GATHERED UP.

No man climbs the ladder of fame with his hands in his pockets.
When in doubt it's a good plan to tell the truth.
Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.

A man must stand erect, not be kept erect by others.—Marcus Antoninus.
Tramp (whiningly): "Me poor old mother hasn't seen me face for years and—" Lady of the house: "Well, why don't you wash it?"

Few among us have the courage to avoid the professional scandal-monger as one would fly from a mad dog. Yet the one is just as harmful to the community as the other, though there are, of course, varying degrees of the disease.

Grit is the grain of character. It may generally be described as herosim materialized—spirit and will thrust into heart, brain and backbone, so as to form part of the physical substance of the man.—Whipple.

Luther Burbank, the famous horticultural scientist, says there is not a weed alive which will not sooner or later respond liberally to good cultivation and persistent attention. A day will come when the earth will be transformed, when man shall offer his brother man no bullets nor bayonets, but richer grains, better fruit and fatter flocks.

Most people do not expect enough of themselves. They do not realize that things they see other people do, and envy them the power of doing, they could do themselves if they only tried. So much of other people is only the result of long continued effort. We may not be able to do as they have done, but some measure of success in the same direction is within our power.

Endure! Strength of character—real strength—will result. By then your soul is proved—and polished. You cannot escape the finishing process. Don't try! It is the will of God. It is your Father's purpose. He knows the whole process of soul refining. His way is good. Be brave! Have courage! You need the stress and strain and struggle. It may be most unpleasant—but it is best.

Small things realize the secret of success which we ignore or despise.—A. M. S. The word that inspires, although uttered so gently that your neighbors do not hear it; the hand claps which put your brother firmly on his feet without public applause. Hence the small things dare not be despised by those of us who wish to rise to higher things.

FRIENDLY ADVICE.
A very matter of fact Scotchwoman called to see a neighbor, an elderly woman, who had been calling for some time. "And how do you find yourself today, Janet?" was the greeting.

"Aye, Martha, I'm very bad. This cold, damp weather 'll be the end of me. I'll be a dead woman before very long."

"Hoots, toots, woman! You've been saying that any time these last twenty years. I've no patience with you. I'll tell you what it is. You want firmness of stick to a day for your dying—and stick to it!"

HE DIDN'T TRY.
Hacksenschmidt, the Russian wrestler, praised in Chicago the beauty of the American girl.

"She's not even in Russia, are the girls so pretty," he said. "It seems wrong and stinky that a man can only marry one of them. Every American, surrounded by all this beauty, must envy the snop that a friend of mine in Russia had."

"So you are engaged," a man said to my friend, to one of the beautiful Vronsky triplets, eh?"

"Yes, my friend replied.
"But how can you tell them apart?"

"I don't try," said my friend.

MISPLACED SHOT.
Polk Miller of Richmond blew into the editorial office of the Advertiser's Almanac of the South a few days ago, and was promptly asked, of course, for the latest darky story in Virginia. He said it was about substituting a wild turkey for a tame turkey. One of his friends bought a turkey from one Uncle Ephraim and asked him, in making the purchase, if it was a tame turkey.

"Oh, yais, sir: it's a tame turkey 'o' right."

"Now, Ephraim, are you sure it's a tame turkey?"

"Oh, yais, sir: dere's no sot 'o' doubt 'bout dat. It's a tame turkey 'o' right."

He consequently bought the turkey and a day or two later, when eating it, he came across several shot. Later on when he met old Ephraim on the street, he said, "Well, Ephraim, you told me that it was a tame turkey, but I found some shot in it when I was eating it."

"Oh, dat war a tame turkey 'o' right," was Uncle Ephraim's reiterated rejoinder; "but dere's no sot 'o' doubt 'bout dat. It's a tame turkey 'o' right."

I haven't much faith in the man who complains.
Of the work he has chosen to do, he's lazy or he's too busy. He's just in his brain. And—maybe a hypocrite, too. He's likely to cheat and he's likely to rob; away with the man who finds fault with his job.

But give me the man with the sun in his face.
And the shadows all dancing behind; Who can meet his adversaries with calmness and grace.
And never forget to be kind. For whether he's wielding a sceptre or swab.
I have faith in the man who's in love with his job.
John L. Shroy.

ON THE FARM.

It is an easy thing to give the fowl a little green stuff all winter. Get a few boxes about six inches deep and fill them with earth. In box No. 1 sow barley or oats quite thick and in three or four days up with the whole box about four of which will do the whole work as you can, by reseeded, have a second crop growing in No. 1 by the time you get to No. 4.

If calves are dropped now, put woolen blankets on them to guard against sudden changes of temperature.

When you are thinking of buying a farm, look for plenty of wood for fuel and other purposes, for good water, good neighbors and good market advantages.

Those who keep their cows tied up all winter in a tight barn, and milk them nearly up to the time of calving, must not expect them to produce good calves.

Tree trees can be most advantageously transplanted at one year old, as they can then be lifted without cutting any of the main roots.

Improve the appearance of groves and woodlands by clearing the dead and fallen timber. Burn the refuse brush and sow the bare spots with grass seed. Now is a good time to do it.

The farm poultry flock too often is composed of chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys and pigeons, all living together as one common family. That's a mistake. [Each kind should have its own quarters.]

Careful experiments which have been made show that the interest on the money invested in a machine shed amounts to about one-half the item which would have to be charged to deterioration in case the machinery were left in the open without protection from the weather.

An element that is often lacking in poultry food is protein, the most expensive part of the food and the most needed. It makes blood, muscle, bone, eggs and feathers. It may be supplied in feeding live meat, green cut fowls and scraps, wheat, oats, alfalfa and some clover. During summer, when fowls have their liberty, they are able to pick up a good deal of food containing this material, thereby balancing their own ration.—From January Farm Journal.

The thickness of the sod in a pasture determines the amount of grass to be pastured. Every good pasture has a thick sod. Thin sod means an impoverished pasture, though this may be due to overstocking rather than to a natural lack of fertility in the soil.

