Chinese can tell that he is Japanese when he is disguised in Chinese clothes. He not only speaks the language fluently, but he is also able to meet the Chinese on an even footing in such matters as etiquette, trickery, singing of Chinese songs, discussion of Chinese literature and art. The Chinese, however, gave him so much publicity that he became so widely known that he could no longer move about as freely as he desired. When the War started, it became evident that his days in China were over; his defeat in Honan confirmed the suspicion that he was a better trickster than he was a fighting general.

many years, however, and I have no hesitation in saying that he is much less of a Lawrence than he thinks he is. Of course no one can deny that he has done well in many of his undertakings, but the fact remains that he has many failures to his discredit, so much so that one would imagine they were the mistakes of a simple corporal rather than a Colonel in the Japanese Intelligence Service." The "Chief", further on, admits by implication that Chang Tso-lin had been killed on the orders of the Japanese General Staff and implied that Col. Doihara had executed the order. p. 48

The name of Kenji Doihara (土肥原賢二) constantly appears in popular accounts of the inner workings of Japanese espionage. A specialist on Chinese affairs, Doihara is one of the extremely few Japanese who can pass in all respects as a Chinese in China. He has been given so much publicity by the Chinese, however, that his identity has been impossible to conceal for some years. Almeto Vespa in his book records this comment by a Japanese concerning Doihara:

1. "Secret Agent of Japan" and "Bushido".

2. Op cit.

"Since in other countries they call him the Japanese Lawrence, he delights in showing his greatness by his hectoring manner. He has worked under me for many years, however, and I have no hesitation in saying that he is much less of a Lawrence than he thinks he is. Of course no one can deny that he has done well in many of his undertakings, but the fact that he has many failures to his discredit, so much so that one would imagine they were the mistakes of a simple Corporal rather than a Colonel in the Japanese Intelligence Service."

That Doihara was not as successful as many believed is also indicated by his later career. It was his 14th Division that was severely defeated in Honan when the Chinese cut the Yellow River dikes and drowned most of his soldiers. In August 1942 he was taken out of China and made Inspector General of Army Aviation. It is thought his defeat in Honan confirmed the suspicion that he was a better trickster than he was a fighting General.

Sept. 11, 1943: Commander of the Eastern Army. (Tokyo Radio)

Sept. 15, 1943: Brazzaville Radio (French Congo) was quoted as saying:
"The famous General Poihara is supposed to have been recalled to Tokyo; officers more moderate in their strategic conceptions have taken his place at the head of the army". (This is believed to refer to his recall to Tokyo after his defeat in China in 1937)

Oct. 8, 1943: Commander Western Defense Zone. (Tokyo Radio)

Mar. 25, 1944: Has been appointed to a "certain important post" (see below)
Gen. Hisaichi FUJI succeeded him as Commander of the Eastern Defense Zone in Japan. (Tokyo Radio)

* FCC comments that Poihara was engaged in the task of adjusting the defensive structure which centered around Tokyo.

Feb.-March, 1944: USAF CBI, Weekly G-2 Report, JICR # C-2797:

In support of intensive speculations on the possibility of a Japanese drive into South China, special reference is made to the report that the notorious and formidable Lt. Gen. Kenji POIHARA has recently arrived in Macao.
(Kweihsien, Feb. 6, C-3 or higher). The report added almost superfluously that "a bad situation might develop".

Poihara has long been Japan's outstanding fifth-column expert and his presence has foreboded trouble from the time of the earliest Sino-Japanese "incidents" in 1930-1931. He has specialized in creating and maintaining puppet organizations and in operating Japanese under-world penetration agencies, with great success.

His Headquarters now are said to be at Fatshan [between Macao and Canton] and his immediate purpose is organization of secret operations against American installations and personnel in Sout. China. However, if his work is broader in scope and encompasses top political and espionage operations for a Jap drive north from Canton, he will be performing chores at which he has become thoroughly expert.

Same report states that the Commanding General of the Japanese forces in South China, Gen. Hisaichi FUJI, has arrived in Canton to confer with local military authorities concerning an invasion of Free China from the South.

