

NOT LOANABLE

PERKINS LIBRARY

Duke University

Rare Books

GIVEN BY HIS DAUGHTER
MRS. R. DWIGHT WARE

DATE

June 17, 1931

V. Y. COOK
NOT LOANABLE

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2011 with funding from Duke University Libraries

<http://www.archive.org/details/confederateveter16conf>

V. Y. COOK,
NOT LOANABLE.

INDEX

---

CONFEDERATE VETERAN

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS

---

VOLUME XVI

---

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

---

NASHVILLE, TENN.

1908

INDEX—VOLUME XVI.

A Brave Boy—Scenes About Gettysburg.....	224	Cannoneer Under Jackson, A.....	192-xxi
A Critical Narrative.....	462	Capers, Col. Henry D. ....	278
Address by Major John W. Daniel.....	265	Captors of Gens. Crook and Kelley.....	279
Address by Al G. Field at Camp Chase.....	445	Carnage in First Maine Heavy Artillery.....	646
Address by Gen. S. D. Lee for Birmingham Reunion.....	318	Cavalry Expeditions in Georgia.....	261
Address by Gen. S. D. Lee to Union Officers at Vicksburg..	9	Chancellorsville to Fort Delaware.....	168
Address by Col. E. L. Russell at Birmingham Reunion.....	315	Children of the Confederacy.....	491
Address by Dr. J. F. Spence at Knoxville.....	580	Civil War Pensioners.....	179
Address, Memorial on Gen. S. D. Lee.....	317	Clare, Major, and Mary Hadley.....	399
Address of a Confederate Captain.....	120	Clark, Gen. John William, U. C. V. ....	62
Address of Brig. Gen. James R. Rains.....	209	O'Clinton, Alice Wright.....	500, 638
A Forgotten Hero, R. C. Kennedy.....	330	Coats, Uncle John.....	334
A Glad Hand from the North.....	7	Colors of Seventh Georgia Regiment.....	497
Allison, Bob.....	639	Comment of Union Veteran.....	331
A Lebanon Girl.....	635	Company C, Thirty-Third Kentucky.....	529
A Letter from Camp.....	332	Cotton Gin, The.....	499
American Commerce.....	192-xx	Cotton Still King.....	16
Anderson's Brigade at Sharpsburg.....	578	Cotton Tax for Confederate Pensions.....	298
Andersonville Prisoners and Exchange.....	124	Confederate Bible Society.....	235
Andersonville—Union Prisoners At.....	217	Confederate Cemetery at Thomasville, N. C. ....	514
Andrews' Raid.....	635	Confederate Choirs No. 1 of Arkansas and Missouri.....	380
Andrews the Raider.....	23-48-xi	Confederate Dead at Marietta, Ga. ....	373
Appeal for Organization.....	314	Confederate Dead on Johnson's Island.....	75
Armory Battalion at Green's Farm.....	314	Confederate Half Dollar.....	381
Arlington Cemetery and Monument.....	57, 258	Confederate Heroes, Living, of Houston, Tex. ....	350
A Rebel Spy.....	332	Confederate Home at Beauvoir.....	389
A Running Fight.....	648	Confederate Home of Kentucky.....	466
A Southern Boy.....	629	Confederate Homes, Visiting.....	180
A Study in Gray.....	633	Confederate Memorial Association.....	53
Attack on Federal Wagon Train.....	396, 491	Confederate Monuments for Tennessee.....	179
Authorship of Poem.....	389, 390, 467	Confederate Mothers, Wives, and Widows in Arkansas....	151
A Typical Confederate—Jesse Barker.....	114	Confederate Organizations Commended.....	274
		Confederate Pensions..112, 128, 210, 240-xli, 259, 353, 383, 485
Bail Bond of Jefferson Davis.....	213	Confederate Reunions, Spirit of.....	382
Barker, Jesse.....	114	Confederate Twins.....	410, 490
Bartow Artillery, The.....	14	Confederated Memorial Associations.....	614
Baskerville, Dr. R. D. ....	234	Confederates and the Two Flags.....	48-xii
Bate, Life of Gen. W. B. ....	424	Confederates in Mexican Army.....	382
Battlefield of Franklin.....	535	Confederates in Tacoma, Washington.....	353
Battle of Belmont.....	190, 345	Criticism of Jeb Stuart.....	152
Battle of Five Forks.....	403	Cross of Honor, Misuse of.....	583
Battle of Lookout Mountain at Night.....	638	Culberson, U. S. Senator C. A. ....	101
Battle of Marks Mills, Ark.....	233	Custer, General, and Rain-in-the-Face.....	463
Battle of Murfreesboro.....	391
Battle of Newmarket.....	569	Dahlgren's Raid, Prisoners Taken in.....	280
Battle of Perryville.....	225	Danger of Loaded Shells.....	396
Battle of Salem Church.....	61	Daring Deed in Saving "The David".....	78
Battle of Sharpsburg.....	20	Daring Method of Destroying Enemy's Ships.....	15
Battle of Shiloh.....	281, 344	Davidson, Maj. Hunter, Letter from.....	7
Battle of the Crater.....	159	Davis, Jefferson, A Judicial Estimate of.....	321
Battle of the Wilderness.....	447	Davis, Jefferson, and S. D. Lee.....	593
Battle of Williamsburg.....	447	Davis, Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln.....	245
Battle of Wilson's Creek.....	272	Davis, Jefferson, Birthday of.....	41
Beginning of the End.....	185	Davis, Jefferson, Birthday at Fairview, Ky. ....	309
Bidwell, Maj. Bell G. ....	409	Davis, Jefferson, Birthplace of.....	197
Birmingham, Beginnings of.....	206	Davis, Jefferson, Birthplaces of, and Lincoln.....	71
Birmingham, Gratitude to.....	389	Davis, Jefferson, Book Owned by.....	261
Birmingham, Praises for.....	313	Davis, Jefferson, Centenary of.....	198
Black Eagle Company, Va. ....	584	Davis, Jefferson, Concise Points in Life of.....	191
Blakely in New Orleans Fifty Years Ago.....	91	Davis, Jefferson, Escort to.....	121, 263, 328
Bombardment of Carlisle, Pa. ....	262	Davis, Jefferson, Estimate of.....	496, 642
Bowen, Grave of Gen. John S. ....	159	Davis, Jefferson, First Cabinet of.....	48
Boyd, Col. David French.....	192-xxvii	Davis, Jefferson, Honor Memory of.....	55
Bragg and Forrest, Generals.....	192-xxvii	Davis, Jefferson, Justice for.....	69
Breathed, Maj. James.....	574	Davis, Jefferson, Memorial Windows at Biloxi.....	174
Breckenridge's Losses at Murfreesboro.....	73	Davis, Jefferson, New Englander on.....	214
Breech-Loading Cannon.....	44, 581, 625	Davis, Jefferson, on Equestrianism.....	53
Brown's Execution, John.....	395, 647	Davis, Jefferson, Soldier Guard of.....	182
Burial of Enemy's Dead—Rules for.....	208, 230	Davis, Jefferson, to Mississippians.....	240-xxxix
		Davis, Jefferson, Tribute to.....	494
Cabells, The.....	562	Davis, Jefferson, Portrait of, at Beauvoir.....	272
Cabin John Bridge.....	249	Davis, Memorial Window to Mrs. Davis.....	106
Campbell, R. M. and J. H., Twins.....	410	Davis, Recollections of Family.....	249
Camp Douglas Ladder, A.....	442	Davis's, Jefferson, Arrest by Confederates.....	648
Camp Douglas, Inspectors at.....	406	Davis's, Jefferson, Bond, Made Mark on.....	255
Camp Douglas Prison in 1865.....	421	Davis's, Jefferson, Regiment in Mexico.....	264

K 30
10-1-15

Davis, Sam.....	522, 560	Hampton's Legion and Hood's Brigade.....	342
Dead Angle.....	230	Hancock's Tribute, Gen.....	645
Defense of High Bridge.....	394	Hard Tack.....	490
Defense of Richmond, Last.....	397	Harris, Joel Chandler.....	425
DeRosset Letter, The.....	18-xiii	Heiskells, The, of Memphis.....	179
Deserters Shot at Shelbyville.....	128	Herbert, Maj. Sidney.....	262
Destruction of Federal Gunboats.....	347	Heroic Tennessee Women.....	128
Dixie to a New Air.....	591	Heroine of the War.....	500
Dodd, David O.....	461	Heroism Brought to Light.....	191
Duel Between A. S. Johnston and General Huston.....	460	Heroism of Union Officer at Port Hudson.....	128
Dunovant, Gen. John.....	183	Hill, Gen. A. P., at Sharpsburg.....	346
		Hood's Brigade at Sharpsburg.....	19
Easley, Jim.....	393	Hood's Failure at Spring Hill.....	25
Editorial ..8, 56, 104, 152, 208, 252, 312, 376, 410, 488, 552.....	616	Hood's Tennessee Campaign.....	192
Electrical Submarine Mine.....	456	How A. S. Johnston Died.....	629
Eleventh Tennessee Infantry.....	420	How Fort Pulaski Was Captured.....	379
Endurance of Confederate Women.....	649	How General Sedgwick Was Killed.....	347
English Man-of-War at Fort Sumter.....	496	How Johnny Got Some Blankets.....	513
Escape from Point Lookout.....	12	How Richmond Was Defended.....	111
Escape of Federal Prisoners.....	391	How the Six Hundred Officers Fared.....	81
Evans, Gen. C. A.....	312	How Three Men Held an Army in Check.....	368
Evans, Gen. C. A., Letter on the Veteran.....	553	Humor and Pathos in the Army.....	277
Evans, Admiral, Confederates Honor.....	273	Humorous Features and Tragedies.....	126
Expensive Experience for a Pistol.....	115	Hunt, Maj. George B.....	353
Experience in Richmond Hospitals.....	223	Hunted Up His Old Master.....	439
Experiences in Prison, Vivid.....	216
Experiences in War Times, Disagreeable.....	408	Illinois Confederate Company, The.....	221
Experiences of Hood's Campaign.....	187	Inquiries for Veterans.....	111, 347, 590, 627
Extracts from Letters of Veterans.....	277	Inscription for Confederate Banners.....	493
Ezekiel, Sir Moses.....	627	Interests of Railroads and the People.....	89
Fatted Calf, The.....	173	Jackson, Tribute to Stonewall.....	167
Favors Confederates, Gov. Swanson.....	139	Jamestown, Fifty Years Ago.....	111
Federal Colonel Sought, A.....	642	Jefferson Davis Home Ass'n ..5, 55, 101, 197, 379, 485, 492, 549.....	549
Federal Pensions for Confederates, Opposed to.....	81	Jefferson Davis Memorial Park.....	614
Federal Soldier Fulfilled His Promise.....	114	Jennings, Tipton Davis.....	298
Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry Reunion.....	347	Jereboam and Rehoboam.....	173
Fight at Hatchie's Bridge.....	632	Jerseymen Honor Alabamians.....	250
Fight at Mt. Sterling, Ky.....	514	Johnson's Island.....	575
First Demand for Lee's Surrender.....	282	Johnson's Island, A Visit to.....	76, 273
First Soldier Killed in the War.....	379-494	Johnson's Island Experiences.....	614
First Submarine Boat in Actual Warfare.....	71-563	Johnson's Island, Fare of Prisoners.....	429
Flag of Thirteenth Alabama.....	583	Johnson's Island, Inside Testimony.....	517
Flag of the Twelfth Georgia Artillery.....	113-254	Johnson's Island Reminiscences.....	168
Flag Raising at Arkansas Confederate Home.....	180	Johnson's Island, Union Officers on.....	222
Florence Nightingale of the South.....	511	Johnson's West Virginia Raid.....	166
Florida in Statuary Hall.....	256	Junior Sons of Veterans—S. A. C. Camp.....	210-xxxviii
Foreigners against the Confederacy.....	402
Forrest's Cavalry Corps at Birmingham.....	205	Kalamazoo, Michigan.....	592
Forrest's Cavalry, Officers of.....	192-xxvi	Kennedy, R. C.....	330
Forrest's Escort and Staff, Reunion of.....	566	Kentucky Troops in Confederate Army.....	413, 493, 597
Forrest's Men Captured at Parker's Cross Roads.....	73	Killing of Fatted Calf Suggested.....	102
Fort Pillow Site.....	625	Kindness of Southern Women Remembered.....	615
Forts Pemberton and Loring.....	643	Kind Words from the Other Side.....	580
Fortunes of a Boy under Forrest.....	108	King, General W. H.....	395
Fort Warren Prisoners.....	519	King's Battery, Battle Engaged in by.....	456
Fourth Louisiana Infantry.....	261, 299	Kingsbery, Sanford T.....	329
Fraternal Spirit among True Veterans.....	590	Kirkland, Richard B.....	195
From Palmetto, Ga., to Defeat at Nashville.....	257	Kimble, Captain "June," Tribute to.....	59
From the Other Side at Franklin.....	554
		Last Defense of Richmond.....	397
Gallantry among Brave Men.....	375	Last Gun Fired in Johnston's Army.....	338
G. A. R. Memorial to Gen. S. D. Lee.....	439, 626	Last Shots of General Johnston's Army.....	585
G. A. R., Ransom Post, St. Louis.....	248	Laurel Brigade, The.....	91
Gave His Flour to Women and Children.....	18	Law Concerning Subscriptions, New.....	54
Gavel from Famous Tree.....	351	Lay Them Away in Coats of Gray.....	169
Gay, Miss M. A. H.....	633	Lee, Gen. Fitzhugh, in Havana.....	188
General Officers C. S. A.....	45, 74	Lee, Robert Edward, A Present Estimate.....	657
Generous Act of Judge Shields.....	104	Lee, Robert Edward, At Petersburg.....	514
Georgia Secession Convention.....	158	Lee, Robert Edward, Medallion of, and Staff.....	486
Gettysburg, Scenes about.....	229	Lee, Robert Edward, Memorial Service in Montgomery.....	240-xli
Girls' Confederate Home.....	559	Lee's, Gen. Stephen D., Memorial Address on.....	317
Gordon's Brigade at the Wilderness.....	641	Lee's, Gen. Stephen D., Memorial to.....	521
Grant, Fred, as a Boy with the Army.....	10	Lee's, Gen. Stephen D., Memorial by G. A. R.....	439, 626
Grant, General, Praise.....	111	Lee's, Gen. Stephen D., Memorial in Oklahoma.....	390
Grant's First Service in the War.....	62	Lee's, Gen. S. D., Home Life.....	386
Grave of Stonewall Jackson's Mother.....	106	Lee's, General, Coffin.....	645
Grave of Two Officers at Macon, Ga.....	294	Lee's, General, Faith in Success.....	362
Great War Song Was Cheap.....	231	Lee's, General, Service to St. Louis.....	298
		Lee's, General, Staff.....	336
Hampton, Wade, and W. T. Sherman.....	518	Lee's, General, To a Careless Student.....	155

Lee, Gen. Stephen D. ....	310, 314	North Carolina Troops at Gettysburg.....	516
Lee, Gen. Stephen D., and President Davis.....	593	Northern Sentiment, Tendency of.....	382
Lees-McRae Institute.....	626	Northern Side at Murfreesboro.....	63
Letter Delivered After Many Years.....	407	Officers in C. S. A. ....	45, 74
Letter from Maj. F. C. Low.....	619	Omission in Court Record.....	566
Letters from Veterans.....	348	One of General Lee's Scouts.....	119
Levi Strauss, the Spy.....	17	Ordnance Matters at the Close.....	227
Logan, Gen. John Leroy.....	16, 112	Origin of Yankee.....	394
Logan's, General, Relation to the Government.....	311	Oldest Confederate Soldier.....	260, 352, 379
Low, Letter from Maj. Fred C. ....	619	Oldest Twin Brothers.....	569
Lubbock, Master W. F. ....	176	Oldest Veterans, One of.....	260
Mahone's Men at the Crater.....	48-111	Old Soldiers on Things That Didn't Occur.....	79
Maintenance of Ex-Presidents.....	89	O'Shaughnessy, Michael J. ....	110
Massenburg, Capt. Thomas L. ....	630	Panama Canal Work.....	170
McClellan, Gen. George B., and A. P. Hill.....	178	Pelham, The Gallant.....	454
McClellan, Gen. George B., Was Not a Traitor.....	81	Pensions for Confederates.....	.81, 112, 128, 210, 240-xii, 259, 353, 383, 485
McClure's Article Criticised.....	390	Percentage of Regimental Loss.....	437
McDonald, J. E. and S. D., Tribute to.....	388	Perry, Judge H. H. ....	283
McEvoy, Ambrose, Inventor.....	352	Peter, Capt. W. G. ....	16
Medallion of Gen. R. E. Lee and Staff.....	486	Plea for Peace Throughout the World.....	8
Medical Officers' Association.....	200	Preaching in the Confederate Army.....	18
Memorable Event in a Richmond Church.....	71	Prisoners Charged a Kentucky Orchard.....	573
Memorial Day.....	233	Private Soldier Life—Humorous Features.....	161
Memorial Day at Camp Chase.....	362	Prize for Essay on Jefferson Davis.....	179
Memorial Day in Jacksonville.....	337	Prize Paper of Columbia College.....	48-xi, 657
Memorial Services to Gen. R. E. Lee in Montgomery.....	240-xli	Race of the Texas and the General.....	22
Memorial to Bill Arp.....	596	Railroads in America.....	80
Memorial to Gen. George Moorman.....	500	Rains, Gen. James E. ....	390
Memorial Volume.....	573	Rebel Twins in Two Companies.....	79
Memorial Windows at Biloxi.....	150	Reckless Little Towhead.....	80
Memories of War Times.....	516	Reconstruction in Cuba.....	294
Merrimac, The.....	192-xvii	Record of an Infantry Company.....	529
Miles Cary's Report Criticised.....	398	Records of Confederate Days.....	78
Military Carnival at Louisville, Ky. ....	632	Reddick, Capt. John.....	330
Monteagle for a Quarter Century.....	48-xiii	Regimental Losses.....	645
Monument at Arlington.....	.57, 149, 150, 240-xli, 256, 297, 311, 437, 489, 567, 625	Relics of the Confederacy.....	77
Monument at Bentonville, Ark. ....	494	Reminiscences—Interesting and Pleasing.....	157
Monument at Birmingham.....	422	Reminiscences of a Scout.....	186
Monument at Brandon, Miss. ....	109	Reminiscences of Franklin.....	76
Monument at Cassville, Ga. ....	76	Reminiscences of Fredericksburg.....	636
Monument at Corsicana, Tex. ....	210	Reminiscences of General Sherman.....	352
Monument at Gainesville, Tex. ....	377	Reminiscences of Murfreesboro.....	449
Monument at Leesburg, Va. ....	521	Reminiscences of Shiloh.....	577
Monument at Lumpkin, Ga. ....	260	Remnant of the Confederate Army.....	343
Monument at Mt. Pleasant, Tenn. ....	270	Respite from Hard Service.....	448
Monument at Owingsville, Ky. ....	393	Reunion Brigade at Sparta.....	620
Monument at Oxford, Miss. ....	59	Reunion Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry.....	347
Monument at Raymond, Miss. ....	441	Reunion Forrest's Escort and Staff.....	566
Monument at Parksley, Va. ....	629	Reunions, State Support of.....	104
Monument at Richmond, Ky. ....	382	Richmond Hospital, Experience in.....	223
Monument at Thomaston, Ga. ....	927	Rock Island Prison.....	346, 394
Monument at Shiloh.....	498, 769	Rodes, Gen. Robert E. ....	269
Monument Built by a Railroad.....	73	Rountree, Mrs. J. A. ....	378
Monument for Atlanta.....	640	Royce, Rev. Moses Strong.....	622
Monument for Gen. A. S. Johnston.....	481	Scouting in Georgia.....	335, 519
Monument to Confederate Women.....	424	Scouting in Virginia.....	411
Monument to Emma Sansom at Gadsden, Ala. ....	353	Secession Convention, Georgia.....	158
Monument to General Forney, Location of.....	439	Second South Carolina Regiment on Marye's Heights.....	446
Monument to Gen. S. D. Lee at Vicksburg.....	594	Seeks Brother's Bible.....	331
Monument to Immortal Six Hundred.....	423	Sentiment of a True Volunteer Soldier.....	438
Monument to Sam Davis.....	312, 375, 437, 485, 613	Service Under Jackson.....	500
Monuments, Beautiful and Durable.....	92	Seventh Tennessee Cavalry.....	561
Monuments, Kind to Erect.....	48-xii	Sharing Credit with General Wheeler.....	343
Moorman Memorial Association.....	311	Sherman, General, and Major Boyd.....	125
Moorman Monument and Fund.....	594, 615	Sherman, General, Reminiscences of.....	352
Morton, Hugh T., Jr. ....	382	Shiloh—Incidents and Inquiries.....	102
My Black Mammy.....	476	Sixteen Soldiers of Two Families.....	151
My Maryland.....	535	Sixty-Second Virginia at New Market.....	60, 461
My Old Confederate.....	616	Slave History in Tennessee.....	124
My Old Kentucky Home.....	619	Smith, Portrait of Col. Austin.....	404
Murfreesboro, Before the Battle.....	631	Smith, Gen. Kirby, and Bushford Johnson.....	639
Muster Roll Company C, Forty-Third Alabama.....	150	Soldiers Old and Young.....	514
Nashville Booster Club.....	427	Southern History—Tennessee.....	201
Naval and Training Station for Norfolk.....	394	Southern Sentiment.....	510
Neglect of Veterans at Reunions.....	115, 203
Nerve of a Camp Chase Prisoner.....	71
New Jersey Estate.....	535
New Orleans Fifty Years Ago.....	91
New York Camp Report, Error in.....	189

Southern Women of the War Period..... 127 Speaking the Truth in Love..... 109 Steuart, Henry A. .... 332 Stewart, Gen. A. P., Tributes to..... 594 Story of a Cuban Girl..... 48-ii Stringer, Mrs. Sheldon, Tribute to..... 51 Stuart, Jeb, Not at Carlisle, Pa..... 616 Stuart, Jeb, Criticisms of..... 152, 262 Subscription Fund for Veterans..... 251 Suggestions for Veterans..... 619 Swanson, Governor, Favors Confederates..... 139 Swett's Battery ..... 595 Taylor, Colonel William F. .... 124 Texans at Murfreesboro..... 574 Texas Woman Stands for Dixie..... 376 The Man Behind the Gun..... 387 The Old Black Hen..... 395 The Uncrowned King..... 416 Thirteenth Virginia Infantry..... 339 Thirtieth Tennessee, Company A..... 616 Thomas, John W., Memorial..... 55 Thomas's, Gen. G. H., Side in the War..... 126 Thomas's Letter to Governor Leitcher..... 222 Thompson, Maj. John C., of Mississippi..... 585 Three Hundred Miles in a Wagon..... 505 Thrilling Time in Nashville, A..... 438 Thrill of Dixie in Birmingham..... 520 Tompkins, Capt. Sally..... 72 Traveling Library in California..... 426 Tribute to the Veteran..... 115 Trip to Richmond in 1863..... 623 Typical Letter of War Times..... 156 Union Soldiers on Captain Gully..... 125 Union Veterans in the South..... 54 U. C. V., Adjutant General Texas Division..... 488 U. C. V., Arkansas Veterans in Pope County..... 429 U. C. V., Camp of Apalachicola, Fla..... 223 U. C. V., Choirs of America..... 204 U. C. V., "Eastern Shore" Virginia Confeds..... 628 U. C. V., Major General Georgia Division..... 62 U. C. V., Officers East Georgia Brigade..... 191, 223 U. C. V., Officers Tennessee Division..... 615 U. C. V., Reunion Alabama State Division..... 615 U. C. V., Reunion Arkansas Division..... 630 U. C. V., Reunion at Birmingham..... 198, 309 U. C. V., Reunion at Columbus, Miss..... 491 U. C. V., Reunion at Timothy, La..... 556 U. C. V., Reunion Committee Chairman..... 205 U. C. V., Reunion Floral Parade..... 375 U. C. V., Reunion Florida Division..... 6 U. C. V., Reunion Georgia Division..... 556 U. C. V., Reunion Getting Ready for..... 204 U. C. V., Reunion Grand Camp Virginia Division..... 616 U. C. V., Reunion Historical Address..... 384 U. C. V., Reunion J. B. Babb's Work for..... 439 U. C. V., Reunion Mississippi Division..... 594 U. C. V., Reunion Missouri Sponsors and Maids of Honor..... 492 U. C. V., Reunion North Carolina Division..... 437 U. C. V., Reunion Official Notice..... 149 U. C. V., Reunion Sponsors' Ball..... 205 U. C. V., Reunion South Carolina Division..... 119 U. C. V., Reunion Tennessee Division..... 567 U. C. V., Reunion Texas Division..... 501 U. C. V., Reunions in Virginia..... 582 U. C. V., Titles..... 352, 582, 599 U. D. C. .... 57, 298 U. D. C., Alabama Division..... 240-xli U. D. C. at Appomattox..... 376 U. D. C. at Jacksonville, New Chapter..... 378 U. D. C. at Monteagle..... 474 U. D. C. at Norfolk..... 5, 64 U. D. C., Chapter Plans for Building Monuments..... 92 U. D. C., Chapters Named for Officers..... 491 U. D. C. Convention in Atlanta..... 617 U. D. C., Convention Kentucky Division..... 626 U. D. C., Forrest Chapter at Muscogee, Okla..... 129	U. D. C., Gavel from Beauvoir..... 297 U. D. C., Gavels..... 383 U. D. C., General Convention..... 251 U. D. C., Kennesaw Chapter..... 620 U. D. C., Letter of President..... 281, 489 U. D. C., Montana Division..... 179 U. D. C., Notice to Chapters..... 487 U. D. C., North Carolina Division..... 64, 66 U. D. C., Object and Mission of Organization..... 67 U. D. C. of Georgia..... 251 U. D. C. of Philadelphia..... 179, 240-xli U. D. C., Report Maryland Division..... 65 U. D. C., Tennessee Division..... 58, 138, 200, 559 U. D. C., Texas Division..... 176 U. D. C., Texas Division State Officers..... 5 U. D. C., Reception to New York Chapter..... 103 U. S. C. V. .... 380 U. S. C. V., Louisiana Division..... 187 U. S. C. V., New Camp in Florida..... 188 U. S. Pensions for Confederates..... 112, 210, 240-xli, 259 Van Meter, Capt. C. J. .... 379 Virginia Military Institute..... 15 Virginia Patriotism ..... 351 War Records at Washington..... 489, 596 War Relics ..... 624 What a Letter May Do..... 334 Whitworth Rifle Sharpshooters..... 172 Who Climbed the Flag Pole at Camp Chase?..... 79 Why Sharpsburg Was a Drawn Battle..... 160 Wigstrand, Mrs. Fred..... 598 Wilson's Creek Fight..... 233 Wirz, Maj. Henry..... 199 Wirz, Maj. Henry, Justification of..... 253 Without Casus Belli..... 280 Wright, Capt. W. T., Birthday of..... 438 Word from the Other Side..... 6 Would Cremate Confederate Flags..... 188 Woman's Wit vs. Federal Vigilance..... 400 Wyeth, John A., Jr. .... 618 Young, Beverly, of Mississippi..... 565 Youngest Soldiers, One of..... 563 Young Southern Author..... 618 Zuber, Gertie Rogers..... 294
---	--

POEMS.

Ancient Ode to Deity..... 212 An Invocation—Father Time..... 613 A Reverie ..... 598 Arlington ..... 189 A Soldier's Canteen..... 648 A Statue ..... 521 Battlefield of Frank'in..... 555 Bivouac of the Gray..... 242 Bravest Deed of the War..... 240-xliii Confederate Veterans ..... 410 Dirge for Stephen D. Lee..... 371 Dixie ..... 51 Dixie Land ..... 306, 520, 600 Dixie—Other Words for..... 361 Do They Love Us Still in Dixie?..... 320 Forrest's Chief of Artillery..... 232 Gallant Deed at Murfreesboro..... 192-xxi God's Acre ..... 419 Heroes in Gray..... 41 I Am Dreaming..... 635 Jim of Biloxi..... 192-xxix
--

Confederate Veteran.

Kennedy's Death Song.....	330	Confederate Home of Tennessee.....	181
Lest We Forget.....	93	Cottage of Mrs. Hoss at Monteagle.....	48-xii
Life Down South.....	640	Davis, Jefferson, Home Association Certificate.....	545
Morton at His Guns.....	423	Davis Memorial Windows at Biloxi.....	174
My Flag.....	192	Decorations of Captain Massenburgh's Grave.....	631
Night in the South.....	566	Design for Sam Davis Statue.....	433, 528
O Dixie Weep!.....	48-iv	Duke, Mrs. L. Z., in Birmingham Reunion Parade.....	467
Old Blandford Church.....	48-iii	Fairview, Ky.: Grounds from Yancey's Corner.....	551
Pickett's Sword.....	147	Group at Home of R. F. Vaughan.....	619
Reinforce the Right.....	362	Dr. Stuart's Home.....	551
Remembrance—By Father Ryan.....	343	Woosley Grounds and Home.....	551
Richard B. Kirkland.....	426	Fighting Their Battles Still.....	305
Robert Edward Lee.....	74	Forrest's Headquarters.....	297
Rodes's Brigade at Seven Pines.....	270	Gathering at Kentucky Confederate Home.....	466
Sackett Harbor.....	240-xliv	Grave of Stonewall Jackson's Mother.....	107
St. Andrew's Cross.....	211	Group at Birmingham Reunion.....	310-11
Sam Davis.....	609	Junior Sons of Confederate Veterans.....	240-xxxviii
Stonewall Jackson.....	167, 515, 405	Map of Spring Hill, Tenn.....	29
Stuart's Veterans at His Monument.....	17	Methodist Publishing House, New.....	481
Taps.....	48-xiv	Military Medallion—General Lee's Staff.....	486
The Alternative.....	146	Monument at Bentonville, Ark.....	494
The Apotheosis of Jefferson Davis.....	475	Monument at Birmingham.....	422
The Battle of Franklin.....	598	Monument at Brandon, Miss.....	109
The Boy Hero of the War.....	528	Monument at Corsicana, Tex.....	211
The Confederate Flag.....	567	Monument at Gainesville, Tex.....	377
The Crater.....	601	Monument at Leesburg, Va.....	521
The Crown of Life.....	564	Monument at Lumpkin, Ga.....	260
The Dead Cannoneer.....	455	Monument at Marietta, Ga.....	369
The Death of Jackson.....	166	Monument at Mount Pleasant, Tenn.....	270
The Letter That Came Too Late.....	271	Monument at Owingsville, Ky.....	393
The Old Battlefields.....	464	Monument at Oxford, Miss.....	59
The Old Bugles.....	99	Monument at Parksley, Va.....	629
The Old Gray Coat.....	94	Monument at Raymond, Miss.....	441
The Song of Forrest's Men.....	73	Monument at Ripley, Tenn.....	44
The South Is Going Dry.....	283	Monument at Rusk, Tex.....	103
The Southern Cross at Arlington.....	123	Monument at Thomaston, Ga.....	629
The Unknown.....	662	Monument Built by a Railroad.....	73, 453
The Veterans' Cross of Honor.....	297, 585	Monument (U. S.) to A. S. Johnston.....	48-1
To Schonberg.....	618	Monument to Bill Arp.....	596
U. D. C. Prize Poem.....	222	Nashville Boosters in Mississippi.....	427
Uncle Remus.....	425	Officers of Confederate Home of Kentucky.....	465
Warriors Gray.....	513	Officers of Forrest's Cavalry.....	192-xxvi
What Did the Privates Do?.....	194	Old Blandford Church, Interior.....	48-iii
		Outing Party at Monteagle.....	48-xiii
		Prisoners at Fort Warren.....	519
		Prize Winner in Floral Parade at Birmingham.....	375
		Scenes at Kentucky Confederate Home.....	411
		Scenes on the Way.....	106
		Survivors First South Carolina Regiment.....	200
		Thomas Statue at Centennial Park, Nashville.....	49

ILLUSTRATIONS.

A "Kodak".....	208
Altuzarra Residence, Havana.....	295
Bail Bond of Jefferson Davis.....	213
Beauvoir, Glimpses of.....	181
Beauvoir, On the Lawn At.....	263
Birmingham Views: Brown-Marx Building.....	206
City Hall.....	207
City Park.....	204
Hillman Hotel.....	193
Hillman Hospital.....	207
First National Bank.....	207
Hippodrome.....	204
Morris Hotel.....	297
New Union Depot.....	206
School Building.....	206
Woodward Building.....	207
Veterans' Home at Reunion.....	204
Birthplace of Jefferson Davis.....	549
Church of the Redeemer at Biloxi, Miss.....	145
Confederate Home of Arkansas.....	182
Confederate Home of Louisiana.....	180

LAST ROLL.

Abbott, Joe.....	358, 415	Andrew, J. O.....	240-xxxvii
Adair, J. L.....	192-xxv	Arrington, James E.....	418
Agee, G. F.....	289	Austin, Green B.....	415
Alexander, J. H.....	287	Autrey, G. M.....	239, 357
Alexander, R. P.....	359	Barbee, Sampson.....	284
Alexander, W. F.....	289	Bayly, Capt. J. P.....	588
Allen, B. M.....	293	Bayne, Dr. L. F.....	238
Allen, C. A.....	240-xxxvii	Beall, Dr. J. F.....	192-xxiii
Allen, J. O.....	473	Beall, William.....	288
Alleyn, Martin.....	240-xxxv	Beall, W. X.....	356
Allison, R. A.....	137	Beaver, R. S.....	470
Allison, W. P.....	293	Beckett, Capt. J. W.....	415
Allison, W. T.....	48-v, 358	Bell, Capt. C. D.....	416
Anderson, A. F.....	240-xxxv	Bell, George.....	287
Anderson, A. M.....	652

Confederate Veteran.

Best, John E. ....	359	Derrick, Col. C. ....	418	Hickman, Mrs. E. A. ....	419	McLean, Robert B. ....	534
Booth, W. L. ....	358	DeShields, A. M. ....	48-x	Hickok, H. H. ....	289	McNary, F. M. ....	358
Bierkamp, W. E. ....	653	Dickey, J. W. ....	88	Hickok, S. M. ....	133	McWhorter, Maj. R. L. . .	359
Bilisoly, Dr. A. L. ....	48-ix	Dillard, R. T. ....	237	Hill, James A. ....	358	Medlock, Dr. B. S. ....	589
Billymyer, Capt. M. J. ....	284	Dismukes, J. P. ....	287	Hillman, Mrs. M. G. ....	292	Miller, James S. ....	360
Blakely, A. R. ....	291	Dix, R. G. ....	192-xxv	Hinkle, A. M. ....	82	Miller, Col. W. A. ....	288
Bragg, A. V. ....	587	Dodd, Ira ....	130	Hinson, James H. ....	48-vi	Mims, Dr. W. D. ....	134
Bragg, Mrs. Braxton ....	586	Douglas, Dr. A. M. ....	358	Hodges, J. C. ....	286, 293	Mooney, Rev. W. ....	48-viii
Brightman, W. M. ....	356-8	Downing, W. P. ....	287	Holcomb, C. C. ....	134	Montroy, H. C. ....	48-iv
Brittingham, W. F. ....	417	Duffy, Capt. Frank ....	355	Holcomb, J. K. P. ....	360	Montgomery, William...	288
Brock, Drew ....	587	Duncan, T. S. ....	287	Holloway, Joseph ....	48-ix-418	Morris, R. B. ....	285, 289
Brooks, S. D. ....	586	Duncan, Bishop W. W. ...	237	Holshonbock, T. L. ....	289	Mottes, Allan ....	357
Broun, Capt. William ....	357	Eakin, Spencer ....	48-ix	Hope, J. Ed ....	83, 192-xxii	Myers, J. H. ....	359
Brown, C. A. ....	287	Eakin, Spencer ....	240-xxxv	Hough, Col. Robert . . .	116, 290	Nance, J. B. ....	240-xxxvi
Brown, C. B. ....	285	Edwards, S. T. ....	356	Hudson, J. N. ....	416	Neel, Allen G. ....	416
Brown, H. C. ....	418	Eleazer, S. G. ....	417, 587	Hunton, Gen. Eppa ....	589	Neeson, Dr. H. ....	48-x
Brown, H. J. ....	290	Elmore, V. M. ....	240-xxxvii	Ingram, Charles T. . . .	192-xxii	Nolley, T. S. ....	414
Brown, J. M. ....	139	Elliott, J. J. ....	358	Irion, Dr. John T. ....	531	Oakley, Mrs. Timothy...	136
Brown, W. A. ....	655	Embrey, R. G. ....	285	Irvin, Capt. A. C. ....	192-xxii	O'Brien, John W. ....	290
Bryan, J. L. ....	240-xxxvii	Emerson, A. D. ....	131	Irvin, John F. ....	471	Odenheimer, Dorothea S. .	132
Buchanan, Maj. F. G. ....	135	Emerson, John A. ....	130	Jackson, Col. George ...	133	Olney, C. C. ....	358
Buchels, Rev. W. N. ....	239	Estill, Col. J. H. ....	240-xxxv	Janney, W. B. ....	240-xxxvii	O'Neal, A. ....	192-xxv
Buist, Dr. J. R. ....	240-xxxvi	Etheredge, Maj. W. H. . .	359	Jamison, Mrs. C. P. ....	587	Onstead, G. L. ....	239
Burnett, Capt. H. C. ....	288	Everett, George W. ....	471	John, Peter Monroe....	471	O'Steen, Judge J. O. ....	530
Bush, Rev. George P. ....	289	Everett, J. A. ....	655	Johnson, W. P. ....	239, 415	Palsgrove, A. S. ....	239
Butler, T. P. ....	289	Farrow, G. Ferd ....	131	Jones, James C. ....	293, 532	Parnell, W. K. ....	289
Butt, W. T. ....	289	Faucett, Thomas ....	290	Jones, Dr. J. M. ....	240-xxxvii	Paschall, W. G. ....	285
Butts, B. V. ....	357	Fatherston, J. C. C. ....	130	Johnson, Capt. P. J. ....	87	Pate, William J. ....	418
Butts, P. A. ....	419	Flanigan, D. W. ....	418	Jones, Peyton W. ....	82	Pearre, Maj. C. B. ....	653
Bynum, W. J. ....	290	Ford, F. G. ....	259	Jordan, G. Howard ....	414	Perry, H. H. ....	289
Camp, Judge H. W. ....	285	Fontaine, Maj. Peter ....	587	Kelso, F. M. ....	533	Pharr, John R. ....	416
Campbell, Mrs. W. A. ....	652	Fonville, Capt. W. B. ....	532	Kendrick, J. W. ....	287	Phillips, R. A. ....	586
Campbell, F. M. ....	237	Foster, Lewis H. ....	358	Kent, A. D. ....	192-xxiv	Phillips, Col. J. J. ....	650
Candler, J. H. ....	239	Freed, Julius ....	530	Key, Maj. T. J. ....	412	Pipes, Maj. E. S. ....	586
Cantzon, Charles E. ....	358	Fulcher, J. A. ....	289	Kilgour, J. M. ....	286	Polk, William Alex ....	588
Capers, Bishop Ellison ...	289	Fuqua, John F. ....	190-xxiii	Kinney, Capt. William ..	130	Pool, R. J. ....	130
Carpenter, Butler ....	48-x	Furr, Maj. A. J. ....	355	Kirkpatrick, W. H. ....	653	Pope, Dr. J. D. ....	285
Carpenter, R. T. ....	285	Gamble, Mrs. J. T. ....	291	Kyle, J. R. ....	586	Pope, James W. ....	238
Carter, Mrs. B. W. ....	82	Garey, Maj. John E. ....	587	Lackey, O. D. ....	293	Potts, James ....	88
Carter, John D. ...	240-xxxvii	Gateley, J. M. ....	656	Lamkin, M. A. ....	586	Powell, Capt. Samuel ...	650
Casey, John T. ....	418	Gatlin, Joe ....	87	Lane, Gen. J. H. ....	469	Powell, T. W. ....	285
Cassil, Rev. V. H. ....	354	Gettys, Robert T. ....	414	Lassater, Dr. J. H. ....	87	Pritchard, E. E. ....	289
Chaubers, George W. ...	236	Gibson, Capt. W. F. ....	83	Lathrop, James A. ....	360	Prvris, Col. G. E. ...	240-xxxiv
Childress, R. G. ....	293	Gilbert, W. R. ....	48-x	Lauderdale, John M. ...	130, 238	Pyrom, S. B. ....	292
Childress, Judge J. W. ...	240-xxxviii	Gilman, J. W. ....	137	Lawrence, J. C. ....	48-x	Ramsey, Charles A. ....	288
Chronister, J. M. ....	357	Godbee, C. J. ....	289	Lawrence, J. R. ....	357	Ransom, Maj. W. J. ....	285
Clayton, Mrs. V. V. ....	239	Godwin, J. W. ....	293	Lehew, J. B. ....	287	Rayson, John M. ....	588
Cochran, G. W. ....	357	Goforth, H. A. ....	416	Lennard, Judge J. M. ...	134	Reeve, Maj. J. J. ....	651
Coggin, J. M. ....	285	Golden, W. A. ....	357	Leonard, John B. ....	287	Reid, Col. T. J. ....	87
Cole, James ....	289	Goodloe, George ....	48-vi	Lester, Annie L. ....	34	Reppard, H. C. ....	192-xxiv
Coleman, L. D. ....	586	Goodwin, George W. ....	653	Lewis, W. H. ....	238	Reynolds, B. H. ....	239
Compton, William P. ...	419	Goodwin, Maj. John W. . .	415	Lewis, William H. ....	530	Ritch, A. S. ....	533
Coner, A. J. ....	287	Graves, Col. John R. ....	284	Lindsey, T. J. ....	586	Robbins, Sabin, Sr. ....	419
Conrad, T. N. ....	84	Gray, H. T. ....	356	Lockett, Thomas W. ....	471	Roberts, Capt. John C. . .	417
Cook, Dr. B. C. ....	192-xxv	Griggs, Dr. W. W. ....	48-x	Loftice, Warren ....	586	Robertson, A. P. ....	192-xxv
Cook, J. T. ....	240-xxxvii	Grimmette, R. H. ....	356	Long, Green B. ....	48-vi	Rowland, L. B. ....	192-xxv
Cook, W. E. ....	414	Grinstead, J. V. ....	532	Lovejoy, W. M. ....	416	Rogers, W. J. ....	137
Cooper, Joseph ....	414	Gunter, Capt. R. C. ....	355	Lovelace, John T. ....	114	Rogers, W. M. ....	287
Corbett, Major ....	470	Gwynn, George W. ....	48-viii	Ludman, C. ....	240-xxxvii	Ryan, James S. ....	88
Courtney, Capt. W. A. ...	360	Haisten, D. J. ....	115	Madden, Hon. J. C. ....	134	Safford, Dr. J. M. ....	48-x
Cox, M. A. ....	130	Haldeman, Mrs. E. W. ...	132	Mallory, Senator S. R. . .	215	Salley, B. F. ....	288
Crawford, Capt. J. R. ...	192-xxiii	Hall, Clay ....	240-xxxvii	Martin, R. M. ....	359	Scott, Dr. John J. ....	86
Crawford, Rev. L. W. ...	292	Hampton, Dr. John P. ...	48-x	Massie, Col. T. B. ....	472	Settle, Montgomery ....	414
Crenin, James W. ....	288	Hanlon, M. E. ....	289	Mayfield ....	287	Sexton, Maj. J. C. ....	88
Crismond, J. W. ...	48-lx, 418	Harris, Maj. W. H. ....	468	McBryde, Rev. A. M. ...	290	Shaw, W. D. ....	289
Cutshaw, Col. W. E. ....	83	Hart, W. B. ....	473	McBryde, John A. ....	356	Shelton, Hon. S. M. ....	654
Cutts, W. P. ....	240-xxxvii	Haralson, M. A. ....	88	McClinton, James H. ...	137	Sherwood, William ....	418
Dantzler, L. N. ....	468	Harris, John T. ....	136	McCoy, Capt. R. ....	655	Showalter, John L. ....	589
Davie, Capt. G. J. ....	48-viii	Harris, Mrs. P. B. ....	88	McDonald, M. H. ....	419	Shumate, Col. I. E. ....	285
Davis, J. M. ....	416	Hart, T. T. ....	236	McDonald, N. A. ....	354	Simmons, A. P. ....	192-xxv
Davis, Dr. R. H. ....	88	Hays, Samuel E. ....	285	McFall, J. K. P. ....	656	Simmons, John H. ....	414
Davis, T. A. ....	287	Heath, A. S. ....	287	McGregor, Maj. W. M. ...	354	Simmons, M. S. ....	192-xxv
Dean, Caleb ....	419	Henderson, Judge J. N. ...	86	McKie, J. D. ....	416	Slappey, A. B. ....	240-xxxvii
DeGaribody, John ....	418	Henderson, Richard ....	288	McKeuzie, Col. Geo. M. .	48-vii	Smith, Col. E. R. ....	656
Dillmyer, M. P. ....	293	Henry, James E. ....	48-viii			Smith, Dr. H. H. ....	533
Denton, H. C. ....	135

Confederate Veteran.

Smith, John F. ....	587	Walburg, Capt. L. ....	86	Foster, Lewis H. ....	358	Nance, John B. ....	240-xxxvi
Smith, Samuel H. ....	48-vii	Walker, D. L. ....	238	French, Gen. S. G. ....	296	Nesbitt, Mrs. R. L. ....	620
Smith, Thomas J. ...	240-xxxiii	Wallace, V. H. ....	239	Galloway, Bishop C. B. ...	321	Newsom, Mrs. E. K. ....	511
Smith, Judge Tillman ...	413	Ward, C. R. C. ....	192-xxv	Gibson, Col. W. F. ....	83	Odenheimer, Dorothea ...	133
Snead, Robert ....	240-xxxv	Ware, Lud. ....	290	Gillespie, Miss Sadie ...	250	O'Shaughnessy, M. J. ...	110
Spalding, Dr. R. D. ...	48-vi	Waren, James H. ...	240-xxxvii	Gilman, Joseph W. ....	137	Palsgrove, Abner ....	239
Spence, Col. E. Leslie ...	48-iv	Watkins, Dr. C. ....	656	Gottfried, Mrs. W. H. ...	492	Partridge, Miss ....	6
Spencer, J. C. ....	240	Watkins, George W. ...	131	Green, Miss A. H. ....	256	Peebles, Col. T. H. ....	281
Speers, L. M. ....	238	Watkins, John P. ....	239	Gunter, Capt. R. C. ....	355	Perry, Judge H. H. ....	282
Stafford, Thomas H. ...	289	Watson, William A. ...	288	Haggard, Miss Pearl ...	251	Peter, Capt. W. G. ....	16
Stacker, Clay ....	656	Watson, W. V. R. ....	587	Haldeman, Mr. and Mrs.		Pickett, Col. W. D. ....	450
Steever, Col. West ....	360	Watt, John ....	88	W. N. ....	132	Pippen, W. B. ....	344
Stephens, John H. ....	651	Watters, Judge J. D. ...	289	Hamby, Gen. W. R. ....	22	Polk, William A. ....	588
Sterling, John R. ....	192-xxv	Weathers, M. H. ....	88	Hampton, Dr. S. P. ....	48-v	Purvis, Col. Geo. E. ...	240-xxxiv
Stevens, H. H. ....	240-xxxiv	Weaver, Thomas J. ...	192-xxiv	Hardman, Mrs. J. U. ...	422	Pyrom, S. B. ....	292
Stevens, Solon ....	290	Weber, Hon. A. ....	654	Harrison, Miss ....	256	Rains, Gen. James E. ...	209
Stone, Dr. H. B. ....	240-xxxvii	Weed, Mrs. E. G. ....	473	Hart, Maj. Thomas T. ...	236	Reddick, Capt. John ...	331
Strickland, Maj. W. M. ...	530	Weems, Robert D. ...	192-xxiv	Hickman, Mrs. T. G. ...	419	Reeve, Maj. J. J. ....	681
Sullivan, J. R. ....	83	Weigle, John M. ...	289, 356	Hill, A. G. ....	172	Reid, T. J. ....	87
Sullivan, S. J. ....	293	West, Capt. John C. ...	82	Holcomb, Miss Stell ...	254	Roberts, Benson W. ....	15
Summers, W. F. ....	285	Westcott, G. G. ....	238	Hume, Miss Fay ....	255	Rodes, Gen. R. E. ....	269
Swearingen, G. B. ....	414	Westlake, T. W. ....	589	Hume, Mrs. William ...	476	Rogers, Gertie ....	294
Tankersley, H. ....	414	Whisenant, J. L. ....	287	Hunter, Col. Robert ...	405	Rountree, Mrs. J. A. ...	378
Tarver, C. B. ....	240-xxxvii	White, A. C. ....	418	Hunton, Gen. Eppa ...	589	Royce, Rev. M. S. ....	622
Teasley, Col. W. A. ....	415	Whitescarver, R. M. ...	287	Ingram, Charles T. ...	192-xxv	Royce, Mrs. M. S. ....	623
Temple, Charles W. ....	532	Whitfield, B. H. ....	192-xxv	Irion, J. T. ....	531	Rucker, Gen. E. W. ....	250
Tennille, A. St. C. ...	240-xxxvii	Whitley, Jacob ....	360	Irvin, John F. ....	471	Russell, Col. E. L. ....	315
Thomas, R. N. ....	237	Wiggington, Dr. J. D. ...	357	Jackson, Dr. George ...	133	Safford, Prof. J. M. ...	48-x
Thomas, Maj. W. W. ...	285	Wilkerson, H. A. ...	240-xxxiv	Jennings, Capt. T. D. ...	298	Scales, Miss Anne H. ...	374
Thompson, James R. ...	534	Wilkes, Judge J. S. ...	136	Jones, Capt. James C. ...	532	Schade, Louis ....	221
Thompson, John ....	293	Wilkins, Samuel J. ...	87	Jones, Dr. J. M. ...	240-xxxvii	Scott, Miss Charlie ...	385
Tillett, Lt. I. N. ....	88	Williams, James ....	360	Kelso, F. M. ....	533	Scott, Dr. J. J. ....	86
Timberlake, S. M. ...	192-xxiv, 84	Williams, Capt. R. M. ...	358, 589	Key, Maj. T. J. ....	412	Shumate, Col. I. E. ...	285
Tinsley, Rev. Peter ...	131	Williams, William ...	287	King, Gen. W. H. ....	395	Smith, Col. Austin ...	404
Tipton, Pleas ....	357	Winn, Dr. E. E. ....	48-x	Kingsbery, Capt. S. T. ...	329	Smith, John F. ....	653
Towler, J. W. ....	130	Wofford, George ....	534	Kinney, Capt. William ...	130	Spence, Col. E. Leslie ...	48-iv
Trotter, H. G. ....	293	Wolf, Capt. Fred ....	355	Kirkland, Richard B. ...	105	Spence, Dr. J. F. ....	580
Trulock, J. B. ....	48-vi	Word, B. N. ....	413	Lane, Gen. James H. ...	469	Stewart, Gen. A. P. ...	462
Tipton, Dr. S. W. ....	85	Wood, Dr. E. B. ....	85	Lauderdale, J. M. ....	238	Stone, Mrs. Cornelia E. ...	1
Tyler, H. C. ....	418	Wood, Maj. H. C. ....	652	Lea, Mrs. R. J. ....	151	Strickland, Maj. W. M. ...	530
Vinson, Van Buren ...	533	Woods, Thomas ....	239	Lee, Gen. S. D. ...	241, 258, 314	Tankersly, Harrison ...	414
Vaulx, Maj. Joseph ...	192-xxv	Wooten, Dr. T. D. ...	130	Leedy, Miss Emma M. ...	252	Tarlton, Judge B. D. ...	274
Wade, Capt. H. D. ....	412	Wright, J. F. ....	286	Lester, Annie ....	134	Thompson, J. R. ....	534
		Wright, J. M. ....	655	Lorena ....	48-ii	Todhunter, Miss Elliott ...	280
		Youngblood, G. W. ...	356, 416	Mallory, Secretary ...	457	Trader, Mrs. E. K. ....	512
				Masenburg, Capt. T. L. ...	630	Trulock, J. B. ....	48-vi

PORTRAITS.

Allen, J. O. ....	473	Culberson, Charles A. ...	97	Masonburg, Capt. T. L. ...	630	VanMeter, C. J. ....	379
Allison, Maj. Robert A. ...	138	Cumming, Maj. J. B. ...	557	McClatchy, Mrs. A. ....	621	Vaulx, Maj. Joseph ...	192-xxv
Autrey, Capt. G. M. ....	357	Daniel, Hon. J. W. ....	266	McCoy, Capt. Redden ...	655	Wade, Capt. H. D. ....	413
Barbee, Sampson ....	284	Dantzler, L. N. ....	468	McCulloch, Miss Grace ...	381	Weatherly, Margaret ...	250
Baskervill, Mrs. B. A. ...	235	Darling, Mrs. F. A. ...	273	McDonald, Mrs. E. M. ...	389	Weber, Hon. Albert ...	651
Baskervill, Dr. R. D. ...	234	Davidson, Capt. Hunter ...	458	McDonald, Maj. J. E. ...	388	Weed, Mrs. E. G. ....	472
Bell, Capt. C. D. ....	416	Davis, Jefferson ...	193, 272, 323, 495	McDonald, S. D. ....	388	Weigle, John M. ....	356
Bell, J. L. ....	497	Derrick, Col. Clarence ...	418	McKenzie, Col. G. W. ...	48-vii	Weyrich, Florence L. ...	361
Bidwell, Maj. B. G. ....	409	Dickerson, Mrs. W. R. ...	160	Metcalfe, J. M. ....	108	Wilstrand, Mrs. Fred ...	598
Blakely, A. R. ....	291	Dougherty, Miss Loucie ...	583	Merrifield, J. K. ....	554	Wigbur, Dr. C. T. ....	592
Bragg, Mrs. Braxton ...	586	Douglas, Martin ....	424	Mims, Dr. William D. ...	134	Wilkes, Judge J. S. ...	136
Breathed, Maj. James ...	575	Dozier, Mrs. T. P. ...	203	Mock, Miss L. Byrd ...	350	Wirz, Major Henry ...	199
Buchanan, Maj. F. G. ...	135	Duke, Mrs. L. Z. ....	466	Mooney, Rev. W. ....	48-viii	Wofford, Col. J. L. ...	593
Buist, Dr. J. R. ...	240-xxxvi	Duncan, Bishop W. W. ...	237	Morton, Hugh T., Jr. ...	382	Wood, Maj. H. C. ....	652
Bynum, W. J. ....	290	Duncan, Miss ....	386	Morton, J. W. ...	240-xxxix, 296	Wyeth, John A., Jr. ...	618
Cabell, Gen. W. L. ....	314	Dunovant, Gen. John ...	183
Campbell, J. H. and R. N. ...	410	Eakin, Spencer ....	48-ix
Capers, Bishop ....	289	Eleazer, S. G. ....	417
Capers, Col. H. D. ....	278	Estill, Col. J. H. ...	240-xxxv
Carothers, Miss Bessie ...	299	Etheredge, Maj. W. H. ...	359	Aiken, Will ....	74	Arnold, Mrs. E. L. ....	16
Childress, Judge J. W. ...		Evans, Gen. C. A. ....	313	Akin, John W. ....	116	Arp, Bill ....	527
.....	240-xxxiii	Evans, Miss Sarah Lee ...	248	Alden, L. D. ....	583
Clare, Maj. William ...	399	Everett, George W. ....	471	Allen, James W. ....	573	Bachman, W. H. ....	648
Clark, Col. John W. ...	63	Farrow, G. Ferd ....	131	Allen, Capt. T. F. ...	493, 581	Bacot, Miss Clara ...	347
Clayton, Mrs. V. V. ....	240	Field, Al G. ....	445	Allen, Capt. W. T. ...	439	Bagby, Miss Bessie ...	391
Clinton, Mrs. A. W. ....	638	Fisher, Miss Roberta ...	361	Anderson, J. W. ....	229	Baker, J. H. A. ....	48-xlv
Cook, Miss Varina ....	249	Forehand, Miss May ...	558	Anderson, Col. Kellar ...	597	Barrow, Mrs. H. C. ...	271
Corbett, Major ....	470			Andrews, W. H. ....	578	Bealer, Alex W. ....	662
Courtney, Capt. W. A. ...	360			Arnold, Albert ....	159	Beard, W. K. ....	240-xli

AUTHORS.

Confederate Veteran.

Behan, Mrs. W. J. .... 55-313	Dillard, Mrs. L. L. .... 649	Maddox, C. K. .... 497
Bell, H. P. .... 158	Ditto, W. L. .... 573	Mann, George M. .... 48-ii
Berry, Gen. J. H. .... 494	Doggett, J. L. .... 337	Marsh, A. T. .... 516
Black, R. J. .... 268	Donaldson, L. .... 597	Martin, Charles B. .... 393
Bohon, W. J. .... 346 v	Doran, Charles .... 15, 71	Martin, John H. .... 120
Bolling, Dr. W. T. .... 18	Dorsey, Anne Chew .... 567, 600	Mather, A. I. .... 331, 590
Bolton, J. J. .... 624	Dowd, Dickison .... 306	Maurin, Edmund .... 187
Bond, Mrs. O. Z. .... 108, 270	Dowdell, Mrs. A. L. .... 251, 487	May, R. C. .... 350, 447
Booth, R. V. .... 438	Doyle, W. E. .... 79, 203	McAllister, A. H. .... 191
Bowyer, N. B. .... 515	Dozier, J. A. .... 192	McCann, James M. .... 73
Boyd, Mrs. E. G. .... 249	Dozier, Mrs. T. P. .... 201	McCarmley, Rosa F. .... 371
Boyson, Miss Christine... 657	Duckworth, Col. W. L. .... 561	McClaren, Eleanor D. .... 192
Bradwell, Isaac G. .... 447, 641	Duff, W. H. .... 317	McClagherty, M. A. M. .... 23
Brady, J. T. .... 348	Duncan, J. A. .... 597	McClure, Col. A. K. .... 245
Breathed, Frank .... 574	Dunlap, Sam B. .... 187	McDonald, J. A. .... 635
Breckenridge, C. R. .... 73	Dunovant, Miss A. A. .... 183	McGilliendy, T. D. .... 62
Broome, John P. .... 629		McLaurin, H. M. .... 235
Brown, Frank D. .... 582	Eaves, John J. .... 529	McMurray, James .... 428
Brown, George H. .... 349	Edwards, L. R. .... 616	McSwain, J. J. .... 351
Brown, Hon. Joseph M. .... 361	Elgin, Thomas A. .... 112	Meek, Mrs. J. W. .... 211
Brown, V. W. .... 278	Emerson, Mrs. A. J. .... 179, 344	Meriwether, Lee .... 642
Browne, Dr. M. S. .... 381	Engle, George B., Jr. .... 645	Merrifield, J. K. .... 554
Brownlow, Col. John B. .... 69	English, James W. .... 282	Metcalf, F. .... 224
Bruce, D. H. .... 349	Estes, E. E. .... 150	Mickle, Gen. W. E. .... 149
Buford, Mrs. E. G. .... 475	Evans, A. F. .... 115	Mindler, F. T. .... 17
Burroughs, Dr. S. R. .... 636	Evans, Gen. C. A. .... 256, 374, 384, 552, 553	Minnieh, J. W. .... 394, 625
Butler, M. C. .... 183	Ewing, Hon. Z. W. .... 375	Mockbee, R. T. .... 160
Byers, S. H. M. .... 240-xliii		Montgomery, W. A. .... 317
		Moore, Alex. .... 352
Cabell, Gen. W. L. .... 314	Faulson, Mrs. J. W. .... 66	Moore, Charles F. .... 283
Calhoun, E. R. .... 320	Fauntleroy, T. B. .... 493	Moore, J. S. .... 403
Calloway, James .... 124	Fay, J. B. .... 279	Moore, W. H. .... 396
Calvert, Dr. Thomas .... 564	Fenno, Mrs. G. .... 330	Moorman, Capt. H. .... 594
Campbell, W. A. .... 335, 648	Field, Al G. .... 445, 591	Morgan, G. H. .... 156
Campbell, W. R. .... 299	Finley, W. W. .... 89	Morris, Miss Evie .... 179
Candler, Bishop W. A. .... 192-xx	Fitzpatrick, J. T. .... 348	Morrison, Mrs. T. J. .... 632
Cantrell, A. J. .... 216	Fitzgerald, Bishop O. P. .... 109	Murray, J. O. .... 494
Cantwell, John S. .... 566	Fleming, D. G. .... 379
Capers, Col. H. D. .... 113	Fleming, V. M. .... 347	National Tribune .... 170
Carruth, Maj. E. B. .... 408	Floyd, N. J. .... 159	Neilson, T. H. .... 60
Carson, E. Scott .... 342	Foley, B. F. .... 283	Nesbitt, Mrs. R. L. .... 373
Carter, T. G. .... 79-616	Ford, A. P. .... 563	Nesbitt, Wilbur .... 380
Cartmell, J. M. .... 190	Ford, Harriet .... 232	Nettles, T. H. .... 349
Chew, R. P. .... 394	Forehand, Miss May .... 558	Newton, Dr. E. D. .... 336
Chidester, Louise R. .... 640	Ford, W. B. .... 496
Church, Hayden .... 352	Fulgham, F. L. .... 102	Oakley, Timothy .... 556
Chalborne, Col. Thomas... 225		Obenchain, Maj. W. A. .... 639
Clark, M. H. .... 255	Gadsey, J. E. .... 318	Odenheimer, Mrs. D. P. .... 65
Clark, M. J. .... 348	Galloway, Bishop C. B. .... 321	Odum, Rev. A. P. .... 61
Clark, W. A. .... 426	Gantt, Mrs. J. B. .... 67	Oliver, I. M. .... 598
Cleveland, Grover .... 89	Gardner, E. M. .... 639	Overley, Milford .... 48-xi, 121
Coffin, James P. .... 179	Garrison, A. A. .... 514
Collier, Mrs. C. M. .... 103	Gary, Col. M. B. .... 438	Parrish, Mrs. L. Kirby... 240-xxxviii
Cook, J. L. .... 78	Gay, Mrs. J. L. .... 167	Packard, Joseph .... 227
Cook, J. W. .... 406, 489	Gay, Miss M. A. H. .... 635	Page, Capt. I. M. .... 217
Cook, V. Y. .... 493	George, Henry .... 493	Park, Leola T. .... 316
Cooke, Maj. G. B. .... 15, 94	Gillespie, W. A. .... 643	Park, Capt. R. E. .... 630
Cox, Hon. N. N. .... 73	Gilliland, J. A. .... 161	Pascoe, W. H. .... 423
Creight, Annie P. .... 362	Gilmer, M. S. .... 645	Paulett, John W. .... 125
Creson, Mrs. R. D. B. .... 566	Goodloe, A. T. .... 296	Peebles, Col. T. H. .... 281
Crouch, Robert C. .... 76, 104	Goodrich, John T. .... 126	Pendleton, I. F. .... 638
Cumming, Joseph B. .... 556	Gracie, Archibald .... 467	Perkins, T. F. .... 490
Cummings, C. C. .... 173, 502	Grady, B. F. .... 222	Phares, W. F. .... 18
Cunningham, Frank .... 255	Graham, Alice .... 192-xxiv	Picayune, N. O. .... 91
Cunningham, Dr. John .... 577	Grant, Fred .... 10	Pickers, Mrs. M. G. .... 191
Cunningham, S. A. .... 522	Grayson, D. C. .... 277	Pickett, Col. W. D. .... 230, 449
Curtis, I. S. .... 411	Gregg, W. H. .... 559	Pinson, Rev. W. W. .... 41
D., G. N. .... 22	Gresham, J. M. .... 517	Pierson, W. M. .... 501
	Grizzard, R. W. .... 510	Pilcher, W. B. .... 58, 139, 618
Daffan, Miss K. .... 174		Pippen, W. B. .... 344
Damron, Lloyd .... 294	Hale, Capt. G. W. B. .... 191	Polk, W. A. .... 121
Daniel, Maj. John W. .... 265	Hale, Col. N. S. .... 597	Porter, Duval .... 93
Davidson, Capt. H. .... 7, 456	Halley, R. A. .... 253, 380	Porter, Hon. James D. .... 192-xxvii, 208
Davidson, N. P. .... 190	Hamby, W. R. .... 19, 21	Porter, James E. .... 619
Davis, Miss C. M. .... 519	Hancock, R. J. .... 192-xxvii	Postell, John G. .... 71
Davis, J. .... 48-1	Harbaugh, T. C. .... 99, 123, 147, 242, 464, 555	Powell, H. L. .... 255, 521
Davis, W. H. .... 261	Harby, J. D. .... 390	Powell, James W. .... 185
Deering, Rev. John R. .... 41	Harness, W. W. .... 178
Dershavin, G. R. .... 212		Harris, Dr. Charles .... 186
		Harris, Jasper W. .... 461
		Harris, Mrs. L. H. .... 425
		Hartfield, George D. .... 76
		Hatcher, Mrs. E. H. .... 375
		Hayes, R. H. .... 190
		Haw, Joseph R. .... 153
		Heafford, Maj. G. H. .... 104
		Hearn, Rev. W. C. .... 264
		Heiskell, C. W. .... 124
		Hempstead, J. L. .... 81
		Henderson, Mrs. L. G. .... 92
		Herbert, Hon. H. A. .... 150
		Herbert, Sidney .... 152
		Henkel, Dr. C. .... 407
		Henry, Capt. W. H. .... 644
		Hildreth, A. .... 618
		Hindman, T. C. .... 129
		Hitt, W. H. .... 113
		Hoekersmith, H. H. .... 616
		Hodgkin, Dr. J. B. .... 157, 362
		Holmes, Dr. W. N. .... 388
		Hornbeck, S. A. .... 328
		Harwell, J. D. .... 331
		Horner, Henry J. .... 235
		Horrall, Capt. S. F. .... 6, 63
		Hume, William .... 190
		Hume, Mrs. William .... 476
		Humphreys, Rev. Dr. .... 572
		Hunter, Alex. .... 339, 500
		Hunter, Maj. R. W. .... 188, 404
		Hutchison, Joseph .... 390
		Ingram, M. V. .... 59, 409
		Jackson, E. A. .... 330
		Jackson, W. F. .... 499
		James, W. W. .... 350
		Jarnagan, Douglas .... 298
		Jennings, T. D. .... 616
		Jennings, W. H. .... 629
		Jones, C. E. .... 45, 74
		Jones, Col. D. W. .... 151
		Jones, George M. 233, 272, 352
		Jones, Isabella C. .... 566
		Jones, James A. .... 71
		Jones, R. W. .... 48, 111, 114
		Johnson, Dr. R. L. .... 210
		Johnson, W. A. .... 446
		Johnson, W. H. .... 79
		Jordan, Mrs. C. J. M. .... 166
		Kelley, Dr. D. C. .... 192-xxvi
		Kelley, T. C. .... 628
		Kemp, L. H. .... 168
		Kenan, Mrs. James G. .... 5
		Kilmer, Capt. G. L. .... 646
		King, W. W. .... 350
		Knight, W. J. .... 635
		Laehllison, James .... 78
		Lathrop, E. S. .... 379
		Lee, Gen. R. E. .... 240-xliiv
		Lee, Stephen D. .... 9, 257, 318
		Lee, W. H. .... 585
		Lester, J. H. .... 514
		Levy, Mrs. E. G. .... 106
		Lewis, M. .... 389
		Lewis, R. F. .... 345
		Lewis, Dr. S. E. .... 511
		Lindsey, Mrs. B. J. .... 400
		Little, Mrs. M. M. .... 613
		Lively, E. H. .... 111, 351
		Long, Thomas M. .... 111
		Longmire, Mrs. E. C. .... 189
		Love, S. B. .... 343
		Lovett, H. M. .... 633
		Low, Maj. Fred C. .... 619
		M., L. M. .... 395

Preston, Col. J. T. L. ....	647	Sexton, Mrs. J. L. ....	410	Tarleton, Judge B. D. ..	274	West, A. J. ....	629
Prewitt, S. W. F. ....	520	Schaub, J. L. ....	269	Taylor, William ....	345	West, Miss D. L. ....	106
Ramsay, Col. H. S. ..	192-xvii	Schuyler, Mrs. L. R. ....	48-xi	Teague, B. H. ....	463	Westlake, T. W. ....	382
Randall, James R. ..	232, 455	Scott, Emma Look ....	399	Thomas, J. S. ....	349	Whitaker, Bob ....	332
Ray, J. E. ....	151	Sharp, A. K. ....	350	Thompson, Gen. M. Jeff..	439	White, Mrs. A. B. ...	169, 498
Ray, W. S. ....	349	Shebley, Mrs. M. B. ....	374	Thompson, R. L. ....	443	White, H. C. ....	252
Reppert, W. E. ....	126	Shepherd, H. E. ....	494	Thompson, W. E. ....	348	White, Gen. Robert ....	53
Reese, James ....	161	Shinault, J. L. ....	59	Tillman, Col. J. D. ....	490	Whiting, Maj. H. A. ....	270
Rice, Grantland ....	425	Smartt, J. P. ....	491	Times-Democrat ....	44	Whitsitt, J. B. ....	338
Rich, Dr. William ....	514	Smiley, H. W. ....	277	Todd, J. W. ....	349	Wigstrand, Mrs. M. B. ..	598
Richardson, C. A. ....	20, 346	Smith, Abbie F. ....	350	Towson, Rev. W. E. ....	348	Wilcox, Ella Wheeler ...	609
Ridout, L. H. ....	349	Smith, George H. ....	569	Trantham, W. D. ....	105	Williams, Z. I. ....	168
Rigby, W. T. ....	315, 521	Smith, Capt. H. A. ....	222	Truman, Maj. B. C. ...	77, 460	Williams, Joe F. ....	516
Robb, Mrs. A. W. ....	129	Smithson, Capt. P. G. ...	192-xxi	Tunnell, J. T. ....	571	Williams, Benjamin J. ...	214
Robert, Charles E. ....	631	Southgate, E. D. ....	74	Turnley, G. L. ....	260	Williams, Mrs. N. G. ...	559
Robert, Mrs. P. G. ....	44	Spence, Dr. John F. ....	580	VanDusen, A. C. ....	182	Wilson, J. T. ....	350
Roberts, Capt. B. W. ....	14	Stephenson, Miss M. H. ...	.....7, 102, 280	VanWinkle, Alex ....	102, 632	Wilzin, J. M. ....	205
Roby, W. A. ....	519	Sterne, J. L. ....	255	Vaught, Mrs. D. A. S. ...	619	Wise, F. A. ....	408
Roden, J. B. ....	223	Stevens, H. H. ....	585	W. I. S. ....	17	Wittich, W. L. ....	263
Roosevelt, Theodore ....	91	Stewart, Gen. A. P. ....	462	W. W. S. ....	442	Wofford, Col. J. L. ....	593
Rosamond, J. S. ....	421	Steuart, R. D. ....	332	Walker, Annie K. ....	205	Wood, A. ....	585
Rose, A. Fontaine ....	115	Stickley, E. E. ....	395	Walker, Gen. C. I. ....	496	Wood, H. E. ....	114, 397, 584
Rowe, John S. ....	261	Stone, Mrs. C. B. ...	54, 57, 149, 150, 174, 198, 281, 383, 474, 489, 617, 642	Walker, Col. I. D. ....	9	Wood, H. L. ....	125
Rowe, John T. ....	348	Stone, John B. ....	383	Wallen, A. F. ....	254	Wright, Mrs. J. M. ....	376
Rush, Isalah ....	259	Stringfellow, Rev. F. ...	390	Warden, Dr. B. F. ....	565	Wright, Gen. M. J. ....	596
Russell, Col. E. L. ....	315	Strother, E. Louise ....	500	Ward, John H. ....	420	Wright, Thomas C. ....	493
Rutledge, T. J. ....	349	Strouse, Rev. D. B. ....	455	Warden, Jacob ....	429	Wyeth, John A., Jr. ....	618
Ryan, Father ....	343	Sturgis, Rev. H. H. ...	119, 277	Watkins, L. J. ....	209	Yates, Mrs. J. D. ....	627
Sansom, Emma ....	355	Sulivane, Col. C. ....	398	Watkins, W. M. ....	180	Young, B. H. ....	343, 387
Satterfield, E. V. ....	112	Swanson, Gov. ....	139	Watson, Mrs. A. R. ....	575	Young, Mrs. G. P. ....	383
Saussy, G. N. ....	262	Taft, W. H. ....	8	Watson, Mrs. S. F. ....	601	Young, J. P. ....	25, 561
Sawyer, W. E. ....	565			Webster, Miss Rowe ...	448	Young, T. J. ....	166
Seward, Simon ....	42			Weir, Mrs. S. R. ...	505, 622-3	Zorn, H. M. ....	627

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

MARCH, 1908.

NO. 3.

CHARLES A. CULBERSON, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM TEXAS.

CATALOGUE OF THE Munson Nurseries

Denison, Texas

SENT ON APPLICATION FREE

These Nurseries have originated and introduced more valuable varieties of SOUTHERN FRUITS than any other nursery in the South, and are perfectly reliable.

Thirty-one years at Denison

Pettibone Uniforms

for U. C. V. and U. S. C. V. are famous. Being made by expert military tailors, they have the true military cut. They fit well, look well, wear well, and are very reasonable in price. Each one is made to individual measure. Send for prices and samples of cloth.

Besides Uniforms we have been manufacturing Flags, Banners, Badges, Swords, Belts, Caps, Military and Secret Order Goods for thirty-five years.

The Pettibone Bros. Mfg. Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

(Mention this paper when writing.)

"Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865"

BY

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT

Have you a copy? Is your Father, Brother, or Son recorded in this historical work?

Send your order to your local Bookseller, the "Veteran," or

AMBROSE LEE PUBLISHING Co.,
WILLIAMSBRIDGE, N. Y. CITY

PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to any address

Dr. J. T. Wilson, of Sherman, Tex., writes that he has lately come into possession of a small leather book, faded and worn, containing the diary of a soldier named "Denson, Company C, 9th La. Regt., Hays's Brigade, Early's Division." His initials cannot be deciphered; but in the roll of the company is the name of Sergeant W. E. Denson, to whom the book evidently belonged. The first date is May 8, 1863, and it has a note for nearly every day until November 5, 1863, and contains what seems to be a complete roll of the company, except commissioned officers, five sergeants, four corporals, and seventy-eight privates. Opposite the names of seven of the privates is the word "dead." The book was picked up on a farm adjoining Rockville, Md., after Early's attack on Washington, in 1864. If the owner is not living, some member of his family might like to have it in his possession.

J. H. Reneau, Palmetto, Tex., wishes to locate two witnesses to his Confederate service in order that he may secure a pension. He was a member of Company B, 8th Alabama, Wilcox's Brigade, Anderson's Division, A. P. Hill's Corps. He was in the following battles: Near Williamsburg, the Seven Pines, the Seven Days', Second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania C. H., Cold Harbor, Deep Bottom, Salem Church, Fredericksburg, battle of the Crater, and the raid down the Weldon railroad at the old Salt Works—in fact, never missed a battle of his regiment.

Through Miss Sallie L. Jewell, 1326 Market Street, Jacksonville, Fla., inquiry is made for comrades of William Jackson Jarvis, of Wilmington, N. C., and Henry Anderson, of King's Mountain College, S. C. The latter was a lieutenant of cavalry under Gen. Wade Hampton. Their daughters wish to secure these records that they may become members of the U. D. C.

Some inquiries for copies of "Hardee's Tactics" induce the request that any one having a copy and willing to dispose of it will kindly let us know. The book is now out of print and not procurable at any bookstore. State condition and price of book.

If afflicted with SORE EYES USE Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

Watch Charms

FOR

Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as Illustrated, $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" pins, handsomely enameled, regulation pin, sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
WASHINGTON, D. C.

The BEST PLACE to purchase all-wool

Bunting or Silk Flags

of all kinds.

Silk Banners, Swords, Belts, Caps

and all kinds of Military Equipment and Society Goods is at

Veteran J. A. JOEL & CO, 38 Nassau St.,
SEND FOR PRICE LIST. New York City.

Free Book About Cancer.

CANCEROL has proved its merits in the treatment of cancer. It is not in an experimental stage. Records of undisputed cures of cancer in nearly every part of the body are contained in Dr. Leach's new 100-page book. This book also tells the cause of cancer and instructs in the care of the patient; tells what to do in case of bleeding, pain, odor, etc. A valuable guide in the treatment of any case. A copy of this valuable book free to those interested. Address, DR. L. T. LEACH, Box 98, Indianapolis, Ind.

For Over Sixty Years

An Old and Well-Tried Remedy

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TETHING, WITH PERFECT SUCCESS. IT SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALAYS all PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHEA. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. 25 CENTS A BOTTLE. Guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Serial number, 1098.

Mrs. Alice B. Rand, Bellevue, Ky., needs the following numbers of the VETERAN to complete her file: January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, and November, 1895; February and May, 1899; and May, 1905. Write to her in advance of sending.

THE OLD BUGLES.

BY T. C. HARBAUGH.

I can hear the olden bugles;
They are blowing far away,
Where we stood beneath our banners
In our uniforms of gray.
From the woodlands come the echoes
Soft and low, now loud and shrill,
Rousing thousands gently sleeping
In the vale and on the hill.

They are trilling, trilling, trilling
In our proud and warlike van,
Where the ripples dance and quiver
On the haunted Rapidan.
They recall the march and battle;
Backward float the days of yore,
And the glad resounding bugles
In my dreams I hear once more.

We were young and true and sturdy
When they sounded 'mong the pines,
And o'er sunlit hill and valley
Stretched our gallant battle lines;
And the bugler still is blowing
In an old man's memory
When the ranks swept on to glory
'Neath the waving plume of Lee.

O, who cannot hear the bugles
Blowing 'mid the distant years?
Aye, who cannot see the bugler
Blowing yet 'twixt smiles and tears?
Now he seems to sound the onset
As 'twas sounded long ago,
When beneath the flag we followed
Down we rushed upon the foe.

O, the music of the bugles!
It for evermore is still.
Sleep our comrades in the valley,
Rest our brothers on the hill.
They are camping by the river,
Where the tide one day was red;
But the music of the bugles
Echoes still among our dead.

When I listen in the gloaming
In my faded coat of gray,
Comes the trilling of the bugles
From the old camps far away.
O my brothers, don't you hear them,
Sounding ever sweet and low?
They're the dear old battle bugles
That we loved so long ago.

A. M. Hill, Station G, Memphis, Tenn., asks for the address of one Edward Bamy, who was in the battle of Shiloh as a member of a Mississippi regiment.

MORPHINE

Liquor, and Tobacco addictions cured in ten days without pain. Unconditional guarantee given to cure or no charge. Money can be placed in bank and payment made after a cure is perfected. First-class equipment. Patients who cannot visit sanitarium can be cured privately at home. References: Any county or city official, any bank or citizen of Lebanon. Large booklet sent free. Address is much like gunning for birds. You must have a definite aim, because indiscriminate advertising, like indiscriminate shooting, results in empty pockets. The printer furnishes the shot, and postage is the powder that carries it wherever you direct.

Dept. V. CEDARCROFT SANITARIUM, Lebanon, Tenn.

GUNNING FOR ORDERS

And you must have good ammunition. Foolish indeed the sportsman who would use pebbles for shot to save expense, yet equally foolish is the advertiser who wastes energy, postage and opportunity on weak, ineffective printing.

Think it over; then let's talk it over. We have furnished ammunition for so many successful campaigns that we know you will find our experience of value.

Anyway, let's talk it over.

BRANDON PRINTING CO.
ASHVILLE, TENN.

"Lee and His Generals" @ "The Last of the Wooden Navy."

Two wonderful paintings, each being worth thousands of dollars, can be had in every home. "LEE AND HIS GENERALS" and "THE LAST OF THE WOODEN NAVY," the great pictures by GEORGE B. MATTHEWS, which have been exhibited at Jamestown Exposition for the past six months and have excited the interest of thousands of people, have at last been accurately reproduced in colors. The first gives excellent full-figure portraits of Robert E. Lee and twenty-five of his commanders attractively grouped. The last is a vivid picture of the battle between the Merrimac and Monitor. The lithographs are 24 x 12 and 20 x 10 inches, respectively. PRICE, POSTAGE PREPAID, 55c. EACH. Dealers wanted everywhere to handle these pictures. Write for terms to

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., Inc.

914 E. Main Street, Richmond

POSITIONS SECURED or Money Back

CONTRACT given, backed by $300,000.00 capital and 18 years' SUCCESS

DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL Business Colleges

Washington, D. C., Raleigh, Columbia, Nashville, Atlanta, Memphis, Jackson, Miss., Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas. Bookkeeping, Banking, Shorthand, Penmanship, Telegraphy, etc. Indorsed by business men. Also teach by mail. Write, phone, or call for catalogue.

30 Colleges in 17 States

If afflicted with SORE EYES, Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

American National Bank

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Capital ..... $1,000,000.00
 Shareholders' Liability..... 1,000,000.00
 Surplus and Undivided Profits. 550,000.00
 Security to Depositors.....$2,550,000.00

3 per cent Interest Paid on Certificates of Deposit 3

OFFICERS

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

DIRECTORS

JNO. B. RANSOM, THOS. L. HERBERT, A. H. ROBINSON, LESLIE CHEEK,	JOHN M. GRAY, JR., BYRD DOUGLAS, THOS. J. FELDER, JOHNSON BRANSFORD,	HORATIO BERRY, OVERTON LEA, R. W. TURNER, N. P. LESUEUR.	G. M. NEELY, J. B. RICHARDSON, W. W. BERRY, ROBT. J. LYLES.
--	---	---	--

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. ¶ General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The Lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." ¶ The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. ¶ Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address

NATIONAL PRINTING & EXHIBIT CO., 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The Confederate Cause and Conduct in the War between the States.

By HUNTER McGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Head Medical Director of Jackson's Corps, A. N. V., and HON. GEORGE L. CHRISTIAN.

This work written with the fire and vim of one of Jackson's soldiers, and with all the logic of a clear-headed lawyer, has gone far beyond the ordinary work upon this subject and holds the interest of the reader in its grip from start to finish.

The contents of the first chapter alone will give some idea of what the book contains, being as follows:

1. Slavery not the cause of the war.
2. Attempt of Northern writers to misrepresent the South and its cause.
3. The Northern cause will finally be adjudged the lost cause.
4. Criticisms of the writings of Mr. Jno. Fiske and "Our Country," by Cooper, Estill and Lemon.
5. All the South asks—that the truth be stated.

The other chapters deal with some dozen or more subjects, including "Treatment and Exchange of Prisoners," "Right of Secession," "Relations of the Slaves to the Confederate Cause," etc.

This book should be in the home of every Confederate.

230 pages. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth. Gold Top. Postpaid, $1.60.

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., 914 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

WAR SONGS AND POEMS OF THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY

A grand collection of the most popular Songs and Poems of war time, and dear to every Southern heart; also some good War Stories collected and edited by H. M. WHARTON, who was a private in Gen. Lee's army. A beautiful book of 500 pages; size, 7 x 9 inches; weighs 2½ pounds; profusely illustrated; artistic cloth binding. Mailed for TWO DOLLARS. Address W. B. JONES CO., Silver Creek, N. Y.

General Marcus J. Wright's "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865"

Should be in the Library of the Family of every
Confederate and Union Soldier

An Official Record of
TENNESSEE'S SONS

Order from local Booksellers,
the "Veteran," or

Ambrose Lee Publishing Co.,
Williamsbridge, N. Y. City

PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to any address

Confederate
Veterans'
and Sons of Confederate
Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO.
Columbus, Ohio

HICKORY PIPES FROM SHILOH BATTLEFIELD

For 25c. we will mail to any address a hickory pipe made from hickory that grows on this famous battleground.

Shiloh Souvenir Pipe Co.

R. F. D. No. 1, Michie, Tenn., McNairy Co.

BROTHERS IN GRAY. Accidentally I have discovered a root that will cure tobacco habit and indigestion.
No drugs. Let me write you the particulars of its discovery. C. H. Stokes, Monawk, Fla.

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter. Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important.

Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted.

The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY,
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success;
The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. } VOL. XVI.

NASHVILLE, TENN., MARCH, 1908.

No 3. } S. A. CUNNINGHAM
PROPRIETOR.

JEFFERSON DAVIS HOME ASSOCIATION.

THE MOVEMENT TO ESTABLISH THE PARK AND MEMORIAL UNDERTAKEN WITH PATRIOTIC ZEAL.

At the February meeting of the Jefferson Davis Home Association those present were Lieut. Gen. S. B. Buckner, Brig. Gen. B. W. Duke, Col. Bennett H. Young, Capt. J. T. Gaines, J. H. Leathers, S. A. Cunningham, and Thomas D. Osborne. General Buckner reported that everything was ready to begin operations. Letters were read from Mrs. W. J. Behan, President of the Southern Memorial Association, and Mrs. James Kenan, Chaplain North Carolina Division, United Daughters of Confederacy, promising cooperation and presenting valuable suggestions.

On motion of Captain Gaines the Executive Committee was given full power to act. Appropriate resolutions with the deed from Mrs. Hayes, daughter of Jefferson Davis, were sent to Mr. Hunter Wood to be adopted and recorded by Bethel Baptist Church.

Secretary Thomas D. Osborne was directed to have prepared the certificate of membership to be given all contributors. The President, General Buckner, and the Secretary appointed State Vice Presidents as follows:

Alabama: Gen. George P. Harrison, Opelika.
Arkansas: Gen. N. T. Roberts, Pine Bluff.
Florida: Hon. T. P. Fleming, Jacksonville.
Georgia: Gen. C. M. Wiley, Macon.
Indian Territory: John L. Galt, Ardmore.
Kentucky: Col. W. A. Milton, Louisville.
Louisiana: Gen. T. W. Castleman, New Orleans.
Maryland: Gen. A. C. Trippe, Baltimore.
Mississippi: Gen. Robert Lowry, Jackson.
Missouri: Gen. James B. Gantt, Jefferson City.
North Carolina: Gen. Julian S. Carr, Durham.
Northwest: Gen. Paul A. Tusz, Phillipsburg.
Pacific: Thomas L. Singleton, Colusa.
Oklahoma: Col. S. J. Wilkins, Norman.
South Carolina: Gen. Thomas W. Carwile, Edgefield.
Tennessee: Gen. George W. Gordon, Memphis.
Texas: Gen. K. M. VanZandt, Fort Worth.

There was great interest manifested at the meeting, and valuable recommendations were discussed. Capt. J. T. Gaines was elected Assistant Secretary. The bill before the Legislature of Kentucky for an appropriation—the same as voted to mark Lincoln's birthplace, in Larue County—is as follows:

"An act to appropriate $2,500 to assist in marking the birthplace of Jefferson Davis.

"Whereas Simon B. Buckner, Bennett H. Young, Basil W. Duke, John H. Weller, George C. Norton, S. A. Cunningham, J. T. Gaines, C. C. Brown, W. B. Brewer, and Thomas D. Osborne have incorporated the Jefferson Davis Home Association, whose object is to acquire and improve into a memorial park such portions of the native place of Jefferson Davis, situated in the counties of Christian and Todd, in the State of Kentucky; therefore

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the commonwealth of Kentucky that the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars be and is hereby appropriated to assist in erecting a memorial tablet on said ground."

Dr. C. C. Brown, of Bowling Green, who conceived the object, is expected to make an active canvass for the territory west of Louisville, and will begin appointing subagents and the procuring of subscriptions.

UNITED STATES SENATOR CHAS. A. CULBERSON.

The VETERAN is pleased to give prominence on the title-page to United States Senator Charles A. Culberson, of Texas, who, though but ten years old at the close of the war, has ever manifested zeal in behalf of those who stood for what the South contended for in the sixties. His record in the public affairs of his adopted Texas as Governor of the State and now as United States Senator is sufficient to elicit the pride not only of every Southerner but of every American citizen. Senator Culberson was born at Dadeville, Ala., June 10, 1855, son of David B. (Congressman from Texas for twenty-two years) and Eugenia Kimball Culberson. He graduated at the Virginia Military Institute in 1874; studied law at the University of Virginia, 1876-77; settled in Texas, and was Attorney-General of the State 1890-94; Governor of Texas, 1894-98; delegate Democratic National Convention at Chicago, 1896; and elected United States Senator in 1899 to succeed Roger Q. Mills. He is now serving his second term.

INCIDENTS AND INQUIRIES ABOUT SHILOH.

BY ALEXANDER VAN WINKLE, FRANKLIN, ILL.

A few incidents and inquiries relating to a most important crisis in the battle of Shiloh from the "Yank" side may not be wholly uninteresting to some of your readers. I allude first to the time and circumstances of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston's death. The place seems generally admitted to be in a ravine a few hundred yards southeast of the Widow Bell's house and the time as 2:30 P.M. Sunday, April 6, 1862. A monumental pile marks the spot.

My regiment, 32d Illinois Infantry, for about two hours had partly held position in the same ravine in which Johnston died, and also in a smaller ravine more in front and farther north and west, leading up to the divide or level.

I am anxious to get in communication with any on the Confederate side who were present and may have fixed recollections of the time and circumstances, either by private correspondence or through the VETERAN. What immediate command, brigade, or regiment was General Johnston with at the time of his death? I have always supposed it to have been Bowen's Brigade, of Breckinridge's Reserves. What distance from where he fell, right and left, did the command extend? Did it extend westward beyond the Bell house into the open peach orchard and field or only cover the old house and orchard?

I was wounded and lay on the field from 2:30 P.M. Sunday to 4 P.M. Monday. I had an interesting conversation with a cannoneer with his caissons, whose guns were planted up on the divide, I supposed. They left that position about four o'clock. This cannoneer told me they had come up from Mobile, and he seemed to be taking a very cheerful view of their success, and I thought he had cause for it. He asked me if we had no lands up North on which to live and build up homes that we should come down to drive the Southern people from their homes and take their property. I told him if what of the South I had seen was a fair specimen I wouldn't know how to go to work on it to make a living if I possessed it all. He seemed surprised and said: "Well, what did you come for?" I tried to show him that we came to stop secession and save the Union. I am sure we each understood the other better after our little talk. I know I soon realized that he was as honest in his convictions as I was, and that he was fighting for home and fireside, and I felt that he who would not fight from his point of view was no man at all.

I would like to know how long that battery remained there and if there were any Union infantry immediately in front nearer than the "Bloody Pond."

A little grinning negro rode behind an empty saddle the most beautiful horse I thought I had ever seen. I almost coveted his mount, and wished myself far away from those unpleasant surroundings.

In the night a man I supposed to be a surgeon, who said his name was Deadwood or Redwood, belonging to a Mississippi or Louisiana regiment, by his kindness and sympathy won my confidence, and I asked to be taken to his field hospital and have the ball extracted from my thigh. Thinking it only a business transaction, I even proposed to divide my purse. Teasingly, he asked if I was not willing to give it all. I told him that, inasmuch as I would probably be left in one of their hospitals and might need some little delicacies which that department could not afford, I had rather not give it all. I could not see, but I thought he laughed and said: "It makes no difference; I can't do it. Our hands are full of our own wounded now; perhaps after a time we may be able to care for you." He offered me bread and water and gave me a blanket. If I had the same, the amount of money that I would have given that night for my leg would not tempt me to part with that blanket of gray. That Confederate surely had a good heart in him.

A colonel passed, searching for his missing sergeant major (my own rank), saying that if he found him, though dead, he would bear him from the field, even though against orders to do so.

I have a theory that when General Johnston made that last advance and lost his life his forces met no serious opposition except from the few in the hollow till they reached the vicinity of the "Bloody Pond." All on his right clear to the river had been turned and driven back; while all the Bell place, peach orchard, field, and all, had been cleared of us by Statham and Stevens, of Breckinridge's men. Our regiment had simply been forgotten and left there in that hollow to our fate, to get out if we could.

KILLING OF THE FATTED CALF SUGGESTED.

Miss Mary H. Stephenson, of Petersburg, Ill., has written an article to the Cumberland Presbyterian Banner from which the following extracts are made:

"O, Ephraim, we know your heart is noble. Ask yourself if when your brother made that grave mistake of seceding from the mother—and even his mistake was noble, for in making it he upheld that principle of State rights which will probably yet be the means of saving our country—and when, after the brave fight and the bitter defeat in arms, he came and laid down his arms and quietly accepted his defeat—ask yourself whether you did not make some mistakes in legislation; whether you did not treat your stricken brother with too much harshness and too little consideration; whether you were not in the beginning jointly responsible with him for the introduction of slavery into the country; whether you have not been sectional since then and called your sectionalism patriotism; whether any song or tune which necessarily calls up bitter memories in any section of our common country should be regarded as national and patriotic.

"In the blessed Book we read of a prodigal son who returned to the parental roof after a very wicked life, confessed his mistake, was received into the father's bosom, had the fatted calf killed for him, and the ring of restored sonship put on his finger. That, too, when this son had probably never done anything for his father or family in his life. Our brother believed he was right; believed it so hard that he was willing to die for his faith. When he came back to the parental roof and confessed that he had made a mistake in going out—whether or no he had the right to go—was any fatted calf killed for him? It has been more than forty years since he returned. Has any banquet of love been spread for him in all that time? Has he not, on the contrary, been treated with distrust and made to feel that he was in the Union on sufferance? And do you realize that his section of country gave us a Washington? That five of the Southern States were of the thirteen original colonies which won our independence? That the Kentucky and Tennessee riflemen were the chief factor in Old Hickory's victory at the battle of New Orleans? That they won much of our land from the Indians by hard fighting? Do you realize that, despite that one grave mistake, your brother of the South is naturally passionately patriotic, and do you ask yourself what it must have been to him to be considered an 'ex-Rebel' all these years? Is it not about time we killed the fatted calf for him?

"And if any are found so ungenerous as to complain at the fatted calf ceremony and thus play the part of the selfish older brother in the parable, the writer thinks she can safely predict it will not be their old opponents who wore the blue and who in old age are becoming their comrades. The bravest are indeed the tenderest, the most just and generous.

"Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. . . . And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; . . . and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT AT RUSK, TEX.

In the year 1899 a movement was started by the Confederate veterans of Cherokee County, Tex., for the erection of a monument to the Confederate dead of that county, to be erected in the Courthouse Square of Rusk. After much effort, their hopes were fulfilled, and on October 3, 1907, a beautiful monument was unveiled. An interesting programme was carried out, the children of the public schools assisting.

The inscriptions on the monument are as follows:

North side: "Lest we forget." "Rolls in County Clerk's Office."

West side:

"Their own true hearts and dauntless arms
Have covered them with glory;
And while a Southerner treads the soil,
They live in song and story."

(A tribute from the Frank Taylor Chapter, U. D. C.)

South side (front): "1861-65. In memory of the Confederate dead of Cherokee County."

East side:

"Some beneath the sod of distant States
Their patient hearts have laid,
Where with the strangers' heedless haste
Their unwatched graves were made."

The monument committee has prepared a well-bound book in which they will have the muster rolls of the eighteen companies, as well as all other Confederates, that mustered into the Confederate army from Cherokee County, and those who have come from other counties and States, duly recorded and placed in the county clerk's office for history and reference.

SOCIAL GATHERING IN NEW YORK.

RECEPTION TO THE NEW YORK CHAPTER, U. D. C., BY ITS PRESIDENT.

BY MRS. COWLES MYLES COLLIER, HISTORIAN.

Annually the New York Chapter looks forward to the delightful gathering tendered it by the generous and popular presiding officer, Mrs. James Henry Parker. The afternoon of Saturday, January 19, the large ballroom of the Astor Hotel was filled to overflowing with a brilliant display of the beauty and chivalry of the South, members of this organization. Among those welcomed as guests of honor were all the presidents of patriotic societies and clubs of New York City, notably Mrs. Donald McLean, President General D. A. R.

The decorations of the hall were most imposing and effective, flags being draped artistically on walls, and high above all this brilliant color scheme the central decoration conspicuously visible, the Confederate flag of our Chapter, intertwined with the national colors, thus typifying the solid union now existing between the North and South.

The gracious President, at the head of her line of officers, stood with a bright smile and greeting for each guest who, passing down the line, was given the hand of welcome and congratulations on the event. The many handsome women in becoming toilettes, the graceful young girls in the bloom of springtime, full of the rosy anticipations of life, the men with the warmth of this welcome lighting their faces and making them feel "at home" made a picture good to see, and planted in this society the bond of good fellowship so conducive to the success of the organization. High overhead the orchestra rang out the notes of old Southern songs, and these familiar strains wafted one to the good old days in Dixie.

The color scheme was carried out artistically in the table and its decorations, the cakes, ices, and bonbons being of exquisite taste and quality.

The committee of reception were indefatigable in their attentions, and no one felt a stranger. These hours flew but too quickly, and all were loath to say the parting word.

Long may our dear President live to gather these Daughters and Sons annually at such a love feast!

Several errors appear in the February VETERAN in the list of prisoners who died on Johnson's Island. Col. J. E. "Cruggs," 8th Virginia, should be Scruggs, from Warrenton, Va. Prior to the war he edited the Warrenton Whig. T. J. "Lowis" should have been Capt. Thomas J. Lewis, Company C, 3d Virginia Infantry. He was captured at Five Forks, Va., April 3, 1865. Joshua "Bizell," captain of Company G, 8th Florida Infantry, should be Joshua Mizzell.

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.
Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

SENSIBLE SUBSCRIPTION SUGGESTIONS.

Maj. George H. Heafford, who was adjutant of the 72d Illinois Regiment in the Union army, writes the following letter, which the VETERAN prints with sincere gratitude:

"I have noticed your earnest appeals to Southerners for more support (subscriptions) to your excellent magazine. Your monthly circulation is about 21,000 copies. It ought to be 100,000. I don't see how you can print so much good reading, historical and otherwise, for the small annual sum you charge for the VETERAN.

"There must be thousands of sons of former Confederate soldiers who are not subscribers to your magazine, and they ought to be ashamed of the fact. Then, too, there are hundreds (if not thousands) of business men in the South who should fill your pages every month with their business advertisements. Their support would help you materially. Why don't they come to the front?

"Why not suggest to the women of the South, particularly the Daughters of the Confederacy, to urge every man they know to send in an annual subscription to the VETERAN? I don't know any man who can resist the smiles of a charming Southern woman. I do know, however, that as a 'Yankee' soldier 'who fought, bled, and almost died' during the War between the States I enjoy reading your magazine, and as evidence of the fact I inclose my check for $10 in aid of your subscription list, and request that you send copies of the VETERAN to some of the 'boys in gray' now living in Texas, as that great State is the one in which I take particular interest at the present time."

What a fine text! A Union veteran of Chicago, proud of his service in the war and proud of the restored Union, is broad-minded and great-hearted in the foregoing. If our veterans will glance at the pages of the Last Roll in this issue, they will realize that the command, "Work while it is day," deserves their heed. The VETERAN is not now in need of appealing for its maintenance that its work be maintained, and yet—and yet—the tendency is to show the "hand-writing on the wall," whereby strength will fail and the light go out to those who most fully realize the importance of its record. Not for any of the survivors quite as much as the brave, grand men who went down in battle and the brave, tireless women—our mothers, who did all that was possible to maintain Christian homes through the awful struggles of the sixties and seventies—should our people stand together in making record for integrity of character. How easy to act upon Major Heafford's suggestion and increase the VETERAN to 100,000! There are so many who seem to regard it as any other publication, willing to continue if specially pleased or dismiss it if one or another trivial matter is not exactly as they would fancy, that the foregoing seems appropriate.

Make the VETERAN an object of care; and if it lacks in what seems best, reprove the editor and hold up his hands the firmer. Commend the VETERAN and send remittance for others with your own.

Just as the foregoing was written the following letter was opened from Cleveland, Ohio, making inquiry about a Confederate in the Masonic Home, as to whether his VETERAN had expired: "If he is not able to take the VETERAN, I want to arrange that he shall have it. No worthy Confederate through stress of misfortune shall be deprived of the VETERAN if I can prevent it."

Don't fail to give attention to the new postal law concerning renewal of subscriptions. The VETERAN cannot be supplied on credit at the advance in price of postage from three to four hundred per cent.

STATE SUPPORT TO REUNIONS.

Good old South Carolina has led in the support of Confederate Reunions. At least, this is the first State to act to the knowledge of the VETERAN.

That State has enacted a law to contribute whatever may be necessary to the extent of $3,500 each year. The act is as follows:

"1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina that there shall annually be appropriated the sum of $3,500 to defray the expenses of holding an annual Reunion of the Confederate veterans in this State, if so much be necessary.

"2. That the Commander and the Quartermaster General of the South Carolina Division of the United Confederate Veterans and one other member of said organization, who shall be named by the Governor, shall constitute a commission to disburse the funds provided for in Section 1 of this act, the same to be used for the purpose of paying for the accommodation of needy Confederate veterans in attendance on said Reunions and for such other purposes pertaining to the holding of the said Reunions as may be deemed proper and expedient by the said commission.

"3. That any part of an appropriation made in accordance with the provisions of this act which shall be unexpended as herein provided shall be turned back into the State treasury."

The Reunion last year was held in conformity with this act. The commission was composed of Maj. Gen. Thomas W. Crawley, Commander, D. Cardwell, Quartermaster General, and Capt. W. D. Starling, the latter appointed by the Governor, who served as treasurer of the fund. They furnished an itemized statement of expenses, and had left over $1,277.44, which was returned to the State treasury.

It would seem fitting for a special appropriation to be made by the State entertaining the General Reunions.

JUDGE SHIELDS, OF TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Comrade C. Crouch, of Morristown, Tenn., writes: "I have intended to tell you of the generous act of Judge John K. Shields. Just before the Richmond Reunion he sent $40 each to five Confederates to enable them to attend the Reunion. It was such a fine act that if mentioned in the VETERAN might it not stimulate others to give some of these old fellows, who hardly ever made a trip of any kind since the war, the opportunity to go to Birmingham? They will soon all pass the last milestone."

This generous act by one who was too young to be a soldier may be repeated by others when they learn of it, and thus add much brightness to the last days of men who were valiant, self-sacrificing patriots. May there be many others like Judge Shields to share their prosperity with these noble but unfortunate veterans!

WONDERFUL STORY OF RICHARD R. KIRKLAND.

BY WILLIAM D. TRANTHAM, CAMDEN, S. C.

The accompanying picture was a fairly good likeness of Sergeant Richard R. Kirkland, Company G, 2d South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, Kershaw's Brigade, McLaw's Division, Longstreet's Corps, Army of Northern Virginia, as he appeared during the war. Sergeant Kirkland won imperishable renown at the imminent risk of his life by giving water to the wounded enemy in front of Marye's Heights in the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862. He was the fifth son of John Kirkland and Mary Vaughn Kirkland, and was born near Flat Rock, Kershaw District, S. C., in August, 1843. When less than three years old, he lost his mother, and he and his little brothers and sister were reared by their father without her assistance. His parents were most worthy people and came of good Revolutionary stock. It was fitting, then, that their children should be patriots and heroes. They sent four sons to the front during the War between the States: Daniel, William, and Samuel to the 7th South Carolina Cavalry, and Richard to the infantry as stated above.

Early in 1861, when it became apparent that there would be a conflict, Richard joined the Camden Volunteers, Capt. (afterwards General) John D. Kennedy; and when asked why he had not joined the Flat Rock Guards, a company organized in the community in which he lived and to which many of his boyhood friends belonged, he replied that he thought it might be called into service before the other. He went with his company to Morris Island, Charleston Harbor, April 8, 1861, and to Richmond about two weeks later. On April 30 the Flat Rock Guards reached Richmond, and it happened that the two companies were associated together throughout the long struggle, both belonging to Kershaw's 2d South Carolina Volunteers.

This was probably the first regiment that entered the service for so long a period as one year, and in its ranks were heroic spirits. Among these young Kirkland found congenial companions. At the end of the year for which he had volunteered he reenlisted in the Flat Rock Guards, and was made orderly sergeant. He participated in every battle in which his command was engaged, from First Manassas to Chickamauga. He never was disabled by sickness or wounds, but was always present when duty was to be performed until the last-named battle, when he was killed in the charge up Snodgrass Hill.

It was at Fredericksburg, however, that he so greatly distinguished himself and proved the type of man he was. The writer has heard his brigade commander, the knightly Kershaw, who knew him from childhood, relate the incident. It was after the terrible slaughter of the Federals in front of Marye's Heights. The plain was covered with the enemy's dead and wounded. The weather was very cold, and the dying men were crying piteously for water. Kirkland was touched by their cries, and, going to General Kershaw, said in a spirit of seeming insubordination: "General, I can't stand this!"

RICHARD R. KIRKLAND.

"You can't stand what, Kirkland?"

"Those poor fellows out there are our enemies, it is true; but they are wounded and dying, and they are helpless! I have come to ask leave to carry water to them."

General Kershaw, looking with unspeakable admiration upon the boy, said: "Why, Kirkland, don't you see the danger? If you were to place your cap on your ramrod and elevate it above the wall behind which our line is formed, it would be riddled with bullets instantly. But what you propose is so noble and indicates so magnificently what a glorious soldier you are that I cannot say no. Go, my dear boy, perform your mission, and may God shield and preserve you!"

General Kershaw said that he watched the brave fellow as he went about his self-imposed task: how he collected all the canteens he could and crawled to a well near by and filled them, and then crawled back to the wall and leaped over; how he was greeted by almost a volley from the sharpshooters; how he went about under fire among the wounded; how he adjusted one poor fellow's wounded arm or leg and arranged another's knapsack under his head, so that he could rest more comfortably; how the wounded over the field, discovering that he was an angel of mercy, sat up and beckoned to and called him; and how the enemy, observing and realizing what he was doing, ceased firing in admiration of the boy's noble conduct, and Richard Kirkland completed his self-imposed task and returned unhurt! Does history furnish a finer type of heroism or self-denial?

Sir Philip Sidney, wounded mortally in the battle of Zutphen, was thirsty from the loss of blood, and was offered a cup of water; but, observing a private soldier crying, said, "Thy need is greater than mine," and directed it to be given to him. This has been recorded as one of the most striking and heroic instances of self-denial. Sir Philip gave the water to his friend. Kirkland faced the sharpshooters and almost certain death to relieve the distress of his enemies. And we may rest assured that on that cold December night one Confederate soldier, though chilled and hungry and covered only by his blanket, sank to rest with his heart warmed by the thought of a humane act bravely performed.

After Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, through both of which he had passed unscathed, poor Kirkland was killed at Chickamauga, where the monument marks the spot rendered glorious by Kershaw's Brigade. Kirkland fought to the last gasp, saying: "Tell pa good-by. I did my duty. I died at my post."

His body was recovered and buried with his kindred on White Oak Creek, in Kershaw County, S. C., in one of the most sequestered, unfrequented, and inaccessible spots I ever saw. But the recollection of Dick Kirkland hallows the place. It has been suggested that his remains be removed to Hickory Head Church, near Westville, S. C., and there reinterred, that his last resting place might be visited more frequently by admirers of his splendid career.

[If his remains should be removed at all, let them be put in Confederate Circle, Arlington Cemetery, and let the Peace Monument of the Nation, built by all the people, tell the matchless story. It cannot be told too often. There is no event of the war more pathetic from the standpoint of humanity for either side.—ED. VETERAN.]

WINDOW TO MRS. JEFFERSON DAVIS.

[Miss Decca Lamar West, Chairman of the Committee, made report to the U. D. C. Convention at Norfolk, in which she gave a history of its work. This should have appeared last month.—Ed.]

At your last Convention in Gulfport, Miss., I had the honor to present a resolution that the U. D. C. should erect a memorial window to Mrs. Jefferson Davis to be placed in the Church of the Redeemer at Biloxi, Miss., next to that erected by her in memory of her husband, Hon. Jefferson Davis.

The resolution was unanimously adopted, and our President, Mrs. Henderson, appointed me to the chairmanship of the committee to accomplish this purpose. A few weeks later she appointed as the other members Mrs. C. J. Weatherby, of Beauvoir Chapter, Biloxi, Miss., and Mrs. John J. Crawford, of the New York Chapter.

With my report I shall file with the Secretary a copy of the contract with Mayer & Company, of New York, for this memorial window. The design is more fittingly depicted in the further report of our work. In brief, the theme selected for the window is "Christ in the Home of Martha and Mary." The coloring and mechanical details correspond with the other windows. The work is being done in Munich. The contractors agree to have the window in place not later than January 31, 1908.

I suggest that the unveiling of the window be set for the 26th of February, 1908, if the usual Mardi Gras rates can be obtained by that time, as that is the date of the anniversary of the marriage of President and Mrs. Davis. I suggest further that invitations to the unveiling ceremonies be sent to General and State officers, U. D. C. and U. S. C. V., general and State officers, U. D. C.; that all State Presidents who cannot attend appoint representatives; also that invitations be extended the Confederated Southern Memorial Association.

My first step as chairman was to go to Biloxi to confer with the rector of the Church in regard to some general plan that would be in harmony with the memorial windows in the church and such other details as were deemed necessary.

The Convention voted that the same firm, Mayer & Company, of Munich and New York, who designed the window to President Davis and Miss Winnie Davis, should be employed. Mrs. C. J. Weatherby, of the committee, entered heartily into the spirit of the work. I am pleased to acknowledge here that as your representative I was entertained and treated with the utmost hospitality by the rector and parish of Biloxi.

At our preliminary conference it was decided that the members of the committee, our President General, Mr. Crawford (the rector at Biloxi), and Mrs. Hayes (the sole surviving child of Mrs. Davis) should each suggest a subject suitable for such a memorial. Mr. Crawford kindly wrote to Mayer & Company for suggestions and designs, thus assisting the committee very much. Your President and the committee were unanimous in the wish that Mrs. Hayes should be in every way satisfied with the subject and design, a courtesy due her from the Daughters of the Confederacy.

For centuries the names of Martha and Mary, the followers and beloved friends of our Lord, have been typical of strength and faith; and so for this window, which we hope and believe will be beautiful, we have chosen the theme of "Christ in the Home of Martha and Mary." The memorial inscription is to be:

"To the glory of God and in loving memory of Varina Howell Davis, wife of Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy.

"Born 7th of May, 1826. Died 16th October, 1906.

"O Lord, in thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded."

"Erected by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in 1907. 'Deo Vindici.'"

May each of us make a pilgrimage to this beautiful coast which our President and his faithful wife loved so well, go to the little chapel where they worshipped, again into the memorial church, and let us stand reverently before this window as before a shrine. As we behold the strong face of Martha and the beautiful Mary as she looks up with child-like confidence into the tender face of Jesus, may we too be filled with strength and with faith! So when the trials of life come we may bear them unswervingly, and when the great summons comes we too may say with the unfaltering trust of the faithful Martha, the adoring Mary, and our beloved Mrs. Jefferson Davis: "O Lord, in thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded!"

GRAVE OF STONEMALL JACKSON'S MOTHER.

BY ELIZABETH GALLAHER LEVY (1921 ST. PAUL STREET), BALTIMORE, MD.

It is an old and well-accredited saying that every great man had a great mother; and many there be, and right intelligent folk they are, who hold to the belief that every man of genius who startles the world will inevitably be found to have an unusually intelligent mother. The knight in the legend who, when he had exasperated all the goodly company of brave men and fair ladies by proposing a toast "to the fairest, the truest, and best woman on earth," and when with drawn swords her name was demanded, proudly and with a gentle bow replied, "My mother," did but voice a sentiment that none could deny.

So when the chance of a business visit to the coal fields of Fayette County, W. Va., found me near Hawk's Nest, I determined to visit this latter place as well as the grave of the mother of Thomas Jonathan Jackson, whose sobriquet of "Stonewall" made him world-famous. The story of his brigade at the first battle of Manassas "standing like a stone wall" is too well known to even the casual reader of history to require repetition here.

After leaving the canyon of New River, one of the grandest and most picturesque in America, we rode slowly up the mountain along the old James River and Kanawha Turnpike in an easterly direction, winding in and out of the ravines, around which the road clung like a vine, until we gained the summit. Over this road traveled Henry Clay and other famous men in the olden times en route to and from Washington, and over it tramped first one army and then another during the Civil War. We walked out upon the Hawk's Nest, but a few steps from the road, and what a scene greeted our eager gaze! This mighty rock, towering like a monument of the Titans above the hills and valleys that lay spread out in every direction, was ever a favorite visiting spot for the tired stage passenger in the olden days. While the lumbering old stagecoach was slowly climbing the tortuous and steep mountain side, the passengers were wont to walk ahead and, standing upon this giant rock, drink in as long as possible the intoxicating view. Jefferson, in his "Notes on Virginia," called it "Marshall's Pillar." To one who has viewed it the name of "Hawk's Nest" seems peculiarly appropriate. Certainly no higher lyric could the bird of empyrean habits find. With the mountains piled upon one another in a rolling landscape as far as the eye could reach toward the east and north, with the New River toward the southeast like a silver streak dashing through its mighty canyon, and with the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway paralleling it with its graceful curves, and the fair green valley of the historic Kanawha spread out to the west, this coign of vantage seemed perfect. With a longing and fascinating desire to linger and still longer enjoy this feast to the eye, we hastened on our dusty road high up along this mountain plateau for about two miles, where, nestling among the hills, lies the smart little town of Ansted, named for the great English geologist who was a pioneer among the savants who first proclaimed to the world the wonderful wealth of the West Virginia hills.

SCENE ON THE JOURNEY.

Hard by the road and overlooking the little town is the modest, old-fashioned graveyard where sleeps the mother of one of the world's greatest generals; for wherever the story of an ideal soldier or of heroic deeds is sung, there the name of "Stonewall" Jackson will be no stranger. Here high up on the hills always so dear to her sweet and brave spirit she sleeps. Little did this gentle, modest mother dream as she lay upon her dying bed of the glory and splendid fame her then little boy would win long years after she had left him almost alone in the world. Her resting place for many years was obscure, and might have been lost to sight and memory but for Capt. Thomas D. Ranson, now a Virginia lawyer, who when in youth had followed "old Stonewall" and who a few years ago, visiting that section on business, learned casually of the unmarked grave of the mother of his old commander. With an affectionate impulse and noble purpose at once formed, he determined that her grave should no longer remain obscure, and with a knightly spirit such as one would expect from such a soldier's heart he had erected at his own expense a simple but handsome shaft, upon which was modestly inscribed the following:

"HERE LIES

Julia Beckwith Neale,

Born Feb. 28, 1798, in Loudon Co., Va.

Married first

Jonathan Jackson,

Second

Blake B. Woodson.

Died Sept., 1831.

To the Mother of Stonewall Jackson

This Tribute

from one of his old Brigade."

Could the pathos and sentiment of this act be excelled? "Stonewall's" boyhood and struggles, his walking many miles in his journey to get to West Point, his piety even when a cadet, his courage when a boy—are they not written in the chronicles of the South he loved so well? Like his blessed mother, he died young, though he was old in fame; and when we remember that he was only thirty-nine years old when he fell at Chancellorsville, we can see that the name of "old Stonewall" was more a term of affection than descriptive. So long as the true, beautiful, and good in woman and knightly valor in man are revered, so long will "Stonewall" and his mother be honored, loved, and revered by all good men and women everywhere.

In the beginning of the year most earnest plea is made with all friends of the VETERAN to supplement with new names the vacancies made by the death list of old soldiers and Confederate mothers who have laid their burdens down. It is such an easy thing to get some one to subscribe who is not already doing so that such action is commended to every friend. The great trouble is hesitation. Many will approve this suggestion, but hesitate. "He who hesitates is"— Don't forget that the VETERAN is unlike any other periodical in existence. It lives by sentiment and those principles which should be perpetuated.

FROM PHOTO OF THE MONUMENT.

THE FORTUNES OF A BOY UNDER FORREST.

BY OCTAVIA ZOLLIFFER BOND.

The journey of Jacob with his son to Mount Moriah was not more sacrificial in aim than that of William Metcalfe, of Lincoln County, who in the autumn of 1862 traveled with his son, James Martin Metcalfe, to Lavergne, there to bind him upon Bedford Forrest's fiery altar of war.

Yet widely different was the spirit in which the victim went to be offered up for his country. To the nineteen-year-old youth, whose small stature and thin frame would have passed him for three years younger, it was a day of exultant pride. It was an hour of desire fulfilled, and more. For truly he could not have hoped to reach Lavergne as he did when Forrest's command was deployed in line of battle awaiting an immediate attack from the Yankees. Rare luck for a boy on his first day out as a soldier! Here was a fight ready to hand. At once he was enlisted and became part of the line as a driver in Freeman's Battery. This farmer boy, at ease on his horse (one of the swing team), was elated with eager courage and high resolve. He had been lifted at a bound from the commonplace into a life wherein great deeds are as natural as breathing. He was to act a man's part with men. The hour passed, however, and the enemy did not appear. Dark came, and no Yankee was in sight. For the time the chance of conflict seemed over. Yet, as nothing is certain in war, the father lay all night awake, anxious; and the seasoned cavalymen and artillerymen slept but lightly on their arms, while the inexperienced recruit, with no worse feeling than chagrin, fell into quiet slumber that lasted until morning.

At dawn his sense of disappointment had hardly come back with waking when brisk orders came hurtling along the line, and presently, amid clatter of swords, jingle of spurs, shouts of command, and the rattle of gun carriages, the whole force was in motion. Off to the southwestward on a long, forced march, they went to sweep through Columbia and beyond into the dreary stretches of the "Barrens" of Lawrence and Wayne Counties, whence they turned westward to the Tennessee River at Clifton and across it in flatboats as quickly as might be, and still on into West Tennessee, led by the "Wizard of the Saddle" so swiftly that no Union spy could locate them, no Federal force forestall them until they reached their quarry at Lexington. This was Forrest's way, and the boy liked it. War under Forrest was every whit as stirring as had been pictured in his daydreams. Nothing could be finer than the dash into Lexington, followed by the short, sharp fight and the capture of an Indiana regiment. Unfortunately, though, Hawkins's Federal regiment of Tennesseans made good their escape. The colonel of the captured 11th Illinois proved to be the since renowned Robert G. Ingersoll.

"Where are you from?" Forrest demanded of him.

"From almost everywhere but here, and with your consent I will be from here before long," said Ingersoll with dry humor.

"Are these all of your men?" asked Forrest impatiently. "Yes, all of the Illinoisans," replied Ingersoll, adding after a pause: "All the Tennesseans ran away."

If Forrest saw the joke, he did not take time from his business of war to smile. His next move was to whirl his men off toward Jackson. But when the troopers, with their flying artillery, approached that place, they found it too well fortified to attack, and they turned aside to swoop down upon Trenton. They shelled the fortified depot building, stormed the intrenchments, and took the town.

In Trenton they captured large army stores of clothing, provisions, arms, etc., which Forrest ordered to be burned after allowing the men to supply themselves with such part of them as they needed. In the scramble that followed young Metcalfe seized a pair of new boots. His feeling of prowess in wresting them from the enemy was not lessened by the ill luck that one was a six and the other a seven.

From Trenton Forrest struck out for Union City in his hunt for weak or unguarded parties of the enemy. On his way he destroyed stockades, tore up railroads, and injured the enemy in every possible way. Yet his movements, however dashing, were not without caution. To avoid the large Federal forces that were closing in on every side of his band of raiders, he marched at night across country, through prohibitive swamps, and over almost impassable roads. At sunrise near Parker's Crossroads they again caught sight of the blue-coats, gave chase, and drove them back to the crossroads, where a stand was made and a brisk fight took place.

The Federals were losing ground. Many fell. Among them was an officer whose valise came temptingly to the hand of young Jim Metcalfe. With the spirit of war and reprisal upon him, he was bearing it off when an older comrade rebuked him, saying: "You may be in the same fix as that dead Yankee before night. Forrest is going to get the worst licking a soldier ever got."

But for the slur on his commander the boy might have accepted the reproof. But to allow any one to predict that the invincible Forrest would be whipped? Impossible! And the boy gave the older man the lie, then joined in the gallant attack which soon brought out a white flag from the Federals. The order to "cease firing" came from the Confederate officers, and the day seemed won.

Forrest's maneuvers had thrown a body of cavalry in rear of the enemy. Others of his troops were flanking them. They could do nothing but surrender, being surrounded.

At this crisis a sudden change took place. Heavy columns of infantry, supported by cavalry, were seen coming rapidly in Forrest's rear. It was he who was hemmed in. The trapper was trapped. To cut his way out seemed hopeless, but it must be done. It was Forrest's way. Part of his forces, obeying his call to come on, pressed through a weak place in the enemy's line and out to safety. The artillery, accustomed as they were under the influence of Forrest's spirit to making a charge as though they were cavalry, dashed after him, and some got through. The cannon on which Jim Metcalfe was a driver bounded forward to follow with the rest. But the gap closed in their faces, and at close range a volley was fired into the gunners. The two drivers in front of Metcalfe were shot down. He turned to ask the man behind him what he must do at the instant that that man also went down. The riderless horses plunged madly. Turning squarely around, they tore down the blue ranks, making a running target for the Federal firing line.

J. M. METCALFE.

At the first volley Metcalfe's horse reared. The girth broke as he came down, and the rider was thrown under the hoofs of the rear horse and trampled. One iron shoe pounded his chest and another his arm before the cannon wheels rolled over his body, crushing the breast bones and pressing out the breath. When the boy regained consciousness, a Yankee soldier was standing over him cursing him and saying: "I have a notion to stamp the life out of you." At that moment a Federal officer came forward and ordered the soldier to be off. Then, stooping tenderly to the wounded boy, he gave him a drink from his canteen, unstrapped it from his own neck, put it over the shoulder of his fallen enemy, and offered him a piece of corn bread. "No," said the boy feebly, "I'll never need anything of that sort any more." "O," said his friend of the other side, "don't give up. You are worth ten dead men yet. But you ought never to have been here at all;" and, glancing at the boy's slight form, added feelingly, "You ought to be at home with your mother." As he moved off he said: "When I get through with this thing, I'm coming back to look after you."

He was true to his word. With four others he gently placed the wounded boy on a blanket and carried him to a temporary hospital. There Metcalfe lay for several days on a pallet, with very little attention from any one and with full time to consider what war really is. The scenes about him were not enlivening. Surgical knives and probing instruments were at work above the table in the middle of the room. One case was that of an officer to be operated upon. The surgeon cut his belt in haste and threw it aside. The pistol it held rolled under a bureau in plain view of the disarmed, crippled Confederate boy. From his pallet he could see it where it was lying out of sight of every one else. He eyed the pistol with the determination to have it. Several days passed with this sole thought in his fevered brain.

One day he found himself the only patient in the room. Finally the attendants went out and he was alone, when an unsophisticated country boy strolled in. "Buddy," said Jim Metcalfe in the pleading tone of a very sick person, "hand me my pistol from under the bureau." And "buddy" obligingly stooped for the weapon and gave it to the wounded boy.

How he clung to his treasure! Tied in a corner of his blanket, it was kept concealed through all changes and under all difficulties until one day a girl nurse untied the blanket and found the pistol. But being a girl, a Tennessee girl, she was easily persuaded not to tell. The weapon was a safeguard to the weak, wounded boy when, as a paroled Confederate, he made his way back alone through a multitude of dangers to the farm in Lincoln County. His wounds were of such a nature as to disable him from further military service as well as to unfit him in after life for the active pursuit of business. Yet never has he regretted the sacrifice he was called on to make for his country. J. M. Metcalfe is one of the three thousand Confederate soldiers of Lincoln County to whom the monument in Fayetteville is dedicated.

"SPEAKING THE TRUTH IN LOVE."—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald: "Where there has been a misunderstanding between friends that were friends indeed, from one cause or another they allow the wound to smart unhealed, all the time deploring the trouble, until it comes to pass that one or the other crosses over into the silence and mystery whence he cannot return, and then the survivor blames himself for being so proud, so morbidly sensitive, or so unforgiving. The self-condemnation in such a case comes too late."

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT AT BRANDON, MISS.

On the 29th of September, 1907, a monument erected in honor of the Confederate soldiers was unveiled on the Public Square in Brandon, Rankin County, Miss. The total height of this monument is thirty-seven feet. Its base is of stone, the pedestal and shaft of marble. The crowning figure, representing a Confederate infantryman on guard, with gun and accouterments, is lifelike, beautiful, and impressive. Appropriate expressions of sentiment in verse and prose are carved on the four sides of the pedestal. On the west side may be read: "Erected by Brandon Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy." The monument entire was furnished, in accordance with a contract with the Brandon Chapter, U. D. C., by J. A. Stinson, of Columbus, Miss., and was made complete in the Columbus Marble Works, with the exception of the statue, which was done in Italy.

The unveiling was on Thanksgiving day, and the exercises were beautiful and impressive. After an eloquent prayer by Rev. D. B. Waddell, of Meridian, Maj. Patrick Henry, Commander of Rankin Camp, U. C. V., of Brandon, acting as master of ceremonies, introduced the different speakers in his usual tactful and tasteful manner, leading the way himself with a brief address replete with noble sentiment and breathing in every word that passionate and undying love for the South and its cause which has animated his whole life from his boyhood. Major Henry is much loved by those who served with him, and Rankin Camp has had no other Commander. He was followed by Hon. G. O. Robinson, the popular young Mayor of Brandon, who in his official capacity extended a cordial welcome to veterans and other guests.

Addresses were then made by Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, President of the Mississippi Division, U. D. C., Mrs. W. S. May, President of the local Chapter U. D. C., and by Mrs. Julia Jayne Walker, a prominent member of that Chapter. Gen. Robert Lowry, Commander of the Mississippi Division, U. C. V., was to have made the leading address on this occasion; but on that day was laid to rest his son, Patrick Henry Lowry, in the Brandon graveyard, and those who had shared with him the fortunes of war also shared in his grief.

Major Henry called for impromptu talks, to which response was made by Col. Charles E. Hooker, Capt. W. A. Montgomery (the "gallant scout"), Capt. S. B. Watts, of Meridian, and Capt. George T. Todd, of Jefferson, Tex. After these addresses, the monument was unveiled by Mrs. May, President U. D. C., assisted by Miss Annie Henry and Miss Marie Collier, the exercises concluding with the singing of the "Bonnie Blue Flag" and "Dixie." After the benediction, all adjourned to the courthouse yard and enjoyed a bountiful dinner provided by the good ladies of Brandon.

BRANDON MONUMENT.

MICHAEL J. O'SHAUGHNESSY.

[From a memorial by committee of the Interstate Cottonseed Crushers' Association made soon after his death.]

Michael J. O'Shaughnessy, the son of James O'Shaughnessy, of Kildare, was born at Connaught, County of Galway, Ireland, on March 14, 1832; and died at his home, in Nashville, Tenn., in the seventy-fourth year of his age, October 20, 1906. He was a lineal descendant of "the Gentle O'Shaughnessy," one of the ancient kings of Connaught, and came of a family that for generations had been famed for all those virtues which in all ages have made the Irish character the synonym for honor, wit, and generosity, and the cultivated Irish gentleman, the type of all that high name should signify. Indeed, so famed were his people for generosity that a local tradition still told in the wild Galway hills recites that one of his ancestors, one Terrence O'Shaughnessy, was so generous that his right arm became elongated from extending it in giving.

At a very early age was begun that careful education and vigorous mental training, never relaxed throughout life, which gave him a stupendous store of scholarly attainments and in later life was his comfort and solace through the terrible shadow of blindness.

At the age of ten he was placed in the Royal Academy of Design at Dublin, his temperament and skill pointing clearly to an artistic career; and though the removal of his family to America three years later interrupted this training, the influence of it and the taste thus cultivated remained with him always and brightened his entire life.

On coming to America he joined an uncle, who had preceded the family and had gained prominence and wealth in Cincinnati, and remained there until 1862, when at the solicitation of Chief Justice Chase he went to Washington City to accept the position of Chief Accountant in the Treasury Department, in which capacity he formulated and put into practice the system of accounting still in use in the United States Treasury, and rendered material and valuable aid in the monetary affairs of the nation. In fact, he made the original sketch from which was printed the first greenback bill, and designed the form of bonds issued for the purchase of Alaska, a service which was ever remembered and freely acknowledged by his lifelong friend and admirer, Gen. F. E. Spinner, the War Treasurer of the United States.

Tiring of the routine of official life, Mr. O'Shaughnessy gave up his official position in Washington in 1868 and joined his brother in the grain business in Nashville, Tenn., where together they established what was perhaps the fourth, if not the third, cotton seed oil mill erected in this country. Out of this first mill and the experience gained in it grew, some ten years later, the splendid modern mills at Nashville and at Huntsville, Ala., which Mr. O'Shaughnessy built and operated until impaired health and failing eyesight caused his retirement, in 1900, and which stand yet as monuments to his accurate and comprehensive knowledge of the business, its methods and requirements.

In 1870 Mr. O'Shaughnessy was married to Miss Anna Pyles, of Nashville, a descendant of the Calhouns of South Carolina, a typical daughter of the South, embodying in mind and person the best in the traditional loveliness of her country and her people. Sharing fully in her husband's artistic temperament and literary cultivation, she was in every sense his companion and helpmate; and in later years she ably assisted him in building and adorning the beautiful home at Huntsville, Ala., to which they removed in 1882, and where, reviving in its name of "Kildare" and in the artistic beauty of its furnishings and environment the association of his ancestral home in Ireland, he hoped to spend the closing years of his life in the quiet enjoyment of his home, his friends, and his extensive library, comprising many rare volumes. But a crushing sorrow in the death of a beloved son was followed by paralysis of the optic nerve, which gradually resulted in total blindness; and returning to his home in Nashville, he cheerfully-resumed his accustomed literary work and scholarly employment, surrounded by his family and devoted friends of earlier years, calmly awaiting the inevitable. He never complained, was never idle, never despondent; but even in the darkness which was upon him was always the brightest member even in that cultivated household, was still the center of a large group of admiring friends who continued to share in the pleasure of his society and to draw upon that wonderful store of literature, art, and fact which his years of research had accumulated and which his wonderful memory preserved in undimmed freshness and accuracy.

Michael O'Shaughnessy was not a Confederate. On the contrary, he was one of the most active men in Washington not only in the ways indicated above, but it was by his sagacity, activity, and his influence unquestionably that the first purchases of United States government bonds were made.

MAJ. M. J. O'SHAUGHNESSY.

He was so esteemed in that department that all succeeding Secretaries of the Treasury kept up with him in the South, ever showing most exalted consideration and esteem. To describe his gentleness, his heroic mold, and his wonderful knowledge, nothing could more aptly illustrate him than to compare him with our beloved Jefferson Davis. With prolonged intimacy, the writer cannot recall an incident of inquiry wherein, by the response, he did not call to mind the story of Dr. Craven's "Prison Life of Jefferson Davis."

After having traveled through many foreign countries to consult the most eminent specialists in the hope of restored sight, he yielded, the devout Christian, philosopher, and settled in the magnificent home that stood, before ever being occupied for a quarter of a century or more in Nashville, on the birthplace of his wife. He occupied the time in having some one read to him, in meditating—aye, feasting upon what he had been blessed with through many studious years—or in exercise by walking the streets, his hand resting upon the shoulder of his servant guide. He was truly congenial with the people of his adopted South, and for years it was his prediction that the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution would be repealed.

As an illustration of his generous and appreciative characteristics, and not in any sense the least worthy, of such praise the following extracts are made from a letter during one of his last visits from home to Cincinnati in 1902:

"I have but to-day succeeded in getting an amanuensis, and since my wife's letter to you I have been on the rack, thinking how you must have berated me for not writing sooner; but, alas! you know how impossible it is for me to write to any one. * * *

"Now, for your good self. Are you as ubiquitous as ever—here and there, everywhere, always with friends and friends always with you, welcome everywhere, looked for everywhere, satisfied everywhere? You are a rara avis, my boy, and not one like you. You are the embodiment of human kindness; and as the world has not too much of that, you will always be popular, and how well deserved the popularity! But I know that is not what you seek. It is doing good for its own sake, and that you will always accomplish. Just look at the mountain of gratitude I owe you. How shall I repay it? Impossible. How I would like now to hear your knock on my door of a morning or evening and the gentle proffer of help, succor, and society—that is, of your own good self!"

Meditation upon the many unperformed duties that have been neglected, failure to visit that good man so many, many times causes remorse now.

COMMENTS AND CORRECTIONS.

E. H. Lively, of Aberdeen, Wash., comments on several articles appearing in the VETERAN during 1907.

HOW RICHMOND WAS DEFENDED.

On this subject Mr. Miles Cary, of Pocahontas, Va., expatiates in the December number, stating that among the several local battalions for the defense of Richmond one was the Departmental Battalion commanded by Maj. John S. Henley. Says Mr. Cary: "Major Henley was on his deathbed, taken sick just outside of Richmond, and was superseded by Captain Dill." Mr. Cary claims he was wounded on the occasion by collision with Sheridan's men, and while on furlough "Major Henley was buried by the battalion while I was laid up."

This statement is misleading, and history should be correct. Major Henley died only a few years ago, and after the war had filled many responsible positions in Williamsburg, Va.

JAMESTOWN FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Rev. John Pollard, professor Richmond (Va.) Baptist College, not long since in an article published in the VETERAN thought he was the only surviving guest at the Jamestown two hundred and fiftieth anniversary (May 13, 1857). The occasion was celebrated under the auspices of the Jamestown Society, which came into existence through Virginians living in Washington, D. C. Among those present at the time were ex-President John Tyler (who was the orator), James Barron Hope (the poet), Gov. H. A. Wise, and about ten thousand people. Mr. Pollard asked if there was another survivor beside himself. The writer of this is pleased to say that he was present on that memorable occasion.

COL. W. H. STEWART'S PRAISE OF GENERAL GRANT.

What Col. W. H. Stewart says in a complimentary way of General Grant in the December VETERAN is quite true as far as it goes. I feel very grateful to him for his kindness to our army in 1865 at Appomattox, etc.; but those orders he issued in August, September, November, etc., 1864, to his subordinate generals, Hunter, Sheridan, Merritt, etc., we cannot forget. They are enough to paralyze the most forgiving and knightly Christian hero in the world. These orders are to be found in the "Official Records," War Department, at Washington. They are in strange contrast with General Lee's Order No. 73, issued at Chambersburg, Pa., when he entered the State, June 27, 1863.

General Grant recommended to General Halleck that the destruction in the Valley of Virginia should be such that "crows flying over it for the balance of the season [July, 1864] would have to carry their provisions with them."

He wrote to General Sheridan: "We want the Shenandoah Valley to remain a barren waste."

To General Hunter he wrote: "Take all provisions and stock for use of your command; such as cannot be consumed, destroy."

To General Merritt he wrote: "Carry out my instructions. Destroy all mills, grain, and forage. You can drive off or kill all stock. Leave the valley a barren waste."

We may forgive, but can we forget the above orders? Are they such as to draw out our best feeling of commendation?

Napoleon could have burned Moscow, but even his severe combativeness dictated a more humane course. These orders were as uncivilized as Mr. Lincoln's proclamation setting free the unprepared negroes of the South. It was without authority and in violation of his own recorded convictions. (See his first inaugural address, March 4, 1861.)

INQUIRIES FOR AND ABOUT VETERANS.

Thomas M. Long, Gainesville, Fla.:

"I want to ask a few questions to be answered through the VETERAN if the participants are still living. My mind reverts to the second battle of Manassas and the night I was on vedette duty at the post about two hundred yards in front of the railroad cut. A Federal soldier lay there with a broken leg, and we talked all night. Every little while he would ask for a drink of water, and I would tell him to drink lightly, as I didn't know when I would get any more. Though I have forgotten his name and regiment, I have often thought of him and would like to know if he is still living.

"I would also like for some one to explain why Archer's Brigade was not captured in that battle when they charged a battery about dark and a Yankee line came in our rear and was closing in on us. For some cause the line was broken and they ran.

"What Georgia regiment lost a flag in the last day's charge at Gettysburg? and is the captain now living who brought the staff off the field? The flag was brought off by a member of Archer's Brigade, and the Georgia regiment got the flag next day when we were in line at artillery, where we started the day before. Was General Lee alone when he rode on the field after the lines broke?

"I slept one night with a Yankee whom we captured just outside of Gettysburg in a cavalry charge, and would like to know if he is still living, as also the one who was with Colonel Root when he was killed in the streets, and the Confederate who had just surrendered to him."

I had an uncle, James B. Jameson, familiarly known as "Tip," in the 2d Tennessee Infantry. Will some of his old comrades let me know either by letter or through the VETERAN of his brief war history, giving his company, commanders, and any other suitable data? If any one has a picture of him in his uniform, I should like to borrow it to have an engraving made.—James O. Jameson, P. O. Box 46, Greenville, Miss.

JOHN A. LOGAN—AN OPEN LETTER.

There comes to the VETERAN from South Haven, Kans., the following clipping yellow with age and headed as above:

"MT. VERNON, ILL., Aug. 8, 1881.

"To the Hon. Ben Hill, Atlanta, Ga.

"My Dear Sir: The smoke of battle having cleared away, it is perhaps not inappropriate to notice the acts and conduct of the participants. In the Senate of the United States last winter I noticed a discussion between yourself and the Hon. John A. Logan, from this State, in which that honorable Senator took occasion to make a broad denial of the charges long laid at his door of his disloyalty at the breaking out of the war. While I do not desire to reopen a matter that may be so annoying to the honorable Senator, yet I think it but fair and right that the other side of the 'history' should be written.

"I have known Mr. Logan for many years; often met him in political meetings before and at the beginning of the war. At that time he was a member of the House from the Thirtieth District of this State. I was publishing a Democratic paper at this place. I well remember Mr. Logan of that day as the most ultra man in politics then in the State, it being generally understood that he was in favor of Southern Illinois seceding and joining the Confederacy. In 1861, near James J. Fitzgerald's, in this county, he made a speech filled with the most vindictive epithets upon the administration—in fact, language seemed to fail him in denouncing the 'unholy war.' And among the mild (?) sentences he used I well remember the following, made by Mr. Logan the day referred to: 'May my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth and my right arm wither should I ever take up arms against my brethren of the South!'

"This speech was made in the presence of hundreds of men besides myself who are to-day living and will bear testimony to the fact.

"In McLeansboro, Hamilton County, Ill., on Tuesday, the 21st of May, 1861, Mr. Logan drew his Bowie knife and threatened in the most abusive language to cut down the stars and stripes which was then over the courthouse because he said it was placed there as an insult to him as a member of the Democratic party in Southern Illinois. These remarks were made in the presence of many good citizens, whose names will be produced if required. These treasonable actions and utterances were continued by Mr. Logan until he received a visit from a messenger of Governor Yates, who at the time was a regularly appointed special deputy United States marshal. This officer called upon Mr. Logan at his home, in Jackson County, armed with two weapons only—one a commission to recruit and organize a regiment for the Federal army; the other an order duly signed for the arrest of John A. Logan as a Rebel sympathizer. Mr. Logan was given his choice—the world knows which he took. I am prepared to furnish the order of arrest, which is still in existence and at command when circumstances require. I have no reason for making the statements other than a desire to see the facts go into history as they really existed at the time—before he was presented with the alternative of a commission or an arrest. He was compelled to leave Centralia, in this State, on a special engine to prevent a session of Judge Lynch's court, which was convening for the purpose of trying Mr. Logan for treasonable utterances. I have withheld the names of individuals in this communication, thinking it better to produce them in a future article in case a denial is made, for the honorable gentleman's benefit and that the true facts may go into history. I hand you this through the press. For any information you may desire in reference to me I refer you to the Hon. R. W. Townsend, member of the House from this district, the Hon. Sam S. Marshall, former member, and the Hon. Thomas S. Casey, one of the judges of the Appellate Court of this State.

"Very respectfully,

EDWARD V. SATTERFIELD."

TEXAS COMRADES OPPOSE UNITED STATES PENSION.

The opposition to government pensions for Confederate survivors seems to be general. The only Camp reported adversely is at Lewisburg, Tenn.

Thomas A. Elgin, Adjutant of the W. P. Lane Camp, U. C. V., No. 621, at Marshall, Tex., writes to Hon. C. A. Culberson, United States Senator from Texas, in regard to the bill to pension soldiers: "While we appreciate the motives that prompted the gentleman to offer this bill, yet we desire to express our disapprobation of the measure, and we request our Southern Congressmen to vote against it. Like Brutus, 'Twas not because we loved the old flag less, but our country more,' that we took up arms and marched to battle under the Confederate flag when the old flag (under whose folds our forefathers had fought) ceased to represent our principles and to guarantee our constitutional rights. The Confederate soldier fought for principle, not as a hireling. Our noble slain died for a principle, and their comrades left behind cannot and will not accept a pension to dishonor their memories. Let the old flag float in the breeze above us. We cheer it as it passes, for 'tis ours; but let no sordid, selfish sentiment steal from us our love, our memories, our veneration for the loved comrades gone before.

"Those hoof beats die not on Fame's crimsoned sod,

But will ring through her song and her story;

They fought like Titans and struck like gods,

And their dust is our ashes of glory."

At the meeting of Holmes County Camp, of Lexington, Miss., in January it was reported that three members had died. They were J. R. Wilson, J. W. Bowman, and Capt. C. Oltenburg. Suitable resolutions were passed in their honor.

FLAG OF TWELFTH GEORGIA ARTILLERY.

[W. H. Hitt writes to Lieut. Col. Henry D. Capers, who commanded the 12th Georgia Battalion of Artillery.]

The first battle flag carried by the 12th Georgia Battery, called "The Pinkie Evans," was taken by the battery from Augusta, when the command was organized, to Tennessee, and was displayed in action the first time at Fort Cliff, East Tennessee.

The command being transferred to the Department of Georgia, South Carolina, and Florida, the flag was next displayed before the enemy at Battery Wagner, Morris Island, S. C., and subsequently at Fort Sumter, when it was partially destroyed upon the parapets of Fort Sumter—the remnants of the flag being sent to the Statehouse at Milledgeville, when presumably they fell into the hands of Sherman's army. The statement which appears in Johnson's "Defense of the Harbor of Charleston" that "the flag of the 12th Georgia Battery, displayed from the parapet of Fort Sumter on October 31, the day of the great bombardment after the garrison colors at the southeast angle of the fort, was shot away," is correct; and it is true that the battery flag was so displayed some days after the flag episode of October 31 and, as stated, was practically torn to pieces.

Referring further to the flag episode to which Major Johnson alludes in this excellent work, it may be considered that the garrison flag, so long as it was in the immediate hands of the command, was the flag of the battalion; and as two members of the 12th were specially complimented by General Elliott, the commandant of the fort and an eyewitness of the affair, for the restoration of the colors, and as this incident was observed and commented on also by the Federal admiral in his report of the engagement to his government, some direct allusion to this incident may not be deemed out of place in this brief history of the flag of the battalion.

After the disaster at Cedar Creek, when Sheridan had rallied his army and in turn was driving the Confederates, Hopps, carrying his flag high, retreated leisurely some thirty yards behind the broken battalion. He was hailed by the enemy and called on to surrender; but, merely looking over his shoulder at them, continued his dignified retreat until he was killed.

Private Albert Wallin, of Company F, a sixteen-year-old boy, ran back to Hopps's body and, tearing the flag from its staff, put it in his bosom and, jumping on a caisson that was being driven away at a gallop, sought to escape. The horses being shot down, Wallin jumped from the caisson and got into the mountains, where he remained unaccounted for for three or four days, at the expiration of which time he rejoined the command with the flag in his possession. This circumstance was made the subject of a special order by General Early in which Wallin was highly commended and for which act of gallantry he was given a thirty days' furlough.

I am unfamiliar with the flag's history or the names of its bearers after Cedar Creek, but learned from good authority that the flag was deposited in a wagon on the retreat from Petersburg, and was lost when the wagon train was captured. It was never surrendered.

NOTE.—The first flag, known and cherished as the "Pinkie Evans," was presented to the 12th Georgia Battalion of Artillery at Camp Jackson, near Augusta, Ga., by Miss Pinkie Evans, a lovely representative of Georgia womanhood, during the month of May, 1862, at a dress parade of the command and received by Lieutenant Colonel Capers in behalf of the battalion in elegant military form. Miss Evans is now Mrs. Whitehead, of Augusta, Ga., a noble matron worthy the representative of all that is truly good in her sex.

NOTES SUPPLEMENTED BY COLONEL CAPERS.

The foregoing paper was sent to Colonel Capers, who wrote:

"In order that this narrative may be the better understood, I explain that the bombardment of Fort Sumter, above referred to, was the second and last attempt of the combined army and fleet of the enemy to reduce the fort to an untenable ruin. This second bombardment occurred on the 31st of October. Nine monitors, the historic Ironsides carrying thirteen eleven-inch guns, four sloops of war with batteries of 200-pound Parrott guns, aided by the heavy guns of Fort Wagner and the Cumming's Point batteries, had been preparing for some time for this event.

"Subsequent to this ever-memorable bombardment Colonel Rhett, of the 1st South Carolina Artillery, had been relieved of the command of Fort Sumter, and Maj. Steven Elliot, a gallant and accomplished soldier, was assigned to the defense of the fort 'to the last extremity.' At the special request of Major Elliot, the 12th Georgia Battalion of Artillery reported to him. Never before, perhaps, nor since that memorable 31st of October, 1863, has there been such a fire from as heavy guns as were concentrated on comparatively small area. From early morn until sunset the infernal din of bursting shell and the roar of heavy guns went on without cessation. Yet when the sun sank beneath the western horizon, there still stood Fort Sumter, grim and defiant.

"It was near midday when the garrison colors flying from the southeast angle of the fort were shot away and fell over the parapet into the ocean. Immediately Sergeant Hopps, color bearer of the 12th Georgia Battalion, sprang upon the parapet, and, with Privates Garland Sneed and William Hitt, with cool deliberation planted the flag of the battalion firmly in the crumbling wall about them.

"Another incident of this terrific bombardment is worth preserving. The band of the 12th Georgia Battalion was justly considered one of the best in the Confederate army. At my suggestion Capt. Kerr Boyce rendered every possible aid to the band leader, Bouyer, to bring his musicians up to the highest possible efficiency. Sergeant Bouyer was ably assisted by the Thompson brothers, of Newnan, Battery A. As the hour of 'retreat' (sundown) approached and while the shells from the enemy were exploding over and on the fort, Sergeant Bouyer assembled his band and, marching it on the sea face parapet, played the 'Bonnie Blue Flag' with a much spirit as if on dress parade. The firing from Cumming's Point immediately ceased, and a band marched out to the sea beach and answered with the 'Star-Spangled Banner.' The cheers of the sailors on the monitors and from the Federal garrisons on Morris Island were distinctly heard at Fort Sumter, despite the roar of artillery.

"Furnished with a new and brilliant battle flag, on whose folds were inscribed 'Fort Wagner and Fort Sumter,' the 12th Georgia Battalion was ordered in May, 1864, to report to General Lee, commanding the Army of Northern Virginia, and was assigned to Gordon's Division of the Second Corps. Serving as infantry, the battalion was assigned to the old Stonewall (or Lawton) Brigade, commanded by Gen. Clement A. Evans. At Hanover Junction, at Turkey Ridge, and at Cold Harbor the battalion was conspicuous for the same gallantry in battle that had uniformly characterized its history.

At Cold Harbor Lieutenant Hopps, the color bearer, was severely wounded. As he fell the colors were seized by Adjutant Baker, who fell mortally wounded and near to the writer, who was severely wounded. Major Hanvey, second in command of the battalion, was also wounded. In this great battle the battalion sustained a loss of two hundred and twenty-one killed and wounded.

"After the retreat of General Grant's army, the Second Corps was ordered to the Valley of Virginia. At Lynchburg, Winchester, Cedar Creek, Fisher's Hill, Monocacy, Md., and in the vicinity of Washington City the colors of the 12th Georgia Battalion were always to the front."

FEDERAL SOLDIER FULFILLED HIS PROMISE.

BY R. WINTHROP JONES.

During the Civil War I had been confined as a prisoner in Libby Prison, and ten years after being discharged from the United States service I was suddenly seized with a desire to go South and have a look at it. As I was starting an uncle of mine insisted on giving me a letter to an old friend of his, Samuel Porcher, a Richmond merchant.

As soon as I arrived in the former Confederate capital I went down to the river bank and, standing before the old tobacco warehouse that had been my prison, looked up at it with very singular feelings. There on the street level was the door out of which I had passed in broad daylight at the imminent risk of my life and began a journey of intolerable suffering down the James River. As I stood in 1874 looking on the scene of my adventure of 1864 I scarcely realized that I was a free man, permitted to come and go as I liked. Not a uniform was to be seen; business had taken the place of war.

I was confined on the ground floor. At times the door would be left open, a guard pacing back and forth on the pavement before it. Occasionally I would go to the door and look out, usually to be ordered back. One of the sentries was an old man of about forty-five. One day at noon I went to the door and stood looking out. Everybody was at dinner, and I could see no soldier except the old sentinel, and he was not on the alert. It was a crazy thing to do; but I watched this sentinel till he turned to walk with his back to me, then like a flash slipped out of the door and ran like a deer to the corner where a street sloped down to the river. As I turned a ball came whizzing past me. The sentinel chased me; and although I was much younger, I was weak by confinement, and he caught up with me just as I was getting behind a pile of lumber. I turned and shot him with the revolver that a comrade had given me. I don't know how he got it. Darting on, I saw a cellar window open and crawled in. Searchers passed my hiding place, but did not enter; and at dark I crawled out, dodged along down the river bank, found a boat, and floated on the historic James. How I reached Old Point Comfort and our ships would make a story of much interest.

Well, after inspecting Libby, I presented my letter of introduction to Mr. Porcher, who had a pretty daughter ten years my junior. Between us there was a case of "love at first sight." I stayed in Richmond a long while, pretending to have business there, all the while attempting to smooth away Mr. Porcher's prejudice against me as having been a Union soldier. When at last I thought I had him somewhat conciliated, I ventured to ask him for his daughter. He heard me through with lowering brow, and said: "I will give my consent on one condition. There is a miserable, dirty little Yankee who was a prisoner in Libby in 1864 whom I wish to kill. I was a member of the home guard and a sentinel at the prison, when one day that impudent fellow walked out of the door and ran away. I followed him. He shot me in the shoulder, from which I have suffered ever since; but I was dropped from the guard in derision."

Mr. Porcher was going on, getting more and more excited as he proceeded, when his daughter came in anxiously and stopped him. He ended by making it a condition to our union that I promise to find that imp and give him a chance to shoot him.

I listened to this with manifest astonishment. There was something familiar about Mr. Porcher's face and figure, and I could not get over the idea that I had seen him somewhere. I had grown whiskers and weighed fifty pounds more than when I was a prisoner. I was too much disconcerted to reply at once, but finally said: "Mr. Porcher, I promise you that within six months after my marriage with your daughter I will produce the 'dirty little Yankee' you refer to. I have heard of this case, and am sure I can oblige you."

Exactly six months after making the promise I redeemed it by going to my father-in-law, with whom I had become a great favorite, and giving him permission to shoot me. He was too much astonished to avail himself of the privilege.

A TYPICAL CONFEDERATE—JESSE BARKER.

H. E. Wood, color sergeant of the 18th Virginia Regiment, wrote of his predecessor as ensign of the regiment:

"Jesse Barker was of humble and obscure parentage, possessing no earthly comforts, unless it was the battered and faded Confederate uniform which wrapped his body, serving as a winding sheet for his burial, he having been buried where he fell.

"Jesse Barker had seen more than a score of his comrades killed and wounded carrying the flag of his regiment. He saw Boston killed at Williamsburg, Va.; he saw the entire color guard, consisting of a sergeant and eight corporals, killed and wounded at Gaines's Mill, Va.; he witnessed the same fatality among his comrades four days afterwards at Frayser's Farm, Va., when the entire color guard was again shot down; he saw the head of Garland Sydnor, of Lunenburg County, Va., one of the noblest soldiers in the army, crushed to a pulp with a cannon shot, bearing aloft this same emblem of liberty and love. With these facts before him, knowing what it meant to be the standard bearer of the regiment, when a volunteer ensign was called for, Jesse Barker offered his services.

"The test came at Sharpsburg, Md. It became necessary to change the position of the regiment, then in action. Maj. George C. Cabell, of Danville, Va., commanding the regiment at that time, than whom no truer patriot or braver soldier ever drew a sword in defense of a country, gave the command, 'Color and general guides post,' which meant that the color sergeant should advance fifteen paces to the front of the regiment.

"In the din and confusion of battle Barker did not hear the command and did not advance. Major Cabell, seeing his orders disregarded and supposing Barker was hesitating about it, reprimanded him, called him a coward, and asked that some brave soldier take the flag and go forward with it. Barker heard that and told Major Cabell that he was no coward, that he was ready then to make as much sacrifice for the cause as any soldier in the army, and that if ordered to do so he would advance with his flag as far toward the enemy as any other soldier would do, and asked that the order be repeated. Major Cabell again gave the order. Barker quickly advanced the fifteen paces to the front, and stood waving the flag he loved so well in the face of the enemy till he fell a corpse.

"While Jesse Barker was poor in purse, he was rich in patriotic devotion. He was as true a patriot, as fearless and intrepid a soldier as ever faced an enemy, and as proud of being a volunteer private soldier in the Confederate ranks as if he had been commander in chief of the army.

"So much for the rich man's war and the poor man's fight. Each of these soldiers did his duty to the death, rich and poor alike, learned and unlearned."

EXPENSIVE EXPERIENCE FOR A PISTOL.

BY A. FONTAINE ROSE (9TH VA. CAV.), BETHEL ACADEMY, VA.

My first experience as a soldier was with Capt. George D. Shadburne in the lower part of Fauquier County, Va., in February, 1863. The Yankees came from Grove Church, where they had their reserve picket post (which was about fifteen miles on the main road leading to Fredericksburg), to a place known as "Bill Dick Smith's Gate," some two or three miles from Morrisville and about the same distance from Grove Church. Captain Shadburne was spending the night at the home of my father, in Stafford. I listened to the soldiers talk about their experiences and plans, and learned as to where they expected to attack the Yankees next day and the way they expected to go. Being familiar with all that country, I knew that would be two miles out of their way. They told me that if I would pilot them the best way they would give me a pistol, so I agreed to go.

It was a cold, raw day in February, and we waited from 9 A.M. to 3 P.M. for the Yankees, and my teeth were chattering. In less time than I can write it I heard firing from double-barreled shotguns and pistols. The two men that Captain Shadburne placed with me had concluded that it was too late for the Yankees to come, and one of them (Walter) had gone to Smith's house to get something to eat, while the other (Scott) was across the road talking to the captain. They did not hear the Yankees as soon as I did. The Captain had told me to whistle when I heard them coming. I blew with all my might, but did not make a sound, and then said "Hoot!" but it was too late for my reinforcements. All the shooting being on one side of the road, the only Yankees that got away ran over me; and but for a good-sized stump, I would have run away too. I never heard bees make more fuss than those blackshot did about my head.

One of the boys had given me a short carbine that would shoot once with a cap; but I did very little execution with it, for the fellow ran his horse so close to me that I punched him with the carbine and the cap dropped off. That, of course, added to my excitement; and when the captain asked me if any of the boys had shot me, I could hardly articulate well enough to be understood. I thought I had lost my speech forever; and if that was war, I had enough. But that was not my last adventure by any means.

If this should come under the eye of any of the "old boys" (James Stone, Walter, Scott, Shakespeare Harris, Little Harris, Parks, Dan Tanner, O'Keefe, Latham, Pearce—all of whom, I suppose, belonged to Hampton's Legions, as they were with Captain Shadburne at different times), I would be glad to have a line from any of them.

VETERANS SOMEWHAT NEGLECTED AT REUNIONS

BY A. F. EVANS, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

Responding to your request for letters, I have no criticism to make concerning the VETERAN, but do complain at lack of hospitality at our annual Reunions. I have attended several, and have to pay more to be entertained than I would on ordinary occasions in any city. We hear of the "great hospitality" of the cities where we meet. This may be due to the sponsors and sons, but not to the old vets. I am in my seventieth year, and the only accommodation I get in attending the Reunions is the railroad fare; and any one else can get that, as we advertise the places where we meet and give the public opportunity to get cheap tickets over the railroads on such occasions. I was at Richmond, Va., and paid one dollar per night to sleep on a cot in a room with eight men, and I was also at Norfolk, or Jamestown, October 25 past, and the Virginia State Reunion was in session in Norfolk, and no city in the State invited them to meet with them for next year. I understand that this was from the great expense it took to entertain them; certainly not expense for old soldiers, but for the post-bellum soldiers and other organizations.

I did not think we would ever have another General Reunion after Richmond, but Birmingham wants to try it next year. I heard some outside person remark as we were marching in the parade at New Orleans that the old men ought to be riding and those who were riding should do the walking. So it goes, but we won't be here much longer.

TRIBUTE TO THE VETERAN ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Such appreciation as is manifest in the following resolutions is very gratifying to the editor of the VETERAN, whose earnest endeavor is to make the publication of the highest historical value to all interested in Confederate history, and especially to the members of the organizations whose aim is to record for future generations the deeds of valor and sacrifices of the Southern people.

Resolved: 1. That the thanks of the Joe Wheeler Chapter, No. 247, U. D. C., Dardanelle, Ark., are hereby tendered to Mr. S. A. Cunningham, its editor, for his generous courtesy in sending us the VETERAN free for a year.

2. That we heartily indorse this publication as a most valuable repository of hitherto unwritten history and as an unbiased and impartial chronicler of events and happenings relating to the War between the States.

3. That we extend to Mr. Cunningham our very best wishes for a happy, prosperous, and successful new year, and that all good may abide with him in this year of our Lord, 1908.

The foregoing action was taken on New Year's day. Communications from other Chapters have been received in the same cordial spirit, and the new year is begun in the belief that the coöperation so generally given in the past will continue with the VETERAN.

It is feared that many friends will not appreciate the imperative requirements by the Post Office Department that subscriptions be paid in advance. It may be calamitous to the VETERAN; for its readers, though often negligent, are loyal, and would pay eventually.

THE UNCROWNED KING.

BY JOHN W. AKIN.

(Delivered before the U. D. C. Chapter at Macon, Ga.)

The women of the world have made little of its history and written less. This is true up to date. The indications now are that from this time forth they will make more history and write much more.

It is one thing to make history; it is a very different thing to write it. History so-called is full of myths. William Tell and his apple and arrow, George Washington and his cherry tree and hatchet, Lee's offer of his sword to Grant at Appomattox and Grant's refusal to receive it are illustrations. He or she who helps to tell the truth to posterity is a useful patriot.

Future generations will never know the truth unless present generations record it. Those who follow us will judge us according to such memorials of ourselves and our work as we hand down to posterity. New England, and Massachusetts particularly, found out this truth long ago. The part New England took in the Revolutionary War is magnified by almost all of our national histories because New England wrote down all the good things she did for the cause of liberty, while the South was content to do her share, and more, and took little pains to preserve the records of her splendid work in that long, historic struggle.

New England, by the way, was also careful not to record some of the truth of history. For instance, New England writers, and therefore United States historians generally (for as a rule United States histories take their cue from New England authorities), have entirely omitted any mention of a fact which I understand records yet preserved in Massachusetts will establish, which fact throws upon the picture of the battle of Bunker Hill a light not altogether a halo. This fact is that Massachusetts volunteers mutinied after the battle of Bunker Hill because their monthly hire as soldiers was not paid promptly in cash, from which it would seem that these New Englanders whom popular history glorifies as unselfish patriots were ready to quit the army of liberty the minute its cash was short.

This was on the spot where, according to a popular myth, the cradle of liberty was first rocked. The fact is that North Carolina rocked that cradle before Massachusetts thought about it, and that cradle was built, rockers and all, in the land in whose defense were drawn the matchless swords of Lee and Stonewall Jackson.

I have made these preliminary observations because I understand that one of the objects of the Daughters of the Confederacy is to preserve and perpetuate the truth as regards the Confederate States of America and the causes which produced and overthrew that government, and by perpetuating the facts to defend the name and fame of the Confederate soldier. And is it not peculiarly appropriate that among the leaders in this great work should be the women of Georgia, the keystone of the Confederate arch, geographically, financially, and politically? Geographically; for Georgia was the backbone of the Confederacy, whose fate was sealed when Sherman burned his way from her mountains to her seaboard. Financially, because it was from the workshops and granaries of Georgia that the munitions of war and food for our soldiers principally came; so much so that Georgia during the war was called Egypt, for from thence came corn by scores of train loads to feed our starving soldiers in war-worn Virginia. Politically, because it was Georgia who on January 19, 1861, practically decided for the whole South the question of secession then trembling in the balance; and it was Georgia where the last Confederate Cabinet council was held and under whose long-leaf pines, sighing in the early twilight a requiem over departed Confederate hopes, a band of reward hunters captured and manacled the President of this spotless but unhappy republic, the incomparable Jefferson Davis.

It was indeed near this beautiful city of Macon that the curtain was rung down upon the last scene in the greatest drama of blood and war and national despair. The central figure in that drama, and especially in this its last scene, was the President of the Confederate States, that young republic whose long, pathetic struggle for life and liberty will be the inspiration of patriots and the theme of poets a thousand years from now. The very nearness of the place where President Davis was overpowered and captured, to say nothing of the unflinching devotion of the people of Macon to him personally as well as officially (a devotion surpassed by that of no other community throughout this Southland), conspire to suggest some thoughts to-day which relate specially to him. And is not a reference to his name and fame peculiarly appropriate to this our Confederate Memorial Day? Did not these men, whose sacred dust these little mounds inclose, die on the field of honor for that cause whose official head he was? Was he not the commander in chief of the army and navy of the Confederate States? And is not this day dedicated by the pageantry of flowers, the homage of tears, and the triumph of love to the memory of the Confederate soldier?

I need not allude to even the most prominent features of Jefferson Davis's life and character—his brilliant career in the fields of Mexico, his splendid and enduring services as Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Pierce, his illustrious career in the national Congress, his stainless record as President of the Confederacy, his lofty character, his unyielding fidelity to Southern and Confederate ideas, his superb patriotism, the matchless fortitude and unexampled patience with which he bore the insults and obloquy heaped upon him because he was the representative of the South—he the one vicarious sacrifice for his people unparalleled in the history of the world.

But I may with propriety refer to some things suggested by the times through which we are passing. We have lately finished the Spanish-American War, and are still fighting some half-naked savages in tropical jungles on the other side of the world. The ranking general of our armies once had relations with Jefferson Davis. It was when he was carried a feeble, sick, emaciated captive and thrust into a dungeon, as were patrician senators by Goths and Vandals whose ruthless hordes defiled the marble beauty of the Eternal City. The war was over. The South was crushed. There was no hope for Jefferson Davis's escape from prison, even if he had tried. So far from trying, he was begging for a trial which, as all the world now knows, the United States government did not dare give him, realizing through the able lawyers whose counsel the administration followed that a trial could result only in a judicial deliverance by the Supreme Court of the United States declaring the War between the States not to be a rebellion and upholding that view of secession and the constitutional rights of the States which the South believed in and fought for in 1861, and which New England believed in for the first half century of this republic and threatened in the famous Hartford Convention to fight for against the United States government during the second war with Great Britain.

Fanaticism demanded a victim; but even fanaticism blushed when the prison keeper, Nelson Miles, sent his brawny blacksmith and four burly troopers to the dungeon to throw down upon the stone floor this feeble old gentleman and rivet the shackles upon his ankles and his wrists and load him down with chains. This brutish jailer has since become our ranking general. Official favoritism made him so. Perhaps his cruelty to Jefferson Davis helped him to wear the general's uniform, for Jefferson Davis was the representative of the Southern people, and there have been many—alas! there are still some—who delight in anything which humiliates the South.

This ruffianly prison keeper has lately pleaded official orders as his excuse for this barbarity. He is beginning perhaps to read the verdict which humanity and Christianity alike pronounce upon his deed. But the records are made up, and they show that this excuse is false. It was in the hollow heart of Nelson Miles, the incompetent coxcomb and mendacious falsifier, that was conceived this dirty and inhuman cruelty.

General Eagan exhausted the vocabulary of epithets in denouncing General Miles. His speech was too foul for official records; but if it were not just what General Miles deserves, it is because the language of the gutters has no words foul enough to appropriately describe the heart and nature of Nelson A. Miles.

The one great Georgian who stood closest to Mr. Davis was admired and honored by the people of Macon and Bibb County, and it was the voice of Bibb which ended a hard-fought contest by sending to the United States Senate this great Georgian, Benjamin H. Hill.

In the Confederacy's darkest days no man was more faithful to Jefferson Davis and his administration than Benjamin H. Hill. Indeed, the present generation cannot realize how dark those days were—a country beleaguered by land and sea, ports blockaded along an entire coast line of thousands of miles, invaders incomparably superior in the number of soldiers and the resources of war, medicines for the first time in the history of civilization made contraband of war, the customs of barbarism revived in the stronger power's refusal to exchange prisoners of war, enemies from without like the sands of the seashore, secret foes within slipping about like gruesome shadows and stabbing the administration in the back.

Through the darkness of that awful night the courage and constancy of Benjamin H. Hill shone like the steady flame that blazes from the lighthouse when storms break on the sea and waves beat on the rocks and clouds hide the stars and ships are riding the breakers in darkness.

In this day of fading sectionalism one can hardly realize the situation in 1876, when Hill arose in the House of Representatives and delivered his famous amnesty speech. It was a great day in the national Congress. On the advice of Northern Democrats who feared that replies though truthful might injure the party in the North Southern Representatives had without reply listened ever since the war to false charges against the Southern people. Facts had been distorted, truth outraged, and history falsified. The choicest of these slanders was the charge of inhumanity and needless cruelty of the Southern people toward Northern prisoners during the war. So often had the charges been made and so often unanswered that they were beginning to pass to posterity as history. A bill providing for amnesty to all who participated in the late war on the Southern side had been introduced. An amendment was offered excepting therefrom the name of Jefferson Davis. A debate had sprung up. Garfield had spoken bitterly. The brilliant Blaine had delivered an address noted for its misstatements of fact, its adroit aggregations of half truths, and its biting invective. It stirred the heart of the mighty Hill to sit mutely by and hear these charges. It specially grieved him to hear Jefferson Davis traduced, abused, and maligned while he sat silent at Beauvoir, helpless as the waves that broke on its beach. He remembered Davis's suffering in behalf of his people. He remembered how the alleged sins of the South had all been visited upon him. He remembered how, denied bail (the right of the meanest felon), he lay in the dungeon two years, weak, sick, emaciated, his delicate limbs chained with iron fetters that clanked on the stone floor as he walked (though he had been guilty of no crime except to lead a brave people in a hopeless war for constitutional rights), in a position which he never sought and which he reluctantly assumed.

Remembering all these things, Mr. Hill spurned the advice of the timid and politic. He replied. With the logic of facts and figures he demolished the charges of cruelty to Northern prisoners. He showed the death rate of Southern soldiers in Northern prisons to be higher than that of Northern soldiers in Southern prisons; the ability of the North to take care of the Southern prisoners, to feed them, to clothe them, and give them medicines and supplies; the inability of the Southern people to do this for the Northern prisoners; but how out of their very poverty the Confederate government gave to these Northern prisoners the same rations, the same attention, and the same medicine awarded to Confederate soldiers who guarded them. He showed Mr. Davis's absolute innocence of the charges against him, and pointed out that his traducers brought no evidence to prove their charges. He read extracts from Southern newspapers during the war hostile to Mr. Davis on account of his kindness to Northern prisoners. He showed the anxiety of the Confederate government to make an exchange of the prisoners and the refusal of the Federal government to consent to this exchange. He demonstrated how they violated the usages of civilized warfare in thus refusing an exchange, and how at last they even refused to take back Northern prisoners without exchange or to send supplies to feed them.

Since that time even our enemies have begun to hear the truth, and history is beginning to be just to President Davis and his people. Not a few causes contribute to this, but Mr. Hill's speech was the beginning of the turning of the tide. Mr. Hill was a great man, but this was his greatest achievement. Hereby is his name linked forever with that of Jefferson Davis; and this one glorious and imperishable oration, worth a place alongside the oration of Demosthenes on the Crown and Cicero's philippics against Catiline, shall forever endear his name and fame to all in whose veins flows the royal blood of the Confederate soldier.

How I wish I had seen Jefferson Davis in those epic days when the burden of liberty's battle hung heavy on his hands! How these eyes would have delighted to look upon his strong but graceful and splendid figure and to have seen his firm but elastic step and to have beheld the blazing of his eyes as he looked upon the enemies of his people and to have heard the bugle call of his noble voice as he rallied the troubled hearts of his countrymen!

It was my privilege, however, to see him once. This was when he visited Atlanta to see unveiled the marble effigy in which the love of his people had blazoned forth Ben Hill's noble face and form. Mr. Davis's travel from Beauvoir to Atlanta was one continued ovation of loving hearts. The London Times, well called the Thunderer, had a long editorial at the time, describing and commenting on this journey as the triumphal tour of an uncrowned king.

When Cæsar came home from his victorious wars, four successive triumphs were declared him by the Senate of Rome. The splendor of the Eternal City thronged her marble streets to do honor to him who had planted the Roman eagles upon the shores of Gaul and Britain. The King of the Belgians, princes from Britain, the Lords of Spain and Gaul, hostages from the Germans and the Helvetians, prisoners of royal blood, marched captive before the mighty Cæsar and his invincible Tenth Legion, while the walls of Rome trembled under the tumultuous acclaim of applauding thousands. This was the triumph of the victor.

When Jefferson Davis came to Atlanta, no civic crown or laurel wreath adorned his brow, no victorious army attended his footsteps, no captive warriors marched before him. Old men were there by the thousands from the mountains and the plains, from Tennessee and Virginia and Alabama and Mississippi and South Carolina and Georgia; one-armed, hobbling on crutches on the stone pavements, in age and pain, suffering from the wounds received two decades before in the bloodiest and fiercest and the noblest fight ever made by mortal man for freedom. The streets of Atlanta could not ring with the shouts of welcome as did the walls of Rome. For in Rome, when they saw the illustrious Cæsar upon his golden chariot all resplendent in the robes of victory, men laughed and were happy. In Atlanta when they saw the gray and feeble chieftain, old and poor, whom they had followed into the thick darkness of defeat, men cried and were broken-hearted. From the housetops of Rome men shouted, women smiled, and little children clapped their hands as the conquering Cæsar rode from the Tiber to the marble capitol. Along the streets and sidewalks of Atlanta hobbled the veterans of the Confederate army and thronged the carriage in which rode their defeated king and kissed its very wheels; while little children threw flowers before his horses' feet, and women who had suffered and toiled through four long years of war and given their best-beloved to a soldier's death bowed their heads and wept. This was the triumph of the victim.

Well did the Thunderer declare this to be the triumphal tour of an uncrowned king. He is our king, and will ever be. He led our fathers to battle, and was for all the rest of his life a vicarious sacrifice upon the altar of hate. Like Washington, he obeyed the call of his countrymen to lead a battle for the dearest rights of men. Unlike Washington, the fortunes of war made him victim instead of victor; and, unlike Washington, adversity and suffering and poverty were his. But by this token he is dearer to us than if our armies had won the field at Gettysburg and planted the stars and bars on the granite hills of New England. Therefore is he our king. Therefore does he reign within our hearts. Therefore will we teach our children and our children's children to the last generation to hold in everlasting honor and reverence his name and fame.

This triumphal tour was unparalleled in the history of the world, but this uncrowned king was destined to have another triumphal tour without precedent in the annals of men. You will remember when he passed over to the majority and joined the throng of disembodied spirits among whom Lee and Jackson had moved for many years before. You will remember how his body was temporarily interred in New Orleans and how reverently eager were the cities of the South to become the final repository of his ashes. After a while it was settled, in accordance with the eternal proprieties, that within the walls of Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, should finally rest his sacred dust. You will remember his funeral train and its journey through the South, leaving in the rear Montgomery and Columbus and Atlanta and Charleston and these other cities. You will remember how the entire South stood uncovered during that journey, the like of which the children of men have never seen before. You will remember the arrival of the funeral train in Richmond and the final interment in the beautiful Hollywood of the dust of this uncrowned king. * * *

No court had he like monarchs of old, no throne of gold, no crown of diadems, no scepter in his hand, yet his courtiers stepped lightly and each tiptoed while the king slept. And the king left the city of his coronation and passed through the fairest portions of his domain. And all along the journey the soldiers of the king were sleeping where they had slept for thirty years, and every here and there the royal train passed some monument, some shaft or marble which had been built to make the people remember these old soldiers of the king. He left the cities of his empire in his rear—the city of the spindles in whose name is honored another born long ago who found a continent, and the city by the sea beleaguered for so many years, but never hauling down her flag, and the busy, bustling city which rose out of its own ashes after so many soldiers of the king had wet them with their blood.

And so the royal train rolled into that city which in the king's time was the city of cities, the fair city, the city of beauty and bravery, the city around whose walls thundered the cannon for four long years, the city where the king had held his court and issued his orders for battle, the city where the king's counselors sat with closed doors when clouds and darkness were upon the kingdom.

That day the king had no enemies. Some there were who maltreated the king and abused him and wounded him sore in heart and mind before he went to sleep, and few there were who sorely used the king even after he had gone to sleep. But on this day when the king went back to the city of cities no man spake ill of him or abused his subjects for their homage.

And the king went out to Hollywood to rest. He went in state. The spirits of those who slept gathered about him. The commander in chief of the king's armies was there, he who led the king's troops until they were starved into surrender, and who after the king's war was ended lived a few years in all the sweet and quiet dignity of a gentleman, and then lay down himself to sleep. And another of the king's soldiers came, he who was this commander's strong right arm, on whom he leaned, the very paladin of battle, who when sick and wounded sore passed over the river that he might rest under the shade of the trees.

And many others of the king's soldiers were there who came without epaulets or shoulder straps or stars—the common privates who had marched with the king's army until they fell by the way and whose very names had long since been forgotten. They were all there—this spirit host—and saw the king lie down to sleep for the last time.

And the king's last proclamation went through the land, and this is how it read: "To the brave and beautiful in heart and life, to all who loved their country and their country's God, know ye that we whose scepter is invisible and whose empire is a kingdom of hearts do command and enjoin upon all faithful subjects that they revere the glories of the past and keep forever green the memories of those who aided us in council or on field and preserve in perpetual memorial the traditions of our reign. And inasmuch as the women of our realm were our truest and noblest subjects, we specially command that to them, the mothers, wives, and daughters, be committed the perpetuation of these glories and traditions, so that the same be handed down from sire to son, from mother to daughter, until the rivers run backward and the waves of the sea engulf the hills."

FROM ONE OF GEN. R. E. LEE'S SCOUTS.

BY REV. H. H. STURGIS, SANFORD, FLA.

Attention, comrades! I wish to spin a few yarns with you through the VETERAN. Who was I? Only a high private of Company G, 44th Alabama Infantry, Law's Brigade, Hood's Division, Longstreet's Corps, Lee's Army. What kind of a yarn do you want? "Something about Mars Bob," did you say? Well, here goes.

I will give an illustration of General Lee's courtesy to his soldiers. That is a little out of the ordinary, you say. Not a bit of it. While Lee was the greatest general of America, he was also a Christian and a gentleman. While he and Grant were playing the game from the Wilderness to Richmond, a few days after the battle of Spottsylvania, there was a cloud of dust east of the Matapony River which attracted General Lee's attention, and he signaled to General Fields, who commanded Hood's Brigade: "Send scouts to the front and ascertain the cause of that dust." Law's Brigade was on the extreme right of the army, and my captain, W. P. Becker, was acting adjutant of the brigade. I was sent with a comrade across the river under a milldam with instructions to ascertain if it was a movement of the whole army or a ruse to deceive us. After crossing the river, we waded down the bank in sight of the enemy's scouts, some quarter of a mile, till we came to a ford and path which led toward the public road. This we followed for nearly a mile, till in sight of Grant's flanking army. By crawling along on the ground we at last got in full sight of the moving army and heard them saying: "On to Richmond, boys; we will be there in three days."

We returned and reported to General Fields a movement of the whole army. The message was sent to General Lee, who replied: "Thanks to the scouts. Move the whole army." What a critical position Lee was in! His army was in the breastworks, and could not expose his position if it was a ruse. If it was a flank movement, he must meet it. Everything was ready and he was waiting with intense anxiety for our report, and yet he must first thank the scouts who had only performed their duty. I saw him under many circumstances, and there was the same calm heroism of a great general; but I believe he showed his heart in its true light when he said: "Thanks to the scouts."

When Lee first went into Maryland, I was taken with pneumonia after crossing the Potomac (we belonged to the rear guard to pick up the stragglers, and we were kept busy till near night around Leesburg). The army went on and left me with a fever and pneumonia. I found shelter in a barn till captured by the cavalry under General (then Colonel Farnsworth, of Pennsylvania. I was so weak I could scarcely move, and every few minutes had a spell of coughing with profuse hemorrhage from my lungs. In this condition I was forced to go by my inhuman captors. I dragged myself along till I got to the road near where the Baltimore and Washington Turnpikes unite, near Frederick City. Colonel Farnsworth was passing at the head of his command, and, seeing my condition, gave my captors severe abuse, threatening to chop them over the head for taking a prisoner in my condition. He was in command of a cavalry brigade which made a gallant dash upon our artillery on the right at Gettysburg, but was forced to retreat. While passing back through our skirmish line, his horse was shot by a lieutenant in the 44th. The horse fell on General Farnsworth's leg, and the lieutenant ordered him to surrender; but instead of doing so, he shot himself through the temple. The lieutenant got his commission out of his pocket.

I would like to hear from any of the old 44th Alabama.

SOUTH CAROLINA VETERANS.

Chester, S. C., had a great Confederate day on October 16, 1907. The Reporter gave a glowing account of the event. Col. J. W. Reed was master of ceremonies. Addresses of welcome were cordial and gracious. Miss Grace Lumpkin, of Columbia, responded to the address of welcome. She was proud of the fact that she is a Southern soldier's daughter and she very gladly joined in the welcome that was being extended to the South's old champions. She eulogized the Southern cause and paid a beautiful tribute to the Southern banner. Despite the efforts of foes to malign and defame and forget, the record of the Southern soldier will live on and on. Miss Lumpkin's response was in beautiful language, and was well delivered, showing that she is by no means lacking in the oratorical gifts for which her sister, Elizabeth Lumpkin Glenn, is delightfully remembered.

Gov. M. F. Ansel, the chief speaker of the occasion, spoke feelingly of the pleasure it gave him to join in exercises eulogistic to the old soldiers. He paid a beautiful tribute to the women of that period, who underwent all of the sufferings and dangers incident to the times of 1861-65. These noble women deserve an equal place with the men.

At the conclusion of Governor Ansel's speech the convention was opened for business. Colonel Reed introduced the subject of a soldiers' home in the State, and it was ordered that the chairman appoint a committee of three to memorialize the Legislature on the subject.

Next came the dinner, a delicious repast. The veterans and citizens generally had enough and much to spare.

At the evening session Rev. C. E. McDonald opened the exercises with prayer. Col. W. W. Lumpkin, the only speaker of the evening, after some humor at the expense of himself, recounted the hardships of the Confederate soldier. He told of how these heroes suffered from cold and hunger, but how they bore their sufferings without a murmur. Colonel Lumpkin interspersed among his more serious remarks a delightful flavoring of anecdotes and personal recollections. His tribute to woman was eloquent.

The exercises were closed with "Dixie" and the Rebel yell.

A reception at the palatial home of Col. and Mrs. J. W. Reed in honor of Gov. and Mrs. M. F. Ansel, Col. W. W. Lumpkin, and Miss Lumpkin was one of the most pleasant features of the day.

TYPICAL ADDRESS OF A CONFEDERATE CAPTAIN.

Address delivered by Judge John H. Martin, of Hawkinsville, Ga., who was captain of Company D, 17th Regiment of Georgia Volunteers, at the close of the Confederate war, to the veterans at Hawkinsville, Ga., September 5, 1907, published by special request of the veterans:

"Comrades: Forty-two years ago there closed a war which for deeds of noble daring by the armies on both sides stands without a parallel or even a rival in all the annals of history and the thrilling traditions of warfare. I use the words 'by the armies on both sides' advisedly and deliberately, for those of us who wore the gray and met those who wore the blue in the conflict of battle, amidst the ponderous roar of cannon, the screaming of bursting shells, the whistling of grapeshot and canister, the deafening rattle of musketry, the deadly rain of leaden bullets, the agonizing and heart-rending shrieks and groans of the wounded and the dying, realized that we had met foemen worthy of our steel.

"He who would deny courage to the Federal soldiers and belittle their valor disparages the prowess and the most brilliant achievements of our Confederate soldiers and detracts from their courage and their valor, and at the same time furnishes unmistakable evidence that he was not with those of us who tested the mettle of which they were made.

"The arbitrament of arms, to which we appealed our cause, was decided against us; and as true and honorable people, we of the South have in good faith abided the result, have loyally supported the Federal Constitution, and have always stood ready and willing to do our full part in maintaining and defending the dignity, the honor, and the integrity of the government of these United States. This was most forcibly illustrated in the prompt response made by the South to the call for soldiers to rally around the stars and stripes for duty in Cuba and the Philippine Islands, and it was the soldiers from the South whose conspicuous gallantry and noble daring contributed most in carrying that flag to victory; while among the leaders, none displayed more consummate skill, chivalric dash and intrepidity, and covered themselves with such glory as grand, superb 'Fighting Joe Wheeler,' of Confederate fame.

"If, however, loyalty to the United States government means or demands that we of the South are by our thoughts, words, acts, or deeds to consider and brand the glorious men who constituted the peerless armies of the Southern Confederacy as cutthroats, outlaws, traitors, or felons deserving to be swung from the gallows or incarcerated in dungeons, then I voice the sentiment of our beautiful and loved Southland when I declare with all the emphasis of my nature that we never have and, God sustaining us, we never will subscribe to such loyalty as that; for sooner would the bright stars be swept from the blue dome of heaven than the revered recollections of the heroic achievements of our intrepid Confederate soldiers be obliterated from our minds and our hearts or the principles hallowed with their blood be renounced by us. While hills and vales exist, while mountains and valleys survive, until the rivers, seas, gulfs, and oceans go dry, and time ceases, so long will the principles for which the South fought be by us of the South maintained as right and the sweet remembrances and tender associations that cluster around that cause survive and be by us cherished as a priceless heritage and our dearest and most valued treasures.

'Still o'er those scenes my memory wakes
And fondly broods with miser care;

Time but the impression stronger makes
As streams their channels deeper wear.'

"The men who faced us on the field of red ruin when carnage ran riot, and who, like us, were battling for the right as they saw it, cordially extend to us the approbation that devotion to principle and valor always evokes from the truly brave. They cheerfully accord to us sincerity and purity of motive and the right to honor and perpetuate the memory of our heroic dead and their matchless deeds in as full and unlimited a manner as they commemorate the heroes who fell on their side.

"We have no regrets to express except that we did not succeed. We have no pardons to ask or beg and no apologies to make for having struggled and battled to establish the Southern Confederacy. We knew we were right then, and we know it now, and feel a contempt for the craven-hearted who are so lost to shame and honor as to feel called upon to render excuses for the Confederate war and who characterize our efforts as a criminal blunder.

"We are no cringing sycophants, no hypocritical penitents hovering around the altar of a mock and sham patriotism who

'Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning;'

but,

'Unawed by power and unbribed by gain,'

we always have and ever will proclaim our undying devotion and unwavering fealty to the principles for which we fought for four long and bloody years.

"In the brilliant period beginning in the year 1861 and ending in 1865 the South gave to the world new examples of patriotism, to the orator new topics of eloquence, to the statesman new subjects of thought, to the poet new themes of song, to the soldier new models for imitation, to her sons and her daughters a matchless and imperishable roll of heroes and heroines, and to her soil the blood of the very flower of her chivalry that consecrated it and forever rendered it sacred.

'O! if there be on this earthly sphere
A boon, an offering Heaven holds dear,
'Tis the last libation Liberty draws
From the heart that bleeds and breaks in her cause.'

"There is no duty more binding on a people than that of preserving and cherishing the memory of their patriotic dead. There is no trust more sacred than that of guarding and keeping pure and unsullied the fame and the honor of those who fell in the defense of their country. The country that is indifferent to the fame and honor of its heroic dead forfeits all claim to the devotion and loyalty of its living sons. The people who disregard and forget their patriotic martyrs will soon fail to have heroes to honor and remember.

"No country ever had truer sons, no cause nobler champions, no people braver defenders, no age more valiant knights, no principle purer victims' than our immortal Confederate dead, whose lifeblood crimsoned the trenches around Petersburg and Vicksburg, the hills and valleys around Richmond and Franklin, the plains of Manassas, the wooded knobs and dells around Atlanta, the shadowy forests of Chickamauga and Chancellorsville, the dark ravines of Shiloh and the Wilderness, and the rock-ribbed heights of Sharpsburg and Gettysburg.

"Ah! it is indeed sad to realize that the muffled drum has beat their last tattoo and that we shall never again meet them on life's parade.

'On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.'

'How sleep the brave who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blessed!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mold,
She then shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung;
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair,
To dwell a weeping hermit there.'

"The cause for which they fought and fell failed. The hopes they so dearly cherished were crushed. The Confederate battle flag which they loved so well was furled with no stain or soil of dishonor thereon, but around it was wreathed the glory of hundreds of victorious battlefields, while its shell- and shot-torn rents and remnants were undying emblems of the heroic deeds of the brave men who fought beneath its folds and whose achievements

'Shall deathless be Upon the scroll of history
And on the lips of poesy.'

"I have briefly alluded to the men of the South and the part played by them in war's bloody tragedy; but what shall I say of the rôle enacted by the noble, Christian, godlike women of the South amidst the perils and dangers which confronted and environed them during that war?

"Words fail me; for as the full-orbed light of the meridian sun exceeds in splendor and brilliancy the mellow, silvery beams of the midnight moon, so did the part performed by our Southern women during the Confederate war surpass in self-sacrificing glory that of the men. From the moment the tocsin of war sounded the appeal to arms and the sunlight of Confederate victory burst forth and streamed over the plains of Manassas and continued through alternate epochs of cloud and sunshine to the gloomy night which settled over fated Appomattox, the women of the South, with a devotion, a heroism, and a patriotism unexampled and unparalleled in sublimity, stood by the altars of the Confederate States and kept the fires of patriotism aglow in the hearts of the men of the South. Indeed, 'poetry would exhaust its inspiration and philosophy its eloquence' in futile efforts to wreath adequate garlands of praise around their fair brows, for in all that is good, true, pure, noble, grand, magnificent, and sublime they stand unapproached and unapproachable.

"Comrades, our ranks are being rapidly thinned by the grim reaper Death! We are all going down the western or sunset decline of life. Some have passed and the others are approaching man's allotted time of life, three score and ten years. It is highly improbable that all of us who are assembled here to-day will ever meet again, with ranks unbroken. There will doubtless be some missing faces, some vacant seats. Let us strengthen the ties which unite us a band of brothers, pledge anew our love and friendship for each other, and ever walk uprightly before man and before God. Let us keep fresh and green, nurtured with love and affection, the dear memories of our loved comrades who have crossed over the river of life and now repose in the life immortal. May your joys be many, and may no sorrows disturb your days nor griefs distract your nights! May the gates of plenty, peace, honor, and happiness be ever open to you and yours! It is my heartfelt prayer to our merciful Heavenly Father that when life's battle is ended each one of you may be borne in the arms of heaven's angels to paradise. I sincerely desire that when your epitaph is engraved upon the marble slab that will mark your last earthly resting place there shall be inscribed thereon the grandly suggestive and impressive words, than which none import more exalted honor:

'He was a Confederate soldier.'

ESCORT TO PRESIDENT DAVIS.

BY MILFORD OVERLY (LIEUT. 9TH KY. CAVALRY), LEXINGTON, KY.

My attention has been called to an article in the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle of November 18, 1906, which purports to have appeared in the Savannah Herald and the Macon Telegraph in May, 1865, relating to the capture of President Davis, and the Chronicle, in prefacing the copied article, says: "The details must be true." The article in question, if printed in May, 1865, was evidently written very soon after the capture of Mr. Davis, which occurred May 9, when General Wilson's Yankee cavalymen were overrunning Georgia and lawless men were plundering and robbing citizens, when order was suspended and confusion reigned, when all kinds of wild, unreasonable stories were in circulation, and the writer of the article was unable to separate truth from falsehood; and this is, I think, the most charitable construction that can be given it. But what of the editor who, after more than forty years, reprints the article and with his indorsement starts it on its second round? Certainly here is another call for charity.

These men will find that they have stirred up a great big hornet's nest, for the surviving members of Mr. Davis's escort are proud of their faithful service during the last days of the Confederacy, and they will not quietly submit to the smirching of the record thus won.

These men were as brave and loyal as any that followed the Southern flag. They were with the Confederacy and true to her in her dying hour. They faithfully guarded their chief till their services were no longer required, and theirs was the very last organized body of Confederates to lay down their arms and give up the fight east of the Mississippi River—to them a proud satisfaction. President Davis's escort, as selected by Gen. John C. Breckinridge, then Secretary of War, consisted of Gen. George G. Dibrell's Brigade of Tennesseans and Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge's Brigade of Kentuckians, the whole commanded by General Dibrell. These were with Gen. J. E. Johnston's army, then (April, 1865) camped near Greensboro, N. C. To this place Mr. Davis had come after the surrender of Lee's army, accompanied by a number of government officials. After a few days, he went to Charlotte, taking the escort with him. There he met Gen. Basil W. Duke, with his brigade of Kentuckians, who had arrived the preceding day from Southwestern Virginia; also General Ferguson's Brigade of Mississippians and General Vaughn's Tennesseans. These three brigades were added to the escort, making in all a force of about two thousand mounted infantry—known as "President Davis's escort."

Mr. Davis remained at Charlotte several days, awaiting the result of the Johnston-Sherman peace negotiations. The United States refusing to ratify the terms agreed upon by the opposing commanders, the truce ended, and General Johnston at once decided to accept the terms proposed by General Grant, who was then at Raleigh.

Without further delay the Confederate President, accompanied by his escort, started southward. With him were all of his Cabinet officers, excepting the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Benjamin discharged the duties of the former, and Mr. Reagan took upon himself those of the latter. He was accompanied also by his personal staff, General Bragg, and others.

The cavalcade moved leisurely, quietly, and without hindrances of any kind through South Carolina, arriving at Abbeville, near the Georgia border, about the second or third day of May. Here was held the last council of war, composed of President Davis and the five brigade commanders, only one of whom (General Duke) is now living to tell what was said and done in that meeting.

On the following morning, accompanied by a guard of twenty men commanded by Capt. Given Campbell, Mr. Davis crossed the Savannah River and proceeded to Washington, Ga., where he expected to join his family; but they had gone farther southward. Directing Captain Campbell to leave behind all but ten men, he with these followed on. Detachments from Wilson's Cavalry were scouring the country in all directions, hoping to find Mr. Davis, for whose arrest the Federal authorities had offered $100,000. With his small escort he could move with greater celerity, and would be more likely to escape the notice of his enemies; while the large escort left behind would very naturally attract their attention, and thus aid in his escape. This is the reason why "but little or no effort was made to induce them to follow the fortunes of their leader," as stated in the article copied by the Chronicle. The men of the escort followed till halted by the Secretary of War, who was their chief commander, and who was doing all in his power to insure the safety of Mr. Davis. They would have followed their leader to Texas had such a proceeding been necessary to save him from his enemies or had it afforded an opportunity of continuing the war with reasonable hope of success.

The writer of the article says further: "When Mr. Davis arrived at Abbeville, he discovered that there was universal disaffection among his escort, and that they were determined to make no resistance in the event they were attacked, no matter how small or how great the attacking force might be."

This paragraph contains two unadulterated falsehoods which, because of their pernicious character, deserve special notice—falsehoods that can and must be refuted by surviving members of the escort.

More than one-half the men composing the escort were included in the surrender of Johnston's army; the remainder may have been included in Lee's surrender. All were veterans, tried and true, familiar with the rules of warfare, and they fully realized the fact that if taken after refusing to submit they could not reasonably hope for liberal terms. With this knowledge and without compulsion of any kind, these men chose to follow the fortunes of the Confederacy while it existed and they lived. But in less than one week, according to the Chronicle's article, there was "universal disaffection among the escort," and "they were determined to make no resistance in the event they were attacked, no matter how small or how great the attacking force might be." This absurd story will receive the condemnation of all intelligent, fair-minded people who desire a true history of the great Civil War.

The writer of this paper was a member of Breckinridge's

Brigade, and he was with the escort every day of its existence; he knew the Kentuckians and Dibrell's Tennesseans well, having marched and fought with them in half a dozen States, and he knows that the Tennesseans and Mississippians of the other brigades were faithful to the obligations they took upon themselves after the surrender of Lee and Johnston; and he knows that at any time while President Davis was with them they would have fought a force of the enemy much greater than their own just as cheerfully as ever they fought equal numbers.

The mendacious reports in circulation concerning President Davis's escort are refuted by the President himself, and who is better authority than he? In his "Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," second volume, page 690, Mr. Davis, writing of his escort, says: "To the troops of this command, whose gallantry had been displayed on many fields, there is due from me a special acknowledgment for the kind consideration shown to me on the march from Charlotte, when the dark shadows which gathered round us foretold the coming night."

After Mr. Davis left the escort, the brigades of Breckinridge, Dibrell, and Vaughn crossed the Savannah River on a pontoon bridge that had escaped the enemy's notice, moved a short distance in the direction of Washington, Ga., and halted. Here, by order of the Secretary of War, General Breckinridge, who was personally in command of the escort, each member of the escort was paid $25 in specie. The brigade commanders were then advised by the Secretary either to disband their men or surrender and let them be paroled, as they could proceed no farther as an organized body, being then between twelve thousand Yankees in their front and eight thousand in their rear.

Acting on this suggestion, General Ferguson's men were paroled at Augusta, General Duke's at Woodstock, and Dibrell's, Breckinridge's, and Vaughn's at Washington.

While Breckinridge's Kentuckians were waiting to be paroled a party of them went up to Washington and opened fire on the Yankee provost guard stationed there, driving them to cover. The affair being reported to General Upton at Augusta, that officer promptly dispatched back that if the Kentuckians were not satisfied with what they had received he would send a division of bluecoats to entertain them. Nothing in this indicates that all the spirit of resistance had been whipped out of the escort. Some years ago, in writing of the surrender of the escort, I said of Colonel Breckinridge's Brigade: "That was a sad day for the Kentuckians. Men who had faced death in half a hundred battles wept like children; indeed, there was scarcely a dry eye in that little brigade. These men had seen their comrades fall in battle in more than half a dozen States, and they buried them out of sight far from home and those who loved them, and there was sorrow in their hearts; but the saddest death of all was that of the Southern Confederacy. They did not know that they would be permitted to return to Kentucky, for they were outlawed; but let them go where they might, they would carry with them the consciousness of duty well done."

Comrade Overly sends a letter with the foregoing letter from John A. Lewis, adjutant of the 9th Kentucky Regiment.

"GEORGETOWN, KY., Dec. 22, 1907.

"My Dear Comrade: I have received your communication in reply to an article published in the Augusta Chronicle of November 18, 1906, that had appeared in Savannah and Macon papers in May, 1865, which reflects severely and unjustly on the loyalty and soldierly conduct of the men composing the five brigades of cavalry, commanded by Generals Dibrell, Duke, Breckinridge, Vaughn, and Ferguson, which escorted President Jefferson Davis from Greensboro, N. C., to Abbeville, S. C., and were surrendered on May 10, 1865, at Washington, Ga.

"Like yourself, I was a member of the 9th Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, and was with the troops every day on their march from Greensboro to Washington, Ga., where we surrendered; and I am personally cognizant of the events which occurred at that time and with the circumstances connected with the surrender.

"I have read your communication very carefully and with great interest, and can truthfully say that 'you have told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth' in regard to the matter under discussion.

"I indorse and concur with you fully in all you have written in defense of these gallant soldiers, who by the fortunes of war were the last to surrender east of the Mississippi River.

"Really it would seem unnecessary to say anything more than has already been said by you, yet I am prompted to add that it was my fortune, good or bad, to be with these troops from Greensboro, N. C., to Washington, Ga. I commingled with the men of my regiment and brigade every day in the camp and on the march, I was familiar with their spirit and temper and courage, and I can conscientiously say that I know that they would have cheerfully and courageously followed our honored and beloved chieftain, President Jefferson Davis, to the ends of the earth had he intimated that such was his desire; and what I say of my own brigade I know to be true of all the others.

"But when it was made known to them through Gen. John C. Breckinridge, then Secretary of War and commander of all the troops, and their own brigade commanders that, after a final council of war held at Abbeville, S. C., their services as an escort were no longer needed or desired, and it was further stated that their presence would rather embarrass than further the purposes of President Davis, and that they advised and desired that these troops proceed no farther, but halt at Washington, Ga., and there be surrendered and paroled or disbanded, what further was left for them to do?

"Surely if blame is to be attached to any one for not attempting to continue the war with these five brigades of Confederate cavalry, numbering about two thousand men all told, against the combined armies of Generals Grant and Sherman, numbering two hundred and fifty thousand men, then let the blame rest where it belongs—on their superiors, those in authority—and not on the men whose sole duty was to obey.

'Theirs not to make reply!
Theirs not to reason why!
Theirs but to do and die!'

"Surely it seems hard, indeed, that these soldiers, after having followed the fortunes of the 'lost cause' through four years of danger and privation, attesting their loyalty and their valor upon many battlefields, forty years after they had laid down their arms and after nearly all of those who were the chief actors in the scenes had passed over the river to rest under the shade with their honored chieftain should have brought against them a charge which, if established, fixes upon all connected with those events, whether living or dead, an everlasting stigma of disgrace.

"If after reading your statement of the facts in defense of these gallant soldiers, who surrendered on the 10th of May, 1865, at Washington, Ga., any fair-minded person shall still give credence to the groundless charges published forty years ago, in all probability written by some 'newspaper reporter' from mere hearsay, then such a one 'would not be convinced, though one arose from the dead.'"

THE SOUTHERN CROSS AT ARLINGTON.

BY T. C. HARBAUGH.

(Written upon its unveiling at Arlington, 1907.)

The skies of June were soft and fair
Where proud Potomac seeks the sea,
And balmy was the scented air
About the stately home of Lee;
Calm was the holy Sabbath day,
For silent was the battle gun
When came the wearers of the Gray
To set their Cross at Arlington.

I walked the hero graves between
And mused among the gallant dead,
Whose sleep is dreamless and serene
Where silently their tents are spread;
And Beauty came with wealth of flow'rs,
Their colors matchless in the sun,
And spread them through the summer hours
Around the Cross at Arlington.

I looked adown the aisles of pine
Whose shadows fell across the brave
Who held the Southern battle line
And fought their cherished cause to save;
I heard the bugler sound his call
O'er those whose duty brave was done,
And blessed the hands which one and all
Set up the Cross at Arlington.

No longer they who there repose,
Robed in their moldering suits of gray,
Need fear the onsets of their foes
As in the memorable day
When Mars strode maddened down the lines
'Mid flash of sword and roar of gun,
For peace came from the somber pines
To bless the Cross at Arlington.

It was in love that Cross was set,
Love for the brave who round it sleep,
For there are hearts that can't forget
And there are eyes that e'er will weep;
I know that from the skies of blue,
When we life's feeble race have run,
Will fall the heaven-cherished dew
Upon the Gray at Arlington.

How sweet it was that holy day
To stand amid that silent camp
And know that to the dead in gray
Will come no more the weary tramp!
Within the boundary of that wall,
O'erhead the bright and beaming sun,
A benediction seemed to fall
Upon the Cross at Arlington.

ANDERSONVILLE PRISONERS AND EXCHANGE.

James Calloway through the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph seeks information concerning the delegation of Federal prisoners who went to Washington on parole in behalf of an exchange of prisoners. He writes:

"It has been the understanding that this delegation returned and reported absolute failure. Mr. Ira E. Forbes, of Hartford, Conn., who was a prisoner at Andersonville and who is writing a history of the prison, in a letter to me says the delegation never returned. He writes: 'The information which you want about the delegation that was sent to Washington from Andersonville prison, together with a full report of the meeting of sergeants inside the stockade, will be found in the government reports of Civil War operations in Series I., Vol. VII., "Prisoners of War," page 615 et al, serial number 120. The officers signing the document in Charleston prison intended for the President were Gen. George Stoneman, Col. T. J. Harrison, 8th Indiana Cavalry, and Col. J. B. Dorr, 8th Iowa Cavalry. This document was received at Hilton Head, S. C., August 17, 1864, from the hands of Private Tracey, 82d New York. The names of the four delegates who made their way to Washington are Edward Bates, Company K, 42d New York, Chairman; H. C. Higginson, Company K, 19th Illinois; Prescott Tracey, Company G, 82d New York; and Sylvester Noirot, Company B, 5th New Jersey Infantry. There were two other men, William N. Johnson and F. Garland, who must have dropped out on the way. The four men who went to Washington did not return to Andersonville, but were declared exchanged September 22, 1864. They made use of their opportunities to misrepresent and malign the Confederate officers at Andersonville. I was a prisoner in the stockade from May 3, 1864, until the middle of September, when I was sent to Florence, S. C. My regiment was the 16th Connecticut, which was captured at Plymouth, N. C., April 20, 1864. A monument of more than common interest will be erected in the national cemetery at Andersonville by the State of Connecticut very soon in memory of the men from this State who died in the prison. The number who died from Connecticut regiments is three hundred and thirteen. Of that number, ninety-three were from my regiment, the 16th Connecticut. My history will be an impassioned study of the life at Andersonville at a distance of forty-three years. I am anxious to secure all the facts I can, especially in regard to the experiences of Confederates outside of the prison.'

"Mr. Forbes is anxious to get the dates of the marching of the different batches of prisoners from Andersonville to Jacksonville. They were moved at different times—perhaps February, March, and the last in April, 1865."

Mr. Calloway inquires: "Were there two delegations? Did not one return and report their failure before the Lincoln Cabinet? Who remembers about the different removals of prisoners—i. e., marches from Andersonville to Jacksonville in 1865?"

REMARKABLE SLAVE HISTORY IN TENNESSEE.

BY HON. C. W. HEISKELL, MEMPHIS, TENN.

The old-time Presbyterian mother was a great Bible student. She was a Bible oracle. These mothers in Israel exerted great influence not only in their own families but in the community. Almost without exception they detested slavery, and to them, perhaps more than to any other cause, is to be attributed the advanced position of Tennessee in early days on emancipation. Under the Constitution of 1796 free negroes voted. In 1801 Tennessee enacted a law favoring voluntary emancipation. In 1824 there was formed at Columbia "The Moral and Religious Manumission Society of West Tennessee;" and in 1827, of the one hundred and thirty-five antislavery societies in America, one hundred and six were in the South and twenty-five of these were in Tennessee. Three-fifths of her people were in favor of slave emancipation before it was thought of in Boston.

Shortly after the Tennessee Manumission Society memorialized Congress to prohibit internal slave trade the citizens of Ohio, after selling land to three hundred negroes, freed by the will of John Randolph, of Roanoke, raised an armed force and refused to let them take possession.

When the liberty-loving Tennesseans were striving for the freeing of Southern slaves, Illinois was passing her law fining any free negro fifty dollars who stayed in that State ten days with the intention of remaining; and if the fine and costs were not paid immediately, the negro was to be sold to any one who would pay them. And Philadelphians were burning African churches, and in New York negroes were terrorized and slain by the vengeful mob. But for all this, when Tennessee saw the Constitution of our fathers denounced as a "league with hell and a covenant with death," and she to be dragged into unconstitutional views of the government they had established, 115,000 of her sons leaped to arms. But that conflict is ended; and now, turning our backs upon the past, save its imperishable glories, fully realizing that old things have passed away, save the memory of knightly deeds and deathless fame, renewing loyal allegiance to the flag of the indissoluble Union of indestructible States, we earnestly address ourselves to the new conditions that confront us all and the new problems that press for solution; yet we must be allowed to rejoice in the conviction that those sorry historians who impugn the motives of gentlemen and traduce the deeds of soldiers will sink into forgetfulness, and that posterity will vindicate us as the only defenders of the Constitution of 1776, to establish which all our fathers fought, and to maintain which in its integrity ours taught us to fight, and we did.

[W. T. M. Dickson, of Milford, Tex., quotes the foregoing from "Pioneer Presbyterianism in Tennessee." The speaker was a member of the Confederate Congress.]

GALLANT COL. WILLIAM F. TAYLOR.

BY CAPT. W. A. POLK, CORSICANA, TEX.

Those of us who were in the service from 1861 to 1865 witnessed many daring deeds of our comrades, many of which bordered on recklessness. One that made a lasting impression through the forty-one years that have passed occurred near Franklin, Tenn., on Hood's retreat from Nashville, in December, 1864. Col. W. F. Taylor, of the 7th Tennessee Cavalry, Forrest's Corps, was the man referred to, and his conduct on the occasion which I am about to describe was in keeping with his usual course on the battlefield.

During the investment of Nashville Rucker's Brigade, of which the 7th Tennessee was a part, was stationed on the Charlotte Pike, near the Cumberland River, when the retreat began. It was among the last to abandon its position, and we became very badly mixed up with the Federals. In fact, we would have been happier if they had been kept at a more respectful distance. As a consequence of coming in frequent contact with the enemy during the night, we were very badly scattered next morning when we arrived in the vicinity of Franklin, at which time we had sixty-four of the 7th Tennessee Cavalry together under the command of Colonel Taylor.

There were several brigades up to that time guarding the rear, and by request of our colonel they moved on to Franklin, and Taylor was given charge with his sixty-four men. We were then formed across the pike about one mile north of Franklin to await the arrival of the enemy, and we had not long to wait until three regiments of Wilder's Brigade of Indians came in sight. As we were so inferior in point of numbers, they did not deem it necessary to form a line of battle; but came at us with drawn sabers by fours and sections of eight, one column keeping the pike and one regiment on either side, about fifty yards apart. Our artillery between us and Franklin was firing very rapidly at the advancing foe, and from the number of shells that exploded immediately over us we concluded that our gunners were cutting their fuses very short. We fought them until they were within about forty yards of us, with our gallant colonel riding up and down the line imploring his men to stand and whip them. Our line then broke, as nearly all the men had fired their last cartridge. About twenty-five loose horses, whose riders had been shot as they advanced on our line, continued the charge after their owners had been unhorsed, and they remained with us in the stampede to Franklin. As we filed into the pike we passed Colonel Taylor, who was fighting, still looking after the rear, though all alone, and it was thought that he killed three of the enemy before they were repulsed near the river by infantry and artillery.

UNION SOLDIER'S OPINION OF CAPTAIN GURLEY.

BY H. L. WOOD (CO. G, 189TH O. V. I.), ROCHESTER, MICH.

I have read in the VETERAN for February, 1907, what I believe to be quite an accurate account of the capture of Col. Bob Ingersoll. I became well acquainted during the latter part of the war with the father and brother of Capt. Frank Gurley, and only last September had the pleasure and the honor of being the guest of the gallant Captain at his pleasant home on his large plantation, near Gurley's, Ala. Captain Gurley is just the kind of man I expected to find—brave, broad-gauged, liberal, honored and beloved by his fellow-citizens.

Captain Gurley and I were brought up in altogether different environments. He believed slavery was a divine institution and that the war between the States was inevitable, and he fought valiantly and to the last in defense of the South and his honest convictions. My father was not only a Republican but an abolitionist, and I was taught that slavery was a crime and must be abolished. At the age of fifty-six years my father responded to the first call to arms, and at the age of sixteen I responded to the last call, and it took brave boys to enlist then, as we had long before given up the idea of a "before breakfast" job in ending the war. It was while stationed at Gurley's Tanks, near the good town of Gurley, that I became well acquainted with the father and brother of Captain Gurley; and I well remember the father as an honest, clean-cut old gentleman and a man who would carefully train his family to become only good citizens. I found Captain Gurley the son of his father.

The killing of Gen. R. L. McCook caused Captain Gurley's imprisonment and death sentence. His release through the orders of Mr. Lincoln, his election to the office of sheriff of Madison County, Ala., at the close of the war, his rearrest by the carpetbag government and confinement of five months in the Huntsville jail, and all without the scintilla of a charge against him, simply to get him out of the way, showed his loyalty, his forgiveness; and the utter lack of enmity after all these wrongs is what would make any clean Northern man love and admire him. If any such will spend a few days with this brave citizen of the South, he will never more doubt the truthfulness of this story. Having served six years in the Legislature of my own State, it has been my good fortune to meet many prominent men from all over the country, among them your gallant Joe Wheeler; but I have never met a man whose personality struck me more forcibly than that of Capt. Frank B. Gurley. I admired him as a soldier and I sympathized with him for his sufferings. The imprisonment, the death sentence had no terrors to his indomitable spirit. But the cruel charges of "cowardice" and "assassin" which he had to face were enough to break the spirit of any brave man. He would rather die than suffer dishonor. While the killing of General McCook was unfortunate, it was only the fate of war, and was more of an accident than otherwise. It was done in a fair running fight. General McCook was not in an ambulance, as has been claimed. As long as I live I shall stand ready to defend the honor and good name of Capt. Frank B. Gurley.

Now just a word in praise of the Confederate monuments I saw during my visit in the South. I certainly should have had less respect for the Southern people had they failed to honor the memory of those brave boys who fell in defense of a cause they believed to be right, and out of respect to their memory I always lifted my hat upon seeing one of these beautiful monuments.

There is a French proverb which says: "A coward never forgives. It is not his nature." We of the North, you of the South all did our best. To-day we are brothers. Our interests are one, and, like a brave people, while we do not forget, let us forgive. The South has her great blight, and from my observations I have come to the conclusion that the South must be let alone in handling the race question; and should it ever come to a race war, ninety per cent of the North will be with our white brothers of the South.

GENERAL SHERMAN AND MAJOR BOYD.

In a letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate John W. Paulett writes:

"William Tecumseh Sherman was not loved in the South, but there was a time when he had good standing in Louisiana. When the War between the States was about to open, W. T. Sherman was in charge of the Louisiana State University, at Baton Rouge, and among those connected with him in the management of the school was David Fleming Boyd, a native of Wytheville, Va. These men, who had been good friends, were separated by the war, but the kindly feeling for each other was never entirely destroyed. Boyd joined the Confederates and rose to the rank of major; while Sherman, as we all know, rose much higher on the Federal side. During the war Boyd, with his command, was captured by Sherman, who treated him royally, or tried to do so; but Boyd declined to be treated except as a prisoner. 'I want to stay with my men who were captured with me,' was his reply to the entreaties by his captor. 'Don't be a fool, Dave,' said the General; 'and if you will not accept the best room at headquarters and the choice of servants, you must consent to dine with me often.' Boyd agreed to this arrangement. 'Make yourself perfectly at home,' said the General. 'I will not have you watched, as I know you will not leave until you are regularly exchanged.' It was not long before Sherman needed one of his officers who was held by the Confederates, and he sent Major Boyd through the lines to be exchanged for him.

"When the terrible war ended, Boyd was placed in charge of the school which had been presided over by Sherman. The old-time friendship caused him to invite the General to visit him at Baton Rouge. He accepted and spent several days at the school. He was advised by men who had not been in either army that he was risking his life in going to Baton Rouge, saying, 'They will kill you, General;' but he simply told them they had better keep away.

"When Sherman's wife died, Boyd wrote him a warm letter of sympathy, and received a reply filled with tenderness. The Sherman letter was shown to me by Boyd. Many men who are wide apart in their political and religious views are close personal friends. When Arthur was President and Vest Senator, they were close together in their friendship. Arthur, in planning a hunting or fishing trip, would always consult the convenience of Vest. He would postpone the trip until Vest was ready.

"In Tennessee two remarkable men frequently exchanged courtesies. These were Isham G. Harris and William G. Brownlow. Harris, as War Governor, was kind to Brownlow; and even after the war kept a son of the 'parson' in a good position for many years in Washington. This he did despite the strenuous work of Republicans and Democrats to displace Brownlow. Politically, Isham G. Harris and William G. Brownlow had nothing in common; but this did not interfere with their personal relations."

HUMOROUS FEATURES AS WELL AS TRAGEDIES.

BY JOHN T. GOODRICH, FAYETTEVILLE, TENN.

Your article in the VETERAN of December, 1907, in which you referred to the coolness of Lieut. Spencer Eakin on the skirmish line at Jackson, Miss., recalls vividly to my mind that I too was on that same skirmish line, from Company F, 3d Tennessee Regiment, and I have as a reminder a scar on my left arm, the result of about the tenth shot from a Federal sharpshooter in a tree top.