The thick sod depends on the fertility in the soil, the kind of grasses with which it is sown, the texture of the soil and the amount of pasturing it has received.

It is the natural tendency of all soil to become firmer. It is tamped down by even the gentlest rains, and beating rains will render it almost impervious to water. Good farming must undo this work by breaking up these crusts and keeping the soil in good condition. All practical farmers know that soils are best by being plowed and cultivated at just the right time, but not many have the patience to wait for the season is getting late, or put off cultivation and allow weeds to get the upper hand. Brown says there is more to be gained by properly working our soils than in fertilizing them.

As a rule, the best farming is done where some form of live stock growing and feeding is being practiced. It is not correct to say that fertility can not be maintained without live stock. The matter of maintaining soil fertility by the use of legume crops, aided by mineral fertilizers used to increase the growth of these crops, is possible, although a general proposition it is not profitable.

It is not the fertility alone which live stock brings to the farm, but the organic matter which their presence brings to the soil. In addition to the humus and plant food contained in the stable manure there are most certain bacteria that assist in the work of making the plant food contained in the manure available to the growing plants.

THE APPLE KING OF AMERICA.
This title belongs to Judge Fred Wellhouse, of Topeka, Kansas, who owns over 1,000 acres devoted to apple trees, and who has made apple-growing a life study. Writing about Judge Wellhouse in the Suburban Life for January, Hon. F. D. Coburn, Secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, says: "When, in the late seventies, he was planting 457 acres to apple trees in Leavenworth county Kansas, many of his neighbors looked upon him as well-nigh demented. Over four hundred acres in orchard! It was astonishing! It was destined to be a fat failure! So said the croakers; but Wellhouse, undaunted and undeterred, worked his little farm to the hilt in the apple raising, and the outcome justified his faith in Kansas and himself and forever silenced those who doubted."

It Was Hard to Find.
Mrs. M. G. Quackenbush, whose Attorney General has made one of his special assistants in the campaign against the trusts, is a New York lawyer. Mrs. Quackenbush is the daughter of a certain notorious millionaire, she said; "I suppose there is some honesty in the man, but he is too busy to be honest. He reminds me of the railway man sandwich."

"A man, you know, passed bitterly in the consumption of a very hot dry rail way man sandwich, and said to the maid behind the bar: "I don't see no ham in this!"

"Oh, you ain't come to it yet," said the maid, with a smile.

"A minute or two passed. The man's jaws worked gloomily. Then they stopped again, and he said: "I don't see no ham yet, young woman."

"Oh, she replied, 'you've gone and bit over it now!'"

MESSAGE TO LEGISLATURE

Governor Draper Touches on Improvement in Business

SO-CALLED CONTINGENT DEBT

Names of Two Classes of It Should Be Corrected—Education and Highways Receive Attention—Changes in Automobile Legislation—Old-Age Pension a National Proposition—Conservation of Forests—Treatment of Commissions

Boston, Jan. 7.—In his message to the legislature today Governor Draper says:

During the last year business conditions in the Commonwealth have not been good. Many people have been out of employment, and those who were employed have in many instances been obliged to work short time, because of the limited demand for the articles produced in our large manufacturing establishments.

These conditions have obtained all over the United States, and in other nations as well. At the present time there is a very marked improvement in business; many more people are being employed, and, while there is nothing in the way of a business boom, the outlook is distinctly better, and the outlook is brighter than it has been during the last year.

Financial Condition.
The net direct debt, so called, of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as of the 1st of December last, was $17,000,000. In this direct debt is included $2,020,820 of the army loan, transferred during the past year from the so-called contingent

My Night in The Museum. A New Year's Story. Copyright, 1908, by P. J. Tansey.

I WAS sitting at the feet of Ramon, a young man with auburn hair and light eyes, and he was telling me the story of his life.

The man rose and walked slowly and with lowered head toward the door, and turned to me at the door, smiling the request that he be allowed to pass forth, an overpowering curiosity to know the meaning of his words.

ON THE FARM.

A horse needs a wider and more exclusive stall than does a cow. It should be wide enough so that the horse can lie down comfortably and stretch out its legs, but not so wide that he can roll in it.

If it is wrong for a man to have a diseased cow in his herd, why should it not be considered just as much so to let a tree covered with insect pests, or affected with some bad disease, stay in the orchard?

Very much is said about feeding warm water to cows. The same principle applies to swine. Cooked or steamed food does the hog an immense amount of good.

It requires the same amount of feed to produce a pound of pork as for a pound of poultry, yet poultry sells for an average of twice as much as pork. This is a thought for reflection, at least.

In order to guard against flies the stable should be thoroughly cleaned often. A sprinkling of the floors with a mixture of a teaspoonful of carbolic acid and two gallons of water, will disinfest the stall, while the manure heap may also receive an application with advantage.

As a healthy cow will consume from 60 to 100 pounds of water per diem, the influence that a supply depends in quantity and quality would have upon the milk is obvious. It is not an uncommon thing to see the drainage from the stable passing into the stream from which the cows drink.

Sod culture is recommended by some successful peach growers. The soil is worked during the time the trees are growing, and a clover crop is sowed for fall and a winter which is plowed under early in the spring. Clover crops should not be left until they suck up too much moisture from the soil at a time when it is needed by the trees.

If the pasture has a thick sod the owner may feel certain that it is in good shape and needs little attention. If the sod is thin, the pasture should be given attention at the earliest possible moment. While clover is a good index of the condition of the pasture. Where it grows luxuriantly, the owner may feel sure that the soil is rich in phosphates as well as nitrogen and potash.

During last winter there came a deep snow and the farmer who was for clearing the walks except a pressed steel shovel saved a winter in Popular Mechanics. The snow would not slip from the shovel without a hard jerk on the shoulder. This tired me, and I began to think of a remedy, which resulted in taking the shovel and having it with hot coals from the fire. When hot I applied a wax candle to the surface, covering it all over. The snow then would readily slip from the shovel.