DOIHARA, Kenji

b. Aug. (?) 1883 - Commander in C-in-C of the Japanese Air Force.
Address: War Department, Tokyo, Japan

Big, stocky little Major General Acaji Doihara, in 1941 commander in chief of the Japanese Air Force, is an astute, devious master of intrigue. His reputation was not made in the air, but in Manchuria and Northern China, where he spent long years as secret agent, professional propagandist, and soldier-diplomat. A man with very strong "Pan-Asian" feelings who is supposed to have had "more Chinese acquaintances... than any living Chinese in active political life," he originated the pre-1937 Japanese policy of civilian China's northern provinces from the south by fomenting and encouraging "economy" movements and setting up puppet governments, and he tried almost singlehanded to carry it out. To a great extent he was successful.

Born a poor boy in Oita, Japan, in August, 1883, Doihara became a socialist in China at the Japanese Military Academy, from which he was graduated first in his class. Later he went on to attend the Military Staff College, from which he was graduated in 1911. According to John Gunther, one of his early jobs was to support the Anfu group of Chinese leaders who ruled Peking (later renamed Peiping) with Japanese connivance and won concessions to the Japanese at outrageous prices; and when the clique broke up he smuggled its leader to safety in a laundry basket. He served for years as an adviser to the Chinese Ministry of War, but his contract was finally liquidated when he fell under suspicion. Next he went to Peiping to become assistant military attaché to the Japanese legation under General Honjo. He was rapidly known as an authority on S.S. and affairs in the most distant sections of China, and his talents were soon being put to maximum use.

In 1931 General Honjo was appointed commander of the Japanese Kwantung forces, and he immediately made Doihara (then a mere colonel) his chief intelligence officer with the title of chief of the Bureau of Military Relations and Intelligence at Mukden, Manchuria, the "nerve center" of the Army's secret service. It is Doihara who was supposedly responsible not only for concocting the daring plan which resulted in the "Mukden Incident" and the subsequent occupation of Manchuria by Japanese troops, but also for bringing from Tokyo secret instructions to General Honjo which gave the latter full discretionary powers to act. When a Japanese officer was assassinated Doihara spread rumors that the assassin was being protected by Chinese authorities. Tension grew. Finally, on September 18, 1931, a manufactured "bombing" on the Chinese Manchurian Railway line at Mukden, ascribed by the Japanese to Chinese terrorists, brought the Kwantung army into action. The Sino-Japanese conflict had begun.

Doihara acted as Mayor of Mukden for a time, then in November 1931, went to Tientsin. The disturbances there coincided mysteriously with the arrival of the same Japanese with masklike features and a mustache that slightly resembled Hitler's. It is said that Doihara, like certain Chinese reactionary groups, was carefully financed them; and that he personally engineered the "escape" from Tientsin of the Manchu "Loy Emperor" Pu-Yi, who, he thought, would make a suitable puppet ruler for the as yet non-existent state of Manchukuo. During the riots Pu-Yi was spirited away to a seaside resort near Dairen on a Japanese ship -- some say against his will. He and Doihara were old acquaintances, for seven years before Doihara had smuggled him out of Peiping when his life was in danger.

While foreign correspondents were beginning to cable home tales of the "Lawrence of Manchuria" (whom none of them, however, had yet succeeded in interviewing), Doihara, on January 26, 1932, was transferred to Harbin to assume the post of head of the Special Service Department. In spite of Japanese successes in the region to the north and east of Harbin, Harbin itself had been causing the Japanese a great deal of trouble, and Doihara acted so successfully there that certain merchants were persuaded to "beg" the Japanese to occupy the locality. The Kwantung Army was glad to comply, and ten days after Doihara's appearance there, Harbin was in its ambitious hands.

As Doihara took over his new functions, he announced: "The independence of Manchuria and Manchukuo is inevitable, for this is the policy resolved upon. In spite of everything that the League of Nations can say, neither Chiang Kai-shek nor Cang Hsueh-liang will succeed in changing the situation." On February 18, Manchukuo proclaimed its "independence"; on February 19, the Pan-Manchurian Conference at Mukden elected Hsuan Tung (the boy Emperor Pu-Yi) as its provisional President; and a little later Doihara was promoted to the rank of Major General.

