NOW READY.

“FAYRE PASTOREL,”

A Cantata;

THE SUBJECT TAKEN FROM “THE FAERIE QUEEN.”

THE WORDS BY LEYLAND LEIGH;

THE MUSIC BY HENRY HILES, MUS. DOC., OXON.

Price 6s. 6d. Set of Chorus Parts, 5s.

THE BAND PARTS ARE NOW BEING PREPARED.

“This Cantata is the fruit of genius cultivated by ripe study. It is a work of boldness; but its pretensions are justified by its merit.”—Illustrated London News, February 13, 1869.

“The chief fault that has been found with the majority of cantatas is their essentially fragmentary character. This is one of the errors Dr. Hiles appears to have carefully avoided. In many of the more modern—especially English cantatas—instrumental introductions, beyond a few bars, are shunned; but in this instance the composer has introduced two instrumental movements, both of which are symphonic in form, although by no means similar in style. In the second we meet with the experiment, for the first time, of making the second subject choral. The first chorus—for male voices, ‘We shepherd swains,’ is thoroughly rustic in character, and the effect of the very brilliant accompaniment is most lively, and highly suggestive of a rural festival. Fayre Pastorel and her companions then make their appearance, and sing a chorus for four female voices, ‘Hither, hither, Swains,’ the effect of which, after the more weighty utterances of the male voices, is most charming. Next we have a canzonet, in E flat, by Fayre Pastorel, ‘Oh, sing ye birds,’ certainly one of the gems of the work. This is followed by an air, sung by Corydon (tenor), ‘Sweet as fairy music.’ Then comes the madrigal, ‘The tender dew,’ which will probably become one of the most popular numbers in the cantata. Sir Calidore then sings, ‘Far from the noise of camp and court,’ which is full of energy, and its characteristic accompaniment gives it quite a martial character. This is followed by a chorus in C sharp minor, ‘Home we hie,’ sung pianissimo. The vocal parts are written with extreme simplicity, and the accompaniment, while elaborate, is extremely light and fanciful. The disappointed lover (Corydon) left alone, utters his lament in a song, ‘Oh, why my heart,’ which brings the first part to a close. The second part opens with an instrumental movement in 2 time entitled ‘Dance of the Wood Nymphs.’ The effect of the second subject being made choral is not only novel, but being remarkable for one of those flowing melodies which we feel it impossible to forget, and being wedded to a fantastic light accompaniment, is highly suggestive of fairy gambols. The recitative which follows seems to intimate the retirement of the wood nymphs, after which Sir Calidore sings ‘What gentle music stealeth by,’ followed by a duet with Colin, ‘Yet sing once more.’ Melibee then appears on the scene, and in a song, entitled ‘They come, they come!’ describes to the shepherds the destruction which the approaching enemy will bring. This is marked by a dramatic force which no previous number of the work has prepared us for, and without any pause is followed by the chorus ‘Now cursed,’ in which the shepherds cry for vengeance on the barbarians. The broad and massive harmonies, the bold progressions, and the exceedingly agitated accompaniment make this the most powerful and dramatic portion of the entire work; the cries for vengeance seem to increase in vehemence at each repetition, and the theme is so admirably worked out that the interest never for an instant flags. At the commencement of the third part, Corydon, finding Sir Calidore and Colin, relates to them the account of the attack by the barbarians on the shepherds. The whole of this scene, with the following chorus, ‘Now seize, now slay,’ is highly dramatic. The end of the chorus leaves Sir Calidore eagerly searching for Fayre Pastorel, and, being rewarded by the discovery of his mistress, he sings with her a duet, ‘O day of tears,’ which leads to the finale. This movement has some special characteristics, notably the introduction of the different subjects of the opening instrumental movement, which are either assigned to the choir or serve to add brilliancy and spirit to the vocal strains, and thereby give a completeness to the work by bringing the text to an appropriate finish. Dr. Hiles has succeeded in producing a work which exhibits an intellectual depth and force of musical thought which will add to its reputation. So delicately constructed is the cantata, that though each successive movement possesses its due, distinct, and independent character, yet throughout the whole there is preserved a unity of design and execution not often met with in works of a similar character. The melodies throughout are free, natural, and unstrained, and the constructive power displayed in the harmonies is not only scholarly, but is effective and pleasing. Of the instrumentation but an inadequate idea can be gathered from the necessarily imperfect result of pianoforte accompaniment to a work originally written for full orchestra. It nevertheless exhibits much more elaboration than is usual in English works of this class, and leads us to imagine that the result of a performance by a full orchestra would show a fertility of resource and an experience of writing in score which augur well for the Doctor's future fame.”—Choir and Musical Record, April 17, 1869.