Liberal to your farms and they will be liberal to you. A farm is very much in one respect like a looking glass—it reflects the character of the owner exactly. If he is parsimonious his farm will show it. If he is a man of taste his buildings, fences and general arrangement of his farm will tell the tale. No effort on his part to disguise his real thoughts or sentiments will avail anything so long as the operations of his farm belie his words.

The farmer who invests freely in his farm is sure to be paid well for his risk and trouble.

In constructing nest boxes, three points should be kept constantly in mind: (1) The box should be of such a nature that it can be readily cleaned and thoroughly disinfected; (2) it should be placed in the dark, or where there is only just sufficient light for the fowl to distinguish the nest and nest; (3) there should be plenty of room on two or three sides of the nest.

Plenty of trees about the farm, and especially the building and yards, is a splendid thing, both for ornament and comfort. Trees break the monotony of landscape, make the country beautiful, afford shade and shelter for man and beast, and enhance the value of farm property. The farmer has cut down and grubbed out many a fine tree in the field because it occupied a little room and he had to work around it. Leave them for ornament and to shade the stock. Don't deface the beautiful country for a dollar or two that may be had from the soil occupied by one of nature's grand productions.

Monday Club.

The next meeting of the Monday club will be held in Masonic building next Monday, Jan. 18. Prof. A. T. Kempton will give his illustrated lecture on Myles Standish. This lecture is highly commended by those who have heard it, not only for the review of the life of the sturdy Colonial warrior, but also for the beauty of the pictures illustrating it.

Selectmen's Meeting.

The selectmen held a joint meeting with the similar bodies of officers of Abington, Weymouth and Rockland last Saturday. A delegation from the Plymouth County Gas Light and Power company, today pipes in the several towns mentioned and the matter is looked upon with favor, provided satisfactory conditions to the town will be accepted by the company. Mr. Conway, superintendent of the O. & S. H. Co., appeared before the board on Monday to further discuss the franchise for doing business along its several lines in town, and the Street Railway Co. is now much nearer the conditions stipulated by the selectmen.

A delegation from Reynolds Post 56 G. A. R. was in consultation with the selectmen in regard to a town observance and while no definite plans are yet made there will be a proper observance on the day, details of which will be given to the public as soon as connection can be made with an orator for the occasion.

THE POWER OF SONG.

Queen Margaret Caroline Frances Josephine Stephanie Lucille Estelle de Raganza succeeded to the throne at twenty under the title of Margaret II. From her earliest childhood she had shown an independent disposition. In these times she would be a suffragette, for she believed not only in women having a voice in the government, but in their governing. Scarcely had she been proclaimed when she started her people by calling for the resignation of the cabinet and filling the places made vacant with women.

The queen filled other offices with women, and the men were standing about holding their hands. Then, a fat political job being given to a woman, the men thought it time to test themselves. They sent the most accomplished, handsomest and most seductive men to the queen on one pretext or another, hoping through her heart to attain their ends. But the queen saw through their designs and laughed at them.

One day a knot of politicians hungry for plunder were discussing the situation when a little, half deformed, homely man said to them: "If you will back me I will go to the queen and accomplish those things you desire. All I want is a suit of fine clothes."

A shout of laughter greeted his offer. Then some one suggested that for a joke it be accepted. The queen received a message that a special ambassador from a neighboring sovereign had arrived with a view to making a treaty.

Margaret expected to see a man of imposing appearance and, being somewhat timorous of such men, steeled herself for the worst. She was surprised to see a man barely five feet three inches high, with long arms and legs and a slight curve in his back. Nevertheless his head was large, and she possessed the feature of remarkable beauty and intelligence—his eye.

Margaret, unobtrusive in this insignificant creature at once, assigned him a wing of the palace to reside in. She was ready—he seemed in no hurry—to begin to talk over the terms of the treaty. Whenever the queen made a demand for a slice of territory, a payment of indemnity or any such matter the ambassador would say in a soft voice: "Your majesty's modesty in your demands is what is to be expected from a woman of such lovely qualities. I shall advise my sovereign to double the amount you claim."

There was no difficulty in making a treaty of such terms, and the queen closed the negotiations, delighted with the envoy. Then the treaty was sent to the other sovereign interested for confirmation, and the ambassador, obliged to wait for an answer, returned to his apartments.

"That night the queen heard a voice singing in the singer and the song became one of the homeliest body nothing remained, but the ambassador's eyes the queen saw a spiritual body seemed to beckon her to a higher, holier existence.

Meanwhile during the day, there being no treaty to talk about, the queen began to ruminate, and the rumination about her affairs. Never had she heard such wisdom, such far-sighted suggestions. He told her that such a queen as she had, he a blessing to every people, but in all kingdoms there was no grade work that only coarse natured men could properly perform.

The treaty never came back, and the ambassador at last confessed that he was no envoy, but one who, having seen his queen from a distance, so worshipped her that he had been impelled to do a dishonorable act for the sake of passing a few weeks in her adorable companionship.

One morning the journals announced that all the ministers had resigned and their places were to be filled with men. Then the people waited for an announcement of the names of the members of the new cabinet. When the name of the prime minister was published no one knew him. At a first meeting of the cabinet a crowd surrounded the palace, every one anxious to get a view of him. One by one the ministers passed out till they had all left the palace except the man they most wished to see. Finally the crowd dispersed and left only a few followers on the sidewalk. Then a side door opened, and a man with a body like a pair of tongs stepped out and, like a crab, disappeared down the street.

"That's her!" exclaimed one of the loungers. "That the prime minister!" exclaimed another. "Why, he sings in a hoarse voice!"

INGENUOUS POINTE.
A rather curious incident has been developed by Mexican politics in connection with the cactus thorn. When these creatures are thirsty it is as a rule that they are obliged to put their mouths to the prickly plant they will first of all stand and kick at the cactus with their heels. By this means the thorns are broken and the cactus skin bruised, and so the ponies can drink their fill of the cool juice without in jury.—Strand Magazine.