Now Manchuria was under Japanese control. Doihara carried his intrigues to Mongolia, where the climate was also favorable. There more than one autonomous Prince was persuaded (or at least persuaded to express the opinion) that Chahar "would only serve its best economic interest by incorporating with Manchuria", and by June 1935 North Chahar was being occupied by Japanese troops. "It remained for Doihara to push the Japanese armies in the direction of Peiping and to encircle north China in Tokyo's direct sphere of influence." The idea was to find Chinese puppets who would form an autonomous area of the five northern provinces, divorcing Nanking (then the seat of the Chinese National Government) and letting Japan conquer them "without the loss of life of a single Japanese taxpayer". This sociable little man with "confident manners and a liking for negotiation" was soon commuting back and forth from one northern province to another, conferring with innumerable Chinese officials, civilian and military, important and petty, in power and out -- and always letting himself be quoted as to "China's Pincerity and Japan's Role as the Chief Stabilizing Force in the Orient."

By October 1935, there were farmers' riots and autonomists' demonstrations in Hsinagho and Doihara began playing up General Sung Cheh-yuen as head of the projected independent state. But all was not well. The next month, if reports are true, the Japanese Ambassador told Chiang Kai-shek that Tokyo would not support its "Colonel Lawrence's" separatist plans, and Chiang gave instructions to his northern war lords which resulted in their absence at a projected conference with Doihara in Peiping. Furious (he had blustered that if Chiang Kai-shek wouldn't sanction the plan eleven army divisions would be sent in by Japan), Doihara left for Tientsin. The East Hopei Autonomous Council was nevertheless proclaimed, with its capital at Tungchow within the Lemilitarized Zone on the outskirts of Peiping, and the Hopei-Chehar Political Council, which weakened the Chinese hold on at least these two provinces was set up. John Gunther tells of some of Doihara's even less successful encounters with Chinese generals. One Wang Chen whom he was trying to wean from allegiance to Chiang Kai-shek got out of a rendezvous with him by pleading "stove-poisoning"; he had sat too near an overheated stove. Another war lord, threatened with death at Tolkara's secret headquarters if he refused to accede to Japanese demands, took out his watch and announced: "how interesting. It is now 11:25. Before coming here I instructed my troops to massacre every Japanese in the city if I did not return to my headquarters by midnight. Good evening."

Usually, however, Loihara was successful in finding corruptible war lords. In 1936 he became head of the Special Service Department of the Kwantung Garrison in Mukden and Laiyen, his most publicized project to make the puppet emperor of Manchukuo "Emperor of All China" and return him to the Imperial Dragon Throne in Peiping. Perhaps he would even have succeeded in this if the next year, with China and Japan finally at war, he had not returned to active military service as commander of the 14th Division. At the same time he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant general.

Loihara's first military exploits against the Chinese were not so spectacular as his earlier activities; at least his division took a severe beating in a battle in Shansi. But it is possible that he still has things more important than fighting to do. In May 1939, at any rate it was reported that he had arrived in the south to prevail upon Wang Ching-wei to head a confederation of Japanese puppet governments in China. What he is doing today in addition to his duties as head of Nippon's air force is anybody's guess.

General Kenji Doihara was born in August 1883. He graduated from the Military Staff College in 1912. He was Mayor of Mukden at the time of the Manchuria incident and later Chief of the Special Service Department (a secret intelligence organization) of the Japanese Kwangtung Army Garrison in Mukden and Dairen. He was promoted to Lieutenant General in 1936 and made Commander of the 14th Division in 1937. After the defeat of this division in Honan he was recalled to Japan and made Inspector General of Army Aviation. For more than twenty years Doihara bought and sold Chinese politicians and war lords in an effort to undermine China's power and establish Japan's Empire in China. gence, directed towards furthering Japan's aggressive, expansionist policy. Doihara is said to have once trudged all over Korea disguised as a peddler furthering the doctrines of Toyama.

Doihara concentrated on Chinese affairs and became one of the few Japanese officers who so mastered the Chinese language that, when wearing Chinese clothes, the Chinese themselves could not tell that he was a Japanese. He also learned Chinese tricks of etiquette and manner and was able to sing Chinese songs and discuss Chinese literature and art. This added to his fame, but as time went on, he became so widely known that he was unable to preserve his incognito.

