THE BOOK-SELLERS TO THE READER.

Courteous Reader,

THE First Edition of these Plays in this Volume having found that Acceptance as to give us Encouragement to make a Second Impression, we were very desirous they might come forth as Correct as might be. And we were very opportunely informed of a Copy which an ingenious and worthy Gentleman had taken the pains (or rather the pleasure) to read over; wherein he had all along Corrected several faults (some very gross) which had crept in by the frequent imprinting of them. His Corrections were the more to be valued, because he had an intimacy with both our Authors, and had been a Spectator of most of them when they were Acted in their life-time. This therefore we resolved to purchase at any Rate; and accordingly with no small cost obtain'd it. From the same hand also we received several Prologues and Epilogues, with the Songs appertaining to each Play, which were not in the former Edition, but are now inserted in their proper places. Besides, in this Edition you have the addition of no fewer than Seventeen Plays more than were in the former, which we have taken the pains and care to Collect, and Print out of 4^{to} in this Volume, which for distinction sake are markt with a Star in the Catalogue of them facing the first Page of the Book. And whereas in several of the Plays there were wanting the Names of the Persons represented therein, in this Edition you have them all prefixed, with their Qualities; which will be a great ease to the Reader. Thus every way perfect and compleat have you, all both Tragedies and Comedies that were ever writ by our Authors, a Pair of the greatest Wits and most ingenious Poets of their Age; from whose worth we should but detract by our most studied Commendations.

If our care and endeavours to do our Authors right (in an incorrupt and genuine Edition of their Works) and thereby to gratifie and oblige the Reader, be but requited with a suitable entertainment, we shall be encourag'd to bring Ben. Johnson's two Volumes into one, and publish them in this form; and also to reprint Old Shakespear: both which are designed by

Upon

Upon Mr. JOHN FLETCHER'S Plays.

FLETCHER, to thee, we do not only owe
All these good Plays, but those of others too;
Thy Wit repeated, does support the Stage,
Credits the last, and entertains this Age;
No Worthies form'd by any Muse but thine
Could purchase Robes to make themselves so fine.
What brave Commander is not proud to see
Thy brave Melantius in his Gallantry?
Our greatest Ladies love to see their scorn
Out-done by Thine, in what themselves have worn;
Th' impatient Widow e're the year be done
Sees thy Aspasia weeping in her Gown;
I never yet the Tragick Strain assay'd,
Deterr'd by that inimicable Maid:
And when I venture at the Comick-Style,
Thy Scornful Lady seems to mock my toil;
Thus has thy Muse, at once, improv'd and marr'd
Our sport in Plays, by rendring it too hard.
So when a sort of lusty Shepherds throw
The Bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pastime lasts;
But if some brawny Yeoman of the Guard
Step in, and tosse the Axle-tree a yard,
Or more, beyond the farthest Mark, the rest
Despairing stand, their Sport is at the best.

EDW. WALLER.

On Mr. JOHN FLETCHER'S Works.

SO shall we joy, when all whom Beasts and Worms
Had turn'd to their own Substances and forms,
Whom Earth to Earth, or Fire hath chang'd to Fire,
We shall behold more than at first intire
A now we do, to see all thine, thine own
In this thy Muses Resurrection,
Whose scatter'd parts, from thine own Race, more wounds
Hath suffer'd than Acteon from his Hounds;
Which first their Brains, and then their Bellies fed,
And from their Excrements new Poets bred.
But now thy Muse enraged, from her Urn
Like Ghosts of murder'd Bodies doth return
To accuse the Murderers, to right the Stage,
And undeceive the long abused Age,
Which casts thy praise on them, to whom thy Wit
Gives not more Gold than they give dross to it;
Who not content, like Felons, to purloin,
Add Treason to it, and debase thy Coin.
But whither ay I stray'd? I need not raise
Trophies to Thee from other mens dispraise;
Nor is thy Fame oulesser ruins built,
Nor needs thy juster Title the foul guilt
Of Eastern Kings; who to secure their Reign,
Must have their Brothers, Sons, and Kindred slain.
Then was Wits Empire at the fatal height,
When labouring and sinking with its weight,
From thence a thousand lesser Poets sprung,
Like petty Princes from the Fall of Rome.
When Johnson, Shakespeare, and thy self did sit,
And sway'd in the Triumvirate of Wit—
Yet what from Johnson's Oil, and Sweat did flow,
Or what more easie Nature did bestow

ON SHAKESPEARES gentler Muse, in thee full grown
Their Graces both appear, yet so, that none
Can say here Nature ends, and Art begins
But mixt like th' Elements, and born like twins,
So interweav'd, so like, so much the same,
None this meer nature, that meer Art can name:
'Twas this the Ancients meant, nature and skill
Are the two tops of their Parnassus Hill.

J. DENHAM.

To Mr. FRANCIS BEAUMONT (Then living.)

HOW I do love thee BEAUMONT, and thy Muse,
That unto me do'st such religion use!
How I do fear myself, that am not worth
The least indulgent thought thy pen drops forth!
At once thou mak'st me happie, and unmak'st;
And giving largely to me, more thou tak'st.
What fate is mine, that so it self bereaves?
What art is thine, that so thy friend deceives?
When even there where most thou praisest me,
For writing better, I must envy thee.

BEN. JOHNSON.

On Mr. FRANCIS BEAUMONT (Then newly Dead.)

HE that hath such acuteness, and such wit,
As would ask ten good heads to husband it;
He that can write so well that no man dare
Refuse it for the best, let him beware:
BEAUMONT is dead, by whose sole death appears,
Wit's a Disease consumes men in few years.

RICH. CORBET. D.D.

On Mr. BEAUMONT. (Written thirty years since, presently after his Death.)

Beaumont lyes here; and where now shall we have
A Muse like his to sigh upon his grave?
Ah! none to weep this with a worthy tear,
But he that cannot, Beaumont that lies here.
Who now shall pay thy Tomb with such a Verse
As thou that Ladies didst, fair Rutlands Herse?
A Monument that will then lasting be,
When all her Marble is more dust than she.
In thee all's lost: a sudden dearth and want
Hath seiz'd on Wit, good Epitaphs are scant;
We dare not write thy Elegie, whilst each fears
He ne're shall match that copy of thy tears.
Scarce in an Age a Poet, and yet he Scarce lives the third part of his age to see,
But quickly taken off and only known,
Is in a minute shut as soon as shown.
Why should weak Nature tire her self in vain
In such a piece, do dash it straight again?
Why should she take such work beyond her skill,
Which when she cannot perfect, she must kill?
Alas, what is't to temper slime or mire?
But Nature's puzzled when she works in fire:

Great Brains (like brightest glass) crack straight, while those
 Of Stone or Wood hold out, and fear not blowes,
 And we their Ancient honary heads can see
 Whose Wit was never their mortalitie:
 Beaumont dies young, so Sidney did before,
 There was not Poetry he could live to more,
 He could not grow up higher, I scarce know
 If th' art it self unto that pitch could grow,
 Were't not in thee that hadst arriv'd the height
 Of all that wit could reach, or Nature might.
 O when I read those excellent things of thine,
 Such strength, such sweetness coucht in every line,
 Such life of Fancy, such high choice of brain,
 Nought of the Vulgar wit or borrowed strain,
 Such passion, such expressions meet my eye,
 Such Wit untaunted with obscenity,
 And these so unaffectedly exprest,
 All in a language purely flowing drest,
 And all so born within thy self, thine own,
 So new, so fresh, so nothing trod upon;
 I grieve not now that old Menanders vein
 Is ruin'd to survive in thee again;
 Such in his time was he, of the same piece,
 The smooth, even natural Wit, and Love of Greece.
 Those few sententious fragments shew more worth,
 Than all the Poets Athens e're brought forth;
 And I am sorry we have lost those hours
 On them, whose quickness comes far short of ours,
 And dwell not more on thee, whose every Page
 May be a pattern for their Scene and Stage.
 I will not yield thy Works so mean a Praise;
 More pure, more chaste, more sainted than are Playes,
 Nor with that dull supineness to be read,
 To pass a fire, or laugh an hour in bed.
 How do the Muses suffer every where,
 Taken in such mouths censure, in such ears,
 That 'twixt a whiffe, a Line or two rehearse,
 And with their Rheume together spanle a Verse?
 This all a Poems leisure after Play,
 Drink or Tabaco, it may keep the Day.
 Whilst even their very idleness they think
 Is lost in these, that lose their time in drink.
 Pity then dull we, we that better know,
 Will a more serious hour on thee bestow,
 Why should not Beaumont in the Morning please,
 As well as Plautus, Aristophanes?
 Who if my Pen may as my thoughts be free,
 Were scurril wits and Buffons both to thee;
 Yet these our Learned of severest brow
 Will deign to look on, and to note them too,
 That will despise our own, 'tis English stuffe,
 And th' Author is not rotten long enough.
 Alas what stegm are they, compar'd to thee,
 In thy Philalter, and Maids-Tragedy?
 Where's such an humour as thy Bessus? pray
 Let them put all their Thrafoes in one Play,
 He shall out bid them; their conceit was poor,
 All in a Circle of a Bawd or Whore;
 A cozening dance, take the fool away,
 And not a good jest extant in a Play.
 Yet these are Wits, because they're old, and now
 Being Greek and Latine, they are Learning too:
 But those their own times were content t' allow
 A thursty fame, and thine is lowest now.
 But thou shalt live, and when thy name is grown
 Six Ages older, shall be better known,
 When th' art of Chaucers standing in the tombe,
 Thou shalt not share, but take up all his room.

JOH. EARLE.

Upon the Report of the printing of the Dramatical Poems of Mr. JOHN FLETCHER, collected before, and now set forth in one Volume.

THough when all Fletcher writ, and the entire
 Man was indulg'd unto that sacred fire,
 His thoughts, and his thoughts dress, appear'd both such
 That 'twas his happy fault to do too much;
 Who therefore wisely did submit each birth
 To knowing Beaumont, e're it did come forth,
 Working again, until he said 'twas fit,
 And made him the sobriety of his Wit;
 Though thus he call'd his Judge into his fame,
 And for that aid allow'd him half the name,
 'Tis known, that sometimes he did stand alone,
 That both the Spunge and Pencil were his own;
 That himself judg'd himself, could singly do,
 And was at last Beaumont and Fletcher too;
 Else we had lost his Shepherdess, a Piece,
 Even and smooth, spun from a finer Fleece,
 Where softness reigns, where passions passions greet,
 Gentle and high, as Floods of Balsam meet:
 Where dress'd in white expressions, sit bright Loves,
 Drawn, like their fairest Queen, by milkie Doves;
 A Piece, which Johnson, in a rapture bid
 Come up a glorify'd Work, and so it did.
 Else had his Muse set with his Friend, the Stage
 Had miss'd those Poems, which yet take the Age;
 The World had lost those rich exemplars, where Art, Language, Wit sit ruling in one Sphere,
 Where the fresh matters soar above old Theams,
 As Prophets Raptures do above our Dreams;
 Where, in a worthy scorn, he dares refuse
 All other gods, and makes the thing his Muse;
 Where he calls passions up, and lays them so,
 As spirits, aw'd by him to come and go;
 Where the free Authour did whate'er he would,
 And nothing will'd, but what a Poet should.
 No vast uncivil bulk swells any Scene,
 The strength's ingenious, and the vigour clean;
 None can prevent the Fancy, and see through
 At the first opening; all stand wondring how
 The thing will be untill it is; which thence
 With fresh delights still cheats, still takes the sence;
 The whole design, the shadows, the lights such
 That none can say he shews, or hides too much;
 Business grows up ripened by just encrease,
 And by as just degrees again doth cease,
 The heats and minutes of affairs are watcht,
 And these nice points of time, are met and snatcht;
 Nought later than it should, nought comes before,
 Chymists, and Calculators do err more,
 Sex, Age, Degree, Affections, Country, Place,
 The inward substance, and the outward face;
 All kept precisely, all exactly fit,
 What he would write, he was before he writ.
 'Twixt Johnson's grave, and Shakespears lighter sound
 His Muse so steer'd that something still was found,
 Nor this, nor that, nor both, but so his own,
 That 'twas his mark, and he was by it known.
 Hence did he take true judgments, hence did strike
 All Palates some way, though not all alike;
 The god of numbers might his numbers crown,
 And listning to them wish they were his own.
 Thus welcome forth, what Ease, or Wine, or Wit
 Durst yet produce, that is, what Fletcher writ.

WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT.

Mr.

Mr. JOHN FLETCHER his
Dramatical works now at last printed.

I Could praise Heywood now: or tell how long,
Falstaffe from cracking Nuts hath kept the throng:
But for a Fletcher, I must take an Age,
And scarce invent the title for one Page.
Gods must create new Spheres, that should express
The sev'ral accents, Fletcher, of thy Dress:
The Pen of Fates should only write thy Praise:
And all Elyzium for thee turn to Bayes.
Thou feltest no pangs of Poctry, such as they,
Who the Heav'ns quarter still before a Play,
And search the Ephemerides to find,
When the Aspect for Poets will be kind.
Thy Poems (sacred Spring) did from thee flow,
With as much pleasure, as we read them now.
Nor need we only take them up by fits,
When love or Physick hath diseas'd our wits;
Or constr'e English to untye a knot,
Hid in a line, far subtler than the Plot.
With thee the Page may close his Ladies eyes,
And yet with thee the serious student rise:
The Eye at sev'ral angles darting rayes,
Makes, and then sees, new Colours; so thy Plays
To ev'ry understanding still appear,
As if thou only meant'st to take that Ear;
The Phrase so terse and free of a just Poise,
Where ev'ry word has weight and yet no Noise,
The matter too so nobly fit, no less
Than such as only could deserve thy Dress:
Witness thy Comedies, Pieces of such worth,
All Ages shall still like, but ne're bring forth,
Other in season last scarce so long time,
As cost the Poet but to make the Rime:
Where, if a Lord a new way do's but spit,
Or change his shrugge, this antiquates the wit.
That thou didst live before, nothing would tell
Posterity, could they but write so well.
Thy Cath'lick Fancy will acceptance find,
Not whilst an humour's living, but Man kind.
Thou, like thy writings, Innocent and Clean,
Ne're practis'd a new Vice, to make one Scene,
None of thy Ink had gall, and Ladies can
Securely hear thee sport without a Fan.

But when thy Tragick Muse would please to rise
In Majestie, and call tribute from our eyes;
Like Scenes, we shifted Passions, and that so,
Who only came to see, turn'd Actors too.
How didst thou sway the Theatre! make us feel
The Players wounds were true, and their swords, steel!
Nay, stranger yet, how often did I know
When the spectators ran to save the blow?
Frozen with grief we could not stir away
Until the Epilogue told us 'twas a Play.
What shall I do? all Commendations end,
In saying only thou wert BEAUMONTS Friend?
Give me thy spirit quickly, for I swell,
And like a raving Prophetess cannot tell
How to receive the full god in my breast:
Oh! I must sleep, and then I'll sing the rest.

FRANCIS Palmer, of Ch. Ch. Oxon.

On the Works of Beaumont and Fletcher, now at length printed.

Great pair of Authors, whom one equal star
Begot so like in Genius, that you are
In Fame, as well as writings, both so knit,
That no man knows where to divide your wit,
Much less your praise; you, who had equal fire,
And did each other mutually inspire;
Whether one did contrive, the other write,
Or one fram'd the plot, the other did indite;
Whether one found the matter, th'other dress,
Or th' one dispos'd what th'other did express;
Where e're your parts between your selves lay, we
In all things which you did but one thread see,
So evenly drawn out, so gently spun,
That art with nature ne're did smother run.
Where shall I fix my praise then? or what part
Of all your numerous Labours hath desert
More to be fam'd than other? shall I say,
I've met a lover so drawn in your Play,
So passionately written, so inflam'd,
So jealousy inrag'd, then gently tam'd,
That I in reading have the Person seen,
And your Pen hath part stage and Actor been?
Or shall I say, that I can scarce forbear
To clap, when I a Captain do meet there,
So lively in his own vain humour dress'd,
So braggingly, and like himself exprest,
That modern Cowards, when they saw him plaid,
Saw, blusht, departed guilty, and betraid?
You wrote all parts right; whatso'e're the stage
Had from you, was seen there as in the age,
And had their equal life: Vices which were
Manners abroad, did grow corrected there:
They who possesst a Box, and half Crown spent
To learn obsceneness, return'd innocent,
And thank't you for this coz'nage, whose chaste Scene
Taught Loves so noble, so reform'd, so clean,
That they who brought soul fires, and thither came
To bargain, went thence with a holy flame.
Be'to your praise too, that your stock and Vein
Held both to Tragick and to Comick strain;
Where e're you list'd to be high and grave,
No Buskin shew'd more solemn, no quill gave
Such feeling objects to draw tears from eyes,
Spectators sate part in your Tragedies.
And where you list'd to be lov, and free,
Mirth turn'd the whole house into Comedy;
So piercing (where you pleas'd) hitting a fault,
That humours from your Pen issued all salt.
Nor were you thus in works and Poems knit,
As to be but two halves, and make one wit;
But as some things we see, have double cause,
And yet the effect it self from both whole draws;
So though you were thus twisted and combin'd
As two bodies, to have but one fair mind;
Yet if we praise you rightly, we must say
Both joyn'd, and both did wholly make the Play;
For that you could write singly, we may guess
By the divided pieces which the Press
Hath severally sent forth; nor were gone so
(Like some our Modern Authors) made to go
One meerly by the help of th'other, who
To purchase fame do come forth one of two;
Nor wrote you so, that ones part was to lick
The other into shape, nor did one stick
The others cold inventions with such wit,
As serv'd like spice, to make them quick and fit;

Nor out of mutual want, or emptiness,
 Did you conspire to go still Twins to th' Press;
 But what thus join'd you wrote, might have come forth
 As good from each, and stor'd with the same worth
 That thus united them, you did join sence
 In you 'twas League, in others impotence;
 And the Press which both thus amongst us sonds,
 Sends us one Poet in a pair of friends.

JASPER MAINE.

On the happy Collection of Mr. FLETCHER'S Works, never before printed.

FLETCHER, arise, Usurpers share thy Bays,
 They Canton thy vast Wit to build small Plays:
 He comes! his Volume breaks through Clouds and Dust,
 Down, little Wits, Ye must refund, Ye must.

Nor comes he private, here's Great BEAUMONT too,
 How could one single World encompass Two?
 For these Co-heirs had equal power to teach
 All that all Wits both can and cannot reach.
 Shakespear was early up, and went so drest
 As for those dawning hours he knew was best;
 But when the Sun shone forth, You Two thought fit
 To wear just Robes, and leave off Trunk hose-Wit.
 Now, now 'twas perfect, none must look for New,
 Manners and Scenes may alter, but not You:
 For Yours are not meer humours, gilded Strains:
 The fashion lost, Your massy Sence remains.

Some think Your Wits of two Complexions fram'd
 That One the Sock, th' Other the Buskin claim'd;
 That should the Stage embattail all its Force, (Horse.)
 FLETCHER would lead the Foot, BEAUMONT the
 But you were Both for Both; not Semi-wits,
 Each Piece is wholly Two, yet never splits;
 'T are not two Faculties, (and one Soul still)
 He th' Understanding, Thou the quick free Will;
 'But, as two Voyces in one Song embrace, (Base.)
 (FLETCHER's keen Treble, and deep BEAUMONT's
 Two, full, Congenial Souls; still Both prevail'd;
 His Muse and Thine were Quarter'd, not Impal'd;
 Both brought Your Ingots, Both toil'd at the Mint,
 Beat, melted, sifted, till no dross stuck in't,
 Then in each Others Scales weigh'd every Grain,
 Then smooth and burnish'd, then weigh'd all again,
 Stamp't both your Names upon't at one bold Hit,
 Then, then 'twas Coin, as well as Bullion-Wit.

Thus Twins; But as when Fate one Eye deprives,
 That other strives to double which survives;
 So BEAUMONT dy'd; yet left in Legacie
 His Rules and Standard wit, FLETCHER, to Thee.
 Still the same Planet, though not fill'd so soon,
 At two horn'd Crescent then, now one Full-moon.
 Joynt Love before, now Honour doth provoke;
 So the old Twin-Giants forcing a huge Oak,
 One sapt his footing, th' Other sees him fall,
 Graspt the whole Tree, and single held up all.
 Imperial FLETCHER! here begins thy Reign,
 Scenes flow like Sun-beams from thy glorious Brain;
 Thy swift dispatching Soul no more doth stay
 Than he that built two Cities in one day;
 Ever brim full, and sometimes running o'r
 To seed poor languid Wits that wait at door,
 Who creep and creep, yet ne'r above ground stood,
 (For Creatures have most feet, which have least Blood)
 But thou art still that Bird of Paradise,
 Which hath no Feet, and ever nobly flies:

Rich, lusty sence, such as the Poets ought,
 For Poems, if not excellent, are naught;
 Low Wit in Scenes, in State a Peasant goes;
 If mean and flat, let it foot Yeoman-Prosé,
 That such may spell as are not Readers grown,
 To whom he that writes Wit, shews he hath none.

Brave Shakespear flow'd, yet had his Ebbing too,
 Often above Himself, sometimes below;
 Thou always best, if ought seem'd to decline,
 'Twas the unjudging Rour's mistake, not Thine;
 Thus thy fair SHEPHERDESS, which the bold Heap
 (False to themselves, and Thee) did prize so cheap,
 Was found (when understood) fit to be Crown'd,
 At worst 'twas worth two hundred thousand Pound.

Some blast thy Works, lest we should track their walk,
 Where they steal all those few good things they talk;
 Wit-Burglary must chide those it feeds on,
 For plunder'd Folks ought to be rail'd upon;
 But (as stoln goods go off at half their worth)
 Thy strong Sence palls when they purloin it forth.
 When didst Thou borrow? where's the Man e'r read
 Ought beg'd by Thee, from those alive or dead?
 Or from dry Goddesses, as some, who when
 They staff their Page with gods, write worse than men.
 Thou wert thine own Muse, and hadst such vast odds,
 Thou out-writ'st him whose Verse made all those Gods;
 Surpassing those, our dwarfish Age up-rears,
 As much as Greeks or Latines thee in years:
 Thy Ocean Fancy knew nor Banks nor Damms,
 We ebb down dry to pebble-Anagrams;
 Dead and inspid, all despairing fit,
 Lost to behold this great Relapse of Wit;
 What strength remains, is like that (wild and fierce)
 Till Johnson made good Poets and right Verse.

Such boyst'rous Trifles thy Muse would not brook,
 Save when she'd show how scurvily they look;
 No savage Metaphors (things rudely Great)
 Thou dost display, not butcher a Conceit;
 Thy Nerves have Beauty, which invades and charms;
 Looks like a Princess harness'd in bright Arms.
 Nor art thou loud and cloudy; those that do
 Thunder so much, do't without Lightning too:
 Tearing themselves, and almost split their Brain
 To render harsh, what thou speak'st free and clean;
 Such gloomy Sence may pass for High and Proud,
 But true-born wit still flies above the Cloud;
 Thou know'st 'twas Impotence what they call Height;
 Who blusters strong i' th' Dark, but creeps i' th' Light.

And as thy thoughts were clear, so, innocent;
 Thy Fancy gave no unswept Language vent;
 Slander'st not Laws, prophan'st no holy Page,
 (As if thy Fathers Crosier aw'd the Stage;)
 High Crimes were still arraign'd, though they made shift
 To prosper out four Acts, were plagu'd i' th' Fifth:
 All's safe and wise, no stiff affected Scene,
 Nor swoln, nor flat, a true full natural Vein;
 Thy Sence (like well-drest Ladies) cloath'd as skin'd,
 Not all unlac'd, nor City starcht and pin'd;
 Thou hadst no Sloth, no Rage, no sullen Fit,
 But Strength and Mirth, FLETCHER's a Sanguine Wit.

Thus, two great Consul-Poets all things sway'd,
 Till all was English Born, or English Made:
 Mitre and Coyse, here into one Piece spun,
 BEAUMONT a Judge's, this a Prelate's Son.
 What strange Production is at last display'd
 (Got by two Fathers without Female aid)
 Behold, two Masculines espous'd each other,
 Wit and the World were born without a Mother.

J. BERKENHEAD.

On

On the Edition of Mr. Francis Beaumont's, and Mr. John Fletcher's Plays never printed before.

I Am amaz'd; and this same Ecstasie
Is both my Glory and Apoioigie.
Sober Joys are dull Passions; they must bear
Proportion to the Subject: if so; where Beaumont and Fletcher shall vouchsafe to be That Subject; That Joy must be Ecstasie.
Fury is the Complexion of great Wits;
The Fools Distemper: He, that's mad by fits,
Is wise so too. It is the Poets Muse;
The Prophets God: the Fools, and my excuse.
For (in Me) nothing less than Fletchers name
Could have begot, or justify'd this flame.
Beaumont } Return'd? methinks it should not be.
Fletcher }

No, not in's Works: Plays are as dead as He.
The Palate of this age gusts nothing High;
That has not Custard in't or Bawdery.
Folly and Madnes fill the Stage: The Scene
Is Athens; where, the Guilty, and the mean,
The Fool'scapes well enough; Learned and Great,
Suffer an Ostracism; stand Exulate.

Mankind is fall'n again, shrunk a degree,
A step below his very Apostasie.
Nature her self is out of Tune; and sick
Of Tumult and Disorder, Lunatick,
Yet what world would not cheerfully endure
The Torture, or Disease, t' enjoy the Cure?

This Book's the Balsam, and the Hellebore,
Must preserve bleeding nature, and restore
Our Crazy stupor to a just quick Sense
Both of Ingratitude, and Providence.
That teaches us (at Once) to feel, and know,
Two deep Points: what we want, and what we owe.
Yet Great Goods have their Ills: Should we transmit
To Future Times, the Pow'r of Love and Wit,
In this Example: would they not combine
To make Our Imperfections their Design?
They'd study our Corruptions; and take more
Care to be Ill, than to be Good, before.
For nothing but so great Infirmity,
Could make them worthy of such Remedy.

Have you not seen the Suns almighty Ray
Rescue th' affrighted world, and redeem Day
From black despair: how his victorious Beame
Scatters the storm, and drowns the petty flame
Of Lightning, in the glory of his eye:
How full of pow'r, how full of Majesty?
When to us Mortals, nothing else was known,
But the sad doubt, whether to burn, or drown.

Choler, and Phlegm, Heat, and dull Ignorance,
Have cast the people into such a Trance,
That fears and danger seem Great equally,
And no dispute left now, but how to dy.
Just in this nick, Fletcher sets the world clear
Of all disorder, and reforms us here.

The formal Youth, that knew no other Grace,
Or Value, but his Title, and his Lace,
Glasses himself: and in this faithful Mirrour,
Views, disapproves, reforms, repents his Errour.

