtures was $18,000. It is intended to build a central administrative building of brick, 56 by 64 feet, 2 stories in height above the basement, with a wing on each side, of the same height, 45 by 50 feet, for the insane, one for females, the other for males, each with a capacity for 50 patients. These are to be placed at one side of the present poor house. On the other side of these another poor house is to be built, like the present one, and when completed one will be used for males and the other for females.

THE POST-OFFICE, PAST AND PRESENT.

The post-office in Providence township was originally established at Slocum Hollow in 1811, with Benjamin Slocum as the first postmaster. In 1829 the office was removed to Providence and John Vaughn was appointed postmaster. An office was established at Hyde Park in 1832. William Merrifield was postmaster there. The mail was carried weekly on horseback from Easton to Bethany, by Zephaniah Knapp, via Wilkes-Barre and Providence. It has been stated that all of the mail sent to the Lackawanna settlement at that time was a small package in comparison with the amount now received daily by any one of a number of the leading business firms of Scranton. In 1850 a post-office was established at the Hollow with John W. Moore as postmaster. The receipts for the ensuing year were $901.27. A striking contrast between the amount of postal business at that time and that of the present will be observed by reference to the following exhibit of the amount of mail matter handled at the three post-offices within the city limits during the first seven days of November, 1879:

	Scranton.	Hyde Park.	Providence.	Total.
Letters and postals sent,	13,380	1,180	1,057	15,617

A. H. WINTON.

A. H. Winton was born November 17th, 1838, at Scranton, Pa. He received his preparation for college at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pa., Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass. He graduated at Mount Washington College, the valedictorian of his class. During this period his father was engaged in mercantile pursuits in New York, and having returned to Scranton, Pa., became a leading banker, and for many years was president of the Second National Bank.

After graduation our subject read law with David R. Randall, Esq., and on the 22nd of August, 1860, was admitted to practice in the several courts of Luzerne county, and in due time to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and the various courts of the United States. He became an accurate short-hand reporter, but never practiced it for remuneration, and declined the appointment of court reporter when tendered to him by the Hon. John N. Conyngham. His systematic business habits, and arrangement and care of papers and dockets, won the admiration of clients and fellow attorneys, and he devised the present admirable arrangement of keeping the dockets, issue-lists, etc., in the Prothonotaries' offices at Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. He prepared and published the Luzerne Legal Journal, now continued under the name of the Luzerne Legal Register, and was long connected with the Scranton Law Times, the legal official organ of the courts of the county of Lackawanna. Immediately after his admission to the bar he entered into a business partnership with Hon. Garrick M. Harding, late president judge of Luzerne county; and in the first three months of his law practice he was engaged in the famous Corwin murder trial, and in his maiden speech, in this case, at once gained renown as a talented, gifted and powerful debater and orator. Since then he has been engaged in very many of the most prominent criminal and civil cases, where he was associated with or opposed to many of the criminal lawyers, judges and attorneys of Pennsylvania.

In 1866 he removed from Wilkes-Barre to Scranton, and at once took rank among the foremost pleaders at that bar. He conducted the prosecution and secured the conviction of the Carbonade Bank robbers, who, being well disguised, on the 14th of January, 1875, entered the First National Bank of Carbonade, Pa., at noon, and after gagging the cashier succeeded in escaping with many thousand dollars. In connection with detective Robert Finkerton, as counsel for the bank, Mr. Winton went to work with scarcely a shadow of a clue to begin with, and eventually emeshed all the robbers and their accomplices in the net of the law, and recovered most of the stolen funds.

On the 12th of December, 1874, four young men from Binghamton arrived in Scranton and began to buy all the oil barrels that could be obtained from about forty of the leading merchants in Scranton, Dunmore and adjacent villages, paying in many places nearly double price, they claiming that they needed them immediately for a Binghamton oil refinery. Suspicious were aroused at their strange and hasty conduct, and it was discovered that there was a sharp law in Pennsylvania fixing a penalty of $300 for selling any barrel without removing the brand of the inspector, and very many of these oil barrels were so sold. These audacious young men from another State at once began to teach Pennsylvanians their own law by bringing several suits for many thousand dollars as fines and penalties. Great consternation seized upon the merchants and they at once retained Mr. Winton, who forthwith caused the arrest of the young men upon a criminal charge, which was so vigorously prosecuted that they were at length glad to settle, and withdraw their suits for penalties and escape over the line, to feast their eyes upon their expensive oil barrels; and they have never since attempted to operate in such a "corner."

Mr. Winton appeared in the defense of F. A. Beamish in the celebrated Free Press libel suit, prosecuted by Judge Alfred Hand, growing out of the publication of an article entitled the "School Board Muddle," and after a three days struggle, wherein he was pitted against attorney general H. W. Palmer and other distinguished counsel, he bore his client through all difficulties and on the 27th of May, 1875, secured the coveted prize of a verdict of acquittal.

The court rules of Luzerne county, by reason of various amendments, having reached a somewhat chaotic condition, the court on the 4th of January, 1878, appointed a committee to revise the same. Mr. Winton as chairman of this committee reported a complete set of rules, which were promptly approved by the rest of the committee and were soon almost entirely adopted by the court, and subsequently formed the basis for the rules of the court of Lackawanna county.

In many other important causes than those named, notably that of the State vs. F. S. Pauli, in which he made the closing argument for the commonwealth Mr. Winton has taken a leading part as attorney for prosecution or defense. In the latter case he was opposed by Daniel Dougherty, the noted and eloquent lawyer of Philadelphia.

Mr. Winton is often called upon for speeches on other occasions than in arguments before juries. Upon the same day he won his verdict in the last case named above, on the occasion of the opening of the armory of the Scranton City Guards, on behalf of the citizens he made the presentation speech. He was selected to make the Decoration Day address at the Academy of Music on the 30th of May, 1878, before the Veterans Association. He has had the honor upon several occasions to deliver addresses at the request of the lady managers of the Home for the Friendless, at large assemblies, and upon several excursions had in their behalf. He also greatly aided the Father Mathew Society by frequently delivering addresses and recitations for them. The Robert Burns Lodge of Odd Fellows had him as their orator on one or two of their anniversary festivals.

The struggle for a division of Luzerne county, reaching back to a time before his birth, engaged his attention for years up to 1878, when with purse, pen and tongue he became one of the most active new county advocates, daily writing editorials and nightly speaking in its behalf until the election of the 17th of August, 1878, crowned the efforts of its friends with Lackawanna county as an established fact.

The 24th of October, 1877, was a red letter day in the history of Scranton, the occasion being an inspection and review of the City Guard and the first regiment of the State militia by Governor J. F. Hartranft and staff. A collation was tendered by the prominent citizens at noon in the Lackawanna Valley House, General Morron, field and staff, of the regular army, Colonel Howard, field and staff, N. G. Pa., and other prominent national and State officers and military men, who had been on active duty during the late riots, were assembled. Of Mr. Winton's after dinner speech made on this occasion the Scranton Republican of the next day said: "Mr. Winton's effort was replete with eloquence, beauty, wit and fun, and he was greeted with long applause."

In the temperance work Mr. Winton has manifested ability, earnestness and talent. When on his summer vacation in Massachusetts the papers of that State spoke of him as an "eloquent, powerful and very brilliant temperance speaker." In July, 1877, he was the orator on the occasion of a large temperance meeting at Plymouth, Pa., and the Scranton Evening Star, in reporting the meeting, said: "Mr. Winton was the principal speaker of the evening, and in his eloquent style spoke for an hour, holding his audience spell-bound by his remarkable oratorical powers, apt quotations and wonderful brilliancy in describing the evils of intemperance." Other city papers of Scranton and Wilkes-Barre have noticed his temperance addresses in the most glowing terms.

At the convention of the reform party, which met at Harrisburg on the 12th of September, 1877, he was unanimously placed in nomination as candidate for the high office of judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. The Philadelphia Times in noticing his nomination says: "A. H. Winton, the candidate for supreme judge, is a prominent, accomplished and highly respected lawyer of Scranton, in the prime of life. He is not a politician in the generally accepted sense of the term, but possesses all the necessary qualifications for his office. A more worthy and suitable person could not be found in our State, and the convention may be considered fortunate in this selection."

A few years since he became largely interested in several tracts of coal land, whereon is situated the thriving village of Winton, recently incorporated as a borough and as a mark of honor given his name. For the ten years previous to 1877 he had been director of the poor of Scranton, and most of the time acting secretary. His urbanity of manner, systematic habits of business, and clear judgment have won the esteem of the needy and hearty commendation of his fellow citizens.

At the organization of the Law and Library Association he was made treasurer, and has ever since retained that position; and for many years has also been treasurer of the Coeur de Lion Commandery, of Scranton.

He married on the 8th of May, 1865, Alice M. Collings, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a daughter of the late Hon. Samuel P. Collings, former U. S. consul at Tangier, and a granddaughter of Hon. Andrew Beaumont, deceased, former member of Congress from this district, whose honored sons, Colonel B. B. Beaumont, U. S. A. cavalry instructor at West Point, and Commodore J. C. Beaumont, U. S. navy, commandant of navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., are among the most distinguished officers now serving our country. Among her other relatives are Jacob S. Dillinger, attorney and late prothonotary at Allentown, Pa.; Henry C. Smith, cashier of the First National Bank of Wilkes-Barre; Lieutenant E. Z. Steever, mathematical instructor at West Point, and John B. Collings, attorney-at-law at Scranton.

WILLIAM S. JONES.

William S. Jones was born in Boonville, Oneida county, N. Y., July 31st, 1832, of poor but respectable parents, who emigrated to the United States from Anglesea-shire, North Wales, in 1830, and located in Oneida county. In February, 1839, his parents emigrated from that place and settled in Carbondale, Luzerne (now Lackawanna) county, where his father died, October 21st, 1841, leaving his mother with five children. In 1849 his mother contracted a second marriage, with Mr. William D. Thomas, who died November 19th, 1862, leaving her a widow for the second time. She died April 24th, 1871. Nine children were born to them, four in Wales and the other five in this country, of whom only three are living. The subject of our sketch was the first of the family born in America. When his father died he was obliged to go out into the world to earn his own living, and for two years was hired out to farmers in Susquehanna county, the first year for his board and a suit of clothes and a quarter of schooling in the winter. He received his board and the suit of clothes, but he was denied the privilege of even as much as seeing the inside of a school-house. The second year his pay was $1 per month and board. From this time forward he was obliged to toil hard to assist his mother to support the family. In the winter of 1845-6 he drifted into the coal mines, and the first work he did was that of loading coal; which for the time ended January 12th, 1846, when the mine in which he was working caved in, killing fifteen persons and imprisoning about sixty others. Our miner boy toiled in the mines until he grew to manhood, performing every kind of work connected with mining. By his own exertion, by study at night often extending into the early hours of the morning, and without a tutor, he acquired a good English education.

In December, 1859, he left the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania and settled in West Springfield, Mass. In his new home, among entire strangers, he was engaged to take charge of a large farm, consisting of 310 acres, within about three miles of the city of Springfield. He followed this new avocation until the Rebellion broke out, in the spring of 1861, when he enlisted for three years in Company I of the 10th Mass. volunteer infantry, serving his full term of enlistment in the Army of the Potomac. The regiment was mustered into the United States service June 21st, 1861, and mustered out July 1st, 1864. He took part in nearly all the battles fought by the Army of the Potomac, from the first battle of Bull Run, July 21st, 1861, until and including the battle of Spottsylvania Court-house, at which, May 18th, 1864, he was wounded. Before he recovered from his wounds, his term of enlistment having expired, he was honorably discharged, and his soldier life ended.

In November, 1864, after returning from the army, he was induced to return to Pennsylvania by the entreaties of his aged mother, and on reaching his old home in Hyde Park he was again employed as a miner until his health failed, in March, 1869. On the 9th of August of the same year he was engaged by the "Baner America Company" as managing editor of "Baner America," a Welsh weekly newspaper. After five years' experience as an editor he resigned that position, and devoted himself for two years to the study of mining and mechanical engineering, the chemistry of gases found in coal mines, the science of ventilation and other scientific and philosophical subjects, with the view of entering a competitive examination for an appointment to the position of "inspector of coal mines," under an act of Assembly entitled "an act providing for the health and safety of persons employed in coal mines," approved March 3d, 1870. He was appointed to this responsible position on the recommendation of a board of examiners by Governor Hartranft, October 4th, 1876, for the term of five years. Nearly all the corporations and operators engaged in mining coal exerted their whole influence in opposition to his appointment. In relation to this he said: "I am not conscious of ever having done anything to justify the opposition of these parties. Their reasons for opposing my appointment are best known by themselves." He has held this important office now for four years, and has endeavored to perform his duties conscientiously, and with as much moderation and forbearance to all parties concerned as the health and safety of the 16,000 to 17,000 persons for whose benefit the office was created would permit. Great improvements have been effected in the condition of the colliers under his charge, and the ventilation of the mines has been vastly improved under his direction, thus improving the sanitary condition of the mines to a great extent. Evidently he has never sought for the commendation or approbation of any class, high or low, rich or poor, only when it comes to him in the path of right and justice. He has never been known to do an unjust or dishonorable act for policy's sake, and never could believe that it is ever justifiable to "do evil that good may come." At present Mr. Jones is president of the Welsh Philosophical Society and Free Library Association, of Hyde Park.

September 21st, 1851, at Carbondale, he married Miss Gwenllian, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Lewis, and sister to Hon. William J. Lewis, now of Providence. Her death occurred in October, 1857. May 3d, 1859, he married his present wife, Miss Mary Jeanette, daughter of William W. Thomas and Ann Thomas, of Hyde Park, who was born February 28th, 1840, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Her parents were both natives of North Wales, but emigrated to this country when young. Nine children have been born as the issue of this marriage—six daughters and three sons—of whom two of the sons and one daughter died in infancy, leaving five daughters and one son. The eldest is Sarah Ann, born September 28th, 1860, in West Springfield, Mass. The others living are: Frank Fuller, born January 17th, 1870; Mildred Alma, born September 17th, 1872; Mary Ellenor, born December 15th, 1874; Annie H., born February 25th, 1877; and Alice, born August 30th, 1879; all in Hyde Park, Pa.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

The pioneer manufacturing enterprises in the territory now embraced within the city limits have been mentioned in the early history of the locality, because they were instrumental in bringing about such primitive advances toward civilization and prosperity as were made during that period. Of this class of enterprises, but the most prominent of all, and the most potent in their influence upon the development of this region and the growth of the backwoods settlement where they were begun to the third city in size in the State, were the pioneer iron enterprises of the Slocums and the subsequent operations of the Scrantons, the history of which is so intimately identified with the earlier history of Scranton as to render their separate consideration impossible.

THE LACKAWANNA IRON AND COAL COMPANY.

The Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company was incorporated June 10th, 1853, and organized with the following officers and directors: Selden T. Scranton, president; Joseph H. Scranton, general superintendent; M. W. Scott, secretary and treasurer; Samuel Marsh, William E. Dodge, L. F. Sturges, D. S. Miller, John I. Blair, George W. Scranton, Joseph H. Scranton and Joseph C. Platt, directors. Mr. Platt resigned at the first or second meeting, and S. T. Scranton resigned the office of president soon after the panic of 1857, and from January 2nd, 1858, Joseph H. Scranton was president till his death in Baden Baden, Germany, June 6th, 1872. The officers of the corporation in 1880 were: President, E. F. Hatfield, jr.; general manager, W. W. Scranton; secretary, Edward C. Lynde; treasurer, N. W. Hix; assistant treasurer, E. P. Kingsbury; directors—Moses Taylor, William E. Dodge, John I. Blair, P. R. Pyne, W. W. Scranton, Selden T. Scranton, Joseph C. Platt and B. G. Clarke.

The company has at Scranton five blast furnaces of great capacity, an iron rolling mill, a steam saw mill, a grist mill; a foundry, making 500 tons of castings weekly; machine, car, carpenter, harness and wheelwright shops; a brick yard, a large mercantile establishment and the offices in the same building with the latter. A glance at the magnitude of the works of this corporation will well repay the tourist, and they are justly regarded as the most prominent objects of interest in the city. The sizes of their blast furnaces may be inferred from their height and the diameter of their boshes. Two of them measures 17, one 23, one 19, and one 18 feet, while two are 70 feet high, two 65 feet, and one 67 feet. Into these furnaces the air is forced by two pairs of large condensing blowing engines of the double lever beam variety, built by I. P. Morris & Co., of Philadelphia, and by three horizontal engines erected in 1879. Engines numbers 1 and 2 were erected in the fall of 1854, and were regarded as the largest engines of their class in the country. The steam cylinders are 54 inches in diameter, and the blowing cylinders were then 110 inches in diameter, but were subsequently reduced to 84 inches to increase the pressure of the blast from 5 to 9 pounds. The stroke of these engines is 10 feet and they make 16 to 20 revolutions per minute. Engines 3 and 4 were erected in the fall of 1857. The steam cylinders are 58 inches in diameter and the blowing cylinders 92, their stroke being 10 feet. Owing to greater height added to the furnaces under Mr. W. W. Scranton's management, and their increase in product from an average of 200 to about 500 tons weekly, additional blast was required, to give which in 1879 another engine house was erected near furnace No. 2, 90 feet long by 72 feet wide, a massive brick structure, containing three horizontal conducting engines with steam cylinders 60 inches diameter, blowing cylinders 80 inches diameter and 100 inch stroke. The combined efforts of the seven engines at 20 revolutions each deliver a volume of 77,000 cubic feet of air per minute. About 125,000 tons of pig metal can now be produced annually at Scranton, and 25,000 tons at the company's Franklin furnace, N. J. The principal product of the mills is railroad bars, of which 50,000 tons of iron and 80,000 tons of steel rails can be produced each year, besides about 5,000 tons of merchant iron. The rolling mills contain 113 puddling and 35 heating furnaces.

The blast furnaces have always been locally known by their numbers. The dates of their erection were as follows: Number 1, 1843; 2 and 3, 1848; 4, 1853; 5, 1857. In 1869 another furnace, the largest in the United States, was erected on the site of the original Number 1, and its average product exceeds that of any other anthracite furnace, reaching 629 tons in one week. Parts of the iron rolling mills were erected in 1843-44; a puddling mill was added in 1846-47. The first iron rails were rolled here July 23d, 1847. Regular work was begun August 9th. In 1859-60 another puddling mill was added. The puddling mill now connected with the steel rolling mill antedates the other portions of that establishment, the ground having been staked out February 8th, 1864, and its erection begun long afterward, the first fires having been kindled in the furnaces August 22nd, 1867, and the first puddle bars rolled the following day under the superintendence of W. W. Scranton. Excavation for the steel works was begun in the vicinity of the company's rolling mill on Washington avenue, on Good Friday, 1874; the foundations were begun June 16th and the first brick work on the walls was laid August 29th of that year. The work was rapidly pushed forward to completion and the first steel was made October 23d, 1875; the first ingots rolled December 18th and the first rails December 29th. The steel works consist of a cupola room 44 by 71 feet and 49 feet to the eaves; a converting room 84 by 124 feet and 21 feet high; an engine room 54 by 77 feet and 16 feet high, and a boiler room 46 by 73 and 16 feet to the eaves, all of these buildings being arranged in a rectangle 124 by 202 feet.

In the cupola room were originally located four cupolas of seven and a half feet diameter, four feet in depth of tuyres, and fifteen feet high to the charging doors, each capable of smelting five tons in thirty minutes, which have been replaced by larger ones. Also two ten ton ladles mounted on scales for receiving the molten pig iron from the cupolas, and in which it is weighed before being converted into steel; also three reverberatory furnaces for melting the spiegel, the office of which is to impart to the converted product its requisite hardness as well as to remove impurities. In each end of the cupola room is a hoisting tower, furnished with a hydraulic elevator of six tons capacity and fifty feet travel. The two seven-ton converters are of eight feet external diameter and fifteen feet high. These are lined with refractory material ten inches thick at the bottom of the vessel, and provided with stout trunions eighteen inches in diameter, and with hydraulic gear for rotating, mounted on iron frames and columns. They are, by means of the hydraulic rotating gear, first put in a nearly horizontal position, for receiving the molten pig iron; next in an upright position, while the iron is being converted, and lastly in a reversed position while discharging the yet hissing steel. Immediately in front of the converters is the casting pit, thirty-eight feet in diameter and two and a half feet deep, and commanded by a central hydraulic ladle-crane of twelve tons capacity. At its extreme end is mounted a ladle which receives the steel from the converters. This ladle-crane is then swung over the several ingot-moulds in rotation, when the liquid metal is tapped from the bottom of the casting ladle, to avoid the slag becoming mixed with the steel. The steel ingot is then allowed to solidify, after which it is weighed and stamped with the number of the charge and its degree of hardness, and is then ready for blooming and rolling into rails. The size of the ingot depends on the weight of the rail to be produced, averaging 12 inches square and 45 inches long, and for 30-foot rails 65 pounds per yard. In the converting-room four more hydraulic cranes are located about the casting pit and the converters for manipulating the ingots, moulds, ladles and other implements. Thirty heats of $7\frac{1}{2}$ tons each, or about 225 tons, are turned out every twelve hours. All the hydraulic machinery is actuated by two hydraulic duplex force pumps, having two steam cylinders 20 inches in diameter, and two water cylinders 9 inches in diameter with a 24-inch stroke. Another pump is provided for use in case of accident. These pumps are in the engine room, where are also two independent horizontal and condensing blowing engines, 50 inches in diameter, and a blowing cylinder 54 inches in diameter and 5 feet stroke. The boiler house is occupied by a battery of 12 boilers of the locomotive type, each having 112 tubes 16 feet long and 3 inches in diameter. The steam engines were built by the Dickson Manufacturing Company. All of the other machinery described was built in the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's shops. The steel works can now produce about 120,000 tons of ingots per annum. February 25th, 1867, masons began to lay the foundation of the company's stores and offices, a commodious structure 100 by 113 feet and three stories high, at the junction of Lackawanna and Jefferson avenues and Ridge row. The building was completed and first occupied May 12th, 1868.

In addition to its old ore mines on Moosic mountains, no longer used, the company has mines at Mt. Hope, N. J., with a capacity of about 150,000 tons yearly; and of Bessemer ores a mine at Brewsters, N. Y., good for 100,000 tons yearly; Baker mine, near Dover, N. J., good for 50,000 yearly, and its mine of Franklinite and Bessemer ores at Franklin, N. J., where the company has a large blast furnace.

The company has three coal mines—Rolling Mill slope, Pine Brook shaft and Briggs shaft. The Briggs has workings in five different veins, but the fifth vein alone is now worked on account of the superior quality of the coal. This colliery has lately been put in excellent shape, and hoists 70 cars an hour from a depth of 450 feet, or about 1,000 tons per day. Large as this amount is, however, preparations are now being made to increase it. The company does not prepare coal for market, but mines for its own use only, and raises about 400,000 tons per annum.

THE DICKSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY, of Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, was organized in 1856. The partners began operations under the name of Dickson & Co., and were engaged in constructing stationary engines, boilers and machinery for mining purposes generally. A foundry and machine shop were put in operation May 1st, 1856, and in that year the company contracted for and built the engines and boilers used by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in constructing their new road over Moosic mountain. The work gave such satisfaction that their reputation was at once established, and thenceforward their machinery was sought after for all mining and kindred purposes; and it may be justly asserted that the perfection to which they have brought this class of machinery has placed the region where their works are established far in advance in the economy of mining and preparing coal and other natural products.

The panic of 1857 they weathered successfully, and to such an extent did their business subsequently increase that in 1862 they obtained a charter from the Legislature of Pennsylvania under the name of the Dickson Manufacturing Company, with a capital of $200,000. Upon the organization of the enterprise in 1856 they employed seventy-five hands, and had about $50,000 capital. The working force was increased from time to time as the requirements of the business demanded, and in 1862 numbered 350 regular employes.

The capital has been increased to $800,000, with the privilege of making it $1,000,000 should that amount be required.

In 1862 the company purchased the Cliff works, and there added to their business the manufacture of cars and locomotives. Greatly enlarging their works, and adding the most improved machinery, they rapidly acquired a wide reputation as locomotive builders, and a large number of their engines can be found on many of the leading railroads of the country. In 1864 a planing mill adjoining the Cliff works was purchased, and to the already extensive business of the company was added the manufacture of doors, sash, blinds, etc. This part of the business has been discontinued, as it was thought that these shops could be more profitably used for car building.

In 1866 the foundry and machine shops of Laning & Marshall, at Wilkes-Barre, were purchased, and a branch established there. Here are made stationary engines, boilers, all kinds of mining machinery and car wheels. In February, 1875, a fire at the Cliff works destroyed the main building, containing the power-tools, with a large quantity of material and unfinished work, involving a loss of about $200,000 more than the insurance. New buildings were at once erected, with increased capacity, and such changes introduced in the construction as it is thought renders the recurrence of any such disastrous fire almost impossible. These shops are now capable of turning out eight locomotives per month.

At present (1880) the works in Scranton consist of a foundry, two machine shops, two smith shops, a car shop and a boiler shop, and the company is prepared to manufacture the heaviest and most expensive machinery. The works in Scranton alone cover six acres, and when all the departments are in full operation they furnish employment to about 1,000 men.

The officers in 1880 were: George L. Dickson, president; W. H. Perkins, secretary and treasurer; W. B. Culver, general superintendent; James P. Dickson, agent at Wilkes-Barre.

THE SCRANTON CITY FOUNDRY.

Finch & Co.'s Scranton City Foundry and Machine Works are on the Hyde Park side of the river, a short distance above the railroad bridge. They were established in 1855, by A. P. Finch. The grounds were purchased from William Swetland, and comprise about eighteen city lots, with a front of something over 240 feet on the railroad. The main buildings are two stories high, 140 feet long by 40 feet wide, with additions running back, which contain the boilers, the heavy iron planer, the core oven, etc. There is also a boiler shop 30 by 50 feet, containing all the appliances and tools necessary to that branch of the manufacture. In the rear of the grounds was erected years ago a separate building as a storehouse for patterns, and in 1879 a second pattern house was erected. In the spring of 1857 B. G. Morss, of Red Falls, N. Y., became associated with Mr. Finch, and until the spring of 1865 they carried on a general foundry and machine business, under the firm name of Finch & Morss. At that time I. A. Finch purchased Mr. Morss's interest, and the firm has since been known as Finch & Co. A. P. Finch has had many years' experience as proprietor and manager, and I. A. Finch has gained a practical knowledge of the business, which enables him to assume the active management of the concern, the elder Finch now devoting much of his time to the management of an extensive hardware trade in Hyde Park. For years the firm manufactured a turbine water wheel, a useful invention of the senior partner. They do a thriving business in the manufacture of stationary and portable engines, mining machinery, circular saw-mills, iron fronts for buildings, and steam heating apparatus. The works are stocked with machinery capable of turning out the heaviest work, which is driven by a twenty-five horse-power engine of the firm's own manufacture.

THE MOOSIC POWDER COMPANY.

The Moosic Powder Company, whose general office is at Scranton, has a stock capital of $300,000. It was organized April 22nd, 1865, with $100,000 capital, at the instance of several of the principal managers and coal operators of the region, who had been greatly troubled during the war to procure blasting powder; in connection with members of the Smith and Rand Powder Company, of New York. Its works were built near Jermyn, about five miles below Carbondale; had a capacity of about 200 kegs of blasting powder per day, and were managed by George W. Rand, brother of the president of the Smith and Rand Powder Company. In 1869 the firm of Lafins, Boies & Twick, which had in 1865 purchased the Raynor works on Spring Brook, at Moosic, and rebuilt them, was consolidated with the Moosic Powder Company. The Spring Brook mills had a capacity of producing 650 kegs per day and were under the management of H. M. Boies, one of the partners, who now became president of the new company, the capital being increased to the present amount. In May, 1872, the old Moosic works near Jermyn were blown up, and they were rebuilt, with a capacity of 350 kegs per day. The company therefore is able to manufacture 1,000 kegs of blasting powder daily. The works have been run only half time during the period of depression in the coal business.

The president, Mr. Boies, inherits a natural taste for the business, being in the third generation of powder manufacturers in his family; he is the patentee of several valuable improvements, the most important of which perhaps is the idea of packing the powder in flexible waterproof tubing, so that miners may prepare their charges without exposing the powder either to the moist air of the mines or the fire of their lamps, from which latter cause many fatal and serious accidents have occurred. J. C. Platt, formerly manager of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's stores, is treasurer of the company, and J. D. Sherer has been its secretary ever since the consolidation with Lafins, Boies & Twick. The Moosic mills are run under the efficient superintendence of W. E. Olds, an old powder maker, and the Jermyn mills under that of his son-in-law, W. S. Hutchings, who has grown up with the company.

BRASS AND FILE WORKS.

Prominent among the manufacturing interests of the city is the Scranton Brass and File Works of J. M. Everhart. This establishment was founded in 1853 by John McLaren. In 1871 Mr. Everhart entered into partnership with him. They continued business until October, 1873, under the firm name of McLaren & Everhart, when, at the death of Mr. McLaren, Mr. Everhart became the sole proprietor. Always employing skilled labor, and using only new metals, he has more than quadrupled the former capacity of the factory; and turning out only the best quality of work he does a more extensive business than any similar establishment in eastern Pennsylvania. In 1875 he begun the manufacture of the Carr & Wilcox cut file. The works are on Cliff street. Mr. Everhart employs as many men manufacturing files as in his brass works, and contemplates a still further increase of facilities at an early date. John H. Hilpert, who has been in Mr. Everhart's employ for the past five years and now holds the position of superintendent of the works, ably seconds the proprietor's efforts toward an extension of the business.

THE SCRANTON FILE WORKS

were established on Green Ridge avenue by Guesford & Sheldon in September, 1875. The present factory was erected in 1876, and occupied in September of that year. In August, 1879, Charles Guesford became the sole proprietor. About a dozen hands are employed; the annual product of the factory is about $7,000, and the demand is constantly increasing. If facilities permitted, twice the amount of business could be done. A full line of files and rasps is manufactured.

SPENCER & PRICE'S

Green Ridge Merchant Iron Mill, an establishment of comparatively recent date, should also be mentioned among the busy and thriving iron works of Scranton.

MILLING OPERATIONS.

Elsewhere is given the milling history of Scranton previous to the erection of the old Jeffries grist-mill at Providence, about 1840. A few years later this mill was bought by a Mr. Campbell, of Carbondale. It passed from his hands to those of Horatio Pierce about 1865. In 1866 or 1867 Allen Anderson became the owner, and Edgar Frear in 1870. It has been run since that time by Frear & Maynard, Edgar Frear and Jacob T. Nyhart successively.

About 1861 Patterson & Johnson erected a flouring and feed mill opposite the Dickson works on Penn avenue. After a few years Mr Johnson withdrew and the business was continued by David Patterson until 1868, when it was purchased by D. Silkman & Co. They were succeeded about two years later by D. B. Oakes & Co., who in a year or two converted the establishment into a brewery.

White's steam flouring mill, on Centre street and Mifflin avenue, was erected in 1864 and 1865 by Seybolt & White, and was leased for five years to John Phillips & Co. Six months before the expiration of the lease the firm of Phillips & Co. was succeeded by that of Phillips & Seybolt, who conducted a successful business until the destruction of the mill by fire October 8th, 1871. Another mill, of double the capacity of the former one, was immediately erected on the same site by Seybolt & White. A portion of its machinery was put in motion May 27th, 1872, and the mill was completed in the following September. It was leased for five years to Phillips & Seybolt, but at the expiration of two years Calvin Seybolt purchased the interest of his partner, John Phillips, and he has since operated the establishment very successfully.

The Weston Mill Company (limited), the successors of C. T. Weston & Co. (limited) and C. T. Weston & Co., was organized in the fall of 1864 for manufacturing flour and feed on Lackawanna avenue, having already in operation a small feed-mill in Carbondale. The business was continued under the style of C. T. Weston & Co., under the active management of Charles T. Weston, until the autumn of 1874, when it was reorganized with Charles T. Weston as president; J. C. Platt as secretary and A. W. Dickson as treasurer. Two years later C. T. Weston retired; J. C. Platt was chosen president, and A. W. Dickson secretary and treasurer and active business manager, the firm name being changed to the Weston Mill Company (limited). In the spring of 1879 the large four-story building No. 45 Lackawanna avenue was leased and fitted with new and improved machinery for making crackers and cakes and other baker's products. The success of the Lackawanna Steam Biscuit Bakery has demonstrated the wisdom of the movement.

The founder of the firm of C. T. Weston & Co. came to Scranton in 1864 from Carbondale, to which place he had removed during the early years of the war from Riverton, Va., where he had been engaged for some years in milling, until his property was burned by the federal forces under General Sheridan. The present business manager, A. W. Dickson, came to Scranton from Philadelphia in 1865, and has since been in service with the concern as employe or partner.

The Rockwell grist mill, at Providence, was erected in 1876.

AXES AND EDGE TOOLS.

In 1840 Jerison White built the first edge tool factory at Capoose, and soon after sold out to Pulaski Carter, removed to Providence and erected a second factory, which, with his dwelling, was swept away by a flood. He built a small, rude shop, in which he placed a bellows, and with the help of a boy began business on a limited scale. He built a factory in 1847 and occupied it until 1861, when he sold it to his nephew, Crandall White, who conducted it a while. After the war Edward H. White was taken into partnership with his father, J. White, and they resumed business, removing to Green Ridge avenue in 1874, where they had erected the shops now standing there unoccupied. They abandoned the business in May, 1878. For many years the establishment enjoyed the highest reputation, the specialty being axes of all kinds. These were made of the best Sheffield steel and tempered by a process of the senior proprietor's. They were also the inventors and manufacturers of an improved pruning hatchet and box opener, which had a large sale.

In 1841 the land at Capoose came into the hands of Pulaski Carter, a young man from Windham county, HENRY SOMMERS.

Henry Sommers was born June 24th, 1829, in the village of Laudenbach-am-Meisner, Germany, then under the protectorate of Austria. He emigrated to the United States at the age of fifteen. After a tedious voyage of about three months he landed at New York in May, 1845. His brother, Peter Sommers, some years his senior, had preceded him several years, and located in Carbondale, Pa. Young Sommers at once proceeded to the home of his brother Peter, by the way of Rondout and the Delaware and Hudson Canal to Honesdale, and thence by the gravity road to Carbondale—there being no railway facilities in those days between New York and northern Pennsylvania. Shortly after being settled in the home of his brother he was bound an apprentice to John Reider, the principal watchmaker and jeweler of Carbondale, to learn the art and mystery of the trade. Young Henry was faithful and industrious, soon becoming an expert at his trade, winning the confidence and esteem of his employer and patrons.

At the age of twenty-one he determined to enter the battle of life on his own resources. So in 1850 he removed to the borough of Dunmore, and swung out his shingle, "Henry Sommers, Watchmaker"; where he resided and continued in active business until 1880, when he entered on the duties of prothonotary of Lackawanna county.

In 1855 Mr. Sommers married Miss Sarah A. Griffin, daughter of Thomas Griffin, of Providence, one of the oldest and most honorable families in the Lackawanna valley. Their union has been a long and happy one. They have had two children, daughters, now grown to ripe womanhood, of fine culture and refinement.

In political faith Mr. Sommers is a Republican, having connected himself with the party at the time of its organization and ever since been an active worker for its success and perpetuity. He has been honored by the national government and the judiciary of his county with several important and responsible public offices. In the year 1856 he was appointed postmaster of Dunmore, under the administration of President Pierce, which office he held until he resigned in 1861. He was again commissioned for the same office in 1872 by President Grant, and held the same until he resigned in January, 1880. In 1871 he was appointed by Hon. Garrick M. Harding, president judge of Luzerne county, director of the poor, representing Dunmore borough in the Providence poor district, to which he was reappointed in 1877, and again in 1880, by Judge Rice, president judge of Luzerne county, for three years. For the past three years he has been honored with the position of president of the board.

In the fall of 1878 the new county of Lackawanna was formed out of part of Luzerne county. Governor Hart-ranft made the appointments of the several county officers. At the fall election that year Mr. Sommers was duly elected to the office of prothonotary, on the regular Republican ticket; but by a decision of the Supreme Court the appointees of the governor held over until January, 1880. In the fall of 1879 Mr. Sommers was again nominated by the Republican party and triumphantly elected, although the new county is largely Democratic. As an evidence of the popularity and high esteem in which Mr. Sommers is held in his own borough, where he has resided for the past thirty years, it is a fact that where the Democrats poll nearly 300 majority Mr. Sommers received a clear majority of 303.

In all the relations of life, private and public, Mr. Sommers has proved by his conduct a worthy, reliable officer and citizen, having the confidence and esteem of all who have had business connections with him, ever cautious and gentlemanly in his deportment. His history is worthy of record—how a stranger emigrant to our country, from humble conditions in early life, can by industry and perseverance build up a character that will win his way up, against adverse circumstances, to positions of honor and trust.

LEOPOLD SCHIMPPFF.

Leopold Schimpff was born in the city of Landau, in the Rheinfalz or Palatinate of Germany, November 14th, 1844. After receiving a good common school education he learned the trade of a baker with his father, who there had an extensive business. At the age of fifteen he commenced to travel, which every journeyman in Germany is obliged to do for at least three years, at the expiration of which time he can start for himself. His travels were mainly in southern Germany, but he also journeyed extensively in the Tyrol, Steinmark, Hungary, Slavonia, the Danubian principalities and Italy. At Vienna, the capital of Austria, he located, intending to make that city his permanent residence, and worked at his trade until his parents concluded to emigrate to America, when he left for home, after an absence of two years. Coming to this country with his parents he located in Scranton, and he has lived here ever since. Mr. Schimpff was in his seventeenth year when he arrived in this country, and only a short time after his arrival the war broke out between North and South. He enlisted in a New York regiment of artillery and served two years, participating in the battles of Winchester, Cross Keys and the second battle of Bull Run. After two years' service in the artillery he enlisted in the 19th Pennsylvania cavalry, served three years and was discharged May 16th, 1866, at New Orleans. The regiment in which he served did glorious work in the Western Army, under General Grierson.

Since his return from the army he has been in Scranton. In 1869 he was employed as book-keeper in the brewery of Philip Robinson, jr., which position he filled for nine years. Since the death of Mr. Robinson Mr. Schimpff has had the entire management and supervision of the business. He was elected alderman of the eleventh ward in 1874, with 260 votes for and only one vote against him. During his eventful life Mr. Schimpff has made a record of which any American citizen may well be proud. There was no necessity for him to join the army when he enlisted. He was an alien and a minor, and a wide field was open for a man of his ability in the then prosperous Union; but casting aside self-interest he enrolled himself among the patriots who succeeded in saving the Union from dismemberment and dishonor. His comrades in the hard-fought battles in which he participated bear witness to the unflinching bravery of their beardless comrade, and tell many tales of his dauntless courage. In civil as well as military life Mr. Schimpff is respected by all who know him.

The general satisfaction expressed in his appointment as coroner in 1878, and the fact that but one vote was cast against him when he was a candidate for an office in his own ward, are conclusive testimony of the esteem in which he is held in the community.

Conn., who rented the recently built shop of Jerison White, and in the fall of that year put three trip hammers and three forges in motion, and, purchasing the property, established what is now known far and wide throughout the State as "Carter's Capouse" works. Three operators besides himself were employed in 1841, using three tons and a half of iron and making 180 dozen scythes and 160 dozen axes, which were ground, polished, boxed and sold by Mr. Carter himself, who was foreman, salesman and bookkeeper. The pioneers in this section pronounced these implements of superior quality. The shop, then a single building, thirty by fifty feet, has given place to a cluster of thirty or more buildings. One hundred tons of iron are used annually, and more than 1,000 dozen scythes and 2,000 dozen axes, besides a large number of edged tools used by workers of wood, iron and stone, and embracing carpenters' and railroad and track adzes, and miners' and gravel picks, grub hoes, drills, crowbars, wedges and harrow teeth, are produced.

Blake & Co., in the spring of 1863, established an ax factory where the office of the Cliff works now stands. The establishment was burned about 1867 and was not rebuilt.

In 1876 a building was erected at Green Ridge, which was opened in April of that year by Messrs. J. W. Pike & Co. as a manufactory of mining and edge tools. The business increased steadily, several men being employed in the shop, until the building was burned in January, 1880. Other accommodations were soon secured and business was resumed. During 1879 about $500 worth of tools were turned out per month.

STOVE MANUFACTURE.

The Scranton Stove Manufacturing Company was organized in July, 1865, under the firm name of Fisher & Co. It was the design to manufacture stoves and hollow ware. The first manufactured articles were produced in December of the same year. In May, 1868, the company was largely increased in membership and capital, and incorporated, having as directors H. S. Pierce, T. F. and A. E. Hunt, C. H. and W. G. Doud, S. Grant and J. A. Price. H. S. Pierce was elected president, and J. A. Price general superintendent and treasurer. The property of the company is centrally located, in proximity to the shipping points of the various railroads centering in Scranton. The buildings consist of a foundry building, two fitting, mounting and machine buildings, and two warehouses. The capacity of the establishment is about thirty stoves per day, requiring the employment of about 80 men. During the season of 1879 the facilities were increased. The company have adopted the recent useful invention in stove grates called "the dock ash" grate, the demand for which has been constantly ahead of the ability to supply, and indicates a very extensive increase during the coming year. New buildings are contemplated, and this industry, the first important one of its kind in northeastern Pennsylvania, bids fair to rival the larger and older growths of stove manufacturing centers.

The stove manufactory of H. O. Silkman, at Providence, was long a prominent business interest.

THE BREWING INTEREST.

The first brewery in Scranton was the Scranton City Brewery, on Cedar street, established in 1854 by Philip Robinson, sen. A few years later the business passed into the hands of his sons, Jacob, Philip, jr., and Christian, and was conducted by them under the firm name of Jacob Robinson & Co., erecting the present building in 1864. In 1868 this firm was succeeded by Philip Robinson, jr., who died September 12th, 1879, leaving the enterprise to his family, under the supervision of Mr. Leopold Schimpff, who has been connected with the business of Mr. Robinson since 1869. The buildings are to be greatly enlarged, and the capacity of the brewery increased to 20,000 barrels yearly. About 7,000 barrels of lager are now manufactured annually. An engraving of this brewery appears herewith.

The well known brewery of E. Robinson, at the foot of Seventh street, Hyde Park, was completed and occupied in 1876. A large ice-house was erected in 1879. The business, under the proprietor's efficient management, has been successful. About twenty men are employed and from 15,000 to 20,000 barrels of lager are made annually. E. Robinsons brewery is represented below.

The Star Ale Brewery was established at the end of Scranton avenue bridge, in Hyde Park, in 1860, by Pos-tens & Heller. In 1863 Ransom Briggs superseded Mr. Heller in the firm, and the entire business was purchased by Messrs. Morton & Renwick in 1868. In 1872 George Morton purchased the interest of his partner, Frank Renwick, and in 1874 Mr. Briggs again became a member of the firm by the acquirement of a half interest, and the style was changed to Morton & Briggs, as the firm has since been known. The original buildings were destroyed by fire in 1874 and rebuilt on the old foundations, with enlarged capacity for production. Five men are employed and about 3,000 barrels of ale and porter are manufactured annually.

Nine or ten years ago Oakes & Renwick, who succeeded Oakes & Co., millers, embarked in the brewery business in the reconstructed flouring mill of the former firm. The enterprise was abandoned in about a year.

SASH AND BLINDS—LUMBER YARDS.

The manufactory of William B. Rockwell at Providence is a large building, stocked with all necessary modern machinery for making sash, doors, blinds, mouldings and other building materials in that line. In 1848 Hand & Von Storch rented the second floor of White's axe factory and put in machinery for making sash and blinds. In the April following William and Gregory Von Storch purchased the interest of Mr. Hand, and continued the business until the spring of 1851, when the establishment was sold to E. J. Hand & Son. About a year afterward, by the accession of L. White, the firm became Hand, White & Co. It was changed to Hand, Ward & Co. in 1862, to Hand & Bristol in 1863, to Hand & Coston in 1865, to Hand, Coston & Co. in 1868, and to Coston & Spencer in 1872. This firm was succeeded by H. B. Rockwell in 1876, and he by William B. Rockwell in June, 1879.

In 1866 Joseph Ansley established his lumber yard in Hyde Park, and in the fall of the same year N. Washburn and Samuel Heller became partners. Mr. Ansley bought out Heller in 1868 and Washburn in the spring of 1871. A year later C. C. Hand became his partner, and he was connected with the enterprise about a year, the business being transacted, however, as before, in the name of Mr. Ansley. The planing-mill and sash and blind manufactory were established in 1869 by Ansley & Washburn. The building known as the Heermans shop was occupied until the completion of the present substantial stone and wood shops, early in 1879. They were begun in 1876. A large amount of business has been done, the aggregate reaching $150,000 in 1870, though the past few years have witnessed a considerable reduction. About thirty hands are employed.

Mr. John Benore, a well-known contractor and builder, established a lumber yard in the spring of 1871. His planing-mill was erected in 1875, on Scranton avenue, in Hyde Park. About twenty men are employed and an annual business of some $25,000 is done.

BAKERIES.

In the fall of 1867 Monies & Pughe purchased the business and succeeded Charles Schlager in his steam bakery. Leasing the property from Schlager for a term of ten years, at a rental of $1,400 a year, they put in new machinery and reel ovens (the first in northeastern Pennsylvania). The result of their enterprise was an established success. They introduced their well known trade mark, "Star," on their best crackers, which commanded a continuous large sale. So successful was their enterprise that in 1870 they purchased the property, paying $35,000, and subsequently expended $10,000 on improvements which made their bakery one of the best and largest in the State outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. In connection with the manufacture of crackers Monies & Pughe bake large quantities of bread and cake.

EARLIER ENTERPRISES—MISCELLANEOUS—THE FUTURE.

In 1808 John Watres, a clothier from New York State, bought the tract where Carter's factory stands, and built a mill for wool carding and cloth dressing. In 1812 John Watres and Isaac Hart, who had bought land of Matthias Hollenback, built and operated a grist-mill, saw-mill and workshop upon the property. A portion of this land passed successively through the hands of Linus Champion, Rufus Bennett, Henry Champion and Lyman Smith. Smith, who came in 1826, introduced from New England the most advanced machinery then in use for the manufacture of woolen yarns, which was operated by his wife. The yarn so made was let out, in accordance with the custom of the country, to weave in families who would weave it and return the cloth to the mill for coloring, fulling and finishing. Mrs. Thomas Griffin, yet living, a daughter of Elisha S. Potter, did weaving for this mill as late as 1829.

A horseshoe factory was established near the depot in 1855 and opened August 17th, when the first horseshoes were made. In a short time the establishment passed into the hands of William Cook & Co., who tried without success to make locomotives, and sold out to Dickson & Co.

The extensive business of B. & A. Galland, manufacturers of ladies' underwear at 534 Lackawanna avenue, was begun in February, 1877.

The Scranton Silk Manufacturing Company, of New York, purchased the property of the Scranton Silk Company (whose business was established some years since) in October, 1879. It employs about 150 hands, almost exclusively girls under twenty years of age, and produces about 750 pounds of silk per week, mostly for weaving purposes, valued at $5,000.

Garney, Short & Co., 302 Lackawanna avenue, manufacturers of fine domestic cigars, and the largest jobbers of leaf and manufactured tobacco in Scranton, succeeded C. Wise in 1869, and are the pioneers of extensive cigar manufacture in Scranton. They employ fifty to sixty hands and their annual sales of cigars exceed 2,000,000. They have a large trade in manufactured tobacco, having control in their market of the most popular brands of fine cut tobacco manufactured in Detroit and New York.

Clark & Snover are the only parties who manufacture fine cut tobacco in Scranton or the northeastern part of Pennsylvania. Their business is extensive. They paid for revenue stamps in 1878 $62,305.80; in 1879, eight months, $40,852.08, making a total in twenty months of $103,157.88.

Among the prominent objects of the Scranton board of trade are the establishment of manufactures and the encouragement of industrial enterprises. This organization proposes to institute measures for the utilization of the culm or waste coal deposit for furnishing steam heat and steam power from a central point to any section within a radius of three miles.

INSURANCE.

The Cambrian Mutual Fire Insurance Company, Hyde Park, was established in January, 1871. Its assets December 31st, 1878, were $10,567.50; its premium notes subject to assessment amounted to $117,050.68; the total expense for the year 1878 was $1,190.11. The business of the company for 1879 improved its standing. Property owned by the Welsh people in Lackawanna and adjoining counties is seldom burned and the risk is small. The Cambrian Fire Insurance Company was formed to insure this class of property. The officers for 1879 were as follows: President, B. Hughes; vice-president, Edward Hughes; treasurer, D. M. Jones; secretary, B. E. Evans. There are fifteen directors, five elected annually.

The Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Scranton, 426 Lackawanna avenue, was chartered in 1875. In April, 1878, the following officers were elected: Hon. John Handley, president; George L. Dickson, vice-president; E. P. Kingsbury, treasurer; William Assion, secretary; directors, Hon. John Handley, George L. Dickson, E. P. Kingsbury, Hon. F. D. Collins, D. B. Brainard, B. E. Leonard, Hon. F. W. Gunster, P. McCann, J. H. Gunster and James Jordan.

GAS AND WATER COMPANIES.

The Scranton Gas and Water Company was chartered March 16th, 1854, and organized in 1857, with the following officers and directors: Joseph H. Scranton, president; George Sanderson, S. & T.; T. F. Hunt, E. H. Kerlin, James Fuller, C. D. Rockwell and W. E. Rogers, directors. The following are the names of the officers and directors in January, 1880: W. W. Scranton, president; George B. Hand, secretary; G. E. Judson, superintendent and treasurer; Thomas Dickson, J. J. Albright, Joseph Godfrey, James Archbald, Henry Battin and C. E. Judson, directors. The company has 33 miles of gas and water pipe, from 24 down to 3 inches in diameter. The gas works can make 300,000 cubic feet of gas daily and store 120,000 feet. The gas is manufactured by the Lowe process; 110 public lamps are lighted by the company.

There are 300,000,000 gallons of water constantly on storage, and the present daily consumption is about 5,000,000 gallons. The mains can supply 14,000,000 gallons daily. There are 101 hydrants. The works cost over $700,000 and expensive additions have been made from time to time. Very large extensions in the water department were made in 1879, and others still more extensive were decided on for 1880.

The Hyde Park Gas Company was organized August 18th, 1875, with Thomas Phillips as president, A. Davis as secretary, William Merrifield as treasurer and Martin Maloney as superintendent, and the same as directors. The following are the names of those in office in January, 1880: W. W. Scranton, president; George B. Hand, secretary and treasurer; C. E. Judson, superintendent and engineer; Joseph Godfrey, C. E. Judson, W. W. Manness and Martin Maloney, directors. This company has about two and a half miles of pipe and lights sixty-three public lamps.

A water company with necessary facilities for supplying that portion of the city is in existence in Providence.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Hyde Park, Providence, Scranton, Dunmore and Green Ridge are connected by the People's Street Railway, formed by the consolidation of the Scranton and Providence Passenger Railway and the People's Street Railroad May 11th, 1868. The companies were formed and operations begun in 1867, and for a time previous to their consolidation they bitterly contested their respective claims to the principal streets. The president of the People's Company at its organization was James Blair; of the other, Hon. George Sanderson. The officers and directors of the former in 1880 were as follows: William Matthews, president; Alfred Hand, secretary and treasurer; William Matthews, James Blair, J. C. Platt, William Connell, W. W. Scranton, W. R. Storrs, Alfred Hand, W. W. Winton and John B. Smith. The length of the road is nine and one-half miles. During the year ending October 31st, 1878, 235,163 passengers were carried over the road.

HALLS—THE OPERA HOUSE—THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Before the days of public halls there stood on an eminence of solid rock where Jefferson avenue now is, between the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's stores and the carriage entrance to J. C. Platt's grounds, a structure known as Odd Fellow's Hall, which was erected by the early Odd Fellows of Scranton. It was taken down in 1865 and re-erected as a block of dwellings on Dodge street, near the old rolling mill. In this quaint building were formed the early societies of Scranton. For years it was a public hall, open to all for all proper purposes, and the people assembled there for amusement, deliberation and worship. This building was occupied only rarely after the completion of Washington Hall, in the brick block at Lackawanna and Penn avenues, now in use as the Lackawanna county court room. Other commodious halls have been opened from time to time within the city limits, one of the oldest of which is Pannoo-ka Hall, in Providence.

Klein's Opera House was erected in 1871 by E. C. Klein. It passed into the possession of the Scranton Opera House Company in 1874. That company was organized with E. Frear as president and O. C. Moore as secretary and treasurer. Later C. A. Stevens was president and Joseph Walker manager. The opera house was burned in March, 1876.

The Academy of Music, on Wyoming avenue, was erected in 1876-77 at a cost of $40,000, exclusive of the site, by a stock company consisting of James Blair (president), James S. Slocum, T. F. Hunt, A. E. Hunt and J. H. Sutphin (treasurer). It is one of the most complete theatres in the country. It is on the ground floor and has a seating capacity of 1,500, divided into parquet and dress-circle, balcony circle and gallery. The stage is 35 by 60 feet. The academy was opened in April, 1877, under the management of Joseph Walker. C. H. Lindsay assumed the management in the following September, and has since conducted the academy with marked success. The company in 1879 consisted of James Blair (president), J. A. Linen (treasurer), James S. Slocum, A. S. Blair and J. S. Blair.

THE SCHOOL OF THE LACKAWANNA.

In September, 1873, Rev. Thomas M. Cann, A. M., established a young ladies' institute. A male department was added. A suitable building having been erected in February, 1875, the two departments were put into operation under the name of the Young Ladies' Institute and Boys' Classical Academy. In March, 1876, an advisory board of trustees, of which Hon. Alfred Hand was made president, was called in, and the school reorganized under the name of The School of the Lackawanna. The institution has earnestly worked in the cause of higher education and Christian culture. Many of its male graduates are to be found in colleges or in business, and two classes of young ladies have received the medal of the institution upon their graduation. The curriculum embraces not only the ordinary classical and scientific preparation for college and university education, but also instruction in music, painting and the modern languages. The instructors are teachers of skill and experience, having made the science of education and the art of teaching a life work.

FOREST HILL CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

The Forest Hill Cemetery Association was organized in the fall of 1869 and incorporated in April, 1870. The act of incorporation decrees that the proceeds of all sales of lots shall be devoted exclusively to the purchase, preservation, improvement and embellishment of the cemetery and to the payment of its current and incidental expenses. George Sanderson, Elisha Phinney, J. A. Robertson, J. Gardner Sanderson and C. Du Pont Breck were elected trustees. The present (1879) officers are as follows: George Sanderson, president; J. A. Robertson, superintendent; and they with the other trustees above mentioned, constitute the management. A location was decided upon and the ground purchased for a cemetery late in the autumn of 1869. The tract contains 48 acres; is situated on the heights near Green Ridge, and within its borders when completed will be three small lakes. The ground is undulating and diversified, presenting many changes of surface and scenery. The cemetery is divided into sections and blocks, separated by avenues, lanes and paths, the main continuous avenue extending more than two miles in length, and is provided with conveniences common to cemeteries. There are some fine monuments and vaults noticeable, among which are the Tripp monument and those of Messrs. Matthews and Connell and the vault of Mrs. Barnes. Each lot contains 300 square feet and is surrounded by paths. Up to the winter of 1879 there had been about 900 interments, and about $40,000 had been expended in permanent improvements.

LOCAL RAILWAY ENTERPRISE—RAILWAY COMMUNICATIONS.

The first meeting of the commissioners to obtain subscriptions to the capital stock of the Leggett's Gap Railroad, which afterwards became the northern division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, was held in Scranton March 7th, 1849. January 2nd, 1850, the first meeting of the stockholders for the election of officers was held in Scranton. H. W. Drinker was elected chairman; John S. Sherrerd, secretary; and William H. Tripp and J. C. Platt judges of the election. These names and most of the following (those of the officers chosen) are familiar to every citizen who has grown to manhood in Scranton: John J. Phelps, president; Selden T. Scranton, treasurer; Charles F. Mattes, secretary; John I. Blair, Henry W. Drinker, J. C. Platt, Jeremiah Clark, Andrew Bedford, George W. Scranton, Joseph H. Scranton, Fred R. Griffin, Daniel S. Miller and Charles Fuller, managers. Some of these men are among the most prominent residents of the city. March 28th, 1850, Colonel George W. Scranton was appointed general agent, and the road was so far completed under his personal management as to be open for traffic October 20th, 1851, though nine days previously the first train of cars that entered Scranton came down from Great Bend under charge of Conductor Richard W. Olmstead, drawn by the locomotive "Wyoming." In April of this year the corporate name of the company had been changed to the Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. The Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad Company, which had been organized in 1850, with Selden T. and Joseph H. Scranton and J. C. Platt among its directors, and C. F. Mattes as secretary, was consolidated with the Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company early in 1853, and completed in 1856. May 7th a passenger car was sent from Scranton to bring the directors up, and returned the next day with President George D. Phelps, the directors and others on board. Residents of Scranton have always been conspicuous in the management of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. From Scranton its numerous branches and connections reach out in all directions, and largely by their means is carried on that traffic which has caused a goodly city to spring up where a century ago the locality had scarcely been reckoned from the wilderness. In a year or two, by way of its projected line from Binghamton to Buffalo, we may expect to see Jay Gould's mighty "Wabash" system of western roads adding its immense business to this great trunk line.

In 1853 a commodious passenger car house was erected at Scranton. The freight depot stood down in the yard, in the rear of where Hunt's hardware store now stands, and the passenger house a trifle northwest, about in the rear of the present Hitchcock & Coursen's crockery establishment. Besides making provision for all the ordinary repairs of the rolling stock in use on the road, and the machinery and cars of the coal department, in view of the favorable location of Scranton for such purposes, and the accessibility of ample supplies of iron, lumber and other necessary materials, the managers early arranged for the erection of shops and supplying them with facilities for the manufacture of cars. In 1854 these shops consisted of one brick E shaped building on Washington avenue. The main building was 200 by 55 feet, and contained a smith and pattern shop, the office and the engine and boiler room. The two wings were each 200 by 55 feet; the western one was used as a car and repair shop, and the eastern one as an engine house and repair shop. In 1855 an iron foundry was erected on the same street, and a round house at the north ends of the two wings of the shops was begun, which when completed, in 1856, was surmounted by a dome 98 feet high, and was large enough to house 30 locomotives. The dome was one of the most sightly objects in the place, but in 1865 it was found to be settling and was taken down. The growing business of the road necessitated an addition to the shop room, and a building 100 feet square was erected north of the main building and between the two wings, between 1857 and 1860; and in 1862 a smithshop was built on the south side of Washington avenue, near the other buildings, in which were placed a steam trip hammer and 32 forges, and the smiths were removed to it from the main building, which was afterward used as a repair shop for engines and cars. The company bought the ground between their previous purchase, on Washington street and Cliff street, for additional buildings. The present large round house was begun in 1865 and completed and occupied in July, 1866. The old round house was altered and has since been used as an engine house. The company built another foundry, 100 feet square, with facilities for making about ten tons of engine and car castings per day. The depot of this company, the most sightly and commodious in the city, was completed and occupied November 28th, 1854. The old depot had previously been removed to near the site of the new one. It now constitutes a part of the freight house, a little northwest of the passenger depot. The first railroad bridge of the company at Scranton, a wooden structure, was burned April 29th, 1864. It was replaced by a temporary structure, which served until the present stone bridge was completed, which was used first May 9th, 1867.

Centering in Scranton are several large railway organizations, connecting with all points north, south, east and west. The lines of communication include, besides the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's, the Central of New Jersey and the Pennsylvania Coal Company's road, connecting with the Erie. Hence it will be seen that the facilities for transportation and travel are excellent, and that the city is by no means dependent upon any one road for an outlet. September 8th, 1863, the first locomotive over the extension of the Delaware and Hudson reached Scranton. The works of the Dickson Manufacturing Company take the place of car and locomotive shops of this road that must otherwise have been erected in Scranton. About March 1st, 1860, passenger communication was opened from Scranton over the gravity road to Carbondale.

Early in the summer of 1855 a telegraph line was put up through Scranton and offices were opened at Providence, Hyde Park and Dunmore. An office was opened in Scranton July 25th, 1855. A line was in operation along the southern division of the D. L. & W. Railroad late in 1859 or early in 1860.

COAL MINES.

Within the limits of the city are the following mentioned drifts, shafts or slopes.

The Park Coal Company's slope in Hyde Park is operated by the School Fund Coal Association. It was opened in 1845. The veins are named "F" and "G," and the capacity is 350 tons per day. Two hundred men and boys are employed. From July, 1874, the slope was operated by the Park Coal Company till March, 1877, since when it has been in the hands of the present operators. Mount Pleasant slope, Hyde Park, was opened by Lewis & Howell in 1854. It was operated by the Mount Pleasant Coal Company from 1864 until 1877, since then by William T. Smith. It is the property of W. Swetland's heirs. It has a capacity of 150,000 tons per annum and employs 300 men and boys. The veins are called respectively "Diamond," "Rock," "Big" or "G" and "Clark." William Connell & Co. own and operate Meadow Brook shaft and National colliery in Scranton. Each has a capacity of 150,000 tons annually. Most of the coal now shipped from the National (which was opened by the National Anthracite Coal Company in 1856 and operated by Theodore Vetterlein from 1858 to 1865 and from that time, until the succession of William Connell & Co., by the Susquehanna and Wyoming Valley Railroad and Coal Company), comes from the openings near Meadow Brook mines, and is taken to the National mines over a narrow gauge track which runs along the side of the hill. The Meadow Brook shaft, opened by Messrs. Connell & Co., in 1870, is operated by a shaft and several drifts. Five hundred men and boys are employed. The force at the National colliery is about 200, merely sufficient to prepare the coal for the market. These mines are both in the "Clark" and "Buck Mountain" veins.

The following mines are operated by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company: No. 2 Diamond shaft, Tripp's slope, No. 2 slope and No. 2 shaft in Hyde Park, known as the Diamond mines, working the veins known as "E," "F" and "G," producing 1,800 gross tons per day, and employing 800 men and boys; Oxford shaft, Hyde Park, in veins "E" and "F," opened by S. T. Scranton & Co, in 1862, and taken possession of by the company in August, 1868, having a capacity of 600 tons daily; Cayuga shaft, Providence, opened July 20th, 1870, by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, with a daily capacity of 700 tons, and affording employment to 280 men and boys; Central shaft, opened by the company October 22nd, 1870, working "Big" or "G" vein, with a capacity of 900 tons per day, and employing 336 men and boys; Brislin shaft, Providence, opened May 5th, 1875, in "G" vein, having a capacity of 800 tons per day, and employing 294 hands; Hyde Park shaft, in veins "G" and "F," opened in 1858, and operated since 1869 by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, capacity 700 tons per day. The Fairlawn slope was begun by contractors June 16th, 1872. The breaker was completed and started August 20th, 1873, under the name of the Fairlawn colliery. The proprietors were Hosie, Robertson & Hosie. January 1st, 1874, the Archbald heirs bought the interest of John Robertson, and the firm continued under the name of Hosie, Archbald & Hosie until July 30th, 1874, at which time the parties in interest organized as the Fairlawn Coal Company (limited). This mine is in the "Clark" and "Upper," "2nd" and "3d Dunmore" veins. The Fairlawn Coal Company is working the "Clark" vein alone, the capacity of which and the other veins is estimated at about 1,000 tons of merchantable coal to each foot in thickness of vein per acre, the capacity of the breaker is about 275 tons per day. Eighty men and 60 boys are employed. Jermyn's Green Ridge shaft was opened by the present owner and operator, John Jermyn, June 9th, 1876. It is in the "Clark" vein and its capacity is 800 tons daily; 350 to 400 men and boys are employed. Von Storch slope, Leggett's Creek slope and Marvine shaft, Providence, are operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. The number of employes at these collieries in 1878 was 711 inside, 1,080 outside. Capoose and Pine Brook shafts, in Hyde Park and Scranton respectively, are owned and operated by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, mention of whose mines will be found elsewhere.

The Von Storch colliery, owned and operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, is in the second ward. It has a shaft 532 feet in depth and a slope 1,062 feet in length. The breaker has a capacity of 1,000 tons per day, mining from the Diamond, Clark and Fourteen-foot veins. The shaft was sunk in 1857 by the Von Storch Coal Company, composed of John Howarth, Joel Bowkley, B. F. Sawyer, Abel Bennett and Charles T. Pierson, with John Howarth as president. The first coal was shipped in the fall of 1858 by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. That company finally declining to transport the coal, the works were idle until April, 1859, when a contract was made with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company to mine and transport the coal. It became necessary for them to sink a slope on the river bank, the shaft and breaker being about half a mile distant and a hundred feet above the level of the railroad. This new slope was commenced about the first of September, 1859, and the Diamond vein of coal was reached the next Christmas, when a grand supper was given the employes. Thomas Dickson, now president of the D. and H. C. Company, was then superintendent of the coal department. The old breaker was removed to the new slope and the company commenced shipping coal in the summer of 1860. The breaker and machinery were rebuilt in 1874 on the most improved plans. In connection with the long slope on the river bank is a tunnel extending from the foot of the slope in the Diamond vein to the shaft. The shaft from this point is sunk to the Clark vein. From this point the coal is hoisted to the Diamond vein, and then run under ground to the foot of the slope, from where it is hoisted to the breaker on the river bank. The number of men and boys employed to produce one thousand tons daily is 560, and it requires the use of twenty-three large boilers.

The Marvine shaft, Providence, was sunk in 1872-73, and the first coal taken out in 1876. It belongs to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and taps the Fourteen-feet, Diamond and Clark veins. It produces about 850 tons per ten hours, employing 420 hands. The outside foreman is George Griffin, and the inside foreman Joseph V. Birtley. The Leggett's Creek shaft, also in Providence, was opened in 1866, by the Delaware and Hudson Company, which now owns and operates it. It takes 800 tons per ten hours from the same veins as the Marvine, employing 400 hands. J. L. Atherton is the outside superintendent and Finley Ross inside.

The mining interest in Dunmore centers in the Pennsylvania Coal Company's collieries, there being but one other in the borough, Roaring Brook colliery. Hunt, Davis & Co began operations there in 1863 and commenced shipping coal June 20th, 1864. In 1878 76,053 tons of coal were produced at this mine, and between 50 and 600 men and boys were employed outside and inside.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Dwellings and stores were at first built principally of wood, as it was the cheapest and most available material. After a few accidental fires the necessity of fire apparatus was felt. The D., L. and W. Railroad Company and Lackawanna Coal and Iron Company each agreed to furnish one hand engine and three hundred feet of hose, provided the companies' property should have the preference in case of need; which was agreed to, and soon Scranton was rejoicing over two second-hand "gooseneck" engines, purchased in New York, together with the promised hose.

Neptune, No. 1.—As soon as it was known that an engine would be furnished, C. W. Roesler proceeded to organize a fire company and succeeded in enrolling and uniforming about forty members, who took charge of the engine belonging to the D., L. and W. Railroad and christened it Neptune, No. 1. It was housed in the corner of one of the shops in the company's yard. The following year some of Neptune's members and others organized another company, took the other engine and named it Washington, No. 2. The rivalry of these two companies made a fireman's life exciting. The Neptunes generally proved the most efficient, and in the latter part of 1859 the borough council bought a $1,500 engine for them, which is still in their possession, although the city has provided the company with a $5,000 steamer. When Scranton was incorporated as a city, the commissioner put the Neptune engine up for sale. C. W. Roesler bid it in for $400 and turned it over to the old company.

Washington, No. 2.—In the latter part of 1856 this company was organized for the engine furnished by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, who had built a pretty little brick engine house of two stories for housing it. The upper story was fitted up for a meeting room, and the lower story contained the "Washington" and a nondescript called the "Niagara." John Greer was elected foreman; David Beecher, assistant foreman; and David Dale, secretary. Mr. Beecher brought the company up to efficiency and Mr. Greer's popularity kept it together until the Rebellion, when nearly the whole company enlisted. The company afterward raised $1,700 and bought a second hand engine, but it proved worthless and the company was disbanded.

Nay Aug Hose Company, No. 1.—The rivalry existing between "Neptune" and "Washington" frequently led to collisions at fires, and in some cases they stopped playing on the fire to play on each other. This state of affairs continued until early in 1858, when, the water pipes having been laid through the borough, the citizens bought a hose carriage and hose and the above named company was organized. It was composed of merchants, clerks and law students, who were designated "silk stockings." C. P. Matthews was elected foreman. The company virtually disbanded during the Rebellion.

Niagara, No. 3.—The old nondescript "Niagara" was overhauled and repaired, and a company was formed in the spring of 1858, to which none but married men were admitted, except the torch boys. Richard Stilwell was chosen foreman; J. O. Kiersted assistant foreman, and D. K. Kressler, secretary.

The Borough Fire Department.—As soon as the "Niagara" was fit for service it was proposed that a regular fire department should be established and the council took the proper action. At the first election George Fisher was chosen chief engineer and Messrs. F. W. Watson and J. W. Brock first and second assistants. A representative body known as "the Fireman's Board" was organized, consisting of the chief and assistant engineers and two delegates from each company; of which the chief engineer, ex officio, was president. Doctor A. Davis, from No. 2, was elected secretary, and D. K. Kressler, from No. 3, treasurer. The borough council appropriated $80 for the expenses of the board. The companies not respecting the orders of the chief engineer,

Mr. Fisher resigned. A new "Neptune" was bought in 1860. Mr. Watson kept the department together until his term expired, when he was succeeded by J. O. Kiersted, the last chief engineer under the borough. The commencement of the war carrying off nearly all the active members, the whole fire organization was virtually disbanded until a destructive fire occurred in 1867, which showed the need of a fire department.

At the formation of the city there were only two hand engines and one hose carriage fit for service, viz.: Franklin engine, of Hyde Park, Neptune engine, of Scranton, and Nay Aug hose.

Franklin Fire Company was incorporated July 3d, 1855, and has since been in active service. The engine was of the Baltimore style and rendered valuable aid at fires in Scranton and Hyde Park until 1869, when engine house and engine were burned. The citizens subscribed $850, with which an engine was bought, and in 1876 the city gave the company a third class Silsby steamer in exchange for the hand engine, which went into the possession of Relief Engine Company.

Scranton City Fire Department.—In 1867 the city councils established a fire department and bought two or three hook and ladder trucks. J. R. Keeley was elected chief engineer, and succeeded by R. Stilwell, C. W. Roesler, Enoch Page (three terms), Henry Ferber and S. B. Stilwell, who is now serving his third term.

The following companies and apparatus are now in active service and under the control of the city: Franklin Engine Company, steamer, Hyde Park; Neptune Engine Company, steamer and hand engine, Cedar street; Nay Aug Hose Company, steamer and hose carriage, Lackawanna avenue; Crystal Hose Company, steamer, Linden street; Liberty Hose Company and Liberty Hose Company, jr., hose carriages, Providence; General Phinney Hose Company, hose carriage, Green Ridge; Relief Engine Company, hand engine, Petersburg; Phoenix Hose Company, hose carriage, Lackawanna avenue; Columbia Hose Company, hose carriage, Hyde Park; Hand-in-Hand Engine Company, awaiting an engine, Bellevue.

Crystal Hose was admitted to the fire department in 1873; Liberty Hose Company, 1868; Liberty Hose Company, jr., 1876; General Phinney Hose Company, 1877; Hand-in-Hand Engine Company, 1877; Relief Engine Company, 1878; Phoenix Hose Company, 1879; Columbia Hose was organized in 1877, but has not been admitted.

An organization called the Citizens' Fire Association was incorporated in 1867, with a capital of $5,000 in $25 shares, to buy a steam fire engine. The citizens bought the steamer now in possession of Nay Aug Hose Company.

NOTABLE LABOR TROUBLES.

Scranton, as the center geographically and commercially of the eastern coal district, has from time to time been the scene of some of those conflicts between capital and labor common to all localities where mining and manufacturing are carried on extensively. The local troubles have been so frequent that it would be neither profitable nor interesting to notice all of them. Often they have been confined to one mine or manufacturing establishment and have been speedily adjusted without serious loss or inconvenience. The more notable strikes at Scranton occurred in 1869, in 1870-71 and in 1877.

THE MINERS' STRIKE OF 1869.

A general strike of all the miners in the employ of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, together with those at all collieries whose coal was purchased by this corporation except the Nay Aug or Roaring Brook colliery, began May 25th, 1869, and continued until August 27th. The miners of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company struck at the same time, but did not resume work until about a week after the date last mentioned. The cause for the action of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company's miners was the refusal of the company to grant an increase of ten cents a car in the price of mining. The difficulty was finally adjusted by the promise of the company to pay the same price for mining that was paid by the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and not to make any reduction before December 1st following, without thirty days' notice. Roaring Brook colliery and the mines of the Pennsylvania Coal Company were worked during this period of loss and inactivity without interruption. This was the first general strike in the Lackawanna district.

THE STRIKE AND RIOTS OF 1870 AND 1871.

December 5th, 1870, the miners of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Coal Company stopped work. From time to time the employes of other companies joined the movement, and during the next five months and more, with few exceptions, the mines in and about Scranton, as well as throughout the entire anthracite coal region, were idle, the miners remaining stubborn in their demands for higher wages and the coal companies in their refusal to grant any concessions. The effect of the suspension was disastrous not only to miners and operators, but to the business prosperity of the city and the surrounding country, and among the former there were numerous instances of want and destitution.

During the war the rapid increase in the demand for coal stimulated production beyond precedent, forced higher rates for mining than was paid by any other branch of industry, and attracted to the mines more men that could be profitably employed when business returned to its natural channel. To maintain the then current high wages, the miners formed an association, which in a short time embraced the entire anthracite region, and in 1869 resolved that they would not only determine the rates to be paid for labor, but would also control and determine the production of the mines and the value of coal to the consumer. This new and extraordinary claim was conceded by a majority of the producers, but was successfully resisted by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and the Pennsylvania Coal Company. This protracted period of inactivity and distress engendered a hostile feeling on the part of the strikers towards such of their occupation as continued to work here and there, which culminated in the well remembered riots of April 6th and 7th, 1871. On the 6th a mob gathered at Tripp's slope, and tried to prevent the men working there from coming out of the mine at quitting time. The next day men were beaten, the work at mines stopped and much property was destroyed. A breaker was burned down, and a force of miners estimated at about 1,000 carried terror in all directions. Upon application from Mayor Monies, the governor sent Major General Osborne and a portion of his division, the Hazleton Battalion under Major Swank, the 15th regiment under Colonel O. K. Moore, together with the Thomas and Franklin Zouaves of Scranton. These forces were put on guard, and though all attempts at an adjustment of the differences between employers and employes by arbitration or otherwise failed for some time, there was no further violence. Work was generally resumed May 22nd, though some miners, notably those in the employ of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, had resumed a few days earlier.

THE GREAT RIOTS OF 1877.

From the beginning of the troubles which culminated in the wide-spread strikes and riots of 1877, Scranton, the most important point in the coal region, was profoundly agitated. The strike in the city proper was begun July 24th by the employes of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, though the employes at the Meadow Brook mines, numbering about 300, had struck the night before. It was first declared at noon in the old rolling-mill, and the men retired from the building, leaving the partly formed rails in the rolls and the fires in the furnaces still burning, and proceeded in a body to the company's steel mills, where work was suspended, the employes joining the strikers and marching with them to the shops and foundries, where work was also stopped; the entire force of workmen in all of these establishments, to the number of about 1,500, having struck, declaring that they had been unable to live on the wages they had received up to the 15th of that month, at which date a reduction of ten per cent. more had been made. During the afternoon a meeting was held at which it was determined to demand the restoration of this last reduction. The employes of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company struck that day. The locomotives were run into the yard, where their fires were drawn and they were left in good order. Passenger trains were taken to their destinations, but upon their arrival the fires were drawn and the engines placed on side tracks. There was no disposition shown by the firemen to injure any of the companies' property, which they declared they would protect. A coal train which left Scranton at five o'clock was returned and placed in the yard with nearly a score of others similarly loaded. A demand had previously been made on Superintendent Manville, of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, by the firemen in the employ of that corporation, but concessions had been refused by him that afternoon. No engineers, conductors or brakemen were concerned in the movement at that time, though the brakemen afterward joined it. It was announced by the railway authorities that no trains would run until the difficulty was settled. All shipments of coal ceased, and the mines in all parts of the Lackawanna valley were thus rendered idle. The excitement in the city was intense. Doubt, uncertainty and apprehension were everywhere manifest. A proclamation was issued by Mayor McKune, urging the necessity of sober, careful thought and pointing out the criminal folly of any precipitate action.

The excitement increased, and on the 25th the crowds of idle and eagerly talking men about the streets were augmented by the arrival of thousands of miners who flocked in from all directions. The strikers said they would not obstruct the carrying of the mails, but declared they would suffer no passenger cars to pass over the roads. When the 10 o'clock train from Binghamton arrived it was boarded by a number of strikers, who uncoupled the express and passenger cars as it neared the depot, but permitted the mail to pass. The railway officials refused to go through with the mail unless the passenger cars were permitted to pass, but the strikers procured orders for the governor to Superintendent Halstead to allow the mails to pass as usual. A statement was prepared by a committee of the strikers for publication in the local papers, setting forth their grievances and the cause for their action. A petition was adopted asking the saloon keepers to close their places of business.

The miners of the Scranton district, representing not less than 40,000 men, demanded an increase of twenty-five per cent. on their wages during the day, causing augmented excitement in the city. W. R. Storrs, general coal superintendent of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, was waited on by a committee of six who presented a series of resolutions, representing that the men had been subjected to repeated reductions until their wages were far less than adequate to their support and that of their families, and that they would not longer endure it, but were determined to continue the strike until their demand should be complied with, even though the railway employes should return to their work. Mr. Storrs forwarded their petition to the general office of the company and promised the committee a reply on the following Friday; and the strikers called a mass meeting in the woods, in the suburbs of the city, for the afternoon of the 26th. The Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's employes, including the workmen in the iron and steel works, sent a committee during the day to wait on W. W. Scranton, the general superintendent, and demand an increase of wages to the amount of twenty-five per cent., which he was unable to grant. The strike was rendered general by a demand of the employes in the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western car shops of an increase of twenty-five per cent., and it now extended to every important branch of industry in the valley; and one of the most dangerous elements in the trouble was supplied by the action of the miners, who, not satisfied with quitting work, refused to allow the pumps of the mines to be operated. The men who attempted to keep them going to prevent the mines from flooding were driven away by the strikers and the engines were stopped, allowing the water to flow steadily into the mines, injuring some of them to an almost inestimable extent. The prevailing state of affairs at the time was thus summed up in a despatch from Scranton, July 29th:

"The entire Lackawanna region is idle. Week before last this region sent nearly 150,000 tons of coal to market. Last week it did not send a tithe of that quantity, and next week it will not send any. The miners of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company quit work yesterday morning, and those of the Pennsylvania Coal Company are in enforced idleness on account of the destruction of a head-house and bridge on their gravity railroad. The head-house, which was situated in the woods east of this city, was burned down at three o'clock this morning, by a mob which surprised the watchman and tied him with ropes to a neighboring tree. They saturated the wood work of the head-house, and then set it off with a match. It made a fierce blaze, which was plainly visible here. Destruction of the head-house causes a complete stoppage from Hawley to Pittston. It was not the work of the company's employes, but of outside persons, who took that mode of forcing the strike upon them. The Pennsylvania Coal Company have recently been working on full time at their mines, and the best of feeling exists between themselves and their workmen. The latter are indignant at the dastardly act."

The mayor was very active in efforts to effect an adjustment of the troubles, and succeeded at length in inducing the miners in the vicinity of Scranton to allow the pumps to be put to work by the civil engineers, bosses and clerks of the coal companies.

By dint of strong effort on the part of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the city authorities the employes of that corporation gave up the struggle July 30th, and resumed work at their former wages. This action was brought about chiefly by the mayor, who sent for the executive committee of the striking railway employes and informed them that travel would have to be resumed over the road the next morning, even if the presence of troops should be necessary to such a result. At a meeting held early in the afternoon the men decided, by a vote of 82 to 9, to return to their work, and a committee proceeded to inform Superintendent Halstead of their determination, the only terms asked being the promise of the superintendent that no one who had taken an active part in the strike should be prosecuted. This condition was not refused, and passenger and freight traffic was speedily re-established.

The miners declared their intention to hold out, and bitterly denounced the concession of the railway employes, their turbulence augmenting day by day to such a pitch as to make troops necessary. Some of the miners resumed work stealthily. On the morning of August 1st a mass meeting of about 5,000 strikers was held in the suburbs. The situation was discussed by partisan speakers with more fervor than deliberation. The policy of the railroad and coal companies was denounced in bitter terms, and the action of the workmen who had resumed their former positions in the shops and blast furnaces was scathingly reprobated. An incendiary letter from some anonymous person was read, which stated that W. W. Scranton had declared he would have the men at work for thirty-five cents a day, stirring the multitude up to a pitch of almost ungovernable excitement. Curses and threats were heard almost on every hand, and the influence of addresses by a few of the more conservative of the leaders, which had been listened to with attention and respect, seemed to have been destroyed in a moment. A few reporters were present, and as soon as they were recognized their notes were seized by the strikers and they were driven from the ground. The men then separated in two squads, proceeded to the machine shops, foundries and furnaces of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, and drove off a number of men and boys who were at work. They then went to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western car shops. The workmen there were panic-stricken and fled in terror. Some of them were seriously injured, as was also a foreman named Little. Mayor McKune, appearing upon the scene, was hooted. After vainly addressing the mob, he was driven from the ground. In a rush which followed, Mr. Lilly, a lumber boss in the employ of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western shops, was beaten. The mayor endeavored by all the means in his power to disperse the crowd, but was knocked down and severely injured.

Upon learning the extent of the riot the mayor had summoned a posse which had previously been organized in view of the dangers which threatened the city, under command of W. W. Scranton, which promptly assembled and marched about fifty strong to the scene of danger, encountering the mob at the intersection of Washington and Lackawanna avenues, near where they saw the mayor, bleeding from his recent wounds. As the posse approached him for instructions some of the more reckless of the rioters attacked the armed men with a shower of stones and other missiles; and a moment later one of them shot T. W. Bortree, who was in the rear of the mayor's posse, in the knee with a pistol ball; and immediately the posse faced about and a number of them fired, killing or fatally wounding four of the rioters and injuring others more or less seriously. The crowd fled and sought safety in various directions at the first volley. It was followed by two others in quick succession, and by this time the mob was utterly routed and the streets were soon clear, except for the presence of the dead, dying and wounded and those whom humanity or curiosity had called to the spot. Four had been killed or fatally wounded, and it is estimated that no less than a score of persons, including those killed, were injured. It was manifest that order could be preserved only by armed force. The streets were patrolled by armed citizens and an urgent appeal for military assistance was forwarded to the governor at Pittsburgh. Threatened freight cars were guarded.

Before daylight on the morning of August 2nd men were pouring in by hundreds from the neighboring mining districts and concentrating near the depot. Here Governor Hartranft, with a large force of soldiers under command of General Huidekoper, arrived about the same time, just in time to avert the impending difficulty. As the troops arrived, with two cannon on a platform car in advance of the locomotive and hundreds of bayonets protruding from the car windows, the rioters made an instant stampede. The troops were warmly welcomed by the citizens, and went into camp in various parts of the city and its suburbs. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, under their protection, put its trains in motion, and a meeting of the citizens was held endorsing the warlike action taken by the mayor's posse and pledging a firm support to the city authorities in behalf of law and order. Despite the powerful protection now afforded to those who desired to engage at their old pursuits, none of the miners returned to work and the mine pumps were still operated by the engineers, clerks and bosses, and it was menacingly said that grass would grow in the mines and water flow from the mouths of the shafts before work would be resumed at the old rate of wages. At one o'clock on the 3d a meeting of at least 5,000 miners and other workmen was held in the woods, at which a committee of six was appointed who sought and obtained an interview with the governor in his car, which resulted in nothing more than a friendly advisory talk to the committee, as the representatives of the great body of strikers, by the governor, who, as representative of the State, could not act as arbitrator in such a matter.

The excitement caused by the miners' riot and their encounter with the mayor's posse continued for some time. In spite of the protection afforded by the soldiers the workmen returned to their labor in the various industrial establishments slowly, being afraid of the miners, whose attitude was defiant and determined. A meeting of delegates from every mine in the section was held at Scranton, to appoint a general executive committee and form plans to secure a perfect unity of action among the strikers, so that the men in all directions would simultaneously resume work in all of the mines whenever the time for resumption should be declared. On the 7th a large store was opened by the miners' executive committee to relieve the immediate necessities of such of their families as might suffer for food, and it was soon filled with provisions. By the friendly co-operation of business men in the city and elsewhere, and the farmers throughout the section, trains were placed at their disposal, and donations of potato patches and other crops were made, and many miners went to the country in gangs to do work and receive their pay in provisions. Information was received on the 7th of intended depredations by the strikers, and a double guard was placed on duty in all parts of the city. Meetings of miners were held at night in the woods round about, and rocket signals were sent up occasionally from every hill.

In the meantime a despicable effort had been made by the friends of the rioters who had been killed to be revenged on the members of the mayor's posse. A coroner's jury, composed of sympathizers with the miners, held an inquest on the bodies, and August 8th returned a verdict of wilful murder against the member,

E Merrifield

EDWARD MERRIFIELD.

This gentleman was born in the village of Wyoming, Luzerne county, July 30th, 1832. He was the eldest and is now the only child living of Judge William and Almira Merrifield. A biographical notice of his father appears on another page of this volume. Edward Merrifield, with the exception of the first year of his life, has been a resident of Scranton. His education was received in the public schools at Hyde Park and in an attendance of about two years at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, and between two and three years at Oxford Academy, Chenango county, N. Y., where he prepared for college. On account of impaired health the idea of a college course was abandoned.

Upon his return from Oxford he engaged in company with his father at Hyde Park in mercantile business, in which he continued but one year. In the spring of 1852 he entered the law academy at Easton, Pa., Judge McCartney principal, where he remained one term. In 1853 he entered the law office of Harrison Wright, at Wilkes-Barre, where he remained two years. At the August term of court in 1855 he was admitted to the bar, and the same year opened an office at Hyde Park. In 1861 he removed from Hyde Park and opened an office in Scranton. In 1867, for the purpose of recruiting his health, he purchased a farm on the Raritan river, Somerset county, N. J., which he carried on two years. Having fully recovered his health, he returned and again opened a law office in Scranton, where he has since practiced. In politics Mr. Merrifield has acted with the Democratic party.

For a number of years he was president of the Scranton Law and Library Association. He was very active in securing the formation of the county of Lackawanna, and to no one man was due more credit for the final success of that project. His pleasant home on Wyoming avenue was built in 1870. He married (November 25th, 1855) Jennie Eldridge, daughter of James M. and Elvira Eldridge, of Owego, N. Y. They have one daughter, Jessie. In his profession Mr. Merrifield is regarded especially as a safe and thoroughly reliable counselor, and as a citizen enjoys in the largest measure the esteem and confidence of the entire community in which he has spent his life.

DR. JOHN WILSON GIBBS, JR.

Dr. John Wilson Gibbs, jr., one of the older physicians of Scranton, was born in Jefferson village, near Newark, N. J., October 10th, 1823. In 1846 he married Euphemia, daughter of William Patton, a Philadelphia banker. He was a graduate of the Pennsylvania Medical College, Philadelphia. The scene of his early professional life was in Schuylkill county, where he made many warm friends. In 1856 he visited the south with his family, wintering at Vicksburg, Miss. In 1857 he returned north and settled in Hyde Park, Scranton, where he at once entered upon a lucrative and extensive practice in medicine and surgery. He was elected and served as coroner to the old county of Luzerne during the war of the Rebellion.

In the spring of 1870, during some relaxation from his arduous duties, he made the tour of Europe, returning to his labors with a body invigorated and a mind refreshed. In 1879 he was elected a member of the medical staff of the Lackawanna Hospital, and re-elected in 1880. At its inception he was made treasurer of the Lackawanna County Medical Society, to which position he was re-elected at the last election. The doctor comes of a family singularly devoted to the science of medicine, his father, a clergyman of the Baptist denomination, having subsequently graduated in medicine. Three of his brothers were physicians, as is also one of his sons. The latter, Dr. L. H. Gibbs, is a resident of Scranton, and enjoys a large practice. Another son, W. St. Clair Gibbs, is now (1880) a student of medicine at Philadelphia. Robert Patton Gibbs, a third son, prepared for college at Keystone Academy, at Factoryville, Pa., with the purpose of entering Columbia College.

of the posse; and the alderman who had acted as coroner issued warrants for the arrest of six of the accused and placed them in the hands of three constables for immediate service. T. F. Hunt (who was not a member of the posse but against whom the charge had probably been urged by an enemy) was arrested at his residence that evening, with Mr. C. F. Chittenden, and they would have been taken to the sixth ward, the most lawless part of the city, had they not been rescued from the constables by soldiers, at the instance of General Huidekoper, and conveyed to military headquarters, where they were protected during the night. The next day they were handed over to the sheriff and, with a majority of the leading members of the citizens' party, were taken by special train to Wilkes-Barre, where they gave bail. Upon trial they were acquitted. A number of the more prominent strikers were also arrested, but none were punished; all aggressive measures were abandoned on both sides, and in time the rancorous animosity which had been engendered died out. Had Messrs. Hunt and Chittenden fallen into the power of the friends of the dead rioters, who were numerous in the sixth ward, it is not unlikely that they would have been murdered.

SECRET AND SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS.

Capouse Lodge, No. 170 (Hyde Park).—This is one of the oldest lodges in northeastern Pennsylvania. Its charter members were mostly from Cambrian Lodge, No. 58, of Carbondale, and it was instituted July 24th, 1846, in the old "Slocum house." The following were installed as the first officers: E. S. M. Hill, N. G.; William Hawket, V. G.; J. S. Sherrerd, secretary; John D. Mead, treasurer. In 1848 the lodge was located in Hyde Park, building a hall on the site of the Hyde Park Bank. From March 2nd, 1872, when the structure was burned, until the erection of the new building on the lot adjoining the former one, the lodge met in the halls of the Co-operative Association and Warnke & Hower. The new hall was dedicated in June, 1874, but had to be sold for debt. The lodge once had a membership of 376, but became reduced to about 100. September 30th, 1879, 120 members were enrolled, and the prospects are brighter than they have been for years. The officers in November, 1879, were as follows: William R. Williams, N. G.; John R. Morris, V. G.; W. Gaylord Thomas, secretary; Charles V. Smith, assistant secretary; William H. Decker, F. secretary, and John Harwin, treasurer.

Lackawanna Lodge, No. 291 (Scranton).—In old Odd Fellow's Hall, Lackawanna Lodge, No. 291, I. O. of O. F. was instituted March 16th, 1848, with the following charter members: Henry McCarty, N. G.; John W. Moore, V. G.; Dr. B. H. Throop, Sec.; W. W. Manness, Asst. Sec.; J. C. Platt, Treas.; John Travis, Robert Henderson, Matthias Henderson, Thomas Reese and Alanson Bemer. Lackawanna Lodge has been the parent of two other lodges (the Residence and the Robert Burns) besides providing charter members for several others. Since the organization of the lodge $13,000 has been expended in benefits, and it is now in prosperous condition, promptly meeting all demands for aid from its members and rendering aid as occasion requires to sister lodges.

The Odd Fellows' Hall and Cemetery Association is an incorporated body composed entirely of the membership of Lackawanna Lodge. It was incorporated November 18th, 1873, and has property valued at $16,000, consisting of over three acres of the Forest Hill Cemetery and the lot on Wyoming avenue occupied by Messrs. A. O. Snow and J. D. Williams. December 6th, 1879, the following board of directors for the ensuing year was chosen: John T. Howe, Horace Shirer, George B. Chase, Dr. H. N. Dunnell, F. B. Sturges, C. Sensaubaug and Israel Ruth. The board immediately organized by electing Israel Ruth president and George B. Chase secretary and treasurer.

Scranton Encampment, No. 81 (Scranton).—This encampment was instituted March 16th, 1849, as Lackawanna Encampment, with the following charter members and first officers: J. Curtis Platt, C. P.; O. P. Clark, H. P.; W. W. Manness, S. W.; J. W. More, J. W.; B. H. Throop, S.; D. K. Kressler, T.; J. Williams, Sent.

The officers in November, 1879, were: Horace Shirer, C. P.; Benjamin Jenkin, H. P.; Alfred E. Finch, S. W.; John Kraeger, J. W.; Israel Ruth, S.; D. K. Kressler, T. The encampment has been particularly fortunate in the choice of its officers, some of whom have been re-elected year after year. Thomas P. LACKAWANNA COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

The Lackawanna County Medical Society was organized December 4th, 1878, with officers and membership as follows: B. H. Throop, Pres.; Charles Burr and G. B. Boyd, V. Ps.; E. A. Heermans, Sec.; L. Wehlau, C. H. Fisher and H. I. Jones, censors; S. B. Reed, I. F. Everhart, J. W. Gibbs, L. H. Gibbs, P. J. Higgins, Horace Ladd, B. C. Hopkins, B. F. Evans, W. E. Allen, Thomas Stewart, Charles Frischkorn, J. W. Robathan, William H. Heath, J. W. Houser, H. C. Wheeler, S. D. Davis, R. A. Squire, J. Burnett, William F. Pier, G. S. Throop, A. J. Connell.

The society meets at the arbitration room in the courthouse in Scranton, at 2 o'clock P. M., on the second Tuesday of January, March, May, July, September and November.

Essays form an interesting feature of the meetings, and interesting surgical classes, so abundant in the mining region, are frequently brought before the society for mutual study.

MUSICAL.

The Scranton Philharmonic Society.—This society was organized in October, 1875, with the following board of managers: President, James Ruthven; vice-presidents, John D. Fuller, L. B. Powell and William H. Freeman; secretary, E. J. Dimmick; treasurer, George A. Jessup; librarian, William T. Hackett; directors, Isaac F. Fuller, A. W. Dickson and N. A. Hurlbert; musical conductor, Charles B. Derman; pianist, Miss Stella Seymour. The board of management for the season of 1879-80 is: George A. Jessup, president; William H. Freeman and J. H. Bessell, vice-presidents; William T. Hackett, secretary; C. F. Whittemore, treasurer; E. E. Wells, librarian; John J. Coleman, assistant librarian; John Silkman and E. J. Smith, directors; Charles B. Derman, musical director; Miss Stella Seymour, pianist. The society numbers about 65 active and 150 sustaining members. Glees, operas and oratorios are rehearsed and three concerts are given each season in the Academy of Music.

Bauer's Band, well known throughout northeastern Pennsylvania, was organized June 30th, 1877, by the following musicians: R. J. Bauer, S. R. Price, Frank Washburn, R. H. Brader, A. M., E. B. and H. D. Morse, Harry and H. R. Williams, Henry Cook and John Thomas. During the first two months S. R. Price was leader, Mr. Bauer, who had previously devoted almost his entire time to the violin, not being a proficient cornet player, but at the expiration of that time Mr. Price resigned in his favor. The membership in January, 1880, was twenty-six. A large proportion of the members have been pupils of Mr. Bauer. In September, 1879, this band furnished the music for the grand musical festival held in the Main Centennial building, at Philadelphia, by the united choirs from Luzerne, Lackawanna, Schuylkill and Carbon counties, Pa., aggregating 1,200 voices.

Handel and Hayden Oratorio Society (Hyde Park).—This society was reorganized February 13th, 1880, with the following management: President, W. H. Freeman; vice-president, B. G. Beddoe; corresponding secretary, John Morris; recording secretary, Daniel Elsinger; treasurer, E. G. Griffith; pianist, Silas Rosser; directors, Isaac B. Morgan and John Frear; librarian, W. S. Evans.

MISCELLANEOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

The Scranton Poultry and Pet Stock Association was organized in January, 1877. The officers were: D. N. Green, president; George S. Horn, secretary; John H. Phelps, treasurer. The present (1880) officers are: R. M. Lindsay, president; George S. Hern, secretary; Robert McMillan, treasurer. The object of this association is the promotion of pure-bred stock. Three exhibitions have been held.

The Printers' Union of Scranton meets in Odd Fellows' Hall the second Saturday of each month. It has been in existence about eleven years and has about 30 members. It is a non-beneficial body. Officers are chosen semi-annually. The president is M. Watson.

Lackawanna Game and Fish Association.—January 18th, 1879, at an informal meeting of a number of gentlemen of Scranton favorable to the protection of game and the propagation of fish, a committee was appointed to draw up a preamble, constitution and by-laws, and to report at the office of Dr. J. F. Everhart June 25th, at which time the constitution and by-laws were adopted, and the following officers elected: Dr. J. F. Everhart, president; Henry Beyer and R. M. Lindsay, vice-presidents; Jason H. Wells, secretary; Charles R. Smith, treasurer; Dr. C. A. Stevens, Dr. C. H. Fisher, Milo J. Wilson, Cornelius Smith and G. H. Birdsall, board of managers.

CHURCH HISTORY.

PRESBYTERIAN.

First Presbyterian Church of Scranton.—The earliest regular preaching in the Lackawanna valley was by Rev. Cyrus Gildersleeve, of Wilkes-Barre, as early as 1827, and the few Presbyterians in the lower half of the valley were connected with the church of Wilkes-Barre. Once in four or six weeks Mr. Gildersleeve traversed the valley, and preached on week days in school-houses, barns, private dwellings and the open air, at Lackawanna, at Hyde Park and at Providence. For more than ten years following Mr. Gildersleeve's ministry there were not more than six families residing east of the river, in what is now the main part of Scranton. From 1834 Rev. John Dorrance, D. D., of Wilkes-Barre, and Rev. Thomas P. Hunt, of Wyoming, occupied the Lackawanna mission field. In 1835 and 1836 Rev. Thomas Owen, a Welsh Presbyterian, traversed the valley on foot, preaching at all the stations. Next an Irishman named Turbitt labored about six months. From 1842 to 1844 Revs. Owen Brown and Charles Evans successively occupied the same field, and Rev. G. Parke from June, 1844, until after the organization of the First Presbyterian church of Scranton. There was no preaching in the Scranton settlement till 1839. In 1842 the union church was completed by the people of the settlement and vicinity; it passed into the hands of the Methodists. A committee of the Presbytery of Susquehanna, consisting of Messrs. Dorrance, Hunt and Brown, met in the school-house, near the site of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company's blast furnace, Friday, February 26th, 1842, and organized a Presbyterian church, with John M. Atherton and Benjamin Couch as elders, and Hiram E. Dailey as deacon. It was called the Lackawanna church, and embraced a membership living all along from Providence to Pittston, including both places. In June, 1844, Rev. Mr. Parke assumed the pastoral charge. A church edifice was erected at Lackawanna, and dedicated in 1848. Scranton was then merely a preaching station. Christians of all denominations worshiped together in the union church and sustained a common Sunday-school. The growing villages of Pittston and Lackawanna both claimed the Lackawanna church, while the congregation covered an extensive field; but Scranton had begun to be recognized as the chief point. After much discussion it was decided to organize a separate church there.

A petition signed by eighteen communicants of different Presbyterian, Congregational and Moravian churches, besides a number of citizens not communicants, was sent to the Presbytery of Luzerne, asking for a church organization under the care of that Presbytery. In answer to this petition the Presbytery appointed a committee consisting of Revs. John Dorrance, D. D., and N. G. Parke with power to organize a church. This committee met October 14th, 1848, at Odd Fellows' Hall in Scranton, and organized the First Presbyterian Church of Scranton, with the following members: Selden T. and George W. Scranton and their wives, Nathaniel B. James and Mrs. Rebecca A. Hutchison, Mrs. Mary, Mrs. Sarah and Miss Mary A. Coursen, Misses Catharine and Temperance Miller, Mrs. Maria Fellows, Peter Clark, Charles Fuller, Richard Hollenback and Simon Ward. William H. Platt, Mrs. Emily Platt and Mrs. Catharine S. S. Platt were among the most earnest and efficient in securing the organization of the church, but were not formally recognized at its organization because their certificates of admission failed to reach them until a few days afterward. Rev. N. G. Parke served the church six months after its organization as stated supply. Rev. J. D. Mitchell was pastor from December 16th, 1849, to October, 1853. His stated salary was $600. Rev. John F. Baker was pastor from May, 1854, to January 14th, 1855, at $600 per year. Rev. Milo J. Hickok, D. D., of the Presbytery of New York, was installed August 5th, 1855. His salary was $800. He was disabled by paralysis while in the pulpit October 15th, 1867, and the church was supplied by Revs. W. C. Cattell and W. W. Atterbury until he resigned, in 1868. His salary had been increased to $2,500 a year and the use of the parsonage. A portion of the last year of his active pastorate was spent in travelling in Europe and his expenses were paid by the congregation, and his support was continued by the church until his death, July 19th, 1873. The present (1880) pastor, Rev. S. C. Logan, D. D., of the Presbytery of Lake, was elected August 25th, 1868, while secretary of the assembly committee on freedmen. Without being released from the duties of that office, he began supplying the church December 5th, 1868. He accepted the call June 1st, 1869, and was installed September 3d following, on a salary of $2,500 (since increased to $3,000) and the occupancy of the parsonage.

Charles Fuller and N. B. Hutchison were ordained elders of the church at its organization. Mr. Fuller has been clerk of sessions ever since. Mr. Hutchison was dismissed, June 16th, 1860, to the First Presbyterian Church of Providence, and has since died. James Harrington was an elder from July 20th, 1853, to February 24th, 1865; Samuel Sherrard from May 31st, 1857, to June 29th, 1867. Charles F. Mattes was ordained and installed May 31st, 1857; George Fuller November 25th, 1860. January 30th, 1871, the latter resigned. E. A. Lawrence was an elder from November 25th, 1860, to December 13th, 1863; R. M. Arnold from November 25th, 1860, to October 28th, 1867. Alfred Hand was ordained and installed April 17th, 1867. Robert Blake held the office of elder from April 17th, 1867, to July 27th, 1871; Edward Judson from April 17th, 1867, to June 23d, 1871. U. M. Stowers was installed April 17th, 1867; C. H. Doud, William H. Platt and Alexander W. Dickson, February 19th, 1871. The latter was chosen assistant clerk of sessions October 30th, 1871. The present ruling elders are Charles Fuller, Charles F. Mattes, Alfred Hand, C. H. Doud, William Platt and Alexander W. Dickson.

In 1846 $640 was secured at home toward the first church building, and it was increased abroad to $3,395. Of the amount obtained abroad $50 came from Wilkes-Barre and the balance from New York city and the friends of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company in Connecticut. The amount was increased to about $7,000 before the edifice was completed. In 1841 the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company took the subscription made and assumed the burden of building the church, for which they proposed to give the lots. The ground had to be cleared of timber. The late Joel Amsden was the architect. The frame of the spire was raised September 30th, 1851. The bell was hung November 26th and rung for the first time the next day (Thanksgiving). The building was completed at a cost of about $13,000, and was dedicated September 19th, 1852. The company now proposed that if the congregation would secure $5,000 of the indebtedness by mortgage and insurance, the lots and balance should at once be given to the church, allowing ten years to meet the obligation. This generous offer was accepted and ten years later, under the management of Thomas Dickson and J. J. Albright, the whole indebtedness ($6,300) was paid, with a recorded recognition of the generosity of the company, which had subscribed $1,000. The house was at once occupied by the church. April 16th, 1860, the work of enlarging it was completed at a cost of $4,000, making the audience room 80 feet square. In 1866 a lecture room was added at a cost of $3,200. In 1879 the interior of the church was repaired and repainted. The parsonage was erected in 1855, at a cost of $3,200. In 1869 it was enlarged and improved at an outlay of $2,700. The cost of building the church and parsonage, exclusive of minor repairs, has been $26,200. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church was celebrated November 16th, 1873, at which time an endowment fund of $10,000 was established for the benefit of the poor of the congregation. The present church membership is 450.

The first Sunday-school in Scranton was a union school, organized May 1st, 1841. August 17th, 1846, a second school was organized, in the membership of which Presbyterians largely predominated. September 12th, 1852, a Sunday-school was organized by members of the first Presbyterian church, with which it was connected. Joseph H. Scranton was superintendent; J. C. Platt, secretary; W. W. Manness, librarian; H. L. Marvine, treasurer. It has been kept up since that date and is now one of the largest in the city. Mission Sunday-schools have been organized as follows: At the Continental mine in the summer of 1851; the Pine Brook school, in the spring of 1853; the Briggs shaft school, in the following summer; the Hickory street school, in June, 1867; the Cedar street school, in April, 1872; and others, including the Zion Sabbath-school (colored), which have been kept in various localities longer or shorter periods.

The First Presbyterian church of Dunmore was organized February 18th, 1854, at the house of Daniel Swartz, with the following named members: Jacob Swartz, William B. and Susan A. Letchworth, Mrs. Susanna Reynolds, Mrs. Sarah O. More, Mrs. Jane Ann Coolbaugh, Cornelia E. Smith, Elizabeth and Janet Clave, Mary and Isabel Youngs. The first meeting was held in the village school-house, Rev. Burr Baldwin, a member of the Presbytery of Montrose, acting as moderator. The first pastor was Rev. J. R. Townsend, who labored as stated supply for twelve years. Then Rev. R. S. Foster was pastor seven years. The present pastor begun his labors November 9th, 1873, and was installed by the Presbytery of Lackawanna May 8th, 1874. The church, a wooden structure, was erected in 1853, at a cost of $2,500. The first Sunday-school superintendent was William B. Letchworth.

Washburn Street Presbyterian Church (Hyde Park).—This church was organized August 18th, 1854, at the residence of Dr. J. C. Plante, with the following named constituent members: Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Plante, Mrs. William Pier, Mrs. Corydon H. Wells, Mrs. William Jane, Mrs. Henry Hufford and Mr. and Mrs. Alpheus B. Fuller. A resolution was adopted that a delegate should attend the next stated meeting of Montrose Presbytery, to ask that this church should be taken under its care.

The church manual of Montrose Presbytery was adopted. The minutes of the meeting are signed by Burr Baldwin, general missionary of Montrose Presbytery. Of the eight persons whose names appear in the first record only Mrs. Pier and Mrs. C. H. Wells remain with the church. The church was incorporated in 1855, one year after its organization, under the name of the "First Presbyterian Church and Congregation of the Borough of Hyde Park." In 1872 the name was changed to the "Washburn street Presbyterian Church of Scranton." Of the charter members only A. P. Finch and J. D. Peck survive.

Messrs. Plante and Snidcor were elected elders in 1857. In 1879 Messrs. Wells, Oram, Frink and Bagley constituted the session.

In 1855 Rev. J. R. Townsend began his labors as stated supply, succeeding Rev. Burr Baldwin, having charge also of the church at Dunmore, and remaining five years. He died in September, 1875, at Meridian, N. Y. November 18th, 1860, Rev. A. L. Clark began his labors as stated supply, and he was installed pastor of the church June 11th, 1861, and preached his farewell sermon April 24th, 1870. From February 7th, 1871, Rev. W. B. Culliss was pastor till October 26th, 1873. December 14th following the present pastor, Rev. D. K. Freeman, was called. He was installed by a committee of the Presbytery May 13th, 1874. During Mr. Freeman's pastorate to the present time (1880) 150 have been added to the membership, and 32 lost by removal and death. The membership is 197.

The church was erected in August, 1863, at a cost of $6,000, and enlarged to its present attractive dimensions in 1871-72, at a cost of over $12,000.

The Sabbath-school was organized in 1855, with 19 scholars. There are now about 300. The superintendent is Mr. T. F. Wells. The Briggs shaft Sunday-school, also under charge of this church, has a membership of nearly 250.

The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of this church took place August 18th, 1879, afternoon and evening. The audiences at both services were large and attentive. A number of the ministers of Lackawanna Presbytery were present, among them Revs. N. G. Parke, of Pittston; H. H. Welles, of Kingston; A. L. Clark, a former pastor of the church; Dr. Logan, of Scranton, and Mr. Brydie, of Pleasant Valley.