Doihara in the early thirties was middle aged. An amiable-looking person, with an athletic build, he had none of the mannerisms of the typical Japanese spy of fiction. He is said to have a good-natured, pleasant manner, rather like a YMCA secretary. He made a specialty of information about people and was said to have had a dossier on every American in Shanghai, down to the last hair on his chest.

Doihara was Mayor of Mukden at the time of the Mukden Incident (1931) and is credited with being one of the planners of the incident. His appearance in any locality invariably forebode a fresh Japanese plot. Doihara was high adviser to Marshal Chang Tso-lin and is suspected of having engineered the plot that killed him. He is said to have groomed Henry Pu Yi for the job of Puppet Emperor of Manchukuo and to have been instrumental in placing on the throne. It is believed that Doihara failed to realize his greatest ambition of all - the scheme to separate the Five Northern Provinces from China and make them "autonomous," i.e., under Japanese control. His plans were thwarted by the wily Chinese and in 1935-36 Tokyo was not yet ready to go to war. So Doihara was repudiated by his government and his schemes for an Autonomy Movement collapsed. As a face-saver, he was able to set up a Puppet Regime in East Hopei which proved of great strategic value to Japan and was useful as a vast narcotic and smuggling base from which operations were carried on southward under the direction of Doihara's own Special Service Section of the Japanese Army. In the long years of his undercover political maneuverings, Doihara kept the press and public in the dark as to his activities, but suddenly in 1936 he broke forth with press interviews that fairly dripped of Japan's honeyed gospel of peace, happiness and prosperity for China. At the same time he denied emphatically that Japan was anti-foreign or that he had any ideas whatsoever of an Asia-for-the Asiatics. After the military mutiny in Tokyo in February 1936, Doihara was recalled to Tokyo and made Commander of the First Division. After the war started, he was back in China commanding troop divisions. It was his 14th Division which was so severely defeated in Honan when the Chinese cut the Yellow River dikes and drowned most of his soldiers in the famous battle of Taierchwang in May 1938. He returned to Japan thereafter and later was made Commander-in-Chief of the Air Force. In 1943 it was reported that he was Commander of the Eastern Military Defense Zone and concurrently a member of the Supreme War Council.

An interesting comment on Doihara is found in Vespa's book "Secret Agent of Japan." Vespa quotes the "Chief" of the Japanese Intelligence Service as saying that Doihara worked under him for many years and that he considered Doihara much less of a Lawrence than he thought he was. Vespa quotes the "Chief" as saying: "He delights in showing his greatness by his hectoring manner. No one can deny that he has done well in many of his undertakings but the fact remains that he has many failures to his discredit, so much so that one would imagine they were the mistakes of a simple corporal rather than a Colonel in the Japanese Intelligence Service.

This report states that Diyuvara (sic) (presumably a misspelling of Doihara), an extremely capable man whose exploits in North China earned him the title of "Butcher" has been sent by the Japanese to a small village south of Canton to organize sabotage and assassination groups. (Note: This may be Fatshan, a suburb of Canton. See note on Card 4 and also see card INTELLIGENCE CENTER IN FATSHAN (China - 1). There are at least four schools with approximately one hundred students each, located in the Hong Kong - Canton area. Student agents are graduated about every three months and sent into Free China to damage and destroy American installations and to assassinate American personnel. Most Americans in the armed forces in China dislike China and apparent Chinese assassination of some of their number might cause serious trouble.

General Doihara contributed an article on the "Roots of Japan's National Policy Towards China" to the Chuo Koron in November 1938. A translation of this article appeared in Amerasia for March 1939.

The following is from the New York Times of March 26, 1944:

"In view of the seriousness of the present war situation, the commanders-in-chief of the Eastern and Western Defence Zones, which are important responsibilities in the defence of the Japanese mainland, have been changed. Out of the top job in the Eastern Defence Zone to an un-named 'certain important post' went General Kenji Doihara, 61, specialist in intelligence and propaganda, and once, briefly, Commander-in-chief of the Japanese Air Force.

This report quotes another report, dated 20 July 1943, as stating that Hiroshi TAKATA (qv, Macao - 1) is a personal attaché to DOIHARA, the Japanese Commander-in-Chief of the Kwangtung Army. Who's News Today - - - By DELOS W. LOVELACE

FOR various bits of information this corner has been obliged to embassy aids, exiles, congressmen, Washington correspondents, train pickups, plain friends and newspaper morgues. Now its thanks go to Richard Jordan in the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. Jordan reports, in the magazine of the residents there, on Lieut.-Gen. Kenji Doihara.

