WHICH TREATS OF SOCIAL MANNERS AND CUSTOMS AT THE TABLE.

CHAPTER I.

No. 1.—Perhaps it is quite a simple occurrence to eat your breakfast, your dinner, or your supper, yet the gentleman or lady, and the low-bred man or woman, are not more strongly contrasted than when at the table. The rules on this subject of table etiquette when in company, apply equally well to the home circle and family table, with perhaps a few unimportant exceptions.

No. 2.—Be prompt at meals. To be late is a wrong to your host or to your family, it is not calculated to promote good feeling.

EXAMINE our New Cabinet Mounts showing Lithograph of Building, and see what a fine finish the double enamel gives the pictures. From this date each cabinet photo will be put in a tissue envelope to preserve the SATIN FINISH. Remember, first-class work only ; no pains spared to please our customers ; an unlimited number of sittings until satisfied ; and Cabinets still at $3.00 per dozen, at the largest Studio on the Hudson.

Respectfully,

C. H. GALLUP, PHOTOGRAPHER,

292, 294 and 296 Main Street,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Book on Photo Crayons and Copies free to any address.

No. 3.—If an invitation to dine is received, make no delay in replying, whether it is your intention to accept or decline.

No. 4.—Don't seat yourself until the ladies are seated, or at a dinner party, until your host or hostess gives the signal.

No. 5.—We sometimes hear the phrase "company manners." Practice "company manners" at home, for if you neglect them when at home you are sure to be rusty when in company. Extend the same courtesies to members of your own family as you would extend to those with whom you are not so well acquainted when in company.

No. 6.—Sit at the proper distance from the table, not a foot away, nor jammed against it.

No. 7.—Bibs are for children and are to be used in the nursery, therefore don't tuck your napkin under your chin or spread it upon your breast.

CHAPTER II.

No. 8.—When the dinner is announced, the sign to leave the parlor will be given by the hostess. Each gentleman will probably be asked to escort a lady to the table. This should be done in the most polite manner.

At the table the gentlemen should wait until the ladies are seated before taking their places.

No. 9.—In leaving the parlor, the gentleman should pass out first, the lady following, holding his arm.

No. 10.—When the door of the dining room is reached the lady should drop the gentleman's arm.

No. 11.—The gentleman should pass in and then wait on one side of the door until the lady passes to the place assigned to her at the table.

No. 14.—Take the soup from the side of the spoon and not from the end of it.

No. 15.—Refrain from overcrowding your mouth; in other words, do not “stuff.”

No. 16.—Make an effort to sit easily and gracefully.

No. 17.—Avoid crowding or jostling your neighbor.

No. 18.—If your host or hostess passes you a plate, keep it; especially if you have chosen the food which is upon it. If you pass it to your neighbor you may be giving him dishes for which he does not care and which are distasteful to him.

No. 19.—If, in the course of a meal, you should happen to discover something wrong with your food, do not speak of it but pass your plate to the waiter and he will bring you another.

No. 20.—Take good care of the lady you escort to the table. See to it that she is well supplied with all that is necessary for her comfort.

No. 23.—Avoid all manner of gesticulation, it is quite dangerous and is considered bad taste.

No. 24.—Let the conversation be carried on in an ordinary low tone of voice.

No. 25.—Do not attempt to speak when your mouth contains food, you are almost sure to fail.

No. 26.—Do not put upon your plate more food than you can use; it is better to be helped the second time.

No. 27.—The knife is to be used very little; it is proper to use it for the purpose of cutting your food but never as a means of conveying the food to the mouth.

No. 28.—Place bones or fruit seed on the edge of your plate or on a plate for that purpose, never on the table cloth.

TO be well dressed, neatly, not gaudily, is one of the essential points that every man of good taste endeavors to enjoy. We can say this without exaggeration, that the Ready Made Clothing we sell is as distinct in style, make and quality from what other houses show, that there can be no comparison. We manufacture our goods, and can safely represent them. Our Ready Made Clothing will compare with custom made goods at nearly one-half the price.

CHAPTER VI.

No. 38.—Do not drink from your saucer. While avoiding this do not take notice of a similar error made by another.

A story is told of an English nobleman who, once upon a time gave a grand dinner, at which many of the fashionable families of the realm were present. It happened that a rustic or countryman was present, one who was not well versed in the manners and customs of good society. During the dinner the countryman poured his coffee into his saucer, much to the amusement of the other guests. The host noticing the amusement and its cause, quietly poured his coffee into his saucer and drinking from the saucer in that manner rebuked the ill-mannered guests.

CHAPTER I.

No. 1.—Avoid self-consciousness. Be so thoughtful of the comfort and happiness of others that you have no time to think of yourself and your appearance.

No. 2.—In making an introduction, present gentlemen to ladies, young men to elderly men, and young women to elderly women.

No. 3.—Should you be asked to play or sing, do not refuse unless you do not wish to perform. Do not refuse simply for the purpose of being coaxed ; it does not appear well.

No. 4.—Do not try to monopolize the conversation or talk in a loud tone.

No. 5.--It is not polite to whisper in company ; reserve what you have to say for another occasion.

No. 6.—Avoid talking about yourself or about affairs which interest you only, do not talk about your ill health or your afflictions of any kind.

No. 7.—Don't interrupt ; it shows lack of respect, and is extremely rude.

