Each was selected by the manage-interviewed. The selection of Miss Michelena as a star was the result of a similar sifting-out process: With Petaulig the uniting paper, Miss Sarah suddenly exclaimed: "How dreadful! Rev. a similar sifting-out process. "Salomy Jane," the character in Bret Harte's book and in the Armstrong drama, is not a little blood-thirsty. The character is cold, yet at times it is suffused with warmth and tenderness. To select an actress who could get this mingled effect on the screen was a task for the pro-unsanitary."

ducers and management. After a number of actresses had been submitted to the test and re-jected, someone thought of Miss jected, someone thought of Miss Michelena. She had starred in light opera, was deft in characterization, and seemed to possess the curious temperament demanded by the role. Her father was a well-known tenor and she herself being of highly artis-tic temperament, seemed the ideal player of "Salomy Jane."

Miss Michelena soon absorbed her self in the work of the production and says that she enjoyed herself more during the preparation of "Salomy Jane" than at any time dur-ing her career. "How do I like being in pictures?"

she repeated when a reported inter-viewed her. "Can't you see? I have fallen in love with the work To me it has all been a wonderful reveal-ment. When I was on the stage I always thought myself what they call 'a bad rehearser.' I thought I need-ed an audience out in front before I could feel the role and act it as it should be acted and I really did need an audience. A bare stage and empty chairs offer no incentive, but the wonderful outdoor setting of "Salomy Jane" was an inspiration in itself. No one with the smallest spark of acting fire could resist it. Given picturesque character to portray and an interesting story to develop in this environment, and one could not do otherwise than make it real and vivid.

"Salomy Jane" with Miss Miche-lena will be seen at the Palace Grand theater on Sunday, January 24.