It was not a bit funny to me to have the said sharpshooter with his long-range gun popping away at me when my old Enfield fell far short of reaching him, though I distinctly saw the smoke from his gun each time he fired, and sheltered myself as best I could behind a six-inch fence post.

Lieut. John Hildreth, of the 3d Tennessee (who, by the way, was as brave as the bravest, and who now lives at Mt. Pleasant), was in command of the skirmish line; and when I told him the "Yank" had finally plugged me, he ordered me to the rear to have my wound dressed. I got back to the regiment somehow; but the zip, zip, zip of the Minie balls as I crossed that old field was anything but soothing music to me. I had been in the battles of Fort Donelson, Chickasaw Bayou, bombardment of Port Hudson, the battle of Raymond, Miss., and other minor affairs; but this was the only time I had a regular duel with odds all in favor of the other fellow.

I was also on outpost duty at Port Hudson, La., the 14th of March, 1863, at night, and while standing on the large embankment of one of the forts saw one of those large mortar shells coming right toward me, when I jumped about twenty feet to get out of the way, to learn later that the old screeching shell fell something like a fourth of a mile from me

Another big scare I received, as did also the editor of the VETERAN as well as most of Gregg's Brigade, was on the night before we reached Jackson, after the noted battle of Raymond, Miss., where on the 12th of May, 1863, Gregg's Brigade fought for three hours or more Logan's Corps, the advance of Grant's army. We had bivouacked for the night on each side of the road leading into Jackson and paralleling the same. About 11 P.M. an awful commotion was caused by a terrible noise as if a thousand Federal cavalry had suddenly dashed into our camp with their sabers clanking and their horses at full speed. To our great relief as well as chagrin, we discovered that the unearthly noise was occasioned by a yoke of oxen, with a big chain dangling after them, coming down the road in a long trot. Many were the "cuss words," expressions, and ludicrous remarks of the worn-out veterans of Gregg's Brigade.

Another incident, probably not in print: Col. C. C. McKinney, of the 8th Tennessee Infantry, had as a body servant during our retreat from Dalton, Ga., to Atlanta a negro named Sam. Sam was apt in catching on to phrases often used by Colonel McKinney, one of which was: "I casually remarked." On a certain occasion in that campaign Colonel McKinney furnished Sam his horse and sent him out foraging. The Federals were on our flanks, and Sam got too close to them before discovering the enemy. Sam wheeled his horse and made for tall timber, with a Federal cavalryman right after him; but Sam finally reached camp with eyes protruding like young moons, and proceeded to narrate his adventure. A man of the 8th asked him what the Yank said to him, and Sam replied: "He said, 'Halt, halt,' but I casually remarked, 'I never halt.'" "But, Sam, didn't he shoot at you?" "No, sah; he was a very bold-looking man; but I don't think he had anything to shoot with."

ABOUT GEN. G. H. THOMAS'S SIDE IN THE WAR.

BY WILLIAM E. REPERT, CULPEPER, VA.

Referring to DeRosset's letter in the January VETERAN, he says: "So far as Thomas is concerned, Dr. J. William Jones has testified to having a letter in his possession acknowledging that he had applied to Mr. Davis for service." I presume this meant in the Confederate army. General Thomas in his lifetime always defied any one to produce any testimony, written or oral, to sustain such an allegation. I quote the following from Donn Piatt's biography of Gen. George H. Thomas: "This question of loyalty and purpose, if any remain, is settled by the great man himself. Col. A. L. Hough after the death of General Thomas gave to the press a statement brought out by a printed assertion over the name of Fitzhugh Lee to the effect that Thomas had sought a position in the Southern army."

We quote from Colonel Hough's letter as follows: "As a confidential staff officer and one of his aids-de-camp I had the privilege of having many conversations with General Thomas upon matters relating to the war. The most important of these conversations I made notes of at the time with his knowledge and consent. Among them is one on the subject of Fitzhugh Lee's letter, which I copy from my notebook. A slander upon the General was often repeated in Southern papers during and immediately subsequent to the rebellion."

It was given upon the authority of prominent Rebel officers, and not denied by them. It was to the effect that he was disappointed in not getting a high command in the Rebel army that he had sought for, hence his refusal to join the rebellion. In a conversation with him on the subject the General said: "This is an entire fabrication not having an atom of foundation; not a line ever passed between me and the Rebel authorities. They had no genuine letter of mine, nor was a word spoken by me to any one that could even lead to such an inference. I defy any one to produce any testimony, written or oral, to sustain such an allegation. I never entertained such an idea, for my duty was clear from the beginning."

Now here is a challenge for DeRosset to produce his letter. It will take something more than a mere assertion to make the people believe the great Virginian, George H. Thomas, would betray a trust or tell a lie.

In printing the foregoing it is not intended by any means to commend the expressions. There would have been no "slander" if General Thomas had served in the Confederate army from first to last, even as a private soldier.

SOUTHERN WOMEN OF THE WAR PERIOD.

WRITTEN FOR A WOMAN'S CLUB IN RALEIGH, N. C.

History gives many instances of woman's devotion, yet has none been found to equal the courage and sacrifice of the women of the Southern Confederacy. These noble women who "trod the pages of a nation's history" are to us a precious memory. They have left us a heritage which with passing years gathers an ever-brightening halo of glory.

When our theme is the four years of war, thought turns easily to our late lamented Mrs. Varina Jefferson Davis, who, born and reared in Mississippi, always loved her native sunny South. Mrs. Davis, having educational advantages beyond the ordinary—she spent in Washington social circles the two terms of Mr. Davis's Senatorship and the four years he was Secretary of War—was well fitted to grace the White House of the Confederate capital. And here was gathered an assemblage of women gifted and fair enough to grace any court. Of our Southerners Lord Wolseley said: "There is an unspeakable charm about them rarely found in the women of any other country."

Richmond, in addition to its own brilliant coterie, included at this time a large circle composed of wives and daughters of government and army officers. And these were not butterflies of fashion, but courageous women as devoted to duty as they were attractive.

Mrs. Davis had remarkable powers of conversation, and was as well able to discuss themes interesting to the President and Cabinet members as the lighter ones of social interest.

In later years she and her daughters, Margaret and Winnie, were spoken of as a "trio of gifted women rarely equaled."

Winnie Davis, born at the Capitol, was fittingly called "The Daughter of the Confederacy." Possessed of winning graces both of mind and manner, she was much loved, was honored by the war veterans, and eagerly cheered when she appeared before them.

Mrs. Davis followed the changing fortunes of her illustrious husband with loyal devotion, sharing even his prison life when permitted, assisting in his later labors with pen, cheering and soothing his declining years.

Another "lady of the land" was the wife of our noble chieftain, Robert E. Lee. She was spoken of as "the light of Arlington," their beautiful, historic home. Mrs. Lee was Mary Custis, an only daughter, whose mother was the step-child of General Washington. She possessed, like her husband, all the graces to be gained by education, cultivation, and a long line of distinguished ancestry. An invalid, Mrs. Lee was debarred from any active part in the social life in Richmond during the war, though she was much visited in her home. Her circle of friends whether seeking counsel or comfort ever found it, and always found her busily knitting for the "boys in gray." She drew others to join in her labor of love; so made and gathered up great numbers of socks and gloves for the soldiers, which General Lee himself distributed, being careful to give them where most needed. His letters showed due appreciation of Mrs. Lee's work. With all the great interests which absorbed him, still time was found for these little things, proving "the bravest are the tenderest."

Southern women gave lavishly of their best, whether in means or service. Conspicuous among these was Mrs. Roger A. Pryor, a native of Virginia. She had been reared in affluence, knowing only the pleasant walks in life, and was in full enjoyment of Washington social life when the war clouds gathered. The Pryors came home and warmly espoused the cause of their native State. Mr. Pryor was made a general in the Southern army, while Mrs. Pryor gave her hands and heart to her country, ever ready to share, to cheer, to nurse, spending her strength for those who needed. She was capable and ready, whether called to grace a reception, to nurse a wounded soldier, or to comfort one whose hero had fallen. She dismantled her home of all that could be used in camp or hospital. After the surrender, taking up the broken threads of life, she began with undaunted courage the making of another home. This case was typical of thousands all over our Southland.

In Richmond in 1862 a "Ladies' Defense Association" was formed, and under the leadership of Mrs. Clopton, Mrs. Hensington, Mrs. Maury, and others they had a gunboat built, naming it the "Richmond." For this they gave their money, jewels, and household articles of brass and iron, receiving contributions from New Orleans and other cities. The gunboat was approved by President Davis, used in defense of the capital city, and sunk when Richmond was evacuated.

Each State cherishes the memory of some who were courageous and helpful in the dark days of war. North Carolina treasures the thought of her who was the wife of our Gen. D. H. Hill. It is to us a hallowed memory.

It is our privilege to have with us the beautiful example of unselfish kindness and the gracious presence of Mrs. Stonewall Jackson, who is a native North Carolinian.

During the war a number of women of large means established private hospitals. One of these was Miss Sally Tompkins. After a time some irregularities made it necessary to bring all hospitals under government control or close them; so General Lee gave orders to close all private hospitals except Miss Sally's, which could not be spared, being so efficiently managed. In order to save this one, General Lee gave Miss Tompkins a regular commission as captain in the Confederate army. "Captain Sally" was much loved by the soldiers in gray and ever after honored by the veterans. [A more complete account of "Captain Sally" and her work appears on page 72 of VETERAN for February.]

Mrs. John S. Law, a native of North Carolina, living in Memphis, Tenn., during the war, devoted herself to nursing and caring for the soldiers both in hospital and field during the entire four years. In appreciation of her acceptable service Gen. Joseph E. Johnston had thirty thousand soldiers pass in review before her—a great compliment which has not been paid to many women. [This was the beloved Sarah C. Law.—Ed.]

In Mississippi stands Annandale, the historic home of the Johnstone family. This for years had been the scene of festivity and lavish hospitality, yet quickly was all changed when the tocsin of war sounded over our fair Southland. In 1861 there remained of this family only Mrs. Johnstone and her daughter, Helen, who turned their elegant home into a factory for making soldiers' clothes. They clothed one entire company during the four years and two hundred others belonging to different commands. They gave their carpets for blankets in camp, their fine linen for use in hospitals, their bronze and brass ornaments to the foundry to be made into cannon.

The emergencies of war developed other types of women also, some brave to dare and do, as was Belle Boyd, of Virginia, who, acting as a spy, would go disguised into the enemy's camp and bring valuable news to the Confederates. She received a letter of thanks from General Jackson for bringing valuable information. Belle Boyd and other Southern girls devised many ways of secreting the messages they carried from camp to camp, sometimes hiding notes in the coils of their hair.

Down in Florida occurred the thrilling incident of Lola Sanchez's night ride. Three Yankee officers came to her father's house for supper. The sisters heard them discussing a plan to "surprise and capture the Rebels" next day. Lola stole softly out in the darkness, took her horse from the stable, rode swiftly to the St. John's River, rowed the boat across alone, and carried the news to the Confederates, returning as hastily, and entertained the guests at her home until a late hour. "Forewarned is forearmed." Next day the Confederates won a victory, capturing a transport and a number of prisoners. A pontoon was named the "Three Sisters" for Lola and her sisters.

The Daughters of the Confederacy in Alabama are preparing to erect a statue of General Forrest and Emma Sansom to keep in memory the brave act of this young girl, who rode behind Forrest under fire of shot and shell to show him a ford where Black Creek could be crossed, the enemy having burned the bridge in order to prevent their passage. The General led his men safely across the point to which he had been guided by this tender girl's hand and rode on to win a complete victory, capturing the entire Federal command.

Time fails for telling of the hundreds of brave Southern women, their courage to dare, their patient endurance, and, more than all, their loving sacrifice for the Southland.

What wonder men were brave when women labored, loved, and sacrificed so much! What wonder women would struggle and endure for an army of such valor!

HEROIC TENNESSEE WOMEN.—This instance of heroic bravery is recorded: At the end of the first day's battle of Nashville, when the division of Gen. Ed Johnston were driven back by the overpowering numbers of the enemy from their last stand on the hills, two heroic daughters of Tennessee rushed out of their home, facing the death-dealing fire of the enemy, and bravely endeavored to stem the tide of defeat. Their heroism was superb; they esteemed their lives as nothing, and risked all, facing death, to aid their beloved cause. The gallant Major —, who was desperately wounded in Franklin and whose wife made her way through the enemy's lines to nurse him, was told by the Federal surgeon that his only chance for life was to be nursed at home, to accomplish which he must take the oath of allegiance. The wife, rising to the heights of patriotism, said: "No, never, so long as the Confederate flag flies!"

THREE DESERTERS SHOT AT SHELBYVILLE.

One of the saddest sights ever witnessed near Shelbyville was the execution of three alleged deserters from the Confederate army during the war by order of General Bragg while his army was stationed there, soon after the bloody battle of Murfreesboro. These men had been tried before and found guilty by a court-martial. After their conviction, they were placed in a guardhouse at Shelbyville. On the day of the execution they were handcuffed, placed in an ambulance, and taken to the place where they were to be shot. Strong appeals were made to General Bragg to pardon them, but he sternly refused. He had been greatly troubled by desertions from the army, and he had determined to stop them by the execution of all captured deserters. Two of the three were mere boys, the other a middle-aged man. Arriving at the spot of execution, they faced death bravely. They refused to be blindfolded, and one of the younger men held a photograph of his mother, which he kissed and handed to a soldier with the request that it be forwarded to the address given. The other young man held a photo of a lovely young girl, said to be his sister, which was also sent to General Bragg with the request that it be forwarded. These requests General Bragg complied with.

The condemned soldiers were taken out on the Fairfield Pike to where the command from which they were deserted was encamped, and all three were shot by a platoon of soldiers. They all fell dead at the first discharge. They were wrapped in their blankets and buried. The execution cast a shadow of gloom over the army as well as over the citizens. The bodies were never removed, and W. F. McAdams is perhaps the only man living who could point out the spot of their execution and burial. There are but few now living who remember the sad occurrence. The men shot were not Tennesseans.

COMRADES IN TENNESSEE FAVOR A PENSION.

At a regular meeting of Dibrell Bivouac, No. 12, and Camp No. 55, held in Lewisburg, Tenn., on January 18, 1908, resolutions introduced by Scott D. Davis were unanimously adopted in favor of accepting a proposed pension from the United States. The Camp sets forth its reasons as follows:

"Whereas the Hon. Richmond P. Hobson, Congressman from the State of Alabama, contemplates the introduction of a bill to grant pensions to ex-Confederate soldiers by the Federal government; and whereas the ex-Confederate soldiers were regularly and honorably paroled by the Federal government at the close of the War between the States and have faithfully kept their paroles; and whereas they have made good and loyal citizens to the government of the United States since the close of that war; and whereas since that surrender they and their sons have stood ready and willing to shed their blood in the defense of our common country, as was shown in the Spanish-American War; and whereas since this is the ex-Confederate soldiers' government and country, who recognize none other under the sun, but swear allegiance to this alone, and are willing to die in defense of it; and whereas they willingly pay their part of the taxes to sustain the government and pay liberal pensions to ex-Federal soldiers without begrudging the same to them; and whereas since the ex-Confederate soldier by his bravery, gallantry, and endurance shed much luster and glory on American arms; and whereas since it is believed that a pension to the deserving ex-Confederate soldiers would do much to break down any lingering sectional animosities still existing between the sections; and whereas since we heartily indorsed the magnanimous offer of the lamented President McKinley 'that the government of the United States take charge of and care for all Confederate prison cemeteries of the country,' and since that war was only a family and honorable contest over a principle; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we by unanimous vote heartily indorse the effort to be made by our young Congressman from our sister State of Alabama to have a pension allowed to all deserving ex-Confederate soldiers by our common government."

FORREST CHAPTER IN MUSKOGEE, OKLA.

BY MRS. A. W. ROBB, MUSKOGEE.

(Paper Read to the Chapter—Its Achievements.)

The General Forrest Chapter, U. D. C., was organized March 4, 1904, at the home of Mrs. T. W. Gulick. The Chapter numbers sixty loyal women, whose cherished object is to preserve as far as possible a truthful record of Southern valor, and to this end it encourages interesting and instructive papers read at their monthly meetings.

In the words of the Right Rev. William H. Moreland, Bishop of Sacramento: "The Daughters of the Confederacy are banded together to keep alive the memories of the heroic deeds of our fathers, to honor their names and their glorious achievements, to minister to the survivors, the widows, and the orphans." We as an order have undertaken to embalm the memory of the Confederate soldier, private as well as officer, and we mean to do it lovingly and well. We cannot fail to remember that soon the lips of the last veteran will be stilled, the last story of camp fire and charge will have been heard, and the green turf will wave over hearts that once thrilled to fife and bugle. Let us, therefore, gather up the treasures that belong to our history, and let us make an earnest protest against that ignoble conception of patriotism that would have us forget the grandeur of those who fought for the Confederacy.

The Daughters of the General Forrest Chapter have found much to do in Muskogee in the way of charity; more, indeed, than they could accomplish. We have responded to several calls from outside Chapters for aid, but for the most part our charity work has been done here at home. During the first year of the Chapter's existence we were notified of the death of a destitute veteran in a dilapidated house several miles from town. Our charity committee of five women went out in company with two old Confederate veterans, and they found conditions sad indeed. The old man had died in abject poverty. It was a sad little company that followed him to his grave, and the prayer uttered over his grave was by one of our own Daughters, as no minister had been called. This is the only case where we were notified too late. In several instances we have relieved veterans in sickness, have provided work for widows of veterans, and it is our endeavor to neglect no Confederate, man or woman. We have assisted two of these old men in the past year to the Old Soldiers' Home in Austin, Tex. We have spent over one hundred dollars in charity. The amount is indeed small, but it has been placed in each instance where it seemed most needed and most worthy.

We have not yet erected any monuments; but a little over a year ago we commenced our drinking fountain fund, and have now in the treasury over two hundred dollars for this purpose. It will take much more; but we will raise it, for our hearts are in the work and it is a laudable undertaking. It is our purpose to erect a monument over this fountain of a Confederate soldier in uniform.

By the organization of a Chapter of U. D. C. in Muskogee we find a better appreciation of the South among our Northern friends who have come among us. As Southern women, we preserve the anniversaries of our beloved Southern heroes. We do what we can for the battle-scarred veterans who are spared to us, and we feel that we are thereby handing down a principle to the rising sons and daughters that is worthy of acceptance. We hope they may be so deeply impressed by our work that they too may fulfill the duties of sacred charity to the Confederate veterans and their descendants.

All through this great country, in the North as well as in the South, wherever is gathered together a little band of Southern women are Chapters of the U. D. C., all reaching out to do their bit of good in their section. And the influence is far-reaching. Chapters are paying for the education of sons and daughters of Confederate veterans, homes are erected and maintained for the feeble and aged, libraries are organized and equipped, truthful and impartial text-books are placed in public schools. Everywhere we find with gratification that each subject for which the U. D. C. was organized—historical, educational, memorial, benevolent, and social—is being prosecuted with enthusiasm by the Chapters of the U. D. C.

The women of the South are striving so earnestly to perpetuate the memory of our heroes who fought for the Confederacy. While we are building monuments to our dead and beautifying their graves, we are also stretching out helping hands to the living and nursing the dying.

There should be no prejudice toward this noble work of loyal Southern women, for they are laying the foundation for loyal citizens of our united country by teaching the sons of the South the truth; for it would be impossible to make patriots of boys who are taught by false histories to feel ashamed of the bravery and glorious deeds of their fathers.

The world is watching our organization, and it behooves the members to be diligent in worthy deeds. What the women have accomplished has been done by zealous, hard labor with heart and hand.

GREETING TO FAITHFUL CONFEDERATES.

In a New Year's greeting "to Confederate soldiers and their wives, their daughters and their sons," Thomas C. Hindman, son of Gen. Thomas C. Hindman, states:

"Here's for 366 ideal days unto you and those you hold dear;
Rich in health and wealth, and followed by many more;
And may God's munificent blessings for each succeeding year
Make it brighter and happier far than the one before!"

"Sleeping, but glorious;
 Dead in Fame's portal;
 Dead, but victorious;
 Dead, but immortal!
 They gave us great glory;
 What more could they give?
 They left us a story,
 A story to live!"

DEATHS OF VETERANS REPORTED FROM ANDERSON, S. C.

The Dixie Chapter, U. D. C., of Anderson, S. C., reports the passing of the following veterans of that section in the past four months: Iva Dodd, Pendleton, over ninety years old; John Allen Emerson, Belton, sixty-seven years, member of Company I, 4th Infantry Regiment; J. W. Fowler, Piedmont, aged seventy-two years, Orr's Rifles; J. C. C. Featherston, Anderson, Orr's Rifles, 2d Regiment; also R. J. Pool, Anderson, aged sixty-seven, Company D, Orr's Rifles.

DEATHS AMONG COMRADES AT GLASGOW, KY.

William Wood reports from Glasgow, Ky., the death of several veterans there recently:

LAUDERDALE.—John M. Lauderdale died at the home of his son-in-law, Horace Combs, in the seventy-third year of his age. He enlisted in May, 1861, in Capt. D. L. Goodall's company, 2d Regiment Tennessee Volunteers. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and served one year, when it was sent to Bragg's army and enlisted for the war. With a thirty days' furlough in his pocket, Comrade Lauderdale went into the Chickamauga fight with his regiment. He was a Christian gentleman, and did well his part in the duties of life. Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters.

COX.—M. A. Cox died in December at his home, in Glasgow. He was in his sixty-sixth year. He was a faithful soldier, and no less faithful to the demands of life as a citizen, and was laid to rest by his comrades.

DR. THOMAS D. WOOTEN.

Dr. Thomas Dudley Wooten was born in Barren County, Ky., on March 6, 1829. His parents were from Virginia. At the age of fifteen his father died, and he was left in charge of the plantation and slaves. He began the study of medicine, and entered the medical department of the University of Louisville in the fall of 1851. Graduating in 1853, Dr. Wooten located at Tompkinsville, where he practiced until the fall of 1856, when he moved to Springfield, Mo., where he engaged in a general practice of medicine, though excelling in surgery.

In June, 1861, Dr. Wooten enlisted as a private under Col. Richard Campbell. Later he was commissioned surgeon of Foster's Regiment, 2d Regiment of Missouri State Troops.

After the battle of Oak Hills, on August 10, 1861, he was appointed chief surgeon of McBride's Division. Following the battle of Pea Ridge, he was appointed surgeon general of all the Missouri forces, vice Dr. Snodgrass, resigned. When the Missouri army was turned over to the Confederacy, he was appointed medical director of the corps of Maj. Gen. Sterling Price.

Upon the transfer of the command east of the Mississippi, and when General Price was placed in command of the District of Tennessee, embracing Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and part of Alabama, Dr. Wooten was made medical director of the district. When General Price was ordered to the West again, Dr. Wooten retained his position on his staff, and served as medical director of the District of Arkansas, which position he retained to the end of the war.

Dr. Wooten's rapid rise and sustained success in the army were remarkable. Only thirty-two years old at the outbreak of hostilities, with but four years' residence and acquaintance in Missouri, with no previous military experience, no political prestige nor professional affiliations, enlisting as a private, after a few months he rose to the highest medical rank in the service of the State and to the medical directorship of the Western Army Corps, retaining to the close his position on the staff and his place in the confidence and affection of Missouri's greatest warrior and chieftain.

After the war ended, Dr. Wooten was broken in fortune and health. He settled in Lamar County, Tex., in 1865, and soon acquired an extensive practice. In January, 1876, he removed to Austin, where he soon became a leading surgeon and prominent, public-spirited citizen.

He was a prominent member of the Texas State Medical Association, of the American Medical Association, and of the American Public Health Association, and was a delegate to the International Medical Congress.

CAPT. WILLIAM KINNEY.

William Kinney was a son of the "Emerald Isle," born in Dublin August 17, 1836. He came to the United States when seventeen years of age, and in 1856 removed to Shreveport, La., which had since been his home. His death occurred there on the 29th of October, 1907.

In May, 1861, Kinney volunteered in the Louisiana Rangers, which became Company F, 3d Louisiana Regiment; and upon the reorganization of that regiment, in 1862, he was elected captain of his company, promoted from orderly sergeant. He was in the battles of Oak Hill and Elkhorn, Ark., Iuka, Miss., and in a number of skirmishes preceding the siege of Vicksburg, where he distinguished himself signally. He returned to Shreveport after being paroled at Vicksburg; and when exchanged at Alexandria was assigned to duty in the Trans-Mississippi Department, under command of Gen. E. Kirby Smith.

In 1870 he was married to Miss Clara Geiss, who, with five children, survives him.

G. FERD FARROW.

On October 29, 1907, at Whitehaven, Tenn., died G. Ferd Farrow, one of the noblest survivors of Forrest's Cavalry.

Comrade Farrow was born in Marshall County, Miss., of an old and respected family; but was brought to Tennessee when four years of age by his parents, who settled at Germantown, near Memphis. On April 20, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, 13th Tennessee Regiment. While a member of this command he participated in the battle of Belmont, in which his brother, John P. Farrow, was killed in the first volley fired by the enemy. The noble character of John Farrow, his great gallantry, the prominence of his family, and the fact that he was the first of the sons of the Confederacy to offer up his life upon the altar of his country in the Department of the West created a profound impression. His remains were sent home and buried with the greatest possible civic and military honors.

G. FERD FARROW.

The death of this brother under such melancholy circumstances gave Ferd Farrow deeper reason than ever to render the very best possible account of himself in battle, which he did throughout four years of bloody strife. Soon after this he was transferred to McDonald's Battalion of Forrest's old regiment, with which he was connected until the end of the war. He was in all the important engagements which immortalized the "Wizard of the Saddle" and his heroic men. He was captured at Britton's Lane; but was exchanged ten days later and returned to his command, where he remained until he was surrendered, at Gainesville, Ala., in May, 1865.

He was in active service of the Confederate army for more than four years, enlisting when less than nineteen and surrendering at twenty-three years of age.

Having been trained in such a strenuous school, he met every test of civil life after peace had returned. His record in peace was indeed typical of the career of thousands of others who had received the same stern discipline in war. Their splendid and successful struggle to build up the waste places of the South, which had been devastated by the contending armies, entitles them to a still higher niche in the temple of fame than their matchless deeds in battle.

He engaged in planting, and made a gratifying success. He always kept up an active interest in his old comrades, and in every effort made to preserve the annals of the Confederate soldiers from oblivion. He was a member of the Confederate Historical Society, and was ever zealous in its purposes.

He was a member of the Whitehaven Baptist Church and a consistent Christian, passing to his future reward with an unflinching trust. He fought a good fight.

[The foregoing tribute is by R. H. Vance, of Memphis.]

GEORGE W. WATKINS.

George W. Watkins, of Rhome, Tex., died on the 15th of December. He was born in Trigg County, Ky., in 1842. He volunteered in August, 1861, in Company B, 8th Kentucky Infantry, and was wounded twice at Baker's Creek, Miss. He was present and saw General Tilghman killed in that battle. He was under General Forrest in mounted infantry at the battle of Harrisburg and Tupelo, Miss., where he was severely wounded. He was carried to the hospital at Lauderdale, Miss., thence to Gainesville, Ala., where he was discharged from the service on account of his wounds.

EMERSON.—In the city of Mineral Wells, Tex., on October 30 occurred the death of A. D. Emerson, who served in the Confederate army as a member of Company B (Biffles), 9th Tennessee Regiment, having enlisted in November, 1861. Part of the time he was attached to a battery of artillery, and went through many severe engagements with the enemy. He was Quartermaster of the Stonewall Jackson Camp, U. C. V., at Mineral Wells.

CHAPLAIN PETER TINSLEY.

Peter Tinsley was a native of Powhatan County, Va., born August 26, 1833. He was a graduate of Hampden-Sidney College. He was of a most genial, gentle nature, always courteous and considerate of others, and wherever he went won friends who became deeply attached to him. He was rector of the Episcopal Church at Big Lick (now Roanoke) from 1855 to June, 1861.

When war was declared, Dr. Tinsley offered his services to his State, and was enrolled as a chaplain. Whenever his command was ordered to the front, he marched in the ranks; and however great the danger in its midst, he would be found ministering to the men spiritually and bodily, cheering them on to duty and encouraging them by his presence. He was greatly beloved by his comrades. He was chaplain of the famous 28th Virginia Infantry, Pickett's Division.

Some time after the war Dr. Tinsley accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Advent in Cincinnati, where for more than a quarter of a century he served, gaining the confidence and affection of the congregation and the public.

His strength had been failing for a year or so, and he realized that he was no longer able to continue the onerous duties as rector of so large a Church and tendered his resignation; but he had become so much attached to his home there that he continued to reside in Cincinnati. He returned every year, however, to Virginia to visit his sister, other relatives, and friends.

Before going to Cincinnati Dr. Tinsley served as chaplain of the University of Virginia for two years.

His death occurred early in January, and his remains were buried in Virginia.

ELIZABETH METCALFE HALDEMAN.

With the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Metcalfe Haldeman many lives that came in contact with hers and knew its worth and loveliness are saddened. Married to Walter N. Haldeman in 1844, in the early days of Louisville, she was in every sense a helpmeet to her husband, and shares with him in no small degree the credit for notable achievement in the great properties which he built up.

Although lacking but a few weeks of being eighty-one years of age when she died, she was interested to the last in the welfare of the community of which she was so long a member; and before her declining health disqualified her for activity in promoting the objects of her sympathy and following out her convictions of duty she zealously participated in many good works. Her efforts were especially enlisted in behalf of the Confederate monument in this city, a movement which she did much to bring to success. Centered in her home, devoted to her family, beloved of her friends, who grew in numbers and in tender reverence as she grew in years, she leaves in their hearts that benediction which is no less a blessing because so real a sorrow—the benediction of the memory of a life that was beautiful and good and true.

ELIZABETH METCALFE HALDEMAN. WALTER N. HALDEMAN.

[The foregoing is from an editorial in the Courier-Journal.]

The editor of the VETERAN adds a single paragraph. On a lovely Saturday afternoon in May some years ago, when the multitude who had attended the memorial service at the Confederate lot in Cave Hill Cemetery had dispersed, he saw the pleasantest picture of old age and the content of lives well spent that he has yet had to remember. Mr. and Mrs. Haldeman had tarried to see that every feature had been properly concluded, and they were driving quietly along an avenue to the exit in a splendid little phaeton drawn by a gentle, small, beautiful horse, relieved of checkrein, and the two seemed to be as happy in each other's presence as if the Creator's design in the "well done" to faithful servants had been audibly spoken to them. In the Christian's faith they are again united.

The following acrostic on the death of Mr. Walter N. Haldeman was written and published in a neat little memorial booklet by Mrs. Fanny Lloyd Smith, of Louisville:

W—aiting at God's golden gateway
A—re the choristers, robed in white,
L—ooking down from the Holy City,
T—rilling their songs with sweet delight;
E—rstwhile came the grim death angel,
R—eaching out his ruthless hand,

N—ear and nearer, hovering o'er him,

H—eeding not the sorrowing band
A—s they kneel beside their loved one
L—ispering forth their prayers to God.
D—ost thou hear them, Saviour, listen
E—re you measure death's cold rod,
"M—ay we keep our loved one, Father?"
A—nd the Saviour answered softly,
"N—o, a starry crown awaits him here."

DOROTHEA SOTHORA ODENHEIMER.

A multitude of people have been saddened by the death of the fair young girl, Dorothea Odenheimer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Odenheimer, of Jessups, Md. The mother, Mrs. Cordelia Powell Odenheimer, is President of the Maryland Division, U. D. C., and is beloved throughout the great organization. She is a native of Leesburg, Va., and her family have for generations been an honor to the Old Dominion. Dorothea, the brilliant girl, was injured in a wreck on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad early in December; but was well on the way to recovery, when an attack of pneumonia, complicated with acute appendicitis, proved too severe for her enfeebled condition to withstand.

Dorothea was remarkably gifted; and though but a child, her writings had attracted attention for two years (since she was thirteen), and she gave promise of a brilliant future. Among some beautiful verses written in her memory one is:

"Among the redeemed, angelic throng
Her gentle spirit moves, a happy child!
Forever sheltered from all grief and wrong,
Forever holy, pure, and undefiled!"

The Baltimore Sun states: "She had sufficiently recovered from her illness to move about the institution to see the less fortunate patients who could not leave their rooms. Her coming to the sick was like that of an angel, for she had a cheerful disposition. She had a good word for all, and especially was her presence felt during Yuletide. Christmas day she had a prettily decorated tree in her room, and each one of the patients that she could reach received some sort of a Christmas souvenir from her. She was a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy, her mother being President of the Maryland Division; and on January 19 (Gen. Robert E. Lee's birthday), as on previous occasions, she was to have acted as sponsor for the Confederate Veterans and present the crosses of honor donated by the Daughters of the Confederacy. She was an ardent admirer of General Lee, and on the morning of the wreck was taking to school a poem and composition on the Confederate General which was to be read in a contest on Southern heroes. Her contributions to newspapers received marked recognition, and she often won first prizes in the News' Contest Page. Her ambition was to become an author. She was a member of the St. Nicholas League. Her favorite outdoor pastime was horseback-riding and gathering wild flowers, which she brought regularly to school for botanical study."

DOROTHEA ODENHEIMER.

COL. GEORGE JACKSON.

Maj. Gen. K. M. Van Zandt, commanding the Texas Division, United Confederate Veterans, has issued the following:

"FORT WORTH, TEX., January 6.

"GENERAL ORDER No. 72.

"It is with sincere regret and profound grief that the Major General commanding the Texas Division, U. C. V., announces the death of Col. George Jackson, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff of the Division, which occurred at his residence, in Fort Worth, Sunday, January 5, at 8 A.M.

"Colonel Jackson was born February 9, 1831, at Maidstone, England, removing with his parents to the United States at about one year of age, locating first in New York and later in Baltimore, Md., from which city he entered the service of the C. S. A. at Richmond, Va., August 10, 1861.

"In 1862 he was assigned to the medical purveyor's department under command of E. W. Johns. In 1864 he was transferred to Charlotte, N. C., under James Johnson. He surrendered May 3, 1865, to Maj. Admond Walcott, United States Special Commissioner. While it was not his lot to be called upon to occupy a place on the firing line, his whole life as a correct and painstaking business man, coupled with his efficient and unselfish services to the U. C. V. organization in the later years of his life, leaves no doubt in the minds of his comrades that the services he rendered to his beloved Confederacy were as faithful and patriotic as any ever rendered to that fleeting republic.

"His record in all the relations of life stands out as a synonym for the strictest accuracy in his dealings and unquestioned integrity of character. These high qualities exercised in the faithful discharge of every duty of his responsible position has added much to the strength and perpetuity of the Texas Division. Exchanges are requested to copy."

The news of Adjutant General Jackson's death recalled a pathetic memory of the last Texas State Reunion and his hard effort to have delinquent Camps dropped from the roll. After failure to carry his point, he yielded beautifully, and said he would continue to serve his comrades to the best of his ability. Later he wrote the VETERAN, lest his contention be misunderstood, quoting from the record of previous meetings; and when his explanation was given to the public, his gratitude compensated for many hardships that are now and then encountered in the work of the VETERAN.

DR. GEORGE JACKSON.

SAMUEL MORRIS HICKOK.

One of the oldest residents of Christiansburg, Va., Samuel M. Hickok, died on January 29, 1908. He was born at Fincastle, Va., August 9, 1828. In 1852 he removed to Christiansburg to build the Presbyterian church there. He was married in 1854 to Miss Emeline A. Gardner, of that place, of which union there were three sons and three daughters. His second wife was Mrs. Isabel Blount, of Fincastle, who died some years ago, leaving three daughters and two sons.

Comrade Hickok served as a Confederate soldier during the four years of the war, joining the Montgomery Fencibles under Col. Robert Trigg, which afterwards belonged to the Stonewall Brigade. It was his pride to recall the memorable charge at Manassas and Jackson's word and voice when he gave the charge. After the war he was diligent in business, strong in his Christian character, with an influence always for good. He had been in failing health for some time.

HON. J. C. MADDEN.

Jesse C. Madden was born in Harris County, Ga., in 1837, but was of an old Laurens District (S. C.) family of Revolutionary fame. He spent his boyhood in Tallapoosa County, Ala., and then went to Scott County, Miss. In 1860 he was married to Miss Lydia Slaughter, of Mississippi; and at the breaking out of the Civil War he enlisted in Company I, 27th Mississippi Regiment, Walthall's Brigade. He was captured in the battle of Perryville and sent to Camp Douglas, but was soon exchanged. He was wounded at Chickamauga; and in the battle of Atlanta, July 28, 1864, he lost his left arm. Returning to Mississippi after the war was over, he served as tax collector in his county. He removed to Claiborne Parish, La., in 1880 and engaged in mercantile business, in which he prospered. For several years preceding his death he was Senator from the Twenty-Second Senatorial District in the Louisiana Legislature, in which he was very popular. He died at Homer, La., in March, 1907.

ANNIE L. LESTER.

Death again invaded the home of Comrade John H. Lester and took from him the little daughter who had been his companion and solace since the passing of other dear ones.

Annie Lester was born in Grant County, N. Mex., March 12, 1893; and died at Rogersville, Ala., September 16, 1907. During the previous session she had been a student at the State Normal College, where she was known and loved for the spirit of gentleness, sweetness, and earnestness which marked her work as a student. Her mind was bright and active, and she displayed remarkable literary talent, writing poetry with great facility. She was very fond of hearing her father relate his war experiences, and she expressed her ambition to make the name of the Confederate soldier more and more famous.

Few have been more sorely tried than has our good friend, Captain Lester, and the brave spirit which carried him through the trials and sufferings of war has been his dependence in the deeper suffering of a home made desolate.

JUDGE J. M. LENNARD.

News comes from Columbus, Ga., that Judge J. M. Lennard was found dead in his bed on January 14, having passed away during the night. He had been magistrate there for fifteen years. He was a member of Alabama and Georgia bars. Judge Lennard was a veteran of the war, having lost a leg at Lookout Mountain with Wheeler's Cavalry. One son and four daughters survive him. Two sisters also survive.

DR. W. D. MIMS.

Dr. William D. Mims was born in Marshall County, Miss. He was in college in Lebanon, Tenn., at the outbreak of the war, and enlisted in the Confederate army, Company B, 17th Mississippi Infantry, under Col. W. S. Featherston, and served in the Army of Northern Virginia. He participated in nearly all the hard fighting by that army. He was wounded and captured at Gettysburg, and was in the hospital at David's

DR. WILLIAM D. MIMS.

Island, N. Y., for nearly four months. From there he was sent to Richmond. He rejoined his old command the following March, and was captured again on April 6, 1865, near Petersburg a few days before the surrender. He was taken to Point Lookout, Md. He was kept a prisoner until July, 1865; and after being released he returned to his old home, in Marshall County, Miss.

He engaged in farming for about five years; then undertook the study of medicine in 1871, graduating at the University of Louisiana (now Tulane University) in 1873. Dr. Mims began practicing the same year. For many years he was in partnership with Dr. J. W. Sharp, under the firm name of Sharp and Mims.

He was a member of the Methodist Church, South, and of the Masonic fraternity. He was greatly esteemed in Marshall, his native county.

Dr. Mims continued the practice of his profession until prevented by failing health and a stroke of paralysis in April, 1905, which resulted in his death, at Cockrum, Miss., November 10, 1907. The wife (Emma K.), three sons, and four daughters survive him. He was laid to rest in Cockrum Cemetery, all of the pallbearers being Confederate veterans.

HOLCOMB.—Camp Cabell, of Vernon, Tex., lost a member in the death of C. C. Holcomb, who was a member of Company D, 18th Texas Cavalry. He died September 7, 1907.

ANNIE LESTER.

MAJ. F. G. BUCHANAN.

[Sketch by Capt. W. P. Tolley, of the same regiment.]

Maj. Felix Grundy Buchanan was born March 23, 1838; and died March 16, 1907. He was the youngest child of Andrew and Bethia Buchanan, pioneers of Lincoln County, Tenn. His father came from Virginia and settled on land granted to the grandfather, Mathew Buchanan, for Revolutionary War services. Major Buchanan owned this native place when he died, and had lived there most of his life.

He was educated in the schools of Fayetteville under Dickerson, a noted teacher of his day, and at Emory and Henry College, Virginia. He was well equipped for the varied life that was before him. With rare common sense and an unusual fund of information, he had comprehensive views on all subjects that came before him.

He was married May 19, 1874, to Miss Kate McClellan, of Athens, Ala. Two daughters and three sons were born to them.

He was a zealous member of the Methodist Church, South, and was active and prominent in its affairs.

He was one of the first to respond to the call for volunteers to make up the regiment which Col. Peter Turney had procured authority at Montgomery to raise immediately after the organization of the Confederate government at that place. He was elected second lieutenant of the Fayetteville company, which became Company F, Turney's 1st Tennessee Regiment, A. N. V. In the reorganization of the regiment, at the expiration of our first twelve months, he was elected captain of that company. In the battle of Gaines's Mill he was made major of the regiment, and perhaps commanded it more than any other field officer. He led the regiment in many of the most famous victories that made the Army of Northern Virginia renowned throughout the civilized world.

If some impartial arbiter could have been selected to make up a roll of honor of the exceptionally brave and true of Lee's army, when he had come to the famous Hatton-Archer

Brigade of Tennesseans, Felix G. Buchanan would have been among the first chosen. His absolute fearlessness, gallantry, and devotion to the cause for which he fought were remembered and appreciated by his comrades through all the succeeding years. It was fitting that all the members of his old regiment who could attend his funeral were his honorary pallbearers, and sons of his old friends and comrades the active ones.

The last years of his life were marked by suffering and affliction; yet he bore it all, as he did every adverse circumstance of his life, with unusual patience and fortitude. Always cheerful, he had a pleasant word for old and young. Gloom, doubt, and distrust were foreign to his nature. Submission to God's will and a clear, strong faith abided with him to the end.

[An omission from the foregoing should be supplied—viz., that the thin but vigorous body which sustained Major Buchanan's heroic soul was so perforated by missiles from the enemy that his prolonged life was miraculous.—EDITOR.]

HENRY C. DENTON.

Henry Denton was born in Effingham County, Ga., on August 8, 1841. His father, John B. Denton, moved with his family to Florida in 1850 and settled near Gainesville.

After Florida seceded, on January 10, 1861, one of the first commands organized was Capt. William Chambers's troop of cavalry. In this command Henry C. Denton enlisted. The troop was stationed for a while at Fernandina, Fla., and while there became very proficient in cavalry maneuvers, and was regarded as one of the best-drilled organizations in the State.

As there was very little activity in military operations there during the first year of the war, young Denton grew impatient and with a patriotic desire for active service in May, 1861 he enlisted in Company D, 7th Florida Infantry, then commanded by Col. M. S. Perry.

This regiment, together with the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th, i June, 1862, was sent to the West, going directly to Chattanooga, Tenn.; thence to Knoxville, and from there into Kentucky, taking part in the Kentucky campaign. The command was engaged in many important battles, including that of Chickamauga in September, 1863, the battle of Missionary Ridge in November, 1863, Resaca, Ga., in 1864, and the many severe engagements extending beyond Atlanta to Jonesboro and Lovejoy. In the battle of July 22 near Atlanta he was captured and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he remained until the close of the war.

Comrade Denton was elected collector of revenue for the county of Alachua, and held that office for a number of years. After remaining in private life for about a year, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and held that office until January 3, 1905, when he refused a reelection.

The few brave men who served with him bear uniform testimony as to his soldierly bearing, his bravery in battle, and gentlemanly conduct during those trying days of cruel and relentless war. He never shirked, and was ever willing to relieve a suffering comrade. His children cherish with pardonable pride the priceless legacy which he has transmitted to them.

On November 11, 1907, he died at his home, in Gainesville, Fla. The next day the funeral services were held in the First Presbyterian Church. The stores closed during the services, and the Circuit Court, being in session, adjourned out of respect to his memory.

MAJ. FELIX G. BUCHANAN.

JUDGE JOHN S. WILKES.

John Summerfield Wilkes was born in Culleoka, Maury County, Tenn., March 2, 1841; and died in Pulaski February 2, 1908. The father of Judge Wilkes, Hon. Richard A. L. Wilkes, was a prominent citizen of Maury County and reared a large family. He was public-spirited and aided in the erection of a church on one side of his farm and a school-house on the other. He served four terms in his State Legislature. He taught his sons to be brave and patriotic, and six of them enlisted early in the Confederate army. The mother, who was Judith Harris, left home with her husband, going South because of the hardships and privations to which they were subjected at home.

Judge Wilkes was educated at the school established by his father, at Florence, Ala., and under a private teacher in Nashville.

Upon the outbreak of the war he went to Pulaski, and on May 7, 1861, enlisted in the company raised by Hon. John C. Brown, which became the first company (A) of Brown's 3d Tennessee Infantry. That regiment was organized at Lynnville May 16, 1861. [Captain

Brown was then chosen colonel, and speedily advanced to brigadier and then to major general. Subsequent to the war he was chosen to the State Constitutional Convention, was elected Governor of Tennessee, and became a useful and forceful man of affairs.]

Comrade Wilkes was made commissary sergeant of the regiment under his brother, Capt. R. L. Wilkes, and in that capacity was developed his high efficiency as an accountant noted in his subsequent career. The regiment was in the surrender of Fort Donelson, and on being sent to prison the brothers were separated. Captain Wilkes, commissary, was sent to Camp Chase, where he died, and John S. was sent to Camp Douglas.

In the reorganization of the regiment, at Jackson, Miss., on September 26, John S. Wilkes was chosen to the position that had been held by his deceased brother. So efficient was Capt. John S. Wilkes in the position as commissary that he was retained in a more important relation; and to him was assigned the gathering of supplies over a large territory in Tennessee and Mississippi, a position that he filled efficiently to the close of the war, when he was paroled at Aberdeen. It was there that he met and wooed Miss Florence A. Barker, to whom he was soon married, and the union was a most happy one to the end.

Locating in Pulaski, Captain Wilkes read law, studying in the office of General Brown. He became a law partner with Judge A. J. Abernathy, and later with General Brown. When General Brown became Governor, he selected Captain Wilkes as his secretary and ex-officio attorney-general. There was much confusion in the order of things in those offices; but the painstaking Wilkes, by accuracy of plans and diligence in service, arranged them systematically. This service being done at a time when much legislation was had in regard to the State debts, he became so conspicuously familiar with its finances that he was ever afterwards considered the best authority on the subject. Afterwards Captain Wilkes was officially connected with banking interests in Pulaski, and later he and Governor Brown engaged in the practice of law together.

JUDGE J. S. WILKES.

In 1875, when Governor Brown was called to the service of the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company by Tom Scott, of national reputation as builder and operator of railroads, Captain Wilkes acquired the law practice of the firm, and not only maintained but increased it. In 1886, however, Governor Brown, as receiver of the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, secured the services of Captain Wilkes as treasurer, which took him from his State for the time and required the relinquishment of his law practice. In this position he handled millions of dollars, and was greatly helpful to his chief in restoring the road to the stockholders. On leaving Texas a magnificent testimonial was given to Captain Wilkes in appreciation of his services.

Captain Wilkes succeeded Governor Brown as President of the Board of Trust of Martin College, an institution founded by Mr. Martin, father of the late Mrs. O. M. Spofford, and to this Captain Wilkes devoted his best energies for its success. He returned to Pulaski in 1889 and resumed the practice of law.

In 1893, when Chief Justice Peter Turney became Governor of Tennessee, his first official act was to appoint Captain Wilkes to the vacancy in the Supreme Court. This appointment removed Judge Wilkes from the practice of law, for he was elected to succeed himself in 1894 and in 1902, which high office he held until his death. He soon became known and esteemed as indeed a judge "learned in the law." It is said that he almost knew the code from memory.

Judge Wilkes is survived by his wife, two daughters (Mrs. W. B. Romine and Mrs. Furman Hooper), two sons (John B. and Stewart), and three grandchildren; also by one brother (James H. Wilkes, of Nashville) and a sister (Mrs. John T. Steele, of Washington, D. C.).

The John H. Woodridge Camp, U. C. V., of Pulaski, officiated at his burial, designating that as a soldier he was "true and tried." The funeral was largely attended, all of his associates and other jurists being present.

[The foregoing is from a memorial by Hon. Z. W. Ewing, of Pulaski.]

OAKLEY.—The passing of another loyal Confederate woman is announced in the death of Mrs. Timothy Oakley on January 3, at the age of sixty-eight years. The golden wedding with her husband was celebrated in July. Comrade Oakley was a member of Camp Henry Gray, of Timothy, La.

HARRIS.—John T. Harris was born in Troup County, Ga., sixty-seven years ago. He served in Company F, known as the Claiborne Guards, Captain Bly, of the 4th Louisiana Regiment, Hays's Brigade. He made a good soldier; and was ever a good citizen after his return from Appomattox. He died at Homer, La., in August, 1907, leaving his aged companion and grown children to mourn his death.

JOSEPH WARREN GILMAN.

A typical Confederate in every way was Comrade Joseph W. Gilman, who died at his home, in Nashville, February 7, 1908. Born in the same county (Davidson) January 22, 1842, he had lived in this city nearly two-thirds of a century, over half of which time he was connected with the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company. On May 11, 1861, he enlisted in Col. James E. Rains's regiment, the 11th Tennessee, and did valiant service during the entire war of the sixties. He was twice wounded—in the battles of Resaca and Jonesboro, Ga.—and was paroled May 13, 1865, thereby having served the Confederacy four years and two days.

A devoted husband and father—to the only child, Miss Nellie Gilman—and an earnest member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, he was widely known and esteemed

JOSEPH W. GILMAN.

The family were at nearly every Reunion held by the U. C. V. up to the last at Richmond, and are as delightfully remembered doubtless as any family group of Confederates. The joy of the mother and daughter and the pride of the father on such occasions will identify them to many. Widespread sympathy is felt for the wife and daughter.

McCLINTON.—Joseph H. McClinton died at the Confederate Home, near Little Rock, Ark., on January 29, 1908. He went to the Home from Bentonville about two years ago, having been a resident of Benton County for twenty-five years and had served two terms as sheriff of the county. He was married to Miss Sallie Bryant in 1881, who was a near relative of the great American poet, William Cullen Bryant. Bad health and other misfortunes had reduced him in his old days.

WILLIAM JAMES ROGERS.

On the 9th of January William J. Rogers breathed his last at the home of his son, Charles P. Rogers, at DeLong Terrace, Lexington, Ky., aged sixty-five years. The interment was at Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Ky. He is survived by two sons, Messrs. Charles P. and J. Will Rogers, of Lexington.

Comrade Rogers' was a soldier of the Civil War, he and a younger brother, John (now Judge Rogers, of the Federal court in Arkansas), having enlisted in March, 1862, at Canton, Miss., in the Semmes Rifles, commanded by Capt. Hugh Love. This company soon after became Company H, 9th Mississippi Regiment Infantry, Chalmers's Brigade, Army of Tennessee. Both brothers were wounded at Munfordville, Ky., and W. J. Rogers was sent North to prison. After being exchanged, though disabled for infantry service and discharged, he immediately joined the 1st Mississippi Cavalry, in Armstrong's Brigade, was made orderly sergeant of his company, and served through the war under Wheeler and Forrest.

The romance of his life occurred near the spot where he was wounded and captured. The deadly missiles of battle passed over the country home of the "girl he left behind him," Miss Martha L. Lewis, who afterwards became his wife and the mother of his children. Though bereft of her by death for more than thirty years, his last thoughts were of this beloved companion of his early manhood, and her name was among the last on his lips.

The death of this good man is a loss deeply felt in his community, where, though known only in the quiet walks of life, he had endeared himself through his kind and lovable nature.

MAJ. ROBERT ALLEN ALLISON.

"Of no distemper, of no blast he died,
But fell like Autumn fruit that mellowed long."

—Dryden.

At his home, at Winona, Miss., on January 9, passed to his reward Maj. Robert Allen Allison, aged seventy-one years, one month, and twelve days. Major Allison had had a severe spell of pneumonia during the fall of 1907, from which he had never fully recovered. On the day the summons of the grim reaper reached him he had expressed himself as feeling even better than usual and had spent some time in his office. After gently protesting to the anxious ministrations of his always devoted wife that he was "all right," he seated himself in a reclining chair, and almost immediately and without a struggle quietly passed away. It was truly a fitting end to his long, gentle, and unobtrusive life, evidencing even in his last hours the same earnest devotion to duty, the same courteous regard for those about him, the same gentle self-effacement and brave self-control that had characterized his whole life.

Robert Allen Allison, the second son of Andrew and Rebecca Allison, was born at the home of his maternal grandfather, Robert Allen (who was a distinguished officer of the War of 1812), in Carthage, Tenn., on November 28, 1836. He graduated at Cumberland University, in Lebanon, in the class of 1857, and soon thereafter became associated with his father and elder brother in the wholesale trade of Nashville. In early boyhood he became a member of the Presbyterian Church, and even at that early age manifested that piety of heart and purity of mind that distinguished him throughout his entire life. His faith was ever that of a child trusting a good and tender father, and his service to his Church was faithful as member, deacon, and elder.

In February, 1861, he married Miss Belle Kelso, of Lincoln County, Tenn., a beautiful and noted belle, and entered upon that loving and tender companionship for which his loving heart and exquisitely refined nature so eminently fitted him and which was ended only with his death in her arms after almost a half century of ideal love and devotion.

In the very morning of his wedded life, with a brilliant and successful business career just opening before him, with the tender kiss of his firstborn upon his lips, he heard the call of his country to her sons, and, turning aside from all thought of personal pleasure, sternly set his face to duty, sprang to her defense, and enlisted in the Provisional Army of Tennessee in the early spring of 1861. When the State seceded and the State troops were transferred to the army of the Confederacy, he was made adjutant on the staff of that distinguished preacher-soldier, Col. Wyley M. Ried, in whose Church he had long been a devoted member, and remained with him until his chief fell, in the forefront at Shiloh.

Upon the reorganization of the army after Shiloh he went to Lincoln County, saw his girl wife with her baby, and assisted in the organization and equipment of a company for the mounted artillery service, and marched them one hundred and ten strong, on their own horses and furnished with their own uniforms, side arms, camp furniture, and rations, to Lavergne, where they were sworn into the service and offered themselves to that "Wizard of the Saddle," Gen. N. B. Forrest. But, alas for the poverty of the cause upon the altar of which they had offered themselves! there were no guns for them, and the only thing to be done was for officers and privates alike to take service in the ranks and, as the grim chieftain expressed it, "wait until they could capture a battery." This they manfully did, and thus became a part of that glorious troop

"Whose hoof beats die not on fame's crimsoned sod,

But will ring through her song and her story,

For they fought like Titans and struck like gods,

And their dust is our ashes of glory."

Nor was it long until the General's promise was made good, for in little more than two weeks they captured a full battery, and in this battery he served as sergeant until captured, in 1863. After his capture, he was carried to Nashville and placed in the penitentiary, where he found as fellow-prisoners his elder brother and an uncle, and that his mother and sisters were being held under guard in their home as prisoners.

From Nashville he was sent to Camp Chase, near Columbus, Ohio, and finally to Castle Thunder, near Baltimore, and thence to City Point, on the Potomac, from which place he was exchanged and sent South. The deprivations of prison life had so undermined his health that he was ordered to report to Gen. Joseph E. Johnston for staff duty, and was at once assigned as assistant to Maj. W. H. Warren, chief ordnance officer of the Army of Tennessee. But he had hardly assumed his duties when he was stricken with a most malignant attack of typhoid pneumonia and sent back to Marietta, Ga. It was then that his young wife, at her home in Fayetteville, learned of his whereabouts and condition, and at once set out in a buggy across the disorganized and lawless country, filled with roaming and desperate bands of bushwhackers, guerrillas, and stragglers from both armies, to his bedside. After four days and nights of almost continuous travel and through many dangers and hardships, she reached Rome, where she got a train for Marietta, where she found her husband on the very brink of the grave, and where through ten weeks of loving devotion she nursed him back to health.

Upon sufficiently recovering to be able to travel he was assigned to the staff of Gen. Leonidas Polk as assistant chief ordnance officer; but the very day after he reported for duty General Polk was killed, and Gen. Alexander P. Stewart,

MAJ. ROBERT A. ALLISON.

Major Allison's old and beloved preceptor at Cumberland University, was promoted to the command of the corps, and it was under him that he served in an unchanged position until the final surrender at Greensboro, N. C., his commission as major reaching him at Smithfield, N. C., only a few days before that sad event.

He was one of the founders and long the President of John Ingram Bivouac at Jackson, Tenn., his comrades in which, in pursuance of his often expressed wish, conducted the last sad rites over his grave.

In childhood and youth a devoted and dutiful son, a loving and tender brother, a genial and charming companion, he entered manhood rich in those high qualities that ripened with his years and gained for him the love and respect of all with whom he was brought in contact.

Returning to his home, in Nashville, after the surrender, he gathered the small remnants of his scattered and wasted resources, and with a smile upon his lips and resolution in his heart he set about the upbuilding of his fortune. Re-entering business in Nashville, he was soon attracted by the development of the Southwest, and in 1867 moved to Memphis, and in connection with his brothers established a large and successful business there. He subsequently moved to St. Louis, and from there to Jackson, Tenn., and thence to Winona, Miss., where he resided until the final settlement of his earthly accounts. In all these places and in all the relations of life he was always the same high-toned gentleman and consecrated Christian. Modest and retiring, he sought no prominence or public position; but his character and talents made him a leader in every field he entered and forced upon him many positions of trust and honor in his Church and in business affairs, the duties of which were always discharged with noted faithfulness. Broad and catholic in his convictions, he was always tolerant of the opinions of others, but firm and unalterable wherever a principle was involved. His home life was ideal in its beauty and purity; and when his gentle spirit winged its flight to its home in heaven, he left behind him a void not only in the hearts of his mourning family but in the community, and gave to all who come after him an example whose ennobling influence will be felt as long as honor, Christian virtue, and high character are known.

And when it is remembered how fully, even from his boyhood days, he had been consecrated to his Master's service and in every event of his life had faithfully heeded his voice, it is easy to understand how, when the summons fell upon his attentive ears, the things of this life receded from his view, and the great white light of that other world broke upon him, his soul rose within him and his lips sent forth the happy answer: "It is all right! It is all right!"

JOSEPH McADAM BROWN.

Joseph McAdam Brown, one of the best-known and leading lawyers of West Virginia, died December 12, 1907, at his home, in Madison, Boone County, of paralysis, with which he was attacked a few days before. The remains were conveyed to Charleston, and the funeral services were held at St. John's Episcopal Church, conducted by Rev. Dr. Roller, the rector.

Captain Brown's death was a great surprise. Only the week previous he attended the Federal court and conducted the famous Boone County land case, and seemed in the best of health.

The deceased was born in Loudoun County, Va., December 23, 1835. He and his brother, Maj. T. L. Brown, of Charleston, W. Va., located in Kanawha County before the Civil War. After the war Captain Brown returned to this city, where for a number of years he practiced law and became one of the best-known attorneys in the State. He was educated at the University of Virginia. He was never married, and is survived by his brother, Maj. Thomas L. Brown, and one sister, Mrs. Susan J. Stevens, of Asheville, N. C.

Captain Brown was a member of the Kanawha Riflemen, a well-known company formed in Kanawha County that embarked for the war in May, 1861, and was composed chiefly of lawyers, doctors, and other prominent young men.

Joseph M. Brown in August, 1861, was made captain and quartermaster to the 3d Regiment in Wise Legion when stationed on Big Sewell Mountain, West Virginia (subsequently called the 6th Virginia Regiment), and ordered to the South Carolina coast. Captain Brown continued in the service of the Confederate army until the surrender at Appomattox, in April, 1865.

Many other "Last Roll" sketches are waiting. Contributors to this department must be brief.

THE TENNESSEE DIVISION, U. D. C.

BY MRS. JUDITH WINSTON PILCHER, PRESIDENT, NASHVILLE.

I am in receipt of a letter from Dr. T. C. DeLeon, of Mobile, celebrated as one of the South's great writers, in which he makes a suggestion that a movement be inaugurated among the Daughters of the Confederacy of the Tennessee Division looking to a practical memorial to James R. Randall, the loved author of some of the immortal war songs of the South. To mention no other, his "Maryland, My Maryland" will live in song and story as long as literature shall last and as long as hearts are stirred. It is indissolubly interwoven with the precious memories of the fateful days of the sixties; it fired the Southern heart to patriotic fervor and to deeds of valor as no other song of that dramatic period. Who can tell how many of our heroes went from the field of honor to their graves uplifted by the martial strains of this inspired melody?

It is wisely suggested that this memorial should be a practical one. The death of Mr. Randall, only a few weeks ago, has left his family absolutely without support, and it is proposed that the memorial shall take the form of substantial contributions to their aid. It would be a reproach to the South that the family of the author of "Maryland, My Maryland" should be in need and their needs unanswered. I cannot feel otherwise than that the suggestion is a timely and appropriate one, and I lay it before the U. D. C. of Tennessee, with the earnest hope that it will meet with a prompt and warm response from them. I would suggest that every Chapter in the State open at once its separate voluntary subscription list for sums of any size, and all sums with or without name of donor to be handed its Secretary.

If Tennessee opens heart and purse to this appeal, I feel sure that other States will join her and a memorial of practical value will have been accomplished by a grateful people.

[DeLeon's appeal is general to the South. He thinks Georgia should give most.—EDITOR VETERAN.]

GOVERNOR SWANSON, OF VIRGINIA, FAVORS CONFEDERATES.—Veterans from everywhere South who attended the Richmond Reunion in 1907 and heard the brilliant young Governor Swanson will not be surprised but pleased at his recommendations in behalf of the Confederates in his message to the Legislature. After setting forth a pleasing condition of finances in Virginia, he says: "I recommend that the pensions paid to the most disabled, dependent, and deserving classes be increased, and that a larger appropriation for this purpose be made. I also recommend that the work of collecting Confederate records, of collating and preserving the materials of our war history, be continued." He also urges that an appropriation be made to erect a suitable monument on the battlefield of Gettysburg "to commemorate the glory and the heroism of Virginia troops who participated in that engagement."

COMMENT UPON "LEE AND HIS CAUSE."—Mrs. M. C. Robinson writes from Harrodsburg, Ky., to Dr. Deering: "Your book, 'Lee and His Cause,' lies before me, and I can truthfully say that next to the Bible I prize it above all books. I have been enlightened, as will be all who read its pages, for it is the only true record of the 'great conflict.' If I could, I would place it on the shelf of every library, that succeeding generations might know the truth."

The writer in her enthusiasm is severe upon other authors.

"THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT" NOW READY.

We have just published a work entitled "The American Government," edited by H. C. Gauss, Esq., a trained journalist, at present Private Secretary to Attorney-General Bonaparte.

This book gives a list of all offices of sufficient importance to be filled by presidential appointment subject to confirmation by the Senate and a complete statement of the powers and duties pertaining to each office and the salary attached.

This book contains information upon points of law, procedure, and custom not known to many of even the best-informed citizens. Not many know that the terms of the Postmaster General and the Comptroller of the Currency extend a month beyond the term of the President who appointed them, and that the Postmaster General, unlike other Cabinet officers, can be removed by the President only with the consent of the Senate. Few know that United States Senators and Representatives have a right to select, subject to the passing of examinations, cadets in the Naval Academy, but have no such right with reference to the Military Academy, for which their selections are merely advisory, the President having the sole power of appointment. Such and hundreds of other facts are brought out in this useful volume.

Americans who travel would gladly know the duties and powers of the American Ambassador and Minister, the Consul General and the American Consul, what their duties are not only to the government they represent but to American citizens who visit the countries to which they are accredited.

Recently a famous New Yorker lost a suit in the United States Circuit Court involving more than $100,000. He desired to appeal it to the Supreme Court of the United States; but was astounded at being told by his lawyers that they were not sure that he could appeal it, and to his astonishment the Supreme Court refused to hear the case. Now this book tells just what cases can be heard in United States courts and the jurisdiction of each court, and also covers all points likely to come up about the government and its officials in all their relations at home and abroad. It is a book of reference for American citizens and for foreigners who desire full and authentic information concerning the United States government.

The book contains nine hundred pages, bound in half morocco, and the price is $5. Address L. R. Hamersly & Co., 1 West 34th St., New York.

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY GRADUATES.

Mr. Charles W. McAlpin, Secretary, writes the VETERAN from Princeton, N. J.:

"A new edition of the general catalogue of graduates, former students, and honorary graduates of Princeton University is being prepared by the secretary. To aid him in completing the records already in his possession and in getting fresh material, graduates, former students, recipients of higher or honorary degrees, and all others who have in any way or at any time been connected with Princeton are requested to forward full biographical data. Friends and relatives of deceased graduates and former students are especially urged to assist in supplying data which the university cannot otherwise obtain. Of particular importance are dates of birth and death, degrees received, and public offices held, whether civil or military.

"Special effort is being made to complete and correct the military records of Princetonians who served in the Confederate army, with dates of enlistment, promotions, mustering out, death, etc. In this effort the help of Southern members and friends of the university is earnestly sought.

"Spanish War records are also requested, and any personal biographical details will be gratefully acknowledged."

All communications should be addressed to Mr. McAlpin.

The fact that nearly half of the undergraduate body at the time of the Civil War was Southern in affiliation makes it very important that Southerners give attention to the above.

"AT READY"

Confederate Statues in Bronze

We furnish Statues for ALL KINDS
of Monuments

Write Us For Prices,
Designs,
etc.

American Bronze Foundry Co.

73rd and Woodland Ave. - - - Chicago, Ill.

Confederate Echoes

(OUR ABIDING CONFEDERACY)

By REV. A. T. GOODLOE, M.D.

"I hope for this book many readers. I am sure the reading of it will tend to conserve and preserve the traditions of the elders, and crystallize sentiment for that noble band, the Sons and Sires of the Old South—the noblest type of which the pen of historian, bard, or poet ever sang."—Mrs. Sue F. Mooney.

12mo. Cloth. 452 Pages. Price, $1.00

ORDER FROM

SMITH & LAMAR, Nashville, Tenn.,

OR FROM

A. T. GOODLOE, Nashville, Tenn. (R. F. D. No. 6).

AGENTS WANTED

New Orleans . . .

"THE GATEWAY OF THE MISSISSIPPI." The Great City of the Great South. The Largest Cotton, Rice, and Sugar Market in the World.

The Most Popular Winter Resort in America

Continuous Horse Racing, Golf Links, Hunting and Fishing. Comfort, Health, Pleasure. Eleven Theaters.

New St. Charles Hotel

Modern, Fireproof, First-Class. Accommodating One Thousand Guests. Turkish, Russian, Roman, and Plain Baths. Luxurious Sun Baths and Palm Garden.

ANDREW R. BLAKELY & COMPANY, Ltd., Proprietors

Mr. M. G. Vardell, Austin, Tex., requests that any survivors of Company B, 17th Alabama Regiment, who surrendered with him at the close of the war at Greensboro, N. C., will write to him. He says that, according to his best recollections, there were twelve of the company there.

Mrs. M. A. Robertson, Boyd, Tex., Box 3, wishes to hear from some comrade of her husband, N. P. Robertson, who can testify as to his service. He was commonly called Nat by his comrades. He enlisted from Cobb County, Ga., in Phillips's Legion, and served three years. His widow is old and needs a pension.

T. J. Wellons, Plant City, Fla., wishes to get in communication with any surviving comrades of E. W. Norwood, now dead, who was a member of a company commanded by Jim or Tom Tibbs, from Morton, Scott County, Miss., and belonging to one of the regiments of Armstrong's Cavalry Brigade. He wishes to secure a pension for Comrade Norwood's widow.

S. H. Trim, of Middleton, Tenn., was a member of Company B, 41st Alabama Regiment, and lost both legs at Bermuda Hundreds, near Richmond, Va. He would like to hear from any survivors of his own company or comrades generally.

Mrs. Josephine McLin, Tallahassee, Fla., is anxious to communicate with any surviving comrades of her father, William Jackson Glidewell; his discharge papers having been lost, she wishes to secure information that will establish his record. He was from: Lynn County, Tex., and was enrolled at Arkadelphia, Ark., as a member of a company made up by detail under Captain Poleys, which company was ordered to Marshall, Tex. Later part of Poleys's company was sent to Tyler, Tex., with Colonel Hill in command. This company was made up of men detailed from different parts of the country for the purpose of manufacturing small arms, and was disbanded by Colonel Hill at Tyler after the general surrender. William Glidewell was crippled while fighting fire in the government shops at Arkadelphia; and after being in the hospital a long time, he was out on furlough from General Price until able to return to active service, when he went to Marshall, Tex., and then to Tyler, as before stated, under command of Colonel Hill. His daughter will appreciate response from any of his officers or comrades of the service.

Every now and then a subscriber will neglect to give his address when sending remittance to the VETERAN, and it is almost impossible to locate him in a list of many thousands. Two late remittances came that way from William Curl and J. J. Robertson, no State or post office being given. Friends, let us hear from you with proper address, and other friends please be careful to give full address when writing.

The Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company

Agencies Throughout the World

PHOTOGRAVURE

Robert E. Lee

General in chief C. S. A. 1862-1865.
From original photograph taken in 1863.

A Perfect Likeness of the Great
General. Every Southerner
should possess one.

MISS MARY CUSTIS LEE: "It is the best full-face likeness of him."

GEN. FREDERICK D. GRANT: "An interesting likeness of that distinguished officer."

GEN. SAMUEL G. FRENCH: "The best one of him to be obtained."

ROBERT E. LEE Camp, No. 1, Richmond, Va.: "A splendid likeness of our old Commander."

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR
Mailed Free.

Ambrose Lee Publishing Co.,
Williamsbridge, New York City.

Orders and remittances may also be sent for this picture to S. A. Cunningham, CONFED-
ERATE VETERAN, Nashville, Tenn.

The Direct Route to

Washington
Baltimore
Philadelphia
New York and
all Eastern Cities
from the South
and Southwest

is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to

Richmond
Norfolk, and all
Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
Roanoke, Va.

DOCTOR
Tichenor's
Antiseptic

No MORE TIRED FEET

After using
Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic

It promptly and effectively relieves Sore, Chafed Tired, Aching feet.
The soothing coolness felt immediately upon application is indeed grateful—it is not greasy and "feels good on the feet."
Use it tonight — you will be delighted.

All Druggists 25 and 50 cts.

ASK ANY ONE WHO HAS EVER USED IT!

CORSET COVER

On fine nainsook, stamped front and back for Wallachian Embroidery, complete with material to work it, 75 cents, postpaid. Other designs for French or Eyelet. Beautiful waist designs on sheer Perstan Lawn, $1, postpaid.

Embroidered garments will be worn more than ever this summer. Now is the time to work them.
Send in your order—just tell us what you want.
We guarantee satisfaction.

THE ARTS SHOP, Nashville, Tenn.

H. D. Watts, Americus, Ga.: "In the list of Confederate dead buried on Johnson's Island as published in the February VETERAN appears the name of Capt. J. U. D. King, Company K, 9th
Georgia Infantry, which should be J.
M. D. King. I was a member of Captain King's company, which was organized in Americus, Ga., and left for the war on the 11th of June, 1861, and became a part of the 9th Georgia Regiment in Atlanta, proceeding at once to Virginia. Captain King was wounded on the 2d of July, 1863, at Gettysburg, and carried to Johnson's Island, where he died."

Mrs. E. A. Sanderson, Groesbeck,
Tex., would like to hear from two comrades of her husband, E. Sanderson,
Company G, 23d Regiment, Alabama
Volunteers. He enlisted July 20, 1864, and was discharged March 24, 1865. He was born in Washington County, Ark.

Curtis Green, Oglesby, Tex., lacks only the first six numbers of the VET-ERAN to complete his file, and is willing to pay a good price for them. Write him in advance of sending.

An unfortunate error was made in the February number in giving the address of Mrs. E. L. Freer as Clinton, Tenn., when it should have been Clifton, Tenn.
She is the worthy widow of a veteran, an invalid confined to her room, and seeks to make her support by securing subscriptions to different magazines, of which the VETERAN is one. Daughters of the Confederacy and others can help a worthy woman by sending their subscriptions to her to be forwarded to the publications wanted.

J. W. Shook, 940 New York Life Building, Kansas City, Mo., would like to obtain the names and addresses of any of the survivors of Maj. Dick Martin's Independent Battalion of Mounted Texas Infantry, C. S. A., especially those of Company D.

Mrs. Lon Dickey, of Fitzgerald, Ga., wishes to ascertain the company and regiment in which her father served during the war. He was Capt. Julius Warren Boyd, and was a first lieutenant in the Telfair Volunteers from Telfair County, Ga., and was later promoted to the rank of captain.

If afflicted with
SORE EYES Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

ATTENTION OF

Commanders and Adjutants of U. C. V. Camps, Presidents and Historians of U. D. C. Chapters, Commanders and Adjutants of G. A. R. Posts is called to the Lists and Records of Army and Navy Officers, Regiments, Campaigns, Battles, etc., in General Marcus J. Wright's

"TENNESSEE IN THE WAR, 1861-1865"

JUST PUBLISHED

Order from local Booksellers, the "Veteran," or direct from

AMBROSE LEE PUBLISHING CO., Williamsbridge, N. Y. City

PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to any address

YOU CAN Test Your Own Eyes

With this Eye Meter, which we will be glad to send you FREE

You can do it as well as an oculist. After you have made the test and reported, we will make to your measure a pair of Toricoid Glasses, at manufacturer's price—much lower than retail price. If glasses are not satisfactory, you may return them and we will refund the money. We take all risks. Write to-day for the Toricoid Eye Meter, and it will be sent free by return mail.

TORICOID OPTICAL CO.
Manufacturing Opticians
671 4th Ave. Louisville, Ky.

Handsome Picture Gen. Robert E. Lee

The Cotton Belt has a few copies left of the famous, full length picture of Gen. Lee in full uniform, standing hat in hand, which is considered one of the best likenesses of Gen. Lee ever painted. Below the picture is Gen. Lee's farewell address.

While they last this handsome picture, imprinted on heavy stock, 12 1/2 x 18 in., representing oil painting, suitable for framing, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin.

Returned Battle Flags

A beautiful 56 page book, reproducing, in natural colors, the returned Confederate battle flags of many regiments will be sent upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin. Address:

E. W. LaBeaume, G. P. & T. A.,

1540 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

St. Louis, Mo.

TEXAS THE PLACE

TEXAS is the BEST STATE for the HOMESEEKER. Fertile Lands, Diversified Crops, Farming all the year. Health, Climate, Schools and Churches.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway traverses the best portion. Send 2-cent stamp for Folder and Information.

GEO. F. LUPTON, G. P. A.
San Antonio, Texas.

Catarrh, Asthma

CURED WHILE YOU SLEEP

E. C. C. Catarrh-Asthma Cure

Will Cure You. Costs Two or Three Cents a day if you are satisfied, and nothing if you are not.

Is perfectly Harmless, Convenient, Agreeable, and Marvelously Certain.

Succeeds because it Combines Common Sense Method with Right Medicine.

The Medicine is the discovery of an Eminent Physician, improved by us through years of study and experience.

The Instrument of its application is the best ever devised, and is our patent.

Its Cures of CATARRH won for it long ago the name of "The Little Wonder." Its Cures of ASTHMA have been most astounding.

For BRONCHITIS, HAY FEVER, THROAT AND LUNG TROUBLES it is unrivalled. Cures COLDS and prevents Pneumonia.

BAD BREATH it has never failed to correct. It Cures INCIPIENT DEAFNESS and restores LOST SENSE OF SMELL. It lays the Healing Balm directly, CONTINUOUSLY on the sore spot, whether at the top or the bottom of the breathing organs. You change your climate without leaving your country.

It does not hinder the breathing, and can be regulated to any force desired. It has always been sold under STRICT GUARANTEE—a Legal Paper which would have ruined us long ago but for the astonishing Reliability of the Remedy.

We offer you Overwhelming Testimonials, but you will need none, since the thing will speak directly to your Common Sense.

AMPLE TRIAL to all that ask. Full information SENT FREE.

Write to-day, as you may not see this again. Address

E. C. C. CATARRH-ASTHMA CURE, 1540 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

SHOPPING BY MAIL

MISSSES GOLDBACH AND SMITH
PURCHASING AGENTS

THE MIDLOTHIAN, 353 WEST 117TH ST.,
NEW YORK CITY

Can we shop for you in New York? WHOLESALE PRICES, up-to-date styles in all imported and domestic merchandise. Write for samples, circulars, and advice. References furnished.

A beautifully colored work of art 6 1/2 x 9 1/2. "THE CONQUERED BANNER," with poem. Suitable for framing. Every Southern home should have one. Only 10c. with stamp. Write your address distinctly. C. WAGNER, 205 West 91st St.,
New York City.

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of

Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

U.S.A.
LONDON, ENGLAND.

NEW YORK, N.Y.

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

APRIL, 1908.

NO. 4.

BIRMINGHAM REUNION, JUNE 9, 10, 11.

CHURCH OF THE REDEEMER, BILOXI, MISS. "The South's Westminster Abbey."
(See pages 174-176.)

YOU CAN Test Your Own Eyes

With this Eye Meter, which we will be glad to send you FREE

You can do it as well as an oculist. After you have made the test and reported, we will make to your measure a pair of Toricoid Glasses, at manufacturer's price—much lower than retail price. If glasses are not satisfactory, you may return them and we will refund the money. We take all risks. Write to-day for the Toricoid Eye Meter, and it will be sent free by return mail.

TORICOID OPTICAL CO.
Manufacturing Opticians
671 4th Ave. Louisville, Ky.

The Direct Route to

Washington
Baltimore
Philadelphia
New York and
all Eastern Cities
from the South
and Southwest

is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to

Richmond
Norfolk, and all
Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
Roanoke, Va.

STUART'S CAVALRY IN THE GETTYSBURG CAMPAIGN.

By John L. Mosby. Price, $2

DIXIE BOOK SHOP

41 Liberty Street New York

THE ALTERNATIVE.

When the Federal troops held a large portion of Southern territory and by the use of the torch had made it so bare of food that, to repeat the declaration of a Federal general, "A crow flying over it must carry its rations or starve," it became necessary for many of the women of the ruined districts, whose loved ones were making that memorable defense of Richmond, to apply in person to the authors of their distress for food. These requests were not granted unless the applicant swore allegiance to the government of the United States. A statuette, "Taking the Oath," which was presented to the Turner Ashby Camp, C. V., some years ago, represents one of these women in the act of taking the oath, her child and her little negro servant standing by.

With downcast eyes the matron stands,
With mien dejected, empty hands.

She asks for bread.
Her child, her servant, hungry-eyed,
In mute appeal, stand by her side—
Her hopes are dead.

A vision of a happy land
And a devoted patriot band
To her appears,
Their cause triumphant in the right;
Then quickly fades upon her sight
Through mists of tears.

She asks for bread; the price they name
Should bring the crimson blush of shame
To brow and cheek,
And keep it burning just as long
As tyrants, brutalized and strong,
Oppress the weak.

The almoner, dispensing food
With hand reluctant, selfish mood,
Demands that she
Forswear allegiance to her land,
To him who holds her heart and hand,
In simple fee.

"Renounce your birthright, aid no more
Your former friends, close thou the door
Against thy kin;
Else go and suffer, die in need.
Rebellious ones we may not feed;
'Twould be a sin."

Now wrong prevails, the deed is done;
The hungry children's tears have won,
They now may live.
Will she be held to strict account?
Will God demand the full amount?
Or absolution give?

BEST ROUTE TO U. C. V. Reunion

AT BIRMINGHAM

IS VIA

No trouble to answer questions
Through Chair Cars and Sleepers

E. P. TURNER, Gen. Pass. Agt.
DALLAS, TEX.

"Blofil" Self-Filling Fountain Pen Genuine Hard Rubber Holder 14 K. Solid Gold Pen

Our pen is thoroughly up-to-date, and contains all the latest improvements. Cannot leak. Does good work. Delights all users. Every pen sent out is guaranteed to be in first-class condition, and to write perfectly. Price, postpaid, $1.50. Equal to any $4 pen on the market. Send for one to-day; it will please you. Address

TIDD & COMPANY
106 Church St. Mobile, Ala.

A beautifully colored work of art
6½ x 9½. "THE CONQUERED BANNER," with poem. Suitable for framing. Every Southern home should have one. Only 10c. with stamp. Write your address distinctly.
C. WAGNER, 205 West 91st St.,
New York City.

THE WAY TO WIN HER

A booklet for every man. By Eugene
L. Didier.

THE WAY TO WIN HIM

A booklet for every woman.

Each one dime, postpaid. Address
AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

Trust Him who dries the orphans' tears
And notes our sorrows, hopes, and fears,
Our trials sore.
He'll pardon her, though she, still true
To motherland and kindred too,
Should love them more.

PICKETT'S SWORD.

BY T. C. HARBAUGH.

As bright as when he drew it first
The sword of Pickett shines—
The blade that caught the sunlight fair
Before the gray-clad lines:
He drew it from its honored sheath
Where bullets fell like rain
And laid it down when all was o'er,
A sword without a stain.

For his beloved South he drew
That valiant battle blade,
And where it gleamed among the pines
Was seen his old brigade:
In tattered coats of cherished gray
The old ranks stood alone;
On many a field that's far away
The sword of Pickett shone.

Where roared the foemen's hundred guns
The ranks of death to fill,
That battle blade led bravely on
To Cemetery Hill;
And he whose hand bore it aloft
Amid the carnage wild,
Although a lion in battle, was
As gentle as a child.

Fate had decreed that bloody crest
Was not for him to hold.
He saw the crimson meadows strewn
With heroes young and bold;
And when the fateful night came down
And war's grim game was played,
The gallant chieftain yearned to lie
Among his old brigade.

Take from its laureled sheath to-day
The sword that Pickett drew;
'Tis cherished by the valorous Gray
And honored by the Blue.
Despite the vanished years of peace,
I seem to see it still
Amid the battle smoke that hung
O'er Cemetery Hill.

It led the greatest battle charge
That brightens Hist'ry's tome,
And loving hands wreath it to-day
Within a Southern home;
While all the world its tribute pays
To Pickett's stainless blade
That led to glory, fame, and death
That famous old brigade.

J. S. Bowles, of Belzona, Miss., wants names of survivors of the 3d Richmond Howitzers, Colonel Haraway's Battalion.

GUNNING FOR BIRDS

is much like gunning for birds. You must have a definite aim, because indiscriminate advertising, like indiscriminate shooting, results in empty pockets. The printer furnishes the shot, and postage is the powder that carries it wherever you direct.

And you must have good ammunition. Foolish indeed the sportsman who would use pebbles for shot to save expense, yet equally foolish is the advertiser who wastes energy, postage and opportunity on weak, ineffective printing.

Think it over; then let's talk it over. We have furnished ammunition for so many successful campaigns that we know you will find our experience of value.

Anyway, let's talk it over.

BRANDON PRINTING CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

"Lee and His Generals" @ "The Last of the Wooden Navy."

Two wonderful paintings, each being worth thousands of dollars, can be had in every home. "LEE AND HIS GENERALS" and "THE LAST OF THE WOODEN NAVY," the great pictures by GEORGE B. MATTHEWS, which have been exhibited at Jamestown Exposition for the past six months and have excited the interest of thousands of people, have at last been accurately reproduced in colors. The first gives excellent full-figure portraits of Robert E. Lee and twenty-five of his commanders attractively grouped. The last is a vivid picture of the battle between the Merrimac and Monitor. The lithographs are 24 x 12 and 20 x 10 inches, respectively. PRICE, POSTAGE PREPAID, 55c. EACH. Dealers wanted everywhere to handle these pictures. Write for terms to

THE BELL BOOK @ STATIONERY CO., Inc.
914 E. Main Street, Richmond Va.

CORSET COVER

On fine nainsook, stamped front and back for Wallachian Embroidery, complete with material to work it, 75 cents, postpaid. Other designs for French or Eyelet. Beautiful waist designs on sheer Persian Lawn, $1, postpaid.

Embroidered garments will be worn more than ever this summer. Now is the time to work them. Send in your order—just tell us what you want. We guarantee satisfaction.

THE ARTS SHOP, Nashville, Tenn.

POSITIONS SECURED or Money Back

CONTRACT given, backed by $300,000.00 capital and 18 years' SUCCESS

DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL Business Colleges

Washington, D. C., Raleigh, Columbia, Nashville, Atlanta, Montgomery, Jackson, Miss., Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas.

Bookkeeping, Banking, Shorthand, Penmanship, Telegraphy, etc. Indorsed by business men. Also teach by mail. Write, phone, or call for catalogue.

30 Colleges in 17 States

If afflicted with SORE EYES, DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

A Very Rich Man says:

"The American people are prodigal, and our extravagance will have to be paid for by someone. People have taken advantage of prosperity, such as has never been excelled in this country, to be wasteful and extravagant. We are not saving up for the rainy day, for the time of need."

How is it with you?

Are you saving and creating a fund which will work for you when you can no longer work for yourself?

Your common sense tells you that it is better to even at a sacrifice, if necessary, than to want or be dependent upon others in your old age.

SAVE YOUR MONEY NOW

But saving is only half your duty. You must invest your savings wisely.

An ideal form of investment is a Certificate of Deposit in The American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee. These Certificates are issued for deposits of $25 and upward. They bear interest payable quarterly, semiannually, or annually, are negotiable, are good as collateral security, and can be renewed at interest periods.

The American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee

Capital .....	$1,000,000.00
Shareholders' Liability.....	1,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits (earned).....	580,000.00
SECURITY TO DEPOSITORS.....	$2,580,000.00

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The Lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address

NATIONAL PRINTING & EXHIBIT CO., 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The Confederate Cause and Conduct in the War between the States.

By HUNTER MCGUIRE, M.D., I.L.D., Head Medical Director of Jackson's Corps, A. N. V., and HON. GEORGE L. CHRISTIAN.

This work written with the fire and vim of one of Jackson's soldiers, and with all the logic of a clear-headed lawyer, has gone far beyond the ordinary work upon this subject and holds the interest of the reader in its grip from start to finish.

The contents of the first chapter alone will give some idea of what the book contains, being as follows:

1. Slavery not the cause of the war. 2. Attempt of Northern writers to misrepresent the South and its cause. 3. The Northern cause will finally be adjudged the lost cause. 4. Criticisms of the writings of Mr. Jno. Fiske and "Our Country," by Cooper, Estill and Lemon. 5. All the South asks—that the truth be stated.

The other chapters deal with some dozen or more subjects, including "Treatment and Exchange of Prisoners," "Right of Secession," "Relations of the Slaves to the Confederate Cause," etc.

This book should be in the home of every Confederate.

230 pages. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth. Gold Top. Postpaid, $1.60

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., 914 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

Tom N. Shearer, Starkville, Miss., makes inquiry for John Rudder, who lived in or near Courtland, Ala., and with whom he served in a mixed regiment known as the 1st Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and commanded by Col. Alpheus Baker until he was promoted to brigadier general. Rudder was in Company F, Alabama Troops, while Shearer was a member of Company D, Mississippians. They were in prison for seven months, and after the exchange their regiment was known as the 54th Alabama. Both volunteered for picket duty at the battle of Peachtree Creek, Atlanta, becoming separated near the enemy's line. Mr. Shearer would also like to hear from other members of Company F.

George Jones, of Wisner, Nebr., R. F. D. No. 2, Box 41, would like to hear from some of his old comrades. He was sergeant of Company E, 12th Mississippi, and was wounded and taken prisoner near the end of the war and paroled from Elmira, N. Y. He reached Richmond during the evacuation, and was not allowed to stop and see his comrades, but sent on farther South, and went out West as soon as able to travel.

Miss Attie Moorman, 2114 Troost Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., makes inquiry for the company and regiment in which John Webb Moorman served during the war. He was first with General Price in Missouri, and later joined Bragg's army in Kentucky. He was a nephew of Mercer Moorman and cousin to the late Gen. George Moorman, of New Orleans, Adjutant General U. C. V. He was discharged on account of poor health before the close of the war.

Capt. John Kennedy, of Selma, Miss., will pay liberally for the following back volumes and numbers of the VETERAN: Volumes I., II., V., VI.; December, 1895; February, 1896; May, 1899; January, 1900.

LET ME DO YOUR SHOPPING

No matter what you want—street suit, wedding trousseau, reception or evening gown—INEXPENSIVE, or handsome and costly—send for my samples and estimates before placing your order. With my years' experience in shopping, my knowledge of styles—being in touch with the leading fashion centers—my conscientious handling of each and every order, whether large or small—I know I can please you.

MRS. CHARLES ELLISON, Louisville, Ky.

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter.

Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important.

Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted.

The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY,
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success;
The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. } VOL. XVI.

NASHVILLE, TENN., APRIL, 1908.

No 4 } S. A. CUNNINGHAM.
PROPRIETOR.

OFFICIAL NOTICE OF THE REUNION.

Gen. W. E. Mickle, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff to Gen. Stephen D. Lee, in his notice of the Reunion states:

"The General commanding announces that, according to the custom heretofore in force, which leaves to the General commanding and the Department Commanders the naming of the date of the Reunion, the eighteenth annual Reunion of the United Confederate Veterans will be held in the city of Birmingham, Ala., June 9-11, 1908, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, respectively, those days having been named by our host as satisfactory.

"No city in the South has shown since we laid down our arms at Appomattox such stupendous growth as the city of Birmingham, and she stands out alone among her sister cities, whether she is viewed as to the extent of territory covered by her corporate limits, the magnificence of her buildings, or the number and wealth of her industries.

"While there is nothing in and around the city to arouse the enthusiasm of the survivors of the Confederate armies, her patriotic men and beautiful women, with a fidelity to the principles of the Southland and a devotion to her traditions second to none, plead with their old-time friends and comrades to come to the hospitable homes of the Magic City, assuring them that a welcome will be given equal to any that has been shown in the past.

"The central location of the city and its numerous railroad connections place it within easy reach of all sections of the country, and the General commanding feels satisfied that the 'boys in gray' will be present in large numbers.

"The General commanding with much pleasure announces, at the request of its most energetic President, Mrs. W. J. Behan, that the Confederated Southern Memorial Association will hold its meeting at the same time."

PROGRESS FOR THE ARLINGTON MONUMENT.

BY MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE, PRESIDENT U. D. C.

GALVESTON, TEX., March 14, 1908.

To the Daughters of the Confederacy: It will be pleasing news to you to know that the Arlington Confederate Monument Fund is already showing signs of vigorous growth. The Treasurer, Mr. Wallace Streater, of Washington, D. C., reports having received during the month of February the sum of $2,325.72, of which was $1,000 each from the R. E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson Chapters of the District of Columbia; Indian Territory Division, $20; Oklahoma Division, $20.72; Washington Camp, U. S. C. V., Washington, D. C., $75; Children's Auxiliary, District of Columbia, through Mrs. Arthur E. Johnson, $80; balance on pledge from Alabama Division, $18; survivors 23d New Jersey Regiment, $100. This fund was still further augmented by the proceeds of a lecture given by Senator Taylor, of Tennessee, under the auspices of the Executive Committee of the Arlington Confederate Monument Association, now under the direction of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and of which Col. Hilary A. Herbert, former Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Cleveland, is chairman. The net proceeds of this lecture was $400, and the Association is greatly indebted to Senator Taylor for contributing his service in his own inimitable style to this patriotic purpose. The Columbia Theater in Washington was filled with a large audience, among which were many prominent and distinguished men and women.

The most gratifying incident of this occasion was the unanimous speech of Gen. E. Burd Grubb, of New Jersey, when presenting a donation to the monument fund of one hundred dollars from the "Survivors of the 23d Regiment New Jersey Volunteers." This testimonial of good will was received with deepest appreciation as an evidence of that fraternal sympathy in this memorial work, such interest as forms the foundation stones of a Union, that will endure and weld us into one people in all of those higher qualities that constitute a oneness of spirit and purpose.

The "Survivors of the 23d New Jersey Regiment" have gone on record with their noble Commander as the exponents of that brotherly love which shows the spark of divinity in the hearts of men; for when erecting a monument at Salem Church to their dead they placed thereon a tablet with this inscription: "To the brave Alabama boys, who were our opponents on this field, and whose memory we honor." Noble words from noble hearts!

Can we, the Daughters of the Confederacy, remain inactive in this work to erect a monument over our dead in the National Cemetery at Arlington, and can we show less interest than those who were once opposed to that heroic band now resting there? That you will give other and better report at our next annual Convention is the firm conviction of your President General.

SENATOR TAYLOR FOR ARLINGTON CIRCLE.

Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, chairman of the committee to raise funds for the Arlington Confederate monument in Washington, writes as follows:

"My Dear Senator Taylor: The echoes of the magnificent lecture you were kind enough to give for the benefit of our monument at Arlington are still ringing in the ear. 'The philosophy of it was wholesome, its eloquence was unsurpassable, its humor was delightful.' Such things as these I am hearing all the time.

"The Executive Committee of the Arlington Confederate Monument Association have deputed me to give you their most hearty thanks and to send therewith this 'loving cup' as a slight token of their appreciation.

"That the cup of happiness for you and yours may always be full to overflowing is the wish of us all."

MEMORIAL WINDOW'S, BILOXI, MISS.

MRS. STONE'S REPORT TO THE UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

As our official organ, you will bear the message to the United Daughters of the Confederacy that the unveiling ceremonies of the window erected by them to the loving memory of Mrs. Varina Jefferson Davis were most successfully conducted at Biloxi, Miss., on February 28. Miss Decca Lamar West, chairman of the committee appointed by Mrs. Henderson, President General U. D. C., at the Gulfport Convention, with her associates on that committee, labored with untiring interest and loving thought, with the advice and counsel of the rector, Mr. C. B. Crawford, of the Church of the Redeemer, that this memorial should express in its design some of the noble and great characteristics of the heroic woman to whom this tribute was paid. Mrs. Hayes was consulted in all of the details of the design, and the result is so beautiful and satisfying that your President earnestly hopes that every member of this organization may see it. With an ideal day on the shores of the Mexican Gulf, the soft murmur of its waters whispering sweet memories of the loved one we were about to honor, the breath of spring upon leaf and tree, and the air sweet with its fragrance, the overflowing audience assembled in the beautiful ivy-crowned church, a gem within itself, and holding in its possession the richest treasures of art, the most valued offerings of the history of this beautiful Southland—the "Westminster of the South." Seated with the Confederate veterans from the Soldiers' Home of Mississippi, historic Beauvoir, was Mrs. Margaret Jefferson Davis Hayes, the last of the direct family of our great chieftain.

The windows to be unveiled and those erected by Mrs. Davis to the memory of President Davis and to "Winnie" Davis were decorated with wreaths of laurel, palm branches, and a wealth of flowers; these were offerings from the Chapters in New Orleans and all neighboring towns, and beautiful wreaths were sent by the General Association and the Memorial Window Committee. Dr. Crawford, the rector, opened the programme after the processional and appropriate prayer and song service with a short address, giving the history of all of the memorial windows, which are beautiful and artistic, having been manufactured in Munich, where the very best work of this kind is done.

Mrs. Hayes had placed a window in memory of her three brothers and her infant son, which is beautiful in design and coloring, and was unveiled by her youngest son, William Hayes. Following Dr. Crawford's address, Mrs. Hayes unveiled the window to her mother, and then your President presented it in a short speech formally to the church and parish on behalf of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. The eloquent and appropriate address of Bishop Bratton, of Mississippi, was listened to with profound interest. The ceremonies closed with the Te Deum beautifully rendered by the vested choir and in which is embodied the last words of Mrs. Jefferson Davis: "O Lord, in thee have I trusted: let me never be confounded."

Dr. Crawford had invited Mrs. Weatherby, of Biloxi (who was a member of the committee for selecting the design and purchasing the window), to assume the duties of hostess at the rectory and receive and entertain the guests invited there, and these can each bear loving testimony to the delightful and charming hospitality extended.

At the close of the ceremonies all were entertained at the rectory at a buffet luncheon, and later Mrs. D. A. S. Vaught, of New Orleans, gave an invitation to Mrs. Hayes, Miss McGrath, President of the Louisiana Division, and your President General, with about sixty other guests, to a luncheon provided by her sister, Mrs. George Denegre, at her summer cottage at Biloxi—all arranged and served by the custodian of the place by telephone communication from New Orleans, but as elegant as though the presiding genius had been present. A visit to Beauvoir to see the soldiers of the Confederacy in this attractive, well-ordered Home, where the wives of soldiers are admitted, brought this day to a fitting close; but its beautiful memories will linger long in the hearts of those who participated. Mrs. D. A. S. Vaught gave a complimentary reception at her home, on Louisiana Avenue, to your President, who was her guest for the closing days of the carnival, and receptions and luncheons were given to Mrs. Hayes and myself jointly during our stay in the city.

It is gratifying to tell you of these courtesies, as it is a tribute to the office you have conferred upon me, and as such are accepted as honors to our organization. The Confederate Memorial Society, New Orleans Chapter, and individual members of the U. D. C. sent beautiful flowers from day to day, which were greatly appreciated. Mrs. Hayes was received by the veterans at Memorial Hall, and together with your President was a guest of the New Orleans Chapter in an automobile ride to the Confederate Home of Louisiana, where, comfortably lodged and with all needs provided, these dear old men are quietly and happily passing their days in the midst of attractive surroundings and the ministrations of the Daughters of the Confederacy.

MUSTER ROLL OF COMPANY C, 43D ALABAMA REGIMENT.—E. E. Estes, of Mooresville, Miss., sends the muster roll of the company stated above—of officers and men—numbering ninety-seven. This list was procured through the joint labors of Comrades Estes, R. E. Mobley, of Eutaw, Ala., and D. E. Burton, of Rosser, Tex. The company was organized in June, 1862, and served in campaigns through Tennessee and Kentucky. It was in the siege of Knoxville and in the battle of Chickamauga, after which it was sent to Virginia. After reorganization, the following Alabama troops served under Gen. Archibald Gracie: 41st, 43d, 59th, and 60th Regiments, and the 23d Alabama Battalion of Sharpshooters. Comrade Estes would be pleased to hear from his comrades.

It is expected that all members of Gracie's Brigade who can attend the Birmingham Reunion will assemble at such time and place as may be arranged. Mr. Archibald Gracie, son of the General, is anxious to confer with as many members as he can for historic purposes.

MOTHERS, WIVES, WIDOWS OF CONFEDERATES.

SPLENDID CONSIDERATION SHOWN FOR THEM IN ARKANSAS.

On pages 180-182 of this VETERAN there is an account of the Arkansas Confederate Home, and now supplemental to it Col. Dan W. Jones, who commanded the 20th Arkansas Infantry, and is President of the Board of Directors of the Arkansas Confederate Home, gives an interesting report of an addition to it—the "Annex" and its purposes:

"Our Confederate Home was established some years ago by patriotic Confederate soldiers and their friends as a private incorporated institution for the care and maintenance of veterans who were unable to maintain themselves. Subsequently in 1891 a proposition was made to the Legislature to donate the property to the State upon condition that it should thereafter be maintained by the State as a public institution. This was accepted, and appropriate legislation was adopted.

"Under the terms of the act of the Legislature, however, only Confederate soldiers and sailors could be admitted to the Home. The old wives, who had borne the severest part of the struggle, must take care of themselves as best they could while the State took care of their husbands in the Home.

MRS. R. J. LEA.

This went on until the Legislature of 1905 met, when Mrs. R. J. Lea (wife of our much-esteemed circuit judge, Hon. R. J. Lea, both of whom are the children of Confederate soldiers) asked me to draft a bill for an act to be submitted to the Legislature to appropriate the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of building and furnishing an annex to the Home to be used for the care and maintenance of the wives, widows, and mothers of Confederate soldiers, so that these old people should not be separated in their old age. I prepared the bill, and it was introduced into the Legislature; but I seriously doubt whether it would ever have been passed but for the untiring, indefatigable, and intelligent efforts of that heroic Daughter of the Confederacy who prompted me to prepare it.

"The bill was passed, the annex has been built, and now we have Confederate women, as well as men, enjoying the gratitude of the present generation for their unselfish devotion to duty when their country called in its hour of danger and trouble.

"I have taken the liberty of stating this fact without consulting Mrs. Lea; but I am sure she will not object to this use of her name, because her action in the matter was prompted by the loftiest patriotism and love of the grand and glorious mothers of the Confederacy."

As evidence of the distinctive merit to the consideration shown Mrs. Lea in the foregoing an extract from an old Gazette, signed by the trustees, John G. Fletcher (Chairman), Charles F. Martin, R. J. Polk, E. A. Ramsey, and E. A. Darr, states: "It is with great pleasure that we as members of the Board of Trustees for the Confederate Home announce that a bill providing for the erection of an annex to the Confederate Home and appropriating $15,000 for that purpose passed both Houses of the General Assembly without one dissenting vote, and has been signed by Governor Davis. This annex as provided will be a refuge for the aged and indigent wives of Confederate veterans who have in the past been maintained by the charity of their neighbors and a pittance called a pension given them by the State. Too great credit cannot be given to Mrs. R. J. Lea, who originated the idea. But for her work and that of a coterie of her friends, who never grew tired till the bill was passed, the annex would have remained a thing to be talked about. And we particularly desire to thank George R. Mann, the architect of our new State Capitol, for generously proposing to make the plans and superintend its construction without other compensation save that of an approving conscience."

SIXTEEN SOLDIERS OF TWO FAMILIES.

Comrade J. E. Ray, of Asheville, N. C., writes of two families from the mother of the Volunteer State that are perhaps unequalled by either side from any State in the Union:

"There lived about six miles north of the city of Asheville, Buncombe County, N. C., in 1861 Mr. Black and his seven sons, farmers. All of them, father and sons, eight in number, came to Asheville and all enlisted as soldiers for the Confederate service. What fate befell them as soldiers during the four years following, I am not prepared to state, they being in the Army of Northern Virginia and I in the Army of Tennessee.

"Five miles south of Asheville, Buncombe County, there lived a Widow Stephens who had eight sons, all farmers. This family ardently desired to vindicate the honor of their country, and the eight sons came to Asheville and were enrolled as Confederate soldiers.

"Having served four years on the advanced lines of the Confederate army, I had opportunity to know much of both Confederate and Federal, and feel warranted in believing that no army at any time or in any country can furnish a parallel to this voluntary enlistment of sixteen soldiers from two families.

"But the strangest feature of the matter is that not one of these Stephens soldiers during their term of service was so disabled by wound or sickness as to be compelled to leave his post of duty as a soldier. All of them returned to their homes, and seven of the eight are living to-day, forty-three years after their soldier life. Thirty-six years after the war all the eight were living."

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.

Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

GOOD NEWS ABOUT THE VETERAN.

Gratitude and greeting go with this issue of the VETERAN. Never in its history has the publication had so strong evidence of interest by its patrons in receipts largely augmented over any similar period. There have been fewer discontinuances except by death, with much more praise and much less blame than at any previous time. There have been a smaller number who refuse to pay because they "didn't subscribe" and a smaller number who charged that they had ordered it discontinued—the VETERAN is never sent without authority having been given, and is always discontinued on notice.

The new post office ruling against sending publications beyond the time paid for has had to do with the large increase of renewals; but the sentiment is so manifestly good throughout the country that acknowledgment is made in sincerest gratitude. There are several thousand in arrears still whose names must be dropped unless renewals are sent in before time to mail the May issue. Statements will be sent to such, and postmasters are requested to report promptly in cases of death or removal.

Railroad regulations whereby traveling agents cannot be used as formerly and the unavoidable cutting down of the list are considerations for earnest appeal for local agents, and the coöperation of friends in securing local agents is earnestly sought. Will you, therefore, if a zealous friend, consider the subject and see what you can do within the month of April in procuring agents? There is no other publication in existence, doubtless, with such a high class of persons as agents—judges, bankers, lawyers, farmers. Men who never solicited for any other publication have made it a personal matter to help build up and sustain the VETERAN. Subscription blanks and other stationery will be sent to those who will help.

Notwithstanding the lack of transportation, the VETERAN has again sent out its traveling agent, Miss F. E. Bligh, who will be in Texas and adjoining territory for the next several months. The kindly assistance of friends where opportunity presents in advancing her work will be highly appreciated. Miss Bligh is an efficient agent, and has done much fine work for the VETERAN, and the hardship of it can be considerably lessened by the cheerful coöperation of those the VETERAN counts as friends.

Note that in this April number, as in the January, there are sixteen pages more than the usual number—sixty-four pages instead of forty-eight. The fact is noted in this connection as evidence that every possible effort is being made to promote the cause for which the VETERAN is published. These enlargements cost hundreds of dollars and affirm that the management is indeed doing all that is possible while the survivors live to make record of their deeds. Consider whether you can advance its interests; and if so, you need not fear regret for having done so.

Contributors must be more concise, especially as to Last Roll matter. Those who send the sketches should rewrite and condense with care. Many people seem to feel that space is of no consequence. Where it is practicable, sketches should be typewritten. Many contributors surely do not realize that the actual expense of every page in the VETERAN is about $15, and it is not encouraging to have notice from the writer of an article occupying a half page or so that he wants a half dozen copies, for which he remits fifty cents. All contributors are urged to realize the magnitude of the work in hand and to write as concisely as practicable.

The VETERAN office is not on the Public Square, but in the handsome new Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, near the Customhouse and the Union Railway Station. Friends continue going to the old place on the Public Square, a half mile away. The editor lives at the Maxwell House, where he has resided for over twenty-three years.

Only a word about the Birmingham Reunion for June 9-11 is given in this issue. All who are interested may have the comfort of assurance that patriotism and pride are the motives impelling wealthy men of that marvelous city of productive power, and that they are resolved first upon looking after the veterans and then doing what is practicable for all other guests. The May issue will contain information as to locations of various headquarters, railroad rates, etc.

The Jefferson Davis Home Association is not idle. Certain preliminary matters are causing delay, but it is expected that the May VETERAN will give a clear outline of its plans.

The VETERAN makes an appeal now, however, for every Southerner who can spare one dollar to contribute to the proposed park on June 3, 1908, the hundredth anniversary of his birth. When we contemplate the very large sum of money that is being contributed to honor the memory of President Lincoln next year in the same State, let us resolve to procure the birthplace and to honor President Davis, who was equal from every point of life. There is pathos in the appeal to honor the memory of a great man, the representative of all for which the South contended, and who lived consistently with the South's most exalted ideals to the end. Discuss this hundredth birthday anniversary of our beloved President and be ready to conform to the plans which will be set forth in the VETERAN for May.

SINGULAR CRITICISM OF "JEB" STUART.

Our good friend, Sidney Herbert, charges that Gen. J. E. B. Stuart bombarded Carlisle, Pa., at night while on the Gettysburg campaign. Comrade Herbert followed Stuart in that section, and writes: "General Lee may have been responsible for Stuart's raid, but he was not responsible for the cruel night bombardment of Carlisle, a place filled with defenseless women and children. Stuart was formerly on duty at the Cavalry School in Carlisle, and had many old friends there, and yet he did not hesitate to bombard their homes, in which their families in the absence of male protectors felt themselves safe. I would not believe this of Stuart, so highly have I heard him commended, had I not been there and examined the battered houses as soon as Stuart retreated."

Such conduct is so inconsistent with the reputation of General Stuart and with General Lee's policy on that campaign that Comrade Herbert should have required other evidence than bullet marks reported to have been made by Stuart's men, and, moreover, that they were fired by his orders. It is singular that he would have remained there to examine such evidence of "making war on women and children."

THE ARMORY BATTALION AT GREEN'S FARM.

BY JOSEPH R. HAW, HAMPTON, VA.

I have read with a good deal of interest in the December VETERAN Private Miles Cary's account of "How Richmond Was Defended," and I have no doubt whatever that his account of his personal experience in the fight called the fight of Green's Farm and his encounter with a cavalryman is correct; but the article is incorrect in several very important particulars: mainly the time, the place, and the disposition of the troops of the enemy and of the 1st or Armory Battalion, C. S. A. He gives the date as March 4.

General Kilpatrick, who was in command of the expedition, attacked Richmond on the morning of March 1, 1864, on the Brook Turnpike with nearly three thousand picked cavalrymen and a battery of six pieces of artillery, and was repulsed. Colonel Dahlgren, who had been detached with nearly five hundred mounted men to cross James River and approach Richmond on the south side so as to capture Belle Isle, a prison in the river, failing to cross, marched down the north side of the river, stopped to rest and feed about 3:30 P. M. the same day, March 1, near Short Pump, and marched down the Three Chop road, which enters the Westham Plank road at a point called then Westham, now called Westhampton. The dwelling of Mr. Ben Green is situated on the Three Chop road some distance from Westhampton, and the 1st Battalion, local defense (called the Armory Battalion), met Dahlgren just at Green's farm and fought there. Henley's Battalion met them about two miles nearer town on the Westham Plank road, or pike, fired one volley, and the enemy went back.

I was a boy of eighteen years, military age, detailed at the C. S. A. Armory; was a private in Company A, 1st Battalion, 1st Brigade, local defense; was in the fight at Green's farm; and although I have read with interest everything I could gather from history and the many personal narratives written about the raid, even searching the war records, I have never seen a correct account of the fight on Green's Farm by the Armory Battalion. I have never seen a line from a member of the battalion in its defense. This sketch is not to applaud or excuse, but to state facts as I saw them and leave the verdict to readers of your very interesting and impartial magazine.

As stated, the 1st Brigade, local defense, was made up of the 1st (or Armory) Battalion, the Arsenal Battalion, the Tredegar Battalion, Henley's Battalion, and the Navy Battalion.

Early in the war the machinery from the United States Armory at Harper's Ferry had been moved to Richmond and set up in the Virginia Armory, at the foot of Fifth Street, between the canal and James River. Many of the workmen from Harper's Ferry had followed the machinery to Richmond and cast their lot with the Confederacy. Three companies, A, B, and C, of the Armory Battalion, were made up from the employees of the armory, the fourth company (D), from the carbine factory on Seventh Street, and another company came from the harness shop.

Gen. Josiah Gorges, chief of ordnance, in his reports and correspondence, speaks in the highest terms of these Harper's Ferry employees, both of their bravery and patriotism in removing the machinery from Harper's Ferry under fire; and later of this fight he says that when called upon they fought, and fought well, and that of one battalion of, say, two hundred workmen from the armory four were killed or died of their wounds and some eight or ten others were wounded in a skirmish.

Col. William LeRoy Brown, commanding the Richmond Arsenal, also wrote in the highest praise of the men under him, their ingenuity and their bravery, saying, "They literally worked with their muskets at their sides; and so valuable were the lives of the skilled artisans that it was said if three iron workers in the regiment were killed the manufacture of cannon would stop," referring, no doubt, to the employees of the Tredegar Iron Works.

Besides the men from Harper's Ferry, there were a number of soldiers detailed from the army, some of them having been previously wounded in battle. Before the battalion was formed several of these men joined their regiments when fighting around Richmond and fought with them, returning to the armory when the emergency was over. The battalion was drilled very little—only twice, I think—after I joined it, in 1863.

On the morning of March 1, 1864, about ten o'clock the old bell in the Capitol Square tolled out the call to arms. The starter at the armory took hold of the hand wheel and ran down the gates to the turbine water wheels. The hundreds of machines, the noisy trip hammers, and the rolls that were turning out the red-hot rifle barrels came to a standstill. Messengers hurried through the department, telling the men that the enemy was in sight; that they must hurry home, get into their uniforms, fill haversacks with cooked rations, and report for duty at the armory. On getting out on the street we learned that a cavalry force had ridden in on the Brook Road to a point inside the main line of defense, and had been repulsed by a small force of heavy artillery, and that another attack was expected at any time. There was a drizzling rain to further depress conditions. The men lived in various parts of the city, on Sheep, Union, Church, and Oregon Hills, and some across the river in Manchester. Many of them had risen at five o'clock, walked several miles, and been on their feet at work up to the time of the call to arms. They had now to walk home, don their uniforms, pack haversacks, take blankets from their beds, and report for duty. It was some hours before a sufficient number of men assembled to form a very small battalion, and the afternoon was well advanced before the order to march was given.

Major Ford was the commander of the battalion. He was an Englishman, over six feet high, straight as an arrow, and said to be an ex-cavalry officer of the English army. Captain Epps, a resident of Richmond, was the adjutant. There were two horses employed at the armory—one a fine chestnut stallion, the other a stout bay. Major Ford rode the stallion and Adjutant Epps bestrode the bay. Led by these two martial soldiers, we marched out the Cary Street, or Westham Plank road, far ahead of any other troops. The road was in a miserable condition, the freezing and thawing of the winter, assisted by the rains, having made it almost impassable with clay mud.

We had marched but a short distance beyond the tollgate when we began to meet refugees fleeing from the Yankees, wagons loaded with negro women and children, men riding horses with the harness on, all declaring that the Yankees were right behind them. When near Westham, the ammunition wagon having overtaken us, the battalion was halted to draw ammunition. Here Captain Fitzgerald volunteered to take his company (D) ahead to meet the enemy, as they had ammunition, to which the Major consented. After drawing ammunition we marched up to Westham and took the road to the right, running about north, called the Three Chop road. About the time we turned into the road we heard Captain Fitzgerald hotly engaged with the enemy, and were hurried forward to support him. Just before getting under fire we turned to the right through a gap in a fence, moving close by the road through a field for some distance to avoid the deep mud, then back across the road to the left into a grove of young oaks, which was situated just across the road from the residence of Mr. Ben Green, where we found Company D. The battalion went in and commenced firing as fast as muzzle-loading rifles would allow. It was now past sunset, and raining. The enemy, being cavalry and armed with five-shooting revolvers and breech-loading carbines, fired very rapidly, the smoke of battle settling down on the grove and obscuring the enemy in front save for the flash of his guns.

I was standing on our right, firing over the fence right down the road. The Major was in about twelve feet of me, sitting erect on his stallion in the middle of the road. The Adjutant had been sent back to hurry up reinforcements. The battalion was holding its ground well, with no idea of retreating that I could see, when some one cried: "Look out there; they are flanking us!" On looking to our right we discovered the cavalry charging through the field almost past us, there being no troops on that side of the road. The Major, seeing this, gave in loud tones the order, "Cease firing and fall back," repeating the command twice, and I am confident the Yankees in the field heard him. The enemy had evidently deployed his men across the road on both sides and advanced. His right, meeting resistance, had been held in check; but his left, finding no force in front, pushed past our right flank unmolested, and from the position we occupied he would soon have cut us off from Richmond, as the town lay off to the right of our right flank.

When the retreat was begun, the men came out of the wood by the same gap in the fence through which they had entered, recrossed the road, and entered the field right in front of mounted cavalry advancing at a charge. Whether the officers attempted to form a line to resist this advance or the men pushed across the enemy's front to get to a wood which lay nearer Richmond, I do not know; but anyhow, instead of retreating directly to the rear by the road, the men pushed straight across the field in the enemy's front in a disorganized condition. The officers called on them to rally, but all continued to fall back rapidly across the field. By the Major's orders the firing on our side had almost entirely ceased; but the enemy were firing rapidly, the air being filled with whiz of Minie balls flying thick and fast.

Major Ford, still sitting on his horse near the road facing the enemy, called on the men to rally to him, and a few of us joined him there. After a pause, he remarked, "We can do nothing here," and began to retreat by the road. The Yankees were now right among the men in the field, and I could hear their oaths as they cried: "Shoot the d— scoundrels." Some of the men turned and fired right up in the faces of the enemy, showing pluck to the last. A brief time elapsed before the enemy's right and center came up with his left. The writer, being thoroughly broken down, found it impossible to keep up with the rapid walk of the Major's horse; but escaped capture with two others, who were the last to leave the field by bearing to the enemy's right and allowing his whole line to pass, his right passing within a few feet of us. It was too dark for them to see us.

They had advanced past Westham and down the Westham road perhaps a mile or more when we heard a beautiful volley ring out on the night air, and then all was quiet. They had come up with Henley's Battalion of our brigade, been handsomely (?) received, and concluded very wisely to retreat.

Mr. George Watt, Secretary and Treasurer of the Randolph Paper Box Factory, of Richmond, Va., a member of Henley's Battalion and one of the skirmishers mentioned by Miles Cary, has written the following as his recollection of the fight: "We marched nearly to the fork of the road (Westham) and halted; pickets were sent out, and I was put on duty as the sentinel in the middle of the road, while the rest of the picket was posted on the side of the road. I had been there only a short time when a man came dashing down the road; and being halted, he gave his name as Major Ford, of the Armory Battalion. 'Let me pass,' he said sharply. Shortly after a batch of prisoners were brought in under guard of some cavalry. The prisoners had not been disarmed, and I made them give up their arms before I would let them pass. Then Major Ford went to the front again, and in a very short time he came back at full speed and went to the rear. I saw him no more. Our picket was now withdrawn to the battalion which had deployed to the right of the road. When we got to our several companies, the men were all lying down awaiting the oncoming enemy, whom we could then hear. The picket was again advanced as skirmishers, but falling back as the enemy advanced and moving to the right of the battalion to cover that flank. In that position I took to a ditch to protect myself. Just as I got into the ditch the battalion fired one volley, which was so perfectly delivered it sounded like the report of a piece of artillery. No more firing was done. Just as the volley was fired something struck me on the side of the head, and I heard some one fall from his horse. I soon found that what had struck me was a horse's tail, he having been killed as he jumped over me and his rider thrown. I took the rider prisoner and took him to Libby Prison that night. Henley's Battalion was commanded that night by Col. John A. McEnery. Only one of the battalion, Captain Elsie, was killed and only one, I think, wounded, Gray Doswell. There were several men and some horses on the other side killed. The enemy left and told people in King William County they thought they had met regulars instead of local troops. As the ground sloped down in our front, the men were ordered to fire on a level plain. There were not many killed, and these were shot above the breast and the horses in the head, the most of the bullets going too high."

Mr. Watt, who was only seventeen years old, afterwards joined the Rockbridge Artillery, and served until the end of the war.

Just after the repulse of Dahlgren we saw a rocket go streaming through the air over in Hanover and heard distant firing of artillery. Gen. Wade Hampton, with a very small cavalry force, had surprised Kilpatrick in camp, put him on the run, and captured nearly a hundred prisoners and prevented a third attack on Richmond by way of the Mechanicsville road. Lieutenant Sweeney, of Company C, Armory Battalion, was killed in the grove, Private Blunt, of the same company, in the field, and Private Jones was mortally wounded, and others were seriously wounded.

Capt. John F. B. Mitchell, 2d New York Cavalry, the Federal officer of highest rank, who survived this part of the expedition, in his official report says: "About five miles from the city we were met by a volley from the wood, the 5th Michigan in advance. It was now growing dark, but we pushed on. At first there was some wavering. Every now and then a volley was poured into our ranks, and it grew rapidly darker and darker, and soon you could see nothing but the flash of the enemy's muskets. They were dismounted, and the only way we had of advancing was to charge over their lines of skirmishers. This was done time and again. We took over two hundred prisoners, but we lost heavily in killed and wounded. Finally from the increased fire it appeared that the enemy had received reinforcements, and the Colonel (Dahlgren) gave the order to retire after we had driven the enemy two and a half miles."

Confederate war histories have given the "Clerks," as the men of Henley's Battalion were called, unstinted praise for saving the city from the "ruthless hand of Dahlgren," Pollard going so far as to say: "It seems their one volley did all the damage that was done to the enemy."

Impartial judges must agree that the 1st or Armory Battalion did its full share in stopping the enemy. That it was routed and many of its men captured was due to mismanagement by its officers. It was the first of five battalions to meet the enemy far in advance of any support, the nearest battalion being over two miles behind when the retreat was ordered. It checked the enemy's advance, and did not retreat until ordered to do so, and then under circumstances that would have tried thoroughly disciplined troops. That it killed and wounded its share of the enemy, there can be little doubt. Had they been supported by reinforcements, they would never have retreated; or had the officers encouraged the men to remain in the wood and continue firing, they might have held the enemy in check until help arrived.

When we consider that we were armed with Austrian muzzle-loading rifles, inferior guns, and opposed by more than double our number of seasoned soldiers who could fire at least ten shots to our one, it is not surprising that we gave way.

Private Cary says that his battalion got near enough to hear the men of the 1st Battalion running and that Henley's Battalion fought on the same ground that the Armory Battalion had been driven from, Dahlgren having fallen back and dismounted. This is not true, though I do not think he intended to err in his statements. Had Henley's Battalion been so near, no retreat would have been ordered. The fact is, each battalion did its own fighting at least two miles apart. I was near Green's farm when I heard the volley from Henley's Battalion, and know that what Private George Watt says as to their position is correct. I think Captain Mitchell exaggerates when he says they captured two hundred prisoners. We could not have had many more than two hundred men in line, and many escaped capture, some reaching a body of timber on our right and remaining all night, suffering a good deal in the rain and sleet.

The prisoners were all released that night, and the battalion assembled on the 2d of March at the armory in the afternoon, marched to the residence of Lieutenant Sweeney on Union Hill, and escorted his body to the church, while Company C attended the funeral of Private Blount. From the church we marched again out of Richmond on the Broad Street road and took our place in the line of defense until the danger from the raid was over, when we returned to our work. The men took their severe experiences very cheerfully, joking one another about incidents in the retreat, some of which were very amusing and, if space would permit, would bring smiles to the faces of many readers.

After this the brigade was in the field frequently—first to defend the city from the big Sheridan raid, when J. E. B. Stuart was killed, then below Richmond when Grant changed his base from the north to the south side of the James, and again on the 29th of September in front of Fort Harrison. Here we stayed close under the enemy's guns in a sodden slush for some time under artillery fire and doing heavy picket duty until the 29th of January, 1865. When reduced by details back to the city, our battalion was ordered to Richmond to remove and ship the machinery of the armory to Danville. Our last field duty was in March, 1865, to meet Sheridan's last big raid.

On the 2d of April Richmond was evacuated. The men of the Armory Battalion were ordered to Danville. A few of us, after waiting at the depot nearly all night, took a train and reached that city the next night, remaining until General Lee surrendered, when some went to Salisbury, N. C., where the final collapse found them.

While this is not a story of my personal experience, I will say that two of us (Albert Cuthbert, of Jeff Davis Legion, Georgia, and myself) walked to Greensboro, N. C., then to High Point to join General Johnston's army. Here Cuthbert decided to go on to his home, in Augusta; while I joined Company A, 4th Tennessee (Shaw's) Battalion of Cavalry, Dibrell's Brigade, Dibrell's Division, detailed to escort Jefferson Davis, and marched with them to Washington, Ga., where I surrendered, and was paroled on the 10th of May. In going south I saw some of the armory boys at Salisbury, and one of them guarding the Confederate wagon train near the Georgia line.

I received nearly twenty-six dollars in silver and gold from the C. S. A. treasury, some of which I have now.

Old soldiers in the field had little regard for men around government departments, and are still disinclined to give them credit for anything heroic. But the local defense service was very trying in many respects. Each raid was like going into service the first time; and then to sleep in a comfortable bed for a month at home and exchange it for a wet slush, without tent or fire, was anything but conducive to health.

While I hold in the highest esteem the regulars in the field, with whom I count four older brothers, I think it but right we should have credit for what we did in defense of the cause we loved so well. There were as true and brave hearts in our battalion as ever shouldered a gun in the service of the Confederacy.

General Gorgas, chief of ordnance, in an article on Confederate ordnance, already referred to, says of one of the Harper's Ferry master armorers: "Frederick Ball was a most competent mechanic and a man of decided administrative ability. He was almost the only one who succeeded in producing a good service arm." Then he pays him the highest eulogy a soldier can hope to deserve when he says: "He was finally killed in the trenches at Savannah, fighting with a command composed of his own operatives." So say we of Jones, Sweeney, and Blount:

"To every man upon this earth
Death cometh soon or late;
And how can man die better
Than facing fearful odds
For the ashes of his fathers
And the temples of his gods?"

TYPICAL LETTER OF WAR TIMES.

BY GEORGE HAMPTON MORGAN.

[L. K. Smith, Carrollton, Ga., sends the following and writes of the author: "Soon after the war this boy soldier was elected Attorney General and served eight years. He afterwards held many important positions of honor and trust, being State Senator, Speaker of the Senate, several times Judge of the Circuit Court and Chancellor, and one of the most eminent lawyers of Tennessee. At the time of his death, in 1890, he was Superintendent of Census for the Fourth Congressional District. He was Grand Master of Masons, and afterwards Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence in the Grand Lodge for years, in whose records many of the most excellent literary gems produced by him are enshrined."]

WARTRACE, TENN., January 12, 1863.

Dear Ones at Home: I now give you an account of my recent visit to the National Capital (Richmond), together with other events which have transpired since my return.

Monday morning, December 22, 1862, I mounted the train at Murfreesboro after it had started, having been detained getting the baggage of a very nice young lady aboard, who was just out from Nashville and going to Chattanooga in my charge.

Full of buoyant hope, I confidently expected to take my Christmas dinner in Richmond; but owing to the great confusion on the railroad, we were all day coming to this place, only twenty miles from the starting point. Having gotten off the schedule, the conductor announced that we would have to "lie over" until morning to avoid a collision; so, after procuring "supper for two" and arranging for my lady friend to sleep in the car as comfortably as possible and finding no room for myself indoors, I put up at Dame Nature's spacious hotel, the walls of which are composed of air, bounded only by space, the diamond-studded roof consisting of the cerulean vault of heaven, the floor being Mother Earth. I built a large, blazing fire at the stump of a fallen tree, made my bed down, and retired to rest, my princely couch being a broad plank taken from a neighboring yard (where a large dog warned me not to come back). My pillow was a hickory stick of wood; my covering, the starry firmament above.

I gazed long into the blue ethereal realms of immensity, my thoughts wandering to other scenes, reverting back to childhood's happy days, to boyhood's frolicsome hours, to youth's bright opening morn, to the blessed associations of home—yes, "home, sweet home." I watched and thought until I could think no more, the golden diadems that sparkled o'erhead like ocean gems being to my vision no longer able to maintain their separate unity. They seemed to mix, coagulate, and disappear one by one, and I sank quietly into the arms of gentle Morpheus and sweetly slept until the phosphorescent rays of the returning god of day flashed along the eastern sky and the shrill whistle of the locomotive sounded long and loud on the still morning air, warning all to "get aboard." Again we were off for Chattanooga; and after another day of short runs and long stops, just as the rosy tints of departing day were gilding the Cumberland Mountains, our long soldier train, pulled by one mighty engine and pushed by another, dashed gallantly up the steep grades, through the deep gorges, round the long curves, and finally in at one side of the mountain and out at the other, then on over frightful chasms, through narrow defiles, down steep grades, and over rocky glens toward Bridgeport, Ala., which place we reached after dark; and we were carried triumphantly across the Tennessee River, over the splendid new bridge, far above the dashing waves that splashed and rippled at the bases of the massive stone pillars that support the gigantic structure. Midnight—and the wild, weird shriek of the whistle conveyed to our ears the welcome tidings that Chattanooga was reached at last, having been forty-two hours traveling a distance that required only eleven by regular schedule. [The schedule is now three hours and thirty minutes.—EDITOR VETERAN.]

Two o'clock on the morning of the 24th, having seen my traveling companion safely housed, I again mounted the iron horse. Ten o'clock found me in Knoxville, took supper at Jonesboro, and arrived at Bristol before midnight. I immediately changed cars for Lynchburg, which place we reached late on the evening of the 25th, minus, however, my Christmas dinner except a small piece of cold corn bread and two morsels of something, said to be chicken, which frugal meal was purchased from a "snack boy." It would no doubt have been relished better eaten in the dark.

I remained in Lynchburg only a half hour, when I was then off for Burksville, where we changed cars about ten o'clock for Richmond, then fifty-three miles off.

Sleep now took possession of me, and I knew no more until, being aroused from a very unsatisfactory snooze at two o'clock on the morning of the 26th, I found our train had stopped in front of the depot in Richmond. I jumped into a hack, and as we were whirled away over the rocky streets toward the Ballard House I was forcibly reminded of Nashville by the scores of brilliant gaslights that shed their glimmering rays from every corner as far as the eye could reach. I slept that morning till eight o'clock; then rose, took breakfast, and immediately set out to transact my business, which was with several different departments of the government.

Owing to the difficulty of getting immediate admittance to the War Department, I feared delay; but fortunately I found the Hon. H. S. Foote, member of Congress from the Nashville District, who cheerfully volunteered to assist me. By appointment we met at noon at the quartermaster general's office, where the Governor introduced me to Capt. A. C. Myers, Quartermaster General. After getting through with him, I could do no more until next day; so I spent the evening "looking round."

On the 27th by appointment I met Governor Foote at the office of the Secretary of War precisely at 10 A.M., and was ushered into the august presence of that slim-visaged, sallow-complexioned individual, the Hon. James A. Seddon, whose duties are said to be more complicated and important than any other official except the President. Only five minutes being allowed each visitor, I dispatched my business and got out of there in quick time. Next we repaired to the office of Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant and Inspector General, where there was a multitude of clerks—old men and boys. Here you can stay as long as you please, but must ask no questions except they pertain to your business. Having gotten through there, my business with the departments was finished. Governor Foote now very kindly asked me to walk with him through the Capitol grounds. The principal object of attraction there is the famous bronze equestrian statue of Washington, of which you have often read.

This great work of world-wide renown stands in the yard of the Capitol of Virginia. It strikes one with wonder and awe to behold such a lifelike representation of man and horse in bronze. It consists of a massive pedestal perhaps twenty feet high, on the top of which stands a colossal figure. The horse is represented in the attitude of rapid motion. * * * The Capitol building is old and shabby. It seemed hard to realize the fact that this rough city of the hills is the object of all others for which the Yankee nation has been struggling for the last two years. Yet it is so. Richmond has been the prime object, the Alpha and Omega of all their desires in the East. For its capture they have fitted out the grandest armies the world ever saw, have spent hundreds of millions of dollars, have exhausted their catalogue of generals, have stained the soil of Virginia with the blood of at least a hundred thousand of the citizens of the North, and yet it is "On to Richmond," with the object of their heart's desires no nearer than at first.

[The article concludes with his return and a description of the battle of Murfreesboro.]

INTERESTING AND PLEASING REMINISCENCES.

BY DR. J. B. HODGKIN, OF VIRGINIA.

Sometime in the seventies a man emigrated from Virginia to Texas, settling near the town of Waco. He had been, as had almost every Virginian of that day, a Confederate soldier. The custom of working the public roads prevailed in Texas at that time, the usual method being to call out the neighbors and repair the roads. The Virginian was at work with others when he noticed a man eying him curiously, and at last the stranger said to him, "Are you from Virginia?" and receiving an affirmative reply, the next question was, "Were you in the Confederate army?" and "Were you in the battle of Brandy Station?" Upon getting yes in reply to both, he then said: "Well, you saved my life there." "Why, I never saw you before!" replied the Virginian. "No doubt you think so," said the other; "but in the battle of Brandy Station I was of the Union army, was made prisoner, and put under you as guard. A drunken soldier came along and swore that he would kill me for some fancied insult, striking me over the head with his saber (here is the scar), when you stepped between us and said that he should kill you first. Yes, you are the man, for I never forget a face."

"IF THINE ENEMY THIRST, GIVE HIM DRINK."

When Pickett made the charge at Gettysburg, the Confederates who were lucky enough to get near the fortifications of the Union troops were unlucky enough not to get back—being captured, if not killed or wounded, at the very foot of the breastworks they had so bravely but fruitlessly assaulted. Among those was Jack —, of Virginia, who fell with a broken leg just outside the breastworks. He lay there groaning with pain and calling for water. During a lull in the firing a soldier of the Union ranks, hearing the cries of the Virginian and pitying his sufferings, sprang over the breastworks, ran to the wounded man, straightened out his broken limb, placed him in a more comfortable position, gave him a drink from his canteen, and sprang back to his place of shelter as the firing was resumed. The wounded Virginian was cared for at the end of the day's fight by the enemy, and was taken to a hospital. He recovered from his wound, was in due time exchanged, and after the war closed went into business in his native State. Years after his business called him to the Pacific Coast; and one day while in the town of Seattle, Wash., eating his dinner at a restaurant a big, burly man with a great beard came in, stared at him in a curious manner, went out, came back, and stared again. After the third repetition of this, he planted himself squarely before the Virginian and said: "Mister, were you in the Confederate army and in the battle of Gettysburg?" "I was," he replied. "Were you shot in front of the fortifications and had your leg shattered?" Again was the reply: "Yes." "Did a man jump over the breastworks and give you a drink from his canteen and straighten out your broken leg?" Looking up, the Virginian sprang to his feet, exclaiming, "Yes, and by George you are the man!" embracing him as if he had found a long-lost brother. It is needless to add that so long as the Virginian remained in Seattle he had no lack of friends, for his former enemy and friend made him as much at home as though they had fought side by side instead of in opposing ranks. But war is a curious anomaly, and it was often the case, as this writer can testify, that we pickets were as friendly during a truce as if we were old neighbors, albeit the next half hour we were shooting at each other as spitefully as though each man had a personal grudge to satisfy.

OLD FRIENDSHIPS REVIVED.

The following story will illustrate how old friendship may prevail even against duty. It is told of a Confederate command on duty at Chambersburg, Pa., during the Gettysburg campaign. As an introduction, I should state that about the year 1853 a young man named Wolfe, from Maryland, was engaged as tutor in the family of an Englishman named Holland, then residing in Virginia. In those days Virginia had no public school system, and a number of boys and girls from the neighborhood of the Hollands shared in the benefits of the school conducted by the Maryland teacher, who at the end of his term returned to his native State and afterwards studied medicine. He really had been teaching in order to secure sufficient money to pay for his medical tuition. Some years passed, and, the Civil War being on, some of the boys taught by Dr. Wolfe enlisted in the — Virginia Cavalry, and participated in the campaign which ended at Gettysburg, and were at that time camped at Chambersburg, Pa. Those Virginia cavalrymen were assigned the duty of picketing the roads leading from Chambersburg, and one morning there came riding out of the town a citizen, who was, of course, stopped by the pickets and informed that he could not pass. "Gentlemen," said the citizen, "I am a physician and have sick folks out here in the country, and it is very important that I see them." They were very sorry, but their orders were imperative to allow no one to pass out of the city. While talking to the pickets the Doctor casually asked one of them from what part of the South they came, and he replied that they were from Virginia. "Indeed," said the Doctor. "I lived in Virginia at one time myself." "In what part of Virginia?" asked one of the pickets. "I taught school one season at the home of a Mr. Holland, in the county of —," he replied. "Doctor," interrupted the man to whom he spoke, "give me your hand. I am Henry Holland, the boy you taught!" and such a handshake as only old teacher and old pupil could give was made on the spot. "And do you see the fellow on that horse yonder?" said Holland to his former teacher. "That's John —, and that is William —," and he pointed out half a dozen of Wolfe's former pupils, and such greeting may be imagined. A hurried council was held, the result of which was that Dr. Wolfe was told they would take the risk of disobeying orders and let him pass, thus proving that old friendships were stronger than present animosities. Indeed, it is true that no tie seems stronger than that binding teacher and pupil if the teacher has won the esteem of the pupil.

THE GEORGIA SECESSION CONVENTION.

The Georgia Division, U. D. C., sends out a programme for study and discussion a month in advance. The plan is admirable. In a circular giving a late programme there is an interesting and thrilling story under the caption to this article.

[From address by Hon. Hiram P. Bell December 3, 1901.]

I call your attention now to the personnel of the convention of 1861. It was composed of two hundred and ninety-five men, representing every interest of the State, representing every department of industrial endeavor, representing every type and class of ability in Georgia. There was a constellation of Georgia's most brilliant stars at the head of that memorable and historic body—Ex-Secretary of War George W. Crawford; Ex-Governors of Georgia Crawford and Johnson; Ex-United States Senators Toombs and Johnson; Ex-Justices of the Supreme Court Benning, Nisbet, Stephens, and Warner; Ex-Congressmen Stephens, Toombs, Colquitt, Poe, Barley, Nisbet, Chastain, and Murphey (Murphey died the day the convention assembled); and Ex-judges of the Superior Court almost innumerable, Hansell, Tripp, Rice, Reese, Harris, and Fleming—all men of the highest ability and the purest patriotism, who held the highest offices of the government, save that of the President of the United States. In addition to these able statesmen, three lawyers were in that convention who stood in the forefront of the bar in all the South—Benjamin H. Hill, Thomas R. R. Cobb, and Francis S. Bartow. Divinity and scholarship were represented by Nathan M. Crawford, President of Mercer University, and Alexander Means, ex-President of Emory College. The bar, the pulpit, the farm, the counter, the doctor shop, the office—everywhere everybody had the very best specimens of the race for representatives in that convention.

When we met, Asbury Hull moved that George W. Crawford should be elected president by acclamation. The significance of that selection lay in the fact that Hull was the embodiment of conservatism, purity of character, and the absence of madcap passion. He was a type of magnificent moral, conservative, and intellectual manhood. The next proposition was to select a secretary, and Muskogee, always in evidence when a good officer is needed, came to the front with Albert Lamar, with a blue cockade on his hat, and he was elected.

When the convention met on the 19th, Mr. Hull moved to go into secret session, and as soon as the doors were closed one of the finest historical characters that I ever knew arose; small, elegant, he looked as if he had just been withdrawn from a bandbox in his wife's boudoir. Cold as a Siberian icicle, clear as a tropical sunbeam, pure as the down of a seraph's wing—such was Eugenius A. Nisbet. Mr. Nisbet offered the following resolutions, which were taken up and read:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention it is the right and duty of Georgia to secede from the present Union and to coöperate with such of the other States as have or shall do the same for the purpose of forming a Southern Confederacy upon the basis of the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That a committee of — be appointed by the Chair to report an ordinance to assert the right and fulfill the obligation of the State of Georgia to secede from the Union."

History has recorded the consequences that followed from that resolution, and you will be surprised to hear that that pure, clear, and able man in about a twenty minutes' speech argued in favor of the adoption of that resolution, and based his argument solely upon the ground that it was the only way to prevent war! The argument was that if we did not secede we would fight among ourselves. There was no sort of idea of any war with the United States if we did secede! When he took his seat, Governor Johnson arose and presented a very remarkable paper—a substitute. He made a fifteen or twenty minutes' speech in its defense.

When he had finished, Thomas R. R. Cobb arose, free from passion, earnest, calm, pure, patriotic, and made a short speech, taking it for granted that of course we were going to secede, and down he sat. When he took his seat, Alexander H. Stephens arose under a high tide of excitement. He went on to picture the cost and suffering and sacrifice that the Union involved. He spoke of the benediction it had been to the people. He spoke of the glory and grandeur that it was destined, undissolved, to accomplish. "But," said he, "if you ever intend to secede, the sooner you do so, the better," which was a confession of judgment in open court. Mr. Toombs then arose, that combination of Cato, Agamemnon, and Mirabeau, and for about ten minutes with the skill of a master he told of the persecution in legislation and of the aggressions of the North upon the rights of the South. He closed with this remark: "Mr. President and gentlemen, these are facts. South Carolina has withdrawn. It remains for you to grasp in fraternity the bloody hand of Massachusetts or align yourselves with gallant South Carolina!"

When he concluded, Dr. Means arose and made a star-spangled banner speech, such as only he could make. Judge Reese, of Madison, made a strong, sturdy little talk. Just as the convention was about to adjourn Benjamin H. Hill took the floor, and by common consent he was recognized. Said he: "Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention, we now witness the dying throes of the grandest government God Almighty ever vouchsafed to man. Let us not be in haste to wrap around its corpse the winding sheet." And for thirty or forty minutes, with a power of speech and with a thrilling eloquence and with a logic characteristic of Benjamin H. Hill alone, he addressed that convention; and yet that speech, which ordinarily would have stirred multitudes to madness, fell upon that convention like the arrows aimed at the heart of Priam, bloodless to the ground. Francis S. Bartow, far back in the representative hall, arose, all on fire, and with decided power and energy and vim made a telling speech. The vote was taken: ayes, 166; noes, 130. The ordinance carrying the resolution into effect was adopted. George W. Crawford, the President, announced: "Gentlemen of the convention, I have the pleasure to announce that the State of Georgia is free, sovereign, and independent!"

On the 28th of January the convention appointed to the several Southern States the following commissioners charged with the duty of presenting to the authorities of said States the ordinance of secession with the reasons which induced its adoption. The commissioners were: Virginia, Henry L. Benning; Maryland, Ambrose R. Wright; Kentucky, Henry R. Jackson; Tennessee, Hiram P. Bell; Missouri, Luther J. Glenn; Arkansas, D. P. Hill; Delaware, D. C. Campbell; North Carolina, Samuel Hall; Texas, J. W. A. Sanford.

The grandest congressional delegation, in my opinion, in history was the delegation of Georgia to the Provisional Congress. Think of it! Bartow, Crawford, Kennan, Stephens, Toombs, Howell Cobb, Thomas R. R. Cobb, Benjamin Harvey Hill, and Augustus R. Wright! The trouble was that the world was against us! The grandest army that ever trod the planet was the Confederate army. It grasped the sparkling gem of victory from the cannon's smoking mouth on a hundred bloody fields and spangled the milky way of glory with its gorgeous jewelry of stars!

Programme Committee: Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, Tennille, Chairman; Mrs. J. W. Lee, Covington; Mrs. E. A. Pound, Waycross; Mrs. H. C. Carroll, Tennille.

Some Federal officers, after the capture of Wilmington, urged one of the belles to sing for them. She hesitated, but they urged, and then she said: "If I do, you will never ask me again." Her words to the "Southern Maiden's Lament for Her Country" were:

"Mute, mute are the harp strings—all music is hushed;
Our heart sighs, our longings, our hopes are all crushed!
(The bird from its nestlings torn fluttering away Lives but to die prisoned—the forester's prey.)
O blest native land! O dear Southland mine!
How long for thy freedom in vain shall I pine?"

Where, where are thy proud sons, so lordly in might?
They're mown down and fallen in blood-curdling fight;
Thy cities are ruin, thy valleys lie waste;
Their sunny enchantment the foe hath erased.
O Fatherland sweet! O Fatherland mine!
When, when will the Lord cry, "Revenge, it is mine?"

The clank of the fetter falls fearful and loud
From the arm of thy chained sons, so brave and so proud!
The day draggeth long—long, longer the night;
Captivity withers the South with its blight.
O Fatherland dear! O dear Southland mine!
Our stricken hearts pray: 'May sweet peace yet be thine!'"

CONCERNING BATTLE OF THE CRATER.

BY N. J. FLOYD, 2117 N. CALVERT ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

I see that Comrade R. W. Jones, of Laurel, Miss., undertakes in the present number of the VETERAN to controvert some statements of Comrade B. F. Phillips in the November VETERAN concerning the battle of the Crater and the important part which Mahone's Brigade took in it. The fact that Mahone had recently been made a major general and was then in command of Anderson's old division, comprising in part Mahone's old brigade, has led many careless readers of history into the erroneous belief that Mahone's Brigade captured the Crater.

While in front of Petersburg Mahone's command, Anderson's old division (embracing Mahone's Brigade), was the supporting division; and as soon as the explosion occurred General Lee, perhaps not fully realizing at the moment the extent of the disaster, sent a courier to General Mahone directing that two of his brigades be withdrawn from the line and hurried to Elliot's Salient to drive out the enemy, who had captured it and a portion of the battle line at that point. Not many minutes elapsed before Mahone's Brigade, commanded by Brigadier General Weisiger, and Wright's Georgia Brigade, under Colonel Hall, were on the ground and forming for a charge. General Weisiger, thinking the enemy were also preparing for a charge, did not wait to perfect his formation, but ordered his brigade to charge at a double-quick; and with wild yells they rushed forward, mixed with the enemy, and sent them scurrying from the field. The gallant Georgians, though a little slower in grasping the situation, were fully up to the Virginians in dash and enthusiasm, and forced their way with ball and bayonet until they touched elbows with the Virginians, and had retaken the remaining portion of the battle line up to the south margin of the Crater, which was crowded with the enemy and smoking from the fusillade which they kept up.

General Mahone quickly saw that the gap was too big to be filled by the men thrown into it, for the Crater and the small portion of the battle line to the north of it remained yet to be retaken. He immediately ordered Wilcox's old Alabama brigade, now commanded by Brig. Gen. J. C. C. Sanders, to withdraw from its position and finish the work so gallantly begun and prosecuted by the other two brigades.

It was generally known that the situation was a critical one, and the Alabamians moved with celerity and enthusiasm until they were in position to charge the Crater. As I was a member of that brigade, though a native-born Virginian, I shall not speak in detail of their exploits; but with bayonets and clubbed muskets they captured the Crater, and about noon the next day they had the honor of receiving from the foe a request that they be permitted to remove their wounded and bury their dead. And during the truce, which of course General Lee granted, they had the pleasure of snubbing General Ferrero, the dandified commander of the negro troops, and leaving him to infer that the ragged Rebels did not consider him quite up to their class.

When the white flag was raised in the Federal line, General Sanders ordered the sharpshooters to cease firing and anxiously started an inquiry for a white handkerchief with which to respond to the flag of truce. There was not one that showed enough white in the whole brigade! As the truce bearer, flanked by two handsomely uniformed officers with glossy white collars and cuffs, mounted their breastworks and started across the field, a wag in Company F, 9th Alabama, said in a subdued voice to those around him: "Boys, why can't one of us take off his shirt and offer it to the general to be used as a flag of truce?" Captain Featherston, who commanded the company, chanced to overhear the remark, and quickly replied: "That would never do; those white-collared fellows might think we have raised the black flag!"

The writer went into the war as a lieutenant in the regiment to which Comrade Phillips belonged, and knew him personally. He was a good soldier and stood well with his officers. His account of the capture of the Crater is absolutely correct excepting a few inaccuracies of details. The Georgia Brigade was not "driven back with heavy loss." The loss was very heavy, but the brigade was only temporarily checked. And while, as he states, only the Alabama Brigade struggled with the foe in the Crater proper, each of the others helped to capture it, and by their desperate and stubborn fighting they added new luster to the fame which they had already won in many other hotly contested battles.

GRAVE OF MAJ. GEN. JOHN S. BOWEN—There has been controversy in Vicksburg in regard to the grave of General Bowen which has called forth publication in the press. The Herald prints a letter from Mr. Albert Arnold, undertaker, who writes: "In June, 1887, I was acting sexton of the City Cemetery and buried the remains of General Bowen (shipped here from Edwards, Miss.) in the Confederate Cemetery at Vicksburg in the spot selected for the same by the late Mrs. Wright, at that time President of the Ladies' Confederate Cemetery Association. At no time since has the grave of General Bowen been 'lost.' I am familiar with every fact pertaining to his burial here, and so are also both Judge F. Speed and Capt. William Chamberlain."

WHY SHARPSBURG WAS "A DRAWN BATTLE."

BY R. T. MOCKBEE.

I have read with great interest the "pen picture" of the battle of Sharpsburg as drawn so vividly by Comrades W. R. Hamby and C. A. Richardson, and from what I know I don't think the picture overdrawn. But from my view the picture is incomplete. I will try to show that others took a part on that famous field that changed the aspect of affairs.

In James D. McCabe's life of General Lee we are told that Burnside's Corps, fifteen thousand strong, made a rush for the bridge across the Antietam River on McClellan's left and drove back Toombs's Brigade of four hundred. Pressing on, he reached the crest held by D. R. Jones's Division, of Longstreet's Corps. Jones's troops were beaten back, and Burnside seemed about to seize the victory even at this late hour (4 P.M., September 17, 1862). Just as this time the old "Light Division," led by that prince of soldiers, A. P. Hill, came on the field after a forced march of eighteen miles from Harper's Ferry.

The writer will ever remember the scenes that met our view as we came on the field. The men of Jones and Toombs were in full retreat before Burnside's overwhelming force, who already had possession of the road from Sharpsburg to Shepherdstown, and we were greeted by the "Hip! hip! hurrahs!" of Burnside's men over the capture of a battery of four of our guns. Their rejoicing was short-lived, though, for the men who led the advance at Mechanicsville and Gaines's Mill and who reached Frazier's Farm at that critical moment aided the gallant South Carolinians under Jenkins to drive back Fitz John Porter from that hotly fought field. These men on the 9th of August had reached Cedar Run just in time to snatch victory for Jackson from the grasp of the "braggart pope," and at Second Manassas they held the railroad for three days against the combined assaults of Hooker's Corps, Heintzelman's Corps, and Kearney's Division.

A. P. Hill's Division mustered, according to his official report, about two thousand men, but was under the immediate orders of General Lee. He moved to the assistance of General Jones, and drove Burnside's forces from the Ridge, cleared the Shepherdstown road, recaptured the battery, and followed the Federals across an open field of freshly plowed fallow land to a stone fence. Behind this fence we could see a strong force of infantry posted; but on went the men of the old "Light Division" (A. P. Hill's), the brigades led by Branch, Archer, Pender, Field, Thomas, and Gregg over the stone fence on through a field of waving corn and back to the sheltering banks of the Antietam River.

It is evident, from the condition of affairs at the time of A. P. Hill's arrival on the field, that General Lee's position would have been untenable in a very short time in view of Burnside's victorious advance, cutting Lee's line of communication by the Shepherdstown road, and by which he would have been enabled to have, with every prospect of success, continued his advance, and completely turning Lee's right, compelling him to yield the position he had with such obstinacy held in the face of more than double his own army, with a loss unprecedented in any battle of the same duration. Lee had no men to spare from his already hard-pressed and thin lines of his left and center to meet and check Burnside's advance; and I believe that but for the timely arrival of A. P. Hill's Division and the promptness with which he, his subordinates, and the brave men under them hurled back Burnside's hosts on Lee's right Sharpsburg could not be called a drawn battle, and I believe that if McClellan had renewed the attack on the 18th he could never have claimed a drawn battle at Sharpsburg. A. P. Hill's Division lay behind that stone fence all day, at first expecting a renewal of the contest, and then praying that Burnside would try to do for us what we had done for them—to drive us from behind that stone fence.

When it comes to erecting monuments to commemorate the valor of Confederate soldiers at Sharpsburg, one should be placed on the spot where stood the big straw rick about the center of the fallow field, and from the top of which Gen. A. P. Hill surveyed the field and directed the movements of the old "Light Division" as it advanced to charge the stone fence, the last and strongest position held by the enemy on General Lee's right. Near that point fell the brave L. O. B. Branch, leading his brigade in the charge, and all over that field lay the dead of the "Light Division." Some of the best blood of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama mingled with that fallow field as an oblation on the altar of their sunny Southland. And the survivors of the "Light Division" will ever cherish the memory of their comrades and our peerless commander, whose character as a true, brave leader was illustrated by the last words uttered by his dying commanders, Jackson and Lee.

MRS. W. R. DICKERSON, BUFORD, TENN.

The above represents this venerable lady, eighty-two years of age. It is quite as she appears now. Mrs. Dickerson passed through the thrilling period of war and reconstruction at her present country home, ever self-possessed amidst the most crucial tests. At one time she rushed between her husband and a Federal, who seemed determined to kill him.

PRIVATE SOLDIER LIFE—HUMOROUS FEATURES.

BY JAMES REESE (OF THE EDNEY GRAYS), ASHEVILLE, N. C.

In April, 1861, at Edneyville, Henderson County, N. C., a company of volunteers was organized, taking the name of Edney Greys. Their commission was dated May 15. Their officers were: Captain, Balas M. Edney; Lieutenants, Mathew N. Love, Joseph H. Freeman, and John C. Edward; Sergeants, James P. Sawyer, John S. Plumblee, James Maxwell, Isaac M. Lyda, and Ambrose A. Featherstone.

Soon after this date we left Edneyville for Asheville, N. C., where they were to drill and be trained for the war that was coming. We camped the first night in a meadow near Cane Creek, on Mr. Alexander Robinson's farm, where our first sentinel, Reuben D. Ballard, was posted. We did not have any guns, so Reuben armed himself with a stick. His greatest trouble was caused by "Uncle" Jim Lyda, who would set cats to fighting near his beat.

In due time we moved on for Asheville, arriving there in the afternoon. With much pomp and patriotic pride we marched up Main Street. George Davis beat the drum, Allan Robertson played the fife, and John Brock, the giant of the crowd, displayed the flag. Having marched through the town, we went into camp with the Haywood Invincibles, a company made up in Haywood County and commanded by Capt. (afterwards Lieut. Col.) Sam C. Bryson, on College Street and established Camp Patton.

Sam Sumner became the barber, and cut our hair so short that our heads resembled freshly hulled walnuts. This duty exempted Sam from drill. Joe King "lowed his foot was too big for the business, anyhow. Jim Sawyer got a hatchet, staked off guard lines around the camp, and posted sentinels.

Rules, regulations, and army discipline were established with strict injunctions that were to be complied with. For being absent from roll call without leave, we were required to dig and bury a stump. The first victim was "Crooked Arm" Jim Sumner.

Soon other troops joined our camp, and a regiment was organized, with T. L. Clingman, Colonel; Saint Clair Dearing, Lieutenant Colonel; and Henry M. Rutledge, Major. It was numbered 25, with the Edney Grays as Company A. Soon after this we moved to a new camp, west of the town, named Camp Clingman, after our colonel. The boys became restless, fearing the war would be over before they could get a chance to do any active service.

The time finally came, however, for us to leave Asheville for Raleigh, where we halted for a few days, and then moved on to Wilmington, where we arrived about midnight and camped seven miles below the city, on Mitchels Sound.

The next morning a fusillade of words and oaths was exchanged between two messmates, Drake Nelson and John Bell, about the coffee. Each accused the other of putting salt in his cup. They had taken the water for making the coffee out of the sound, which they thought was a river! They were very soberly informed by Carey Payne that the Atlantic Ocean was salty. We had scarcely gotten through breakfast when an old "sager" (so called by the mountaineers) came with fish to sell, and among the lot was one that to us appeared to be deformed. One side was white, the other black, and both eyes were on one side of its head. When we called the old man's attention to this, he said: "O, that fish is a flounder." Lump Freeman asked him where in the world he had been floundering to get himself in such a shape as that.

Some of the boys were inclined to "speculate"—to steal and then sell—on "goobers." For this purpose Barzilla Cross waded the sound one night, as he thought the opposite side would afford a better field for the enterprise; but on his return he missed his way and was caught by the guard. This gave Barzilla another kind of guard work.

About this time the regiment was ordered to Wilmington on general review. While marching along the street Lee Wright (his attention having been attracted by a sign displayed from an upper window) ran against a signpost and skinned his head. Lee did not like it, and promptly expressed his opinion of people who were so ignorant as to place such obstacles in a civil man's way.

The militia of the surrounding country turned out on this occasion. They were a motley-looking crowd, and the men from the mountains gave them the name of the "Flintlock Gang," many of them being armed with flintlock muskets.

After our return to camp, Bill G. Conner concluded to give Jonathan Nix a whipping, but Jonathan was (as Bill afterwards expressed it) "too contrary." Bill changed his mind, and called on Pose Conner and Anderson Head to help him make "Johuce" behave himself. Here the captain had a gymnastic pole put up for the boys to act upon by skinning the cat and hanging by their heels—as the captain termed it, "to develop their muscle." Obe Conner tried to hang by his heels and fell. Lum Maxwell said: "Obe developed a good-sized muscle on his head." Uncle Cal Edney offered to bet five dollars that the captain could hang longer by his chin than any man in the regiment. Captain Edney, thinking that Cal meant to cast a reflection on his long jaw, got mad, cursed Cal, and had the pole torn down.

When we left this place, we went south to Charleston. Arriving there in the morning, we quartered at a hotel for dinner and supper. It was quite a display of backwoods modesty that the rural mountaineers exhibited. In the evening Captain Edney thought it would be a treat to show the Grays the city. While marching along the street Joe Edney asked Burgan Whitaker to hold his gun and he would slap the taste out of the mouth of a negro that was standing on the sidewalk with a bunch of cigars in his hand. Joe hit the negro, but failed to make him bat his eyes, as he proved to be a tobacco sign. Joe licked his fingers, took back his gun, cursed the iron negro and the tobacco dealer, and inquired for the nearest saloon. When we left Charleston, we moved toward Savannah and stopped between the Coosawhatchie and Pocatigo Rivers near a village called Grahamville.

Here we drew our first pay of Confederate money. This led quite a number of the boys to see the importance of possessing a timepiece; so they sent by Lieutenant Edney to Charleston for a lot of watches. In a week's time it would have been impossible to find out the correct time, as every man claimed his watch was right, and no two of them were the same!

Bob Featherstone's stopped one day, and he got out his tube wrench and screw-driver (and Ambrose says he borrowed Uncle Cal Edney's hatchet) and gave the thing an overhauling. It did not take him long to find what he supposed to be a hair wound around one of the wheels. He succeeded in getting the "hair" out, but the watch wouldn't run afterwards; so Bob concluded to sell it and look at the sun when he wanted to know the time of day.

Here the regiment became infested with malaria, and Dr. Satchel, the regimental surgeon, recommended a little whisky, which he had issued from the hospital tent in the mornings.

It wasn't long before the malady became chronic. The Doctor soon cured this, however, for he gave them something with the whisky; and as Uncle Jim Lyda expressed it, "They had the pleasure of tasting their lick twice—going and coming."

Sam Wheeling said that as he was going for his dram one morning he met Brock coming back. All at once Brock began to scrape and bow, heave and hump, and he lost all his whisky, all the ginger cakes he had eaten the day before, as well as the taste for Dr. Satchel's whisky. Sam said that Brock's calamity cured him (Sam), and he did not trouble the Doctor for his drink that morning.

Our captain, fearing that he would have an attack of malaria, secured a jug of his own, and hid it beneath his bunk. Uncle Cal Edney, Ambrose Featherstone, Mark Williams, and Jule Poor, fearing to let a jug be so near headquarters, thought the best thing to do was to confiscate it. The captain seemed to think their action too small a thing to take any official notice of.

Jim Sawyer, John B. Edney, Isaac Lyda, and Milt Fortune, to prevent malaria, took a few doses of the stolen "booze," which seemed to make them feel rich. At the same time it enraged Captain Edney, and he threatened to have the "Rogue's Roll" played after them! Sawyer told him he would have to play it himself, as he appeared to be the only one who knew it. Soon we left Grahamville for North Carolina again. While waiting at Wilmington for transportation across the river George Bennyfield, Bill Wheeling, and several others went aboard a steamboat to inspect it, and the captain of the boat swore at them and promptly ordered them off. Jake Case drew a butcher knife, and the captain had immediate and important business in his cabin.

While crossing the river some of the boys threw Brock's cooking stove overboard. This put an end to his ginger cake business, and he promptly reported it to the captain, who told Brock that, as he was the tallest man in the regiment, he (the captain) would detail him to wade in and get it out. This Brock declined to do, but declared that the Confederacy should pay him for it. While waiting for the train to take us to Goldsboro the captain put us in the freight depot and placed guards at the doors to keep us out of mischief. There were several bags of peanuts in the depot, and it wasn't long before quite a number of haversacks were filled with them. From Goldsboro we went to Kinston, where we scouted and did picket duty up and down the Nuse River.

In April, 1862, the first conscript act was passed. All men between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five were required to remain in the service two years longer, or until the end of the war. This caused a general reorganization and election in our regiment. Captain Edney resigned, and Lieut. M. N. Love was elected to fill his place. The new lieutenants were John S. Plumblee, Julius A. Poor, and Andrew Cooper. Clingman remained colonel. Lieutenant Colonel Dearing resigned, and Maj. H. M. Rutledge became lieutenant colonel. Sam C. Bryson, being the oldest captain, became major. In a short time Colonel Clingman was promoted to brigadier general, Rutledge to colonel, Bryson to lieutenant colonel, and Capt. John W. Francis, of Company D, to major. Among recruits were Larkin, Spencer, and Clayburn Freeman, who joined us at that time.

From Kinston we moved to Mosley Hall, a village about halfway between Kinston and Goldsboro. On the way Harvey Souther dropped his knapsack off the train, and in jumping off for it came near breaking his neck.

Our next move was for Virginia, and while waiting for the train at Weldon, N. C., Hamp Owenby got on what he called "too big a mess of whisky." He declared that he saw the cars run over the top of the depot; and if the railroad people were not more careful, he would not ride with them. He said if General Ransom would tell him where to stop and wait he would rather walk on, anyhow.

We moved to Petersburg, where we arrived early on Sunday morning. Some of us soon paid a visit to the snuff factory, and got supplies which caused much sneezing.

We went into camp on Swift Creek on the 20th of June, 1862, where we stayed for four days, and then moved to Richmond. There we camped around and in the capitol building. The next morning early we were moved out in the direction of the White Oak Swamps, where we met Seagle's Division; and as Obe Conner said, "This was something else."

Prose Conner was shot through both legs and both arms at the same time. (I will not write of the killed and wounded, but only of the peculiar incidents.)

While Cary Payne was going to the rear to have his wound dressed he was stopped by General Ransom, who asked him if he was badly hurt. Cary said: "No; it's nothing but a scratch; just enough to fool the doctor." The General then asked: "How do you like fighting?" "O, General, it's fine sport, but a little dangerous."

A squad of the Grays, having been sent out to skirmish, were caught between two fires. It goes without saying that they hugged the ground very closely, and realized for the first time what it was to be scared. John Lyda will tell you to this day that his legs did him a greater service that day than ever before or since. Sam Wheeling said it was the first genuine surprise he had ever had, and he did not want to repeat it. We were relieved when night came, but were ordered out early next morning. The fighting amounted to nothing more than a general skirmish, for the Yankees soon, as John Hutching said, "got on a hump for the shelter of their gunboats."

We were the victors in every battle and skirmish until we got to Malvern Hill, and John Summy said: "It would have been better if we had left that Malvern Hill business alone."

We moved back again to Richmond and Drury's Bluff. Here the regiment put on quite a different appearance. Company A numbered something over a hundred when they left North Carolina; now not twenty answered to roll call.

We stayed around Richmond and Petersburg until the latter part of August, until we got some more recruits; then we moved to Northern Virginia. Here we halted for a short time at Rapidan Station, by the Rapidan River. From here we moved on to Culpeper C. H., then on to Warrenton, Manassas Junction, Shepherdstown, and Frederick, Md.

After pulling, hauling, and skirmishing around there, our regiment was ordered back to the Monocacy River, where we made a short halt; and while some of the boys were skinning a beef, there was a ruse made and we were ordered to move at once. We hated to leave that beef. George Edney said it was a shame, as it was the first time we had had anything worth fighting for, and now had to run and leave it!

We moved on down to the Aqueduct (this was a structure of masonry by which the canal crossed the river), which we were ordered to destroy; but as it was built of heavy stones, it proved a hard job; and as the Yankees got to crowding us, we had to get out. To do this we had to cross on the walls of the Aqueduct; and as the night was dark and the walls narrow, it was a slow business, and we felt quite uncomfortable. Suddenly it was reported that a regiment of cavalry was coming, and some one gave the command to get out of the road. This almost caused a stampede. Some tried to climb the bluff, some jumped into the muddy canal. Claibe Freeman tried to get under a small hut on the banks of the canal. Next day Colonel Bryson jokingly asked him why he did it. Claibe said he did it to keep the colonel and other big fellows from running over him.

We got back across the river, moved back on the hill, took up our position, and stayed there all day. When night came, we started for Harper's Ferry. We marched all night, and crossed the Potomac just at daylight at a village called "Point of Rocks." It was sometime the next day that we landed in the vicinity of Harper's Ferry.

After the place surrendered, we moved out near the Shenandoah River and camped. We thought we would get a rest here, but about sundown the "long roll" told us something else. We were each given an extra hundred cartridges, and started on the march. After marching all night, we crossed at daylight again to the Maryland shore. We were now nearing Sharpsburg, and we knew by the noise in front of us that times were lively. We were ordered to sling knapsacks, and that was the last we ever saw of our regalia! We double-quickened about two miles from right to left, and charged up a hill near the old Duncan church and routed the enemy.

While one of the sharpshooters was in front of the regiment he found his ammunition was getting low, and this caused him to plunder a dead Federal. He took off cartridge box, haversack, and canteen. The canteen is preserved by its captor to the present day. The haversack was well loaded with hard-tack and bacon, which of course were very acceptable at that time.

It was here that Ben Enloe discharged his gun with the muzzle near George Edney's ear. This so enraged George that he reached for a rock to throw at Ben, who jumped behind a tree on the side next to the enemy. It seemed that he had rather risk a Yankee bullet than a rock thrown by one of his own men!

When night came and all was quiet, Claibe Freeman thought it a good time to get himself a better pair of shoes by slipping them from a dead man near by. As he attempted to take them the "corpse" told him to "Hold on there!" Claibe said he was sorry, but he had mistaken him for a dead Yankee. The man said he was not a dead Yankee, and that if Claibe tried that game again he would find him to be one of the liveliest Rebels he ever met.

We lay on the field all that night and next day, and when night came again General Jackson marched us across to Virginia near Martinsburg. Here we rested all day, but when night came we were on the move again. We marched all night, and went into camp just before daybreak. When morning came, we found ourselves at the same place that we had left the night before. We did not understand this at the time, but found out later that General Jackson had marched us between the Yankees and a drove of cattle that had been brought out of Maryland. The next night we did the same thing, and marched out the second drove. Here a number of the Grays washed their shirts in the Opequan Creek. General Ransom remonstrated with us for standing in the sun. He was afraid we would get "sunburnt."

From here we moved back to Upperville. We had no blankets; and when one night a hard storm came up and rained out our fires, it really was one of the gloomiest times of the war.

Joe Lyda dressed and cooked a beef tripe. Joe could cook a pot of hominy or a pumpkin to perfection. He declared that he did not mean to starve, if all the citizens' hogs in the country suffered for it. Joe was not a thief, but he was not going to go hungry if he could help it. His brother Jack was somewhat different in such things. In time of battle he was as cool and deliberate as he is to-day preaching in his pulpit to a quiet congregation.

It was now October. The nights were getting cool; and as we had lost our blankets, we "kinder doubled up an' slept in piles" like so many pigs. In such situations the tall ones did not fare as well as the shorter ones. Such fellows as Jesse Maxwell and Wesley Love were bound to suffer with the cold, but they were handy to look over high places. The shorter ones did not envy them their high places unless it was when we struck persimmon trees.

Our next move was to Madison C. H. Here several of the Grays ate a lot of green persimmons. The fruit made the boys sick, and Curtis said: "The loss was greater than the gain." John B. Edney said that he could make his "licker" stick by greasing it, but the same rule would not hold good with green persimmons.

Jim Maxwell "allowed" it might have done if we had had enough grease; but that commodity could not be had every day, even for medical purposes.

When we moved again, it was in the direction of Fredericksburg. It was a hard, muddy march, and rain fell on us nearly all the way. It was almost impossible to do any cooking, especially baking of bread. Cary Payne tried to eat his dough raw, but finally he declared that he could not be a hog and a soldier too. So he haversacked it and carried it on.

It was now late in November, and we stopped in the neighborhood of Fredericksburg, where we went into temporary winter quarters.

On the morning of the 11th we were awakened by two blank cannon shots, which was the signal that the enemy were to cross the Rappahannock. We were hurried out and down to the town, where we were held in readiness until the morning of the 13th. A regiment was wanted to cross Marye's Heights behind the stone wall in front of the town, and ours was the one chosen by General Longstreet. [History has it that it was the 24th, but this is a mistake.] The 25th was the only one to cross the Heights. We were led by Col. Sam C. Bryson. We got in position with the Georgians behind a stone wall at the foot of the hill. It did not take more than two minutes to make the run, but during this time more than one hundred of the 25th fell. The first one of the Grays to get wounded was the captain—M. M. Love—and the third was the first lieutenant. The enemy made several attempts to take the works, but were defeated with great loss. When night came, we were relieved and sent back. There was no more fighting that night, and but little shelling and sharpshooting the next day.

The enemy recrossed the river and gave up the fight at that point. Burnside was relieved of the command. Two days later we moved back to our old camp for some days. General Ransom's Brigade was ordered back to Richmond. While we were passing through Richmond the General had us to double-quick to keep us out of mischief. There were crowds of well-dressed free negroes who had come out to look at the ragged "Rebs." Occasionally the troops would make an awkward maneuver, the darkies would get mixed in with the rank, and were almost run over. Often they would come out bareheaded. A few days afterwards many dirty Rebs were seen wearing good hats that they claimed to have captured in some previous skirmish.

We camped near what was called the Richmond Bone Yard. The next morning John Hutchinson looked around and declared he was insulted, as President Davis had had us taken to the wrong place. He wanted it understood that our bones were not to be left there yet.

Our next camp was near Petersburg. Here we all, except John Tyler, Freeman, and Ben Enloe, had the itch. Spencer Freeman said John Tyler did not have it because he was too lazy to scratch, and no man could have it successfully and not scratch. Ben was too contrary to have anything that any one else had.

We were next ordered to Goldsboro, N. C., and from there to Warsaw, a station on the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad, and from this place to Kimmonsville. We (the Grays) were sent on picket duty one night with Lieutenant Plumblee in command. While Bob Whitaker was roasting potatoes a hog came around. Bob took a piece of rail and hit the hog in the head, and we had pork. Of course he wouldn't let the hog bite him. Several of the boys went on picket duty that night. They did not see many signs of the enemy, and they took advantage of being between the Yankee and Rebel lines. Their chances were good, and they got several geese, a turkey, and a lot of sweet potatoes. The boys claimed that the geese were old and tough. Obe Conner said that his goose might have done better if he had cleaned it better; but when he scalded it to pick the feathers, the water was too hot and the goose got "kinder sot," and he had to cook it with a good many feathers on it. When we returned to camp, we were well supplied with sweet potatoes and other products.

We went back to Wilmington. This time we were troubled with the provost guards, a thing new to us. We could not visit without a pass, and the greatest trouble was that so few could imitate General Ransom's signature.

From Wilmington we moved to Topsail Sound. One morning we were aroused and ordered to march. We tramped all day on a circuitous route, and returned to the camp we left that morning. Pink Johnson carried a rabbit all the way. He said if he had known that we were coming back he would have "treed" it before he started.

Our next move was to North East River. Here some of the boys got a possum, and it was so thin that Jasper Williams proposed to throw in a piece of bacon for a share of the possum. Still, it was too thin to be good; and if the Confederacy had not been in narrow straits for supplies, we would never have eaten that possum.

We returned to Goldsboro, where we met the captain and several of the boys, whose wounds had healed sufficiently to enable them to return to service.

From here we went to a little place called Trenton, not far from Newbern. When we halted, Colonel Bryson rode ahead and came upon our pickets. The Colonel failed to answer when challenged, and the picket fired upon him, whereupon the Colonel returned to the regiment in a hurry. Major Grady laughed at him and at once proceeded to teach him the countersign.

After remaining here in Trenton a short time, we returned to Kinston; but only to stay until we were detached to General Daniel's Brigade at Washington, N. C., on the Tar River.

Our commissary wagons failed to get up to us, and we tried to borrow rations from Daniel's commissary; but they would not loan to us. It was plain that something would have to be done, so some of the Grays arranged what they called a "Raiding Party." That night a hogpen was raided, and the next day a search was made for pork. Major Grady was called on to assist in the investigation. The Major was a good officer, and one of the best men in the army; but he did not understand how to hunt for pork. A part of it was under the captain's bunk, but the captain did not know that. In a short time it was made known that two men had deserted during the night. That ended the search, for it was taken for granted that Lum Wright and Bob Stepp had the five hogs.

We shelled and skirmished around Washington for several days. The right wing of the regiment was sent out one night to recapture a caisson that had been disabled during the day. A squad was detailed to reconnoiter with instructions from Colonel Bryson to step three hundred and seventy paces down the road. The leader was told to step it. He had gone but a short distance when Henry Edney very soberly said: "A horse does not step as far when pacing as he does when walking." Before we had gone the three hundred and seventy paces we encountered the enemy. Things were pretty lively for a little while, but none of us were hurt. When the firing ceased, we could hear canteens rattle in front of us. When we got back and the colonel found that we had not gone the three hundred and seventy paces, he at once demanded an explanation. Henry Edney told him that the reason we did not go the whole distance was because the Yankees objected to it. In a few days we returned to our brigade at Kinston, where we camped near Jackson's Mill, below Kinston.

While we were at this camp one of the Grays concluded to go courting. After due preparation he entered the parlor, and was having a good time with the girls. Several of the boys donned their equipments, walked in and arrested him, and escorted him back to camp. It was all a joke, but it made him mad. He swore that it was an outrage, and that if it ever occurred again he would go to the Yankees, if the Confederacy sank by it!

From here we moved to Gum Swamp, a few miles below Kinston, where the enemy came very near getting the regiment surrounded. Not many were hurt, but we got one of the worst scares of the war. Some of the boys wanted to fight, some prayed, some swore, and nearly all wanted to run if they could get a chance. John Summy said that when the Yankees saw that we were about to get down to business they made a gap in their lines and let us out.

Our next move was back to Drury's Bluff, where we met Burnside. Both lines extended across the Richmond and Petersburg Turnpike and railroad. During the battle the Grays were thrown out to skirmish in front, and the division was moved to the left. This threw the Grays in front of Clingman's Brigade. Clingman ordered a charge, and Company A went into it with them and carried the works. It was one of the battles where the two lines came together and clubbed each other with their guns. Some of the enemy surrendered and some ran, but the ones that ran fared the worst.

After quiet was restored, General Clingman sent us back to our own (Ransom's) brigade.

General Ransom had been wounded, and Colonel Rutledge commanded the brigade until the battle was over. It was here that Company A discarded the Mississippi rifles for new Enfields, which we had captured from the enemy.

From Drury's Bluff we went back to Garysburg, where we camped for a while. It was at Garysburg that Wylie Hensley and Arthur Laughter had a fight. It was a draw for quite a while, but finally Arthur had to call for help. He said afterwards that he didn't mind the whipping, as he had the honor of making the laziest man in the regiment tired.

Bird Laughter waded the Roanoke River one night for the purpose of foraging. He divested himself of his clothing, which, with the other essential to the business, was placed on his head. He then proceeded to wade; but the water proved deeper than he thought for, and by some means his clothes and other articles were carried off by the current. He returned to camp, but there had to be requisition for clothing made out before he could pass dress parade.

We moved from here to Tarboro, and then on to Plymouth by the Roanoke. We captured the town and about 2,800 prisoners. During the fight General Ransom asked a squad of the Grays to dislodge some of the enemy's sharpshooters that were annoying us from the upstairs windows of some of the buildings. To do this, we entered the upper story of a large brick building, but did not find the enemy. From this position we were in plain sight of the fort that had not surrendered, and we thought it would be a good idea to fire into it. We accordingly broke the windows and opened fire. The enemy soon discovered our position, and turned several pieces of artillery on the building. Immediately the room was filled with flying brickbats, red dust, and cannon balls. We had business on the ground, and delayed not in attending to it.

The battle began about five o'clock in the morning, and at three in the afternoon the flag on the last fort went down. As soon as we got into town we began to hunt for something to eat. Cheese, crackers, bacon, canned goods, and everything else that could be eaten were devoured by the hungry Rebs. Those Grays who were living or not too badly wounded got one square meal. After the inner man was satisfied, we began to hunt for something to wear. Quite a number went in for fine footwear. Although a paper collar and a fine shoe would hardly harmonize with a dingy, faded gray uniform, yet such combination became quite common.

From here we moved back to Greenville, on the Tar River. Our commissary wagons failed to get up with us, and we were compelled to make what Henry Edney called a "conscript pork speculation." We arrived there on Sunday, and it was not startling to hear a navy pistol fire, and sometimes when handled by the unskilled a hog would squeal. Hosey Ruff was accidentally wounded by a stray pistol bullet. Some one said the man that fired the shot was a poor judge of good pork to take Hosey for a hog.

When we moved again, it was by way of Kinston to Newbern. It was a long, sandy march of five days, and the boys that wore fine boots (captured at Plymouth) got tender-footed, as the thin bottoms caused blisters. Stark Simms said pride was a great sin, and he was bound to acknowledge the corn. John B. Edney offered three dollars for a peck of dried beans to "founder" his boots with, as he had found that that was the best thing he had ever tried to cure a tight. We arrived in the vicinity of Newbern, and had the place about captured when we received orders from General Lee to return to Virginia. We started at night; the road was through a swampy country, with ditches cut on each side. Tom Case fell into a ditch on an old abandoned artillery horse, and he said that at first he thought he had fallen on an alligator and that it was going to attack him. Wesley Love suggested that a horse might have thought that he was in contact with an alligator.

We had several wagons loaded with corn; and as our rations were short, we helped ourselves to raw corn. Pink Johnson declared that ten ears of corn were not enough to feed a horse at a meal, for he had eaten fourteen ears himself and was still hungry. Next morning we stopped in the ruins of a small town which had been burned. We started fires in the fireplaces, and parched and ate corn with a relish.

In due time we were back in Virginia, and we met Butler's forces at Bermuda Hundred, near a church below Richmond, and between the James and Appomattox Rivers. We fought, skirmished, and shelled here for three weeks. It was here that some of the men got blind at night, and had to be led by those who could see. It fell to Burgin Whitaker to lead Joe Mitchell one night; and to make sure Joe was not putting on, Burgin led him into a ditch. After Joe had fallen, Burgin told him to "Look out! There is a hole!" Joe said it was a "dadburned scamp that would treat a blind man that way." It was here also that the Federal pickets and ours exchanged tobacco for coffee. They would get up a hot firing, and Minie balls would fly thick for a while; then some Yankee would say in an undertone: "Johnnie, if you will meet me halfway, I will give you some good coffee for some good Dixie tobacco." We always found Mr. Yankee as good as his word; and when the exchange was completed and future arrangements had been made, he would say: "Now, Johnnie, we had better get back to our places before an officer comes." The officers would quarrel with us and threaten punishment when they found out we had been trading with the Yankees; but they would drink the cup of real coffee with great enjoyment and read the Yankee newspapers with interest.

We fought and skirmished until June 15, 1864, when we were put on a forced march to meet Grant's army in front of Petersburg. This was the beginning of the siege, which was one continuous battle until March, 1865.

Here we had our first experience with the never-to-be-forgotten mortar shells. At first it was almost impossible for us to see the shells; but soon we learned to look for them, and then the bombproof was invented, which was a cave dug in the ground and covered with logs and sod and earth.

While here the company was given one day out of every ten to go back to the Appomattox River and do their washing. On one of these occasions some of the boys got on a "raze," as they called it. Jess Maxwell made an attempt to knock a basket of pies off a negro's head. He missed the basket, but he knocked the negro into a cellar. Jess got the basket, and ran and left the unfortunate darky without either pies or basket.

There were many more incidents of this nature; but the writer was taken prisoner here, and was not able to note those that occurred between that time and the 9th of April, 1865. Suffice it to say that on that day we realized that our "cause" had failed, and that we were conquered subjects; but we were not yet convinced that State rights were not right.

It was then that the Confederate soldier laid down his gun, took leave of his chief, rolled his dingy blanket for the last time, swung on his empty haversack and canteen, and started through the wastes of desolation for his home to meet his wife or his mother, sister, and father, and go to work to regain what he had lost.

He holds no ill will against the foe who overcame him; but he detests the freed negro and the Northern carpetbag-ger, the latter the most atrocious brute of the human kind. Yes, he can shake the hand of the old Union soldier; but for the carpetbagger he has contempt.

But we are rapidly passing away, nearing the end of the long march. Soon the sultry suns and the dust of time will have done with us forever. As we near the Rubicon let us hope that the last battle may be victorious; then we will cross the river and, in the language of the immortal Jackson, "Rest in the shade."

THE DEATH OF JACKSON.

BY MRS. C. J. M. JORDAN, ELK HILL, BEDFORD, VA.

(Published during the war.)

Brightly the moon o'er pallid corpses streaming,
Mingled her soft rays with the cannon's breath,
Where Southern braves, their noble columns leading,
Marched through the leafy avenues of death,
And where, with dauntless heart and hopes elate,
Virginia's idol met a hero's fate.

O, quiet stars! from your serene dominion
Look down in pity on our human woe;
Weep, weep with us, the great, strong arm is stricken.
The form so dearly loved is prostrate now;
And he who lately cheered his legions on
Must from the crimsoned field himself be borne.

Winds of the night, waft higher balm and healing,
Stop with your cooling breath the fevered tide;
Comrades, draw near, and through the shadows bear him
Where gentle forms may gather by his side.
O God! in mercy raise the drooping head
And send thine angels to attend his bed.

Lo! 'round that couch how many fond hopes hover,
As day by day the prostrate chieftain lies
Cheerful and calm, while thousand hearts are swelling
With tears that stain an anxious nation's eyes,
And he whose laurels blood and carnage won
Breathes the meek Christian's prayer: "Thy will be done."

And shall we, Father, 'spite the proud example,
Still strive to wrestle with thy wise design,
And on frail arms of flesh, too sure relying,
Forget in human aid the source divine?
No; thou wouldst teach us in thy mystic plan
That man's best expectation is not man.

Hark! from the hero's couch a voice of wailing
Goes with the lightning's speed from shore to shore.
His task is done—behold the death dews gathering—
The warrior's mission is forever o'er.
Hope lingers still and Love still clasps his head,
But Love nor Hope may wake the unconscious dead.

And thou couldst perish, thou whose lightest warning
With terror filled the invader's trembling files,
Whose name was music to the countless thousands
Who hung with fervor on thy word or smiles,
Ah, wise monition, who may now deny,
How frail is life since such as thou couldst die!

But what though faltering lips, the story telling,
Link the dread "dust to dust" with thy dear name;
What though a nation's voice, in tones of wailing,
From shore to shore the painful truth proclaim;

What though the grave thy noble form shall hide—
Thy dauntless spirit brave shall still abide.

Yes, be thy requiem still the battle chorus
Of clashing bayonet and rolling drum.
Meet that the gladdening shouts of victory swelling
Should waft thy great soul to its final home.
What though no light relume that faded eye—
Minions! he lives; the brave can never die.

Immortal Jackson, from thine ashes springing,
The deathless form of Liberty shall rise,
Blessed with the baptism of thy blood all holy,
To rear her gore-washed altar to the skies.
And who that scorns the tyrant's yoke to wear
Will not delight to render homage there?

Rest from the strife, brave spirit nobly yielded
To free thy country from the oppressor's curse;
Hence through the lapse of years thy memory, cherished,
That country's grateful heart shall proudly nurse.
And all high thoughts that purest worth may claim
Will glow and kindle at thy glorious name.

Martyr to freedom, o'er thy grave now bending,
A mourning nation droops her noble head,
While Love with trembling hand the bright wreath turneth
Of summer flowers to deck thy lowly bed.
Wear now the fadeless crown so nobly won,
Hear from the Master's lips: "Well done, well done."

Rest from the strife—aye, rest thee now forever—
Where mortal footsteps shall no more invade;
Rest on the bosom of thy God, reposing
Beneath the heavenly palm tree's mystic shade.
Thy country's heart thy mausoleum be,
O fallen champion of the brave and free!

JONES'S WEST VIRGINIA RAID.—T. J. Young, Austin, Ark., writes that several comrades have requested correction of accounts in the VETERAN of Turner Ashby's Brigade of Cavalry, commanded by Gen. W. E. Jones, in the spring of 1863 on the raid through West Virginia. He states: "These errors were committed by Comrade Moffett and myself and were published in the VETERAN on page 171 of the number for April, 1901, where I omitted the 6th Regiment of Virginia Cavalry and the 35th Virginia Battalion, commanded by Col. E. V. White. Comrade Moffett erred in his account by omitting to mention V. A. Witcher's (34th) and E. V. White's Battalions of Virginia Cavalry, both of which were with us. The brigade was composed at that time of the following regiments and battalions: 7th Virginia Cavalry, Turner Ashby's old cavalry regiment, and the 6th, 11th, and 12th Regiments, and White's and Witcher's Battalions of Virginia Cavalry, and Brown's Maryland Battalion of Cavalry. This correction is due the brave men who composed the commands. Our artillery was left at the Potomac River, it being too high to ford."

POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD.—The VETERAN has on hand quite a number of the above-named books. The edition contains an offer of free copy for two new subscriptions. Whenever this compact volume of four hundred and sixty pages is examined, the impulse is to urge its procurement, especially by young people. In order to encourage its circulation, the offer is now made to send it free for the asking to any one who will send a new subscription to the VETERAN.

TRIBUTE TO STONEWALL JACKSON.

The history of the following poem will add to the interest of its readers, while the sentiment makes it richly worthy a place in the VETERAN. Reddin Andrews, of Tyler, Tex., writes that it was found by Mrs. Gay after the author's death, which occurred March 3, 1900, at the age of eighty-four years, in Waco, Tex. Some notes about the poem are made public. They were written at Round Rock, Tex., May 13, 1882:

"I have recently read with delight Charles B. Lewis's beautiful tribute to the character of the lamented Jackson, and was moved by its broad spirit, especially since it came from the pen of a gallant Federal soldier. Such a sentiment from each section, North and South, flowing and mingling together, would soon cicatrize all sectional animosities. The tribute referred to awakened the memories of 'long ago' and called into mind an impromptu memorial which I wrote immediately on hearing the sad news of General Jackson's death, in May, 1863. In that memorial I know that I expressed the sentiments which I felt then, feel now, and shall feel through life.

"I have no ill will and no vindictive feeling toward the people of the North. They and the people of the South had each a different environment. Neither section, from a philosophical view, was culpable; both were honest and patriotic. Customs, habits, manners—yea, society, government, and religion—all tend as universal nature toward a common center. Except through the spirit of Christ, finite men never can harmonize the centrifugal and centripetal forces of humanity so as to voice a melody similar to the music of the spheres. I should like to see my grand country a land of brothers, where all could conform to the golden rule. I desire that both sections should live in fraternal relations.

"I am not literary, and I do not desire notoriety. My unbounded admiration for General Jackson's grand character induced me to write the memorial as I wrote it. The pictures as drawn, representing life action of the battlefields, I got from the oral and written testimony of parties who fought under Jackson. I endeavored to use only the colorings of truth in showing how battles were lost and won and how the hero-patriot Jackson bore himself amid the bloody tempests which raged about him. * * *

"This impromptu memorial has never been published. If it should ever be given to the world, I wish a copy of the paper sent to Mrs. Jackson, if alive. I wish also to dedicate the poem to her as a memorial of her noble husband and as an expression of my gratitude for his sublime character."

STONEWALL JACKSON.

Gen. Thomas Jonathan Jackson, born January 21, 1824; died May 10, 1863.

[Written two or three days after that mournful occurrence and dedicated to Mrs. Jackson, the hero's widow.]

A towering wall has fallen down!
 Its jarring sounds already shake,
 Like thunder peals, the Southern heart;
 Their wailing echoes will awake
 A grief profound.
 No words can soothe, no tears remove
 The nation's wound,
 But Fame will nurse it with her love.
 In days of gloomy fear and doubt,
 When lowering clouds of combat dread

Came o'er our loved and sunny land,
 When war's relentless missiles spread
 Destruction round,
 The hero brave stood at his post
 Where duty's found,
 And there his precious life he lost.

The battle of Manassas Gap
 Awhile hangs in the scale of doubt;
 He comes, the hero in the strife;
 His bristling columns raise a shout—
 On, on they go,
 A wall of valor, driving back
 Invading foe
 Till Victory smiles upon their track.

In Shenandoah's peaceful vale
 Assembled are his country's foes:
 His valiant troops against them dash;
 Fast, fierce, terrific fall their blows
 With carnage dread;
 His forces rush, his squadrons cleave
 O'er heaps of dead,
 Their ranks all bleeding as they leave.

But "On to Richmond!" still they cry;
 In massive strength they onward dash
 Toward the Chickahominy,
 When, lo, as quick as lightning's flash
 He hurls his darts,
 And far along from rank to rank
 Death's havoc starts,
 And hard he smites the fleeing flanks.

Again Manassas, rebaptized
 In patriot blood, sees battle's strife.
 In front, in rear, on swinging flanks
 He strikes his foes, beats out their life
 With crushing blows
 Till shelter hides their routed ranks
 'Mid quivering throes
 Behind their gun-protected banks.

On Sharpsburg's wide, ensanguined plain
 And on Potomac's sacred stream
 He guides the battle's raging storm
 As it displays his fiery gleam
 The foe among,
 Where wounded and the silent dead
 Lie stretched along
 The gory way his famed feet tread.

On Rappahannock's charming shore
 He moves like mighty avalanche;
 The metal hail mows down the hosts,
 As corps, divisions fast advance
 To conflict dire;
 They halt, they waver, turn and flee,
 Or there expire
 As valor gives him victory.

O Chancellorsville! Hallowed place!
 All patriots will love thy name;
 There, there, the Hero-Patriot died
 For liberty, and not for fame.

A Mecca, thou,
To all who for the right contend
Hereafter, now,
Forever—even to the end.

A Monolith, he grandly towers
Among the nobly great of earth;
A Christian's faith with all its love
Gave to his deeds immortal birth.

We humbly bow,
O God, to thee; thou knowest best;
But could we now,
We'd call him hither from his rest.

On history's brightest, living page,
In our fond country's heart enshrined,
Great Jackson and great Washington
Will live with their bright names entwined.

Then calmly rest;
No pen can dim, no speech can mar
Thy memory blest;
'Twill shine on earth a heavenly star.

—J. L. Gay.

La Grange, Tex., May, 1863.

FROM CHANCELLORSVILLE TO FORT DELAWARE.

BY Z. I. WILLIAMS, 23D GEORGIA REGIMENT, OZONA, TEX.

I enjoy reading the VETERAN. I give you an incident that occurred in the battle of Chancellorsville, Va. The 23d Georgia Regiment (of which I was a member), in Colquitt's Brigade, Stonewall Jackson's Corps, was thrown out for two purposes—to drive out the Yankees and to protect our wagons and artillery. Our regiment was deployed as skirmishers to cover as much ground as possible while Jackson was getting in their rear. General Lee's right rested on the river below Jackson's. His left went to the river above. General Sickel's Corps came against us, and we fought them, falling back slowly, our artillery and wagons ascending a long hill. We saved all except one caisson, which was disabled. By this time the Yankees found out our strength, and captured us in a railroad cut near an old foundry; so after we were captured, Jackson got to his position and fired a signal gun, when Lee charged, and they came together so near that their Minie balls fell in our midst, wounding some of our men.

I never saw such a stampede with the Yankees. They ran off and left beeves half skinned. Several funny incidents occurred. As they were crowding us to the rear, a Yankee fell into our ranks, thinking that he could get out of the fight. He was discovered by one of our guards, who called on us to knock him out. One of our stout men knocked him down, and said that he never let a chance like that pass to flay a Yankee. Then they double-quickened us across the Rappahannock River. We lay under guard all night as they were crossing their wagons back. About sunrise the next morning Jackson had got on a height and fired on their wagons, when another stampede occurred.

We were held in plain view of the battle. The Yankees took our breastworks on the height. There were some Yankee sight-seers with us, and they remarked that it was a brilliant scene. Our men were reinforced by Longstreet, and retook the works, the Yankees leaving their dead.

After the battle, we were sent to Washington City, where we found a great many sympathizers. One day a man agreed to take the oath. We boys found it out. We swore that we would throw him over a high fence if they did not take him out from among us. We would pitch him as high as we could reach and yell. They ran a cannon on a hill by the White House, and said that they would fire on us if we did not hush. We told them to turn loose, that we would take in their little town if they did not take the rascal out. They came for him, and the boys wanted to kick him and hold him until they could kick him, and finally they pulled him out after he had been kicked a number of times. They formed a double line open file to the depot, and we were marched to the depot and carried to Fort Delaware. We went through Baltimore about nine o'clock in the evening. A Confederate flag was furled out of a window, and the Rebel yell went up in Baltimore, and then they rushed us with bayonets to the depot; and when we got to Philadelphia, the women came out to see the Rebels. They made fun of our tattered and dirty clothes. One of our men told them that they did not understand that we did not wear our best clothes down South when we kill hogs. We had been killing hogs about two years then. They wanted us hanged. The guards drove the women away. We landed at Fort Delaware, and were exchanged in six weeks, and were the last that were exchanged.

As to the prison treatment: we got only two meals a day, and they were scant, barely enough to sustain life. When we got there, they marched us out on a lawn and searched us, taking all of our valuables from us. One Texan in our party had several pieces of gold, and they took all of it. If any one that reads this was there with me, I would be glad to hear from him. Address me at Ozona, Crockett County, Texas, Z. I. Williams, 23d Georgia Regiment, Company E.

JOHNSON'S ISLAND REMINISCENCES.

BY L. H. KEMP, CAPTAIN CO. F, 11TH ARKANSAS INFANTRY.

In the VETERAN for February I note the list of Confederates buried on Johnson's Island. I was a prisoner there from April till some time in September, 1862, at which time there was a general exchange. The death rate was very small in 1862, but among the number was Lieut. E. Gibson, a most excellent young man about twenty-two or twenty-three years of age. I loved and admired him. It was a bright moonlight night, and Friend Gibson was at my room for a few hours; he was in perfect health. Starting to his own quarters, nearly opposite mine, the sentinel on a near beat ordered him back, at the same time drawing his gun and shooting him dead on the spot, as cold-blooded a murder as was ever committed.

There were officers at Johnson's Island from almost every Southern State, as it was for officers. Our regiment was surrendered at Island No. 10 just after the battle of Shiloh. The Fort Donelson prisoners had preceded us. Many officers from Nashville were there, and among the names I remember General Battle—a fine, portly-looking old gentleman he was. I should be glad to know how many are yet living who were exchanged in September, 1862. Nearly all my comrade officers are dead. I also saw in the February number that my old friend, Maj. Thomas J. Reid, of the 12th Arkansas Regiment, has gone to his reward. He was a gallant soldier.

The VETERAN has been, during the last year or so, requested to solicit from the railroads free transportation to the Reunions on the ground that they cause the patronage of many thousands of others. They have not yet concurred in the view; but it seems now as if such would not be a heavy tax to the railroads, as the diminution of numbers is sadly rapid.

THE SHILOH MONUMENT TO CONFEDERATES.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER B. WHITE, CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE.

Where the Tennessee flows and sings a requiem to the noble dead sleeping upon its banks is the Shiloh National Military Park, commemorating the great battle of Shiloh, a bloody two days of carnage, where the Confederates lost more than ten thousand men and the Federals more than thirteen thousand, a battle that sent a thrill of awe and consternation through North and South—so fearful a battle and so bravely fought that to-day "Shiloh" is a synonym for all that is fearful in war and all that is brave and true and constant.

There the North has placed more than one hundred marble sentinels to guard the long sleep of her heroes; there poets' lines and sculptors' chisels record Federal valor; glowing beds of flowers shed their fragrance there; memorial days find every Federal monument covered with flowers and tokens of love and remembrance. Where are the monuments to the Confederate soldiers? Where are the flowers for them?

"Southern valor never rose to greater heights than there," and on that fatal field sleep many thousands of the bravest and best of the South's young manhood; but in trenches and crowded graves they lie forgotten and neglected. No stone is there to tell their numbers; no word is there to tell how bravely and how proudly they wore the Confederate gray. None loved their country more; no truer hearts gave better service, none more noble colors bore; but no marble or bronze speaks for them; only the wind sighing through the pines whispers of their glorious deeds, their noble death. No flowers bloom for them; their graves are unwatched, neglected, forgotten (?). This condition should not exist. The many visitors to this park inquire for Southern monuments, and, finding none, ask why the South has placed none there.

Years ago the South in her poverty was not able to build handsome memorials; but now, when it has again become the most prosperous part of our great country, surely, surely this reproach will be lifted from the South by her people. If those who have little will give a mite, if those who have much will give of their abundance, it will be but a short time before a handsome shaft will be placed at Shiloh, proudly telling to all comers that some of the greatest of earth's soldiers wore the gray at Shiloh and that the South loves and honors their memory. Is there one who would not help?

The U. D. C. Shiloh Committee was created by the U. D. C. Convention at Gulfport, with authority to collect funds for this monument. Every State having an organization of the U. D. C. has a State director for Shiloh, and all over the country are Daughters of the Confederacy holding out their hands for Shiloh and devising ways and means for increasing this fund. Won't you help us? I ask the aid and help of all Camps of Veterans and of Sons of Veterans everywhere, that every State vie with one another in what can be done for Shiloh this year, and that all Chapters of the U. D. C. help their State director in making liberal donations.

The directors are named below, and funds collected in each State are to be sent to the director of that State, who will forward same to the Treasurer of the Shiloh Monument Committee, Mrs. Roy W. McKinney, Paducah, Ky., who will report the fund from each State separately.

Alabama: Mrs. Harvey E. Jones, Montgomery.

Arkansas: Mrs. L. C. Hall, Dardanelle.

California: Mrs. Alexander R. Jones, San Francisco.

District of Columbia: Mrs. William Berney, Washington.

Florida: Mrs. B. G. Abernathy, Orlando.

Georgia: Mrs. John Ottley, Atlanta.

Illinois: Mrs. John A. Lee, Evanston.

Indiana: Mrs. Eleanor Upchurch, Evansville.

Kentucky: Mrs. Roy W. McKinney, Paducah.

Louisiana: Miss Kate Tyler Childress, New Orleans.

Maryland: Mrs. F. G. Odenheimer, Jessups.

Mexico: Mrs. T. R. Crump, City of Mexico.

Mississippi: Mrs. Jennie G. Henderson, Corinth.

Missouri: Mrs. W. L. Kline, St. Louis.

Nebraska: Miss Grace L. Conklin, Omaha.

New York: Mrs. L. D. Alexander, New York.

North Carolina: Mrs. F. M. Williams, Newton.

Ohio: Mrs. James C. Hosea, Cincinnati.

Oklahoma Territory: Mrs. W. T. Culbertson, Kiowa.

Oregon: Mrs. Harrison H. Duff, Portland.

Pennsylvania: Mrs. Louis Lewis, Philadelphia.

South Carolina: Miss Mary B. Poppenheim, Charleston.

Tennessee: Mrs. Alexander B. White, Paris.

Texas: Mrs. Valery Edward Austin, Galveston.

Virginia: Mrs. A. Cornelius Wyckoff, Alexandria.

Washington: Mrs. Bushrod W. Bell, Seattle.

West Virginia: Mrs. George Donaldson, Charleston.

In Montana and Utah directors are not named.

LAY THEM AWAY IN COATS OF GRAY.

The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph records an incident at the funeral of the late Mrs. C. B. Chapman in Macon which seems to have struck a tender chord in the hearts of the veterans. It was the unfolding of the casket in a Confederate flag, Mrs. Chapman being a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy. Capt. J. W. Wilcox and Adjutant J. G. Postell took the leading part in it.

W. E. Mickle, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff of the U. C. V., writes from New Orleans in regard to it: "I have found that the boys, sons of Confederates, seem to care very little for the principles for which we fought. It is possible that if they feel that they are to be buried with such honors they may show deeper interest. Let your Camp pass a resolution asking the Birmingham Convention to adopt such a resolution. I shall see that it is put in the hands of the committee on resolutions."

James L. Fleming, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff of the Georgia Division, U. C. V., writes on the subject: "It has been the custom of the local Camps for years to place small battle flags on the caskets or the graves of the deceased veterans, and I think it a beautiful tribute to the Daughters and the members of Confederate organizations to honor them as was done in the instance of Mrs. Chapman. I trust Commander Wilcox will present this to the Division Reunion, and I predict that it will be enthusiastically adopted."

The use of the Confederate flag at the burial of Confederates is not by any means new. It has been the custom in many sections for many years. Before the ill health that caused the death of Mrs. Harriet Overton, of Nashville, who was enthusiastic and beloved second to no Southern woman, she expressed the wish that she be buried in a noted and magnificent Confederate flag captured (stolen) after the battle of Fort Donelson and rescued from a pawnbroker in Ohio by the editor of the VETERAN many years after the war. While the wish was not complied with, a piece of that flag was contributed in her burial. Just as well use the flag as the coat of gray in the burial of a veteran, and many Southern women deserve as much honor as the best of the men who fought in battle.

VIVID ACCOUNT OF THE PANAMA CANAL WORK.

FROM THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE, WASHINGTON; D. C.

Representative Washington Gardner, of the Third Michigan District, having visited the Isthmus of Panama as a member of the Appropriation Committee of the House, is full of interest and enthusiasm over the work that is being accomplished there.

Comrade Gardner, who was only sixteen years of age when he entered the Union army in the 65th Ohio, and who was severely wounded at Resaca, is still young enough and vigorous enough to take a human interest in everything that is going on. He has served four terms in Congress, and is just entering on his fifth, and in those eight years' service has demonstrated his natural fitness for work on the Appropriations Committee, which is of course the great committee of Congress. Comrade Gardner served on three committees in his first term, and laughingly says that in the two years on those three committees he probably did about six hours' committee work. In his second term he was placed upon the Appropriations Committee, and declares that he has had to work day and night ever since.

[The VETERAN accepts any report of Mr. Gardner as absolutely correct. He has been a subscriber to the VETERAN for over fifteen years, and is more diligent than any Congressman of either House, even the members from the South, to have his address changed on going to Michigan for the summer, so there will be no delay in its receipt.]

There is no other committee in the House that takes such a survey of the whole government in all its ramifications as the Committee on Appropriations. It is a working committee. This committee passes literally on hundreds of millions of dollars every year. The Naval Committee makes its request for so many millions, the Rivers and Harbors for so many millions, the Committee on Military Affairs for so many millions; but after those bills pass, any supplemental appropriations relating to the dealing out of the money must pass before this committee. * * *

The Appropriations Committee went to Panama for the purpose of studying the situation there and learning on the ground exactly the need for the great appropriations of money which they knew would be asked for in the Sixtieth Congress.

Comrade Gardner gave a National Tribune representative a comprehensive interview on the situation there, which must be of great interest to everybody.

"What is the condition of the work?"

"Before answering that question I would like to say that the determination of the Panama as against the Nicaragua or the Darien routes for a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans seems to have been a wise one. The payment of $40,000,000 to the French company for all their rights and appurtenances, as well as for the work done by them, is believed by those in position to know to have been a good bargain. The equipment used by the French had greatly deteriorated during the twenty years of non-use and exposure to the excessive rains and heat of the tropics. The Panama Railroad, which was included in the purchase, was humorously described as 'two streaks of rust extending across the Isthmus.'

"You will recall that Wallace, Shonts, and Stevens, each and all among the great constructive minds of the country, were successively employed as supervising engineers. Each left his impress upon the work. Particularly is this true of Mr. Stevens. But each and all, for one reason or another, resigned and returned to the States.

"The engineers now in charge of the work are detailed from the army and the navy—three from the former and one from the latter. They are all in the prime of life, of approved ability in similar work, and they have put their 'hands to the plow' with no intention of looking back. The subordinate, though important, positions are filled by well-selected men, adapted to the work to which they are assigned. So there is now at work on the Isthmus a well-trained, well-organized, and effective force operating as good machinery as money can buy. Proof of this is seen in what is accomplished from month to month. In the first eleven months of this year the total excavations amounted to 13,336,710 cubic yards, out of a total of 20,547,929 cubic yards since the Americans began operations, in May, 1904. In October and November of last year the excavations averaged over 1,800,000 cubic yards per month."

"What obstacles are to be surmounted?"

"The greatest of all the obstacles has been overcome—viz., the sanitation of the Zone. Yellow fever, which has been the scourge of the tropics, has been driven from the Canal Zone. Not for over two years has there been a case of yellow fever along the line of the canal, whereas the French suffered in Ancon Hospital alone a loss of twelve hundred by this dreaded disease. Danger from other diseases has been reduced to the minimum; so that, barring the excessive humidity and the continuous heat, both of which reduce the vitality and hence the physical power of resistance, the Canal Zone is to-day as healthy a place in which to live as is Washington City. * * * This great sanitary triumph, which is attracting the attention of all Europe as well as America, is primarily due to Col. W. C. Gorgas, United States Army, chief sanitary officer.

"The physical features of the enterprise present some serious obstacles, chief among which is the construction of a permanent dam at Gatun, about seven miles inland from the Atlantic Ocean. The difficulty is to find a secure foundation upon which to rest a structure over 7,000 feet long, 2,700 feet wide at the bottom, and 135 feet high. This dam is designed to hold back the waters of the Chagres River, forming an artificial lake covering an area of considerably over one hundred square miles, and furnish a water course for ships for a distance of thirty-two miles, to the first lock on the Pacific side of the divide.

"Another difficulty in the practical construction of the canal is the liability to immense landslides along the excavated slopes into the prism or bed of the canal. It was one of these (in the great Culebra Cut, across the backbone of the continent) that is said to have been the 'last feather' that broke the already overloaded back of the discouraged French Canal Company. One of these, known as the Cucaracha slide, has caused Major Gaillard, engineer in charge of the excavation and dredging, a good deal of trouble. A huge mass of earth and rock began to move from the side of the mountain toward the edge of the canal, at first at a pace of about fourteen feet in twenty-four hours, but which had gradually slackened to four feet in twenty-four hours at the time we were there. It was estimated that there were 500,000 cubic yards in the slide, which at one time effectually blocked the work at the point of contact with the bottom of the present excavation. These slides are liable to recur.

"Right here is one of the strong arguments in favor of the lock as against the sea level canal. When it is known that on the present plan the maximum vertical elevation from the center of the canal is three hundred and twelve feet, it will readily be seen that to increase this by eighty-five feet, as would be necessary in order to have a sea level canal, would greatly increase the danger of slides and imperil the operation of the canal when completed. Indeed, this danger is not unworthy of consideration even under the present plan of construction."

"What are the prospects of completion?"

"Barring some unforeseen calamity—as, for example, an earthquake or a volcanic eruption—the undertaking is certain to be completed within a reasonable time. Just how soon no one, not even the engineers in charge, can predict with any degree of certainty."

"What is the working force?"

"In the month of October, the one just preceding our visit, there were employed by the Canal Commission and by the Panama Railroad, which is owned and operated by the government, a total of 32,054 men. This is the largest force ever worked on the Isthmus either by the French or by the Americans. It is believed the working force has reached its maximum. Nearly all of those engaged in common labor have been secured either from Spain or from various islands in the West Indies. These constitute about five-sixths of the whole number; the other sixth represent nearly every State in the Union."

"What are the physical and social conditions?"

"The physical conditions have been greatly improved, and, considering that it is pioneer work and two thousand miles from the source of supply, could hardly be bettered. Indeed, it is doubtful if there is a great engineering project being carried on anywhere, except in or near the large cities, where the employees are as well provided for as in the Canal Zone. As a rule, the buildings are excellent in quality, thoroughly screened, supplied with good, substantial furniture, with electric light, water, and bath, also with fuel. These are all furnished free. Unmarried men or married men without their wives are furnished with bachelor's quarters in buildings by themselves. Married men having their families with them have excellent accommodations either in single or in four-family cottages. The best of food brought from the United States is sold to employees at actual cost plus the cost of transportation. A fine bakery at Colon supplies the Zone with as good bread as one can get anywhere and cheaper than in Washington. An immense modern steam laundry, which, like the bakery, is under the control of the Commission, does as fine work as you get here, and certainly at no greater cost.

"The social conditions are constantly improving. There is an increasing number of women, wives of officers and employees, going there, and they add much to the social status. The Young Men's Christian Association is doing an excellent work in furnishing wholesome social recreation for large numbers of the employees. Religious services are held in various parts of the Zone by chaplains under pay of the government. Social functions are frequently given in the different towns along the line of the canal. We attended one of these at the Hotel Tivoli, at which there were several hundred men and women from Colon to Panama, and in all its appointments it was a most creditable affair. But after all, to many, perhaps to most, it is a life of self-exile. In many a heart there is a secret longing for home and 'for the girl I left behind me.' A vacation or leave of absence for six weeks with pay is allowed every employee once a year. This is conditional on his going North with a view of recruiting and building up his physical system.

"The number leaving the work, both American and foreign employees, and going home is less and less each year. In one of the departments only about two per cent resigned and returned to the United States last year."

"What particularly impressed you, Mr. Gardner?"

"First of all, the magnitude of the enterprise (no one can have a proper conception of it without going there and seeing it); secondly, the vast amount of equipment that is required to carry on such an undertaking; thirdly, the thorough organization and system that are everywhere apparent and all working with the one great object in view—viz., the completion of the canal—and also the confidence of everybody from the States in the wisdom and devotion of the present Commission.

CONFEDERATES ON THE PANAMA CANAL WORK.

"Another thing impressed me over and over again, and that was what a mighty good thing we 'Yanks' did in keeping the South in the Union, and again, judging from their sons, what a splendid lot of fellows the 'Johnnies' must have been. Five of the seven members of the Commission intrusted with the work of constructing the canal were either directly or by inheritance connected with the late Southern Confederacy. Maj. D. D. Gaillard, U. S. A., a graduate of the Military Academy, is from the South. His father and all his male relatives old enough to go were in the Confederate army. Major Gaillard has charge of all the dredging and excavating for the canal. Maj. William L. Sibert, U. S. A., also a graduate of the Academy, has charge of the Department of Lock and Dam Construction. He is a native of Alabama and the son of an officer in the Confederate army. Colonel Gorgas, to whom I have before referred at length, is a native of South Carolina. His mother was the daughter of a former Governor of that State. His father was the Chief of Ordnance of the Southern Confederacy during the entire war. Colonel Gorgas, as a child of eleven when the war closed, was a playmate of the children of Jefferson Davis. He often sat upon the knee of General Lee while his father and the great Confederate chieftain were in consultation. He says General Lee was as fond of kissing the pretty girls as was the Federal General, Sherman. Commissioner Jackson Smith, in charge of Labor Quarters and Subsistence, is also a native of South Carolina. His father was a practical railroad man, and as such had charge of the transportation for the Confederate government in the States of North and South Carolina. Mr. Smith's male relatives were all in the Confederate army.

"The Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, a native of Kentucky and who rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel in the Confederate army and later was ten years a member of the National House of Representatives and still later for eighteen years a United States Senator, is now at the head of the civil administration of the Zone, and is known there as Governor Blackburn, having succeeded Governor Magoon.

"By the way, Blackburn gave a very elaborate reception to the committee soon after their arrival at Panama, at which were present the Vice President and members of the Cabinet of the Panama government, all the Representatives, Ministers, and Consul Generals of foreign governments, together with the leading professional and business men and their ladies in Panama, as well as the foremost officials connected with the canal. In addition to the above, Mr. Richard Reed Rogers, General Counsel for the Isthmian Canal Commission and Panama Railroad, is also a native of the State of Kentucky, and his relatives were likewise all in the Confederate service. It is proper to say that not one of these men, occupying the important positions they do, was a self-seeker. Each one was sought out as especially fitted for the work given him to do.

But it is a little singular that so large a proportion of the juicy plums should have fallen into the lap of the Southerners.

"I must say in passing that Lieut. Col. George W. Goethals, United States Army, who is Chairman and Chief Engineer of the Commission, is a native of the State of New York, as is also Mr. M. H. Russell, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy, who is in charge of the Department of Municipal Engineering, Motive Power and Machinery and Building and Construction. These engineers know no such word as fail. Whatever may have been the differences of opinion as to the part played by the engineers from civil life in the beginning of the enterprise, there is no question in the minds of those who have been on the ground and carefully looked into the situation that the enterprise is in the right hands at this time. It is a great compliment to our army and navy that they can furnish such resolute and competent men.

"On our return North we stopped a day in Santiago, Cuba. While visiting our army post, located near Morro Castle, I was greatly impressed with an observation made by an intelligent officer of our army when, in discussing the Isthmian Canal, he said: 'Every officer of the army and navy will breathe easier when the Isthmian Canal is finished. It will add at least eighty per cent to the efficiency of the American navy. It would enable our fleet, this day sailing from Hampton Roads for San Francisco (and which will probably require in the neighborhood of two months), to go by the way of the Isthmian Canal in about ten or twelve days, or about the same length of time as it would take a Japanese fleet of war ships to pass from Japan to San Francisco.'

"It is due the committee, as well as the Commission, to say that they found absolutely no semblance of graft on the Isthmus; but there is extravagance that will add much to the sum total of the cost of the canal for which the present Commission is in no way responsible. This has grown naturally out of conditions prevalent when the enterprise was first undertaken. But men went there at the peril of their lives. In such fear were some of them that one high official ordered his coffin and it was there on the Zone with him; but when he resigned and came home, the coffin that he had for himself was on the same boat, but occupied by another man. Yellow fever was prevalent, and at one time it looked as though there would be a regular exodus back to the States by the employees. It was under these conditions that inducements were thrown out that many feel border on the extravagant.

"For example, the quarters for the men are not only as stated in the body of the article, but there was at one time a strike among the steam shovel men after the visit of the President, and a compromise was arrived at by which they were to receive longevity pay at the rate of five per cent for the first year and three per cent for every succeeding year until the total amount was twenty-five per cent of the whole. Naturally other employees demanded the same conditions, and it could not be withheld without creating friction and disturbance. While there is no graft, there is a species of extravagance that must be corrected, and the visit of the committee will undoubtedly result in that. It is safe to say that its visit will save to the government from a million to a million and a half in this year alone and more later on."