The German Presbyterian Church, on Hickory street, Scranton, was organized in Odd Fellows' Hall, January 28th, 1856, with 60 constituent members, and was received under the care of the Presbytery of Luzerne June 25th, 1856. The successive pastors and their terms of service have been as follows: Revs. Herman Veith, January, 1856, to March, 1858; Thomas Gradman, March, 1858, to February 5th, 1859; Charles David Rosenthal, March 1st, 1859, to October 2nd, 1864; William C. Wunderlich, November 20th, 1864, to the present time (December, 1879). In 1856 the church lots on Hickory street, between Cedar street and Pittston avenue, were purchased of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company. The corner stone of a new church was laid September 5th, 1857, and the church, a wooden structure valued with the site at $3,500, was consecrated November 6th, 1859. The membership is nearly 275. The Sunday-school, with 400 pupils, is in a flourishing condition. On Pittston avenue is the cemetery of this church, valued at $6,000.

Petersburg German.—This church, taking its name from that of a portion of the city where it is located, on Centre street, was organized in a school house in January, 1858. George N. and Peter Engel, Conrad Otto, John M. Thauer, John Fries, Jacob Saar, Charles Schmidt, Fred Teufel, John Baumann, Henry Wenzel, Henry Schulz, Joseph Faber, William Vetzler and Franz Ziegler were the constituent members.

The Pennsylvania Coal Company donated a lot and the corner stone of the church was laid September 19th, 1868. The building was completed at a cost of $2,500, and consecrated July 25th, 1869. The congregation had been received under the care of the Presbytery of Luzerne June 23d. The membership of the church in 1879 was 55. The first superintendent of the Sunday-school (now flourishing with 75 pupils) was Conrad Otto. Rev. Thomas Gradman was pastor (the first) from March until February, 1859; Rev. Charles David Rosenthal from March, 1859, until October, 1864. Rev. William C. Wunderlich has been pastor since November 20th, 1864.

Second (Scranton).—The house of worship of the First Presbyterian Church, from which the Second sprang, for several years prior to the division was over-crowded. A new organization was effected June 27th, 1874, with Messrs. J. P. W. Riley, C. W. Kirkpatrick and F. L. Hitchcock as elders, and Thomas Dickson, E. B. Sturges, H. M. Boies, Charles H. Welles, J. O. Kiersted and J. A. Price as trustees. The membership numbered 88, of whom 80 had been identified with the parent church. Lots were soon after purchased, and the frame chapel since occupied erected for use until a more pretentious church edifice can be provided.

From a date late in 1874 Rev. J. W. Partridge was pastor until July, 1876, and from the latter part of 1876 Rev. William Cullis was stated supply until June 1st, 1877. From the following September Rev. William H. Belden was pastor until August, 1879. In March, 1880, Rev. T. R. Beeber, of Danville, Pa., was called to succeed him.

The membership numbers about 160. It is organized in all the ordinary departments of church activity, and has a Sabbath-school numbering about 175 members, officered as follows: Superintendent, F. L. Hitchcock; assistant superintendent, J. H. Torrey; second assistant superintendent, E. G. Coursen; secretary, O. B. Wright; treasurer, George H. Ulmer; superintendent of primary department, S. P. McDivitt.

The church officers are as follows: Members of the session, James A. Linen, Charles H. Welles, F. L. Hitchcock, C. W. Kirkpatrick and Frederick Fuller; members of the board of trustees, Col. H. M. Boies, president; William H. Fuller, vice-president; S. P. McDivitt, secretary and treasurer; George Fisher, J. A. Price and Thomas Dickson.

The Green Ridge Avenue Church (Scranton) was organized by the Presbytery of Lackawanna June 24th, 1875, with 39 members, 28 of whom came from the Providence Presbyterian church and 6 from the First Presbyterian Church of Scranton. Roswell E. Marvin, Joseph Crane and George E. Stone were chosen elders. The building committee (the original trustees) were F. S. Pauli, S. P. Hull, J. L. Fordham, H. F. Atherton, E. S. Jackson and Israel Crane. The church edifice was completed before the organization of the church and was first occupied on that occasion. It is a stone structure, octagonal in form, and will seat 250 persons. It stands on the rear of the lot, at the corner of Green Ridge avenue and Eighth street, and is intended to be the chapel of a larger building when the increase of the membership of the church will warrant its erection. The architect was J. C. Cady, of New York. The cost of the building, with the land on which it stands, was about $10,000. The church was never a mission and has been from the first self-sustaining. It has steadily grown from the date of its organization. The membership is now (1880) about 100.

October 19th, 1875, Rev. W. B. Waller, then assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Norristown, Pa., was called to the pastorate, and entered upon his duties January 1st, 1876, his installation taking place the second of the following May. The Sunday-school was organized June 27th, 1875, and Dr. J. L. Ford was chosen superintendent. The school then numbered less than 100. The membership is now 150.

METHODIST.

First Methodist Episcopal (Providence).—This society was organized in 1829 with nine members, as follows: William Silkman and wife, Artemas Miller and wife, Daniel Bowman, wife and daughter, Dency A. Corson and Hannah M. Von Storch. It was part of the extensive Pittston circuit. Its place of meeting was a school-house, since converted into a dwelling and for some time past owned and occupied by Ziba Knapp, Esq. Prominent among the preachers during the connection with Pittston circuit, and prior to the erection of its first church edifice, were Dr. George Peck, H. Agard, Samuel Griffin, M. Pearce, Benjamin Ellis, Charles Giddings, Abel Barker, William Reddy, A. Bronson and others. The first church building was erected on the site of the present one in 1852. It was built of brick, at a cost of $4,000, and dedicated in 1853, Henry Brownscombe being pastor both years. Succeeding clergymen have served the church as follows: Charles Perkins, 1854; J. F. Wilbur, 1855, 1856; George M. Peck, 1857, 1858, 1865, 1866; J. F. Munger, 1859; A. Schoonmaker, 1860, 1861; Henry Brownscombe, 1862, 1863; George H. Blakeslee, 1864; Dr. George Peck, 1867, 1868; S. W. Weiss, 1869, 1870; W. J. Judd, 1871-73; William Bixby, 1874, 1875; Leonard Cole, 1876, 1877; Robert W. Van Schoick, 1878-80. In 1867 the church edifice was enlarged by the addition of two class-rooms at a cost of about $1,000. In 1873 it was rededicated, by Bishop Ames, having been remodeled and enlarged to its present capacity at an expense of $8,000. The valuation of the church property, which includes a furnished parsonage, is $15,000. The church numbers 400 members, divided into four classes.

The Sunday-school was organized in the spring of 1854, with a membership of 64 scholars and 11 officers and teachers. Ebenezer Leach, Esq., was the first superintendent, serving two years. S. W. Wyckoff succeeded him one year. Since 1856 George W. Miller has been superintendent. The school now numbers 400 members, with 34 officers and teachers. A valuable library, handsomely incased, numbering 406 volumes, was presented to the school in 1878 by Ambrose Mulley. There is also a reserve supply of 200 volumes. The Sunday-school has separate rooms for the Bible classes and the primary department.

First Methodist Episcopal (Scranton).—This church is the outgrowth of a society organized in the vicinity of Scranton about 1840. Some of the constituent members were William Silkman, Barton Mott, Nancy Mott, Nicholas Washburn, N. W. Tripp, J. A. Atherton, Mary A. Slocum, Fanny Tripp, Marilla Fellows, Sarah Hitchcock and Ruth A. Hitchcock. This society was the result of much preaching before that date, and had been preceded by classes of Methodists at Slocum Hollow and elsewhere in the vicinity. "In 1793," wrote Rev. George Peck, "William Colbert, a pioneer preacher, visited Capoose, and preached to a few people at Brother Howe's and lodged at Joseph Waller's. Howe lived in Slocum Hollow, and Waller on the main road in or near what is now Hyde Park. In 1798 Daniel Taylor's, below Hyde Park, was a preaching place. For years subsequently the preaching was at Preserved Taylor's, who lived on the hillside in Hyde Park, near the old Tripp place. When Mr. Taylor moved the preaching was taken to Razorville, now Providence, and the preachers were entertained by Elisha Potter, Esq., whose wife was a very exemplary member of the church. Up to this period preaching was held in private houses." Meetings were held in school-houses at a later date. In June, 1841, a proposition was entertained by the quarterly conference of the circuit to raise subscriptions for the purpose of erecting a "meeting house" somewhere in the Lackawanna valley. Barton Mott, Erastus Smith and William Silkman were appointed a committee to receive subscriptions and to proceed to the accomplishment of the work. William Henry was associated with them, and the four resolved themselves into a building committee, appointing Erastus Smith president, William Silkman secretary, and Barton Mott treasurer. The liberal contributions of the people about the iron works secured the location at Harrison. A lot was provided at the corner of Lackawanna and Adams avenues by Scrantons, Grant & Co. The conditions of the subscription provided that when the house was not occupied by the Methodists other evangelical denominations should have the privilege of occupying it, a provision of which the Presbyterians availed themselves for years. The two denominations held a union Sunday-school in the "village chapel," as the little church was known, with the utmost harmony, until the Presbyterians secured better accommodations.

The early class leaders were, in the order named, Martin Washburn, Barton Mott, Adam L. Horn and Samuel Culver. Barton Mott, Matthias Henderson, Noah Davis and Adam L. Horn were early Sunday-school superintendents. The two last mentioned were also local ministers. The "village chapel" was occupied by the Methodists until the present structure was erected. In 1856 it was purchased by the German Methodists and removed to the corner of Adams avenue and Vine street. The erection of the present church was begun in 1854, and in 1856 the basement was opened for public worship. In September, 1858, it was completed and dedicated. The audience room was first occupied on the evening of the 8th of that month with a reception complimentary to Nellie, daughter of the pastor, Rev. B. W. Gorham, then just married to Rev. W. L. Baldwin, a missionary who soon after sailed for India. The circuit which included the site of the present city was often changed in name and boundaries in the early days, being successively known as the Pittston circuit, the Providence circuit and the Lackawanna circuit. Among the early itinerant preachers on this circuit may be mentioned Revs. Benjamin Ellis, William Round, Ira Wilcox, J. Mulkey, A. Bronson, H. Brownscombe and S. S. Kennedy. As a separate charge the Scranton church has been served successively by the following named pastors during the terms designated: Revs. H. A. Schoonmaker, 1854, 1855; George Peck, D. D., 1856, 1857; B. W. Gorham, 1858, 1859; George C. Bancroft, 1860, 1861; J. V. Newall, 1862, 1863; J. A. Wood, 1864; N. W. Everett, 1865, 1866; Byron D. Sturdevant, 1867, 1868; J. C. Nobles, 1869; P. Krohn, 1870, 1871; George P. Porter, 1872; I. T. Walker, 1873, 1874; L. C. Floyd, 1875, 1876; J. G. Eckman, 1878, 1879.

In June, 1879, it was resolved by a vote of the members and congregation to enlarge and beautify the church. Hon. Lewis Pughe, William Connell and Charles Forrester, trustees, were appointed to make a contract and supervise the improvements. June 28th the contracts for the building and alterations were awarded. The building was extended 20 feet in length, and has a transept, one end of which is 20 by 20 feet, and will be used as an organ chamber. The other is an extension of 5 by 20 feet, admitting of a side entrance to the church. Seventeen stained glass windows enhance the beauty of the place. Three of these are memorial windows. One was put up in memory of Mary Ann Slocum, who left the church $800 when she died, in 1875. Another, presented by Horace Phelps, commemorates the name of his mother, Mrs. Hannah Phelps, who presented the church Bible. The third window is inscribed to Hattie B. Nivison. This was presented by Mrs. Nivison.

The Sunday-school room, on the ground floor of the building, was extended 10 feet, and the addition of 20 feet in the rear is neatly furnished for a separate social parlor and infant class room. The seating capacity of the church has been increased from 450 to 900.

The dedication took place Sunday, January 25th, 1880. The services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Olin, D. D., presiding elder of Wyoming district; Rev. C. H. Fowler, D. D., of New York, and Rev. Phillip Krohn, D. D., of West Troy, N. Y. The cost of the improvements and furnishing was $10,000, the whole of which was pledged on the day of dedication. The Wyoming annual conference held its session in Scranton in 1860 and 1880.

The first Sunday-school was opened in 1858, with 25 members. The present membership is 380. That of the church is 375. Hon. Lewis Pughe was superintendent of the school from 1871 to 1880. He was succeeded by G. F. Reynolds.

Dunmore Methodist Episcopal.—Among the residents of Dunmore in 1851 were Mrs. Sabra Jackson, Chauncey Derby and wife, Joseph Savage and wife, Mrs. Dupuy and a few other earnest Methodists. They met for worship in the school-house on Blakely street, were connected with the Providence district of the Wyoming conference and were supplied with a preacher for one service every Sabbath. After two years they held services about a year in Coolbaugh's Hall, on Drinker street, their numbers gradually increasing until it was felt that a church edifice was demanded. One was soon erected on a plot of ground on Chestnut street which was donated for that purpose by Mr. Edward Spencer. It was used by all evangelical denominations about five years, when the Methodists finally decided to build a church for their own use. Mr. Spencer presented another lot on Chestnut street, upon condition that the seats in the church should always be free, and should the society at any time decide to rent the seats, the ground should be purchased. The offer was accepted, and the society bought an adjoining lot from Mrs. Sarah Potter, and a committee on building was appointed consisting of John Butler, Stewart Dilley and George W. Simpson. The edifice is of brick, 35 by 52 feet. The property is valued at $3,000. As soon as the building was ready for occupancy the congregation removed thereto, and April 11th, 1861, Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., of Wyoming Seminary, dedicated it; and the First Dunmore Methodist Episcopal Church was organized with the following named members, with others: William Jackson and wife, Stewart Dilley and wife, John Butler and wife, Joseph Savage and wife, Artemas Miller and wife, John Rice and wife, James Haskins and wife, Mrs. G. W. Simpson, J. W. Silsbee and Thomas Dorsheimer.

Rev. Luther Peck was pastor three years. The following named preachers have been his successors, serving from one to three years each: Revs. C. L. Rice, J. A. Lippincott, W. H. Gavitt, J. T. Crowell, T. B. Jayne, C. A. Ward, J. F. Williams, G. A. Severson, J. La Bar and Joseph Madison.

A few years after the organization of the church it was decided to rent the seats in order to raise the preacher's salary, the free seat system having proved a failure, and the society bought the lot as agreed. In 1871 Mr. Spencer again generously presented the church a plot of ground, on Apple street, on which a parsonage was built. It is a wooden building, valued at $2,000. October 3d, 1878, the roof of the church was blown off. It was immediately repaired. The membership of the church was about 125 in January, 1880; it is in a flourishing condition spiritually and financially. The official members were as follows: Trustees—Allen Secor, Thomas Dorsheimer, Dan Powell, John Harper, John Butler and Thomas Sly; stewards—Dan Powell, John Rice, Elijah Shaffer, Reuben Mowry, Albert Wagner, Hall Thornton and Henry Thorn. The Sunday-school was organized May 12th, 1861, with John Butler as superintendent. The number of scholars was 76; volumes in library, 142. In 1880 it was in excellent condition under the management of Thomas Sly, superintendent. The number of scholars was 175; volumes in library, 200.

First Methodist Episcopal (Hyde Park).—This society was chartered November 23d, 1859, on petition of William H. Omro, William Munson, jr., Issacher Pauling and John M. Acker. But as early as 1851 there was a class in Hyde Park connected with the Scranton church, the pastor preaching each alternate Sunday afternoon wherever he could, the Baptist church being used generally. Of the members of that early class only William Munson and Mrs. M. A. Varnes are residents of Hyde Park. At a conference held in Binghamton, N. Y., July 6th, 1856, the Taylorville class (located at the place now known as Brick Church, near Pittston) and Hyde Park were organized into a circuit under the name of Lackawanna mission. The entire membership was only 70. The pastor was Rev. F. Illman. Meetings were held in the old school-house in Hyde Park, which soon after was purchased, with the lot on which it stood, and repaired and converted into a church, which in 1860 was replaced by a fine brick structure with a parsonage close by. This society was then in a thriving condition.

In 1862 Hyde Park became a separate charge, with a membership of 55. Rev. W. J. Judd was pastor. February 14th, 1869, the church and the parsonage were burned down. The society had just succeeded in liquidating all its obligations. The estimated value of the church was $6,000; of the parsonage, $2,500. The insurance amounted to only $1,100. On the evening of the 16th, at a public meeting, preliminary steps were taken toward rebuilding the house of worship. Rev. F. L. Hiller was appointed pastor. The present commodious and substantial brick edifice was dedicated February 22nd, 1872, Rev. William P. Abbott, D. D., preaching in the morning and Rev. B. I. Ives, D. D., in the evening. It is valued at $2,500, and will seat 700. A parsonage valued at $4,500 was subsequently erected at the rear of the church, fronting on Hyde Park avenue. The present membership of the church is nearly 600.

The successive pastors of the church in the order of their appointment, with the term of service of each, have been: Revs. F. Illman, 1856; Joshua S. Lewis, 1857, 1858; S. S. Barter, 1859, 1860; N. W. Everett, 1861; W. J. Judd, 1862, 1863; R. Van Valkenburg, 1864 (five months); F. S. Hiller, 1864, 1865; L. W. Peck, 1866, 1867; D. A. Shepherd, 1868; F. S. Hiller, 1869-74 (Mr. Hiller was financial agent of the church and Rev. Samuel J. Austin pulpit supply in 1872); I. B. Hyde, 1873; R. W. Van Schoick, 1874-76; Willis L. Thorpe, now (1879) closing the third year of his pastorate. The organization of the Sunday-school dates with the early history of the church, and its progress has been gratifying. The average attendance has been about 500 for quite a length of time. For a number of years Thomas H. Dale has been superintendent.

German Methodist Episcopal (Scranton).—At the session of the Wyoming M. E. Conference in 1854 a resolution was passed to petition the board of missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church for a German missionary at Scranton. Rev. F. W. Flocken was sent to minister to the 2,000 Germans then in and around Scranton; arriving in July, 1855, and preaching his first sermon in the village chapel. The church was organized October 30th, 1855, with fifteen members. Of these the following are still in active membership: Michael Lutz, his son John Lutz, Jacob Walter and John Schlaeger. Mr. Flocken bought the "chapel" or old Methodist church for $100, and had it removed to the present location, in the rear of the new church, where it is used for school purposes.

The following were the succeeding pastors and their time of service: Revs. John G. Lutz, two years; Jacob Weeks, who built the present parsonage, to which additions were made by subsequent pastors, two; Leonhaad Meyer, two; Louis Wallon, two; Paul Guattlaender, who secured the present church lot, 90 by 150 feet, at a cost of $1,650, three; Jacob Kolb, two; William Kurth, three—under his administration the present beautiful gothic church at the corner of Adams avenue and Vine street was built, 42 by 75 feet with a steeple 120 feet high, costing $16,000 and dedicated in 1872 by Rev. Dr. Jesse T. Peck; Rev. G. H. Mayer, three; his labors were crowned with a revival by which more than eighty were converted. Rev. F. W. Dinger, the present pastor, came in 1877. He has succeeded in paying the regularly accruing interest, meeting current expenses and reducing the debt of $9,000 to $7,300.

The Sunday-school was established by Rev. F. W. Flocken, without books or other aids, July 8th, 1855. In the following October there were 37 male and 8 female scholars. The following were the succeeding superintendents: Frederick Bonn, John Schlaeger, Frederick Mueller, Stanislaus Haag, William G. Schulz, William Busche, John W. Schulz, Jacob Hetzel, John Lutz. A mission Sunday-school was opened in 1875 in Petersburg, and the schools numbered about 200 scholars, with 12 officers and 50 teachers, and a library of 300 volumes, in 1879.

Ebenezer Calvinistic Methodist Welsh Church (Hyde Park).—This society was organized in 1863, as a branch from another society of the same denomination which existed in Bellevue. The Bellevue society at that time had a membership of about 80, residing at Hyde Park and Bellevue. Some of them determined to organize a branch society in Hyde Park and build a church there. A building committee was appointed consisting of Walter Phillips, Llewelyn Jenkins, John Davis, Richard Jones and Daniel Moses. Having purchased the site where the church now stands, they awarded the contract for its building to Thomas Hammond. Work began in September, 1863; it was under roof in December. The lecture room was finished May 1st, 1864, and the auditorium (65 by 45 feet) was completed July 1st following. The cost was about $10,250, which sum was raised in about a year and a half after the completion of the building. The value of the church property is estimated at $15,000.

The formal organization of the Ebenezer society was effected June 1st, 1864, in the lecture room of the new church, by Rev. J. E. Davies, D. D., and wife, Joshua Williams and wife, John E. Davies and wife, Daniel Hughes and wife, Richard Jones and wife, and Mrs. Robert Williams, all of Hyde Park. The first service was held in the new church May 15th, 1864, and services were continued weekly until July 17th, 1864, when the church was dedicated, the services continuing two days. Rev. J. E. Davies, D. D., was the first pastor, officiating in the services alternately with the Ebenezer and Bellevue churches, and served (dating from December 27th, 1863) three successive years. Rev. M. A. Ellis, M. A., was pastor (the third) from January 1st, 1869, six years; Rev. R. H. Evans, three years from April 1st, 1875. At present (January 1st, 1880) there is no pastor. The number of church members is about 150. The first Sabbath-school superintendent was Richard Jones. The average attendance of pupils is 125.

First Methodist Protestant (Hyde Park).—This church was organized by Rev. F. B. Fletcher, at the house of Mrs. Julia Felts, December 19th, 1868, with the following named members: John Fern and wife, David Myers and wife, Valentine Erbach and wife, Jacob Hall, Richard Maxie and wife, David Nimon and wife, Augustus Brinton, William Newton, John Shoeman, John and Julia Felts, Mrs. Benedict Eggert, Asa R. Cramer and wife and Mrs. Margaret Armitage. A thorough organization was effected by the election of the following officers: David Myers, secretary; Valentine Erbach, treasurer; John Fern and Asa R. Cramer, class leaders; William Newton, Richard Brinton, Richard Maxie, David Nimon and John Shoeman, stewards. The new organization held regular Sunday afternoon services in the Baptist church, until the completion of a small two-story building, the lower floor of which was arranged for the purposes of worship, and the upper part fitted up for use as a parsonage, about six weeks later. Here services were conducted regularly for about two years, when a neat and commodious edifice was built on a portion of the same lot (the first building still doing service as a parsonage) and dedicated early in January, 1873.

The progress of the church has been steady and rapid, the membership in 1880 numbering about 150. Its property is beautifully located on Park Hill, and is valued at

Mrs M. C. Nivison M.D.

MRS. M. C. NIVISON, M. D.

Mrs. M. C. Nivison, M. D., daughter of Hiram and Harriet (Brewster) Owen, of Enfield, Tompkins county, N. Y., and wife of Oziel Nivison, M. D., of Dryden Springs, N. Y., was born June 3d, 1834. She received her preliminary education in the district and select schools of Mecklenburg, N. Y. In 1867 she commenced the study of medicine with her sister-in-law, Miss Anna T. Nivison, M. D., of Newark, N. J., with whom she studied for three years, during which time she attended two courses of lectures at the Eclectic Medical College of New York city, and was graduated therefrom in March, 1871. In the following May she commenced the practice of her profession in Scranton, where she has since been continuously engaged, and is now (August, 1880) enjoying an extensive and successful practice. Both her mother and daughter Hattie came to Scranton with her, the former of whom died here September 21st, 1872, and the latter January 25th, 1878, aged nineteen. Mrs. Nivison lost her only son in New York State in 1857. Her husband, Dr. Nivison, is in practice in the sanitarium at Dryden, Tompkins county, N. Y. Mrs. Nivison is the pioneer female doctor in the Lackawanna valley, and was obliged to contend with many difficulties on account of the prejudice against women in the practice of the medical profession; but she overcame them all and has the confidence and patronage of a very large circle of friends, and has opened the way for many others who have followed her in the profession in the valley. She was elected vice-president of the State Eclectic Medical Association which met at Altoona in 1879. She has been for many years a consistent member of the M. E. Church.

Reese T. Evans

REESE T. EVANS.

Reese T. Evans was born in Caermarthenshire, South Wales, in May, 1825, the fifth child of Theophilus and Mary Evans. There were six children in his father's family:—Ann, Stephen, Catharine, Martha, Reese T. and Mary. Ann, Stephen and Mary are deceased. Catharine, widow of John Griffiths, and Martha, wife of John O. Jones, are both residents of Hyde Park, and each has four children living. Mrs. Jones was the first of the family who came to America, coming in 1851.

After receiving an education limited to the common school of his native place, at the age of thirteen Reese T. Evans entered upon the life of a miner, and followed it all the time he was in the old country. December 22nd, 1845, he married Mary, daughter of Enoch and Sarah Evans, of Monmouthshire, South Wales. He emigrated with his family to America in 1852, and first settled in Pittston, Luzerne county, where he was employed for four years as a miner. In the fall of 1857 he moved to Hyde Park, where he has since resided. During eight years he was employed as a miner in the Diamond mines. In 1865 he was appointed foreman of these mines, and he has ever since held that position. Mr. Evans is a Republican in politics and has always taken an active part in the conduct of political matters in his locality. He was a member of the city council of Scranton for the years 1854-56, and was elected to the office of city treasurer for 1867 and 1868. The fidelity and thoroughness with which the responsible duties of this office were discharged by him are indicated by the following notices published at the time. The city controller, Charles Du Pont Breck, in his report says: "This department [the treasurer's] of our government has been conducted in a manner reflecting the highest credit on the treasurer and the officials in charge, and our citizens are to be congratulated on the fact that the public finances have been cared for with a degree of integrity worthy of emulation." The Scranton Republican upon the completion of his term of office published the following tribute of praise: "The outgoing treasurer is absolutely the first in the history of Scranton that leaves the office with a clean and honorable record. Mr. Evans's incumbency is characterized by an honest and careful management of our city finances which reflects honor upon the city and credit upon the voters who elected him." Though strongly urged to accept a nomination to the office he declined.

Mr. Evans has been a member of the church since eleven years of age, at Hyde Park of the Welsh Congregational. His wife is a member of the same church.

There have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Evans twelve children, four of whom were born in Wales, two in Pittston and six in Hyde Park. Two of the four born in Wales died there. Mary, wife of Elizur Evans, born May 16th, 1846, and Sarah, wife of David R. Richards, born January 22nd, 1848, were born in Wales and are now residents of Hyde Park. The former has two children, the latter eight. Stephen and David were born in Pittston; the former January 23d, 1854, the latter December 19th, 1855. Stephen married Martha Phillips; they have three children. Thomas, born March 8th, 1858, married Nellie Moses, by whom he has one child. Elizabeth, born December 8th, 1859; George W., born November 15th, 1861; Cassie, born January 25th, 1863; Reese (deceased), born February 26th, 1865; and Miriam, born December 21st, 1866, were born in Hyde Park. Five of the children are living at home in Hyde Park.

In these days, when one child in the family is often considered one too many, and it would seem the purpose, especially of native Americans, to banish from earth the very name of brother and sister, it is refreshing to come upon one of the old-time families, like that of Mr. Evans, who may well rejoice not only in the character but also in the number of his children and grandchildren.

about $5,000. Its Sunday school, of which John Vern was the first superintendent, has always been under the management of an efficient corps of officers. The scholars number about 100; the volumes in the library, 575. The names of the pastors, with their terms of service (beginning August 1st), are as follows: Revs. F. B. Fletcher, 1868-70; Joseph Watrous, 1870, 1871; H. G. Russell, 1871-73; John Jones, 1873, 1874; O. C. Payne, M. D., 1874-76; George Shaver, 1876-78; Thomas B. Dodd, 1878, 1879; Alexander Patton, 1879 (present incumbent).

Primitive Methodist Mission (Hyde Park).—This society was originally organized under the name of the "Methodist Protestants" in 1876. The members were John G. Nicholson, William A. Jones, Richard Riddle, William Richardson, Elizabeth Williams, Elizabeth Eddy, Delia Davies and Margaret Fox. The place of meeting, then and since, was Briggs shaft school-house. The first minister was Rev. O. C. Payne, who was succeeded by Rev. George Shafer. The following named members of the society seceded from the Methodist Protestant church in September, 1878, at the close of Rev. George Shafer's ministry, and united with the Primitive Methodist denomination: J. G. Nicholson, E. E. Williams, James Evans, Richard Riddle, William Richardson, Elizabeth Williams, Delia Davies, Mary Grassey, Jane Davies, John Campbell, Sarah Morgan, Margaret Evans, Walter Price and wife, James Price and Charles Riddle.

The pulpit was supplied by preachers of other Primitive Methodist churches, and the church was under the superintendence of Rev. H. G. Russell, pastor of the Plains circuit, from September, 1878, till the beginning of June, 1879, when Rev. J. T. Matthews became its first regular pastor.

BAPTIST.

First (Hyde Park).—In 1833 Rev. William K. Mott, then pastor at Pittston, commenced preaching occasionally in the Lackawanna valley. He baptized several converts, who were received into the church at Pittston. It was not until 1849 that the church at Hyde Park was organized. It was publicly recognized September 12th of the same year, with Mr. Mott as pastor, who remained until January 1st, 1871. It was through his efforts that the church edifice was erected and paid for. It is a brick building and cost $2,500. It was dedicated January 4th, 1852, and was at that time a very comfortable and substantial building. There was at one time a branch of the church at Minooka. The members at that place were organized into a separate church in 1871, but did not long succeed in maintaining their existence as such. During that year the church was for several months supplied by Rev. W. B. Grow and Rev. J. H. Asternull became pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. H. J. Millard and he by Rev. Alfred Cauldwell. The present pastor, Rev. Isaac Bevan, became such April 1st, 1876. The church has never been large, and yet has received during its history a considerable number of members. It has been the mother of two very efficient and successful offshoots, the Penn avenue church, Scranton, and the Jackson street church, Hyde Park. At present it numbers about 70 members.

Welsh (Hyde Park).—This church and the Sunday-school connected with it were organized in 1850, in the school-house near the old iron rolling-mill in Scranton. Previous to this, Rev. William Richmond, of Carbondale, had held service in the same place. The first settled pastor was Rev. John W. James, who resigned in 1859. Then Rev. Theophilus Jones was pastor two and a half years. He was succeeded by Rev. Isaiah Davis. It was during his ministry that the brick church edifice on Mifflin avenue, Scranton, was erected. It was afterwards sold to the German Lutheran church. From 1862 the church held services in Fellows Hall, Hyde Park, the majority of the Welsh people of Scranton living on that side of the river, until the present commodious house of worship was erected. The foundation of this building was laid in 1864. It was not finished until 1868. Rev. J. P. Harris was pastor for two years and a half from 1863; then Rev. Fred. Evans three years; Rev. D. W. Morris, from November, 1870, until 1876; Rev. M. Wright from January, 1877, to December 24th, 1878, when he died. Since that the church has had no settled pastor, but has depended on supplies. The congregation has been large. The present church edifice cost $14,450. The present number of members is 350; number in Sunday-school 500.

Penn Avenue Church (Scranton).—This church was organized August 18th, 1859, at the house of Nathaniel Halstead, with 25 members, most of whom had been dismissed from the First Baptist Church of Hyde Park, of which Rev. W. K. Mott was pastor. By request, Rev. Isaac Bevan was present and aided in the organization. August 24th he preached at the public recognition of the church. Soon after he received a call to become the pastor, and began his labors early in the following November. The church then numbered 23, two members having taken letters of dismission and left the place.

For more than a year the church worshiped in the old Odd Fellows' Hall. From the completion of Washington Hall the church used that until it entered the lecture room of its new edifice on Penn avenue. In about two years the main audience room was finished and dedicated. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. T. D. Anderson, of New York city. Elisha A. Coray, of New York, started the subscription with $2,000 and at the dedication added $500, and E. E. Hendricks, of Carbondale, gave $300. There were others who gave with equal liberality according to their means. The pastor collected in all about $12,000. The lots as originally bounded on Penn avenue were secured from the Iron and Coal Company for $3,600, they donating to the church $1,000. The church purchased a narrow strip on the rear of the lots which had come into the hands of Hon. John Handley, for $2,500.

Mr. Bevan was pastor to the last of November, 1869, when the church numbered a little over 200. Its Sabbath-school was large and flourishing, and had had as its superintendents J. F. Friant, R. A. Henry and the pastor. Their successors have been Thomas Moore, Rev. W. P. Hellings and L. Amerman. After Mr. Bevan, Rev. W. P. Hellings, from Germantown, was pastor over seven years, and was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. A. M. Hopper, D. D., from Bridgeport, Conn. The membership of the church is about 300; that of the Sunday-school about 400; the number of volumes in the library is 590.

Welsh (Providence).—This church was organized early in 1864, with 28 constituent members. The services were held in Panooka Hall, by Theophilus Jones, B. E. Bowen, P. L. Davis and others. The founders of the church were Richard Harris and wife, William Williams, B. Hughes and wife, Thomas Morris and wife, John P. Lewis and wife, Thomas Powell, William Roberts, William W. Reese and wife, Thomas D. Davies and others. Richard Harris and John P. Lewis were appointed deacons. Meetings were held in the "Notch" school-house as early as 1863. There the Sunday-school was organized, with B. Hughes as its first superintendent. Rev. J. P. Harris, then pastor of the Hyde Park church, administered the ordinances; several converts were baptized by him.

Lots for erecting a house of worship were secured in 1865, on Market street, and the present house was built in 1866 and dedicated late that year. The estimated value of the church property is $4,000. A rectory was added in 1878, valued at about $300. Rev. John Evans, then just arrived from Wales, became the first pastor in April, 1868, and was succeeded by Rev. H. C. Parry, also then just from Wales, who was installed the first Sunday in August, 1870, and remained nearly two years. From September, 1874, Rev. Llewelyn Rees was pastor one year. The present incumbent, Rev. J. P. Harris, began his labors in December, 1877. At the close of 1879 the membership of the church was 150, and the average attendance at the Sunday-school 130.

Jackson Street Church (Hyde Park).—This church was organized June 22nd, 1871, with nine members, and recognized September 13th, 1871, by a council of delegates from various churches. For more than two years the Sunday services were held in Clark's Hall, on Main street. From November 1st, 1873, Fellows Hall, on the opposite side of the street, was used till the opening of the meeting house on Jackson street, west of Main street, June 21st and 22nd, 1877. The house is a one-story wooden structure, plain but tasteful and commodious, with a seating capacity of 450 to 500, and with the lot cost $5,510.

The first and present pastor, Rev. B. W. Thomas, assumed charge January 1st, 1872, and was installed in Clark's Hall, Sunday, January 28th, 1872. The present membership of the church is 200. The congregation is large. The church has always conducted a prosperous Sunday-school. The first superintendent was B. G. Beddoe. For six or seven years a mission school, under charge of Mr. Howell, was conducted near the Continental mines.

First German (Scranton).—This church is on Pittston avenue. Upon the request of some members of the Penn Avenue Baptist church, that church resolved to establish a mission among the Germans of Scranton and vicinity; and October 1st, 1871, with the aid of the Baptist Home Mission, engaged Rev. Adolph Ginius, from Erie, Pa., as a missionary. The church was organized September 4th, 1874, with the following constituent members:

Charles and Miner Kiesel, Albert and Ferdinand and Henrietta Flesch, sen. and jr., Auguste, Elizabeth, Jacob, Peter, Christopher and Adam Rech, sen. and jr., Mary Bonn, Henry and Auguste Baumann, Fidel Wandler, Frederick and Bertha Roder, Caroline Petri, Frederick, Conrad and Caroline Kieferle, Christian and Ernestine Blum, Margaretha Klein, Caroline, John, Mary, Ernestine and John Kohler, jr., Elizabeth Berthold, Frederick and Anna Urnveider, John and Charlotte Dietz, Richard and Rosa Berger, Frederick and Augustine Shumann, Frederick and Carl Blum, Mary Biefeberg, Wilhelm Butler, Christoph Enderlein, Wilhelm Mueller, Frederick Maier, Louise Jacke, Henriette, Lidia and Martha Ginius, Henry Klein, John and Barbara Mohr, Bertha Schmidt, Richard and Oscar Stranch, John and Magdalena Bircher, and Andreas Neiger.

The first pastor was Rev. Adolph Ginius. He served from October 1st, 1871, until April 1st, 1877, when he was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Henry Griep. The church is a one-story frame building, formerly belonging to the Welsh Calvinistic M. E. church and located on River street, and was removed from there to its present place. The first superintendent of the Sunday-school was Frederick Shuman. The church has a mission school in Taylorville, under the management of Conrad Kieferle. The number of scholars in both schools is 130; teachers, 20; volumes in library, 250.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Roman Catholic Interest in Scranton and Dunmore.—Previous to 1846 the Catholics of Scranton and vicinity, few in number, of scanty means, and scattered here and there, did not enjoy religious attendance and spiritual instruction. In that year, however, Rev. P. Pendergast, at that time stationed at Carbondale, was the first Catholic clergyman to minister to their spiritual wants. As the luxury of a church was not yet afforded them, he was obliged to celebrate mass and hold meetings from time to time in a small apartment of a private dwelling on Division street. In 1848 was begun the erection of a small frame building, 35 by 25 feet, on a large plot of ground donated by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company for church and cemetery purposes, which was soon completed and ready for occupancy. About this time Rev. John Loughran became the first resident priest of Scranton, remaining till July, 1852, when he was succeeded by Rev. James Cullen. The little church on Division street soon became inadequate, and the pastor secured ground on Franklin avenue, where he immediately commenced the erection of a substantial frame edifice 96 by 45 feet. On Sunday, November 13th, 1853, the new building, though not yet quite finished, was blessed with appropriate ceremonies and opened to the use of the congregation. In April, 1854, Rev. Father Cullen was removed, and Rev. Moses Whitty, who had been stationed at Honesdale in charge of the missions in Wayne county, assumed the pastorate. Before the end of the year he completed the unfinished structure. This, too, soon proved inadequate. In 1856

a frame church 75 by 45 feet was built at Dunmore, and the people of that locality ceased to attend service at Scranton.

Notwithstanding the relief afforded by this measure, the congregation at Scranton still felt the want of room, and in 1858 a frame church 70 by 30 feet was constructed in that portion of Providence known as Bloom's Patch, now the second ward of Scranton. The congregation then consisted of about 250 members, and services were attended regularly from Scranton. In the latter part of 1871 Providence became a separate parish, and Rev. Moses Whitty was assigned to the new charge, and labored so successfully for the erection of a building adequate to the wants of the congregation, now unable to gain access to the old church, that the year 1873 witnessed the ceremony of laying the corner stone of St. Mary's Church, which was completed, and on the 11th of October of the same year dedicated. The old church in Bloom's Patch was at once abandoned as a place of worship and devoted exclusively to school and society purposes. The congregation now numbers about 1,900 members. The Sunday-school is composed of not less than 450 children.

But to return to the church at Scranton proper. The population was increasing rapidly and the membership steadily augmenting, and soon the inconvenience of an over-crowded church was once more experienced. To remedy this deficiency the Rev. Father Whitty commenced, in the summer of 1865, the building of the Church of St. Vincent de Paul, at the corner of Wyoming avenue and Linden street. On its completion the old church on Franklin avenue was moved to Hyde Park, where it still serves.

The corner stone of the present cathedral was laid July 2nd, 1865, by Rt. Rev. James F. Wood, then bishop, now archbishop, of Philadelphia. The work was rapidly pushed forward, and soon Scranton could boast of one of the largest and handsomest churches in the State. It is built in the Grecian style of architecture, from designs furnished by Joel Amsden, and is 158 by 68 feet inside. Its seating capacity is 2,300. It is lighted by nine large windows on each side, besides thirty-two smaller ones in the upper portion of the building, all of stained glass. It was opened and dedicated March 10th, 1867. Its cost is estimated at $70,000. The tower, which is not completed, will be 170 feet in height. This, with other improvements now in contemplation, will cause an additional expense of about $20,000. September 12th, 1868, occurred the installation of the Rt. Rev. William O'Hara, formerly of St. Patrick's church, Philadelphia, as first bishop of Scranton. Rev. Father Whitty, however, remained pastor of the church until he assumed charge of the mission at Providence. On his removal, in the fall of 1871, the bishop appointed Rev. Richard Henessy rector of the church at Scranton. Rev. Mr. Henessy was succeeded by Rev. N. J. McManus, and he by Rev. John W. Dunn. In August, 1878, the trust was confided to the Rev. R. A. McAndrew, the present occupant of the position. Since the arrival of the bishop various improvements have been made in the church property in and around Scranton. Among others worthy of note are the large addition attached to the rear of the church and used as a sacristy and chapel, the present convent known as St. Cecelia's Academy, and the orphan asylum at Hyde Park, capable of sheltering 40 or 50 children.

The different clergymen who have been stationed in Scranton since the foundation of the first Catholic church, besides Rev. Moses Whitty, now vicar general of the diocese, and the several rectors mentioned above, have been Revs. John Loughran, James Cullen, F. P. Mulgrew, Thomas Joseph Lydon, E. W. Fitzmaurice, P. McSwiggan, Hugo P. Fitzsimmons, Thomas Toner, T. Hannigan, John Cox, P. McEnroe, S. Mattingly. Since the arrival of Bishop O'Hara the following clergymen have been assistants at the cathedral, for longer or shorter periods: Revs. Gerald McMurray, M. J. O'Brien, M. F. Crane, F. McAtee, P. Shields, P. Hurst, P. McManus, P. O'Rourke, John Lally, James B. Whelan, Charles F. Kelley, T. Donahoe, P. T. Roche, James Cumisky, F. P. McNably, E. S. Phillips, E. J. Melly, Thomas F. Coffey, James Heally. The last three, with Rev. Father McAndrew, the rector, are still retained in Scranton. The societies attached to the church, under the charge of the Rev. E. J. Melly, are in a flourishing condition. The Sunday-school, which at present numbers at least 1,200 children, is under the direction of the Rev. Thomas F. Coffey, and is rapidly increasing.

The church in Hyde Park is under the pastoral charge of Rev. Patrick J. Roche. A large, costly and elegant house of worship has replaced the first church in Dunmore. The congregation and Sunday-school are large and in a flourishing condition. The pastor is Rev. P. McMurray.

St. Mary's German Catholic (Scranton).—This German Catholic congregation, consisting of about 25 families, was at first visited monthly by Rev. Casper Muller, of Honesdale, from January to September, 1854. From January, 1855, until June, 1856, Rev. Laurentine Schneider, of Honesdale, attended the congregation. From July, 1856, to October, 1858, Rev. Severin Somner, of Honesdale, officiated at Scranton. In December, 1858, Rev. Peter C. Nagel, of St. Nicholas's church, Wilkes-Barre, visited the congregation every alternate Sunday. During this time the Irish Catholic congregation permitted the Germans to use their church. In 1865 Rev. P. C. Nagel built a brick church, 110 by 48 feet, on River street, which was dedicated Sunday, March 11th, 1866, by Bishop Wood, of Philadelphia. On the same day the present pastor, Rev. John Schelle, was installed as the first resident priest. He bought a lot on Hickory street and built a parsonage in 1872. He bought also two lots adjoining St. Mary's church, and erected thereon a parochial school-house in 1874. The congregation consists (1879) of 200 families, or about 1,500 souls. The schools are frequented by 225 children, taught by a male teacher and three Sisters of Christian Charity, who came from Westphalia, Prussia, in 1874. The leader and principal of the Sunday-school is the pastor.

EPISCOPAL.

St. Luke's (Scranton).—The first public service of this church in Scranton was held on the evening of August 5th, 1851, in the Methodist chapel, by Rev. John Long, for some time an itinerant missionary in the Lackawanna and Wyoming valleys. After service a meeting of persons attached to the church was held, and it was deemed expedient to organize a parish and elect a vestry. A parish was formed, with the above name, and Elisha Hitchcock and J. C. Burgess were chosen wardens and Charles Swift, Jacob Kerlin, Dr. B. H. Throop, L. N. Clark and E. S. M. Hill vestrymen. An application for incorporation was made in the following November. Services were held by Mr. Long from time to time in the Methodist chapel, in the Odd Fellows' Hall, in the third story of Hunt's building and over Chase's store until Easter, 1852, when he regularly assumed the charge of the parish as a missionary under the direction of the Society for the Advancement of Christianity in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. In 1853, through the efforts of Mr. Long and the gift of friends abroad, a frame church, costing $2,600, was erected on lots donated by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, ground having been broken for the work on Easter Monday, and the corner stone laid April 19th, by the rector, assisted by Revs. George D. Miles, of Wilkes-Barre, G. M. Skinner, of New Milford, and Edmund Mendenhall, of Salem. The first service was held and the Sunday school organized in the basement of the church on the last Sunday in July that year. The edifice was completed in October and consecrated November 13th by Bishop Alonzo Potter. During the following year a parsonage was erected at a cost of $1,200.

Mr. Long resigned the charge of the parish November 29th, 1858. From February 1st, 1859, Rev. W. C. Robinson was rector until December 1st, 1862. From January 25th, 1863, Rev. A. A. Marple was rector more than fourteen years. During his first year the parish was freed from debt, and through the ladies' sewing society began collecting money for a new church. Lots 180 by 160 were secured on Wyoming avenue and ground was broken for the new house of worship July 5th, 1866. October 9th, 1867, the corner stone of the present edifice, a gothic structure of Oxford dressed stone, was laid by Rev. Dr. William Bacon Stevens. The church was opened for worship July 2nd, 1871, Dr. Stevens officiating. This handsome edifice, which was designed by Mr. R. M. Upjohn, is not entirely completed, the tower never having been erected. October 1st, 1877, Rev. A. A. Marple resigned the charge of the parish. Rev. C. P. Chapin was rector from November, 1877, to April 15th, 1879. From the later date, services were kept up by Rev. P. B. Leighton and others. October 1st, Rev. J. P. B. Pendleton, late of Washington, D. C., assumed the rectorship. The Sunday-school numbers about 36 officers and teachers, and 250 children. A Ladies' Guild has been organized in the parish which is doing a good deal of active work.

The Church of the Good Shepherd (Green Ridge).—Rev. John Long held the first service of the Episcopal church in this parish, in his own house, July 12th, 1868. Other services were held in the depot of the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad, in one of their passenger coaches and in the carriage house of J. Gardner Sanderson, Esq. The Sunday-school was organized August 9th, 1868. The church was chartered February 23d, 1869; the charter was approved by the standing committee of the diocese November 3d, 1870, and at the diocesan convention of 1871 the church was admitted into union with the diocese. Early in 1869 efforts had been begun looking towards building a church. A lot on Eighth street was donated by George Sanderson, Esq., a considerable sum of money was raised, and August 26th, 1869, the corner stone of the present edifice was laid by Bishop Stevens, assisted by Revs. John I. Robertson, Leighton Coleman and John Long, rector and missionary. Sufficient funds having been secured, the work of building was pushed forward, and June 5th, 1870, the first service was held in the new church. The following are the names of those who applied for permission to organize a church in Green Ridge: George Sanderson, J. Gardner Sanderson, J. Atticus Robertson, Jason H. Wells, Matthew Harlon, E. L. Riggs, O. B. Salisbury. Attached to the charter are the following names as those who acted as the vestry of the parish till the next Easter: J. Gardner Sanderson, Matthew Harlon, Thomas Sly, Edward L. Riggs, Jason H. Wells, J. Atticus Robertson, William W. Winton.

The church has had five rectors: Revs. John Long, H. Hobart Millett, G. W. Southwell, S. C. Thompson and Joseph P. Cameron. There have been 161 baptisms, 80 confirmations, 11 marriages and 40 burials. The following items from the parochial report to the convention of 1879 will indicate its present strength: Families, 53; baptized persons, 145; church accommodations, 175; communicants, 69; Sunday-school teachers, 14; pupils, 120.

St. David's Church (Hyde Park).—This is a comparatively young parish, and has no church building as yet. In February, 1879, efforts were begun to secure a building fund. About one-third of the required amount is now secured.

For many years a few Episcopalians who resided at Hyde Park attended St. Luke's church at Scranton. In 1858 Rev. John Long began holding services in a building belonging to the First Baptist Church of Hyde Park. After a while the services were discontinued till 1870; then they were held occasionally by Revs. Marple, Long and Kennedy. Valuable lay work was done by Doctor Thomas McCune. In 1877 Rev. S. C. Thompson was appointed to this field in connection with Green Ridge. From 1870 to 1878 the services were held in the Welsh Calvinistic church and in various halls. They are now held in Odd Fellows' Hall. Rev. Joseph P. Cameron was called to the charge of the parish, in connection with that of the Good Shepherd, at Green Ridge, September 1st, 1878. A charter was obtained February 28th, 1879,

Andrew Nicol

ANDREW NICOL.

Andrew Nicol, son of John and Jannet (Gray) Nicol, was born at Dalryharran, parish of New Daily, Ayrshire, Scotland, August 20th, 1818. At the age of twelve years he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade with his father, who was for many years a carpenter to the Right Honorable Francis Kennedy, of Dalryharran. Having mastered his trade, in 1834 he went to Glasgow, and was there engaged as a journeyman joiner for two years, when he was employed for one year as pattern maker in Girdwood's foundry at the city of Glasgow, and one year by the Summerlee Iron Company, at Coat Bridge, in the same capacity. In 1839 he commenced to learn the machinist's trade at the Summerlee works, and after remaining four years he was appointed foreman machinist of the company. This position he filled six months, when the general manager, Mr. Neilson, gave him a situation with his civil and mining engineer corps, and he was soon engaged in surveying and mapping the mine work. In this capacity he was engaged for a year and a half; then was assistant superintendent of all their mines and machinery until 1847. On October 1st, 1847, Mr. Nicol was engaged by the Right Honorable Francis Kennedy to take charge of his mines and machinery, and he remained in this position until March, 1851. He with his wife and two children set sail from Glasgow April 6th, 1851, and arrived in New York May 18th. June 1st they arrived at Carbondale and Mr. Nicol engaged the same day with James Clarkson, superintendent of the coal department of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, to be his assistant, which position he filled until 1863. In 1863 he was appointed general superintendent of the mines of the company, in which position he continued until 1870. He received the only first-class certificate as inspector of mines of the eighteen candidates who were examined by the board appointed by the State of Pennsylvania, and received his commission for five years from Gov. Geary as inspector of coal mines, eastern district, being the first inspector of coal in the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania. He resigned his position with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and entered upon the duties of inspector July 20th, 1870. January 10th, 1871, he tendered his resignation and resumed his former position with the company, which he filled until December 31st, 1873. After having charge of the Green Ridge colliery until 1875 he again resumed his position with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, which he now occupies. Mr. Nicol is the patentee of several inventions. One is a water ejector, operated by a direct steam jet without machinery; now much used on steamships for pumping bilge water. Another is a stove for domestic purposes to burn culm or waste anthracite coal, and another a portable miner's hand drill.

June 12th, 1846, Mr. Nicol married Helen, second daughter of David Brown, a merchant and manufacturer of Maybole, Ayrshire, Scotland. She was born in the town of Maybole, August 18th, 1824. They have had five children:—Jannet, deceased; Andrew B., at present division superintendent for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, who married Alice H., daughter of Orville Brown, of Watertown, N. Y., and has two children—Agnes and George; Agnes, deceased; Margaret E. and Mary H. Mr. Nicol has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian church since he was sixteen years of age. In all the varied business interests with which he has been prominently identified he has been uniformly successful, strong common sense and unflinching energy being his marked characteristics.

John F. Connolly

JOHN F. CONNOLLY.

John F. Connolly was born in Scranton, Pa., April 27th, 1853—the youngest child of Owen and Catharine (Boland) Connolly. His father emigrated from Ireland in 1847 and settled in Scranton. The first years of his residence there he was in the employ of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company. In 1854 he moved to Lehigh Summit, Lackawanna county, where he resided three years in the employ of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. In 1857 he returned to Scranton, where he remained but a few months. He then moved to Lackawanna township, where in the village of Minooka he became engaged in the grocery trade, and has ever since resided there. There were five children in the family, two of whom died in infancy; Maria, wife of F. A. Kane, of Minooka, is the only child living who was born in Ireland. Philip C., born in Scranton, is associated in business with his father.

John F. Connolly received his education in the district school at Minooka, supplemented by one year's attendance at the Scranton high school. On the 3d of October, 1871, he entered the Columbia College law school, New York, and after a regular course there was graduated on the 14th of May, 1873. He was but twenty years of age at the time of his graduation, consequently could not, under the statute of the State, receive his diploma and degree until the commencement of the following year, at which time his diploma with degree of LL. B. was conferred upon him. In June, 1874, he opened a law office in the city of Scranton, and on the 1st of September following entered into a law partnership with D. W. Connolly, Esq., and he has continued the practice of his profession under this partnership since. Mr. Connolly possesses in large measure a natural aptitude for the legal profession. Both as counselor and advocate he stands high among the young men of the Lackawanna bar. In the latter capacity, especially, few, if any, are his superiors.

In politics he is a Democrat. He received the nomination of his party in Lackawanna county for Congress in 1878, but at the conference withdrew in favor of the Hon. H. B. Wright, who was elected. He married (September 12th, 1877) Mary C. Carroll, daughter of John and Mary Carroll, of Scranton. They have two children—Catharine and John E.

to which the following names were attached: Henry Isaac Jones, Edward Thorp, Thomas White, B. G. Morgan, J. W. Gibbs, John Morris, John G. Noakes and William Vickery Smith. The strength of the parish is indicated in the following items taken from the journal of the convention of 1879: Families, 53; baptized persons, 144; communicants, 47; Sunday-school teachers, 7; pupils, 83. Up to December 31st, 1879, there were 23 baptisms, 14 confirmations, 2 marriages and 7 burials.

OTHER CHURCHES.

Welsh Congregational (Providence).—The Providence Welsh Congregational church was organized August 19th, 1855, at a meeting held in the Presbyterian church of Providence, under the charge of Rev. E. B. Evans, then of Pittston. The original members were only fifteen or twenty, including Rhys Price and wife, Henry Christmas and wife, Thomas L. Davis and wife and Thomas and Ann Williams. Thomas L. Davis was elected deacon and Rhys Price secretary. Deacon Davis died in May, 1872. For about eight months services were held in the Presbyterian church; afterward the school-house at the Notch was used until the completion of the present house of worship. This structure stands on a lot purchased by the church in 1859, on the west side of Market street, and is 48 by 32 feet. It cost $1,300, and was consecrated Christmas, 1862. In 1873 and 1874 it was remodeled and enlarged at an expense of $4,450. A debt was thus incurred which has not been entirely liquidated.

About 1856 Rev. E. B. Evans assumed pastoral charge of the church, in connection with the Hyde Park Welsh Congregational church, but resigned the Providence charge in 1866. From 1867 Rev. David Parry was the pastor until his death, September 8th, 1870. Early in the spring of 1872 the present pastor, Rev. Rees S. Jones, was called. Under his pastorate the church has progressed favorably. The membership is about 200; the average attendance at Sunday-school is from 200 to 225. The services are held almost exclusively in the Welsh language.

Evangelic Lutheran Zion's (Scranton).—In 1859 the Evangelic Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania appointed the late Rev. N. Yaeger, of Bethlehem, to work as missionary among the numerous members of the Lutheran church who lived in Scranton and vicinity. He visited Scranton several times, preaching and administering the sacraments in Wyoming Hall. In accordance with his advice, the synod sent Rev. P. F. Zizelman to Scranton, to work and see whether a permanent organization could be effected there. In May, 1860, he preached his first sermon in Wyoming Hall. In August the same year an organization was effected. The congregation was duly incorporated. Its charter members were: Elders, John Malter, Christian Gans, Christoph Forbach; deacons, Peter Kaehler, John Schumacher, Horace Schirer, C. Soellner, C. Forbach and J. Schumacher. C. Soellner, H. Schirer and P. Kaehler are still living. On the date of organization the constitution of the congregation was signed by 20 male members. In spite of difficulties, the congregation prospered, and needing a more suitable place of worship, in October, 1863, bought its present church, with the parsonage lot, on Mifflin avenue, of the First Welsh Baptist church. In 1864 the parsonage was built. In 1866 the basement under the church was finished for a parochial school, which is yet in existence. A Sunday-school was established in 1860, with about 40 scholars; its first superintendent was Peter Kaehler; his successors were P. Doersam, W. Schultz, George Pfeifer, P. Geiger, John Greiner, I. G. Mayer, W. F. Kiesel and C. Lange. The present superintendent is M. Blickens. The pastor also has general supervision of the Sunday-school, which numbers about 350 scholars, with 35 teachers. The parochial school numbers from 50 to 80 scholars, all under one teacher, who is occasionally assisted, in particular branches, by the pastor.

Rev. P. F. Zizelman, the founder of the congregation, is its pastor; he is, next to Father Moses Whitty, the oldest resident pastor of Scranton. The congregation is without debt.

Hebrew Congregation Anshe Chesed (Scranton).—The synagogue is on Linden street, with parsonage adjoining, occupied by the minister of the congregation, Rev. S. Freudenthal. The congregation was organized August 26th, 1860, with a membership of 16, viz.: G. Brooks, Isaac and M. Newhouse, S. and M. Green, Jonas Lauer, Jacob Galland, Samuel Fulda, E., S. and J. Sutto, Julius and Judas Josephson, S. Wertheimer, S. Krotoski and N. Kramer. A charter was granted to them January 7th, 1862. Up to 1868 the congregation occupied Alhambra Hall, on Lackawanna avenue, for church and school purposes. In 1867 the lots on Linden street were purchased of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, and building thereon was commenced at once under the supervision of S. Sutto, J. Galland, J. Josephson, D. Ackerman and I. Newhouse. The corner stone was laid by the masonic fraternity of Scranton. The building was completed in April, 1868, and dedicated by Dr. T. M. Wise, of Cincinnati. The congregation has a cemetery on the road between Scranton and Dunmore. The board of trustees consists of S. Sutto, S. Rice, S. Krotoski, E. Morris, N. G. Goodman, B. Moses and S. Goldsmith.

Young Men's Christian Association.—The Young Men's Christian Association of Scranton was organized in November, 1868, with the following officers: Pres., Alfred Hand; Vice-Pres'ts, L. B. Powell and Rev. F. Evans; Cor. Sec., H. M. Boies; Sec., C. W. Hartley; Asst. Sec., Joseph Bachelor; Treas., A. D. Holland; Lib., N. H. Shafer, and the following board of directors: J. A. Linen, F. E. Nettleton, Thomas Moore, A. M. Decker, J. S. Reynolds, C. Brinkerhoff, G. W. Miller, Corydon H. Wells, H. M. Boies, H. B. Rockwell, R. W. Luce and P. B. Finley. The association occupied rooms over No. 324 Lackawanna avenue until the fall of 1871, when apartments were secured in the Exchange block. This block burned January 13th, 1877, and the association occupied a room in the Trust and Savings Bank building until April, 1878, when it removed to its present location, Nos. 314 and 316 Lackawanna avenue. The presidents have been as follows: Alfred Hand, 1869; H. M. Boies, 1870-72; E. B. Sturges, 1873, 1874; F. L. Hitchcock, 1875-77; J. H. Torrey, 1878, 1879.

From August, 1870, W. D. Mossman was general secretary until July, 1872. At no time in its history has the association done so much or so efficient work as during Mr. Mossman's secretaryship. It was during this period, and principally through his efforts, that steps were taken which have culminated in the Home for Friendless Children, whose record is one of great usefulness. F. A. Goodwin was general secretary for six months from April, 1873; William Hadden from December, 1873, until July, 1874. During his secretaryship the association began to hold meetings in Park Place, which resulted in a revival of religion there, the erection of a chapel and, eventually, the organization of the Park Place Methodist church. George A. Jessup and Doctor Thomas McCune performed some of the duties of the general secretary when there was no incumbent. From January, 1875, W. H. Chapin was general secretary until September, 1876; T. H. Roe from December of that year till February, 1879. He was an active worker, especially in connection with the charitable work of the ladies' aid society for the poor of the city. It was during his term of office that the fire occurred, already referred to, by which the association lost its museum and library and all of its records; the insurance was $2,000. In March, 1878, C. W. Kirkpatrick was employed as general secretary, and served seven months, entering with much spirit into the temperance work which was begun by Francis Murphy and carried on by Prof. Kelly, of Pittsburg. After Mr. Kirkpatrick's retirement the office was vacant until November, 1879, when W. A. Cook, of York, Pa., assumed its duties.

Besides the general work of such associations, the Scranton Young Men's Christian Association has organized the Home for Friendless Children, Park Place Mission, Cedar Street Mission and Green Ridge Sunday-school; has held meetings in the poor house, jail and hospital, and has actively and efficiently co-operated in every general religious reformatory and charitable effort in the city and vicinity since its organization. The expenses of its work from November, 1868, to November, 1879, were from $28,000 to $30,000, which have been met by membership dues, voluntary subscriptions, and the proceeds of entertainments, lectures, &c. The present membership of the association is about 200. The library contains from 1,100 to 1,200 volumes. The annual election of officers for 1879-80 was held at the rooms of the association Tuesday evening November 25th, 1879, and resulted as follows: Pres., G. F. Reynolds; Vice-pres., Charles Henwood and H. C. Cornell; Rec. Sec., W. F. Hackett; Asst. Rec. Sec., E. G. Cour- sen; Cor. Sec., E. B. Sturges; Treas., Lt. Col. F. L. Hitchcock; Lib., E. H. Ripple, and the following board of managers: H. M. Boies, Rev. Thomas M. Cann, H. F. Warren, A. W. Dickson, Dwight Baker, J. H. Torrey, S. P. McDivitt, J. L. Connell, L. M. Horton and W. A. May.

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

SCRANTON AND DUNMORE.

DeLacy

son of William and Catherine (O'Boyle) DeLacy, the former of county Wexford and the latter a native of Kilkenny, Ireland, was born November 25th, 1835, and is the second child of a family of seven children, four boys and three girls, all of whom are now living. This family, both on the father's and mother's side, was prominently identified with the rebellion of 1798 in Ireland, and is of French extraction. William, a shoemaker by trade, emigrated to America when he was nineteen years of age, and was among the early settlers of Carbondale, where he resided and worked at his trade until 1839, when he moved to Tamaqua, Schuylkill county, and subsequently to Hazleton, Luzerne county, and removed to Carbondale in 1840, and in 1842 to Scranton. After residing in Scranton (then Slocum Hollow) one year he removed to Covington township and purchased a farm, upon which he resided until 1861, when he returned to Scranton, where he died in 1862.

Patrick De Lacy spent his early boyhood on the farm, and his education was limited to the common school. At the age of seventeen he commenced life for himself as a laborer in the coal mines, and in 1853 he commenced to learn the tanner and currier's trade with John Mehan, of Covington, with whom he remained two years and a half, most of which time he was foreman, having full charge of the business. After spending one year with his father-in-law, Jeremiah Wouders, in completing the trade of currier, he was employed as journeyman in Kingston and vicinity until 1858.

January 9th, 1858, he married Rebecca Elizabeth, daughter of Jeremiah and Sarah A. Wouders, of Wyoming. She was born April 11th, 1840. The result of this union is as follows: Sarah Catherine, born June 1st, 1861; Mary Elizabeth, born April 9th, 1863; Anca C., born February 14th, 1866; William P., born March 15th, 1868; Nellie, born December 19th, 1870 (died when two years and six months old); Julia (died in infancy) and Susan, born December 19th, 1873 (died November 8th, 1876). After his marriage he moved to Newark, N. J., and followed his trade for one year, when he was engaged as foreman currier in the tannery of A. G. Hull, at Bushkill, Pike county, Pa., for a year and a half; then he removed to Truxville, Luzerne county, where he leased a tannery which he conducted for a short time, when he abandoned it and entered the army as a private in the 143d regiment Pennsylvania volunteers (Colonel Dana's regiment), and was soon promoted sergeant of Company A. He was in every engagement in which his regiment participated (some twenty general battles and several skirmishes) and at one time during that memorable epoch was under fire every day for thirty days. In the fall of 1864 he was promoted sergeant major; in the spring of 1865 was made lieutenant, and was honorably mustered out of service with his regiment in June, 1865. As an officer and soldier his reputation is best attested by his old comrades in arms, who have elected him president, for the past fourteen years, of the Veteran Soldiers' Association, composed of the old 143d, 149th and 150th regiments.

In 1867 Mr. De Lacy was appointed United States deputy marshal by General Thomas A. Rowley, and served in that capacity until the fall of 1871, when he resigned to take his seat in the State Assembly, having been elected to the Legislature that fall by the Democratic party; he was again elected in 1872. In the fall of 1874 he was a candidate for the State Senate, but owing to a split in his party was defeated by the opposing faction. In 1875 he was appointed deputy sheriff under W. P. Kirkendall, which position he filled one year, and in 1876 was appointed county auditor for two years; and in addition to this he was appointed chief of police of the city of Scranton, which position he still holds.

THE EVERHART FAMILY.

This is one of the oldest family names in America. The subjects of our engravings spring from Zachariah Everhart, who came to this country from Saxony, Germany, in 1689, and settled in Pennsylvania nine years after William Penn founded the colony. His son, Christian, was born in 1728 and died in 1777. He was a man of prominence, and held a royal commission under the crown. He was the father of nine children, and with the exception of two, who died young, the aggregate ages of the remaining seven reached 574 years, or an average of 82 years. James, the third child, grandfather of James M. and Dr. Everhart, was born in 1700 and died in 1852. He was remarkable for activity, strength and a good constitution, which, with scarcely a day's sickness, carried him through the experiences of nearly a century. Bred in the heroic period of the public, amid the hardships and dangers of the Revolution, in which he was a soldier, he passed the memorable winter of 1778 at Valley Forge under Washington, whose imposing form and features he well remembered, together with the handsome face of Wayne and the youthful figure of La Fayette. He had seen individuals who had held office under Penn, and soldiers who fought under Braddock. He had three children, William, John and James, all of whom became men of wealth and prominence. James, the youngest and father of the subjects of our sketch, was born in 1789, and died in 1863. He was an officer in the war of 1812. After the war he engaged in the mercantile business in Chester county, Pa., during which time he took a ship load of bark to England and exchanged it for merchandise. In 1820 he moved to Berks county, where he became extensively engaged in agriculture, tanning and the iron trade. He was a man of sound judgment and correct principles, whose influence was more than local, and whose opinion was sought as a matter of worth by those who knew him best. In all the leading topics of the day he was a close observer, and in those calculated for the general good he was deeply interested. He was an ardent supporter of the free school system, and before its day established schools at his own expense, in order that the rising generation of his neighbors might have the rudiments of a common education. He was in no sense of the word a politician, though twice he represented his district in the Legislature, the second time receiving the unanimous support of both political parties. He was urged to accept a nomination to Congress which was equivalent to an election, and declined. In 1817 he married Mary M., the only child of Isaac and Catharine Tomplin, a woman noted for her many good qualities of head and heart. This happy union was blessed with eight children: John T., Mary, Eveline, William, James M., Samuel A., Oliver I. and Isaiah F.

JAMES M. EVERHART, the subject of one of our engravings, is the third son and was born June 7th, 1828. After receiving a common school education he entered his father's tannery, on account of ill health, where he learned the trade of a tanner in all its branches. His health recovered, he entered the New London Academy, one of the oldest high schools of the State, and was graduated from that institution with honors. After serving two years in his uncle's store in West Chester, Pa., he went to Philadelphia, and entered the wholesale house of Odenheimer & Tenent, then doing the largest western trade of any firm in that city. In 1853 he came to Pittstou, Pa., with his brother John to superintend large landed interests which his father had purchased in the coal fields of that region. Situated on these lands are several of the farms lying in the valley at the foot of Campbell's Ledge, and that beautiful spot in the Lackawanna known as Everhart's Island. When Pennsylvania was invaded by the rebel army he volunteered his time and influence, and hurried to the front. In 1867 he made an extensive tour through Europe in company with his brother, Dr. Everhart, gaining much valuable information. Shortly after his return he came to Scranton and purchased a half interest in the Scranton Brass Works. On the death of his partner, John McLaren, he succeeded to the entire control, and by the introduction of new machinery and skilled workmen, with a liberal expenditure of money, has raised the standard of the establishment to the front rank of brass works in the State. Mr. Everhart being a man of ingenious turn of mind, he is the patentee of several important inventions and has improved and perfected several others, some of which he is now extensively manufacturing. In person he is a man of mild and even disposition, with strong traits of character, business qualities of no ordinary merit, against whose honor and integrity there has never been the first shadow of suspicion. Blessed with a robust constitution and excellent health, his lease of life bids fair for many years of usefulness.

DR. ISAAH F. EVERHART is the youngest child, and was born January 22nd, 1840. He spent his early youth at the old homestead, attending the common schools and academies of the neighborhood. At the age of sixteen he entered Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., where he spent four years in the completion of a scientific course, paying special attention to the natural sciences, for which he has always shown a marked fondness. He then read medicine under his brother-in-law, Dr. Charles A. Heckel, a most excellent practitioner, where he received his first lessons in that most intricate science which knows no limit. The great civil war breaking out, he, becoming impatient to serve his country as medical cadet, entered the West Philadelphia or Saterlee United States Military Hospital, under the charge of Dr. I. I. Hayes, of Arctic expedition fame. Here was material sufficient to satisfy the most enthusiastic Esculapian, with nearly four thousand sick and wounded soldiers, who upon the field of battle had received wounds of almost every imaginable description, or on the march or in the bivouac of war had contracted nearly every ailment to which the soldier of our northern clime has fallen heir.

With the class of 1862-63 he graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, and shortly after went to the front as assistant surgeon of the 8th regiment Pennsylvania cavalry, with the Army of the Potomac. During the active operations of 1863, 1864 and 1865, in all the campaigns in which the regiment was engaged, in over thirty battles, he was faithfully at his post, discharging the duties of full surgeon. February 4th, 1865, he was promoted full surgeon, and on the consolidation of the 8th and 16th regiments of Pennsylvania cavalry he was made surgeon of the 16th regiment, and took charge of the military district of Lynchburg, Va., which position he held until mustered out of service with the regiment, August 11th, 1865. Thus in the three great wars through which the nation has struggled this family has been represented—by the grandfather in the Revolution, the father in the war of 1812 and the sons in the Rebellion.

On his return from an extended tour through Europe in 1867 the doctor settled in Scranton, where he has since successfully pursued the practice of his profession, has gained the confidence and respect of the people and built up a reputation for honesty and integrity second to none. During the great strike in the coal regions in 1871 he was surgeon of the 9th Pennsylvania guards. Seven years he was a member of the medical staff of the Lackawanna Hospital, and now is a member of the Scranton board of health and president of the Lackawanna Game and Fish Association. The doctor is deeply interested in ornithology and is an expert and skillful taxidermist. Twenty years ago he conceived the idea of making a full collection of the native birds and animals found within the limits of the State, and to this end has ardently pursued the work—preparing and mounting all his specimens—until he now has one of the finest and largest private collections in the State; his intention being, after its completion, to donate it to some scientific institution. He is a close student of nature and a great lover of field sports, being a capital wing-shot and fully at home with rod or gun amid the beauties of field, forest or stream, and every year he takes an extended hunting and fishing trip for recreation. In 1871 he married Annie Victoria, only child of Peter and Margaret Uhil (a neighbor adjoining the old homestead), a most excellent woman in mind and heart, and held in the highest esteem by all who know her. They have one child, Edwin Ellsworth, a bright and interesting boy of seven years, who inherits many of the good qualities of both parents.

D. B. HAND.

Dr. David B. Hand was born in Hawley, Wayne county, Pa., March 31st, 1848, the sixth child of Robert and Susan (Goble) Hand. His great grandfather was a native of New Jersey, and raised a family of twenty children. His grandfather was born in Morris county, N. J., and lived to the age of sixty-five. His father, Robert Hand, was born in Sussex county, N. J., and moved to Hawley, where he had purchased a large tract of land, and where for many years he carried on an extensive business in lumber. He died there in 1854. The latter's mother, whose maiden name was Crandemeyer, was born in Germany; came to New Jersey when but five or six years old, and lived to the age of seventy-seven. Her father lived to be more than one hundred years old. Dr. Hand's great-grandfather on his mother's side was born in England; came to America and settled in Morris county, N. J., before the war of the Revolution; lived near Valley Forge, and during the hard winter the army had its winter quarters there he spent nearly his entire fortune, which was large, in feeding the patriot soldiers. His wife was from Scotland, and her father, Stephen Roy, fled for his life from persecution there, and came to America. Dr. Hand's grandfather Nathan Goble was born in Morris county, N. J., and was a farmer and drover. The doctor's mother was born in Sussex county, and is a lineal descendant of Francis Price, from whom the township of Frankford was named, and who was judge of the court in that county for thirty-two years. Some of his descendants have filled prominent positions in the State. Dr. Hand was one of seven children, to wit: Nathan, Charles F., Elizabeth L., Melissa A., William J., David B. and Sarah A. Nathan died in the army; William J. served through the war of the Rebellion and was for two months confined in Libby prison.

Upon the death of the father the entire charge of the family devolved upon the mother, and well and faithfully was her task performed. She was determined her children should have the advantage of an education, and by her efforts, coupled with a will on their part in all ways to help themselves, they all received a liberal education. Mrs. Hand, enjoying in the fullest measure the esteem of a large circle of acquaintances, and the recipient of loving attentions from her children, who fully appreciate her worth, is still living in Hawley.

Having received a good English education, the subject of our sketch at the age of seventeen commenced the study of medicine with Dr. G. B. Curtis at Hawley, and was graduated from the University of the City of New York in 1868. He entered upon the practice at South Canaan, Wayne County, Pa., where he remained three years. He then removed to Carbondale, where he practiced seven years. His health failing in consequence of overwork, he sold his practice and went to California. He traveled for several months through California and the Western States, but not finding a location to suit him he returned east and settled in Columbia, Pa. His predilection for the coal regions, however, induced him to come to Scranton in the spring of 1880, where he purchased the property of Dr. Horace Ladd, one of the oldest physicians in that city. Dr. Ladd having removed to Philadelphia, Dr. Hand succeeded him in his practice. Dr. Hand, although comparatively a young man, has by his energy and skill amassed a competency, and bids fair to take a leading position among the physicians and surgeons of Scranton.

He married Miss Sarah T. Cromwell, daughter of James Cromwell, of Hawley, in 1870. She was born May 2nd, 1851, in Hawley. Her family were Quakers. Her grandfather was Oliver Cromwell, who settled in Canterbury, near Newburgh, on the Hudson river, where he carried on the trade of a tanner.

Dr. and Mrs. Hand had the misfortune to lose their eldest child, Mamie, a bright little girl of six years, at Columbia; their only remaining child, Freddie, is now four years of age.

ELISHA HITCHCOCK,

a son of John and Phebe (Tyler) Hitchcock, natives of Connecticut (the former born June 10th, 1847, and the latter in 1850), was born in Clermont, Cheshire county, New Hampshire, January 21st, 1778. He was the third in a family of fifteen children, twelve sons and three daughters, none of whom are now living.

Horace Ladd

Eng'd by H.B. Hall & Sons 23 Broadway St. N.Y.

Deacon John Hitchcock, the great-grandfather of Elisha, died in New Haven, Conn., October 14th, 1753, aged sixty-eight years. John, his grandfather, died July 29th, 1761, aged fifty-seven years; and John, his father, died July 17th, 1833, aged eighty-eight years, and his wife, Phebe, January 30th, 1821. He was a farmer by occupation, and was one of the pioneers of Clermont, where he settled in 1707. He built the first barn in the township in 1708, in which all the wheat raised north of Sugar river was stored that year. He was for many years prominently identified with the town, and held many offices, and was for several years a member of the Episcopal church.

The subject of our sketch came from New Hampshire in 1809, and was engaged in building grist-mills in Slocum Hollow, Wilkes-Barre and Pittston until he married Ruth, daughter of Ebenezer Slocum, July 24th, 1811, when he returned to his native town; and in 1826 he removed to Slocum Hollow, now Scranton, where he resided until his death, October 16th, 1858, aged nearly eighty-one years. Ruth survives him, and is living with her son Ebenezer, at the advanced age of eighty-nine. He followed his trade (millwright) for several years; also purchased a tract of wild land in the vicinity of the residence of Ebenezer Hitchcock, the old homestead and now the most beautiful part of the city of Scranton, which he cleared up and tilled for several years. He was for many years a justice of the peace, and for more than fifty years a prominent mason. He contributed largely to the building of the first church in Scranton, of which he and his wife were for several years members.

Ebenezer Hitchcock was born in Clermont, New Hampshire, April 27th, 1815, and is the second in a family of seven children, viz.: Elisha, born June 29th, 1813 (died April 23th, 1855); Sarah, born October 14th, 1817 (wife of Abel Gardner, of Abington, Pa.); Ruth Ann, born January 29th, 1820 (died October 23d, 1864); Zenas, born March 25th, 1822 (died June 4th, 1880); Mary, born May 11th, 1827 (wife of Dr. William H. Heath, of Hyde Park), and Eliza, born July 13th, 1831 (died August 26th, 1843). Ebenezer came to Scranton with his parents when he was eleven years of age. His educational advantages were limited to the district school. He was twice married; first, December 24th, 1856, to Marion, daughter of Helon Budd, of Troy, Bradford county, Pa., who was born June 28th, 1834, and died February 2nd, 1857. He married for his second wife Amanda, daughter of William Swackhammer, of Waymart, Wayne county, Pa., February 20th, 1866. She was born February 5th, 1838, and died in 1880. Three children were born of this marriage: Marion, March 16th, 1867; Hattie, September 18th, 1872 (died December 28th, 1878); and William, February 4th, 1875. In 1855 Mr. Hitchcock was appointed by Governor Pollock as one of his aides-de-camp, with the rank of lieutenant colonel. He has always been engaged in farming and lumbering; is Republican in politics. He was for several years identified with the Episcopal church.

A. E. HUNT.

Alexander E. Hunt, of the firm of Hunt Brothers & Co. (limited), Scranton, was born in Paulina, N. J., April 1st, 1835, and married Frances E. Gay, of Seneca Falls, N. Y. He has served as treasurer of the above named firm.

HORACE LADD, A. M., M. D.

The subject of this sketch was born in Philadelphia, September 14th, 1826. He received his education in the public schools of that city and graduated at the high school, at the age of eighteen, as Bachelor of Arts. He soon entered as a medical student the office of Professor John K. Mitchell, in whom he found a generous and influential friend. In the spring of 1848, at the commencement of the Jefferson Medical College, the degree of M. D. was conferred upon him. It was a proud day for the young man and for his widowed mother, who had made many sacrifices to secure her son a liberal education. The young doctor placed his sign on the house in which he was born, and very soon the poor of his neighborhood, who had known him from his boyhood, called upon him when sick. It was not long before he received handsome tokens of appreciation in successive appointments as vaccine physician, by the city council; dispensary physician, by the managers of the Philadelphia Dispensary, and resident physician to the Bush Hill hospital, by the board of health. In the fulfillment of the duties of the latter position he was exposed constantly to cholera, small-pox and ship-fever, but his enthusiastic devotion to his profession was never dampened for a moment. Shortly after the close of the epidemic of cholera, during which he had been actively engaged, Dr. Ladd received a cordial invitation from prominent citizens of Carbon county, Pa., to locate at Summit Hill. Being assured of a handsome practice and a certain income, he determined to leave his home for a time and devote himself to the care of the health of the denizens of the coal regions. Hosts of friends gathered around him in his new field of usefulness, and the doctor soon took front rank among his medical brethren in that section.

From Summit Hill, after a successful career of five years, he was induced by force of circumstances to remove in 1854 to Mauch Chunk, eight miles distant from the first named place. A sudden outbreak of cholera prostrated two of the oldest and most trusted physicians of Mauch Chunk, both of whom died. Dr. Ladd was urged at once to settle in the town where he had shown himself so fearless and successful in staying the ravages of the appalling epidemic. He was still a single man; his success had been uninterrupted from the commencement of his professional career and fortune favored him still, and in May, 1856, he married Miss Ellen C. Brooks, of Philadelphia. He continued the practice of his profession with the most gratifying success, but the falling health of his wife and other personal interests induced him to decide to remove from the region where, he has often said, he had passed ten of the happiest years of his life.

In June, 1859, he removed to Scranton. His reputation as a successful and conscientious physician had preceded him. He was cordially welcomed by medical brethren, as well as by the citizens generally. He has enjoyed a lucrative practice in Scranton for twenty years. He has ever been a liberal contributor, according to his means, to all the churches where his help was needed, and has been identified with most if not all of the public charities wherever he has resided. He has been successively physician to the city hospital, the home for the friendless, the almshouse and hospital for the same. He has aided in the organization of medical societies wherever he has lived, and has represented his region, repeatedly, in the State Medical Society and in the American Medical Association. Now, while this work is being compiled, he is closing his labors in the region where he has been so long and favorably known, with a view of returning to his native city, for the purpose of being near his beloved mother, to watch over and cheer the remainder of her long and devoted life. That success and happiness may follow him, and that his life and usefulness may be prolonged, will be the earnest and sincere wish of his hosts of friends.

CHARLES T. PIERSON.

Mr. Pierson was born in Sag Harbor, Long Island, N. Y., July 6th, 1835, the second child in a family of five children of Jeremiah and Phebe (Terbell) Pierson. The family is of English descent. When Charles T. was only a boy his father moved from Long Island and settled in Forestburg, Sullivan county, N. Y., where, up to the time of his death, he was extensively engaged in the lumber trade. His widow subsequently married David Hammond, and moved to Monticello, Sullivan county, N. Y. After the death of her second husband she resided with her children. She died in Buffalo, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Schryver, March 5th, 1892, aged 81. By her first husband she had five children, viz.: Charley H., Charles T., Stephen H., Louisa and Phebe Ann-Charity H., deceased, was the wife of A. L. Schryver, of Buffalo. Stephen H. married Ann Eliza Murvio, was a resident of Carbondale for many years and died there. Louisa, widow of W. F. Ketchum, partner for many years in the boot and shoe business at Buffalo with Mr. Schryver, is still living in the latter city. Phebe Ann married James McMaster, a retired merchant, living in London, England.

Charles T. Pierson received his education in the common schools of Forestburg and Monticello. Not possessing a strong constitution he was not fitted for the heavy work connected with his father's business of lumbering, and at about the age of sixteen he became clerk in the store of Case Cuddeback, at Cuddebackville, Sullivan county, N. Y., where he remained about three years. He was for about three years thereafter clerk for Morris Wurts, at Wurtsboro, in the same county. Here he became acquainted with Catharine, daughter of David and Anna Dorrance, whom he married January 10th, 1857. Mrs. Pierson was born in Wurtsboro, Sullivan county, N. Y., February 17th, 1803. Her father was a native of Rhode Island, was captain in the Revolution of a company in General La Fayette's corps and was in active service during the continuation of the war, except about six months, during which he was an inmate of the hospital on account of a wound. He moved from Rhode Island to Windham, Conn., where for many years he kept a hotel. From Windham he moved to Wurtsboro, N. Y., where he purchased a large tract of timber land and engaged extensively in lumbering. He died there. His mother was a native of Windham, Conn. She survived her husband a number of years and died in Wurtsboro. They had ten children (seven sons and three daughters); all are dead except Mrs. Pierson.

After his marriage Mr. Pierson lived about two years at Forestburg, being employed in settling up his father's estate. He next engaged in the dry goods trade for about two years at Monticello, N. Y. In 1838 he moved to Carbondale, Luzerne (now Lackawanna) county, Pa., where he at first engaged in trade. He subsequently sold his store, and under the firm name of Pierson & Co. established a foundry, with which he was connected for eighteen years. The company did an extensive and lucrative business. Mr. Pierson's first partner was a Mr. Wilbur; his second Joseph Benjamin, who purchased Wilbur's interest. In 1852, having sold his interest in the foundry, he moved to New York city, where he was interested in the dry goods house of Lathrop, Luddington & Co., and in the boot and shoe house of Wells & Co. He continued in business in New York four years. In 1859 he returned to Carbondale, and for the next two years was interested in the Von Storch coal works at Providence. In 1858 he moved to Scranton, and was one of the founders of the celebrated Dixon Manufacturing Company, of that city. He was employed in this enterprise at the time of his death, which occurred September 18th, 1859.

Mr. Pierson was naturally of a quiet, reserved disposition, a man of few words, and though warmly attached to friends did not go out of his way to make new acquaintances.

He was energetic and almost uniformly successful in carrying forward his business enterprises. He was among the first in his locality to espouse the anti-slavery cause, and the slave seeking to escape from bondage found in him a friend.

Upon the organization of the Republican party he became its firm supporter. For many years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. In his family no man was ever more beloved than he.

Mrs. Pierson, at the advanced age of 77, is still a resident of Scranton, occupying the pleasant home on Washington avenue built by her husband just previous to his death. She has been for many years a consistent and worthy member of the First Presbyterian church.

Only one child, Helen E., wife of William K. Laverty, of New York city, is living. She has five children, viz.: William P., Charles T., Helen K., Kittie D. and Fannie G. Mrs. Laverty was born in Carbondale, April 14th, 1845.

HON. LEWIS PUGHE.

Hon. Lewis Pughe, one of the originators of the Scranton Board of Trade, served as its first secretary and has since been its president six years. Mr. Pughe was born March 5th, 1820, in Montgomeryshire, North Wales, and emigrated to the United States in 1842 and settled in Carbondale (then in Luzerne county). He was elected the first treasurer of the city of Carbondale, and was subsequently elected alderman and associate judge of the mayor's court. He was elected by the Republicans a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1859 and 1861. He removed to Scranton in March, 1868, and in 1871 was elected school director and treasurer of the school board. In 1872 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention, and served with distinguished honor and ability. He is a director of the Third National Bank of Scranton; was president of the first lay delegate convention of the Wyoming conference of the M. E. Church, held in Owego in 1872, and has taken a prominent part in the management of the public charities of Scranton. Mr. Pughe is a member of the successful firm of Monies & Pughe. He is a thoroughly self-made man, having risen from the ranks to successively higher positions of honor and responsibility in city, county and State. With broad common sense views of men and measures, a wide acquaintance and varied experience, he is eminently qualified, as president of the board of trade, to foster the great growing manufacturing and general business interests of the city of Scranton, and to him much is due for their past advancement.

MAJOR EZRA H. RIPPLE was born in Mauch Chunk, Carbon county, Pa., February 14th, 1842. His grandfather, Peter Ripple, emigrated to this country from Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in the latter part of the 18th century, and settled in Newport, Luzerne county, Pa. Here he reared a family of fourteen children, only one of whom is now (1880) living, viz. Isaac Ripple, a resident of White Haven, Luzerne county. Silas Ripple, father of the major, the youngest of the fourteen, was born at Newport, April 2nd, 1811, settled in Mauch Chunk in 1832, and there married Elizabeth Harris in 1840. Here their three children, Ezra H., Mary M. and a child who died in infancy, were born. Mary M. is the wife of H. E. Doster and resides in Bethlehem, Northampton county, Pa. In 1846 he moved with his family to Buck Mountain, Carbon county, where for eleven years he kept a hotel. In 1857 he moved to Hyde Park, where until his death he kept the "Old White Tavern" at the corner of Jackson and Main streets. In politics he was a Whig and Republican. He was a genial companion, hospitable to strangers, a kind neighbor, and a man thoroughly devoted to his family. He died of congestion of the brain, after a short illness, December, 1861. His wife survives him and lives in Allentown, Pa.

Major Ezra H. Ripple received his education in the public schools at Buck Mountain and Hyde Park and by an attendance of about four years in the Wyoming Seminary, of which the Rev. Reuben Nelson was then principal. After leaving school he was employed in his father's hotel at Hyde Park, and continued there after his father's death up to April, 1862. At the outbreak of the Rebellion, though strongly desiring so to do, he was prevented from enlisting by the death of his father, which left the whole care of the family and of his father's estate upon his hands. After leaving the hotel he engaged in the drug business, in which he continued up to 1864. Twice, however, during this time he responded to calls for "minute men" to aid in repelling invasions of the North by the enemy; first, when the southern army invaded Maryland, he volunteered under Lieutenant McKune, since mayor of Scranton, and marched for Antietam. Here he was permitted to hear the guns, but like Job's war horse only smelled the battle afar off. Again, in the great emergency of 1863, when General Lee invaded Pennsylvania, he served under Colonel W. N. Monies at the time of the Gettysburg battle. In March, 1864, he succeeded in arranging his business and enlisted in the 52nd Pennsylvania volunteers, then commanded by Colonel (now Governor) H. M. Hoyt. He was soon made leader of the 2nd brigade band, but held the position only for a short time, as the band was broken up by military orders. Upon the dissolution of the band he entered upon duty in his company, and went with the regiment as bugler on two occasions in venturesome excursions up the Ashepoo and Combahee rivers, in South Carolina. But his military activity was speedily terminated in a night attack on Fort Johnson in Charleston harbor, where, with Colonel Hoyt and Lieutenant Colonel Conyngham and about 140 others of the regiment, he was taken prisoner. Thus after three months' actual service he found himself on the 4th of July, 1864, safely housed with others in the jail of the city of Charleston. From here he was speedily removed to the infamous stockade of Andersonville. After three months of terrible suffering and destitution he was taken back to Charleston, only, however, to be transferred to the stockade at Florence, S. C.; and here, for five months, in fearful exposure and utter destitution, he suffered tortures such as no words would be adequate to describe. From Florence, with eighteen other prisoners, he escaped and attempted to reach the Union lines. He found after traveling a few miles that he was too weak to keep up with his companions. Hearing in the distance the baying of bloodhounds, he took refuge in a swamp, but was soon tracked to his place of concealment. With his back to a tree, with no weapon save his poorly shod feet, he fought for his life with those savage beasts until finally rescued by their brutal masters, who had followed the dogs into the swamp; but not until his limbs had been gashed to the bone and from the loss of blood he was more dead than alive. The scars from this battle with the dogs are permanent. He was driven back to his horrid burrow in the stockade, where he was left without either food or medical relief. The sufferings he endured during his slow recovery are beyond description. They made a permanent and horrible impression upon the gallant soldier. The whole scene still comes back to him in dreams as a horrible nightmare. He was exchanged about a month after his recapture, and upon his arrival at home he was prostrated with camp-fever, which both tested and demonstrated his magnificent power of endurance. He was regularly discharged at Camp Parole, Annapolis, Md., after the surrender of Lee.

In September, 1865, he entered Eastman's Commercial College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he took a three months' course. Returning to Hyde Park he went into the office of a railroad and coal company as book-keeper, in which capacity he served three years. In 1869 he entered into partnership with F. L. Hitchcock in the crockery business in Scranton. In October, 1872, he sold his interest in this store to H. A. Coursen, and became a partner in the firm of William Connell & Co., proprietors of the Meadow Brook, National and Stafford mines, all situated within the limits of the city of Scranton, his department of the business being the management of its accounts.

In the excitement and upheavals in the city of Scranton in 1877 Major Ripple, in company with two or three young men, quietly organized a company of vigilants to aid the mayor in obtaining order, and he was chosen its captain. The dispersion of the mob by these young men on the 1st of August led to the organization of the four companies of the City Guard, when he was selected and commissioned captain of Company D. Upon the consolidation of the guard with the 13th regiment national guard of Pennsylvania Captain Ripple was elected and commissioned major, which position he still holds and fills to the entire satisfaction of his comrades.

In politics the major is Republican. In 1879 he received the nomination of his party for the office of county treasurer, and the ability, honesty and fidelity with which he has fulfilled the trusts of his life were fully attested by the fact that the voters of Lackawanna county, by a striking majority, elected him to that responsible position. It has been well written of him: "In civil life he has demonstrated an ability for running, of which his military career gave neither promise or prophecy."

The major has been an active member of the First Presbyterian Church of Scranton since 1871. He married, April 22nd, 1844, Sarah H., daughter of Richard M. and Susan Hackett, of Scranton. Mrs. Ripple was born in Nesquehoning, Carbon county, Pa., November 13th, 1843. Their children are: Mary M., born February 3d, 1875, died February 6th, 1879; Hannah, born January 6th, 1877, and Ezra H., born January 31st, 1879.

DR. SILAS B. ROBINSON.

Dr. Silas B. Robinson was born February 25th, 1795, in Hartwick, Otsego county, N. Y. His father, a farmer in moderate circumstances, was able to give him only an ordinary education; yet by the aid of an industry that never deserted him during a long life he attained a general medical knowledge under the tuition of Dr. Stephen Wilson, of Lawrence, N. Y., sufficient to entitle him to a diploma from the Otsego County Medical Society in March, 1821. In November of the same year he located in Abington, Pa., and practiced his profession there until the following March. He then removed to Providence, living two years with Stephen Tripp, near Hyde Park. At this time no other practitioner save Davis and Giddings lived in the valley, nor was the wild region known as Drinker's Beach trodden by a physician until long after this time.

On a knoll just below the village of Providence now stands the low brown cottage where Dr. Robinson commenced practice in 1823. His practice embraced a large, sparsely settled territory, he making his visits always on foot. The doctor would make journeys into Wayne county, crossing Cobb mountain at midnight with a single messenger, while the pursuing wolves were howling but a few rods behind his shivering footsteps. For this three days and nights of professional labor, and often fraught with peril, his usual charge was three dollars, and this amount he sometimes received in goose feathers.

DR. SILAS B. ROBINSON.

Dr. Robinson made no pretension at surgery, of which there was comparatively none in the country, yet, as a man who contributed very much toward ameliorating the infirmities of age or the sorrows of the younger wayfarer, who by his kind nursing, his continued and cheering presence in the sick room, and his ready willingness to do and endure for others, he held in his declining years more of the real love and kinder feelings of the older settlers than any physician ever before or since in the Lackawanna valley.

Everybody knew Dr. Robinson, and he knew everybody, and yet no man ever lived in the county who knew and cared so little about his neighbors' business and dissensions. He was emphatically the poor man's friend, attending all patients far and near regardless of fee or reward; a matter of fact man, a prominent mason, and one who brought no discredit upon a character adorned by a long life of sobriety, industry and usefulness.

Dr. Robinson died suddenly, January 10th, 1860, of congestion of the lungs. During the day he had attended to the duties of his profession as usual, visiting patients within two hours of his death; returned home in the evening, retired to his bed in apparent health and in thirty minutes was dead. He was twice married, and his excellent lady survived him only three years.

U. G. SCHOONMAKER.

U. G. Schoonmaker, proprietor of the Forest House, Scranton, was born in Rosendale, Ulster county, N. Y., January 31st, 1845. His wife was Louise J. Reed, of Binghamton, N. Y. Mr. Schoonmaker has been a member of the select council of the city.

JOSEPH SLOCUM.

The history of any locality could be written and many family names left out without doing them or the reader any great injustice. There are others, however, who have left so indelibly the impress of their lives upon the communities of which they formed a part that no history would be complete that did not make mention of them. To the latter class belongs, pre-eminently, the name that heads this sketch. An extended genealogy of the Slocum family, with record of dates of births, marriages and deaths, and notices of some of its prominent members, appears on another page of this volume, to which the reader is referred.

Of its members who still survive none occupies a higher position in the esteem of his fellow men than does "Uncle" Joseph Slocum. He was born in Wilkes-Barre, Luzerne county, Pa., July 15th, 1800. He has thus for upwards of eighty years been identified with the communities of the Wyoming and Lackawanna valleys, of which it may well be said of him, as of Aeneas of old, "he has himself formed a conspicuous part."

His father, Ebenezer Slocum, fourth child of Jonathan and Ruth (Tripp) Slocum, was born in Portsmouth, R. I., January 10th, 1766, and married Sarah, daughter of Joseph and Obedience (Sperry) Davis, December 3d, 1790. She was born August 31st, 1771. To this worthy couple were born thirteen children, as follows:

Ruth, born September 13th, 1791, married Elisha Hitchcock July 24th, 1811, an account of whose family will be found elsewhere in this volume. Sidney, born March 17th, 1794, married (July 1st, 1813) Jane La France, by whom he had six children, two of whom are living. He was killed in a grist-mill at Providence January 20th, 1825. Ebenezer, jr., born June 6th, 1793, married Sally Mills. Benjamin, born July 19th, 1798, married Matilda Griffin, August 1st, 1819. They had six children, three of whom are living. He died October 19th, 1832. Joseph was born July 15th, 1800. Samuel, born May 13th, 1802, married Polly Dings May 13th, 1830. They had six children, three of whom are living. He died August 18th, 1851. Thomas, born May 21st, 1804, married Sarah S. Jenkins December 14th, 1837. They had six children, three of whom are living. He died December 20th, 1879. Sarah, born December 24th, 1806, married Alva Hermans September 5th, 1832. They had six children, four of whom are living. She died November 28th, 1878. Charles M., born December 24th, 1808, died August 27th, 1877. William, born September 20th, 1810, married Jane Lockwood March 30th, 1843. They had ten children, seven of whom are living. He is still living in Abington, Lackawanna county. Mary, born December 3d, 1812, died January 2nd, 1875. Esther, born March 30th, 1816, married Lester Bristle. They had four children, three of whom are living. He is living in Hoboken, N. J. Giles, born December 11th, 1820, married Sarah Decker, by whom he had one child. He is a resident of Scranton. Ebenezer Slocum moved from Wilkes-Barre and settled in what was then called Unionville, now a part of the city of Scranton, in 1798, and lived in a log house situated on the bank of Roaring Brook near the spot where the Scranton grist-mill now stands. In company with his brother Benjamin he built a grist and saw-mill, a forge, a still house and smith shop. These, with five log houses, made up the village of Unionville. The "Old Slocum Red House," a landmark for many years in Scranton, was built by him in 1805. It was still standing in 1875, but has given place to the retaining wall of the Scranton steel works. He subsequently built a second still house. Whiskey, lumber, iron, flour and feed were manufactured in such quantities as to bring the settlement before the county as one of prominence and importance. A detailed account of the business operations of the Slocums appears elsewhere. Ebenezer Slocum died of apoplexy in Wilkes-Barre, July 25th, 1832. His wife survived him more than ten years. She died November 1st, 1842.

Mr. Slocum left an estate of 1,800 acres of land, all lying within the limits of the present city of Scranton, which was divided into four lots or parcels, and assigned by the administrator to his several heirs. Joseph Slocum, during his minority, was employed in the different enterprises carried on by his father. In all departments of the mechanic art, he was an expert. He could make anything, from a horseshoe to the most complicated piece of machinery required for the times. He made the shoes and boots for the family, and was an excellent horse-shoer. For many years he ran the saw-mill.

In 1823, in order to effect a settlement of business between his father and his uncle Benjamin, all enterprises were stopped, and Joseph went to work on the Delaware and Hudson Canal, remaining four months at $12 per month. He afterward worked eighteen months for Rodolphus Bingham. A division of property having in the mean time been effected, he returned home, and in April, 1828, in company with his brother Samuel, assumed the management of his father's estate, and was so employed to the time of his father's death, in 1832.

December 22nd, 1830, he married Edilda, daughter of Rodolphus and Sally (Kimball) Bingham. Mrs. Slocum was born in the town of Palmyra, Pike county, Pa., December 24th, 1805. Mr. Slocum had made her acquaintance while at work for her father. For nearly two years after their marriage both lived at their own homes. August 18th, 1832, they commenced house-keeping in a new frame house, near the old stone still house. They afterwards moved into the "old red Slocum house," his brother Samuel occupying also a part of it. In about one year they moved into the "old possession" log house, on what was known as the Griffin lot, and afterward into a frame house, which was subsequently burned. Mr. Slocum built his present residence in 1859 and moved into it in January, 1860. Upon the division of his father's estate lot No. 4, or the Griffin lot, consisting of 595 acres, fell to him, jointly with his brother Samuel. By subsequent purchases from his brother and others, he became the owner of 626½ acres; which, being located in the heart of the city and on account of the coal underlying it, became of great value.

By the sale of these lands Mr. Slocum has realized a handsome fortune. Inheriting a vigorous constitution, few men could endure more long continued physical exertion than Mr. Slocum. The following incident in his life, related by him to the writer, occurred in the year of his reaching his majority: Meeting in Philadelphia Ernestus Hill and another gentleman, residents of Kingston, he was offered by them a seat in their carriage and a ride to Wilkes-Barre. He jokingly replied, "I can beat your horse home." The race for Wilkes-Barre was speedily arranged, each agreeing to keep an accurate account of the time they were on the road, not including stops. The result was Mr. S. reached Wilkes-Barre two hours ahead of the horse, his walking and running time being 20 hours, 4 minutes and 30 seconds.

The distance was 120 miles. It was a common thing with him to walk from Scranton to Wilkes-Barre and back, a distance of thirty-six miles, between breakfast and dinner. Mr. Slocum has experienced a succession of more serious accidents than often fall to the lot of one man. He has had the thumb of his left hand cut off three times. In 1810 he had two ribs broken by being thrown from a horse. May 8th, 1825, several of his ribs were broken by his being thrown from a wagon. In the winter of 1831, by an accident in the mill, four of his ribs were broken. In 1837 his collar-bone was broken by a handspike. August 18th, 1851, while, in company with his son, looking for a cow in the woods, he fell from a high ledge of rocks, which crushed in his breastbone and broke several more of his ribs. From the effect of the latter accident he has never fully recovered. That he survived it at all demonstrated his remarkable power of endurance. Though crippled in body by these and other accidents not detailed, age seems to have wrought no change in his mental vigor. His memory of events and dates is remarkable. Any one in search of statistics, especially of the early times of the Lackawanna valley, would be quite certain of obtaining them by calling on Mr. Slocum. He has always been a man of strictly temperate habits. Though engaged in the distilling of whiskey, at a time when its manufacture was considered legitimate, he has never himself been a user of ardent spirits or of tobacco.

In politics he has been identified with the Whig and Republican parties. Though not a seeker of office, he has filled several of the local offices. He was collector in 1833 and the first burgess of Scranton borough, and has been city auditor.

Of Mrs. Slocum, his faithful and devoted companion, with whom he has journeyed for nearly a half century, it is but just to say she has played well her part in all the relations of life, as wife, mother, friend. If spared to the 22nd of December, 1880, this worthy couple will celebrate their golden wedding.

The record of their children is as follows: Joseph Warren Slocum, born July 23d, 1833, married Hannah M. Collins, February 21st, 1856. His children were: Florence, born April 3d, 1858; Frank H., born June 20th, 1861; Kate, born July 22nd, 1865; Joseph, born November 21st, 1867; Ida, born May 7th, 1870, died October 17th, 1870; Bessie, born October 16th, 1871, died October 8th, 1877, and George W., born May 25th, 1878. For a number of years Joseph W. Slocum has been deputy United States marshal. He lives with his family at the homestead. Rodolphus Bingham Slocum, born May 4th, 1845, married Annie Lloyd, by whom he had three children, Edilda, Joseph B. and a babe not named. He is a farmer, living near Janesville, Wis.

EDWARD SPENCER,

son of Edward and Mary (Finch) Spencer, was born in what is now Scranton, October 3d, 1805. He is of English extraction, being a lineal descendant of Edward Spencer, who came from England at an early date, and settled in Connecticut.

He is the fifth in a family of seven children, as follows: Sarah, wife of Julius Bailey, of Granville Center, Bradford county, Pa., now living at the advanced age of eighty-three years, born May 7th, 1797; Mohitabel Griffin (late Broome), of Scranton, born March 5th, 1799; Eliphas, born December 18th, 1802, died in Texas in 1860; Maria, born August 13th, 1804, now (1880) residing in Dnnmore; Edward Ambrose, born March 9th, 1809, died in June, 1834; Calvin, born March 11th, 1810, died in Maryland, September 21st, 1866.

Edward, the father of our subject, was born in Connecticut, May 7th, 1753, and was among the earliest settlers of the Wyoming valley. He was a farmer by occupation. During the early Indian troubles he fled to Sunbury; after Sullivan's army had driven the Indians from the valley he returned to his home, to find his house burned, and for six weeks he and his sister lived in the hollow of a fallen button-wood tree.

He was a volunteer soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died in Providence, Pa., December 29th, 1829; and his mother, born in Orange county, N. Y., May 20d, 1774, died in Dnnmore, October 22nd, 1849.

Edward, the grandfather, a native of Connecticut, born March 4th, 1711, moved to Pennsylvania and settled in Shawnee, Luzerne county, and was also a farmer. He died in 1800.

Edward Spencer, whose portrait is the subject of one of our plates, spent his youth at home until he was fourteen years of age, when he went to live with Joseph Hutchings, a cooper of Old Providence, with whom he remained one winter and attended school. He paid his board by working in the shop nights and mornings and chopping wood Saturdays. At the age of fifteen he was engaged for one season on his brother Eliphas's farm at $10 per month, and the following winter (1821) was employed in hauling coal from Carbondale to the Dyberry river. The two following years he was a peddler with horse and wagon, purchasing the goods of his brother Eliphas, who had engaged in trade in connection with his farming. During 1823 he was engaged as teamster in hauling goods from Newburg, N. Y., to his brother's store in Providence and on his return trips taking wheat to the former place to be sent to market; and the following year he was clerk in his brother's store at Brown's, near Wurtsboro, on the Delaware and Hudson Canal. In 1825 he built a small store at Leekport, Sullivan county, N. Y., and engaged in trade. In January, 1827, he removed to Providence, Pa., and continued in the mercantile business there for several years. While engaged in trade in Providence he purchased his father's farm and saw-mill and grist-mill, which business was also carried on by him until 1842, when he sold out and removed to Dnnmore, and settled upon a farm which he purchased of Stoddard Judd. Here he opened a coal mine for his own use, which is now the Roaring Brook mine, it having been leased of Mr. Spencer in 1863. In 1835 he purchased the John Brishin residence, No. 123 Wyoming avenue, Scranton, where he now resides. Since he became a resident of Scranton, he, with his family, has spent fourteen months in traveling through Colorado and Texas, camping out most of this time.

On November 10th, 1825, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Deved, of Mammakating, Sullivan county, N. Y., who was born October 30th, 1807, and died December 8th, 1846. The children by this marriage were: Calvin A., born August 27th, 1826; Sarah Ann, born January 9th, 1829, died March 12th, 1870; Gustavus C., born April 14th, 1830, died when fourteen months old; Mary Elizabeth, born February 11th, 1832, died August 28th, 1858; Phebe Ann, born January 15th, 1834, died December 21st, 1870; Mohitabel M., born February 29th, 1836; Andrew D., born October 5th, 1838; and Edward B., born April 14th, 1842. Mr. Spencer married for his second wife Susan, daughter of George Hines, of Dnnmore, Lackawanna county, Pa. She was born March 18th, 1829. The children of this union are: Ambrose L., born August 18th, 1850; Charles W., born July 25th, 1855; Elsie Bell, born April 25th, 1853; and Frank M., born September 20th, 1859.

ASA B. STEVENS.

Asa B., a son of William and Marion (Piper) Stevens, of New England parentage, was born in Broome county, N. Y., in 1834.

His grandfather, Reuben, a native of Connecticut, was for fifty years a Methodist clergyman, and his great-grandfather, Samuel Stevens, born in 1731, in Connecticut, was a Revolutionary soldier. His maternal grandfather (Piper), of German parentage, was born in Massachusetts, in 1769, and his maternal grandmother, Jerusha (Lyon), was born in Boston, Mass., in 1767.

Mr. Stevens's boyhood days were spent working on his father's farm in summer, and attending the district school in winter. He completed his school days at the Binghamton academy. At the age of eighteen he was apprenticed to J. N. Congdon, of Binghamton, N. Y., and there learned the trade of marble-cutter. In 1856 he moved to Abington, Lackawanna county, Pa., and entered into copartnership with D. N. & L. R. Green in the marble business, and remained there for five years. In March, 1861, he removed to Scranton and engaged in business as a marble dealer, which he carried on successfully for six years.

In August, 1864, Mr. Stevens enlisted as a private in Company C of the 23d regiment Pennsylvania volunteers (Burnie's sharpshooters), and in less than two months he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and served as such until the end of the war. Notwithstanding the fact that he was examined and recommended as major of colored troops, he declined to leave the men that he had induced to enlist. Lieutenant Stevens was in every battle in which his regiment engaged, as follows: Deep Bottom, Fort Harrison, second battle of Fair Oaks, Fort Fisher and Wilmington, N. C. At Cape Fear and Fort Fisher he received honorable mention from the officers of his regiment, and complimentary resolutions were passed by the members of his company, who declared that they did not desire to follow any better or braver soldier, whose courage nobly stood the test of that terrible fight. He was in command of the color company at Fort Fisher, and his colors were the first to enter the fort.

Mr. Stevens has been three times elected to the office of select councilman of the city of Scranton, and has served as such for more than six years. In 1867 he was elected marshal of the mayor's court for the city of Scranton, on the Republican ticket, by a large majority, and he made a faithful and energetic officer. Mr. Stevens cast his first vote for John C. Fremont for President, and has ever been an earnest, hard-working Republican. For the years 1876, 1877 and 1878 he was secretary and treasurer of the School Fund Coal Association and of the Miners' and Mechanics' Loan and Banking Association.