The Credulous, bright Girl, that believes all Language, (in Oaths) if Good, Canonical,
Is fortify'd, and taught, here, to beware
Of ev'ry specious bait, of ev'ry snare
Save one: and that same Caution takes her more,
Than all the flattery she felt before.
She finds her Boxes, and her thoughts betray'd
By the Corruption of the Chambermaid:
Then throws her washes and dissemblings by;
And Vows nothing but Ingenuity.

The severe States-man quits his sullen form
Of Gravity and bus'ness; The Luke warm
Religious his Neutrality; The hot
Brain-sick Illuminate his zeal; the sot
Stupidity; The souldier his Arrears;
The Court its Confidence; The Plebs their fears;
Gallants their Apishness and Perjurie,
Women their Pleasure and Inconstancie;
Poets their wine; the Usurer his Pelf;
The world its Vanity; and I my self.

Roger L' EStrange.

On the Edition.

FLETCHER (whose fame no age can ever wast; Envy of Ours, and glory of the last)
Is now alive again; and with his name
His sacred Ashes wak'd into a Flame;
Such as before did by a secret charm
The wildest Heart subdue, the coldest warm,
And lend the Lady's eyes a power more bright,
Dispensing thus to either, heat and Light.
He to a sympathie those souls betray'd
Whom Love or Beauty never could perswade;
And in each mov'd spectatour could beget
A real passion by a Counterfeit.
When first Bellario bled, what Lady there
Did not for every drop let fall a tear?
And when Aspasia wept, not any eye
But seem'd to wear the same sad liverie.
By him inspir'd the feign'd Lucina drew
More streams of melting sorrow than the true;
But then the Scornful Lady did beguile
Their easie griefs and teach them all to smile.
Thus he Affections could, or raise or lay;
Love, grief and mirth thus did his charms obey:
He Nature taught her passions to out-do,
How to refine the old, and create new;
Which such a happy likeness seem'd to bear,
As if that Nature Art, Art Nature were.
Yet all had nothing been, obscurely kept
In the same Urn wherein his dust hath slept,
Nor had he ris' the Delphick wreath to claim,
Had not the dying scene expir'd his name;
Despair our joy hath doubled, he is come,
Thrice welcom by this Post-liminius.
His loss preserv'd him; they that silenc'd Wit,
Are now the Authours to Eternize it;
Thus Poets are in spite of Fate reviv'd,
And Plays by Intermission longer liv'd.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Cleon, Strato, Lyſippus, Diphilus.

Cleon. The reſt are making ready Sir.
 Strat. So let them, there's time enough.
 Diph. You are the brother to the King, my Lord, we'll take your word.
 Lyf. Strat, thou haſt ſome ſkill in Poetry, What thinkſt thou of a Mask? will it be well?
 Strat. As well as Mask can be.
 Lyf. As Mask can be?
 Strat. Yes, they muſt commend their King, and ſpeak in praife of the Aſſembly, bleſs the Bride and Bridegroom, in perſon of ſome God; th' are tyed to rules of flattery.
 Cle. See, good my Lord, who is return'd!
 Lyf. Noble Melantius! Enter Melantius.
 The Land by me welcomes thy vertues home to Rhodes, thou that with blood abroad buyeſt us our peace; the breath of Kings is like the breath of Gods; My brother wiſht thee here, and thou art here; he will be too kind, and weary thee with often welcomes; but the time doth give thee a welcome above this or all the worlds.
 Mel. My Lord, my thanks; but theſe ſcratcht limbs of mine have ſpoke my love and truth unto my friends, more than my tongue ere could: my mind's the ſame it ever was to you; where I find worth, I love the keeper, till he let it go, And then I follow it. Diph. Hail worthy brother! He that rejoyces not at your return In ſafety, is mine enemy for ever.
 Mel. I thank thee Diphilus: but thou art faulty; I ſent for thee to exerciſe thine armes With me at Patria: thou can'ſt not Diphilus: 'Twas ill.
 Diph. My noble brother, my excuſe Is my King's ſtrict command, which you my Lord Can wiſh with me. Lyf. 'Tis true Melantius, He might not come till the ſolemnity Of this great match were paſt. Diph. Have you heard of it?
 Mel. Yes, I have given cauſe to thoſe that Envy my deeds abroad, to call me gameſome; I have no other buſineſs here at Rhodes.
 Lyf. We have a Mask to night, And you muſt tread a Soldiers meaſure.
 Mel. Theſe ſoft and filken wars are not for me;

The Muſick muſt be ſhrill, and all confus'd, That ſtirs my blood, and then I dance with armes: But is Amintor Wed? Diph. This day.
 Mel. All joyes upon him, for he is my friend: Wonder not that I call a man ſo young my friend, His worth is great; valiant he is, and temperate, And one that never thinks his life his own, If his friend need it: when he was a boy, As oft as I return'd (as without boaſt) I brought home conqueſt, he would gaze upon me, And view me round, to find in what one limb The vertue lay to do thoſe things he heard: Then would he wiſh to ſee my Sword, and feel The quickneſs of the edge, and in his hand Weigh it; he oft would make me ſmile at this; His youth did promiſe much, and his ripe years Will ſee it all perform'd. Enter Aſpatia, paſſing by.
 Melan. Hail Maid and Wife!
 Thou fair Aſpatia, may the holy knot That thou haſt tyed to day, laſt till the hand Of age undo't; may'ſt thou bring a race Unto Amintor that may fill the world Succelſively with Souldiers. Asp. My hard fortunes Deſerve not ſcorn; for I was never proud When they were good. Mel. How's this? Exit Aſpatia.
 Lyf. You are miſtaken, for ſhe is not married,
 Mel. You ſaid Amintor was. Diph. 'Tis true; but
 Mel. Pardon me, I did receive Letters at Patria, from my Amintor, That he ſhould marry her. Diph. And ſo it ſtood, In all opinion long; but your arriyal Made me imagine you had heard the change.
 Mel. Who hath he taken then? Lyf. A Lady Sir, That bears the light above her, and ſtrikes dead With ſaſhes of her eye; the fair Evadne your vertuous Siſter.
 Mel. Peace of heart betwixt them: but this is ſtrange.
 Lyf. The King my brother did it To honour you; and theſe ſolemnities Are at his charge. Mel. 'Tis Royal, like himſelf; But I am ſad, my ſpeech bears ſo unfortunate a ſound

To beautiful Aspasia; there is rage
 Hid in her fathers breast; Calianax
 Bent long against me, and he should not think,
 If I could call it back, that I would take
 So base revenges, as to scorn the state (the King?)
 Of his neglected daughter: holds he still his greatness with

Lys. Yes; but this Lady
 Walks discontented, with her watry eyes
 Bent on the earth: the unfrequented woods
 Are her delight; and when she sees a bank
 Stuck full of flowers, she with a sigh will tell
 Her servants what a pretty place it were
 To bury lovers in, and make her maids
 Pluck'em, and strow her over like a Corse.
 She carries with her an infectious grief
 That strikes all her beholders, she will sing
 The mournful'st things that ever ear hath heard,
 And sigh, and sing again, and when the rest
 Of our young Ladies in their wanton blood,
 Tell mirthful tales in course that fill the room
 With laughter, she will with so sad a look
 Bring forth a story of the silent death
 Of some forsaken Virgin, which her grief
 Will put in such a phrase, that ere she end,
 She'll send them weeping one by one away.

Mel. She has a brother under my command
 Like her, a face as womanish as hers,
 But with a spirit that hath much out-grown
 The number of his years. Enter Amintor.

Cle. My Lord the Bridegroom!

Mel. I might run fiercely, not more hastily
 Upon my foe: I love thee well Amintor,
 My mouth is much too narrow for my heart;
 I joy to look upon those eyes of thine;
 Thou art my friend, but my disorder'd speech cuts off my love.

Amin. Thou art Melantius;
 All love is spoke in that, a sacrifice
 To thank the gods, Melantius is return'd
 In safety; victory sits on his sword
 As she was wont; may the build there and dwell,
 And may thy Armour be as it hath been,
 Only thy valour and thy innocence.
 What endless treasures would our enemies give,
 That I might hold thee still thus!

Mel. I am but poor in words, but credit me young man,
 Thy Mother could no more but weep, for joy to see thee
 After long absence; all the wounds I have,
 Fetch not so much away, nor all the cries
 Of Widowed Mothers: but this is peace;
 And what was War? Amin. Pardon thou holy God
 Of Marriage bed, and frown not, I am forc't
 In answer of such noble tears as those,
 To weep upon my Wedding day.

Mel. I fear thou art grown too sick; for I hear
 A Lady mourns for thee, men say to death,
 Forsaken of thee, on what terms I know not.

Amin. She had my promise, but the King forbid it,
 And made me make this worthy change, thy Sister
 Accompanied with graces above her,
 With whom I long to lose my lusty youth,
 And grow old in her arms. Mel. Be prosperous.

Enter Messenger.

Messen. My Lord, the Maskers rage for you.

Lys. We are gone. Cleon, Strato, Diphilus.

Amin. Wee'll all attend you, we shall trouble you
 With our solemnities. Mel. Not so Amintor.
 But if you laugh at my rude carriage
 In peace, I'll do as much for you in War
 When you come thither: yet I have a Mistress
 To bring to your delights; rough though I am,
 I have a Mistress, and she has a heart,
 She saies, but trust me, it is stone, no better,
 There is no place that I can challenge in't.
 But you stand still, and here my way lies. Exit.

Enter Calianax with Diagoras.

Cal. Diagoras, look to the doors better for shame, you let in all the world, and anon the King will rail at me; why very well said, by Jove the King will have the show i'th' Court.

Diag. Why do you swear so my Lord?
 You know he'll have it here.

Cal. By this light if he be wise he will not.

Diag. And if he will not be wise, you are forsworn.

Cal. One may wear his heart out with swearing, and get thanks on no side, I'll be gone, look to't who will.

Diag. My Lord, I will never keep them out.

Pray stay, your looks will terrifie them.

Cal. My looks terrifie them, you Coxcomby Asfs you!
 I'll be judg'd by all the company whether thou hast not a worse face than I——

Diag. I mean, because they know you and your Office.

Cal. Office! I would I could put it off, I am sure I sweat quite through my Office, I might have made room at my Daughters Wedding, they had near kill'd her among them.
 And now I must do service for him that hath forsaken her;
 serve that will. Exit Calianax.

Diag. He's so humourous since his daughter was forsaken:
 hark, hark, there, there, so, so, codes, codes.

What now? Within. knock within.

Mel. Open the door. Diag. Who's there? Mel. Melantius.

Diag. I hope your Lordship brings no troop with you, for if you do, I must return them. Enter Melantius.

Mel. None but this Lady Sir. And a Lady.

Diag. The Ladies are all plac'd above, save those that come in the Kings Troop, the best of Rhodes sit there, and there's room.

Mel. I thank you Sir: when I have seen you plac'd Madam, I must attend the King; but the Mask done, I'll wait on you again.

Diag. Stand back there, room for my Lord Melantius, pray bear back, this is no place for such youths and their Truls, let the doors shut agen; I, do your heads itch? I'll scratch them for you: so now thrust and hang: again, who is't now? I cannot blame my Lord Calianax for going away; would he were here, he would run raging among them, and break a dozen wiser heads than his own in the twinkling of an eye: what's the news now? Within.

I pray can you help me to the speech of the Master Cook?

Diag. If I open the door I'll cook some of your Calves-
 Peace Rogues.——again,——who is't? (heads.)

Mel. Melantius within, Enter Calianax to Melantius.

Cal. Let him not in.

Diag. O my Lord I must; make room there for my Lord; is your Lady plac't?

Mel. Yes Sir, I thank you my Lord Calianax: well met,
 Your causeless hate to me I hope is buried.

Cal. Yes, I do service for your Sister here,
 That brings my own poor Child to timeless death;
 She loves your friend Amintor, such another false-hearted
 Lord as you. Mel. You do me wrong,
 A most unmanly one, and I am slow
 In taking vengeance, but be well advis'd.

Cal. It may be so: who placed the Lady there so near the presence of the King? Mel. I did.

Cal. My Lord she must not sit there. Mel. Why?

Cal. The place is kept for women of more worth.

Mel. More worth than she? it mis-becomes your Age
 And place to be thus womanish; forbear;
 What you have spoke, I am content to think
 The Palsy shook your tongue to.

Cal. Why 'tis well if I stand here to place mens wenches.

Mel. I shall forget this place, thy Age, my safety, and through all, cut that poor sickly week thou hast to live, away from thee.

Cal. Nay, I know you can fight for your Whore.

Mel. Bate the King, and be he flesh and blood,
 He lyes that saies it, thy mother at fifteen
 Was black and sinful to her. Diag. Good my Lord!

Mel. Some god pluck threescore years from that fond man,
 That

That I may kill him, and not stain mine honour ;
It is the curse of Souldiers, that in peace
They shall be brain'd by such ignoble men,
As (if the Land were troubled) would with tears
And knees beg succour from 'em : would that blood
(That sea of blood) that I have lost in fight,
Were running in thy veins, that it might make thee
Apt to say less, or able to maintain,
Shouldst thou say more,—This Rhodes I see is nought
But a place priviledg'd to do men wrong.

Cal. I, you may say your pleasure. [Enter Amintor.

Amint. What vilde injury
Has stirr'd my worthy friend, who is as slow
To fight with words, as he is quick of hand ?

Mel. That heap of age which I should reverence
If it were temperate : but testy years
Are most contemptible. Amint. Good Sir forbear.

Cal. There is just such another as your self.

Amint. He will wrong you, or me, or any man,
And talk as if he had no life to lose
Since this our match : the King is coming in,
I would not for more wealth than I enjoy,
He should perceive you raging, he did hear
You were at difference now, which hastned him.

Cal. Make room there.

Hoboyes play within.

Enter King, Evadne, Aspatia, Lords and Ladies.

King. Melantius, thou art welcome, and my love
Is with thee still ; but this is not a place
To brabble in ; Calianax, joyn hands.

Cal. He shall not have my hand. King. This is no time
To force you to't, I do love you both :
Calianax, you look well to your Office ;
And you Melantius are welcome home ; begin the Mask.

Mel. Sister, I joy to see you, and your choice,
You lookt with my eyes when you took that man ;
Be happy in him. [Recorders.

Evad. O my dearest brother !
Your presence is more joyful than this day can be unto me.

The Mask.

Night rises in mists.

Nigh. Our reign is come ; for in the raging Sea
The Sun is drown'd, and with him fell the day :
Bright Cynthia hear my voice, I am the Night
For whom thou bear'st about thy borrowed light ;
Appear, no longer thy pale visage shrowd,
But strike thy silver horn through a cloud,
And send a beam upon my swarthy face,
By which I may discover all the place
And persons, and how many longing eyes
Are come to wait on our solemnities. [Enter Cynthia.

How dull and black am I ? I could not find
This beauty without thee, I am so blind ;
Methinks they shew like to those Eastern streaks
That warn us hence before the morning breaks ;
Back my pale servant, for these eyes know how
To shoot far more and quicker rayes than thou.

Cinb. Great Queen, they be a Troop for whom alone
One of my clearest moons I have put on ;
A Troop that looks as if thy self and I
Had pluckt our rains in, and our whips laid by
To gaze upon these Mortals, that appear Brighter than we.

Night. Then let us keep 'em here,
And never more our Chariots drive away,
But hold our places, and out-shine the day.

Cinb. Great Queen of shadows, you are pleas'd to speak
Of more than may be done ; we may not break
The gods decrees, but when our time is come,

Must drive away and give the day our room.
Yet whil't our reign lasts, let us stretch our power
To give our servants one contented hour,
With such unwonted solemn grace and state,
As may for ever after force them hate
Our brothers glorious beams, and with the night
Crown'd with a thousand stars, and our cold light :
For almost all the world their service bend
To Phœbus, and in vain my light I lend,
Gaz'd on unto my setting from my rise
Almost of none, but of unquiet eyes.

Nigh. Then shine at full, fair Queen, and by thy power
Produce a birth to crown this happy hour ;
Of Nymphs and Shepherds let their songs discover,
Easie and sweet, who is a happy Lover ;
Or if thou woot, then call thine own Endymion
From the sweet flowry bed he lies upon,
On Latmus top, thy pale beams drawn away,
And of this long night let him make a day. (mine,

Cinb. Thou dream'st dark Queen, that fair boy was not
Nor went I down to kiss him ; ease and wine
Have bred these bold tales ; Poets when they rage,
Turn gods to men, and make an hour an age ;
But I will give a greater state and glory,
And raise to time a noble memory
Of what these Lovers are ; rise, rise, I say,
Thou power of deeps, thy surges laid away,
Neptune great King of waters, and by me
Be proud to be commanded. [Neptune rises.

Nep. Cynthia, see,
Thy word hath fetcht me hither, let me know why I ascend.

Cinb. Doth this majestick show
Give thee no knowledge yet ? Nep. Yes, now I see.
Something intended (Cynthia) worthy thee ;
Go on, I'll be a helper. Cinb. Hie thee then,
And charge the wind flie from his Rockie Den.

Let loose thy subjects, only Boreas
Too foul for our intention as he was ;
Still keep him fast chain'd ; we must have none here
But vernal blasts, and gentle winds appear,
Such as blow flowers, and through the glad Boughs sing
Many soft welcomes to the lusty spring.

These are our musick : next, thy watry race
Bring on in couples ; we are pleas'd to grace
This noble night, each in their richest things
Your own deeps or the broken vessel brings ;
Be prodigal, and I shall be as kind,
And shine at full upon you.

Nep. Ho the wind [Enter Eolus out of a Rock, Commanding Eolus ! Eol. Great Neptune ! Nep. He.
Eol. What is thy will ? Nep. We do command thee free
Favonius and thy milder winds to wait
Upon our Cynthia, but tye Boreas straight ;
He's too rebellious. Eol. I shall do it.

Nep. Do, great master of the flood, and all below,
Thy full command has taken. Eol. Ho ! the main ;
Neptune. Nep. Here. Eol. Boreas has broke his chain,
And struggling with the rest, has got away.

Nep. Let him alone, I'll take him up at sea ;
He will not long be thence ; go once again
And call out of the bottoms of the Main,
Blew Proteus, and the rest ; charge them put on Their greatest pearls, and the most sparkling stone
The bearing Rock breeds, till this night is done
By me a solemn honour to the Moon ;
Flie like a full sail. Eol. I am gone. Cin. Dark night,
Strike a full silence, do a thorow right
To this great Chorus, that our Musick may Touch high as heaven, and make the East break day
At mid-might. [Musick.

SONG.

Cynthia to thy power, and them
we obey.
Joy to this great company,
and no day
Come to steal this night away,
Till the rites of love are ended,
And the lusty Bridegroom say,
Welcome light of all befriended.
Pace out you watry powers below,
let your feet
Like the Gallies when they row, even beat.
Let your unknown measures set
To the still winds, tell to all
That Gods are come immortal great,
To honour this great Nuptial.

The Measure. Second Song.

Hold back thy hours dark night, till we have done,
The day will come too soon;
Young Maids will curse thee if thou steal'st away,
And leav'st their blushes open to the day.
Stay, stay, and hide
the blushes of the Bride.
Stay gentle night, and with thy darkness cover
The kisses of her Lover.
Stay, and confound her tears, and her shrill cryings,
Her weak denials, vows, and often dyings;
Stay and hide all,
but help not though she call.

Nep. Great Queen of us and Heaven,
Hear what I bring to make this hour a full one,
If not her measure. Cinth. Speak Seas King.
Nep. Thy tunes my Amphitrite joyes to have,
When they will dance upon the rising wave,
And court me as the sails, my Trytons play
Musick to lead a storm, I'll lead the way.

Song. Measure.

To bed, to bed; come Hymen, lead the Bride,
And lay her by her Husbands side:
Bring in the Virgins every one
That grieve to lie alone:
That they may kiss while they may say, a maid,
To morrow 'twill be other, kist and said:
Hesperus be long a shining,
Whil'st these Lovers are a twining.

Eol. Ho! Neptune! Nept. Eolus!
Eol. The Seas go hie,
Boreas hath rais'd a storm; go and applie
Thy trident, else I prophesie, ere day
Many a tall ship will be cast away: (call.
Descend with all the Gods, and all their power to strike a
Cin. A thanks to every one, and to gratulate
So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods fuller and higher
Than you have wisht for; no Ebb shall dare
To let the day see where your dwellings are:
Now back unto your Government in haste,
Lest your proud charge should swell above the waste,
And win upon the Island. Nep. We obey.

[Neptune descends, and the Sea-gods.]

Cinth. Hold up thy head dead night; feest thou not day?
The East begins to lighten, I must down
And give my brother place. Nigh. Oh! I could frown
To see the day, the day that flings his light
Upon my Kingdoms, and contemns old Night;
Let him go on and flame, I hope to see
Another wild-fire in his Axletree;
And all false drencht; but I forgot, speak Queen.

The day grows on I must no more be seen.

Cin. Heave up thy drowfie head agen, and see
A greater light, a greater Majestie,
Between our sect and us; whip up thy team;
The day breaks here, and you some flashing stream
Shot from the South; say, which way wilt thou go?
Nigh. I'll vanish into mists. [Exeunt.]

Cin. I into day. [Finis Mask.]

King. Take lights there Ladies, get the Bride to bed;
We will not see you laid, good night Amintor,
We'll ease you of that tedious ceremony;
Were it may ease, I should think time run slow.
If thou beest noble, youth, get me a boy,
That may defend my Kingdom from my foes.

Amin. All happines to you.

King. Good night Melantius. [Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus.

Enter Evadne, Aspatia, Dula, and other Ladies.

DUL. Madam, shall we undress you for this fight?
The Wars are nak'd that you must make to night.

Evad. You are very merry Dula.

Dul. I should be far merrier Madam, if it were with me as it is with you. Eva. Why how now wench?

Dul. Come Ladies will you help?

Eva. I am soon undone.

Dul. And as soon done:

Good store of Cloaths will trouble you at both.

Evad. Art thou drunk Dula?

Dul. Why here's none but we.

Evad. Thou think'st belike, there is no modesty

When we are alone.

Dul. I by my troth you hit my thoughts aright.

Evad. You prick me Lady. Dul. 'Tis against my will,
Anon you must endure more, and lie still.

You're best to practise. Evad. Sure this wench is mad.

Dul. No faith, this is a trick that I have had

Since I was fourteen.

Evad. 'Tis high time to leave it.

Dul. Nay, now I'll keep it till the trick leave me;

A dozen wanton words put in your head,
Will make you lively in your Husbands bed.

Evad. Nay faith, then take it.

Dul. Take it Madam, where?

We all I hope will take it that are here.

Evad. Nay then I'll give you o're. Dul. So will I make
The ablest man in Rhodes, or his heart to ake.

Evad. Wilt take my place to night?

Dul. I'll hold your Cards against any two I know.

Evad. What wilt thou do?

Dul. Madam, we'll do't, and make'm leave play too.

Evad. Aspatia, take her part. Dul. I will refuse it.
She will pluck down a side, she does not use it.

Evad. Why, do. Dul. You will find the play
Quickly, because your head lies well that way.

Evad. I thank thee Dula, would thou could'st instill
Some of thy mirth into Aspatia:

Nothing but sad thoughts in her breast do dwell,
Methinks a mean betwixt you would do well.

Dul. She is in love, hang me if I were so,

But I could run my Country, I love too

To do those things that people in love do.

Asp. It were a timeless smile should prove my check,

It were a fitter hour for me to laugh,

When at the Altar the Religious Priest

Were pacifying the offended powers

With sacrifice, than now, this should have been

My night, and all your hands have been employed

In giving me a spotless offering

To young Amintors bed, as we are now

For you: pardon Evadne, would my worth
Were great as yours, or that the King, or he,
Or both thought so, perhaps he found me worthless,
But till he did so, in these ears of mine,
(These credulous ears) he pour'd the sweetest words
That Art or Love could frame; if he were false,
Pardon it heaven, and if I did want
Vertue, you safely may forgive that too,
For I have left none that I had from you.

Evad. Nay, leave this sad talk Madam.

Asp. Would I could, then should I leave the cause.

Evad. See if you have not spoil'd all Dulas mirth.

Asp. Thou think'st thy heart hard, but if thou beest caught, remember me; thou shalt perceive a fire shot suddenly into thee.

Dul. That's not so good, let'm shoot any thing but fire, I fear'm not.

Asp. Well wench, thou mayst be taken.

Evad. Ladies good night, I'll do the rest my self.

Dul. Nay, let your Lord do some.

Asp. Lay a Garland on my Hearse of the dismal Yew.

Evad. That's one of your sad songs Madam.

Asp. Believe me, 'tis a very pretty one.

Evad. How is it Madam?

SONG.

Asp. Lay a Garland on my Hearse of the dismal yew;
Maidens, Willow branches bear; say I died true:
My Love was false, but I was firm from my hour of birth;
Upon my buried body lay lightly gentle earth.

Evad. Fie on't Madam, the words are so strange, they are able to make one Dream of Hobgoblins; I could never have the power, Sing that Dula.

Dula. I could never have the power
To love one above an hour,
But my heart would prompt mine eye
On some other man to flie;
Venus, fix mine eyes fast,
Or if not, give me all that I shall see at last.

Evad. So, leave me now.

Dula. Nay, we must see you laid.

Asp. Madam good night, may all the marriage joys
That longing Maids imagine in their beds,
Prove so unto you; may no discontent
Grow 'twixt your Love and you; but if there do,
Enquire of me, and I will guide your moan,
Teach you an artificial way to grieve,
To keep your sorrow waking; love your Lord
No worse than I; but if you love so well,
Alas, you may displease him, so did I.
This is the last time you shall look on me:
Ladies farewell; as soon as I am dead,
Come all and watch one night about my Hearse;
Bring each a mournful story and a tear
To offer at it when I go to earth:
With flattering Ivie clasp my Coffin round,
Write on my brow my fortune, let my Bier
Be born by Virgins that shall sing by course
The truth of maids and perjuries of men.

Evad. Alas, I pity thee. [Exit Evadne.]

Omnes. Madam, goodnight.

1 Lady. Come, we'll let in the Bridegroom.

Dul. Where's my Lord?

1 Lady. Here take this light. [Enter Amintor.]

Dul. You'll find her in the dark.

1 Lady. Your Lady's scarce a bed yet, you must help her.

Asp. Go and be happy in your Ladies love;
May all the wrongs that you have done to me,
Be utterly forgotten in my death.

I'll trouble you no more, yet I will take
A parting kiss, and will not be denied.
You'll come my Lord, and see the Virgins weep

When I am laid in earth, though you your self
Can know no pity: thus I wind my self
Into this willow Garland, and am prouder
That I was once your Love (though now refus'd)
Than to have had another true to me.
So with my prayers I leave you, and must try
Some yet unpractis'd way to grieve and die.

