Wikimedia depends on volunteers

Wikimedia depends on an influx of volunteers

Is UKWP (net) gaining or losing active editors?

How can we attract (more) volunteers?

Some volunteer motivations

- Help my language community access information
- Using my knowledge to benefit others
- Practicing my knowledge/skills through writing
- SAVING THE WORLD: providing information about topics important for future of mankind (wars, inter-human relations, preservation of nature, energy consumption etc.)
- Being invited to contribute

WIKIMEDIA

Some volunteer motivations

- Language pride
  - "How could it be that we don't have this in our language?!"
  - "How come we have fewer articles than X language?"
- Language preservation
- Inspired by others' work
- Campaigns

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Some volunteer motivations

- Obsession: "I CAN'T STAND THE RED LINKS!"
- "someone is wrong on the Internet!"
- Sense of responsibility/ownership
- Encouraged by others' building on my own work
- Joy in working competently
- Force of habit
- Sense of pioneering, groundbreaking work

Okay, but how do we find these people?

Accumulating volunteers

1. Volunteers are coming to us all the time! We just need to not drive them away. (the good-faith ones)

2. Outreach: proactively proposing volunteering (ideally, multi-session and/or specific-audience)

3. Defend against burnout: lose fewer volunteers.

1. Retaining new volunteers

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Getting newbies to stay

- Distinguish between good-faith and bad-faith newbies. Usually, we do OK rejecting bad-faith newbies, but can improve reception of good-faith ones.
  - Remember: not every person can be motivated to Wikimedia work. The model doesn't work for everyone.
- Different motivations require different onboarding (see also [[m:101]])
- Help promising newbies deal with setbacks

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Getting newbies to stay

- appreciation ==> motivation
  - Identify promising newbies and appreciate them! (e.g. using Quarry queries)
  - Also appreciate "oldies", "techies", ...
  - Off-wiki appreciation (treats, merchandise, ...)

WIKIMEDIA

On-wiki appreciation [1/2]

- The thank button
  - Statistics show thanked people are more active
  - Thank someone everyday!

On-wiki appreciation [2/2]

- Barnstars, medals, etc.
  - Their value is proportional to your respect for the person who awarded you the barnstar
- Appreciation projects
  - Wiki-zhushchyvky! (off-wiki, for on-wiki contribs)
  - Other examples?
- On-wiki appreciation is a zero-cost high-value way to motivate volunteers!

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Engaging newbies off-wiki

- Try to have low-barrier, recurring activities
  - e.g. a photo walk, taking pictures and uploading them to Commons, while discussing Freedom of Panorama
  - Recurring/regular -- meetups, WikiThursday
- Lets you engage immediately at the moment when interest is generated (e.g. "our next photowalk is in seven days!" (rather than in seven months)

WIKIMEDIA

Off-wiki volunteers and allies

- Given diverse volunteer profiles (interests, capacities, motivations), not everyone can or wants to write articles (or patrol, or proofread…)
- Keep an open mind on how to harness good-will
  - But don't compromise on principles
- Non-editors can help a lot in organizing off-wiki activities; it's desirable as long as active editors are also involved; negative results likely otherwise.
- Local professionals (lawyers, accountants, media experts) can help without editing

But I need volunteers for X!

- Describe on-wiki what you need; describe why X is the thing to do. But:
- Accept that not everyone may share the interest in X
- If you can't find enough volunteers, you may need to change your plan. Go with the energy!
- In time, build more volunteer interest with your original plan.

Key principles for retaining newbies

- We're open to everyone, but:
  - not everyone will be interested; not everyone interested will manage to adapt to our norms; and that's okay.
  - Spend time cultivating promising people, not fighting to keep people who are refusing to accept our norms
- Try to match skills and motivation to roles and tasks.
- Keeping the newbies who come anyway is easier than actively attracting people who weren't already interested.

2. Recruiting Volunteers through Outreach

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Outreach

- Outreach is better understood, and better documented, so not the subject of this session. But quick tips:
    - Each of the motivating factors from the survey can lead to its own strategy for outreach.
    - Single-session general-audience doesn't work.
    - Sparking interest is easy. Supporting the newbie through the full integration process is hard.
    - Experiment! Innovate. Adapt.
    - Outreach-recruited newbies like the same stuff (appreciation etc.)

3. Reducing burnout

What demotivates volunteers? What burns them out?

What demotivates you? What burned you out?

WIKIMEDIA

FOUNDATION

These things demotivate 1

- Endless, circular discussions.

- Indifference and lack of collaboration, e.g. board proposes X and are the only people doing it.

- Feeling unappreciated, taken for granted. Lack of feedback.

- Being criticized by people who aren't helping / working themselves.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

These things demotivate 2

- Bureaucracy in "real life", paperwork, accounting...
- Lack of consensus on core policies (e.g. copyright)
- Admin work on controversial topics or high-conflict users
- Feeling unheard, lacking a voice, lacking influence.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

These things demotivate 3

- Having to work with unmotivated people, e.g. students just wanting a grade

- Repetitive labor

- Not daring to delegate

- Patrolling burnout: using more time to patrol than to create new articles; spam overload.

WIKIMEDIA

Reducing burnout

Each of the demotivating factors can be taken as a problem to work on, as a community. You can do something about each of them! Identify the ones most common among your community, and act.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Reducing burnout - tips 1

- Have we mentioned appreciation?
  - Not just on-wiki; not just in-person; e.g. tweets, press releases, interviews
- the delegation trap leads to burnout. Ask for help.
- Face issues, don't repress them. Ask if help is needed.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Reducing burnout - tips 2

- Try to match skills to roles; but also be flexible and let people switch and experiment.
- What if we just don't have some skills so we can't delegate?

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Building team skills

- not everyone is a born speaker, teacher, report-writer, etc., BUT anyone can be taught at least some competence in e.g. public speaking, conflict resolution
- providing training for volunteers is important and valuable; WMF supports such activities; external training can be invited or even purchased.
- Mentorship: Bring a volunteer colleague with you to observe you (and learn from you); learn from others.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Easier said than done...

- I know… :)
- These aren't guaranteed recipes. Avoiding burnout takes attention, empathy, and patience.
- If a challenge seems impossible, cut it up into more manageable goals.
  - E.g. we don't have enough volunteers to run an education program! But can we get a regular meetup going? Can we gradually train volunteers for next year?

WIKIMEDIA
F O U N D A T I O N

Mismatched volunteers

- Sometimes the person and the role are not a good fit
- Discuss it. Gently look for ways to improve it. And if you can't, find a way to re-assign roles.
  - "Founder Syndrome" is an extreme case of this
  - The fact X is the only person who volunteered to do Y still doesn't mean X will do a good job.
- Staff/volunteer roles and tension

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

In conclusion...

Outreach is the standard approach to gaining volunteers...

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

But much improvement is possible in retaining "organic" newbies,

And in reducing the number and frequency of people burning out.