In August, 1878, Mr. Stevens was appointed by the governor the first sheriff of the new county of Lackawanna. In November, 1879, Mr. Stevens was elected to the same office by a handsome majority over all other parties (three) combined, and he has to the present time (October,

Mr. Stevens's affable and courteous manner, sound learning, good judgment and candor have won for him in a remarkable degree the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens. In 1858 he married Elvira A., daughter of Jason P. and Osema Colvin, of Abington, Lackawanna county, Pa. Their family consists of two children, Julian G., born in 1859, and Fred. E., born in 1870.

Charles A. Stevens M.D.

Charles A., son of Samuel and Betsey (Sykes) Stevens, was born in Harpersfield, Delaware county, N. Y., January 19th, 1818. He was the youngest in a family of sixteen children, only three of whom are now living. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm and in the district school of his native town, completing his education at Homer Academy, N. Y. He determined upon the study of medicine, and for this purpose in 1838 he entered the office of Dr. H. P. Burdick, of Preble, Cortland county, N. Y., with whom he remained one year, when he became a private student of Dr. John Stevens, a prominent practitioner of Ithaca, N. Y.

Under the recommendation of Dr. Stevens he matriculated at Geneva Medical College, and after having completed the curriculum of study in that institution he graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1841. During his stay at college his ambition led him to investigate the different systems and schools of medicine, past and present, and their merits and weakness claimed his earnest attention. Naturally he was led to the examination of the comparatively new system of homoeopathy. The effect of his studies in this direction may be divined from his subsequent course; for, though remaining to finish his course and receive his diploma at Geneva college, he had obtained ideas which rendered it impossible for him to practice under the doctrines of the allopathic school, and in March following his graduation he went to Seneca Falls, N. Y., where, in company with Edward Bayard, then a lawyer, now a successful homoeopathic physician of New York city, he pursued still further his investigations of homoeopathy.

At that time, such a course required considerable nerve and firmness, for the adherents of the then new system had to contend against the obloquy, ridicule and persecutions of the old school fraternity, as well as the prejudice of the public. In 1842 Dr. Stevens went to Palmyra, N. Y., where he remained but two years, after which he removed to Buffalo, being the first homoeopathic physician in that city. In 1850 he went to New Orleans, chiefly for pleasure and travel, and on his return spent one year in Cortland, N. Y., after which he removed to Coxsack, and in 1855 he settled in Hudson, N. Y., where he was quite successful. In 1862 he received inducements to take up his residence in Scranton, where he has since remained. He is in the enjoyment of a large practice, and ranks among the most eminent practitioners of that section. June 22d, 1842, Dr. Stevens married Emily M., daughter of Julius M. and Martha Dunning, of New York city. Their children are: Estelle, born September 30th, 1843 (wife of Prof. Charles B. Derman, of Scranton); Samuel H., born March 19th, 1845; Julius D., born October 9th, 1848; and Emily M., born November 27th, 1850. Dr. Stevens is a gentleman well and favorably known, and one who is very highly respected and esteemed.

BENJAMIN H. THROOP, M. D., one of Scranton's early settlers, was born in Oxford, Chenango county, N. Y., November 9th, 1811, to which place his parents had emigrated from Connecticut in 1800. At the age of twelve, by the death of his father, he was left to the care of a good mother, of Puritan ancestry, whose only care was for him, he being the youngest and the only one that remained of six children to comfort her in her declining years. She died in 1812, aged seventy-three.

Fortune did not favor the doctor in his early years and he was consequently the artisan of his own fortune. Being at an early age obliged to look out for himself, he was educated to adversity, which prepared him the better to buffet life's vicissitudes. His education was limited to the facilities afforded in the old Oxford academy, and his classmates were such men as Hon. Horatio Seymour, Hon. Ward Hunt and many others who date their first impulse for honor and position to this alma mater, which still exists and flourishes. There he qualified himself to enter the office of the eminent Dr. Packer, and continued with him until he graduated in medicine in 1832, at the Fairfield Medical College. In February, 1832, he made his professional debut in Honesdale, Pa., a little village then emerging rapidly from one of the glens of the Dyberry, the terminus of the Delaware and Hudson Canal. There, in spite of the competition of old and able physicians long established in Wayne county, young Dr. Throop, by the aid of a correct knowledge of medicine and of man, rose rapidly to a position at the head of his profession. In 1835 he went to Oswego, N. Y., where he remained for nearly a year. He then opened an office in New York city and continued in the practice of his profession till 1840. In the fall of this year he went to Honesdale to spend a few weeks, and was again beset for his professional services, and had a call to the valley of Lackawanna in counsel; and finding it a field of great interest, not only in his profession, but of much commercial promise, he concluded to make it his home, and on the 8th of October, 1840, located in Providence.

The purchase of Slocum Hollow by the late G. W. and Selden T. Scranton, Sanford Grant and others, was made about this time, and Dr. Throop early became intimately acquainted with them, and married a sister of Mr. Grant's wife. Of five children born to them but two remain, Mrs. H. B. Phelps and George S. Throop, M. D., residents of Scranton. The doctor remained in Providence until 1845, when he was induced to remove to Scranton and was the first to take possession, with the consent of its owners, of land for a homestead; and accepting the offer of Colonel G. W. Scranton he built the first house in Scranton proper, outside of what was owned by the iron company.

The new village of Harrison (now Scranton) was planned on paper, and the doctor, full of the gift of cheer and encouragement which enabled him to assist others, began to aid in expanding it. In 1853 the doctor, recognizing the prospects of a grand future for the valley, embarked largely in the purchase and sale of coal lands. He sold many very valuable properties and formed mining companies. As communication was opened direct to New York by the completion of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, the lands about Scranton enhanced in value, and he made leases of several tracts of coal lands that are now largely productive. As the place grew in population and wealth he made additions to Scranton, Hyde Park, Providence and Dunmore, and laid out in Blakely the village of Price, and sold lots to settlers at these several localities, and is still settling them as opportunities occur. He has never been charged with oppression by his hundreds of tenants, and has always taken an interest in their prosperity. The Newton turnpike was completed under his supervision, and is the outlet for a large population beyond the western mountain to the markets of the city. As long since as 1851 he spent the winter in Harrisburg, urging the Legislature to authorize the erection of a new county, a long desired consummation which was reached only after years and years of untiring efforts, in 1877; not, however, without the important "sinews of war" freely spent in its behalf, and the doctor was prominent in securing the necessary element of success.

When President Lincoln, in 1861, called for volunteers Dr. Throop was the first surgeon in old Luzerne to respond to the call. He was, without solicitation on his part, commissioned surgeon of the 8th Pennsylvania volunteer regiment, April 23d, 1861. The laws of hygiene were so thoroughly enforced by him in his regiment that he did not lose a man by disease while absent from home. He started the first field hospital at Chambersburg in April, 1861, of the late war. The doctor was on duty six weeks or more, after the battle of Antietam, as a volunteer surgeon, and established in a forest the Smoketown field hospital, to which all the badly wounded were taken from the various field hospitals of the regiments that were engaged in that sanguinary conflict, and remained with them until they died, or were sent to the north among their friends, or to other government quarters. He followed the army to Harper's Ferry, and though worn out with care and fatigue was pressed hard to continue his services there, but an attack of typhoid fever obliged him to return home. At this time his business and other engagements drew attention and occupied his time so much that he withdrew from the active practice of his profession, and he has since acted only in counsel and surgical duties that fell in his way.

During all the years of Scranton's marvelous growth no Christian or humane movement has been begun without Dr. Throop's hearty co-operation and substantial aid. He introduced the first general supply of milk, the first livery stable, the first drug store, the first railway package express on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and was prominent in the establishment of the post-office. He was one of the originators of the Scranton Gas and Water Company, whose charter he framed. Though in principle a firm Episcopalian, he assisted the Presbyterian church in providing its place of worship, and in many ways generously aided the deserving brethren of other denominations, whose tenets were radically opposed to his own. St. Luke's, one of the most beautiful church structures in northeastern Pennsylvania, stands as an enduring witness of his liberality in the cause of Christianity. He also was one of the foremost in the establishment of the first lodge of Odd Fellows in Scranton.

Though retired from active employment in his profession, he has held for a number of years the position of chief surgeon to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's railroad. By appointment from Governor Hartranft he was made trustee of the Danville Insane Hospital, a position which at present he fills with advantage to the institution and honor to himself. He also established the hospital now known as the Lackawanna Hospital, and at his own expense maintained it for a long time. The number of patients treated and the varied surgical operations performed there, gave it prominence, and, largely through the efforts of Dr. Throop, it was liberally endowed by the State.

In private life Dr. Throop is noted for his unsectarian bun anity and cheerful hospitality, while his learning, brilliant conversational powers and suave courtesy make him a valued and entertaining companion. Since 1840 he has been a resident of Scranton, where he has been recognized and still is regarded as one of the best and most accomplished surgeons in the commonwealth. Possessing a fertility of resources belonging to few others, an aptness and originality in their prompt application in professional cases that distinguish him as a medical man and make him master of his art, he is always characterized by those broad, independent, original habits of action and thought which render him a character alike eminent and esteemed, and which will make his name remembered long after twilight has gathered around his final resting place.

IRA TRIPP,

the second son of Isaac and Catharine (La France) Tripp, was born January 6th, 1814, in the old township of Providence. Isaac Tripp, his great-grandfather, moved with his family from Providence, R. I., and was one of the first settlers in the Wyoming valley, locating in Wilkes-Barre in 1769. He was killed by the Indians, while foddering his cattle. He was a Quaker in his religious notions, and in all his intercourse with the Indians his manner had been so kind and conciliatory that when he fell into their hands as a prisoner, the year previous, at Capoose, they dismissed him unharmed and covered him with paint, as it was their custom to do with those they did not wish to harm. He was a man of more than ordinary efficiency and prominence in the colony, and the Indians were often asked by the British why he was not slain, and the unvarying answer was, "Tripp is a good man." In his efforts to protect the interests of the Wyoming colony at Hartford, whither he had been sent to represent its grievances, he made himself inimical to the Tories, and a double reward was offered for his scalp. As he had forfeited their protection by the removal of the war paint, and incurred their hostility by his loyal struggles for the life of the republic, he was shot and scalped the first time he was seen. His son Isaac settled in the valley about 1774, and took up a tract of land of about 1,000 acres in the heart of the present thriving city of Scranton. His children were William, Amasa, Stephen, Isaac, Holden, Polly, Patty, Betsey, Catharine, Susan and Nancy, all of whom lived to adult age, were married and raised families. By gift from his father, and purchase of his brothers and sisters, Isaac Tripp, the father of Ira, became the owner of 600 acres in the central part of the city of Scranton. By his marriage with Catharine La France, a native of Providence township, he had nine children, as follows: Benjamin, Ira, Isaac, Holden (deceased), Diana (deceased), Phebe (deceased), Maria, Catharine and Mahala (deceased).

Ira Tripp spent his youth on his father's farm, and his educational facilities were limited to the common schools of Providence. February 20th, 1838, he married Rosanna G., daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Shoemaker, of Wyoming, Pa. She was born September 26th, 1817. The result of this union is: Isaac C., born March 29th, 1839; Leander S., born February 27th, 1841, and Gertie, born January 15th, 1848 (died May 3d, 1874). About eight years after his marriage he purchased the interest of his two brothers in the homestead a view of which may be seen on another page of this work, and moved there. He was appointed by Governor Pollock as one of his aides-de-camp, with rank of lieutenant colonel. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the 8th Pennsylvania regiment, and served nine months as hospital steward. Mr. Tripp was originally a Henry Clay Whig, and afterwards a staunch Republican, but never sought political preferment. He possesses a genial nature, which, added to his courtesy and affability, makes him a pleasant and entertaining companion, and wins him many warm friends.

Dr. Pier

Dr. Pier was born in Warren, Warren county, Pa., in 1822, and was the second child and only son of William and Caroline (Hathaway) Pier. His grandfather came at an early day, and settled at a place now called Pierstown, in Otsego county, New York. His father was a tanner and currier by trade. After his marriage he moved to Jamestown, Chautauqua county, N. Y., where he remained about four years; next to Warren, Pa., where he worked at his trade for eighteen years. In 1837 he moved to Mt. Pleasant, Wayne county, Pa., and in 1839 to Chenango county, N. Y., first to Guilford Center, then to Oxford. Bath, Steuben county, N. Y., was his next place of residence. He finally settled in Hyde Park, where for a number of years, and till near the time of his death, which occurred there, he filled the position of justice of the peace. His wife survives him, and is still a resident of Hyde Park, at the age of eighty-three years.

The doctor became a student of medicine at Oxford, N. Y., with Dr. William G. Sands; attended medical lectures at Albany College during the winter of 1844-45, and received his diploma from the censors of the Chenango County Medical Society in August, 1845. In October following he opened an office in Hyde Park, being, except Dr. Throop and the late Dr. Silas B. Robinson, whose daughter he shortly afterward married, the only physician at this time living between Pittston and Carbondale.

In 1846 he moved across the Lackawanna and built him a house in a meadow near Joseph Slocum's, before Ward street had a name or scarcely a dwelling between his place and Rearing brook. With but a slight interval he has been a resident of Scranton ever since, devoting his energies and time wholly to a profession in which he has attained pre-eminence as an obstetrician, and earned a character for integrity and plain common sense surpassed by no medical man in the vicinity of the city of Scranton. With him the practice of medicine never sinks down to a consideration of dollars and cents. The dignity of the profession in his hands rises above mere pay. He always attends to all calls, whether coming from the rich or poor.

An incident transpiring in his office some years ago and related by a brother physician, who happened to be present, afforded a beautiful illustration of his generous impulse and love of humanity in this respect. A lone woman, pale and thin with suffering, came into his office toward evening, and asked the doctor to visit her child, some miles down the valley, which had been taken suddenly if not alarmingly ill. "You go home and I'll soon be along," answered the sympathizing doctor. As her footsteps grew fainter from the door his professional friend laughed at him for promising to go so far upon such a thankless errand, where he would probably be the subject of no fee but a "Thank you" or "God bless you, doctoor!" "No matter about the pay," replied Dr. Pier, with a blunt, unselfish readiness, showing his real character; "she loves her child, and the thought of having been the means of saving its life will be pay enough for me."

Dr. Pier's popularity is not strictly professional. As a citizen and neighbor he is warmly appreciated through a wide section of country, and when he allows himself to run for any office the number of votes bestowed on him by his fellow voters indicates that he holds a prominent place in the affection of the people with whom he is identified. In 1861 he was elected prothonotary of old Luzerne county, the duties of which office called him to Wilkes-Barre, where he resided until the spring of 1865, when he returned to Scranton. He is now engaged in the practice of his profession, with the same unwavering kindness and assiduity characterizing him in and out of the sick room.

FRANCIS ALLEN BEAMISH.

Francois Allen Beamish, editor and publisher of the Scranton Free Press, was born in County Cork, Ireland, March 9th, 1845, and married Mary Loftus, of Hanover, Luzerne county, Pa. He served in the army, in 1863-64, as an officer; was sergeant-at-arms in the House of Representatives in 1865-66; has been a member of the Scranton board of education six years, and secretary of the board three years; a member of the select council six years; clerk of city commissioners two years; a member of the board of charities five years, and long identified with local newspapers and political interests.

JOHN DEKIN.

John Dekin, of Dunmore, was born in London, England, July 10th, 1842. He is now keeping hotel at Dunmore.

LUDWIG WEHLAU, M. D.

Dr. Wehlau was born in Oldenburg, Germany, November 5th, 1851, and was the third child of Johann and Elizse Wehlau. He is the only member of his father's family now living. He received his primary education at the gymnasium at Aldenburg and Berlin; his medical education at Geneva, Berne and Zurich in Switzerland, and graduated from the Wurzburg Medical College, Bavaria, in 1874. He practiced his profession for a short time in Witteghausen, in Baden; then accepted the appointment of physician for the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, in which capacity he served about two years, crossing the Atlantic in that time thirty-one times. He came to America in 1876 and settled in the city of Scranton, where he has since engaged in the practice of medicine, taking high rank among the medical fraternity of that city. Doctor Wehlau married Louisa Conrad, daughter of Andrew and Catharine Conrad, of Green Ridge, Scranton, May 15th, 1879.

John Mosie

SCRANTON.

JOHN HOSIE.

Of the various nationalities which have become united in the New World and which make up the American people no nation has contributed a more sturdy or better element than has Scotland. Wherever, almost without exception, a son of Scotia is found you may be certain of finding an honest and useful citizen, and to no one of their number will the remark apply more fittingly than to the man whose name stands at the head of this sketch.

John Hosie was born in Stirlingshire, Scotland, June 2nd, 1812, the seventh child in a family of eleven children of James and Jane (Bowie) Hosie. His father was a mason and stone cutter by trade, and was a heavy building contractor. He was a man of decided religious convictions, of great firmness of character and of sterling integrity. He died about the year 1837 at the old homestead in Scotland, aged seventy-four. His wife, who was a woman thoroughly devoted to her family and respected by all who knew her, survived him about four years.

Mr. Hosie's education was limited to an attendance at the common schools of his neighborhood. As early as at the age of ten years he conceived the idea of marking out for himself a career which should be independent of all help from his family. To this end, and for the purpose of earning something for himself, having been made a present of a pony by an elder sister, who was landlady of a large hotel, he made good use of it in delivering packages which were given him for that purpose by guests of the hotel. He was thus employed, after school hours, for two or three years. At the end of that time he found himself the possessor of about £60, a fact known only to himself. He had already decided that when he got sufficient means he would go to America. At the age of fourteen he went, unknown to any member of his family, to Greenock, a shipping port of Scotland, where he purchased his passage, taking a receipt therefor. He first told his mother what he had done, which took the good woman utterly by surprise. "Boy, what could you do in America?" "I will do something," was the "boy's" reply. "Where did you get the money?" was the next question. He satisfied her he had come honestly by it. The father, upon his return at evening, repeated about the same questions, with the same answers.

He told the boy if he would give up going for the present he would give him three years of schooling, and if at the end of the time he still desired to go he would give him money to go with; but no persuasion could turn him from his purpose. Accordingly the clothes for the journey were got in readiness, to which were added by the thoughtful mother a Bible which had been in the family over a hundred years, and some good Presbyterian books. Everything being in readiness, in the month of March, 1829, at the hour of midnight in order to avoid notice, he left the old hearthstone for the seaport. He was overtaken at Glasgow the next day by his father, an elder brother and a sister, who made another attempt to persuade him to return, but without success. It was finally decided if John was going his brother Andrew should go too, and thus by the persistence of a boy of fourteen years America gained two good citizens instead of one.

The next day after landing in New York, in company with his brother he went over to Newark and applied for a job of work at a stone cutter's. There was something in the appearance and bearing of the lad that pleased the proprietor, and he set him at work at stone cutting. His brother found work in Newark at his trade as a carpenter and joiner. Our subject remained with his first employer seven months, receiving very nearly the same wages as the men. He next went to Philadelphia, where for six years following he was in the employ of an elder brother, James Hosie. His first work under him was on the masonry of the Columbia Railroad bridge over the Schuylkill river. In 1833 he went to Canton, Mass., where he was employed for nearly three years in superintending the construction of the viaduct at that place. He superintended the masonry work for Dodd, Clark & Co., contractors for the construction of a portion of the Hartford and New Haven Railroad; also for Dodd, Baldwin & Co., on the Morris and Essex Railroad. He next engaged with his brother in building the railroad bridge across the Raritan river at New Brunswick, N. J. He then went to Bridgeport, Conn., where he constructed the masonry on the Housatonic Railroad. For the next six years he was engaged in the construction of the New York city water works, under Bishop & Campbell, contractors. He superintended the heavy masonry on those works between Tarrytown and Dobb's Ferry, also across Glendening Valley. At the solicitation of the chief and resident engineers he went to Seal Harbor, Maine, and cut the stone for the Harlem high bridge.

In 1843 he engaged, under James Archbald, in the management of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's Railroad from Carbondale to Honesdale, and during the two years he was thus employed he repaired the masonry on the company's canal. In 1845 he accepted the position of assistant superintendent, under Archbald, of the Delaware and Hudson coal mines at Carbondale.

On the 12th of November, 1845, he married Julia A., daughter of Phlander and Louisa Beattys, of Waymart, Wayne county, Pa., and in the following spring commenced housekeeping at Archbald. January 12th, 1846, occurred a most thrilling and memorable event in the life of Mr. Hosie, which put to the full test the indomitable will and magnificent pluck of the man, so strongly shadowed forth in the boy, and which at the time was heralded to the farthest limits of civilization. About 8 o'clock in the morning of that day he went into mine No. 2 level at Carbondale. He had been in the mine less than an hour when about forty acres of the overhanging rocks and earth caved in. He was alone and very near the center of this fall. Fifteen miners in other parts of the mine were instantly killed by the concussion of the air. Mr. Hosie was saved from instant death by the refuse coal which is ordinarily left on the bottom of the mine. As it was he was pressed between the fallen rocks and the bottom of the mine, with barely space left for his prostrate body. In utter darkness, with nothing but his bare hands to work with, for twenty-four hours, every one of which seemed an age, he dug for his life, throwing behind him the fallen debris and refuse coal upon which the fallen mass rested. His fingers were worn to the bone and still bear the marks of the terrible struggle. At length he reached a place where he could stand up, only to find, however, he was still inside the fall. He attempted to reach the air shaft, but did not succeed. It finally occurred to him that by following the break in the overhanging rocks made next to the line of solid coal he might work his way to the main entrance. Following up this thought the finally, after having been literally buried in this living tomb for forty-eight hours, effected his escape. He had been given up for dead, as it was known he was in the very center of the fall, having been seen there by a mule driver as he was passing along just previous to the fall. He met a party of miners before reaching the entrance, who had entered the mine for the purpose of digging for his body. Instead, they found a pretty lively corpse in the person of Mr. Hosie himself approaching them. The news of his escape sent a thrill of joy throughout the country. It would not be in the power of pen to describe the feelings of the young wife, who had given her husband up for lost, when the glad tidings were borne to her that he was yet alive.

He continued in the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Company until 1850. He then became general superintendent for the Pennsylvania Coal Company, taking charge of their mines at Pittston and Dunmore. This position he resigned in the fall of 1854, having taken a contract for mason work and grading on the Michigan Southern Railroad, at Toledo, Ohio. It was the year of cholera and the deaths for three weeks among the men employed in the work averaged twelve a day. Of 448 men on the pay roll Mr. Hosie was the only one who was not taken sick during the time.

Returning to the valley he took charge of the works of the North Pennsylvania and the North Branch Coal Companies, making headquarters at Pittston. He also had an interest in the Pittston Coal Company.

In the fall of 1856 he went to Portland, Me., to build a portion of the Portland and Saco Railroad. In 1858 went to Virginia, where, in company with General McAlister, of Allentown, Pa., he built a part of the Covington & Ohio Railroad. They remained there till the opening of the Rebellion, when they had to leave. The contract was with the State, and the latter still owes them $30,000 and in all probability always will. Returning to Pittston, Mr. Hosie remained out of active employment on account of impaired health for about one year. In 1862 he took an interest with Alexander Gray & Co. in the Hollenback colliery at Wilkes-Barre. In 1861 he sold his interest and purchased the Silver Brook coal works, near Hazleton, where he remained six years. He then sold out and took charge of the Bear Pine colliery, near Mahanoy, Schuylkill county. In 1872 he resigned his position, having leased the Fair Lawn coal property at Seranton, which mine he opened that year and he is at present (1880) working it. In 1877 he became a partner in the Pierce Coal Company at Winton, and he is its general manager.

As will be seen from this narrative Mr. Hosie has led a most active and laborious life. He has always thrown his whole energies into whatever enterprise he engaged in and has been almost uniformly successful. As a manager of men his equal will hardly be found in the entire coal region. He has always commanded the respect of all men, high or low, sick or poor. One must travel a long way before finding a man who would speak ill of John Hosie. He has been too busy with his own affairs to take an active part in public affairs, and never filled or sought office. In politics he has been identified with the Whig and Republican parties.

He has had five children, viz.: Helen E., wife of A. D. Soxseitzinger, of Schuylkill county; James P., associated with his father at the Fair Lawn mines; John H., superintendent of the Pierce Coal Company at Winton; George, deceased; and Julia A., residing at home. Mrs. Hosie died November 4th, 1879.

DR. W. E. ALLEN.

Dr. W. E. Allen was born in Wantage, Sussex county, N. J., October 8th, 1836, the youngest child of the Rev. Edward and Elizabeth (Linn) Allen. Gabriel Allen, his grandfather, was a native of Connecticut; a sea captain by occupation; he married a Miss Churchill, and raised six sons and four daughters. Edward Allen was born in Saugatuck (now Westport), Conn., June 8th, 1792; prepared for the junior class of Princeton in the academy of his native town, and was graduated from college in 1815. He was principal of the academy at Elizabethtown, N. J., and at Trenton, for three years after his graduation. During this time he studied the Hebrew language, and in the spring of 1818 was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Jersey; and in the autumn following was ordained by the same body. He was pastor of churches at the following places, in the order named: Wantage, Milford (county seat of Pike county), again at Wantage, for two years again at Milford; Carbondale, Pa., from 1843 to 1847; Belvidere, Warren county, N. J., and lastly at Gibson. He retired from the ministry in 1874. He died at Harford (where he had taught a family school for boys for several years) August 1st, 1877, aged eighty-five. He was a fine scholar, an excellent teacher, and a faithful and devoted pastor, in which relation he seemed to possess especial fitness for the organization of new churches, often succeeding where others had failed. He was twice married. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of the Hon. Judge Linn, by whom he had seven children—two sons and five daughters—all of whom are living. His first wife died during his second pastorate at Wantage. His second wife was Mrs. Louisa T. Richardson, widow of Deacon Preston Richardson, of Harford. By this union there was one son, now deceased.

Doctor Allen received his education at the Belvidere Academy; studied Latin and Greek with his father; read medicine with his brother, Dr. J. Linn Allen, in Branchville, Sussex county, N. J.; was graduated from the Albany Medical College in 1856, at the age of twenty; commenced the practice of medicine at Milford, Pike county, Pa., where he remained one year. His health failing him, he withdrew from practice two years. He purchased and carried on a drug store in Hyde Park, which in 1859 he sold, and again opened an office there; and, with the exception of a period of service in the civil war, has uninterruptedly followed his profession at Hyde Park, enjoying a most extensive and lucrative practice. In July, 1862, he went to Fortress Monroe, acting as assistant surgeon U. S. A. in the Chesapeake General Hospital. He was there eighteen months, and for the last six was executive officer of the hospital. On account of ill health he resigned his position, and returned to Hyde Park. In June, 1864, he re-entered the service, and was an officer in the Christian street hospital, Philadelphia, till it was discontinued. He then returned to Hyde Park. He soon after received the appointment of assistant surgeon to the board of enrollment, Scranton district, which position he held till the close of the war.

The doctor married (June 6th, 1865) Amelia B., daughter of Nathaniel and Cynthia Clapp. Mrs. Allen was born July 5th, 1842. They have one child, Julia, born April 21st, 1867.

J. M. ACKER, Bellevue, Hyde Park, superintendent of the Bellevue mines (formerly a plasterer), was born in Rockport, Pa., November 22nd, 1831, and married Margaret Ridall, of Wilkes-Barre.

BYRON F. AKERLY, attorney (office Second National Bank building, Scranton; residence 10th street, Hyde Park), was born April 2nd, 1844, in South Abington township, where he was formerly a farmer, and married Sarah Clark.

I. H. ALLEN, stationary engineer, Hyde Park, was born in Blossburg, Pa., December 3d, 1841, and married Maria Smith, of Carbondale. During the Rebellion he served three years—in Company I 132nd Pennsylvania volunteers nine months and in the signal corps twenty-seven months.

FRED J. AMSDEN, Scranton, son of Joel Amsden, architect and civil engineer, and for seven years city surveyor, was born in Rome, N. Y., June 19th, 1841. During the war he held the office of second lieutenant of Company B 136th Pennsylvania infantry, and was afterwards promoted to first lieutenant. He was subsequently appointed second lieutenant of the signal corps, United States army, and discharged in 1865.

GEORGE ARCHBOLD, Providence, near the depot, assistant boss at the Leggett's Creek mine, was born in Chhattau, England, January 1st, 1844, and married M. E. Cattersen, of Sterling, Wayne county, Pa.

JOHN ARMBRUST, butcher, Scranton, was born in Bavaria, Germany, September 17th, 1832, and married Caroline Veolker, of his native State.

WILLIAM ASSION, secretary of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, residence Willow street, 11th ward, is a native of Scranton, and was born November 18th, 1856.

J. L. ATHERTON, Providence, formerly a carriage manufacturer, now superintendent of coal works, was born in the Wyoming valley, January 6th, 1836. His first wife, formerly Clara Bullard, died August 12th, 1871. His present wife was Nellie Frost Blair, of Boston.

S. G. BARKER, formerly superintendent of machine shops, now scale manufacturer, was born in Kingston, Luzerne county, Pa., May 22nd, 1821, and married Susan Keidder, of Wilkes-Barre. Residence, 328 Madison avenue, Scranton.

D. P. BARTON, formerly a carriage maker, now proprietor of livery and exchange stables, Dunmore, was born in Orange county, N. Y., March 24th, 1825, and married Mehetabel Krotzer, of Providence township. He served three terms as deputy sheriff of Luzerne county, and three years as sealer of weights and measures.

HORACE F. BARRETT, a merchant of Schultsville, is one of the Lackawanna county commissioners. He was born on Staten Island, N. Y., October 18th, 1846, and married Jennie E. Nichols, of Clark's Green.

DANIEL BARTHOLOMEW, saddler and harness maker, Scranton, was born in Scranton, June 17th, 1842, and married Anna Powell, also of Scranton. He served three years in Company K 17th Pa. cavalry, and is captain of Company B 13th regiment national guards of Pennsylvania.

B. GRIFFITHS BEDDOE, druggist, Hyde Park, was born in Merthyr Tydvil, South Wales, May 19th, 1855.

GEORGE W. BENEDICT, Scranton, editor and publisher of the Scranton Journal, 303 Lackawanna avenue, was born in Carbondale, November 29th, 1839. His wife was formerly Jennie S. Widger, of Waymart.

HENRY BEYEA, Dunmore, was born in Sullivan county, N. Y., December 27th, 1835, and married Ellen Pursel, of Bear Creek, Pa. Mr. Beyea is paymaster for the Pennsylvania Coal Company.

H. R. BISHOP, Scranton, foreman blacksmith, and for many years in the employ of the D., L. & W. Railroad Company, was born in New York city, August 1st, 1828, and married Rebecca Roslin Colcher, of Port Colden, N. J.

M. LEWIS BLAIR, formerly a farmer, a school teacher and a merchant, now alderman of the 5th ward, residence Hyde Park, was born in Nelson, Madison county, New York, January 18th, 1836, and married Hattie Phillips, of Hyde Park. He was captain of Company E 143d regiment Pa. volunteers three years during the late war.

WILLIAM BLUME, carriage manufacturer, residence in 21st ward, Hyde Park, was born in Germany, April 6th, 1838, and married Julia A. Brown, of Columbia, N. J. He was orderly sergeant of Company G 31st N. J. volunteers.

GARRETT BOGART, corner Adams avenue and Spruce street, Scranton, is assistant superintendent for the D., L. & W. Railroad. He was born at Blauveltville, N. Y., June 8th, 1837, and married Maggie H. Voss, of Bridgeville, N. J.

COLONEL HENRY M. BOIES, of the 13th regiment N. G. Pa. (president of the Moosic Powder Company), was born in Lee, Mass., August 18th, 1837, and married Elizabeth L. Dickson, of Scranton, February 17th, 1870. Residence, Clay near Vine street, Scranton.

MORGAN BOWEN, residence Chestnut street, Hyde Park, inside foreman in the School Fund Association's mines, was born in Llangenyd, Glamorganshire, South Wales, April 27th, 1823, and married Margaret Williams, of Bryn Mawr, Breconshire, South Wales. He was formerly a miner, and has served as common councilman.

THE CITY OF CARBONDALE.

THE city of Carbondale was formed by an act of Assembly March 15th, 1851, from part of Carbondale township, bounded as follows: Beginning at a corner in the southerly line of the township of Fell at the point where the Milford and Owego turnpike road crosses said Fell township line; thence south 32° west 662 perches, to a corner in the northerly line of Thomas Meredith's "Cottage" farm; thence, by a line due east, 488 perches, to a corner in the empty or return track of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's Blakely railroad; thence north 32° east 662 perches, to a corner in the southerly line of Fell township; thence along said line of Fell township, due west, 488 perches, to the place of beginning. The city was divided into four wards.

SETTLEMENT AND EARLY EVENTS.

About 1812 William Wurts, of Philadelphia, became possessor of large tracts hereabouts. He and his brother Maurice, becoming satisfied of the richness of the coal deposits in the Lackawanna valley, made preparations to begin mining. In 1824 they erected a log house near where the house of Patrick Early, on Seventh street, now stands. Uriah Williams and Hiram Frisbee lived in this house and boarded the miners. Deacon Young came during the summer of 1826, to superintend the coal operations. The next occupant of the log house was Salmon Lathrop, a contractor on the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's railroad, who moved into the building in March, 1827. He kept the place as a hotel, and was succeeded in 1828 by Sylvester Jessup. John M. Poor, clerk for the Wurts brothers, and Eleazer M. Townsend came during the summer of this year.

Carbondale had received its name before this time, it having been announced on the boxes containing tools for the laborers on the railroad, which were consigned to "Carbondale;" thus proclaiming along the route from New York that a new town had sprung up in the wilds of the Lackawanna.

From the completion of the railroad, in 1828, the settlement was quite rapid. Dwellings and stores were being built along Main and Church streets. The company had small shops, and began to ship coal during the summer in small quantities. Previous to 1832 the following persons were among those living in Carbondale:

Uriah Williams, Hiram Frisbee, Deacon Young, Salmon Lathrop, John M. Poor, E. M. Townsend, Dr. T. Sweet, D. N. Lathrop, S. E. Raynor, Samuel Mills, R. E. Marvio, Henry Johnson, Stephen Rodgers, Terence Powderly, John Gilligan, Daniel Taylor, John Simpson, Jesse Gardner, James Birdsall, Wanton Hill, Stephen Marsh, Jesse Clark, Addison Clark, H. B. Jadwin, John Lee, R. Carleton Overton, Nathan Raynor, Joseph Stott, Patrick Nealon, Joseph Benjamin, Henry Van Bergen, James W. Goff, William Eggleston, James Dickson, Thomas Gillisple, H. S. Pierce, William Ball, J. W. Burnham, Charles T. Pierson, Charles White, Patrick Moffitt, William Brennan, Daniel Seurry, Samuel Baker, S. T. Hopkins, Jedediah Bowen, Samuel Mills, George Dies, Judson Clark, Stephen Clark, Charles Smith, John Love.

The population increased with the business of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and in 1850 there were 4,954 inhabitants in the township. The census of 1880 showed 7,719 people within the city limits.

A store for the men employed by the Delaware and Hudson was established by Salmon Lathrop, at the log-house, in 1827. He erected a frame building on the corner of Main and Salem streets, where Pascoe & Scurry now are, in 1828, for a store and dwelling. He soon sold his stock to John M. Poor. Hackley & Townsend began trading where the Harrison House now stands as early as 1829. R. C. Overton had a store where the building of Evans & Alexander now is, and Samuel Hodgson one where the workingmen's co-operative store is. Eggleston & McEntee had established themselves in business prior to 1830.

The first tailor was S. Shelley, from New York, who began business over Mr. Overton's store in 1829. John H. Waterbury began the tailoring business in 1831, and Charles Levan, Washburn Race and Edgar Bogardus in 1833. L. G. Ensign, who was the first to establish a jewelry store (in 1829), began the hat and cap business in 1832, and James A. Smith & Co. in August, 1833. Hodges & Bennet first kept books and stationery in 1833. J. W. Burnham was the second jeweler, having begun business in 1832. The first drug store was opened by Doctors Carter and Brundage in 1832, and closed in May, 1834. Sweet, Benjamin & Co. began dealing in drugs in 1835. Stephen Rodgers, the first shoemaker, came in 1829. H. B. Jadwin came soon after and continued in business for several years. Mr. Jadwin had been in the village as early as 1828, but only stayed a short time. W. S. Vail began shoemaking in 1832. I. S. Ditmar first began blacksmithing as a business separate from that of the company. He came in 1828 as foreman for the company, in which position he was succeeded by Samuel Mills. John Simpson, a Scotchman, was the next blacksmith; his shop standing on the site of that of his son. James Lewis had a shop on the opposite side of the road. Simpson and Lewis both came about 1833.

A place of entertainment was kept in the old log house by Uriah Williams, and after him by Salmon Lathrop; then by Sylvester Jessup in 1829. Mr. Lathrop built a hotel (the Mansion House) on Main street, opposite his store in 1829. E. M. Townsend built the Railway Hotel about the same time, and James D. Treat took it in October, 1833. D. B. Blanchard kept the Mansion House two or three years, and was followed by Zephaniah Knapp, in March, 1836. August 7th, 1840, Mr. Lathrop again took possession. A. Smith and Charles Cox kept the Railway Hotel in 1841. Both these houses were burned September 28th, 1850. Since then several other hotel buildings have been burned.

Daniel Taylor, now living in the city, came here in 1828, from New York, and began wagon making. His shop was on Wyoming street. Ned Rogers began business as a cabinet maker in 1832, and Alexander Ferguson in June, 1833. The first saddler was Milton Moon, agent for Warner Haden, who started business in the store formerly occupied by Drs. Carter and Brundage, one door east of the Mansion House, in June 1833.

Henry Johnson, who came to the place in 1830, was one of the earliest contractors and builders, if not the very first, and has erected many of the stores and dwellings of the city.

The first millinery establishment, that of Misses Low & Benjamin, in the store formerly occupied by Eggleston & McEntee, was opened in the fall of 1830. Mrs. Carter had a shop as early as 1832. Mrs. Curtis and Mrs. Johnson engaged in the business in 1834. Williams and Jackson established the first tin shop in 1834.

Dr. Thomas Sweet, who came in 1828, was the first resident physician. March 7th, 1833, Drs. Carter and Brundage (botanic) advertised themselves as graduates of the "Reformed College of Physicians of New York," and opened an office. They left in 1834. J. Stott began the practice of medicine in September, 1833, having his office at the home of his father, James Stott, at the corner of the parade ground. Drs. John P. Farnham and N. Jackson began practicing in 1837, and Dr. E. A. Webb in August, 1839. The first dentist was Dr. Knapp, in 1835. D. F. Dederich, 1837, was the next. Doctors and dentists have come and gone almost every year for several years, and it would be impossible to give a full list. There are now seven physicians and three dentists in the city.

Lawyers have begun practice in Carbondale as follows:

William Wurts, March 21st, 1833; D. N. Lathrop, May 9th, 1834; Lewis Jones, March 1st, 1835; F. M. Crane, 1840; Anzi Wilson, 1841; Samuel Hodgson, November, 1843; H. B. Burnham, November, 1844; Alfred Dart, February, 1745; P. Byrne, July, 1847; P. C. Gritman, November 1848; F. Saxton, January, 1849; G. W. Perkins, 1851; L. E. Miller, 1851; Henry Wilson, May, 1859; I. D. Richards, April, 1861; M. Carnavan, May 29th, 1863; C. E. Lathrop, admitted June 12th, 1857, began practice June 1st, 1869; G. H. Squiers, 1870; M. M. Thorpe, July, 1870; E. Robinson, 1872; Wilbur F. Lathrop, 1873; Q. A. Gates, July, 1874; James E. Burr, July, 1877.

Of these Alfred Dart, P. C. Gritman, C. E. Lathrop, George H. Squiers, Wilbur F. Lathrop and James E. Burr are now practicing in Carbondale.

The first road was laid out December 21st, 1828, extending from Carbondale to the Milford and Owego turnpike.

The first white children born within the city limits were a son of Hiram Frisbee and a daughter of Uriah Williams, both born in the spring of 1825 in the old log house. The first child born of American parents after the settlement had really begun was Helen Dwight Blanchard, daughter of D. B. and Sophronia Blanchard, born August 17th, 1829, and now the wife of Hon. J. P. Foster, mayor of Des Moines, Iowa. The first marriage was that of D. B. Blanchard to Sophronia Lathrop, in 1828.

The first saloon was opened in August, 1832, "to prevent the use of ardent spirits by the miners," by furnishing them malt drinks.

James J. Hetherby, who came to Carbondale in May, 1842, was the first music teacher, and taught band and piano music. Kellam & Davis established the first bakery in August, 1842. S. S. Benedict first began taking daguerreotypes in January, 1844, at the Mansion House. The first livery stable was established by W. W. Bronson, in 1849. W. W. Lathrop began in the news business in November, 1855. The first brick house was erected in 1866, by John Kase, on River street. P. Moffit built one on Main street about the same time. The first brick store was that of J. Alexander & Sons, built in 1867.

RAILROAD, EXPRESS AND TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATIONS.

The completion of the gravity road of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, in the fall of 1829, first established communication with the outside world. The operation of the road was attended with great difficulties, arising from the breaking of the chains used on the inclined planes. In April, 1830, tarred ropes were substituted for the chains, with very desirable results. Freight was first regularly carried in 1843. This road carried no passengers for some years after its completion. Passenger cars were first attached to the rear of the coal "trips." Upon the return or "light" track being built cars made the round trip instead of returning by the old road. The head of each plane was raised and the foot lowered, so that cars could run down each plane by gravity, whereas horses had been used to haul the loaded cars one way and the empty ones the other. In 1860 the company had extended the road to Providence, and passenger cars began to run over the road. It was extended to Scranton, and, forming a connection with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, was changed to a locomotive road. The first locomotive reached Carbondale in the latter part of September, 1870. Coal trains ran during November. Passenger travel was opened July 4th, 1871. The Jefferson branch of the Erie was completed during this year, passenger business beginning May 15th, 1871.

The first express company that reached Carbondale was Hope's express, which used the gravity road until its extension to Providence, when the Central express was put on the road. June 1st, 1873, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western express began running to Carbondale, and J. H. Wilson has been the agent ever since. The office is on Main street. The United States Express Company has used the Jefferson branch of the Erie ever since it was completed. A. B. Durfee is agent.

The Western Union Telegraph Company leases the lines of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and has an office near the office of the company, M. E. Johnson manager. This company does nearly all the public business, although the railroad companies have telegraph offices.

MAILS AND ROUTES.

John Knapp, now living in Old Forge township, carried the mail from where Scranton now is to Newburgh, N. Y., passing through the place where Carbondale now stands, before any clearing was made. For two years the people of Carbondale had to depend on a post-office six miles away, Clarkstown being the nearest established office. In August, 1829, the office at Carbondale was established, with James W. Goff postmaster. A route from Carbondale to Clarkstown was established, mails being carried twice a week. In January, 1833, there were two lines of stages passing through the place. A route was established in 1836 from Carbondale to Tunkhannock, via Greenfield, Wallsville, Abington and Nicholson. Mails arrived as follows: During 1843, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday—southern, via Wilkes-Barre, 3 P. M.; New York, 10 P. M.; Owego, 7 P. M. Friday—Nicholson, via Greenfield and Abington, 9 A. M. Mails closed for the same points on the same days. The postmasters at Carbondale have been appointed as follows: James W. Goff, 1829; William Eggleston, 1833; Horatio S. Pierce, 1837; J. P. Williams, Calvin Benjamin and C. T. Pierson, 1841; Martin Curtis, 1842; F. M. Crane, 1843; H. P. Ensign, 1844; Joseph Gillispie, 1849; Anthony Grady, 1854; D. N. Lathrop, 1861; William R. Baker, 1864; Daniel Prendegrast, 1867; P. S. Joslin, 1869, who still holds the office.

Mails now arrive from Honesdale and from the south twice a day; from the north once a day, by rail, and from Dundaff once a day by stage.

When the employes of the railroad began settling in Carbondale the only road was a bridle path running along the Lackawanna river. The first road out was one leading from near the railroad, in the first ward of the city, to the Milford and Owego turnpike. This was laid out December 21st, 1828.

The Carbondale and Blakely Turnpike Company was organized in 1833. D. B. Blanchard, Alexander Dolph and Henry Van Bergen were the first board of managers, and Joseph Benjamin treasurer.

Books were opened for subscription to the stock of the Carbondale and Lackawanna turnpike, at the Mansion House, June 30th, 1834. D. B. Blanchard, E. M. Townsend, William Eggleston, Thomas Meredith, Marshal Dimick and Raynsford Smith were the commissioners. This road leads from Carbondale to Belmont, Wayne county, following the river; proposals were advertised for May 27th, 1836, for the building of such parts as might be located.

There were only three roads leading into Carbondale in 1836. John Searle, of Pittston, held the contract of carrying the mail from Scranton to Honesdale, and upon the completion of the wagon road put on a wagon and carried passengers and freight. G. A. Whitney was the first driver.

Harvey C. Nash, agent, put a daily line of stages on the road from Carbondale to Wilkes-Barre in September, 1845, making three trips a week by the direct route and three by Harrison's Mills. L. Searle & Co. began running a daily line of stages to Montrose in January, 1851, charging a fare of $1.50. The line to Wilkes-Barre afterward passed into the hands of Bronson & Allen, who continued to run it until 1860, when they drew off from the valley route, as the railroad offered superior facilities for traveling.

BUSINESS GROWTH.

From a single log house in 1827, the place had increased to a village of 600 inhabitants in 1833, with six stores, one apothecary shop, one clothing store, several groceries, two hotels, two physicians, one lawyer, mechanics of all kinds, millinery shops, and four churches. As the business of mining coal increased so did the business of all kinds. The prosperity of Carbondale has always depended on the amount of work done by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. The mercantile appraisement of 1837 shows ten stores in the village, and the foundry of Pierson & Co. was doing a good business. The number of stores had increased to thirteen in 1845, and the name of P. Moffitt, who is still in business here, appears in the list. The business of Carbondale received a severe blow September 28th, 1850, by a disastrous fire, which broke out in the Carbondale House, kept by G. W. Thomas, and burned nearly the entire business part of the town. The space burned over extended from the parade ground to the turnpike, on Main street, and west side of Church street, including twelve stores, five dwellings, three hotels, one saddle and harness shop, the post-office, several offices and both newspaper establishments. Yet in 1855 there were 41 stores, 12 saloons, one brewery, three foundries, a marble yard and two firms doing brokers' business. Eighteen of the forty-one stores are assessed as dealing in liquors. There were in 1879 twenty general stores, thirteen groceries, three hardware stores, three merchant tailoring establishments, four tobacconists, one gentlemen's furnishing goods store, two harness shops, six milliners, six meat markets, thirteen restaurants and saloons, three foundries, four furniture stores, besides planing-mills, etc.

The First National Bank was organized in November, 1864, with a capital of $110,000, all paid in, and began business January 1st, 1865. The first officers were: H. S. Pierce, president; John S. Law, vice-president; James Stott, cashier. These have remained the same with the exception of John S. Law, who has been succeeded by W. W. Bronson.

The Miners and Mechanics' Savings Bank was organized in June, 1872, with a capital stock of $50,000. The first officers were: John Jermyn, president; E. E. Hendrick, vice-president; James R. Lathrop, cashier. The bank has erected a fine stone building, with a vault of solid masonry, on Main street. The building is two stories high with a basement.

The present officers are: John Jermyn, president; E. E. Hendrick and Alfred Pascoe, vice-presidents; C. E. Spencer, cashier; S. E. Raynor, teller.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

The Delaware and Hudson machine shop was started in a small wooden building near the site of the present building, soon after 1831. This was burned in 1845, and replaced by another wooden structure. This was burned in June, 1857, when the present stone building was erected. Work began in February, 1858, under the charge of James Dickson. The machinery was run by water power till 1870, when a thirty-horse power engine was added to the works. This shop repairs all the machinery of the gravity road, cars, stationary engines, etc. About 45 men are employed. Pierce H. Butler is master mechanic, William Johnson is foreman of the machine shop, and Andrew Wylie of the blacksmith shop. The company has also had three car shops, two having been burned. The present shop is a brick structure. The main part is 180 by 50 feet, and is used for building and repairing freight and passenger cars. There is a wing 175 by 50, used for woodwork. Cars for the gravity road are also built here. A paint shop is situated a short distance from the main shop. There is a small shop on the switch-back, and also one on the line of the Erie road, which are connected with this shop, and used for slight repairs. Axles are finished in the main shop. These shops can employ 175 men, but do not employ over 75. Thomas Orchard is superintendent of all car or repair shops, with George Egg foreman at the gravity shop, Frank Shannon of woodwork, William Boyd of the freight and passenger car shop, Patrick Powderly at the switch-back, Frederick Tappan at the shop on the Erie road, and Edward Blocksligg of the paint shop. The car shop uses about 2,000,000 feet of lumber per year. The Delaware and Hudson locomotive shops were erected in 1876. They do a general business in rebuilding and repairing the locomotives of the company, and employ about thirty men. The shop has a capacity of from twelve to fifteen locomotives per year, and the expenses are from $50,000 to $60,000. There are thirty-six locomotives on the Pennsylvania division that depend upon this shop. The building is of brick, 125 by 75 feet. The engine-house has room for twenty-four locomotives. S. H. Dotterer is superintendent of the shop, with Jacob Eitel dispatcher, and John Seager foreman of shop.

Hanford & Burr erected a planing-mill near the river, at the lower end of the street, in 1861, which they operated until 1865, when Mr. Burr sold to Poor & Mills, and the firm became A. O. Hanford & Co. Samuel Mills purchased the interests of the other partners in 1871, and carried on the business alone for a year. He then sold a share to N. P. Cramer and S. P. Baker. Mr. Cramer retired from the firm in October of the same year, and the firm name became Mills & Baker. F. W. Mills obtained an interest in the business in June, 1876 and the firm became as now. The works are employed in making sash, doors and blinds, besides doing a general business in manufactured lumber, using 250,000 feet per year. There is a thirty-five horse power engine.

Andrew Mitchell's planing-mill, above the head of plane No. 1 on the gravity road, was erected in 1871. Mr. Mitchell manufactures sash, blinds, doors and flooring, besides furnishing all kinds of building material, and can use 400,000 feet of pine and 200,000 feet of other woods per annum.

The Bunnell Manufacturing Company began making agricultural implements and bed-springs in 1875, opposite the carriage shop of N. Moon & Brother. L. I. Bunnell bought the establishment in April, 1879. He employs seven men.

N. Moon & Brother began the carriage and wagon business on the corner of Belmont avenue and Canaan street in 1874. They employ seven men. William Crago had a carriage shop on the corner of Church and Salem streets in 1864. He moved to the corner of River and Dundaff streets in 1869. He has erected three large vats for making cider vinegar in his shop.

The first foundry in Carbondale was established in 1833. Alanson Reed, a Methodist preacher, and Abiran Gurney were proprietors. It was on Church and Foundry streets and was principally occupied in casting wheels for the Delaware and Hudson cars. Reed & Gurney dissolved partnership February 14th, 1834, and the firm became Eggleston & Reed, William Eggleston having purchased an interest. The foundry was burned February 6th, 1835, and rebuilt in ten days. The loss was $2,000. By the retirement of Mr. Reed the firm became Eggleston & Wilbur in June, 1836. They sold to Pierson & Co. in August, 1837, and the foundry was called "Luzerne County Stove Foundry." A ten-horse-power engine and three lathes were put in in September, 1843, and the establishment advertised to do general casting. By the death of Samuel T. Hopkins, one of the firm, July 2nd, 1847, the firm name was changed to Pierson & Benjamin. Mr. Pierson retired April 1st, 1850, and J. Benjamin & Co. carried on the business until April 3d, 1873, when the firm became J. B. Van Bergen & Co. This firm removed the establishment to its present location near Dundaff street, where they have erected brick buildings. They have a fine brick store connected with it.

Peter Campbell built the Union Stove Foundry about 1842. Soon afterward he entered into partnership with John Aitkin, and they operated the foundry, casting wheels, stoves and plows, until 1859, when they sold to David Lister. He sold to Samuel Lister and Frederick T. Gelder July 22nd, 1865. Frederick T. Gelder has owned the establishment since September 1st, 1865. The foundry is at the upper end of River street. It now casts wheels and mining machinery, stoves and plows.

John Simpson erected a stove foundry on Seventh street, west of the river, in 1843 or 1844. He sold to J. Stuart & Co. in November, 1856. R. V. Muir, the partner, withdrew in a short time, and Mr. Stuart carried on the business until October 14th, 1865, when A. Mitchell became interested with him, under the name of J. Stuart & Co. William Lindsay bought the interest of Mr. Mitchell and Patrick Early bought out Mr. Stuart, and the foundry began running under the firm of Lindsay & Earley October 14th, 1869. This firm still owns the establishment. A grist-mill was run in connection with the foundry by Mr. Simpson. The boiler of the "Stour-bridge Lion", the first locomotive engine ever run in America, was used to drive the engines of this establishment for several years. The boiler, which was made of plates five-eighths of an inch thick, with only two flues, of an oval form, about eight inches by twelve inches, now lies by the side of the building. It has been run up to 250 pounds of steam. Lindsay & Earley replaced it with a ten-horse engine of modern make. They employ seven men.

The Weston mill was built in 1857, by Griswold, Wurts & Co., for the purpose of grinding fine coal to make black paint. This enterprise failing, they sold to the present owners in 1859. This is the only flouring mill in the city or vicinity.

E. E. Hendricks first began the business of oil refining on the line of the gravity road. In 1876 he removed his refinery to its present location, on the west side of the river below the Delaware and Hudson depot, where the works were put up on a more extensive plan. They have a capacity of 1,000 barrels per day, and employ 32 men here and four men at the old place on the gravity road. All kinds of burning and lubricating oils are made here. John Herbert is the foreman.

The only saw-mill now in operation in the city is that of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, above the shops and on the Lackawanna river. Steam from the locomotive works is used when there is not water enough to run the mill. This mill cuts 3,000,000 feet of lumber per annum. The company uses twice that amount at this place. E. M. Peck has charge of the lumber department of the company. The Hollenback mill was built in 1850, on the hill near Highland avenue. Dilton Yarrington took charge of the mill April 7th, 1851. The mill burned in 1862, and was rebuilt at once. Mr. Yarrington afterward bought the mill, and it was run by D. Yarrington & Son. It was burned in 1876.

The marble business was first started in Carbondale by Lewis Morton, in 1849. His yard was in the rear of Pascoe & Scurry's store. He sold his business to William H. Richmond and A. L. Hunt in 1851, who continued in business together until 1857, when Mr. Hunt bought out Mr. Richmond and removed the business to the present place, on Salem street, where he has been in business ever since. C. P. Jadwin started in the business, in a small way, in 1859, and soon sold to H. B. Jadwin, who only kept up the business about three months.

Richard Howarth & Brothers began brewing about 1840, in a building which stood on the site of the residence of John Nealon, on Church street. They were burned out in 1849, and bought a carpenter shop of Angus Cameron, farther up the street, and turned it into a brewery. The place was idle about six months, and was then sold to John Nealon, who began brewing in April, 1859. He has made several additions to the buildings. The brewery was employed in making ale until 1877, since which time only lager beer has been brewed. The works have a capacity of 150 barrels per week. About half the malt is made here. There was a brewery on Main and Eighth streets from 1837 to 1841, carried on by Mr. Birdsall.

SCHOOLS.

In 1831, and for some years after, there were no sidewalks and but two streets in the place. But in this year we find two new school buildings erected between the sites of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. They contained one room each. Their teachers were Messrs. Evarts and B. G. Root.

In 1837 a third school, for advanced pupils, was located on the lot where the English Baptist church now stands. It was the first school of a graded character in the place, and its teacher was S. S. Benedict. After quitting the profession of teacher he assumed that of editor, in which business he has been ever since successfully engaged. Successively he filled the offices of justice of the peace, member of the Legislature, select council, notary public and school director, the latter from 1848 to 1854 and from 1860 to 1880. The services he rendered to the cause of education during those years can hardly be overestimated. Some of his former pupils are as follows: Thomas Dickson, president of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company; J. N. Wilson, M. D.; John S. Law, president of the Miners' Bank, Wilkes-Barre; David G. Smith, machinist and patentee; Edward Jones, coal operator; O. H. Jadwin, wholesale druggist, New York; S. E. Raynor, teller in the Miners' and Mechanics' Bank; Edward and Alexander Hodgdon; Henry L. Marvin, John S. Farnham, Charles and George McAlpine and Richard Antony.

In 1837 we find Amzi Wilson, J. W. Burnham and Bonaparte Baker acting as school directors. A fourth school was organized in 1838, having John Walsh for teacher. Mr. Walsh enjoyed the reputation of being an excellent teacher, being specially strong as a mathematician. In 1840 another school was added to the number. From this date to 1851 the teachers were as follows:

A. M. Jeffords, John R. Fordham, Phillips Wilson, Miss Adams, Miss E. Harvey, Miss M. Smith, Miss Eliza Grosvener, Jeremiah O'Mara, Miss Russel, Miss Dart, Miss Mary Vannan, Miss Harriet Jackson, P. C. Gritman, H. C. Ensign, Miss E. Hubbard, George Perkins, Martin Canavan, Miss Flynt, Miss Meachim, Miss Sarah M. Shafer, Miss Mary Farrer, Alonzo Richardson and John Kelly.

Mr. Kelly has taught from 1849 to the present, excepting a term of service, during the Rebellion, in the United States navy. During the period of ten years just mentioned the prominent school officers were Nathan Jackson, Patrick Moffitt, R. W. Graves, H. P. Ensign, John R. Fordham, S. S. Benedict, Anthony Miles, Daniel Scurry and William Brennan.

From 1850 to 1860 the number of schools increased to seven, the principal teachers of which were Bernard McTighe, Henry B. Jadwin, jr., P. J. White, Paulinus A. Lewis, C. C. Jadwin, John Joseph Purtell, Alfred Dart, jr., Martin J. Byrne and L. E. Judd. The first two were elected directors in 1858. Mr. McTighe served until 1874, and Mr. Jadwin until 1869. Another director worthy of notice was Honorable Lewis Pughe, now a prominent merchant of Scranton.

In 1860 a graded building was erected in the second ward, on Salem street. The schools of the building were divided into four departments: Primary, intermediate, grammar and high. The first principal was A. J. Wells. The grades and classifications made by him have been closely adhered to by his successors. Among the principals of the high school who have achieved success in teaching are W. H. Parsons, H. D. Cable, Charles L. Wheeler, D. G. Allen (superintendent in Wayne county) and Edwin Francis. In addition to the common branches, algebra, geometry, bookkeeping, philosophy, rhetoric and Latin have been taught in the "high school."

Down to 1869 all the other schools remained ungraded. Each room was about 30 feet long and 24 feet wide, with a height of 8 feet from floor to ceiling. Around the walls, supported on standards, projected pine boards covered with hieroglyphics of successive generations of whittlers. The pupils sat facing the wall. The main floor was covered with rows of long benches, many of which were without back-rests. From 80 to 120 pupils, in all stages of mental progress from the alphabet to geometry, were in attendance. The class for recitations stood in a line, closing up the passage which led to the door, and the seats vacated by one class were made to serve the class which preceded in recitation. In this way the teacher managed to accommodate a greater number of pupils than there were seats. A terrestrial globe, a set of outline maps and alphabetical cards were provided for each school before the close of this period. Text books were becoming uniform throughout the district. The teacher's institute had become instructive and entertaining, and a decided improvement in school classification was apparent.

In 1869 a one-story frame building was erected on Main street, in the fourth ward. It contained two rooms. This was enlarged in 1876 by an additional story in height, and now contains four rooms, three of which are well furnished. In 1870 a school-room was completed in the fourth ward, on Brooklyn street. The vestibule, though illy adapted to the purpose, has been used ever since as a school-room. In 1871 a primary school building was erected on Cemetery street, in the first ward, which in 1875 was made two stories high, containing four rooms. In 1872 a frame building, two stories high, containing four spacious rooms, was erected on Laurel hill, in the second ward. In 1874 two new school-houses, each two stories in height and having two large rooms were completed on Salem street, in the second ward, and another on Powderly road, in the fourth ward. In 1874 a private school was organized by a few gentlemen who were desirous of giving their sons an academic course. Twelve students attend. In September, 1876, Sisters of the Order of the Immaculate Heart founded a convent in the first ward, between Hendrick avenue and Salem street. There are three school rooms in the building, and four Sisters are teaching. Besides the common branches, drawing and music are taught. The average daily attendance of these schools is about 100 pupils. Two private schools of primary grade, with 40 pupils, are taught in the first ward.

In September, 1876, a graded course of study for the public schools was adopted. General history, astronomy and drawing were added to the curriculum of the high school.

The following classification shows the number of teachers in each department, and the number in attendance during the year, according to the school report of 1877. The high school had at the close of the year one male and one female teacher; the average daily attendance, was 39. In the grammar department the number of teachers was 3; average daily attendance, 138. Intermediate department—teachers, 5; average daily attendance, 277. Primary department—teachers, 10; average daily attendance, 637. Total average monthly enrollment of pupils, 1,305; total average daily attendance, 1,091. If to this we add the attendance at private schools, we shall have an average monthly enrolment of 1,482, and an average daily attendance of 1,243.

There have been many private schools. The first was taught by Miss Sophia Nobles, over the tailor-shop of Race & Bogardus, in the summer of 1833. She also taught in 1834.

John Walsh taught in the Catholic chapel in 1836, and D. Tripp, late from Oxford Academy, taught in 1837. Mrs. J. Hudson, from Long Island, taught a select school for young ladies in 1838. Miss Tuck opened a school for girls and John S. Ward one for boys in 1840. Besides these, schools have been taught by Andrew Leighter, Mrs. Hamilton, J. L. McKim, J. S. Miller and John L. Richardson. P. C. Gritman was the first principal of the Lackawanna Institute, which was kept several years. Mrs. L. A. Munger taught select school during 1870. There are now no private schools.

In 1879 there were twenty schools in the district, with an average attendance of 620 pupils. The schools were kept open nine months at an expense of $6,906.78.

In 1876 Carbondale city had twenty schools, with a total average attendance of 1,088. The schools were kept open nine months, at an expense of $13,083.17.

MAPLEWOOD CEMETERY—NOTABLE EPIDEMICS.

In 1831 the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company deeded a tract of land on the hill above its shops to J. W. Burnham, D. B. Blanchard, Lathrop Burgess, Bonaparte Baker, John Bowen 2nd, and R. E. Marvin, as trustees, for a Protestant cemetery. Subscriptions were raised to improve the ground. The lots were sold by auction April 27th, 1833. J. W. Burnham was the first superintendent. The first burial was that of William Evans, who died October 29th, 1832, aged 75 years. The grounds have been enlarged three times and are surrounded by a strong stone wall. The present trustees are S. S. Benedict, J. B. Van Bergen, A. O. Hanford, Henry Johnson, E. E. Thomas and R. W. Graves. Mr. Graves has been superintendent since 1862.

Carbondale has been visited with some severe epidemics. The spotted fever broke out in the city in the fall of 1863. By the beginning of 1864 it had increased to an epidemic, and continued its ravages until near the end of May. One hundred and one of its victims were buried in the Protestant cemetery, among whom was Rev. T. S. Ward, of the Presbyterian church. It is not known how many were buried in the Catholic cemetery, but probably fifty or sixty.

THE PRESS OF CARBONDALE.

The first newspaper published in Carbondale was the Northern Pennsylvanian, which was removed from Dundaff, Susquehanna county, in 1833. Amzi Wilson was editor and proprietor, and published the paper until December, 1837, when he sold to William Bolton, who removed the paper to Wilkes-Barre April 24th, 1840. It was a Democratic paper.

The Carbondale Journal, a Whig paper, was established in 1838 by James B. Mix. Charles Mead bought it in 1839, and sold to William S. Ward the following year. The paper was discontinued September 2nd, 1841.

The Carbondale Gazette, neutral in politics, was established May 5th, 1842, by Philander S. Joslin, who sold an interest to Francis B. Woodward July 6th, 1843. This partnership continued until November 8th, 1844, when Mr. Joslin sold to Woodward, who changed the title to the County Mirror, and advocated Whig doctrines. This paper was removed to Providence in January, 1846.

The Carbondale Democrat was established by P. S. Joslin and Silas S. Benedict, in 1845. The paper was enlarged and the title changed to Lackawanna Citizen and Carbondale Democrat in 1849, by S. S. Benedict, who had had entire control of the paper since April 1st, 1846. The title was changed again December 13th, 1850, to the Lackawanna Citizen. P. K. Barger became a partner with Mr. Benedict in the summer of 1852. Mr. Benedict retired December 1st, 1852, when Homer Grenell entered into a partnership with Mr. Barger under the name of P. K. Barger & Co. The publication of this paper was discontinued April 1st, 1854.

The Lackawanna Journal, a Whig paper, was established January 20th, 1849, by George M. Reynolds, who took Dewitt C. Kitchen into partnership December 27th, 1850. The title was changed to Carbondale Transcript and Lackawanna Journal, February 25th, 1851. Mr. Kitchen retired the same year. Mr. Reynolds sold to R. H. Willoughby, May 1st, 1857. The title was now changed to the Advance. Dr. Charles E. Burr and G. M. Reynolds purchased the paper October 3d, 1857. They published it until February, 1858, when Reynolds became sole proprietor. He sold to S. S. Benedict in May, 1859. Mr. Benedict changed the title to the Weekly Advance and still continues its publication.

About August 1st, 1854, J. T. Alleger and J. B. Adams began the publication of the Carbondale Democrat. This paper was discontinued January 1st, 1855.

The Democratic Standard and Know Nothing Expositor, by John J. Allen, issued its first number January 1st, 1855. The office was burned in the fire of that year, and the paper was never started again.

A. W. Cook began the publication of the Carbondale Leader in June, 1872. He sold to M. H. Barber in November, 1877, and he to D. N. Lathrop in October, 1878. Mr. Lathrop still publishes the paper.

The Critic was started by A. W. Cook, May 1st, 1879, and it is still being published, as an independent journal.

During the winter of 1842 and 1843 the publication of the papers was suspended for five weeks, as, owing to the great amount of snow, it was impossible to get paper on which to print.

FIRES AND FIRE COMPANIES.

The first organization intended as a protection against fire was "Rescue Hook and Ladder Company," formed in 1843. This company did good service at several small fires, and in 1847 was officered as follows: George Love, foreman; John Lewis, assistant foreman. Twenty members were on the roll.

The fire of September 28th, 1850, awakened the people to a sense of the importance of a fire organization, and four companies were organized, known as Neptune, No. 1; Eagle, No. 2; Rescue, No. 3, and Good Will, No. 4. Each company was provided with a small engine of little value, built at the Delaware and Hudson shops. December 3d, 1852, James Ruthven was elected chief engineer of the fire department. These companies continued to practice for some time, but not receiving proper support from the city authorities they disbanded. Neptune led the way by resigning on June 28th, 1854.

A fire broke out in W. W. Bronson's hotel September 16th, 1855, which destroyed the hotel and several other buildings. The property owners of the second ward, aroused to a sense of their insecurity, assessed themselves for the support of Eagle Engine Company, No. 2, and formed it into a hook and ladder and bucket company. All the engines were returned to the Delaware and Hudson company. The city authorities now took the matter in hand, and purchased an engine of the "Button's Piano" pattern, which arrived July 10th, 1855.

Columbia Fire Company, No. 5, was formed about this time, with ninety-six men on the roll. The officers were: David Pendergrast, foreman; Richard Howarth, first assistant foreman; Charles B. Campbell, second assistant foreman. This is the only fire company in the city, and it has done good work since its formation. It is only called upon to use its engine when the fire is beyond the reach of the hydrants. These hydrants, distributed through the greater part of the first, second and third wards, have sufficient head to throw water over any building that can be reached with hose. Columbia has about forty members now, and is officered as follows: John B. Collins, foreman; Joseph Jenkins, first assistant foreman; George Davis, second assistant foreman.

April 10th, 1859, a fire broke out in the office of Alfred Dart, which burned the Harrison House, together with several stores and offices on the west side of Main street, between Salem street and the parade ground. Another fire occurred September 15th, 1866, which destroyed buildings on the east side of Main street, from Dundaff street down, to the value of $50,000. March 29th, 1867, the entire business portion of the city below the city hall was burned, the flames destroying forty stores and shops, and leaving sixty families homeless. The entire loss was $200,000, with an insurance of $100,000.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

A charter was drawn by Hon. Lewis Jones, and by an act of the Assembly approved March 15th, 1851, Carbondale became a city, with four wards. The first election was held March 21st, 1851, and resulted in the election of the following city officers:

Mayor, James Archbald; select council—Joseph Benjamin, Peter Campbell, Thomas Gillespie and Michael Flynn; common council—Thomas Sweet, Daniel Scurry, William Ball, Patrick Moffitt, James Clarkson, W. W. Bronson, Edward Jones, Alexander Bryden, Richard Howarth, Terence Powderly, Patrick Connor and Daniel Thatcher; prosecuting attorney, George W. Perkins; clerk of the mayor's court, William Brennan; treasurer, Lewis Pughe; assessor, Philip Wilson; auditors—William H. Richmond, James Stott and Thomas Voyle; poor masters—John Campbell and John Lee; alderman fourth ward, Patrick Farrell.

The justices of the peace holding commissions in Carbondale township and living in the city were empowered to act as aldermen until the expiration of their commissions.

The oath of office was administered to the mayor, clerk of court and prosecuting attorney March 26th, 1851, at the M. E. church, by Hon. William Jessup, president judge of the judicial district. The select council organized by choosing Peter Campbell as president and Michael Flynn as clerk. The common council chose James Clarkson chairman and William Ball secretary. The first ordinance passed related to the granting of licenses. By the provisions of the charter the city had its own court, which was styled the recorder's court and presided over by the president judge of the judicial district sitting as recorder, assisted by the mayor and such of the aldermen as might be present. This court had concurrent jurisdiction with the county courts, except in oyer and terminer cases and in cases belonging to the orphan's court. Its jurisdiction extended at times over Fell, Carbondale, Blakely and Greenfield townships. The first session of the mayor's court was held in the M. E. church, May 13th, 1851, Judge Jessup presiding. No business was done at this term, except to provide for the drawing of juries.

A grand jury was impaneled for the term beginning September 8th, 1851, of which Judson W. Burnham was foreman. Courts were held in the M. E. church until 1852. A room at the Carbondale House, Jonathan Gore proprietor, was used as a jury room. A wooden court-house was erected at a cost of $3,000, which was burned February 14th, 1869, by a fire originating in the cell of Owen Coleman, committed for drunkenness. He was burned with the building. The present brick building was put up at once.

By the operation of the constitution of 1873 the mayor's court was abolished December 31st, 1875, since which time the city hall has been a useless structure. The effects of the change have been disastrous to the city.

The principal city officers have been as follows:

Recorders.—By virtue of their office of judge: William Jessup, May 12th to December 8th, 1851; J. N. Conyogham to December 15th, 1865; Henry M. Hoyt (acted as), December, 1867; E. L. Dana, to September 12th, 1870. (Elected for terms of one year): D. N. Latbrop, 1870; Alfred Dart, 1872; I. D. Richards, 1873, who died in office, and Alfred Dart was appointed to fill the vacancy, and elected in 1874.

District Attorneys.—George W. Perkins, 1851-59; P. C. Gritman, 1857-59, 1862-65, 1869-71; D. N. Latbrop, 1862-65; I. D. Richards, 1865-69; Alfred Dart, 1871-73; George H. Squier, 1873 to December 31st, 1875.

Clerks of the Mayor's Court.—William Brennan, 1851; Bernard McTigue, 1854-63; John E. Browne, 1863; George H. Squier, 1867; M. G. Neary, 1870 to December 31st, 1875.

Mayors.—James Archbald, 1851-55; Edward Jifkins, 1855; Gideon Frothingham, 1856; John M. Poor, 1857-61; Canfield Harris, 1861; Anthony Grady, 1862-65; William Brennan, 1865; John M. Poor, 1866; Thomas Voyle, 1867, 1868; J. B. Van Bergen, 1867-73; Thomas Voyle, 1873; William Morrison, 1874; John Nealon, 1875, 1876; Joseph Birkett, 1877; L. Marshall, 1878; William Brennan, 1879.

Aldermen.—First ward: Lewis Pughe, 1852, 1857; Charles Burr, 1859, 1864; J. N. Wilson, 1869; John Stuart, 1869, 1875.

Third Ward: Bartholomew Morrison, 1854; John Kelley, 1859; Amzi Wilson, 1862; Dennis Graham, 1867; Jules F. Kinback, 1872, 1877.

Fourth Ward: Patrick Farrell, 1851; Amzi Wilson, 1867; Patrick Boylan, 1875.

THE GREAT FLOOD.

The great flood, which occurred on the night of July 19th, 1850, was caused by the breaking of a dam on Rackett brook, a mile above the village. The water swept everything before it, and damaged property to the extent of $100,000. John Aitkin, jr., John Hewitson, James Dickson, Lewis Pughe, The Union Foundry and the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company were the principal sufferers. Two sons of William Davis were drowned. The flooding of the mines caused a serious delay in mining, as the water was not pumped out sufficiently to enable work to be resumed before November 15th, 1850.

THE WATER AND GAS SUPPLY.

The Crystal Lake Water Company was formed in 1858, and began to furnish water in July, 1859. The reservoir is about a mile from the center of the town, on Rackett brook. The main pipes run down Main and Church

Thomas R. Lathrope

THOMAS R. LATHROPE.

There are many persons who occupy prominent positions in society, who amass wealth and secure an honorable name among their fellows, and yet whose lives are unmarked by any unusual features. They grow up in a community, spend their lives in the same locality, and through a modest, retiring disposition fail to attract the notice of those who regard the sensational in man's career as the highest development of true genius. This is especially true of the subject of the following sketch, and what may be said of him may be said of the great majority of the solid men of the country. They constitute the mass of enterprising business men, endowed with natural abilities of a high order, men of stability of character, intelligent, free-hearted, generous, and worthy of all praise.

Thomas R. Lathrope was born in Carbondale, September 9th, 1842. His father, Hon. D. N. Lathrope, and his grandfather, Salmon Lathrope, were among the most prominent citizens of the place, the latter having been the first to bring his family to the infant town, as far back as March, 1827, and remaining a resident until his death, in November, 1868, at the ripe age of eighty-eight years. The earlier years of the subject of this sketch were not marked by any peculiar circumstances; indeed, his whole life has been one which befitted the natural quiet and modesty of his disposition. In youth he developed a marked taste for rural life, and for some years his time in the summer was devoted to work on his father's farm in Scott township, where his love for the usual farm work had full play. Though not a collegian, his education was not neglected. He attended the home district and select schools; spent some time in school at Scranton, and went through a full course at the institute of Rev. Alonzo Flack, A. M., at Claverack, N. Y. Not having a taste for either of the professions, he declined to pursue a college course. He had also the advantage of a home education, which in a large degree supplemented that of the schools, and which amply fitted him for the business he intended to engage in, and for occupying a fair position among his fellow men. His ideas of business were eminently practical, and he was early and easily taught that an active, laborious life was honorable, and hence he did not shrink from many tasks which young men are apt to think degrading. For a time he supplied newspapers and periodicals to the town people, and in various ways made himself self-supporting. In 1861 his father was appointed postmaster at Carbondale, and he became a post-office clerk, which occupation he continued until the resignation of his father in 1864, about which time he succeeded to the insurance agency business of the late John Gore, which he has continued in a much enlarged sphere up to the present day.

During the war of the Rebellion his patriotism was marked by his enlistment in a company of "emergency men," called out by the governor of Pennsylvania in 1863 to defend the State from the invasion of its territory by the rebel horde under General Lee, and he spent several weeks at the front in discharge of military duty.

Previous to this time, when the second call of troops was made to serve nine months, and when he was about twenty years of age, he visited Harrisburg in company with several of the youths of his own age and younger, determined to enlist in the service, but was rejected because he did not have the approval of his parents in writing. The little company had confidently expected to be accepted and the refusal was a great disappointment to them. They had neglected to provide themselves with funds to return home and were consequently put to great straits to accomplish this feat. Our hero was the only one who had any means—about $10—and it was determined to foot it and take their chances along the tow-path of the Pennsylvania canal. The $10 was laid aside for provisions on the way, and the little party started on their journey. They occasionally caught a ride on the empty coal boats, and thus, weary and foot-sore, they arrived in due time at Pittston, the northern terminus of the canal, whence by "Walker's line" and the coal cars on the Delaware and Hudson railroad, they made their way home.

In the conduct of his business he has been systematic and prudent, though the accumulation of wealth has not in any degree stunted the natural generosity of his disposition, and there are many of his fellow townsmen of the poorer class who can testify to this fact.

At an early age and for several years he was a director of the First National Bank of Carbondale, and in 1872, in company with a few other capitalists, he aided in establishing the Miners' and Mechanics' Savings Bank, of which he is now a director and was the first cashier.

Under the teachings of a devotedly pious mother his religious impressions found rapid development, and in early life he united with the Presbyterian church, of which he is a member. In politics, from education and conviction, he has acted with the Republican party, with the exception of the campaign of 1872, when with a large number of other Republicans he supported Horace Greeley. His great admiration for the veteran editor, of whose journal he had been a constant reader for many years, as well as his conviction that the Republican party was being controlled by unscrupulous leaders, led him to take this course; but he at no time abandoned the great principles of the party, and with this exception he has uniformly supported its regularly nominated candidates. Although much interested in political questions he has never been a seeker of office. In 1872 he was nominated by acclamation in a citizens' caucus for school director, but declined to run. In 1876 at the city election he was prevailed upon to become a candidate for the office of city auditor, and though his election was contested by an estimable citizen he was elected by a large majority; and when, in 1878, at the formation of Lackawanna county, he was nominated for recorder of deeds, it was entirely the work of his friends and without solicitation on his part. At this election his popularity was shown by his receiving a vote considerably in excess of some others on the same ticket, particularly in his own town and vicinity. The opposition was divided in its support of candidates, and his plurality over the highest competitor was over 1,500 votes. But though thus triumphantly elected he failed to secure his office, owing to a decision of the supreme court, which rendered the election null and void. In the following year he was renominated for the same office, and his popularity was thoroughly tested; for, although the opposition were now united on his competitor, Mr. John Kelley, an estimable citizen of the same town, his majority was nearly 400.

GEORGE B. KULP.

For the graduate and good that are in this republic of ours not so much is due those who are esteemed its "great men," and whose doing and sayings enter into history as the outcome of eminence, as to the thousands of constant workers in the humbler official stations. These latter, who have the custody of our schools, the control and direction of our municipalities, and the local administration of the laws of the State and nation, bring to the performance of their severally allotted tasks a degree of patience and industry, and a cultivated thought and experience, without which the wisest leadership in national affairs, the most beneficent legislation, were useless to promote the happiness and prosperity of our people. Their work is done without pecuniary compensation more frequently than otherwise, and generally with so little fuss or publicity, that many of them, after long lives of usefulness, pass away "unknown, unhonored and unsung," even in the immediate vicinities of where their labors were so modestly performed, and where their results abide, the sole monument to their self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of liberty and progress.

In the army thus briefly sketched, George Brubaker Kulp, lawyer and editor, of Wilkes-Barre, is a faithful veteran soldier. He was born at Reamstown, Lancaster county, Pa., February 11th, 1839, and descends, on the father's side, from the Kulps and Sellers, two of the oldest families in the southeastern section of the State. The Kulps, as the name indicates, are of German extraction, the founders of the American branch of the family having emigrated to Pennsylvania as early as 1720. George's father, Eli Sellers Kulp, was a native of Kulpsville, Montgomery county (the Sellers, to which family his mother belonged, were among the earliest settlers of Bucks county, Pa.), and removing to St. Georges, Delaware, became one of the leading educators of that State. George had a common school education, but suffering the loss of his father at an early age, was compelled to seek work on the canals and railroads to earn a livelihood. While thus employed, most of his spare time was devoted to study, and with such good effect that at the age of seventeen he was found fitted and entrusted with the charge of a village school. One year later, while yet pursuing the avocation of a teacher, he began the reading of the law. In the year 1853 he removed to Luzerne county, to whose bar he was admitted August 20th, 1860, having studied the law in the office of Lyman Hakes, Esq. In October of that year, before he had arrived at the age of twenty-two, he was elected register of wills of the county for three years. In 1863 he was re-elected for another three years by over three thousand majority. The limited education which his exertions had procured for him having netted him so handsomely thus early in life, it was small wonder that Mr. Kulp's thoughts were turned to the common schools as one of the most benign of our country's institutions, and as calling loudly for the aid and encouragement of all good citizens. In 1864 there were but three school-houses, all one-story buildings, in the then borough, now city, of Wilkes-Barre, and upon these there were but one hundred and eighty-seven scholars in attendance. In 1865 Mr. Kulp was elected a school director, as were also Hon. D. L. Rhone, now judge of the Orphans' Court of the county, and Rev. George D. Miles, of the Episcopal church. During that year, principally through the efforts of these three, the present large Washington school building was erected. In 1866 Governor Henry M. Hoyt and Attorney-General Henry W. Palmer became members of the board. This twain seconding the progressive policy of the aforementioned trio, the handsome Franklin school building was soon in course of erection, and before the close of the year it was completed and ready for occupancy. The number of scholars had now increased to six hundred and seventy-six, and at the conclusion of Mr. Kulp's directorship this number had augmented to seventeen hundred and sixteen. The Conyngham school was also built during Mr. Kulp's membership in the board, which covered a period of twelve years' continuous service, ending in 1878. During most of this time he was either president or secretary of the board, and upon his retirement his fellow directors unanimously passed the following resolution:

"Whereas, Our fellow member George B. Kulp, the presiding officer of this board, in consequence of his recent election to the important and honorable position of councilman of the city of Wilkes-Barre, has at this meeting of the school board resigned as a member thereof; therefore, be it—

"Resolved, By the school board of the city of Wilkes-Barre, that we, his colleagues, desire thus publicly to testify our regret at his retirement from this body, and our admiration of the industry, integrity and ability with which he has discharged, for the past twelve consecutive years, the duties of a member of the school board of this city."

On January 29th, 1867, Mr. Kulp was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury assistant assessor of internal revenue for the Twelfth Congressional district. On June 11th of the same year he was appointed specially by the commissioner of internal revenue to make assessments for all taxes imposed on legacies and distributive shares of personal property and succession to real estate in Luzerne county. These two offices he held until June, 1869. He was attorney for the county, with but one year's intermission, from November 13th, 1874, to January, 1879. In 1878 he was elected a member of the city council and was re-elected in 1879. He is still a member of that body and one of the most attentive and active in it. In January, 1872, he established the Luzerne Legal Register, of which publication he is still the editor and proprietor. In February, 1877, in connection with Joseph K. Bogert, he established the Leader, a weekly Democratic newspaper, which, in January, 1879, absorbed the Luzerne Union, then the only other Democratic paper (English) in the county, and became the Union-Leader. In October, of the latter year, a daily edition of the Union-Leader was established by the firm, from which Mr. Kulp retired in April, 1880, his interest having been purchased by Mr. Bogert.

In addition to the editorial labors thus recorded, Mr. Kulp has compiled and published two legal works of great local value, being the Rules of the Courts, of which a second edition has been emitted, and an index to and digest of the corporations and local laws of Luzerne county. Mr. Kulp is a man of very pronounced political convictions, and has frequently been a delegate to Democratic city, county and State conventions. That he is a lawyer of no mean merit, the positions he has held, and the legal publications he has issued, amply attest. That he is one of his adopted city's most useful and enterprising citizens, has its proof in the record of his services in the school board and in the city council, much of the legislation of which latter body has been the creation of his genius and perseverance; though it is, perhaps, in obstructing and preventing the passage of mischievous ordinances, to the preparation and possibilities of which insufficient or perblind thought had been paid, that his services have been most valuable to the city. In this way he has saved the citizens many thousands of dollars in taxes, and the corporation many possibly costly law suits. In the care of the interests of the poor he has been especially zealous; and while his blunt and straightforward manners, his contempt for that nice diplomacy which characterizes the conduct of many public men, sometimes awakens against him considerable antagonism, time and reflection are always certain to set him right in the eyes of the people, as his frequent re-election to the school board and the council in a ward politically opposed to him by a large majority conclusively proves. His success is the result of earnest purpose; determination which never flags; exactness and promptness in the transaction of business; a deep sympathy with others' wants; a sacred regard for his word, and a faithful discharge of all obligations, with a settled purpose of right which knows no such word as fail. On October 4th, 1864, Mr. Kulp married Mary E. Stewart, daughter of John Stewart, Esq., of Scranton. Mr. Stewart is the great-grandson of Robert Stewart, first Marquis of Londonderry (father of Lord Castlereagh). On the mother's side, Mrs. Kulp is the great-granddaughter of Sergeant Thomas Williams, a conspicuous character in the early and exciting history of the Wyoming valley. Mr. and Mrs. Kulp have a family of three children—two sons and one daughter.

streets. Hydrants are established where the pipes run, and, having a fall of 250 feet from the reservoir, water can be thrown over any building within reach of hose. L. Egerton is secretary and treasurer, and has general charge of the affairs of the company.

The Carbondale Gas Company was chartered in 1859. R. Manville was president, and L. Egerton secretary and treasurer. The officers remain the same. The works are on Gas House lane, below Eighth street and west of the river. John Moon has charge of them. Gas is made entirely from coal. Pipes are laid through Main and Church streets.

NEALON'S OPERA HOUSE.

John Nealon erected a frame store on the corner of Main and Eighth streets in 1863, with a hall in the second story. This was burned in March, 1867. In 1868 he built the present fine brick building. The lower floor is occupied by two stores. The hall is 95 by 46 feet, with a height of 28, taking up the second and third stories of the building. There are seats for 800 people.

COAL OPERATIONS.

DELAWARE AND HUDSON CANAL COMPANY.

We have already given the history of this company's lines of transportation, and need only speak here of its operations at Carbondale.

The first car load of coal was shipped on October 9th, 1829. The first coal was mined at the foot of Damon's plane from the bed of the river, by diverting the river from its channel and running a level into the hill. The coal was run out on a wheelbarrow. This was called Inghram's level. In 1829 a tunnel was driven on the opposite side of the river at old No. 1 drift. This drift was worked till 1857. No. 2 drift, west of No. 1, was opened in 1830. January 12th, 1846, the roof of this mine fell in over a space of half a mile long and forty rods wide. About sixty men were shut in, of whom all but fourteen succeeded in effecting their escape. The bodies of five were never recovered. No. 3, on the "High road" drift, was opened about the same time. This was a slope and was pumped by water power up to 1838.

The "New mine," at the foot of Davis's back plane, was opened in 1835 and worked until 1856. No. 1 shaft, which was the first shaft put down here, was sunk in 1843. This was used for pumping water. The first rock slope in the Lackawanna valley was started at high water mark on the bank of the river, and descended to the coil at a pitch of nine and one-half degrees. Six hundred tons per day are now hauled up this slope, besides pumping the water from the mine by water power. The top vein is worked out here and the bottom is being worked. The two are separated by eighteen inches of bony coal.

Fall Brook levels 1, 2 and 3 were opened in 1846 and abandoned about 1857. The coal from these levels is worked from the "White Bridge" tunnel and hoisted at No. 1 plane. The "White Bridge" was begun in 1865.

No. 2 shaft, near the line of Fell township, on Coal creek, was started in 1853 and abandoned in 1861. No. 3 or "Lookout" shaft was started at the same time in the third ward of the city. The engine house of this shaft burned May 20th, 1874, but was rebuilt the same year. Here are two Cornish bull pumps, lifting 2,700 gallons per minute a height of 74 feet. Steam was first used at shafts 2 and 3.

The Powderly tunnel, which was started in 1855, has been full of water more than five years, having filled during a miners' strike. The Powderly mine, in the south district of Carbondale township, was begun in 1845. It has three drifts, but never did much. Coal Brook rock tunnel, 800 feet long, was started at the mouth of No. 2 shaft, and is now working. Lackawanna tunnel was started in 1864 near Coal Brook breaker, and driven north to the bottom vein. Forrest tunnel, fifty feet higher, driven to the top vein, was begun in 1867 and abandoned in 1871. Valley tunnel, east of the others and working the bottom vein, was driven in 1868, and is now working. "Breaker" slope was driven in 1869, to the bottom vein, and has been idle since 1876. Mill Ridge slope, to the top vein, driven the same year, is now being worked, as is also the "Midland," driven in 1873. The company has no breaker in Carbondale, and separates the coal into lump, steamer and "breaker" coal. The last is taken to a breaker at Rackett brook, where it is prepared. This breaker was built in 1856, and rebuilt in 1868.

Coal Brook breaker, just above the depots of the railroads in the city, was erected in 1867, and is the largest in the United States. It has a capacity of 1,400 tons per day. It has no rolls, and the coal is separated by screens, the finer coal going to the Rackett Brook breaker.

About 1,200 men and boys are employed by the company at its mines here. A. H. Vandling is superintendent of coal; A. G. Nicol, general mine boss; William Bowers, outside foreman; John Campbell, mine boss at No. 1; John Hughes, mine boss at No. 3; William McMyne, mine boss at Coal Brook. About 1,600 tons per day are mined, while the mines have a capacity of 2,500 tons.

BELMONT MINE.

This mine, near Belmont avenue, was opened in 1862 by Joseph Birkett, the owner, who operated it ten years and then leased to Thomas Brennan, Holborn & Kelley. In 1879 Mr. Birkett sold to Watt & Co., and they leased to Watkins & Williams, who now operate the mine. This mine produces a superior quality of coal, which is used mostly for home consumption, though some is shipped, being hauled to the railroad by wagon. There is one engine, of 50 horse power. The mine is worked to its full capacity, 50 tons per day.

E. E. HENDRICK'S MINE.

E. E. Hendrick has opened a mine on his land on the line of the return or light track of the gravity road, in the city of Carbondale.

RELIGIOUS BODIES.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

During the autumn of 1828 a few Methodists, among whom were Jesse Gardner, James Birdsall, Wanton Hill, Stephen Marsh, Jesse Clark, Addison Clark, H. B. Jadwin and John Lee, began to hold meetings at the house of the latter, which stood where Nealon's building now stands. Father Griffin, a local preacher from Canaan, was the pioneer preacher.

In the autumn of 1830 Rev. Alanson Reed was appointed to this charge, and he organized the Carbondale M. E. Church. Some of the first members were John Lee and wife, Jesse Gardner and wife, James Birdsall and wife, Wanton Hill and wife, Stephen Marsh and wife, Jesse Clark and Addison Clark.

The first church building was erected in 1832. John McKune was the builder, and it stood in front of the present site.

October 16th, 1839, the first trustees were elected, viz.: Jesse Gardner, for one year; James Birdsall and Wanton Hill, two years; Silas Burrows and Judson Clark, three years.

The present church building was dedicated in May, 1850, by Rev. Nathan Bangs, D. D. It is a heavy framed building, 45 by 75 feet. The audience room will seat 450. The basement is above ground, and contains large Sunday-school and class rooms. It stands on Church street, between the Presbyterian and Baptist churches, surrounded with a beautiful lawn and shaded with large and handsome maples. The first parsonage was built in 1843, and stood near where the new one stands. It was burned in 1878, and the same year the present large, comfortable and convenient parsonage was erected, at a cost of about $2,000.

The following are the names of the different pastors and the time of their appointment:

Alanson Reed, 1831; — Cushman, 1833; Hiram Shepherd, 1834; A. J. Crandall, 1836; F. H. Stanton, 1838; Asa Bronson, 1840; William Reddy, 1841; J. B. Benham, 1843; H. E. Luther, 1845; Richard Cook, 1846; B. W. Gorham, 1848; H. R. Clark, 1851; William Wyatt, 1852; Henry Brown-scombe, 1854; T. D. Walker, 1855; Abel Barker, 1856; S. H. Blakslee, 1858; D. A. Shepherd, 1859; J. M. Snyder, 1861; G. M. Peek, 1862; Ira T. Walker, 1864; J. O. Woodruff, 1867; Y. C. Smith, D. D., 1870; J. L. Wells, 3 months, 1872; Austin Griffin, 1872; D. D. Lindsley, 1875; J. C. Shelland, 1876; Samuel Moore, 1878.

The official directory of the church in May, 1879, was as follows: Rev. Samuel Moore, pastor, salary 1,000; Rev. H. P. Hathaway, local preacher; Pierce Butler and John B. Chisholm, exhorters; Joseph M. Alexander, superintendent of Sunday-school; John Ferrell, William K. Allen, Pierce Butler, William Blake, W. E. Kirby and Rev. S. Moore, class leaders; Pierce Butler, district steward; C. Churchill, recording steward; A. L. Hunt G. W. Reynolds, D. C. Benscoter, William K. Allen, George M. Rowley, Thomas Evans and Alfred Pascoe, stewards; Henry Johnson, president; Alfred Pascoe, secretary; Daniel Taylor, Stephen S. Clark, G. W. Reynolds, Daniel Scurry, Joseph Isgar, Henry B. Jadwin, and John Watt, trustees. Membership 250. The Sunday-school was organized before 1840. Among the superintendents were Daniel Taylor, Abram Snyder, Lewis Pughe, Rev. Ira T. Walker, N. P. Cramer, Pierce Butler, Henry B. Jadwin and Joseph M. Alexander. There were in May, 1879, twenty-nine officers and teachers, and 275 scholars.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

June 27th, 1829, Rev. Joel Campbell, from the Presbytery of Hudson, N. Y., reached here and proceeded to organize the Presbyterian Church of Carbondale. Rev. Lyman Richardson, of Hartford, of the Presbytery of Susquehanna, assisted. The following named persons presented their letters from other churches and were admitted as members of this new church: Sylvanus Jessup, Margaret Jessup, his wife; Eliza Townsend, Dr. Thomas Sweet, Samuel Hodgdon, Ann Hodgdon, his wife; Gilbert M. Lee, Chapman Halsey. Sylvanus Jessup and Samuel Hodgdon were made ruling elders.

On the following day, Sunday, June 28th, the session was organized and held its first meeting. It consisted of Rev. Joel Campbell, as moderator, and Elders S. Jessup and S. Hodgdon. Mrs. Charlotte Sweet and Mrs. Sophia Marvine met with the session and were received to membership. September 6th, 1829, at another meeting of the session, the following persons were received on profession: Mr. Amariah Hall, Roswell E. Marvine, Richard C. Overton, Mrs. Margaret Hudson, Miss Sarah Jessup, Miss Susan E. Jessup, Mr. Samuel S. Jessup, Miss Harriet Townsend, Miss Phœbe Harris, Mrs. Betsy Hall, Miss Mary Jessup; also by letter, Mrs. Jane Overton and Braton Richardson.

Meetings were held in the school-house, which stood near the site of the present church, and had been built of large size, that it might be used for all public purposes. The first minister was Rev. John Noble, as stated supply. He was succeeded by the following ministers: T. L. Conklin, 1833; M. Fuller, 1835; John R. Mosier, 1835, as stated supply; R. E. Taylor, 1840; Edward Allen, 1842; E. D. Willis, 1847; T. S. Ward, 1851; Oliver Crane, 1864; E. D. Bryan, the present pastor, 1870.

The deacons have been: Peter J. Dubois, 1851; Jeremiah P. Foster, 1851; Samuel E. Raynor, 1854; Merritt Wilson, 1856. The elders have been: Sylvanus Jessup and Samuel Hodgdon, 1829; Gilbert M. Lee, 1830; James Warner, 1831; Roswell E. Marvine and Lewis C. Ensign, 1832; William Root and Henry Van Bergen, 1834; Charles T. Pierson and E. A. Webb, 1840; George Foster, Benjamin Sherwood and William Wurts, 1849; Charles A. Robinson, 1851; Dilton Yarrington, 1854; Rensselaer Ottman and Samuel E. Raynor, 1865; James Douglas, James Dickson and Charles E. Lathrop, 1869. On the site of the school-house a substantial wooden church building was erected in 1834, by Henry Johnson, builder. The church was incorporated February 17th, 1836, under the name of the First Presbyterian Church of Carbondale. A bell was procured during this year. In 1840 and 1841 an addition was put on the church, but in June, 1860, the old church had to be removed to make way for a new building. The corner stone of the present brick structure was laid by Rev. T. S. Ward, the pastor, September 7th, 1863.

The church was dedicated August 31st, 1863, the audience room being completed. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Sylvester Cook, of Wantage, N. J., followed by a sermon in the evening by Rev. Dr. Hickok, of Scranton. Soon after this work was resumed on the lecture and Sabbath school-room, which was far too small. The rear wall was taken down and the foundation extended to nearly double its first dimensions. March 17th, 1866, this part was completed and ready to occupy. The first meeting was held in it March 21st. On the following Sabbath, March 25th, the first session of the Sabbath-school was held in the new room, when the different departments of the school were organized.

TRINITY (EPISCOPAL) CHURCH.

A congregation of Episcopalians was first organized in Carbondale during the summer of 1832, by the Rev. James H. Tyng, a missionary. About this time a vestry was formed, consisting of Messrs. John H. McAlpine, David P. Mapes, Thomas Meredith, David B. Blanchard, William Cocks, Stephen Rogers, Samuel Albro and Daniel N. Bacon. The vestry procured a charter February 26th, 1833. The Rev. Samuel Marks was in charge of the parish from 1834 until August, 1836.

Early in 1828 he united in matrimony Asa Packer (then a poor working man) and a Miss Blakesly. Fifty years later he came from Ohio, where he had long been living, to attend the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Packer, at Mauch Chunk, and in the following year he came once more, to officiate at the funeral of his early friend.

On the 9th of May, 1839, Rev. John Linn McKim became the rector, and on the 23d of July following the first Episcopal visitation was made, by Bishop Onderdonk. At that time the following persons were confirmed: Joseph Benjamin, Mrs. Francis Farnham, Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. A. M. Cunningham, Miss Margaret Miller, Miss Jane Miller, Miss Elizabeth Meredith, Miss Mary L. Seely and Miss Catharine Jane Faulkner.

The first service was held in the present church building July 17th, 1842. On the 14th of the following December the church was consecrated.

Mr. McKim concluded his ministry here in August, 1843, and was immediately followed by the Rev. Samuel P. Nash. In May, 1845, the parish was for the first time represented at the annual convention of the church, held in Philadelphia. Rev. John Reynolds was rector from November, 1845, to January 24th, 1849, when Rev. Samuel Randall took temporary charge. From the following July Rev. Joseph A. Stone was rector until 1853. In February, 1850, the first session of the northeastern convocation was held in Trinity church. The Rev. Mr. Beatty took charge of the parish in October, 1853, and Rev. Thomas Drumm in March, 1857. August 21st, 1857, a bell weighing 609 pounds and costing $562 was hung in the tower of Trinity church, and an organ costing $260 was placed in the gallery instead of the old worn out organ formerly used. Late in 1859 an addition of fifteen feet was made to the length of the church (divided into choir apartment, chancel and vestry room), and the whole building was raised six feet.

Mr. Drumm was succeeded in the fall of 1860 by Rev. Benjamin Abbott, who served about four years, including the prevalence of the "black fever;" when, besides administering spiritual consolation to the sick and dying, he officiated at 81 funerals.

During the next decade Revs. J. M. Harding, Edward De Zing, M. L. Kern and R. B. Peet were the ministers, the latter four years. Rev. T. A. Stevenson became rector of the parish in the fall of 1875, and was followed two years later by the Rev. J. A. D. Hughes.

The present rector, Rev. Charles E. Betticher, entered upon his duties December 10th, 1878. The parish is in a prosperous condition. It is entirely free from debt and nearly every pew is rented. There is a flourishing Sunday-school, under T. Griffin Smith; an interesting adult Bible class, taught by Mrs. R. Manville, and a very successful infant school, numbering about 130 scholars, taught by Miss Mary Burr. The Sunday-school numbers about 250 scholars and teachers.

A great deal of attention has been paid to church music. There is a volunteer choir, composed of forty boys and girls and young men. Miss Annie Kenworthy is the organist. The vestry consists of Dr. Charles Burr, senior warden; E. C. Harnden, junior warden; R. Manville, Thomas Orchard, William Bowers, A. O. Hanford, A. B. Durfee and T. Griffin Smith, treasurer.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH (WELSH).

In the summer of 1830 twenty Welsh families came to Carbondale to work in the new coal mines. Among them were four regular Baptists, John and James Brown and their wives. John was a deacon in the church whence he came, while James was a minister of the Baptist faith. Prayer and preaching meetings were soon commenced at the house of Deacon Bowen, on the site of the store of Patrick Moffitt, jr. For a time the congregation consisted of only a few Welsh families. These subsequently united with the Greenfield church, but in the spring of 1833 took letters of dismission and organized the "First Baptist Church of Carbondale," with 43 constituent members, and subsequently built a house of worship, now standing on South Church street. The present value of the church property is $5,000. The membership is 120. William Davies is superintendent of the Sunday-school.

WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODIST CHURCH.

This church was organized as early as 1832 or 1833. The original leaders in Carbondale were Evan Price, John Evans, Daniel Moses and Daniel Scurry. For some time before building the church, meetings were held every Sabbath, alternately at the houses of the members. The first minister was Rev. John Davis, and the first regular preacher was Rev. John Griffiths. This organization has never been able to sustain a minister, but has had preaching nearly every Sabbath by ministers from other places. The present number of communicants is 35. The church property is valued at $3,000.

A Sunday-school has been held in the church nearly every Sunday. The present number of scholars is 40. Reese Williams is the superintendent.

WELSH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This organization was effected about 1835, by a few Welsh families. They have a commodious church edifice on South Church street, valued at about $4,000. Rev. L. Williams is the pastor.

BEREAN BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Berean (English) Baptist Church was organized March 1st, 1848. The constituent members were Rev. W. E. Bopen, John B. Lewis, George R. Haskins, Mary Bowen, Sarah Glover, Louisa L. Berry and Mary J. Cramer. March 13th Rev. Mr. Bowen was called to the pastorate, which he held about six months. On the 29th Mr. Enoch Jones was elected deacon. Seventeen members were added during Mr. Bowen's ministry. From February, 1849, Rev. A. Curtis was pastor till January, 1851. In August, 1849, Homer Grennell was chosen deacon. A meeting house was bought of the Methodist society in 1850, moved to the site of the present church on Church street, and after repairing and remodeling was opened for worship. Rev. Charles Griffin was ordained pastor May 22nd, 1851, and remained through the year. March 20th Francis Perkins and A. O. Hanford were elected deacons. Rev. F. Glanville was pastor from October, 1852, to March, 1853. The church grew in strength and numbers under each of these pastors. Rev. E. L. Bailey commenced a ten years' pastorate January 12th, 1854, having also preached since the preceding May. On the 29th of November, 1850, the present church was dedicated. It is constructed of wood, in the Doric style of architecture, and cost between $6,000 and $7,000. One hundred and thirteen members were added to the church during Mr. Bailey's ministry. Rev. T. B. Tombes, from Philadelphia, was pastor from July 26th, 1866, to November 2nd, 1868. February 1st, 1869, Rev. E. L. Bailey accepted a call to return to the pastorate. March 15th the ladies of the church bought a house on Hendrick avenue for a parsonage. On the morning of Sunday, May 5th, 1869, Mr. Bailey, while conducting morning services, became sick, with severe pain, and was carried from the pulpit to his house. He died on the Saturday following, in the 46th year of his age. He was a faithful minister, and very highly esteemed.

Rev. J. J. Owen became pastor October 7th, 1869. June 12th, 1871, E. W. Peck was elected a deacon. January 12th, 1873, Mr. Owen, while preaching, became paralyzed, and was carried home. He died in the evening of that day; he also was a minister of sterling worth and in the prime of life, being about fifty-five years of age.

Rev. J. E. Zants was pastor from March 27th, 1873, to May, 1874; Rev. H. B. Grow from November 2nd, 1874, to March 6th, 1876. The present pastor, Rev. C.

Wilson Smith, commenced his ministry here August 7th, 1876. The membership of the church is now 189.

The first Sunday-school record is in 1855. The school was then in a flourishing condition, with about 100 scholars. It has now 28 officers and teachers and 216 scholars.

ASSOCIATIONS AND LODGES.

TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS.

There has been some organization of the temperance people of Carbondale since 1833. The Carbondale Temperance Society was directed to meet at the school-house January 24th, 1833, by R. Marvine, secretary. Notices of the meeting of this and kindred societies are found in the papers continuously from that date until within a few years.

Sons of Temperance.—The first secret temperance society was Beacon Light Division of the Sons of Temperance, organized in 1843 and continued till 1846. It was reorganized in December, 1865, and disbanded again in August, 1867. Beacon Light Lodge of Good Templars was organized in May, 1868, and continued in existence up to 1874.

A Band of Hope was organized by S. E. Raynor and others March 23d, 1861, which now numbers over three hundred and fifty members and meets every second Saturday afternoon in Raynor's Hall. It has had the names of over one thousand children on its roll.

Beacon Light Lodge, No. 557, I. O. of G. T. was organized on the ruins of the old lodge in April, 1877. The first officers were: Willis Barger, W. C.; Hattie Secor, V. T.; M. D. Wingate, C. S.; Mariette Jones, F. S.; Robert Van Bergen, treasurer; lodge deputy, William Nicol.

The present officers are: James M. Nicol, W. C.; Hattie Secor, V. T.; Thomas Levison, R. C.; William F. Blair, W.; William Smail, treasurer; A. Wylie, L. D.; William Nicol, P. W. C. T. The lodge has a membership of about 100.

CARBONDALE LYCEUM.

The Carbondale Lyceum met during the winter of 1832 and 1833. April 25th, 1836, a committee of five was appointed to draft a constitution. A lyceum was then permanently established, and met weekly at the school-house. This has continued, under different names, to the present time.

ODD FELLOWS.

Cambrian Lodge.—The first lodge of any kind organized in Carbondale was Cambrian Lodge, No. 58, I. O. O. F., which was instituted April 20th, 1838, with David Thomas, Noah Davis, Thomas Phillips, Evan Evans and Ebenezer Williams as charter members. The lodge was reduced to 12 members in 1857. Since then there has been a steady increase of membership, and there were in November, 1879, 163 names on the roll. During the time when the lodge was so reduced, the members paid double dues to keep it running. A hall was erected at the corner of Church and Seventh streets, by the members taking stock. This was dedicated July 4th, 1847. This lodge has bought up all the stock and now owns the hall.

The present officers are: Thomas Jenkins, N. G.; Lewis Rehkop, V. G.; John R. Price, secretary; Alexander Wylie, assistant secretary; Henry Watts, treasurer; trustees, George H. McMinn, L. A. Diets and Alvia Dolph; Robert Holland, O. G.; William Nicol, I. G.; L. N. Bailey, conductor; William B. Lane, R. S. S.; Joseph Jenkins, L. S. S.; John Moon, warden; George Simrel, R. S. V. G.; and Harry Tuttle, L. S. V. G.

Olive Leaf Lodge, No. 156, was instituted May 5th, 1846. The first officers and charter members were: J. B. Smith, N. G.; George F. Wilbur, V. G.; George H. Wentz, secretary; H. A. Chambers, assistant secretary; H. C. Nash, F. S.; William S. Morgan, treasurer; John W. Davis, H. E. Luther, Hiram Wentz, David Hall and A. R. Fuller.

The lodge is in a prosperous condition, although it has seen its dark days, having been reduced to little more than a quorum at one time. The membership is now 71. The officers in November, 1879, were: Henry S. Kegler, N. G.; George H. Knight, V. G.; Henry J. Baer, secretary; Aaron Hedding, assistant secretary; Thomas Evans, treasurer.

Lackawanna Encampment, No. 16.—This encampment was the first in this section of Pennsylvania, being instituted February 24th, 1845. The charter members were William J. Morgan, John B. Lewis, William Garbert, John M. Davis, John Kenan, William Brown, John Gerrond, George F. Wilbur and Joseph Gillispie. The first seven of these were the originators of the matter, and were obliged to go to Reading to become members of an encampment, that they might be enabled to apply for a charter. William J. Morgan was the first chief patriarch and George F. Wilbur the first scribe. John Gerrond is the only one of the original members now in connection with the encampment. After the burning of the books and other property of the encampment, in 1850, it was discontinued until April 21st, 1865, when a new charter was granted to Thomas Dickson, C. P.; John Campbell, H. P.; John Showerman, S. W.; Bernard Campman, J. W.; John Gerrond, scribe; William Law, treasurer; James Dixon and William Brown. The encampment has since prospered, and now has 37 members.