THEY WERE NOT ENCOURAGED.
"I don't see why that young man doesn't propose."

"I think, pa, that the chances of his doing it would be fairly as good if you wouldn't leave your best gloves around where he can see them."—Bohemian Magazine.

—I never knew whether Lucy nacked her friend to visit her especially to see her in her last days, but she found her friend indeed. For a week the mother remained ill—so Lucy said—and Ben was made to wait on a woman who would not let her go to bed. She died on the 11th of the month, and at hours most inconvenient for him. Then she took a midnight train, and he saw her at the station. He had promised Lucy that he would be in line at the box office of a theater to get tickets for an immensely popular play at an early hour in the morning, and between the two duties he got, but four hours' sleep.

—The next evening Ben, his injuries rankling in his bosom, called on his fiancée, through the tickets on a table and—well, it was a needless explosion, something like fireworks shut up in a barrel. Lucy looked at him, surprised, then remarked that if he couldn't stand a few little things like that how would he bear the more important jars of life. She then and there broke the engagement.

—Ben came to me and told me what an escape he had had, but in a few days, anything just then, but in a few days, when I found he was about ready to commit suicide, I confessed to him that I suggested to Lucy that she had better test him and advised him to ask her to give him another trial.

—I got out of the room in time to escape a stone being thrown at me. I thought I'd better take a vacation for awhile and go south. When I came back Ben had fixed it up with Lucy, though he had had a hard time doing it. It was months before he spoke to me and months more before we became friends again.

The Y Ranch Short Count

By FRANK H. SWEET. Copyright, 1924, by Frank H. Sweet.

THE Y Ranch outfit was rounding up the cowboys scattered over twenty miles of territory hunting stray bunches. It had been a good season, with plenty of water and grass, and the count was a count of passing the 10,000 mark, the stockman's ambition.

But as the territory narrowed and the team bunches were hurried in under the eyes of the counters, he added to the main herd the estimate, conservative as it had seemed, was apparently much too high.

"There's a gate down somewhere," said Bell to the foreman emphatically. "We haven't made the increase we did last year, when the season was bad. Are you sure there weren't any strays left in some of the way coulers or sink holes?"

"Yes, there may be a few scattering ones here and there, but a thousand good land! Where'd they hide themselves?"

"That's so," Bell's gaze swept impatiently across the sea of tossing, clashing horns, and a hand dropped to his side.

"To this place had come the girl from the cowboys' camp, the one who had been the dream of centuries in her blood. And she had found the place good."

She had scarcely thought of loneliness or of the first one sweep into her valley and straight on to the dugout, she found that interest of the outside world, she had seen little women, but one struck him as being more suited to a drawing room than to a dugout.

"So you don't think you've lost any cattle?" he asked after some minutes' conversation. "Are you sure?"

"No, I don't," she answered. "They're coming in, sometimes singly and sometimes in greater flocks. It keeps coming in, looking after the herd. You see my uncle was very, very careless in business, and I suppose his cattle strayed into all the wild places in the mountains. He once wrote me a document, then, again, no cattle left would dare to steer straight for market on our brand sheep's plain."

"What's your idea?" he snapped. "The foreman made a significant motion, lifting his hand as if to wave his arm toward the foothills."

"There's no hiding place this side of the bigger hills and ravines," he said. "That number of cattle wouldn't stray so far from home without a document. Then, again, no cattle left would dare to steer straight for market on our brand sheep's plain."

"What's your idea?" he snapped. "The foreman made a significant motion, lifting his hand as if to wave his arm toward the foothills."

In the whole country," declared Bell, with considerable emphasis in his voice. "If there are cattle stragglers in the mountains, as seems a sure thing now, the Y Ranch is right at their hands, and from what you say about the cowboys, they wouldn't be much opposition. I question if even now any cattle are left on the ranch."

"What you say the girl's name was 'Bell'?" he asked. "I suppose it spells out Katharine, for the man spoke of her as Mrs. Katharine, though likely her schoolgirl name is Kitty. Shall I ride out that way?"

"No, I'll go myself. It's time I was showing neighborhood. Besides, I don't mind confessing I'm a little anxious. The first of my visit all the ranch, with thirty or forty miles and live every man, who has lost cattle to join in the hunt. I will cover the territory in my direction."

There were two ranches on the way out, and these he visited. But the owners seemed incredulous as to his loss. The year had been the most prosperous in their experience, they declared, and neither of them had missed a hoof. And yet their cattle had strayed in all directions, many even penetrating into the foothills.

On across the plain with long, easy undulations he swept, making rapid progress, but so easily as to seem in no hurry, himself and horse as one, a machine for speed.

The looking over was swinging in a hammock under one of the trees that were scattered about the dugout. Old Peobles had been shiffling about an industrially, but he had been an artist for beauty and comfort. Other ranchers had raised cattle; he had grown trees and arranged his house and stables and barns and boxes for birds' nests in them. Within the dugout he had more easy lounging places and entrances for birds and a profusion of flowers.

"I had been looking for a long time," she said, "but now, as she saw the first one sweep into her valley and straight on to the dugout, she found that interest of the outside world, she had seen little women, but one struck him as being more suited to a drawing room than to a dugout."

"So you don't think you've lost any cattle?" he asked after some minutes' conversation. "Are you sure?"

"No, I don't," she answered. "They're coming in, sometimes singly and sometimes in greater flocks. It keeps coming in, looking after the herd. You see my uncle was very, very careless in business, and I suppose his cattle strayed into all the wild places in the mountains. He once wrote me a document, then, again, no cattle left would dare to steer straight for market on our brand sheep's plain."

"What's your idea?" he snapped. "The foreman made a significant motion, lifting his hand as if to wave his arm toward the foothills."

"There's no hiding place this side of the bigger hills and ravines," he said. "That number of cattle wouldn't stray so far from home without a document. Then, again, no cattle left would dare to steer straight for market on our brand sheep's plain."