Dul. Come Ladies, will you go? [Exit Aspatia.]

Om. Goodnight my Lord.

Amin. Much happiness unto you all. [Exeunt Ladies.]

I did that Lady wrong; methinks I feel
Her grief shoot suddenly through all my veins;
Mine eyes run; this is strange at such a time.
It was the King first mov'd me to't, but he
Has not my will in keeping——why do I
Perplex my self thus? something whispers me,
Go not to bed; my guilt is not so great
As mine own conscience (too sensible)
Would make me think; I only brake a promise,
And 'twas the King that forc't me: timorous flesh,
Why shak'st thou so? away my idle fears. [Enter Evadne.]

Yonder she is, the lustre of whose eye
Can blot away the sad remembrance
Of all these things: Oh my Evadne, spare
That tender body, let it not take cold,
The vapours of the night will not fall here.
To bed my Love; Hymen will punish us
For being slack performers of his rites.
Can'st thou to call me? Evad. No.

Amin. Come, come my Love,

And let us lose our selves to one another.

Why art thou up so long? Evad. I am not well.

Amin. To bed then let me wind thee in these arms,
Till I have banisht sickness.

Evad. Good my Lord, I cannot sleep.

Amin. Evadne, we'll watch, I mean no sleeping.

Evad. I'll not go to bed. Amin. I prethee do.

Evad. I will not for the world.

Amin. Why my dear Love?

Evad. Why? I have sworn I will not.

Amin. Sworn! Evad. I.

Amin. How? Sworn Evadne?

Evad. Yes, Sworn Amintor, and will swear again
If you will wish to hear me.

Amin. To whom have you Sworn this?

Evad. If I should name him, the matter were not great.

Amin. Come, this is but the coynefs of a Bride.

Evad. The coynefs of a Bride?

Amin. How prettily that frown becomes thee!

Evad. Do you like it so?

Amin. Thou canst not dress thy face in such a look
But I shall like it. Evad. What look likes you best?

Amin. Why do you ask?

Evad. That I may shew you one less pleasing to you.

Amin. How's that?

Evad. That I may shew you one less pleasing to you.

Amin. I prethee put thy jests in milder looks.

It shews as thou wert angry.

Evad. So perhaps I am indeed.

Amin. Why, who has done thee wrong?

Name me the man, and by thy self I swear,
Thy yet unconquer'd self, I will revenge thee.

Evad. Now I shall try thy truth; if thou dost love me,
Thou weigh'st not any thing compar'd with me;
Life, Honour, joyes Eternal, all Delights

This world can yield, or hopeful people feign,
Or in the life to come, are light as Air

To a true Lover when his Lady frowns,
And bids him do this: wilt thou kill this man?

Swear my Amintor, and I'll kiss the sin off from thy lips.

Amin. I will not swear sweet Love,
Till I do know the cause. Evad. I would thou wouldst;
Why, it is thou that wrongest me, I hate thee,
Thou shouldst have kill'd thy self.

Amint. If I should know that, I should quickly kill
The man you hated. Evad. Know it then, and do't.

Amint. Oh no, what look soe're thou shalt put on,
To try my faith, I shall not think thee false;
I cannot find one blemish in thy face,
Where falsehood should abide: Lave and to bed;
If you have sworn to any of the Virgins
That were your old companions, to preserve
Your Maidenhead a night, it may be done without this means.

Evad. A Maidenhead Amintor at my years?

Amint. Sure she raves, this cannot be
Thy natural temper; shall I call thy maids?
Either thy healthful sleep hath left thee long,
Or else some Fever rages in thy blood.

Evad. Neither Amintor; think you I am mad,
Because I speak the truth?

Amint. Will you not lie with me to night?

Evad. To night? you talk as if I would hereafter.

Amint. Hereafter? yes, I do. (ence mark

Evad. You are deceiv'd, put off amazement, and with pati-
What I shall utter, for the Oracle
Knows nothing truer, 'tis not for a night
Or two that I forbear thy bed, but for ever.

Amint. I dream,—awake Amintor!

Evad. You hear right,
I sooner will find out the beds of Snakes,
And with my youthful blood warm their cold flesh,
Letting them curl themselves about my Limbs,
Than sleep on night with thee; this is not feign'd,
Nor sounds it like the coynefs of a Bride.

Amint. Is flesh so earthly to endure all this?
Are these the joys of Marriage? Hymen keep
This story (that will make succeeding youth Neglect thy Ceremonies) from all ears.
Let it not rise up for thy shame and mine
To after ages; we will scorn thy Laws,
If thou no better blefs them; touch the heart
Of her that thou hast sent me, or the world
Shall know there's not an Altar that will smooke
In praise of thee; we will adopt us Sons;
Then vertue shall inherit, and not blood:
If we do lust, we'll take the next we meet,
Serving our selves as other Creatures do,
And never take note of the Female more,
Nor of her issue. I do rage in vain,
She can but jest; Oh! pardon me my Love;
So dear the thoughts are that I hold of thee,
That I must break forth; satisfie my fear:
It is a pain beyond the hand of death,
To be in doubt; confirm it with an Oath, if this be true.

Evad. Do you invent the form:
Let there be in it all the binding words
Devils and Conjurers can put together,
And I will take it; I have sworn before,
And here by all things holy do again,
Never to be acquainted with thy bed.
Is your doubt over now?

Amint. I know too much, would I had doubted still;
Was ever such a marriage night as this!
You powers above, if you did ever mean
Man should be us'd thus, you have thought a way
How he may bear himself, and save his honour:
Instruct me in it; for to my dull eyes
There is no mean, no moderate course to run,
I must live scorn'd, or be a murderer:
Is there a third? why is this night so calm?
Why does not Heaven speak in Thunder to us,
And drown her voice?

Evad. This rage will do no good.

Amint. Evadne, hear me, thou hast ta'ne an Oath,
But such a rash one, that to keep it, were
Worse than to swear it; call it back to thee;
Such vows as those never ascend the Heaven;
A tear or two will wash it quite away:

Have mercy on my youth, my hopeful youth,
If thou be pitiful, for (without boast)
This Land was proud of me: what Lady was there
That men call'd fair and vertuous in this Isle,
That would have shun'd my love? It is in thee
To make me hold this worth—Oh! we vain men
That trust out all our reputation,
To rest upon the weak and yielding hand
Of feeble Women! but thou art not stone;
Thy flesh is soft, and in thine eyes doth dwell
The spirit of Love, thy heart cannot be hard.
Come lead me from the bottom of despair,
To all the joyes thou hast; I know thou wilt;
And make me careful, lest the sudden change
O're-come my spirits.

(ron me.

Evad. When I call back this Oath, the pains of hell invi-

Amint. I sleep, and am too temperate; come to bed, or by Those hairs, which if thou hast a foul like to thy locks,
Were threads for Kings to wear about their arms.

Evad. Why so perhaps they are.

Amint. Ple drag thee to my bed, and make thy tongue
Undo this wicked Oath, or on thy flesh
I'll print a thousand wounds to let out life.

Evad. I fear thee not, do what thou dar'st to me;
Every ill-founding word, or threatening look
Thou shew'st to me, will be reveng'd at full.

Amint. It will not sure Evadne.

Evad. Do not you hazard that.

Amint. Ha' ye your Champions?

Evad. Alas Amintor, thinkst thou I forbear
To sleep with thee, because I have put on
A maidens strictness? look upon these cheeks,
And thou shalt find the hot and rising blood
Unapt for such a vow; no, in this heart
There dwels as much desire, and as much will
To put that wisht act in practice, as ever yet
Was known to woman, and they have been shown
Both; but it was the folly of thy youth,
To think this beauty (to what Land soe're
It shall be call'd) shall stoop to any second.
I do enjoy the best, and in that height
Have sworn to stand or dic: you guess the man.

Amint. No, let me know the man that wrongs me so,
That I may cut his body into motes,
And scatter it before the Northern wind.

Evad. You dare not strike him.

Amint. Do not wrong me so;

Yes, if his body were a poysonous plant,
That it were death to touch, I have a soul
Will throw me on him. Evad. Why 'tis the King.

Amint. The King! Evad. What will you do now?

Amint. 'Tis not the King.

Evad. What, did he make this match for dull Amintor?

Amint. Oh! thou hast nam'd a word that wipes away
All thoughts revengeful: in that sacred name,
The King, there lies a terror: what frail man
Dares lift his hand against it? let the Gods
Speak to him when they please;
Till when let us suffer and wait.

Evad. Why should you fill your self so full of heat,
And haste so to my bed? I am no Virgin.

Amint. What Devil put it in thy fancy then
To marry me? Evad. Alas, I must have one
To Father Children, and to bear the name
Of Husband to me, that my sin may be more honourable.

Amint. What a strange thing am I?

Evad. A miserable one; one that my self am sorry for.

Amint. Why shew it then in this,
If thou hast pity, though thy love be none,
Kill me, and all true Lovers that shall live
In after ages cross't in their desires,
Shall blefs thy memory, and call thee good,
Because such mercy in thy heart was found,
To rid a lingering Wretch. Evad. I must have one

To fill thy room again, if thou wert dead,
Else by this night I would: I pity thee.

Amint. These strange and sudden injuries have fallen
So thick upon me, that I lose all sense
Of what they are: methinks I am not wrong'd,
Nor is it ought, if from the censuring World
I can but hide it—Reputation,
Thou art a word, no more; but thou hast shown
An impudence so high, that to the World
I fear thou wilt betray or shame thy self.

Evad. To cover shame I took thee, never fear
That I would blaze my self.

Amint. Nor let the King
Know I conceive he wrongs me, then mine honour
Will thrust me into action, that my flesh
Could bear with patience; and it is some ease
To me in these extremities, that I knew this Before I toucht thee; else had all the sins
Of mankind stood betwixt me and the King,
I had gone through 'em to his heart and thine.
I have lost one desire, 'tis not his crown
Shall buy me to thy bed: now I resolve
He has dishonour'd thee; give me thy hand,
Be careful of thy credit, and sin close,
'Tis all I wish; upon thy Chamber-floore
I'll rest to night, that morning visiters
May think we did as married people use.
And prethee smile upon me when they come,
And seem to toy, as if thou hadst been pleas'd
With what we did. Evad. Fear not, I will do this.

Amint. Come let us practise, and as wantonly
As ever loving Bride and Bridegroom met,
Lets laugh and enter here. Evad. I am content.

Amint. Down all the swellings of my troubled heart.
When we walk thus intwin'd, let all eyes see
If ever Lovers better did agree. [Exit.

Enter Aspatia, Antiphila and Olympias.

Asp. Away, you are not sad, force it no further;
Good Gods, how well you look! such a full colour
Young bashful Brides put on: sure you are new married.

Ant. Yes Madam, to your grief.

Asp. Alas! poor Wenches.
Go learn to love first, learn to lose your selves,
Learn to be flattered, and believe, and bless
The double tongue that did it;
Make a Faith out of the miracles of Ancient Lovers.
Did you ne're love yet, Wenches? speak Olympias,
Such as speak truth and dy'd in't,
And like me believe all faithful, and be miserable;
Thou hast an easie temper, fit for stamp.

Olymp. Never. Asp. Nor you Antiphila?

Ant. Nor I.

Asp. Then my good Girls, be more than Women, wife.
At least be more than I was; and be sure you credit any thing the light gives light to, before a man; rather believe the Sea weeps for the ruin'd Merchant when he roars; rather the wind courts but the pregnant fails when the strong cordage cracks; rather the Sun comes but to kiss the Fruit in wealthy Autumn, when all falls blasted; if you needs must love (forc'd by ill fate) take to your maiden bosoms two dead cold aspicks, and of them make Lovers, they cannot flatter nor forswear; one kiss makes a long peace for all;
but man, Oh that beast man! Come lets be sad my Girls;
That down cast of thine eye, Olympias,
Shews a fine sorrow; mark Antiphila,
Just such another was the Nymph Oenone,
When Paris brought home Helen: now a tear,
And then thou art a piece expressing fully
The Carthage Queen, when from a cold Sea Rock, Full with her sorrow, she tyed fast her eyes
To the fair Trojan ships, and having lost them,
Just as thine eyes do, down stole a tear, Antiphila;
What would this Wench do, if she were Aspatia?

Here she would stand, till some more pitying God
Turn'd her to Marble: 'tis enough my Wench;
Shew me the piece of Needle-work you wrought.

Ant. Of Ariadne, Madam? Asp. Yes that piece.
This should be Theseus, h'as a coufening face,
You meant him for a man. Ant. He was so Madam.

Asp. Why then 'tis well enough, never look back,
You have a full wind, and a false heart Theseus;
Does not the story say, his Keel was split,
Or his Masts spent, or some kind rock or other
Met with his Vessel? Ant. Not as I remember.

Asp. It should ha' been so; could the Gods know this,
And not of all their number raise a storm?
But they are all as ill. This false smile was well exprest;
Just such another caught me; you shall not go so Antiphila,
In this place work a quick sand,
And over it a shallow smiling Water.
And his ship ploughing it, and then a fear.
Do that fear to the life Wench.

Ant. 'Twill wrong the story.

Asp. 'Twill make the story wrong'd by wanton Poets.
Live long and be believ'd; but where's the Lady?

Ant. There Madam.

Asp. Fie, you have mist it here Antiphila,
You are much mistaken Wench;
These colours are not dull and pale enough,
To shew a soul so full of misery
As this sad Ladies was; do it by me,
Do it again by me the lost Aspatia,
And you shall find all true but the wild Island;
I stand upon the Sea breach now, and think
Mine arms thus, and mine hair blown with the wind,
Wild as that desert, and let all about me
Tell that I am forsaken, do my face
(If thou hadst ever feeling of a sorrow)

Thus, thus, Antiphila strive to make me look
Like sorrows monument; and the trees about me,
Let them be dry and leaveless; let the Rocks
Groan with continual surges, and behind me
Make all a desolation; look, look Wenches,
A miserable life of this poor Picture.

Olym. Dear Madam!

Asp. I have done, sit down, and let us
Upon that point fix all our eyes, that point there;
Make a dull silence till you feel a sudden sadness
Give us new souls. [Enter Calianax.

Cal. The King may do this, and he may not do it;
My child is wrong'd, disgrac'd: well, how now Huswives?
What at your ease? is this a time to sit still? up you young
Lazie Whores, up or I'll swing you.

Olym. Nay, good my Lord.

Cal. You'll lie down shortly, get you in and work;
What are you grown so resty? you want ears,
We shall have some of the Court boys do that Office.

Ant. My Lord we do no more than we are charg'd;
It is the Ladies pleasure we be thus in grief;
She is forsaken.

Cal. There's a Rogue too,
A young dissembling slave; well, get you in,
I'll have a bout with that boy; 'tis high time
Now to be valiant; I confess my youth
Was never prone that way: what, made an Ass?
A Court stale? well I will be valiant,
And beat some dozen of these Whelps; I will; and there's Another of 'em, a trim cheating souldier,
I'll maul that Rascal, h'as out-brav'd me twice;
But now I thank the Gods I am valiant;
Go, get you in, I'll take a course with all.

[Exeunt Ommes.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Cleon, Strato, Diphilus.

CLEON. Your sister is not up yet.

Diph. Oh, Brides must take their mornings rest,
The night is troublesome. STRATO. But not tedious.

Diph. What odds, he has not my Sisters maiden-head to night?

STRATO. No, it's odds against any Bridegroom living, he ne're gets it while he lives.

Diph. Y'are merry with my Sister, you'l please to allow me the same freedom with your Mother.

STRATO. She's at your service.

Diph. Then she's merry enough of her self, she needs no tickling; knock at the door.

STRATO. We shall interrupt them.

Diph. No matter, they have the year before them.
Good morrow Sister; spare your self to day, the night will come again. [Enter Amintor.]

AMINTOR. Who's there, my Brother? I am no readier yet, your Sister is but now up.

Diph. You look as you had lost your eyes to night; I think you ha' not slept. AMINTOR. I faith I have not.

Diph. You have done better then.

AMINTOR. We ventured for a Boy; when he is Twelve, He shall command against the foes of Rhodes.

STRATO. You cannot, you want sleep. [Aside.]

AMINTOR. 'Tis true; but she

As if she had drunk Lethe, or had made
Even with Heaven, did fetch so still a sleep,
So sweet and sound. Diph. What's that?

AMINTOR. Your Sister frets this morning, and does turn her eyes upon me, as people on their headsmen; she does chafe, and kiss, and chafe again, and clap my cheeks; she's in another world.

Diph. Then I had lost; I was about to lay, you had not got her Maiden-head to night.

AMINTOR. Ha! he does not mock me; y'ad lost indeed; I do not use to bungle. CLEON. You do deserve her.

AMINTOR. I laid my lips to hers, and what wild breath
That was rude and rough to me, last night [Aside.]
Was sweet as April; I'le be guilty too,
If these be the effects. Enter Melantius.

MELANTIUS. Good day Amintor, for to me the name
Of Brother is too distant; we are friends,
And that is nearer. AMINTOR. Dear Melantius!
Let me behold thee; is it possible?

MELANTIUS. What sudden gaze is this?

AMINTOR. 'Tis wonderous strange.

MELANTIUS. Why does thine eye desire so strict a view
Of that it knows so well?

There's nothing here that is not thine.

AMINTOR. I wonder much Melantius,
To see those noble looks that make me think
How vertuous thou art; and on the sudden
'Tis strange to me, thou shouldst have worth and honour,
Or not be base, and false, and treacherous,
And every ill. But——

MELANTIUS. Stay, stay my Friend, (brace me.)
I fear this sound will not become our loves; no more, em-

AMINTOR. Oh mistake me not;
I know thee to be full of all those deeds
That we frail men call good: but by the course
Of nature thou shouldst be as quickly chang'd
As are the winds, dissembling as the Sea,
That now wears brows as smooth as Virgins be,
Tempting the Merchant to invade his face,
And in an hour calls his billows up,
And shoots 'em at the Sun, destroying all
He carries on him. O how near am I
To utter my sick thoughts! [Aside.]

MELANTIUS. But why, my Friend, should I be so by Nature?

AMINTOR. I have wed thy Sister, who hath vertuous thoughts
Enough for one whole family, and it is strange
That you should feel no want.

MELANTIUS. Believe me, this complement's too cunning for me.

Diph. What should I be then by the course of nature,
They having both robb'd me of so much vertue?

STRATO. O call the Bride, my Lord Amintor, that we may see her blush, and turn her eyes down; it is the prettiest sport.

AMINTOR. Evadne! EVADNE. My Lord! [Within.]

AMINTOR. Come forth my Love,
Your Brothers do attend to wish you joy.

EVADNE. I am not ready yet.

AMINTOR. Enough, enough.

EVADNE. They'l mock me.

AMINTOR. Faith thou shalt come in. [Enter Evadne.]

MELANTIUS. Good morrow Sister; he that understands
Whom you have wed, need not to wish you joy.

You have enough, take heed you be not proud.

Diph. O Sister, what have you done!

EVADNE. I done! why, what have I done?

STRATO. My Lord Amintor swears you are no Maid now.

EVADNE. Push! STRATO. I faith he does.

EVADNE. I knew I should be mockt.

Diph. With a truth.

EVADNE. If'twere to do again, in faith I would not marry.

AMINTOR. Not I by Heaven. [Aside.]

Diph. Sister, Dula swears she heard you cry two rooms off.

EVADNE. Fie how you talk! Diph. Let's see you walk.

EVADNE. By my troth y'are spoil'd. MELANTIUS. Amintor!

AMINTOR. Ha! MELANTIUS. Thou art sad.

AMINTOR. Who I? I thank you for that, shall Diphilus, thou and I sing a catch? MELANTIUS. How!

AMINTOR. Prethee let's.

MELANTIUS. Nay, that's too much the other way.

AMINTOR. I am so lightned with my happiness: how dost thou Love? kiss me.

EVADNE. I cannot love you, you tell tales of me.

AMINTOR. Nothing but what becomes us: Gentlemen,
Would you had all such Wives, and all the world,
That I might be no wonder; y'are all sad;
What, do you envie me? I walk methinks
On water, and ne're sink, I am so light.

MELANTIUS. 'Tis well you are so.

AMINTOR. Well? how can I be other, when she looks thus?
Is there no musick there? let's dance.

MELANTIUS. Why? this is strange, Amintor!

AMINTOR. I do not know my self;
Yet I could wish my joy were less.

Diph. I'le marry too, if it will make one thus.

EVADNE. Amintor, hark. [Aside.]

AMINTOR. What says my Love? I must obey.

EVADNE. You do it scurvily, 'twill be perceiv'd.

CLEON. My Lord the King is here. [Enter King and Lyfs.]

AMINTOR. Where? STRATO. And his Brother.

KING. Good morrow all.

AMINTOR, joy on, joy fall thick upon thee!
And Madam, you are alter'd since I saw you,
I must salute you; you are now anothers;
How lik't you your nights rest? EVADNE. Ill Sir.

AMINTOR. I! 'deed she took but little.

LYFS. You'l let her take more, and thank her too shortly.

KING. Amintor, wert thou truly honest
Till thou wert Married?

AMINTOR. Yes Sir.

KING. Tell me then, how shews the sport unto thee?

AMINTOR. Why well. KING. What did you do?

AMINTOR. No more nor less than other couples use;
You know what 'tis; it has but a course name.

KING. But prethee, I should think by her black eye,
And her red cheek, she should be quick and stirring
In this same business, ha?

AMINTOR. I cannot tell, I ne're try'd other Sir, but I perceive
She is as quick as you delivered.

KING. Well, you'l trust me then Amintor,

To choose a Wife for you agen? Amint. No never Sir.

King. Why? like you this so ill?

Amint. So well I like her.

For this I bow my knee in thanks to you,
And unto Heaven will pay my grateful tribute
Hourly, and to hope we shall draw out
A long contented life together here,
And die both full of gray hairs in one day;
For which the thanks is yours; but if the powers
That rule us, please to call her first away,
Without pride spoke, this World holds not a Wife
Worthy to take her room.

King. I do not like this; all forbear the room
But you Amintor and your Lady. I have some speech with You; that may concern your after living well.

Amint. He will not tell me that he lies with her: if he do,
Something Heavenly stay my heart, for I shall be apt
To thrust this arm of mine to acts unlawful.

King. You will suffer me to talk with her Amintor,
And not have a jealous pang!

Amint. Sir, I dare trust my Wife
With whom she dares to talk, and not be jealous.

King. How do you like Amintor?

Evad. As I did Sir. King. How's that!

Evad. As one that to fulfil your will and pleasure,
I have given leave to call me Wife and Love.

King. I see there is no lasting Faith in Sin;
They that break word with Heaven, will break again
With all the World, and so dost thou with me.

Evad. How Sir?

King. This subtle Womans ignorance
Will not excuse you; thou hast taken Oaths
So great, methought they did not well become
A Womans mouth, that thou wouldst ne're enjoy
A man but me.

Evad. I never did swear so; you do me wrong.

King. Day and night have heard it.

Evad. I swore indeed that I would never love
A man of lower place; but if your fortune
Should throw you from this height, I bade you trust
I would forsake you, and would bend to him
That won your Throne; I love with my ambition,
Not with mine eyes; but if I ever yet
Toucht any other, Leprosie light here
Upon my face, which for your Royalty I would not stain.

King. Why thou dissemblest, and it is in me to punish thee.

Evad. Why, it is in me then not to love you, which will
More afflict your body, than your punishment can mine.

King. But thou hast let Amintor lie with thee.

Evad. I ha'not. King. Impudence! he saies himself so.

Evad. He lyes. King. He does not.

Evad. By this light he does, strangely and basely, and I'le prove it so; I did not shun him for a night,
But told him I would never close with him.

King. Speak lower, 'tis false.

Evad. I'm no man to answer with a blow;
Or if I were, you are the King, but urge me not, 'tis most true.

King. Do not I know the uncontroled thoughts
That youth brings with him, when his blood is high
With expectation and desires of that
He long hath waited for? is not his spirit,
Though he be temperate, of a valiant strain,
As this our age hath known? what could he do,
If such a sudden speech had met his blood,
But ruine thee for ever? if he had not kill'd thee,
He could not bear it thus; he is as we,
Or any other wrong'd man. Evad. It is dissembling.

King. Take him; farewell; henceforth I am thy foe;
And what disgraces I can blot thee, look for.

Evad. Stay Sir; Amintor, you shall hear, Amintor.

Amint. What my Love?

Evad. Amintor, thou hast an ingenious look,
And shouldst be vertuous; it amazeth me,
That thou canst make such base malicious lyes.

Amint. What my dear Wife?

Evad. Dear Wife! I do despise thee;
Why, nothing can be baser, than to sow
Dissention amongst Lovers. Amint. Lovers! who?

Evad. The King and me. Amint. O Heaven!

Evad. Who should live long, and love without distaste,
Were it not for such pickthanks as thy self!

Did you lie with me? swear now, and be punisht in hell
For this. Amint. The faithless Sin I made

To fair Aspatia, is not yet reveng'd,
It follows me; I will not lose a word

To this wild Woman; but to you my King,
The anguish of my soul thrusts out this truth,

Y'are a Tyrant; and not so much to wrong
An honest man thus, as to take a pride

In talking with him of it.

Evad. Now Sir, see how loud this fellow lyed.

Amint. You that can know to wrong, should know how Men must right themselves: what punishment is due
From me to him that shall abuse my bed!

It is not death; nor can that satisfie,
Unless I send your lives through all the Land,
To shew how nobly I have freed my self.

King. Draw not thy Sword, thou knowest I cannot fear
A subjects hand; but thou shalt feel the weight of this
If thou dost rage. Amint. The weight of that?

If you have any worth, for Heavens sake think

I fear not Swords; for as you are meer man,
I dare as easily kill you for this deed,

As you dare think to do it; but there is
Divinity about you, that strikes dead

My rising passions, as you are my King,
I fall before you, and present my Sword

To cut mine own flesh, if it be your will.

Alas! I am nothing but a multitude
Of walking griefs; yet should I murder you,

I might before the world take the excuse
Of madness: for compare my injuries,

And they will well appear too sad a weight
For reason to endure; but fall I first

Amongst my sorrows, ere my treacherous hand
Touch holy things: but why? I know not what

I have to say; why did you choose out me
To make thus wretched? there were thousand fools

Easie to work on, and of state enough within the Island.

Evad. I would not have a fool, it were no credit for me.

Amint. Worse and worse!

Thou that dar'st talk unto thy Husband thus,
Profess thy self a Whore; and more than so,

Resolve to be so still; it is my fate

To bear and bow beneath a thousand griefs,
To keep that little credit with the World.