WHITWORTH RIFLE SHARPSHOOTERS.

There is ever a fascinating interest in the story of the sharpshooters. They did marvelous work in the latter part of the war. The Whitworth men on the Confederate side were of a class quite to themselves. A long personal friendship has existed with the writer toward one of these, A. G. Hill, who was with Bate's Division.

He enlisted on May 27, 1861 (being sworn into the Confederate service at College Grove, Tenn., by Capt. J. L. Scudder, of Shelbyville), and was paroled at Greensboro, N. C., April 26, 1865.

Although so well preserved and active that many would not suppose Comrade Hill had served in the war, he has recently become too feeble to write, as was expected, of his branch of service in the war.

Aside from the purpose to furnish historic data for the VETERAN, he was hopeful of hearing from such of his old associates of his "squad" as may be living, if indeed there are any. He knows only of Capt. A. B. Shell, of Gallatin, Tenn., his immediate commander, to whom he has long been devoted. Many survivors of the army recall the persistence of sharpshooters and how accurate their aim. One of them would keep a thousand soldiers on watch day after day at times and would kill many.

A. G. HILL, NASHVILLE (FORMERLY OF MURFREESBORO).

In this connection there is recalled the late Comrade Jackson, of Ashland City, Tenn., who happened to see a puff of smoke from a tree of the Yankee sharpshooter whose gun killed General Starnes near Tullahoma. He picked his way cautiously, of course, until he had a safe range upon the Federal, and at the crack of his gun the man fell from the tree like a squirrel before the rifle of a trained hunter.

JEROBOAM AND REHOBOAM—THE FATTED CALF.

BY JUDGE C. C. CUMMINGS, HISTORIAN TEX. DIV., U. C. V.

Miss Mary H. Stephenson, of Petersburg, Ill., is quoted in the March VETERAN, page 102, under the heading "Killing the Fatted Calf," as chiding the South for its going away from the parental roof like the prodigal son and returning to the house of the father, "after a very wicked life." This is the way she passes judgment on us, in the usual style of her ilk.

But she seems to be conscience-stirred, and begins to question "Ephraim," as she addresses her brethren up there, and puts the query to Ephraim thus: "O, Ephraim, ask yourself if when your brother made that grave mistake of seceding from the mother . . . you did not treat the stricken brother with too much harshness and too little consideration," etc. Then she asks if any banquet of love has ever been spread, and if he has ever had any share in the fatted calf after it has been killed, and if the ring has been put on his finger and if music and dancing have been furnished. Yes, we had any amount of love talk dealt out to us by Ephraim, such as "after a very wicked life" as sampled above. We have had commiserating talks dealt us, such as when she says a little farther down: "That, too, when this son had never done anything probably for his father or family in his life." We have had music, too, such as "Marching through Georgia," ad nauseam.

The fourteenth amendment makes every American citizen equal before the law except the Confederate soldier. In the face of this, while the fatted calf has been killed, for forty years or more the fat has all gone into the larder of the soldier on the other side in the way of pensions and largesses of all kinds galore; while the Confederate soldier has not got a smell. This amendment was built, they say, for the man in black; but he and the corporations and the criminal classes alone have access to the courts under it, and the brother that she ascribes as one of "a very wicked life" must feed on the husks of such love as is thus dealt out to us. I feel like the Georgia soldier who saw his comrade monopolizing a window on a train in passing through his native State and raking in all the "pies and things" while he got none, when he said: "See here, stranger, them's my folks a-feedin' you; it's my time to git to the winder."

It will make the reader snicker when I begin at 1 Kings ii. 28 and on and rehearse the secession—the first secession in history—of Jeroboam, who took with him the ten tribes, leaving Judah and Benjamin the capital at Jerusalem as the remnant. By a close reading it will be seen that the ten seceding tribes embraced Ephraim as one of the seceders. If there was wicked life in this action, as she says, then Ephraim and the first seceders are to blame, and not us of the South.

Jeroboam with the ten tribes took up their abode in the North at Samaria, and built another temple at Shechem in Mount Ephraim and dwelt therein, and to prevent the people from going to Jerusalem to worship in the house of the Lord Jeroboam made two calves of gold ("pensions and tariff") and said: "Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." This was done to prevent them from returning unto their Lord, even unto Rehoboam, King of Judah, the sovereign son of Solomon, now dead.

The text reads that the seceding King Jeroboam ordained a feast like unto the feast that was in Judah and offered sacrifices unto these two golden calves. "And he [Jeroboam] made a house of high places, and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi." (1 Kings xii. 31.) In the beginning of this chapter we find the ten tribes under Jeroboam complaining of too heavy taxation as the cause of secession; and Rehoboam, after taking counsel, refused to lighten these burdens. Then Jeroboam said, "What portion have we in David? * * * to your tents, O Israel;" and to the tents of secession they resorted.

After this we read that Rehoboam got ready for war with his hosts of Judah and Benjamin to coerce the seceding tribes back into the union. But in 1 Kings xii. 24 we read: "Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; for this thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord, and returned to depart, according to the word of the Lord." It will be seen that the Northern tribes are called Israel all the way through the text.

By reading the voice of the fathers who fashioned our ark of the covenant after that of the covenant of the tribes we see that no coercion of a State was ever intended. This is the way Jefferson construed it in 1803, during his first term, when New England threatened secession because of the Louisiana purchase. During his second term, in 1808, the Ephraimites of the North again threatened secession because of the embargo by Judah and Benjamin on her ships and shops; for they dwelt by the sea, and it was necessary to stop traffic with the enemy to enforce good behavior to all the tribes from an insolent foe. But Jefferson knew it was not the best to go to war with one's own brethren, for they were but asserting the rights of the States, which they never gave up on entering the compact. In 1812-14, when the sons of Ephraim gathered at Hartford and prepared again to secede from heavy taxation falling upon them in our war with the Philistines, Madison, chief of all the tribes and father of the Constitution, let them alone because he knew the Lord would not look with favor on such a war against the kindred. This is the true rendering of Ephraim and the original seceders, and yet they say it is Judah and Benjamin that have done this sin. She admits in the second paragraph, in casting the burden on us of the South, that even this mistake was noble, for in making it we upheld that principle of State rights which will probably be the means of saving our country. Old Jacob, the father of the tribes, when he came to die gathered them about him in the land of Egypt and declared: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."

On the same page of the VETERAN as this "Killing of the Fatted Calf" is "Incidents and Inquiries about Shiloh," the great battle of April, 1862, which was the beginning of the end of the scepter of Judah—The South. Judah P. Benjamin was the lawgiver of the Southern Confederacy as its Attorney-General, and he was a Jew, the first that ever graced a cabinet of any power of the Western world. Christ came out of the tribe of Judah and was crucified on the cross that men everywhere might be free. The South suffered a like crucifixion for home rule and State rights and constitutional government as opposed to absolute power by centralization, which sacrifice will yet be the means of saving our great republic, the last hope of mankind. Christ rose again; and so will the South, after her rehabilitation, rise again and lead the hosts of States to the government of the people, by the people, and for the people. And Texas will wear the diadem because she first suffered crucifixion at the Alamo and Goliad as the forerunner—the John the Baptist of man's political redemption from the rule of the few over the many.

DAVIS MEMORIAL WINDOWS IN BILOXI.

On Friday, February 28, 1908, there were dedicated two memorial windows in the Church of the Redeemer (Episcopal), Biloxi, Miss. One was by the United Daughters of the Confederacy to Mrs. Varina Howell Davis, and the other by Mrs. Margaret Howell Davis Hayes to her four brothers, Samuel Emory Davis (born July 30, 1852; died January 30, 1854), Jefferson Davis, Jr. (born January 16, 1857; died October 16, 1876), Joseph Evan Davis (born April 18, 1859; died April 30, 1864), and William Howell Davis (born December 16, 1861; died October 16, 1873). This window by Mrs. Hayes is also a memorial to her firstborn, Jefferson Davis Hayes (born March 22, 1877; died June 24, 1877). (The next son to this family bore the same name, but by legislative enactment his name was changed to Jefferson Hayes Davis, a change that gratifies the Southern people.)

The Church of the Redeemer occupies a large corner lot facing the open sea, and is decorated by magnificent live oaks. It is of stone and brick and exquisitely finished, a memorial gift by Mr. Howard, of New Orleans, who was unstinted in making it worthy the distinguished memorials in its every window. It was in this church that memorial windows were dedicated by the United Daughters of the Confederacy to President Jefferson Davis and to Winnie Davis, the "Daughter of the Confederacy," during the Convention of that great body at Gulfport, Miss., in November, 1906—a memorable event.

It was a perfectly ideal day, and the attendance was greater than could be accommodated, and in all respects the service was not only pleasing but delightful. Addresses were made by Rev. C. B. Crawford, rector of the Church, who gave an account of the building and the other memorial windows, which on being designated as the "South's Westminster Abbey" was manifestly approved by the audience. Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, President of the United Daughters, had come from Galveston, Tex., to make the presentation. It was done in that clear, delightful manner and tone of voice which shows her at her best.

MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE'S ADDRESS.

We are assembled here to-day, dear friends, to pay tribute to a woman, one set apart for great honor and success, together with greater sorrow and suffering, and all borne with a sublimity of faith and trust that embraces the highest and broadest heroism. Her young life was linked with a son of the South, who had already won distinction on the battle-fields of Mexico, and later attained the position of a great statesman, with full recognition from the people of Mississippi, the State of his adoption, which he ably represented in Congressional halls, from whence his worth and ability called him to a Cabinet appointment as Secretary of War, followed by senatorial honors in the highest legislative body of his country.

Little children gathered about her knee, and her life was

TO VARINA HOWELL DAVIS.
BY THE U. D. C.

TO THE FOUR SONS OF MR.
DAVIS. BY MRS. HAYES.

TO PRESIDENT JEFFERSON
DAVIS. BY HIS WIFE.

TO VARINA ANNE DAVIS.
BY MRS. JEFFERSON DAVIS.

full and complete with the happiness that comes from association with a scholarly, chivalrous man, pure, stainless, and upright in character.

But the scene was changed. The dark clouds of wrong and resistance, followed by war, with all of its attendant horrors, spread over our fair Southern land, and she saw her hero called by his people to the office of Chief Executive of a young nation—a nation born of a determination to preserve the principles of individual rights and constitutional government.

Through the brief and stormy life of that glorious nation that rose so fair and maintained itself through sacrifice and bloodshed for four long years she shared his responsibilities and cares, and suffered the death of two of her sons. When overpowered by superior numbers and limitless resources, she followed him through captivity to prison doors, and wept for the relentless humiliations heaped upon him. Her cup of sorrow seemed full to overflowing, yet her trust and faith were unflinching, even though she saw the homes of her people in ruin and desolation, with poverty and misery their common heritage. After a long, sad time, no charge could be sustained against her beloved husband, the martyr to the cause of his people, and he was restored to her for a few brief years at beautiful Beauvoir, where budded and bloomed into rare womanhood the "Daughter of the Confederacy," Winnie Davis, the gifted and beloved of the parents who had so cruelly "passed under the rod."

Then he left her side "to rest under the trees" with a host of those who had served him so faithfully through the varying fortunes of victory and defeat in the troublous days of the Confederacy. She still took up the broken threads of life, and with her sole companion, the beloved Winnie (for another home had claimed her daughter, Mrs. Hayes), together they labored in literary fields, where both won distinction and maintained that independence which is one of the noblest attributes of human character. It seemed that no greater sorrow could assail her; but again she stood the test when Winnie Davis, the pride of the Confederates, the beloved of the Southern people, left her alone in her Northern home, and still she kept the faith until her "course was finished," her life work done, and all of the brightness, the sorrow and suffering were closed in that last dreamless sleep.

A Daughter of Texas, Miss Decca Lamar West, conceived the idea of placing a memorial window beside the two that Mrs. Davis had erected to her husband, Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, and to Winnie Davis, by birthright the "Daughter of the Confederacy," and so baptized by the immortal Gordon.

This thought of a memorial window to Mrs. Varina Jefferson Davis was adopted with loving enthusiasm by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in Convention at Gulfport, Miss., in November, 1906, and Miss West, of Texas, was made chairman of a committee, with Mrs. C. J. Weatherby, of Mississippi, and Mrs. John J. Crawford, of New York, to select a design and purchase the window. In this the committee had the advice and counsel of Mrs. Hayes, the beloved daughter of Mrs. Davis, and the rector, Mr. C. B. Crawford, of the Church of the Redeemer at Biloxi. On the consummation of these plans for this testimonial of our appreciation of the great character and virtues of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, and the expression as well of the love and loyalty of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, it now becomes my honor and privilege as their President and representative to present to you, reverend father and rector of this Church and parish, this window in loving memory of one who has left to us and to all generations of women a matchless example of faith, courage, fortitude, and devotion to duty, and who will be ever enshrined in the hearts of her devoted people. Here by the Mexican Sea this little church, dedicated to the worship of God, will stand for many years, bearing its memory message of the people of our land—of the love and reverence of the women of the South for Varina Jefferson Davis, the sharer of the trials of our great chieftain, who gave himself a living sacrifice to our service.

To Margaret Jefferson Davis Hayes, the sole surviving daughter and firstborn of that illustrious house, who has honored us here to-day by taking part in this ceremony, and to her children we extend assurance of unswerving loyalty and devotion, with the earnest hope that her descendants may ever live up to the high standard and great responsibilities of their distinguished lineage.

The windows were received in the same gracious manner in which they were presented by the rector, the Rev. Charles B. Crawford. He paid a beautiful tribute to Mrs. Davis and to noble womanhood everywhere.

The window erected in memory of Mrs. Davis was unveiled by her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Howell Davis Hayes, and the window to her brother and son were unveiled by her son, William Davis Hayes. Bishop Bratton blessed the windows and accepted them, after which he advanced inside the chancel and paid, as he said, "a tribute of love from his own memories to the Mother of the Confederacy." During his address he spoke of the inspiring influence of women in the home, where they are the caretakers and the mothers. Speaking of the church, he said this was the Westminster Abbey of the South because of the sacred and historic memories connected with it.

After singing a hymn, the audience was dismissed with the benediction by the Bishop.

Many who could not see the windows during the services thronged the church to view all the beautiful windows.

Luncheon was served at the rectory by the ladies of the Guild of the Church to the visiting U. D. C. and the veterans from Beauvoir.

The windows are artistic and beautiful, and are very satisfactory to the United Daughters of the Confederacy. The one erected to Varina Howell Jefferson Davis is a picture of Jesus in the home of Mary and Martha. The inscription is: "To the glory of God and in loving memory of Varina Howell Davis, wife of Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, born 7th of May, 1826; departed this life the 16th of October, 1906. 'O Lord, thee have I trusted. Let me never be confounded.' Erected by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in 1907. Deo Vindici."

The part of the inscription, "O Lord, thee have I trusted. Let me never be confounded," are the concluding words of the "Te Deum Laudamus," and were the last words of Mrs. Davis. The window bears the Howell and the Davis coat of arms.

The window erected by Mrs. Hayes, the only surviving daughter of Jefferson Davis, in memory of her brothers and son is a very appropriate one. The subject of the window is: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The inscription is as follows: "Erected by Margaret Howell Davis Hayes in the year of our Lord 1907." Then follows each name, with birth and death, as set forth in the introductory paragraph to this article.

This window has the Davis coat of arms on the right and the Hayes on the left. As the subject would indicate, the figures represent Christ blessing little children when he uttered the words quoted. The design was one much admired by Mrs. Davis, and hence was chosen by her daughter.

Every window in the historic church is a memorial, and more beautiful windows may not be found in any church.

Thursday night Mrs. C. J. Weatherby, of Biloxi, was the hostess at the rectory of the Church of the Redeemer, where the Rev. Charles B. Crawford is the rector, and entertained the distinguished visiting ladies. She was assisted in entertaining by Miss Ada Wallace.

Mrs. Eggleston, Honorary President, and Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, President Mississippi Division, were active in the general welcome to Mississippi.

Sixty members of Beauvoir Home, under the command of Dr. W. T. Price, Superintendent, were present. Mrs. Wallace, the Home mother, met them at the church door.

Exquisite floral offerings were brought and sent for the occasion. Mrs. Lizzie George Henderson sent a large bunch of callas for the altar, and to Mrs. Stone an exquisite bouquet of red and white carnations. The Window Committee sent a wreath of laurel for Mrs. Davis's window. It bore long streamers of red and white properly inscribed. The New Orleans Chapter sent a laurel wreath, which bore red, white, and red streamers, bearing the name of the Chapter. Fitzhugh Lee Chapter sent a wreath of red and white roses. Mrs. D. A. S. Vaught sent palm branches and carnations for Mr. Davis's window. Beauvoir Chapter, of Biloxi, had banked the windows and the altar with beautiful flowers.

MASTER W. F. LUBBOCK.

A Picayune letter from Beauvoir, Miss., gives an interesting account of a patriotic lad, Master Winans Fowler Lubbock, in his relation to the veterans in the Soldiers' Home there. Mrs. Lubbock, of St. Louis, spent the winter at Biloxi. Her young son, Winans, ten years old, accompanied her to Beauvoir frequently, and became much interested in the old soldiers.

On the occasion of the celebration of his tenth birthday he persisted in having his usual birthday presents used for the pleasure and comfort of the Confederate veterans at Beauvoir. His fond mother acceded to his request, and an oyster supper was provided for the ninety inmates of the Home with the proceeds of his birthday presents. His mother and twenty or thirty of the guests of the hotel where they are boarding went on the electric car in the afternoon, taking with them sufficient oysters to satisfy every one in the Home, as well as a large basket of oranges and fruits for the inmates of the hospital. Of course Winans Fowler Lubbock became a general favorite. A vote of thanks, accompanied by the "Rebel yell," was tendered him in the dining room.

Mrs. Lubbock is a native of Louisiana. She was born on July 4, and Winans on February 22. He is of good Southern lineage on both sides. His maternal grandfather, Col. Wesley P. Winans, was a Mississippian, and gave his life for the Confederacy. As commander of the 19th Louisiana Infantry he fell at the head of his regiment on Missionary Ridge. His great-grandfather was Dr. Winans, of Woodville, Miss., a noted Methodist divine.

Winans had three great-uncles on the paternal side who were prominent soldiers of the South, one of whom was Governor Lubbock, of Texas, aid-de-camp on the staff of President Jefferson Davis, and who shared his imprisonment at Fortress Monroe. Another great-uncle, Colonel Lubbock, was a "Texas Ranger," and was killed in battle. Winans has heard much of the deeds of valor and bravery of his ancestors, hence his great admiration of the "old men in gray." The blood of soldiers and of patriots is leaping and bounding in his young veins, and he is of such material as warriors are made.

ACHIEVEMENTS BY TEXAS DAUGHTERS.

EXTRACTS FROM AN ADDRESS ISSUED BY MISS KATIE DAFFAN, PRESIDENT OF THE DIVISION.

President Jefferson Davis, of the Confederate States of America, was born in Christian County, Ky., on June 3, 1808; and died in New Orleans, La., on December 6, 1889.

This good year, 1908, marks the centenary anniversary of the birth of President Jefferson Davis, of the Confederate States of America. With one voice, in enthusiastic accord, let the members of our noble State organization give praise and honor to our own beloved chieftain, who loved our cause, its principles, its truth, and its deep-seated rights and privileges better than he loved his life. Let gratitude for his life and his service mark the trend of our work throughout the year, and let us so observe his birthday—the 3d of June—that the occasion will be remembered by every citizen in our commonwealth.

There are many reasons why the women of the South should at this time honor the President of the Confederacy. "The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy," a matchless piece of literature as well as our standard history of a misunderstood epoch, is dedicated with beautiful encomium "to the women of the South."

Upon the passing of one hundred years in all nations and in all times honor, praise, and adoring love are shown to the heroes and martyrs.

In sending to you the official message your President does so in full assurance of your coöperation and sympathy and your enthusiastic love for all that our cause represents.

It is an inspiration to note the businesslike manner with which our great work is being accomplished by the Texas Division, and our recent convention held in Austin goes on record as one of the most fruitful of our State meetings. The Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter of Austin entertained the large Texas Division with true Southern hospitality.

The Confederate Woman's Home is to be opened June 3. Your President has appointed a committee to draft rules governing applications for admission into the Confederate Woman's Home, with Mrs. D. A. Nunn, our Past President, as chairman.

Your President, in order to systematize and simplify this department, has divided our Division roster into four parts, giving one-fourth of our Chapters to each of our Vice Presidents, Mesdames Beatty, Elgin, Westbrook, and Throop. These efficient officers will receive funds from their respective Chapters, the President of the Chapter acting as the committee member. * * * Many eligible women are waiting to spend their last feeble days under the loving care of the Daughters of Texas.

The Business Men's League of Austin desire to assist in every way, and are now taking steps to make the 3d of June one long to be remembered. So, with the splendid Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter, the citizens of Austin, and the Confederate Veterans and Daughters of the Confederacy of Texas, we will open wide the doors of our Home on the 3d of June, 1908.

At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Texas Division held in Austin January 11 the Trustees of our Confederate Woman's Home were elected. Mrs. A. R. Howard, the former efficient Chairman of the Board, was reelected, as were many of the members. Strong indorsement was given to Mrs. Val C. Giles for her earnest work as Superintendent of the Home. Mrs. W. P. Baugh, whose enthusiastic and valuable services as Treasurer have placed our entire Division under lasting gratitude, for the present gives up the office of Treasurer of the Home fund. Mrs. J. D. Roberdeau, of Austin, will take her place.

Our several State officers have taken charge of and are going forward with their respective departments; Chapter Presidents are requested to be prompt in making acknowledgment of all communications sent out by our Vice Presidents in regard to amounts for the Home. All Chapters who hold funds pledged to the Home will please remit at an early day. Send such amount promptly, and let not any delinquency prevent the completion of our glorious work. Answer promptly all communications sent out by the Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. W. A. Hassell, of Dallas, and send all reports, notices, files, etc., due the Recording Secretary, Mrs. C. L. Hamil, of Longview, promptly, thus assisting her with her many duties.

Let no Chapter be delinquent in the paying of annual dues October 1 or in meeting any expense which may come, for our Treasurer, Mrs. M. Wheeler, of Victoria, endeavors to keep our work upon a firm business basis, and we must render to her our loyal assistance.

Our Historian, Mrs. Margaret L. Watson, sends out regularly excellent programmes of historical work for Chapter use and also programmes for children's auxiliaries. Let each Chapter in the Texas Division study Southern history and biography and teach these important subjects to the children.

Our Registrar, Mrs. R. C. Shindler, of Nacogdoches, in her concise arrangement of the names of every member of every Chapter in alphabetical order, giving the date of their membership, is gathering thoroughly the history of the membership of our Division, and this department should receive our constant attention.

Our Custodian, Miss Mamie Wilson, of Austin, safely keeps the important registration papers in our archives. From such systematic arrangement reference may be made at any time upon short notice. She should receive our assistance in her endeavor to secure the rosters of Texas regiments which enlisted in the service of the Confederacy, and let us see to it that all documents, important papers, manuscripts, and important data are given to her for safe-keeping. [Also copies of the VETERAN.—ED.]

Let the Daughters of Texas never cease their efforts until every eligible Confederate soldier is provided with the cross of honor. All information in regard to the bestowal of the cross of honor will be cheerfully and promptly forwarded by our Recorder of Crosses, Mrs. J. Y. Hazlett, of Hearne. All applications should be sent to her thirty days prior to the day selected for the bestowal of the cross. All assistance will be given by our Recorder of Crosses.

The Chapters of our Division are urged to observe each of our anniversary days, as directed by our Anniversary Committee. This is a vastly important phase of our patriotic work.

Our Committee on Chapter Extension should receive the cooperation of each Chapter and each individual member in the important duty of organizing new Chapters and reviving inactive ones.

Let each of us this year do something for the soldiers in the State Confederate Home. Let us visit the Home when possible, send literature, and do all within our power to assure the occupants of our remembrance and appreciation.

Our Text-Book Committee will continue their efforts to place proper histories in the hands of the public school children of this State and to endeavor to secure recognition for Southern authors.

The Library Committee will endeavor to secure the establishment of libraries in Texas and to place such histories and literature as are true and impartial to the part taken by the people of the South in their effort to maintain constitutional government and to request that books by Southern authors of merit have place in them.

Many Texas soldiers were buried upon distant battlefields. The Committee on "Soldiers' Graves on Battlefields" shall have supervision of them wherever found and try to secure lists of them wherever possible.

"The children of to-day are the mothers and fathers of to-morrow." The duty of the Committee on Children's Auxiliaries shall be to interest the children descended from Confederate soldiers in the auxiliary work.

The Texas Regent for the Confederate Museum, Richmond, Va., should receive the earnest support of the Texas Division. The Richmond Confederate Museum Committee shall directly assist the Regent in securing funds for maintenance, memorials, and relics.

Your President has endeavored to place all active and special work under the direction of special committees.

The Winkler Portrait Committee will continue their well-directed labor of love in collecting a fund to procure a portrait of our esteemed Mrs. A. V. Winkler, who has so efficiently served as the Texas Regent for the Confederate Museum, Richmond.

The Gen. Tom Green Monument Committee will direct our efforts toward the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. Tom Green.

The Col. William P. Rogers Monument Committee will direct our efforts toward the erection of a monument in honor of Col. William P. Rogers.

The Arlington Monument Committee will assist the Director of the Arlington Monument Association for Texas in securing a fund to be used in the erection of a Confederate monument at Arlington.

The Legislative Committee will direct the important matter of legislation, and when needed be ready with information upon legislative matters.

The Jefferson Davis Centenary Committee will direct the Chapters of the Texas Division in the appropriate observance of the centenary anniversary of the birth of President Davis. The State Teachers' Association of Texas at its convention in Houston in December, 1907, adopted resolutions pledging hearty and enthusiastic support to the Daughters of the Confederacy in their effort to give due praise to this just man.

The Texas Division will offer a scholarship in the State University in the Department of History to a Texas boy. A Board of Examiners selected from the faculties of the university, Texas schools and colleges, and the legal profession will assist this committee in selecting a worthy student for this honor.

It is the desire of the Texas Division that the pictures of President Davis, Generals Lee, Albert Sidney Johnston, Stonewall Jackson, Judge John H. Reagan, and other famous Confederates be placed in our public schools.

The Daughters of the Confederacy of Texas, under the direction of a committee, are to place a memorial tablet to Hood's Texas Brigade upon the battlefield of Gettysburg.

The committee to select and recommend standard old songs are procuring the beautiful songs sung during the war and providing them for Chapter use; also recommending the organization of choirs. Many of these old songs are poetic gems set to the sweetest old melodies, and beautiful patriotic songs are a part of patriotic teaching. "Let me make the songs of my country, I care not who makes its laws," was uttered by one who knew and felt the holy, magical spell of patriotic music.

Every Daughter of the Confederacy should possess herself of a certificate of membership. Each Chapter President should take this matter up with her Chapter, certificates to be obtained through the Secretary General, Mrs. Andrew L. Dowdell, Opelika, Ala.

The Texas room in the Confederate Museum, Richmond, Va., is controlled by the Texas Regent, Mrs. A. V. Winkler, who is appointed by the Virginia Regent. The entire Texas Division should assist Mrs. Winkler with her duties in the Texas room.

The Texas Confederate Museum is a beautiful room in the State Capitol at Austin under the direction of Mrs. L. J. Storey, Regent, appointed by the President of the Texas Division.

The Texas Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, has a reputation to sustain in the annals of the United Daughters of the Confederacy; and now that one of our beloved members, Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, our former President, author of our constitution, has been elevated to the highest office within the gift of this magnificent organization, let the Texas Division rally to her and come right up to every obligation.

Let all Presidents of Chapters realize the important fact that Texas should have her full quota of representation at our Convention to be held in Atlanta in November. In case Chapters are not represented by a delegate, see to it that proxies are sent in promptly.

Our annual (general) dues should be sent in October to the Treasurer General. With the amount should be sent a list of the Chapter officers and the number of active members.

The Convention held in Norfolk in November, 1907, directed that each State composing the body give energy and thought to the proper remembrance of the life, character, suffering, and achievement of President Jefferson Davis, and that June 3, 1908, be a day of loving rejoicing, thanksgiving, and praise for our great leader. Texas will do her best.

The Texas Division will assist the general organization in the erection of monuments to our Confederate dead upon the battlefields of Chickamauga and Shiloh and in the Confederate circle at Arlington, near Washington, D. C., formerly the home of Gen. R. E. Lee.

The Texas Director of the Arlington Monument Association and committee will endeavor to secure an appropriate contribution from Texas. The Texas Division will cooperate with the general organization in the beautiful memorial work of remembering the Confederate dead who fell at Chickamauga and Shiloh.

In accord with a resolution adopted by our recent Convention, the Daughters of the Texas Division are pledged to do all in their power to place the "Memoirs of John H. Reagan" before the people and to promote its sale. This will be a pleasure rather than a duty. These "Memoirs" are a glorious heritage to the South.

Each Chapter of our Division, as per resolution of the Convention, is pledged to purchase two or more volumes of Mrs. Kate Alma Orgain's book on "Southern Literature." Let us assist each other.

The Confederate Woman's Home at Austin, Tex., be it said of the unselfishness of the women of our organization, is a superb memorial of our unity and our strength. We will maintain it, of course, by the same courage, patience, and concentration which made it possible for us to build it. Not only as Chapters but as individuals does the responsibility of the Home rest upon us; so let each descendant of a Confederate veteran who is honored with membership in this Division do her fall part in this work.

On January 19 of this year, in honor of the birthday of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the Confederate monument, "The Spirit of the Confederacy," with special credit to the Robert E. Lee Chapter of Houston, was unveiled at that place.

The monument at Corsicana, "The Call to Arms," the completed work of the Navarro Chapter, was unveiled.

Such occasions of patriotism are a prophetic beginning for the new year. Other Chapters ere this year closes will unveil their monuments.

Let us strive for unity, for breadth, and for service removed far from all littleness. Let us cleave one unto the other, giving strength to every link in the chain which binds us, and our work will be remembered by the Great Commander of armies, who with his own hands will crown the faithful, and who guides and guards our interests, ever ready when we deserve it to award his blessing.

---

GENS. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN AND A. P. HILL.—William Wert Harness, of McNeill's Rangers, Moorefield, W. Va.: "I see in the January VETERAN a report of a base calumny as to General McClellan's offering his services to the Confederacy. In the fall of 1861 Gen. A. P. Hill (then colonel) was camped a short distance west of Winchester, Va. I visited his camp one evening, where I met an old friend, a former native of my county, a Mr. Levi Cline, who was a member of Colonel Hill's Regiment. He took me to Colonel Hill's tent and introduced me to him. While lying on the grass, talking of the war and prospects, Colonel Hill, in discussing the merit of the Federal officers, said he considered McClellan the ablest officer in the Union army. Hill had been in the United States army with him and was an intimate friend of his. Colonel Hill also said that he had met General McClellan in Cincinnati when he (Hill) was on his way to Washington to resign his commission, and that General McClellan expressed his regrets that he had decided to quit the army. They exchanged their views on the most friendly terms, and Hill said he told McClellan he could not engage in a war against Virginia, but would defend her to the death. The next morning, when Hill was about to leave for Washington, McClellan said to him: 'Hill, I am truly sorry you are going to leave us; but, to be frank, I cannot blame you. If I were in your place, I would do as you are about to do; but I am an Ohioan, and will stand by my State too.' They separated cordially and with sincere regrets. When General McClellan was superseded after his defeat before Richmond, General Hill threw up his hat and said: 'Good! good!' Such was A. P. Hill's opinion of the generalship of his old friend. McClellan's treatment of the citizens and noncombatants and prisoners, however, made him hundreds of friends among the Southern people, and his removal was a calamity."

MONTANA DIVISION, U. D. C.

BY MISS EVIE MORRIS, DIVISION HISTORIAN, HELENA.

Failure of report from the Montana Division, U. D. C., in the proceedings of the National Convention at Norfolk is regretted. Our State President, Mrs. J. L. Patterson, sent a full report. Our State Treasurer, Mrs. C. R. Stranahan, sent national dues for our five Chapters; so we are in good standing.

The M. A. E. McLure Chapter at Bozeman is the oldest in the State, and deserves much credit for the work it has done. Our State President lives in Bozeman, and to her is due the credit of organizing the Division. Together with the veterans the Chapter entertained royally the annual Reunion of the U. C. V. of the Northwest Division last October. A Southerner always feels at home at Bozeman, for Gallatin Valley is called the home of the "left wing of Price's army."

The Winnie Davis Chapter of Helena was the next organized, and we have a membership of forty-two loyal women, representing nearly every Southern State. We have monthly meetings, which are delightful social gatherings. We are also studying "the true cause of the Civil War," for we desire to be able to vindicate our cause with our antagonistic neighbors. We are working to perpetuate the memory of the heroic deeds of our fathers and grandfathers.

For the first time in years we did not have a large reception on January 19, but instead observed the day as a Chapter, and were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hampton. Mr. Hampton is a son of Gen. Wade Hampton. Appropriate papers were read, and General Lee's farewell address was read by Miss Evie Morris from a copy made by her father, a member of the 17th Tennessee Regiment, at Appomattox the day of the surrender.

We are planning to observe appropriately the birthday of President Davis, and had hoped to dedicate our memorial fountain on that day; but we have not yet secured a good site. We have $1,000 in the bank, and all in readiness as soon as we can secure the site we want. Then we will erect a monument that will be an honor to the brave Confederate soldiers buried in Montana and an ornament to the city.

The Chapters at Missoula, Boulder, and Townsend are prosperous. They are composed of enthusiastic women.

An indescribable bond links Confederates together here.

CONFUSION AS TO THE HEISKELLS OF MEMPHIS.

Comrade James P. Coffin, of Batesville, Ark., corrects an error on page 124 of the VETERAN for March: "How did you happen to make such a mistake as in the footnote to the extract in the March VETERAN from the address of Judge C. W. Heiskell in regard to slavery and emancipation before the war? Joseph B. Heiskell was the member of the Confederate Congress from the First Tennessee District. After the war, he was Attorney-General of Tennessee and Reporter of the Supreme Court. C. W. Heiskell was the last colonel of the 19th Tennessee Infantry, filled every position from private to colonel in the army from first to last, and was Judge of the Circuit Court in Memphis after the war."

Col. C. W. Heiskell writes a correction of the footnote: "I was a private, lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel of the 19th Tennessee Infantry, C. S. A., but never a member of the Confederate Congress. My brother, Hon. J. B. Heiskell, living near Memphis, was a member of the Confederate Congress. Ordinarily I would not notice the mistake, but your magazine will be looked to for historical truth."

PRIZES FOR ESSAYS ON PRESIDENT DAVIS.

This being the centennial year of the birth of Jefferson Davis, the U. D. C. are especially active in celebrating it by emphasizing the beautiful life of the first and only President of the Confederacy. The Neely Chapter at Boiivar recently offered a gold medal for the best essay by a pupil in the schools of Hardeman County on the life and character of the illustrious Confederate chieftain. Supplementary to all this, Mrs. M. B. Pilcher, President of the Tennessee Division, offers a gold medal for the best essay on Jefferson Davis, the contest to be open to all school boys and girls in the State with age limit of seventeen years.

The one hundredth birthday of President Davis (June 3, 1908) has been selected for the presentation of the medal. Details will be given later. Mrs. M. B. Pilcher, President of the Tennessee Division, U. D. C., has appointed Mrs. John C. Sweeney, of Paris, Tenn., State Chairman of the Jefferson Davis Centenary Committee with the following ladies: Mrs. Carrington Mason, of Memphis; Mrs. W. G. Oehmig, of Chattanooga; Mrs. Henry Curtis, of Knoxville; and Mrs. Charles Ridley, Jr., of Nashville.

CONFEDERATE DAUGHTERS IN PHILADELPHIA.—A Philadelphia paper reports a splendid social gathering of the Philadelphia Chapter, U. D. C. Evidently this is the Dabney H. Maury Chapter. The report says: "More than two hundred enthusiastic members, with some of their husbands, enjoyed a luncheon yesterday afternoon in a veritable bower of red hearts in honor of the day. Each member received a small flag of the Confederacy and a small red heart, while American flags were draped on the walls of the room. A delightful musical programme followed the luncheon, and several addresses were made." The paper enumerates quite a list of distinguished women who participated in the addresses and music. Members of the committee on arrangements were Mrs. William K. Beard (Chairman), Mrs. George Franklin Brown, Mrs. Henry R. Robins, Mrs. T. Ashby Blythe, Mrs. George R. Currie, Mrs. Julian Taylor, Mrs. William Douglas Mason, and Miss Lucy T. Mayo. Founded more than two years ago, the Philadelphia Chapter has been very successful, and has aided in many ways the poor Southern families who have come North and also many of the South.

CONFEDERATE MONUMENTS FOR TENNESSEE.—Mrs. A. J. Emerson, 3631 West 30th Avenue, Denver, Colo., gives the following list: Bolivar, Clarksville, Chattanooga, Chattanooga Cemetery Arch, Covington, Columbia, Dyersburg, Franklin, Fayetteville, Gallatin, Jackson, Knoxville, Lebanon, Lewisburg, Memphis, Memphis (Forrest), Murfreesboro, Nashville, Pulaski (Sam Davis), Ripley, Paris, Sewanee, Shiloh, Shelbyville, J. W. Thomas (Nashville), Trenton, Union City, Winchester, Va., Chickamauga (artillery, cavalry, infantry, Carnes's Battery). Mrs. Emerson inquires: "Are there others? If so, information about them will be greatly appreciated." She desires to know where others are located, in whose honor erected, by whom, and the cost. There is a Federal cavalry monument at Chickamauga.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONERS.—According to statistics in the National Tribune, there were on the pension roll of the United States government in January, 1908, 959,561 persons; and of this large number, 633,386 are Civil War survivors. This number decreased by death during the month of January, 1908, 2,950.

THE FLAG-RAISING AT ARKANSAS HOME.

At the recent Convention of the Arkansas Division, U. D. C., one of the most impressive ceremonies ever witnessed in our Southland was enacted. It was the flag-raising over the Confederate Home. Arrangements for the occasion and the day's programme had been placed in the capable hands of Mrs. J. Lawson Reid, and wisely and well did she perform her patriotic duties even to the minutest details. Carriages were supplied for all delegates and guests, and the visitors were driven over the beautiful Granite Mountain to the Home, five miles from the City of Roses.

On arriving at the Home the guests were received by Captain Watkins, Superintendent, and Gov. Dan Jones, President of the Board of Directors. Mrs. Reid, with several chosen assistants, received in the parlors of the Home. After an elaborate luncheon was served, the flag-raising services were begun. Particularly impressive was this ceremony, for the reason that it was a double flag-raising, the United States flag and the Confederate flags going up together. And it was indeed a never-to-be-forgotten sight, the stars and bars and the stars and stripes floating from one flag pole. In all that vast assembly of the aged and brave and strong not a dry eye was visible. Nothing more touching could be conceived. All voices present joined in the opening hymn. An original poem, "Our Flag," was then read by the author, Mrs. Josie Frazee Cappleman.

The orator of the occasion, Gov. Dan W. Jones, made an eloquent address, followed by the men of the gray and the men of the blue alternately. Capt. W. G. Akers, of the G. A. R. Post, and Hon. H. L. Rammel each made a brief and interesting address. Never in the history of Arkansas was there such manifold evidence of united feeling and sentiment as on this happy occasion, and to Mrs. J. L. Reid, to whose untiring zeal and fine judgment the success was greatly due, all have joined in expressing earnest and sincere gratitude.

Comrades in Arkansas have been conspicuous for years by their zeal in every good word and work for their cause.

VISITING CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOMES.THE ARKANSAS SUPERINTENDENT MAKES A TOUR.

The authorities of the Arkansas Confederate Soldiers' Home did a wise thing in appropriating funds and sending Col. W. M. Watkins, Superintendent of the Home, to visit other like institutions in the South. He had completed visits to the Tennessee, Alabama, and Louisiana Homes. He spent a day or so at the Tennessee Home, located on the Hermitage property, eleven miles from Nashville. This property is owned by the State, and was the home of General and President Andrew Jackson. He expressed himself as much pleased with the Tennessee Home and wrote of it:

TENNESSEE CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOME.

"The Tennessee Home is a large two-story brick containing fifty-four dormitories, above and below. On the first floor are the reception rooms, parlor, library, dining hall, kitchen, etc.; engine rooms and laundry are located in the basement. There are also four cottages. The hospital is a separate building of ten rooms, kitchen and dining room. A special cook prepares the meals, and they have trained nurses. The hospital is maintained and looked after by the U. D. C. Chapters at Nashville, committees visiting the Home weekly. Captain Lee, the Superintendent, and Captain Hill, the Commandant, are indefatigable in their efforts to do their whole duty, and have the esteem and confidence of the inmates. There are one hundred and thirty inmates. The premises are scrupulously clean and the comrades there are contented.

ALABAMA HOME, AT MOUNTAIN CREEK.

"I am delighted with all the Homes visited; they are well kept, clean, and healthy. At Mountain Creek they have a most beautiful location; and when Captain Simpson has means sufficient, Alabama will have a lovely Home. It is new.

"Mountain Creek, the Alabama Home, is an ideal spot for a Soldiers' Home, twenty-eight miles above Montgomery. They have the cottage system—a main central building, large and commodious, containing the Superintendent's office, the library, Quartermaster's rooms, with an auditorium overhead with a seating capacity of one thousand. From this main building right and left is a row of cottages, eight in each row, forming a semicircle inclosing the park. These cottages have five rooms each. One cottage in each row is used as a dining hall, each having its own cook and being in charge of an inmate, who issues rations and superintends the build-

LOUISIANA CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOME, NEW ORLEANS.

Capt. J. N. Simpson, the Superintendent, has a separate cottage for himself and family, and they all join in extending a generous hospitality to visitors. This I very much appreciated. Captain Simpson, a gallant old soldier himself, fully appreciates the work in hand, and is making the Home a lovely place.

MISSISSIPPI HOME, AT BEAUVOIR.

"No location is more beautiful than Beauvoir. It is lovely by nature, and the association connected with it makes it sacred to the Confederate soldier. Dr. Price, the Superintendent, is an Arkansan by brevet, but an old-timer and not one of the new issue variety. The Home is to be congratulated in having such an efficient Superintendent. He is ably seconded by Mrs. Wallace, who is the Matron, a typical Southern woman of the old school, efficient, affable. She dispenses old-time hospitality with that grace that characterizes our Southern women and makes them so charming.

"Beauvoir has ninety-seven inmates.

LOUISIANA HOME, AT NEW ORLEANS.

"Camp Nichols, New Orleans. Capt. H. H. Ward, Superintendent, is a typical old Confederate soldier, and looks as if he were able to go on another campaign. They have one hundred and fifteen inmates.

"I couldn't begin to describe so many beauties at each turn as at Camp Nichols. It is an ideal place for a Home. An air of cleanliness is found everywhere, the grounds are well kept and shaded by large water oaks with moss hanging from each branch, magnolias, and all varieties of flowers and shrubbery. A man who would 'kick' here would not be satisfied in paradise—if he should get there.

"I met old comrades at each Home, and at each Home I found the inmates comfortable, well and bountifully fed, well clothed, and contented. True, there are those who are exacting and who have imaginary ills to endure and who will talk and find fault, yet when you sift their complaints you find nothing in them. The good and true soldier on the firing line can readily be distinguished wherever found.

"These old men are all facing to the west, and in a few years more will have joined their comrades across the great divide. We should try to make their last days bright and cheerful, for the world will never see another Confederate army (there was never but the one), and they should be real soldiers to the end, obey the rules and regulations, be cheerful and bright. I would advise: Cheer your old comrade, show your appreciation of what your State is doing for you. It is too late now to sully your record. The end is almost in sight. By all means cultivate comradeship with your associates. It will not only be good for them but for you also.

GLIMPSES OF BEAUTIFUL BEAUVOIR.

ing in all details. This Home has sixty-seven inmates. The hospital is at the lower end of the buildings. The late Col. J. M. Faulkner first established this Home, and gave freely of his time and means for its welfare and improvement.

MAIN BUILDING OF THE TENNESSEE CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOME.

THE ARKANSAS CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOME, LITTLE ROCK.

"The Arkansas Home was established in 1890. A number of gentlemen who wore the gray bought the land (fifty-five acres) situated on the Sweet Home Pike four and a half miles from Little Rock. There were several frame buildings on the place, and these were filled up; and at first a party was placed in charge who boarded the inmates at so much per head. Later it was turned over to the State, and the present buildings were erected. An ample appropriation is made for its maintenance. In 1905 Mrs. R. J. Lea, an active worker in the interest of the Home, secured from the Legislature an appropriation of $15,000 to build and furnish an annex to the Home for the reception of the wives and widows of old soldiers. The building was completed, and is being furnished by the present Board. It contains twenty rooms. Our hospital, to the left of the main building, is a neat brick cottage of five rooms and wide hall, bath room, etc. We have steam heat, electric lights, and fire plugs with hose attached in case of fire. We have eighty-three inmates, with twenty-three applications for admission. Seven inmates have died in the past year."

Colonel Watkins was intimate in the old days with "Johnnie" Jones, one of the three who captured the J. H. Miller, the others being Bennie Briggs and Church Price. (See page 73, VETERAN for February, 1907.) In writing from New Orleans, he states:

"I am laying over to-day because I found my old friend and comrade, 'Johnnie' Jones, here. We had not met for twenty-seven years, yet I recognized him instantly, and we have spent two delightful days together talking over old times. He is full of interesting and thrilling reminiscences, and will write them all up for the VETERAN."

"I will always remember your kindness to me when in Nashville. * * * When you come West, you will find our latchstring will be in your reach as soon as you arrive at the Arkansas end of the bridge from Memphis."

Every State maintaining a Confederate Home honors itself.

REAL SOLDIER GUARD TO PRESIDENT DAVIS.

A. C. Van Dusen was a sergeant of artillery. He is now retired. He served in the United States army for nearly half a century in the artillery branch. Throughout the Civil War he was a sergeant. Toward the close of the war he served at Fort Monroe. He lives near New Glatz, in Prince George County, Md. He says:

"I was on duty at Fort Monroe when Jefferson Davis was brought there as a prisoner and was sergeant of the guard over him. I remember how we all felt toward the prisoner. Most of us were seasoned soldiers, had seen four years of real service, had swapped coffee and sugar for tobacco with the Johnnies, and we were all long past feeling any personal ill will toward anybody on the other side. But here we were face to face with the man we had for four years regarded as the head and front of the secession business. We knew that Lee and Jackson, the Johnstons and Beauregard, the Hills, and a score of others were big men; but we Yanks thought that Jeff Davis was the biggest of them all. Of course we regarded him with a great deal of curiosity.

"The guard soon got to like him because he was very gentlemanly, and there was no attempt at haughtiness in his manner toward the men detailed to guard him. The order to iron him was a great surprise to us. We saw no reason for it, because there was not a ghost of a chance for him to escape. Even if there had been no guard over him, he could not have gotten out of that fort or even out of his own cell. He never made any sign that he would try to escape. We were all glad when, under the surgeon's advice, the shackles were taken off.

"Mr. Davis always smoked a meerschaum pipe, which he had brought with him. I never saw him smoke a cigar, and late along in his imprisonment he used to give me cigars. I think they were given him by officers in the fort."

[It is gratifying to note testimony from real soldiers in their regard for the Confederate President.—ED. VETERAN.]

GEN. JOHN DUNOVANT, HOUSTON, TEX.

FROM SKETCH BY MISS ADELIA A. DUNOVANT, EX-PRESIDENT
TEXAS DIVISION, U. D. C.

In a list of the Confederate generals published in the January (1908) issue of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN the name of one who was conspicuous for courage, brilliant in achievement, and exceptional in discipline and command of troops was not given—Brig. Gen. John Dunovant, of South Carolina.

In the "Confederate Military History" there is a record of the services of this truly distinguished soldier. In the Confederate Museum at Richmond his commission is preserved.

At a Confederate Reunion held in Columbia, S. C., in 1895 the eminent Maj. Gen. M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, on being requested to deliver an address, "occupied the time allotted," to use his language, "by relating the incidents attending the death of one of the most gallant and accomplished soldiers with whom I was associated during our Civil War—Brig. Gen. John Dunovant, of Chester—with a brief and imperfect sketch of his life."

Col. U. R. Brooks's book, "Butler and His Cavalry in the War of Secession," contains a vivid narrative of the battle of McDowell's Farm and the death of General Dunovant by one of the bravest of Confederate couriers, Charles Montague, Company B, 6th South Carolina Cavalry, Dunovant's Brigade, now living at Bandera, Tex.

A circumstance following the death of General Dunovant reveals the awe in which General Dunovant was held by the enemy. The circumstance referred to in the book is as follows: "The United States Congress gave a medal to the Yankee soldier who claimed to have killed General Dunovant. A member of the 1st New Jersey Cavalry petitioned Congress for a medal, claiming that he had killed General Dunovant, and he got the medal. Colonel Kester commanded this regiment. I don't understand how a man could claim that he had killed the General when at least a thousand guns were fired at him about the same time."

GEN. JOHN DUNOVANT.

TRIBUTE FROM GENERAL BUTLER.

In his address General Butler, above referred to, said:

"Gen. John Dunovant succeeded me in the command of the brigade composed of the 4th, 5th, and 6th South Carolina Cavalry, which joined the Army of Northern Virginia in April, 1864, at the opening of that desperate and trying campaign which Grant inaugurated against Richmond. General Dunovant was in command of the 5th South Carolina when the regiment reached Virginia; and, as I have remarked, was made brigadier general when I was promoted to the command of Hampton's Division, in September, 1864.

"He was the beau ideal of a soldier, a knightly, chivalric gentleman, thorough in the details of discipline and order, exacting, but always just, guarding with care and solicitude the interests of his soldiers, demanding of all alike the full measure of their duty. The result was, his command was always ready to respond promptly to his orders. He was in himself a model of promptness and precision, both in obeying and executing orders.

"To say that General Dunovant was able in the organization, discipline, and command of troops in battle would be no higher commendation than could be bestowed on hundreds of others. He was exceptional in those respects, and deserved higher rank than he reached. Two things conspired to prevent his advancement: First, the hostility and, I am inclined to think, jealousy of a superior officer in the early years of the war had blocked his way to promotion; and, secondly, this post of duty did not afford the opportunity for active field service, for the full exercise of his military talents. His experience in the regular army of the United States, which he left to cast his fortune with the Confederacy, prepared and qualified him for organization and putting volunteer troops in the field.

"His first service in the Confederate army was as a field officer in the 1st Regiment of South Carolina Regulars, performing garrison duty in front of Charleston. This duty was of course arduous and important, and I don't think has been properly appreciated. I have always insisted that the defense of that historic city, so full of unexampled deeds of heroism, fortitude, and gallantry, was without a parallel in military annals. The defense of Forts Moultrie and Sumter and the Morris Island Batteries against the combined attacks of the land and naval forces of the United States, when considered in all of its details, is the most remarkable in history.

"But I am straying from my subject. Dunovant was for a time one of the actors in that great drama; but it was when he was transferred to the broader fields of Virginia that his talents became more conspicuous and he received the promotion to which they entitled him.

"Soon after his arrival in Virginia, in 1864, he was detached with his regiment on temporary duty under command of Gen. Fitz Lee, and while so detached received a painful wound in the hand in an engagement with the enemy on the James River. Before his wound was healed he reported for duty with his hand in a sling, and never again left it until his death.

"He was killed on October 1, 1864, near McDowell's farm, below Petersburg, leading his brigade, fighting as infantry, against the breastworks of the enemy. He was mounted on his favorite chestnut horse, and it was my fortune to be at his side when he received his mortal wound. General Hampton had directed me to hold a certain position on the Squirrel Level road until I heard the guns of Gen. W. H. F. Lee on my left, and then to move forward and attack all along our front. It was a cold, rainy, disagreeable day. We were dismounted, and had thrown up temporary breastworks of rails, logs, etc., and had been engaging the enemy almost the entire day, resisting repeated and determined assaults on our lines until about 3 P.M., when I ordered forward the whole line, and they went at a run down the hill, leaving the two batteries on the ridge engaged over our heads in a sharp artillery duel with the enemy's guns. Dunovant's and Young's Brigades had reached the base of the hill, where they were subjected to such a murderous fire from the enemy on the other side of a narrow swamp that I ordered the whole line to halt and lie down. I had directed Colonel Phillips to conduct his mounted regiment across a strip of woods and re-form it in an open field to our right. While the dismounted men were thus partially protected from the enemy's fire I had sent scouts to the right to ascertain if we could not find a position from which to move on the left flank of the enemy, and thus avoid a direct front attack across the swamp.

"There was but one point at which a horseman could cross—a narrow causeway about the center of our lines. I had ridden through the woods, a short distance to the right of the causeway, to reconnoiter the ground, and on returning met Dunovant, who remarked to me that he thought 'if we would make one more forward movement we could drive the enemy from this last line of works.' It was then getting late in the afternoon, and I replied, 'If that is your opinion, move your brigade forward,' and then extended the order to Young.

"Dunovant gave the command, 'Attention, men,' in a loud voice. They had been subjected to such a terrible fire a short time before that they were a little tardy in heeding the order. He called out a second time in tones that could not be mistaken, and every man jumped to his feet and moved forward, firing across the swamp. Dunovant's horse was fretting and careering, and mine was not behaving much better; and as we reached the causeway to cross with the line on our right and left, with an open road to the enemy's works on the other side, we were greeted with a deadly volley. Dunovant was shot, and tumbled forward from his horse on the causeway. The horse dashed forward and ran into the enemy's lines. His command, 'Forward!' to his gallant soldiers was the last word he ever uttered. When the body was taken up, under the direction of his faithful and gallant adjutant general, Jeffords, I discovered an ugly indentation on his forehead, and concluded that it was there he received his mortal wound; but on examination it was found that he was shot in the breast, and the wound on the forehead must have been made by a root or log when he fell forward on the causeway.

"We at once summoned Dr. Fontaine, medical director of the corps; and as he was making his way through our batteries on the hill in our rear, he was struck in the neck by the fragment of a shell from the enemy's guns, and he too paid the penalty of a faithful, fearless discharge of duty—a splendid gentleman and an accomplished officer passed to his last account. He could, however, have rendered Dunovant no service, as his gallant life went out almost in the twinkling of an eye.

"This country has never had a more devoted son or gallant defender. He was one of the few men I have met in my life who seemed absolutely indifferent to the dangers and perils of battle. He was always sedate, self-composed, fearless, and ready. He died as I know he would have liked to die—with his face to the enemy and every throb of his manly, brave heart pulsating for the glory and welfare of his country."

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE FAMILY.

Gen. John Dunovant was born at Chester, S. C., on the 5th of March, 1825; and therefore was in his thirty-ninth year at the time of his death. He was the third son of Dr. John Dunovant, of Chester, S. C., a graduate of the Philadelphia Medical College and subsequently a State Senator. His mother, Margaret Quay, was the daughter of Alexander Quay and Catherine Leslie, both of Chester, S. C. His grandfather, William Dunovant, a planter, moved from Amelia County, Va., to Chester District, S. C., the latter part of the eighteenth century. Two elder brothers of General Dunovant, Col. A. Q. Dunovant and Gen. R. G. M. Dunovant (the former of Chester, the latter of Edgefield), signed South Carolina's ordinance of secession. Gen. R. G. M. Dunovant was an officer in the Mexican War. He entered the service as captain of Company B, Palmetto Regiment, and was promoted to lieutenant colonel. Some years later he was elected Adjutant and Inspector General of the State of South Carolina, in which capacity he was in command of Fort Moultrie when the "Star of the West" was fired into, and was also in command when Fort Sumter surrendered to the arms of the State.

Gen. John Dunovant served in the Mexican War as third sergeant of Company B, Palmetto Regiment; he received a severe wound at Chapultepec. He was subsequently appointed captain of Company A, 10th Infantry, United States Army, and resigned his commission upon the secession of his native State, South Carolina, giving to her the allegiance of a devoted son.

General Lee in a letter to General Hampton: "I grieve with you at the loss of General Dunovant and Dr. Fontaine, two officers whom it will be difficult to replace."

From Col. U. R. Brooks's book: "The greatest loss that day was General Dunovant, a brave, gallant soldier. He died leading a charge that, I believe, would have been preëminently successful had he not fallen. I have heard him since styled as rash for urging this charge; but the cool and impassive Butler gave him permission, and we subsequently succeeded in carrying with the same men the position that we then were charging when he fell, and from the increase in the enemy's fire I have always believed that subsequent to Dunovant's death and prior to our last successful charge they had been heavily reinforced. The next day General Butler started me for Chester, S. C., with the General's body, where it lies to-day at the home of his birth. No braver man ever filled a soldier's grave.

'The world shall yet decide

In truth's clear, far-off light

That the soldiers who wore the gray and died

With Lee were in the right.'

Gen. John Dunovant was never married. The late Capt. William Dunovant, of Texas, brother of Miss Dunovant, author of this sketch, though scarcely eighteen years of age, was appointed captain of Company C, 17th Regiment, South Carolina Volunteers, "for skill and valor." His commission is now in the Museum at Richmond. He was intellectually developed far beyond most of his years, and was the favorite nephew of General Dunovant—a character sublime for morality, chivalry, and courage.

Through the United Daughters of the Confederacy there is distinctly a merging of the generations. These women and their successors may be expected to survive all the veterans and be perpetuated on and on for many generations.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

CARPETBAG AND NEGRO RULE IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY, ALA.

BY JAMES W. POWELL, MONTGOMERY.

A history of the stirring times of the city of Montgomery and of the State of Alabama has never been written. It is the purpose to write it now, while there are yet living witnesses to verify every statement. It is written too that it may be preserved for the education of our coming generations and for the vindication of Southern honor before the civilized world.

In tears and the agony of disappointment because of surrender and that the stars and bars had gone down in defeat to rise no more the Confederate veteran made his way from North Carolina and Virginia afoot, riding when he could, inspired by the hope of being soon at home with his loved ones. He thought surrender was the end of the long years of his griefs and sorrows and a renewal of his allegiance to the stars and stripes. He could not believe that free America would employ any policy or measure that did not promise sweet peace and the harmony and prosperity of a reunited country.

At the gate of his home, in smiles and gladness, he greeted wife and children with kisses and embraces. All along his way home were standing armies at every turn. Fortunately and pleasingly the United States regimental forces, both officers and privates, were polite, affable, and disposed to do anything comporting with the health, happiness, or prosperity of his fallen foe. Busy with his home interests, his energies were concentrated in his best efforts to make it what it was before grim-visaged war had defaced or destroyed its beauty and peace. He stopped the holes in his roof, filled up crevices through which the chilly winds of winter came, repaired his barns, remade his fences, and was in utter ignorance of the infernal fires being kindled at the National Capital.

When it was made known to him that Mr. Davis was held a prisoner, bound with chains and fetters, his blood grew warm with the spirit of resentment.

Not content with the cowardly cruelty of incarcerating Mr. Davis and others, their venom rankled against even Gen. Robert E. Lee, who would have been their fellow-prisoner and fellow-sufferer had not General Grant stood an impassable barrier, a wall of fire between them and him.

Jealousy, envy, malice, and the direst poison of hate gathered in the halls of Congress, growing into a mighty and consuming fire until our constitutional compact became only ashes, and the accursed spirit of reconstruction had so altered free America as to make it the foremost province of his Satanic Majesty. Then came swarms of locusts, clouds of vultures, and countless beasts of prey, each commissioned with authority to invade the sanctity of home, to look into all places, and to appropriate jewels, plate, gold or silver coin, cotton, or other things of value.

When that fire of Inferno had grown into its utmost proportions, all governments of Dixie, State, county, and municipal, were dissolved and an election ordered. Negroes in their ignorance, the contemptible scalawag who had turned his back on his country in her hour of need, and the carpet-bagger glorying in freedom and singing of the "bottom rail on top" migrated from county to county, town to town, and wherever there was a ballot box deposited a handful of illegal votes, unable to understand what their votes meant. "They obeyed the word that was saunt." Great haste was made in the inauguration of State, county, and municipal governments and the installment of officers. Stealage became their order of procedure, and so continued until there was no money to defray daily needs and darkness overspread their skies. In this emergency, on the suggestion of their white pilots, resort was had to the issuance of State, county, and city bonds, which were divided among those in power and by them bartered at any price in the markets of the North.

Alabama was bankrupt, being hopelessly involved in a bonded debt of nearly $35,000,000, and having neither money nor bonds in her treasury. Negroes became insolent and rapacious, with tendencies toward riot and disposition to appropriate the little left by the war upon which the wives and children of the old soldiers were subsisting.

Such was the aspect of our political horizon when our people, without regard to gender or age, firmly resolved, to resist the yoke of oppression at any cost. In conference it was proposed and agreed to outvote them in the ensuing city election, and so wrest from the dirty hordes the power they had usurped.

Organizations were perfected, fellow-soldiers and their sons were called from our own and adjacent counties, and they came unbidden from other States; so that when the auspicious day came, in 1872, we were all at the polling places and in force, equipped with carefully correct lists of citizens who were legally entitled to suffrage.

That day the sun rose upon the heavens in beauty and splendor. Negroes were in swarms and militant, coming from other counties and towns to exercise their American freedom; nor were the hungry carpetbaggers or scalawags wanting.

Balloting was both rapid and continuous amidst imprecations and uncivil expressions of speech as some negro belonging anywhere outside of Montgomery City was challenged.

The writer found it necessary on that day to absent himself from the polls of Ward 2, going to Dexter Avenue. On his speedy return he was accosted by Col. H. C. Semple, who informed him that he was just from an investigating trip to the capitol; that he had found recorded in the House Journal a bill which had become a law prohibiting the punishment of repeating or other illegal voting. This information was manna falling to us from heaven. The efficient, good work of Colonel Semple was utilized at once, being conveyed to other polls, where our good people saw the dire necessity of driving the negro and his white friends from all the voting places, of which they had taken possession, and permitting only Democratic ballots to go into the box.

A negro came to the writer wanting to vote with the white people, the Democratic ticket. He was pursued to the very polls by a pack of howling devils, yelling: "Kill him! Kill him! This 'nigger' is here to vote the Democratic ticket."

The fury and noise was so great as to be deafening, so that it was next to impossible to understand anything said to each other. Sticks, clubs, knives, and pistols were ready in hand for use, when Mr. "Billy" Ray, then an old man, jerked off his coat, threw it on the ground, and exhorted the boys, saying: "Now is as good a time to die as any. Let the fight begin."

Stonewall Jackson's invincibles never obeyed order to charge with more alacrity. The fight did begin in earnest. The Metcalfs in one place, the Caffeys in another, the Westcotts close by—all around old soldiers and boys who were too young for service when our country needed them were battling with great, burly negroes to drive them from the voting place. This determined effort was not without fruit.

Messages were quickly sent to the other polls of what we had accomplished. Before the hour of 12 M. the enemy were routed, head, neck, and heels, and the polls were ours without dispute; but continuous and industrious work had to be kept up that we should have a majority of votes in the count at 8 P.M. Counting the ballot was enormous work, but its footings were honest and a righteous vindication of the good people of Montgomery.

Our good people rejoiced, and congratulations seemed to come from the civilized world. This signal triumph was quickly followed by a new city government and the speedy removal of the debased herd of vultures from every place of trust or honor.

Holding the polls for ourselves only, voting thirty, fifty, one hundred times each, and cramming the boxes, was an invincible process; but it was inaugurated and made law by the Mongrel Legislature for its perpetuation, and without our knowledge Colonel Semple brought us the information necessary to our great triumph.

This election was an education to our county and State; so that when elections came later, Alabama's fetters were broken and she was herself again. Negro, scalawag, and carpetbag politicians ceased to be a menace to our city or an offense to our people.

Governor Houston was elected in 1874, and each county chose its own members of the General Assembly and its own county officers. But when attempt was made to oust the culprits from their usurpations, it looked again like bloody war. But the carpetbagger, scalawag, and ignorant, impudent negro gave way to the inevitable, and sweet peace came to Alabama. The dust of battle was dissipated.

Our Governor was inaugurated, the Legislature met, and at once began looking into the unclean work of reconstruction. A true state of facts was presented to them in an empty treasury and evidence recorded in treasury books of $35,000,000 bonds sold or divided between such of them as had footing in or access to power.

Bankruptcy! repudiation! was heard in all our realm. Our stanch old Governor and his wise men applied themselves to the task of scaling or compromising for less than $8,000,000. They utterly refused to allow that Alabama was responsible for one dollar; but rather than have our State's good name dishonored by such association, this compromise was agreed to.

All of Dixie came into line with Alabama. Thus were broken the shackles riveted upon our homes by that unrighteous convention of Satanic spirits calling themselves "The Congress and Senate of Free America." So did Heaven thwart and bring to naught their wicked designs and cause the sun of liberty to roll in glory as it came to us from our Revolutionary fathers.

The writer assures the Christian world that every statement in this history is the truth and calls the living participants of that fearful, uncertain time as witness.

The above manuscript having been in hand for more than a decade, inquiry was made of Dr. Thomas M. Owen, who replied: "Capt. James Powell can be reached at Lake Charles, La. He is now there on a visit to one of his sons, but will soon go to Texas." This vivid picture of reconstruction days hardly seems credible now because of changed conditions. Yet in truth it is hardly possible to exaggerate the true conditions of that period.

VIVID REMINISCENCE OF A SCOUT.

BY DR. CHARLES HARRIS, MUSKOGEE, IND. T.

With the events at one end of forty years and more and the narrator at the other end, there is a chance for the facts to get a little bit tangled. To avoid this, however, the minutiae will be omitted, and a few well-remembered facts stated.

As the armies of Generals Johnston and Sherman faced each other at Dalton, Ga., General Wheeler wrote to Gen. P. M. B. Young to send him twelve picked scouts from Virginia. Lieutenant Payne, of Ringgold, Ga., and of Cobb's Legion, was ordered to pick twelve men and report to General Wheeler at Dalton. We reached Dalton in due time, and found General Wheeler just before sundown out near a heavy skirmish line. When Lieutenant Payne reported, General Wheeler remarked: "I am glad you are here; you will go through the enemy's line to-night." Just before dark General Wheeler informed Lieutenant Payne that he had just received orders from General Johnston for the army to fall back immediately. Our orders were to fall back with the army and to wait for further orders.

On the eventful withdrawal to Atlanta our experiences were varied. As we stood on Peach Tree Hill and witnessed the once beautiful city go up in smoke, we learned from a woman peddler who came out of the burning city that Sherman's army was leaving. Our scout was divided and sent down several streets with orders to meet at the Union Depot. Among the prisoners in the drag net was Jimmie Robinson, of world-wide fame as a bareback rider. Twenty miles north of Atlanta was the beautiful little city of Roswell, once the home of President Roosevelt's mother. Located there were a number of extensive cotton and woolen factories. Roswell was occupied by the enemy just before the fall of Atlanta. I was ordered to go and ascertain the number and position of the enemy. Knowing that Tom Brown, who was raised at Warsaw, was well acquainted at Roswell, I asked that a man go with me, and secured Brown. In a few hours Tom and I were on the banks of the Chattahoochee, where we lashed a few rails together to keep our munitions dry while crossing the river. After dark we went into Roswell and to the home of Tom's sweetheart. We were soon dressed like washerwomen. Soon after midnight we were on our way out. Next day the factories were burned, and the cloth and thread given to the poor. A number of officers in boasting of their liberality to a group of young ladies of the "blood-red and sky-blue type" were told that they had but little to boast of, as two of their scouts were there dressed in women's clothes and drew thread and cloth.

One day our scout rode up to a farmhouse where Captain Smith's Texas Scouts had engaged the enemy but a few hours before. We found a Mr. Zimmerman, of Captain Smith's Scouts, and who was also a former sheriff of Austin County, Tex., as we thought, mortally wounded. He fell among good Samaritans, however; the oil and wine were applied, and Zimmerman was nursed back to health. Our scouts bivouacked in the vicinity, and some ten or fifteen miles away was a brigade of the enemy's cavalry in camp. Zimmerman came to our camp to get a volunteer to go with him to the enemy's camp for a horse. Dick Haynes, who was raised near Alpharetta, Milton County, Ga., and who knew every pig trail to and from the enemy's camp, volunteered to go with Zimmerman for the needed horse; and I doubt if two men in the Confederate army could have been found who were better fitted for the work. It was warm weather. Dick led the way under cover of night right into the midst of the sleeping soldiers and tethered horses. Their desire to get the pick of the horses led to their capture. They were hailed as they went from horse to horse by a soldier who had just awoke. He was told, as they had told others, to lie down and go to sleep; but he refused to do so, gave the alarm, and that part of the camp arose as one man, and Dick and Zimmerman were made prisoners.

Comrades, let us put on the whole armor of God and come up as one man against the great enemy of souls; and by and by, when the "silver cord be loosed; or the golden bowl be broken," we will cross over and rest with Jackson and Lee, and all comrades gone before, "under the shade of the trees."

LOUISIANA SONS OF VETERANS.

In a circular letter issued by Edmund Maurin, Commander of the Louisiana Division, U. S. C. V., he announces his headquarters at Donaldsonville and his staff as follows:

Clem J. Estopinal, Adjutant and Chief of Staff, Estopinal.

A. E. Shaw, Assistant Division Adjutant, New Orleans.

J. B. Rosser, Jr., Division Inspector, New Orleans.

Hugh C. Smith, Division Quartermaster, New Orleans.

E. A. Fowler, Division Commissary, New Orleans.

Victor Ganel, Asst. Division Commissary, Donaldsonville.

Edward Rightor, Division Judge Advocate, New Orleans.

Dr. E. K. Sims, Division Surgeon, Donaldsonville.

Rev. Louis Tucker, Division Chaplain, Baton Rouge.

Aids-de-Camp: Theodore Atchinson and H. S. Armstrong. New Orleans; L. A. Landry, Jr., S. H. St. Martin, and James E. Ayraud, Donaldsonville; P. H. Gilbert, Napoleonville.

Advisory Committee: J. Y. Sanders, Monument; Charles Maurin, Finance; W. O. Hart, Historical; R. G. Pleasant; A. A. Bursley; Dr. Sidney Vega.

Division Historian General, R. F. Green, and Division Keeper of Archives, George K. Renaud, New Orleans.

Brigade Commanders: W. W. Kemp, Amite City, First Brigade; David Israel, Jr., Donaldsonville, Second Brigade; A. V. Coco, Marksville, Third Brigade; Joseph Renwick, Monroe, Fourth Brigade; Henry Hunsicker, Shreveport, Fifth Brigade.

The Commander appeals to his associates as follows:

"Sons of Veterans, for four long years our fathers fought with the courage and endurance of Spartans for our Southland, for their rights under the Constitution. The record of those years shows a devotion to country that stands unequalled in the history of the world.

"The Confederate soldier has carved the name of the South high upon the walls of the temple of fame, and it will shine there as a brilliant gem for future millions to admire. Fighting for home and fireside, they were the grandest soldiers the world has ever known. Their only wage was glory, and they fought only for principle.

"We reaffirm our declarations that the Confederate soldier was right, knew that he was right, and is right. His motives were as pure as ever illumined the patriot's breast, and we will labor with unceasing energy to see that the history of the Confederacy is truly written and taught."

He then quotes from Gen. Stephen D. Lee, Commander in Chief of the U. C. V., who says, "To you, Sons, we will commit the vindication of the cause for which we fought," and then adds: "Therefore let us stand up and discharge the duty that lies before us. Let us show the world that the courage, the energy, the devotion that animated the fathers live and nourish in the sons."

EXPERIENCES ON THE HOOD CAMPAIGN.

BY SAM B. DUNLAP, DEKALB, MO.

I have seen in the January VETERAN the lengthy account of "Hood's Failure at Spring Hill, Tenn," by Judge J. P. Young, of Memphis. I was a private in the 1st Missouri Artillery, with General Polk's command, which formed a junction with Johnston's army at Adairsville, Ga., May 17, 1864. Just one year from that day I, with others, took refuge behind the intrenchments of Vicksburg, Miss. I was with that army all through the Georgia and Tennessee campaigns, and surrendered under Johnston at Greensboro, N. C.

When Johnston was superseded by Hood, the soldiers were very much depressed at losing their noble commander, in whom they had implicit confidence. This was one of the most crushing blows the Army of Tennessee ever suffered. Hood's movements from that on were a series of failures.

I was very much surprised when I read the account by Judge Young. Although I was with Stewart's Corps, I was unaware of such maneuvering north of Duck River. If his description is correct, Hood certainly did make a great failure.

On November 29 our battery received orders to select the best horses of the company and report to General Stewart with four guns, one ordnance wagon, and no caissons—we were the only artillery company with the corps. We joined the infantry and crossed Duck River four miles east of Columbia at Davis's Ferry on a pontoon and reported to Brigadier General Brant to bring up the rear. We were requested to make as little noise as possible, for fear of detection by the enemy. During our circuitous march we were interrupted by the whistle of Minies several times. The road (if any) over which we passed was very rough and rocky, and when night came it was very dark. We had to feel our way through the timber; and when crossing one of the huge boulders every spoke in one of the rear wheels on the gun to which I belonged was smashed, and to our surprise the extra wheel on the ordnance wagon would not fit. We appropriated the hind wheel of a near-by farmer's wagon and moved on. After a circuitous march of what seemed about twenty miles, we stopped at midnight for a short rest. Owing to having to replace our broken wheel and short rest, the infantry were considerably in our advance, and we were ordered to push forward as rapidly as possible and overtake them, in which we succeeded just as day was breaking on the morning of the 30th a short distance from the Nashville Pike, to find that the Federals had passed on in the direction of Franklin.

Next came the battle of Franklin, about which I will only say it was the hardest-fought battle in which I was ever engaged. I always thought Hood could have avoided so much bloodshed by flanking and accomplished as much or more good. Next morning after the battle we replaced our broken wheel from the rear wheel of a caisson left by the Federals on one of the streets of Franklin. In the evening of December 2 we arrived within three or four miles of Nashville.

On December 5 our battery was ordered to report to Brigadier General Sears's Mississippi Brigade, and with several other infantry brigades and Forrest's Cavalry we marched to Murfreesboro, but failed to capture it; and when our lines were broken at Nashville, we were compelled to retreat over a very rough and seldom traveled road. Our horses soon became so greatly fatigued from pulling through the mud that we had to double teams, frequently hitching as many as twelve horses to one gun. Our intention was to ford Duck River about three miles from Chapel Hill; but continued rains had made it impossible, and in making our way back to the Nashville Pike we passed over some of the same territory when endeavoring to cut off the Federals on our northern march. Many of the troops were barefooted. I was the same as barefooted for about ten days, and entirely so two days previous to recrossing Duck River. The wind shifted to the north, turning the rain to sleet, and then a light snow.

The crossing of the river was very slow, as the whole army had to use the same pontoon; and by permission of our first lieutenant, Sam Kennard, a comrade, Taylor, and I crossed in advance of the company. My intention was to get some shoes if possible. We entered an unused livery stable, at that time filled with soldiers trying to dry and warm themselves around some smoldering fires. I inquired for shoes of a boy about fifteen years old standing in the office door. He invited me in and handed me a pair of half-worn cloth shoes about two sizes too large for me. He said they were worth fifteen dollars. I handed him a twenty-dollar bill, and while he was out for change I spied under his bunk, secreted under a blue Federal overcoat, a pair of half-worn leather shoes, and upon his return had them secure under the folds of a coat of the same color worn by myself. Failing to get the proper change, I got the cloth shoes for ten dollars. My comrade and I left the barn, making tracks in the snow tinged with blood. We then had shoes, but for fear of detection did not stop to put them on until we reached camp, one mile distant. I was just a boy then myself, and mention this incident, hoping that I may hear from that "other fellow." Haven't paid for those shoes yet.

The remainder of this retreat was attended with many more hardships. Although we marched many miles to do so, we felt secure when we were again placed under the command of that noble old general, Joseph E. Johnston.

WOULD CREMATE THE CONFEDERATE FLAG.—The Ohio Sun, at Columbus, states: "Patriotic Instructor T. T. Smith tells what his first act in Congress would be: 'If I am ever sent to Congress, the first bill I will introduce will provide for the cremation of every flag in this country but the stars and stripes.' With these words T. T. Smith, Patriotic Instructor of the Ohio Division of the Grand Army of the Republic, launched his candidacy for Congress at the Washington birthday celebration of the Patriotic Order Sons of America." It would be difficult for Mr. T. T. Smith to get possession of all these flags. There are blood stains on many of them which are valued above the currency of the government or all of the gold which declares that "In God we trust."

NEW CAMP OF SONS OF VETERANS IN FLORIDA.—Young men of Apalachicola, Fla., are coming to the rescue in Confederate matters. Comrade Fred G. Wilhelm has taken an active interest among them and submitted the name of Capt. Robert Knickmeyer, deceased, as a suitable name, which was unanimously adopted. Various committees were appointed for the organization. Meetings will be held at the Armory the first Wednesday of each month at 8:30 P.M. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: T. J. Moore, Commander; W. G. Sharit and J. L. Sims, Lieutenant Commanders; Charles H. Lovett, Adjutant; J. S. Murrow, Surgeon; Veto Sangaree, Quartermaster; M. H. Norton, Chaplain; A. F. Whiteside, Treasurer; Latinus Boylston, Color Sergeant; W. P. Dodd, Historian. The roster consists of seventy-six members.

GEN. FITZHUGH LEE IN HAVANA.

Some facts too good to be lost were brought out in an address by Maj. R. W. Hunter, a prominent staff officer in the sixties, on Fitz Lee Day at the Tercentennial Exposition. He said:

"Passing over minor matters, we come now to the time in the career of Fitz Lee when the eyes of the world were focused upon him. He was appointed Consul General at Havana by President Cleveland. Yellow fever was prevailing there and the prospect uninviting. Some of his friends and family were apprehensive, and to satisfy them he called a council of those closest to him. When it met, it was known at once that his mind was already made up. With that quick apprehension—the genius of far discernment, characteristic alike of prophet, poet, and great soldier—he had mentally reconnoitered the situation, and saw the exposed flank of a rare opportunity. We wished him Godspeed, and drank with him a 'stirrup cup.'

"So clear had he been in his great office, with such consummate tact, wisdom, and firmness had he discharged the delicate diplomatic functions devolved upon him in the then highly inflamed state of the Spanish mind, that President McKinley, recognizing the eternal fitness of things and the unanimous sentiment of the country, kept him at the post of duty. His position at that time, when treachery and conspiracy not only did their dark deeds in the nighttime, but brazenly stalked abroad at noonday, was emphatically the post of danger.

"As he stood there, calm and resolute, 'as far from rashness as from fear,' with the fate of nations in his hand for the time, and the world's gaze upon him, he was indeed 'a sight for gods and men.' Gloriously did he rise to the height of the great argument and meet the full demands of the crisis.

"I never felt so glad and so proud in all my life that 'the right man was in the right place,' to uphold the country's highest ideals and most sacred traditions and that that man was a Virginian and Confederate soldier.

"At length a point was reached when forbearance ceased to be a virtue. Treaty obligations were scornfully violated, and our country's honor was at stake. The circumstances were these: Consul General Lee called on Governor General Weyler to ask the release of an American citizen who had been thrown into jail on some trivial charge. Lee was courteous, and then, as always, the gentleman. Weyler was the braggart, arrogant, contemptuous in tone and manner, and said to Lee: 'You must understand, sir, that Cuba is now under martial law, and my word is the supreme law of the land.' The lion heart of Lee was aroused by his insolence; and looking him straight in the eyes, he said: 'I want you to understand, sir, that, martial law or no martial law, the rights of American citizens must be and shall be respected, and I demand the immediate release of this American citizen, whom you have no right to hold.'

"Lee immediately returned to his office, put his demand in writing, cabled the situation to Washington, and asked for a war vessel to enforce it, if necessary. Our State Department cabled him to know 'why he had changed his policy.' Lee replied: 'I have made no change of policy. I am simply demanding that the rights of American citizens shall be respected. If you approve of my course, send me a war vessel. If you do not, accept my resignation, which goes by to-day's mail.'

"Weyler reconsidered, released the prisoner, and Lee cabled that the vessel was not needed.

"Sometime afterwards the Department informed him that the Maine would be ordered to make a friendly visit to Havana. Lee remonstrated, his common sense convincing him that the visit of a war vessel to Havana in its then excited state would probably be disastrous. Unfortunately, the war vessel had sailed, and was beyond the reach of recall. You know the result. What was left of the Maine after it was blown up lies undisturbed in the harbor of Havana, but still remains a vivid memory. I recall this matter because of the erroneous, popular belief at the time, and to some extent since, that the Maine was sent at the request of General Lee.

"The war soon came on, and Gen. Fitz Lee returned to headquarters at Washington, where upon arrival he received the most genuinely spontaneous and heartfelt ovation ever accorded, I believe, to an American citizen by the residents of our capital city.

"He had fairly won the hearts of the country, and from that time became its most popular citizen, and so remained until death cut short his brilliant career; to which, I firmly believe, fresh laurels would have been added if he had been spared to gather them.

"So manfully and triumphantly had he maintained the rights and interests of American citizens on foreign soil as the representative of the United States that all prejudice against him as a Confederate had vanished. And if a primary election could have been held or there had been an initiative and referendum, Fitz Lee would have been chosen the commanding general for the Spanish war. As it was, he was made major general of volunteers, and commanded the 7th Corps, which was made up of regiments from North and South and East and West and blue and gray—all of whom in mutual, well-beseeming ranks marched proudly all one way to the music of the Union under the old flag and Fitz Lee.

"Applications poured in upon him from all parts of the country for places upon his staff. One of them, I have heard, came from the then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Theodore Roosevelt, who thought General Fitz would certainly be where the fighting would be fiercest and most glory would be won.

"President McKinley had promised General Fitz that if Havana was attacked he should lead the forces; but the politicians feared that if such a chance were given him the presidency would follow in the wake of the glory he would gain as the hero of the war, and he was sidetracked in Florida.

"Shafter was chosen for the chief command because it was thought perhaps he would probably be even less formidable in peace than in war.

"The scene shifted to Santiago, which became the chief seat of war. Mr. Roosevelt, we remark in passing, with that quick penetration for which he is so noted, foresaw the plans of the politicians, and sought glory with the Rough Riders from the ranches of the West. If these same politicians had known all that there was in that young man, they would have switched him off long before he ever reached the famous hill of San Juan. As it was, he got there, as a smart paragrapher told us at the time, only by swimming his horse from Key West to Cuba with his sword in his mouth."

ERROR IN REPORT OF THE NEW YORK CAMP.—In some unaccountable way errors crept into the report of New York Camp, U. C. V., in the statement (page xv.) concerning the annual election of officers and that the present incumbent had been elected continuously for fourteen years. There seems to be dissatisfaction in the Camp not being in regular connection with the organization, and the statement is made that there are more than twice as many Confederates in New York as there are members of the Camp.

ARLINGTON, THE HOME OF LEE.

BY MRS. E. C. T. LONGMIRE.

With reverent heart I stood within the halls
Of Arlington, the home of Robert Lee.
Upon Virginia's heights it rears its walls
Majestically grand, as in its prime
A monument of olden days and times
When chivalry led men to deeds of fame,
And death was preferable to dishonored name.

'T was afternoon. The clear October sky,
Refulgent with the light of western sun,
Was flecked with clouds; like white doves flitting by
Or phantom sails upon an azure sea,
They seemed to linger o'er proud Arlington,
Ere drifting toward the purple horizon,
Heaven's flags of truce above the home of Lee.

O, home of Custis! Home of Robert Lee!
Where beauteous women reigned with matchless grace
And val'rous hearts beat high in years ago.
Now strangers loiter through the empty rooms,
Which of the old life hold no sign nor trace;
And barren walls reëcho back my tread,
Which sounds like ghostly footsteps overhead.

Beneath the yellowing trees upon the lawn,
In shady dells, and on the sunny slopes
Of hills which rise and fall like mortal hopes
White marble shafts and headstones mark the graves
Of those who wore the blue and died to save
The Union and the flag which now floats o'er
The home of Lee upon Potomac's shore.

In lonely spot far down the sloping bank
Our Southern heroes lie rank after rank;
No monument yet marks their place of rest,
Though all the world their prowess doth attest.
Yet sleep they sweetly, for the sun and dew
Fall equally upon the gray and blue,
Cradled alike upon Virginia's breast.

Above the graves the grass is turning brown;
Bright leaves of gold and crimson rustle down
And whirl and twirl with every passing breeze
Or lie in shining heaps beneath the trees
Which e'er keep guard. Now, touched by autumn's wand,
In gold and scarlet livery they stand
Like sentinels above the mounds below,
Crowned with the splendor of the sunset's glow.

In copse and dell long shadows creep apace
And silence reigns supreme o'er all the place;
While overhead the flag of peace, unfurled,
Floats on the breeze, proclaiming to the world
The greatness of our reunited land,
Where side by side the blue and gray now stand
To guard that peace beneath whose gentle sway
All former bitterness hath passed away.
But ne'er forgot shall Southern valor be
While lives the name of gallant Robert Lee.

WITNESS TO THE BATTLE OF BELMONT.

BY J. M. CARTMELL, JACKSON, TENN.

As a witness to the battle of Belmont, I was in good position to see the battle as it was fought. On that morning our regiment (6th Tennessee, Stevens's Brigade) was formed into line of battle about a mile from the river on the Columbus side. I had been sick for several days and was still ill, but got up and went in line. My captain, Penn, told me that we would be ordered over the river to Belmont in a little while, that they would double-quick to the river, and that I could not keep up; so he wrote me a pass that I could go ahead and wait for the regiment at the river. While I was there Gen. B. F. Cheatham came up with the 154th Regiment (Preston Smith's) and crossed over. I asked him to let me go over with that regiment; but he declined, and said for me to stand there and help the wounded up on the bank from the boats and wait on them and give them some whisky when they got over. The crossing was by an old flatboat.

It was from this place that I saw the battle. General Cheatham carried Smith's Regiment up the river. The Federals had forced Colonel Tappan's regiment down into their camps and set fire to the tents. Seeing what Cheatham was doing, the Federals retreated and went up the river to avoid being flanked by Cheatham's command. They were out much of the night, or he would have captured them. He came near getting General Grant; but a plank was run out to the bank, and he and his horse were taken on board.

Our men fell back after their ammunition had given out, but we whipped the Federals badly. It was reported at Cairo that they had lost eighteen hundred men. I went over the next morning and saw their dead and wounded back of Tappan's camp in an old cornfield. There must have been eight hundred in that old field. The fight was badly managed on both sides. Grant should have captured the troops that were over there; then Polk and Pillow should have captured Grant and his whole command, and they would have done so had they sent their troops over a half hour sooner, as they were not looking for an attack on that side. If our scouts had done their duty, they would have ascertained that the troops coming down the Columbus side were to keep us from reinforcing the force across the river. After the "Lady Polk" fired two or three shots at them, they retreated, and our men landed. I saw "Marse Frank" and the 154th Regiment when it landed. He stuck spurs in his horse and jumped him out of the boat before it had landed, and told his men to follow him and he would lead them to victory. The fore feet of his horse struck the bank, but his hind feet went into the water.

WITNESSED ALSO BY WILLIAM HUME, SPRING HILL, TENN.

I was stationed at Redan Fort, Island No. 10, on the Mississippi River, serving in Lieut. Stewart's battery of the Tennessee Artillery Corps. The night before the battle of Belmont I was ordered to carry a prisoner to Columbus, Ky., accompanied by Sergeant Beauchamp, now physician in charge of the Tennessee Central Insane Hospital. We arrived at Columbus on the morning of November 7, 1861, and on the way up town we heard the first cannon from the Federal side.

After having delivered our prisoner and being unattached, we went at once to the bluffs, where our heavy artillery was planted, and had a full view of the battle.

The enemy's gunboats were in sight up the river at its bend. They fired a few shots, but our artillery soon drove them back. The enemy at that time were driving the few men that we had on the Missouri side to the river bank, setting fire to the tents, and I also saw them come to the bank of the river and shoot at our men, who were running to the water's edge. I next saw reinforcements rapidly leaving in boats from the Kentucky side, and with the assistance of our heavy artillery on the bluffs we soon drove the Federals back and had them in full retreat to their transports.

Long projectiles were used, and the Yankees said that we shot "lamp posts" at them. These were shot from our big gun, the "Lady Polk," which a few days later exploded in firing a charge that had been left in the piece the day of the battle. That night I went over the field with a squad of our men and saw a large number of dead on the battle ground. The next morning I again went over and saw a great many Federal officers and soldiers under a flag of truce caring for their dead comrades. I took particular notice of a very handsome officer, whom I understood was Col. John A. Logan, afterwards General Logan, and that he at first proposed to raise a regiment in Southern Illinois to assist the seceded States. An old Missouri farmer, whose slaves had gone back with the Federals in their retreat to Cairo, met Colonel Logan and abused him in the most vehement and bitter language I ever heard, calling him "a d— nigger thief," etc. Being under a flag of truce and unarmed, all the Colonel could do was to take it; but his eyes flashed, and I felt sure that if he ever met that old farmer again under different conditions he would repay him with interest for the abuse.

R. H. HAYES, 434 HILLARY STREET, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

In reply to your request for a statement (December VETERAN) as to whether it was true, as stated in General Grant's telegram to Washington, that he had "killed many, driving some into the river and the balance across the river to Columbus," I as a member of the 154th Sr. Regiment Tennessee Volunteers participated in that which we then called a battle, but which in 1863 to 1865 would have been termed a skirmish. I am sure that not a soldier was returned to the Kentucky side of the river until Grant had made his race back to his transport under the protection of his gunboats.

His forces attacked Tappan's 13th Arkansas Regiment, they being poorly armed, and did drive some of them into the river. Tappan's Regiment and one battery were the only troops on the Missouri side; the 154th Senior Regiment and the 13th Tennessee, of Cheatham's command, were rushed to the Missouri side. I knew from the landing of the boats until Grant pulled out from the shore that there was nothing but a rout. We took many men, all that did not have legs long enough to get out of the way. Guns, blankets, and such other things as hampered them in their flight were thrown away. I have eaten from Grant's mess chest, which was one of the things he had to drop in his flight. It was plainly marked "U. S. G."

N. P. DAVIDSON, MILLETT, TEX.

In the VETERAN for December Comrade Don Singletary, of Clinton, Ky., gives what purports to be the official report of General Grant of the battle of Belmont, Mo., November 7, 1861. I was a participant, and write as well as I can remember it after nearly a half century.

Before the battle of Belmont the 13th Arkansas Infantry, Colonel Tappan, Beltzhoover's Battery of Light Artillery (Comrade Singletary says four guns; but my recollection is that there were six, though after so many years either of us is liable to make mistakes), and Company A (Capt. F. A. Montgomery), 1st Mississippi Battalion of Cavalry, to which I belonged, were stationed at Belmont on the opposite side of the river from Columbus, Ky. On the morning of November 7 Tom Graham, of the cavalry company, left camp very early on a foraging expedition. A little after sunrise he rode into camp at full speed, hat in hand, and stated that the enemy were advancing on us with a heavy force. About the same time the little stern-wheel steamboat Grampus, which was used as a picket boat on the river between Columbus and Cairo and commanded by Capt. Marsh Miller, came down the river under full head of steam, the whistle blowing all the way as she came. Captain Montgomery, learning the facts from Graham, dispatched a courier to Colonel Tappan with the information, and he gave the order to saddle up.

We started immediately, and met the enemy a mile or less from our camp, firing on them, and slowly retiring until we got back to where our infantry and artillery were posted, near the river. By that time General Pillow had crossed the river with his brigade and was in line ready to receive them, the cavalry taking position on our right flank. The enemy made a very vigorous and determined attack; but were handsomely held in check until the ammunition of our infantry was exhausted, when they and the artillerymen were forced to retire, taking shelter under the bank of the river. Our cavalry fled to the left down the river to a skirt of woods, where we were protected by heavy timber. In the meantime transports had arrived from Memphis and were just then landing General Cheatham with his brigade and a supply of ammunition.

The "Lady Polk," the piece of heavy artillery (128-pounder) mounted on the heights just above the town of Columbus, opened a vigorous fire on the enemy, throwing shell into their ranks and causing consternation among them. This held them in check until our troops could form, when the attack was made with such vigor and desperation as to cause a complete rout in a very short time. The fleeing enemy was pursued by both infantry and cavalry and severely punished; in fact, the slaughter was terrible. Even as they embarked, and as their boats were out in the river, they were fired on and many must have been killed, for they were packed all over the boats like sardines in a can. I am confident that not a Confederate left the Belmont side of the river before General Grant was back at Cairo with the remnant of his army.

It seems to me that accounts of this battle have been neglected for so bloody an affair. I don't know the number engaged; but don't think there could have been over five thousand Confederates, and the Federals were variously estimated at from seven to ten thousand.

Concerning the severity of our ordeal before help and ammunition came, I give one incident of the battle as related to me afterwards by some of Beltzhoover's men. After they got some distance from their guns, a mere boy asked one of the gunners if he had spiked his gun. Receiving a negative answer, he went back, spiked the gun, and, being almost entirely surrounded by the enemy, shooting at him and ordering him to surrender, he ran and made his escape without a scratch.

CONCISE POINTS IN THE LIFE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.—Born in Kentucky June 3, 1808; at sixteen entered the West Point Military Academy; graduated in 1828, and was appointed lieutenant in the United States cavalry, Fort Crawford, Wis.;

took part in the Black Hawk War, in which Abraham Lincoln was also engaged; at its close left the army and became a cotton planter in Mississippi; sent from there to Congress, 1845-46; left to take part as colonel in the Mexican War, through which he served with great gallantry and distinction; was straightway chosen to the United States Senate, where he served 1847-51 and 1857-61, and in the interim was Secretary of War under President Pierce, 1853-57; was elected Provisional President of the Confederate States of America February 9, 1861, and President in November of the same year. He was in 1865 indicted for treason, arrested, and imprisoned at Fortress Monroe, released on bail, and the trial dropped. He passed the remainder of his life at Beauvoir, and died in New Orleans, La., December 6, 1889, sincerely mourned by the whole South.

HEROINE NOW FIRST BROUGHT TO LIGHT.

BY A. H. M'ALLISTER, BLUE MOUNTAIN, MISS.

During the War between the States I belonged to Company E, 23d Mississippi Regiment, Colonel Ballentine, Armstrong's Brigade, Jackson's Division of Cavalry, which regiment had an engagement with the Federals in February, 1864, at Sharon, Miss., about seven miles northeast of Canton. We repulsed the enemy and drove them out of the village southward. A part of their line went through a large yard which had a well in front of the house, perhaps halfway to the front gate. As our men entered the yard a lady of the house ran out to the well (under fire of the enemy) and drew water and gave to the boys in gray, expressing thanks to the Lord that she was permitted to wait on the Southern boys while in battle. I thought then—though a mere boy—and still think that it was the most heroic deed I ever knew a woman to perform, and believe that she should be recorded in history as a Southern heroine; hence I have been trying for years by inquiry and correspondence to locate and ascertain beyond doubt who she was, and have just gotten the facts.

The lady was a Mrs. I. N. Holiday, of Sharon, Madison County, Miss., whose maiden name was Miss Elizabeth Allen Tisdale, a native of Virginia. She married Mr. Isaac N. Holiday, a Georgian, in 1846. He was a worthy Southern soldier, serving in the 18th Mississippi Cavalry, and I am informed that he was a courier on General Loring's staff.

The above is reminder of inquiries for any book on the part taken by Southern women in our war, by which has been revealed the fact that no book has been written with that as its theme, except "Our Women in the War," published at Charleston about twenty years ago. The VETERAN will be glad to get articles on the subject, hoping in a measure to make up for this neglect on the part of Southern writers.

OFFICERS OF EASTERN GEORGIA BRIGADE.—The following appointments on the staff of Brig. Gen. J. W. Wilcox, commanding the Eastern Brigade of the Georgia Division, United Confederate Veterans, have been made: Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Lieut. Col. Jehu G. Postell, Macon; Assistants, Maj. T. E. Young, Macon, and Maj. George W. Hollingsworth, Milledgeville; Inspector General, Maj. D. F. Jack, Augusta; Chief of Ordnance, Maj. Moses Murphy, Augusta; Chief of Artillery, Maj. Warren A. Mosely, Macon; Chief of Engineers, Maj. Ab F. Jones, Macon; Quartermaster, Maj. R. J. Anderson, Macon; Commissary, Maj. J. W. Pinkston, Sparta; Chaplain, Maj. George G. Smith, Vineville; Aid, Capt. Louis B. Wilcox, Macon.

CONCERNING HOOD'S TENNESSEE CAMPAIGN.

BY J. A. DOZIER, MOUNT VERNON, TEX.

In the November (1907) VETERAN, pages 508, 509, Comrade H. K. Nelson, of Adairsville, Ky., writes correctly that what is told by the veterans must be told now. I was in that campaign, and his article brought events so vividly to mind that I add my testimony to his article. The suffering of the winter of 1864-65 which was by these veterans encountered cannot be forgotten.

I was a private in Company B, 18th Alabama Infantry, Holtzclaw's Brigade, Clayton's Division, and S. D. Lee's Corps. Comrade Nelson did well in reporting this campaign, but he left out much that was indeed interesting.

The battle of Franklin, Tenn., was the bloodiest conflict I engaged in during the war, and I was in many hotly contested places. Comrade Nelson told but little of the battle at Nashville and the stampede that we encountered at that place. My command was on the left of the Franklin Pike, my regiment on one side and the 36th Alabama Infantry on the other. The enemy charged us with negro troops several times on the 16th of December. Our faces were behind a stone fence, and we had head logs for breastworks, and there was "tanglefoot" of brush in front about twenty-five paces from the works. There was no chance to see the enemy till they were within eighty or ninety yards of our works. They charged our works with one line of negro troops, which was repulsed. They charged us the second time, with the same result. They next came with two lines of these negro troops, and another repulse followed. Later they came with three lines, three stands of colors, six negroes deep, and they got to the tanglefoot and a few got over it; but they did not live long. Here I witnessed the most daring deed that I saw during the entire war. A lieutenant of the 36th Alabama Infantry (whose name I have forgotten) sprang over our works, ran into the negro troops, captured a stand of colors, and ran back into the works uninjured. I still remember the inscription on the flag, which was this: "19th Indiana Colored Infantry, presented by the colored ladies of Murfreesboro." The 36th Alabama had this stand of colors when we got back to Tupelo, Miss. If the lieutenant is still living who captured this flag, I would be pleased to hear from him. In this engagement we lost but few men. It was said these negroes were drunk. I don't know. They failed to charge us any more. The ground was almost covered with those dead negroes, and in other places they lay in heaps.

Late in the evening all were rejoicing at the victory won, when news came that our line was broken on the left and we were being surrounded. This news made a lot of sad faces. We were told to be quiet, that orders would be received. We finally saw our line breaking when orders came—"Every man take care of himself." Many surrendered at the works, but most of the men tried to escape. When soldiers are in a stampede, they are without control, and this was our condition. I succeeded in making my escape; my brother was captured. Many of our troops were captured by the Federal cavalry before they reached Franklin, and many were killed and wounded after leaving our works.

The distance from Nashville to Franklin is twenty miles; but after passing through fields, woods, and wading streams at night, I reached the town of Franklin about daylight on the morning of the 17th. There we reorganized as best we could, and that night we were attacked by the Federal cavalry.

Our division formed a hollow square, and by so doing prevented our capture. This was the only time I saw this tactic used to any benefit during the war. When our troops arrived at Bainbridge, my brigade on the 24th of December was ordered to the Tennessee River to protect our pontoon bridge gang, who were preparing for us to cross as soon as possible. The Federal cavalry was trying to drive the bridge gang away from their position. Our brigade en route to the river had to cross Shoal Creek without delay; so we proceeded to ford this creek, about one hundred and fifty or two hundred yards wide, very swift, and rocky bottom, with some ledges of rock on the bottom. The depth was from knee-deep to the arm pits perhaps. It was bitter cold; and when we had gotten across, our clothes were frozen stiff. We halted long enough to build fires of cedar rails and thaw our clothing, and then proceeded to our destination. Our surgeon, in crossing this noted creek, was riding a small mule, and he made his way well enough till the donkey stepped into a hole or crevice, when the doctor fell headforemost into the creek. Rider and mule came up in different places. Of course we yelled, bad as it all was.

It was a touching scene to witness a thousand and more of our boys without shoes and leaving their bloody footprints on that cold and frozen ground as they trudged their weary way. Cut off from supplies, they could not get clothing. Many of the poor fellows got shoes after the battle at Franklin. At Tupelo, Miss., shoes were issued to the barefoot men. But many could not wear them because of their sore feet.

Gen. J. E. Johnston was the greatest general that commanded an army, North or South, during that war.

I still know that our cause was just, and desire to honor it as best I can. I would be much pleased to hear from any member of the 18th Alabama Infantry. I was wounded in the battle of Chickamauga, and again wounded at New Hope Church, Ga. I had three brothers in the same company; but when the surrender came, I was the only one.

MY FLAG.

BY ELEANOR DAMERON M'CLARAN, JACKSON, TENN.

'Tis a proud flag—dear old Glory! and we honor well the sight
Of the stars and stripes uplifted to the early morning light,
And our nation will uphold our banner wheresoe'er it wave,
As it is the stately emblem of a people true and brave.

But in memory there lingers yet a flag of long ago,
Born within the sunny Southland, where the softest breezes blow;

And although my country's banner is a noble flag to me,
Still, O stars and bars of Dixie, still my heart is true to thee!

Yea, thou art a little nearer than all other flags beside,
Symbol of the halcyon beauty of our nation in her pride!
And thou art a little dearer since that well-remembered day
When a loved one fell beside thee clad in uniform of gray!

Gone the cause my banner stood for, gone the glory of our land!

Going, too, the dear old veterans to obey the Lord's command!
And the flowers bloom in beauty over many a silent brave,
And, my flag, thy erstwhile honor lieth buried in its grave.

But because one noble champion, who so proudly lifted high
All thy bright and blazing colors, doth so cold and silent lie—
Just because of that, my banner—there are other flags, maybe,
But, O stars and bars of Dixie, thou art dearest still to me.

INTERESTING DATA ABOUT THE MERRIMAC.

Through his creditable modesty Col. H. A. Ramsay, of Baltimore, in response to a toast in his city, printed in the VETERAN for July, 1907, pages 310-313, did not tell some things in regard to his part in building the Merrimac-Virginia, which, together with the Alabama under Admiral Semmes, will continue more prominent in history than all other Confederate naval vessels. A writer in an old Christmas edition of the New Orleans Times-Democrat gives information that is copied herein as supplemental to that of Colonel Ramsay.

When the genius of structure produced the Merrimac, "the North trembled; but, strange to say, the South took very little stock in the experiment."

"This vessel was constructed on lines unheard of in naval warfare, ancient or modern. The engineer who built this remarkable and now historic craft is Col. H. Ashton Ramsay, a consulting engineer in Baltimore, formerly a chief engineer in the Confederate navy, and was an officer on the Merrimac when she was a United States war vessel back in the fifties. As an assistant engineer he converted her from a wreck, burned to the water's edge by the retreating Federals, into the most formidable war engine of modern times. He was aboard her when she rammed and sank the Cumberland, burned and sank the Congress, and engaged in her desperate six hours' fight with Ericsson's famous Monitor.

"For his services he was elevated to the rank of chief engineer in the Confederate navy, and received the thanks of Congress at the instance of Jefferson Davis. * * *

"After our sanguinary encounter with the Monitor," said Colonel Ramsay, "Admiral Farragut was frank enough to tell Admiral Porter that the Merrimac was the most remarkable naval craft ever floated, and the results of her successful battle with the Cumberland and Congress would revolutionize the navies of the world and would be felt for centuries to come. The moment the Merrimac successfully rammed the Cumberland and sent her to the bottom with colors flying and guns firing the navies of all Europe, representing an investment of billions of money, were rendered valueless. To-day wooden vessels are used only for prison ships and training ships for cadets and our naval militia.

"Great Britain watched the progress we were making in building the Merrimac; and after our first day's fight, when she was a proven success, the news was cabled to London instantaneously, and the Admiralty Office the very day the message was received began preparations for remodeling the English navy.

"I was chosen by Secretary of the Navy Mallory to work on the Merrimac because I was one of her engineers when she was in the United States navy and had made a number of cruises on her prior to the war. I knew her every timber by heart. When the Federals evacuated Norfolk, they burned the Gosport Navy Yard, destroyed all supplies, and applied the torch to all the shipping they could not take away with them. One of these vessels was the Merrimac. She could not be moved on account of a defect in her machinery, so a detail of men from the navy yard was sent aboard of her to destroy her. Now in that detail were a number of men who were loyal to the South (this fact has never before been published); and while they set her afire, as ordered, they went a little farther and wisely bored a number of holes in her bottom. As a consequence, she sank just about as soon as her rigging, masts, and decks were burned; while her machinery and all that portion of her which lay below the water line were entirely uninjured by the flames."

"The writer asked: 'As a matter of fact, Colonel Ramsay, who first thought of converting the Merrimac into an iron-clad ram?'

"I am very glad of this opportunity to clear up that matter. We should give credit where credit is due. That invention has been attributed to me time and time again. Her inventor is Col. John M. Brooke, a professor in the Virginia Military Institute. He was in the ordnance department of the navy, and was the very apple of Secretary Mallory's eye. Colonel Brooke invented a splendid piece of ordnance, was the author of our present system of deep-sea soundings, surveyed the bottom of the Atlantic for the Mackay-Bennett cable, and secured a patent from the Confederate government for the shield of the Merrimac, and that, I believe, was the only patent issued by the government.

"President Davis took the greatest interest in the Merrimac venture, and had much confidence in her success. * * *

"If I live a hundred years, I will never forget a single detail of those two days' fights. When we cast off our moorings at 11 A.M. on the first day and proceeded down the Elizabeth River, the Merrimac was absolutely untried. Naturally we watched her every move with intense interest. Soon after getting under way the boatswain piped to dinner. The meal had been prepared in the ward room, and a message was sent me by the caterer that I had better take a bite at once, as it might be my last chance to do so. He put it cheerfully. Passing along the guns' deck for that purpose, I was greatly struck by the countenances of the crew as they stood motionless at their posts with ramrod and sponge in hand. These men looked pale and determined, standing straight and stiff, their nerves wrought up to a high degree of tension, not knowing who was to fall first.

"Diving down into the ward room, I found a number of officers around the table, daintily partaking of cold tongue and biscuit; but at one end of the table sat Dr. Garnett examining a case of surgical instruments, with lint and bandages lying around. The sight took away my appetite, and I returned to my post.

"Mark you well the chances we ran. Here we were with an untried experiment, making a bee line to fight single-handed a fleet of the best material in the United States navy, composed of the frigates Congress, Minnesota, Roanoke, St. Lawrence (each with batteries of fifty guns), and the Cumberland (with thirty guns). It was ten guns against three hundred, and three hundred men against three thousand, and at the same time exposed to the fire of the batteries at Newport News, manned by fifty guns and four thousand men. Surely the crew of the Merrimac were brave men.

"In the meantime we were getting nearer and nearer the fleet. Glancing out the port, I read the signals from the bright-colored little flags running up and down the rigging. They read: "The Merrimac has come down, but of course she will not dare to attack our large force." They all thought she was going to escape up the James River and run away, but they were soon to be undeceived. Suddenly the Merrimac headed directly toward the Cumberland. This caused the scales to drop from their eyes. Topsails were shaken out and the clotheslines holding the sailors' clothes were pulled down unceremoniously. Just at this time Admiral Franklin Buchanan, one of the grandest men who ever drew a breath of salt air, assembled the ship's crew around him on the gun deck and addressed them as follows: "Sailors, in a few minutes you will have the long-expected opportunity to show your devotion to your country and our cause. Remember that you are about to strike for your country and your homes, your wives and your children. Every man is expected to do his duty. Beat to quarters."

"The surrounding shores for miles were lined with people. Norfolk and Portsmouth were emptied of their eighteen thousand troops. Nearly every one in the two cities rushed to the water's edge to witness the result of what many considered an ill-starred enterprise. No naval battle was ever witnessed by more people.

"Suddenly there was a puff of smoke and a flash from the rifled pivot gun of the Cumberland, followed by a continuous flash of artillery from the Congress, the Newport News batteries, and the gunboats. The Merrimac churned her way grimly toward the Cumberland and reserved her fire. When we were much nearer, Lieut. Charles Simms, in charge of the forward seven-inch rifle, gave the order, and the Merrimac fired her first gun. She followed this with a starboard broadside, which was delivered with fearful effect, as we afterwards learned, against the black hull of the Congress, which vessel we were then passing. Now came the crucial test. Would the Merrimac's hide of iron protect her? Would our ironclad ram be a success? The Congress belched forth a most terrific broadside against our shield; tons of iron rained on our casement. Hurrah and hurrah! The iron hail glances off like pebbles. The crew give cheer after cheer.

"We are exposed to a very hailstorm of iron projectiles of all descriptions from ashore and afloat. We are a target for three hundred guns. The balls strike, glance upward, fall back on our shield, and roll harmlessly into the water. In the meantime we are nearing the Cumberland. All on the ship are still as death. Not a sound is heard save the pulsations of the engines. Buchanan stands alone and exposed on the upper grating. He enters the pilot house and sends for me. I am ordered to reverse the engines immediately after ramming the Cumberland, and not to wait for orders to do so. I salute and return to the engine room. Now the signal is given to stop. The gong sounds two rings, quickly followed by three rings, the order to back. The throttle is opened and the engine starts again in the reverse direction. An awful pause, then the crash, starting us from our feet. The engines labor and groan, and the vessel strains in every fiber and joint.

"Thud! thud! thud! comes the rain of shot on our shield from the double-banked battery of the Congress and a terrific crash in the boiler room but a few feet away. Have the boilers burst? No! thank God. It's the explosion of a shell in the stack, but no one is hurt.

"After staggering, the ship, which has been depressed at the bow, rights herself, and we know that we have disengaged ourselves from the Cumberland. The crew on the gun deck cheer and cheer again. We have crushed in the side of our adversary as a knife goes through a cheese, and she is sinking rapidly. Her crew of gallant heroes fight her to the last.

"How about Buchanan, who has been making a target of himself? All right! The men on deck tug away at their guns, training and righting them. "Steady! So! Fire!" as the officers give the word. "Quick! Sponge! Load! Fire!"—these are the exclamations heard on all sides as the men load and fire continuously. "The muzzle of my gun has been shot away." "No matter, do the best you can with her. Keep away from those open ports and don't lean against the shield." Some men have been stunned and bleed at the ears. Take them below to the cockpit. Simms has the bow rifled gun and Wood the stern gun, which they aim and fire with terrific effect. Captain Kevil with his United Artillerymen are doing good service with his gun. The marines under Capt. Ruben Thom are drawn up below where Buchanan stands, ready to board should the order be passed and also to fight one of the broadside guns. Was there ever a more fearless crew and gallant set of officers? The exertions of the men are superhuman. None flag. It's fire and cheer, cheer and fire, as with unbounded enthusiasm the men work away at their pieces.

"This is a faint picture of what was going on aboard the Merrimac during the hottest of the fight. During this time we were a target for the entire fleet and the shore batteries. In the heat of the fight we had to look in every direction. One of our shells blew up a large transport steamer and another one sank a tug. We did most of this damage when we were winding the ship after ramming the Cumberland.

"We had more difficulty in destroying the Congress than that experienced with the Cumberland. The havoc wrought by the Merrimac's shells on that vessel was fearful. The ship ran with blood. Her crew stood nobly by their guns and continued to fight until a majority of her officers and men were killed or wounded, the Merrimac getting closer and closer all the time, so as to ram her as we did the Cumberland. The heroism of her captain and crew was sublime.

"When the Cumberland, after such a short engagement, was sent to the bottom, no one would have criticised Lieutenant Smith, in command, had he surrendered. Did he do so? No; but instead his crew leaped into the rigging, gave three defiant cheers, and continued to fight their vessel until poor Smith was killed, with a majority of his crew, his ship on fire in several places, every gun's crew broken up, and his ship in danger every moment of being sent to the bottom by the Merrimac's ram. Then, and only then, did she surrender. White flags were hoisted and her colors lowered. A gloriously fought ship, manned by a gallant crew, and how sad to reflect that so much heroism should have been wasted in literally a conflict between brother and brother instead of being concentrated on a common enemy! This Anglo-Saxon race when aroused is terrible in its wrath.

"As the sailors were escaping, swimming ashore from the Cumberland and Congress, some one suggested to fire on them with shrapnel and canister; but Buchanan was indignant at the very suggestion. After the surrender of the Congress, a number of officers and men, taking advantage of the truce, went on deck to get a breath of fresh air and take a view of the situation. In the meantime we had sent a boat to the Congress to take off the prisoners. While in the act of doing this the two officers in command were shot down by a fusillade of Minie balls from the Newport News batteries, notwithstanding the flag of surrender flying at her masthead. The batteries then turned their attention to our party on the Merrimac's deck, and Admiral Buchanan was shot down. We were then flying a flag of truce. When he was being carried below, he gave orders to clear for action again and to fire hot shot into the Congress. This was done, and she was soon ablaze. This caused much delay; and though we turned our attention to the Minnesota and delivered several broadsides into her, it was growing so late that the pilots insisted upon our drawing off into deeper water. So we anchored in the Roads, near Sewall's Point, for the night.

"During our first day's fight we lost two men killed and seventeen wounded; two of our gun muzzles were carried away, but we never ceased firing them. The damage to the vessel was wholly immaterial. Barring the wounding of our intrepid commander, we felt well satisfied with the result. A more gallant commander never trod the deck of a ship. He was without a peer, and his name must go down to posterity coupled with that of Collingwood, Stuart, Nelson, Decatur, and Farragut. Had not Buchanan been wounded, the next day he would have forced the Minnesota to surrender before the Monitor came to the ground, and then run the Monitor down or forced her into deep water, where she could not have had the advantage of her light draught.

"When we received the New York papers a few days after the battle, we found that the effect of this terrible defeat upon the people of the North was simply stunning. If we had only realized that night what a commotion we had kicked up in the North, night as it was, we would certainly have run by the forts and come back again just to show that it could be done, and met the Monitor before she could have cast her guns loose or got into fighting trim.

"The South went wild with joy. At every station on his way to Richmond the bearer of the great news was surrounded by large crowds who insisted on hearing the story of the fight. The hopes of the Confederacy were as high as the despondency of the North was deep. But to the narrative:

"The next morning while we were transferring our admiral to the shore and preparing for action we saw coming in from the sea the most remarkable-looking craft, which we were soon convinced was the Monitor. Now all was excitement. Greek was to meet Greek. For the first time in the history of the world ironclad was to battle with ironclad. The Monitor approached and opened fire, which we returned with spirit. For two hours we bombarded one another, with little or no effect, the two ships sailing in a circle, pass and repass, delivering broadsides at point blank range. Lieutenant Jones, coming down from the upper grating and observing Lieutenant Eggleston's division standing at ease, said to him: "Why are you not firing, sir?" "Because our powder is precious, sir, and I find I can do the Monitor as much damage by snapping my finger at her every five minutes."

"The combat between the two vessels was kept up for six mortal hours, and Lieutenant Jones decided to ram the Monitor. Now, in my opinion, here lay the error of the fight. After this decision, Lieutenant Jones sent for me and ordered me to reverse the engines as soon as I felt the collision, fearing that we would have difficulty in extricating ourselves after the contact, as we did with the Cumberland, although one was a wooden and the other an iron vessel. To that end he was afraid to strike her hard, and I was given the signal to reverse quite a while before we actually hit her. As a consequence, we just gave the Monitor a little tap and glanced off. We should have run her down with all our force and fairly forced her under with our superior weight. Circling around, after ramming her, we were enabled to plant one of our pointed shells right on the pilot house. It was this shot which damaged the pilot house and wounded Commodore Worden. The Monitor then stood directly toward Old Point and gave up the fight. We assumed that she was badly crippled—more so than she was. Lieutenant Jones then sent for me, and, calling attention to the fact that we had driven the Monitor off, said that he intended to draw off under the guns of Sewall Point and renew the attack later in the afternoon. I then went below and arranged for banking the fires under easy steam. In the meantime we started up full speed, and I soon heard great cheering on deck. I sent one of my assistants to learn the cause. He reported that we were passing the Confederate batteries at Craney Island on our way to Norfolk, and the cheers were from the soldiers on the fortifications. My heart sank at the intelligence. Were we to relinquish the fruits of our victory, leave the Minnesota hard aground, where she had been for twenty-four hours, and return to Norfolk? It was to run away, apparently, for that is the way it has since been regarded. I hastened at once on deck to interview Jones, and on my remonstrating with him for leaving without finishing the Minnesota and capturing the Monitor he said that on consulting with some of his lieutenants he thought it better to return to Norfolk and finish arming the vessel below the water line; that the Monitor had proven herself to be a formidable opponent, and now that she was badly crippled he thought it best to take advantage of that fact and put his ship in fighting trim. I begged him to force the Minnesota's surrender or to wait another day.

"As the Merrimac steamed up the Elizabeth River, trailing the large and beautiful ensign of the Congress beneath the stars and bars, she was the recipient of a perfect ovation—cheering, waving of handkerchiefs and flags, people yelling themselves hoarse, hundreds of small boats following in our rear. As history records, the Monitor would never meet the Merrimac again, although we repeatedly went down to the Roads and dared her to fight.

"When it was decided to evacuate Norfolk two months later, a plan was made to lighten the draft of the Merrimac and take her to new fields of usefulness. A signal was to have been given us to steam away; but the plans miscarried, and there was nothing left us but to blow her up. I may add that when her draft was reduced to eighteen feet, the point demanded by the pilots, they refused to steer her over the bar, claiming at that late hour that her draft was then too much. We contemplated shooting one of the pilots, thinking it would bring the other one to his senses. We also discussed the plan of sailing into the fleet and fighting until we went down with colors flying; but that was discarded, as we felt that the Confederacy could ill afford to lose the three hundred men aboard. There was nothing left for us to do but to blow her up, which we did that night with aching hearts.

"I am confident that if Admiral Buchanan had not been wounded and had been in command on the second day when we met the Monitor the result would have been different. He would have rammed her with a full and terrific blow, and the very inertia of the Merrimac would have sent her to the bottom. In that event we would have compelled Fortress Monroe to evacuate, and then leisurely steamed up to Washington and compelled the capitulation of that city, just as Lincoln feared."

TO BUSINESS MEN OF THE COUNTRY.

The CONFEDERATE VETERAN is the most successful monthly, circulation and time considered, in the history of journalism in the South. It officially represents all of the great Confederate organizations, and is indorsed, over the signatures of chief officers of the organization, by every State Division of Veterans, by the President General United Daughters of the Confederacy, by the Commander in Chief of the Sons (also by many of their Division Commanders), and by the President of the Confederated Southern Memorial Association, and veterans of the Union army are liberal patrons.

CONCERNING AMERICAN COMMERCE.

BY BISHOP WARREN A. CANDLER.

(Copied from the Atlanta Journal.)

Recently Mr. J. J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railway, was reported as predicting the decline of New York City as the commercial metropolis of the United States. He pointed out as reasons for this prospective decline in comparative importance New York's restricted and inconvenient terminal facilities. He noted also a shifting of the center of gravity of American commerce in a westward and southward direction, and suggested that New Orleans would in the near future become the port through which the bulk of the exports and imports of the central portion of the country would pass. * * *

The international trade of the future is going to be largely on the Pacific Ocean; and when the Panama Canal is opened, not a little of that trade will find its way to the interior of our country through New Orleans and other South Atlantic and Gulf ports. These ports, with the States back of them, will rise rapidly in commercial importance, and their population will be greatly increased. The industrial development of the South will outrun all the present hopes of the most sanguine optimists.

Not only will the trade of the Orient be turned our way, but trade with the western coast of South America will also follow the same line. The phosphates of Chile and the products of Peru and Colombia will be drawn hither. Already the commerce of Central America and Mexico comes largely through southern channels, and the trade of the West Indies will be drawn more and more into the same current.

It is the natural route for the export of Southern cotton and Western grain, and by an inexorable law imports come in by the way through which exports pass out, especially when the bulk of exports exceeds the volume of imports; for international trade, like water, runs the way of least resistance.

From all these facts it follows that the South is at the beginning—and not more than the beginning—of an unprecedented development industrially and commercially. This result is as certain as any future event can be; for it will come to pass by the operation of laws as irresistible as the law of gravitation.

We shall not need to entice immigration by any advertising of advantages or offers of benefits; it will come without artificial stimulation as fast as it can be assimilated, if not faster. Our only concern about it should be to see that it is of as good a quality as possible.

It is not of supreme importance that our people should lay plans to get wealth out of this turning of the tide our way. They will get wealth beyond all their expectations or real needs and far beyond their capacity to use it wisely.

Our main concern should be to fix our moral convictions so deeply that our consciences will not drag anchor in the tidal wave of commerce that is impending. It will bring great dangers to moral life.

In the political life of our people will be discovered tendencies to subordinate principle to commercial expediency. "Practical statesmen" will cry, "Lo here and lo there!" proclaiming themselves the Messiahs of the golden age. Let us be forewarned in advance that we go not after them. Let us be prepared to resist all their seductions by firmly believing and declaring that "man shall not live by bread alone."

In matters social we shall see standards of life dictated by luxury and pleasing to effeminacy proclaimed as gospels of enlightenment and refinement. Settled principles of morality and righteousness will be derided as obsolete puritanism. Modish vice, attired in fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, will denounce virtue as bigotry and purity as narrowness.

Religion itself will not escape the dangers that will accompany this approaching era of material prosperity. Easy-going gospels, by which the offense of the cross will be eliminated from the Christian life, will be preached as the last word of "progress" so far advanced that it can look down with contempt on apostles and martyrs. The narrow way will be widened into a broad and smooth avenue in which no pilgrim feet will be required to walk, but along which an automobile self-indulgence will rush in hilarious frenzy, stopping not to inquire if its final destination will be where Lazarus rests in Abraham's bosom or Dives lifts up his eyes in torment.

Our people in their present state may say in response to such forebodings, as one did of old, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do such a thing?" Let them remember that he who thus indignantly replied to the prophet committed in a few brief days all the abominations against which the man of God warned him.

Our human nature is no better than that of other people, and others have been corrupted beyond all cleansing by coming suddenly and unexpectedly into great riches. We are capable of the same sin and folly by which other peoples have been undone.

A change of circumstances often revolutionizes the character of both individuals and communities. They surprise themselves by the extremes to which they run. The obstacle that lies between a man and the most horrible sins is often lack of means to commit them. He who has no deep-rooted aversion to wrong as wrong nor profound attachment to right as right is in the matter of moral character only a creature of circumstances; he is as incapable of suffering with unpopular righteousness as he is incapable of resisting successful wickedness. With such a man virtue and vice are no more than the equivalents of success and failure, that which is in the ascendant being virtuous and that which is down being wrong.

A man who does not regard the will of God as the final test of all courses of conduct will follow his own will wherever fleeting conditions invite or impel him. Let but his selfish prudence suggest that a given thing is not profitable or popular, and he will throw it overboard, though it be the ark of God with the table of testimony within it. Disagreeable duties are by the fact of their disagreeableness declared to be no duties at all by such a man, and agreeable wrong is reckoned to be right just because it is agreeable. Custom outranks the commandments, and usage sets aside the Sermon on the Mount as "an iridescent dream."

Now let us in time brace ourselves against an inevitable but perilous prosperity by firmly fixing in our hearts the great principles of truth and righteousness from which we will allow no appeal. Let us dig deep and found personal character and public life upon bed rock, so that when the floods beat upon it there shall not be a tremor in all its structure.

Let us not rush into the new era that is at hand with eager covetousness and frenzied greed, but with the fear and trembling becoming to them upon whom the heaviest responsibilities and the most solemn obligations have fallen. Duties, not dollars, should bulk largest in our thought just now. It is not the foresight of commerce that we should exercise chiefly, but the prevision of conscience.

All these reflections will to many people seem to be no more than a bundle of insipid platitudes, but to those who shall thus think they are most necessary. He is a shallow man indeed who can get so much as a glimpse of what is before our section and not be deeply affected by a sense of responsibility. We are in the midst of a great but silent revolution, and not the less powerful because silent. In the end it may lift our people to higher levels of life or cast them down to the most degrading depths to which luxury and licentiousness ever lured any people.

God of our fathers, help us, lest we forget the things that belong to his honor and our peace.

GALLANT DEAD OF THE MURFREESBORO BATTLE.
BY P. G. SMITHSON.

[On the death of Sergeants Johnson W. Jordan, John M. Smith, and Privates J. W. P. Knott and J. H. Tucker, of Company D, 20th Tennessee Regiment, who fell in defense of their country's cause in the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., December 31, 1862.]

O weep, (20th) Tennessee, for thy fallen sons;

For them, the brave, let tears of grief be shed;

The heroes sleep, their cause of life is run;

Their names are numbered with the gallant dead;

The star is set that hailed their rising day,

And darkness closes o'er their earthly way.

Fighting in a land that gave them birth,

Beloved land, on which they based their all,

To them there still was no such place on earth.

Their hope, her freedom from oppression's thrall;

Her cause, once theirs, they knew no task too great

To rend the shackles of their native State.

When once espoused the cause they loved so well,

They knew no bounds to their devotion's zeal.

Let Fishing Creek and Shiloh their acts of valor tell

As to our hearts their gallant deeds appeal;

Here side by side, with other heroes brave,

Their country's flag they bade in triumph wave.

Of all thy sons, Tennessee, true to thee

In the dark hour of peril to thy fate,

None sought to swell thy glory more than they,

Nor prouder bore the banner of their State;

Quick to respond when first they heard thy call,

For thee they gave ambition, hope, and all.

Gay spring will soon with buds and blossoms come

To deck thy graves with garniture of green;

The birds will sing, the busy bee will hum.

And flowers give fresh beauty to the scene;

Yet spring no more their presence here will hail;

Her birds of joy shall now thy loss bewail.

Adieu, brave spirits, to thy life adieu;

Fame, glory on thy cherished names attend.

The hearts that once their love and friendship knew

No more fond greetings with their own shall blend.

Their life they to their God and country gave;

Its memory be the beacon of the grave.

Comrade Smithson died at the Confederate Soldiers' Home, having gone there as commandant.

THE STORY OF A CANNONEER UNDER JACKSON.

Rarely are such flattering notices given a book on war times as have been accorded the "Story of a Cannoneer under Stonewall Jackson," by E. A. Moore, of Lexington, Va., the only book written by a man in the fighting line of the "Stonewall Brigade." Both North and South the press has shown remarkable appreciation of the work, as evinced by the many complimentary comments upon it. The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, after saying that this book is as necessary for a knowledge of the inside of that war as Henderson's "Life of Jackson" is for the strategic side, states: "It is a simply told tale without ornament of rhetoric; but the two covers of a single book have seldom held between them chronicles of more hard fighting or of more of war's heroism and tragedies."

The New Orleans States says: "He has given the story of his experiences in such graphic yet simple language, and there is so much spontaneity in the narrative, that one reads it with growing interest from the start. There are few more vivid pictures of the war from the standpoint of fighting men than he has set down in this volume."

The Virginian-Pilot concludes a lengthy review by Ex-Governor Cameron with this: "The Rockbridge Battery was known of the whole army, from the commanding general to the latest recruit. How it followed the fortunes of Jackson and afterwards of Early and of Lee, from First Manassas to Appomattox, always to the fore, always where the fire was hottest, winning laurels in every engagement and paying grievous tax in blood for all the glory won—this fills Mr. Moore's book with stirring chapters and endows it with absorbing interest. He has raised an enduring monument to his old command, giving each hero's name a place upon the tablet. He has done more; he has brought the evidence of daily witness to the manner of men who served without rank or title in the Confederate army. The roll call of the Rockbridge Battery during the four years of hostilities sounded a hundred of the most honored names in Virginia, beginning with a Lee. And the bearers did not disgrace their heritage."

From a two-column review in the London Athenæum the following is taken: "There must be a public in this country for fresh volumes on the American Civil War, although the literature of that contest is on a scale to vie with that of Bonaparte's campaigns."

In addition to the notice which has been given his book in England, Mr. Moore has appreciative letters from many individuals, some of high distinction, among them Lord Wolseley and Lord Roberts, field marshal of the British army.

To such commendation nothing can add more than the introduction to the book by Capt. Robert E. Lee, son of the great commander and a member of the Rockbridge Artillery, who says that "no more vivid picture has been presented of the private soldier in camp, on the march, or in action," concluding with heartily commending the volume as "a truthful picture of real war."

Nothing further can be said that will add to the merit of the book. "It is full of human interest of a very genuine kind."

(The Neale Company, Washington and New York. Nicely bound and illustrated. Price, $2.14, postpaid.)

Remember that Confederate veterans have no successors, and that others must take their places if our history is to be preserved. This is for their children to consider.

CAPT. A. C. IRVINE.

After several weeks of illness, Capt. A. C. Irvine passed away January 12, 1908, at his home, in Gainesville, Tex.

Adam Coleman Irvine came from a long line of distinguished citizens of Virginia and Kentucky. His grandfather was a hero of the early struggles in the "Dark and Bloody Ground." His uncle was a major in the War of 1812, and became a prisoner of the English when General Winchester was defeated at the battle of River Raisin, on January 22, 1813. After the war he served as a member of the Kentucky Legislature. Another uncle, David Irvine, was County Clerk of Madison County for forty years.

His father, Albert G. Irvine, removed to Missouri in 1835, and in 1837 married Mrs. Ann Howell Brown, who had returned from Texas as the widow of Capt. John Brown, who came to Texas in 1824. (Captain Brown was a prisoner among the Indians for eighteen months, and was afterwards a merchant in San Antonio.) The father of Captain Irvine was a pious man and filled a local Methodist pulpit in Kentucky; but he was game, and would brook no insult. He was once insulted in Cincinnati by a burly policeman; and quickly throwing off his ministerial coat, he administered a good thrashing to the minion of the law.

At the age of twenty Adam C. Irvine enlisted in Troop K, 3d Texas Cavalry, and served throughout the war without ever returning home. Of his Texas commanders were Whitfield and Ross. Later he was with W. H. Jackson, while in the latter part of the war he was with Forrest. His first battle was Oak Hills, Mo. In 1862 he was in the battle of Elkhorn, where Generals McCulloch and McIntosh fell. He crossed the Mississippi with Gen. Van Dorn. In the reorganization at Corinth he was elected lieutenant, and soon afterwards became first lieutenant. He was with Beauregard in the retreat from Tupelo, and was in the battle of Iuka. In Van Dorn's great raid on Holly Springs he commanded the scouts. In the fight at Middleburg he was highly complimented for his work and was promoted to a captaincy.

As captain of scouts at Yazoo and at Thompson's (?), his company faced such a terrible fire that three-fourths of his men were killed or wounded. On that field, it will be remembered, Gen. Van Dorn was shortly afterwards murdered, and on that field Captain Irvine met Miss Mary Moss, who now survives him as his widow.

As a captain in Ross's Brigade, he saw service day and night for four weeks on picket duty, as his command covered the retreat to Jackson. The hard service in sandy bottoms caused Captain Irvine to lose his sight, and he was in the hospital for some time; but recovered in time to lead the raid on Bolton Depot and the capture of the place with many prisoners. He next encountered seventy-four negroes while in a flanking party near Vicksburg, and it is stated that only two of them and one of their white officers escaped alive.

Under General Forrest Captain Irvine participated in the battles at Franklin and Murfreesboro. Later he went West with Ross, and his command surrendered at Clinton, La., on June 22, 1865.

After the war he returned to Texas, and in 1870 returned to Tennessee, where he again met Miss Moss; and on October 11, 1870, they were married. They lived for ten years in Pulaski, and then returned to Texas. He had been in Gainesville for many years, and was a man who was loved by all who knew him. At the time of his death he was Quartermaster General of the Third Division of Forrest's Cavalry, United Confederate Veterans.

Captain Irvine is survived by a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Oscar F. Scott, of Gainesville.

CHARLES T. INGRAM.

Charles Thomas Ingram was born in Prince Edward County, Va., November 16, 1838. In 1844 his father, John C. Ingram, moved with his family to Missouri and settled on a farm near Keytesville, Chariton County, and died in 1849. In 1859 "Tom," as he was generally known, moved with John P., an older brother, to Texas, and located at Bonham. In 1861 they went to Missouri and enlisted under Gen. Sterling Price, John P. as a member of the staff and Tom and Dick (a younger brother) as members of Company F, 3d Missouri Infantry, Cockrell's Brigade. They were in every engagement until their capture at Vicksburg. Soon after their exchange Tom was selected as a Whitworth sharpshooter, and served in that capacity. He was in every fight until the end of the war, in 1865. With the other few men who were intrusted with these fine guns they refused to surrender, and left the army in Tennessee the night before the rest gave up their arms and made their way West, crossing the Mississippi River in a canoe, to join Gen. Kirby Smith. But the war was over. So well did the men selected to use the Whitworth rifles discharge their duty that not one of these fine guns ever fell into the hands of a Federal soldier.

Tom Ingram was a private soldier. He was offered promotion more than once, but refused, saying he would rather be a Whitworth sharpshooter, where his trusted rifle carried him anywhere in our lines, under orders of no one except his sergeant and division commander, than to command the best regiment in the service.

He returned to Bonham, Tex., where he soon after engaged in the mercantile business, and continued in it at that place until eleven years ago, when he moved his family and business to Durant, Ind. T. He retired from this business five years ago. He assisted in organizing the Durant National Bank, and was vice president and a director up to his death, January 25, 1908. He was buried at Bonham, Tex., by the side of his wife, who died about ten years ago. At his request he was buried in his suit of Confederate gray. Surviving him are two sons, two daughters, two brothers, one sister, and seven grandchildren. He was a member of the Christian Church many years, assisted in organizing the Church at Durant, and was an elder at the time of his death. Tom Ingram was a modest, unassuming Christian gentleman, and had the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

ENSIGN J. ED HOPE.

Comrade Hope was suddenly stricken down by supposed heart failure on November 14, 1907. Thus, as quickly as if his heart had been pierced by a bullet, passed away as brave a man as ever faced a foe. He was first a member of Company B, 30th Mississippi Infantry, in Walthall's gallant brigade. Soon afterwards he was made color bearer of his regiment. Never did a man carry his colors more proudly, and never was a man more trusted to carry them where men dared to go. When the 29th and 30th Mississippi Regiments were forced to fall back out of the "old field" at Murfreesboro, leaving thirty per cent of their number on the ground shot down in twenty minutes, Ensign Hope retired with them under a storm of protest; but, learning that his gallant brother, Lieut. Frank Hope, was lying in the field too desperately wounded to retreat, he hurried back to his brother's side, only to find him a corpse. Hearing the agonizing groans of a comrade with whom he had a difficulty a few days before, he hurried to his side, raised him in his manly arms, and bore him from the field. This was done amid a hail of bullets and the man weighing as much as himself. In the grand charge at Chickamauga, when Walthall's Mississippians and Liddell's Arkansas Brigade captured several batteries of artillery and drove two lines of battle more than five hundred yards to the rear, Ed Hope rushed to the front with his colors, waving them in reckless defiance of the foe and loudly calling on the men to follow.

In the awful carnage at Franklin he charged up to and on the enemy's works and struck to one side the muzzle of a gun presented to his breast, which, however, went off in time to tear a great ugly hole in his side. There for the first time he and his prized flag went down together.

Time fails me to tell of the gallant deeds done by this heroic Mississippian, and I will close by saying that when he died he was Color Bearer of Walthall's Brigade, U. C. V., and carried at the Reunions a banner presented to the Brigade by General Walthall's daughter, Mrs. Courtney Ross, decidedly one of the finest that has ever been seen in a parade. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and one of the best citizens in his county. He leaves a widow, three children, and many sorrowing friends.

[Data from his comrade, Rev. E. A. Smith.]

CAPT. JOSEPH RHEA CRAWFORD.

The death of Capt. Joseph R. Crawford at his home, in Bristol, Tenn., marks the passing of a most exemplary citizen of that community, one who in all the relations of life had met his duty in a cheerful spirit. As son, brother, husband, father, friend, citizen, and soldier a life is closed worthy of emulation.

He was born at the old Crawford homestead, in Sullivan County, Tenn., January 25, 1837, the third son of Thomas and Elizabeth Rhea Crawford, descended from a long line of distinguished ancestors who won honors both in the struggle for independence and the Civil War. He was among the first in that section to volunteer for the South, enlisting as a private in Company G, 19th Tennessee Regiment, then commanded by the late Col. A. Fulkerson, of Bristol. Serving in the battles of Fishing Creek, Bull's Gap, and Shiloh with distinction, he was early in 1863 detailed to assist in organizing the 60th Tennessee Regiment, and was elected first lieutenant of Company G. He was later promoted to captain of the company, taking the place of Rev. John W. Bachman, who was made chaplain of the regiment. He served as captain until the close of the war, serving in the lower Delta of Mississippi, including the siege of Vicksburg. At Shiloh he was shot in the shoulder. His company (one hundred and nineteen strong) so suffered in that engagement that only thirty-seven of them responded to the roll call afterwards.

Captain Crawford married Miss Cornelia Ellen Rogan, of Knoxville, and to them were born five sons and a daughter, one son having died several years ago. He removed to Bristol in 1877, and had resided there continuously since, engaging in various businesses. The war interfered with his plans for a thorough education; but he acquired a fund of general knowledge of much value to him in his business career. He was energetic and faithful, and his loyalty to duty and cheerfulness of disposition endeared him to a large circle of friends. His fatal illness was caused from a cold contracted at the Richmond (1907) Reunion.

JOHN FRANKLIN FUQUA.

On December 31, 1907, near Fountain Head, Tenn., occurred the death of John Fuqua, in his seventy-eighth year. He reared a family of eight sons and a daughter, three of whom were with him at the last. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, having joined with six of his sons about thirty years ago at Old Oak Grove. Death resulted from a stroke of paralysis in November. He and his brother, Joel Fuqua, whose death occurred seven months before, were both Confederate soldiers, joining in 1861 the company of Captain Lytle, Col. D. W. Holman's Regiment, 11th Tennessee Cavalry. He was afterwards in Company B, Forrest's Cavalry, and was released as a prisoner of war by Andrew Johnson at Nashville in 1865.

His life as patriot, soldier, citizen, and Christian was without blemish. His wife, two sons, and a daughter preceded him to the better land.

DR. J. F. BEALL.

Dr. James Franklin Beall was a native of North Carolina and was seventy years old last September. He died in December.

Dr. Beall was a major and physician in the Confederate army, being in the 21st Regiment, an especially famous body of troops, and his record as a soldier, like his record as a citizen, was that of a brave, high-minded Southern gentleman. In his death Davidson County lost one of her best men. Surviving are his wife, who was a Miss Harper, one daughter, two sons, one brother, and a sister, and numerous other relatives. Although having completed his education and prepared himself for a physician, when the War between the States came on he entered the Confederate army as a private. For gallantry and good conduct as a soldier he was promoted, however, to the rank of major of the 21st Regiment. He took part in all the principal battles of the Army of Northern Virginia from Manassas to Petersburg, often gallantly leading the regiment in battle in the absence of the colonel. He received five wounds, and carried to the grave these honorable marks of his devotion to a just cause. Some years ago he wrote a most interesting history of the 21st Regiment, and it has a prominent place in the war records of the North Carolina troops. After the war, he entered upon the practice of his profession as a physician, and pursued the same for years with great skill and success.

He was for years a member of the Presbyterian Church, leading a faithful and consistent Christian life, illustrating the sustaining power and blessedness of Christianity by bearing with patience and cheerfulness the pain of sickness which came upon him in his latter years.

SETH M. TIMBERLAKE.

"He has made his first surrender," remarked one who stood by the casket containing the body of his friend and comrade, S. M. Timberlake, of Fishersville, Va. Though in active service from the beginning to the end of the war, except when wounded or sick, he was never a prisoner and was not surrendered at Appomattox. He was then on his way to join General Johnston in the South, and had gotten well into North Carolina when he heard of Johnston's surrender, when he retraced his steps and went home, and thus was never paroled.

Courageous in battle during those four years of war, none the less was he brave in the years which followed in the up-building of his home and country, and especially in later life, under the increasing weight of years and infirmities. His health had not been good for some years, and life passed from him as suddenly and gently as a tired child falls asleep, while visiting his son, Charles E. Timberlake, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 18th of December. He was brought back to Virginia and interred in the cemetery of Tinkling Spring Church, at Fishersville, under a guard of honor from Stonewall Jackson Camp, of Staunton, of which he was a member.

At the beginning of the war Comrade Timberlake enlisted in the Confederate service in Company B, 2d Virginia Regiment, Stonewall Brigade. He was twice badly wounded—first at First Manassas; and though suffering much and needing the surgeon's care, he constituted himself a guard, and with gun in hand sat for two hours at the door of the field hospital, helping to preserve order that the doctors could do their work, and only after this self-imposed task would he allow his own wounds to be dressed. After this battle, he was transferred to cavalry service, entering Company B, 12th Virginia Cavalry, afterwards Rosser's, and known as the Laurel Brigade, and so continued to the close.

Mr. Timberlake went to New York in 1866, and for some years was in the mercantile business in Brooklyn and for some time connected with the house of Charles Broadway Rouss, whose sister, Miss Lizzie Rouss, was his first wife. He is survived by his second wife, who was Miss Evelyn Timberlake, of Frederick County, Va. After leaving New York, he was in business in Charlestown, W. Va., for some years, removing thence to Staunton, where he was Steward of the Western Hospital, and afterwards he bought a farm in Augusta County.

Another link that binds the present with the past is broken, and a brave and chivalrous comrade, a kind and loving friend, a Christian gentleman has entered into his reward.

HARRY C. REPPARD.

After months of suffering, H. C. Reppard passed away on the 8th of November at Flemington, Ga. He was born in 1847; and during the war he served in the siege artillery of Savannah in the battalion commanded by Maj. John Cunningham, and at one time was detailed in the Secret Service Department of the Confederate States. He was captured when Sherman entered Savannah, in 1864, being ill with fever and scurvy at the Savannah Hospital. He refused to take the oath of allegiance, and was therefore taken from the hospital to a transport. Being too weak to walk, he was loaded on board by sliding down the gang plank. He was taken as a prisoner to Hilton Head, Riprap, Va., and then to Fort Delaware, from which place he was released and pardoned by a special order from President Andrew Johnson, secured by influential friends of his father, Mr. Aaron Reppard.

He was married in 1869 to Miss Rosalie Norman, who survives him with four children. At the time of his death Comrade Reppard was Commander of the Camp of Liberty County, Ga., and had been since 1899. His pallbearers were members of his Camp and of the Liberty Independent Troop, of which he was also a member. In a beautiful gray casket draped with the Confederate flag and dressed in the gray uniform he loved so well, our comrade sleeps.

"Soldier, rest; thy warfare's o'er;

Sleep the sleep that knows no waking;

Dream of battlefields no more,

Days of danger, nights of waking."

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS J. WEAVER.

Our dear dead Confederacy had many loving, faithful, tireless, undaunted soldiers; but none of them excelled Tom Weaver in devotion, faithfulness, and bravery. Each comrade who yet lingers on "this side of the river" will cheerfully concur in this tribute. Newman Cayce writes of him:

"It was my privilege to have been closely associated with Tom Weaver from the early autumn of 1862 till the echo of the last gun died away, in May, 1865. We were together for eighteen months as brigade scouts, then as members of the same company; we scouted and fought side by side until the end. Tom was known among his comrades as the 'War Horse.' He was appropriately called a 'Two O'clock in the Morning Man'—always ready for a fight, dauntless, aggressive, laughing, daring.

"There never was any diminution of his loyal devotion or desire to serve, and he entered into his last fight, in 1865, with the same unshrinking bravery which had characterized his whole loving service to our dear country and its cause. With him there was 'neither variableness nor shadow of turning.' He joined Capt. P. D. Roddy's company in the latter part of 1861, and from that day until the folds of the starry cross ceased to wave he was faithful, with a courage equal to all emergencies. The writer cannot now recall a single expedition requiring the best of soldiers of which Tom did not become a member. He was always selected as one of the best and bravest. He was always at the front of the firing line.

"He was entitled to that highest encomium: 'He was a good Confederate soldier.'"

LIEUT. A. D. KENT.

Ambrose D. Kent died on April 17, 1907, at Beaumont, Tex. He was born in Frankfort, Ky., in 1836, graduated from Transylvania University; and after a short residence in Louisville, removed to Texas in 1858. He entered the Confederate army in 1862, enlisting in Company E, Spaight's Battalion, serving therein as second lieutenant until the close of the war.

In 1866 he served in the State Legislature, and later in the year was married to Miss Drusilla McFadden, daughter of a wealthy stock raiser of the county. She died in 1872, and in 1874 he was married to Miss Lou Marble, who survives him with two children.

WEEMS.—Robert D. Weems, of Company F, 2d Mississippi Cavalry, Armstrong's Brigade, Forrest's Cavalry, died at Shubuta, Miss., on January 22, aged seventy-eight years. He served through the war and was paroled at Gainesville, Ala.

MAJ. JOSEPH VAULX.

[This brief tribute is by General Cheatham's chief of staff.]

On the evening of the 23d of February last Major Vaulx went out in a carriage to visit an old man slave, once his own servant, who had been reported to him to be in a state of destitution. Death came to him before finding the object of his search, but it will always comfort his friends to know that he died on a mission of mercy.

Major Vaulx was a native of Nashville, born in September, 1835; educated finally at the Western Military Institute. The son of one of Andrew Jackson's soldiers, he possessed a natural aptitude for military affairs; a Southern man, he early espoused the cause of his country, and was made captain of Company A, 1st Tennessee Regiment of Infantry. He shared the fortunes of that distinguished regiment until its reorganization, in 1862, when he was commissioned a major in the Inspector General Department and assigned to the division of Maj. Gen. Frank Cheatham, and shared its fortunes to the end. He possessed the full confidence of his chief and of his associates and comrades of all ranks.

Major Vaulx was always ready for duty—and no man was assigned to more delicate or perilous ones—and no man performed it with more cheerfulness or sagacity. When Cheatham's Division was in action, he could be found on the line of fire. The men were familiar with his person, and his presence was encouraging to officers and men. He was an active participant in the great battles fought by the Army of Tennessee—Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, the Georgia campaign, Franklin, and Nashville. In the most dramatic and spectacular battle of the war, Kennesaw Mountain, where General Harker and Dan McCook fell leading the Federal forces to the attack, Major Vaulx placed Cheatham's Division in position, and was on the line until the battle was won.

Major Vaulx was never married; but he had troops of friends, especially among his surviving comrades. To myself his death is a personal bereavement. He served in a large military family; I am its sole survivor. JAMES D. PORTER.

CAPT. J. L. ADAIR.

[The following tribute to Captain Adair comes from the pen of his old commander, Gen. W. L. Cabell, so well known as Commander Trans-Mississippi Department, U. C. V.]

In the month of October, 1907, in Pottsburg, Tex., Capt. J. L. Adair, one of the brave Arkansas soldiers who followed the flag of the Confederacy until it was furled and laid away, died surrounded by his family and a number of his comrades.

Capt. J. L. Adair enlisted in the 6th Regiment of Arkansas Infantry early in the war as a private. His regiment was in the battle of Shiloh, and was immediately in front of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston when he was mortally wounded in that memorable charge. He was promoted to first lieutenant, and was badly wounded the last day. Owing to his wounds, he was discharged and sent to his home, in Arkansas. As soon as he was able he organized a cavalry company and joined Monroe's Regiment in the fall of 1862, commanding Company K of that regiment. With his command he was in the battle of Prairie Grove, in December, 1862.

In February, 1863, Monroe's Regiment was assigned and made a part of Cabell's Brigade, Arkansas Cavalry, and Captain Adair was never absent, unless wounded, a single day until the close of the war. He was in all the battles of his regiment with Cabell's Brigade in North and Northwest Arkansas in 1863. In the spring of 1864 he was in all the engagements with the Federal General Steele, when with his whole army he attempted to form a junction with Banks's army, then invading Louisiana by way of Red River. Cabell, Marmaduke, and Shelby, however, by capturing all his supply trains and transportation forced him to return to Little Rock. Captain Adair was also with his company on Price's raid into Missouri. He was in eight battles in Arkansas, twenty in Missouri, and six in Kansas.

In the death of this gallant Confederate soldier his family mourns the loss of a good father and husband, his comrades a brave and true soldier and citizen. Peace to his ashes!

DEATHS IN CAMP AT LA GRANGE, GA.

Commander J. L. Schaub, of Troup County Camp, LaGrange, Ga., reports loss of the following members, good soldiers and true: Dr. B. C. Cook, surgeon 6th Georgia; A. P. Robertson, Ferrel's Battery; R. G. Dix, Company B, 4th Georgia; L. B. Rowland, Company B, 4th Georgia; M. S. Simmons, Company F, 34th Alabama; A. F. Simmons, Company B, 60th Georgia; C. R. C. Ward, Company K, 13th Georgia; B. H. Whitfield, Company B, 4th Georgia; John R. Sterling, Company B, 4th Georgia; A. O'Neal, Company B, 60th Georgia.

MAJOR VAULX.

CHARLES T. INGRAM.

(See sketch on page xxii, first of Last Roll.)

GROUP OF OFFICERS OF FORREST'S CAVALRY.

Maj. Charles W. Anderson is designated in the records as "Acting Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General of Staff of General Forrest," he having served in much of the latter part of the war as if the actual adjutant general to the Wizard of the Saddle.

Col. D. C. Kelley, who was nearly all of the war under General Forrest, furnishes the following:

"Writing from memory, it was about September, 1863, that General Forrest and Major Anderson met. Forrest, though writing but little himself, was very exacting as to what was written by his order. He was about to start on an expedition on one occasion, and while getting ready a few days before the meeting he had found some difficulty, in the absence of Major Strange, his adjutant general, in the procurement of a man who could write his orders in the exact form he desired. Turning to a soldier he had seen writing at another desk, he said: 'You try, will you?' When the order was written, he said: 'Well done. I need you. Will you consent to go with me?' This was Charles Anderson, of Murfreesboro, Tenn. When the writer was next in headquarters, a hundred miles or more southwest, he slept on Major Anderson's blanket and was his close friend and comrade until we separated at Gainesville, Ala., May 9, 1865.

"Forrest's surrender brought out some of Anderson's finest and wisest qualities. All was gloom, broken only by wild rumors, causing almost reckless despair. Again and again soldiers worn out with delay in camp and uncertainty were questioning superiors and threatening disbandment. Anderson stood nobly, kindly advising and with consummate skill answering every question as best he might, heart breaking, but with face and voice kindly. Two successive nights were spent in long rides with General Forrest, the first in helping the General to overcome his first thought of going to Mexico, the second in maturing his address to the troops. Since this noble address truly represents General Forrest, the great soldier, and his daily and often nightly companion, our Charlie, his adjutant and lifelong friend, it seems fitting now, since both have gone, that the address should represent both."

The extracts referred to in General Forrest's farewell address to his soldiers are as follows:

"I do not think it proper or necessary at this time to refer to the causes which have reduced us to this extremity; nor is it now a matter of material consequence as to how such results were brought about. That we are beaten is a self-evident fact, and any further resistance on our part would be justly regarded as the very height of folly and rashness.

"The cause for which you have so long and manfully struggled, and for which you have braved dangers, endured privations and sufferings, and made so many sacrifices, is to-day hopeless. Reason dictates and humanity demands that no more blood be shed. Fully realizing and feeling that such is the case, it is your duty and mine to lay down our arms, submit to the 'powers that be,' and aid in restoring peace and establishing law and order throughout the land.

"Civil war, such as you have just passed through, naturally engenders feelings of animosity, hatred, and revenge. It is our duty to divest ourselves of all such feelings, and as far as in our power to do so to cultivate friendly feelings toward those with whom we have so long contended and heretofore so widely but honestly differed. Neighborhood feuds, personal animosities, and private differences should be blotted out; and when you return home, a manly, straightforward course of conduct will secure the respect even of your enemies.

Whatever your responsibilities may be to government, to society, or to individuals, meet them like men.

"I have never on the field of battle sent you where I was unwilling to go myself; nor would I now advise you to a course which I felt myself unwilling to pursue. You have been good soldiers; you can be good citizens. Obey the laws, preserve your honor, and the government to which you have surrendered can afford to be, and will be, magnanimous."

Major Anderson was buried from his Murfreesboro home, where he had lived from childhood, known, loved, and trusted by all. It was the privilege of the writer to participate in the burial service, as he had done for six members of the old Forrest staff before.

But a few weeks later Capt. William Forrest, son of Gen. N. B. Forrest, the youngest and gentlest of the above group,

CAPT. WILLIAM FORREST, CAPT. JOHN W. MORTON,
COL. D. C. KELLEY, DR. J. B. COWAN, MAJ. C. W. ANDERSON.

we buried from the church of his mother in Memphis. He blended the cool courage and active service of his father with the modesty and gentleness of his refined and beautiful mother.

The writer was associated with General Forrest from a very early period in the war, first in the Forrest Cavalry Regiment, our regimental headquarters being one. We had one table and, for a while, one tent; family prayers in the evening and grace at meals. The son was a member with his mother of the First Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Memphis. By his father's consent he became my deacon and elder, performing both functions. Later, when General Forrest was commanding a division or corps, the son was still charged with conveying orders for religious services to be held at headquarters. With the gentle and devout bearing of his mother, commingled with the activities of his father, he conveyed the orders for headquarter services or cared for the preacher's comfort, so we came to know and love each other well.

It was not until since the close of the war that I was able to decipher one problem or connect it, especially with William. General Forrest made a visit to General Polk's headquarters, about two days' ride distant, and returned with two soldier youths who possessed the highest blood of our Southland—one the son of Bishop Otey, of the Episcopal Church; the other a son of General Donelson, of Tennessee. For more than two years they had been under the care of Bishop-General Polk. Forrest never told us that it was for companions to Willie in that life, to meet the anxiety and Christian culture of the mother when her health would no longer allow her to keep near headquarters, watching over this boy. The General had for once forgotten battle and hardship that she might feel comfort in the knowledge that the companionship of the only son was with charming youths of the highest birth and truest courage. This is written that the fame of the father in battle may not obscure the higher and nobler characteristic of a sire for Christian training and pure association for the son. Yet Willie was brave as pure. Many a night the writer shared his blanket.

We buried him from the old Memphis home, and were gratified to have this last Christian service to him in the Memphis church where the mother first, then Willie, and later General Forrest had held membership.

[This service was conducted by Rev. D. C. Kelley, D.D., LL.D., who was colonel of Forrest's old cavalry regiment, and who when called to Forrest's headquarters by courtesy was recognized as headquarters chaplain. Later the Confederate Veterans elected him to the rank of Lieutenant General of Forrest's Cavalry Corps.

The death of Major Anderson recalls to the editor of the VETERAN a visit from General Forrest to his office in Nashville a short while before his death. He was on a brief visit to Nashville. His hair was white, and there was a gentleness of manner that conformed to his reformed life. His greatest manifest desire was to see Major Anderson, as if it were his last opportunity.]

COL. DAVID FRENCH BOYD.

BY R. J. HANCOCK, "ELLERSLIE," CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

In the MARCH VETERAN, page 125, there are some errors. I went to school to Col. David French Boyd (not Fleming) at Homer, La., during the session of 1858-59. I knew Colonel Boyd intimately. When he left Homer, he taught a half session at Rocky Mount, La., from which place he was appointed professor of Latin or mathematics in the Louisiana State Military Academy, at Pineville, three or four miles east of Alexandria on the Red River. It was here that he formed an acquaintance and friendship for General Sherman. Sherman never was superintendent of the Louisiana State University, at Baton Rouge. He was at Pineville when the war broke out, and he went North to fight the people who had contributed to him honor and money.

During the reconstruction days the buildings at Pineville were all burned by vandals, and then it was that Colonel Boyd went to Baton Rouge. He had only twelve cadets where he built up the Louisiana State University, one of the solid institutions of the South, and Colonel Boyd is buried there.

Colonel Boyd was made chief of engineers and assigned to duty with Dick Taylor's army west of the Mississippi River. He was acting in this capacity when captured by deserters and sent to Sherman's headquarters. I had this from Boyd.

In noticing the death of John T. Harris, Company F, 4th Louisiana Regiment, you state that he was a member of Hays's Louisiana Brigade, which is a mistake. Hays's Brigade was composed of the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Louisiana Regiments and Wheat's Battalion. The 25th Louisiana Brigade was in the Army of Northern Virginia. I think it was composed of the 1st, 10th, 14th, and 15th Louisiana Regiments and Dreux's Battalion. I knew Comrade Harris and Captain Bly well, and it may be that Harris belonged to the 14th Louisiana Regiment. I never have been able to locate the 4th Louisiana Regiment. I rather think it was with Gen. Sterling Price in the Trans-Mississippi Department.

GENERALS BRAGG AND FORREST.

BY HON. JAMES B. PORTER (ADJ. GEN. TO GEN. B. F. CHEATHAM).

My attention has just been called to a publication made in Trotwood's Magazine for February of the current year entitled the "Storm Center of the Rebellion" and signed "Geo. T. Moffett," in which this paragraph appears: "And what of Bragg? Had he done that for which the fearless Forrest cursed him to his face so loud and deep and branded him as a coward for not doing?"

There is no foundation for this story. General Forrest was incapable of such conduct. He had the sense and knowledge to know that it was a high military crime that would have resulted in a court-martial and in his disgrace. But without reference to that question, I am surprised that a Southern magazine would give circulation to a slander on a patriotic soldier long since dead. A public journal or magazine is impersonal, but it is never legitimate to print words that are suspicious or actionable in a court of law.

If General Forrest had denounced General Bragg in the terms used by the writer, General Bragg would have resented it on the spot. He was a man with a combative nature, and was possessed of lofty personal courage. Those of us who saw him on the field of Shiloh were witnesses of a display of courage not surpassed by any soldier of any rank on any field of any war known to history. I recall the fact that the morning following that great battle I said to Gen. Frank Cheatham, himself a hero: "General Bragg is the hero of this battle." He replied without hesitation: "Yes, beyond all question." He added: "When we were in action with him yesterday and saw him push nearer and nearer to the front, I could but think of the battle of Buena Vista and of the critical moment when General Taylor galloped up to his battery and said, 'Give them a little more grape, Captain Bragg,' and the Captain replied, 'I will push the guns a little nearer the enemy.'"

General Bragg possessed the confidence of President Davis at all times. He rated him above Lee, the Johnstons, and Jackson. After the great disaster at Mission Ridge, and after Forrest's alleged denunciation, he made him chief of staff of the army, and he was its virtual commander. When a movement was made to place General Johnston or Stonewall Jackson in command of the Army of Tennessee after the Kentucky campaign and again after the battle of Murfreesboro, the President could not be moved by army or political influence, replying to all importunities that General Bragg was the better soldier. After Mission Ridge General Bragg was relieved at his own request, and was immediately made chief of the staff. In this service he continued until the last sad days. He took the field in command of Hoke's small division, reinforced by the still smaller division of D. H. Hill, met Cox, of Sherman's army, at Kinston, N. C., with an army corps, and gave him a bloody repulse. Cox sustained a loss of over twelve hundred, while Bragg's loss was less than two hundred. After the repulse of Cox, Bragg reported to General Johnston, and served under him as a division commander at the battle of Bentonville.

It was a fine illustration of his patriotism that he could come from the command of a great army to a division without a murmur. (From the Nashville American, March 17, 1908.)

A pathetic story comes from Jackson, Tenn., in connection with the death of Columbus Harrison. Although born as late as May 26, 1846, he enlisted early in the war, joined the 16th Alabama Cavalry, and served to the end, in 1865. Comrade Harrison was twice married, and reared children by both marriages. A son of the second marriage, through an act while intoxicated, was imprisoned in Mississippi; and while the parents were aided in his behalf by the Veterans, the Daughters, and others, the father died during the night without the knowledge of the family. He had been blind for some time.

HISTORY OF ROCK ISLAND PRISON.

"Inside and Outside of Rock Island Prison" is an attractive pamphlet, just from the press, in the VETERAN office. It contains the personal experiences of J. W. Minnich, of Grand Isle, La., and others, supplemented by a thrilling sketch by Mrs. Kate E. Perry-Mosher. It is published with a fund raised mainly by subscription, but there are some extra copies which will be supplied by the VETERAN for 25 cents each.

The book is a vivid portrayal of what Southern men endured in that noted prison from December, 1863, to June, 1865.

A SOLDIER'S LETTERS TO "CHARMING NELLIE."

Many readers of the VETERAN have been entertained from time to time by contributions from J. B. Polley, of Texas, and a veteran of the 4th Texas Regiment, Hood's Brigade, whose faculty for recording in humorous style his war experiences and observations makes them all the more enjoyable. Especially will be recalled most delightfully his series of letters to "Charming Nellie" which appeared in the VETERAN some years since, and which described most realistically, yet humorously, the life of a soldier in camp, on the march, and in battle. A better presentation of the many phases of soldier life could hardly be found, and it is a matter of congratulation that the author has lately had these letters republished and issued in book form, most attractively illustrated with pictures of different members of the command and with that of "Charming Nellie" as the frontispiece.

The humorous vein in which these letters were written does not make them less accurate historically; for, as the author states, "though not intended as history, they are historical in the respect that they narrate actual occurrences in camp, on the march, and in the battle." The lady of his letters was also an actuality, as she is still, and was a friend of one who was more than a friend to him. He was kept well advised of all that was transpiring in Texas by her friendly letters, which were so altogether "charming" as to induce the substitution of that adjective for the conventional "Miss."

Altogether the book is one to commend. Those who read these "Charming Nellie" letters before will be glad to re-read them in book form, and others will appreciate the chance to get a taste of Confederate army life as thus portrayed.

Published by the Neale Company, New York and Washington. Cloth-bound, illustrated; $2.18, postpaid.

AN "INDESTRUCTIBLE" HARROW.

Owing to its peculiar construction, the teeth never hang on a stationary object, which makes these harrows last from ten to fifteen years. If all farmers knew the advantages of these harrows over the iron frame, there never would be one of the latter sold. They are made of white oak without any sap, and the teeth are of steel. They are made and finished well. With the powerful lever used it can be set and held at any angle. It has four hitches—in front, behind, to the front corner, and to the back corner. With one of these any kind of work can be well done. Two, three, or four horses may be worked, owing to the work and weight required.

THE WAKEFIELD "INDESTRUCTIBLE" HARROW.

The harrow will be shipped prepaid on receipt of the price—six feet, $11.50; seven feet, $12.50; eight feet, $13.50.

H. U. WAKEFIELD, Cornersville, Tenn.

[The above description is insufficient, but it will call attention to a most valuable farm implement. Mr. Wakefield, the patentee and manufacturer, is absolutely reliable, and farmers interested in the subject would do well to write to him. This harrow should be used throughout the country. The local demand is quite equal to the capacity of his manufactory, but it is well that farmers know of the invention. Write to Mr. Wakefield for particulars.—ED. VETERAN.]

"AT READY"

Confederate Statues in Bronze

We furnish Statues for ALL KINDS
of Monuments

Write Us For

Prices,
Designs,
etc.

American Bronze Foundry Co.
73rd and Woodland Ave. Chicago, Ill.

New Orleans . . .

"THE GATEWAY OF THE MISSISSIPPI." The Great City of the Great South. The Largest Cotton, Rice, and Sugar Market in the World.

The Most Popular Winter Resort in America

Continuous Horse Racing, Golf Links, Hunting and Fishing. Comfort, Health, Pleasure. Eleven Theaters.

New St. Charles Hotel

Modern, Fireproof, First-Class. Accommodating One Thousand Guests. Turkish, Russian, Roman, and Plain Baths. Luxurious Sun Baths and Palm Garden.

ANDREW R. BLAKELY & COMPANY, Ltd., Proprietors

JIM OF BILOXI.

In the Confederate cemetery near Charlottesville, Va., a beautiful spot in what is called the "Ragged Mountains," there are no mounds nor headstones to mark the individual graves just a smooth plot, verdant with grass and surrounded by a moss-grown old brick wall. But in the center there is a monument surmounted by a Confederate soldier in bronze. On the pedestal there is a bronze tablet inscribed with the names of the soldiers who sleep within the inclosure. All of the names are given in full, like "Stephen Douglas Morgan," etc., except one near the middle of the list, which reads, "Jim of Biloxi."

Miss Alice Graham, a talented young lady of Monroe, La., a daughter of Capt. John H. Graham, of the Confederate service (now dead), spent last summer at Charlottesville. She visited the cemetery; and being impressed with the romantic suggestion made by the unique inscription of the soldier without a name, wrote the following poem, which is copied from the New Orleans Picayune:

"Beneath Virginia's sunlit skies,

Where oaks their shadows throw
And ragged mountains darkly rise
To guard the vales below,

There is a sweet, sequestered spot,
Where peace and silence reign;
A fair God's acre is the lot,
Where sleep the Southern slain.

There is no sound, save low wind's sigh
Among the branches tall,
Or song of wild bird, pinging high,
In plaintive lay or call.

A solemn soldier carved in bronze
Mounts guard above the graves;

Beneath, a tablet where one cons
The names of martyred braves.

Full many a name is graven there
Well-known through the land,
And some seem strange and some seem rare

That make this hero band.

But plain among them all is one
That mutely makes appeal;
No plea for fame, but duty done,
The simple words reveal.

They knew him not, who found him
there

Upon the battlefield,
When that sad day had ended, where
He fought, but would not yield;

They only knew he wore the gray,
And loved and honored him;
And naught could any comrade say
But this: "We called him "Jim.""

And from his talk about the camp
They knew his home to be
Beyond the seashore marshes damp,
Far South in Biloxi.

And so engraven on the scroll
For all posterity,
With others on this honor roll
Is "Jim of Biloxi."

W. L. Bramon, of Coffeeville, Miss., writes that Mrs. E. A. Azlin, of that place, wishes to find two comrades of her husband, D. J. Azlin, who belonged to Colonel McQuirk's Cavalry Regiment, having enlisted near Oxford, Miss. It is hoped that these comrades can testify as to the service of her husband and enable her to get a widow's pension, of which she is in need.

Benjamin E. Fewell, R. F. D. No. 2, Auxvasse, Mo., wishing to establish his war record for the benefit of his children more than for any pecuniary consideration, asks for any survivors of Company D, 15th Tennessee Infantry, of which he was a member. This company was organized early in 1861, and was commanded by Capt. Charles Rose and Captain McGuire, and he served with it until captured at Peachtree Creek, near Atlanta, and sent to Camp Douglas, where he was held till the close of the war and paroled. His parole was lost, and he takes this method of securing his record through witnesses. He remembers First Lieutenant McGuire, Second Lieutenant Broadrick, Flag Bearer McFarlane, and Private George Sexton, of the company.

Comrade Lucius Montgomery Tiner, whose post office address is Saluda, N. C., and who lost a leg at Chickamauga while fighting gallantly in Company D, 3d Arkansas Infantry, Hood's Brigade, would like to have the address of any survivors of his company. He would like to establish his claim for a cross of honor

H. W. Coleman, Norfolk, Va., needs the January and February numbers of 1899, and January, February, and June of 1900. Write him in advance, stating condition and price of copies.

J. M. Gill, Whon, Coleman County, Tex., would like to hear from any survivors of the 12th Arkansas Regiment, especially of Company G.

Books for Sons and Daughters of Confederate Veterans

THE BOY IN GRAY

BY GEORGE G. SMITH

In a neat work of nearly 300 pages, the author, a member of Phillips's Legion, Georgia Volunteers, has narrated most interestingly many of the thrilling scenes of the war. He has written the book in the interest of peace—that the young people of the Southland might know how nobly their fathers bore themselves in the war, and how grandly their mothers and sisters toiled at home. The book should be found in every Southern home. It is beautifully bound in gray cloth and gold. 266 pages. Price, postpaid, 60c.

Address THE EPWORTH ERA,
Nashville, Tenn.

A NARRATIVE of the CIVIL WAR

BY A. E. SNIDER

This is a truthful narrative of the facts and events of the great war between the States, the Civil War, written in a plain style and chronologically arranged. It is designed especially for the young people of the South, and covers the entire subject in a way that makes it intensely interesting and of great value to all who wish to know correctly about the war and its various phases. The book is handsomely bound and contains many interesting illustrations. Price, postpaid, 60 cents. Send all orders to

THE EPWORTH ERA,
Nashville, Tenn.

Handsome Picture Gen. Robert E. Lee

The Cotton Belt has a few copies left of the famous, full length picture of Gen. Lee in full uniform, standing hat in hand, which is considered one of the best likenesses of Gen. Lee ever painted. Below the picture is Gen. Lee's farewell address.

While they last this handsome picture, imprinted on heavy stock, 12½x18 in., representing oil painting, suitable for framing, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin.

Returned Battle Flags

A beautiful 56 page book, reproducing, in natural colors, the returned Confederates battle flags of many regiments will be sent upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin. Address:

E. W. LaBeaume, G. P. & T. A.,

915 Equitable Bldg.,

St. Louis, Mo.

S. T. Edwards, of East Prairie, Mo., formerly of Tennessee and a member of Company D, 20th Tennessee Infantry, seeks to ascertain the whereabouts of his brother, P. F. Edwards, who was a member of the same company, and after the war went to Texas; the last heard of he was at Grapevine, Tex. He would also be glad to hear from any survivor of his old company.

T. J. Reynolds, Chunky, Miss., was an officer of Company D, 3d Mississippi Infantry, and was wounded at the battle of Franklin. His sword was lost when he fell, and he is now anxious to recover it. It was in the scabbard, on the brass mounting of which next to the hilt was rather roughly etched with the point of a knife: "T. J. R., Co. D, 3d Regt. Miss. Vols." He says he thinks it must have been picked up the next morning by a Confederate, as he fell something less than a hundred paces in front of the Federal breastworks.

Mrs. G. I. Turnley, San Jacinto Chapter, Cold Springs, Tex., writes that John H. Reneau, who belonged to Company B, 8th Alabama Infantry, Wilcox's Brigade, now living at Palmetto, Tex., is both needy and worthy, and wishes to hear from any surviving comrades who can help to establish his claim for a pension. He enlisted in May, 1861, in Alabama. One of the officers of his company was Capt. G. T. L. Robertson, the last to command it.

V. W. Hardt, Cuero, Tex., wants to know if any Confederates captured at Franklin and taken to Camp Douglas remember "Prairie Bull" and "Little Billy Hell" (or Red); also if any of them that left Camp Douglas on the 4th of May, 1865, to be exchanged on Red River know anything of Cuff Haines, of Barrack 75.

Mrs. Elvira Campbell, Glade Spring, Va., wishes to secure the names of two survivors of the 42d North Carolina Regiment. She is on Rural Route No. 1.

Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic

The appearance and usefulness of many good animals are ruined by neglected Saddle or Harness Galls.

A few applications of Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic takes out the "fever" and stops all inflammation—in a day or so your horse is well.

Always keep a bottle in the stable.

AT ALL DRUGGISTS - 25 and 50 Cents
ALSO IN QUART BOTTLES

FOR SADDLE or HARNESS GALLS

The Carnegie Library of Atlanta, Ga., needs the first three volumes of the VETERAN to complete its file, and will take them either bound or unbound. Address Miss Julia T. Rankin, Librarian, stating condition of copies and price asked.

John Latham, Canute, Okla., would like to know the whereabouts of any members of Company A, Walker's Division, who knew a strip of a boy by the name of John Latham who enlisted in Mississippi swamps about the last year of the war. If so, write him.

KAFFER DROPS
FOR TOOTH-ACHE
(RELIEF IS IMMEDIATE)
AN EFFECTIVE REMEDY. PROMPT IN ACTION
AND IMMEDIATE IN RESULT.
POSTPAID FOR 25¢ IN SILVER
TIPTON & CO.
MANUFACTURING DRUGGISTS, LOUDON, TENN.

Confederate
Veterans'
and Sons of Confederate
Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO.
Columbus, Ohio

TEXAS THE PLACE

TEXAS is the BEST STATE for the HOMESEEKER. Fertile Lands, Diversified Crops, Farming all the year. Health, Climate, Schools and Churches.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway traverses the best portion. Send 2-cent stamp for Folder and Information.

GEO. F. LUPTON, G. P. A.,
San Antonio, Texas.

SHOPPING BY MAIL

MISSES GOLDBACH AND SMITH
PURCHASING AGENTS

THE MIDLOTHIAN, 353 WEST 117TH ST.,
NEW YORK CITY

Can we shop for you in New York? WHOLESALE PRICES, up-to-date styles in all imported and domestic merchandise. Write for samples, circulars, and advice. References furnished.

CIVIL WAR—SOUTHERN SIDE

Confederate Items, including Jefferson Davis, Gen. R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson. Also Confederate Portraits and Autographs. Catalogue now ready.

Address AMERICAN PRESS Co., Baltimore, Md.

The small sum asked for "THE CONQUERED BANNER" with poem should put this pretty picture in every Southern home. See ad. in VETERAN.

"THE ANCIENT LAW."

The multitude of readers who have been charmed by the pen of Miss Ellen Glasgow have welcomed most cordially her latest work, "The Ancient Law," another story of Virginia, in which she is at her best. The local color is drawn from the counties of Botetourt and Essex, while the little town of Tappahannock furnishes some distinctive characters and incidents. To have everything absolutely correct, Miss Glasgow went to this place and lived there for some time. In this story of human struggle and human love the picture presented is of a strong man triumphing by sheer force of character over adverse circumstances. Only the higher emotions are appealed to, tender sympathy and deep admiration being aroused for the man who so utterly gives himself to others in the self-constituted task of atonement for one slip from the narrow way. The story is finished in a glow of hope for the one who in thus losing his life should surely save it.

Published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. Cloth, $1.50.

The great painting of "Lee and His Generals" is considered one of the finest of group portraiture doubtless ever produced in America. The great figures stand forth from the canvas with startling semblance of life, General Lee occupying his rightful place at the center front. Of the twenty-six generals depicted on this canvas, but two are living, Gens. Stephen D. Lee and S. B. Buckner; five were killed in battle and nineteen have died since the war. The immense task of reproducing each face and form was accomplished with wonderful fidelity, and the ensemble is marvelously effective.

The original painting is 18x9 feet, while the lithograph color copy is 27x16 inches, and is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. See advertisement in this number.

A. G. Halyburton, City Clerk, Asheville, N. C., wishes to get copies of the VETERAN for January, February, September, and October, 1898. Write him in advance of sending.

Prof. W. O. Connor, Cave Spring, Ga., wants a copy of the VETERAN for February, 1899. Write him.

If afflicted with SORE EYES Use Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

Watch Charms FOR Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as Illustrated, $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" plus, handsomely enameled, regulation pin, sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Pettibone Uniforms

for U. C. V. and U. S. C. V. are famous. Being made by expert military tailors, they have the true military cut. They fit well, look well, wear well, and are very reasonable in price. Each one is made to individual measure. Send for prices and samples of cloth.

Besides Uniforms we have been manufacturing Flags, Banners, Badges, Swords, Belts, Caps, Military and Secret Order Goods for thirty-five years.

The Pettibone Bros. Mfg. Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

(Mention this paper when writing.)

The BEST PLACE to purchase all-wool

Bunting or Silk Flags

of all kinds,

Silk Banners, Swords, Belts, Caps

and all kinds of Military Equipment and Society Goods

is at
Veteran J. A. JOEL & CO., 38 Nassau St.,
SEND FOR PRICE LIST. New York City.

WANTED—TO SELL

Souvenir post cards of General Beauregard's Headquarters at Manassas, Va., July, '61. Two (2) for five cents. Include postage.

MISS MYRA PAYNE, Manassas, Va.

Selected Souvenir Cards

Twenty views of Historic Chattanooga, Chickamauga, and Lookout Mountain. Beautifully colored. Mailed to any address. 12 views for 25c., or 20 views for 40c.

Address

L. J. PETTUS, Chattanooga, Tenn.

---

One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World

is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the approval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

Louisville, Ky.

San Francisco, Cal.
U S. A.
London, England.

New York, N. Y.

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

JANUARY, 1908.

No. 1.

MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE, PRESIDENT U. D. C.

TENNESSEE IN THE WAR, 1861-1865

By GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT

CONTAINS: Lists of Military Organizations and Officers of the Provisional Army of Tennessee appointed by Governor Isham G. Harris, General Officers, both Union and Confederate, with Staff Officers of the latter and Statement of any previous Service or Rank in the United States Army; Quartermasters and Commissaries in the Confederate Army from Tennessee, other than those mentioned on the Staff; Officers of the Confederate States Navy appointed from Tennessee; Members of the United States Congress from Tennessee; Complete Rosters of Confederate States Congress from Tennessee; Members of the United States Congress from Tennessee; Complete Rosters of Organizations of Federal Troops from Tennessee who served 1861-1865; Campaigns conducted; Battles, Affairs, and Skirmishes fought within the Limits of the State, with Date and Location. 225 pages. Every Tennessean,—every Southerner, U. S. F. Camp, U. S. C. Chapter, Historical Society, Public and Club Library, University, College, and School, G. A. R. Post, Member of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and Military Academy,—should possess a copy of this authentic, historical record.

READ THE FOLLOWING COMMENDATORY LETTERS

*University of Nashville, Peabody College for Teachers,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9, 1907.*

Dear General Wright: I have read the manuscript of "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," prepared by yourself. I hope you will publish it; it is a work of very great value, and I doubt not will have a great sale.

Sincerely yours,
GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT.

JAMES D. PORTER.

*Tennessee Historical Society,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9, 1907.*

My Dear General: I read your manuscript entitled "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," very carefully and with pleasure last winter; found it of much value; and while the information was fresh in mind I addressed a letter to the Governor of Tennessee, commending it and stating that it was well worthy of being purchased and published by the State. It was prepared carefully by an expert in our U. S. Military Records, and largely from original sources. It contains a large amount of information that cannot be obtained from our Tennessee and local records, and would be expensive to compile. It is the result of many, many months of painstaking labor. I do not know what has become of the letter I wrote to the Governor upon this subject.

Yours most truly,
GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

G. P. THRUSTON.

*Office of Secretary of State, State of Tennessee,
John W. Morton,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General: It gave me great pleasure and interest to examine and read your manuscript of officers in Confederate and Federal armies during the late war from Tennessee. It is very complete, and will be eagerly sought by all old Confederate and Federal soldiers and their families not only in Tennessee but throughout the United States. Trust you may have it put in book form soon, and you may put me down for five copies. I expressed your manuscript. When I can serve you at any time, it will give me pleasure to do so.

Yours truly,
JOHN W. MORTON.

*A. W. Wills, Postmaster,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General: I have read the manuscript prepared by you, "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," with very great pleasure and interest, and I earnestly trust that a publication will be made in pamphlet form or otherwise for distribution and sale. It is the only complete record in existence of the Federal troops from Tennessee engaged in the Civil War. The Adjutant General of Tennessee compiled a very imperfect record of the Tennessee troops, which was so replete with errors that it was really useless and finally abandoned; and the record that you have prepared, being in every respect perfect, will be a matter of very great interest to Tennesseans for future generations and the Confederacy as well. Your manuscript was submitted to a committee consisting of Ex-Governor James D. Porter, General Gates P. Thurston, Captain John W. Morton, and myself, and was carefully scrutinized by each and all of us and received our careful and universal indorsement.

Very respectfully,
A. W. WILLS.

*No. 7 East Thirty-Sixth Street,
New York, October 1, 1907.*

My Dear General: I have just finished reading your "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," and congratulate Tennesseans upon the admirable presentation you have given them. My familiarity with the Army of Tennessee, beginning with Columbus and Bowling Green, permits me to view the work somewhat as a critic. I find, however, nothing to criticize, and can therefore in all candor heartily praise it. Thank you for the opportunity to look it through.

Yours very truly,
GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

WILLIAM M. POLK.

*Headquarters United Confederate Veterans,
Office of Commander in Chief,
Columbus, Miss., October 29, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General Wright: It has given me pleasure to critically examine your manuscript entitled "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865." It is a compilation perfected with great labor and accuracy, with advantages of examination of records, to which you have had access for so many years over and above any other living Confederate. I regard it as technically most valuable for the State of Tennessee and its citizens, and recommend it as the most valuable compilation I have yet seen for Tennessee in the great Civil War. The compilation is broad and comprehensive, giving military organizations and officers from Tennessee in both the Confederate and Union armies; general and staff officers in the Provisional Army of Tennessee appointed by Governor Isham G. Harris; general officers, both Union and Confederate, with staff officers, and statement of previous rank or service in the U. S. army; quartermasters and commissaries appointed from Tennessee in Confederate and Union armies other than those on staff of general officers; officers of Confederate and United States Navy appointed from Tennessee; members of Confederate and United States Congress from Tennessee; complete roster of Confederate and Federal organizations from Tennessee, 1861-1865; campaigns conducted, battles, affairs, and skirmishes fought within the limits of the State, with date and location. In short, as far as it goes it is as complete as it can be, and a copy should be in every family in Tennessee.

With kind wishes, your friend and comrade.

STEPHEN D. LEE.

ORDER AT ONCE. Copies will be sent in the order of receipt of orders with remittance. PRICE, One Dollar and Fifty Cents, postage paid to any address. A Limited Number of Copies in Extra Binding with loose, excellent Photogravure Likeness on India paper of, and signed by, the Author. PRICE, Two Dollars and Fifty Cents, postage paid to any address. PUBLISHED BY

AMBROSE LEE PUBLISHING CO., Williamsbridge, New York City.
PUBLISHERS OF SOUTHERN HISTORICAL AND LITERARY WORKS ONLY

The Direct Route to Washington
 Baltimore
 Philadelphia
 New York and
 all Eastern Cities
 from the South
 and Southwest
 is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
 Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to

Richmond
 Norfolk, and all
 Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
 Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
 Roanoke, Va.

MORPHINE

Liquor, and Tobacco addictions cured in ten days without pain. Unconditional guarantee given to cure or no charge. Money can be placed in bank and payment made after a cure is perfected. First-class equipment. Patients who cannot visit sanitarium can be cured privately at home. References: Any county or city official, any bank or citizen of Lebanon. Large booklet sent free. Address

Dept. V. CEDARCROFT SANITARIUM, Lebanon, Tenn.

Handsome Monogram Stationery Correct Style

121 SPRUCE STREET NORTH

103 Fountain Avenue.

BRANDON PRINTING COMPANY

Manufacturing Stationers, Engravers, Printers, Lithographers, General Office Outfitters
 Nashville, Tennessee

"Lee and His Generals" & "The Last of the Wooden Navy."

Two wonderful paintings, each being worth thousands of dollars, can be had in every home. "LEE AND HIS GENERALS" and "THE LAST OF THE WOODEN NAVY," the great pictures by GEORGE B. MATTHEWS, which have been exhibited at Jamestown Exposition for the past six months and have excited the interest of thousands of people, have at last been accurately reproduced in colors. The first gives excellent full-figure portraits of Robert E. Lee and twenty-five of his commanders attractively grouped. The last is a vivid picture of the battle between the Merrimac and Monitor. The lithographs are 24 x 12 and 20 x 10 inches, respectively. PRICE, POSTAGE PREPAID, 55c. EACH. Dealers wanted everywhere to handle these pictures. Write for terms to

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., Inc.

914 E. Main Street,

Richmond, Va.

POSITIONS SECURED or Money Back

CONTRACT given, backed by $300,000.00 capital and 18 years' SUCCESS

DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL Business Colleges

Washington, D. C., Raleigh, Columbia, Nashville, Atlanta, Montgomery, Jackson, Miss., Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas.

Bookkeeping, Banking, Shorthand, Penmanship, Telegraphy, etc. Indorsed by business men. Also teach by mail. Write, phone, or call for catalogue.

30 Colleges in 17 States

A SICK MULE

Needs Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic.

It relieves and cures COLIC and BOTS promptly and permanently.

At all Druggists.
 25 and 50 Cents
 Also in quart bottles.

Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic

American National Bank

Capital ..... $1,000,000.00
 Shareholders' Liability ..... 1,000,000.00
 Surplus and Undivided Profits. 500,000.00
 Security to Depositors ..... $2,500,000.00

3 per cent Interest Paid upon Certificates of Deposit

OFFICERS

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

DIRECTORS

JNO. B. RANSOM, JOHN M. GRAY, JR., HORATIO BERRY, G. M. NEELY, THOS. L. HERBERT, BYRD DOUGLAS, OVERTON LEA, J. B. RICHARDSON,
 A. H. ROBINSON, THOS. J. FELDER, E. W. TURNER, W. W. BERRY,
 LESLIE CHEEK, JOHNSON BRANSFORD, N. P. LESUEUR, ROBT. J. LYLES.

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. ¶ General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." ¶ The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. ¶ Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address

NATIONAL PRINTING & EXHIBIT CO., 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The one book that gives a complete history of the Confederate flags

THE STARS AND STRIPES

AND OTHER AMERICAN FLAGS

BY PELEG D. HARRISON

The CONFEDERATE VETERAN says this book contains "a history of the flags which have figured in American history, their origin, development, etc., with army and navy regulations, salutes, and every other thing that is of interest. To Mr. Harrison is due much credit for his exhaustive research in compiling this data."

I was much interested in this valuable Flag book, particularly the part containing a history of the flags of our Southland.—M. A. Jackson, Widow of Gen. Thomas J. ("Stonewall") Jackson, Charlotte, N. C.

The standard text-book on the subject treated.—John W. Gordon, Major Confederate States Army, and Chairman United Confederate Veterans, Richmond Reunion, 1907.

With Eight Flag Illustrations in Color, 417 Large Pages. Handsomely Bound in Cloth
 Price, $3 net. Postage, 20 Cents.

Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston

CONFEDERATE POSTAGE STAMPS WANTED

$100

PAID for an Alexandria, Va., or Livingston, Ala., stamp either unused or used on the old envelopes. Hundreds of other Confederate stamps issued by the Postmasters of different Southern towns in 1861 wanted at high prices, also U. S. stamps issued before 1870, and collections of foreign stamps. - -

Send what you have for inspection and offer to

W. SMITH, 507 W. Bridge Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Confederate
 Veterans'
 and Sons of Confederate
 Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO.
 Columbus, Ohio

Free Book About Cancer.

CANCEROL has proved its merits in the treatment of cancer. It is not in an experimental stage. Records of undisputed cures of cancer in nearly every part of the body are contained in Dr. Leach's new 100-page book. This book also tells the cause of cancer and instructs in the care of the patient; tells what to do in case of bleeding, pain, odor, etc. A valuable guide in the treatment of any case. A copy of this valuable book free to those interested. Address, DR. L. T. LEACH, Box 98, Indianapolis, Ind.

LET ME DO YOUR SHOPPING

No matter what you want—street suit, wedding trousseau, reception or evening gown—INEXPENSIVE, or handsome and costly—send for my samples and estimates before placing your order. With my years' experience in shopping, my knowledge of styles—being in touch with the leading fashion centers—my conscientious handling of each and every order, whether large or small—I know I can please you.

MRS. CHARLES ELLISON, Louisville, Ky.

Patents, Trade-Marks

C. T. BELT, Attorney

Warder Building, Cor. 9th and F Streets

WASHINGTON, D. C.

For Over Sixty Years

An Old and Well-Tried Remedy

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, WITH PERFECT SUCCESS. IT SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLEYS all PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHEA. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world 25 CENTS A BOTTLE. Guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Serial number, 1088

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter. Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important. Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application. The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted. The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success.
The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. } VOL. XVI.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. }

NASHVILLE, TENN., JANUARY, 1908.

No. 1. } S. A. CUNNINGHAM,
PROPRIETOR.

UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

Reports of the U. D. C. at Norfolk in November, 1907, will appear in the VETERAN periodically. Reports for the Maryland and North Carolina Divisions are to appear in February. Division Presidents would help others and themselves by concise reports in the VETERAN.

The front page engraving of Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, President for the ensuing year, will please many Daughters who have seen and heard Mrs. Stone at nearly all of the General Conventions. She is noted for her persistence and zeal in the Confederate cause. She is quite to the U. D. C. as was the beloved Frances Willard to the W. C. T. U.—zealous, earnest, and eminently capable in her undertakings.

Mrs. Stone was Cornelia Branch, daughter of Edward Thomas Branch, a Virginian, who served the republic of Texas on the field of San Jacinto and in the first two sessions of the Congress of that republic and as a member of the first Legislature of the State of Texas. He was one of the five judges who, under the constitution of the republic, formed the Supreme Court of the Republic of Texas.

Mrs. Stone has served two terms as President of the Texas Division, U. D. C., 1898-99, and as Chairman of Committees on Revision of the Constitution in the General Association, U. D. C., and in the Texas Division. For several years she served as Vice President and Acting President of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas; also two years as President of the Texas Woman's Press Association.

STATE OFFICERS TEXAS DIVISION, U. D. C.—At the annual meeting of the Texas Division, U. D. C., held in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol December 3-7, 1907, the following officers were elected: President, Miss Katie Daffan, by acclamation; Vice Presidents, Mrs. J. B. Beatty, of Houston, Mrs. Elgin, of Marshall, Mrs. A. C. Westbrook, of Hearne, and Mrs. Throop, of Austin; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Hassell, Dallas; reelected Secretary, Mrs. Charles L. Hamill, Longview; Treasurer, Mrs. M. Wheeler, Victoria; Historian, Mrs. M. L. Watson, Galveston; Registrar, Mrs. R. C. Shmaler, Nacogdoches; Custodian, Mrs. H. G. Askew, Austin; Recorder of Crosses of Honor, Mrs. Hazlett, Hearne; members of the Board, Mrs. Zumwalt, of Houston, and Mrs. Baugh, of San Antonio.

JEFFERSON DAVIS HOME ASSOCIATION

The earnest attention of every friend everywhere in the procurement of the birthplace of the South's honored chief, in the greatest event that ever can occur, it may be assumed, is solicited by the committee having the movement in charge. They are earnest patriots, and intend to do whatever is possible for the success of the project.

The centennial anniversary of Mr. Davis's birth will soon occur, and by that time the committee hopes to have in hand the fund necessary to secure all the property desired. All legal provisions have been made, so that now contributions for the purpose are requested. Capt. John H. Leathers, banker in Louisville, Ky., is the treasurer of the committee, and will receive subscriptions at any time. Any contributions sent through the VETERAN will be properly acknowledged. Let those who want to contribute small sums remit promptly.

The Review, published at Fairview, Ky., takes zealous interest in the procurement of the birthplace of Jefferson Davis for a memorial and a park. It states: "The old house no longer stands; but this spot, so dear to the memory of the 'boys' who followed the stars and bars in defense of their dear Southland, is crowned by beautiful Bethel Church, a fitting tribute to the man who was at the helm of the Southern Confederacy during those four long years of strife and bloodshed. The Association proposes to erect a handsome building on the grounds, and thus preserve all the relics pertaining to Jefferson Davis that can be secured; also preserve biographical data and Confederate relics of every description * * * The hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis will be celebrated in this city June 3, 1908, under the auspices of the Jefferson Davis Home Association, and will be an event of national interest. Great interest is being manifested all over the South in this movement, and it is believed that all the money needed will be forthcoming from the Confederate veterans and Southern sympathizers."

Mrs. James G. Kenan, Wallace, N. C., writes: "I am so pleased at the idea of converting the birthplace of Jefferson Davis into a Southern park. The Southern people can never honor this noble, wonderful man according to his merits—too little already has been given him. If you will pardon the suggestion, after the land is bought have an endowment fund to keep it up. As soon as your plans materialize, I will send something to the fund. Would it not be a good idea to ask the United Daughters of the Confederacy from each State to pay annually so much money to be deposited on interest, so that the expenses for improving and keeping up this park will be assured? I hope you will excuse the suggestion, but I feel so deeply interested in all honors paid to Jefferson Davis. Such a grand and beautiful character, gentle yet firm in the right, the memory of the man will yet triumph over all obstacles, over prejudice, over persecution, over jealousy, over unjust discrimination. May Southern people show his memory every honor!"

SOMETHING ABOUT THIS ISSUE.

This issue of the VETERAN contains more reading than any other in its history. The article upon Hood's failure at Spring Hill is exhaustive. Judge Young has been at work upon a history, of which this is the first part given to the public, for eight years, sparing neither labor nor expense in his work.

While the younger people may not be interested in that subject especially, they will read of a boy's experiences in the army with interest. Although he was "on the other side," his opportunities for information (his father being the ranking officer) were excellent. That boy is now quite the image of his father and a brigadier general in the United States army—Gen. Fred D. Grant, now holding the post at Governor's Island, New York, that was held by Gen. W. S. Hancock when the Democratic nominee for President

REUNION FLORIDA DIVISION, U. C. V.

The Florida Division held its annual encampment at Pensacola October 23 and 24, and, like all gatherings of veterans at the "Deep Water City," it was altogether enjoyable. The new pension law of Florida came in for rather severe scoring, and the scoring was merited. To attempt anything like a "service pension" is to attempt to reduce patriotism to a monetary basis; and whenever that is accomplished, the Confederate veteran will be no better than the hired "Hessian" of the Revolution. Give every needy man a pension—that is his due and the due of his old widow—and give him and all other true soldiers a medal as a testimonial of grateful appreciation; but do not try to pay for patriotism with dollars and cents. Hirelings are never patriots. They, like old Dougal Golgetty, fight for pay and orders, often without old Dougal's sense of honor, for they are willing to serve the one who bids highest, regardless of former obligations.

The Division chose as its Commander for the coming year W. L. Wittich, of Pensacola; R. J. Magill continues as Adjutant. The Second Brigade elected S. Cotes Boyleston, of Jacksonville, as Brigadier General for the ensuing year, and the Third Brigade elected B. N. Mathis, of Plant City, formerly Inspector General on the staff of Gen. A. P. Stewart, as Brigade Commander. Tampa was selected as the place for the encampment of 1908.

Miss Adaline Denham Partridge, Monticello, Fla., Sponsor

to the First Brigade, Florida Division, U. C. V., Reunion at Pensacola, Fla., October 22, 1907. Miss Partridge is the daughter of B. W. Partridge, Aid to Gen. Samuel Pasco, Commander of First Brigade, Florida Division, U. C. V. Captain Partridge served in the C. S. A., 1861-65, in Company H, 3d Florida Infantry, and was transferred to Company A, 15th Confederate Cavalry, and served under Col. Harry Maury until the close of the war.

WORD FROM THE OTHER SIDE.

BY CAPT. S. F. HERRALL, WASHINGTON, IND.

Herewith find clipping from local paper here, editorial page. I told Mr. Boyd, the editor who reviewed your magazine, that "I hope to get up a circulation for the VETERAN here." Hence these tears!

You say in relation to Captain DeRosset's letter: "It is currently believed that the distinguished John A. Logan was really organizing a command in Southern Illinois to fight for State rights with the South," etc. This, no doubt, grew out of the fact that a brother-in-law of General Logan's and of Shawneetown, Ill., did raise a company "to fight," etc. When General Logan was a member of the Illinois State Legislature, this writer was Principal of the Benton (Ill.) Academy of Learning, and personally well knew him. He was a Democrat of the Stephen A. Douglas school; and when the war broke out, Mr. Douglas, who had been defeated by Mr. Lincoln, but was a United States Senator, at once made it plain to Mr. Lincoln that he (Douglas) would stand for a vigorous prosecution of the war by the United States government. His votes as a Senator show this.

When the first battle of Bull Run was being fought, Gen. John A. Logan placed himself in the ranks of the Union army and fought all the day as a private. This is easily verified. He was then a member of the United States House of Representatives. On returning to Washington City he tendered his resignation of a seat in Congress, asked a commission to raise a regiment of troops of President Lincoln, got it, raised the regiment, and rose rapidly in rank to major general. His speeches, yet of record (newspaper), stand as proof that in South Illinois, as in South Indiana, there was strong secession sentiment, and which speeches silenced all talk favorable to secession; and as compared to the middle and north of Illinois by population, Southern Illinois furnished more than its quota for the Union army, chiefly officered by Mr. Logan's warm Douglas Democratic friends. The "War Records" are proof.

When at the battle of Fort Donelson he was severely wounded, a delegation of South Illinois people asked Logan to resign and be elected Representative to Congress again. His answer was akin to that of Patrick Henry on the Declaration of American Independence—viz., that his heart was in the cause to preserve the Union. "Live or die, survive or perish, I am for the Declaration." The proof of this will be found in speeches or orations delivered on the United States Senate floor by members of that body of both sides politically.

And as to South Indiana, the same means—speeches by Hon. Charles Denby and James M. Shanklin—turned the tide or undercurrent of secession steadily for the Union cause, and both of these men were field officers—Denby, lieutenant colonel, and Shanklin, major of the 42d Indiana Veteran Volunteer Infantry. Each was a Democrat politically, and each had a horse killed under him; Denby at Perryville, Ky., and Shanklin at Murfreesboro, Tenn. The latter was captured and conveyed to Libby Prison.

MISS PARTRIDGE.

A GLAD HAND FROM THE NORTH.

BY MISS MARY H. STEPHENSON, PETERSBURG, ILL.

The courteous editor of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN recently complimented the writer with a copy of that periodical. She was greatly pleased with it. The nobility and generosity of feeling and sentiment manifested, the steadfast loyalty to our great common nation, combined with the sentiment that the rights of each State should be sacredly guarded, seem to permeate its pages and teach the rising generation valuable lessons.

It is also doing good work in compiling intimate history of the great, if terrible, national epic of the early sixties—that magnificent poem, written in heroic hexameter with pen dipped in the sacrificial blood of the nation's bravest and best—on both sides—and accented with the thunderous roar of artillery and the pomp and circumstance of "grim-visaged war!"

Born and reared north of Mason and Dixon's line, the daughter of the founder of the Grand Army of the Republic, yet the sadness with which as a schoolgirl I read in history of the horrible carnage of the War between the States seemed as much tinged with regret for the "flower of the South" strewn on the bloody field as for our Northern heroes.

I am so pleased that the more or less acrid feeling which subsisted for a number of years after the Civil War is disappearing; that people of the North are beginning to appreciate more than ever before the heroism of the other side and to realize that these are the nation's heroes also.

I was especially impressed with the gentle dignity with which the editor met the indignant protest from some quarters against the idea of General Grant's having at one time offered his services to the Confederacy. After correcting the assertion inadvertently made by a contributor to the effect that General Grant had made this tender, the editor observes that he does not feel that it would have been any great crime or personal disgrace if such a tender of services had been made. Certainly it would not have been. For while we of the North are glad General Grant did not offer to enlist for the Confederacy, because we prefer to believe that he served his country from a deep conviction of duty, as the volunteers of the North did, yet we can readily admit that to many it must have been a hard matter to fully decide which cause was the more just, since, while slavery was no doubt the immediate occasion, the irritant, the question of State rights, was the cause of the struggle.

I clearly recall the thrill of enthusiasm and gratification which went through the North when, on the breaking out of the Spanish-American War, the once dashing Confederate cavalry officer, Gen. Joseph Wheeler (Fighting Joe), offered his services to the government. And up from the South came a host whose fathers and grandfathers had fought for the Confederacy, eager and zealous to defend the stars and stripes and avenge the sinking of the Maine.

That the hand of Time is smoothing out the wrinkles left in our nation by the awful struggle between brethren is matter for congratulation to our country. Each side may be very sure that whatever was right and just in their contention will survive in the nation, and that the heroic dead on both sides have not died in vain. * * *

It is impossible to express adequately the gratitude Southern people feel for such sentiment as Miss Stephenson entertains. If such had prevailed immediately at the close of the war, there would have been no reconstruction. Miss Stephenson, however, commits an error quite common in the estimate that old Father Time brought about the restored feeling and that his work prepared the young men of the South to be ready to fight for the United States government in the Spanish-American War. The sentiment in connection with that war was not personal. Men who had faced each other in battle occasionally were brought together, and gentlemanly instincts were keenly appreciated; and if practicable, they were reciprocated at once. In trading between the picket lines the sentiment was ever most courteous, and it was generally cordial. Then the Confederates were as patriotic as any of earth in any period, and they would largely have volunteered themselves if there had been such a demand very soon after the war. Despite reconstruction, they were still loyal to the government of their fathers. They do not yet forgive individual infamies, nor will they. Ah, how much of that will go to the judgment!

A fine illustration of the sentiment during the war period illustrates the feeling that existed at that time. A year or so ago a business man of Kansas City, who had made many large shipments over the N., C., & St. L. Railway Company, was in Nashville, and Mr. Spencer Eakin, of that company (notice of Major Eakin's death appears in the "Last Roll" of this issue), was taking him over the battlefield of Nashville and where they had confronted each other. The Federal was wounded and put in the field hospital, the noted Noel residence on the Granny White Pike, that was occupied the day before as a Confederate hospital. He was thinking he had a hard time, and groaning over his suffering, when a Confederate lad lying on the floor reproved him, saying: "You see that I have an eye shot out, and am badly wounded besides. When we leave here, you will go to your home, while I will be sent to prison to suffer from cold and hunger. Cheer up." The Union soldier, or officer (name and rank are not given), had been eminently successful, and said he owed his life to that little ragged Confederate for his good cheer; moreover, that if he could find him alive he would give him a ranch out West, for which he had paid $100,000, and in addition all the stock that he had on it.

LETTER FROM MAJ. HUNTER DAVIDSON.—Maj. Hunter Davidson, now residing in Pirayui, Paraguay, S. A., writes that he is sending through the New York Times ten dollars in United States gold for subscription to the VETERAN, and adds: "I want to write you a long letter; but to a Confederate friend, where can I commence and where could I ever end?" He sends "affectionate remembrances to old comrades in arms."

On page 396 of the VETERAN for September, 1906, there is some account from the "Public Records" of Major Davidson's magnificent career in the Confederate navy. His long isolation from comrades must make any communications with them very pleasant. The VETERAN anticipates anxiously such reminiscences as may come from him during that war and since.

The sketch of the Grand Army of the Republic by Maj. Robert Mann Woods in the December VETERAN is not only interesting but of value historically. By a careful reading of parts of the book, a well-bound volume of seventy-six pages by the founder's daughter, it seems that, instead of Dr. Stephenson's having declined the high honor of Commander in Chief for the pecuniary benefits of the Adjutant General's position, it was for other reasons, as the outlay of the latter office exceeded the receipts for several years, and it was in debt to Dr. Stephenson for some time nearly $800.

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.

Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

REPLY TO THE "TWENTY THOUSAND LETTERS."

So many letters have come in response to the request of every patron of the VETERAN that the idea of making no extracts controlled in the outset, but there are suggestions that incline us to a reproduction of some of them.

One letter comes from Dr. R. A. Halley, now of Chicago, editor of Fuel, an important trade paper, which so fully expresses the sentiment that should maintain in this work that quotations are made from it. While Dr. Halley has as managing editor of leading papers in the South been much occupied and was too young to know much of the war, his helpfulness in many respects inclines to the propriety of quoting his expressions. He has evidently the most elegantly bound volumes of the VETERAN in existence. He writes:

"For I believe that your great life work has been the establishment of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN and winning with it and for it a place unique in the story of specialized journalism. It is easy to see that Providence was in all your previous career shaping your life for the one great work held in reserve for you. It was for this that you had the opportunity, or made it, in early life, of mingling with men and making them your friends; your newspaper experience trained you for the greater things; your time of service in the army brought you in actual touch with the men and the events thereafter to be permanently recorded in the VETERAN; your post-war opportunities for increasing and expanding your knowledge of and acquaintance with the men who made the greatest chapters in the South's history—I say that I believe that during all that time Providence, which never does things without adequate preparation, had you in training for the great work of your life which you are now doing for others, for the land you love and that loves you for doing it, as well as for the God-implanted characteristics which make you just what you are.

"I hope that there may yet be many more years for you. The work has not been done yet; for so long as there are those left on earth who have not told their stories, so long is there more of the record of the great war to be gathered and preserved for the future generations which will want to know the truth. My earnest hope is that you as editor of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN may be active in the age that shall come to you, and that you may still be editing the CONFEDERATE VETERAN when that saddest of days comes that your 'Last Roll' shall contain but a single name—the name of the last surviving Confederate soldier except yourself."

Although the "twenty-thousand" mark was not reached, the many responses that did come on the 27th of November create anew gratitude and renewed courage to press on and on with all the vigor and the patience that is possible.

Many of the letters received came from unexpected sources, while there are many others who have not written from whom there was cause to expect response; and believing that great good would be accomplished by suggestions and encouragement, the request is now made that all who have not given a word of cheer or advice will do so still.

The "sentimental" reason for requesting the letters on November 27 was its being the wedding anniversary of most interest, and also the birthday anniversary of a young man who in the vigor of promised usefulness met his death in the Rio Grande while in charge of an expedition for the two governments concerned in the meanderings of that treacherous stream, with its many changes of channel; a young man in whom thousands were interested and who still deplore his untimely death. It is the anniversary also of the death of the young man who gave the brightest lesson of courage and fidelity and patriotism in the history of the human race. It is hardly worth while to mention that name, but it cannot be seen too often—Sam Davis. There are also other considerations for remembering it with interest and with gratitude.

PLEA FOR PEACE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Secretary Taft was entertained in St. Petersburg, Russia, on December 3, 1907, and the topic of his address was a "Plea for Peace throughout the World." It was called the American banquet, but in addition to sixty Americans there were several high Russian officials.

Responding to the speech of welcome delivered by F. M. Corse, who presided, Secretary Taft said that he hoped the traditional friendship between Russia and America would increase and become stronger. The similarity of interest in the development of the two countries, he said, ought to produce a sympathetic feeling, and he drew a parallel between Russia and America with reference to their immense extent and the difficulties arising therefrom.

Personally the Secretary had a strong feeling of affection for Russia on account of the two years' residence of his father there as American Minister. He sought an audience with the Emperor in order to express his personal gratitude for the hospitality which he had enjoyed on his Trans-Siberian trip and to assure him that a deep desire exists on the part of the Americans for the welfare and prosperity of Russia. The Secretary declared that in his judgment there was no possibility of war between the United States and any country, nor was there any reason for it. The world needs peace for its real growth and the happiness of the individual. Civilization, said the Secretary, is indebted to Emperor Nicholas for the initiation of international efforts for a permanent peace and the mitigation of war by the organization of The Hague Conference.

The foregoing recalls action taken in Nashville on January 20, 1899, wherein an eminent citizen of Tennessee, Col. E. W. Cole, was chairman of a meeting in commendation of Emperor Nicholas's plea at that time for universal peace measures. Colonel Cole exhibited extraordinary zeal in presenting the subject to President McKinley with a plea for his prompt and zealous approval.

In his letter to the President Colonel Cole as chairman of the committee wrote: "No greater event since the birth of the Saviour has challenged the attention of the mind and heart of the human race than the hope of permanent peace among all the nations of the earth."

The editor of the VETERAN had the pleasure and the honor of being a member of that committee, and recalls that the chairman of the committee showed interest quite equal to that he exhibited in the Tennessee Industrial School, for which he contributed in lands and money perhaps not less than $100,000—a sum larger than ever has been given by any individual for the benefit of the boys and girls in his native Tennessee.

GEN. S. D. LEE TO UNION OFFICERS.

HIS ADDRESS TO THE ARMY OF THE TENNESSEE AT VICKSBURG.

[There is so much of interest and public importance connected with the visit of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee at Vicksburg that supplemental reports will be given from time to time in regard to it. One of the first features of the occasion is that of Gen. S. D. Lee's address.]

There is a story of an Irish policeman in Milwaukee who came upon a German who had been imbibing too freely of the amber fluid which made that city famous, and proceeded to give the German a good beating with his club. When he saw the puzzled look on the German's face, the Irishman made this explanation: "It isn't because I have got any grudge against you, but just because I have got the authority." We Southerners have been impressed with the idea that the beating you gave us was not due to any grudge against us, but simply to settle the question of authority. You were, in fact, so attached to us all the time that you could not think of parting with us on any terms.

I am here to-night because you have invited Confederate veterans to join you in your meeting. It is an invitation which they accept in the spirit in which it is offered. We do not surrender our convictions. We do not regret our part in the great struggle when the question who is sovereign in this country was decided by the sword. We have accepted that solution in good faith. We behold in you brave men whose valor we respected in war and whose friendship we value in peace. While we stood in opposing ranks to you a generation ago, we have long stood shoulder to shoulder with you in the work of upbuilding this great nation and in winning for her victories of peace. Our love for our common country, like yours, leaves no room for old enmities or the bitterness of vanished years.

In reading a recent life of General Lee in the "American Crises Biographers Series," I came across this expression: "The Civil War will not be treated as a rebellion, but as the great event in the history of our nation, which after forty years it is now recognized to have been." It is the second heroic period in our country's history, when the great forces which were displayed in the Revolution burst forth once more upon a mightier scale. The virtues of the patriot were emblazoned upon a grander field of fortitude and sacrifice. Once more the country cried aloud for men, and they came. They laid aside the plow and the ledger; the smith forgot his anvil, and the scholar his books. North and South alike, men pressed on to face the pestilence of the camps, the carnage of battles, the agony of hospitals, the misery of prisons—all for the divine satisfaction of a patriot's service. The Revolution was glorious, but the Civil War was sublime. Out of that stupendous tragedy an inspiration has come which shall ennoble and dignify the national life and purify its vital currents from corruption long after the last soldier's silvery locks have been laid beneath the sod.

War is hell indeed, but in times of war the great values of life shine forth and manhood is not counted in terms of money. There is a service above all pride, and a duty so high that, when the patriot performs it, like a beacon it lights men on to nobler ends.

One of my classmates at West Point has had the honor of commanding the Army of the Tennessee, Gen. O. O. Howard, your surviving commander, who adds to the distinction of this hour. As I look about me I recall Shiloh, Murfreesboro, Corinth, Perryville, Chickamauga, Atlanta, and Nashville. These are mighty names; but none stands more conspicuous on the roll of your fame than Vicksburg, the city which to-night honors your courage and patriotism as on other occasions she has honored the fortitude and heroism of her unfortunate defenders. The city of Vicksburg especially honors the distinguished son of a magnanimous father, who in the hour of victory could remember to spare the feelings of the vanquished.

How different the reception which Vicksburg now offers you from the efforts she made in your behalf in 1863! In that day it was only after great persuasion that we let you in at all. Instead of the grape for the cannon's mouth, she brings you of the grape for the soldier's mouth; instead of red blood, there is red wine; instead of rushing the canister, your old enemies find themselves "rushing the can." I hope General Howard and also the reverend bishops who honor us with their presence will pardon my allusions to the cheering cup; but the truth is, we are about to mount Mississippi upon the "water wagon," and allusions to alcoholic beverages will soon have only a historic significance in this community.

This is not your first meeting on Southern soil. In Raleigh, N. C., you met in 1865; but your visit to the South at that time was of a business nature, so that we may claim that this is your first visit to the South for purely social purposes, or perhaps I should say by invitation. We hope you will come again. If any of you have come on a "home seeker's ticket," then, as Hamlet said to his mother, "throw away the worse part of it" and make your home amongst us. You will find that we are indeed your fellow-citizens and that the same welcome awaits you that we gave with so much pleasure to our friends, Major Stanton and Captain Rigby. * * *

There is something very inspiring to me in the fact that Union and Confederate soldiers want to meet each other. I don't hear of any Franco-Prussian celebrations, and I fear there will be no Russo-Japanese reunions, at least for some time. But we meet on a different footing; we are fellow-citizens of the great republic. We are Anglo-Saxons; we love a brave man wherever we find him; and when we are not fighting him, we want him for a friend. These meetings signify that our country's wounds have knit together again, and that new flesh has grown where the cancer was cut out. Our asperities have gone and a new patriotism has taken their place—a patriotism not bounded by State or sectional lines, but big enough to cover the whole country; a patriotism that is bounded on the north by Alaska and on the south by the Philippines, and on which the sun never sets.

Out in the park, on the monument which the State of Pennsylvania has erected to her valiant sons, there stands this inscription: "Here brothers fought for their principles, here heroes died for their country, and a united people will forever cherish the precious legacy of their noble manhood."

When men love their country and lay down their lives for her under conviction of duty, no shaft can be too high to do them honor, no bronze too splendid to proclaim their memory.

ACCEPTED CRITICISM ABOUT THE VETERAN.—Col. I. D. Walker, Past National Commander Union Ex-Prisoners of War at Pittsburg, Pa., in remitting his subscription to the VETERAN, writes: "It is a pleasure to me to note the prosperous condition your periodical exhibits. The only criticism I have to make is that there is not enough of personal experiences of the boys from your side, and obituary notices are too lengthy, although I read them all; in fact, I read every word from cover to cover, not forgetting all of the advertisements."