No. 8.—Difference of opinion is one thing, contradiction is another. While the first is no cause of offense, the second is highly improper.

We'd banish many a grief away
And make this earth more bright
If we would not be rough and rude,
But try to be polite.

CHAPTER II.

No. 9.—When you have a story to tell, tell it in a concise manner; do not go into every detail and branch off at every word—be direct, compact, clear, and get to the point as soon as you can.

No. 10.—While observing the above rule do not be so rude as to interrupt another in his story, however long or tiresome it may be.

No. 11.—Be pleasant and affable; do not respond in monosyllables, this usually puts a damper on the feelings of the one who is talking with you.

No. 12.—Do not be impatient or appear listless or indifferent when others are talking. Make it a point to have the appearance of being interested in the conversation.

No. 2.—Avoid jostling people on the street; don't elbow or push. In case you should happen to stumble against anyone, apologize immediately. Be polite.

No. 7.—If you will smoke, do so in the place where it will be the least offensive. It detracts much from the dignity of a gentleman to see him walking along the street with a cigar in his mouth. Above all do not smoke while walking with a lady.

No. 8.—Don't expectorate on the sidewalk. Go to the curbstone and discharge the saliva into the gutter. Men who eject great streams of tobacco juice on the sidewalk or on the floors of public vehicles ought to be driven from civilized society.

No. 9.—Raise your hat to every lady acquaintance you meet.

CHAPTER III.

No. 12.—Be gentle, courteous and kind to children. There is no surer token of a low, vulgar mind than unkindness to little ones whom you may meet in the streets.

No. 13.—A true gentleman never stops to consider what may be the position of any woman whom it is in his power to aid in the street. He will assist an Irish washwoman with her large basket or bundle over a crossing, or carry over the little charges of a distressed negro nurse, with the same gentle courtesy which he would extend toward the lady who was stepping from her private carriage. The true spirit of chivalry makes courtesy due to the sex not to the position of the individual.

No. 14.—Offer your seat in any public conveyance to a lady who is standing. It is often quite as great a kindness and mark of courtesy to take a child in your lap.

No. 17.—Leave tobacco severely alone. It is exceedingly disgusting to see a man continually expectorating a quantity of tobacco juice. No gentleman will be so thoughtless as to expectorate upon the sidewalk or in a public conveyance.

No. 18.—The habit of smoking is not quite as offensive as that of chewing, yet we can but protest against the former. Gentlemen never smoke in the presence of ladies without first obtaining permission.

No. 19.—The habit of cigarette smoking is becoming extremely prevalent. This habit is offensive to a person of refinement.

No. 22.—Don't bolt without notice into anyone's private apartment. Respect always the privacy of your friends, however intimate you may be with them.

From the curl of your hair to the tip of your shoe let all be perfect in its make and arrangement, but as soon as you have left the mirror forget your dress. Nothing more betokens the coxcomb more decidedly than to see a man always fussing about his dress, pulling down his cuffs, playing with his mustache, pulling up his shirt collar or arranging his cravat.

DEVOTED ESPECIALLY TO THE INTERESTS OF CHILDREN.

CHAPTER I.

While we believe in having children know and keep their place we also believe in their being taught where their place shall be to the effect that they shall not be driven from the table by "company." We often hear the remark "Children should be seen and not heard." We advocate an early training of children. If they are trained early there will be no need of keeping them from the table when visitors are present for fear that reproof will become necessary.

No. 1.—Imitation is one of the most fully developed faculties of any that a child has; therefore let the older ones be exceedingly careful how they conduct themselves lest they lead the little ones astray.

CHAPTER II.

No. 3.—Do not tease the children. We insist upon the observance of this rule. Parents quite frequently are seen teasing their own children; this is extremely bad practice and cannot be excused.

No. 4.—Do not speak to the little ones of their “beaux” or encourage such talk by others, it may seem funny at the time but the effect is in most cases harmful.

No. 5.—Make the lives of the children as happy as possible. Laugh with them, play with them in their joyful hours and when their little troubles arise sympathize with them, and, if you can, remove the cause of the trouble; their small troubles are as heavy to them as the greater trials are to the adult.

No. 6.—Remember that children are tender and can be easily moulded for good or evil.

No. 9.—Be very cautious that the little ones do not hear a dispute or difference of opinion between father and mother.

No. 10.—Do not ask a child which of his parents he loves the better, there should be no difference in this respect between father and mother.

No. 11.—Do not ask the children about the private affairs of the family to which they belong.

No. 12.—Teach the children to respect the truth and avoid deception.

CHAPTER IV.

No. 15.—These few rules relating to children may seem to be somewhat out of place in a book of this nature, yet we think the propriety of it will be seen when we think of the old saying: “As the twig is bent so the tree is inclined.”

No. 16.—Commence the training of the child at an early hour, it is much easier to form than to reform.

Parents, be gentle with the child,
And bear this truth in mind,
That as you bend the tender twig
The tree will be inclined.

Don't nag, and gall the child to death,
Nor chide, and scold and flout ;
You perhaps may drive old Satan in
But you can't drive him out.

Be firm, and say just what you mean,
And do just what you say ;
Children soon read your character
And learn how to obey.

We all are sculptors, we can make
Or mar, the form divine,
Then let our chisel only carve
The graces that will shine.