Bell did not hesitate, and he had given up all thought of going to Europe.

"My count is between 8000 and 9000," he answered, "and my brand" he took an envelope from his pocket and made on it a Y with a very long tail, so long that he scarcely recognized it himself.

"That animal instinct for coming home has been a bit of assistance to you in rounding up the cattle," he could not forbear saying.

"It certainly has," the girl agreed, "for Hans wouldn't even have had to leave the gate to get into the ranchers' cattle home. He laughs at me, though, and says the fine grass in the valley is the instinct that draws the cattle here. I suppose that's why he's so sure of me."

"I've learned Bergmann's and Olson's already. And, oh, yes, I've got my 2200 head brand now. Poor Hans doesn't know figures, so I have to

They show how the sword may have been evolved from the club even by tribes unacquainted with the use of metals.

The small knobbed clubs, or "kerries," such as are found among the Kafirs and other African tribes, are generally used as missiles.

Here it is: They were out at an afternoon card party. A stout woman dropped a card to the floor.

THE TRAVELING BIRD

This puzzling performance of the red eyed vireo. It winters in Central America and appears each spring at the mouth of the Mississippi, traveling twenty miles a day.

Great flocks of chimney swifts, with numbers of other birds, close above the United States every autumn. Their movements can be easily followed till their various migrating bands join into a countless host on the northern coast of the continent.

Five months later, in March, a joyful migration of the chimney swifts is repeated. Unless the red eyed vireo flies a thousand miles in a single night, how does it manage this bewildering schedule?

There is no danger of getting the soil too rich for strawberries. Soil that will raise good potatoes will raise good strawberries. Chip dirt, or well-rotted manure with a little commercial potash and rock phosphate applied with the manure a year before the plants are set, make good fertilizer.—American Cultivator.

"It is well known that many pests hibernate over winter in the old vines, stubble or other refuse from a crop which is left on the soil. If this refuse be removed there will be less chance of the pest remaining over winter, and though there will be an immigration from outside the next season, there will be fewer individuals and less injury than if they had been allowed to accumulate undisturbed."

ON THE FARM.
 Make a good work bench this winter

Make it your business to shovel a good wide path through the snow for your wife to walk in when she hangs out the clothes.

The most important crop of the farm is a sound boy. Take good care of him, teach him to be honest, virtuous, industrious, economical and patriotic. Example is better than precept.

"Scientific farming" is the ascertaining of what substances the plants you wish to raise are made, which of these substances are wanting in your land, and what manures will supply them.

The calf should be growing steadily so that at two years she is ready to begin her life work. If allowed to go beyond this period she will use the food given to her to lay on fat. This is not desirable. The dairyman must fight against this condition.

No artificial heat is wanted for laying hens. Make the pens close and comfortable that is all that is required; the hens will do the rest. Artificial heat always weakens, and activity is always at the bottom of good health, whether with man or beast.

GATHERED UP.
 A man's reputation often depends on the size of his bank balance.

It takes a brave man to tell the mother of a new baby just what he thinks of it.

After prying for what you want get busy and do a little busting.

"I know it, doctor, but my husband is away so much that I don't get a chance to talk to him half as much as he deserves."

Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated. Therefore, live every day as if it would be the last.

There are two classes of people in every civilized community—the workworkers and the worktakers. Beware of the latter.—New York Press.

If a man could only endure his own troubles as easily as he thinks he could endure other people's this would be a happier world.

Mr. Flatbush—Out of every million letters that pass through the postoffice it is calculated that only one goes astray.

Mrs. Flatbush—Seems strange, John, that the one I give you to mail should always be that one.—Yonkers Statesman

"I don't know much about buying meat," admitted the young husband. "How do the prices run?"

"According to location," explained the dealer.

"Then gimme a two-pound roast, best you have in the orchestra circle."

Stress, strain, struggle—what a president trimviate! On every side they strike us. The story of most lives reaches unrelenting. Their reign is undisputed, unreeling, universal. Extensively, intensively they rule. Expect them! Shrieking from them does not eliminate their presence. Life requires them—and all of life. To meet them is our part—to conquer, our privilege. To complain, to groan, to yield is childish. Why despair? Why forego?

HER OPINION.
 A father, whose looks are not such as to warrant the breaking up of all existing statues of Apollo, tells this on himself. "My little girl was sitting on my lap facing a mirror. After gazing intently at her reflection for some minutes, she said: 'Papa, did God make you?' " "Certainly, my dear, I told her." "And did he make me, too?"—taking another look in the mirror. "Certainly, dear. What makes you ask?" "Oh, I don't know. Seems to me he's done 'better work lately.' "

SELF-DISGRACED.
 In Boston, as every one knows, the symphony concert is viewed in the light of sacred ceremonies. In this connection the story is told of two little girls of a certain family who returned from the music hall "in a state of mind." One of them carried an expression of deep scorn, the other an air of great dejection. "Yes, she sneezed in the middle of the symphony,"—Philadelphia Ledger.

ARE WINTERS GETTING WARMER.
 It is very common in such weather as this to hear this question, and every "old inhabitant" almost, will answer that they are. And to substantiate his statement he will tell of years within his memory when the winter was so severe that the mercury seldom, if ever, went below zero and ice didn't freeze thick enough to store for summer use. The facts are, the thick-freezing ice and the deep snows, and forget the weeks and months of weather with a temperature like we have had during this winter above the freezing point.—Macomb Journal.