But there were wise ones too, you might have ta'ne another.

King. No; for I believe thee honest, as thou wert valiant.

Amint. All the happiness

Bestow'd upon me, turns into disgrace;

Gods take your honesty again, for I
Am loaden with it; good my Lord the King, be private in it.

King. Thou may'st live Amintor,

Free as thy King, if thou wilt wink at this,
And be a means that we may meet in secret.

Amint. A Baud! hold my breast, a bitter curse

Seize me, if I forget not all respects
That are Religious, on another word

Sounded like that, and through a Sea of sins
Will wade to my revenge, though I should call

Pains here, and after life upon my soul.

King. Well! am resolute you lay not with her,
And so leave you. [Exit King]

Evad. You must be prating, and see what follows.

Amint. Prethee vex me not.

Leave me, I am afraid some sudden start
Will pull a murder on me.

Evad. I am gone; I love my life well. [Exit Evadne]

Amint.

Amint. I hate mine as much.
This 'tis to break a troth; I should be glad
If all this tide of grief would make me mad.

[Exit.]

Enter Melantius.

Mel. I'll know the cause of all Amintors griefs,
Or friendship shall be idle.

[Enter Calianax.]

Cal. O Melantius, my Daughter will die.

Mel. Trust me, I am sorry; would thou hadst ta'ner her room.

Cal. Thou art a slave, a cut-throat slave, a bloody treacherous slave.

Melan. Take heed old man, thou wilt be heard to rave,
And lose thine Offices. Cal. I am valiant grown
At all these years, and thou art but a slave.

Mel. Leave, some company will come, and I respect
Thy years, not thee so much, that I could wish
To laugh at thee alone.

Cal. I'll spoil your mirth, I mean to fight with thee;
There lie my Cloak, this was my Fathers Sword,
And he durst fight; are you prepar'd?

Mel. Why? wilt thou doat thy self out of thy life?
Hence get thee to bed, have careful looking to, and eat warm things, and trouble not me: my head is full of thoughts more weighty than thy life or death can be.

Cal. You have a name in War, when you stand safe
Amongst a multitude; but I will try
What you dare do unto a weak old man
In single fight; you'll ground I fear: Come draw.

Mel. I will not draw, unless thou pul'st thy death
Upon thee with a stroke; there's no one blow
That thou canst give, hath strength enough to kill me.

Tempt me not so far then; the power of earth
Shall not redeem thee. Cal. I must let him alone,
He's stout and able; and to say the truth,

However I may set a face, and talk,
I am not valiant: when I was a youth,
I kept my credit with a testie trick I had,
Amongst cowards, but durst never fight.

Mel. I will not promise to preserve your life if you do stay.

Cal. I would give half my Land that I durst fight with that proud man a little: if I had men to hold, I would beat him, till he ask me mercy.

Mel. Sir, will you be gone?

Cal. I dare not stay, but I will go home, and beat my servants all over for this. [Exit Calianax.]

Mel. This old fellow haunts me,
But the distracted carriage of mine Amintor
Takes deeply on me, I will find the cause;
I fear his Conscience cries, he wrong'd Aspatia.

Enter Amintor.

Amint. Mens eyes are not so subtil to perceive
My inward misery; I bear my grief
Hid from the World; how art thou wretched then?
For ought I know, all Husbands are like me;
And every one I talk with of his Wife,
Is but a well dissembler of his woes
As I am; would I knew it, for the rareness afflicts me now.

Mel. Amintor, We have not enjoy'd our friendship of late, for we were wont to charge our souls in talk.

Amint. Melantius, I can tell thee a good jest of Strato and a Lady the last day. Mel. How wast?

Amint. Why such an odd one.

Mel. I have long'd to speak with you, not of an idle jest that's forc'd, but of matter you are bound to utter to me.

Amint. What is that my friend?

Mel. I have observ'd, your words fall from your tongue
Wildly; and all your carriage,
Like one that strove to shew his merry mood,
When he were ill dispos'd: you were not wont
To put such scorn into your speech, or wear
Upon your face ridiculous jollity:
Some sadness sits here, which your cunning would Cover o're with smiles, and 'twill not be. What is it?

Amint. A sadness here! what cause
Can fate provide for me, to make me so?
Am I not lov'd through all this Isle? the King
Rains greatness on me: have I not received
A Lady to my bed, that in her eye
Keeps mounting fire, and on her tender cheeks
Inevitable colour, in her heart

A prison for all vertue? are not you,
Which is above all joyes, my constant friend?
What sadness can I have? no, I am light,
And feel the courses of my blood more warm
And stirring than they were; faith marry too,
And you will feel so unexpress'd a joy
In chaste embraces, that you will indeed appear another.

Mel. You may shape, Amintor,
Causes to cozen the whole world withal,
And your self too; but 'tis not like a friend,
To hide your soul from me; 'tis not your nature
To be thus idle; I have seen you stand
As you were blasted; midst of all your mirth,
Call thrice aloud, and then start, feigning joy
So coldly: World! what do I here? a friend
Is nothing, Heaven! I would ha' told that man
My secret sins; I'll search an unknown Land,
And there plant friendship, all is withered here;
Come with a complement, I would have fought,
Or told my friend he ly'd, ere sooth'd him so;
Out of my bosom. Amint. But there is nothing.

Mel. Worse and worse; farewell;
From this time have acquaintance, but no friend.

Amint. Melantius, stay, you shall know what that is.

Mel. See how you play'd with friendship; be advis'd
How you give cause unto your self to say, You ha' lost a friend.

Amint. Forgive what I have done;
For I am so ore-gone with injuries
Unheard of, that I lose consideration
Of what I ought to do—oh—oh.

Mel. Do not weep; what is't?
May I once but know the man
Hath turn'd my friend thus?

Amint. I had spoke at first, but that. Mel. But what?

Amint. I held it most unfit

For you to know; faith do not know it yet.

Mel. Thou see'st my love, that will keep company
With thee in tears; hide nothing then from me;
For when I know the cause of thy distemper,
With mine own armour I'll adorn my self,
My resolution, and cut through thy foes,
Unto thy quiet, till I place thy heart
As peaceable as spotless innocence. What is it?

Amint. Why, 'tis this—it is too big
To get out, let my tears make way a while.

Mel. Punish me strangely heaven, if he escape
Of life or fame; that brought this youth to this.

Amint. Your Sister. Mel. Well said.

Amint. You'll wish't unknown, when you have heard it.

Mel. No. Amint. Is much to blame,
And to the King has given her honour up,
And lives in Whoredom with him. Mel. How, this!

Thou art run mad with injury indeed,
Thou couldst not utter this else; speak again,
For I forgive it freely; tell thy griefs:

Amint. She's wanton; I am loth to say a Whore,
Though it be true.

Mel. Speak yet again, before mine anger grow
Up beyond throwing down; what are thy griefs?

Amint. By all our friendship; these.

Mel. What? am I tame?
After mine actions, shall the name of friend
Blot all our family, and strike the brand
Of Whore upon my Sister unrevenge'd?
My shaking flesh be thou a Witness for me,
With what unwillingness I go to scourge
This Raylor, whom my folly hath call'd Friend;

I will not take thee basely; thy sword
Hangs near thy hand, draw it, that I may whip
Thy rashness to repentance; draw thy sword.

Amint. Not on thee, did thine anger swell as high
As the wild surges; thou shouldst do me ease
Here, and Eternally, if thy noble hand
Would cut me from my sorrows.

Mel. This is base and fearful! they that use to utter lyes,
Provide not blows, but words to qualifie
The men they wrong'd; thou hast a guilty cause.

Amint. Thou pleafest me; for so much more like this,
Will raise my anger up above my griefs,
Which is a passion easier to be born,
And I shall then be happy.

Mel. Take then more to raise thine anger. 'Tis meer
Cowardize makes thee not draw; and I will leave thee dead
However; but if thou art so much prest
With guilt and fear, as not to dare to fight,
I'll make thy memory loath'd, and fix a scandal
Upon thy name for ever.

Amint. Then I draw,
As justly as our Magistrates their Swords,
To cut offenders off; I knew before

'Twould grate your ears; but it was base in you
To urge a weighty secret from your friend,
And then rage at it; I shall be at ease
If I be kill'd; and if you fall by me,
I shall not long out-live you.

Mel. Stay a while.
The name of friend is more than family,
Or all the world besides; I was a fool.
Thou searching humane nature, that didst wake

To do me wrong, thou art inquisitive,
And thrusts me upon questions that will take
My sleep away; would I had died ere known
This sad dishonour; pardon me my friend;
If thou wilt strike, here is a faithful heart,
Pierce it, for I will never heave my hand

To thine; behold the power thou hast in me!
I do believe my Sister is a Whore,
A Leprous one, put up thy sword young man.

Amint. How should I bear it then, she being so?
I fear my friend that you will lose me shortly;
And I shall do a foul action my self

Through these disgraces. Mel. Better half the Land
Were buried quick together; no, Amintor,

Thou shalt have ease: O this Adulterous King
That drew her to't! where got he the spirit
To wrong me so? Amint. What is it then to me,
If it be wrong to you!

Mel. Why, not so much: the credit of our house
Is thrown away;

But from his Iron Den I'll waken death,
And hurle him on this King; my honesty
Shall steel my sword, and on its horrid point
I'll wear my cause, that shall amaze the eyes
Of this proud man, and be too glittering
For him to look on.

Amint. I have quite undone my fame.

Mel. Dry up thy watry eyes,
And cast a manly look upon my face;
For nothing is so wild as I thy friend
Till I have freed thee; still this swelling breast;
I go thus from thee, and will never cease
My vengeance, till I find my heart at peace.

Amint. It must not be so; stay, mine eyes would tell
How loth I am to this; but love and tears

Leave me a while, for I have hazarded
All this world calls happy; thou hast wrought
A secret from me under name of Friend,
Which Art could ne're have found, nor torture wrung
From out my bosom; give it me agen,
For I will find it, wheresoe're it lies

Hid in the mortal'st part; invent a way to give it back.

Mel. Why, would you have it back?
I will to death pursue him with revenge.

Amint. Therefore I call it back from thee; for I know
Thy blood so high, that thou wilt stir in this, and shame me
To posterity: take to thy Weapon.

Mel. Hear thy friend, that bears more years than thou.

Amint. I will not hear: but draw, or I— Mel. Amintor.

Amint. Draw then, for I am full as resolute
As fame and honour can inforce me be;
I cannot linger, draw. Mel. I do—but is not
My share of credit equal with thine if I do stir?

Amint. No; for it will be cal'd
Honour in thee to spill thy Sisters blood,
If she her birth abuse, and on the King
A brave revenge: but on me that have walkt
With patience in it, it will fix the name
Of fearful Cuckold—O that word! be quick.

Mel. Then joyn with me.

Amint. I dare not do a sin, or else I would: be speedy.

Mel. Then dare not fight with me, for that's a sin.
His grief distracts him; call thy thoughts agen,
And to thy self pronounce the name of friend,
And see what that will work; I will not fight.

Amint. You must.

Mel. I will be kill'd first, though my passions
Offered the like to you; 'tis not this earth
Shall buy my reason to it; think a while,
For you are (I must weep when I speak that)
Almost besides your self. Amint. Oh my soft temper!

So many sweet words from thy Sisters mouth,
I am afraid would make me take her
To embrace, and pardon her. I am mad indeed,
And know not what I do; yet have a care
Of me in what thou doest. (to save

Mel. Why thinks my friend I will forget his honour, or
The bravery of our house, will lose his fame,
And fear to touch the Throne of Majesty?

Amint. A curse will follow that, but rather live
And suffer with me.

Mel. I will do what worth shall bid me, and nomore.

Amint. Faith I am sick, and desperately I hope,
Yet leaning thus, I feel a kind of ease.

Mel. Come take agen your mirth about you.

Amint. I shall never do't.

Mel. I warrant you, look up, wee'll walk together,
Put thine arm here, all shall be well agen.

Amint. Thy Love, O wretched, I thy Love, Melantius; why,
I have nothing else.

Mel. Be merry then. [Exeunt. Enter Melantius agen.

Mel. This worthy young man may do violence
Upon himself, but I have cherisht him
To my best power; and sent him smiling from me
To counterfeit again; sword hold thine edge,
My heart will never fail me: Diphilus,
Thou com'st as sent. [Enter Diphilus.

Diph. Yonder has been such laughing.

Mel. Betwixt whom?

Diph. Why, our Sister and the King,
I thought their spleens would break,
They laught us all out of the room.

Mel. They must weep, Diphilus. Diph. Must they?

Mel. They must: thou art my Brother, and if I did believe
Thou hadst a base thought, I would rip it out,
Lie where it durst. (find it.

Diph. You should not, I would first mangle my self and

Mel. That was spoke according to our strain; come
Joyn thy hands to mine,
And swear a firmness to what project I shall lay before thee.

Diph. You do wrong us both;
People hereafter shall not say there past
A bond more than our loves, to tie our lives
And deaths together.

Mel. It is as nobly said as I would wish;
Anon I'll tell you wonders; we are wrong'd.

Diph. But I will tell you now, wee'll right our selves.

Mel. Stay not, prepare the armour in my house;

And what friends you can draw unto our side,
Not knowing of the cause, make ready too;
Haste Diphilus, the time requires it, haste. [Exit Diphilus.]
I hope my cause is just, I know my blood
Tells me it is, and I will credit it:
To take revenge, and lose my self withal,
Were idle; and to scape impossible,
Without I had the fort, which misery
Remaining in the hands of my old enemy
Calianax, but I must have it, see [Enter Calianax.]
Where he comes shaking by me: good my Lord,
Forget your spleen to me, I never wrong'd you,
But would have peace with every man. Cal. 'Tis well;
If I durst fight, your tongue would lie at quiet.

Mel. Y'are touchie without all cause.

Cal. Do, mock me.

Mel. By mine honour I speak truth.

Cal. Honour? where is't?

Mel. See what starts you make into your hatred to my love and freedom to you.

I come with resolution to obtain a suit of you.

Cal. A suit of me! 'tis very like it should be granted, Sir.

Mel. Nay, go not hence;

'Tis this; you have the keeping of the Fort,
And I would wish you by the love you ought
To bear unto me, to deliver it into my hands.

Cal. I am in hope that thou art mad, to talk to me thus.

Mel. But there is a reason to move you to it. I would kill the King that wrong'd you and your daughter.

Cal. Out Traytor!

Mel. Nay but stay; I cannot scape, the deed once done,
Without I have this fort.

Cal. And should I help thee? now thy treacherous mind betrays it self. Mel. Come, delay me not;

Give me a sudden answer, or already
Thy last is spoke; refuse not offered love,
When it comes clad in secrets.

Cal. If I say I will not, he will kill me, I do see't writ
In his looks; and should I say I will, he'l run and tell the King: I do not shun your friendship dear Melantius,
But this cause is weighty, give me but an hour to think.

Mel. Take it—I know this goes unto the King,
But I am arm'd. [Ex. Melant.]

Cal. Me thinks I feel my self
But twenty now agen; this fighting fool
Wants Policy; I shall revenge my Girl,
And make her red again; I pray, my legs
Will last that pace that I will carry them,
I shall want breath before I find the King.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Melantius, Evadne, and a Lady.

MEL. Save you.

Evadne. Save you sweet Brother.

Mel. In my blunt eye methinks you look Evadne.

Evadne. Come, you would make me blush.

Mel. I would Evadne, I shall displease my ends else.

Evadne. You shall if you command me; I am bashful;
Come Sir, how do I look?

Mel. I would not have your women hear me
Break into commendation of you, 'tis not seemly.

Evadne. Go wait me in the Gallery—now speak.

Mel. I'll lock the door first. [Exeunt Ladies.]

Evadne. Why?

Mel. I will not have your gilded things that dance in visitation with their Millan skins choke up my business.

Evadne. You are strangely dispos'd Sir.

Mel. Good Madam, not to make you merry.

Evadne. No, if you praise me, 'twill make me sad.

Mel. Such a sad commendation I have for you.

Evadne. Brother, the Court hath made you witty,
And learn to riddle. (thing?)

Mel. I praise the Court for't; has it learned you no-
Evadne. Me?

Mel. I Evadne, thou art young and handfom,
A Lady of a sweet complexion,
And such a flowing carriage, that it cannot Chuse but inflame a Kingdom. Evadne. Gentle Brother!

Mel. 'Tis yet in thy remembrance, foolish woman,
To make me gentle. Evadne. How is this?

Mel. 'Tis base,
And I could blush at these years, thorough all
My honour'd scars, to come to such a parly.

Evadne. I understand you not. Mel. You dare not, Fool;
They that commit thy faults, fly the remembrance.

Evadne. My faults, Sir! I would have you know I care not
If they were written here, here in my forehead.

Mel. Thy body is too little for the story,
The lusts of which would fill another woman,
Though she had Twins within her. Evadne. This is faucy;
Look you intrude no more, there lies your way.

Mel. Thou art my way, and I will tread upon thee,
Till I find truth out.

Evadne. What truth is that you look for?

Mel. Thy long-lost honour: would the Gods had fet me
One of their loudest bolts; come tell me quickly,
Do it without enforcement, and take heed
You swell me not above my temper.

Evadne. How Sir? where got you this report?

Mel. Where there was people in every place.

Evadne. They and the seconds of it are base people;
Believe them not, they lyed.

Mel. Do not play with mine anger, do not Wretch,
I come to know that desperate Fool that drew thee
From thy fair life; be wise, and lay him open.

Evadne. Unhand me, and learn manners, such another
Forgetfulness forfeits your life.

Mel. Quench me this mighty humour, and then tell me
Whose Whore you are, for you are one, I know it.
Let all mine honours perish but I'll find him,
Though he lie lockt up in thy blood; be sudden;
There is no facing it, and be not flattered;
The burnt air, when the Dog rains, is not fouler
Than thy contagious name, till thy repentance
(If the Gods grant thee any) purge thy sickness.

Evadne. Be gone, you are my Brother, that's your safety.

Mel. I'll be a Wolf first; 'tis to be thy Brother
An infamy below the sin of a Coward:

I am as far from being part of thee,
As thou art from thy vertue: seek a kindred
'Mongst sensual beasts, and make a Goat thy Brother,
A Goat is cooler; will you tell me yet?

Evadne. If you stay here and rail thus, I shall tell you,
I'll ha' you whipt; get you to your command, (you.
And tell them what a brave man you are; I shall laugh at

Mel. Y'are grown a glorious Whore; where be your Fighters? what mortal Fool durst raise thee to this daring,
And I alive? by my just Sword, h'ad safer
Bestride a Billow when the angry North
Plows up the Sea, or made Heavens fire his food;
Work me no higher; will you discover yet?

Evadne. The Fellow's mad, sleep and speak sense.

Mel. Force my swollen heart no further; I would save thee; your great maintainers are not here, they dare not, would they were all, and armed, I would speak loud; here's one should thunder to 'em: will you tell me? thou hast no hope to scape; he that dares most, and damns away his soul to do thee service, will sooner fetch meat from a hungry Lion, than come to rescue thee; thou hast death about thee: h'as undone thine honour, poyson'd thy vertue, and of a lovely rose, left thee a canker.

Evadne. Let me consider. Mel. Do, whose child thou wert,
Whose honour thou hast murdered, whose grave open'd,

And

And so pull'd on the Gods, that in their justice
They must restore him flesh again and life,
And raise his dry bones to revenge his scandal.

Evad. The gods are not of my mind; they had better let 'em lie sweet still in the earth; they'll stink here.

Mel. Do you raise mirth out of my easiness?
Forfake me then all weaknesses of Nature,
That make men women: Speak you whore, speak truth,
Or by the dear soul of thy sleeping Father,
This sword shall be thy lover: tell, or I'll kill thee:
And when thou hast told all, thou wilt deserve it.

Evad. You will not murder me!

Mel. No, 'tis a justice, and a noble one,
To put the light out of such base offenders.

Evad. Help!

Mel. By thy foul self, no humane help shall help thee,
If thou criest: when I have kill'd thee, as I have Vow'd to do, if thou confests not, naked as thou hast left
Thine honour, will I leave thee,
That on thy branded flesh the world may read
Thy black shame, and my justice; wilt thou bend yet?

Evad. Yes. Mel. Up and begin your story.

Evad. Oh I am miserable.

Mel. 'Tis true, thou art, speak truth still.

Evad. I have offended, noble Sir: forgive me.

Mel. With what secure slave? Evad. Do not ask me Sir.
Mine own remembrance is a misery too mightie for me.

Mel. Do not fall back again; my sword's unsheath'd yet.

Evad. What shall I do?

Mel. Be true, and make your fault less.

Evad. I dare not tell.

Mel. Tell, or I'll be this day a killing thee.

Evad. Will you forgive me then?

Mel. Stay, I must ask mine honour first, I have too much foolish nature in me; speak. Evad. Is there none else here?

Mel. None but a fearful conscience, that's too many. Who

Evad. O hear me gently; it was the King. (is't?)

Mel. No more. My worthy father's and my services
Are liberally rewarded! King, I thank thee,
For all my dangers and my wounds, thou hast paid me
In my own metal: These are Souldiers thanks.
How long have you liv'd thus Evadne? Evad. Too long.

Mel. Too late you find it: can you be sorry?

Evad. Would I were half as blameless.

Mel. Evadne, thou wilt to thy trade again.

Evad. First to my grave.

Mel. Would gods th'hadst been so blest:
Dost thou not hate this King now? prethee hate him:
Couldst thou not curse him? I command thee curse him,
Curse till the gods hear, and deliver him
To thy just wishes: yet I fear Evadne,
You had rather play your game out.

Evad. No, I feel (after.
Too many sad confusions here to let in any loose flame here-

Mel. Dost thou not feel amongst all those one brave anger
That breaks out nobly, and directs thine arm to kill this base

Evad. All the gods forbid it. (King?)

Mel. No, all the gods require it, they are dishonoured in

Evad. 'Tis too fearful. (him.)

Mel. Y'are valiant in his bed, and bold enough
To be a stale whore, and have your Madams name
Discourse for Grooms and Pages, and hereafter
When his cool Majestie hath laid you by,
To be at pension with some needy Sir
For meat and courser clothes, thus far you know no fear.
Come, you shall kill him. Evad. Good Sir!

Mel. And 'twere to kiss him dead, thou'd smother him;
Be wife and kill him: Canst thou live and know
What noble minds shall make thee see thy self
Found out with every finger, made the shame
Of all successions, and in this great ruine
Thy brother and thy noble husband broken?
Thou shalt not live thus; kneel and swear to help me
When I shall call thee to it, or by all

Holy in heaven and earth, thou shalt not live
To breath a full hour longer, not a thought:
Come 'tis a righteous oath; give me thy hand,
And both to heaven held up, swear by that wealth
This lustful thief stole from thee, when I say it,
To let his foul soul out. Evad. Here I swear it,
And all you spirits of abused Ladies
Help me in this performance.

Mel. Enough; this must be known to none
But you and I Evadne; not to your Lord,
Though he be wise and noble, and a fellow
Dares step as far into a worthy action,
As the most daring, I as far as Justice.

Ask me not why. Farewell. [Exit. Mel.

Evad. Would I could say so to my black disgrace.
Oh where have I been all this time! how friended,
That I should lose my self thus desperately,
And none for pity shew me how I wandred?
There is not in the compass of the light

A more unhappy creature: sure I am monstrous,
For I have done those follies, those mad mischiefs,
Would dare a woman. O my loaden soul,

Be not so cruel to me, choak not up [Enter Amintor.
The way to my repentance. O my Lord.

Amin. How now?

Evad. My much abused Lord! [Kneels.

Amin. This cannot be.

Evad. I do not kneel to live, I dare not hope it;
The wrongs I did are greater; look upon me
Though I appear with all my faults. Amin. Stand up.
This is no new way to beget more sorrow;
Heaven knows I have too many; do not mock me;
Though I am tame and bred up with my wrongs,
Which are my foster-brothers, I may leap
Like a hand-wolf into my natural wilderness,
And do an out-rage: pray thee do not mock me.

Evad. My whole life is so leprous, it infects
All my repentance: I would buy your pardon
Though at the highest set, even with my life:
That slight contrition, that's no sacrifice
For what I have committed. Amin. Sure I dazle:

There cannot be a faith in that foul woman
That knows no God more mighty than her mischiefs:
Thou dost still worst, still number on thy faults,
To press my poor heart thus. Can I believe
There's any seed of Vertue in that woman
Left to shoot up, that dares go on in sin
Known, and so known as thine is, O Evadne!
Would there were any safety in thy sex,
That I might put a thousand sorrows off,
And credit thy repentance: but I must not;
Thou hast brought me to the dull calamity,
To that strange misbelief of all the world,
And all things that are in it, that I fear
I shall fall like a tree, and find my grave,
Only remembering that I grieve. Evad. My Lord,

Give me your griefs: you are an innocent,
A soul as white as heaven: let not my sins
Perish your noble youth: I do not fall here
To shadow by dissembling with my tears,
As all say women can, or to make less
What my hot will hath done, which heaven and you
Knows to be tougher than the hand of time
Can cut from mans remembrance; no I do not;
I do appear the same, the same Evadne,
Drest in the shapes I liv'd in, the same monster.
But these are names of honour, to what I am;
I do present my self the foulest creature,
Most poysonous, dangerous, and despis'd of men,
Lerna e're bred, or Nilus; I am hell,
Till you, my dear Lord, shoot your light into me,
The beams of your forgiveness: I am soul-sick,
And whither with the fear of one condemn'd,
Till I have got your pardon. Amin. Rise Evadne.

Those heavenly powers that put this good into thee,
Grant a continuance of it : I forgive thee ;
Make thy self worthy of it, and take heed,
Take heed Evadne this be serious ;
Mock not the powers above, that can and dare
Give thee a great example of their justice
To all ensuing eyes, if thou plaist
With thy repentance, the best sacrifice.

Evad. I have done nothing good to win belief,
My life hath been so faithless ; all the creatures
Mads for heavens honours have their ends, and good ones,
All but the coufening Grocodiles, false women ;
They reign here like those plagues, those killing fores
Men pray against ; and when they die, like tales
Ill told, and unbeliev'd, they pass away,
And go to dust forgotten : But my Lord,
Those short dayes I shall number to my rest,
(As many must not see me) shall though too late,
Though in my evening, yet perceive a will,
Since I can do no good because a woman,
Reach constantly at some thing that is near it ;
I will redeem one minute of my age,
Or like another Njobe Ple weep till I am water.