Doihara has the job of making Malaya into a model occupied country for the Japanese government. This is an important assignment, but more orthodox sources have provided no news about him.

The helpful Mr. Jordan crossed his craftily marked spoor twice. Both crossings were in Shanghai. Once the two were brought together by Jordan's camera, to which Japanese job-lot spies objected. Once they met in the bar of the French Club.

Jordan's curiosity was so stirred by the encounters that he began asking questions. To his surprise he discovered that this was exactly what Doihara did most of the time.

Doihara, Jordan writes in the admirable Atlantan, was "a general under-cover and all-around dirty work guy. His specialty was information about people. They claim he had a dossier on each American in Shanghai, down to the last hair on his chest."

* * *

A N Oriental Horatio Alger, Mr. Jordan decided, but bent on evil rather than good.

Doihara brought about the shooting of the Jap marine, which in turn brought about the invasion of Chinese Shanghai. He wangled an appointment as military advisor to Chang Tso-lin and wasn't exactly surprised when bombs went off in the Old Marshal's railway car.

In his home at Tientsin, he coached one Henry Pu-yi in the ways of royalty and after several years Henry Pu-yi became Kong Teh, puppet Emperor of Manchukuo.

Doihara succeeded in spite of a lack of all the Hollywood characteristics of a Japanese spy.

Believe it or not, Jordan reports, his teeth do not protrude.

He doesn't bow.

He doesn't hiss.

He doesn't stare through sinister narrowed eyes.

Pleasant, athletic-looking, middle-aged, he might have just returned from a four-year stay at Columbia.

But, Jordan points out, "always amiably, always good-naturedly, always in the same friendly, YMCA secretary style, Doihara accomplished his objectives." And his success has built up in Mr. Jordan a little grievance which he is certainly entitled to broadcast here since he has been so helpful.

* * *

MR. JORDAN'S grievance is that Doihara has spoiled Mr. Moto; meaning, of course, the super J. P. Marquand's super-spy.

Moto, after meeting in the French Bar, would have slinked out of sight, or peeked at Jordan through a hole in the wall.

Doihara just laughed and told Jordan to drop by and see him sometime. It might be an idea for Mr. Marquand to take time off, even though he says all of us have too little time, and do something to rehabilitate Mr. Moto in Mr. Jordan's eyes.

~~NAZI WAR CRIMES DISCLOSURE ACT~~

Lt. Gen. Kenji DOIHARA

Jap. spy-spy, agent-provocateur extraordinary, fifth-column expert and manufacturer of incidents, who figured so largely in Japan's annexation of Manchuria, and towards whom, according to some, the U.S. and Britain were blindly indulgent. For more than 10 years he bought and sold Chinese politicians and war lords in an effort to undermine Chiang's control and establish Japan's Empire in China. For his pains, he won the unofficial title of the "Lawrence of Manchuria." Later he became Commander-in-Chief of the Japanese Air Force.

Doihara was early imbued with the ideas of Mitsuru TOYAMA (of Black Dragon Society fame) for a world-wide spy-intelligence directed towards furthering Japan's aggressive, expansionist policy. Doihara is said once to have trudged throughout Korea disguised as a peddler furthering Toyama's doctrines.

Doihara concentrated on Chinese on Chinese affairs. He so mastered the Chinese language that, when wearing Chinese clothes, the Chinese themselves could not tell he was a Jap. He learned Chinese etiquette, mannerisms and trickery, could discuss Chinese literature and art and sing Chinese songs.
This only added to his fame, but as time went on, he became so widely known that he was unable to preserve his incognito or mingle as freely as before.

In the early 1930's, Doihara was middle-aged. Short and stocky, with a Hitler moustache, he was said to look like a good-natured, amiable person of YACCA-Secretary type or an oriental "Horatio Alger". Kind and good-natured, he had none of the mannerisms of the typical Jap spy of fiction. His specialty was information about people and it is said he had a detailed dossier on every American in Shanghai.