FRED GRANT AS A BOY WITH THE ARMY.

[Supplemental to his address on the Vicksburg campaign before the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, as reported in the December VETERAN, Gen. Fred D. Grant gave his experiences.]

Having referred thus briefly to the campaign and siege of Vicksburg as shown in the official records of the Civil War, I now venture to recall my memories of this wonderful campaign as I, a boy of twelve years old, saw it.

I have always appreciated the good fortune which enabled me to be with my father and his able lieutenants in the field during our great struggle for national existence and to see for myself the men and the events that made so famous the chapters of our history for the years from 1861 to 1865.

In March, 1863, while I was at school at Covington, Ky., my father gave his consent to my joining him at Young's Point, near Vicksburg. Going to Memphis with my mother, my sister, and brothers, I took the first boat down the river, being stimulated to haste by my desire to possess myself of a beautiful Indian pony which Colonel Bowers, of father's staff, had provided especially for me.

On boarding the boat at Memphis I was warned that if we were attacked on the way I must get under cover on the west side of the boat; and so when we neared Greenville, at which point our boats had been several times attacked, and the alarm was given of a hostile force on shore, I hastened to follow the advice and climbed into the center of a coil of rope, deeming it a sure refuge. We passed in safety, however, without any firing except from our own vessel; but my notions of safety were rudely dispelled by an officer of the boat, who on discovering my retreat said: "See here, sonny, if the Rebs had fired at us and hit our boilers, you would have gone straight up through the hurricane deck, and there would not have been a piece of you left to send home to your mamma."

Arriving at Young's Point, I found my father's headquarters on a steamboat at the levee. I also found my precious pony, had him saddled and bridled immediately, and joined my father on a trip of inspection to the canal. Here he found that the enemy was throwing up fortifications on the opposite side of the river which so commanded the canal that its use would be impracticable. We returned to headquarters, stopping for consultation with several generals on the way. Here I first saw General Sherman, for whom my father had such unbounded admiration. Later father went on board Admiral Porter's flag ship, the Benton, for a consultation with his naval coadjutor. I accompanied him; but on board the admiral, doubtless remembering the old saying that "little pitchers have long ears," called a man to show me all over the ship—everywhere but in the cabin. Not then appreciating the reasons for this special courtesy, I enjoyed my explorations very much. It was during my absence that my father proposed the passage of the Vicksburg batteries.

Shortly after this visit my father and Admiral Porter made a trip up the Yazoo, taking me with them; but while they went up with the gunboats and exchanged some shots with the fortifications at Haine's Bluff I was compelled to remain on board of a transport out of range. With Captain Bruce I ventured to go ashore, but we drew marked attentions from the enemy and had to retreat to the steamer. This transport had on its hurricane deck a machine gun, a new invention, which it was determined to test when General Grant returned to the boat. One of the cartridges exploded, and a fragment of the shell struck my father on the thumb, making a painful wound. About this time headquarters were changed to Milliken's Bend, and preparations were made for passing the Confederate batteries at Vicksburg.

The transports were protected by bales of hay packed around the boilers; calls were made for volunteers to man the boats, and the troops were reviewed. The call for boat crews was most eagerly responded to, especially by the men of General Logan's Division. Some of the men advanced the most extraordinary reasons for being selected for the service, and their courage and persistency seemed truly marvelous to me.

On the 16th of April, 1863, General Grant and Admiral Porter held a final consultation. About ten o'clock that night all lights were put out, and the fleet started down the river. Suddenly a rocket went up from the shore, a cannon blazed forth from Warrenton, and a shot passed directly in front of our boat. We stopped; a lurid flame sprang up from a house at DeSoto, opposite Vicksburg, then another on the river front, and soon fires were burning along the whole front of the city, and the river was lighted up as if by sunlight. Six gunboats looking like great big black turtles, followed by three fragile transports, moved directly toward the Confederate batteries, which now opened fire. The Benton and the other gunboats responded and, steaming up near the city, sent shot and shell pouring into Vicksburg. The transports kept over toward the Louisiana shore, and one—the Henry Clay—was set on fire by a red-hot shot, and burned to the water's edge. The people of Vicksburg lined the hills and manifested great excitement. On board our boat I stood by my father on the hurricane deck. He was quietly smoking, but an intense light shone in his eyes. The scene is as vivid in my mind to-night as it was then to my eyes, and will remain with me always.

As soon as our fleet passed the batteries and firing had ceased, father's boat started back to Milliken's Bend. The first step of the great campaign had been successfully accomplished.

A few days later I accompanied my father, with eight officers of his staff and an escort of twenty cavalymen, on a ride of thirty miles to visit McClernand at New Carthage. It was a hard day's journey, but it was enlivened with incidents and accidents of a humorous character. At the crossing of a slough where there was but a narrow bridge my father made one of his daring leaps, putting his horse at the opposite bank, which he just managed to reach. The rest of us preferred to wait our turn at crossing the bridge, over which a wagon train was slowly passing, a detour which afforded amusement, as a balky mule team gave Colonel Rawlins an admirable opportunity to display a talent which he exhibited on occasions—that of ornamental profanity. Farther along the road, on a really more favorable opportunity to exhibit this accomplishment, the Colonel took us all completely by surprise. Forging a stream, his horse lay down under him and began to roll; but this elicited no outburst from the Colonel, who quietly made his way to shore and forbade any interference with the animal's enjoyment. We passed the night at New Carthage, father spending the time conversing with McClernand.

The following day we returned to Milliken's Bend. From there father moved to the head of the army at Hard Times, where the problem presented itself of getting the troops across the river.

On the 29th of April our gunboats moved down to Grand Gulf, and engaged the enemy's batteries for about five hours. Father was on board a little tug which steamed about amid the fleet. I kept close to him and saw all that was going on. After a trip to the Louisiana shore, we went on board the Benton; and as we entered the porthole, I was sickened with the scenes of carnage. Admiral Porter had been struck on the head with a fragment of shell, and his face showed the agony he was in; but he planned a renewal of the conflict that night in order to permit our transports to run past the Confederate batteries. During this interview with the Admiral he asked me if I wanted to stay with him, and suggested that I might fill the place of a gunner he had lost. The scene around me dampened my enthusiasm for naval glory, so I replied: "I do not believe that papa would allow me to serve in the navy."

Our troops now moved down the western bank of the Mississippi to Disharoon's plantation, where the negroes turned out to welcome us with great rejoicing, deeming us the messengers of the Lord bringing them freedom.

The following day, April 30, we went on board the General Price, formerly a Confederate ram, and moved down to where Bruinsburg had stood. Now not a house was to be seen. Fire had destroyed the whole town. The crossing of the troops continued vigorously; and tired of watching them, I fell asleep on deck. Awaking the next morning, I found my father had gone to the front, and the sound of cannon announced the progress of a battle.

Gen. Lorenzo Thomas told me that father had given strict orders that I should not be allowed to go on shore; but he finally permitted me to join a party in chasing a rabbit on the land, and I took advantage of that permission to push my investigations over the hills. I fell in with a wagon train and secured a ride on a mule; and after going some distance in that way, I joined a battery of artillery on its way to the front, and later followed a passing regiment, the 7th Missouri, which was soon in battle. Presently my father appeared. My guilty conscience so troubled me that I hid from his sight behind a tree.

Within a short time a mighty shout announced the victory of our troops, and then the horrors of a battlefield were brought vividly before me. I joined a detachment which was collecting the dead for burial, but sickened at the sights. I made my way, with another detachment which was gathering the wounded, to a log house which had been appropriated for a hospital. Here the scenes were so terrible that I became faint and ill, and, making my way to a tree, sat down, the most woe-begone twelve-year-old lad in America.

Soon an approaching horseman hailed me with a shout: "Why, hello; is that really you?" The horseman was an orderly from my father's escort; and dismounting, he proceeded to make me comfortable, putting down his saddle for a pillow, and advising me to go to sleep. This I did, but my sleep was broken by dreams of the horrors I had witnessed. Suddenly I heard the orderly cry out: "Look here; your father has come." About fifty yards off sat my father drinking coffee from a tin cup. I went to him, and was greeted with an exclamation of surprise, as he supposed I was still on board the boat. In after years he often told the story of my following him on the battlefield of Port Gibson with more interest and satisfaction than he manifested to me at that time.

A report of there being an abandoned house half a mile away led my father to move to it for the night. There we found a good dinner on the table that had been left by the rightful owners. After partaking thereof, I lay down on the floor to sleep, and would have had a restful night but for the attentions of a dog, which, having lost his master, ran around in search of him, and kept me awake, dreading an attack, which fortunately did not occur.

The next morning the burning question was that of transportation. Horses were scarce, but I succeeded in getting a mount. Two enormous white artillery horses had been captured the day before. I secured one of them and Mr. C. A. Dana, Assistant Secretary of War, the other. Mr. Dana, however, had the advantage of riding the horse with the saddle and bridle. I had to content myself with improvising harness made of a clothesline and the tree of a sidesaddle without stirrups. The sight of a small boy on the big white horse made some sport on the road for the soldiers I passed or those who passed me.

At Port Gibson General Logan came to see father, who complimented him highly on his operations of the previous day. On leaving, General Logan turned to me and said: "Come, my boy, and I will show you the prettiest fight you will ever see." We went down to the lower suspension bridge to secure the crossing, as my father had ordered. I returned to Port Gibson; and finding that my father had left, I followed the troops which were crossing the bayou. I rode on quite a distance, and then, stopping at a house where some officers were sleeping on a porch, I crawled in for a nap between two of them. They awoke and "said things;" but when I mentioned my name, Colonel (afterwards General) Sanborn welcomed me kindly and loaned me part of his overcoat for a pillow. Becoming very cold toward dawn, I went indoors, found a bed with two occupants, and crept in between them. I slept well, but by daylight I found that my bedfellows were two large negroes. Somehow I had thought that the room seemed close.

It was now the 3d of May, and I found my father at the North Fork, watching the crossing of the troops. Finding that I was lame from the falling of my horse the day before, father, who was ever kind and thoughtful, insisted that I should take his mount, a horse belonging to Gen. A. J. Smith. All of father's horses were on the other side of the Mississippi.

We moved toward Hankinson's Ferry. At the forks of the road it became necessary for Logan to clear away a body of the enemy's troops. With slight loss and the capture of some prisoners, this was accomplished, and we moved into Grand Gulf. Here we found our old friend, the Benton, and the gallant admiral, who welcomed me most cordially. He gave father a bundle of dispatches, including one from General Banks, who said that he could not reach Port Hudson as soon as he had expected, and that he would have fewer troops than he had counted upon. My father immediately began to write dispatches, a task at which he continued until two o'clock in the morning, when he borrowed a change of linen, ordered his horse, and started for McPherson's quarters. The next day Colonel Lagow, in whose charge I had been left, started on after father, and we overtook him at Rocky Springs. Near here General Sherman, with the Fifteenth Corps, joined us, and he and father had some long conversations.

From the 7th to the 12th of May General Grant was constantly in communication with Sherman, McPherson, and McClelland, riding around from one to the other. This made his headquarters so uncomfortable and his mess so irregular that I, for one, did not propose to put up with such living, and I took my meals with the soldiers, who used to do a little foraging and thereby set an infinitely better table than their commanding general had, which at this time was the worst I ever saw.

On the 12th of May the Union army was pushed forward, and at Fourteen Mile Creek Osterhaus had a skirmish to clear the road. We heard the sounds of battle away off to the right, and later we learned that McPherson had won the day at Raymond.

I had struck up a friendly acquaintance with one of the orderlies called "Pony." At Fourteen Mile Creek he and I rode out on an inspection trip; and seeing ten or twelve horses tied up in front of a house, we conceived the idea of capturing the mounts and possibly the riders also, who were inside the house. Not until we had gone too far to retreat did the idea occur to us that the would-be captors might possibly become the captured. It was with great relief that we saw a man wearing a blue uniform come out of the house, and we then discovered that the party we had proposed to capture was a detachment of Sherman's signal corps. Later on, trying to get back within our lines, we had some difficulty in convincing the pickets that we were entitled to pass.

The next day as I went over the battlefield of Raymond I saw again the horrors of war, the wounded and the unburied dead.

We spent the night at Raymond, and then started for Jackson, the capital of Mississippi. While passing through a dense piece of woods on the way the enemy's sharpshooters opened fire on us. One of the staff shouted to my father that they were firing at him. His answer was to turn his horse and dash into the woods in the direction whence the bullets were coming. Colonels Wilson and Lagow, I, the orderlies, and the escort followed, and in skirmishing fashion we advanced till we came to a large house, where we halted. Sherman's Corps now came up, and McPherson was already engaged. Generals Grant and Sherman were on the porch of the house when our line was broken by artillery fire, and our men began a retreat. The two generals immediately mounted, rode among the men, and re-formed the lines. Meanwhile Tuttle's Division had passed through the dense woods, and had captured the enemy's breastworks, wheeled to the left, and swept the enemy's line of intrenchments. Father accompanied them.

Thinking the battle was ended, I rode off toward the Statehouse, where the Confederate troops passed me in their retreat. Though I wore a blue uniform, I was so splashed with mud and looked generally so unattractive that the Confederates paid no attention to me. I have since realized that even had I been captured it would not have ended the war.

At this time I saw a mounted officer with a Union flag advancing toward the capitol. I followed him into the building and entered the Governor's room, which had been hastily abandoned. Finding what I supposed to be the Governor's pipe on the table, I confiscated it, primarily and ostensibly for the national service, but secondarily and actually for my own private and individual use. It had the advantage of being still loaded and lighted. Returning to the street, I saw the officer whom I had followed in the act of raising the Union flag over the building. He proved to be Col. Cornelius Cadle.

Father and his staff, advancing at the head of the army, soon reached the Statehouse, when I joined them and went with them to the Bowen House, the best hotel in Jackson, where we took the rooms in which Gen. Joseph E. Johnston had slept the night before.

In Jackson there was a shed containing two thousand bales of cotton marked C. S. A. Father ordered its destruction, and in about two minutes a column of flame arose that seemed a hundred yards high. The destruction of this valuable property, with some factories, impaired the usefulness of Jackson as a military depot for the enemy. While here we captured an important prisoner who was carrying dispatches from Johnston to Pemberton. The information contained in these dispatches caused some activity at headquarters, and the next day, May 15, my father started off in the direction of Vicksburg.

That night, while sleeping in the room with my father at Clinton, I was awakened by a great knocking. Colonel Lagow announced the arrival of a messenger from McPherson, and father seemed surprised at the news he received. He gave orders for an early start in the morning, went back to bed, and was soon sleeping quietly again. After a light breakfast before daybreak, we moved rapidly to the front, General Grant keeping well ahead of the rest of us. At Champion's farm we came upon the enemy, and were soon in the midst of terrific firing. The staff officers were dispatched to various points, and very soon father and I were left alone. Our line broke and was falling back when father moved forward, rallied the men, and passed over from Hovey's to Crocker's Division, putting the latter into action. There were now fifteen thousand men in our line, which was about three miles long, and the battle raged fiercely along its whole extent. McPherson, dressed in full uniform, was mounted on a beautiful black horse. "Fighting Jack" Logan, also in full uniform, was mounted on a white horse; and as they passed to and fro, exposing themselves recklessly, they made a most "superb" picture.

General Grant rode to all parts of the field, giving orders to the generals and dispatching his staff in all directions. Hovey was sustaining the heaviest part of the encounter. Suddenly hearty cheering was heard on the right of the line, and father moved over in that direction, to find about three thousand prisoners taken with eighteen cannon.

Retracing our steps over the road which we had passed over earlier in the day, we found it choked with dead and wounded, so that we had to pick our way to avoid trampling on them. Seeing an advancing body of troops, Colonel Lagow was sent forward to ascertain who they were. They proved to be McClernand's Corps, coming up too late to take part or, worse luck, too late to capture Pemberton's army, and thus render unnecessary the ensuing siege of Vicksburg.

After the battle of Champion's Hill, while riding toward Edwards Station, father suddenly turned back, and I went on into a house filled with Confederate wounded. They were not feeling very friendly toward the Yankees, and they threatened to kill me. Of course I decided not to intrude, and I passed on. Farther down the road some of our own men who did not know me attempted to take me prisoner. Soon an old soldier recognized me and called for "three cheers for young Grant," which were given with a will, and I began to feel more comfortable. About midnight I returned to the field, and reached a house in which I found my father and several of his staff officers, most of whom were feeling greatly elated over their victory. I slept in the room with my father that night.

The next morning we made an early start, and moved toward Big Black River. When we halted near the railway bridge, General Grant and his staff occupied the porch of a fine plantation house to investigate some matters of high military importance—the procuring of a mess of squabs and other forage. Apparently the enemy thought as much of squabs as we did, for they opened fire from some seventeen or eighteen guns, and made our neighborhood so hot that I soon followed "Pony's" example and beat a retreat. (It is wrong to steal pigeons, anyway.)

Our troops were now moving on the enemy's line at a double-quick, and I became enthused with the spirit of the occasion, galloped across a cotton field, and went over the enemy's works with our men. Following the retreating Confederates to the Big Black, I was watching some of them swim the river, when a sharpshooter on the opposite bank fired at me and hit me in the leg. The wound was slight, but very painful, and I suppose I was very pale, for Colonel Lagow came dashing up and asked what was the matter. I promptly said: "I am killed." Perhaps because I was a boy he presumed to doubt my word, and said, "Move your toes," which I did with success, upon which he recommended our hasty retreat. This was accomplished in good order.

After the capture of the fortifications, May 17, our army bridged the Big Black and crossed the next day. We stopped at a house to get a drink of water, when the Confederate proprietress expressed her opinion scornfully that we could never take Vicksburg, she judging from the handful of troops she then saw—the mere head of the column. General Grant replied that he would capture Vicksburg if it took thirty years to do so; and just then the main body of troops began to rise over the crest of the hill, when the lady retired, much chagrined.

We reached the summit of Walnut Hills, whence we could see the Mississippi and Chickasaw Bayou, where Sherman had fought in December. Sherman was greatly elated over the success of the present campaign, and so expressed himself enthusiastically. Several outworks were captured that day. On the 19th father spent much of his time with McClelland on the extreme left. He feared lest Pemberton might make his escape through this thinly guarded part of our line. The 20th and 21st were spent in skirmishing and in advancing our lines as much as possible. On the 22d the great assault was made upon the fortifications early in the day. Generals Grant and Logan had a narrow escape from a shell which was fired directly down a ravine which they had just entered. They were unhurt, however, but were covered with yellow dirt thrown up by the explosion. On this day I saw a sight that will probably never again be witnessed in this country—an artillery battle extending over seven miles in length. Beneath the smoke of this cannonade the Army of the Tennessee could be seen moving to the assault under the enemy's lines, which became a sheet of fire from the forts and rifle pits. At one point our flag was planted right at the base of the enemy's parapet.

An incident of this day's work was illustrative of youthful heroism and of my father's tender nature. A small boy, with blood streaming from a wound in his leg, came running up to where father and Sherman stood and reported that his regiment was out of ammunition. Sherman was directing some attention to be paid to his wound, when the little fellow, finding himself fainting from loss of blood, gasped out "caliber 56" as he was carried off to the rear. At this moment I observed that my father's eyes were filled with tears.

A wound in the leg which I had received early in the campaign now began to trouble me very much; and under Dr. Hewitt's expressed fears of having to amputate my leg, I remained much at headquarters. Because of this I saw a great deal of my father's methods, his marvelous attention to detail, and his cool self-possession. I witnessed also the devotion of his men to him and the enthusiasm with which they greeted the "Old Man," as they called him, when he passed along the lines. He was a splendid horseman, and visited many points of his army every day. * * *

General Grant always regarded McPherson as the most promising officer of his age in the army, and on his death father said that he had lost one of his best friends and the country one of its ablest defenders. McPherson's troops loved him, and one needs hear but once the cheers given by the Army of the Tennessee wherever his name is still cherished. His very taking off was illustrative of the man. When ordered to surrender before Atlanta, he courteously lifted his hat, bowed low, wheeled his horse, and dashed into the woods. But the volley that instantly followed was but too well aimed, and he fell. To me he was particularly kind, and I grieved deeply over his death.

Among the division commanders whom I was fortunate enough to see upon the field of battle were Generals Logan, Steele, John E. Smith, Crocker, A. J. Smith, Tuttle, Osterhaus, Blair, Ransom, and Hovey. I heard my father say that with such officers an army must be irresistible. There were others besides those I have mentioned whose names and memories are alike honored for their services in defense of their country.

I have referred before to General Logan's magnificent personality, dash, and courage. I was several times permitted to accompany him on the field of battle, and my admiration and enthusiasm, young and untrained as they were, were always kindled by his magnificent deeds.

The siege of Vicksburg continued after the assaults of the 22d of May without much excitement except such as was caused by reports that Johnston was about to attack our rear. General Grant, however, made a personal inspection trip, upon which I accompanied him, back to the Big Black, and found everything secure and well guarded under the watchful care of General Sherman. While on this trip I saw the enlisting of contrabands in the new regiments, and was not a little amused to see how the darkies arose to the importance of the occasion. One big specimen of African manhood on being asked to join a company pulled off his old hat, scratched his head, shuffled his feet, and said in a puzzled tone, pointing to General Grant and a group of his staff: "Some ob dem udder gen'als wants me, and wid dem all after me it's hard to tell which comp'ny to jine."

An incident which occurred during the siege interested me greatly. Being with the skirmish line of the 8th Missouri, I saw an excited little group of soldiers at one point, and made haste to ascertain the cause. One of a party of Northern visitors had expressed a desire to take home with him a souvenir of the war. A shot through his hat was thought to be a good idea, and the 8th Missouri boys, being perfectly well satisfied that the "Johnnies" were anxious to send North as many souvenirs of their skill as possible, told him that all he had to do was to hold his hat above the works and he would be immediately accommodated. But, forgetting to put a ramrod under the hat, he got a bullet not only through his hat, but also through his hand. Our boys consoled themselves with the thought that he got a real souvenir instead of the make-believe one he sought.

Finding from the Vicksburg newspaper that General Grant received every day that there was some communication going on between our respective lines, he at first sought to find out the channel and then to close it up. The medium was found to be between the Missouri troops on each side and was connected with a little trade of coffee, etc., for tobacco, mingled with news from besiegers and besieged. Later, finding that the information could be made useful, the illicit "press association" was allowed to continue its work. On one occasion, while we were out on the line with Gen. A. J. Smith, a flag of truce appeared, which General Smith advanced to receive, taking with him Colonel Lagow and myself. The Confederate officers whom we met were General Bowen, Colonel Montgomery, and another. Some of our guns, including those of the fleet, continuing to fire, our officers took steps to have them stop; but Colonel Montgomery begged them not to interfere, assuring us that our fire did little or no harm. Asked if we had not inflicted great damage inside the city, he acknowledged that during the previous week we had actually killed a cow. Later on, when we entered the city, we suspected that Colonel Montgomery had been guilty of a little boasting.

The siege went on. Our parallels slowly but surely approached the doomed city. Deserters came in more frequently and reported the desperate condition of the garrison. Rumors also came to us that Johnston was going to make a desperate endeavor to relieve Pemberton. These led to another rumor that our troops would celebrate the Fourth of July by a grand storming of the works. Doubtless this rumor found its way into the beleaguered city, for on the 3d of July a flag of truce was reported.

General Grant betrayed no excitement, but in the afternoon he rode out with his staff to a point opposite Fort Hill, I accompanying them. Here our group was joined by Generals McPherson, Logan, A. J. Smith, and others. Soon a white flag appeared over the enemy's works, and a party of Confederates was seen approaching. Firing ceased, and soon under an old apple tree General Grant met his opponent. The other officers separated into groups and conversed, while the works on both sides were lined with soldiers.

The consultation of the commanding generals lasted a short while, and presently both parties retired to their own quarters. Father was immediately joined by the largest assemblage of general officers which I had ever seen—the heroes of the most brilliant campaign and siege recorded in the history of the world deciding upon and settling the fate of their foes. They had conquered and taken into their power the largest number of men, the greatest number of war materials and spoils ever surrendered in battle.

After consultation, General Grant dispatched a note to the defender of Vicksburg, and the group of officers dispersed. I remained in the tent, sitting on my little cot and feeling restless, but scarcely knowing why. Father sat at his table writing. Presently a messenger handed father a note. He opened it, gave a sigh of relief, and said calmly: "Vicksburg has surrendered." I was thus the first to hear the news officially announced of the fall of the Gibraltar of America, and, filled with enthusiasm, I ran out to spread the glad tidings. Officers rapidly assembled, and there was a general rejoicing.

The next day, the glorious Fourth, as father was starting for the front on the Jackson road, the booming of guns was heard apparently on our right. He looked vexed, and was about to order the arrest of General Steele, whom he supposed to be responsible, saying that he "ought to know better than to allow any triumphing over our conquered countrymen," when Steele himself rode up, the blame was definitely located on our left, and the salutes were stopped. Soon after the Confederates were seen filing out of their works and stacking their arms—21,600 brave men surrendered 172 cannon and 60,000 muskets to the conquering but lenient Army of the Tennessee.

The arms being given up, the troops passed back into the city, and General Grant, at the head of Logan's Division, moved forward to take possession. His reception by General Pemberton was cold. With a group of Confederate officers, Pemberton was seated on the porch of a large house; but when father expressed a desire for a glass of water, he was allowed to hunt for it in the kitchen. This reception of the man who would not allow his men to celebrate their victory was deeply resented by the members of General Grant's staff; but father himself was satisfied with his success in capturing Vicksburg, and manifested no resentment. The Confederate officers who thus received him appreciated gratefully later on the clemency they experienced at the fall of Vicksburg, and expressed this appreciation in the most touching manner during General Grant's last illness, at the time of his funeral, and at the dedication of his tomb.

Passing through the city, where the Union flag had already been hoisted over the courthouse, General Grant went on board the Benton, where Admiral Porter congratulated him upon the victory. The next day he established headquarters at the house of a Mr. Lum, who soon became his warm friend, and during my father's last illness some of the most beautiful letters received by us were from members of this charming Vicksburg family, Mr. Lum's.

My connection with the army was now ended for a while. From the result of exposure I had contracted an illness which necessitated my withdrawal into civilian life again, and on the 8th of July I was sent home to recuperate. I did not rejoin my father until after the battle of Chattanooga.

I remember with the utmost interest my life in camp and with deepest affection the men whom I met in the army, among whom was General Grenville M. Dodge, who honors us with his presence here to-night, being always interested in and loyal to our beloved veterans of the Civil War, and who is always, I am most proud to say, my honored and truly kind friend, as he was the friend of my father and mother during their lives.

Much of my time was spent among the private soldiers, who were never too tired or too worn out to comfort and pet the boy of thirteen, the son of the "Old Man." Young as I then was, my camp life was of such nature (I saw so much of the hardships, the self-denials, the sufferings and labors of both privates and officers) that my proudest moments are when I am associating with the old warriors, the veteran comrades of my father, like those of the Army of the Tennessee.

THE BARTOW ARTILLERY—FIRST FOR THE WAR

BY CAPT. BENSON W. ROBERTS, TYLER, TEX.

On the 12th of May, 1861, in the little town of Griffin, Ga., while the writer was a cadet at the Kentucky Military Institute, near Frankfort, Ky., a company of artillery was raised, and without his knowledge he was unanimously elected captain; and when the organization was completed, the subject came up: "How long should the enlistment be?" It was decided for the entire war, long or short. Upon the refusal of the Governor of Georgia to receive the company the Bartow Artillery (named in honor of Gen. Francis P. Bartow, of Savannah, Ga., who was killed in the first battle of Manassas, on the 21st of July, 1861), I went to Richmond, Va., and tendered the company's services direct to President Jefferson Davis. He at first hesitated to receive us, saying: "You should come through the Governor of your State." State rights was one of the main principles for which we were going to war. I explained to President Davis that I had offered our services to Gov. Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia, but that he peremptorily refused to receive us, for the reason that I had quit the Georgia Military Institute at Marietta, Ga., and gone to the Kentucky Military Institute, near Frankfort, Ky., to finish my military studies, telling me to "go to Governor Magoffin, of Kentucky, for your commission," etc. The President replied: "Then we will take you and your boys." We were then mustered into the Confederate service without State authority, and therefore became the same as Confederate regulars. If there was a similar organization in manner or term of service at that early stage of the war, I know nothing of it.

BENSON W. ROBERTS.

Our enlistment was solely a patriotic one, of course. There was no specter of a "conscript law" on the Southern horizon at that time. I claim that the Bartow Artillery of Griffin, Ga., is entitled to the honor of being the first company enlisting at the beginning for the entire war. Of the original one hundred and twenty-six men, there are only two of us—A. A. Wright, of Griffin, Ga., and myself—living at this time. The silk flag given the company by Mrs. Bartow has never been in the hands of the enemy to this day.

DARING METHOD OF DESTROYING ENEMY'S SHIP.

BY CHARLES DORAN.

The late Capt. Beverley Kennon, formerly of the Confederate navy and the inventor of the disappearing gun for coast defense batteries, won for himself an enviable reputation for bravery and daring during the Civil War. In the battle of Mobile Bay Captain Kennon commanded a little wooden side-wheel river steamer, the Governor Moore; and being closely pursued by one of the enemy's vessels, the Varuna, he attempted to run his steamer close in shore, hoping if he could get into shallow water to effect his escape, as the pursuing vessel was a heavy draught boat and would not run the risk of getting aground by following him. The captain of the Varuna, suspecting what the Confederate steamer was up to, changed his course, and by skillful maneuvering succeeded in getting his vessel across the bows of the Governor Moore, and with his broadside battery poured into her such a terrific fire that she was soon discovered to be sinking.

Captain Kennon when he saw that his vessel was doomed rushed forward, determined to get a parting shot at the enemy from his bow gun. Reaching the forecandle, he found that the entire gun's crew had been either killed or wounded and the piece struck several times, the carriage being thrown off its slide with the rear transom resting against the heel of the foremast. Finding it impossible to depress the gun enough in the crippled condition of its carriage to rake his enemy, who by this time was very close aboard him, with her sides too high out of the water to let him see on her decks, and not having the men nor the time to mount the piece properly, Kennon pointed the gun through his own deck, and at a point six feet inside the knightheads and a little to the port of the heel of the bowsprit, and fired. The shot passed through his own deck and went crashing into the enemy's sides a little below her water line. A second shot was then fired in like manner, when the smoke becoming too thick to allow Captain Kennon to see the Varuna, he ceased firing.

When the smoke had cleared so the enemy's position could be made out, the commander of the Governor Moore found that the two vessels were not over ten feet apart and the Varuna slowly sinking by the stern.

The Varuna continued to fire, and succeeded in turning her head inshore and sank just as she was within a few yards of the beach. The Governor Moore soon after went down, carrying with her nearly her entire crew. The captains of both vessels were saved, and neither ship struck her colors. It is perhaps one of the few instances in which both vessels engaged in battle against each other were sunk, and certainly the first wherein the captain of a vessel fired through his own ship and sunk that of his enemy.

THE V. M. I. CADETS AT NEW MARKET, VA.

BY REV. GILES B. COOKE, MATHEWS C. H., VA.

For the benefit of your readers I will give a short account of the capture by the V. M. I. Cadets of Von Kleiser's Battery, consisting of four brass Napoleon guns and two twelve-pounder howitzers.

General Sigel, of the Federal army, entered the Valley of Virginia with a large force in the spring of 1864 and advanced upon Staunton. He was met by General Breckinridge, in command of three thousand men, on the 15th of May at New Market, and after a hard fight was defeated and driven from the field. The cadet battalion of four companies, numbering two hundred and ninety-four, commanded by Col. Scott Shipp, formed a part of Breckinridge's command, and contributed largely to the defeat of Sigel.

Maj. Peter J. Otey, in an address on the battle of New Market, says of the gallant charge of the cadets in Von Kleiser's Battery: "Down the hill the cadets move in perfect alignment; their step is to martial music. The enemy stands transfixed in admiration and amazement. Who are they? Regulars? What do I see? The V. M. I. boys—they pause—front rank kneels and a volley is fired into the breasts of the Federal line. 'Forward, double time!' Do they falter? The belching of cannon makes the atmosphere hazy. Now the Federal reserve pours its volley into them. Do they stop? They do not flinch. They have been trained to obey orders, and forward was the order. What a sight! Breckinridge's eyes flashed fire as he saw these boys pit themselves against the seasoned veterans of Sigel. They pierce the center, driving everything before them, and Breckinridge exclaimed: 'Glorious! Grand! Superb!' The day is saved! The gallant three hundred at Thermopylae, the charge of the immortal six hundred at Balaklava furnished no more brilliant record of heroism than the charge of the V. M. I. cadets at New Market."

Now for the testimony of one on the Federal side who witnessed the charge. Capt. Franklin E. Town, of the United States Signal Corps, says: "Standing on the crest of the hill, after a short time I observed a line forming at its foot which seemed like a regiment in extent. It looked so natty or smart in appearance as instantly to suggest our own pet regiment—the 7th, of New York City. We were able to identify them as the battalion of the V. M. I. cadets, and a more soldierly corps never faced an enemy. They came on steadily without any sign of faltering. I saw here and there some fall out of line and lay where they fell, but their comrades closed up the gaps and passed on. Their pace increased to double time, and at last the charge and up to the guns, which they surrounded and captured. As a military spectacle it was most beautiful, and as a deed of war it was most grand. I do not believe that the history of wars contains a record of a deed more chivalrous, more heroic, more daring, or more honorable than the charge of these boys to a victory of which seasoned veterans might well boast."

Whilst our hearts thrill with pride as we dwell upon the daring and prowess of these boys as exhibited in capturing this battery, we are yet saddened at the thought of the victory so dearly bought, in the loss of so many noble youths—fifty-four killed and wounded. Among the wounded was Private G. T. Garnett, of Company D, from Mathews County, who after the war was Commonwealth's Attorney for twelve years, then County Judge of Mathews and Middlesex Counties for eighteen years and Judge of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit for two years. He also represented Mathews and Gloucester Counties in the Constitutional Convention. Although I was not of the company and was not in the battle of New Market, yet I feel a deep interest in the part taken by the Cadet Corps, being an ex-cadet of the V. M. I. and a classmate of three of the cadets who took part in the battle—viz., Col. Scott Shipp, Surgeon George Ross, and Capt. A. Govan Hill.

A monument in memory of the cadets who were killed in the battle of New Market has been erected on the campus of the V. M. I. The statue of a beautiful girl seated on the monument, with downcast eyes, mourning over the slain in battle, is said to have been designed, executed, and donated by that eminent sculptor, Sir M. J. Ezekiel, who as a private in Company C was in the charge at the battle of New Market.

BRIG. GEN. JOHN LEROY LOGAN.

BY MRS. EUNICE L. ARNOLD, SECRETARY N. E. SNIPES CHAPTER, U. D. C., GUNNISON, MISS.

Gen. J. L. Logan was born at Greenwood, Abbeville, S. C., February 14, 1833. He was the oldest son of Tyler Logan, of that place. When five years of age, his father moved to Abbeville, Miss., where he was reared and educated. After becoming of age, he went to Camden, Ark., where he was married to Mary Jane Danierth October 12, 1854. He resided in Camden until the war began, in 1861.

He went out with the first volunteers of Arkansas as captain of Company A, in the 11th Arkansas Regiment. He was captured in a fight at Island No. 10 April 7, 1862, and was sent a prisoner to Johnson's Island, where he was kept several months. After being exchanged he was made colonel of his regiment, and was then sent to Holly Springs, Miss., where he remained a short time, and from there was sent to Port Hudson, La. When the siege began at Port Hudson, May 23, 1863, his command was mounted and sent to operate outside, where he was in several engagements. After this he returned to Arkansas, and was in battle near Princeton.

Just before the close of the war he was made brigadier general. In 1869 he moved to New Orleans, La., where he died of yellow fever in 1871.

General Logan was a Mason and a devout Christian gentleman, beloved by all who knew him, soldiers and citizens. He was noted for his hospitality and honorable, upright disposition and integrity. Such were the life and character of one who left an indelible impression for all that is good and noble and brave on those who knew him personally.

CAPT. W. G. PETER EXECUTED AT FRANKLIN.

[The picture of Captain Peter was received too late for sketch in December VETERAN, page 551.]

The father of Captain Peter was a major of militia in the United States service at the Bladenburg fight, in 1814, when Cockburn's fleet was in the Chesapeake and also up the Potomac. I have seen a painting of the fight (the forces engaged at Bladenburg) just before the British entered Washington City hanging on the wall in Maj. George Peter's home. Walter G. Peter was the youngest son and child. His father was married three times and was quite advanced in life, while W. G. Peter was not more than twenty-two or twenty-three years old at the time of his father's death, in 1860.

CAPT. W. G. PETER.

Supplemental to the foregoing, notes are used from Mr. M. R. Tunno, of Savannah, Ga., who wrote some months ago from Savannah, Ga., in reference to the article in the August number on the capture and execution of Colonel Orton and Lieutenant Peter at Franklin, and mentions an error in the account, saying: "When Colonel Orton joined our army, he did so under the name of Williams, and I think as W. O. Williams. I knew him well at Columbus, Ky., and Corinth, Miss. At both places he commanded a battery of field guns. The date at which he changed his name to that of Orton I know not, but I do know that he was Captain Williams in the early part of the war."

COTTON IS STILL KING.—Latham, Alexander & Co., of New York, a Southern banking firm of credit to the country, in their 1907 report of the cotton movement say: "The last three crops have aggregated 38,427,457 bales, or an average of 12,809,000 bales per year." This cotton was sold at an average price of 10.50 cents per pound. As a result the farmers of the South are mostly out of debt and in good condition. A brief analysis of this report shows that the South has produced in these three years, estimating the bales at five hundred pounds each, the prodigious sum of $2,117,449,492 worth of cotton. Add to this the product of iron, steel, etc., and the independence of the South may be imagined. Let us stand together."

STUART'S VETERANS AT HIS MONUMENT.

BY I. S. W.

Boys! of that gallant time, near half a century ago—
Troopers of Stuart! In that heroic day
When hostile cannon vainly sought to mow,
Your charging columns headed victory's way.
Horsemen of Black Horse fame! We meet again;
Hampton's and Fitz Lee's squadrons fill the plain.
Once more we meet, once more we greet, once more
With throbbing hearts we close round Stuart's form.
Far, far behind us lie life's years—two score
Have passed since last we faced the battle storm.
With all things changed and in the calm of peace,
We, bent survivors of war's strenuous game,
Are met, as if to claim a brief surcease
Of age and sorrow at the shrine of Fame.
Well may we come. Your story is as great
As any battle legend of our war-scarred State.
Your Stuart rode with black horse to the fray;
On Death's pale horse you saw him ride away.
On Fame's immortal bronze he rides to-day.
The world remembers. Now behold in view
The tribute that Virginia pays to you.
His fame is yours—without you it were naught;
With your blood, as with his, that fame was bought.
The shaft, to him of heart so strong and true,
Yet what he was and is he owes to you.
Whoever here uncovers to his fame
Honors your valor, knowing not your name.
For Stuart, glorious leader that he was,
Was but trustee of glory that was yours.
This shaft to him shall speak through all the years
Not of his splendid leadership alone,
But of a blessed memory, embalmed in tears,
Needing no monument of bronze or stone
Of that devoted band of cavalry
Which braved all dangers both by day and night,
Guarded the front and flank and rear of Lee,
First in assault, and last at close of fight;
Instant and constant even till their foes
Yielded the generous tribute of their praise;*
Last to surrender—battling till the close
At Appomattox. And for this the minstrel's lays
Have made the names your gallant leaders bear
The synonyms of courage and devotion everywhere—
Yours is the deathless tale that men so dearly love
Of rank and file as true as officers above.

* Sheridan said "Stuart was the best colt ever foaled in American cavalry."

LEVI STRAUSS, THE SPY.

BY F. T. MINDLER, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

I was a noncommissioned officer in the 37th Virginia Volunteer Regiment, which was a part of Stonewall Jackson's Corps. We were once nearly surrounded in the Shenandoah Valley by three Northern army corps commanded by Generals Banks, Shields, and Sigel, their forces outnumbering ours by great odds. The enemy were doing their best to surround us, and we had to work like beavers day and night to get strong positions. General Jackson intended to hold his own until the promised reinforcements from General Lee would arrive.

Stonewall Jackson while living at the academy in Lexington, Va., had a friend and neighbor by the Jew name of Levi

Strauss. This man secured the privilege to follow our corps to sell tobacco and cigars and other small things. He had a splendid outfit, a fine new covered spring wagon drawn by two big mules with new harness, all of which proved that our tobacco man was not poor. By dealing with him once in a while I learned that he was a German, like myself. He was an educated German Jew. He was glad to make my acquaintance, and said if I did not object he would like to come and see me some evenings just for pastime, to which I agreed. He also invited me to a walk around the camps to see how we made our fortifications.

One night an order arrived from headquarters for all the teamsters to hitch up and be ready at a moment's time to move out of camp. This was at one o'clock. Two teamsters ran over to the tobacco dealer to get a supply of tobacco to take along, but he did not respond to any of their calls. Their cursing and noise brought many of us to the spot; and after being informed of what they wanted, we opened the front of the wagon, but found it empty. Mr. L. Strauss was not to be found. The order for the teamsters proved to be a false one, and in a short time quietness reigned in the camp once more. The absence of the tobacco dealer was duly reported by the officer of the day. Early in the morning Strauss was in the wagon, and to our questions about not being in his wagon he laughed, declaring that he was in it all night.

Colonel Fulkerson, a very kind-hearted gentleman, sent for Strauss and talked very kindly to him, urging him to say why he was not in his wagon the night before. To him Strauss also declared that he was in the wagon enjoying a whole night's sleep. The Colonel warned him to tell nothing but the truth, as it was no time for trifling. At this Strauss seemed to get somewhat scared, and finally acknowledged that he was with a friend of his, a lieutenant in the artillery camp, but was sure back in his wagon before taps. Colonel Fulkerson was the very best of lawyers in Abingdon, Va., and he quickly divined that Strauss was telling stories; so the Colonel sent a message to General Jackson informing him of his friend and neighbor, Levi Strauss, at the same time putting the tobacco dealer under guard. It was not long till General Jackson had a private conversation with Strauss. We all knew the look of General Jackson just before a battle, and the same look he had when he left Strauss; such a look of his was a sure sign of trouble somewhere. I was one of those appointed to search his wagon, and in it we found comfortable bedding, a field table and chair, a heavy rug, and in the back part of the wagon were tobacco boxes, feed and hay, etc. All this we took out, and were astonished to find maps, drawn on paper the same as used by architects, complete drawing outfit, two silver-mounted cadet revolvers, a fine repeating rifle, two ugly-looking knives, two strong boxes filled with coin of all description, also plenty of Confederate and United States money. The plan drawn in ink, a finely executed piece of work, was our whole camp in detail—all contiguous roads, footpaths, bridges, position of artillery, rifle pits, ditches, different camps, and even the headquarters. There was a kind of gully which was not so well protected by artillery. This was extra marked with a big cross and figures. The officers were more than surprised. They congratulated each other on this catch. The plan alone was enough to condemn the Jew.

A drumhead court-martial was quickly formed and met in a grove of fine oak trees. The Jew was brought up under heavy guard; and when he saw his plan lying out on a plank before him, he knew well that the jig was up with him, and fainted accordingly. The presiding officer, Colonel Taliaferro, asked him only a few questions, which he answered by nodding his head. This was enough for the court. He wanted to make a few explanations; but the court would not allow it, and he was led away. General Jackson was not present; so he was made acquainted with the result, which was that he should be shot within three hours. Colonel Taliaferro objected to this, saying that a traitor like him should be hanged, to which they all agreed. The death warrant, so to speak, was signed and returned from General Jackson in a short time. To my sorrow, I was appointed to stay with him until he should be led out to receive his punishment, just on account of my also being a German. We took him to a nearby tent, and he was watched by four soldiers. Now he began to realize the situation he had put himself in, and raved and cried and pulled his hair out, carrying on to such an extent that he was told if he did not behave he would be tied and gagged. This quieted him some, only he wanted to talk with me. He requested me to go to his old friend, General Jackson, and plead for his life, and urge him to do it for the sake of his wife and two children. This I refused to do. Even had it been within my power to save him, I would not have done it. He fully deserved what was awaiting him. I did not pity him, but his wife and children. I told him that I was only sorry he was a German, and reminded him to write to his family, as the time was getting short. The hour set was twelve o'clock sharp. He whispered to me to get him some writing material, which was done; but he was so terribly scared that he could not write a word, and trembled like an aspen leaf. Now if any man gives himself up to be a spy he knows the fate awaiting him if caught, and such a man is naturally no coward; but our Jew certainly was. I told him that I could get him a reprieve if he would tell me the reason of his doing so. Upon this promise, he commenced to tell me that a friend from New York induced him to act as he did, as there was big money in store for him; he gave also the address of his wife in Lexington, Va.

Capt. J. Walker, acting provost marshal, had to make arrangements for the execution. We had old sailors with us, and they asked Captain Walker to let them do the hanging of the spy, promising to make a good job of it. Captain Walker was only too glad to let them do it. They at once got others to help them, and first dug a grave under one of the big oak trees. They then got a strong tent rope, made a genuine hangman's knot; peeling off the bark of a limb that extended almost straight out, they threw the rope over it, and all was ready in a very short time, though the time seemed awfully long to me till twelve o'clock. The Jew said to me that he was willing to be punished with imprisonment if he only would not be put to death. His lamentations were fearful, one of his expressions being: "Why did I do this to my friends, especially to General Jackson, who was such a good and kind friend to me, to my wife and children, and to good old Virginia?"

It was a quarter to twelve when the four sailors stepped in and took him out under the limb from which the rope was swinging. The spy looked up and saw the rope, the last thing he was to see on earth, and broke down completely. The sailors had to hold him up while they put the noose around his neck. As many boys as there was room for had hold of the rope at the other end, waiting for the word, which was given, and up went Levi Strauss, one of the worst spies that was ever caught in our corps. It seemed to me that he was unconscious when he was drawn up, as there was no motion of his body. After he was put in his grave, General Jackson sent for me and asked me to write to Mrs. Strauss of the fate of her husband, and that his personal effects would be sent to her as soon as there was a chance to get them through the line. They reached her all right, and I got a very kind letter from her in answer to mine.

At the battle of Port Republic I was shot through a leg and left hand and was sent to the Staunton Hospital.

SOLDIER GAVE HIS FLOUR TO WOMAN AND CHILDREN.—W. F. Phares, Centerville, Miss., writes as follows: "Will here just give you one little episode which still dwells indelibly on my mind. During a rapid advance up the Valley of Virginia, near Winchester, we had a little flour in my mess and nothing to cook it with; so I agreed to slip through our advance line and cautiously approach a farmhouse. I entered the dwelling with my sack of flour, which was three days' rations for three of us. The lady and three little children met me and said the Yankees had just gone, after robbing the place entirely and burning what they could not carry off. She and the little children had nothing whatever for dinner. I asked her to cook the flour, and with tears rolling down her cheeks she agreed to do so. The little children were so glad to see the flour, as they were so hungry, and this was more than my heart could bear; so I emptied the sack on the table and kissed the little ones good-by. The lady followed me to the gate, begging me not to leave my three days' rations. My heart was too full to reply; but in my hasty retreat I turned and said: "Keep it all. We can capture more to-night from the commissary." Well, one of my daring messmates, named Woodruff, did find something that night. Of course I asked no questions, but thought Col. B. G. Humphreys went on the march hungry. I was then a boy—am now sixty-eight years old. Those three little children, if living, doubtless remember the incident. God bless the ladies of Virginia! They certainly saw the horrors of Yankee infamy."

PREACHING IN THE CONFEDERATE ARMY.

The tribute by Dr. W. T. Bolling in the July VETERAN to Rev. J. B. McFerrin, not only eminent among Methodists throughout the South but whose memory is much beloved by survivors of the Confederate army, brings forth a letter from J. E. Carruth, of Auburn, Miss. He writes: "Dr. McFerrin preached to a large crowd of soldiers on the 4th of November, 1864, at the headquarters of Gen. M. P. Lowrey, near Florence, Ala. Soon after he began a slow, steady rain began to fall. Dr. McFerrin remarked that if we had shelter to go to he would dismiss, but that as we had none he would continue. Putting on his hat and overcoat, he continued, and the crowd remained through the rain. Soon after this we were on the march. Cleburne's Division were stacking arms by the roadside, when lightning struck a tree, killing one man and severely shocking several others. A few minutes later Wellborn Mooney gathered the men near by and preached from the text, 1 Corinthians xvi. 13, making impressions on some hearts that last even until now. These faithful ministers who shared the dangers and toils of camp life, ministering to the sick and wounded, marching on foot to let the barefooted ride, gathering food for the hungry, and dispensing the 'bread of life' as opportunity offered should never be forgotten. Dr. McFerrin, Gen. M. T. Lowrey (a devout minister), Wellborn Mooney, C. H. Otkin, and many other ministers were held in great esteem."

HOOD'S TEXAS BRIGADE AT SHARPSBURG.

SKETCH OF THE BATTLE BY W. R. HAMBY, 4TH TEXAS, AUSTIN.

The Librarian of Congress in a recent letter to the Texas State Librarian, asking for information touching Hood's Texas Brigade, says: "The known statistics of these regiments are so remarkable that if missing figures can be obtained it will establish a record equaled by few, if any, organizations in the Civil War, or indeed in modern warfare."

When a soldier has been wounded, he has the scar to show for his wound. When a regiment or brigade claims to have suffered heavily in battle, you ask for the list of killed and wounded. Judged by this standard, no brigade in the Confederate army has more bloody laurels or stands higher on the roll of honor than Hood's Texas Brigade. This article, however, will only attempt in an imperfect way to describe the action of the brigade in the battle fought near Sharpsburg, Md., September 17, 1862.

On the first campaign in Maryland our brigade was commanded by Colonel Wofford, and was composed of the 1st Texas, Lieutenant Colonel Work commanding; 4th Texas, Lieutenant Colonel Carter; 5th Texas, Captain Turner; 18th Georgia, Lieutenant Colonel Ruff; and Hampton's South Carolina Legion, Lieutenant Colonel Gary. The three Texas regiments were the only Texas troops in the Virginia army, hence we were always known as the Texas Brigade. The 18th Georgia had been associated with us from the first organization of the brigade, and from a spirit of comradeship was called the "Third Texas."

After the battle of South Mountain, September 14, we were the rear guard of the army on the march to Sharpsburg. On the morning of September 15, with a detail of one hundred men under Major Sellers, I was with the rear guard of the rear guard; and after the army crossed the Antietam, we were on the skirmish line along the west bank of that stream until the 16th. In the meantime the brigade had formed a line of battle along the Hagerstown and Sharpsburg Turnpike, near the Dunkard church. This modest and hitherto unknown church was destined soon to become historical, as it was the storm center of the great battle fought September 17, 1862, called Sharpsburg by the Confederates and Antietam by the Federals. The church was about a mile north of the town of Sharpsburg and about a mile west of the Antietam River. From the church north, along the west side of the pike, the woods extended about a quarter of a mile to an open field, extending still farther north several hundred yards. Across the pike east of the church were open fields, somewhat rocky and hilly, extending about half a mile north and intersecting with a cornfield. East of the fields were woods extending toward the river.

About sunset the evening of the 16th the Federal skirmish line was seen advancing through the woods east of us, closely followed by lines of battle in echelon with banners waving, drums beating, and bugles blowing. It was a magnificent spectacle, and looked more like they were on a grand review than going to battle. Our thin single line presented a striking contrast. Since leaving Richmond, about one month previous, we had marched over two hundred miles, and had participated in engagements at Freeman's Ford, Thoroughfare Gap, Second Manassas, and South Mountain, and had lost six hundred and thirty-eight men, killed and wounded. For the past several days we had subsisted chiefly on apples and green corn. Many of us were barefooted and ragged, and all of us were foot-sore, weary, and hungry, but full of patriotic ardor and inspired faith in the justice of our cause.

The fight was opened by the artillery on our right, between us and Law's Brigade, which was composed of the 4th Alabama, 6th North Carolina, 2d Mississippi, and 11th Mississippi. They were as gallant soldiers, either collectively or individually, as ever fought a battle. Among the first to enter the field, they were on the firing line when the last shot was fired. Both brigades advanced across the field with our skirmish line in front, which fell in with the main line as we entered the woods. The action continued for some time after dark; and when firing ceased, the two lines were so close together that they could hear each other speak. We knew this was only a preliminary skirmish, as we could tell from the sounds in front of us that the Federals were massing their troops for a desperate battle the following day. In this position we remained until far into the night, when we were relieved by General Lawton's Division and marched a short distance to the rear. After a long delay, some flour was issued to us, which was the first ration of any kind we had received since leaving Hagerstown; but before the flour could be cooked and eaten the battle of Sharpsburg had begun.

It was scarcely daylight Wednesday morning, September 17, when the Texas Brigade was ordered in line of battle, and by sunrise had crossed the pike in front of the Dunkard church and entered the meadow to take the place of the troops who had relieved us only a few hours before. The 5th Texas was on the right of the brigade, and as it entered the field was ordered into the woods east of the cornfield, where the fighting had occurred the previous evening. The 4th Texas, 1st Texas, 18th Georgia, and Hampton's Legion entered the meadow in the order named, and at once encountered a heavy fire. The troops in front had lost half their numbers, had exhausted their ammunition, and were retiring, and the smoke was so dense that the enemy could scarcely be seen to return his fire. The 4th Texas was ordered by the left flank to the left of the brigade, up the side of a hill toward the pike. In this formation the 4th Texas, Hampton's Legion, 18th Georgia, and 1st Texas advanced and drove the Union lines out of the open fields back upon their reserves across the pike on the west and beyond the cornfield on the north.

The enemy's reinforcements appearing in strong numbers on the left, the 4th Texas changed from front to left flank and took position along the pike near the south edge of the cornfield. A short distance to the rear were some stone bowlders, behind which some of our wounded were placed to protect them as far as possible from further injury; but even then several were struck the second time and some the third time. Hampton's Legion and the 18th Georgia were farther into the cornfield, facing a galling fire from infantry and artillery with a steadiness unsurpassed. The 1st Texas had advanced some distance beyond the remainder of the brigade toward the north side of the cornfield, breaking two lines of the enemy and forcing them to abandon a battery and take shelter in the ravine north of the field. Three times the enemy tried to check the 5th Texas in the woods east of the cornfield, and each time broke and fled before their intrepid advance.

The Texas Brigade was now only a skirmish line; in fact, all of the Confederates on this portion of the field scarcely covered a fourth of the Federal front. It was yet early in the morning, although the battle had been hot and furious for some hours. In addition to the infantry and artillery on front and flanks, the heights above the Antietam were crowned with long-range batteries that poured a merciless fire; while the fresh troops of the Union forces seemed inexhaustible as they were thrown upon the fragments of the Confederate lines. The earth and sky seemed to be on fire, and it looked like here would be the Thermopylae of the Texas Brigade. With sublime courage the 1st Texas held their advanced position in the cornfield against overwhelming numbers, and retired only to escape annihilation. Unsupported and with both flanks uncovered, the 4th Texas, Hampton's Legion, and the 18th Georgia met the advancing enemy from across the pike and drove them back and held their line. Many of the men had exhausted their ammunition and supplied themselves from the cartridge boxes of the dead and wounded around them. They were holding a position they knew they could not maintain; yet men never fought better, and withdrew only to keep from being surrounded. Falling back slowly below the crest of the hill, the line moved through the field, crossed the pike, and took position in the woods near the church. The 4th Texas was then ordered up through the woods west of the pike near the edge of the field on the north, where they remained about an hour defiantly waving their flag over empty muskets, when they were ordered to rejoin the other regiments of the brigade. The 5th Texas, finding their ammunition exhausted and that they were being flanked, retired and also rejoined the brigade. By this time the morning was far gone, and the Federals had advanced down both sides of the pike to within a short distance of the line held by the remnants of Hood's Division, who stood facing them almost exhausted and practically without ammunition.

At last the long-looked-for reinforcements arrived, and again the enemy were driven back upon their reserves. The Texas Brigade was then ordered a short distance to the rear for a fresh supply of ammunition, and again returned to the front about noon and found the woods near the church, lately occupied by them, in possession of the enemy; but as our line advanced, the Federals fell back across the pike into the field, about three hundred yards beyond the church. We steadily held our line near the pike until about sunset, when we were moved a short distance to the right, where we remained in line of battle until the night of the 18th, when the entire army withdrew and recrossed the Potomac back into Virginia.

If the reinforcements had reached the firing line before the Texas Brigade and Law's Brigade were forced to abandon their advanced positions, the Federals would have been swept from the field and another triumph would have been added to the list of Confederate victories. Our dead lay in rows upon the ground, where they had fought a fruitless fight; and instead of a Confederate victory, it was an indecisive contest, giving hope and courage to the Federals and depressing in its effect upon the Confederates.

The battle of Sharpsburg was fought with desperate courage by both the gray and the blue, and the 17th of September, 1862, stands out conspicuously as the bloodiest day in American history. More men were killed and wounded that day than on any other one day during the War between the States, and I doubt if the dead and wounded ever lay thicker upon any field than was seen from the old Dunkard church north for more than half a mile. The action commenced about daybreak, and by sunset the bloody work had ended.

The 1st Texas went into the battle with 226 men, and lost in killed and wounded 186, a loss of eighty-two per cent. As one flag bearer would fall, another would seize the flag, until nine men had fallen beneath their colors. Official records show that the 1st Texas lost more men, killed and wounded, in the battle of Sharpsburg, in proportion to numbers engaged, than any other regiment, either Federal or Confederate, in any other battle of the war. The 4th Texas went into the fight with 200 men, and lost 107; the 5th Texas went into the fight with 175 men, and lost 86; the 18th Georgia went into the fight with 176 men, and lost 85; Hampton's Legion went into the fight with 77 men, and lost 55, including four flag bearers. In the aggregate the Texas Brigade went into the fight with 854, rank and file, and lost 519, killed and wounded, including sixteen flag bearers, a loss of over sixty per cent. This does not include the "missing," many of whom were no doubt killed or wounded.

On the field of Sharpsburg a monument should be erected to the memory of the dead of Hood's Texas Brigade. They were sacrificed for the want of proper support, but their spirits rise like white clouds in the sky and tell us that they died for a just cause. The cause for which they fought is not a "lost cause." I repudiate and condemn that phrase. They were not fighting to destroy the Union, but for the perpetuation of the principles upon which the Union was formed. The right of local self-government, the sovereignty of the States, is the seed of the Union, and is steadily growing in strength and vigor. Their struggle was for constitutional government, the corner stone of national union. They were not rebels, nor were they traitors; they did not die for secession and slavery, but in vindication of constitutional sovereignty, without which constitutional liberty would be only a memory.

Many who once condemned the South and denounced us as rebels and traitors have raised the veil of prejudice, and now accord to us the highest tribute of patriotic courage and manly devotion to the great principle upon which this government was founded.

Looking back after the lapse of nearly half a century, the terrible losses sustained on all the red fields from Big Bethel to Appomattox throw a halo around a "just cause" which grows brighter as the years roll on, and which should nerve the heart and inflame the speech for the sovereign principle of "home rule."

ACCOUNT OF THE SHARPSBURG BATTLE.

BY C. A. RICHARDSON, RICHMOND, VA.

Between daybreak and the setting sun of September 17, 1862, forty-five years ago, fully 120,000 men of kindred blood (82,000 Federals and 38,000 Confederates) and 550 cannon engaged on this bloody field of Sharpsburg in a fierce and desperate struggle; and when the sun went down and mercifully put an end to the strife, near 5,000 were dead and 17,000 wounded, an aggregate of 22,000 (Federal, 12,400; Confederate, 9,600). About 1,800 were missing, some of whom were dead, but most of whom were carried as prisoners from the terrible field.

There is no question about this being the bloodiest day of American history. A Federal general, Ezra A. Carman, thus speaks of the most desperate fighting part of the bloody field: "Here within twelve hundred yards of the Dunkard church 56,000 infantry (Federal and Confederate) were engaged, with a loss of 2,854 killed and 13,661 wounded—an aggregate of 16,575, or nearly thirty per cent of the number engaged. All this loss occurred before 1 P.M., more than three-fourths of it in a little over four hours on a field not over fifteen hundred yards from north to south, with an average width, east and west, of nine hundred yards—an area of about three hundred acres. No other equal area on the American continent has been so drenched in human blood."

The writer knowingly asserts that no portion of the field of Waterloo for the same time equaled this sanguinary record of human casualties. The heroic fighting quality displayed by both the armies, the blue and the gray, at Sharpsburg is about equally distributed among the men of many States, making it a conspicuously American battle fought by men of every State from the Great Lakes, on the north, to the Gulf of Mexico, on the south, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi; and with the exception of Iowa and Missouri, every State watered by the Mississippi contributed to this high carnival of death and suffering.

A verified statement shows the percentage of loss on the Federal side was twenty per cent of the men engaged; on the Confederate side the loss was twenty-five per cent of General Lee's full force of between 37,000 and 38,000 men of all arms.

The tenacious courage of the Confederate commander and his abiding confidence in his true and tried men caused him to remain on the battlefield the day following the battle, fully expecting General McClellan to renew the fight, when he still had an army more than double that of the Confederates. The night of September 18 General Lee saw fit to withdraw his army and recross the Potomac; hence it came about that the great battle of Sharpsburg, or Antietam, has gone into history as a drawn battle and the gamest of gam' fights during the period of 1861-65.

It has been truthfully stated that bloody Chickamauga, the greatest battle of the West, does not show the loss, killed and wounded, for its two days' fighting that Sharpsburg does for one. The true test of the severity of a battle is the percentage of loss of those engaged. For illustration, Hood's Texas Brigade is said to have lost sixty per cent, and Semmes's Brigade, of McLaw's Division, composed of Georgians and Virginians, lost over fifty per cent. The famous 15th Virginia Regiment, in this brigade, suffered a loss of fifty-eight per cent; the 32d Virginia was its twin comrade, and only fared a little better. These regiments, with the gallant Georgians who composed Gen. Paul Semmes's brigade, were badly used up, with casualties second only to the heroic Texans, under the ever-gallant Hood.

A Federal general has publicly stated that "there were more men killed and wounded on the Federal side in one day at Antietam, or Sharpsburg, than in the two days' battle of Shiloh, Corinth, Stone River, and Chickamauga; more than in the three days' battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Cold Harbor; more than in the five days of Groveton, Second Manassas, and Chantilly; more than in the seven days on the Peninsula; more than in the eleven days' campaign ending at Appomattox; more than in all the battles around Atlanta; and more than in all the operations around Vicksburg, including the siege from May 1 to July 4, 1863."

And now, since we are reliably informed regarding the casualties on both sides in this most sanguinary of fiercely fought battles, we see it heads the record as "the gamest fight of the nineteenth century," and in all the light of impartial history it remains a "drawn battle," and one ever honorable to the men who fought in it—the fallen and the survivors.

We recall Thorwaldsen's great "Lion of Lucerne," commemorating the bravery of the Swiss Guard; the bronze lion on the mound of Waterloo, marking the defeat and fall of the greatest of soldiers; the stone lions of Trafalgar Square, guarding England's great admiral; the sorely wounded marble lion in the Piazza Cavour, that tells a patriotic story. These cited instances suggest to the writer that the fiftieth anniversary of Sharpsburg, or Antietam, should witness a noble mound on the site of the old Dunkard church, surmounted with a huge lion in bronze or stone, attesting and perpetuating the tried valor and heroism of American soldiery.

Note.—The facts and figures given in the above anniversary notice very fully justify the writer, and very strongly support his suggestion as to a heroic monumental lion in bronze or stone to be placed on an imposing mound raised on the site of the old Dunkard church, all in commemoration of the battle of Sharpsburg, or Antietam, the same to be completed in the next five years and dedicated on the fiftieth anniversary of the great battle, September 17, 1912. The expense should be borne jointly by North and South, since the monument will not commemorate a victory, but a great and indecisive battle fought by two armies of American soldiery.

COMMENT BY GEN. W. R. HAMBY.

Gen. W. R. Hamby, of Austin, Tex., responded to the foregoing; and in regard to the erection of a national monument on the site near the old Dunkard church, in which the expense should be jointly borne by North and South, he states:

"This is a timely suggestion. The monument should be dedicated to American valor, American patriotism, and American citizenship, and every State whose soldiers participated in that great battle and paid their toll of blood would no doubt be glad to join in erecting such a monument. The old Dunkard church was the storm center of that battle, the bloodiest in American history.

"The wild charge of the Light Brigade 'through the valley of death' at Balaklava is one of the proudest but saddest memories of the British army. It has been immortalized in story and in song, and yet the percentage of losses sustained by the 'Six Hundred' does not equal that of many organizations at Sharpsburg, either Federal or Confederate. The killed and wounded of the 'Six Hundred' at Balaklava was less than forty per cent of those engaged in the charge. In the battle of Sharpsburg, September 17, 1862, the 1st Texas Regiment lost over eighty per cent in killed and wounded, including nine flag bearers. Hampton's South Carolina Legion, in the same brigade with the 1st Texas, lost over seventy per cent in killed and wounded, including four flag bearers. These two regiments belonged to Hood's Texas Brigade. The smallest loss of any regiment in that brigade was fifty per cent, while the average for the whole brigade in that battle was over sixty per cent. On the Union side the 12th Massachusetts lost sixty-seven per cent killed and wounded; the 9th New York, sixty-three per cent; the 3d Wisconsin, fifty-nine per cent; the 14th Indiana lost fifty-six per cent. There are many other organizations, both Federal and Confederate, whose losses in the battle of Sharpsburg far exceed those of the 'Six Hundred' at Balaklava.

"The proposed erection of a monument on the field of Sharpsburg is peculiarly appropriate, and should strike a responsive cord in the heart of every American. In all the campaigns from 1861 to 1865 there was no field where the carnival of death traveled at a faster gait. There were greater battles, greater losses of life, but the tragedy was not confined to one single day. Gettysburg is conceded to have been the greatest battle of the war, but it covered a period of three days; while at Sharpsburg there was but one day, and the bloody work was between the rising and setting of the sun.

"If the gratitude of our country is due to the Federal soldier for fighting to preserve the Union, then the Confederate soldier is entitled to equal honor for fighting to preserve and perpetuate the integrity of the States within the Union. The Confederate soldier lost the fight, but won the prize. His flag went down in defeat, but the principles it represented are as immortal as truth. While the Confederacy and its flag are now only memories of the past, yet constitutional sovereignty has triumphed, and has taken deep root in every State and Territory over which floats the stars and stripes. The Federal and the Confederate soldier were each fighting for a great principle: the one to preserve the Union and the other to preserve the principles upon which the Union was founded."

Men of the Army of Tennessee will read the foregoing with interest and be moved by the startling figures in the report of fatalities, and will accord all honor to the brains in that battle; and though they may make no response, they will instinctively think of Franklin—of the holocaust there, beginning almost with the setting of the sun and making such a record as the sunlight of heaven rarely if ever witnessed.

GEN. W. R. HAMBY.

The picture for the above engraving was secured surreptitiously, and there is lacking some personal data desired to go with it. It is well known that General Hamby was not old enough to have been a general in war times, but was adjutant general in Tennessee on the Governor's staff after the war. His ideals are exalted concerning the issues involved, and he is ever zealous for perpetuating our true history. He deprecates with the VETERAN that detestable term, "lost cause," and the spirit of such nefarious implications,

RACE OF THE TEXAS AND THE GENERAL.

BY G. N. D.

When the race was run by Conductor Bill Fuller with the Texas after Captain Andrews with the General, I was but a little barefooted boy; but I was born in sight of Allatoona, Ga., on the Old Wagon Road, and was in Allatoona the day of the race.

My information was that there were twenty-one of the Federals, including Captain Andrews. They made their way to Marietta, Ga., pretending to be going down from the upper mountain counties of Georgia to join the army. While the train crew and others were taking breakfast at Big Shanty the Federals cut the wire and started with the train. It was quite funny to the boys on the rear end of the train to see the people grab their valises and go running. When Engineer Jeff Cain and Conductor Fuller came out and were looking after the train with the entire crew at the station, it was suggested to Mr. Fuller that the wire was cut and that it was the Yankees stealing the train. The W. & A. Railroad, belonging to the State of Georgia, was the only railroad and telegraph line in North Georgia; so the only thing was to try to overtake them, and Bill Fuller was the man to do it. There was no time for argument, so Bill made off after them at a Nancy Hanks gait.

Another thing to explain: all trains in those days ran on regular schedules (although they had telegraph service), and not by telegraphic orders, as now. The Yankees had a timetable, and their engineer ran on the regular schedule. From Big Shanty to Moon's Station was two miles; and when Mr. Fuller came in sight of the section crew near that place (of which I think Sol Bennett was the foreman), quite out of breath, he called to the latter to put his lever on the track, that the Yankees had stolen his train. Under the greatest excitement six good men put it on the track, and with all the power and energy possible they pulled it with Fuller and one more man to Acworth, three miles, almost entirely down grade. When Acworth was reached, Fuller ran to the operator and asked him to wire ahead that the Yankees had stolen his train. Operator Stephens told him that the wire was cut and to go ahead. From Acworth Depot to the first cut, half a mile, is up grade; then two and a half miles to Allatoona Creek bridge is in the main down grade. At the bridge three tired men were dropped out, I think, and three fresh ones taken on. From Allatoona Creek to the Betta Crow cut, half a mile, is level; but from there to Allatoona Station is a mile and a half very crooked and up grade; but the men pulled that lever car like it was a life and death case. When Allatoona was reached, Fuller again ran to the operator, but got the same words: "Go ahead; the wire is cut." There at Allatoona I think some of the men were dropped out and fresh ones taken on, possibly three. Through the Allatoona deep cut it is up grade for three hundred yards, then turns down grade to Stegalls three miles, mainly down grade, to Etowah River; and when the lever car came around the long curve on the fill, Mr. Fuller saw an engine just starting to Cooper's Rolling Mill, four miles up Etowah River. Fuller stopped the engineer and told him of his trouble, and without the order of any one the engineer ran his engine out on the main line, and the tired crew of the lever car, with Mr. Fuller and his man, mounted the tender, and it was soon flying toward Cartersville, two miles farther on.

I have given the grades of the road to show how it was possible for the lever car to make such time as it did, running fifteen miles from near Moon's Station to the Etowah River. I do not remember where Mr. Fuller abandoned the Cooper engine and took the Texas. It is twelve miles from Cartersville to Kingston, and at the latter place Captain Andrews got his first scare. He had to sidetrack for through freights, but the first ones asked: "How is this—a new crew?" Andrews's reply was that it was an extra running with ammunition to Johnston; but this did not sound clear to the other members of the crew, and while they were holding a little caucus Andrews told his men to be ready, that he believed they were going to have trouble. When the first train came in sight, it was flagging, which meant that there was another behind. The second was also flagging, third, fourth, and until the fifth came in sight without a flag. They were delayed there until they got quite nervous, and Fuller had time to get close in behind them. The next stop was Adairsville, and two miles from Adairsville the Yankees tried to tear up the track; but they did not do it sufficiently to wreck Fuller's engine, though Mr. Moon told me the engine came near turning over, but he was soon over that and making good time. The Yankees took on some ties there and would drop one off on the track occasionally, and at one place put one of the rails that lay by the track across the road. Between Adairsville and Calhoun they tore up the track, and at every telegraph station they cut the wire as soon as they passed. After passing Calhoun, the next stop was at Resaca. Across the Oostanaula River at Resaca was the first covered bridge which they encountered. They fired a box car and left it on the bridge to burn up; but Mr. Fuller must have been gaining on the General like a hound gaining on a fox, as his engine was close enough behind to put it against the burning car and push it out on the sidetrack before it set the bridge on fire. He then backed his engine on the main line and ran by the burning car. The next stop was Tilton, and just along there somewhere Mr. Fuller came so near getting his message through that it read, "The Yankees have"—and just then the wire was cut. At Dalton, I think, was the first place Mr. Fuller got his message through to Chattanooga. It was their intention to burn Resaca bridge and the dozen others across the Chickamauga. The W. & A. Railroad is so crooked that often you could not see a train on the track two hundred yards off; but, with all the obstructions placed on the track, Fuller with the Texas was gaining on the General, while the frightened Yankees did not take time to get sufficient wood and water and to oil up. They had melted some of the brasses, and were doing all in their power to get away.

This was truly a life and death race, as the Yankees knew the penalty would be death, and Fuller's crew knew it was a risk of life to be running at such speed with the impediments ahead of them. My impression is that they came in sight of each other but once in the race, and that after passing Dalton, near Graysville, when the Texas rounded a curve. The Yankees had stopped and were cutting wood when the Texas dashed up. One was oiling the engine, but they all scattered like partridges. I think the men from the Texas followed through the bushes and caught some of them. Runners were sent in every direction, and the news spread like fire until all the twenty-one were caught and imprisoned at Chattanooga for a while, and were then sent to Atlanta.

Captain Andrews with six of his men were tried, and the decision was not known until one day some Confederate officers appeared, called for certain names, and when they responded the officials calmly said: "Gentlemen, you know what warfare is and the penalty of spies." They then knew their fate, and one young man from Ohio said: "Boys, this is d—hard." Another said, "Wife, mother, and sister"—he could say no more. So Captain Andrews and the six of his men were executed. Just why the other fourteen were not executed I never heard.

I well remember the day Stoneman's Cavalry camped at Allatoona Creek. Our house was three-fourths of a mile off the Marietta Wagon Road, but in sight of the Yankees, and from 4 P.M. until seven our house was plundered by more than five hundred Yankees. Every mule, cow, hog, chicken, and every bushel of corn and pound of meat was taken, leaving us in a starving condition, and we had no neighbors to borrow from.

The condition of the country was that of desolation. Only those along Sherman's march from Chattanooga to Atlanta for twenty miles on each side of the W. & A. Railroad can imagine what a serious condition it was until 1866. We almost suffered starvation. For many weeks the only chance to keep soul and body together was to pick blackberries and swap to the Yankees for hard-tack that could almost hold up a man's weight without breaking, and we dug up a few wild onions in the lowlands to eat with the hard-tack.

Should I go to heaven when I die, I hope then to meet all the old soldiers who wore the gray and suffered with the hunger that my mother and sisters and I did. But should I go to the other place, and when turned in at the gate see W. T. Sherman picking up coals for Satan, I may say: "General, I guess this is your pay for the burning of Georgia homes."

I was at Allatoona and heard every gun fired during the fight between General French, Confederate, and General Corse, Federal.

REVELATIONS ON ANDREWS, "THE RAIDER."

BY M. A. M'CLAUGHERTY, MONTEAGLE, TENN.

After a lapse of forty-five years, I will give you what I can call to mind of that famous "Andrews Raid."

On the 12th of April, 1862, I was on the train from Atlanta to Chattanooga. The train stopped at Big Shanty, now Kennewasaw, for breakfast. I sat at the table next to the engineer. A commotion outside attracted his attention, and he sprang from his seat, exclaiming: "They have got my engine!" I followed at his heels, Capt. W. A. Fuller passing out just in front of us from another part of the room. At the train all was commotion, confusion, and speculation. Some one informed Captain Fuller that there was a hand car on a siding a few hundred yards up the track. Fuller asked any one who was armed to volunteer in the chase. I had a good pistol, so joined the party. Fuller refused two or three others who were not armed. A short foot race brought us to the hand car, which was, fortunately, light and a good runner. From this point we pumped our passage to a sort of iron works, stopping one or more times to adjust rails that had been torn up by the raiders. From the iron works to Kingston I remember but little, only that we had an inferior engine which we found at the works and made stops to relay rails that had been torn up.

At Kingston we found the passenger train belonging to the Rome branch. We appropriated the engine, and from there on the chase was fast, furious, and no doubt dangerous; but no one appeared to realize it at the time.

Strange as it may seem, the general appearance of Captain Fuller is more indelibly imprinted on my mind than any other one incident of that chase. His features, figure, and expression were that of a sleuthhound which had just sighted his prey after a long chase. After we got under way from Kingston, I don't think Fuller ever lost confidence for one moment of his ability to capture the raiders. I distinctly remember his remark: "We will catch the rascals sure. We can replace a rail in less time than it takes them to tear it up."

Of a point where we abandoned our engine and went a distance on foot my recollection is very dim and uncertain. A greater part of the cross-ties that the raiders dropped at different points did not settle on the track, but bounded off. * * * At every break of the track the telegraph wire was cut.

We came to a bridge with the abutment on fire, just beginning to burn. Fuller, without stopping, dropped a man off to extinguish the fire.

From a point near Calhoun, where Fuller first sighted his prey, to the final run down, at a point near Graysville, it was a John Gilpin ride. At this point I remember Fuller giving some hurried orders to one or two of his crew. He and his posse jumped off the train before it had come to a stop and disappeared in the woods after the fugitives. I never saw any of them afterwards.

With two or three others I walked to the nearest station and waited for the evening train for Chattanooga. On boarding it we were all arrested. Arriving at Chattanooga, we found Mr. W. S. Whiteman at the Read House, who vouched for me, and I was promptly released.

Much has been written about this fellow Andrews, extolling him as the bravest of brave Federal soldiers. As a matter of fact, he never was a soldier, but a foolhardy Yankee who would risk his neck for money. He had about as clear a conception of patriotism as a Ute Indian.

About the time of the breaking out of the war Andrews came to Nashville from the North and became associated with W. S. Whiteman in the manufacture of paper. Mr. Whiteman owned a paper mill about six miles out from Nashville, and at that time had under construction a mill near Knoxville. Andrews, if I remember right, was a little later on sent to the Knoxville mill to hurry the construction, where I lost sight of him until he appeared in the raid incident.

At the time of the raid Andrews was in the paid employ of both Confederate and Federal authorities. The Confederates wanted some dirty work done, and W. S. Whiteman, his partner in business, indorsed Andrews as competent for the job, but warned them to keep him under strict surveillance. The Federals had gotten possession of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad between Corinth and Huntsville, and having no motive power, offered Andrews a round sum of money for an engine delivered at Huntsville. The destruction of the road was a side issue, getting the engine being the prime motive.

I had passed through Chattanooga some ten days previous to the raid, billed for Atlanta and West Point, and there received instructions from both Hon. John M. Bright and W. S. Whiteman to keep a lookout for Andrews and watch his movements if opportunity offered. W. A. Benson, of Nashville, was then in the vicinity of Atlanta with the same instructions.

Only the fact that the passenger train on the Rome branch was late in arriving at Kingston on the morning of the raid saved Andrews from arrest at Kingston, as W. A. Benson was on the train and on the lookout; but the raiders were fortunate to pass Kingston before the arrival of the Rome train. It was simply a matter of luck.

I had run the lines out of Nashville some three weeks before this, and was on my way back to run the lines in with a miscellaneous cargo of literature, official, semiofficial, and otherwise.

In those days I carried many sealed parcels through the lines, the contents of which I knew nothing; the only care I had was to be sure of the party to whom I delivered them.

Possibly the Hon. John M. Bright might be able to give some recollections of the Andrews raid, as I spent most of the following day in his office at Chattanooga, received my safe conduct against partisan Confederates from him, and we talked over the incidents of the raid at length.

Although it has nothing to do with the raid, I must tell one little story. I think it was on this trip that I carried a sealed parcel from Governor Harris to Ex-Gov. Neil S. Brown. Next morning after my arrival in Nashville I watched an opportunity and crossed Governor Brown on the Public Square, handed him the parcel, and passed on, we barely recognizing each other. Late in the day we met again. I think Governor Brown was the most outraged man I ever saw. He said with an ugly exclamation: "If I had not found those papers, they would have imprisoned five or six old men, all of them now in Nashville." It transpired that Harris, on the evacuation of Nashville, had thrown a package of compromise papers into an old waste box in the Governor's office; so Harris had written notifying Brown of the fact. Fortunately Governor Brown secured the papers without detection.

The proof of the foregoing paper was sent to Hon. John M. Bright, now well beyond four score and ten, and he writes: "I was at Chattanooga about the time of Andrews's raid. * * * As Mr. McClaugherty's statement is affirmative, I cannot interpose a negative."

Mr. McClaugherty was not a regular soldier of the Confederacy, having been rejected by "Captain Scudder, State Mustering Officer," because of an injury to his right hand. He became a most capable secret service man, however. At first he engaged in securing supplies from border sections for the Confederate forces and in shipping goods from New York to disputed territory, whereby much of value was secured. These goods were shipped largely by and to fictitious parties and to stations between Bowling Green and Guthrie, Ky. After the fall of Fort Donelson, he made trips across the lines into Nashville. Later he crossed the Mississippi River at Napoleon, Ark., and remained West until the end came.

The VETERAN was surprised by the statement of Mr. McClaugherty that Andrews was not a soldier, and has investigated carefully any claim that may have been made for him as a soldier. The most complete record procurable states that, of the twenty-two men on the raid, four were of the 2d Ohio Infantry, nine of the 21st Ohio Infantry, and seven of the 33d Ohio Infantry; while it mentions James J. Andrews, "Flemingsburg, Ky.," and William H. Campbell, a "citizen of Kentucky," and that the party "claimed to be refugees from the Yankee lines going to join the Confederate army," but were volunteers from Sills's Brigade, Mitchell's Corps, U. S. Army, commanded by James J. Andrews, of "Flemingsburg, Ky."

HOOD'S FAILURE AT SPRING HILL.

BY J. P. YOUNG.
(All rights reserved.)

The following narrative was written as part of a military history of the Army of Tennessee, compiled by the writer several years since, but which has not as yet been published. It is now presented as a monograph on the occurrences of November 29, 1864, and the operations of two or three preceding days which led up to that affair. The figures in parentheses refer to the "Official War Records," serial numbers and pages.

On November 27, at night, the Federal army, after a day of heavy skirmishing with Hood's Infantry, abandoned Columbia and took a strong position on the north side of Duck River, several hundred yards from the stream, while the cavalry under Wilson, who assumed command on November 24 greatly reinforced, spread out eastward for some ten miles, guarding the fords on Duck River and watching that flank of the army. On that night, November 27, General Hood conceived the idea of a flank movement to the rightward of Columbia and a rapid march upon the enemy's line of communication at or about Spring Hill, some sixteen miles to the northward. This would seem a most difficult undertaking, when it is remembered that Gen. James H. Wilson, a brave and capable cavalry officer, guarded that flank with more than seven thousand cavalry, which was being constantly reinforced, and was led by Hatch, Harrison, Coon, Croxton, Capron, Johnson, and Garrard, all trained and experienced cavalry leaders. The movement was, as we shall presently see, fraught with most momentous consequences to both armies, and resulted in certain movements on the chessboard of war that have been more persistently and heatedly discussed, not only by the leaders of the contending armies but within those armies themselves, up to this very day, than any operations of any army during the Civil War.

A most brilliant movement was made by a great army on its enemy's flank and rear. The enemy's artillery, ordnance, and supply trains were reached, guarded by one division only of 5,680 men, the attacking force numbering two army corps and one division of infantry and a corps of cavalry, aggregating more than 25,000 men. And then a sort of paralysis fell upon the whole assailing force, which deliberately encamped, and not only allowed the train guard of one division to march off, but the enemy's entire army to come up from below and pass quietly by in the nighttime without a gun being fired at them except by some skirmishers and one restless brigade of Forrest's Cavalry, which came near demoralizing the whole retreating army, already terrified at its perilous position. Somebody had blundered in each army.

Volumes have been written in heated controversy over this strange occurrence by men of both armies, and yet no one has disclosed the true reason for the mishap to the Confederate army at what a Federal writer calls "this interesting and instructive conjuncture," and which was, in fact, the turning point of the war in the West. Hood, successful here, would have taken his place as one of the great captains of the war. Schofield, successful in eluding his able but unfortunate antagonist through the sheerest good fortune, became subsequently commander in chief of the armies of the United States.

It is the purpose of the writer to follow circumstantially in detail all the movements of this remarkable operation, quoting liberally from the contemporaneous letters and dispatches of the several actors, in order to throw light on the motives for the various maneuvers combinations, and actions recorded, and to trace hour by hour on corrected maps the several positions of the different corps and divisions of both armies as the best means of illustrating the curious story of the fateful undertaking and its results. This faithfully done, it is believed that here will be little left to controversy in the future.

The morning of November 28 found the two armies stationed, as above indicated, on opposite sides of Duck River and in and around Columbia. Forrest's Cavalry, under that skillful leader, had been concentrated the night before, after being relieved from the skirmish line by Hood's Infantry, on Fountain Creek, some five miles southeast of Columbia. The three divisions of Chalmers, Buford, and Jackson, with Biffles's small command, numbered about 5,500 troopers fairly well mounted and equipped.

On the morning of the 28th Forrest was early afield, his three divisions moving rapidly in an easterly direction south of Duck River toward the several fords selected for the crossings. There were no bridges and the river was much swollen with the recent rains, so much so indeed that General Wilson accepted the opinion of citizens (XCIII. 108) that the crossings were unfordable. But Forrest, to whom even large rivers seemed to offer little impediment, pushed rapidly on, and before 4 p.m. had crossed two of the divisions, Chalmers fording the stream at Carr's Mill, seven miles east of Columbia, and Jackson at Lillard's Mill, east of the Lewisburg and Franklin Pikes. Buford, who attempted to cross at Hardison's Mill, the crossing of the Lewisburg and Franklin Turnpike, was confronted by Capron's Brigade, now reinforced to some 1,800 men by the arrival of the 5th Iowa and 7th Ohio Regiments, and was unable up to nightfall to force a passage. But Jackson, who had crossed at Lillard's Mill, an old mill site four miles above, many of the horses swimming in the swift current, and, driven off the picket there, moved rapidly to the flank and rear of Capron, just south of Rally Hill, and, attacking with Ross's Brigade (except the 9th Texas), drove off the rear guard (7th Ohio Cavalry), under Capron in person, capturing one company and some wagons, the Federals retreating in confusion in the direction of Franklin. This left a force of four regiments (5th Iowa, 14th and 16th Illinois, and 8th Michigan) cut off at the ford, numbering 1,500 men (XCIII. 604). These were, under Maj. J. Morris Young, commanding the 5th Iowa Cavalry, immediately formed in the darkness and gallantly charged through Ross's little force of 570 men (XCIII. 760), escaping in the direction of Franklin. This movement permitted Buford to cross, and Forrest's whole command was on the morning of the 29th concentrated in the direction of Hurt's Crossroads, fourteen miles northeast of Columbia, at which point Wilson had likewise concentrated his own forces, now greatly augmented by reinforcement. This movement to eastward by Major General Wilson was suggested by himself to General Schofield after learning that Forrest was forcing the crossing of Duck River at the fords between Davis Ford and the Lewisburg Pike at Hardison's Mills and was pressing Colonel Capron's force at the latter point (XCIII. 1111), the dispatch imparting the information concluding with the words: "I move everything there at once."

This was approved by General Schofield, who at 2 p.m. of the 28th had directed General Wilson to move at once to the Lewisburg and Franklin Pikes and ascertain and report as to the condition of affairs and movements of the enemy. However, at 5:20 P.M. of the same day General Schofield became aware that his left flank had been entirely uncovered, and wrote General Wilson that the Confederate cavalry was crossing the river very near the left of his infantry, and, fearing that the cavalry pickets had all been withdrawn, warned General Wilson that he should at once remedy that mistake. (XCIII. 1112.)

Gen. Thomas J. Wood, commanding the 3d Division 4th Army Corps and posted on the extreme left of General Schofield's line, fronting the Duck River crossing at Columbia, detected this mistake at once and wrote General Stanley that he was informed that the cavalry had all been withdrawn from that flank, and warning him that if the error was not corrected the infantry pickets would be helpless, and that the whole Confederate army might soon be over on that flank without hindrance. (XCIII. 1115.)

General Wilson seems to have obtained the idea that General Forrest's objective point was Nashville via Franklin, and so firmly was he impressed with this idea that in retreating before the Confederate leader next day he rode entirely past the flank of Schofield's forces, retreating along the Franklin Pike in the vicinity of Spring Hill, leaving that hapless commander entirely uncovered, as he reasoned, to keep Forrest off of Nashville. (XCIII. 1144 and 1145.) This error the Confederate cavalry commander joyfully took advantage of by turning his whole force, except a few regiments at Mount Carmel Church, westwardly five miles to Spring Hill without molestation from Wilson, where he rapidly invested and came near capturing the town before Stanley's advance arrived. But more of this hereafter. As before stated, General Schofield had on the night of the 27th withdrawn his entire army to the north bank of the Duck River, moving by the Hampshire Pike and the railroad bridge and ford, two miles below Columbia (northwest) on the river, and taking position with the 4th Army Corps on a ridge across the long tongue-shaped strip of land in the horseshoe bend of the river, one and a half miles north of the town.

General Cox had crossed two brigades of his division on the night of the 25th at the pontoon bridge opposite the town, which was then floated down to the railroad bridge, and intrenched them on a nearer ridge, eight hundred yards from the river, throwing out his pickets to the margin of the river, where they constructed strong rifle pits. This was to prevent the Confederates from forcing a passage in front of the town.

Henderson's Brigade, of Cox's Division, remained on the south side and crossed over with the 3d Division of Stanley's (4th) Army Corps on the night of the 27th, while Ruger's Division, of the 23d Army Corps, crossing on the 25th, had fortified at the railroad bridge, constructing a strong bridgehead there. The movement across the river was designed to take place on the night of the 26th, but was prevented by the rainfall, which was heavy and continuous that night. General Loring's skirmishers discovered the movement as early as 3 A.M. on the 28th, and pushed on to the enemy's skirmish intrenchments, and by daylight the skirmishers of General Walthall's and Stevenson's Divisions occupied the town. (XCIII. 1256.)

Stevenson's Division, except Watkins's Brigade, which was moved down the river to the railroad crossing, at once moved forward through the town to the river bank and engaged the enemy's skirmishers (Reilly's Brigade, Cox's Division, 23d Army Corps) across the river in an animated combat, the Confederate advance being composed of the 3d and 18th Tennessee Regiments, under Col. W. R. Butler, and the 60th North Carolina, which was disposed on the river bank above, so as to enfilade the enemy's intrenched skirmish line, and soon drove the outposts from the margin of the river back to some timber two hundred yards northward. Thus matters remained during the day. Soon after midnight General Hood, who had made preparations for such a movement on the 27th, but was delayed by the sluggish movement of his pontoon train, had perfected his preparations for his startling movement on the enemy's rear, and by 3 A.M. of the 29th moved forward to Davis Ford, about three miles above Columbia, where the evening before he had laid a pontoon bridge under cover of Forrest's movement, which drove Wilson back from the fords on Duck River. General Cheatham's Corps led, with the divisions of Cleburne, Bate, and Brown in the order named, and followed by Stewart's Corps, with the divisions of Loring, Walthall, and French in the order named, and these in turn followed by Johnson's Division, of Lee's Corps, which had been detached for that purpose. All these troops had crossed the river by 7:30 A.M., and moved rapidly by a country highway, the Davis ford and Spring Hill road, toward the latter town, thirteen miles in the rear of Schofield's position at Columbia.

General Lee was left in front of Columbia with Stevenson's and Clayton's Divisions and all the artillery of the army, except one battery to each corps, with orders to press the enemy vehemently, effect a crossing if possible, and be ready to attack Schofield's force as soon as General Hood had, by reaching his rear line of communication, compelled him to retire from his position at Columbia.

The flanking force was composed of seven fine divisions numbering 19,621 effective men, exclusive of officers and camp followers, and to this must be added Forrest's Cavalry Corps of 5,400 effectives, including officers and artillery.

General Lee immediately began to pound away at Schofield's forces in the bend of the river opposite Columbia (Cox's Division, 23d A. C.) with his artillery. This, with the fire of the 20th Alabama Regiment, Col. J. M. Dedman, from the right flank, just upstream, soon cleared the immediate river bank of skirmishers, and a pontoon boat under Captain Ramsey, of the engineers, was run down a steep bank of the river to the water under a scorching fire of the enemy, and served as a ferry on which, by 4 P.M., three regiments of Pettus's Brigade were crossed and formed under cover of the river bank and protecting rifles of the 30th Alabama Regiment, Col. J. K. Elliott, on the southern bank of the stream. This work was handsomely done under the immediate direction of General Stevenson.

This being accomplished, General Pettus charged the enemy's outposts under Reilly, and drove them back to their main line, several hundred yards northward. Reinforced soon after by the remainder of his regiments and Holtzclaw's Brigade, of Clayton's Division, General Pettus presented a strong front, under shelter of which a pontoon bridge was at once laid, over which General Lee was ready to cross his two divisions and press the enemy as soon as they should begin to retire.

This maneuver of General Lee seems to have deceived General Schofield into the belief that General Hood's main force was still in front of him during most of the day of the 29th.

On the day previous (28) at 8:45 in the morning Schofield had telegraphed General Thomas: "My troops and material are all on the north side of Duck River; the withdrawal was completed at daylight this morning without serious difficulty. Cox holds the ford in front of Columbia and Ruger the railroad bridge, which I partially destroyed. Stanley is going into position a short distance in the rear of Cox. I think I can now stop Hood's advance by any line near this and meet in time any distant movement to turn my position. I regret extremely the necessity of withdrawing from Columbia, but believe it was absolute; I will explain fully in time. Reinforcements will have to march from Spring Hill or Thompson's Station. Supplies should be sent to Thompson's Station." (XCIII. 1106.)

A quarter of an hour later he wrote: "I am in doubt whether it is advisable, with reference to future operations, to hold this position or to retire to some point from which we can move offensively. Of course we cannot recross the river here. I could easily have held the bridgehead at the railroad; but it would have been useless, as we could not possibly advance from that point. Please give me your views and wishes."

In the afternoon he informed General Thomas: "The enemy was crossing in force a short distance this side of the Lewisburg Pike at noon to-day, and had driven our cavalry back across the river and the pike at the same time. The force is reported to be infantry, but I do not regard it as very probable. Wilson has gone with his main force to learn the facts, and drive the enemy back if practicable."

By 4 P.M. General Schofield seems to have concluded that Hood might be bent on mischief toward his left flank, and dispatched General Thomas: "If Hood advances on the Lewisburg and Franklin Pike, where do you propose to fight him? I have all the force that is necessary here, and A. J. Smith's troops should be placed with reference to the proposed point of concentration."

At 4:30 P.M. General Wilson dispatched General Schofield by courier (XCIII. 1112): "The enemy's cavalry have crossed the river on the roads leading to Spring Hill. You had better look out for that place. I am doing all I can to carry out your instructions; shall get my force together first. The enemy may turn in your rear between us."

This was in response to General Schofield's order to him at 2:10 P.M. of the same day directing him (Wilson) to move over to the Lewisburg Pike and ascertain the movements of the enemy. (XCIII. 1111.)

After this General Schofield late in the afternoon ordered his supply and ammunition trains to be parked north of Rutherford Creek, four miles north of Columbia, on the Franklin Pike, and General Stanley was directed to move his divisions and take such position on the pike as would best defend the line of Duck River. (XCIII. 1114.)

About this time Gen. Thomas J. Wood wrote General Stanley from his position, one and a half miles north of Columbia and east of the pike: "It seems to me a little strange that General Schofield does not intimate what measures he proposes to adopt to protect ourselves and guard our trains, and still more strange that he does not intimate such measures at once, as the enemy, according to his own statement, has crossed the river in force. It is perfectly patent to my mind if the enemy has crossed in force that General Wilson will not be able to check him. It requires no oracle to predict the effect of the enemy's reaching the Franklin Pike in our rear. I would suggest that, in case there should be any decided advance on our left flank by the enemy, General Kimball's two brigades should be thrown on my left at once, for the position is open and extensive; that without it be closed we could not extricate our trains, possibly not ourselves." (XCIII. 1115.)

General Cox also had by this time become restless, and notified General Schofield as to the insecurity of his position and the danger of the enemy's being able to force a passage in his front. (XCIII. 1115.)

By 3:30 A.M. of November 29 General Thomas, at Nashville, becoming alarmed by the reports of the rapid advance of General Forrest's cavalry (XCIII. 1108), dispatched to General Schofield, saying: "I desire you to fall back from Columbia and take up your position at Franklin, leaving a sufficient force at Spring Hill to contest the enemy's progress until you are securely posted at Franklin."

At 3 A.M. (29th) General Wilson also, from Hurt's Crossroads, on the Lewisburg Pike, sent him a dispatch by courier in haste (XCIX. 1143), notifying him that he had just learned from a Confederate prisoner that the Confederate infantry were expecting every moment to march, and were building three pontoon bridges above Huey's Mill, which they were expecting to complete by 11 P.M. (28th). The dispatch concluded: "I think it very clear that they are aiming for Franklin, and that you ought to get to Spring Hill by 10 A.M. There may be no strong advance of the enemy's cavalry till the infantry have crossed, which will be between now and daylight. Get back to Franklin without delay." (XCIII. 1143.)

This dispatch was received about daylight (XCIII. 341). It was then (8:20 A.M.) that General Schofield dispatched to General Thomas: "General Wilson reports the infantry crossing above Huey's Mill, about five miles from this place (Duck River east of Columbia). I have sent an infantry reconnoissance to learn the fact. If it prove true, I will act according to your instructions." * * * (XCIII. 1137.)

But before sending this dispatch at 8 A.M. he directed General Stanley to move at once with two divisions (Wagner's and Kimball's) to Spring Hill, and hurried all the trains off to the same point from the park north of Rutherford Creek. At this same hour General Ruger was directed to leave a regiment to guard the river at the railroad crossing, two miles below Columbia, and march at once with his division to Spring Hill; but this order was countermanded at 8:45 A.M., before General Ruger could get off. (XCIII. 1142.)

At ten o'clock General Schofield halted General Kimball's Division at Rutherford Creek and wrote General Stanley (10:45 A.M.), who had marched on rapidly toward Spring Hill, as follows (XCIII. 1141): "Wood's reconnoissance shows a considerable force at least on this side of the river. I have halted Kimball's Division this side of the creek and put it in position. I will hold the enemy until dark, and then draw back. Select a good position at Spring Hill covering the approaches and send out parties to reconnoiter on all roads leading east and southeast. Try to communicate with Wilson on the Lewisburg Pike; tell him to cover Franklin and Spring Hill and try not to let the enemy get between us." (XCIII. 1137.)

And immediately the special field orders of the day were issued as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE OHIO,

SPRING HILL, TENN., NOV. 29, 1864.

"Special Field Orders, No. 166.

"No. 1. The army will return to Franklin in the following order—viz.:

"General Stanley, with Wagner's Division, will hold his position at Spring Hill until the army and trains have passed, and will act as rear guard from that point.

"Colonel Stewart's Cavalry, and also Colonel Hammond's, if he be within reach, will cover the flank of the rear guard, and take its place under proper circumstances.

"At dusk this evening General Cox will withdraw all save his picket line, with a strong support, and march direct for Franklin, unless he finds the enemy drives in his pickets, in which case he will halt in the works in the rear of his headquarters until the enemy is checked and the movement can be conducted without danger to the column in the rear.

"General Wood will continue the movement of General Cox, withdrawing by his right and following toward Franklin.

"General Kimball will follow General Wood in like manner.

"General Ruger will hold position on the north bank of Rutherford's Creek until all the troops, including skirmishers, shall have passed, when he will retire as rear guard, passing General Wagner at Spring Hill.

"The pickets along Duck River will be withdrawn at midnight and will march at once to join their commands, except those of General Wood's right, which will halt in General Stanley's works one hour.

"General Ruger's troops at Ducktown will march at eleven o'clock, will move along the railroad, and join the division where the railroad strikes the pike.

"The trains will move without delay to Franklin under such escort as General Stanley may think necessary. If the necessary escort diminish too much the force at Spring Hill, General Stanley will detail from one of his other divisions sufficient force for the rear guard from that point.

"By command of Major General Schofield:

J. A. CAMPBELL,

Major and Assistant Adjutant General."

At 10:45 A.M. Capt. William J. Twining, of the engineers, wrote General Schofield: "Our skirmish line is now two miles from where I left you. One mile in front of us a column of infantry is moving up from Huey's Mill or some point in that vicinity. After I first saw them, they changed the direction of their column behind a hill, and I cannot tell whether they intend to advance or merely to hold us in check. Colonel Post will hold on here till further orders." (XCIII. 1139.)

In the meantime the column of General Hood was marching rapidly northward along a country road from three to four miles east of the Franklin and Columbia Pikes, his leading corps marching with two divisions (Cleburne's and Bate's) in column on the road and Brown's Division about four hundred yards eastward on the flank, so as to at once come into line of battle as a supporting line in rear if attacked. At times the columns would leave the road and move across the country, maintaining a northerly direction, so as to reach the Rally Hill and Spring Hill Turnpike near Rutherford Creek crossing. This was accomplished about 2:30 P.M., and General Hood, riding with General Lowry at the head of the leading brigade of Cleburne's Division, led the column across Rutherford Creek on the Rally Hill Pike. It is worthy of note that no enemy was seen other than a few cavalry stragglers on the entire march until the immediate vicinity of Spring Hill was reached.

During the day General Wilson had kept both General

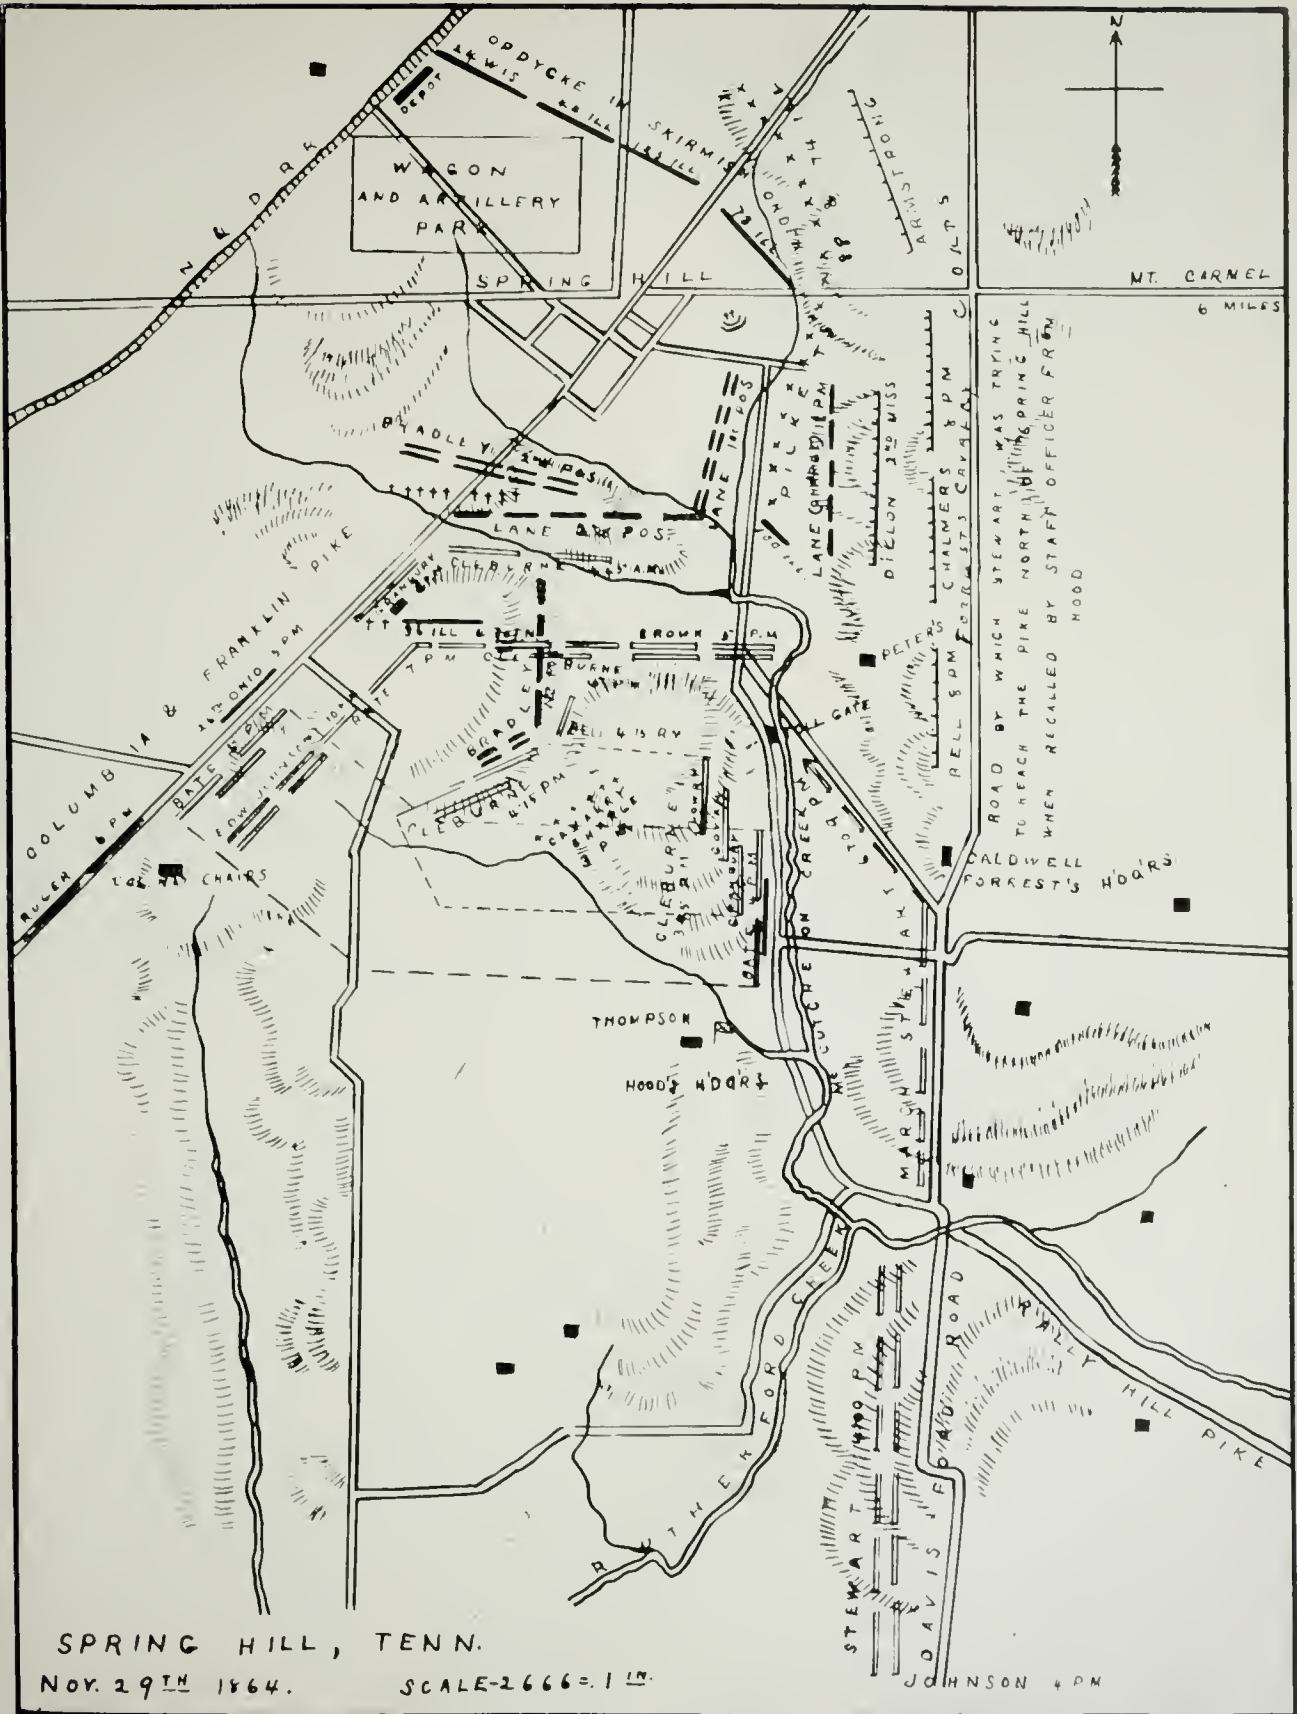

Schofield and General Thomas fully advised of General Forrest's movements. At 10 A.M. he dispatched to General Schofield, through his adjutant general (XCIII. 1144): "The enemy is driving us back rapidly on this road (Lewisburg and Franklin Pike). We are now at Mount Carmel."

And at 12 noon: "The enemy have driven us beyond the Ridge Church. They have gotten possession of the Peytonsville and Bethesda roads, which makes it impossible for them to cross Harpeth farther up than Henderson's Ford. Some of the officers of the command think that Forrest has divided his forces, sending some up on the Davis Ford road; but there is no doubt he has gone to Nashville with his whole force. I will endeavor to cover Franklin as much as possible until you get there." (XCIII. 1144.)

And again at 4:10 P.M., from a position four miles east of Franklin, he wrote: "The enemy, after having pressed my command back this side of Ridge Meetinghouse, has disappeared, I think, moving via Peytonsville toward Nashville. * * * I have heard heavy firing in your direction all day, and feel very solicitous for you. I hope that you will pass the Harpeth to-night. I shall be concentrated again in two or three hours, so as to cover the Brentwood Pike, and be able to reach the Nolensville Pike by daylight; so that should Forrest succeed in reaching Nashville ahead of me, I shall be there very closely behind him."

And at 2 P.M. of the same day he wired General Thomas at Nashville: "My impression is that Forrest is aiming for Nashville via Triune and Nolensville. A part of his force may have cut into Spring Hill; heavy artillery firing heard in that direction since 11 A.M. You had better look out for Forrest at Nashville to-morrow noon; I'll be there before or very soon after he makes his appearance."

But General Forrest had skillfully eluded General Wilson at Mount Carmel Church, to which point he had driven him by 10 A.M. At the church, which lies on a crossroad or pike leading directly westward to Spring Hill, five miles distant, Forrest, after a strong attack, dismounted, on some rail defenses occupied by Col. D. E. Coon's Brigade, who vainly attempted to check the pressure on General Wilson's rear, dislodged Colonel Coon, and, detaching Ross's Brigade of about six hundred men to press the pursuit toward Franklin, turned abruptly to the westward before Wilson's rear guard had disappeared from view, as witnessed by the writer himself, and rode rapidly to Spring Hill. General Wilson was deceived by a flanking movement to his leftward a few minutes before into believing that Forrest had moved with his whole force via Peytonsville to Nashville, and so reported, while he himself retreated rapidly to a point four miles east of Franklin and threw out several brigades toward Triune to try to ascertain Forrest's supposed movements in that direction. (XCIII. 1146.) Forrest, after a rapid ride, reached the front of Spring Hill about noon, and, moving to the left (or southward), dismounted part of his command and prepared at once for offensive operations. Thus it will be seen that General Hood by 3 P.M. had appeared in front of Spring Hill with an army corps 9,000 strong and a corps of cavalry 5,400 strong, with a second army corps (Stewart's and Johnson's Divisions, of Lee's Corps) near by at the crossing of Rutherford Creek, in easy supporting distance. General Schofield's army was still in front of Columbia watching General Lee's maneuvers across the river, except Wagner's Division, 4th Army Corps, under Stanley in person, which had arrived at Spring Hill near noon, and Kimball's Division, 4th Army Corps, which had been halted on the hills south of Rutherford Creek, four miles north of Columbia, and placed in position facing eastward to cover first the movement of the trains (XCIII. 1141) and then the right flank of Schofield's army when it should begin to fall back (XCIII. 113). Schofield himself was just (3 P.M.) starting with Ruger's Division for Spring Hill (XCIII. 342).

All the supply, hospital, and ordnance trains, except a few wagons with each division, and all the artillery except a limited number of guns, eight hundred wheeled vehicles in all, had by 4 P.M. marched to Spring Hill and were parked west of the town on the commons between the village and the depot, some half mile away. The flank movement was certainly successful thus far, and it only remained to reap the results. A reference to the map will show the relative positions of the several divisions of both armies at different hours during the day, and will fully illustrate the execution of Hood's rapid march to the rear of Schofield at Spring Hill.

As soon as Forrest had formed his dismounted troops in line eastward of and before the village he commenced pressing forward with characteristic vigor on the enemy's outlying forces. As his skirmishers moved toward the village, Armstrong's Brigade and part of Buford's Division moving on either side of the Mount Carmel road from the northeast and east and General Chalmers a little later approaching north of the Rally Hill road and crossing McCutcheon's Creek near the tollgate on that road, about a mile south of the village, the head of Wagner's Division, under the immediate command of Gen. D. S. Stanley, corps commander of the 4th Army Corps, came in view on the Columbia Pike.

Hearing from some scouts that a command of cavalry was approaching from the eastward, and also hearing the sound of firing in the vicinity of the town, that accomplished commander at once, with true soldierly instinct, moved Wagner's Division forward at a double-quick. Opdyke's Brigade, in advance, was marched through the town and rapidly deployed, fronting north and northeast and covering the Franklin Pike and the approaches around to the Mt. Carmel road. Brushing away the small cavalry command endeavoring to reach the railroad station to the northwest of Spring Hill from the latter direction. Opdyke then deployed his troops in open skirmish order, the 24th Wisconsin, 44th Illinois, 125th Illinois, and 73d Illinois being deployed in the order named from the railroad station, one-half mile northwest of the village, in a curved line around to the Mount Carmel road. Before Opdyke reached the town the only troops there were four companies of the 73d Illinois under Captain Jones, deployed north of the town on the Franklin Pike to stop stragglers, and two hundred men of the 12th Tennessee under Lieutenant Colonel Hoefling, and the 103d Ohio, detached as a headquarter train guard. The former were the troops which were being driven in northeast of the town when Opdyke arrived. Following Opdyke, Col. John Q. Lane's 1st Brigade, 2d Division, 4th Army Corps, was double-quickened to the east of the town and, deploying rapidly as they ran, in line of battle, with the 28th Kentucky (Colonel Boone) thrown out as skirmishers, charged down the slope and up the hill east of the village and south of the Mount Carmel road, pushing back the 2d Mississippi Cavalry under Colonel Dillon, of Armstrong's Brigade, from the ridge top, about one-half mile east of the town.

Colonel Lane then fell back to the slope of the hill on the outskirts of the town and formed line of battle there, and at once threw up defenses or rifle pits. Meanwhile Gen. L. P.

Bradley's Brigade, arriving also in double-quick time, was deployed on a wooded eminence about one-half mile east of the pike and three-fourths of a mile south of the town, and one-half mile or more detached from the right flank of Lane's Brigade. Here he formed line of battle and threw up rail defenses having his command aligned from right to left in the following manner: 65th Ohio, 15th Missouri, 51st Illinois, and 79th Illinois, while the 42d Illinois was posted about one hundred and fifty yards to the right of, and refused at an angle of forty-five degrees from, the line of battle. The 64th Ohio was soon after deployed as skirmishers. The 26th Ohio had previously been aligned one-half mile southwest of Bradley's right, and parallel with the Columbia Pike, to guard the approaching wagon trains at a crossing of a country road there; and when Bradley was about to be outflanked, the 36th Illinois, detached from Opdyke's Brigade by General Wagner, was double-quickened to, and posted at a point about two hundred and fifty yards from the pike, a little to the northward and rearward of Bradley's right, to support a section of Battery B, Pennsylvania Artillery, placed there by General Stanley to cover the ground between Bradley's right and the Franklin Pike as it approached Spring Hill.

These dispositions were just in time to prevent Forrest's closing in on the village and immense park of wagons and artillery, being the entire train and reserve artillery of Schofield's Army.

Wagner's fine division, thus skillfully interposed by Stanley, numbered 5,689 rank and file (XCIII. 1133), Lane's Brigade consisting of 1,666 men and officers (XCIII. 255) and the other two brigades numbering approximately 2,000 men each. The map will show the Federal formation.

Whether it was the news of Hood's passage of Duck River, just received by him, or of the near approach of Forrest's Cavalry that electrified Stanley into such determined energy, the fact seems to be that he at once grasped the situation and made such prompt and skillful disposition of his forces as not only served to check Forrest (who, flushed with victory, having driven Wilson's great cavalry corps entirely away from Stanley's flank, was now pressing hotly on the latter), but impressed, a few hours later, both Hood and Cheatham with the idea that there was a large force, not less than an army corps, in their front, as we shall see hereafter.

Forrest had detached General Ross's Brigade, of Jackson's Division, at Mount Carmel to follow Wilson several miles, and then turn in toward the railroad at Thompson's Station, three miles north of Spring Hill. This was accomplished by Ross, who, after burning several wagons en route there, and failing to capture the train of cars and engine, which got safely under the guns of a blockhouse at the station, moved south just before dark toward the east of Spring Hill in order to communicate with his division commander (Ross's Report, XCIII. 770). This was the force which gave the alarm to Opdyke's men about sundown on the Franklin Pike.

After Lane's charge, which dislodged Dillon's 2d Mississippi Regiment from the hill one-half mile east of the village, most of the Confederate cavalry in that vicinity moved southward, and were concentrated in the vicinity of the tollgate and Dr. Peters's residence just eastward of Bradley's position. General Forrest, with a detachment of Col. Alexander Chalmers's Regiment, rode to the hill southwest of the tollgate, over which Cleburne subsequently moved, and, carefully inspecting the ground and the turnpike along which the Federal trains were then moving, ordered General Chalmers to take Wilson's Regiment, of Buford's Division, and charge the position of Bradley, thinking it contained only a cavalry detachment. General Chalmers promptly obeying, after telling General Forrest that he believed the rail defenses were occupied by infantry, which Forrest refused to believe, charged with his escort and Wilson's Regiment (mounted) on the rail piles, and was quickly and sharply repulsed by Bradley's men, which caused Forrest laughingly to remark in his quaint way: "They was in there sure enough. wasn't they, Chalmers?"

[NOTE.—This charge, though omitted in his report by General Bradley, was mentioned both by General Wagner and General Forrest, and is affirmed by General Chalmers, who led it.]

After this there was pretty constant skirmishing along the entire east front for half an hour, when Cleburne's Infantry arrived in the vicinity of the tollgate and formed line of battle. About 2:30 P.M. the 64th Ohio, detached as skirmishers, moved forward and reached the vicinity of Dr. Peters's residence, east of the tollgate, but was there assailed by dismounted cavalry of Chalmers's and Buford's command and hastily driven back on Bradley's position, whence they were sent to the rear of his right flank to support the 42d Illinois in that quarter.

[NOTE.—It was this regiment probably, as it lay in some rail pen defenses after being driven back near Bradley's position in the edge of the woods in his front, that was charged by Chalmers with his escort and Wilson's Regiment (mounted) and that so sharply repulsed him. This was just before Cleburne's attack on Bradley's right.]

General Hood, riding with Lowry's Brigade at the head of his column, reached Rutherford Creek about 3 P.M., as before stated. Quickly he pressed the crossing of the stream by Cleburne's Division, which he directed General Cheatham, commanding the corps, to send forward to the vicinity of the tollgate on the Rally Hill Pike and there form them and press forward on the enemy. General Cheatham was further instructed to remain at the creek and urge forward the passage of Bate's Division and move it forward to support Cleburne.

[NOTE.—Cheatham's narrative and those of Generals Bate, Brown, Lowry, and others, published in the Courier-Journal, of Louisville, Ky., December 4, 1881, are hereinafter quoted from as required in this narrative.]

General Cleburne, halting his division of three brigades (one being absent) of a little more than three thousand men about midway between the tollgate and Captain Thompson's residence, formed them en echelon fronting westward, Granbury on the left and Lowry on the right, with Govan in the center, and about 4 P.M. moved forward (westward) toward the turnpike. (General Govan's narrative.) At the same time General Forrest formed Bell's Brigade, of Buford's Division, on Cleburne's right to advance in line with him, this being the only one of his brigades with any ammunition left, and it had only four rounds. This movement of Cleburne's, and the direction of it, was ordered by General Hood in person, who had ridden to the front, General Cheatham being still at the creek pressing the crossing of Bate's Division. (Captain Mangum's narrative.)

General Bate's Division came up while the left of Cleburne's Division was passing out of view over a hill to the left of the Rally Hill road. (Cheatham's narrative.) General Bate's line was formed just south of Cleburne's position of formation, and when ready was directed to move westward by General Hood in person, General Cheatham not being then at hand. (Bate's Report, XCIII. 742.)

In the meantime General Brown, reaching the creek (Rutherford's), to the right of Cleburne and Bate, moved westward to the point of common passage, and then, directed to move by a country road northward in the direction of Dr. Caldwell's house, and when near that place, to the northwestward, reached the Rally Hill Pike again near and a little north of the tollgate. He at once went into position fronting northward and at right angles to Cleburne's formation, but almost directly facing the town. From this point he moved forward about five hundred yards and halted with his right across the Rally Hill Pike in the bend of McCutcheon Creek, and his left extending westward to a point some six hundred yards east of Bradley's center, where it remained during the night without further movement. (Brown's narrative.)

Cleburne, moving forward in the alignment with Bell on his right, drove in the Federal skirmishers rapidly, and about fifteen minutes past four o'clock struck with his right brigade (Lowry's) the right of Bradley's line behind its rail defenses on a slight elevation with woods in the front and rear.

[NOTE.—General Cleburne and General Forrest both rode in the rear of Govan's Brigade, in the center of the line, and, in company with General Govan during this charge, with drawn swords personally directed the movement. (General Govan's narrative.)]

This he at once charged, Lowry and Govan making a half wheel to the right, so as to conform to the right flank of Bradley, which, as we have seen, consisted of the 42d Illinois and the 64th Ohio, separated about one hundred and fifty yards from Bradley's right, and refused from his line of battle at an angle of forty-five degrees. Bell's Brigade halted at the farm fence in the edge of the woods in front of Bradley, from which position he had driven the 64th Ohio skirmishers, and lay down behind the fence, firing heavily on Bradley's front. As Lowry swung his left around, Govan conforming, they overlapped the right of the refused line and took it in reverse, which caused the whole right wing of Bradley's to crumble, involving not only the two regiments on the right but the 65th Ohio also; and as the eager Confederates pressed forward, the remaining regiments (the 15th Missouri and the 51st and 79th Illinois, the two last of which had not been attacked in front) also were driven back, and all except the 79th Illinois fled in disorder to the outskirts of the town, where they were rallied by Generals Stanley and Wagner under the cover of eighteen guns and again formed in line.

[NOTE.—These were composed of Battery A, 1st Ohio Light Artillery, four guns; Battery G, 1st Ohio Light Artillery, six guns; Battery B, Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, four guns; and Battery M, 4th United States Artillery, four guns. (XCIII. 320-322.)]

The stubbornness of the 79th Illinois and a few other troops which fell back slowly from Bradley's left flank, deploying first behind a fence (CXIII. 279) and then another, caused General Lowry to fear that he would be assailed in flank, and he called General Cleburne's attention to the line, when that commander moved against them with Govan's Brigade and rapidly drove them back upon their main line, on an eminence across a small ravine south of town. (XCIII. 114.) Granbury, moving on Lowry's left and swinging in conformity with his line, soon encountered the 36th Illinois and the two gun sections of Battery B, Pennsylvania Volunteers, placed on General Bradley's right rear, drove the regiment back on the guns (XCIII. 336), and then back to their main line, near the town.

[NOTE.—This attack on the 36th Illinois and section of Battery B is described mostly in reports of Federal officers. It is not mentioned by Confederate writers who describe the battle. The section of artillery is referred to by the latter, but not the regiment.]

Moving after this charge rapidly by the right flank in column, General Granbury double-quickened his brigade about half a mile on Lowry's and Govan's left, passing across the fire of the batteries on the pike near the town, and, being recalled by General Cleburne, moved back by the left flank and formed under cover of the farm fence almost in front of the first position of the two gun section and parallel with the pike, about two hundred yards distant, and remained there until after dark. (Mangum's narrative, also St. Collins's narrative.)

While this charge was being made Generals Stanley and Wagner, seeing that Bradley's Brigade would be driven back on the town, concentrated the artillery of four batteries—in all eighteen guns—near the pike at the outskirts of the village, and directed Colonel Lane to bring up his brigade in order that they might rally Bradley's men under cover of that command. Colonel Lane, at once changing front forward on his right battalion, double-quickened his men southward and westward, so as to reach the left front of Bradley's routed men, and formed line of battle facing Lowry and Govan, throwing out a regiment and battalion (100th Illinois and one company, 40th Indiana) on his left, so as to threaten Cleburne's right flank, which caused him to halt and re-form his two brigades. (Lane's Report, XCIII. 255.)

At this juncture General Cleburne's horse (Red Pepper) was wounded by a shell. As soon as Cleburne's line was re-formed and ready to advance, Granbury on the pike and Govan and Lowry on Bradley's and Lane's new position, Colonel Bostick, of General Cheatham's staff, appeared with an order from General Cheatham directing General Cleburne not to move forward, but to remain where he was until further orders. "But for the order brought by Colonel Bostick," remarked Adjutant General Mangrum, of Cleburne's staff, "Cleburne would have been on the pike and had possession of Spring Hill in less than ten minutes." (Mangrum's narrative. But see Cheatham's narrative, post.)

It was now near sunset, and General Cleburne remained in line of battle until nightfall, and then went into bivouac, Granbury's Brigade being withdrawn about two hundred yards and formed on his left, the line of the brigade being refused, so as to conform to the direction of the Columbia and Franklin Pike.

[NOTE.—Narrative Lieutenant Collins, A. C. G. General Granbury's Brigade, and Bate's Report, XCIII. 742.]

General Bate, moving westward by direction of General Hood (Bate's Report, XCIII. 742) with orders to reach the pike and swing around thence toward Columbia, moved forward in line of battle more than a mile, and, finding from the sound of firing at Cleburne's front, on his right, that that officer had changed direction, also changed his direction slightly to the right. After getting a guide and learning of the exact course of the turnpike, changing again to the right, he came into the pike to the north of Col. Nat Cheairs's residence, and, finding the 26th Ohio Regiment there, attacked it with his sharpshooters under Major Caswell, followed by his whole division, and was rapidly driving them across the pike when he was overtaken by an order from General Cheatham through Lieutenant Schell to change direction to the rightward and ascertain and form on General Cleburne's left. (Bate's Report, XCIII. 741.)

This he did, moving northeastward; and after ascertaining the left flank of Granbury's Brigade, which was refused, so as to protect Cleburne's flank from attack in the direction of the Columbia and Franklin Pike, he formed, fronting northward with his left brigade in turn thrown back to protect his flank from the Federals passing along the pike toward Spring Hill, and went into bivouac for the night. General Johnson's Division, of Lee's Corps, temporarily attached to Cheatham's Corps, was moved westward from the Rutherford Creek crossing and formed fronting the Columbia and Franklin Pike in extension of Bate's left brigade.

Up to and including the operations above described there is no dispute as to the movements, nor is it alleged that there was any failure on the part of any commander to execute his orders promptly and efficiently on the side of the Confederates. But from this time on the matter has heretofore been involved in much doubt and uncertainty, and numberless articles have been written by persons more or less well informed as to the causes which led to the failures on the part of the several Confederate subordinate commanders to take advantage of the desperate situation of the Federal forces, not only those of Wagner's Division guarding the immense reserve artillery, ordnance and supply train in the village, but the main body under Schofield as well. A glance at the map will show the situation at sundown. Opdyke's Brigade still stood on the extended skirmish line north of the town and more than a mile in the rear of Bradley's and Lane's new positions. Those commanders, as before seen, had re-formed their brigades south of the village on a line extending from a point west of the Franklin Pike for half a brigade front to a point somewhat west of the Rally Hill Pike as it entered the town, the two pikes approaching each other as they neared the village until at the Federal line they were not much more than half a mile apart. Lane's movement to save Bradley had entirely uncovered, except by his skirmishers, the town to the eastward from Opdyke's right to his (Lane's) new line southward, a space of about three-fourths of a mile. Confronting Bradley and Lane on the southward and about seven hundred yards distant were Cleburne's and Brown's Divisions in battle formation, numbering fully 6,785 men (our brigade absent), and curiously enough the same two divisions which next day at Franklin ran over the same two brigades in the center line of the Federal works, almost without firing a gun until they had reached the latter's intrenchments or rifle pits.

Southwest of these two divisions and in easy supporting distance was Bate's Division, 2,100 strong, just approaching and firing into the Federals on the Franklin Pike. To the east was Forrest's whole force except one brigade (Ross's, of Jackson's Division), say 5,000 dismounted men, fronting the line abandoned by Lane when he went to the support of Bradley; and to the southeastward, about two miles, at Rutherford Creek, lay Stewart's Corps and Johnson's Division, of Lee's Corps, say 10,700 men in line of battle, fronting westward toward the Columbia and Franklin Pike. The total Confederate effective force present on the field was 25,021.

Schofield's main force, except Ruger's Division, en route to Spring Hill, and yet fully six miles away, was in battle formation from Rutherford Creek to Duck River, from eight to ten miles south of Spring Hill, where it remained until 6 P.M.

From this hour the true occurrences of the fateful afternoon and night must be gathered from the narratives of not only Generals Cheatham, Brown, Bate, Lowry, Stewart, and others published years ago in the Courier-Journal as part of General Cheatham's defense, but also from the additional narratives of a number of other well-informed and in some cases distinguished persons collected by the author and now for the first time printed.

It is to be hoped that the narrative will elucidate the mystery that has so long hung over the occurrences of the afternoon and night of the 29th of November and leave little for further investigation by the future historian.

At about 5 p.m., when Cleburne had re-formed his lines after the attack on and overthrow of Bradley's Brigade and had connected on his right with General Brown's Division, there were three courses still open to General Hood—viz.:

1. To push Brown and Cleburne forward on Spring Hill with the energy, if necessary, displayed by those commanders next day at Franklin, on which occasion they charged over the same two brigades, now confronting them at Spring Hill, without faltering, and drive Wagner's Division, in its scattered condition, from the town, taking possession of the great wagon park, and to follow the movement by leaving Forrest to look after them, while Cheatham's three divisions changed front to the rear, confronting Schofield as he approached, and Stewart and Johnson should stand ready to strike him in flank next morning, while Lee, with his two remaining divisions, pressed him in the rear. Such a movement would most likely have resulted in the destruction of Schofield's command, though a hot battle would probably have ensued.

2. Another course would have been to have thrown Cleburne or Bate across the pike south of Spring Hill in front of Schofield, while Stewart and Johnson were pressed forward on his right flank and Brown's Division was interposed to prevent Stanley giving succor to his chief, which he most certainly would have endeavored to do, notwithstanding the necessity of guarding the trains committed to the charge. This movement would have scattered Hood's command more than in the first case and left a powerful division of the enemy, 5,600 strong, in an embarrassing position on his right flank.

3. Still another course would have been to have moved Stewart northward to the east of Spring Hill, reaching the pike, say, a mile north of the village, his line extending south to about the right of Brown's Division, while Brown, Cleburne, Bate, and Johnson were deployed along and facing the pike to the southward of Spring Hill, ready to attack when Schofield moved up to the village.

This plan might have accomplished the desired purpose, but would have resulted probably in a junction of Schofield's and Stanley's forces, and given Schofield access to his wagons, ammunition trains, and artillery, without which he could have maintained himself but for a short time.

The facts seem to show that Hood actually attempted each of these maneuvers in turn, and failed in all of them.

The reasons for their failures will now be inquired about so far as the information at hand can be made to develop them.

Beginning at five o'clock, after Cleburne's successful initial attack, General Cheatham's statement will be quoted first from his narrative above referred to, and then General Brown's and other officers in connection with the failure of Cleburne and Brown to carry out the first plan of attack agreed upon by Generals Hood and Cheatham—viz.: To move their divisions directly forward on Lane's and Bradley's Brigades, in front of the village on the south, and drive Wagner from the town.

General Cheatham says, quoting only such parts of the narrative as relate to the attack of Cleburne and Brown: "Shortly after Bate's Division had disappeared over the same range of hills I heard firing toward Cleburne's right, and just then General Brown's Division had come up. I thereupon ordered Brown to proceed to the right, turn the range of hills over which Cleburne and Bate had crossed, and to form line of battle and to attack to the right of Cleburne. * * * After Brown had reached the position indicated to him and had formed line of battle, he sent to inform me that it would be certain disaster for him to attack, as the enemy's line extended beyond his right several hundred yards. I sent him word to throw back his right brigade and make the attack. I had already sent couriers after General Bate to bring him back and direct him to join Cleburne's left. Going to the right of my line, I found Generals Brown and Cleburne, and the latter reported that he had re-formed his division. I then gave orders to Brown and Cleburne that as soon as they could connect their lines they should attack the enemy, who were then in sight, informing them at the same time that General Hood had just told me that General Stewart's column was close at hand and that General Stewart had been ordered to go to my right and place his command across the pike. I furthermore said to them that I would go myself and see that General Bate was placed in position to connect with them, and immediately rode to the left of the line for that purpose."

In an article on the campaign published in the New York Evangelist of May 2, 1880, over the name of Henry M. Field there is quoted from a letter written by Maj. Joseph Vaulx, of the staff of General Cheatham, the following narrative relative to the occasions here noted. It will be observed, however, that the statement of Major Vaulx, though written several years later, does not in some material respects agree with the statements of either General Cheatham or General Brown. Major Vaulx is quoted as saying: "Cheatham's Corps was in advance on the march. As it approached Spring Hill he was ordered by General Hood to form it in line of battle in front of the Federal army, which was already in position, an order which he promptly obeyed, forming it from left to right as each division came up—Bate on the left, Cleburne in the center, and John C. Brown (who commanded Cheatham's old division) on the right. As Brown was the last to arrive, Cheatham pointed out his place to the right of Cleburne, and then gave his orders, as soon as his division was formed in two lines, to move his right brigade forward and attack the Federals, who were posted south and west of Spring Hill, with their line curved around on the east side of the town. The drawing will show the exact position of both sides. Cheatham told Brown that he would order Cleburne to attack on hearing his guns, and that as soon as Cleburne became engaged he would order Bate also to advance. With this Cheatham turned and rode back to give the order to Bate, expecting every moment to hear the signal from behind that the battle was begun, and kept asking impatiently: 'Why don't we hear Brown's guns?' The reason was soon explained. While Brown was forming his division General Strahl, who commanded his right brigade, reported to him that he had discovered a line of Federal infantry on a wooded hill in such a position that the moment he [Strahl] swung forward to the attack we would be exposed to fire on both the flank and in the rear. On hearing this Brown went to Strahl, who pointed out to him the position of the Federal line, and, seeing it, sent two staff officers to report the situation to Cheatham, who, not hearing the guns, had said to his staff: 'Let us go and see what is the matter.' On the way to Brown he met the officer who was coming to report the situation on the right, and, hearing it, said, 'Go with me and report to General Hood just what you have said to me,' which, being done, General Hood replied to General Cheatham: 'If that is the case, do not attack, but order your troops to hold the position they are in for the night.'

As to the events narrated in these recollections of General Cheatham and Major Vaulx the statement of General Brown, published together with General Cheatham's narrative, is now quoted literally. After describing his arrival with his division on the Rally Hill Pike just north of the tollgate and near the outskirts of Spring Hill, General Brown says: "This was within an hour or an hour and a half of sunset. I could distinctly see the enemy in force, both of infantry and artillery, at Spring Hill; but did not, and perhaps could not at that point, see either troops or wagons moving on the Columbia Pike. Forrest's Cavalry were on higher ground northeast of my position. I was ordered to form line of battle and take Spring Hill. Gist's Brigade and the detachment from Strahl had not reported. I formed my line as speedily as worn troops could move, and after throwing forward a skirmish line advanced four or five hundred yards, when I discovered a line of the enemy thrown out of Spring Hill across and threatening my right flank, and I then discovered for the first time that General Forrest's Cavalry, which I had been assured would protect my right, had been ordered to another part of the field, leaving me without any protection on my right flank or support in the rear. I had neither artillery nor cavalry, and was left in a position where I must meet with inevitable disaster if I advanced on Spring Hill. A hasty consultation with my brigade commanders resulted in a determination to suspend the advance and confer with the corps commander. I need not remind you that in a very few minutes you were upon the field and fully approved of what had been done, as also did General Hood a little later, when he directed that the attack should be delayed until the arrival of Generals Stewart and Gist, and in the meantime that the whole command should be held under orders to advance at a moment's notice. General Gist's Brigade reported a little after nightfall, and was immediately placed in position on my right. General Stewart's Corps came up later and went into bivouac on the stream in the rear of my right, where it remained until the following morning. I received no further orders that evening or during the night to advance or change my position."

Here is a distinct contradiction. General Cheatham declares that, after receiving word from General Brown that he was outflanked and giving him orders to throw back his right brigade and attack anyway, he rode in person to Brown's right, where he met Cleburne and Brown in person and told them to connect their lines, and as soon as this could be accomplished to attack, and that he would go personally and find Bate and bring him up to their support, and at once rode off for that purpose.

General Brown, on the other hand, says that at the interview mentioned both General Cheatham and General Hood, who was present, directed him to remain in line, but not to attack until Gist arrived and Stewart moved up on the flank.

Which was in error? That is the important inquiry; for here was not only the turning point of the battle, but of the campaign as well, an hour pregnant with the most fateful consequences to a nation.

General Cheatham believed that he had given the orders to Brown to attack, and the sound of his guns was to be the signal for Cleburne to move forward. (Vide Cheatham's and Vaulx's narratives ante.) If he was mistaken, why did he ride after Bate to bring him to Brown's aid? Why did he ask repeatedly during the ride: "Why don't we hear Brown's guns?" (Vaulx's narrative.) Why did not Cleburne, that ever-alert commander, attack on Brown's left unless he was waiting for Brown's guns to give the signal?

There were one or two incidents which occurred just before dark while General Cheatham was gone which seem to give color to General Brown's statement that he had no orders, or at least to show that he declared to several persons during that late hour that he was without orders.

General Chalmers relates that while General Brown's Division was standing idly facing the town he rode down to General Brown's position and, addressing the General, asked him why he did not advance and attack. "General Brown," relates General Chalmers, "with whom I was on most excellent terms and who was notably a most agreeable man in his manners answered me, as I thought, very curtly, saying: 'I have no orders.' His tone somewhat nettled me, and I replied in much the same tone to him: 'General, when I was circumstanced as you are at Shiloh, I attacked without orders.' Saying this, I rode off, and did not see him again during the afternoon." [Personal statement of General Chalmers to the writer.]

In a letter written subsequently to the writer General Chalmers states: "I remember very distinctly seeing Gen. John C. Brown at Spring Hill on the evening of the day before the battle of Franklin. I cannot say exactly where it was, as I was then and am now unfamiliar with the locality. I know it was near a house on a hill from which could be seen the retreating wagon trains of the Federals moving rapidly along the pike toward Nashville. I rode up to him and pointed to the retreating enemy, and told him I could pilot him to where he could cut off their retreat. He replied that he had no orders to attack the enemy. I replied to him that at Shiloh I had attacked the enemy without orders, and won compliments by it, and he could do the same. He replied: 'I would prefer to wait for orders.' I do not remember the exact hour of the evening, but there was time enough to have struck a decisive blow to the enemy, in my opinion."

It is also related by Capt. H. M. Neely, then assistant adjutant general of Carter's Brigade, in Brown's Division, that the failure of the division commander to attack was a subject of much comment along the line while the command was waiting in line of battle across the Rally Hill Pike. Captain Neely says: "Late in the afternoon, when General Brown had remained quietly in his position in front of Spring Hill for a long time, with the enemy in full view and at a short distance, Maj. John Ingram and I, having nothing else to do, rode out as far to the front as we could prudently to look the field over and find out what was going on. We could plainly see the enemy passing along the Spring Hill Pike, and there seemed to be a great amount of hurry and confusion in their movements. They did not appear to be in large force, and doubtless fully understood their perilous situation. We turned about, and on reaching Brown's line met General Carter, who was lying down under a tree, and asked if he knew why an attack was not made, and he replied: 'No; I am not in command.' A little farther to the rear we met General Brown, and told him of what we had seen and our impressions of the situation in our front, and put the same question to him, and his reply was: 'I don't know; I have no orders.' We then told him in a pleasant way that if he would take the responsibility of beginning the attack without orders he could safely count on a 'new feather in his cap,' as it would be a quick and easy matter to capture or destroy Schofield's Corps in its present condition. At that he laughed and said: 'No; I must wait for orders.' I am not able to state the precise time when the conversation with General Brown took place, but the day was nearly spent. A little later darkness came on, and the troops were ordered in bivouac for the night."

The writer has also obtained the following statements, throwing new light on these events. The Right Reverend Bishop Ellison Capers, of South Carolina, then Col. Ellison Capers, who commanded the 24th South Carolina Regiment in Gist's Brigade, says in a letter to the author: "I was colonel commanding the 24th South Carolina Volunteers, Gist's Brigade, Cheatham's Division, Hardee's Corps. General Cheatham was commanding the corps and Gen. John C. Brown was commanding our division. The points of special importance in your letter of inquiry refer to the time when we were in position ready to attack at Spring Hill and the extent of the Federal line of battle in our front, and particularly as to its extent on our right flank. The other inquiry as to what transpired at division headquarters, etc., I knew nothing whatever. I give you the extent of my knowledge and recollections. Sorry I cannot now refresh my memory by a reference to my notes taken at the time and sent by me to the War Department Record Office. We (Cheatham's Division) were in position immediately in front of Spring Hill and in line of battle parallel with the road on which the Federal forces were forming, moving, and in great confusion, in full time to make the attack before dusk. My own regiment was ready to move, and so was Gist's Brigade, by a few moments after sundown. We were in momentary expectation of moving and in full view of the confusion at Spring Hill. We could not understand why we did not attack, and every man felt and I heard hundreds remark that for some cause we were losing a grand opportunity. About dusk General Gist (and I think General Strahl) and I, with several staff officers, rode out on our brigade right and up the hill toward the Federal line. They were pulling down fences and tearing off plank from houses and evidently putting their men in position in our front and on our right, but we could not see distinctly. We heard their commands and the tramp of the horses and men and the rumble and rattle of wheels most distinctly; indeed, we were so near that as I turned to ride off I emptied my pistol at the sound of voices in our front. Now as to the extent of the Federal line on our right: I am confident that when we were first formed for attack before dusk their line did not overlap ours. This was precisely what we felt—viz., that we could take the road on their left (our right) and block their way. As dark came on we could hear them moving to our right. When it was light enough to see, I could see no troops on the Franklin side of Spring Hill; but we heard firing on our extreme right, which we understood at the time was Forrest engaging the Federal cavalry. This is really the extent of my knowledge and recollection. I believed at the time, and I have been satisfied in my mind ever since, that we lost a grand chance at Spring Hill. I am as sure as we can be of anything which was yet to be tried that an attack at Spring Hill like that Cheatham made at Franklin the next afternoon would have given us an easy victory and the possession of General Schofield's line of retreat. He was an able general, and commanded veterans; and the defense he made at Franklin showed that an easy victory, no matter what the force of the attack, was not then for Hood. But at Spring Hill the line was being formed (whatever its strength) when we were ready to assail it. It was in confusion and on a retreat, and did not extend beyond our right."

From a brother of a deceased staff officer then with the staff of Cheatham's old division this statement, preserved in the family annals, has been obtained. It is of much importance as showing how the failure to attack by Brown's Division was considered at division headquarters. The narrative says: "General Brown's Division was on the right of the Confederate line at Spring Hill on November 29, 1864. When the formation for the attack was complete, General Cheatham came to General Brown's position and asked him if he was ready to advance. General Brown replied that he was, and that his skirmishers were already thrown forward. General Cheatham then directed General Brown to advance and attack the Federal position with energy, saying: 'I will go and direct the other commanders along the line to advance as soon as they hear your guns.' General Cheatham then rode off with his staff to the left. About this time the Federal commander threw out a regiment across General Brown's front which, in case of his advance, would overlap his right. General Brown hesitated in face of this new condition to advance. His staff officers (Cheatham's old division staff), or some of them, urged him to press forward and make the attack. General Brown replied that the responsibility of attacking a longer line and exposing his flank was a great one, and he did not care to assume it himself. He said that if General Cheatham were there he doubted if he would, under the changed condition of affairs, attack himself. Capt. John Ingram, who was present (and who had been drinking some), said: 'General, if you will give me your escort company, I will drive that regiment away.' General Brown replied: 'You may consider yourself under arrest, Captain Ingram.' General Brown, being again urged to attack, said he would go and overtake General Cheatham and report to him the present situation. Before General Cheatham was found it was dark and too late to move."

The Federal regiment referred to was, as heretofore stated, the 100th Illinois and Company F, 40th Indiana, thrown out by Col. John Q. Lane to the left of his brigade at the end of Cleburne's charge to threaten Cleburne's flank. Of this maneuver Colonel Lane says in his report (XCIII. 255): "I moved the 100th Illinois and Company F, 40th Indiana, to my left, so as to hit the enemy in flank, which caused him to stop and re-form his lines. Before he could again advance, the darkness of night made our position secure." There were no other Federal troops in front of Brown's center and right during the afternoon. Those at whom Colonel Capers fired his pistol after dark were troops placed at the edge of the village after night by General Schofield to protect the flank of his retreating column along the pike, and who were endeavoring to barricade themselves.

There are few other sources of information remaining to be derived from men who are likely to be informed reliably as to the occurrences of this evening, as relates to Brown and Cleburne's failure to attack before dark. Cleburne was killed next day at Franklin, as were also Gist, Strahl, and John C. Carter, brigade commanders in Brown's Division; while Gen. G. W. Gordon, the surviving brigade commander, was captured and made no report. General Gordon is still living, but has, he states, no personal knowledge of these matters.

General Brown wrote out a statement of these matters before his death. It is not accessible to the public, nor is it known what light, if any, it would throw on the occurrences of the fateful evening if published. A few staff officers who might be able to elucidate much that is mysterious about the matter still survive; but if such knowledge exists in their minds, they have thus far declined to disclose any part of it to the world.

Two other statements will be quoted as bearing on the issue. Gen. A. P. Stewart relates [NOTE.—A personal statement made to the writer in 1895] that on the early afternoon of the 30th, the day succeeding these occurrences, "General Hood complained to me that General Cheatham would not obey his orders to attack, and said that he had sent staff officer after staff officer to him to urge him on, and finally sent Governor Harris. I did not say it, but it was on my tongue to say that 'You, General, ought to have taken command yourself and made the attack.'"

The other statement is by Major Vanlx (quoted ante), who says: "As we were on the march to Franklin I was riding by General Brown, and he said to me: 'General Hood is mad about the enemy getting away last night, and he is going to charge the blame of it on somebody. He is as wrathly as a rattlesnake this morning, striking at everything. As he passed along to the front a while ago he rode up to me and said: "General Brown, in the movement to-day I wish you to bear in mind this military principle: that when a pursuing army comes up with the retreating enemy he must be immediately attacked. If you have a brigade in front as advance guard, order its commander to attack as soon as he comes up with him. If you have a regiment in advance and it comes up with the enemy, give the colonel orders to attack him; if there is but a company in advance, and if it overtakes the entire Yankee army, order the captain to attack it forthwith; and if anything blocks the road in front of you to-day, don't stop a minute, but turn out into the fields or woods and move on to the front.'"

The writer is fully conscious of the fact that the voices of the principal actors in that eventful drama are stilled in death, and that it is not permissible to even the earnest historian to wander in the fields of surmise and conjecture as to those motives and secrets which they have chosen to carry with them unuttered to the grave. Only from what is disclosed can we legitimately draw conclusions that are just both to the actors and to the truth of history.

All the foregoing statements taken together clearly establish that General Cheatham was correct in his recollections, and that he did order Brown and Cleburne to attack Spring Hill as soon as they could connect their lines after Cleburne had re-formed his division and drive the force in front of them (Lane's and Bradley's little brigades, as it turned out) through the town. And it may be safely assumed from Major Vanlx's statement that the sound of Brown's guns was to be the signal for Cleburne to begin the attack in his quarter of the field. Such an attack would have given us the town in thirty minutes.

The incident mentioned by Major Vanlx of Strahl seeing the enemy on his right and pointing them out to Brown and of Brown sending the staff officer to Cheatham, then returning from his quest of Bate, and of Cheatham going with the staff officer to Hood, who replied, "If that is the case, do not attack, but hold your troops in the position they are in for the night," is apparently a confusion of time and incidents. For it is perfectly clear that after General Brown first notified General Cheatham that he was outflanked and was ordered in turn to throw back his right brigade and attack, that General Cheatham, riding to Brown's position, there met Brown and Cleburne, and in pursuance of urgent orders from Hood directed them to attack as soon as they could connect their lines, and then rode off to find Bate. And it is further evident that after giving this order Cheatham did not see General Hood again until, after returning from his ride to Bate's position, he went down to Hood's headquarters at the Thompson House, all of which General Cheatham tells us himself, and adds: "I was never more astonished than when General Hood informed me that he had concluded to postpone the attack till daylight. The road was still open—orders to remain quiet until morning and nothing to prevent the enemy from marching to Franklin." If General Cheatham was astonished at this late hour at hearing such a statement from General Hood, it is not possible that he received such instructions from General Hood earlier in the afternoon before darkness had fallen and while he was on his way to the front to learn why Brown did not obey his order to begin the attack and give the signal to Cleburne by opening with his guns on the enemy.

What could have been General Brown's motive in delaying the attack after receiving explicit orders? Was he waiting for his remaining brigade (Gist's)? Col. Ellison Capers, of the 24th South Carolina Regiment in that brigade, says in his report (XCIII, 736) that the brigade arrived and took position at sundown about the time Cleburne re-formed his line and Brown was ordered to attack, and in his narrative quoted above says, "In full time to make the attack before dark," and waited impatiently for orders to attack.

Was he waiting for General Stewart to move up an army corps and take position on his right flank to enable him to drive a brigade of the enemy from his front? Such a suggestion is in itself preposterous. Or did he (General Brown) in any way misunderstand his orders as to the nature of attack to be made? This cannot be, for he tells us himself that he had no orders.

[NOTE.—Brown's narrative; also Chalmers's and Neely's statements.]

General Brown was a man of great energy and force of character, was possessed of strong military acumen and splendid courage. He said once playfully in the writer's presence during the Georgia campaign that he was "made a sort of military convenience in the Army of Tennessee, and was shifted around by the commanding general into all the hard places."

When General Cheatham was promoted to the command of Hood's Corps and afterwards of Hardee's Corps, General Brown was appointed to command that officer's fighting division, a most complimentary assignment in itself. The true reasons for this inexplicable failure on General Brown's part to obey the orders which General Cheatham declares he gave will perhaps never be ascertained unless indeed his unpublished statement should be given to the public and should contain the long-sought explanation. General Brown's reasons, so far as he gave them in his lifetime, are, as already quoted from the article in the Courier-Journal: "I had neither artillery nor cavalry, and I was left in a position where I must meet with inevitable disaster if I advanced on Spring Hill. A hasty consultation with my brigade commanders resulted in a determination to suspend the advance and confer with the corps commander. I need not remind you that in a very few minutes you were upon the field and fully approved of what had been done, as also did General Hood a little later when he directed that the attack should be delayed until the arrival of Generals Strahl and Gist, and in the meantime that the whole command should be held under orders to advance at a moment's notice. General Gist's Brigade reported a little after nightfall, and was immediately placed in position on my right. General Stewart's Corps came up later and went into bivouac on the stream in the rear of my right, where it remained until the following morning. I received no further orders that evening or during the night to advance or change my position."

This statement is very direct and shows that General Brown did not seem to understand that he had been peremptorily ordered to attack the enemy, as General Cheatham declares, and the staff understood, and this is given color by his statements to Cheatham, Neely, and others on the field, as quoted above. Such things sometimes occur on the battlefield, and a misapprehension of orders often leads to fatal consequences.

But however that may be, with the coming of darkness the opportunity passed for the certain destruction of Schofield's army, and next day on the bloody field of Franklin that army paid the fearful penalty for the mistake, whose ever it was, a penalty which broke the spirit of the proud Army of Tennessee and forever destroyed all hope of Confederate success in the West.

The term "certain destruction" above is used advisedly, for there were, as before stated, two other courses open to General Hood, and which he attempted to carry into effect. The second of these courses was still open when darkness came, and that was to occupy the Columbia Turnpike south of Spring Hill. There is considerable mystery enveloping these operations also and their fated miscarriage, but not so much as pertained to Brown's and Cleburne's movements.

When Cleburne was attacking with his right brigade the right flank of Bradley's men behind the rail defenses, General Granbury, as we have seen, moved forward on Cleburne's left straight toward the Franklin Pike, along which the Federal wagon train was still moving. When about three hundred yards of the turnpike, the brigade was halted and double-quickened by the right flank for about half a mile, passing north-eastward and parallel with the pike and across the front of the battery on the outskirts of the town. The brigade was then moved back over the same ground and halted, facing the position abandoned by this battery about dark. After nightfall it was thrown forward to the farm fence, eighty or one hundred yards from the pike, and ordered to lie down behind the fence. (Collins's narrative.) Troops were soon heard moving on the pike, which proved afterwards to be the head of Ruger's Division, which had forced its way past Bate. Capt. R. T. English, adjutant general on the staff of General Granbury, in doubt whether they were Bate's men, reported to be moving from that quarter, or Federal troops, passed through the fence to ascertain the nature of the movement, and was almost immediately captured by the Federal flankers, part of the 23d Michigan Regiment, which had been deployed on the right flank of Ruger's Division as skirmishers, and which had, without knowing it, pressed up in the darkness to within a short distance of Granbury's line. Granbury had out no skirmishers in front of the fence, and the Federal column was thus enabled to pass unmolested along his front, while a number of Ruger's men strayed out in the darkness and got entangled in the Confederate lines and were captured. (Collins's narrative.) Why Granbury did not fire on this column or move forward across the pike and check its march will probably never be known, as that officer was killed next day in the assault on Franklin.

General Bate, as before related, formed on the left of Cleburne's formation, and when ready to move forward was directed by General Hood in person, General Cheatham not being present at the moment, to move directly westward to the pike and sweep toward Columbia. (Bate's Report.) Moving forward, Jackson's Brigade on the right and Smith's Brigade in echelon on the front line, while Bullock's Brigade supported Smith, that officer approached the Franklin Pike to the right of Maj. N. F. Cheairs's residence, about one and three-quarter miles southward of the village.

Major Caswell's Battalion of Sharpshooters, deployed as skirmishers, approached the pike about the point where the 26th Ohio Regiment had been posted to guard a country road running into the pike there and fired on that regiment, which at once retired with a loss of three killed and three wounded, and made its way to Spring Hill. It was just then that General Ruger's Division approached, and was in turn attacked by Bate's men. Strickland's 3d Brigade, moving in advance with the 72d Illinois, thrown out on the right flank as skirmishers, first encountered Bate's men less than one hundred yards distant, who fired on them. Moore's 2d Brigade next pushed forward with the 23d Michigan in advance and deployed as skirmishers on the right rear of Strickland's Brigade. All these troops were fired on by Bate's men, and lost lightly in wounded; but steadily kept pressing forward, passing in front of Granbury's Brigade, as above stated, when one-half a mile south of the village. A part of the wagon train was borne along the rear of this movement safely past the Confederate front. (Colonel Sexton's Report, XCH. 393.)

It was while aligned in front of and firing on the pike with his skirmishers that General Bate received an order from General Cheatham through Lieutenant Schell to halt and move northward and form on Cleburne's left. (Bate's Report.) Hesitating to obey this order, as he had received orders directly from the commander in chief, he soon received a second order from General Cheatham to the same effect, when he forthwith withdrew his line from contact with the enemy on the pike and moved northeastward, forming on Cleburne's left with some difficulty in the darkness and throwing back his left brigade to guard his flank from assault from the direction of the pike. (Bate's Report.)

General Bate, after forming on Cleburne's left, went into bivouac, and soon after Johnson's Division, of Lee's Corps, was moved over to his left and rear and formed in line of battle, facing the pike and very near the position occupied by Bate when first assailing Ruger's advance on the pike.

The Federals thus were left free to move along the pike without further interruption, which they did, Ruger being followed by Whitaker's Brigade, of Kimball's Division, which was deployed parallel with the pike at the edge of the town, to guard that flank of the retreating army as it entered the village. These were followed in turn by Cox's, Wood's, and Kimball's Divisions, Cox reaching Spring Hill at about 11 P.M., Wood at 12 M., and Kimball about 1 A.M. on November 30.

The 12th and 16th Kentucky, left on picket at Columbia, came up just before day. General Stanley, in report, says of this approach to Spring Hill by Cox, Wood, and Kimball (XCIII. 114): "So close were the enemy on our flank that when a column was not passing it was difficult for a staff officer or an orderly to get through on the road."

This was largely due not to any concerted movement, but to the enterprise of individual Confederates who went down on the pike to capture stragglers and get the contents of their haversacks. (Colonel Sims's narrative.)

Gen. Thomas J. Wood also reports of this movement into Spring Hill (XCIII. 123): "The head of the 3d Division (Wood's) arrived about midnight, passed rapidly and silently through the village, and took post about a mile north of it, formed parallel to the road and east of it. The object of this disposition was to cover the movement of the trains out of Spring Hill and toward Franklin. Cox's Division, of the 23d Corps, had already moved on toward Franklin. As rapidly as possible the trains were drawn out of park and pushed toward Franklin. While this work was in progress the 1st Division (Kimball's) came up, pressed rapidly through Spring Hill, and moved on as a convoy to the trains. It was necessary to move the troops rapidly and silently through Spring Hill to avoid a night attack from an entire corps of four divisions (Cheatham's) which lay encamped within eight hundred yards of the road. The effect of a night attack on a column en route would have been beyond doubt most disastrous."

General Cheatham was evidently not aware of Hood's personal order to Bate "to reach the pike and sweep on toward Columbia," or he would not have ordered him to withdraw from the pike and march to the left flank of and in support of Cleburne. But for this order Bate, who had begun adjusting his lines to move on the pike with his whole force when he received the order, would have in ten minutes more struck Ruger squarely in the flank while on the march in the dark, and, if not with the disastrous results predicted by General Wood, with at least the result of stopping the Federal movement and compelling them to form line of battle and await the morning in his front.

Certainly no more trains or artillery could have passed his front during the night.

In the meantime Gen. Edward Johnson's Division had, as we have seen, gone into bivouac about 10 P.M. on General Bate's left and facing the pike about four hundred yards distant from it and near where General Bate had first approached it in the afternoon.

Of this command, General Cheatham, in his narrative, says: "About eleven o'clock that night General Hood sent Major General Johnson, whose division had marched in the rear of Stewart's Corps, to report to me. I directed Major Bostick, of my staff, to place Johnson on my extreme left. A reference to the map will show the position of my corps and that of Johnson's Division during the night. About midnight Major Bostick returned and reported that he had been down to the turnpike and could hear straggling troops passing northward. While he was talking about this to Colonel Porter, my chief of staff, a courier from headquarters brought a note from Major Mason to the effect that General Hood had just learned that stragglers were passing along the road in front of my left, and 'the commanding general says you had better order your picket line to fire on them.' Before reading the note I ordered Major Bostick to return to General Johnson, whose command was on my left and nearest the pike, and say to him that he must take a brigade, or if necessary his whole division, and go onto the pike and cut off anything that might be passing. Major Bostick afterwards informed me that General Johnson commenced complaining bitterly at having been 'loaned out,' and asked why General Cheatham did not order one of his own divisions to go in; but at length ordered his own horse and rode with Major Bostick close up to the turnpike, where they found everything quiet and no one passing. General Johnson came with Major Bostick to my quarters and informed me of what they had done. It was about two o'clock in the morning of the 30th. This suggestion that I had better order my pickets to fire upon stragglers passing in front of my left was the only order, if that can be called an order, that I received from General Hood after leaving him at his quarters early in the night, when he informed me of his determination to wait until daylight to attack the enemy."

Col. W. H. Sims, commanding the 10th and 44th Mississippi Battalion of Sharpshooters, in Sharp's Brigade, of Johnson's Division, thus writes of the occurrences of the night in front of Johnson's Division: "My command did not reach the encampment near Spring Hill till ten o'clock at night. On my arrival I saw the twinkling camp fires of our army reaching northward far up the pike, stretching, as I was then told, about four miles. Our place of bivouac being assigned us, my command broke ranks and, being very tired, hastily sought their blankets for sleep. I had wrapped myself in my horse blanket, and was sinking into a much-needed slumber when I was aroused by the adjutant of our brigade with an order from General Sharp to get my troops immediately under arms, that our division (Johnson's) had orders to move perpendicularly upon the pike, and that General Cheatham had orders to sweep down the pike at right angles to us. Our division was soon under arms in line of battle and the guns loaded. We waited hour after hour for the order to come to charge the enemy, who we understood were retreating along the pike four hundred yards in front of us toward Franklin. The next morning found us still in line waiting for the order to charge the pike, my own command having one by one sunk to sleep on the ground where they stood."

General Cheatham also quotes from a letter of Gov. Isham G. Harris to Gov. James D. Porter as follows to illustrate his position: "General Hood on the march to Franklin spoke to me in the presence of Major Mason of the failure of General Cheatham to make the night attack at Spring Hill and censured him in severe terms for his disobedience of orders. Soon after this, being alone with Major Mason, the latter remarked that 'General Cheatham was not to blame about the matter last night; I did not send him the order.' I asked if he had communicated the fact to General Hood. He answered that he had not. I replied: 'It is due General Cheatham that this explanation should be made.' Thereupon Major Mason joined General Hood and gave him the information. Afterwards General Hood said to me that he had done injustice to General Cheatham, and requested me to inform him that he held him blameless for the failure at Spring Hill; and on the day following the battle of Franklin I was informed by General Hood that he had addressed a note to General Cheatham assuring him that he did not censure him with the failure to attack."

From the statement of General Cheatham's narrative that Major Bostick and General Johnson returned together and reported to him of having been to the Franklin Pike and found everything quiet about two o'clock in the morning of the 30th, it must have been after midnight when General Johnson and Major Bostick rode out to the pike to reconnoiter, and in all likelihood after the rear of Kimball's column, the last of Schofield's troops except the two regiments, 12th and 16th Kentucky, left on picket at Columbia, had passed by on the march into Spring Hill. Kimball's column reached Spring Hill about one o'clock in the morning, and must have passed Johnson's front nearly two miles south about 12:30 A.M., or earlier even than that, as all the Federal columns moved carefully, being in the immediate presence of the enemy. And General Cheatham says it was midnight when he received the note from Major Mason ordering him to fire on the Federal stragglers on the pike. One more opportunity was thus lost, which might, by the prompt movement of Johnson's Division on to the pike when he first began to go into bivouac, have checked the movement of Schofield's retreat and held him until daylight.

Of course Schofield might, if he had been attacked en route and found a column across his track, have moved northwestward toward the Carter's Creek Pike and reached Franklin in that way, but would have sacrificed his ordnance and supply train and perhaps Wagner's Division in so doing. This pike could have been reached by a country crossroad to the northwestward of Spring Hill, and this was the exact course General Forrest supposed Schofield was taking, as he related to General Stewart at his headquarters after dark.

The movement, however, does not seem to have occurred to General Schofield, as we shall later see.

The third and last course open to General Hood after his failure in the other two was to throw General Stewart's Corps northward to the eastward of Spring Hill, with his right across the Franklin Pike a mile beyond the village.

Whether the determination to do this was arrived at after General Hood learned that Bate had been withdrawn from the Columbia and Franklin Pike to Cleburne's left, or whether ordered to be done in conjunction with the movement he had directed Bate to make on the pike, is not clear. If, as General Cheatham recollects, he (Cheatham) on his return from the ride to the left in search of Bate was called to General Hood's quarters not long after dark and there told him of his disposition of Bate's force, it would seem that General Hood may have at once ordered Stewart to move north quickly and occupy with his right, or at least a division, the pike north of Spring Hill in order to accomplish what General Bate, through the inadvertent interruption of General Cheatham, had failed to do.

On the other hand, it seems from General Stewart's report that he was halted in the execution of his order to seize and occupy the pike north of Spring Hill by reason of representations made by General Cheatham to General Hood before nine o'clock. However, General Stewart will be allowed, in addition to the matter contained in his report published in the "War Records," to tell the story in his own language, which he has done in the following letter to the writer in April, 1895: "After crossing Rutherford Creek about dusk November 29, 1864, I saw General Hood. He was almost or quite alone at a little fire in the edge of the woods to our left on the road.

He said he wished me to move on and put my right across the turnpike road beyond Spring Hill, 'your left,' he said, 'extending down this way' toward the creek. Said he: 'The men have had a hard day's march, and I do not wish you to march your whole corps up to the right. It will be too far for the men to march.' He gave me a guide, a young man of the neighborhood, who, he said, knew a road by which we could move. I rode somewhat in advance of the troops, having the guide with me. At a place where the road on which we were moving appeared to curve to the left—now some time after dark—there was a high gate on the right-hand side of the road. The guide said there used to be a road turning off from the one on which we were moving, through that gate, which was the road we wished to find. I inquired if it would take us to the pike beyond Spring Hill. He said it would, about a mile beyond, near the tollgate. 'Then,' said I, 'that is the road we want.' We rode through the gateway, the head of the column following, and soon passed a house on our left, where some one informed me General Forrest was. I dismounted and went into the house to get such information as Forrest could give me. He said the enemy had left the direct road from Spring Hill to Franklin and taken the Carter's Creek Pike. I think it was just as I was mounting my horse to go on with the guide that the staff officer (whom I did not know) came up and said we were going wrong—on the wrong road—and that General Hood had sent him to show me my position. I inquired when he saw General Hood, and said that, according to the instructions I had received, we were going exactly right. He said he had just come from General Hood. After some further parleying, I concluded (in view of the fact, as General Forrest informed me, that the enemy had abandoned the direct road and taken the Carter's Creek Pike) that General Hood had changed his mind after I left him as to what he wished me to do. So we turned back with this officer to the road we had left and followed it toward Spring Hill (as I supposed) until we came to the line of troops crossing the road, and here I saw General Brown. I was then informed that I was to march on and form on the right and in extension of Cheatham's troops. This was so directly the reverse of what Hood himself told me he wished—'Put your right across the road beyond Spring Hill, your left extending down this way' (where I saw him soon after crossing the creek); 'I do not wish you to march your whole corps up to the right; it is too far for the men'—that I felt sure a mistake had been made. So I said to my staff officers: 'Bivouac the men here and I will go to see General Hood and find out what he wishes us to do.' Procuring a guide to Hood's quarters (I think perhaps the staff officer mentioned went with me), I hunted up General Hood. I found him in bed, and asked if he had changed his mind since I saw him last as to what I was to do. He replied that he had not, but that some one had come from Cheatham and represented that his right was exposed. I explained the situation. He replied: 'Let the men rest and take the advance to Franklin in the morning.' Now I am wholly unable to say how my troops were located after I left them. When I left, the head of the column was up near where I saw and talked with Brown. I cannot recall the further occurrences of the night, but we were on the road next morning moving toward Franklin."

And so at eleven o'clock at night General Hood seemed to have despaired of doing anything with his infantry to check Schofield's retreat to Franklin further than to check stragglers south of Spring Hill, and directed General Stewart to let his men rest and take the advance in the march to Franklin in the morning.

But he had one hope left—a forlorn one, indeed, but still a hope—of being able to check the march north of Spring Hill until daylight, and this was by means of Forrest's Cavalry. Forrest had ridden to Hood's headquarters in company with General Stewart after the latter had bivouacked his column, and seems to have been there in conference with General Hood when General Bate arrived about eleven o'clock.

[NOTE.—"Forrest's Campaigns," p. 622, and Bate's narrative.]

General Forrest reports that his command was all without ammunition except Jackson's Division, which had captured a supply during the day, and that General Bell had actually made his last forward movement, in concert with Cleburne, with only four rounds per man. (Forrest's narrative, ante.) But Forrest never pondered over obstacles; and being instructed by General Hood that he had ordered his corps commanders to furnish him a supply and that he must place his cavalry across the pike north of Spring Hill, he left at once to personally see about getting the ammunition, and then moved his command northward.

[NOTE.—"Forrest's Campaigns," pp. 623, 624.]

Finding that the necessary ammunition could not be obtained from Generals Cheatham and Stewart, the cavalry general, nevertheless, ordered Jackson's Division—about 2,000 men—to move northward and seize the pike near Thompson's Station and hold it if possible, and sent a staff officer to guide them to the pike.

Jackson, always prompt, was on the flank of the enemy by 1:30 A.M., and Ross's Brigade made a charge in the darkness, which caused the greatest confusion in the moving wagon train which was on the turnpike at the point reached. Ross's Brigade at this point burned a number of wagons and captured and brought off the teams.

General Stanley says of this attack: "General Cox's Division was out of the way and the train commenced to pull out at one o'clock on the morning of the 30th. The number of wagons, including artillery and ambulances, was about eight hundred. At the very starting point they had to pass singly over a bridge, and it was exceedingly doubtful whether the train could be put in the road by daylight. Unless this could be done and the corps put in motion, we were sure of being attacked at daylight and of being compelled to fight under every disadvantage. I was strongly advised to burn the train and move on with the troops and such wagons as could be saved, but I determined to make an effort to save the train. My staff officers were busily employed hurrying up teamsters, and everything promised well, when we were again thrown into despair by the report that the train was attacked north of Thompson's Station and that the whole train had been stopped." [NOTE.—It was General Schofield who had authorized General Stanley "in his discretion to burn the wagon train" and Gen. T. J. Wood who "strongly advised" him to exercise this discretion. Statement Capt. Shellenbarger.]

General Kimball's Division was hurried forward, as was also General Wood's Division, which had been deployed just beyond Spring Hill to guard the exit of the wagon train from the town. A small force of Federals from some distance beyond Ross's point of attack had also been moved back, and, meeting the head of the Federal column moving up from the south, the two commands had fired into each other by mistake.

The infantry column was too strong for Jackson. Wood's men, moving off the road to the right, were greatly harassed by the Confederate cavalry; but steadily pressed forward on the flank of the train, which was successfully guarded past the point of danger.

All the trains did not get out of Spring Hill until five o'clock in the morning, and were followed and guarded by Wagner's Division.

In the meantime General Schofield, who seems to have thrown off his lethargy, after making up his mind to abandon Columbia, was actively directing the movements of his army. He reached Spring Hill with Ruger's Division at 7 P.M., and at once [NOTE.—See Twining's dispatches, XCIII. 1138, 1139] pushed on with the same command to Thompson's Station to force a passage of the road which he was informed had been seized by the Confederates at that point.

At 10 P.M. Capt. William J. Twining, his aid-de-camp, who had ridden on to Franklin, by instruction of General Schofield, dispatched General Thomas at Nashville: "Major General Schofield directs me to inform you that the enemy's cavalry crossed Duck River in force at daylight this morning at Huey's Mills, six miles from Columbia, and pushed at once for Spring Hill. Their cavalry reached that point at 4 P.M. and their infantry came in before dark and attacked General Stanley, who held the place with one division, very heavily. General Schofield's troops are pushing for Franklin as rapidly as possible. The General says he will not be able to get farther than Thompson's Station to-night, and possibly not farther than Spring Hill. He regards the situation as extremely perilous, and fears that he may be forced into a general battle to-morrow or lose his wagon train. General Wilson's cavalry have been pushed off toward the east, and do not connect with our infantry nor cover the pike. Thinking that the troops under Gen. A. J. Smith had reached Franklin, General Schofield directed me to have them pushed down the Franklin Pike to Spring Hill to-morrow. I left General Schofield two hours ago at Thompson's Station." (XCIII. 1138.)

General Schofield's energy and alertness during the late afternoon and night was in marked contrast with the supineness of General Hood. Once aware of the true nature of the crisis with which he was confronted, he pushed forward promptly with Ruger's Division first to the relief of Stanley; and finding things were, owing to the blunders of the Confederate leaders, in fairly good shape at Spring Hill and his enemy asleep in sight of the road, he pushed on in person to Thompson's Station to open the road at that point, which he was informed had been seized by part of Forrest's command.

Returning then to Spring Hill, General Schofield personally superintended the movement forward of the remainder of the army. It is now clearly known that it was he who strongly advised Stanley to "burn the trains and move on with the troops," as stated by that commander. (Stanley's Report.) It must be admitted, however, that the handling of the army of Schofield, seconded by the accomplished Stanley, between 6 P.M. of the 29th and daylight of the 30th was skillful, prompt, and energetic. But had General Hood pursued a like course in the afternoon and taken personal command of his own front, all would have been lost to the Union army.

There are not lacking writers who have striven to demonstrate that General Schofield in the operations of the 29th was engaged in a game of profound strategy with General Hood, that he had known Hood at the Military Academy and known him to be a rash blunderer without mathematical capacity or power of combination, and that he (Schofield) had reasoned that Hood would helplessly dally before Spring Hill without power to attack or decide what next should be done.

It is scarcely necessary to point out the weakness of such an argument, which would not be creditable to the intelligence of General Schofield. Indeed, that accomplished and skillful commander made no such claim in his report of the operations; but, on the other hand, from Franklin next day at noon in response to a telegram from General Thomas saying, "If you can prevent Hood from turning your position at Franklin, it should be held; but I do not wish you to risk too much." promptly and frankly replied: "I am satisfied that I have heretofore run too much risk in trying to hold Hood in check while so far inferior to him in both infantry and cavalry. The slightest mistake on my part or failure of a subordinate during the last few days might have proved disastrous. I do not want to get into so tight a place again, yet I will cheerfully act in accordance with your views of expediency if you think it important to hold Hood back as long as possible." (XCIII. 1170.)

It must be patent to the most casual observer from what has been narrated above that but for the failure of Hood's subordinates to act promptly at Spring Hill Stanley would have been crushed before nightfall, the wagon train and reserve artillery of the army captured, Schofield entrapped as he approached in the darkness with Ruger's Division, and the remaining divisions of Cox, Wood, and Kimball left at the mercy of Hood at daylight next morning.

It was Providence, not strategy, which saved the Union army that night, and a paralysis scarcely less effective than that which overtook the hosts of Sennacherib fell upon the Confederate army as darkness came on, under the shelter of which Schofield's army moved "rapidly and silently" by on their hurried retreat to Franklin.

Success here and the destruction of his antagonist would have placed Hood in a most exalted position among his people and his name high among the great masters of strategy in the war. The move was faultless; the success of it up to 4 P.M. startling. Triumph was within his grasp. But failure came, whatever the cause, where least to be expected among those splendid officers and men. General Schofield has been honored by the nation with the highest military office in the gift of the people. Hood, failing through no fault of his own, unless it was his failure to personally see that his orders were obeyed, is reckoned by the average reader of history as mediocre and inefficient. But beyond question General Stewart was right in this: Hood, being present on the field, should have given his orders in person, if necessary, and personally seen that they were obeyed. The fault was not with Cheatham. There is no evidence that he failed in any respect. But General Hood might have seen that no mistakes were made by any one.

BIRTHDAY OF PRESIDENT DAVIS.

BY REV. DR. JOHN R. DEERING, CHAPLAIN KENTUCKY DIVISION, U. C. V., LEXINGTON, KY.

Dear Comrade Cunningham: In your VETERAN for October I see two items that give me much pleasure. The first, by Mrs. W. J. Behan, urges the celebration throughout the South of the one hundredth return of President Davis's birthday, June 3, 1908. The second suggestion is that we observe that day, and that we begin on that day the observance of Memorial Day for all our Confederate dead. Having different dates in different States to commemorate the same cause isn't wise and weakens the effect. We had one cause, one heart, one fate; let one day stand for it. The bloom of flowers is nothing to the blending of hearts and strengthening of social bonds. And we can have flowers in June almost anywhere.

There are two days especially unsuitable to the purpose and objectionable to our people—May 26 and 30—and both are near enough to June 3 to be merged into it!

But it may be said that the North would never accept that day. Then let us keep as our own what they will not share with us. We surrendered our "arms," not our days or our dead! Justice to the memory of President Davis calls for the observance of his birthday, and I am sure that our Daughters will not deny it. You allow that already seven States have legalized its use as holiday or as Memorial Day, and the remaining ones will in time fall into line. But I believe that the South had rather give up the formal observance of the day which commemorates the patriotism and heroism of their loved dead than to adopt a day that recalls men and deeds that they are struggling to forgive and forget. No, sir; not "May 30." We had rather use December 30.

HEROES IN GRAY.

BY REV. W. W. PINSON.

From under the battle cloud, bearing their scars,
With escutcheons as fair as the radiant stars,
Shot, torn, and saber-hacked heroes in gray,
Time-worn and time-weary, greet us to-day.
Let us press the scarred hands that have grappled and fought
And cheer with our might for the deeds they have wrought.

They paid their round price for the chaplet of fame,
Which they worthily wear without boasting or shame;
They fawn for no praises, they blush from no blame;
They grudge not the hunger, the hardship and pain,
The ice in the trenches, the blood on the plain,
If but truly we reckon the valorous cost
Of the service they gave to the cause that was lost.

When they folded the flag with a sob and a tear,
They turned to the home land with courage and cheer
To work without cringing as they'd fought without fear;
And there's a light on the hearthstone and hope in the sky
Of the homes of the Southland that never shall die,
Because of the valor that wields without dread
The weapons of toil in the battle for bread.

With deeds to remember and woes to forget,
They're dreaming of glory awaiting us yet,
And helping to win it, as erst they have won
A glory as stainless and white as the sun.
Undismayed in life's battle, they scorn to repine;
At the drum tap of duty they fall into line.

Too brave for regretting, too noble for spite,
They wait the fair verdict of justice and right
That forever must win over malice and might,
And the meed of the brave from the hearts of the true
Unstinted they pay to their brothers in blue.
They live for the battle-scarred country they love,
And would die for the flag floating proudly above.
Then uncover and stand! they are passing, make way!
And lift a loud cheer for the heroes in gray.

PERILOUS ESCAPE FROM POINT LOOKOUT.

[The following is an address delivered by Mr. Simon Seward before A. P. Hill Camp of Confederate Veterans, of Petersburg, Va., sometime ago.]

Comrades: I was captured June 28, 1863, in Maryland, near Rockville, the same day that we captured a train of three hundred and fifty wagons and a few days before the battle of Gettysburg. I was carried to Washington and put in the old Capitol Prison, and was kept there six weeks. I formed the acquaintance while there of several noted men, among them one of Mosby's captains, of whom I will tell you later. From there I was carried to Point Lookout Prison. This place was situated in the fork of the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay. On reaching there I found about one thousand prisoners. We received the rations of regular soldiers, and had a good time. Just imagine a Confederate soldier eating fresh loaf bread, good coffee with sugar in it, and beef and pork in abundance! We had feasted but a short time when the cook house was built. Then stealing and short rations commenced.

A friend (McPherson, of Atlanta, Ga.) and I, not liking the board and various other things, decided that we would quit the place and go home. The prison was square, containing about a space of ten or more acres, and at that time had no fence around it. The guards continually marched up and down on their beats. We decided to wait for a dark night, then crawl as near the guards as possible and wait until they met and turned their backs, then run through in the darkness. During this time I caught a severe cold and had a wretched cough, so could not go with my friend. I told him the way to go, gave him my father's address (which he cut on his finger nail), and told him to leave word on the road that I would soon follow. He did this, and also wrote to my father, giving all the news and telling him of me. Up to this time my people believed me dead, as it had been so reported by persons who said they saw me killed.

Well, our rations continued to grow smaller, and my friend was gone; so I was more determined than ever to leave. A tall fence had now been built around the place, making it very difficult to escape. I tried many ways and failed. Once after I had gotten out I was caught and put in the dungeon (a tent) and fed on bread and water. This made me all the more anxious to leave. It was customary to close the gates at sunset. These gates let us out to the sinks during the day. The first day of December, 1863, was dark and rainy. I thought this was my time, so just before time to shut the gates I crept out. Not a soul was to be seen. The fence was very strongly built, with very large posts and a parapet on top where the guards were on duty.

After passing out of the gates, I went to the right for several panels. Seeing a squad of soldiers, I hid behind a post until they passed. They were within thirty yards of me. When they returned, they must pass within five feet of me. So I got on the other side of the post when I saw them coming back. I expected to be found and pinned to the wall with a bayonet; but it so happened that when they came within twenty feet of me their attention was called to a pile of sand on the beach that looked like a grave. It was piled up during the day by some of the prisoners. The soldiers went at once to the mound and commenced to stick their bayonets through it. It was owing to this that I escaped detection. I remained close behind the post until nine o'clock, when all was quiet except the tread of the guards overhead and the murmur of their voices as they conversed with each other. My next move was to go from post to post until I reached the corner. To leave there was to do one of two things—either swim the Chesapeake Bay or go through the 5th New Hampshire Regiment in camp on the only ground there was. I decided on the latter. When inside the Camp, I saw some horses tied, and tried to untie one, thinking to ride him through the camp and out; but this was "no go." The horse commenced to move; the men saw it and me and said: "Who is there?" I said nothing, and they came to see. Then commenced a race for the bay, about one hundred yards off, the soldiers and guards after me. The darkness saved me from being riddled with bullets. I went at once into deep water, and commenced to swim for my life up the bay toward Baltimore—the soldiers being camped on the shore for a mile or more. I had a fair wind and tide, and made good time. When I found I could go no farther, I gave up to drown, bidding farewell to this world, when I found myself in water only three feet deep. I thought at first I had struck a whale, but found afterwards it was a sand bar. After a good rest I commenced again, and continued in the water a distance of six miles, passing outside of what was called the blockhouse, where they had wires connected with bells in a house on shore.

Thinking myself safe, I went ashore. A chill came over me from a sharp wind then blowing. My teeth commenced to chatter so loud I thought I would be heard. So I put my finger between them. My feet then refused to move. I was chilled through; but hard work and a determination to move on brought a circulation, and I moved, first slowly, then faster, until I struck a path through the woods. I ran up that path with considerable speed until I found myself in front of a large white house. What to do, I could not tell. I rang the bell and a lady came to the door in her night dress, it being about twelve o'clock. She said: "I know who you are. Don't speak, or our servants will hear you. I will send my husband." He came, invited me in the parlor, and said: "I will help you all I can, but don't speak of it if caught." He gave me some beef, a bottle of whisky, a coat, and several dollars. He said he was an officer in the Federal navy, but loved the South and owned negroes. I walked all night, and at the break of day took a little rest to wait for more darkness. I soon fell asleep, but it was a short nap. I found that too much walking, beef, and whisky had made me so stiff I could not walk. Some dogs came across me, and made so much fuss that I forgot my lameness and ran through the woods in an opposite direction from which I was going. This saved me from capture, as a company of cavalry was right after me. The dogs followed me through the woods until I came to a deep break covered with ivy. I frightened something, either a man or deer, I can't say which; but it scared me nearly out of my wits. The dogs left me and ran after it. I then crossed a little stream up the hill and found myself in a field near a small negro hut. I went to it and spoke to a very bright colored man and asked him the way to a certain place. He replied: "Go away from here. If they find you here, I am ruined, for I am just out of the penitentiary yesterday." I moved on through the woods and fields until I came to a road and started to cross it, when I met a man who said: "If you go up this road, you are caught, for the sheriff is coming." I looked, and there he was, riding a horse, with a double-barreled shotgun on his shoulder and a prisoner walking by his side. I walked right by him, and as soon as I could took to the woods, running a mile or more, until I found a thicket, where I hid until nearly night.

Being much refreshed, but a little hungry, I started off again and reached a small house. Seeing a bucket of water on the porch and wishing for information, I asked for a drink of water. The lady said: "You are the man they are looking for. The soldiers on horses have just left here." I moved on again faster than ever until I heard them coming back. I jumped over the fence and waited until they passed by. As they passed I heard them talking, I suppose about me. It was dark, and I commenced again crossing fields and woods until I gave out. Walking and running twenty-five or thirty miles with nothing to eat was telling on me. I decided to go to the first house and ask for food. This I did, but the lady said: "I can give you nothing; my husband is absent." I asked if I might stay until he returned. She replied: "Yes. We know of you. You may stay in the yard." When her husband came, he said I could eat and sleep in his house if I wished. He also owned slaves. After a good supper came bedtime. He said: "To show you that I will help and protect you, I will make you a bed in this room and put my son in bed with you." About two o'clock he tapped me on the head and said: "The soldiers are here asking for you, and I have told them from the window that you are not here; but they are going to search. So run!" "Come this way," he said, taking me to the back door. I jumped through a gate into the garden, which was terraced, and I thought every time I struck the ground I had gone into a pit. There was a big fuss at the house, but I was gone. By a spring near the garden was a hollow tree. I went up that and awaited developments. Soon I heard a whistle, but gave no answer. Then I heard a voice say: "They are gone! Where are you?" I recognized the voice of my host, and came down. He had a bucket full of meat and bread, and led the way to the woods some distance off and told me to stay there until he came for me. I remained there about two days. On hearing a considerable noise I looked out from my hiding place under a holly tree, where a litter of pigs had been recently raised and where fleas were plentiful, to see my pursuers going back, as I thought.

That night I had a good supper brought to me and the pleasure of sleeping in a top stack near the house. I stayed for a day or more awaiting "orders." Finally they came, saying a man living on the river had been hired for two barrels of corn to carry me across. I left at once, accompanied by his son, but found that the man's boats had just been destroyed by the soldiers. This was sad news to me. He asked me if I had money. I told him I had, and gave him fifty cents. He sent off and got a quart of whisky, and while his wife was gone for the dram we went down to the oyster bed, got a sack full, and such eating and drinking we had that night!—I mean they did the drinking and I did the eating. While at the oyster bed I saw a little log canoe about eight feet long and very narrow. It was so old that one end had rotted off and a plank had been nailed on it. I asked if I could cross in it, but my friend said it would sink. The river was about six miles wide and very rough.

Early the next morning before light I got the boat out of the creek and put it in the river opposite the house and told him I was going to try to make the trip, although he insisted that it could not be done. I stood for a few moments with a small, rough paddle in my hand, looking first at the river, then at the Virginia shore on the other side. I was so anxious to get there I decided to run the risk, although it was very great. The boat was so very small I had to put my feet outside. He again begged me not to try; but, looking down the shore, something showed itself, convincing me it was time to leave. I started, and never looked back; in fact, never had time. Several times I thought the boat would fill. When about half a mile out a big wave struck us, and came so near sinking me that I commenced to do what my mother taught me at her knee, which had of late been much neglected—I prayed for deliverance. The water seemed to jump out of the boat. The winds calmed and the waves ceased to roll. I rested a little. I now noticed blood dripping from my hands. The rough paddle had rubbed the skin and flesh from them, leaving them perfectly raw; but they did not hurt. Looking up the river, I saw a gunboat under a full head of steam coming down on me. Owing to the shallow water, I "got there first," but it was a close race. I struck a rock about a hundred yards off shore. On reaching the shore I rolled over a ditch bank and was safe. I soon saw the old boat steam back up the river and pass out of sight. I was in Virginia once more, but still in the enemy's country. I took my time through the woods and fields until I came to a house at which I asked for a lunch, but was denied by a man I thought ought to be in the army. He commenced to tell me how dangerous it was to be prowling around through the country, and said: "Look! Yonder comes some one after you now." It was a lone horseman coming at a rapid gait. I could not run, as he had seen me; so I decided to wait and take my chances. He came up to me at once, saying: "Are you the man I saw crossing the river just now?" I replied, "Yes;" and he said, "Then what have you for sale?" He had taken me for a blockade runner, that being their place for crossing and he a trader in that line. That accounted for the gunboat's being there.

I left at once, with nothing to eat, and walked all that day through the woods and fields. That night I stayed at the house of a true Virginian, had a good supper, warm bed, early breakfast, and was soon on my journey again. I met a man in the road, who said: "If you go down this road, you will be shot. They have just killed the sheriff and wounded some of his deputies." I moved again for the "willow green," and so traveled until I reached the Rappahannock River. I found a boat preparing to cross with some cattle. They were hard to manage, and we had a narrow escape. I secured the tail of a big ox, driving him on board, and followed. Others did the same, and we arrived safe with all the cattle. I had money and stayed at a hotel in Tappahannock that night. The clerk told me he had but one room, and the privilege of that was given to a man of questionable character; and if he came, I would have to give it up to him. I said, "All right," thinking if he came I could beat him out of it; but when I saw him, I changed my mind. He had a harsh face, with only one eye and lots of pistols and knives about his person. I slept on the floor. About three o'clock in the morning a noise was heard, and some one said the house was surrounded by cavalry. I thought I was gone then. I hid the best I could, but soon found it was a raiding party of our own men; and, thinking they came for my friend with one eye, I did not wait to see, but left early, traveling all day. That night I stopped at a nice house near the road, thinking it a good place to stay. The servant said I could not stop. I then asked to see the gentleman of the house, but he said he had nothing to eat; the soldiers had taken everything he had, he said. He asked where I was from and where I was going. I told him, and he said: "I have a son at Point Look-out. Do you know him?" "What is his name?" I asked. He told me, and I described him. He then sent for his wife, and such a good time we had! A good supper was soon ready, and I was made welcome.

Early next morning a team came up and took me to Richmond. Reaching there about night, I looked around for a place to stay, and found a boarding house near the Old Market kept by a widow. She said she kept first-class boarders, not like me, but said I could stay and eat if there was anything. The second and third table were going in, when an officer sitting near me asked me who I was and where I was from. I told him, and he said: "Is this Simon, the son of Joe Seward, of Petersburg?" I said it was. "Then give him some supper and I will pay for it," said he to the landlady. This officer lives now, I am told, in Dinwiddie County, Va. The next morning I made an early start for home, but found I could not leave the city without a pass. I went to General Winder, then in charge at Richmond, stated my case, and asked for a pass to go home. He had me put under arrest and ordered to my command. He did not believe my story. While in his office a man passed by whom I thought I knew. He asked me who I was. My story was told him. He said: "Turn him loose; I knew him in the old Capitol Prison." He was one of Mosby's captains, and the man I said I would tell you of later. I got a pass for ten days, and went home that night. My father then lived at the corner of Bank and Short Market Streets, in the house now a drug store. I found him behind the counter. He looked at me quite a time and said, "Simon!" and ran to my mother and sisters.

BREECH-LOADING CANNON.

The South has claimed with pride the inventor of torpedoes, but so far it is not generally known that a Confederate invented the first breech-loading cannon. The inventor is D. W. Hughes, of St. Louis. The Times-Democrat states:

"Out at the Masonic Home of Missouri, Delmar and Union Avenues, is an old man whose daydream of life was shattered by the Civil War and the loss of a patent which might have made him an independent fortune. To use his own expression, he has passed through 'fire and confiscation,' and now upon the threshold of the eighties patiently awaits his end. History has not recorded him as one of the great inventors of the world; but it is probable that D. W. Hughes, formerly of Yates Center, Kans., was the first man to patent a breech-loading cannon that met the requirements of the period. He does not positively assert that he is the originator of this instrument of warfare, but modestly asks for some one to give evidence that a cannon of similar pattern was in use before the date his was introduced—February 18, 1863. As yet no claimant to the distinction has appeared, and Mr. Hughes humbly retains the profitless honor.

"A contributor to the American Machinist, which is an authority upon these subjects, writes under date of September 7, 1905, that the United States government never made any of these guns until 1880 or 1882, and leaves the insinuation that it might have copied its invention after that of Mr. Hughes. Be that as it may, Mr. Hughes never realized much from his invention. His letters patent were granted by the Confederate government, and he still has the original certificate.

"The only apparent difference in the guns of to-day from those of Mr. Hughes is that the modern ones have a screw instead of a lug. Concave metal disks which will expand by pressure are now used; but are said to be of no material benefit over the old gum disk, and expert machinists declare that the screw is no improvement over his lug.

"The first of the Hughes guns, according to persons posted in Civil War implements, were made at Memphis, Tenn., in 1862. A battery was then ordered for Gen. M. Jeff Thompson, of Missouri, which was used in and around New Madrid, Mo., and farther south in Arkansas. After that quite a number were constructed at Jackson, Miss., for the State by order of Governor Pettus. During the years 1862 and 1863 over fifty of them were built and put into use at various points. The cannon were of small caliber, one and a half and two-inch bore, mounted on light carriages, which were moved about from place to place by men alone. The average length of the guns was thirty-four inches, some being constructed of bronze and others of broken car axles. They weighed about eighty pounds. In 1862 there was a test trial of the various sizes of the guns at Memphis, when it was found that they would project a leaden ball a distance of three miles up the river. At the final surrender, when the Confederacy met its Waterloo, a large number of the guns fell into the possession of the Federal government. The patent records at Richmond were captured, and the government never began making breech-loading guns until 1880. Now those interested in armament and kindred themes want to know who was the originator of the guns."

D. W. Hughes is a native of Licking County, Ohio, and was born in February, 1829. His parents went to Illinois when D. W. was ten years old. He went to New London, Mo., in 1852, and he rapidly became an expert machinist. He and his wife's brother became forceful men, doing a large business with mills and machinery just prior to the war, executing large contracts for the United States government. In the spring of 1861 Mr. Hughes entered the Confederate gun works at Memphis, where he made the guns described above. He had been in the Confederate service for a year without having heard from his wife and four children, who eventually made their way South.

Comrade Hughes—the term cordially used—has ever been loyal to the South, and the VETERAN'S tribute is unstinted.

TRIBUTE BY PRESIDENT U. D. C. DIVISION OF MISSOURI.

Mrs. P. G. Robert pays Mr. Hughes credit in this way: "The M. A. E. McClure Chapter, No. 19, St. Louis, Mo., July 23, 1904, hereby certify that D. W. Hughes entered the service of the Confederate States as an ordnance expert at Memphis, Tenn., in August, 1861, and was honorably discharged by surrender at Montgomery, Ala., in May, 1865; was entitled to and received the Southern cross of honor. Having unfortunately lost the same, this certificate is given to attest the fact that he is entitled to the honor of the Southern cross."

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT AT RIPLEY, TENN.

(A Fort Pillow Cannon.)

GENERAL OFFICERS OF THE REGULAR C. S. ARMY.

COMPILED BY CHARLES EDGEWORTH JONES, AUGUSTA, GA.

(With State and date of rank. Star denotes survivors.)

FULL GENERALS.

Samuel Cooper, Va., May, 1861; adjt. and inspector general
 Albert S. Johnston, Texas, May, 1861.
 Robert E. Lee, Virginia, June, 1861.
 Joseph E. Johnston, Virginia, July, 1861.
 P. G. T. Beauregard, Louisiana, July, 1861.
 Braxton Bragg, Louisiana, April, 1862.
 E. Kirby-Smith, Florida, February, 1864; general in Provisional Army, C. S. A.
 J. B. Hood, Tex., July, 1864; general with temporary rank.

LIEUTENANT GENERALS.

James Longstreet, Alabama, October, 1862.
 Leonidas Polk, Louisiana, October, 1862.
 Theophilus H. Holmes, North Carolina, October, 1862.
 William J. Hardee, Georgia, October, 1862.
 Thomas J. Jackson, Virginia, October, 1862.
 John C. Pemberton, Virginia, October, 1862.
 Richard S. Ewell, Virginia, May, 1863.
 Ambrose P. Hill, Virginia, May, 1863.
 Daniel H. Hill, North Carolina, July, 1863.
 Richard Taylor, Louisiana, April, 1864.
 Jubal A. Early, Virginia, May, 1864.
 Richard H. Anderson, South Carolina, May, 1864.
 *Stephen D. Lee, South Carolina, June, 1864.
 *Alex P. Stewart, Tennessee, June, 1864.
 *Simon B. Buckner, Kentucky, September, 1861.
 Wade Hampton, South Carolina, February, 1865.
 John B. Gordon, Georgia, February, 1865.
 Joseph Wheeler, Georgia, February, 1865.
 Nathan B. Forrest, Tennessee, February, 1865.

MAJOR GENERALS.

David E. Twiggs, Georgia, May, 1861.
 Earl Van Dorn, Mississippi, September, 1861.
 Gustavus W. Smith, Kentucky, September, 1861.
 Benjamin Huger, South Carolina, October, 1861.
 J. Bankhead Magruder, Virginia, October, 1861.
 Mansfield Lovell, Maryland, October, 1861.
 George B. Crittenden, Kentucky, November, 1861.
 William W. Loring, Florida, February, 1862.
 Sterling Price, Missouri, March, 1862.
 Benjamin F. Cheatham, Tennessee, March, 1862.
 Samuel Jones, Virginia, March, 1862.
 John P. McCown, Tennessee, March, 1862.
 Jones M. Withers, Alabama, April, 1862.
 Thomas C. Hindman, Arkansas, April, 1862.
 John C. Breckenridge, Kentucky, April, 1862.
 Lafayette McLaws, Georgia, May, 1862.
 J. E. B. Stuart, Virginia, July, 1862.
 *Samuel G. French, Mississippi, August, 1862.
 Carter L. Stevenson, Virginia, October, 1862.
 George E. Pickett, Virginia, October, 1862.
 David R. Jones, Georgia, October, 1862.
 John H. Forney, Alabama, October, 1862.
 Dabney H. Maury, Virginia, November, 1862.
 Martin L. Smith, Florida, November, 1862.
 John G. Walker, Missouri, November, 1862.
 Arnold Elzey, Maryland, December, 1862.

Franklin Gardner, Louisiana, December, 1862.
 Patrick R. Cleburne, Arkansas, December, 1862.
 Isaac R. Trimble, Maryland, January, 1863.
 Daniel S. Donelson, Tennessee, January, 1863.
 W. H. C. Whiting, Mississippi, February, 1863.
 Edward Johnson, Virginia, February, 1863.
 Robert E. Rodes, Alabama, May, 1863.
 W. H. T. Walker, Georgia, May, 1863.
 Henry Heth, Virginia, May, 1863.
 John S. Bowen, Missouri, May, 1863.
 Robert Ransom, Jr., North Carolina, May, 1863.
 William D. Pender, North Carolina, May, 1863.
 Cadmus M. Wilcox, Tennessee, August, 1863.
 Jeremy F. Gilmer, North Carolina, August, 1863.
 Fitzhugh Lee, Virginia, August, 1863.
 William Smith, Virginia, August, 1863.
 Howell Cobb, Georgia, September, 1863.
 John A. Wharton, Texas, November, 1863.
 *William T. Martin, Mississippi, November, 1863.
 Charles W. Field, Kentucky, February, 1864.
 J. Patton Anderson, Florida, February, 1864.
 William B. Bate, Tennessee, February, 1864.
 Samuel B. Maxey, Texas, April, 1864.
 *Robert F. Hoke, North Carolina, April, 1864.
 W. H. F. Lee, Virginia, April, 1864.
 James L. Kemper, Virginia, March, 1864.
 John S. Marmaduke, Missouri, March, 1864.
 *Camille J. Polignac, France, April, 1864.
 James F. Fagan, Arkansas, April, 1864.
 James B. Gordon, North Carolina, May, 1864.
 Joseph B. Kershaw, South Carolina, May, 1864.
 Bushrod R. Johnson, Tennessee, May, 1864.
 Stephen D. Ramseur, North Carolina, June, 1864.
 Edward C. Walthall, Mississippi, June, 1864.
 Henry D. Clayton, Alabama, July, 1864.
 William Mahone, Virginia, July, 1864.
 John C. Brown, Tennessee, August, 1864.
 *Lunsford L. Lomax, Virginia, August, 1864.
 *Matthew C. Butler, South Carolina, September, 1864.
 Henry W. Allen, Louisiana, —, 1864.
 John Pegram, Virginia, —, 1864.
 Ambrose R. Wright, Georgia, November, 1864.
 P. M. B. Young, Georgia, December, 1864.
 *Thomas L. Rosser, Texas, November, 1864.
 *G. W. C. Lee, Virginia, January, 1865.
 William Preston, Kentucky, January, 1865.
 William B. Taliaferro, Virginia, January, 1865.
 Bryan Grimes, North Carolina, February, 1865.
 William W. Allen, Alabama, March, 1865.
 W. Y. C. Humes, Tennessee, March, 1865.
 Matt W. Ransom, North Carolina, —, 1865.
 Thomas J. Churchill, Arkansas, March, 1865.
 Harry T. Hays, Louisiana, April, 1865.
 *Evander M. Law, Alabama, April, 1865.
 Martin W. Gary, South Carolina, 1865.

BRIGADIER GENERALS.

Charles W. Adams, Arkansas, —, 1862.
 Daniel W. Adams, Louisiana, May, 1862.
 John Adams, Tennessee, December, 1862.
 Wirt Adams, Mississippi, September, 1863.
 *E. Porter Alexander, Georgia, February, 1864.
 George T. Anderson, North Carolina, June, 1862.
 George T. Anderson, Georgia, November, 1862.

- Joseph R. Anderson, Virginia, September, 1861.
 Robert H. Anderson, Georgia, July, 1864.
 Samuel R. Anderson, Tennessee, July, 1861.
 James J. Archer, Maryland, June, 1862.
 L. A. Armistead, Virginia, April, 1862.
 *Frank C. Armstrong, Louisiana, January, 1863.
 Turner Ashby, Virginia, May, 1862.
 *Arthur P. Bagby, Texas, 1864.
 Alpheus Baker, Alabama, March, 1864.
 Lawrence S. Baker, North Carolina, July, 1863.
 William E. Baldwin, Mississippi, September, 1862.
 William Barksdale, Mississippi, August, 1862.
 James W. Barnes, Texas, —, 1864.
 Rufus Barringer, North Carolina, June, 1864.
 John D. Barry, North Carolina, August, 1864.
 William S. Barry, Mississippi, —, 1862.
 Seth M. Barton, Virginia, March, 1862.
 Francis S. Bartow, Georgia, July, 1861.
 Cullen A. Battle, Alabama, August, 1863.
 John R. Baylor, Texas, —, 1864.
 Richard L. T. Beale, Virginia, February, 1865.
 W. N. R. Beall, Arkansas, April, 1862.
 Barnard E. Bee, South Carolina, June, 1861.
 Hamilton P. Bee, Texas, March, 1862.
 Tyree H. Bell, Tennessee, November, 1863.
 Henry L. Benning, Georgia, January, 1863.
 Samuel Benton, Mississippi, July, 1864.
 Albert G. Blanchard, Louisiana, September, 1861.
 *William R. Boggs, Georgia, November, 1862.
 M. L. Bonham, South Carolina, April, 1861.
 *Pinckney D. Bowles, Alabama, April, 1865.
 L. O'B. Branch, North Carolina, November, 1861.
 William L. Brandon, Mississippi, June, 1864.
 W. F. Brantley, Mississippi, July, 1864.
 John Bratton, South Carolina, May, 1864.
 Joseph L. Brent, Louisiana, October, 1864.
 Theodore W. Brevard, Florida, March, 1865.
 William M. Browne, Georgia, December, 1864.
 Goode Bryan, Georgia, August, 1863.
 Abraham Buford, Kentucky, September, 1862.
 *Robert Bullock, Florida, November, 1864.
 *William L. Cabell, Virginia, January, 1863.
 Alex W. Campbell, Tennessee, March, 1864.
 James Cantey, Alabama, January, 1863.
 *Ellison Capers, South Carolina, November, 1864.
 William H. Carroll, Tennessee, October, 1861.
 John C. Carter, Tennessee, July, 1864.
 James R. Chalmers, Mississippi, February, 1862.
 John R. Chambliss, Jr., Virginia, December, 1863.
 James Chestnut, Jr., South Carolina, April, 1864.
 Robert H. Chilton, Virginia, October, 1862.
 James H. Clanton, Alabama, November, 1863.
 Charles Clark, Mississippi, May, 1861.
 John B. Clark, Jr., Missouri, March, 1864.
 Thomas L. Clingman, North Carolina, May, 1862.
 Thomas R. R. Cobb, Georgia, November, 1862.
 Philip St. George Cocke, Virginia, October, 1861.
 *Francis M. Cockrell, Missouri, July, 1863.
 Alfred H. Colquitt, Georgia, September, 1862.
 Raleigh E. Colston, Virginia, December, 1861.
 James Conner, South Carolina, June, 1864.
 Philip Cook, Georgia, August, 1864.
 John R. Cooke, North Carolina, November, 1862.
 Douglas H. Cooper, Mississippi, May, 1863.
 M. D. Corse, Virginia, November, 1862.
 *George B. Cosby, Kentucky, January, 1863.
 *John Z. Cox, Tennessee, —, 1865.
 *William R. Cox, North Carolina, May, 1864.
 C. C. Crews, Georgia, —, 1865.
 *Alfred Cumming, Georgia, October, 1862.
 Junius Daniel, North Carolina, September, 1862.
 Henry B. Davidson, Tennessee, August, 1863.
 Joseph R. Davis, Mississippi, September, 1862.
 W. G. M. Davis, Florida, November, 1862.
 James Dearing, Virginia, 1864.
 Zachariah C. Deas, Alabama, December, 1862.
 Xavier B. DeBray, Texas, April, 1864.
 James Deshler, Georgia, July, 1863.
 George G. Dibrell, Tennessee, July, 1864.
 Archibald J. Dobbins, Arkansas, —, 1864.
 Thomas P. Dockery, Arkansas, August, 1863.
 George P. Doles, Georgia, November, 1862.
 Thomas F. Drayton, South Carolina, September, 1861.
 Dudley M. Du Bose, Georgia, November, 1864.
 *Basil W. Duke, Kentucky, September, 1864.
 Johnson K. Duncan, Louisiana, January, 1862.
 John Echols, Virginia, April, 1862.
 M. D. Ector, Texas, August, 1862.
 Stephen Elliott, Jr., South Carolina, May, 1864.
 *Clement A. Evans, Georgia, May, 1864.
 Nathan G. Evans, South Carolina, October, 1861.
 William S. Featherston, Mississippi, March, 1862.
 *Samuel W. Ferguson, Mississippi, July, 1863.
 Joseph J. Finegan, Florida, April, 1862.
 Jesse J. Finley, Florida, November, 1863.
 John B. Floyd, Virginia, May, 1861.
 John C. Fiser, Mississippi, —, 1865.
 William H. Forney, Alabama, November, 1864.
 John W. Frazer, Alabama, May, 1863.
 Daniel M. Frost, Missouri, March, 1862.
 Burkett D. Fry, Alabama, May, 1864.
 *Richard M. Gano, Kentucky, —, 1865.
 Edward W. Gantt, Arkansas, —, 1862.
 William M. Gardner, Georgia, November, 1861.
 Samuel Garland, Jr., Virginia, May, 1862.
 Richard B. Garnett, Virginia, November, 1861.
 Robert S. Garnett, Virginia, June, 1861.
 Isham W. Garrott, Alabama, May, 1863.
 Lucius J. Gartrell, Georgia, August, 1864.
 Richard C. Gatlin, North Carolina, July, 1861.
 Samuel J. Gholson, Mississippi, May, 1864.
 George C. Gibbs, North Carolina, —, 1864.
 Randall L. Gibson, Louisiana, January, 1864.
 Victor J. B. Girardey, Georgia, July, 1864.
 States Rights Gist, South Carolina, March, 1862.
 Adley H. Gladden, Louisiana, September, 1861.
 James M. Goggin, Virginia, December, 1864.
 A. C. Godwin, North Carolina, August, 1864.
 *George W. Gordon, Tennessee, August, 1864.
 Josiah Gorgas, Alabama, November, 1864.
 *Daniel C. Govan, Arkansas, December, 1863.
 Archibald Gracie, Jr., Alabama, November, 1862.
 Hiram B. Granberry, Texas, February, 1864.
 Henry Gray, Louisiana, March, 1865.
 John B. Grayson, Louisiana, August, 1861.
 John Gregg, Texas, August, 1862.

- Maxcy Gregg, South Carolina, December, 1861.
 Martin E. Green, Missouri, July, 1862.
 Thomas Green, Texas, May, 1863.
 Colton Greene, Missouri, —, 1863.
 Elkanah Greer, Texas, October, 1862.
 Richard Griffith, Mississippi, November, 1861.
 J. Warren Grigsby, Kentucky, —, 1864.
 James Hagan, Alabama, February, 1865.
 Johnson Haygood, South Carolina, July, 1862.
 Moses W. Hammon, Alabama, —, 1865.
 Roger W. Hanson, Kentucky, December, 1862.
 William P. Hardeman, Texas, March, 1865.
 N. H. Harris, Mississippi, January, 1864.
 *George P. Harrison, Jr., Georgia, February, 1865.
 James E. Harrison, Texas, December, 1864.
 Richard Harrison, Texas, —, 1865.
 Thomas Harrison, Texas, January, 1865.
 Robert Hatton, Tennessee, May, 1862.
 James M. Hawes, Kentucky, March, 1862.
 Alex T. Hawthorne, Arkansas, February, 1864.
 Louis Hebert, Louisiana, May, 1862.
 Paul O. Hebert, Louisiana, August, 1861.
 Ben Hardin Helm, Kentucky, March, 1862.
 Robert J. Henderson, Georgia, —, 1864.
 Edward Higgins, Louisiana, October, 1863.
 Benjamin J. Hill, Tennessee, October, 1864.
 George B. Hodge, Kentucky, November, 1863.
 Joseph S. Hogg, Texas, February, 1862.
 William J. Hoke, North Carolina, —, 1865.
 James T. Holtzclaw, Alabama, July, 1864.
 Benjamin G. Humphreys, Mississippi, August, 1863.
 *Eppa Hunton, Virginia, August, 1863.
 John D. Imboden, Virginia, January, 1863.
 *Alfred Iverson, Jr., Georgia, November, 1862.
 Sidney D. Jackman, Missouri, February, 1865.
 Henry R. Jackson, Georgia, June, 1861.
 John K. Jackson, Georgia, January, 1862.
 William H. Jackson, Tennessee, December, 1862.
 William L. Jackson, Virginia, September, 1864.
 Albert G. Jenkins, Virginia, August, 1862.
 Micah Jenkins, South Carolina, July, 1862.
 *Adam R. Johnson, Texas, August, 1864.
 Bradley T. Johnson, Maryland, June, 1864.
 *George D. Johnston, Alabama, July, 1864.
 *Robert D. Johnston, North Carolina, September, 1863.
 A. C. Jones, Tennessee, —, 1865.
 John M. Jones, Virginia, May, 1863.
 John R. Jones, Virginia, June, 1862.
 William E. Jones, Virginia, September, 1862.
 Thomas Jordan, Virginia, April, 1862.
 James H. Kelly, Alabama, November, 1863.
 John D. Kennedy, South Carolina, December, 1864.
 *William H. King, Georgia, April, 1864.
 *William W. Kirkland, North Carolina, August, 1863.
 Julius A. DeLaguel, Virginia, April, 1862.
 James H. Lane, North Carolina, November, 1862.
 Walter P. Lane, Texas, March, 1865.
 Alex R. Lawton, Georgia, April, 1861.
 Danville Leadbetter, Alabama, February, 1862.
 Edwin G. Lee, Virginia, September, 1864.
 Collette Leventhorpe, North Carolina, February, 1865.
 Joseph H. Lewis, Kentucky, September, 1863.
 L. M. Lewis, Missouri, November, 1864.
 William G. Lewis, North Carolina, May, 1864.
 St. John R. Liddell, Louisiana, July, 1862.
 Robert D. Lilley, Virginia, May, 1864.
 Henry Little, Missouri, April, 1862.
 *Thomas M. Logan, South Carolina, February, 1865.
 Armistead L. Long, Virginia, September, 1863.
 Mark P. Lowrey, Mississippi, October, 1863.
 *Robert Lowry, Mississippi, February, 1865.
 Hylan B. Lyon, Kentucky, June, 1864.
 Hinchie P. Mabry, Texas, March, 1862.
 William W. Mackall, Maryland, February, 1862.
 Robert P. MacLay, Arkansas, 1865.
 William MacRae, North Carolina, June, 1864.
 James P. Major, Missouri, July, 1863.
 George Maney, Tennessee, April, 1862.
 Arthur M. Manigault, South Carolina, April, 1863.
 Humphrey Marshall, Kentucky, October, 1861.
 John Marshall, Texas, —, 1865.
 James G. Martin, North Carolina, May, 1862.
 John D. Martin, Mississippi, —, 1865.
 *John McCausland, Virginia, May, 1864.
 *William McComb, Tennessee, January, 1865.
 *Thomas H. McCray, Arkansas, 1863.
 Benjamin McCulloch, Texas, May, 1861.
 Henry E. McCulloch, Texas, March, 1862.
 Samuel McGowan, South Carolina, January, 1863.
 James M. McIntosh, Florida, January, 1862.
 James A. McMurray, Tennessee.
 Evander McNair, Arkansas, November, 1862.
 Dandridge McRae, Arkansas, November, 1862.
 Hugh W. Mercer, Georgia, October, 1861.
 *William R. Miles, Louisiana, —, 1864.
 *William Miller, Florida, August, 1864.
 Young M. Moody, Alabama, March, 1865.
 *John C. Moore, Texas, May, 1862.
 Patrick T. Moore, Virginia, May, 1864.
 S. P. Moore, South Carolina, —, 1865.
 John H. Morgan, Kentucky, December, 1862.
 John T. Morgan, Alabama, November, 1863.
 Alfred Mouton, Louisiana, April, 1862.
 *Thomas T. Munford, Virginia, November, 1864.
 Allison Nelson, Texas, September, 1862.
 *Francis T. Nicholls, Louisiana, October, 1862.
 Edward A. O'Neal, Alabama, June, 1863.
 Richard L. Page, Virginia, March, 1864.
 Joseph B. Palmer, Tennessee, November, 1864.
 Mosby M. Parsons, Missouri, November, 1862.
 William H. Payne, Virginia, November, 1864.
 Elisha F. Paxton, Virginia, November, 1862.
 William R. Peck, Louisiana, February, 1865.
 William N. Pendleton, Virginia, March, 1862.
 Abner Perrin, South Carolina, September, 1863.
 Edward A. Perry, Florida, August, 1862.
 William F. Perry, Alabama, February, 1865.
 James J. Pettigrew, North Carolina, February, 1862.
 Edmund W. Pettus, Alabama, September, 1863.
 Charles W. Phifer, Arkansas, 1862.
 Albert Pike, Arkansas, August, 1861.
 Gideon J. Pillow, Tennessee, July, 1861.
 Lucius E. Polk, Arkansas, December, 1862.
 Carnot Posey, Mississippi, November, 1862.
 John S. Preston, South Carolina, June, 1864.
 *Roger A. Pryor, Virginia, April, 1862.
 William A. Quarles, Tennessee, August, 1863.

