From the Louisville Advertiser.

The friends of the President need not be alarmed at the bragging of the Bank presses—it is a game at which the teader of that party is celebrated.

A glance at old times will show what their boasts are worth. A few months before the Presidential election in 1943, the Philadelphia Democratic Press published a neat the presidential control of the Presidential Contro calculation of the probable vote of every county in Pennsylvania, showing an undoubted majority, for J Q. The National Intelligencer, after publishing a few of the first returns of the same election got fatigued with victory, and all the Adams papers profused most sanguine hopes of success, until they saw that any further efforts to deceive were useless.

We have watched the progress of public opinion with some attention. We do not believe that the Opposition, thus far, has encreased in strength materially—and we know the Bank has lost gr und. She was once popula in Pennsylvania, which will now certainly go against her ther gain in cities has been inore than counterbalanced by ther loss in the country; and her course has become so unpopular that no candidate can offer for the Presidency with any prospect of success, unless he gives a pledge to op-

The Bank party have been crying out for the last six months about the scarcity of money—the distress of the community—the ruin of trade—the depression of prices and the utter stagnation of business.

They have given expression to their feelings by feetings and content one prescribes resolutions delivertions and tenor, from mercantile assemblages.

All this took place at the dullest searon of the year, when every description of business was at a stand, and employment scarce—and yet, with all these disadvantages to contend against, no laborers have starved, and but few merchants or banks have failed. With the opening of the but f.w who desire to work need remain out of employ-

What is the course of those pre-ses which were so eager to impress o : the public mind the idea of general impending ruin?

If an improvement takes place in the price of any art. of an improvement takes place in the price of any art-cle, it may be noticed in their prices current, and an indi-cation of returning prosperity is strenuously denied or art-fully explained away.

The conclusion we draw from all this is, that the supporters of the bank want something else more than they do that full in their way, charged me with having favoured the leveling place of demagognes. They have given expression to their feelings by heartings and conventions, preambles, resolutions, delegations and memorials to Congress and the President, and by assailing the Administration and the House of Representatives in every possible manner, with speeches in and out of Congress, votes of ceasure at public meetings, and newspaper vitiperation for producing the state of things they pretend to diplore so deeply.

But while pouring out their indignation on the President for duranging the currency, have they attempted to remedy the crill. No. They have done their utmost to increase it. The newspapers which support the cause of the bank have teemed for the last four months with exaggerated accounts of the depression of husiness, and the general loss of confidence and credit among commercial men—the integration at totering condition of the local banks, and the prize of produce was readily noticed, a mercanile failed to exactly produce was readily noticed, a mercanile failed the into certacies. The context is an important one, more important, we believe, t, in any one since the establishment of our Government—upon it remains whether the American People shall remain free trust and liability in the pressure of the countries of or become the slaves of a great monied power. We enter to fall from a poisoned arrow dipped in Gold.

From the National Gazette. they are determined, if it ties within their power, either to rule or ruin the country.

Hence we see that the great importations of specie which have taken place, end the present comparative casiness of the money market are not noticed, but success in a potty election for town officers in an obscure village, delights them; a pretended victory in a city is celebrated by jubilacs—and their joy knows no bounds when they hope to carry a State!

They think that the 'pressure' will effectually destroy 'Old Linckory's popularity if they can continue it long enough—therefore, they are determined it shall be kept up.

They are organizing all their forces for the coming Presidential election, and will feel much greater 'distress' at the deficit of the Nathinstation-National Republican-Federal-United-States Bank-candidate, than at all the failures which have or ever will take place.