Amin. I am now dissolved :
My frozen soul melts : may each sin thou hast,
Find a new mercy : Rise, I am at peace :
Hadst thou been thus, thus excellently good,
Before that devil King tempted thy frailty,
Sure thou hadst made a star : give me thy hand ;
From this time I will know thee, and as far
As honour gives me leave, be thy Amintor :
When we meet next, I will salute thee fairly,
And pray the gods to give thee happy dayes :
My charity shall go along with thee,
Though my embraces must be far from thee.
I should ha' kill'd thee, but this sweet repentance
Locks up my vengeance, for which thus I kiss thee,
The last kiss we must take ; and would to heaven
The holy Priest that gave our hands together,
Had given us equal Vertues ; go Evadne,
The gods thus part our bodies, have a care
My honour falls no farther, I am well then.

Evad. All the dear joyes here, and above hereafter
Crown thy fair soul : thus I take leave my Lord,
And never shall you see the foul Evadne
Till sh'ave tryed all honoured means that may Set her in rest, and wash her stains away. [Exeunt.]

Banquet. Enter King, Calianax. Hoboyes play within.

King. I cannot tell how I should credit this
From you that are his enemy.

Cal. I am sure he said it to me, and Ple justifie it
What way he dares oppose, but with my sword.

King. But did he break without all circumstance
To you his foe, that he would have the Fort
To kill me, and then escape ?

Cal. If he deny it, Ple make him blush.

King. It sounds incredibly.

Cal. I, so does every thing I say of late.

King. Not so Calianax. Cal. Yes, I should fit
Mute, whilst a Rogue with strong arms cuts your throat.

King. Well, I will try him, and if this be true
Ple pawn my life Ple find it ; if't be false,
And that you clothe your hate in such a lie,
You shall hereafter doat in your own house, not in the Court.

Cal. Why if it be a lie,
Mine ears are false ; for Ple be sworn I heard it :
Old men are good for nothing ; you were best
Put me to death for hearing, and free him
For meaning of it ; you would ha' trusted me
Once, but the time is altered. (world ;

King. And will still where I may do with justice to the
You have no witness. Cal. Yes, my self.

King. No more I mean there were that heard it,

Cal. How no more ? would you have more ? why am
Not I enough to hang a thousand Rogues ?

King. But so you may hang honest men too if you please.

Cal. I may, 'tis like I will do so ; there are a hundred will swear it for a need too, if I say it.

King. Such witnesses we need not. (knave.

Cal. And 'tis hard if my Word cannot hang a boysterous

King. Enough ; where's Strato ? Stra. Sir !

Enter Strato.

King. Why where's all the company ? call Amintor in.
Evadne, where's my Brother, and Melantius ?

Bid him come too, and Diphilus ; call all [Exit Strato.

That are without there : if he should desire
The combat of you, 'tis not in the power
Of all our Laws to hinder it, unless we mean to quit 'em.

Cal. Why if you do think
'Tis fit an old Man and a Counsellor,
To fight for what he sayes, then you may grant it.

Enter Amin. Evad. Mel. Diph. Lipsi. Cle. Stra. Diag.

King. Come Sirs, Amintor thou art yet a Bridegroom,
And I will use thee so : thou shalt sit down ;
Evadne sit, and you Amintor too ;
This Banquet is for you, sir : Who has brought
A merry Tale about him, to raise a laughter
Amongst our wine ? why Strato, where art thou ?
Thou wilt chop out with them unseasonably
When I desire 'em not.

Strato. 'Tis my ill luck Sir, so to spend them then.

King. Reach me a bowl of wine : Melantius, thou art sad.

Amin. I should be Sir the merriest here,
But I ha' ne're a story of mine own
Worth telling at this time.

King. Give me the Wine.

Melantius, I am now considering
How easie 'twere for any man we trust
To poyson one of us in such a bowl.

Mel. I think it were not hard Sir, for a Knave.

Cal. Such as you are.

King. I' faith 'twere easie, it becomes us well
To get plain dealing men about our selves,
Such as you all are here : Amintor, to thee
And to thy fair Evadne.

Mel. Have you thought of this Calianax ? [Aside.]

Cal. Yes marry have I.

Mel. And what's your resolution ?

Cal. Ye shall have it soundly ?

King. Reach to Amintor, Strato. Amin. Here my love,
This Wine will do thee wrong, for it will set
Blushes upon thy cheeks, and till thou dost a fault, 'twere pity.

King. Yet I wonder much
Of the strange desperation of these men,
That dare attempt such acts here in our State ;
He could not escape that did it.

Mel. Were he known, impossible.

King. It would be known, Melantius.

Mel. It ought to be, if he got then away
He must wear all our lives upon his sword,
He need not fly the Island, he must leave no one alive.

King. No, I should think no man
Could kill me and scape clear, but that old man.

Cal. But I ! heaven blefs me : I, should I my Liege ?

King. I do not think thou wouldst, but yet thou might'st,
For thou hast in thy hands the means to scape, (well,
By keeping of the Fort ; he has, Melantius, and he has kept it

Mel. From cobwebs Sir,
'Tis clean swept : I can find no other Art (ed.
In keeping of it now, 'twas ne're besieg'd since he command-

Cal. I shall be sure of your good word,
But I have kept it safe from such as you.

Mel. Keep your ill temper in, (much.
I speak no malice ; had my brother kept it I should ha' said as King. You are not merry, brother ; drink wine,

Sit you all still ! Calianax, [Aside.]

I cannot

I cannot trust thus: I have thrown out words
That would have fetcht warm blood upon the cheeks
Of guilty men, and he is never mov'd, he knows no such thing.

Cal. Impudence may scape, when feeble vertue is accus'd.

King. He must, if he were guilty, feel an alteration
At this our whisper, whilst we point at him,
You see he does not. Cal. Let him hang himself,
What care I what he does; this he did say.

King. Melantius, you cannot easily conceive
What I have meant; for men that are in fault
Can subtly apprehend when others aime
At what they do amiss; but I forgive
Freely before this man; heaven do so too:
I will not touch thee so much as with shame
Of telling it, let it be so no more.

Cal. Why this is very fine. Mel. I cannot tell
What 'tis you mean, but I am apt enough
Rudely to thrust into ignorant fault,
But let me know it; happily 'tis nought
But misconstruction, and where I am clear
I will not take forgiveness of the gods, much less of you.

King. Nay if you stand so stiff, I shall call back my mercy.

Mel. I want smoothness

To thank a man for pardoning of a crime I never knew.

King. Not to instruct your knowledge, but to shew you my ears are every where, you meant to kill me, and get the Fort to scape.

Mel. Pardon me Sir; my bluntness will be pardoned:
You preserve

A race of idle people here about you,
Eaters, and talkers, to defame the worth
Of those that do things worthy; the man that uttered this
Had perisht without food, be't who it will,
But for this arm that fenc't him from the foe.
And if I thought you gave a faith to this,
The plainness of my nature would speak more;
Give me a pardon (for you ought to do't)
To kill him that spake this.

Cal. I, that will be the end of all,
Then I am fairly paid for all my care and service.

Mel. That old man who calls me enemy, and of whom I
(Though I will never match my hate so low)
Have no good thought, would yet I think excuse me,
And swear he thought me wrong'd in this.

Cal. Who I, thou shameless fellow! didst thou not speak to me of it thy self?

Mel. O then it came from him.

Cal. From me! who should it come from but from me?

Mel. Nay, I believe your malice is enough,
But I ha' lost my anger. Sir, I hope you are well satisfied.

King. Lisp. Chear Aminor and his Lady; there's no sound
Comes from you; I will come and do't my self.

Amin. You have done already Sir for me, I thank you.

King. Melantius, I do credit this from him,
How slight so e're you mak't.

Mel. 'Tis strange you should.

Cal. 'Tis strange he should believe an old mans word,
That never lied in his life.

Mel. I talk not to thee;
Shall the wild words of this distempered man,
Frantick with age and sorrow, make a breach
Betwixt your Majesty and me? 'twas wrong
To hearken to him; but to credit him
As much, at least, as I have power to bear.
But pardon me, whilst I speak only truth,
I may commend my self—I have bestow'd
My careless blood with you, and should be loth
To think an action that would make me lose
That, and my thanks too: when I was a-boy,
I thrust my self into my Countries cause,
And did a deed that pluckt five years from time,
And fill'd me man then: And for you my King,
Your subjects all have sed by vertue of my arm.
This sword of mine hath plow'd the ground;

And reap the fruit in peace;
And your self have liv'd at home in ease:
So terrible I grew, that without swords
My name hath fetcht you conquest, and my heart
And limbs are still the same; my will is great
To do you service: let me not be paid
With such a strange distrust.

King. Melantius, I held it great injustice to believe
Thine Enemy, and did not; if I did,
I do not, let that satisfie: what struck
With sadness all? More Wine!

Cal. A few fine words have overthrown my truth:
Ah th'art a Villain.

Mel. Why thou wert better let me have the Fort,
Dotard, I will disgrace thee thus for ever; [Aside.]
There shall no credit lie upon thy words;
Think better and deliver it.

Cal. My Liege, he's at me now agen to do it; speak,
Deny it if thou canst; examine him
Whilst he's hot, for he'l cool agen, he will forswear it.

King. This is lunacy I hope, Melantius.

Mel. He hath lost himself

Much since his Daughter mist the happiness
My Sister gain'd; and though he call me Foe, I pity him.

Cal. Pity! a pox upon you.

King. Mark his disorder'd words, and at the Mask.

Mel. Diagoras knows he raged, and rail'd at me,
And cal'd a Lady Whore, so innocent
She understood him not; but it becomes
Both you and me too, to forgive distraction,
Pardon him as I do.

Cal. I'll not speak for thee, for all thy cunning, if you will be safe chop off his head, for there was never known so impudent a Rascal.

King. Some that love him, get him to bed: Why, pity should not let age make it self contemptible; we must be all old, have him away.

Mel. Calianax, the King believes you; come, you shall go
Home, and rest; you ha' done well; you'l give it up
When I have us'd you thus a moneth I hope.

Cal. Now, now, 'tis plain Sir, he does move me still;
He sayes he knows I'll give him up the Fort,
When he has us'd me thus a moneth: I am mad,
Am I not still? Omnes. Ha, ha, ha!

Cal. I shall be mad indeed, if you do thus;
Why would you trust a sturdy fellow there
(That has no vertue in him, all's in his sword)
Before me? do but take his weapons from him,
And he's an Ass, and I am a very fool,
Both with him, and without him, as you use me.

Omnes. Ha, ha, ha!

King. 'Tis well Calianax; but if you use
This once again, I shall intreat some other
To see your Offices be well discharg'd.

Be merry Gentlemen, it grows somewhat late.

Aminor; thou wouldst be abed again. Amin. Yes Sir.

King. And you Evadne; let me take thee in my arms, Melantius, and believe thou art as thou deservest to be, my friend still, and for ever. Good Calianax,
Sleep soundly, it will bring thee to thy self.

[Exit omnes. Manent Mel. and Cal.]

Cal. Sleep soundly! I sleep soundly now I hope,
I could not be thus else. How dar'st thou stay
Alone with me, knowing how thou hast used me?

Mel. You cannot blast me with your tongue,
And that's the strongest part you have about you.

Cal. I do look for some great punishment for this,
For I begin to forget all my hate,
And tak't unkindly that mine enemy
Should use me so extraordinarily scurvily.

Mel. I shall melt too, if you begin to take Unkindnesses: I never meant you hurt.

Cal. Thou'lt anger me again; thou wretched rogue,
Meant me no hurt! disgrace me with the King;

Lose all my Offices! this is no hurt.

Is it? I prethee what dost thou call hurt?

Mel. To poyson men because they love me not;
To call the credit of mens Wives in question;
To murder children betwixt me and land; this is all hurt.

Cal. All this thou think't is sport;
For mine is worse: but use thy will with me;
For betwixt grief and anger I could cry.

Mel. Be wise then, and be safe; thou may'st revenge.

Cal. I o'th' King? I would revenge of thee.

Mel. That you must plot your self.

Cal. I am a fine plotter.

Mel. The short is, I will hold thee with the King

In this perplexity, till peevishness
And thy disgrace have laid thee in thy grave:

But if thou wilt deliver up the Fort,
P'le take thy trembling body in my arms, (state.
And bear thee over dangers; thou shalt hold thy wanted

Cal. If I should tell the King, can'st thou deny't again?

Mel. Try and believe.

Cal. Nay then, thou can'st bring any thing about:
Thou shalt have the Fort.

Mel. Why well, here let our hate be buried, and
This hand shall right us both; give me thy aged breast to compass.

Cal. Nay, I do not love thee yet:
I cannot well endure to look on thee:

And if I thought it were a courtesie,
Thou should'st not have it: but I am disgrac'd;
My Offices are to be ta'ne away;
And if I did but hold this Fort a day,
I do believe the King would take it from me,
And give it thee, things are so strangely carried;
Nere thank me for't; but yet the King shall know
There was some such thing in't I told him of;
And that I was an honest man.

Mel. Hee'l buy that knowledge very dearly.

Enter Diphilus.

What news with thee?

Diph. This were a night indeed to do it in;
The King hath sent for her.

Mel. She shall perform it then; go Diphilus,
And take from this good man, my worthy friend,
The Fort; he'l give it thee.

Diph. Ha' you got that?

Cal. Art thou of the same breed? canst thou deny
This to the King too?

Diph. With a confidence as great as his.

Cal. Faith, like enough.

Mel. Away, and use him kindly.

Cal. Touch not me, I hate the whole strain: if thou follow me a great way off, P'le give thee up the Fort; and hang your selves.

Mel. Be gone.

Diph. He's finely wrought. [Exeunt Cal. Diph.]

Mel. This is a night in spite of Astronomers
To do the deed in; I will wash the stain
That rests upon our House, off with his blood.

Enter Amintor.

Amin. Melantius, now assist me if thou beest
That which thou say'st, assist me: I have lost (me.
All my distempers, and have found a rage so pleasing; help

Mel. Who can see him thus,
And not swear vengeance? what's the matter friend?

Amin. Out with thy sword; and hand in hand with me
Rush to the Chamber of this hated King,
And sink him with the weight of all his sins to hell for ever.

Mel. 'Twere a rash attempt,
Not to be done with safety: let your reason
Plot your revenge, and not your passion.

Amin. If thou refuseth me in these extremes,
Thou art no friend: he sent for her to me;

By Heaven to me; my self; and I must tell ye
I love her as a stranger; there is worth
In that vile woman, worthy things, Melantius;
And she repents. P'le do't my self alone,
Though I be slain. Farewell.

Mel. He'l overthrow my whole design with madnes:
Amintor. I think what thou doest; I dare as much as valour;
But 'tis the King, the King, the King, Amintor,
With whom thou fightest; I know he's honest, [Aside.]
And this will work with him.

Amint. I cannot tell
What thou hast said; but thou hast charm'd my sword
Out of my hand, and left me shaking here defenceless.

Mel. I will take it up for thee.

Amint. What a wild beast is uncollected man!
The thing that we call Honour, bears us all
Headlong unto sin, and yet it self is nothing.

Mel. Alas, how variable are thy thoughts!

Amint. Just like my fortunes: I was run to that I purpos'd to have chid thee for.
Some Plot I did distrust thou hadst against the King
By that old fellows carriage: but take heed,
There is not the least limb growing to a King,
But carries thunder in it.

Mel. I have none against him.

Amint. Why? come then, and still remember we may not think revenge.

Mel. I will remember.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Evadne and a Gentleman.

EVAD. Sir, is the King abed?

Gent. Madam, an hour ago.

Evad. Give me the key then, and let none be near;
'Tis the Kings pleasure.

Gent. I understand you Madam, would 'twere mine.
I must not wish good rest unto your Ladiship.

Evad. You talk, you talk.

Gent. 'Tis all I dare do, Madam; but the King will wake, and then.

Evad. Saving your imagination, pray good night Sir.

Gent. A good night be it then, and a long one Madam;
I am gone.

Evad. The night grows horrible, and all about me
Like my black purpose: O the Conscience [King abed.]
Of a lost Virgin; whither wilt thou pull me?

To what things dismal, as the depth of Hell,
Wilt thou provoke me? Let no man dare
From this hour be disloyal: if her heart
Be flesh, if she have blood, and can fear, 'tis a daring
Above that desperate fool that left his peace,
And went to Sea to fight: 'tis so many sins
An age cannot prevent 'em: and so great,
The gods want mercy for: yet I must through 'em.

I have begun a slaughter on my honour,
And I must end it there: he sleeps, good heavens!
Why give you peace to this untemperate beast
That hath so long transgressed you? I must kill him,

And I will do't bravely: the meer joy
Tells me I merit in it: yet I must not Thus tamely do it as he sleeps: that were
To rock him to another world: my vengeance
Shall take him waking, and then lay before him
The number of his wrongs and punishments.

I'll shake his sins like furies, till I waken
His evil Angel, his sick Conscience:

And then I'll strike him dead: King, by your leave: [Ties his armes to the bed.]

I dare not trust your strength: your Grace and I
Must grapple upon even terms no more:

So, if he rail me not from my resolution,

I shall

I shall be strong enough.

My Lord the King, my Lord; he sleeps
As if he meant to wake no more, my Lord;
Is he not dead already? Sir, my Lord.

King. Who's that?

Evad. O you sleep soundly Sir!

King. My dear Evadne,
I have been dreaming of thee; come to bed.

Evad. I am come at length Sir, but how welcome?

King. What pretty new device is this Evadne?
What do you tie me to you by my love?
This is a quaint one: Come my dear and kiss me;
I'll be thy Mars to bed my Queen of Love:
Let us be caught together, that the Gods may see,
And envy our embraces.

Evad. Stay Sir, stay,
You are too hot, and I have brought you Physick
To temper your high veins.

King. Prethee to bed then; let me take it warm,
There you shall know the state of my body better.

Evad. I know you have a surfcited foul body,
And you must bleed.

King. Bleed!

Evad. I, you shall bleed: lie still, and if the Devil,
Your lust will give you leave, repent: this steel
Comes to redeem the honour that you stole,
King, my fair name, which nothing but thy death
Can answer to the world.

King. How's this Evadne?

Evad. I am not she: nor bear I in this breast
So much cold Spirit to be call'd a Woman:
I am a Tyger: I am any thing
That knows not pity: stir not, if thou dost,
I'll take thee unprepar'd; thy fears upon thee,
That make thy sins look double, and so send thee
(By my revenge I will) to look those torments
Prepar'd for such black souls.

King. Thou dost not mean this; 'tis impossible:
Thou art too sweet and gentle.

Evad. No, I am not:

I am as foul as thou art, and can number
As many such hells here: I was once fair,
Once I was lovely, not a blowing Rose
More chafly sweet, till thou, thou, thou, foul Canker,
(Stir not) didst poyson me: I was a world of vertue,
Till your curst Court and you (hell blest you for't)
With your temptations on temptations
Made me give up mine honour; for which (King)
I am come to kill thee.

King. No. Evad. I am.

King. Thou art not.

I prethee speak not these things; thou art gentle,
And wert not meant thus rugged.

Evad. Peace and hear me.

Stir nothing but your tongue, and that for mercy
To those above us; by whose lights I vow,
Those blessed fires that shot to see our sin,
If thy hot soul had substance with thy blood,
I would kill that too, which being past my steel,
My tongue shall teach: Thou art a shameless Villain,
A thing out of the overchange of Nature;
Sent like a thick cloud to disperse a plague
Upon weak catching women; such a tyrant
That for his Lust would sell away his Subjects,
I, all his heaven hereafter.

King. Hear Evadne,

Thou soul of sweetness! hear, I am thy King. (you,

Evad. Thou art my shame; lie still, there's none about Within your cries; all promises of safety
Are but deluding dreams: thus, thus, thou foul man,
Thus I begin my vengeance. [Stabs him.

King. Hold Evadne!

I do command thee hold.

Evad. I do not mean Sir,

To part so fairly with you; we must change
More of these love-tricks yet.

King. What bloody villain
Provok't thee to this murder?

Evad. Thou, thou monster. . . King. Oh!

Evad. Thou kept'st me brave at Court, and Whor'd me;
Then married me to a young noble Gentleman;
And Whor'd me still.

King. Evadne, pity me.

Evad. Hell take me then; this for my Lord Amintor;
This for my noble brother: and this stroke
For the most wrong'd of women. [Kills him.

King. Oh! I die.

Evad. Die all our faults together; I forgive thee. [Exit.

Enter two of the Bed-Chamber.

1. Come now she's gone, let's enter, the King expects it, and will be angry.

2. 'Tis a fine wench, we'll have a snap at her one of these nights as she goes from him.

1. Content: how quickly he had done with her! I see
Kings can do no more that way than other mortal people.

2. How fast he is! I cannot hear him breathe. (pale.

1. Either the Tapers give a feeble light, or he looks very

2. And so he does, pray Heaven he be well.

Let's look: Alas! he's stiffe, wounded and dead:
Treason, Treason!

1. Run forth and call.

[Exit Gent.

2. Treason, Treason!

1. This will be laid on us: who can believe
A Woman could do this?

Enter Cleon and Lisippus.

Cleon. How now, where's the Traytor?

1. Fled, fled away; but there her woful act lies still.

Cle. Her act! a Woman!

Lif. Where's the body?

1. There.

Lif. Farewel thou worthy man; there were two bonds
That tyed our loves, a Brother and a King;
The least of which might fetch a flood of tears:
But such the misery of greatness is,
They have no time to mourn; then pardon me.
Sirs, which way went she? [Enter Strato.

Strat. Never follow her,

For she alas! was but the instrument.
News is now brought in, that Melantius
Has got the Fort, and stands upon the wall;
And with a loud voice calls those few that pass
At this dead time of night, delivering
The innocent of this act.

Lif. Gentlemen, I am your King.

Strat. We do acknowledge it.

Lif. I would I were not: follow all; for this must have a sudden stop. [Exeunt.

Enter Melant. Diph. and Cal. on the wall.

Mel. If the dull people can believe I am arm'd,
Be constant Diphilus; now we have time,
Either to bring our banisht honours home,
Or create new ones in our ends.

Diph. I fear not;

My spirit lies not that way. Courage Calianax.

Cal. Would I had any, you should quickly know it.

Mel. Speak to the people; thou art eloquent.

Cal. 'Tis a fine eloquence to come to the gallows;
You were born to be my end; the Devil take you.
Now must I hang for company; 'tis strange
I should be old, and neither wise nor valiant.

Enter Lifip. Diag. Cleon, Strat. Guard.

Lifip. See where he stands as boldly confident,
As if he had his full command about him.

Strat. He looks as if he had the better cause; Sir,

Under your gracious pardon let me speak it;
Though he be mighty-spirited and forward
To all great things; to all things of that danger
Worse men shake at the telling of; yet certainly
I do believe him noble, and this action
Rather pul'd on than fought; his mind was ever
As worthy as his hand.

Lis. 'Tis my fear too;

Heaven forgive all: summon him Lord Cleon.

Cleon. Ho from the walls there.

Mel. Worthy Cleon, welcome;

We could have wisht you here Lord; you are honest.

Cal. Well, thou art as flattering a knave, though I dare not tell you so. [Aside.]

Lis. Melantius!

Mel. Sir,

Lis. I am sorry that we meet thus; our old love
Never requir'd such distance; pray Heaven
You have not left your self, and fought this safety
More out of fear than honour; you have lost
A noble Master, which your faith Melantius,
Some think might have preserv'd; yet you know best.

Cal. When time was I was mad; some that dares
Fight I hope will pay this Rascal.

Mel. Royal young man, whose tears look lovely on thee;
Had they been shed for a deserving one,
They had been lasting monuments. Thy Brother,
Whil't he was good, I call'd him King, and serv'd him
With that strong faith, that most unwearied valour;
Pul'd people from the farthest Sun to seek him;
And by his friendship, I was then his souldier;
But since his hot pride drew him to disgrace me,
And brand my noble actions with his lust,
(That never cur'd dishonour of my Sister,
Base stain of Whore; and which is worse,
The joy to make it still so) like my self;
Thus have I flung him off with my allegiance,
And stand here mine own justice to revenge
What I have suffered in him; and this old man
Wrong'd almost to lunacy.

Cal. Who I? you'd draw me in: I have had no wrong,
I do disclaim ye all.

Mel. The short is this;
'Tis no ambition to lift up my self,
Urgeth me thus; I do desire again
To be a subject, so I may be freed;
If not, I know my strength, and will unbuild
This goodly Town; be speedy, and be wise, in a reply.

Sirat. Be sudden Sir to tie
All again; what's done is past recal,
And past you to revenge; and there are thousands
That wait for such a troubled hour as this;
Throw him the blank.

Lis. Melantius, write in that thy choice,
My Seal is at it.

Mel. It was our honour drew us to this act,
Not gain; and we will only work our pardon.

Cal. Put my name in too.

Diph. You disclaim'd us but now, Calianax.

Cal. That's all one;

Ple not be hanged hereafter by a trick;
Ple have it in.

Mel. You shall, you shall;
Come to the back gate, and we'll call you King,
And give you up the Fort.

Lis. Away, away.

[Exeunt Omnes.]

Enter Aspatia in mans apparel.

Asp. This is my fatal hour; heaven may forgive
My rash attempt, that causelessly hath laid
Griefs on me that will never let me rest:
And put a Womans heart into my breast;
It is more honour for you that I die;
For she that can endure the misery

That I have on me, and be patient too,
May live, and laugh at all that you can do.
God save you Sir. [Enter Servant.]

Ser. And you Sir; what's your business?

Asp. With you Sir now, to do me the Office
To help me to you Lord.

Ser. What, would you serve him?

Asp. I'll do him any service; but to haste,
For my affairs are earnest, I desire to speak with him.

Ser. Sir, because you are in such haste, I would be loth delay you any longer: you cannot.

Asp. It shall become you tho' to tell your Lord.

Ser. Sir, he will speak with no body.

Asp. This is most strange: art thou gold proof? there's for thee; help me to him.

Ser. Pray be not angry Sir, I'll do my best. [Exit.]

Asp. How stubbornly this fellow answer'd me!
There is a vile dishonest trick in man,
More than in women: all the men I meet
Appear thus to me, are harsh and rude,
And have a subtilty in every thing,
Which love could never know; but we fond women
Harbor the easiest and smoothest thoughts,
And think all shall go so; it is unjust
That men and women should be matcht together.

Enter Amintor and his man.

Amint. Where is he!

Ser. There my Lord.

Amint. What would you Sir?

Asp. Please it your Lordship to command your man
Out of the room; I shall deliver things
Worthy your hearing.

Amint. Leave us.

Asp. O that that shape should bury falsehood in it. [Aside.]

Amint. Now your will Sir.

Asp. When you know me, my Lord, you needs must guess
My business! and I am not hard to know;
For till the change of War mark'd this smooth face
With these few blemishes, people would call me
My Sisters Picture, and her mine; in short,
I am the brother to the wrong'd Aspatia.