Gabriel J. Rains, North Carolina, September, 1861.
 George W. Rains, Georgia, —, 1865.
 James E. Rains, Tennessee, November, 1862.
 Horace Randal, Texas, April, 1864.
 George W. Randolph, Virginia, February, 1862.
 John C. Reid, Alabama, —, 1864.
 Arthur E. Reynolds, Mississippi, March, 1865.
 Alex W. Reynolds, Virginia, September, 1863.
 Daniel H. Reynolds, Arkansas, March, 1864.
 Robert V. Richardson, Tennessee, December, 1863.
 Roswell S. Ripley, South Carolina, August, 1861.
 J. Selden Roane, Arkansas, March, 1862.
 *William P. Roberts, North Carolina, February, 1865.
 *Beverley H. Robertson, Virginia, June, 1862.
 *Felix H. Robertson, Texas, July, 1864.
 Jerome B. Robertson, Texas, November, 1862.
 Philip D. Roddey, Alabama, August, 1863.
 Lawrence S. Ross, Texas, December, 1863.
 Reuben R. Ross, Texas, —, 1865.
 Daniel Ruggles, Virginia, August, 1861.
 W. W. Russell, Alabama, —, 1864.
 Albert Rust, Arkansas, March, 1862.
 John C. C. Sanders, Alabama, May, 1864.
 Alfred M. Scales, North Carolina, June, 1863.
 Thomas M. Scott, Louisiana, May, 1864.
 William R. Scurry, Texas, September, 1862.
 Claudius W. Sears, Mississippi, March, 1864.
 Paul J. Semmes, Georgia, March, 1862.
 Jacob H. Sharp, Mississippi, July, 1864.
 Joseph O. Shelby, Missouri, December, 1863.
 Charles M. Shelley, Alabama, September, 1864.
 William P. Shindler, South Carolina, —, 1865.
 Francis A. Shoup, Florida, September, 1862.
 James P. Simms, Georgia, November, 1864.
 W. Y. Slack, Missouri, April, 1862.
 Henry H. Sibley, Louisiana, June, 1861.
 James E. Slaughter, Virginia, March, 1862.
 James A. Smith, Tennessee, September, 1863.
 Preston Smith, Tennessee, October, 1862.
 *Thomas B. Smith, Tennessee, July, 1864.
 William D. Smith, Georgia, July, 1862.
 John L. T. Sneed, Tennessee, May, 1861.
 G. Moxley Sorrel, Georgia, October, 1864.
 Leroy A. Stafford, Louisiana, October, 1863.
 Peter B. Starke, Mississippi, November, 1864.
 William E. Starke, Louisiana, August, 1862.
 William Steele, Texas, September, 1862.
 George H. Steuart, Maryland, March, 1862.
 A. E. Steen, Missouri, April, 1862.
 Clement H. Stevens, South Carolina, January, 1864.
 Walter H. Stevens, Virginia, August, 1864.
 Isaac M. St. John, Georgia, February, 1865.
 Marcellus A. Stovall, Georgia, January, 1863.
 Otho F. Strahl, Tennessee, July, 1863.
 James C. Tappan, Arkansas, November, 1862.
 Thomas H. Taylor, Kentucky, November, 1862.
 James B. Terrill, Virginia, May, 1864.
 William Terry, Virginia, May, 1864.
 William R. Terry, Virginia, May, 1864.
 *Allen Thomas, Louisiana, February, 1864.
 Bryan M. Thomas, Louisiana, August, 1864.
 Edward L. Thomas, Georgia, November, 1862.
 M. Jeff Thompson, Missouri, —, 1861.

Lloyd Tilghman, Kentucky, October, 1861.
 Robert Toombs, Georgia, July, 1861.
 Thomas F. Toon, North Carolina, May, 1864.
 Edward D. Tracy, Georgia, August, 1862.
 James H. Trapier, South Carolina, October, 1861.
 William F. Tucker, Mississippi, March, 1864.
 Robert C. Tyler, Tennessee, February, 1864.
 Robert B. Vance, North Carolina, March, 1863.
 Alfred J. Vaughan, Tennessee, November, 1863.
 John C. Vaughn, Tennessee, September, 1862.
 John B. Villepigue, South Carolina, March, 1862.
 William B. Wade, North Carolina, January, 1863.
 *Henry H. Walker, Virginia, July, 1863.
 James A. Walker, Virginia, May, 1863.
 Lucius M. Walker, Tennessee, March, 1862.
 Leroy P. Walker, Alabama, September, 1861.
 R. Lindsay Walker, Virginia, February, 1865.
 William S. Walker, Florida, October, 1862.
 William C. Wickham, Virginia, September, 1863.
 Stand Watie, Indian Territory, May, 1864.
 Richard Waterhouse, Jr., Texas, March, 1865.
 Thomas N. Waul, Texas, September, 1863.
 Henry A. Wise, Virginia, June, 1861.
 David A. Weisiger, Virginia, May, 1864.
 Gabriel C. Wharton, Virginia, July, 1863.
 John W. Whitfield, Texas, May, 1863.
 William C. Wickham, Virginia, September, 1863.
 Louis T. Wigfall, Texas, October, 1861.
 John S. Williams, Kentucky, April, 1862.
 Edward Willis, Georgia, —, 1864.
 Claudius C. Wilson, Georgia, November, 1863.
 Charles S. Winder, Maryland, March, 1862.
 John H. Winder, Maryland, June, 1861.
 Henry A. Wise, Virginia, June, 1861.
 Sterling A. M. Wood, Alabama, January, 1862.
 William T. Wofford, Georgia, January, 1863.
 Gilbert J. Wright, Georgia, —, 1864.
 *Marcus J. Wright, Tennessee, December, 1862.
 Zebulon York, Louisiana, May, 1864.
 William H. Young, Texas, August, 1864.
 Felix K. Zollicoffer, Tennessee, July, 1861.

The above shows that there were eight full generals, nineteen lieutenant generals, eighty-one major generals, and three hundred and sixty-seven brigadier generals. The total number of general officers was four hundred and seventy-five.

FIRST CABINET OF PRESIDENT DAVIS.

It seems well in connection with the complete list of Confederate generals to publish the list of Cabinet officers first appointed by President Davis, of which he states: "Unincumbered by any other consideration than the public welfare, having no friends to reward or enemies to punish, it resulted that not one of those who formed my first Cabinet had borne to me the relation of close personal friendship or had political claims upon me; indeed, with two of them I had no personal acquaintance."

The members were: R. W. Barnwell was first chosen for Secretary of State, but having declined, the tender was made to Robert Toombs, of Georgia; S. R. Mallory, of Florida, was appointed Secretary of the Navy; Judah P. Benjamin, of Louisiana, was selected for Attorney General; John H. Reagan, of Texas, for Postmaster General; C. G. Memminger, of South Carolina, for Secretary of the Treasury; Leroy Pope Walker, of Alabama, for Secretary of War.

MONUMENT TO ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSTON.

LETTER FROM JEFFERSON DAVIS CONCERNING IT.

A strange circumstance occurs by the receipt of an original letter, sent through Mr. C. W. Toliver, of Birmingham, Ala., from Jefferson Davis in behalf of a monument to Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston at Shiloh. The letter is evidently to a committee at Memphis at that time inaugurating a monument movement as indicated. It is a remarkable coincidence that the United Daughters of the Confederacy are now so diligently engaged in this particular work, nearly thirty years after its inauguration. The VETERAN is not informed as to what was done in Memphis at the time; but it gives credit to the small Chapter U. D. C. at Savannah, Tenn., for starting the movement that has since been taken up by the General U. D. C. and for which $500 is being appropriated annually. The editor recalls with pride how cordially his suggestion was taken up in San Francisco in 1905 to have one grand monument on the Shiloh battlefield surmounted by a figure of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston.

BEAUVOIR, HARRISON COUNTY, MISS., June 21, 1878.

Gentlemen: Your letter of the 10th inst was forwarded from Memphis, and received here after some consequent delay. I regret that it will not be practicable for me to be present at your proposed meeting on the 29th inst. The object which you have in view is most highly appreciated, and commends itself to me by every dictate of duty and feeling of gratitude.

The eventful field of Shiloh must ever be memorable and awaken in the hearts of Confederates mingled sentiments of pride and sorrow. The heroism of our soldiers, the success of their desperate assaults, the skill with which they were led by that noble gentleman and great general, Albert Sidney Johnston, must ever be reverted to by us with proud enthusiasm. Many accounts by those best informed lead us to the conclusion that victory was within the grasp of our army at the moment when the great leader fell. That the bones of the men who died there should lie bleaching on the field where with their lifeblood they sealed their devotion to their country is a reflection on all the best instincts of our nature, and it has been to me a matter of equal surprise and regret that our countrymen have not sooner attempted to raise a monument to those who gave all of earth for us and who could have looked forward to no other reward than securing to posterity the liberties to which we were born. To the great general who fell while leading his troops to the last charge, which was believed to be necessary to render the victory complete, far less than the honors which were due to him have, I think, thus far been accorded; and no small honor should be awarded you for being the first to commemorate his services by a monument on the battlefield which he and his brave comrades made illustrious.

Not for vain display, not for personal glory, but to achieve an essential object to which his personal leading would contribute, he gave his life a willing sacrifice. Those who know not how he rejected the most flattering propositions from our enemy and under what extraordinary difficulties he came to join our service will little heed the idea that he became reckless of life under the goading of ignorant and unjust criticism.

A long and very intimate acquaintance with Gen. A. S. Johnston in academic, garrison, and campaign associations enables me to form a confident opinion as to the motives which would govern him in any case and which influenced him in the last act of his life. Of calm judgment, concentrated will, and iron nerve, he was as little likely as any man I have ever known to be influenced by popular clamor.

When he could not effectively resist, he retreated, watchful of an opportunity to assume the offensive. When he saw a prospect of beating one of the armies of the enemy before the other could join it, he promptly availed himself of the occasion thus afforded. When he saw the key of battle obstinately held and felt that to seize it was to insure success, he rode forward under the high inspiration of duty, regardless of personal consequences. When he received the wound which proved fatal, he recked not of it, for his thoughts were of his troops, of the defenseless people he was striving to protect, of the cause to which he was devoted, thus neglecting himself—the only neglect which justice can ever lay at the door of that man, as great as he was good and as good as he was great. In looking back to form an estimate of the consequences, had he achieved a complete victory at Shiloh, who shall say he overrated the value of the issue therein involved?

I trust that your labors will be successful, and that your monument will be worthy of the heroic dead who died for us, and that it will fitly commemorate their patriotism and their valor. Upon the monument to be raised future generations may read the names of some fallen brave whose last resting place no tombstone marks, and remote posterity may draw inspiration from the fact of consanguinity to those whose memory you perpetuate. Your work is not like that of one performed by a government doing honor to its professional soldiery, but it is that of citizens manifesting respect to brothers who left the walks of civil life to defend their common homes and altars.

Every profession, trade, and pursuit in our land was represented in that army for defense, and all are called upon to unite in your work with the sympathy of countrymen and the especial feeling for their own order also. Be assured, gentlemen, of my earnest coöperation with you as well in the manner you indicate as in any other in which I may hope to efficiently serve you. Again regretting my inability to be present at your meeting as invited, believe me to be, with grateful acknowledgments of your kind consideration, yours faithfully,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

SONG ON MORGAN, THE RAIDER.—Mrs. O. P. Eldred, President Chapter U. D. C., writes from Princeton, Ky.: "One of your readers asks where to find a poem with these lines:

'Morgan, Morgan, the raider,
And Morgan's terrible men.'

They are in 'Kentucky Belle,' which I have often heard recited, and in 'Series of Recitations and Readings,' paper covers."

U. S. GOVERNMENT MONUMENT TO GEN. A. S. JOHNSTON.

Erected near the spot where he died on the battlefield.

STORY OF A CUBAN GIRL.

BY GEORGE M. MANN, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The steamer Whitney left Havana Harbor April 6, 1899, for Tampa, Fla. The boat was advertised to leave at 12 M., but did not leave until 6 P.M. The delay was caused by the late arrival of the 4th Virginia Volunteer Infantry. A government official had secured transportation on the Whitney for the Virginia regiment. There were also several squads of Ohio soldiers returning home on the vessel. The steamer was anchored in the bay, and all passengers were brought to the Whitney in big rowboats and small tugs. I was with the returning Ohio soldiers, and was standing on the upper deck of the steamer watching the landing of the delayed Virginians, when I noticed a little Cuban girl in a rowboat, accompanied by a lady and an oarsman. The little girl was clapping her hands and throwing kisses to some one on board the steamer. An American lady who was standing near me was waving her handkerchief at the little girl, while tears were rolling down her cheeks. When the Cuban girl and the American lady met on board the steamer, they hugged and kissed each other, and both were weeping—an unusual sight—an American woman and a Cuban girl fondly embracing each other and both shedding tears. What did it mean?

The lady was Mrs. McFerrin, of Oliver Springs, Tenn. Her son, Col. Harvey H. Hannah, was commander of the 4th Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and also Military Governor of Santa Clara Province, Cuba. Mrs. McFerrin had been visiting her son. The 4th Tennessee was stationed at Sancti Spiritus, Cuba, and Mrs. McFerrin occupied a tent at the camp. She was now returning to the United States on board the Whitney. The little girl's name was Lorena Marie Lacarada Pardrone. She was the daughter of a Cuban patriot.

Mrs. McFerrin told me that when she arrived at her son's quarters at the camp of the 4th Tennessee Regiment at Sancti Spiritus she "found this sweet, sad-faced child in the camp." Through an interpreter she learned that the little girl's father was a Cuban soldier who died from the effects of a wound that he received in battle; that soon after the father's death her mother became seriously ill. Lorena went to the soldiers to get a candle—"the light of faith"—for her dying mother; but when she returned with the candle, her poor mother was dead.

Mrs. McFerrin became interested in the child, and tenderly helped the little orphan and did all she could to relieve her distress. Lorena soon learned to love the good, kind American woman, and Mrs. McFerrin loved the little Cuban dearly. She wanted to adopt her; and as Lorena had no home, she shared her tent with her for eight weeks.

On March 29 Mrs. McFerrin left the camp of the 4th Tennessee, taking Lorena with her. She was going with her adopted child to her Tennessee home. At that date, before leaving Cuba, one had to go to the board of health and get a vaccination certificate. Mrs. McFerrin did not learn of this until she arrived at Havana the morning of the day she was to leave on the steamer. Her vessel would leave at noon. She went at once with Lorena to the health office, and was told that the child could not leave for the United States until she was vaccinated. Mrs. McFerrin was exempt, having been vaccinated just before coming to Cuba. Tickets had been purchased for passage on the steamer Whitney, and the arrangement for their departure had been made in such a way that the trip could not be postponed without considerable additional expense and great inconvenience to others.

The boat would soon leave, and the little Cuban girl, who had learned to love this kind American woman, could not leave because she had not been vaccinated. What could the poor woman do? "It was a trying hour," said Mrs. McFerrin.

Lorena learned of their predicament; and fearing that she would be permanently separated from her kind friend, trembled with emotion, saying in Spanish: "Do not leave me! Please do not leave me!"

LORENA.

The situation was explained to the officer in charge of the health office, with an earnest appeal to give Lorena a "good health certificate," as she had not been exposed to smallpox. "No! She must be vaccinated; and she cannot be vaccinated until office hours, 2 to 4 P.M.," was the stern reply. This would be two hours after the departure of the steamer.

Mrs. McFerrin learned of a mission home in Havana. She hurried with Lorena to the home. Here arrangements were made to have the child vaccinated and remain there until she could be sent for. It was all made clear to Lorena, and Mrs. McFerrin bade her an affectionate farewell and hurried to her steamer, not expecting to see her again for several weeks.

That dear little orphan girl should not have been separated from her loving protector. We sometimes find foolish rulings, with fools to execute them—fellows who will strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

If the official who refused to issue a good health certificate to Lorena had been a broad-gauge man, he would have ignored the fool rules, precedents, and red tape, and given her a good health certificate; and if that were impossible, if he had been a sympathetic and resourceful man—a man big enough for the place—he could have put the child in a big basket, covered her over with the stars and stripes, and had the basket and contents carried on board the steamer.

But all's well that ends well. Fortunately the steamer was detained, as stated above, and Lorena received a vaccination certificate in time to join her loving protector before her departure. I shall never forget, and the passengers who witnessed their meeting and greeting will never forget, how this affectionate and appreciative Cuban child threw her little brown arms around Mrs. McFerrin's neck and shed tears of joy—tears that were more eloquent than words.

The above narrative was written in May, 1899, after my return from Cuba, for an Ohio journal. This summer, while in Bedford, I sent a copy of the narrative to Mrs. McFerrin, and wrote to her, making some inquiry about the little dark-eyed Cuban damsel. The answer follows:

"OLIVER SPRINGS, TENN., July 31, 1906.

"My Dear Mr. Mann: Of course I remember you, and have often wondered if I should ever again see any of those who came over from Cuba with us, and can assure you I was so glad to get the copy of the newspaper article you sent me. * * *

"Yes, Lorena is still with me, and she is considered one of the most beautiful girls in our village, and she is as good as she is beautiful. Her devotion to me is truly lovely; but I will lose her now, as she recently married Mr. John C. Walker, a corporal in the 10th Infantry, U. S. A.

"After I brought Lorena home, she said: 'Mamma, America dead.' (You know it was a late spring, and the trees were dead, so far as the leaves were concerned, especially to Lorena, coming from a tropical and always green island.) 'No!' I said, 'America is not dead, but sleeping.' A few weeks later she ran into the house and said, 'Mamma, mamma, America waking up; come see;' and she pointed to the trees, which had begun to put forth their green leaves.

"I do wish you could see her, Mr. Mann. Come soon, as Lorena leaves in a few weeks for Chattanooga.

"My son, Colonel Hannah, is at present Adjutant General of Tennessee. * * * You will see by the engraving that I am a veteran of two wars. My husband wore the gray and my son wore the blue."

The newspaper clipping Mrs. McFerrin inclosed in her letter gives some interesting facts about a recent Reunion of the Confederate Veterans. One of the items says that Mrs. McFerrin's father, Hon. George F. Gerding, came to this country from Germany in his early manhood. He settled in New York, where he became one of the leading dry goods merchants of his time. He was United States Minister to Belgium and Consul General to Baden-Baden. While in Germany he conceived the idea of establishing a colony in the mountains of Tennessee. He removed to Tennessee from New York in 1849, founded Wartburg, and brought to East Tennessee 20,000 German immigrants.

Mrs. McFerrin's first husband was Maj. John H. Hannah, of the 19th Confederate Regiment, a gallant soldier of the War between the States. After his death, she married Dr. R. A. McFerrin, a prominent physician of Oliver Springs.

OLD BLANDFORD CHURCH.

The following lines were written by a lady in 1841, suggestive of the old church and its environments:

"Thou art crumbling to the dust, old pile,
Thou art hastening to thy fall;
And round thee in thy loneliness
Clings the ivy to the wall.
The worshipers are scattered now
Who knelt before thy shrine,
And silence reigns where anthems rose
In days of 'Auld Lang Syne.'

And sadly sighs the wandering wind,
Where oft in years gone by Prayers rose from many hearts to Him,
The highest of the high.
The tramp of many a busy foot
That sought thy aisles is o'er,
And many a weary heart around
Is still for evermore.

How doth ambition's hope take wings!
How drops the spirit now!
We hear the distant city's din;
The dead are mute below.

The sun that shone upon their paths
Now gilds their lonely graves;
The zephyrs which once fanned their brows
The grass above them waves.

O! could we call the many back
Who gathered here in vain,
Who've careless roved where we do now,
Who'll never meet again,
How would our weary souls be stirred
To meet the earnest gaze
Of the lovely and the beautiful,
The light of other days!"

INTERIOR VIEW OF THE CHURCH, 1907.

The picture here given of the interior of old Blandford Church shows the four memorial windows already placed through contributions from four States, Missouri, Virginia, Louisiana (Washington Artillery), and North Carolina. It is hoped that others will also contribute, so that each State of the Confederacy may be represented by a memorial window in this church. The cost of each window is only $400. Contributions can be sent to Mrs. George W. Cardwell, 257 Main Street, Petersburg, Va.

MAHONE'S MEN AT THE CRATER.—R. W. Jones, of Laurel, Miss., controverts the statement by B. F. Phillips, page 490 November VETERAN. Mr. Jones quotes from Mr. Phillips's article and designates it as "unwarranted." "Early on that morning Mahone's old brigade charged to retake our breastworks, which had been captured by a division of negroes, who rushed into the Crater soon after the explosion of the mine. Mahone's men failing to retake the breastworks, they rushed into the left of the Crater." In commenting upon this he writes: "This statement with regard to one of the most desperate battles of the war is so contrary to the facts of history that the VETERAN should not have published it. See General Mahone's account of the battle, Gen. R. E. Lee's congratulatory order, Lieut. Col. W. H. Stewart's account of it; also 'War Talks of Confederate Veterans,' by Hon. Geo. S. Bernard, Petersburg, Va., and about one hundred and fifty survivors of that wonderful victory won by Mahone's old brigade. You might as well publish that Stonewall Jackson's Brigade failed to stand their ground on the First Manassas field and that Pickett's Division refused to charge at Gettysburg. I am sure you will do the proper credit to Mahone's Brigade when your attention is called to this error."

The Crater is near an extended street from old Blandford Church.

O Dixie, weep!
Another veteran's laid him down to rest;
The trees he loved, in silver mosses dressed,
Keep guard above his sleep.

The sky bends blue above,
The sunshine warm and bright, his own Southland.
Throws o'er his couch with tender, lingering hand
A glittering pall of love.

He resteth well!
Life's battles bravely fought and nobly won.
He laid him down content at set of sun,
As twilight shadows fell.

Above his quiet bed
The quail calls to its mate so loud and clear,
And all the forest sounds so loved, so dear
Around him spread.

He does not hear,
E'en though his fair young daughters sorrowing come
And scatter bridal blossoms o'er his tomb,
Bedewed with many a tear.

And though she plead
Whose name was woven in the fibers of his heart,
She who had never called in vain, though teardrops start,
He does not heed.

Dixie, of all thy brave
Who followed where thy stainless banner led,
No braver heart e'er beat, no nobler head
E'er rested in a grave.

Asleep! At rest!
How calm and sweet thy weary sons repose,
Safe from all grief, all danger, and all foes,
O Dixie, on thy breast!

[The foregoing was written by Minnie A. Sanderson in a tribute to F. C. Sollee, published in November (1907) VETERAN, but is applicable to head this department.—EDITOR.]

H. C. MONTROY.

Report comes from Coahoma, Miss., that Comrade H. C. Montroy, a prominent planter in Coahoma County, anticipating that his end was near, said: "Daughter, get out my Confederate uniform. I am going to die, and I want to be buried in my suit of gray." One week later the lips that uttered them ceased speaking, and death came as a relief from a bullet wound that plowed through his right leg in the war. "He died from the effects of gangrene caused from that wound."

Mr. Montroy underwent an operation. His son, Edgar Montroy, of Friar's Point, Miss., and the daughter, Mrs. Howard, with whom he resided at his home, in Coahoma, were with him and ministered to his wants during the last hours.

When quite a young man Mr. Montroy entered the Confederate service, and fought gallantly to the end. He received six wounds, all of which healed except the one in his right leg near the knee, and ever afterwards he complained of pain from it. One week before his death, while in the field, he remarked to the hands that his knee pained him very much, that he was going home and that he never expected to be with them any more. Returning to the residence, he told his daughter that which is quoted above. She summoned a physician, who advised her to send him to Memphis for an operation, which proved fatal. Mr. Montroy was sixty-six years of age at the time of his death.

COL. E. LESLIE SPENCE.

Col. E. Leslie Spence, a prominent Confederate veteran of Richmond and a successful business man, died at his home October 24, 1907, his death due to Bright's disease.

The Times-Dispatch states:

"Few men in Richmond were better known than Colonel Spence. He was honored and loved among those with whom he came in contact. In business he was straightforward and won the esteem of his patrons. He and his son, E. Leslie Spence, Jr., conducted an insurance business most satisfactorily. Colonel Spence was born in 1841, and always lived in Richmond except when bearing arms four years in defense of his home and his people. When the war began, he was a member of the Richmond Grays, the first company to leave the city for battle in the Civil War. In the battle at Craughton's Gap, Md., a musket ball pierced his neck and was extracted from the opposite side of his body, disabling him for military duty for over a year. He was wounded again at Hatcher's Run. He was paroled April 10, 1865, at Appomattox C. H., having served unremittingly as a private in the ranks during the whole war. When the Richmond Grays was reorganized after the war, he became captain of the company.

COL. E. LESLIE SPENCE.

"Some years after he took command of Company E, 1st Regiment Infantry, which position he held until promoted to major on the staff of Brig. Gen. A. L. Phillips, Virginia Volunteers. He was also Past Commander of R. E. Lee Camp, No. 1, C. V., and gave much time and thought to the preservation of the history of the Confederate cause. Early in life he consecrated his best endeavors to the service of God, and was an active and influential member of the Baptist Church.

"He was remarkably energetic and enterprising in business, and in all the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune faithful to every trust, enjoying the love and confidence of all good men. Positive and impulsive, even somewhat combative in temperament, utterly intolerant of meanness, he was liberal in sentiment and amenable to reason and honest difference of opinion, of buoyant spirits and tender sympathies, and with 'a hand open as the day to melting charity.'

"Colonel Spence was married three times, and is survived by his widow and two sons. The funeral took place from Grove Avenue Baptist Church, and the burial was in Hollywood."

DR. JOHN P. HAMPTON.

Dr. John P. Hampton, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Huntsville, Ala., fell asleep on June 8, 1907. Doctor Hampton was born in Lawrence County, Ala., January 22, 1825. He graduated from Lagrange Military Academy. He moved to Monroe (now Clay) County, Miss., and while pared to help him escape; but he refused to accept his freedom because his escape would have caused the removal of the other prisoners, many of whom were in such a critical condition that moving them would have been certain death.

From the McGavock home he was carried to Nashville (where he received many kindnesses from Father Ryan), and from there to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was still imprisoned when the war closed. He was made major just before the battle of Franklin, but was wounded and taken prisoner before receiving his commission. He was acting as lieutenant colonel in that desperate charge between the railroad and the pike.

After the war Dr. Hampton with several others contributed several hundred dollars toward the expense of conveying and removing the Confederate dead from the battlefield to the McGavock Cemetery. In 1872 he removed with his family to Madison County, Ala., where he continued to reside until his death. He first married Miss Amanda Evans, of Monroe County, Miss., who lived only a few years. His second wife was Miss Susan A. Burt, of Lowndes County, Miss., who died in 1856, leaving three children, John M. and William Burt, of Madison County, Ala., and P. H. Hampton, now residing in Lincoln County, Tenn. In 1868 he married Miss Mary T. Battle, of Madison County, Ala., who died in May, 1884, leaving no children.

Dr. Hampton's grandfather, Samuel Hampton, who fought for American independence, and Gen. Wade Hampton, of Revolutionary fame, were descendants of Sir John Hampton, from whom Hampton Roads receives its name. Dr. Hampton had in his possession several bonds of the State of North Carolina issued in 1780, which were given to his grandfather for services in the Continental army and which were never redeemed.

His was a life as full of useful deeds and active good as it was of honorable years. He was a man who in all the relations of life gave his fellow-man an example of the ideal citizen. He always promptly answered the call of duty, bravely met the responsibilities of life and faithfully discharged them. He was not only a man of convictions but courage, yet was ever considerate of the opinions of those who differed from him. He was loyal to his Church, faithful to his country, true to his friends, obliging to his neighbors, devoted and tenderly affectionate in his family, and had lived, as he died, a consistent Christian. For fifty years he was deacon in the Baptist Church, and for twenty-one years he was Moderator of the Liberty Baptist Association. Twice he represented Madison County in the Legislature. He was a zealous Mason, for years serving his lodge as Worshipful Master. He was also interested in agriculture, and was President of the old Farmers' Club of Madison County, and under his wise leadership his county for many years won the first prize in the State fairs.

The last seventeen years of his life were devoted almost exclusively to the service of his Church and the people of his county and State. He was intensely interested in the cause of education, and accomplished much in that line. He was a devoted Confederate and a member of the Egbert Jones Camp, at Huntsville, and a faithful friend and subscriber to the CONFEDERATE VETERAN from its infancy. B. W. H.

ALLISON.—Death came suddenly to Comrade W. T. Allison on the morning of October 28 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James Blocker, of Woodbury, Tex. He was a native of Tennessee, born and reared near Nashville. At the age engaged in farming there he studied medicine under Dr. Clapp, graduating from the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1850

DR. S. P. HAMPTON.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Confederate army as a private. He organized a company of infantry, and was elected its captain. This became Company F, of the 43d Mississippi Regiment, under Col. William H. Moore. He was in all of the battles fought by that regiment up to that at Franklin, Tenn., November 30, 1864, where he was severely wounded, losing his right foot, and he was made a prisoner. He was kindly cared for by Mrs. John McGavock, and while there, wounded and a prisoner, a lady cousin of his came, pre-of seventeen he enlisted in the Confederate army as a member of Captain Allison's company of the 45th Tennessee Regiment. He was wounded in the battle of Shiloh and discharged from service. His wound was in the leg, and his thigh bone so broken up that all the pieces could not be gotten out; so he was troubled afterwards by their working out. He had to lie flat on his back for six months. Comrade Allison was married in 1864 to Miss Mary W. Jordan, and of their ten children seven survive him with the mother. He went to Texas in 1882, and was well known in his county and highly respected.

GEORGE GOODLOE.

George Goodloe was born in Caroline County, Va., in 1833; and died near Shelbyville, Ky., November 30, 1907. He was a son of Jernean and Eliza Thornton Goodloe. He was married to a Miss Brown, of Kentucky, twenty-five years ago.

Declining a captaincy, Comrade Goodloe served for a while in an Alabama regiment, and was then in a Virginia regiment. In one of the fights in front of Richmond his company suffered very heavily. Three horses were shot under him. Many shots went through his clothes during the four years. He had two brothers and a brother-in-law in the service, but none of them were seriously wounded.

The Shelby (Ky.) Record says of Comrade Goodloe: "Quiet, unassuming, gentle, kind, and hospitable, an honest, upright man, one who had many friends and not an enemy on earth, was Mr. George Goodloe. Terms of praise used in articles in the newspapers announcing the death of prominent citizens are frequently fulsome and overdrawn, but nothing that is good could be said of Mr. Goodloe but those who knew him best know to be deserved. He was born in Caroline County, Va., in 1833. In March, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, 3d Alabama Infantry, C. S. A., at Mobile. He served as a valiant soldier until Lee's surrender at Appomattox, being in most of the great battles in Virginia. He had suffered for years from an ailment; and hoping for relief, he was taken to Norton Infirmary, in Louisville, where he underwent a surgical operation; but it did not cure, and he gradually grew weaker to the end. Mr. Goodloe came to Shelby County to live in 1866, after his marriage to Miss Jennie Brown, a sister of John and Sam Brown, who during their lifetime were wealthy and influential citizens of Mulberry. His wife survives him, as does a sister, who resides in Mississippi. He was an officer of the Presbyterian Church, and also a member of John Waller Camp, U. C. V."

HINSON.—James Henry Hinson was born in Richmond County, Va., in 1845; and died at his home, near Templeman, on July 6, 1907. He enlisted in Company D, 40th Virginia Infantry, in 1863. After the fall of Richmond he was left on picket duty with others, as a blind to the enemy, while the regiment withdrew to join the retreating army, and was thus captured by the advancing foe, being released only after the cessation of hostilities. Although reared in the humbler walks of life, with no personal interests involved and no ambition to urge him on to duty, those who were with him state that he was ever a brave and faithful soldier. As a citizen, he was conscientious, honest, and honorable.

LONG.—Report comes of the death of Lieut. Green B. Long at the Confederate Home at Higginsville, Mo., on October 22, in his sixty-ninth year. He was second lieutenant of Company F, 11th Virginia Infantry, and was badly wounded in the left arm. He was a gallant soldier and a Christian.

DR. R. D. SPALDING.

Robert David Spalding, of Atlanta, Ga., died in the residence of Mr. Jack Spalding, his cousin, Friday night, November 29. He had gone over to spend the evening, and was apparently very well, but concluded to spend the night, which he did. When the servant called him in the morning, it was ascertained that he was dead.

Dr. Spalding was a native of Union County, Ky., born in May, 1833. Although his section of the State coincided with the Union side, he joined the Army of Tennessee, serving throughout the war. At the end of the war Dr. Spalding resumed the practice of medicine at his old home, but soon moved to Georgia and lived for a while at LaGrange. He moved from there to Atlanta in 1872. For more than thirty-five years he was closely identified with the city's business interests. He took an active part in political matters for some years, and was an able advocate of good government. He was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, and was a liberal giver to its institutions. His public charities were many.

Dr. Spalding was president of the large wholesale shoe firm of the Gramling-Spalding Company, a director of the Georgia Railway and Electric Company, the Exposition Cotton Mills, the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, and the Roswell and Gainesville National Banks, also a vice president of the Roswell and Habersham Mills. He leaves an estate estimated to be worth about $600,000, and gives $150,000 to charities, mainly of his Church. He is survived by his wife, who was his cousin, Miss Annie Spalding; but no children.

J. BURTON TRULOCK.

After a lingering illness, J. Burton Trulock passed away at his home, in Pine Bluff, Ark., aged fifty-five years. He was one of the most valued and highly respected citizens of Pine

J. B. TRULOCK.

Bluff, prominently identified with all movements for the up-building and advancement of the city and community, always ready to aid and advance by his influence, by liberal contributions, and by personal effort.

Comrade Trulock served the Confederacy as a soldier, and was one of the most prominent members of J. Ed Murray Camp, of Pine Bluff. His death causes a loss to that city deeply realized and deplored by its citizens. Beyond a local interest his memory should be regarded. In fact, he was one of the first officials of the great U. C. V. organization to furnish money in liberal sums to meet exigencies that came in its finances. Brave, great-hearted Trulock, the VETERAN could not fail to pay him high tribute, as his intimate associate, Gen. R. M. Knox, also of Pine Bluff, could bear abundant evidence.

COL. GEORGE W. MCKENZIE.

George W. McKenzie was born February 7, 1818, in the Cherokee Nation, Hiwassee Purchase (now Catoosa County, Ga.). He died November 11, 1907, in his ninetieth year, at Decatur, Tenn. His parents removed to Meigs County in 1819, and he resided there the rest of his life. He was married to Susan Keenum February 15, 1844, their married life covering a period of sixty-two years. She died in 1906. They were blessed with twelve children, nine sons and three daughters, of whom the following survive: Mrs. Elizabeth Denton, Mrs. Julia Denton, Mrs. Tennie Marler, B. Frank, Reuben N., G. Calhoun, James A., and Robert L. McKenzie.

In 1846 he raised a company for the war with Mexico, but by lot his company failed to be chosen. In 1847 there was another call for volunteers, and he raised another company, which failed to be mustered in for the same reason as before; but Col. John H. Crosier, of Knoxville, Tenn., about this time wrote the War Department tendering the service of a regiment from East Tennessee, which offer was accepted, and Captain McKenzie's company was taken into the 5th Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, and was enrolled as Company B, under command of Col. G. R. McClelland, and served until the close of the war.

When the War between the States began, in 1861, Captain McKenzie raised a company for the Confederacy, and was mustered into service in the fall of 1861. In the reorganization of the army in the spring of 1862 he was elected lieutenant colonel, and in August of the same year he was elected colonel. He at first commanded the 13th Battalion Tennessee Cavalry. His regiment, the 5th Tennessee Cavalry, served under Gen. Joseph Wheeler, and was noted for its valiant service, participating in nearly all the principal battles of the Army of Tennessee. It surrendered at Charlotte, in May, 1865.

COL. M'KENZIE.

Rev. J. L. Griffiths writes of him: "As a citizen, Colonel McKenzie stood without a peer in his community, county, and State. There was in him kind-heartedness and industry, honesty, integrity, common sense, lofty purpose, an unclouded intellect, and solid judgment. He served as the first Clerk and Master of Meigs County Chancery Court for six years. He was elected Tax Assessor in 1888, and had held several positions of trust in his county. He was made a Mason in Meridian Sun Lodge, No. 50, Athens, Tenn., about 1849, and was one of the charter members of Meigs Lodge, No. 213, in which he held a continuous membership until his death, covering a period of more than fifty years. He was elected Commander of John M. Lillard Camp, No. 534, U. C. V., Decatur, Tenn., at its organization, in 1887, and retained that position until his death. He became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in 1867, and ever lived a faithful, consistent member. He was intensely religious. He was a man of prayer. He loved and revered the Bible. During his last days, as long as he was able to read, it was his constant companion. He never failed to have his pastor when visiting him read a portion of God's Word and pray with him and sing some of the old, sweet songs of Zion. Being confined to his home for the past three years, he had been deprived of the privilege of attending the church, at which he often expressed regret."

SAMUEL HANCOCK SMITH.

Samuel H. Smith died at his home, in Granbury, Tex., in December, 1906. He was born in Cherokee County, Ala., in 1842, and his record in the Confederate service was that of a brave and faithful soldier. He enlisted as a private in Company K, 5th Texas Volunteer Cavalry, and when the war closed held a lieutenant's commission. An account of his prison experience at New Orleans is given in the VETERAN for January, 1905. He was a nephew of Brig. Gen. William F. Perry. From wounds received in the army he suffered much pain to the end of his life. He was a man greatly loved in his community and highly valued as a member of Camp Granbury. His old comrades draped his casket in the stars and bars that he loved so well and tenderly lowered his body to its last resting place.

Soon after his marriage, in 1870, Comrade Smith united with the Church, and remained an honored member. He was honest and diligent in business, faithful and painstaking as a public official, a good husband and father.

"Earth to earth and dust to dust,"

Calmly now the words we say,

Leaving him to sleep at rest

Till the resurrection day.

Father, in thy gracious keeping

Leave we now thy servant sleeping.

CAPT. G. J. DAVIE.

Capt. G. J. Davie, a member of Camp Sam Lanham, U. C. V., Nevada, Tex., died in January, 1907. He was born in Montgomery County, Tenn., in 1860; and served in the 2d Arkansas Volunteer Infantry till near the close of the war, when he was placed in the secret service of the government. After the war he moved to Texas, near Nevada, and went to work with the determination to do his part toward restoring the South and to encourage others in the same work. It was his highest aim in life to see the coming generations of those who had been made poor by the war educated, so as to take their proper station in life. A good man, a public-spirited citizen, and a valued comrade of the Camp, his memory lives.

REV. WELLBORN MOONEY.

On October 5, 1907, another veteran, tried and true, closed the long life march. Rev. Wellborn Mooney, son of William S. Mooney and Emily Kincheloe, was born in Fauquier County, Va., near Manassas, December 23, 1829. In early childhood he went with his parents from Virginia to Alabama, and from there to Tennessee, in which State most of his long and useful life was spent. In the fall of 1849 he joined the Tennessee Conference, in session at Shelbyville, Tenn., and for thirty years he served in that body on circuits, at stations, and as presiding elder. He was twice a delegate to the General Conference, and was for three years in the St. Louis Conference as pastor at Cape Girardeau and at Washington. The last seventeen years of his life he was a highly honored and much-loved member of the Memphis Conference, making his home at Dresden, Tenn., where for years his wife was engaged in educational work. Here the conflict ceased, and he laid his armor by. He was widely and well known in Church and State, and made a fine record, as hundreds of testimonials evidence, in the Confederate service.

Rev. W. Mooney's work as missionary chaplain in the Army of Tennessee under the department of Bishop Pierce is that which deserves special prominence herein. The fall of Fort Donelson found him pastor of the Methodist Church in Pulaski, Tenn. To this place the Nashville hospitals were removed, to Giles College, on historic East Hill, where Sam Davis was executed. It was hastily fitted to receive our sick soldiers. To these Mr. Mooney ministered daily until the order was given for the removal of the hospitals farther South. The tide of invasion soon followed, with all the ills incident thereto. The State was under military law, and sympathizers with the South were compelled to take the "ironclad oath" or leave on short notice. Arrests were the order of the day, including representative citizens of the pulpit, the bar, and other departments of business. Twelve were arrested in Pulaski and ordered South under military escort by Major Munday. They were landed across the Tennessee River. Mr. Mooney, Drs. Sumpter and Abernathy, and Booker Shapard, an aged citizen, were among those thus summarily sent from Pulaski, going they knew not whither. Bishop Andrew, learning of the situation, appointed Mr. Mooney to the Marion Station, Alabama Conference, for the remainder of that Conference year.

Meantime the Tennessee Conference had met in October at Cornersville, Tenn., Dr. J. B. McFerrin presiding in the absence of a bishop, and Mr. Mooney was appointed to the Athens Station. Word reached him about the time of the meeting of the Alabama Conference, and he went at once to his work at Athens, where he remained till the threatened investment of the town by the Federals. He again crossed the Tennessee River and was appointed missionary chaplain to the Army of Tennessee, and there he labored in camp, in hospital, along the march till the end, when he returned to his chosen calling, the work of an itinerant Methodist preacher. He was Clerk, or Secretary, of the Confederate Chaplains' Association of the Army of Tennessee, and Mrs. Mooney prizes beyond price the minutes with the names of heroes who wore the gray, most of whom have answered to the last roll.

REV. W. MOONEY.

From survivors she has had many assurances of the affectionate regard in which they hold her husband for his work as missionary chaplain in that army. One of these letters from "one of the Mississippi boys," believing that it will be read with interest by all comrades, is given to the VETERAN:

"Mrs. Sue F. Mooney, Dresden, Tenn.: I have read with keen interest many times mention of your husband and his work, and often thought of writing to him, and would most assuredly have done so but for the reason that I thought he would scarcely have any recollection of me, and the other thought that many more competent would write thanking him for his arduous labors and faithful work as missionary chaplain in the Army of Tennessee.

"I belonged to the 32d and 45th Mississippi Regiments, consolidated, under Brig. Gen. M. P. Lowrey, who was himself a minister of the Baptist denomination, and was also greatly admired by us boys for his sterling qualities.

"Brother Mooney used to associate himself with General Lowrey, and we saw much of him on the march. He would often walk that he might let a sick or barefooted man ride his horse. Often when we would halt only for a short time he would gather the boys and hold service. I remember several of his texts—1 Timothy i. 15; 1 Corinthians xvi. 13—especially for impressions made on my heart.

"He used to preach for Granbury's Brigade (Texans). They claimed that he was their preacher. I often wonder if they remember him as I do."

JAMES EDWARD HENRY.

After some years of failing health, death came to James E. Henry at Jacksonville, Fla., in October. Since the war he had resided at Lake City until about four years ago, when he removed to Jacksonville. He is survived by his wife and an only child, Mrs. E. L. Greer, of Jacksonville.

James E. Henry was born in Summerville, Ga., in 1841, the oldest of nine children. At the beginning of the war he enlisted in the infantry at Ringgold, Ga., serving one year, and then going with the command to Pensacola, Fla., for another year. He then enlisted in Cobb's Cavalry Legion, and served in that command to the end of the war. He was with Stuart until his death, and then in Hampton's Cavalry, A. N. V., surrendering at Appomattox. His war record was unusually brilliant. He held positions of importance several times. Although he was not wounded, his clothing and canteen showed where the bullets had passed through. He was held in high esteem and made many friends, and his death is universally regretted.

DEATHS IN STONEWALL CAMP, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

(Reported by Thomas Shannon, Adjutant of the Camp.)

GWYNN.—George W. Gwynn died at the home of his son, in Newport News, Va., on October 11, 1907, aged seventy-one years. He was a member of Company I, 9th Virginia Infantry, having entered the service in April, 1861. Comrade

Gwynn was a brave soldier and served to the end of the war, participating in many of the great battles of the Army of Northern Virginia.

HOLLOWAY.—Joseph Holloway died at his home, in Norfolk, on December 2, 1907, aged sixty-six years. Comrade Holloway entered the service as a private in Company I, 61st Virginia Infantry, Mahone's famous brigade, and served to the end of the war, taking part in the memorable battles in which his brigade was engaged. Comrade Holloway was a true and faithful soldier.

CRISMOND.—John W. Crismond died at his home, in Portsmouth, on December 3, 1907, aged seventy-three years. Comrade Crismond enlisted April 19, 1861, as a private in the Portsmouth Light Artillery, better known as Grimes's Battery, which did such splendid service during the campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia. Comrade Crismond was a brave, faithful soldier, serving with his battery in all its engagements until captured at Hatcher's Run on April 2, 1865, and taken to Point Lookout Prison, from whence he was released June 10, 1865.

BILISOLY.—Dr. Antonio L. Bilisoly died at his home, in Portsmouth, Va., on November 20, 1907, aged seventy-one years. He entered the service on April 19, 1861, as a sergeant in Company K, 9th Virginia Infantry, with which he served until June, 1862, when he was commissioned second lieutenant and assigned to the staff of Gen. A. G. Blanchard, with whom he served until April, 1863, when he was ordered to Richmond, Va., and assigned to duty at the Camp of Instruction. In the fall of 1864 he was promoted to first lieutenant, and continued on duty in Richmond until the evacuation of that city. He was paroled at Burkeville, Va., April 24, 1865. Dr. Bilisoly was one of the best-known citizens of Portsmouth and beloved by all who knew him. He was an earnest Christian, a brave soldier, a devoted husband and father and friend.

SPENCER EAKIN.

The editor of the VETERAN wrote the Nashville American on the day that Spencer Eakin died, November 28:

"Please allow me space for a brief personal tribute to Spencer Eakin. I was a country boy of Bedford County, and he lived in the county town—Shelbyville. On a lovely afternoon in October, 1861, we happened to meet on the Public Square and engage in conversation. He was as comely a youth as I have ever seen. He was slender, his posture erect, and his features were as fair as those of any girl. He was quiet of manner and was dressed as a civilian except that he wore the cap of a soldier.

"The purely accidental chat disclosed that we were to leave home the same day for the war; and although members of different companies, we were to belong to the same regiment. The 41st Tennessee Infantry was organized and sworn into the Confederate States service at Camp Trousdale, Tenn., near the Kentucky line, the next month, November 4; and although Mr. Eakin was quite young, he was soon commissioned as lieutenant of his company (F), known as the Shelbyville Rebels. * * *

"Lieutenant Eakin soon became noted for his excellent discretion and his deliberate courage, and ere long was placed on detached service to report directly to the commanding general of the army. One illustration is given of his services in the regiment. After the fall of Vicksburg, General Grant pressed his forces vigorously on Jackson, and in an incredibly short time they were closing up boldly on that city. The 41st Tennessee, like many other regiments, had hardly established its battle line to be fortified, without even having located picket posts, when the Union Minie balls began to play havoc upon the Confederates. In the quick emergency Lieutenant Eakin was directed to ask for fifty volunteers and advance across a plowed field and establish outposts along the south side of a plank fence—in August. Across the plank fence there was tall corn with tangle that cut off all view beyond a rod or so.

"The writer was of those volunteers, and bears testimony to Lieutenant Eakin's conduct through that terrible ordeal

SPENCER EAKIN.

It was necessary for the men to lie low, which they did, while their commander walked erect up and down the line, watching the conditions with nothing of the bravo in his manner, yet amazingly deliberate in his every movement. It was one of the worst places our soldiers were subjected to during the war. Death reduced the number speedily; but the officer in charge was steadfast, and that line was maintained throughout the siege of nearly a week. There certainly was not a finer soldier nor a nobler man in the Confederate army."

The unquestioned courage, integrity, and patriotism of Sam Davis are often recalled by the conduct of Spencer Eakin on that occasion. The conditions indicated almost certain death and its solemnities were shown by Lieutenant Eakin's expression, and yet he wavered not, nor did he seem to cringe under the test.

Some special actions by organized associations are yet to be taken in regard to this noble man.

DEATHS IN MILDRED LEE CAMP.

Memorial services were held in the Mildred Lee Camp, Sherman, Tex., November 8 for the following members:

Butler Carpenter, Company H, 17th Louisiana Infantry.

J. C. Lawrence, Company E, 11th Georgia Cavalry.

A. M. DeShields, Company B, 11th Missouri Infantry.

Dr. E. E. Winn, Company I, 22d Georgia Infantry.

This makes ten who "have dropped out within a year and a half." Col. I. Gunter, of Texas, and Gens. John T. Morgan and E. W. Pettus, of Alabama, were included in the services. Appropriate addresses and songs were rendered.

[This report is from J. B. Stinson, of Sherman.]

DR. W. W. GRIGGS.

Died on May 6, 1907, Dr. William Wilbert Griggs. At the beginning of the war Dr. Griggs, who had just graduated as a physician, was at Bellevue Hospital, New York, in his profession. At the call of his State he gave up this position to enter the Confederate navy as a surgeon. He served in this capacity with great ability until his capture at the fall of Fort Fisher. He was taken to Governor's Island, where he was kept until the end of the war. For the past several years he practiced his profession in Elizabeth City, N. C., where he was loved by all who knew him.

DR. JAMES M. SAFFORD.

[Tribute by Prof. A. H. Buchanan, Lebanon, Tenn.]

One of earth's noblemen is gone, in person only; in spirit, never. His impress on students and friends goes down to coming ages. He was the true Christian gentleman; he leaves no associate behind whom he has not helped and elevated.

Fifty-four years ago he was my teacher, and years after was my associate in Cumberland University, and always our friendship was that of brothers. No one out of his family had a better right or chance to know him than I, and nobody has knowledge of a truer man. Our spheres of work were along different lines, though tangent in many points in which we were mutually interested, and two students never enjoyed working together in search of hidden truths more than we for many years. Few men ever realized more fully the words of the "wise man:" "That which is, is far off and exceeding deep; who can find it out?" And no one enjoyed searching to find it more than he. The thought comes that when my time comes to follow him he will meet me with the old remark: "Well [calling me by name], we will investigate this mystery together and to the bottom."

Patience and painstaking accuracy were personified in him. Few men did more hard work. No servant of his Tennessee has ever done for her more valuable work and for smaller pay. He was not a man that lived to look after his pay vouchers, and no State ever realized more its full value in return. Some State officers have attained their reputation almost entirely upon his work and without giving him due credit. And those who continue in his line of State work will find little to do except in the way of appendices to his.

Such a man makes one think more of life and the joys of its work. Happy good cheer always, a pleasant word for every one, a handshake that vibrated all the springs of joy that were found in you or induced them if not found. One of the saddest breaks in my life was when he left our university for Vanderbilt, his last long field of labor.

He was a Christian that lived the truth of his Christianity, a Church member who was all membership meant, a citizen that stood for the only true citizenship, and a friend that let you read all that was in his big heart.

Gone? Yes and no—the answer the thousands he has helped to make. The grandest funeral oration ever delivered was that by God himself, when he said, "Moses, my servant, is dead; now therefore arise, go," etc. This is the summation of all in the case of this life and the same admonition to those left behind. Peace to his memory.

PROF. JAMES M. SAFFORD.

Dr. Safford died in Dallas, Tex., where he and his noble wife, who preceded him to the grave, had gone to reside in their retirement with the family of a daughter, the wife of Mr. D. H. Morrow, at Dallas.

DR. H. NEESON.

Dr. H. Neeson, a native of Georgia, born in Augusta March 5, 1836, died at his home, in Benton, La., on May 8, 1907. When the war began, he enlisted in the Washington Artillery of Augusta, one of the oldest organizations in the State. Later he was made surgeon of the 64th Georgia Regiment, in Wright's Brigade. Most of his service was in Virginia, administering to the sick and wounded. One of the prettiest features of his life was the tender devotion which existed between him and his wife and children, who survive him. This was noted by all who enjoyed an acquaintance with the family.

W. R. GILBERT.

On the 24th of September, 1907, another Confederate soldier, W. R. Gilbert, of Company G, 59th North Carolina Regiment, answered the last roll call. He entered his company at its organization, when the war began. He became a courier to Bushrod Johnson, in which position he served until Appomattox. He was a good soldier and useful citizen.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE PRIZE ESSAY.

The report of Mrs. L. R. Schuyler to the United Daughters of the Confederacy and signed by the committee reads:

"The prize offered to Teachers' College, Columbia University, by the United Daughters of the Confederacy was awarded to Mr. Herbert T. Coleman, the subject being 'The Status of Education in the South Prior to the War between the States.'

"In my report of last year I mentioned the fact that we were indebted to Professor Mitchell, of Richmond College, for a list of topics, and that the committee had thought it wise to arrange these topics in some logical order, beginning with the conditions in the South prior to the war. This plan will be followed as closely as possible with the exception of this year, when we have taken for our one topic General Robert E. Lee, it being his centennial year.

"It will be of interest to all those who have not seen the October number of the VETERAN to learn that Mr. Coleman is a Canadian. A graduate of Toronto University, he afterwards received his Master's Degree from Columbia, and was called to fill the Chair of Education in the University of Colorado, the same position from which Dean Russell was called to Teachers' College. In September last he returned to his Alma Mater, Toronto University, as Professor of Education in that institution. While at Teachers' College he also had the distinction of winning the prize offered by the Daughters of the American Revolution. It would not be unnatural for us to anticipate a great future for the recipient of our first prize.

"I hope every Daughter will read this essay in the October VETERAN. It cannot fail to interest you, and may fill you with some pardonable pride to read of the part taken by the South in education and to learn that out of six State universities founded before 1830 the South furnished five.

Before closing this report I must, in justice to Miss Hallie Morrison Prentis, speak of the essay submitted by her and praised "for its superior character" by our judges, Dr. Alderman, President of the University of Virginia, Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, Professor of History in the University of North Carolina, and Dr. John H. Finley, President of the College of the City of New York. Dr. Russell felt that it was of such excellent character that he asked if the committee might divide the prize, but your committee felt that this would not be fair to Mr. Coleman. The subject of Miss Prentis's essay was 'The Antislavery Sentiment in Virginia in the Eighteenth Century.' It is a great pity that this essay could not be preserved; for it made me proud, when I remembered that my grandmother was a Virginian, to read of the efforts made by Virginia to abolish the traffic in slaves; that it was Virginia that incorporated into the proposed Constitution of the United States a clause to abolish the importation of slaves from the date of its adoption, but that after a protest from South Carolina and Georgia the clause was amended in such a way that it did not take effect for twenty years. It is noteworthy to read that the compromise was carried by the votes of New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, the only New England States represented.

"Realizing the necessity of having our prize on a firm foundation, I would recommend that the sum of five hundred dollars be appropriated annually for an endowment fund until the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars be raised.

"It was a great privilege and pleasure to have with me our President General at the commencement of Columbia University last spring, when our prize was awarded for the first time, especially as she is a member of this committee.

"I have received the consent of Dean Russell to place in the library of Teachers' College Columbia University, for the purpose of research work, any manuscripts which might be of value in connection with the study of the War between the States, documents which might (in the words of the Dean) 'aid some day in the writing of a correct history of the war.'"

MORE ABOUT ANDREWS, THE RAIDER.

Our good friend Milton Overly, formerly of Flemingsburg, Ky., but now of Lexington, sends the following:

"C. L. Dudley replies to my letter asking for information concerning James Andrews, the man who stole the General. Mr. Dudley is an ex-Federal soldier, is one of Flemingsburg's most useful and prosperous business men, and he is perfectly reliable. He is a dealer in agricultural implements, and his humorous advertisements attract much attention. He is the self-styled 'agriculturalimplementist.' Mr. Dudley is a little off in the matter of the money left at Flemingsburg by Andrews when he went South. The public schools of Fleming County got the benefit of some of it when I was their superintendent. Mr. Dudley writes:

"I have been trying to find out all I could for you, but all the people who knew Andrews have "passed over." I remember him as a very tall, slender man with long black whiskers, fair-complexioned, rather feminine voice, and I think he made some pretensions as a music teacher; he was a good singer and a painter by trade—did fresco work. He did the frescoing on the old Morris property here, and it was the admiration of the town. It was removed only a few years ago.

"I had a talk with Mr. J. H. Cooper, who was the most intimate friend of Andrews at the time. He was here, and he says that "Pittenger's" book gives his birthplace as Virginia, Hancock County; but he says that there seemed to be some mystery about the fellow. Some people doubt whether his real name was Andrews or not. He never was editor of any paper that I ever heard of, and from some of his letters that I have seen would think he was not an editorial writer. He was not a regular soldier; just a brave, daring, fearless man, hunting adventures without caring for the money that was in it. There has never been any evidence adduced to show that he was to get any riches out of the capture of the engine, and I think he had no promise of any sum of money. Really, there was no one with authority to make such a trade with him.

"He had no money when he died, save about $1,100, which he had left up here from time to time with Brack Jackson. This money was turned over to the county officials for the use of the poor, according to the will of Andrews (his last letter to Brack); but, owing to some misuse, it never reached the desired end.

"Mr. Andrews came here about two years before the war broke out, and had been doing some painting for William Lindsay, near the Mill Creek Church, and walked into town from there. His trunk was returned there from Louisville after he was executed, but it was empty when it arrived.

"There have been several books written by the boys who were with Andrews, giving their side of the race. I have seen only Pittenger's account, which is very good. He was here once for a week hunting up the history of Andrews. I wish I could tell you more, but the time is so far off that I have forgotten a great deal I used to remember. If there is anything I can do for you, command me and I'll try to obey."

THE CONFEDERATES AND THE TWO FLAGS.

A plea courteous and even kind comes from a committee at Columbus, Ohio, against the display of Confederate flags in the South. The VETERAN expresses its faith that universally Confederates who are true are of one mind—viz.: They respect the stars and stripes, and are ready to fight under it; but the term "Old Glory" does not please them. Years ago there were discussions favorable to compelling the display of the flag on public school buildings, and now some of the G. A. R. people are urging that the Confederate flag be never exposed in public. They had as well let that flag matter alone. A prominent official of the Union cause was recently at a Vicksburg gathering, where the two sides had assembled, the Union Veterans being hosts, and he made open and bold protest against the absence of Confederate flags in the display, and not a man demurred to his views. Our comrades of the Union army may rest assured that the country is safe. The Confederate flag has never been any discredit to it. That flag will be revered by generations yet unborn. Father Ryan immortalized it even after it was "conquered."

There is just now from the press an illustrated history of the Confederate flags under the direction of the United Confederate Veterans in 1906. For sale by Adjutant General W. E. Mickle, New Orleans (price, 25 cents). That famous little banner stands for all that is noble and pure in mankind, but we don't forget that

"We yet are in our Father's house; we love our country's flag.
Long may its folds unchallenged fly on sea and mountain crag!

Long may Columbia's gonfalon float proudly to the breeze!
And let no man with angry hand the sacred emblem seize,
But let us grieve over every wound wherein our country bled.
We love the brave of every faith; we mourn our gallant dead.
Secure against fraternal hate, they sleep beneath the sod;
The Lord of hosts hath summoned them. Their fame is safe with God."

ABOUT "KIND OF MONUMENTS TO ERECT."

BY A STUDENT OF SCULPTURE.

Mr. Editor: I read Patron's article, "Kind of Monuments to Erect," in the December VETERAN with great interest. This has been accentuated by my seeing within the last ten days some specifications for two Confederate monuments, both of which called for figures of a Confederate soldier at "parade rest." Parade rest! What in the world did our fellows know of parade rest? In the four years they never had time to rest, and none of us can remember having been on parade. If you want a good, live Confederate, get him in action—when there was something to do and he was doing it. We doubt not at all that the committees in charge of the above monuments did not so much as read over the specifications of their monuments, and these specifications probably were drawn up by dealers who did not care if the figure was on its head or on its feet, so they got their money. As to the correct positions or emblems, they were not to be considered. In fact, these points are but little discussed in meetings between committees and dealers. The dealer does the talking, and the tenor of his song is: "What I offer you is bigger than the other dealer is presenting and for less money."

Indeed, Patron is right; give us more art in less space. All of us cannot put up expensive monuments, but just as artistic effects can be bought for $500 as for $5,000. Your $500 monument may not be as large, but it can be just as artistic.

THE DEROSSET LETTER—EXPLANATORY.

Capt. A. L. DeRosset, of Wilmington, N. C., writes in explanation and correction of his article in the VETERAN for October concerning the applications of General's Grant and Thomas and Admiral Farragut to President Davis for commissions in the Confederate army and navy:

"In the article which I contributed to the VETERAN and published in the October number I did my friend, Col. J. A. Chaloron, of New Orleans, unintentionally an injustice, which I desire to correct.

"In the article I wrote: 'Further, the Colonel told me that he had also letters to Mr. Davis from Admiral Farragut and from Gen. George H. Thomas, each applying for commissions in the Confederate service.' In the sentence previous to this I wrote that Mr. Davis's correspondence could not be published until two years after his widow's death. So it is now apparent to me that I wholly misunderstood Colonel Chaloron, for in writing me he said 'that very likely letters from them [Grant, Farragut, and Thomas] and others might be found among the Davis papers in my keeping,' and did not positively assert it.

"So far as Thomas is concerned, Dr. J. William Jones has testified to the fact of a letter in his possession acknowledging that he had applied to Mr. Davis for service. As to Farragut, I have conclusive testimony that in the spring of 1861, at the residence of Col. Gaston Meares, on Twenty-First Street, New York, he emphatically stated that nothing could induce him to raise his sword against the South. My whole regret about the article is in relation to the conversation with Colonel Chaloron."

Concerning his delay of reply to much and widespread criticism, Captain DeRosset states: "In the latter part of October I was taken ill, and shortly thereafter was sent to the hospital for a surgical operation, and have just returned therefrom. * * * I will take up the matter later when I am in a better condition physically and mentally, for now I am suffering with nervous shock."

MONTEAGLE FOR A QUARTER CENTURY.

The mention of Monteagle instantly concerns a multitude of people, mainly of the South. For twenty-five years this summer Chautauqua of the South has continued its regular sessions of education, recreation, and religion. It was over-advertised in the earlier years, and many people attended in hearty sympathy with the enterprise; but conditions were so rude that they were disappointed and went away with prejudice against, rather than enthusiasm for, the enterprise. Some continued faithfully and other came, some of whom became interested, and each year's experience added staunch supporters to the Assembly.

COTTAGE (ERECTED BY MRS. E. E. HOSS) ON BROW OF MOUNTAIN.

OUTING PARTY AT MONTEAGLE.

The prosperity of the country is stamped upon the character of improvements, and visitors now, after a decade or so, are amazed at the many, many splendid homes, the magnificent drives, and the culture generally in improvements. The business management by Mr. Butler is fully apace with the needs of the Assembly, and the finances are evidently in a prosperous condition.

During the last several years in succession Capt. M. B. Pilcher and Mrs. Pilcher have given the interests of Montecagle their zealous attentions throughout each year. Mrs. Pilcher gave unremitting zeal to the improvement of walks and the culture of flowers.

This year's programme, under the capable and zealous care of Dr. Allen G. Hall as platform manager, is a stride to the front that fascinates all well-behaved attendants. The most important of all good features is the "Woman's Congress Week," wherein "U. D. C. Day" has been the most conspicuous. This is under the auspices of the Montecagle Ladies' Association, of which Mrs. Pilcher is President. Proceedings of the U. D. C. Day appeared in the August issue.

The officers at present are: John Bell Keeble, President, Nashville, Tenn.; D. M. Russell, Vice President, Jonestown, Miss.; H. C. Hensley, Treasurer; W. H. DuBose, Secretary; F. A. Butler, in charge of the properties; Allen G. Hall, LL.D., Superintendent of Summer Schools and Platform Manager (Vanderbilt University Law Department), Nashville, Tenn.

Executive Committee: B. L. Wiggins, M.A., LL.B., Chairman, Vice Chancellor University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.; Col. A. M. Shook and George M. Ingram, Nashville, Tenn.; Col. W. F. Taylor, Memphis, Tenn.

Honorary Vice Presidents: J. S. Giddings, Florida; W. B. Ward, Texas; Dr. H. P. Davis, Mississippi; Jesse French, Missouri; C. S. Gardener, Virginia; J. G. Thweatt, Arkansas;

J. A. Hill, North Carolina; E. T. McGhee, Georgia; D. B. Carré, Louisiana; J. B. Shearer, D.D., North Carolina; R. L. Power, Kentucky; M. B. Pilcher, Tennessee; J. H. Carlisle, D.D., South Carolina.

Trustees: John Bell Keeble, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. H. C. Evans, Milford, Tex.; J. A. Hill, M.D., Mooresville, Ala.; George M. King, Monteagle, Tenn.; George M. Ingram, Nashville, Tenn.; G. R. McGhee, Jackson, Tenn.; R. A. Allison, Winona, Miss.; Prof. H. B. Carré, Nashville, Tenn.; W. L. Danky, Nashville, Tenn.; W. B. Ward, Jefferson, Tex.; A. M. Shook, Nashville, Tenn.; B. L. Wiggins, M.A., LL.B., Sewanee, Tenn.; W. W. Moore, Vicksburg, Miss.; W. H. DuBose M.A., Sewanee, Tenn.; E. W. Holcomb, Monteagle, Tenn.; Ira Landrith, D.D., Nashville, Tenn.; J. D. Roundtree, Quitman, Ga.; W. F. Taylor, Memphis, Tenn.; E. S. Drake, Fort Gibson, Miss.; Dr. H. M. Hamill, Nashville, Tenn.; D. M. Russell, Jonestown, Miss.; Dr. H. P. Davis, Vicksburg, Miss.; M. B. Pilcher, Nashville, Tenn.

Resident Physicians: Dr. G. W. Drake; Dr. A. Hudson; Dr. W. R. Holland, Osteopath; Dr. Richards, Dentist.

Health Officer and Sanitary Inspector: Dr. J. A. Hill.

It is expected that considerable building will be done before the next season. Much has been contracted for already.

THE B. H. STIEF JEWELRY CATALOGUE.—This jewelry company of Nashville, Tenn., noted for its reliability and for its enterprise, has issued a superb catalogue of its goods with illustrations so clear and fine that orders may be satisfactorily given by its pictures. Purchasers who can't call may do well to write for this catalogue.

General Robt. E. Lee Picture and Calendar

Size, 14 x 18 inches

Miniature of Robert E. Lee in Color on Ivory, Flags of the Confederacy in Colors, with Birthplace and Home of Gen. Lee.

Perfect reproduction from water-color painting by Miss Dixie W. Leach, issued both as picture or calendar, showing date of his birth, January 19, in space of calendar.

For sale by stationery and art stores throughout the South, or sent to any address on receipt of $1. Special prices to dealers and Daughters of the Confederacy in lots of 10 to 100.

Also send for Flags of the Confederacy post cards, and set of cards, "Our Colored Friends in Dixie," 12 in set—old-time Maummies, Uncles, and Aunties of "the South that is no more." Set for 30 cents.

Address

Robert E. Lee Calendar Co.
RALEIGH, N. C.

CATALOGUE OF THE Munson Nurseries

Denison, Texas

SENT ON APPLICATION FREE

These Nurseries have originated and introduced more valuable varieties of SOUTHERN FRUITS than any other nursery in the South, and are perfectly reliable.

Thirty-one years at
Denison

SAY, MA, IF I LIVE, WILL I BE AS BIG A GOOSE AS YOU?
YES, MY CHILD, IF YOU DON'T USE

Magic White Soap

Rub Magic on soiled parts, leave in water one hour. No boiling; no washboard; no headache, if you use MAGIC WHITE SOAP; will iron easy as magic; has no rosin like in yellow soap. Get your grocer to order. $4 per box—100 cakes, 5-cent size. Save the wrappers. We pay freight.

MAGIC CHIPS IN BARRELS FOR LAUNDRIES

MAGIC KELLER SOAP WORKS, Ltd.
426 Girod Street, New Orleans.

Pettibone Uniforms

for U. C. V. and U. S. C. V. are famous. Being made by expert military tailors, they have the true military cut. They fit well, look well, wear well, and are very reasonable in price. Each one is made to individual measure. Send for prices and samples of cloth.

Besides Uniforms we have been manufacturing Flags, Banners, Badges, Swords, Belts, Caps, Military and Secret Order Goods for thirty-five years.

The Pettibone Bros. Mfg. Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

(Mention this paper when writing.)

T. J. Mize, of Bells, Tex., would like the address of Sam Haines, who, he thinks, was from Georgia and was wagon master under Capt. Thad Foster in the reserve supply train of J. E. Johnston's army.

TAPS.

(Lines to a Confederate Veteran.)

BY J. H. A. BAKER, FORT SMITH, ARK.

(Dedicated to my old friend, Dr. J. S. McCorkle, Assistant Surgeon 15th Mississippi Regiment.)

Reveille you've forgotten,
Mess call, too, perhaps;
Assembly's a recollection,
But you've never forgotten "tap."

After a day of skirmish,
Mess, and then the stars,
Taps, and sweet oblivion
Under the crimson bars.

May you live to be a hundred!
God save you from mishaps.
May you always be at "attention"
As the trumpeter's sounding "taps!"

Your record's a matter of history,
A classic of poem and song;
Your deeds have been made immortal;
You're a hero amid the throng.

And when the Great Trumpeter calleth,
And you, with the other chaps,
Shall assemble for final "inspection,"
May you go to sleep with "taps!"

WANTED.—Purchasers for the beautiful Southern picture, "From Manassas," designed by a Confederate veteran; size, 32x22. Lithographed in rich, appropriate colors, ready for framing. Unique in design. On right margin in battle array stand the boys in gray with peerless R. E. Lee; on left margin, also in battle array, stand the boys in blue with dauntless U. S. Grant. In the space between run three lines of rail fence, the rails being the staff on which is written the words of the old war song, "When this cruel war is over," the four stanzas being given beneath. Price, unframed, $1; handsomely framed, $3.50. Agents also wanted to sell this picture. Address Mrs. Belle Thompson, Box 28, Hasty, N. C.

L. H. Ridout, of Warren, Tex., wishes to make a record of the army life of his father, William Dempsey Ridout, who was third lieutenant of a company organized in the east part of Shelby County, Tenn., about twenty-five miles east of Memphis. He was severely wounded in the battle of Chickamauga or Missionary Ridge. Doubtless some surviving comrade can recall the services of Lieutenant Ridout.

Watch Charms
FOR
Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as Illustrated, $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" pins, handsomely enameled, regulation pin, sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
WASHINGTON, D. C.

The BEST PLACE to purchase all-wool

Bunting or Silk Flags

of all kinds

Silk Banners, Swords, Belts, Caps
and all kinds of Military Equipment and Society Goods is at

Veteran J. A. JOEL & CO. 58 Nassau St.,
SEND FOR PRICE LIST. New York City.

L. A. Fitzpatrick, Sr., Helena, Ark., wants to hear from any comrades who saw and know that Gen. John C. Breckinridge was at Greensboro, N. C., about the 23d of April and took part in discussing terms of surrender between Gen. Joseph E. Johnston and General Sherman. He says he was there as a private in the 31st Mississippi Regiment, and was detailed at General Featherston's tent where Breckinridge stopped overnight, and by order of Featherston saddled a horse for Breckinridge. Some one has said that Breckinridge was not there at all at that time.

Capt. Robert D. Smith, of Columbia, Tenn., wishes to complete his file of the VETERAN, for which he needs the following numbers: 1893, January, February, March, April, August, November; 1900 January; 1902, January and October. Write him in advance of sending.

W. P. Jeanes, McGregor, Tex., wishes to hear from any members of Company C, 10th Confederate Cavalry, Wheeler's command.

SOFTENED WITH SORE EYES Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

New Orleans . . .

"THE GATEWAY OF THE MISSISSIPPI." The Great City of the Great South. The Largest Cotton, Rice, and Sugar Market in the World.

The Most Popular Winter Resort in America

Continuous Horse Racing, Golf Links, Hunting and Fishing, Comfort, Health, Pleasure. Eleven Theaters.

New St. Charles Hotel

Modern, Fireproof, First-Class. Accommodating One Thousand Guests. Turkish, Russian, Roman, and Plain Baths. Luxurious Sun Bath and Palm Garden.

ANDREW R. BLAKELY & COMPANY, Ltd., Proprietors

From the Edgefield (S. C.) Times: "Queer things happen to men in war. Capt. W. H. Brunson, our veteran postmaster, was wounded every year for four years, between June 20 and July 15, in the war of 1861-65, and he lives yet to tell of it. Two brothers, Messrs. George and L. W. White, of Abbeville, were wounded in the same battle. Both were struck near the same place, in the center of the stomach, it is said; the ball in one going around to the left and coming out, and in the other going to the right and coming out. Mr. George White is still living, and Mr. L. W. White died only a short time since."

W. W. Stuart, of Paragould, Ark. wants to hear from any survivors of Company A, 31st Arkansas, Jackson Sharpshooters, from Jackson, Ark., and of Company A, 2d Regiment of Engineer Troops, commanded by Lieutenant Vernon, with which he was paroled at Gainesville, Ala.

At the last annual meeting of the U. C. V. Camp, New York City, the following officers were elected: Commander, Edward Owen; Lieutenant Commander, H. N. Bullington; Adjutant, C. R. Hatton; Paymaster, T. L. Moore; Chaplain, Rev. George S. Baker; Surgeon, Dr. J. Harvie Dew; Executive Committee, T. C. Caskin, J. E. Graybill, George W. Cary, F. C. Rogers, R. W. Gwathmey. This reelection makes the fourteenth term as Commander of the Camp for Maj. Edward Owen, who has given of his time and talent liberally to make this Camp one of the strongest in the organization

Attention has been called to an error in the list of generals killed and died during the war in the name of W. H. C. Whitney, who died at Governor's Island, N. Y. This should have been W. H. C. Whitting, who was captured and sent to Governor's Island, where he died. The name of Brig. Gen. John Adams, killed at Franklin, did not appear in this list by some oversight.

Mrs. William Ambrose Smith, 501 Azule Street, Hyde Park, Tampa, Fla., wishes the names of two veterans of the 4th Kentucky Regiment who were with her husband, William A. Smith. He enlisted in 1861 and served until the surrender.

BROTHERS IN GRAY. Accidentally I have discovered a root that will cure tobacco habit and indigestion. No drugs. Let me write you the particulars of my discovery. C. H. Stokes, Monawk, Fla.

You can do a profitable clothing business without carrying a stock by getting a sample line from

Edward Rose & Co.

WHOLESALE TAILORS

CHICAGO

We supply merchants in good standing with sample lines from which to take orders. ☐ Only ONE sample line in any one place. ☐ We positively entertain no orders from the consumer direct. ☐ All orders must come through our regular representatives.

SCREED'S DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of

Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—
—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

U.S.A.
LONDON, ENGLAND.

NEW YORK, N.Y.

PRICE 50 CENTS

Organization of Camps

IN THE

United Confederate Veterans

Containing Names of Department, Division and Brigade
Commanders and their Adjutants General and Addresses.
Lists of Camps Numerically Arranged. Summary of Camps by States, Divisions and Departments ❧ ❧ ❧

PREPARED EXPRESSLY FOR THE USE OF DELEGATES

TO THE

Eighteenth Reunion and Meeting of the Association

HELD AT

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

JUNE 9, 10, 11, 1908

STEPHEN D. LEE,

General Commander.

WM. E. MICKLE,

Adjutant Gen'l and Chief of Staff.

ORGANIZATION

OF THE

United Confederate Veterans

WITH NAMES OF THE

DEPARTMENT, DIVISION AND BRIGADE COMMANDERS, THEIR ADJUTANTS GENERAL, AND ADDRESSES.

General STEPHEN D. LEE, General Commanding, Columbus, Miss.
Major General WM. E. MICKLE, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, New Orleans, La.

ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA DEPARTMENT.

Lieut. General C. IRVINE WALKER, Commander, Charleston, S. C.
Brig. General RICHARD B. DAVIS, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Petersburg, Va.

South Carolina Division.

Major General THOS. W. CARWILE, Commander, Edgefield, S. C.
Col. J. M. JORDAN, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Greenville, S. C.
Brig. General ZIMMERMAN DAVIS, Commanding 1st Brigade, Charleston, S. C.
Brig. General B. H. TEAGUE, Commanding 2d Brigade, Aiken, S. C.

North Carolina Division.

Major General JULIAN S. CARR, Commander, Durham, N. C.
Col. H. A. LONDON, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Pittsboro, N. C.
Brig. General P. C. CARLTON, Commanding 1st Brigade, Statesville, N. C.
Brig. General W. L. LONDON, Commanding 2d Brigade, Pittsboro, N. C.
Brig. General JAS. I. METTS, Commanding 3d Brigade, Wilmington, N. C.
Brig. General JAS. M. RAY, Commanding 4th Brigade, Asheville, N. C.

Virginia Division.

Major General SMITH BOLLING, Commander, Petersburg, Va.
Col. WM. M. EVANS, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Petersburg, Va.
Brig. General THOMAS W. SMITH, Commanding 1st Brigade, Suffolk, Va.
Brig. General JAS. MACGILL, Commanding 2d Brigade, Pulaski, Va.
Brig. General R. D. FUNKHOUSER, Commanding 3d Brigade, Maurertown, Va.
Brig. General JAMES BAUMGARDENER, Commanding 4th Brigade, Staunton, Va.

West Virginia Division.

Major General ROBERT WHITE, Commander, Wheeling, W. Va.
Col. A. C. L. GATEWOOD, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Linwood, W. Va.
Brig. General DAVID E. JOHNSTON, Commanding 1st Brigade, Bluefield, W. Va.
Brig. General S. S. GREEN, Commanding 2d Brigade, Charleston, W. Va.

Maryland Division.

Major General A. C. TRIPPE, Commander, Baltimore, Md.
Col. DAVID S. BRISCOE, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Baltimore, Md.
Brig. General OSWALD TIGHTMAN, Commanding 1st Brigade, Easton, Md.
Brig. General FRANK A. BOND, Commanding 2d Brigade, Lumbertown, N. C.

ARMY OF TENNESSEE DEPARTMENT.

Lieut. General CLEMENT A. EVANS, Commander, Atlanta, Ga.
 Brig. General E. T. SYKES, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Columbus, Miss

Louisiana Division.

Major General T. W. CASTLEMAN, Commander, New Orleans, La.
 Col. L. H. GARDNER, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, New Orleans, La.

Tennessee Division.

Major General GEO. W. GORDON, Commander, Memphis, Tenn.
 Col. JOHN P. HICKMAN, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Nashville, Tenn.
 Brig. General JOHN M. BROOKS, Commanding 1st Brigade, Knoxville, Tenn.
 Brig. General JOHN HUGH McDOWELL, Commanding 2d Brigade, Union City, Tenn.
 Brig. General CLAY STACKER, Commanding 3d Brigade, Clarksville, Tenn.

Florida Division.

Major General W. L. WITTICH, Commander, Pensacola, Fla.
 Col. ROBT. J. MAGILL, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Jacksonville, Fla.
 Brig. General SAMUEL PASCO, Commanding 1st Brigade, Monticello, Fla.
 Brig. General S. C. BOYLESTON, Commanding 2d Brigade, Jacksonville, Fla.
 Brig. General B. N. MATHIS, Commanding 3d Brigade, Plant City, Fla.

Alabama Division.

Major General GEO. P. HARRISON, Commander, Opelika, Ala.
 Col. HARVEY E. JONES, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Montgomery, Ala.
 Brig. General JNO. W. A. SANFORD, Commanding 1st Brigade, Montgomery, Ala.
 Brig. General P. D. BOWLES, Commanding 2d Brigade, Evergreen, Ala.
 Brig. General J. N. THOMPSON, Commanding 3d Brigade, Tuseumbia, Ala.
 Brig. General J. W. BUSH, Commanding 4th Brigade, Birmingham, Ala.

Mississippi Division.

Major General ROBT. LOWRY, Commander, Jackson, Miss.
 Col. J. L. McCASKILL, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Brandon, Miss.
 Brig. General W. A. MONTGOMERY, Commanding 1st Brigade, Edwards, Miss.
 Brig. General J. P. CARTER, Commanding 2d Brigade, McComb City, Miss.
 Brig. General GEO. M. HELM, Commanding 3d Brigade, Greenville, Miss.

Georgia Division.

Major General JOHN W. CLARK, Commander, Augusta, Ga.
 Colonel JAS. L. FLEMING, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Augusta, Ga.
 Brig. General LOUIS G. YOUNG, Commanding South Georgia Brigade, Savannah, Ga.
 Brig. General J. W. WILCOX, Commanding East Georgia Brigade, Macon, Ga.
 Brig. General J. GID MORRIS, Commanding North Georgia Brigade, Marietta, Ga.
 Brig. General JAMES E. DEVAUGHN, Commanding West Georgia Brigade, Montezuma, Ga.

Kentucky Division.

Major General BENNETT H. YOUNG, Commander, Louisville, Ky.
 Col. W. A. MILTON, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Louisville, Ky.
 Brig. General JAMES R. ROGERS, Commanding 1st Brigade, Paris, Ky.
 Brig. General W. J. STONE, Commanding 2d Brigade, Kuttawa, Ky.
 Brig. General D. THORNTON, Commanding 3d Brigade, Louisville, Ky.
 Brig. General P. P. JOHNSON, Commanding 4th Brigade, Lexington, Ky.

TRANS-MISSISSIPPI DEPARTMENT.

Lieut. General W. L. CABELL, Commander, Dallas, Texas.

Brig. General A. T. WATTS, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Beaumont, Tex.

Texas Division.

Major General K. M. VAN ZANDT, Commander, Fort Worth, Tex.

Brig. General J. T. JARRARD, Commanding 1st Brigade, Huntsville, Tex.

Brig. General T. L. LARGEN, Commanding 2d Brigade, San Antonio, Tex.

Brig. General F. T. ROCHE, Commanding 3d Brigade, Georgetown, Tex.

Brig. General W. B. BERRY, Commanding 4th Brigade, Brookstone, Tex.

Brig. General JAS. A. CUMMINS, Commanding 5th Brigade, Bowie, Tex.

Indian Territory Division.

Major General DAN'L M. HAILEY, Commander, McAlester, Okla.

Col. R. B. COLEMAN, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, McAlester, Okla.

Brig. General JAS. HARGIS, Commanding Chickasaw Brigade, Ada, Okla.

Brig. General JOHN M. HALL, Commanding Choctaw Brigade, Caddo, Okla.

Brig. General CHAS. M. McCLELLAN, Commanding Cherokee Brigade, Claremore, Okla.

Brig. General WM. E. GENTRY, Commanding Creek Brigade, Checotah, Okla.

Missouri Division.

Major General Z. H. LOWDERWICK, Commander, Joplin, Mo.

Col. JOHN C. MOORE, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Joplin, Mo.

Brig. General O. H. P. CATRON, Commander Eastern Brigade, West Plains, Mo.

Brig. General W. P. GIBSON, Commanding Western Brigade, Warrensburg, Mo.

Arkansas Division.

Major General JAMES H. BERRY, Commander, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Col. W. M. WATKINS, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Sweet Home, Ark.

Brig. General JONATHAN KELLOGG, Commanding 1st Brigade, Little Rock, Ark.

Brig. General JOHN R. THORNTON, Commanding 2d Brigade, Camden, Ark.

Brig. General R. R. POE, Commanding 3d Brigade, Clinton, Ark.

Brig. General JOHN G. McKEAN, Commanding 4th Brigade, Locksburg, Ark.

Oklahoma Division.

Major General JOHN THREADGILL, Commander, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Col. WM. M. CROSS, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Brig. General G. W. R. CHINN, Commanding 1st Brigade, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Brig. General T. B. HOGG, Commanding 2d Brigade, Shawnee, Okla.

Brig. General WM. TAYLOR, Commanding 3d Brigade, Altus, Okla.

North-West Division.

Major General PAUL A. FUSZ, Commander, Philipsburg, Mont.

Col. WILLIAM RAY, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Philipsburg, Mont.

Brig. General WM. F. KIRBY, Commanding Montana Brigade, Bozeman, Mont.

Pacific Division.

Major General WM. C. HARRISON, M. D., Commander, Los Angeles, Cal.

Col. LOUIS THIEMANN, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff, Los Angeles, Cal.

Brig. General S. S. BIRCHFIELD, Commanding New Mexico Brigade, Deming, New Mexico.

Brig. General VICTOR MONTGOMERY, Commanding California Brigade, Santa Anna, Cal.

OFFICIAL:

Wm. E. Mickle.

Adjutant General and Chief of Staff.

LIST OF CAMPS

Admitted into the Fellowship of the United Confederate Veterans, with Numbers, Headquarters and Names of Present Commanders and Adjutants.

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1...	Army of Northern Virginia.....	La...	New Orleans, La.....	Harry H. Marks.....	Thos. B. O'Brien
2...	Army of Tennessee.....	La...	New Orleans, La.....	Richard D. Screven.....	Major Nicholas Cuny
3...	General LeRoy Stafford.....	La...	Shreveport, La.....	F. C. Marsden.....	Geo. L. Woodward
4...	N. B. Forrest.....	Tenn...	Chattanooga, Tenn.....	W. H. Payne, Sr.....	L. T. Dickinson
5...	Fred Ault.....	Tenn...	Knoxville, Tenn.....	W. H. Alexander.....	Chas. Ducloux
6...	Jeff. Davis.....	La...	Alexandria, La.....	Major Fred. Seip.....	Capt. W. W. Whittington
7...	Ruston.....	La...	Ruston, La.....	.....	Capt. J. L. Bond
8...	Ex-Confederate Ass'n, Chicago.....	Ky...	Chicago, Ill.....	G. W. LeVin.....	Geo. W. Smith
9...	Vet. Confed. States Cavalry.....	La...	New Orleans, La.....	H. M. Wright.....	Wallace Wood
10...	Ward Confederate Veterans.....	Fla...	Pensacola, Fla.....	Boykin Jones.....	John L. Pinney
11...	Raphael Semmes.....	Ala...	Mobile, Ala.....	C. C. Nettles.....	R. E. Daly, Sr., Actg.
12...	Turney.....	Tenn...	Winchester, Tenn.....	P. B. Keith.....	N. R. Martin
13...	W. W. Loring.....	Fla...	Brooksville, Fla.....	Gen. J. C. Davant.....	Frank E. Saxon
14...	R. E. Lee.....	La...	Opelousas, La.....	Samuel Haas.....	Leonce Sandoz
15...	Washington Artillery.....	La...	New Orleans, La.....	Gen. W. J. Behan.....	John Holmes
16...	Henry St. Paul.....	La...	New Orleans, La.....	Gen. A. B. Booth.....	Col. Jos. Demourelle
17...	Baton Rouge.....	La...	Baton Rouge, La.....	Howell Carter.....	F. W. Heroman
18...	Iberville.....	La...	Plaquemine, La.....	Fred. Orillon.....	Anatole Joly
19...	Ben Humphreys.....	Miss...	Crystal Spgs., Miss.....	A. T. Wolfe.....	S. H. Aby
20...	Natchez.....	Miss...	Natchez, Miss.....	W. H. H. Wilson.....	John A. Dicks
21...	Hattiesburg.....	Miss...	Hattiesburg, Miss.....	J. P. Carter.....	W. P. Chambers
22...	J. J. Whitney.....	Miss...	Fayette, Miss.....	John D. Chamberlain.....	T. B. Hammitt
23...	Kitt Mott.....	Miss...	Holly Springs, Miss.....	W. A. Anderson.....	Wm. Garland Ford
24...	Robert A. Smith.....	Miss...	Jackson, Miss.....	C. W. Gruber.....	E. H. Reber
25...	Walthall.....	Miss...	Meridian, Miss.....	B. Waddell, M. D.....	Gen. B. V. White
26...	W. A. Montgomery.....	Miss...	Edwards, Miss.....	H. S. Pond.....	T. H. W. Barrett
27...	Isham Harrison.....	Miss...	Columbus, Miss.....	Col. Wm. C. Richards.....	Col. Thos. Harrison
28...	Confederate Historical Ass'n.....	Tenn...	Memphis, Tenn.....	Maj. Gen. G. W. Gordon.....	I. N. Rainey
29...	Ben. McCulloch.....	Tex...	Cameron, Tex.....	John J. Irwin.....	James B. Moore
30...	Ben. McCulloch.....	Tex...	Decatur, Tex.....	G. W. Short.....	M. D. Sellars
31...	Sterling Price.....	Tex...	Dallas, Tex.....	J. R. Cole.....	Brig. Gen. Oliver Steele
32...	Vicksburg.....	Miss...	Vicksburg, Miss.....	Gen. D. A. Campbell.....	R. E. Walne
34...	Joseph E. Johnston.....	Ga...	Dalton, Ga.....	S. B. Felker.....	J. H. Stanford
35...	Frank Cheatham.....	Tenn...	Nashville, Tenn.....	Deering J. Roberts.....	Col. John P. Hickman
36...	Hillsboro.....	Fla...	Tampa, Fla.....	B. C. West.....	H. L. Crane
37...	John Ingram.....	Tenn...	Jackson, Tenn.....	David T. Turner.....	G. R. McGee
38...	Major Victor Maurin.....	La...	Donaldsonville, La.....	S. A. Poche.....	Bienvenu Cire
39...	W. J. Hardee.....	Ala...	Birmingham, Ala.....	.....	.....
40...	Natchitoches.....	La...	Natchitoches, La.....	.....	J. C. Trichel, Sr
41...	Mouton.....	La...	Mansfield, La.....	J. J. Billingsley.....	Thomas G. Pegues
42...	Stonewall Jackson.....	Tenn...	McKenzie, Tenn.....	J. P. Cannon.....	J. M. Null
43...	John C. Upton.....	Tex...	Huntsville, Tex.....	W. W. Durham.....	W. F. Baldwin
44...	John H. Reagan.....	Tex...	Palestine, Tex.....	S. P. Allen.....	A. N. Dexter
45...	J. E. B. Stuart.....	Tex...	Terrell, Tex.....	P. G. Nebhut.....	Vic. Reinhardt
47...	Indian River.....	Fla...	Titusville, Fla.....	W. S. Norwood.....	M. S. Sams
48...	Albert Sidney Johnston.....	Tex...	Tyler, Tex.....	Major Benson W. Roberts.....	John G. Chitwood
49...	Woodville.....	Miss...	Woodville, Miss.....	General J. H. Jones.....	G. Kann
50...	John B. Gordon.....	Ga...	Spring Place, Ga.....	W. J. White.....	T. J. Ramsey
51...	Stephen Elliott.....	S. C...	St. George's, S. C.....	T. Otey Reed.....	W. D. Connor
52...	Montgomery.....	Miss...	Rosedale, Miss.....	W. C. Boyd.....	John L. Gill
54...	Orange County.....	Fla...	Orlando, Fla.....	Robt. Howe.....	B. M. Robinson
55...	Dibrell.....	Tenn...	Lewisburg, Tenn.....	W. M. Robinson.....	W. G. Loyd
56...	Marion Co. Confed. Vet. Ass'n.....	Fla...	Ocala, Fla.....	L. M. Graham.....	E. T. Williams
57...	Pasco Confed. Vet. Ass'n.....	Fla...	Dade City, Fla.....	James E. Lee.....	J. G. Wallace
58...	R. E. Lee.....	Fla...	Jacksonville, Fla.....	R. P. Daniel.....	W. S. Stetson
59...	Patton Anderson.....	Fla...	Monticello, Fla.....	.....	.....
60...	Moore.....	La...	Kentwood, La.....	Major R. L. Draughon.....	J. W. Birch
61...	Col. R. Timmons.....	Tex...	Lake Grange, Tex.....	Wm. H. Thomas.....	Natt Holman
62...	Calcaesiu Confederate Veterans.....	La...	Lake Charles, La.....	Capt. W. A. Knapp, M. D.....	W. L. Hutchins
64...	Sanders.....	Ala...	Eutaw, Ala.....	Capt. George H. Cole.....	W. P. Brugh
65...	Howdy Martin.....	Tex...	Athens, Tex.....	D. M. Morgan.....	M. D. Lammons
66...	R. E. Lee.....	Tex...	Lampasas, Tex.....	D. C. Thomas.....	T. H. Haynie
67...	Granbury.....	Tex...	Granbury, Tex.....	H. L. Neely.....	J. R. Morris
68...	Jeff. Lee.....	Ind. Ter...	McAlester, I. T.....	Thos. G. Wilkes.....	Gen. R. B. Coleman

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
70...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Paris, Tex.	H. B. Love	G. P. Henley
71...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Kingston, Tex.	T. B. Spaulding	D. A. Edwards
72...	Abilene	Tex.	Abilene, Tex.	L. C. Wise	J. J. Clinton
74...	Rockwall	Tex.	Rockwall, Tex.		N. C. Edwards
75...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Beaumont, Tex.	H. H. Sanders	T. W. Redman
77...	Forbes	Tenn.	Clarksville, Tenn.	Gen. Clay Stracker	Alex. Davidson
78...	Amite City	La.	Amite City, La.	E. C. Cooley	George F. Starns
79...	Merkel	Tex.	Merkel, Tex.	A. A. Baker	W. H. Hawkins
80...	Kansas City	Mo.	Kansas City, Mo.	Col. D. K. Morton, M. D.	J. Turner Cox
81...	Joe. B. Palmer	Tenn.	Murfreesboro, Tenn.	Richard Beard	Capt. H. H. Norman
83...	Wm. Frierson	Tenn.	Shelbyville, Tenn.	R. L. Brown	J. F. Johnson
84...	Barnard E. Bee	S. C.	Aiken, S. C.	P. A. Emanuel	George C. Edmonston
86...	Bedford Forrest	Tex.	Seymour, Tex.	J. T. Stevens	Charles S. Humphries
87...	Wm. L. Moody	Tex.	Fairfield, Tex.	G. F. Bradley	A. G. Anderson
88...	Pat Cleburne	Tex.	Cleburne, Tex.	W. R. Bounds	R. W. Ferrell
89...	Cabell	Ark.	Bentonville, Ark.	A. J. Bates	N. S. Tenley
90...	Mildred Lee	Tex.	Sherman, Tex.	J. T. Wilson, M. D.	J. H. LeTillery
91...	Stonewall Jackson	Tex.	Atlanta, Tex.	J. D. Johnson	J. M. Fletcher
92...	E. C. Walthall	Tex.	Sweetwater, Tex.	W. T. Hightower	B. F. Roberts
93...	Bob. Stone	Tex.	Montague, Tex.	T. P. Paine	J. A. Chisholm
94...	Joe. Johnston	Tex.	Mexia, Tex.	Geo. W. McNeese	H. W. Williams
95...	John H. Morgan	Ky.	Paris, Ky.
96...	Wm. Preston	Ky.	Harrodsburg, Ky.	E. W. Lyen	J. D. Bryant
97...	Abe Buford	Ky.	Versailles, Ky.	D. L. Thornton
98...	Geo. W. Johnson	Ky.	Georgetown, Ky.
100...	John C. Breckinridge	Ky.	Lexington, Ky.	O. S. Tenney	S. S. Rosell
102...	Hannibal Boone	Tex.	Navasota, Tex.	W. E. Barry	F. P. Hardin
103...	John B. Hood	Tex.	Austin, Tex.	John G. Gatlin	D. F. Wright
104...	Nassau	Fla.	Fernandina, Fla.	J. Z. Baltzell	James C. Smythe
105...	Magruder	Tex.	Galveston, Tex.	Robt. M. Franklin	Gen. Thos. H. Edgar
106...	R. Q. Mills	Tex.	Frost, Tex.	A. Chamberlin, M. D.	I. N. Wilkinson
107...	John H. Morgan	Okla.	Ardmore, Okla.	W. R. Wood	J. R. Pulliam
108...	Winnie Davis	Tex.	Waxahachie, Tex.	W. R. Norman	Wm. L. P. Leigh
109...	J. W. Throckmorton	Tex.	McKinney, Tex.	W. T. Moore, M. D.	C. H. Lake
110...	Isaiah Thorwood	La.	Merrick, La.	Capt. D. T. Merrick	J. Jewell Taylor
111...	W. P. Townsend	Tex.	Calvert, Tex.	Harry Field	J. P. Cassimir
113...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Colorado, Tex.	L. H. Weatherly	Thomas Q. Mullin
114...	Shackelford-Fulton	Tenn.	Fayetteville, Tenn.	F. M. Kelso	J. W. Barnett
115...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Meridian, Tex.	Jesse H. Moore	T. C. Alexander
116...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Hamilton, Tex.	W. B. West	S. A. Peeter
117...	Jeff. Davis	Tex.	Goldthwaite, Tex.	D. E. Hopkins	J. B. Binson
118...	Stonewall Jackson	Tex.	Brownwood, Tex.	J. G. Holleman	Charles Bean
119...	Joseph E. Johnston	Tex.	Gainesville, Tex.	J. M. Wright	J. E. Bridges
120...	Beauvoir	Miss.	Gulf Port, Miss.	M. G. May	Capt. James B. Cable
121...	Col. Dudley W. Jones	Tex.	Mt. Pleasant, Tex.	W. J. Johnson	J. D. Mitchell
122...	Bell County	Tex.	Belton, Tex.
123...	L. F. Moody	Tex.	Bullalo Gap, Tex.	R. C. Lyon	R. D. Proctor
124...	J. B. Robertson	Tex.	Bryan, Tex.	B. F. Lemon	W. G. Mitchell
125...	Cabell	Tex.	Vernon, Tex.	J. A. Creager	W. R. Hazlewood
126...	Robert E. Lee	Tex.	Ladonia, Tex.	T. C. Reed	Capt. E. W. Cummins
127...	Young County	Tex.	Graham, Tex.	J. W. Horner	R. C. McPhaill
128...	John G. Walker	Tex.	Madisonville, Tex.	W. N. McBride	W. D. McDonald
129...	Sul Ross	Tex.	Denton, Tex.	W. J. Lacy	Alex. W. Robertson
130...	Geo. Moorman	Tex.	Forney, Tex.	P. M. Lewis	T. M. Daniel
131...	John M. Stone	Miss.	Tupelo, Miss.	W. A. Dozier	J. A. Thompson
132...	Milton	Fla.	Marianna, Fla.	Jno. T. Bryan	C. C. Gunn
134...	Gen. J. W. Starnes	Tenn.	Franklin, Tenn.	J. P. Hanner	George L. Cowan
135...	Ex-Confed. Ass'n., Coryell Co.	Tex.	Gatesville, Tex.	J. R. Brown	R. L. Suggs
137...	Sampson	N. C.	Clinton, N. C.
139...	John W. Caldwell	Ky.	Russellville, Ky.	W. B. McCarty	Ben Settle
140...	D. L. Kenan	Fla.	Quincy, Fla.	Mortimer Bates	W. W. Wilson
141...	Crockett	Tex.	Crockett, Tex.	N. B. Barbee	D. J. Cater
142...	W. P. Rodgers	Tex.	Caldwell, Tex.	M. L. Womack	E. B. Bell
143...	Bowling Green	Ky.	Bowling Green, Ky.	W. A. Oberehain	John E. DuBose
144...	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	San Antonio, Tex.	F. F. Collins	Godfrey Peterson
146...	Ben. T. DuVal	Ark.	Fort Smith, Ark.	Henry Kuper, Sr.	John A. Miller
147...	C. M. Winkler	Tex.	Corsicana, Tex.	A. F. Wood	H. G. Damon
148...	George T. Ward	Fla.	Inverness, Fla.	E. M. Zimmerman	S. M. Wilson
149...	Gen. Joseph Finnegan	Fla.	Sanford, Fla.
150...	E. A. Perry	Fla.	Lake City, Fla.	T. W. Gityen	Major W. M. Ives
151...	Lomax	Ala.	Montgomery, Ala.	J. B. Fuller	Col. Paul Sanguinetti
152...	Richland	La.	Rayville, La.	John S. Summerlin	D. T. Chapman
153...	Wood County	Tex.	Mineola, Tex.	J. H. Hullmaster	J. S. Daniels
154...	W. W. Loring	Tex.	Roby, Texas.	J. P. Henry	A. M. Davidson
155...	Stewart	Fla.	Jasper, Fla.	D. B. Johnson	O. W. Bailey

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
156...	John C. G. Key .....	Tex.	Gonzales, Tex .....	John S. Conway.....	F. F. Wood
157...	Wm. Rose McAduy.....	Ala.	Bessemer, Ala .....	T. W. Huffman.....	C. L. Hadaway
158...	R. E. Lee .....	Tex.	Fort Worth, Tex.....	Col. E. W. Taylor.....	Major W. M. McConnell
159...	Atlanta .....	Ga.	Atlanta, Ga .....	Sam'l B. Scott .....	Capt. W. H. Harrison
161...	Lamar .....	Fla.	Tallahassee, Fla .....
162...	Catawba .....	N. C.	Hickory, N. C .....	N. E. Sigman .....	L. R. Whitener
163...	Horace Randall.....	Tex.	Carthage, Tex .....	J. P. Forsyth .....	C. I. Voothies
164...	Sul Ross .....	Tex.	Bonham, Tex.....	J. A. Duncan .....	M. A. Bridges
165...	Albert Sidney Johnston.....	Tex.	Taylor, Tex.....	J. R. Hargis .....	Perry Hawkins
166...	Hill County.....	Tex.	Hillsboro, Tex.....	John P. Cox.....	D. C. Wornel
167...	Claiborne .....	Miss.	Port Gibson, Miss.....	R. A. Owen.....	Thos. M. Rea
168...	D. H. Hill .....	Tex.	Paint Rock, Tex.....	R. C. Tillery.....	J. W. Ratchford
169...	Tom Green.....	Tex.	Weatherford, Tex.....	R. E. Bell.....	M. V. Kinnison
170...	Matt. Ashcroft.....	Tex.	Sulphur Springs, Tex.....	W. F. Henderson.....	I. H. Harrison
171...	Confederate Vet. Ass'n of the District of Columbia.....	D. C.	Washington, D. C.....	John T. Callaghan.....	Thos. W. Hungerford
172...	Sul Ross .....	Tex.	Henrietta, Tex.....	J. C. Skipwith.....	J. P. Earle
173...	Pierce B. Anderson.....	Tenn.	Tullahoma, Tenn.....	A. W. Monier, M. D .....	W. L. Norton
175...	E. Kirby Smith.....	Fla.	St. Augustine, Fla.....
176...	Yazoo .....	Miss.	Yazoo City, Miss.....	H. L. Taylor.....	Major C. J. DuBuisson
177...	Capt. David H. Hamon.....	Okla.	Oklahoma, Okla.....	S. C. Bancum.....	A. R. Hunter
178...	Winchester Hall.....	La.	Berwick, La.....	D. B. Eells.....	F. O'Brien
179...	W. H. H. Tison.....	Miss.	Rooneville, Miss.....	Philip B. Mitchell.....	L. P. Reynolds
181...	R. E. Lee .....	Va.	Richmond, Va.....	C. W. P. Brock, M. D.....	Col. J. Taylor Statton
182...	Henry W. Allen .....	La.	Monroe, La.....	W. P. Renwick.....	W. A. O'Kelly
183...	John Peck.....	La.	Sicily Island, La.....	W. S. Peck.....	H. Bondurant, Sr
185...	Sul Ross .....	Tex.	Campbell, Tex.....	A. H. Hogue .....	E. K. Patrick
187...	Humphrey Marshall .....	Ky.	Nicholasville, Ky.....	Capt. Geo. B. Taylor.....	Charles Mann
188...	Thomas B. Monroe.....	Ky.	Frankfort, Ky .....
189...	W. B. Barksdale .....	Miss.	Grenada, Miss.....	B. C. Adams.....	J. S. King
190...	Pat. R. Cleburne.....	Miss.	Rolling Fork, Miss.....	Capt. J. C. Hall, M. D.....	John S. Joor
191...	Pat. R. Cleburne.....	Ark.	Charleston, Ark.....	J. K. P. Holt.....	J. W. Ervin
192...	Haller .....	Ark.	Center Point, Ark.....	John A. Hughes.....	J. W. Hill
193...	Lake Providence .....	La.	Lake Providence, La.....	J. C. Bass.....	James S. Milliken
196...	Braxton Bragg .....	La.	Thibodaux, La.....	John J. Shaffer.....	H. N. Coulon
197...	Dick Dowling .....	Tex.	Houston, Tex.....	Col. Philip H. Fall.....	W. E. Paschal
200...	Gen. J. B. Gordon.....	Okla.	Norman, Okla.....	B. H. Wolf.....	J. W. Armstrong
202...	Cabell .....	Ark.	Alma, Ark .....	E. D. Steward.....	J. T. Jones
203...	Gratiot .....	Ark.	Hope, Ark.....	Gen. C. A. Bridewell.....	B. P. Haynes
204...	Geo. E. Pickett.....	Va.	Richmond, Va.....	C. R. Wingfield.....	Ro. N. Northern
205...	William Watts.....	Va.	Roanoke, Va.....	W. B. Wernwag .....	S. L. Crute
207...	Robert W. Harper.....	Ark.	Morrilton, Ark.....	Carroll Armstrong.....	J. A. Williams
208...	Joel L. Neal .....	Ark.	Nashville, Ark.....	B. F. Smith.....	F. T. Shepherd
212...	Cabarrus County.....	N. C.	Concord, N. C.....	H. B. Parks.....	M. M. Gillon
213...	Jeff. Davis .....	Ark.	Conway, Ark.....	Y. T. Bullion.....	R. A. Reynolds
215...	Thomas Collins .....	Ky.	Richmond, Ky.....	N. B. Deatherage.....
216...	Pat. Cleburne.....	Ark.	Fayetteville, Ark.....
217...	McMillan.....	Fla.	ChIPLEY, Fla.....	S. M. Robertson.....	J. A. Mathias
218...	Hugh A. Reynolds.....	Miss.	Greenwood, Miss.....	D. J. Mitchell.....	W. A. Gillespie
219...	Benton County.....	Miss.	Hickory Flat, Miss.....	W. A. Crum.....	B. Ayres
220...	DeSoto .....	Miss.	Hernando, Miss.....	T. C. Dockery.....	W. F. Wesson
222...	Pat. Cleburne.....	Tex.	Waco, Tex.....	N. W. Harris.....	Thomas C. Smith
224...	Franklin K. Beck .....	Ala.	Camden, Ala.....	Richard C. Jones.....	Major J. F. Foster
226...	Amite County.....	Miss.	Liberty, Miss.....	C. H. Frith .....	George A. McGehee
228...	Buchel .....	Tex.	Wharton, Tex.....	G. C. Duncan .....	A. J. Wynn
229...	Arcadia.....	La.	Arcadia, La.....	A. G. Cobb.....	John A. Oden
231...	R. E. Lee.....	Tex.	Commerce, Tex.....	W. E. Mangum.....	W. A. Oneal
233...	John B. Hood.....	Ky.	Augusta, Ky.....
234...	Ector .....	Tex.	Cooper, Tex.....	J. J. Thornton.....	R. W. Robertson
235...	Sylvester Gwin .....	Miss.	Brookhaven, Miss.....	A. M. Summers.....	J. B. Daughtry
237...	John H. Waller .....	Ky.	Shelbyville, Ky.....	Wm. F. Beard, M. D.....	R. T. Owen
238...	W. A. Percy .....	Miss.	Greenville, Miss.....	J. H. Robb.....	J. M. Lee
239...	Washington .....	Tex.	Brenham, Tex.....	J. G. Rankin.....	R. S. Booker
240...	Gen. Turner Ashby.....	Va.	Winchester, Va.....	George W. Kurtz.....	P. W. Boyd, Sr
241...	Ned. Merriweather.....	Ky.	Hopkinsville, Ky.....	W. P. Winfree.....	Hunter Wood
243...	Clinton Terry.....	Tex.	Columbia, Tex.....	J. W. Hanks.....	J. P. Underwood
246...	Talladega.....	Ala.	Talladega, Ala.....	Maj. T. S. Plowman.....	J. M. Jackson
247...	Fred. N. Ogden.....	La.	Gonzales P. O., La.....	Dr. P. T. St. Amant.....	H. T. Brown
248...	Col. James Walker .....	Tex.	Hallettsville, Tex.....	M. B. Woodall.....	J. W. Carson
249...	Stonewall Jackson.....	Tex.	Archer City, Tex.....	J. W. Johnson.....	W. W. Duren
250...	Sumter .....	S. C.	Charleston, S. C.....	Louis B. Doolittle .....	Walter Williman
251...	E. Kirby Smith.....	Ky.	Eminence, Ky.....
252...	Patrick R. Cleburne.....	Ky.	Owingsville, Ky.....
253...	Thomas H. Hunt.....	Ky.	Bardstown, Ky.....	A. B. Baldwin.....	A. R. Carothers
254...	Cape Fear.....	N. C.	Wilmington, N. C.....	Gen. James I. Metts.....	R. W. Price
255...	Elmore County.....	Ala.	Wetumpka, Ala.....	H. H. Robison.....	C. K. McMorris

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
258.	Pellham	Ala.	Anniston, Ala.	J. M. Ledbetter	A. T. Hanna
259.	Jos. E. Johnston	Tex.	Childress, Tex.	R. D. Bailey	W. J. Westmoreland
260.	Joe Wheeler	Ala.	Bridgeport, Ala.	J. H. Ivy	B. C. Jones
261.	Lee County	Ala.	Opelika, Ala.	B. W. Williams	T. H. Clower
262.	Rodes	Ala.	Tuscaloosa, Ala.	A. F. Prince	H. H. Cribbs
264.	Feliciaua	La.	Jackson, La.	W. D. Wall, M. D.	R. S. Austin
265.	Rankin	Miss.	Brandon, Miss.	Patrick Henry	R. S. Maxey
266.	Allen C. Jones	Ala.	Greensboro, Ala.	W. G. Britton	Wm. P. Knight
267.	Joseph E. Johnston	Tex.	Greenville, Tex.	W. M. Arnold	S. R. Ector
268.	James F. Waddell	Ala.	Seale, Ala.		T. W. Perry
269.	A. P. Hill	Tex.	Texarkana, Tex.	L. A. Whatley	J. D. Gaines
270.	Gen. George Moorman	La.	Mandeville, La.	John A. Miller	R. O. Pizzetta
272.	Patron's Union	Miss.	Lake, Miss.	C. A. Huddleston	J. B. Bailey
274.	McGregor	Tex.	McGregor, Tex.	J. D. Smith	J. C. Alexander
275.	Emma Sansom	Ala.	Gadsden, Ala.	R. A. D. Dunlap	Jos. R. Hughes
277.	I. W. Garrett	Ala.	Marion, Ala.		R. H. Ewins
278.	Catawba	S. C.	Rock Hill, S. C.	Capt. Iredel Jones	W. Greene Steele
279.	Lake Co. Confed. Vet. Ass'n	Fla.	Tavares, Fla.	H. H. Duncan	H. J. Peter
281.	Maxey	Tex.	Dodd City, Tex.	A. L. Dickey	John W. Love
282.	E. Kirby Smith	Fla.	DeFuniak Springs, Fla.	J. T. Stubbs	A. B. McLeod
284.	Francis S. Bartow	Fla.	Bartow, Fla.
285.	Jasper Hawthorn	S. C.	Easley, S. C.	Laban Mauldin	E. H. Barton
286.	John A. Wharton	Tex.	Alvin, Tex.	F. M. Ragland	C. Z. Sedwick
291.	Graeie	Ala.	Verbena, Ala.	W. F. Claughton	J. A. Mitchell
292.	Col. James B. Martin	Ala.	Jacksonville, Ala.	H. L. Stevenson
293.	Aiken-Smith	Ala.	Roanoke, Ala.	W. A. Handley	J. T. Coleman
291.	Logan Davidson	Tex.	Honey Grove, Tex.	J. W. Compton	B. F. McGaughey
295.	Ras Redwine	Tex.	Henderson, Tex.	W. P. Davis	C. C. Doyle
297.	R. C. Pulliam	S. C.	Greenville, S. C.	W. H. Ely	John T. Bramlett
298.	E. A. O'Neal	Ala.	Florence, Ala.	Major A. M. O'Neal	Andrew Brown
299.	Willis L. Lang	Tex.	Marlin, Tex.	D. H. Boyles	Alex. Frazier
300.	Ben McCulloch	Tex.	Mt. Vernon, Tex.	P. A. Blakey	R. A. Foster
301.	Andrew Coleman	N. C.	Bryson City, N. C.	Saml. B. Gibson	E. R. Hampton
302.	Will's Point	Tex.	Will's Point, Tex.	J. A. Harris	A. W. Meredith
305.	Jefferson-Lamar	Ga.	Covington, Ga.	J. W. Anderson	Col. L. L. Middlebrook
312.	E. Giles Henry	Miss.	Canton, Miss.	J. W. Downs	F. D. Coleman
314.	Frank Cheatham	Tex.	Breckinridge, Tex.		T. H. Fowler
315.	Padmetto Guard	S. C.	Charleston, S. C.		A. W. Lanneau
317.	Catesby Ap R. Jones	Ala.	Selma, Ala.	John J. Babcock	Thomas B. Creagh
318.	Tom. Hindman	Ark.	Newport, Ark.	Sam. Anthony	F. W. Dillard
319.	Col. Chas. F. Fisher	N. C.	Salisbury, N. C.	James R. Crawford	W. L. Kluttz
320.	Rutlin	Ala.	Troy, Ala.	J. P. Wood	T. E. Hill
321.	Ike Turner	Tex.	Livingston, Tex.	James S. Evans	A. B. Green
322.	W. P. Rogers	Tex.	San Saba, Tex.
323.	Pickens	Ala.	Carrollton, Ala.	Wm. G. Robertson	John W. Coxe
324.	Stocadale	Miss.	Magnolia, Miss.	J. J. White	J. L. Cotton
325.	David O. Dodd	Ark.	Benton, Ark.	J. W. Ashby	D. M. Cloud
328.	Menardville	Tex.	Menardville, Tex.	O. Striegler	J. J. Callan
330.	Joe Wheeler	Tex.	Big Springs, Tex.
331.	T. J. Bullock	Ala.	Lowndesboro, Ala.	J. W. Rast	T. L. S. Grace
332.	Sumter	Ala.	Livingston, Ala.	W. R. DeLoach	Major John Lawhon
333.	Montgomery Gilbreath	Ala.	Guntersville, Ala.	J. A. McKinstry	J. L. Burke
334.	Dick Anderson	S. C.	Sumter, S. C.	Perry Moses	W. F. Rhame
335.	Joe Walker	S. C.	Spartanburg, S. C.	Charles Petty	W. C. Cannon
336.	James D. Nance	S. C.	Newberry, S. C.	J. W. Gary	Lt.-Col. O. L. Schumpert
338.	Capt. William Lee	Ala.	Evergreen, Ala.	P. M. Brumes	Col. N. Stallworth
340.	Albert Pike	Ark.	Hot Springs, Ark.
341.	John R. Diekens	Miss.	Sardis, Miss.	E. S. Walton	L. F. Rainwater
342.	Gen. W. P. Lowry	Miss.	New Albany, Miss.
343.	Crawford Kimbal	Ala.	Dadeville, Ala.	W. A. Robinson	J. L. Reeves
344.	Peter Bramblett	Ky.	Carlisle, Ky.
345.	Florian Cornay	La.	Franklin, La.	Col. Thomas J. Shaffer	E. J. Trastour
347.	Jamison	Okla.	Guthrie, Okla.	H. D. Bowden	N. M. Jones
348.	John B. Clark	Okla.	El Reno, Okla.		J. A. Nichols
350.	John James	Ala.	St. Stephens, Ala.	A. T. Hooks	J. M. Pelham
352.	John M. Bradley	Miss.	Louisville, Miss.	W. H. Richardson	T. P. Metts
353.	Bill Feeney	Miss.	Senatobia, Miss.	T. P. Hill	Sam. J. House
354.	Omer R. Weaver	Ark.	Little Rock, Ark.	James H. Lenow	Col. W. M. Watkins
355.	Evaus	Ark.	Booneville, Ark.	C. B. Florence	J. W. Castleberry
357.	Egbert J. Jones	Ala.	Huntsville, Ala.	C. N. Vaught	Ben. Patteson
359.	Wiggonton	Ala.	Edwardsville, Ala.
361.	McIntosh	Tex.	Chico, Tex.	J. E. Boyette	Jos. H. Watson
366.	H. M. Stuart	S. C.	Beaufort, S. C.		J. O. H. Sanders
367.	Abner Perrin	S. C.	Edgefield, C. H., S. C.
368.	Floyd County	Ga.	Rome, Ga.	J. T. Moore	F. W. Quarles, Sr.

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
369...	Gordon	Ga.	Waynesboro, Ga.	P. B. Hall.	Sol. Wetherhahn
374...	Gen. James Conner	S. C.	Summerville, S. C.	Julius J. Westcoat.	Henry P. Foster
375...	Clay County Veteran Ass'n	Ala.	Greenway, Ark.
379...	Confederate Veteran Ass'n, Union Parish.	La.	Farmerville, La.	Philip Bearden	J. R. Simmons
382...	Mecklenburg	N. C.	Charlotte, N. C.	W. McSmith	H. D. Duckworth
383...	Friendship	Ala.	Hartselle, Ala.	D. Waldeu	A. M. C. Denton
384...	Prairie Grove	Ark.	Prairie Grove, Ark.	R. O. Hannah	Thos. J. Campbell
385...	Miller	Ala.	Albertville, Ala.	T. J. Bruce	W. H. McCord
387...	Leonidas J. Merritt	N. C.	Pittsboro, N. C.	Gideon P. Alston	Col. H. A. London
388...	Beu McCullough	Ark.	Paris, Ark.	B. B. Chism	W. H. H. Harley
389...	Hampton	S. C.	Columbia, S. C.	W. D. Starling	D. R. Flenniken
390...	Pee Dee	S. C.	Florence, S. C.	J. E. Pettigrew	J. S. Hutchinson
391...	John T. Wingfield	Ga.	Washington, Ga.	C. E. Irvin	W. S. Lane
394...	Col. Reuben Campbell	N. C.	Statesville, N. C.	J. C. Irvin	J. P. Buike
396...	Robinson Springs	Ala.	Robinson Springs, Ala.	A. T. Goodwyn	W. D. Whitestone
398...	Holmes County	Miss.	Lexington, Miss.	R. H. Baker	Major F. A. Howell
400...	Thos. H. Hobbs	Ala.	Athens, Ala.	George C. King	Perry Henderson
401...	Lee	Ala.	Alexander City, Ala.	A. V. Tamure	T. J. Worthy
402...	L. B. Smith	Ga.	Talbotton, Ga.	W. Dennis	T. N. Beall
403...	Polk County Confederate Vets	Ga.	Cedartown, Ga.
404...	Terrell County	Ga.	Dawson, Ga.	W. B. Oxford	S. W. Arnett
405...	Troop County Confederate Veterans	Ga.	LaGrange, Ga.	J. L. Schaub	J. B. Strong
407...	George W. Foster	Ala.	Monroeville, Ala.	T. J. Emmons	Thomas S. Wiggins
409...	Lowden Butler	La.	Benton, La.	J. H. Nattin	H. D. Lassiter, Sr
410...	Thomas M. Wagner	S. C.	Mt. Pleasant, S. C.
411...	John Pelham	Ala.	Cedar Bluff, Ala.	G. W. R. Bell	J. M. Reed
413...	J. B. Kershaw	S. C.	Cheraw, S. C.	T. F. Malloy	C. A. Malloy
414...	Sterling Price	Ark.	Waldron, Ark.	J. W. Bratcher	C. Malone
416...	M. T. Owen	S. C.	Abbeville, S. C.		Arthur Parker
417...	Ryan	N. C.	Red Springs, N. C.	J. D. Croom, M. D.	J. L. McLean
420...	Rabun County	Ga.	Clayton, Ga.	T. N. McConnell	W. H. Price
422...	Chattooga Veterans	Ga.	Summierville, Ga.	H. A. Brownfield	G. J. Moyers
423...	W. D. Mitchell	Ga.	Thomasville, Ga.	R. P. Davis	John M. Dekle
424...	Bryan Grimes	N. C.	Washington, N. C.	Macon Bonner	Alston Grimes
425...	Lamar	Miss.	Juka, Miss.	George P. Hammerly	G. W. Dudley
426...	Hiram S. Bradford	Tenn.	Brownsville, Tenn.
427...	Stonewall Jackson	Miss.	Armory, Miss.	J. P. Johnston	J. A. Nabers
429...	Tom Coleman	Ala.	Uniontown, Ala.	Junie Harwood	B. F. Harwood
430...	N. B. Forrest	Ala.	Scottsboro, Ala.	J. R. Harris
432...	D. Wyatt Aiken	S. C.	Greenwood, S. C.
433...	George W. Cox	Ky.	Campton, Ky.
435...	Confed. Survivors' Association	Ga.	Augusta, Ga.	Kent Bisell	Walter A. Clarke
436...	Norfleet	N. C.	Winston, N. C.	Major T. J. Brown	Z. T. Bynum
438...	Col. S. B. Gibbons	Va.	Harrisonburg, Va.	Col. D. H. Lee Martz	A. M. Newman
439...	R. G. Prewitt	Miss.	Ackerman, Miss.	J. L. Power	J. H. Evans
441...	Carnot Posey	Miss.	Wesson, Miss.	W. W. Walden	Col. J. T. Bridewell
442...	Joseph E. Johnston	Ky.	Maysville, Ky.
443...	G. C. Wharton	Va.	Radford, Va.	E. M. Ingles	W. P. Nye, M. D.
445...	William Barksdale	Miss.	Kosciusko, Miss.	V. H. Wallace	F. Hillerman
446...	Hampshire	W. Va.	Romney, W. Va.
448...	John H. Morgan	Ark.	DeQueen, Ark.	W. S. Ray	John G. McKean
449...	Paragould	Ark.	Paragould, Ark.	A. Yarbrough	J. N. Johnston
451...	Harry T. Hayes	La.	Maguolia, P.O. La.	R. H. Redden	J. Z. Underwood
452...	W. F. Tucker	Miss.	Okolona, Miss.	B. J. Abbott	W. D. Frazee
453...	Tippah County	Miss.	Ripley, Miss.	Thomas Spight	T. A. Hunt
454...	Manning Austin	S. C.	Simpsonville, S. C.
457...	Thomas J. Glover	S. C.	Orangeburg, S. C.	James F. Izlar	Wm. J. Izlar
458...	H. M. Ashby	Tenn.	Pikeville, Tenn.	Capt W. R. Pope	H. C. Greer
461...	Centreville	Miss.	Centreville, Miss.	Robert J. Pemble	W. C. Stewart
462...	Heyward	S. C.	Walterboro, S. C.	John D. Edwards	C. G. Henderson
463...	J. T. Walbert	Ky.	Paducah, Ky.	Thomas Herndon	J. V. Grief
464...	John Bowie Strange	Va.	Charlottesville, Va.	Micajah Woods	Lin Wood
465...	Randolph County	Ga.	Cuthbert, Ga.	John F. Kiddoo	B. W. Ellis
468...	John C. Brown	Tex.	El Paso, Tex.	H. F. Stacey	John C. Caldwell
469...	Stonewall Jackson	Va.	Staunton, Va.	George W. Finley, D. D.	F. T. Stribbling
470...	H. A. Clinch	Ga.	Sparta, Ga.	Col. S. D. Rogers	W. A. Martin
471...	Harry Benbow	S. C.	Manning, S. C.	Lt.-Col. D. J. Bradham	I. N. Tobias
472...	Gracie	Ala.	Luverne, Ala.	J. L. Hawkins	G. N. Buchanan
473...	Chickamauga	Ga.	LaFayette, Ga.	W. W. S. Myers	B. F. Thurman
476...	Horace King	Ala.	Decatur, Ala.	W. H. Long	W. R. Francis
478...	Cobb-Deloney	Ga.	Athens, Ga.	J. J. C. McMahon	W. G. Carithers
479...	Winnie Davis	Tex.	Pilot Point, Tex.		W. H. Ledbetter
481...	Gen. Adam R. Johnson	Ky.	Evansville, Ind.	Col. Frank A. Owen	J. Cave Morris
483...	Key	Ga.	Monticello, Ga.	O. G. Roberts	A. S. Florence
484...	Col. R. A. Smith	Ga.	Macon, Ga.	J. W. Preston	S. F. Mann

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
485.	R. E. Lee	Va.	Hampton, Va.	R. K. Curtis	Jos. R. Haw
487.	McDaniel-Curtis	Ga.	Carrollton, Ga.	G. F. Cheney	W. O. Perry
488.	Col. L. C. Campbell	Mo.	Springfield, Mo.	James Warden	J. E. Elliott
489.	Thos. H. Watts	Ala.	Cullman, Ala.	C. A. Oweu	J. H. Dunlap
490.	Henry Gray	La.	Coushatta, La.	O. T. Webb	O. S. Penny
491.	William W. Wadsworth	Ala.	Prattville, Ala.	W. F. Mims	Z. Abney
493.	Barbour County	Ala.	Clayton, Ala.
494.	A. K. Blythe	Miss.	Walthall, Miss.
495.	William Henry Trousdale	Tenn.	Columbia, Tenn.	W. T. Galloway	Wm. A. Smith, M. D.
497.	Calhoun	Ala.	Jackson, Ala.	E. P. Chapman	Capt. S. T. Woodard
499.	R. H. Powell	Ala.	Union Springs, Ala.	Major I. F. Culver	J. A. Weems
501.	Garlington	S. C.	Laurens, S. C.	T. B. Crews	B. W. Lanford
502.	Caddo Mills	Tex.	Caddo Mills, Tex.	W. J. Lewalling	J. T. Hulsey
508.	Archibald Gracie	Ala.	Demopolis, Ala.	John C. Webb	George E. Pegram
509.	Potignae	Tex.	Blum, Tex.
510.	J. Ed. Murray	Ark.	Pine Bluff, Ark.	Gen. Junius Jordan	Col. C. G. Newman
511.	Benning	Ga.	Columbus, Ga.	Col. Wm. S. Shepherd	Wm. Redd, Jr.
512.	Page-Puller	Va.	Gloucester C. H., Va.
513.	Ross-Ector	Tex.	Rusk, Tex.	M. J. Whitman	James P. Glbson
514.	Standwaite	I. T.	Muldow, I. T.	Truss Turner	J. W. Weaver
515.	L. O'B. Branch	N. C.	Raleigh, N. C.	Major Alex. B. Stronach	James C. Birdsong
516.	W. R. Scurry	Tex.	Victoria, Tex.	T. W. Field	W. C. Carroll
517.	Featherston	Miss.	Water Valley, Miss.	M. D. L. Stephens	S. B. Brown
518.	Rldgely Brown	Md.	Rockville, Md.	Spencer C. Jones	E. L. Amiss
520.	John C. Brown	Tenn.	Nashville, Tenn.	Philip B. Spence	John O. Treanor
521.	The Grand Camp C. V., Department of Virginia	Va.	Richmond, Va.	W. E. Harwood, M. D.	Col. Thos. Ellett
522.	Jasper County	Mo.	Carthage, Mo.	C. C. Catron	Col. J. W. Halliburton
523.	Jefferson Davis	N. W.	Great Falls, Mont.	A. Rispaugh
524.	Confederate Surv. Ass'n.	N. M.	Socorro, N. Mex.
527.	Jim Pearce	Ky.	Princeton, Ky.	Geo. R. White	J. J. Johuson
528.	Hopkins Co. Ex-Confederate Relief Association	Ky.	Madisonville, Ky.	Maj. Alonzo Tinder	J. R. Mills
531.	McIntosh	Ark.	Dardanelle, Ark.	G. L. Wirl	F. A. Hamer
533.	Col. E. B. Holloway	Mo.	Independence, Mo.	E. W. Strode	Capt. Schuyler Lowe
534.	Rion	S. C.	Ridgeway, S. C.		John McIntyre
537.	Pat. Cleburne	Ark.	Brinkley, Ark.	W. Rider	A. K. Cameron
538.	Cobb	Fla.	Milton, Fla.		A. R. Seabrook
540.	Pearl River	Miss.	Poplarville, Miss.	J. H. Caver
542.	Ben. McCullough	Ark.	Star City, Ark.	T. J. Irwin	J. L. Hunter
543.	Martin H. Cofer	Ky.	Elizabethtown, Ky.	Jas. Montgomery	Horace Klinglesmith
544.	Drury J. Brown	Miss.	Hazlehurst, Miss.
545.	Gen. T. M. Scott	La.	Minden, La.
548.	Claiborne	La.	Homer, La.	J. F. Peterson	Maj. G. G. Gill
551.	Henry Gray	La.	Timothy, La.	G. W. Oakley	Timothy Oakley
552.	Bill Dawson	Tenn.	Dyersburg, Tenn.	J. W. Ashcroft	Robert L. Beaver
553.	Jas. Gordon	Miss.	Pittsboro, Miss.	Col. Robert N. Provine	T. M. Murphree
554.	Gen. John S. Marmaduke	Mo.	Marshall, Mo.	Richard W. Nicold	D. F. Bell
555.	Tom Douglass	Tex.	Lexington, Tex.		J. B. McAllister
556.	Tom Moore	Fla.	Apalachicola, Fla.	F. G. Wilhelm	T. F. Porter
557.	Henry E. McCulloch	Tex.	Ballinger, Tex.	J. H. Routh	G. W. Newman
558.	J. Ed. Rankin	Ky.	Henderson, Ky.	Gen. M. M. Kimmel	H. F. Dade
559.	Jack McClure	Tex.	Rising Star, Tex.	H. E. Head	J. H. Carter
560.	Gen. John W. Whitfield	Tex.	Devine, Tex.	R. C. Gosssett	Leslie Thompson
561.	P. F. Liddell	Miss.	Carrollton, Miss.
563.	Ben. McCulloch	Tex.	Brady, Tex.	J. T. Simpson	L. Ballou
565.	John Pelham	Tex.	Comanche, Tex.	J. A. Holman	J. T. Green
566.	Jos. E. Johnston	Tex.	DeLeon, Tex.	Wm. C. Terry	J. W. Porter
568.	Bridgeport	Tex.	Bridgeport, Tex.	S. W. Cowling	P. W. Tunnell
570.	George E. Pickett	Tex.	Lockhart, Tex.	J. M. Cardwell	George W. Kyser
571.	West Point Veterans	Ga.	West Point, Ga.	James S. Baker	J. J. Smith
572.	Bowie Pelhams	Tex.	Bowie, Tex.	J. A. Cummins	G. W. Herron
573.	Staudwaite	I. T.	Chelsea, I. T.	John P. Drake	M. Roberts
574.	James C. Monroe	Ark.	Arkadelphia, Ark.	H. W. McMillan	C. C. Scott
580.	Gen. Frank Garduer	La.	Lafayette, La.	L. G. Breaux	P. L. DeClouet
581.	Joe Wheeler	Tex.	Cresson, Tex.	J. R. Lay	W. M. Crook
582.	Jake Standifer	Tex.	Elgin, Tex.	F. S. Wade	R. P. Jones
583.	S. H. Stout	Tex.	Eastland, Tex.
585.	John R. Baylor	Tex.	Uvalde, Tex.	J. F. Robinson	J. A. Hatch
586.	John H. Woldridge	Tenn.	Pulaski, Tenn.	George B. McCollum	George T. Riddle
587.	John Gregg	Tex.	Longview, Tex.	J. K. Bivens	W. F. Young
588.	Magnolia	Tex.	Woodville, Tex.	D. T. Scott	J. Dallas Collier
590.	John D. Traynor	Tenn.	Cleveland, Tenn.	C. Apperson	W. H. Patterson
592.	Velasco	Tex.	Velasco, Tex.		Frank E. Jones
593.	I. G. Killough	Tex.	Flatonias, Tex.	J. A. Cadwell	W. A. Beckham
595.	Skld Harris	Ga.	Canton, Ga.	W. P. Dobbs	L. L. Williams
596.	Lafayette McLaws	Ga.	Savannah, Ga.	J. H. Estill	A. K. Wilson

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
600	Richard Coke	Tex.	Robert Lee, Tex.	John P. Hutchenson	H. D. Pearce
602	John M. Simonton	Miss.	Nettleton, Miss.	R. S. Thomas	R. H. Rogers
604	Bartow	Tex.	Yoakum, Tex.
607	Vermilion	La.	Abbeville, La.	Wm. D. Gooch	Jos. T. Labit
611	R. S. Gould	Tex.	Jewett, Tex.	J. E. Anderson	Horatio Durst
612	Jones County	Tex.	Anson, Tex.	L. Morrison	Ed. Kennedy
615	Marmaduke	Mo.	Butler, Mo.	Pierce Hackett	Robt. S. Catron
617	Morgan County	Ga.	Madison, Ga.	M. A. Mustin	W. A. Wiley
618	Fort Mason	Tex.	Mason, Tex.	S. V. Wood	Wilson Hey
619	Scott Anderson	Tex.	Eagle Lake, Tex.	T. J. Roberts	J. K. Davidson
620	Raguet	Tex.	Nacogdoches, Tex.
621	W. P. Lane	Tex.	Marshall, Tex.	W. W. Heartsill	T. A. Elgin
623	N. B. Forrest	Ark.	Forrest City, Ark.
625	Winnie Davis	Tex.	Van Alstyne, Tex.	D. W. Fulton	C. C. McCorkle
626	E. B. Pickett	Tex.	Liberty, Tex.	W. J. Swilley	W. S. Jones
627	Jenkins	S. C.	Bamberg, S. C.
628	G. T. Beauregard	La.	Crowley, La.	D. B. Hayes	J. E. Barry
629	John Pelham	Tex.	Blossom, Tex.	W. E. Moore	A. W. Black
630	Jo. Shelby	Mo.	West Plains, Mo.	Gen. O. H. P. Catron	N. C. Berry, M. D.
632	Fred. A. Ashford	Ala.	Town Creek, Ala.	I. L. Lyndon	J. C. Shaw
633	Raynes	Tex.	Haskell, Tex.	W. W. Fields	S. L. Robertson
634	Alcibiades Deblanc	La.	Jeanerette, La.	A. P. Allain	H. L. Bracey
636	Thomas G. Lowrey	Mo.	Huntsville, Mo.	Gen. H. A. Newman	J. W. Brooking
637	Gen. Santos Benavides	Tex.	Laredo, Tex.	N. W. Grisamore	W. H. Mims
638	John G. Fletcher	Ark.	Berryville, Ark.	J. P. Fancher
639	Walter P. Lane	Tex.	Orange, Tex.	P. B. Curry	R. E. Russell
640	D. C. Walker	Ky.	Franklin, Ky.	Joe C. Bryan	P. V. Mayes
641	Marion	S. C.	Marion, S. C.	G. A. McIntyre	J. D. McLucas
642	Sumter	Ga.	Americus, Ga.	H. T. Davenport	W. B. Heys
643	Bandera	Tex.	Bandera, Tex.	Maj. V. P. Sanders
648	Lexington	Mo.	Lexington, Mo.	Lt.-Col. J. Q. Plattenburg	Maj. G. P. Venable
649	Henry E. McCulloch	Tex.	Seguin, Tex.
651	Harmanson West	Va.	Jenkins Bridge, Va.	Capt. Frank Fletcher, M. D.	Thos. C. Kelley
652	Tom Green	Tex.	Groveton, Tex.	Capt. W. W. Dawson	D. E. Pool
654	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tex.	Baird, Tex.	W. C. Powell	J. E. W. Lane
655	Macon County Confederate Veteran Association	Ga.	Montezuma, Ga.	A. J. Cleves	J. A. J. Kimble
656	John C. Burks	Tex.	Clarksville, Tex.	J. K. P. Jamison	R. H. Turner
657	James R. Herbert	Md.	Baltimore, Md.	Harry C. Hewitt	Capt. Daniel A. Fenton
658	Stonewall Jackson	Ala.	Centre, Ala.	Lem H. Sanford	T. H. Shropshire
660	John B. Clark	Mo.	Fayette, Mo.	Chas. B. Fisher	Maj. A. J. Furr
661	R. E. Rodes	Tex.	Quanah, Tex.	Capt. J. T. Spears	H. W. Marlin
662	Nevada	Mo.	Nevada, Mo.	J. R. Walton	A. C. Serrett
663	LeSueur	Tex.	Georgetown, Tex.	F. T. Roach	B. A. Strange
664	Manor	Tex.	Manor, Tex.	W. J. Parsley	J. W. Bitting
665	Clement A. Evans	Ga.	Kirkwood, Ga.	W. J. Houston	W. O. Mitchell
666	Clark L. Owen	Tex.	Edna, Tex.	J. L. Dickie	Geo. S. Gayle
668	Steadman	S. C.	Lexington, S. C.	M. D. Harman	G. W. Reeder
670	Robert S. Perry	La.	New Iberia, La.	L. O. Hacker
671	Eunice	La.	Eunice, La.	V. T. Bondreau
675	Jones M. Withers	Ala.	Mobile, Ala.	S. Franklin Preston	Francis Kiernan
676	Robert Ruffner	Mo.	Hannibal, Mo.
677	Denson	Ark.	Warren, Ark.	J. C. Bratton, Sr.	J. M. Bailey
678	Norval Spangler	Mo.	Clinton, Mo.	W. G. Watkins
679	Bledsoe	Mo.	Paris, Mo.	John W. McGee	J. E. Lynch
680	Shenandoah	Va.	Woodstock, Va.		Geo. W. Miley
681	Zebulon Vance	N. C.	Asheville, N. C.	F. M. Miller	Jas W. Albright
682	W. H. Ratcliffe	Ky.	Falmouth, Ky.	N. D. C. Mains	Lt.-Col. C. H. Lee, Jr.
684	Major John L. Mirick	Mo.	Carrllton, Mo.	S. A. Ballard	James A. Turner
685	Marmaduke	Mo.	Moberly, Mo.	James A. Tagert	W. P. Davis
687	Walker-McRae	Ark.	Searcy, Ark.	C. W. Chrisp	Wm. P. Martin
688	C. H. Howard	Mo.	Waynesville, Mo.	C. H. Howard	Gen. E. G. Williams
690	Freeman	Mo.	Neosho, Mo.	L. W. Overbeck	E. W. Woodward
691	Pleasant Hill	Mo.	Pleasant Hill, Mo.	Thomas Hayes	T. H. Cloud
693	Col. John A. Rowan	Tenn.	Sweetwater, Tenn.	John M. Jones	Capt. J. C. Waren
695	Confederate Veteran	Tex.	Lone Oak, Tex.
698	Raines	S. C.	Winnsboro, S. C.
702	Micah Jenkins	S. C.	Yorkville, S. C.	G. F. Wallace
703	G. R. Christian	Tex.	Antelope, Tex.	T. B. Roberts
704	Richard Kirkland	S. C.	Camden, S. C.	W. F. Russell	A. D. Kennedy
705	Samuel V. Fulkerson	Tenn.	Bristol, Tenn.	Joseph W. Owen	John N. Johnson
707	Crittendon	S. C.	Piedmont, S. C.	W. F. Lee	R. Y. H. Shumate
708	J. R. R. Giles	S. C.	Union, S. C.	A. H. Foster	F. M. Farr
709	William E. Jones	Va.	Abingdon, Va.	Findlay Harris	T. K. Trigg
711	John Percival	Mo.	Waverly, Mo.	S. W. Brown	Aldridge Corder
714	George B. Harper	Mo.	Booneville, Mo.	Gen. Robert McCulloch

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
716...	J. E. B. Stuart.....	Mont...	Phillipsburg, Mont.	_____	_____
718...	General M. M. Parsons.....	Mo...	Jefferson City, Mo.	Maj.-Gen. James B. Gantt	Thomas O. Towles
720...	Niemyer-Shaw.....	Va...	Berkley, Va.	_____	_____
722...	Joe. Johnston.....	Tenn...	Maynardville, Tenn.	Berry L. Donelhue	A. L. Monroe
724...	William S. Grimes.....	Va...	Orange, Va.	_____	_____
725...	W. B. Tate.....	Tenn...	Morristown, Tenn.	T. J. Speck	Capt. R. C. Crouch
726...	Brown-Harman.....	Va...	Tazewell, Va.	_____	_____
728...	Platte County.....	Mo...	Platte City, Mo.	James Synnamon	B. F. Murdoek
729...	Capt. Thomas McCarty.....	Mo...	Liberty, Mo.	P. W. Reddish	L. G. Hopkins
730...	George Doles.....	Ga...	Milledgeville, Ga.	Daniel B. Sanford	Andrew J. Miller
731...	St. Louis.....	Mo...	St. Louis, Mo.	R. C. Atkinson	A. W. Moise
733...	John N. Edwards.....	Mo...	Higgsville, Mo.	R. C. Carter, M. D.	John B. Santmyer
735...	M. M. Parsons.....	Mo...	Warrensburg, Mo.	W. P. Gibson	D. P. Woodruff
737...	Gen. D. M. Frost.....	Mo...	Fulton, Mo.	_____	_____
738...	Hanging Rock.....	S. C...	Kershaw, S. C.	Col. L. C. Hough	B. N. Jones
739...	Col. Pembroke S. Senteny.....	Mo...	Bowling Green, Mo.	Joe Adams	E. B. Omohundro
742...	Col. Early A. Steen.....	Mo...	Rolla, Mo.	_____	_____
743...	Kershaw.....	S. C...	Pelzer, S. C.	_____	_____
745...	Col. E. T. Wingo.....	Mo...	Salem, Mo.	_____	_____
746...	Charles Rutledge Homes.....	S. C...	Waterloo, S. C.	_____	_____
747...	Franklin Buchanan.....	Md...	Baltimore, Md.	Wm. M. Pegram	A. J. McKay
748...	Warthen.....	Ga...	Sandersville, Ga.	M. Newman	E. A. Sullivan
749...	John McEnery.....	La...	Columbia, La.	J. W. McGinnis	S. D. S. Walker
750...	Laue-Diggs.....	Va...	Mathews, Va.	A. H. Williams	J. A. Weston
751...	Col. J. R. Woodside.....	Mo...	Alton, Mo.	J. J. Sitten	S. B. Sproule
752...	Lafayette County.....	Miss...	Oxford, Miss.	J. L. Shinault	G. H. Evans
753...	Stephen D. Lee.....	S. C...	Anderson, S. C.	Joseph N. Brown	L. P. Smith
754...	The Confederate Veteran Association of Savannah.....	Ga...	Savannah, Ga.	Brig.-Gen. L. G. Young	James W. McIntire
757...	Presley.....	S. C...	Kingsree, S. C.	H. H. Kinder	George J. Graham
758...	Stonewall.....	Va...	Porthmouth, Va.	Jos. A. Parker	Thomas Shannon
759...	R. T. Davis.....	Ga...	Eatonton, Ga.	W. F. Jenkins	Robert Young
763...	Marietta.....	Ga...	Marietta, Ga.	Gen. J. Gid. Morris	R. E. Lawhon
765...	McHenry.....	S. C...	Johnston, S. C.	_____	_____
766...	Henegan.....	S. C...	Bennettsville, S. C.	Col. Chas. S. McCall	Col. C. M. Weatherly
767...	A. Burnet Rhett.....	S. C...	Charleston, S. C.	Albert H. Prince	Wm. Mather
768...	Arthur Manigault.....	S. C...	Georgetown, S. C.	J. Harleston Read	G. F. S. Wright
770...	The Confederate Veteran Ass'n of California.....	Pacif.	Los Angeles, Cal.	Walter D. Addison	Volney Mealeaf
771...	Lexington-Purcell.....	Okla...	Lexington, Okla.	J. M. Jarboe	Dr. W. H. Owsley
772...	Stonewall Jackson.....	Tex...	Mineral Wells, Tex.	J. H. Smith	H. C. Herndon
773...	Pap Prie.....	Pacif.	Deming, N. Mex.	E. H. Mathews	A. H. Thompson
774...	Culpeper.....	S. C...	Timmonsville, S. C.	J. F. Culpeper	D. H. Traxler
777...	Major Kyle Blevins.....	Tenn...	Rogersville, Tenn.	DeWolfe Miller, M. D.	Frank McCutchen
778...	Hugh McCollum.....	Ark...	Camden, Ark.	Brig. Gen. J. A. Reeves	Brig. Gen. A. S. Morgan
780...	Stonewall Jackson.....	Mo...	Poplar Bluff, Mo.	Henry N. Phillips	B. C. Jones
781...	Walkup.....	N. C...	Monroe, N. C.	J. R. Simpson	H. W. Houston
784...	Major John Jenkins.....	S. C...	Edisto Island, S. C.	Capt. E. L. Rivers	Townsend Mikell
785...	Darlington.....	S. C...	Darlington, S. C.	J. C. Clements	W. E. James
787...	Gen. James H. McBride.....	Mo...	Houston, Mo.	_____	_____
792...	John P. Taylor.....	Mo...	Kennet, Mo.	T. B. Bradley	Collin Morgan
793...	Col. I. N. Hedgepeth.....	Mo...	Doniphan, Mo.	Thomas Mabrey	Gus. H. Rife
794...	Thomas Rutlin.....	N. C...	Goldsboro, N. C.	John H. Hill	A. B. Hollowell
795...	Guilford.....	N. C...	Greensboro, N. C.	J. Y. Whitted	W. W. Wood
796...	Ben. Robertson.....	Miss...	West Point, Miss.	T. M. Moseley	W. S. Coleman
797...	Surry County.....	N. C...	Mt. Airy, N. C.	S. C. Franklin	J. R. Paddison
798...	West Feliciana.....	La...	St. Francisville, La.	Major F. M. Mumford, M. D.	W. B. Smith
800...	Vinita.....	I. T...	Vinita, Ind. Ter.	Daniel W. Yann	Lt.-Col. F. J. Barrett
803...	George B. Eastin.....	Ky...	Louisville, Ky.	Gen. Bennett H. Young	Col. Andrew M. Sea
806...	Jackson.....	Ga...	Brunswick, Ga.	Horace Dart, Lt.-Col.	Wm. B. Burroughs, M. D.
807...	Cundiff.....	Mo...	St. Joseph, Mo.	J. C. Landis	L. H. Read
810...	Lake Carpenter.....	S. C...	Gaffney, S. C.	D. A. Thomas	I. M. Peeler
812...	Healy Claybrook.....	Va...	Freeshade, Va.	_____	_____
814...	Lamar Gibson.....	Ga...	Lineolton, Ga.	_____	R. E. Roberts
816...	S. M. Manning.....	Ga...	Hawkinsville, Ga.	A. C. Pinkin	I. L. Walker
818...	Robert F. Webb.....	N. C...	Durham, N. C.	L. W. Highsmith	W. T. Redmond
819...	S. Ga. Confederate Veteran.....	Ga...	Wayeross, Ga.	R. P. Bird	T. S. Paine
820...	P. M. B. Young.....	Ga...	Cartersville	A. M. Foute	J. J. Calhoun
821...	Walker Gaston.....	S. C...	Chester, S. C.	Wm. H. Hardin	W. D. Knox
823...	George McDuffie.....	Ga...	Thomson, Ga.	Hezekiah McCorkle	Robert H. Pearce
825...	Joseph D. Sayers.....	Tex...	Smithville, Tex.	T. W. A. Hill	Wm. Plummer
826...	Jefferson.....	Ga...	Louisville, Ga.	J. G. Cain	S. M. Clark
827...	Johnson Hagood.....	S. C...	Blackville, S. C.	_____	_____
828...	J. H. Berry.....	Ark...	Amity, Ark.	_____	D. M. Doughty
836...	Richmond County.....	N. C...	Rockingham, N. C.	_____	_____
831...	Up Hayes.....	Mo...	Oak Grove, Mo.	B. F. Harding	H. J. George
832...	Paul J. Semmes.....	Ga...	Fayetteville, Ga.	T. N. Farr	J. M. Dorsey

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
833...	Walter R. Moore.....	N. C.	Smithfield, N. C.	C. S. Powell.....	E. J. Holt
835...	McElhany.....	Va.	Lebanon, Va.	C. W. Powers.....	S. H. Wyatt
836...	Flournoy.....	Mo.	Linneus, Mo.	Edw. Barton.....	I. P. Bradley
837...	A. P. Hill.....	Va.	Petersburg, Va.	Col. Rich'd B. Davis.	Lt.-Col. Carter R. Bishop
838...	Jackson.....	S. C.	Layton, S. C.	.....	.....
839...	Rivers Bridge.....	S. C.	Jenny, S. C.	J. W. Jenny.....	J. F. Breland, Sr.
840...	Harlee.....	S. C.	Dillon, S. C.	A. K. Parham.....	Elihu Muldrow
841...	Samuel Corley.....	Ark.	Helena, Ark.	Greenfield Quarles.....	C. N. Biscoe
842...	Wick McCreary.....	S. C.	Ellenton, S. C.	.....	.....
843...	Jeff. Davis.....	Ark.	McCroly, Ark.	John Shearer.....	R. T. Martin
844...	Jo Shelby.....	I. T.	Davis, Ind. Ter.	H. H. Allen.....	M. Turner
859...	John C. Lamb.....	N. C.	Williamston, N. C.	.....	.....
846...	Anson.....	N. C.	Wadesboro, N. C.	.....	.....
848...	Pink Welch.....	N. C.	Waynesville, N. C.	Lieut.-Col. W. W. Stringfield.	Marion Russell
851...	Ben. McCollough.....	Tex.	Wolfe City, Tex.	J. W. Rymer.....	W. E. Fleming
852...	Fayetteville.....	N. C.	Fayetteville, N. C.	George M. Rose.....	A. A. McKethan
853...	Mike Foster.....	W. Va.	Union, W. Va.	Col. E. S. Peyton.....	J. D. McCartney
856...	David S. Creigh.....	W. Va.	Lewisburg, W. Va.	James W. Cunningham.....	John A. Preston
857...	Pendleton.....	W. Va.	Franklin, W. Va.	George W. Hammer.....	S. P. Priest
858...	Mercer County.....	W. Va.	Bluefield, W. Va.	Robert H. Bailey.....	G. A. Harris
859...	El Dorado.....	Mo.	El Dorado Springs, Mo.	.....	.....
860...	S. B. Maxey.....	Tex.	Matador, Tex.	P. A. Cribbs.....	J. M. Campbell
862...	James McIntosh.....	Ark.	Lonoke, Ark.	Lt.-Col. P. H. Wheat, Sr.	J. C. Boyd
863...	Sidney Johnston.....	Ark.	Batesville, Ark.	J. P. Coffin.....	R. P. Weaver
874...	Gen. Joseph H. Lewis.....	Ky.	Glasgow, Ky.	Thomas G. Page.....	William Wood
876...	Jenkins.....	W. Va.	Parkersburg, W. Va.	C. C. Martin.....	J. R. Meehan
878...	Stonewall Jackson.....	W. Va.	Charleston, W. Va.	J. W. Vickers.....	James Z. McChesney
879...	Stonewall Jackson.....	W. Va.	Beverly, W. Va.	William H. Wilson.....	C. N. Bosworth
880...	Houston County.....	Ga.	Perry, Ga.	C. C. Duncan.....	J. D. Martin
881...	James Breathed.....	Va.	Pulasky City, Va.	.....	.....
883...	James F. Gresham.....	Miss.	Dennis, Miss.	C. C. Shook.....	T. B. Lindsey
884...	S. L. Freeman.....	Tenn.	Tracy City, Tenn.	D. W. Eller.....	W. B. Pattie
885...	Denison.....	Tex.	Denison, Tex.	J. B. Poston.....	A. B. Gardner
889...	Jefferies.....	S. C.	Etta Jane, S. C.	G. W. McKown.....	J. L. Strain
890...	John Sutherland.....	Tenn.	Ripley, Tenn.	G. J. Hutcherson.....	G. Whit Young
891...	Smith.....	Ga.	Dublin, Ga.	Hardy Smith.....	T. D. Smith
892...	Albert Sidney Johnston.....	Tenn.	Martin, Tenn.	W. T. Lawler.....	C. H. Smith
894...	Lawson-Ball.....	Va.	Lancaster, Va.	Col. J. C. Ewell.....	T. A. Pinckard
896...	Morrall.....	S. C.	Martins, S. C.	J. H. Lafitte.....	.....
897...	Sam Checote.....	Ind. Ter.	Muscogee, I. T.	W. H. Davidson.....	Gayther G. Tyson
898...	W. A. Johnson.....	Ala.	Tusculum, Ala.	Joe N. Thompson.....	E. C. Downs
902...	Garnett.....	W. Va.	Huntington, W. Va.	J. H. Cammack.....	H. D. Stewart
903...	J. F. Fagan.....	Ark.	Barren Fork, Ark.	L. E. Johnson.....	J. M. Hill
906...	Col. R. M. Russell.....	Tenn.	Trenton, Tenn.	W. O. Gordon.....	J. R. Dance
907...	Shriver Gray's.....	W. Va.	Wheeling, W. Va.	Gen. Robert White.....	I. C. McMahon
908...	John W. Rowan.....	Va.	Charles Town, W. Va.	Julius C. Holmes.....	Col. C. Frank Gallaher
909...	Francis T. Nicholls.....	La.	Jonesville, La.	W. F. Miller.....	J. C. Boyd
911...	Meadville.....	Miss.	Meadville, Miss.	Capt. J. L. Calcote.....	E. C. Adams
912...	Surgeon John Cravens.....	Mo.	Gallatin, Mo.	Independence Mann.....	N. A. Baker
913...	Avera.....	Ga.	Avera, Ga.	E. M. Walden.....	B. B. Pope
915...	Joseph E. Johnston.....	Tenn.	Alamo, Tenn.	.....	D. B. Dodson
916...	Paul Anderson.....	Ark.	Marianna, Ark.	W. T. Derrick.....	A. S. Rodgers
918...	O. A. Lee.....	Ga.	Baxley, Ga.	A. M. Crosby.....	Maj. W. W. Graham
919...	D. Waller Chenault.....	Ky.	Richmond, Ky.	.....	.....
921...	C. W. Boyd.....	S. C.	Jonesville, S. C.	W. H. S. Harris.....	W. T. Ward
923...	J. W. Gillespie.....	Tenn.	Dayton, Tenn.	V. C. Allen.....	W. G. Allen
925...	W. H. T. Walker.....	Ga.	Atlanta, Ga.	J. Sid. Holland.....	James G. Ramsey
928...	C. J. Colcock.....	S. C.	Sycamore, S. C.	B. R. Lewis.....	.....
929...	Burgess.....	W. Va.	Academy, W. Va.	.....	.....
930...	Savage-Hackett.....	Tenn.	McMinnville, Tenn.	J. C. Biles.....	W. C. Womack
932...	R. S. Owens.....	S. C.	Clinton, S. C.	W. A. Shands, M. D.	W. D. Watts
933...	Bill Green.....	Tenn.	Dickson, Tenn.	R. J. Work.....	J. M. Talley
934...	John M. Lillard.....	Tenn.	Decatur, Tenn.	J. M. McKenzie.....	J. P. Blevins
936...	Warren McDonald.....	Tenn.	Union City, Tenn.	J. E. Cloor.....	R. W. Powell
939...	Gen. James Connor.....	S. C.	Batesburg, S. C.	W. X. Gunter.....	T. D. Villard
941...	S. G. Shepard.....	Tenn.	Lebanon, Tenn.	A. K. Miller.....	R. P. McClain
942...	E. C. Leech.....	Miss.	Columbus, Miss.	E. C. Leech.....	Thomas A. Stinson
943...	N. B. Forrest.....	Miss.	Cedar Bluff, Miss.	A. P. Waddell.....	R. W. Tribble
946...	Ben McCullough.....	Tex.	Bripping Springs, Tex.	M. L. Reed.....	W. T. Chapman
947...	Charles L. Robinson.....	N. C.	Franklin, N. C.	W. R. Stalkup.....	W. A. Curtis
949...	Moffet Poage.....	W. Va.	Marlinton, W. Va.	.....	.....
950...	Winnie Davis.....	S. C.	Chesterfield, S. C.	W. J. Hanna.....	W. D. Craig
951...	A. P. Hill.....	Va.	Culpeper, Va.	.....	.....
952...	Col. John T. Jones.....	N. C.	Lenoir, N. C.	P. J. Johnson.....	Edmund Jones
953...	Transylvania County.....	N. C.	Brevard, N. C.	J. J. Shipman.....	Major Wm. E. Breese

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
954	James R. Love	N. C.	Webster, N. C.
958	Eufaula	Ala.	Eufaula, Ala.	S. H. Dent	A. A. Curie
959	Dade County	Ga.	Trenton, Ga.
962	Adairsville	Ga.	Adairsville, Ga.	J. W. Gray	R. D. Combs
965	Lloyd Tighlman	Ky.	Cadiz, Ky.	Robert W. Roach	John H. Caldwell
966	Clayton	Ala.	Blockton, Ala.	T. C. Wallace	W. H. Logan
970	Sam. B. Wilson	Tenn.	Eagleville, Tenn.	Wm. A. Bailey	W. J. White
971	Wm. M. Slaughter	Ga.	Albany, Ga.	A. B. McCaskill, M. D.	B. F. Brimberry
972	Greenfield	Tenn.	Greenfield, Tenn.	Thomas Campbell	Thomas B. Lane
973	Longstreet	Ga.	Gainesville, Ga.	Joseph H. Butt	A. G. Dorsey
974	Humboldt	Tenn.	Humboldt, Tenn.	W. N. L. Dunlap	H. G. Rowland
975	Joe Shelby	I. T.	Chickasha, I. T.	G. G. Buchanan
976	Cabell	Okla.	Shawnee, Okla.	E. E. Flippen	T. B. Hogg
977	B. T. Embry	Ark.	Russelville, Ark.	W. H. Baird	S. A. Henry
980	Westmoreland	Va.	Hague, Va.	G. W. Beale	John W. C. Davis
981	J. B. Ward	Ky.	Hickman, Ky.	Thomas Dillon, Sr.	A. M. DeBow
983	C. A. Evans	Ga.	Lumpkin, Ga.	E. P. Pearson	J. T. Harrison
984	Henry L. Wyatt	N. C.	Henderson, N. C.	Col. T. L. Jones	Thomas B. Parham
985	Sedalia	Mo.	Scdalia, Mo.
986	The Mountain Remnant	Tex.	Johnson City, Tex.	W. T. Stugart	J. R. Brown
987	Jeff. Thompson	Tenn.	Sharon, Tenn.	John M. Glass	G. M. Terry
988	Reinhardt	Ark.	Des Arcs, Ark.
990	Jim Pirtle	Ky.	Fulton, Ky.	W. C. Croft	R. A. Browder
991	Van H. Manning	Ark.	Malvern, Ark.	H. A. Butler	W. P. Johnson
995	Joe Johnston	Ark.	Jonesboro, Ark.	M. A. Adair	D. L. Thompson
998	John A. Jenkins	Tenn.	Dresden, Tenn.	E. E. Tansil	N. J. Ray
1001	J. E. B. Stuart	Va.	Berryville, Va.	Jacob Warden	W. T. Milton
1006	Corpl. Talley Simpson	S. C.	Pendleton, S. C.	J. C. Stribbling	B. C. Crawford
1008	Adam Johnson	Ky.	Morganfield, Ky.	F. B. Brown	Maj. John H. Wall
1011	Stonewall Jackson	Okla.	Perry, Okla.	W. H. Primrose	Hamilton Ellis
1014	Benton County	Tenn.	Camden, Tenn.	J. M. Castile	W. A. Steele
1015	Arnold Elzey	Md.	Baltimore, Md.	J. F. Zimmerman	A. J. Wickliffe
1017	Collierville	Tenn.	Collierville, Tenn.		J. R. Norfleet
1019	Boyd Hutchison	Tenn.	Springfield, Tenn.	J. E. Ruffin	John Y. Hutchison
1020	Woody B. Taylor	Tenn.	Lynchburg, Tenn.	H. B. Morgan	J. N. Taylor
1021	Watt Brysen	N. C.	Hendersonville, N. C.	J. M. Shepherd	W. G. Gullick
1022	William Terry	Va.	Wytheville, Va.
1025	Isaac R. Trimble	Md.	Baltimore, Md.	Col. Wm. L. Ritter	Capt. Wm. H. Brent
1027	Pat. Cleburne	Ark.	Harrisburg, Ark.	Thos. A. Stone	L. E. Stancell
1030	Sterling Priece	Pacif.	Fresno, Cal.	E. D. Edwards	J. W. Dumas
1031	John F. Hill	Ark.	Clarksville, Ark.	A. N. Martin	D. N. Clark
1032	John McIntosh Kell	Ga.	Darien, Ga.	Wm. H. Atwood	Wm. Me. W. Young
1033	John B. Gordon	Okla.	New Kirk, Okla.	W. N. Harmon	Geo. S. Fenton
1035	Perry County	Tenn.	Linden, Tenn.	Wm. Curl	W. H. Lancaster
1036	James Adams	Ark.	Austin, Ark.	J. D. Starritt	T. J. Young
1040	Richard Robertson	S. C.	Rapley, S. C.	Dr. J. R. Culbertson	R. J. Stoddard
1042	John S. Hoffman	W. Va.	Green Bank, W. Va.	Wm. H. Hull	J. O. Beard
1043	Decatur County	Ga.	Bainbridge, Ga.	John E. Donalson	W. G. D. Tonge
1044	John M. Stemmons	Mo.	Greenfield, Mo.	Lewis Renfro	B. M. Neale
1045	Cleveland	N. C.	Shelby, N. C.	Major H. F. Shenck	John R. Wells
1046	James Breathed	Md.	Cumberland, Md.	R. Lichenstein	Arthur Dawson
1048	Stonewall	Tex.	Aspermont, Tex.	J. M. V. Bullock	T. C. Hoy
1049	Barrett	Ky.	Carrollton, Ky.	H. H. Adcock	J. G. Ginn
1050	Alex. Stephens	Ga.	Crawfordville, Ga.	S. J. Flynt	Jesse A. Woodall
1053	Cary Whitaker	N. C.	Enfield, N. C.	W. F. Parker	F. C. Pittman
1055	R. E. Lee	Ga.	Monroe, Ga.	J. E. Nunally	Lt.-Col. J. M. Turner
1056	Sam Davis	Tex.	Rogers Prairie, Tex.	Sid. Sims	R. J. Barbour
1057	James W. Cook	N. C.	Beaufort, N. C.	David Pierce	B. J. Bell
1059	George W. Murphy	Ark.	Sheridan, Ark.	John W. Lybrand	Sam R. Cobb
1064	Wade Hampton	S. C.	McCormick, S. C.	R. J. Robinson	T. A. Box
1065	A. J. Lythgoe	S. C.	Level Land, S. C.	R. W. Crawford	R. M. Pratt
1070	Putsey Williams	S. C.	Cross Hill, S. C.	G. M. Hanna	S. W. Lowe
1072	General Clanton	Ala.	Brewton, Ala.	Major W. S. Neal	J. M. Davison
1074	Ponchatoula	La.	Ponchatoula, La.	W. A. Chambers	Col. T. J. Butler
1075	R. M. Gano	Tex.	Ross, Tex.	M. M. Emmons	S. L. Makeig
1076	Valdosta	Ga.	Valdosta, Ga.		C. Oakman
1078	Chas. W. McArthur	Ga.	Alamo, Ga.	A. C. McLennan
1080	Chas. Wickliffe	Ky.	Wickliffe, Ky.	T. C. Faulkner	Geo. B. Wilds
1082	Edward F. Bookter	S. C.	Pleasant P. O., S. C.	W. P. Havird	J. T. McGrady
1083	Screven County	Ga.	Sylvania, Ga.	J. C. Overstreet	J. W. Bryan
1084	John White	N. C.	Warrenton, N. C.	W. B. Fleming	P. H. Allen
1085	Wm. M. McIntosh	Ga.	Elberton, Ga.	E. B. Tate	J. F. Stilwell
1087	W. J. Hardee	Ga.	Warrenton, Ga.
1089	Sam Davis	Tex.	Milford, Tex.	C. P. Hoskins	H. N. C. Davis
1090	George T. Ward	Fla.	Williston, Fla.

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1093.	Hammond	La.	Hammond, La.	W. W. Bankston	J. W. Skinner
1094.	The Confed. Soldiers' Ass'n	Ga.	Augusta, Ga.	L. A. Ashley	L. W. Kent
1095.	Col. W. T. Black	Ga.	Ellaville, Ga.	A. Allen	E. S. Baldwin
1098.	Senoia	Ga.	Senoia, Ga.
1100.	Albert Sidney Johnston	Tenn.	Shiloh, Tenn.	C. C. Strawn	C. C. Steele
1101.	Gordon County	Ga.	Calhoun, Ga.	Col. H. C. Hunt	D. M. Durham
1102.	Washington Artillery	S. C.	Charleston, S. C.	Richard F. Morris	A. W. Riecke
1103.	Harrison	S. C.	Hampton, S. C.	Gen. James W. Moore	S. J. Fitts
1105.	Stonewall	Ga.	Flowery Branch, Ga.
1107.	O. M. Danzler	S. C.	St. Matthew's, S. C.
1109.	Dooley County	Ga.	Vienna, Ga.	J. S. Lassiter	H. W. Powell
1111.	Franklin Parish Sharpshooters	La.	Winsboro, La.	E. M. Hicks	John M. King
1114.	John L. Barnett	Ga.	Jackson, Ga.	L. D. Watson	C. S. Maddox
1115.	A. H. Colquitt	Ga.	Newton, Ga.	T. H. Caskie	John O. Perry
1116.	Paul Hatch	Fla.	Mayo, Fla.	D. G. Geigger	W. C. Johnson
1117.	J. J. Finley	Fla.	Palatka, Fla.	J. D. Points	Joseph Price
1118.	D. G. Candler	Ga.	Homer, Ga.	M. L. McDonald	J. C. Allan
1121.	Rice E. Graves	Ky.	Owensboro, Ky.	E. R. Pennington, M. D.	J. Y. Small
1122.	Quitman	Ga.	Forsyth, Ga.	Thos. B. Cabaniss	J. T. McGinty
1125.	Harrison	Ga.	Jesup, Ga.
1126.	Loring	Fla.	Tampa, Fla.	James M. Cathcart	Wm. L. Grier
1130.	Irwin County	Ga.	Ocilla, Ga.	D. B. Mull	T. P. Littlefield
1135.	Mangum	Okla.	Mangum, Okla.
1138.	Edward S. Willis	Ga.	Clinton, Ga.	James A. Walker	John R. Chiles
1139.	Sam Johnston	Ala.	Tuskegee, Ala.	T. Y. Conner	John H. Alexander
1141.	Fitzhugh Lee	Ark.	Ozark, Ark.
1142.	Gen. Francis T. Nicholls	La.	Napoleonville, La.	Thomas Loftus	E. L. Monnot
1144.	S. H. Powe	Miss.	Waynesboro, Miss.	L. R. Gunn	W. S. Davis
1148.	Joe Brown	Tenn.	Covington, Tenn.	Chas. B. Simonton	John A. Crofford
1149.	Bill Harris	Ga.	Poulan, Ga.		J. D. Martin
1151.	Buchanan	Ga.	Buchanan, Ga.	John W. Humphries	M. W. White
1153.	Jordan E. Cravens	Ark.	Coal Hill, Ark.	E. H. Walker	J. D. Hunt
1154.	General Pender	N. C.	Burnsville, N. C.	J. Hughes
1156.	Davis-Lee-Dickenson	N. C.	Rutherfordton, N. C.	J. Y. McEntyre	Wm. T. Wilkins
1159.	Heard County	Ga.	Franklin, Ga.	Henry C. Allen	Frank S. Loftin
1161.	Coweta	Ga.	Newnan, Ga.	John B. Goodwyn	Geo. H. Carmical
1162.	Newbern	N. C.	Newbern, N. C.	J. J. Wolfenden	James F. Clark
1164.	Albert Sidney Johnston	Miss.	Corinth, Miss.	J. W. McNulty	J. P. Collier
1166.	N. B. Forrest	I. T.	Durant, I. T.	Chas. A. Phillipps	J. Q. Cabler
1167.	Fred S. Ferguson	Ala.	Pratt City, Ala.	A. W. Key	P. J. Powell
1168.	Private H. E. Hood	S. C.	Blythewood, S. C.	W. W. Smith	Robt. Proctor
1169.	Sam Davis	Tex.	Rockdale, Tex.	D. S. Harris	R. S. Wilson
1170.	Jackson County	Miss.	Scranton, Miss.	Major P. K. Mayers
1171.	G. G. Dibrell	Tenn.	Darkey Sp'gs, Tenn.	S. V. McMaines	J. L. Quarles
1175.	Dixie	S. C.	Lancaster, S. C.	W. G. A. Porter	Geo. W. Jones
1180.	Thomas H. Wood	Miss.	DeKalb, Miss.	A. H. Morse	J. W. Smith
1181.	Ohio	Ky.	Columbus, O.	Thos. P. Shields	J. H. Levy
1182.	Pickett-Buchanan	Va.	Norfolk, Va.	Geo. A. Martin	T. B. Jackson
1184.	William Gamble	N. C.	Gastonia, N. C.	L. M. Hoffman	J. P. Stowe
1185.	S. E. Hunter	La.	Clinton, La.	Gen. G. H. Packwood	John A. White, Jr.
1187.	Joe Sayers	Tex.	Lewisville, Tex.	C. E. Lamb	J. M. Fox
1189.	Eutaw	S. C.	Eutaw, S. C.
1191.	Charles Broadway Rouss	D. C.	Washington, D. C.	Col. Sam'l E. Lewis, M. D.	Wm. Brown
1192.	Elloree	S. C.	Cameron, S. C.	Thos. W. Ulmer	M. J. D. Dantzler, M. D.
1194.	Neff-Rice	Va.	New Market, Va.	Major Christian Shirley	John L. Schaeffer
1196.	Wallace	S. C.	Woodruff, S. C.
1197.	Statham-Farrell	Miss.	Poplar Creek, Miss.	M. H. Allen	J. C. Wadsworth
1198.	John H. Morgan	Pacif.	San Diego, Cal.	Brig.-Gen. Hugh G. Gwyn	Fergus P. Ferris
1200.	Lee-Jackson	Va.	Lexington, Va.	J. P. Moore	W. C. Stuart
1201.	Hi Bledsoe	Pacif.	Santa Anna, Cal.	J. A. Willson	A. H. Lacy
1202.	Hutto	Ala.	Jasper, Ala.	Lieut.-Col. T. P. Lamkin	J. L. Leonard
1203.	"Tige" Anderson	Fla.	Miami, Fla.
1205.	Beauregard	Pacif.	Denver, Colo.		E. L. Coburn
1206.	Jones	N. C.	Roxboro, N. C.	Major J. A. Long	A. R. Foushee
1209.	Magruder	Va.	Newport News, Va.	J. A. Buxton	Capt. G. W. Nelms
1210.	Peachy-Gilmer-Breckinridge	Va.	Buchanan, Va.	G. W. Breckinridge	Chas. T. Hazlewood
1213.	John A. Hudson	Tex.	Cundiff, Tex.	W. B. Johnson	G. P. Whitaker
1214.	Franklin Buchanan	Fla.	Key West, Fla.
1217.	Stonewall Jackson	I. T.	McGee, I. T.
1218.	Cabell-Graves	Va.	Danville, Va.	Harry Wooding	R. A. Walters
1220.	Francis Cockrell	Mo.	Lebanon, Mo.	George M. Freeze	George T. Aycock
1222.	Bayboro	S. C.	Bayboro, S. C.	A. L. Alford	George Grainger
1224.	Nathan Parker	Ky.	Bedford, Ky.	W. B. May	Wesley Rowlett
1227.	J. S. Cone	Ga.	Stafesboro, Ga.	J. S. Cone	A. W. Stewart
1228.	Col. Ed. Crossland	Ky.	Clinton, Ky.	B. W. McClure	T. L. Atwood

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1230...	Geary	Okla...	Geary, Okla.	J. S. Rutledge.	J. M. Scott
1231...	Hankins	Ark...	Lockesburg, Ark.	John M. White.	J. R. Holcomb
1232...	New Roads	La...	New Roads, La.	Maj. L. B. Claiborne.	Auguste Pourcain
1233...	Col. E. S. Griffin	Ga...	Big Sandy, Ga.	James Leslie.	J. H. Jessup
1234...	J. C. Davis	Miss...	Utica, Miss.	D. X. Brown.	J. B. Collins
1238...	Lee's Creek	La...	Lee's Creek, P. O., La.	Mart Williams.	J. R. Johnson
1240...	Upshur County	Tex...	Gilmer, Tex.	—	J. M. Marshall
1243...	W. C. Preston	Tenn...	Alexandria, Tenn.	J. F. McNabb.	F. L. Foutch
1244...	Winnie Davis	Pacif...	Safford, Ariz.	Wm. C. Neese.	W. N. Sparks
1246...	Robert J. Breckinridge	Ky...	Danville, Ky.	J. M. Vanmeter.	J. H. Baughman
1248...	Henry L. Wyatt	N. C...	Bayboro, N. C.	G. S. Atmore, M. D.	W. T. Caho
1249...	Mayfield	Ky...	Mayfield, Ky.	T. J. Elmore.	G. W. Puryear
1251...	Bedford Forrest	Tex...	Arlington, Tex.	J. C. Herndon.	T. B. Collins
1252...	Jos. E. Johnston	Tex...	Quinlan, Tex.	B. F. Ivy.	R. S. Shepard
1255...	Samuel J. Gholson	Miss...	Aberdeen, Miss.	Gen. Robert E. Houston.	B. C. Sims
1256...	Lee Sherrell	Ky...	Burdwell, Ky.	T. A. Cross.	J. F. Davis
1258...	John H. Cecil	Ky...	Lebanon, Ky.	B. J. Lancaster.	Benj. F. Bowman
1259...	H. B. Lyon	Ky...	Murray, Ky.	J. N. Williams.	W. O. Wear
1260...	Ben. Hardin Helm	Ky...	Lawrenceburg, Ky.	J. W. Speer, M. D.	James S. Coke, Sr.
1262...	Thomas H. Hunt	Ky...	Cynthiana, Ky.	Col. A. J. Beale.	J. Wm. Boyd
1263...	Gen. John S. Williams	Ky...	Grayson, Ky.	W. D. Malone.	—
1264...	Jesse S. Barnes	N. C...	Wilson, N. C.	W. P. Wootten.	W. P. Snakenberg
1265...	Gen. Dick Taylor	Tex...	Jefferson, Tex.	George W. L. Dawson.	Maj. George T. Todd
1266...	James H. Berry	Ark...	Springdale, Ark.	Geo. A. Graves.	J. H. Amacker
1267...	Jefferson Davis	Ky...	Elkton, Ky.	R. B. Kendal.	J. C. Malone
1270...	Company "A" Wheeler's Confed. Cavalry	Ga...	Atlanta, Ga.	Col. John S. Prather.	Geo. A. Webster
1271...	Thornton	W. Va...	Summersville, W. Va.	W. S. Meador.	Robt. A. Kincaid
1272...	Charles J. Batchelor	La...	Williamsport, La.	Henry Malbins.	W. W. Mains
1276...	Quitman	Miss...	Belen, Miss.	J. T. Davis.	W. B. Clarke
1277...	Maurice T. Smith	N. C...	Oxford, N. C.	—	—
1278...	Oscar R. Raud	N. C...	Holly Springs, N. C.	Col. G. B. Alford.	B. S. Utley, M. D.
1280...	Sam Davis	Pacif...	Los Angeles, Cal.	T. P. Owen.	W. L. Stanton
1281...	Forrest	Ark...	Magazine, Ark.	J. F. Potts.	—
1283...	Private Ike Stone	Tenn...	Henderson, Tenn.	J. W. Ozier.	T. H. McGee
1284...	Fitzgerald	Tenn...	Paris, Tenn.	Ex-Gov. J. D. Porter.	Capt. J. T. Irion, M. D.
1285...	Daniel H. Reynolds	Ark...	Lake Village, Ark.	—	—
1287...	James W. Moss	Ky...	Arlington, Ky.	John R. Owen, M. D.	Dan Moseley
1288...	Stonewall Jackson	I. T...	Pontotoc, I. T.	J. C. Cates.	W. F. Elkins
1289...	M. J. Ferguson	W. Va...	Hurricane, W. Va.	J. J. Estes.	M. McClung
1290...	James Newton	Ark...	El Dorado, Ark.	—	—
1293...	President Jefferson Davis	Ark...	Kingsland, Ark.	W. B. Seymore.	J. W. Doster
1294...	J. T. Stuart	Ark...	Van Buren, Ark.	T. W. Davis.	J. E. Clegg
1295...	Gen. John S. Williams	Ky...	Winchester, Ky.	—	—
1299...	Gen. Geo. Moorman	Tex...	Hearne, Tex.	I. C. Brown.	R. H. Martin
1300...	W. T. Smith	Ga...	Buford, Ga.	—	—
1301...	E. C. Wallhall	Miss...	Coffeenville, Miss.	J. L. Collins.	J. W. Brown
1302...	Alfred Rowland	N. C...	Rowland, N. C.	N. T. McLean.	W. J. Smith
1304...	Henry M. Shaw	N. C...	Currituck, N. C.	T. P. Hall.	J. B. Lee
1305...	Sterling Price	Ark...	Black Rock, Ark.	J. S. Pryor.	N. E. Judkins
1307...	Karnes County	Tex...	Karnes City, Tex.	L. C. Tobin.	W. C. Smith
1308...	James A. Jackson	Ark...	Monticello, Ark.	W. M. Robertson.	W. A. Brown, M. D.
1309...	James Norris	Ark...	Hamburg, Ark.	W. A. Roby.	T. W. Ramsey
1310...	J. Z. George	Miss...	Carthage, Miss.	D. F. Cadenhead.	N. E. Walker
1311...	Oktibbeha	Miss...	Starkville, Miss.	J. L. Caigler.	H. T. Saunders
1312...	Dabney H. Maury	Miss...	Newton, Miss.	—	John Blakeley
1313...	A. P. Hill	Tex...	Angleton, Tex.	J. H. Glascock.	R. Faickney
1314...	R. E. Lee	Tex...	Jacksboro, Tex.	J. W. Dodson.	J. A. Rouse
1316...	Marion Cogbill	Ark...	Wynne, Ark.	John Graham.	A. W. Lake
1319...	Jasper County	Miss...	Heidelberg, Miss.	M. G. Turner.	M. A. Ryan
1321...	Hugh R. Miller	Miss...	Pontotoc, Miss.	T. F. Herron.	O. C. Carr
1322...	Marshall B. Jones	Miss...	Batesville, Miss.	C. B. Vance.	A. T. Bobo
1323...	Granbury	Tex...	Temple, Tex.	A. M. Keller.	W. D. Shaw
1324...	Col. George Wilson	Tex...	Lancaster, Tex.	W. F. Lavender.	A. H. Rawlins
1326...	Noxubee County	Miss...	Macon, Miss.	H. A. Minor.	Capt. Z. T. Dorroh
1327...	D. T. Beall	Miss...	Rienzi, Miss.	Jesse T. Cheves.	H. C. Powell
1328...	McIntosh	Ark...	Mulberry, Ark.	Thomas W. Moslon.	Joe M. Scott
1329...	O. F. Strahl	Tenn...	Chewalla, Tenn.	W. R. Ramer, M. D.	T. J. Hurley, Sr.
1330...	John H. Morgan	Ga...	Harmony Grove, Ga.	T. A. Little.	George L. Carson, Sr.
1331...	Lamar Fontaine	Miss...	Lyon, Miss.	Col. Lamar Fontaine.	T. S. Shuford
1332...	John Pelham	Tex...	Rosebud, Tex.	J. W. Sneed.	W. E. Bozeman
1335...	A. Buford	Ky...	Wingo, Ky.	B. P. Willingham.	—
1336...	Capt. D. M. Logan	Ky...	Lancaster, Ky.	Joe H. Arnold.	R. R. Denton
1337...	Pat Cleburne	Tex...	Hico, Tex.	R. F. McKeage.	A. L. Maxwell
1340...	James W. Fulkerson	Tenn...	Tazewell, Tenn.	B. F. Schultz.	G. W. Y. Brown
1341...	John M. Stephen	Tex...	Stephenville, Tex.	A. L. Murphy.	McD. Reil

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1343.	J. B. Hood	Ark.	Piggott, Ark.	D. A. Stanfield	W. W. Magee
1344.	Shelby County	Tex.	Center, Tex.	B. F. Sims	J. B. Beck
1345.	Bedford Forrest	Okla.	Weatherford, Okla.	A. L. Woodliff	J. T. McKewen
1346.	James F. Preston	Va.	Christiansburg, Va.	H. D. Wade	John W. Sumpter
1347.	Bob McKinley	Ala.	East Lake, Ala.	S. T. Burnett	Robt. N. McKinley
1348.	W. L. Cabell	I. T.	Wagoner, I. T.	R. Thompson	D. W. McGuire
1349.	Alonzo Napier	Tenn.	Waverly, Tenn.	M. O. Box	D. H. Goodrich
1350.	Wichita Confederate Ass'n.	Okla.	Wichita, Kan.	R. T. Bean	John H. Shields
1351.	Johnston-Edwards	Ky.	Benton, Ky.	C. M. Green	H. M. Wade
1352.	J. W. Harris	Ala.	Russellville, Ala.	H. D. Bowen	P. Clay
1353.	Judah P. Benjamin	Tex.	Kaufman, Tex.	E. S. Pipes	Dan Coffman
1354.	Cleburne	Ala.	Dundee, Ala.	W. B. Kirkland	J. K. Yeoman
1355.	Hamilton Mayson	Miss.	Columbia, Miss.	Z. S. Goss, M. D.	W. T. Willoughby
1357.	Tom Harrison	Tex.	Whitney, Tex.	F. M. Knox	W. T. Moore
1360.	"Pap" Price	Pacif.	Colusa, Cal.	Major John B. Moore	W. T. Beville
1361.	Bedford Forrest	I. T.	Roff, I. T.	W. L. Fletcher	J. O. Cottle
1362.	Preston Smith	Tenn.	Laviuia, Tenn.	J. P. Adams	W. W. McDougal
1363.	Rob McCulloch	N. W.	Spokane, Wash.
1364.	Confederate Veteran	N. C.	Albertson, N. C.
1365.	A. P. Hill	Tex.	Burleson, Tex.	J. H. Sauters	J. A. Roberts
1367.	Horace Randall	Tex.	Pittsburg, Tex.	J. C. Porter	J. M. Bradley
1368.	Bourbon	Ky.	Paris, Ky.		Russell Mann
1369.	Stanley	N. C.	Albemarle, N. C.	M. E. Blalack	J. S. Ewing
1370.	Emmett McDonald	N. W.	Missoula, Mont.	L. M. Davis	Glover Gough
1371.	Joe Shelby	N. W.	Hamilton, Mont.
1372.	Tom Smith	Va.	Suffolk, Va.	Virginus S. Kilby	R. S. Boykin
1373.	Rosenberg	Tex.	Rosenberg, Tex.
1374.	Bill Scurry	Tex.	Snyder, Tex.	G. C. Buchanan	B. F. Wilkes
1376.	D. L. Kilgore	Ark.	Magnolia, Ark.	W. T. Owsley	C. M. Fomby
1377.	Roger Hanson	N. W.	Anaconda, Mont.	N. S. Snyder	Harvey S. Showers
1378.	Sterling Price	N. W.	Bozeman, Mont.	Charles P. Blakeley	White Calfee
1379.	R. E. Lee	N. W.	Butte, Mont.
1382.	Jeff. Falkner	Ala.	Montgomery, Ala.	John Purifoy	F. M. McQueen
1383.	Sam Lanham	Tex.	Clarendon, Tex.	R. S. Kimberlin	T. N. Naylor
1384.	General Marmaduke	N. W.	Livingston, Mont.	W. F. Kirby	J. R. Hathorn
1385.	Stonewall Jackson	N. W.	Townsend, Mont.	J. R. Wine	J. R. Belcher
1386.	Robert E. Lee	Tex.	Fate, Tex.	E. Miller	J. N. Tabler
1387.	Bedford Forrest	Ala.	Woodlawn, Ala.	Wm. H. Reynolds	J. E. Thomas
1388.	General Parsons	N. W.	Twin Bridges, Mont.	N. B. Christlanson	W. M. Beal
1389.	J. T. Fleming	Ga.	Augusta, Ga.	W. H. Hendrix	J. O. Ulm
1390.	N. B. Forrest	N. W.	Helena, Mont.	George F. Ingram	Shirley C. Ashby
1391.	Hupp-Deyerle	Va.	Salen, Va.	Geo. W. Zirkle	A. H. Whitesell
1394.	J. L. Power	Miss.	Laurel, Miss.	D. P. Smith	F. A. Marshall
1395.	Stonewall Jackson	Tex.	Springtown, Tex.	Jesse Roberts	Frank B. Wharton
1396.	Joe Sayers	Tex.	Stamford, Tex.	T. M. Baxter	A. H. Buie
1397.	John B. Gordon	Tex.	Chandler, Tex.	R. J. Martin	L. Q. C. Askew
1398.	John Manning	N. C.	Durham, N. C.	N. A. Ramsey	V. Ballard
1399.	James Longstreet	Tex.	Eunis, Tex.	W. N. George	J. D. Beauchamp
1400.	Gen. John B. Gordon	Tenn.	Johnson City, Tenn.	Col. Henry D'Armond	W. A. Kite
1401.	Ben Watson	Tex.	Forreston, Tex.	Car Forrest	W. M. Gardner
1402.	Crail Miller	Tex.	Ferris, Tex.	J. C. Blackeney	W. R. Pannell
1403.	DeSoto	Fla.	Arcadia, Fla.
1404.	Sutton	Tex.	Port Lavaca, Tex.	C. D. W. McNeil
1406.	Albany	Tex.	Albany, Tex.	D. G. Simpson	T. M. Freeman
1407.	Robert E. Lee	Ark.	Mansfield, Ark.
1408.	R. M. Gano	I. T.	Sulphur, I. T.
1411.	E. C. Walthall	Tex.	Wellington, Tex.	R. H. Coker	O. W. Alexander
1412.	Nash County	N. C.	Rocky Mount, N. C.	R. N. Ricks	J. H. Thorpe
1413.	Archer	Tex.	Italy, Tex.	A. J. Lloyd	Alex. Moseley
1414.	Albert Pike	Tex.	Keller, Tex.	T. A. Neace	H. D. Griffin
1415.	Harvey Walker	Tenn.	Lynville, Tenn.	J. K. P. Blackburn	T. G. McMahon
1416.	Bath	Va.	Warm Springs, Va.
1417.	Altus	Okla.	Altus, Okla.	L. T. Aiken	Henry C. Gilliland
1419.	Valverde	Pacif.	Roswell, N. Mex.	T. B. Lovelass	J. T. Evans
1420.	John H. Morgan	Tex.	Floydada, Tex.		J. L. Van Hook
1422.	Walker	Tex.	Grand Saline, Tex.	A. C. Alexander	Z. W. Gunning
1423.	Mammoth Cave	Ky.	Cave City, Ky.	Wm. E. Garnett, M. D.	Wm. H. Hindman
1424.	Joseph E. Johnston	Ala.	Tallasse, Ala.	J. M. Hethcot	A. C. Justiss
1428.	Capt. E. S. Rugeley	Tex.	Bay City, Tex.	John A. Jones	Bat Smith, M. D.
1429.	Company D, Sixth Texas Infantry	Tex.	Matagorda, Tex.	John F. Holt	E. J. Inglehart
1430.	Fagan	Ark.	Almyra, Ark.	Moses Katz	E. B. Fitzhugh
1431.	Cooper	I. T.	Caddo, I. T.	John M. Hall	A. E. Folsom
1432.	Frank Cheatham	I. T.	Iron Bridge, I. T.	M. W. Newman	W. M. Sharp
1433.	Throckmorton	Tex.	Throckmorton, Tex.
1434.	Cabell	Okla.	Foss, Okla.	H. G. N. Crabb	A. D. Phillips

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1435	A. W. Ellis	Tex.	Lufkin, Tex.	B. F. Evans	E. H. F. McMullen
1436	Joe Wheeler	Ala.	Oneonta, Ala.	John S. DeLoche	Aquilla J. Ketchum
1438	Stonewall	Fla.	Gainesville, Fla.	Wm. Bletch	John C. McGrew
1439	E. H. LeBlanc	I. T.	Chicotah, I. T.	W. H. Russell	W. B. Rogers
1442	Stanwaitie	I. T.	Wilburton, I. T.	A. J. Peppers	Wm. G. Baird
1443	John W. Morton	Tenn.	Milan, Tenn.	W. H. Coley	E. N. Stone
1444	Joseph E. Johnston	Tex.	Farmersville, Tex.	John Murchison	H. M. Rollins
1445	Poolville	Tex.	Poolville, Tex.	H. L. Ray	J. H. Cox
1447	Wm. McKnight	Tex.	Winsboro, Tex.		J. D. Richardson
1448	Wynne Wood	I. T.	Wynne Wood, I. T.	J. W. McCoy	J. F. Cunningham
1449	W. C. Rice	I. T.	Marietta, I. T.	Richard Rodgers	J. C. Ijams
1450	Joseph E. Johnston	I. T.	Holdenville, I. T.	W. F. Donald	H. C. Oxley
1451	W. B. Plemons	Tex.	Amarillo, Tex.	W. M. Warren	Sam. J. Brown
1452	Stonewall Jackson	I. T.	Graham, I. T.	E. D. Shaw	T. A. Ware
1453	Ed. H. Voutress	Tex.	Grainger, Tex.	J. W. Posey	W. L. McLaughlin
1455	Tige Anderson	Ga.	Atlanta, Ga.	N. T. Gaun	Samuel Fulton
1456	John B. Gordon	N. W.	Seattle, Wash.	A. K. Shay	W. H. Collier
1457	A. F. Alexander	Pacif.	Canon City, Col.	G. R. Tanner	E. E. Rankin
1458	Willis S. Roberts	Ky.	Owenton, Ky.	John M. Herndon	C. W. Threlkeld
1459	K. M. Van Zandt	Tex.	Plano, Tex.	T. F. Hanston	W. H. Chaddick
1460	Gen. H. D. Clayton	Ala.	Enterprise, Ala.
1461	Col. John A. Green	Tex.	Dickens, Tex.	W. C. Ballard	L. W. Davis
1462	Scales-Boyd	N. C.	Reidsville, N. C.	E. R. Harris	P. H. Williamson
1463	Gen. John H. Morgan	Tex.	Justin, Tex.	T. R. Allen	T. J. Walker
1464	Pat. Cleburne	Ark.	Casa, Ark.	T. F. McElwee	W. J. Flinn
1465	Gen. Alfred Mouton	La.	Moreauville, La.	Frank M. Pavey	Henry G. Lewis
1466	Henry L. Gilmer	Ky.	Brooksville, Ky.	D. J. Wallin	H. P. Willis
1467	L. P. Thomas	Ga.	Norcross, Ga.	S. T. McElroy	G. H. Jones
1468	Stonewall	I. T.	Kiowa, I. T.	J. R. Fortson	W. D. Townley
1469	Robert McLain	Miss.	Quitman, Miss.	E. S. Estis	J. R. Cubley
1470	Sabine River	Tex.	Burkeville, Tex.	E. I. Kellie	G. W. Powell
1471	George M. Emack	Md.	Hyattsville, Md.	Major John F. Hickey	J. R. H. Deakins
1472	Pat. Cleburne	I. T.	Tishomingo, I. T.	E. R. Lucas	Butler Boyd
1473	George W. Robinson	Ala.	Stockton, Ala.	G. W. Burns	D. C. Byrne
1474	N. Y. Cook	Ark.	Newark, Ark.	R. R. Reeves	J. W. Barnett
1475	James H. Dunklin	Ala.	Greenville, Ala.
1477	Macon	Ga.	Macon, Ga.	J. W. Cabaniss	Jehu G. Postell
1480	Gordon	Ga.	Thomaston, Ga.	F. J. Reeves	S. H. Brooks
1481	Sam. H. Gist	Ala.	Calera, Ala.	S. H. Gist	C. C. Oliver
1482	Alfred Iverson	Fla.	Kissimmee, Fla.	J. M. Gardner	W. R. Johnston
1483	Tandy Pryor	Ky.	Covington, Ky.	D. B. Bayless	Benj. Ashbrook
1484	St. Helena	La.	Greensburg, La.	Thos. A. Bickham	A. P. Richards
1485	DeRussey	La.	Marksville, La.	E. P. Couvillon	A. M. Grenillion
1486	M. A. Otis	Miss.	Monticello, Miss.	G. A. Teunisson, M. D.	M. D. Wylie
1488	Pat. Cleburne	Ala.	Ensley, Ala.	W. M. Kilgore	W. J. Havis
1490	Wm. J. Houston	N. C.	Pearsall, N. C.
1491	B. Brooks	Tex.	Franklin, Tex.	R. S. Glass	H. P. Kellogg
1492	Wm. Shumate	S. C.	Chandler, S. C.	Thos. J. Chapman	L. T. H. Daniel
1493	Zeigler	S. C.	Hodges, S. C.	John Kennerly	C. A. Moore
1494	Geo. H. Nixon	Tenn.	Lawrenceburg, Tenn.	Thos. H. Meredith	John B. Kennedy
1495	John B. Gordon	Tex.	Index, Tex.
1496	Forrest	Tenn.	Gleason, Tenn.	J. W. Phillips	J. H. Bandy
1497	Pendleton Groves	La.	Pickering, La.	H. C. Mathis	W. H. Smart
1498	Greenville	Tex.	Greenville, Tex.	J. S. Richie	Jim Tom Story
1499	P. A. Haman	Miss.	Learned, Miss.	P. A. Ijaman	E. C. Gibbs
1500	Stover	Va.	Strasburg, Va.	J. Stickleby	L. Hurn
1501	Jefferson Davis	Miss.	Ellisville, Miss.	T. J. Hardy	M. G. Turner
1502	Thornton-Pickett	Va.	Farmville, Va.	Col. S. W. Paulett	B. M. Cox
1503	Alcibiades DeBlanc	La.	St. Martinsville, La.	Albert Martin	L. C. Duchamp
1504	S. D. Fuller	Ga.	Abbeville, Ga.	J. L. Bankston	J. M. Mixon
1505	Gen. Joe Wheeler	Tex.	Cumby, Tex.	W. J. Barrom	R. R. Williams
1506	Frank Phillips	Fla.	Graceville, Fla.	J. T. Whitaker	J. B. Hinson
1507	Ivanhoe	Va.	Ivanhoe, Va.	M. W. Jewett, M. D.	H. C. Thompson
1508	Washington	La.	Franklinton, La.	Wm. Magee	Thomas D. Bickham
1509	J. E. B. Stuart	Va.	Stuart, Va.	Wm. T. Ackers	Samuel F. Shelor
1510	Pittsylvania	Va.	Chatham, Va.	Chiswell Dabney	Fletcher B. Watson
1511	Stuart-Hairston	Va.	Martinsville, Va.	O. M. Allen	B. F. Powell
1512	Bill Adkins	Ala.	Goodwater, Ala.	J. T. Brown	H. R. Robbins
1513	Sam. Lanham	Tex.	Nevada, Tex.	Gooch Roland	G. T. Davis
1514	Joseph E. Finnegan	Fla.	Live Oak, Fla.	W. A. Tyson	J. S. Mikell
1515	Goss-Grigsby	Va.	Stony Point, Va.	Col. Alvah Kase	Lynn L. Goss
1516	Featherstone	Miss.	Bay St. Louis, Miss.	W. A. Dill	J. M. Tyler
1517	John C. Crabb	Ga.	Rockmart, Ga.	B. F. Hawkins	Stuart McMullen

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1518...	Ely M. Bruce	Ky...	Flemingsburg, Ky.	John W. Heflin	M. M. Teagar
1519...	Finley	Fla...	Westville, Fla.	W. M. Hawkins	Daniel Gilles
1520...	Dixie	I. T.	Wetumka, I. T.	J. W. Jones	D. L. West
1521...	Garland-Rodes	Va...	Lynchburg, Va.	John H. Kinnier	W. Marion Seay
1522...	Ocean Springs	Miss.	Ocean Springs, Miss.	Enoch N. Ramsey	H. Shannon
1523...	Garvin	S. C.	Pickens, S. C.	W. B. Allgood	J. B. Newbery
1524...	Rappahannock	Va...	Washington, Va.	Col. Thomas B. Massie	J. B. Miller
1525...	Confederate Veteran	Miss.	Raymond, Miss.	B. Williams	D. M. Ballard
1526...	Cabell	Tex.	Gibtown, Tex.		W. L. Lewis
1527...	Robert M. McKinney	N. C.	Louisburg, N. C.	Henry C. Kearney	N. M. Barron
1528...	W. S. Thayer	Fla.	Deland, Fla.	Wm. S. Thayer	N. M. Bennett
1529...	W. R. Stone	La.	Tallulah, La.	Henry B. Holmes	Maj. A. L. Slack
1530...	Erath	Tex.	Thurber, Tex.	W. E. Sawyer	W. C. Ready
1531...	W. C. Ware	Ga.	Leesburg, Ga.	W. M. Tomlinson	R. A. Forrester
1532...	Gid Lowe	Tenn.	Ashland City, Tenn.	T. A. Turner	T. J. Adkieson
1533...	Louis Dowd Wyatt	N. C.	Tarboro, N. C.	H. C. Bourne	J. A. Davis
1534...	Graybill	Ga.	Tennille, Ga.	B. S. Boatright	M. G. Murchison
1535...	Organ Church	N. C.	Salisbury, N. C.	George A. Barger	A. Wiley Klutz
1536...	W. H. Forney	Ala.	Wilsonville, Ala.	W. T. Smith	T. A. Huston
1537...	Oregon	N. W.	Portland, Oregon	Lewis C. Garrigus	J. P. Burkhart
1538...	Cabell	Ark.	Beebe, Ark.	J. T. Kirk	D. J. McIntosh
1539...	Spivy	Ga.	Broxton, Ga.	T. C. Allen	W. B. Tarrant
1540...	Terry	Tex.	Kerrville, Tex.	J. W. Stone	J. N. Boyd M. D.
1541...	Wade Hampton	Tex.	Claude, Tex.	W. H. Brummett	J. H. Hamner
1542...	Sheetz Cheshire	W. Va.	Romney, W. Va.	George H. Johnson	V. M. Poling
1543...	Lakeland	Fla.	Lakeland, Fla.	W. L. Finger	Urban H. Hane
1544...	Alfred H. Colquitt	Fla.	Madison, Fla.	Theodore Randell	A. Livingston
1545...	Wm. L. Byrd	I. T.	Ada, I. T.	J. R. Lawrence	Wm. L. Byrd
1546...	Gen. Frank Cheatham	I. T.	Powell, I. T.	D. C. Smart	J. B. Smith
1547...	Lee County	S. C.	Bishopville, S. C.	E. F. Burrows	H. S. Cunningham
1548...	Plainview	Tex.	Plainview, Tex.	J. M. Shropshire	A. T. Howell
1549...	M. W. Gary	S. C.	Columbia, S. C.	John T. Gaston	W. J. Horusby
1550...	John B. Gordon	Okla.	Elk City, Okla.	W. P. Francis	J. P. Clarke
1551...	Gordon Memorial	Ala.	Oxford, Ala.	Frank M. McIntyre	W. T. Dodd
1552...	Avery-McDowell	N. C.	Morganton, N. C.	L. A. Bristol	J. F. Battle
1553...	Joseph E. Johnston	Ga.	Winder, Ga.	H. J. Cox	E. M. Moulder
1554...	Taylor County	Ga.	Butler, Ga.	J. C. Butler	A. S. Wallace
1555...	James J. A. Barker	Tex.	Jacksonville, Tex.	J. J. Felps	J. H. Lattimore
1556...	H. L. Buck	S. C.	Conway, S. C.	Jeremiah Smith	George Hodges
1557...	George W. Scott	Fla.	Sopchoppy, Fla.	A. W. Smith	S. K. Casseau
1558...	Ross Ruble	Ark.	Bellefonte, Ark.	B. M. Estes	John P. Clendenin
1559...	Stonewall Jackson	I. T.	Wapanucka, I. T.	G. N. Powers	A. W. Dumas
1560...	Jesse Martin	I. T.	Poteau, I. T.	B. F. Garrett	James A. Fry
1561...	Rosser-Gibbons	Va.	Luray, Va.	R. S. Parks	S. K. Wright
1562...	Ashby	Va.	Conieville, Va.	J. L. Hausberger	B. F. Lillin
1563...	David Williams	N. C.	Burgan, N. C.	Petegrew Moore	Isaiah Carroll
1564...	Mike Powell	Tex.	Montgomery, Tex.	C. R. Scott	J. C. Nailor
1565...	J. B. Bittle	Tenn.	Waynesboro, Tenn.	P. H. Craig	E. J. McLean
1566...	Pap Price	Mo.	Morrisville, Mo.	A. E. Mitchell	James G. Simpson
1567...	Everett	I. T.	Holder, I. T.	J. B. Everett	S. A. Kitchner
1568...	J. A. Erly	Va.	Rocky Mount, Va.	Wm. Powell	G. W. B. Hale
1569...	Hugh McGuire	Va.	Lebanon Church, Va.	Wm. Miller	S. R. Peely
1570...	Fagan	Tex.	Redwater, Tex.	Capt. W. T. Fagan	S. P. Parker
1571...	Basset	Fla.	Noma, Fla.	G. W. Brooks	J. W. Stokes
1572...	Confederate Cross	Ga.	Helena, Ga.
1573...	John B. Gordon	Okla.	Lawton, Okla.	R. A. Sneed	Chas. G. Joy
1574...	Buck-Kitchin	N. C.	Scotland Neck, N. C.	W. H. Butterworth	Isaac H. Smith
1575...	E. T. Stackhouse	S. C.	Latta, S. C.	G. G. Crawford	J. J. Rouse
1576...	Scotland	N. C.	Laurinburg, N. C.	W. H. McLaurin	A. H. McLaughlin
1577...	Geo. E. Pickett	N. W.	Tacoma, Wash.	John C. Weathered	Jas. J. Anderson
1578...	J. I. Metts	N. C.	Whiteville, N. C.	H. H. Holton	H. C. Moffitt
1579...	L. B. Hall	Ky.	Dixon, Ky.	Thomas S. Page	Arthur Hall
1580...	W. B. Bate	Tenn.	Centerville, Tenn.	E. W. Easley	W. M. Baxter
1581...	Stonewall Jackson	Ga.	Atlanta, Ga.	J. B. McFadden	J. M. Raysor
1582...	J. A. Weaver	Tex.	Como, Tex.	Edw. C. Petty	J. F. Smith
1583...	Armstrong	Mo.	Armstrong, Mo.	J. E. Gates	W. F. Green
1584...	John C. Bruce	S. C.	Williamson, S. C.
1585...	"Jeb" Stuart	W. Va.	Fayetteville, W. Va.	S. S. Dews	S. S. Simmons
1586...	John B. Gordon	Ga.	Brunswick, Ga.	Harry Cassill	Henry R. Simons
1587...	Tolar	S. C.	Loris, S. C.	John Causee	J. C. Bryant
1588...	T. N. Walls	Tex.	Silverton, Tex.	J. R. Wright	E. T. Woodburn
1589...	Tom Green	Tex.	Lindale, Tex.	J. P. Curry	N. G. Fowler
1590...	Wm. F. Martin	N. C.	Elizabeth, City, N. C.	D. B. Bradford	John H. Burgess, Sr.

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1591	Bartow	Ala.	Dothan, Ala.	M. V. White	G. H. Boyette
1592	Gen. P. Roberts	N. C.	Belhaven, N. C.	E. S. Marsh	Thomas R. Jarvis
1593	Stonewall Jackson	Ark.	Huntsville, Ark.	W. G. Holland	C. K. Polk
1594	Dixie	Fla.	Sneads, Fla.	W. B. Forman, M. D.
1595	Mount Zion	N. C.	Huntsville, N. C.	R. J. Stough	D. W. Mayes
1596	W. J. Hoke	N. C.	Lineolnton, N. C.	A. C. Hartzoge	I. R. Self
1597	Columbia County	Ga.	Appling, Ga.	Judge Claiborne Snead	L. F. Kendrick
1598	J. J. Beeson	Ala.	Pisgah, Ala.	C. O. Steele	Frank Jarnagin
1599	Alamo	Okla.	Erick, Okla.	B. A. Parker	S. E. Dowdell
1600	Joc Wheeler	Okla.	Frederick, Okla.	R. A. Murrell	W. J. Hargrove
1601	Dimmit County	Tex.	CarrizoSprings, Tex.	James D. Spears	Jeff. W. Paulson
1602	Geo. Pegrum	W. Va.	Valley Head, W. Va.	G. W. Painter	J. L. Cofl
1603	David Pierson	La.	Winnfield, La.	Geo. A. Kelly	Will A. Strong
1604	Colquitt County	Ga.	Moultrie, Ga.	John Sloan	T. E. Etheridge
1605	Hobart	Okla.	Hobart, Okla.	W. L. York	M. D. Davis
1606	Bedford Forrest	Pacif.	Portales, N. Mex.	C. L. Carter	R. Y. Gregg
1607	Nat H. Harris	Miss.	Mayersville, Miss.	Murray Peyton	Marshall R. Smith
1608	Joe D. Harrison	Tex.	Llano, Tex.	T. G. Hill	J. J. Mabry
1609	Liberty Hill	Tex.	Liberty Hill, Tex.	J. H. Faubion	E. A. Pace
1610	Merriwether	Ga.	Greenville, Ga.	J. L. Strozier	S. F. Culpepper
1611	Urquhart-Gillette	Va.	Franklin, Va.	Jos. L. Barham, Lt.-Col.	Jas. F. Bryant, M. D.
1612	Jeff Davis	Ga.	Hazlehurst, Ga.	D. B. Pennington	W. T. Christopher
1613	Carraway	Tex.	Hemphill, Tex.	H. C. Maund	W. T. Arnold
1614	Crisp County	Ga.	Cordele, Ga.	W. M. Tomlinson	J. B. Smith
1615	A. R. Witt	Ark.	Heber, Ark.	T. J. Andrews	W. C. Watkins
1616	Charles Seton Fleming	Fla.	Green Cove Springs, Fla.	C. T. Burford	A. A. Allen
1617	J. J. Dickison	Fla.	Starke, Fla.	W. T. Weeks	Wm. F. Malphurs
1618	Eliot Muse	Ala.	Lafayette, Ala.	G. H. Chatfield	J. B. Barrow
1619	Robert Emmet Rodes	Ala.	Eclectic, Ala.	F. M. McDaniel	J. M. Phillips
1620	Calleote-Wrenn	Va.	Isle of Wight C. H., Va.	J. W. Jordan	E. E. Edwards
1621	David Coleman	N. C.	Painter, N. C.	J. W. Shelton	J. W. Fisher
1622	Ebenezer	Ala.	Stanton, Ala.	George B. Reed	Charles W. Gregg
1623	H. A. Wise and W. H. F. Lee	Va.	Kara, Va.	N. M. Neblett	S. H. Love
1624	A. E. Steen	Ark.	Fort Smith, Ark.	W. B. Morrow	D. S. Patrick
1625	Joseph E. Johnston	Ala.	McKenzie, Ala.	A. J. Hall	James Alexander
1626	W. T. Wofford	Ga.	Clarksville, Ga.	James P. Phillips	Joseph B. Erwin
1627	Oglethorpe County	Ga.	Lexington, Ga.	M. S. Weaver	T. G. Lester
1628	Jos. E. Johnston	Va.	Manchester, Va.	B. M. Robinson	E. J. Howlett
1629	Brunswick	Va.	Lawrenceville, Va.	J. M. Flournoy	J. E. Trotter
1630	Caroline County	Va.	Bowling Green, Va.	C. T. Smith	E. R. Cogbill
1631	Spalding County	Ga.	Griffin, Ga.	A. C. Smith	L. N. Johnson
1632	Wm. B. Woodridge	Va.	Chesterfield C. H., Va.	David Moore	E. H. Flournoy
1633	Straton	W. Va.	Logan, W. Va.	H. C. Ragland	J. R. Henderson
1634	Ben Elliott	Okla.	Sayre, Okla.	P. W. Gunn	A. A. Locklar
1635	Matt. Ransom	N. C.	Elm City, N. C.	Joel T. Wells	W. H. Langley
1636	Clintwood	Va.	Clintwood, Va.	Felix Senter	J. S. Colley
1637	D. C. Giddins	Tex.	Somerville, Tex.	F. M. Griffin	R. A. Brantley
1638	Halifax County	Va.	South Boston, Va.	Henry Fasley	E. N. Hardy
1639	A. R. Wright	Ga.	Milieu, Ga.	W. W. Beard	J. F. Bates
1640	H. A. Carrington	Va.	Charlotte C. H., Va.	T. W. Scott	John B. Faris
1641	Wright-Latane	Va.	Tappahannock, Va.	T. R. B. Wright	Wm. Campbell
1642	John T. Powell	Va.	Lovingston, Va.	John T. Powell	W. J. Kidd
1643	James Mitchell	S. C.	Saluda, S. C.	L. Rice	J. W. Edwards
1644	Floyd	Va.	Floyd, Va.	W. T. Sowers	N. J. Agnew
1645	Fort Mill	S. C.	Fort Mill, S. C.	J. W. Avarey	K. Shannon
1646	Randolph	N. C.	Asheboro, N. C.	H. C. McAlister	Alfred C. Rush
1647	John Adams	Okla.	Hollis, Okla.	J. M. Northcross	J. N. DeLamar
1648	Joseph E. Johnston	Va.	Bedford City, Va.	S. Griffin	Wm. H. Mosby
1649	Pat. Cleburne	Ark.	Fouke, Ark.	Joe Tisdale	J. F. Shaw
1650	Grady	Ga.	Cairo, Ga.	J. F. Stone	Edward F. Richter
1651	Zolicoffer	Fla.	St. Petersburg, Fla.	J. A. Lutz	A. B. Calhoun
1652	Clark	Fla.	Blountstown, Fla.	W. B. Clark	A. J. Wood
1653	Bartow	Ga.	Ashburn, Ga.	W. B. Dasher	P. T. McBride
1654	Pat Cleburne	I. T.	Tishomingo, I. T.	E. R. Lucas	G. W. Riggs
1655	J. F. C. Williams	Ga.	Hamilton, Ga.	J. F. Jenkins	Thos. D. Hamby
1656	Maury	Va.	Fredericksburg, Va.	A. B. Bowring	R. C. Hart
1657	Park	W. Va.	Ripley, W. Va.	V. S. Armstrong	Charles Sayre
1658	R. E. Lee	Va.	Smithfield, Va.	E. M. Morrison	J. D. Jordan
1659	W. N. Estes	Ala.	Fort Payne, Ala.	G. M. D. Lowry	H. A. McSpadden
1660	Mace Kimmey	Ala.	Samson, Ala.	John J. Jones	D. J. Williams
1661	Jefferson County	Va.	Charles Town, W. Va.	R. P. Clew	Geo. H. Hagley
1662	Daniel McDougald	N. C.	Lillington, N. C.	D. H. McLean	J. L. Smith
1663	Schuyler Sutton	Tex.	San Angelo, Tex.	John R. Nasworthy	Stephen Elmore

NO.	NAME OF CAMP.	DIVISION.	HEADQUARTERS.	COMMANDER.	ADJUTANT.
1664	Berkeley	S. C.	Monck's Corner, S. C.	J. Calhoun Cain	A. Ballentine
1665	D. I. Roof	S. C.	New Brookland, S. C.	J. S. Gunnell	A. L. Hook
1666	Ben Hill County	Ga.	Fitzgerald, Ga.	D. B. Mull	J. H. Hicks
1667	John H. Bankhead	Ala.	Winfield, Ala.	W. B. Haney	John W. Russell
1668	Crowder	Okla.	Crowder, Okla.	J. C. O'Neal	B. F. Rook
1669	Ransom	N. C.	Jonesboro, N. C.	J. A. O. Kelley	G. W. Avent
1670	C. V. Morris	Ga.	Fort Gaines, Ga.	T. M. Brown	F. E. Grist
1671	E. M. Butt	Ga.	Buena Vista, Ga.	J. H. Lowe	Jas. M. Lowe

OFFICIAL:

Wm. E. Mickle.