The Land of Nod.
 Come cuddle your head on my shoulder, dear.
 Your head like the goldenrod,
 And we will go sailing away from here.
 To the beautiful land of Nod Away from life's hurry and flurry, and Away from earth's shadows and gloom,
 To a world of fair weather we'll float off together.
 Where roses are always in bloom.
 Just shut up your eyes and fold your hands.
 Your hands like the leaf of a rose.
 And we will go sailing to those fair lands
 That never an atlas shows.
 On the north and the west they are bounded by rest.
 On the south and east by nothing is 'Tis a country ideal, where dreams is all that counts.
 But everything only seems.
 Just drop down the curtains of your dear eyes.
 Those eyes like a bright blue bell.
 And we will sail out under starlit skies
 To the land where the fairies dwell, Down the river of sleep our bark shall sweep.
 Till it reaches that mystical isle
 Which no man hath seen, but where all have been.
 And there we will pass away.
 I will crown you a queen, as we float along
 To that shore that is blessed of God.
 Then for that fair land, we're off for
 that rare land,
 That beautiful land of Nod.
 —Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

MY HERO.
 A Story of a Train Robbery.

When I was a girl of sixteen I left my home in Little Rock, Ark., to spend several years in the east. I was proud of the rough and ready ways of our western men and regaled my girl friends with stories of their bravery. I really didn't know much about brave men except what I had read in novels. Nevertheless I often kept my associates spellbound with my tales of heroism.

I was so fascinated with my stories that on my return home I was on the lookout for some of the drastic scenes I had depicted. I was not disappointed. In viewing a scene, but I was disappointed in the first case of just such a man as I had selected for most of my heroes. I was at the time on a passenger train of the Iron Mountain railroad in the first case of just such a man as I had selected for most of my heroes. 1819-1909.

Cornelius Tirrell of South Weymouth Enters the Last Decade of a Century.

There are marked events in every human life, some of which are of minor importance to the world at large and others which change the destinies of individuals, communities, states and nations.

—The event of this week in South Weymouth which has interested many people, is the rounding out of ninety years of life by Cornelius Tirrell, who although entering the last decade of a hundred years, is still hale and hearty and there are many who are far his junior in years who are unable to follow him in his daily round of duties.

—Mr. Tirrell is a son of Cornelius Tirrell and Jane (Pratt) Tirrell of South Weymouth, and entered his long career Jan. 18, 1819, and as Weymouth has always been his home he has the benefit of his valuable services on many occasions.

—Mr. Tirrell is a strong believer in American citizenship and has been a consistent voter from the day of his majority up to the presidential election of 1908. He has never left his state of work for others to do, and attributes his long life and vigorous old age—first to coming from good stock and next to good and regular habits, maintaining a cheerful disposition and following the "Golden Rule."

—The meeting Wednesday night of the Good Fellowship Club was the best attended and most enjoyed of any in its history. There were over two hundred present at the supper table, and Mr. Bradford had been fortunate enough to secure ex-Gov. John L. Bates as speaker of the hour. At the conclusion of the supper the Hayden quartette were called upon and responded with a fine selection.

—Mr. Bates was then introduced, and before proceeding with a more formal address he made the great good being done by organized societies, club and even large co-operation in business enterprises when properly controlled.

—The real and interesting address of the evening was a talk on State Institutions, such as prisons, hospitals, and correction, for the insane, asylums for the poor and unfortunate.

—Mr. Bates gave his listeners the benefit of his experience in studying the situation, methods in use and work being done, and the time went by all too quickly as he kept his audience intensely interested to the end.

—"I don't know much about buying meat," admitted the young husband. "How do the prices run?"

"According to location," explained the dealer.

"Then I'll get a two-pound roast, best you have in the orchestra circle."

A Pudding In Distress.

By FANNIE MEDURRY PENNINGTON.
Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Perhaps it was fate that belated Cartwright and caused him to rush across the station platform just as the last passenger climbed aboard the train. He saw the train was materially assisted by a little old lady over whom he nearly stumbled and who wildly clutched his arm.

She was very much out of breath, and her hair had blown free from her bonnet until the breeze blew it over her face, she cried breathlessly, "My granddaughter has forgotten the Christmas pudding! She's on the train. Will you please take it to her? Her name's on the wrapper."

Cartwright mechanically accepted the pudding thus thrust upon him. "I promise to put it into her own hands," pleaded the little old lady anxiously.

Cartwright nodded as he clutched the pudding of the last car and pulled himself up. As the train swept around the curve he saw the old lady's face. Her eyes were fixed upon the package under his arm.

"I actually believe she thinks I want her old pudding," grumbled Cartwright. "She doesn't trust me."

"The train, which was the last local for the city, was crowded with would-be shoppers, with homesteaders and every citizen who had a penny to spare. At last Cartwright found a place beside a young woman who obligingly made room for him and immediately resumed the study of the newspaper through which the train was rushing.

Cartwright glanced casually at her voluminous brown veil; then his eyes fell on the package in her lap. It was written in a fine, old-fashioned hand and read, "Mary Lang, 1010 Essex place."

A pucker appeared between his eyes and he laid fair to develop into a scowl when he became conscious that the name on the package was not his own.

Working Too Hard.

The doctor held up two strings of coral. They were of equal size, but one was dark and dull in hue, the other was brightly pink and translucent.

"The dark one," he said, "is worth 50 cents; the pink one is worth $500. That is what makes coral so popular. It suits all pocketbooks. All over the world it goes. These strings of coral are the best I have for the dead of the year. They are put round the necks of the bodies about to be buried in the grave. These large and blood red beads are the natives, whose dark skins they perfectly suit. Here are a lot of coral hands with fingers extended in a Y, the gesture that warns off the evil eye. The coral hands are for Italy, where the belief in their efficacy is widespread."—Buffalo Express.

GATHERED UP.
The best way to kill a falsehood is to let it lie.

Did it ever occur to you that the majority of life's real pleasures are comparatively inexpensive?

There is a time in every young man's life when he either makes a fool of himself or gets some girl to do it for him.

When a woman calls her husband up by telephone without his knowing who she is,
she is always surprised to see how politely he addresses her at first.

Keep your promise to the letter, be prompt and exact, and it will save you much trouble and care through life, and win you the respect and trust of your friends.

Ant Mary—Why, Ethel, dearie, you have grown so I hardly know you. You pretty rosy-cheeked, and what progress have you made toward matrimony?

Ethel—Well, auntie, I'm on my fifth flap.