Amint. The wrong'd Aspatia! would thou wert so too
Unto the wrong'd Amintor; let me kiss
That hand of thine in honour that I bear
Unto the wrong'd Aspatia: here I stand
That did it; would he could not; gentle youth,
Leave me, for there is something in thy looks
That calls my sins in a most hideous form
Into my mind; and I have grief enough
Without thy help.

Asp. I would I could with credit:
Since I was twelve years old I had not seen
My Sister till this hour; I now arriv'd;
She sent for me to see her Marriage,
A woful one: but they that are above,
Have ends in every thing; she us'd few words,
But yet enough to make me understand
The baseness of the injury you did her;
That little training I have had, is War;
I may behave my self rudely in Peace;
I would not though; I shall not need to tell you
I am but young; and you would be loth to lose
Honour that is not easily gain'd again;
Fairly I mean to deal; the age is strict
For single combats, and we shall be stopt
If it be publish't: if you like your sword,
Use it; if mine appear a better to you,
Change; for the ground is this, and this the time
To end our difference.

Amint. Charitable youth,
If thou be'st such, think not I will maintain
So strange a wrong; and for thy Sisters sake,
Know that I could not think that desperate thing

I durst not do ; yet to enjoy this world
I would not see her ; for beholding thee,
I am I know not what ; if I have ought
That may content thee, take it and be gone ;
For death is not so terrible as thou ;
Thine eyes shoot guilt into me.

Asp. Thus she swore
Thou would'st behave thy self, and give me words
That would fetch tears into mine eyes, and so
Thou dost indeed ; but yet she bade me watch,
Lest I were coufen'd, and be sure to fight ere I return'd.

Amint. That must not be with me ;
For her I'll die directly, but against her will never hazard it.

Asp. You must be urg'd ; I do not deal uncivilly with those Dare to fight ; but such a one as you (that Must be us'd thus. [She strikes him.]

Amint. Prethee youth take heed ;
Thy Sister is a thing to me so much
Above mine honour, that I can endure
All this ; good gods — a blow I can endure ;
But stay not, lest thou draw a timely death upon thy self.

Asp. Thou art some prating fellow,
One that hath studied out a trick to talk
And move soft-hearted people ; to be kickt, [She kicks him.
Thus to be kickt — why should he be so slow [Aside.

In giving me my death ? Amint. A man can bear
No more and keep his flesh ; forgive me then ;
I would endure yet if I could ; now shew
The spirit thou pretendest, and understand
Thou hast no honour to live : [They fight.

What dost thou mean ? thou canst not fight :
The blows thou mak'st at me are quite besides ;
And those I offer at thee, thou spread'st thine arms,
And tak'st upon thy breast, Alas ! defenceless.

Asp. I have got enough,
And my desire ; there's no place so fit for me to die as here.

Enter Evadne.

Evad. Amintor ; I am loaden with events
That flie to make thee happy ; I have joyes [Her hands
That in a moment can call back thy wrongs, bloody with
And settle thee in thy free state again ; a knife.

It is Evadne still that follows thee, but not her mischiefs.
Amint. Thou canst not fool me to believe agen ;
But thou hast looks and things so full of news that I am staid.

Evad. Noble Amintor, put off thy amaze ;
Let thine eyes loose, and speak, am I not fair ?
Looks not Evadne beauteous with these rites now ?
Were those hours half so lovely in thine eyes,
When our hands met before the holy man ?
I was too foul within to look fair then ;
Since I knew ill, I was not free till now.

Amint. There is preface of some important thing
About thee, which it seems thy tongue hath lost :
Thy hands are bloody, and thou hast a knife.

Evad. In this consists thy happiness and mine ;
Joy to Amintor, for the King is dead.

Amint. Those have most power to hurt us that we love,
We lay our sleeping lives within their arms.
Why ? thou hast rais'd up mischief to this height,
And found out one to out-name thy other faults ;
Thou hast no intermission of thy sins,
But all thy life is a continual ill ;
Black is thy colour now, disease thy nature.
Joy to Amintor ! thou hast touch't a life,
The very name of which had power to chain
Up all my rage, and calm my wildest wrongs.

Evad. 'Tis done ; and since I could not find a way
To meet thy love so clear, as through his life,
I cannot now repent it.

Amint. Could'st thou procure the Gods to speak to me,
To bid me love this woman, and forgive,
I think I should fall out with them ; behold
Here lies a youth whose wounds bleed in my breast ;

Sent by his violent Fate to fetch his death
From my slow hand : and to augment my woe,
You now are present stain'd with a Kings blood
Violently shed : this keeps night here,
And throws an unknown wilderness about me.

Asp. Oh, oh, oh ! Amint. No more, pursue me not.
Evad. Forgive me then, and take me to thy bed.

We may not part.

Amint. Forbear, be wise, and let my rage go this way.

Evad. 'Tis you that I would stay, not it.

Amint. Take heed, it will return with me.

Evad. If it must be, I shall not fear to meet it ; take me home.

Amint. Thou monster of cruelty, forbear.

Evad. For heavens sake look more calm ;

Thine eyes are sharper than thou canst make thy sword :

Amint. Away, away, thy knees are more to me than violence.

I am worse than sick to see knees follow me

For that I must not grant ; for heavens sake stand.

Evad. Receive me then.

Amint. I dare not stay thy language ;

In midst of all my anger and my grief,

Thou dost awake something that troubles me,

And sayes I lov'd thee once ; I dare not stay ;

There is no end of womens reasoning. [Leaves her.

Evad. Amintor, thou shalt love me once again ;

Go, I am calm ; farewell ; and peace for ever.

Evadne whom thou hat'st will die for thee. [Kills her self.

Amint. I have a little humane nature yet

That's left for thee, that bids me stay thy hand. [Returns.

Evad. Thy hand was welcome, but came too late ;

Oh I am lost ! the heavy sleep makes haste. [She dies.

Asp. Oh, oh, oh !

Amint. This earth of mine doth tremble, and I feel

A stark affrighted motion in my blood ;

My soul grows weary of her house, and I

All over am a trouble to my self ;

There is some hidden power in these dead things

That calls my flesh into'em ; I am cold ;

Be resolute, and bear'em company :

There's something yet which I am loth to leave.

There's man enough in me to meet the fears

That death can bring, and yet would it were done ;

I can find nothing in the whole discourse

Of death, I durst not meet the boldest way ;

Yet still betwixt the reason and the act,

The wrong I to Aspasia did stands up,

I have not such a fault to answer,

Though she may justly arm with scorn

And hate of me, my soul will part less troubled,

When I have paid to her in tears my sorrow :

I will not leave this act unsatisfied,

If all that's left in me can answer it.

Asp. Was it a dream ? there stands Amintor still :

Or I dream still.

Amint. How dost thou ? speak, receive my love, and help :

Thy blood climbs up to his old place again :

There's hope of thy recovery.

Asp. Did you not name Aspasia ? Amint. I did.

Asp. And talkt of tears and sorrow unto her ?

Amint. 'Tis true, and till these happy signs in thee

Did stay my course, 'twas thither I was going.

Asp. Th'art there already, and these wounds are hers :

Those threats I brought with me, sought not revenge, (yet.

But came to fetch this blessing from thy hand, I am Aspasia

Amint. Dare my soul ever look abroad agen ?

Asp. I shall live Amintor ; I am well :

A kind of healthful joy wanders within me.

Amint. The world wants lines to excuse thy loss :

Come let me bear thee to some place of help.

Asp. Amintor thou must stay, I must rest here ;

My strength begins to disobey my will.

How dost thou my best soul ? I would fain live,

Now if I could : would'st thou have loved me then ?

Amint. Alas ! all that I am's not worth a hair from thee.

Asp. Give me thy hand, mine hands grope up and down,
And cannot find thee; I am wondrous sick:
Have I thy hand Amintor?

Amint. Thou greatest blessing of the world, thou hast.

Asp. I do believe thee better than my sense.

Oh! I must go, farewell.

Amint. She swounds: Aspatia help, for Heavens sake water;
Such as may chain life for ever to this frame.

Aspatia, speak: what no help? yet I fool,
I'll chafe her temples, yet there's nothing stirs;
Some hidden Power tell her that Amintor calls,
And let her answer me: Aspatia, speak.

I have heard, if there be life, but bow

The body thus, and it will shew it self.

Oh she is gone! I will not leave her yet.

Since out of justice we must challenge nothing;

I'll call it mercy if you'll pity me,

You heavenly powers, and lend for some few years,

The blessed soul to this fair seat agen.

No comfort comes, the gods deny me too.

I'll bow the body once agen: Aspatia!

The soul is fled for ever, and I wrong

My self, so long to lose her company.

Must I talk now? Here's to be with thee love. [Kills himself.]

Enter Servant.

Ser. This is a great grace to my Lord, to have the new King come to him; I must tell him, he is entring. O Heaven help, help;

Enter Lysip. Melant. Cal. Cleon. Diph. Strato.

Lys. Where's Amintor?

Strat. O there, there.

Lys. How strange is this!

Cal. What should we do here?

Mel. These deaths are such acquainted things with me,
That yet my heart dissolves not. May I stand
Stiff here for ever; eyes, call up your tears;
This is Amintor: heart he was my friend;
Melt, now it flows; Amintor, give a word
To call me to thee.

Amint. Oh!

Mel. Melantius calls his friend Amintor; Oh thy arms
Are kinder to me than thy tongue;
Speak, speak.

Amint. What?

Mel. That little word was worth all the sounds
That ever I shall hear agen.

Diph. O brother! here lies your Sister slain;
You lose your self in sorrow there.

Mel. Why Diphilus, it is
A thing to laugh at in respect of this;
Here was my Sister, Father, Brother, Son;
All that I had; speak once again;
What youth lies slain there by thee?

Amint. 'Tis Aspatia.

My senses fade, let me give up my soul
Into thy bosom.

Cal. What's that? what's that? Aspatia!

Mel. I never did repent the greatness of my heart till now;
It will not burst at need.

Cal. My daughter dead here too! and you have all fine new tricks to grieve, but I ne're knew any but direct crying.

Mel. I am a pratler, but no more.

Diph. Hold Brother.

Lysip. Stop him.

Diph. Fie; how unmanly was this offer in you!
Does this become our strain?

Cal. I know not what the matter is, but I am
Grown very kind, and am friends with you;
You have given me that among you will kill me
Quickly; but I'll go home, and live as long as I can.

Mel. His spirit is but poor that can be kept
From death for want of weapons.

Is not my hand a weapon good enough

To stop my breath? or if you tie down those,

I vow Amintor I will never eat,

Or drink, or sleep, or have to do with that

That may preserve life; this I swear to keep.

Lysip. Look to him tho', and bear those bodies in.

May this a fair example be to me,

To rule with temper: for on lustful Kings

Unlookt for sudden deaths from heaven are sent!

But curst is he that is their instrument.

Philaster:

PHILASTER

OR,

Love lies a Bleeding.

The Scene being in Cicilie.

Persons Represented in the Play.

The King.
Philaster, Heir to the Crown.
Pharamond, Prince of Spain.
Dion, a Lord.
Cleremont } Noble Gentlemen his Associates.
Thrafiline }
Arethusa, the Kings Daughter.
Galatea, a wise modest Lady attending the Princess.
Megra, a lascivious Lady.

An old wanton Lady, or Croan.
Another Lady attending the Princess.
Eufrafia, Daughter of Dion, but disguised like a Page, and called Bellario.
An old Captain.
Five Citizens.
A Countrey fellow.
Two Woodmen.
The Kings Guard and Train.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Dion, Cleremont, and Thrafiline.

Cler. Here's not Lords nor Ladies.
Dion. Credit me Gentlemen, I wonder at it. They receiv'd strict charge from the King to attend here: Besides it was boldly published, that no Officer should forbid any Gentlemen that desire to attend and hear.

Cle. Can you guess the cause?

Di. Sir, it is plain about the Spanish Prince, that's come to marry our Kingdoms Heir, and be our Sovereign.

Thra. Many (that will seem to know much) say, she looks not on him like a Maid in Love.

Di. O Sir, the multitude (that seldom know any thing but their own opinions) speak that they would have; but the Prince, before his own approach, receiv'd so many confident messages from the State, that I think she's resolv'd to be rul'd.

Cle. Sir, it is thought, with her he shall enjoy both these Kingdoms of Cicilie and Calabria.

Di. Sir, it is (without controversy) so meant. But 'twill be a troublesome labour for him to enjoy both these Kingdoms, with safety, the right Heir to one of them living, and living so vertuously, especially the people admiring the bravery of his mind, and lamenting his injuries.

Cle. Who, Philaster?

Di. Yes, whose Father we all know, was by our late King of Calabria, unrighteously deposed from his fruitful Cicilie. My self drew some blood in those Wars, which I would give my hand to be washed from.

Cle. Sir, my ignorance in State-policy, will not let me know why Philaster being Heir to one of these Kingdoms, the King should suffer him to walk abroad with such free liberty.

Di. Sir, it seems your nature is more constant than to enquire after State news. But the King (of late) made a hazard of both the Kingdoms, of Cicilie and his own, with offering but to imprison Philaster. At which the City was in arms; not to be charm'd down by any State-order or Proclamation; till they saw Philaster ride through the streets pleas'd, and without a guard; at which they threw their Hats, and their arms from them; some to make bonfires, some to drink, all for his deliverance. Which (wise men say) is the cause, the King labours to bring in the power of a Foreign Nation, to awe his own with.

Enter Galatea, Megra, and a Lady.

Thra. See, the Ladies, what's the first? (Princess.)

Di. A wise and modest Gentlewoman that attends the

Cle. The second?

Di. She is one that may stand still discreetly enough, and ill favour'dly Dance her Measure; simmer when she is Court-ed by her Friend, and slight her Husband.

Cle. The last?

Di. Marry I think she is one whom the State keeps for the Agents of our confederate Princes; she'll cog and lie with a whole Army before the League shall break: her name is common through the Kingdom, and the Trophies of her dishonour, advanced beyond Hercules-pillars. She loves to try the several constitutions of mens bodies; and indeed has destroyed the worth of her own body, by making experiment upon it, for the good of the Common-wealth.

Cle. She's a profitable member.

La. Peace, if you love me: you shall see these Gentlemen stand their ground, and not Court us.

Gal. What if they should?

Meg. What if they should?

La. Nay, let her alone; what if they should? why, if they should, I say, they were never abroad: what Foreigner would would do so? it writes them directly untravel'd.

Gal. Why, what if they be?

Meg. What if they be?

La. Good Madam let her go on; what if they be? Why if they be I will justify, they cannot maintain discourse with a judicious Lady, nor make a Leg, nor say Excuse me.

Gal. Ha, ha, ha. La. Do you laugh Madam?

Di. Your desires upon you Ladies.

La. Then you must sit beside us.

Di. I shall sit near you then Lady.

La. Near me perhaps: But there's a Lady indures no stranger; and to me you appear a very strange fellow.

Meg. Me thinks he's not so strange, he would quickly be acquainted. Thra. Peace, the King.

Enter King, Pharamond, Arethusa, and Train.

King. To give a stranger testimony of love
Than sickly promises (which commonly
In Princes find both birth and burial
In one breath) we have drawn you worthy Sir,
To make your fair indarments to your daughter,
And worthy services known to our subjects,
Now lov'd and wondered at. Next, our intent,
To plant you deeply, our immediate Heir,
Both to our Blood and Kingdoms. For this Lady,
(The best part of your life, as you confirm me,
And I believe) though her few years and sex
Yet teach her nothing but her fears and blushes,
Desires without desire, discourse and knowledge
Only of what her self is to her self,
Make her feel moderate health: and when she sleeps,
In making no ill day, knows no ill dreams.
Think not (dear Sir) these undivided parts,
That must mould up a Virgin, are put on
To shew her so, as borrowed ornaments,
To speak her perfect love to you, or add
An Artificial shadow to her nature:
No Sir; I boldly dare proclaim her, yet
No Woman. But woo her still, and think her modesty
A sweeter mistress than the offer'd Language
Of any Dame, were she a Queen whose eye
Speaks common loves and comforts to her servants.
Last, noble son, (for so I now must call you)
What I have done thus publick, is not only
To add a comfort in particular
To you or me, but all; and to confirm
The Nobles, and the Gentry of these Kingdoms,
By oath to your succession, which shall be Within this month at most.

Thra. This will be hardly done.

Cle. It must be ill done, if it be done.

Di. When 'tis at best, 'twill be but half done,
Whilst so brave a Gentleman's wrong'd and slung off.

Thra. I fear. Cle. Who does not?

Di. I fear not for my self, and yet I fear too:
Well, we shall see, we shall see: no more.

Pha. Kissing your white hand (Mistress) I take leave,
To thank your Royal Father: and thus far,
To be my own free Trumpet. Understand
Great King, and these your subjects, mine that must be,
(For so deserving you have spoke me Sir,
And so deserving I dare speak my self)
To what a person, of what eminence,
Ripe expectation of what faculties,
Manners and vertues you would wed your Kingdoms?
You in me have your wishes. Oh this Country,
By more than all my hopes I hold it
Happy, in their dear memories that have been Kings great and good, happy in yours, that is,
And from you (as a Chronicle to keep Your Noble name from eating age) do I
Opine my self most happy. Gentlemen,
Believe me in a word, a Princes word,
There shall be nothing to make up a Kingdom

Mighty, and flourishing, defenced, fear'd,
Equall to be commanded and obey'd,
But through the travels of my life I'll find it,
And tye it to this Country. And I vow
My reign shall be so easie to the subject,
That every man shall be his Prince himself,
And his own law (yet I his Prince and law.)
And dearest Lady, to your dearest self
(Dear, in the choice of him, whose name and lustre
Must make you more and mightier) let me say,
You are the blessed'st living; for sweet Princesses,
You shall enjoy a man of men, to be
Your servant; you shall make him yours, for whom Great Queens must die. Thra. Miraculous.
Cle. This speech calls him Spaniard, being nothing but
A large inventory of his own commendations.

Enter Philaster.

Di. I wonder what's his price? For certainly he'll tell himself he has so prais'd his shape: But here comes one more worthy those large speeches, than the large speaker of them? let me be swallowed quick, if I can find, in all the Anatomy of yon mans vertues, one sinew sound enough to promise for him, he shall be Constable. By this Sun, he'll ne're make King unless it be for trifles, in my poor judgment.

Phi. Right Noble Sir, as low as my obedience,
And with a heart as Loyal as my knee,
I beg your favour.

King. Rise, you have it Sir.

Di. Mark but the King how pale he looks with fear.
Oh! this same whorson Conscience, how it jades us!

King. Speak your intents Sir.

Phi. Shall I speak 'um freely?
Be still my royal Sovereign. King. As a subject
We give you freedom. Di. Now it heats.

Phi. Then thus I turn

My language to you Prince, you foreign man.
Ne're stare nor put on wonder, for you must Indure me, and you shall. This earth you tread upon
(A dowry as you hope with this fair Princess, Whose memory I bow to) was not left
By my dead Father (Oh, I had a Father)
To your inheritance, and I up and living,
Having my self about me and my sword,
The souls of all my name, and memories,
These arms and some few friends, besides the gods,
To part so calmly with it, and sit still,
And say I might have been! I tell thee Pharamond,
When thou art King, look I be dead and rotten,
And my name ashes; For, hear me Pharamond,
This very ground thou goest on, this fat earth,
My Fathers friends made fertile with their faiths,
Before that day of shame, shall gape and swallow
Thee and thy Nation, like a hungry grave,
Into her hidden bowels: Prince, it shall;
By Nemesis it shall. Pha. He's mad beyond cure, mad.

Di. Here's a fellow has some fire in's veins:
The outlandish Prince looks like a Tooth-drawer.

Phi. Sir, Prince of Poppingjayes, I'll make it well appear
To you I am not mad. King. You displease us.
You are too bold. Phi. No Sir, I am too tame,
Too much a Turtle, a thing born without passion,
A faint shadow, that every drunken cloud sails over,
And makes nothing. King. I do not fancy this,
Call our Physicians: sure he is somewhat tainted.

Thra. I do not think 'twill prove so.

Di. H'as given him a general purge already, for all the right he has, and now he means to let him blood: Be constant Gentlemen; by these hilts I'll run his hazard, although
I run my name out of the Kingdom.

Cle. Peace, we are one soul.

Pha. What you have seen in me, to stir offence,
I cannot find, unless it be this Lady
Offer'd into mine arms, with the succession,

Which

Which I must keep though it hath pleas'd your fury
To mutiny within you; without disputing
Your Genealogies, or taking knowledge
Whose branch you are. The King will leave it me;
And I dare make it mine; you have your answer.

Phi. If thou wert sole inheritor to him,
That made the world his; and couldst see no sun
Shine upon any but thine: were Pharamond
As truly valiant, as I feel him cold,
And ring'd among the choicest of his friends,
Such as would blush to talk such serious follies,
Or back such belliced commendations,
And from this present, spight of all these bugs,
You should hear further from me.

King. Sir, you wrong the Prince:
I gave you not this freedom to brave our best friends,
You deserve our frown: go to, be better temper'd.

Phi. It must be Sir, when I am nobler us'd.

Gal. Ladies,
This would have been a pattern of succession,
Had he ne're met this mischief. By my life,
He is the worthiest the true name of man
This day within my knowledge.

Meg. I cannot tell what you may call your knowledge,
But the other is the man set in mine eye;
Oh! 'tis a Prince of wax. Gal. A Dog it is.

King. Philaster, tell me,
The injuries you aim at in your riddles.

Phi. If you had my eyes Sir, and sufferance,
My griefs upon you and my broken fortunes,
My want's great, and now nought but hopes and fears,
My wrongs would make ill riddles to be laugh't at.
Dare you be still my King and right me not?

King. Give me your wrongs in private. [They whisper.]

Phi. Take them, and ease me of a load would bow strong

Cle. He dares not stand the shock. [Atlas.]

Di. I cannot blame him, there's danger in't. Every man in this age, has not a soul of Crystal for all men to read their actions through: mens hearts and faces are so far asunder, that they hold no intelligence. Do but view yon stranger well, and you shall see a fever through all his bravery, and feel him shake like a true Tenant; if he give not back his Crown again, upon the report of an Elder Gun, I have no augury. King. Go to:

Be more your self, as you respect our favour:
You'll stir us else: Sir, I must have you know
That y'are and shall be at our pleasure, what fashion we
Will put upon you: smooth your brow, or by the gods.

Phi. I am dead Sir, y'are my fate: it was not I
Said I was not wrong'd: I carry all about me,
My weak stars led me to all my weak fortunes.
Who dares in all this presence speak (that is
But man of flesh and may be mortal) tell me
I do not most intirely love this Prince,
And honour his full vertues! King. Sure he's possess't.

Phi. Yes, with my Fathers spirit: It's here O King!
A dangerous spirit; now he tells me King,
I was a Kings heir, bids me be a King,
And whispers to me, these be all my Subjects.
'Tis strange, he will not let me sleep, but dives
Into my fancy, and there gives me shapes
That kneel, and do me service, cry me King:
But I'll suppress him, he's a factious spirit,
And will undo me: noble Sir, hour hand, I am your servant.

King. Away, I do not like this:
I'll make you tamer, or I'll dispossess you
Both of life and spirit: For this time
I pardon your wild speech, without so much
As your imprisonment. [Ex. King, Pha. and Are.]

Di. I thank you Sir, you dare not for the people.

Gal. Ladies, what think you now of this brave fellow?

Meg. A pretty talking fellow, hot at hand; but eye yon stranger, is not he a fine compleat Gentleman? O these strangers, I do affect them strangely: they do the rarest home things, and please the fullest! as I live, could love all the Nation over and over for his sake,

Gal. Pride comfort your poor head-piece Lady: 'tis a weak one, and had need of a Night-cap.

Di. See how his fancy labours, has he not spoke
Home, and bravely? what a dangerous train
Did he give fire to! How he shook the King,
Made his soul melt within him, and his blood
Run into whay! it stood upon his brow,
Like a cold winter dew. Phi. Gentlemen,
You have no suit to me? I am no minion:
You stand (methinks) like men that would be Courtiers,
If you could well be flatter'd at a price,
Not to undo your Children: y'are all honest:
Go get you home again, and make your Country
A vertuous Court, to which your great ones may,
In their Diseas'd age, retire, and live reclus'd.

Cle. How do you worthy Sir? Phi. Well, very well;
And so well, that if the King please, I find
I may live many years.

Di. The King must please,
Whilst we know what you are, and who you are,
Your wrongs and juiuries: shrink not, worthy Sir,
But add your Father to you: in whose name,
We'll waken all the gods, and conjure up
The rods of vengeance, the abused people,
Who like to raging torrents shall swell high,
And so begirt the dens of these Male-dragons,
That through the strongest safety, they shall beg
For mercy at your swordpoint. Phi. Friends, no more,
Our years may be corrupted: 'Tis an age
We dare not trust our wills to: do you love me?

Thra. Do we love Heaven and honour?

Phi. My Lord Dion, you had
A vertuous Gentlewoman, call'd you Father;
Is she yet alive? Di. Most honour'd Sir, she is:
And for the penance but of an idle dream,
Has undertook a tedious Pilgrimage.

Enter a Lady.

Phi. Is it to me, or any of these Gentlemen you come?

La. To you, brave Lord; the Princess would intreat
Your present company.

Phi. The Princess send for me! y'are mistaken.

La. If you be call'd Philaster, 'tis to you.

Phi. Kiss her hand, and say I will attend her.

Di. Do you know what you do?

Phi. Yes, go to see a woman.

Cle. But do you weigh the danger you are in?

Phi. Danger in a sweet face?

By Jupiter I must not fear a woman.

Thra. But are you sure it was the Princess sent?

It may be some foul train to catch your life.

Phi. I do not think it Gentlemen: she's noble,
Her eye may shoot me dead, or those true red
And white friends in her face may steal my soul out:
There's all the danger in't: but be what may,
Her single name hath arm'd me. Di. Go on:

And be as truly happy as thou art fearless:
Come Gentlemen, let's make our friends acquainted,
Lest the King prove false. [Ex. Gentlemen.]

Enter Arethusa and a Lady.

Are. Comes he not? La. Madam?

Are. Will Philaster come?

La. Dear Madam, you were wont to aske
To credit me at first.

Are. But didst thou tell me so?
I am forgetful, and my womans strength
Is so o'recharg'd with danger like to grow
About my Marriage that these under-things
Dare not abide in such a troubled sea:
How look't he, when he told thee he would come?

La. Why, well. Are. And not a little fearful?

La. Fear Madam? sure he knows not what it is:

Are. You are all of his Faction; the whole Court
Is bold in praise of him, whilst I

May live neglected: and do noble things,
As fools in strife throw gold into the Sea,
Drown'd in the doing: but I know he fears.