Adjutant General and Chief of Staff.

The Adjutant General has made every attempt possible to have the foregoing list accurate, but he has been much hampered by the dilatoriness shown by many officers in making reports. He will gladly correct any errors that may be found as soon as he is advised by those authorized to make the change; but he wishes it distinctly understood that he cannot promise to make corrections after April 1st, when the copy is put in the hands of the printer. He begs Camp officers to aid him in his efforts to have a full and absolutely correct list in the future.

Summary of Camps by Divisions.

Arranged According to the Present Number on Roster.

DIVISION	Number Alive Last Report	Added During Year 1907-08 and Reinstated	Dropped for Non-payment of Dues this Year	Net on Roster
Texas .....	251	1	27	225
Georgia .....	112	8	5	115
South Carolina .....	97	2	11	88
Mississippi .....	90	7	7	83
Alabama .....	86	4	8	82
Arkansas .....	78	7	7	71
Virginia .....	68	4	2	70
North Carolina .....	69	2	2	69
Tennessee .....	72	6	6	66
Kentucky .....	67	5	5	62
Louisiana .....	61	1	1	61
Florida .....	44	3	3	47
Missouri .....	48	2	3	47
Indian Territory .....	36	2	7	31
Oklahoma (one transferred from Pacific) .....	23	1	2	22
West Virginia .....	19	1	1	20
North West .....	15	1	1	15
Pacific (one transferred to Oklahoma) .....	13	1	1	13
Maryland .....	10	1	1	9
Totals .....	1,259	31	94	1,196
Total Camps Chartered as per last report.....				1,649
Chartered this year.....				22
Total number chartered .....				1,671

Summary of Camps by Departments.

Army of Tennessee.....	516
Trans-Mississippi .....	421
Army of Northern Virginia .....	256
Total .....	1,196

Illinois, Ohio and Indiana are part of the Kentucky Division.

Pacific Division includes New Mexico, California, Colorado, Arizona and Kansas.

North-West Division includes Montana, Washington and Oregon.

OFFICIAL:

Wm. E. Mickle.

Adjutant General and Chief of Staff.

III.

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

FEBRUARY, 1908.

NO 2.

THE JOHN W. THOMAS MEMORIAL, CENTENNIAL PARK, NASHVILLE, TENN.
Facsimile of "Parthenon" in background.

See Page 55.

TENNESSEE IN THE WAR, 1861-1865

By GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT

CONTAINS:

Lists of Military Organizations and Officers of the Provisional Army of Tennessee appointed by Governor Isham G. Harris, General Officers, both Union and Confederate, with Staff Officers of the latter and Statement of any previous Service or Rank in the United States Army; Quartermasters and Commissaries in the Confederate Army from Tennessee, other than those mentioned on the Staff; Officers of the Confederate States Navy appointed from Tennessee; Officers of the United States Navy from Tennessee; Members of the Confederate States Congress from Tennessee; Members of the United States Congress from Tennessee; Complete Rosters of Organizations of Federal Troops from Tennessee who served 1861-1865; Campaigns conducted, Battles, Affairs, and Skirmishes fought within the Limits of the State, with Date and Location. 228 pages.

Every Tennessean,—every Southerner, U. C. V. Camp, U. D. C. Chapter, Historical Society, Public and Club Library, University, College, and School, G. A. R. Post, Member of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and Military Academy,—should possess a copy of this authentic, historical record.

READ THE FOLLOWING COMMENDATORY LETTERS

*University of Nashville, Peabody College for Teachers,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9, 1907.*

Dear General Wright: I have read the manuscript of "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," prepared by yourself. I hope you will publish it; it is a work of very great value, and I doubt not will have a great sale.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES D. PORTER.

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT.

*Tennessee Historical Society,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9, 1907.*

My Dear General: I read your manuscript entitled "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," very carefully and with pleasure last winter; found it of much value; and while the information was fresh in mind I addressed a letter to the Governor of Tennessee, commending it and stating that it was well worthy of being purchased and published by the State. It was prepared carefully by an expert in our U. S. Military Records, and largely from original sources. It contains a large amount of information that cannot be obtained from our Tennessee and local records, and would be expensive to compile. It is the result of many, many months of painstaking labor. I do not know what has become of the letter I wrote to the Governor upon this subject.

Yours most truly,

G. P. THRUSTON.

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

*Office of Secretary of State, State of Tennessee,
John W. Morton,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General: It gave me great pleasure and interest to examine and read your manuscript of officers in Confederate and Federal armies during the late war from Tennessee. It is very complete, and will be eagerly sought by all old Confederate and Federal soldiers and their families not only in Tennessee but throughout the United States. Trust you may have it put in book form soon, and you may put me down for five copies. I expressed your manuscript. When I can serve you at any time, it will give me pleasure to do so.

Yours truly,

JOHN W. MORTON.

*A. W. Wills, Postmaster,
Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General: I have read the manuscript prepared by you, "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," with very great pleasure and interest, and I earnestly trust that a publication will be made in pamphlet form or otherwise for distribution and sale. It is the only complete record in existence of the Federal troops from Tennessee engaged in the Civil War. The Adjutant General of Tennessee compiled a very imperfect record of the Tennessee troops, which was so replete with errors that it was really useless and finally abandoned; and the record that you have prepared, being in every respect perfect, will be a matter of very great interest to Tennesseans for future generations and the Confederacy as well. Your manuscript was submitted to a committee consisting of Ex-Governor James D. Porter, General Gates P. Thurston, Captain John W. Morton, and myself, and was carefully scrutinized by each and all of us and received our careful and universal indorsement.

Very respectfully,

A. W. WILLS.

*No. 7 East Thirty-Sixth Street,
New York, October 1, 1907.*

My Dear General: I have just finished reading your "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865," and congratulate Tennesseans upon the admirable presentation you have given them. My familiarity with the Army of Tennessee, beginning with Columbus and Bowling Green, permits me to view the work somewhat as a critic. I find, however, nothing to criticise, and can therefore in all candor heartily praise it. Thank you for the opportunity to look it through.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM M. POLK.

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

*Headquarters United Confederate Veterans,
Office of Commander in Chief,
Columbus, Miss., October 29, 1907.*

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT, Washington, D. C.

My Dear General Wright: It has given me pleasure to critically examine your manuscript entitled "Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865." It is a compilation perfected with great labor and accuracy, with advantages of examination of records, to which you have had access for so many years, over and above any other living Confederate. I regard it as technically most valuable for the State of Tennessee and its citizens, and recommend it as the most valuable compilation I have yet seen for Tennessee in the great Civil War. The compilation is broad and comprehensive, giving military organizations and officers from Tennessee in both the Confederate and Union armies; general and staff officers in the Provisional Army of Tennessee appointed by Governor Isham G. Harris; general officers, both Union and Confederate, with staff officers, and statement of previous rank or service in the U. S. army; quartermasters and commissaries appointed from Tennessee in Confederate and Union armies other than those on staff of general officers; officers of Confederate and United States Navy appointed from Tennessee; members of Confederate and United States Congress from Tennessee; complete roster of Confederate and Federal organizations from Tennessee, 1861-1865; campaigns conducted, battles, affairs, and skirmishes fought within the limits of the State, with date and location. In short, as far as it goes it is as complete as it can be, and a copy should be in every family in Tennessee.

With kind wishes, your friend and comrade,

STEPHEN D. LEE.

ORDER AT ONCE. Copies will be sent in the order of receipt of orders with remittance.

PRICE, One Dollar and Fifty Cents, postage paid to any address.

A Limited Number of Copies

Extra Binding with loose, excellent Photographure Likeness on India paper of, and signed by, the Author.

PRICE, Two Dollars and Fifty Cents, postage paid to any address.

AMBROS.

PUBLISHING CO.,

Williamsbridge, New York City

PUBLISHED

OF SOUTHERN HISTORICAL AND LITERARY WORKS ONLY

"DIXIE."

(Tune: "Annie Laurie.")

O, Dixie's homes are bonnie
 And Dixie's hearts are true,
 And 'twas down in dear old Dixie
 Our life's first breath we drew.
 And there our last we'd sigh,
 And for Dixie, dear old Dixie,
 We'll lay us down and die.

No fairer land than Dixie's
 Has ever seen the light,
 No braver boys than Dixie's
 To stand for Dixie's right;
 With hearts so true and high,
 And for Dixie, dear old Dixie,
 To lay them down and die.

O, Dixie's vales are sunny
 And Dixie's hills are blue,
 And Dixie's skies are bonnie
 And Dixie's daughters too;
 As stars in Dixie's sky,
 And for Dixie, dear old Dixie,
 We'll lay us down and die.

No more upon the mountain,
 No longer by the shore,
 The trumpet song of Dixie
 Shall shake the world no more
 For Dixie's songs are o'er,
 Her glory gone on high,
 And the brave who bled for Dixie
 Have laid them down to die.

Mrs. E. L. Freer, Clinton, Tenn., the widow of a Confederate veteran, takes subscriptions for any magazines and papers, and will appreciate any orders that are sent to her. Daughters of the Confederacy can help a worthy woman by sending their subscriptions to her to be forwarded to the different publications. She lives within the four walls of her room, not having walked for eighteen years, and earns what she can by doing commission work; so remember her in your efforts for 1908. She also has authority to solicit for the VETERAN.

The VETERAN office wishes to complete a file for a patron, and needs the following numbers: 1893, January and June; 1894, January, June, July, December; 1896, April, May, December; 1897, December; 1900, January and February; 1902, October. Please write in advance of sending, stating condition of these copies. Will credit on subscription or pay cash

MORPHINE

Liquor, and Tobacco habits cured in ten days without pain. Unconditional guarantee given to cure or no charge. Money can be placed in bank and payment made after a cure is perfected. First-class equipment. Patients who cannot visit sanitarium can be cured privately at home. References: Any county or city official, any bank or citizen of Lebanon. Large booklet sent free. Address is much like gunning for birds. You must have a definite aim, because indiscriminate advertising, like indiscriminate shooting, results in empty pockets. The printer furnishes the shot, and postage is the powder that carries it wherever you direct.

Dept. V. CEDARCROFT SANITARIUM, Lebanon, Tenn.

GUNNING FOR ORDERS

And you must have good ammunition. Foolish indeed the sportsman who would use pebbles for shot to save expense, yet equally foolish is the advertiser who wastes energy, postage and opportunity on weak, ineffective printing.

Think it over; then let's talk it over. We have furnished ammunition for so many successful campaigns that we know you will find our experience of value.

Anyway, let's talk it over.

BRANDON PRINTING CO.
 NASHVILLE, TENN.

"Lee and His Generals" @ "The Last of the Wooden Navy."

Two wonderful paintings, each being worth thousands of dollars, can be had in every home. "LEE AND HIS GENERALS" and "THE LAST OF THE WOODEN NAVY," the great pictures by GEORGE B. MATTHEWS, which have been exhibited at Jamestown Exposition for the past six months and have excited the interest of thousands of people, have at last been accurately reproduced in colors. The first gives excellent full-figure portraits of Robert E. Lee and twenty-five of his commanders attractively grouped. The last is a vivid picture of the battle between the Merrimac and Monitor. The lithographs are 24 x 12 and 20 x 10 inches, respectively. PRICE, POSTAGE PREPAID, 55c. EACH. Dealers wanted everywhere to handle these pictures. Write for terms to

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., Inc.

914 E. Main Street,

Richmond, Va.

POSITIONS SECURED
 or Money Back

CONTRACT given, backed by $300,000.00 capital and 18 years' SUCCESS

DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL Business Colleges

Washington, D. C., Raleigh, Columbia, Nashville, Atlanta, Montgomery, Jackson, Miss., Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas.

Bookkeeping, Banking, Shorthand, Penmanship, Geography, etc. Indorsed by business men. Also teach by mail. Write, phone catalogue.

30 Colleges in 30 Days

American National Bank

Capital ..... $1,000,000.00
 Shareholders' Liability ..... 1,000,000.00
 Surplus and Undivided Profits. 500,000.00
 Security to Depositors ..... $2,500,000.00

3 per cent Interest Paid upon Certificates of Deposit

OFFICERS

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

DIRECTORS

JNO. B. RANSOM, JOHN M. GRAY, JR., HORATIO BERRY, G. M. NEELY, THOS. L. HERBERT, BYRD DOUGLAS, OVERTON LEA, J. E. RICHARDSON,
 A. H. ROBINSON, THOS. J. FELDER, E. W. TURNER, W. W. BERRY,
 LESLIE CHEEK, JOHNSON BRANSFORD, N. P. LESUEUR, ROBT. J. LYLES.

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The Lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address

NATIONAL PRINTING & EXHIBIT CO., 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The one book that gives a complete history of the Confederate flags

THE STARS AND STRIPES

AND OTHER AMERICAN FLAGS

BY PELEG D. HARRISON

The CONFEDERATE VETERAN says this book contains "a history of the flags which have figured in American history, their origin, development, etc., with army and navy regulations, salutes, and every other thing that is of interest. To Mr. Harrison is due much credit for his exhaustive research in compiling this data."

I was much interested in this valuable Flag book, particularly the part containing a history of the flags of our Southland.—M. A. Jackson, Widow of Gen. Thomas J. ("Stonewall") Jackson, Charlotte, N. C.

The standard text-book on the subject treated.—John W. Gordon, Major Confederate States Army, and Chairman United Confederate Veterans, Richmond Reunion, 1907.

With Eight Flag Illustrations in Color. 417 Large Pages. Handsomely Bound in Cloth
 Price, $3 net. Postage, 20 Cents

Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston

CONFEDERATE POSTAGE STAMPS WANTED

$100

PAID for an Alexandria, Va., or Livingston, Ala., stamp either unused or used on the old envelopes. Hundreds of other Confederate stamps issued by the Postmasters of different Southern towns in 1861 wanted at high prices, also U. S. stamps issued before 1870, and collections of foreign stamps. . .

Send what you have for inspection and offer to

W. SMITH, 507 W. Bridge Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Confederate
 Veterans'
 and Sons of Confederate
 Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO.
 Columbus, Ohio

Free Book About Cancer.

CANCEROL has proved its merits in the treatment of cancer. It is not in an experimental stage. Records of undisputed cures of cancer in nearly every part of the body are contained in Dr. Leach's new 100-page book. This book also tells the cause of cancer and instructs in the care of the patient; tells what to do in case of bleeding, pain, odor, etc. A valuable guide in the treatment of any case. A copy of this valuable book free to those interested. Address, DR. L. T. LEACH, Box 98, Indianapolis, Ind.

A beautifully colored work of art 6½ x 9½. "THE CONQUERED BANNER," with poem. Suitable for framing. Every Southern home should have one. Only 10c. with stamp. Write your address distinctly. C. WAGNER, 205 West 91st St., New York City.

Patents, Trade-Marks

C. T. BELT, Attorney

Warder Building, Cor. 9th and F Streets
 WASHINGTON, D. C.

For Over Sixty Years An Old and Well-Tried Remedy

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP
 has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, WITH PERFECT SUCCESS. IT SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLEVIATES all PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHEA. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. 25 CENTS A BOTTLE. Guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Serial number, 1098.

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter. Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important.

Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted. The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY,
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success;
The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. } VOL. XVI.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEBRUARY, 1908.

No. 2. } S. A. CUNNINGHAM
PROPRIETOR.

CONFEDERATE MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

BY GEN. ROBERT WHITE, PRESIDENT, WHEELING, W. VA.

I feel grateful to you for your request to give you some information as to the present situation in regard to the Confederate Memorial Association building.

You are fully advised as to the report made by our Board to the Confederate Veterans at their last meeting, in the city of Richmond. Since that time Mr. Peter Rouss, the son of that devoted old soldier, C. Broadway Rouss, has paid over to our Treasurer, Judge Christian, of Richmond, the $40,000, being the balance of the subscription of his father, and the payment of which balance had been so long held up by the suit, with attachment, instituted by Underwood in Brooklyn, N. Y. We have, therefore, in bank in the city of Richmond the whole amount which it was contemplated should be raised, $200,000—and indeed a little more than that amount—subject to our check at any time when we shall need it for the erection of our temple.

Soon after the meeting of the Confederate Veterans at Richmond I called our committee together for the purpose of selecting a site in Richmond for the building; and after earnest consideration as to several sites which were thought to be suitable, the committee unanimously agreed that Monroe Park, in the city of Richmond, was by all means the better place. That park belongs to the city, and we appointed a subcommittee charged with the duty of applying to the Council of the city of Richmond for permission to erect our temple in that park and of pressing our wishes in that regard, so as to, if possible, obtain the consent of the Council. It was felt by the subcommittee appointed that no action could be had until after the summer ended for the reason that it was hard to get a meeting of the Council during the warm months. It is unfortunate for us that the matter is not yet settled, the delay having occurred chiefly by reason of the prolonged sickness of Judge Christian, one of the subcommittee, as well as the absence of Colonel Ellyson, another of the subcommittee, whose time has been so thoroughly taken up by the affairs of the Jamestown Exposition that he has been unable to be in Richmond during most of the fall.

By letter just received I am advised that the chairman of the Council committee has given his assurance that his committee will meet at any time which will now suit the subcommittee, and it is hoped that such meeting will soon be had and a decision of the Council made one way or the other on the Monroe Park site. If the Council agrees to let us have the Monroe Park site, our committee will speedily have plans and specifications made for our building and the building erected at as early a day thereafter as practicable.

Should the Council refuse to give us a site in Monroe Park, our committee will meet and select some other place for the erection of our building.

We have been many years engaged in this most laudable undertaking, and spent much time as well as some money in our endeavors to erect this temple, a memorial to our beloved Southland.

The foregoing will have been read with much interest. The VETERAN congratulates all concerned upon the selection of Monroe Park, which is and will continue to be quite a central location for many years of the future. It is a sort of juncture between the business and the residence sections of the city. That the Council hesitates in regard to complying with the request of the committee in charge of the matter is surprising, for upon the pledge of parties there who seemed to be in authority the Jefferson Davis Monument Association favored Richmond for its location, and it will be remembered that the corner stone for that structure was placed in that park at the first General U. C. V. Reunion. Now the authorities could hardly do less than give the space desired for the location of this "Battle Abbey." Surely the Richmond authorities will act promptly and deferentially in giving all necessary privileges for its speedy erection.

JEFFERSON DAVIS ON EQUESTRIANSHIP.

The New York Press says that when Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War he ordered all his generals to learn to ride horseback. That is where President Roosevelt got his notion that to be a commanding officer a horse and saddle are necessary. There were no automobiles in Jeff Davis's time. It was horse or foot. To-day the leading generals all over the world, except in America, go to the front in automobiles.

No finer horseman than Davis ever lived. He won the love and hand of Zack Taylor's daughter by his distinguished presence in the saddle, as well as by his intrepidity at the cannon's mouth. When Secretary of War he noticed that only a few officers in the service were capable horsemen, and issued an order something like this: "A liberal reward will be paid to any officer or private in the army who will offer a satisfactory device for keeping our soldiers from falling out of their saddles. Communications to the Secretary of War will be regarded as confidential."

NEW LAW CONCERNING SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The following official publication comes as a surprise. It is of the Mede and Persian order, however, and must be obeyed. Our readers know how liberal we have been, and will realize that the change to occur cannot be avoided by publishers:

"POST OFFICE, NASHVILLE, TENN., January 1, 1908.

"For information of newspapers and publishers of magazines, etc. Extracts from amendments to the postal laws and regulations, effective January 1, 1908:

"Referring to expired subscriptions, a reasonable time will be allowed publishers to secure renewals of subscriptions; but unless subscriptions are expressly renewed after the term for which they are paid within the following periods— . . . weeklies, within one year; MONTHLIES, WITHIN FOUR MONTHS—they shall not be counted in the legitimate list of subscribers, and copies mailed on account thereof shall not be accepted for mailing at the second-class postage rate of one cent a pound; but may be mailed at the transient second-class postage rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed. * * *

"While these changes are effective January 1, 1908, the postmaster has been advised by the Department that it is the purpose of the Department to give to every publisher a reasonable opportunity to adjust his business to the new conditions. Publishers who show good faith and that they are making progress should, in fairness, have such opportunity. Therefore April 1, 1908, is allowed publishers to arrange to meet the changes stated above.

A. W. WILLS, Postmaster, Nashville, Tenn.

This law is general, of course. It will affect the VETEBAN more seriously than most monthlies, since it could extend time because of the loyalty of its patrons, who always pay eventually, however great the sacrifice. Of course, however, all who are behind must pay up by April 1, 1908.

As an item of interest the following paper upon which "Uncle Sam" has received at least $10,000 is given:

CERTIFICATE OF ENTRY AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

POST OFFICE AT NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 31, 1893.

I hereby certify that the CONFEDERATE VETERAN, a monthly published at this place, has been determined by the Third Assistant Postmaster General to be a publication entitled to admission in the mails at the pound rate of postage, and entry of it as such is accordingly made upon the books of this office. Valid while the character of the publication remains unchanged.

A. W. WILLS, Postmaster.

PER T. M. HURST, Assistant Postmaster.

MRS. STONE PAYS TRIBUTE TO MRS. SHELDON STRINGER.

It becomes the sad duty of your President to announce to you the death of Mrs. Sheldon Stringer, the President of the Florida Division, U. D. C., which occurred at Columbia, S. C., as she was returning to her home from the General Convention, U. D. C., held in Norfolk, Va.

A great loss has been sustained by our sister State Division, and the Daughters of the Confederacy mourn a coworker and friend, whose interest and zeal for the cause we love were faithful and untiring. The loving sympathy of our Association goes out to her family in this hour of affliction.

(This is supplemental to Mrs. Stone's report, page 57.)

UNION VETERANS IN THE SOUTH.

An old newspaper article published in the summer of 1901 in Pennsylvania concerning an esteemed citizen, Samuel J. Book, who died at Tullahoma, Tenn., where he had lived for thirty years, has attention. Captain Book served in the famous "Roundhead Regiment," the 100th Pennsylvania, during the war. In that service he was severely wounded and his health was otherwise impaired; so about 1870 he came to Tennessee, thinking the climate and other conditions would be good for himself and family. He was a worthy man and a good citizen, and the paper mentioned bears a fine testimonial to him from Comrade J. M. Travis, an active Confederate of Tullahoma. That is well. As stated heretofore in the VETERAN, to show their esteem for good men, Confederates have gone in organized bodies to the funerals of Union veterans, and have ever shown esteem for the worthy. That Pennsylvania paper states, however, that when Captain Book came to Tullahoma to settle "he was called upon by a party of Confederate soldiers who told him that he would not be permitted to live there." The VETERAN repudiates that expression in so far as the sentiment is concerned. Its editor, quite a boy still, about that time, resided in Shelbyville, an adjoining county. He was informed one Saturday afternoon that a man from Indiana had come to Shelbyville to live, and was then buying a stove in a business house close by. He was so pleased that he at once called upon the man, introduced himself, and said that he was gratified to see Northern men come South to be with our people, and expressed the hope that the stranger would find it congenial to live among us. Responding, the man, whose dark skin and black, thick beard are vividly impressed on memory's vision, said: "Yes. I thought I would come here and see if I could teach these people something." That was enough. It was at once realized that the man had not come South because he esteemed the people through their heroic sacrifices for principle, the idea assumed in the cordially sincere greeting. [It was the first suspicion that Northerners had undertaken to make the South a missionary field, a matter that they resent still as a people.]

No reply was made; but the depression, which could not be dispelled, has ever remained. That partisan in politics, under the cloak of religion, had the opportunity of teaching—preaching to—deserters from the Confederate army and a like class what he chose uninterruptedly; but there was one house at least in the town where no craze was displayed at his death, which occurred from a contagious disease sometime afterwards. The church that he built was ere long left for bats and owls, and the people who detested him and his class managed to get on without such partisan intruders from the North. They were enterprising enough to teach their children, pay their debts (poor as they had been left by the war), and live Christian lives.

It seems very inconsistent that Captain Book had such notice served upon him. There certainly was some misrepresentation made about him, if it be true that any such warning was given by Confederates, as they were very courteous to the right kind of men. He made a good citizen, and was cordially esteemed by the people where he spent his last days.

JEFFERSON DAVIS HOME ASSOCIATION.

Much regret is expressed in the evident misdirection of some mail, which is mentioned in explanation of the delay in connection with the Jefferson Davis Home Association, organized for the purpose of securing the birthplace of the Confederate President for a perpetual memorial. Hunter Wood, Esq., of Hopkinsville, Ky., by his diligence and patriotic service has procured what the committee advised to secure to the Baptist Church—such privileges as desired in enabling its official authorities to share the grounds deeded by Mr. Davis.

It is expected that in the next VETERAN splendid progress will be reported, so that the thousands who want a part in that memorial will have the opportunity to contribute, and that suitable dedication be made at the place on June 3, the hundredth anniversary of Jefferson Davis's birth.

Let every person South and North be ready to pay homage on that date to the man who suffered for the cause of the South—a cause as sacred as ever bestirred mankind in patriotic endeavor.

THE JOHN W. THOMAS MEMORIAL.

The monument shown on title-page is one of the finest ever erected in the South, and is a memorial to President John W. Thomas, for many years President of the Nashville, Chattanooga, and St. Louis Railway Company. Its plaza is forty feet square and the statue is about twenty feet high.

The policy of the N., C., & St. L. Railway, inaugurated by Major Thomas, himself an active participant in furnishing transportation for the Confederate troops during the war, in the past few years had been to mark in some suitable manner the points along the line of the railroad where battles of moment or events of interest transpired.

All along the line, through Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia, markers and monuments were set under the direction of Major Thomas. After his death, it was discovered that he contemplated marking the really pivotal point of the battle of Murfreesboro or Stone's River—viz., the location of the masked battery of fifty-eight guns placed near McFadden's Ford of Stone's River by General Rosecrans, about three miles north of Murfreesboro and a half mile east of the N., C., & St. Louis Railway, from a point between the Hazen monument and the National Cemetery. Numerous plans and suggestions and inscriptions for the monument were found among the papers of Major Thomas after his death. His plan was ordered carried out by Major Lewis, Chairman of the Executive Board of the railway company, who took much interest in the matter, and a monument of granite nearly forty feet high was set immediately at the battery point, which may be easily seen by passengers on the trains. See page 73 of this issue.

Major Thomas was the most helpful man to Confederates in Tennessee, if not in the entire South. When it came to serious matters involving the success or failure of any movement for these Associations, his opinion was sought, and his advice never failed of success. His assertion that should be treasured and made good on all occasions was that Nashville and Tennessee would never go back on the old Confederates. The dedication of this memorial statue was witnessed by many thousands, one of the largest assemblies ever seen in the Centennial Park, where the delightful and eminently successful Exposition was held in 1897, with Major Thomas President and Maj. E. C. Lewis Director General.

Major Thomas was succeeded as President by his son, J. W. Thomas, Jr., a practical and able railroad man.

HONOR THE MEMORY OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mrs. W. J. Behan, President of the Confederated Southern Memorial Association, calls the attention of all Memorial women to the following resolution which was passed at the Convention held in the city of Richmond June 2, 1907:

"Be it resolved that the Confederated Southern Memorial Association do request Gen. Stephen D. Lee, Commander in Chief of the United Confederate Veterans, to issue an order calling the attention of the various Confederate organizations to the approaching centennial of the birth of Jefferson Davis, the first and only President of the Confederate States of America, which will occur on June 3, 1908, and that all be requested to unite and observe the day in a manner appropriate to the important occasion."

She further says:

"In accordance with this resolution the officers and members of all Memorial Associations are called on to assist in having the study of the life and character of Jefferson Davis introduced into the schools and colleges of their respective States during the early part of the year, culminating with appropriate exercises on June 3, 1908.

"The President is most desirous that a united effort should be made to have the picture of Jefferson Davis, the distinguished American patriot, soldier, and Christian gentleman, placed in every school room and library in the South on June 3, 1908. This would afford an opportunity to the children of the coming generation to become familiar with his characteristic features and by study be stimulated to emulate the noble and heroic virtues as exemplified in his life.

"Let the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis be a red-letter day in the South. Let it be the occasion of a grand outpouring of the Southern people to testify their devotion to the memory of him—the one man who was made to suffer for all of his people. Let the name of Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, be upon every lip and dwell forever in the hearts of his people."

Mrs. Behan gives an outline for a profitable study of the life and character of Mr. Davis:

"1. The 'Dedication,' a beautiful tribute to the women of the Confederacy.

"2. Mr. Davis's inaugural address, delivered at Montgomery, Ala., February 18, 1861.

"3. Mr. Davis's farewell address on retiring from the United States Senate, January 21, 1861.

"4. The 'Conclusion' of the 'Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government,' which is not sufficiently known.

"5. The 'Memoirs of Jefferson Davis,' by his wife, and then a brief biography, setting forth that Mr. Davis's life illustrated virtue, patriotism, and courage in a degree rarely seen among men. He was greater in defeat and misfortune than in victory."

"The C. S. M. A. is doing much to promote these studies and encourage the coming generation to take proper cognizance of the noble and heroic virtues as exemplified in the character of Jefferson Davis.

"Let this be a Jefferson Davis year, and let every Southern man, woman, and child unite in honoring his memory."

The South's flag, born in the vindication of her rights and nurtured by the blood of her sons on a hundred battle fields, went down as pure and spotless as the breezes that play upon the bosom of the "Shining River."

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.
Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

IMPORTANCE OF OUR LITERATURE.

For fifteen years the VETERAN has been placed, at every suitable opportunity, in the hands of personal friends, and almost as many times expressions of cordial appreciation have been given. Some of these friends are liberal patrons of magazines, yet it seems not to have occurred that they should subscribe for the VETERAN. Too many, unhappily, and with good reason, feel that they should be supplied complimentary.

The new postal regulations compel new methods with the publication. Several thousand subscribers will have to be discontinued soon unless payment is made in advance, and these to people who get behind carelessly. It, therefore, is opportune for all friends who realize its worth to bestir themselves to do their part in maintaining the circulation. How important that it should be increased! More vigorous efforts than ever before are to be made to extend the circulation, and that will be impossible without the cooperation of friends. For the multitude who remit only one dollar it would be the easiest thing imaginable to suggest to some—to one, two, three, or more—that other subscriptions be sent in the one remittance. If three would so unite, a number would be sent free to some worthy poor veteran.

Friends, the days of participants in that great struggle are growing so short that unless this cooperation be given soon it will be too late.

The caption of this article is broader than the matter treated, but the VETERAN is so easily of the first importance that hardly anything else need be mentioned. For these fifteen years the founder and editor has been as heroic as was any soldier in the army. He has labored with unremitting zeal to establish the truth of what was contended for by the South; he has been at a disadvantage all this time for lack of stronger cooperation in doing what should be done, and he would have become faint-hearted often but for the steadfastness of thousands whom he has never seen and cannot until the time when all will know each other—in another sphere. Under these conditions he overcomes the pride by which he has never directly solicited a subscription. He commends and urges the patronage of his personal friends.

The VETERAN is now the most creditably indorsed publication that has ever existed. It is so well established that he can say, and ought, that IT IS THE DUTY OF EVERY SOUTHERNER WHO CAN DO SO TO SUBSCRIBE. To friends who have never contributed one cent appeal is made modestly but earnestly, that there be no exceptions. Instead of twenty-one thousand subscribers, there should be at least five times as many; and those who are loyal to it could bring about such result in two months or less time.

All along through the years and years of its existence the remark has been made: "I don't subscribe; but my neighbor lends it to me, and I enjoy it very much." Is this right? Ought not you—who so report—contribute to its increase, to its power for good? Can you not spare one dollar a year to a cause that your conscience so unstintedly approves? Think of how little this is. For fifteen years the VETERAN has been given without stint to many poor fellows who were gallant soldiers. Would you not like to strengthen the hands that do such work?

The term "Last Roll," established by the VETERAN, has now a national significance, and thousands of dollars have been expended to make such record of those noble men without one cent of expense to their families or friends save in the bare cost for engravings, and that expense is borne often by the VETERAN. There has evidently not been as much similar work done gratuitously by any other publication in the world. The VETERAN has not been stingy with the Southern people, and they should respond in like manner.

The foregoing are plain statements, but they are true and they ought to be made. It is due those who have so steadfastly done their part, often at much sacrifice, all these years. In contemplating the labor in sewing and in marketing vegetables, eggs, etc., to maintain their subscriptions, there is an inspiration to serve on and on until taps to maintain the story of our glory, and modest pride gives way to declaration of duty on the part of thousands who can and ought to cooperate in this work.

Recently there has sprung up at the North a liberal class who were on the other side in the struggle, whose sentiment is to cooperate in helping to establish the truth of history, as they see the VETERAN is as independent, honest, candid, and as patriotic for the government of the fathers as they are or have been. These people are largely of Southern ancestry, and before going to the grave they seek to do their part in making a truthful record.

Now, friends, will you bestir yourselves before it is too late?

The purpose of this article in the beginning was to refer to many things in our literature, to some of the many new books now being published; but so important is this one periodical, as all else may be learned through it, that all the space is given to it. Will you take heed?

Two back numbers of the VETERAN will be mailed free to any old veteran who can't subscribe, at your suggestion.

LET ALL OF US HAVE PEACE.

An appalling sensation comes from a suit in the courts of California wherein the President of a Chapter U. D. C. is suing for slander, the amount claimed being $75,000. It is charged that the defendant, a Vice President in the same Chapter, seeks the higher office.

There seems to be no other way than moral suasion to stop these grievous dissensions. The usefulness and dignity of Confederate organizations have been grievously impaired by controversy and bickering, the results of which can never be overcome. (The VETERAN expresses profound gratitude that it harbors no animosity toward any Camp or Chapter nor any member of any organization of Confederates, whatever may have been their conduct in its severe trials of the past.)

Let us look higher and beyond all groveling things. Let us consider how to honor the valiant men who rushed on and on against the most horrible of missiles to their death, and of their wives and mothers whose privations and sacrifices cannot be described. Let us get on new planes of action and higher lines of thought, so that after the brief time yet spared to all who are active now we may be ready for the future.

UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

PAPER FROM THE PRESIDENT, MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE.

With a change of administration, it seems fitting that your President should extend you a greeting in which is inclosed a wish that the year 1908 may come full-freighted with blessings to each of my "Daughters" and a trust that no rude blast will blight your brightest hopes or dispel your most comforting realizations. We are a large family, coworkers in a great and glorious cause, so sacred that no inharmonious or discordant note should enter into our deliberations. So let us strive together in unison for the accomplishment of the great objects to which we have pledged ourselves. Your President needs your coöperation and loyal support, and with this the year will yield a rich harvest of patriotic fruition. Remember, that on the unit depends the success of the whole body, a fact felt and emphasized by General Lee when he declared that victory came through "the men behind the guns." Therefore let every Daughter of the Confederacy take fresh courage and, forgetting self, give her best service to the progress of the work in hand.

We have undertaken the erection of a monument on Shiloh's historic field, where Southern valor never rose to greater height and where sleep some of our bravest and best. A strong committee with an efficient chairman has this work in charge; and if we "keep the faith," we will soon see the consummation of this great purpose.

Through the efforts of Dr. Samuel E. Lewis, of Washington City, a surgeon in the Confederate army, a bill was introduced in the Congress of the United States by Senator Joseph B. Foraker, providing for an appropriation to care for the graves of Confederate soldiers who had died in Northern prisons. President Roosevelt gave hearty indorsement to this plan; and our Confederate dead in and around Washington, once in neglected graves, are now placed in the Arlington National Cemetery, on a commanding site, in a beautiful circular plat tastefully laid off with center space for a monument, and each grave marked and carefully kept. They sleep in the soil of the home of their great leader—the beloved Lee.

The placing there of these heroic dead is the strongest testimonial of that fraternal love that now cements us as one people and gives to this country a common heritage of valor, courage, and patriotism, whether displayed by Northern or Southern soldiers. The Confederate veterans of Washington had formed an association for the purpose of erecting a monument over these comrades of theirs; but feeling that this work should be speedily done, they sent a representative to the General Convention in Norfolk to ask the Daughters of the Confederacy to take charge and raise the necessary amount to place this crowning tribute to our dead. This sacred trust was accepted, and we will show them that their confidence was not misplaced. To this end every State where there is an organization of the Daughters of the Confederacy will select a director, whose duty it shall be to collect funds for this purpose, and a committee in each of these States will assist the director to increase the fund until the Arlington Confederate monument shall be an assured fact.

By resolution adopted at Norfolk your attention is called to the fact that this year, 1908, bears a significance of unusual interest to all Confederate organizations and to the entire people of the South, as it marks the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of President Jefferson Davis, and it is recommended that a special study of the public and religious life of President Davis—soldier, statesman, scholar, and Christian gentleman—shall be introduced into all institutions of learning during the year 1908, and that Chapters be urged to place pictures of President Davis and General Lee in the schools, that the youth of our land may have ever before them these two great exemplars of the highest type of American manhood, these two so closely linked in purpose and thought in life, and whose centennial years are in close touch.

Division Presidents are requested to make the organization of Children's Auxiliaries a leading feature of their work for the year, as on this training of the children will depend the perpetuity of our organization. Interest the boys in this work, that the Sons of Veterans may receive the recruits so much needed in their association.

For the high honor you so freely conferred upon me my warmest appreciation is given, and to the administration of your affairs my best service will always be accorded, with an "eye single" to your interests and with a keen sense of the responsibility that goes with the position. Your forbearance is asked for all mistakes of the administration, remembering that "to err is human," and rest assured that a loyalty and devotion will be given to their duties by each one of your servants whom you have placed in charge of our General Association.

From so many members of the Daughters of the Confederacy have come gracious words of commendation and congratulation, and for these "flowers placed upon" my life I am deeply grateful and can only trust that my service may be worthy of such confidence.

ARLINGTON CONFEDERATE MONUMENT.

BY MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE, EX OFFICIO PRESIDENT OF THE ARLINGTON CONFEDERATE MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

The Arlington Confederate Monument Association is now reorganized under the direction of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, with an Executive Committee, located in Washington, D. C., of which Col. Hilary A. Herbert is the permanent chairman, with three members from each of the five Chapters, U. D. C., of the District of Columbia and three members from Camp 171, U. C. V., and three members from Washington Camp, U. S. C. V., constituted as follows: Mrs. Magnus S. Thompson, Mrs. Drury C. Ludlow, Mrs. Rosalie H. Boccock, Mrs. Marion Butler, Mrs. J. E. Mulcare, Mrs. Archibald Young, Mrs. Lillian Pike Roome, Mrs. Blanche Cloughton West, Mrs. William Youngblood, Miss Mary Desha, Mrs. C. C. Calhoun, Mrs. Marcus J. Wright, Mrs. William Anthony Wayne, Mrs. Helen Leaper Hoffman, Judge Seth Shepard, Col. Hilary A. Herbert, Capt. J. M. Hickey, J. Monroe Britt, Wallace Streater, George S. Covington.

A director is selected from each State having an organization of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. They are:

Alabama: Mrs. Chappell Cory, Birmingham.
Arkansas: Mrs. Clementine Boles, Fayetteville.
California: Mrs. Florence D. Johnston, Los Angeles.
Florida: Mrs. J. W. Tench, Gainesville.
Georgia: Mrs. James A. Rounsaville, Rome.
Illinois: Mrs. G. J. Grominet, Alton.
Indiana (not yet appointed).
Kentucky: Mrs. Caby M. Froman, Ghent.
Louisiana: Mrs. D. A. S. Vaught, New Orleans.
Maryland: Mrs. Frank G. Odenheimer, Jessup Station.
Mexico: Mrs. J. R. Stamford, City of Mexico.
Mississippi: Mrs. Olivia H. Champion, Edwards.
Missouri: Mrs. James Britton Gautt, Jefferson City.

Montana: Miss Georgie Young, Helena.
 Nebraska: Mrs. Eliah Conklin, Omaha.
 New Mexico: Mrs. Robert Bradley, Roswell.
 New York: Mrs. John J. Crawford, 254 West 99th Street,
 New York, N. Y.
 North Carolina: Mrs. J. W. Faison, Charlotte.
 Ohio (not appointed).
 Oklahoma: Mrs. Ruth Clement, Oklahoma City.
 Oregon (not appointed).
 Pennsylvania: Mrs. Charles K. Robinson, Philadelphia.
 South Carolina: Mrs. Thomas W. Keitt, Clemson College.
 Tennessee: Mrs. J. W. Clapp, Memphis.
 Texas: Mrs. Joseph B. Dibrell, Seguin.
 Utah (not yet appointed).
 Virginia: Mrs. Thomas S. Boccock, Richmond.
 Washington (not yet appointed).
 West Virginia: Miss Charlotte Lee Wilson, Beverly.

ADVISORY BOARD.

Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D.D., Washington, D. C.
 Ex-Senator Charles J. Faulkner, Washington, D. C.
 Ex-Senator Francis M. Cockrell, Washington, D. C.
 Judge Seth Shepard, Chief Justice Court of Appeals, District of Columbia.
 Thomas Nelson Page, Washington, D. C.
 Joseph J. Darlington, Washington, D. C.
 Gen. Marcus J. Wright, Washington, D. C.

OFFICERS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Col. Hilary A. Herbert, Chairman of Executive Committee,
 1612 21st Street N. W., Washington, D. C.
 Mrs. Marion Butler, Vice Chairman of Executive Committee, the Portland, Washington, D. C.
 Mrs. Drury C. Ludlow, Recording Secretary, the Concord,
 Washington, D. C.
 Mrs. Arthur E. Johnson, 1514 Q Street N. W., Washington.
 Mr. Wallace Streater, Treasurer, 1652 Monroe Street N.
 W., Washington, D. C.

The directors of each State will forward as collected all funds to Mr. Wallace Streater, bonded Treasurer Arlington Confederate Monument Association, Washington, D. C. All donations will also be sent to Mr. Streater, and it is hoped that these will be liberal, as there is no more important memorial work confronting the Daughters of the Confederacy than that of erecting a monument over the Confederate dead that now rest in the National Arlington Cemetery.

TENNESSEE DIVISION, U. D. C.

BY JUDITH WINSTON PILCHER, NASHVILLE, STATE PRESIDENT.

A word from the Tennessee Division about the General Convention, U. D. C., at Norfolk, Va., November 13-16, 1908.

In my letters from Chapters over the State I have been repeatedly asked: "Why do you not tell us of the Convention in the VETERAN?" I wish I had time, space, and ability to do the subject justice; but will do the best I can with what may specially interest the Tennessee Daughters.

This, the fourteenth annual Convention U. D. C., was a notable gathering, and much business of importance was transacted, much new work taken up and decided upon. The deliberations were characterized by courtesy, and harmony prevailed throughout, though the debates were often spirited. Earnest purpose and a loving loyalty to the best interests and principles of the organization appeared to be the mainspring of action. I was pleased to note an interesting editorial in the VETERAN for January giving a brief personal sketch of our new President General, Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, of Galveston, Tex. I think I can speak for the U. D. C. at large and say that we wanted Mrs. Stone to lead us, that we believe in her and are proud of her. The proof of this lies in the perfect unanimity of sentiment at Norfolk, which demanded a suspension of the rules to elect by roll call of States and to place Mrs. Stone at the head of our forces, fifty thousand strong, by acclamation. The same compliment was extended to the other officers elected, and seemed a fitting finale to a meeting held in the interest of a sacred cause; and just as we closed—perhaps a little after—the Sabbath dawned. Our last act was to rise en masse to thank our beloved retiring President, Mrs. Lizzie George Henderson, for faithful and efficient leadership.

The most important new work assumed by the Daughters was the erection of the Arlington monument, to stand on the C. S. A. plat in the National Cemetery at Arlington. In our minds and on our hearts this means Robert E. Lee. Our President General has requested me to appoint a director for the Arlington monument from the Tennessee Division, and I have selected Mrs. J. W. Clapp, of Memphis, as one eminently fitted for this important position. She will have a small committee, carefully selected, to assist her; and I would bespeak the active coöperation and help of all the Camps and Chapters in Tennessee, as well as all who sympathize with our efforts to preserve our memories and tell the truth of history. It is said that the feeling in Washington, where this movement started, is that this monument is to be a very tall shaft and will not cost over $30,000. Tennessee must live up to her reputation and rally to this work as she did in the greater undertaking—that of the Jefferson Davis monument.

Tennessee was distinguished in sending the largest vote to the U. D. C. Convention at Norfolk. This gave Texas, Virginia, and other large Divisions pause, and we were plied with questions as to "how we did it." It is an evidence of the fine condition of the Tennessee Division.

The State President was requested to bring a small tree to plant in the Confederate grove at Norfolk. I requested a local nurseryman to get a small, symmetrical hackberry—a distinctively Tennessee tree, old-fashioned and pretty, I thought—and I stipulated that it be gotten from the Hermitage if possible, a gift rich in Tennessee tradition and historic association. The little tree was carried by hand and tenderly cared for en route by the ladies of our party.

The absence of Mrs. M. C. Goodlett, our beloved founder, was much regretted, and a loving message was wired to her from the first meeting of the Convention.

It is needless to say that Virginia received and cared for us with characteristic grace and cordiality, Mrs. James Y. Leigh, President of the local Chapter, acting as special hostess.

CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF PRESIDENT DAVIS'S BIRTH.

In a plea for special observance of the centenary year—1908—of Jefferson Davis and that of Robert E. Lee—1907—in Tennessee, Mrs. M. B. Pilcher, State President Tennessee Division, U. D. C., writes: "By the action of the Norfolk Convention, I, as State President of the Tennessee Division, am one of a general committee, which comes under the head of a special committee, to request that the character and public and religious life of Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederate States, shall be made a special study in the public and private schools and other institutions of learning during this year, 1908, which is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of President Davis, and this seems fitting. Also it is urged that pictures of President Davis and General Lee be placed in the schools, and that the public school buildings be named for Davis and Lee. What more effective way is there to teach our children the histories of these two Christian gentlemen, these two great Americans, whose examples are a priceless legacy to all who come after them? I not only request but beg of every Chapter, Camp, organization, and individual to unite with us in this work, and let us show what Tennessee can do when she puts her shoulder to the wheel. Let us help to perpetuate the memories of these two peerless leaders to whom all Southerners, all Americans are indebted for glorious history. This item our President General has written me, urging that I take up the work specially with reference to President Davis this his centenary year."

MONUMENT AT OXFORD, MISS.

BY J. L. SHINAULT, COMMANDER OXFORD CAMP, U. C. V.

Dear Comrade: I send you a picture of the Confederate monument and the officers of Camp 752, U. C. V., of Oxford, Miss., located on the Public Square.

This splendid monument stands thirty-two feet in height, and was erected at a cost of $3,000 by this Camp to the memory of Lafayette County's dead and to commemorate the valor and heroism of the Confederate soldier and the sublime fortitude of Southern women. It is said that Lafayette County furnished more men to the armies of the Confederacy than any other of this State, and many of them sleep in unknown graves on the numerous battlefields of the South. This Camp has an enthusiastic membership of one hundred and twenty veteran soldiers who actively attend its regular meetings, and many of whom attend the national Reunions. The Camp has a Southern Cross Drill Corps composed of the prettiest of girls (which distinction Oxford claims) and sixteen of the youngest and nimblest of our old warriors, which is a very great source of pleasure and profit to the Camp. If it can be so arranged, our Southern Cross Drill Team would like to engage in a competitive drill with other teams at the general Reunion in 1908, at Birmingham, Ala., and would be pleased to consider proposals for this purpose.

OFFICERS OF THE CAMP BY THE MONUMENT.

There is an account of "The Monument at Oxford" on pages 300-307 of VETERAN for 1907. That monument was erected by the Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter, U. D. C., on the grounds of the State University. The university furnished a company of soldiers from the student body known as the "University Grays," although that monument is not solely in their honor. This monument is located on the Public Square of Oxford, Miss., and was erected by the Confederate Camp of Lafayette County, Miss., in memory of the Confederate soldiers of the county.

J. L. Shinault, R. L. Stephenson, C. B. Neilson, J. C. Gates, John F. Brown, and J. H. Welch are the comrades represented in the picture.

TRIBUTE TO CAPT. "JUNE" KIMBLE.

Mr. M. V. Ingram, of Clarksville, Tenn., in reporting a happy gathering of comrades who served in Company A, 14th Tennessee Infantry, in Virginia during the war, says of Capt. Junius Kimble:

"Kimble left home as a private and later was elected orderly sergeant, and still later was promoted to captain on the display of his remarkable valor in several battles. This was done on the recommendation of General McComb without Kimble's knowledge or consent. The commission reads: 'For distinguished valor and skill Sergeant June Kimble is hereby appointed and commissioned captain in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States and ordered to report to Col. William McComb for duty. (Signed) Jefferson Davis, President.'

"The commission came with much surprise to June. He at once called Company A in line, read the commission, and told the boys that if there was a single man in the company who objected he would not accept the appointment, and the vote for him was unanimous with a storm of applause. This came after the fearful battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, Pa., where he won his spurs. The wonder is that he should have passed through twenty-seven hotly contested battles and many skirmishes, always to the front, utterly fearless, without getting more than one little scratch.

"There were other noble boys from Clarksville who stood right along in the front rank with June Kimble. It was in the third day's battle of Gettysburg, the greatest slaughter of the war, that June Kimble, Theo. Hartman, Joe Williams, Emmett McCulloch, John Massie, William M. Daniel, William Green, and a few others of the 14th left to tell the story, stormed the heights of Cemetery Ridge, going over a great stone wall, capturing the enemy's guns, shooting the gunner within fifteen feet of the muzzle as he was ramming his charge to flay them, and took the whole command standing within the enemy's works. The boys, however, did not long enjoy their signal victory. Soon they discovered the enemy's reinforcement coming in swarms like showers of black locusts, flanking their rear, and with all their daring recklessness they had sense enough to give up the post and retreat in great haste. Some of the boys were captured and made prisoners. Kimble, however, ran for dear life, with bullets flying after him like showers of hail. It was funny as it was serious. McCulloch and Kimble agree in the opinion that but for a mortised post and rail fence that checked the charge of Archer's Tennessee Brigade the Confederates would have won the victory of Gettysburg. The Confederates did not mind the stone wall and picket fences; but this mortised post and rail fence checked the charge and confused the whole command when the Federals poured shot and shell into them while they were climbing over it, slaughtering the Confederates by wholesale, breaking their ranks and the force of the charge."

Captain Kimble resides in Eastland, Tex., as well as four others of the company (A), and they were all at Clarksville at the time mentioned.

THE SIXTY-SECOND VIRGINIA—NEW MARKET.

BY T. H. NEILSON (CO. D, 62D VA.), 302 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Several years ago in the VETERAN there appeared a sketch of the gallant Gen. Gabriel Wharton, in which the writer erroneously stated that he was in command of the Confederates and General Milroy of the Union army in the battle of New Market, May 15, 1864, and to which Capt. Frank Imboden (brother of Gen. John D. Imboden) replied and correctly stated that the dashing Gen. John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, commanded the Confederate and Gen. Fraiz Sigel the Union forces, the same being respectively from 4,000 to 10,000 strong. In the December (1907) VETERAN Capt. D. H. Bruce, of the 51st Virginia, gives his recollection of that fight, in which, inter alia, he says, "After we had fought for a considerable time, I saw Imboden's men giving way, and also saw that the cadet boys were confused and giving way;" that his regiment, 51st Virginia, lost five per cent in killed and wounded, himself among the latter, and that there was a battery taken, claimed to have been captured by the cadet corps; and he adds, "I have thought that maybe after we had run the Yankees off they came across the artillery and took possession of it and, like boys, thought they had captured it."

As he seems ignorant of the real capture of that battery, permit me to give my recollection of that fight and enlighten him on the subject and to say that his vision was certainly defective on that day, or else he mistook some other command for "Imboden's men" that were "giving way."

Col. John S. Wise wrote some fifteen years ago in one of the magazines (the Century, I think) a very interesting article on "The Cadets" (of which he was one) at New Market, and subsequently I called to see him and facetiously remarked that I thought it "cheeky" that he should entirely ignore my regiment (62d Virginia), that bore the brunt of the fight and captured a five-gun battery (spoken of by Captain Bruce), losing in killed and wounded more men than all the rest of the command. We went into that charge with some five hundred men and re-formed with less than one-half, all the commanding officers of companies being killed or wounded. Captain Currence picked up the colors when they fell the fifth time in as many minutes, all of the color guards having been shot down, and as he fell I grabbed them from his hand, and carried them through the remainder of the battle. Col. George H. Smith put me on the color guard on the field with a few complimentary remarks when he halted and re-formed on Root's Hill. I served the remainder of the campaign of 1864 in that position. Imboden's Brigade was composed of the 62d Virginia Infantry, 18th Virginia Cavalry, and McClannahan's Battery, the large majority of officers and men of the 62d Virginia being from the mountains of West Virginia, brave as lions and tough as pine knots, whom no danger could affright and no labor tire, who would march all night to be on the firing line in the morning. I was a Richmond boy, and our colonel was from Alexandria.

Our brigade disputed Sigel's advance up the Valley, fighting him from Strausburg to New Market, where Breckinridge joined us with some three thousand fresh troops at New Market on the night of May 14. Late in the afternoon of that day a company of Federal cavalry, thinking that Sigel had driven us up the Valley, came across the mountain, opposite New Market, and the 18th Virginia Cavalry charged and captured a number of them. McClannahan's Battery was stationed on a hill on the left of the pike, back of New Market, on the 14th. Under orders, Imboden's Brigade fell back a mile or two on the morning of the 15th, and "Breck" formed his line of battle and awaited Sigel's expected attack. We tore down some fences and piled the rails up as a kind of "breastwork." About twelve o'clock, as Sigel had not offered battle, the 62d Virginia was ordered forward. We filed up the ridge on the left of the pike and came down and formed in a peach orchard a few hundred yards from the said hill, back of New Market, which McClannahan's Battery occupied the day before, but which was now held by a Federal battery.

Our colonel, George H. Smith (now an honored judge of the District Court of Appeals at Los Angeles, Cal., an able, accomplished lawyer and writer, who won the $500 Henry M. Phillips prize—Philadelphia—for the best legal essay, "The State," some years since, a man as modest, gentle, and lovable as a woman, but in battle a veritable Ney, without his grandiloquence, when he exclaimed at Waterloo, "Come! see how a marshal of France dies on the field of honor," and who will blush like a girl if he reads this), came before the regiment and said simply: "Boys, our duty to-day is to take [pointing to the battery] that hill. Forward, guide center, charge!" Our batteries, which were vainly trying to shell the hill to cover our advance, had to be silenced, as the shells were falling in our rear. We started to charge, but had advanced only a short distance when the battery limbered up and retreated, making several stops to shell us as we advanced, until they finally made a stand in an apple orchard on a hill just below the town. The 62d Virginia was thrown forward in advance of the main line, and received the concentrated fire of the artillery, belching double-shotted canister into us, as well as the fire of a brigade on the crest of the hill in the rear of and supporting the battery.

The fire was the hottest I was ever under, and I thrill still with "the 'rapture' of that fight," and can never forget the ecstatic joy I felt when the enemy broke and the guns were ours. We never stopped, but pursued the panic-stricken Yanks as far as Root's Hill, where we halted and re-formed, while other troops sent them flying pellmell down the pike to Mt. Jackson, where they burned the bridge to check pursuit.

As I remember, there was a steep declivity at the foot of the hill which partly shielded us from the battery's fire; and as we had charged about a mile and three-fourths over muddy plowed fields (it was raining), we halted a moment to get our breath and close up ranks for the final assault. The cadets, gallant little boys, were sent up to reinforce us, and no veterans ever behaved better than those brave little fellows (the flower of the South), and I remember how I thought it a shame to subject such youths to such a fire. I would not take a leaflet from the chaplet of fame with which history will crown them; but as the old 62d Virginia has never, as far as

I know, received justice for its share in the success of that battle, I give the facts as I remember them. Being simply a boy private, I had little opportunity in the heat of battle of noting the positions of other commands, save that of the cadet corps on our left. I recall seeing General "Breck" and his young son galloping over the field under a heavy fire, and how handsome and superb I thought them. I recall also how a small squadron of Federal cavalry, with reckless daring, charged up to our line on our right, some few going through who were captured in the rear.

David Lang, killed at Stevenson's Depot September 5, 1864, of whom several sketches have appeared in the VETERAN, was lieutenant colonel of the 62d Virginia and in the New Market fight. I recall also seeing and running past numerous knapsacks, saddles, and other plunder discarded by the fleeing enemy as we pressed their retreat. I also recall how one fellow (one of the camp followers who trail at a safe distance after the enemy is driven back and get all the plunder, the fighting men getting nothing) had forty shirts and wanted to sell me one that night (I had five holes shot through my clothes) and how I felt toward him.

After that battle, the 62d Virginia was assigned to Breckinridge's command and sent to join Lee's army, and fought from Totopotomoi Creek, where we charged and captured a redoubt and some twenty prisoners on a hill a few hundred yards from our lines amid the cheers of the army watching us; then to Second Cold Harbor, where the enemy broke through our division, but not our brigade, taking the trenches, but were driven out five minutes later. After that battle, we were sent to Lynchburg, where Early fought Hunter and followed him on his retreat till he turned off toward Salem. The 62d was with him on his raid to Washington City, through all the battles of the campaign of 1864 in the Shenandoah Valley.

I received several years since from Colonel Smith, to whom I had written requesting a certificate of my services in the old 62d Virginia, a very genial letter with certificate, a copy of which I give below, as it corroborates what I have written about the part played by the 62d in the battle of New Market and the capture of the said battery, which is the only one, as far as I am aware, that was captured at New Market. That the casualties sustained by the 62d Virginia were nearly fifty per cent of our men is the best answer I can give to refute Captain Bruce's assertion of his seeing "Imboden's men giving way," as it was those men who took that battery, which was a five- not a six-gun battery, if my recollection is correct.

COPY OF CERTIFICATE.

DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND DISTRICT,
LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 29, 1905.

It gives me pleasure to say that Mr. Thomas H. Neilson, now of New York, then hardly more than a boy, served throughout the war in the 62d Virginia Regiment (mounted infantry), Army of Northern Virginia, of which I was colonel.

I remember him well, and can therefore say of my own personal knowledge that he served with great credit to himself and to the regiment. Among other battles in which he participated was the battle of New Market, May 15, 1864, where the regiment lost in killed and wounded two hundred and forty-three men out of a total of something over five hundred, including all the commanding officers of companies; and after the death of Captain Currence, who commanded the color company, he was put on the color guard, all of the old guard having been killed or wounded, and he carried the colors throughout the remainder of the battle. G. H. SMITH.

THE BATTLE OF SALEM CHURCH.

BY REV. A. P. ODOM, OF THE 9TH ALABAMA REGIMENT.

During my visit to the Richmond Reunion I visited the historic city of Fredericksburg, and was most cordially entertained by Mr. Decker and his charming daughter. Accompanied by Mr. Decker, a fellow-veteran, we drove out to the old brick Salem church and battlefield. More than a hundred scars on the church wall perpetuate the history of the carnage of death on that fateful day of May 3, 1863. Vividly the memories of that awful day came back to my mind as I stood in the old road where the 9th Alabama was lying down, and close to the very spot where I was when the New Jersey boys charged our line. How gallantly they advanced, and seemingly without fear of the awful doom that awaited them! The words of our brave commander, Major Williams, yet living near Bridgeport, Ala., are vividly recalled: "Boys, hold your fire until you can see the white of their eyes." The first and second volleys from the 9th Alabama boys made it too hot for them, and they made a hasty retreat. They had proven good marksmanship, however, that laid cold in death a number of our brave comrades and sent many others to the field hospital. How sad the recollection of our fellow-comrades whom we placed in the narrow trench opened to receive their bodies by the roadside near the old church! Later they were taken up and placed in the city cemetery by the good people of old Fredericksburg.

How vastly different the circumstances and emotions of the writer then and now, more than forty-four years ago! Time has dealt gently with that locality; but few changes have been made, and they for the better. It was there, in a few feet of the writer, that the brave and noble young Patton, of Lauderdale County, fell mortally wounded. * * *

A large stone monument has been erected, and now stands about seventy-five yards from the old church on the east side of the public road leading to Fredericksburg, and bears the following: "Erected to commemorate the services of 23d Infantry Regiment New Jersey Volunteers by the State of New Jersey. . . . To the memory of our heroic comrades, who gave their lives for their country's unity on this battlefield, this tablet is dedicated." There is this tribute upon it: "To the brave Alabama boys, our opponents on this field of battle, whose memory we honor, this tablet is dedicated, May 3, 1863."

Thus it is, comrades. The final victors are now giving praise to the courage, fortitude, and perseverance of their opponents. In the early part of this battle my comrade, George Stuart, now living near Athens, Ala., who occupied the front rank to the writer, was struck on the head with a Minie ball; and although fired from a gun at short range, his head was so hard that it turned that ball, and I believe that it passed over my shoulder and lodged in my blanket. I heard the ball strike, his head dropped, and I thought George was gone; but not so. He soon raised his left arm and looked back, as if to see what had become of me, and I saw his eyes were bright and clear. I said: "George, you are all right." His hard head had saved him, and probably the writer by the bullet glancing away. I did not know at the time that the ball had entered my knapsack. I presume it was that shot. Thus, owing to his hard head, our Father in heaven kept us both from severe harm; and so it was through all the remaining conflicts of that terrible war and to the present time—the Lord has preserved us.

GENERAL GRANT'S FIRST SERVICE IN THE WAR.

BY T. D. M'GILLICUDDY, POST 12, AKRON, OHIO.

At Galena, Ill., on the 27th of April, 1861, Capt. Augustus L. Chetlain (now General Chetlain, of Chicago, Ill., whom General Grant remembered subsequently when he had an opportunity), organized Company A, 12th Regiment Illinois Infantry. It was his intention to have U. S. Grant as one of his lieutenants, but the men of his company thought otherwise; therefore both were disappointed. The outcome was that Captain Chetlain made Grant his company clerk until the company arrived in Camp Butler, near Springfield.

Captain Chetlain, having a full knowledge of Grant's intrinsic worth and feeling a deep interest in him, was ever on the lookout for some opening for him suited to his education and inclinations. Captain Chetlain, also being a man of commanding appearance and possessed of excellent social qualities, was not long in ingratiating himself with the State authorities. The necessities of the service in those stirring days soon found an opening for a man of Grant's capacity as clerk in the office of adjutant general of the State. His accession to the adjutant general's office provoked no small amount of comment as time went on, on account of the thorough knowledge and perfect work of the new incumbent. The military machinery moved on smoothly until at length a commandant was wanted for Camp Butler. Here Captain Chetlain saw a still better opening for Grant, and was not slow to propose his name to Gov. Richard Yates, who made diligent inquiries in regard to the applicant, and finally called on him at the adjutant general's office and asked him of his experience in the organization of troops. Grant replied in the quiet, unassuming manner so characteristic of him, that had he been educated at West Point at the expense of the government and that he had had some experience in the martial art in the Mexican War, and was now ready and willing to serve his country in any capacity he was qualified to fill.

The volunteer soldier of that day was not prepared to subscribe to a discipline of the regular army; hence the unpopularity of the new commandant. Of the many regiments in camp was that of the 21st Illinois Infantry Volunteers, recruited as it was by a man named Goodee, who expected to be its colonel. Colonel Goodee was reputed to be an English nobleman, but he was a confirmed inebriate. The men of his command were neglected in camp, were in a disorganized condition and on the verge of mutiny, when the State authorities saw the necessity of prompt action to save the command. Governor Yates called to his aid the counsel of John A. Logan, then colonel of the 31st Regiment Illinois Volunteers. A slate was fixed up to make the commandant of the camp U. S. Grant, colonel of the 21st Regiment; but, knowing that an objection would be raised by the men of the regiment owing to Grant's rigid discipline, diplomacy was exercised. A meeting of the members of the regiment was ordered in camp and an urgent request made for a full attendance. Col. John A. Logan opened the meeting with one of his soul-stirring, patriotic speeches, in which he vividly portrayed the transcendent glory of dying for one's country with face to the enemy, of the honor of carrying a crutch and cane or an empty sleeve, thus paving the way for an introduction to the new commander. Governor Yates followed in about the same style, assuring the men of the command that he was about to introduce them to their new commander, whose soldierly record would make them the deadly enemies of treason, and wound up with a grand flourish by introducing as colonel of their regiment Ulysses S. Grant, who was received with rounds of applause.

Colonel Grant immediately called a meeting of the officers of his regiment, mapped out his line of action, and ordered that the muster-in rolls of each company be made at once.

At the time of which I speak I was connected with a command of Missouri State troops, doing duty on the line of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, and the 21st Illinois came as a reinforcement to our command. The commands were associated together for some time, and I became well acquainted with the history of both organizations. Colonel Grant was daily seen attending to the duties of his position until promotion to brigadier general, relieving Gen. B. M. Prentice at Cairo, Ill.

General Grant always insisted on his way of doing things, and at last would not have anything to do with what he did not absolutely control. To show in a slight degree the character of the man, I relate a circumstance that came directly under my observation early in the service: On the 3d of February, 1862, while ascending the Tennessee River to capture Fort Henry, Generals Grant and Lew Wallace were on the same transport with the regiment I was then connected with (50th Illinois). It happened that I had some business with my colonel, and we were in the rear cabin, when General Grant entered. Approaching the colonel, he requested that the latter send out for his major, as he wished to speak with him. I at once offered to call the major, but the General remarked that the orderly could do so. The major made his appearance. The summons was due to the fact that the major had been enjoying a social game of cards with the boys, and Grant observed it, noting also the officer's rank in passing through the cabin. Upon the major's reporting, General Grant addressed him in a quiet, gentlemanly manner, asking him how he expected to command the respect of his subordinates if he did not maintain the dignity of his rank. "Not," said he, "that you may be in any respect their superior, socially or otherwise, but the good of the service requires that officers should maintain a dignified demeanor. And now, sir, should I ever learn of your lowering the standard of your rank by engaging in such practices, I shall immediately recommend your dismissal from the service. You are now, sir, at liberty to retire."

MAJOR GENERAL GEORGIA DIVISION, U. C. V.

John William Clark was born April 26, 1844. He was mustered into the Confederate army August 17, 1861, as a private in Company A, Cobb's Legion, Georgia Cavalry. He was detailed in December, 1861, a courier for Col. Thomas R. R. Cobb, and was promoted on December 1, 1862, first lieutenant and aid-de-camp on General Cobb's staff. General Cobb was killed at Fredericksburg on the 13th, before the commission issued to his aid-de-camp; so Clark returned to his regiment, serving until August, 1864, when he received appointment as first lieutenant and aid-de-camp to Gen. William H. Browne, completing service with him and being paroled in May, 1865. He attended school seven months, then went to work in his father's store, and for many years merchandised. In 1894 President Cleveland sent him to Wyoming to allot land to the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians. Returning to Augusta in the fall of 1897, he went immediately to work with the railroad. In the fall of 1898 the Georgia Chemical Company secured his services, where he stayed until elected sheriff of the county, taking up this duty in 1903. He is now serving his third term. He commanded the Richmond Hussars seventeen years and the 1st Georgia Battalion of Cavalry four years. He is now retired with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Major General Clark is a charter member of the Cavalry Survivors' Association, the first C. S. A. organization after the war. It now takes in infantry and artillery and navy members. General Clark was Camp Commander several years, until promoted to Brigade Commander at the last Reunion, a year ago, and now becomes Commander of the Georgia Division.

GEN. JOHN WILLIAM CLARK.

NORTHERN SIDE AT MURFREESBORO.

BY CAPT. S. F. HORRALL, WASHINGTON, IND.

I now give the promised recollections of the battle of Stone River (Tenn.) or Murfreesboro. I was then ordnance officer and inspector on the staff of Brig. Gen. John Beatty, 14th Corps, Army of the Cumberland.

Early in the day of December 30 we reached the main body of the Federal army confronting the Confederates. For days before the rain was continuous, thus adding to other disagreeable conditions. The firing line of the Confederates was practically straight, covering Murfreesboro and along the banks of Stone River; so our (Federal) line was adjusted to properly confront theirs. Major General McCook held the right and Gen. Tom Crittenden the left of our line.

The forces thus disposed for battle on the evening of the 30th preparatory for next day, the great army slept, to be rudely awakened on the 31st at a little before daylight by a most terrific cannonading and clangor of small arms on the right. Up to that hour it had been a problem as to the Confederate general's intention—that is, as to whether he intended an attack or was waiting to be attacked—but his strategy developed by surprising General McCook at the hour stated.

All day before the attack the Confederates were feeling of our lines; and as our left, extending across Stone River, covered the town, naturally our generals figured that the left, by the Confederate right, would be the point to be attacked, for the right was two or three miles from Murfreesboro, our objective. But the general commanding the Confederate forces reversed the usual order of things by the surprise as far from our objective as could be; and not only surprised McCook's force, but caught ours with reserve reinforcements largely on our left and center. However, quite enough reserve force was hurried to help McCook to hold the Confederates in check until our generals got in "strategy" of war. This was done in haste and by refusing our right and left and forming a "horseshoe" of the line. Here, then, developed General Rosecrans's strategy. To reinforce any part of the line that might be attacked by our force, the Confederates would have—being the outside of the new line formation—to travel any way from one to three miles, while the Federals could meet the same emergency by reserves moving one-fourth of a mile or less, being the inside of the half circle, the Confederates the outside.

By direction of Brig. Gen. John Beatty, this writer fixed the line to receive and repel, if possible, the advancing Confederate line. Returning and reporting to General Beatty, the brigade commander, Major General Rousseau, made the order to General Beatty, "Hold this position till he—freezes over," and dashed off. Now, by mistake, the officer delivering the order to the checking Union forces—viz., General Hazen's Regulars and Colonel Shepherd's Brigades and Beatty's—failed to so notify General Beatty, who kept holding his position for perhaps an hour and a half after; and when he did fall back, it was with comparatively no loss of men, while the other brigades suffered severe loss. In his book of memoranda General Beatty wrote of this and said: "Concluding that hell had about frozen over, I about-faced my brigade."

The first days of the battle we (the Union forces) were whipped. As a strict strategist, General Bragg in the battle of Perryville, Ky., proved the superior of General Buell, and in the outset had outgeneraled Rosecrans at Murfreesboro; but General Rosecrans, who had the honor of winning the first substantial victory for the Federal arms in Virginia, was a strategist too, and by that won at last, after losing nearly thirty-three per cent of his command; for he it written that at one time during the fighting our whole army was surrounded, and the majority of inferior officers, I think, figured only on our surrender finally. Though checked and outgeneraled in the cedar woods south of the railroad, as described, the Confederates, falling back a short distance, defiantly refused to retreat until next day, when, after the massing of an overwhelming force of infantry, some cavalry, and many guns of artillery on our left, the Confederate right was pressed back across Stone River; and if two hours more of daylight had availed, unquestionably the Federal forces would have occupied Murfreesboro that evening. Thus the real problem of battle was solved. Only daylight the next day awaited to realize fully its solution, but at what a cost of life!

If there are living those who acted as rear guard for the Confederate army, they may easily recall what took place on a little knoll just north of the railroad, right center of the line. It was the 42d I. V. V. I. that confronted them. That small force of infantry and a single piece of artillery held our 42d Infantry the night long in check. While on duty next day, after the evacuation of Murfreesboro, this writer, ordnance officer, to gather abandoned arms, etc., rode over the place. The fight was in a night of pitchy darkness, and firing was in a desultory way all along the line, kept up by the Confederates to conceal their preparation for retreat. The "spot" alluded to was sparsely covered with trees, and from both sides these trees were filled with bullets and ramrods of small arms, for both were so excited that the usual order "Aim low" was forgotten and trees were "peppered" fifteen to twenty feet above ground. No more decided stand could have been made by a rear guard. The 42d Indiana as a body, so terrific was the firing, retired; but Lieutenant Colonel Shanklin obeyed orders, held position, and was captured.

Resuming the Federal side of the battle of Murfreesboro, the part in which the 2d Brigade, 1st Division, 14th A. C., exploited, I hope to be entirely accurate and to "render unto Cæsar," etc., without egotism, though the pronoun I appears. In the battle proper the part taken in the fight by this command, as I saw it, follows: At high noon on the 31st of December the brigade, together with Colonel Hazen's Brigade of Regular Troops and Colonel Shepherd's Brigade of East Tennesseans, took position in the cedar woods, several hundred yards south of the railroad. The purpose was to assist General McCook's command in preventing a rapid advance of the Confederates, which if made, as evidently was expected (and alarmingly near successful), meant nothing less than a flank and rear movement by infantry, when the Confederate cavalry, under General Wheeler, would dash up from our rear from Lavergne and compel a surrender. In the cedar woods my brigade fought five hours, being obliged three times to "change front to rear" to avoid the Confederates' flanking movements. At last the order came late in the day to "fall back;" and we did with more or less confusion, under fire yet. General Rosecrans had scarcely completed his new, or "horse-shoe," line formation then, but during the night fixed it, massing thirty pieces of artillery, six- and twelve-pounders, double-shotted with grape and canister.

About ten o'clock on January 1, 1863, the Confederates uncovered from the cedar woods by three distinct lines visible for the charge. Never did troops move or drill more steadily than these men. Our artillery was supported well and amply by infantry, with cavalry on the right flank. When at close artillery range, the order to fire was given. The lanyards of thirty pieces struck and the deadly contents rained into the Confederate ranks, almost entirely decimating or mowing down the advancing line. But another and yet another pressed forward until within short rifle range of our line. Under the smoke and underbrush forty or fifty Confederate privates, throwing down their arms, crawled on hands and knees, surrendering as prisoners of war. By the line officer, to whom the surrender was made, they were turned over to this writer, whose duty as brigade inspector it was to turn them over to the provost marshal. A more forlorn, worn-out, and famished set of men would be hard to find. I said: "Boys, you are worn and hungry?" "Yes, on duty fighting or otherwise twenty-four hours, with little to eat." "Well, you must be fed," I replied. So, marching to commissary headquarters, they were fed. Now comes a little fun I enjoyed greatly.

Provost headquarters lay in the direction of the front center, and there was fighting all along the line. Almost always in closely contested battles there are stragglers, full of pluck, out of range. Passing near a group, a voice rang out tantalizingly: "Hello, Johnny Reb, where are you going?" "Down to the front, where you're afraid to go, d— you," was the reply. "Just right; hit him again," I said, indulging a hearty laugh, in which all the "boys in gray" joined. "He who laughs last laughs best."

My next will be the close of the battle of Murfreesboro.

UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

The concluding exercises of the U. D. C. at Norfolk embodied thanks by a rising vote to Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, of Norfolk, and Mrs. Randolph, of Richmond, for their valuable services in the interest of the organization.

Hearty thanks were also expressed to the Pickett-Buchanan Chapter, the Virginia Division, to Mrs. H. St. George Tucker, Mrs. James Y. Leigh, Mrs. McKenney, and Mrs. Tate for the royal manner in which the Daughters had been entertained during their stay in Norfolk.

The election of officers, in addition to Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone President General, resulted:

Honorary President, Mrs. Sarah Dabney, Eggleston.

First Vice President, Mrs. M. S. Willard, North Carolina.

Second Vice President, Mrs. Pole, Maryland.

Recording Secretary, Mrs. Andrew L. Dowdell, Alabama.

Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. R. C. Cooley, Florida.

Treasurer, Mrs. L. Eustace Williams, Kentucky.

Custodian of Crosses, Mrs. L. H. Raines, Georgia.

Custodian of Flags, Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, Norfolk.

These officers were elected unanimously in each instance.

The choice of the convention for the next meeting place was decided by a vote of eighty-seven to seventy in favor of Atlanta over Houston, Tex.

An important feature of the closing session was the adoption of a resolution to take up as their next work the erection of a monument in Richmond to Gen. Joseph E. Johnston.

The Columbia College scholarship for next year was awarded to South Carolina, but the scholarship in the Teachers' College, of New York, was not awarded.

It was decided that copies of the minutes of the convention should be sent each Chapter President.

The final report on the Jefferson Davis monument in Richmond was made. The remainder of the fund in hand was donated by the convention to a fund now being secured for the erection of a monument at New Orleans in memory of Jefferson Davis.

Announcement was made that the Oklahoma Division would be amalgamated with the Indian Territory Division before the convention at Atlanta next year.

U. D. C. STATE OFFICERS FOR NORTH CAROLINA.—President, Mrs. I. W. Faison, Charlotte; Vice Presidents, Mrs. R. F. Dalton, Greensboro, Mrs. Martin S. Willard, Wilmington, and Mrs. John Phifer Erwin, Morganton; Recording Secretary, Mrs. F. M. Williams, Norton; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Gordon Finger, Charlotte; Treasurer, Miss Alice Nilsen, Greensboro; Registrar, Mrs. Leo Heartt, Raleigh; Historian, Miss Rebecca Cameron, Hillsboro; Assistant Historian, Mrs. W. O. Shannon, Henderson; Recorder Crosses of Honor, Mrs. William H. Overman, Salisbury; Chaplain, Mrs. James G. Kenan, Wallace.

PROCEEDINGS U. D. C. AT NORFOLK.

REPORT OF THE MARYLAND DIVISION, U. D. C., BY MRS.
CORDELIA POWELL ODENHEIMER, PRESIDENT.

The Maryland Division through its various Chapters is pleased to report its steady progress, healthy increase in membership, and liberal dispensing of relief.

The Daughters of the Confederacy in the State of Maryland (Baltimore Chapter, No. 8), of which Mrs. John P. Poe is President, has undertaken no large work during the past year, but has kept its regular work steadily and effectively. It now has seven hundred and forty members, and from this large number various committees accomplish its numerous undertakings. Last fall there was a sale to augment the Charity Fund, which was inadequate to the demands made upon it, and from this sale was realized $499.40. About $300 has been given during the year to needy applicants in the Chapter's midst who have drawn upon it as Southerners.

The Confederate Veterans' Home at Pikesville, under the care of the Association of the Maryland Line, is largely supported by the generous appropriation each year from the Legislature of Maryland; but Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, the first President of the Association, feeling the need of woman's touch and voice, appointed a Board of Lady Visitors, whose duty it is to care for the sick and suffering in the infirmary and to add to the comfort of the inmates of the Home.

Ever since the formation of this board a committee has been appointed each month from the Daughters of the Confederacy in Maryland to visit the Home, and each year six bountiful dinners are provided there—namely, Thanksgiving, Christmas, January 19, February 22, Easter Sunday, and July 4; but the latter dinner was discontinued by the chairman for that month and, at the request of the old men, the amount divided among its Sundays to supply ice cream, cake, and fruit.

In addition, the inmates of the hospital are tenderly cared for and supplied with the delicacies they desire. The cost of this is about $300 a year, not estimating the gifts of the individual members of each monthly committee. On June 3 a fête is held at the Home, which is a great source of pleasure to the old Confederates who are generously cared for at that time. In addition, the hospital is provided with linen from year to year.

Crosses of honor are bestowed upon the veterans January 19 and June 3 with appropriate ceremonies.

The Maryland Room in the Confederate Museum in Richmond is always cared for by the Daughters of Maryland. This year larger contributions were needed, owing to the crowd drawn to Richmond. The amount contributed was $65.

On Memorial Day, June 6, large numbers of Daughters go to Loudoun Park Cemetery to strew flowers on the graves of our dead and join in the services held under the auspices of the Army and Navy of Maryland. The care of the graveyards where rest the Confederate dead ever appeals to the Chapter.

On July 4, 1876, the monument erected by the State of Maryland to the Confederate soldiers who died in the Federal prison at Point Lookout was unveiled. The monument consists of a granite shaft, quarried in Baltimore County, and beneath it repose the remains of 3,004 soldiers of the Confederate armies, representing all the States that composed the Confederacy. The number of soldiers from the different States whose bones repose beneath the monument are: Virginia, 640; North Carolina, 972; South Carolina, 248; Georgia, 249; Alabama, 75; Tennessee, 63; Louisiana, 38; Mississippi, 42; Florida, 31; Kentucky, 18; Texas, 6; Maryland, 6; Arkansas, 4; Missouri, 4; Unknown, 618. Total, 3,004. The committee in charge of the monument and graves accepted an offer recently made by the Daughters of Maryland to have the monument and graves in this cemetery put in perfect order, and Mr. James Hall, of the old committee, was appointed to take charge. He reports that everything is being thoroughly attended to, and by spring will be in order. The cemetery will then be cared for by the Daughters of the Confederacy in Maryland.

The religious services of the centennial of General Lee's birthday were held in old St. Paul's. The large church was crowded and the services were solemn and impressive. In the afternoon the Army and Navy held memorial services in a large theater, Senator John W. Daniel being the orator. The Daughters of Maryland attended in large numbers.

The Annapolis Branch of the Baltimore Chapter, under the active and able Chairman, Mrs. Robert Bowie, never fails to respond to the calls of the Mother Chapter; and though only few in number, has contributed $30 to the different works of the Chapter, besides aiding in various other ways.

During the past year a Board of the Daughters of the Confederacy has taken under its special care the Confederate Women's Home in Baltimore, there having been trouble with the old managers, and the State appropriation withdrawn. This Board has worked most nobly to support the Home. Its members, through their untiring efforts, have realized $1,028 exclusive of donations of provisions, fuel, furniture, and wearing apparel in abundance. All honor should be given those who have made a happy home for the Confederate widows and mothers.

The Harford Chapter, No. 114, with Mrs. E. H. D. Pue President, celebrated the centennial of the birth of Gen. Robert E. Lee by a reception tendered by its President to the members of the Chapter. General Lee's favorite hymns were sung and suitable readings given. Delegates were sent to the Baltimore celebration.

The Chapter contributed $5 to the Arlington Monument Fund, $5 to the Maryland Room in Richmond, and sent flowers to the extent of $10 to the funerals of veterans.

June 3 was celebrated as Memorial Day, and the graves of the Confederate dead scattered throughout Harford County were decorated by delegations from the Chapter.

The fund for the erection of a memorial to the men of Harford who wore the gray grows slowly, but it is hoped next year to add materially to it. A barrel of provisions was sent to the Home for Confederate Women in Baltimore.

The Fitzhugh Lee Chapter, No. 279, Mrs. E. C. McSherry President, has cared for the families of Confederate veterans in destitute circumstances by providing fuel, provisions, medicines, and in extreme cases paying house rent. In several instances a nurse was sent to assist in illness, and in two cases of death the Chapter paid for the last services rendered the dead.

White marble stones have been placed as markers of the Confederate graves which were marked by boards in a church burying ground, and in Mt. Olivet Cemetery the graves of those who died wearing the gray are marked by stones, cared for, and kept by the Chapter. There are many unknown dead in Mt. Olivet, and for them was erected the first Confederate monument to the unknown dead of the Confederacy.

Through the Chapter two little boys, sons of veterans who died in abject poverty, were placed in an industrial school, where they are being educated and trained. Their only relative, an aunt, has been most grateful to the Chapter for the work done in the boys' behalf.

On June 3 every year the Daughters and Veterans, escorted by the High School Cadets, have services in the two cemeteries where the Confederate dead are buried. After the services, each grave is profusely decorated with flowers, and a special committee sees that the graves of veterans and daughters who are buried in private lots in these cemeteries are decorated at the same time. The flowers are sent in such profusion that a large conveyance is required to take them to the cemeteries, and each and every one present loves to strew them on the graves, thinking always of those who would like to do so if they only knew where their loved ones lay.

The Fitzhugh Lee Chapter gives also annually $25 to the Confederate Veterans' Home at Pikesville, and during the past two years has assumed the care of the Robert E. Lee Room at the Home, as those who had taken charge of it were unable to do so longer.

Ten dollars was sent for a flag to the Maryland Room in Richmond and $5 for a strawberry treat to the veterans at the Pikesville Home. The Chapter assumed the expense of removing the Confederate soldier buried in the year 1862 in the church graveyard at Braddock, Md. This graveyard being no longer used, the remains were brought to Frederick and placed with the Confederate dead in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, and the grave of the reinterred body was marked by a marble stone inscribed with the name: "Damascus Wetherly, Sergeant, C. S. A., Homesville, Alder County, Ga." The removal and marking of the grave were most gratefully done by the Fitzhugh Lee Chapter.

The work of Frank A. Bond Chapter, No. 370, Mrs. R. P. Alexander Hammond, President, for the past year has been a noble one—that of assisting in the maintenance of the Confederate Woman's Home in Baltimore. The expenses for each month of the Home are met by a chairman and committee selected from the Board. October fell to the Frank A. Bond Chapter, and at the close of the month it was found no less than $100 had been expended.

Memorial Days have been observed and all expenses incident to the Chapter paid.

The Cecil Chapter, No. 478, Mrs. G. S. Woolley President, though still in its infancy and with comparatively few members, has done good work. It has responded liberally when called upon for aid by its sister Chapters, having during the past year contributed to the Memorial Window in the Maryland Room at the Confederate Museum in Richmond and to a number of monument funds. Regular monthly meetings are held and the birthdays of President Davis and Generals Lee and Jackson celebrated.

NORTH CAROLINA'S REPORT TO THE U. D. C.

BY MRS. J. W. FAISON, OF CHARLOTTE, DIVISION PRESIDENT.

I deem it a great honor and privilege to be the one to extend greetings from the United Daughters of the Confederacy of North Carolina to all our officers, delegates, visiting members, and visitors, and feel that to learn of your work in other States and to know the members thereof personally is a "liberal education."

To-day we, the women of the South, the United Daughters of the Confederacy, meet here to renew our vows of loyalty to the sacred memories of the past and as an organization whose declared purpose is to commemorate the heroic deeds of our dead and hand down true history to our children. The way for us to do is to impress the facts of history upon the minds of our young people, and they can then recognize the errors that are made by Northern historians. Although historical facts are distorted and the truth is not told, we propose to teach our own children of our own Southland the facts about our own war in our own way. For this is the only way we can rescue from infamy the memory of our fallen heroes. Only thus can we blot out the brand of "traitor" from the brow of President Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, and Stonewall Jackson.

In all history never have the women of any defeated people been banded together for the great purpose of proving rightfulness of the cause for which their fathers, husbands, sons, and brothers fought and women endured, and in caring for the wounded and afflicted who survived. In all the histories of other countries there exist no monuments erected by the women to secure the record of the truth in history about a defeated but sacred cause.

Our work is for a grand purpose, grand in its origin, patriotic in its undertakings, and faithful in its ministrations. We intend to make the education of veterans' children our main work the coming year. The Educational Committee of the Western Section of North Carolina have two girls at the State Normal College in Greensboro, and the Stonewall Jackson Chapter, Charlotte, keep a veteran's daughter at the Presbyterian College every year. When one graduates, another is selected to fill her place. Many veterans and widows of veterans are unable to educate their children as they should be, and I know of no greater work that can be done by every single Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy in the United States. Let us do this in connection with our other work, and in the days and years to come we will see the fruit of our good work and feel proud of it.

Three events of great moment to us, the U. D. C.'s, have occurred within the last twelve months: the death of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee, and the unveiling of the monument to our beloved Confederate President, Jefferson Davis. Every Chapter in the State was asked to observe with suitable exercises the centennial anniversary of General Lee's birth, and it was complied with by all.

Our Soldiers' Home is in a fine condition, and we do all we can to make the occupants comfortable, bright, and happy. We have given over six hundred dollars to this cause. The Home is supported by the State. There have been given nine hundred and forty-five crosses of honor by thirty-nine Chapters in the State in the past year, and more could have been bestowed, but could not be gotten from the Custodian.

We have eighty Chapters in the State and over three thousand members and twenty-one Children's Chapters. Six were chartered during the past year, and there would have been more, but our beloved President, Mrs. W. L. Parker, was prevented from further work by the illness of a young daughter, and later her death. She was a faithful and diligent worker, and could have done much good but for this sorrow. I as her successor shall endeavor to keep up the standard of our work.

The following Chapters have been chartered during the past year: Clayton Chapter, Clayton; Emaline J. Pigott Chapter, Morehead City; the Holt-Saunders Chapter, Smithfield; Mary Lee Chapter, Painter, Jackson County; Frank M. Parker Chapter, Enfield. The following Children's Chapters have been organized this year—eight in number: one each at Greensboro, Durham, Tarboro, Wadesboro, Littleton, Salem-Winston, and Albemarle. We have fine reports from most of them; but some of them will not report to us.

The saying that a "land without monuments is a land without memories" is no longer attributable to North Carolina in either sense, and our hearts are gladdened that so many monuments have been built all over the State. The history of how one monument was paid for would be a revelation to most of you and inspire the weakest one among you. The hard work (both physical and brain) and the energy put forth by one woman is marvelous to be told, and to hear her tell it was rich. She is among you to-day, and I might whisper her name to you if you desire to take lessons.

Plans for the proposed monument to Henry L. Wyatt, of North Carolina, the first soldier killed in battle at Bethel, are perfected, and it will soon be erected. A drinking fountain is to be placed on the Capitol Square in Raleigh to his memory.

At our State Convention in Greensboro a month ago we unveiled a portrait of Julian S. Carr, which will be placed in the North Carolina Room in Richmond, Va. He is noted for being the "best" friend of the living veterans. We also have funds on hand for portraits of Gen. Robert Ransom and of Capt. Randolph Thornwell, who made himself famous during the reconstruction of the KKK days.

A movement was inaugurated to erect a monument on the campus of the University at Chapel Hill to the boys who put aside their books and doffed uniforms, shouldered their guns, and went to the front in defense of a cause their fathers knew to be right.

Our State Treasurer reports that we have received $2,293 and paid out over twelve hundred dollars. We have seven hundred dollars on hand at interest for our Memorial Arch at Confederate Cemetery in Raleigh to commemorate the services of one thousand dead soldiers who lie buried there, representing every Southern State; also contributions for Arlington and Wirz monuments, and we have given fifty dollars to Shiloh and intend to give more. These three monuments ought to be erected at once and by the help of all the States.

Our historians have collected valuable papers and do good work for their State. We instructed our Chapters hereafter to send all per capita tax, State and general, to the State Treasurer, and she would forward the general tax to the General Treasurer, thus saving a great deal of trouble.

We are splendidly organized, have had a very prosperous year, and our work is going forward triumphantly. We propose to do our duty (and that duty is a pleasure), and not be laggards in U. D. C. work. History shows that North Carolina stands first in whatever she undertakes. Right here may I digress for a minute and remind you of some facts in history? North Carolina has many historic facts for which she has never been given credit by some. Situated between Virginia on the one hand and South Carolina on the other and always a very modest State, she did not proclaim these facts as the other two States who have made the welkin ring, as it were, with their deeds of valor. For every fact that they can give, we can give one better. The first settlement of America was made in 1785 on Roanoke Island, N. C. The first white child born on American soil was on this island. North Carolina had a "tea party" at Edenton and one at Wilmington some time before the noted one in Boston, Mass., and the participants were not disguised as Indians as they were, but boldly proclaimed that they would not be taxed unjustly and threw the tea overboard. She declared her independence of the British Crown in Charlotte, Mecklenburg County, N. C., May 20, 1775, more than a year before it was declared in Philadelphia, Pa.

But the grandest of all, North Carolina was first at Bethel, farthest at Chickamauga and Gettysburg, and last at Appomattox. See what our own State of North Carolina did during the war. Out of a voting population of 115,000, we sent 125,000 men to the field, more than one-fifth of the men furnished by the Southern States. It was in the hour of the last march of our troops that General Lee said: "God bless North Carolina."

In the late Cuban war the first man killed in the army was Lieut. William Shipp, of Charlotte, N. C.; in the navy the first man killed was Worth Bagley, of Raleigh, N. C. And North Carolina troops placed the first American flag on Moro Castle, Cuba.

Arlington Cemetery, as we now know it, was formerly established in May, 1864, and it is stated that the first interment therein was that of George L. Rhineheart, a Confederate soldier of the 26th and 23d North Carolina Infantry, consolidated.

North Carolina was the first State to break ground for a building at Jamestown Exposition, and had the biggest day of any State during the whole time of the Exposition; also the first State to indorse the building of Beauvoir, the U. D. C. Building of Virginia. During the summer before this Mrs. Waike, of Virginia, was visiting at Morehead City, N. C., and seventeen Chapters promised their support and gave contributions for this building. North Carolina's Governor, R. B. Glenn, and Judge Long have the distinction of being the first to discuss the much-mooted question, the rate law, and declaring again her State rights.

With such a glorious past and grand history we cannot go backward, but must push forward; and as old David Crockett said, "After you get there, keep on going." So, standing here to-day, I realize what North Carolina has done, and promise to endeavor to keep her up to the standard in our work. This work of the Confederacy is what we do with all our hearts "down home" in the Old North State.

UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

THE OBJECT AND MISSION OF THE ORGANIZATION.

BY MRS. JAMES B. GANTT, PRESIDENT MISSOURI DIVISION.

In a State like Missouri, where sentiment is so divided, the question has often been asked: "What is the object and mission of the organization known as the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and what is the meaning of these conventions?" If you will look on the first page of the Division programme, you will find these words: "The objects of the Missouri Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, are to honor the memory of those who served and those who fell in the service of the Confederate States, to protect historic places of the Confederacy, to collect and preserve the material for a truthful history of the war, to aid in erecting monuments to the heroes of the Confederacy, to fulfill the duties of grateful kindness toward the survivors of the war and those dependent upon them, and to cherish the ties of friendship which these sacred principles impose upon the members of this association."

The Constitution of the organization, United Daughters of the Confederacy, declares more briefly the objects of this association to be historical, educational, memorial, benevolent, and social. It has for its motto the beautiful sentiment: "Love makes memory eternal." Its emblem is a cotton boll against a five-pointed star, with the significant words, "Live, dare, think, pray, love," inscribed on the five points of the star. This organization, which is composed of between forty-five thousand and fifty thousand of the best women of our land, is only thirteen years old. Its birthplace is the good old State of Tennessee, at Nashville, in the year 1894. It now embraces State Divisions in Alabama, Arkansas, California, District of Columbia, Georgia, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Maryland, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and has Chapters in Mexico City, Nebraska, Oregon, Utah, Pennsylvania, the State of Washington, and New York.

The Missouri Division, to which we belong and which is represented by this Convention, consists of thirty-three Chapters, with a membership of over fifteen hundred. Our State motto is Kipling's inspiring words:

"Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Love, memory, and sentiment is our "stock in trade," but in this practical, wealth-seeking world it is refreshing to find it. We believe in these sweet thoughts of the poet-priest:

"A land without memories is a land without liberty."

"Give us a land that hath legends and lays,
That tells of the memories of long-vanished days,
For the dust of the past some hearts higher prize
Than the stars that flash out from the future's bright skies."

No body of women ever had a more sacred trust than is imposed upon us who represent the United Daughters of the Confederacy. With every passing year we tell again and again the story of the Confederate soldier, and the world's admiration for him grows stronger and stronger everywhere. Even our Northern brothers are glad to claim the record he made from Sumter to Appomattox, and no future historian will ever attempt to write our nation's history without giving full credit to the men who wore the gray, who suffered and died for Dixie.

We believe the collecting, compiling, and preserving in enduring form of true and impartial Confederate history to be a sacred duty we owe to our forefathers, ourselves, and our posterity, and to this end we are willing—yes, eager—to give the best of our lives to the accomplishment of this grateful task. Our organization is unique in the history of the world.

It is easy to champion a cause when success has placed upon its brow the laurel crown of victory. But where in all the history of the world, save among the followers of the Confederacy, do we find intelligent, enthusiastic men and women giving their time, talents, money, and heart's affections to an issue that is lost? Some one has said: "It is true, our fathers fought in defense of a cause that did not succeed, but they did not fight in vain. They struggled to establish a principle which they believed the Constitution of the United States recognized, and during the four stormy years that followed the shifting fortunes of that cause they not only proved their loyalty and devotion to it, but by their splendid valor and undaunted courage filled the world with the glory of their achievements." And these principles will live in the hearts of their descendants, and their deeds of heroism will be told in "song and story," and their flag, the stars and bars, will be kept in loving remembrance, "though its folds are in the dust."

These same sons and daughters are beginning to recognize that the time has come when a truthful and just record of the deeds of their fathers shall go upon the pages of history for future generations to read, admire, and if necessary emulate their patriotic example. They intend to see that their children shall no longer be taught that R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, and Jefferson Davis were traitors to their country. On the other hand, they will teach them that these men and all good, true Confederate soldiers fought for their homes, their fire-sides, and for a principle they knew to be right and just against most fearful odds. The generations to come will be constrained to admire the bravery of such heroes, honor their characters as unimpeachable citizens, and respect their military genius.

We insist that pride of ancestry is one of the strongest bulwarks of human safety, and any one who can show an authentic certificate that his or her father was a good Confederate soldier has a heritage worth more than stocks and bonds and more precious than silver or gold. Why should we not glory in the achievements of our Confederate fathers? Napoleon was not a greater military genius than Stonewall Jackson; Washington was not the peer of Robert E. Lee either in Christian citizenship or as a great leader. The Frenchman is proud of Napoleon; we are proud of both Washington and Lee. Every true American reverences the "Father of his Country" and the principle of independence he represented. Why should we not be equally proud of Robert E. Lee, the peerless leader of the Confederate armies?

In the seventeenth century Oliver Cromwell, the great Lord Protector of England, was called a traitor because he had the courage to oppose the oppressions of King Charles and lead in what was termed an insurrection against his crown. If Oliver Cromwell was a traitor, then Washington, John Hampden, William of Orange, Robert E. Lee, and Jefferson Davis were traitors; for did not each of these men oppose oppression and fight against the powers that be? After the lapse of almost three centuries, Cromwell, who was called "the traitor, the usurper, the execrable murderer of the martyred Charles," was honored with a statue which Charles Francis Adams described as massive in size, rugged in feature, characteristic in attitude, standing to-day defiantly in the yard of that same Westminster Hall from a pole on the top of which twelve score years before the flesh crumbled from his skull. History repeats itself.

Over forty years ago Jefferson Davis was denounced as a traitor to his country; now the same country stands admiringly by and allows the United Daughters of the Confederacy to erect a magnificent monument, which will last for all time, testifying to the honor and righteousness of the President of the Southern Confederacy. On the 3d of June last the ends of the earth met at Richmond and did honor to his memory by unveiling this monument. It is said that one hundred and twenty-five thousand persons were present.

Those of us who are Colonial Dames point with pride to Edwin Sandes, the first Puritan and author of the charter for the Mayflower, and gallant old Andrew Lewis, the Indian fighter, whose stalwart form in buckskin stands in bronze around the equestrian statue of Washington in the historic capitol grounds at Richmond, Va. In the same grounds, besides such men as Washington, Patrick Henry, John Marshall, and Andrew Lewis, stands a splendid statue of Stonewall Jackson.

The organization of the United Daughters of the Confederacy is not only unique, owing to the fact that we champion a defeated though glorious cause, but for another reason; we are the only body of intelligent, patriotic, well-born women year after year giving our time, talents, and means to a benevolent cause absolutely free, without remuneration or the hope of compensation of any kind save that which comes from a consciousness of a "labor of love." In our case it will not be "love's labor lost," for in almost every city throughout the South we see the fruits of our toil in the splendid shafts of marble, granite, and bronze which we have built, lifting their heads heavenward, telling the story of the Confederate soldier, and showing to the world the love we, their descendants, bear our departed heroes. And not only monuments for the dead have we erected, but through our efforts homes are provided for the unfortunate living Confederate soldier, where he and his good wife, if perchance she is left to him, may walk side by side and in their old age "rest under the shade of the trees" in peace, honor, and plenty.

We have provided, and are still providing, schools for the education of his children where they may be uplifted from the poverty of their environments and placed in the way of good citizenship, respectability, and success—equipped for the battle of life.

No needy Confederate soldier, he his station in life what it may, ever passes our door empty-handed. We care for him in life, and in death lay him tenderly away, marking his grave with a modest stone bearing his name, date of his birth and death, adding that long ago in the past he shouldered his musket and went forth not as a rebel against his country, but to defend his State's rights and his home. For two years victory crowned his efforts; then came Vicksburg, Gettysburg, and Appomattox, and the banner of the Confederacy fell before an innumerable foe. We will teach his children and have them teach their children and their children tell it to another generation that, though the banner of our fathers is furled never to kiss the breeze again, we their daughters cherish it for the sacred memories which cluster around it, for the glorious principles of right and liberty it represented, for the courage and patriotism of those who fought and died for it.

"Our brightest smiles are for the true and brave;

Our tears are for those who fill a soldier's grave."

For this reason the Daughters of the Confederacy exist, and it is for this that "love makes memory eternal."

While we cherish these sacred memories, we yield to no one in loyalty to our united country. That its peace may never again be disturbed by cruel warfare is the earnest wish of every true daughter of the Confederacy.

UNION OFFICER IN JUSTICE FOR MR. DAVIS.

BY COL. JOHN B. BROWNLOW, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

In the interest of that "square deal" which President Roosevelt has so volubly advocated with tongue and pen, but which he has done so little to promote by his acts, I wish to say a good word for the President. When a young man of twenty-eight he wrote a book in which in substance he described Andrew Jackson as about the most unworthy man who had ever occupied the presidential office. According to Historian Roosevelt, the occupancy of the White House by such a man as the "hero of New Orleans" was a disgrace to the American government. That I do not state this too strongly, I could prove by such copious extracts from his "Life of Thomas H. Benton" that it would require more of your space to insert than I could ask you to grant me. But I gladly acknowledge that in his speech at Nashville on Jackson Mr. Roosevelt made the amende honorable. He told the truth about our great Tennessean as he had learned it since he wrote that book, twenty-two years ago, when he was in the roasting ear age of his life, and for so doing he has elevated himself in the estimation of Tennesseans. His last words on Andrew Jackson have been worthy of the great office he holds.

Many years ago, when Mr. Roosevelt was still a young man, he wrote for a Northern magazine an article on Jefferson Davis, in which he charged that Mr. Davis in 1861 had advocated the repudiation of Mississippi's State debt, and that not only was he a repudiator of public debts but that he had repudiated his private debts. In other words, that Jefferson Davis was dishonest in his private business life. When this article appeared, Mr. Davis wrote Mr. Roosevelt a polite letter, telling him that he had done him injustice, that he had never approved of the repudiation by Mississippi of its debt, and that never before had any one charged that he had repudiated or sought to repudiate or failed to pay his private debts, and he concluded his letter by respectfully requesting Mr. Roosevelt to give his authority for the charges he had made. He naturally supposed that Mr. Roosevelt, whose father had been his friend, would gladly make the correction when furnished with the facts, which Mr. Davis offered to do. He was not willing to believe that the son of an old friend and the nephew of Captain Bulloch, a loyal Confederate soldier and a devoted personal friend of his, would willingly asperse his character or hesitate to do him justice when enlightened as to the truth. Instead of cheerfully complying with this reasonable request, Mr. Roosevelt had his secretary write for him the insulting response: "Mr. Theodore Roosevelt declines to have any correspondence with Mr. Jefferson Davis."

I will here add that within a few years after the close of the Civil War, when all manner of lies were published about Mr. Davis—such, for example, that "when captured he was dressed in female attire"—it was published in a Northern newspaper or magazine that he had advocated the repudiation of his State's debt in 1850-51. Promptly Mr. Davis replied through the North American Review that the charge that he had ever favored the repudiation of his State's debt was false, and that he challenged proof to the contrary. This put a quietus on the charge.

Whatever Mr. Davis's faults, the greed for money was not among them, nor was personal dishonesty a trait of his character. His reputation for personal integrity was unblemished. Prior to the Civil War, though not rich, like the thrifty New York Roosevelts, he was in comfortable financial circumstances; and being a man of an unostentatious and economical manner of living and of a high sense of honor, neither necessity nor inclination prompted him to swindle his creditors.

"Who steals my purse, steals trash, 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name

Robs me of that which not enriches him

And makes me poor indeed."

For many years after the close of the Civil War I spent every winter in Washington, where I personally met Sumner, Wade, Chandler, Cameron, Chase, Stevens, and other Republicans who were contemporaries of Davis and had served with him in both the Senate and House. I heard them discuss his character. They disliked him as a politician, considered him as the chief of political sinners, but said not a word in derogation of his private character or personal integrity.

After the Civil War, smarting under the most severe criticisms on his own character and on his official acts while he commanded at New Orleans by the newspapers and people of the South, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler made a speech in Congress in which he said that the extreme penalties of confiscation of property and death should have been visited upon Mr. Davis and other leaders because they were leaders of secession. Hon. Samuel S. Cox in reply twitted the doughty general, who never won a battle, with having voted in the Democratic National Convention at Charleston in 1860 for Jefferson Davis fifty-seven times as a presidential candidate. I asked Butler why he had so ardently supported Davis and if he was not embarrassed by what Cox had said. Of course it was a foolish question for me to ask Butler as if anything could embarrass him, but I did. He replied: "No, sir; I am not embarrassed; I am proud of having voted as I did. Subsequent events have vindicated my judgment. I believe that Mr. Davis would be the strongest, most available candidate the Democratic party could run; and if nominated, he would defeat the Republican candidate. He could unite the democracy North and South. I knew if Mr. Lincoln were elected we would have secession and war, and that I wished to avoid. That he was stronger in the South than anybody else was later shown by his election as chief of the Confederacy. His irreproachable private life, his unblemished character for personal integrity, and his brilliant record as a soldier would have made him a strong candidate in the North." Continuing, Mr. Butler said: "While Secretary of War, between 1853 and 1857, Mr. Davis made a tour of New England, speaking eloquently for the preservation of the Union and the Constitution and receiving everywhere enthusiastic ovations."

As an illustration of Davis's high sense of honor, Butler related to me the following: "Massachusetts had a claim for several hundred thousand dollars against the United States government which was nearly as old as the government itself; that for more than a generation Congress had refused to pay it because of the scarcity of money in the treasury, and after that had refused because of the age of the claim. Finally when it was referred to a committee in the United States Senate, of which Mr. Davis was chairman, the latter made a thorough investigation and reported a bill and made a speech which forced the Senate to pass it. Mr. Davis insisted that the claim was just, and he said that no lapse of time should be made a bar to the payment by the government of a just claim, as no honorable man would seek to avoid the payment of a private debt by pleading the statute of limitations. "Such," added General Butler, "was the character of Jefferson Davis for integrity."

While recently in Mississippi Mr. Roosevelt favorably mentioned Mr. Davis for his gallantry at Buena Vista. It did not need Mr. Roosevelt's testimony to establish the intrepid courage and brilliant generalship of Jefferson Davis on that historic field. Gen. Zachary Taylor, commander in chief, and every other officer and soldier in that battle freely acknowledged that Davis as colonel of the 1st Mississippi Rifles did more to win that battle, which made Taylor President of the United States, than did any other officer. And when the conqueror of Napoleon, the Duke of Wellington, read how four thousand volunteers and five hundred regulars had routed at Buena Vista an army of twenty-two thousand well-armed and drilled men under experienced officers, he said: "It was one of the most wonderful victories in all history."

I advised Mr. Roosevelt to make the amende honorable nearly three years ago, when my attention was first called to the matter. This is what General Jackson and General Grant would have done, hard fighters and stubborn men as they were. The first officer to scale the Indian fortifications at the battle of the Horse Shoe was Col. William King, of Sullivan County, Tenn. In his official report of the battle General Jackson did not do full justice to Colonel King. The latter, a hot-headed and intrepidly brave man, challenged Jackson to a duel because he had not done his regiment and himself justice. "Old Hickory" replied that he would not accept the challenge. He said he thought his courage was sufficiently established to make it unnecessary that he should fight a duel when there was no necessity for it, and he knew Colonel King's was. He admitted that in the pressure of business he had not done justice to Colonel King and his regiment, but said that it was an inadvertence, and that he would remedy the omission in a subsequent report; and he did. And many years thereafter, when President, he magnanimously appointed Colonel King Governor of the territory of Florida.

General Grant while President decided adversely to the petition of Gen. Fitz John Porter for restoration to the regular army, from which he had been cashiered during the Civil War by a court-martial influenced by partisan considerations. Subsequently he frankly acknowledged that he had erred from lack of information, and on his earnest recommendation Congress passed a bill restoring General Porter to the army.

Mr. Roosevelt makes the mistake of supposing that the people of the United States will place a lower estimate on him if he frankly acknowledged that he had erred. On the contrary, the people know that he is not infallible; and if he would acknowledge in a manly way where he has done palpable injustice, they would have more respect both for his judgment and honesty.

Mr. Davis wrote to Roosevelt proposing to furnish data which would enlighten the son of his old friend and the nephew of Captain Bulloch, also his personal friend and who was a loyal Confederate official in the sixties, and he was evidently disappointed by the result.

In a personal letter Colonel Brownlow says in regard to the inconsistencies in Butler's conduct:

"Butler, while advocating executing Confederate leaders, was 'playing to the galleries,' and was competing with Thaddeus Stevens for the leadership of the Radical wing of the Republican party. But he was a leader in Congress, and was chairman of one of the most important committees of the House of Representatives—the Judiciary Committee. He was also the leader in the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, and of the seven managers of impeachment was regarded as the dominating and ablest figure.

"When such a man should unflinchingly bear testimony to the purity of the private life and lofty personal integrity of Jefferson Davis, it should make Mr. Roosevelt's cheeks blush with shame that he should have so aspersed his character without the manliness to have made the amende honorable when enlightened as to the facts.

"Of course nobody of Confederate nor of Federal interpretation of the Constitution adopted by our fathers in 1789 cares a bawbee what Ben Butler's interpretation of that sacred instrument should have been. Those of Confederate education adopted the construction of Presidents Jefferson and Madison and Mr. Calhoun; those of my education, that of Alexander Hamilton, Chief Justice Marshall, Daniel Webster, and Henry Clay.

"The question Mr. Roosevelt raised was not one of constitutional construction, but of Jefferson Davis's personal integrity, and he should be ashamed of himself that he, the self-elected champion of a 'square deal,' was too narrow-minded to do that justice which even Butler freely did."

NERVE OF A CAMP CHASE PRISONER.

In an account of how the released prisoners of Camp Chase got home, Mr. James A. Jones, who served in the same company (B, 41st Tennessee Regiment) with the editor of the VETERAN, writes of his experiences and what he accomplished in getting transportation for himself and fellow-prisoners. They had walked from Camp Chase into Columbus.

"Many of the boys who had outwalked me because of my lame leg were at the railway station. They were lying about the depot anxious to get transportation home, but they had no money. I knew nothing of their efforts and failures; so I went to the ticket agent, who in a gruff manner ordered me away, he having a guard. One of our company, James Sanders, asked what I was going to do. I replied that I was 'going to see the Governor.' He said: 'They will kill you.' I responded: 'I had as soon be shot as to freeze to death.' He went with me to the Governor; and when we reached the gate of the capitol, the guard asked me what I wanted, and I replied that I wished to see the Governor. He pointed toward the building, and we went on to the door. The inside sentinel, after about the same conversation, bade me walk in. I walked forward and approached the Governor, who spoke in a kind manner and asked what we wished. I told him we were prisoners released and, having no money, desired transportation home. He said: 'O, pshaw! you boys must go home.' I requested him to give us an instrument in writing to the railroad agent granting free passage home, which he did. He spoke most kindly. He asked how many there were of us, and he gave free transportation for all.

"Imagine my feelings at this juncture, having just been released from prison after being away from home four years, wounded and cold, walking into the capital city of Ohio and being treated so kindly by a man whom we all looked upon as our enemy. We returned to the depot, and I handed the agent the order as impudently as he had driven me away. He asked me how many men I had. I told him fifteen hundred. Directions were given them to get on the train. I woke many of them by kicking them on the bottom of the feet. After we were all on board, I hobbled to a seat in a coach filled with both Northern and Southern men. I was seated near the door with my blanket beside me. A Federal colonel, coming in, shared my seat. He looked at me and said: 'It seems that you are not one of us.' 'No; and it seems that you are not one of us,' I replied. He asked my command, and I told him my regiment, adding, 'Cheatham's Division, Hardee's Corps.' Then he said (he spoke aloud), 'Boys, here is one of these fellows you said you would remember,' when I said, 'You see we are all unarmed; but if you will give us an even show, we will swap out with you.' He replied: 'You fail to understand me. Do you remember capturing a regiment at Ringgold, Ga., and that the men ate and slept with you for two weeks?' I answered: 'Yes.' He said: 'What you eat and drink from here home shall cost you nothing.'

"We rode together to Cincinnati, and there a table was prepared for a regiment that was mustered out of service, and I ate with the boys of that regiment. Just think of a poor Rebel's stomach that had shrunk to the size of a walnut allowed to feast until it was made sick. Leaving them at Louisville, Ky., I made my way home to Bedford County, Tenn., where I met friends who did not know me. That Kentucky colonel gave me his address and five dollars and requested me to write to him, but my clothes were burned up by an old negro woman and the address was lost. If that Kentucky colonel is yet living, I should be glad to hear from him and to send him the five dollars with interest."

MEMORABLE EVENT IN A RICHMOND CHURCH.

John G. Postell, Adjutant of the U. C. V. Camp at Macon, Ga., reports a pathetic circumstance connected with the Richmond Reunion. He prefaces it with reference to the unstinted hospitality of the people of Richmond, and tells of an eloquent sermon by "the son of a veteran from Texas:"

"His eloquence was of the kind that St. Paul describes—the eloquence of love. His language was simple. A little child could understand and be charmed by his words. At the conclusion of the service a gentleman went forward from the middle of the church, holding in his hand a piece of yellow paper. The preacher advanced and met him, a few whispered words, and the minister read from the aged wife of a veteran: 'Come home at once; your house burned down; everything lost.' The minister paused for a moment, looking over the congregation. Then he said: 'Brethren, this man is in this congregation. He is a veteran. My friend who handed me this paper vouches for him. I know my people. A veteran has lost his all; I will simply ask the collectors to pass the baskets through the congregation. Brother Cunningham will please come forward and sing for us while the congregation remains seated.' Frank Cunningham advanced to the end of the piano, and a young lady sat before it. Did you ever hear Captain Frank Cunningham sing? If so, you can understand and appreciate what followed. He sang:

'Oft in the stilly night,
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Fond memory brings the light
Of other days around me,' etc.

"There were few dry eyes in that congregation. The collectors returned to the chancel with well-filled baskets. In the middle of the church an old war-beaten hero arose to his feet. He seemed to try to say something, but could not; he sank back to the pew. His face spoke more than words could have done. The congregation was dismissed, and the old soldiers took with them a souvenir that will abide. Many of them, I doubt not, joined the writer in a heartfelt 'God bless the people of Richmond!'"

FIRST SUBMARINE BOAT IN ACTUAL WARFARE.

BY CHARLES DORAN.

The first submarine boat to engage in actual warfare was the invention of a Confederate naval constructor of Charleston, S. C., in 1864. She was a cigar-shaped vessel about twenty feet long, having a beam of eight feet, and was propelled by hand. She was called the David, by which name all such type of craft afterwards became known, and was built of boiler iron. Her crew numbered nine men—one steersman and eight men to work her propeller.

The boat was not, however, entirely submerged. A foot of her hull projected above the water, through which air and light were admitted to her interior. She was a frail craft, and built for service in the inland waters of the Carolinas.

The David made her first appearance in Charleston Harbor, and was one of a number of submarine boats to be built by the Confederates. In the dead of a dark and calm night she made her first and only attack upon a vessel of the Federal navy. She was towed to within a hundred yards of the Union ship of war Housatonic, stationed near the entrance to the harbor, and engaged at the time on blockade duty, when a boom eighteen feet long was fastened to her bows with a torpedo on the end of it, and she was run up against the enemy's sides. She succeeded in sinking the Housatonic, but was also sunk by the explosion of her own torpedo, her entire crew losing their lives by being suffocated or drowned.

Other attempts to sink the Yankee ships of war were made by like daring little crafts, one of them being even venturesome enough to attack a ship of the blockading fleet stationed two miles out at sea off the coast of Georgia. Her captain actually got alongside of the enemy, but unfortunately was unable to discharge his torpedo before his presence was discovered.

The lifetime of the Confederate submarines was very short and usually disastrous to themselves, the sinking of the Housatonic being the only case in which one of them inflicted any serious damage to the ships of the enemy; but it is safe to say that the dread of an unexpected encounter with one of these strange little fellows in the black of the night made many a Yankee tar very watchful when his ship was in the quiet and calm waters of the Carolinas, or even a Gulf State, whither some of them had been sent by the Confederate Navy Department at Richmond.

"CAPTAIN" SALLY TOMPKINS.

Miss Sally Louisa Tompkins, of Mathews County, Va., a daughter of Col. Christopher Tompkins (deceased) and Maria Booth Patterson, enjoys the distinction of being the only woman who was an "officer in the Confederate States army." During the four fiery years of Southern trial this pure, saintly, and heroic young patriot displayed throughout as undaunted heroism, as devoted zeal, as steadfast loyalty in behalf of the storm-cradled nation that sleeps as the world's civilization can boast. In recognition of her inestimable service rendered the sick and wounded of the South, for whose benefit she exhausted her once munificent patrimony, in the year 1863 she was regularly commissioned a captain of cavalry in the Confederate army. Verily there were many who called her blessed.

Immediately after the first battle of Manassas the Confederate government called upon the citizens of Richmond, Va., to care for the sick and wounded returning from that memorable engagement. And on July 31, 1861, just ten days succeeding that battle, Miss Tompkins, entirely at her own expense, opened for their benefit (corner of Main and Third Streets) the "Robertson Hospital," which continued uninterruptedly its mission of mercy until July 13, 1865. It was the only private hospital that survived the conflict there. During that time 1,390 of the sons of Dixie's land were tenderly nursed and cared for. At one time an order was issued for the closing of all private hospitals and the removal of all the soldiers to public hospitals, the intent of the Confederate government being to reduce the number of hospitals and correspondingly increase their efficiency. Indeed, it was feared that some hospitals were harboring men more battle-scarred than battle-scarred. Before the order could be executed, however, even while ambulances were in waiting at the door, "Captain Sally" strenuously insisted that the register of her hospital should first be exhibited before President Davis, wherein were accurately shown the number of patients received, the death rate (miraculously low), and the phenomenally large percentage of those returned to duty. These facts induced President Davis to revoke the order, in so far as it applied to the "Robertson Hospital."

For their long-continued, self-sacrificing assistance in her hospital work "Captain Sally" was especially indebted to Mesdames Elizabeth Semmes, James Alfred Jones, Mary Randolph Page, Ellen Tompkins Bowen, William Grant, John Peyton McGuire, and Misses Randolph Tabb, Elizabeth Davenport, Rebecca Churchill Jones, and Augusta Tabb. Mrs. Dr. John Spotswood Welford loaned her an efficient servant, "Sally," who acted as hospital cook, and Benjamin Ficklen, Esq., and Captain Snaden, who acted as blockade runners, furnished innumerable supplies of value, including chests of tea, sacks of coffee, and money. Attached to the hospital were four slaves belonging to "Captain Sally:" Betsey Curtis and Betsey Ashberry (known by the soldiers to whom they tenderly ministered as "Sad Betsey" and "Glad Betsey," respectively) and Peter Smith and Churchill Smith. Peter Smith finally ran off. Upon his return, after the close of hostilities, he was profuse in his apologies to Miss Sally, assuring her that his sole reason for leaving was that he knew the slaves would be set free and he didn't want her to lose him.

Among the soldiers desperately wounded but who eventually recovered was one from North Carolina, who, with his eight brothers, had enlisted at the beginning of the conflict; seven of those had already nobly yielded up their bodies to their country, their souls to their God. A purse was quickly made up and the aged mother sent for to come and see her suffering boy. On arriving she calmly yet proudly declared that had she nine other sons she would gladly also give them up to battle for the cause. On one occasion two North Carolinians occupied the same ward, each ill with typhoid fever. In his delirium one struck the nurse as she attempted to administer his medicine, whereupon the other sprang from his cot, declaring with true Southern gallantry: "No man shall ever strike a woman in my presence." * * *

It has well been said that if we seek a lofty ideal and a noble model on which to shape a well-rounded and perfect womanhood, combining the pure patriotism, the rugged virtues, the winning modesty, and the tender graces of Spartan mother, Roman dame, and Carthaginian maid, we have but to take a retrospective glance down the corridors of memory for about four decades to find it in that heroic sisterhood of martyrs and patriots, the women of the Confederacy.

"We should love to teach our children
Of our heroes who are dead,
Of the battle scars they carried,
Marching to a soldier's tread.

Of their loyal hearts so tender,
All aglow in Truth's array,
And the many recollections
Of the boys who wore the Gray.

And so long as Time speeds onward
And there is a heaven of love
God shall watch our silent sentinels
Sleeping from the world above.

And he'll guard the sacred memory
Of the old Confederate Gray
Throughout Time's eternal pages
When the last one's passed away."

RAILROAD BUILDS A SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company has erected a fine tall shaft on the battlefield of Murfreesboro. It is some twenty-five feet high with a broad, splendid base, and there is the following inscription upon it: "On January 2, 1863, at 3 P.M., there were stationed on this hill fifty-eight cannon, commanding the field across the river; and as the Confederates advanced over the field, the shot and shell from these guns killed and wounded 1,800 in less than one hour."

This is where so great havoc was made in the ranks of the

COL. W. D. PICKETT WITH FRIENDS AT THE MONUMENT.
(The party guests of Maj. E. C. Lewis, of Nashville.)

Kentuckians under Breckinridge. Herein is proof that one corporation is not "soulless."

A modest inscription on a lower base states: "Shops of the N., C. & St. L. Railway, July, 1906."

BRECKINRIDGE'S LOSSES AT MURFREESBORO.

Hon. C. R. Breckinridge, of Fort Smith, Ark., writes a personal letter to Mr. T. S. Weaver, of Nashville, in regard to the heavy losses of his father's Kentucky command at Murfreesboro. This was sent in response to the courtesy of Mr. Weaver, who sent Col. W. D. Pickett's account of the battle of Murfreesboro in the Nashville American to his classmate and friend. Mr. Breckinridge was a private—a courier at his father's headquarters. He was later Minister to Russia under President Cleveland. Colonel Pickett's letter is to appear later in the VETERAN. Mr. Breckinridge writes:

"I thank you very much for the interesting article about the Friday evening fight of my father's division at Murfreesboro. I remember Colonel Pickett, the author, and am glad to know that he is still alive. We had 4,500 muskets in that fight, and we lost 1,763 men shot in about twenty minutes. During that time we took the position, and then abandoned it, as it was found to be utterly untenable, it being commanded by a higher position some three or four hundred yards off, on which the enemy had fifty-eight guns and a very heavy force, far too great for our small force and eighteen guns to contend with. It was an ill-advised charge, ordered without consultation with the general in front of the position, and indeed despite his respectful but earnest protest. The position was good for defense against assault from our side. It was defended by about 7,500 men. But the point was that even if we took it, as we did, it was useless, for it could not possibly be held. The enemy's guns raked it like a razor; and had our men delayed only a short time longer, they would have been utterly annihilated. It was not necessary for the enemy to charge us to make us give it up. It was impossible to stay on the ground. The men, finding they were in a vortex of fire, that they had captured a red-hot iron, threw down what they had taken, and as quickly as possible returned to the point from which they had started, and there they promptly re-formed into line. The artillery promptly took position and opened fire upon the position we had abandoned, and the enemy did not attempt an advance."

FORREST'S MEN CAPTURED AT PARKER'S CROSSROADS.—Hon. N. N. Cox, of Franklin, Tenn., who represented his district in Congress, writes as follows: "In the battle of Parker's Crossroads a number of General Forrest's men were captured—J. P. Strange, Forrest's adjutant general, Gen. R. P. Neely, of Bolivar, and myself. After moving us to several places, we eventually reached Cairo, Ill. While there about two o'clock in the afternoon a detachment of Federal soldiers with fixed bayonets came into camp and called out five of us. General Strange and myself were in the number. I think General Neely was also called out. We had seen a newspaper threatening to retaliate on some of General Forrest's men for something he was charged with having done. We were marched to a horrid dungeon, or jail, in the town of Cairo, and locked in a loathsome, filthy cell. No explanations were given or a word said that furnished us any information as to what it meant. We gathered around a grate in the wall to get air and discussed conditions. You can do your own thinking under such circumstances. We concluded our end was near, and resolved to meet it as soldiers. Late in the evening the dungeon was opened, and we were marched out in the direction of the town. We supposed a court-martial would soon wind up the business. Our surprise was great and most agreeable when we reached a steamboat loaded with our men. We were placed on a boat and left there. General Strange was carried to Alton, and I, after two or more escapes, reached Camp Chase. I would like to hear from any survivors and exactly who made up our squad."

THE SONG OF FORREST'S MEN.

BY CAPT. JAMES M. M'CANN (A. N. VA.), BRIDGEPORT, W. VA.

Hurrah for the carbines! and ho for the Colt!

We have thrown all our sabers away!

And we rush to the fight with hearts that are light.

For old Forrest leads us to-day.

And he rides to the front on his good bay mare

(I pity the man that would lag);

Now she is down, but he is up with a frown—

A shout on his lips for our flag!

Hurrah for the saddle! and ho for the Colt!

Here is to our sweethearts at home!

We are off on a raid, but are never afraid,

In whatever land we may roam.

Hurrah for the bugle! and ho for the Colt!

We are off to-day through the rain;

We are after old Streit, and we must not wait,

Though the parting is full of pain;

For old Forrest, sitting on his good black horse,

Is waving his saber on high;

And let the sunbeams flash or the thunder crash,

We will follow it or we'll die!

GENERAL OFFICERS IN THE CONFEDERATE ARMY.

Charles Edgeworth Jones, Augusta, Ga., writes that the following names were omitted from his roster of Confederate generals as published in the VETERAN for January, which explains the inconsistency of names and numbers in the list. Those omitted are: Brig. Gens. John Dunovant, South Carolina, rank July, 1864; Alfred E. Jackson, Tennessee, rank February, 1863; George D. Johnston, Alabama, rank 1864; William H. Wallace, South Carolina, rank September, 1864; Henry C. Wayne, Georgia, rank December, 1861.

The names of the following brigadier generals corrected are: Joseph L. Hogg, Texas; Birket D. Fry, Alabama; William P. Shingler, South Carolina; James Chestnut, Jr., South Carolina; George B. Anderson, North Carolina.

The names of Brig. Gens. Henry A. Wise and William C. Wickham were duplicated in the list. Brig. Gens. Allen Thomas, Louisiana, and Robert Lowry, Mississippi, have died.

Corrections in dates of appointment are as follows: James A. McMurray, Tennessee, September, 1863, and William D. Smith, Georgia, March, 1862.

Lieut. Gen. Simon B. Buckner, Kentucky, was appointed to that rank in September, 1864, instead of 1861.

DAVIS AND LINCOLN BIRTHPLACES.

BY E. D. SOUTHGATE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Washington Times under date of March 24, 1903, published some New York correspondence under the caption of "Historical Cabins in an Old Mix-Up," and it stated that by "an odd accident the cabins in which Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis were born have become mixed up, and the timbers of both structures now make up a single building. The revelation of this fact occurred through the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, to add to the Beecher memorial fund. Dr. Hillis made arrangements for a 'Lincoln Evening' in Plymouth Church, and Benjamin Chapin, the student and impersonator of Lincoln, was engaged to tell the story of Lincoln's life from the platform. As a 'touch of realism' to the entertainment, it was decided to obtain for the evening the little log cabin in which Lincoln was born and have it set up in the church parlor. The cabin is owned by Frederic Thompson and Elmer S. Dundy, two amusement promoters. Messrs. Thompson and Dundy declared they would be glad to loan the cabin if it were all the Lincoln cabin; but they said the structure in Coney Island is a combination of the hut in which the great emancipator was born and the Davis cabin. The original Lincoln cabin, Mr. Thompson said, had been purchased by Dennett, a restaurant man, from a Methodist preacher named Bigham at Nolin Creek, Larue County, Ky. He loaned it for exhibition purposes to the managers of the Nashville Exposition, and afterwards stored it in the cellar of a small restaurant on the Bowery. In the same cellar he stored the log cabin in which Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederacy, was born. When they were brought out, the movers mixed the timbers."

The Hopkinsville New Era published the following response to the foregoing: "W. B. Brewer, of Fairview, in an interview in this city, denied several statements contained in the article from New York concerning the logs from the cabins in which Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis were said to have been born having been so badly mixed as for it to be impossible to separate them. Mr. Brewer does not say that the mix-up of the logs did not occur, but denies other statements in regard to the Jefferson Davis cabin, which he owned at the time it was sold. He does say, however, that if the logs are mixed up he feels sure he could separate them by means of marks which he himself placed on the logs when the home was torn down and carried to Nashville during the Exposition in that city in 1897. Mr. Brewer denies that the logs in the cabin were originally all of walnut and were replaced with logs of oak, and he declares that the logs exhibited in Nashville were the genuine ones which formed the house in which Jefferson Davis was born. He says there were a few walnut logs in the building, and these were taken out for the purpose of making canes to be sold as souvenirs. He owned the property at the time of the sale, and is personally familiar with its history. He sold the house to the Rev. J. W. Bigham, a Methodist minister, who was formerly located at Fairview, and became familiar with the Davis homestead. When the Exposition at Nashville took place, Mr. Bigham conceived the idea of purchasing the house and placing it on exhibition there, which he did. He procured various affidavits subscribed and sworn to by the oldest and best citizens of Fairview that the cabin which he bought was the genuine birthplace of Jefferson Davis."

TO FRIENDS OF GEN. ARCHIBALD GRACIE.—Mr. Archibald Gracie, who is writing of his father's military career in the Confederate army, would like to correspond with any veterans who knew his father, Gen. Archibald Gracie, in the service, even though they did not belong to his command. His address is 1527 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

ROBERT EDWARD LEE.

BY WILL AIKEN.

Framed in the blood-red mist of the past,
This proud, grand figure see!
A hero—aye, more, a man—to the last,
Brave Robert Edward Lee.

Moved by a spirit as sweet and pure
As God e'er gave to man,
He loved his fellows, his land and flag;
He lived the Master's plan.
He gloried not in the clash of arms
Nor gory battlefield,
And yet was a very god of war
When once he bared his shield.

Not his to tarry when came the call
From a people sore distressed;
He loved and served his nation well,
But loved his home land best.
And forth he rode to battle long
For that he felt was right,
Till, vanquished, yet with honor left,
His legion ceased to fight.

'Twas then the spirit that made him great
Shone forth as noonday sun;
No hatred his—and he now would make
Once warring brothers one.
And thus he taught and wrought away
While Age's shadows crept,
And then the summons from beyond—
The grand old warrior slept.

There in the blood-red mist of the past
This glorious figure see!
A hero—aye, more, a man—to the last,
Our Robert Edward Lee.

CONFEDERATE DEAD ON JOHNSON'S ISLAND.

The following is a list of the Confederate dead buried in the Confederate Cemetery at Johnson's Island, near Sandusky, Ohio. The numbers of the graves commence at the west corner of the cemetery and run from left to right. The sections, or rows, of graves commence at the southwest side of the cemetery, and are numbered from southwest to northeast. They are numbered and the unknown come in their respective places. Where the graves are of the "unknown," no mention is made herein.

The VETERAN is indebted to our good comrade, Rev. John Hewitt, of Columbus, Ohio, for this list.

Nov. 8, '63, J. E. Cruggs, Col. 85th Va.
 Nov. 6, '63, C. M. Tuggle, Capt. Co. H, 35th Ga. Inf.
 Nov. 9, '63, A. E. Upchurch, Capt., 55th N. C. Inf.
 Nov. 19, '63, J. P. Peden, Second Lieut., Hamilton's Bat.
 Nov. 7, '63, Joel Barnett, Lieut. Col. 9th Bat., La. Cav.
 Aug. 5, '63, Wm. J. Hudson, Lieut., 2d N. C. Inf.
 July 26, '63, D. C. Webb, Capt., 1st Ala. Cav.
 Sept. 7, '63, J. W. Mullins, Lieut., 1st Miss. Inf.
 Aug. 20, '63, W. E. Hansin, Lieut., 1st Ga. Inf.
 Aug. 21, '63, H. D. Stephenson, Capt. Co. A, 15th Ark. Inf.
 Aug. 29, '63, R. D. Copass, Lieut. Co. E, 6th Germ. Inf.
 Sept. 8, '63, C. B. Jackson, Guerilla, Va.
 Sept. 14, '63, J. H. Hufstetter, Lieut. 1st Bat., Ark. Inf.
 Sept. 29, '63, L. B. Williams, Lieut., 63d N. C. Inf.
 Sept. 30, '63, W. P. Harchen, Lieut., 5th N. C. Inf.
 Sept. 30, '63, J. M. Dodson, Lieut., 10th Germ. Cav.
 Sept. 12, '63, D. D. Keller, Private, 2d Germ. Cav.
 Sept. 10, '63, S. G. Jetter, 31st Ala. Inf.
 Sept. 9, '63, C. W. Gillespie, Capt. Co. D, 66th N. C. Cav.
 Feb. 14, '63, B. Anderson, Private, — S. C.
 Feb. 14, '63, W. W. Veasey, Lieut., 10th Ky. Cav.
 Nov. 21, '63, J. W. Gregory, Capt., 9th Va. Inf.
 Nov. 23, '62, Peter Cole, Private, 60th Va. Inf.
 Dec. 13, '62, Wm. Johnson, Private, Poindey's Mo. Cav.
 E. L. More.
 Jan. 16, '63, Daniel Herrin, Poindey's Mo. Cav.
 Dec. 3, '63, J. W. Collier, Lieut., 10th Ky. Inf.
 Nov. 21, '63, John M. Kean, Capt., 12th La. Bat.
 Aug. 29, '62, L. W. McWhirter, Capt. Co. H, 3d Miss. Inf.
 John Dow, Pulaski.
 July 24, '62, R. Hodges, Memphis, Tenn.
 Aug. 12, '62, E. Gibson, Lieut., 11th Ark. Inf.
 Oct. 12, '62, D. Christian, Co. E, 128th Va.
 Oct. 14, '62, T. Rasins, Co. C, 46th Va.
 S. W. C.
 Oct. 22, '62, Samuel Fox, Colonel.
 Oct. 27, '62, J. Asbury, Ky.
 Oct. 30, '62, J. Reeves, Co. I, 1st Ga. Cav.
 Sept. 22, '63, J. A. McBride, Lieut. Co. H, 60th Germ. Inf.
 Sept. 28, '63, S. R. Graham, First Lieut. Co. I, 3d Tex. Cav.
 Oct. 9, '63, S. W. Henry, Captain, 19th Tenn. Cav.
 Oct. 21, '63, E. M. Orr, Lieut., 62d N. C. Inf.
 J. R. H.
 Dec. 8, '63, Mark Bacon, Capt. Co. D, 60th Tenn. Inf.
 Nov. 12, '63, J. B. Hardy, Captain, 15th Ark.
 Nov. 2, '63, Hugh Cobble, Private Co. E, 5th Ky.
 Oct. 30, '63, J. B. Cash, Lieut., 62d N. C. Inf.
 Oct. 31, '63, J. W. Johnson, Capt., Green's R. Mo. S. G's.
 Nov. 5, '63, J. U. D. King, Capt. Co. K, 9th Ga. Inf.
 Feb. 28, '63, M. R. Handy, Citizen, Hopkins Co., Ky.
 Feb. 11, '63, E. Morrison, Private, 8th Ala. Inf.
 Dec. 9, '64, Charles H. Matlock, Col. 4th Miss.

R. E. M.

Jan. 14, '65, W. W. Davis, Private 35th Miss. Inf.
 Jan. 1, '64, W. N. Swift, Lieut., 34th Ga. Inf.
 Jan. 4, '64, A. Kelley, Lieut., 10th Ark. Inf.
 Jan. 14, '64, J. D. Conoway, Private 14th Va. Cav.
 Jan. 2, '64, J. Middlebrooks, Capt., 40th Ga. Inf.
 Dec. 31, '63, J. B. Hazzard, Capt., 24th Ala. Inf.
 Dec. 25, '63, J. P. Van, Capt. Co. E, Bell's R. Ark. Inf.
 Jan. 1, '64, D. H. McKay, Lieut. Co. D, 46th Ala. Inf.
 Dec. 20, '63, John R. Jackson, Capt. Co. H, 38th Ala. Inf.
 Dec. 22, '63, H. B. Dawson, Lieut. Co. A, 17th Ga. Inf.
 Dec. 3, '63, D. D. Johnston, Lieut. Co. A, 48th Tenn. Inf.
 Nov. 12, '63, J. B. Hardy, Capt. Co. I, 5th Ark. Inf.
 Nov. 27, '63, W. T. Skidmore, Lieut. Co. D, 4th Ala. Cav.
 Dec. 3, '63, M. D. Armfield, Capt. Co. B, 11th N. C. Inf.
 Dec. 3, '63, E. W. Lewis, Capt. Co. C, 9th Bat., La. Cav.
 Dec. 8, '63, J. N. Williams, Lieut., 6th Miss. Inf.
 Dec. 9, '63, J. T. Ligon, Lieut., 53d Va. Inf.
 Dec. 8, '63, F. G. W. Coleman, Lieut., 7th Miss. Art.
 Dec. 8, '63, J. E. Threadgill, Lieut. Co. H, 12th Ark. Inf.
 Dec. 11, '63, J. G. Shuler, Capt. Co. H, 5th Fla. Inf.
 Dec. 20, '63, B. J. Blount, Lieut. Co. H, 55th N. C. Inf.
 Dec. 26, '63, J. D. Arrington, Lieut. Co. H, 32d N. C. Inf.
 Dec. 25, '64, Joseph Lawsher, Lieut. Co. C, 18th Miss. Cav.
 Jan. 6, '65, J. C. Holt, Lieut. Co. G, 61st Tenn.
 Jan. 9, '65, Samuel Chormley, Blount County, Tenn.
 Jan. 21, '65, J. W. Moore, Lieut. Co. B, 25th Ala. Inf.
 Feb. 11, '65, D. L. Scott, Second Lieut. Co. I, 3d Mo. Cav.
 Feb. 17, '65, William Peel, Lieut. Co. C, 3d Miss.
 Jan. 11, '64, J. L. Land, Lieut. Co. A, 24th Ga. Inf.
 Jan. 9, '64, N. T. Barnes, Capt. Co. E, 10th Con. Cav.
 Oct. 26, '63, John F. McElroy, Lieut. Co. F, 24th Ga. Inf.
 Jan. 12, '64, John Q. High, Lieut., 1st Ark. Bat. Inf.
 Jan. 12, '64, John C. Long, Lieut. Co. I, 62d N. C. Inf.
 Jan. 12, '64, B. C. Harp, Lieut. Co. I, 25th Tenn.
 Jan. 17, '64, W. S. Norwood, Lieut. Co. E, 6th S. C. Inf.
 Jan. 17, '64, R. K. C. Weeks, 2d Lieut. Co. F, 4th Fla. Inf.
 Jan. 21, '64, S. P. Sullins, Capt., 1st Ala. Inf.
 Jan. 31, '64, P. J. Rabenan, Capt., 5th Ala. Inf.
 Feb. 1, '64, R. H. Lisk, Citizen.
 Feb. 2, '64, F. F. Cooper, Capt. Co. K, 52d Ga. Inf.
 Feb. 7, '64, W. E. Watson, Adjut., 1st Tenn. Inf.
 Dec. 12, '64, Albert F. Frazer, Co. H, 15th Miss.
 Dec. 13, '64, W. E. Killem, Lieut. Co. H, 45th Va. Inf.
 Dec. 20, '64, F. T. Coppege, Lieut., Tenn. Inf.
 Dec. 21, '64, J. L. Dungan, Private 22d Va.
 Jan. 6, '65, S. T. Moore, 2d Lieut. Co. F, King's B., Ala. Inf.
 Feb. 26, '65, John J. Gobeau, Lieut. Co. B, 10th Miss. Inf.
 March 15, '65, W. A. Stephens, Lieut. Co. K, 46th Ala. Inf.
 April 26, '65, T. J. Lewis, Capt. Co. C, 3d Va. Inf.
 Feb. 3, '64, John W. Hill, Lieut. Co. L, 9th Va. Inf.
 Feb. 4, '64, James B. Campbell, Col., 27th Miss. Inf.
 Feb. 4, '64, John Welch, Lieut. Co. B, 40th Va. Inf.
 Feb. 4, '64, S. V. Hamilton, Capt. Co. B, 2d Choctaw C.
 Feb. 13, '64, G. W. Swink, Lieut. Co. K, 8th Va. Inf.
 Feb. 6, '64, A. B. Archibald, Capt. Co. D, 8th Con. Cav.
 Feb. 14, '64, J. Dean, Lieut. Co. H, Citizen of Tenn.
 Feb. 15, '64, C. B. Nash, Lieut. Co. H, 30th Miss. Inf.
 Feb. 23, '64, Francis Baya, Lieut. Co. II, 2d Fla. Inf.
 Feb. 15, '64, F. J. Alexander, Lieut. Co. C, 4th Ala. Bat.
 Feb. 26, '64, M. C. Peel, Capt., 8th Ark. Inf.
 March 3, '64, R. C. Love, 1st Lieut. Co. K, 1st Miss. Art.
 Feb. 28, '64, P. Nichols, Capt. Co. B, 11th Bat., N. C. Inf.
 March 3, '64, R. P. Bolling, Lieut. Co. H, 6th Ga. Cav.

March 16, '64, J. B. Wood, Lieut. Co. G, 10th C. S. Cav.
 March 18, '64, B. F. Lock, Lieut. Co. E, 4th Ark. Cav.
 March 30, '64, P. W. Lane, Lieut., 23d Ark. Inf.
 April 10, '64, Joshua Bisell, Capt. Co. G, 8th Fla. Inf.
 April 12, '64, S. H. Pankey, Lieut., 49th Ala.
 Sept. 2, '64, John J. Nickell, Surg., 2d Ky. Mounted Rifles.
 Dec. 24, '64, James Webb, Capt., 8th Ark.
 Dec. 31, '64, Willis Randall, Lieut. Co. G, 52d N. C. Inf.
 Feb. 18, '65, W. E. Phillips, 2d Lieut., 4th Ala. Cav.
 April 22, '65, E. B. Holt, Lieut., Lexington, N. C.
 April 23, '65, W. J. Porter, Capt. Co. D, 61st Ala. Inf.
 May 17, '65, Peter Mackin, Lieut. Co. I, 16th Miss. Inf.
 April 25, '65, John W. Henagan, Col., 8th S. C. Inf.
 May 12, '65, J. M. Henken, 1st Lieut. Co. K, 12th S. C. Inf.
 May 21, '65, J. A. Lash, Maj., 4th Fla. Inf.
 Jan. 1, '65, J. F. Brigham, Lieut. Co. E, 14th Tenn. Inf.
 April 20, '64, W. W. Wynn, Capt. Co. G, 64th Va. Inf.
 April 21, '64, H. Wilkinson, Lieut. Co. B, 9th Va. Inf.
 May 7, '64, W. L. Helton, Capt. Co. F, 23d N. C. Inf.
 May 7, '64, J. W. Day, Capt. Co. D, 55th Ga. Inf.
 May 21, '64, B. B. Starus, Lieut. Co. B, 9th Ala. Cav.
 June 18, '64, E. N. Puckett, Lieut. Co. K, 12th Ark. Inf.
 July 24, '64, J. W. Jacques, Lieut. Co. F, 24th Tenn.
 Aug. 6, '64, J. W. McRae, 2d Lieut. Co. E, 67th Ga.
 Sept. 4, '64, Wm. P. Norton, Lieut. Co. D, 22d N. C. Inf.
 Sept. 12, '64, H. H. Cressivell, Lieut., Freeman's Regt.
 Sept. 23, '64, J. Coulter, Citizen, Maryville, Tenn.
 Sept. 23, '64, Thomas Ruffin, Lieut. Co. D, 4th N. C. Cav.
 Sept. 27, '64, C. B. Morris, Lieut. Co. I, 9th Ala. Inf.
 Oct. 1, '64, J. Miller, 3d Lieut., Williams's Ark Cav.
 Nov. 2, '64, Robert Gamble, 2d Lieut. Co. G, 9th Ala. Inf.
 Nov. 6, '64, P. J. Noland, Lieut., English's Miss. Bat.
 Jan. 18, '65, J. M. Hill, Capt. Co. G, Dobbins's Ark. Cav.
 Feb. 27, '65, M. C. Reidy, Co. G, 11th Ky. Cav.
 June 18, '65, W. H. Michael, Lieut., 59th Va. Inf.
 April 4, '65, A. G. Pitt, 2d Lieut. Co. K, 20th Tenn. Inf.
 May 1, '65, J. L. Hood, Adjt., 59th Va. Inf.

The last five graves are marked "unknown." The total burials are two hundred and six.

A VISIT TO JOHNSON'S ISLAND.

BY ROBERT C. CROUCH, MORRISTOWN, TENN.

On September 11 last, just forty-four years since I first entered its prison gates, I was back on Johnson's Island. This long period had wrought many changes on the island, and it was with difficulty that I could locate any part of the old prison. The blockhouse, at the entrance gate, was still standing, and the ditch that had been dug just inside the fence on the western side was still to be seen. The most of the old prison proper was in corn. The western part of the island is largely a rock quarry, whilst the eastern part is used as a pleasure resort. I could find the cemetery only by asking directions, but after reaching it had no difficulty in locating the graves of dead Confederates of my acquaintance: amongst others, the grave of my old friend and comrade, Capt. Mark Bacon, of the 60th Tennessee, whom I assisted in burying in December, 1863.

It was especially gratifying to me to find this cemetery in so much better condition than I expected. Whilst it shows neglect, it is inclosed with a reasonably good fence and shows more care than the ordinary country cemetery. The grounds of the hotel of the pleasure resort on the island extend up to this little cemetery. The graves have all a plain tombstone, and, so far as I could judge, are accurately marked. During the past year the bodies of several have been removed by friends. The captain of the tug that carried me to the island informed me that he had been employed to transport across the bay a monument to be erected to these dear comrades who are buried so far from home and loved ones.

In the Indianapolis News of September 14 I notice where at a regimental reunion held there resolutions were offered asking that on the monument to be erected at Andersonville, Ga., should be inscribed a record of the cruelties practiced on the prisoners confined there. What ought to be chiseled on this monument? Denied food in a land of plenty, not even allowed to purchase it, shivering with cold in that rigorous climate, scantily clad and with insufficient fuel, forced to use water from filthy wells when the foot of the prison was washed by the waters of Lake Erie, it is questionable whether survivors should visit these old prison sites, bringing back, as it does, vividly before the mind all the hardships and suffering endured there by them.

I was indebted to Mr. Theo. Gerold, of Sandusky, whose guest I was, for many kindnesses shown me during my visit (Comrade Gerold was a member of Wheat's Louisiana Battalion); also to Mr. Joshua B. Davis, Commander of the G. A. R. Post, for courtesies shown me. Mr. Davis as Commander of the Post and his comrades on Decoration Day never fail to decorate the graves of our dead Confederates in the little cemetery on the island.

Comrade Crouch sends a list of the dead buried there; but it had already been furnished by Rev. John Hewitt.

MONUMENTS AT CASSVILLE, GA.

The Ladies' Memorial Association of Cassville, Ga., was prompt to erect a monument at the graves of several hundred Confederates in the cemetery there as soon as possible after their homes were rebuilt from war's devastation and reconstruction, and later the Daughters of the Confederacy there erected another not so large, but more durable, and the cemetery is kept in good repair by those faithful Confederate organizations of Southern women.

Prominent inscriptions on the monuments are:

"Rest in Peace, our Southern Braves.
 You loved Liberty more than life."

"Is it better to have fought and lost
 Than not to have fought at all?"

"Is it death to fall for Freedom's cause?"

REMINISCENCES OF FRANKLIN.—Capt. George D. Hartfield, of Hattiesburg, Miss., wrote in reply to the request for twenty thousand responses. He referred to the battle of Franklin, November 30, 1864, stating: "I had the honor to command a company (B, 7th Mississippi Battalion) and the misfortune to be severely wounded. I was left on the battlefield. After the army advanced upon Nashville, I was removed to Franklin and quartered in the home of Mrs. Ewing (Sarah, I think). I have written since the war to her, but received no answer; hence suppose she had either died or removed. After the repulse of our army at Nashville and its subsequent retreat, I was conveyed to Nashville, and as soon as practicable was sent to prison at Fort Delaware. From the strictness of the guard and the scantiness of the fare, I incline to think that a deliberate attempt was made at that prison to accomplish the death of the prisoners by starvation rather than open murder."

VALUABLE RELICS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

BY MAJ. BEN C. TRUMAN, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Among the scarcest and most precious relics of the Confederacy are the only four coins manufactured by its government. In 1866 I was shown one of these, at his home in Galveston, by General Nichols. It was a silver half dollar, and a very pretty one. The Liberty side was much the same as that of the United States; but the reverse side contained a stalk of cotton, a stalk of sugar cane, seven bars, and I think eleven stars, perhaps more, and the words, "The Confederate States of America." General Nichols offered it to me as a present; but, as I was his guest, I declined to accept it. Since then Mr. Oscar Taylor, of Meriwether County, Ga., an owner of one of the four coins, sold it for $1,500. Messrs. Roberts and Collins, of Cartersville, Ga., were the owners of one of these coins, and in 1880 valued it at $2,000. The fourth was for a long time owned by Frank Welch, of McKinney, Tex., who has refused $2,500 for it. These four half-dollar coins had just gone through the finishing process when the mint in New Orleans was taken possession of by United States troops, and they were the only ones made by the Confederacy from any metal.

Probably the most valuable of all the relics of the Confederacy is the original of the "Constitution for the Provisional Government of the Confederate States of America," for a long time the property of Mrs. W. F. de Fontaine, but who, I believe, sold it to the British Museum for $10,000—at least, she offered it to that institution for that amount. How Mrs. de Fontaine came into possession of so valuable a document as the most precious heirloom of the Confederacy is romantic and interesting.

At the time of the collapse her husband, Felix Gregory de Fontaine, a well-known journalist and war correspondent, was the editor and publisher of a paper in Columbia, S. C. After the evacuation of Richmond, a train load of boxes, containing public documents, etc., was shipped to Columbia. De Fontaine needed paper on which to print his journal, but where to get it was the puzzling problem. George A. Trenholm happened to be in Columbia at the time, and to him the journalist explained the situation. "Go down," said Trenholm, "to the depot and help yourself to some of the Confederate boxes, in which something may turn up that will answer your purpose." De Fontaine acted upon this, and one of the boxes contained the Confederate Constitution. Mrs. de Fontaine laid claim to this relic, and held sacred possession of it up to 1882, at which time she offered it for sale.

During the Exposition at New Orleans in 1884-85 I was shown the original Confederate flag, which was exhibited by some ladies in the Louisiana section, and which was guarded with great sacredness and care. It was designed by Colonel Walton, of Louisiana, and presented by him to General Beauregard, who in turn presented it to Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, who wrote as follows concerning it: "At the battle of Manassas the stars and bars proved a failure because they were so much like the Union colors. Indeed, both armies mistook their enemies for friends, and vice versa. After the battle I resolved to discard the flag and called for each regiment to procure its State colors. This they were not able to do, and I asked the army for new designs. Among those presented, one by General Beauregard was chosen, and I altered this only in making it square instead of oblong. This flag was afterwards adopted by the Confederate armies generally. It was a Greek cross of blue on a red field, with white stars on the blue bars." This original flag was carried in a number of battles, and then returned to Colonel Walton almost as good as new.

The first Confederate flag captured was that taken down by Colonel Ellsworth at the Marshall House at Alexandria on the 24th of May, 1861. Ellsworth was colonel of the New York Fire Zouaves; and as he moved up a street at the head of his command, he saw a large new secession banner waving from the Marshall House, the leading inn of Alexandria. Ellsworth at once entered the hotel, and, meeting a man in the hall, inquired: "Who put that flag up?" The man answered: "I don't know; I am only a boarder here." Then the Colonel, Lieutenant Winser, the Rev. Mr. House, chaplain of the Zouaves, and four privates went up on the roof, and Ellsworth cut down the flag. Then the party descended, preceded by Private Francis E. Brownell, of Company A; and just as they entered the attic J. W. Jackson, the proprietor of the hotel, who had said he was only a boarder, pulled both triggers of a double-barreled shotgun and shot Ellsworth dead, and in turn Jackson was instantly killed by Brownell. As a sequel to this, some time before the cessation of hostilities Mrs. Jackson, the widow, was given a remunerative position in the Interior Department at the request of Maj. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, who also found a place in the same department for Mrs. Mumford, widow of the man whom he had executed for hauling down the stars and stripes in New Orleans.

The first Union flag captured was taken from R. M. Shurtleff, a Connecticut artist, who was also the first Union officer captured. He had been seriously wounded and had snatched the flag from a dying soldier, and was waving it and screaming when he was taken. In 1885 Colonel Sandridge, of New Orleans, returned the trophy to Lieutenant Shurtleff while the latter was visiting the Exposition.

Just after the ordinance of secession was adopted by the Virginia Convention Mr. Charles M. Gallagher, of Waynesboro, visited Richmond, and, as usual with strangers, went on the roof of the Capitol for the view. Coming down, he saw lying in the dust of the loft of the Capitol the United States flag which had been formerly hoisted when the Legislature was in session, the custom being to hoist the national flag at one end of the building and the State flag at the other. He cut thirteen stars out of the flag as a memento and carried them home. Twenty-two years afterwards he sent them to the Virginia Historical Society, and some other man who had heard of it and who had the old flag from which the stars had been cut presented it to the same society, with the request that the thirteen old stars be returned. This was told me by an aged custodian of the museum at the State Capitol during the stay of a day I made in Richmond a few years ago. He also showed me the bail bond of Jefferson Davis, handsomely framed and in conspicuous position, with the signature of Horace Greeley as the most prominent. No one should omit a visit to Richmond sometime in his life, for it is one of the most interesting cities in the world.

Mrs. General Custer has a plain white towel which served as the last flag of truce used in the Civil War, and was carried by Col. R. M. Sims from General Gordon to General Sheridan.

The foregoing was supplied the VETERAN through the solicitation of Thomas L. Winder, Esq., of Los Angeles, and he writes of the author: "Major Truman was secretary to Andrew Johnson while Governor of Tennessee, and he was also with him in Washington. The Major was in the Federal army. While in Tennessee last summer some of my relations bore testimony to the kindness and chivalry of Major Truman during the war."

DARING DEED IN SAVING THE DAVID—C. S. NAVY.

BY JAMES LACHLISON, RIDGEVILLE, GA.

In the October (1907) VETERAN an account occurs of the daring attack of the torpedo boat David upon the frigate New Ironsides near Charleston. The author is in error when he states that the "engineer, not being able to swim, remained in the boat and drifted back to Charleston." The engineer spoken of is James H. Tomb, a Savannah boy, and, like all boys of his day and generation in that city, was like a duck in the water. Engineer Tomb is still living and resides in Jacksonville, Fla. I give the VETERAN a history of the David and that gallant exploit.

The David was fifty feet long, seven feet beam, and could make about seven knots per hour. She was designed by Dr. Ravenel and Captain Stoney, of Charleston, and built in that city, the merchants of Charleston contributing the funds for her construction. She was cigar-shaped. Lieutenant Glassell and Engineer Tomb had been engaged for some time in attempts to sink the monitors off Charleston, using the first and second cutters of the C. S. S. Chicora, having a 65-pound torpedo projecting from the bows of each, and each boat propelled by six men at the oars. They were unsuccessful in these attempts because the men could not pull strong enough to strike the monitors with sufficient force to do any damage. They reported the cause of their failure to Flag Officer I. R. Tucker. Captain Stoney and others requested that Lieutenant Glassell and Engineer Tomb be placed in charge of the David and fit her up for a torpedo boat. They procured a long boiler tube to use as a torpedo spar, but in bending it found a flaw in the iron; and instead of having it eight and a half feet under the water, as they intended it to be, it was only six and a half feet. There is but little doubt that if this spar had been the length they intended it to be the New Ironsides would have gone to the bottom when struck. Admiral Dahlgren, in his official report of the affair, said that the injury was serious; and had she been struck two feet lower, she would have probably been sunk.

About the time the David was ready for service the frigate New Ironsides arrived off Charleston. She was reputed to be the most formidable vessel in the United States navy. She was selected as the vessel to attack. The crew of the David consisted of Lieutenant Glassell (in command), Engineer J. H. Tomb, Fireman Sullivan, and Pilot Cannon. After the David struck the Ironsides, her engine failed to work. Engineer Tomb reported this fact to Lieutenant Glassell, and also fears that the boat was sinking. Glassell ordered all hands to leave the boat and save themselves. He and Tomb and Sullivan jumped into the sea, Glassell and Sullivan swimming to the enemy, and were taken prisoners. The pilot, Cannon, being unable to swim, jumped into the water and clung to the life lines of the David. Tomb struck out for Morris Island. After swimming for some distance, he looked back and saw that the David was still afloat a short distance from the Ironsides; so he concluded to swim back and make an effort to save her. When he got to her, he found Cannon still clinging to the life lines. They climbed aboard, and Tomb, working on the engine, got it fixed, and, getting up steam, started back for Charleston, passing through the fleet and guard boats. The upper works of the David were riddled with the fire of small arms to which she was subjected when she struck the Ironsides. Engineer Tomb made the trip successfully, and reported to Flag Officer Tucker on board the ironclad steamer Charleston off Fort Johnston, clad in nothing but his underwear. To Lieutenant Glassell and Engineer Tomb belongs the credit of being the first naval officers to make an attack on an enemy with a torpedo boat. To Dr. Ravenel and Captain Stoney belongs the credit of designing and building the first torpedo boat. The torpedo used on this occasion was made by Maj. F. D. Lee, C. S. A.

After this exploit, Engineer Tomb was placed in command of the David. He covered her all over to the water line with quarter-inch steel plate. In March, 1864, he struck the United States Steamship Memphis in North Edisto. After striking the ship twice, the torpedo failed to explode; and upon examination he found the tube mashed flat, but the torpedo defective. The crew at this time was Chief Engineer Tomb (in command), Pilots Cannon and Acosta, and Fireman Lawhes.

The foregoing is a true history of the David and the daring deeds of her gallant crew. I suppose my old playmate, James H. Tomb, is the only survivor. To him is due the credit of saving the boat and bringing her safely back to Charleston. It was a heroic act, and, excelled but by few, if any, of the intrepid deeds of our war. He has two sons, James H. and William Victor ("chips of the old block"), now officers in the United States navy.

HISTORIC RECORDS OF CONFEDERATE DAYS.

A well-preserved historic document comes to the VETERAN by J. L. Cook, Montgomery, Ala., in an official "detail" from Polk's Corps, Army of Tennessee, dated at Shelbyville June 14, 1863. It is a list of delegates to attend a convention at Winchester, Tenn., to nominate State officers on the 17th. The list is as follows: Brigadier General Smith; Majs. John W. Dawson and M. L. Riggs; Capts. E. A. Cole and R. C. Wharton; Lieut. P. C. Wilkes, of the 154th Tennessee Infantry; Dr. R. D. Given, Capt. M. G. Mebane, Adj. R. M. Harwell, G. W. Turner, and Lieut. H. C. Moorman, of the 13th Tennessee Infantry; Col. T. H. Bell, Capt. James A. Long, Surgeon W. B. Maney, Capts. W. H. McCauley, P. H. Weems, W. I. White, A. T. Fielder, and J. L. Bell, of the 12th Tennessee Infantry; also Capt. W. M. Cluskey, of General Smith's staff.

Hon. Robert L. Caruthers was nominated, and afterwards formally elected, Governor of the State.

Another official order is that issued by Gen. Braxton Bragg from Tullahoma May 13, 1863, announcing a great victory in Virginia, wherein "Another vast army from the North, under a selected general, attacked the Army of (Northern) Virginia, and, baffled and beaten, has again sought shelter of its guns beyond the river. The battle of the Rappahannock is blazoned bright with many triumphs and obscured by no defeats. Soldiers of the Army of Tennessee, let us emulate the deeds of the Army of (Northern) Virginia. We cannot surpass them. Let us make them proud to call us brothers. Let us make the Cumberland and Ohio classic as the Rappahannock and Potomac."

In connection with the foregoing reference is made to the official vote of the 15th Tennessee Infantry for Congressman for the Eleventh District of Tennessee, supplied by R. T. Quarles, who is well informed in regard to the archives of the State. The date is August, 1864, and the place near Atlanta, Ga. The vacancy in the Confederate Congress occurred by the death of David M. Curran, and of the eighty-four votes (the names of voters being listed) Capt. M. W. Cluskey received every one. Judge John L. T. Sneed was designated as a candidate, but all the votes were cast for Captain Cluskey. The election was held and certified to by N. J. Thompson, Captain Company K, John W. Childress, Adjutant of the Regiment, and W. B. Moore, Lieutenant of Company A.

The political history of Confederate times has hardly ever had attention. Data on the subject would be interesting.

"REBEL TWINS" IN TWO COMPANIES.

BY W. E. DOYLE, ESQ., MEXIA, TEX.

In February, 1864, two companies (A and B) of cavalry, and known as Trenholm's Squadron, were camped at Coosawhatchie, on the coast of South Carolina about midway between Charleston and Savannah, when the writer and his twin brother joined the squadron. It is likely that this squadron had more twins in it than any other organization of the same size in the Confederate army. The two companies had about one hundred members each, mostly boys. John and William Clark, of Anderson District, and two others of Barnwell District belonged to Company A, and William and Robert Mackey, of Anderson, and James Hogan and William Elliott Doyle, of Pickens, belonged to Company B. The Doyle boys were the last to join the squadron, and were the youngest soldiers in it.

In April of that year the squadron was ordered to Richmond; and when early in May the 7th South Carolina Cavalry was organized under Col. Andrew H. Haskell, of Columbia, and composing one of the three regiments of Gary's Brigade, Company A was continued as Company A and Company B became Company G, of the regiment.

Gary's Brigade did picket and scouting duty on the Peninsula and between the Chickahominy and the Pamunkey till Grant arrived in the vicinity of Cold Harbor, when the regiment was in its first fight—the other regiments of the brigade being veterans—and from that time it continued in the business to the end.

The Barnwell boys were sons of Confederate States Senator Barnwell, of South Carolina. They disappeared in a few days after we got to Richmond, and I have never heard of them since.

From Cold Harbor on Gary kept us busy. On the 29th of September I was captured near Darbytown, suffered the horrors of prison life at Point Lookout for six months, and was at home on parole on the 9th of April, 1865. In the fall of 1864 one of the Clark boys was wounded and went home and returned no more, and the other one lost out some time after. About the same time one of the Mackey boys lost out, and the other one was lost in a fight between Gary's and Sheridan's Cavalry, which lasted until the darkness of the night of April 8, 1865.

James H. Doyle was slightly wounded at Cold Harbor, and was with the regiment on all other occasions except Riddle's Shop, June 15, and a light skirmish on Malvern Hill, in July. He was the only one of the eight twins who surrendered a musket on the gloomy yet glorious field of Appomattox. The six twins remaining with the regiment saw first and last much active service, and those living are proud of the fact that they belonged to the Army of Northern Virginia. J. H. Doyle is a successful merchant, resident of Granbury, Tex. One of the Mackeys is a farmer residing near Carnesville, Ga., and one of the Clarks died at Cleburne, Tex., a few years ago. I know nothing of the other twins, but would like to hear from them if yet living.

One fact that caused mistakes at times was that the boys of each pair were just alike and of the same size—that is, could not be told apart. To illustrate: I had been on picket three days and nights, got to camp about the middle of the afternoon, and before I could get something to eat and feed my horse I was sent off on a scout while my rested brother and his rested horse remained in camp. I was taken for him, said nothing, and went on.

[It should not be inferred that the boys who "lost out" in the foregoing report did it dishonorably. They may have been killed or captured and died in prison.—ED. VETERAN.]

OLD SOLDIER ON THINGS THAT DIDN'T OCCUR.

BY THEODORE GEORGE CARTER, ST. PAUL, MINN.

But this time it is a Federal. In the G. A. R. paper, the National Tribune, Washington, D. C., of April 25, 1907, under the heading, "A Series of Tragedies," one G. W. Grant, who claims to have been a sergeant in Company I, 14th Iowa Regiment, gives an account of the shooting of the colonel of the 128th Illinois by the wife of "the Rebel Brigadier General Falkner" as that regiment marched through Ripley, Miss., on Smith's Tupelo expedition in July, 1864. He also says that Mrs. Falkner was instantly shot and her body dragged into the street by the soldiers, the house from which she fired the shot set fire to, and watched until it burned to the ground. He says that his regiment led his division (3d Division 16th Army Corps) and that the 128th Illinois was next in rear. The writer hereof was with the army that day, but the 128th Illinois was not. The writer was in the 1st division, and perhaps in rear of the 3d division, on that march. Not a woman fired a shot at our army, nor did we lose a colonel on that expedition. Neither was there a woman wounded or killed by the Union troops. There was no General Falkner in Forrest's army at that time. The sergeant further says that General Falkner was killed in the battle of Tupelo (Harrisburg), and that he saw his dead body and secured a small piece of gold braid from the lower end of the leg of his trousers.

Colonel Faulkner, of the 12th Kentucky (Confederate), advanced very close to the Union line in that battle. His horse was killed and he was wounded, but not so badly but that he could walk. His wife was at Ripley at the time Sturgis was whipped at Brier's Crossroads, and it is probable she was there when we passed through. In his report of the engagement, General Smith also states that "General Faulkner, of Kentucky, was killed." As none of his subordinate officers mention anything of such an occurrence in their reports to him, it is possible that Sergeant Grant gave him that information. It is very remarkable how well some alleged soldiers, Union and Confederate, can recollect so many horrible occurrences which never occurred.

Before this was written, in order to verify the writer's recollection of events, he not only examined diaries of comrades and the "Official Records" of the war, but also the statements of General Forrest in the "Campaigns of Lieutenant General Forrest," and finally wrote to the Commander of the U. C. V. Camp at Ripley, Miss., who replied that nothing of the kind took place there during the war.

WHO CLIMBED THE FLAG POLE AT CAMP CHASE?—A number of letters have come to this office in reference to the man "who climbed the flag pole at Camp Douglas," but none seem to remember his name or regiment. The following from W.

H. Johnson, of Hickory, Miss., gives the recollection of a Federal soldier of the event: "I met with an ex-Federal soldier recently who did service at Camp Douglas, and he told me of the trouble they had with 'Old Glory' on the flag pole, and how they got a Johnny from the prison to climb the pole and unloose the flag. He said the man was a sailor and that his home was in New Orleans; they got him out of Barrack 29. He had forgotten the name, but knew he was released after fixing the rope in the pulley. This ex-Federal told me of the incident voluntarily, and I am sure he told it straight. I afterwards gave him the December VETERAN and told him how the man's name had been sought for some months." In another letter Comrade Johnson writes: "In every issue of the VETERAN I see an inquiry for the war record of some needy widow's husband who served in our Civil War. To all such inquirers allow me to say that if their husbands were ever prisoners of the United States and they remember what prison they were confined in they should write to their Congressmen to ascertain from the prison roll where such persons were enlisted, naming the company and regiment."

[This is not an infallible guide, however, as so many records were destroyed. In some instances it may be helpful.—Ed.]

RECKLESS LITTLE TOW HEAD.

Tow Head was not his name, only a nickname given him by an old wag of a soldier in the company on account of the color of his hair and because of his habit of making himself conspicuous in everything done and said by the other members of the company. His real name was Rube; but Tow Head seemed to suit him so well that he was called by that name.

Rube came to us in the fall of 1861, when we were in camp of instruction at Savannah, with a number of recruits to join our ranks. He was only fourteen years old, and had run away from home to be with his half-brother, who was one of the recruits. His mother was a widow. She needed him then more than ever to help her earn a support while her older sons were gone to the war. The captain refused to receive him on account of his age; but he was determined to be a soldier, and remained with us for some time. Every time the drum tapped to call us to form ranks Tow Head was there and ready for duty. Finally the captain told him that his mother wanted him at home and that he intended to send him to her. This was sad news to him, and it was a damper on his usual enthusiasm. The captain made him bundle up his few belongings and sent him to the depot. He was given transportation to his home, and we all soon forgot him. In a few weeks he again made his appearance among us, wearing the same old smile and ever ready to join in the rough jokes and hard fare of the soldiers. Most of us were now heartily homesick, and wondered why he didn't remain at home. When asked why he came back so soon, he said: "O boys, it's too lonesome at home. Everybody is gone to the war." The captain told him to go back to his mother, and forbade the men giving him anything to eat. This order they did not regard, but shared their provisions with him, and he remained with us. He seemed to be perfectly happy in camp, and we could not refuse to divide with him our rations.

When the spring opened and the regiment was thoroughly drilled, one morning a young man, mounted on a good horse, entered our camp and inquired for headquarters. We knew he had an important mission. Very soon orders came to cook rations and get ready to march to the railroad station, ten or twelve miles away, to take cars for Virginia. We had been there so long that each soldier had accumulated a small stock of household goods. These we could not dispose of, and each man decided to take with him what he could. When our ranks were formed for the march, we looked like a regiment of foot peddlers. We had not gone more than two miles before we began to realize that we were overloaded, and decided that we must dispense with some of our valuables. This we did until we arrived at the depot. Little Tow Head was with us, and seemed to rejoice that we were on our way to participate in real war and would be, to some extent, free from much red tape.

When we arrived in Virginia, we were sent immediately to General Stonewall Jackson's army, in the Valley of Virginia. In all the battles Tow Head showed a reckless disregard for his safety, and never seemed to be the least disconcerted by the noise of artillery, small arms, and the destruction going on about him. When the general wished to organize a battalion of the bravest men of his command in the winter of 1863-64 to do the skirmishing for the brigade, Tow Head volunteered. This duty was the most dangerous part of war, but had some fascinating feature. Tow Head had but one eye with which he could see. He did not have to close one eye to take aim, as the others did. During those terrible days in the Wilderness Tow Head was always on the front line.

One day during this series of battles, while bravely holding the place assigned him by the officer in command, he got some powder in his eye. This so blinded him that he had to be sent to the hospital. As soon as he was fit for duty he returned to his command, expecting to take his old place. In the meantime his mother had heard of his condition, and, knowing his reckless disposition, had written to the commander of his company, begging him not to let him rejoin the battalion upon his return to his regiment. Wishing to comply with her request, that officer informed him that he could no more fight with that organization, but that he must remain with his regiment. This was a great set-back to Tow Head.

One day while we were lying on our faces in line of battle, awaiting the order to move forward into a battle which was raging to our right and was being hotly contested by our skirmishers in front, Tow Head called out to our commander and begged that he might go out to the skirmish line. A comrade lying by his side told him to obey orders; but his great anxiety to see what was going on in front was more than he could resist, and his head went up every minute in spite of orders and warnings. A moment before the order came to advance Tow Head popped up his head, and as he did so a ball from the enemy struck him in the center of his forehead and passed through his head, killing him instantly.

As we started into the battle our lieutenant commanding the company excused his brother to remain there while we moved forward and drove the enemy from our front. The next day poor Tow Head's body was consigned to a soldier's grave to await the judgment day. Poor brave little Tow Head, may your soul rest in peace!

The first railroads in America are joined by the new Union Station in Washington City. In 1829 the Baltimore and Ohio and the Charleston Canal and Railroad companies were started. These oldest railroads of America are joined at Washington, as the old Charleston road is now a part of the Southern Railway. The new Union Station at Washington, built on the site of the Baltimore and Ohio's old depot, forms a union between these two first railroads in America. Think of it, four score years ago there was not a railroad in the United States.

GENERAL McCLELLAN WAS NOT A TRAITOR.

A letter from a Union spy to the New York Times:

"The stories circulated throughout the country recently to the effect that certain distinguished Union officers at the beginning of the Civil War were willing to take sides with the Confederates were revived in this city yesterday by the discovery of a letter written by a Union spy, Emile Bourlier, accusing Gen. George B. McClellan of sympathizing with and even aiding the Confederate cause. The letter, which will be sold at auction on January 10, consists of four closely written pages, dated Philadelphia September, 1864, and addressed to 'The Members of the Union League, Philadelphia.' In part it reads: 'While the battle before Richmond was raging * * * Lieutenant Colonel Pickens * * * was superintending the disinterment of a number of cases of United States rifles, which lay buried in the ground. * * * On the inquiry * * * if he thought it had been intended that said guns should fall into the hands of the Confederates, the Colonel answered in the affirmative, and concluded by saying, "Mac's all right."'

"Bourlier goes on to say that at the same time two hundred and ten ambulances were found with the horses hitched to trees in the neighborhood, and it was asserted the intention was that they also should fall into the Confederates' hands. Whisky was handed around and they drank to 'Little Mac.'

"'About the middle of the month of April of the same year,' Bourlier adds, 'as I was going from Richmond to Mobile in company with Lieutenant Wirz and Dr. Knoed, of Missouri, and Dr. Fontleroy, of Virginia, the two latter gentlemen being of the Rebel General Price's staff, we met with Brigadier General Watson, of Alabama. General Watson said in my presence that then or any time after the war he could give satisfactory proof that George B. McClellan, of the Federal army, at the outbreak of the rebellion and during the preliminary arrangements for the organization of the Confederate army had offered his services to the Confederate government; but that the Confederate government had resolved to give rank in preference to officers formerly in the United States service, according to seniority, and that McClellan, having become offended at this, then offered his services to the United States.'"

In copying the above the VETERAN does not intend to convey an idea of its truthfulness. General McClellan was too honorable a man to have commanded his fellows in a great war and acted the traitor toward them. Letters condemning Federal officers have come to the VETERAN recently which will not be published. The war is over now, and the honor of both sides should be the desire of every citizen. One fact will be emphasized, however—viz., that it was no disgrace for any man, wherever reared, to have espoused and fought for State rights.

HOW THE SIX HUNDRED OFFICERS FARED.

BY JUNIUS L. HEMPSTEAD, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

I see in the October (1907) VETERAN some extracts from the diary of one of my dear comrades of the Immortal Six Hundred who was a prisoner of war on Morris Island. His leaflets must have been written many years after the war. If he were alive, I certainly could refresh his memory.

At the time the dear ladies of Charleston, under flag of truce, forwarded the eatables we were on retaliation for Andersonville. The provisions were never received. The Federals did, however, allow us to have the smoking and chewing tobacco.

Colonel Hallowel, who commanded the negro regiment that guarded us, was merciless in his exactions. We were eating wormy hard-tack; to lose the worms was to lose the ration. I was appointed a committee of one to remonstrate. With some of these crackers in my hand, I approached this officer, and in a gentlemanly manner stated the situation, broke the crackers to prove the truth of my statement. He sarcastically replied: "You fellows are hard to please; you have been complaining of not getting any meat."

If our dear comrade received at that time what he jotted down, he must have been singularly favored. The dishwater—bean soup—that our negro guards brought us was cooked upon the island sand bar, with half a dozen beans that seemed lost in the liquid. The soup was cooked without covers, and the sand formed a base for the weakness above.

Miss Lucile Cobb does not mention the horrors of Fort Pulaski, where the corn meal had lost its original color, and was caked in the barrels and burrowed with slugs, worms, and bugs, or the fact that the comrades would punch nails in the bottoms of old tin cans, and thus separated the slugs, worms, and bugs from the tasteless meal by sifting. This, with strong pickle that must have come from Noah's ark, formed for days our food. No one could eat it. The scurvy spread rapidly and fatally. When we were shipped (North) back to Fort Delaware, a great cry of horror went up from our comrades in the pen.

I do not write this for any sensational effect. Miss Cobb's article is misleading. I think she has not written all of the horrors of that martyrdom for a great principle. As the President of the Immortal Six Hundred, I write these facts with no disrespect to the daughter of our dear comrade.

OPPOSED TO FEDERAL PENSIONS.

The Confederate Historical Association of Memphis is opposed to the United States government pensions for Confederates. In action to express opposition to Mr. Hobson's bill, they say:

"Resolved, That the Confederate Memorial Association of Memphis appreciates and commends the noble sentiment and motives of Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson, member of Congress from Alabama, in the resolution he is about to introduce in Congress asking the United States government to pension the surviving Confederate veterans. Be it

"Resolved, however, That we are opposed to these resolutions and the presentation of the same as inappropriate, as we have unbounded confidence in the faith and loyalty of each and every one of our Southern States to provide means and relief for those of the old guard in gray who are indigent and incapacitated to provide for themselves."

The action of this Historical Association is approved by Bivouac 18 and Camp 28, U. C. V., and also by the W. P. Lane Camp at Marshall, Tex., in a letter to Senator Culbertson.

The Frank Cheatham Camp, No. 35, has taken equally strong grounds against Confederate pensions by the United States government. In other States similar action has been taken; and Gen. Stephen D. Lee, though he has issued no official protestation, is pronounced in an interview against it.

None of those who oppose such action, so far as known, have criticised Mr. Hobson, whose father honored the Confederate cause by service in the war and afterwards.

CAPT. JOHN T. WEST.

"'Tis ever wrong to say a good man dies."

Our comrade, Capt. John T. West, has closed his labors and gone to his reward. The end came after a long and painful illness on December 21, 1907, at his home, in Norfolk County, Va. He was a member of Pickett-Buchanan Camp, C. V., Chaplain General of the "Crater Legion," and Superintendent of the Public Schools of Norfolk County. The latter position he had held since 1870 with the exception of one term. As a soldier and educator, he threw all the force of Christian energy into the good work at hand. He was born in Norfolk County in 1836, and was teaching in 1861, when the Confederate war began. He was elected second lieutenant of Company A, 61st Virginia Regiment Infantry, afterwards promoted to first lieutenant, and then to captain. After the evacuation of Norfolk, his command joined the army of Lee, and thenceforth shared the fortunes of this great commander. In the battle of Gettysburg, on the night after Pickett's great charge, the enemy's sharpshooters, occupying a hidden ravine, greatly annoyed the picket line, deployed midway between the two armies. Lieutenant West, with a band of thirty selected men, volunteered to drive them out. Charging over the ground made glorious by the blood of Pickett's heroes, he captured the ravine and a number of prisoners, and held the place under a murderous fire for thirty hours; and at daybreak on July 5, several hours after the army had left Gettysburg, retired with the rear guard, fighting all day and overtaking the army at midnight, after more than sixty hours of unremitting service.

In the spring of 1864 he was detailed to command one of the five companies known as "Mahone's Sharpshooters," comprising one hundred and fifty men and eleven officers, selected by order of General Mahone from the men of his old brigade, who were "noted for alertness and courage." This body of men did the scouting and skirmishing for the brigade, and during the three months, from the battle of the Wilderness to the Crater, were so continuously on the firing line as to lose by death and wounds three-fourths of its number. In the battle of the Crater, where eight hundred of Mahone's men charged several times their number and in a desperate hand-to-hand struggle routed and drove them from the works, Lieutenant West received a bayonet wound in the shoulder, temporarily disabling him.

On August 10 the life of the gallant Capt. William C. Wallace, of Company A, was sacrificed to the cause, and Lieutenant West was promoted to the captaincy and ordered to his old company, which he commanded until February, 1865, when, at the battle of Hatcher's Run, he was struck by a shell, which took away a part of his hip and disabled him for the remainder of the war.

Captain West and his two brothers, William A. and L. M. West, who shared with him in all these years of strife, and both of whom stacked arms at Appomattox, returned to their homes at Cornland and began life anew.

He was untiring in his Church work, and for many years served as superintendent of Sunday schools of the M. E. Church. In every station Captain West acted the part of a good citizen, and attested his love of country by his work in the civil and religious service of his people, as well as by his valiant services on the battlefield.

PEYTON W. JONES.

Camp Macon, U. C. V., No. 1477, buried Peyton W. Jones, one of its charter members, on October 5. The Confederate flag of the Camp was placed on the casket. Every one in Macon knew his record as a public-spirited citizen.

His war record, on file in the Camp records, reads: "Enlisted at Eufaula, Ala., Jan. 17, 1861, age 21 years. Served the entire war in Army of Tennessee. Was engaged in thirteen battles and was paroled May 15, 1865." He served his country well in that grand army of heroes whose fame will grow brighter and brighter as their valor on the battlefield and their splendid fortitude amid the suffering endured in camp become better known. This man was one of them—not a general, but one who as a private in the ranks of the great army of the Confederacy made it possible for the generals with comparatively few of them to hurl back in defeat an army several times their number.

[Sketch by Jehu G. Postell, Adjutant of Camp at Macon, U. C. V., No. 1477.]

MRS. B. W. CARTER.

Daughters of the Confederacy and veteran organizations of the Indian Territory took appropriate action in honoring the memory of the late Mrs. B. W. Carter at Ardmore. The services were opened with prayer by Rev. J. W. Sims, after which the congregation joined in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Mrs. C. M. Campbell sang "Beautiful Hills" and Mrs. Hardy sang "Abide with Me." Col. J. P. Mullins spoke of the war and the hardships entailed upon the women of the South during the struggle, and the meeting closed with a hymn by Miss Parker and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Sims.

The church was filled to overflowing by friends of the deceased who listened to tributes of love and respect to the one woman in the Indian Territory who was revered by everybody, and especially by the old Confederate soldiers, in whom she always manifested the keenest interest, and by the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Resolutions were read from several Camps outside the city, and Mrs. W. T. Nixon, of Ardmore, read a beautiful memorial, in which occurs: "The people of the community in which she lived and died bear loving testimony to the beautiful consistency which characterized her daily life. She was a living exemplification of how lovely the Christian graces can make a sweet-souled woman, the aroma of whose life is given out like that of the night-blooming jasmine, making sweetness in the dark and gloomy experiences of stricken lives. She was another proof that it is the quieter and gentler influences in the moral and religious world which produce the profounder and more lasting impressions. Quiet and unobtrusive in her association and conversation, she yet yielded a beautiful power for good, and it was truly remarked of her that 'one always felt better for having been with her.'"

A. M. HINKLE.

Mr. A. M. Hinkle died at his home, in Bloomfield, Ky. His death was due to paralysis. Mr. Hinkle was a native of and lived nearly all his life of sixty-seven years in the Bloomfield neighborhood. During the War between the States he served under Morgan, and won distinction for his courage and devotion to the cause of the South. As a citizen he won the respect of the public for his manly and Christian character. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, nearly all of his life. He leaves a wife, six children, and a sister, Mrs. G. G. Gilbert.

CAPT. WILLIAM F. GIBSON.

Camp James Adams, U. C. V., Austin, Ark., has lost in the death of Capt. William F. Gibson one of its most beloved and useful members. He died at his home, near Austin, on May 21, 1907, and was buried in the old Austin Cemetery by his comrades of the Camp. Death came to him after long suffering caused by wounds received during the war. In the battle of Chickamauga he was shot through the body, and again at Franklin, receiving a shot through the face and mouth which caused great interference with his speech. He was near the noted cotton gin at the time.

CAPT. WILLIAM F. GIBSON.

Captain Gibson was born in Meade County, Ky., in 1832, but removed to Arkansas before the war. He enlisted in Company I, 8th Arkansas Regiment, and was made captain of the company, serving as such to the end. He was frequently put on outpost duty because of his reliability and bravery, his superior officers having implicit confidence in him.

Captain Gibson was twice married, but neither wife survived him. He was a consistent member of the Church and a useful and respected citizen of the community.

JAMES EDWARD HOPE.

James Edward Hope died at College Hill, Lafayette County, Miss., November 14, 1907. He was born at College Hill in 1842, and enlisted in Company G, 30th Mississippi Volunteer Infantry, at the organization of the regiment. He held the responsible position of ensign through all the engagements in which the regiment participated till he was wounded, with the flag of the regiment in his hands, at Franklin, Tenn., in Hood's memorable assault upon the Federal works. He was taken prisoner, and was in prison at Camp Chase and Fort Delaware. After exchange his wound prevented his returning to active service. It disabled him for many years after the war. At the time of his death he was an active member of the Confederate Camp at Oxford, Miss., and custodian of the magnificent flag presented to the survivors of Walthall's Brigade at the Dallas Reunion by Mrs. John Ross, the daughter of General Walthall.

JOSEPH R. SULLIVAN.

Joseph R. Sullivan was born in Lewisville, Ark., in 1840; and died near Little Rock, Ark., November 15, 1906. While he was quite young his father moved to Spring Hill, Hempstead County, Ark., where he was reared to manhood. He was among the first to respond to his country's call for soldiers, and joined a company which was being made up by Capt. George Gamble, which became Company H, 2d Arkansas Cavalry. After four months' service, he was discharged on account of bad health and returned home; but upon regaining his health he joined Company A, of the 20th Arkansas Infantry. He was captured in the battle near Corinth, Miss., held for ten days, and then paroled. He was captured the second time at Big Black River, Miss., and sent North, remaining in prison nine months. Upon being exchanged he returned to his regiment, and served to the end of the war. He was a good soldier, stanch and true, who never shirked duty, and was respected and liked by all who knew him.

COL. W. E. CUTSHAW.

On December 19, 1907, Col. Wilfred E. Cutshaw died in Richmond after a prolonged illness. The Times-Dispatch states: "The end of his long and eventful life, characterized by great achievement on the field of battle and in the up-building of the municipality in which he had faithfully served for thirty-four years, came peacefully."

His wife died in 1890. His mother died on Christmas day, 1906, at the age of ninety-four years. He had no children.

Colonel Cutshaw took hold of the rebuilding and reconstruction of the city after it had been ravaged by war. In that work he had to encounter a world of difficulties and tribulations. He planned the erection of the City Hall, the finest structure in Richmond; he made the lines and grades for the streets and avenues; he laid out the parks and boulevards. His greatest ambition was to turn every available foot of space into recreation resorts for the public, and especially the children.

Colonel Cutshaw spent almost every afternoon in his carriage, driving to the east and west end sections, inspecting sewer work and directing his assistants. There was not a question about the city which he could not answer thoroughly, explicitly, and in detail. He demanded and received the best that was in his assistants, and yet with it all he was as gentle as a child.

Colonel Cutshaw was born at Harper's Ferry, Va., now West Virginia, on January 25, 1838. His father was George W. Cutshaw, a native of Loudoun County, Va., who died in 1887. The grandfather of Colonel Cutshaw was John W. Cutshaw, a Maryland farmer, who was a veteran of the War of 1812. The Cutshaw family were of Scotch extraction. His mother, Martha J. Moxley, was born in Alexandria, and was of English ancestry.

Colonel Cutshaw, after preparation at home and at a local academy, entered the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington, where he graduated in 1858 with a thorough knowledge of civil and military engineering, a profession to which he had given the study of a lifetime. Colonel Cutshaw became in 1859 an instructor in the Hampton Military Institute, continuing there until the spring of 1861, when he resigned to enter the service of the Confederate army.

In April, 1861, Colonel Cutshaw was made a first lieutenant in the regular army and assigned to a battalion of artillery in the brigade of Gen. T. J. Jackson. In the spring of 1862 he was promoted to captain of artillery; in the fall of 1862 he was made a major; and in February, 1865, he became a lieutenant colonel, with command of a battalion of artillery.

Colonel Cutshaw's war record was exceptionally brilliant. He participated in the operations of General Magruder in the Peninsula in the summer of 1861 and in the campaigns of Jackson in the Valley in the spring of 1862. He was severely wounded in the battle of Winchester, in May, 1862, when a bullet pierced his left knee, and he was captured by the Federal forces. He remained a prisoner until exchanged, in April, 1863. Having been pronounced by a medical examining board as unfit for active duty, he was assigned as acting commander of cadets at the Virginia Military Institute, a position which he held until September, 1863, when he applied for readmission into the Confederate army, and was accepted, although his wound was unhealed. He was assigned to duty as inspector general of artillery, Second Corps, Army of Northern Virginia, participating in a number of battles in 1863 and 1864. In February, 1865, he received his rank of lieutenant colonel of artillery, in which capacity he served until April, 1865, when in the battle of Sailor's Creek, just three days before the surrender at Appomattox, he received a wound in his right leg, and the next morning the leg was amputated between the knee and the hip.

For a year after the war Colonel Cutshaw engaged in temporary pursuits. In September, 1866, he was appointed assistant professor of mathematics in the Virginia Military Institute, the position held previous to the war by Stonewall Jackson.

In the fall of 1873 he was elected City Engineer of the city of Richmond, a position which he had ably and acceptably filled for more than thirty-four years. During his service as City Engineer of Richmond Colonel Cutshaw saw the city practically rebuilt. Perhaps the most notable work of the City Engineer's Department in this period was the construction of the City Hall, which was built by day labor under the personal supervision of Colonel Cutshaw and his assistants.

Known everywhere as a man of iron will, of indomitable perseverance, and of the highest integrity, Colonel Cutshaw ever guarded jealously the city's interests. Widely known in his profession, Colonel Cutshaw was an active member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. He also held membership in the Royal Arcanum, the Virginia Historical Society, and the Southern Historical Society. He was for many years the President of the Society of the Alumni of the Virginia Military Institute, and an active member and patron of the Richmond Y. M. C. A.

Colonel Cutshaw was twice married, his first wife being Mrs. E. S. Norfleet, whom he married in December, 1876. She died two months later, in January, 1877. In January, 1890, he married Miss M. W. Morton, of Richmond, who died in December of the same year.

Gen. R. E. Lee, though at the time a resident of Lexington, took an active interest in securing for Colonel Cutshaw the position of City Engineer for Richmond.

SETH M. TIMBERLAKE.

This venerable veteran died in the home of his son, Charles E. Timberlake, Brooklyn, N. Y., December 18, 1907, in his seventy-fifth year. The remains were buried at Fishersville, Va. The funeral was conducted by his pastor, G. W. Finley, D.D., of the Presbyterian Church. A guard of honor was composed of his comrades of the Stonewall Camp, U. C. V., Stanton. He was twice married, his first wife being a sister of Messrs. Milton, William W., and of the late Charles Broadway Rouss, of New York. His second wife was a Miss Timberlake.

His service in the Confederate army is reported by the Spirit of Jefferson, published at Charlestown, W. Va.: "At the beginning of the war Mr. Timberlake enlisted in the Confederate service in Company G, 2d Virginia Regiment, Stonewall Brigade. He was twice badly wounded, first in the first battle of Manassas and later in a skirmish in this town. After the first battle of Manassas, he was transferred to cavalry service and entered Company B, 12th Virginia Cavalry, afterwards Rosser's (the "Laurel") Brigade. At the time of being wounded at Manassas, though suffering much and needing the surgeon's care, he constituted himself a guard, and, with gun in hand, sat for two hours at the door of the field hospital, trying to preserve order and thus aid the doctors in their work; and only after this self-imposed, faithful service were his own wounds dressed. From the beginning to the close of the war he was always in active service, except when disabled by wounds or sickness, and he was never a prisoner. Not being at Appomattox, he was not surrendered with Lee's army, but started at once with others to join General Johnston in the South, and had gotten well into North Carolina when he heard that Johnston had surrendered. He at once retraced his steps and came back to his old home, in Frederick County, Va., and was never paroled. A friend who stood by his casket remarked: 'He has made his first surrender.'"

TOWNSEND N. CONRAD.

Comrade T. N. Conrad was born in Loudon County, Va., in 1840. He was a great-great-grandson of General Ellis, of Revolutionary fame. In 1861 he enlisted in the Dixie (Virginia) Battery and served until the end of the Confederate war. Afterwards Mr. Conrad filled several positions of trust. He held a post in the chancery office of New Jersey under the late Senator Henry S. Little. In 1879 he accepted a position with the Star Rubber Company, of Baltimore, as managing salesman for the South and Southwest, attaining the front rank in the trade. After the failure of the Star Rubber Company, he became an organizer and general manager of the Patapsco Rubber Company, of Baltimore. More recently he was connected with the United and Globe Rubber Company, of this city, as traveling representative in the South.

A notable event in connection with his funeral is the fact that a Grand Army Post took a leading part at his funeral.

A Baltimore paper says: "Three rifle volleys that will echo across the Potomac and through the valleys and along the mountain ranges of the South to the Florida Everglades were fired yesterday afternoon over the grave into which Townsend

N. Conrad had just been lowered in Greenwood Cemetery. Those who paid him last honors had stood in the trenches over which the stars and stripes waved while he fought under the flag of the Confederacy nearly fifty years ago. * * * It is likely that no other former Confederate veteran was thus honored by a Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the act doubtless will be commented upon quite as much as was the reception held in this city by the same organization, Aaron Wilkes Post, some twenty-five years ago, for Robert Lee Camp, of Richmond, Va. That was the first official entertainment ever provided by a G. A. R. Post for an organization consisting of former Confederates."

The James R. Herbert Camp, No. 657, U. C. V., passed resolutions in recognition of the fraternal courtesy of the Aaron Wilkes Post, G. A. R., in which they express "appreciation to its fullest extent of the fraternal spirit exhibited in the courtesy shown our deceased comrade and tender our heartfelt thanks to the Aaron Wilkes Post, G. A. R., for the honor conferred."

This spirit of fraternity has been shown frequently at the South. At Murfreesboro, Tenn., some two years ago the U. C. V. Camp of that place and other Confederates attended the funeral of Carter Harrison, a Union veteran and a brother of President Benjamin Harrison. They marched in the procession wearing their badges and in every suitable way showing their respect for the deceased. Such fraternal considerations have been shown frequently by Confederates, and it is the proper thing to do where the deceased had shown that he had right regard for them.

[Report from Charles H. Mettee, Adjutant of the Camp.]

DR. STEPHEN W. TURPIN.

A committee reporting upon the life of Dr. S. W. Turpin, who fell asleep May 13, 1907, says of him:

"A pure man, a gallant and distinguished soldier, has heard the call and crossed over the river. Dr. Turpin had just received his diploma from the Louisiana Medical College when the war drums waked the Southern land. He enlisted as a private in the Confederate army. In 1862, in a class of fifty, he was one of thirty-five to pass before the Medical Army Board of the Confederate army. While serving as assistant surgeon he was, upon the recommendation of the surgeon general of the Army of Tennessee, chosen by Lieut. Gen. Stephen D. Lee as his staff surgeon, with the rank of colonel in the Confederate army. He was with and followed General Lee in all the remaining battles of the Army of Tennessee. For his skillful treatment of General Lee's wound at the battle of Franklin and for his coolness and judgment in the very hail of battle he won the undying esteem of General Lee.

"Attaining eminence in his chosen profession, Dr. Turpin moved to Pointe Coupee Parish, forming a partnership with his uncle, Dr. John G. Archer. Through the dark days of reconstruction he bore himself with great gentleness, but unflinching firmness. From childhood years to his evening sunset he stood for the purest ideals of Christian character. The brave soldier in the ranks, the skillful surgeon on field or in hospital, the distinguished medical adviser of his staff—in each and every place he represented the purest, the best in human endeavor.

"He was a loyal member of the Charles Batchelor Camp, U. C. V., was its Surgeon, and, until forbidden by failing health, served on the staff of the Louisiana Division, U. C. V.

"As brother, husband, father, and friend, Dr. Turpin reached the high ideal of Christian manhood. Those with or without means received his professional services alike. His skillful treatment, his great refinement endeared him to the homes where he served the rich and the poor.

"Long will he be missed, long will his memory live in the hearts of those who knew him here. The Charles Batchelor Camp, U. C. V., mourns with the sad and grieved hearts of his own dear home, into whose lives he gave so much comfort, so much sunshine, so much peace."

The vestry of his Church publishes a sketch of him:

"Born in Jefferson County, Miss., in 1837, he graduated from Oxford College, Mississippi, and later from the Louisiana Medical College in 1861. As a surgeon he attained distinction, and in his extended field of practice he won esteem and affection both for his remarkable skill and his pure, refined, and unblemished life. His word was as sacred as his bond. He stood before all men as an example of a beautiful character, a brave, honorable gentleman. His place cannot easily be filled.

"Coming from an old and honored family, he carried through his whole life the ideals of simplicity blended with dignity. He won the hearts of all who knew him well. He stood for pure and lofty ideals of Christian manhood. His influence was felt among all classes of men. His memory will live as he lived—the soul of honor, the man of worth.

"For long years he was a vestryman of St. Stephen's Church, Innis, La., a communicant of this Church. The vestry of St. Stephen's Church mourns the departure of a lofty character, a pure, faithful brother. We mourn with hearts he loved best and who loved him most, who now grieve beneath their own great sorrow. We pray the merciful Lord to comfort them with his own divine peace, his own divine light."

DR. E. B. WOOD.

Dr. E. B. Wood was called to join the great army December 2, 1907. He was born in Bibb County, Ala., in 1831, the third of nine children born to Allen Wood, a native Georgian and a grandson of Joshua Wood, who, it is understood, served from Georgia in the Revolutionary War. In 1818 Allen Wood moved to Alabama, in which State he died in 1873.

Dr. Wood at the age of twenty-two years entered Central Institute, in his native county. Afterwards he took a course of lectures at the Nashville Medical College. He next entered the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, Pa., where he graduated in 1860. He was in Philadelphia during the exciting times succeeding the Baltimore convention which nominated Douglas for President. After graduating, the Doctor returned home and engaged in the practice of his profession until the outbreak of the war, when he enlisted in Company B, 34th Regiment, of which he was elected first lieutenant, and after a few months' service was promoted captain of the company. He served in that capacity until the battle of Missionary Ridge, where he was taken prisoner, carried to Johnson's Island, and held nineteen months. On June 14, 1865, he was released and returned to Alabama. He practiced medicine there until 1870, when he went to Texas, where he practiced his profession until 1881. When the Cotton Belt Railroad was built through Hill County and a depot established at Hubbard City, he moved to that place, and had an extensive practice for six years, when he retired from the practice to look after his large landed interests.

He was married in 1861 to Miss Sarah Barrett, of Georgia. They had five children, two of whom are physicians.

JUDGE J. N. HENDERSON.

Judge John N. Henderson died at his residence, in Dallas, Tex., Sunday, December 22, 1907, after an illness of several years. He was born in South Carolina in 1843, and the family went to Washington County, Tex., in 1846. At the beginning of the War between the States he enlisted in Company E, 5th Texas Infantry, Hood's Texas Brigade, A. N. V. He participated in all the battles in which the brigade was engaged up to and including Sharpsburg, where he lost an arm. After recovering from that wound, although he had only one arm, he served the remainder of the war upon the staff of Gen. J. B. Robertson with the rank of captain. After the war he studied law and located at Bryan, Tex. In 1874 he was elected District Attorney, which office he held until 1880, when he was elected State Senator. In 1888 he was appointed by Governor Ross District Attorney to fill a vacancy, and was elected by the people to the same office in 1890. While still holding the office of District Judge he was elected Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals in 1894, and was reelected in 1900 and again in 1906.

Whether as soldier, citizen, lawyer, or judge, he was without fear and without reproach. As an officer, he was industrious conscientious, and able; as a friend, he was generous and true; while to his family his loss is irreparable. He left them an honorable record and an untarnished name.

CAPT. LOUIS WALBURG.

The Columbus (Miss.) Dispatch reports the death of Capt. L. Walburg, which occurred in December, 1907, "and brought genuine sorrow and grief not alone to his relatives, but to many comrades who had served with him in the army and who had enjoyed his friendship during times of peace. He was a man possessed of many noble qualities. He not only served with gallantry on the battlefield, but was faithful to his obligations as a man, having been at all times true to his convictions and loyal to his friends."

Captain Walburg was born at Covington, Ky., in 1837, and was seventy-one years of age. He went to Columbus shortly before the war, and was among the first to respond to the call for troops for the Southern army. He left Columbus in March, 1861, as a member of Captain Wade's company, the command going to Mobile and thence to Pensacola, and upon arrival at the latter place the company became part of the 10th Mississippi Infantry. This command was under Col. Moses Phillips, who died after six weeks' service and was succeeded by Col. Robert A. Smith, a Scotchman. While the regiment was encamped at Pensacola four of its companies were formed into a battalion of sharpshooters under command of Col. W. C. Richards, of Columbus, and Captain Walburg served with this battalion, having been a member of Capt. Thomas Brownrigg's company. On March 6, 1864, he was wounded in front of Marietta, Ga.; and after having remained in the hospital at Marietta for several weeks, he was discharged, his wound disqualifying him for further service.

Upon his return from the war Captain Walburg went to Artesia, where he met Miss Mary Childers, who became his wife in 1867. Captain Walburg returned to Columbus later on, and was connected with the police force, serving as captain for a number of years. He later engaged in mercantile pursuits, retiring from business several years ago. He was a member of Isham Harrison Camp, U. C. V., and was one of the Pension Commissioners of Lowndes County.

W. A. Campbell, of Columbus, writes of him: "Captain Walburg belonged to a fine company in the sharpshooting command under Col. W. C. Richards. Richards, Walburg, and Connor were all desperately wounded, yet Walburg is the first of the three to die. How pleasantly I recall his cheery hand clasp and his salutation: 'How is Friend Campbell?' A friend greeting him once said: 'Captain, are you not sorry you did not join the army of the North and get on the fat pension roll?' 'No,' said Walburg; 'I get my pension here,' placing his hand on his heart."

DR. JOHN J. SCOTT.

Dr. John J. Scott, one of Shreveport's grand old men and an ardent Confederate, "crossed over" on December 4, 1907. His active pallbearers consisted of two members of the Masons, two members of the Knights of Pythias, two of the Confederate Veterans, two of the Knights of St. John, and two citizens. He was a member of these orders. The honorary pallbearers were members of the medical profession, and the Medical Society attended the funeral in a body.

Dr. J. J. Scott was one of Shreveport's oldest and most highly esteemed physicians and citizens. He lived in Shreveport for many years, and his charity, so general, will be sadly missed by many of the poor of that city.

Dr. Scott was born in Edgefield, S. C., in 1837, and was of Revolutionary lineage. When a young man he chose the profession of medicine, and when a mere youth he made the trip on horseback from Edgefield, S. C., to Redland, Bossier Parish, La., where he settled and practiced medicine. The trip was filled with peril in those days, when the trail of Indian ponies and the stagecoach ran through the wild woods.

Dr. Scott married in Bossier, and for many years lived there, engaging actively in the practice of medicine.

Dr. Scott joined the Southern forces, enlisting in Company B, Bossier Cavalry, 1st Louisiana Squadron, in 1861, and at the end of the war was with the 16th Texas Infantry, Walker's Division, of which he was assistant surgeon.

DR. JOHN JOSEPH SCOTT.

Through the four years of this great struggle Dr. Scott followed the stars and bars through all the privations, suffering, and hardships. His shroud was the same stars and bars, the cause of which he so bravely championed.

Dr. Scott had a fracture of a lower limb which developed such serious complications that it had to be amputated, and he was too weak to rally from the shock. The medical profession did all that could be done to stay the flickering flame. Like a child going to peaceful sleep, the hero of many battles gradually drifted off.

He is survived by his wife and five children, and a brother resides in South Carolina.

DR. J. H. LASSATER.

Dr. J. H. Lassater was born in Manchester, Tenn., November 21, 1841; and died suddenly on November 16, 1907, from a stroke of apoplexy at his home, in Belton, Tex. His early life was spent in Manchester. In Tullahoma, Tenn., he was married to Miss Mattie Aydelott in 1869. He removed his family to Texas in 1876, living in Georgetown one year, thence going to Belton in 1877, where he lived continuously afterwards. His profession was that of dentistry. Three daughters and a son survive of the family.

COL. T. J. REID.

Thomas J. Reid, colonel of the 12th Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, was born in Caswell County, N. C., in December, 1837; and died at Niles, Ill., October 30, 1907. He was one of the Southern students who left the Philadelphia Medical College in 1860 and entered the Richmond School of Medicine, from which he graduated the same year.

He enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861, and at the organization of the 12th Arkansas Regiment he was elected major, serving thus until the capture of Island No. 10. Just before the capture of this place he had been ordered back to Arkansas to raise a cavalry battalion, which he did, and it was put in the 3d Arkansas Cavalry, commanded by Colonel Slemmons, in which command he served as major until the 12th Regiment was released. At the reorganization he was chosen its commander, and so continued, when not on brigade duty, till the surrender of Fort Hudson, July 9, 1863. Colonel Reid escaped at New Orleans and made his way to Mobile, thence back to the Trans-Mississippi Department, where he again took command of the 12th Regiment, and served until the final capitulation at Marshall, Tex. His record during the war was without a blemish. He was always at his post. Duty was a sublime word to him.

CAPT. P. J. JOHNSON.

Capt. P. J. Johnson, a prominent citizen of Lenoir, N. C., died at his home on the 21st of March, 1907. He was born in Burke County, near Rutherford College, in 1840, the son of Daniel Philip and Agnes Salina Johnson, who reared three sons and seven daughters.

In the spring of 1861 Philip Jefferson Johnson enlisted in Company G, of the 1st (Bethel) Regiment of North Carolina Troops; and after six months of service in the Peninsula, he was discharged, reënlisting in Company K, of the 35th North Carolina. He was elected captain of his company in December, 1862, and led them in the battle of Fredericksburg. After this he was engaged for some time at campaigning his own State under General Hoke in the memorable capture of Plymouth. Returning to Virginia, he fought at Drewry's Bluff and Bermuda Hundred, and won distinction by his gallantry in the battles before Petersburg. In the Bloody Angle there, "by his reckless daring and able leadership," he is said to have turned the tide of the battle.

After the war, his life was spent in serving his State as a good citizen and official, having been Mayor of his town and held other offices of trust.

SAMUEL JOSEPH WILKINS.

Maj. Gen. Samuel J. Wilkins, late Commander of the Oklahoma Division, U. C. V., died December 18, 1906, at Norman, Okla. He was born near Greenville, Ky., April 22, 1841; and in 1857 moved to Collin County, Tex., where he resided for thirty-two years. In 1889 he cast his lot with the people of Norman, Okla., and resided there till death.

In the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted in the 6th Texas Cavalry Regiment, Gano's Brigade, McCulloch's Division, and served through the entire war with distinction and bravery. He also served his county in the capacity of Probate Judge for four years and as City Assessor for several years. At the time of his death he held the office of Police Judge. "Uncle Joe," as he was more familiarly known among his friends, was an upright citizen and a Christian gentleman, beloved by all who knew him. He was an ardent friend to the cause of the South, and took a keen interest in all of the Remmions, having organized the first annual reunion for Oklahoma in 1904.

[Sketch by J. W. Armstrong, Aid-de-Camp of Oklahoma Division, U. C. V.]

GATLIN.—Another name has been dropped from the roll of the Camp at Baldwyn, Miss., to be registered in the camp of the Celestial City. Joe Gatlin was a member of the 32d Mississippi Regiment, a true and faithful soldier, facing the foe with undaunted courage. He died on the 9th of November, and was laid to rest in Ozark Cemetery by friends and relatives. He had passed his seventieth year, and had long been a Church member.

T. J. REID.

LIEUT. ISAAC N. TILLITT.

Lieut. Isaac N. Tillitt, Company G, 59th North Carolina Regiment (Cavalry), enlisted at the opening of the war in Company G, organized in Currituck County, N. C., and served as a faithful soldier and gallant officer until his capture at Middleburg. His superior intellect marked him for selection as an officer, and his later conduct amply proved his capacity to execute the trust. He was especially distinguished for his seeming reckless bravery, as can be best illustrated by the circumstance of his capture. It was at Middleburg, and during the heat of the engagement he had become separated from his command, which, for want of ammunition, had surrendered without his knowledge. Riding alone to rejoin his regiment, he was approached by two Federal cavalymen, who demanded his surrender. With the daring that characterized a Confederate soldier he replied, "Not so long as I have a cartridge in my carbine," and shot down one of his enemies. As he was leveling his carbine on the other, one of his superior officers, riding up, shouted: "Lieutenant Tillitt, surrender!" Tillitt, resting his piece, coolly asked: "Do you advise or command it?" "I command it," was the reply. "Then I obey," answered the lieutenant.

Owing to his capture and imprisonment, this was the last order he responded to until, on the 8th of last November, he obeyed the call of his Great Commander and went to rest in the "bivouac of the dead" with a multitude of other brave men who wore the gray.

Because of his firing after the surrender of his command he was kept in prison (at Johnson's Island) without privilege of exchange until the end of the war. It was at first intended to try him by court-martial for violating the laws of war. Investigation proved to his captors, however, that he had fired without knowledge of the surrender, and proceedings were dropped. After the war he became a teacher at Elizabeth City, N. C. In this profession he attained distinction no less than in that of arms. He lived in his community a cultured gentleman, a kind friend and teacher, a good citizen.

[The foregoing was sent by J. Kenyon Wilson, Esq., of Elizabeth City, N. C. The VETERAN is not sure that there was a 59th Cavalry Regiment from the Old North State.—Ed.]

MRS. FANNIE BIRD HARRIS.

Full eighty years ago the home of Rev. Francis Bird was blessed by the coming of a little daughter, who was called Frances. This was in Habersham County, Ga., but soon after the family removed to near Dalton. She was doubly orphaned during the stirring years of war and left to the care of married sisters. True to the Southern cause and brave as the bravest in the risks she ran to aid it, she was threatened frequently banishment to be sent across the Ohio River, but she never wavered. Her homes were on the battlefield of Chickamauga, near Ringgold, Tunnel Hill, and Dalton. In 1868 she was married to Rev. J. J. Harris, who was chaplain of the 26th Tennessee Regiment during the war. In 1833 they removed to Texas, where he joined the Northwest Conference. He died at Iredell, Tex., in 1903; and after the marriage of their daughter to Dr. W. M. Terrell, of Graham, Tex., last spring, she made her home with them. Her charitable spirit was evinced by one of her last bequests of $100 to the Orphans' Home at Waco. She had been quite an invalid for much of sixty years, yet her memory was vivid of the scenes of long ago, and especially of the war period.

DEATHS IN POPE COUNTY, ARK.

The following Confederate soldiers have died. All of them enlisted from Pope County, Ark., and all belonged to Ben T. Embry Camp, No. 977, except Joseph Potts:

M. H. Weathers, aged about sixty-two years.

M. A. Haralson, in August, 1907, aged sixty-four years.

J. W. Dickey, September 25, 1907, aged seventy-three years.

Dr. R. H. Davis, in October, 1907, aged eighty years.

Joseph Potts, December 1, 1907, aged seventy-six years.

All were good soldiers and true Southerners. M. A. Haralson gave a leg to the cause of the South. M. H. Weathers's case was a peculiar one. All his relatives in Arkansas went to the Federals, but he stood firm with his Southern neighbors and friends. Not one of these or their parents owned any negroes. Some of their kinsfolk who owned slaves went North to save them, but lost negroes and honor all the same. Some of these above were poor in this world's goods, but rich in honor, as all Confederates are with few exceptions.

MAJ. J. C. SEXTON.

Maj. Joseph Campbell Sexton, of Wytheville, Va., has passed away. Major Sexton was seventy-four years of age. He was born and lived all his life in the dwelling that he died in. He had been in declining health for several years.

During his younger days he was active in business and in Church work. He was prominent in work of the secret orders of which he was a member—the Odd Fellows (fifty-four years) and the Masons.

He was at the hanging of John Brown at Harper's Ferry, being a member of the Wythe Grays. At the outbreak of hostilities in '61 he cast his lot with the Confederacy, and was a gallant soldier of Company A, 4th Virginia Regiment, his company afterwards becoming a part of the "Stonewall" Brigade. He was made commissary for the Second Corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, and at the close of the war was major on the staff of Gen. John B. Gordon.

After the war he returned to Wytheville and resumed business (saddles and harness), which he conducted very successfully until he retired, six or eight years ago.

Major Sexton is survived by three sisters and three brothers. Major Sexton was an active member of the Presbyterian Church until his health failed, and was one of its deacons.

JAMES S. RYAN.

Comrade James S. Ryan started from his home, in Houston County, Ga., to attend the State Reunion in Augusta, but died before reaching there. A committee reports upon the sad event through J. R. Matthews, member of Houston County Camp, U. C. V.: "But ere he got here the Great Commander of the universe called him to meet with the comrades who have crossed over the river, there to dwell with Lee, Jackson, and Johnstons, together with all our loved ones that have gone before, together with those who wore the blue as well as those who wore the gray, there to dwell where there is no more war, no more strife, but eternal peace and happiness, in a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

WATT.—John Watt entered into rest in November, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He served with the 1st Kentucky Cavalry, passing the four years in the saddle, and faithfully performed the duties of a soldier in the many engagements of his company. He was a member of the Gen. John H. Lewis Camp, of Glasgow.

MAINTENANCE OF EX-PRESIDENTS.

Grover Cleveland, in the Youth's Companion, furnishes some wise and pertinent suggestions concerning Ex-Presidents of the United States. Extracts are here given:

"The President of the French Republic receives an annual salary amounting to one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, together with sixty thousand dollars for the maintenance and furnishing of his official residence, and a like sum to cover the expenses of travel and entertainment. This is decidedly in the direction of securing a dignified and unperplexed future support to its Ex-President.