"He to whom heaven and earth bow down, he at whose might the mountains are appalled, he who gets little of the fruits of his toil, the firm of frame, the stout-armed, the wielder of all earthly power, he, men, is labor."

In nine cases out of ten it is more than likely that there is a real "boy" problem
to solve in the home there is a "father"
problem more or less closely connected with it and it is the existence of this latter problem that makes the first one so perplexing and so difficult of solution.

"JUST ONE."
Grandma—"Clara, do you think your mother would approve of your sitting up so late?"

Clara—"Why, grandma, it was only half-past ten when Frank left last evening."

Grandma—"Clara, your grandma happened to be awake when Frank was leaving, and didn't she hear him say,
"Now, Clara, just one?"

THE ONE THAT WAS WORRY.
Teacher—"Now, children, the subject is the story of the Prodigal Son. Can any one tell me who was glad when the prodigal returned?"

"The father," was the unanimous response.

"And who was sorry?" asked the teacher.

"The fattest calf," promptly responded
a little girl.

HE GOT IT.
"I should like to be excused your honors," said a man who had been summoned to the jury.

"I owe a man ten dollars and wish to hunt him up and pay it."

"Do you mean to tell the court that you would hunt up a man to pay a bill instead of waiting for him to hunt you up?"

"Yes, your honor."
"You are excused. I don't want any man on the jury that will like that."

HE KNOWS WHAT HE WANTED.
A Cleveland bookseller tells the following amusing story of a conversation he held recently with a well-to-do but illiterate client. "I must have some books,"
the latter remarked, and went on to explain that he had found an empty library in a house which he had purchased in Kingston. His only condition was that the volumes should be handsome. The bookseller suggested that half of them should be bound in Russia and half in Morocco. "What on earth is to hinder
you from having the lot bound in Cleveland?" was the unexpected response.

THE BEST LIFE.
The best life has both length and breadth—intense personal devotion to our own line of thought and duty, and a glad recognition of the relations we bear to others. So far from these being incompatible, they form the symmetry of life.
He who is energetic and earnest in the one direction is not contented with him, and altogether the joyous, experiences of his fellow men, is a living exemplification
of the truth that the good of the individual and the good of the world are identical, and that loyalty to both is the surest path to perfection in either.

Arbitration.
He was a man of peace, and he came upon two youths in a back street fighting.
Accordingly he pushed through the crowd
and persuaded the combatants to desist.
"Let me hear of you, my good fellows,"
he said, "before I bring you to arbitration."
"Settle your dispute by arbitration. Each of you choose half a dozen friends to arbitrate."
"Hurray!" yelled the crowd. "Do as the gentleman says, boys."

Greater Boston Revivals.
The Chapman-Alexander Revival meetings at Greater Boston will begin Tuesday evening, January 26, and will run continuously, excepting Saturdays, until after February 21. Simultaneous meetings will be held each evening in twenty-five churches throughout Greater Boston.

Messrs. Chapman and Alexander will have the assistance of over sixty evangelists, who come from all parts of the world to aid in the moral and religious awakening of the city. A complete organization of the ministers and laymen in the district interested in the work has been perfected.
You will want an account of these meetings, in order to know what is being done by these world-wide evangelists. It will be interesting in after years to have an authentic account of the Great Boston Revival. Perhaps you have a relative or friend who would be interested in having a record of the efforts of the workers in this signal moral awakening of the city.

No better way to get such information is to be had than in subscribing for the Boston Evening Transcript for the reduced rate for the revival. A special reduced rate has been arranged. We shall be pleased to mail the Transcript from January 26 to February 21 for sixty cents.
This is less than the regular subscription price and will be good only for the Transcript between the dates mentioned. Send today.

ON THE FARM.
A whole lot of the success with pigs
comes from the owner's and feeder's watchfulness.

A careful milker, quiet in his ways
about the stable, is worth many dollars more in a single season than one who is brutal.

Do not allow the fowls outdoors unless the runs are clear of snow. Poultry that are compelled to eat snow to quench their thirst are apt to suffer from bowel disorder.

A mule may never be known to kick and yet around his heels is no place for small children; for after the explosion
regrets won't mend the pieces, nor clubs
better the mule.

When horses object to the currcumbit
it is a pretty sure sign that sometimes they have been hurt by a careless or cruel caretaker. All animals, even the wildest, are ready won by kindness, and have no fear
of man so long as their confidence in him
is not betrayed.

It might be said that it is always seasonable to fertilize the orchard or garden.
The fact is that the soil this winter will partially freeze, and its richness soak into the soil for the use of plants next year. It not only serves as a fertilizer in the orchard, but in winter it acts as a soil protection and regulates sudden freezing and thawing. On hilly land it checks soil erosion.

With our increasing population, the time is not far distant when the problem of supplying our people with food will become pressing. The possible additions to our arable area are not great, and it will become necessary to obtain much larger crops from the land we do now have in more densely settled countries.

To do this we need better farm practice and better strains of wheat, corn and other crop plants, with a reduction in losses from soil erosion and from insects,
animals and other enemies of agriculture.

Milk contains water, fat, protein (casein or curd), sugar and ash, and these are all made from the food eaten by the cow.
If sufficient protein, fat and carbohydrates
are not contained in the foods given her,
the cow supplies this deficiency for a time by drawing up her own body, and gradually begins to shrink in quantity and quality of milk, or her milk becomes watery
and she loses weight as well as the cow.
She may suffer from hunger, although she is full of waste food, but she also becomes poor and does not yield the milk and butter she should.

Intelligent and progressive farmers and dairymen, are becoming more familiar with the fact that dry and better producing qualities of cows are accompanied by a general vigor, conformation, temperament, fitness, bearing and other features that are quite characteristic. Dairymen who profit most in the keeping of cows familiarize themselves with those characteristics and understand their relationship to the capacity for production.