The officers in December, 1879, were: Francis Ludwig, C. P.; Henry J. Baer, S. W.; Thomas R. Kirkbride, H. P.; David McMyne, J. W.; William M. Thompson, scribe; John O. Miles, treasurer.

MASONIC.

Carbondale Lodge, No. 249, was chartered in July, 1850, and instituted September 11th, 1850. The charter members were: J. W. Burnham, W. M.; Robert Maxwell, S. W.; John G. Murray, J. W.; Rice Lewis, secretary; William Root, George H. Leach and Henry Evans.

The officers for 1879 were: Joseph Alexander, W. M.; William A. Weaver, S. W.; S. A. McMullen, J. W.; Joseph Birkett, treasurer; C. O. Mellen, secretary. The membership was then 150.

Eureka Chapter, No. 179, Royal Arch Masons was instituted February 19th, 1855. The first officers were: P. C. Gritman, H. P.; W. R. Baker, K.; S. E. Bilger, S. The past high priests have been W. R. Baker, J. B. Van Bergen, Joseph Alexander, jr., S. D. Davis and M. H. Barber. The present officers are: H. B. Wilbur, H. P.; John Scurry, K.; Solomon Bolton, S.; Joseph Birkett, treasurer; W. R. Baker, secretary.

Palestine Commandery, No. 14, Knights Templar was organized May 1st, 1856. The petitioners to constitute the commandery were John L. Gore, William N. Monies, Samuel E. Bilger, William W. Davies, George L. Dickson, Philo C. Gritman, W. R. Baker, William Root, Washington Burr, Almon Crocker and Alfred Dart.

In March, 1880, the following officers were elected: G. F. Swigert, E. C.; S. D. Davis, G.; John Scurry, C. G.; S. A. McMullen, T.; H. B. Wilbur, R. The commandery has about 70 members.

FATHER MATTHEW TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

This association was organized September 11th, 1868, with the following first officers and charter members: John Kelley, president; J. J. Forbes, vice-president; Eli Beirs, treasurer; Patrick Pidgeon, Rec. Sec.; M. G. Neary, Cor. Sec.; James Norton and James Kirkwood.

John Kelley was president each alternate term for six years, and was recording secretary three years. The present officers are: Eli Beirs, president; James Kirkwood, vice-president; John Kelley, secretary; Patrick McCabe, treasurer.

The membership reached the highest number, 307, in 1874. There are now over two hundred members.

THE YOUNG MEN'S LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

This association was chartered January 26th, 1875, with 26 charter members. The object is declared to be "to establish and maintain a library and reading room in the city of Carbondale." Any person contributing $50 becomes a life member, and for each $50 shall be entitled to name a life member. Any person approved by the directors becomes a subscribing member by paying $3 annually or $1 quarterly. Ladies are admitted upon the payment of 37½ cents quarterly. The first directors were R. Manville, O. D. Shephard, E. E. Hendrick, E. M. Peck, J. B. Van Bergen, E. Francis, R. B. Peet, J. W. Aitkin and George D. Couch.

The people of Carbondale subscribed $1,000 for books at the organization. There were 875 volumes in the library February 1st, 1875, and in December, 1879, a little over 1,500. A charge of five cents per week is made for the use of books.

The association has a room in the office of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's railroad office.

THE WORKINGMEN'S CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION was organized in April, 1877, with an unlimited capital.

The purpose was to enable the workingmen to trade at as low a price as possible. Shares were placed at $5, no share-holder to own more than twenty shares. The shareholders are mostly mechanics, railroad men and miners.

The officers in 1877 were: S. A. Dilts, president; William Nicol, secretary; J. W. Jones, treasurer. The president and secretary remain the same. John P. Campbell is the treasurer.

MILITARY.

TOWNSHIP AND BOROUGH HISTORIES,

LACKAWANNA COUNTY.

ABINGTON TOWNSHIP.

IN the Connecticut claim and survey this township was called Ebbington, in honor of Col. Ebbings, an extensive land agent of Connecticut, through whom titles to these lands were obtained on very reasonable terms; but these titles proved illegal and hence valueless, under the Pennsylvania laws which finally obtained, and the land holders, being indignant, changed the word to Abington, the name of a township in Connecticut. Under the Pennsylvania laws this was included in a large tract called Tunkhannock. In 1806 a new township was formed from Tunkhannock including this tract, and the name Abington was restored. This included several of the present surrounding townships.

In 1814 a part of Abington was annexed to Nicholson, and in 1816 Greenfield township was taken off. The township was divided in 1867 into North and South Abington. The boroughs of Waverly and Glenburn were formed from this township in 1854 and 1877 respectively.

The contention of the "Yankees" and "Pennamites" retarded the early settlement of Abington, as did the large and almost impassable mountains on the south. The township remained an unbroken and unknown wilderness until about 1796, when it was surveyed by a party from Rhode Island under the Connecticut claim. About the same year three trappers made a small clearing and a rude cabin near the site of Waverly, with a view of making a settlement; but their provisions became exhausted, and tiring of venison and bear meat they abandoned the enterprise; so no actual settlement was made until several years later.

In the spring of 1797 the first immigrating party attempted to pass through the curved and rocky gorge in the Moosic range opposite Leggett's gap, since known as the old Drinker road, leading from Lackawaxen to Abington. They found the route impracticable for their force, so the more southern gap, adjacent to Leggett's, was selected for a wagon road. Through this untrodden route these pioneers found their way into the wilds of Abington. They were William Wall, John Tripp and a few young men; among whom were Ezra Dean, who settled in the northwestern part of the township, and Robert Reynolds, who settled in what is now Factoryville.

In 1799 Deacon William Clark and family (including his three sons, William, Jeremiah and John), Thomas Smith and Ephraim Leach came from Connecticut. They crossed the Leggett mountain, at a gap westerly from where the road now passes, their team being one poor horse, and their conveyance a drag made of poles fastened at the back of the horse. On this drag were placed a sap kettle, their axes, and a few clothes and provisions. These adventurers found their way to a spot near the residence of Mr. Wall, upon which they made their camp on the 15th of March, 1799. During the summer and fall they made clearings in several places, and opened a path through Leggett's gap. Deacon Clark settled at what is now Clark's Green, a name given in his honor, and Leach settled near Leach Flats, so named from him. During 1800 there came from Rhode Island Jonathan Dean and his sons, James and Jeffrey; Jonathan Hall, and Jonathan and Stephen Capwell. Mr. Dean settled in the western part, Mr. Hall near the center, and Jonathan Capwell in the northern part. The latter surveyed his farm of three hundred acres by pacing and carrying a pocket compass. A correct survey afterward made showed only four acres in excess of Mr. Capwell's crude but ingenious measurement.

In the winter of 1801 George Bailey, John Briggs and family, Samuel Hall and family, and several young men sought their fortunes in the "Beech," as it was then called. During the fall and winter John Lewin and family and Stephen Parker and family arrived. Mr. Parker settled near the center of the township. In 1802 John Miller and family came from Connecticut and settled near the site of Waverly. Phineas and Solomon Reynolds and Abner Sherman also came during the same year.

"Elder John Miller" was the natural leader in the early settlement of Abington. He was born in Windham county, February 3d, 1775, and emigrated to Abington in 1802. He settled on the site previously occupied by the trappers, and began clearing and preaching; and for fifty-five years was a faithful minister, "turning many to righteousness." He conducted many revivals, baptized two thousand persons, preached eighteen hundred funeral sermons, and married more than nine hundred persons. Being a practical surveyor and naturally ingenious, his services were often required and cheerfully rendered. The condition of society in Abington is largely the outgrowth of Elder Miller's efforts. He died in 1857.

The tide of immigration set in more rapidly after 1800. Lemuel Stone settled here in 1806; Robert, John and James Stone, Asa Knight and his son Asa (still living), in the northern part in 1810; Peleg Aylesworth in the northern part in 1811; Deacon Phillips, at Clark's Green; Jacob Calvin in West Abington in 1817; Thomas Smith, John and Job Northup in 1818; and Dr. A. Bedford in 1824. After 1809 there was a rapid increase of settlers.

The early settlers of Abington suffered from the incursions of beasts of prey, which often confronted them, especially in Leggett's gap, while making their frequent trips to the mill in Slocum Hollow, or visiting the different settlements. "Many a time," said Mr. Leach, "in passing through the notch with my little grist upon my shoulders, have I kept the wolves at bay with a long club which I kept swinging vigorously as they came growling around me, and to my faithful club, often bitten and broken, have I been indebted for my life." On one occasion he kept off the wolves by thrumming on a mill-saw which he was carrying.

About seven years after the first settlements the outlook was quite promising. Titles to the lands could be obtained on easy terms, and the toils of the farmer were rewarded with excellent crops. But the nearest market was Wilkes-Barre, twenty-five or thirty miles to the south, with only a single pathway leading to it through a dark extent of forests.

The first teacher, preacher and postmaster of Abington was Elder John Miller. The first framed building was erected near the site of Glenburn. Lemuel Stone did the carpenter work. He was the first justice of the peace, and the first Sunday-school superintendent. He and Dr. A. Bedford were the first to do their harvesting without whiskey, and were always conspicuous in the cause of temperance.

The first factory (cotton) was built about 1815, near the site of Mr. Shoemaker's factory. Otis Colvin put in the machinery, which was drawn from Newburgh, N. Y. Drs. W. H. Nicholson and Henry Green were the first resident physicians. Samuel Griffin kept the first store at Clark's Green. The first blacksmith was Samson Wright. He sold his land claim to Asa Knight, sen.

Jonathan Dean was one of the Rhode Island surveyors who surveyed Abington under the Connecticut claim. Nancy Bailey, Eliza, Philo and Sophia Hall were among the early teachers. The first school-house was built in the hollow near the site of the residence of Rev. B. Miller. The early town meetings and religious services were held in it. The first church was built by the Baptists on the farm of Elder John Miller. James Dean built the first grist-mill, on the site of Shoemaker's factory. He and Henry Hall each had a still-house.

The wife of Dean William Clark was the first white woman in Abington. Delia Parker was probably the first white child born in the township. The first marriage ceremonies were performed by Elder John Miller, as follows: Ezra Dean to Amy Gardner; Sheldon Wall to Eunice Capwell; James Dean to Catharine Tripp, of Providence; Henry Hall to Warty Reynolds; George Capwell to Mary Gardner; Daniel Reynolds to Mercia Hall; all in 1803.

The first cemetery was begun on the farm now owned by Rev. B. Miller.

ABINGTON CIVIL LIST.

The justices of the peace of Abington from 1840, with the years of their election, were as follows: Nicholas Reynolds and Benjamin F. Baily, 1840, 1845; Thomas Smith, 1850, 1855; H. V. Hall, 1855, 1865; N. D. Green, 1858; Hiram Nichols, 1860; William B. Swick, 1864.

NORTH ABINGTON TOWNSHIP.

IN 1867 this township was formed from Abington. The first auditors were J. H. McAlpine, B. F. Bailey and Amasa Dean; treasurer, N. D. Green. The present officers, except justices, are: Assessor, W. W. Smith; auditors, Isaac Ellis, J. G. Northup, J. P. Stevens; clerk, C. W. Purdy; supervisors, E. C. Rozell, James A. Stone; constable, M. Edwards; treasurer, F. M. The population of the township is 1,072. The most important village is

DALTON.

This village contains a flouring mill, plaster and saw mill, one large hotel, the agricultural warehouse of C. L. Briggs, stores and shops of various kinds, three church societies, a post-office and a thriving public school. There are some fine residences, including the beautiful house and grounds of Dr. J. C. Miles, the only resident physician, who has been in practice for many years.

Dalton post-office was instituted in 1854, and H. L. Halsted appointed postmaster. His successors have been L. R. Green, N. D. Green and the present incumbent, C. L. Briggs, who is also station agent.

ZIBA REYNOLDS was born in 1832, and in 1859 married Sarah A., daughter of Russell Patten, of Rhode Island.

REV. D. ROSS was born in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., July 25th, 1826, and married Mary Stark, of Nicholson, Pa. He is pastor of the Six Principle Baptist Church of Dalton. He was formerly superintendent of public schools in Vermont.

JAMES SEAMANS, born in Connecticut in 1813, came to Abington in 1817, and in 1834 married Irena, daughter of Asa Knight, of Rhode Island. He is a prosperous farmer and a deacon in the Baptist church.

JEREMIAH SEAMANS, a native of Abington, born in 1832, married in 1861 Huldah E., daughter of John Dickson. They have two children. Mr. Seaman is a stone cutter and a farmer, and is a steward in the M. E. church.

G. E. SHERMAN is a founder and manufacturer of agricultural implements at Waverly. He was born May 31st, 1845, and was married May 21st, 1878, to Miss E. C. Davis, of Clark's Green.

A. C. SISSON, well and widely known as a horticulturist, resides near La Plume. He has been a resident of Abington for forty-three years, and was until a few years since a merchant at Waverly. He has a farm of nearly three hundred acres, devoted mainly to fruit interests.

F. W. SLADE, a native of Connecticut, married in 1869 Cornelia N. Van Fleet, of Benton. He served in the 141st Pa. volunteers, and was four times wounded.

LIEUT. ANDREW J. SMITH, attorney at law at Waverly, was a first lieutenant in the 11th Pennsylvania cavalry. He was born in Abington, December 15th, 1837. His wife, formerly Josephine A. Green, of Waverly, is dead.

THOMAS SMITH, a native of Rhode Island, settled in Abington in 1818. He died in 1856, aged sixty-two years. His widow, originally Mary Northup, aged eighty-three years, resides with her son, Thomas Smith, who owns the homestead.

O. U. SMITH was born in 1840, and in 1865 married Martha, daughter of Edmund Worth. They have five children.

SAMUEL STATES, deceased, was born in Bucks county, in 1797, and was married in 1821 to Hannah, daughter of David Smith. He was a gunsmith, a miller and a farmer, and left a family of three children.

MINERVA A. SWALLOW was born in Plains, Luzerne county, Pa., August 14th, 1844, and married Freeman Leach, of South Abington. Mrs. Leach is engaged in farming.

WILLIAM H. SWALLOW was born in Pittston township, in 1842, and removed with his parents to Abington. He has long been engaged in farming.

C. J. THOMAS, born in Nicholson in 1835, was married to Helen Mumford, of Otsego county, N. Y., in 1865. He is a farmer and a mechanic.

PETER TOWNSEND was born in Falls township, in 1830. He removed to Benton in 1872. He was married September 15th, 1854, and has eight children. He is a dairy farmer.

DANIEL VAN FLEET was born in Pittston, in 1806, and has lived in Benton fifty-four years. He married in 1828 Mary, daughter of Stephen Parker, of Abington, who died in 1848, leaving four children. In 1850 he married Mary A. Hull, of Susquehanna county.

The following residents of these townships and boroughs also contributed their support to this publication: W. Catlett, H. N. Colvin, C. L. Prings, I. F. Tillinghast, S. Tillinghast.

LA PLUME.

This name is of recent origin, being the nom de plume of a popular contributor to the local press, Mrs. I. F. Tillinghast.

The principal business is the extensive seed and plant trade conducted by Isaac F. Tillinghast, who ships plants and seeds to nearly every state and territory. George F. Bailey is erecting a large building to contain a grocery and the seed store of Mr. Tillinghast. Other and minor business interests are conducted here.

The post-office at La Plume was established in 1876, with William P. Slocum postmaster. He was succeeded by George F. Bailey, who is the present postmaster, with Isaac F. Tillinghast as deputy.

NORTH ABINGTON CHURCH HISTORIES.

Six Principle Baptist.—In 1817 Elder William Stovier, from Rhode Island, settled in Abington. He held meetings in different parts of Luzerne county, and in 1821 the Six Principle Baptist Church of Abington was organized. William Stovier was pastor until 1830. George A. Bailey and Ezra Capwell were deacons until the close of their lives. Rev. John A. Shaw succeeded Mr. Stovier as pastor; under his labors the church was signally prosperous. He left in 1841. From 1844 Rev. James Brown was pastor until 1864, when he went into the army and soon after died. From 1864 to 1874 the church was supplied by itinerant ministers of the same faith. Since the 28th of February, 1874, Rev. D. T. Ross, from New York, has been pastor. During his pastorate eighty-four persons have been added to the church, a parsonage has been built, and the church building repaired. This church once numbered 338 members, but six or seven branches have been formed from it. The one at Factoryville, Wyoming county, was organized in 1846.

The church edifice at Abington was built in 1846, and the church property, including the parsonage, is valued at $6,000; it is free from debt.

The first Sabbath-school of this society was organized about fifty years ago, with Rev. Gilbert Bailey, of Abington, as superintendent, and has ever since been maintained. Mr. N. T. Purdy is the superintendent.

Mrs. Mary Colvin, aged eighty-nine years, is the only one living of the original members of this society.

Methodist Episcopal.—In 1832 Rev. S. Griffin began preaching at Aylesworth's school-house in North Abington. A class was formed, consisting of Benjamin Knight and wife, W. D. Stevens and wife, Charles King and wife, Mrs. Hurlburt, Mary Ann White and William White. In 1837 a revival under the labors of Rev. William Reddy and Rev. C. W. Giddings brought in Leonard Hopper, Daniel Long, William Hierlihy, Christiana White, Anthony Weidman and others. This class developed into the North Abington church, which built a frame edifice in 1860. A Sunday-school is successfully maintained.

The church at West Abington was erected in 1853.

The class here is the fruit of an early appointment for preaching at the house of Mrs. Esther Taylor. This church supports a successful Sunday-school.

The M. E. class at Dalton was organized by Rev. C. E. Taylor in 1866, and in 1874 bought and enlarged a chapel. This appointment belongs to the Waverly charge. A Sunday-school is supported.

Abington Valley Baptist Church.—This church was constituted at Dalton, February 23d, 1856, with the following members:

Mary Colvin, Oeena Colvin, Elvira A. Colvin, Jane O. Colvin, Caroline M. Colvin, Ermine M. Colvin, Lucretia E. Colvin, Elizabeth M. Colvin, Polly Franklin, Harriet Franklin, Edwin A. Franklin, Oscar Franklin, Otis Colvin, Henry J. Colvin, Ezra Colvin, Norman O. Colvin, Jason P. Colvin, Henry H. Colvin, Hiram Baily, Daniel Patterson, John Wight and L. R. Green.

Fourteen of these are still living. Henry J. Colvin was chosen deacon March 22nd, 1856. The church was admitted into the Abington Association September 4th, 1856. From the first year they had preaching occasionally by Elders William K. Mott and Charles Parker. They commenced the building of their present church edifice in 1856, and it was dedicated April 3d, 1857. Elder Mott preached the sermon. Rev. T. J. Cole was pastor from 1857 until 1871. Rev. H. J. Millard resigned in 1872. The church was considerably revived under his short ministry. Rev. J. G. Brensing, his successor, remained until 1873. Rev. D. J. R. Strayle came in 1874 and resigned in 1875. Rev. Alfred Cauldwell began his pastorate in 1875 and closed in 1878. The present pastor, W. Cattell, came in May, 1880. There have been 178 members; of these 13 have died, 18 have been excluded, 56 dismissed by letter, and 11 erased. The present membership is 74.

The Sunday-school has been kept up from the early organization of the church. Henry Northup has been superintendent more than twenty years.

North Abington Baptist Church.—A Baptist organization has lately been effected at the Aylesworth school-house. Rev. Newell Callender is pastor.

SOUTH ABINGTON TOWNSHIP.

AT a special meeting held in the southern district of Abington, October 8th, 1867, 100 votes were cast in favor of a division of the township, and 24 against. A majority being gained in both districts in favor of division, it was carried into effect on the 25th of November, 1867. Among the first officers of South Abington were: Auditors, H. V. Hall and Freeman Leach; overseers of poor, J. W. Griffin and George Swallow; clerk, J. C. Higgins; treasurer, C. F. Van Nort.

The present officers are as follows: Justices, Henry Sisco and Joseph W. Griffin; supervisors, J. P. Skinner and W. H. Smith; auditors, J. C. Higgins, James Tinkham and J. S. Wagner; judge of elections, Henry Leach; inspectors of elections, E. A. O'Mally and N. S. Davis; clerk, Arthur A. Davis; poor director, Norman Leach; school directors, Samuel Stevenson, Norman Leach, R. P. Parker, G. Stanton, J. Brown.

Justices have been elected as follows: James Tinkham, 1868; H. V. Hall, 1870; Joseph W. Griffin, 1873, 1878; Henry Sisco, 1874.

Six good public schools are maintained. Two tanneries are in operation; one at Leach Flats and one near Waverly, J. Tinkham proprietor. The Knapp tannery, built in 1835, has suspended operations. There are two grist-mills and two saw-mills in South Abington.

The population in 1880 was 923.

IRISH WAR.

In 1850 the extreme enmity existing between the two Irish factions called "Corkonians" and "Fardowns" resulted in a conflict near Clark's Green. The belligerents met, armed with old muskets, picks, scythes and shillalahs, and for two days the battle raged. The military company was finally called out, and dispersed the rioters without firing a gun. In the conflict only two men were killed, but many wounded.

THE STEVENSON NURSERIES.

These nurseries cover more than one hundred and twenty-five acres. The proprietor, Samuel Stevenson, has spared no pains and expense in fitting and planting his grounds with the choicest fruits, trees and shrubbery. Clark's Summit is his receiving and shipping depot.

CLARK'S GREEN.

William Clark made the first clearing. This for many years was known as the "Green," and from it the settlement was named. This green is a triangular plot of several acres, upon which stands the residence of S. A. Northup. The village has two churches and several thriving business concerns (among which are Decker & Frace, merchants, J. C. Higgins, tailor, and Arthur A. Davis, carriage maker), a post-office and a flourishing public school. Hiram Nichols, M. D., and B. F. Evans, M. D., are among the most prominent physicians of the town. Dr. Nichols has been in practice about fifty years.

The post-office at Clark's Green was established in 1850, with S. A. Northup as postmaster. His successors have been J. C. Higgins, H. Harrington, Dr. L. Van Sickle, and the present postmaster, S. A. Northup; E. S. Decker is deputy.

CLARK'S GREEN CHURCHES.

Methodist Episcopal.—In 1848 the M. E. class was organized at Clark's Green. It was one of the appointments of Abington charge until 1865, when it was attached to the Clark's Green charge with Leach Flats and Ackerley's. Rev. Parley H. Scovell was the first pastor. Near the close of his pastorate the flourishing society at Schultzville was added, and Ackerley's merged in Leach Flats. The first class-leader was Sidney Osborne, and under the new arrangement John C. Higgins was appointed class-leader.

Until 1867 this society had no church of its own. In that year Rev. J. B. Davis succeeded Mr. Scovell. During his pastorate a comfortable church was built, costing between $3,000 and $4,000. The contributions of the charge for the support of the gospel amount to from $1,000 to $1,200 per annum. The following preachers have served the church: Rev. P. H. Scovell, three years; Rev. J. B. Davis, two years; Rev. O. M. Martin, three; Rev. S. J. Austin, two; Rev. F. A. King, three; Rev. G. C. Lyman, the present paritor, two. The members of the official board are: Class-leader, J. C. Higgins; stewards, J. S. Wagner, E. S. Decker, F. Miller; trustees, J. S. Wagner, president; J. C. Higgins, secretary; W. S. Frace, treasurer. The number of members is one hundred and sixty-three; probationers, forty-four. The Sunday-school was first organized in 1871. C. F. Van Nort, J. C. Higgins and E. S. Decker have been the superintendents. The present superintendent is F. A. Miller; number of teachers, eight; of pupils, ninety-two. Julius P. Skinner is the only one of the original members of this society remaining.

Clark's Green Baptist Church.—The early history of this church is included in that of the Six Principle Baptist Church of Abington. Members living at or near Clark's Green held conference, prayer and covenant meetings for three years. Elders Joshua Baker and James Brown and other ministers had occasionally preached. In 1853 twenty-five of these members procured a separate organization as the Second General Baptist Church of Abington. This organization continued until 1864, Elders J. Brown, J. Baker and A. J. Harrington preaching.

At this time the name was changed to the Regular Baptist Church at Clark's Green. The church was duly recognized by a council in the same year. The original members were:

C. L. Parker, Clara A., Nellie, Cornelia R., Stephen, Levi J. and Jeremiah Northup, Emma, Victoria, Emily A., Amy A., Sophia and Ellen Clark, Margaret A. and Adam E. Zedriek, S. J. and H. V. Hall, Susannah and Silas Hobbs, M. A. Brigham, Phebe N. Van Nort, Dorcas A. Van Sickle, E. H. Benscoter, Ruth H. and Angeline Dewey, Martha Spencer, Rachel Beagle, Sally Knapp, Jennie, Sarah and James Nichols and Thomas Y. Atherton.

Rev. C. A. Fox first served the new church as pastor. His successors have been Rev. D. W. Halsted, from November, 1864, until April, 1866; Newell Callender until 1867; A. M. Calkin, a short time; John N. Lukens until 1879; Benjamin Miller until 1870; Isaac Bevan until 1876; Thomas B. Jayne until 1878. October 1st, 1878, Rev. S. F. Forgens entered upon the pastorate.

A frame church was built during the pastorate of Elder John A. Shaw. It remained unfinished and unused for several years. In 1852 Charles Bailey contracted to finish it for $625. In 1853 the committee contracted with Mr. Bailey to new-roof the building, enlarge it to fifty-eight by thirty feet, and build a belfry and steeple at a cost of $210. It was dedicated August 4th, 1853, Rev. John Tillinghast preaching the dedicatory sermon. In 1869 it was sold for $300. A new church edifice was built in 1869, which is thirty-four by fifty feet, with a lecture-room on the rear twenty by twenty-four feet, and an octagonal tower in front. It stands on the site of the old building. It was consecrated December 21st, 1869, Rev. B. D. Thomas, of Pittston, preaching.

The withdrawal of the Methodist Episcopal part of the union Sunday-school necessitated the organization of a Baptist school, which was effected by the election of S. A. Northup as the first superintendent. In that year they reported 3 officers, 8 teachers and 78 pupils.

H. V. Hall, J. H. Pellam, R. P. Parker, Orlando B. Jones and Robert Hancox have been deacons. Mr. Jones alone is now in office. Stephen A. Northup has been clerk since the organization, except for a short time during which R. P. Parker acted. The membership is now 60.

LEACH FLATS.

Ephraim Leach was the original owner of a large tract in the southern part of this township, upon a portion of which this small village was built. It contains two hotels, a grist-mill, several shops, a tannery, a church and a post-office, established in 1880, under the name of Chinchilla. George Tanner is the postmaster.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first Methodist sermon in Abington township was preached by Rev. George Peck, at the house of Ephraim Leach, in 1818. The members of the first class formed at Leach Flats were Gideon Ellis and wife, James Ross and wife, Ephraim Leach and wife, John Weiss and wife, and David Silsbee. A neat frame chapel was erected in 1869, and was dedicated by Rev. George Peck, D. D., of Scranton. An interesting Sunday-school is sustained.

GLENBURN BOROUGH.

THIS town, formerly Humphreysville, was founded in 1848 by the erection of a mill dam and flouring-mill by George E. Humphrey, who came from Orange county, N. Y., and purchased the property of the heirs of Thomas Meredith. The mill was a well built wooden structure, four stories in height, and had four runs of stones. It was burned about five years since. Mr. Humphrey was mainly instrumental in erecting a village of considerable size and importance, but through financial embarrassments he was forced to abandon further operations and sell his interest at a great sacrifice. The mill property is now owned by Hon. G. W. Palmer, who built a new mill on the old site, but smaller and of insufficient capacity. A lumber-mill is also in operation.

In 1877 this village was incorporated as a borough and received the name of Glenburn. It was formed from portions of North and South Abington, chiefly taken from the latter. The following is the list of corporate officers: Burgess, N. C. Northup; council, E. A. Atherton, W. N. Sherman, Jabez Hall, Andrew Leighton, Jerome Morrow and William C. Hall; secretary, Andrew Leighton; justices of the peace, George Sherman and D. S. Ball.

The present officers are: Burgess, William C. Hall; council, E. A. Atherton, Jerome Morrow, W. N. Sherman, S. L. Hall, Philip Harlos, H. W. Northup; secretary, W. C. Atherton; treasurer, William A. Gardner; auditors, H. L. Hall, A. Ball, George Sherman. The justices are the same as at the organization.

A. Ball is the present postmaster. The population was returned by the census of 1880 as 290.

WAVERLY BOROUGH.

UNTIL about 1820 Abington Centre—now Waverly—remained an unbroken forest. The first house was built by a Mr. Flanagan, on the site of the residence of Rev. A. M. Calkin. The second was built by Dr. W. H. Nicholas, on the northeast corner of the square, in 1822. Dr. Nicholas practiced in Abington from 1815 until his death, in 1824.

In 1826 Dr. Andrew Bedford purchased of Rev. John Miller ten acres of timber land, lying on both sides of Main street, south of Academy street, on which the principal business places of Waverly now stand; had the timber cleared off, and built a dwelling and office in 1828.

About 1830 Thomas Smith bought of Dr. Bedford the corner of Academy and Main streets; built a house and occupied it until his death by a railroad accident in 1865.

The first store was established by Elder John Miller, John Stone and Stephen Parker, who conducted a general dry goods and grocery trade. Dr. A. Bedford and Leonard Batchelor opened a store, which was burned in 1849 and immediately rebuilt. In 1853 Dr. Bedford opened the first drug store.

The borough was incorporated in January, 1854, and named Waverly, since which time it has pretty steadily increased in population and business enterprise. The population in 1880 was 329, a loss of 24 from 1870.

The principal interests are represented by A. Bedford & Son, druggists; M. W. Bliss and Gates White, dry-goods and groceries; J. Shane and G. W. Bailey, groceries; C. A. Cowles, tin and hardware; T. C. Kennedy and J. T. Mead, harness-makers; E. J. Bailey, watchmaker and jeweller; besides many shops and various industries.

The Waverly Hotel was built by a company for a temperance house, but this enterprise was soon abandoned. J. J. Posten is the present proprietor.

The legal profession is represented by Andrew J. Smith and George S. Nicholson.

L. Van Sickle, M. D., and C. A. Miles, M. D., represent the medical profession. A. Bedford, M. D., druggist, has retired from active practice.

The Waverly post-office is a continuation of the old Abington post-office, established many years ago at the house of Elder John Miller. It was removed to Waverly and Dr. Bedford appointed postmaster. The present incumbent is M. W. Bliss.

The Waverly Manufacturing Company was organized in 1867, and the foundry and shop erected by A. P. Bedford, who is the present proprietor. This establishment has made large quantities of agricultural implements; since 1873 it has been under the management of G. E. Sherman, who maintains its reputation for first class implements, for which the demand is continually increasing. The machinery is run by steam power and has a capacity for supplying a still greater demand.

CIVIL RECORD.

Among the first elected officers of Waverly were the following: Dr. A. Bedford, burgess; S. D. Dean, judge of elections; A. Z. Mogg and James McAlpine, inspectors of elections; G. W. Bailey, assessor; C. Bailey and John Thompson, poor masters; H. S. Cooper, C. A. Cowles and L. Batchelor, auditors; N. N. Dean, J. V. Lynch, Samuel Whaling, John Stone and Thomas Smith, council. Thomas Smith was chosen secretary and treasurer, and R. Sisson street commissioner. The first school directors were: Dr. Bedford, Dr. J. C. Miles, J. G. Fell, N. N. Dean, Samuel Whaling and C. A. Cowles. Dr. Bedford was burgess continuously until 1871; J. C. Fell, A. Bedford, W. W. Smith and Dr. L. Van Sickle have since served. Justices have been elected as follows: Harvey S. Cooper, 1857; Thomas Smith, 1859, 1864; G. W. Bailey, 1861, 1866; Andrew J. Smith, 1865, 1870, 1875; J. A. La Bar, 1871, 1877.

The present officers are: Burgess, Dr. A. Bedford; council, John Stone, Stephen Wright, Samuel Whaling, G. E. Sherman, J. C. Reynolds and W. E. Rice; auditors, G. S. Nicholson, John Mahoney; justices, G. W. Bailey and James McAlpine; constable, T. C. Kennedy; school directors, J. H. McAlpine, president; J. W. Mershon, treasurer; A. B. Winchel, secretary; F. A. Parker, George Perry and E. G. Carpenter.

CHURCHES.

FIRST ABINGTON BAPTIST.

In February, 1802, John Miller, with his family and a few other Baptists, settled in Abington. William Clark and Jonathan Dean, with their families, had already come—the former from Plainfield, Conn., in 1799, the latter from Exeter, R. I., in 1800. Meetings for singing, prayer and exhortation were now established and sustained. On the 22nd of May, 1802, at the house of William Clark, Rev. Samuel Sturdevant organized the following persons as a church; Jonathan Dean, John and Polly Miller, George Gardner, Jeremiah, William and Mary Clark, Russell Hall and Alice Lewin. The church was duly recognized in November of the same year.

Rev. John Miller was the pastor until 1850, when Rev. Andrew Hopper became associated with him, at his request. Rev. C. A. Fox was pastor for eleven years from 1853, and Rev. T. J. Cole about two years. In December, 1866, Rev. A. M. Calkin, the fourth and present pastor, entered upon his labors.

The following persons have served as deacons: William Clark, James Hulse, John Phillips, Jeremiah G. Northup, Jeffery Dean, Isaac Tillinghast, Stephen Wright and Joseph and Benjamin Miller. As clerks, Jonathan, Jeffrey and William Dean, Ezra Wall and Joseph B. Miller have served, the latter twenty-eight years.

In 1821 the society built its first meeting house half a mile east of Waverly. Another was subsequently built in the village, and in 1871 it was thoroughly and tastefully remodeled.

From May, 1806, Pittston Baptist Church was a branch of this until it became self-sustaining. In the autumn of 1818 this church dismissed seventy-four members by letter, chiefly to form new churches at Clifford and Greenfield. In 1824 eighteen members left to form the Eaton church. In 1832 thirty-six more were constituted into the Nicholson, now Benton, church. In 1855 the West Abington (now Factoryville) church was formed by fifty-five members dismissed from this church. Mt. Bethel, also with a constituency of fifty members, sprang from this prolific mother of churches.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

The first appointment for Methodist preaching in Waverly was established in 1832, through the agency of Rev. Samuel Griffin and others. The meetings were held in the school-house, still standing, near the residence of Col. J. G. Fell. The first members were Owen Wright and wife, Nehemiah Tinkham and wife, Rev. S. Griffin and wife, Mrs. Elvira Whaling and Ann Evans. Of these persons only Mrs. Catherine Tinkham is living, aged eighty-eight. She is the mother of nine children, and has fifty-six grandchildren and eighty great-grandchildren. Among the members who joined the church later were William La Bar and wife, John S. Mershon and wife, Jane Tinkham, Sarah J. and Celinda Stone, Rhoda M. Jones, Mary A. Sherman, William R. Finch and wife, A. M. Coon and wife, Mary Thompson, Benjamin Knight, A. J. Stone and wife, Deborah Bedford, Dr. A. Bedford, Lois B. Gorman, Elizabeth Palmer, Rebecca Wait, Elizabeth Bailey, N. N. Dean and wife, and the descendants of those here named.

Until 1871 this charge was the central point of the Abington circuit, which embraced North Abington and Clark's Green. Among the early preachers who traveled the circuit were Revs. Benjamin Ellis, William Reddy, C. W. Giddings, Dayton F. Reed, Thomas Wilcox, Epenetus Owen, Abel Barker, J. F. Wilbir and C. E. Taylor. A frame church was built in Waverly in 1842, and a parsonage bought about 1851.

Afterward the following preachers served the charge: A. Bronson, L. Cole, D. Worrell, S. S. Barter, H. Brownscombe, A. Brooks, D. C. Olmstead, C. E. Taylor, and F. L. Hilles. In 1871 Waverly was made a separate charge, with Dalton attached. Since then the pastors have been J. G. Eckman, A. C. Bowdish, S. C. Fulton, L. W. Peck, G. A. Severson and A. W. Cooper.

Owen Wight, the first class leader, died while in office; after him John S. Mershon served many years; the next was James R. Clark. At present Dr. Andrew Bedford is class leader, and Dr. J. P. Coult assistant. The trustees are Rev. S. S. Kennedy, R. J. Stone, J. T. Case, J. R. Clark, G. E. Sherman, J. S. Mershon and Samuel Whaling. The stewards are J. T. Case, John W. Mershon, William R. Finch, David Hallock and Sterling Bedford.

Mrs. Deborah Bedford joined the class at Ross Hill, in Kingston, in 1788, and lived an irreproachable Christian life for eighty years. She died in 1869, at the residence of her son Dr. A. Bedford, in her ninety-seventh year.

William La Bar settled in Abington Centre in 1848, and assisted in starting the first M. E. Sunday-school, which he superintended and his daughters aided in teaching for a number of years. Dr. Bedford was superintendent from about 1856 to 1873, and his son, Sterling Bedford, has filled that office since 1874.

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1844, with about twenty members. The first pastor was Rev. James Hyatt, and the first officers were as follows: Class leader, George Keyes; stewards, Lot Norris, George Keyes, W. M. Johnson, Charles Allen and John Mason. The first place of meeting was a school-house in Abington Centre. In 1854 the first and present church edifice was erected and consecrated by Rev. William Burch, P. E. The following clergymen have been pastors:

Revs. James Hyatt, Joseph Turner, Thomas M. D. Ward, William Hermans, Thomas De Remus, William Watson, Alexander Walker, William Johnson, Theodore Gould, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Davis, Jeremiah Youngs, William Heuson, William Taylor, William Laws, William Chase, John Stephenson, Elijah Hammet, Nathaniel Evans, J. M. Morris and the present pastor, Rev. Anthony Waldron.

The membership is thirty-four, four of whom are probationers. The officers are: Ignitus Thomas, class-leader; J. Thomas, Richard Lee and Peter Norris, trustees.

A Sunday-school was organized in 1856, with Joanna Raymond as superintendent. It numbers about twenty-five members, with Catherine Walker as superintendent, and is flourishing.

The church has connected with it a literary society, well sustained.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN.

The First Presbyterian Church of Abington (now Waverly) was organized in 1850, with only five members. The membership now numbers 60, including a few non-residents. Midway in its history its membership was more than 70.

It first worshiped in the Methodist church. In 1859 it occupied the basement of a new edifice on Beach street, and later the upper room, where it continued until about 1869, when the building was sold to the borough for a school-house. The present building was then erected at the northern limit of the village, at a cost of about $6,000, which is fully paid. The pulpit has been supplied by Baptist, Methodist and Free-Will Baptist preachers. The Presbyterian clergymen who have been stated supplies are the following, named in order of service: Revs. Burr Baldwin, Joel Barton, J. A. Whittaker, John L. Landis, C. F. Muzzy, W. J. Parrot, Yates Hickey, H. H. Welles, J. H. Clark and (at present) J. M. Phillips.

A cause of weakness in the society was the controversy between the old and new schools. Abington being on the border of two adjoining presbyteries of different schools, each claimed the ground. The people were finally allowed to choose between the respective schools, and it was agreed that if the Montrose (new school) Presbytery should properly support the Abington church the Luzerne Presbytery would be quiet.

The present board of elders is as follows: M. R. Wheeler, Bernard Dorshimer, Samuel Whaling, Thomas Chamberlin, M. W. Bliss and L. Batchelor. A Sunday-school is sustained, with M. W. Bliss as superintendent.

FREE METHODIST.

This church was organized about 1872, through the efforts of a few Free Methodists of the Abington circuit and the pastor in charge, Rev. George Harvey, who became the first pastor of this society. The original members were thirteen. The preachers have been: Rev. George Harvey, one year; Rev. James Bristol, two; Rev. E. Adams, two; Rev. William Jones, one; and the present pastor, Rev. James Bradbrook. The membership has been reduced by removals to seven in the class. Their church is a convenient gothic building, belonging to Waverly borough.

MADISON ACADEMY.

This institution was incorporated in 1840. The first board of trustees consisted of Rev. John Miller (president), Leonard Batchelor (secretary), Dr. Andrew Bedford, Thomas Smith, Lemuel Stone, William Thompson and Nicholas Reynolds. The building was erected in 1844, at a cost of about $3,000. It is a two-story wooden structure, standing ninety feet above the center of the borough. The school was opened upon the completion of the building, with Rev. G. S. Bailey as principal and Miss Sarah Bunnell preceptress. Mr. Bailey continued but one year. His successors were Profs. L. G. Dimmock, Harvey D. Walker, Granger, Carter, Carr, Rose, and Rev. Mr. Stewart. For a time the building was used for a public school, and again resumed as an academy until 1878, when it was given to the school directors of the borough for a graded school. Among the graduates of this academy may be named G. M. Harding, G. B. Nicholson, G. R. Bedford, A. H. Farnham, J. S. Bedford, G. W. Smith, D. L. Patrick and Frank Lee Benedict, the author.

WAVERLY HIGH SCHOOL.

The graded public school of Waverly was organized in 1878. Under the management of Prof. S. M. Ward and Miss P. D. Relph thorough discipline and high scholarship have been secured.

LODGES.

Waverly Lodge, No. 301, F. and A. M. was organized September 9th, 1856. The following officers were chosen, being all the charter members: William H. Smith, W. M.; C. A. Cowles, S. W.; Harrison Smith, J. W.; Gershom Post, S. D.; Abel Harrington, J. D.; Samuel Tripp, F.; N. B. Hills, S.; Philip Franklin, tiler. Many members have left this lodge to organize new ones, and the present membership is 42.

The following are the present officers: S. A. Hobbs, W. M.; J. D. Knight, S. W.; Henry Cisco, J. W.; M. W. Bliss, T.; N. B. Hills, S.

The I. O. of O. F. of Waverly was organized in 1847. Among the leading members were T. W. Patterson, G. W. Bailey, C. A. Cowles, John Stow, Thomas Smith, Davis Dean, Amasa Dean, O. L. Halsted, and Dr. A. Bedford. In 1859 the lodge surrendered its charter and ceased to exist.

The I. O. of G. T. of Waverly was organized in 1866, with nearly forty members. It steadily increased in numbers and influence until many of the best citizens of both sexes were among its membership. Two monthly papers were published, viz.: "Waverly Magazine" and "Ladies' Templar." This society has surrendered its charter.

BENTON TOWNSHIP.

IN 1838 this township was formed from Nicholson, and was named in honor of the late Hon. Thomas H. Benton, a United States senator from Missouri. Its population was 1,055 in 1870 and 1,148 in 1880.

At the head of Finn pond was the old camping ground of the Indians. It lay on the trail from the head waters of the Lehigh to Great Bend, on the Susquehanna. Here have been found large quantities of arrow heads, stone hatchets, and other relics.

One Bassett, after whom Bassett pond is named, is supposed to have been the pioneer settler of Benton. He located at the mouth of Bassett creek, near Wallsville, in 1810 or 1811, where D. Long now lives. This land was obtained from the State by a patent deed, as it was called, and was formerly known as the "Esquire John Marcy tract." It is now known as the "Prickley Ash flats." The old Bassett property is now owned by different parties.

The next settler was James Halsted, who built his log cabin in the hollow north of Fleetville, at the head of Finn pond, on the west side of the turnpike.

In 1820 two frame houses were built, the first by Thomas Chambers, where D. Sweet now lives, on the turnpike south of Fleetville, and the other by John Finn, north of Fleetville, where Mrs. Jane Green now lives. The pioneer frame barn (still standing) was built in 1820 by William Finn, near Mrs. Green's, at the head of Finn pond. The first brick house was built by Ira L. Lewis in 1838 or 1839, in the south part of the township, where Mrs. Lewis still resides. Mr. Lewis made the brick on the farm. Timothy Warner built a house and barn in 1820 or 1821, where J. W. Everts now lives. The pioneer nurserymen were Isaac Doud and Parmenus Brundage, who set out orchards as early as 1820, in the northeast part of the township. The first death was that of Solomon Finn. He died in 1821, and was buried at Fleetville. The first road through this township ran from the bend in Tunkhannock creek, at the northwest corner of the township, southerly over Tunkhannock mountain, past the head of Finn pond, keeping west of what is now Fleetville, crossing the turnpike south of Fleetville, going west of the Bassett pond, and crossing the south branch of the Tunkhannock creek at the "Prickly Ash road bridge." The first bridge was built in 1821, across the south branch of the Tunkhannock creek, where the turnpike crosses that stream. Two grave yards were occupied as early as 1821—one at East Benton, on the Seth Colvin property, where his son now lives, and the other at the head of Finn pond, near Mrs. Jane Green's. The pioneer school-house was built about 1820, in the northeast corner of the township, a little east of where the present school-house stands. It was made of logs, and many years ago gave place to the present frame building.

The first saw-mill was built in 1812 by a Mr. Monroe. He made a failure and left. His mill was just below Finn pond. The saw-mill at the outlet of Finn pond was first built in 1821 by William Finn, and has been rebuilt four times. The pioneer grist-mill was built in 1820 by Benjamin Spencer, on the south branch of the Tunkhannock creek, near the present property of Price & Halsted. It had but one run of stones and was in operation only ten or fifteen years. Another was soon after built farther down the creek by S. States; it was burned in 1850. W. E. Manchester owns and operates a small grist-mill at the outlet of Walling pond, in the southwest part of the township. There is also a grist-mill at the outlet of Bassett pond, built and operated by D. Letson. The pioneer tannery was built in 1836 by one Taft, where D. Letson's grist-mill now stands. In 1837 John Raymond built a small tannery on the little creek west of Walling pond, on the property now owned by H. Gardner. About 1852 or 1853 E. Stiles built a small tannery on the south side of Finn pond. It was burned in 1876. The tannery now standing at the outlet of Finn pond was built in 1862 by a Mr. Baylor. The turning shop on Walling creek, owned by C. Newcomb, was built by W. E. Manchester. The pioneer blacksmith, John White, located in 1812 at the head of Finn pond. His shop was made of two crotches, a ridge pole, and poles running from that on either side to the ground, the two roofs covered with hemlock bark; the ends of the building were left open for the ingress and egress of customers and fresh air. The earliest shoemaker, Elnathan Baker, opened a shop south of the village about 1820. The first postmaster was John Wells. He kept the office at his house, two miles east of the village of Fleetville, where A. Wells now lives.

JUSTICES.

The justices of the peace elected by the people, since the adoption of the State constitution of 1838, have been as follows: George W. Browning, 1840, 1845; Stephen N. Farnham, 1840; Orrin L. Farnham, 1845; O. L. Halsted, 1850; Hiram Green, 1850; I. M. Semmons, 1855; W. A. Browning, 1855; Henry Newcomb, 1860; Joseph Chase, 1860, 1865, 1870; Daniel C. Brundage, 1862; J. M. Seamans, 1866, 1872; Andrew J. Smith, 1871; Dewilton Sweet, 1874; E. C. Reynolds, 1875.

VILLAGES.

Fleetville is named after James Van Fleet. The land was formerly owned by Meredith and Clymer, who once owned nearly or quite the whole township. They were the contractors for the turnpike from Easton to Great Bend, and built it through this township. They caused lots to be surveyed, running back three quarters of a mile each way from their turnpike, and sold what they could from $2.50 to $5 per acre, according to quality. The property subsequently fell into the hands of Thomas Meredith and George Clymer, sons of the old proprietors, and they made large sales to others. William Finn bought of them all the land on the west side of the turnpike from lot 14 to lot 22, covering Fleetville on that side of the road, and all the land around Finn's pond. William Hartley and Esquire Halsted purchased the land on the other side of the turnpike, upon which the village is partly situated.

The pioneer store was built in 1838, by Rowland Richards and Nehemiah Finn, on the corner of Main and Nicholson streets. It was burned in 1842 and never rebuilt. The land is now owned by O. F. Gunther. The next store was built by Esquire Hartley, where the Benton House now stands. This stone building was converted into a hotel in 1878, and is now kept by J. W. Umphred. The first tavern, the Fleetville House, was built in 1837 or 1838, by Dr. Brundage, and kept for several years as a temperance house. It is now kept by A. Wedeman.

The earliest physician here was Dr. Nott, who remained but one year. Dr. S. M. Wheeler and Dr. Brundage followed. The present physicians are Doctors Robinson, Scott and F. B. Davidson.

There are here two churches (Universalist and Baptist), two hotels, the stores of Elliott Sweet and C. R. Bliss, a school-house, a wagon shop, the blacksmith shops of Phillips and Hiram Chase, the saloon of H. Finn, and the shoe shop of Mr. Crawford. The population is about 200. F. Chase is the present postmaster.

It is recorded that James Van Fleet made and sold nearly all the plows used in the first agriculture of the valley. He made plow-shares of gnarled knots of trees for a score of years or more. He lived to extreme old age.

At Wallsville Simmons & Green opened a store in 1850. J. M. Seaman keeps the present store. There is also a blacksmith shop, and ten or twelve dwellings.

East Benton consists of a post-office, a blacksmith shop and half a dozen dwellings. A. G. Colvin is the postmaster.

CHURCHES.

The "Strict Baptist Church of Nicholson," located at Fleetville, was organized pursuant of request made June 9th, 1832, to take letters from the "Strict Baptist Church of Abington," by Earl and Lucy Manchester, Harvey Dan Exed, Horace, Asahel and Narcissa Gardner, William and Hiram Green, Peter and Polly Cole, Silas Rhoda and John Gorman, John Cure, Daniel, Eva, George, Chloe, Stephen and Julia Reynolds, Celinda Green, Mary Stanton, Phebe Smith and Roda Peterson.

A council from neighboring churches met in Hiram Green's barn July 10th, 1832, to constitute the applicants into a church. This church was accepted September 6th, 1832, as a member of the Abington Baptist Association, and Earl Manchester was chosen the first church clerk. July 21st, 1832, Ezra Reynolds and Earl Manchester were chosen deacons.

May 10th, 1834, Elder Miller was engaged to preach once a month for the year. Nathan Callender preached half of the time for four months from May 20th, 1847, for $20. The meeting house was built in 1852, of wood, and cost about $1,500.

We find by the records that the following pastors have served this people: Elders Miller, Silas Finn, Nathan Callender, Finn, T. G. Cole, H. J. Millard, Stair, C. M. Tower, John Ballentine and Castell, the last in 1880. The church has a Sabbath-school of about 60 scholars, with Oscar Smith as superintendent.

The Universalist Church at Fleetville was built in 1852, of wood, and cost $2,500. The lot and $500 were donated by William Finn.

BLAKELY TOWNSHIP.

THIS township, formed from parts of Providence and Greenfield in 1818, was first settled by Timothy Stevens, who located near what is now Dickson City in 1786 and reared a family. In 1814 he built the first grist-mill on the Lackawanna, which was known for many years as Mott's mill after a later owner. In 1795 Nicholas F. Leuchens built a log cabin where Peckville now stands. He was an eccentric German, given to various superstitions and possessing, so tradition states, a penchant for the collection of feather beds. He was the father of God Save Nicholas F. Leuchens, who figured somewhat in the history of Luzerne county and whose portentous name was an evidence of the eccentricity of his sponsor. Captain John Vaughn settled here in 1797 and Moses Dolph in 1798, the latter becoming the owner of lands which in the hands of his descendants have proved a valuable property.

The settlement of the township was slow. In 1840 it contained only 570 inhabitants, scattered over an area of forty-eight square miles, of whom 4 are described as engaged in mining and 119 in agriculture. Ten years later the developments of coal at Carbondale and Providence had swelled the population to 1,703, but up to this date only one colliery had been opened within the township limits—that at White Oak Run, now Archbald. The building of the gravity road to Archbald in 1845 was the cause of a rapid increase of population and of important developments in the coal fields of the township, and in 1860 the census shows an increase of more than one hundred per cent. over the totals of the previous decade.

Engaged in farming on a small scale, and in lumbering and running lumber in small rafts down the Lackawanna and into the Susquehanna river, the early settlers were a rough and reckless class of men, and but few of them remained as permanent residents; while to another class, who came in about 1832, is due the development of the agricultural interests of the valley.

The old "ten mile tavern," a short distance north of Priceville, was the first regular hostelry, and at this place for many years the post-office was kept.

The proximity of the township to Providence and Carbondale, and its sparse and unsettled population, made it for the first half century a suburb of those towns; the opening of collieries at various places caused the building of villages, of which in 1880 there were six, with populations varying from five hundred to three thousand souls. Among the first immigrants were the Welsh, who were followed closely by Irish, Scotch and Germans, and within the past twenty years by a considerable number of English families, whose settlements were made in the northern part of the township. The principal part of the business done in the villages is in the hands of the Irish, Welsh, Scotch and English.

The fact that the township as a distinct organization is now extinct has rendered it difficult to trace its civil history, but the reader will find annexed as complete a list of justices, with the years of election, as can be collected from available sources:

Stephen Callender, 1840, 1845, 1850, 1855, 1860, 1865; Lewis S. Watres, 1840, 1845, 1853, 1860; Sylvanus Osborn, 1849; John P. Farnham, 1850, 1858; David J. Brown, 1855; John Gardner, 1863, 1869; Patrick Carroll, 1865; Edward Carroll, 1867, 1872; Patrick Loftus, 1868; Thomas Nealon, 1870; P. J. White, 1873.

The township was named after Captain Johnson Blakely, who commanded the American sloop of war "Wasp" in her spirited battle with the British sloop "Avon" in 1814.

In 1867 Blakely borough was formed from the territory lying west of the Lackawanna river and between the villages of Olyphant and Rushdale. In 1870 the last named was made a borough under the name of Gibsonburg, since changed to Jermyn. In 1875 Dickson City was incorporated, and two years later Olyphant, Archbald and Winton divided the remaining territory of the township, leaving only a poor district corresponding with the old town boundaries and governed by a board of three directors. In 1880 there still remained a floating indebtedness against the township, and commissioners had been appointed to apportion it among the boroughs.

During the enrollment for the first draft ordered by President Lincoln, in 1862, dissatisfaction arose among the foreign born population, and an attack was made upon the enrolling officer at Archbald that drove him from his work. A posse summoned to support him visited the place October 10th, 1862, and on being attacked by a mob of women and boys, who followed the party through River into Bridge street, fired a volley that, as is usual in such cases, involved the innocent with the guilty. Patrick Gilmartin, an old and respected merchant, fell dead with five balls in his breast, and four other persons were wounded. This decisive act rendered further violence unnecessary.

ARCHBALD BOROUGH.

THE earliest settlements within the present limits of this borough were made by Welsh immigrants in 1831—the families of John Evans, John D. Jones and Daniel and Evan Price. Another party followed in 1834, consisting of John Rees, David Davis, John Owens, Rev. John Davis and Deacon John Bowen. The settlers devoted their attention to cultivating farm products for the supply of the miners at Carbondale and vicinity until, in 1856, their lands proving to be coal property, they sold to the Tinklepaugh Coal Company for $125 per acre (the cost to them being about $3). In 1862, the purchasing company having failed to fulfill their contract, and the lands reverting to the original owners, they sold to A. Corry and Jones, Simpson & Co., at $200 per acre.

The first permanent residents in the valley were Thomas Swift, Michael Gilroy, Patrick Gilmartin and a few others, who came in 1845 to work on the gravity road. In the following year the opening of the White Oak colliery drew many more to the place. From that time the growth of the place has been healthy. The population in 1880 was 3,059.

The name was given to the place by Alver Eaton in honor of James Archbald; the name of the first settlement and post-office had been White Oak Run.

The first child born in the place and surviving the ills of infancy was John J., son of Thomas Swift. The post-office was established in 1847, with G. H. Snyder postmaster. The first store, opened in 1846, was that of David H. Taylor & Co., and was kept in the building now occupied by William H. Kearney & Co. Nearly contemporaneous was that of John Farnham, who was for years very prominent and influential in local affairs. Other early merchants were Peter Walsh, Thomas Healy, who brought a stock of goods here from England, and who is now a prominent dealer; Patrick Kearney and Patrick Gilmartin. The first hotel was built by a man named Cannon in 1846, and was burned in 1852. The first regular mails were received in 1846, by wagons between Providence and Carbondale. The Scranton and Carbondale plank road was built in 1851. Among the names most prominent in local affairs at this period were those of Messrs. Hackler, Cannon, Farnham and Hosie.

The first school-house was built in 1847, and James Savage was the first teacher. Archbald graded school was organized, with seven departments and eight teachers, in 1875. The school building was put up in that year by the Blakely township school board, at a cost of about $10,500.

PRESENT BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The "company store" of Jones, Simpson & Co., opened in 1866, does a large and evidently lucrative business; Thomas Healy carries a large and varied stock of general merchandise; W. H. Kearney & Co., successors to Patrick Moyles, is also a popular trading point; while Adam Behle & Son keep a large stock of boots and shoes; Dr. John Foote a well filled drug store; Bishop Brothers a fine assortment of general hardware and miners' supplies; F. J. O'Boyle carries on the tin and sheet iron trade; M. F. Lynott and Anthony Broderick the wholesale wine and liquor business; Anthony Kinback and John Sweeney the undertaking and furniture trade; while two tailor shops, two millinery, two boot and shoe shops, three restaurants, three confectionery stores, two groceries, three hotels, a carriage shop and two blacksmith shops complete the list of mercantile and mechanical establishments.

A handsome view of Bishop Bros.' fine establishment may be seen on another page.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

Archbald borough was incorporated in February, 1877, the first election of officers being held on the third Tuesday of that month, and resulting as follows: Burgess, John B. Lack; council—Michael Spelman (president), Thomas Law (secretary), P. J. Henegan, Thomas Malone, John Morrell, John Hofsoner; chief of police, M. J. Walsh; school directors, Dr. John Foote, J. W. Dick, John J. Kearney, John Barrett, John J. Swift, James H. White; justices of peace, Edward Carroll, P. J. White; high constable, James Gilroy.

During that year a neat brick council house and jail was built at a cost of $1,500, including lot, and a borough indebtedness of $1,600 incurred.

The officers for 1878 were: Burgess, James McGrail; president of council, Jacob Wagner; secretary, Thomas Law; councilmen, John Phillips, John Kearney, Edward McDonnell; school directors, Dr. Foote, Dr. Dick, John Kearney, James J. Jordan, J. H. White, John J. Swift; justices, Edward Carroll, John Carroll; chief of police, M. J. Walsh; high constable, Thomas Gildea.

In 1879 the borough was divided into three wards.

In 1880 the officers were: Burgess, James McGrail; councilmen—1st ward, Thomas Law, John Beck; 2nd ward, Charles Ready, M. K. Muney; 3d ward, D. J. Gilmartin, Martin J. McHale; president of council, D. J. Gilmartin; secretary, Thomas Law; school directors—1st ward, A. V. Gerbig, J. J. Williams, Herman C. Miller; 2nd ward, M. J. Walsh, John J. Kearney, James Kelley; 3d ward, Thomas Holmes, Anthony Broderick, J. J. Jordan; president of board, James J. Jordan; secretary, M. J. Walsh; high constable, James Gilroy; constable, Thomas Gildea.

The heavy freshet of September, 1878, damaged the borough streets to a large amount, but so economical has been the management that but $1,250 of indebtedness was outstanding January 1st, 1880.

MINING INTERESTS.

The White Oak Colliery.—This drift was opened by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in 1845, and operated by them until 1859, when it was sold to Judge Birdseye, of New York city, and operated under lease successively by H. Jenkins, William Nichols, Robert Salton and Patrick Kearney. After the building of the breaker, in 1860, work was suspended six months, and in 1861 Hosie & Jadwin leased the property, working until 1863, when John Jermyn became its operator for two years, succeeded by the Boston and Lackawanna Coal Company, who purchased the land of Birdseye and worked the mine until 1870. Then, on their bankruptcy, the Delaware and Hudson again came into possession, and have operated it since. The breaker has a capacity of 650 tons daily. The number of men and boys employed is 230. One breaker engine supplies the power. The drifts are worked to a distance of one and one-half miles from the entrance, which is about 800 feet from the breaker. Thirty-eight mules are in use. In 1880 a shaft was being sunk to a depth of eighty feet, at a distance of one-third mile south of the breaker. The outside foreman is Thomas Law; inside foreman, Hugh Jones; and D. J. Gilmartin and Thomas Hunter are weighmasters. The average daily production is about equal to the capacity of the breaker. John Hosie was the first foreman, succeeded by James Liddle, then by William Law, and in 1854 by Edward Jones, who had charge of the works until 1858. The vein of coal worked is the Archbald, with an average depth of ten feet.

The Eaton Colliery.—In the year 1856 Edward Jones, Alver Eaton, George Simpson and Dr. Robert Westcott formed a partnership under the firm name of Eaton & Co., and opened the drift that is still known as the Eaton mine, shipping during the year about 30,000 tons and since that time 2,500,000 tons. Dr. Westcott retired from the firm in June, 1860, disposing of his interest to Edward Jones and George Simpson. Mr. Eaton remained at the head of the firm until his death, which occurred May 24th, 1874; when the surviving partners purchased the interest of his estate, and they have conducted the business under the name of Jones & Simpson. The breaker was built in 1860, with a capacity of 750 tons daily, the colliery producing about 550. One pair of forty horse and four thirty horse power engines are in use, with two steam pumps and a powerful ventilating fan driven by two engines. The total number of men and boys employed is 305. The vein worked is the Archbald, known in Scranton as the "Clark." The headings extend two miles through tracts of C. B. Hackler, Ruth and Prudence Dilly, D. Howell, the Equity Improvement Company, Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, Nathan Wagner and Jones & Simpson, the last firm owning 105 acres. The foremen have been Alver Eaton, James Liddle, George W. Eaton and John Whyte, the last two being in charge in 1880. The company owns besides the colliery buildings an engineer's house, office and store building, and conducts a general store under the name of Jones, Simpson & Co. J. J. Williams is the silent partner and business manager.

SOCIETIES AND CORPORATIONS.

Archbald Dramatic Institute.—This society was organized in December, 1878. Its first officers were: John B. Lack, president; stage manager, J. W. Dick; secretary, D. J. Gilmartin; treasurer, H. Lathrop. It numbers about twenty ladies and gentlemen, bears a good reputation for dramatic talent and devotes its surplus receipts to the maintenance of a free public library and reading room. Dr. John Foote is the president of the institute and John B. Lack librarian.

The Archbald Water Company.—June 3d, 1875, at a meeting of citizens a committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions to the capital stock of a water company; and during the same month, the desired capital having been pledged, the Archbald Water Company was incorporated. H. D. Lindeman, Patrick Kearney, J. J. Williams, John C. Peters and John Sweeney were chosen provisional trustees, and at a meeting held June 23d of that year the following officers were elected: James J. Williams, president; W. H. Kearney, secretary; John Sweeney, treasurer. A supply of excellent water was obtained from a mountain spring some two miles east of the village. A contract for constructing the necessary works was awarded to Kirlin & Palmer. The charter (perpetual) is dated October 28th, 1875, at which time J. J. Williams, Thomas Healy, H. D. Lindeman, John C. Peters, John Sweeney, H. C. Miller and W. H. Kearney were elected directors. Thomas Law, A. V. Gerbig and Anthony Kinback were constituted a board of audit, and W. H. Kearney superintendent. In June, 1876, he resigned, but in October, 1876, was re-elected, and in 1879 he was chosen secretary. In 1878 Dr. John Foote was elected president; 1879, J. J. Williams, and in that year Philip Behle was elected treasurer and George Bishop superintendent. The capital is two hundred shares of $50 each, of which one hundred and eighty have been issued. The mains laid extend about two miles, and a sufficient head is obtained at the hydrants to throw water over any building in the business part of the borough. The value of the property is about $14,000.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Society was organized February 12th, 1880, with 52 members. The names of the first officers are: James T. White, Pres.; John Carroll, V. P.; Rev. N. J. McManus, Treas.; J. A. Reilly, Fin. Sec.; Mark McDonell, S. at A.

Archbald Lodge, No. 392, I. O. of O. F. was instituted July 4th, 1850. The first officers were: L. S. Watres, N. G.; M. T. Sayres, V. G.; J. S. Spangenburg, Sec.; D. G. Sligh, Asst. Sec.; D. H. Taylor, Treas. It has paid for the relief of brothers $3,686.50. Its officers for 1880 are: William H. Callaway, N. G.; Chris Rabbine, V. G.; J. S. Lindeman, Sec.; W. Foster, Asst. Sec.; Jacob Wagner, Treas.

Rebekah Degree Lodge No. 85 was chartered in 1877, at Peckville, and removed to Archbald in June of that year. Its first officers were: N. G., John G. Berry; V. G., Katie Roll; Treas., Susannah Stage; Sec., Margaret Barlett. The charter members numbered 16. The officers in June, 1880, were: N. G., Dora Bishop; V. G., Sophia Pfoor; R. S., Justus Bishop; P. S., Mary Beck; Treas., Catharine Lindeman; Chap., Mary Meyers.

Schiller Cornet Band was organized in 1878, with Edward F. Belding as leader, and the following members: Charles and Chris Rabbine, Henry and John Hickman, William Bonner, Peter, Anthony and John Probst, Herman and Henry Miller, William Bartlett, John Otto, Christian Dipple, Willard Hennemott. President, Charles Rabbine; secretary, William Bonner; treasurer, Henry Hickman.

Centennial Cornet Band was organized as the Archbald Band, in 1873, by John Miles, John J. Gallagher, Peter J. Ort, John Douthen and Peter Frantz. Its officers for 1880 were: President, John Lally; secretary, James Kane; treasurer, M. J. Walsh; teacher and leader, Edward F. Belding.

CHURCHES.

The Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church was organized among the Welsh settlers on "the Ridge" by Rev. John Davis, in 1834. In 1848 he secured the erection of a building, and a church organization, of which Daniel and Evan Price were the deacons, and to which Father Davis ministered continuously until his death, in 1866. The society has been weakened, but it still holds services with some regularity.

The First Presbyterian Church.—The first church of this denomination was organized at what was called Blakely Centre April 23d, 1839, by Rev. J. R. Moser, of Carbondale, and Rev. J. B. WILLIAM BISHOP.

William Bishop came from Prussia to Archbald in 1849, bringing with him his two children. He worked as a miner. His eldest son, George, became a partner in the hardware house of Foyne & Co. in 1868, and Justus, the youngest son, was in 1869 admitted to the firm, which took the name of Bishop Bros., Mr. Foyne retiring. George now resides in Carbondale, where the firm carry on a branch of their business; while Justus, who married Doretha Niemeyer, of Archbald, has charge of the firm's affairs there. A view of the neat brick store erected by them in 1875 appears on another page.

ALVER AND JAMES M. EATON.

Alver Eaton was born in Wendall, New Hampshire, and married Euphemia Simpson, of Carbondale, in January, 1847. She died in 1858, leaving five children, three of whom now reside in the place. Mr. Eaton was again married in 1860, to a lady who survives him but is a resident of another county. The subject of this sketch was an active, energetic business man, of fine social qualities, and took an active part in developing local interests, leaving an impress on society that will be long felt. His death, which occurred May 24th, 1874, was regretted by a large circle of friends. His eldest son, George W., residing on the old homestead, is the outside superintendent of the Pierce Coal Company.

James M. Eaton, a brother of Alver Eaton, was born in Montrose, and came to Archbald about 1858 as inside foreman at the Eaton colliery, which position he still holds. He married Mary Vannan, a native of Scotland, and has seven children living: James V., a locomotive engineer at the Pierce colliery; John, a track foreman for the same company; Thomas V., an engineer at the Eaton colliery; Mary, now Mrs. William Klus; Alzina, Maggie and Charles, residing with their parents.

JOHN FOOTE, M. D.

John Foote, M. D., a native of Ireland, read for his profession with Drs. Floyd and Asa Blakeslee, and graduated at the Yale medical school in the class of 1857, since which year he has been practicing at Archbald, and has had a large experience as consulting surgeon. He married (September 22nd, 1867,) Margaret Ann McAndrew, of Archbald, and has four children. Dr. Foote is an earnest friend of popular education, is the president of the Archbald Institute and Free Library and a director of the Archbald Water Company.

THE KEARNEY FAMILY.

Hon. Patrick Kearney came to Carbondale in 1830 from County Mayo, Ireland. For many years he was a railroad contractor, building roads for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, Morris and Essex Railroad Company, in Philadelphia on the Chestnut Hill extension and elsewhere. In 1846 he removed to Archbald, then known as White Oak Run, and was one of the pioneers of that borough. He served as one of the board of charities of the Blakely poor district for a number of years, and was appointed associate judge of the Carbondale district court by Governor Hartranft. On the expiration of his term he was elected to the same position by the popular vote, and held a seat on the bench until the court was abolished by the workings of the new constitution. Judge

Kearney married Mary Moyles, of Carbondale, and has had twelve children, six of whom are living. The subject of this sketch has for many years been prominent in religious and social interests, and has left the impress of a well balanced mind and superior executive ability on whatever he became identified with.

Patrick Kearney came to America in 1840, and settled in Archbald in 1845, marrying Mary O'Boyle. He has had nine children, seven of whom are living, viz.: John J., the eldest, now serving a second term as school director; Michael J., who married a daughter of Thomas Healy; Bridget, now Mrs. Heffers, of Olyphant; Patrick, a teacher in the Archbald school, and three younger children living at home; Francis, a theological student at a Catholic college, died at Wilkes-Barre on his return from a vacation.

Wilson H. Kearney is one of Archbald's best known merchants, a prominent member of the Archbald Water Company and one of its directors, and an active and widely known politician. He is a son of Hon. Patrick Kearney, and succeeded Patrick Moyles in business, which he conducts at the old stand of Snyder & Co.

GEORGE SIMPSON.

George Simpson came from Carbondale, Pa., in 1858. He commenced business at Archbald as a member of the firm of Eaton & Co., and was one of their successors, the present firm of Jones, Simpson & Co. He is an active, public spirited man, and takes a lively interest in the welfare of the place of his adoption. He is one of the principal owners of the Scranton and Carbondale Turnpike, and one of the firm of G. & A. Simpson, who own the Crystal lake property illustrated on another page.

JAMES J. WILLIAMS.

James J. Williams was born in Carbondale, Pa., and married a Miss Simpson of that place. In 1864 he removed to Archbald, and became a partner in the firm of Eaton & Co., and on its dissolution in 1874 remained as partner in the mercantile department of Jones, Simpson & Co. He was one of the founders and the first president of the Archbald Water Company, and is a director in the school board. His father, Joseph Williams, came from Connecticut to Carbondale in 1835, and died at Wilkes-Barre in 1850, leaving five children: Asa, who was killed at the battle of Mission Ridge; Charles, living in Danville, Ill.; two daughters, one the widow of George Van Law, the other the wife of Simeon Haven, both of Danville, Pa.; and the subject of this sketch, whose portrait appears on another page.

James T., his son, who married Bridget Dugan in 1868, was the first tax collector of the borough, and is president of the Father Matthew society.

PATRICK J. WHITE, born and educated in Ireland, came to America in 1850, settling in Carbondale. He was a commercial traveler four years, and since that time has been a teacher in the public schools, having been principal of the Archbald schools since 1868. He was formerly an active politician, taking a lively interest in the affairs of old Luzerne county.

JOHN WHYTE, mine foreman, was born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland. Coming to America in 1869, he settled in Ransom township, removing to this place in 1870, where he was married in May, 1872, to Sarah Willis. He has three children. He was weightmaster at the Eaton colliery until 1878, when he was appointed outside foreman, which position he now fills.

ELIZABETH WOODWARD was born in Hanover, Pa., April 27th, 1801, and married Elam Woodward, of Wayne county, Pa. She resides with William Maxcey, where Mr. Woodward located when he came to the township, and is a granddaughter of Martha Marcy.

and Lewis S. Watres were ordained ruling elders. Rev. Charles Dewitt Tappan was the pastor for two years from October 1st, 1840; then Rev. J. Bartow about two years, after which the church was destitute of a regular supply until October, 1852, when it was disbanded and letters granted to such as wished to unite with a new organization then forming at Archbald. Five accepted such letters, four new members were received on profession, and the following Sabbath these nine were constituted the Presbyterian Church of Archbald. Rensselaer Ottman and John M. Snedecor were ordained ruling elders. From November, 1853, Rev. H. Herrick was stated supply till 1855. Then there seems no record of any regular church meetings until 1865. In December of that year Rev. B. S. Foster commenced preaching to the church, and April 15th, 1866, a reorganization was effected. Andrew C. Wise and Ambrose Brundage were chosen ruling elders, and ten new members were admitted. The church now owns a plain edifice in Archbald, and has a branch organization at Olyphant with a neat chapel.

Church of St. Thomas Aquinas.—The Catholic church of Archbald was founded by the efforts of Rev. Father Prendergast, of Carbondale, and a frame building erected in 1847, which was enlarged and improved under the ministry of Father McSwiggan, the first resident pastor. In 1870 Rev. John Loughran, who succeeded Father McSwiggan, procured pledges of monthly contributions for building a larger church. In 1873 the corner stone was laid by Bishop O'Hara. Eaton & Co. were the contractors, and the architect was A. F. Amsden, of Philadelphia; the cost was $58,000. A fine view of the exterior, to be found on another page, will give the reader a better idea of the architectural elegance of the church than any mere pen picture. The decoration of the interior was intrusted to two Italian artists. M. Costiggini, to whose pencil is due the beautiful altar piece and lifelike panel pictures, is the successor of the famous Brumidi in completing the paintings in the great dome of the Capitol building at Washington. During the pastorate of Rev. N. J. McManus, in 1878, the debt on the building amounted to some $8,000, with arrears of interest. The creditors demanded their dues. The congregation united in a request to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company for the privilege of working an extra week (they then working only half time), to save their beautiful church from ruin, a request which was promptly granted; and for a week every man and boy worked faithfully in the mines and at the breakers. Voluntary contributions swelled the total of that week's work to $7,500, and enabled the pastor to cancel the balance of the indebtedness at an early date. The edifice was completed in 1875, and in August of that year was solemnly blessed and occupied for the first time. The pastor and congregation acknowledge their indebtedness for repeated acts of liberality to Messrs. Eaton, Jones & Simpson, of the Eaton colliery; Filer & Livy, of Winton; Mr. John Jermyn and the officers of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company.

Rev. N. J. McManus, the present popular pastor, succeeded Rev. John Loughran in 1875, and by his efforts the church was completed and the debt provided for. Father McManus has been for many years an active church builder, and some of the most successful monuments of that kind in the Wyoming and Lackawanna valleys are due to his self-sacrificing efforts.

BLAKELY BOROUGH.

THIS borough comprises the B. McLean, C. Weaver, J. Randall, D. Sherrard, J. Angle and E. London warrantee tracts, and is the best farming part of the old Blakely township. The farm lands are now owned principally by coal companies. The borough comprises Peckville, which has been built up mainly since the completion of the gravity road, and settled by railroad men and retired farmers. The population of the borough in 1880 was 875.

The first grist-mill was on the Mott place, and the old ten mile tavern, near Priceville, was for many years the voting place and post-office of the town.

The charter incorporating Blakely borough was granted August 27th, 1867, and the first election held at the house of L. Lillibridge, October 8th, 1867, resulting in the choice of the following officers: Burgess, J. B. Kenyon; councilmen, W. H. Hull, jr., C. D. Barber, J. W. Peck, Alexander Berry and William Bell; overseers of poor, L. L. Lyons, A. C. Wise; constable, David Lewis; assessors, L. Lillibridge, J. H. Fisher, D. Aylesworth; auditors, William Page, Ebenezer Davis, C. Cray; school directors, G. M. Hull, George Newton, William H. Hughes, William C. Cormack, Theron Ferris, Thomas Kelly; justice, Edward Jones. Other justices have been elected as follows: D. T. Lewis, 1868; Stephen Callender, 1870, 1875; W. V. Mace, 1873, 1878.

The borough ordinances were adopted in 1868. The successive burgesses have been: For 1868, W. J. McCormack; 1869, A. C. Wise; 1870, 1871, Edward Jones; 1872, J. W. Peck; 1873-75, Joseph Travis; 1876, J. D. Peck; 1877, 1878, J. G. Bell; 1879, S. N. Callender.

The officers for 1880 were: Burgess, J. D. Peck; councilmen, J. R. Colvin, S. N. Callender, M. V. Doud, J. C. Tuthill, F. L. Taylor; clerk, J. C. Tuthill.

The graded school, taught by Prof. H. E. Barnes and two assistants, has three departments of three grades each, with a total list of 230 scholars, and sustains a high reputation.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH of Blakely was early supplied by Elders John Finn, John Miller, J. B. Chase and W. K. Mott, and was a branch of the Greenfield church from 1820 until 1843, when it was formed into a church, with twenty-seven members, Revs.

Henry Curtis, W. K. Mott, Silas Finn and D. E. Bowen officiating at its institution.

The first meeting house was built in 1832, and is yet standing. In 1873 the society built a new edifice, forty by sixty feet, about three-fourths of a mile south of the old one, at a cost of $6,000; and in 1880 a mission chapel at Peckville, costing about $1,500.

Among the pastors have been Revs. W. K. Mott, O. L. Hall, Charles Parker, J. W. Lyons, J. B. Kenyon and D. J. Williams. The pulpit is now occupied by Rev. Newell Callender, a former member of the church. The two Sunday-schools have 250 scholars, and the church membership is about 90.

contains two churches, four stores, the Purdy House, the extensive planing and saw-mills of Peck Brothers, a first-class grist-mill, operated by A. C. Wise, the foundry of S. F. White, a fine public school building built for the Peckville graded school, and about 700 inhabitants.

The first impetus to business was given by Samuel Peck & Brother, who came here in 1831 and built a sash and door factory and small grist-mill on the site of the present works of Peck Brothers.

The Purdy House, kept by W. F. Ketchum, is the only hotel in the village and the best in the borough. Mr. Ketchum is a native of Prompton, Wayne county, and was formerly in the employ of the Erie Railway Company, at Carbondale. He purchased the house in April, 1880. His wife was Francis Corey, of Preston, Pa., whom he married June 20th, 1875. He has two children.

THE M. E. CHURCH OF PECKVILLE.

The first Methodist preacher at Peckville, then called Blakely, was Rev. David Williams, appointed in 1857. It was then a mission and a part of the Providence charge. The preaching services were held in "the old school-house," in the lower part of the village. Methodist preachers had before visited the place and occasionally preached to the people, among the number the distinguished Rev. Dr. George Peck. Mr. Williams served the charge two years, and organized the Peckville church. The original class was composed in part of Jeremiah Silsbee and wife, George W. Thomas and wife, Emeline Benjamin, Barbara Carey, Henry Newton, Calvin Peck, Anna Styles and Dorcas Travis, with Jeremiah Silsbee as class leader. The successive class leaders have been Calvin Peck, J. D. Peck, Charles Dowrick, C. D. Barber and Robert Tuthill.

In 1860 Rev. J. C. Woodruff became pastor, when Blakely mission was organized into the Blakely charge, including Peckville, Olyphant, Archbald (where the pastor then resided) and Jermy. During this pastorate a revival at Peckville resulted in substantial accessions of membership. In 1862 I. T. Walker came to the pastorate. He was the first pastor residing at Peckville. From 1864 Rev. C. Hynson was the pastor three years; then Rev. S. F. Wright, two years. In 1868 he built a church on a lot donated by J. D. Peck, in the center of the village, on the northwest side of Main street. It is a wooden structure substantially built, seating three hundred and costing $4,000. It was dedicated July 4th, 1868, Rev. Dr. R. Nelson, of Wyoming Seminary, officiating. Rev. G. M. Chamberlin began a year's pastorate in 1868, during which a revival increased the membership and greatly strengthened the church. From 1869 Rev. J. F. Wilbur was pastor until 1872; then Rev. G. M. Chamberlin. Rushdale was now constituted a separate church, called Gibsonburg, and the old charge was given the present name of Peckville. In 1874 Rev. J. Underwood became pastor, and in 1876 Rev. W. J. Hill, who remained until 1879, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rev. F. Gendall.

In 1877 a parsonage was built for $1,000 on a lot opposite the church, donated by the New York and Erie Coal Company.

In 1868 a Sunday-school was organized by Rev. S. F. Wright, with G. W. Thomas as its first superintendent, who was succeeded by H. Gleddon, A. Simpson, S. White, J. D. Peck and Charles Treverton. It has 150 members.

The original trustees of the church were G. W. Thomas, C. D. Barber, William Purdy, Alerick Berry, J. W. Peck, S. F. White, William Williams and James Hurd.

The church numbered in 1880 90 members, with Robert Tutlill as class leader and J. D. Peck as his assistant. The stewards that year were John Tuthill, John English, William Bell, J. D. Peck, Oliver David and Albert Newton. The church property is held in trust by C. D. Barber, president; S. F. White, secretary; John English, treasurer; Robert Tuthill and S. Reese.

HARPER LODGE, No. 707, I. O. OF O. F.

This lodge, April 25th, 1870, was instituted by and named after D. D. Harper. There were twenty charter members. Payments from the benefit fund to date amount to $1,217.24.

DICKSON CITY BOROUGH.

THIS borough had little or no importance before Richmond and Chittenden commenced developing coal drifts, in 1859. The hamlet of Priceville then sprung up about a mile north of the collieries, and several private enterprises were undertaken at what is now known as Dickson City, where the Elk Hill Coal and Iron Company absorbed most of the business.

The borough was chartered in 1875. The first election, held in October of that year, resulted in the choice of H. W. Loftus as burgess, Henry W. Smith as president, and Frank Day as chairman of the school board. Patrick Reilly was the first chief of police. The first school board was organized in 1876. There are three school-houses, all built prior to the erection of the borough.

The borough officers for 1880 were: Burgess, Martin Crippen; council—H. A. Zimmerman (president), James Labar (secretary), Patrick Reilly (treasurer), Lucius Lake, James McCauley, James Rogers and James Dougherty; president of school board, Thomas Grier; secretary, Michael McNulty; treasurer, Thomas Hanahan; chief of police, Thomas McCauley. The floating debt of the borough is $1,300.

The post-office was established in 1874, with L. E. Judd postmaster. Thomas Grier, the present incumbent, was appointed April 30th, 1879. The first justices of the peace were William D. Burke (elected in 1875) and Thomas McCauley (1877); the latter died during his term of office, which was finished by James A. Savage, who, as well as his associate Mr. Burke, still holds the office.

The population, which was 329 in 1870, had increased to 841 in 1880.

THE ELK HILL COAL AND IRON COMPANY.

This company's colliery was opened by W. H. Richmond & Co., in 1859; the breaker, erected in 1860, was the first on the gravity road between Carbondale and Scranton. It was operated by Richmond & Co. until 1863, when W. H. Richmond, Charles P. Wirtz, George L. Morss, Alfred Wirtz and G. L. Dickson organized the Elk Hill Coal and Iron Company, and succeeded to the ownership of the mine. The lands worked are the property of the Central Coal Company, the principal owners of which are Colonel J. H. Johnson and Abel Bennett, jr., who opened the first colliery at the Notch in 1853 and sold to the Pennsylvania Coal Company the lands that formed the nucleus of its present immense business. The vein is worked from drifts extending in one direction a mile and a half from the opening. The capacity of the breaker is 300 tons daily; average production, about 250 tons. The number of tenement houses is sixty; total number of men and boys employed, 225. One forty horse power engine is used at the breaker.

The cloven foot of Molly Maguireism developed itself in the attempted assassination of Superintendent L. E. Judd, of Richmond colliery, in 1872, and in the inauguration of strikes, the only effect of which was the injury of the participants. The efforts of Treasurer Richmond of the Elk Hill Company to prevent the unlicensed sale of liquor in the vicinity of the works have had a beneficial effect on all concerned.

The Dickson City File Works is owned by the Elk Hill Coal and Iron Company, and makes the "tip top hand cut steel files." It employs ten hands, under Foreman Thomas Sheldon, an old Sheffield file cutter, who claims to be able to equal the best work of English factories.

Besides the above named establishments, the company owns a large brick yard and a general store.

RICHMOND HILL FARM.

The elegant mansion of William H. Richmond, the treasurer of the Elk Hill Coal and Iron Company, completed in 1874, is a fine specimen of modern architecture and embodies some ideas of its owner that are well worthy of note, among which are its superior arrangements for heating by steam, the sensible location of registers at exposed points, a perfect and thorough ventilation, and a uniform heat secured at a very low pressure. Near this house are two spacious greenhouses, to the contents of which an experienced Scotch gardener is constantly adding; milk, carriage and boiler houses, and a fine poultry house and yard. In the barn yards may be seen the finest specimens of Jersey cattle, the importation and breeding of which is part of the business of the farm. Every part of the hundred acres is being brought under the best of treatment, and experiments in various crops afford the owner employment for his leisure and the pursuance of his favorite theory of improving the farms in this vicinity. The English system of "soiling" cattle is pursued, with satisfactory results.

JERMYN BOROUGH.

ON the 3d of January, 1870, a petition for the incorporation of the borough of Gibsonburg was granted, and a charter issued naming January 28th of that year for the first borough election; Newton H. Barber as judge of elections; Josiah Bloss and Patrick Farrell as inspectors; and James A. Rymer to give legal notice to voters of such election. January 8th, 1872, the borough lines were extended. The borough was named after John Gibson, of Philadelphia, an extensive owner of lands here which passed into the hands of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in 1874, when that corporation changed the name of the railway station to Jermy in honor of John Jermy. This change of title was adopted by the borough and the post-office department.

The officials elected January 28th, 1880, were: burgess, John Jermy; town council, Oliver G. Morgan, Patrick J. Mullen, Dr. S. D. Davis, Henry Tripp, Josiah Bloss; borough secretary, S. D. Davis; borough treasurer, A. L. Green. First meeting of town council, February 4th, 1870.

The succeeding burgesses have been as follows: John Jermy, 1870; S. S. Vail, October 24th, 1870, to March 28th, 1872; Miron H. Barber, 1872; Alfred L. Green, 1873; Henry Niemyer, 1874; Joseph Dunn, 1875; John Gardner, 1876; N. Smith, 1877; Calvin Vail (appointed), July 1st, 1877, to April 2nd, 1878; William Lietz, 1878, 1879; Joseph Harris, 1880.

The borough treasurers have been as follows: A. L. Green, 1870-72; S. D. Davis, 1873; Thomas Reunie, 1874; William B. Swick, 1875; C. D. Winter, 1876, 1877; Joseph Harris, 1878; James D. Stricker, 1879; J. R. Jones, 1880. The present valuation for tax purposes is $119,454.

The borough officers for 1880 were: Joseph Harris, burghess; council, David Carle, Benjamin Davis, C. M. Berry, Thomas Rich, William H. Jones; secretary, P. J. Mullen; treasurer, J. R. Jones.

The population of Jermyn was 1,156 in 1870, and 1,541 in 1880.

Justices have been elected as follows: Henry D. Carey, 1870, 1875; John B. Cole, 1875; John Gardner, 1874; Ira G. Westcott, 1876.

HOTELS, MINES, MANUFACTORIES, ETC.

The first hotel was built by Louis Pizer, in 1866, and is still standing, one block west of St. George's Hotel, erected by him in 1872, and well known as the leading house in the village. Mr. Pizer is still in charge. He was born in England, came to America in 1862 and settled for a short time in Archbald, commencing business here in 1866. The popular Sweeney House was built in 1870 by Eben Roberts, and passed through a number of hands before it was purchased by Ira G. Westcott in 1880. The Farmer's Hotel was built by John Nicholson in 1866.

The post-office, under the name of Gibsonburg, was established in 1869, with John Gardner as postmaster for the first six months; since that time it has been kept by Dr. S. D. Davis.

A furniture store kept by Gustav Battinburgh, a tailor shop by W. R. Palmer, the harness and saddlery shop of Thomas Walkey, a blacksmith shop, the drug and book store of Dr. S. D. Davis, the general store of John Jermyn, the meat market of Hill & Walters and a bakery and confectionery comprise the business places of the borough aside from mines and manufactories mentioned below.

Breaker No. 1 is supplied by a shaft sunk in 1857 by Offermann, afterwards operated for several years by Winton & Chittenden, and after lying idle for two years leased by John Jermyn in 1865. The breaker, built in 1860, has a capacity of 600 tons daily. Three engines and four pumps are in use, and 300 men and boys employed. Robert Carter is the superintendent.

Breaker No. 2 works coal from a slope opened in 1867, in which year it was erected. It has a capacity of 800 tons daily. The Archbald vein is here worked through some two thousand acres of the Lee, Rider and other tracts. A. L. Green is the superintendent. About 300 men and boys are employed.

The Eureka Coffin and Casket Factory (Miller Brothers & Co.) was undertaken in 1872 by its present owners, and has grown to be an important industry, employing some 40 men and boys and turning out about 30 completed coffins daily. The capital represented is about $40,000, and the business is increasing. Steam is the motive power. H. C. Miller, a practical cabinet maker, was the founder, and is at the head of the firm.

The Jermyn Steam Flouring Mills were erected by John Jermyn, their present owner, in 1870. The building is a frame structure, 40 by 80 feet and four stories in height; contains five runs of stones operated by a 60 horse-power engine. Five men are employed. The mill can produce 100 barrels of flour and 20 tons of feed or meal daily. Mr. Jermyn imports from the west 200 car loads of grain annually for use here. A specialty is made of the Valley Star brand of flour, which is well known throughout the Lackawanna valley. William B. Swick is the manager and miller.

Rushdale Powder Mills.—Powder was first made here by A. T. Rand & Co., who built the first mills in 1864, and sold to the Moosic Powder Company, who enlarged and improved the works in 1872 to their present capacity of about 325 kegs daily, employing about 40 men. Thirty-five acres of land are owned by the company, ten of which are enclosed in a high fence and contain the buildings, comprising eighteen blocks so arranged as to reduce the risk of a general destruction by fire or explosion to a minimum. Great care is taken in the manipulation of materials, but the drying house exploded November 10th, 1867; another building twice in 1870 (one man killed), and May 13th, 1872, an explosion totally destroyed the works. By the explosion of the press house, November 4th, 1873, three lives were lost, and the glazing mill blew up June 20th, 1879, when the watchman was saved by a section of a boiler falling over him and shielding him from the falling walls. The office of the mills is connected by a telegraph line with the company's office in Scranton and their mills at Moosic. A market is found in the Lackawanna valley for the entire product of the mills, and the company claim that long familiarity with the needs of miners and the use of the cartridge package enables them to produce a superior article.

The superintendents have been G. W. Rand, A. H. Boies (now president of the company) and W. S. Hutchings, the present manager.

A MOLLY MAGUIRE OUTRAGE.

On the morning of the 29th of July, 1874, during the "Molly Maguire" reign of terror, Mine Foreman A. L. Green was set upon by three strangers, who fired nine pistol shots, bringing him to the ground wounded in three places, but not fatally. William B. Swick and his son, Robert Pierce and Charles McCracken, who were at the Jermyn mill, about fifty yards away, chased off the assailants, killed one and wounded another in the foot. The corpse being given to the physicians for dissection, persons from Dunmore claimed it as the body of one O'Malia. This and other clues brought about the arrest of the wounded assassin, and under the name of Sharkey he was convicted of an attempt at manslaughter, and sent to the penitentiary for six years and eight months. So bold was this band of murderers, and so subservient were some of the local judiciary, that a warrant was actually obtained from a Scranton justice of the peace for the arrest of Robert Pierce for the murder of O'Malia, and a gang of men visited Jermyn to take him; but he had been secreted by his friends, who followed the agents of the outlaws with such pertinacity and so strong a front that they abandoned the search; after which, to avoid further complications, a formal complaint was made, Mr. Pierce taken to Wilkes-Barre, and at the first session of the

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

JERMYN BOROUGH.

was born in Suffolk, England, in 1827. Without the advantage of a thorough education, or wealthy and influential relatives, and early in life thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood, he had to struggle with the many vicissitudes and trials incident to youth single-handed and alone, and yet we find that in almost every instance he rose above and superior to them all and was successful. Finding the avenues to successful business enterprise very narrow and hedged closely about by difficulties in his native England, and hearing of the golden opportunities open to those who cared to succeed in the United States, he in company with others, in the spring of 1847, set sail for the "promised land." On arriving in New York his attention was directed to Scranton (then Slocum Hollow, as the most likely place at which to realize his expectations. Accordingly, the second day after landing in New York city found him set down in the then almost unbroken wilderness of the Lackawanna valley. To an aspiring youth of twenty years, who had been accustomed to the streets and active scenes of London, and whose every thought and purpose had been bent to the task of bettering his position in life, one can readily imagine came a bitter feeling of disappointment and discouragement when this change first broke upon his mind.

The bright scenes and active duties of London life were left behind, with all their fascination; with a vast ocean between him and relatives, in the midst of strangers, cold, heartless and exacting; with no capital save the strong arms and willing heart with which nature had endowed him, with no broad avenue opening before him to friends and affluence, he found himself in the midst of a wilderness with no immediate prospect of employment or business. To one of a less ardent and hopeful nature the realization of these facts would have been crushing. Not so, however, to young Jermyn. In casting his eye about him he soon discovered that others were in the path of success; that the new world on which he had just stepped was wide and full of rich opportunities for him as well as them, and his determination was soon formed and his plans laid. Making application to Scrantons & Platt, his first day's work was done at the old furnace unloading coal, and so well and faithfully was his task performed from day to day that he soon attracted the attention of his employers, and before many days had passed he was advanced. Encouraged by this, greater efforts were put forth, and position after position attained, until when but a few years had passed young Jermyn was no longer a dependent upon others for employment; but with experience obtained under others, and powers for controlling and directing the labor of others enlarged, he was prepared to contract for himself and thus reap the benefit of his own powers and genius. Readily perceiving this he sought and secured the contract for opening the Diamond coal mines at Scranton, and was the first man to put a shovel into that important work. Never scorning labor himself, he was ever ready, by his example and superior knowledge of the application of means to the accomplishment of ends, to further his enterprises and to gain the confidence as well as the hearty co-operation of those under his control.

His first contract having been pushed to a successful and satisfactory close during the years 1851 to 1854, he soon after entered into a contract to open and develop the coal of the New York and Pennsylvania Coal Company, situated in the notch of the mountain above Providence, and since known as the "Rockwell mines." In this undertaking he was engaged some four or five years and was highly successful. The contract having been filled and the work accepted by the company, in the year 1859 he entered into a contract with Judson Clark, Esq., for the sinking of a slope and mining the coal from the lands of the said Clark, situated on the Abington turnpike and near the mines of the New York and Pennsylvania Coal Company. Here he was engaged for some two years, when, Judson Clark having died, he, jointly with a Mr. Wells and Mr. Clark of Carbondale, Pa., became the proprietor of the mines under a lease with the estate, under the firm name of Jermyn, Wells & Co. This lease continued for three years, when the mining of the coal at this point was abandoned.

Always on the alert for an opening, and with a wonderfully penetrating mind, we find Mr. Jermyn always looking in advance, and before he had closed his engagement at one point he had another in waiting for him. Thus, before his lease expired with the Judson Clark estate, he had effected another with Judge Birds-eye, of New York city, for the working of his mines at Archbald, Pa., two miles up the valley from the scene of his last previous operations. These mines had been badly managed for many years, and their reputation was such that the proprietor found it difficult to operate them successfully. This Mr. Jermyn soon remedied, however, and he had not been in possession of the mines more than three years when the proprietor was enabled to sell his mines and coal lands to the Boston and Lackawanna Coal Company at a very large profit.

Mr. Jermyn closed his engagement here with the same success which seems ever to attend him, and, with the same foresight which has all through life characterized him, sought out and before closing his business at Archbald effected a contract for mining the coal from the lands of the Gibson estate, situated two miles up the Lackawanna river from Archbald, at what was then known as Rushdale. Here, as at Archbald, the reputation and the quality of coal to be mined were such that mining operations had been abandoned entirely, and the operators almost literally driven from the field, the mines having stood idle for several years. With all these discouragements and contrary to the advice of his friends, who could see nothing but failure and disaster in the undertaking, Mr. Jermyn, after having examined the mines for himself and satisfied his own mind that there was money to be made there, pushed steadily forward with his improvements, keeping his own counsel until he should be fully prepared to enter upon his mining operations.

Having put his machinery and buildings in thorough repair, and added largely to his facilities for mining and preparing coal, in 1875 Mr. Jermyn entered upon the most successful undertaking of his life, and laid the foundation for a large share of the prosperity and wealth which to-day crown his career. Having effected two new leases of coal to the amount of one million tons each, besides filling successfully the original contract of one million tons, all from the same estate, and with facilities for mining and delivering the entire two million tons of coal within the next ten or fifteen years, Mr. Jermyn stands to-day among the most successful and wealthy coal operators of the valley. Instead of the predictions made when he was about to enter on this enterprise proving true, just the reverse has been the result. Thoroughly sifting the community when he came, none but the better portion was retained, and the refuse driven out. Upright, honest and industrious men were encouraged to come in, and with a liberality which has always been a characteristic of Mr. Jermyn the helping hand was extended and the encouraging word spoken to those who wished to obtain a house for their families; until from a little cluster of shanties found here when Mr. Jermyn took possession, in which the occupants had no interest, has grown a large and flourishing borough, with large and well-filled churches, a graded school second to none in the county, together with fine hotels and places of business. When the borough of Gibsonburg was incorporated in 1869 it was thought fitting that it should bear the name of the estate on which it was founded; hence the name of Gibsonburg. But during 1873, the growth and interests of the borough having from its formation been so intimately connected with Mr. Jermyn and his family, it was thought but just—and the spontaneous expression of the entire community was given—that the name of the borough be changed to Jermyn.

In 1851 Mr. Jermyn married Susan, daughter of Joseph Knight, Esq., of Cornwall, England, a very estimable lady, who has been a faithful sharer of all his toils and cares, and now enjoys with him the harvest of their accumulated wealth. She was born in 1824. Their children are:

Joseph J., born July 31st, 1852; Willie, born in 1854 (died in 1874); Frank H., born in 1856; Myron, deceased; George, born in 1862; Walter, born in 1864; Edward, born in 1866; Emma, born in 1869; Susan, born in 1871, and John, born in 1873. We cannot dismiss the subject without pointing the moral and drawing therefrom a lesson for the good and encouragement of young men. Mr. Jermyn, beginning in life at the bottom round of the ladder and ascending step after step to its top, always generous, never withholding aid when appealed to by the truly needy, prompt in the payment of his debts, ever ready to right a wrong unwittingly committed, uncompromising in his integrity, temperate in all his habits, stands a bright example to those who would succeed in life and be honored by the community in which they live.

SUMNER D. DAVIS.

Sumner D. Davis, M. D., a son of Elisha and Laura A. Davis, was born in Nelson, Cheshire county, N. H., March 1st, 1846, and married Miss Laura E. Wilson, of Lynn, Mass., December 27th, 1865. They have three girls living. Mr. Davis came to Hyde Park, Pa., in the spring of 1868 nearly penniless, and entered the office of Dr. A. Davis. He earned and saved enough money by bookkeeping, keeping up his studies nights, to pay his expenses during the three years of study, besides the expenses of two courses of medical lectures, one at the University of Michigan and the other at Harvard University Medical College, Boston, Mass., where he graduated March 10th, 1869, aged twenty-three years, indebted pecuniarily to no one, but with his savings exhausted. He borrowed $50 of a brother and located in Rushdale, now Jermyn, Pa., in May, 1869. He borrowed money and built a drug store in the spring of 1870. During his period of study he served as assistant assessor of internal revenue for April and May of 1867 and 1868, also during the summer of 1868. He also worked a few months for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, making out pay rolls and paying the men at the Baltimore Coal mine, near Wilkes-Barre. After the incorporation of the borough of Gibsonburg, now Jermyn, he was elected one of the town council for three successive terms. He has been borough secretary four terms and borough treasurer one term; past master of Aurora lodge, No. 523, F. and A. M.; past N. G. of Rushbrook lodge, No. 850, I. O. O. F. and past high priest of Eureka chapter, No. 179, H. R. C., of Carbondale; and is the present (1880) general of Palestine commandery, No. 14, K. T., of Carbondale. A Democrat in politics, he has been postmaster from February 13th, 1871, about six months after the establishment of the post-office of Gibsonburg, until the present time. He has been secretary of the Gibsonburg Building and Loan Association from its organization, in October, 1871, until the present time. He joined the Masonic order in June, 1868.

A. L. GREEN.

Arthur L. Green, superintendent of the Jermyn collieries, is a native of England and has been prominently identified with colliery interests for many years, formerly residing at Providence. He has two children, one a daughter residing with her parents, the other a son, John D. Green, manager of the Union Stove Works at Pittston, Pa. Mr. Green was the subject of a cowardly attempt at assassination described in the history of the borough, which seriously impaired his general health.

W. S. HUTCHINGS.

W. S. Hutchings, superintendent of the Rushdale Powder Mills, is a native of Bermuda, West India Islands. He came to America when seventeen years of age. He entered the employ of the Moosic Powder Company as a clerk, married the daughter of the superintendent, was afterwards appointed assistant superintendent at Moosic and in 1870 was promoted to his present responsible position.

REV. WILLIAM JENKINS.

Rev. William Jenkins was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, March 1st, 1800, and married at Trevechin Church in Glamorganshire to Miss Ann Miles, who became the mother of ten children and died at Jermyn in 1860. Father Jenkins was licensed to preach in 1835, and in 1869 came to America and in the following year became pastor of the Welsh Baptist Church of Jermyn. Of his children one son, Rev. D. M. Jenkins is the pastor of a large Welsh church in Liverpool, England; another, Rev. E.

H. Jenkins, pastor of a Presbyterian church in St. Louis, Mo., and several others are living at Jermyn and other points in the Lackawanna valley.

GUSTAV BATTENBURGH, a native of Germany, came to Scranton in 1860, to Archbald the following year, and to Jermyn in 1876. He was employed in the Eureka Casket Works until the spring of 1880, when he established himself in the furniture and undertaking business. He married Jennie Jones, of Jermyn, and has two children.

BARNABAS CARTER, a native of Durham, England, born January 10th, 1823, has been for many years identified with mining interests in this State. He married Elizabeth Watson and has eight children living. Mr. Carter is a prominent Free Mason, a Son of St. George, and a warden in St. James Protestant Episcopal church.

JOHN GARDNER, born in Nottinghamshire, England, came to Carbondale, Pa., in 1845. He married Elizabeth Pratt, of Yorkshire, England, and has five children living. He has been a justice of the peace for sixteen years and has spent the most of his time in this country in the village of Archbald and Jermyn.

JOSEPH HARRIS, born in Bloomsburgh, Columbia county, Pa., came to Luzerne county in 1862 and to Jermyn in 1868. He married Mary L. Martin, of Carbondale, and has been since his settlement here connected with the mercantile department of the Jermyn collieries. He has served as borough treasurer, member of the council, and as burgess for 1880.

WILLIAM L. HILL came from Cornwall, England, in 1870, commencing business as a butcher in Carbondale and two years later coming to Jermyn, where he died March 19th, 1874. He married Grace Josephine Oliver, of Cornwall, England, who survives him. His children were William O. who married Ida W. Newell, of Jermyn, January 29th, 1879, and succeeds his father in business in the firm of Hill & Walters; Mary Oliver, married to George E. Walters, the other partner; Grace, married to Thomas Dyer, of Philadelphia; Emma M. to William A. Stewart, of Philadelphia, and Alexander, deceased.

RICHARD JAY, a native of St. Blazy, England, came to Jermyn as a miner in 1867 and has since spent several years in California and Nevada. He married Catharine Griffiths, of Jermyn, a native of Wales, and is the leader and teacher of the well-known Jermyn Cornet Band.

JOHN KNIGHT, mine foreman, is a native of Cornwall, England, and came to America in 1848. He has been engaged in mining since boyhood, working in copper, iron, gold and coal mines, and helped sink the first slopes sunk at Hyde Park. His adventures in the mines of this and other countries would of themselves form an interesting narrative. He married a daughter of Joseph Coombs, of Placerville, California; has two children living and since 1869 has been an outside foreman for Mr. John Jermyn.

THOMAS RENNIE, born in Durham, England, came to Jermyn in 1865, married Hannah Pizer, and has nine children. He has been engineer at Jermyn collieries for thirteen years, served as borough treasurer one term, and since 1871 as school director.

WILLIAM B. SWICK, a native of Bath, N. Y., settled in Abington township in 1853, and engaged in the business of a miller. He came to Jermyn and started the Jermyn Steam Flour Mills, and is now in charge of them. He married a Miss Proper, of New York State, and has two children. He served as deputy marshal and enrolling officer during the war for the Union.

THOMAS WALKEY, born in Callington, England, came to America in 1870, opening a harness shop in Jermyn. He married at Honesdale, Pa., Anna Smith. His son, Alfred William, was born in 1874. Mr. Walkey is a Son of St. George and an Odd Fellow.

IRA G. WESTCOTT, a native of Susquehanna county, came to Jermyn in 1868, working as a carpenter until 1880, when he purchased the Sweeney House, of which he is now proprietor. Mr. Westcott married Josephine Hughes, of Hyde Park, and has served one term as justice of the peace—from 1876 to 1879.

court discharged with a compliment for his courage and success.

CHURCHES.

St. James Protestant Episcopal Church.—This society was organized in 1875, and by the munificence of John Jermyn a neat edifice, costing $6,000—$5,000 of which was donated by its liberal projector—was erected, and consecrated the following year, Bishops Stevens, of the diocese, and Potter, of New York city, officiating. Rev. R. B. Peet became rector. Since his removal the parish has been without a resident pastor.

M. E. Church.—The first Methodist Episcopal society in Jermyn was organized in 1862, under the pastoral care of Rev. I. T. Walker, then stationed at Peckville. It held its services in the public school building. The membership was small and at first increased slowly. The pastors at Peckville preach on alternate Sabbaths. Under the labors of Rev. J. F. Wilbur a site was obtained in the center of the town, and the present church edifice begun. J. Jermyn, W. J. Hill and F. R. Gill were the building committee; and J. P. Sampson, F. R. Gill, C. D. Winter, J. Maynard, J. Jermyn, J. Rymer and S. Jay were trustees.

April 16th, 1872, Rev. S. F. Wright was stationed here. Under his labors the church was finished, and it was dedicated in July, 1872. The following named pastors have served the church, in the order in which they are given: Revs. S. E. Wright, two years; R. Hivens, two; J. F. Williams, two; J. V. Newell, three. The Sunday-school numbers about 200 members. C. D. Winter has been superintendent from its organization.

Much credit is due to Mr. J. Jermyn for his liberality in donating to this society the entire amount of a heavy church debt, and for the payment of one-seventh of the pastor's salary each year. This church contains an audience room seating four hundred persons; lecture room, pastor's study and class room, and a large hall for donations and festivals. A good parsonage occupies an adjoining lot. The cost of church and parsonage was $10,000.

The Jermyn Welsh Congregational Church was organized about 1865, by John W. Morgans and John W. Edwards as elders, with about 40 members. The first minister, Rev. D. E. Evans, was ordained pastor of this church in 1866. Owing to a scattering of members, the organization was ultimately abandoned. It was reorganized in the summer of 1870, with about 30 members. Rev. William Jenkins has been pastor since July 4th, 1870. The church under his care flourished greatly for a time, but owing to the unsettled state of the coal trade over forty members have moved away. Services are held in a hall, no church ever having been built.

LODGES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Aurora Lodge, No. 523, F. & A. M. was constituted October 10th, 1873. The officers installed were: Dr. Sumner D. Davis, W. M.; C. D. Vail, S. W.; O. G. Morgan, J. W.; Thomas Rennie, Sec.; John Jermyn, Treas.

The charter members numbered 16. The present officers are: C. D. Vail, W. M.; A. W. Shaw, S. W.; Frank A. Bryant, J. W.; Dr. S. D. Davis, Sec.; B. Carter, Treas.; James Shields, S. D.; Calvin Vail, J. D.; James Dunn, S. M. of C.; E. Banfield, Pur.; P. Aylesworth, tiler. The membership is 28. Up to January, 1878, meetings were held in Kinback's Hall; since then in Rymer's Hall.

