GTMO celebrates Hispanic heritage

By Stacey Byington, Public Affairs Officer

Hispanic Americans trace their roots to the cultures of the indigenous peoples of the Americas, including the Ara-waks from Puerto Rico, the Aztecs from Mexico, the Incas from South America, the Mayas from Central America, and the Tainos from Cuba.

Saturday evening, Sept. 30, approximately 300 people turned out to celebrate their Hispanic heritage at the Hispanic American Heritage Association Dinner-Dance at the Windjammer. The dinner-dance was held in conjunction with National Hispanic Heritage Month, commemorated annually Sept. 15 - Oct. 15.

Students from W.T. Sampson Elementary School performed traditional Latin American dances from Mexico, Panama and Cuba. The GTMO Salsa Dancers performed the Latin American dances known as the

"Cumbia," "Bachata," "Merengue," "Salsa" and "Reggaeton."

Marine Maj. George Nunez, Commanding Officer of Marine Corps Security Force Company, Guantanamo Bay, was the evening's guest speaker.

"Today, Hispanics are one of America's most dynamic minorities, and an integral part of our daily life. It is the contributions of our Hispanics, and the other cultures that make up the threads of our American fabric, that make us the great nation we are today," said Lupe Beltran, president of the local Hispanic American Heritage Association.

"Like the rest of our nation, our GTMO community is more than just a collection of diverse cultures," she added. "We have strength in this diversity, because as we learn from each other, we create a much stronger world to live in."

Columbia College ranked 35th among “America’s Best Colleges”

By Sarah Stillfield, Coordinator of Public Relations and Marketing, Columbia College

Columbia College earned a top-tier ranking for the third consecutive year in U.S. News & World Report’s 2007 edition of “America’s Best Colleges.” The college ranked 35th for the second consecutive year among the schools listed in the Best Comprehensive Colleges—Bachelor’s category for the Midwest region. The 2007 report ranks 320 comprehensive colleges within four regions: North, South, Midwest and West.

Institutions included in the Comprehensive Colleges—Bachelor’s category focus on undergraduate education and offer a range of degree programs in the liberal arts, accounting for fewer than half of their bachelor’s degrees, and in professional fields such as business, nursing and education.

U.S. News & World Report determines its rankings by analyzing data in several areas, including peer assessment, freshman retention, class size, student-to-faculty ratio, student acceptance rate, graduation rate and alumni giving.

Only schools appearing in the top tier in each category receive a ranking. Other tiers are listed in alphabetical order. Data provided for the 2007 edition of “America’s Best Colleges” comes from the Day Campus at Columbia College.

"At present, there are over 300 students taking courses with Columbia College in Guantanamo Bay," said Ellen P. Soucy, Director Columbia College. "We just started registration for next session and are offering nine courses locally and over 350 sections online.

We expect a big registration for the October session with the upcoming turnover in the Navy Provisional Guard unit."

The college experienced another year of record enrollment in its Online Campus with a 21 percent increase in online students compared to the fall of 2005. The college also saw a 13 percent increase in the number of graduate students as more of its Nationwide Campuses now are offering graduate degrees.

"In March 2006, we held our first commencement ceremony in Guantanamo. We graduated 29 students at that time. Since March, another four students have completed their degree requirements. We help each student select a degree program that best fits his/her personal goals and provide a plan that can be followed anytime, anywhere," added Soucy. In July of this year Nathan Ouellette and Janell Penha both received their Associates degree in General Studies.

In November, Columbia College expects to start registering qualified students for our online MBA program. The first six online MBA courses will be offered in Jan. of 2007.

The cost is $290/credit hour for a total of $870/course. There is an application fee of $55 and a diploma fee of $100, upon completion of the MBA program. Requirements for the MBA program include the following:

— A 3.0 or higher GPA in a completed baccalaureate degree program.

— A Business degree is preferred, but will consider applicants with a BA or BS in other subjects that earned a “B” or higher in the following five courses:

— Principles of Accounting I & II, Business Finance, Principles of Management and Principles of Marketing.

— There is no requirement for a GMAT or GRE for acceptance into our online MBA program and conditional acceptances are possible, on a case-by-case basis.

"Our program continues to grow exponentially, primarily because of the online campus offerings that accommodate those who work shifts or choose to do their studies independently at home. The flexibility of the online program allows all adults to pursue higher education while juggling work, home and family responsibilities. We will continue to offer local courses based on instructor availability, but acknowledge that future growth is in the online program," said Soucy.

The college was founded in 1851 as Christian Female College and was renamed Columbia College in 1970 when it became coeducational.

Healthcare Notice

Story provided by LT Jasmine V. Caines, MSC, USN, U.S. Naval Hospital Guantanamo Bay

Beginning in Oct. healthcare providers at Naval Hospital GTMO will initiate the transformation from paper medical records to an electronic patient record system referred to as AHLTA.

This new system will increase the efficiency and quality of care that is provided through improved access to information such as laboratory and diagnostic test results as well as access to legible patient care documentation. Each time the patient requires care in the future, essential information can be readily accessed, thus increasing time spent by the provider with the patient.

Clinical staff at any location where care is provided within the Department of Defense facilities will be able to access patient data at any time. In addition to the documentation of care, the system facilitates the scheduling of appointments, the transmission and viewing of laboratory and diagnostic test results, and the entrance of prescriptions that are subjected to an automated check for drug and allergy interactions that is built into the system.

AHLTA will eliminate duplication of laboratory and diagnostic tests. It will also facilitate communication among various healthcare providers thus improving the collaboration process necessary for coordinated care.

The staff in the Primary Care Clinic is enthusiastic about the future of this new electronic information system. Members of the entire Primary Care Clinic will begin training in the use of this system in October.

A delay in scheduling appointments may be experienced as the staff participate in this training. During the initial period when patient information is entered into the system, patient care time will be lengthened.

The first appointments scheduled for each patient during the transition period will be increased from the usual 20 min. to 40 min., and around the end of November a return to the usual 20-minute visit will resume. Because each patient will require extra time to transition into the new system, the length of waiting time for an appointment may increase.

Every Department of Defense healthcare facility will install this system. As a result, a patient's medical record will be accessible at any facility globally wherever care is sought and can be retrieved for all future healthcare visits.

Security of protected information is an essential component of the system. Encrypted passwords and digital signatures are but a few of the safeguards built into the system to prevent unauthorized individuals from accessing the system.

The information in the system is referred to as Personal Healthcare Information (PHI); as such, the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) dictate its management. It is in compliance with all aspects of this law.

The healthcare providers at GTMO look forward to the challenge and the ultimate benefit of providing more efficient and quality patient care as we transform our paper charts to electronic ones.

We ask your patience and understanding as we transition to AHLTA.