Doihara had been at one time "high adviser" to the old warlord ruler of Manchuria, Marshal Chang Tso-lin who was killed by a bomb thrown under his train.
Suspicion points to Doihara as the engineer of the plot.

He is also said to have engineered the kidnapping of the Manchu boy Emperor Henry Pu-i and subsequently groomed him for the job of puppet ruler of Manchukuo.

In 1931, the Commander in Chief of the Jap Kwangtung forces, General Nohjo, made Colonel Loihara his chief intelligence officer for Manchuria. Their headquarters at Mukden was the nerve center of the Jap Army's Secret Service. Loihara then became Mayor of Mukden (some say for one week only) at the time of the Mukden Incident and was credited with planning this daring incident which resulted in the occupation of Manchuria by Japanese troops. By this time, Loihara's appearance in any locality invariably foreboded a fresh Jap plot.

In 1936, after more years of successful scheming, Loihara, now a Major General, was made Chief of the Special Services Section of the Jap Kwangtung Garrison, or, in effect, the Army overlord of what the Japs called the Manchurian Seized Territory - actually as much a part of Japan as the city of Tokyo. The Army went into business on a huge scale, taking over direct management of many industries and state enterprises and Loihara waxed rich in his post in the Special Services Section which controlled most army business and which was considered by the Japs a guarantee of financial success.

It is said, however, that Loihara failed to realize his greatest ambition -- to separate the Five Northern Provinces from China and make them autonomous, i.e., under Jap control. His schemes were thwarted by the wily Chinese, and Tokyo in 1935-1936 was not yet ready for war. Loihara was finally repudiated by his government and his schemes for an autonomy movement collapsed. He later said the whole thing was "only a newspaper myth."

As a face saver, he set up a puppet regime in East Hopei. This proved strategically valuable to Japan and useful as a vast narcotics and smuggling base.

from which operations were carried on southward under the direction and protection of Sohma's own Special Services Section of the Japanese Army.

In the long years of his undercover political maneuverings, he kept the Press and public rigidly blind to his activities; but suddenly in 1936, he broke forth with Press statements that fairly criminalized Japan's policy and said that all they had in mind for China was peace, happiness and prosperity. He emphatically denied that Japan was anti-foreign or had any ideas whatsoever for an Asia colony for the Asiatics.

After the military mutiny in Tokyo in February 1936, Sohma was recalled to Tokyo and given command of a Division.

In 1937 at the start of the Indo-Japanese war, he went back to China in command of troop divisions. In 1938, his 2nd Division was severely defeated in Nanking when the Chinese cut the Yellow River dikes and drowned most of his soldiers. This culminated in the now famous Jiaolinfeng at the Battle of Taierzhuang in May 1938.

The suspicion now seemed to be confirmed that he was a better trickster than a fighting general.

He returned to Japan and from then on little was heard of his activities. Except that in May 1939, it was reported that he had arrived in the south to prevail upon Wang Ching-wei to head a coalition of Japanese puppet governments in China.

In 1942, he became Commander-in-Chief of the Japanese Air Forces.

In May 1943, it was announced that he was newly appointed as Commander of the Western Military Defense Zone, the defensive zone which centred around Tokyo, and concurrently a member of the Supreme War Council.

An interesting comment on Delmare is found in Aleto Vespi's book Secret Agent of Japan, published about 1938. Vespi quotes the "Chief" of the Japanese Intelligence Service as saying that Delmare worked under him for many years and that Delmare was much less of a "Liberator" than he thought he was. Says this "Chief" of Jap Intelligence: "... he delights in showing his greatness by his hectoring manner... no one can deny that he has done well in many of his undertakings but the fact remains that he has many failures to his discredit, so much so that one would imagine they were the mistakes of a single corporal rather than a Colonel in the Japanese Intelligence Service."

He is called by ignorant X-2 representatives in the field, "TSUCHIHI HARA," YKK CO2-313, p. 3 which is of course an impossible name. According to the document, Major 13 March 1945 (sic) TSUCHIHI HARA was in charge of Japanese Intelligence in Manchuria after the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931. HARA (meaning DOIHARA) developed the system of having Japanese agents in plain clothes, and put the system into practice in Manchuria. The personnel selected for the work were classed as follows:

1. Local landlords and politicians.
2. Bandits.
3. Merchants and smugglers.
4. Military personnel and local police.
5. Coolies, peddlers and fortune-tellers.
6. Civil servants of the lower categories.
7. Gangsters and low-life loafers.