Rushbrook Lodge, 805, I. O. O. F. was chartered July 12th, 1873, with the following officers: John C. Evans, N. G.; Charles Hambly, V. G.; Michael Roberts, Sec.; I. D. Stocker, Ass't. Sec.; Henry Niemyer, Treas. The first meeting was held at Kinback's Hall, and officers installed, August 5th, 1873. There were 21 charter members. The total amount paid for relief, donations and burying the dead is $727.15; collected for dues, $3,119; in treasurer's hands and in bank, $651.49. The present officers are: James P. Sampson, N. G.; John Solomon, V. G.; John D. Williams, Sec.; Richard Jay, Ass't. Sec.; A. Battenburg, Treas.; Thomas Jay, John B. Davis, Henry Niemyer, trustees. Number of members in good standing to July 1, 1880, 70; died since organization, 1; suspended or withdrawn, 7. Meetings were held in A. Kinback's Hall until September, 1876; since in Rymer's Hall.

Mayflower Lodge, No. 3, Sons of St. George was organized October 21st, 1871, by the election of John Gardner president, John Nicholson vice-president, John Ayres secretary and Oliver Morgan treasurer, with seventy charter members. The hard times following the panic of 1873 caused for a time a suspension of its operations. Its presiding officers have been John Gardner, John Nicholson, John Bainbridge, Barnabas Carter and George Bennett. Since its reorganization relief funds have been paid only to persons who have been members for six months, and the amount fixed at $3 per week.

The Gibsonburg Building and Loan Association, whose founders were M. H. Barber, S. S. Vail, Henry Kennedy, S. D. Davis, John Jermyn, Thomas Rennie, J. B. Cole, J. A. Rymer, J. A. Vanderford and H. T. Howell, was incorporated November 27th, 1871. Its first officers were: M. H. Barber, president; S. S. Vail, vice-president; Dr. S. D. Davis, secretary; John Jermyn, treasurer. The officers for 1880 were: James D. Stocker, president; Frank M. Graves, vice-president; Dr. S. D. Davis, secretary; C. D. Winter, treasurer; directors—D. Carle, George McClosky, Thomas Rich, F. R. Gill, E. T. Davis, L. Pizer, Thomas Griffiths, H. Neal, Thomas Heniwood. M. H. Barber was president until 1875; James Rymer from October, 1875, until his death, in January, 1879; since then Mr. Stocker. Dr. S. D. Davis is in the ninth year of service as secretary. John Jermyn was treasurer two years; J. J. Jermyn four years, and C. D. Winter is serving his third year. The total amount collected for dues, interest and fines has been about $40,000. The amount paid out on dues and withdrawn stock is nearly the same. But three foreclosures on real estate claims have occurred. The association's report of October 15th, 1879, showed a capital of $24,874.66.

OLYPHANT BOROUGH.

THE opening of Jones & Co.'s colliery drew here families from Archbald, Carbondale and the Wyoming valley, there having been but five or six families here. Jones & Co. opened the first store in connection with their colliery, and were followed in 1858 by D. M. Voyle, who is still a prominent merchant. The next merchant of any note was James Jordan, who opened a store in 1859, and is also now a prominent business man, a large land owner and a director of the Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank of Scranton.

The first school was taught in 1859. The first church building was erected by the Catholics. The post-office, which until 1867 was on the north side of the river and known as Blakely, was removed in that year to the building next door to the Lackawanna House, and the name changed to Olyphant.

In 1877 the borough was incorporated, and the first charter election was held February 28th, 1877, resulting as follows: M. Grimes, burgess; James Jordan, president; D. M. Voyle, secretary; R. J. McHill, collector; P. McAndrew, treasurer; Edward Hughes, street commissioner; William Mason, chief of police. This meeting, as well as the regular meetings of the borough council for some time, was held at the residence of D. M. Voyle. The council then used Voyle's Hall until the completion of the village hall and lockup, in September, 1877, at a cost of about $500. The borough laws were adopted April 2nd, 1877. The territory included in the borough limits covers the Levi Pierce, Seth Pierce, Sarah Bell Hannah Bell, Robert Waln, Joseph Thomas and Lewis Farmer warantee tracts.

The burgesses have been M. Grimes, John Humphreys, John P. McHale and George Pettigrew. In the spring of 1879 the borough was divided into three wards. The police department consists of 12 men. Patrick Loftus was chosen justice in 1878, and William Williamson and J. D. Regan in 1877. Cornelius Smith, Alexander Farnham and John F. Connolly have been attorneys for the borough.

The population in 1870 was 2,327 and in 1880 2,097.

The first hotel was built by John McKay, in 1861, and kept for a time by one Barnes. In 1866 it was purchased by William Mahon, its present proprietor, and it is known as the Mahon House. It is a well kept and popular hostelry. The Mansion House was built by John C. Edwards, in 1870. He came from Carbondale in 1858, and in 1861 opened a hotel in a frame building, which was destroyed by fire in 1870; when the present handsome block, containing two stores, the hotel, and the Odd Fellows' Hall, was erected, it being the first brick building put up in the village. The Lackawanna House, owned by John Lloyd, is an old and well known house, with an enviable reputation for neatness and quiet.

MINING INTERESTS.

The first important mining operations were conducted by Edward Jones, Lewis Pughe, Louis Landmasser and others; the two former opening a drift in the spring of 1858 under the name of E. Jones & Co., and shipping in 1859 80,000 tons, their first mine being on the Levi Pierce tract.

Landmasser & Co. carried on operations on a small scale a year or so; their drift was on the William Pierce tract and afterward operated by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company as Breaker No. 3.

Jones & Co. next opened the Eddy Creek colliery, and in the spring of 1860 erected No. 1 breaker, which was completed in July of that year at a cost of $15,000 and was the second breaker on the gravity road. During the same year they completed No. 2 breaker, at Eddy Brook, and operated both of them until 1867, when they sold to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company.

The Landmasser colliery was abandoned after working out the drifts, and No. 1 breaker, after standing idle several years, was burned in April, 1880. The collieries now in operation in the borough are the Eddy Creek and Grassy Island.

The Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, having become owners of Jones & Co.'s breaker, sunk a shaft four hundred and fifty feet deep. The workings extend about one-fourth of a mile from the shaft, through portions of the Hull, North and Mann Coal Company's and Delaware and Hudson lands. The Archbald and Grassy Island veins are worked. The capacity and average production of the breakers are about 600 tons daily. Two pairs of 30 horse power hoisting engines, one breaker engine of 40 horse power, and two single engines of 30 horse power each are used. The number of men and boys employed inside is 285, and outside 120. James Nicol is the inside foreman, and William Bell outside foreman.

Grassy Island shaft was sunk by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in 1864, and the breaker completed in the spring of 1865. The shaft is three hundred feet deep, the working sloping some fifty feet deeper and extending three-fourths of a mile through the Hull, Mott, Barker, Hallsted, B. T. Reed and Delaware and Hudson tracts. Joseph Atherton was the first outside foreman succeeded by William Bell, and in 1872 by J. G. Bell, the present manager. The first mine foreman was James Nicol, followed by Joseph Davis, and in 1874 by Andrew Patton, who has the position to this time. Two pairs of hoist engines of thirty horse power each and one breaker engine of the same power are in use. A self-acting inclined plane facilitates the transfer of cars. Two hundred and sixty-nine men and boys are employed in the workings, and one hundred and five men and boys and one locomotive about the breaker. The daily capacity and production is 750 tons, having recently been increased from 650. The shaft is five-eighths of a mile from the breaker. The number of tenant houses is nineteen.

BLAKELY, DICKSON CITY AND OLYPHANT BOROUGHS.

WILLIAM FERRIS.

William Ferris came to Blakely township when it was a part of Providence, his father, James Ferris, being the first settler on the east side of the Lackawanna river, and building a cabin in 1798 where James J. Lynch's store now stands. William, although for a long lifetime in rather delicate health, became an extensive farmer and the first practicing physician of the place, his skill in preparing roots and herbs making him widely known among the old pioneers. He died in 1878, aged eighty-four, after eighty years spent in sight of the place to which he was brought when a child. He married Anna Van Luvanee, of Philadelphia, in 1819, and had four children, all of whom are living. A portrait of the subject of this sketch and a view of the residence of his widow appear on another page.

WILLIAM HULL.

William Hull was one of the early settlers of Blakely, coming to this place in 1835, from Massachusetts. He was a selfmade man, starting in life as a laborer and pedlar of wooden trays for his brother-in-law, one Barbor, who had settled here and carried on their manufacture on a small scale. After years of economy he became the owner of two tracts of land which proved to be coal property. He had nine children, six by his first marriage and three by his second wife. The latter lady, who was Maria B. Dewey, a native of Old Hadley, Mass., survived him, residing on the old homestead in Blakely. Mr. Hull died February 8th, 1872, at the age of seventy-six years.

EDWARD JONES.

Edward Jones, born near St. Donats, Wales, in 1814, educated at Cowbridge scientific school and coming to America in 1837 to avoid a sea-faring life for which his parents had intended him, has filled so prominent a place among the business men of the Lackawanna valley as to deserve more than a passing mention. Entering the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, at Carbondale, as a miner, he was in a few years promoted to be a mine boss and in 1854 was placed in charge of that company's mines in Archbald, where he remained until 1858, when he became a partner in the successful firm of Eaton & Co., coal operators at that place. In the fall of that year, in company with two partners, he commenced operations which led to the successful development of the coal fields of Olyphant, which were continued until 1864 under the firm name of E. Jones & Co., and then sold to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. He was afterward employed by the Erie Railway Company in developing and perfecting their extensive collieries near Carbondale, and is now actively connected with coal operations as a member of the firm of Jones, Simpson & Co., successors to Eaton & Co., and also as a director of the Pierce Coal Company. In 1875 he was elected a director of the Merchants and Mechanics' Bank of Scranton. In 1877 he was nominated for Congress by the Republicans of his district, and was only defeated by nineteen votes in a district usually Democratic by 2,500 majority. As a business man he is prudent and sagacious. As a practical geologist he has few superiors in the mining regions. If an unblemished reputation, a life spent in successfully developing the material resources of one's country, and a well balanced mind are evidences by which it is safe to judge, the historian deems it not an exaggeration to note the subject of this sketch as a successful man.

JAMES JORDAN.

James Jordan, one of Olyphant's oldest and most successful merchants, was born in Ireland; came from Archbald to this place in 1859 and commenced mercantile business. He married Ann Monohan, of Scranton, and has five children. He built in 1868 the brick building now occupied by him; was the president of the first borough council of Olyphant; is an extensive property owner and a director of the Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank of Scranton. Among his business associates he is known as a man of generous impulses and unswerving integrity.

REV. J. B. KENYON.

Rev. Jefferson B. Kenyon was born in Pawling, Dutchess county, N. Y., and came to Blakely about 1832. In 1836 he married Rhoda H., daughter of Levi Callender, of that town. Mr. Kenyon was one of the earliest resident pastors of the Baptist church of Blakely, and supplied the pulpit of the church in Scott township for seven years. He retired from active service in 1871, since which time he has been engaged in looking after his farming interests. He has six children living. Harriet J. married William H. Hull, jr.; Ann Eliza married I. D. Kinsley; Mary Emma married John T. Howe; Carrie A. engaged in teaching, and Lizzie E. is a student. Charles P. Kenyon is the only son. Mr. Kenyon is an active member of the Blakely poor board.

J. J. LYNCH.

James J. Lynch, a native of Ireland, came to Olyphant in 1858. He was married on the 22nd of February, 1870, to Mary E. Mooney, of Dunmore borough, and has three children. He commenced the mercantile business here in 1870, and has been active in public affairs, serving as collector of Blakely township in 1871 and 1872, jury commissioner (the first of Lackawanna county) eighteen months, and now as president of Blakely district poor board. He is still a young man, with a fine public and business record and a large circle of friends.

ANDREW PATTEN.

Andrew Patten, mine foreman, was born in Northumberland county, England, and came to America in 1837, settling at Mine Hill Gap, Schuylkill county, where for thirteen years he was mine superintendent for Charles M. Hill. In 1850 he removed to Plymouth, where with several others he opened a colliery. Six years later he sold his interest to his partners, and after superintending the Spring Brook colliery for four years came to Blakely, where he had charge of works for Chittenden & Richmond. In 1864 he entered the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company at Olyphant, where he is now engaged as inside foreman of Grassy Island colliery. He married a Miss Percy, of England, and has eight children.

H. E. BARNES, principal of the Peckville graded school, is a native of Franklin, Delaware county, N. Y., and a teacher of long experience and uniform success. He has held his present position since 1877. He married a Miss Hogoboom, of Oneonta, N. Y., and came to this county in 1874, teaching in Scranton three years following.

JOSEPH G. BELL, mine foreman, born in Carbondale, commenced mining in 1865 at Grassy Island colliery, having previously served through the late war as orderly sergeant of Company H 52nd Pennsylvania volunteers, and participated in the battles of Williamsport and Fair Oaks, the seven days' fight and the sieges of Forts Wagner and Johnson. He has been outside foreman of Grassy Island since 1872 and member of the coal and iron police. He married Eveline Silsbee, of Peckville, where he now resides, and has one son.

WILLIAM BELL, mine foreman, was born in Carbondale and commenced mining in 1867, being engaged as outside foreman at Grassy Island for four years and since 1871 at Eddy Brook No. 2. He married Kate Cool, of Pittston, and has six children. He resides in Blakely borough and has been for years one of its officials, and is the treasurer of Harper Lodge I. O. of O. F.

ALARIC BERRY, manufacturer of and dealer in furniture, and undertaker, was born in Carbondale, and is a son of Alaric Berry, who built the first frame house in that city. He has been in business at Olyphant since 1860. He married a Miss Carpenter, of Uniondale, and has four children living. His son Cyrus, a promising young man, died December 11th, 1879, of malarial disease contracted in Kansas. Mr. Berry was formerly a sailor; entering on an Arctic whaling expedition October 26th, 1852, he spent some years in ocean service. His grandfather, Cyrus Berry, was a surgeon in the Revolution, and his great-grandfather was killed in the French and Indian war. Mr. Berry's father served in the war of 1812 with the rank of captain.

REV. BENJAMIN E. BOWEN came to America from Wales in 1841, and resided in Philadelphia five years. He was licensed to preach by the East Pennsylvania Welsh Baptist Association, and has been pastor of the church at Olyphant thirteen years. He married in Wales, and has had eleven children, only three of whom are living; one of them is a clergyman in Randolph, N. Y.; another the widow of the late Dr. Robethan, of Providence.

CHARLES BONNER, a native of New York city, when a boy of fifteen years shipped in the coasting service, and spent five years in that and the whaling service, visiting all points of prominence in the Pacific. He then engaged as engineer on the steamer "Alabama," of the Savannah line. He married Julia D. Prellis, of Lebanon, Pa., by whom he had five sons, four of whom are living. She died August 14th, 1877. He married in May, 1879, Miss Belle Moffat, of Carbondale. Since 1868 he has been engineer at plane C on the gravity road, residing in Peckville.

WINTON BOROUGH.

THIS borough comprises the warantee tracts of Thomas and Benjamin Bell, Herrington, Robert Dana, Sarah Dana, Eliza Rought, William Rowle, R. Lewis, Daniel Lewis and Sternheimer.

Prior to 1848 Judge L. S. Watres, now of Scranton, had a saw-mill at Winton, which was then known as Mount Vernon.

The land in the borough is now owned by coal and railway companies, the Erie Railway, Pierce Mining Company, W. W. Winton and Filer & Livy being the principal owners. The borough contains two small hamlets; Jessup, in the southern part, on the site of the Jessup colliery, is occupied by miners' families. A number of low saloons, a hotel opened in 1880 by W. R. Burke, and a small grocery store comprise its business interests.

Winton contains the colliery store of Filer & Livy and the office and breaker of the Pierce Coal Company and three school-houses, and had 905 inhabitants in 1880.

The borough was incorporated in 1877, the first burgess being W. J. Burke, who served for two years; for justices, Henry T. Howell and James F. Loftus were elected.

The officers for 1880 were: Burgess, P. F. McAndrew; councilmen, J. F. Loftus, James Ward, Michael Howard, Martin Lynch, Martin Walsh, Michael Sweeney; school directors, W. H. O'Connor, W. J. Burke, John Ward, John Walsh, J. E. McDermott, Thomas Gallagher.

MINING HISTORY.

In the year 1855 Judge Jessup, Michael Meylert, H. S. Pierce, Samuel Meredith and others, under the corporate title of the Lackawanna Railroad Company, commenced building a railroad from Dunmore to Jessup and established extensive coal works and railroad shops. A shaft was sunk by Andrew Nicol, and the shipment of coal commenced in 1857. The enterprise proved a disastrous failure and the financial ruin of several of the proprietors, and caused great loss to creditors, including small tradesmen and employes of the company. The lands have since passed into the hands of the Erie Railway Company. The village built up by the excitement has become an unimportant hamlet.

The Livy breaker, erected in 1880, will employ several hundred men and boys, and bids fair to restore the lost prestige of Jessup.

The Pierce Coal Company's Breaker was erected by Filer & Livy in 1872, at a cost of about $50,000, and sold to its present owners in 1877 for $22,000, the purchase including eighteen acres. The coal is mined from drifts in Archbald some two miles north of the breaker, the mine being connected with it by a railroad. The workings extend about a mile and a half from the opening, and one shaft has been sunk ninety two feet. The vein worked is the Archbald, nine feet thick. The total number of men and boys employed is 237. Two mine locomotives are in use, and one breaker and two pair of hoisting engines. The capacity of the breaker is 800 tons daily; average production about 500 tons. Operations were commenced in December, 1877, and to January 1st, 1880, the total shipments were 170,000 tons. The company bought eleven hundred acres from the heirs of Charles Wirtz, of Philadelphia. It has invested about $90,000 in lands, workings and working plant. The office of the company is at Archbald. Its incorporators were Edward Jones, J. Hosie, H. B. Phelps and H. S. Phelps.

The Filer Breaker.—This colliery, on the Elizabeth Rought tract, was erected in 1874. The first coal was shipped in May, 1875. George Filer and Thomas Livy were the builders and are the owners. When working to full capacity about 500 men and boys are employed. The capacity of the breaker is 800 tons daily; production about 600. Five pumps are worked in the mines and three pairs of stationary engines. The veins worked are the Archbald, with an average depth of seven feet, and the Grassy Island, averaging twelve feet. Workings extend through portions of the Jessup tract, owned by the firm the Bell tract, owned by the Hillside Coal Company; the Rought tract, owned by Winton & Dolf, and the Dana tract, owned by W. W. Winton and others. The firm has thirty-five tenant houses and a large store for supplying its men. The outside foreman is F. K. Taylor, the inside foreman R. D. Roberts.

THE LACKAWANNA PAINT WORKS.

This establishment was founded by Morton, Stevens & Co., in September, 1878, for making mineral paints from a vein on the David Brown tract. The present proprietors are Morton & Swift. The paints made are umber and sienna, burned and raw. The firm controls the only veins of the kind in this part of the State and makes a staple article cheaply and under very favorable circumstances.

CARBONDALE TOWNSHIP.

THE pioneer settler, David Ailsworth, from Rhode Island, located in 1802 on the "Mer-edith place." He began clearing a farm, built a little log cabin, and in the fall returned to Rhode Island for his family. The next spring he settled permanently back on the side of the mountain. Mrs. Ailsworth was the pioneer weaver of Carbondale.

The next settlers in this rough wilderness were James Holden and family, who came in 1805 and began a clearing near Ailsworth's. In two years they removed west.

In 1806 Franklin Ailsworth, son of David, came. Peter Wedeman and James Lewis in 1807 located on "Ragged island." Lewis remained but two years. Wedeman stayed and raised a family here. His attire was very imposing. He wore a bearskin for a coat, the fore legs serving for sleeves; a fawn skin vest, buck skin pants, and a raccoon skin cap with the tail hanging behind when worn.

From 1809 Roswell B. Johnson, from New York, lived five years near the old toll house below Carbondale city. Early in the spring of 1809 George Parker and his son-in-law, Winley Skinner, made a clearing on the "big flats," now occupied by a portion of Carbondale. They staid but a few months.

Christopher E. Wilbur, from Dutchess county, N. Y., located in 1810 on the Horace Stiles place. He came to manufacture the old fashioned wooden spinning wheels used along the border at that time. Nearly every fireside in the valley was soon gladdened by the hum of his wheels. He built a miniature grist-mill in 1812, on the small stream near where he lived. It had but one run of stones, no bolt, and the corn crushed by it had to pass through a common seive before being fit for use. In 1813 his house was thrown open for the use of a school and for religious services, and Elder John Miller, a Baptist, and Mr. Cramer, a Methodist, alternately preached once a month.

The wild land about Carbondale was originally owned by an Englishman named Russell, living at Sunbury. In 1812 it came into possession of William and Maurice Wurts, of Philadelphia, and they gave the name "Carbondale." It was a part of Blakely and Greenfield townships, and in April, 1831, Carbondale township and city, and a portion of Gibsonburg borough, containing in all 23 square miles, were set off from these townships and named "Carbondale."

In November, 1822, the Wurts brothers built a low, long log house for the occupancy of themselves and the workmen employed by them in digging for the black diamonds. Nothing but a single path by marked trees then led up through this township; it passed out through Rix's gap. The pioneer framed house was built in October, 1828, by James W. Goff, afterward sheriff of the county. The Milford and Owego turnpike was built about this time, and in this year the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company completed their road to this township, which was then its western terminus.

The population was 721 in 1870, and 1,163 in 1880.

Since the election of justices of the peace by the people the following gentlemen have been chosen for this township:

Henry P. Ensign, 1840; Gilbert Burrows, 1840; Robert McFarlane, 1842; Bartholomew Morrison, 1843, 1844; William Root, 1843, 1844, 1849; Archibald Law, 1845; Silas S. Benedict, 1847; Philander S. Joslin, 1849; Gideon W. Palmer, 1849; John Godding, 1851, 1857; Horace Stiles, 1854; Ira A. Goodrich, 1878.

CLIFTON TOWNSHIP.

DECEMBER 14th, 1875, this township was formed from Covington. It was originally a part of "Drinker's Beech."

Jacob Gress, the first settler, located about 1840, on his present place. Here he opened a tavern in the most primitive style.

The old historic log house subsequently gave way to the present frame building, of ancient architecture. The old "bar-room" sign in yellow letters on a green door at the south end of the house is still visible. Jacob Gress is the oldest resident of Clifton, and delights to entertain his visitors with blood-chilling bear and panther stories. He has been a mighty hunter in his day. He is the hero of seventy-three bear skins, and has killed over seven hundred deer, a large number of panthers and wolves, and much small game.

The next tavern was built by R. Gersbacher, on the plank road, in the southwest corner of the township. He located here in 1857, and in 1863 built his large and commodious Plank Road Hotel. He also built and kept a store at this place in 1870, and a blacksmith shop in 1872.

The first store, however, was built in 1863 or 1864 by Herbine, Baum & Co., at Clifton. The saw-mill here was built in 1852 by Colonel Drinker, and was subsequently sold to Herbine, Baum & Co., who carried on the lumber business until May 20th, 1875, when mill and other buildings were burned. About 1850 Colonel Drinker built a saw-mill nearly a mile northeast from Clifton village, and in 1867 or 1868 the Reading Lumber Company built a steam saw-mill at the same place. This company also had a store and blacksmith shop, and carried on a very extensive lumber business. There is no business done at present, the place consisting of a school-house and four or five dwellings. In 1873 or 1874 J. J. Wagenhorst built a steam saw-mill about half way from Gersbacher's hotel to Gress's hotel. In 1875 the boiler exploded, destroying the mill, killing a Mr. Hoffert, and injuring several other persons. The mill has not been rebuilt.

There are but two school-houses in this township—one at the Reading Lumber Company's mills, built in 1854, and the other on the Drinker turnpike, south of Gress's hotel, built later.

The first postmaster at Clifton was H. W. Drinker, who was appointed about 1852. The present postmaster is William Rees, who is also one of the largest lumber dealers in the township.

W. L. Harvey was elected justice of the peace March 17th, 1877. The population of the township in 1880 was 282.

COVINGTON TOWNSHIP.

ABOUT 25,000 acres, including this township, was purchased of the State in 1787 by Henry Drinker, father of H. W. and Richard Drinker. It has since been known as "Drinker's Beech," from the timber that covered it. In the summer of 1814 these lands were resurveyed by Jackson Torrey, of Bethany, Wayne county, into lots averaging one hundred acres each. Lots were sold at $5 per acre on five years credit, the first two years without interest; payment to be made in lumber, shingles, labor, stock, produce, or anything the farmer had to spare.

The township of Covington was formed in 1818 from the township of Wilkes-Barre, and embraced at that time the whole of Drinker's possessions in the south part of old Luzerne county. It was named Covington at the suggestion of H. W. Drinker, in honor of Brigadier General Covington, who fell at the battle of Williamsburg, in Upper Canada.

ENCAMPMENTS AND CLEARINGS.

The first encampment of the force of the Messrs. Drinker was made in 1815 near the mouth of Wild Meadow brook, now known as Mill creek, on the Lehigh river, where they built a bark shelter and slept rolled in their blankets on a bed of boughs, while a large fire blazed in front of the cabin. Now and then they were annoyed by the serenade of a school of owls attracted to the camp by the strange glare of the fire, or the piercing screams of the sleepless panther, and in damp weather by the bite of the gnats, or "punkies," as they were sometimes called. Trout and venison fed them abundantly, but if they needed other provisions supplies were taken up the Lehigh from Stoddardsville in a large batteau, towed by horse power and pushed with the setting pole.

The first clearing was made in Drinker's settlement, in 1815, by the late H. W. Drinker, on a ridge of land about a quarter of a mile south of his late residence, where he built a log house.

In 1792 John Delong, of Stroudsburg, was employed by Mr. Drinker, with several others, to mark or cut a wagon road to these beechen possessions, from a point at or near "the twenty-one mile tree" on the north and south road, also called the "Drinker road" from the fact that it was opened principally at the expense of Henry Drinker. The road cut by Delong extended in an easterly direction, passing Lake Henry, and crossed the line of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and thence taking a southerly course terminated on the Bell Meadow brook, a tributary of the Lehigh. After the return of the choppers the road grew full of underbrush and was a thoroughfare only to the hunter and his game. In reopening it in 1821 the inscription "Henry Drinker, 1792" was found rudely carved upon a tree. The celebrated "Drinker turnpike" was built through this township in 1828, the charter having been obtained in 1819. This road runs nearly due north and south through the township. Its terminal points were Philadelphia and Great Bend. The next road was from near J. Kitson's to Turnersville.

Among the early settlers were Edward Wardell, David Dale, Esby and William Holmes, George Frazee, John Genter, Henry Ospuck, John Thompson, Jacob Gress, Patrick, Owen and John Simpson, Thomas and George White, William and John Copeland and Daniel Staples.

The first grist-mill was built in 1864, by Nicholas Marcy, in the northeast corner of the township, on Roaring brook. It is now owned by Mr. Poston, and operated by A. Hinds, of Moscow. The pioneer saw-mill was built in 1821, by Esby and William Holmes, and was subsequently burned. It stood on the site of William Beck's mill. A saw-mill was built about 1840 on Roaring brook, at the grist-mill of Mr. Poston, which is still operated by A. Hinds. The first steam saw-mill was built by David Dale in 1855. Another was soon after built by Daniel Staples. The next was built by David Dale & Sons, on the Spring Brook road, a little west of Daleville. This mill, four houses and two barns were burned in May, 1880, by forest fires. The next steam saw-mill was built by William Dale & Sons, at Daleville. Each of the present mills is doing an extensive business.

In 1827, when Edward Wardell, jr., was township collector, the duplicate amounted to $96. The territory embraced in the township at that time covered the present townships of Covington, Buck, Lehigh, Clifton, Spring Brook and Madison. There was no one living in what is now Spring Brook township. Mr. Wardell was the first justice of the peace for Covington township, and served 25 years. He was 75 years of age in July, 1880.

The first settler at what is now Holgate's Mill was Mathew Hodgson, who came from London, England, and built a log house at the intersection of the Lake Henry road and the Drinker turnpike. Both roads and teams were rather scarce, and to get boards for a floor and door Mr. Hodgson carried the lumber on his back from the Lehigh river—six miles. The old log cabin gave way to a frame house a little nearer the turnpike, the foundation of which is still visible. Soon after Mr. Hodgson other settlers came in.

As a great deal of the timber in this vicinity was sugar maple, sugar making in the spring was the principal business. After that was over, the pioneers would strap a portion of the sweet proceeds of their labor upon their backs and start for the store at Nobletown, in Wayne county, a distance of ten miles; there they exchanged their sugar for a few of the necessaries of life, such as snuff, tea, tobacco, and occasionally a little rum, just for campbor.

The pioneer who, more fortunate than his neighbor, owned a cow and an ox, would hitch them together to do logging, farming and milling. The nearest mills were at Stoddardsville, down on the Lehigh, and at Slocum Hollow, now Scranton. Previous to the advent of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad the product of the Holgate mills had to be carted to Philadelphia on wagons, which took ten days to make a trip.

The following justices of the peace for this township were elected in the years mentioned in connection with their names: Richard Drinker, 1840; Jacob Beesecker, 1840, 1845; Charles A. Havenstrite, 1845; Mahlon R. Risler, 1848; Edward Wardell, 1850, 1858, 1863, 1868, 1873; Nathaniel Whitmore, 1850; John P. Havenstrite, 1853; Allen Hodgson, 1856, 1865; David Dale, 1876.

The population of the township in 1870 was 1,182; in 1880 it had fallen off to 881.

WILDERNESS EXPERIENCES.

In the winter of 1819 and 1820, which was a severe one, the family supplies had all to be brought from Stoddardsville (18 miles), Wilkes-Barre (30 miles), or Slocum Hollow (13 miles); either on hand-sleds or on men's shoulders, as it was very rarely that a team came from either of those places, and the settlers were not able to hire any conveyance. David Dale, father of Mark Dale, came near losing his life on one of those trips to Stoddardsville. Having gone for flour he was drawing a bag or barrel of it on a hand-sled; but not getting home when he was expected, the family, became alarmed and went to meet him. They found him about two miles from home almost overcome by fatigue, and he would have perished with cold before morning.

Another incident looks very much like a "providence." Before the raising of the first log building that Mr. Dale put up, probably the next summer, they had no meat and no way to get any; but on the morning of the raising a fawn seemingly about four or five weeks old came to where they were preparing the timbers. Not thinking of trying to kill it they drove it away, but in an hour or so it came back and would not leave them; and at the suggestion that it must have been sent to supply the lack of meat it was killed and dressed, and proved very good. So remarkably timid and wild are young deer, that Mark Dale, after sixty years' experience with wild animals, can account for the actions of the fawn on no instinct or habit of the deer kind.

About the middle of October, 1855, a little girl named Elizabeth Pembridge got lost in the woods. "Uncle Mark" Dale, of Markhampton, near Daleville, known to be familiar with the wilderness, was appealed to for aid in the search, and shouldering his trusty rifle ("Old Precision" he called it) he set out. The child was traced to the lower end of Cabin hollow, but here all traces disappeared; and it was only after most of the searchers had gone home, tired out, that one of the few men remaining, impelled by an influence he could not understand, and disregarding repeated calls from the others, walked directly to a spot in the neighborhood of where the most thorough search had been made, and found the missing child. Mr. Dale fired his rifle three times to announce the discovery to all interested, and the long and anxious search ended with great rejoicing.

Two or three years after this Uncle Mark led a search for a man who had wandered into the forest in a fit of insanity, and again had the pleasure of being with the successful party and announcing the glad tidings to the others through the medium of "Old Precision."

DALEVILLE.

Daleville is the principal village of the township. The first settler here was Edward Wardell, a native of Yorkshire, England. He located here in September, 1819, having bought 250 acres of land of H. W. Drinker, at $5 per acre. His house was of hewn logs, and stood between the site of the residence of E. Wardell and the Spring Brook road.

The next settler, coming a week later, was David Dale, also from England, after whom the village was named. His log cabin stood in the rear of the hotel now kept by Lewis Jones. He bought of H. W. Drinker the land on which most of the village is situated. The next settlers were Matthew Hodson, Robert Roseman, John Fish and Frederick Raish.

The first wheat crop in this part of the township was raised by Edward Wardell and David Dale, in 1820. It was sown in the fall of 1819. The first frame house in Daleville was built in 1826 by Edward Wardell, where he now resides. The present hotel was built in 1827, by David Dale. The pioneer blacksmith in Daleville was Thomas White. His shop stood where William Dale's store now stands. The first shoemaker was George White. His shop stood directly opposite Dale's store. Mrs. Sarah Raish was the pioneer weaver. Mr. Miller's house stood on the site of Mrs. Raish's log cabin.

The pioneer merchant in this village was Mr. Dale, the present merchant. His old store was on the opposite side of the road, at the north side of the cemetery. He commenced business here in 1831. The next store was opened the same year by Levi Lillibridge, in the front room of E. Wardell's house. The first tavern at this place was opened by David Dale in 1827. The same house is now occupied by Lewis Jones as a hotel. The next tavern was one kept a few years by E. Wardell where he now lives. Amasa Hollister kept tavern where Frank Hollister now lives. In 1856 E. Wardell built the store opposite his present residence, where he was engaged in the mercantile business several years. The pioneer physician hereabouts was Dr. C. Frieschkorn, who is still in practice. The first couple married in Daleville (1823) were Mr. John Dale and Miss Ellen Yates, of Philadelphia. The next were E. Wardell, jr., and wife. The oldest cemetery in this township is the one opposite William Dale's store in Daleville. The land for cemetery purposes was donated by E. Wardell and D. Dale. The school-house standing opposite Dale's store was built in 1829. One was built at Turnersville in the same year. The first death in this township was that of Henry Raish in 1828. He was a son of Frederick Raish, one of the pioneer settlers, and was about eight years of age. The pioneer school was taught in 1824 by John Fish, in his own house. Some of the surviving pupils are David, William, Franklin and Mark Dale, and Allen, Susan and Harriet Hodgson. The first carrier of mail from Stroudsburg to Great Bend was William Cottrell. The route was over the Drinker turnpike, and Daleville was one of the offices at which the mails were changed. David Dale was the first postmaster, and his son William Dale is the present one.

There are now at Daleville two churches (Methodist Protestant and Methodist Episcopal), the steam saw-mill of W. Dale & Sons, a school house, a hotel, the blacksmith shop of M. W. Hurley, a wagon shop, the store of William Dale & Sons, and about 150 inhabitants. There is a branch railroad from the D. L. & W. at Beck's Mills to this place. The grade is such that the cars loaded at the mills at Daleville run down by gravity to the main line, and on their return mules are the motive power.

The Methodist Episcopal society of Daleville, which is now a part of the Moscow charge, was organized in 1877, and consisted of Methodists living in that vicinity, together with several from the Methodist Protestant church in that place. D. F. Waddell, one of the latter, was appointed pastor of the new organization. Since 1878 this place has been united with Moscow in pastoral relation. In 1878 a new church edifice was dedicated, Rev. Dr. Charles H. Fowler, late editor of the Christian Advocate, and Rev. L. W. Peck, presiding elder, officiating. D. F. Waddell was appointed pastor in 1877, G. M. Colville in 1878, and W. B. Westlake, the present pastor, in 1879.

was settled in 1826 by William Copeland, John Simpson, Owen Simpson, John Holgate and Godfrey Janes. Four of these men were turners by occupation, hence the name. There being a large quantity of the right kind of timber in this vicinity, inducements were offered by Henry W. Drinker, the owner of the land, mills were built, and the manufacture of all kinds of brush handles was soon commenced. George Frazee, now a resident of Turnersville, worked for H. W. Drinker on the first saw-mill built here. He is the oldest resident of the place. He was born in New Jersey, September 15th, 1792; was a private in Captain Coons's Company, 16th U. S. infantry, during the war of 1812, and was in the battle of Cook's Mills. The first frame house in this place was built in 1827 by John Simpson; it is still standing.

In 1830 Rev. George Evans, of the Oneida M. E. Conference, made Turnersville one of his appointments. A class was formed and a church built, which is still standing, and occupied by the Methodists, with Rev. Mr. Stanley as pastor.

Turnersville is now a farming community, as the timber is all gone, and nothing remains of the extensive turning business except some of the foundations upon which the mills stood.

BECK'S MILLS.

The first mill here was built in 1821, by Richard Esbee. The old saw-mill was taken down several years ago, and the present large mills were built by Mr. Beck. There are several dwellings and about 50 inhabitants.

STAPLESVILLE

was settled in November, 1866, by J. W. Brock and Daniel Staples, who built a steam saw-mill. In July, 1867, Mr. Brock retired from the firm, leaving Mr. Staples sole proprietor. In 1873 Mr. Staples introduced improved machinery for making clothes-pins, and in 1874 he associated J. S. Brown with him in business. The firm continues to make all kinds of lumber, also 1,000 boxes of clothes-pins per week, of five gross each; 25 men are employed.

HOLGATE'S MILLS.

Cornelius Holgate, great-grandfather of the Holgate Brothers, who now operate the turning mills at this place, commenced the turning business in Roxbury, a suburb of Philadelphia, in 1775. In 1805 he transferred the business to his son, John Holgate, who in 1818 moved his brush block factory to Laurel Run (now Parsons borough), Luzerne county, and in 1826 to Turnersville. In 1841 he transferred the business to his son, Silas G. Holgate, at what is now Holgate's Mills, where the latter in turn was succeeded in 1873 by his two sons, the Holgate Brothers, who are now making all kinds of brush blocks and handles. The enterprise and thrift of this establishment are shown in the continual increase of facilities, and the extent of their orders, which far exceed the increased capacities of their mills.

FELL TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from Carbondale township, in November, 1845, and named in honor of the late Judge Jesse Fell, who acquired considerable fame in the Wyoming valley in its early history. Its population in 1870 was 343, and 441 in 1880.

Peter F. Ball located here in the spring of 1818. He came from the State of New York, and settled very near the present residence of Woodbury Coil, in the northwest part of the township. Here he built the pioneer log house of this township, which was then a dense wilderness of valuable timber. Up to 1825 the settlers were but few; nearly or quite all up to that time had located along the western border of the township, in the vicinity of Crystal creek. Among them were John Carr, Jonathan Vail, George Reynolds, John Mills, James Farris and Peter Wedeman, who located in 1825 where his son Henry Wedeman now lives.

Up to 1825 no frame buildings had been put up, except the house of George Reynolds, and that was covered, sides and roof, with long white ash shingles split out.

The first framed house after 1825 was built by John Montgomery, where his son-in-law, Jackson Baker, now lives. The pioneer framed barn was built by George Reynolds in 1825, and another in the same year by Peter Wedeman, on Henry Wedeman's farm; it is still standing and in good condition.

The pioneer school-house was built (of logs) about 1820, on the creek, near Jonathan Vail's, and was known as the "Carr school-house," as it was near Carr's residence. The first frame school-house was built in 1831, on Vail's land, now belonging to the John Russel estate. The pioneer school teacher was Biah Hudson, whose descendants now live along the turnpike about a mile and a quarter from Carbondale. John Nelson taught in the old log school-house in 1825; some of his pupils still living are Samuel Reynolds, Euresta Ball, now Mrs. Vail, Maria Reynolds, Henry Wedeman, George Reynolds, Sheff Reynolds, Eli Farris, Silas Farris and Deacon Finch.

The earliest grave yard was on the farm where George W. Stone now lives, known as the old Wedeman farm, on the west side of the Fall brook and Crystal lake road. The next was on the Avery place. A Rider family lived there, and the first interment was of the remains of Jonathan Rider.

The first wedding of Fell township took place in 1827. Otis Williams and Emma Reynolds were the contracting parties.

The pioneer road was the one now leading from Dundaff to Carbondale, known as the "old turnpike;" and the first bridge was built on the Milford and Owego turnpike, and was 150 feet long and 30 feet high.

The pioneer saw-mill was built by George Reynolds in 1824, on Fall brook, in the southwest part of the township. It was destroyed by a flood, and rebuilt. The next one was also destroyed by a flood, since which there has been no mill at that place. The next mill was built in 1825, on the Lackawanna river, above G. L. Morse's tannery. There were subsequently several saw-mills built on Fall brook, and in 1862 they were all destroyed by the breaking of the reservoir dam owned by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, near the head waters of the creek.

The Lorillard tannery, in the southeast part of the township, on the Lackawanna river, about two miles from Carbondale, was built, burned and rebuilt previous to 1842, when G. L. Morss, the present proprietor, purchased the property. The tannery was burned again in 1855, and rebuilt the same year on a much larger scale than before. This is the only tannery in the township; it employs from 15 to 20 men, and can tan 30,000 sides of leather annually. The only store in this township was built by G. L. Morss in 1853, merely to accommodate his employes.

Amzi Wilson and James Ferris were elected justices in 1846; James Russell, 1851, 1856, 1862 and 1867; D. K. Morss, 1862; John W. Williams, 1872.

The Williams coal mine, on Elk creek, was opened in December, 1864, by J. W. & J. P. Williams, and the breaker was built in 1874. It has a capacity of 100 tons per day. It is run only through the winter and averages about 1,500 tons. There is one sixty horse power engine and six men are employed. John W. Williams is the superintendent. A saw-mill connected with this breaker was built in 1874, with a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber per day.

Elk Creek mine, on Elk creek, was opened and the breaker built in 1873 by Clarkson & Brennan. There is in use one engine of 30 horse power. There are employed on the inside of the mine 60 men and 5 driver boys, and 13 men and 12 breaker boys on the outside. The average production of coal from January 1st, 1880, to June 1st, 1880, was 100 tons per day. The outside foreman is Patrick Bridgett; inside foreman, John Killien; breaker boss, Patrick Smith; coal inspector, William Peel.

GREENFIELD TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from Abington in January, 1816. It embraces about 20 square miles, and had 821 inhabitants in 1880, two less than in 1870.

Among the pioneer settlers were Elijah Hobb and James Sacket, from Vermont, the latter locating in the west part of the township, near where Mr. Finn now lives. Nathan and Levi Wetherby came as early as 1804 or 1805. Isaac Finch came from Orange county, N. Y., and built a log house half a mile above Carey's Corners in March, 1809. A Mr. West and Mr. Smith came the same year, a little later, and located near Carey's Corners, which was then the business part of the township. Here was opened the first store, in 1830, and the first tavern, about 1820. These buildings were of unhewn logs. The tavern was one and a half stories high, with one low room below which answered every purpose for the public, and one, a little lower, above, which accommodated the family. The floor between, as well as the roof, was made of bark. Charles Berry was the landlord; meals were procured for a York shilling (12½ cents), and lodging was only 6 cents. Drinks were correspondingly cheap—rum 3c., gin or brandy 4c., and if sweetened only 5c.; a nip of grog 4c., and a bowl of toddy or sangaree, which would make a man happy, only 12c.

At this time most of Greenfield was an undeveloped wilderness, and no mansions better than a double log-house, with the cracks filled in with sticks and mud, had yet been built. Barns were mere hovels, thrown up more for the enclosure of stock than for their protection against storms or for the storage of grain, as that and the hay, such as it was, were usually stacked and a few brush fastened on the top of the stack, dignified by the name of roof.

The nearest grist-mill was thirty miles away, at Slocum Hollow, now Scranton, and men had to carry their grists on their backs through the forests, guided only by marked trees.

Elijah Welch begun blacksmithing near where Tilman Carpenter's barn now stands, in the south part of the township, about 1812. He subsequently built a shop a little south and across the road from the present fine farm residence of Charles Avery. There he remained till he died. The pioneer shoemaker, Nathaniel Finch, located in 1816 on the turnpike, between the sites of the residences of H. C. Spencer and Rev. L. Williams.

The pioneer school-house in school district No. 1 was built in 1820, of logs, and stood opposite the site of the Free Will Baptist church. The first frame house was built in 1824, by Leonard Spencer, nearly on the site of the residence of H. C. Spencer.

Greenfield boasts the largest apple tree in Lackawanna county. It stands on the farm of John Lowrey, in the northwest part of the township, and the trunk three feet from the ground measures eight feet and three inches in circumference.

Among the oldest living inhabitants of Greenfield is Mrs. Anna Finch Spencer, who was born in 1797, and has three brothers and three sisters living whose ages aggregate 543 years. Others are Tilman Carpenter, aged 83; Mrs. Catharine Kilmer, aged 84; and Mrs. Ephan Phelps, aged 82; all in good health and of sound minds.

The following is a complete list of justices of the peace elected in this township since the adoption of the State constitution of 1838: Zephron Ferris, 1840, 1847, 1852; Marcus Leonard, 1840, 1845; Henry Coon, 1845; William Kilmer, 1847; William B. Cramer, 1852, 1857; James Cobb, 1857, 1862; John Lee, 1862; John G. Snyder, 1866; J. W. Sickler, 1867; Jasper Sickler, 1872; Solomon Wedeman, 1874; George W. Cramer, 1877.

CHURCHES.

The pioneer preacher was Elder John Miller, a Baptist missionary. He came through here in 1815, making and filling appointments, the first of which was at Levi Wetherby's barn, as the most central point and most commodious place in which to hold services. He filled this appointment several years. Whenever the weather was too cold for services in the barn they were held at some of the pioneer cabins.

Worth Baptist Church.—This organization has a meeting house on the west line of the township. The association of the Six Principle Baptist church met at this place November 22nd, 1852, organized a church and chose Elder James Brown as pastor and Daniel Green and John Worth as deacons. Trustees were also elected, and a building committee appointed to finish the meeting house, which had been commenced some time previous. The meeting house was built by a stock company, with shares at $10 each, and each share was entitled to one vote in all business matters pertaining to the church property. It was dedicated November 7th, 1873, and cost $1,400. There were then about fifty members.

The following pastors have served this church: Elders James Brown, Joshua Baker, S. E. Miller, William A. Miller, Charles Tower, Mark Parks and Benjamin Miller. The present deacon is John Worth; church clerk, John L. Worth. The membership is 55.

The Sunday-school has an average attendance of 50 pupils. Z. Cure is the Superintendent.

"The General Six Principle Baptist Church" was organized February 7th, 1872, at the meeting house known by some as Thorn Hill church. At that time there were 42 members. Their church edifice was commenced in 1854, but was not completed till 1865 or 1866. The original members were formerly connected with those at Worth church, and up to 1872 the same pastors served both churches. The present membership is 41. The pastor is Elder A. J. Harrington; church clerk, J. A. Felts.

Free-Will Baptist Church.—The following were among the early members, and probably the first: Deacon Solomon Finch, Joseph Avery and wife, John Avery and wife, Mrs. John Rivenburg, Laura Wedeman, Mrs. Simpson and Sally Finch.

The church edifice was dedicated in September, 1870. Elder Halloway Clancey was the first pastor. He was succeeded by Elders Greer and Alva Fisher. The latter left in 1878. Since then there has been no pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was started by Rev. Silas Comfort, at the house of Leonard Spencer, on the site of the residence of H. C. Spencer. Among the first members were George, Albert and Richard Graves and their wives, Polly and Susan Hutchins, Samuel Hutchins and wife, Homer, Elisha and Rufus Davidson and their wives and Mr. and Mrs. P. Finn. The class was subsequently transferred to Tompkinsville, where in 1851 the society built a neat and substantial church, with a seating capacity of 200.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

ALTHOUGH Jefferson township was only formed in 1836, from Providence township, its settlement dates back to 1781 or 1782, when John Somers made a clearing at the foot of Cobb's mountain, about thirty rods west of where Asa Cobb now lives. In 1784 he sold to Asa Cobb, grandfather of the present owner, who became the first permanent settler. His cabin offered hospitality to all passing between the Wyoming valley and Connecticut. It was for many years the only habitation between Dunmore and the Little Meadows, in Wayne county.

The next settler, Elisha Potter, made a clearing and a log cabin in 1795 on the Army road, near the site of the saw-mill of E. S. H. & J. Cobb.

An Indian trail ran in nearly an east and west course across the township, south of Moosic lake and northwesterly to the top of Cobb's mountain, which was a place for signal fires. On this mountain was found at an early day a large quantity of implements used by the savages both in hunting and war. There was also an Indian camping ground about a mile north of J. Kizer's, near A. C. Beemer's place.

The Moosic or Cobb's mountain, interposing its granite boulders between Jefferson and the Lackawanna, has shut off all traces of coal formation, yet coal was discovered east of this range more than a quarter of a century ago, where an inventive genius had deposited it, having been promised a farm by the owner of the land should he find coal. He got his farm, and the capitalist and prospector lived long afterward to join in a hearty laugh over what at least one of the parties considered a good joke.

As late as 1830 there were but very few settlers in the township. Some had settled on the old Army road, and others at long intervals along the foot of Moosic mountain, as far up as Rider's gap. In 1830 Jacob Kizer located where he still lives. He was born in New Jersey, in 1800. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Emory, was also a native of New Jersey. Mr. Kizer bought land of John Spangenburg. He is a veteran hunter and the hero of numerous exciting and amusing "bear stories." Rider's gap, in the north part of the township, was named after John Rider, who located where Jonathan Swingle now lives. Joel Beers came about 1828 or 1830 and bought a place of Asa Cobb, on the Mountain road, near the Cobb road, where he lived the remainder of his days. Among the other inhabitants in 1830 we find John Swingle, Charles Potter, William Barlow, Abram Beardsley, John Sharp, Conrad Swingle and Alonzo Collins; the last named in 1830 married Miss Abigail Spangenburg. Most of these settlers came from Orange county, N. Y.

A church was organized as early as 1825 by William Barlow, a Methodist Protestant preacher. Joseph Zuilaer, Michael Mack and Michael Henforth were among the early members.

The first saw-mill was built in 1836 by Alanson Stevens, where the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre turnpike crosses the Moosic creek. The property is now owned and operated by E. S. H. and J. Cobb. Another saw-mill was built about the same time by William Barlow, on the Mountain creek, where it crosses the Mountain road. The next was built by Jacob Kizer, east of his present residence. Mr. Kizer also had a mill at Shaver hollow. The steam and water saw-mills now owned and operated by the Kizer brothers were built originally by George Spangenburg.

The pioneer tannery was built by Asa Cobb and M. McKinney in 1835, near where Asa Cobb now lives. The vats were troughs dug out of large logs. The tannery now operated by H. B. Loveland was built by Horace Kinney. It is now owned by Mr. Kelly.

The pioneer store was opened by John Loveland, who had a harness shop in connection with it, a little west of Mr. Cobb's residence. In 1848, and for a few years subsequent, Miles & Stanton kept a store in the wagon house of J. Kizer.

The first tavern was kept by Asa Cobb, as early as 1800, on the old Cobb place. This was on the main thoroughfare from Connecticut and other eastern points to the Wyoming valley, and became one of the most popular resorts and stopping places on the whole route.

The first school-house was built by B. Myers, in 1835, with funds subscribed. It was about three-quarters of a mile east of Cobb's, on the turnpike. The first teacher here was John Swingle, and the only surviving pupils are Asa and Amy Cobb. The first school, however, was taught by Miss Maria Waters, in a log barn on John Swingle's farm, now owned by Charles Hoffman. Asa and Amy Cobb studied here. The second school-house was built in 1835, at the fork of the roads north of Jacob Kizer's, and the first teacher here was a Mr. Chamberlain. Some of the surviving pupils are Zachary, John, Susan, J. E. and E. Kizer; Maria, Holley, George and Andrew Spangenburg and John Collins.

The oldest grave-yard in the township is on the Elisha Potter place on the east boundary line; the first body buried there was that of Asa Cobb, sen., who died in 1808.

The first postmaster was A. L. Burns. He kept the office at his house on the Canaan road. Joseph Myers now owns the place. The first mail carrier was Jacob Myers.

The first bridge was built in 1826, across the Moosic Lake creek at Cobb's Mills.

The population of this township was 776 in 1870 and 794 in 1880.

The following is a list of the justices of the peace for Jefferson township, with the years of their election: Jacob Kizer, 1840; Jacob Myers, 1845; Jairus M. Buckingham, 1847; Jacob E. Myers, 1850, 1865, 1870; C. S. Cobb, 1855, 1860; Marcus Day, 1855, 1860; Asa Cobb, 1840, 1865, 1870; James L. Brown, 1875; H. V. Mitchell, 1877; Frank Raushmire, 1878.

PIONEER ROADS.

In 1769 a narrow road, long called the "Cobb road," was opened from the province of New York to the Wyoming valley. This was the only road entering the valley from the eastward from 1769 to 1772. Among the fur traders traversing this lone forest path was the afterward celebrated John Jacob Astor. In 1793 there were but three dwellings on this road from the Paupack clearings, in Wayne county, to the Lackawanna—one at Little Meadows, Cobb's, and Allsworth's, at Dunmore. This road is known also as the "old Army road," over which Sullivan marched a portion of his troops in 1779, on their way to the Wyoming valley and thence to western New York. The Luzerne and Wayne Turnpike Company followed nearly the line of the old Army road when it built its turnpike in 1826 and 1827; and this route is known as the Cobb road, Army road and Luzerne and Wayne turnpike.

The second road is the one running from W. L. Peek's, on the Cobb road, to near J. Swingle's place, in the north-east part of the township, and known as the Mountain road, from the fact of its running along the foot of Capoose or Cobb mountain.

VILLAGES.

No. 21.—This is the number of a plane on the Pennsylvania Coal Company's gravity railroad. In 1847, when the road was building, this became a center. Settlers came, and at present there are about 200 inhabitants. There are here the stores of G. M. & A. S. Keyes and B. J. Cameron, and the hotel kept by Alpheus Compton. Blacksmithing is done by J. L. Brown. The shoemakers are J. H. Edwards and H. D. Spangenburg.

A post-office under the name of Drinker was established here in 1878, with G. M. Keyes as postmaster.

Gravity Lodge, No. 945, I. O. of O. F. was organized April 6th, 1877, at No. 21, with the following officers: Asa Compton, N. G.; J. W. Fisher, V. G.; S. S. Swartz, secretary; J. L. Brown, assistant secretary; Rhodes Berry, treasurer. The chief officers in May, 1880, were: J. C. Lang, N. G.; N. Ferris, V. G.; J. L. Brown, secretary. The membership is 37.

KIZER'S MILLS

is a hamlet of about 60 inhabitants. There are water and steam power saw-mills and a brush handle factory here. The steam saw-mill was built in 1875. The average amount of lumber turned out by these mills is about 300,000 feet annually. J. E. Kizer is making all kinds of brush handles and other wooden ware. A post-office, named Kizer's, was established here in October, 1879, with H. A. Kizer as postmaster. Kizer's store was built in 1879.

LACKAWANNA TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from portions of Pittston and Providence townships, in January, 1839. The population in 1880 was 5,822. Concerning the origin of the name a historian has written: "Lackawanna is a corruption of the Indian Lee-ha-ugh-hunt or Lee-haw-hanna; Lee-haw or Lee-ha, the prefix, signifies the forks or points of intersection; hanna, as in Susquehanna, Tobyhanna, Toppahannock, Rappahannock, Tunkhannock and Tunkhanna, implies, in Indian language, a stream of water. Hence the name Lackawanna, the meeting of two streams."

Lackawanna was settled by Connecticut Yankees as early as 1769 or 1770. This territory was a part of that in dispute between the Yankees and the Pennamites. Topez Williams, Silas Parks and Prince Alden, Connecticut claimants, were dispossessed by the Pennamites in 1770. In 1771 the following persons "drew lands in Lackawanna:" Jacob Anguish, Peter Daman, John Osborn, John Depeiw, Levi Green, Peter Matthews, James Hesdale, David Sanford, by Jenks Corey, David Brown, Martin Weilson, Elipolet Stevens, Daniel St. John, Elizar Fillsbury, Stephen Wilcox, Richard Woodward, Samuel Slaughter, Ebenezer West, Samuel Stubbs, by Austin Hunt; Ebenezer Marcy, by Isaac Allen, and Caleb Bates, by William Hopkins. In 1772 Jeremiah Blanchard, Abram Harden, Richard West, Samuel Slater, John Corey, Daniel Haller, Joseph Fish and Ebenezer Bachus drew lots north of the Lackawanna river, and on the south side the following: Jonathan Corey, Ebenezer West, David Sanford, Abraham Utter, Stephen Harding, Ebenezer Marcy, Augustus Hunt, Captain Bates, David Brown and James Fledget.

It was voted, April 25th, 1772, by the Susquehanna Company, "that those 35 men that is now in ye township of Lockaworna shall be entitled to all ye Companies Rights to sd. township."

December 17th, 1771, it was voted that Joseph David Sanford, Barnabas Cary, Elezer Cary, jr., Arter French, John Frazier, Timothy Reine, jr., Stephen Harden and Caleb Bates "have each one a Settling Right in ye township."

Barnabas Carey built the first log cabin erected by the white man above the falls of the Lackawanna. The next year he sold his claim to "the eight meadow lott in ye township Lockaworna to Jeremiah Blanchard for thirteen pounds and four shillings." Constant Searles and John Phillips located in the valley in 1771. Frank Phillips, who was voted a "settling right" in December, 1771, was only fourteen years of age, and settled in the "gore," between Pittston and Providence. Six years later Phillips's farm was sold to his son, John, for thirty pounds, current money. Phillips and his family were among those driven from their farms in 1784, in a manner so graphically described by Hon. Charles Miner in his history of Wyoming. After the compromising laws had pacified the valley Phillips returned and took possession of his former farm. The Westmoreland records of 1772 inform us that "Augustine Hunt, one of ye Proprietors in ye Susquehanna Purchois, has made a pitch of about one hundred and fifty acres of Land in Lockaworna township."

The first saw and grist-mills were built by the town (then Pittston) in 1774, just below the falls on the Lackawanna river. In 1775 they were sold to Solomon Strong, and soon afterward were destroyed by a flood. In 1779 Mr. Keys built a saw-mill on one of the creeks emptying into the Lackawanna, and the lumber for Lord Butler's dwelling in Wilkes-Barre was sawed at this mill and rafted down the river. The next mills were built along up the Lackawanna, and have gone to decay.

CIVIL LIST OF LACKAWANNA.

The following were elected justices of the peace from the adoption of the State constitution in 1838 to 1878, when the township was merged in Lackawanna county:

Comer Phillips, 1840, 1845; James S. Kennedy, 1840; George W. Smith, 1846; Newman Brown, 1850; G. M. Miller, 1855, 1860; Andrew W. Wheeler, 1856; George W. Albright, 1858, 1859, 1871; John D. Miller, 1865; Lyman Drake, 1869; Robert Englisser, 1869; John Hale, 1872; Martin McDonough, 1872, 1877; Terrence McAndrew, 1877.

LACKAWANNA'S COAL MINES.

Taylor shaft, a little north of Taylorsville, is owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. In 1878 there were employed in this shaft 353 men and boys, who produced 102,392 tons of coal. Sloan shaft, owned by the same company, is in the north part of the township. There were employed at this shaft during 1878 317 men and boys, and the mine produced 97,840 tons. Bellevue slope and shaft, in the north corner of the township and owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, produced in 1878 126,540 tons of coal, employing 369 men and boys. Greenwood colliery, in the south part of the township, employed 393 men and boys in 1878, who produced 139,445 tons of coal. Spring Brook colliery produced 49,408 tons in 1878, employing 241 men and boys. Hampton shaft, on the boundary line of the township, is owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. In 1878 there were 13 men and boys employed. Dodge shaft, in the north part of the township and owned by the same company, was idle during 1878. The same is true of Archbald shaft.

MOOSIC.

Moosic has a population of about 600. Here is the Langcliffe mission church, built in 1880 by the Moosic Powder Company, at a cost of about $4,000. The building is of wood, in octagon form, covered with slate and has a bell tower in front. The windows are of stained glass; the seats are placed in semi-circular form, facing the north side, where is a beautiful platform of modern architecture. Rev. Andrew Brydie supplies the pulpit.

There are also at this place six stores, four blacksmith shops, two lumber yards, two physicians, two hotels and the Moosic powder works. An account of the latter appears on page 409, in the history of Scranton, where the general office is located.

TAYLORVILLE.

At Taylorville and in the immediate vicinity are the Taylor, Pyne, Archbald and Sibley coal mines.

The first settlers were Eleazer Atherton, who located before 1800 where Ira C. Atherton now lives, and John Atherton, who settled in 1800, on the farm now owned by the D., L. & W. Railroad Company. Benjamin Pedrick came about the same time. The pioneer tavern was kept Casper Obendorfer, where Weber's Union Hotel now stands. The first store was kept by James A. Gordon in 1816, just below Ira C. Atherton's. Adam A. and John A. Coon came here in 1818.

There are at this place six churches (Calvinistic Methodist, Methodist Episcopal, Welsh Congregational, Welsh Baptist, Primitive Methodist and German Baptist), nine stores, six taverns, a barber shop, two livery stables, an undertaker, two shoe shops, a meat market, a drug store, a school-house and about 3,000 inhabitants.

The first church was built in 1848, in the cemetery opposite the Union House, on Main street.

SECRET SOCIETIES AT TAYLORVILLE.

Martin Luther Lodge, No. 22, Junior American Protestant Association was organized April 23d, 1875, with the following charter members, who were also the first officers: Morgan J. Watkins, John Stone, Thomas W. Watkins, John Francis, John W. Reese, John Harris, Joseph R. Howells, Henry B. Jones, James Evans, David, James and Benjamin J. Thomas. It admits none but male Protestants, between the ages of 16 and 30. The membership is 48. The present officers are as follows: W. M., Thomas W. Reese; W. D. M., John T. Reese; R. Sec., Joseph R. Howells; A. R. S., William J. Hoskins; Treas., Henry B. Jones; F. S., John T. Walkins; Chap., Thomas R. Davies; C., Thomas D. Jones; A. C., Thomas Reynolds; I. T., Thomas Williams; O. T., William Carter.

Temple of Love No. 7, Ivority, District D.—This temple was instituted June 22nd, 1871, with fifty charter members and the following officers: President, Rev. James R. Price; vice-president, William M. Hughes; secretary, Evan W. Hughes. All temple business is transacted in the Welsh language. The temple property is valued at $200, besides a fund of $900 on interest. The present officers are: President, Thomas E. Evans; vice-president, James E. Rees; secretary, William J. Jones. Present membership 88.

OTHER VILLAGES

At Minooka there is a Roman Catholic church, three or four stores, a small tavern, blacksmith, shoe and other shops, a school-house and about 500 inhabitants.

Feltsville, named after Isaac Felts, is a mining town owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, and has four or five hundred inhabitants.

LEHIGH TOWNSHIP.

UPON the formation of Lackawanna county its southwestern line ran through the township of Buck, dividing it into nearly equal parts, and that portion lying east of the new line was subsequently named Lehigh, from the river.

The first settler was Isaac Lewis, who is still living. He purchased land of Charles Terwilliger along the Lehigh river in the southeast corner of the township. He came in 1842 and built the first framed house in the township. The first year he was here he cleared thirty acres, planted it all to corn, and raised the first crop raised in Lehigh. He was the first man married in this township.

The pioneer school was kept in Mrs. G. F. Wardnall's house, near G. Chamberlain's, on the plank road, and the first school-house was built in 1870. It is known as the "Briar Patch" school-house and stands a little up from the plank road on the road to D. Nagle's saw-mill. There are now two school-houses.

The first graveyard was the one near Mrs. Nagle's, and the first interment was that of Mrs. John Scott.

The pioneer saw-mill was built by D. Nagle at the end of the highway leading up Choke creek.

Among the other early settlers were G. Stinger, S. and H. Nagle, A. A. Chase, A. and G. Chamberlain, A. Herbin, G. Rinker, Adam Gott, J. Williams, J. L. Scott and P. Vandom.

The township is settled only along the Lehigh, and has a population of 193.

GOULDSBOROUGH.

THIS borough was formed May 12th, 1871, from that part of Buck township, Luzerne county, which is now Lehigh, Lackawanna county. The first charter election was held May 30th, 1872, when the following officers were chosen: Burgess, James McAsy; councilmen, Charles F. Call, James H. Hoffman, J. C. Moe, William McDaniel Snyder and James McAsy. James H. Hoffman was elected president and Charles F. Call secretary of the board of councilmen.

The following persons have served as burgesses of the borough: James McAsy, 1872-74; William Leonard, 1875, 1876; Samuel Smith, 1877; John B. Gardner, 1878, 1879; D. S. Engler, 1880.

The town council for 1880 consisted of James McAsy (president), Simon Smith, A. Y. Transue and G. E. Brown (secretary).

J. C. Moe was elected justice in 1873, J. S. Bachman in 1874 and R. C. Drum in 1877.

The population of the borough is 250.

SETTLEMENT AND BUSINESS HISTORY.

Hon. James McAsy came to this place in April, 1856, with Colonel Zadoc Pratt, when not a tree had been cut except in making a roadway. He built on the site of the house now occupied by Mrs. McAsy, a little east of the borough.

The first tannery here was built in 1856, by Zadoc Pratt and Jay Gould (since the world-renowned railroad operator), and operated by them from August, 1857, to February, 1859, when Pratt sold his share to Gould, who sold a two-third interest to Loup & Lee, of New York. This was an unhappy copartnership, resulting in the death of Mr. Loup. In 1860 occurred the "Gouldsborough war," resulting in several persons being shot, and in Mr. Gould's gaining and retaining possession of the tannery property. Nothing remains of the tannery but the blackened outlines.

The pioneer store was built in 1856, by Joseph Fenner, on the corner of the street opposite Hon. James McAsy's hotel. It is now occupied by Drum Brothers as a general dry goods and fancy store.

The first postmaster was Jay Gould, appointed in 1856. The hotel now kept by Hon. J. McAsy was built in 1858; he bought it in 1864, and has occupied it since 1865.

The pioneer school-house was built in 1856; the present one in 1870.

The second store was built by Hon. James McAsy in 1867, and he was in trade till 1870. Rev. R. C. Gill, pastor of the M. E. church, now lives in the building. The next store was built by Abial Leonard, opposite the M. E. church.

In 1858 a plank road was built by a stock company from Gouldsborough to the Sand Cut station on the D., L. & W. railroad, a distance of eleven miles, at a cost of $22,000. It is still kept up as a toll road.

In 1866 an establishment for extracting the juices from hemlock bark was built at this place by George Blakely, who operated it until 1868, when it was destroyed by fire.

Woodlawn Tannery was built in 1867, by H. D. H. Snyder, at a cost of $35,000, with a capacity for tanning annually 85,000 sides of leather. In 1873 it was purchased by Hoyt Brothers, of New York, by whom it is now operated. They also have a store, and a wagon and blacksmith shop in connection with the tannery, and employ annually about 60 men.

CHURCHES.

Methodist Episcopal.—As early as 1845 the itinerant preached at the "Briar Patch" school-house, about a mile and a half east of Gouldsborough. A class is said to have been formed from which resulted the building of the present Methodist Episcopal Church on Main street, in 1857 or 1858, at a cost of about $1,000. It is a very neat wooden building seating about 200. The present membership is 27.

The Sunday-school numbers 60 pupils. Peter Williams is superintendent.

The pastors at Stoddardsville have been the preachers here. The Rev. Richard C. Gill is closing his third year's service in this place.

Roman Catholic.—The Roman Catholic church at Gouldsborough was dedicated November 9th, 1870, by Bishop O'Hara, of Scranton, assisted by Father McManus, of Dunmore. It is of wood, 26 by 40 feet, and cost $1,400. The lot, on Main street, was donated by Hon. James McAsy, who was one of the original members. Others were Daniel, Patrick, John, Ann, Mary, Alice and Eliza McAsy. The present membership is 70. This is a mission church, and is attended by Rev. Father Broderick, of Dunmore. The value of the church property is $2,000.

MADISON TOWNSHIP.

ON August 7th, 1849, this township was formed from Covington and Jefferson, and was named in honor of James Madison, because it adjoins a township named in honor of another President of the United States. It had 1,530 inhabitants in 1879, and 1,041 in 1880.

The pioneer settlers were Thomas Biesecker and Richard Edwards, who in the fall of 1824 located on a lot warranted to Thomas Match, in the northwest part of the township, where they built log cabins, and in January, 1825, they moved their families into them. The farm on which Mr. Biesecker located is owned by Peter Swartz. John H. Edwards, a descendant of the pioneer Edwards, owns and occupies the farm on which Richard located. The next settler was Thomas Depew, who is still living, and to whom we are indebted for much valuable information. He located May 26th, 1825, on the lot where he still lives. It was surveyed by Henry Drinker and warranted to John McClennan. Mr. Depew, until age and infirmity prevented, was one of the most enterprising farmers in the township. He also practiced surveying till the autumn of 1879. He was born in Wales, Sussex county, N. J., in 1795, and was married in Providence, Pa., July 4th, 1816, to Miss Abigail Rice, of Old Stockbridge, Mass. She is still living, and in possession of all her faculties. The first framed house was built by Mr. Depew in 1830, on the site of his present residence. He also built the first framed barn, in 1825. It is still in good condition. Depew and Thomas Biesecker each raised a few acres of winter wheat in 1826, the first in the township. The first orchard was set out in 1826 or 1827 by Mr. Depew, on his present farm.

The first road laid out ran from Pole ridge northeasterly through to Hartford, in Wayne county. The Drinker turnpike was built through this township during 1826 and 1827. The first bridge was built over Roaring brook at Madisonville in 1830, by Nathaniel Carter. An iron bridge has superseded it.

The pioneer school-house was built about 1830, by Thomas Depew, near where William Swartz now lives, and was known as the Bear Creek school-house. It is now being used by William Swartz as a wagon shed. Mahala and Abram Depew, who are still living, were among the pioneer pupils.

Levi Depew built a small grist-mill in 1836 on the site of Ives's furnace, and about 1830 he built a log house on or near the site of M. J. Robinson's house.

The first marriage was that of Thomas J. Edwards to Miss Eliza Carter, in 1827 or 1828. The first death was that of Merritt Depew, November 27th, 1838.

The oldest public burying ground is the one at the Bear Creek school-house. The land was donated to the township for burial purposes by Henry Drinker.

The pioneer postmaster was Thomas Depew, who was appointed about 1835, and kept the office in the old house on the site of his present residence. He procured the establishment of a mail route from Hamilton, in Wayne county, to Daleville. Abel Wright carried the mail, on foot, once a week each way.

The first collector elected after the formation of the township was Edward Simpson, Esq. Justices of the peace for this township have been elected as follows: Joseph Potter, 1850, 1860; Gilbert Dunning, 1852; Irvin Ives, 1855; Stephen S. Welch, 1858, 1868; Franklin Lancaster, 1865, 1870, 1875; John Evans, 1877.

UNION METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

For many years previous to the organization of a class there was preaching here by the Methodist itinerant. The first Methodist class here was formed in 1852, by Rev. Peter J. Coxe, of the Philadelphia Conference. The members were P. V. Bross and wife, Charles and Abigail Swartz, Thomas and Abigail Depew, Philip and Elizabeth Weldy, Adam and Ella Yeager, Daniel and Susan Evans and Mahala Schoonover. Mr. Bross was appointed class leader. This was then a part of the "Union charge." The church is of wood, 30 by 40 feet, cost $800, and has a seating capacity of 250. It stands at the "Union" crossing, a little northeast of the village of Madisonville. The society has a membership of 25.

The preachers here have been as follows: 1872-74, S. F. Wright; 1874-77, Joseph T. Burrall; 1877-80, Joseph G. Stevens.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1872, with 20 scholars, and Michael Mitchell as superintendent. Charles Swartz is the present superintendent.

THE UNION HORSE COMPANY, of Madison, Covington and Spring Brook townships, was incorporated April 23d, 1866, the object being to capture horse thieves and recover stolen animals or pay losses sustained by members at the hands of thieves. Until the election of officers F. W. Wambacker served as president, Charles A. Havenstrite secretary, and Samuel Swartz treasurer.

The following is a list of the first officers and committees elected by this company: L. C. Bortree, president; G. Y. Haines, secretary; Isaac Swartz, treasurer; B. F. Hollister and George Swartz, captains; Alanson Hinds, express rider; G. W. Swartz, Irvin Ives, Anson Swingle, Joseph Loveland, William Yeager and Peter Frederick, committee of six; Alfred Wilcox, F. W. Wambacker and Charles Swartz, committee on accounts. The officers for 1880 were: L. C. Bortree, president; Isaac Swartz, treasurer; Frank Lankester, secretary.

MOSCOW.

This village, the principal one of the township, was so named by Henry W. Drinker, from the fact that there were living here a number of natives of the famous Russian city of that name.

As soon as Mr. Drinker had commenced work on his turnpike settlers began to locate along the road, and commenced opening this previously undeveloped wilderness. The first settler at Moscow was Rev. Peter Rupert, who had been a Lutheran preacher. On the north side of Cis creek and the west side of the turnpike can be seen the outline of an old cellar. Over this spot Mr. Rupert built in 1830 the pioneer log house. Here he opened a tavern. The principal fare was pork and beans and New England rum. Mr. Rupert owned the whole site of Moscow, and sold it in 1850 to the Scranton Iron Company for $1,000. The first saw-mill here was built by Mr. Rupert in 1831, on Roaring brook, just above the mouth of Cis creek. It soon gave place to others. Mr. Rupert also built the first framed house, on the site of the old log cabin. It was a one-story house with a shed roof.

The next settler, George Swartz, in 1830 built a log cabin where now stands the elegant mansion of Edward Simpson. Mr. Swartz is a shoemaker, and worked at his trade for Mr. Drinker during the building of the turnpike, keeping the men in boots and shoes, taking half his pay in cash and half in land. The land is that on which Mr. Simpson lives. While thus engaged he acquired the title of "Turnpike George." He moved into his log house on the third Sunday in May, 1830. It was quite uncomfortable, without windows, doors, or chimney, as two feet of snow fell that day and night.

The pioneer school-house was built in 1838 or 1839, on the site of Gaige & Clements's store. It was used for church purposes until 1852. The first teacher here was Elijah Depew, and some of the surviving pupils are E. Simpson, Jacob and Charles Swartz, Fanny Griffin, Sally Jane Hines, Joseph and Henry Loveland and Hiram Depew.

The first marriage in the village was that of Leander L. Griffin, in 1852, to Miss Emeline Swartz. The first death was that of a daughter of George Swartz.

The first postmaster at Moscow was Leander L. Griffin. He kept the office from 1852 to 1856 in his store, which stood on the site of the one now kept by O. E. Vaughn, who is the present postmaster.

A stage line was established in 1848 from Stroudsburg to Scranton, running over the Drinker turnpike, and in 1856 the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad was completed through this village. John Latousche has ever since been station agent. George Swartz was the first and is the present mail carrier. He first carried the mail from Moscow to Clifton, and now carries it from Moscow to Spring Brook.

The first saw-mill, built by Peter Rupert in 1831, has long since gone to decay. The next saw-mill was built by Storms & Gardner in 1855; it is now owned by the estate of E. Hermans, of Hyde Park. The third is the steam saw-mill in the western part of the village, built by C. P. Van Brunt and still owned and operated by him. The next was a steam saw-mill, built by William E. Dodge, on the site of Rupert's garden. It was burned and the site is now owned by Rev. N. G. Parke, of Pittston. The first grist-mill after that built in 1836 by Levi Depew and rebuilt in 1842 by Joseph Potter was begun in 1868 by Mr. Ehrgood, and finished in 1873. It is still operated by him and stands on Mill street. The steam grist-mill on Mill street was built in 1873, by H. L. Gaige & Co., and it is now owned and operated by Gaige & Clements.

The pioneer merchant was Leander L. Griffin. His first store was on the vacant lot opposite the depot. He soon after built one on the site of Vaughn's store. He sold in 1856 to William Dale and Edward Simpson, and they in 1862 to Smith & Dale. The store was burned and the lot sold to S. W. Wykoff, who built the present store building. The next merchant was Joseph Loveland, who built a store between the sites of the Moscow House and Pelton's store. This was burned in March, 1870. In 1857 Yeager & Gaige commenced the mercantile business, and the firm was soon after changed to Gaige & Clements. Tunstall & Pelton were the next merchants. They were burned out in 1879, and the same year Frank Pelton built his present store on the site of the old hotel at the corner of Main and Church streets. In 1877 B. F. Summerbell opened his dry goods and grocery store on Mill street.

The first tavern was that of Rev. Peter Rupert, already described. The next one was built in 1856 or 1857, by William and Roswell Noble, on the site of Frank Pelton's store. They sold to Elias Swartz, and to Mr. Townsend. This hotel was burned in 1867. The Moscow House, Main and Factory streets, was built in 1859, by Martin Reap, who sold to Mr. Keller, the present proprietor. The Valley House, at the foot of Mill street, was built in 1873 or 1874, by Lyman Dixon, and sold in 1879 to Isaac Swartz, the present proprietor.

The Moscow cemetery was first located on land now occupied by the D., L. and W. Railroad, north of the depot. The land was bought of Rev. Peter Rupert. The railroad company gave the cemetery association the present cemetery lot on Rupert hill and $75 in cash for the original lot, through which their road runs.

The graded school building was erected in 1872; is of wood, two stories high, and cost $5,000.

The Roman Catholic church on Rupert hill was built in 1872 or 1873.

The first resident physician and druggist in the village was Dr. Wilbur, who is still practicing here. He was followed by Dr. E. A. Glover. Dr. C. Frischkorn, who lives just out of the village, in the township of Covington, located there about 1850, and is still in practice.

There are now two churches—Methodist Episcopal and Roman Catholic; three hotels—the Moscow House, Valley House and Dixon House; the stores of B. F. Summerbell, Gaige & Clements, O. E. Vaughn and Frank Pelton; the grocery and livery stable of A. Hinds; harness shop, jewelry store, two blacksmith shops, the furniture store of G. S. Brown, two shingle-mills, two grist-mills, the foundry of Irving Ives, one saw-mill, a railroad depot, a school-house, and about 300 inhabitants.

Samuel Carey, jr., now a resident of Moscow, was a private in Captain Peter Hallock's company of Pennsylvania militia in the war of 1812, and holds a pension certificate.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MOSCOW.

The class from which this church grew was organized by William Noble, a local preacher from Sterling, at Daleville, in 1826. This was the first religious organization in Covington township. Its members were Thomas Depew, John Fish and wife, Frederick Rush and wife, and Mrs Dale, wife of the elder David Dale. Soon after the organization Mrs. Thomas Depew, Mrs. Wardell, mother of Edward Wardell, and Mrs. Lucy Rice, mother of Mrs. Depew, united. Thomas Depew was leader.

The appointment was a part of the Canaan circuit, Oneida conference. In 1828 Rev. Vincent M. Coryell was on the Canaan circuit, and preached here. Among his successors were Revs. Benjamin Ellis, Morgan Rugor, William Reddy and Abel Barber. When William Reddy and Abel Barber were on the circuit—in 1836—the meetings of the society were held at Joseph Loveland's house, on the Daleville road, near Moscow. Afterward they were held at the Rupert House, near the culvert of the D., L. and W. Railroad. After the school-house was built on the site of Gaige & Clements's store the meetings were held there till the church was built.

After Thomas Depew Owen Simpson was class leader till 1859. Since then George Swartz has been leader.

This territory seems to have been in the Philadelphia conference from 1836 or 1840 till 1852, and had the following pastors: Revs. P. J. Coxe, Philo Blackman, McFarland, Calaway, Pearsall, William Walton, Munger, Hare and Frederick Illman. During the administration of the latter it was transferred to the Wyoming conference, and with it the incumbent.

In 1853, and for several years thereafter, the charge was known as Madison mission, of the Honesdale district. Rev. J. S. David was pastor. At this time it embraced Moscow, Turnersville, Union church and other school-house appointments. Under the supervision of Mr. David the present church building was commenced. George Swartz and his cousin, George W. Swartz, rendered indispensable aid in collecting funds. The church was dedicated in the winter of 1855. Charles White was pastor. Abel Barker preached the dedicatory sermon. Dr. N. Round, P. E., conducted the dedicatory services.

Since its connection with the Wyoming conference the following is a consecutive list of pastors: Frederick Illman, 1852; J. S. David, 1853, 1854; Charles White, 1855; William Shup, 1856, 1857; C. C. Smith, 1858, 1859; J. L. Race, 1860; A. J. Van Cleft, 1861; David Personeus, 1862; H. Stanley, 1863; J. T. Crowell, 1864, 1865; G. M. Chamberlain, 1866, 1868; G. A. Severson, 1869-71; J. C. Leacock, 1872, 1873; I. B. Hyde, 1874; S. G. Austin, 1875, 1876; G. M. Colville, 1877, 1878; W. B. Westlake, 1879, 1880.

LODGES AT MOSCOW.

Moscow Lodge, No. 703, I. O. of O. F. was instituted

March 30th, 1870. The following first officers comprised all the charter members except S. G. Coglizer: Franklin Lancaster, N. G.; William H. Brindle, V. G.; William Brown, secretary; A. Caterson, assistant secretary; C. P. Van Brunt, treasurer; W. S. Watrous, R. S. N. G.; B. E. Mitchell, L. S. N. G.; D. K. Watrous, conductor; O. S. Wilcox, R. S. S.; F. Striker, L. S. S.; J. H. Depew, O. G.; D. A. Wilder, I. G.; J. A. Hallett, R. S. V. G.; and W. J. Smith, L. S. V. G.

The membership is 69. The officers for the present term (May, 1880) are as follows: John Smith, N. G.; J. McCarty, V. G.; C. P. Van Brunt, Sec.; Moses Davis, A. S.; Franklin Lancaster, treasurer.

Moscow Lodge, No. 504, F. and A. M. was instituted April 12th, 1872, with 14 charter members. The original officers were: W. M., Jacob H. Pile; S. W., Albert I. Ackerly; J. W., Elijah A. Glover; secretary, Daniel Staples; treasurer, Henry L. Gaige.

The present membership is 35. The officers of the lodge for 1880 were: A. H. Bortree, W. M.; E. T. Swartz, S. W.; Peter Walters, J. W.; W. A. Holgate, secretary; Isaac Swartz, treasurer; Chester Swartz, tiler.

CLARKSVILLE

was first settled by Philip Weldy, who deeded the land to his son Isaac, and he to Dr. Milton Clark, from whom the hamlet is named. He came here in 1848. There was once a considerable business done here. Charles Frazer built and operated a sash and blind factory, and there was a steam planing-mill. F. M. Depew kept a store a few years. Mr. Clark (a "Christian") preached several years at Madisonville. He died in 1873.

CAREY'S CORNERS.

This hamlet was named after Parker Carey, who was the first settler, locating where Mrs. Carey now lives. Benjamin Pedrick, another early settler, located above the Corners, where Mrs. Pedrick now lives. Dr. Charles H. Fikes has practiced here since 1876. John Alt, the village blacksmith, came in 1860; Peter Alt in 1840, since when he has worked at the tailors' trade. The carpenter of the hamlet is George Markley, who came in 1876. Samuel J. Hornbecker, shoemaker, moved here in 1868.

Madison Hall, a wooden building, twenty-two by thirty-six feet, built in 1868, is used by the Good Templars. It was built by a stock company, and cost $600. The population of the place is about 75.

MADISONVILLE.

This village was first settled by William Evans, a farmer, in 1830. The first business establishment was the store kept by Collins & Swartz, in 1854. They were succeeded by John Evans, son of William Evans, in 1856; he by Philip Callender in 1869; Callender by Myers & Summerbell in 1876, and the business was carried on by B. S. Myers in 1878 and 1879. A new store house was built by John Evans in 1878-79, and business resumed in it by him in December, 1879. It is a two-story building, the lower part occupied by Mr. Evans as a general dry goods and grocery store, and the upper part as a hall, locally known as Evans's Hall. This is the only store here. There are about 60 inhabitants, a "Christian" church, the steam saw-mill of Irving Ives, a school-house and blacksmith shop. John Evans was the first postmaster, and his wife, Mrs. Ella Evans, is now postmistress.

The burying ground at Madisonville was donated by Henry W. Drinker, who gave eighty acres for both school and burial purposes. The school-house was built in 1835, and stands at the crossing half a mile north of the village.

The "Christian" Church at Madisonville was organized in the spring of 1842, at Bear brook school-house, by Elder William Lane, assisted by J. I. Harvey. The original members were Isaac Depew, B. L. and Mary A. Beemer, Samuel and Elizabeth Swartz and Samuel Hornbaker. Isaac Depew and Samuel Hornbaker were appointed elders and B. L. Beemer church clerk.

The meeting house was built in 1852, at a cost of $950. It was built by contribution, and is free for all denominations when not in use by the "Christians." The lot was donated by William Evans.

The first pastor was Elder Alva Harmans. Milton Clark was pastor from 1848 till his death in 1873. The next pastor, Elder Henry Block, was succeeded after a year by Elder N. Russell (1874 and 1875), when Elder William Hornbaker preached one year (1876). Elder B. F. Summerbell supplied the pulpit for 1877-79. The present pastor is P. R. Pitman, from Carverville, Pa.

The deacons are Samuel Swartz, J. D. Hendershot, William N. Hockenber, J. S. Hornbaker and Thomas Walters; Elders—Samuel Hornbaker, John Evans, Isaac Biesecker, Eneas Swartz and Peter Hornbaker; church clerk, T. NEWTON TOWNSHIP.

UNTIL 1842 this was a part of Falls township. In that year Wyoming county was formed from Luzerne, the easterly line of the new county running through Falls township; and in 1844 that portion of Falls southeast of the new county line was organized into a township, and named Newton, as many of the first settlers were from a township of that name in Sussex county, N. J. Richard Gardner was the pioneer settler. He began a clearing (the present Kern farm) in 1803 and built a log house, but in 1807 sold out to Jesse Harding and moved to what is now Ransom township. Among the settlers that came soon after Gardner we find a Mr. Lutz, Zebulon Comstock, Elias Smith, Joseph Coon, John Mc-Millan, Charles McClusky, Parley Von Cleveland, Henry Walters, Henry Litts, Jacob Biesecker and Henry Beemer. Lutz located on the farm now owned and occupied by Henry Jacobs. Parley Von Cleveland located on the farm now owned by Henry Smith. Morgan J. Jones, a brother-in-law of Von Cleveland, located on the present farm of William Laco. James Williams took up the Van Sickler farm, where he died at an advanced age, surrounded by a large family. The farm now owned by William Ayers was cleared up by Zephaniah Haven. Adam Thompson in 1819 located on the farm of Truman Knapp. Two of his children, John and Mrs. Jane Courtright, still reside in Newton. Lewis Casner came, as did most of the pioneer settlers, from Sussex county, N. J. He located on the farm now owned by his son, Samuel Casner. William A. Brink took a tract including the present farms of Amos Learn, jr., and William Shelly, sen., and the Williams farm on the mountain. He died in 1858, at an advanced age.

Charles McClusky came from Orange county, N. Y., in 1818, and located on the present Kern farm. He lived in the log cabin built by Richard Gardner several years. His nearest neighbor was Elias Smith, ten miles distant. Two of Mr. McClusky's six children survive, viz., Timothy, who is still a resident of Newton, and a daughter living in Pittston.

Joseph Coons came from Sussex county, N. J., in 1816, and located on the fine farm now owned by his son, John Coons. Elias Smith also came from New Jersey in 1816, and bought 400 acres, through which ran Gardner's creek. He built a log house and cut a wagon road from it to Ransom; there had been no foot path and not even a marked tree to guide him to his place.

Henry Litts came from Sussex county, N. J., about 1816, with all his earthly goods and his family loaded on a sled, drawn by one yoke of oxen. He found his way by the aid of marked trees. He lived in a log house many years. His family consisted of five sons and two daughters. In 1842 he built a framed house, now owned by his son Lewis. He died in 1864. He has a daughter, Mrs. Jane Thompson, living in Newton. Mrs. Litts was one of the first members of the Baptist church, and loved for her acts of kindness and Christian benevolence. She died in 1861.

Henry Beemer was also a native of Sussex county, N. J. He cleared up a farm of which his sons, Sidney and Elias, retain a portion. Mr. Beemer died in 1863.

Anthony Laco. was born in France, March 11th, 1780; came to Philadelphia in 1792, to Wilkes-Barre in 1810, and was married in 1811 to Miss Amelia Duprey, who died in 1844. He came to Newton in 1850 with his son's family, where he still resides. He is now in perfect

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

A. B. M'KINSTRY.

This gentleman, whose extensive property is represented among our illustrations, was born in Hudson county, N. J. His "Keystone Tannery" is the principal institution of Schultzville. This village, now having about 200 inhabitants, was founded by John B. Schultz, who moved into Pennsylvania in the spring of 1858, from Illinois. In July of that year he commenced the erection of a large tannery, together with the other necessary building, for carrying on the tannery business—such as store, tenements, shop, etc. He carried on the business of tanning until January, 1866, when he sold the property to A. B. McKinstry and Nial T. Childs, of Ulster county, N. Y. They carried on the business until May 4th, 1876, at which time A. B. McKinstry purchased the interest of N. T. Childs, and from that time the business has been conducted under his name. The tannery is known as the "Keystone"; employs about 50 men, and has a capacity for tanning 40,000 hides of Union crop leather (worth $175,000) per annum. A farm of 500 acres (considered the largest and most productive in the county) is worked in connection with the tannery; over 300 tons of hay are cut annually besides other crops.

The Gravel Pond farm of A. B. McKinstry, consisting of 105 acres, is situated in the borough of Glenburn, on the borders of Gravel Pond, two miles from Abington depot on the line of the D., L. & W. Railroad; 100 acres are in a good state of cultivation. The buildings are in fine condition. This place is particularly adapted for a summer resort, having the advantages of a fine grove on the border of the lake, and the lake itself being a fine place for boating and fishing.

health, and converses as fluently as a man of fifty. Paul Aten, aged 91, is in good health, and reads the papers without the aid of glasses. Mrs. Ringsdorf, though 91, is in the possession of all her faculties. Mrs. Benjamin, one of the early settlers of Newton, is now 85.

Zebulon Comstock, one of the early settlers of Newton, was a bold and experienced hunter, and spent a good part of his time in hunting and trapping. On his return one evening from what is now Hyde Park, a huge panther sprang out of the thicket just behind him. He quickly turned around, faced the savage beast, and thus walked backward about half a mile, keeping his eye steadily fixed upon the eye of the panther, when the animal finally turned and left him the victor. Early the next morning Comstock shouldered his rifle, and, accompanied by his faithful dog, returned to the spot where the panther sprang from the thicket. Here he found the remains of a deer the panther had killed and carefully covered with leaves. The dog followed the track of the panther about three miles, and treed him, when Comstock shot him.

At an early day in Newton's history the nearest store was at Wilkes-Barre. Joseph Coon, in relating some of his pioneer experiences, says that he once carried a grist of rye to mill at Slocum Hollow (Scranton) on his back; on his return he dared not take the flour from his shoulders, for fear he would not have strength to shoulder it again, and he rested by leaning against a tree whenever his strength began to fail him.

Timothy McClusky says that in his youthful days he used to go down on to the river flats and work for farmers, taking his pay in grain, and at night carry the grain on his back to the mill at Pittston, wait for it to be ground and take the flour home the same night. One night, while returning over the mountain, he was overtaken by a storm; and, it being too dark to find his way, he had to spend the night in the forest, frightening off the wolves. He also says that he has carried butter from Newton to Wilkes-Barre and traded it off at six cents per pound for groceries.

The pioneer store and ashery was kept by Elias Smith. He bought ashes of the settlers and made from them potash, which he traded in Wilkes-Barre for such dry goods and groceries as the pioneers needed, and took more ashes from his neighbors in pay for the goods. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1864. He built the first framed house in Newton township.

The first regular store was kept by Solomon Strong, where the Van Sickler Hotel now stands at Newton Center. Dr. Charles Kelly succeeded Strong, but in a short time returned to Tunkhannock. In 1842 E. A. and George Carey and Thomas Atherton purchased a barn of Chauncey Sherwood and converted it into a store, which they kept about twelve years. They were succeeded by L. H. Litts, who subsequently built a store on the site of John Hice's residence. This was burned in 1861, and Mr. Litts occupied Sherwood's store till his appointment as warden of Pittston poor-house, when he sold his goods to Chauncey Sherwood, who continued in the business several years. Henry Sham has kept a clothing store at Newton Center at three different times. The old Sherwood store is now occupied by L. B. Ayres as a dwelling. In 1861 or 1862 Ira Litts built the Hice store; a few years later he sold to John Hice, the present merchant at Newton Center.

Previous to 1841 there was no licensed tavern in Newton township. The traveler was accommodated by any of the hospitable citizens upon whom he happened to call. In 1841 James Van Sickler purchased the stone building of Solomon Strong and converted it into a tavern, which he kept several years. At his death he was succeeded by his son Solomon, who now keeps the Van Sickler House at Newton Center. In 1842 Chauncey Sherwood built a dwelling house at Newton Center, and subsequently converted it into a hotel, known as the Sherwood House, which he kept several years. The property is now owned by Aaron Fuller, and is occupied as a private dwelling.

Dr. Andrew Bedford was the first practicing physician, and he was succeeded by Dr. Hiram Nichols, who lived in Abington. Dr. H. S. Cooper, who studied medicine with B. A. Benton, M. D., of Tunkhannock, and graduated from the Pennsylvania Medical College, at Philadelphia, located at Newton Center in 1842; left in 1850, but has practiced here since 1858, excepting a year in the army. Dr. S. M. Wheeler practiced for a few months after 1850, and was followed by Dr. J. Keeney, from Laceyville. He died in the spring of 1852. Dr. James Decker was the next physician. He died here in 1860. Dr. J. A. Hann has been at Newton Center since 1860. Dr. P. F. Hubler, of Huntington, Pa., graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, in 1877, and located in Newton the same year, where he is practicing.

The first school was taught by Parley Von Cleveland, as early as 1812 or 1815, in a log house built for that purpose. He was succeeded by John Mott and Anthony Briggs.

Some years later a larger and more convenient house was built of hewn logs, on the "widow Shaw place." Anthony Briggs and others taught in it. Among the surviving pupils of these pioneer schools are Jane Courtright, John Thompson, Timothy McClusky, Charles, William and Zebulon Comstock and Ellen, Jacob and David M. Smith. In 1830 a frame school-house was built in front of where the Baptist church now stands, but it has been gone several years.

Newton Hall Academy, on Presbyterian hill, was built in 1847, and the first term was taught by Rev. Mr. Osmond. The late C. S. Stark, of Pittston, also taught one term. None but the higher branches were taught. The academy building is now occupied by the Good Templars.

There are six good schools in this township, the Ridge, Lacoe, Casner, Shook, Fireproof, Shultzville and Port Royal schools.

Until 1844 the nearest post-office was at Buttermilk Falls. In 1844 Henry Litts was appointed postmaster, and he kept the office at his house. The mail was then brought once a week on horseback over the mountain from Old Forge. Mr. Litts was succeeded by Chauncey Sherwood, who kept the office at his house in Newton Center.

The pioneer saw-mill was built by Elias Smith, in 1821, on Gardner's creek. He operated it till it was worn out. He then built the one now owned and operated by his son Elias Smith. In 1841 L. H. Litts and Chauncey Sherwood built the saw-mill half a mile east of the Litts farm. The Fitch saw-mill, on Falls creek at Brinktown, was built in 1840, and is now owned and operated by L. G. Damon, of Pittston. A steam saw-mill, one and a half miles north of Newton Center, on the road to Shultzville, was built by Solomon Hopkins & Son in 1868. The Hartley saw-mill, near Shultzville, was built by Esquire Hartley about 1850. McKinstry & Childs converted it into a steam mill, and it was subsequently burned.

Edward Rozell carried on blacksmithing a number of years from 1821. C. Van Buskirk subsequently built his present shop at Newton Center.

The Keystone tannery, at Shultzville, was built in 1860 by John B. Shultz, who sold it in 1865 to McKinstry & Childs. About 1875 McKinstry became sole owner. This is a sole leather tannery, and employs about 60 men annually. There is a large company store in connection with the tannery, kept by A. B. McKinstry.

CIVIL LIST OF NEWTON.

The following is a complete list of justices of the peace elected for Newton, from the organization of the township: Lewis H. Litts, 1843; Chauncey Sherwood, 1843, 1850, 1856, 1862; Henry S. Decker, 1846, 1855, 1860; Henry Kern, 1846; Timothy McClusky, 1852, 1857, 1862; Hezekiah Ferguson, 1856; H. S. Cooper, 1864, 1869; D. W. Richards, 1868, 1874; H. P. Jacobs, 1874; Horace F. Barrett, 1877, 1878.

NEWTON IN THE WAR FOR THE UNION.

The following is a partial list of the Union soldiers who went from this township in the various Pennsylvania regiments:

Fifty-second Infantry.—Jason Ayers. Andrew S. Collum, died from disease contracted in the army. Leonard Harris. Baldwin Kern, died in hospital. Myron Maxfield. Jacob Maxfield, died coming home after discharge. John Sister. Solomon Van Sickler.

Eleventh Cavalry.—George Beemer. S. S. Brink, killed. Charles Brink. George Sigman. Levi Lewis, shot by rebel scouts.

One Hundred and Forty-third Infantry.—Normon Butterfield, Lewis Courtright, Oliver Decker. Samuel Decker, wounded; George Hopkins, killed; John Richards, died in hospital at Washington from amputation of limb; Ira Suttin, John R. Smith, George Inover.

Miscellaneous.—Harvey Coon, missing; Allen Collum, died from disease contracted in the army; John Drisler, missing; James Fish, Pa. Bucktails; Joseph Garey, 141st, wounded in the Wilderness; Andrew Harris, 2nd cavalry, died at Andersonville; William Kern, navy; Lewis McCluskey, Peter McCluskey, 144th; William Smith, lost leg by bursting shell at Charleston.

VILLAGES.

Newton Center (Bald Mount post-office) has a Presbyterian, a Baptist and a Methodist Episcopal church, the store and post-office kept by J. Hice, the blacksmith shop of C. Van Buskirk, the hotel of S. Van Sickler, a schoolhouse, three physicians (Drs. Cooper, Hann and Hubler), and a population of about 150.

Shultzville was named by John B. Shultz, who was formerly owner of the land and other property here. The place contains a church, a school-house, a store, a tannery and a post-office, with H. F. Barrett postmaster; population 125.

RELIGIOUS.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF NEWTON.

This church, worshiping at Newton Center, was organized October 29th, 1835, by Revs. J. Rhoades and J. Dorrance. The original members were Peter Corselius, Peter Richards, Peter Ayers, Isaac Rozell and Samuel Clark and their wives, Sarah Comstock, Mary Carman, Matilda Rozell and Harriet Thompson. Of these only Maria Corselius, Matilda Rozell and Harriet Thompson are living.

The first meetings were held in school-houses, and the first minister after the organization was Rev. J. Rhoades, about two years; Rev. N. G. Parke, of Pittston, then supplied the church every four weeks. Rev. Owen Brown preached once in two weeks for about two years. Rev. Jonathan Osmond was pastor for two years from 1848; then Rev. W. E. Holmes, two and a half years; Rev. J. B. Adams, five years; Rev. J. H. Sargent, five years; Rev. A. G. Harnard, five; Rev. J. S. Hanna, one. The church is now without a pastor. The pulpit is supplied by Rev. J. M. Phillips.

A neat church edifice, of wood, was built in 1848, on a lot donated by W. C. Ayers. The society also owns a parsonage. The church membership is about 80.

Horace Collum was the first superintendent of the Sunday-school.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

This is an outgrowth of the Falls Baptist church, and was constituted in the spring of 1828, in the eastern part of Falls, now Newton township, with four members—Elias Smith, Samuel Mittain, Catharine Litts and Mrs. Fritchell. Rev. Isaac D. Jones, a licentiate of the church at Exeter, was the preacher until 1833. Rev. John Miller preached occasionally from 1836 to 1839, and Rev. James Clark part of 1840.

February 2nd, 1845, the Falls Baptist church was formally disbanded, and the Newton Baptist church organized. Rev. Silas Finn preached half the time during the next three years, and in 1853 Rev. John Miller accepted a call to preach half the time. February 9th, 1877, he became pastor, and H. S. Cooper and John Rosenkrans were elected deacons. Rev. Charles Parker succeeded Mr. Miller, and preached till March, 1859; Rev. J. C. Sherman till December, 1861, and in the summer of 1862, when he entered the army as chaplain. Till April, 1867, the church was without a pastor. Then Rev. J. C. Sherman preached a year.

All this time the church had been meeting in school-houses and wherever most convenient. January 18th, 1868, Dr. H. S. Cooper, Rev. Mr. Sherman, J. Rolosen,

Mr. Biesecker and E. Taylor were appointed a building committee. The church building was dedicated November 28th, 1871, by Rev. W. P. Helling, of Scranton. It is of wood, thirty-six by fifty feet, neatly finished and furnished.

After Mr. Sherman Rev. George Lukins preached a year, and Rev. Newell Callender three years. Rev. W. G. Comstock is the present pastor. The church property is valued at $5,000.

The Sunday-school was organized in 1872. John Coon is the superintendent.

THE CHAPEL AT SHULTZVILLE was built by John B. Shultz in 1861 or 1862, and was for several years used jointly for school and religious purposes. Since the building of a school-house there the chapel is occupied exclusively for religious meetings.

NEWTON M. E. CHURCH.

The old red school-house at Newton Center was a regular place for preaching for 20 years before the corporate organization of the church in November, 1846. The first trustees were Jacob Smith, Nathaniel Richards, Timothy Drake, Peter Bedell, Jesse Beemer, Alexander Beemer, George Albright, Noah Patrick and John Meiss. Peter Bedell, Jacob Smith, James Van Sickler, Nathaniel Richards and Peter Rutan were the building committee who had a church erected in 1847, at a cost of $600. During the pastorate of Rev. C. E. Taylor Jacob Smith was appointed leader of a class numbering 23. After holding occasional revivals, with a steady increase of membership, for 28 years the old house was abandoned on the 8th of December, 1875. A new charter was obtained and in 1876 a church edifice with steeple and bell (the first church bell in the township) was erected at a cost of $4,000. The Newton circuit is believed to have been constituted in 1840, with five regular places of worship—Newton Center, Milwaukee, Falls, Mill City and Overfield. The new church was dedicated by Rev. Dr. Reuben Nelson during the pastorate of Rev. Isaac Austin.

The Sabbath-school, which was established in the early days of the society, is still flourishing, numbering 45 scholars. The church membership is 56.

The pastors since the new charter are Revs. Isaac Austin and William Shelp. Those previous: Revs. Charles Giddings, White, Reddy, Samuel Griffin, John Mülkey, Dayton F. Reed, C. E. Taylor, Wilcox, Benjamin Ellis, Owen, Schoonmaker, Sterling, E. F. Roberts, John La Bar, John Wilbur, J. D. Safford, Miner Swallow, G. W. Leach, P. S. Holbrook, J. W. Munger, G. M. Peck, D. Personius, E. N. Pardee, Asa J. Van Cleft, E. Puffer, Isaac Austin, R. S. Rose, A. Brigham and A. J. Arnold.

BALD MOUNT LODGE, No. 731, I. O. OF G. T.

was instituted at Newton Center, July 30th, 1869, with 50 charter members. It is in a flourishing condition, holding regular meetings on Friday evening of each week in Good Templars' Hall. It has enrolled over 300 members and has a full treasury. Miss Jennie Petty, a member of this lodge, is an earnest advocate and worker in the temperance cause.

OLD FORGE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from Lackawanna township, May 26th, 1871, and contains about nine square miles. The population in 1880 was 1,408.

Among the pioneers none was more prominent in business affairs and in the development of the township's resources, than Doctor William Hooker Smith, who came here in 1789, after having lived in the Wilkes-Barre clearing from 1772. He was a competent surgeon and physician, and, excepting Dr. Sprague, he was the only physician in 1772 between Cohecton and Sunbury, a distance of 150 miles. He was a plain, practical man, with all the old fashioned faith in the virtues of bleeding.

In the spring of 1789 Dr. Smith and James Sutton built a forge just above the mouth of Ascension brook, on the rocky edge of the Lackawanna and just below the rapids or falls. This was the only concern of the kind in all old Westmoreland, except one at Newport, built in 1777. The traces of the old forge are still plainly to be seen, and antiquarians still dig around it for relics. From it the township derives its name.

Among the other early settlers was William Miller, who in 1782 built a little grist-mill on Miller's Mill creek, across the road from shaft No. 13 of the Pennsylvania Coal Company. It went to decay, and a saw-mill was built on the same site, which has given place to a blacksmith shop. A part of the old dam is still there. Many a good joke is told of "Uncle Billy," as he was familiarly called. He was always unusually attentive to the spout where the meal from his customers' grists came from the stone, and was always feeling of the meal as it came through; and his coat sleeves, being large, would naturally catch considerable dust (not any meal, of course!), which he would shake off into an empty barrel. Everybody though him honest, but wondered how "'mazin' fast that bar'l filled up."

Charles Drake in 1808 built the house now occupied by Ebenezer Drake, near the Lackawanna depot. He built a tannery on a small scale where Drake's store now stands, at Old Forge village, and afterward kept a tavern at the same place.

The pioneer school-house was built of logs, on the site of the present one, on the corner west of John D. Miller's.

The foundry now owned and operated by G. M. & S. H. Miller was built by John Drake, who sold to William Howard. A foundry was built by Edmund B. Babb about 1820, a short distance above the mouth of Ascension creek, which he operated for a few years, but it finally went to decay.

The little hamlet below the Lackawanna depot was named "Babylon" by John B. Babb, who kept a store there a few years in the primitive days. Calvin Stockbridge kept a tavern at Babylon in 1832. In pioneer times John B. Babb had a small grist-mill a short distance above the mouth of Ascension creek. He built the original log bridge across the Lackawanna river, on the site of the present iron bridge.

John D. Miller has lived where he now resides since 1832, but has by the changing of county and township lines lived in two counties and three townships; he has also been justice of the peace in the two counties and three townships, having been elected first in Pittston, then in Lackawanna and twice in Old Forge.

Erastus Smith, James Knapp, James Scott and the Atherton family, who located in the north end of the township, were among the pioneers.

In 1816 James A. Gordon built the old wood colored house just below the old Atherton place. Here he kept a store several years.

The first postmaster of Old Forge was William Drake; the present one is Ebenezer Drake.

The following justices have been elected for Old Forge: A. B. Weisenflue, 1874; Charles Smith, 1875; John D. Miller, 1877; E. E. Astor, 1877; Joseph Marcy, 1879.

COAL INTERESTS OF OLD FORGE.

Pyne shaft, in the north end of the township, owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, employed in 1878 297 men and boys, and mined 109,506 tons. Sibley shaft, near the center of the township, employed during 1878 247 men and boys in the mine, which produced 51,472 tons. Shaft No. 13, in the southeast corner of the township, owned by the Pennsylvania Coal Company, employed in 1878 35 men and boys. The production for that year was 12,718 tons.

RANSOM TOWNSHIP.

RANSOM township was formed in 1849, from parts of Exeter and Newton, and named in honor of Captain Samuel Ransom, who raised a company in 1777 for the defense of the Wyoming valley, and fell in the battle of July 3d, 1778. The population of the township was 646 in 1880.

The first white inhabitant was John Gardner, who came in 1769 from Colchester, Conn. In 1778, a few days before the Wyoming massacre, he was captured by Indians and Tories. Before his departure he advised his wife to take their five children to Connecticut, and remain with her friends until it would be safe to return. He then bade his wife and children a final farewell; an Indian placed a load upon his shoulders which he could scarcely raise, then put a halter around his neck, and led him away as he would a beast. Mr. Gardner became exhausted before reaching what is now Geneva, N. Y., and was given over to the squaws, who tortured him to death by driving his body full of pitch pine sticks and setting them on fire. Mrs. Gardner returned with her five children to Connecticut. In due time she came back to Ransom, and lived with her son John till her death, which occurred August 25th, 1834, when she was 91 years old. She was buried in the old ground at Ransom.

John and Richard Gardner settled on the farm purchased by their father in 1769, at the mouth of Gardner's creek. John was chiefly engaged in farming. He was the father of four children, and died March 30th, 1836, aged 64 years. Richard established Gardner's Ferry at Ransom. He was accidentally shot by a companion in one elbow while on a bear hunt. He was the father of eleven children, three of whom are yet living. He died July 4th, 1859, aged 92 years. His son Benjamin, though permanently paralyzed in the lower limbs at the age of eleven, became an active business man, filling the positions of merchant, tavern keeper and postmaster for many years, and was known throughout the country as "Uncle Benny" Gardner. He died October 24th, 1879, at the age of 85. The three surviving children are Samuel, aged 82; Celinda, aged 80; and Harriet, widow of the late Silas Sutton, aged 73.