“‘Fayre Pastorel’ carries with it undoubted evidence of high merit and good taste. The song of Pastorel, ‘Oh, sing ye birds,’ is a graceful and finely-conceived melody. The song of Corydon, ‘Sweet as fairy music,’ is destined to live, and is composed somewhat on the model of the inimitable ‘Evening Song,’ by the same author, which formed the gem of the miscellaneous pieces in the second part of the programme. The following madrigal, ‘The tender dew,’ contains some admirable music, and is followed by probably the most noble and heroic song in the Cantata, ‘Far from the noise.’ This air, together with that of Corydon, will form a rich and valuable addition to the stores of English song, and, if permitted to be published in a separate form, will command an extensive sale. The second part opens with the distant strain of fairy melody resounding through the woods. As clouds and storms succeed to sunshine, the rural felicity of the Arcadians is rudely broken by a horde of barbarians, giving rise to the magnificent chorus, ‘Now cursed be day's streaming light,’ which is, probably, equal to the highest inspiration of ancient or modern times, and might alone be sufficient to secure for its author a place in the records of fame. The song of the captive Pastorel, ‘Flow, bitter tears,’ is also a highly refined composition. The concluding portions of the Cantata rise to the dignity of true inspiration, and produce an effect of intense and refined pleasure. Taken as a whole, we have no hesitation in saying that the gifted author of ‘Fayre Pastorel’ has stamped upon it the impress of his genius, and we venture to predict for it a high and lasting place in the annals of musical composition.”—Warrington Advertiser, April 17, 1869.

“The words of the Cantata of ‘Fayre Pastorel’ are by Leyland Leigh. It is only justice to the authoress to remark that, as a whole, the libretto is vastly superior to the class of verses usually written for such a purpose. Of Dr. Hiles' music we are glad to have to speak in terms of warm commendation. He is no mere imitator, and this work bears unmistakably the stamp of originality. The overture is brilliantly written, and this and the sterling qualities of the opening chorus produced a very favourable impression. The succeeding chorus, alternating between maids and men, is very effective. In her first solo the lady who personated Fayre Pastorel was prevented apparently by nervousness from doing justice either to her own powers, or to the dreamy and tender melody. The amateur who sang the parts of Corydon and Colin has a good tenor voice, which he used throughout with great taste. He was much applauded for the feeling with which he gave the telling song, ‘Love, dear love.’ The madrigal is a very clever composition. Perhaps the most spirited song of the whole Cantata is ‘Far from the noise of camp and court.’ The next chorus, ‘Home we hie silently,’ is a gem, the hushed effect of which was most creditably given by the choir. Passing on to the second portion of the Cantata, the first point calling for special notice was a charming duet between tenor and baritone, ‘Yet sing once more that simple strain,’ both the music and performance of which were so good as to secure for it a loud encore. The grand chorus, ‘Now cursed be day's streaming light!’ is a composition of unusual merit, full of vigour, noble in its conception, and skilful in its harmony. The chorus, ‘Now seize! now slay!’ is an admirable descriptive composition, powerfully forcing home upon the hearers the conception of the ‘hurly-burly’ of the fight. The duet between Calidore triumphant, and Pastorel is very pleasing. The close of the Cantata was followed by loud marks of approval, and Dr. Hiles was brought back to receive the ovation due to the genius, originality, and skill displayed in his work. The closing duet and chorus were repeated.”—Warrington Guardian, April 14, 1869.