The farmer who invests freely in his farm is sure to be paid well for his risk and trouble. Liberality in producing utensils, says the Western Rural, is the saving of both time and labor. The more perfect the farmer's tools the more profitable are they. So, also, it is with his working cattle and his stock. The most perfect in their kinds are most profitable.
Liberality in good barns and warm shelter is the source of health, strength and comfort to animals, causes them to thrive
on less food and secures from damage all sorts of crops.

STEALING A MARCH ON THE BEES.
Millions of dollars of damage is done
every year by the combeys of insect pests.
One of the worst of these is the San Jose scale, a small soft-bodied insect which adheres itself to the tree and sucks the juices, while injecting a poison which speedily results in tree's death. According to H. H. Howard, who writes in the Gardener for February, this is the time of the year when the owners of trees should "steal a march on the bugs," and so save many dollars, worth of fruit.
There are several solutions than can be sprayed on the tree which will kill the scale.

The most reliable of these is a lime-sulphur and soluble oil, both of which may be obtained from dealers in seedsmen's supplies. It is important that the trees should be thoroughly pruned before the work of spraying is begun.

Well, to close up, it turned out that
the diamond was missing a couple of tramps stopped at the house and were found there. Being left alone by a careless servant, and then found with my family to my quarters and took the diamond. After leaving the house he left his pal and went about with it, cutting
symbols to guide the latter who followed at the third street and the advance man hurried the diamond, and the
follow-up took it up.

I got $2500 for the diamond's recovery.
—CHRISTOPHER WARDWELL.

Morocco is a country of many Sabbath-keepers. The first three days I spent in Fez were most profitable. Arriving on a Thursday night, the next day was Friday, the Mohammedan Sabbath, which was followed by the Jewish Sabbath, the Hebrew Sabbath. The difference is considerable and strict in religious observance—and that in turn by the Christian Sunday. Subsequent comparisons, however, showed that the difference between any days of the week, on the Mohammedan Sabbath
a black pig is held on the suburbs at the prayer of Allah. Instead of the white that announces the time of devotions on other days. It remains up until the middle of the afternoon,
by which time everybody is supposed to have found out what day it is—
New York Post.

Following a Trail.

(Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)
Of all the trails I ever followed the longest was in tracing a murderer.

Just before taking it I was employed to look into the loss of a $25,000 diamond ring. It belonged to Louis Bam-berger. He missed it one day, and I was sent to find some thing, to investigate. He didn't know when the ring had been taken, since he had not seen it for a fortnight at least before he missed it. It was kept in a turban drawer in his bedroom.

For ten days I kept my eyes open,
followed up every clue, however slight, but made no headway whatever. I told Mr. Bamberger that if any one in the house had taken the ring I could find out who was the criminal. I gave up the job.

A month later I took a murder case.
While driving along a country road in the neighborhood of the scene of the murder at a farmstead I noticed something that resembled a Masonic symbol. It was a circle and a triangle roughly cut, the circle overlapping the triangle, one of the angles of the triangle being acute. I pulled up beside the post to examine it. Any one but a detective would have likely considered it the work of some little boy. I did not regard it so lightly, but I had not then a knowledge I gained afterward which would have enabled me to decipher it.
I drove on until I reached the farmstead. Later I came to a point where another road joined the one I was on.
Not a hundred yards before reaching the fork I saw a duplicate of the symbol and I retraced my steps to the corner of a tree standing in a point
at once occurred to me that these symbols indicated a route. Again I stopped and studied it. I noticed that the acute angle of the triangle pointed in the same direction as the one I had seen on the post, a direction the reverse of that in which the road turned. Ten miles farther on the murder had been committed the traces of which I was looking for. If these signs continued at intervals in a point of course I followed the murderer. I had made an important discovery. I drove on, watching for the sign, and saw two, each at a road fork or crossing.

On the way I retraced the Bamberger house and a mile farther on came to the house of the murderer. A mile and a half before reaching the latter the signs had been seen at the angle and angle. This was the last sign in that direction. I turned and drove back past the symbols and two miles beyond the first I had seen came to another, another and another, driving till it was too dark to see them.
Then I put up at a farmhouse and spent the night.

I expected that I might have a chase
before me lasting several days, but I never dreamed of what I had really undertaken. Every morning I would start out, drive all day, and return
to do much hunting for the symbols,
and turn in at night, hoping the next day to come to the end of my pilgrimage. I had started out from Cleveland, followed the "blazed" route across Illinois to St. Louis, thence to Tolpeka, thence to Santa Fe, a distance of 4,000 miles. I had seen the sign on reaching Santa Fe. I examined every route leading in every direction,
finding no symbols on any of them.

By this time I had done a good deal of thinking and had come to the conclusion that some one was showing the route to some one else. Had the same one also arrived? I examined the last symbol carefully and saw that it was fresh cut. I had no clue to discover the person who had been showing the route, so I determined to look out for whenever night fell, and see that I was not followed. I should discover some one who had been engaged in the murder. He would not travel at night, for he could not see in the dark. The signs I had found for him any letter than I could.

One morning six days after I had begun my watch a tramp came down the road. He carried a pack on his back, and a revolver. As usual, upon seeing any one approach I kept my head bent down, but my eye on the tramp. He noticed me, and found my man. He made no secret of his interest. Why should he? He was some 1,500 miles from the shortest route from Santa Fe to a few miles distant near the house of the murderer. He went up to the circle and angle, looked at it squarely and was proceeding on when I stepped forward and threw up my hands. He turned white, put his hands over his head, and I ordered him to walk on ahead of me toward Santa Fe a few miles distant.

Taking him to a police station, the first thing I did after getting there was to search him for evidence connecting him with the murder. What did I find? A ring set with a tremendous diamond?

Well, to close up, it turned out that
the diamond was missing a couple of
tramps stopped at the house and were
found there. Being left alone by a careless servant, and then found with my
family to my quarters and took the diamond. After leaving the house he left
his pal and went about with it, cutting
symbols to guide the latter who followed at the third street and the advance man hurried the diamond, and the
follow-up took it up.

I got $2500 for the diamond's recovery.