Peleg Comstock came from Connecticut about the same time with the Gardners, and settled on a tract of land which he "patented," near Gardner's creek, now owned by P. K. & Jesse Richards. He had a large family. He died at an advanced age, and was buried in the old ground at Ransom.

John McMillan, from Ireland, early located on the farm now owned by D. M. Huthmaker. He was a school teacher and a physician. He had eleven children. His son Alexander married Nancy Montanye, and the names of "Uncle Aleck" and "Aunt Nancy" were synonyms for good in every household. He died November 25th, 1869, at an advanced age.

F. Sandway, John Baumgardner, John Rader, Andrew Nett, Philip Shellenberger and Charles Resler came to Ransom in 1841, from Germany, and settled on what is known from then as "German hill."

The pioneer grist-mill was built on Gardner's creek, in 1825, by Phineas Sherwood, who sold it to Absalom Young, and he to Jacob Dersheimer, who in 1844 built the present mill on the site of the old one. It was next owned by Nathan and Jacob Keim, and is now by Thomas Johnson. A foundry was built in 1851 by William Vosburg, a short distance from the mill. It is now owned by S. E. Griffin, who is building a new one near. The first saw-mill was built in 1851, by one Twitchel, across the creek from the grist-mill. It was rebuilt by William Vosburg and is now owned by the heirs of William Timpkins. The saw-mill in Ransom village was built in 1875, by J. G. Osborn, and is now operated by F. P. Osborn. The pioneer blacksmith shop was at Milwaukee village, and was rebuilt in 1836 by Abraham Michaels, who worked in it a number of years. It was bought and rebuilt by Daniel Skinner and L. H. Winters. The present owner is William Meyer, and the business is carried on by E. M. Winters. The first blacksmith shop in Ransom village was built in 1847, by Benjamin and Warren Smith.

The Ransom Valley Turnpike Company was incorporated February 18th, 1871, and the following persons were appointed commissioners: L. H. Litts, P. K. Richards, Peter Bedell, George Damon, Chauncey Sherwood, D. M. Huthmaker and Amos Sax. The present officers are N. G. Reed, Thomas Johnson, Amos Sax, Henry S. Decker and D. M. Huthmaker.

The pioneer tavern was kept by Benjamin Gardner, at Ransom, for about twenty-five years from 1812. It was opened in a small log cabin, built for that purpose by his father, Richard Gardner. A larger and more convenient house was built for him across the street. He was succeeded by Benjamin Smith and Philip Drear, who made many improvements. The property was next owned by A. W. Clark, who sold to I. D. Gulick, and the building was burned in March, 1855. Gulick then kept tavern a year in another house. F. Sandway purchased the property and kept a tavern some years and sold to Jacob Bertels. The building is now a private dwelling. The present hotel was built in 1876, by J. Crowel, the present proprietor. In 1846 a tavern was built at the head of the first narrows on the road from Pittston to Ransom, by George Sax; it is now kept by J. Nafus.

The first store was kept by Benjamin Smith and Ira Gardner, in 1835. This store was built by Samuel Gardner in 1832, for a dwelling. It is now used for a stable. There was no other store here (excepting Uncle Benny's grocery) till 1846, when Abel and James Thompson built and opened one, which was burned in 1855. In 1864 Jacob Bertels built and opened a store near the depot at Ransom, and in 1866 sold to F. Sandway, who still occupies it as a store and post-office. The first post-office was established about 1849, when Benjamin Gardner was appointed postmaster. The post-office at Milwaukee was established in 1861, with N. G. Reed as postmaster. Thomas Johnson is the present incumbent. The office at Mountain Valley was established in 1868, with E. Trively as postmaster. M. Trively has succeeded him.

Previous to 1846 there was a burying ground on the bank of the canal on the farm now owned by D. M. Huthmaker. The first interment was that of Richard Gardner's child, who died March 3d, 1797. The burying ground near the Presbyterian church was donated by Jacob and John Dersheimer. The first interment was that of Conrad Shafer, a soldier of the Revolution, who died in 1846.

The following is the list of the justices of the peace elected for Ransom: Peter A. Smith, 1849, 1855; Benjamin Smith, 1849; Jacob Allabach, 1859; N. G. Reed, 1860, 1865, 1870, 1875; D. M. Huthmaker, 1862, 1867, 1872, 1877.

CHURCHES.

Lutheran.—This church, in the village of Ransom, was built in 1845 and dedicated in 1847, during the pastorate of Rev. John Lescher. For several years the pulpit has been supplied by preachers from other places.

Evangelical Church.—A religious society was formed in the vicinity of Ransom by the Rev. Mr. May and Jacob Hartzlen in 1858. Services were held regularly at the house of Miss Celinda Gardner for fifteen years. In 1871 a frame church was built on a lot donated by Sebastian Dersheimer. It was dedicated in 1872. The following ministers, and in the order named, have served this church: Rev. Messrs. May, J. Hartzlen, S. Smith, S. P. Davis, H. A. Dietrick, Solomon Buck, I. M. Pines, U. F. Swengle, J. M. Price, W. M. Crawman, S. I. Sharters, P. S. Ornig, W. W. Rhoades, A. J. Hollenback and G. Burscon.

In 1867 a union Sunday-school was organized at the house of Miss Celinda Gardner. On the completion of the church the school was removed to it. The present superintendent is Peter Sutton. This denomination uses the school-house at Mountain Valley for meetings and Sunday-school.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The M. E. society at Milwaukee held services several years in the school-house, the following ministers from Newton circuit preaching: Rev. Samuel Griffin, White, J. M. Munger, Luther Ellis, J. D. Safford, Miner Swallow, Philip Holbrook, J. W. Wilbur and John La Bar.

In the summer of 1859 the society built a framed church at a cost of $4,500, which was dedicated the following winter by Rev. Dr. George Peck. It was repaired in 1875, at a cost of $500.

The following is a complete list of ministers who have served this society: Revs. George Peck, D. Personeus, G. W. Leach, J. M. La Bar, I. N. Pardue, A. J. Van Cleft, Isaac Austin, S. Rose, A. Brigham, A. J. Arnold and William Shelp, the present pastor.

A Sunday-school was organized in the school-house in 1852, and removed to the church upon its completion. The superintendent is N. G. Reed.

VILLAGES.

Milwaukee is a small but very pretty village, containing a Methodist Episcopal church, a school building, blacksmith and wagon shop, grist and saw-mills, a store, a post-office and a foundry.

Mrs. Ann Bedell, widow of the late Peter Bedell, of Milwaukee, was murdered in her house in June, 1876. The guilty party or parties have never been brought to justice.

Ransom Village contains two churches, two hotels, two school buildings, a saw-mill, a blacksmith shop, a store, a post-office, the depot of the Lehigh Valley railroad, and a number of fine residences. Here is also located the Pittston, Jenkins and Old Forge alms-house and farm. The house is a large, substantial and commodious brick building, with modern improvements for the comfort and convenience of both inmates and keepers. The old building has been fitted up for an asylum for the insane, and a neat farm house built between the two. The present number of inmates is fifty, including ten insane, who are well cared for by the gentlemanly steward, Eli Brown. The attending physician is Dr. Rice, of Pittston.

Mountain Valley, on the road leading to Pittston and Scranton, has a new school-house, a post-office and several farm buildings.

ROARING BROOK TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed May 24th, 1871, out of the borough of Dunmore and the townships of Jefferson and Madison, and named from the stream passing through it. James Locklin and Joshua S. Miller were elected justices in 1871, and Thomas Hardenburgh and J. S. Miller in 1876. The population in 1880 was 769.

Among the most prominent points of agricultural interest is the Glen Home farm of Dr. A. P. Gardner, about mile southeast of Dunning. Here can be found the most complete establishment of the kind in this part of the country. It is a romantic and enchanting spot. The cottage and farm buildings are of the latest architectural design, while the grounds are laid out with pleasant walks, and planted with peach, pear, plum and many varieties of apple trees, together with all kinds of small fruits. Dr. Gardner has a well stocked trout pond in his grounds, from which his table is supplied. His farm stock is of the best blood. The hospitality of host and hostess of Glen Home farm is most generous.

Before and after the construction of the Drinker turnpike the township was a solitude; for there had been no settlement, and when the road was made passable the men employed on it moved along with the work. No permanent settlement was made till 1847, unless we count Barney Carey, who kept the toll gate on the turnpike about a mile below Dunning. Gilbert Dunning located at that village in 1847, and the same year John C. Dunning south of the steam saw-mill, where Mrs. Thomas now lives. Here he built a log house. Isaac Depew south of the village, and S. S. Welsh, W. B. Edwards and John S. Finch in the village, were the next settlers. Amasa Burns lives where Mr. Sanders located and built a log house. The pioneer framed house was that of Gilbert Dunning. He raised the first crops in the township. The first school-house was built in 1855. It was the one known as the Forest Hill school-house, between Dunning and the steam saw-mill, now operated by E. Simpson. The first store was kept by Strong & Robinson, and the next by Eugene Snyder, who also had a store at Dunning several years. The pioneer tavern was at "Hunter Range," a mile below Dunning, at the intersection of the Cobb road with the turnpike. This place was once famed for trout fishing and whisky, and was a place of resort for the early settlers on rainy days. The next tavern was built by Harrison Rhodes at Dunning. It was burned a few years ago. It stood opposite the present Railroad House. The last named hotel, at the depot, was built in 1872 or 1873 by Crockett Robinson, and is now owned and kept by Jacob Garman, who purchased it of Truxell, of Wilkes-Barre, in 1875. George Slote kept the hotel built by Rhodes at the time it was burned.

The first postmaster at Dunning was D. J. Peck. He was appointed in 1858 or 1859, and kept the office in the tannery office.

The first and only resident physician is Dr. A. P. Gardner, of Glen Home farm.

The first wedding was that of William Robinson and Miss Jane Dunning, and the first birth was that of Miss Ada Robinson.

The first water power saw-mill is still standing at Dunning; it was built by Gilbert Dunning. The next was built by Peck & Stevens, farther down the stream. They sold to Dr. Throop, and the mill is now owned by Joshua Miller. The next two mills were built by Dr. Throop at Throopsville. The first steam saw-mill was built by Dr. A. P. Gardner in 1857, a little south of Forest Hill. The first two mills on the same site were burned, and the one now standing is operated by Edward Simpson. The next steam saw-mill was built by Stout & Kreistick, on the mountain two miles southwest from Dunning; it is now owned by John Peck. The third steam saw-mill was that built by Eugene Snyder, about five miles southwest from Dunning, and now owned and operated by J. M. Rhodes.

The tannery at Dunning was built in 1857 or 1858, by L. Maynard. He subsequently sold it to Strong Robinson & Co., and they to Eugene Snyder. It is now in the hands of Shultz, Southwick & Co., of New York. It has a capacity of tanning 50,000 sides of leather per year.

VILLAGES.

Gilbert Dunning formerly owned all the land on which stands the village bearing his name. There are now at this place the tannery and the store of J. H. Snyder, a church (Baptist), a school-house, two hotels, the blacksmith shops of B. E. Whitman and B. Partridge, the carriage and coffin factory of W. B. Edwards and the planing-mill of C. C. Clay. E. W. Davis is the station agent and J. H. Snyder the postmaster.

Forest Hill is a hamlet about a mile south of Dunning, where is situated Forest Hill Cemetery. The first monument was that of Charles Thompson, who died in March, 1875. Here is also the only grist-mill in the township. It is owned by J. M. Rhodes, and was built in 1876. Mr. Rhodes also has a saw-mill, a store and a blacksmith shop here.

CHURCHES OF THE TOWNSHIP.

Methodist Episcopal.—The first preaching in Roaring Brook was in 1853, by a Methodist minister, at the house of J. M. Stevens, about a mile below Dunning. Services were held in the school-house on the Cobb road in summer, and at the house of J. M. Stevens during the winter. The first class was formed, however, in a small building at Dunning, owned by S. S. Welsh and used as a school-house. This was in 1856. William C. Robinson was appointed leader. The other members were Margaret and Jennie Robinson, and J. M., Sarah W. and Elenora A. Stevens. The class was transferred in 1857 to the Forest Hill school-house, at the south side of the Forest Hill camp ground.

The first pastor was David Davis, appointed in the spring of 1854. Rev. G. A. Cure was appointed in the spring of 1880. The present class leader is J. M. Stevens; there are 26 members.

The Sunday-school was organized in the Forest Hill school-house in 1858, with William C. Robinson as superintendent and 16 pupils. The present superintendent is G. A. Megarget. The total number of scholars is 45; average attendance, 35.

Baptist Church.—This church was organized March 19th, 1869, in the district school-house at Dunning, by Rev. J. C. Sherman. Eugene Snyder, Phineas Tuthill, Stephen and Elizabeth Vail, E. G. Hamilton, A. L. and M. A. Burns, R. B. Wallace, S. E. Snyder and T. Secor were the members. The church edifice and lot were donated by Eugene Snyder, and the building was dedicated in 1870. The furniture was provided by the ladies of the church. The church and furniture cost $2,500. The pastors since Mr. Sherman have been Revs. George C. Craft, Charles M. Fower, C. W. O. Nyce, P. S. Brewster and I. P. Fergens. The value of the church property is $2,500. The membership of the society is 30.

The first superintendent of the Sunday-school was Phineas Tuthill, who had 60 scholars. The present superintendent is C. C. Clay, and there are 70 pupils.

SCOTT TOWNSHIP.

SCOTT was formed from Greenfield in 1846, and named in honor of Hon. David Scott, one of the associate judges of Luzerne county. It had 1,132 inhabitants in 1870, and 1,263 in 1880.

This is one of the townships across which the Indians traveled from the Susquehanna to the head waters of the Delaware. One of their camping grounds was near Scott village. Evidences of their lengthy or frequent campings have been and still are found here.

The earliest and most prominent of the pioneers were Roger Orvis (1802), Micah Vail (1806), Seth Howe (1800), Daniel Wall, James Brown, Joseph Berry (1808), Elijah

Hobbs, Caleb Brown, Joseph Sackett, William Simrell, William Carey, Nathaniel Finch, Samuel Callender, Benjamin Wetherby, Dr. Westcott Stone and the Graves family.

Roger Orvis, from Vermont, located in 1802 at Orvis Corners. He built the pioneer log cabin in that part of the township, and made the first clearing. Micah Vail, from Orange county, N. Y., located the same year near Chapman's lake. Daniel Wall, from Rhode Island, and Elijah Hobbs, from Vermont, located near Orvis Corners. Joseph Berry, from Connecticut, located at Orvis Corners.

The first grist-mill was built of logs by Seth Howe, in 1800, at the outlet of Chapman's lake, and run by a Mr. Hickman. It had but one run of rock stones. The water was conveyed from the outlet through troughs of logs to an overshot wheel. About the same time a small saw-mill was built by William Hierlihy at Brown Hollow. After a few years it went to decay. In 1804 James Brown built a saw-mill at Brown Hollow. This also went to decay after several years' use. A Mr. Gritman had a short lived grist-mill on the same stream. In 1806 or 1808 Major Westcott Stone built grist and saw-mills on the west side of the township, where E. Stone now lives. They were destroyed by flood in 1811 or 1812. James Brown built a grist-mill at Brown Hollow, and used the same stone that Mr. Gritman had used.

In 1808 the only frame building in the township was a barn on the farm now owned by Charles Lowrey, a little north of Chapman's lake. It was built by William Simrell, who lived in a log house.

The pioneer school-house was an old log building near Orvis Corners, and the first frame school-house was built at Orvis Corners in 1814, near where the present one stands. The first teacher was Josiah Pell. Soon after this there was a school-house near C. Lowrey's place, known as the "Hibbard school-house." Among the other early teachers were John Sherman, Fanny Hierlihy and Harriet McKinney.

Milbury Burget and Joseph Berry were the first constables.

The contracting parties to the first wedding were Joel Comstock and Nancy Cook. Esquire Roger Orvis, the pioneer justice of the peace, married them.

Up to 1807 marked trees outlined the winding paths which were the only roads. In that year Joseph Berry made two miles of the road from Orvis Corners toward Abington. In 1823 the Dundaff turnpike was built through Scott to the foot of the mountain on the Carbondale township line.

At Carey's Corners Timothy Lomedue, who had a good sized log house on the line of travel, used to keep over night most of the travelers, and his house become known as "Lomedue's tavern." The first genuine tavern was kept by Henry Cobb, in 1815, on the Hubbard place, north of Chapman's lake. His hotel was about twelve by fourteen feet, built of logs, of course, with the (two) different apartments furnished in the best style that slab benches or log stools and beds of hemlock or spruce boughs could afford. His larder was always well supplied with "hog and hominy" and wild game. His barn was such as the outspreading branches of the noble forest trees furnished, as the stock was always tied under them at night. A creaking sign-board bore the following inscription: "eNTurTaNeMeNT fore MaN eNd BeeST." The next tavern was kept by William Simrell, on the farm now owned by Charles Lowrey. This was also a log house, but somewhat modernized, having two apartments in the first story and three up-stairs. The getting up-stairs was done by a ladder, that the guests could pull up after them, which of course saved doors and locks.

The pioneer store was kept for several years from 1821 by George Horbiger, on the old Hubbard farm, now owned by Clark Lowrey. Another store was started in 1828, on the north township line, by George and Israel Sheldon, who were succeeded by Charles Berry. In 1830 Newel D. Green opened a store near the site of the residence of Joseph Carpenter, on the Abington turnpike.

The first town meeting was held at the house of James Brown, at Brown Hollow. Subsequent ones were held at Samuel Vail's, near Orvis Corners, for several years, and they were finally transferred to the "Town Hall" at Brown Hollow.

The pioneer shoemaker, Joseph Carpenter, was followed by Graves, Sharer and others.

The pioneer physician, Westcott Stone, located in 1806 near the Abington township line, on the place now owned by Benoni Stone.

The first postmaster was Charles Berry. He lived a little south of Heart lake, on the Dundaff turnpike. He was succeeded by Wilmot Vail, and he by Daniel Vail. The office was at first called Greenfield, and subsequently "Green Grove," when it was moved to its present location, about a mile south of Brown Hollow. The present postmaster is W. W. Simrell. The earliest mail carrier, Zephaniah Knapp, father of Dr. Knapp, of Pittston, is still living.

The first property burned was the house and barn of Joseph Berry, which were totally destroyed, with their contents, in the autumn of 1813, subjecting the family to great hardship.

Melaina Mills, now a resident of this township, was the first white child born in Dundaff. She was born November 19th, 1798. Hollister says that during the "great blow" of July, 1834, she was blown out from her house into the meadow. She says this is a mistake that it was only her bed, which hung on the fence, that was blown out into the meadow, and not herself.

Benoni Stone and Joseph Carpenter, natives of Rhode Island, came here among the early settlers. The former is aged 92, and the latter 90. Harry Vail and Earl Stone, who lived in this township in 1808, are still here. Deacon Berry, who lived here in 1808, now lives in Carbondale city, aged 82.

There are eleven school districts in the township, with good school-houses and teachers.

Since the adoption of the State constitution in 1838 the following justices for the township of Scott have been elected: Warren W. Smith, 1850; Marcus Leonard, Sidney P. Stone, 1855; Nelson Callender, 1855, 1860; John Wallace, 1860; Chester B. Wetherby, 1865; Albert Graves, 1865, 1869, 1875; John B. Nichols, 1869; W. B. Hierlihy, 1870; M. B. Vosburg, 1874.

VILLAGES.

Brown Hollow was settled about 1800. At this place there are Baptist and Methodist Episcopal churches, a school-house, a hotel, a town hall, a blacksmith shop, a harness shop and a grist-mill, and about 150 inhabitants.

Green Grove contains a store and a post-office, with W. Simrell as postmaster.

Scott Village has a blacksmith and wagon shop, a saw-mill, a school-house, a store and a post-office.

RELIGIOUS.

Elder Bishop is believed to have been the first preacher. He was buried at Brown Hollow. Elder John Miller next labored among this people for many years, preaching his last sermon about three months before he died. He was old and feeble, and had to be carried to the meeting in his chair, in which he sat and preached the funeral sermon of one of his old parishioners.

The Mount Bethel Baptist Church was organized from the Abington Baptist Association June 15th, 1853. Its meeting house, at Brown Hollow, was built in 1856.

Methodism in Scott.—The first Methodist class in this township was formed in the summer of 1870, with 15 members, and A. H. Benedict as leader. The class was made a society in the spring of 1871, Rev. S. J. Austin pastor. The meetings were held in the village school-house till the completion of the church edifice. Mr. Austin was succeeded in the spring of 1873 by Rev. N. J. Hawley. The society commenced building its church in the spring of 1874, and dedicated it November 4th, 1875.

The pastors have been: Revs. S. J. Austin, 1871-73; N. J. Hawley, 1873-76; J. B. Sauter, 1876-79; William J. Hill since.

The trustees are William B. Hierlihy (president), Nathaniel Decker (secretary), Leonard Hopfer, Harrison Hopfer, S. J. Cook, Jerome Grosvener and A. H. Benedict, who is also the class leader. The membership is 114.

SPRING BROOK TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from Covington, November 22nd, 1853. The population in 1870 was 426, and in 1880, 658.

The north half was originally owned by Dr. Hoosic and the south half by a Mr. Fisher, except 800 acres at Yostville, owned by H. W. Drinker. The first settlement was made in 1832 by Abraham Turner, on the present Evan Williams estate, near the center of the township. Barney Carey, in 1832 or 1833, located on what is now the James Slote place. In 1833 Morgan Daniels located where William Daniels now lives, and the same year William Thomas settled where William D. Thomas now lives, in the southeast part of the township. G. Laughner located about 1832 where he now lives, south of Spring Brook village. In 1847 G. Y. Haines came to his present place.

The pioneer saw-mill was built in 1830 by one Yeager, at the mouth of Panther creek on Spring brook. The next mill was built soon after by A. Dolph, just below the present residence of G. Y. Haines. William Dole and brother built a mill about 1845, on Spring brook, directly south of G. Y. Haines's place. There was a large business done there for a while, but finally the mills were abandoned. Edward Dolph built the fourth mill on Spring brook, subsequently owned by Foxell brothers of Scranton.

The first framed house was built by Jonathan Price, on the N. Kesler place, a little north of G. Y. Haines's. Soon after this John Longshore built a framed house where William Ward lives, on the east side of the township. The next one was built by John Thomas where G. Y. Haines lives. John Edwards built the house where R. Mathews lives, which was at the time the best house in the township.

The pioneer school-house was built in 1832. It was a framed building, and stood on the site of the Calvinistic Methodist church. The first school was taught by Miss Emeline Griffin. Among the first pupils were Mary Thomas, William Daniels and Nathan Turner, who are still living. The old school-house was also used for singing school, and the first "singing master" was William Morgan.

A tannery was built by James Parry at Rattlesnake falls in 1845. The business was abandoned in a few years and the property is now owned by Edward Dolph.

The first road was from Spring Brook village to Daleville, in Covington, and the next one from Spring Brook to Pittston. The first bridges were built on the Pittston road, by David Dale. He built three of them.

The earliest wedding occurred in 1835. The contracting parties were Morgan Pugh and Mrs. Margaret Davis. The pioneer baby was born in 1834; namely, Caleb W., son of Abraham and Mary Turner. The first death was that of Thomas Williams, who was killed by a falling tree, on the farm now owned by William Snyder. Morgan Pugh was crippled by the same accident. The oldest grave yard is the one opposite James Slote's house, between the Methodist Episcopal and Independent Methodist churches.

The first postmaster was William C. Turner, who was appointed in 1860. His office was at the forks of the road, where William Davis now lives. The first mail carrier was George Swartz, who still carries the mail between Moscow and this place. The railroad for transporting lumber, built by Sax and Hesler, up Spring brook from Moosic to near the mouth of Plank road creek, is now owned by George Carey.

The following were the justices of the peace and the years of their election previous to the township being merged in Lackawanna county: Nathan Turner, 1856, 1861; William C. Turner, 1864; Matthew Laughner, 1869; Frank Irving, 1876; George Y. Haines, 1878.

In the spring of 1880 there were 110 voters registered in this township.

HAMLETS.

Spring Brook is the oldest settlement in the township. There is here one store, kept by William Davis, who is also the postmaster. Here are three churches. The Methodist Episcopal was built in 1866. The society has a membership of 12. The preacher is Rev. John Sweet. The Independent Methodist church was built in 1869. The membership of the society numbers 39. The minister is the Rev. Mr. Evans. The Calvinistic Methodist church is, like the others, a wooden building, and was built in 1871. The society numbers 12 members. The present pastor is Rev. William R. Matthews. The first man who held religious services in this township was Rev. Evan Evans, an Independent Methodist clergyman, who came here in 1830 or 1832. There are at this place about 100 inhabitants.

At Maple Lake there are a steam saw-mill, a blacksmith shop, a school-house, and about 75 inhabitants.

Yostville, on the east border of the township, was settled in 1870, when Yost, Pile & Co. built a steam saw-mill, a store and several dwellings. Joshua Yost now owns the property. A post-office was established here in 1876, and Joshua Yost has always been postmaster. Quite a large lumbering business is done here by Joshua Yost & Son, most of the lumber being delivered on cars at Moscow, on the D., L. and W. Railroad.

WYOMING COUNTY.

CHAPTER I.

RELICS OF AN EARLIER RACE—ORGANIZATION OF WYOMING COUNTY—OFFICERS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

ALONG the Susquehanna and its tributaries, within the present territory of Wyoming county, evidences are found of the former existence of Indian towns at different points. These evidences consist of the relics which are discovered in abundance at these places, not alone of weapons and hunting implements, but of such simple domestic utensils and ornaments of shell and terra cotta as were in use among the pre-Columbian Indians. In some of these localities such relics are so abundant as to attract the attention of casual observers, and considerable collections of them have been made. Had these places been examined by a practiced archaeologist before they were many times disturbed by the plow, the size, form and even the age of these villages might have been determined with a reasonable degree of accuracy. Gradually, however, all traces of the people who formerly inhabited these regions are becoming fainter, and as time goes on they will be wholly obliterated.

The county of Wyoming was formed out of the northern part of Luzerne, by an act of Assembly approved April 4th, 1842. When the petition for its organization was presented to the Legislature the petitioners asked that it might be called Putnam—the name of one of the certified townships in the county. Through the influence of a member from Luzerne county the name Wyoming was substituted for Putnam, and thus the act passed. Henry Colt, of Luzerne county, George Mack, of Columbia county, and John Boyle, of Susquehanna county, were by the act appointed commissioners to survey and mark the boundary lines of the county. By a supplementary act, approved June 28th the same year, the present boundaries were established, and it was ordered that three commissioners be appointed by the governor to locate the county seat. The act also provided for the election of county officers on the second Tuesday in October, 1842; and until such officers were elected and qualified the government of Wyoming was to be administered by the officers of Luzerne county.

It was provided by section 10 of the act that “the inhabitants of the counties of Luzerne and Wyoming shall jointly elect two members to the House of Representatives of this commonwealth; and the inhabitants of the counties of Luzerne, Wyoming, Wayne, Pike and Monroe shall elect one member of the Senate of this commonwealth; and the inhabitants of the counties of Luzerne, Columbia and Wyoming shall elect one member of Congress.” The county was annexed to the northern district of the Supreme Court, and made a part of the eleventh judicial district of the commonwealth. The Luzerne county jail was to be used by this county three years, or until a jail was erected in Wyoming county.

The commissioners appointed to locate the county seat and public buildings were Hendrick B. Wright, of Luzerne, S. J. Headly, of Columbia, and Thomas Gratton, of Monroe. These commissioners in the autumn of 1842 determined on Tunkhannock as the county seat, and the square now bounded by Marion, Washington, Warren and Putnam streets for the public buildings. The ground, which was then a part of a farm and cultivated as such, was donated to the county by Thomas T. Slocum.

The first court house and jail were erected in 1843, with funds (about $5,000), raised by subscription among the citizens of Tunkhannock and vicinity. They were erected under the supervision of a committee appointed by the subscribers, and afterward turned over to the county commissioners, by whom they were furnished at the expense of the county. The contractor who built them was Thos. H. Parker. They were brick structures—the first brick buildings erected in the borough. The court-house was forty feet square, two stories in height. The second story was wholly occupied as a court room, and the public offices and jury rooms were on the first floor. The first session of the court held in this house was in 1844. Previous sessions had been held in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. The public ofices were kept in a building on what was then known as Turnpike street. This building was subsequently taken down to make way for the canal.

The jail, which stood about 150 feet in the rear of the court-house, had a stone basement, in which were four cells for prisoners, and a superstructure of brick for the sheriff or jailer's residence. It was first occupied as a prison in 1844. These buildings were occupied with no more than ordinary repairs till the erection of the present court-house and jail.

The present jail was erected in 1866, on the west side of Slocum street. It is of stone, one story in height, with a brick front of two stories for a sheriff's residence. The jail proper is 33 by 35 feet. It has six cells and has a capacity for ten prisoners. The brick front is 32 by 46. The cost of the whole was $15,520, including extras. G. W. Lung was the architect and Charles Place the contractor.

In 1869, by authority of the Legislature, the county issued bonds to the amount of $15,000, for the repair of the court-house and improvement of the public grounds. On the 15th of May, 1869, a contract was given John W. Crawford for the repair of the old court-house and the erection of a new front, constituting in fact almost a new structure, for the sum of $18,980. The actual cost of the building, which was completed by Charles Place, the surety of the contractor, was $24,880, the additional $5,900 being for extra work directed by the commissioners. The building was completed and accepted in 1870. The front is 76 by 40 feet, three stories in height, with a rear projection of two stories, 70 feet square. The whole is of brick, covered with cement. The architect was D. R. Nott.

While the court-house was in process of repair the court was held in the basement of the Methodist church. The public offices were kept in the second story of Little's building, on the east side of Warren street.

But two members of Congress have been chosen from this county since its organization, and each but for part of a term. Hon. Chester Butler, of Wilkes-Barre, died October 5th, 1850, and John Brisbin, then a member of the Wyoming county bar, was elected to supply the vacancy in Congress caused by Mr. Butler's death. Mr. Brisbin represented the district until the close of the ensuing session, March 4th, 1851, a period of about two months from the date of his election. In the fall of 1872 Hon. U. Mercur, of Towanda, who then represented this district in Congress, was chosen one of the justices of the Supreme Court, and resigned his seat in Congress. F. C. Bunnell, of Tunkhannock, was elected to supply the vacancy, and held the office until the end of the ensuing session, March 4th, 1873.

As State senators Hon. William M. Piatt, of Tunkhannock, was elected in the fall of 1858, and Hon. P. M. Osterhout, also of Tunkhannock, in the fall of 1868. Each held for one term.

Members of the State House of Representatives from this county have been elected as follows:

1843, John P. Smith; 1844, Thomas Morley; 1845, 1846, Schuyler Fassett

1847, 1848, Robert R. Little; 1849, Ezekiel Mowry; 1850, Ezekiel Mowry, jr; 1852, John D. Denison; 1854, John Sturdevant; 1855, 1857, John V. Smith; 1858, Alfred Hine; 1859, Samuel Oaks; 1860, Thomas Osterhout; 1861, George S. Tutton; 1864, 1865, Peter M. Osterhout; 1866, Jacob Kennedy; 1867, Ziba Lott; 1871, 1872, Martin Brunges; 1873, Robert R. Little; 1874, Giles Roberts; 1876, John Jackson; 1878, 1879, A. W. Stevens.

The following sheriffs have been elected in the years stated. It is a remarkable fact that all these gentlemen are now (1880) living.

1842, Thomas Osterhout; 1845, James Kelly; 1848, John Jackson; 1851, Gordon Swetland; 1854, James B. Harding; 1857, Ziba Billings; 1860, Levi H. Stevens; 1863, Alvira Gay; 1866, Moses W. Dewitt; 1869, Harrison Comstock; 1872, Edwin Stevens; 1875, H. T. Carter; 1878, George L. Kennard.

The following prothonotaries have been elected:

1842, George Brown; 1845, 1848, Peter M. Osterhout; 1851, Thomas A. Miller; 1854, 1857, Daniel D. Dewitt; 1860, 1863, 1878, Ziba Lott; 1866, 1869, Ephraim J. Keeney; 1872, 1875, A. B. Fitch.

The county commissioners elected were:

1842, William R. Robinson, Henry Roberts, Gordon Pike; 1843, Gordon Pike; 1844, John Sturdevant, Samuel Harding; 1845, John Townsend; 1846, Samuel Stark; 1847, Ashbel Lee; 1848, Stephen Capwell; 1849, Cyrus L. Vaughn; 1850, Josiah Rogers; 1851, Joseph Burgess; 1852, David Patrick; 1853, M. W. Newberry; 1854, Josiah Fassett; 1855, James Townsend; 1856, John Lum; 1857, Harrison Comstock; 1858, Benjamin P. Carver; 1859, Lewis Armstrong; 1860, James W. Garey; 1861, Francis Hough; 1862, Theron Vaughn; 1863, Edwin Stevens; 1864, Hiram Bodle; 1865, Lewis Cook; 1866, G. W. Sherwood; 1867, William B. Overfield; 1868, William F. Carl; 1869, George Henning; 1870, Keim; 1871, George Jayne; 1872, B. M. Hall; 1873, George W. Stark; 1874, Calvin Robinson; 1875, Philip Thomas, Theodore Williams, Reuben Bender; 1878, John G. Herman, William Siekler, Asa H. Frear.

The population of Wyoming county was 12,540 in 1860, and 14,585 in 1870. The census of 1880 was in progress during the preparation of this work, and showed the population to be 15,684 plus that of Lemon, which we were unable to learn in time to include.

CHAPTER II.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR OF WYOMING COUNTY.

IN 1842, when the act creating the county of Wyoming was passed, Hon. William Jessup, of Montrose, was the president judge of the judicial district including the new county. This eminent judge had enjoyed a large experience in the judicial office before assuming the bench in Wyoming, at the first term of court held therein, in the spring of 1843. In 1850 the elective judiciary amendment of the State constitution was ratified by a majority of the popular vote, and the commissions of the existing judges, who had held their offices by executive appointment, expired soon afterward. On retiring from the bench Judge Jessup opened an office at Montrose. After a few years of practice he was prostrated by a lingering disease, which incapacitated him for labor of every sort, and of which he finally died. As a jurist Judge Jessup had few superiors. His most conspicuous characteristic was quickness of comprehension. Generally his opinions were formed on the instant, and rarely changed. They experienced their full proportion of reversals by the Supreme Court.

Hon. John W. Conyngham, his successor on the bench of Wyoming county, had also enjoyed a considerable experience upon the bench. He resided at Wilkes-Barre. Wyoming county was attached to his district shortly before the elective judiciary amendment went into effect. On the expiration of the commission which he held by appointment he was elected by the people in the fall of 1851 for ten years. In 1856 Luzerne county was made a separate judicial district. In Judge Conyngham's performance of official duty friendship and enmity were alike powerless to move him a hair's breadth from the path indicated by his intelligent and conscientious comprehension of the law. His record is without a blemish.

In 1856 Wyoming, Columbia, Montour and Sullivan counties were formed into a judicial district, and Hon. Warren J. Woodward was appointed president judge thereof. He was elected in the fall of that year and served until 1862; then held the judgeship of Schuylkill county until his promotion to the Supreme Court, of which he was serving his second term as a member at the time of his death, in the fall of 1879. His mental ability was of a high order, and his published opinions in the Supreme Court reports abundantly attest his capacity as a judge.

A. K. Peckham, of Tunkhannock, succeeded Judge Woodward by appointment.

In the fall of 1862 Hon. William Elwell, then of Towanda, Pa., was elected president judge of this district, and in 1872 he was re-elected, without opposition, for a second term of ten years. By an act of 1874 provision was made for the appointment of an additional law judge, and Thomas J. Ingham, of Laporte, Sullivan county, was appointed. Later in the same session a supplement was passed making a separate district of Wyoming and Sullivan counties. This act limited Judge Elwell's regular services to the counties of Columbia and Montour. It is entirely safe to say that no Common Pleas judge in the State stands higher in the estimation of the legal profession than he. Mr. Ingham was elected president judge in the fall of 1874, and is still serving.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

Perrin Ross, of Tunkhannock borough, and William S. Jayne; of Washington township, were commissioned as associate judges for the county of Wyoming on the 25th of February, 1843. Judge Ross survived his appointment but about one year. Judge Jayne continued in office until the termination of his commission by the elective judiciary amendment. On the 3d of February, 1845, Persifer Lemon, then of Windham township, was commissioned in place of Judge Ross, and he held the office five years. Sherman D. Phelps, of Tunkhannock borough, was appointed on the 12th of February, 1850. His official term was abridged by the operation of the constitutional amendment referred to. In 1851, at the first election of judges, Washington Stansberry, of Tunkhannock, and Nicholas Overfield, of Washington township, were elected associate judges for five years. In 1856 Henry Love, of Mehoopany township, and Ira Avery, of Tunkhannock borough, were elected; in 1861 Samuel Roberts, of Falls, and Dr. Nathan Wells, of Meshoppen. Pending his official term Judge Roberts entered the army, and was killed before Petersburg. In his place Henry Roberts, his father, was appointed on the 27th of July, 1864. Dr. John V. Smith, of Tunkhannock borough, was elected in the fall of the same year for the regular term, and in 1866 Gordon Pike, of North Moreland township, was chosen to succeed Judge Wells. In 1869 Harvey Sickler, of Tunkhannock borough, succeeded Dr. Smith. In 1872 he resigned. C. D. Gearhart, of Tunkhannock borough, was appointed as his successor, and at the ensuing election he was elected. In 1871 George Osterhout, of Tunkhannock township, was elected as the successor of Judge Pike. In 1876 James Phœnix, of Monroe township, succeeded Judge Osterhout, and in the fall of 1878 Paul Billings, of Tunkhannock borough, was chosen as the successor of Judge Gearhart.

THE WYOMING COUNTY BAR.

In the formation of Wyoming county a considerable list of causes whose situs was within the limits of the new county were transferred from Luzerne, and this occupied the attention of the Common Pleas largely for several successive terms, giving to the young lawyers ample employment.

About a year before the organization of the new county James Holliday and A. K. Peckham opened offices at Tunkhannock. William H. Miller, having graduated at the Carlisle Law School, opened an office some six months later, and on the 1st of March, 1843, R. R. Little, Esq., having been admitted at Montrose, Susquehanna county, in September of the previous year, also located at the seat of the new county and formed a partnership with Mr. Miller. These were the only law offices in this county until after the first term of court. Mr. Holliday, after the close of the September term of 1843, removed to Milwaukie, Wis. Late in the fall of 1843 Mr. Miller returned to Carlisle. Mr. Peckham continued in practice until his death, in 1865. Of the four gentlemen named above Mr. Little is now (February, 1880,) the sole survivor, and he has not yet completed his sixtieth year. With the exception of three terms of Legislative service at Harrisburg and about one year of service as judge advocate of a special naval court at Washington, Mr. Little's life has been spent in the active pursuit of his profession in Wyoming county, until his recent substantial withdrawal from the practice, on account of the wear and strain of forensic life upon a physical constitution never very robust. His forensic career of about thirty-five years was especially distinguished by his uniform courtesy of deportment toward the younger members of the bar, and by his fixed purpose to maintain in his own practice the dignity, integrity and high character of his profession.

At the first term of court John Brisbin—having just completed his term of study—was admitted, and William M. Piatt, admitted at the ensuing term, formed with Mr. Brisbin the firm of Brisbin & Piatt.

The firm continued until about 1854, when Mr. Brisbin entered the service of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, and removed to Scranton. He died at Newark, N. J., on the 3d of February, 1880. Mr. Piatt has practiced here until the present, except a few months in or about 1863 in Towanda, and a senatorial term at Harrisburg, ending about 1856.

S. S. Winchester was admitted at the September term of 1843, and about ten years later removed to Wilkes-Barre. Edward Elwell, from Bradford county, located at Tunkhannock late in 1843; was associated with Mr. Little in business for about two years, and soon afterward removed to Sheboygan, Wis. Elhanan Smith was a member of the bar of this county for ten years from 1844. During a considerable portion of this time he was associated with Mr. Peckham, in the firm of Peckham & Smith; afterward with F. C. Ross in the firm of Smith & Ross. F. C. Ross was admitted in 1847, opened an office soon afterward and continues in practice. George S. Tutton practiced at Tunkhannock from 1847 until his death, in 1866. B. F. Harding came to the bar of this his native county late in 1847; was associated with Mr. Little—under whose directions he had studied—during the absence of the latter at Harrisburg at the Legislative session of 1848, and in the spring of that year removed to Illinois. He is now president judge of a judicial district in Oregon. E. H. Little, Esq., since 1849 a prominent member of the bar of Columbia county, associated himself with his brother, R. R. Little, in the fall of 1848, and occupied the office of the latter during his second Legislative term, in 1849. John J. Millon located at Tunkhannock about 1850; was soon after appointed prosecuting officer for the county, and died about 1855. Milton Dana located at Tunkhannock about the same time and removed to Texas a few years later.

P. M. Osterhout, Esq., came to the bar of this his native county in 1852—having held the office of prothonotary during the two preceding terms. Mr. Osterhout was associated with Mr. Little two years, and, with the exception of two terms as representative and one as senator at Harrisburg, his practice has been without interruption. During the past few years, from inclination rather than from failure of either physical or mental power, he has withdrawn from the more active and laborious duties of the profession, though he yet appears occasionally in the courts, as active and apparently as vigorous as in his early prime.

R. R. Ross was admitted in 1853, and soon afterward joined his brother, F. C. Ross, in the present firm of F. C. and R. P. Ross. Harvey Sickler came to the bar in 1856, and soon afterward became district attorney. In 1861, or thereabout, he closed his law office, and assumed the charge of the Wyoming Democrat, having published which for several years he sold to its present publisher, and was elected to the office of associate judge. He resigned in 1872, and has since been practicing. Jacob Dewitt was admitted in 1857, and was associated with Mr. Little until about 1863, when he removed to Towanda. George P. Knowles was admitted in 1862, and occupied the office of Judge Peckham that year. When Judge Elwell succeeded to the bench Mr. Knowles removed from this county. Stanley W. Little, Esq., was admitted about 1863; was associated with his uncle, R. R. Little, about one year, when he removed to Bradford county, engaged in mercantile business for a few years, and afterward resumed the practice of law at Towanda, where he still resides. John B. Rhoads was admitted in 1865, and removed to Kansas about 1869. O. L. Parrish came to the bar in 1865. He was register and recorder one term; then practiced till 1872, when he removed to Chicago. W. E. Little, Esq., entered the profession in 1866, and joined his father, R. R. Little, in business in the same year. From 1869 to 1872 he was one of the firm of Little & Sittser, and since about 1872 he and his younger brother, C. A. Little, Esq., have composed the firm of W. E. & C. A. Little. George W. Dewitt, admitted in 1867, was associated with Mr. Osterhout a short time, but never opened a separate office. John A. Sittser came to the bar in 1868; formed a partnership with W. E. Little in 1869, and resumed practice by himself in 1873. He is now associated with Henry Harding in the firm of Sittser & Harding. F. Ansart, Esq., has practiced here since 1870 save while engaged as chief civil engineer in the laying out and construction of the Montrose Railway. James W. Piatt was admitted in 1871, and has since been associated with his father, W. M. Piatt. In the fall of 1874 he was elected district attorney. C. A. Little, Esq., was admitted in 1871, and since about 1872 has been a member of the firm of W. E. & C. A. Little. Henry Harding was admitted in 1874 and since 1875 has been a member of the firm of Sittser & Harding. B. W. Lewis, admitted in 1874, has continued in business since. J. Wood Piatt was admitted in 1876, and is associated with his father and brother, W. M. and James W. Piatt. C. O. Dersheimer was admitted and elected district attorney in 1877. Charles E. Terry was admitted at the November term of 1879. William A. Wilcox, of Nicholson borough, was admitted at the January term of 1880. The foregoing, except Mr. Wilcox, have had their offices at Tunkhannock. T. J. Chase was admitted some ten years ago; opened an office in Nicholson, and removed to Wilkes-Barre about three years ago. S. L. Tiffany, admitted about the same time, still has an office in Nicholson.

Mr. Tutton and Judge Peckham died in their prime. With the exception of a term of service as member of the Legislature, the former's practice was without interruption to the time of his death. He was a cautious, painstaking and strictly upright lawyer, and an accomplished musician; especially eminent as a composer and performer of band music. Judge Peckham was of an excitable temperament, and rather aggressive in his method of dealing with opposing witnesses and their testimony, but by no means without self-control. In trials, his chief strength was said to consist in his remarkable ability to make the most of a bad cause by the ingenious use of irrelevant testimony, and in giving to it an aspect of relevancy in his comments to the jury.

As a whole, the bar of Wyoming county has always been a strong one; and, as a rule, the litigated cases have been ably prepared and thoroughly tried.

CHAPTER III.

CANAL AND RAILROAD COMMUNICATIONS IN WYOMING COUNTY.

THE first letting of the North Branch Canal in this county was at Tunkhannock, in 1838. Thaddeus Stevens and John Dickey, as commissioners, were present. The section through the narrows, or the rock jobs, as they were called, were let at that time. In 1842 the North Branch Canal Company was chartered, but in 1849 the work was resumed by the State and the other sections, through the flats and the rocks, aqueducts, etc., were put under contract. In 1852 the first boat passed up this canal through what is now Wyoming county. It bore the name of "Seth Clover," who was one of the canal commissioners at that time.

The northern division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passes through the townships of Clinton and Nicholson. It has stations at Factoryville and Nicholson borough. Between them a hill was formerly surmounted by a zigzag. This is now replaced by a tunnel.

During 1868 the Lehigh Valley Railroad was completed to a point a mile below the borough of Tunkhannock. The telegraph line of the road was completed to this point during the presidential election in that year, and the news of the result was transmitted on that line.

The bridge over the Tunkhannock creek was not completed till 1870. During that year trains ran through to Waverly, where connection was made with the Erie.

In the summer of 1868 an interest began to be felt in the project of a railroad between Montrose and some point on the Pennsylvania and New York Canal and Railroad Company's road in Wyoming county. At a meeting held in Montrose in January, 1869, "W. H. Jessup and A. J. Turrell were appointed to prepare a charter and obtain an act of incorporation by the Legislature for a railroad from some point on the Lehigh valley road, at or near Tunkhannock or Meshoppen, to the State line of New York, with a view to connecting with the Albany and Susquehanna railroad at Binghamton." According to a report made January 8th, 1872, the Montrose Railroad Company was organized at a meeting held in Springville on the 27th of April, 1871, and the following officers were chosen: President, James I. Blakeslee; directors, William H. Cooper, Samuel H. Sayre, H. R. Sherman, Samuel Stark, C. L. Brown, C. M. Gere, D. Thomas, G. E. Palen, W. H. Jessup, S. Tyler, B. F. Blakeslee and Felix Ansart. The survey of the route was commenced May 15th, 1871, and the road was put under contract the same year. Trains ran over it in 1872. The grading, bridging, etc., were done by the company at a cost of $100,000; and by an arrangement with the Pennsylvania and New York Canal and Railroad Company the superstructures were furnished and put on it by the latter, at an expense of $200,000, for which it was paid in the stock of the Montrose Railroad Company at par. The chief engineer was Felix Ansart. The road is equipped with two locomotives, two passenger cars, a baggage and mail car, and the requisite number of flat and box cars. It has declared no dividends, but has paid running expenses and interest on its bonded debt, except for the year 1879, in which there was a deficiency of $50. The president is James I. Blakeslee. The directors are Robert Clotz, Charles O. Skeel, S. D. Thomas, H. R. Sherman, C. M. Gere, William J. Mulford, E. F. Palen, Benjamin F. Blakeslee, Sylvanus Tyler, Samuel H. Sayre, Azor Lathrop and Paul Billings.

CHAPTER IV.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES—WYOMING COUNTY BIBLE SOCIETY—MILITARY COMPANIES.

ABOUT 1855 was organized the Wyoming County Agricultural Society. It was not incorporated, and was under a code of laws voluntarily adopted. Its first president was Elisha Sharp. The society leased and temporarily fitted up a lot of five acres, a portion of which is now the Tunkhannock cemetery; and on this ground three annual fairs were held. At these fairs creditable exhibitions were made, and the balance between the receipts and expenditures was nearly even. The society ceased to exist after the third fair.

On the 30th of August, 1876, another society was organized, with a perpetual charter, under the name of the Wyoming County Agricultural Society. It was organized as a stock company, under the provisions of the act of 1874. The capital stock was fixed at $2,000, in eighty shares. The incorporators were Henry W. Chase, A. B. Fitch, H. W. Bardwell, F. L. Sittser, Charles M. Lee, James W. Pratt, H. P. Carter, Harvey Sickler, F. C. Bunnell, J. W. Dinsmore, D. D. Dewitt, B. W. Lewis. The first officers were: F. C. Bunnell, president; S. J. Harding, vice-president; C. M. Lee, clerk; B. W. Lewis, treasurer; directors, Harvey Sickler, Albert Townsend, E. F. Avery, B. P. Carver, Alvin Day, H. W. Bardwell and Jonathan Jenkins.

September 25th, 1876, the society leased of S. J. Harding, for a fair ground, twenty-one acres in the township of Eaton, about three-fourths of a mile from the borough of Tunkhannock. This ground was at once enclosed and fitted up, and in the latter part of October of the same year a fair was held. The grounds have been still further improved; commodious pens and an exhibition building have been erected, a driving track and a grand stand have been constructed, and annual fairs have been held. These fairs have been sustained with increasing interest, and the exhibits have year by year increased in number and quality.

The president, vice-president and treasurer elected in 1876 have served since. James W. Piatt has been secretary since 1877. The present directors are Harvey Sickler, Albert Townsend, B. P. Carver, H. P. Carter, Jonathan Jenkins, Ziba Billings and N. J. Harding.

WYOMING COUNTY BIBLE SOCIETY.

This society, which had had a previous existence, was reorganized in the spring of 1864, with Ira Avery president, Samuel Stark secretary, Peter M. Osterhout treasurer, and S. S. Kennedy agent. During 1864 an exploration of the county was made by the agent, and the following are the statistical results reported by him:

Sermons and addresses delivered, 54; families visited, 1,400; families found destitute of the Bible, 64; destitute families supplied by sale, 42; by gift, 16; prices of Bibles given to destitute, $9.60; Bibles sold, 227; Testaments sold, 300; total volumes distributed, 543; received for sale of books, $568.60; collections, $211.48.

There has been no canvass of the county for Bible distribution since 1864. A Bible depository is kept for the society by O. B. Mills, in Tunkhannock.

VOLUNTEER MILITIA COMPANIES.

The first company of National Guard formed in Wyoming county was organized March 19th, 1871, under the name of Wyoming County Veterans. It was composed wholly of veterans of the war of 1861-65. R. W. Bannatyne, formerly captain of Company B 52nd Pennsylvania volunteers, was chosen captain, William Brooks first lieutenant, and M. L. McNeil second lieutenant. The company comprised some of the best citizens of the county. Captain Bannatyne was promoted in October, 1871, aide de camp on the staff of General Osborne, with the rank of major. The other commissioned officers were promoted in regular gradation, and H. W. Bardwell was made second lieutenant. When the 9th regiment of the National Guard of Pennsylvania was organized this company was made a part of it. Lieutenant Bardwell became adjutant of the regiment, and John Broughton was made second lieutenant in his place. The company continued in existence till the reorganization of the National Guard in 1878, when it was disbanded by a general order. By reason of the service which the veterans composing this company had seen, and its remoteness from the scene of the mining and railroad strikes and riots, the company was relied on with no distrust for the preservation of peace when the regiment was called out to suppress these riots.

The Eaton Rifles, an independent military company, was organized in May, 1871, with James B. Harding captain, Samuel Fruchey first lieutenant, and N. Atherton second lieutenant. The members of the company were residents of the township of Eaton. The company was attached to the 9th division of the uniformed militia of the State, and constituted a part of a battalion under Major R. W. Bannatyne. It acquired reasonable proficiency in military drill. It was not called into actual service, but at the time of the Williamsport riot it was during two days kept in readiness for moving. With the Wyoming County Veterans it participated in several parades and celebrations, among which was one at Wilkes-Barre, July 4th, 1872. On the organization of the 9th regiment N. G. P. this company was disbanded by a general order.

TOWNSHIP AND BOROUGH HISTORIES,

WYOMING COUNTY.

BRAINTRIM TOWNSHIP.

BRAINTRIM township is among the first organized within the present limits of Wyoming county, and formerly embraced Meshoppen and a portion of Washington townships. It is supposed to have been named after Braintree in Connecticut, whence some of the early settlers came. It had 621 inhabitants in 1870, and gained 50 before 1880.

THE PIONEER PERIOD.

Most of the early white inhabitants were migratory hunters and trappers. Occasionally patches of the rich bottom lands along the river were cleared and cultivated by the Indians or transitory white men, but only two settlements are known to have been made previous to the Revolution.

John Depew located at the mouth of Tuscarora creek before 1776 under the Pennsylvania title. His farm passed into the hands of William Hooker Smith, and was for a time occupied by his son, James Smith. Depew was a Pennamite and a tory, and was for a time a prisoner in the hands of the "Yankee" settlers in the Wyoming valley.

Frederick Vanderlip settled on Black Walnut bottom previous to the Revolution, on a large tract which he also held under the Pennsylvania title. Here he opened a tavern, which soon became a favorite stopping point. General Sullivan's army encamped here on the night of the 4th of August, 1779, on its march up the river.

No other settlements were attempted until about 1786, when immigrants, for the most part direct from Connecticut, began to locate along the river. Between 1786 and 1794 a dozen or more families of them had begun to hew out permanent homes in this wilderness. Prominent among the first permanent settlers were the Keeneys, from Litchfield county, Conn. (Mark and his sons Richard and Joshua, and Thomas, a distant relative or Mark), many of whose descendants still live in the township. Thomas Keeney, a native of Connecticut, with his family, came from New York State in the spring of 1786 and settled near Keeney's Ferry. Here he built a temporary shanty on the southwest bank of the river. The same season he built a comfortable log house on the opposite bank, in Braintrim (the site of which abode was long since washed away), and the following autumn moved his family into it, thus becoming the first settler in the township west of Skinner's Eddy. His wife and his daughter Mercy were the heroines of several courageous exploits. It is related that Mercy once kept a panther treed near Rocky Forest, while a party of men went a mile or more for fire arms with which the beast was dispatched. Thomas Keeney and his wife returned to New York State in three or four years, leaving the place in possession of their daughter and son-in-law, Richard Keeney. Richard and Joshua Keeney came to the Wyoming valley in 1787. The following year Richard came to Braintrim, where he was married September 18th, 1788, to Mercy Keeney. He became a permanent settler on the farm which his father-in-law had commenced to improve, and which is still in possession of some of his descendants. He early established the Keeney Ferry, which is still operated by members of the family. He was born in Connecticut, June 17th, 1762, and served in the Revolutionary war. He raised a large family, most of whom were life-long residents of Braintrim. He died July 11th, 1831. His wife, Mercy, was born February 15th, 1770, and died March 14th, 1856, having lived on the same farm nearly 70 years. Joshua Keeney returned to Connecticut in 1789, where he married Phebe Sturdevant in February, 1790, and soon after located permanently at Black Walnut bottom, on a tract of 400 acres, where he died at an advanced age. He was a useful and influential citizen and church member. He reared eleven children and lived to see them all married and pleasantly located. Mark Keeney, the father of Richard and Joshua, a soldier in the French and Revolutionary wars, was born in Litchfield county, Connecticut, May 1st, 1740. He lived in Braintrim from about 1790 until his death, October 7th, 1804. His wife, Abigail B., died July 7th of the same year, aged 65 years.

Isaac Lacey, who has numerous descendants in Brain-trim, was among the pioneers. He was born in Fairfield county, Conn., April 2nd, 1754, and married Lydia Pratt, of the same place, March 11th, 1784. In 1792 he located on a farm on Lacey street, named after him. He bought the Connecticut title, but had to re-purchase of the Pennsylvania proprietors or lose his farm. He was a weaver and spent much time at the loom, but found time to clear up and cultivate his farm with the assistance of his sons. He reared a large family, most of whom always lived in the township. He died November 2nd, 1830; his wife March 16th, 1809. His father, Ebenezer Lacey, was born in Connecticut, April 19th, 1727, and came to Braintrim in 1794, where he died December 21st, 1807. His wife, Freelope, died March 5th, 1801, aged 74 years. Ebenezer Lacey, oldest son of Isaac Lacey, was born in Vermont, November 28th, 1788. From 1792 he lived in this township, farming and hunting. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was granted a land warrant for his services. He was also noted as a builder of "arks," the principal means of transportation in early days. He married, June 5th, 1809, Zeruah Northrup, who was born in Connecticut, April 3d, 1789, and came to Laceyville in 1807. She died March 1st, 1869. Mr. Lacey died April 24th, 1872.

Samuel Sturdevant, born in Connecticut in 1740, located in 1792 at Black Walnut, on the land previously occupied by Frederick Vanderlip, where he a few years later built a framed dwelling (splitting from pine logs the lumber for finishing it, and dressing it with his own hands), in which he resided until his death, April 19th, 1828. Samuel Sturdevant, jr., was born in Danbury, Connecticut, September 16th, 1773; came to Braintrim with his father, or about the same time, and soon after located at Skinner's Eddy, where he married a daughter of Ebenezer Skinner, about 1795. He was largely instrumental in founding the village which soon sprang up at the eddy. He was a man of large business capacity, and during most of his life was extensively engaged in land speculating, lumbering, grist-milling and farming. He remained a resident until his death, March 4th, 1847. His five sons—John, Peter B., Liverus D., Ebenezer W. and Charles—became prominent and influential citizens of this section.

Henry B. Champin lived east of Skinner's Eddy for several years from about 1792. He was one of the first justices of the peace. Ebenezer Skinner settled at Skinner's in 1792, where he died October 16th, 1804, aged 71 years.

Benjamin Edwards came to Braintrim in 1825. He was born in Connecticut, September 1st, 1793. He taught school and afterwards spent several years in the southern States, peddling tinware, yankee clocks and notions. Soon after coming here he opened a store at Skinner's Eddy. From 1832 he spent many years at Laceyville in mercantile and other business. He was a successful business man and a respectable member of the M. E. church. He died in Laceyville, February 24th, 1876.

General Bradley Wakeman was born in Connecticut,

September 21st, 1800, and was married in 1824 to Maria Edwards. In June, 1828, he came to Skinner's Eddy and joined Benjamin Edwards, his brother-in-law, in trade. From the spring of 1832 he traded successfully at Laceyville until 1861. He was nominated by the Whigs for State representative, and associate judge.

William Thompson was born in Bradford county, in 1812; learned the blacksmith's trade at Laceyville, and married Rebecca, daughter of Daniel P. Lacey, in 1831. He lived in Braintrim after 1854, where he died in April, 1876. He was justice of the peace many years. His widow is still living on the old homestead on Lacey street.

Levi Gregory was born in Connecticut, February 15th, 1794, and came with his parents to Susquehanna county, Pa., in his childhood. He was married January 1st, 1822, to Miranda Hayward, a native of Cazenovia, N. Y. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade. In 1839 he located on a farm on Lacey street, where he resided until his death, November 25th, 1855. He held several township offices. His widow is still a resident of the township.

The first saw-mill was built by Samuel Sturdevant, jr., as early as 1797, on Tuscarora creek, near its mouth. A few years later he built one on the river bank near the mouth of the creek. Another was built about 1810, near the mouth of Little Tuscarora creek. He also put up the first grist-mill, near the site of his second saw-mill, about 1819, Isaac Camp being employed as mill-wright. The site of these mills was long since washed away. This mill, containing but one run of home-made stones, accommodated the neighborhood many years.

A wool carding and cloth dressing establishment was erected on Tuscarora creek, by Peter B. Sturdevant, about 1830, and was in operation many years.

A post route was established from Wilkes-Barre to Tioga via Black Walnut bottom in 1803. The mail was carried on foot once in two weeks. From 1810 Conrad Teter carried the mail in coaches once a week over this route for many years. A post-office was early established at Black Walnut, and was kept by Daniel Sterling, who lived in the present township of Meshoppen. About 1822 the Skinner's Eddy post-office was established, and John Sturdevant, who then lived in the house now occupied by Paul Lacey, was appointed postmaster. About 1834 General B. Wakeman was appointed, and the office was removed to his store at Laceyville. Thomas Morley became postmaster in 1837, and the office was removed to Skinner's Eddy, where it has since remained. About 1841 the Laceyville post-office was established under its present name, and Thomas Parker, a merchant in company with General Wakeman, was appointed the first postmaster.

Joseph Gamble opened a day-school as early as 1813, in a log dwelling nearly opposite John B. Edwards's store in Laceyville. Early schools were also kept in a log house near the site of the present grist-mill in Laceyville. The house had been previously occupied and probably put up by Garret Smith. The first school-house in the western part of the township was built about 1824, on Lacey street, near the residence of C. B. Lacey. George Gamble taught the first school here. Among other early teachers were John Sturdevant, one Carpenter, Anna Keeney, a Miss Smith and a Miss Graves. A school-house was erected at Skinner's Eddy about 1829, nearly opposite Leon Smith's residence. The present two-story school building, which accommodates Laceyville and Skinner's Eddy, was erected in 1864.

Frederick Vanderlip was the first tavern keeper in the township, keeping previous to and during the early part of the Revolution. The second tavern was opened at Skinner's Eddy previous to 1800, and was kept for several years by Wait S. Skinner. Samuel Sturdevant, jr., subsequently became proprietor, remaining until about 1830, when the house was closed to the public.

Drs. Royal Robinson and Edward Crandall located at Skinner's Eddy about 1823, and were the first resident physicians. Dr. Robinson was born in Amsterdam, N. Y., and married Fanny Fassett, of Windham. He practiced here until his death, May 27th, 1841. Dr. Crandall continued here till about 1830. Among their successors were Drs. Plant, Roberts, Dimock, Jones and James.

The first death among the residents of Braintrim was that of a child named Baker, who died about 1793 or 1794, and was buried in the Lacey street cemetery, which has ever since been used as a graveyard. It now contains seven acres, and is the resting place of many of the first settlers in this part of the township. The Black Walnut burying ground was begun as early as 1795. Among the first burials was that of Sarah, wife of Samuel Sturdevant. The graveyard at Skinner's Eddy was started some years later.

The first marriage was celebrated September 18th, 1788, the contracting parties being Richard and Mercy Keeney (very distantly related). The first known birth was that of Chester Keeney, their son, December 10th, 1789.

The first framed building was a dwelling built for James Smith by Elihu Hall, who was the first carpenter and joiner. The house stands opposite the Laceyville school-house.

The first preacher was Rev. Jacob Drake (Baptist), who preached occasionally at Black Walnut and other parts of the township in 1792 or soon after. Among others previous to any church organization were Revs. Davis Dimmock, Griffin, Lewis and Joel Rogers.

SKINNER'S EDDY.

Ebenezer Skinner and his son, Wait S., located just below the mouth of Tuscarora creek in 1792 or 1793, and subsequently opened a tavern. This used to be a favorite stopping place for raftsmen and boatmen, and soon came to be known as Skinner's Eddy. The principal part of the village originally stood on the flat near the river bank, but an unprecedented freshet in the spring of 1865 destroyed it, sweeping away twenty-five or thirty buildings. This flat was originally cleared by Samuel Sturdevant, jr., who built a saw-mill here and a grist-mill.

Benjamin Edwards was the first merchant, in 1826. In 1828 Bradley Wakeman became a partner with him. They were also engaged in the manufacture and sale of gloves and mittens to quite an extent. They remained until 1832, and were followed by John Sturdevant. Thomas Morley opened a store on the west side of the creek about 1835, and subsequently a foundry and machine shop. The "Tuscarora Iron Works" was founded in 1874 by John S. Peelis, the present proprietor. In 1863 Philip Thomas built a tannery, which he operated until November 19th, 1879, when it was burned.

The village now contains two general stores, a church, a hotel and railroad station, the Tuscarora Iron Works, a blacksmith and wheelwright shop, and about 100 inhabitants.

M. E. Church at Skinner's Eddy.—Meetings were held by itinerating Methodist preachers as early as 1810, and about 1812 a class was formed at the house of Joshua Keeney at Black Walnut, and stated preaching was had for a few years.

About 1828 a class was formed at the school-house on Lacey street, composed of Simon Z. Keeney and Louisa, his wife, Charles Keeney, Thomas Morley, Clarissa Sturdevant, Betsey Smith and Mrs. Joshua Keeney. Revs. George Comfort and Vincent Coryell were the ministers on this circuit. The place of meeting was soon changed to Skinner's Eddy, being the dwelling of Major John Sturdevant, and afterward the school-house until 1838, when the present meeting house was built. Among the early preachers were Rev. Messrs. Comfort, Coryell, Bibbins, Barker, Torrey, Ellis and Lull.

the principal village, has three general stores, one hardware store, one grist and one saw-mill, three millinery stores, two jewelry shops, a hotel, a church, a planing mill, a proportionate number of mechanics' shops, three physicians and about 400 inhabitants. Braintrim was the name until the establishment of the post-office, when it received the name of Laceyville, after Henry W. Lacey, then an influential business man of the place.

Samuel Sturdevant, jr., owned and cleared the land on which the east part of the village stands, up to the street east of the hotel. One or two log houses were built before 1809. In that year Hiram Ward and his brother John located here, and the former built the first framed building, on the corner opposite B. W. Edwards's store. He soon after opened a store in it and did an extensive business two or three years, when he failed and removed. From about 1829 Thomas Morley kept a store in the Ward building a few years. In 1831 Benjamin Edwards removed from the Eddy to Laceyville, where he was in trade most of the time for many years. Bradley Wakeman was in trade here for thirty-five years from 1832. Among other early merchants were Edward Merrit and Thomas Parker. The latter about 1848 built the store now occupied by George W. Smith. Benjamin Edwards constructed a tannery at Laceyville in 1832, the first in Braintrim. In 1837 he sold it to Isaac J. La Barre. Philip Thomas bought it and carried it on until about 1863, when it was abandoned.

Isaac J. La Barre was the first hotel keeper here, beginning in 1848. Soon afterward Tuleson D. Spring opened the present "Kennard House," of which he was for many years proprietor.

In 1871 David Goodale and C. I. Lacey built a steam grist-mill containing three runs of stones, which is now the only one in Braintrim. In the spring of 1880 a saw-mill was annexed to the grist-mill, which is run by the same power.

Baptist Church of Laceyville.—This church was organized May 24th, 1794, at the house of Samuel Sturdevant. The members were Samuel, Azor, Fear, Noah and Molly Sturdevant, Joseph and Hannah Wescott, Jediah and Olive Coon, and Samuel Sturdevant, jr.

Samuel Sturdevant was ordained by this church October 25th, 1794, and was its pastor until his death, April 9th, 1828. After about one year's vacancy Rev. Joseph W. Parker preached until 1833; then Rev. Charles A. Fox till 1836, and Rev. D. Dimock until October 28th, 1846, after which the church was supplied for a time by Rev. Ira G. Stoddard, when Joseph W. Parker was recalled, who served until April 23d, 1849. Since November 23d, 1849, excepting 1869 (when Rev. John A. Ball supplied the pulpit), Rev. D. D. Gray has been pastor. Previous to 1839 church services were held principally on Lacey street in dwellings and the school-house. The present church was begun in 1839, and dedicated in 1840 by Rev. Henry Curtis, of Bethany, Pa. In 1866 the society bought the present parsonage.

As the result of a religious revival in 1843 63 members were added to the church; in 1854, 91, and in 1870, 67. The present membership is about 190.

Laceyville Lodge I. O. O. F., No. 439 (the first in the county), was organized July 22nd, 1851, with six charter members. The same day eight others were received. Since 1863 the membership has ranged from ten to fifty-two, the present number.

The first elective officers were: T. D. Spring, N. G.; George R. Ackroyd, V. G.; Edward Merritt, secretary; George M. Black, treasurer.

Franklin Lodge F. and A. M. received a warrant dated December 27th, 1822, and on May 29th, 1823, the lodge was constituted, with Jasper Fassett as W. M., John Ford S. W., and Isaac Lacey, jr., J. W. There were in 1824 39 members. This lodge was suspended in 1828 for non-payment of Grand Lodge dues.

April 5th, 1852, a warrant was granted to Thomas Morley as W. M., John Sturdevant as S. W., and Nathan Osburn as J. W., for the formation of a lodge "to be held at Skinner's Eddy, or within five miles of that place, and called Franklin Lodge, No. 263." This lodge was constituted June 1st, 1852, with 12 members. Walter W. Dimock was elected secretary; Hamlet Hill, treasurer; John C. Lacey, S. D.; Isaac J. La Barre, J. D., and James M. Robinson, tiler. The lodge now meets in Laceyville. In January, 1880, it had 65 members.

CLINTON TOWNSHIP.

THIS township, originally forming parts of Abington, Nicholson and Tunkhannock, was settled during the first years of the present century, by families from Rhode Island. Robert Reynolds, with his sons Solomon, George and Phineas, settled about 1800 on the site of Factoryville. A numerous family of their descendants still reside in the village and vicinity. In the following year Stephen Capwell settled on the present William Perigo farm. He had five sons and three daughters, and many of his descendants live here. Benjamin Carpenter is reported to have settled in 1808, a mile and a half from the village. He left six sons and three daughters. Nearly contemporaneous was the coming of Elisha Madison and David Arnold. Madison settled on the top of Bunker hill. David and Preserved Taylor were pioneers of about the same date. In 1813 the first resident physician, Dr. Henry Green, came from Sherburne, Chenango county, N. Y., and a year later his brother William Green, now living (1879) in hale and graceful old age in the village. Job Briggs, Gifford Mathewson and William Price came between 1813 and 1815. Hampton Moore settled on the Jones farm, half a mile above the depot, and Benjamin Green in 1817 in the village. Dr. John Wilson came prior to 1820.

In case of a break in the communications with Wilkes-Barre, the nearest village, the settlers often suffered for want of the necessaries of life, and had to depend on game for food; and they were subject to the same depredations of beasts of prey everywhere experienced by the pioneers.

It is said that an Indian trail ran through the site of the village and over the hills south, and in its vicinity have been discovered arrowheads, pestles, etc. In 1870, as Benjamin Carpenter was digging a cellar in Factoryville, the workmen came upon a decayed box, containing the remains of a human being. The box, which had evidently been made of plank split with an axe from the body of a tree, lay beneath a stratum of gravel, and the death must have occurred before the earliest settlement of the valley.

The first school was kept in a little log building about a mile south of the village, by Job Briggs. Hulda Allsworth, of Pittston, was the next teacher. About 1824 the old "square-top" school-house was built, on the site of the depot, and for many years it served as a church and school building. Among the early pedagogues was Elizabeth Wilson.

The first saw-mill was built a short distance from where Mathewson's grist-mill now stands, by Joseph Capwell, about 1820. The first grist-mill was built by Capwell about 1838, and it is still running, owned by C. Mathewson. James and Ezra Dean and others put up a log distillery on the creek flat, removing it about 1828 a mile further up the creek. After the failure of the cotton-mill enterprise the staple commodity for exportation seems to have been tow cloth, the flax for which was broken, hatched and woven by the same fair hands that afterward took it on horseback to Wilkes-Barre, mainly by a bridle path, and there bartered it for the few necessities and rare luxuries of the day.

The population of Clinton was 834 in 1870 and 842 in 1880.

FACTORYVILLE.

This village was known early in the present century as "the Factory," being the place where a cotton-mill was built hardly more than a dozen years after the first settlement of the township. It was operated on a small scale for a year or two and was then abandoned, the cotton being hauled 150 miles or more through the woods from Newburgh, N. Y. The old building, having passed through a variety of experiences and renovations, is now the store of James Frear. The earliest settlers were the Reynolds, Dean, Capwell, Green and Wilson families. It was not until nearly twenty years after the place obtained its present name by the establishment of the post-office that it began to assume the proportions of a village. The post-office was established in 1828, the first postmaster being Dr. John Wilson, who kept the office in the house of Jeremiah Wilson, some distance from the village. The early opening of the Drinker turnpike furnished communication with the outer world. The pioneer meetings were in the "square-top", or at the houses of the citizens. Since the building of the railroad the growth of the place has been more rapid.

This small village in 1869 founded, almost unaided, one of the best educational institutions in this part of the State, and has since then supported and developed it with a unanimity and liberality worthy of the highest praise.

The first physician was Dr. Henry Green. The medical profession is now represented by Drs. A. M. Capwell, A. T. Brundage and George H. Brundage. The mercantile business is conducted by the firms of James Frear, Gardner & Gilmore, James M. Seaman & Co., C. S. Hinds, S. H. Briggs, S. C. Mathewson and J. Moore. The first hotel was built by Joseph Capwell, who kept it many years as a temperance house and who was succeeded by C. Mathewson. It is known as the Depot Hotel, being near the railway station about half a mile from the business portion of the village. The Factoryville House was built and for a time kept by S. C. Mathewson, and has since been kept by Colonel D. N. Mathewson. It is on the main street, centrally located, and is a quiet, pleasant stopping place. The only manufactories in the town are an upper leather tannery and a custom grist-mill.

FACTORYVILLE CHURCHES.

Methodist Episcopal.—The first Methodist in this vicinity, so far as we can learn, was "Mother" Taylor, wife of Preserved Taylor, who lived on the hill where Martin

Pelham now resides. At her house the Methodist meetings were held in the early days, say from 1820 to 1825, and many old people recollect hearing Rev. John Copeland preach with great unction and power in 1825. The "square-top" school house was built in 1825, and thereafter was used as a meeting-house. It was near where the railroad depot now stands. A class was in existence at the square-top in 1830, and Rev. Selah Stocking was the preacher at that time, when "Aunt" Eunice Gardner united with the church, it being then an outlying appointment on the Wyoming circuit. Preaching was had once in two or three weeks for nearly twenty years following. Among the preachers were Revs. Samuel Griffin, Solomon Ellis, V. M. Coryell and Mr. Wilcox. The society was small and struggling until about 1848 or 1849, when a revival occurred under the labors of Revs. A. H. Schoonmaker and J. F. Wilbur, and quite a number were added to the class. At this period the appointment was attached to Nicholson circuit, and was supplied by Revs. E. F. Roberts, C. E. Rice and G. L. Griffin successively. During Mr. Griffin's pastorate the church at Factoryville was built in the summer of 1854. It was a frame building, 30 by 42 feet, cost $855, and was dedicated in the fall of that year by Rev. Dr. George Peck, then presiding elder of the district. The charge then included Factoryville, Nicholson and West Nicholson, and was called Nicholson circuit. Rev. B. B. Emory was pastor two years, during which a parsonage was purchased (in 1855); it was rebuilt and enlarged in 1872. Rev. D. Worrell was pastor in 1857 and 1858; Rev. Ira D. Warren, in 1859; Rev. J. F. Wilbur, 1860, 1861; Rev. John La Bar, 1862-64. Then came again Rev. D. Worrell, who was twice returned to the charge, and died here in 1866. The appointment was supplied for the balance of the year by Rev. J. V. Newell, then living in Springville. In the spring of 1867 the conference stationed Rev. E. H. Hynson at Factoryville, and Rev. T. B. Jayne at Nicholson, who changed appointments every other Sabbath. The next spring the circuit was divided, and Factoryville was supplied by Rev. E. F. Roberts one year, he living at Meshoppen. Rev. E. M. High served in 1869-71; Rev. J. S. Lewis three years, under whose ministry in 1872 a large number were added to the class, of whom the greater part remain. After him came Rev. P. R. Tower, two years, and Rev. D. C. Barnes, three years. In 1878 the church at Factoryville was rebuilt, enlarged, refitted and refurnished throughout, and a tower and bell were added, at a total cost of $1,800. The church was rededicated October 2nd, by Rev. J. E. Smith, D. D., assisted by the presiding elder, William Bixby, and the pastor. In 1879 came Rev. A. J. Cook, the present pastor, under whose efficient ministrations the congregations have been well sustained, and sheds and an extension of the church lot added to the church property. The class now has 150 members.

The Factoryville Baptist Church was organized December 19th, 1850. A council of delegates from nine neighboring churches was convened at the New Bethel Baptist meeting house, in West Abington. Fifty-six persons

ANDERSON DANA.

Anderson Dana was born at Eaton, in 1836. He has been judge and inspector of elections and was elected auditor in 1880. He married Mindwell Felts, of Eaton. Mrs. Dana is a member of the M. E. church.

JAMES FREAR.

James Frear, who since 1857 has been engaged in the mercantile business in Factoryville, is a native of Eaton township. He married Sarah Osterhout, of Tunkhannock, and has a family of two children. Mr. Frear was one of the founders and most liberal patrons of the Keystone Academy, and has been its treasurer since its origin.

CHAUNCEY SHERWOOD.

Chauncey Sherwood was born in the township of Falls, on the 26th of November, 1812. For fourteen consecutive years he attended the common schools of his native town three months out of every year, the other nine months being employed in working on the farm; was never "sent away" to school but three times; afterward he taught school three years. When twenty-one years of age he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Webb. Their daughter, Mahala S., was married to Dr. J. M. Carey, now of Meshoppen, Pa., and had two sons and two daughters, the eldest being the son Chauncey Sherwood Carey, M. D., of Mill City. Mrs. Sarah Jane Sherwood died in 1855, and in 1859 Mr. Sherwood married Miss Lois C. Gorman, his present wife. He has been a consistent member of the M. E. church of Mill City for many years. Politically he is a Democrat. As a magistrate he has been elected for nine consecutive five-year terms, and has proved a prudent, painstaking, conscientious and impartial officer. He was elected to the office of county auditor of Luzerne county, before the county was divided, for three years. Having served his term he studied law under H. W. Nicholson, of Wilkes-Barre, most of the time for three years, but having three stores at the time he gave up the practice of law, excepting while acting as magistrate for those years. He continued in the mercantile business and hotel keeping for thirty years. He may justly be called the founder of Mill City.

JOSEPH ACE was born in Monroe county, Pa., May 27th, 1818. After being in several townships he settled in Eaton in 1865. March 6th, 1841, he married Sarah Smith, of Smithfield, Monroe county, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Ace are members of the Baptist church at Eaton. Mr. Ace has filled the office of deacon in his church.

CHARLES ARMSTRONG was born at Pittston, in 1824. He first came into Eaton in 1841, and was a resident till 1850, when he went to California. He returned to Eaton in 1864, and bought a farm in South Eaton. This he sold and bought the farm on which he now lives. He was married to Mary J. Harding, daughter of Samuel J. Harding and Sally Bird, sister of James Bird, of historical note.

ANDREW AUMICK was born in Luzerne county, in 1808. He came to Eaton in 1818 with his parents. He was married to Elnor Place, daughter of William Place, and had eight children, three of whom are living—William, born May 20th, 1835; Mary E., born in 1845, and Wesley, born in 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Aumick and their three children are members of the Baptist church.

SILAS AUMICK was born at Wilkes-Barre, May 13th, 1813. He married, in 1841, J. Anne Jayne, of Washington, Pa. He enlisted as a volunteer in the 12th Pennsylvania reserves in 1860, and was discharged in consequence of a wound received in the left leg. He again enlisted, in the 143d Pennsylvania regiment, received five more wounds and was discharged in 1865. His son, Benjamin, was also in the 143d, and was taken prisoner and sent to Andersonville, where he died of starvation.

DAVID B. AUSTIN was born in Oswego, N. Y., in 1833, and married Margery C. Fitch in 1853. They had three children. Mr. Austin was a farmer. He served in the Rebellion, and died at Andersonville.

JOHN AYER was born in New Baltimore, Greene county, N. Y., in 1800. In 1825 he settled in Overfield, and in 1827 married Sally Avery, by whom he has had two children, one of whom is a farmer.

REV. JOHN BALLANTINE, teacher of classics at Keystone Academy, was born near Belfast, Ireland, and graduated at Lewisburgh in the class of 1872. He taught a graded school at Smithfield, Pa., a year, and then accepted his present position. He married Harriet B. Gerould, of Smithfield, December 25th, 1872, and has one child living. Prof. Ballantine was ordained pastor of the Benton Baptist church in August, 1877, and has done much missionary work, supplying the pulpits of weak churches.

ORVAL W. BENJAMIN was born in New Jersey, in 1815, and moved to Eaton in 1844. He has been assessor nine years and supervisor one term. He married, in 1839, Phebe Ann McNish, of New Jersey. They have two children, Sarah Caroline, born in 1840 (married to Samuel Harding), and Huldah, born in 1843 (married to S. D. Bacon, of Tunkhannock).

CHAUNCEY BENSON was born at Dover, N. Y., January 6th, 1810. He came to Eaton in 1835 and purchased a large tract of land. He married, in 1835, Sarah Brutzman, of Smithfield, Pa. They have had seven children—Emma, born in 1835; Etna, born in 1837 (died in 1842); Mary May, born in 1839; Susan, born in 1841; Jeanette, born in 1843; George Adam, born in 1848; Martha Elizabeth, born in 1850.

GEORGE A. BRUNDAGE, M. D., born in Benton, studied with Dr. A. T. Brundage, and graduated in medicine at Ann Arbor, Mich., in March, 1876. He has been in practice in Factoryville since that date. He married Una, daughter of A. W. Gardner.

ALBERT M. CAPWELL, M. D., was born in Factoryville, Pa., May 4th, 1831, and married Miss C. A. Chambers, of Waverly, Pa. (since deceased). Dr. Capwell is a physician and druggist of Factoryville. He was married in 1877 to Mamie E. Smith, of Scranton.

HENRY CHASE was born in Abington township, Luzerne county, in 1820. In 1844 he married Elizabeth Canon, of Chenango, N. Y. They have two children.

STEPHEN CLARK was born in Plains, Luzerne county, in 1814, and married May Wagner, of Monroe county, in 1838. They have had nine children; eight are living. Mr. Clark is a farmer.

ELEAZER DANA was born in Eaton, in 1842. He resides on the old Jenkins homestead. He was supervisor in 1878. He married, in 1872, Nancy E. Miller, of Eaton.

EMELINE M. DANA was born in Windham, Pa., in 1823, and was married to Stevens Dana, of Eaton, in 1843. Her husband was born at Eaton, in 1820. He was for thirty years a member of the Presbyterian church, and during the last six years of his life was ruling elder. He left a widow and six children. The latter are Nancy P., born in 1845; Caroline M., born in 1846; Sarah A., born in 1848; Edmond S., born in 1851; Helen J., born in 1855; and George F., born in 1866.

He married in 1867, Sarah Caroline, daughter of Orval W. Benjamin, of Eaton. They have four children: Benjamin W., born in 1869; Libbie, in 1870; Willard, in 1873; and Phebe, in 1876.

S. J. HARDING was born in Eaton, in 1841, in the house where he lives. He has been school director three years. He was married in 1873 to Matilda Bullock, by whom he has had two children: Ruth J., born in 1873, and Rosa Esther, born in 1878 (died in 1879). His father, Stephen D., was born, lived and died on the same farm. He died in 1868. Mrs. Harding's father, Benjamin Bullock, was a soldier in the 52nd Pa. volunteers, and died, in 1875, from disease contracted in the Chickahominy swamp.

STEDMAN HARDING was born in Harford, Pa., in 1808. He came to the township of Eaton in 1825. In 1834 he purchased a farm of wild land. He has filled the offices of county auditor, collector and school director. He was married in 1834 to Martha Mitchell, of Eaton. Mr. and Mrs. Harding are members of the Baptist church. Thomas Harding, Mr. Harding's father, was born in 1786, in Lackawanna. In the later years of his life he took up his residence with his son, and lived with him till his death, which occurred in 1857.

REV. JOHN H. HARRIS, pastor of the Baptist church at Factoryville, was born in western Pennsylvania, April 24th, 1847, and married Mary E. Mace, of Factoryville. He was formerly principal of the Keystone Academy.

JOHN C. HERMAN was born in Monroe county, in 1819. He married Mary Walter, of Eaton, and had twelve children, nine of whom are living. He has been supervisor, and was elected one of the county commissioners in 1878. He was left an orphan at a very early age, and owes his present position to his own industry and integrity.

DANIEL W. HERMAN was born at Middle Smithfield, Monroe county, Pa., in 1843. He has filled the offices of auditor, inspector of election and school director of his township. He enlisted in the 12th N. Y. cavalry, and during a raid on Kingston, N. C., was taken prisoner through his horse falling upon him and breaking his leg. He suffered great privations during his confinement. On three occasions his rations were withheld for three days at a time in punishment for not disclosing where his fellow-prisoners had made tunnels for escape. He was mustered out of the service at the termination of the war. He married Kate, daughter of Joseph Ace.

C. S. HINDS was born at Montrose, Pa., and is a son of S. B. Hinds, who died at Factoryville, June 18th, 1879, after a residence there of seven years. Mr. Hinds succeeds his father in the mercantile business, and served as town clerk in 1879. He is one of a family of four children, of whom Lydia married William Carpenter, of Benton; E. S. is a blacksmith in Factoryville, and Nannie S. resides with the subject of this sketch, with whom his mother is also living.

(23 males and 33 females), all but one with letters of dismission from the First Abington church, were recognized as the West Abington Baptist Church, which name was subsequently changed to Factoryville. Rev. Andrew Hopper immediately became pastor. He resigned in April, 1852. For a year from May, 1852, Rev. Sanford Leach was pastor; a revival occurred and many were added to the church. From the spring of 1853 Rev. Charles A. Fox was pastor until the spring of 1859; Rev. Newell Callender from April, 1859, until the spring of 1864; a large number were added to the church during his labors. Rev. J. Kennedy was next called, and served until October, 1865. Rev. William A. Grow supplied the church until October, 1866; about sixty members were added during his stay. Rev. S. C. Moore was pastor from October, 1866, until the spring of 1868; Rev. George Bowman from August, 1868, until November, 1870. Rev. J. H. Harris, then principal of Keystone Academy, supplied the church until April, 1871, when Rev. A. J. Furman became pastor, who labored very successfully four years. Rev. C. M. Tower supplied the church from April, 1875, until October following, when Rev. T. J. Cole became pastor, who still continues such.

Isaac Tillinghast, William Dean, E. D. Gardner and Benedict Taylor were the first deacons. The first named died in 1852; Deacon Dean in 1868 removed; Deacon Taylor died in May, 1874; Deacon Gardner survives, nearly eighty years of age. James Frear has been deacon since June 8th, 1872, and treasurer for many years. William Green was chosen deacon April 12th, 1879; George T. Bailey April 12th, 1879.

E. P. Tillinghast was clerk until his death, in July, 1853; Alvinzy Gardner from August following until he died, February 16th, 1863; Edrick Frear the next twelve years. A. C. Sisson has since been clerk.

The first church edifice was a plain wooden building, about a mile south of Factoryville, known as the New Bethel Baptist meeting house; it was built in 1838, by members and friends of the First Abington church who resided in the vicinity. It cost about $2,500, and was dedicated July 4th, 1839. It was occupied until it became necessary to remove the place of meeting to Factoryville. In 1860 the present church building was commenced and in January, 1862, the basement was occupied. The building was dedicated in September, 1866; it is a substantial brick structure costing about $8,000. The list of members of this church has included 397 names. The present membership is 290.

This church has always sustained a flourishing Sunday-school, open throughout the year, with from 50 to 175 pupils. Alvinzy Gardner was the first superintendent. A large proportion of additions to the church membership come from its ranks. A mission school is sustained at La Plume.

EATON TOWNSHIP.

THIS township, named after General Eaton, the hero of Tripoli, was erected in 1817 from the portion of Tunkhannock lying west of the Susquehanna river. The scenery comprises a charming variety. On some of the wilder mountain barrens whortleberries abound, and these have been for many years the resort of parties of berry pickers from all the country round.

The township is well watered by deep creeks. The principal one, Bowman's, running nearly through the center of the township, was once famed for its trout; these have been partially exterminated, but the stream is still a popular resort for fishermen, who come often from adjacent States. The river is stocked with black bass, and in the early years of the present century a productive shad fishery was in operation at Hunter's Ferry, but dams have destroyed it. The beasts of the forest and game birds were formerly abundant.

The township had 830 inhabitants in 1870, and 956 in 1880.

THE HARDINGS AND OTHER PIONEERS.

That portion of the township bordering on the river was settled before the Revolution. The first to come were Zebulon Marcy, Adam Wortman, Philip Buck and Adam Bowman, the last three named being low Dutchmen and Tories. All of these, except Wortman, left the place during the Revolution, and he was shot during a raid by a patriot scouting party. Zebulon Marcy returned after the war and closely following him came Obadiah, Aaron and John Taylor. Obadiah, a native of Connecticut, was a soldier of the Revolution. Soon after the war he settled on lot No. 33, at Hunter's Ferry, on the west side of the river. The U. S. government granted him a pension for life. His remains lie in the family burying ground on the homestead, which a grandson, Markland Robinson, has inherited. Joseph Earl and his sons, Solomon and Benjamin, were the next to arrive, coming about 1790. Abraham Frear came about 1792, finally settling on Frear hill. He married the widow of David Mitchell, and had several children. Abraham became a Methodist preacher. William was many years the pastor of the Eaton Baptist Church, and James a prominent merchant in Clinton. Abraham Frear died in 1823, aged 84; his wife in 1845, aged 85.

Elisha, son of Stephen Harding, was the next settler. He was born in Colchester, Conn., April 8th, 1760. He lived with his father in Exeter from 1774 till the Wyoming massacre. In connection with that tragedy Benjamin and Stukely Harding were killed, but Elisha escaped with other members of the family to Orange county, N. Y. He spent the rest of the Revolutionary period in Connecticut, and was one of the volunteers who went to the defence of New London when that town was sacked by Arnold. He returned to Wyoming in 1784, just in time to be again driven out by the Pennamites, but soon returned to fight it out. He was captured by the treachery of Armstrong and put in jail at Easton, but escaped and returned. He married in 1781 Martha Rider, of Pittston, and settled near the mouth of the Lackawanna. He moved in 1789 to Eaton. He was justice of the peace from 1799 to 1812. In 1809 he was elected one of the county commissioners of Luzerne county. He died August 1st, 1839, and was buried in the cemetery adjoining the Baptist church. Only two of his seven children are now living—Mary, the widow of Thomas Mitchell, now ninety-three years of age, and Jesse Harding, living just above the narrows on the road from Eatonville. Jesse was born in 1802, where he now lives. He was a justice of the peace from 1840 to 1850, and filled several other offices. He was married in 1826 to Nancy Miller, of Eaton, a daughter of George Miller. John Harding, another son of Elisha, settled on a lot north of Bowman's creek.

Another brother who occupied a prominent position in the town was Elisha, father of N. J. Harding. He was born in Eaton, in 1790. He married Amy Jenkins, and his second wife was a Miss Nancy Jackson, who survives him, and now resides with her son. He was a justice of the peace thirty years, and may be said to have practically filled all of the offices and managed all of the public business of the town. He acted as general conveyancer and legal adviser for his townsmen.

There is a large number of the descendants of this family in the townships of Eaton and Tunkhannock, who inherit the integrity and independence of their ancestors.

Israel, a brother of Elisha Harding, was a member of Captain Durkee's company from Wyoming, was at Brandywine and Valley Forge, and with his company arrived just too late to prevent the terrible massacre of Wyoming. He married Lydia Reed, and came to Eaton after the close of the war. He died in Eaton in 1835, aged about eighty years.

Newton Smith, a Methodist local preacher, settled about 1800 just below the Narrows. John Wilson, another pioneer, was for years a Methodist local preacher, later becoming a Baptist. Jacob Patrick came next. He sold out to Samuel Roberts, and removed. A. Wheelock about 1805 purchased one hundred acres where Charles Wheelock now lives; his son Irvin is the present postmaster and merchant, also dealing in lumber, railroad ties, etc. Jesse Lee came about 1804, and kept the first tavern. Daniel and Forbes Lee came about 1812. They were men of sterling character and left their mark in the town, where their sons now occupy a foremost position. John Williams, whose father lost his life at Wyoming, Ezekiel Newman and John Evans also settled in the first years of the present century.

Thomas Mitchell, born in Warwick, Orange county, N. Y., in 1780, was the son of Daniel Mitchell, an early settler in Pittston, where he died in 1787. Thomas came to Eaton about 1818, purchasing the farm on which his son now lives. A log house was the home of the family until the present building was erected. He married Mary, daughter of Elisha Harding, who survives him.

John Aumick settled about 1818 where his son Andrew now lives. He purchased the land of Thomas Hawkins. Among those who came later were Christopher Minor, O. W. Benjamin, Chauncey Benson, Damon Stevens, George Rinker, William Money Penny and Uriah Swetland, whose grandfather was at Wyoming during the battle in the valley. After the massacre he was taken prisoner by the Indians, and suffered great hardship while in their custody. He was also a participant in the Pennamite strife.

Asa S. Dana, who was born in Wilkes-Barre, December 17th, 1794, was the son of Anderson Dana, whose father was killed in the Wyoming massacre. After the war Anderson Dana returned to his father's home in the Wyoming valley, where he spent a busy and active life and died at the age of 80. Here Asa S. was born. In the spring of 1818 he removed with his wife and child to the farm in Eaton directly opposite where Tunkhannock now stands. He built a log house and cleared up this farm. Through his industry he accumulated considerable property in Wyoming and Luzerne counties. He was twice married and had seven children by each wife, eight sons and six daughters. In 1845 he united with the Presbyterian church of Tunkhannock, and he contributed liberally of his means for its support. He died July 29th, 1874, in his 80th year.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT.

The first store is thought to have been kept by Jesse Lee. The first grist-mill was erected by Israel Harding, north of the site of Rev. W. O. Stern's residence. There are now two principal grist-mills. O. W. Benjamin's was built in 1832, by Abraham Frear. In 1857 it came into the possession of its present owner, by whom it has been thoroughly repaired, and it is doing a flourishing business. The grist-mill at Kingfisher run was built in 1868, by A. W. Dana; it has four runs of stones, and takes water from Sugar Hollow creek by a wooden conduit of great length. The saw-mill of W. L. Hunter stands on the site of one built 70 years ago. Mr. Hunter has twice rebuilt the present mill; on one occasion it was carried away by high water. This mill does a large amount of work. The steam saw-mill at Sugar Hollow was put up in 1878, by James Donnelly; it is now owned and run by P. Shippey. A steam saw-mill is run and owned by Charles Rosengrantz. William B. Money Penny put up in 1830 a large merchant mill at a cost over $10,000. It was operated over twenty years, when the enterprise failed from the drying up of the stream. It was used at times as a clover mill, and was devoted on many occasions to quarterly meetings and other large gatherings of the M. E. church. It was finally taken down in 1879. The first blacksmith, it is said, was Elisha Harding, sen. Among the present blacksmiths is Charles Edward Mc-Vicar. He commenced his establishment in 1868, and has kept adding to it until it is now a well appointed shop. Volney Rosengrantz has a blacksmith and wagon repairing shop opposite his residence. He owns another shop at the head of Sugar Hollow. The only wagon shop in the town is that of J. F. Garing. J. Hall was the first cooper in the township. The present shop was put up in 1877 by Joseph Neyhart, and is worked by him. Joseph Ace is the only regular boot and shoe maker.

COMMUNICATIONS AND POST-OFFICES.

In very early days a four horse stage ran through the township, going up into New York from Wilkes-Barre. The coach stopped at a house on the site of the one now occupied by Anderson Dana, to supply the inner wants of man and beast. There are two post-offices in the township, at Eatonville and South Eaton. At both there are daily deliveries of mail. The first postmaster was Jesse Lee. The office was once kept at Mr. Miller's, with that gentleman as postmaster. It is now at the store of Irvin Wheelock, who has been postmaster since 1870. William B. Money Penny has been the postmaster at South Eaton since 1856.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house (of logs) stood near where the Baptist church stands. Greased paper was used for window glass. Jesse Harding assisted at the raising of the first framed school-house, and was one of the first teachers in it. The first teachers were John Evans and one Scott.

There are now eleven school districts in the township. The first independent district was set off in 1878. The school-house was built in 1879. The attendance of scholars at all the schools is good. Within a few years past a new series of educational works has been introduced.

CEMETERIES.

The first burial grounds in the town are the one near Markland Robinson's residence and that near the residence of Mr. Strough, in which the remains of Jesse Lee and some of his descendants are buried.

The burial ground adjacent to the Baptist church was given to the township by Elisha Harding, sen., about 1825. The first burial here was that of Abraham Frear, and here lie the remains of the Harding ancestors.

Close by is the Dana burial ground, owned by Dr. Dana and laid out in lots. The first burial here was that of Irvin Wheelock's father.

That at South Eaton is also a public cemetery, and here are buried some of Eaton's best citizens.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF EATON.

By a council at Eaton, November 20th, 1823, a church was formed, consisting of the persons named below:

Thomas Mitchell and Jackson Smith were the first deacons. Meetings were held at private houses and at the school-house at the mouth of Bowman's creek until 1850, when the present church was completed and occupied.

Rev. William Frear was the pastor until his death, in 1874, more than half a century. He was born in Pittston, Pa., November 12th, 1792. His parents were members of the first Baptist church in that place, his mother being the first person ever baptized in the Wyoming valley. In 1798 the family moved to Eaton and in 1804 to the farm now in possession of the family. When sixteen years old William carried the mail from Tunkhannock to Binghamton by way of Great Bend, often on foot over roads almost impassable, running through miles of unbroken forest infested with wild animals. In 1814 he went with Captain Camp's company to the defense of Baltimore. In 1818 he married Hannah Wheelock, of Tunkhannock. He educated himself. He joined the Abington church in 1820. In 1822 he was licensed to preach and ordained. His life was singularly pure and his influence widely and favorably felt. He attended the dedication of Keystone Academy, and while receiving the greetings of his friends he fell insensible into the arms of one of them, and in a few moments breathed his last. During his last years Revs. J. Kennedy, A. J. Furman, P. S. Everett and N. Whitney were associated with him in the pastorate. The next pastor of the church was Elder Grow, who was succeeded by Arthur O. Sterns, since the close of whose pastorate in 1877 there has been no stated pastor, though regular meetings have been maintained.

Jackson Smith was the clerk of the church from 1823 to 1856; Samuel Harding and J. M. Miller have since filled the office. The present deacons are George Rinker and A. Fratchey. The Sunday-school numbers forty-five scholars. The superintendent is D. W. Herman.

EXETER TOWNSHIP.

EXETER is one of the original townships. It was named from Exeter, R. I., and is known as Little Exeter, in contradistinction to the larger part of the original township just across the line in Luzerne county.

Among the pioneers were a Mr. Stule, who settled in the north end of the township, opposite Keeler's Ferry; Paul Keeler, after whom the ferry was named; the families of Smith, Hadley, Swartwout, Harding, Coolbaugh, Burgess, Montayne, Dymond and others.

A post-office was established in 1812 at Keeler's Ferry, and Asa Keeler was appointed postmaster. He moved up into North Moreland township, taking the office with him. He was postmaster till his death, in 1867, at Keelersburg.

The population of this township fell off from 211 to 151 between 1870 and 1880.

FALLS TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was formed from Tunkhannock, in 1824. John Osterhout, an early settler, wished to have it named in honor of Stephen Meredith, while Jacob Sickler urged the name "Buttermilk Falls." After discussion and due deliberation the court decided on "Falls."

Matthew Sherwood was among the first settlers. He came in the autumn of 1789, from Danbury, Conn., with his wife and seven children and all his earthly effects on a cart drawn by a yoke of oxen and a span of horses. He located two miles up the river from Buttermilk Falls, having bought 200 acres between the farms of John Fitch and David Morehouse, who had settled here the year before. Among the other pioneers we find the names of Gideon and Jeremiah Osterhout, Ephraim Lockwood, Jesse Jones, Peleg Comstock, Ebenezer Williams and Thomas Joslin.

At that time there were no roads except the old Davis path from Old Forge to Wyalusing. This former Indian trail had been considerably improved by two distinguished land speculators living in Philadelphia, Davis and Nicholson, but was not wide enough for a wagon.

We regret that we cannot dwell on all the circumstances of pioneer life here, but such experiences have already been sketched, and cannot be repeated for each township. Deer and bears furnished most of the meat, and johnny cake was the prevailing bread. In 1795 some fur traders from Harrisburg came up the river in boats, and traded salt, ammunition and iron for furs and skins. The salt was a special God-send to the settlers. These traders came again in 1796, with a stock to barter for salt shad, furs, skins and venison, the chief articles of export. Powder and lead were among the most important imports. As long as their ammunition lasted the pioneers were secure against starvation, and when it was gone there was no place near where they could get a supply, unless they found a new comer who had some and would divide. The first clothing was made from the skins of animals, tanned with their brains and buffed with a ball of yellow clay rubbed over the surface of the leather, which added a beautiful lustre. Home spun linen and woolen, however, soon furnished the summer attire.

In 1792 the population had materially increased. David M. Delevan had come. Renben Taylor had settled on the flats above the falls, and for a number of years that neighborhood was called Taylortown. David Daily settled at the foot of the narrows below Osterhout's, and Nathan Jones and an old negro named "Ding" came and lived with Jesse Jones. Levi Townsend settled near Benjamin Jones, on the flats below Buttermilk Falls. Peter Harris, the tory, also settled near Benjamin Jones.

During the winter of 1792-93 Zuriel Sherwood made the first pigeon net in this valley and the first seine used on the upper Susquehanna for catching shad; and the first haul of shad was made by Mr. Sherwood with his new seine in May, 1793. Had the shad taken in that haul been sold for two cents each they would have paid for the net.

Jesse Jones settled on Buttermilk Falls creek, and built the first grist-mill in this township, near its mouth. This mill was built of logs and twelve feet square; the mill stones were of the size of a half-bushel measure, made from the conglomerate rock found along the Lackawanna river. The second grist-mill at the Falls was built by John Bury, about 1806. In 1807 Mr. Bury built the first saw-mill at Buttermilk Falls. In 1812 Jonathan Bulkley kept the first store, and in 1814 and 1815 he and one Arnt built the second saw-mill and third grist-mill. Jacob Sickler, sen., bought them out in a year or two. There were then three or four distilleries in the neighborhood of the Falls.

In 1800 a settlement was commenced on the flats two miles below Buttermilk Falls, where Benjamin Jones built the first tavern. This was the most thickly settled part of the township, and was for many years known along the river as "Jonestown." Just below lived the notorious old tory Peter Harris.

Chauncey Sherwood, Esq., tells us that the first school he attended (which was in Falls township) was taught by Hon. Henry Roberts, who is still living on the same old farm. The second term he attended was taught near Keeler's Ferry, by Fanny Keeler, whose vigorous discipline made a heavy draft on the sprouts growing in the neighboring woods. The text-books were Webster's speller and Daboll's arithmetic, and but very few could read or spell well or write legibly. In 1828, 1833 and 1834 the English reader and grammar were introduced. The district schools began to be organized and school-houses erected under the school laws, and educational interest in Falls township has since rapidly increased. In 1811 the first school known was built on Post hill, and a school was taught there the next winter by John Lott, of Mehoopany. Mary Post also taught here several terms. At that time there was no road along the river below the Falls. Chiefly by the exertions of Jacob Sickler the road along the river was built through in 1818. In 1820 the first store house was built by Phineas Sherwood, where Chauncey Case kept store two years. The first town meetings and elections were held at the house of Mr. Osterhout, a short distance back from the river; later ones at the house of Mr. Sickler. He was a man of large business experience and made many improvements about the Falls. He had mills, a distillery, and several shops. The business of carding wool was carried on by Dr. Lyman C. Kidder, a brother of the late Judge Kidder, of Wilkes-Barre. The third store was kept by Beach Tuttle, the fourth by Brace & Moore, and the fifth by Brace & Lanning, who built the second store building, continued in the business till 1835, and sold to Chauncey Sherwood, who conducted the business till 1841. Jacob Sickler built the fourth school-house at his own expense, and the fourth grist-mill. This and a fulling-mill were swept away by a flood. When the North Branch Canal was building through this township, in 1839-

40, there were seven stores and two taverns at the Falls. A small tannery was built by Olmsted & Parkeston, and there were only one store and one tavern from 1843 to 1863.

George Humphrey commenced a plaster-mill, which was finished by H. L. Ferguson, converted into a grist-mill, and used as such till superseded by the large flouring-mill built by Brown & Vantuyle. The Lehigh Valley Railroad was built through here in 1869, when business revived somewhat.

Hon. Henry Roberts was born on Teague's hill, now in Washington, in 1794, and his recollection extends back into the last century, when Jesse Jones still owned the little grist-mill at the Falls. According to his representations Reuben Taylor lived on the McKeene flats, Matthew Sherwood, sen., John Fitch and David Morehouse on the flat below, Paul Keeler and Zephaniah Townsend on the Townsend flat. His grandfather, at a very early day, used to go to Hollenback's mill with a canoe. Old settlers he says used to exchange possessions, and "boot" was always paid in cattle and other necessities. He never knew till about 1805 or 1806 farms being sold for cash. The settlers back from the river exchanged with those on the river one pound of maple sugar for a shad. About 1811 saw logs and produce were considered legal tender for goods, as no money could be obtained for wheat short of Easton.

The old Morehouse farm, now owned by Hon. Henry Roberts, is on the east bank of the Susquehanna, two miles above Buttermilk Falls creek. Some Indian names have been found in old title papers locating the Headley tract a mile above Falls, at Roberts point.

This township had 1,096 inhabitants in 1870 and gained 30 in the following decade.

VILLAGES.

The founder of Mill City, Chauncey Sherwood, is perhaps its most notable citizen. He is a versatile and intelligent writer, and has published many incidents of olden times, with which his studious habits and retentive memory have made him familiar.

The first postmaster at this place was Stephen O. Corwin, appointed about 1865. The others have been Chauncey Sherwood, Charles S. Fargo and E. C. Clark, the present official. The mails are received daily from Falls station.

There are also at this place two general stores, a drug store, a harness shop, a tin shop, a grist-mill, a foundry, a sash and blind factory, a feed-mill, a saw-mill, 7 blacksmith shops, 3 planing mills, 3 shingle and lath mills, 3 shoe shops, one church, Methodist Episcopal, 2 physicians (C. S. Carey and D. Kelly) and two clergymen, Methodist Episcopal and Baptist; population 500.

Falls village has among its institutions the hotel of Charles Kresky, the store of Henry Turn, the blacksmith shop of George Winard, the grist-mill of Aaron Brown, the saw-mill and powder keg factory of Thomas Fields, the wagon shops of Allen Weed and John Swartwood, and a Methodist Episcopal church. A wire rope ferry was established in 1875 or 1876 by Aaron Brown, the present proprietor.

CHURCHES OF FALLS.

MILL CITY BAPTIST CHURCH.

The establishment of a Baptist church in Mill City grew out of the labors of one William Stover, who came from Rhode Island in 1816, and settled in Bailey Hollow, now Dalton, Lackawanna county. In 1817 he commenced preaching on Post Hill in a log school-house, at private dwellings, in barns and wherever the doors were opened for him; and continued his labors until about 1838, when he retired and soon after returned to Rhode Island.

Post Hill derived its name from one Joseph Post, who came from Bolton, Conn., in the spring of 1793. In the 24th year of his age he married Miss Elizabeth Daily, on the 30th of December, 1793, and in 1800 settled on the farm now occupied by Amasa Freutishe. They had seven boys and two girls, named respectively Stephen, Hiram, Isaac, Daniel, David, Betsey, Hannah, John D. and William B. Post. Some of the children went west. Among those that lingered around the old homestead was the venerable Deacon Stephen Post, now in his 86th year, who was the first deacon of the Baptist church. In June, 1820, Rev. William Stover began preaching among the people regularly once a month. In the autumn following a revival occurred and Betsey, Joseph, Daniel, Elizabeth, Hiram and Hannah Post, Helen Wilsey and Olive Patrick were baptized and received into the Abington Six Principle Baptist church at Baily Hollow, then known as the Baily Hollow church. In the fall of 1821 Stephen Post, Jacob Wilsey and Clarisa Townsend were baptized and united with the church at Baily Hollow. In the winter following David, Betsey and Hannah Post, Amanda and Amy Holmes, Elizabeth, Betsey, Nelson and Elisha Armstrong, Patience Williams and Noah and Amanda Taylor were baptized and received into the Baily Hollow church. Revivals from time to time added to that church from this locality, until 1833, or thereabouts, when the members living in Falls and Overfield were set off as the Falls branch of the Baily Hollow church. Soon afterwards Rev. John Shaw, from Cortland county, N. Y., labored here successfully, baptizing Alvira, Lydia, Hannah and Samantha Post, Hannah Smith and Russel Armstrong. Following Elder Shaw, Rev. Nathan Baker preached a short time.

