'Games Educators Play' Is Urbanarium Project

"Games Educators Play," the first Urbanarium program offered through a new collaborative arrangement by RIT and the Environmental Simulation Laboratory of the University of Michigan, in cooperation with the Rochester Museum and Science Center, will take place May 13 from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the RIT Metropolitan Center, 50 West Main Street.

A workshop on the use of educational games and simulations in urban related studies, the program is designed to help educators and others--such as trainers, community organizations and students of urban studies--to experience simulation gaming, and to explore ways in which simulations could be useful as a learning strategy. Participants will learn to adapt or design simple games for specific purposes useful in meeting their organizational objectives.

This gaming and simulation workshop, in keeping with the concept of the Urbanarium, was designed after consultation with many neighborhood, civic and educational leaders within the Monroe County area, Gene DePrez RIT Director of Communications said. The program was partially made possible with assistance to the Museum and Science Center from the New York State Council on the Arts.

Further information concerning registration and enrollment is available from Robert Maurice, Extended Services Division, phone 2217.

Information concerning the program may be obtained from Jean Dignan, 381-1729 or Campus Ext. 2331.