In September 1931, DOIHARA used a number of disheartened military men and bandits in his attack on Sun Yang, Manchuria. The bandits were mounted on horseback and preceded Japanese troops in escort fashion. The military men and loafers were in the locality, and created excitement among the people. When the bandits were in sight, those in the city raised the Japanese flag, signifying that they had performed their assignment and were in control. In using a politician, DOIHARA used a defeated politician named WONG K'0 MING (qv, Manchuria). WONG was used as a medium of contact between the landlords and the gangsters. Propaganda spread and disturbances among the people was their main mission. After the Japanese had occupied this part of Manchuria, WONG was given that section, and was directed to collect for the Japanese.

In this report, DOIHARA is again called "TSUCHIHI HARA" by the X-2 representative, who says that "he is a high member of the Japanese Central Intelligence Staff."

Report says that he was born in Japan, and was a graduate of the Army Academy for Sergeants (query: is this nonsense, or does the X-2 field man really mean the Military Staff College, from which DOIHARA did in truth graduate in 1912?). "Being in favor of the Continental Policy of Japan, this man chose to serve in Manchuria after graduation, so he was assigned to an important post in the Special Service Branch of the Japanese Army in Manchuria. He was given the title of Commander of this unit after the invasion of Manchuria in 1931. Subject was one of the men responsible for the pre-invasion plotting in Northern China, and was also engaged in the battle of Changsha. For his brilliant service, he was appointed to the rank of Lieutenant General in the Japanese Army. He was transferred from Northern China back to Manchuria, where he again assumed his former post as Chief in Charge of the Special Service. As a youth, Subject had travelled often between China and Japan. He had travelled throughout China as an Attache-Commissioned-Lieutenant (sic). He attained his present rank

After the invasion of Manchuri Subject was assigned to the position of temporary mayor of the city of Fengtien, in addition to his other duties. He was an expert in the social and political fields, and the Puppet Emperor of Manchukuo was crowned through his influence."

"In February 1935, at the Tientsin Railroad Station, a Chinese patriot named TSUI attempted to assassinate Subject. The attempt failed. In July 1937, Subject returned to Tokyo, where he retired for six months, and then he resumed his old job in the Special Services. It is assumed that Subject is now one of the Directors of the Special Service Section in Tokyo."

"KAWASHIMA was Subject's most favored assistant. It is reported that ~~$34~~ KAWASHIMA (qv, Manchuria 2) was Subject's most favored assistant, and that his new post is on the Manchurian border, as an Intelligence Agent against Soviet Russia. NAZI WAR CRIMES DISCLOSURE ACT

Spring 1935 "Influenced by General DOIHARA's reports, the Japanese thought they would meet with no difficulty in starting an autonomy movement similar to that in Manchuria and detach from the government at Nanking the provinces of Chahar, Suiyan, Hopei, Shansi and Shantung. Hence the HO-UMETSU (or UMEZU) Agreement finally signed July 6, 1935" At one stroke General YU Hsueh-Chung, governor of Hopei Province, his Fifty-first Army, and all central government divisions had been driven from North China, and all Kuomintang and auxiliary political organs in the province suppressed.

June 23, 1935 CHIN- DOIHARA Agreement

Note: As a result of the "Changpei Incident" which involved an overnight detention for questioning of a group of Japanese officers, some of whom were members of the Special Service Mission resident at Dolonor, the party set out on a trip through Chahar Province in direction of Kalgan without passports and were stopped for questioning by local Chinese officials at Changpei June 5, 1935. Kwantung Army presented demands backed up with troop movements on Chahar border. Nanking government, June 23, 1935, empowered General CHIN Te-chun, to arrange settlement with Major-General DOIHARA. Terms called for an apology, dismissal of responsible Chinese officers, pledge that such incidents would not recur, and a guarantee of free and safe travel for all Japanese in Chahar; in addition terms called for dissolution of Kuomintang organs in Chahar, cessation of Chinese immigration into the province, removal of 132nd Division from Changpei and demilitarization of a broad area of eastern Chahar, "all territory east of a line drawn from Changping in Hopei to the Wall in east Chahar via Yenching and Taliinpao, and south of another line drawn from a point north of Tushihkan to a point south of Changpei." Forces of the 29th Route Army were to be withdrawn from the area, within which order was to be maintained by a police force. (Japan in China. T. A. Bisson)