About 1844 Rev. James Brown, from Rhode Island, began preaching here, assisted from time to time by Revs. T. J. Cole, Benjamin Green and A. J. Harrington. Elder Brown baptized Mary Ann and Sarah Fitch, Martha Agnew, Solomon, Caroline and Mary Hunter, Charles M. and Mary Daily, John Post, Elizabeth Holmes, Andrew, Phebe, Lydia and John McMillen and John Leonard.

In 1857, while under the pastoral care of Elder Brown, the branch church was, by request, set off as the Falls

Six Principle Baptist Church, and received into the Pennsylvania Six Principle Baptist Association. At or about this time the Baily Hollow church began to be known by its present designation of Abington Six Principle Baptist Church.

In 1862 Elder Brown entered the army and died in hospital, much lamented by all who knew him.

The church was supplied by itinerants of different faiths from 1860 to 1867, at which time Rev. Henry Jacques began a successful pastorate, during which many were added to the church. But, like all who preceded him, his labors were divided between four or five churches; consequently times of service were wide apart and much of the labor was lost.

In 1876 the church extended a call to the Rev. W. G. Comstock, of Rhode Island, who in response came in June of that year, and commenced preaching regularly every Sabbath. Some have been added to the church by baptism, some by letter, and some have been reinstated during his service here. He early caused a record to be made of all the past as far as possible, and the keeping of a regular record from that time on.

At a regular church meeting of business, held January 17th, 1880, the church, by a unanimous vote, dissolved its connection with the Pennsylvania Six Principle Baptist Association; dropped the name Falls Six Principle Baptist Church, adopted the name Mill City Baptist Church, and voted to call a council of ministers and delegates of the Abington Baptist Association of regular Baptists to meet with them at Mill City on the 26th of February, 1880. This council unanimously received the Mill City church as a regular Baptist church, and extended to the pastor, Rev. W. G. Comstock, and through him to the church, the hand of fellowship. The following are the names of the present members:

Rev. W. G. Comstock, pastor; Stephen Post, Solomon Hunter, Riley Mott and Rev. Henry Jacques, deacons; Abram Agnew, Simon Armstrong, Wilbur Search, Morgan Fitch, Thomas R. Armstrong, William Dunlap, George Schofield, Jefferson Sturdevant, Lamont L. Hunter, Edward Hunt, Samantha A. Decker, Mary A. Fitch, Elizabeth Roscerans, Martha Agnew, Margaret Fitch, Mary Search, Rachel Agnew, Mary J. Hallock, Jane Menger, Diana M. Hunter, Florence Kelley, Ermina S. Hunter, Altha S. Corey, Laura Kirkhuff, Rosette Hunt, Armina Shupp, Jemima Armstrong, Mary Mott, Betsey Dunlap, Pamela Comstock, Mary E. Freeman, Emeline Freeman, Charlotte E. Green, Emma May Brink, Ella K. Brink, Sarah Sturdevant and Isabella Dershemer. Total, 42.

This church has for about sixty years maintained religious meetings, but not regularly every Sabbath until within four years. It holds its meetings in a hired hall at Mill City. It has a Sabbath-school of about 60 members, with an average attendance of 40. The Rev. W. G. Comstock is superintendent.

M. E. CHURCHES OF FALLS TOWNSHIP.

First Church.—Mr. Sherwood states that the first Methodist preachers hereabouts preached at Keeler's Ferry 70 years ago. Sixty-seven years ago the first camp-meeting was held on the farm of Abraham Holmes (now owned by A. T. Dewitt), where the first itinerants generally preached. Meetings were also held at John Osterhout's, John Weiss's and other private dwellings, and in groves along the river. Among the pioneer Methodist preachers were Philo Barber, Horace Agard, George Peck, Charles W. Giddings, Mr. Copeland, Silas Comfort, S. Stocking, Ephraim Teney, Daniel Gorman, Benjamin Ellis, Vincent Coryell, William White, George Lane and Samuel Griffin. They went with Bible and hymn book through storms of rain, hail and snow, climbed rugged hills and mountains, waded swamps, swam swollen streams, broke through ice, lay out nights, often wet, cold, weary and hungry; slept often on earth floors in log cabins with little or no covering, and were poorly fed at the best.

On the 8th of April, 1867, a lot was bought of Daniel Dobra, and on the 27th of April, 1871, a charter was granted for the First M. E. Church of Falls Township, with Hon. Henry Roberts, Stephen Clark, Samuel G. Miller, William Compton, Henry Turn, A. M. De Witt and Thomas Brown as trustees. A church edifice was erected and finished soon after, at a cost of $2,000. It was dedicated by Rev. George P. Porter on the 15th of July, 1872, during the pastorate of Rev. A. J. Van Cleft and E. Puffer, of Newton charge. The membership is 75.

The Sabbath-school was organized the same year, and is still flourishing, under the superintendency of Henry Turn, of Falls, who reports 100 scholars.

The pastors here have been, in order of succession, A. J. Van Cleft, E. Puffer, Isaac Austin, R. S. Rose, A. Brigham, A. J. Arnold, Isaac Austin and William Shelp.

Mill City M. E. Church was incorporated November 25th, 1870. The trustees were Chauncey Sherwood, Michael Walter, D. C. Post, John Patrick and Francis Hough. On the 24th of December, 1872, a lot was bought at Mill City one hundred feet by one hundred and twenty-five, of William H. Walter, and the erection of a church building was soon after commenced. It was finished December 20th, 1873, at a cost of $2,500, and was dedicated by Rev. D. D. Lindsley January 1st, 1874, during the pastorate of Rev. A. Brigham. The membership July 1st, 1880, numbered 65.

The Sabbath-school, which was organized soon after, has been kept up, and is now under the superintendency of H. N. Sickler, and numbers 50 scholars and teachers.

The pastors of the society since its organization have been Revs. A. Brigham, A. J. Arnold, Isaac Austin and William Shelp, assisted by Rev. William Compton, local preacher.

There had been regular preaching in Mill City for thirty years before the church was incorporated. Michael Walter was chosen class leader, and many conversions were the result of occasional protracted efforts. During those years the following ministers were upon the charge: Revs. Charles Giddings, Mr. White, Mr. Reddy, John Mulkey, Samuel Griffin, Dayton Reed, C. E. Taylor, Mr. Wilcox, Benjamin Ellis, Mr. Owen, Mr. Schoonmaker, Mr. Sterling, E. F. Roberts, John La Bar, John Wilbur, J. D. Safford, Miner Swallow, E. N. Pardee, G. W. Leach, Asa J. Van Cleft and E. Puffer, with salaries averaging $200 per annum.

FORKSTON TOWNSHIP.

FORKSTON was taken from Windham township in 1844. It derived its name from the fork of the Mehoopany creek near the site of the village of Forkston. Its population in 1870 was 576, and 754 in 1880.

As early as 1795 Leonard Lott came in a canoe up the Susquehanna, and up Mehoopany creek to the fork, where he built a log house. In 1800 there were ten persons living in the township, and in 1803 fifty-four. Of the early settlers Walter Bowman and family lived on the farm now occupied by Jacob Bartolet, N. Adams and family on the farm recently occupied by A. A. McKown, C. Robinson and family on the Ira Robinson farm.

Among the early marriages was that of John Spaulding to Polly Adams, on New Year's day, 1815. Thomas Miles and old Mr. Winslow were the first to die, probably about 1812 or 1814. The oldest graveyard is about a mile and a half south of Forkston village, and contains the graves of many of the old settlers of the township.

Farming was begun soon after a settlement was made, but the people occupied their time more in hunting and fishing than in tilling the soil. We hear, however, of Mr. J. Spaulding's taking a load of grain to Wilkes-Barre as early as 1817. The first orchard was set out by a man named Vose, in 1808, on the farm now owned by J. G. Spaulding.

The first framed house was built about 1815, and occupied by a Mr. Wilson. Isaac Thomas kept the pioneer store in 1836, near the bridge in Forkston village. Previous to that the people traded at Mehoopany. Pollas Finney also had a small stand about the same time.

Thomas P. Hitchcock kept the first licensed hotel in 1866. It is now kept by Henry Krewson. Previous to 1866 Peter McQueen kept a sort of "house of refreshments" where the Spaulding House now stands.

Among the early physicians Dr. Hayden is most prominently mentioned. Dr. Harshburger came from Bradford county in 1878, and has quite an extensive practice.

Dominie Dinmick, a Baptist clergyman, preached here at an early day.

MANUFACTORIES.

In 1840 there was a small cloth factory owned and operated by a man named Waters. There was a small carding-mill in operation about 1820, but no traces are left of it. The first grist-mill was built and run by E. Fassett about 1810. It stood near the site of the bridge crossing the north branch of Mehoopany creek at Forkston village. About three-quarters of a mile further down the stream the first saw-mill was built, by J. Burgess, about 1810. These mills were both partially destroyed by the flood of 1850. In July of that year the Mehoopany creek, swollen by hard showers, carried trees and stumps for miles. Bridges were destroyed, mills, houses and in fact everything within its course were swept away or ruined. In a few days the flood subsided.

There are now in the township three saw-mills, three shingle-mills and a grist-mill. There is also a portable steam mill being erected on Roaring run, about six miles from Forkston village, on the road to Wilkes-Barre.

ROADS, BRIDGES AND MAILS.

The first road was known as Fell's road, and extended from Wilkes-Barre to Towanda. The State road was built some years later. The first mail was carried on horseback in 1810 or 1812, and received weekly from Black Walnut. A mail route was established from Scottsville to Forkston in 1834, intersecting the route from Tunkhannock to Towanda. The mail was then received once each week. At present the people of Forkston receive their mail daily. Richard Adams was the first postmaster. He was succeeded by Hiram Hitchcock. Griffin Lott held that office sixteen or seventeen years. The present postmaster is G. M. Burgess.

The first bridge was a temporary one across the Mehoopany creek at Forkston village, built in 1820 or thereabouts. This gave way for a covered bridge ninety feet long, built in 1828 or 1830 by Luzerne county. This was swept away by the flood of 1850, and the present bridge, a wooden structure, was completed in 1851. It is 120 feet long. There are four other county bridges in this township; namely, the one crossing Mehoopany creek at the forks, one about a mile and a half up the north branch, and two on the road leading up the south branch. Hiram Hitchcock was the contractor who built them all.

SCHOOL-HOUSES AND SCHOOLS.

The first school-house was built about 1805, on a piece of ground now owned by M. Krewson. It is said to have been a framed building. John Spaulding, then recently from Vermont, and Elihu Fassett were among the early teachers. The Burgess and Adams children were among the first scholars.

The township is now divided into five school districts, with suitable school-houses and competent instructors.

FORKSTON IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Two men named Bowman are all that can be named as having gone from this township to engage in the war of 1812. They probably perished with thousands of their countrymen.

In the great Rebellion Forkston's sons were among the first to do and die for the Union. The following are the names of some of those who engaged in that struggle:

Bennett Kasson, killed. Alfred Palmer. William Palmer, killed. Major Scoutten. Henry Krewson. Chandler Burgess. Henry June. Theodore June, died in hospital. Charles L. Finney. James I. Ames. Porter Summers, killed. George Robinson and Marvin Robinson, killed. Thomas P. Hitchcock. John R. and Wesley Hitchcock, died. Harford Krewson. Henry Ernst. Orrin P. Farr. James R. Robinson. Phillip Henry. Oscar R. Adams. — Rosengrant. — Kasson.

VILLAGES IN THE TOWNSHIP.

FORKSTON village in 1844 contained only 3 houses.

It now contains the post-office, 2 stores, a hotel, a wagon shop, a shoe shop, a blacksmith shop, a harness shop, a grist-mill and about 25 dwelling houses, besides Baptist and Methodist churches. The population at the last census was 93.

Forkston Grange was organized in 1874. The first meeting was held at the residence of J. G. Spaulding. The following were the first officers: Oscar Hulbirt, master; O. B. Vose, overseer; J. G. Spaulding, secretary. The present officers are as follows: John W. Lott, master; Myron Farr, overseer; William Krall, secretary.

BELLA SYLVIA was once a flourishing little settlement. It now contains about a dozen houses. The post-office is just across the line in Sullivan county.

In 1864 coal was first discovered near Bella Sylvia. In 1877 a stock company was formed and mining begun. Four or five hundred tons of semi-anthracite coal have been obtained. The company consists of Griffin Lott, George Henning, William Robinson, Frank Robinson, A. K. Farr, Orrin Farr, J. Goodwin, John Jayne, Norman Farr and Hiram Hitchcock.

LEMON TOWNSHIP.

LEMON township was formed from Nicholson and named in honor of associate judge Lemon, of this county. It had a population of 531 in 1870, engaged in farming, quarrying and lumbering, chiefly the latter. There are nineteen quarries, from which can be taken first class building and flagging stone.

Along most of the creeks and ponds have been found relics of Indian camping grounds, including stone arrow heads, hatchets, pestles, etc.

This township was settled before 1800 by pioneers from Orange county, N. Y., who followed Tunkhannock creek down to the mouth of Oxbow creek. Here a "pitch" was made and a settlement commenced. Among the settlers here were Mr. Reed and family, Thomas Spafford, Mr. Searles, William Fancher, John Fields, John Clarry, John Shaw and Samuel, Oliver and Elizabeth Stark (now Mrs. Dixon). The last was nine years old when she came here with her brothers and sister. Samuel Stark died at the age of 93. Eben Camp and Amos Ball came in 1810.

The first log house and the first block or plank house were built by Mr. Reed. The block house was made of three-inch plank, set up edgewise and locked or dove-tailed together at the corners of the building. Other houses of the same kind were built as soon as the required timber could be procured, all of which soon gave way to the more modern framed houses, built by the old scribe rule. The first of these was built by Mr. Searles, where Nathan Stark now lives, and about the same time Nehemiah Shaw had one near the mouth of Oxbow creek. James Stark now lives where the third framed house was built, and another stood near where the Stark M. E. church now stands. The place where Mr. Reed first located is now the property of William S. Shaw. The first orchard was set out in 1810 by Amzi Dixon, on the farm now owned by James, Nehemiah and Nathan Stark, in the southeast corner of the township.

The pioneer school-house was built in 1821, near the site of the residence of William S. Shaw, and the first teacher was Miss Betsey Stark. Among the pioneer pupils now living are Henry and Halsted Stark, Phebe Osterhout, Mary Main, William S. Shaw, Sarah Wall, Phebe Smith, Marshall Stark, Joseph Shaw, Frank Patterson, Elijah Ball and Oliver Dixon. A school was taught during the summer months in the most convenient barns.

The first public road ran along the foot of the mountain, on the right bank of the Tunkhannock creek; the next up Oxbow and Horton's creeks, across the east side of the township. On the old Wilkes-Barre and Montrose turnpike, which crosses the west half of the township, over the Meshoppen creek, south of J. G. Clark's, was built the first bridge of any importance in this township. The next spanned the same stream at Church's Mills.

The earliest store was that opened at East Lemon in 1860, by William S. Shaw, and now kept by W. S. Shaw and Nelson Martin. Another was started at this place in 1862 by Charles Gardner, but soon abandoned. The next was opened at Avery Station by Hazard Patterson. The "Grangers' store" at East Lemon was started in the spring of 1880.

The oldest graveyard is on the farm of William S. Shaw in the southeast part of the township. The first death on record was that of William Sweet, aged twelve years. The first accidental death was that of Horace Ball, in 1821, caused by the falling of a tree on the farm of A. B. Moss.

The first postmaster was William S. Shaw, who was appointed in 1862 and is now postmaster at East Lemon. Previous to 1862 the nearest post-office was at Tunkhannock, and the mail was carried from there on horseback through Lemon to points farther north. The pioneer mail carrier was Isaac Thompson. Cyrus Cooper was another early "mail rider."

The first stone quarry opened for the sale of building and flagging stone was that of Thomas Ball, in East Lemon. Mr. Reed, one of the pioneers, built the first saw-mill in 1800, or a year or two before, on the right bank of Tunkhannock creek near the site of the residence of William S. Shaw, bringing what little iron there was about it from Orange county, N. Y. This mill was built of logs and covered with hemlock bark, and was taken down about 1855. The first grist-mill was built beside the saw-mill soon after the latter was built. It had but one run of stones, which were brought from Orange county, N. Y. The old mill has been removed and a new one of first-class capacity built in its place, costing $8,000. The property is now owned by William S. Shaw. The second saw-mill was built at Church's Mills, where there are still a grist and a saw-mill. The gristmill on Meshoppen creek was built by J. Avery. The third saw-mill was built by a Mr. Ely on Oxbow creek, below the second falls; the fourth at the outlet of Oxbow pond, near the site of Cyrus Shaw's. About the same time Oliver Ball built a saw-mill on Oxbow creek, near the site of Ball's. In 1868 a flood caused by frequent and heavy rains destroyed nearly all the mill dams on Oxbow creek. In 1870 there were eight saw-mills, one of which was a steam mill in the southern part of the township. There are now five, and two grist-mills. Cyrus Shaw has a planing and lath mill in connection with his circular saw mill. W. S. Shaw built a circular saw and lath mill on Oxbow creek in 1879.

RELIGIOUS AND TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

East Lemon M. E. Church.—Rev. George Landon was presiding elder in this district in 1856, and the preachers in charge about that time were Revs. H. Brownscomb and A. Griffin. In 1866 Revs. Thomas Jayne and Hansen were in charge, and they were followed by Rev. E. F. Roberts.

In 1870 and 1871 the society built the present church edifice at East Lemon. It was dedicated October 20th, 1871, by Rev. B. I. Ives, of Auburn, N. Y. Rev. J. S. Lewis was then pastor and the membership was 31. The building committee consisted of William M. Stark, Henry Harris, William S. Shaw and Joseph Shupp. The first trustees were William S. Shaw, William M. Stark, Henry Harris, Cyrus Shaw, Joseph Shupp, Fletcher Dixon, Otis N. Stark, Lewis H. Shales and Orville Ball; and the first sexton was Henry C. Mott.

Rev. P. R. Tower was pastor from May, 1874 to May, 1876; then Rev. D. C. Barnes till May, 1879, when he was followed by Rev. A. J. Cook, the present pastor. The present trustees are William S. Shaw (president), J. R. Miller (secretary), O. N. Stark (treasurer), Cyrus Shaw, Fletcher Dixon, Lewis H. Shales and P. A. Shupp.

Stark Methodist Episcopal Church is probably the parent society in this township. It is in the same charge with the one at East Lemon and has the same preachers.

MEHOOPANY TOWNSHIP.

IN 1844 this township was formed from Windham. The name is of Indian origin. Many relics of the savage occupants have been discovered in this township. The population of Mehoopany was 888 in 1870 and 779 in 1880.

Amos York, who is believed to have been the pioneer settler, came in 1775, built a log house and enclosed a considerable tract of land opposite and above the mouth of Meshoppen creek; he afterward removed to Wyalusing. Elijah Phelps moved into his old log house. During the invasion in 1778 York was killed.

Joseph Biles in his "field notes" of the survey of the Susquehanna river, March 20th, 1796, noted eight "pitches," by article of agreement dated June 24th, 1776; namely, to Elijah Phelps, 3 lots; Thomas Millard, 5 lots; Amos York, 7 lots; Ichabod Phelps, 3 lots; Benjamin Kilbourn, 6 lots; Thomas Millard, jr., 1 lot. "Which said pitches begin at the mouth of the Mehoopany creek, and extend in a northerly course up said river as far as where the hill ends, containing 1,200 acres." These men probably lived here at the above date; for we find Elijah Phelps, Amos York, Ichabod Phelps, Thomas Millard and Thomas Millard, jr., petitioning May 27th, 1778, the Assembly of Connecticut for an abatement of their taxes, since they had suffered much from being robbed and plundered by the Indians.

In 1791 Zephaniah Lott settled at the mouth of the Mehoopany creek, on the present Jennings estate, and Noah Phelps was the first settler whom Lott knew. Stephen Arnold lived below Noah Phelps, as did Henry Love, who came in 1795 and died in Mehoopany in 1809. Henry Love served through the Revolution, and on the last day at Yorktown, Va., was wounded in the leg. Among the other settlers before 1800 was Asa Budd, who settled on the present Jennings estate. The farm now owned and occupied by John Love was settled by Noah Phelps. In 1792 Tertullus Goff raised grain on the farm now owned by Mrs. Ellen Jennings. He sold to Calvin Wheelock, and he in 1798 to Thaddeus Prentis, and in 1819 Prentis sold to Joseph Swetland, who subsequently sold to Jennings. Thomas Ellis, William Carney and Joseph Carney all lived below Love's prior to 1800, and John Grist, Ezekiel Pray and George Grist lived on Grist flats, in the bend of the river in the southeast part of the township. The farm now owned by L. B. Williams was settled in 1810 by Ebenezer Gay and family, who came from the Wyoming valley and in 1819 moved to the place where James Gay now lives. Franklin Gay was born on the Williams farm in 1813. The farm of John L. Hahn was settled in 1790 by John Grist, sen., and family. They came from the Wyoming valley. Isaac Doll in 1813 owned and occupied the farm now owned by Charles B. Jayne.

The first framed house was built in 1806, by William Carney, where Davis D. Jayne now lives; the next in 1818, at the village of Mehoopany—one at Mr. Kintner's and the other where Peter Bender now lives.

The earliest school-houses were of logs. One was near where John Love now lives and the other on Grist flats. Both have gone to decay. The oldest building now in existence ever used for a school-house is the union church, on the hill southeast from Mehoopany village. David Estell taught in this building. Among the surviving pupils are Hon. Henry Love, Almira French, David Ross and John W. Vose.

The first saw-mill was built by Zephaniah and Leonard

Lott, on the site of the one now owned by Moses S. Kintner. One was built about a half a mile further up that stream about the same time; it went to decay many years ago. There have been three saw-mills on the Little Mehoopany. One was built by Mr. Carney as early as 1800, on the property now owned by H. H. K. and J. French. The pioneer grist-mill was built in 1806, two or three rods above the site of the present mill on the Little Mehoopany, by William, Joseph and John Carney. The present one was built in 1842, by Paul B. Jennings, and is now owned by Joseph T. Jennings. The old mill ran many years, and was completely worn out. The second grist-mill, built in 1823, is a part of the present mill of Moses S. Kintner. The earliest tannery was built on the Big Mehoopany in 1844, by Ansel and Franklin Gay; it is now owned and operated by William Mileham. The next tannery, built by G. W. Smith, in or about 1857, on the Little Mehoopany, has been abandoned for tannery purposes. The pioneer carding and cloth-mill was built in 1822, by Jonathan A. Dudley and William Safford. Additions have been made, including one in 1880 for planing boards. The property is owned and operated by William Decker & Son. Charles Evans and S. W. Ellsworth, about 1840, started the first iron foundry. In 1842 Paul B. Jennings built one on the Little Mehoopany, near the Jennings grist-mill. This foundry was destroyed June 17th, 1870, by a flood which carried the engine and boiler out into the Susquehanna river; they have never been recovered. About 1856 a small foundry was started on the site of the present one. It was purchased by Ingham & Vose, who enlarged and improved it to a first-class foundry. The business is now carried on by their widows.

The first stone dwelling was built in 1840, by J. C. Allworth, in the west part of the township. Two others were built in 1850, by John L. Hahn and G. D. Smith. The only brick building is the store put up in 1866 by W. H. Barnes, at Mehoopany, and now occupied by W. B. Barnes & Co. as a general dry goods and grocery store. Iron plows were introduced about 1828 or 1829, by Eben Potter, who in 1828 started a foundry at Meshoppen. The oldest graveyard is the one on Grist flats. The pioneer blacksmiths were on Grist flats. Philip Stranger worked there as early as 1815, and Frederick Carney in 1819-20. The first tavern was kept at Arnold's ferry as early as 1815, by Zephaniah Lott.

MEHOOPANY VILLAGE.

The site of this village was formerly the property of Elijah Phelps and Leonard Lott. The lower end of the village was owned by Lott, and the upper end by Phelps. Joseph Carney bought of Phelps and William Whipple of Lott, and commenced selling building lots. The pioneer log tavern was kept by Joseph Carney for many years and stood in front of the site of the Mehoopany House. The first wagon maker here was Tillinghast Carpenter, who came in the latter part of 1816 and in 1817 built a lumber wagon and ox cart for William Carney. These were the first of their kind

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

MEHOOPANY TOWNSHIP.

W. H. BARNES.

William Henry Barnes was born in Fairfield, Herkimer county, N. Y., January 31st, 1813, and came to Wyoming county February 12th, 1830, from Ulster county, N. Y. He began his business career in New York city, in 1827, as clerk. A few months later he went to Saugerties, N. Y., and worked as a clerk. He came to Mehoopany in 1834, where he commenced business on his own account. He has been postmaster a number of years.

J. S. CARPENTER.

James S. Carpenter was born in Mehoopany, in 1824. His father came from Massachusetts in 1816, lived in Mehoopany many years and died in March, 1880, at the age of 84. His mother is still living near her son. Mr. C. is the proprietor of the carriage factory at Carpenter-ville, and has been connected with that establishment for thirty-five years. Six workmen are employed in the factory, and all styles of wagons and sleighs are made.

J. W. DENISON, M. D.

J. W. Denison, M. D., was born September 4th, 1818, in Montrose, Pa.; graduated at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1839, and commenced the practice of medicine in 1840; came to Mehoopany in 1841 and practiced medicine about thirteen years. On account of ill-health he abandoned the active practice of medicine and engaged in the drug trade, and is owner of the largest drug store in Wyoming county. Dr. Denison is noted for his generosity toward the poor. In his extensive practice no person was ever neglected on account of poverty, and in the drug business he is ever ready to help those who need help.

A. H. DOTY.

A. H. Doty was born in Vermont, in 1838, and at the age of three removed to Herkimer county, N. Y.; resided there about twenty-one years and came to Mehoopany. Mr. Doty is the proprietor of the carriage factory in Mehoopany, which was established in 1866, and of another at Jenningsville. Light work is made a specialty at Mehoopany, the heavier work being done at Jenningsville. Mr. D. has been overseer of the poor and constable.

J. L. HAHN.

John L. Hahn, farmer, was born in Northampton county, Pa., in 1826, and with his parents in 1846 settled where he now resides, about two miles from Mehoopany village. He lived for a few years in Mehoopany village, and while there speculated somewhat in land, and was in 1856 proprietor of a blacksmith shop.

S. D. INGHAM.

Samuel D. Ingham was born in Asylum, Bradford county, Pa., in 1827. He came to Wyoming county in 1830, with his mother, who was a widow; his father, Joseph Ingham, having died in 1829. His mother, who was a Whitcomb, died in 1850. Mr. Ingham was a namesake of Hon. S. D. Ingham, Secretary of State under Andrew Jackson. In 1868 he married his second wife, Elizabeth Vose, born in 1833 in Forkston. Mrs. Ingham was a graduate of Wyoming Seminary, and has taught school for nearly twenty-five years, mostly in Wyoming county. Mr. Ingham began business in Mehoopany in 1848, and continued until his death, May, 1877. He was postmaster and justice of the peace many years.

HON. H. LOVE.

Hon. Henry Love was born in Braintrim (now Meshopen), Pa., April 5th, 1811. In his younger days he was for a time a teacher, but generally followed the mercantile business. He has resided in Mehoopany since 1844. He was elected justice of the peace in March, that year, and held the office over twelve years, resigning to accept the office of associate judge of Wyoming county in 1836, which office he held for five years. He was county auditor six years. John Love, his father, was a native of Pennsylvania, and located in Wyoming county about 1796. His mother was born in Monroe county, and came to Wyoming county about 1806. His father died January 16th, 1867; his mother December 30th, 1871.

WILLIAM STEMPLER.

William Stemples was born in Monroe county, Pa., November 5th, 1825. He removed with his parents when about two years of age to Wyoming county, then a part of Luzerne. Their first residence was Russell Hill, where they remained two years. He then removed to Mehoopany, where he resided till the day of his death, August 31st, 1877. He was married November 20th, 1857, to Miss Anna Love, who lived about two years after their marriage. She left a son named Henry Frank, who lived after the death of his mother nine years. June 6th, 1860, Mr. Stemples married Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Sussex county, N. J., with whom he lived happily during the remaining eighteen years of his life. Five children were born to them, viz.: Celestia M., born April 13th, 1861; Florence F., January 21st, 1864; Carra V., October 14th, 1866; Mary E., June 22nd, 1871; Orrin, June 27th, 1873. Mr. Stemples was an able and successful farmer. By industry, economy and good management he became the owner of a good, well stocked and productive farm. He was a good example of industry for young men. At the age of 19 he became a convert to the Christian faith and immediately united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he continued a faithful and acceptable member till death. He gave liberally of his money for its support. He served the church in nearly every official capacity, being class leader, steward, trustee and Sunday-school superintendent. During his last illness he was sustained by a cheerful, trusting faith and was wonderfully patient in the midst of great suffering.

W. H. SWETLAND.

William H. Swetland, who has been justice of the peace three terms, was born in Mehoopany, in 1836. His father, Gordon Swetland, moved to Wyoming county in 1820. His great-grandfather was taken prisoner by the Indians. His mother was born in New Jersey, and his parents reside on the old homestead in Mehoopany.

T. L. VOSE.

Thomas L. Vose was born in Mehoopany. He formed a partnership with S. D. Ingham in the foundry business in 1857, which continued till his death, August 5th, 1878. He possessed great inventive genius. His wife was Hester M. Myers, born in Orange county, N. Y., in 1827, who came to Mehoopany in 1832. In partnership with Mrs. S. D. Ingham she manages the foundry at Mehoopany.

EDGAR A. ADAMS was born in Forkston township, in 1854. He is station agent for the L.V. Railroad Company at Mehoopany, and is telegraph operator and postmaster.

C. F. DECKER, farmer, was born in Mehoopany township, in 1842. He served in the late war in the 143d regiment Pennsylvania volunteers. He has lived on his present farm fourteen years.

WILLIAM DECKER was born in New Jersey, in 1827, and came to Mehoopany with his parents at the age of ten. He is at present the oldest carpenter in Mehoopany. His father Elijah Decker, was a native of New Jersey and a farmer. His mother was a native of Pennsylvania.

FREDERICK C. DENISON, M.D., was born in Montrose, Pa., May 7th, 1830, and located permanently in Mehoopany in 1856, when he began the practice of medicine. He began reading medicine with the Hon. William T. Humphrey, M.D., now of Osceola, Tioga county, Pa., and graduated at the University of Michigan in March, 1856. His father, Adam Benjamin Denison, was born in Vermont, was also a physician, and practiced at an early day at Montrose, where he died in 1836. His mother, a native of Connecticut, died in 1872. Dr. Denison was a school director six years, and he served in the late war.

GEORGE HENNING was born in Winderhausen, Germany, December 25th, 1817. He landed in New York August 22nd, 1839, and came to Mehoopany in 1841, and in 1845 married Mary Ann Bender. He soon afterward took a short western trip, but returned and settled on the farm of 370 acres where he now resides. He visited the home of his nativity, in Germany, in 1871 and 1872. He was elected county commissioner in 1869, for three years.

SAMUEL JACOBY was born in Sussex county, N. J., in 1819, and came to Wyoming county, with his parents, in 1832. He was a stone mason and farmer. He moved to the farm now occupied by Mrs. Jacoby in 1867, and remained there until his death, in 1872. Mrs. Jacoby was born in Mehoopany, in 1833.

HARRIDON S. JENNINGS was born in Mehoopany, May 21st, 1853, and is a grandson of Major John Fassett. He lives at Mehoopany, and is a member of the firm of H. S. Jennings & Co., dealers in general merchandise. He married Bessie A. Bunnell, of Washington township.

JABEZ W. JENNINGS was born in Bath, England, in 1822, and came to this country when fifteen years old. He lived with his uncle, Bishop Jennings, for some time before starting in life for himself. He was a farmer, and died in 1872. His wife's maiden name was Ellen Smith. She was born in Mehoopany, in 1839.

JOSEPH T. JENNINGS was born near Mauch Chunk, Pa., in 1827. He located in Mehoopany in 1830, where he has since resided. His father, Paul B. Jennings, was a native of England. He came to this country at the age of eleven, locating in Philadelphia. His mother, whose maiden name was Tuttle, was born in the Wyoming valley, and is still living, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. Jennings was for many years a merchant, but has lately given his attention more particularly to lumbering.

S. W. JENNINGS was born in Mehoopany, in 1845. His father, a native of England, and his mother lived in Mehoopany from a comparatively early date until their death. Mr. Jennings has been a carpenter since 1869. He has been inspector one term and often township clerk.

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM JENNINGS was born in Bath, England, in 1820, and came to this country in 1836. For fifteen years prior to 1860 he was a merchant; then was a farmer until his death, in 1872. He recruited a company at the time of the invasion of the State, and was a lieutenant in the late war. Mrs. Jennings, who survives her husband, was born in Bradford county, in 1828, and came to Mehoopany after her marriage in 1845.

LEVI KELLEY was born in Delaware county, N. Y., in 1822, and came to Wyoming county in 1837. His father and mother, who are both dead, were natives of New York State. Mr. Kelley has been a farmer nearly all his life, but for the past four years has been living in retirement in the village. He served in the 97th regiment in 1865, and was honorably discharged in June, that year.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL J. C. KINTNER was born in Washington township, in 1838. His parents were natives of Monroe county, and about 1836 settled in Washington township. Mr. Kintner has been engaged in the mercantile business as clerk and proprietor about twenty-three years. In 1866 he commenced business for himself in Mehoopany village. He is conducting a general store at Jenningsville. During the late war he enlisted as a private in the 52nd regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, and served three years in that capacity, part of that time in the signal corps. He was promoted to a captaincy in the 109th regiment United States colored troops, and was mustered out of service in February, 1866; but is a member of the Governor's staff, with the rank of lieutenant colonel and assistant quartermaster general.

MOSES S. KINTNER was born in Monroe, Pa., in 1835. He came to Mehoopany in 1844, and for a time was a farmer. Afterward he was a carpenter until 1872. Since that he has been a miller. He was elected justice of the peace in 1863 and held the office two years.

WASHINGTON W. MINER was born in Chenango, Broome county, N. Y., July 13th, 1823. He is a harness maker by trade, and began business in Windsor in 1836. In 1847 he became the first harness maker in Pittston, where he married Ellen, daughter of Colonel Burns, who died in 1850. In 1859 he married Sophia, daughter of Peter Walter. He served in the militia as first lieutenant in 1862, and afterward enlisted for nine months in the 171st regiment, and was discharged August 8th, 1863, at Harrisburg. His father, William W. Miner, was also a harness maker. He died in 1865. His mother, whose maiden name was Lydia Dorman, was a native of Broome county, N. Y., where she resides.

C. C. MYERS, almost a lifelong farmer, was born in Orange county, N. Y., in 1830. When four years old he, with his parents, settled on his present farm.

DANIEL MYERS was born in Orange county, N. Y., in 1826, and came to Wyoming county with his parents in 1835. His father and mother were both natives of New York State. The former is still living in Owego, N. Y. His mother died about two years ago.

WILLIAM PLACE was born in Monroe county, Pa., in 1821, and came to Washington township when two years old. He has lived on his present farm twenty-five years. His wife's family were early settlers of the town.

T. H. RYAN was born at Binghamton, N. Y., in 1849, and came with his parents to Meshoppen that year. His parents were both natives of Ireland, and his mother is still living at Meshoppen. Mr. Ryan is a blacksmith, and has been engaged in the business in Mehoopany seven years. He has served as inspector one term.

JOHN SHEEHAN, a native of Ireland, was born in county Cork, in 1830. He came to America in 1836 and located in Mehoopany. His wife was a Miss Lott, daughter of one of the first settlers. Mr. Sheehan is a farmer, and has been school director and supervisor.

E. W. STURDEVANT was born in Wyoming county, in 1834, and came to reside in Mehoopany in 1857. Mr. Sturdevant formerly owned the "Big Mehoopany Mills," but for a number of years he has been engaged in lumbering. He has held the office of justice of the peace.

GORDON SWETLAND, farmer, was born in 1803; in Kingston township, Luzerne county, and in 1809, with his parents, settled on Grist Flats, about two and a half miles from Mehoopany village. He was justice two years (from 1845), and sheriff 1851-54.

G. K. THOMPSON was born in Forkston township, in 1838. He came to Mehoopany in 1877 and kept the Mehoopany House three years. Mr. Thompson was a member of the 12th Pa. reserves eighteen months. He is agent for agricultural implements and a butcher.

L. B. WILLIAMS was born in Mehoopany township (then Windham), in 1834. His parents formerly resided on the farm he now occupies. He has lived there for fifty years and has twice served as assessor.

ROLLA WHIPPLE was born in Mehoopany, in 1839. His father, George Whipple, was one of the early settlers there. His mother, whose maiden name was Harding, was born in Eaton. Mr. Whipple served a short time in the State militia.

The following citizens of Mehoopany also contributed their support to this publication: I. F. Blume, E. M. Davis, William Decker, Charles Place, Jerome Remington, C. F. Vosburg, Riley Vosburg, J. L. Vose.

ever made or used in this township, and had to be taken to Meshoppen to be ironed. Mr. Carpenter's shop was one of the back rooms of the old Jayne house, still standing on Main street. The pioneer doctor was Elijah Carney. He lived in the old house now used by Ingham & Vose for storing lumber and patterns. A tavern was built in 1827 or 1828 by Daniel Hicks, on the site of the residence of Hon. Henry Love. The third tavern was a part of the present Jennings House. A part of the front of the building was put up by Daniel Hicks in 1838, and in 1850 John Maynard built the addition, leaving it as it is at present. The first postmaster was Daniel M. Barnes. He lived near where the Barnes store now stands, and there kept the post-office. The mail was carried on horseback, by John Bull, from Towanda to Tunkhannock, once a week. The present postmaster is William B. Barnes, and mails arrive and depart twelve times per week, by the Lehigh Valley Railroad. The present covered bridge across the Big Mehoopany was built in 1851. This is the fifth bridge across the creek at this place. The first three were destroyed by freshets, and the fourth by a high wind in 1850. The Mehoopany House was built in 1871, by Cyrus L. Vaughn, who died that year. The upper ferry was chartered March 4th, 1869, to William Jayne, and July 2nd, 1874, the property was transferred to J. T. Jennings, the present owner. A. W. Robinson is the owner of the lower ferry.

This village contains a population of 375. There are two churches, Methodist Episcopal and Baptist, both in a prosperous condition. The general merchants are William Swetland, W. B. Barnes & Co. and H. S. Jennings & Co. C. E. Jennings and J. G. Harris keep small groceries. B. G. White is engaged in the hardware business, and J. W. Denison keeps the village drug store. M. S. Kintner owns and operates a grist and saw-mill, and J. T. Jennings a saw-mill. The carriage and wagon makers are H. Doty, J. A. Brooks and J. S. Carpenter. The blacksmiths are Solomon Callender, Thomas Ryan, A. R. Smith and L. K. Smith, the last having worked here forty years. W. W. Miner and K. Jayne are the harness makers, and Frank Gay and William Jayne are engaged in the boot and shoe business. The coopers are E. Detrich and G. C. Hartley. William Mileham owns and operates a tannery, and William Decker planing and carding mills. Sallie Hitchcock, Minnie Kelley and Mrs. B. C. Keithline are the milliners. The new school building was built in 1880. There are two schools kept in it.

The "Mehoopany House" is kept by E. M. Davis, and the Jennings House by A. S. Ross.

Mehoopany Lodge, No. 2,081, Knights of Honor was organized March 4th, 1880, with 26 charter members and the following officers: F. C. Denison, dictator; W. H. Swetland, past dictator; William Decker, vice-dictator; M. Detrick, assistant dictator; H. S. Jennings, reporter; W. B. Barnes, financial reporter; R. Y. Whipple, treasurer; J. N. Swartwood, guide; Rev. Isaac Elwell, chaplain; G. K. Thompson, guardian; A. Decker, sentinel.

MESHOPPEN TOWNSHIP.

BRAINTRIM and Washington furnished the territory of this township, which was formed in 1854. The name is an Indian one, and is said to mean "place of beads." The township has an area of about eighteen square miles and had a population in 1870 of 1,239. The population in 1880 was 700.

FIRST SETTLERS.

A lot of six hundred acres was laid out for Thomas Wigton in 1775, on which lot there was a saw-mill (on Meshoppen creek), and Wigton was living thereon. Amaziah Cleveland, Elijah Brown, Nicholas Depew and Nathan Kingsley transferred interests in a saw-mill on Meshoppen creek during the years 1774, 1775 and 1776. It is highly probable that Cleveland and Brown lived here before Wigton. Frederick Vanderlip settled as early as Black Walnut, on property afterward owned by Daniel Sterling, near the Braintrim town line. At the time Sullivan's army camped there (August 4th, 1779), Vanderlip had left his plantation and joined the Indians. Tradition recalls James and William Wigton and their mother, living near the mouth of Meshoppen creek, on the south side. They were probably the family of Thomas Wigton, and were here as late as 1792. There were undoubtedly a number of settlers here who might have been permanent except for the adversities of war, and whose names are now lost.

Among the early permanent settlers was Mason F. Alden, who came about 1795 and erected the first grist-mill at the factory dam. He died in Meshoppen. His descendants live in Washington township.

In 1794 Benjamin Overfield and his brother Paul located about two miles up the river from the mouth of Meshoppen creek. Peter Osterhout settled near him soon after. Benjamin Overfield was born in Monroe county, Pa., in 1752, and died in Meshoppen in October, 1813, leaving four sons and four daughters. His youngest son, Paul Overfield 2nd, was born May 22nd, 1792. He always remained on the old homestead. He did much for the M. E. church and was friendly toward every one. He married Lydia Lacey June 14th, 1813. They are both kindly remembered and warmly spoken of by many of the inhabitants. Mr. Overfield died February 15th, 1871, and his wife August 14th, 1872. Paul Overfield 1st, brother of Benjamin, was also a native of Monroe county. He married a daughter of Nicholas Depew. She was in the Wyoming valley at the time of the massacre, but her life was saved by a friendly Indian acquaintance, who secreted her among the rocks. Paul Overfield 1st lived in Meshoppen until his death, about 1832. His oldest son, Nicholas Overfield, succeeded him on the homestead. Nicholas Overfield was born in this State in 1787, came to Meshoppen with his father about 1794 and became one of the most successful farmers and prominent citizens of the township. He worked hard and accumulated a large property. He was associate judge of the county from 1851 to 1856, and represented Luzerne county in the Legislature before Wyoming was set off. He married Harriet, daughter of Samuel Sterling. He died February 5th, 1859; his wife March 14th, 1874, in her seventy-ninth year. The place is now owned by Norman Sterling. Moses Overfield, son of Paul 1st, was born April 13th, 1793, and came with his parents to Meshoppen in his infancy. He was a teacher in youth. He eventually located on the place now occupied by Henry Dunlap, where he remained until his death, September 30th, 1860. He was justice of the peace twenty years and was the first to represent Wyoming county in the State Legislature. His wife was Fairlee Loomis, a kind-hearted, intelligent lady, who died February 27th, 1865.

Near the Braintrim line were located previous to 1880 Samuel Sterling, Ambrose Gaylord and James Wheeler. Mr. Sterling with his family came from Connecticut and settled in Exeter, Luzerne county; afterward in Falls township, then in Wyalusing township, and finally at Black Walnut bottom, where he bought a large tract and remained until his death, about 1830. Daniel Sterling, son of Samuel, was born in Connecticut, July 8th, 1776; came to Black Walnut with the family, and became practically the manager of his father's affairs soon after locating here. He early opened a store and a hotel at Black Walnut. He bought land on Meshoppen creek, near its mouth, where he was for many years extensively engaged in lumbering, grist milling, merchandising and farming. He removed about 1837 to Illinois, where he died August 25th, 1839. John Sterling, also a son of Samuel Sterling, was born in Connecticut, December 8th, 1793, and was but a boy when the family came to Black Walnut. He was in the employ of his brother Daniel most of the time, until his marriage to Sarah Overfield, about 1813, after which he was a farmer, living most of the time in this township. He died in Black Walnut in January, 1874.

Elnathan Ellis settled above the Overfields before 1800, and in the same quarter of the township a little later were located John, Solomon, Isaac and James Bunnell, George Gay, Ahira Whitcomb and David Blackmar. Below the creek were George Koon and Francis Brewer. Up the creek the pioneers were James and Joseph Jennings, Joseph Baker, and Solomon, Levi, James and Jesse Ellis. Settlements on the hills began as early as 1820. Among the first to locate were George Mowry, Anson Stocker, David Cole, Benjamin and Philip Van Nosedell, Mitchel Bogart, Erastus Bowman, Robert Dunlap, and Isaac, John, Matthew and Clark Winans.

Solomon Bunnell was born in Monroe county, Pa., July 25th, 1792, and came to Meshoppen about 1812. He bought a large tract of land and first settled near the river, but a few years later he located on Bunnell hill, where he remained until his death, May 22nd, 1874. He accumulated a liberal competence. He was an early member of the M. E. church. His son John occupies the old homestead.

Ezekiel Mowry, born in Rhode Island, February 22nd, 1781, located on the north side of Meshoppen creek near its mouth in 1806, where he owned 300 acres of land. Here he built several saw-mills and a grist-mill. He was a corporal in the war of 1812. He was justice of the peace of Meshoppen thirty-two years. His wife was Abigail, a daughter of Mason F. Alden. He raised a large family, some of whom became prominent. His son Ezekiel, jr., was a member of the Legislature in 1850. Mr. Mowry died in 1874.

MANUFACTORIES, STORES AND TAVERNS.

The first saw-mill was built as early as 1775, and owned by Amaziah Cleveland. Mason F. Alden built the first grist-mill on Meshoppen creek, at the factory dam, before 1800. About the same time James Wheeler had a tannery at Black Walnut, and also a hotel and distillery. Collins Wood and John Bird were the distillers. The stone walls of this distillery are now the foundation of a barn on the west bank of Black Walnut creek. John Downer built a short-lived saw-mill at the falls a mile and a quarter above the mouth of Meshoppen creek, near the opening of this century. William T. Alden built a saw-mill on the south side of the creek, above the bridge, in 1805, which was kept up by his successors, Daniel Sterling and Daniel T. Sterling, until 1879, when it was burned. Ezekiel Mowry built a saw-mill on little Meshoppen creek (near the present tannery) in 1809, and one on the big creek in 1815, and a grist-mill at the same place in 1818; the site is now occupied by the plaster and chop-mill of his son E. J. Mowry. Daniel Sterling built a grist-mill just below the Alden saw-mill in 1818, and a saw-mill at the north end of the same dam in 1825; the grist-mill was burned in 1879. The saw-mill on the north side went to ruin, and in 1852 its site was occupied by a fine, large grist-mill, built by G. M. Hollenback, Nicholas Overfield and D. T. Sterling at a cost of $12,000. It is now owned by D. T. Sterling and William M. Sine, and doing a flourishing business. Daniel Lum built a saw-mill at Black Walnut creek about 1830; it was rebuilt by his son John S. Lum in 1850, and by Nicholas Overfield 2nd in 1868. Colonel A. C. Keeney built a steam saw-mill near the old distillery at Black Walnut in 1875. Ebenezer Potter built an iron foundry on the south side of Meshoppen creek, near the old hotel, in 1824, and made the first metal plows for this part of the country. A saw-mill was built three quarters of a mile up Meshoppen creek by A. W. Wells and George Wilson in 1840; its site is now occupied by a large building erected in 1869 by Thomas J. Sherwood, and well filled with wood working machinery—planer, matcher, saws, lathes, etc. Besides articles used in building, a considerable amount of furniture and wooden toys is made at this mill, which Mr. S. calls "Chappaqua." A grist-mill was built on little Meshoppen creek, about sixty rods above its mouth, by John Smith & Co. in 1840 (Dr. John Smith, of Wyoming valley). In 1868 its present owner, Daniel Hankinson, nearly doubled its size and in various ways improved it. The next year he added a twenty-four horse power steam engine. In 1879 he added a circular saw-mill. The whole establishment is an active, profitable one. A tannery existed at Ahira Whitcomb's (now Allen Jayne's) as early as 1825 or 1830. In 1860 a tannery was erected by Clark Burr & Sons on little Meshoppen creek, near the site of Ezekiel Mowry's saw-mill. It is now owned by Harley Bros., and is in active operation.

There are several good quarries—on Black Walnut creek, on Winans hill and at other points; also an extensive freestone quarry at the fork of little Meshoppen creek, operated by Brownscombe & King, whose principal market is New York city. Some blocks weighing eight tons are forwarded in the rough; orders are also filled for dressed stone, this work being done at the mouth of the big creek, where they have a steam mill for sawing and a gang of hands for cutting. Brick have been manufactured at different times on the farm of Allen Jayne.

EARLY SCHOOLS AND TEACHERS.

The first school was taught by Parmelia Ellsworth in a barn near the site of William M. Sine's house, in 1812, and consisted of about twelve scholars. Probably there was a school at Black Walnut prior to this. The village school was long kept in a house (built about 1825 or 1830) near the mouth of the creek, south side, close by Owen Daley's barn. The old school-house, which was also used for a church, was abandoned about 1855 and soon became a ruin. The present school building on Auburn street was erected in 1856.

PHYSICIANS.

About 1800 Dr. Beeman was at the upper end of this township. He was succeeded in the same location by Dr. Grant, who after a few years went abroad as a missionary. Dr. E. B. West located at Black Walnut about 1825; he removed in 1841 to Tunkhannock and subsequently to Wisconsin. The place vacated by him at Black Walnut was taken in 1841 by Dr. Nathan Wells, who since 1842 has been at Meshoppen village, associated with his son, Dr. E. H. Wells. From 1840 to 1842 Dr. H. Miller lived near the village of Meshoppen.

MESHOPPEN BOROUGH.

IN August, 1879, this village was incorporated as a porough. The first regular election for borough officers was held in February, 1880, and resulted as follows: Daniel Hankinson, Burgess; Nathan Wells, John Gay, William H. Pneunan, Samuel H. Jenkins, Isaac Jayne and D. S. Roberts, councilmen; E. M. Burnes, high constable.

The borough site is believed to have been first owned by Nicholas Depew, transferred to Elijah Bown, Nathan Kingsley, Amaziah Cleveland and finally to Thomas Wigton in 1775, all these under the Connecticut title. A few years later, under the Pennsylvania survey, Mason F. Alden and his son William T. Alden and Ezekiel Mowry held the proprietorship, Mowry owning on the north side of the creek. Mr. Alden was succeeded by Daniel Sterling; the surroundings are still held by D. T. Sterling and E. J. Mowry.

The first store was opened about 1820 by Daniel Sterling, who had previously built a grist-mill here, and who two or three years later constructed a woolen factory near by. The latter was superintended by Jonathan Parker. A post-office was established here about 1820, and a hotel opened about 1830, since which the town has grown gradually. It now contains 122 dwellings, 4 churches, a school building, 5 general stores, 2 hardware stores, 1 clothing and 1 drug store, 2 grist-mills, a saw-mill, a chop and plaster-mill, a planing-mill and toy factory, 2 hotels, 2 jewelers, 3 physicians, a banker and a proportionate number of shops, and has a population of 560.

MESHOPPEN WATER COMPANY.

This corporation was chartered in 1869, with an authorized capital of $4,000. The company has expended more than twice that sum; has a reservoir over a large spring on the farm of E. J. Mowry and another on Auburn street, which is filled by an iron main running a mile up Little Meshoppen creek. Ordinarily the village is well supplied with water.

POST-OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.

A mail route was established along the valley in the early part of the present century, and about 1820 a post-office was established at Meshoppen Creek, under the name of Sterlingville, with Ebenezer Potter as postmaster. A two-horse stage coach ran thrice a week from Tunkhannock to Towanda from 1835 to 1848, when it became a daily line of stages, which continued until the completion of the railroad in 1869.

About 1854 the name of this post-office was changed to Meshoppen. From 1861 to 1866 it was again called Sterlingville, since which time it has retained the name of Meshoppen. The successive postmasters have been Ebenezer Potter, James Sterling, Francis W. Hunt, Philo Hull, Nathan Wells, Thomas F. Kellogg, P. M. Burr and O. H. Loomis. It is the only post-office in the township.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Meshoppen Lodge, No. 520, I. O. O. F. was instituted July 21st, 1855, with 20 charter members. The first elective officers were: John G. Davis, N. G.; S. D. Potter, V. G.; Ezekiel Mowry, jr., Sec.; Morris Labar, Asst. Sec.; Riley Warner, Treas.

Meshoppen Encampment, No. 205, I. O. O. F. was instituted June 28th, 1876, with the following charter members: Edward Merritt, C. P.; G. R. Ackroyd; P. M. Burr, S. W.; J. A. Tompkins, J. W.; W. H. Burr, scribe; E. J. Mowry, Treas.; G. M. Koon, Gideon Winans.

The presiding officers have been Edward Merritt, Philo M. Burr, John A. Tompkins, G. M. Koon, W. L.

France, Gideon Winans and J. M. Stillwell. The membership is 23.

Meshoppen Lodge, No. 455, Knights of Pythias was instituted May 8th, 1878, with 12 charter members. The first officers were: William H. Pneuman, C. C.; W. L. France, V. C.; P. D. Harley, P.; G. C. Sturdevant, Alva Fassett and G. C. Cortright.

Meshoppen Lodge, No. 2,082, Knights of Honor was organized at Odd Fellows' Hall, in Meshoppen, March 8th, 1880, with 24 charter members. Its first officers were: William H. Burr, D.; J. M. Carey, V. D.; G. I. Decker, A. D.; D. S. Roberts, R.; P. M. Burr, F. R. G. Winans, T.; N. Sterling, C.; W. H. Durkee, G.; F. M. Terwilliger, G.; S. H. Jenkins, S.; E. J. Mowry, P. D.; trustees, E. H. Wells, Isaac Jayne and Charles Winans; medical examiners, J. M. Carey and E. H. Wells.

CHURCHES OF MESHOPPEN.

Methodist Episcopal.—The first building erected especially for public worship was built in 1835 by the Methodist Episcopal society on the land of Hon. Nicholas Overfield, about a mile and a half above the mouth of Meshoppen creek. It was a commodious brick structure, and was the center of a large territory, which, especially at quarterly meetings, turned out full congregations. Paul Overfield, son of Benjamin Overfield, and Nicholas Overfield, son of Paul 1st, contributed largely to the building fund.

In 1856, during the pastorate of Rev. E. F. Roberts a church was built in the village of Meshoppen at a cost of about $1,000; extensive repairs, bell, etc. in 1873 cost $2,500 more. The parsonage adjoining the church was built in 1870, and cost $1,500. The society has a large membership, and the pastor, although living here, has appointments at three places outside. After the erection of the church in the village the chapel gradually fell into disuse, and was finally abandoned and taken down in 1877. There is a flourishing Sabbath-school connected with this church.

The Presbyterians had meetings from time to time in Black Walnut and regular preaching as early as 1815, but the centers of business and settlement changed, and meetings were held in Meshoppen village regularly from about 1845, Revs. H. H. Willes and John W. Sterling being the ministers. Somewhat later Rev. C. R. Lane, pastor at Tunkhannock, made regular appointments for many years. A church was organized in 1850 with 17 members. Edward Storm and Robert Clayton were the elders, both now deceased.

In 1856 a church building was erected at a cost of about $1,200. The bell was put in in 1863, and cost $225. In 1870 Rev. Clark Salmon became pastor of the church, and remained until 1876. In 1872 a parsonage was built adjoining the church at an expense of about $1,300. Since Mr. Salmon's departure the church has had no pastor or regular supply; its membership is small.

Baptists.—There are a number of Baptists here, but no regular organization or church property. There is occasional preaching by elders from other charges.

Universalists.—In 1853 the Universalists erected a building for their services, and they had meetings at stated intervals until about twelve years ago, since which only occasional sermons.

Catholic Church of Meshoppen.—Rev. Father Henry Fitzsimmons, of Carbondale, held Catholic services in private dwellings in this town at irregular intervals for about ten years from 1835. Rev. John V. O'Reilly often ministered here during that time and for some years after. He was followed by Revs. John Monighan, Dennis Wheeler, John Laughran and Rev. A. D. Tileu. After about 1869 meetings were held regularly once a month. Rev. Thomas Brahany was pastor for three years from 1871. He was followed in the spring of 1874 by Rev. P. G. Murphy, and the same year the present church building was commenced, Bishop O'Hara, of Scranton, officiating at the laying of the corner stone. The building was completed in 1875 and dedicated by Fathers Ray, Murphy and Lally. Father Murphy was followed in succession by Revs. Felix McGuicken, Anthony Shields, Thomas J. Ray and T. J. Lafferty, the later still serving (1880). The society now numbers about 35 families.

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township, named after President Monroe, was set off from North Moreland in 1832. The first election of officers for the township was held at North Moreland. The first election in the township itself was held at the house of George Carl. The records are lost. Nathan Parrish and Peter Lutz were elected justices in 1840.

The township sends annually large quantities of lumber to the surrounding markets. There are also peeled every year thousands of tons of bark, which furnishes work for a large number of hands.

Wild animals have been very plenty and even now deer come from the adjacent forests and are seen occasionally to mix with the stock upon the farms, and it is not an unusual thing for bears to be killed in the township.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first pioneer was J. Lewis, who settled in 1804, near where Dr. Silkworth now lives, on the "Youngs tract." He was followed by a man named Frazer, and he by Lewis Warwick. Jared Slaughter came in 1812, Josiah Newberry in 1813 settled on Bowman's creek. He was a surveyor and found considerable employment. He

HON. GORDON PIKE.

Hon. Gordon Pike was born in Brooklyn, Windham county, Conn., February 19th, 1808. His parents both died when he was very young, and the family, consisting of four boys and two girls, went to live with their grand parents until they were old enough to take care of themselves, when they all removed to Pennsylvania. In 1833 Gordon located in North Moreland township, working for the farmers in the summer and teaching school in the winter. December 19th of that year he married Mary Phillips, of Wyoming. In 1866 he was elected associate judge of Wyoming county. He had previously been elected county commissioner. Subsequently he received the nomination for State senator. As a citizen, he has the respect and confidence of all who know him.

THOMAS P. BARINGER was born in 1827, at Olive, Pa. He came to Monroe in 1848. He was married in 1846 to Hannah Traner, of Olive, Pa. He enlisted in the 143d Pennsylvania volunteers in 1862, and was with the regiment at the Wilderness and all of its other battles. He was mustered out in 1865.

ANTHONY BERSCH, a native of Germany, came to this country in 1854, and has kept a store at Centre Moreland for some years. He is a member of the furniture manufacturing firm of Stroth & Bersch. He married Lily H. Pilgrim, in 1878.

MARTIN BRUNGES, son of John Brunges, one of the first settlers of North Moreland, was elected to the State Assembly in 1871, and served with distinction. He was re-elected the following term, and was appointed chairman of the committee on mines and mining and secretary of that on agriculture, also serving on the committees on pensions, retrenchment and reform, roads and election districts. He is a Republican, and is the only resident of the township ever elected to a State office.

H. P. COLVIN was born in 1846, in Benton, Pa. He came to Monroe in 1869, and was married in 1870 to Miss B. Swingle, daughter of Ephraim Swingle, of Monroe. They have two children—Eliza A., born December 7th, 1870, and Charles A., born September 23d, 1874. Mr. Colvin has been town clerk and justice three years.

EDWARD DIMMICK was born in 1803, at Mansfield, Conn. He came to Monroe in 1864; was married first to Laura Round, of Jackson, Pa.; to Mary Meredith in 1865; and afterwards to Abigail Stevens, widow of Ebenezer Parrish. His father was a Revolutionary soldier and pensioner.

BYRON DIMMICK was born in 1833. He married, August 12th, 1853, Ermina O. Terrell, daughter of Elias G. Terrell, of Connecticut, by whom he has had four children: Frederick E., born June 27th, 1854; Lelia V., February 14th, 1856; Shelby T., October 1st, 1861; Cora D., October 4th, 1866.

JOHN B. DYMOND, justice of the peace and post-master, was born in 1820, and married, in 1845, to Mary Jane Whitlock. They have eight children living.

R. H. EVANS was born at Deposit, Delaware county, N. Y. He came to Monroe in 1853, being married in 1852 to Miss H. N. Beldon, daughter of Silas T. Beldon, M. D., of Dover Plains, N. Y. They have one son, H. C., born in February, 1853.

WILLIAM FREAR was born in 1827, at Eaton; came to Monroe in 1840, and married in 1854 Elizabeth B. Parrish, of Monroe. She was born in 1833, and died in 1879. They had six children: Edwin D., born in 1855; David, 1857; Emma, 1859; Carrie S., 1861; Lois, 1862; Charles, 1873. Five are living. Mr. Frear has been school director for ten years, assessor eleven years, and is now the poormaster of the township.

H. J. FREAR was born in 1847, and is the son of Rufus J. Frear, who came to Monroe in 1840. The latter was a prominent man in the township; was justice two terms and deputy marshal; enlisted in Company F 53d Pennsylvania volunteers; was captured at Ream's station, confined in Libby prison and Salisbury, where he died in 1864. H. J. Frear married in 1866 Mandana K. Frear, by whom he has one daughter, Gertrude E., born June 27th, 1877. He has been town clerk four terms.

JAMES D. GALLUP is a native of North Moreland, where his father was an early settler. He has held the office of justice of peace, and is an Odd Fellow, a Gran-ger and a Son of Temperance.

I. B. HARDING was born in Eaton, in 1823, and has always lived in this county. He married Abigail Cook in 1850. He has been school director six years.

JAMES W. HARRISON, steward and a class leader of the Methodist church at Vernon, came to America from England in 1839. He was married to Mary P. Heaton in 1857, and has five children.

JACOB B. HEADLEY was born in 1854, and is the son of Thomas and Hannah Headley, early settlers.

T. D. HEADLEY was born in 1818, and is a descendant of some of the earliest inhabitants, his grandfather having settled in Exeter about eight years after the Revolution. Mr. Headley has been married twice and has four children living. He has held many town offices and is a member of the "Christian" church.

WILLIAM H. JACKSON was born in 1835, at Monroe. In 1866 he built a grist-mill on the site of the first one put up in the township. He married in 1867 Sarah A. Clarke, daughter of Sidney Z. Clarke. They had four children, of whom three are living; Charles E., born February 17th, 1871; Jennie May, April 1st, 1873, and Stanley A., August 3d, 1879. Mr. Jackson entered the Union army in 1862, in the 171st Pennsylvania volunteers. He returned in 1863.

E. P. JACKSON was born in 1836, in Franklin township, Luzerne county. He was married April 25th, 1858, to Amantha Eastwood, of Monroe, daughter of John Eastwood. There are four children by this marriage: Amanda, born October 14th, 1861; Merritt, June 4th, 1863; Helen, June 3d, 1867; Mary S., November 12th, 1870. Mr. Jackson enlisted in the 143d Pennsylvania volunteers in September, 1862, and was with that regiment till it was mustered out.

HEISTER KEELER, for the past thirteen years post-master at Keelersburg and the largest land proprietor in North Moreland, was born January 1st, 1821, and married Adeline Sharp January 30th, 1851. They have a family of eight children.

ELIJAH D. LYON was born in 1816, in Newark, N. J., and came to Monroe in 1861. He married in 1833 Johanna Murphy and in 1863 Zeruah Phoenix, daughter of Matthew Phoenix. He has been school director, auditor and poormaster.

GEORGE I. MILLER was born in 1846, at New Milford, Pa., and came to Monroe in 1867. He was married in 1869 to Rosy O. Wall, daughter of John Wall, of this township. They had two children: Minnie M., born in 1872, died in 1875; John was born in 1878. Mr. Miller enlisted in the 152nd Pennsylvania regiment in 1864, and served till it was mustered out.

JAMES R. MOORE was born in 1848, at Andes, N. Y. August 13th, 1874, he married Martha A. Vandervoort, of Traverse City, Mich.

SCOTT W. MORGAN was born in 1847, at Monroe. He married in 1873 Nelly Brown, of Monroe. They have two children living, Mertie, born in 1877, and John B., born in 1879.

LEVI MOSHIER was born January 2nd, 1832, in Lexington, and came to Monroe in 1865. He married in 1866 Louisa, daughter of Christopher Eipper, of Luzerne county.

FRANK NEWBERRY was born April 9th, 1848, in Monroe. He was in the 104th New York infantry; was in several engagements and was present at the surrender of Lee. He was married in 1869 to Eliza Bennett, daughter of Josiah Bennett, of Monroe. They have three children, Alberta, born November 22nd, 1870; Josephine, January 15th, 1871, and Kate, October 5th, 1876. Mr. Newberry built in 1878 a steam saw-mill on what is known as the McKnight tract.

NORTON L. NEWBERRY was born in 1839, in Monroe. He entered the Union army September 10th, 1861, in the 53d Pennsylvania volunteers; accompanied that regiment fourteen months and re-enlisted in Company A 4th U. S. light artillery; was present at thirteen engagements; lost an arm at Gettysburg, and was discharged May 2nd, 1864. He married in 1861 Arminda H. Montross, daughter of Elijah Montross, sen.

MARK D. NEWMAN was born in 1830, in Dallas, and came to Monroe about 1853. He has been poor master, school director and inspector of elections, is the proprietor of the mail stage between Monroe and Kingston and was postmaster in 1877 and 1878. He was married in 1857 to Carrie F. Earl, of Tunkhannock. They have three children living: Henry W., born May 27th, 1859; Miles R., April 24th, 1854, and Hiram H., May 2nd, 1871.

ORRELL CURTIS ORCUT was born in 1800, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

R. C. PARK was born in Columbia county, Pa.; is a miller by occupation; served in the 75th Pennsylvania regiment during the late war. He has eight children.

CHARLES H. PHILLIPS was born in Benton, Lackawanna county, Pa., in 1849; he married Harriet Wilson, in 1877, and has one boy. He is a Good Templar.

ROBERT CHAPIN PHILLIPS, a native of Kingston township, came to North Moreland in 1860; was drafted and served with the 171st regiment. He was married to Amelia J. Turner in 1870. He has been town auditor.

HARVEY PHENIX was born January 15th, 1820, at Monroe. He has been supervisor, school director, etc. He was married in 1842 to Rebecca Fleming, of Hope, N. J. They had six children, viz.: Sarah, born February 16th, 1844; Helen, August 3d, 1846; Charles E., 185-; Zelpha Anne, March 30th, 1855; Mary E., December 16th, 1857; Samuel B., December 11th, 1859, died September 26th, 1865.

GEORGE PICKETT was born in 1861, at Wilkes-Barre. He resided with his parents some years at Monroe, and now lives at Plymouth, Luzerne county.

THOMAS PINDER, a native of England, came to this country with his wife, Elizabeth, in 1849. He has been supervisor and is an Odd Fellow and Granger.

CHAUNCEY J. REED was born in New York, in 1837. He served as second lieutenant and was promoted to the first lieutenantcy of Company B 89th N. Y. volunteers.

He is an Odd Fellow and a Knight of Pythias. He was married in 1872 to Elizabeth DeWitt.

JOHN W. ROBERTS was born in 1818, and married in 1843 Lydia Smith, who was born on the farm where they now live. They have four children living. Mr. Roberts is a member of the Methodist church and has held several township offices.

HENRY W. ROGERS was born in 1833, married Clarinda Holcomb in 1866, and has three children. He is treasurer of the school board, has been roadmaster and is an Odd Fellow.

N. P. ROSENGRANT was born in 1847, in Eaton, Pa. He married Emma Minor, daughter of Richard Minor, of Eaton, by whom he has five children.

WILLIAM SICKLER, township auditor and county commissioner, was born in 1841, in Exeter, Wyoming county. He married Mary Brunges in 1870, and has had a family of four children.

DAVID H. SILKWORTH was born October 3d, 1820, at Stafford, Conn. He received his education in early youth at the common school and at the Monson Academy, Mass. He studied medicine under Dr. A. W. Lewood, at Lee, Mass., and was admitted to practice in 1850. He has enjoyed an extensive practice in several States. In 1862 he opened an office in Monroe. He served with the 53d Pennsylvania volunteers, doing good service on the hospital staff, and resumed his profession in Monroe in 1865, where he has since followed it. He is the only physician here, and has the confidence of all. He was married March 29th, 1860, to Nancy J., daughter of Alfred Stanton, of Clinton, Wayne county. She was born June 17th, 1838.

GEORGE SMITH was born in 1844, and lived during his youth in Luzerne county, Pa. He is town clerk, having held that office for two terms. He has five children.

S. G. SMITH, a native of Orange county, N. Y., came to North Moreland with his father in 1834, and married Caroline Phillips in 1853. He is a farmer and cattle-breeder.

BENJAMIN M. STONE was born in 1835, at Abington, Lackawanna county. He was married in 1859 to Olive E. Newton, of Dimmick township. There were nine children by this marriage; three are living, viz.: Edwin M., born in 1862; Burton B., 1866; and Halton R., 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Stone are members of the M. E. church.

WILLIAM THOMSON, M. D., was born at Nanticoke, Luzerne county, Pa., June 7th, 1823; attended district school till fifteen years old; passed the years 1838-39 at Wilkes-Barre Academy; read medicine (1843-45) with Dr. A. P. Gardner, of Carbondale; graduated at Castleton Medical College, Vt., in the fall of 1845; practiced at Nanticoke till 1852, at Orange, Luzerne county, 1852-57, and at Centre Moreland, Wyoming county, since that time except while an army surgeon during a part of the time, 1862-65. March 10th, 1852, he married Mary A. Urquhart, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. They have two sons, Frank H. H. and B. S., and one daughter, Ruth S.

J. H. VANTUYL, a native of Eaton township, was born in 1823, married Lydia Montanye in 1857, and has a family of seven children. He is a member of the Methodist church and has held many township offices.

GEORGE B. WATERS came from Plymouth, Luzerne county, to North Moreland in 1849, and married Rhoda J. Dailey in 1860. He has held several township offices and is an Odd Fellow.

H. C. WEBB was born in Eaton, in May, 1836. He married Caroline Daily, and has a family of four children. He has been a steward of the M. E. church ten years.

LEVI WINTER, a former resident of Orange county, N. Y., settled in North Moreland in 1859. He has been justice of the peace five years, and has held other offices. He has been twice married.

was born in Connecticut, in 1782, married Mary Chandler and had eleven children. He died at the age of 73.

Matthew Phœnix arrived in 1815. He first bought out Peter Farver and afterward became the owner of 409 acres. His part of the township was a wilderness. There were no roads but bridle paths. In a few years Mr. Phœnix made for himself a well cultivated farm, on which his son Hervey Phœnix now lives. Another son, the Hon. James Phœnix is one of the associate judges for Wyoming county. Matthew Phœnix was born at Kingston, Delaware county, in 1769, and married Mary May, by whom he had nine children. He lived to the remarkable age of 107 years. His remains are buried in the cemetery nearly opposite the old homestead.

Philemon Clarke in 1816 settled on Bowman's creek, purchasing a tract from Robert Finney, and 200 acres from Jesse Good on Leonard's creek. The next arrivals were Mr. Parrish, in 1822, and Orrell Curtis Orcutt, in 1824. The latter was born at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He made large purchases of land and lived to see the forest give way to the productive farm. December 12th, 1827, he married Nancy Clarke, of Plainsville; she was born in 1806 and died in 1878. Peter Montross arrived the same year with Mr. Orcutt, and bought 100 acres of the Swetland and Benjamin Newberry tracts. He and his wife taught the first Sabbath-school. As a local preacher of the Protestant Methodist church he has preached almost gratuitously over forty years hereabouts. He was married first to Levina Newberry (who died in 1827), and subsequently to Olive Jackson, who died in 1873. His son Philemon Clarke was killed at the battle of Cold Harbor.

Nathan Parrish, born in 1796, came to Monroe about 1828 and settled half a mile east of the village on land purchased from Josiah Newberry. He was one of the first two justices elected.

William D. Frear, born in 1827 at Eaton, was the son of Abraham Frear, who for many years was a Methodist local preacher. He came to Monroe village in 1840. He has been school director ten years, assessor seven years, and town clerk and auditor several terms, and is now poormaster.

Michael Hafner, born in 1808, also came in 1840. He settled near the site of Stone's mill. He died in 1880. Among later settlers were Thomas Baringer, Rufus Frear, S. B. Cook and Edward Dimmick. The gentleman last named has from a wilderness made a well improved farm.

The flood of 1850 in Bowman's creek carried away houses, barns, mills, etc. During a heavy snow storm in 1836 a hunter named Jones was overtaken by the storm, and nothing was seen of him till his body was discovered after the disappearance of the snow. Mr. Newman's grandfather left his home one morning to seek for work and never returned. No traces of him were ever found. Stories are related of early hunters having eight or ten bears, two or more panthers, and as many as twenty deer lying before the house at one time; and one man has been known to take out of the creek in a short time sixty pounds of trout.

The population of the township has steadily increased. In 1824 there were only thirteen families, three framed and ten log houses, four framed and three log barns, and 67 inhabitants. In 1870 the population was 964, and in 1880 1,171.

Within the last five years the attention of the inhabitants have been turned more to agricultural pursuits. The larger portion of the land has been in the hands of lumber speculators, who kept the price of land too high for farmers.

ROADS AND MAILS.

The first practicable road was the Fell road; the next was the State road from Wilkes-Barre. Then followed others in quick succession.

The first post-office was on Bowman's creek and took its name from that stream. John Wright was the first postmaster. The office has been moved several times and is now in the village. For some years there was only a tri-weekly delivery of mails, but there is now a daily route from Kingston; the office is known as Beaumont. H. Carpenter, M. W. Newberry, S. W. McConnell, A. D. Clarke, James E. Smith and M. D. Newman followed Mr. Wright in succession as postmasters. D. H. Silkworth has been the incumbent since 1878.

MILLS, STORES, ETC.

The first-saw mill was put up by Zion Newberry on the site of the one now owned by Oliver Wilson. A run of stones was put into this mill to grind corn, etc.

The saw-mill at Evans Falls is now one of the most extensive. This part of the township takes its name from Henry Evans, who bought first 1,300 acres of land comprising part of the Wilson, Daniel Jackson, Matthew Bridge and Hoyt tracts, and an old saw-mill and one house. He built a new mill on the site of the old one. This was burned in December, 1877, and the following May he had the present one in working order. It has machinery for making lath, shingles, etc. Over 2,000 acres have been added and from 20 to 50 men and boys are employed. Mr. Evans peels from 1,000 to 1,500 tons of bark per year.

Stone's steam saw-mill ranks next in capacity. It was built in 1872, by Benjamin M. Stone; was burned down in 1876 and rebuilt in 1877. Mr. Stone is a general lumber merchant; the business is steadily increasing. The amount of lumber turned out by him in 1880 is estimated at 2,000,000 feet.

The old saw-mill near Elijah D. Lyon's residence was built by a Mr. Hadley. Hon. James Phœnix had it pulled down and a new one erected with facilities for doing a large business.

The water power mill owned and carried on by Mr. Jones was built by him in 1867. The mill property owned by Levi Moshier was bought by him in 1865. It commands a splendid water power, and is doing an extensive business. Close by is the one owned by Byron Dimmick, which was built about 1867 by Stephen Parks. Since coming into the hands of Mr. Dimmick it has been repaired and altered several times. There are also the Frear mill, Dymond mill, Thomas May mill and several others.

The first grist-mill was erected by Josiah Newberry, on the site of the one now owned and operated by William H. Jackson. Mr. Jackson built his mill in 1866. It has two runs of stones, and is capable of performing all the work that can be brought to it.

The first mill owned and run by P. H. Colvin was built by him in 1878. It has two runs of stones and a good water power, and can do all kinds of mill work.

The first store was kept by Daniel Poole. There are now the general stores of John Wall and S. W. McConnell, and the drug store of H. Silkworth, M. D. The post-office is kept at the same place.

The first tavern was built and kept as such by Reuben Parks, on the site of the hotel now kept and owned by J. Scovell.

EDUCATIONAL HISTORY.

The first school-house was a log building on Bowman's creek. The first frame school-house was built close by where the union church now stands. There are now seven school districts, with a fair average attendance, and all the buildings have been repaired or rebuilt within a few years.

September 16th, 1872, a school was opened in the largest rooms of the Presbyterian parsonage; it has been kept up under the name of Monroe Academy. It was designed to teach the higher branches and the classics, and also as a normal school. Not less than fifty successful teachers studied here. During the second year Odd Fellows' Hall was occupied. In the summer of 1874 the building known as the Monroe Academy, but chartered as the Bowman's Creek Presbyterian Church, was erected. The first principal was the Rev. C. K. Canfield. Rev. S. McElroy now fills that position. The total cost of the building was $4,625, chiefly contributed by the citizens of Monroe.

CHURCH HISTORY.

Before there was any organized society local preachers supplied the wants of the people here. Among the first was Oliver Lewis. The first Methodist preacher was Rev. Silsberry Wild; the first Presbyterian minister Rev. Thomas Rhodes; the first Baptist Rev. William Frear. The first religious meeting and Sunday-school was held in the log school-house at Bowman's Creek.

The Methodist society was the first organized. The Baptists next organized, with Rev. William Frear as their preacher. Their meetings were held at the log school house. The Protestant Methodists were the next society to organize, with the Rev. J. K. Helmore as their principal preacher. Rev. Mr. Brown was, however, the first preacher of that denomination and Peter Montross one of the first.

In 1865 the four societies agreed to build a union church. There were five trustees appointed—one Methodist Episcopal, one Baptist, one Presbyterian, one Protestant Methodist and one by the people. They were Sidney C. Clarke, George D. Clarke, Samuel B. Cook, Peter Montross and Daniel Morgan. The building was dedicated in 1866. The ministers of the different denominations preach in turn except the Presbyterian pastor, whose people have now a church of their own.

There is a union Sabbath-school, with William Richards as superintendent. The attendance is good and increasing.

The Presbyterians in 1874 petitioned the Presbytery of Lackawanna to organize a Presbyterian church at Monroe with Rev. C. K. Canfield as pastor. The petition was signed by thirty persons, nearly all of whom united with the church. The presbytery met at Monroe on the 6th of May, 1874, and voted to organize the Bowman's Creek Presbyterian Church. The following members of the church at North Moreland were enrolled as members of the new organization: Amanda M. Canfield, Samuel B. and Phoebe Cooke, James L. Crawford, A. J. Coursen, Byron and Morell Dimmick, Edwin D., Henry J. and Martha E. Frear, Henry W. Gross, William J. and Ermilla Hemmelright, Mary E. Jackson, James E. Miners, Charles Victor Parrish and Annette Wilson. The following were admitted on profession of faith: Alpha W. Cooke, Mary D. and John F. Hilbert, Almira J. and John F. Parrish, Oliver Wilson, Chandler Newberry and William Patton. S. B. Cooke, Byron Dimmick and William Patton were elected ruling elders. Rev. C. K. Canfield was chosen pastor. Rev. Mr. Darroch succeeded him and was followed by the Rev. S. McElroy, who is still the pastor. The Sabbath-school has 110 scholars. D. H. Silkworth is the superintendent.

CEMETERIES.

The first burial was that of Lewis Warwick, who was buried in the woods above the residence of Mr. Newberry. The grave is still distinguishable.

The burial ground by the old Phoenix homestead was the first. It was owned by Mr. Clarke and was deeded in trust to Mr. Orcutt for the use of the township. The first burial here was that of Asahel Barnes. Here also lie the remains of Matthew Phoenix. Mrs. Josiah Newberry was buried in low ground, unsuitable though intended for a cemetery. The next day Abigail Carpenter offered Mr. Newberry his choice of ground on a hillside belonging to her. He chose a piece which was afterward deeded to the township.

NICHOLSON TOWNSHIP.

THE heavy pine forests and fertile valleys along the Tunkhannock were a popular field for Philadelphia real estate speculators at the close of the Revolution, and, by means of the location of soldiers' warrants in large tracts, Meredith, Clymer, Cadwallader, John Nicholson (after whom this township was named) and others secured the most valuable lands of northern Luzerne county.

The township originally covered a large part of the present townships of Benton, Clinton and Lemon. Eli-phalet S. and Ebenezer Stephens settled on the Tunkhannock in 1760. Closely following them were John Steele, Christopher Felton, of Philadelphia (who took up the farm now owned by George W. Walker), and the Stark family, whose early home was on the western boundary of the township. In West Nicholson Milo Oakly and the Squires family first settled, followed by Shaws and Thomas McCracken. The early settlers devoted their attention largely to lumbering; the pine being sawed at mills in the vicinity, rafted and run down the Tunkhannock into and down the Susquehanna until a market was found, an adventurous speculator occasionally finding his way to Baltimore in search of better prices than the $8 or $10 per thousand feet prevailing on the Susquehanna.

A man named Horton, from Philadelphia, about 1809, built a grist-mill where the Squires tannery now stands. Two large mills now convert the grain grown into readily salable flour and meal, and the Childs tannery furnishes a ready market for hemlock and oak bark.

The first saw-mill on the Tunkhannock was erected by the Stevenses in 1793. Soon after one was built on Fields brook by Horton. As in all lumbering countries, pay-day came only once or twice a year, and labor was paid for in kind, store trade or due bills payable after a general freshet.

In early years the land back from the creek flats was lightly valued until farmers coming from hill countries developed the fertile plateaux of West Nicholson. A number of families of that region joined a colony of Mormons from Susquehanna county, built an ark near Pierceville, floated down the Tunkhannock, and by way of the Susquehanna and Juniata rivers sought the promised land toward the setting sun. Among them were the families of Hiram Osterhout, Erastus Brown, Jacob Shibley, Abram Miller and a man named Parks; from this party only one girl returned and abandoned the creed.

The first merchant, a man named Robinson, traded at Roberts Corners in 1831. The next was Nathan Bacon, who also kept the first tavern in an old log house at Baconville, as early as 1814. Shortly after that he built a "timber house," and in 1837 the commodious frame house of his grandnephew, P. S. Bacon. Located as it was on the main turnpike, between Montrose and Providence, "Bacon's" was a popular stopping place.

The M. E. church at West Nicholson was dedicated in 1854. St. Patrick's R. C. church was built in 1863, Nicholson M. E. church in 1866, the First Presbyterian in 1869 and the Universalist in 1877.

POLITICAL HISTORY.

The township was formed from parts of Abington and Tunkhannock, and at first comprised about double the present territory. In 1843, soon after its organization, Clinton was taken off, and later Lemon and Benton. A small district was added from Tunkhannock in 1844. About 100 votes were cast in the township in 1879.

The early town meetings were held at Finn's, a pioneer inn, now in Benton, and since the change of boundary lines they have been held at Pierceville. The first justices of the peace, appointed by the governor, were Caleb Roberts and Nathan Bacon, succeeded in 1840 by William Driggs and Christopher Felton.

The population of the township in 1879 was 1,546; 1880, 988.

VILLAGES.

WEST NICHOLSON is a hamlet near the county line, seven miles from Nicholson borough. A hotel was kept here at one time, by Ziba Reynolds, and several stores. The place now contains one store and two wagon and blacksmith shops. The post-office was established in 1878. T. W. Riley is the postmaster. A Methodist church has been in existence since about 1856; the pastor is Rev. G. O. Beers.

At PIERCEVILLE are blacksmith and shoe shops and the Pierceville Hotel. In 1878 a mineral paint factory was erected here, but it continued business only two or three years. The place derives its name from Franklin Pierce, who was President when the post-office was established here. The office was removed from Oxbow, now in Lemon, which was the first post-office in the original township. The first postmaster was Ziba Reynolds, proprietor of the Pierceville House. A small foundry was built here in 1838 by John Buling, which was soon abandoned.

NICHOLSON BOROUGH.

THE earlier history of this borough is identical with that of Baconville, where the business of the place was transacted and which as late as 1869 was marked on the map as a distinct settlement, although now included in the village limits. At this place Nathan Bacon built the first hotel and the Nicholson grist-mill, and afterward engaged in trade, supplying the lumbermen. He was postmaster many years, the office being discontinued when that of Nicholson was established in 1855.

After Bacon a man named Russel kept the store till 1852, since which time no store has been kept in that part of the borough. The building of the railroad gave an impulse to the place. Dr. Samuel Estes, the pioneer physician here, built the Union Hotel. A man named Stephens opened a small grocery on the bank of Martin's creek, and Captain I. S. Little and Lemuel Harding opened the first stock of general merchandise in the building now owned by L. G. Stevens. The Pratt Brothers built a large tannery on the site of N. T. Childs's. Nathan P. Wilcox followed in the same firm. C. C.

Birge and R. D. Newton came from Chenango county, N. Y., and the Walkers, Hallsteds, Williamses, Sisks and Blakeslees from other points. Churches and schools, handsome business blocks and good hotels sprang up. Dr. Estes has the credit of building the first hotel as mentioned above, the next being a building erected for a restaurant and rebuilt by Michael Sisk, known as the Sisk House. This hotel stood opposite the railroad depot; it was burned in 1878 and has not been rebuilt. The next was put up by Cyrus Cooper, on Main street, in 1854, and was purchased in 1867 by John Niver, since which time it has been known as the Niver House and kept most of the time by Mr. Niver and his sons, the present proprietors. Another was built north of the depot and kept by a man named Crofoot. This building was burned in 1879. The first practicing physician was Dr. Samuel Estes. The profession is now represented by Drs. H. N. Kelley, E. S. Wheeler and Charles Newton. The first attorney was Thomas J. Chase, now of Wilkes-Barre. S. L. Tiffany is now practicing law. A weekly paper called the Examiner was published by him from 1871 until 1877, when the Nicholson Item was founded by E. L. Day; it was removed to Tunkhannock and its name was changed to the Tunkhannock Standard.

The population of the borough in 1880 was 586.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

About 1819 Ebon Slater built a saw-mill at the "rock bottom" on Martin's creek, which was replaced by a grist-mill built by C. L. Hallsted. This concern, passing into the hands of Hon. A. B. Walker, was improved and operated by Walker Brothers, now succeeded by N. L. Walker; it is known as the Rock Bottom Flouring Mills. The present proprietor has added machinery for making the patent new process flour, and fitted the mills for a general merchant and custom business. The Nicholson Mill on the Tunkhannock, a mile from the railroad depot, was built by Nathan Bacon and is now owned by J. J. Shook, who does a large and growing business, shipping large quantities of feed and meal.

The Childs Tannery was built in 1854, by Pratt & Brother. It added materially to the growth of the village, but was burned in 1867 and in 1868. The property was sold in 1869 to Childs & Bloomer, who rebuilt the tannery and operated it until 1878, when it was a third time burned. Nial T. Childs, of Ellenville, N. Y., bought the property, and in 1879 rebuilt on a larger scale than before. The capacity of the establishment is 30,000 sides of sole leather; the quality made is "Union crop." Employment is given to about 30 men, and several thousand cords of bark are used annually, furnishing a ready market for the vicinity.

A small manufactory of chairs and rakes was operated by a man named Stone for several years, but it proved unprofitable and was abandoned.

CORPORATE HISTORY.

By a charter granted August 23d, 1875, the borough of Nicholson was incorporated, and the following officers were then elected: Burgess, Wickliff C. Williams; clerk, Frank N. Boyle; treasurer, N. L. Walker; street commissioner, Lyman Bell; councilmen, A. B. Walker, P. Coddington, William Werkeizer, Solomon Taylor, George Rought, L. Stevens. At the next three annual elections G. S. Harding was elected burgess. In 1879 the officers elected were: Burgess, Wickliff C. Williams; clerk, Frank N. Boyle; treasurer, E. F. Johnson; street commissioner, John Sherman; councilmen, O. L. Hallsted, Solomon Taylor, G. S. Harding, C. C. Birge, E. S. Bacon and N. L. Walker.

NICHOLSON INDEPENDENT SCHOOL.

This institution was the outgrowth of a select school instituted by B. G. Stone in 1859 and taught by him for several years. An independent district was formed by order of the court in 1865 out of the old common school district No. 3. The school directors leased a building which had been erected by Mr. Stone, opposite the M. E. church on State street. In 1870 they bought a building being erected for a sash and blind factory by Bacon & Steinbeck, and, moving it back, converted it into a convenient and spacious school-house.

The first principal was Miss Mary Terry; the present one is Prof. E. S. P. Hine, a native of Gibson, Susquehanna county, Pa., and a teacher of wide experience and superior attainments. He is assisted by Miss Maggie Dugan in the grammar department, and Misses Hattie Weaver and Addie Knapp in the primary room; Misses Dugan and Weaver being residents of the borough, Miss Knapp from the Soldiers' Orphan School, Hartford, Pa. The first directors were I. S. Little, Lemuel Harding, William Driggs, O. L. Hallsted, George Pratt and Nathan P. Wilcox. The directors for 1879 were D. C. Graham (president), S. L. Tiffany (secretary), F. D. Pratt (treasurer), Solomon Taylor, Henry A. Smith and H. P. Wilkins.

The regular attendance is about one hundred and forty-five. The higher English branches are taught. The school is popular at home and abroad, and the people of Nicholson have reason to feel proud of it.

CHURCHES OF NICHOLSON.

Methodist Episcopal.—About 1830, in a little log school-house on the site of the present church, the first Methodist service in Nicholson was held. Here one of the early circuit riders preached once in four weeks. After a season, however, the appointment was moved to the "square-top school-house," a mile above the present church site, near the old Nicholson burying ground. Here preaching services were held many years under the special patronage of Jesse Stevens, who paid most of the preacher's salary. The "square-top" was at this time one of the appointments on the Brooklyn charge. The place of meeting was the school-house at the foot of Roberts hill, a mile below the present church site, for about two years. During this time services were also held on Thomas hill, about two miles southeast of Nicholson. This condition of things continued until 1866. Rev. D. Worrell then removed the Thomas hill appoint-

DR. J. M. CAREY,

whose portrait we present to our readers, was born in Orange county, N. Y., in 1834. When he was fourteen years of age his parents moved to North Moreland, Wyoming county, Pa. After farming a few years he attended the Wyoming Seminary, at Kingston, Luzerne county, for a time, after which he taught district school until he had accumulated a small sum of money, in the meantime having secured a knowledge of anatomy, etc., under a preceptor. He graduated in medicine at Cincinnati in 1856 and returned to North Moreland, where he practiced until 1862, when he entered the Union army as a private and in one year, for his gallantry and good conduct, was promoted captain of his company in the 161st Pennsylvania mounted volunteers—a thing remarkable in cavalry service. He was in all of the important battles of the army of the Potomac except Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor, being then in the hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, having been wounded in the Wilderness. He was actively engaged with his division at Appomattox, and was afterward appointed provost marshal of Campbell county, Virginia. At Lincoln's second inauguration, March 4th, 1865, his company presented him with a sabre valued at $150, bearing this inscription: "Presented to Captain J. M. Carey by his company as a token of their regard, March 4th, '65." After the war he engaged in mercantile business with a brother. This he followed for years, serving also as justice of the peace. Resuming his profession he removed to Meshoppen, where he has a large practice and a host of friends. He has been elected coroner twice, but the second time declined on account of being justice of the peace. He has four children, the oldest of whom is practicing medicine in the same county.

DANA SHAW, son of Daniel Shaw who was one of the early settlers of West Nicholson, married Eva Shaw, of Lemon township. He is one of a numerous family, most of whom reside within a few miles of the old homestead farm, of which Mr. Shaw has charge.

THOMAS J. SHERWOOD, proprietor of the Chappaqua planing mills and toy factory at Meshoppen, was born at Chappaqua, Westchester county, N. Y., March 16th, 1816, and removed to Auburn in 1833. In 1838 and 1839 he was foreman and inspector on the Croton water works, New York. He was married January 23d, 1840, to Eliza A. Guile, of Auburn. He worked principally as a millwright and carpenter until 1880, when he located at Meshoppen and soon after built the mill which he has since operated. His wife died August 3d, 1857, leaving three children. December 25th, 1858, he married Abbie Van Nosedell, of Meshoppen. He is now serving his second term as justice of the peace of Meshoppen.

JOHN J. SHOOK, the proprietor of the Nicholson flouring mill, was born in Plainfield, Northampton county, and married Ruth Corry, of Abington, Lackawanna county, Pa.

WILLIAM M. SINE was born in Warren county, N. J., October 17th, 1820. In the spring of 1822 his parents removed to Kingston, Luzerne county, Pa.; thence to Scranton in 1838. His father was and the son has always been a miller. He married Phebe, daughter of Stephen Lott, an early settler in Meshoppen. In 1848 he came to Meshoppen borough, and in 1874 became a partner in the large flouring mill of Sterling & Sine, in which he has been employed over twenty-one years.

A. A. SMITH, a native of Massachusetts, came to Nicholson when a child. He married Emily Gardiner, of Springville, Susquehanna county, Pa. They have had four children: Leslie Eugene, born April 25th, 1866; Byron J., October 29th, 1868; Myrtie A., September 2nd, 1872, and Clara B., March 3d, 1874 (died June 15th, 1878). Mr. Smith served in Company K 143d Pa. volunteers, during the civil war.

H. A. SMITH, a native of Benton township, is one of the best known of Nicholson's earlier business men, and is now a special agent for the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, with a large and important field in which to operate.

LIZZIE V. SMITH, born in Tunkhannock, deserves special mention as a direct descendant of one of the sufferers by the Wyoming massacre. Her grandfather, Jonathan Smith, was captured by the Indians when a lad of nine years, claimed by a squaw as her son, and lived with them in the Niagara country for four years, when he was rescued by a British officer by means of a stratagem, and after remaining with his rescuer for two years found his way back to Hanover, Pa., to which place his parents had returned after the massacre. There he afterward led a quiet, uneventful life, removing in his old age to the Narrows, near Tunkhannock.

NATHAN STARK was born in 1832, and married in 1855 to Oliva, daughter of Erastus Sheffield, of Chenango county, N. Y. They had five children, two of whom only are living.

WESLEY STARK, jury commissioner, was born in Nicholson. He served in Company B 132nd Pa, volunteer infantry at Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. He was married August 27th, 1863, to Sarah J. Brown, of Lemon township, and has three daughters. He was appointed jury commissioner to fill a vacancy, and at the close of the term was elected to the same position.

HON. A. W. STEPHENS, born in Nicholson, July 17th, 1844, is a director and vice-president of the agricultural society. He married a daughter of Orville Tiffany. In 1878 he was elected representative to the Legislature for two years. In the sessions of 1878 and 1879 he opposed the riot bill and voted for the expulsion of members charged with bribery, regardless of party ties.

EDWIN STEPHENS, formerly sheriff of Wyoming county, is now living in hale old age on his pleasant farm, renewing occasionally his acquaintance with the chase by a week of camping on Dutch Mountain in the deer season.

JOSEPH STEPHENS, for many years the postmaster at Pierceville, is a lineal descendant of Eliphalet S. Stephens, the first settler in Nicholson. Mr. Stephens was for many years a lumberman, and is now a substantial farmer. His son, F. P. Stephens, who resides with him, is a justice of the peace for Nicholson and the township clerk.

CALVIN STERLING, second son of John Sterling, was born in Meshoppen township, February 12th, 1819. He followed farming until after his marriage, May 4th, 1844, to Hannah M. Bond, a native of Monroe county, Pa. He was then a miller many years. In 1851 he removed to Meshoppen borough, and about 1864 located on his present farm.

DANIEL T. STERLING, son of Daniel Sterling, was born at Black Walnut, February 20th, 1815. His father was an extensive lumber manufacturer and dealer, and early erected mills at Meshoppen village, which were principally under the management of young Daniel T. He was married to Susan A. Loomis, September 23d, 1841, and has since lived at Meshoppen borough. He has been the leading merchant of the town since 1843, and has been successfully engaged in lumbering, farming, flouring and grain dealing.

JOHN G. STERLING, son of John Sterling, was born in Meshoppen township, January 28th, 1823, and was married November 5th, 1846, to Betsey Osborn, of Auburn, soon after which he located on a farm in Auburn. In 1868 he bought and occupied the Nicholas Overfield farm. In 1874 he sold this and removed to Meshoppen borough, where he is engaged in farming, stock dealing and the undertaker's business.

J. MONROE STILWELL was born in Susquehanna county, Pa., March 25th, 1849, and came to Meshoppen in 1870. He is a carpenter and joiner, and has worked at his trade in many parts of the country.

STEPHEN A. STURDEVANT, son of Peter B., was born at Skinner's Eddy, April 22nd, 1839, and was married, May 24th, 1864, to Anna C. Durkee, of Binghamton, N. Y. He was a farmer until 1859; then was tinsmithing at Binghamton until 1866, then at Meshoppen in the hardware trade for twelve years, and since in the insurance business. He enlisted April 27th, 1861, in Company D 27th N. Y. infantry, served about thirteen months and was discharged for disability.

M. R. THURBER was born in Providence, R. I., but has resided in Wyoming county for twenty-five years. He is the inventor of a side bar spring for carriages and a self-adjusting blinder head-stall. He married a daughter of Leonard Rought, of Nicholson.

S. LEROY TIFFANY was born in Susquehanna county, Pa., studied law with R. R. Little, and was admitted to practice June 18th, 1871. He is the only lawyer in Nicholson, and has a large and growing practice. He was one of the early settlers in the borough.

ELIAS TREIBLE came to Wyoming county from Monroe county, Pa., in 1865. He has lived in Washington since then, and is a farmer.

C. F. VOSBURG was born in Washington, in 1853. He is a farmer. His wife's maiden name was Hanning, and her parents were old residents of the town. His parents are living.

G. RILEY VOSBURG, farmer, was born near Vosburg Station, in Washington, in 1856. His parents were among the early settlers of that portion of the town.

JAMES L. VOSE was born in Mehoopany, in 1845, and came to Washington in 1867. He is a partner in the mill at Keyserville conducted by Vose Brothers. He served in the late war in Company H of the 198th Pa. volunteers.

L. M. VOSE was born in Mehoopany, in 1841, and came to Washington in 1866. He is a member of the firm of Vose Brothers, proprietors of the grist-mill at Keyserville. This mill, which contains three runs of stones, and grinds on an average about 33,000 bushels of grain annually, has been under their management ten years. Mr. Vose served in the late war in the 143d Pa. volunteers.

WALLACE W. WARNER, a native of Mount Pleasant, Pa., came to Nicholson in 1871, and engaged in carriage making. Mrs. Warner was Frances Fisk, of Lenox, Susquehanna county. They were married in 1870 and have three children.

GEORGE L. WEAVER, son of John J. Weaver, born in Clifford, Pa., is the agent of the Travelers' Insurance Company. He was formerly engaged in mercantile business at this place. Mrs. Weaver was Martha Shook, of Newton, Pa.

CHESTER H. WELLS was born in Greenfield, Luzerne county, September 12th, 1853. Since December, 1872, he has been in the jewelry business at Meshoppen. He is also the inventor and patentee of an adjustable attachment for finger rings, designed to hold the ring in any desired position on the finger. Mr. Wells was married October 11th, 1876, to Lizzie Dailey, of Stroudsburg, Pa.

DR. ELMER H. WELLS, son of Dr. Nathan Wells, was born in Braintrim township, April 19th, 1842. He was educated at the Susquehanna collegiate institute, Towanda, and at Michigan University, graduating from the literary department of the latter, with the class of 1862. He then spent one year in the army as quartermaster sergeant in the 132nd Pennsylvania volunteer infantry. In 1864 he commenced the study of medicine, and graduated at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, of New York, in 1867. After a short residence in Tunkhannock he located at Meshoppen, where he has since been associated with his father in the drug business and practice of medicine.

DR. NATHAN WELLS was born in Orange county, N. Y., October 15th, 1815. He graduated from the Geneva (N. Y.) Medical College in 1838, and practiced with Dr. G. F. Horton, of Terrytown, Bradford county, Pa., until his marriage to Mary, daughter of Major John Horton, in June, 1841. After a year's residence at Black Walnut, in Braintrim, he located at Meshoppen, where he has since been in practice, and in the drug trade since 1870. He was associate judge of Wyoming county from 1861 to 1866.

WILLIAM WERKEIZER, came to Nicholson from Monroe county in 1867. He married a Miss Slick, of Monroe county. He is a director of the Nicholson Savings Fund, Building and Loan Association and a prominent Mason and Odd Fellow.

ENO S. WHEELER, M. D., is a son of Dr. S. M. Wheeler, of Waverly, Pa., with whom he studied, and is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College. He has practiced in Peckville and Waverly, and in Nicholson since 1874. He married a Miss Chamberlin in 1873. He was elected coroner of Wyoming county in 1875.

NATHAN P. WILCOX was born in Nunda, Livingston county, N. Y. He came to Nicholson in 1863 and is senior partner in the hardware firm of Wilcox & Pratt. He is prominently identified with public enterprises of the day. He was one of the founders and is an elder of the Presbyterian church. He has served the town as justice of the peace, and is one of the directors of the Independent school.

THEODORE WILLIAMS came to Washington in 1851, from Monroe county, Pa., where he was born in 1824. He is engaged in lumbering and farming. He was elected to the office of county commissioner in 1876, and served until 1879. He has also held several township offices.

GIDEON WINANS, a native and lifelong resident of Meshoppen, was born December 21st, 1841. He enlisted March 7th, 1864, in battery E 2nd Pa. heavy artillery, and was discharged in January, 1866. He was married January 1st, 1868, to Clara J., daughter of John G. Sterling, of Meshoppen, and moved to that place in the fall of 1869. He was a wheelwright principally until the spring of 1876, and has since been in the hardware business. He has been justice of the peace since the spring of 1873.

JOHN W. WRIGLEY, a native of Luzerne county, married, in 1872, Mary E., daughter of William Shaw, and has one son. He was engaged in mercantile business from 1872 to 1879, and has been school director and collector.

The following citizens of Lemon, Meshoppen, Nicholson and Washington also contributed their support to this publication: G. O. Beers, Sidney Bailey, N. Beck, D. A. Bunnell, W. T. Childs, A. T. Cortright, H. M. Damon & Son, D. C. Graham, E. S. P. Hine, Hiram Jackson, W. S. Mace, W. W. Monier, F. N. Phillips, C. M. Pneuman, O. E. Reynolds, Jacob A. Thomas, Cyrus Thompson, N. L. Walker, V. W. Walker, W. M. Walker, Mrs. F. Worrell.

Thos Eynon

THOMAS EYNON.

Thomas Eynon, son of John and Margaret (Griffiths) Eynon, was born in Wales, July 18th, 1821. His father, a carpenter by trade and a native of Wales, was born in 1783, and died in Hyde Park, in 1864. His widow, born in 1793, in Wales, survives him and now resides in Hyde Park at the advanced age of 87 years. Mr. Eynon learned the trade of a ship carpenter at Swansea, England. At the age of twenty-one he was pressed into the English service, and he was seven years on board of a man-of-war. Thomas, the grandfather of our subject, also a carpenter, born in 1850, in Pembrokeshire, died in Swansea Vale, in 1830.

Thomas Eynon is the second in a family of ten children, three of whom are now living in Hyde Park, viz., Thomas, Catharine and John. He attended the common schools of his native town until he was eleven years of age, when his father's family emigrated from Wales. They landed in Quebec and after a short time settled in London, Canada, where they resided about two years, when they removed to Pottsville, Pa. There Thomas at the age of fourteen commenced as a laborer in the coal mines, and was engaged three years, until the family removed to Beaver Meadow, Carbon county, Pa. Here he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in and about the mines for eight years. On May 17th, 1841, he married Jane L., daughter of John and Jane Leyshon, of Glamorganshire, Wales. She was born July 24th, 1821. Their children were: Margaret, born July 7th, 1842, died September 6th, 1843; John, born January 5th, 1845, died April 5th, 1847; Albert B., born September 4th, 1847, now cashier in the Miners and Mechanics' Bank of Hyde Park; Sarah Ann, born September 1st, 1850, died April 16th, 1852; George F., born February 15th, 1855, now a merchant of Hyde Park; Thomas J., born March 12th, 1857, died June 9th, 1890; Jennie, born July 24th, 1859. After his marriage Mr. Eynon moved to Carbondale, where he resided for eight years, following his trade and laboring in the mines. He then removed to Hyde Park, and was one of the first to open up the mines of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company, and assisted in sinking the first slope of that company; also had charge of the sinking of three slopes in Hyde Park and Bellevue. Subsequently he had charge of the sinking of the Hampton shaft and opening the works, at which place he was engaged for three years. He then embarked in the mercantile business in Hyde Park, which was continued eight years, when he removed to Summit Hill, Carbon county, and was for three years engaged as assistant foreman of all the mines of the Lehigh Navigation and Coal Company. He then removed to Irondale, Jefferson county, Ohio, and took charge of the coal mines there; also of the building of the smelting furnace at that place. The following year he went to Alliance, Ohio, and again for three years was in trade. Two years of this time he was also director of the Alliance rolling mill, when he became the general superintendent of the Steubendale Iron and Bolt Company, at the latter place. This position he filled for two years, when he returned to Hyde Park and again resumed the mercantile business. He continued it successfully until 1880, when he became inside foreman of the Diamond mines.

Mr. Eynon has been a consistent member of the Congregational church for the past forty years, and several years deacon. His wife has been a member of the same church for several years.

ment to Nicholson and organized a class with the following members: J. C. Rhodes and wife, E. Wright and wife, Griffin Stevens and wife, Jesse Stevens and wife, Mrs. George Candee, Mrs. Ebenezer Stevens and William N. Raymond (leader). The services were at this time held every other Sunday at 3 o'clock in the old academy, nearly opposite the present church building. August 23d, 1866, while the church was in process of erection, the pastor died. A local preacher named Rogers supplied the pulpit for a time, but before many weeks had passed Rev. J. V. Newel was appointed. In December, 1866, the church, a substantial wooden structure forty-five by fifty-five feet, was completed and dedicated, Dr. Porter, of New York, preaching the dedicatory sermon. The estimated value of the edifice was $3,000. In 1868 it was thoroughly remodeled at an expense of about $1,000.

The following preachers have served the charge since the completion of the church: Rev. Messrs. Hinson and Jayne, one year; G. Greenfield, one; C. V. Arnold, one; J. B. Sumner, three; D. C. Barnes, one; J. L. Race, three; S. J. Austin, three.

The church membership is 80. The Sunday-school numbers about 100, and is in a flourishing condition. E. Thayer is superintendent. The following are the officers of the church: Class leader, D. G. Black; stewards, Mrs. Julia Bonno, E. E. Thayer, E. Johnson; trustees, E. Wright, George Candee, John Weaver.

St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church.—From about 1855 meetings were held at the residence of Patrick Dugan, in Nicholson village, at intervals for about eight years until 1863; when, Mr. Dugan having presented to Rev. J. V. O'Reilly, the pastor in charge, a lot for church purposes, a neat edifice was erected costing about $2,500, which was mostly contributed by the members of the church.

Father J. V. O'Reilly, the first pastor, continued in charge, assisted by Rev. Fathers J. Monahan, Henry O'Reilly, E. Prendergast and J. A. Mullen, the last of whom succeeded Father O'Reilly as pastor and remained in charge until 1875, when he was succeeded by Rev. John O'Laughran, who is the present pastor. There has usually been a Sunday-school.

First Presbyterian Church.—For some time after the building of the railroad there was very little religious strength manifested. Dr. C. C. Halsey organized the first Sabbath-school in Nicholson, which led to the organization of the Presbyterian society. He shortly removed to Montrose, but the school was taken up and carried on by F. D. Pratt and others.

In the fall of 1864 weekly prayer meetings were instituted. They were held in the public school-house and created an interest which resulted in a preliminary meeting being held April 1st, 1865, for the organization of a church society. The next day, Rev. Lyman Richardson, of Harford, Pa., officiating, the First Presbyterian Church was organized with the following membership: Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Wilcox, Mrs. Mary C. Raymon, Miss Hattie C. Raymon and Mrs. H. Steele. The following were elected and ordained ruling elders: R. D. Newton, N. P. Wilcox, F. D. Pratt, Asa Dewey, L. Harding, C. T. Mitchell and William M. Hobbs.

Rev. Robert Edgar, of Swartwood, N. J., began preaching as stated supply in 1865. Rev. William F. Arms, of Miamus, Conn., accepted a call to the pastorate December 9th, 1866.