"It is hardly to be supposed that such an expenditure as this on account of our presidential office would accord with American ideas. It is not so easy, however, to dismiss from our minds the thought that the American nation cannot well afford to disregard entirely the conditions that confront its retired Presidents nor longer to allow itself to be accessory to the pitiful incidents that have frequently resulted from such conditions.

"Our national pride should be rudely touched when we read concerning Thomas Jefferson after his retirement from the presidency: 'By degrees Jefferson became a poor man, and indeed worse than poor, since he was involved in pecuniary embarrassments. Before matters had reached this stage he had sold his library to Congress for twenty-three thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars.'

"Although he expressed himself as desiring nothing from the public treasury, he accepted pecuniary aid furnished by private subscription with the pathetic statement: 'I have given my whole life to my countrymen, and now they nobly come forward in the only way they can and save an old servant from being turned like a dog out of doors.'

"John Quincy Adams, a short time before he retired from the presidency and in contemplation of that event, wrote as follows: 'The income of my whole private estate is less than six thousand dollars a year, and I am paying at least two thousand of that for interest on my debt. Finally, upon going out of office in one year from this time, destitute of all means of acquiring property, it will be only by the sacrifice of that which I now possess that I shall be able to support my family.'

"But it is not the restraint to which he is subjected as a mere depository of the people's dignity which reminds him most directly that his retirement means something very different from an absolute rest and freedom from the people's service.

"He is made a target for all manner of pecuniary solicitations embracing all sorts of objects, ranging from large endowment funds and disinterested offers of fabulously profitable investment to pathetic and depressing appeals for the relief of individual distress. He is almost daily importuned to join in the management of public or semipublic enterprises which profess to be useful or beneficent or charitable. He is persistently urged to make addresses on topics and for purposes that are bewildering and at times and places that are impossible. His daily mail furnishes conclusive evidence that his existence is not overlooked by any class or condition of our people in any corner of our land.

"Whatever omission there may be of fair and considerate conduct on the part of our people in their relations with their Ex-Presidents ought to be made good by a definite and generous provision for all cases alike based upon motives of justice and fairness and adequate to the situation. The condition is by no means met by the meager and spasmodic relief oc-asionally furnished under the guise of a military pension or some other pretext, nor would it be best met by making compensation already accrued or accruing dependent upon the discharge of senatorial or other official duty.

"If, in concluding this discussion, a personal word is necessary or permissible in view of the fact that I am the only man now living who could at this time profit by the ideas I have advocated, I hope my sincerity will not be questioned when I say that I have dealt with the subject without the least thought of personal interest or desire for personal advantage. I am not in need of aid from the public treasury. I hope and believe that I have provided for myself and those dependent upon me a comfortable maintenance within the limits of accustomed prudence and economy, and that those to whom I owe the highest earthly duty will not waver when I am gone.

"These conditions have permitted me to treat with the utmost freedom a topic which involves no personal considerations, and only has to do in my mind with conditions that may arise in the future, but are not attached to the Ex-President of to-day; and I am sure that I am actuated only by an ever-present desire that the fairness and sense of justice characteristic of Americanism shall neither fail nor be obscured."

INTERESTS OF THE RAILROADS AND THE PEOPLE.

W. W. Finley, President of the Southern Railway Company, in response to a toast at an annual banquet of the "Greater Charlotte Club," Charlotte, N. C., in November, said in part:

"I do not think I can do better than to take the motto of your club as the subject of my talk to you this evening: 'Watch Charlotte Grow.' There is an air of conviction about it which shows your confidence in yourselves and in your city and its future. You know that the opportunity is before you, and you have faith in your ability to build up a Greater Charlotte. That this faith is not misplaced is known by all who have watched the progress of your city.

"A leaflet issued by your club puts your population in 1906 at 40,000. This would make your population to-day nearly seven times as great as in 1880, more than three times as great as in 1890, and more than twice as great as in 1900. And why should not Charlotte grow? With an energetic people located in the midst of a country abounding in natural resources and enjoying an ideal climate, where the winters are invigorating without being rigorous and where the heat of summer is tempered by the breezes from the Blue Ridge, all conditions are favorable for the growth and prosperity of Charlotte and other parts of this wonderful Piedmont region.

"Elimination of waste is a characteristic of modern business. One of the results of this tendency to eliminate waste is the movement to concentrate manufacturing industries in proximity to the sources of supply of their raw materials. To this is due the development of cotton-manufacturing in the South.

"You are all familiar with the growth of the Southern cotton-manufacturing industry; but, unless you have taken time to analyze the statistics, some of you may not realize the rapidity of this growth and its economic significance. Within one hundred miles of Charlotte there are three hundred and sixty cotton mills, with a total of 4,755,000 spindles. Do you realize that this means that within a circle two hundred miles in diameter, with Charlotte as the center, there are to-day more than eight times as many spindles as there were in the whole South in 1880 and nearly 400,000 more than there were in the whole South as recently as 1900?

"In 1880 the mills of the cotton-producing States consumed but 188,748 bales of cotton. In the year ending August 31, 1907, they consumed 2,410,993 bales, equal to 18.1 per cent of the crop of 1906 of 13,305,265 bales. In each of the last three years the cotton-producing States have consumed more cotton than New England, the excess of the South in the last year being 337,638 bales. In the twenty-seven years since 1880 the consumption of the Southern mills has increased 1,176 per cent, while the consumption of the New England mills has increased but eighty-three per cent. These figures do not mean that the cotton-manufacturing business of New England is to be destroyed; but they do mean that Southern leadership in the production of the coarser grades of goods is now firmly established, and already the tendency in many localities, and especially in your Piedmont region, is toward the manufacture of finer grades, in which the value of your raw material is multiplied many times over by the application of labor and skill before it is sent out into the markets of the world.

"Transportation must ever in the future continue to be as important an element in human affairs as it has been in the past. Its relation to the development of prosperity and civilization is based on certain axiomatic economic principles, which are so clear that no amount of elaboration can add to the force of their bare statement. The first of these is, that adequacy of transportation is essential to the progress of any community. The second is, that a community can attain the fullest measure of prosperity only when the agencies on which it must depend for transportation are able to increase their facilities so as to keep pace with the increasing demand for their service. The third is, that a transportation agency can prosper only as a result of the prosperity of the communities served by it. Another is, that capital will flow most freely into those channels of business in which investors can feel a reasonable degree of certainty that their principal will be safe and that it will yield a fair return as a result of the earning of a proper margin of income over the costs of operation and maintenance. * * *

"If the transportation problem is to be discussed on this ground, it must be recognized by the public that a railway possesses no immunity from the operation of economic laws. If it is to be successful and is to be an efficient agency of transportation, there must result for it, just as for any other successful business enterprise, a proper margin between its receipts and its expenditures. If its expenses are to be increased by advances in the cost of labor and in the prices of supplies and materials by the exactions of law and by other causes beyond its control, its revenues must be protected from unreasonable reduction, or the result, in obedience to an irresistible economic law, must be destructive. Such destruction would be a calamity no less to the public than to the railways, and it is necessary in the interest of the national welfare that it should be averted. This can be done only by pursuing conservative and constructive policies. As a result of a lack of understanding between the railways and the people, of responsibility for which we must assume our share, the process of pulling down and destroying has continued long without abatement.

"I do not believe there is any substantial ground for criticism of the rates affecting North Carolina points as too high. It is contended that they are too high in comparison with the Virginia city rates. On the same ground, it might be contended that they are too low as compared with rates affecting points farther South, for rates between more Southerly points and the West are higher than those affecting North Carolina points. In both cases the differences in rates are the results of economic conditions and not of arbitrary discriminations.

"This relative rate adjustment is a problem to which the management of the company is giving a great deal of consideration; and if any practicable solution can be pointed out, the company will be glad to adopt it. It is a matter which, I believe, should be dealt with and settled by direct conference between the railway company and its patrons, as I believe should always be done wherever it is possible. I believe that most controversies as to railway charges and service can be settled in this way when the complainants and the representatives of the railway meet in the proper spirit and in mutual confidence, each willing to give due consideration to the facts and arguments presented by the other side.

"Governmental regulation of railways within its proper sphere does not involve the surrender by a railway company of any constitutional right. It is not inconsistent with governmental regulation for a railway to adopt proper means to acquaint the public and State and Federal authorities with facts as to legislation that would be hurtful to it and injurious to its owners. I do not believe that the American people, or any government deriving its authority from them, will ever be so arbitrary as to deny to a great property interest performing an important service to the public and subject to governmental regulation the right to be heard in argument and in protest before the legislative body or administrative tribunal that determines the nature and extent of that regulation. This right is inseparable from free government. * * *

"A few years ago participation by railway companies in political affairs was by public sentiment not only tolerated but was encouraged. Appeals were made to them to assist as a highly patriotic service the success of men, of parties, and of principles deemed essential to our civilization as a people. If abuses arose from this, it was hardly more than could have been anticipated—hardly less than a natural and inevitable consequence.

"Participation by these companies in political matters is no longer justified, if it ever was, by conditions, and is no longer approved by public sentiment. It has passed away with many other political abuses which have been condemned and abandoned.

"I do not, however, think it just to the management of railways, which have been only too glad to conform to these higher and better standards, to condemn them for a course now a matter of the past, and which was when in use adopted and pursued in accordance with the public sentiment which, then at least, even in many of its abuses, tolerated if it did not justify it. It is juster to let that 'dead past bury its dead,' and for us, who are charged with the solemn responsibilities of the present and of the future, to turn our faces toward the duties which in the interest of mankind we must perform—juster that we be judged by the fidelity which we exhibit under these new and better standards toward the responsibilities which we have assumed.

"The railways ask that they be recognized as business institutions and that they be given an opportunity under the protection of just laws and an enlightened public opinion to cooperate with all our people for the development of our common country. In much of the territory in our Southern section men put their money into railway construction and into the welding together of weak and disjointed lines in efficient through systems not on the assurance of things that were but in the faith in things to come. They looked into the future and saw the South, with its great natural resources developed, teeming with a prosperous people and with a commerce no longer restricted to raw materials, but made up in larger part of manufactured products. They saw the Southern farmer not only reaping greater returns from cotton, but enjoying that larger prosperity from diversified agriculture, made possible by enlarged home markets and by adequate transportation to the markets of the world. They have been content with very moderate returns in the faith that they would be allowed to benefit, in some measure, from the increased prosperity made possible by their courage and their faith in the Southern people and in Southern opportunities. Their work is not yet done. With every Southern community calling for more and better facilities, they have a right to expect that their high sense of justice and an intelligent realization of their own interests will impel the Southern people to uphold their hands and aid rather than obstruct the improvement of the highways over which Southern products must be carried to market.

"Your future prosperity is assured; but I believe that the rate of your progress will depend, in large measure, on the support by public opinion of two fundamental principles of our civilization and their application not only to your transportation agencies but to all other kinds of business. * * *

"I advance these propositions with confidence in Charlotte—the real cradle of American liberty—and among a people whose ancestors in the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, more than a year before the action of the Continental Congress in Philadelphia, pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their most sacred honor to the maintenance of free government."

BLAKELY IN NEW ORLEANS FIFTY YEARS AGO.

The New Orleans Picayune for Christmas day states:

"To few men in hotels will this Christmas day mean more than to Col. Andrew R. Blakely, the genial host of the historic St. Charles. It was in December, 1857, just fifty years ago, that he first set foot on New Orleans soil, a green Irish lad who came to enrich America's population, fired with that ambition and energy that has won him a first place among Louisiana's adopted sons. Now his years are full of the honors due to the successful industrial worker and the public-spirited citizen.

"As the boy walked through the streets of New Orleans that cold Christmas day of 1857, he passed by the famous old St. Charles Hotel, with its gayly decorated and lighted windows, its liveried servants, and all the evidences of wealth that abounded in those ante-bellum days. Inured to the hardships of a sailor and as healthy and vigorous as any lad, it hardly occurred to him that he would one day stand behind the counter of the old St. Charles as its cashier, nor at a later date that he would be the head of the old house and then the magnificent new one that was to stand in its place—a larger and grander house, with comforts and conveniences that were then not even dreamed of in any city.

"On that Christmas day the stranger, removed by thousands of miles from a home that prayed for him, observed the great Christmas festival in the simple manner of a youth with what few friends he possessed in the big city.

"Nor did he dream of the four years of strife that were to follow—the years of civil war, in which he was to battle for his adopted home and return from it bearing a physical badge of courage that stern fate bade him wear through life and to the grave.

"When young Blakely landed here, in 1857, he concluded to rest awhile from voyaging, and he obtained employment in a grocery house. There he remained for six months, when the call of the sea prevailed, and back he went to Liverpool. He sailed to America again, and to remain. And New Orleans opened her arms in welcome and with a promise of the manifold resources and countless opportunities that were to grace her future years.

"The call to arms brought him forth again, and he served throughout the war with the Washington Artillery. Then began a hotel career that took him to New York and back again as the head of the famous St. Charles Hotel.

"'Christmas wasn't observed with as much outward show in those days as now,' said Colonel Blakely. 'But New Year's was the day. All the men went visiting and all the ladies received. And such delicacies as dainty hands prepared for welcome guests! No whisky then! But brandy, cordials, sherry ices, and cakes were plentiful in every home. Fifty years work big changes in men and in the customs of men; and observe Christmas as we may to-day, it is not the same as fifty years ago.'"

"HISTORY OF THE LAUREL BRIGADE."

The Laurel Brigade was originally the Ashby Cavalry of the Army of Northern Virginia and the Chew Battery. The history is a book which contains incidentally a great part of the operations of the cavalry corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, and indeed it is said to be the only book upon the war that gives an account of the cavalry campaign from the beginning to the end of the war. There is none other that records so fully the tremendous hardships and sufferings of the cavalry and the desperate fighting on those last days preceding Appomattox and which embodies a general account of the cavalry campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia.

It has, however, an addendum of over one hundred pages, containing the names and record of nearly every soldier in the brigade and Chew's Battery in a roster by companies and regiments. This makes it a valuable record and book of reference to the family of every soldier who served in those commands. In this book Ashby, the born soldier, is vindicated as to the impression that he was a partisan and not a regular soldier of the first order. Jackson, who referred to him as "a great partisan commander," says that Mr. Washington did not use the term in its common acceptation. The fame acquired by Jackson in his early campaigns in the Valley was largely due to the part performed by Ashby. The book contains four hundred and ninety-nine pages, is handsomely bound, of good print, and is full of interesting portraits and pictures. The price is $3 net, and can be had by addressing Bushrod C. Washington, Lock Box 46, Charlestown, W. Va.

FROM SPEECH BY ROOSEVELT ON JEFFERSON DAVIS.—It was from Vicksburg that a company of that famous regiment which won undying renown in the Mexican War under the gallant leadership of its colonel, who afterwards became the favorite son not only of Mississippi, but of all the South Jefferson Davis, came. And O, my fellow-citizens, think now fortunate we are, think what good fortune is ours as a nation that it is possible for the President of the nation to come here to-day, to be conducted through your national park by a surviving lieutenant general of the Confederate army. * * *

CHAPTERS PLAN FOR BUILDING A MONUMENT.

Mrs. Lizzie George Henderson, former President General U. D. C., sends "to the members of the J. Z. George Chapter" the following plan for raising a monument fund:

"Feeling sure that each of you is interested in the building of our monument, your President agrees with your Secretary that it is well for her to send to each of you this circular.

"At the last meeting we adopted a report which pledged us to have an entertainment to make money for our monument for every month this year up to June. The first week in February we are to have an 'Experience Party.' Each person is to make by personal effort one dollar, and send it or bring it to the party, with the experience had in making it told in rhyme. The sillier the rhyme, the better. We will be glad to get the dollar even without the rhyme. You are also asked to write to each friend you have not living in Greenwood and ask each to make you a dollar and send it in with the rhyme for the party. If each of us will do this, we can make a fine sum for the monument. And you know that if we wish to get others to help us the best way to do is to go to work ourselves. The beauty of this is that all members present and absent can do it. The 'banner Chapter' in the State must not be the last Chapter to get its monument to Confederate men and women erected. If the kind of women who compose our Chapter will to do a thing, we can succeed. Your Secretary is ready to do all she can do, and asks that you hold up her hands as you always have done and let us show the U. D. C. world what can be done by one Chapter's united effort. Come to the next social meeting, which is with me, and let us talk over all the work we have planned for this year.

"With grateful remembrance of your former work and believing in your future, I am very truly your friend, LIZZIE GEORGE HENDERSON, Rec. Sec."

The foregoing is printed in the VETERAN not only because of its novelty and the desire to aid that Chapter in its worthy undertaking, but to honor the Recording Secretary, who exhibits the same earnest zeal for the cause that she did when the highest woman official in the South—like Judge R. B. Haughton, of St. Louis, who was the Commander in Chief of the Sons, and after his term expired kept right on in his zeal for the cause, realizing his increased responsibility. Young people who have coöperated in maintaining "the story of the glory" are soon to have these issues in their hands, and those who take part in them for the low purpose of helping them in social or business advantage and fall out of line when that advantage is secured are mere stumbling-blocks.

"LEE AND HIS CAUSE."

Rev. John R. Deering, of Lexington, Ky., has hit upon the most pleasing title yet for a Southern book. Explanatory of the title, "Lee and His Cause," he adds: "Or the How and the Why of the War between the States."

Dr. Deering has been a contributor to the VETERAN for many years, and those who have followed him closely must have been impressed with the force and conciseness of his style. He writes as a minister of the gospel, and yet has ever maintained the courage of a man who did nothing of which he entertains regret as a soldier fighting for the cause in which General Lee was ever ready to risk his own life. Dr. Deering has given the book to three daughters and half a dozen sons, whom he has faithfully "taught the truth of history, the nature of our government, and the love of our country." He mentions that there are "many worthy lives of Lee," but in his he seeks convenience of handling and economy of price. His introductory chapter is an address designated as the "Lee Memorial." Subsequent chapters treat of "the people's war:" that upon our part it was justifiable, and yet it was a "great war" and a "hopeless war."

The book is published by the Neale Company, New York and Washington. Supplied by the VETERAN. Price, $1.50.

BEAUTIFUL AND DURABLE MONUMENTS.

BY A STUDENT OF SCULPTURE.

We are glad to see some interest being awakened with regard to the character of monuments which the South is about to erect not only to her Confederates in general, but also by the many commands to their comrades.

This subject is truly one of vital interest to all those interested in and in charge of this work and, we can add, to those coming after, who must view these memorials, good or bad. For myself, I have no fear that the South will not acquit herself creditably in this duty. An article in Uncle Remus's Magazine for December speaks of this. Referring to the many works of art produced in the South, it says: "Art in America had its beginning in the South." The paintings, miniatures, etc., now extant are object lessons to our children of what is good and true, and from them they have gained their whole impression of the generations past. Our Confederate monuments are designed to make a like impression upon future generations, and it lies with the committees in charge what this impression will be.

I only wish I knew more of this subject, so dear to me, and could tell how to accomplish this, rather than appear to criticize. Will some one tell us how to have artistic monuments?

BRIG. GEN. "MUDWALL" JACKSON.—Robert C. Crouch writes from Morristown, Tenn., that the name of Brig. Gen. Alfred E. Jackson, of Jonesboro, Tenn., is omitted from the list. He was appointed in 1863 and died a few years ago.

The above refers to the list of Confederate generals in January VETERAN. Will all others help to complete it?

Confederate Echoes

(OUR ABIDING CONFEDERACY)

By REV. A. T. GOODLOE, M.D.

"I hope for this book many readers. I am sure the reading of it will tend to conserve and preserve the traditions of the elders, and crystallize sentiment for that noble band, the Sons and Sires of the Old South—the noblest type of which the pen of historian, bard, or poet ever sang."—Mrs. Sue F. Mooncy.

12mo. Cloth. 452 Pages. Price, $1.00

ORDER FROM

SMITH & LAMAR, Nashville, Tenn.,

OR FROM

A. T. GOODLOE, Nashville, Tenn. (R. F. D. No. 6).

AGENTS WANTED

New Orleans . . .

"THE GATEWAY OF THE MISSISSIPPI." The Great City of the Great South. The Largest Cotton, Rice, and Sugar Market in the World.

The Most Popular Winter Resort in America

Continuous Horse Racing, Golf Links, Hunting and Fishing. Comfort, Health, Pleasure. Eleven Theaters.

New St. Charles Hotel

Modern, Fireproof, First-Class. Accommodating One Thousand Guests. Turkish, Russian, Roman, and Plain Baths. Luxurious Sun Baths and Palm Garden.

ANDREW R. BLAKELY & COMPANY, Ltd., Proprietors

Dr. James B. Hodgkin, of Irvington, Va., has two volumes of the "Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," by Jefferson Davis, which he will sell at a reasonable price. Any one wanting these volumes, which are in good condition, will address him as above.

Mrs. Emma Lee Brooks, Comptroller's Office, Austin, Tex., wishes to hear from any surviving comrades of James Henderson, who was a private in Company D, 40th Tennessee Infantry (also called the 5th Confederate Infantry), C. S. A., who enlisted April 21, 1861. The records show that on the last company roll on file, dated August

1, 1862, he is reported absent, "whereabouts unknown." No later record of him has been found. In behalf of his poor, feeble old wife this request is made, that a pension may be secured for her.

Referring to the request of a correspondent for a poem in which occur the lines, "Morgan, Morgan, the raider, and Morgan's terrible men," a correspondent writes that they are from a poem entitled "Kentucky Belle," which may be found in "Shoemaker's Best Readings and Recitations," Volume IV., published by the Pennsylvania Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

"LEST WE FORGET."

Inscribed to the Daughters of the Confederacy.
BY DUVAL PORTER, CO. A, 44TH VA.

O ye daughters of that Spartan race
Of mothers who withstood
The stress of war—aye, called to face
Its scenes of death and blood—

How well they bore heroic parts
In that day is known
Alone to Him who searches hearts—
Aye, known to Him alone.

For them no blaring trumpets sang,
No shouts to cheer them on;
For them no mighty plaudits rang
When victories were won.

Their tender hearts with torture torn,
None heard them to complain,
As tidings from the field were borne
Of sons and husbands slain.

Fair Daughters! of such matchless line
As this from which you came;
The cause for which they suffered thine
And theirs to-day your fame.

Though Southern men may fawn and sue,
Be slaves to Mammon's rage,
Our Daughters ever will be true
To our heroic age.

Then for such mothers let us rear
A monument so grand
That children's children will revere
The glory of our land.

If Stewart Chambers, orderly sergeant of Company I, 2d Arkansas Infantry, Govan's Brigade, is alive, please communicate with J. W. Stepher, Palestine, Tex.

The Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company

Agencies Throughout the World

PHOTOGRAVURE

Robert E. Lee

General in chief C. S. A. 1861-1865.
From original photograph taken in 1863.

A Perfect Likeness of the Great
General. Every Southerner
should possess one.

MISS MARY CUSTIS LEE: "It is the best full-face likeness of him."

GEN. FREDERICK D. GRANT: "An interesting likeness of that distinguished officer."

GEN. SAMUEL G. FRENCH: "The
best one of him to be obtained."

ROBERT E. LEE Camp, No. 1, Richmond, Va.: "A splendid likeness of our old Commander."

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR
Mailed Free.

Ambrose Lee Publishing Co.,
Williamsbridge, New York City.

Orders and remittances may also be sent for
this picture to S. A. Cunningham, CONFED-
ERATE VETERAN, Nashville, Tenn.

SHOPPING BY MAIL

MISSES GOLDBACH AND SMITH
PURCHASING AGENTS

THE MIDLOTHIAN, 353 WEST 117TH ST.,
NEW YORK CITY

Can we shop for you in New York?
WHOLESALE PRICES, up-to-date styles in all imported and domestic merchandise. Write for samples, circulars, and advice. References furnished.

HICKORY PIPES FROM SHILOH BATTLEFIELD

For 25c. we will mail to any address a hickory pipe made from hickory that grows on this famous battleground.

Shiloh Souvenir Pipe Co.

R. F. D. No. 1, Michie, Tenn., McNairy Co.

R. U. Brown, of Trent, Tex., was a member of Company E, 7th Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, Forrest's Command, under Capt. Jack Neely, and was mustered into service at Jackson May 22,
1861, and paroled at Corinth, Miss., May 20, 1865. He says that he will be glad to answer any letters from old comrades of his service.

THE OLD GRAY COAT.

(Worn by Maj. Giles B. Cooke, of Gen. R. E. Lee's staff, and given after the surrender to his nephew, Rev. John K. White, author of these lines.)

In the garret it was resting
In the bottom of a trunk,
And for years it had been hidden
In the deepest slumber sunk.

As I raised it slowly, gently,
Bitter tears rushed to my eyes,
For it brought back recollection
Which, though sleeping, never dies.

As I pressed my lips upon it,
Soft a voice within it spoke;
It at first seemed misty, dreamy.
But at last it full awoke.

"Where and why, I pray you tell me,
Am I resting quiet now?
And the way in which I came here,
Will you please inform me how?"

"You were placed here by your master
When he found no use for you."
"And why, I'd have you tell me,
Could I nothing further do?"

Did I not through toilsome marches
Ever stay close by his side?
Did I not the scorching sunshine
And the biting blast abide?

Did I ever shrink from bullets?
Did I ever seem to fear
When the bayonets clashed around me
Or the bombshells burst so near?

Was I not a faithful servant?
Did I not my duty well?
Why, then, am I thus discarded?
I entreat you now to tell."

"'Tis because the war is over;
Yes, the fighting all is done;
For the Northern armies conquered.
And the country now is one."

"Well, but where are Lee and Jackson,
With their armies strong and brave?"
"They have fought their final battle;
They are sleeping in the grave."

"But not all, not all most surely
Are there not a number left
Who have not with courage parted
And are not of honor 'reft?"

Can't not these, with Southern valor,
Sweep the land from sea to sea
And from every hated foeman
Thus the Southern nation free?"

"But the South is not a nation.
And the war is long since o'er;
And I tell you peace is reigning
Through the land from shore to shore."

"Did my master e'er surrender?
Sure he died upon the field:
For I know that he would never
For a moment deign to yield."

"But he did indeed surrender,
And he preaches now the Word;
He's an active, earnest worker
In the vineyard of the Lord."

F. S. Halliday, 69 Hicks Street,
Brooklyn, N. Y., needs the VETERAN for February, 1893, to complete his file.
Write him in advance of sending, stating condition and price asked.

G. W. Cary, 648 Broadway, New York City, wants a copy of the VET-ERAN for January, 1900. Write him before sending, etc.

DOCTOR TICHENOR'S
ANTISEPTIC

Accidents Will Happen

You cannot prevent that—they "come when least expected."
A bottle of

Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic

kept near at hand is your best safeguard—the cheapest "Accident Insurance" in the world!
It affords immediate and permanent relief from Cuts,
Bruises, Burns or Sprains.
Keep a bottle in the house—always.

All Druggists
25 and
50 cents.

ASK
EVERYONE WHO HAS USED IT

CATALOGUE

OF THE

Munson Nurseries

Denison, Texas

SENT ON APPLICATION FREE

These Nurseries have originated and introduced more valuable varieties of SOUTHERN FRUITS than any other nursery in the South, and are perfectly reliable.

Thirty-one years at Denison

The Direct Route to

Washington
Baltimore
Philadelphia
New York and
all Eastern Cities
from the South
and Southwest

is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to

Richmond
Norfolk, and all
Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
Roanoke, Va.

"CONFEDERATE ECHOES."

BY REV. A. T. GOODLOE, M.D.

A late publication and a distinctly Southern book is "Confederate Echoes," by Rev. A. T. Goodloe, author of "Rebel Relics," and himself one of the most unreconstructed of Confederate survivors. While distinctly Southern, the book was written for all classes, and the author says he had the young men of the South much in mind while writing it as they, being under the spell of modernizing influences, are the more apt to be drawn from the standard of the Confederate South. The author has done what he could "to intensify their fondness for their home land and ancestors, who constituted its citizenship—the best that the world ever knew."

The points touched upon in this volume are such as will be of interest to all seeking new light upon different phases of the struggle between the North and the South, and in addition are given many incidents of a long and useful life, including the four years as a soldier.

Price of the book, cloth-bound, 452 pages, $1. See advertisement in this number.

W. M. Graham, Cedar Bluff, Miss., Rural Route No. 1, wants to know if there are any survivors of the squad of men who made their escape from Camp Morton in the summer of 1862 by getting the commander to send them out under guard to a canal near by to go in bathing. One of the men belonged to his command, Company F, 26th Mississippi Regiment. It was said that the men got on such good terms with the guard that they all went in bathing together, and our boys got hold of the guns, sent the guards back to camp, and walked off. An account of this would be interesting for the VETERAN.

Mrs. William Nix, of Mingus, Tex., wants to locate two comrades of her husband, Company I, Captain Butler, of Border's Texas Regiment, so she can have their testimony of his service in her application for a pension.

Joseph E. Taulman, of Hubbard, Tex., will pay a good price for a good copy of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN for January, 1893, No. 1, Volume I. Write to him first.

Watch Charms

FOR

Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as illustrated, $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" pins, handsomely enameled, regulation U.S. sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
WASHINGTON, D. C.

The BEST PLACE to purchase all-wool

Bunting or Silk Flags

of all kinds,

Silk Banners, Swords, Belts, Caps

and all kinds of Military Equipment and Society Goods

is at
Veteran J. A. JOEL & CO., 38 Nassau St.,
SEND FOR PRICE LIST. New York City.

SAY, MA, IF I LIVE, WILL I BE AS BIG A GOOSE AS YOU?

YES, MY CHILD, IF YOU DON'T USE

Magic White Soap

Rub Magic on soiled parts, leave in water one hour. No boiling; no washboard; no backache, if you use MAGIC WHITE SOAP; will iron easy as magic; has no rosin like in yellow soap. Get your grocer to order. $4 per box—100 cakes, 5-cent size. Save the wrappers. We pay freight.

MAGIC CHIPS IN BARRELS FOR LAUNDRIES

MAGIC KELLER SOAP WORKS, Ltd.
426 Girod Street, New Orleans.

Pettibone Uniforms

for U. C. V. and U. S. C. V. are famous. Being made by expert military tailors, they have the true military cut. They fit well, look well, wear well, and are very reasonable in price. Each one is made to individual measure. Send for prices and samples of cloth.

Besides Uniforms we have been manufacturing Flags, Banners, Badges, Swords, Belts, Caps, Military and Secret Order Goods for thirty-five years.

The Pettibone Bros. Mfg. Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

(Mention this paper when writing.)

---

One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World

is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the approval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

Louisville, Ky.

San Francisco, Cal.
U S. A.
London, England.

New York, N. Y.

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

MAY, 1908

NO. 5.

Born June 3, 1808;
Died Dec. 6, 1889.

JEFFERSON DAVIS

(Report upon this picture next issue.)

Watch Charms

FOR

Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as Illustrated, $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" pins, handsomely enameled, regulation pin, sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Direct Route to

Washington
Baltimore
Philadelphia
New York and
all Eastern Cities
from the South
and Southwest

is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to

Richmond
Norfolk, and all
Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
Roanoke Va.

A beautifully colored work of art 6½ x 9½. "THE CONQUERED BANNER," with poem. Suitable for framing. Every Southern home should have one. Only 10c. with stamp. Write your address distinctly. C. WAGNER, 205 West 91st St., New York City.

CIVIL WAR—SOUTHERN SIDE

Confederate Items, including Jefferson Davis, Gen. R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson. Also Confederate Portraits and Autographs. Catalogue now ready. Address AMERICAN PRESS Co., Baltimore, Md.

WHAT DID THE PRIVATES DO?

BY CAPT. G. W. B. HALE, ROCKY MOUNT, VA.

Our dates teem with daring deeds,
Our books are filled with fame;
Brass band will play and cannon roar
In honor of the name
Of men who held commission and
Were honest, brave, and true;
But still the question comes to me:
What did the privates do?

Who were the men to guard the camp
When foes were hovering 'round?
Who dug the graves of comrades dear?
Who laid them in the ground?
Who sent the dying message home
To those they never knew?
If officers did all this,
What did the privates do?

Who were the men to fill the place
Of comrades slain in strife?
Who were the men to risk their own
To save a comrade's life?
Who was it that lived on salted pork
And bread too hard to chew?
If officers did this alone,
What did the privates do?

Who lay in pits on rainy nights
All eager for the fray?
Who marched beneath the scorching sun
Through many a toilsome day?
Who paid the sutler double price
And scanty rations drew?
If officers get all the praise,
Pray, what did the privates do?

Who led the van at Malvern Hill,
Where slaughter marked the day?
Who gave the Yanks that bitter pill
At Manassas—halt and say?
Who at Shiloh waged that bloody fight,
Where Grant's army fairly flew?
If officers did all that,
What did the privates do?

Now let us say to those who led,
No matter if they wore the gray or blue:
Too much praise cannot be said,
Just so they were honest, brave, and true.
Whether they were officers or whether not,
Each fronted alike the battle storm,
Each breasted the screeching cannon shot.
Each let us honor ere they are gone.

Confederate
Veterans'
and Sons of Confederate
Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO
Columbus, Ohio

Pettibone Uniforms

for U. C. V. and U. S. C. V. are famous. Being made by expert military tailors, they have the true military cut. They fit well, look well, wear well, and are very reasonable in price. Each one is made to individual measure. Send for prices and samples of cloth.

Besides Uniforms we have been manufacturing Flags, Banners, Badges, Swords, Belts, Caps, Military and Secret Order Goods for thirty-five years.

The Pettibone Bros. Mfg. Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

(Mention this paper when writing.)

SHOPPING BY MAIL

MISSES GOLDBACH AND SMITH
PURCHASING AGENTS

THE MIDLOTHIAN, 353 WEST 117TH ST.,
NEW YORK CITY

Can we shop for you in New York?
WHOLESALE PRICES, up-to-date styles in all imported and domestic merchandise. Write for samples, circulars, and advice. References furnished.

All honor, then, to the brave old boys
Who rallied to the call
Without regard to name or rank—
We honor one and all.
They are passing over, one by one,
And soon they'll all be gone
To where the book will surely show
Just what by privates was done.

I was in the battle of Malvern Hill, and my recollections were published in the CONFEDERATE VETERAN'S columns twelve months ago.

BEST ROUTE
TO U. C. V. Reunion
AT
BIRMINGHAM
IS VIA

No trouble to answer questions
Through Chair Cars and
Sleepers
E. P. TURNER, Gen. Pass. Agt.
DALLAS, TEX.

General Marcus J. Wright's
"Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865"

Should be in the Library of the Family of every
Confederate and Union Soldier

An Official Record of
TENNESSEE'S SONS

Order from local Booksellers,
the "Veteran," or
Ambrose Lee Publishing Co.,
Williamsbridge, N. Y. City
PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to any address

Any one having a copy of Prentice's
"Poems" for disposal will please write to Miss Nannie Laura Greer, Anna,
Tex., R. F. D. No. 4, Box 38.

Books for Sons and Daughters of Confederate Veterans

THE BOY IN GRAY
BY GEORGE G. SMITH

In a neat work of nearly 300 pages, the author, a member of Phillips's Legion, Georgia Volunteers, has narrated most interestingly many of the thrilling scenes of the war. He has written the book in the interest of peace—that the young people of the Southland might know how nobly their fathers bore themselves in the war, and how grandly their mothers and sisters toiled at home. The book should be found in every Southern home. It is beautifully bound in gray cloth and gold. 266 pages. Price, postpaid, 60c.

Address THE EPWORTH ERA,
Nashville, Tenn.

A NARRATIVE of the CIVIL WAR
BY A. E. SNIDER

This is a truthful narrative of the facts and events of the great war between the States, the Civil War, written in a plain style and chronologically arranged. It is designed especially for the young people of the South, and covers the entire subject in a way that makes it intensely interesting and of great value to all who wish to know correctly about the war and its various phases. The book is handsomely bound and contains many interesting illustrations. Price, postpaid, 60 cents. Send all orders to

THE EPWORTH ERA,
Nashville, Tenn.

GUNNING FOR BIRDS

is much like gunning for birds. You must have a definite aim, because indiscriminate advertising, like indiscriminate shooting, results in empty pockets. The printer furnishes the shot, and postage is the powder that carries it wherever you direct.

And you must have good ammunition. Foolish indeed the sportsman who would use pebbles for shot to save expense, yet equally foolish is the advertiser who wastes energy, postage and opportunity on weak, ineffective printing.

Think it over; then let's talk it over. We have furnished ammunition for so many successful campaigns that we know you will find our experience of value.

Anyway, let's talk it over.

BRANDON PRINTING CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

$50 DRAUGHON'S SCHOLARSHIP FOR $25

Four years' NET PROFITS of $86,904.85 enable Draughon's chain of 30 Colleges to make this special offer, for a limited time, to favor those short of work or cash by reason of late financial depression. FREE CATALOGUE will convince you that BUSINESS MEN consider DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUSINESS COLLEGES THE BEST. No vacation; enter any time. POSITIONS SECURED—WRITTEN CONTRACT. Raleigh, Columbia, Atlanta, Nashville, Montgomery, Jackson (Miss.), Little Rock, and Dallas.

G. A. Hufford, of Waelder, Tex., wishes to hear from some of his comrades of Company H, Capt. J. B. Bray, 1st Confederate Regiment of Georgia Volunteers, with which he served. He was the first orderly sergeant of the company, and enlisted at Rome, Ga. He is now old and needy, is trying to get a pension, and needs to have his service proved.

For Over Sixty Years
An Old and Well-Tried Remedy
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP
has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEething, WITH PERFECT SUCCESS. IT SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLEVIATES PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC and is the best remedy for DIARRHEA. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. 25 CENTS A BOTTLE. Guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Serial number, 1098.

A Very Rich Man says:

"The American people are prodigal, and our extravagance will have to be paid for by some one. People have taken advantage of prosperity, such as has never been excelled in this country, to be wasteful and extravagant. We are not saving up for the rainy day, for the time of need."

How is it with you?

Are you saving and creating a fund which will work for you when you can no longer work for yourself? Your common sense tells you that it is better to even at a sacrifice, if necessary, than to want or be dependent upon others in your old age. But saving is only half your duty. You must invest your savings wisely.

SAVE YOUR MONEY NOW

An ideal form of investment is a Certificate of Deposit in The American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee. These Certificates are issued for deposits of $25 and upward. They bear interest payable quarterly, semiannually, or annually, are negotiable, are good as collateral security, and can be renewed at interest periods.

The American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee

Capital .....	$1,000,000.00
Shareholders' Liability.....	1,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits (earned).....	580,000.00
SECURITY TO DEPOSITORS.....	$2,580,000.00

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The Lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address MATTHEWS & COMPANY, 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The Confederate Cause and Conduct in the War between the States.

By HUNTER MCGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Head Medical Director of Jackson's Corps, A. N. V., and HON. GEORGE L. CHRISTIAN.

This work written with the fire and vim of one of Jackson's soldiers, and with all the logic of a clear-headed lawyer, has gone far beyond the ordinary work upon this subject and holds the interest of the reader in its grip from start to finish.

The contents of the first chapter alone will give some idea of what the book contains, being as follows:

1. Slavery not the cause of the war.
2. Attempt of Northern writers to misrepresent the South and its cause.
3. The Northern cause will finally be adjudged the lost cause.
4. Criticisms of the writings of Mr. Jno. Fiske and "Our Country," by Cooper, Estill and Lemon.
5. All the South asks—that the truth be stated.

The other chapters deal with some dozen or more subjects, including "Treatment and Exchange of Prisoners," "Right of Secession," "Relations of the Slaves to the Confederate Cause," etc.

This book should be in the home of every Confederate.

230 pages. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth. Gold Top. Postpaid, $1.60.

THE BELL BOOK & STATIONERY CO., 914 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

PHOTOGRAVURE

Robert E. Lee

General in chief C. S. A. 1861-1865. From original photograph taken in 1863.

A Perfect Likeness of the Great General. Every Southerner should possess one.

MISS MARY CUSTIS LEE: "It is the best full-face likeness of him."

GEN. FREDERICK D. GRANT: "An interesting likeness of that distinguished officer."

GEN. SAMUEL G. FRENCH: "The best one of him to be obtained."

ROBERT E. LEE Camp, No. 1, Richmond, Va.: "A splendid likeness of our old Commander."

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR Mailed Free.

Ambrose Lee Publishing Co., Williamsbridge, New York City.

Orders and remittances may also be sent for this picture to S. A. Cunningham, CONFEDERATE VETERAN, Nashville, Tenn.

The BEST PLACE to purchase all-wool

Bunting or Silk Flags

of all kinds.

Silk Banners, Swords, Belts, Caps

and all kinds of Military Equipment and Society Goods is at

Veteran J. A. JOEL & CO., 38 Nassau St., SEND FOR PRICE LIST. New York City.

TEXAS THE PLACE

TEXAS is the BEST STATE for the HOMESEEKER. Fertile Lands, Diversified Crops, Farming all the year. Health, Climate, Schools and Churches.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway traverses the best portion. Send 2-cent stamp for Folder and Information.

GEO. F. LUPTON, G. P. A., San Antonio, Texas.

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter. Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important.

Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted.

The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY,
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success;

The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. / VOL. XVI.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. /

NASHVILLE, TENN., MAY, 1908.

No. 5. / J. S. A. CUNNINGHAM,
/ PROPRIETOR.

JEFFERSON DAVIS HOME ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is unable to report official action by the Jefferson Davis Home Association in regard to the procurement of desired portions of the birthplace at Fairview, Ky., of the President of the Confederate States for a memorial building and park.

As heretofore published, Mrs. Margaret Davis Hayes and her husband united in a "quit claim" deed to the church property donated to the Church by Mr. Davis, whereby it would have the right to reconvey said property. It was expected, and the earnest hope had been entertained, that the Church would deed to the Home Association such parts of its grounds as might seem desirable for its memorial purposes, but there arose a misunderstanding in regard to it. Then the committee failed to procure satisfactory terms upon other property, and the outlook became most discouraging.

On Monday, April 27, 1908, a meeting was held of representative citizens of Fairview, and they secured options at actual values on the most desirable property of the estate, while some of the parties giving options offered donations in addition. The following day, April 28, Messrs. W. B. Brewer and R. F. Vaughan, of Fairview, as representatives visited Nashville to report to the VETERAN the action of the meeting on the previous day.

The options include the area between the Baptist church property and Pembroke Street (save a small corner lot), about five hundred feet frontage on Main Street, and thence along Pembroke about fifteen hundred feet, the area being a parallelogram. The property referred to comprises about twelve acres. It is delightfully located and has the natural advantages of very fine water and a large oak grove. The small lot referred to above, corner of Main and Pembroke Streets, owned by Dr. Stuart, and another on the opposite corner, owned by Mr. R. F. Vaughan, and still another lot, owned by Mr. W. B. Brewer, are offered to the Association free of charge if needed in the plans of the Association.

The sentiment of the people of Fairview is thoroughly aroused to the importance of this movement, and they will gladly cooperate with the Association and their friends in the great and reverent work undertaken. This is the last opportunity the VETERAN will have to appeal for this important movement or any action concerning it before the centenary of Mr. Davis's birth, and it earnestly recommends that in every meeting held to honor the memory of the President of the Confederacy a subscription be raised for the special purpose of procuring this most worthy memorial. Beautiful certificates will be supplied to all who subscribe as much as one dollar. What an honor to our cause if the purchase money (about $6,000) should be subscribed on the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis!

The money need not necessarily be paid at once, but each remittance should be mailed to Mr. John H. Leathers, Treasurer of the Association (banker), Louisville, Ky., while notice of same is requested by the VETERAN.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

A review of the early history of the town of Fairview, Ky., discloses the fact that its primitive name was Davisburg, so named after Samuel Davis, a Georgian, who was already settled in 1800 where the Bethel church house now stands. The Indian had then left these parts for other hunting grounds, but upon his track the sleepless and relentless avenger followed. A fierce example of this character. — McReynolds, living only two miles southwest of Davisburg, "still lingered and solaced himself with a fall hunt of the redskin in much the same glee and joyous frame of mind that the deer hunt was indulged in a little later on." His doctrine was that a hunt which did not contemplate danger as a large integral was not worth indulging in, and with the element of danger left out was "nothing but contemptible pot shooting." However, McReynolds left for his fall hunt and sport, never to return. It is supposed that the Indians got him.

In November, 1800, Edward Shanklin and his family left Newmarket, Rockingham County, Va., to make their home in the then West; and in the December following he halted at Samuel Davis's, in Christian County, Ky., then known as Davisburg. He bought land near Davisburg, where he died in 1826. His widow continued to reside on the homestead until her death, which occurred on November 23, 1863, at the advanced age of ninety-seven years, leaving her second son the homestead, where he continued to live until his death, in 1879, aged eighty-five years.

In the fall of 1805 George Tillman settled one mile south of Davisburg, at what is now known as Cave Spring. A month later his wife died. Here Mrs. Davis had opportunity to exercise her large-heartedness in caring for his motherless children. One of them, Mary, was nine years old at the time of her mother's death and she continued to live with Mrs. Davis until the spring of 1811, during which time Jefferson was born. Often has the writer heard the old lady recount many incidents of early life in the Davis family; and when it is considered that she was eleven years old when Jefferson was born and had often nursed him and was so familiar with Mrs. Davis and family up to the time of her death, she never referred to Mrs. Davis or family other than as "Aunt Winney, Little Jef, Joe, or Anna" when speaking of the various members of the family. His old lady died in July, 1890, in her ninety-fourth year, her mind clear and intact to the close of her life.

Owing to the total loss of her sight, she talked much of her early recollections, and especially was this the case after Jefferson Davis became the representative of what it was "to do and to dare for his fellow-man." Of him personally she could only call him "Little Jef," for the reason that the removal of the family to Mississippi occurred when his years were yet too tender to permit of the development which in after years characterized him as of the front rank of his fellows. Many readers will recall his visit to Fairview in 1866, when he was dined at his birthplace (then the residence of Andrew J. Kenner), the presentation of a cane made from a part of the locust tree that grew near his father's old residence, and his response closing with the ringing enunciation: "The noblest work of man is to do and to suffer for his fellow-man."

[The foregoing is from a journal written by Dr. E. S. Stuart, of Fairview, a nephew of Mary Tillman, now a venerable man, who was thoroughly familiar with the facts, having known her all of his life.

In a long wait for return train at Pembroke the editor of the VETERAN had the great pleasure of Mr. Davis's companionship, and it was a blessing never to be forgotten to hear from him reminiscences of his extraordinary life—boyhood, manhood, successes, and defeats. There was never more of self, however, in his conversations than necessary in giving accounts of events important to his country and to his fellow-man.

Mr. Davis seemed to be impressed with the genuine Kentucky welcome given him, and as he journeyed back to the railway station he said to his aid, Capt. M. H. Clark, with feeling: "Those people knew that I was a poor wanderer, without a country, without ability or power to reciprocate.]

HUNDREDTH BIRTHDAY OF PRESIDENT DAVIS.

BY MRS. CORNELIA BRANCH STONE, PRESIDENT GENERAL.

To Divisions and Chapters, Daughters of the Confederacy.

You are again reminded of the near approach of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our beloved chieftain, Jefferson Davis, the one and only President of the Confederate States, and it is urged that each Chapter celebrate June 3 in such manner as to make it a memorable occasion to every citizen of your county and State. Let your programme for that day speak in loving memory of his unblemished character, his upright life, and his great unselfish service. Do all in your power to promote in the schools, public and private, and in your Chapter meetings a close study of the public and religious life of Mr. Davis, as shown in the "Memoirs" of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, and learn of his patience, fortitude, and suffering from the "Prison Life of Jefferson Davis," by Dr. J. J. Craven. "The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," by Jefferson Davis, will give you the true history of that time, and will tell of the great service of the men whose memory we honor and cherish.

Division Presidents are requested to urge upon the Chapters under their administration the proper observance of these provisions and to notify the chairmen of their committees on Chapter extension that to all Chapters organized during the year 1908 which may be named for President Davis or any member of his family or for either of his three homes—Rosemont, his childhood home, Brierfield, and Beauvoir—a gavel will be given made of Beauvoir wood with silver plate.

As a deed of commemoration and education, Chapters are requested to place pictures of Jefferson Davis in the public and private schools during this year. The presentation should be accomplished by such fitting ceremony as will impress the students of the schools with the greatness and grandeur of the name you seek to honor. Again, I ask your loyal support and coöperation in the work of the General Association that for the sake of our dear cause the year shall be fruitful of results. More than ever is your support needed with strong, earnest hearts and willing hands; for, overwhelmed by a great sorrow, groping dimly for the light, I ask your loyal aid in the great purposes of our organization.

For the loving sympathy extended may God bless you!

BIRMINGHAM REUNION PROGRAMME.

Tuesday: 3 P.M., band concert at Capital Park, with ample supply of ice water; 4 P.M., general handshaking at park, exclusively for veterans; in the evening, concert at Hippodrome.

Wednesday afternoon: Floral parade, under the auspices of Sons of Veterans.

Wednesday: 8 P.M., pyrotechnic display at Fair Grounds; 8 P.M., two concerts at Hippodrome and Jefferson Theater, under auspices of music committee.

Thursday: 11 A.M., parade in city.

Thursday: 3:30 P.M., racing at the Fair Grounds; 8 P.M., pyrotechnic display at Fair Grounds; ball at Hippodrome.

Gen. Stephen D. Lee, Commander in Chief, has appointed (as is the custom, the Division Commander for the State in which a Reunion is held) Maj. Gen. George P. Harrison, Commanding Alabama Division, chief marshal of the parade. He appoints as the sponsor for the South Miss Sarah Lee Evans, daughter of Gen. Clement A. Evans, of Georgia, whose gallant deeds as a Confederate leader are an open book to the Southland. The maids of honor are Miss Varina Cook, daughter of Gen. V. Y. Cook, of Arkansas, and Miss Emma McDavitt Leedy, daughter of Maj. William B. Leedy, and Mrs. Leedy has been selected as the headquarters' chaperon.

HOTEL HILLMAN, HEADQUARTERS OF THE VETERAN.

MAJ. HENRY WIRZ.

The dedication of a monument to Maj. Henry Wirz, to occur at Andersonville, Ga., on June 3, is attracting widespread attention. By thousands in the South he is regarded as a typical martyr to the Southern cause, being the one man whose life was sacrificed after the form of a legal trial—regarded by many as a mockery. At the North there has been vigorous opposition to any act whereby his career as a Confederate in honor is to be perpetuated. Many Southerners who believed in his absolute innocence, especially the Georgia Division, U. D. C., determined to erect the monument. The spirited and vindictive opposition to the movement by some Northern people, including veteran soldiers, and the desire to conciliate induced many Confederates to desist from active participation in the movement. It progressed, however, and the dedication may be expected as announced. The inscription is anticipated with anxiety. The purpose to quote from Surgeon General Barnes's report on the death rate in prisons North and South was agreed to, but there arose controversies as to the reliability of the figures. They were given by United States Senator Benjamin H. Hill, and not disputed in a spirited debate with Senator Blaine; but in later years accuracy of the report is questioned.

The VETERAN gives herein (page 217) the testimony of a Union soldier upon Major Wirz and his deeds at Andersonville. Readers will accept his (Captain Page's) statements in preference to those of Federal soldiers who were not there.

Mrs. J. S. Perrin, of Natchez, Miss., wrote a letter some time ago from which extracts are reproduced. She is the only child of Major Wirz in the United States; but she has a brother and sister in Switzerland, the children of his first wife. She wrote: "I remember Andersonville, the stockade, the officers at the fort, and many instances of my father's kindness and thoughtful care, and his burning desire and earnest efforts for the betterment of the poor prisoners. One of the mysteries of fate to me now, and that always will be—one that I shall not understand 'until I see him face to face' and all things are made clear—is that papa alone, who was the most innocent of all, should have to suffer as he did. Of course I am extremely anxious that a monument be erected to stand as a refutation of the cruel charges made against him, and may the All-Father bless those who are working for it and crown their efforts with success!"

MAJ. HENRY WIRZ, COMMANDER OF ANDERSONVILLE PRISON, EXECUTED NOVEMBER 10, 1865.

Connected with Major Wirz's last moments was the revelation of a plot to involve Mr. Davis.

Mr. Lewis Schade, who was counsel for Wirz, says that he and Father Boyle were informed that a member of the Cabinet said that if Wirz would acknowledge that Mr. Davis was connected with the atrocities at Andersonville his sentence should be commuted. Mr. Schade related the matter to the prisoner at his last conference with him, when Major Wirz said: "Mr. Schade, you know I have always told you that I did not know anything about Mr. Davis. He had no connection with me as to what was done at Andersonville; and if I knew he had, I would not become a traitor against him or any one else to save my life."

The following letter was written by Wirz:

"OLD CAPITOL PRISON, NOV. 10, 1865.

"Mr. Schade—Dear Sir: It is no doubt the last time I address myself to you. What I have said to you often I repeat. Accept my sincere, heartfelt thanks for all you have done for me. May God reward you! I cannot. * * * Please help my poor family, my dear wife and children. War, cruel war, has swept everything from me, and to-day my wife and my children are beggars. My life is demanded as an atonement. I hope after a while I will be judged differently from what I am now. If any one ought to come to the relief of my family, it is the people of the South, for whose sake I have sacrificed all. Farewell, dear sir. May God bless you!

"Yours thankfully, H. WIRZ."

TENNESSEE DIVISION U. D. C. CONVENTION.

Mrs. M. B. Pilcher, President, announces that the date of the U. D. C. Convention for Tennessee will be held in Chattanooga May 13-16 at the new Hotel Patten, also that the railroad rates will be one and one-third for round trip.

Mrs. Pilcher announces also that the U. D. C. Day at Monteagle has a fine list of attendants, including Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, President General U. D. C., Mrs. Roselle Cooley and Mrs. A. L. Dowdell, Secretaries General U. D. C., and Elizabeth Lumpkin Glenn. R. E. Lee, Jr., may attend as orator of the day.

PICTURES OF GEN. ROBERT E. LEE.

The Shiloh Monument Committee is prepared to sell for the benefit of the Shiloh Monument Fund handsome steel engravings and India prints of Gen. Robert E. Lee. These pictures are 16½x21¾ inches, and are pronounced by Miss Mary Custis Lee a most "satisfactory picture of her father."

Chapters of the U. D. C., Camps of Veterans, school boards, and individuals desiring pictures of the great General are requested to consider these pictures before buying. In buying these one will get a superb picture and help a worthy cause. Inquiries may be made of any State Director for Shiloh (for list see April VETERAN) or to Mrs. Alexander B. White, Paris, Tenn., Chairman U. D. C. Shiloh Monument Committee.

MEDICAL OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION.

The eighteenth annual Reunion of the Association of Medical Officers of the Army and Navy of the Confederacy will convene with the other veterans, June 9-11. Its sessions will be held in a well-chosen hall near the center of the city and near the general Reunion auditorium.

The objects of the Association are largely social, in bringing together the former associates in the trying experiences of the sixties, and yet they desire to restate as much as practicable the history of the department for posterity.

All members of the medical profession who served as surgeon, assistant surgeon, contract physician or acting assistant surgeon, hospital steward, or chaplain during the War between the States shall be eligible to membership as regular members. All Confederate veterans who are regular doctors of medicine are eligible to membership as associate members, and all sons of Confederate veterans who are regular doctors of medicine shall be eligible to membership as junior members. They all have the same rights and privileges on the floor of the Association at its meetings, and only differ in name to indicate the several classes forming our Association. The membership fee is one dollar.

Those who prepare papers, essays, or reports of cases or incidents are requested to inform the Secretary, Dr. A. A. Lyon, Nashville, Tenn., prior to June 1, and later J. C. Abernathy, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, 1906 First Avenue, Birmingham, Ala.

The Jefferson County Medical Society, the second largest in the State of Alabama, has extended a most cordial invitation to the Association to meet in their city, and they are making preparation for the reception and entertainment that indicates a most satisfactory meeting.

The foregoing is taken from a circular letter by the Secretary, Dr. Lyon, successor to Dr. Deering J. Roberts, of Nashville, editor and proprietor of the Southern Practitioner, and who is ever diligent for the success of the Association.

Dr. Samuel E. Lewis, of Washington, D. C., one of the most diligent of all workers in the Confederate cause, is President of the Association.

GROUP FROM FIRST SOUTH CAROLINA REGIMENT.—From left to right, back row: William Vogle, Monroe Ruff, John Burke. Front row: A. H. Montieth, J. R. Hamilton, H. E. Heisie. Survivors of Company C, 1st Regiment South Carolina Volunteers, McGowan's Brigade, Army of Northern Virginia.

SOUTHERN HISTORY—TENNESSEE.

BY MRS. TENNIE PINKERTON DOZIER, FRANKLIN, TENN., HISTORIAN TENNESSEE DIVISION, U. D. C.

"A land without memories is a land without history." The South is preëminently a land of memories—a land rich in history, rich in legends—and lays that tell of the memories of long-vanished days. Every Daughter of the Confederacy—in fact, every Southern woman—should know this history. She should be able to teach to her children the glorious history of Southern men and women from the time of the first English settlement on Southern soil till the present time. All of this history, so full of true patriotism, so full of glory and honor, is our heritage, and it can never be taken from us.

"The race may fall unto the swift
And the battle to the strong;
But the truth will shine in history
And blossom into song."

We can never inspire others with any thought till we ourselves are enthused with that thought, and we cannot be enthusiastic over anything about which we know little or nothing. This is why the writer, Historian of the Tennessee Division, U. D. C., in preparing the two years' course of study for the U. D. C. of the State selected subjects pertaining to the history of the South, especially of Tennessee.

The history of the South includes all Confederate history. In this short sketch the writer has tried not to claim for the South any honor that is not justly hers. The history of the South is glorious enough just as it is. The Historian of the Tennessee Division insists that no book, poem, or song be allowed a place in our homes or schools that misrepresents the North, the South, or any section of our country. The children of our land should know the truth.

Let us examine the records that we may see what our forefathers did for this country, not only for the South, but the North, the East, and the West. A Southern colony, Virginia, the "great mother of great commonwealths," was the first and largest of the thirteen colonies. The first permanent English settlement in America was made on Southern soil, and the first white child born in America was born in the South.

In 1765 at Wilmington, N. C., armed forces prevented the officers of a British man-of-war from landing a single piece of the king's odious stamp paper within the borders of North Carolina. This was several years prior to the Boston "tea party." Fitch, in his "History of North Carolina," says: "Here is an act of the sons of North Carolina not committed on a merchant vessel nor on a crew of a freight ship nor done under any disguise or mask, but on the representative of royalty itself commanding a man-of-war of King George's navy, in open daylight, by well-known men."

The first battle of the American Revolution was fought on Southern soil—Alamance, N. C. If history be true, Tennesseans took part in that battle. Tennessee was then a part of North Carolina. We are told that many who took part in that battle for American independence, having been defeated by the British tyrant, Governor Tryon, took refuge from oppression west of the Alleghanies and became the founders of the Watauga settlement, in East Tennessee. These men called themselves Regulators. Bancroft, the historian, says: "It is a mistake if any have supposed that the Regulators were cowed down by their defeat at the Alamance. Like the mammoth, they shook the bolt from their brow and crossed the mountains." These same men in 1772 organized themselves into an independent body politic—independent of King George of England, and independent of the tyrant Tryon.

Thus it was that at Watauga, on Tennessee soil, was organized the first independent government on the North American Continent—a fact of which every Tennessean should be proud. Bancroft says: "These men set to the people of America the example of erecting themselves into a State independent of the authority of the British king."

Whatever of greatness came to this republic for more than half a century after it was begun, during its formative period, was due largely to Southern statesmanship. It was the eloquence and patriotism of a Virginian, Patrick Henry, that fired the colonial heart and pointed the way to freedom from British tyranny.

The President of the first Continental Congress was Peyton Randolph, a Virginian, so elected at Philadelphia in 1774. It was by a Southern colony, North Carolina, that the first Declaration of American Independence (the Mecklenburg, May 20, 1775) was made. It was a Virginian, Richard Henry Lee, who moved that "these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free." The author of the immortal Declaration of Independence was a Virginian, Thomas Jefferson.

When war was declared with Great Britain, it was then, as it was in 1861, that this country turned to the South for its leader, and George Washington was made commander in chief of the American forces and led them to a glorious victory.

It was the South that for a greater portion of the seventy-two years that intervened between the inauguration of Washington as first President of the United States and the firing of the first gun on Fort Sumter in 1861 furnished the United States her Presidents. Virginia alone furnished Presidents thirty-seven and Tennessee twelve years of the seventy-two years. During these years the South furnished most of the Cabinet officers and Chief Justices.

Till the War between the States the voice of the South was potent, if not dominant, in the affairs of this nation; and it can be so again, for the soul of the cavalier is not dead, and the same pure blood that coursed through the veins of our Huguenot and Scotch-Irish ancestors flows through ours to-day.

Not only did the South furnish Presidents, Chief Justices, and Attorney-Generals for a greater portion of the seventy-two years, but military leaders also. Both Great Britain and Mexico were made to recognize the courage of the Southern soldier. And in our own war, the greatest in some respects of all time, was it not a man from the South, our own peerless R. E. Lee, who was recognized as the greatest military leader in this country? He had the honor of commanding the Confederate forces, also the honor of declining to be commander in chief of the Federal forces.

Not only was the valor of the Southern soldier recognized, but of the Tennessee soldier as a part of this great whole. We scarcely know when Tennessee won for herself the proud title of "Volunteer State;" for on every battlefield—even at Alamance, the first battle for American independence, as stated above—she has been grandly represented. It was at that critical moment of the Revolution, when a compromise with Great Britain was being urged in Congress, that every male citizen of the Watauga settlement who was old enough to shoulder a rifle went forth under the leadership of John Sevier to answer in person the rash threat of General Ferguson. At King's Mountain they met him, and his brave men won that glorious victory that turned the tide of the Revolution, and nothing more was said of a compromise.

In the War of 1812 it was Southern men who shed the greatest luster on our flag, and the leader of these Southern men was our own Andrew Jackson, who with his brave Tennessee and Kentucky boys met and defeated the British at New Orleans on that never-to-be-forgotten 8th of January. He it was who in 1813 with two or three thousand volunteers defeated the Creek Indians. "It was a Tennessean (Crockett) whose bravery at the Alamo was the admiration of the world; another Tennessean beat back Santa Anna's forces and made Texas independence possible."

In the war with Mexico, which might truly be called a Southern war and a Southern victory (for it was fought almost altogether by Southern soldiers), it was Southern men who won for themselves undying fame. Among them were Zachary Taylor, Joseph E. Johnston, Jefferson Davis, R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Albert Sidney Johnston, Braxton Bragg, W. J. Hardee, J. B. Hood, James Longstreet, Gideon Pillow, William B. Bate, and Frank Cheatham. In this war Tennessee did more than her part. The President of the United States, James K. Polk, a Tennessean, issued a call for twenty-eight hundred Tennesseans. Thirty thousand responded. Tennesseans had not forgotten the Alamo. One would naturally suppose that it was then that Tennessee won for herself the title she loves to bear—the "Volunteer State." However, it is found that prior to the Mexican War she is spoken of in history as "Volunteer State." It is generally conceded that this title was given in the War of 1812.

The Mexican War not only secured Texas for the United States, but added what is now California, Nevada, Utah, most of Arizona and New Mexico, and parts of Wyoming and Colorado, the greatest addition ever made to the territory of the United States except Jefferson's purchase of Louisiana from the French. Both of these additions were made during the administration of Southern Presidents, one a Tennessean.

McGee, in his "History of Tennessee," says: "From 1830 to 1850 Tennessee almost ruled the United States. Her Senators and Representatives in Congress were shrewd and able men; her great statesmen filled important places in the Cabinet and in foreign ministries; her lawyers were judges of Federal, circuit, and supreme courts; and Tennesseans were Presidents twelve years in a period of twenty—Andrew Jackson eight and James K. Polk four years. No other State except Virginia had ever held so commanding an influence in national affairs." Those were the days of Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk, David Crockett, Sam Houston, Hugh L. White, Felix Grundy, John Bell, Newton Cannon, M. P. Gentry, Ephraim Foster, Gideon Pillow, B. F. Cheatham, William B. Bate, and others who won glory and honor for the "Volunteer State."

When we come to our own war, so full of sad but sweet memories, we find Tennessee taking rank second to none but Virginia. Tennessee gave to the Confederacy one hundred and fifteen thousand Confederate soldiers. Besides these, she furnished thirty-one thousand Federal soldiers. To the Confederacy Tennessee gave forty generals; thirty-one of these were brigadier generals, seven major generals, and two lieutenant generals—A. P. Stewart and N. B. Forrest. On Tennessee soil were fought perhaps more of the battles of the war than on that of any other State except Virginia. Among the great ones were Shiloh, Franklin, Murfreesboro, and Chickamauga. Tennessee not only contributed her part to the land forces, but to the navy also. The Tennessee Ironclad was a terror to the foe and its great pride after being captured. Besides taking part in almost every naval engagement, she gave to the Federal navy the greatest of Federal naval commanders, David G. Farragut, and to the Confederate navy she gave the immortal Confederate commodore, Matthew Fontaine Maury, "The Philosopher of the Seas." The boy hero of the Confederacy, Sam Davis, was a Tennessean.

In President Davis's Cabinet there was one Tennessean, B. N. Clements, and in the two sessions of the Confederate Congress she was represented by nineteen of her brave sons.

When we think of what the South as a whole and our State in particular have done for our country; when we think of Davis, Lee, Jackson, Gordon, Forrest, Stewart, Cheatham, Bate, and the many thousands in the ranks who fought so bravely in defense of our homes and firesides, in defense of the Constitution and the great principles of Republican government, and remember the patriotism and self-sacrifice of "the men who wore the gray," then we can realize what a priceless heritage is ours!

But let us not forget that in proportion to our heritage is our responsibility. "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required." Let us as United Daughters of the Confederacy not forget that we, the descendants of these men whose deeds of heroism have thrilled the world, are living monuments to their memory. Upon us rest the responsibility, the duty of maintaining the high standard they made for us and the South. It was true patriotism, not self-glory, that guided them. Let us not only live up to the lofty standard they set for us, but help others to do so. Let us learn and then teach to the children of our land Southern history from the earliest settlement to the present time, and especially teach them the glorious record of the Confederate soldier, that they may learn lessons of true greatness, of true patriotism.

That we may help the future historian to write a true history of the part the Confederate soldier had in the War between the States we must procure and sacredly preserve the war record of every Confederate soldier possible. We know that upon every battlefield from Gettysburg to the Gulf the lifeblood of Tennessee's brave sons was poured out. Will we not as Tennessee Daughters of the Confederacy see to it that when that impartial history of the War between the States shall be written the part the Tennessee soldier had in that war will not be wanting? Will not every U. D. C. in Tennessee see to it that the war record of every Confederate soldier through whose services she is entitled to be a U. D. C. is procured and preserved on one of our rolls of honor? Many Confederate soldiers are indifferent to the preservation of the history they made for us. But they were not indifferent while they were making it; hence it is necessary that we, the U. D. C., procure and preserve this history.

While we are collecting the war record of our soldiers in the field, let us not neglect to collect the "war reminiscences" of the soldiers at home, the "women of the Confederacy."

Last year (1907) having been the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and this year (1908) being the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis, the only President of the Confederate States of America, it is hoped that not only the U. D. C. but the schools of Tennessee have given and will continue to give some time to the study of the lives and characters of these truly great men.

Since January 19, Lee Day, comes during the school term, the Historian of the Tennessee Division, U. D. C., would recommend that the Tennessee Division, U. D. C., make an effort to have the schools of Tennessee give an hour every year on January 19 to appropriate exercises in honor of Gen. Robert E. Lee, that the boys and girls of our State may be induced to emulate his pure life and character. Neither honor, position, nor money could induce R. E. Lee to do what he believed to be wrong nor prevent him from doing what he believed to be right. The doctrine of State rights had been instilled into him from his boyhood and taught to him even when a student at the United States Military Academy. So when President Lincoln through Mr. F. P. Blair offered to him the position of commander in chief of the army of the United States, though he knew what this offer would mean to him and to his family—to keep beautiful Arlington dear to him from many sweet associations, and possibly should he be victorious, to be made President of the United States when the war was ended—though he knew and appreciated these facts, he declined the offer candidly but courteously, saying: "I can take no part in an invasion of the Southern States."

MRS. TENNIE PINKERTON DOZIER.

Several years before the War between the States, when he decided for himself that slavery was not right, he did not try to find some one to whom he could sell his slaves, put the money in his pocket, and then cry out against slavery; but he—R. E. Lee—freed his slaves and was himself the loser financially. This man, "great in victory but greater in defeat, great in war but greater in peace," will go down in history as one of America's greatest men.

In studying the life and character of Jefferson Davis, let us not let the sad and painful memories connected with his defeat and imprisonment obscure the glorious record he made as a soldier, statesman, and Christian gentleman. Let us not think too much of the shackles he was made to wear for us; but rather rejoice in the fact that the manhood of Jefferson Davis, his high sense of honor and integrity of character, were never shackled.

The yearbook of the Tennessee Division was prepared with much loving interest. It is hoped that the course of study therein has been of some help to every U. D. C. in the State, and that it has helped to awaken among her Daughters an interest in the literature as well as the history of the South.

A grander or more glorious history the world has never known than is the history of our Southland.

Let us in every way we can, in song and story and with bronze and stone, honor the Confederate soldier and preserve as a sacred trust the history of the Confederate soldier of the "Volunteer State."

ABOUT NEGLECT OF VETERANS AT REUNIONS.

BY W. E. DOYLE (CO. G, 7TH S. C. CAVALRY), MEXIA, TEX.

Mr. Evans, of Huntsville, Ala., got down to facts in his statement as to the treatment of veterans at our annual Reunions. Most of the veterans are now too old to make money, and those who have not been so fortunate as to accumulate a competency are unable to pay the exorbitant prices exacted at our Reunions, and no attention or favors are shown them. Balls and banquets are given to the "sons" and "daughters," while the veterans are not given respect. They are charged a dollar per night for a cot, and for their meals they are charged at the same ratio. About the only use had for the private veterans at Reunions is to have them march two or three miles, and on these occasions I have seen feeble old men on crutches, while able-bodied officers were mounted and others rode in carriages.

It begins to look as if the old veterans are being made tools of, and that the time has come for them to see this and stay away from Reunions run in the interest of anybody but themselves. True, it is a great pleasure for the old veterans to meet and talk of their triumphs and defeats, realizing that they accomplished more, all things considered, than any other soldiers of whom history gives record. And in a few years at most there will be none of them to go to these gatherings; but in the great reunion on the other shore they can "rest under the shade of the trees" and wear with satisfaction the chaplets of honor their sacrifices won.

While giving place to Comrade Doyle's paper above, the VETERAN does not agree wholly with his statement, especially that "no attention or favors are shown those who have not been fortunate in accumulating a competency." There is always a fund raised and expended for free quarters at our Reunions—tents or houses with cots and free meals—to a large proportion of such comrades. The tax to cities entertaining is very large, and it is greater upon the time and comfort of managers beginning months before the time. It is only those who have the experience who realize fully the extent of such anxiety and care. True, it pays, and pays well, to the city in the aggregate; but those who are criticised get very little of the benefit pecuniarily. Besides, at all of the Reunions there are people of wealth and refinement who seek the very men referred to, giving them the best of everything, regardless of inconvenience and expense. Let us regard these things while justly condemning occasional managers who neglect their high obligation in these respects. Much should be endured for the joy of the old Confederates, who esteem above everything of earth personal gatherings with their old comrades with whom they served.

Captain Woodside left two swords at a Mrs. Jackson's, near Harrell's Crossroads, in Dallas County, Ala., one of which was lost in transit when his trunk and swords were forwarded to him in 1866. The one lost had on the blade: "Lieut. J. O. A. Bumpass." He would like to locate it now for the Lieutenant's sister.

GETTING READY FOR THE REUNION.

Arrangements for the Reunion at Birmingham, June 9-11, are being perfected with much diligence, so that patrons and guests may expect credit to the famous young city and pleasure to guests.

In some respects entertainers are always disappointed and regret not having acted differently in some minor details at least; but veterans have long since realized that misfortune may occur, and go prepared. One feature suggested to the management which seems to be omitted is that of a gathering in the Central City Park at 4 P.M. of the 9th. Secretary

CITY PARK, BIRMINGHAM.

Meet your comrades and friends there June 9 at 4 P.M.

Joseph Babb, of the Reunion Committee, understands the plan to be to have a sign for each State on a plot of ground for the assembling of men from that State, so that comrades may learn of each other. Alabama was best of all the States in the last Nashville Reunion on Vanderbilt Campus. The one thing besides giving attention to the VETERAN at its headquarters in the Hillman Hotel will be to bring together comrades who served together. The June VETERAN will be too late for information of value; so let the resolution be to go to that park at four o'clock on the first day, expecting such arrangement as will enable you to see the men of any particular State you may desire. The one misfortune at Nashville was interruption by men who wanted to make public speeches. Let us avoid that.

Gen. Rufus N. Rhodes has been selected by Camp Clayton to deliver the address of welcome to the veterans. J. A. Rountree will welcome the Sons and L. J. Haley the Southern Confederate Memorial Association.

A floral parade will be given on Tuesday afternoon, June 10. Lieut. Gov. Henry B. Gray was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements.

It is proposed to make the floral parade one of the distinct social events of the Reunion. It is the purpose of the Camp to have every automobile and carriage in Birmingham in line, tastefully decorated with pretty flowers. Pretty sponsors will ride beside the gray-haired veterans amid the waving of flags, the stars and bars and the stars and stripes. Decorated autos and carriages and the strains of sweet music by many bands will thrill the cheering thousands.

In a conversation with Secretary Babb about Reunion arrangements, he said that the dominating idea is the comfort and pleasure of the veterans. The hotel for them will be a large, commodious, well-ventilated building at the Fair Grounds, with a twelve-minute ride on free tickets from the center of the city. A band will be stationed at this hotel for the entertainment of the veterans.

General Lee's headquarters will be the Hillman Hotel, which is on Fourth Avenue and Nineteenth Street. This hotel will also be the headquarters of the VETERAN.

Headquarters for information and assignment of homes will be at the City Hall, opposite the Hillman Hotel.

The convention will be held in the Hippodrome.

The money for the Reunion was raised without publicity and without a soliciting committee.

A chorus of school children is being trained, likewise an adult chorus.

Music will be made an important feature of the entertainment, and two public concerts will be given.

UNITED CONFEDERATE CHOIRS OF AMERICA.

The second annual convention of the United Confederate Choirs of America will be held at Birmingham, Ala., on the 10th of June, 1908.

The headquarters of the Commander in Chief will be at Hotel Florence, of that city, during the great Confederate Reunion.

Organized Choirs from five or more States will be represented.

The military designations of the officers are merely affix, not prefix, and no officer shall be addressed by military title.

Following are the officers of the general organization:

Mrs. J. Griff Edwards, General Commander in Chief, Portsmouth, Va.

Miss Mary Cash, First Lieutenant General, Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Willie Vandeventer-Crocket, Second Lieutenant General, Fayetteville, Ark.

Miss Mary A. Williams, Major General Virginia Division, Norfolk, Va.

Miss L. Byrd Mock, Major General Arkansas Division, Fayetteville, Ark.

Mrs. Mary H. Miller, Major General Tennessee Division, Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Hattie Raguette, Major General Texas Division, Tyler, Tex.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Lumpkin Glenn, Major General North Carolina Division, Asheville, N. C.

HIPPODROME, THE CONVENTION HALL.

SPONSORS' BALL AT REUNION.

Annie Kendrick Walker writes:

"The committees in charge of the arrangements have decided upon the evening of June 11 for the sponsors' ball, which will be danced in the Hippodrome. This will be the last evening of the Reunion; but there will be a large ball preceding the sponsors' ball, and at which Camp Clayton, United Sons of Veterans, will entertain. The visiting sponsors will be entertained in many ways besides the balls in their honor.

"While the Reunion will be graced by many of the most beautiful women of the South, those appointed as sponsors and staffs for the several departments, the official lists will be augmented by many Birmingham belles, as it is known that several important appointments are to be made by the different Camps and also by the Chief of Staff.

"General Commanding Stephen D. Lee has already appointed Mrs. William B. Leedy as matron of honor on his staff and VETERANS' HOTEL, THE JOHN B. GORDON, AT THE FAIR GROUNDS.

Miss Emma Leedy as one of the maids of honor. It is understood that one of the most beautiful young women in Birmingham has been selected as sponsor, but no official announcement has been made.

"Camp Hardee will also select a sponsor and maids of honor from among the loveliest young women in society.

"A request has been received by Camp Clayton from Adjutant General and Chief of Staff William E. Mickle to appoint ten temporary aids with the rank of captain to assist in the social duties of the Reunion.

"Besides the sponsors and maids of honor, there will be many other prominent women attending the Reunion, the immediate parties of the officers in high rank to include the ladies of their family.

"Gen. Stephen D. Lee will be accompanied by his sister, Miss Mary Harrison, of Mississippi.

"Adj. Gen. W. E. Mickle will be accompanied by Mrs. Mickle and Miss Mickle."

POINTS OF INTEREST.

Capitol Park, Confederate Monument, Monument to Dr. Elias Davis, Statue of Vulcan, and Fair Grounds.

Views of the city may be had from Woodward Building, Brown-Marx Building, First National Bank Building, and Title Guarantee Building.

Theaters: Jefferson, Bijou, Majestic, and Gayety.

When in doubt, ask the next man, any man of Birmingham.

FROM CHAIRMAN OF REUNION COMMITTEE

Chairman J. M. Wilzin, of the Executive Committee, in a general order to Reunion guests:

"Brothers: Birmingham extends you greeting, and promises, if loving attention and service shall have their reward, that your Reunion in this city will be a most memorable and pleasurable occasion.

"Special effort will be made to provide for the comfort, convenience, and entertainment of the veterans. They will, as they should, be the central figure in our entertainments and in our hearts.

"'Hotel John B. Gordon' will be established for those veterans who will accept hospitality without charge. It is a commodious, well-ventilated, substantial, and attractive building in which the veterans will be protected from the elements, and will afford cool, clean, and sanitary quarters. The mess hall will likewise be in a large and substantial building, and will be under the direction of a competent committee. Those desiring accommodations at 'Hotel John B. Gordon' are requested to bring blankets where convenient.

"Gen. Stephen D. Lee will have rooms at the Hotel Hillman, corner of Fourth Avenue and Nineteenth Street. At the City Hall, immediately opposite the Hotel Hillman, will be general headquarters. Veterans are to report there for assignment of rooms and for such other information as they desire, the general information bureau being located in the City Hall.

"Horses for the parade may be secured on application to Dr. Byron Dozier, Chairman of Committee on Horses and Carriages, Birmingham.

"Those desiring information as to homes or hotel accommodations will address Jerome A. Tucker, Chairman of Homes Committee, 207 North Twenty-First Street, Birmingham.

"Special railroad rates have been granted by the railroads. Ask your nearest railroad agent for information concerning rates.

"If you are in doubt on any subject or want information on any subject and do not know what committee to address, write J. M. Wilzin, Chairman Executive Committee, Birmingham."

FORREST'S CAVALRY CORPS IN BIRMINGHAM.

The present Commander of the Forrest Cavalry Corps, Lieut. Gen. H. A. Tyler, is diligent in arranging for the Reunion at Birmingham. The social headquarters will be in the Morris Hotel and that for business will be at the corner of Fourth and Twentieth Streets.

The Commander has options on quarters for his men in the Morris (two in a room, $1.50 a day each; six in a room, two beds and four cots, $1 each).

Three hundred horses have been engaged for the parade (at $2 each). This command will follow General Lee and staff, members of the old escort, with the Commander leading. The escort company of General Forrest deserves all the honor that can be bestowed, for they were doubtless in more severe engagements than any other company in the war on either side.

Capt. J. P. Woodside, of Alton, Mo., desires to locate a young boy who asked permission to fight with his company during the battle of Wilson's Creek, and gallantly helped to make the charge on "bloody hill" when the Federals were forced to retreat under their hot fire. The boy had been holding a horse in reserve behind the 2d Missouri Regiment when it was killed by a stray bullet.

BEGINNINGS AT BIRMINGHAM.

Birmingham was laid out in 1871 by the Elyton Land Company, organized by James R. Powell (Duke of Birmingham), Frank M. Gilmer, Jr., Josiah Morris, Campbell Wallace, John T. Milner, Bolling Hall, and I. B. Faunce, of Montgomery, and J. C. Stanton, of Chattanooga. William P. Barker, city engineer, had visions of the future greatness of Birmingham, as shown in its wide and regular streets.

The first sale of lots in the city took place June 1, 1871.

The first house built was on the corner of First Avenue and Twenty-First Street and the first brick store on First Avenue near the Gayety Theater. The first brick residence is still standing across from the Jefferson County jail.

The first newspaper, the Elyton Sun, was removed from Elyton in 1872. Henry A. Hale was editor. The first bank was opened in June, 1873, by Charles Linn, of Montgomery.

The county site was removed from Elyton to Birmingham in 1873. The first Mayor was Maj. Robert Henley. The first postmaster was Robert Ketchum, grandfather of the present Mayor, George B. Ward.

Gas was turned on in October, 1882, and the first telephone exchange was established in that year, 1882.

The first coke iron was manufactured in July, 1874, by the Experimental Coke Company, composed of Col. James R. Powell, John T. Milner, Maj. Willis J. Milner, Maj. Andrew Marre, Dr. J. B. Luckie, Thomas Jeffers, Frank P. O'Brien, Benjamin F. Roden, Maj. Thomas S. Tate, J. L. Lockwood, H. F. DeBardeleben, W. K. Morris, L. W. Johns, and Colonel Goodrich.

The first coke made in Birmingham was by T. T. Hillman and H. F. DeBardeleben at the Alice Furnace in 1880, and the first coke oven was made by them in November, 1880. The first wrought iron was made on June 30, 1881, at the works of the Birmingham Iron & Steel Company.

GLIMPSES OF BIRMINGHAM AS IT IS NOW.

In the immediate vicinity of Birmingham more than thirty stacks are making iron. Hence the saying, "Birmingham fixes the price of pig iron for the world." No panic nor failure of crops nor national adversity can rob Birmingham of its preëminence in the most important of all industries.

The steel mill at Ensley is turning out the best steel rail made. It commands a dollar a ton more on the open market than the Pittsburg rail. Another steel plant, representing an investment of many millions and affording employment to thousands of men, is now in course of erection.

The iron ore beds of Alabama contain 2,000,000,000 tons, and the coal fields contain 50,000,000,000 tons.

Birmingham is conspicuously a manufacturing center because of the cheapness of fuel and the abundance of raw materials. Her heavy products find a market in all parts of the world. More than 2,500 tons of iron are melted daily. One-fifth of the sugar house machinery used in the United States, Porto Rico, and Cuba is made in Birmingham.

The finest clays in the United States are to be found in Jones Valley. Bricks of every variety, fireproofing, terra cotta, pottery, pipes, and other clay manufactures are contributing to spread the reputation and increase the wealth of Birmingham. Cement and concrete industries are leaping in the district. Birmingham is making great strides. It is the seat of a large traffic in yellow pine. It has a cotton mill of more than 40,000 spindles and a hosiery mill in the textile line. There are over three hundred manufacturing establishments in Birmingham, representing an investment of more than $100,000,000 and having an output of over $85,000,000.

Birmingham has kept progress in the cultivation of the spiritual as well as the material. There are more than ninety churches, many of them imposing in appearance. Corresponding zeal has been shown in the erection and equipment of the public schools. The magnificent $200,000 high school recently erected is the pride of the city.

Birmingham is hospitable; the stranger is welcomed with open hands. He finds a climate unsurpassed, an open season all the year around, cooling breezes in summer and flowers

BROWN-MAX BUILDING.

NEW UNION PASSENGER STATION—$2,000,000.

BIRMINGHAM'S $200,000 SCHOOL BUILDING.

in winter. He finds filtered water, adequate drainage, well paved and clean streets, and a vigilant health department. The white death rate is only nine to a thousand. The altitude above the sea ranges from seven hundred feet in the business section to one thousand feet in the residential section.

Birmingham is a city of home owners. Birmingham has in sixteen years built more than sixteen thousand homes.

Birmingham is a great railroad center. Among its lines may be mentioned the Louisville and Nashville, the Central of Georgia, the Southern Railway, the Frisco, the Alabama Great Southern, the Birmingham Mineral, the Seaboard Air Line, the Coal & Iron Company has projected a campaign involving the expenditure of millions. Men and money from every section are turning to Birmingham to grasp the opportunities awaiting those who seek.

AS IT WILL BE.

Birmingham is destined, it seems, to be the greatest of the Southern cities. Her geographical location in the center of the cotton belt and in the center of the most wonderful mineral region in the world, with abundance of timber near at hand, with every blessing of soil and climate that man could desire, foretell her advent as a metropolis.

John W. Gates is quoted as saying: "I believe the four largest cities in what we term the South are New Orleans, Memphis, Birmingham, and Atlanta, in the order named. I believe, however, that by 1920 Birmingham, Ala., will be the largest of them all. I see no reason why Birmingham should not have one million people twenty years hence. It will certainly be the largest city in America not on navigable waters. Pittsburg and vicinity has a population of over one million people. If Mr. Andrew Carnegie had started out in Birmingham instead of Pittsburg, Birmingham would to-day be the iron and steel center of America instead of Pittsburg, in my opinion. A ton of pig iron can be produced in the Birmingham district with modern furnaces, such as we will have twenty-four months from to-day, for $2.50 to $3.50 per ton less than it can be manufactured anywhere else in America, and I believe for two dollars per ton less than it can be made anywhere else in the world."

Birmingham fixes the price of iron for the world, makes the best steel rail, is fourth as an iron producer in the United States, and has the largest supply of iron ore in the world.

There are 8,610 square miles of coal fields and 15 railroads.

CITY HALL, BIRMINGHAM, REUNION HEADQUARTERS.

Illinois Central, the Mobile and Ohio, the Atlantic, Birmingham and Atlanta Railroad, the St. Andrews Bay, Columbus and Birmingham Railroad, nearly all making fine headway to Birmingham, and an electric railroad from Gadsden, Ala., to Birmingham is projected.

The new Union Passenger Station, costing over $2,000,000, is nearly completed.

The central geographical position of Birmingham, its wealth of raw material, its railroad facilities, and its climate render it a most excellent place for the location of the smaller as well as the larger industries.

Millions of dollars are being invested in the Birmingham district. The Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company will, it is understood, spend $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 in the development of its properties, and the Alabama Consolidated

THE HILLMAN HOSPITAL.

One million dollars a week is paid out in wages, 52,000 men are employed in industries, and 2,500 tons of iron are melted daily.

It gives the railroads 40,000,000 tons of freight yearly.

It has $100,000,000 invested in industries, and pays one-sixth of the State taxes.

It mines 13,000,000 tons of coal yearly, has 125 miles of street railway tracks, the best sanitary sewerage in the South, a death rate of only nine and a half to one thousand whites, a population of 150,000 with suburbs, and has $20,000,000 bank deposits.

The real estate transfers last year amounted to $11,000,000. It has twelve parks with an area of two hundred acres.

It handles 125,000 bales of cotton annually, is a clay-working center, and has inexhaustible cement resources.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING.

WOODWARD BUILDING.

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.

Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

FAITHFUL FRATERNAL FRIENDSHIP.

The VETERAN feels impelled to say something about the friendship that should exist among men. It is directed in this channel because of the great lessons taught by Confederate comradeship and the rapid dropping out of life by the men and women who are of the class that it represents. Creation and life are a profound mystery. A leading citizen of the South who was an eminently moral man (a United States Senator) expressed gratitude for the peace of mind shown by Christians, and yet to his intimate friends admitted that he was an infidel. He could not believe in Divinity, and he went down to the grave a sad, sad man. He had no theory, no hope of the future.

We do not know, as we see and feel and hear, but we trust in morality and in the good. We are comforted in performing deeds of kindness; and if we have persisted in living by the golden rule, we are rewarded here; while there is something that soothes and comforts beyond all else, even if it is only hope, of a resurrection as set forth in the Bible.

The special purpose of this plea is to induce zeal in giving others pleasure and in helping the wicked to be better. The commotion in the legislative world nowadays against graft and oppression of the poor is commendable, and yet there is a lack by these reconstructionists of that sympathy toward those who are legislated against which robs the acts of their best moral benefit. There should be more of "moral suasion" and less persecution by legislation in these matters. Our brothers are not all devils to be fought with fire.

How rapidly mankind is passing! Very soon each one is to occupy the lonesome grave, where the evil influences that have been exercised cannot be recalled. Physical development is fine for the time, but every man is speedily growing into age—yea, imbecility—so that in a brief while the strongest will have gone "the way of all the earth."

Family ties are beautiful, and it is well to provide for the household. A man who is devoted to his home—to his wife and children—is apt to be a moral man and a good citizen; and yet the brotherhood of man has its full claim upon each one. He who accumulates a fortune and confines all of his giving to his family makes a mistake. The poor drunkard in a gutter lowers humanity. He is our brother. Exclusiveness of class is the most deplorable of human ills. Pity the man who ostracizes his neighbors because he has wealth! He will be all the lonelier in his wait for the judgment. The man who is without direct heirs and wills his estate to those of his kin who are already wealthy makes a mistake, and the rich who build great monuments rather than provide for their poor kin and poor neighbors will not be proud of their deeds when the great judgment day arrives. Such monuments if still standing will be a mockery rather than an honor, and the dust of crumbled shafts may stifle those so designated. Splendid monuments are commended, but it is the excess that is deplored.

The writer of the foregoing is blessed with health beyond most of his fellows, and hopes to live several years yet. He is active and bounds along quite like a schoolboy when scampering off to a playground. He once thought he might be an exception and not give down as other men failing in mind and body; but he sees now that all who are human are destined to death ere long, and he realizes more vividly than before that the human race is on trial every day and every hour. A Judge who cannot be deceived is in constant charge of his case, and he may be required to confess any day or hour. Sudden deaths are far more numerous than formerly, and all our deeds are to be accounted for. Let us have faith and hope, giving good cheer; but let us place charity before all other virtues after integrity—charity that is kind and that endures. Let us be active to help and elevate our fellow-man; then we shall have done what we could. Let the "kingliness of kindness and the royalty of truth" be the spirit of our lives and let us abandon hope of knowing the origin of God. We are too small and too weak to fathom such depth, else ere this some of the saints would have had that knowledge.

KODAK PICTURE FROM MISS "POLLY" DUFF, BIG STONE GAP, VA.

(Miss Duff—Anne Imboden—and Dr. James Madison Lynch, of Baltimore, were married in Nashville April 15, 1908.)

RULES FOR BURYING DEAD OF THE ENEMY.

The article of Col. W. D. Pickett, page 230, was shown to Gov. James D. Porter, staff officer to General Cheatham, and he dictated the following in reply: "I have read my friend Colonel Pickett's paper entitled 'Rules for Burial of Your Adversary's Dead on the Battlefield.' All I assume to know about the proper rule for observance is that when we moved forward after the battle of Chickamauga we had hurriedly buried our own dead and a few of the Federal dead. The order came suddenly to move rapidly forward. We were then engaged in burying the dead. The commanding general was close by, and I asked him myself: 'What must we do with the enemy's dead?' He replied: 'We are simply passing over the battlefield and are under no obligations, according to the rules of war, to stop to bury them. We will recognize any application the enemy makes for the burial of his dead.' I repeat what I heretofore said—that the flag of truce for the burial of the dead at Kennesaw Mountain was applied for by General Sherman."

PRESIDENT CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, NOT "SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY."—Thanks to Capt. Charles S. Dwight, who commanded a corps of engineers in the Confederate States army, for his letter from Columbia, S. C., criticising the inscription on the memorial window at Biloxi: "To * * * wife of Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy." The term should be changed from Southern Confederacy to Confederate States of America.

ADDRESS OF BRIG. GEN. JAMES E. RAINS.

BY L. J. WATKINS (A NEPHEW), NASHVILLE, TENN.

The following address by General Rains was in response to a speech delivered by Colonel De Bow, presenting the General, on behalf of the ladies and citizenry of Nashville, with a beautiful Confederate flag. The exercises took place early in the spring of 1862 at the old City Hotel, which stood on the east side of the Public Square at Nashville, the General addressing his audience from the hotel balcony. The occasion was one of mixed enthusiasm and sentiment, a vast concourse of people having assembled for the purpose stated and to bid farewell—a last farewell, it was—to their distinguished, heroic fellow-townsmen and his gallant band of soldiers. General Rains fell in the battle of Murfreesboro, not long afterwards, while leading a charge on the enemy.

James Edwards Rains was born April 10, 1833, in Wilson County, Tenn.; and fell at the head of his brigade in the battle of Murfreesboro, December 31, 1862. General Rains in-then colonel of the 11th Tennessee Regiment. In the spring of 1862, though only twenty-nine years of age, he was commissioned brigadier general. His career as a soldier was brief but brilliant. In the battles of Barbourville, Wild Cat, and Murfreesboro he quitted himself like a true soldier.

GEN. JAMES E. RAINS.

General Rains commanded the brigade composed of the 3d and 9th Georgia, 11th Tennessee, and 20th North Carolina Regiments. In the battle of Murfreesboro he occupied the extreme left of the Confederate line, and led his command with a noble daring in the memorable charge of Wednesday. While under a terrific fire, and as he was passing down the line, a Minie ball struck him in the breast, and he fell near the colors, uttering as his last words: "Forward, my brave boys, forward!"

General Rains was married on June 22, 1858, to Miss Ida Yeatman, daughter of Henry Y. Yeatman, of Nashville, Tenn. To them was born one child, Laura, who is now Mrs. L. J. Ellis, of Plainfield, N. J. Mrs. Ellis visited New Haven recently to meet some of her father's Yale classmates, who presented to her a silver salver which bore the inscription: "To Mrs. L. J. Ellis—A Tribute of Respect and Affection for Her Father, the Hon. James E. Rains, Class of 1854, Yale College. From His Classmates."

Mrs. Anice Corder, a sister of General Rains, resides in Nashville.

GENERAL RAINS'S SPEECH.

In behalf of the gallant men before us, I accept these colors and return to you, and through you to the fair donors—and especially to her who has been mainly instrumental in its presentation—our most hearty thanks for the beautiful gift and for the handsome manner in which it has been bestowed.

I feel conscious of the high and sacred trust I assume in receiving from the hands of beauty this holy emblem of freedom and human rights; and had I the least lingering apprehension that its proud folds would wave above one coward heart or trail before a conquering foe, I would refuse to accept the proffered gift. But, sir, I accept it, and can commit it to the keeping of these men with the confident assurance that they will defend it with a valor and a patriotic self-devotion which will infinitely prefer death to its dishonor.

Sir, these gallant men are panting for the fray. From the Old Dominion they have snuffed the scent of battle and caught the shout of victory, and they are champing at their bits for the fight. You may tell the fair ladies from whom you bear your commission that those men will never disgrace that flag. Tell them that they will prize it as the dearest object of the soldier's affection, the holiest emblem of a just cause, and the grandest incentive to a patriotic chivalry. Tell them they will defend it with their stout arms while it floats and cover it with their lifeless forms should it fall. Tell them that in the height of battle, when grim-visaged war shall shake his gory locks, bristle his angry crest, and send his death-dealing messengers thick and fast among their ranks, they will turn their eyes to where that banner floats, and, catching fresh inspiration from its gallant folds, will rush with steadier step and stouter heart to the deadly assault. And tell them, too, that they will never forget the fair donors of the standard they bear; that their names will be watchwords for enthusiasm amidst the cry of battle and the shout of victory; that they will mingle with the song of praise for the conquering hero the requiem of sadness for the fallen brave; that they will give keener zest to the soldier's joy when a field has been won, and soothe the dying pangs of those whose blood the victory costs.

herited the sterling qualities of courage, hardihood, and high-mindedness of his father, Rev. John Rains; while his mother, Lucinda Cartwright, to whom the distinguished son was uncommonly devoted, transmitted to him the beautiful traits of gentleness and unselfishness.

When he had hardly attained his majority, General Rains graduated from Yale at the head of his law class, and in 1854 entered upon the practice of his profession at Nashville, Tenn., and soon thereafter was elected City Attorney. During his term as City Attorney he was associate editor of the Nashville Banner. In 1860 he was elected Attorney-General of the district comprising the counties of Davidson, Williamson, and Sumner. This office he held at the outbreak of the great war. When the call for troops was issued, he enlisted as a private, and in rapid succession was made lieutenant, captain, and

To you, then, brave men, I commit this banner. To your keeping is confided the sacred badge of an oppressed people's rights. Take it and defend it—defend it with your valor and your lives; defend it for the honor of those who bear it; defend it for the love of those who gave it; defend it for the justice of the cause it symbolizes. Let it be to you the guiding star of duty, the never-failing proof of valor, the sure harbinger of victory, the everlasting symbol of a patriotic and holy cause. And should it be your good fortune to fling it to the breeze in the face of the foe, there rear with your arms an impenetrable rampart around it, or build with your bodies a sacred mausoleum above it.

No one, sir, of these gallant men, while that flag shall wave above, will begrudge a thousand lives in so holy a cause.

Nowhere can a man fall more gloriously than in defending his own liberties and his country's honor; in no way can he make his name dearer and his memory sweeter to surviving friends; in no way can he invest the sod that shall cover him with a more thrilling interest and shed upon his own dust a more lasting honor than to fall battling for his country's freedom.

You may fall, brave men, in defending the trust you have this day assumed; but if fall you must, you will not fall in vain. You may sleep the silent sleep of death upon some far-off plain, and mingle undistinguished with the dust of thousands more; but your names will live and linger among the people for whom you died. Your memories will be forever enshrined in the great heart of that country upon whose altars and in defense of whose rights you shed your blood. The story of your deeds, recalling as I know it will the well-fought battlefield with all its brilliant associations, and coming emblazoned with the halo of victory, shall awaken an emotion of admiration and love in the Southern mind and send a thrill of sympathy and sadness through the Southern heart as long as our blue mountains shall point to the heavens or our bright waters run down to the seas.

And now, my brave boys, with the blessing of age, the smiles of beauty, and the benedictions of Heaven you go forth to add fresh laurels to the chaplet of Tennessee's glory.

With one parting look at the bright sun, one prayer to the sky,
 One glance at our banner that floats glorious on high,
 Rush on, as the young lion bounds on his prey!
 Let the sword flash on high! fling the scabbard away!
 Roll on like the thunderbolt over the plain!
 We'll come back in glory or we'll come not again."

Once more I return to you our thanks for this proud banner and renew our promise that we will conquer before or fall beneath it.

OBJECTS TO U. S. PENSION OF CONFEDERATES.

BY DR. R. L. JOHNSON, ROLLA, MO.

Having seen allusions to the subject of the United States giving pensions to Confederate soldiers, and hearing that a bill to that effect was to be offered in Congress, I feel that I have a right to protest against such an illogical proposal; for I am a Confederate myself, having heard the ordinance of secession read while under arms at the Charleston Fair Grounds (a private in the Moultrie Guards, 5th Rifle Regiment, under Col. J. Johnston Pettigrew), in the afternoon of the day of its passage, and after continuous service having been paroled at Richmond after Lee's surrender.

During the twenty-eight years that I have lived in Missouri, I cannot recall a single instance when a Confederate soldier has ever suggested such a thing as a United States pension for Confederates. Having served eight years in Cleveland's and four in Harrison's administration as an examiner for the United States pension office, I have a number of times heard the suggestion and the wish expressed by United States pensioners that the United States government would pension Confederates. Kind and generous, but unreasonable. As a citizen of the United States I would object.

For a long time after the war the political and financial conditions and the immense number to be pensioned made it impossible for the individual States to undertake such a task; but now neither condition prevents the States from making generous provision for the greatly reduced number. It must, too, be remembered that time, which has reduced the number of individuals, has added to their years and infirmities.

I am happy to say that my adopted State (Missouri) has fine homes for both United States and Confederate veterans; but with its great wealth it could do more for the thinned ranks of the old Confederate guard.

It does not follow that the above applies to the matter suggested by President McKinley regarding the respect to be voluntarily accorded to the graves of our departed heroes who are where no money pension can reach them now. Voluntary tributes of respect shown to the dead we cannot graciously decline, but should receive them with heartfelt appreciation.

I think this is a State rights question.

MONUMENT AT CORSICANA, TEX.

The Corsicana (Tex.) Light reports the unveiling of the Confederate monument there on January 20. The occasion was propitious. Capt. H. G. Damon, master of ceremonies, explained the object of the gathering and paid an eloquent tribute to the women of the South for their devotion to the Confederacy.

Rev. George L. Bitzer offered a fervent prayer, after which an orchestra played "My Old Kentucky Home." Miss Katie Daffan, President of the Daughters of the Confederacy of Texas, paid tribute to the Navarro Chapter for its devotion and self-sacrifice as shown in the erection of the handsome monument to be unveiled. "The Tear-Stained Banner," a poem, was read by Mrs. M. D. Peck. This was followed by thirteen little misses who represented the thirteen Southern States with "bonnie blue flags" in their hands and pulled the cord that drew the veil from the monument, at the same time waving their flags and singing that familiar war song, "The Bonnie Blue Flag." The participants in this feature and the States they represented were Misses Emily Kate Johnson as Confederacy, Ellen Van Hook as Virginia, Bertha Zadek as Louisiana, Katrina Stout as North Carolina, Josephine Bogy as Texas, Mildred Caldwell as Mississippi, Frances Edens as Kentucky, Louise Knox as Maryland, Carolyn McCrery as Florida, Hattie Mae Fowler as Tennessee, Catherine Kirven as Georgia, Margaret Lowry as Missouri, Minnie Johnson as Arkansas, and Maggie Clarkson as South Carolina.

Hon. R. E. Prince, the orator of the occasion, was then introduced and made one of his characteristic speeches, paying tribute to the valor of Southern soldiers and Southern women.

Capt. A. F. Wood followed Mr. Prince in a good speech which the old soldiers greatly enjoyed.

"Dixie" was then sung by all who would join in.

Captain Damon called for the "old Rebel yell," and the Confederates who were there in their gray uniforms responded in three hearty yells, after which Rev. J. H. Hughes pronounced the benediction.

All told, the occasion was a most impressive one, and was witnessed by possibly a thousand people.

The monument represents a Confederate bugler calling his comrades to arms. The statue is of bronze, was cast in Philadelphia, and is nine feet high, while the marble pedestal on which it stands and the following inscriptions are made is ten feet high, making a total height of nineteen feet.

THE CORSICANA MONUMENT.

On the front of the monument are these words: "The Call to Arms. Erected 1907 by Navarro Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, to commemorate the valor and heroism of the Confederate soldier. It is not the power of man to command success. The Confederate soldier did more: he deserved it.

'But their fame on brightest pages
Penned by poets and by sages
Shall go sounding down the ages.'

On the back are these words: "It is the duty we owe to the dead—the dead who died for us, but whose memories can never die. It is a duty we owe to posterity to see that our children shall know the virtues and rise worthy of their sires. —Jefferson Davis."

On one side is the following: "The soldiers of the Southern Confederacy fought valiantly for the liberty of State bequeathed them by their forefathers of 1776.

'Who glorified
Their righteous cause and they who made
The sacrifice supreme in that they died
To keep their country free.'

On another side are these words:

"Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,

Or Honor points the hallowed spot
Where Valor proudly sleeps."

"Tell it as you may,
It never can be told;
Sing it as you will,
It never can be sung—
The story of the glory
Of the men who wore the gray."

ST. ANDREW'S CROSS.

BY MRS. J. W. MEEK.

The symbol of the cross has been
A helping hand from God to men
Through cycle of the ages;
Since he, the Pure, Inviolable One,
Upon it gained a victory won
By paying sin its wages.

'Twas next St. Andrew earned a crown;
On reflexed shafts impaled laid down
His service sweet for glory.
Just, holy saint, companion true,
For whom is named a cross of blue,
Extolled in song and story.

O, holy, most distinguished sign,
Upon it there was once entwined
The hopes of fairest nation;
Borne to the front in battlefield,
Men gave their bodies as a shield,
Their warm lifeblood oblation.

Far from the South an eager line
Bore cross of blue which erst did shine
With many stars resplendent
On field of crimson held by hand
Uplifted for a native land
With faith in God dependent.

The clear white star, in cross of blue,
Memorialized a guest quite true:
The crimson field, a sorrow—
Presaging martyrs that would yield
Their life in blood on battlefield
Afar some distant morrow.

O, blue and white St. Andrew's Cross!
Tell now the woe of nation's loss,
Of many hopes sure dying.
Tell how in charge of battle's roar,
In storm of musketry's outpour
Came mighty man's down-lying.

Of how heroic sons of men
Bore star and cross to death, and then,
While hill and field were crowded,
Fell with strange peace of battle's pain,
And, wrapped in star and cross again,
Did thus lie nobly shrouded.

Immortal memory is thine.
The South with bay and laurel twine
Thy threefold colors greeting.
Yea, rue and roses will they bring,
While these true souls in heaven sing
Their last eternal greeting.

ANCIENT ODE TO DEITY.

BY GAVRIEL ROMANOVITCH DERSHAVIN.

[Note.—This sublime poem was written by Gavriel Romanovitch Dershavin, a Russian lyric poet, born in 1743 and died in 1816. It was translated into English by Sir John Bowring, an English writer, born in 1792, and died in 1872. Sir John says that this poem has been translated into Japanese by order of the Emperor, and is hung up, embroidered in gold, in the temple of Yeddo. It has also been translated into the Chinese and Tartar languages, and, written on a piece of silk, is suspended in the Imperial Palace at Peking.]

O thou eternal One! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy, all motion guide;
Unchanged through Time's all-devastating flight;
Thou only God! there is no God beside!
Being above all beings! Mighty One!
Whom none can comprehend and none explore;
Who fill'st existence with thyself alone;
Embracing all, supporting, ruling o'er,
Being whom we call God, and know no more!

In its sublime research, philosophy
May measure out the ocean deep, may count
The sands or the sun's rays; but, God, for thee
There is no weight nor measure; none can mount
Up to thy mysteries; Reason's brightest spark,
Though kindled by thy light, in vain would try
To trace thy counsels, infinite and dark;
And thought is lost ere thought can soar so high,
Even like past moments in eternity.

Thou from primeval nothingness didst call
First chaos, then existence; Lord, on thee
Eternity had its foundation; all
Sprang forth from thee; of light, joy, harmony,
Sole origin—all life, all beauty thine.
Thy word created all, and doth create;
Thy splendor fills all space with rays divine.
Thou art, and wert, and shall be glorious, great,
Light-giving, life-sustaining Potentate!

Thy chains the unmeasured universe surround,
Upheld by thee, by thee inspired with breath!
Thou the beginning with the end hast bound
And beautifully mingled life and death!
As sparks mount upward from the fiery blaze.
So suns are born, so worlds spring forth from thee;
And as the spangles in the sunny rays
Shine round the silver snow, the pageantry
Of heaven's bright army glitters in thy praise.

A million torches lighted by thy hand
Wander unwearied through the blue abyss;
They own thy power, accomplish thy command,
All gay with life, all eloquent with bliss.
What shall we call them? Piles of crystal light,
A glorious company of golden streams,
Lamps of celestial ether burning bright,
Suns lighting systems with their joyous beams?
But thou to these art as the noon to night.

Yes, as a drop of water in the sea,
All this magnificence in thee is lost.
What are ten thousand worlds compared to thee?
And what am I, then? Heaven's unnumbered host,
Though multiplied by myriads and arrayed

In all the glory of sublimest thought,
Is but an atom in the balance weighed Against thy greatness, is a cipher brought Against infinity! What am I, then? Naught.

Naught! But the effluence of thy light divine,
Pervading worlds, hath reached my bosom too.
Yes, in my spirit doth thy spirit shine
As shines the sunbeam in a drop of dew.
Naught! but I live, and on hope's opinions fly
Eager toward thy presence; for in thee
I live and breathe and dwell, aspiring high,
Even to the throne of thy divinity.
I am, O God, and surely thou must be!

Thou art! directing, guiding all, thou art!
Direct my understanding, then, to thee,
Control my spirit, guide my wandering heart;
Though but an atom 'midst immensity,
Still I am something, fashioned by thy hand!
I hold a middle rank 'twixt heaven and earth,
On the last verge of mortal being stand,
Close to the realms where angels have their birth,
Just on the boundaries of the spirit land!

The chain of being is complete in me;
In me is matter's last gradation lost,
And the next step is spirit—Deity!
I can command the lightning and am dust!
A monarch and a slave; a worm, a god!
Whence came I here, and how? so marvelously
Constructed and conceived? unknown? this clod
Lives surely through some higher energy;
Far from itself it could not be!

Creator, yes! Thy wisdom and thy word
Created me! Thou source of life and good,
Thou spirit of my spirit and my Lord,
Thy light, thy love in their bright plenitude
Filled me with an immortal soul to spring
Over the abyss of death, and bade it wear
The garments of eternal day and wing
Its heavenly flight beyond this little sphere,
Even to its source—to thee, its author there.

O thoughts ineffable, O visions blest!
Though worthless our conceptions all of thee,
Yet shall thy shadowed image fill our breast
And waft its homage to thy Deity.
God, thus alone my lowly thoughts can soar.
Thus seek thy presence, being wise and good!
Midst thy vast works admire, obey, adore;
And when the tongue is eloquent no more,
The soul shall speak in tears of gratitude.

CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION HONORS
MRS. DAVIS.—The President and officers of the Confederated Southern Memorial Association return thanks to the Chairman of the "Memorial Window" Committee, Miss Decca Lamar West, Waco, Tex., for an invitation to attend the unveiling of the magnificent memorial erected by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in the Church of the Holy Redeemer, Biloxi, Miss., February 28. The "Memorial Women" of New Orleans, including delegations from the Jefferson Davis Monument Association, the Ladies' Confederate Memorial Association, and the Junior Confederate Memorial Association, were in attendance and united with the Daughters in honoring the memory of the "Mother of the Confederacy."

BAIL BOND OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

BELOW IS GIVEN FACSIMILE OF THE HISTORIC DOCUMENT.

Act a stated term of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia held at Richmond on the First Monday of May One thousand Eight hundred and sixty seven

This facsimile has been in the VETERAN office for years. It is singular that "his mark" is given to the names of James Thomas and Thomas R. Price. Who and where from were Thomas and Price?

Be it remembered that on this Thirtieth (30th) day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty seven before the Honorable the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia at the Court House in Richmond in the said District came Jefferson Davis and acknowledged himself to owe to the United States of America the sum of One thousand thousand dollars lawful money of the said United States and Gerrit Smith, Horace Greeley, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Augustus Schell, Horace F. Clark, A. Welch, David K. Jackman, William H. McFarland, R. B. Haxall, Isaac Davenport, Jr., Abraham Warwick, Gustavus A. Myers, William H. Crump, James Lyons, John A. Meredith, Wm. H. Lyons, Jno. M. Botts, James Thomas, Thomas R. Price, William Allen, Benjamin Wood, Thomas W. Doswell, each of them acknowledged himself to owe to the United States of America the sum of Five thousand dollars of like lawful money. The said several sums to be made to the use of the said United States, of the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the said parties respectively. The condition of this recognizance is such that if the said Jefferson Davis shall in the term return well and truly appear at the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia to be held at Richmond in the said District on the Fourth Monday of November next at the sitting of the Court on that day and then and there appear from day to day and stand to abide and perform whatsoever shall be then and there ordered or adjudged in respect to him by the said Court and not depart from the said Court without the leave of the said Court in that behalf first had and obtained then the said recognizance to become void, otherwise to remain in full force.

Taken and acknowledged this 30th day of May AD 1867 in open Court, before me W. H. Barry, clerk.

Jefferson Davis.

*Wm. H. Barry, Clerk
James Lyons
John A. Meredith*

- W. H. Barry, clerk
- Signatures with that of Mr. Davis are as follows:
- Gerrit Smith.
- Horace Greeley.
- Cornelius Vanderbilt.
- Augustus Schell.
- Horace F. Clark.
- A. Welch.
- David K. Jackman.
- Wm. H. McFarland.
- R. B. Haxall.
- Isaac Davenport, Jr.
- Abraham Warwick.
- Gustavus A. Myers.
- Wm. H. Crump.
- James Lyons.
- John A. Meredith.
- Wm. H. Lyons.
- Jno. M. Botts.
- Thomas W. Doswell.
- James Thomas, Jr.
- Thomas R. Price.
- William Allen.
- Benjamin Wood.

*Wm. H. Barry, Clerk
Horace Greeley
Cornelius Vanderbilt
Augustus Schell
Horace F. Clark
A. Welch
David K. Jackman
Wm. H. McFarland
R. B. Haxall
Isaac Davenport
Abraham Warwick
Gustavus A. Myers*

*Wm. H. Barry
Wm. H. Barry*

*Wm. H. Barry
Wm. H. Barry
Thomas W. Doswell
James Thomas, Jr.
Thomas R. Price
William Allen
Benjamin Wood*

In the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia, Richmond November the 8th in the year of our Lord 1867

The above is a true and correct copy of the original recognizance of Jefferson Davis, now remaining on file in this office, with a fac simile of the signatures therein

Wm. H. Barry, clerk

NEW ENGLANDER ON JEFFERSON DAVIS.

AN EXHAUSTIVE PAPER ON GREAT QUESTIONS.

[On June 5, 1886, the following letter by Mr. Benjamin J. Williams was published in the Lowell (Mass.) Sun. On February 4, 1908, it was sent the VETERAN by Comrade Sam H. Pendleton, of Elizabeth, N. J. The Sun says: "The communication printed below is from the pen of Mr. Benjamin J. Williams, of this city, and treats of a subject of deepest interest to the people of this country, North and South. It treats of Mr. Jefferson Davis and his connection with the Southern Confederacy from a Southern standpoint. The writer handles his subject in a manner unfamiliar to our readers, who, if they do not agree with the sentiments expressed, will at least find it a very interesting and instructive communication, particularly at this time."]

Editor of the Sun, Dear Sir: The demonstrations in the South in honor of Mr. Jefferson Davis, the ex-President of the Confederate States, are certainly of a remarkable character and furnish matter for profound consideration. Mr. Davis, twenty-one years after the fall of the Confederacy, suddenly emerging from his long retirement, journeys among his people to different prominent points, there to take part in public observances more or less directly commemorative, respectively, of the cause of the Confederacy and of those who strove and died for it; and everywhere he receives from the people the most overwhelming manifestations of heartfelt affection, devotion, and reverence, exceeding even any of which he was the recipient in the time of his power; such manifestations as no existing ruler in the world can obtain from his people, and such were never before given to a public man—old, out of office, with no favors to dispense, and disfranchised. Such homage is significant, startling. It is given, as Mr. Davis himself has recognized, not to him alone, but to the cause whose chief representative he is. And it is useless to attempt to deny, disguise, or evade the conclusion that there must be something great and noble and true in him and in the cause to evoke this homage.

As for Mr. Davis himself, the student of American history has not yet forgotten that it was his courage, self-possession, and leadership that in the very crisis of the battle of Buena Vista won for his country her proudest victory upon foreign fields of war, that as Secretary of War in Mr. Pierce's administration he was its master spirit, and that he was the recognized leader of the United States Senate at the time of the secession of the Southern States. For his character there let it be stated by his enemy but admirer, Massachusetts's own Henry Wilson: "The clear-headed, practical, dominating Davis." This was said by him in a speech made during the war, while passing in review the Southern Senators who had withdrawn from their States. When the seceding States formed their new Confederacy, in recognition of Mr. Davis's varied and predominant abilities, he was unanimously chosen its chief magistrate. And from the hour of his arrival at Montgomery to assume that office, when he spoke the memorable words, "We are determined to make all who oppose us smell Southern powder and feel Southern steel," all through the Confederacy's four years' unequal struggle for independence down to his last appeal as its chief, in his defiant proclamation from Danville after the fall of Richmond, "Let us not despair, my countrymen, but meet the foe with fresh defiance and with unconquered and unconquerable hearts," he exhibited everywhere and always the same proud and unyielding spirit, so expressive of his sanguine and resolute temper, which no disasters could subdue, which sustained him even when it could no longer sustain others, and which, had it been possible, would of itself have assured the independence of the Confederacy. And when at last the Confederacy had fallen, literally overpowered by unmeasurably superior numbers and means, and Mr. Davis was a prisoner, subjected to the grossest indignities, his proud spirit remained unbroken; and never since the subjugation of his people has he abated in the least his assertion of the cause for which they struggled. The seductions of power or interest may move lesser men, that matters not to him; the cause of the Confederacy as a fixed, moral, and constitutional principle, unaffected by the triumphs of physical force, he asserts to-day as unequivocally as when he was seated in its executive chair at Richmond, in apparently irreversible power with its victorious legions at his command. Now, when we consider all this, what Mr. Davis has been and, most of all, what he is to-day in the moral greatness of his position, can we wonder that his people turn aside from timeservers and self-seekers and from all the commonplace chaff of life and render to him that spontaneous and grateful homage which is his due?

And we cannot indeed wonder when we consider the cause for which Mr. Davis is so much to his people. Let Mr. Davis himself state it, for no one else can do it so well. In his recent address at the laying of the corner stone of the Confederate monument at Montgomery he said: "I have come to join you in the performance of a sacred task—to lay the foundation of a monument at the cradle of the Confederate government—which shall commemorate the gallant sons of Alabama who died for their country and whose sires won in the War of the Revolution the State sovereignty, freedom, and independence which were left by them as an inheritance to their posterity forever." This is a true statement of the case. It is also a complete justification of the Confederate cause to all who are acquainted with the origin and character of the American Union and the principles of State rights upon which it was founded.

When the original thirteen colonies threw off their allegiance to Great Britain, they became independent States, "independent of her and of each other," as the great Luther Martin expressed it in the Federal Convention. This independence was at first a revolutionary one, but afterwards, by its recognition by Great Britain, it became legal. The recognition was of them separately, each by name, in the treaty of peace which terminated the War of the Revolution. And that this separate recognition was deliberate and intentional, with the distinct object of recognizing the States as separate sovereignties and not as one nation, will sufficiently appear by reference to the sixth volume of Bancroft's "History of the United States." The articles of confederation between the States declared that "each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence." And the Constitution of the United States, which immediately followed, was first adopted by the States in convention, each State casting one vote, as a proposed plan of government; and then ratified by the States separately, each State acting for itself in its sovereign and independent capacity, through a convention of its people. And it was by this ratification that the Constitution was established, to use its own words, "between the States so ratifying the same." It is, then, a compact between the States as sovereigns, and the Union created by it is a Federal partnership of States, the Federal government being their common agent for the transaction of the Federal business within the limits of the delegated powers. * * *

It appears, then, from this review of the origin and character of the American Union that when the Southern States, deeming the constitutional compact broken and their own safety and happiness in imminent danger in the Union, withdrew therefrom and organized their new Confederacy, they but asserted, in the language of Mr. Davis, "the rights of their sires, won in the War of the Revolution, the State sovereignty, freedom, and independence which were left to us as an inheritance to their posterity forever;" and it was in defense of this high and sacred cause that the Confederate soldiers sacrificed their lives. There was no need for war. The action of the Southern States was legal and constitutional, and history will attest that it was reluctantly taken in the last extremity, in the hope of thereby saving their whole constitutional rights and liberties from destruction by Northern aggression, which had just culminated in triumph at the presidential election by the union of the North as a section against the South. But the North, left in possession of the old government of the Union, flushed with power and angry lest its destined prey should escape, found a ready pretext for war. Immediately upon secession, by force of the act itself, the jurisdiction of the seceding States, respectively, over the forts, arsenals, and dockyards with their limits, which they had before ceded to the Federal government for Federal purposes, reverted to and reinvested in them respectively. They were, of course, entitled to immediate repossession of these places, essential to their defense in the exercise of their reassumed powers of war and peace, leaving all questions of mere property value apart for separate adjustment. In most cases the seceding States repossessed themselves of these places without difficulty; but in some of them forces of the United States still kept possession. Among these last was Fort Sumter, in the harbor of Charleston. South Carolina in vain demanded the peaceful possession of this fortress, offering at the same time to arrange for the value of the same as property, and sent commissioners to Washington to treat with the Federal government for the same as well as for the recognition of her independence. But all her attempts to treat were repulsed or evaded, as likewise were those subsequently made by the Confederate government. Of course the Confederacy could not continue to allow a foreign power to hold possession of a fortress dominating the harbor of her chief Atlantic seaport; and the Federal government having sent a powerful expedition with reinforcements for Fort Sumter, the Confederate government at last proceeded to reduce it. The reduction, however, was a bloodless affair; while the captured garrison received all the honors of war, and were at once sent North with every attention to their comfort and without even their parole being taken.

But forthwith President Lincoln at Washington issued his call for militia to coerce the seceding States. The cry rang all over the North that the flag had been fired upon; and amidst the tempest of passion which that cry everywhere raised the Northern militia responded with alacrity, the South was invaded, and a war of subjugation, destined to be the most gigantic which the world has ever seen, was begun by the Federal government against the seceding States in complete disregard of the foundation principle of its own existence, as affirmed in the Declaration of Independence, that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and as established by the War of the Revolution for the people of the States respectively. The South accepted the contest thus forced upon her with the eager and resolute courage characteristic of her proud-spirited people. But the Federal government, though weak in right, was strong in power; for it was sustained by the mighty and multitudinous North. In effect, the war became one between the States—between the Northern States, represented by the Federal government, upon the one side and the Southern States, represented by the Confederate government, upon the other—the border Southern States being divided.

The odds in numbers and means in favor of the North were tremendous. Her white population of nearly twenty millions was fourfold that of the strictly Confederate territory; and from the border Southern States and communities of Missouri, Kentucky, East Tennessee, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware she got more men and supplies for her armies than the Confederacy got for hers. Kentucky alone furnished as many men to the Northern armies as Massachusetts. In available money and credit the advantage of the North was vastly greater than in population, and it included the possession of all the chief centers of banking and commerce. Then she had the possession of the old government, its capital, its army and navy, and mostly its arsenals, dockyards, and workshops, with all their supplies of arms and ordnance and military and naval stores of every kind and the means of manufacturing the same. Again, the North, as a manufacturing and mechanical people, abounded in factories and workshops of every kind immediately available for the manufacture of every species of supplies for the army and navy; while the South, as an agricultural people, were almost wanting in such resources. Finally, in the possession of the recognized government, the North was in full and free communication with all nations, and had full opportunity, which she improved to the utmost, to import and bring in from abroad not only supplies of all kinds but men as well for her service; while the South, without a recognized government and with her ports speedily blockaded by the Federal navy, was almost entirely shut up within herself and her own limited resources.

Among all these advantages possessed by the North the first, the main, and decisive was the navy. Given her all but this and they would have been ineffectual to prevent the establishment of the Confederacy. That arm of her strength was at the beginning of the war in an efficient state, and it was rapidly augmented and improved. By it, the South being almost without naval force, the North was enabled to sweep and blockade her coasts everywhere, and so, aside from the direct distress inflicted, to prevent foreign recognition, to capture one after another her seaports, to sever and cut up her country in every direction through its great rivers, to gain lodgments at many points within her territory from which numerous destructive raids were sent out in all directions, to transport troops and supplies to points where their passage by land would have been difficult or impossible, and finally to cover, protect, and save, as by the navy was so often done, the defeated and otherwise totally destroyed armies of the North in the field. But for the navy Grant's army was lost at Shiloh; but for it on the Peninsula, in the second year of the war, McClellan's army, notwithstanding his masterly retreat from his defeats before Richmond, was lost to a man, and the independence of the Confederacy established. After a glorious four years' struggle against such odds as have been depicted during which independence was often almost secured, when successive levies of armies amounting in all to nearly three millions of men had been hurled against her, the South, shut off from all the world, wasted, rent, and desolate, bruised and bleeding, was at last overpowered by main strength; outfought, never, for from first to last she everywhere outfought the foe.

The Confederacy fell, but she fell not until she had achieved immortal fame. Few great established nations in all time have ever exhibited capacity and direction in government equal to hers, sustained as she was by the iron will and fixed persistence of the extraordinary man who was her chief; and few have ever won such a series of brilliant victories as that which illuminates forever the annals of her splendid armies; while the fortitude and patience of her people, and particularly of her noble women, under almost incredible trials and sufferings, have never been surpassed in the history of the world.

Such exalted character and achievement were not all in vain. Though the Confederacy fell as an actual physical power, she lives, illustrated by them, eternally in her just cause, the cause of constitutional liberty. And Mr. Davis's Southern tour is nothing less than a virtual moral triumph for that cause and for himself as its faithful chief, manifesting to the world that the cause still lives in the hearts of the Southern people and that its actual resurrection may yet come.

Here in the North, that is naturally presumptuous and arrogant in her vast material power, and where consequently but little attention has in general been given to the study of the nature and principles of constitutional liberty as connected with the rights of States, there is, nevertheless, an increasing knowledge and appreciation of the Confederate cause, particularly here in the New England States, whose position and interests in the Union are in many respects peculiar, and perhaps require that these States, quite as much as those of the South, should be the watchful guardians of the State sovereignty. Mingled with this increasing understanding and appreciation of the Confederate cause naturally comes also a growing admiration of its devoted defenders; and the time may yet be when the Northern, as well as the Southern, heart will throb reverently to the proud words upon the Confederate monument at Charleston: "These died for their State."

VIVID EXPERIENCES IN PRISON.

BY A. J. CANTRELL, M'MINNVILLE, TENN.

My father, P. H. Cantrell, of DeKalb County, Tenn., volunteered in the Confederate service at McMinnville, Tenn., in April, 1861, in Company A, 16th Tennessee Regiment, together with fifteen other Cantrells, all brothers and cousins. As they assembled before the provost marshal to take the oath to support the Confederacy, that official remarked that when all the family volunteered to go there was no use to swear them in; so my father, at least of that party, served four years without being sworn into service.

The company was mustered into the service at Camp Trousdale, Sumner County, Tenn., and participated in several battles and skirmishes. My father was at Cheat Mountain, Va., at Sewell Mountain, and at Perryville, Ky. At Murfreesboro, Tenn., he was shocked severely by the bursting of a bomb-shell and carried off the field by the litter bearers; but he recovered and fell back with the army. He was at Shelbyville and Chattanooga, and took part in the battles of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge. As the army fell back to Atlanta, he was captured near Dalton. He and two others had been left on guard at a bridge with directions to stay "until further orders," which never came, and from that time till the close of the war he was a prisoner. At Nashville he was lodged in the penitentiary for one night, and then with others was started for Rock Island, Ill. As the train sped by the side of Lake Michigan, the prisoners asked the Federal guards to open the doors, so they could see the lake. They soon saw enough, as they were thinly clad, and the cold, icy wind chilled them quickly; so they begged the guards to shut the doors or let them close them, but this was refused. The prisoners then resorted to boxing and piling upon each other, like boys, to keep from freezing. One man did actually freeze to death. This poor man begged most piteously for the doors to be closed; but the guards would not, and he finally sat down and said he was freezing to death and gave up, going off as though he were asleep.

After they arrived and had places assigned them, father was assigned to Barrack 44, and for the remainder of the winter it was a struggle to keep from freezing. The houses were simply boxed with inch boards, and had one coal stove for one hundred men. The ice and frost lined the inside of the barrack. The only bedding was two thin blankets and some straw, with one bunk above another. Most of the time the men would have to box and wrestle and take it turn about at the stove to keep from freezing to death. They were soon allowed to trade a little and work at tinker's work and make shoes and boots. They would make nice finger rings, breast-pins, earrings, and such things and sell them to the Yankees for souvenirs of the war. One day in early spring Colonel Johnson, manager of the prison, came in to see them in their little workshops, and remarked while looking on that he had heard of Yankee tricks, but he had never seen the equal of what they were doing. He afterwards had it all stopped.

Some of my father's associates in prison were William M. Alace, of New York, James Newsom, William Fuston, and Moss Mason. Mr. Newsom was an extra fine boot and shoe maker. W. M. Alace was a government agent for the Confederacy, and had a jacket made and quilted full of $100 bills. He undertook to pass it back to the South; but was caught by a spy, who purported to be one of Morgan's men.

In the springtime the boys would have dances. A prisoner with them named Tutt, from Arkansas, was an old-time, break-down fiddler, and he would play for them. There were eight Baltimore boys who were fine dancers.

Ere long negro guards were put on duty, and this caused an intense hatred to exist. Some of the prisoners would hire the negro guards to help them over the parapet, and others would undertake to tunnel out—just anything to get out. Some Arkansas boys got out in the dark and knocked the negro guards off the parapet with rocks; and from this the guards shot at the prisoners, and things went from bad to worse. Rations were cut short, and this caused much suffering. The Federals called for volunteers to go on the frontiers to fight the Indians, and this caused the loyal Confederates to organize "The Seven Confederate Knights" (C7K), who were oath-bound to be true to the Confederacy until death. My father was a member of this order, and kept the faith. He worked on extra duty, cleaning up the prison for more rations, until he took smallpox; but it was not severe with him, and when he was able he nursed the sick of smallpox and then others with erysipelas. He was born in DeKalb County October 16, 1835; and died in Warren County, Tenn., near McMinnville, the day that he was seventy years old.

UNION PRISONER AT ANDERSONVILLE.

[Capt. James M. Page, of the Union army, was captured in the battle of Liberty Mills, Va., on September 21, 1864. He was a prisoner of war at Andersonville, and has published a history of that prison and a defense of Major Wirz. His testimony ought to be accepted as true. In a letter of March 25 from Twin Bridges, Mont., to the VETERAN, with a revision of the chapter herein copied, he states: "I feel it the duty of every American to lay aside prejudice and to place ourselves as far as possible in the place of the other fellow and practice toward each other charity."] ]

EXTRACTS FROM CAPTAIN PAGE'S BOOK.

I tried to get Hoyt away, but he was so badly hurt that he begged to be left on the field. I gave orders to our men to fall back as quickly as possible to the river. We all started on a run down the ravine. I certainly outran them, for I was the only one that reached the stream. I was pretty fleet of foot myself in those days. The Confederates were busy picking up our boys, and I think for a moment they lost sight of me. I crossed the river and hid in the tall grass. From where I lay I could see our boys being marched up the hill through the cornfield under guard.

While I do not know it for certain, yet I am and always have been satisfied that at about the time Lieutenant Hoyt was hit an order emanated from the Confederate officer in command to cease firing. Our miserable little handful was as good as captured at any time after the Confederate advance had reached the brow of the hill, and here is a marked refutation of the oft-repeated "needless Rebel cruelty." We were engaged in an open fight, and they could have wiped us off the face of the earth at any time after getting over the hill, for they were upon us. I was repeatedly ordered to halt after getting three or four hundred feet start, and could easily have been shot down before I reached the river; but I didn't have time to halt or to obey orders. According to all the rules of war, they were perfectly justified in killing me when I failed to stop.

This magnanimous trait is particularly conspicuous in the Southern soldier. He will fight day and night against superior odds, but on the other hand when the advantage is greatly in his favor he views the situation in altogether a different light. The spirit of magnanimity overcomes him.

It always was and always will be a matter of profound wonderment why Beauregard and Johnston did not march upon Washington during the night of July 21 and 22, 1861. All that they had to do was to reach out and take the city.

But the Southerners did not have a monopoly altogether in chivalrous conduct toward the defeated. When Pickett made that awful charge on the Union lines at Gettysburg, and when his brave men were falling, wavering, and about to fall back, knowing that they had failed, a young beardless Confederate color bearer in advance of the line, looking to the right and left and seeing his comrades reeling, dropping, and wavering, deliberately raised the colors high in the air and jabbed the staff into the ground. He stepped back a pace or two, straightened himself like an adjutant on parade, and seemed to say, "I think that I may as well die here," and folded his arms. The smoke had cleared away. Firing had not, however ceased. "Don't kill that boy! Don't fire at that boy!" yelled Col. P. P. Brown, of the 157th New York Regiment.

The young hero was not one hundred feet from the Union line. That look of despair gave place to a smile. He put his hand to his cap in salute, and the Union men cheered. Taking the colors, he turned about and slowly followed his brave comrades. Not a solitary one of Pickett's heroes was behind him but the dead and the dying.

It is recorded as an act of extraordinary bravery by historians that when Napoleon was making his disastrous retreat from Moscow one day, when closely beset, Marshal Ney, who commanded the rear, ordered a captain to remain with the company and to protect the rear of the rear guard. "How long will I remain?" inquired the captain, fully realizing the utter hopelessness of the position. "Until you are killed," was the answer. "Very well, sir." The captain never was heard of after. He was not a whit braver than the young Confederate color sergeant.

* * *

While none of us had been deprived of anything that we had in our possession when captured, we were all short of overcoats or blankets, and the nights were cold and the ground damp and as hard as pavement. Night after night I walked back and forth to keep warm, but toward morning would through exhaustion tumble over and fall asleep. In this way I contracted a severe cold and fell sick with fever. My boys secured a piece of canvas about six feet square, so part would be over and part under me, and ere long they had got possession of a tent that was left them by a few friends who in some way were exchanged. They took the best care possible of me without medicines. It was an utter impossibility to obtain medicine for love or money. For eight days and nights I lay there unconscious, continually calling for water; and when the fever left me, I couldn't believe that I had been sick eight days until they showed me the eight pieces of cornbread, our daily rations, that they, notwithstanding their short allowance and craving for food, had saved for me. There was no doubt of the eight days, for there was the evidence. I well knew that from our short rations there would be no surplus bread lying about loose.

That day a sergeant of the guard visited me. He conveyed the glad but weather-beaten tidings of exchange, not in the old stereotyped form, but with variations. This time it was "to-morrow." Blessings on him if alive! and if dead, may the earth lay lightly upon him!

This time I was sure of it. I tried to get on my feet, but couldn't. Finally, after being helped to a standing position, supported by a comrade on each side and encouraged by the Rebel to "never die," I managed to take a few steps; but my knees refused to act their part.

It would never do to have the boys leave me next day. They promised not to go without me. I thought the "to-morrow" would never come; but it did, and the next day and the next day, and we were still on Belle Isle.

Just a word more about the cheerful and encouraging exchange Rebel falsifier. I cannot think of him other than that of a pure philanthropist and humanitarian. We had no medicine, and he had none to give us. We were his enemies invading his country. There was war, "grim-visaged war," between us. And he could have done a thousand times worse than to say: "You will be exchanged to-morrow." He could have with hard, cold truth said to me in prognostication: "You may not die just yet, but you may as well; and if you do, it will be mighty small loss, and it will be one enemy less; and suppose you do not die just yet, your prospect is a tough one, for your government is about to, if it hasn't already, shut down the lid as far as exchanging prisoners is concerned, and you will be here and at Andersonville, where you won't have even corn bread to eat for the next fourteen months." Had I known then what was in store for me, I never could have survived Belle Isle.

While I was convalescing a Rebel soldier off duty passed me one day with a bundle. He turned and keenly looked at me. I was little more than skin and bones. After eyeing me for a second with a look of "Southern hatred" and with an air of studied cruelty, he handed me a large red apple, and, adding insult to injury, he said: "Stick your teeth into that apple, Yank." He hurried away before I had time to thank him; in fact, he didn't give me an opportunity to speak a word. I was dumfounded. I never saw him afterwards, although I tried to find him. My seeming ingratitude has been a source of regret to me ever since. I hugged the apple to my breast and sat down and cried. I then took it to the boys and insisted upon its being divided. "No," said Swain; "it will only be a taste for us. Don't be silly, Jim. You must eat it yourself." But it was passed around, and each took a good smell of it. It was one of those large apples with a delicious fruity aroma. I kept it until the following day, when one of our men happened to get a loaf of white bread. He gave me a liberal portion of it, and with half the apple (for I would have no more) I had a feast, and I thought that when I got home I never would want anything but white bread and apples.

* * *

Touching my treatment on the whole, I cannot recall a solitary instance during the fourteen months while I was a prisoner of being insulted, browbeaten, robbed, or maltreated in any manner by a Confederate officer or soldier.

The books written by other Union soldiers who were prisoners in the South teem with accounts of the brutality, insults, and suffering heaped upon them by Rebel officers and guards seemingly for cruelty's sake. I cannot question the veracity of those Northern writers; but I can and will speak for myself as far as I was concerned and as to my experience and as to what came under my observation. With all due respect to my late brethren-in-arms and in prison life, I cannot but think that to some extent they were instrumental, if they state facts, in bringing it upon themselves. Did they give the "soft answer" when questioned? I do not hold that the prisoner when questioned should be obliging to the extent of giving information. O, no; but he can be courteous in his refusal to do so.

When General Hill questioned me at Liberty Mills, he was very courteous, even genial, while putting questions to me. I tried to be even more polite and deferential; but he did not get a tittle out of me other than what he already knew, and that hero and gentleman (for he was both) showed neither irritation nor disappointment in his interview with me. He asked me more than a score of questions, nearly all of which I could have definitely answered to his satisfaction; but I wobbled, and he knew it, and he dismissed me with a smile.

Human nature is much the same, North and South, East and West. Civility begets civility. Josh Billings in his quaint manner of spelling wrote: "It is onreasonibul to expect a man rising from a sudden fall on the ice to beam with cheerfulness." Upon being captured our boys could not beam with cheerfulness, it is true, and I know many of them were curt and irritable in their intercourse with the guards.

A detachment of Union soldiers were once surrounded and captured in a piece of timber. When they realized that it was all up with them, the most of the battalion dropped their muskets; but one of the boys retained his until a Rebel soldier was about to reach for it, whereupon the Federal sprang back, caught the musket near the muzzle in both hands, and, swinging it over his head, smashed it against a tree. "Now, d— you, pick up the pieces," he ejaculated.

"What execrable manners!" exclaimed Madam de Staël when Napoleon bluntly and in non tea table language refused to grant some political favor that she importuned him for. "It's a pity that one so great was so badly brought up."

The bravery and loyalty of the musket-destroying soldier was extolled in the North from "Dan to Beersheba," and every town and hamlet between the two Portlands was made acquainted with the incident.

* * *

Next day the train was slowly traveling along in a southerly direction. We were about a week on the journey going through North Carolina and South Carolina and into Georgia. Visions of exchange were dispelled when we left the cars and stood in line before the south gate of Andersonville Prison. This was the 27th of February, 1864, between 10 and 11 A.M. I spent the remainder of the day exploring the camp to find a favorable place for our habitation.

The camp was situated on what had been heavy pine timber land, but the trees had been cut down. There was a stream of clear water running east through the prison grounds. The stockade was built of pine logs cut twenty feet long and hewed to the thickness of one foot and set in a trench five feet deep, making a wall fifteen feet high, on the top of which were sentry boxes about thirty-five feet apart. The stockade was not quite completed when we arrived there, but a strong force of men was at work at it. When completed, it would comprise about eleven acres. There were only about two thousand prisoners confined there upon our arrival.

We were guarded by the 25th Alabama Infantry, veteran troops, who knew how to treat prisoners. And I said then and have ever since said in speaking of our guards—the 25th Alabama Infantry—that I never met the same number of men together who came much nearer to my standard of what I call gentlemen. They were respectful, humane, and soldierly.

We were organized into squads of ninety, and I soon discovered that the young sergeant in charge of our squad was a fine young fellow. I shall refer to him more explicitly farther on.

I have read Richardson, Kellogg, Urban, Spencer, and Grisby on Andersonville, the most of it recently, and I was and am surprised at the free-lance recklessness of description.

Let us first discuss the topographical selection of the Andersonville site for a prison camp. I realize that this phase of the question has been reverted to and minutely described every five or six years, since Richardson first gave his views to the public, early in the autumn of 1865. The selection of the site was excellent. I do not propose to dilate on the beauties of a prison. * * * I wouldn't advise any one to seek a prison as a place at which to spend a vacation.

Of course there was suffering, hunger, and misery among the prisoners at Andersonville, and I had my share of it. There was also hunger, misery, and suffering at Salisbury and at Rock Island and Elmira, the two latter places right in a land of plenty.

The Confederate officer who selected Andersonville gave evidence of his being an engineer of no mean caliber. I don't believe that in the whole State of Georgia a better choice could have been made. The place was healthful and salubrious and the water was good. The ground within the inclosure was not, as has been described by an unfriendly chronicler seemingly with malice aforethought, wet, boggy, miry, and a swamp."

One morning late in March the sergeant told me that there was an express box at the depot for me, and he told me to give him a list of my friends' names and he would see if there was anything for them. I did so, and the next day he brought in a box for me and one that was sent to poor Reuben Douglas, our deceased comrade. Poor Douglas was no more, but his box was delivered to me. My box contained ham, tea, crackers, cheese, salt, soap, quinine, and a brand-new necktie of the fashion of 1862. I did so need the necktie! What a treat! There were two nice cakes of castile soap. Hungry though I was, I think that I prized the soap above all. The contents of the two boxes were divided among the ten "Michiganders," but I kept a whole cake of soap for myself.

For the three preceding weeks we had been cooking our rations in clouds of turpentine smoke of the pine wood that left us as black as full-blooded Ethiopians, and no amount of washing and rubbing without soap would have the least effect.

As soon as the contents of the boxes were disposed of and a safe, suitable place was selected for the necktie, I took my piece of soap and went to the creek, where we did our washing. This place in the daytime was always crowded, and it was some time before I could get to the creek, when I began active operations. Opposite to me was a half-naked boy blackened so with smoke that his mother would not have known him. "Mister," said he, "please let me get just one rub of that blessed soap." I handed it to him. Then another asked me for just a rub, and another and another. I could not refuse; and when I got it back, it was nearly gone. After that I adopted a new plan. When the sentry over my head would call, "Post No. 35; three o'clock and all is well," I would get up, take my soap, and go to the creek, now deserted, strip (which did not take long, for by this time I had but a shirt and pants), and I would wash myself luxuriously.

We were literally infested with vermin to an incredible degree. In the hot weather this suffering was almost unbearable.

I have compared notes with Southern soldiers who were prisoners at Rock Island and at Point Lookout and Confederate officers who were at Columbus, Ohio, and an eminent jurist of Montana, a Christian and a gentleman whose every word I believe (an ex-prisoner of Johnson's Island), who state that the ravages of this diminutive raider were simply horrible.

It seemed that this parasitic insect never knew what life was until it met the soldier, and the fastidious son of Mars feared it more than a woman fears a mouse.

In my boyhood days back in Michigan (and I don't relate this to cast any reflection upon my adopted State) we had a sort of epidemic of what was known as the seven-year itch that we looked upon as an excruciating affliction, which at its worst was nothing as compared to that produced by this parasite. And in summing up the evidence of Union and Confederate soldiers, good witnesses, I decide that Andersonville is entitled to the prize.

I soon found that frequent bathing was a sort of flank movement on the insect. This adhering closely to the bathing plan every morning through that terrible summer of 1864, I think, saved my life.

* * *

My company boys, the "Michiganders," were nearly all sick. The partially uncooked food aggravated the sickness. "Our boys" and several of our nearest neighbors held a meeting to discuss ways and means, and the result was that I was selected as ambassador to Captain Wirz. I had previously met him, as recorded in a former chapter in this work. Meeting him in one of his rounds of the prison, I approached and saluted. "Captain Wirz, I believe," said I. "Yes, sir." "May I speak with you?" "Certainly." "Captain, there are a number of the prisoners adjacent to my quarters, several of whom are immediate comrades, who are sick. We have no fuel with which to cook our rations. The meal issued of late is poor in quality. I think that there is part of the cob ground with it. I am here on a begging mission to see if something cannot be done to remedy matters. I trust that you will pardon my presumption." "Yes, sir; you are certainly excusable and justifiable in coming to me. I realize the situation. I am doing all I can to remedy matters and to relieve the deplorable condition, but I am hampered in many ways. We are building a bakery, working day and night to complete it. There will be a change very soon. The men will soon get bread." I heartily thanked him.

He impressed me as an unassuming, kind-hearted man with a somewhat sad expression of countenance.

Within a day or two after this meal of a better quality was served us, and a day or two later still we received corn meal mush and later bread.

And this was the man who was charged with putting a deadly poison into vaccine matter that was used in vaccinating the prisoners, as a result of which "one hundred and twenty died by vaccine poisoning one week!"

The interview produced upon me a complete revolution of opinion relative to the man. I went to him with fear and trembling, looking for the worst. I hesitated and turned back two or three times before I could conclude to speak to him; but the remembrance of his returning my salute some days previous encouraged me. One of my comrades after I had started called, and after overtaking me said: "Jim, come to think about it, I don't believe I'd go. It won't do any good. He will construe it into a case of mutiny and order you under arrest. No, don't go." This cautionary advice added to my perplexity.

The description given by others of Captain Wirz are so erroneous, misleading, and untrue that I will describe him as well as I can at this late day. He was of good height, perhaps five feet eight inches, slim in build and handsome face, aquiline nose, even features and a high forehead, and eyes gray in color. At this time he wore a short, partially full beard. There was a quiet, subdued expression of sadness in his countenance, particularly in his eyes. There was nothing of that "short, thick-set Dutchman," "repulsive in appearance," "besotted, ignorant, and cruel," or of a countenance denoting "ferocity and brutality."

I have always marveled at the description of this most unfortunate man given by those who often saw him.

* * *

Yet those three surgeons were indicted with Captain Wirz in this: That they did combine and conspire maliciously, traitorously, and in violation of the laws of war to impair and injure the health and to destroy the lives by subjecting to torture and great suffering, by confining in unhealthy and unwholesome quarters, by exposing to the inclemency of winter and the dews and the burning sun of summer, by compelling the use of impure water, and by furnishing insufficient and unwholesome food to large numbers of Federal soldiers to the end that the armies of the United States might be weakened and impaired and the insurgents engaged in armed rebellion against the United States might be aided and comforted, and so, knowing and evilly intending, did refuse and neglect to provide proper lodgings, food, or nourishment for the sick and necessary medicines and medical attendance for the restoration of their health, and did knowingly and in furtherance of their evil designs permit them to languish and die for want of proper care and proper treatment," and a whole realm of kindred charges.

Not one of the thousands of prisoners that survived Andersonville but must have known that this was a mass of falsehood, and yet these were the charges and specifications that prevailed in that unparalleled trial in October, 1865.

Of course thousands were in the hospitals at Andersonville. The suffering was awful, and there were thousands of deaths; but the surgeons in attendance were not to blame for it. Neither was Captain Wirz. I think that he and the physicians did everything in their power with the means at their command to care for the sick and to alleviate the suffering. They did their duties like Christians and like men.

Some of the Andersonville historians published an account of Dr. Kerr brutally striking a sick prisoner. Permit one who is familiar with the circumstance to give the correct version. One day in August Dr. Kerr caught a hospital attendant, a paroled prisoner, selling a blanket to a guard. The Doctor investigated the matter, and ascertained the fact that the Federal prisoner had stolen it from a patient. He as good as caught him in the act, and remonstrated with the thief; and the latter, being a desperate man, attacked the Doctor, and but for the surgeon's agility he would have been injured. As it was, his sleeve was cut through with a knife, grazing the skin, whereupon the Doctor promptly and very properly struck the thief over the head with the butt of his revolver, knocking him down and disarming him. Simply that and nothing more, except that the thief lost his detail and the sick prisoner found his blanket.

* * *

I made as good time as a sick man can to the south gate, and fortunately saw Captain Wirz just entering. I saluted and said: "Captain, we are in serious trouble at our quarters, and we want you to help us out. I hate to bother you, but you are our only refuge now." "What is the trouble?" "Before the stockade was completed a sergeant in Colonel Person's regiment stationed here directed us while building our cabin to be sure not to build it closer to the stockade than twelve feet. We followed his instructions; and to make sure of it, the nearest end of it is twelve feet from it. Now the lieutenant building the dead line has ordered us to move it or take it down. The space adjacent to the cabin is so densely crowded that it is impossible to move it intact, and we cannot take it down, as we do not know where to locate it." He asked: "Can you not shorten it in some way?" I explained why that could not be done. "Where are you located?" "Almost directly under sentry box No. 35." "Very well, I'll go up with you and see for myself." He walked with me to our quarters, two hundred and fifty yards south-east of the gate.

When we came in sight of our house, I saw it still there and the boys all outside, the most of them sitting on the "piazza." Those sitting arose as we approached. I could see surprise on their countenances. Wirz looked the situation over carefully while we were narrowly eying him, and I caught the faintest glimmer of a smile on his face as he said, pointing with his hand to the extreme southerly end of the cabin: "Who sleeps there?" "That is where I slept, Captain," said

1. "Well," said he, "you must be careful not to get up inside the dead line;" and continuing, "Men, let your quarters stand; and when Lieutenant Davis returns, tell him that such are my orders, and not to interfere with your cabin. He can make a short offset in his line and go by without much trouble."

We heartily thanked him, and Billy Bowles was very enthusiastic over the outcome of affairs and yelled, "Hurrah for Captain Wirz!" and we and several of our neighbors heartily joined in the cheering.

The cabin stood where it was originally built; it was not moved or taken down. This fact will be remembered by many ex-prisoners who are now living. This incident was often referred to and discussed at the prison. That was the only house, cabin, or habitation within the dead line at Andersonville.

There was no question about the dead line. It was during the summer of 1864 at Andersonville a stubborn fact. The railing was a well-defined sign of demarcation. It was the visible warning of "thus far and no farther," and every prisoner within the inclosure knew it. They well knew that to get within that prescribed space meant death at the hands of the sentry, and there were prisoners killed within the dead line at Andersonville by the guards. This was wrong. It was cruel, and it was also cruel to shoot prisoners within the inclosures of Point Lookout and Johnson's Island, where they were confined. In this peaceful time to the casual observer the shooting down of poor, often sick, helpless prisoners of war within an inclosure must seem the very height of barbarity. Nevertheless, it was done at every prison both North and South. We have been forty years denouncing the South without discovering "the beam in our own eye." It is a clear case of those living in glass houses, and we have been imitating "the wolf at the stream."

* * *

Albert D. Richardson in his "Field, Dungeon, and Escape," written as early as 1865, says on page 417: "The government held a large excess of prisoners, and the Rebels were anxious to exchange man for man; but our authorities acted on the cold-blooded theory of Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War, that we could not afford to give well-fed, rugged men for invalids and skeletons." Again, on page 457: "Those five thousand loyal graves at Salisbury will ever remain fitting monuments of Rebel cruelty and the atrocious inhumanity of Edwin M. Stanton, who steadfastly refused to exchange prisoners."

* * *

The committee elected to go to Washington to intercede for exchange were: Edward Bates, Company K, 42d New York; H. C. Higginson, Company K, 19th Illinois; Prescott Tracey, Company G, 82d New York; and Sylvester Noirot, Company B, 5th New Jersey. They were paroled for this purpose.

* * *

During the month that Captain Wirz was away on sick leave Lieutenant Davis was in command. My first meeting with Wirz after his return was about September 3. He was looking poorly and not well. He generally rode through the prison in the morning and often during the afternoon or evening. "Little Red Cap," his orderly, mounted on Captain Wirz's mare, would visit us. This little fellow was a drummer boy about fourteen years old and belonged, I think, to an Ohio regiment. He was captured and entered the prison either late in February or early in March. I know that I saw him there soon after I arrived. His name was Powell, a handsome, smiling-faced little fellow, wearing a red cap jauntily on the side of his head; hence the name "Little Red Cap."

As soon as Wirz took command he paroled all the drummer boys, about, I think, forty in number. And he took young Powell to his headquarters and detailed him as his orderly. The commandant was very good to this little fellow, and allowed him many liberties. Some of the men referred to him as "Wirz's aid-de-camp." He was a fine little fellow, and a general favorite with the prisoners and the guard. Little Red Cap was the bearer of the order issued by General Winder approving of the sentence of the six marauders whom we executed.

It was a well-known fact at Andersonville that Captain Wirz paroled the drummers that they might escape the rigors of prison life. Of the seven Andersonville histories that I have read in years past and have recently carefully and patiently pursued, not one word could I find referring to the parole of the drummer boys at Andersonville.

* * *

Two of those boxes were sent by an old boyhood friend, Hon. E. L. Briggs, of Grand Rapids, Mich. After I was discharged, I visited him and squared accounts as far as I could; but it was a debt that could never be fully paid. He died about two years ago.

So much has been written about the Confederate authorities in general and Captain Wirz in particular confiscating clothing, medicine, and edibles sent from the North to Union prisoners that I am constrained to state my experience regarding it; and as far as my knowledge went and from observation and as far as I was personally concerned, I can refute those charges.

As fully as I could learn after regaining my liberty and going home, those two boxes of articles were the only ones sent me while a prisoner, and I received them intact. And, moreover, I knew of many other boxes of necessary articles being received by my comrades. I don't believe that the Confederate authorities ever confiscated property sent to the Union prisoners at Andersonville.

That the guards at Andersonville during the summer of 1864 were on short rations and that the authorities were unable to supply the prisoners with medicine and adequate food and clothing is a well-known fact. In corroboration of this I will quote from a letter written by General Sherman, dated September 22, 1864, to James E. Yeaman, chairman of the sanitary commission at St. Louis, Mo.: "These Confederates are as proud as the devil and hate to confess poverty; but I know that they are really unable to supply socks, drawers, undershirts, scissors, combs, soap, etc., which our men need more in prison than anything else to preserve cleanliness and health."

Now let us look at the character of Captain Wirz, as shown by official record that can to-day be found in every public library. Ask for "The War of the Rebellion, Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies," as published by the United States government. Two of the series, Volumes IV., V., and VIII., and series 3, Volume V., show that as soon as Captain Wirz went on duty at Andersonville his very first act was to try to better the condition of the prisons both as to rations and the sanitary surroundings of the prison and hospital, as the following letter to Capt. R. D. Chapman, acting adjutant of post, Col. D. S. Chandler, assistant adjutant and inspector general, and others show:

"CITY POINT, VA., August 21, 1864.

"Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War: Please inform General Foster that under no circumstances will he be authorized to make an exchange of prisoners of war. Exchanges simply reinforce the enemy at once, whilst we do not get the benefit for two or three months and lose the majority entirely. I telegraph this just from hearing that some five hundred or six hundred more prisoners had been sent to General Foster.

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant General."

In August Brig. Gens. H. W. Wessels and T. Seymour were appointed to visit the South looking into the treatment of prisoners of war, and the following are extracts of a lengthy report made by General Seymour, dated Williamstown, Mass., August 10, 1864, and directed to Col. W. Hoffman, commissary general of prisoners, Washington, D. C.: "The Southern authorities claim that they give to prisoners precisely what the soldiers are allowed in the field. I believe this to be true of the rations, but of nothing else. The Southern soldier even in his most prosperous days lived simply upon corn and a bit of bacon, upon which he is now supported. Few Northern men, except in the almshouse, were ever reduced to the common rule of diet of the Southern race. The Southern authorities are exceedingly desirous of an immediate exchange of prisoners. General Wessels and myself had an interview with General Ripley at Charleston, S. C., on this point. Their urgency is unbounded; but we asserted that it was the poorest possible policy for our government to deliver forty thousand prisoners, better fed and better clothed than ever before in their lives, in good condition for the fields, while the United States received in return an equal number of men worn out with privation and neglect, barely able to walk, often drawing their last breath, and utterly unfit to take the field as soldiers. But this anxiety on the part of the Rebels is one of the strongest possible proofs of the failing strength of their cause. Between

LOUIS SCHADE, VOLUNTARY ATTORNEY FOR MAJOR WIRZ.

Lee's and Hood's armies the country is a waste, redeemed only by the labor of the females, young and old, and the slaves. The last men have gone to the field of battle; and rather than reënforce their army, as exchange would do, it was urged by our authorities that it would be much wiser to leave the prisoners where they are."

THE TRIAL OF MAJOR WIRZ.

Everything being in readiness, the case was called August 25, 1865. Col. N. P. Chipman, U. S. A., Judge Advocate, had charge of the prosecution with an array of fellow-assistants. Louis Schade, a fellow-countryman of Wirz, was the attorney for the defense. It appeared that Colonel Chipman had from the start everything his own way. There were one hundred and sixty witnesses for the government. Nearly all of these had been prisoners at Andersonville. The banner witness for the prosecution was a bright, handsome Andersonville prisoner, who gave his name as Felix de La Baume and his birthplace in Eastern France, near the Rhine. He was of good address, pleasant-voiced, and intelligent. He saw the most of the killing attributed to the prisoner. His omnipresence while at Andersonville seemed something bordering on the supernatural. Nothing escaped him. Witness de La Baume held the surging crowd like an inspiration. His grip on the Northern ear was a secure one as he glibly recounted the numerous and manifold cruelties of Henry Wirz. He captured the court. Everything he said was believed, and nothing was too heavy for his recital. Among other things of interest that he related was the statement made without batting an eye that the Marquis de Lafayette, Washington's friend and the hero of the battle of Brandywine, was his granduncle.

On the 19th of October, before the taking of the testimony was concluded, he was appointed to a position in the Department of the Interior.

Byron has said that "time, alas! sets all things even." In this case time didn't wait very long, for on November 21, only eleven days after Major Wirz's execution, de La Baume's official career came suddenly to an end. Some of the German soldiers at Washington recognized in Monsieur, the grandnephew of Lafayette, a deserter from the 7th New York Volunteers, whose name was not de La Baume, but plain Felix Oeser, who was born in Saxony, on the other side of the Rhine. Secretary of the Interior Harlan summarily dismissed Felix de La Baume-Oeser, and Washington society knew him no more.

* * *

The following letter in the original cut quite a figure at the trial:

"ANDERSONVILLE, September 17, 1864.

"Captain Wirz: You will permit Surgeon Jones, who has orders from the surgeon general, to visit the sick within the stockade that are under medical treatment. Surgeon Jones is ordered to make certain investigations which may prove useful to his profession.

"Very respectfully, GENERAL WINDER."

At this distance this looks like an ordinary, harmless order; but in September and October, 1865, it was not viewed with so much complacency. It was read between the lines and construed to mean something mysteriously dangerous in the highest degree to the perpetuity of the republic and the peace and dignity thereof.

[Doesn't it seem fairer to accept the testimony of prisoners who were there than that of others?—ED. VETERAN.]

UNION OFFICER ON JOHNSON'S ISLAND PRISON.

BY CAPT. H. A. SMITH (128TH OHIO INF.). CLEVELAND, OHIO.

A subscriber to the VETERAN called my attention to an article relating to the care of the prisoners at Johnson's Island. I was stationed at the island for about two years. The conditions as described by your correspondent were not possible. The quarters (barracks) occupied by prisoners were just the same as used by the soldiers doing guard duty. The water from the wells was the same as all of us used. Ticks were filled with straw and blankets were issued to all alike, and the prisoners had all the wood they wanted. Inside the bull pen was a small grocery, where the prisoners could purchase tobacco, fruit, eggs, etc. Clothing was issued when needed, as were also socks and underwear. The rations were just the same as the soldiers had. I never heard a complaint while there. I often asked the question: "Can I do anything for you?" But only in very few instances could I render help in that way.

My brother was a prisoner in various prisons in the South, winding up with nine months in Andersonville. He visited me at the island, and met there a Mr. Jones, who captured him at Rocky Face. They had a very pleasant visit together. Brother Frank asked Mr. Jones if there was anything he needed that he could get for him. He said: "I have all I need except my freedom. Your brother has treated me well here, and I have no complaint to make." Brother Frank went through the hospital and sick quarters with Jones. When in the kitchen, he saw a large tub filled with pieces of bread, potatoes, scraps of meat, etc., and asked: "What are you going to do with this?" Jones replied: "Throw it in the lake." Frank said it would be a Godsend to the prisoners in Andersonville.

I took prisoners South for exchange, and in many instances they expressed satisfaction in regard to their treatment as prisoners. All the prisoners on the island were officers and, as far as I knew, gentlemen. I had some very warm friends among them. And I know they did not suffer from cold or lack of plenty to eat. Quarters, bedding, and rations were the same as the army had.

WHAT GEN. THOMAS WROTE GOV. LETCHER.

BY B. F. GRADY, CLINTON, N. C.

In your March VETERAN appears a letter from "William E. Reppert, Culpeper, Va.," in which the author denies the usually accepted statement about Gen. George H. Thomas's choice of a side in our sectional struggle. This denial, based on the memory of one man and being worth little more than "a mere assertion," induces me to ask you to give your readers a counter "assertion," so that they can arrive at a reasonable conclusion about the matter.

I find in my scrapbook, undated, the following paper which I cut out of the Richmond Times:

"Hon. Joseph T. Lawless, Secretary of the Commonwealth, has recently found among the executive papers of the State for the year 1861 a letter from Gen. George H. Thomas, of Southampton County, the celebrated Union soldier, to Gov. John Letcher. * * *

"It has long been denied that such a letter was ever written. It was written from a New York hotel under date of March 12, 1861. It is as follows:

"Hon. John Letcher, Governor of Virginia.

"My Dear Governor: I received yesterday a letter from Major Gilham, of the Virginia Military Institute, dated the 9th inst., in reference to the position of Chief of Ordnance of the State, in which he informs me that you had requested him to ask me if I would resign from the service; and if so, whether that post would be acceptable to me. As he requested me to make my reply direct to you, I have the honor to state, after expressing my most sincere thanks for your kind offer, that it is not my wish to leave the service of the United States as long as it is honorable for me to remain in it, and therefore as long as my native State (Virginia) remains in the Union it is my purpose to remain in the army unless required to perform duties alike repulsive to honor and humanity."

Within less than six weeks after the date of this letter Virginia withdrew from the Union, and the world knows the rest.

EXPERIENCE IN RICHMOND HOSPITALS.

PAPER BY J. B. RODEN TO U. S. A., WAYNESBORO, VA.

I was wounded on the skirmish line near Spottsylvania C. H. on the morning of May 18, 1864. As the balls were flying thick my first concern was to know how to get to the rear. I made a start, and when approaching the regiment the boys began to quiz me: "O yes, don't play off that way; you just want a furlough." I passed to the hospital, where the doctor examined my wounds and told me he would have to perform an operation. When asked if amputation would be necessary, he said: "Not just now." The operating table was a barn door set on two trestles.

It was soon reported that Grant's army had turned our right flank and captured Guinea Station; consequently all the wounded were ordered to the rear. All who could walk were ordered to Milford Station, some thirty miles distant. I started alone about 2 P.M., and made twelve miles, stopping overnight at a farmhouse, where I was treated very kindly. I started early next day and made fourteen miles, when I fell exhausted by the roadside. I was put into a wagon and hauled to the station, the remaining four miles. There I was put on a hospital train, but remained all night at the station. The train arrived in Richmond the next Friday evening, when I was taken to Windsor Hospital. On Sunday morning the surgeon in charge, Dr. Tyler, dressed my wound, nothing having been done to it since Wednesday except the use of cold water to keep down inflammation.

For the first few days things went well, but I grew weaker and the rations became distasteful. I was given a little bread and rye coffee for breakfast, and for dinner a small piece of half-baked corn bread, a little fat bacon, with a few stewed beets and potato vine leaves for salad. One morning I requested the nurse not to bring any dinner unless he could find something more palatable. He replied that he would continue to bring the same diet, which he proceeded to do. Upon my taking him to task he became insolent, and as he turned to leave I threw my chunk of corn bread at him. The nurse reported me to the ward master, who threatened to put me in the guardhouse. A comrade wounded about the same time I was and who lay on a cot to my right handed me one of his crutches, and we planned, though neither of us could raise our heads, to attack the ward master if he attempted to execute his threat. The doctor came just before supper and found me in a fever. On learning the cause, he sent for the ward master and reprimanded him. A few days later erysipelas developed in my wound, and four negroes carried me on my cot across the field to the erysipelas camp, near what is now called the Old Reservoir. I was placed in a tent by myself, where I remained two weeks, then was taken back to the hospital and placed in a ward in charge of a Dr. Braxton, who was very kind to me. Some one had stolen my knapsack; and as I had failed to get clothing from the quartermaster's, I had no change of raiment. Fortunately for me, though not for the other fellow, an old black mammy came along with a basket of clothes, saying to me: "I'se bin looking for de man what gim me dese close to wash and can't find him." Said I: "You have found him now." "Law, chile, is you de one?" As necessity knows no law and she could not find the other fellow, I laid claim to those clothes.

I was fortunate enough to draw two months' pay—$22.

The following Sunday a member of my command, Dr. Shaw, of the Ordnance Department, came to see me, and kindly asked if he could serve me in any way. I gave him my $22 and asked him to buy me some eggs or nourishing food. I then craved something to eat. The next day I received two dozen eggs with receipted bill. My two months' pay had gone for two dozen eggs, but it was one of the best investments I ever made.

Dr. Braxton called to see me, when I told him I was "living high" on my investment. He then asked for the remainder of the eggs, which the ward master had in charge, sent them to the commissary department, had my money refunded, and prescribed two eggs each morning and evening. I soon regained strength, and left Windsor Hospital, after a stay of eight weeks, with glad heart, feeling thankful I had been spared. I am still thankful, after forty-two years, that the Lord has spared me, though I am still unable to reach my mouth with the hand of that shattered arm.

OFFICERS EASTERN BRIGADE, GEORGIA DIVISION, U. S. V.—Brig. Gen. J. W. Wilcox, Commander, Macon; Lieut. Col. Jehu G. Postell, Adjutant General and Chief of Staff; Maj. T. E. Young, Assistant Adjutant General, Macon; Maj. George W. Hollinsworth, Assistant Adjutant General, Milledgeville; Maj. D. E. Jack, Inspector General, Augusta; Maj. Moses Murphy, Chief of Ordnance, Augusta; Maj. Warren A. Mosely, Chief of Artillery, Macon; Maj. Ab F. Jones, Chief of Engineers, Macon; Maj. R. J. Anderson, Quartermaster, Macon; Maj. J. F. Pinkston, Commissary, Sparta; Maj. (Rev.) George G. Smith, Chaplain, Vineville; Capt. Louis B. Wilcox, Aid, Macon.

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED BY CAMP TOM MOORE.—Camp Tom Moore, No. 556, U. S. V., Apalachicola, Fla., elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Fred G. Wilhelm, Commander; R. C. Mahon and J. T. Witherspoon, Lieutenant Commanders; T. F. Porter, Adjutant; W. J. Donahue, Sergeant Major; Rev. M. H. Norton, Chaplain. The present roster contains the names of twenty-three members. Comrades who died during the past year were R. C. Blocker, William Nash, R. L. Hill, J. B. McNeil, J. J. Cason, Judge G. A. Patton, J. H. Glenn. Great interest is being taken by the young men of that city in the organization of a Camp of Sons of Veterans, seventy-five names having been enrolled for membership.

INQUIRY FOR AN ALPHA DELTA PHI.—Mr. Frank S. Washburn, of Nashville, seeks information: "Mr. Benjamin Franklin Davis, of Brown University, class of 1854, is a member of my college fraternity, Alpha Delta Phi. In revising the catalogue we have been unable to get track of Mr. Davis or even to learn if he is now living. In the catalogue of 1882 he gave his residence as Nashville, Tenn. Information about Mr. Davis or his family is anxiously solicited."

THE ILLINOIS CONFEDERATE COMPANY.

BY F. METCALF, MAYFIELD, KY.

The writer in the spring of 1861 was a resident of Carbondale, Jackson County, Ill. About May 1 of that year he was at Murphysboro, the county seat of Jackson, where he heard John A. Logan make a speech in the courthouse in which he was outspoken for the South. He told the people how long it took the United States to whip Mexico, or the "Greasers," as he called them; that if they went South they would "find every tree and stump a breastwork;" and warned the people against any attempt to subjugate the South. Most all writers have denied these facts in regard to where Logan was the day that the Illinois company left Marion for the South. It was the 25th of May, 1861. Part of that company was recruited in Jackson County, where Logan was the day before the recruits from that county left for Marion. Logan at that time was a Congressman from Southern Illinois, and in him the people had the utmost confidence.

On May 24, 1861, in the town of Carbondale Timothy Corder and the writer were in a conversation on the southeast corner of the public square when Logan came up where we were standing and shook hands with both and asked us when we were going South. We replied: "To-morrow." He said: "Boys, when you get over there [meaning the Ohio River], keep together. I will follow you shortly." In that conversation he said that when he left Washington for home he refused to shake hands with Stephen A. Douglas, that they parted as enemies, and that if he was President of the United States he would declare war against Great Britain or some other foreign power, as that would tend to avert the war and draw the North and South together to fight a common enemy.

Every man in the Illinois company knew that he had the unqualified indorsement and approval of John A. Logan, and that his sympathy was with the South at that time cannot be successfully denied. All the leading men residing in Southern Illinois then were for Southern rights. Sympathy for the South became stronger every day, and the organizing of companies and regiments was advocated. Secession was advocated almost daily on the streets and in public places. Just after the fall of Fort Sumter a party met in a house in Marion and agreed to call a public meeting to pass ordinances of secession. They appointed a committee on resolutions, who were to report at the courthouse on April 15, 1861, to provide for the public safety. A large crowd assembled; and, the meeting being called to order, James D. Manier was elected president. He appointed Henry C. Hopper, John M. Cunningham, G. W. Goddard, James M. Washburn, and W. M. R. Scurlock a committee to draft resolutions of secession, which were reported and passed with but one dissenting voice. The resolutions were as follows:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Williamson County, firmly believing that the distracted condition of our country has been brought about by the elevation to power of a strictly sectional party, the coercive policy of which toward the seceded States will drive all the border slave States from the Federal Union and cause them to join the Southern Confederacy.

Resolved, That if, in that event, the interests of the citizens of Southern Illinois imperatively demand at their hands a division of the State, we hereby pledge ourselves to use all means in our power to effect the same and attach ourselves to the Southern Confederacy.

Resolved, That in our opinion it is the duty of the present administration to withdraw all the troops of the Federal government that may be stationed in Southern forts and acknowledge the independence of the Southern Confederacy, believing that such a course would be calculated to restore peace and harmony to our distracted country.

Resolved, That, as the Governor of the State of Illinois will call upon the citizens of the same to take up arms for the purpose of subjugating the people of the South, we hereby enter our protest against such a course, and as loyal citizens will refuse and forever oppose the same."

The resolutions were drafted and written by Henry C. Hopper, who was a gallant soldier in the Illinois company in the Confederate army. John M. Cunningham, one of the above committee, was the father of Mrs. John A. Logan.

The Illinois company in the Confederate army was raised in the counties of Williamson and Jackson. Great precaution was exercised to prevent arrests being made. General Prentiss was stationed at Cairo, Ill., about eighty miles from Marion, with about three thousand soldiers, and another force camped at Big Muddy bridge, about four miles north of Carbondale and about twenty miles northwest of Marion on the Illinois Central Railroad, estimated to be from one to three hundred with a cannon, and Home Guards were stationed at various points between Marion and the Ohio River. Thorn-dike Brooks was the prime mover in raising the Illinois company. He was the acknowledged leader and captain at that time. About forty-five volunteered, including the number from Jackson County. By previous agreement we met about six miles south of Marion on May 25, as stated above. Nearly all were there at the appointed time. The greater part of this company were under twenty-three years of age. Before starting for the Ohio River several speeches were made by leading citizens of Marion, encouraging the members of the company; but some of these same men a few months later joined the Federal army.

F. METCALF, MAYFIELD, KY.

We started to Paducah on foot with two wagons to carry the baggage about sixty miles distant. We marched all the day of the 25th and all that night. The following day in the evening Robert Kelly, a first cousin of Mrs. John A. Logan and one of this company, was ordered to go on ahead to the Lynn Hotel and procure supper for the company. Not being accustomed to marching and tight shoes, our feet became so sore that progress was very slow. Kelly failed to return; and having received information that there was a company of Home Guards about three miles ahead of us located at the Lynn Hotel, variously estimated at from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five, we halted, and six of the company were ordered to advance and ascertain the whereabouts of Kelly, how many men he had, and report to the company.

They reached the Lynn Hotel, where they were surrounded and captured. Kelly had eluded the Home Guards, and procured a friend of the company to ride back to where the main force was camped and inform them of the capture of six comrades in front. As soon as this information was received a council was held by the company at which it was unanimously agreed to march on in the direction of Paducah, and if we came up with the Home Guards to charge them and fight at close quarters, capture as many of their guns as we could and stampede the others if possible, and march on to Paducah.

The Home Guards had left a detail with the six captured comrades and marched back in the direction of Marion to meet the main force of our company; but when they came to the forks of the road north of the Lynn Hotel, supposing we had taken the road leading to Brooklyn above Paducah, on the Ohio River, they started down to the river. We marched on until we came to the forks of the road; and seeing by the tracks that the Guards had gone the left hand, we marched on rapidly to the Lynn Hotel, where we recaptured our six comrades and marched on again in the direction of Paducah.

We reached the Ohio River about 1 p.m. May 27, 1861. In a short time after the company arrived on the bank of the Ohio the steamer Lynn Boyd came across the Ohio, and the company boarded her and crossed over and marched directly to the St. Francis Hotel, kept at that time by a strong Southern rights man named Shields. The hotel was thrown wide open to our company. We were wine and dined until late at night. Mrs. Shields presented the company with a beautiful Confederate flag, which was carried through the streets of Paducah at the head of the company. We marched out Broadway to the old depot, where we boarded the cars and went to Mayfield, Ky. At the latter place we procured several recruits, Dr. John Wall being one of them, who was afterwards major of the 15th Tennessee Infantry. He was killed on the 22d of July, 1864, before Atlanta, Ga., and left on the battlefield.

The company remained overnight at the old Cargill Hotel. The following day we traveled by rail to Union City, Tenn., where we were quartered for a few days in the railroad depot. We received tents in a short time and went into camp a short distance out of Union City by the M. and O. Railroad, where we were drilled until June 9, 1861. We were sworn into the Confederate States service as Company G and assigned to the 15th Regiment, Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, Charles Carroll commanding.

While camped at Union City Timothy Corder and I called on Colonel Barksdale, who commanded a Mississippi regiment. I have forgotten the number. We had been informed that Barksdale knew Logan in Congress. We told him what Logan told us about going South; but Barksdale did not seem to put much faith in Logan's coming South. The company had been recruited up to about seventy-five men. Our first captain was Thorndike Brooks, and our first lieutenant was John Wall; second lieutenant, Harry Hays; third, Robert Kelly.

The first battle that the Illinois company was in was Belmont, Mo., on the 7th of November, 1861.

[Another account of this company will appear later. The Colonel Barksdale referred to was evidently William. H. H. and James A. Barksdale were both lieutenant colonels of Mississippi Cavalry Regiments, while William B. had the 13th Mississippi Infantry.—ED. VETERAN.]

BATTLE OF PERRYVILLE, KY.

BY COL. THOMAS CLAIBORNE, NASHVILLE, TENN.

I wish to recall the state of affairs that existed at the moment General Bragg arrived on the morning of October 8, 1862, at the spring at Perryville, where Gen. Leonidas Polk's command of Hardee's and Buckner's Divisions had been encamped. General Polk had had his troops in line of battle westward and northward in the direction of the Doctor's fork of Salt River, and about one and a fourth miles due west from his camp St. John Liddell's Brigade was at eleven o'clock engaging the advance of McCook's Corps (left wing), of Buell's army. General Polk, assured of the heavy strength of that army, had played his troops into columns for withdrawal while Liddell's Brigade and also another to his left, on the road leading from Bardstown to the town of Perryville, were covering his withdrawal; his wagon trains were on the turnpike that led to Harrodsburg, distant about ten miles, as thitherward were the main body of Bragg's forces under Gens. E. K. Smith and Carter Stevenson, reported to be under Smith at 20,000 and under Stevenson 18,000. Bragg had, I understand, sent Smith and Withers to confront General Sill, the extreme detached left of General Buell. General Stevenson was close enough to have been used by Bragg, but I cannot say exactly where. Buell had pushed his troops toward Perryville and Danville, that lay beyond his right, had touched Bardstown, and his head of that corps had turned eastward to Perryville; McCook's corps of 28,000 marched southeastwardly toward Perryville. This summary of the leading conditions is sufficient for a proper understanding of the situation on the morning of October 8, 1862.

It was about 11 A.M. when General Bragg, at the head of his large staff, reached the point of the turnpike road where were assembled General Polk and General Buckner (who had that morning before daylight returned to his command and on whose staff I was acting) and Generals Hardee and Cheat-ham and their staffs ready to march to Harrodsburg.

I had just ridden up as Bragg addressed General Polk I state substantially: "What are you doing, General Polk?" "I am retiring, as the enemy are too many." General Bragg quickly and on no further inquiry into conditions replied: "Bring on the action with small arms." General Polk and the others present seemed for a moment astonished; but recovering quickly, waved his arm and ordered that his troops, which, as I have stated above, were massed, should be deployed on the lines they had just left.

As I had for two nights had no sleep, I asked General Buckner to permit me to snatch a little sleep, attended by my orderly, while the divisions were taking up positions, which he granted. As I was soon asleep, I did not observe what was taking place until my orderly awakened me and said the fight was about to begin.

I had only a short distance to move to the line of battle, as formed on the crest of the slope that reached down into the narrow valley coursed by a creek that was quite shallow at that time and flowed in a serpentine manner. As I reached the left of Buckner's Division, where he at that moment was found, the batteries, which on either side had been placed nearly on opposite sides of the valley, opened with tremendous energy, and so continued until, I thought, about 1 P.M.

At this moment the rocky escarpment that crested the opposite heights was lined with McCook's Corps, while directly in front of our left was a farmhouse fronting on a road that led slantwise to the plain occupied by McCook, and to its left a little a squadron of horse was maneuvering. I asked General Buckner, who was observing its movements, the meaning of it. He said: "That is Gay trying to cover the two cannon they are seeking to put into position." Liddell was firing away, and a Washington New Orleans battery was a few hundred yards beyond a piece of woods to our left in position. As to the Confederate troops still farther to our left, I first saw them as our part of the line began to descend the slope in front of the line to our extreme right; Cheatham on the right, Buckner the left, and the center under Hardee.

At a right shoulder shift arms our troops moved in the most steady tread, despite the firing of artillery and small arms in the whole front, which inflicted much loss; but the line only in its long extent swayed as obstacles were met, steadily forming on the colors and closing the gaps made by the enemy's fire, which was so fierce that it seemed almost impossible for our troops to get to the enemy. An unfortunate thing occurred in Buckner's Division: a regiment for some reason made a left wheel in a strong rush to the left and advanced on the battery I have just mentioned, which, by some mistake, had opened on the troops coming from our left and below the battery near the creek. I was ordered by General Buckner to hasten to stop it. As I rode into the battery I shouted at each gun to cease firing. I instantly met with its commander, who, I believe, was Slocum, who demanded why I gave in that way such an order. I told him I was sent by General Buckner to stop his firing into our own troops. He said this was not so. "Well, just look at that battle flag," I said, and he at once discovered the mistake. Going some fifty yards farther down the hillside, he found an excellent point of vantage, and in a few moments he was pouring an oblique flank fire into the masses of the enemy occupying a large open field that reached to a woods some five hundred to seven hundred yards to their rear.

I rejoined my division, and saw the grandest advance in line of battle I ever witnessed by the matchless Confederate battalions, which brought down their arms only when about one hundred to two hundred paces from the foot of the declivity of the escarpment on which the enemy's line rested. Then at the command to open fire they first discharged their guns and with a rush struck the steep, sloping sides and up and up in resistless charge, and soon dislodged the line of Federals, which fell back fighting at great disadvantage, as the rocky escarpment had been reached and the Confederates had a first-rate breastwork, from which they swept the Federals on the open field for the greater half of the line. At the going down of the sun the whole reach of McCook's line had been left to the victors, and in the woods eight hundred or nine hundred yards to the rear his shattered regiments found shelter. Cheatham had assaulted their right and captured a battery, dispersing its supports, and killed Gen. Jim Jackson, whose body I saw after night lying near the shattered guns of his command.

A battery said to be Loomis's had fallen back to the woods already spoken of and then kept up a steady flow of shrapnel that were trained to drop just over the escarpment behind which lay Buckner's troops. The farmhouse before described had been fired and was destroyed.

Adjutant General Cosby and I were seated on our horses on the slanting road described about six paces apart—I in the rear—when just as the sun was about to disappear I observed a shot that came from the left. I called to Cosby the fact. He merely looked toward me and resumed his attitude. Another shot flew between us. I called to Cosby to report to General Buckner that I was going to find that battery, as no shot had before that come from that direction. I turned my horse, rode down to the creek, and turned up it, which led directly into the ground held by the enemy. I hitched my horse to a limb of a tree that overhung the water and crept along a stone wall that rested on its right bank; and going four or five hundred yards upstream, I came to its end, and from it could see what I took for an army corps crowding into a covelike space. I thus discovered that the enemy had already turned our left just at sundown. I ran to my horse and hurried to General Buckner to give him the information of this very serious fact. I then asked permission to visit Cheatham's Division to ascertain if my nephew, Henry Ramage, was safe. I obtained it and took my way over the ground lately held by the enemy, on which I judged were 2,500 killed and wounded Federals. The full moon shone very brightly. Every object was plainly seen. Among the fallen Federals were not a few Confederates, whose ragged and dirty clothing easily disclosed them within thirty or forty yards, contrasting remarkably with the brand-new uniforms of the Federals. I saw and picked up a New York Herald, and could easily read it in the brilliant moonlight. Hundreds of arms lay scattered, glinting its rays, and so I rode to our right over the fighting ground; but I did not find Cheatham's Division. It had pushed on to its front and right in the engagement. I followed the road that led, as I supposed, to its position, but missed it; for I soon rode into a large number of very excited soldiers who were evidently discussing the day's fight and disaster. The woods in which the road ran had not shed its leaves. The light of the moon fell through the interspaces of their limbs. It made my uniform unrecognizable. "What soldiers are you?" I said as I came on them. "Buell's," several answered. "All right! please let my horse move forward," and I passed through the crowd and beyond it, turned widely to my left, and rode into General Polk's headquarters.

Here I found an aid of General Bragg's in search of me. Thence we rode to Bragg's headquarters, who sharply questioned me about the report that the enemy had turned his left. I reaffirmed that I have above stated, yet he was incredulous until word was presently brought him that the Washington Artillery caissons, going to the old camp for ammunition, had fallen into the enemy's hands.

Then he awakened to the situation. He had ordered field hospitals to be made ready and details to gather the spoil of arms. Now he issued orders for the move at 1 A.M., and, striking across fields, he reached the pike leading to Harrodsburg, and at quick step the army marched through that town and so farther on till we got to Dicks River.

Thus Bragg was caught with about a fourth of his effectives by Buell's army; it was testified before Buell's court of inquiry that it was from seventy to one hundred thousand. He had struck McCook's Corps, and his gallant 12,500 had smashed it. Not a sound of the battle had reached General Buell, encamped behind some hills, not five miles away. McCook was the bearer of the news after nightfall of his own defeat.

Had Bragg kept his hold on the battle ground till next daylight, he would have been beaten in detail and his command slaughtered or captured.

It was afterwards seen that Sheridan's Corps had pushed into the cove, as I had discovered and reported, and that Crittenden's Corps had lapped the town of Perryville and its head of column turned toward Danville.

Never greater deeds were done in any of the "greater battles" of the war, never valor more splendidly displayed by those invincible soldiers who, burning with imitable ardor, rushed on and over more than twice their number.

It was Bragg's first and last battle in Kentucky.

ORDNANCE MATTERS AT THE CLOSE.

(Richmond Times-Dispatch.)

The following is an interesting narrative of events (April 2-9, 1865) by Joseph Packard, formerly lieutenant of artillery, on ordnance duty in charge of reserve ordnance train, Army of Northern Virginia.

On April 1, 1865, the Ordnance Reserve Department of the Army of Northern Virginia was still occupying its winter quarters near Lippincott's, between the Richmond and Petersburg Turnpike and the Woodpecker road, about half a mile south of Swift Creek. It consisted of the reserve ordnance train, forty-four wagons, under my charge; of the field park, twelve forges and battery wagons, under Capt. George Duffey; and of the forage train of four wagons, under Capt. S. M. Sommers, who was quartermaster of the department.

Capt. F. M. Colston, who had been in charge of the train up to about February 1, 1865, but who had been made assistant to the chief of ordnance, Lieut. Col. Briscoe G. Baldwin, still remained with the train and messed with me, together with Ordnance Sergeants Robert S. Burwell and Everard Meade. We had another sergeant named Lazenby, and there were several quartermaster sergeants, of whom the chief was George Apperson.

On the morning of April 2, 1865, we had several dispatches from Colonel Baldwin informing us of the disaster on our right and instructing us to prepare to move. We had a very large amount of surplus ammunition in a log storehouse, consisting of artillery ammunition, some piles of mortar shells, and about thirteen hundred pounds of powder in boxes. We were instructed to move our ammunition, over and above what our wagons could haul, to Dunlop's, which was then the terminus of the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad, and to destroy all stores not needed in field use. Accordingly during the day we shipped the surplus ammunition to Dunlop's and threw the mortar shells into Swift Creek. We also sent some ammunition to the Pocahontas and Upper Pontoon Bridges for the use of troops. After dark the train started on the retreat. Colston and I remained about our old quarters until about eleven o'clock at night, waiting for Burwell, who had gone to Petersburg to bid farewell to some of his numerous lady friends. We saw to the burning of the huge sling cart, with twelve-foot wheels, which we had used in moving heavy guns during the fall and early winter.

About midnight we mounted our horses and rode down to Dunlop's, where, under later instructions from Colonel Baldwin, we were to blow up the entire stock of ammunition there collected. On arriving there we met an officer of the quartermaster's department with similar orders as to the quartermaster's stores. As he had a force of men and we had none, we arranged with him for the proper piling of the boxes of powder, so as to destroy the huge pile of miscellaneous stores. I took a ham from the pile, which I strapped behind my saddle, to be placed in our wagon later. About one o'clock we rode on to overtake the train, and about an hour later we heard a tremendous report, which indicated that the quartermaster had successfully carried out his instructions. At intervals during the night as we rode along we heard the explosions which followed the destruction of our fleet in the James River. Many times during the night the sky was lit up from these explosions, and the earth seemed to tremble under our feet.

Sometime after daylight on Monday, the 3d, we overtook our train and proceeded all day long without special incident. Captain Sommers, who was from West Virginia, had his family spending the winter in Petersburg, together with his father-in-law, Judge G. D. Camden, of West Virginia. They did not wish to remain in Petersburg; so in his special wagon were his wife, two young children with a nurse, and Judge Camden. There were also with them in the ordnance wagons a black-coated Baptist preacher and quite a pretty black-eyed Miss R., who was trying to get to her home, somewhere in Southern Virginia. Before sundown Captain Sommers insisted, on the ground that the animals were tired, on going into camp near the house of a Mr. Cox, which was not far from the coal mines in Chesterfield County. Colston and I objected to this on the ground that it would leave us behind the troops with which we had been moving; but Sommers persisted, thinking, I suppose, of the fatigue of his family more than of the army mules.

Next morning, Tuesday, April 4, we made an early start, and by hard driving succeeded in two or three hours in catching up with the rear guard of our army. As we had no armed force whatever with us, we should have fallen an easy prey to the enemy if their pursuit had been close. Nothing of moment occurred during the day, and about sundown we went into camp near Amelia Courthouse.

On Wednesday, April 5, we started about eight o'clock in the morning, under orders to take a road northward from Amelia Courthouse, and at a point some five miles distant to take a road diverging to the left. Colston went over to see Colonel Baldwin and get his orders. We had a clear road, no troops being ahead of us. About ten o'clock, I suppose, I was near the rear of the train attending to the issue of some cavalry ammunition to Lieutenant Downman, of Wickham's Brigade, and Lieutenant Blackburn, acting ordnance officer of Fitz Lee's Division. This being done, I went forward, and at the fork of the road before mentioned I met Sergeant Burwell, who told me that he had heard from one of our cavalrymen that the enemy's cavalry were a short distance beyond us up the fork of the road, and that he had no doubt of the truth of the statement. I told him to ride forward and order the wagons to turn out into the fields on each side of the road. The Baptist preacher was perched on the fence like a crow, and Judge Camden was standing by. I never saw them afterwards. Stopping to speak to them for a moment, I trotted forward toward the front. After going for some two hundred yards, the road ran for a little distance between two high banks, with woods on either side. I came out from this sunken way into a narrow bottom lying along a creek over which there was a bridge.

The wagons had begun turning our right and left into the field. Just at this moment I saw a regiment of the enemy's cavalry dashing across the bridge about one hundred yards distant from me, and promptly took to the woods. After wandering through the woods for some time, I returned to the scene and found that our cavalry had come up and driven off the attacking force, but not until they had blown up some of our wagons and killed a number of the animals. I found Captain Sommers there, who told me that he had been captured by the enemy, but paroled so as to take care of his family. Burwell returned from the retreat which he had made at the attack of the enemy about the same time that I did. Colston overtook us just after the attack upon the train. This attack was made by a cavalry force under General Davies near Painesville. Toward evening, having hitched up all the animals we could find, we started again with some twenty wagons along with the troops. We moved along during the night in the slow way that is enforced upon a train moving with troops over bad roads. Sometimes I slept on horseback; and once, as I recollect, I lay down for about half an hour on the porch of a house in a village through which we were passing. I don't know the name of the village.

On Thursday, April 6, we proceeded on our way, not stopping to feed either men or animals. I munched a little corn during the day. About ten o'clock in the morning we began going through a series of attacks by Sheridan's cavalry and artillery upon our left flank. During these attacks the wagons of our own and other trains would dash across the exposed portion of the road and turn out into fields which were more sheltered. In this way our little train was soon broken up into fragments. Shortly after one of these attacks, when some artillery of ours drawn up in a field to our left was replying to the enemy, Mrs. Sommers and her nurse and children were so terrified that I urged Captain Sommers to take them to a house near by and leave them until he could return to take care of them, as there was no place for women and children with an army in the situation in which ours was. This he did, and he continued with us until after the surrender, when he went back for them. During the rest of the day Captain Colston and Burwell and I devoted ourselves to the task of pushing on as best we could the fragments of our train, each taking charge of one fragment.

Late in the afternoon I had succeeded in getting the three wagons which I had been looking after across a bridge over a small stream with high banks and up a high hill on the other side. I then retraced my steps to see if I could be of any use to Colston and Burwell. Just as I got down to the bridge of which I have spoken I saw a heavy line of the enemy's infantry emerging from the woods three or four hundred yards in front of me and keeping up a heavy fire. The scene among the wagons was one of pell-mell confusion. They were driving in lines, eight or ten abreast, across the field toward the stream of which I have spoken. Its high banks interposed an effectual barrier, and there the teamsters, unhitching a horse or mule from the wagons, attempted to ford the stream, in which many of them failed.

I turned and rode with a miscellaneous crowd up the hill. As I neared its top the sun had not long set and outlined against the sky I saw the splendid figure of General Lee on horseback, his countenance as grand and serene as ever. A battery was passing, and in a quiet voice he ordered them to take position on the crest of the hill. An Irish sergeant of the battery said: "Do ye hear, boys? 'tis the General himself that wants us." As they went into position I rode on by a road to the left, mixing with the crowd and now and then talking with my neighbors.

The moon had risen when I approached the High Bridge, and its lofty arches stood out in bold relief against the sky. A bridge for wagons across the Appomattox River was close by, and while I was on the bridge I encountered Burwell. As progress was very slow, the road being blocked up with wagons, artillery, troops, and stragglers, we determined to ride across the country to Farmville, hoping thereby to get some food for our horses and perhaps for ourselves. The latter we did not accomplish, but from a small barn we each took a couple of bundles of fodder and some ears of corn. We reached Farmville somewhere about ten o'clock, and rode about the town trying to find something to eat, but without success. Toward midnight we came to a house in the western part of the town which stood back a little way from the street. The lady of the house came out in response to our knock and told us that General Breckinridge and his staff were in the house, filling all her spare room, and that she had nothing to eat. Burwell entered into conversation with her, and so ingratiated himself that after a while she said she would give us some cold corn bread and sorghum molasses.

This was a treat indeed. Of course we could not in our sleepy condition watch our horses during the night to prevent their being stolen; so we asked her if there was any place where we could secure them. She said there was no place but the henhouse. Accordingly we managed to get them through the low door, and after feeding them locked them up. Taking the saddles and saddle blankets with us, we lay down on the back porch, using the saddles for pillows and the saddle blankets for covering. It was broad day the next morning when I awoke to find a nice-looking young lady pushing me with her foot. She said that General Breckinridge and his staff had been gone more than an hour, as they heard the Yankees were on the edge of the town, so that her mother thought we had better be leaving.

This was on the morning of Friday, April 7. We at once saddled up and rode down through the town. At the railroad station we found the three wagons which had been in my charge the evening before and, I think, four others of our train. Captain Sommers, who was with them, told me there were some commissary and quartermaster stores at the station, and he asked me to receipt as acting quartermaster to the officer in charge for what we needed, his parole preventing him from doing so.

I gladly did this, and we threw on the wagons some corn meal and bacon and some grain for the animals. We then left the town by the bridge across the river and turned westward. After going a mile or two, we stopped to feed the animals and ourselves. While we were cooking Captain Colston rode up, and shortly afterwards Colonel Baldwin joined us and shared our meal. I told him that I thought I had better go and join Mosby, in whose country I had been while on a visit to Fauquier County in January. He told me that no better service could be done than to help get the wagons along; that he and most of General Lee's staff were devoting their attention to this. After our breakfast, which went on without sound of the firing on the edge of Farmville, we proceeded on our way without serious interruption during the entire day. Once there was an alarm of cavalry on our right flank, but nothing came of it. During the day Colston had a talk with one of Pickett's staff whom he knew and who was very gloomy over the situation. While I was thinking of this General Breckinridge and his staff rode by, and his calm, buoyant manner was very impressive. The last time I had seen him was when he was presiding in the Senate chamber as Vice President of the United States. My recollection is that we kept slowly moving all Friday night.

On Saturday, April 8, we continued our course, and there was no attack made upon us; so that I began to think that the union with Johnston would be safely effected. During this time I heard from Colston and Burwell about the loss on Thursday evening of the wagon in which our baggage was carried. Colston went into the wagon and got his best uniform. I had put on the worst clothes I had when we started on the retreat, thinking that the road would be very muddy, and so I lost, among other things, two fairly good coats, one of which I had never worn. It was the coat that I had received under the act of Congress providing for the issue of clothing and rations to the officers as well as the men, since in 1865 a lieutenant's pay was about consumed in paying for the corn meal and bacon which he got from the commissary. We camped Saturday night on the bank of a little stream just east of the hill where General Lee had his headquarters after the surrender.

On Sunday morning, April 9, as we were preparing to start, we heard firing in front of us and rode up on the hill of which I have spoken. A captured section of artillery was brought in about this time, and I exchanged my saber, with its Richmond-made scabbard, for one which I took from this battery. Shortly after this we heard of the flag of truce, and I saw General Lee and Colonel Marshall ride forth to meet General Grant. Later in the day I witnessed the interview between General Longstreet and General Custer. That night we remained at our camp on the side of the stream, sheltering ourselves under a wagon sheet. During the night some one stole my hat from my head while I was asleep. I had bought it shortly after the battle of Gettysburg, and it had holes in it, but it was better than nothing. Later in the day I bought from an artilleryman a spare cap which he had, paying him in United States currency all that we could muster—a five-cent piece, a three-cent piece, and a three-cent postage stamp.

On Monday morning, April 10, we moved up into the woods where General Lee was and pitched our wagon sheet about a hundred yards from his tent. It started to rain very hard, and we kept under cover most of the day. In the morning our friends, the enemy, sent us some beef and crackers and to each officer a quart of whisky, which helped to pass the time.

On Tuesday, April 11, we signed the parole sheets, and later in the day received our paroles, signed by Col. Walter H. Taylor. Late in the afternoon Colston and I went to General Lee's tent and said good-by to him. He signed his name to a copy of his farewell address which I had made in my memorandum book, and he also wrote his name in Captain Colston's pocket Testament. I also visited the Rockbridge Artillery, in which I had formerly served, and my old comrades gave me one of the pieces of the battery flag.

On Wednesday, April 12, I started with about thirty others on my six days' ride to Fauquier County, Colston starting for Richmond. Capt. J. M. Garnett, ordnance officer of Grimes's Division, had given me a $5 Maryland bank note which he had in his possession. This, with the clothes I had on, a spare shirt which I had picked up, and my horse, sword, and pistol, constituted all the property that I took away.

[Captain (F. M.) Colston is in active business still—of Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore—ED. VETERAN.]

SCENES ABOUT GETTYSBURG—A BRAVE BOY.

BY J. W. ANDERSON, COVINGTON, GA.

I was a member of Company E, 10th Georgia Regiment; but in January, 1863, I was appointed one of the special couriers for General Longstreet, and served with him until he was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, when Gen. R. H. Anderson, of South Carolina, succeeded him in command of the First Army Corps. I was retained by General Anderson in the same position until October, 1864, when I returned to my regiment for duty.

When General Longstreet himself was moving upon Gettysburg on July 1, Hood's and McLaw's Divisions were some distance away, but were advancing as rapidly as they could march. General Pickett was on the other side (the Virginia side) of Chambersburg, more than twenty miles away. I was sent back after General Pickett with orders for him to move up to Gettysburg as rapidly as possible. He did not get up, however, until the morning of the 3d of July, the morning of the day in which he made his famous charge. It will thus be seen that Pickett's Division were not engaged in any of the fighting at Gettysburg until after the great artillery duel was over on the afternoon of the 3d. Then they immediately charged.

When the artillery opened the battle, I was returning from the ride to General Pickett, and was several miles away. It seemed an earthquake would not have caused the foundations to tremble as did the fire of those five hundred pieces of artillery. Spurring my horse forward, I soon came within the range of the bursting shells from the enemy's guns. The air seemed to be full of them, while the roar of the guns and the shriek of the shells was simply awful. I saw Pickett and his men as they moved forward in their advance upon the enemy's line on the Round Tops. It was a grand sight to behold, but awful to face. The line moved across the open field for half a mile or more under the terrific fire of the enemy's whole line concentrated upon it. The Confederates did not falter. They moved steadily forward until they reached the enemy's line, broke through it, and many were killed and captured inside the line.

As I rode forward across the field where the shells were coming over thick and fast I met many of Pickett's men, who were wounded, coming out the best way they could. As I hurried on I met a young boy who had been in the charge. A cannon shot had struck his left ankle and taken the foot away, his hat was gone, and he was using his gun as a sort of crutch, and was trying to "hobble" his way out. I am sure he was not over fifteen years of age; but he was all game, and did not utter a word of complaint at the loss of his foot. I felt so sorry for him that I dismounted and lifted him up on my horse and led him back behind a small hill not far to the rear which protected him from the enemy's shells, to which he was still exposed. A number of other wounded men had collected at the same place. I lifted the poor boy from my horse and laid him on the ground. My duty urging me forward, I did not have time even to ask the name of the brave boy or to ascertain the regiment to which he belonged; but he evidently was one of "Pickett's men."

I then rode rapidly to the front to find General Longstreet, who was on our extreme right. I never saw nor heard of the boy again. I would like to know whether he survived the loss of his foot and the shock of the cannon shot or not. I hope he did. I hope he is still living, because a boy so brave and fearless as he, I am sure, would have made a fine man and a good citizen.

"DEAD ANGLE"—RULES FOR BURIAL OF DEAD.

BY COL. W. D. PICKETT, OF LIEUT. GEN. HARDEE'S STAFF.

The December VETERAN was late in reaching me in Mexico and was afterwards misled. This will account for my apparent indifference in replying to a statement in that number attributed to my old friend and comrade, Hon. James D. Porter, a gentleman of honorable and distinguished record in war and eminent whether in the judiciary, in the councils of the State, or in the councils of the nation.

It will be recalled that in the October VETERAN I had related a highly creditable incident occurring in front of Lowry's Brigade, Cleburne's Division, during the assault of Sherman's army on the "Kennesaw line" (in front of Marietta) about June 20, 1863. In that article it was stated that in front of Lowry's Brigade was an open wood through which the Federals charged and were repulsed only when close to the Confederate lines, leaving many killed and wounded. In the height of the battle the dry leaves and old grass caught fire, which was rapidly spreading among the dead and wounded. Spontaneously and on the instant a flag of truce was inaugurated (initiated from the Confederate side), and at once there was the gathering of unarmed men from both sides who tenderly removed the dead and wounded to the Federal lines. This incident was told after the repulse, and is believed to be substantially correct, and as understood was talked of around all camp fires.

Governor Porter thinks my statement was slightly in error, as that truce was declared after communicating with General Sherman. Had this been the case, these bodies of dead and wounded would have been burned over a half dozen times before the truce could have been inaugurated. My distinct recollection is that it was not unusual for brigade commanders to inaugurate these partial truces when the lines of the two armies were close together and that these truces were recognized at army headquarters. An incident is recalled in my own experience in corroboration.

Soon after the arrival of Hooker's Corps from the Army of the Potomac it occupied the valley of Lookout Creek, west of Lookout Mountain, and the utmost vigilance was thought necessary on the part of the Confederate side to prevent a surprise.

A short time before the battle of Missionary Ridge I was directed by General Hardee to make a night inspection of the picket line around the base of Lookout Mountain, fronting Moccasin Point and on Lookout Creek, which then separated our lines from Hooker's Corps. On account of the rough mountain side and the dense timber interfering with finding the various picket posts, those posts on Lookout Creek were not reached till after daylight, and probably after the boys had broken their fast. On approaching the picket post at the Nashville railroad bridge loud laughing was heard, with every evidence of hilarity and good feeling. At that post was a sight to be remembered. The bridge had been destroyed, but there was left the two stone abutments sixty or seventy-five feet apart. On one side were "the boys in blue" and on the other side "the boys in gray," each sitting flat on the abutment with their feet dangling below and, in the height of their good humor, striking the sides of the abutments. The boys had evidently been "swapping yarns" instead of tobacco and coffee. On inspecting the picket posts farther up Lookout Creek the same conditions were in evidence. On one side of the shallow creek was the Confederate post, with the sentinel "in gray;" on the other side, one hundred to one hundred and fifty yards distant, was the sentinel "in blue"—each in sight of the other.

Before leaving corps headquarters nothing was told me of this truce. These partial truces were as they should have been. The few soldiers killed and wounded on the picket line cut no figure in war: it is the winning of battles and gaining possession of strategic points that control the results.

I have devoted this much space to this incident because I am desirous that the Confederate soldiers shall have what is justly due for an act which, amid the horrors of battle, was the spontaneous assertion of the teachings of a Christian civilization. It was equally honorable to both sides; more especially to the Confederates, who, as understood, inaugurated the movement and were on the defensive. It would have been well had the commanding general of the Federal army of that date carried out these teachings of a Christian civilization in his historical march of devastation and destruction from Atlanta to Savannah and thence to Columbia, S. C.

The error of Governor Porter arises from his confounding that spontaneous truce on the day of battle with that truce inaugurated (a few days after the assault on the "Kennesaw line") for the burial of the dead.

Cheatham's Division defended the "Dead Angle," the weakest part of the line on that day, because it could be easily "turned." The enemy made a most vigorous attack en masse, charging close up to the breastworks, a color bearer planting his flag on the breastworks. After the repulse, there were quite a number of Federal dead in the open space in front. These bodies under the hot sun soon became so offensive to both sides that it became necessary to remove or bury them, and hence the truce for that purpose and doubtless inaugurated from army headquarters. It so happened that on that day I passed along the front of Lowry's Brigade and saw no burial parties, because the dead and wounded had been removed immediately after the repulse under that spontaneous truce. Whether those gallant fellows in front of Cheatham's Division were properly removed or buried where they lay is not now recalled.

Again referring to the article in the December VETERAN, Governor Porter is quoted (erroneously probably) as having a different view as to the duty of a victorious army as to the disposal of the dead. He thinks it is not incumbent on a victorious army to bury the dead of the enemy. I differ with him, and believe that to the victor of any battlefield, according to the rules of modern warfare, devolves the duty of caring for the wounded and burying the dead. I admit that it is impossible for any army immediately after a battle to take proper care of the dead. Take, for instance, Murfreesboro. Although the Confederates held the field for four days, I doubt whether even the Confederates' dead were buried, for every soldier and officer was compelled to be on the firing line. He gives as an instance the battlefield of Chickamauga, which was held by the Confederates for two months preceding the battle of Missionary Ridge. He passed over that battlefield a short time before the latter battle, and reports that in the portion passed over by him the dead were not buried. It so happened that by the vicissitudes of war I passed over a portion of that same battlefield within about two weeks previous to the Missionary Ridge battle, and found all the dead that were passed buried after a fashion. It occurred in this wise:

It may be recalled that after the Army of Tennessee, under General Bragg, crossed the Tennessee River on July 4, 1863 (the date of the surrender of Vicksburg), with its twenty thousand paroled prisoners of war and the failure of victory at Gettysburg, General Hardee was relieved of the command of his corps and ordered to Enterprise, Miss., to establish a camp for the collecting together and reorganization of the paroled prisoners of Vicksburg, so that when exchanged they could take the field at once. After this duty had been partially performed and during a time when he was in command of that department, I was directed (assisted by other officers of the staff) to make an inspection of the cavalry in the State of Mississippi, then under command of Gen. Stephen D. Lee. When mostly through with this duty, and a few days after the news of the victory of Chickamauga, word came to me that General Lee was about to start on an expedition to North Alabama, and probably farther north, with two brigades of cavalry. On communicating with him by telegraph and expressing a wish to join him he readily consented. I joined him at Pontotoc, Miss., and after a few days of hard marching reached Tusculmbia, Ala. Then two incidents were in evidence to prevent further progress north. The Tennessee River was past fording at a point opposite; and General Wheeler, after doing considerable damage to the enemy's communications in Middle Tennessee, was set upon by a superior force of infantry and cavalry, forced out of Tennessee, and had that day crossed that stream by one of the fords on the Mussel Shoals, some distance above, and was then near Courtland, Ala.

Just then, however, important work turned up for these two splendid brigades of cavalry—one commanded by General Ferguson, the other commanded by General —. This was the advent into North Alabama of Sherman's Corps of twenty thousand men on a forced march from Memphis, Tenn., to the reinforcement of Rosecrans's army at Chattanooga. General Sherman's intention evidently was to march along the south bank of the Tennessee, thereby avoiding two crossings of that stream. General Lee promptly met the enemy's advance fifteen or twenty miles west of Tusculmbia. By taking up favorable defensive positions by the skillful use of artillery the enemy were compelled to deploy and advance in line of battle at so many defensive positions that in three or four days they had only forced Lee's cavalry back to Tusculmbia.

After occupying that city one night, Sherman, realizing doubtless that it was rather slow progress in going to the rescue of General Rosecrans and doubtless learning of the driving of Wheeler's Cavalry to the south side of the river, retired his advance to East Port and crossed with his entire command to the north side of the Tennessee River and thence on to Bridgeport. The south side of the river was thus saved from the devastation resulting from the passage of such a large force through those fine plantations.

Learning at this date that Lieutenant General Hardee had been ordered to resume the command of his corps near Chattanooga and being relieved of duty by General Lee, I proceeded to join corps headquarters. By hard riding over Sand Mountain, crossing the "Lookout Range" near the falls of Little River, I on the fourth day about noon passed near the famous battlefield of Chickamauga. Naturally desirous of inspecting it, I left the road and spent some time wandering over that bloody field. I recall one especially hard-contested point—a gentle rise covered with timber. The sides of trees facing the Confederate lines were so peppered by Minie bullets as in some cases to be bare of bark. Everywhere were visible the effects of the storm of battle. Of course I was not over all of that extended battlefield, but wherever I strolled were the evidences of the dead. The bodies were evidently buried where they lay; no grave was dug. They were covered from dirt dug alongside; and where they died lying on the back, in many cases the toes were sticking out, the dirt having been washed away by the rain. Under all the circumstances, I considered that that manner of burial was all the rules of war would require. Doubtless nothing could be done in this gruesome work until ten or twelve days after the fight, and by that time the bodies were so decomposed as to render removing impossible. Furthermore, on Chickamauga field there fell, including the two armies, thirty to thirty-five thousand killed and wounded—the exact figures not now recalled. The proportion killed to wounded is usually about one-fifth. So there were at least six thousand dead scattered over the field. Think of the labor attendant on this job to be done by details of soldiers with common intrenching tools—picks and long-handled shovels! Soldiers can only tolerate such work when under the artillery fire of the enemy and he is seeking a trench deep enough to protect himself.

Governor Porter and myself do not often differ on any subject, and very little as outlined above. In regard to the burial of the dead, he may not regard what has been described as a burial in the ordinary acceptance of the term. Understanding the rules of modern war as I do, I am anxious to show that the Confederate army carried out their duty on the battlefield of Chickamauga according to the rules of civilized warfare. Otherwise, this communication would not have been written.

GREAT WAR SONG WAS CHEAP.

(Baltimorean in New York Herald.)

When Col. James Ryder Randall, who wrote "Maryland, My Maryland," passed away in Augusta, Ga., January 15, the South lost the author of a poem which Oliver Wendell Holmes declared to be the greatest war song of any nation, and a poem which brought its author only $100 in depreciated Confederate money, which was worthless before its owner sought to use it.

Although the poem attained world-wide fame, Colonel Randall died poor. In a witty address he made here recently there was an undercurrent which indicated that the material problems of life were very present ones to him. He told a story of meeting an old wartime associate and telling of some of his difficulties. This old friend stated: "Randall, you cannot expect immortality and house rent too."

Although Colonel Randall was born in Maryland (of good old Maryland stock), he never lived in his native State. For forty years, with slight intermissions, he had been a resident of Augusta, Ga., and for several years he was an editorial writer on the Augusta Chronicle. He had gone to Augusta in 1864, after serving in the Confederate army, and assumed the editorship of the old Constitutionalist; and when this paper was merged into the Chronicle, Colonel Randall was retained.

When stricken ill with the grip, he was on his way to make his home, when sixty-nine years old, in the city of his birth. He died just as his poems were to be published in book form.

When Colonel Randall's death occurred, there was a movement on foot to create an office which might enable him to spend his last days in comfort in the State he glorified. Former Governor Warfield had suggested that the State create an office to be known as "keeper of the archives," to which position Mr. Randall should be appointed. Others, notable among them Senator Whyte, were interested in the plan to bring the poet to Maryland and to keep him there as an honored citizen.

An account of the circumstances under which "Maryland, My Maryland" was written is as follows: In April, 1861, Colonel Randall read in the New Orleans Delta news of the attack on the Massachusetts troops as they passed through Baltimore. "This account greatly excited me," said Randall. "I had long been absent from my native city, and the startling event there influenced my mind. That night I could not dismiss what I had read in the paper. About midnight I arose, lit a candle, and went to my desk. Some powerful influence seemed to possess me, and almost involuntarily I proceeded to write the song of 'My Maryland.' Some wild air that I cannot now recall took shape, and the whole poem was dashed off rapidly. No one was more surprised than I was at the widespread and instantaneous popularity of the poem I had been so strangely stimulated to write. The poem 'wrote itself.'"

FORREST'S CHIEF OF ARTILLERY.

During a visit of Col. James R. Randall to Nashville he was the guest of Capt. John W. Morton at his country home, Mansfield, near Nashville, and upon his return home he wrote:

"Ringed with flame and sore beset
Where gunboat and rifle fire met,
Where cannon blazed from water and land
Upon the Donelson Southern band,
A gallant lad of nineteen years,
A stranger to tremor and to fears,
Stood by a battery piece and shot
The first shell in that crater hot.

His captain, Porter, smitten down
Where all the volleyed thunders frown,
Shouted when borne in pain away:
'John, don't give up that gun, I say!'
'No! not while a man is left,' replied
The lad in the flush of martial pride:
And he kept his word to the utter end,
While a man could live in that river bend.

'No prison for me,' grim Forrest said,
And thousands followed where he led.
But other thousands remained because
They bowed to Buckner's word and laws.
Whelmed by the girdling Northern men,
They marched to the captive's dismal den,
And the lad who fired the first gun passed
Into that solitude sad and vast.

A few months more, and the daring boy
Breathed the air that the free enjoy;
A few months more, and he gayly went
Where dauntless Forrest pitched his tent.
Saluting the hero, he quickly gave
To the South's own 'bravest of the brave'
A paper that said he was to be
The Wizard's chief of artillery.

A derisive smile swept over the face
Of the stern commander in his place.
'What!' he growled, 'are you to wield
Command of my guns in war's fierce field?
Nonsense, boy; go grow a beard.'
And this was what the stripling heard.
But presently the Wizard's brow
Grew calm. 'I'll try you, anyhow.'

He said; and from that setting sun
Morton and Forrest were as one.