La. Fear? Madam (me thought) his looks hid more
Of love than fear.

Are. Of love? To whom? to you?
Did you deliver those plain words I sent,
With such a winning gesture, and quick look
That you have caught him?

La. Madam, I mean to you.

Are. Of love to me? Alas! thy ignorance
Lets thee not see the crosses of our births:
Nature, that loves not to be questioned
Why she did this, or that, but has her ends,
And knows she does well; never gave the world
Two things so opposite, so contrary,
As he and I am: If a bowl of blood
Drawn from this arm of mine, would poyson thee,
A draught of his would cure thee. Of love to me?

La. Madam, I think I hear him.

Are. Bring him in:

You gods that would not have your dooms withstood,
Whose holy wisdoms at this time it is,
To make the passion of a feeble maid

The way unto your justice, I obey. [Enter Phil.

La. Here is my Lord Philaster. Are. Oh! 'tis well:
Withdraw your self. Phi. Madam, your messenger
Made me believe, you wisht to speak with me.

Are. 'Tis true Philaster, but the words are such,
I have to say, and do so ill beseen

The mouth of woman, that I wish them said,
And yet am loth to speak them. Have you known
That I have ought detracted from your worth?
Have I in person wrong'd you? or have set
My baser instruments to throw disgrace
Upon your vertues? Phi. Never Madam you.

Are. Why then should you in such a publick place,
Injure a Princess and a scandal lay
Upon my fortunes, fam'd to be so great:
Calling a great part of my dowry in question.

Phi. Madam, this truth which I shall speak, will be Foolish: but for your fair and vertuous self,
I could afford my self to have no right

To any thing you wish'd. Are. Philaster, know
I must enjoy these Kingdoms, Phi. Madam, both?

Are. Both or I die: by Fate I die Philaster,
If I not calmly may enjoy them both.

Phi. I would do much to save that Noble life:

Yet would be loth to have posterity
Find in our stories, that Philaster gave
His right unto a Scepter, and a Crown,
To save a Ladies longing. Are. Nay then hear:
I must, and will have them, and more.

Phi. What more?

Are. Or lose that little life the gods prepared,
To trouble this poor piece of earth withall.

Phi. Madam, what more?

Are. Turn then away thy face.

Phi. No. Are. Do.

Phi. I cannot endure it: turn away my face?

I never yet saw enemy that lookt
So dreadful, but that I thought my self
As great a Basilisk as he; or spake
So horribly, but that I thought my tongue
Bore Thunder underneath, as much as his:
Nor beast that I could turn from: shall I then
Begin to fear sweet sounds? a Ladies voice,
Whom I do love? Say you would have my life,
Why, I will give it you; for it is of me
A thing so loath'd, and unto you that ask
Of so poor use, that I shall make no price

If you intreat, I will unmov'dly hear.

Are. Yet for my sake a little bend thy looks.

Phi. I do. Are. Then know I must have them and thee.

Phi. And me?

Are. Thy love: without which, all the Land
Discovered yet, will serve me for no use,
But to be buried in. Phi. Is't possible?

Are. With it, it were too little to bestow
On thee: Now, though thy breath doth strike me dead
(Which know it may) I have unript my breast.

Phi. Madam, you are too full of noble thoughts,
To lay a train for this contemned life,

Which you may have for asking: to suspect
Were base, where I deserve no ill: love you!

By all my hopes I do, above my life:
But how this passion should proceed from you
So violently, would amaze a man, that would be jealous.

Are. Another soul into my body shot,
Could not have fill'd me with more strength and spirit,
Than this thy breath: but spend not hasty time,
In seeking how I came thus: 'tis the gods,
The gods, that make me so; and sure our love
Will be the nobler, and the better blest,
In that the secret justice of the gods

Is mingled with it. Let us leave and kiss,
Lest some unwelcome guest should fall betwixt us,
And we should part without it. Phi. 'Twill be ill

I should abide here long. Are. 'Tis true, and worse

You should come often: How shall we devise
To hold intelligence? That our true lovers,
On any new occasion may agree, what path is best to tread?

Phi. I have a boy sent by the gods, I hope to this intent,
Not yet seen in the Court; hunting the Buck,

I found him sitting by a Fountain side,
Of which he borrow'd some to quench his thirst,

And paid the Nymph again as much in tears;

A Garland lay him by, made by himself,

Of many several flowers, bred in the bay,

Stuck in that mystick order, that the rareness

Delighted me: but ever when he turned

His tender eyes upon 'um, he would weep,

As if he meant to make 'um grow again.

Seeing such pretty helpless innocence

Dwell in his face, I ask'd him all his story;

He told me that his Parents gentle dyed,

Leaving him to the mercy of the fields,

Which gave him roots; and of the Crystal springs,

Which did not stop their courses: and the Sun,

Which still, he thank'd him, yielded him his light,

Then took he up his Garland and did shew,

What every flower as Country people hold,

Did signifie: and how all ordered thus,

Express'd his grief: and to my thoughts did read

The prettiest lecture of his Country Art

That could be wisht: so that, me thought, I could Have studied it. I gladly entertain'd him,

Who was glad to follow; and have got

The trustiest, loving'st, and the gentlest boy,

That ever Master kept: Him will I send

To wait on you, and bear our hidden love.

Enter Lady.

Are. 'Tis well, no more.

La. Madam, the Prince is come to do his service.

Are. What will you do Philaster with your self? (mc.

Phi. Why, that which all the gods have appointed out for

Are. Dear, hide thy self. Bring in the Prince.

Phi. Hide me from Pharamond!

When Thunder speaks, which is the voice of Jove,

Though I do reverence, yet I hide me not;

And shall a stranger Prince have leave to brag

Unto a forreign Nation, that he made Philaster hide himself?

Are. He cannot know it.

Phi. Though it should sleep for ever to the world,

It is a simple sin to hide my self,
Which will for ever on my conscience lie.

Arc. Then good Philaster, give him scope and way
In what he saies: for he is apt to speak.
What you are loth to hear: for my sake do. Phi. I will.

Enter Pharamond.

Pha. My Princely Mistres, as true lovers ought,
I come to kiss these fair hands; and to shew
In outward Ceremonies, the dear love
Writ in my heart.

Phi. If I shall have an answer no directlier,
I am gone. Pha. To what would he have an answer?

Arc. To his claim unto the Kingdom.

Pha. Sirrah, I forbear you before the King.

Phi. Good Sir, do so still, I would not talk with you.

Pha. But now the time is fitter, do but offer
To make mention of right to any Kingdom,
Though it be scarce habitable. Phi. Good Sir, let me go.

Pha. And by my sword.

Phi. Peace Pharamond: if thou——

Arc. Leave us Philaster. Phi. I have done.

Pha. You are gone, by heaven I'll fetch you back.

Phi. You shall not need. Pha. What now?

Phi. Know Pharamond,

I loath to brawl with such a blast as thou,
Who art nought but a valiant voice: But if Thou shalt provoke me further, men shall say
Thou wert, and not lament it.

Pha. Do you slight

My greatness so, and in the Chamber of the Princess!

Phi. It is a place to which I must confess
I owe a reverence: but wer't the Church,
I, at the Altar, there's no place so safe,
Where thou dar'st injure me, but I dare kill thee:
And for your greatness; know Sir, I can grasp
You, and your greatness thus, thus into nothing:
Give not a word, not a word back: Farewell. [Exit Phi.]

Pha. 'Tis an odd fellow Madam, we must stop
His mouth with some Office, when we are married.

Arc. You were best make him your Controuler.

Pha. I think he would discharge it well. But Madam,
I hope our hearts are knit; and yet so slow
The Ceremonies of State are, that 'twill be long
Before our hands be so: If then you please,
Being agreed in heart, let us not wait
For dreaming for me, but take a little stoll
Delights, and so prevent our joyes to come.

Arc. If you dare speak such thoughts,
I must withdraw in honour. [Exit Arc.]

Pha. The constitution of my body will never hold out till the wedding; I must seek elsewhere. [Exit Pha.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Philaster and Bellario.

Phi. AND thou shalt find her honourable boy,
Full of regard unto thy tender youth,
For thine own modesty; and for my sake,
Apter to give, than thou wilt be to ask, I, or deserve.

Bell. Sir, you did take me up when I was nothing;
And only yet am something, by being yours;
You trusted me unknown; and that which you are apt
To conster a simple innocence in me,
Perhaps, might have been craft; the cunning of a boy
Hardened in lies and theft; yet ventur'd you,
To part my miseries and me: for which,
I never can expect to serve a Lady
That bears more honour in her breast than you.

Phi. But boy, it will prefer thee; thou art young,
And bearest a childish overflowing love

To them that clap thy cheeks, and speak thee fair yet:
But when thy judgment comes to rule those passions,
Thou wilt remember best those careful friends
That plac'd thee in the noblest way of life;
She is a Princess I prefer thee to.

Bell. In that small time that I have seen the world,
I never knew a man hasty to part
With a servant he thought trusty; I remember
My Father would prefer the boys he kept
To greater men than he, but did it not,
Till they were grown too sawcy for himself.

Phi. Why gentle boy, I find no fault at all in thy behaviour.

Bell. Sir, if I have made
A fault of ignorance, instruct my youth;
I shall be willing, if not apt to learn;
Age and experience will adorn my mind
With larger knowledge: And if I have done
A wilful fault, think me not past all hope
For once; what Master holds so strict a hand
Over his boy, that he will part with him
Without one warning? Let me be corrected
To break my stubbornness if it be so,
Rather than turn me off, and I shall mend.

Phi. Thy love doth plead so prettily to stay,
That (trust me) I could weep to part with thee.
Alas! I do not turn thee off; thou knowest
It is my business that doth call thee hence,
And when thou art with her thou dwel'st with me:
Think so, and 'tis so; and when time is full,
That thou hast well discharged this heavy trust,
Laid on so weak a one, I will again
With joy receive thee; as I live, I will;
Nay weep not, gentle boy; 'Tis more than time
Thou didst attend the Princess. Bell. I am gone;
But since I am to part with you my Lord,
And none knows whether I shall live to do
More service for you; take this little prayer;
Heaven blefs your loves, your fights, all your desigas.
May sick men, if they have your wish, be well;
And Heavens hate those you curse, though I be one. [Exit.]

Phi. The love of boyes unto their Lords is strange,
I have read wonders of it; yet this boy
For my sake (if a man may judge by looks,
And speech) would out-do story. I may see
A day to pay him for his loyalty. [Exit Phi.]

Enter Pharamond.

Pha. Why should these Ladies stay so long? They must come this way; I know the Queen employes 'em not, for the Reverend Mother sent me word they would all be for the Garden. If they should all prove honest now, I were in a fair taking; I was never so long without sport in my life, and in my conscience 'tis not my fault: Oh, for our Country Ladies! Here's one bouted, I'll hound at her.

Enter Galatea.

Gal. Your Grace! Pha. Shall I not be a trouble?

Gal. Not to me Sir.

Pha. Nay, nay, you are too quick; by this sweet hand.

Gal. You'll be forsworn Sir, 'tis but an old glove. If you will talk at distance, I am for you: but good Prince, be not bawdy, nor do not brag; these two I bar, and then I think,
I shall have sence enough to answer all the weighty Apothec- gmes your Royal blood shall manage.

Pha. Dear Lady, can you love?

Gal. Dear, Prince, how dear! I ne're cost you a Coach yet, nor put you to the dear repentance of a Banquet; here's no
Scarlet Sir, to blush the sin out it was given for: This wyer mine own hair covers: and this face has been so far from being dear to any, that it ne're cost penny painting: And for the rest of my poor Wardrobe, such as you see, it leaves no hand behind it, to make the jealous Mercers wife curse our good doings. Pha. You mistake me Lady.

Pha. Lord, I do so; would you or I could help it.

Pha. Do Ladies of this Country use to give no more respect to men of my full being?

Gal. Full being! I understand you not, unless your Grace means growing to fatness; and then your only remedy (upon my knowledge, Prince) is in a morning a Cup of neat White-wine brew'd with Carduus, then fast till supper, about eight you may eat; use exercise, and keep a Sparrow-hawk, you can shoot in a Tiller; but of all, your Grace must flee Pblebotomie, fresh Pork, Conger, and clarified Whay; They are all dullers of the vital spirits.

Pha. Lady, you talk of nothing all this while.

Gal. 'Tis very true Sir, I talk of you.

Pha. This is a crafty wench, I like her wit well, 'twill be rare to stir up a leaden appetite, she's a Danae, and must be courted in a shower of gold. Madam, look here, all these, and more, than—

Gal. What have you there, my Lord? Gold? Now, as I live 'tis fair gold; you would have silver for it to play with the Pages; you could not have taken me in a worse time; But if you have present use my Lord, I'll send my man with silver and keep your gold for you.

Pha. Lady, Lady.

Gal. She's coming Sir behind, will take white money. Yet for all this I'll match ye. [Exit Gal. behind the hangings.]

Pha. If there be but two such more in this Kingdom, and near the Court, we may even hang up our Harps: ten such Campfire constitutions as this, would call the golden age again in question, and teach the old way for every ill fact Husband to get his own Children, and what a mischief that will breed, let all consider.

Enter Megra.

Here's another; if she be of the same last, the Devil shall pluck her on. Many fair mornings, Lady.

Meg. As many mornings bring as many dayes, Fair, sweet, and hopeful to your Grace.

Pha. She gives good words yet; Sure this wench is free. If your more serious business do not call you, Let me hold quarter with you, we'll take an hour Out quickly. Meg. What would your Grace talk of?

Pha. Of some such pretty subject as your self. I'll go no further than your eye, or lip, There's theme enough for one man for an age.

Meg. Sir, they stand right, and my lips are yet even, Smooth, young enough, ripe enough, red enough, Or my glass wrongs me.

Pha. O they are two twin'd Cherries died in blushes, Which those fair suns above, with their bright beams Reflect upon, and ripen: sweetest beauty, Bow down those branches, that the longing taste, Of the faint looker on, may meet those blessings, And taste and live. Meg. O delicate sweet Prince; She that hath snow enough about her heart, To take the wanton spring of ten such lines off, May be a Nun without probation.

Sir, you have in such neat poetry, gathered a kiss, That if I had but five lines of that number, Such pretty begging blanks, I should commend Your fore-head, or your cheeks, and kiss you too.

Pha. Do it in prose; you cannot miss it Madam.

Meg. I shall, I shall. Pha. By my life you shall not. I'll prompt you first: Can you do it now?

Meg. Methinks 'tis easie, now I ha' don't before; But yet I should stick at it. Pha. Stick till to-morrow. I'll ne'r part you sweetest. But we lose time, Can you love me? (you?)

Meg. Love you my Lord? How would you have me love

Pha. I'll teach you in a short sentence, cause I will not load your memory, this is all: love me, and lie with me.

Meg. Was it lie with you that you said? 'Tis impossible.

Pha. Not to a willing mind, that will endeavour; if I do not teach you to do it as easily in one night, as you'll go to bed, I'll lose my Royal blood for't.

Meg. Why Prince, you have a Lady of your own, that yet wants teaching.

Pha. I'll sooner teach a Mare the old measures, than teach her any thing belonging to the function; she's afraid to lie with her self, if she have but any masculine imaginations about her; I know when we are married, I must ravish her.

Meg. By my honour, that's a foul fault indeed, but time and your good help will wear it out Sir.

Pha. And for any other I see, excepting your dear self, dearest Lady, I had rather be Sir Tim the Schoolmaster, and leap a Dairy-maid.

Meg. Has your Grace seen the Court-star Galatea?

Pha. Out upon her; she's as cold of her favour as an apoplex? she fail'd by but now.

Meg. And how do you hold her wit Sir?

Pha. I hold her wit? The strength of all the Guard cannot hold it, if they were tied to it, she would blow 'em out of the Kingdom, they talk of Jupiter, he's but a squib-cracker to her: Look well about you, and you may find a tongue-bolt. But speak sweet Lady, shall I be freely welcome?

Meg. Whither?

Pha. To your bed; if you mistrust my faith, you do me the un noblest wrong. Meg. I dare not Prince, I dare not.

Pha. Make your own conditions, my purse shall seal 'em, and what you dare imagine you can want, I'll furnish you withal: give two hours to your thoughts every morning about it. Come, I know you are bashful, speak in my ear, will you be mine? keep this, and with it me: soon I will visit you.

Meg. My Lord, my Chamber's most unsafe, but when 'tis night I'll find some means to slip into your lodging: till when—

Pha. Till when, this, and my heart go with thee.

[Ex. several ways.]

Enter Galatea from behind the hangings.

Gal. Oh thou pernicious Petticoat Prince, are these your virtues? Well, if I do not lay a train to blow your sport up, I am no woman; and Lady Towfabel I'll fit you for't.

[Exit Gal.]

Enter Arethusa and a Lady.

Are. Where's the boy? La. Within Madam.

Are. Gave you him gold to buy him cloaths?

La. I did. Are. And has he don't?

La. Yes Madam.

Are. 'Tis a pretty sad talking boy, is it not? Ask't you his name? La. No Madam.

Enter Galatea.

Are. O you are welcome, what good news?

Gal. As good as any one can tell your Grace, That saies she hath done that you would have wish'd.

Are. Hast thou discovered?

Gal. I have strained a point of modesty for you.

Are. I prethee how?

Gal. In listning after bawdery; I see, let a Lady live never so modestly, she shall be sure to find a lawful time, to harken after bawdery; your Prince, brave Pharamond, was so hot on't. Are. With whom? (place.)

Gal. Why, with the Lady I suspect: I can tell the time and

Are. O when, and where?

Gal. To night, his Lodging.

Are. Run thy self into the presence, mingle there again With other Ladies, leave the rest to me: If destiny (to whom we dare not say, Why thou didst this) have not decreed it so In lasting leaves (whose smallest Characters Were never altered:) yet, this match shall break. Where's the boy? La. Here Madam.

Enter Bellario.

Are. Sir, you are sad to change your service, is't not so?

Bell. Madam, I have not chang'd; I wait on you, To do him service. Are. Thou disclaim'st in me;

Tell

Tell me thy name. Bell. Bellario.

Are. Thou canst sing, and play?

Bell. If grief will give me leave, Madam, I can.

Are. Alas! what kind of grief can thy years know? Hadst thou a curst master, when thou went'st to School?

Thou art not capable of other grief; Thy brows and cheeks are smooth as waters be, When no dreach troubles them: believe me boy, Care seeks out wrinkled brows, and hollow eyes, And builds himself caves to abide in them.

Come Sir, tell me truly, does your Lord love me?

Bell. Love Madam? I know not what it is.

Are. Canst thou know grief, and never yet knew'st love?

Thou art deceiv'd boy; does he speak of me As if he wish'd me well? Bell. If it be love,

To forget all respect of his own friends, In thinking of your face; if it be love To sit cross arm'd and sigh away the day, Mingled with starts, crying your name as loud And haltily, as men i'the streets do fire:

If it be love to weep himself away, When he but hears of any Lady dead, Or kill'd, because it might have been your chance; If when he goes to rest (which will not be) 'Twi'x every prayer he saies, to name you once As others drop a bead, be to be in love; Then Madam, I dare swear he loves you.

Are. O y'are a cunning boy, and taught to lie, For your Lords credit; but thou knowest, a lie, That bears this found, is welcomer to me, Than any truth that saies he loves me not. Lead the way Boy: Do you attend me too; 'Tis thy Lords business halts me thus; Away. [Exeunt.]

Enter Dion, Cleremont, Thrasilin, Megra and Galatea.

Di. Come Ladies, shall we talk a round? As men Do walk a mile, women should take an hour After supper: 'Tis their exercise. Gal. 'Tis late.

Meg. 'Tis all My eyes will do to lead me to my bed.

Gal. I fear they are so heavy, you'll scarce find The way to your lodging with 'em to night.

Enter Pharamond.

Thra. The Prince.

Pha. Not a bed Ladies? y'are good sitters up; What think you of a pleasant dream to last Till morning?

Meg. I should choose, my Lord, a pleasing wake before it.

Enter Arethusa and Bellario.

Are. 'Tis well my Lord y'are courting of Ladies. Is't not late Gentlemen?

Cle. Yes Madam.

Are. Wait you there. [Exit Arethusa.

Meg. She's jealous, as I live; look you my Lord, The Princess has a Hilas, an Adonis.

Pha. His form is Angel-like.

Meg. Why this is he, must, when you are wed, Sit by your pillow, like young Apollo, with His hand and voice, binding your thoughts in sleep; The Princess does provide him for you, and for her self.

Pha. I find no musick in these boys. Meg. Nor I. They can do little, and that small they do, They have not wit to hide.

Di. Serves he the Princess? Thra. Yes.

Di. 'Tis a sweet boy, how brave she keeps him!

Pha. Ladies all good rest; I mean to kill a Buck To morrow morning, ere y'ave done your dreams. (rest,

Meg. All happiness attend your Grace, Gentlemen good Come shall we to bed?

Gal. Yes, all good night. [Ex. Gal. and Meg.]

Di. May your dreams be true to you; What shall we do Gallants? 'Tis late, the King

Is up still, see, he comes, a Guard along With him.

Enter King, Arethusa and Guard.

King. Look your intelligence be true.

Are. Upon my life it is: and I do hope, Your Highness will not tye me to a man, That in the heat of wooing throws me off, And takes another. Di. What should this mean?

King. If it be true, That Lady had been better have embrac'd Cureless Diseases; get you to your rest, [Ex. Are. and Bel.] You shall be righted: Gentlemen draw near, We shall imploy you: Is young Pharamond Come to his lodging? Di. I saw him enter there.

King. Haste some of you, and cunningly discover, If Megra be in her lodging. Cle. Sir, She parted hence but now with other Ladies.

King. If she be there, we shall not need to make A vain discovery of our suspicion. You gods I see, that who unrighteously Holds wealth or state from others, shall be curst, In that, which meaner men are blest withall: Ages to come shall know no male of him Left to inherit, and his name shall be Blotted from earth; If he have any child, It shall be crossly matched: the gods themselves Shall sow wild strife betwixt her Lord and her, Yet, if it be your wills, forgive the sin I have committed, let it not fall Upon this understanding child of mine, She has not broke your Laws; but how can I, Look to be heard of gods, that must be just, Praying upon the ground I hold by wrong?

Enter Dion.

Di. Sir, I have asked, and her women swear she is within, but they I think are bawds; I told 'em I must speak with her: they laught, and said their Lady lay speechless. I said, my business was important; they said their Lady was about it: I grew hot, and cryed my business was a matter that concern'd life and death; they answered, so was sleeping, at which their Lady was; I urg'd again, she had scarce time to be so since last I saw her; they smil'd again, and seem'd to instruct me, that sleeping was nothing but lying down and winking: Answers more direct I could not get: in short Sir, I think she is not there.

King. 'Tis then no time to dally: you o'th' Guard, Wait at the back door of the Princes lodging, And see that none pass thence upon your lives. Knock Gentlemen: knock loud: louder yet: What, has their pleasure taken off their hearing? P'le break your meditations? knock again: Not yet? I do not think he sleeps, having this Larum by him; once more, Pharamond, Prince.

Pharamond above.

Pha. What sawcy groom knocks at this dead of night? Where be our waiters? By my vexed soul, He meets his death, that meets me, for this boldness.

K. Prince, you wrong your thoughts, we are your friends, Come down. Pha. The King?

King. The same Sir, come down, We have cause of present Counsel with you.

Pha. If your Grace please to use me, P'le attend you To your Chamber. [Pha. below.]

King. No, 'tis too late Prince, P'le make bold with yours.

Pha. I have some private reasons to my self, Makes me unmannerly, and say you cannot; Nay, press not forward Gentlemen, he must come Through my life, that comes here. Enter.

King. Sir be resolv'd, I must and will come.

Pha. I will not be dishonour'd; He that enters, enters upon his death;

Sir, 'tis a sign you make no stranger of me,
To bring these Renegados to my Chamber,
At these unseason'd hours. King. Why do you
Chafe your self so? you are not wrong'd, nor shall be;
Onely I'll search your lodging, for some cause
To our self known: Enter I say.

Phi. I say no.

[Meg. Above.

Meg. Let 'em enter Prince,
Let 'em enter, I am up, and ready; I know their business;
'Tis the poor breaking of a Ladies honour,
They hunt so hotly after; let 'em enjoy it.
You have your business Gentlemen, I lay here.
O my Lord the King, this is not noble in you
To make publick the weakness of a Woman.

King. Come down.

Meg. I dare my Lord; your whootings and your clamors,
Your private whispers, and your broad fleerings,
Can no more vex my soul, than this base carriage;
But I have vengeance yet in store for some,
Shall in the most contempt you can have of me,
Be joy and nourishment.

King. Will you come down?

Meg. Yes, to laugh at your worst: but I shall wrong you,
If my skill fail me not.

King. Sir, I must dearly chide you for this looseness,
You have wrong'd a worthy Lady; but no more,
Conduct him to my lodging, and to bed. (deed.)

Cle. Get him another wench, and you bring him to bed in

Di. 'Tis strange a man cannot ride a Stag
Or two, to breath himself, without a warrant:
If this gear hold, that lodgings be search'd thus,
Pray heaven we may lie with our own wives in safety,
That they be not by some trick of State mistaken.

Enter with Megra.

King. Now Lady of honour, where's your honour now?
No man can fit your palat, but the Prince.
Thou most ill shrowded rottenness; thou piece
Made by a Painter and a Apothecary;
Thou troubled sea of lust; thou wilderness,
Inhabited by wild thoughts; thou swoln cloud
Of infection; thou ripe Mine of all Diseases;
Thou all Sin, all Hell, and last, all Devils, tell me,
Had you none to pull on with your courtesies,
But he that must be mine, and wrong my Daughter?
By all the gods, all these, and all the Pages,
And all the Court shall hoot thee through the Court,
Fling rotten Oranges, make ribald Rimes,
And fear thy name with Candles upon walls:
Do you laugh Lady Venus?

Meg. Faith Sir, you must pardon me;
I cannot chuse but laugh to see you merry.
If you do this, O King; nay, if you dare do it;
By all these gods you swore by, and as many
More of my own; I will have fellows, and such Fellows in it, as shall make noble mirth;
The Princess, your dear Daughter, shall stand by me
On walls, and sung in ballads, any thing:
Urge me no more, I know her, and her haunts,
Her layes, leaps, and outlayes, and will discover all;
Nay will dishonour her. I know the boy
She keeps, a handsome boy; about eighteen:
Know what she does with him, where, and when.
Come Sir, you put me to a womans madness,
The glory of a fury; and if I do not
Do it to the height?

King. What boy is this she raves at?