Nov. 6, 1935 Major-General DOIHARA, Chief of the Kwantung Army's Special Service Section, arrived in Tientsin. In his conferences dealt mainly with the leaders of the 29th Army and had several meetings with General SUNG Che-yuen...Everything seemed prepared for the coup de main that was to deliver the five northern provinces into the hands of Japan...as added pressure...Nov. 15, the Kwantung Army dispatched four divisions from Chinchow, Manchuria, to Shanhakuan, and that night the headquarters of North China garrison demanded accomodations for 15,000 troops from the Tientsin authorities. Nov. 18, DOIHARA delivered a verbal ultimatum to chief negotiator on the Chinese side. DOIHARA's ultimatum: if a North China Autonomous Council was not announced on or before Nov. 20, DOIHARA stated that five divisions would be moved into Hopei and four into Shantung. DOIHARA expected a favorable answer. The evening of Nov. 19, 1935 CHIANG Kai-Shek wired North China officials to drop negotiations with DOIHARA, since the whole problem of Sino-Japanese relations was being taken up in Nanking. Nov. 20, DOIHARA quietly left Peiping for Tientsin. China had agreed to have conversations concerning the "Three Principles" of which HIROTA Koki, Foreign Minister had proposed in his final interview with the Chinese Ambassador in Tokyo Oct. 28.

- (1) Positive aid by Nanking government to a scheme designed to place Sino-Japanese relations on a firm friendly basis.
- (2) A formula for cooperation between China, Japan and Manchukuo in development of North China
- (3) A program for a common front between China, Japan and Manchukuo to prevent the spread of Communism.

Nov. 20, Colonel TAKAHASHI, military attache informed a United Press correspondent that "DOIHARA was in North China in a private capacity only, and not on any official mission". Nov. 21 TAKAHASHI declared "Major-General DOIHARA has no authority to negotiate with Chinese officials."

His larger scheme brought to halt, DOIHARA was as yet by no means defeated.

Nov. 24, 1935 YIN Ju-keng, who had been raised to post of control of East Hopei demilitarized zone (since May 31, 1933) by the Japanese, issued a proclamation of autonomy for the East Hopei area. In the demilitarized zone, at least, DOIHARA was able to move toward the realization of his plans.

Nov. 27, 1935 DOIHARA visited General HAN Fu-chu of Shantung and General FU Tso-yi, chairman of Suiyuan. Japanese forces effected a temporary occupation of the Fengtai railway junction Nov. 27, ostensibly to prevent removal of rolling stock to the south. Extensive Japanese troop movements in the Peiping-Tientsin area and the threat that a full division would be sent in from Manchuria, contributed to the general uneasiness.

Nov. 30, General SUNG telegraphed Nanking that he could no longer control the growing "demand of the people" for autonomy.

Dec. 25, 1935, the "East Hopei Autonomous Council" gave way to the "East Hopei Anti-Communist Autonomous Government". Some months later the East Hopei area became the source of entrance for a vast illicit trade in Japanese goods that seriously affected the revenues of the Central Government of China. (Japan in China, T.A. Bisson)

1936 Promoted to Lt.-General; attached to "Remaining 1st Division"

1937 - Nov. 1939 Commander of 14th Division in North China

1938 "After fall of Hankow in Oct. 1938, the Japanese decided to make WU Pei-fu the chief executive of China's occupied territory. WU became angry and spurned all Japanese emissaries. Japanese then sent their arch conspirator DOIHARA who finally forced his way into WU's presence. 'When as you Japanese have repeatedly done, you have violated our territorial and administrative integrity, it is obviously useless for me to talk to you about moral law. But you have no qualifications even to warrant my speaking to you about the way of force. I am compelled to speak to you about the ways of robbers and highwaymen. But even they are guided by principles which I do not discover in you. What is the good of my talking to you at all?' Having thus delivered himself, the old general waved his sleeves and went into his inner chambers." (Biography of CHIANG Kai-Shek, CHANG, 1944)
