was told she must preach or be silent on her own responsibility. That she was not afraid to assume, since ability and responsibility belong together. Without regard to sect, she preached whenever and wherever a place offered, but not always did she do this under favorable circumstances. Obstacles melted away under the powerful personality of such a speaker as Antoinette Brown, and, in spite of the objections to women preachers as a class, she finally became the ordained pastor, in 1852, of a Congregational church in South Butler, Wayne county, N. Y. In 1853 she was ordained by the council called by the church. After preaching for the society awhile she began to have distressing doubts concerning certain theological doctrines, and on that account she resigned her charge in 1854. She was married to Samuel C. Blackwell, a brother of Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, 24th January, 1856. She began the study of some of the great questions concerning vice and crime and published the result under the title of "Shadows of Our Social System." Her life as a preacher, lecturer and writer has been a very useful one. In the latter direction she has done work that reflects great credit upon her sex, having received much praise for her logical methods of thought. "Studies in General Science" (New York, 1869), "A Market Woman" (New York, 1870), "The Island Neighbors" (New York, 1871), "The Sexes Throughout Nature" (New York, 1875), and "The Physical Basis of Immortality" (New York, 1876), are some of her various works. The most prominent fact to be recorded in the history of Mrs. Blackwell's life, and the one which speaks loudly for her present honorable place among the eminent women of our country, is her love of effort; only

Dictionary of National Biography

For more information, see Dictionary of National Biography.

Articles that cite this source should add one of several templates (e.g., {{DNB}}) to the article, depending on the DNB edition. If the referenced DNB article is available at s:Dictionary of National Biography, 1885-1900, the Wikisource article name should be added as a parameter to the template. Editors should not add this category directly to an article. The template will add the appropriate subcategory. The template does not add this category. Instead, it adds a subcategory that distinguishes the edition, and further distinguishes articles whose templates do not have an explicit Wikisource reference. All of this is in support of the DNB project at Wikisource. All DNB articles have been available since about 2013, so there is no longer a reason not to link.

ℹ️ This is a maintenance category. It is used for maintenance of the Wikipedia project and is not part of the encyclopedia. It contains pages that are not articles, or it groups articles by status rather than subject. Do not include this category in content categories. This is a hidden category. It is not shown on its member pages, unless the corresponding user preference 'Show hidden categories' is set.

This category contains articles that cite the Encyclopædia Britannica Eleventh Edition, which is in the public domain. Some articles excerpt the text in its original form; others include significant rewordings of excerpts, and some may just be summaries of information originating in Encyclopædia Britannica Eleventh Edition

Articles that incorporate text from the Encyclopædia should provide the citation by adding {{EB1911}}, those summarising information should add {{Cite EB1911}} to the article. This will put the article in this category or one of the subcategories of this category. See Wikipedia:1911 Encyclopaedia Britannica for further notes.