At this period a convenient lot was bought on State street, and the present church was built in 1867-68. In the basement are lecture rooms, parlors, &c., for prayer meetings and entertainments. The audience room seats 350 or 400. It is finished with chestnut and very tastily furnished. The pulpit was presented by Rev. Mr. Arms, of Norwich, Conn. The entire cost of the church and lot was about $8,000.

The dedication took place in April, 1869, the sermon being preached by Rev. Oliver Crane, of Carbondale. In the evening of the same day Rev. W. F. Arms was installed pastor. He had greatly aided in providing means for the construction of the new edifice. The debt remaining has been provided for by a sinking fund established by the ladies of the church.

In 1873 the pastorate of Mr. Arms closed. The pulpit was then supplied by Rev. J. H. Clark two years, and Rev. E. B. Fisher one year. Rev. H. J. Crane accepted a call January 1st, 1878, and at the spring session of the Lackawanna Presbytery in 1879, which convened in this church, he was installed. The membership of the church has increased to 95. The Sabbath-school is flourishing and has a membership of 100.

Nicholson Universalist Church.—In 1875 Rev. Dr. Aaron A. Thayer, of Scranton, held services in the Independent school-house each alternate Sabbath. A parish organization was effected, and after raising about $3,500 a building committee was appointed and in the fall of 1876 an edifice was commenced. On the 6th of June, 1877, it was dedicated by the Universalist State Convention held at Nicholson for that purpose. Rev. Dr. J. E. Forester, of Newark, N. J., preached the dedication sermon. The present pastor is Rev. A. M. Clark. The trustees are S. Taylor, G. W. Walker, H. L. Stevens, George Rought, E. L. Bacon and S. L. Tiffany; president, Solomon Taylor; secretary, S. L. Tiffany.

An international Bible class has been conducted in connection with the church, and is now in charge of Mrs. S. L. Tiffany.

ASSOCIATIONS AND LODGES.

Nicholson Agricultural Society was organized in August, 1867, with the following management: Directors, Henry P. Hallsted, Solomon Taylor, John Sherman, George W. Walker, Ira Tripp, Holloway Stephens, Ezra Colven, William H. Driggs; president, A. C. Sisson; secretary, H. P. Hallsted; treasurer, G. W. Walker; marshal, H. D. Gibbs. The first fall meeting was held in September, followed by a horse fair in November of same year. The successive presiding officers of the society have been N. P. Wilcox, J. G. Capwell, A. C. Blakeslee, M. D., M. B. Hartley, H. P. Hallsted, T. J. Chase, A. B. Walker, C.

D. Wilson, R. R. Sisk and (for 1879) John Nivers. The directors in 1879 were John Nivers, E. L. Wheeler, M. D., George Kennedy, C. D. Wilson, O. Finn, R. R. Sisk, F. N. Boyle, George Nivers, Henry Smith.

Nicholson Lodge, No. 438, F. & A. M. was instituted April 7th, 1869. The charter members were 13. The first officers were: W. M., Alanson B. Walker; S. W., E. C. Bloomfield; J. W., P. Hallsted; S. C., Nathan P. Wilcox; Treas., George W. Walker. The officers for 1880 were: W. M., Nathan P. Wilcox; S. W., William Werk-eizer; J. W., Davis G. Black; treasurer, Oscar H. Williams; secretary, R. D. Newton; P. M., R. R. Sisk.

The Nicholson Savings Fund, Building and Loan Association was organized in August, 1872, with the following officers: A. B. Walker, president; N. P. Wilcox, secretary; I. S. Little, treasurer; managers, Solomon Taylor, Oscar H. Williams, David W. Titus, H. P. Hallsted, George W. Walker, J. P. Childs, G. M. Gamble, William H. Bloomer. The last was president in 1873-79. In August, 1879, Wickliff C. Williams was elected. During the first six months of the society's existence there were issued 913 shares to 187 members. The officers for 1879 were: President, Wickliff C. Williams; secretary, N. P. Wilcox; treasurer, Oscar H. Williams. The charter expires when the amount of assets to each share reaches $200.

Nicholson Lodge, 857, I. O. of O. F. was instituted October 22nd, 1873, with nineteen charter members. The first officers were: A. B. Walker, N. G.; N. L. Walker, V. G.; H. A. Smith, secretary; S. H. R. Grow, assistant secretary; John Niver, treasurer; R. S., C. W. Conrad; L. S., J. B. Childs; Con., D. W. Titus; R. S. S., C. B. Williams; L. S. S., H. B. Wilkens; O. G., C. M. Mack; I. G., W. A. Kellogg; R. S. to V. G., H. P. Hallsted.

The officers for 1879 were: N. G., A. L. Titus; V. G., William Werk-eizer; secretary, E. F. Johnson; assistant secretary, C. R. Newton; treasurer, D. W. Titus; representative to grand lodge, D. W. Titus.

The total amount paid for relief of suffering brothers since the organization of the lodge is $235; for burying the dead, $100.

Nicholson Cemetery Association.—This organization was formed and incorporated in 1870. The ground chosen contains ten acres on the westerly slope of a hill near the village. The charter provides that all proceeds of the sales of lots shall be devoted to the improvement and maintenance of the grounds. The cemetery site was purchased of Hon. A. B. Walker, who donated a liberal share of its value. The permanent managers are C. C. Birge, Solomon Taylor, N. P. Wilcox, N. L. Walker.

NORTH BRANCH TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was taken from Forkston about 1850. It was probably named from the north branch of Mehoopany creek. The population was only 350 in 1870 and 400 in 1880.

Azariah Winslow, Vose and Lovelton were among the first settlers. Winslow settled near the site of Lovelton, probably about 1800. He was a blacksmith. Many of the early settlers came from Connecticut. The first road extended from Forkston up the north branch of Mehoopany creek.

The first mail route extended from Dushore to Scottsville, and was established about 1850. The mail was then received once a week. John Pfoutz was the first postmaster, and was followed successively by Chester Grist, Gilbert Adams, Patrick Kinsley and E. W. Spring. E. Miller is the present postmaster. The mail is now received daily.

A general store was first opened about 1850, by John Pfoutz. H. B. Miller is in trade at Lovelton. A licensed hotel was kept a short distance north of Lovelton in 1868 by S. Bigley. There has been none since. The first grist and saw-mill was built by Samuel J. Hulbirt at Hulbirtsville, where a grist-mill is now.

The Methodists and Baptists hold services in the school-houses. The first Sunday-school was organized in 1848, with Edward Miller as superintendent; it was a union school. A society of "Brethren" has recently sprung up.

The first school-house was built at Lovelton. The township has three school-houses and school districts.

Lovelton, the only village, contains the post-office, a store, blacksmith shop, shoe shop, grist-mill turning-mill, and about twenty dwellings.

The present justice of the peace is S. J. Hulbirt; supervisors, John Hope and R. Adams.

NORTH MORELAND TOWNSHIP.

NORTH MORELAND township formerly embraced Monroe and Eaton and part of Franklin. It has 892 inhabitants, chiefly engaged in lumbering and farming. The valuation of the township is $234,000, and it contains three post-offices. It is divided into five school districts, with prosperous schools and good school-houses. The average attendance is 200.

John Dymond made the first settlement at Keelersburg about 1800. In a short time, however, he removed to Dymond Hollow. Dr. Reuben Montrose settled in 1807 on Sickler hill, and some years later in the "Greene woods," on the farm where James Bersteder now resides. About this time the Fuller, Rogers, Strong and Whitlock families settled near Centre Moreland; Mr. Rogers on his present place, Mr. Strong further east, and Mr. Whitlock near the residence of Horton Wood; the house of Mr. Fuller was where Mr. E. Reeves's now is.

In 1809 Asa Keeler settled at Keelersburg, and from that time took an active and important part in the formation of the township. He was born in Ridgefield, Conn., in 1780, and learned the harness maker's trade. He came to this section in 1795, and worked at different places on the river. In 1807, at Great Bend, he married Besty Newman. He came down the river with all his effects in a canoe, and after two years settled at Keelersburg, where only two acres had been cleared.

Previous to 1817 all travel had been over the old military road constructed by General Sullivan during his expedition against the Indians, which crossed the farms of Martin Brunges and Asa Keeler, and came upon the bank of the river in Eaton. During this year the turnpike was constructed on the bank of the river, and the old road was no longer used. On the establishment of the turnpike Mr. Keeler began to keep a tavern, the first one kept in the township; also a store, which is now kept by his son. Whiskey was then one of the staple articles of trade, at the regulation price of two straight fence rails per glass. Asa Keeler was appointed postmaster at Keeler's ferry January 23d, 1812. The mail was carried on horseback, on the east side of the river, and the postmaster had to cross for it. This was the first post-office in the township, and the office was held by Mr. Keeler until his death, in 1867—an unbroken term of fifty-five years. His son Heister succeeded him and still holds the office.

The first school-house was at Centre Moreland corners, where the guide-board stands, and the first schoolmaster was Jeremiah Fuller. The building was used as a place of general assembly, including religious services and Sunday-schools.

Chester and Anson Brown erected a tavern and store combined at Centre Moreland in 1827; the building is still in good preservation, and is the only hotel in the township.

The first mortar for cracking corn stood on the farm of James Harrison, and the place was known as St. Domingo. Ambrose Fuller, son of Jehiel Fuller, built the first saw and grist-mill near where the mill of Milo Keeler now is.

Among the early inhabitants were John Brunges and his wife Rachel, who came to this place in 1812. Mrs. Brunges was a woman of indomitable will; having business in New York she walked there and back, leading one of her sons by the hand.

LODGES.

Centre Moreland Lodge, No. 838, I. O. of O. F. was chartered May 12th, 1875, and instituted on the 22nd of July that year. The following officers were then installed: J. M. Carey, N. G.; L. W. Avery, V. G.; John W. Wilson, Sec.; J. H. Snyder, Treas. The present board consists of Horton Wood, N. G.; A. J. Bell, V. G., and Moody Whitwell, Sec.

Lodge No. 338 P. of H. was instituted in September, 1875, with 60 members, C. J. Reed being the first presiding officer. Regular meetings have been discontinued.

CHURCHES.

Methodist Episcopal.—The M. E. church of Centre Moreland grew from a class organized before 1820 and including members of the Brown, Pace, Hallsted, Vincent, Snyder and Weld families. The class met at the houses of different members, and preaching generally occurred during the week, the first Sabbath preaching being at the house of Mr. Pace in 1819. By contributions of labor and time as well as money the first church was built. It was dedicated in 1829. It became too small and was removed, and in 1870 the present house of worship was erected, at a cost of $3,000. The society owns a parsonage, which was purchased about forty years ago.

A class has existed a number of years at Vernon as a branch of the Centre Moreland church. It was formed into a church and built a house of worship in 1873, and is in a flourishing condition.

Baptist.—The Baptist church of Centre Moreland was set off from the church of Exeter and North Moreland in 1849. For some years meetings were held at the houses of the members. The present commodious church was dedicated in 1857. The organization is now prosperous.

A Baptist church was dedicated at Vernon December 18th, 1873. The members of this society were formerly with the church at Centre Moreland, but, residing at a distance, erected this building as a matter of convenience. They are presided over by the minister at Centre Moreland.

The Presbyterian church was organized Sunday, December 9th, 1821, with Daniel Locke and Leonard House as elder and deacon; Jehiel Fuller, Ebenezer Brown and Isaac Harris as elders, and a membership of fifteen. About this time was formed the first Sunday-school in the township, and the meetings were held at the school-house in Centre Moreland. The present church building was erected in 1820. The pastors have been Rev. Messrs. Rhodes, Todd, Oliver, Evans, Snowden, Van Allen and others. Regular services are not now held.

OVERFIELD TOWNSHIP.

LN 1795 Abel Patrick located a little south of Lake Winola. Paul Huber owned a clearing a mile east of the lake. In 1880 Azor Philo came and settled at the east end of the lake. Thomas Overton and the family of John Wilson settled nearly a mile south of it, and Edward Schofield a mile west. In 1803 Zuriel Sherwood located on the north side of the lake, and in 1804 John C. Williams at the southeast corner. In 1803 William Rogers built a saw-mill for Thomas Overton at the outlet of the lake. Caleb Avery located on the property now owned by Charles Frear. The farm where John C. Williams located in 1804 is now owned by Martin Sickles. Here also lived Elisha Armstrong.

The old "block" school-house was built many years ago, of logs, by a few of the settlers, the Williamses, Patricks, Posts, Agers and others. About ten years ago it gave place to a larger and more convenient framed structure, where one of the district schools is still kept; the old name of the school-house is still retained.

The township had 433 inhabitants in 1870, and lost 40 in the ensuing decade.

OVERFIELD M. E. CHURCH.

This church is in the Newton circuit, Wyoming district. The society was first organized April 2nd, 1854, by D. A. Shepard, presiding elder, and C. S. Rice, preacher in charge, with Daniel Ross as class-leader, and David Osterhout assistant, and the following members: Daniel Ross, David and Elizabeth Osterhout, Samuel and Elizabeth Tranger, Sylvester Gregory, Joseph G. and Eleanor E. Osborne, Abraham and Sarah Evans and James and Mary Stevens. Meetings were then held in an old school-house near where the present meeting house stands. The charter was granted on the 20th of August, 1870, to the "First M. E. Church of Crooked Lake" (now Lake Winola). Samuel Shook, Thomas Hough, Charles Frear, James Stevens and Lyman Swartz were the trustees. They obtained from James Stevens one third of an acre of land, on which a church edifice was built at a cost of $2,478. It was dedicated by Rev. Dr. R. Nelson on the 24th of September, 1871, during the pastorate of Rev. R. S. Rose. The membership June 29th, 1880, was 60.

The Sabbath-school was organized in the early days of the society. It has 80 scholars and teachers. C. E. Frear has been the superintendent a number of quarters.

The ministers here have been Revs. C. L. Rice, John La Bar, P. S. Holbrook, J. W. Munger, G. M. Peck, D. Personius, G. W. Leach, J. N. Pardee, Asa J. Van Cleft, E. Puffer, Isaac Austin, R. S. Rose, A. Brigham, A. J. Arnold and William Shelp.

TUNKHANNOCK TOWNSHIP.

LAND titles in Wyoming county, as in other parts of the State, were acquired by warrant from the general land office, payment of purchase money, survey by the county surveyor, return to the land office and a patent. The above constituted a perfect title from the State.

The early settlers of Wyoming county mostly claimed titles to their land under the Connecticut claimants. Under the Connecticut jurisdiction seventeen towns (those marked "original" on the map at the beginning of this volume) were organized, surveyed and established. Three of these towns were located within the bounds of Wyoming county; they were called Putnam, Braintrim and North Moreland. Putnam was where Tunkhannock now is, and was named after General Israel Putnam, of Connecticut, of Revolutionary fame. In 1786 the name was changed to Tunkhannock and the boundaries greatly enlarged. The other Yankee towns in this county retained their original names.

The following is a copy of the proceedings of a meeting held at the city of Norwich, Conn., by which the township of Putnam was authorized to be surveyed and organized:

"Agreeable to a vote of the Susquehanna proprietors, at their meeting held at Norwich the 1st day of April, 1772, improvising a committee to make out grant of township of five miles square to a number of proprietors, who shall appear by themselves or agent with proper credentials to make it appear they are proprietors and their taxes paid, as may be seen by said vote, and pursuant thereto; Isaac Tripp, Esq., appearing as an agent for the number of twenty persons, proprietors in said Susquehanna purchase and their taxes paid, and also exhibiting a survey of a township of land on the east branch of the Susquehanna at a place called Tunkhannock for a confirmation of the same to said proprietors; beginning at a marked tree on the east side of the said Susquehanna river, thence up the river two miles as the river runs, thence north 57° west four miles and three-quarters of a mile to a stake, thence north 20° east three miles to a marked tree, thence south 85° east eight miles to a tree marked, thence south 27° west four miles and three-quarters of a mile to the first mentioned bounds, containing 25 square miles exclusive of the river, surveyed at the request of Messrs. Job Randall, Esq., Dr. Ephraim Bowen and others, a list of whom is herewith delivered to the committee of settlers; and agreeably to the request of said agent for a confirmation of said township from us the subscribers, a committee appointed for that purpose, we do now accept and approve of said survey, and hereby grant the same to said proprietors as a part of their general right, throughout the Susquehanna purchase, so far as is consistent with rules of the Susquehanna company, and provided it does not interfere with any former grant heretofore laid out by the Susquehanna company; and said town is known by the name of Putnam.

"Westmoreland, October 24th, 1775."

"Zebulon Butler, } Committee appointed
"Obadiah Gore, Jr., } to order and direct
"Nathan Denison, } the company towns."

"Upon the application of Isaac Tripp, Esq., Elisha Wilcox, Job Tripp, Philip Buck and others to have a meeting of the proprietors of the township of Putnam, in order to chose a proprietors' clerk and to come into some regular method to survey the lots in said town, and to do any other business proper to be done at said meeting," the proprietors were summoned to meet at the house of Zebulon Marcy in said township on the 12th of September following. The call for a meeting was dated "Westmoreland, this 20th day of August, 1776," and signed by John Jenkins as justice of the peace. At this meeting it was voted that Elisha Wilcox be moderator for the day; that Zebulon Marcy be the proprietors' clerk; that a "committee be chosen and authorized to admit proprietors into and fill up the vacant lots in said township," and that Isaac Tripp, Elisha Wilcox and Zebulon Marcy be such committee; that "the agent or clerk, with five other proprietors of said town, shall be a sufficient warning" for future meetings; and that the meeting be adjourned until the 4th of November next, at the same place. The following is "a list of the proprietors of the township of Putnam, with the number of their lots, as they were recorded by order of Isaac Tripp, Esq., in 1777:

Jeremiah Angel, 1; Samuel Warner, 2; Jeremiah Whipple, 3; David Braton, 4; Charles Keen, 5; Elijah Shoemaker, 6; Job Raudall, 9; Charles Keen, 10; Simon Whipple, 11; Zebulon Marcy, 12; Jabesh Green, 13; Samuel Gorton, 15; Paul Green, 16; Jonathan Slocum, 17; Benjamin Bowen, 18; Joh Tripp ye 3d, 20; Increase Billings, 21; Zebulon Marcy, 22; Elisha Wilcox, 23; Benjamin Bowen, 24; Jabesh Whipple, 25; David Green, 26; Ephraim Bowen, 27; Isaac Tripp, jr., 28; James Arnold, 30; Jonathan Randall, 36; Philip Beckman, 39 and 40; Ephraim Bowen, 41; Isaac Tripp, 42; Jonathan Randall, 44; Simon Whipple, 47; Joseph Lippett, 50 and 51; John Gardner, 52; James Arnold, 53.

The stirring events of the Revolution intervened, and the new settlers either fled from this disputed ground or took sides in the contest. On the 27th of April, 1786, other allotments of land were made and the following were the persons who drew them:

Elijah Shoemaker, Joseph Soulo, Zehulon Marcy, Nathaniel Platt, David Braton, Ephraim Bowen, John P. Schott, Usei Bates, Williams, Jr., Caleb Bates, Clement West, Ezra Rulty, William Miller, Gideon Osterhout, Joseph Kilbourn, Jonathan Slocum, Job Tripp 3d, Increase Billings, Ephraim Sanford, Isaac Tripp, Isaac Tripp, Jr., Joseph Arthur, Archibald Bowen, Nathaniel Goodspeed, Nathan Barlow, John Platnor, John Carey, Elijah Oakley, Renben Taylor, Nathaniel Platt, Barnabas Carey, Frederick Budd, Amos Egglestone, Elisha Wilcox, Daniel Taylor.

As will be seen, of the twenty-eight old proprietors only the Billings, Slocum, Marcy, Braton, Tripp and Bowen families appear in the above mentioned allotments, and they were probably all of the first settlers who returned after the war; the other incorporators having come in from the Wyoming valley and other localities after the declaration of peace. The name chosen in 1788 for the enlarged township was evidently the Indian name. The territory of the new town comprised what is now included in the townships of Eaton, Clinton and part of Nicholson.

In March, 1787, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed "an act for ascertaining and confirming to certain persons called Connecticut claimants the land by them claimed within the county of Luzerne, and for other purposes." This act gave to actual settlers under the Connecticut title a pre-emption right to the lands claimed by them in the seventeen townships organized and established previous to the Trenton decree. Under this act commissioners were appointed by the State to hear and determine who were actual settlers, and to whom certificates should be given. Upon these certificates the titles to their lands were consummated. The early deeds conveying lands within these towns generally contained a descriptive recital as follows: "It being lot No. ——— in the certified township of ———, one of the seventeen townships of Luzerne county."

About 1771 Zebulon Marcy came from Pittston to this point, and Philip Buck and a Hollander named Adam Wortman also settled here, while John Secord built his cabin about two miles above what is now the village of Tunkhannock; and within a year or two families named Anguish, Ancre and Simmons settled along the west bank of the river. Wortman and others of the low Dutch settlers were Tories during the Revolution. The fate of Wortman was that of a traitor, and was decided before the settlers left the valley, as related on page 51.

Events crowded thickly upon each other in those days, and in the spring of 1778 the settlers were forced to leave their homes and retire to the forts in Wyoming valley; and at Forty Fort nine days before the massacre, on June 24th, Sarah, a daughter of Zebulon Marcy, was born. With the Marcys at that place were the families of Increase and Samuel Billings. After the massacre all who had families removed to safer localities. In the flight a little son of Zebulon Marcy died, and was buried on Pocono mountain. Of the families who went to Dutchess county, N. Y., the Marcys and Billingses returned after Sullivan's expedition, and after the close of the war were active in the reorganization of the township.

The stirring memories of the Revolution kept alive a military ardor that resulted in the formation of militia organizations. Just after the close of the war of 1812 we find Major Slocum, one of the earliest hotel keepers of Tunkhannock, clearing and "grubbing" a parade ground of forty acres for his regiment. General training was in vogue until 1838, when the last inspection was made.

The first merchants were George Miller and John McCord, who, from some point near Harrisburgh, in 1798 poled their first stock of goods up the river in canoes and afterward employed Durham boats. Miller & McCord established a shad fishery and opened a barter trade in these fish, which were plenty and cheap, a bushel of salt being considered a fair equivalent for one hundred of them. The firm took these fish to the Dutch settlements below, and later to Elmira, whence they were carted to Seneca lake, taken in boats to Geneva and distributed in central New York. McCord married Sarah Marcy, who was born in Forty Fort. He died at Tunkhannock about 1813, the owner of lot 13, on which a good part of the village now stands.

The Osterhout family seem to have settled here about 1775, as the name of Peter Osterhout appears on the roll of Captain Ransom's company as having enlisted January 1st, 1777. He was a brother of Jeremiah, who settled on the farm now owned by Jonathan Jenkins and Hon. John Jackson. The family were originally from Holland and retired from the valley during the war, returning with the Marcys. After Miller and McCord, Isaac Osterhout and Elijah Barnam kept a store at Tunkhannock until the death of Barnam. Osterhout married a daughter of Dr. William Hooker Smith. The next merchants were the Jewetts, John Buckingham, and Stephen, David, Thomas and Andrew King. From the close of the war of 1812 the Kings carried on an extensive shipment of lumber, shingles and staves by arks and rafts to Baltimore for about seven years, the firm dissolving in 1820, Thomas Butler King going to Georgia, where he afterward became a prominent member of Congress, and Andrew practicing law in Allentown.

Dr. Nathan Jackson, from Connecticut, in 1797 settled on the mountain between Tunkhannock and Osterhout's, married Unity Willard and practiced medicine many years. In 1820 he removed to Wilkes-Barre. His son Thomas became the leading physician of Binghamton, and the youngest son, Hon. John Jackson, who now lives on the old homestead where he was born, has been for many years one of Tunkhannock's leading citizens, and has been honored with the highest offices in the gift of the people of Wyoming county.

Among the more prominent of the old "proprietors" of Putnam was Increase Billings, who drew lot 23, on Tunkhannock creek, and settled there. His brother Samuel enlisted in Captain Ransom's company in 1777, for three years. His family were with the Marcys in Forty Fort. He finally settled them in the valley, came home on a sick furlough and died. One of his grandsons Ziba Billings, has been sheriff of the county, and is now one of the proprietors of the Packer House in Tunkhannock.

Solomon Avery came from Connecticut to the Wyoming valley at an early date. He was a son of Humphrey Avery, of Groton, Conn. His son Cyrus married Lydia, daughter of Zebulon Marcy. Solomon Avery was one of the first justices of the peace, and was also county auditor and treasurer of Luzerne county. His son Miles settled in Falls township, and his son Cyrus died in 1833, owner of the farm on which his father located.

The preachers of the last century were Newton Emmet and John Wilson, who settled in what is now Eaton. The first church edifice erected was that of the Presbyterian society.

One of the first school-houses in the township was built at La Grange about 1814. Hiram Lusk taught the school in 1815.

The development of a lumber country is necessarily slow, and so for the first half century of the township's existence a large portion of its inhabitants have been engaged in the manufacture, shipment and sale of its timber. Farming interests were neither early nor fully developed. The only events that have seemed to favor their development have been the building of the North Branch Canal and the Lehigh Valley and Montrose railroads.

The post-offices in the township of Tunkhannock are La Grange, Dixon and Bardwell. They are of recent origin. The first named is served from the Tunkhannock borough office; the others by the Nicholson route, three times a week.

The population of the township was 1,212 in 1870, and 1,354 in 1880.

TUNKHANNOCK BOROUGH.

TUNKHANNOCK borough was organized in 1841, and the first charter election was held in September of that year, when John Montanye was elected chief burgess. The erection of the county buildings and the opening of the canal and railroad each gave an impetus to manufactures and business in general.

The first school-house was built and used for the double purpose of church and school. It stood opposite Dr. Keating's in "Limerick." It was built in 1816, and used until the present brick building was erected. Sallie Kellogg was the first teacher. The number of schools reported by Superintendent Lee in 1877 was thirteen.

The first hotel was built by John McCord, in 1811. Before the fire of 1850 a framed hotel occupied the site of the Piatt House. Old Fort Sumter was a feature that, with the Hufford House, disappeared in the flames of 1870. A large framed hotel, built by Carter Hickock in 1814, was the predecessor of Wall's, which was built by Henry Stark in 1844, and the Keeler House was erected by Milo Keeler in 1874 on the site of the old Hufford. The Packer House was built by Ziba Billings in 1872, and is kept by Billings & Reynolds. The Warren Street Hotel was developed from a dwelling house by F. G. Osterhout; and the Wyoming Valley House, a small framed building, completes the list. One of the most popular early hotels was built by Major Slocum in 1814. It now stands on Tioga above Slocum street, and is a private dwelling, the property of William Benedict.

In 1850 a fire destroyed the block running through from Bridge to Warren on the north side of Tioga street, involving a heavy loss. The great flood of March, 1865, swept away the two middle spans of the Tunkhannock bridge and carried off one or two small dwellings. October 27th, 1870, a fire broke out in the stables of the Hufford House, which stood near where the Keeler House now stands, and destroyed twenty-two buildings, causing a loss of $100,000. The burned district is now covered by elegant and substantial brick blocks. Another good effect of the fire was a due appreciation of the value of a reliable water supply and fire department. An effort in favor of the latter resulted in the organization and equipment of the present efficient hose company. The population of the borough in 1870 was 953, and in 1880 1,117.

POST-OFFICES AND MAIL ROUTES.

The post-office here was established April 1st, 1801, and Isaac Slocum appointed postmaster. July 1st, 1811, Elijah Barnum was appointed; Charles Osterhout, November 12th, 1812; John Buckingham, August 27th, 1817; Merritt Slocum, April 2nd, 1824; B. Tuttle, January 20th, 1825; Henry Stark, September 23d, 1828; Samuel Stark 2nd, December 7th, 1836; William B. Moneypenny in January, 1841; Peter M. Osterhout in July of the same year; William Bolton, 1845; Nelson C. Martin and Charles E. Lathrop, 1849; John Brisbin and James Kelley, 1853; George A. Chase and Alvin Day, 1857; Thomas A. Miller, 1861; William Burgess, 1865; Frank L. Sittzer, 1866; William Burgess and Charles J. Wright, 1867; Thomas A. Miller, 1869; Hiram W. Bardwell, 1874.

The first regular mail route was by a lumber wagon driven from Kingston to Painted Post, making one trip a week. After the completion of the Montrose turnpike mails were carried weekly from Tunkhannock to Montrose, thence to Great Bend and from there to Binghamton, N. Y., the same carrier going through the entire distance, often on foot. To-day the office is in receipt of two New York and two Philadelphia mails daily, with stage mail routes embracing all points in the county. It is on Warren and Tioga streets.

THE PRESS.

The press of Tunkhannock has been practically that of the county; since, excepting two short-lived journals at Nicholson, the journalistic enterprise of Wyoming county has centered at this point.

JONATHAN JENKINS.

HOMESTEAD OF JABEZ JENKINS - RES. OF JONATHAN JENKINS, TUNKHANNOCK TP., WYOMING CO., PA.

OFFICE
No. 2 PUBLIC SQUARE

S. L. BROWN & CO'S, OIL WAREHOUSES, WILKES-BARRE, PA.

The Wyoming Patrol and Republican Standard was established by Bolton & Lee, and the first number was issued Thursday, May 19th, 1841. It was a six-column sheet and not remarkable for energy as a news-gatherer, but was delivered to subscribers in the outlying towns by means of a carrier on horseback.

About 1855 Dr. John V. Smith edited the North Branch Democrat. Alvin Day published the paper from 1857 until 1860, and then sold it to B. B. Emory, who changed its name to the Intelligencer and converted it politically, but discontinued it to take a government position at Washington.

The Tiffany Brothers started in 1860 the Wyoming Republican. This venture was finally abandoned.

The Intelligencer was succeeded by the Wyoming Democrat in 1861, Edward Kitchen publishing the first three numbers and then disposing of it to Harvey Sickler, who was succeeded in 1871 by Alvin & John Day, the first of whom is the present editor in chief. During Mr. Day's administration the paper has been enlarged from a seven to a nine column page and its circulation increased by the addition of 500 new subscribers. It is ably conducted and a credit to the party whose organ it is. In March, 1880, Charles F. Terry, a young lawyer, was admitted to partnership in its publication, the firm now being Day & Terry.

In 1869 the Tunkhannock Republican arose from the ashes of its predecessor, under the management of Perry Marcy, as an organ of temperance and Republicanism. In 1873 A. F. Yost, the acting editor, formed a partnership with Mr. Furman and leased the paper. The firm was subsequently dissolved and Mr. Furman conducted the paper until 1875, when Mr. Marcy again took charge, in order to support the prohibition State ticket and oppose the election of Hartranft for governor. In January, 1876, he retired, and sold the business to Cyrus D. Camp. Under the progressive and vigorous management of the present proprietor, and his adherence to the party principles, the Republican party has been united and strengthened, the circulation of the paper doubled, and, enlarged by the addition of a supplement, it now claims to be "the largest paper published in Wyoming county."

In 1876 the Nicholson Standard was removed to this place by its founder, E. L. Day, and in March, 1879, converted into an independent Democratic paper, edited by John L. Garmon. During the year he disposed of it to Bacon & Son, who have enlarged it from a six-column folio to a quarto of the same number of columns per page, and now claims the largest circulation in the place.

MERCANTILE, MANUFACTURING AND BANKING INTERESTS.

Draper Billings, successor to Phillips & Billings, occupies a fine brick building on Bridge street, erected by him after the burning of his store in 1870. Osterhout & Wheelock, in the new brick block opposite Billings, although only in operation since 1879, are among the leading houses in their display of general merchandise. The clothing house of Barham, Bogart & Co. was founded by Henry Barham in 1851. In 1865 C. P. Miller was admitted, and he retired in 1879, E. P. Bogart and H. A. Barham (a son of the senior partner) being then admitted. The store and shops of this firm are on Tioga street, and their business is extensive. The manufacturing is done under the personal supervision of Henry Barham. Mills & Billings's extensive hardware store occupies the corner of Warren and Tioga streets. This firm succeeds O. S. Mills & Co., who founded the business in 1866. The new firm of Bogart, Deguan & Co. is in the Bunnell block, on Warren street, and consists of H. Wells Bogart, Joseph Degnan and Frank C. Bunnell. Mrs. B. B. Bedford, whose elegant brick building is one of the features of Tioga street, is the leading dealer in millinery goods and ladies' furnishing goods. F. M. Winans, Picture Frame Manufacturer on Bridge street, deals in frames, cornices and upholsterers' supplies. George W. Gray's Bakery and Confectionery Establishment is one of the oldest concerns in the place. Mr. Gray succeeded his father in business. The Excelsior Drug Store of S. S. Hatfield, on Tioga street, is a widely known and ably managed pharmacy, Mr. Hatfield being a practical chemist of considerable experience. In addition to these, there are a co-operative grocery store, the dry-goods stores of J. G. Leighton, A. B. Mott, Stark and F. L. Sittzer, and a boot and shoe store kept by J. K. Slausson; three drinking saloons, two tobacco stores and three millinery shops and the drug stores of Samuel Stark and Doctor Chase. Gerhart's Machine Shops are the successor of the foundry built by Cyrus Avery in 1840, which, after passing through several hands, became the property of Hon. C. D. Gearhart in 1850. He made extensive additions to its buildings and machinery and carries on a considerable business in making railroad castings, circular saw-mills, stoves and agricultural machinery, among his customers being the Lehigh Valley and Montrose Railway Companies. The shops employ fifteen men and add materially to the business of the village. The Tunkhannock Tannery was established in 1866 by the Palen Brothers. It is now the property of H. G. Lapham & Co., of New York city. The local heads of the establishment are Rufus P. Northrop, tanner, and William C. Kittredge, outside manager. The present capacity of the tannery is 30,000 hides or 60,000 sides of leather per annum, being an increase of one third over former years, and at this writing it is intended to be still farther enlarged, especially the "beam house" by one-third, and by other important additions and improvements. The time required for tanning is five months. None but the very best "green salted, city slaughtered" hides—those from heavy and superior cattle—are used, being shipped from New York; and the leather (trade mark "Union Crop") manufactured ranks in the market as A 1, without any superior, and is used exclusively for soles of the finest quality of boots and shoes. Six thousand tons of bark are yearly required in the work, forty-five men are employed, and the amount of money annually expended in Tunkhannock and vicinity alone exceeds $60,000, while the sales foot up over $450,000.

The length of the main building is 470 feet and it covers an area of 23,800 square feet, without including several large sheds for bark, barn and hide houses. The engine used, in addition to pumping water and running the machinery, supplies the Lehigh Valley Railroad with water and is the main dependence of the town in case of fire, having connections so arranged as to supply the hydrants, without loss of time, to an unlimited extent from the river. The Tunkhannock Mills, F. L. Sittser proprietor, N. Keim miller, was established in 1873-4, on the site of an older one but on a much larger scale, and additions and improvements have been and are constantly being made, as the increasing business requires. The main building is 40 by 56 feet, has three turbine water wheels, a capacity for grinding 400 bushels per day, contains recent and important improvements and inventions for the manufacture of a superior article of flour, and the brand of "Tunkhannock Mills" for purity and excellence stands very high both at home and abroad. The Tunkhannock Agricultural Works, Miller & Avery proprietors, are making everything called for in their line, and make a specialty of two horse power threshing machines, thresher and cleaner combined; the "Challenge" one horse power thresher and separator; bark mill, of the Palen and Avery patent; plows, cultivators, field rollers, churn powers, for dogs and sheep, etc., etc. Attached to the foundry are a planing mill and circular and upright saws for home and custom work, run by an engine of 15 horse power. The average number of men employed is six. The Tunkhannock Marble and Granite Works, Burns & White proprietors, and dealers in Scotch and American granite, foreign and domestic marble, and everything manufactured therefrom, was commenced in 1872 by James K. Fellows and sold by him to ex-Sheriff Comstock. Burns & White have worked up the business until it requires ten hands and the carrying of a large stock. The Tunkhannock Toy Company was organized in 1876, by S. J. Stark, John Day, C. H. Stratton, George W. Stark and S. W. Little. Their works are at the foot of Marcy lake, in the township. They employ from 12 to 20 men in turning wooden toys. The original members of the company all remain except C. H. Stratton. The office of the company is on Bridge street. The Wyoming National Bank, the only bank of issue in the county, was organized February 23d, and began business April 3d, 1864, with a capital of $100,000. The first officers and directors were: C. P. Miller, president; Samuel Stark, cashier; D. D. Dewitt, teller; George Osterhout, Jonathan Jenkins, E. Sharp, Paul Billings, T. B. Wall, J. H. Ross. C. P. Miller is still president. Samuel Stark died in December, 1879; D. D. Dewitt was chosen cashier in his place, and since his death in January, 1880, his son F. W. Dewitt has been cashier. The present directors are C. P. Miller, George Osterhout, F. W. Dewitt, John Jackson, Perry Billings, F. B. Hight, John A. Sittzer and B. P. Carver. The annual meetings are held on the second Tuesday in January at the bank. The following summary of the bank's business will prove of interest: Capital stock January 1st, 1880, $100,000;

net surplus, $21,000; total dividends declared on capital since 1865, $124,250; total earnings since 1865, $146,212.43. The Banking House of F. C. Bunnell & Co. was established in 1870, by Hon. F. C. Bunnell and his father, James Bunnell. The institution meets a popular demand, and its handsome parlors are the scenes of large financial transactions. Hon. Frank C. Bunnell, the president, is still a young man. He began business life as a merchant at Russell Hill in 1863. Two years later he located here, and for some time was engaged in trade. In 1872 he was elected to Congress from this district. James Bunnell is practically a silent partner, his age preventing his active participation. W. D. Williams has been the cashier for the past eight years.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS.

The Tunkhannock Bridge Company was incorporated April 3d, 1835. Its first president was James Wright and treasurer Henry Stark, with Elisha Harding, jr., James Kelly, Isaac Vosburgh, Alfred Durham, D. A. Bardwell and Luman Ferry as directors.

Collecting subscriptions and obtaining State aid seem to have employed the company until 1854, when the bridge was built and accepted. It is a wooden structure of four spans resting on massive stone piers, is eight hundred and ten feet in length and about thirty in width. The gale of August 25th, 1854, destroyed the superstructure. Exhausted by the loss the company went into liquidation. It was reorganized the following year and the work was once more completed and accepted in November, 1857, the State becoming a stockholder to the amount of $5,000. Until 1865 the bridge was operated successfully, paying small dividends on the stock; but March 18th of that year an ice flood swept away two spans and a pier, and once more the company sought relief in bankruptcy. In 1868 the company was again reorganized, the damages repaired, George E. Palen was elected president, and in the following year the bridge was once more ready for use and the company fixed their capital stock at $34,000, afterward increased to $52,000. In 1875 the bridge was damaged to the extent of $5,000 by an ice flood. The total cost of the structure to date has been some $45,000. The engineer's estimate of the original cost was $13,500, and the contractor, after expending that amount and sinking $5,000 of his own funds, was compelled to abandon the enterprise.

The Tunkhannock Water Company was chartered April 22nd, 1858, with an authorized capital of $20,000. Its first officers were: Jacob Dewitt, president; F. C. Ross, treasurer; R. R. Little, secretary. Its property consisted of the water rights on the original Slocum farm one and one-fourth miles from the village, from which point pump logs with one and a half inch bore constituted the mains and were extended only to what is known as the Hill district. After a long inactivity the outstanding stock was bought in at a nominal figure, and in 1870 F. C. Ross was chosen president, and mains of from eight to three inches diameter were laid through all of the

TRITON HOSE COMPANY.

This company was organized November 16th, 1872, and December 11th of that year the following officers were elected: President, D. Bidleman; secretary, A. E. Buck; treasurer, S. J. Stark; foreman, E. G. Sampson; 1st assistant foreman, P. C. Burns; 2nd assistant foreman, A. M. Eastman. About this time the borough council bought 1,000 feet of leather hose and a carriage. The company during that winter erected at their own expense a neat and substantial building. January 20th, 1873, the company was incorporated and P. C. Burns, Hon. R. R. Little and Dr. G. E. Palen were elected trustees. C. J. Henry was then fire warden until 1875, and A. M. Eastman has been since. E. G. Sampson was foreman until 1873, then A. M. Eastman till 1875, J. R. Lott one year, and C. M. Kishpaugh since.

During the first two years of the company's existence fires were frequent, service arduous, and discipline well maintained. Since that time little active duty has been required.

SOCIETIES AND LODGES.

Temple Lodge, No. 248, F. and A. M. was instituted in pursuance of a charter dated July 1st, 1850, in the third story of the building now occupied by F. L. Sittzer, at the corner of Tioga and Turnpike streets.

The following were the first officers: John V. Smith, W. M.; Alfred Hine, S. W.; Thomas Morley, J. W. The first degree conferred was that of a fellow craft mason, upon R. R. Little, December 16th, 1850.

Meetings were held a few years in the room in which the lodge was organized; then in the third story of the building now occupied by Bogart, Degnan & Co., until the completion of the lodge hall, dedicated June 9th, 1870. The lodge has a membership of 123. The officers for 1880 were: M. J. Lull, W. M.; Edward Harding, S. W.; H. Webster Bardwell, J. W.; Frank C. Bunnell, treasurer; James W. Piatt, secretary; Rev. J. H. Weston, chaplain; J. Dewitt Smith, S. D.; Wesley D. Crawford, J. D.; Edgar G. Sampson, S. M. of C.; Daniel Wheelock, J. M. of C.; James B. Harding, pursuivant; A. E. Buck, tiler; trustees, Draper Billings, Riley Sickler and E. Mortimer Phillips.

The Tunkhannock Brass Band was first organized in 1852, and December 24th of that year its constitution and by-laws were adopted and signed by 16 members. James B. Harding was the first president, and G. S. Tutton the first leader. In 1873 the organization was chartered as "The Tunkhannock Silver Cornet Band." The present officers are: President, John A. Harding; vice-president, J. B. Welch; secretary, B. H. Shook; treasurer and leader, G. L. Hungerford.

Tunkhannock Lodge, No. 699, I. O. of O. F. was instituted February 10th, 1870. The charter members numbered 13. The first officers were: N. G., J. M. Kelly; V. G., R. C. Cook; secretary, M. H. Swainbank; assistant secretary, James Higgs; treasurer, Joseph Shupp. The amount paid for relief is $1,129; available assets, $1,000. Four members have died. There are now 70 members on the rolls.

Tunkhannock Lodge, No. 746, K. of H. was instituted September 14th, 1877, with ten charter members. The first officers were: P. D., W. E. Little; D., James W. Piatt; V. D., E. F. Palen; assistant D., W. W. Streeter; Rep., S. W. Isenbach; F. R., C. A. Little; T., S. F. Major; guard, H. P. Carter; sentinel, P. C. Burns. The present membership is 38.

Tunkhannock Lodge, No. 254, K. of P. was instituted June 3d, 1870, with 19 charter members. The lodge meets Friday evenings in the Dewitt block, Tioga street.

Other Organizations.—A division of Sons of Temperance was in operation some years, and a lodge of Good Templars was kept up until 1879. The Patriotic Sons of America also had an organization here.

CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN.

In 1823 Merrit Slocum, a young Presbyterian layman of Wilkes-Barre, removed to this place, and he labored in prayer meetings and Sunday-school. Subsequently the people were visited by Presbyterian missionaries, and in 1831 they enjoyed the labors of Rev. George Printz for a few months. In 1833 Rev. James Todd labored here half the time as a missionary. In November a protracted meeting conducted by Revs. Cook, Heberton and Dorrance added to the membership, and a Presbyterian church of 21 members was organized December 29th, 1833, by Rev. Isaac Todd and Rev. John Dorrance. Alpha Durham was appointed clerk. The church was under the Presbytery of Susquehanna. The original members were Alpha Durham, Jeremiah B. Dow, Chauncey Rockwell, Mrs. Rhoda Wright, Mrs. Elizabeth Montanye, Mrs. Eunice Atwater, Mrs. Charity Bartholomew, Mrs. Harriet Buck, Mrs. Emmons and Miss Hannah Townsend, admitted on certificate, and Stephen Corby, John Phelps, Mrs. Affa Marcy, Mrs. Elizabeth Corby, Mrs. Sally Adams, Miss Eunice Marcy, Miss Susanna Marcy, Miss Laura Barnum, Miss Katharine Lucretia Adams, Miss Harriet Emmons and Miss Louisa Marvin, on examination.

A constitution was adopted in May, 1834, and on the 27th of December following the church was incorporated. It was for some time under the care of the Wilkes-Barre Presbytery. Among its early ministers were George Printz, Isaac Todd, John Dorrance, James L. Cole, M. Howell, B. Wall and Orrin Brown. Since 1845 the ministers have been: Rev. Messrs. John W. Stirling, to 1849; Cornelius R. Lane and Augustus T. Dobson, from 1849 to 1871; and from the latter date to 1880, Rev. G. T. Keller, who closed his pastorate and removed to South Bend, Ind.

The first ruling elders were John M. Burtis and John Phelps; afterward Robert Clayton, Obadiah Mills, John H. Bogart, George Leighton and Stevens Dana held the office. The members of the present session are Dr. C. H. Dana, O. S. Mills, B. W. Lewis and Dr. F. D. Brewster. Ira Avery was the first deacon; his successors have been George Leighton, Abram Hass, J. W. Doolittle, J. G. Leighton, C. O. Dorsheimer and Cyrus D. Carms.

In 1834 the church erected a frame building, costing about $2,000. Several terms of the county court were held in this church before the erection of the county buildings. The corner stone of the new church was laid on the 4th of July, 1867, and the building dedicated in the following year. It cost about $10,000. The church owes much of its prosperity to Rev. C. R. Lane, who served it faithfully nearly twenty years.

The first Sunday-school of which we have any record was organized April 19th, 1840. Ira Avery was superintendent and Edward Baldwin librarian. Among the teachers were Irene S. Benson, Frederick Hepburn, Jane E. Ross, Emily C. Baldwin, Michael Meylert and Edward Buck. Addison E. Buck was soon elected librarian, and he has served ever since. The school has over 100 members. B. W. Lewis is the acting superintendent.

TUNKHANNOCK M. E. CHURCH.

The M. E. church at Tunkhannock was set off from the old Springville circuit at the session of the Oneida conference held in 1843, and organized as a station October 10th of that year, Rev. H. F. Rowe being the first preacher in charge; Washington Stansbury, Peter Sharps and William H. Jenkins, class leaders, and William Shaw, Peter Sharps, P. M. Osterhout, Henry Stark and Nicholas Stevens stewards. The first quarterly conference was held November 25th, 1843.

C. E. Taylor was pastor in 1844, succeeded by P. S. Worden. The preaching places were Tunkhannock, Mount Vernon and the Shaw, Stark and Jenkins neighborhoods. The pews were first rented under the pastorate of Mr. Worden. In 1845 L. S. Bennett took charge; 1847, John Mulkey; 1849, H. Brownscombe; 1851, D. C. Olmstead, at which time the Wyoming Conference was formed. J. F. Wilbur, pastor in 1852 and 1853, reported 93 members and 45 probationers. L. D. Taylor succeeded Mr. Wilbur in 1854, and under his charge a revival increased the membership to 100 and probationers to 80. F. S. Chubbuck, Charles Perkins, Ira D. Warren, B. B. Emory and A. H. Schoonmaker filled the pastorate up to 1862, when a revival added 53 to the list of probationers. Rev. Luther Peck was the next pastor and Rev. J. L. Legg became pastor in 1866; he reported a revival increasing the total membership to 168. Rev. S. F. Brown became pastor in 1868, followed by H. R. Clarke, D. D., who resigned during the year and was followed by Rev. J. L. Race, and he by J. R. Peck in 1874, S. W. Weiss, 1876; George Comfort, 1878; G. Murray Colville, 1879. Under the pastorate of Mr. Colville a revival in 1880 added 60 members and greatly increased the efficiency of the church.

The corner stone of the present church edifice was laid by Presiding Elder Olmstead October 20th, 1868, and the building was dedicated by Bishop Ames April 10th, 1869. The cost was $12,500 and the indebtedness $3,200, which was raised on the day of dedication. The building is in the Gothic style, and occupies a sightly and convenient location.

During Mr. Colville's pastorate a floating debt of $300 has been raised, and a handsome parsonage costing $1,400 erected and paid for. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, studied in his native city, and graduated at Wyoming Seminary. He has had charge of three pulpits prior to coming to Tunkhannock, and is a successful pulpit orator and a practical worker.

TUNKHANNOCK BAPTIST CHURCH.

Elder David Jayne, who lived between Nicholson and Glenwood at an early day, is believed to have been the first Baptist preacher. Elder Sturdevant, of Black Walnut, preached often and baptized several persons, among them Sarah Marcy McCord Whitmore in 1800. Elder John Miller supplied this point for years, baptizing a number who joined a church at Waverly until the Second Church of Eaton was constituted, in 1823, when they became members there. Elders Dimmock, Worden, Fisk and Frear preached until 1841, when Elder Post, of Montrose, commenced a series of meetings in the village, in the old school-house near the creek, as a result of which eight were baptized. November 3d, 1841, a church was organized, with the following members: Edward Buck, Cyrus Avery and wife, Eliza Hickok, Emma and Nancy Harding, Mehitable and Rachel Garrison, Sarah Frear, Martha A. Brown, Margaret Bird, James Fitzgerald and wife, Wilson Shaw, Darius Tilson, Sabra Kelly, John Gardner and wife and daughters Malvina, Phœbe and Ruth, Mehitable Vosburg, Lydia A. Tripp, Earl and Phœbe Cary, Elizabeth and Sarah Jenkins, George Ross and Sarah Braiton.

The pulpit was first supplied by Elder Jonathan Melvin, followed by J. K. Hornish. John Duer, Levi Hamlin and Rev. William Frear supplied occasional vacancies. In January, 1867, Elder W. B. Grew held special meetings, when 49 were added by baptism and 17 by letter. In 1868 Rev. A. Judson Furman became pastor; Rev. James Rainey in 1871, and four years later Rev. S. F. Forgress. Since 1878 Revs. John H. Harris and John Ballantine have been the chief supplies of the pulpit. Edward Buck (deceased), Zenas E. White and A. F. Eastman have been deacons and E. Buck, Z. E. White, Henry A. Miller and John K. Slauson clerks.

School-houses, the old foundry and the court-house were the meeting places until 1867, when the edifice formerly occupied by the Presbyterian church was purchased for $1,200, $200 of which sum was a legacy from Mrs. Whitmore, who also left a bequest for the Burman missions. She was an infant nine days old when her family fled from the Indians in the valley. The church now reports 73 members.

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

TUNKHANNOCK TOWNSHIP AND BOROUGH.

MAJOR H. WEBSTER BARDWELL was born June 2nd, 1845, at the old Bardwell homestead in Tunkhannock township, Pa., and in early life received the educational advantages incident to country life.

The breaking out of the Rebellion in 1861 found him a student at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pa., and though but sixteen his desire to enlist and take part in defending the old flag was so intense that, despite youth, a naturally weak constitution, the advice of friends, the refusal of officials and the opposition of parents, he continued his endeavors; and at last, conquering all obstacles by the force of a strong will, he was duly enrolled in the spring of 1863 in the 30th Pennsylvania infantry. Immediately thereafter the regiment was ordered to the front and commenced active service. But the unaccustomed trials and privations were too much for the boy. August of the same year found him upon the sick list. He did not recover sufficiently for duty during his term of enlistment and, being honorably discharged, returned again to Wyoming Seminary.

Leaving there in 1865 Major Bardwell was given charge of the Warren and Franklin Railroad Company store at Irvington, Pa., the duties of which position he performed faithfully and honestly and to the entire satisfaction of his employers until the completion of the work, when he returned to Tunkhannock. On the 24th of December, 1866, he was married to Miss Gertie E. Jewett, daughter of Rodney Jewett, of Montrose, Pa., and the union has been blessed with a son and daughter. After marriage the major attempted to settle down upon land near the old homestead and become a farmer; but he abandoned this plan upon receiving an appointment as postmaster at Tunkhannock January 22nd, 1874, which position he still holds.

In 1870 Major Bardwell was extremely active in raising a company of National Guards, he holding a subordinate position therein. The company was attached to the 9th regiment National Guards, Major General E. S. Osborne commanding. Soon after the formation of the regiment Major Bardwell was appointed adjutant. This position (one far from a sinecure) his love of military life, his "push" and thorough participation in the esprit de corps enabled him to so fill as to attract the attention of the commanding officer; and during the riots in the coal regions in 1866 he was appointed major, holding the position until the reorganization of the National Guards, in 1878, when the division was mustered out of service. As an evidence of the estimation in which Major Bardwell was held by those having the best means of knowing his soldierly qualifications we quote the following paragraph from a letter to him by Major General Osborne, conveying an honorable discharge:

"I desire in this connection to extend to you my heartfelt thanks for the energy and ability with which you have discharged your duties since you have been a member of my staff, and to assure you that I fully appreciate your patriotic devotion to duty under trying and disagreeable circumstances. I can only express the hope that the law-abiding citizens of the commonwealth will not soon forget your service to them at Scranton in 1871, Susquehanna Depot in 1874 and Hazleton in 1875."

We might quote other letters of a like tenor, but deem one such testimonial—in itself a host—sufficient.

In political life Major Bardwell is a worker, hopeful, enthusiastic and pronounced in opinion. To the very core he is Republican—could not in any state of affairs be otherwise; he is seen prominently at every public gathering; is a liberal giver to political efforts and does more work for the public for nothing than any other man in the community, and is always ready to shoulder the duties from which others shrink, and drive the matter in hand forward to success.

Touched with bon vivantism, Major Bardwell enjoys the good things the gods epicurean give as life passes.

As he personally enjoys, even so he wishes others to do. And this, we opine, is the chief fault of his mental organization. His heart is too large and his hand too open for his own wellbeing. Yet if the proverb is true that "it is more blessed to give than receive," he must be accumulating a vast store in the hereafter and his reward will be infinitely greater than that of those who filch from honest poverty and make merchandise of the blood and bones of their fellows.

HON. F. C. BUNNELL.

Hon. Frank C. Bunnell was born in Luzerne county, Pa., March 19th, 1842, on the Susquehanna river five miles above Tunkhannock, at a place called the Neck, or Horseshoe. His father, James Bunnell, was a farmer, and Frank was early taught the art of farming summers, going to school winters. At the age of sixteen he was sent to Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pa., where he remained until the war of the Rebellion, when he enlisted in Company B 52nd Pennsylvania volunteers. He was promoted quartermaster's sergeant of the regiment in 1862, and served in that capacity during the campaign on the peninsula, under General McClellan. Losing his health he was discharged April 2nd, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability.

In 1864 he engaged in the mercantile business at Russell Hill, Pa.; afterward at Tunkhannock. In 1870 he organized the banking house of F. C. Bunnell & Co., to which business he still gives his personal attention. He is also engaged in numerous enterprises—farming among the rest, in which he takes especial interest. He has been annually elected president of the Wyoming County Agricultural Society since its organization in 1875. He is emphatically an improvement man, and has contributed largely toward the beautifying and improvement of the borough in which he resides, as well as aiding in the promotion of the agricultural interest and stock breeding in his county.

In politics he is a Republican. He was a delegate to the State convention that nominated General John W. Geary for governor; also when General John F. Hart-ranft was nominated for governor. He was elected to the forty-second Congress to serve out the unexpired term of Hon. Ulysses Mercur, who was elected judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1872, and was presented by Wyoming county as her choice for Congress in the years 1872, 1874, 1876 and 1878; and was urged by his friends to accept the nomination in 1880, but his own personal interests and feelings compelled him to decline the honor.

CHARLES H. DANA, M. D. .

Charles H. Dana, M. D., a native of Eaton, graduated at Jefferson Medical College in 1851, practiced four years in Sullivan county, N. Y., then returned to Tunkhannock, where he has since practiced, interrupted only by two years of army service as assistant and acting surgeon. He has been United States examining surgeon for the past fourteen years.

D. D. DEWITT.

David D. Dewitt was born in Sussex county, N. J., December 11th, 1819. He was married December 16th, 1841, to Celestia Warren. Their children are William W., who was born March 30th, 1842, and died in infancy; Frank W., born March 14th, 1850, and Melissa, born August 21st, 1853. The subject of this sketch was one of the founders of the Wyoming National Bank, and its cashier at the time of his death, February 19th, 1880.

JONATHAN JENKINS.

Jonathan Jenkins is one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers in the county, owning a farm of six hundred acres. He was born in 1822. Mrs. Jenkins was Miss Eliza Lowman, of New York. They were married in 1856.

HON. R. R. LITTLE.

Hon. R. R. Little was born in Kortright, Delaware county, N. Y., March 13th, 1820. He commenced the study of law at Montrose, Pa., was admitted to the bar in September, 1842, and came to Tunkhannock in the spring of 1843. He was elected to the Legislature for the sessions of 1848 and 1849. In April, 1857, he was appointed judge-advocate of the naval court of inquiry, at Washington. The business of this court was completed in a little less than a year, and he returned to Tunkhannock and followed the practice of his profession until 1874, when he was again elected a member of the Legislature. His wife was Harriet E. Avery, of Tunkhannock.

HON. ZIBA LOTT.

Hon. Ziba Lott, prothonotary and clerk of the courts, formerly a farmer and lumberman, was born in what is now Mehoopany, July 10th, 1818. He married Savannah Garvey, of Windham. He is serving the third three-year term of his present office, and has been a member of the Legislature one year and justice of the peace five years. He came to Tunkhannock in 1860.

SARAH OSTERHOUT.

The history of Wyoming county would be strangely incomplete should it fail to make honorable mention of the aged and respected lady whose name stands at the head of this article and whose life, for nearly a century, has been so closely interwoven with its growth and development. David and Sarah Mitchell, the parents of Mrs. Osterhout, came to the Wyoming valley from Warwick, Orange county, N. Y., shortly after the massacre, and settled at Capoose, near Scranton. From thence they moved to Falling Spring, in the township of Pittston, Luzerne county, where, August 15th, 1787, Sarah was born, and where her father died. Subsequently the widow married Abraham Frear, and in 1797 the family moved to Tunkhannock, and resided for a number of years in a log house adjacent to the "Slocum Spring," where the tannery of Lapham & Co. now stands; thence to Eaton, and finally settled upon the Frear homestead, on the hill.

In 1807 Sarah was married to David Osterhout and in 1810 moved with her husband to La Grange (now in Wyoming county), where she has since resided. The fruits of the marriage were thirteen children, ten sons and three daughters, twelve of whom arrived at the years of maturity. Of these Thomas, the eldest, has been sheriff of the county and a member of the Legislature; Peter M. postmaster of Tunkhannock, prothonotary and member of the Legislature and Senate, and otherwise enjoyed the respect and confidence of the public as described elsewhere in these pages; George has been associate judge; Jeremiah treasurer of the county and John P. judge of a district comprising several counties in Texas, and each and all have been men of mark, ability and property.

Necessarily in this connection occurs a brief history of the Osterhout family, who emigrated from Holland and settled in Connecticut, moving from thence to Dutchess county, N. Y., and then to the Wyoming valley, at a time when the country was still suffering from a bloody war of extermination waged by the Indians; when life and property were more than uncertain, and men of resolution, mind and muscle were demanded, and none other dared to risk the perils and attempt to carve out a home and a future upon the spot where the camp fire of the red man might be relighted, the midnight air thrill with his savage battle cry, and the green earth again become sodden with innocent blood. It was no light undertaking, and proved the nerve and bearing of the settlers, and among them Peter Osterhout played an important part. We find him as early as 1777 laying aside the implements of peaceful industry, taking up sword and musket, enrolled as a member of Captain Ransom's company (one of the two raised in Wyoming valley), and fighting bravely for the land of his adoption, his fireside, his loved ones and the old flag blazoned with its thirteen stars. He (Peter) was a brother of Jeremiah (the father of David), who came to Pennsylvania in 1778 in company with his brother Gideon, both settling upon the flat lands near the Susquehanna and now compassing the Jenkins and Osterhout farms at La Grange.

The family residence (an engraving of which is elsewhere presented) is believed to be the first frame house ever erected upon the Susquehanna between Pittston and Tioga Point, now Athens, and all available testimony proves it so to be. It was built in 1797 by Jeremiah Osterhout, taking the place of the log structure. Subsequently it was enlarged by Isaac Osterhout, into whose possession the property came, and was a well known and favorite hostelry for many years. Isaac Osterhout was a man of broad, comprehensive views and enterprise; was largely engaged in lumbering and general merchandise, and drew around him trade until his establishment became the business center of a large surrounding country. His wife was Susanna Smith, the daughter of William Hooker Smith, a noted and skillful physician of the period throughout the Wyoming and Lackawanna valleys, and a surgeon in the Revolutionary war; the United States, after his decease, granting his heirs the sum of $2,000 in recognition of his valuable services as such. To him were born two children—Hon. Isaac Smith Osterhout, of Wilkes-Barre, a man of rare business and financial insight and capacity, at one time an associate judge of Luzerne county; and Mary Ann, who was educated at the famous female seminary of Mrs. Willard at Troy, N. Y., where she was for several years an assistant teacher, and later became the honored wife of Job Olin, a prominent lawyer and judge and a relative of the celebrated divine, traveler and historian of the Holy Land, Dr. Stephen Olin.

David Osterhout, the husband of Sarah, whose portrait is given in this work, died in 1833, leaving to her care and direction twelve children, and how well she accomplished her arduous task the history of their lives proves. He, the father, was a man universally held in esteem, strong and clear in mind, of more than ordinary physical powers, earnest in the establishment and support of schools and a pioneer in all the good and useful enterprises of the then sparsely settled neighborhood, as his father had been in subduing the wilderness and making for his wife and little ones a home safe from Indian attack and to be forever free from the galling yoke of foreign tyranny. At his death all of the cares of business and the rearing of a large family devolved upon his widow, and, with all of the comforts and conveniences of the present wanting, we can scarcely overestimate or understand the trials and the struggles she was forced to pass through. But in view of them, it is not to be wondered at that her children and her children's children arise and call her blessed, watch her declining years with solicitous tenderness, and, although the sheaf has long been fully ripened and the head is weary with its nearly fifty years of widowhood and almost a century of life, will sorrow long and deeply at her departure from earth, and rear above her ashes a monument fitting to commemorate her devotion to them and duties well and nobly accomplished. A remarkable woman is Mrs. Sarah Osterhout, especially when early privations, sorrows, trials, and the hard battles fought to feed and clothe so many little ones are taken into consideration. She yet retains her faculties in a surprising degree, is wonderfully sound in body and mind, bright of eye, firm of step, daily taking exercise out of doors; is cheerful in spirit, converses with clearness and precision, and in an animated and interesting manner, of the early days of the country, and shows but little the wear and strain of nearly a hundred years. She fully realizes that she is living upon "borrowed time;" that at any moment the silver cord, worn to extreme slenderness and brittleness, may be loosed—the golden bowl, weakened by years, be broken—and the most blessed of all words, "rest, good and faithful servant," be whispered into her willing ears. But truly "her ways are pleasantness and all her paths are peace;" and calmly and trustfully she watches the going down of the sun, firm in the belief that it will arise again upon a glorious and unending day, and to one who so long and faithfully and meekly has borne the cross the crown of roses shall be given.

PETER MITCHELL OSTERHOUT is descended from the liberty-loving Mayflower stock upon the one side, and the sturdy burghers of Holland upon the other, and was born in Eaton, Luzerne (now Wyoming) county, Pa., May 21st, 1810. During the fall of the same year his parents moved to the place now known as La Grange station, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, where he remained until his sixteenth year. Then he commenced his long, active and useful business life, as an employe of James Wright, at Tunkhannock. In 1828 he removed to Elmira, N. Y., and was a clerk in the establishment of John Arnot four years.

In December, 1833, he returned to Tunkhannock, and in connection with George M. Hollenback, of Wilkes-Barre, opened a large mercantile establishment for the times, and continued in trade there until 1845. In 1835 Mr. Osterhout was appointed justice of the peace by Governor Ritner, and he held the office to the satisfaction of the public until a change in the constitution made it elective. In 1841 he was appointed postmaster at Tunkhannock under the Harrison administration, but upon the ascendancy of John Tyler was deposed, charged with having assisted in the circulation of the New York Tribune, and a Democrat was appointed in his place. In 1845 he was the candidate of the Whig party for the office of prothonotary and clerk of the courts of Wyoming county, and was elected by a majority of two votes. In 1848 he was re-elected to the same important positions by an increased majority of twelve, and faithfully and for the best interest of the public served out his term. While engaged in the arduous duties of his official life Mr. Osterhout commenced the study of law, under the instructions of Hon. R. R. Little, and in 1852 was admitted to practice in the several courts of Wyoming county.

Upon the dissolution of the old Whig party Mr. Osterhout became a staunch Republican and was chosen as a delegate to the national convention that nominated John C. Fremont for the presidency. In 1860 he was a delegate to the national convention at Chicago, assisted in the nomination of Abraham Lincoln, and took an energetic and important part in the canvass that resulted in his election. In 1864 Mr. Osterhout was elected a representative to the State Legislature, the district then being composed of Susquehanna and Wyoming counties, and his re-election the following year proved the estimation in which he was held and the confidence reposed in him by his constituents. During all the exciting phases of the late war Mr. Osterhout took a strong and decided stand in favor of the Union and bent all his energies in that direction. He was appointed enrolling officer by Governor Curtin for the county of Wyoming for the first draft ordered by the government, and successfully and with credit to himself fulfilled its trying and delicate duties.

In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate from the district composed of Bradford, Susquehanna and Wyoming counties, and served upon the committees of judiciary and railroads. During his senatorship he was very active in carrying out necessary reforms in the law of evidence and gaining for parties accused the right to testify in their own behalf, the beneficial results of which will be a lasting tribute to his memory as a man, and his clear discrimination of right as a lawyer. Mr. Osterhout was a delegate to the national convention of 1872, and assisted in the nomination of U. S. Grant for re-election as President.

Mr. Osterhout has been twice married—first in 1835, to Frances Slocum Carey, daughter of Eleazer Carey, of Wilkes-Barre, who died in 1839, childless; and on March 4th, 1841, to Eunice Marcy, daughter of Colonel Abel Marcy, of Tunkhannock (and a descendant of one of the oldest settlers of the country), who died in 1878, leaving two daughters, Frances S., the wife of E. S. Handrick, and Sue L., wife of Seth L. Keeney, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The early education of Mr. Osterhout was necessarily limited by the want of proper conveniences in the then comparatively new country. Such knowledge as the imperfect common schools could give was eagerly sought, and later he studied for a time at the academy at Montrose, Susquehanna county, under the instructions of Franklin Lusk. In person Mr. Osterhout is large, his mood jovial and his mind well stored, especially with historical events. He bears his seventy years well, for the hand of time has been unable to bow his stalwart frame or dim the working of his active mind. Though retired from his profession, living a life of plentiful ease and largely indulging his antiquarian tastes, he still mingles actively with his fellow man and bears his part on all public occasions, takes a warm interest in political and national affairs, and bids fair to vigorously survive many who now look up to and speak of him as "old." And when at last the stern summons of death shall come, the record he leaves behind will be an honorable one and of him it may well be written:

"Of no distemper, of no blast he died;
He fell like autumn fruit that mellowed long,
Even wondered at because he dropt not sooner."

Of such men were the pioneers of the country, who carved a nation out of a wilderness, and as long as the records of the early days of Wyoming county remain will be found prominent therein, as a guide and a shining example, the name of Peter Mitchell Osterhout.

STEPHEN H. SEACORD.

Stephen H. Seacord was born in Bovina, Delaware county, N. Y., and married Emma, daughter of J. B. Sands, a native of Meredith, in the same county. He served as a member of the 144th New York volunteers in the war for the Union. He came to Wyoming county in 1875, kept the Sterling House, at Meshoppen, three years, and since 1878 has been keeping Wall's Hotel in Tunkhannock.

SAMUEL STARK.

The subject of this sketch was one of that family whose name is early found in the records of New England, and who occupied so prominent a place and participated so actively in the early events of our infant republic. From 1685 down through all the struggles of the Revolution and the terrible Wyoming massacre, the Starks are found defending with brain and blood the everlasting principles of liberty and truth. Of such an ancestry Samuel Stark was an honorable and honored descendant. Born at Cherry Valley, Otsego county, N. Y., on the 9th of June, 1810, he was one of a family of fourteen children. For seventeen years he remained there, spending his boyhood days as was characteristic of the frugality and simplicity of that early time. It was during those years, when the rearing of so large a family demanded the strictest economy and industry on the part of each of its members, that those habits were formed which signalized his whole life and crowned it with success. In January, 1827, this large family was called to endure the sad bereavement of a mother's loss; but though she was then taken from her children, there remained to them as their only heritage the advice and example of pure and noble womanhood. Thus equipped—with habits made industrious and frugal by necessity, with principles made honest and true by the influences of home—at the age of seventeen he bade adieu to his childish associates and associations, and struck out manfully and bravely in life's great battle. In the fall of the same year he found his way to Tunkhannock, with only twenty shillings in money, but with a stock of energy and determination that knew no defeat and met no failure. He soon obtained a position in the store of his cousin (the late Henry Stark), but at wages hardly more than his board. For his honest and faithful discharge of duty in this subordinate position he was destined soon to be rewarded, and in 1833 he was admitted into partnership with his former employer. In 1837 Henry Stark, having been elected to the Legislature, sold out his interest in the partnership to Samuel, who thus became sole proprietor of a large and growing business, which he continued for nearly thirty years, and which was pursued during the whole time with a degree of industry and perseverance rarely equaled. The twenty shillings which he brought with him to the home of his adoption forty-seven years before had not been "hid in a napkin"; the observance of the divine mandate had been rewarded, and he retired from the active and laborious duties of mercantile life. During all this busy life he had sought guidance for his feet and strength for his heart from Him of whom in early life he became a follower; to Whose cause he was a liberal contributor, and in Whose saving grace he faithfully confided to the end of life. On the 29th of March, 1838, he married Lydia Marcy, a daughter of Colonel Abel Marcy, then in her twenty-first year. For over forty years did they pursue life's journey together, she doing all that the interest and sympathy of a loving wife and faithful mother could suggest to illumine and smooth his pathway; and though he has "gone on before" she yet remains a joy and comfort to the five surviving children of that happy marriage. In the fall of 1840 he occupied the house he had erected for a home, and in that house he continued to live up to his death. This home was to him a haven from the trials of business for almost half a century—the home where he and his companion had together rejoiced as children came to them and together wept over their departure to the other shore, the home which had resounded to the merry chime of the marriage bell, and had been hushed in the sombre garb of mourning. Many and hallowed are the surroundings of the "old homestead!" Mr. Stark was one of the founders and principal stockholders of the Wyoming National Bank, which was organized in 1865 and of which he was the first cashier, which position he continued to occupy for twelve years. With his retirement from the bank in 1877 closed the active duties of his business life. The remainder of his days was passed in the calm retirement of a home made happy to him by the attention of a loving family, and the respect of an appreciative community. Then he trustingly awaited the call of that Master whom he had so long and faithfully served, to "come up higher." That call finally came; and on the 15th of December, 1879, at 5 o'clock in the morning, went out that life which industry and perseverance have characterized, which honor and truth had actuated, and which a pure Christianity had embellished and adorned. To deeply mourn a father's death there remain two sons and three daughters, Kate M., the wife of John Day; Abel M., Affa C., and S. Judson, all of whom now reside at Tunkhannock; and Eleanor G., the wife of Stanley W. Little, who resides at Towanda, Pa., who faithfully cherish and honor his counsel and his memory.

S. JUDSON STARK is a native and lifelong resident of Tunkhannock. He was born October 2nd, 1850, and married E. W. Kerney, of Braintrim township. Mr. Stark was formerly a member of the town council.

WILLIAM M. STARK was born in 1838, and married Emma J., daughter of Henry Harris, of Lemon, in 1868. They have six children. Mr. Stark has served as treasurer and clerk of the township.

J. S. SWISHER, junior member of an insurance firm with H. W. Bardwell and dealer in segars and tobacco in the post-office building, was formerly agent of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, at Moosic, Pa. He married a daughter of Thomas D. Stoner, of Tunkhannock. They have one child.

ALBERT TOWNSEND, burgess of Tunkhannock, was born in Falls township, April 8th, 1827, and October 5th, 1857, married Katie Sampson, of Tunkhannock, where he has lived since 1872. Mr. Townsend was employed nine years as contractor for railroads building in South America. He has also been engaged in mercantile business.

SEAMAN VOSBURGH, deceased, was born September 13th, 1811, and died in 1858. December 12th, 1838, he married Mahala, daughter of John Comstock, of Falls, who was the mother of five children, only two of whom are now living.

THOMAS B. WALL, owner of Wall's Hotel, Tunkhannock, was born in Scranton, in 1818. He married in 1845 Mary A., daughter of Minor Kelley. They have two children.

W. D. WILLIAMS was born in Bradford county, and is a son of Senton Williams, once register and recorder of Wyoming county. He married a Miss Roberts, of Philadelphia. Mr. Williams is cashier of F. C. Bunnell & Co.'s bank, and the owner of Williams's photographic studio.

JACOB WILLSEY, born in Eaton, in 1841, married Hannah, daughter of John Shaffer, of Tunkhannock, in 1864. They have two children. Mr. Willsey is a farmer and lumber dealer.

GEORGE WINANS, architect and builder, has been engaged in that line at this place eighteen years. He was the designer and builder of the Packer House, the Metcalf residence, and the residences of S. S. Hatfield, A. B. Mott and Perry Billings and others.

A. B. WOODWARD, eclectic physician and surgeon, was born June 6th, 1824, in Gibson, Susquehanna county, Pa., where he married Miss Laura Garden. She died and he married his present wife, Mrs. Julia E. Brundage. Dr. Woodward was professor of materia medica and therapeutics in New York city; founder of the Susquehanna Medical Society, and has been president of the State Medical Society and vice-president of the National Medical Association.

The following citizens of Tunkhannock also contributed their support to this publication: J. H. Ackersen, Daniel Avery, S. D. Bacon, H. W. Bogart, Bashane, Bogert & Co., Mrs. B. R. Bedford, Paul Billings, N. Billings, Earl Carey, C. C. Dershimer, J. W. Dixon, J. M. Garman, E. S. Handrick, Conrad Koon, J. A. Lyman, T. A. Miller, M. J. Murthe, Jeremiah Osterhout, J. H. Price, S. H. Rau, V. Smith, H. D. Stark, O. W. Stanton, W. C. Stark.

ST. PETER'S FREE CHURCH (EPISCOPAL)

was incorporated April 21st, 1870, the incorporators being Dr. J. W. Smith, Felix Ansart, A. H. Phillips, Harvey Sickler, Henry Barham, Alisha Gray, H. N. Sherman, E. S. Handricks, Oscar Mills, T. B. Wall, E. Biedleman, James Young and W. B. Overfield. The society bought a lot and in April, 1880, was preparing to build. Services have been held at the court-house.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

WASHINGTON township was taken from Braintrim and Tunkhannock, August 9th, 1832. The first settlement was made in 1787, on the Carney flats, opposite and below the mouth of Mehoopany creek. John Carney, sen., and family in the spring of 1787 settled on the lower end of the flats, about where Daniel Carney now lives. John Carney, jr., was then four years old. In 1799 Isaac Doll and family located on the farm now occupied by John M. Carney. Alban Russell, from Connecticut, located in 1800 where his grandson, Alban H. Russell, now lives. He took up a large tract, and from him the village of Russell Hill was named. He brought and planted the seeds from which has grown the flourishing old apple orchard now standing on the farm. The pioneer grist and saw-mills were built in 1824, on the Meshoppen creek, at Keyserville, by Adam Wilson. In 1825 the first framed house was built, at Russell Hill, by Isaac Osterhout. The property is now owned by Mr. Prevoste. In 1825 Tilton Smith located at Russell Hill, on the old Osterhout farm. There was a saw mill at Vosburgh Station about 1824, near the mouth of Vosburgh creek; also a small grist-mill. They were both burned about 1840. The first road was the Tunkhannock and Tioga turnpike. It ran from Vosburgh, past Alban Russell's in a northwesterly direction, and the only bridge was the one across Carney creek, just below J. B. Maxwell's. The earliest school-house was built about 1800, just above Carney flats, in the edge of the woods, between Daniel Carney's and Alban H. Russell's farms, and was burned in 1824. Dr. Elijah Carney was one of the first teachers. In 1825 there was a school-house down on the neck, between the Bramhall and Bunnell farms, and one at Russell Hill, where Alban Russell's barn now stands. The oldest graveyard is the one on Carney flats, near Mr. Miller's. Adam Wilson, the pioneer blacksmith, had a shop at Keyserville as early as 1825. The next blacksmith was Felix Wiggins, who located at Vosburgh Station in 1830. The first tavern was kept in 1825, by Isaac Osterhout, in the old Prevoste House, still standing a short distance east of the corners at Russell Hill. The old tavern building now standing at Russell Hill was built in 1855, by L. D. Vosburgh. The pioneer shoemaker was Benjamin Crawford, who lived at the head waters of Vosburgh creek, a little below Russell Hill. The first store was built in 1840 at Russell Hill, on the site of Furman's store, and was kept by Wilbur Russell and Solomon Slaus, or Sloss. It was burned in 1852. Soon after this a store was built at Keyserville and another at Vosburgh's. The dam across the Susquehanna a little below Carney Station was built in 1852 by the State as a feeder for the canal, and subsequently sold to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

The total vote of this township at the general election in the fall of 1879 was 107. The population in 1870 was 793, and in 1880 767.

VILLAGES.

Russell Hill contains the store of G. W. Furman, the blacksmith shop of J. D. Arnts, the wagon and sleigh shop of W. H. Jayne, a school-house, two churches (Methodist Episcopal and Baptist) and a population of about 125. The first postmaster was Wilbur Russell, appointed in 1840, and the present one is G. W. Furman.

Keyserville was named in honor of Michael Keyser, of Philadelphia, who purchased the mills and other property. The place was first settled by Adam Wilson in 1824, and at that time and for many years afterwards was known as "Witchhazel" from the fact of a large quantity of that shrub growing along the banks of the creek. There are at this place a Methodist church, a school-house, the saw-mill of Theodore Williams, a blacksmith shop, a grist-mill, a grangers' hall and a small grocery. The population is about 150.

Vosburgh station became a post-office in 1870, with Isaac Vosburgh as postmaster. T. G. Harding is the present postmaster.

At Carney a post-office was established in 1871; subsequently abolished, and re-established in 1878, with Edward Adams as postmaster. He is also the railroad station agent and telegraph operator.

METHODISM.

Methodism was one of the pioneer institutions of Washington township. The first class was formed in 1815 or 1816. Preaching services, however, had been held several years previous, down on "the neck" and at Carney flats. In 1815 John Bunnell located on the neck, where Nelson Bunnell now lives. He was made a class leader in 1816, and the following were some of the members of his class: David Jayne and wife, Mary Bunnell, wife of John Bunnell, Abram Vosburgh and wife, William Alden and wife, Jonathan Kellogg and wife and George Evans, who became a preacher. The leader of this class was converted under the preaching of Rev. Mr. Lane in the fall of 1815, at a camp meeting held on the neck. He died at the age of 82. The school-house at the neck is used also as a church. Preaching has been kept up here since 1790, and there is now a good working class.

The first preaching at Russell Hill was in the old school-house where Alban H. Russell's barn now stands. Until 1855 that and private houses were used for the Methodist meetings. The M. E. church at Russell Hill was built in 1855, of wood, 40 by 50 feet, and cost $1,400. It was dedicated in December, 1855, by Elder George Landon, assisted by Rev. F. S. Chubbuck, who was then the preacher in charge.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Keyserville was built in 1853, and dedicated July 20th of that year, by Rev. David A. Shepherd.

The Methodist preachers in Washington township from 1849 have been: 1849, 1850, John Mulkey and Francis Spencer; 1851, 1852, Erastus Smith and Luther Peck; 1853, E. F. Roberts; 1854, 1855, F. S. Chubbuck and J. K. Peck; 1856, 1857, Ira D. Warren; 1858, 1859, J. B. Newell; 1860, E. W. Breckenridge; 1861, 1862, A. F. Harding and Stephen Elwell; 1863, Davison Worrell; 1864, 1865, Judson L. Legg; 1866-68, E. F. Roberts; 1868-71, Luther Peck; 1871-74, J. H. Weston; 1874-77, Joshua Lewis; 1877-80, G. Greenfield; 1880, G. M. Chamberlain.

WINDHAM TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was named after Windham county, Conn., the native place of some of the prominent early settlers. For many years after it was set off from Braintrim it included Mehoopany, Forkston and North Branch. Nearly all the land on the river was occupied before 1800, but it was several years before permanent settlements were begun very far inland. The population had grown to 660 in 1870, and increased to 839 by 1880.

The first permanent settlers were principally from Connecticut. Many of them left their families and effects in the Wyoming valley while they selected their lands, and then brought them up by boat. Job Whitcomb came from Connecticut with a large family of grown up sons, and settled at the lower end of Hemlock bottom (now Scottsville) as early as 1787. There he died March 24th, 1802, aged 77 years. His sons, Hiram, John S., Joel and Solomon located permanently near him. John S. early opened a tavern. He died on the homestead November 8th, 1832, aged 92. David Lake, also from Connecticut, located just above Whitcomb's about 1792. He had a large family. About 1815 he removed to Braintrim, where some of his descendants reside. Jonathan Stevens located on the present Fassett homestead at Scottsville as early as 1792; sold out to Josiah Fassett in 1795, and moved a mile farther up the river. About 1805 he moved to Bradford county, and was subsequently elected judge of the county. His brothers Asa and Simon Stevens located permanently on Hemlock bottom, the former about 1796 and the latter a few years later. Simon, who was a blacksmith, opened a shop at the upper end of Hemlock bottom, and for a time made most of the nails used for building in this vicinity.

Josiah Fassett, whose descendants are numerous in the township, was born in Windham county, Conn., August 10th, 1761. He was a teacher, and was an artilleryman during the Revolution. About 1788 he married Abigail Stevens, sister of Judge Jonathan and Asa Stevens, whose father, Asa Stevens, from Connecticut, settled in the Wyoming valley previous to her birth (which occurred March 11th, 1771) and lost his life at the Wyoming massacre, his family returning to Connecticut. In the summer of 1795 Mr. Fassett, with his wife and three children, removed via Wilkes-Barre and the river to Scottsville, where he had bought 300 acres from Jonathan Stevens. For the first few years the family resided in a small log cabin near the bank of the river, when he built a double log house, which about 1803 he opened as a tavern (the first of its kind in the township) and was liberally patronized by raftsmen and boatmen for six or seven years. Mr. Fassett and his sons cleared a large portion of his farm and he became comparatively wealthy. From about 1810 he was justice of the peace until his death, August 20th, 1823. His wife survived him nearly 22 years. They reared four sons and four daughters—Jasper, John, Josiah, jr., James, Sally, Fanny, Hannah and Lucy. The sons all remained on the homestead, where John and James and the sons of Jasper and Josiah, jr., still live. Jasper Fassett was born in Connecticut, January 8th, 1790. He was many years a justice of the peace, and was prothonotary of Luzerne county at the time of his death, August 5th, 1840.

Asa Budd lived several years from about 1795 just below Fassett's. He was a cooper. David Young located a short distance above Fassett's about 1798.

The pioneers on North Flat were William Hooker Smith, Jacob Drake, jr., James Sturdevant, Luther Dean, Jedediah Coon and Jacob Gray, most of whom settled previous to 1800. Jacob Drake, jr., was followed about 1804 by Jesse Sturdevant, who remained upon the place until his death, in 1833. The farm is still in possession of his descendant. James Sturdevant settled on the farm now occupied by Mark Keeney, and is said to have built the first framed barn in the township previous to 1800. It is a solid oak frame boarded up and was originally covered with shingles four or five feet long, fastened with wrought nails. James Sturdevant's sons Abijah, Noah and Azor were early residents of the township. The notorious Sturdevant counterfeiters were born and reared on North Flat.

Jonathan Whitney came from Connecticut in 1804 and subsequently settled on North Flat. He early built a saw-mill (said to be the first in the township) on Little Mehoopany creek, near Jenningsville. He died in 1836 and was succeeded by his son Walter. The latter was born in Connecticut, in April, 1798, and married Louisiana Edwards in 1823. He followed farming and lumbering most of his life, and died January 16th, 1864. His wife died August 4th, 1877. The old homestead is now owned by his son, Lorenzo Whitney.

Seth L. Keeney, a son of Joshua Keeney, of Black Walnut, was born March 17th, 1798. He married Mary

Wall, of Abington, July 8th, 1823, and immediately located on the James Sturdevant farm, on North Flat. He was extensively engaged in lumbering, farming and trading. He held many local offices, and was instrumental in establishing a post-office at North Flat. He died June 12th, 1849. His widow lives on the old homestead with the son Mark Keeney. Hiram W. Keeney and Myron Sturdevant were the pioneers in the Golden Hill district in 1844. Henry Champion, Ambrose Garey and his son Ambrose Garey, jr., located in Windham before 1800 and staid through life. Nathaniel Frost, and Asa, Rufus and Richard Graves were among the first settlers in the vicinity of Jenningsville; the latter located about 1810.

Elisha Sharp, born in Otsego county, N. Y., January 2nd, 1805, was a son of Abijah Sharp, who lost his life in the war of 1812. He was married November 26th, 1826, to Mary Bixby, of Chenango county, N. Y., and in 1832 came to Windham. He bought a large timber tract and built a saw-mill on Little Mehoopany creek. From 1856 to 1860 he lived at Tunkhannock, where he had a grist-mill. He died in Windham November 25th, 1870. He was justice of the peace for a time. His wife died December 10th, 1859.

Rufus Easton, an early settler and extensive lumberman in the southeastern part of the township, was born in Chenango county, N. Y., February 2nd, 1808; came to Windham in 1835, and died September 10th, 1845.

Silas F. Taylor, one of the first settlers at Jenningsville, was born in New York State, May 4th, 1795; married Anna Fellbush December 31st, 1815; came to North Flat in 1826, and to Jenningsville in 1828, and was for many years engaged in lumbering. Late in life he moved to North Branch township, where he died March 17th, 1879. His widow is in her eightieth year.

John A. Allen, still living at Jenningsville, is also an early settler. He was born in Otsego county, N. Y., January 30th, 1818; came to North Flat in 1828, and to Jenningsville in the next spring. His wife is a daughter of Asa Stevens, of Hemlock bottom. They were married February 9th, 1840. He followed farming and lumbering until 1861, then blacksmithing until 1875, when on account of failing eyesight he retired from active business.

Windham was covered with dense forests, chiefly of pine and hemlock, and lumbering was one of the principal occupations of the earliest settlers. Jonathan Whitney built a saw-mill on Little Mehoopany creek at or near Jenningsville in 1804. Others were built by Willis De Wolf, Silas S. Taylor, Elisha Sharp, Rufus Easton, Wyatt R. Allen and several others. The principal mills now are the Jennings mill, at Jenningsville; the Fassett mill, at Scottsville; and the Sharp mill, two miles west of Jenningsville. The two former are steam mills.

The first store was built and opened by Seth L. Keeney on North Flat, in December, 1835, and kept about six years. The old store building is still standing. From about 1853 Major John Fassett, with his sons, kept a store on his farm at Scottsville for several years. Hiram S.

Graves kept a store in the southern part of the township from 1857 to 1860, and then at Jenningsville.

The first post-office was, through the influence of Major John Fassett, established at Scottsville in 1826. It was named in honor of Judge David Scott, of Wilkes-Barre. Fassett was the first postmaster. The mail was carried from Tunkhannock to Towanda once a week on horse-back by Roswell Smith, afterward sheriff of Bradford county. A post-office was established at North Flat about 1838. Seth L. Keeney was postmaster until the office was discontinued, about 1845. The Golden Hill post-office was established about that time. Hiram W. Keeney was the first postmaster. The post-office at Jenningsville was established about 1855, and George Allen appointed postmaster. The office was first kept in John Fisk's dwelling; he was deputy postmaster.

Polly Stevens kept the first school in a log barn belonging to David Youngs, on Hemlock bottom, in the summers of 1799 and 1800. The first school-house (log) was built about 1801, near the site of the present one at Scottsville. The first teacher in it was Polly Youngs. The first school in the vicinity of Jenningsville was taught about 1827, by Mary A. Chappel, in a log house on the present farm of M. Graves. The following summer a school-house was built at Jenningsville, and a school kept in it by Miss Parmy Fassett, followed in the winter by David Lake. There are now seven good school buildings in Windham, in which schools are regularly kept.

The first passable road was opened from Hemlock bottom to Sugar Run in 1802 by Josiah Fassett, Joel Downing, David Youngs, Jonathan Stevens and Ebenezer Adams.

On the 12th of June, 1858, Daniel Detrick and two children were drowned by a flood which swept away two dams on French's creek and their house, a mile or more from its mouth.

JENNINGSVILLE

has been the site of a saw-mill since its earliest settlement and quite an extensive lumbering point. Jonathan Whitney had a saw-mill here or near by in 1805. Willis De Wolf built another here as early as 1815. Silas S. Taylor built a saw-mill in 1828, now a part of the present steam mill, which he owned in company with Samuel Kingsbury. In 1832 he built one a short distance below, near the present tannery. The present saw-mill, after having been rebuilt two or three times, came into the possession of William N. and J. T. Jennings, who enlarged and remodeled it, and in 1871 added steam power, and have been doing a good business.

The first settlers to remain here any length of time were Willis De Wolf, Silas S. Taylor, Samuel Kingsbury, one Partridge, John A. Allen and John A. Adams. The last came with his parents from Ohio to Forkston in 1816, and to Jenningsville about 1830, where he opened the first blacksmith shop and kept it till about 1870, when he removed to Bradford county, where he is still living.

Elijah Runnels, the first merchant here, began business about 1850, and Hiram S. Graves about 1860. Graves opened the first hotel about 1868.

The village has about 150 inhabitants, two general stores, the steam saw-mill and chop mill of Jennings & Brother, one wagon and two blacksmith shops and the Acme tannery. This tannery was built in 1872 by Peter E. Palmer. In 1877 it came into the possession of George W. Childs, who has since operated it, making sole leather exclusively. He has made the establishment first class in all respects. The building is of wood, 3 and 2 stories, 388 feet long and varying in width from 40 to 100 feet. It is operated by steam and has a capacity of 45,000 sides annually, giving constant employment to 35 men.

M. E. Church of Jenningsville.—Among those instrumental in the organization of a Methodist Episcopal class at Jenningsville were W. T. and W. E. Kethline, Charles and Alvah Fassett, Jonathan Fisk, Isaac Rosengrant and Jeffrey Hufford. It was a part of the Mehoopany church till 1869; then was independent until 1878, when it rejoined the Mehoopany church. Meetings have been kept up regularly in Jenningsville. The pastors from 1869 to 1878 were Revs. A. H. Sterling, 3 years; G. C. Lyman, 3; J. O. Beers, 2; J. F. Jones, 1. Since 1879 N. H. Davis, a resident local preacher, has supplied the pulpit. The membership is about 30. Meetings are held in the school-house.

THE CATHOLIC SOCIETY OF WINDHAM has a church in the southwest corner of the township which was built about 1856. The society was organized about 1850 and now consists of 30 families, living in Wyoming, Bradford and Sullivan counties.

GENEALOGICAL AND PERSONAL RECORD,

BRAINTRIM, FORKSTON, NORTH BRANCH AND WINDHAM TOWNSHIPS.

BRADLEY W. EDWARDS.

Bradley W. Edwards, of the firm of Edwards & Baldwin, has been successfully engaged in a general mercantile business at Laceyville since 1866. He was born in Laceyville, July 19th, 1843, and has been a lifelong resident of the place. He owns and manages a farm adjoining the village, and is largely interested in raising thoroughbred stock, making a specialty of Ayrshire and Jersey cattle, Cotswold sheep and Yorkshire swine, and being the first to introduce pure blooded specimens of these breeds in this section. He served during the late war in the quartermaster's department from the fall of 1864 till the close of the Rebellion.

MAJOR JOHN FASSETT.

Major John Fassett is the oldest living resident of Windham, and has been one of the most active, useful, influential and successful citizens of the township. He belongs with the pioneers of the township, having come here with his father, Josiah Fassett, in 1795. He was born in Windham county, Conn., September 16th, 1794. From the time he was fifteen years old he had the charge of his father's business until the latter's death, when he came into possession of that portion of the homestead upon which the buildings were located, and upon which he has always resided, having erected his present residence in 1824. He was married February 12th, 1818, to Sally Haverly, a native of Schoharie county, N. Y., an intelligent, kind hearted and hospitable lady and a devout Christian. Major Fassett has conducted successfully many branches of business, and has acquired an enviable competence. He has served in many official capacities, acting as justice of the peace for twenty years, and was commissioned major of militia.

B. E. WAKEMAN.

Benjamin E. Wakeman, merchant and postmaster, Laceyville, only son of General Bradley Wakeman, was born in Connecticut, April 24th, 1828, and came with his parents to Skinner's Eddy the same year, and to Laceyville in 1832, where he has been engaged in trade most of his life. He served as station agent at Laceyville for the Lehigh Valley Railroad ten years.

PERRY A. ADAMS, blacksmith at Jenningsville, is a native and lifelong resident of that place, born October 18th, 1837. He was married October 31st, 1861, to Margaret Bennett, of Meshoppen, who died September 29th, 1876.

SILAS O. ADAMS, son of John A. Adams, was born in Jenningsville, March 12th, 1846, and was married October 25th, 1870, to Matilda Preston, of Forkston. He owns and occupies the homestead in Windham where his father settled in 1858.

DAMON ALLEN, blacksmith at Jenningsville, son of John A. Allen, was born at Jenningsville, April 12th, 1844. From August 27th, 1864, he served through the civil war in Company A 207th Pa. volunteer infantry. He was married October 6th, 1866, to Mary Shumway, of Bradford county, and has one son.

MILAN BARNEY, proprietor of Table Rock House, Skinner's Eddy, was born June 26th, 1828, at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., where he served twenty-four years as foreman in the machine blacksmith shop of the Vulcan Iron Works. He was married September 19th, 1856, to Augusta Jenkins, of Wilkes-Barre, and located at Skinner's Eddy in the spring of 1877.

RICHARD BRUNGES was born in North Moreland township, October 4th, 1816, and was married November 10th, 1842, to Eunice Wilson, a native of the same town. He was a farmer and lumberman. From 1857 he lived on North Flat, opposite Laceyville, until his death, October 22nd, 1867. He held several township offices. His widow manages the homestead farm.

AUSTIN P. BURGESS, grandson of Colonel Joseph Burgess, is a native of Forkston, and was born January 11th, 1827. His wife, whose maiden name was Adams, is a descendant of one of the first settlers of the township. Mr. Burgess has been a merchant for many years, and is now conducting the largest store in the township. He has served as justice of the peace two terms (10 years), and during the Rebellion hired a substitute for the army, paying $600. He has a farm a short distance from the village, which is conducted by his son.

JOSEPH BURGESS was born in Braintrim township, in 1800. He now resides in Lovelton, and has lived in North Branch for the past fifty years. He is a farmer by occupation. Mr. Burgess held the office of justice of the peace thirty years, and served three years as jury commissioner.

FREDERICK EARL BURGESS was born in Forkston, in May, 1837, and early moved to Mehoopany with his parents, where he followed farming. He was married September 22nd, 1858, to Caroline E. Finney, of Mehoopany. He enlisted August 25th, 1862, in Company K 143d Pennsylvania regiment; returned in June, 1864, on a furlough, and died June 6th, 1865, from disease contracted in the army. In 1868 Mrs. Burgess bought her present farm.

BENJAMIN F. BUTTERFIELD was born in Lackawanna county, Pa., March 25th, 1849, and in 1869 commenced learning the tanners' trade. In 1874 he went to Sullivan county, N. Y., where he was married October 11th, 1876, to Jennie Holmes. Since the spring of 1877 he has been foreman of the Acme tannery.

NICHOLAS H. DAVIS was born in Carbondale, Pa., September 13th, 1841, where he was reared and educated. Most of his life has been spent in trade, principally as clerk. Upon reaching his majority he located at Wilkes-Barre, where he married Emma Wells, in November, 1865. In the fall of 1869 he removed to Mehoopany, united with the M. E. church and was subsequently licensed to preach. Since November, 1878, he has been pastor of the M. E. church of Jenningsville. He is also employed in the mercantile house of J. A. Kintner.

DANIEL DETRICK was born in Bradford county, January 31st, 1815, and was married in 1837 to Catharine McCormick. He followed blacksmithing until 1848, when he moved to Wyoming county and was engaged in farming until his death by drowning, June 12th, 1858. His widow lives at Skinner's Eddy. She was one of the sufferers from the flood which destroyed that village in 1865.

JEROME DETRICK, son of Daniel Detrick, was born in Bradford county, Pa., January 15th, 1845, and came to Wyoming county with his parents in 1848. He is a farmer, but now employed by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. He enlisted August 7th, 1862, in Company B 132nd Pennsylvania infantry, and served nine months. He again enlisted August 15th, 1864, and served until the close of the war. He was married September 13th, 1871, to Victoria Howard, who died May 26th, 1872.

DARIUS L. DOTY, wagon-maker at Jenningsville, was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., October 22nd, 1841. In his infancy he was adopted by William J. Knappen, of Mehoopany, whose name he assumed during his minority. LUZERNE COUNTY.

THE WYOMING MONUMENT.

A meeting was convened at the house of James Scovel, in Exeter township, on the 25th of November, 1809, to adopt measures for erecting a monument to the memory of those who perished in the battle and massacre of Wyoming on the 3d of July, 1778. A committee was appointed for each township in the county to collect funds. In about two months only $300 was collected, and here ended the matter for upwards of twenty-two years. In June, 1832, the bones of the victims of the battle and massacre were discovered in one common grave, on the farm of Fisher Gay. On the 3d of July following a meeting was held on the monument ground, and among the resolutions adopted was one thanking Fisher Gay "for his liberality in bestowing the ground necessary for the erection of a monument, and for his attention to the meeting." July 3d, 1833, the corner stone of the monument was laid by Elisha Blackman, a veteran, who was in the battle. A box was deposited in the stone by Samuel Carey, another survivor of the engagement. It contained a history of the early settlement of the valley, an account of the battle, a list of the names of those who fell in the engagement, a copy of the official report of the battle by Col. Z. Butler, a copy of the address delivered at the laying of the corner-stone, by Chester Butler; the muster roll of a company commanded by Captain Samuel Ransom, made out September 17th, 1777; copies of the addresses delivered by the Rev. Mr. May and the Rev. Mr. Murray at a former meeting, a piece of each denomination of United States coin, a copy of President Jackson's proclamation to the people of the United States in reference to the hostile attitude of South Carolina towards the Federal government, and a copy of each newspaper then published in the county. The bones of the slain were deposited in the ground, and prayer offered by Rev. John Dorrance. In 1839, 1841 and afterwards the General Assembly of Connecticut refused an appropriation of $3,000 to complete the monument. In 1841 patriotic ladies of Luzerne formed a society called the Luzerne Monumental Association. Mrs. C. Butler was made president, Mrs. Hollenback and Mrs. Carey vice-presidents, Mrs. Harrison Wright treasurer and Mrs. R. D. Carey secretary. They obtained donations at home and abroad, held a fair at Wilkes-Barre and raised a fund of $2,508. In order to raise funds the ladies had spread a monumental dinner in Kingston on the 24th of June, 1841. It was largely attended and the association realized a handsome return. Rev. T. P. Hunt, Colonel H. B. Wright and Dr. T. W. Miner delivered appropriate addresses. But the most united and general effort to secure the money requisite to complete the monument was made at the fair held in Wilkes-Barre on the 1st, 2nd and 3d of July following. By this fair the ladies obtained $2,200. This sum was expended, and a monument sixty-two and a half feet in height was raised, composed of the granite rocks of Luzerne. The inscriptions are given on page 305. In 1856 Fisher Gay sold his farm to Payne Pettebone. The deed contained provisions securing the monument site to the association. Mr. Pettebone sold the property to Moses Woodward, and he to Mr. Kesler and others, and their several deeds reiterated the same provisions.

At a meeting of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society, January 16th, 1864, Payne Pettebone, Hon. W. S. Ross and Colonel Charles Dorrance were named as a committee to collect funds for enclosing and improving the monument grounds. The fence was built and trees planted in the spring of 1864 by the Wyoming Monument Association, which was incorporated by an act approved April 3d, 1860.

The monument proper cost about $6,500. Including grounds, fencing, trees and shrubbery the cost was about $8,000.

M. E. CHAPEL, PLEASANT VALLEY.

The M. E. chapel was built in the autumn of 1878, and dedicated December 8th, 1878, by Rev. A. Griffin, of West Pittston. The first pastor was Rev. J. K. Wagoner. The present (first) board of trustees consists of George W. Shales, William Hollister, Henry Chapman and Courtland E. Rolls, of Pleasant Valley, and Jacob Welter, Charles Mathewson and Charles Hine, of Hughestown; stewards—William Bell and Jason L. Harris, of Pleasant Valley, Charles Mathewson and Charles Hine, of Hughestown.

The Sunday-school was organized as a Union Sunday-school in 1864. It was held in a school-house until the Presbyterian church was built; then in that church until January 1st, 1879; since in the chapel, with about 140 scholars and teachers. George W. Shales is the superintendent.

The church numbers about 40 members. Rev. Charles Sackett has been pastor since April 16th, 1880.

SHELDON REYNOLDS.

Sheldon Reynolds, third son of Hon. William C. Reynolds, was born at Kingston, Pa., February 22nd, 1845. He received his early education at the Wyoming Seminary, and graduated in the class of 1867 at Yale College. He read law with A. T. McClintock and was admitted in 1871. He is treasurer of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society. He married Annie B., only daughter of Colonel Charles Dorrance.

LACKAWANNA COUNTY.

LACKAWANNA IRON AND COAL COMPANY—W. W. SCRANTON'S RESIGNATION.

On the 8th of September, 1880, after our history of Scranton was printed, W. W. Scranton sent to the board of managers of the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company his resignation of the position of general superintendent of the company's works, to take effect three days later. The Scranton Republican gave the following account of the circumstances:

"The incident which gave rise to his resignation had its origin in connection with affairs at the Tilly Foster ore mines, Brewster's station, New York. For some time past Mr. Scranton suspected the superintendent of the mines, Andrew Cosgriff, of dishonesty in dealing with contractors, and for that reason sent Robert Reaves from this city with a view to learning him the business, so that he could take charge of the place. At the June meeting of the board of managers Mr. Scranton told them he intended to make Reaves superintendent as soon as he learned the business, as Cosgriff had been in collusion with two contractors named Delaney and McNamara, from whom he was getting a rebate of fifteen per cent. They did the hoisting of the ore, for which they were paid a dollar a ton. Their ordinary pay, which should not exceed $3 a day, was by this means increased to fabulous figures. Prior to that time they were earning only $2 a day in the mines. Cosgriff's salary was $200 a month. Scranton discharged him, but did not give him the reason, merely saying the company did not need his services any longer. Mr. Scranton informed the company of the fact, and the very next day the board reinstated Cosgriff in a position of trust, making him their real estate agent at that place without giving Mr. Scranton any notice whatever."

In his letter of resignation Mr. Scranton said:

"The action of our people in reappointing to a position of trust (without any notice whatever to me of their intention so to do, and on the very day after I had discharged him) of Andrew Cosgriff, of Tilly Foster mines, whom I had discharged because I suspected him of collusion with his contractors there, and of whose prospective discharge for that reason I notified our board at their June meeting, and of whom my suspicions have since been confirmed by the confession of his accomplices, appears to me treatment so extraordinary, so undeserved, so uncalled for, that I feel I can no longer, without loss of self respect, remain in the service of the company."

Continuing, he recounted his services to the company, recommended numerous improvements in the works, and expressed his heartiest good wishes for the company's prosperity. C. F. Mattes, who has been connected with the company in various capacities since 1841 (his father, Philip H. Mattes, having been one of the original investors in the enterprise), succeeded Mr. Scranton.

MINISTERIAL AND OFFICIAL CHANGES—REV. A. R. HOPPER.

Since the larger portion of this work was written there have been some changes of pastors of churches, many of officers of lodges and societies, and perhaps a few in the management of various business enterprises in the several cities, boroughs and townships of Luzerne, Lackawanna and Wyoming counties, Pa. Attention is directed particularly to the following items:

Rev. Dr. A. R. Hopper severed his pastoral relation with the Penn avenue Baptist church, Scranton, July 1st, 1880. Rev. David Spencer became pastor September 1st following. He was pastor of a church in Philadelphia thirteen years, and for three years secretary of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. He has occupied various positions of responsibility in the denomination, and gives the ripest years of his life to his new field of labor. Since the settlement of Mr. Spencer the church has been refurbished, and a new pipe organ, built by Messrs. Hook & Hastings, of Boston, has been put in.

Owing to the itinerant system of the Methodist church many changes of pastors have been made in churches of that denomination.

SCRANTON FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The name of Liberty Hose, jr., has been changed to Niagara. The following were the officers and membership of the fire companies at the time of publication:

Columbia Hose Company.—J. J. Mullen, foreman; Fredertek Leitner, assistant; Louis Schoen, secretary; 22 members.

There are 118 fire hydrants belonging to the city and 20 to companies and private individuals which can be used in case of fire. The city owns $20,000 worth of personal property in the hands of the fire department, and three engine houses, valued at $10,500. There are four steamers owned by the city. The amount of hose of the different companies is as follows: Neptune and Franklin, 750 feet each; Crystal Hose Company, Nay Aug and General Phinney, 1,000 feet; Liberty Hose Company and Relief Engine Company, 850 feet; Phoenix and Niagara, 350 feet; Columbia, 800 feet; Hand-in-Hand, 150 feet.

OLYPHANT.

The Welsh Congregational Church was organized by its present pastor, a resident of Greenfield, during the early years of the settlement of Olyphant. It has a chapel on Church street, in which services are held. The facts of the society's history could not be obtained, although applied for.

The Roman Catholic Church and parsonage on Church street are fine buildings. This was the first church organized in Olyphant, and it is the strongest—numerically and financially. Rev. P. A. O'Rorke, the pastor, is a thorough student and has proved himself the man for the place. A view of the church buildings appears elsewhere.

The Olyphant Brass Band was organized prior to 1861 and served in the army as a regimental band. The Edwards family (father and sons) were then its leading spirits. A few years since it was reorganized under the leadership of Mr. Thomas Mason, a well known musician.

ARCHBOLD.

The German Presbyterian Church was organized by Rev. Christian Lords, about 1852. It has passed through various financial troubles, having twice lost its building by fire, but now owns a neat and substantial brick edifice on River street. It was at one time connected with Montrose Presbytery, but owing to some misunderstanding it severed its connection with that body and is now independent.

JERMVN.

The Jermyn Silver Cornet Band was inaugurated by Professor Richard Jay, who has brought it to a fine state of proficiency. The band won a prize of $100 at a tournament, and in 1880 was a contestant for the Eistedfodd prize at Hyde Park, where its playing drew forth the highest encomiums from all present.

WYOMING COUNTY.

KEYSTONE ACADEMY, FACTORYVILLE,

an institution for the instruction of both sexes in arts and literature, was chartered in 1868. The institution owns 18 acres of woodland, improved as a campus; a brick edifice 100 by 50 feet, four stories high; a library of 600 volumes, apparatus and other school property, costing $30,000. The principal gifts have come from Edrick and James Frear, A. C. Sisson, Nathaniel Hallstead, Thomas Moore, H. H. Bailey and E. A. Coray, while many others have also made donations to the institution.

The school was organized in 1869, under John H. Harris as principal, and continued under his care ten years. During these years over 700 young men and women attended from several counties. In 1879, 150 students were in attendance, of whom 103 were from a distance; about two-thirds were pursuing academic studies.

After the resignation of Mr. Harris, in 1879, Rev. William C. Tilden, A. M., was principal one year. In July, 1880, Mr. Harris resumed the principalship. The office of lady principal has been held by Mrs. Hattie Bower, Mrs. Mary E. Harris, Miss Louisa A. Northup and Miss Sarah Tingley. Rev. John Ballantine has served the academy seven years with great acceptance in the chair of Ancient Languages. Other teachers have been F. E. Bower, A. M., C. C. Bower, W. E. Capwell, A. B. Fitch, D. W. Brown, James E. Frear, A. B., and others.

The institution maintains a boarding department, which has been from the beginning under the care of Mrs. Harriet Bailey, matron.