Nigh four tremendous, bloody years,
Full of combat, smiles, and tears,
O'er miles of land in battles grand,
Forrest and Morton went hand in hand.
With sword and pistol the Wizard slew,
While Morton's guns mowed men in blue.
If mortal man could ever have freed
The South from the foeman's grasp and greed,
That man was Forrest; but we see
It was not destined so to be.

Long years have gone, the grass is spread
Above the bivouacs of the dead.
The mighty Wizard's wand is still,
Like his heart; but from every Southern hill
And mount and stream and vale bedight,
With sun and moon and star alight,
He lives in glorious deeds alway,
Barring the onset of decay.

The lad who made the cannon roar
Survives on Life's tumultuous shore.
His locks are silvered, but his brain
Burns with heroic throbs amain.
Gentle and kind, but valiant yet,
Forgiving, he cannot forget
The cause he fought for with his mate,
Immortal, whatso'er its fate,
While from his great dark eyes there gleams
The orient of remembered dreams.

And now the old bard's final rhyme
Invokes a blessing of Easter time
Upon his people and home and race,
Like manna dew of heavenly grace.
With higher aims in war's surcease
Be thou allied with the Prince of Peace,
And never henceforth forget to be
'Soldier of Him who died for thee.'

PRIZE POEM BY U. D. C., SAN ANTONIO.

[Miss Harriet Ford, daughter of Mrs. P. R. Ford, San Antonio, Tex., granddaughter of Major Strange, chief of staff to Gen. N. B. Forrest, and a graduate from the High School, was the winner of the prize offered by the Barnard E. Bee Chapter, U. D. C., of that city for the best poem on "The Confederate Soldier." Miss Ford is the daughter as well as the granddaughter of a Confederate soldier. Her prize poem is as follows.]

'Twas at a meeting of the Club of the Great
In the spirit world, on the Stygian Sea,
When each a story had to relate,
They asked for one from Robert E. Lee.

"Dear friends, countrymen, and heroes blest,
I gladly answer your request.
Of the Confederate soldier is my story,
For he is worthy of all honor and glory.
Many are the tales of battles won
And of conquests and great deeds done;
But as the defeated one is a hero, too,
Just as much as the conqueror true.

So I tell you of the hero of sixty-one and four,
And of the great suffering he so nobly bore.

I saw him bid his loved ones good-by,
Forcing back tears from his bedimmed eye,
For he gladly responded to his dear South's call,
Thus leaving his family, his home, his all.
The South's path of duty long he trod
For four long years, though 'twas sometimes hard;
Often ragged, cold, without any bread,
Living on parched corn, with the ground for his bed.
No matter if the sun was burning hot
Or if freezing cold and ice were his lot,
Weary and worn, he never gave up.
Thus drinking the bitterest dregs of Life's cup,
Starving and bleeding, he fought for a worthy cause
Till, o'erwhelmed by numbers, he was forced to pause.
He met the disappointment of his life
With a saddened heart, but devoid of strife.
All hatred and malice to the North he did shun,
And in his sorrow he said: 'Thy will be done.'

After the cruel war had come to an end,
To his homestead his way he did wend;
But instead of his lovely home he found
Only its ashes strewn all around.
And his dear ones he had left so wealthy and gay
He found poverty-stricken, sad, and gray.
Of beloved friends whom he had long known,
He was told that in battle their spirits had flown.
Desolation and ruin he beheld everywhere
All over his farm he had made with such care.
And his slaves, to whom he had always been true,
Had left him to fight with the red, white, and blue.
So as the products of his land were all gone,
He took up his burden and toiled all alone.
And despite many trials, such as hard rains and drouth,
It wasn't long before there was a great new South.
To the Union he was afterwards loyal too,
For in ninety-eight he proudly wore the blue.
Indeed, I believe he is a truly great man
To have done all of this, as few ever can.
And he will live in the hearts of the whole country
Forever and ever through eternity.
With this question I'll stop, as it is very late:
Don't you think he's entitled to join the Club of the Great?"

Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon Bonaparte
Applauded and assented with all their heart.
Just as the wine was served to them all,
To these very great men in their banquet hall,
"A toast, a toast!" they all did cry,
And Napoleon loudly shouted with his glass on high:
"To the Confederate soldier let us drink, then;
Here's to the bravest, the noblest of men."

BATTLE OF MARKS MILLS, ARK.

The battle of Marks Mills was fought on the 25th of April, 1864. Banks had been defeated at Mansfield, La., and Steele, who was to have moved south from Little Rock, and formed a juncture with Banks at Shreveport, was in full retreat. Price's army, flushed with the victory of Mansfield, was close at Banks's heels trying to overtake him.

Our cavalry had been sent around to the south of Camden to head off Steele and impede his retreat so as to enable Price to overhaul him before he reached the Saline River. They had camped on the Moro Landing road, in Bradley County, at the Wagner place, about twelve miles from Marks Mills, on the night of the 24th. General Fagan, commander of the Confederate cavalry, had heard rumors that a large Federal train was on its way from Camden to Pine Bluff. Sergeant W. D. Marks and George Wilson volunteered to go up the road and learn the true situation if possible. Sergeant Marks succeeded in reaching his father's house, and got in through the window unobserved, as he thought; but the watchful negroes had seen him, and before sunrise on the morning of the 25th it was rumored that Colonel McMurtree, with the 2d Arkansas Cavalry, was in the country, and that it was likely there would be some fighting. It was evident that the Federal commander, Colonel Drake, gave little heed to this rumor. However, he sent Captain Wightman with his company down the Moro Landing road in quest of the Confederates. He met them a short distance south of Crane's place, where he met Company D, 2d Arkansas Cavalry, who without a halt drove Wightman back.

At this point Captain Wightman sent Drake word that a heavy body of Confederates was approaching from the south, and that he could not hold his position. Drake sent Wightman an insulting answer, calling him a coward, whereupon Wightman rode hurriedly to Drake's headquarters and tried to convince his commander that he was facing a large force of the enemy. Drake repeated the insult, calling him a coward and ordering him back. Wightman, finding it impossible to convince Drake or obey his orders, made a hasty retreat to the eastward, crossing the Saline at Vints Bluff and arriving at Pine Bluff on the evening of the battle with exhausted horses.

I should have stated that Drake was reinforced by two hundred men from Mount Elba the night before the battle.

When the Confederates arrived at Boyd's place, Fagan formed his plan of battle. He sent Shelby to the northeast by way of Dr. Barnett's farm to Sampson Rodgers, a point on the Pine Bluff and Moro Landing road. This move was to prevent the enemy from making their way to Pine Bluff.

Dockery was sent up the Moro to a point near W. B. Smith's farm to prevent the Federals returning to Camden.

General Cabell was to move forward on to the enemy, who was posted north on the hill between the Moro and the Saline.

Here the battle commenced in real earnest. Cabell moved forward on both sides of the Princeton road, driving the pickets and advance columns back to the top of the hill on the road leading to Marks Mills, where the Federals were posted. At the foot of the hill to the right Major O'Neal was mortally wounded. The last command he gave was: "Charge!"

The foregoing was submitted to General Cabell, who replied: "Dockery was never sent up the Moro and never went up the Moro; but went into action after he came on the left of Cabell's Brigade, which was heavily engaged." Elaborate reports were given this, and other Arkansas engagements are given in Series I., Volume XXXIV., Part "War Records."

MEMORIAL DAY—WILSON'S CREEK FIGHT.

BY GEORGE M. JONES, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Flattery, according to the common acceptance of that word, is detestable, but merited commendation is right and proper; and it is in this spirit that I desire to call attention to, and express my hearty approval of, the broad catholicity of spirit of the VETERAN in general, but especially, as manifested in your editorial and in putting side by side with it an extract from the Indianapolis News on a general Decoration Day, as contained in your September issue. One or two sentences from that editorial will bear repeating: "The man who talks on the war is speaking for eternity, and it behooves him to speak words of soberness; * * * but there is a habit of too many orators to speak extravagantly of what their side did, and they often weaken their cause by representing the other side discreditably."

Many of us have realized the truthfulness of these utterances, but have been slow to make known our approval. The time for crimination and recrimination has long since passed, if it ever existed. Surely we of the South have enough to boast of without disparaging the other side. While life's sinking sun is still above the horizon we veterans of both sides ought to hasten to put away from us all animosity and bitterness. That heaven will be inhabited by both the "blue and the gray," none of us can doubt; but we also know that bitterness and hatred can find no place in "that land where everlasting peace abides."

In keeping with these thoughts and in accord with yourself and the editor of the paper above referred to, I would express the hope that the 30th of May may be adopted for the annual decoration of our graves. This ceremony is not, and ought not to be, in honor of any one man. It should be on a day convenient for the largest number to attend, and with this end in view some have urged that Sunday be observed as the day most suitable. We of the South can afford to adopt the national holiday for the performance of this beautiful and impressive ceremonial since it is admitted by our Northern friends that it had its origin in the South.

Without trespassing at too great length on your time and space, but for the truth of history, I wish to correct a statement which is calculated to create a wrong impression as to which side was victorious in the battle of Wilson Creek, and which is contained in General Dodge's otherwise most excellent article in the October (1907) number of the VETERAN. General Dodge says: "Schofield was adjutant of that army [Lyon's], and in a large degree it was his efforts and advice that brought the force that had really won a great victory, and did not know it, safely to Springfield and Rolla." Major Schofield (for such he was then), if he ever really believed that the Union army was victorious at Wilson Creek, must have come to that conclusion when a hundred and forty miles had separated him from the battlefield, for it was at Rolla that his report was made. I was present on that memorable 10th of August, 1861; and if ever an army left a field more precipitately or in greater disorder, I do not know when or how it could have been. The Confederates were in possession of the entire field—never had been cut off of it—together with the body of General Lyon and nearly all of their killed and wounded. Early in the day General Sigel's wing of the army, in utter demoralization, had been driven from the field, leaving his artillery behind, and on reaching Springfield, ten miles away, consisted of the General and his orderly.

Major Schofield was then young and ambitious, and doubtless possessed of a vivid imagination, and he seems to have drawn on it without stint. It should not be forgotten that General Lyon at the start had the great advantage of taking the Confederates completely by surprise, the pickets having been drawn in the night before, preparatory to the march on Springfield—a fact not mentioned in the official reports.

DR. R. D. BASKERVILL, A VIRGINIAN.

Dr. Robert Dortch Baskervill was born at Waverly—a handsome and spacious old homestead still standing on the north bank of the Roanoke River—in Mecklenburg County, Va., September 26, 1826. His fathers for generations had dwelt upon that beautiful stream. His grandfather, William Baskervill, was an officer in the Continental army of the Revolution, after which for more than fifteen years and until his death he was the clerk of the courts of his native county. His grandmother was a daughter of Gen. Charles Rust Eaton, of North Carolina, who was a lieutenant colonel in the Revolutionary War. Their third son, Col. William R. Baskervill, was the father of Dr. Baskervill.

The old river homestead fell to his lot at his father's death, and there he passed his life, surrounded by plenty with a "latchstring" on the outside. By the results of the Civil War his wealth crumbled. Age had come upon him, but his bright intellect remained with him. He had passed much of his life in the Legislatures of his State, and knew personally all the leading men in the State of his time, and his reminiscences were delightfully entertaining.

Conditions forced Dr. Baskervill to abandon his easy life and to rely upon the profession for which he prepared himself in early life, which proved a blessing to all within his reach. Having prepared himself by an academic course at the University of Virginia to make a physician, and having attended its medical department for a year, he entered the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, in 1844, and graduated with his class in 1846. He then offered his services to the public; but, the people thought him too rich to be a doctor. So he became disgusted and turned his attention to literature, and for years studied it methodically. He married Miss Bettie P., daughter of Hon. Mark Alexander, who represented the Petersburg (Va.) District in Congress for fourteen years. He built a spacious and elegant mansion upon a large landed estate given him by his father. With him were ease and happiness and time to pursue thought and study.

DR. R. D. BASKERVILL.

When the War between the States came, Dr. Baskervill must have greatly underrated his splendid qualifications as a surgeon; though when other help could not be produced he had met with wonderful success as such. As an illustration of his surgical skill the following is given: Called on by an old physician to do surgical work for him shortly after his graduation upon a negro boy who had his skull shattered by a horse which wore new heavy shoes, he cut through and turned away the skin and took out seventeen pieces of bone, exposing much of the outer lining of the brain. After properly attending to the wound, he laid the skin back and stitched it (silver plate could not be had then). Seven weeks almost to the hour the boy spoke for the first time after receiving the kick. Ten or twelve years after this the same slave sold for $1,400, and was known to be in good physical condition thirty years afterwards.

MRS. BETTIE ALEXANDER BASKERVILL

Instead of entering the war as surgeon, Dr. Baskervill raised a company of spirited and chivalric young gentlemen, many of whom laid down their lives in the defense of their loved Southland.

At the close of the war Dr. Baskervill's mother, one of those delicate, charming women so often found in the South, had died. A confused condition existed in Southern Virginia, and the negroes, just turned loose from slavery, were useless. He then hunted up his medical books and studied them anew. He offered his services, and they were soon in demand throughout a large area. Near and far physicians wanted him for consultation, and he was ever moving to the relief of the afflicted. He was exceedingly popular with his patrons and with members of his profession. He was not only entertaining in conversation, but was a contributor to the medical journals of the time, some of his treatises being translated and reproduced in foreign countries.

He did not appear to have felt age up to his last illness. His death occurred on September 2, 1891. The community which had received his services for so many years felt their loss as much as if he had been a member of each family. They recognized his value and felt their danger without him. The village of Baskerville, Va., was named in his honor.

[Contributed by H. F. Hutcheson, of Boydton, Va.]

REUNIONS, STATE AND GENERAL, IN VIRGINIA.

BY HENRY J. HORNER (55TH VA. INFANTRY), HORNERS, VA.

In the March VETERAN I notice the criticism of A. F. Evans, Huntsville, Ala., of veterans at Reunions. I was one of those who occupied the tents in the general camp near the Soldiers' Home, Richmond, Va. The authorities planned for our comfort there and supplied an abundance of plain fare. For the unforeseen bad weather they are not to blame. They planned well. The stormy weather drove us to other quarters. I left to go home. On arriving in Fredericksburg on Saturday I found the river high, and early Sunday morning the steamer broke her lines and left a dozen or more of us there. The weather clearing, I returned to Richmond on Sunday evening to attend the parade on Monday, and found many of the tenters installed in better quarters with plenty to eat. I was informed that many had gone home. One comrade paid a woman a dollar for permission to sleep on the floor.

While in the tent camp we were subjected to military rules by the camp guard detailed to exclude outsiders. We were forbidden to talk at night, and there were threats for disobedience by guards who carried on conversations with any acquaintance who might be passing. We were denied the privilege of passing out at night without having to wait for an officer to investigate. I finally rebelled, reminding them that we were there as guests and not as prisoners. On the next morning an apology was offered.

At our State Reunion in Norfolk rooms were plentiful and cheap. Two of us had a room in the Fairmount Hotel for fifty cents each, and took our meals at will elsewhere. The restaurant service was varied—some good and cheap, and at other places it was high and bad. The small number of oysters found in a stew stimulated my curiosity to count. In one I had seven oysters, in two others nine each—or twenty-five oysters for seventy-five cents. Two of my comrades had their hair cut at a cost of $1.50 each—work done before inquiry. I once entered a restaurant, and in advance of my morning meal asked for a brandy toddy. After crinking it, I was charged forty cents.

We have no invitation for next year. The reason is not hard to find. About every city of importance has had us once. With sponsors, maids of honor, and now Confederate choirs and the ever-increasing expense attendant thereon, there is hesitation before repeating the hospitality. We like to have all these attractions; but there is a limit, and we seem to have reached it. The Reunions seem to be more of a frolic for the young than an entertainment for the old men and women.

ISSUED BY "THE CONFEDERATE BIBLE SOCIETY."

H. M. McLaurine, Franklin, Tenn., on February 19, 1895, wrote to Capt. George L. Cowan, of Forrest's Escort: "I found an old Bible in a barn near Lynnville, Tenn., either in 1864 or 1865. It was in a damaged condition, as it now is. I send it to you, thinking you may know the soldier or his family, and that they would be glad to have it."

Copied from the Bible are the following:

"Published by the Confederate Bible Society, 1864."

"Mary Callihan, Georgia A. Callihan.

"Sergt. J. J. Lcopard, Co. G, 23d Miss. Reg., December, Nashville, Tenn.

"'Time and tide wait for no man.'

"J. A. Ratliff, 3d Inf.; Jas. Minick, C. B. Cooper."

"Earth to earth and dust to dust,"
Calmly now the words we say;
Leaving him to sleep at rest
Till the resurrection day.
Father, in thy gracious keeping
Leave we now thy servant sleeping.

Owing to the increased demand for space in the "Last Roll" Department, it has become necessary to discontinue the publication of personal sketches of deceased comrades except in rare cases, and simply to record the place of birth and time, residence and death, and their service in the Confederate army. We cannot otherwise hope to record a half of those reported. Request is therefore made that the above be conformed to in reporting the death of comrades.

CAPT. GEORGE W. CHAMBERS.

Capt. George W. Chambers died at his home, in Bolivar, W. Va., on February 3 of heart disease, aged eighty years. He was a son of James Chambers, was born in New Market, Md., and descended from Gen. Benjamin Chambers, a Revolutionary soldier. He graduated from Marshall College, Pa., and served in the 1st Virginia Regiment as second lieutenant of Company H in the war with Mexico. Afterwards he published the Harper's Ferry Journal, and later edited the Valley Democrat of New Market, Va.

He recruited Company K at Harper's Ferry and vicinity for the Stonewall Brigade, 2d Virginia Regiment, which regiment was in thirteen battles of the Civil War. His wife was a daughter of George W. Cutshaw and sister of the late Col. Milford Cutshaw, city engineer of Richmond, Va., notice of whose death appeared in the VETERAN for February, 1908. He is survived by a widow, three daughters, and one son.

Captain Chambers was an active participant in the Brown raid; and after the death of Col. Fontaine Beecham, who was shot by Brown's son, Captain Chambers was made second Mayor of Harper's Ferry, and continued until the War between the States. His wife has a note written with a lead pencil that old John Brown wrote to him when he was acting Mayor of Harper's Ferry, Brown desiring to be allowed to cross the bridge. He was a conspicuously handsome man, over six feet in height; and even in death, in the Confederate gray uniform of captain, the rank he held in the Confederate army, he looked handsome.

Interment was made at Camp Hill on Wednesday, February 5, beside his two children. Rev. P. B. Stouffer, of the Episcopal Church, read the committal at the grave. Dr. A. C. Hopkins, of Charlestown, Captain Chambers's chaplain in Stonewall's Brigade, conducted the funeral service at the residence. The hymn "Just as I Am" was very effective. Friends from Charlestown sent beautiful calla lilies, and his son, Benjamin Lee Chambers, of the Smithsonian, brought beautiful floral tributes, which, with a tiny Confederate flag, were put on his casket and in the grave. Six members of the Stonewall Jackson Camp, Sons of Veterans of Charlestown, where he was well known and had many friends, served as pallbearers at the funeral.

A note from Mrs. Chambers reports other recent deaths in her family. Besides that of her brother, Colonel Cutshaw, mentioned above, her mother died December 25, 1906, and a sister July 3, 1906.

Captain Chambers had two brothers in the Confederate army, one in the New Orleans Blues and the other in the Maryland Line; while his cousin, Otto Hahn, was killed while serving in a Florida regiment.

MAJ. T. T. HART.

Thomas T. Hart, one of the noblest of Mississippians who in 1861 shouldered a musket in defense of their beloved South and hastened to Virginia to meet the foe, has passed "over the river" and joined the silent majority of comrades waiting on the other side.

Tom Hart, as he was fondly called by his old comrades, was born September 29, 1841; and died January 27, 1908, at Utica, Miss., near which place he had made his home since the war.

MAJ. THOMAS T. HART.

He enlisted at Crystal Springs, Miss., in Captain Davis's company, which became Company C, 16th Regiment Mississippi Volunteer Infantry, and went with that gallant regiment to the Army of Northern Virginia. Colonel Posey (afterwards General) commanded the regiment and brigade until killed in battle. This brigade, afterwards known as the Gen. Nat Harris Brigade, was noted for its bravery, and was in every large battle after the First Manassas. Major Hart served with this noted regiment until disabled for service, in 1864.

Returning home, he could not be idle, and immediately attached himself to the cavalry which operated in the counties of Hinds, Warren, Claiborne, and Copiah, and Major Hart soon became distinguished for his bravery here. When a company of Federals surprised only three of the scouts, Major Hart saw capture was certain unless he could cross Bayou

Pierre, a very treacherous stream near Port Gibson. The water was high; but Major Hart, being a splendid horseman, rode boldly into the stream and swam his steed to the opposite bank.

Not only in war but in peace Tom Hart did his whole duty. In 1866 he married one of the noted belles of Hinds County, Miss Sue M. Watson. To this marriage were born Lena (now Mrs. E. H. Tobey, of Texarkana, Tex.), Pearl, and Bessie (Mrs. C. L. Green, of Utica). After the death of his first wife, Major Hart married again in 1885.

Major Hart as a farmer had succeeded well. He was a pioneer in the raising of stock in Hinds County. In the days of reconstruction he took a leading part. When peace was restored, Major Hart lent his energies to his model farm. Major Hart took great interest in politics, but was not an office seeker. When delegates were selected to the Constitutional Convention in 1890, he accepted membership, and rendered the State valuable service.

Major Hart was a faithful member of the U. C. V., and to him must be given much of the credit for the successful work of that order, especially at Utica, where he organized the Camp. He believed in the work of that association, and no needy veteran ever applied to him for aid and went away empty-handed. He was an efficient member of the Methodist Church.

BISHOP W. W. DUNCAN.

The late Bishop William Wallace Duncan, of the M. E. Church, South, was a chaplain during the war. He was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., December 27, 1839; graduated from Wofford College, South Carolina, in 1858, and in 1859 entered the ministry of the Church, of which he was an exemplary member throughout his remaining years. For ten years after the war he was a pastor, occupying some of the best pulpits of the Church. In 1875 he became financial agent of Wofford College, his Alma Mater, in which position he continued for ten years. He attended his first General Conference in Atlanta in 1878, and in 1886 he was the first chosen of four bishops elected in that General Conference. He was in active service, therefore, as bishop for twenty years. For the past few years he had been in failing health, but continued to serve to the extent of his ability to the end. He stood high in the councils of the Church and maintained the high prestige of his ancestry.

F. M. CAMPBELL.

Mr. Francis Watkins Campbell was born in Madison County, Tenn., May 31, 1834; and entered into his rest March 16, 1908, nearly seventy-four years of age. On December 20, 1859, at Denmark, Tenn., he was happily married to Miss Mariah A. Womack, mentioned as one of "the salt of the earth," who preceded him to the better world several years ago.

When the Civil War began, Comrade Campbell joined a company from Denmark known as "The Danes." John Ingram was made captain of the company and Francis W. Campbell was made first lieutenant. The company became a part of the 6th Tennessee Regiment, commanded by Col. William Stevens. Soon he was transferred to the army in Virginia to be near his invalid wife, who had gone to stay with her mother in North Carolina. As a soldier he was fearless and courageous and faithful to his country's interest to the last.

Before the war and afterwards he was a fine type of the Southern gentleman, upright and just among his fellowmen. His strict sense of justice made him the champion of the oppressed. His conservative views and his high sense of honor brought him into great esteem.

As a professional surveyor he reached a high degree in the knowledge of his profession. As a friend he was true and loyal, and he will be missed not only in his home by his immediate family but by his remaining comrades and a host of friends in Jackson and Madison County.

[J. M. Cartmell, of Jackson, Tenn., sends the above.—Ed.]

CAPT. R. N. THOMAS.

Born in Louisa County, Va., in 1834, Comrade R. N. Thomas was reared and partially educated in that county. After receiving a good common school education and a practical business training, he enlisted in the cause of the Confederacy as first lieutenant of an infantry company, which was raised partially by his own efforts. So efficient was he in service that he was promoted to the captaincy of a Charlottesville company, taking the place of Capt. T. D. Jeffress, who was discharged on account of disability. Captain Thomas, with his company, was engaged in all the battles of the war in which Pickett's Division took part. In the battle at Hatcher's Run this gallant officer was shot through the body and left on the field as "mortally wounded." He recovered and fought again until he was captured. After the war, he resided in Richmond, where he secured and held the responsible position of police officer until two years before his death.

DILLARD.—At his home, in Oregon County, Mo., R. T. Dillard, a gallant soldier who fought under Colonel Gates in the 1st Missouri Cavalry of Cockrell's Brigade, died on the 28th of May, 1907. He was a member of Col. J. R. Woodside Camp, No. 751. Comrade Dillard was a good man, and his many friends bore testimony of his goodness as they gently laid his body to rest.

DAVID L. WALKER.

David Lawrence Walker has "received his discharge" and quietly passed beyond in answer to the last roll call on October 24, 1907. He was born seventy-six years ago in Edgefield County, S. C., and was educated in Charleston, where most of his boyhood and the days of his early manhood were spent. He answered the call to arms, going from Charleston as a "Rutledge Mounted Rifleman," and he served throughout the war with the 7th South Carolina Cavalry, Gary's Brigade. He was brave, he was true, a good soldier in all that the term implies, and left an unblemished record.

During the war he was married to Miss Adeline Harper, of Augusta, Ga., who survives him with four children, two sons (Berrien and Legare Walker, of New York City) and two daughters (Mrs. N. G. Evans, of Edgefield, S. C., who is President of the U. D. C. Chapter at that place, and Mrs. C. B. Rhodes, of Macon, Ga., at whose home he died).

Comrade Walker was quiet and reserved, but determined in disposition and of the highest moral character. To the end he was devoted to the cause of the Confederacy, and the happiest moments of his last days were spent in giving recollections of his fellow-soldiers and of his many experiences in the army and in the battles. His remains were interred in Riverside Cemetery, Macon, Ga., where the many beautiful flowers and the large concourse of friends attending showed the esteem in which he was held at that place.

W. H. LEWIS.

Waller Holliday Lewis died at his home, near Woodlake, Ky., January 30, 1908. Death was sudden—heart failure.

Mr. Lewis was the son of Rev. Calwalled Lewis, one of the widest known Baptist ministers of Kentucky. He married Miss Helm, the daughter of Gen. Benjamin Hardin Helm, and also the niece of the wife of President Abraham Lincoln. There are no children to survive Mr. Lewis. He has a brother, W. J. Lewis, who was for forty years his partner in conducting one of the most noted stock-breeding establishments in the world.

Mrs. Lewis will be remembered delightfully by many Confederates, having been with her mother, Mrs. Emily Todd Helm, "Mother of the Orphan Brigade," at many Reunions of Confederates in Kentucky and other Southern States.

LELAND M. SPEERS.

On the morning of December 24 Leland M. Speers, of Newberry, S. C., one of "Lee's boys," joined the great Commander in the world beyond. He was born in October, 1841; and when the Civil War began, he volunteered in Company B of the famous 3d South Carolina Regiment, serving throughout the war with perfect devotion to the cause. He was orderly sergeant of his company, and preserved the company roll to his death. He was in nearly every battle of his regiment, and never absent except when suffering from wounds. He was wounded eight times in battle, twice very severely. Since the war he had led an active life, diligent in business and prominent in the advancement of his community. He leaves a wife, two sons, and a daughter to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father; while many friends feel that no death there could have caused more sincere or general regret.

WESTCOTT.—Maj. Gid G. Westcott, formerly a citizen of Greensboro, Ala., died recently in Florida. He was a veteran of four years' service in the Confederate army, and for a long period was a prisoner of war at Johnson's Island.

JAMES W. POPE.

W. P. Lane Camp, of Marshall, Tex., reports the passing of Judge James W. Pope, an honored resident of that city, on the 23d of January, in his sixty-seventh year. He entered the Confederate service May 28, 1861, as a private in Company E, 1st Texas Infantry; was promoted to the rank of captain and assistant commissary of subsistence for the regiment in February, 1862; and paroled in June, 1865.

In the intervening period of more than forty years he has either ornamented the legal profession or honored the judicial ermine. He was an honor to his profession and an ornament to the community in which he lived.

JOHN M. LAUDERDALE.

John M. Lauderdale died at Glasgow, Ky., on November 26, 1907, aged seventy-three years. He enlisted in May, 1861, in the 2d Tennessee Regiment, and his company was the first to leave Hartsville, Tenn. After service of one year in Virginia, his regiment was transferred to the Army of Tennessee.

J. M. LAUDERDALE.

Comrade Lauderdale went into the battle of Shiloh with a thirty-day furlough in his pocket. After that battle, his company was transferred to Forrest's Cavalry, and served with that command to the end. Comrade Lauderdale was a devoted Christian. His wife and two daughters have the consolation of a life well spent, an honor to his name and country.

BAYNE.—Dr. L. F. Bayne died on the 3d of March, 1908, one of the oldest and best-known citizens of Selma, Ala., where most of his life had been spent. He was born at Cuthbert, Ga., in 1833, and served in the Confederate army in the defense of Selma.

A. S. PALS GROVE.

Abner S. Palsgrove died February 4, 1908, at his home, near Departee, Independence County, Ark., aged seventy years. He entered the Confederate service September 18, 1861, as a member of Company I, 7th Kentucky Infantry, which regiment was mounted in March, 1864, and assigned to Forrest's Cavalry Corps.

Comrade Palsgrove never missed a battle nor seldom a roll call, and he was faithful to the end to the traditions for which the South fought. He was captured at Selma, Ala., April 2, 1865, and paroled at Macon, Ga., the 17th following. He was an excellent soldier and a good citizen, doing his duty fearlessly in both spheres. He was not blessed with this world's goods, but was blessed with a goodness of heart and an unsullied integrity.

ABNER PALS GROVE—CENTER IN FRONT ROW.

DEATH AMONG COMRADES AT LEBANON, VA.

From Lebanon, Va., is reported the passing of the following: Capt. John H. Candler, Company B, 48th Virginia Regiment, Stonewall Brigade. Died April, 1907, at his home, near Hansonville, Va.

B. H. Reynolds, of Barnett, Va., second lieutenant Company H, 16th Virginia Cavalry, McCauslin's Brigade. Died January, 1908, aged seventy-two years.

Rev. W. N. Buckels, Chaplain McElhaney Camp, U. C. V., served in the 4th Tennessee Cavalry. Died February 5, 1908, aged seventy-five years.

Thomas Woods, of Castlewood, was a member of the Stonewall Brigade, and severely wounded by a shell at Chancellorsville by a shell. Died January, 1908.

ONSTEAD.—G. L. Onstead was born in 1822, and was reared near Corinth, Miss. He was a member of Captain Norman's company, 22d Mississippi Regiment, Colonel Lowry. After the war he removed to Arkansas and settled near Washington, where he died on March 3, 1908.

AUTREY.—Capt. George Monroe Autrey, born in Mississippi in 1842; died at Rockport, Tex., February 15, 1907. He entered the Confederate army in March, 1862, as a member of a company organized at Salem, Miss., which later became a part of the 34th Mississippi Infantry. After the battle of Corinth, this regiment was with General Bragg in his Kentucky campaign; and after returning to Tennessee, the regiment was in the brigade commanded by General Walthall. Comrade Autrey was captured at the battle of Lookout Mountain, and remained at Rock Island Prison until March, 1865, when he was exchanged at the mouth of James River. He was on furlough when Lee surrendered. He removed with his family to Texas in 1869, and had made his home in Kenedy, Karnes County, since 1895.

WATKINS.—John P. Watkins, of Kemp, Tex., a member of Judah P. Benjamin Camp, U. C. V., died on the 30th of January. In 1861, at the age of twenty-one, he enlisted in the Confederate service as a member of Captain Kyser's company, of Kaufman County, Tex., and was with Parsons's Brigade of Cavalry all during the war. It is the universal testimony of all his comrades that he made a good and faithful soldier, always at his post and ready for duty. He returned home at the close of the war and engaged in farming and stock-raising. He was married in 1866 to Miss Lorena McCollum, who died some years ago. Three sons and two daughters survive him. Comrade Watkins was a quiet, unpretentious man, a Christian, and an estimable citizen.

WILLIAM P. JOHNSON.

William P. Johnson, born in Alabama, moved to Arkansas in his early manhood. He died at his home, in Malvern, leaving a wife and daughter. He was in his sixty-fifth year. He served throughout the war as a member of Company A, 3d Arkansas Regiment, Texas Brigade, Army of Northern Virginia. He participated in all the hard battles to which that army was subjected. The old guard is fast passing "over the river to rest under the shade of the trees."

[Data from Sam H. Emerson, Malvern, Ark.]

WALLACE.—Virgil H. Wallace, of Kosciusko, Miss., entered into rest on February 12, 1908. He was among the first to enlist for his State in 1861, becoming a member of the Attalla Minutemen, 13th Mississippi Regiment, and nobly did his duty as a soldier. He was twice wounded, once at Malvern Hill, and served to the surrender. He was highly esteemed by his comrades, and in 1905 was elected Commander of William Barksdale Camp at Kosciusko.

VICTORIA VIRGINIA CLAYTON.

Mrs. Victoria Virginia Clayton, the widow of Maj. Gen. Henry D. Clayton, C. S. A., was born in Walterboro, S. C., June 10, 1832; and died in Eufaula, Ala., February 8, 1908. On Saturday, February 8, this saintly woman folded her hands and fell asleep to awake in paradise,

"Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light,
All rapture through and through
In God's most holy light."

These words were sung at her funeral in compliance with her oft-repeated wish that only "glad and happy" music be sung for her. The services were held in St. James Episcopal Church, Eufaula, of which she was a devout member. Rev. Bertram E. Brown, rector, officiated.

The flower-laden casket was borne by her seven sons and a grandson. Thus was she served in death as in life by those who loved her most tenderly and reverently. Those sons are Congressman Henry D. Clayton, Mr. Thomas N. Clayton, Mr. Jefferson Davis Clayton, and Judge Lee J. Clayton, of Eufaula; Mr. Joseph A. Clayton, of Birmingham; Mr.

Junius P. Clayton, of Ozark, Ark.; and Capt. Bertram T. Clayton, United States army, Washington City. Her surviving daughters are Mrs. Maxwell Walthone, of Savannah, Ga.; Mrs. Wiley Williams, of Columbus, Ga.; Mrs. Harry Rogers, of Muskogee, Okla.; and Miss Mary Clayton, of Eufaula—all of whom were present. Most sadly will the presence of this loving mother be missed daily in the home by those who dwelt with her and at the family reunions. She will be missed in the church, in the Bible class (of which she was teacher), in the Guild meetings, in the U. D. C. meetings, and wherever her sweet voice was wont to be heard in words of cheer and encouragement and in kind and gentle admonition. Within her home was her greatest happiness found; but her deeds of kindness and unselfish care for others were not confined to its narrow precincts; her great heart extended its charities and helpful ministrations to a wide circle, regardless of caste or color.

The life of Mrs. Clayton was one of unusually interesting and varied experiences. In her early childhood her father, Gen. John Lingard Hunter, a wealthy planter of South Carolina, in an adventurous spirit moved to the "wilds" of Alabama, settling on the banks of the Chattahoochee River at Eufaula, then an Indian "settlement," most picturesquely located. This was in the year 1835, when transportation was chiefly by private conveyance. This family in the high old-fashioned coach, with the covered wagons in which were the young and old of the slaves (the others walking), formed a unique caravan. Entering a large tract of land, General Hunter founded a home among the Indians and the few white settlers before him. Here this daughter passed her girlhood and young maidenhood. She watched the growth and progress of the village from the disappearance of the red man and the progress of civilization.

When just budding into womanhood, she married Henry D. Clayton, a young lawyer of Clayton, a neighboring town. Here the fair young bride found a home of beauty, comfort, and plenty awaiting her. The years passed most happily. Bright and interesting children were born unto them, prosperity was theirs, and all the world seemed fair until the clouds of war overshadowed our fair Southland and our beautiful country became the scene of fraternal strife.

When the "call to arms" rang out, Mr. Clayton was among the first to respond. As colonel of the 1st Alabama Regiment he was mustered into the Confederate service. Mrs. Clayton took her stand among the patriotic women of the South, espousing its cause with heart and soul, rising nobly to meet every emergency in the changed conditions. It was then that the strength and beauty of her character developed into the full and perfect bloom. Realizing that the responsibilities hitherto shared by her husband must then be borne alone, she grasped the reins of government of home and plantation with a firm and unshirking hand, guiding in the grooves of his judicious and systematic management, only exercising greater skill and ingenuity as the additional needs of the soldiers in the field and the indigent families in her midst demanded of her resources. The hum of the spinning wheel and the swish of the shuttle became familiar sounds in the "white house" and cabins of the "Clayton place."

Many a garment fashioned by her deft and willing fingers, and boxes of edibles testifying to her housewifely skill, protected from cold and appeased the hunger of the boys in gray. And her doors were opened to convalescing soldiers from the hospital in Eufaula, taking them into her family and serving them with a mother's gentle care. Several times she visited her husband in camp when in quarters at Pensacola, Chattanooga, and Dalton. When he was wounded in the battle of Murfreesboro, she hastened to him, leaving her little children with her sister, Mrs. Bertram Hoole, and the care of the plantation to the faithful foreman, "Uncle Joe." Through all the years of the war how bravely and womanly did she meet all trials! how she was sustained by her perfect trust that the issue was with God and that he ruleth all things well!

"How her love in streams of blessings

Wore its channels deep and wide,
Bore the fortunes of the battle
On its broad and surging tide!

How her faith that trusted ever
Rested on her Soldier's shield,
Watched above the bloody carnage
And upon the tented field!"

When the vicissitudes of war were over and the white dove of peace brooded once more over our land, her husband returned with military honors upon his brow. He had twice been promoted for gallant charges—first to brigadier, then to major general. She was happy as of yore.

Resuming their lives, prosperity and success were again granted them. Civic honors were bestowed upon him. He was elected judge of the circuit; then President of the State University, at Tuscaloosa, which position he occupied at the time of his death. Those few more years of united happiness, then came the decree that he should cross the river "to rest in the shade" with his comrade at arms.

The parting wrung her heartstrings to their utmost tension. She had hoped that they would be permitted to wend their way together through the winter's lowlands until they reached an equal journey's end.

Thankful for the many blessings left her, she continued an inspiration to all who knew and loved her. The memory of her beautiful Christian life will dwell with her children and many grandchildren as an inheritance far beyond the worth of gold.

SPENCER.—Jefferson Columbus Spencer, born September 13, 1842, in Chester County, Miss., and removed to Texas when but nine years of age; died at his home, in Thornton, Tex., on January 30, 1908. He enlisted for the Confederacy in 1861, his first service being at Galveston. Later he was with Waul's Texas Legion, and was surrendered under General Pemberton at Vicksburg after faithful and honorable service.

MRS. VICTORIA VIRGINIA CLAYTON.

JUDGE JOHN W. CHILDRESS.

John W. Childress was a native of Rutherford County, Tenn., a member of one of the prominent families of the State. Of several sons, he was given his father's name. (His father was a brother of Mrs. James K. Polk). He was educated at the Davis Military School, in Murfreesboro, and in the Nashville Military College. In the latter institution he was a student when the war broke out. With his military training he was assigned to duty as drillmaster of new troops at Bowling Green, Ky. He was taken prisoner at Fort Donelson and sent to Johnson's Island. In the fall of 1862 he was exchanged and reentered the Confederate army as adjutant of the 50th Tennessee. He continued in that capacity till the close, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro, N. C.

Soon after the war he traveled through Europe, Egypt, and Palestine. On his return he studied law with the noted firm of Ridley & Avent, which later became Avent & Childress.

Judge Childress moved to Nashville and engaged in the practice of law. He was President and Business Manager of the Nashville American, and in many other capacities was ever a faithful public servant. He took an active interest in politics, being one of the advisers of the Democratic leaders through many administrations. His interest was maintained until he took his seat upon the bench, and his suggestions played a part in many of the political battles of Tennessee. He successfully engaged in the campaign of Gen. Jno. C. Brown, his brother-in-law, for Governor.

JUDGE JOHN W. CHILDRESS.

Judge Childress was an alternate delegate from the State at large in the second Cleveland nomination. The election of Cleveland placed him as assistant in the District Attorney's office. His most notable legal connection was with the firm of Colyar, Marks & Childress, the esteemed senior member of which, Col. A. S. Colyar, died last December. Mr. Colyar served in the Confederate Congress, Colonel Marks became Governor of Tennessee, and Captain Childress declined an appointment to the United States Senate.

In 1896 Gov. Peter Turney appointed Judge Childress to the circuit bench to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Claude Waller, who resigned. He was elected at the next general election, and in 1902 was elected again. Of his judicial ability, Chief Justice W. D. Beard said: "Judge Childress was a man of splendid equipoise, with a sense of justice that was very superior. Among the circuit judges of the State he ranked with the foremost. He always sought the merits of the case and did his best to see that exact justice was administered."

He was married December 13, 1870, to Miss Mary Lyon, of Columbus, Miss. (daughter of Rev. Dr. Jas. A. Lyon, of the Presbyterian Church), and he was an active elder for several years in the Moore Memorial Church, Nashville. A. L. Childress, of Nashville, John W. Childress, Jr., of Washington, D. C., and Avent Childress, of New York, are three excellent sons of this union.

Judge Childress was the first to suggest the splendid monument to President Jefferson Davis erected in Richmond.

The editor of the VETERAN pays special individual tribute to Judge Childress. The closest personal friendship existed between the two for many years. It will be of interest to state that Judge Childress's action in his behalf was the cause of the VETERAN having been launched. While at the head of the movement to erect the monument to President Davis, the committee met in Atlanta and decided to employ an agent to travel through the South in the interest of the monument, and Mr. Cunningham was chosen without his knowledge upon the solicitation of Captain Childress. No bond had been given, yet many sums of money were remitted to him, and the CONFEDERATE VETERAN—a mere bantling at first—was launched for the special purpose of giving publicity to all sums received.

During the many prolonged trials of suit against the VETERAN for libel—familiar to many of its older subscribers—one phase of the case was brought before Judge Childress. A dozen or so lawyers were present with books and briefs to make argument, when Judge Childress said to them: "I should have told you earlier, perhaps. While I am not technically incompetent, my relations to Mr. Cunningham have been such for twenty-five years that it would not be suitable for me to try this case."

As a political counselor, Judge Childress was amazingly astute. He could foretell with marvelous accuracy the day before an election, for instance, what would occur on the morrow; and he had the rare gift, by his courtesy and dignity of manner, of maintaining not only the respect but the cordial good will of those equally ardent on the other side.

His judgment did not err in his own case of illness. When he had rallied from the very jaws of death and his friends were hopefully animated and he seemed cheerful, yet in response to congratulatory expressions of hope in his recovery he dispelled their fond anticipations.

SMITH.—Thomas J. Smith, born in Henry County, Ala., in 1835, enlisted in the artillery service C. S. A. in June, 1862, and served as a member of Kolb's Battery, Williams's Battalion, Army of Tennessee, and was promoted for gallantry at the battle of Missionary Ridge. He served to the end, surrendering at Augusta, Ga., in April, 1865.

COL. GEORGE E. PURVIS.

Dr. P. Sims, of Chattanooga, Tenn., rarely writes for the public, but through the Times he pays tribute to Comrade George E. Purvis, who was born in McMinnville, Tenn., in 1836 and died at Pulaski, Va., April 3, 1908:

"With only a meager country school education, he began life as a mechanic—a carpenter's apprentice—while yet a boy. As he grew to manhood he became ambitious for a broader career, and finally secured an opening as apprentice in a printing office in Winchester. From this beginning he rose, by study and application, to the partial ownership and control of several country newspapers.

"Again his ambition led him to wider fields, and he was able to secure a foothold in Nashville, the metropolis as well as the capital of his native State. The beginning of the war found him but recently established there.

"He enlisted as a private in one of the first Confederate regiments to be formed in Tennessee, and he served with gallantry and distinction until the close of the war.

"He returned from the war on foot, with his worldly possessions strapped upon his back. Without kindred or friends to aid him, he again began life in Nashville so successfully that he was shortly able, in partnership with Henry Watterson and Albert Roberts, to found the newspaper which is the Nashville American of to-day. From the beginning this partnership was a most successful one; and after its dissolution, Colonel Purvis continued for many years to occupy a position of enviable prominence as a publisher, printer, an early owner of the business now conducted by Marshall & Bruce, and as an extensive owner of real estate in Nashville. In his later years his own misfortunes and those of his friends swept away most of his property and forced him to again take up the struggle of life at a time when most people are laying it aside.

"But it was not in his business career that Colonel Purvis was at his best. A man of peculiar brightness of intellect and charm of manner, it was as a journalist that he won the enduring regard of all who knew him. He was a striking example of what is possible to a vigorous intellect and an open heart. * * * But it was in the social circle and among his intimates that the genius that was in him shone forth. Fearless and fair, with a gentle humor and a mind which grasped, assayed, and expressed the philosophy of humanity's many-sided existence, to know him was a privilege, to listen to him a joy.

"Always the potent champion of 'the under dog,' ever the untiring foe of sophistry and sham, with the wit to perceive and the courage to attack that host of meannesses which lurk behind a fair front of outward virtue, the admiration and the love of those who knew him best went hand in hand to do him homage. Above and illuminating every other quality of this departed friend was his geniality. He brought the sunshine with him. Contemptuous of all malign influence, sanguine of all good, his was an optimism that disdained defeat and ever bore you upward with its infectious zeal.

"Too many of us as the years come and our heads whiten lapse into resignation, if not despair. But to Colonel Purvis the repulse of to-day was but the overture to the victory of to-morrow; and to the last he faced those political evils with which his lifetime was a battle with all the exultant ardor his young manhood gave to the 'lost cause' of the sixties.

"But he has lived his life. We should rejoice that he lived so long. In nature's course his time had come, the four seasons were completed in him. The spring should never come again. He had taken life's seven steps; the measure of his years was full. When the day is done, when the work of a life is finished, when the gold of evening meets the dusk of a night, 'neath the silent stars the tired laborer should fall asleep.

"A Cræsus of kindness, he was a prodigal of good cheer.

COL. GEORGE E. PURVIS.

The shadows lifted as he came; they are drawing closer to many of us as he leaves. It will not be given to the little circle which his going shattered to see his like again. Farewell, brave, kindly, cheery soul, for well you must fare if virtue is eternal and truth be not a lie."

HUGH A. WILKERSON.

Hugh A. Wilkerson was a member of Company H, 10th Regiment of Mississippi Volunteers, Capt. Tom I. Sharp's company, Tucker's (then Jake Sharp's) Brigade, Cheatham's Division, Leonidas Polk's Corps, of the Army of Tennessee. He was in the battles of Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Ga., Atlanta, New Hope Church, Jonesboro, Ga., and many smaller battles and skirmishes. He was wounded twice, the last time at Jonesboro. He never recovered from the effects of this last wound, and suffered from it to the time of his death. He was a native of Mississippi, but moved to Texas soon after the close of the war. He died at his home, near Reily Springs, March 11, 1908.

H. H. STEVENS.

At his home, in Byhalia, Miss., March 23, 1908, H. H. Stevens passed from earth's suffering to eternal rest. He was born near Raleigh, N. C., June 20, 1839. He answered his country's call early in 1861, serving in the 17th Mississippi, Company I, in General Lee's army. Exposure in camp brought on sickness and paralysis, from which he suffered until he was called to his reward. He was a patient Christian sufferer, trusting only in Jesus. His last poem, "The Veteran's Cross of Honor," was written in October, 1907. A short while before he died he asked his wife to send the poem to the CONFEDERATE VETERAN as a tribute to the Daughter who originated the cross and design.

JOHN HOLBROOK ESTILL.

Col. J. H. Estill, of Georgia, died several months ago, and a tribute to him has been delayed because of hoping to give a more extended notice than was practicable at the time. For more than a quarter of a century there had been ties of friendship whereby extended tribute to his memory in these columns was desired.

Colonel Estill was born in Charleston, S. C., October 28, 1840. He was one of a family of eleven children, and at eleven years of age he went to work in his father's printing office. Later he went to school, but at the age of sixteen he began a regular apprenticeship with Walker, Evans & Cogswell, Charleston. Three years later he returned to Savannah, Ga., whence he had gone as a mere lad, and he soon became part owner of the Evening Express.

In 1859 young Estill joined the Oglethorpe Light Infantry, and served with it in the 1st Georgia Regiment. In 1861 he went to the front in Virginia. From the effect of a severe wound he was discharged from the service, but later he served in Sereven's Battalion against Sherman's march through Georgia and was taken prisoner in Savannah.

He always took an active interest in military affairs, and in 1895 he was placed in the retired list of State volunteers as lieutenant colonel. He was also made an honorary member of several military organizations.

In the newspaper world Colonel Estill became evidently the most successful and largest individual publisher in the South.

COL. J. H. ESTILL.

He was President of the Georgia Press Association for twenty years. He was interested in and promoter of many large business enterprises. He was a high Mason and a prominent Churchman. For many years prior to his death his special pride was in behalf of the Bethesda Orphanage. He was President of its Governing Board for more than a quarter of a century, and left to it a liberal benefaction.

ANDERSON.—A. F. Anderson was born in Wilson County, Tenn.; and died at Vernon, Tex., on February 18, 1908. He enlisted and served with Company F, 25th Tennessee Infantry; was a member of Camp Cabell, U. C. V., at Vernon.

COMRADES' TRIBUTE TO SPENCER EAKIN.

Spencer Eakin was born in Shelbyville, Tenn., in June, 1844; and died there November 28, 1907.

On the 4th of November, 1861, he enlisted as a volunteer in the Confederate army, and was a member of Company F, of the 41st Regiment of Infantry. He was captured at Fort Donelson on February 16, 1862, and remained a prisoner of war until the following September, when he was exchanged. After the exchange and in the reorganization of his command, he was elected a lieutenant, and served in this capacity, often commanding his company in battle, until in 1864, when he was detached from his command and assigned to the duty of a scout. As a scout he did valuable and conspicuous service, especially on General Hood's advance into Tennessee.

He was one of the best soldiers of the Confederacy, one who possessed the confidence of his superiors and the respect of those who were under him. At all times he was found at his post. He never shirked a duty or fled a field. He was loved by all his comrades, who recognized his great worth at all times and in all places.

Soon after the conflict of war was ended he became an employe of the Nashville, Chattanooga, and St. Louis Railway, and so continued for forty years, until his death, rising from a humble place to the responsible position of General Traffic Manager.

From whatever standpoint the life and character of Comrade Eakin is viewed, it elicits admiration. Whether on the tented field or in the wild carnage of battle, on the toilsome march or the hazardous life of a scout, he was at all times the same loyal and devoted man, soldier, and patriot. By breeding, rearing, and nature he was a gentleman, high-toned and refined. He was a manly man, a loyal friend, a stainless citizen. He was a dutiful son, a devoted husband, an indulgent and loving father.

Many eyes grew dim with tears at the news, "Spencer Eakin is dead." We loved him living, we mourn him dead, and God grant that in that land that is fairer than day we may meet and greet him again!

Resolved, That this (William Frierson) Camp tender to his family and relatives our deepest sympathy in this their great loss and pray God to comfort them in this time of uncontrollable grief.

Committee: Jo B. Erwin, Jo A. Thompson, E. T. Mallard, John M. Hastings, E. Shapard.

E. SHAPARD, Commander;

JOHN F. JOHNSON, Adjutant.

There is a fine picture of Spencer Eakin on page 14 of the January VETERAN, together with a personal tribute by the editor. Not enough was said in that notice—nor in the above. It will ever be a pleasure to join these comrades and personal friends in honoring the memory of Spencer Eakin.

ALLEYN.—Martin Alleyn, a prominent citizen of New Orleans, where he was born in 1843, died in that city in February, 1908. He enlisted promptly at the outbreak of the war, and served with distinction in the Army of Tennessee as one of the Armory Guard, Sumpter's Regiment.

SNEAD.—After a long period of suffering, Robert Snead has passed into rest. He was a Missouri soldier under Price, and was true to the end. His last request was to be buried by his comrades and for a flag of the Confederacy to be placed over his grave.

LIEUT. J. B. NANCE.

John B. Nance was born in Bedford County, Tenn., December 23, 1831; and his body was laid to rest on April 11, 1908. He lived in that vicinity all of his life, except while serving in the Confederate army, and shared the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

John Nance was a plain farmer, tall, erect, and strong, and he joined his neighbors as a volunteer in the Confederate army. They elected him corporal in Company B, 41st Tennessee Infantry.

The command was of the Fort Donelson prisoners and sent to Camp Morton, where for weeks their hunger was such that the entire day's ration was devoured immediately. All were in ill humor, and the sergeant in charge became disgusted with the complaints, and Corporal Nance was chosen to that unpleasant service. He would not be intimidated; and when a fellow-prisoner complained, he would tell him to "take that or nothing." So heroic and absolutely impartial was he that soon he became a general favorite, a distinction that he ever maintained. When the regiment was exchanged, he was chosen lieutenant, and commanded the company much of the time afterwards. In every capacity of service he was a manly man; and, while ever at his post of duty, he was especially conspicuous in battle, and diligent in service as an officer in seeing that every man kept in his place.

He was an unusual person. His modesty made him in a sense timid, and his reticence prevented an extensive acquaintance. He was, however, ruggedly sincere, and the performance of duty was the rule of his life. A few years after the war Comrade Nance became a zealous member of the Methodist Church, and was faithful to the end.

JOHN B. NANCE.

He was twice married—first to a Miss Word, whose death occurred in a few years, leaving to him a son, William. By another marriage, to Miss Kate Snell, there were four children, all of whom survive: one son, Vance, and three daughters, Emma, Mary, and Georgia (Mary is Mrs. Thomas). The devotion of his family, although he had become very infirm, attested how faithfully he had performed his duties as husband and father.

DR. J. ROBINSON BUIST.

Another honored and faithful veteran should have had place in this Last Roll ere this.

Dr. J. R. Buist was born in Charleston in 1834. He graduated from the South Carolina Medical College at the age of twenty years. He received a diploma from the University of New York in 1857, after which he served a year in Bellevue Hospital and six months in the University of Edinburgh. He then attended hospitals in London, and completed his medical education in Paris.

Dr. Buist came to Nashville in 1859, and in the beginning of the war he enlisted with the Rock City Guards, 1st Tennessee Infantry. He served in Western Virginia under General Lee, and later was in the battle of Shiloh. He was made surgeon of the 14th Tennessee Infantry, and in August, 1862, was made brigade surgeon under General Bragg—Maney's Brigade. He was made a prisoner at Perryville and again at Nashville, but was released in time to surrender again with his command in North Carolina.

After the war Dr. Buist returned to Nashville and resumed the practice of medicine. He was remarkably successful as physician and surgeon. In Confederate matters he was ever zealous. At the last Reunion in Nashville Dr. Buist had charge of the parade, and managed it extraordinarily well. His fatal illness soon followed.

Dr. Buist was ever an honor to South Carolina; and, while loyal to his adopted Tennessee, he was ever proud of his native State of the Palmetto.

DR. J. M. JONES.

Dr. John M. Jones was born July 3, 1846, in Weakley County, Tenn., and entered the Confederate army at the very incipency of the war in Company H, Forrest's old regiment, participating in the battles and campaigns of that command, which were many, and surrendered at Gainesville, Ala., May 11, 1865. He was a member of Tom Hindman Camp, U. C. V., Newport, Ark. He had lived at Newport for thirty-one years, where he practiced medicine successfully the entire time, dying February 13, 1908, aged sixty-two years—an excellent soldier and an eminent physician.

DR. J. M. JONES.

Dr. Jones survived his wife, who was Miss Callie Patterson of Weakley County, Tenn., but five days, she having been an invalid for ten years.

DEATHS AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

The names of the deceased soldiers, good citizens, and loyal members are: W. B. Janney, Semple Battery, died January 17, 1907; J. O. Andrew, Company A, Cobb's Legion, Georgia, died April 27, 1907; W. P. Cutts, Company C, 29th Alabama Infantry, died May 20, 1907; A. St. Clair Tennille, 9th Georgia Cavalry, died July 4, 1907; J. L. Bryan, Company I, 3d Alabama Infantry, died 1907; C. A. Allen, 51st Alabama Mounted, died September 21, 1907; B. C. Tarver, Captain Company A, 1st Alabama Cavalry, died October 14, 1907; Clay Hall, died October 23, 1907; C. Ludman, died November 20, 1907; John D. Carter, died December 28, 1907; Judge J. T. Cook; and Maj. V. M. Elnore.

WARREN.—James H. Warren, who was orderly sergeant of Company D, 22d Mississippi Regiment, Lowrey's Brigade, died, at his home, in Corinth, Miss., recently. He went through the war, under Gen. Joseph E. Johnston much of the time, and faithfully performed the duties of a soldier.

SLAPPEY.—Private Anson Ball Slappey died at Marshallville, Ga., January 25, 1908, aged sixty-two years. He left the Military School at Marietta, Ga., to enter the Confederate army in Company K, 8th Georgia Cavalry, to the end.

DR. HARRY B. STONE.

A shock to many friends and a crushing sorrow to Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, of Galveston, Tex., President of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was the death of her son, Dr. H. B. Stone, which occurred on Governor's Island, N. Y., of pneumonia, before the news of his illness had been received by his mother in Galveston.

Harry B. Stone was born in Liberty, Tex., April 30, 1872, but grew to early manhood in Galveston. When but twelve years of age he attended the Bingham Military School at Asheville, N. C., and afterwards was prepared for college at the school of Mr. Abbott at Bellevue, Va. He then entered Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, from which he went to the Medical Department of the University of Philadelphia, later continuing his study of medicine at the University of Virginia. He took his degree after the prescribed course at the Medical College of the University of Texas, graduating in 1899. He also spent a year at the Polyclinic School of New York City, which was founded by Dr. John A. Wyeth, giving special study to the diseases of children. He first opened an office at Macon, Ga., and pursued general practice until entering the hospital corps of the United States army in 1901. He was assigned to duty in the Philippines for three years, after which he returned to Galveston and entered into general practice there. Shortly after his return he was appointed by the Board of City Commissioners as quarantine officer, with headquarters at Virginia Point, to guard the city of Galveston against the entrance of yellow fever from the then infected cities of Mobile, New Orleans, and others. He was there for several months, then resumed his general practice in Galveston. Last spring he returned to New York City and entered the Eye and Ear Infirmary for special study. After finishing his course, he found his inclination toward army life still strong, and he reenlisted in the hospital corps, and after a few weeks in the service was taken with a fatal case of pneumonia.

His grandfather, Edward Thomas Branch, was one of the founders of the republic of Texas, and under that republic was a member of Congress and one of the judges constituting its Supreme Court. He also drew up the first homestead law. His father, Henry Clay Stone, was for many years a member of the well-known firm in Galveston of Skinner & Stone.

The burial of Dr. Stone was at Liberty, the place of his birth, on the 30th of March, attended by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances. Deep sympathy was manifested for the bereaved mother, who had so tenderly watched this son grow into manhood, so finely equipped for life's battle, and upon whose strong arm she had hoped to lean in declining years. Many thousands of Daughters throughout the South will feel poignant sorrow and sympathy for Mrs. Stone in the loss of this only son.

In passing through Houston for the burial place at Liberty, Tex., on March 30 the funeral cortège was met by various patriotic and literary clubs, who showed deep sympathy for Mrs. Stone in the loss of her only child. A delegation from the R. E. Lee Chapter met her to express their sincere sympathy. The following ladies were detailed to speak for the Chapter: Mrs. M. E. Bryan (President), Mesdames Seabrook Sydnor, T. R. Franklin, Philip H. Fall, R. E. Luhn, T. L. Dunn, J. F. Burton, R. E. Patterson.

The Daughters of the Republic, San Jacinto Chapter, and others sent many beautiful floral tributes, and Mrs. Marie Bennet Burwitz paid beautiful tribute to Mrs. Stone as a member and officer of the Chapter.

A WORTHY AND SUCCESSFUL CAMP OF JUNIOR SONS OF VETERANS—THE S. A. CUNNINGHAM.

FROM REPORT OF LOUIE KIRBY-PARRISH, COMMANDER.

To the Officers and Members of S. A. Cunningham Camp.

Comrades and Friends: Just two years ago, March 10, 1906, our Camp, No. 1, Junior Sons of Confederate Veterans, was organized by Mrs. L. Kirby-Parrish, our founder, of Nashville Chapter, No. 1, with Dabney Minor as Commander. At the second meeting, two weeks later, the Camp, by unanimous vote, was named in honor of Mr. S. A. Cunningham, who was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy and is the editor of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN.

Since our official term is limited to one year, you honored me by electing me your Commander last March, 1907, for which I thank you. The year has indeed been a pleasant one, for each member of the Camp has shown me greatest respect and given me loyal aid in every undertaking.

Within the year the membership has grown to fifty worthy descendants of the valiant men who wore the gray.

My regret is that we could not have accomplished more for our veterans, since we are banded together to preserve the beautiful memories which we inherit and to care for and aid the veterans, their wives, widows, and children. So let us realize more and more fully our privilege in doing for them everything within our power while they are with us. We cannot possibly estimate the full importance of our organization as yet, for with its historical and benevolent purposes it is sure to grow and succeed from year to year.

We have upon memorial occasions to Gen. R. E. Lee, Sam Davis, Gen. William B. Bate, and on Confederate Decoration Day, acted as escorts and ushers in our uniforms of gray and placed designs of flowers upon the graves.

From our Advisory Council, composed of Mr. S. A. Cunningham, Capt. M. S. Cockrill, Capt. Spencer Eakin, Ex-Gov. James D. Porter, Capt. Thomas Gibson, and Gen. Harvey H. Hannah, we have lost one of our truest friends and one of our most capable advisers—Capt. Spencer Eakin—and we greatly deplore his death. He was never too busy to give ear to our questions, and was ever ready to lend us a helping hand. He was always most cordial in inviting us to attend the meetings of Company B of Veterans, that we might be instructed in the best military usage and imbibe more of the spirit actuating our honored veterans.

COCKRILL LIGHT GUARDS.

Our military company, "The Cockrill Light Guards" (named in honor of our esteemed Capt. M. S. Cockrill), composed of members of the Camp, has continued to strengthen in every way, and its members have acquired greater skill and efficiency in their training as soldiers under their captain, Wendell H. Levine. In a competitive drill with the older companies of the city ours shared the honors for excellence.

At the reception of President Roosevelt here in October our company was in line as a part of his escort to the Hermitage, and received many compliments for our soldierly bearing. During the year we have held weekly drills at the armory, and have occasionally given special drills for our friends. The company is armed with forty Remington rifles, obtained within the last year and paid for out of the proceeds of a lawn festival, with Captain Cockrill's generous aid. The members have become quite expert in the manual of arms, which is always an attractive feature of the drill. It is hoped the company will be newly uniformed in time to be present at the Reunion in Birmingham in June.

The meetings of the Camp have been frequently honored by the attendance of Mr. Cunningham, our committee from Company B, composed of Lieutenant Maney, Mr. Binkley, and Mr. Gee, and other veteran friends, who have shown much interest in the work in which we are engaged.

The Camp observed the anniversary of General Lee's birth on the 18th of January at the home of the Commander, with a very appropriate programme. The two chief addresses were delivered by Rev. Littleton Hubbard and Mr. Jesse Pittman, with other exercises by members of the Camp and guests. The boys also assisted as escorts and ushers at the First Presbyterian Church in Gen. R. E. Lee's honor.

Three valuable works have been presented to the Camp as a start toward its library: "History of the Twentieth Cen-nessee Infantry Regiment, C. S. A.," by Mrs. W. J. McMurray, widow of our beloved Dr. McMurray, and the two volumes of Jefferson Davis's "Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," presented by Dr. J. C. Steger, one of our loyal honorary members. And to each individual member of the Camp Mr. Cunningham has presented a copy of Dr. H. M. Fields's "Bright Skies and Dark Shadows." All of these we prize most highly, and shall preserve them with the utmost care. All are appropriately inscribed.

Within the last two months we have organized an orchestra, which is doing excellent work under Professor Hartsell's able directorship. This will prove a great addition to the other means of entertainment employed by members of the GROUP 2 OF FIRST DIVISION.

Camp for charitable and other objects. The next entertainment in view is a "Mock Trial" in black faces to be given early in May in combination with the military drill and orchestra. We hope this will prove a great success, as the proceeds are to be devoted to needed improvements at the Soldiers' Home.

Again I thank you for the confidence and support you have given me, and pledge my cordial efforts for the welfare of the Camp in the future as in the past.

L. KIRBY-PARRISH, Commander.

At the annual election in March, 1908, Edwin H. Gaines, Jr., was chosen Commander with Jesse Pittman and Ossie Goodloe as Lieutenant Commanders; and under their leadership the boys are moving forward successfully in the good work which they have undertaken.

Division No. 2 of the Camp, with ages ranging from nine to fifteen years, is doing a good work. It is composed of bright, enthusiastic boys with a fine staff of officers—John W. Fite as Commander. They have formed a drum and bugle corps, and will make their first public appearance at the entertainment in May, assisting Division No. 1.

The account of this organization is given with special gratitude because of the name of the Camp. Moreover, it is given to show what can be done where there is heart and determination.

This organization is the result of one woman's work—that of Mrs. Louie Kirby-Parrish. Her discouragements would have induced the abandonment by many even courageous women; but she recuperated from every discouraging condition, and now is happy in the achievement.

The First Division has about fifty members—the Coekrill Guards—and the Drum Corps are members of the Camp. The Second Division, recently organized, has about twenty members, and promises to rival the First in its usefulness.

JEFFERSON DAVIS TO MISSISSIPPIANS.

J. N. Powers, State Superintendent of Education for Mississippi, concludes an address to the teachers of that State:

"The leader of our cause was the peerless Jefferson Davis. In grateful remembrance of his wise statesmanship, his faithful leadership, his earnest patriotism, and above all his vicarious sufferings, let every teacher observe a part of one day before the schools close in commemorating the centennial birthday of this illustrious man.

"The Confederate soldiers are passing away in groups. Let us not forget that when we celebrate the birthday of their chieftain—our President—we pay grateful tribute to the Confederate soldier and his cause."

"THE ARTILLERY" OF FORREST'S CAVALRY," PROJECTED HISTORY BY CAPT. J. W. MORTON.

The history of the organization of the artillery branch of Forrest's Cavalry is being prepared and will be issued in the early fall by Capt. John W. Morton, the present Secretary of the State of Tennessee, who as chief of artillery under the wonderful leader directed its movements in all of his campaigns. Daily close association with Lieut. Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest gave Captain Morton an insight into the motives and methods of this astonishing natural genius which fits him peculiarly for writing of them with complete sympathy and thorough understanding. It is a book which all of the "old boys" will enjoy, as it contains incidents hitherto unpublished and anecdotes of fellow-soldiers.

CAPT. JOHN W. MORTON.

John R. Tolar writes from Fayetteville, N. C., that he was orderly for the 35th Tennessee's last command, Maj. George A. Deakins. When they went into Tennessee with Hood, one of the officers, Captain Mitchell, left his comrades near Nashville to pay a flying visit to his family, and never returned. It was reported that he was shot by Stokes's "Home Guards."

"ASHBY, THE CENTAUR OF THE SOUTH."

The new book by Clarence Thomas under the above title has excited much interest throughout Virginia and other Southern States. General Ashby, a type of Southern chivalry, a heroic soldier, and a magnificent horseman, was one of the most romantic characters of the War between the States, and Mr. Thomas pictures him in such a clear light that he no longer seems a memory, but a living, breathing personality.

The book is written in an easy, flowing style which allows the facts to grip the memory and fascinate the imagination. The introduction of the book is by Dr. J. William Jones, one of the highest Confederate authorities now living, and he says of the work: "I have read with deep interest this sketch of the career of Ashby, and commend it as a valuable contribution to our Confederate history. He pictures with graphic pen the life of this valiant knight, brings out the salient points of his conduct as a soldier, and shows that he was not merely a brilliant partisan, but a man who was able to command armies and in every way worthy to be 'Jackson's Right Arm' and his probable successor in the Valley District. He produces historic matter, official and personal, relating to Ashby never before published."

The author's description of home life in Virginia before the war is like a dream of yesterday. The work defends with exhaustive research and rare ability the injustice done one of the greatest figures of the Southern cause.

Published by the Bell Book & Stationery Company, Richmond, Va. Cloth-bound, $2; postage, 10 cents.

"ALTARS OF SACRIFICE."

A poetic contribution to the literature intended as a vindication of the South in the sixties has been made by M. M. Teagar, of Flemingsburg, Ky., in his "Altars of Sacrifice." This little book is dedicated "To the brave, heroic spirits who gave their lives in sacrifice upon the altar of their country and their survivors; to the mothers, wives, and daughters whose patient fortitude and heroic endurance gave inspiration to patriotic devotion; and to the Sons and Daughters of the Confederacy, whose lives are devoted to the vindication of their cause as weighed in the scales of justice, affirmed by the impartial verdict of mankind, sanctified on the altars of faith, and amply verified by the truth of history." The dedication is an index to the contents, which approach the classic in style of expression. The mechanical features of the book are good, the binding being of gray cloth with gold lettering. Printed by the Hermitage Press, of Richmond, Va. Price, $1.25, postpaid.

ROBERT E. LEE.

A series of American Crisis Biographies, "constituting a complete and comprehensive history of the great American sectional struggle in the form of readable and instructive biographies," has been greatly enriched by the addition of a "Life of Robert E. Lee," written by Philip Alexander Bruce, LL.D., late Corresponding Secretary of the Virginia Historical Society and author of "The Economic History of Virginia in the Seventeenth Century." There has been so much written about our General Lee that it would seem impossible to find anything further that would add to the history of that great man, yet Dr. Bruce has given us a "Life" that will prove of great value to our literature in its originality of treatment and depth of sentiment. General Lee's early life and first military experience, his loyalty to Virginia, his conduct as a commander in the Confederate war, his military genius, his life after the war and his general character—all are touched upon most interestingly and each subject treated with a knowledge gained through the most reliable authorities. Many of the most important engagements of the Army of Northern Virginia have impartial treatment by this vigorous pen, which yet finds naught to criticise save kindness of heart where strength of will should have prevailed.

The book is neatly bound in cloth, with portrait of General Lee as frontispiece. Published by George W. Jacobs & Co., Philadelphia. Price, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

THE TRUE STORY OF ANDERSONVILLE PRISON.

That the refutation of charges made against the commandant of a Southern prison should come from among those who were there confined is something new in the annals of the time, yet this has been done by a prisoner under Major Wirz at Andersonville, that arch fiend in the estimation of the North. When we remember that his life was sacrificed on the testimony of other prisoners, we cannot but admire the spirit which animated the writing of this "True Story of Andersonville" by one who experienced the horrors of the place. James Madison Page, who was second lieutenant of the 6th Michigan Cavalry, in collaboration with M. J. Haley, has given a most interesting account of his prison life during the war, having been a prisoner at five places in the South from September 21, 1863, to November 21, 1864, seven months of which time he was at Andersonville, where he knew Major Wirz intimately.

The book is divided into two parts—"Andersonville: The Prison and the Keeper" and "Major Wirz: The Man and His Trial"—and the author has proved by his own knowledge of conditions that Major Wirz was unjustly held responsible for the hardships and mortality at Andersonville, and that "Secretary Stanton, rather than Major Wirz, should have been held responsible for the thirteen thousand graves at Andersonville." It is a soldier's vindication of a man who has been terribly wronged and traduced. The style of the narrative is attractive and the originality of expression pleasing.

Published by the Neale Publishing Company, Washington and New York. Cloth-bound, $2.14, postpaid.

ABOUT "LEE AND HIS CAUSE."

This attractive book with its taking title is meeting with praise. Capt. Leeland Hathaway, of Winchester, Ky., wrote a letter to Dr. Deering, in which he stated:

"When you talk or write about the war or any thing or person connected with it, I am ready to indorse all you say with my eyes shut. And you have passed beyond even yourself in this little volume. It ought to be made a text-book in all the schools and a regular study in all Southern homes.

"It is concrete and clear in matter and manner. It is concise and terse and at the same time full and strong in sentiment and expression. It carries its lessons with the force of the teacher and the grace and ease of the practical advocate. Every subject touched is illuminated and every argument clinched like a syllogism. O, if every man, woman, and child in our dear South could read and reread, study and grasp this little, big book as we would have them do, then, my dear boy, we need have no fear that those who come after us will believe that we were traitors and conspirators!"

J. M. Frazer, of 1209 South Street, Nashville, Tenn., who served in Company C, 6th Arkansas Infantry, hopes to meet any of his comrades at the Birmingham Reunion.

CONFEDERATE CIRCLE, ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

FUNDS RAISED BY CONFEDERATE MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Wallace Streater, Treasurer, reports receipts as follows:

Jan. 18, 1908, Dr. R. H. McKim, Treasurer, first Arlington Confederate Monument Association.....	$1,457 25
Jan. 18, 1908, Essex Chapter, 239, U. D. C.....	3 00
Feb. 8, 1908, Indian Territory Division, U. D. C....	20 00
Feb. 8, 1908, Beauregard Chapter, 1102, U. D. C.....	11 00
Feb. 10, 1908, Oklahoma Division, U. D. C.....	21 72
Feb. 15, 1908, Association Survivors 23d N. J. Vol....	100 00
Feb. 17, 1908, Washington Camp, 305, U. S. C. V.....	75 00
Feb. 20, 1908, Children's Aux., D. C. Div., U. D. C....	80 00
Feb. 20, 1908, R. E. Lee Chapter, 644, U. D. C.....	1,000 00
Feb. 20, 1908, Stonewall Jackson Chapter, 20, U. D. C.	1,000 00
Feb. 20, 1908, Alabama Division, U. D. C.....	18 00
Feb. 29, 1908, Harford Chapter, 114, U. D. C.....	5 00
March 5, 1908, Texas Division, U. D. C.....	100 00
March 7, 1908, Mrs. T. W. Keith, Director for South Carolina, A. C. M. A.....	15 00
March 21, 1908, complete returns Taylor lectur....	431 20
<hr/>
Total receipts to date.....	$4,337 17

Mrs. J. W. Clapp (Secretary Tennessee Division, U. D. C.), Director for Tennessee, and her committee have published an appeal for the Arlington monument in Confederate Circle there, giving strong reasons why a large sum should be raised for it. It is a fitting occasion for the loyalty and public spirit of Tennessee to be creditably illustrated.

PHILADELPHIA CONFEDERATE DAUGHTERS.

Mr. W. K. Beard (Manager of the Electric World), Philadelphia, writes of a note in the April VETERAN that reference "was evidently had to the Dabney H. Maury Chapter," and adds: "There is a Dabney H. Maury Chapter in Philadelphia; but the Philadelphia Chapter is the original and only separate Chapter in this State, while the Dabney H. Maury Chapter is a branch of the Grand Division of Virginia. The Philadelphia Chapter has a membership of about one hundred and ten." The report referred to is on page 179 of the April issue.

Mrs. Edgar Moncure is delightfully remembered by those who heard her report at the Norfolk Convention correcting the above error—an error printed because of having overlooked the growth of the U. D. C. in Philadelphia.

The following was evidently not intended for publication:

"Until two years since the Dabney H. Maury Chapter was the only one of the 'Daughters' in Philadelphia. Then the majority of the members of that Chapter decided that they would like to form an independent Chapter—the nucleus for a Pennsylvania Division—and did this, calling it the Philadelphia Chapter, U. D. C. The minority preferred to remain the Dabney H. Maury Chapter of the Virginia Division, which they did.

"The growth of the Philadelphia Chapter has been phenomenal. Though scarcely two years old, we have a membership of one hundred and twenty-five, and are a very energetic, progressive, and prosperous organization. I trust you will pardon this praise for my own Chapter, but its growth has been so gratifying that it is a temptation to tell one's friends."

VETERANS WANT TO ORGANIZE IN PHILADELPHIA.—W. K. Beard, 239 West 39th Street, Philadelphia, writes: "I have been asked by a prominent doctor in Philadelphia, a Confederate veteran, to make up for him a list of veterans living in or near Philadelphia with a view to organizing a Camp of Confederate Veterans in this city. I would appreciate any aid the VETERAN can render in procuring the list. It is my intention, if we are successful in organizing a Camp of Confederate Veterans, to myself organize a Camp of Sons."

The VETERAN suggests the benefit that any of its Philadelphia readers might render in giving out the above notice.

ALABAMA U. D. C., BIRMINGHAM MAY 13-15.

The twelfth annual convention of the Alabama Division, Daughters of the Confederacy, will be held in Birmingham May 13-15, inclusive.

Officers of Alabama Division: Mrs. Charles G. Brown, President; Mrs. B. B. Ross and Mrs. Lewis Cobb, Vice Presidents; Mrs. L. T. Pride, Recording Secretary; Mrs. W. H. Phillips, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. W. T. Palmer, Treasurer; Mrs. Harvy E. Jones, Historian; Mrs. Frank Elmore, Registrar; Mrs. J. A. Rountree, Recorder of Crosses.

The programme for the convention is as follows:

Tuesday evening, May 12.—Reception by Pelham Chapter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Brown.

Wednesday, May 13.—9:30 A.M., opening session, City Hall. 12:30 to 1:30, lunch. 2 P.M., afternoon session. Evening reception by William L. Yancey Chapter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Thompson.

Thursday, May 13.—Morning and afternoon session. 4 P.M., trolley ride to East Lake Park. 8:30 P.M., historical and musical symposium, Cable Hall.

Friday, May 15.—Morning and afternoon session. 9 P.M., banquet at Hotel Hillman by Pelham Chapter.

MEMORIAL SERVICES IN MONTGOMERY.

At the memorial services in honor of Gen. R. E. Lee, which was also the regular meeting of the Camp, it was made known that twelve members of the Camp had died during the past year. The principal address of the occasion was delivered by Gen. J. W. A. Sanford, in which he paid tribute to the splendid service rendered the South by Admiral Raphael Semmes. The presence at the meeting of Raphael Semmes, a son of the great admiral, made the subject the more interesting. Other feeling tributes to General Lee and other leaders were paid by Clifford A. Lanier and B. M. Washburn.

The officers elected for the coming year were: Judge J. B. Fuller, Commander; R. B. Grigg, C. A. Lanier, and W. C. Fuller, Lieutenant Commanders; B. M. Washburn, Secretary; Paul Sanguinetti, Adjutant; Rev. A. F. Dix, Chaplain.

SOME TEXAS VETERANS ON U. S. PENSIONS.

At a meeting of the John H. Morgan Camp, Justin, Tex., resolutions were adopted "unanimously" as introduced by Lieut. D. H. Cates. In explanation the resolutions state that they have been good and loyal citizens to the United States since the war—a fact conspicuously demonstrated in the Spanish-American War—also that they recognize allegiance to no other country and pay their part of the taxes to the United States government, which includes pensions to the ex-Federal soldiers. Another reason given is that "it would do much to break down any lingering sectional animosity between the North and South." The paper is signed officially by D. H. Cates, Lieutenant, and T. J. Walker, Adjutant.

FOR WORKMAN OR MILLIONAIRE

there is no safer investment than a Certificate of Deposit in The American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee. Whether your present surplus is $25 or $25,000, there is no more secure place for it than this $1,000,000.00 bank.

Popular confidence in this bank has given it a wonderful growth during the past few years. The

CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT

are usually issued to mature in three, six, or twelve months, but they can be made to mature at special times to suit the convenience of depositors. The interest rate is 3 per cent.

The Certificates are made to the order of the person depositing the money, and are transferable by indorsement, making them good collateral security for loans.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK Of Nashville, Tennessee.

Capital .....	$1,000,000.00
Shareholders' Liability.....	1,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits (earned).....	580,000.00

SECURITY TO DEPOSITORS.....$2,580,000.00

PICTURES FROM BIRMINGHAM.

The VETERAN acknowledges the kind courtesy with gratitude of Mr. Bert G. Scovell in the form of several pictures of Reunion quarters. That of the City Park, the Hippodrome, and the VETERAN's hotel are all from him.

Pictures of two groups of the S. A. Cunningham Junior Sons of Confederate Veterans are furnished by Mr. C. R. Turner, Nashville, one of the most expert artists in the country.

FATE OF WILLIAM THOMAS.—G. B. Dean, Detroit, Tex.: "Although forty-four years have passed, some friend or relative may be glad to learn the fate of Willie Thomas, who as quite a young boy came from Mississippi and joined our company in the 11th Texas Cavalry several months before the surrender. He made a good soldier, and while on the skirmish line near Salisbury, N. C., in October or November, 1864, was shot dead from his horse. Any further particulars can be gotten by correspondence with me or Isaac Guest, of Detroit, Tex., in whose company he served."

Confederate Echoes

(OUR ABIDING CONFEDERACY)

By REV. A. T. GOODLOE, M.D.

"I hope for this book many readers. I am sure the reading of it will tend to conserve and preserve the traditions of the elders, and crystallize sentiment for that noble band, the Sons and Sires of the Old South—the noblest type of which the pen of historian, bard, or poet ever sang."—Mrs. Sue F. Mooney.

12mo. Cloth. 452 Pages. Price, $1.00

ORDER FROM

SMITH & LAMAR, Nashville, Tenn.,

OR FROM

A. T. GOODLOE, Nashville, Tenn. (R. F. D. No. 6),

AGENTS WANTED

HALT!
WHO GOES THERE?

U. C. V. REUNION
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

JUNE 9-11, 1908

¶ You will enjoy the Reunion immensely. Let pleasant going and returning impressions make the trip complete in every particular. Ask the agent to route you via

Very Low Round-Trip Rates from All Points West

GEO. H. LEE, Gen. Pass. Agt., Little Rock, Ark.

"IN MEMORIAM"

Confederate
Statues
in Bronze

We furnish Statues for
ALL KINDS
of Monuments

Write Us For Prices,
Designs,
etc.

American Bronze Foundry Co.,
73d and Woodlawn Ave. Chicago, Ill.

New Orleans . . .

"THE GATEWAY OF THE MISSISSIPPI." The Great City of the Great South. The Largest Cotton, Rice, and Sugar Market in the World.

The Most Popular Winter Resort in America

Continuous Horse Racing, Golf Links, Hunting and Fishing. Comfort, Health, Pleasure. Eleven Theaters.

New St. Charles Hotel

Modern, Fireproof, First-Class. Accommodating One Thousand Guests. Turkish, Russian, Roman, and Plain Baths. Luxurious Sun Baths and Palm Garden.

ANDREW R. BLAKELY & COMPANY, Ltd., Proprietors

BRAVEST DEED OF THE WAR.

BY S. H. M. BYERS.

In Quinton town, by Richmond town,
The Union army lay,
The Richmond spires and steeples
Not twenty miles away;
And half in sight and half between,
As if it were by chance,
A little line of breastworks ran
To guard the great advance.

Two nights with pick and spade we'd dug—
A thousand men in blue—
There wasn't any sound of drum,
No flag above us flew.
Just silence fell on oak and pine,
Where each his vigils kept,
For we were watcher on the line
While all the army slept.

Alarmed, the watchful foe had seen
Our breastwork in the sun;
We were so near they well might count
Each horse and man and gun.
And far down his line there went
A cry we might have heard:
"We'll storm their works at daylight, men."
'Twas Lee that gave the word.

But we who manned the trenches worked
The harder till the dawn,
And not a soul but feared to see
The light come creeping on.
And as the fading stars went out
Above the wooded glen,
We heard the low and steady tramp
Of twice a thousand men.

No sound of bugle filled the air
Nor noise of file nor drum,
And we who waited held our breath
As if the hour had come

And all at once there was a shout,
Like fiends in Milton's hell,
Yelp—yelp—ah! well, we knew the cry;
It was the Rebel yell.

A moment and we held our fire.
God, what a moment! then—
A thousand muskets scorched and blazed
Among a thousand men.
They faltered not, nor finched nor stayed;
But straight through flash and flame,
A lane of death where dead men fell,
The living quickly came.

Till right before our ditch they stop,
Too brave to yield or fly;
One cruel moment there they halt
Like men about to die.
They stop and look! From out our line
Sudden a rider goes;
Alone he rides, nor heeds nor hears
The bullets of our foes!

God, see, and is he daft or dumb?
Straight for their lines he's sped—
Straight toward their center. Heavens, look!
He is already dead.
Astounded, friend and foe alike
Gaze on the deed so bold;
Astounded, friend and foe alike
Their fire a moment hold.

Straight to their flag he rides and stops
Where brave their colors fly.
"Give me that flag," he quickly shouts;
"Give me that flag, or die!"
Appalled the color sergeant stood,
Appalled the column stands;
The daring deed has dazed them all,
The flag is in his hands.

He wheels, he flies, he leaps the ditch;
Back to the fort he comes,
And, bleeding, falls midst shouts and cheers
And rattling of the drums.
Midst shouts and cheers the foe themselves
A manly plaudit yield,
For never braver deed was done
On any battlefield.

At Quinton town, by Richmond town,
A cross is in the sand—
A captain's grave, a horse's grave
Is there on either hand.
Two flags are carved upon the stone,
And one the foe man gave;
For peace or war, or North or South,
Men love a deed that's brave.

J. T. Wade, of Winchell, Tex., seeks to establish his record as a Confederate soldier, and asks that any surviving comrades of Company C. McCowin's Missouri Regiment, French's Division, Trans-Mississippi Department, will kindly write to him.

S. C. Turnbo, of Pontiac, Mo., is anxious to complete his file of the VETERAN by securing the volumes for 1893-96 at a reasonable price, and any one having these volumes or any numbers in them is asked to write to him. He is willing to exchange copies of his book, "Fireside Stories of Early Days in the Ozarks," for these copies, or to pay for them at a reasonable rate.

If afflicted with SORE EYES use Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

GEN. LEE ON SACKET HARBOR.

This original poem by Gen. Robert E. Lee, the Confederate commander, written on the occasion of his leaving Sacket Harbor in 1810, was printed in one of the county papers at the time and recently unearthed. General Lee was for some time commandant at Sacket Harbor.

How gently here the zephyrs play,
How softly falls the sun's mild ray,
How gracefully this lovely bay
Embraces Sacket Harbor!

How proudly wave the stars and stripes,
How full and rich those martial airs
That o'er its wings the zephyr bears
Alone for Sacket Harbor!

Here no proud blandishments are met,
No empty airs of vain coquette.
A diamond 'midst bright jewels set
Is our own Sacket Harbor.

South Adams wears her deacon's face,
North Brownville stands with modest grace,
And Watertown's a little place
Just back of Sacket Harbor.

Soon spring with bloom and verdure gay
Will chase these wintry clouds away;
Then, bonnie lassie, stay, O stay
Awhile in Sacket Harbor.

[In sending the above a Federal veteran says: "Lee was a great man, and we all honor him, Federals as well as Confederates."]

THE VETERAN'S EXPLANATION.

[A correspondent from Elmira, N. Y., sends the following clipping with inquiry as to whether it would "apply to any of the old C. S. A. veterans."]

"Where did you get that scar on your face?" asked the interested listener of the Civil War veteran.

"At the battle of Bull Run," answered the old soldier.

"Bull Run?" exclaimed the other. "How could you get wounded in the face at Bull Run?"

"Well, you see, sir," exclaimed the veteran apologetically, "after I had run a mile or two I grew careless and looked back."

The small sum asked for "THE CONQUERED BANNER" with poem should put this pretty picture in every Southern home. See ad. in VETERAN.

Confederate War Pictures

BY GILBERT GAUL,
NATIONAL ACADEMICIAN.
With Introductory Sketches by
THORNWELL JACOBS.

Exquisitely reproduced in four colors, on heavy polychrome paper.

Those who love the South and her brave old veterans have desired for many years to have their courage, their devotion, their unmatched heroism and the home-life of their families crystallized on canvas. After nearly a half century this has just been done. Gilbert Gaul, of New York, was employed several years ago, and has now finished the series. It is called With the Confederate Colors, 1861-5, and consists of six paintings, as follows:

No. 1. Leaving Home.—Shows a typical Southern interior of the period. A lad is telling his homefolks good-bye. One sees the newspaper fallen to the floor, the favorite bird-dog pleading infinitely with his eye, the father, mother, sister, slaves—all done as if a photograph had been magically turned into colors.

No. 2. Holding the Line at all Hazards.—A battle scene. The last magnificent stand of "those who had fate against them." One of the finest battle scenes ever painted.

No. 3. Waiting for Dawn.—A campfire scene. The snow covers the ground. A farm house burns in the distance. The "enemy's" battle line glows on the horizon. A masterpiece.

No. 4. The Picket and the Forager.—Companion pieces sold as one picture. The first shows a lonely picket on duty. The second presents a bread and chicken-laden forager returning to camp after a day's excursion.

No. 5. Betting on the Flag.—The boys in blue are backing their cause with a pile of coffee in a social game of cards between the lines. Southern tobacco is the bet of the "Johnny Rebs" that the bars will be victorious. One of the most popular of the series.

No. 6. Tidings.—A pretty Southern girl is reading a letter from the front to the groups of women and slaves. A grandfather bends forward eagerly to listen, and a wounded soldier on furlough forgets his bandaged arm as he hears tidings from the firing line. A beautiful and touching picture.

Mr. Gaul's strong brush has portrayed with much realism, not their bitterness and recriminations, but their magnificent motive, their magnanimous courage, their unmatched devotion. Those who love the real values of the Old South will prize these pictures beyond price, and indeed they should appeal to every intelligent American, man or woman.

Pictures 15x19 inches, reproducing every shade of tone and motif, and embossed so as to give perfect canvas effect. Each one is a masterpiece, depicting the courage, sacrifice, heroism, sufferings and home life of the Southern soldier.

We have made arrangements with the publishers to supply our subscribers with one or more of the above masterpieces at an exceedingly low price. We make the following

SPECIAL OFFER

Any one of the above pictures, regular price,	$3.50
Confederate Veteran,	1.00
Total,	$4.50
Our Special Offer,	2.50
Saving	$2.00

This offer holds good for more than one picture—i. e., for $5.00 we will send the Veteran two years and any two of the above pictures. It also holds good whether the $1.00 for the Veteran be for old or advance subscription, or from a new subscriber.

In other words, for $2.50 we will credit your subscription to the Veteran for one year (either in arrears or advance subscription), and send you, postage prepaid, your choice of the above remarkable pictures. Write at once.

CONFEDERATE VETERAN, Nashville, Tenn.

The Charleston Library Society, Charleston, S. C., wishing to complete its file of the VETERAN, asks for the first four numbers of 1893. Write to Miss Ellen M. FitzSimons, Librarian, stating price, etc.

J. G. Hart, of Groveton, Tex., would like to get in correspondence with any who enlisted at Holly Springs, Miss., in Company A (Captain Mitchell), 18th Mississippi Regiment (Colonel Forrest), of which he was a member.

"Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865"

BY

GENERAL MARCUS J. WRIGHT

Have you a copy? Is your Father, Brother, or Son recorded in this historical work?

Send your order to your local Bookseller, the "Veteran," or

AMBROSE LEE PUBLISHING Co.,
WILLIAMSBRIDGE, N. Y. CITY

PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to any address

Handsome Picture
Gen. Robert E. Lee

The Cotton Belt has a few copies left of the famous, full length picture of Gen. Lee in full uniform, standing hat in hand, which is considered one of the best likenesses of Gen. Lee ever painted. Below the picture is Gen. Lee's farewell address.

While they last this handsome picture, imprinted on heavy stock, 12½x18 in., representing oil painting, suitable for framing, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin.

Returned Battle Flags

A beautiful 56 page book, reproducing, in natural colors, the returned Confederate battle flags of many regiments will be sent upon receipt of 25 cents in stamps or coin. Address:

E. W. LaBeaume, G. P. & T. A.,

915 Equitable Bldg.,

St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. J. V. Johnson, 319 Grant Avenue, Eveleth, Minn., whose father was first sergeant of Company H, 6th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and who was severely wounded and captured at Gettysburg, is very anxious to communicate with some member of the 5th Louisiana Infantry, known as the "Louisiana Tigers," serving under Gen. Stonewall Jackson the Chickahominy in 1864. He wishes to locate a sergeant of this company whom his father met four times during the war and who showed him much kindness on different occasions, particularly when wounded at Gettysburg.

Joel G. Carroll, Saltillo, Miss., would like to hear from any member of Captain Gordon's company, Colonel Brady's regiment, Louisiana troops, in which company he enlisted in 1862. His second enlistment was in June, 1864. Company E, 36th Georgia Volunteers, Cummins's Brigade. He was wounded at Resaca, captured at Nashville, and sent to Camp Chase. He is now seeking to establish his record in order to secure a pension, to which he is worthily entitled.

R. C. Shindler, Dalhart, Tex., refers to the list of Confederate generals published in the VETERAN, in which appeared the name of William P. Shindler, of South Carolina. He thinks there may be some connection between the families, and would like to hear from some member of the South Carolina branch.

B. T. Lanier, Carney, Tex., seeks to establish the record of H. H. Lardge, and inquires for any members of Company B or C (Capt. W. B. Spears), 12th Arkansas Regiment (Colonel Dawson), with whom this comrade served, having volunteered in Arkansas. He is now in a destitute condition with dependent grandchildren, and should have a pension.

Mrs. Mary E. Bryant, 1308 N. Davis Street, Pensacola, Fla., wants to get the names of some comrades of her husband, Alfred Dudley Bryant. She thinks that he served under General Perry, and that he enlisted from Fernandina. His record is needed to secure her a pension.

Lon Barnes, Monrovia Cal., says he would like to hear from any old comrades of Gen. Sterling Price's escort.

Selected Souvenir Cards

Twenty views of Historic Chattanooga, Chickamauga, and Lookout Mountain. Beautifully colored. Mailed to any address. 12 views for 25c., or 20 different views for 40c. Address

L. J. PETTUS, Chattanooga, Tenn.

KAFFER DROPS
FOR TOOTH-ACHE
(RELIEF IS IMMEDIATE)
AN EFFECTIVE REMEDY, PROMPT IN ACTION
AND IMMEDIATE IN RESULT.
POSTPAID FOR 25c. IN SILVER
TIPTON & CO.
MANUFACTURING DRUGGISTS, LOUGHRAN, ILL.

Trickled with SORE EYES Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

A TOKEN OF APPRECIATION.

In order to favor many out of work or short of cash by reason of the late money panic, and as a token of appreciation for the liberal patronage which brought eighty-five thousand nine hundred four dollars eighty-five cents ($85,904.85) net profits to Draughon's 30 Business Colleges during the past four years, Draughon's Colleges are now offering, for a limited time, $50 scholarship for $25. See further particulars elsewhere in this paper.

LET ME DO YOUR SHOPPING

No matter what you want—street suit, wedding trousseau, reception or evening gown—INEXPENSIVE, or handsome and costly—send for my samples and estimates before placing your order. With my years' experience in shopping, my knowledge of styles—being in touch with the leading fashion centers—my conscientious handling of each and every order, whether large or small—I know I can please you.

MRS. CHARLES ELLISON, Urban Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

THE WAY TO WIN HER

A booklet for every man. By Eugene L. Didier.

THE WAY TO WIN HIM

A booklet for every woman.

Each one dime, postpaid. Address AMERICAN PRESS CO., Baltimore, Md.

WAR LITERATURE FOR SALE

Longstreet's "Manassas to Appomattox," 1906. J. E. Johnston's "Narrative," 1874. Wyeth's "Life of Gen. Forrest," 1899. Address

H. C. TERHUNE,

Red Bank, N. J.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

FREE TO YOU

ESTABLISHED
1858

OUR complete catalogue, beautifully illustrated. Over 5,000 articles of Jewelry, Diamonds, Silverware, Cut Glass, etc. When you have this book before you, it's as easy to buy as if you saw the goods in reality, because each cut is a faithful photographic reproduction of the article itself. If on receipt the article does not please, we refund the price without question, or will exchange for other goods.

Write for it to-day.

Ask the Veteran or any bank about us

The B. H. Stief Jewelry Co.

404 Union Street      &      Nashville, Tenn.

GOODALL, BROWN & CO.

IMPORTERS and JOBBERS

Dry Goods

Furnishings

Notions

White Goods

and

Hosiery

While we sell to merchants only, a cordial invitation is extended to all veterans and visitors to visit the largest and most complete wholesale dry goods house in the South.

1st Avenue and 22d Street

Birmingham, Ala.

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of

Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and

Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup

Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs

—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

U.S.A.
LONDON, ENGLAND.

NEW YORK, N.Y.

Green's Views From Crest of Mountain Near Sewanee

THE NIGHTS ARE COOL
IN THE
TENNESSEE MOUNTAINS
DURING
JUNE, JULY, AUGUST, SEPTEMBER
DELIGHTFUL BREEZES

¶ You cannot find a better place to spend the Summer than at one of the many resorts on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Ry.

---

WRITE FOR BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED SUMMER FOLDER CONTAINING MONTEAGLE ASSEMBLY PROGRAMME

---

C. E. HARMAN,
G. P. A. W. & A. R. R.,
ATLANTA, GA.

W. L. DANLEY,
G. P. A. N., C. & St. L. Ry.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Confederate Veteran.

VOL. XVI.

JUNE, 1908

NO. 6.

STEPHEN DILL LEE, LIEUTENANT GENERAL C. S. A.,
Commander in Chief United Confederate Veterans. Born Sept. 22, 1833; died May 28, 1908.

Watch Charms
FOR
Confederate Veterans

"JACKSON" CHARM as Illustrated. $6.00. Write for illustrations of other styles. List No. 18. "Children of the Confederacy" pins, handsomely enameled, regulation pin, sterling silver, gold plated, 55c. each, postpaid.

S. N. MEYER
Washington, - D. C.

The Direct Route to Washington
Baltimore
Philadelphia
New York and
all Eastern Cities
from the South
and Southwest

is via BRISTOL and the

Norfolk & Western Ry

Through Trains
Sleepers, Dining Car

Best Route to
Richmond
Norfolk, and all
Virginia Points

WARREN L. ROHR, Western Pass. Agent
Chattanooga, Tenn.

V. B. BEVILL, General Pass. Agent
Roanoke Va.

A beautifully colored work of art 6½ x 9½. "THE CONQUERED BANNER," with poem. Suitable for framing. Every Southern home should have one. Only 10c. with stamp. Write your address distinctly.
C. WAGNER, 205 West 91st St.,
New York City

CIVIL WAR—SOUTHERN SIDE

Confederate Items, including Jefferson Davis, Gen. R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson. Also Confederate Portraits and Autographs. Catalogue now ready.

Address AMERICAN PRESS Co., Baltimore, Md.

THE BIVOUAC OF THE GRAY.

BY T. C. HARBAUGH.

In their silent camps of glory,
Stretching ever far away,
Sleep the men who live in story,
Valiant wearers of the gray;
For them now no drums are beating,
For them now no bugles blow,
No advance and no retreating,
No fierce onsets of the foe.

Some by Rappahannock's river,
Some beside the Tennessee;
Side by side they're camping ever,
They who proudly followed Lee.
Where some missing one reposes
On the olden battle lines
Bloom the scented, snowy roses
In the shadow of the pines.

In the robin-haunted thicket
Where the autumn leaves are blown
Sleeps the ever-watchful picket
In a glory all his own;
And the ring dove coos above him
At the gloaming of the day,
For the sake of those who love him
In his ceremonies of gray.

Nevermore for them the rattle
Of the muskets grim and dread,
Nevermore the horrid battle
Where the richest blood was shed;
Crown them all with gentle flowers
From the meadow and the dell.
They are sleeping through the hours
In the land they loved so well.

When the last one gently passes
To that home so cold and low,
Where the violets and the grasses
In their beauty bloom and glow,
Fame will write in words eternal
That will other words outshine
Far above their bivouac vernal
Proudly, grandly: "These are mine!"

They will march again in splendor,
All trans-figured, yet our own,
And each hero, each defender
To his comrades shall be known:
They shall rise again in glory,
Though they rest beneath the sod,
Gallant men of song and story
In the cantons of their God.

Mr. J. T. Key, 707 Overton Street, Nashville, Tenn., has a bound set of the VETERAN which he would like to dispose of. Write to him direct.

Confederate
Veterans'
and Sons of Confederate
Veterans'

UNIFORMS

We are official manufacturers of uniforms and goods you need. Send for Catalog. Orders for Jamestown Exposition should be sent us early.

THE M. C. LILLEY & CO.
Columbus, Ohio

TEXAS THE PLACE

TEXAS is the BEST STATE for the HOMESEEKER. Fertile Lands, Diversified Crops, Farming all the year. Health, Climate, Schools and Churches.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway traverses the best portion. Send 2-cent stamp for Folder and Information.

GEO. F. LUPTON, G. P. A.,
San Antonio, Texas.

A Souvenir that should be in every Southern home

Anchor made of iron from Confederate ironclad, "Merrimac-Virginia." Certificate of genuineness of iron accompanies each souvenir. Price, only 25c each.

Do not remit in postage stamps.

ABINGDON STAMP CO.

Abingdon, Virginia

Confederate Daughters anticipating having to raise funds for their Chapters, write us for special prices.

BROTHERS IN GRAY. Accidentally I have discovered a root that will cure both tobacco habit and indigestion. No Drugs. I will gladly send particulars of this wonderful root. H. P. Stokes, Mohawk, Fla.

BEST ROUTE
TO
U. C. V. Reunion
AT BIRMINGHAM
IS VIA

No trouble to answer questions
Through Chair Cars and
Sleepers
E. P. TURNER, Gen. Pass. Agt.
DALLAS, TEX.

General Marcus J. Wright's
"Tennessee in the War, 1861-1865"

Should be in the Library of the Family of every
Confederate and Union Soldier

An Official Record of
TENNESSEE'S SONS

Order from local Booksellers,
the "Veteran," or
Ambrose Lee Publishing Co.,
Williamsbridge, N. Y. City
PRICE, $1.50, postage paid to
any address

WANTED The Southern Bivouac, published in Louisville, Ky.; New Electric, and Southern Magazines published in Baltimore. Send lists.
JAMES C. BROADWELL,
715 Century Building, St. Louis, Mo.

DRAUGHON'S $50 SCHOLARSHIP FOR $25

Four years' NET PROFITS of $85,904.85 enable Draughon's chain of 30 Colleges to make this special offer, for a limited time, to favor those short of work or cash by reason of late financial depression. FREE CATALOGUE will convince you that BUSINESS MEN consider DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUSINESS COLLEGES THE BEST. No vacation; enter any time. POSITIONS SECURED—written CONTRACT. Raleigh, Columbia, Atlanta, Nashville, Montgomery, Jackson (Miss.), Little Rock, and Dallas.

is much like gunning for birds. You must have a definite aim, because indiscriminate advertising, like indiscriminate shooting, results in empty pockets. The printer furnishes the shot, and postage is the powder that carries it wherever you direct.

And you must have good ammunition. Foolish indeed the sportsman who would use pebbles for shot to save expense, yet equally foolish is the advertiser who wastes energy, postage and opportunity on weak, ineffective printing.

Think it over; then let's talk it over. We have furnished ammunition for so many successful campaigns that we know you will find our experience of value. Anyway, let's talk it over.

BRANDON PRINTING CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

R. T. Gardner, Oxford, Fla., would like to hear from any survivors of Company C (Captain Hatch), 27th Louisiana Regiment, S. D. Lee's Brigade

J. F. McLain, Anna, Tex., wants to know the whereabouts of W. R. Burks, first lieutenant of Company G, 50th Alabama, who went from Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Mrs. Alice B. Rand, Bellevue, Ky., wants to get copies of the VETERAN for 1864 with the exception of July, August, September, and October; also wants copy of "The Old Guard" of July, 1866.

John E. Cargile, of Selma, Cal., wants all the survivors of the 10th Arkansas Regiment to write to him. He was under Colonel Merriek, of Little Rock, but says he left the 10th Arkansas in the latter part of 1865 and went to Missouri, and has met only two comrades since he left them.

Ray Evans, Comanche, Tex., makes inquiry for Colonel Weems, of the 64th Georgia Regiment, who succeeded Col. J. W. Evans when the latter was killed at Petersburg. At the beginning of the war Colonel Evans organized what was known as the Bainbridge Independence Company and went as captain of the company until promoted to colonel of the 64th, which he then commanded until his death. His grandson, Ray Evans, would like to hear from any survivors among his soldiers.

For Over Sixty Years
An Old and Well-Tried Remedy
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, WITH PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLEVIATES all PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHEA. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. 25 CENTS A BOTTLE. Guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Serial number, 1093

If afflicted with SORE EYES use DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

Are You Ready

For the financial opportunities that will come to you? Good credit or ready cash—money saved—is needed to seize them.

Putting money away safely is insurance against adversity. No one should be without this protection.

But more than that, can you doubt for a minute that an account with a strong, absolutely reliable Bank like the $1,000,000.00 American National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee, helps your credit wonderfully, and prepares you

For Your Opportunity?

Save part of your income regularly and deposit your savings in this strong Bank—one of the greatest financial institutions in the country.

Your money will be earning 3% interest for you—working while you work, but also while you rest.

If you want to be prepared for business opportunities, or would like help on the road to financial independence, you will be interested in our 30-page book, "A Word to the Wise." Send for it to-day. It's free.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK

01 Nashville, Tennessee

Capital.....	$1,000,000.00
Shareholders' Liability...	1,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided
Profits (earned).....	580,000.00
SECURITY TO DEPOSITORS.....	$2,580,000.00

The above cut is that of the great painting of "Lee and His Generals," by George B. Matthews, of Virginia. ¶ General Marcus J. Wright indorses it as follows: "I regard it as one of the finest paintings I ever saw. The truthfulness of feature of all these great generals is most remarkable. The Lithograph copy is a most striking and accurate reproduction of the original. I hope all Confederates will procure copies." ¶ The Lithograph is in color. Size, 27 x 16 inches. State agents can make most liberal contracts. Agents wanted in every city and town in the South. ¶ Sent by mail on receipt of 55 cents. Every home should have a picture. It will make a nice Christmas gift. Address MATTHEWS & COMPANY, 1420 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

PHOTOGRAVURE

Robert E. Lee

General in chief C. S. A. 1861-1865. From original photograph taken in 1863.

A Perfect Likeness of the Great General. Every Southerner should possess one.

MISS MARY CUSTIS LEE: "It is the best full-face likeness of him."

GEN. FREDERICK D. GRANT: "An interesting likeness of that distinguished officer."

GEN. SAMUEL G. FRENCH: "The best one of him to be obtained."

ROBERT E. LEE Camp, No. 1, Richmond, Va.: "A splendid likeness of our old Commander."

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR Mailed Free.

Ambrose Lee Publishing Co., Williamsbridge, New York City.

Orders and remittances may also be sent for this picture to S. A. Cunningham, CONFEDERATE VETERAN, Nashville, Tenn.

The Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company

AGENCIES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

L U Z I A N N E

Good All the Time

LUZIANNE COFFEE

Grocers Everywhere

THE REILY-TAYLOR CO.

NEW ORLEANS

L U Z I A N N E

A. J. Goodson, De Land, Fla., of Company B, 1st South Carolina Regiment, desires to hear from some of the company. He is in need of a pension and has no proof of service. He says Percha Smith was his captain.

W. A. Brown, of Whitewright, Tex., R. F. D. No. 1, has the volumes of the VETERAN from 1896 to 1907 complete, with the exception of a few copies, and will dispose of them at a reasonable price.

Confederate Veteran.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE INTEREST OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS AND KINDRED TOPICS.

Entered at the post office at Nashville, Tenn., as second-class matter. Contributors are requested to use only one side of the paper, and to abbreviate as much as practicable. These suggestions are important.

Where clippings are sent copy should be kept, as the VETERAN cannot undertake to return them. Advertising rates furnished on application. The date to a subscription is always given to the month before it ends. For instance, if the VETERAN is ordered to begin with January, the date on mail list will be December, and the subscriber is entitled to that number.

The civil war was too long ago to be called the late war, and when correspondents use that term "War between the States" will be substituted. The terms "New South" and "lost cause" are objectionable to the VETERAN.

OFFICIALLY REPRESENTS:

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS,
UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY,
SONS OF VETERANS, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS,
CONFEDERATED SOUTHERN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The VETERAN is approved and indorsed officially by a larger and more elevated patronage, doubtless, than any other publication in existence.

Though men deserve, they may not win success;
The brave will honor the brave, vanquished none the less.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. / VOL. XVI.
SINGLE COPY, 10 CENTS. /

NASHVILLE, TENN., JUNE, 1908.

No. 6. / S. A. CUNNINGHAM,
PROPRIETOR.

JEFFERSON DAVIS AND ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

BY COL. A. K. M'CLURE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

One of the most gratifying evidences of the liberal progress of the age is in the fact that to-day the memory of Jefferson Davis is more highly respected in the North than at any time since the Civil War began, nearly half a century ago, and that the memory of Abraham Lincoln is accorded more respect in the South than was awarded to him at any time in the past. These names are inseparably interwoven with the greatest achievements of the last half century, which will ever be studied with tireless interest by those who are students of the history of our country. Both were born in the same State of Kentucky. Lincoln in Harding County on the 12th of February, 1809, and Davis in Christian County (now Todd) on the 3d of June, 1808. Davis became President of the Confederacy on the 16th of February, 1861, and Lincoln was inaugurated President of the United States a fortnight later. Lincoln fell by the hand of the assassin on the 15th of April, 1865, and the public career of Davis ended by his capture on the 10th of May of the same year. The careful and dispassionate student who now looks back over the appalling events of our Civil War, with its intense passions perished, must accept the conviction that these two men, called to supreme leadership in the most heroic struggle of the nineteenth century, filled their respective positions with equally sincere devotion to what they accepted as patriotic conviction, and there is not a blemish upon the record of either.

I knew Jefferson Davis but slightly before the war; had met him only in a casual way on several occasions. He was somewhat austere in manner, but always generous in courtesy when personally approached. The gradual failure of the cause of the Confederacy as its armies were finally defeated and its resources exhausted naturally led to aggressive and even violent assaults upon the ruling power of the Confederacy, and Davis was severely criticised by many of his own section as being at least measurably responsible for the disasters which befell its armies. He and Lincoln were educated from entirely different standpoints. Lincoln grew up with little advantage from schools and none from colleges, but ever in sympathy with the people who were of his own class. Davis was of gentler birth, had as good educational facilities as could be obtained in his day, and finally graduated from West Point. That his military education had much to do in shaping the policy of his administration, I do not doubt. The only training of the West Point soldier is to command; and while more than half a score of military chieftains have been elected to the presidency since Washington, but two of them were graduates of West Point—viz., Taylor and Grant—and both were utterly ignorant of the political methods by which men attain distinction. Davis, a graduate of West Point, with a highly creditable career as a soldier, naturally believed in military methods; while Lincoln, coming from close to mother earth, had as his guiding star only the considerate judgment of the people.

Davis was a man of most sincere conviction and courageous action; and when the Southern Confederacy was about to be organized, his single ambition was the command of the Confederate army. This I had from his own lips at his residence, Beauvoir, Miss., some fifteen years after the war. He told me that when he started for Montgomery, Ala., when the movement began for the organization of the Confederacy, he hoped to be called to the command of the army; but before he reached Montgomery he was advised of his election as Provisionary President. When he reached the new capital of the Confederacy, he found it impossible to change conditions, and he was compelled to accept the presidency, and he entered upon that duty as conscientiously as any public man ever entered upon an official career. He had been schooled in the doctrine of State rights; and when his State seceded, he retired from the United States Senate in obedience to what he regarded as the highest call that could be made upon him. His unexpected election to the provisional presidency of the republic compelled him to accept the fearful responsibility of assuming the direction of the civil department of the government.

Jefferson Davis was thus called to the provisional presidency and later to the constitutional presidency of the Southern Confederacy, a position that, while apparently masterful, was subordinated by the corner stone of the Confederacy, the sovereignty of the States; but as the cause of the South became more and more less hopeful toward the close of the war, it is only natural that violent resentments should arise and that the disappointments of ambition and the fearful sacrifices of life and property in the war should array against him earnest and violent opposition. That he discharged his exceptionally responsible duties with conscientious and tireless fidelity, none who have studied his career can reasonably question. He was schooled in the belief of the sovereignty of the State; he was schooled in the belief that the right of secession could not be questioned; and when the South began the secession in 1861, he simply followed his own thoroughly honest convictions by doing what he accepted as an imperious duty to join the secession movement in obedience to the commands of his State. He was one of the ablest of our statesmen, a stranger to all demagogic art, and conscientious in the discharge of every public duty. He never sought popular applause, but he was universally respected and even widely beloved by his Southern people; and while a man trained in the severe environments which come with West Point education, he might at times have been more conciliatory when the dark clouds gathered upon the Southern cause. It is not now doubted that he maintained his position as President of the Confederacy with masterly ability and failed simply because success was beyond the range of possibility.

It was only natural, then, in the fearful and hopeless desolation of the closing days of the Confederacy that its President should be severely and violently accused, and many were ready in their factional disappointments to charge the disaster largely or wholly upon the Confederate President. If the supreme folly of arresting Davis as implicated in the assassination of President Lincoln had not been committed, he would have been unjustly blamed by many as largely responsible for the failure of the Confederate cause; but when he was arrested as a murderer, imprisoned, and even subjected to the indignity of being manacled and confined to a prison cell for some two years, the people of the South saw him only as the one chosen to suffer for the rebellion of the Southern people. They speedily forgot his real or imaginary errors and learned to appreciate Jefferson Davis as one who had been honest and faithful in the discharge of his responsible duties as he honestly believed and accepted them. There was not a shadow of evidence even of his knowledge of the purpose of any one to assassinate President Lincoln; and his imprisonment for years, when the government had no evidence to confront him on trial, not only aroused the keenest sympathy for him throughout the entire South, but taught the North to respect him even in the yet existing violent sectional passion. He was finally discharged on a bail bond for the sum of $100,000 for his appearance when called for in court, that was made specially notable by the fact that Horace Greeley was one of his bondsmen. Of course the case was never called, as there was not the pretense of a case against him.

My first meeting with Jefferson Davis after the war was in 1880. While on a tour of rest in the South I received at Mobile a cordial invitation to visit him at his home at Beauvoir, in Mississippi. The railway station was at Mississippi City, four miles from his residence, where I arrived early in the morning, and was driven from there to the home of Davis. I arrived there about nine o'clock in the morning; and when about to enter the gate to the beautiful lawn that extended from his modest residence to the gulf shore, I saw him sitting in a chair in the shade of the orange trees trying to read a newspaper, with two small boys, probably eight or ten years of age, playing tag over him with the utmost freedom. I expected to meet a broken, disappointed, and cheerless old man; a man who had staked his all in the establishment of a new republic and, having failed, was then a man without a country. When I saw the boys playing with perfect freedom, my first impression was that I must be mistaken in the man, as boys never err in the estimate of those who love them and enjoy their pranks.

He received me with generous courtesy, and I sat down by his side, under the orange trees that were golden with ripened fruit, to chat with the man who had maintained for four years the most heroic struggle of the nineteenth century. Very soon after I joined him breakfast was called, and he invited me to join him. When we entered the house, with its southern wide hall running clear through the building, on a divan in the center of the hall was reposing a large Newfoundland dog; and when we entered, the dog jumped up with every expression of affection and put his paws on his shoulders. I then knew that I had erred in the estimate of Davis, for children and dogs never mistake the genial qualities of those about them. We were joined at breakfast by his estimable wife and daughter, Miss Winnie, who was later known as the Daughter of the Confederacy, having been born in the presidential home at Richmond.

After breakfast we retired to the parlor, leaving the ladies alone, and I said to him that I desired very much to confer with him on some matters relating to the war about which I was not fully advised. He answered in the kindest manner that as his guest he would be very happy to converse with me on any subject relating to the war, but that he could not converse with me on that subject as a journalist, as I was then editor of the Philadelphia Times. I assured him that I appreciated the delicacy of his position, and that he could rely upon it that not a line would be published as coming from him or about him that did not have his approval before its publication. He then said he was perfectly free to discuss any question that I desired to present to him. One point that I wished to be advised about was why he had fired upon Sumter when he had the positive assurance of the surrender of Anderson two days later. I inquired whether he regarded it as a military necessity or whether it was necessary to concentrate the South in the support of the new government. He answered very frankly that Sumter was fired upon because, after having received the assurance from the Washington government that Sumter would not be re-enforced, they were notified that the Union fleet had sailed for Charleston with supplies and reënforcements for Sumter, but that no attempt would be made to reënforce the fort if the Confederate government would permit supplies to be furnished to the starving garrison. He regarded that as a violation of the faith of the Union government, and for that reason Sumter was fired upon.

I startled him somewhat by saying that the firing upon Sumter sounded the death knell of the Confederacy, adding that if Sumter had not been fired upon when the time had been fixed for surrender the North would have been vastly divided on the question of war; and, as I then believed and still believe, the Confederacy would have been successfully established because the North could not have been united in precipitating an aggressive war upon the South. Lincoln was publicly pledged to avoid the provocation of war; and had the North not been practically united in support of the war by the firing upon the starving garrison when the date had been fixed for its surrender, the Confederacy would have existed without interruption, and in a very few months at most must have commanded the recognition of the leading governments of Europe, and thus made war for the subjugation of the South utterly impracticable.

Another subject upon which I desired information was as to the Gettysburg campaign. It was against the whole policy of the Confederacy even when its army was stronger than then. It was the decisive battle of the war, as Appomattox was simply the echo of Gettysburg. He answered that it was regarded as an important military movement with every prospect of success after the defeat of the Union army at Chancellorsville, and it would doubtless have settled the recognition of the Confederacy abroad had victory been obtained. I asked him whether General Lee had advised it as a military movement, but he answered evasively that it would not have been undertaken if Lee had not approved it.

I spent half the day with President Davis, and was received and entertained with the most generous hospitality. Our conversation finally led to President Lincoln, and he was very anxious to ascertain all the details of Lincoln's personal attributes and public and private actions when President of the United States. He said that the South had greatly misjudged Lincoln, as he had no record as a statesman when he was called to the presidency, and in the fierce passions of civil conflict every disgraceful attribute of character was readily and violently imputed to him. He asked minutely about the actions and expressions of Lincoln, as I had been in very intimate relations with him; and he was greatly delighted when I told him that, while I had heard Lincoln discuss every phase and feature of the war, I had never heard him utter a single sentence of resentment against any in the South; that I had heard him many times discuss Davis, Lee, and other leaders of the South, and always with the highest personal respect for them. I told him how I had seen Lincoln grieve time and again at the very violent accusations made against him in the South during the war, charging him with being a profane and obscene jester, a bloody butcher, and guiltless of either manliness or statesmanship, and that I had heard Lincoln repeatedly say when speaking of these expressions which grieved him sorely that if the South only understood him better there would be more hope of peace.

I told him of the conversation I had with Lincoln in August, 1864, when Lincoln was a candidate for reelection and when he showed me in his own handwriting his proposition to pay the South $400,000,000 to close the war and accept emancipation; of Lincoln's expression at the time that the war if continued for four months would cost the four hundred millions with the additional loss of life and property, and that then the South would simply be a community of implacable hostiles, unwilling to accept the reunion of the States. I asked him whether he had any knowledge of Lincoln's willingness to pay the South four hundred millions as compensation for slaves if peace and the abolition of slavery were accepted. He said he had simply heard of it, but that there was no public or official expression from Mr. Lincoln, and there was nothing for him to act upon. I then asked him whether, if he had known Lincoln's willingness to end the war in that way, he would have restricted Vice President Stephens when sent to meet Lincoln at the City Point Conference to consider peace only on the basis of the perpetuity of the Confederacy. His answer was logical, and I then for the first time appreciated the omnipotence of the sentiment of State rights. He said that Lincoln, representing a centralized government, could make such a proposition to the Confederacy; but that he, President of the Confederacy, whose corner stone was the sovereignty of the State, could do nothing but maintain the integrity of the Confederacy until peace on the basis of reunion was proposed by one or more sovereign States. While he then knew when Stephens was sent to meet Lincoln at City Point that the military power of the Confederacy was absolutely broken, his sworn duty as the President of the Confederacy was to struggle for its maintenance until the sovereign States called for peace. He was much gratified at the many instances of Lincoln's kindly feeling to the South, and I shall never forget the earnestness and pathos of the expression which closed the conversation on that subject. He said: "Next to the day of the fall of the Confederacy, the darkest day the South has known was the day of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln."

I speak advisedly when I say that Jefferson Davis would never have been captured at the close of the war had Lincoln been alive. I was present at a very earnest discussion of the subject between General Butler, Colonel Forney, and some others in Lincoln's room a few months before the close of the war. Butler was violent against the South and Forney sympathized with him, and both demanded the severest punishment of the Southern leaders. I asked Butler whether as a lawyer he could assume that Davis, who had been at the head of a government that beleaguered our own capital for nearly four years and that had been recognized by the civilized governments of the world and practically by ourselves as a belligerent power, could be punished for treason. His answer was that he could be punished because he was a sworn officer of the United States when the war began. It was a legal fallacy, of course, and we had quite a discussion on the subject. Lincoln listened patiently, and he finally closed the conversation by telling the story of the Western drunken vagrant who had been gathered up by his friends into a temperance society repeatedly, only to fall again, and who had finally gotten back in the temperance association and into the Church, when he decided to make a desperate effort to live a sober life; but his appetite was stronger than himself, and when calling for a glass of soda he inquired whether the server could not put "a drop of the creeter in unbeknownst to him." He said: "If these men shall get away unbeknownst to us, it will be the most fortunate solution of the issue." His desire was that those whom the popular vengeance of the North demanded for punishment should escape from the country until reason resumed its throne; and if he had been living when Davis had started for the coast, Lincoln's special care would have been that no Union troops would find him and hinder him in his journey.

I am glad to have lived until I have seen the North and South thoroughly reunited not simply in the union of States, but a union of hearts, of sympathy, of interest, and of patriotic devotion to one government and one flag. It was accomplished through countless suffering and sacrifice, but to-day the whole American people can join in just tribute to the memory of Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln.

[The VETERAN is indebted this month to the pen of Col. A. K. McClure, "the dean of Pennsylvania journalism," and at present Prothonotary of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, for a masterful and comprehensive article on Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln.

In January of this year Colonel McClure's eightieth birthday was celebrated by leading men of affairs, and youth and age mingled among the three hundred participants who gathered at the Hotel Majestic in Philadelphia to give the veteran editor of the Philadelphia Times a fresh start on the last span of life. Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, who was present, called attention to the world's estimate of a man's intellectual force at the age of eighty, and referred to Colonel McClure's marvelous activity and clearness of mental vision as an evidence that four score years need not leave men physically and mentally tottering.

Among the many things said of Colonel McClure on his eightieth birthday, the editor of the VETERAN has chosen two for its readers. Andrew Carnegie wrote: "You have that which should accompany old age—honor, love, obedience, and troops of friends." Clark Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, said: "The South joins in the friendly greetings of the nation to Colonel McClure. He has been one of the truest and best champions of the Southern development, and the South is fast fulfilling his prophecy of twenty years ago."

There are few men living better qualified than Colonel McClure to write of events and characters associated with the sixties, and the comparative study of Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln which Colonel McClure sends the VETERAN as his tribute to the centenary of a great man is a valuable contribution and one that will be widely read.

Though a warm personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and perhaps his ablest biographer, Colonel McClure is too close a student of sectional conditions and ethics not to appreciate the great men who figured during the Confederacy, and through his one-time journal, the Philadelphia Times, he never lost an opportunity to call the world's attention to the worth, the character, the fortitude of the Southern people, and the rich, resourceful possibilities of the Southland.

All honor to the man whose vision is big enough, clear enough to look over sectional differences and recognize the noblemen of nature wherever their abiding place!]

THE RANSOM POST, ST. LOUIS.

The VETERAN would report more at length than is practicable at present a visit to the Ransom Post of St. Louis on the evening of May 9, 1908. Mr. A. G. Peterson, a retired merchant of that city, spent several weeks of the early spring in Nashville, when it was his pleasure to make frequent visits to the VETERAN office and read its literature. He had been Commander of the Ransom Post for two terms and Department Commander of the G. A. R. for Missouri. He had written to this Post of his visits to the VETERAN, and resolutions had been passed expressive of gratitude and appreciation. Then upon his return invitations to visit the Post were so kind and so cordial that the evening referred to was given as indicated.

After speedily transacting the business matters of the regular meeting, the editor of the VETERAN was presented by Mr. Peterson. References to his pleasant visits and the courtesies shown him were expressed far beyond their merits.

Greeting and welcome were extended by the Commander, R. N. Denham, which, despite the facts to the contrary, made him feel as if an old friend were talking. A visiting Commander of the General Lyon Post made a pleasant address.

The greeting to Mr. Cunningham was so thoroughly cordial that he felt quite as much at home as if with his own comrades, and no word was uttered during the evening that would not have been cordially accepted everywhere in Dixie. The seventy-five present of the four hundred members yet surviving of a total membership of nine hundred and ninety-eight were composed of a highly representative class of men, including millionaires and distinguished ministers. They were as fine a body of men as could be imagined from the miscellaneous walks of life. This Post has had of its membership twenty-one general officers.

Delightful talks were made by Mr. C. L. Moss and Rev. T. L. Haggerty, who has been Chaplain of the Post throughout its history (the venerable man is eighty years old), a former Department and National Chaplain. Rev. C. H. Stocking sang (playing his own accompaniment) "The Sword of Bunker Hill." Mr. S. D. Webster made a pleasing talk upon the great issues that caused the war, imputing equally honest and patriotic motives to each side.

Mr. Charles P. Chesebro asked an explanation of why the battle of Franklin was fought. It was an especially interesting topic, as some of the veterans there could bear testimony to Confederate courage on that sanguinary field. Among them was Capt. J. K. Merrifield, whose capture of Confederate

MISS SARAH LEE EVANS, ATLANTA, GA.,
Sponsor for the South at Birmingham Reunion.

flags there secured to him a medal. The explanation was generally satisfactory. It was that Franklin was not of consequence to either side, but the hope of crushing the forces there and pressing on to Nashville before sufficient reinforcements could be assembled there to hold the fortifications so that every minute was of momentous importance.

Thanks to the Ransom Post for their unstinted hospitality to the representative in an important sense of all the Confederate organizations in existence.

Later published official report by the Post contains all expression of good will to be desired.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE DAVIS FAMILY.

BY MRS. E. G. BOYD, MORGANTOWN, VA.

Jefferson Davis was born in Kentucky, but during his infancy his father removed to Bayou Teche, La., and finally to Woodville, Miss.

It is a matter of interest to me that some years after the Davis family left Bayou Teche my father, Jesse D. Wright, owned a sugar plantation there. In spite of the fertile soil and beautiful orange groves, the malarial conditions of that locality probably caused the Davis family and our own to remove elsewhere.

Mr. Davis afterwards wrote of his home in Mississippi: "The population of the county in its western portion was generally composed of Kentuckians, Virginians, Tennesseans, and the like; while the eastern part of it was chiefly settled by South Carolinians and Georgians. The schools were kept in log cabins, and it was long before we had a 'county academy.' My first tuition was in the usual log cabin schoolhouse."

Among the South Carolina colonists at Woodville, Miss., was my grandfather, who in 1807 had made the difficult overland journey with his family, relatives, and friends. These colonists were Baptists; and as Mr. Samuel Davis, Jefferson's father, was a Baptist, our families met each other at church.

It was probably in one of the log schoolhouses referred to in the memoir that Jefferson Davis had a schoolmate, a little blue-eyed girl three years his senior. This little girl, Sarah

MISS VARINA DAVIS COOK, BATESVILLE, ARK.,
Chief Maid of Honor to Sponsor for the South.

Robert Crimball, then about nine years old, some thirty years later became my mother. During the Civil War she told her children about the day school near Woodville that she and her sisters and brothers had attended and about their little schoolmate, Jefferson Davis, who was now President of the Confederate States. My mother told us that he was a good boy and that the teacher was "Jeff's" brother.

After spending a few years at Woodville, my Grandfather Grimball, with a portion of the South Carolina colony, settled in Middle Louisiana. One of our neighbors there was Mrs. Helen Davis Keary, the niece of Jefferson Davis. Her husband enlisted in the Civil War as captain of a company in the 9th Louisiana, and was sent to the Army of Northern Virginia. Captain and Mrs. Keary had no children, and the beautiful and accomplished wife followed her husband wherever the fortunes of war called him. Much of her time in Virginia was spent at President Davis's home, and I think she and Mrs. Davis must have been near the same age, for I have heard her speak of "Varina." She is still living at her Louisiana home, a widow with one adopted daughter, the orphan child of my nephew, George Waters Stafford, who was a gallant Confederate officer.

At Baton Rouge I have many times walked through the grounds of the barracks where Gen. Zachary Taylor once lived, and doubtless over these same grounds Jefferson Davis and Sarah Knox Taylor often strolled together.

When the corner stone of the Confederate monument was laid at Montgomery, Ala., April 29, 1886, Mr. Davis passed through Auburn, Ala., where I was then living. At the railroad station the train halted, and Mr. Davis made a short address to the crowd gathered to see him. I was standing near the car, saw the noble man, and heard his impassioned words.

Mr. J. U. Payne, at whose home Mr. Davis died in New Orleans, was my mother's business friend and adviser for many years. When the body of Mr. Davis was removed to Richmond, I was at Auburn and saw the glass funeral car, which permitted a view of our honored and beloved friend.

CABIN JOHN BRIDGE.

Cabin John Bridge is one of the show places about Washington, and spans a gorge in the upper Potomac Valley. It is about ten miles from the White House. The bridge is about four hundred and fifty feet long with a span of two hundred and twenty, and is an important aqueduct for carrying Washington's water supply, besides being a valuable highway bridge. For a long time numerous stories have been afloat in connection with the mutilation of this arch and the erasure of the name of Jefferson Davis.

The order for the removal of Mr. Davis's name was given by Caleb R. Smith, Secretary of the Interior, in June, 1862.

William R. Hutton, who was an engineer in the aqueduct construction and became chief engineer of the work, is authority for the statement that in June, 1862, at the request of Caleb R. Smith, he accompanied the Secretary and several members of Congress on a tour of inspection of the aqueduct by way of the canal. Opposite Cabin John several of the party disembarked and walked to the bridge to obtain a nearer view. Returning in haste, Galusha Grow, of Pennsylvania, exclaimed: "Do you know that that Rebel Meigs has put Jeff Davis's name on the bridge?"

Turning to Hutton, Secretary Smith said: "The first order I give you is to cut Jeff Davis's name off the bridge." A few days later came Hutton's appointment as chief engineer of the aqueduct; but, not having taken Secretary Smith's remark seriously, he did nothing in the matter. A week later Robert McIntyre, the contractor, returned to pay his respects to the Secretary, and Mr. Smith repeated the order to have the name cut off. "With great pleasure," was the contractor's reply, and his first work was the erasure of Mr. Davis's name.

JERSEYMEN HONOR ALABAMIANS.

PHILADELPHIA DAUGHTERS ENTERTAINED BY THEM ALSO.

An interesting event in the history of the Gen. Dabney H. Maury Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy, of Philadelphia, was an invitation recently to be the guests of Gen. and Mrs. Burd Grubb at their beautiful home, Edgewater Park, New Jersey. The occasion was the reunion of General Grubb's company, the 23d New Jersey. This reunion has been held each year by General Grubb since the war ended. The especial feature this year was the address by Col. Hilary Herbert, Secretary of the Navy under President Cleveland, who fought with his brave Alabama troops a hard-fought battle against General Grubb and his equally brave New Jersey men at Salem Church, Va..

Recently this same 23d New Jersey placed to the memory of their comrades who fell at Salem Church a monument on this battlefield, and are, I believe, the only company owning their hard-fought field of glory, where their dead rest. Inscriptions are on three sides of the monument. On the fourth side is a beautiful tribute to the memory of the brave Alabama troops who fell with them. This is worthy of record of General Grubb and his brave men, and is, I believe, the first act of the kind ever done by a victorious foe.

A very beautiful address was made by Colonel Herbert, who was introduced most eloquently by General Grubb. This was followed by an address by the beloved President of the Gen. Dabney H. Maury Chapter, Mrs. Nandain Duer (who was Miss Poe, of Baltimore), who captured the hearts of all the old soldiers as well as the large number of Philadelphians who heard her. Mrs. Duer extended an invitation to the 23d New Jersey to be the guests of the Chapter at the annual celebration of General Lee's birthday in January, which is also the twelfth anniversary of the organization of the Gen. Dabney H. Maury Chapter, the first organized in the North.

GEN. EDMUND W. RUCKER, A COMMANDER OF CAVALRY.

A sketch of some thrilling experiences of Gen. Rucker's are anticipated ere long.

Our good work here goes on more far-reaching in every way. We have endowed a room in the Mary Ball Hospital, Fredericksburg, Va., known as the "Gen. Dabney H. Maury

MISS JANE MEREDITH, LAWRENCEBURG, TENN.,
Sponsor for Gen. Rucker's Division, Forrest's Cavalry.

MISS SADIE GILLESPIE AND MISS MARJORIE WEATHERLY, Maids of Honor to Miss Meredith.

Memorial Room," for Confederate soldiers. We help to bury the dead Confederates and care for the living and answer appeals everywhere from our sister Chapters.

Ever since the organization of the Gen. Dabney H. Maury Chapter the care of the graves of the two hundred and twenty-four unknown Confederate dead who lie buried in the national cemeteries of Philadelphia has had our especial care. We placed some six years ago a monument to these men in Hollywood, Richmond, Va., permission having been given the President of our Chapter by the Secretary of War. We decorate the graves with our flags, wreaths, and colors each Memorial Day. We have adopted the Memorial Day in Virginia, the 23d of May, and place our offerings then. Being in national cemeteries, the graves are beautifully cared for, and a wreath is also placed each year on the Northern Memorial Day by the Devin Cavalry Post, of Philadelphia.

A recent entertainment which our Chapter gave here, combined with two other prominent Philadelphia charities, was not only a social success, but realized several hundred dollars for the Gen. Dabney H. Maury Chapter, Philadelphia.

[The foregoing is from Mrs. James T. Halsey, Honorary President Philadelphia Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy.]

GEORGIA U. D. C.

The Georgia Division, U. D. C., enrolled three new Chapters during the month of April, and the able State President, Alice Baxter, admonishes the Georgia Daughters to work for more Chapters until the Virginia record of one hundred and three is reached and passed. Georgia's President sees no reason why her Daughters should be surpassed in the Old Dominion.

MISS PEARL HAGGARD, WINCHESTER, KY.,

Sponsor for Kentucky Division, U. C. V., Birmingham Rennon.

The three new Chapters are Ben Hill, of Fitzgerald, Fanny Gordon, of Eastman, and Charlotte B. Carson, of Tifton. Mrs. T. J. Latham, of Tennessee, wintered at Tifton, and the Daughters of that place feel that she did much to inspire the formation of the new Tifton Chapter. The Fanny Gordon Chapter has many granddaughters as charter members.

The hope of the future for the General U. D. C. lies with the granddaughters. Let them but enroll, study Confederate history, catch enthusiasm from the wives, daughters, and nieces of veterans, then as the years go on they will be equipped with knowledge, love, and loyalty—requisites to further the great work of guarding the history of their Confederate ancestors.

REPORTS OF GENERAL CONVENTION U. D. C.

BY MRS. ANDREW L. DOWDELL, RECORDING SECRETARY.

To Chapters and Members of the U. D. C.: By a new ruling at the Norfolk Convention two copies of the minutes of that Convention were sent to the President of each Chapter, one to the President of each Division, one to each of the general officers and honorary officer, one to the chairman of each committee, to the Solid South Room of the Confederate Museum at Richmond, to the Confederate Museum at New Orleans, and to each member of the Shiloh Monument Committee.

All of these were sent out in February at the expense of the office of the Recording Secretary General, also a few copies were sent by courtesy of the U. D. C., and a large number besides these have been sent to those Chapters which sent in orders with money to defray the expense of postage or express charges on same.

So many times the Secretary receives letters inquiring the price of these minutes. Please note the fact that the minutes are published for the instruction of the Daughters of the Confederacy. These books belong to you, and we only ask that you send to the Secretary General the amount of postage or express charges. The lowest rate that we have been able to secure from the express company is half a cent an ounce when prepaid, which price is the same as the mailing rate. Each book weighs seventeen ounces and costs nine cents per copy to be forwarded either by mail or express. The Chapters will please bear in mind that twenty-five cents is not a sufficient amount to send three copies, and it is too much for two copies; therefore we ask that you send the exact amount when ordering the minutes.

We still have several hundred of these minutes on hand; and if any Chapter desires more than the two copies which were sent to its President, we will be glad to send them if the required postage or express charge is sent with the order. Let us urge the Chapters or the individual members to send for these books which are so instructive on our work. Your Secretary General wishes to call your attention and ask that the Chapter officers read carefully "General Instructions," page 323 of the minutes of the Norfolk Convention. The information there obtained will save work for the Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTION FUNDS FOR VETERANS.

To many noble spirits there is an unwritten law without limitation that accompanies the question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" Among the destitute and infirm a multitude of needs are daily—yea, hourly—supplied by an army of souls the world over who strive to be helpful through their service to beings less fortunate than themselves. But there is a peculiar, subtle, tender quality in the kind of charity that handles those situations where a beneficiary might possibly forego the actual comfort of a necessity in order to be provided with the luxuries of life that have grown into habits.

The VETERAN occasionally receives a private communication, begging that an inclosed dollar be accepted as a subscription for some one whose name has been withdrawn for reasons other than lack of interest.

One of these delicate evidences of thoughtfulness came sometime ago, as may be recalled, through Mr. George H. Heafford, of Chicago, a Union soldier, who wished to provide ten subscriptions to old soldiers of Texas who live in memory with their comrades at arms and who revel in hearing of the days when their principles made them heroes.

And now the Chicago Chapter, U. D. C., has evinced a most generous spirit in appropriating the sum of twelve dollars for the purpose of furnishing free subscriptions to the VETERAN "to twelve men, tried and true, who because of age have lost earning power," and are therefore unable to subscribe for their dearly loved journal.

Here is provided a beautiful way to bring light to lives that have narrowed to pathetic margins, and the VETERAN would have it understood that this is but the beginning of further efforts to be made for those "traveling adown the western hill toward the sunset of this little life," those who bravely bore the marches, hunger, cold, and defeat. All honor to them!

Confederate Veteran.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM, Editor and Proprietor.
Office: Methodist Publishing House Building, Nashville, Tenn.

This publication is the personal property of S. A. Cunningham. All persons who approve its principles and realize its benefits as an organ for Associations throughout the South are requested to commend its patronage and to cooperate in extending its circulation. Let each one be constantly diligent.

NUMBERING PAGES OF THE VETERAN.

It seemed to be so necessary to increase the VETERAN for January from forty-eight to sixty-four pages that, to continue the regular numbering of forty-eight pages, the sixteen extra pages were designated by the Roman numerals. (By this method, if the same number of pages each month, it is much easier in making dummies.) Another increase of the same number of pages became necessary later on, then another, and still another; so that the consecutive increase of pages has begun with this issue, and the numbers run from two hundred and forty to three hundred and four. Previous to this number the increase of pages has equaled an entire issue of the VETERAN, and it is likely to be as much more during the year.

Expressions of gratitude and praise for the VETERAN are unequalled perhaps in journalism, and merited if to do one's best continually, regardless of expense and labor, be the test.

Now to patrons: Does it occur to you that in reciprocity you might do the gracious thing to send a new subscription? Could you do it? A high railroad official whose father was a general officer in the Confederate army discontinued his patronage recently, saying he is too busy to read it and that he previously subscribed to help the VETERAN, but that it does not need his help now. In sincere gratitude for his kindness, if he would see the "Last Roll" department as it appears each month, would he not realize that every man who thinks enough of the publication to "help" it should do so continually? How many, many thousands there are who ought to "help the VETERAN!" Happily, the publication is able to pay all of its bills all the time; but it is upon a basis that is crumbling upon the established fact that the veterans are its mainstay and that they are falling out of ranks by divisions. Confederates, Southerners, patriots, you who are too busy to read, won't you agree to tax yourself one dollar a year to see it maintained?

If you will consider the situation, you will realize that ere long you can't find an old soldier to make glad continually by sending him the VETERAN. The breezes of heaven will wave the grass over his grave, and you may then wish that you had contributed to his happiness and also that you had contributed to a record that will be accepted by all the world and justify your ancestors in the sacrifices that they made in the sixties—and in the seventies.

For fifteen years the founder of the VETERAN has handed copies and mailed them unstintedly to personal friends who have enjoyed them and yet who have never contributed one cent to its support. Is this patriotic? Is it fair? Is it right to withhold your patronage? In all these years he has never directly solicited a subscription. Will they go on to the judgment, grow old, and die without ever having contributed anything to this worthy object? Will they?

On page 280 there may be seen the fine face of Miss Elliott Todhunter, of Lexington, Mo., who has contributed to the joy of veterans at several General Reunions.

CHRISTMAS SPIRIT AT REUNIONS.

The spirit of liberality toward Confederate veterans gives the Christmas spirit to Reunion periods. Well-to-do comrades, in many instances, are unstinted in providing transportation and other expenses for these occasions. A few rich Confederates are standing aloof, but it is evidently to their sorrow. In the hard struggle to obtain a competency when all was gone save honor they pressed their avocations and stayed from Reunions until they can't graciously begin now, and they are to be pitied even if censured. They should, however, remember that "while the light holds out to burn," etc.

A noticeable feature in supplying funds for Reunion purposes is that there is not known a disposition to take advantage. For instance, brave old South Carolinians do not use at their State Reunions as much as has been voted them by more than a thousand dollars. A fine illustration is given in Tennessee of this spirit. A few months ago it was ascertained incidentally that Judge John K. Shields, of the Tennessee Supreme Court, furnished forty dollars each to five old soldiers to attend the Richmond Reunion, that being the estimate given by a veteran. To his surprise more than half of the sum was returned. Much is being given on these occasions, and it would be a blessing if the spirit would spread more and more. Opportunities will not last.

MISS EMMA M'DAVITT LEEDY, BIRMINGHAM,
Maid of Honor to Sponsor for the South, Reunion 1908.

Referring to the many inquiries for survivors of certain commands that they may testify to the record of departed comrades whose widows are seeking pensions, the quicker way to secure these records would be to write to the Chief of Records and Pensions, War Department, Washington, D. C., giving the letter of company and number of regiment.

JUSTIFICATION OF MAJOR WIRZ BY A FEDERAL.

[The VETERAN has been interested in producing testimony in regard to the unfortunate Major Wirz, whose memory is so detested by thousands of honest people at the North. Its testimony, however, has been mainly from the prisoners. It would stop short of simple justice rather than aggravate those who are so uncompromising. The following sketch was prepared by Dr. R. A. Halley as a gracious service. Mr. Kantzler is a friend of Mr. J. Ryan, of Chicago, who served in a battery so constantly at the front that he had amazing knowledge of conditions throughout that Georgia campaign. Its editor does not care to have greater confidence in a fellow-man than in Mr. Ryan, while Dr. Halley wrote directly from conversation with Mr. Kantzler, and he is one of the most capable of journalists. Let those who do not concur in the belief that Major Wirz was innocent of any avoidable severity to the prisoners consider well what Mr. Kantzler said to Dr. Halley. The VETERAN regards the testimony of Mr. Kantzler as absolutely true.]

CHICAGO, May, 1908.

A valuable contribution to the truth of history in relation to the case of Captain Wirz, executed after the close of the War between the States after conviction by prejudiced witnesses, is furnished by a man who for many months was a prisoner at Andersonville, and who was brought daily into intimate relations with Captain Wirz and with the prisoners. Until the time of his capture the narrator was a soldier in active service, and went through many of the hard-fought campaigns with Grant. His name is Jacob Kantzler, and he lives at 3149 Prairie Avenue, Chicago. Mr. Kantzler retains a remarkably clear remembrance of the stirring events in which he participated, and is one of the old soldiers with whom the war ended when peace was declared.

December 31, 1861, Mr. Kantzler enlisted in Company A of the 1st Regiment of Illinois Light Artillery (the Chicago Light Artillery) at Paducah, Ky. He failed to get enrolled before the departure of the regiment because it was full. Being notified of an opening when the regiment was at Paducah, he went to that place and enlisted. He was in the stirring engagements in West Tennessee and in Mississippi, at Fort Donelson and Fort Henry, at Corinth, at Memphis, at Chickasaw Bayou, and then went back up the Mississippi to aid in taking Arkansas Post; thence he went with his company back to Vicksburg and stayed until the historic surrender of that stronghold of the Confederacy. Then his company went with the victorious army back to retake Jackson, which had fallen into Federal hands on May 14 previous, but was abandoned after destroying the supplies stored there. Just after the capture of Jackson for the second time he was captured by the Confederates. Details had been sent out by three of the Illinois regiments on a foraging expedition east of the Pearl River, and there they ran straight into Jackson's Cavalry, and about one hundred of them were taken prisoners.

After capture they traveled some at the expense of the South. They were taken first to a point five miles east of Jackson, thence to Brandon, Miss., and then to Mobile, Ala., where they stayed a week. From Mobile they were sent by way of Montgomery to Atlanta, where they rested another week, and were then sent to Belle Isle, where they arrived late in August, 1863. The 27th of the following February, 1864, they were sent South to Andersonville, just established, and were almost the first prisoners to arrive. As they went from place to place the number of the party kept increasing, as new prisoners would constantly be taken and sent along with the original detachment. In Andersonville Mr. Kantzler stayed until September 7, 1864, when he was sent to Savannah, and after two months there was exchanged. He had asked Captain Wirz to let him be among the first exchanged; the Captain had promised, and he kept his word. Kantzler went with the first batch sent for exchange after the tardy consent of the Federal government to take them back.

"When I got to Andersonville," says Mr. Kantzler, "Captain Wirz and others would make the rounds to count the men every morning; and after the second or third day, I discovered by his speech that he was German. Being German myself, I spoke to him in that language and asked him to give me a place to work, so that I could sleep better and get enough to eat, as I was not strong. He said he would recollect me, and the next morning, after counting the prisoners, he told me to walk up to the main gate and wait for him there. As he came along he told the guard to pass me. When I got outside to the headquarters, he talked of what he intended to do, and said he would establish a hospital outside the main prison. He told me he wanted me to act as commissary, to treat everybody alike, to do the best I could for the sick with what they could furnish me for that purpose, and he would furnish me with all the utensils possible and let me call other men out from the prison to help me. I got all the men from my own company on as ward masters, and so saved them from the suffering that unavoidably came to most of the men. I had my freedom and could pass anywhere within half a mile of the camp; but Captain Wirz cautioned us not to try to escape, as he said we would certainly be caught, and it would go hard with us. If we obeyed instructions, it would be better for us. He seemed to take a liking for me, and I did for him.

"I never saw Captain Wirz mistreat any one, but I have seen the tears run down his face at viewing the existing conditions, tears shed because he could not help things being as they were. Food was always scarce at Andersonville, but not so scarce at first as afterwards. There was not enough to eat at Belle Isle, but it was better than at Andersonville. The prisoners knew why we had nothing more to eat, for we all talked about it. There was never enough, but we knew the reason. The number of prisoners kept increasing faster than the facilities could be increased for taking care of them. The Federal armies were drawing closer from all directions, and the prisoners kept coming in from every section, so that Andersonville was overcrowded. Captain Wirz did not receive due notice that new men were coming, and he could not get the food or provide the accommodations to care for them even in the most primitive manner. And we knew too that the very men guarding us had not enough to eat in those days. The facilities for cooking were poor, and so the food was very often given out raw, and this was the cause of a great deal of the suffering and hunger. Another disadvantage we had as compared with the Confederates who ate the same food as we had was that most of them had been used to corn bread and bacon as a large part of their regular food, and we had not been accustomed to it and did not know even how to cook the bread properly. That undoubtedly led to a great deal of the sickness, such as the diarrhea, which was so fatal to us. But the constant coming of additional prisoners up to the very time we went off to be exchanged, September 7, 1864, caused the real trouble. The men in charge of us did not give the proper care simply for the reason that they could not.

"In my estimation Captain Wirz did the very best he could do under the circumstances, and few could have done as well as he did. He was not a deliberately cruel man, and no cruelty originated with him. When I say this I say what I know, from my personal observation, to be true. He had to carry out his orders, and he had to keep the prisoners from escaping. Captain Wirz was good-hearted by nature, and had nothing cruel about him. He could not justly be held accountable for the killing of prisoners by the guards, and gave no such orders—did not even know the offenders. These guards were not average men, not average Southerners, for the reason that they were either very old men or very young men. All who were well and strong were in the field, and only those who could not do duty in the field could be spared for guard duty. They lacked judgment, and killed men where real soldiers would have avoided it. The character of these guards could not be properly charged up against Captain Wirz. Captain Wirz was a thorough soldier, and would not have mistreated anybody.

"Our great suffering was from lack of shelter, though close to the great forests. We might have built our own shelters, but there were no men to cut the timber for us, and not even men enough to guard the prisoners if they had been sent into the forests. And it cannot be doubted that if the men who were prisoners had been permitted to go by themselves many of them—perhaps most of them—naturally would have made every effort to get away, and would have thus caused no end of trouble to the officers in command of the prison. And very few of the prisoners were strong enough to do the work of felling and cutting the trees and building houses. For nearly forty thousand prisoners we should have had at least four thousand guards, whereas we had few. The Confederates could not spare the men, and the fear of a general breaking out restrained them from allowing us much liberty. Privileges could not be granted. Owing to the inadequacy of arrangements, too, the cook house was not large enough, and many of the men ate their food without cooking or half-cooked. During all the Atlanta campaign the prisoners kept coming so fast that there was no chance to take the proper care of them.

"As to the 'dead line,' every prisoner in the camp knew just where it was, and knew that if he crossed it he would be shot. There was no uncertainty about this. I have seen men warned back when they would apparently unthoughtedly cross it; but there were few instances of this unthoughtedness, for, as I say, there was no uncertainty as to where the 'dead line' was. Captain Wirz never approved of a guard killing men for nothing; and if any man were ever shot when he accidentally crossed the line, it was the fault of the guard and not of Captain Wirz. Some of the guards used no discretion in obeying orders and others did. But it was not Captain Wirz's fault where lack of discretion was apparent. As to the testimony of prisoners during the trial that men were shot while reaching across the 'dead line' to get purer water, that is simply false. There was a large brook that ran all the way across the prison yard with an ample supply of water at all times, and the water was the same everywhere inside the inclosure. It was fine water, too, and always perfectly clear except just after a heavy rain, when it would be riled for a time. But it was either clear or muddled all along its course, and not better outside the 'dead line' than inside it.

"With the supplies at hand Captain Wirz tried conscientiously to do the best he could. Clothing was not plentiful, but we did not go naked or ragged. We never buried a prisoner with good clothes on. My orders, with the approval of Captain Wirz, were to save all the dead men's good clothes, wash them, and give them out where needed. Many of us had our blankets when captured and carried them to prison with us. They were never taken away from us, and there was no greater suffering on account of lack of clothing than the Confederate soldiers themselves experienced.

"Had I not been confined to my bed with sickness at the time of Captain Wirz's trial, I should have gone voluntarily and testified in his behalf. I had no idea of the fate that was hanging over him, and never understood why so many gave false testimony against him. These men either knew better than to testify as they did or they were absolutely ignorant of the truth in regard to the matter. Men who testified strongest against him had absolutely no acquaintance with him and knew nothing about him. They were not capable of judging him or his treatment of the prisoners.

MISS STELL HOLCOMB, LULING, TEX.,
Sponsor for Trans-Mississippi Department.

The faults which they testified were his were in every case the faults of the guards and not those of Captain Wirz at all.

"His execution was wrong and was due to the testimony of men who were hopelessly ignorant or hopelessly prejudiced and who held him guilty of things of which he had no knowledge and concerning which he had given no orders. He was as humane a man as I ever knew, and sympathized with the suffering which he could not alleviate. The men who did know him knew that, and that they were not on hand voluntarily to testify for him was due to their knowledge of the man and their ignorance of the sort of testimony that was going to be given against him."

MORE ABOUT THE FLAG OF 12TH GEORGIA.

BY A. F. WALLEN, CHARLESTON, W. VA.

In the March VETERAN I notice an article headed "Flag of the Twelfth Georgia Artillery," by W. H. Hitt, whom I know well, and know to be one of the bravest men I have ever seen. I am the "Wallin" he speaks of—A. F. Wallen. It is Wallen instead of Wallin, and "Company F" should be Company D.

I shall never forget the incident referred to. (See page 113.) It was on the limber chest of a twelve-pound Napoleon gun that I managed to mount as it was moving off. I got three slight wounds before I reached the gun, and I remember well how thick the balls flew around us as the horses rushed away. When we reached Cedar Creek Bridge, Sheridan's Cavalry were there. They ordered the drivers to halt, which they did not do; so they shot the lead driver and horses before the gun stopped. I escaped to the woods.

Comrade Hitt closes with the statement that by good authority he understands that the flag of the 12th was deposited in a wagon on the retreat from Petersburg, which is not correct. The flag of the 12th was in line during all of the fighting from Petersburg to Appomattox, and on the very morning

MISS FAY HUME, KANSAS CITY,
Maid of Honor for Trans-Mississippi Department.

of surrender, when General Custer came in with the flag of truce to General Lee, the flag of the 12th was planted on a battery that we had just captured. I cannot recall the members of Company D or Company F that were present, but I remember that Maj. Sam Crump, of Augusta, was there.

Now, then, as to what became of the flag: About midnight we were all sitting around the camp fire (just think of the remnant of the 12th Georgia sitting around one camp fire!) when one of the members of Company A from Nunen (and I think he was also a member of our band) brought the colors without the staff, and each member present got a piece of it. The piece I got I carried a number of years, until finally in 1870 in Cuba I lost it.

Make this article suit your space, but get the flag of the 12th where it always was—in the front and not in a wagon.

W. H. McAbee, Oklahoma, writes: "I don't hear much from old Georgia; and as I was one of the boys who went from Dalton in 1861 in the 4th Georgia Battalion, Company D, to the coast, I want to greet the boys who were with me there."

MADE "MARK" ON JEFFERSON DAVIS BOND.

BY COL. M. H. CLARK, CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

In reply to a question of the editor in the VETERAN for May about the bail bond of President Davis, "It is singular that 'his mark' is given to the names of James Thomas and Thomas R. Price; who and where from were they?"

As I am a Richmond (Va.) boy myself, I will answer your question. Both were among the most prominent citizens of Richmond. Both were wealthy, educated gentlemen who had retired from business on account of old age, Mr. Thomas R. Price having been a dry goods merchant with a large business, and Mr. James Thomas, Sr., the largest tobacco manufacturer in the city, and also owning the largest residence in Richmond. Both were patriotic and devoted Confederates, and spent many thousands of dollars for the cause. On account of old age their hands had become shaky, and their names were written and they made their marks with hearty good will. They had "made their marks" in many ways before.

MR. JO. LANE STERNE WRITES FROM RICHMOND.

* * * A copy of this bond was for a long time hanging on the walls in the State Library at Richmond, and attached to it was a statement to the effect that Mr. Thomas was quite ill and unable to write his name, suffering from nervousness, and I have frequently heard the same statement made by Mr. James Lyons, whose name is signed as a surety on the bond, and who also informed me that Mr. Thomas R. Price was blind and could not see to write his name.

Both Mr. Thomas and Mr. Price were residents of Richmond, both merchants of the highest business and social standing, and were friends of President Davis during his residence in Richmond.

CAPT. FRANK W. CUNNINGHAM WRITES FROM RICHMOND.

* * * Both of them were estimable citizens and among our richest men. Having just recovered from a severe spell of sickness, they were unable to sign their names legibly; therefore they made their marks. Mr. James Thomas, Jr., was one of our richest tobaccoists. Too old during the war for active service, he yet aided in every way possible our cause. He was the father of Dr. J. L. M. Curry's last wife. He has been dead for a number of years, and has left a monument to himself in an endowment to the Richmond College.

Thomas R. Price has been dead some twenty years or so, and was one of our best merchants. Their memory is sacred.

HUGH LEE POWELL, LEESBURG, VA., WRITES OF THEM.

* * * I am glad I can supply the desired information. James Thomas, Jr., was the largest manufacturer of plug tobacco and one of the wealthiest men in Richmond. He was afflicted with cataract and lost his sight, and was obliged to use his mark and some one wrote the name for him. Thomas R. Price was another case of loss of sight, compelling the use of his mark in signing his name. He was the owner of the largest and finest retail dry goods store in Richmond. After the great fire and the evacuation of Richmond, he lost his store; but was ready as soon as it was possible to do so to recommence his life work. I left his employment in April, 1861, to join the army. A son of his went with me—Maj. R. Channing Price, who was killed at Chancellorsville as the adjutant general of J. E. B. Stuart's Cavalry Division.

[The above illustrates how the VETERAN serves in bringing light out of darkness in Confederate matters.]

FLORIDA IN STATUARY HALL.

An article under the caption "Last to Surrender" appeared sometime ago in the Washington Herald; and while it would be filled with interest to all Confederates and sympathizers, it has peculiar interest for Floridians. It refers to the fact that Florida is one of the several States not thus far represented in Statuary Hall, at Washington, and no graven image is yet in the national Capitol of any of her distinguished sons.

MISS ADA H. GREEN (GRANDDAUGHTER OF GEN. S. G. FRENCH), Sponsor for Florida Division.

Provision at last has been made for Florida's partial representation in the National Hall of Fame, as the State Legislature has made an appropriation for a life-size statue of Gen. E. Kirby Smith, who was among the last, if not actually the last, of the Confederate army commanders to surrender.

Gen. E. Kirby Smith was a Floridian by birth, and was one of the most stubborn fighters in the South. Toward the close of the great conflict he was stationed in Texas and had command of the scattered remnants of the Confederate armies in the Southwest. Soon after his surrender he was elected President of the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., and followed the example of his illustrious commander in chief, Robert E. Lee, in devoting himself assiduously to the education of the youth of the South.

Like General Lee, he refused numerous offers of employment, any one of which accepted by him would have made him a rich man. He preferred, however, to give all of his time and his talents to building up at Sewanee an institution of learning to which the young men of the South could turn in the hour of greatest need of their parents. For this sacrifice his memory is revered in every Southern household where his post-bellum record is now known.

V. F. Stansbury, of Abbeville, La., desires information concerning Capt. F. F. Feray, who was a Louisianian, and at the time of his enlistment was residing at Opelousas, St. Landry Parish. Any information as to what company he belonged to and where they were stationed at the close of the Civil War, also what battles they engaged in, will be gratefully received.

CONFEDERATE CIRCLE, ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

TREASURER WALLACE STREATER'S REPORT.

April 20, 1908, balance on hand, $4,461.67; April 27, 1908, from Thomas F. Ryan, New York City, $500; May 4, 1908, from Mrs. Robert C. May, Miami, Fla., $15; May 16, 1908, from Mrs. John J. Crawford, New York City, State Director A. C. M. A., $100; May 16, 1908, from Mrs. Thomas S. Bockock, Richmond, Va., State Director A. C. M. A., $50.25; May 16, 1908, from Francis S. Affey, New York City, $5; May 16, 1908, from James Lowndes, Washington, D. C., $25; May 16, 1908, from Eldredge E. Jordan, Washington, D. C., $10. Total receipts, $5,166.92.

For expenditures the Treasurer deducts $40 paid to Mrs. A. E. Johnson, postage on circulars to Veteran Camps, leaving balance on hand $5,126.92.

Washington, D. C., May 16, 1908.

COMMENDS THE VETERAN TO COMRADES.

In official "General Orders No. 15" Lieut. Gen. Clement A. Evans, commanding the Army of Tennessee Department, U. C. V., emphasizes his views about the VETERAN:

"He is pleased to state that the CONFEDERATE VETERAN, published at Nashville, Tenn., and the official organ of the several foregoing bodies, as well as of our own, is prospering and annually enlarging its circulation. The Commander feels that the VETERAN, under the able management and editorship of S. A. Cunningham, deserves the special aid of every Camp, Chapter, and Association affiliating with our organization, and the patronage of every individual Confederate Veteran. He trusts that its present large subscription list will soon be doubled, and its influence more generally felt.

"Headquarters of this Army Department during the reunion will be established at Hotel Hillman, where the several staff officers and Division Commanders at Birmingham will report to the Lieutenant General commanding."

MISS HARRISON, DAUGHTER OF GEN. GEORGE P. HARRISON,
Maid of Honor to Chief Sponsor, U. C. V., at Birmingham Reunion.

FROM PALMETTO, GA., TO DEFEAT AT NASHVILLE.

BY GEN. S. D. LEE.

(Written about 1876.)

The army remained about ten days at Palmetto Station. About September 29, 1864, General Hood, having sent to the rear all dispensable baggage, suddenly broke up his camp and crossed the Chattahoochee River for a raid with his entire army on Sherman's communications. He destroyed the railroad tracks at many places, moving north as far as Dalton, which place he captured. An attempt was also made on Altoona and a demonstration on Resaca. The three small corps were kept in supporting distance of each other, and lived off the already impoverished country by foraging off the main track, which had been divested already. Lee's Corps, being in the rear, suddenly fell back into Snake Creek Gap as Sherman's army advanced from Atlanta in pursuit of Hood. He held the Gap on the 13th, 14th, and 15th of October to enable Hood with his other two corps to move from Dalton through Mattox Gap and pass in his rear.

The enemy appeared before the Gap on the 14th. On the 15th several corps of the enemy had arrived before it. Deas's (Alabama) and Brantley's (Mississippi) Brigades of Johnston's Division did what fighting was done at the Gap, and displayed signal gallantry in holding it. As soon as Sherman accumulated sufficient strength to force an entrance Lee withdrew his brigade and followed in the rear of Hood's other two corps. The enemy followed a day's march through the Gap and retraced his steps back to his railroad. Hood was at Gadsden October 21. On the 29th he was in the Tennessee Valley with two corps (Cheatham's and Stewart's) before Decatur. Lee was ordered to force a passage of the Tennessee in the vicinity of Florence, Ala. This was done at the Muscle Shoals, several miles above Florence, by Johnston's Division. Sharp's Mississippi Brigade was thrown across by using pontoons as boats late in the evening of the 30th of October. The brigade after forming marched from the bank toward the main road leading from Florence eastward and encountered a small cavalry force, which was easily repulsed and driven off. Clayton forced a crossing with Gibson's Louisiana Brigade in positions opposite Florence and near the old bridge. The crossing here was very spirited, as the sharpshooters of the enemy held the opposite bank. Several batteries of artillery covered the crossing, and their firing kept the enemy under cover till Gibson landed, when he rapidly drove the enemy's cavalry through Florence. A pontoon bridge was soon laid across the river and Lee's Corps bivouacked around Florence.

Hood was delayed at Tusculum and Florence for twenty days before he could get the necessary clothing, ammunition, and provisions to enable him to march into Tennessee. He had arranged for these supplies to meet him on arrival at Tusculum, and he was much embarrassed at the delay, which of course lessened the chances of success for him, as it enabled the enemy to prepare and concentrate to meet him. He finally got off about November 20. The enemy fell back from Pulaski and other points as soon as he started toward Columbia and Nashville. Hood's advance was at Columbia on November 26. Two corps of the enemy were at this point. On the night of the 27th the enemy evacuated Columbia, taking a strong position on the opposite side of Duck River, prepared to dispute its passage. Their advance was in strong rifle pits two hundred and fifty yards from the river bank.

General Hood determined by a rapid march to try to reach the rear of the enemy near Spring Hill. He took Cheatham's and Stewart's Corps and Johnston's Division of Lee's Corps and commenced the movement on the night of the 28th and 29th of November. Lee, with his two remaining divisions, was directed to occupy and hold the enemy in his position opposite Columbia till Hood could reach Spring Hill on the 29th. Lee early on the 29th commenced demonstrating to cross by the use and display of pontoons with artillery demonstration. He held the enemy until past midday, and in the evening crossed some of his troops and captured the rifle pits of the enemy in a most gallant charge made by his Alabama brigade of Stevenson's Division, under command of Brig. Gen. E. W. Pettus. The troops of the enemy were held (most of them) till long after dark on the 29th. The last of them left Lee's front about 2 A.M. on the 30th of November, Lee pursuing and reaching Spring Hill by 9 A.M. on the 30th of November, while Hood with his two corps reached Spring Hill the afternoon of the 29th long before dark, and why the enemy was not fought and captured at Spring Hill is yet a mystery.

Before starting from Columbia it was understood that the first troops reaching the pike at Spring Hill should cross it or commence fighting and would be supported and reinforced by the other troops as they arrived in succession on the field. A lodgment was to be made on the pike and the march of the enemy stopped. Lee was to follow the enemy as they moved from Columbia and attack in their rear. Forrest's Cavalry and Cheatham's Corps were in advance. Only a small division of the enemy was encountered. No serious engagement took place. Stewart's Corps arrived before dark. The enemy almost in a panic passed all night along the pike at a double-quick—wagons, artillery, etc. Our troops were in bivouac not eight hundred yards from the pike, seeing and hearing it all, and no serious attempt was made to stop it. A simple advance of one division a few hundred yards would have secured the pike. A few rounds of artillery would have routed the enemy.

Stragglers from the enemy came into our camps to light their pipes and were captured, believing we were their friends. The movement was well executed by Hood's two corps. The conception of the whole plan was brilliant and well executed, all but the fighting at the critical moment. Lee did his part, and after a march of twelve or fifteen miles was on hand at Spring Hill at 9 A.M. on the morning of the 30th to take a hand. Rumor said it was the fault of the commander of the leading corps. His friends said Hood was near enough to have enforced his orders and to have seen that they were executed.

Some one at this late day should be made responsible for the egregious blunder, mistake, or disobedience, as it certainly entailed the next day a terrible slaughter on as gallant an army as ever went into battle—at Franklin. The slaughter, too, was inflicted by the same troops that were at the mercy of the Confederates the previous evening and night. The enemy having escaped at Spring Hill without a fight, Hood put his troops on march to follow them up toward Franklin, Stewart's Corps in advance, then Cheatham's, then Lee's. Hood found the enemy intrenched at Franklin, and he determined to fight and carry the place and, if possible, whip them before reaching Nashville. Lee's Corps (two divisions), having advanced from Columbia by a forced march, moved leisurely forward from Spring Hill. Hood about 4 P.M. was about attacking the enemy with Stewart's and Cheatham's Corps. Lee was directed to move two of his divisions in supporting distance, to be used if necessary. Even now (quite late) as the two corps moved to the assault over an open plain of about one mile the movement was gallant in the extreme. The troops never faltered, but moved forward amid the terrible and withering fire of artillery and infantry across the open space with deafening cheers heard above the roar of battle. They were completely wrapped in the smoke of their own fire and that of the enemy. Right up to the works they went, and in many instances over them, driving the enemy; but it was impossible to hold them in some places. They suffered severely in getting there. Six general officers and about five thousand men had fallen; whole aggregations were almost destroyed. Most of the broken troops, however, stuck to the works, and across the narrow embankment a terrible hand-to-hand conflict was carried on with rifle and bayonet far into the night.

It was not anticipated, as it was so late, that any of Lee's troops could become engaged; but as the fight was stubborn Lee was directed to go forward in person, see General Cheatham, and if necessary put Johnston's Division in the battle. About dark General Cheatham told Lee that he wanted assistance on the left of the pike, and at once. Lee's Division, having just arrived, knew nothing of the ground. Cheatham could furnish no guides, as his staff were all absent. He directed Lee to the line of lurid fire from the enemy's infantry and artillery intrenched and said: "Yonder line of fire will guide you." Johnston's Division was at once moved to the left and front for the desperate work before it—a night charge of over three-quarters of a mile in darkness, the only light being the lurid and rapid flashes from the enemy's works in their front. The division commander was informed that he must not fire till he got to the works, as Bate's Division was fighting across the works in a hand-to-hand fight.

This noble division never faltered; it moved steadily forward, holding their fire. Presently the enemy heard them, heard the tread of their advancing line and the commands of the officers in trying to preserve their alignment and touch of their elbows in the darkness. The line of the enemy's works lit up afresh and death was being delivered from thousands of rifles and many batteries of artillery. The noble troops could contain themselves no longer. Bursting into a mighty and defiant cheer, they rushed on the line of fire, and then commenced a death struggle for the works kept up for hours. Parts of the line were carried and taken again by the enemy. Three of the brigades, Sharp's and Brantley's Mississippians and Deas's Alabamians, held to the works till the enemy evacuated. The South Carolina and Alabama brigades did not get to the works.

In advancing General Manigault, first commander, was wounded. Colonel Shaw, second commander, was killed, and Colonel Davis, the third commander, was wounded. The night charge of this noble division was grand beyond description. It was no more gallant than that of the other troops; but they could see what was in their front, while these troops could see only the line from the enemy's guns. They could not see the ground even a few steps in their front, it was so dark; but with the step of veterans they moved into the jaws of death. Sharp's Brigade took three stands of colors in this desperate struggle over the intrenchments. Brantley's Brigade, being on the left, was almost annihilated by an enfilade fire. The enemy, on their extreme left, got over the trenches and fired down on them, as they had no enemy in their front, and next morning there was this noble brigade in line and on the works of the enemy; but two-thirds of them dead, though still at their posts as when alive. A part of the division, consisting of Sharp's and Deas's men, went through a locust thicket close to the works of the enemy. This thicket was almost impassable; and had it been day, they would not have attempted to get through. As it was night, they went through it; but how, no one knows. The thicket was in threads the next morning, and in viewing it no one could imagine how any living thing could have reached the works of the enemy through such a hail of balls as the thicket exhibited by having been riddled into shreds.

If Mississippi and Alabama had no other record of military glory upon them, they could with pride point to the gallantry of their sons in Johnston's Division of Lee's Corps at Franklin. To have been in this division is an honor not surpassed in any field.

History may speak of Pickett's charge at Gettysburg or the charge of the Federal Irish Brigade at Marye's Hill; but I consider the charge of Johnston's Division at Franklin the most gallant feat of arms which I witnessed during the war. The Federal troops who repulsed that charge are second to none. It was an honor to have done it, and American history should treasure the reputation of American valor displayed on the bloody field of Franklin.

The shock of this battle was severely felt by Hood's army. The officers and men were conscious of having done their duty fully and under the most trying circumstances without achieving any result.

The rank and file by their conduct said: "We were ready at Spring Hill. We will now show you it was not our fault that victory was not won there under more auspicious circumstances."

The following incident occurred the morning after the battle: General Lee made a few remarks to each of the brigades of Johnston's Division, commending their heroism. When before Brantley's Mississippi Brigade, which was then so much reduced, as he finished his remarks a private remarked: "General, our old brigade is gone; its organization can no longer be kept up." General Lee promised the brigade that as long as he had a voice or influence with those above him in authority the organization should never be destroyed. It was his pleasure to fulfill this pledge afterwards in North Carolina, when the whole army was reorganized, and it took several brigades to make an ordinary one. In Johnston's Division there were not enough men in both Sharp's and Brantley's Brigades to make one brigade. General Lee filled up Brantley's Brigade with troops from other States. He did this by authority of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, that gallant soldier who could appreciate a comrade's pledge under such sacred circumstances.

LIEUT. GEN. STEPHEN D. LEE.

Franklin was the bloodiest field of the war for the time engaged. The men killed were in open ground near the works and by them exposed to full view until darkness hid the scene, so that nearly all the field could be viewed at a glance from the pike leading to Spring Hill. It was the saddest of sights as the dead were collected early next morning for burial—over one thousand close to each other.

The enemy hastily evacuated Franklin during the night of the 30th and retreated to Nashville. Hood's army followed next day, and on December 2 arrived before Nashville. The enemy occupied the works around the city. The Confederate army until the 15th of December was before Nashville, too weak to attempt its capture. The weather was intensely cold, and the men suffered terribly, as they were not well clothed or shod and timber so close to the city was very scarce for fuel. The corps were bivouacked from right to left in line of battle—Cheatham on the right, Lee in the center, and Sewart on the left.

The enemy on the 15th moved out a strong column on our right as a demonstration, and at the same time moved out a stronger on our left composed of all his cavalry and most of his infantry. This column at once moved around our left flank and doubled it up on the center before night and before Hood fully realized their intention. During the night of the 15th and 16th Hood formed a new line of battle about one mile in the rear of his original line. Cheatham was moved from the right to the extreme left; Lee's Corps was the right and rested with its right on Overton Hill, to the east of the Franklin Pike. Lee was instructed to hold this pike, as in case of disaster the army had to retreat on this pike. Early on the morning of the 16th it was evident that the main fight was to be made on the right, where there was no fighting the day before. The intention of the enemy was to force the right back, which would virtually have cut off the retreat of the army. About 9 A.M. many batteries of artillery were placed opposite Overton Hill, and one of the most terrible cannonadings of the war was kept up for hours. When this ceased, the enemy assaulted with great boldness, principally in front of the right of Lee's Corps and in Holtzclaw's Alabama, Gibson's Louisiana, and Stovall's Georgia Brigades of Clayton's Division, and Pettus's Alabama Brigade of Stephenson's Division.

These gallant troops held their fire till the assaulting troops were near, as they had to advance through open woods and over irregular ground. Their fire was well delivered and the assault was repulsed, to be renewed several times with like results.

The enemy came up to within thirty yards of our lines, and in their last assault were driven back in the greatest disorder. During the morning quite a demonstration was made to the extreme right of Overton Hill, and an attempt was made to turn our right flank; but this was easily repulsed by Stovall's Georgia Brigade and Brantley's Mississippi Brigade, which had been drawn from Lee's left division to meet the demonstration. Smith's Division of Cheatham's Corps also reported about 2 P.M. for the further protection of the extreme right. The enemy was badly repulsed in the vicinity of Overton Hill, where his main attack was made.

FAVORS CONFEDERATE PENSION LAW.

ISAIAH RUSK TO SENATOR CULBERSON.

HUBBARD CITY, TEX., April 12, 1908.

I notice in the VETERAN of March, 1908, a letter to you from Adjutant T. C. Elgin in regard to the pensioning of Confederate soldiers by the United States government. This prompts me to write you as briefly as the subject will permit.

I belonged to the Mississippi Rifles, Company C (Captain McKieffer), 10th Mississippi Regiment. It left Claiborne County, Miss., for the war in 1861. When my term of enlistment at Corinth, Miss., expired, I returned home in 1862, joined Captain McKay's company (B), 38th Mississippi Regiment, and continued therewith till the surrender of Vicksburg, where I lost my arm.

The Adjutant says in his letter above referred to: "Our noble slain died for a principle, and their comrades left behind will not accept a pension to dishonor their names." The Adjutant undertakes to voice the sentiments and feelings of the whole body of Confederate soldiers. In this, I claim, he is misleading the minds of our Congressmen to vote against the contemplated pension bill. He had a perfect right to speak thus for himself or his Camp when authorized, but had no right to speak for the entire body of the old veterans. In doing this I firmly believe he expresses the feelings and sentiments of only a very small minority of the Confederate soldiers. Furthermore, should such a bill pass, I think he would see a large majority of his own Camp applying for pensions if offered to them unless they are all in very affluent circumstances and need no pension. In accepting it, if needed, I think they would only act wisely, and would by this act show no dishonor or disrespect for their dead comrades or the cause for which they fought.

Ever since the war the Confederate soldier has been contributing his mite for the support of the general government, including pensions for the Federal soldiers. There are thousands of Confederate soldiers in this section of the State (Hill and adjoining counties), to say nothing of other sections, who belong to no Camps, a large majority of whom are debarred by both their native and adopted States from drawing a pension, though true they were to the cause for which they fought. Many of these old war-scarred, war-worn, decrepit veterans have very little of this world's goods to support them and their families during their fast-declining years. If one proviso (and there are many of them) of the Texas pension law does not debar them, another does. For example, any Confederate soldier who was not a resident of the State of Texas prior to January 1, 1880, is debarred. Their native States all debar them for nonresidence. Thus they are left to do as best they can in their old age. As you doubtless know, the greatest emigration from the old States has been since January 1, 1880.

Far be it from me that I should advocate anything that would reflect upon the honor, patriotism, or the principle of State rights for which the Confederate soldiers fought. Such a law if enacted would not be compulsory; therefore a veteran could accept or reject at his will. I do not think that any soldier—the gray or the blue—should be overzealous in his patriotism, either in acts or words, to the exclusion of logical reasoning. I hope all the Confederate Camps who have acted adversely to this proposed law will reconsider the matter. I heartily indorse the action of Camp No. 55, Lewisburg, Tenn., on January 18, 1908. I hope that all our Congressmen will view this subject through the light of reason and from a business standpoint, and do all they can in advocacy of this bill. * * *

[In printing the foregoing letter from Comrade Rusk it is not intended to commit Senator Culberson as soliciting it. The author wrote the Senator: "Please be kind enough after reading to send this letter to the CONFEDERATE VETERAN."

In publishing requests on this subject from both sides it is not to be construed that the positions of either are fully indorsed. Comrades of both sides are patriotic beyond question.]

WANTED A PENSION.—A recent experience of Representative J. Sloat Fassett is given as an illustration of how some people show a willingness to impose on the Federal government. A lady constituent wrote that she wanted a pension because her father had fought in some war, but she could not remember in which one it was. She was pretty sure it was in the War of 1812, the Mexican War, or the war of the rebellion; but there was a tradition in the family that he had "fit" for his flag in some war. Mr. Fassett wrote the lady a polite note, saying that it would be necessary for him to have some more definite information concerning the soldier before he could present the case to the Commissioner of Pensions. In due time he received the following reply: "My father," the fair correspondent wrote, "was of medium height, had black hair and eyes. He could not close one eye without closing the other, and did not know anything about music. I think that this ought to be sufficient identification for a pension."

ONE OF OUR OLDEST VETERANS.

G. I. Turnley, Esq., who as acting adjutant of the 10th Alabama Regiment made the last report of the regiment at Appomattox Sunday night, April 9, 1865, to Gen. William H. Forney, commanding Wilcox's Alabama Brigade, sends a letter of M. C. Stapp, now in his ninety-second year. It states: "I was in the 10th Alabama, eighth company, under old John Forney, Calhoun County, Ala. I was drilled in the fair grounds about a week, and was ordered from there to Virginia. I was in about twenty-two battles. I belonged to Anderson's Division, under A. P. Hill. I would be pleased to hear from any old comrade. I am going on ninety-two years old. My captain is living in Oxford, Ala. I carried a flag for the first two years. William York carried it up to the surrender. He is somewhere in Texas."

Comrade Turnley writes: "I remember him well as a member of Company H, 10th Alabama Infantry, Capt. Woodford R. Hannah's company, called the 'Choccolocco Rifles.' I think his last captain was John Floyd Smith, who now lives at Oxford, Ala. Captain Smith was a splendid soldier and a noble man. In fact, there was no other sort in the 10th Alabama Regiment with hardly any exceptions. Captain Smith and all the old regiment will be glad to hear from Comrade Stapp. He was well up in years then. Bill York, to whom he refers, stayed with me, holding high the regimental colors, all through the day of the last battle we were in at High Bridge on Friday before we surrendered at Appomattox on Sunday morning. You have one of our 10th Alabama men in your city, Col. Nash Truss, than whom no braver soldier, bigger-hearted, nobler, courtlier gentleman ever faced a foe, and one in whom the 'ancient Roman honor' doth always appear. He was so on the march, in camp, and amid the din and smoke of battle."

MONUMENT AT LUMPKIN, GA.

Lumpkin, Ga., was the scene of impressive ceremonies April 16, 1908, when the monument erected by the U. D. C. of Stewart County to the Confederate dead was unveiled.

MONUMENT FOR STEWART COUNTY, GA.

The monument is placed in Courthouse Square, and was surrounded by a large crowd when the programme for the day was carried out.

The old veterans marched to their places, followed by the U. D. C. and children of the county, the latter taking their place to present a living flag of the Confederacy. The children sang "America," and the invocation by Gen. C. A. Evans followed.

The beautiful opening address was gracefully delivered by Mrs. D. B. Fitzgerald. Mrs. Arch M. Burts presented the monument on behalf of the Daughters, especially emphasizing in tender, reverent language the grateful love and appreciation of the Daughters for the services rendered by Confederate soldiers, living and dead.

Judge Howard E. W. Palmer, the orator of the day, was introduced by Capt. Tip Harrison. After the address, the Daughters sang "Sunny South," and were led by "our" Tip Harrison, who evinced the same honest, inspiring spirit that characterizes his every effort.

Mrs. Herbert Hunter, President of the Chapter, unveiled the monument; and as the eyes of Veterans, Sons, and Daughters rested on the beautiful shaft, surmounted by the figure of a Confederate soldier, the thrilling notes of "Dixie" completed the climax of the day.

With simple, honest, soldierly dignity Hon. D. B. Fitzgerald, as one of the Stewart County soldier boys, accepted the monument for himself and comrades.

Gen. Clement A. Evans, the grand old soldier of the sixties, made the closing speech of acceptance—the token of love for the veterans of the Confederacy.

CAVALRY EXPEDITIONS IN GEORGIA.

BY W. H. DAVIS, CUERO, TEX.

About the 27th of July, 1864, two cavalry expeditions were started out from each wing of General Sherman's army—that from his left wing commanded by General Gerrard with 4,000 men and General Stoneman with 2,250 men; that from his right wing commanded by Gen. E. M. McCook with 3,200 men. This last-named division was said to have been the picked brigades of Kilpatrick's Corps. The object of these expeditions was to unite in the rear of Atlanta, cut all railroad communication, and then go to Andersonville and liberate the thirty thousand prisoners confined there.

Generals Iverson, Allen, and Breckinridge, after Gerrard's column had been met and driven back to the left of Sherman's Infantry, were ordered to pursue General Stoneman, whom they whipped and captured with his whole command, except a few stragglers.

With General Hume's Division General Wheeler started in pursuit of McCook, who had crossed the Chattahoochee River at or near Campbellton, directing his forces toward the Macon railroad at a point below Jonesboro. He was met by Ashby's Brigade and driven off without damaging the railroad. Harrison's and Ross's Brigades had been detached and sent to Gen. W. H. Jackson at or near Fayetteville, where he hoped to intercept McCook, whom General Hume was closely pursuing. For some reason General Jackson abandoned Fayetteville before McCook's arrival. From this point McCook proceeded to Newnan, and, finding the place occupied by Confederates, left it to his right and came in to the main road leading west two miles from Newnan. Here he took up a position on a ridge thickly studded with black-jack trees.

At this juncture we marched to within fifty yards of their line, when a shot from a vedette's rifle killed the horse of one of the advance guard. My regiment, the 4th Tennessee (Baxter Smith's), in command of Lieut. Col. Paul F. Anderson, were dismounted, filed to the right, and wheeled into line, confronting the enemy. The remaining regiments dismounted and, obliquing to the right, took up their respective positions, aligning on the 4th Tennessee. All this was accomplished in a few minutes. The line being formed, our bugler sounded, "Forward." We were then within fifty yards of the enemy. The underbrush was very dense and rendered our advance very difficult. We were within twenty-five yards of their line, and yet could not see them when they poured a volley into us. Thereupon we let fly a volley at them, raised a yell, and charged. They wavered and gave way, we in hot pursuit. Fifty yards beyond their position was a hundred-acre field with a depression in the center. We drove them to the rise at the farther end of this opening, when a sharp firing was heard in our rear. We wheeled about to find our lead horses coming out of the woods in wildest confusion. Rushing back at double-quick, we were soon tangled up with the fellows who tried to steal our horses. It was a Kilkeny cat fight for nearly an hour. "Old Paul" (Lientenant Colonel Anderson) was captured three times during the fight. We captured over two hundred "Feddies" in this neck of the woods, including two brigadier generals. When we rescued Old Paul the third time, he said: "Boys, it looks like the Yankees were determined to have me, anyhow."

Finally we succeeded in driving off the enemy, recaptured all of our horses and comrades, and as soon as the men could find their respective horses they fell into line. In the meantime the main column that we had driven beyond the field had taken up position in a heavy woodland, while their battery was tossing us 12-pound shrapnel. Our lines being in readiness to move, under cover of the dense timber, with Fighting Joe at the head of the column, we marched to the right, making a detour to the enemy's left, striking him in the left flank. Here we captured about a brigade and their battery, while they were delivering in rapid succession charge after charge of grape and canister shot. A more complete rout and stampede was never seen on a battlefield. We pursued, killing, wounding, and capturing 2,700 officers and men.

FOURTH LOUISIANA INFANTRY.

BY JOHN S. ROWE, ORANGERURG, S. C.

In the April VETERAN, page xxvii., R. J. Hancock, "Ellers'ie," Charlottesville, Va., writes that he has never been able to locate the 4th Louisiana Regiment. I will locate it for him.

The 4th Louisiana Regiment was organized in April, 1861. Its colonels were, respectively, Robert I. Barrow, H. W. Allen, and S. E. Hunter. The regiment served from May, 1861, to February, 1862, on the Gulf Coast in Louisiana and Mississippi; was then ordered to Corinth, Miss.; was in the battle of Shiloh; was at Vicksburg about May, 1862, when Commodore Farragut ran the Hartford and another vessel by our batteries on June 28, 1862. It was in the battle of Baton Rouge, 1862, and was in Port Hudson, La., in General Maxey's Brigade until March, 1863. It was in the battles at Jackson, Miss.; but was ordered to Mobile, Ala., and remained there until the latter part of 1863. While at Mobile, Ala., Gen. W. A. Quarles became our brigadier general. It was at Dalton, Ga., in December, 1863, and was ordered back to Mobile in the first part of 1864, and remained there until May, 1864, when we joined the Army of Tennessee under Gen. J. E. Johnston. It was in Walthall's Division, Polk's Corps (afterwards Stuart's Corps). It was in the battle of New Hope Church and in all the battles fought by Johnston's army until he was succeeded by General Hood at Atlanta, Ga.; then it was in all the battles fought by Hood, including the battle of Jonesboro, Ga. It was with Hood's army on his campaign into Tennessee, was in the battle of Franklin and in the battles around Nashville and the fighting on Hood's retreat until the army crossed the Tennessee River. At that time the writer was furloughed and transferred to another command. When General Gibson with the remnant of the Louisiana troops in the Virginia army was transferred to the Tennessee Army, the 4th and 30th Louisiana Regiments were transferred from Quarles's Brigade to Gibson's. The writer remained with Quarles's Brigade.

Comrade Rowe was a member of the 4th Louisiana Regiment, being of the "Lake Providence (La.) Cadets."

COLOR OF HIS UNIFORM MISUNDERSTOOD.

BY MAJ. G. N. SAUSSY, SYLVESTER, GA.

Your short article, "Singular Criticism of 'Jeb' Stuart," in the April VETERAN is misleading. One reading it would think that Sidney Herbert was a Confederate in Stuart's command. Maj. Sidney Herbert glories in being a genuine Maine Yankee; he seldom lets an opportunity slip to let his readers (in the Savannah News) know this. He was an army correspondent, and in his statements claims to have witnessed many of the combats between the Army of Northern Virginia and the Potomac Army.

But Major Herbert lets sentiment get the better of his judgment. The writer rode with Jeb Stuart in that memorable expedition from Upperville to Gettysburg, and experienced the tensest campaigning of the fierce four years of the conflict.

General Smith had reoccupied Carlisle after the withdrawal of Ewell with a garrison of over three thousand infantry, artillery, and cavalry, and on Stuart's arrival there in searching for Ewell (he had Fitz Lee's brigade with him) he made a formal demand for the surrender of the military post; or otherwise, then the immediate withdrawal of the non-combatants. A tart engagement ensued after Smith refused the surrender of the post. Stuart's command was under a continuous fire of musketry from the suburbs, and he answered with artillery and properly directed part of the shell fire upon the United States barracks. This was United States property, and Major Herbert is not ignorant of the usages of war—that a soldier's duty is to damage his enemy as greatly as possible.

There was a battle in progress, and the barracks came in range of the guns, and exploding shells set fire to the buildings. Viewed from a military standpoint, it was Stuart's duty to destroy this United States property. "Grim-visaged war" has little of sympathy or sentiment in it. The fact that Stuart had once been on detail at the Carlisle Barracks should not have prevented his performing a duty to his country.

The throwing of shells into Charleston and the fierce bombardment of Fredericksburg by Burnside are inexcusable as compared with the Carlisle incident.

You may in like manner compare General Lee's general order protecting the persons and property of noncombatants in Pennsylvania in the Gettysburg invasion with Grant's orders to Sheridan, Hunter, and Sigel for the utter destruction of everything that could support or contribute to human existence in the "Garden of Virginia"—her beautiful Shenandoah Valley.

Major (Herbert) Lancey "slipped up" in his criticism of Stuart in the Carlisle incident.

The foregoing was in type when news of Maj. "Sidney Herbert's" death reached the VETERAN. It is most fitting that more extended notice should be given one who played such a conspicuous part in recording matters on both sides pertaining to the war.

Major Lancey died at his home, in Maitland, Fla., on April 25, 1908. Over the pen name of "Sidney Herbert" he had for years contributed an interesting article each week for the Savannah Morning News. Being an invalid from his wounds, a close student, and the owner of an excellent library, he was eminently qualified to write on the subjects that engrossed him most, which were mainly confined to men and women of both sections who achieved prominence during the war.

Major Lancey was seventy-five years of age, was a native of Maine, and as a soldier in the war he rose to the rank of colonel. A short time ago Major Lancey was confined to his bed when news came of the death of Col. J. H. Estill. He wrote of the announcement: "My long-loved friend and associate whom I first met on the bloody field of First Manassas and whom I next met at the Georgia Press Association in Atlanta in July, 1875, when he at once secured my services for the Morning News."

Exception was often taken to the correctness of Major Lancey's statements, but in the main he was able to defend and verify his assertions. Besides being a versatile writer as "Sidney Herbert," Major Lancey occupied the distinctive position of having been the oldest telegraph operator, having used the Morse, House, and Bain systems.

A. C. Jones writes from the Confederate Soldiers' Home of Missouri in regard to "Jeb" Stuart's bombardment of Carlisle:

"I was a Confederate soldier from the beginning of the war to the end of it. I was a member of Company G, Hanover Troop, 4th Virginia Cavalry, Wickham's Brigade, which was a part of Stuart's command in the raid referred to. Without occupying too much of your valuable space with minor details, I will proceed with a description of this 'cruel bombardment' by saying that Stuart crossed the Potomac River at Rockville, where he captured a number of boats. He then proceeded north, taking Carlisle on his way. We arrived at Carlisle late in the afternoon, and found the town occupied by infantry, cavalry, and artillery of the enemy. Stuart immediately brought his command into position and ordered Captain Breathitt, commander of the artillery, to prepare for action. After having taken all necessary and legitimate steps for the safety of his own command, he dispatched a flag of truce to the Federal commander, demanding his surrender.

"While the flag of truce was on its return, and before the bearer had opportunity to report to General Stuart, the enemy opened fire on the flag of truce and Stuart's command. Not until this inhuman act was perpetrated did Stuart order his artillery to open. I heard him distinctly when he gave the order. Only a few rounds were fired, when we were ordered to dismount and charge on foot. It was then growing dark. We charged the enemy and drove him from the town. There was no private property destroyed by Stuart's command during the process of this 'cruel bombardment in the night,' which took place in daytime. We did, however, burn a depot containing military stores of the enemy.

"The taking of Carlisle was a mere incident, and was necessary to insure the safety of Stuart's command while he continued on the raid. But even if houses were 'battered,' will any reasonable person deny that it was unavoidable under the circumstances? Surely not."

Gen. Marcus J. Wright sends the VETERAN from Washington an extract from General Stuart's report on the Carlisle incident. It is dated August 20, 1864: "Although the houses were used by the sharpshooters while firing on our men, not a building was fired excepting the United States cavalry barracks, which were burned by my order, the place having resisted my advance instead of peaceably surrendering, as in the case of General Ewell."

Mrs. M. E. Davis, Rockdale, Tex.: "I am an old Confederate woman. I want to know something of the 37th Mississippi. Col. Orlando S. Holland commanded it. It was in Florida for a while. Please ask in the VETERAN if any of the 37th are alive. I want so much to hear from any who are alive."

ESCORT TO PRESIDENT DAVIS.

BY W. L. WITTICH (CO. E, 56TH ALA. CAV.), PENSACOLA, FLA.

I read in the March VETERAN an article from Lieut. Milford Overly, 9th Kentucky Cavalry, entitled "The Escort to President Davis." In the main Lieutenant Overly is correct, but there are omissions to which I wish to call attention. I have not seen the Augusta Chronicle article to which he refers, but I am concerned just now only in regard to the omission. Ferguson's was not a Mississippi brigade, though it had a Mississippi regiment, and General Ferguson was a Mississippian, but the majority of the brigade was composed of Texans and Alabamians.

Now as to the escort after the President left Abbeville, S. C., I do not know; but I do know that the 56th Alabama, of which I was a member (Company E), preceded Mr. Davis to Washington, Ga., and during Mr. Davis's halt there a Cabinet meeting was held in a small brick office building. Company E, 56th Alabama, furnished the guard on that occasion, and I was one of the number. Our company, numbering about eighteen men (Captain Riley), was a South Alabama company from Butler County.

Mr. Davis left Washington in the early morning, and at sunrise we (Company E) followed him, being from time to time in sight in his rear. If there were any other troops ahead of him, we did not see them; certainly there were none in his rear. They continued several days until 6 p.m. May 8, when we were captured (Company E, 56th Alabama), our company numbering at that time thirteen men under Captain Riley.

Mr. Davis was taken prisoner next day a few miles from where we were captured, and no troops were with him. The remnant of Company E, 56th Alabama, must have been the last armed troops he saw.

The morning of the day we surrendered we had a brush with a squad of Yankees, and had one man wounded. My wife has my parole in her war scrapbook. The Federals seemed very glad to capture us, and told us at the time that we were about the last armed Rebels at large. The officer in command gave us an order on any United States quartermaster we might meet for supplies.

The intention of this communication is simply that the Texas and Alabama cavalry may not be deprived of the honor of being a part of President Davis's escort, as all who were with him are entitled to equal honor.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT BY GEN. S. W. FERGUSON, BILOXI, MISS.

Comrade D. F. Hunt called my attention to the articles by Comrades Lewis and Overly in regard to escorting President Davis. I send my recollection of the events at Abbeville, S. C., therein alluded to. These articles conform to my recollection with one or two trifling exceptions. Comrade Overly states that of the five brigade commanders who composed the last council of war only one (General Duke) is now living.

During the forenoon of May 4, 1865, I reached Abbeville with my command and reported to General Breckinridge, Secretary of War. He told me that the President expected to remain in Abbeville for two days. I remonstrated, stating that it would certainly result in his capture, and I told him what I knew of the movements of the enemy. He then determined to assume command in person of the cavalry, relieving General Bragg, and said he would call a conference that afternoon.

Soon afterwards I received official notice of both. The council met at 4:30 at the house of Colonel Burt, who entertained the President. There were present the President and his Cabinet, Gens. John C. Breckinridge, Duke, Vaughn, and Dibrell, and Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge, commanding Williams's Kentucky Brigade. Each brigade commander, beginning with the junior in rank, was in turn questioned as to the temper and disposition of his command and of the willingness of the men to escort the President to and across the Mississippi River. Each commander unhesitatingly answered in substance that his men would go to the end of the earth with their chieftain.

Last of all, I stated that I had doubts on the subject, notwithstanding the fact that on that very morning, after making them a speech, my men declared that they would follow me and see the President safe. The constant stream of paroled soldiers returning to their homes was sure to have a depressing effect which I feared. At any rate, the command was too small to contend with the thousands which I knew already surrounded us and too large for swift and rapid flight. We then retired and the Cabinet remained. Very soon orders were issued for the commands to march and cross the Savannah River on a pontoon bridge, already in position. My brigade was camped on the road to the pontoon bridge and was to bring up the rear.

The President with a small escort and some of his staff passed through my camp at eleven that night, when I took leave of him. I marched at 2 A.M. the following morning, General Breckinridge with me. We crossed the river about sunrise. General Breckinridge pushed on to Washington, Ga., and I went into camp on the river bank where the other brigades had already camped. Here the specie was distributed in bulk to the several commands. I did not pay my men until we reached Washington. I think that the other commanders paid their men on the bank of the Savannah. I reached Washington at 1 P.M. May 5 and camped on the road to Madison just outside the town.

GROUP ON THE LAWN AT BEAUVOIR, THE MISSISSIPPI CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOME.

The next morning General Breckinridge directed me to discharge my command, that they might return to their homes. I offered to accompany him, but he declined, saying that he would take no one except his two sons with him. I understood afterwards that they made their way to the coast and crossed safely in an open boat to Cuba. I then returned with my servants and private horses to Washington, which I reached without encountering any of the enemy. I stopped at the house of the father of Gen. E. P. Alexander, where I met the latter and also Generals Lawton, St. Johns, and Gilmer. Thence I started for Abbeville via the pontoon bridge. As I was getting out of one side of the town the Yankees were marching in at the other; but I did not meet any then or for several weeks thereafter, nor did I hear any firing.

This narrative is taken in the main from a diary kept at the time. It certainly disproves the allegation that "when Mr. Davis arrived at Abbeville he discovered that there was universal disaffection among his escort, and that they were determined to make no resistance in the event they were attacked, no matter how small or how great the attacking force might be."

So far from doubting his escort, he was entirely too confident, as his wish to remain two days in Abbeville proves; and when the council of war met, he received the most positive assurances from all the commanders except myself. I never doubted for one moment that the men I had so often seen tried in battle would fight as gallantly as they had always done; but I doubted what effect the approach to homes and dear ones from whom they had been so long parted might have when they saw comrades free to go where they would, and I thought it but due to the President to say so frankly. The matter was of too vital importance for any possible contingency to be overlooked. The temptation to turn off for a glimpse of home might prove too strong, and should, I thought, be taken into account when calculating the chances. We were less than two thousand all told. The first point to be decided was: Can this body cut its way through the rapidly concentrating forces it will encounter? Next, if this is possible, can it be relied upon to remain an unbroken unit? The latter proposition I doubted; the first I deemed impossible. On these my answer was predicated. All this, however, is foreign to the question—viz., the discovery by Mr. Davis of the disaffection of his escort, etc., a baseless slander.

A BOOK OWNED BY JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The history of a small 3x4 coverless, worn volume of the "Imitation of Christ," in possession of Mrs. Austin W. Smith, of Saragossa, near Natchez, Miss., opens a page in the life of Jefferson Davis that records his deep feeling on things spiritual and eternal.

Mr. Davis had this book with him while at Fortress Monroe, and it was a solace and friend during the days of his imprisonment. Long after he gave it to Mrs. Eliza Ogden

Violet, who gave it to her sister, Mrs. Smith. The book contains an inclosure written by Mrs. Violet: "This copy of 'The Imitation of Christ' was presented to me by Mr. Jefferson Davis in July, 1870, in my home at Beauvoir, Miss., he bringing the book to me. Mr. Davis told me that he used this book continually during his imprisonment at Fortress Monroe, also in Canada. I now give this book to my sister, Frederike Quitman Ogden." The inclosure was written on April 24, 1901, and a further note adds in the same writing: "The marginal notes and marks were made by Mr. Davis."

On Chapter XLVIII., "Of the Day of Eternity and of the Miseries of This Life," Mr. Davis made the following note across the upper right-hand corner: "November, 1865. Great comfort in this."

The second paragraph is marked and reads as follows: "The citizens of heaven know how joyful that day is; but the banished children of Eve lament that this our day is bitter and tedious. The days of this life are short and evil, full of sorrow and miseries, where man is defiled with many sins, is ensnared with many passions, attacked with many fears, disquieted with many cares, distracted with many curiosities, entangled with many vanities, encompassed with many errors, broken with many labors, troubled with temptations, weakened with delights, tormented with want."

In the third paragraph he marked the lines: "When shall I enjoy a solid peace, a peace never to be disturbed and always secure, a peace both within and without, a peace everywhere firm?"

In the fourth paragraph two sentences are marked in pencil: "I desire to cleave to heavenly things, but the things of this life and my unmortified passions bear me down. I am willing in mind to be above all things, but by the flesh am obliged against my will to be subject to them."

Immediately following these sentences comes this significant flight unmarked: "Thus, unhappy man that I am, I fight with myself, and am become burdensome to myself, whilst the spirit seeks to tend upward and the flesh downward."

The next mark is made at the second sentence in paragraph 5, which is in italics: "O, my God! remove not thyself from me, and depart not in thy wrath from thy servant. Dart forth thy lightning and disperse them; shoot thy arrows, and let all the phantoms of the enemy be put to flight."

The fourth paragraph is marked: "Come to my aid, O eternal truth, that no vanity may move me. Come, heavenly sweetness, and let all impurity fly from my face."

The sixth and last paragraph of this chapter is marked from the second to the fifth lines: "Where thy treasure is, there also is my heart. (Matt. vi.) If I love the world, I rejoice in the prosperity of the world, and am troubled at its adversity."

---

ERROR IN NUMBER OF JEFFERSON DAVIS'S REGIMENT IN MEXICO.—Rev. W. C. Hearn, of Talladega, Ala., wrote sometime since in regard to an error made by Capt. W. B. Johnson in an article on page 513 of the November (1907) VETERAN, in which it was stated that he was a member of Company F, 2d Mississippi Volunteers, in the war with Mexico, commanded by Col. Jefferson Davis, when, in fact, it was the 1st Mississippi Regiment that Jefferson Davis commanded. Reuben Davis, of Aberdeen, Miss., was colonel of the 2d Mississippi. He resigned and Charles Clark was made colonel, and served to the end of that war. Dr. Hearn was a member of Captain Blythe's company, of Columbus, at organization, and served with the 2d until the close of the war.

MAJ. JOHN W. DANIEL TO COMRADES.

[Only brief reference was made at the time to the address at the last Richmond Reunion by Maj. J. W. Daniel, now United States Senator from Virginia. He was introduced by General Lee, and as he advanced to the front of the stage was greeted with that applause which is ever given by those who know him.]

General Lee, My Comrades, and Countrymen: You, sir, are the Commander in Chief of the rear guard of an army of whom all their countrymen say that no men of equal number ever surpassed them in all the battlefields of human history, and we may say also of them that no body of American citizens of equal number surpasses them in patriotism, in devotion, and in the spirit of cheerful sacrifice for their faith. It was said in the olden times that he who is diligent in his business shall stand before kings. In the lexicon of your lives there have been no kings but principle, patriotism, and virtue—virtue with the old Roman flavor in it that means valor. I deem it more honor to-day to stand before you than I would have standing in the presence of the collected kings, emperors, and czars of the universe. The titles which men confer upon each other and the titles which are seized thereby, compared with your efforts, are but transitory and ephemeral things; but the character of fame, the good name all over the world of the Confederate soldier and sailor, who were in daily grip with danger, with death, with misfortunes, with hardship, with sacrifice, and with suffering, is imperishable.

Napoleon Bonaparte, the great Emperor of France, would permit no other hand than his own to crown him with the imperial crown that he had gained by his genius and valor. In a larger and in a purer sense you have been the emperors of your own fortune, and you have crowned yourselves with an aureole of true and enduring glory that will fill the world with a light and warmth of true virtue as long as principle, freedom, and virtue are esteemed among the children of men.

When the war ended, my comrades, you had but ended a four years' charge, and you began at once and instantly a forty years' siege. The Confederates so became in a large measure a scattered nation. They vanished from the battlefields to their workshops, to their plantations, to their homes, and they started to work wherever they could find it. I have never been a great deal of a traveler; but I have traveled a little, from Portland, Oregon, to New Orleans, and from old Virginia to England and France, and I have never been in a city where I did not come across an old Confederate soldier. I never came across him anywhere that he was not standing straight and well among those with whom he had cast his fortunes. There is one of them now standing right by my side, a private soldier, who went out in the war from the Palmetto State, and he has on many fields shown the courage and chivalry of his tribe; he is now from Tennessee and has booked from Texas, which State will always be glad to get more men like him to come to her. Here is the point of the joke about him: He was over here, near Petersburg, when on one fine morning there came the explosion of the Crater, and everything all around went up toward the clouds—Lipscomb went up, and he went up into the region of the nether stars; but when he came down, he alighted on his feet and went right into the charge with the brave Alabamians who took the Gap. That man has got nerve and brass enough to take hell if he had the chance, and such nerve as his makes me hope some day we will all get a chance to take it in the victory over soil. Somebody over there says: "Hurrah for Texas!" Amen.

And now I am going to tell you what I think was the grandest eulogy ever pronounced upon the Confederate soldier. Were any of you boys here at the battle of Gaines's Mill, on the 27th of June, 1862? Well, it is a wonder you are here now. I tell you if Rome ever howled in this country, it was howling that day par excellence. That was one of the greatest charges that the Confederate army ever made. It seemed as if the skies above us were made out of sheet iron, as if the fiends of hell were ripping them up and flinging them around all to pieces. While that tremendous charge was going on T—'s Brigade of Longstreet's Division was called to go to the front in the next line. Boys, tell the truth about it, did any of you ever feel a little pale as we marched down into the valley, with all the fiends of hell in the air about us and a raging volcano above us?

6***

Among the other wounded about us I saw a young Confederate officer, whose arm had been torn out right in the shoulder joint by a cannon ball. Notwithstanding, he sat in his saddle steadily, a great deal cooler than I am now. When our regiment, the 11th Virginia, opened up for him to pass and the men looked up at him, admiring the hero and pitying the man, he said: "Go on, boys, and do your duty and don't mind me." About that time there came a cheer on our left, and there came Texas. A few minutes later I saw two rather sorry-looking men on horseback, and they looked like tramps who had been taken from the mills. They rode along behind this work, which had now been taken, and which the receding battle was only annoying with a stray shot here and there. As soon as I saw them I recognized one who had on an old blue cap pulled down over his eyes, and who also looked like a sailor who had just landed and had fallen up on horseback and did not know how to get down. It was Stonewall Jackson. He passed in the rear of that tremendous place, over which Hood's men had charged, just as the setting sun was departing in the west; and looking over that scene of awful slaughter and splendid valor, he spoke four words: "These men were soldiers."

It was nerve and the act of the brave men of Texas who on every field showed the soldier of the Lone Star; and remember, my comrades, that the soldier of no Southern State can truly offer himself to take precedence over those of any other State in the whole of the Confederate army. All men were heroes, and all will so remain forever. There was glory enough for all, be he the humblest who wore a gray coat and did his duty as best he could. I would not pluck a single feather from the plumes of Texas when I recall that exploit of the soldiers of the West, and crave it also for the Army of Northern Virginia. History has given to us all a sufficiency to satisfy the praises of valor that envelop all with true and modest honor. It is woman—she shall sum up our cause; she shall say, and it will be true, that all these men of the Confederate army were soldiers.

A poor orphan boy from Maryland wants me to say a word for him. They were not many, but they were much, these men of Maryland. They seemed little when their short lines stood amongst the longer ones from other States; but if you had heard them open with a battery of artillery or with their maximum of Maxim guns, or if you had seen them line up with the Maryland line under Johnson or Dorsey; if you had seen old F—— at Gettysburg when he led in the Tar Heels, you would have said that this orphan boy was one who kept most excellent company, and we are not surprised to see that he is loyal and devoted to-day.

It was the captain of the Raccoon Roughs of Georgia (major, colonel, brigadier, major general, commander of the old second guard of the Army of Northern Virginia, which had been led by Jackson, by Ewell, and by Early), John B. Gordon, who was from spur to plume a star of tournament, who had more magnetism in him than any field officer I ever saw; and when he drew his sword and rode forth on that splendid black horse of his and said, "Come on, Georgians," he was so fascinating that you would have deemed it a privilege and a principle of life to follow him. But yesterday Georgia erected to him an equestrian monument. A little before that the Volunteer State of Tennessee erected to the Wizard of the Saddle on the banks of the Mississippi an equestrian statue in bronze which will not last longer than the fame of this hero.

The man on horseback is getting pretty fashionable all over this country now. Yesterday, amid the thunder of the guns, you saw handsome, blue-eyed Stuart ride once more at the head of his cavaliers. The day is not very distant when all the great heroes of the South will ride again amongst their people to hold up great examples of human valor, patriotism, and virtue. You will see many of these monuments here in this city, which was once the citadel of your defense, which became the capital of your nation, and which then and now and at all times holds open its doors, and it has no more earnest or warmer yearning than to be considered every time your home.

I am not a Richmonder; like yourselves, I am, technically speaking at least, a stranger within her gates; but I do not consider that I surpass the lines which modesty would suggest when I say that the blessing of every true Confederate soldier is upon this people. You cannot look over her spires and temples without seeing that she thinks of you. Yonder is Mars Robert, and there is J. E. B. Stuart; out yonder on the road that leads north is A. P. Hill. There in a public park is Wickham, and there is Pegram, with the ramrod ready to load; but, towering over city and temple, towering over all the roofs of this glorious city, there rises to the heavens a slender column, and on its summit, looking on the east, there stands not the soldier of Virginia nor the soldier of Richmond, but the Confederate soldier of the South. They are a people that do not forget.

HON. JOHN W. DANIEL.

There can be no great generals without great armies behind them. A general is a lonesome nobody unless he has a line and a heart that will follow him. Men, as a rule, will not fail to recognize that they are in the midst of a plain, democratic American people, who honor truth, valor, and patriotism in whomsoever and wheresoever found. My countrymen, this is a changeable and ever-shifting world we live in; flags change, countries get in the habit of changing a little now and then; but the old Confederate changes less than anything he has ever had to do with or anything he has had to deal with. He is always true to the people and to the flag that he belongs to, and that is the fundamental principle of the moral law of the universe. There is nothing higher; and so, when this country began to get itself in a little trouble in 1898, why the old Confederates tried to jump over each other to get a chance with a Yankee uniform and under the flag to fight for Uncle Sam; and Wheeler and Fitzhugh Lee, in the midst of many whose names I cannot remember at this minute, dropped in again to the front. They still had their hearts with their own people, and they do tell me, and I hope it is so, that when Wheeler got to charging the Spaniards at Santiago he cheered up his men by saying: "Come on, boys; the Yankees are running."

I want to say this: There never have been in all human history, either in the days of the Spartan, the Roman Legions, or the Old Guard of Napoleon, or anywhere amongst any people—there never have been times and occasions when a wise and prudent man, after a careful investigation of the surrounding circumstances, would not retire from the position he was in if he had to be so undignified as to run. There are a great many consolations about the war, and one of the consolations is that, even if we on some occasions did observe the doctrine of true philosophy, we gave the other side a good many experiences and instructions in the same business before we followed the occupation ourselves; and I want to say this about them: Of all of the brave men born under the Southern flag, look at those men that charged Gettysburg Heights. If my hat were not already off, I would take it off. But I see that you were so fortunate as to get away unscathed. What I do say about those chaps in blue that came down here is, they are the most obstinate and unreasonable fellows I ever knew. They would keel on coming back. We gave them a little hint at the first battle of Manassas that we went in. They took it for only a short time, and, thinking they had mistaken the door they had knocked at, they came to the back door of Richmond. We renewed the hint, and they only renewed the application at a place down in Northern Virginia.

The fact is, there is one thing about these American people, North as well as South, they have much comebackativeness, and that is the reason that we old Confederates are proving to the world to-day that you cannot keep a workingman down. But the chief consolation to me, my friends—and I hope you won't put me down for a mollycoddle—the chief consolation to me about that war is that so many of you are alive and that the war is over.

It looks to a man that reads over coolly and deliberately now that so many intelligent and so many kind and fair men, so many really good men that we had in every State in the Union in 1861 ought to have had sense enough and forbearance enough and diplomacy enough to keep you boys from getting into such a deep and lasting struggle. But they did not, and that is why we are here to-day. The still, small, sweet voice of one was heard over voices of contention (it was that of a colonel in the army of the United States); and when one of our Southern brethren, no doubt just as sincere and true, said in his presence, "O, we will clean out the Yankees in three months," he said: "You forget, my friend, that we are all Americans." When another said four or five months would do the business, he answered that it would take at least four years, and it did. A man of peace, he stood for peace down to the very fiery edge of battle; a Southern man, a Virginian, he was the foremost of all leaders in battle. When the war was over and all of us were beginning to realize the great and abiding proof that we were all Americans, he became the leader not only of the South but of the North itself for fraternity, for brotherhood, for peace and reconciliation, and for building up this country without regard to section. I need not tell you that it was Robert E. Lee.

I am afraid you will think that I am unlike the war in one respect because my speech will have no end. Now I have spoken about the Confederate in war and about my conviction that as long as the men who were in the last great, big war were living they would keep this country from getting into another one. In Havana Harbor up went the Maine, which brought to realism the truth which I remember to have read in either Voltaire or Johnson, I forget which—that if the men of Athens in the ancient days had assembled upon its portico, and if Sparta and Athens were discoursing to them about the beauty of philosophy, and there had ridden up before them Charles XII. of Sweden and said, "Let alone those dry things and let us take the works," they would have all leaped on horseback and followed wherever he would lead them.