Meg. Alas! good minded Prince, you know not these things?
I am loth to reveal 'em. Keep this fault
As you would keep your health from the hot air
Of the corrupted people, or by heaven,
I will not fall alone: what I have known,
Shall be as publick as a print: all tongues
Shall speak it as they do the language they

Are born in, as free and commonly; I'll set it
Like a prodigious star for all to gaze at, (reign
And so high and glowing, that other Kingdoms far and For-
Shall read it there, nay travel with it, till they find
No tongue to make it more, nor no more people;
And then behold the fall of your fair Princess.

King. Has she a boy?

Cle. So please your Grace I have seen a boy wait
On her, a fair boy.

King. Go get you to your quarter:
For this time I'll study to forget you.

Meg. Do you study to forget me, and I'll study
To forget you. [Ex. King, Meg. and Guard.

Cle. Why here's a Male spirit for Hercules, if ever there be nine worthies of women, this wench shall ride astride, and be their Captain.

Di. Sure she hath a garrison of Devils in her tongue, she uttereth such balls of wild-fire. She has so netled the King, that all the Doctors in the Country will scarce cure him.
That boy was a strange found out antidote to cure her infection: that boy, that Princess boy: that brave, chaste, ver-tuous Ladies boy: and a fair boy, a well spoken boy: All these considered, can make nothing else—but there I leave you Gentlemen.

Thra. Nay we'll go wander with you.

[Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cle. Di. and Thra.

Cle. NAY doubtless 'tis true.

Di. I, and 'tis the gods
That rais'd this Punishment to scourge the King
With his own issue: Is it not a shame
For us, that should write noble in the land;
For us, that should be freemen, to behold
A man, that is the bravery of his age,
Philaster, prest down from his Royal right,
By this regardless King; and only look,
And see the Scepter ready to be cast
Into the hands of that lascivious Lady,
That lives in lust with a smooth boy, now to be Married to yon strange Prince, who, but that people
Please to let him be a Prince, is born a slave,
In that which should be his most noble part,
His mind? Thra. That man that would not stir with you,
To aid Philaster, let the gods forget,
That such a Creature walks upon the earth.

Cle. Philaster is too backward in't himself;
The Gentry do await it, and the people
Against their nature are all bent for him,
And like a field of standing Corn, that's mov'd
With a stiff gale, their heads bow all one way.

Di. The only cause that draws Philaster back
From this attempt, is the fair Princess love,
Which he admires and we can now confute.

Thra. Perhaps he'll not believe it.

Di. Why Gentlemen, 'tis without question so.

Cle. I 'tis past speech, she lives dishonestly.
But how shall we, if he be curious, work
Upon his faith?

Thra. We all are satisfied within our selves.

Di. Since it is true, and tends to his own good,
I'll make this new report to be my knowledge,
I'll say I know it, nay, I'll swear I saw it.

Cle. It will be best. Thra. 'Twill move him.

Enter Philaster.

Di. Here he comes. Good morrow to your honour,
We have spent some time in seeking you.

Phi. My worthy friends,
You that can keep your memories to know

Your

Your friend in miseries, and cannot frown
On men disgrac'd for vertue: A good day (tion?)
Attend you all. What service may I do worthy your accepta-

Di. My good Lord,
We come to urge that vertue which we know
Lives in your breast, forth, rise, and make a head,
The Nobles, and the people are all dull'd
With this usurping King: and not a man
That ever heard the word, or knew such a thing
As vertue, but will second your attempts.

Phi. How honourable is this love in you
To me that have deserv'd none? Know my friends
(You that were born to shame your poor Philafter,
With too much courtesie) I could afford
To melt my self in thanks; but my designs
Are not yet ripe, suffice it, that ere long (would
I shall employ your loves: but yet the time is short of what I

Di. The time is fuller Sir, than you expect;
That which hereafter will not perhaps be reach'd
By violence, may now be caught; As for the King,
You know the people have long hated him;
But now the Princess, whom they lov'd.

Phi. Why, what of her?
Di. Is loath'd as much as he.
Phi. By what strange means?
Di. She's known a Whore. Phi. Thou lyest.
Di. My Lord—

Phi. Thou lyest, [Offers to draw and is held.
And thou shalt feel it; I had thought thy mind
Had been of honour; thus to rob a Lady
Of her good name, is an infectious sin,
Not to be pardon'd; be it false as hell,
'Twill never be redeem'd, if it be sown
Amongst the people, fruitful to increase
All evil they shall hear. Let me alone,
That I may cut off falsehood, whilst it springs.
Set hills on hills betwixt me and the man
That utters this, and I will scale them all,
And from the utmost top fall on his neck,
Like Thunder from a Cloud. Di. This is most strange;
Sure he does love her. Phi. I do love fair truth:
She is my Mistress, and who injures her,
Draws vengeance from me Sirs, let go my arms.

Thra. Nay, good my Lord be patient.
Cle. Sir, remember this is your honour'd friend,
That comes to do his service, and will shew you
Why he utter'd this. Phi. I ask you pardon Sir,
My zeal to truth made me unmannerly:
Should I have heard dishonour spoke of you,
Behind your back untruly, I had been
As much distemper'd, and enrag'd as now.

Di. But this my Lord is truth.
Phi. O say not so, good Sir forbear to say so,
'Tis the truth that all womenkind is false;
Urge it no more, it is impossible;
Why should you think the Princess light?

Di. Why, she was taken at it.
Phi. 'Tis false, O Heaven 'tis false: it cannot be,
Can it? Speak Gentlemen, for love of truth speak;
Is't possible? can women all be damn'd?

Di. Why no, my Lord.
Phi. Why then it cannot be.
Di. And she was taken with her boy.
Phi. What boy? Di. A Page, a boy that serves her.
Phi. Oh good gods, a little boy?

Di. I, know you him my Lord?
Phi. Hell and sin know him? Sir, you are deceiv'd;
I'll reason it a little coldly with you;
If she were lustful, would she take a boy,
That knows not yet desire? she would have one
Should meet her thoughts and knows the sin he acts,
Which is the great delight of wickedness;
You are abus'd, and so is she, and I.

Di. How you my Lord?

Phi. Why all the world's abus'd
In an unjust report. Di. Oh noble Sir your vertues
Cannot look into the subtil thoughts of woman.
In short my Lord, I took them: I my self.

Phi. Now all the Devils thou didst flie from my rage,
Would thou hadst ta'ne devils ingendring plagues:
When thou didst take them, hide thee from my eyes,
Would thou hadst taken Thunder on thy breast,
When thou didst take them, or been stricken dumb
For ever: that this foul deed might have slept in silence.

Thra. Have you known him so ill temper'd?
Cle. Never before.
Phi. The winds that are let loose,
From the four several corners of the earth,
And spread themselves all over sea and land,
Kiss not a chaste one. What friend bears a sword
To run me through?

Di. Why, my Lord, are you so mov'd at this?
Phi. When any falls from vertue I am distract,
I have an interest in't.

Di. But good my Lord recal your self,
And think what's best to be done.

Phi. I thank you. I will do it;
Please you to leave me, I'll consider of it:
Tomorrow I will find your lodging forth,
And give you answer
The readiest way. Di. All the gods direct you.

Thra. He was extream impatient.
Cle. It was his vertue and his noble mind.

[Exeunt Di. Cle. and Thra.

Phi. I had forgot to ask him where he took them,
I'll follow him. O that I had a sea
Within my breast, to quench the fire I feel;
More circumstances will but fan this fire;
It more afflicts me now, to know by whom
This deed is done, than simply that 'tis done:
And he that tells me this is honourable,
As far from lies, as she is far from truth.
O that like beasts, we could not grieve our selves,
With that we see not; Bulls and Rams will fight;
To keep their Females standing in their fight;
But take 'em from them, and you take at once
Their spleens away; and they will fall again
Unto their Pastures, growing fresh and fat,
And taste the waters of the springs as sweet,
As 'twas before, finding no start in sleep.
But miserable man; See, see you gods,

Enter Bellario.

He walks still; and the face you let him wear
When he was innocent, is still the same,
Not blasted; is this justice? Do you mean
To intrap mortality, that you allow Treason so smooth a brow? I cannot now
Think he is guilty. Bell. Health to you my Lord;
The Princess doth commend her love, her life,
And this unto you. Phi. Oh Bellario,
Now I perceive she loves me, she does shew it
In loving thee my boy, she has made thee brave.

Bell. My Lord she has attired me past my wish,
Past my desert, more fit for her attendant,
Though far unfit for me, who do attend.

Phi. Thou art grown courtly boy. O let all women
That love black deeds, learn to dissemble here,
Here, by this paper she does write to me,
As if her heart were Mines of Adamant
To all the world besides, but unto me,
A maiden snow that melted with my looks.
Tell me my boy how doth the Princess use thee?
For I shall guess her love to me by that.

Bell. Scarce like her servant, but as if I were Something allied to her; or had preserv'd
Her life three times by my fidelity.
As mothers fond do use their only sons;

As I'de use one, that's left unto my trust,
For whom my life should pay, if he met harm,
So she does use me. Phi. Why, this is wondrous well:
But what kind language does she feed thee with?

Bell. Why, she does tell me, she will trust my youth
With all her loving secrets; and does call me
Her pretty servant, bids me weep no more
For leaving you: shee'l see my services
Regarded; and such words of that soft strain,
That I am nearer weeping when she ends
Than ere she spake. Phi. This is much better still.

Bell. Are you ill my Lord?

Phi. Ill? No Bellarario.

Bell. Me thinks your words
Fall not from off your tongue so evenly,
Nor is there in your looks that quietness,
That I was wont to see.

Phi. Thou art deceiv'd boy:

And she stroakes thy head? Bell. Yes.

Phi. And she does clap thy cheeks?

Bell. She does my Lord.

Phi. And she does kiss thee boy? ha!

Bell. How my Lord?

Phi. She kisses thee? Bell. Not so my Lord.

Phi. Come, come, I know she does.

Bell. No by my life.

Phi. Why then she does not love me; come, she does,
I bad her do it; I charg'd her by all charms
Of love between us, by the hope of peace
We should enjoy, to yield thee all delights
Naked, as to her bed: I took her oath
Thou should'st enjoy her: Tell me gentle boy,
Is she not parallel's? Is not her breath
Sweet as Arabian winds, when fruits are ripe?
Are not her breasts two liquid Ivory balls?
Is she not all a lasting Mine of joy?

Bell. I, now I see why my disturbed thoughts
Were so perplex. When first I went to her,
My heart held augury; you are abus'd,
Some villain has abus'd you; I do see
Whereto you tend; fall Rocks upon his head,
That put this to you; 'tis some subtil train,
To bring that noble frame of yours to nought.

Phi. Thou think'st I will be angry with thee; Come
Thou shalt know all my drift, I hate her more,
Than I love happiness, and plac'd thee there,
To pry with narrow eyes into her deeds;
Hast thou discover'd? Is she false to lust,
As I would wish her? Speak some comfort to me.

Bell. My Lord, you did mistake the boy you sent:
Had she the lust of Sparrows, or of Goats;
Had she a sin that way, hid from the world,
Beyond the name of lust, I would not aid
Her base desires; but what I came to know
As servant to her, I would not reveal, to make my life last ages

Phi. Oh my heart; this is a false worse than the main disease.
Tell me thy thoughts; for I will know the least
That dwells within thee, or will rip thy heart
To know it; I will see thy thoughts as plain,
As I do know thy face. Bell. Why, so you do.
She is (for ought I know) by all the gods,
As chaste as Ice; but were she foul as Hell
And I did know it, thus; the breath of Kings,
The points of Swords, Tortures nor Bulls of Bras,
Should draw it from me.

Phi. Then 'tis no time to dally with thee;
I will take thy life, for I do hate thee; I could curse thee now.

Bell. If you do hate you could not curse me worse;
The gods have not a punishment in store
Greater for me, than is your hate.

Phi. Fie, fie, so young and so dissembling;
Tell me when and where thou dost enjoy her,
Or let plagues fall on me, if I destroy thee not,

Bell. Heaven knows I never did: and when I lie

To save my life, may I live long and loath'd.

Hew me alunder, and whilst I can think
I'll love those pieces you have cut away,
Better than those that grow: and kiss these limbs,
Because you made 'em so.

Phi. Fearest thou not death?

Can boys contemn that? Bell. Oh, what boy is he
Can be content to live to be a man
That sees the best of men thus passionate, thus without reason?

Phi. Oh, but thou dost not know what 'tis to die.

Bell. Yes, I do know my Lord;
'Tis less than to be born; a lasting sleep,
A quiet resting from all jealousy;
A thing we all pursue; I know besides,
It is but giving over of a game that must be lost.

Phi. But there are pains, false boy,
For perjur'd souls; think but on these, and then
Thy heart will melt, and thou wilt utter all.

Bell. May they fall all upon me whilst I live,
If I be perjur'd, or have ever thought
Of that you charge me with; if I be false,
Send me to suffer in those punishments you speak of; kill me.

Phi. Oh, what should I do?

Why, who can but believe him? He does swear
So earnestly, that if it were not true,
The gods would not endure him. Rise Bellarario,
Thy protestations are so deep; and thou
Dost look so truly, when thou utterest them,
That though I know 'em false, as were my hopes,
I cannot urge thee further; but thou wert
To blame to injure me, for I must love
Thy honest looks, and take no revenge upon
Thy tender youth; A love from me to thee
Is firm, what ere thou dost: It troubles me
That I have call'd the blood out of thy cheeks,
That did so well become thee: but good boy
Let me not see thee more; something is done,
That will distract me, that will make me mad,
If I behold thee: if thou tender'st me,
Let me not see thee. Bell. I will fly as far
As there is morning, ere I give distaste
To that most honour'd mind. But through these tears
Shed at my hopeless parting, I can see
A world of Treason practis'd upon you,
And her and me. Farewel for evermore;
If you shall hear, that sorrow struck me dead,
And after find me Loyal, let there be
A tear shed from you in my memorie.
And I shall rest at peace. [Exit Bel.]

Phi. Blessing be with thee,
What ever thou deserv'st. Oh, where shall I
Go bath thy body? Nature too unkind,
That made no medicine for a troubled mind! [Ex. Phi.]

Enter Arethuse.

Are. I marvel my boy comes not back again;
But that I know my love will question him
Over and over; how I slept, wak'd, talk'd;
How I remembered him when his dear name
Was last spoke, and how, when I sigh'd, wept, sung,
And ten thousand such; I should be angry at his stay.

Enter King.

King. What are your meditations? who attends you?

Are. None but my single self, I need no Guard,
I do no wrong, nor fear none.

King. Tell me: have you not a boy? Are. Yes Sir.

King. What kind of boy?

Are. A Page, a waiting boy.

King. A handsome boy?

Are. I think he be not ugly:
Well qualified, and dutiful, I know him,
I took him not for beauty.

King. He speaks, and sings and plays?

Are.

Arc. Yes Sir. King. About Eighteen?
Arc. I never ask'd his age. King. Is he full of service?
Arc. By your pardon why do you ask?
King. Put him away. Arc. Sir?
King. Put him away, h'as done you that good service,
 Shames me to speak of.

Arc. Good Sir let me understand you.
King. If you fear me, shew it in duty; put away that boy.
Arc. Let me have reason for it Sir, and then
 Your will is my command.

King. Do not you blush to ask it? Cast him off,
 Or I shall do the same to you. Y^rare one
 Shame with me, and so near unto my self,
 That by my life, I dare not tell my self,
 What you, my self have done.

Arc. What have I done my Lord?
King. 'Tis a new language, that all love to learn,
 The common people speak it well already,
 They need no Grammer; understand me well,
 There be foul whispers stirring; cast him off!
 And suddenly do it: Farewel. [Exit King.]

Arc. Where may a Maiden live securely free,
 Keeping her Honour safe? Not with the living,
 They feed upon opinions, errours, dreams,
 And make 'em truths: they draw a nourishment
 Out of defamings, grow upon disgraces;
 And when they see a vertue fortified
 Strongly above the battery of their tongues;
 Oh, how they cast to sink it; and defeated
 (Soul sick with Poyson) strike the Monuments
 Where noble names lie sleeping: till they sweat,
 And the cold Marble melt.

Enter Philaster.

Phi. Peace to your fairest thoughts, dearest Mistrefs.
Arc. Oh, my dearest servant I have a War within me.
Phi. He must be more than man, that makes these Crystals
 Run into Rivers; sweetest fair, the cause;
 And as I am your slave, tied to your goodness,
 Your creature made again from what I was,
 And newly spirited, I'le right your honour's.

Arc. Oh, my best love; that boy! Phi. What boy?
Arc. The pretty boy you gave me. Phi. What of him?
Arc. Must be no more mine. Phi. Why?
Arc. They are jealous of him. Phi. Jealous, who?
Arc. The King. Phi. Oh, my fortune,
 Then 'tis no idle jealousy. Let him go.

Arc. Oh cruel, are you hard hearted too?
 Who shall now tell you, how much I lov'd you;
 Who shall swear it to you, and weep the tears I send?
 Who shall now bring you Letters, Rings, Bracelets,
 Lose his health in service? wake tedious nights
 In stories of your praise? Who shall sing
 Your crying Elegies? And strike a sad soul
 Into senseless Pictures, and make them mourn?
 Who shall take up his Lute, and touch it, till
 He crown a silent sleep upon my eye-lid,
 Making me dream and cry, Oh my dear, dear Philaster.

Phi. Oh my heart!
 Would he had broken thee, that made thee know
 This Lady was not Loyal. Mistrefs, forget
 The boy, I'le get thee a far better.

Arc. Oh never, never such a boy again, as my Bellarion.
Bell. 'Tis but your fond affection.
Arc. With thee my boy, farewell for ever,
 All secrecy in servants: farewell faith,
 And all desire to do well for it self:
 Let all that shall succeed thee, for thy wrongs,
 Sell and betray chaste love.

Phi. And all this passion for a boy?
Arc. He was your boy, and you put him to me,
 And the loss of such must have a mourning for.
Phi. O thou forgetful woman! Arc. How, my Lord?
Phi. False Arcthusa!

Haft thou a Medicine to restore my wits,
 When I have lost 'em? If not, leave to talk, and do thus.

Arc. Do what Sir? would you sleep?
Phi. For ever Arcthusa. Oh you gods,
 Give me a worthy patience; Have I stood
 Naked, alone the shock of many fortunes?
 Have I seen mischiefs numberless, and mighty
 Grow live a sea upon me? Have I taken
 Danger as stern as death into my bosom,
 And laught upon it, made it but a mirth,
 And slung it by? Do I live now like him,
 Under this Tyrant King, that languishing
 Hears his sad Bell, and sees his Mourners? Do I
 Bear all this bravely, and must sink at length
 Under a womans fallhood? Oh that boy,
 That curfed boy? None but a villain boy, to ease your lust?

Arc. Nay, then I am betray'd,
 I feel the plot cast for my overthrow; Oh I am wretched.

Phi. Now you may take that little right I have
 To this poor Kingdom; give it to your Joy,
 For I have no joy in it. Some far place,
 Where never womankind durst set her foot,
 For bursting with her poisons, must I seek,
 And live to curse you;
 There dig a Cave, and preach to birds and beasts,
 What woman is, and help to save them from you.
 How heaven is in your eyes, but in your hearts,
 More hell than hell has; how your tongues like Scorpions,
 Both heal and poyson; how your thoughts are woven
 With thousand changes in one subtle webb,
 And worn so by you. How that foolish man,
 That reads the story of a womans face,
 And dies believing it, is lost for ever.

How all the good you have, is but a shadow,
 I'th' morning with you, and at night behind you,
 Past and forgotten. How your vows are frosts,
 Fast for a night, and with the next sun gone.
 How you are, being taken all together,
 A meer confusion, and so dead a Chaos,
 That love cannot distinguish. These sad Texts
 Till my last hour, I am bound to utter of you.
 So farewell all my wo, all my delight. [Exit Phi.]

Arc. Be merciful ye gods and strike me dead;
 What way have I deserv'd this? make my breast
 Transparent as pure Crystal, that the world
 Jealous of me, may see the foulest thought
 My heart holds. Where shall a woman turn her eyes,
 To find out constancy? Save me, how black, [Enter Bell.]

And guilty (me thinks) that boy looks now?
 Oh thou dissembler, that before thou spak'st
 Wert in thy cradle false? sent to make lies,
 And betray Innocents; thy Lord and thou,
 May glory in the ashes of a Maid
 Fool'd by her passion; but the conquest is Nothing so great as wicked. Fly away,
 Let my command force thee to that, which shame
 Would do without it. If thou understoodst
 The loathed Office thou hast undergone,
 Why, thou wouldst hide thee under heaps of hills,
 Lest men should dig and find thee. Bell. Oh what God
 Angry with men, hath sent this strange disease
 Into the noblest minds? Madam this grief
 You add unto me is no more than drops
 To seas, for which they are not seen to swell;
 My Lord had struck his anger through my heart,
 And let out all the hope of future joyes,
 You need not bid me fly, I came to part,
 To take my latest leave, Farewel for ever;
 I durst not run away in honesty,
 From such a Lady, like a boy that stole,
 Or made some grievous fault; the power of gods
 Assist you in your sufferings; hasty time
 Reveal the truth to your abused Lord,
 And mine: That he may know your worth: whilst I

Go seek out some forgotten place to die. Exit Bell.

Are. Peace guide thee, th'ast overthrow me once,
Yet if I had another Troy to lose,
Thou or another villain with thy looks,
Might talk me out of it, and send me naked,
My hair dishevel'd through the fiery streets.

Enter a Lady.

La. Madam, the King would hunt, and calls for you
With earnestness. Are. I am in tune to hunt!

Diana if thou canst rage with a maid,
As with a man, let me discover thee
Bathing, and turn me to a fearful Hind,
That I may die pursu'd by cruel Hounds,
And have my story written in my wounds. [Exeunt.]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Pharamond, Arethusa, Galatea, Megra, Dion, Cleremont, Thrasilin, and Attendants.

K. What are the Hounds before, and all the woodmen?
Our horses ready, and our bows bent?

Di. All Sir.

King. Y'are cloudy Sir, come we have forgotten
Your venial trespass, let not that sit heavy
Upon your spirit; none dare utter it.

Di. He looks like an old surfeit'd Stallion after his leaping, dull as a Dormouse: see how he sinks; the wench has shot him between wind and water, and I hope sprung a leak.

Thra. He needs no teaching, he strikes sure enough; his greatest fault is, he Hunts too much in the Purlucs, would he would leave off Poaching.

Di. And for his horn, has left it at the Lodge where he lay late; Oh, he's a precious Lime-hound; turn him loose upon the pursuit of a Lady, and if he lose her, hang him up i'th' slip. When my Fox-bitch Beauty grows proud, I'll borrow him. King. Is your Boy turn'd away?

Are. You did command Sir, and I obey you.

King. 'Tis well done: Hark ye further.

Cle. Is't possible this fellow should repent? Me thinks that were not noble in him: and yet he looks like a mortified member, as if he had a sick mans Salve in's mouth. If a worse man had done this fault now, some Physical Justice or other, would presently (without the help of an Almanack) have opened the obstructions of his Liver, and let him bloud with a Dog-whip.

Di. See, see, how modestly your Lady looks, as if she came from Churching with her Neighbour; why, what a Devil can a man see in her face, but that she's honest?

Pha. Troth no great matter to speak of, a foolish twinkling with the eye, that spoils her Coat; but he must be a cunning Herald that finds it.

Di. See how they Muster one another! O there's a Rank
Regiment where the Devil carries the Colours, and his Dam Drum major, now the world and the flesh come behind with the Carriage.

Cle. Sure this Lady has a good turn done her against her will: before she was common talk, now none dare say, Cantharides can stir her, her face looks like a Warrant, willing and commanding all Tongues, as they will answer it, to be tied up and bolted when this Lady means to let her self loose.
As I live she has got her a goodly protection, and a gracious;
and may use her body discreetly, for her healths sake, once a week, excepting Lent and Dog-days: Oh if they were to be got for mony, what a great sum would come out of the City for these Licences?

King. To horse, to horse, we lose the morning, Gentlemen.

[Exeunt.]

Enter two Woodmen.

1 Wood. What, have you lodged the Deer?

2 Wood. Yes, they are ready for the Bow.

1 Wood. Who shoots?

2 Wood. The Princess.

1 Wood. No she'll Hunt.

2 Wood. She'll take a Stand I say.

1 Wood. Who else?

2 Wood. Why the young stranger Prince.

1 Wood. He shall Shoot in a Stone-bow for me. I never lov'd his beyond-sea-ship, since he forsook the Say, for paying Ten shillings: he was there at the fall of a Deer, and would needs (out of his mightiness) give Ten groats for the Dowcers; marry the Steward would have had the Velvet-head into the bargain, to Turf his Hat withal: I think he should love Venery, he is an old Sir Tristram; for if you be remembred, he forsook the Stag once, to strike a Rascal Milking in a Medow, and her he kill'd in the eye. Who shoots else? 2 Wood. The Lady Galatea.

1 Wood. That's a good wench, and she would not chide us for tumbling of her women in the Brakes. She's liberal, and by my Bow they say she's honest, and whether that be a fault, I have nothing to do. There's all?

2 Wood. No, one more, Megra.

1 Wood. That's a firker I' faith boy; there's a wench will Ride her Haunces as hard after a Kennel of Hounds, as a Hunting-saddle; and when she comes home, get 'em clapt, and all is well again. I have known her lose her self three times in one Afternoon (if the Woods had been answerable) and it has been work enough for one man to find her, and he has sweat for it. She Rides well, and she payes well.
Hark, let's go. [Exeunt.]

Enter Philaster.

Phi. Oh, that I had been nourished in these woods
With Milk of Goats, and Acorns, and not known
The right of Crowns, nor the dissembling Trains
Of Womens looks; but dig'd my self a Cave,
Where I, my Fire, my Cattel, and my Bed
Might have been shut together in one shed;
And then had taken me some Mountain Girl,
Beaten with Winds, chaf't as the hardened Rocks
Whereon she dwells; that might have strewed my Bed
With leaves, and Reeds, and with the Skins of beasts
Our Neighbours; and have born at her big breasts (on.
My large course issue. This had been a life free from vexati-

Enter Bellario.

Bell. Oh wicked men!

An innocent man may walk safe among beasts,
Nothing assaults me here. See, my griev'd Lord
Sits as his soul were searching out a way,
To leave his body. Pardon me that must Break thy last commandment; For I must speak;
You that are griev'd can pity; hear my Lord.

Phi. Is there a Creature yet so miserable,
That I can pity? Bell. Oh my Noble Lord,
View my strange fortune, and bestow on me,
According to your bounty (if my service
Can merit nothing) so much as may serve
To keep that little piece I hold of life
From cold and hunger. Phi. Is it thou? be gone:
Go sell those misbecoming Cloaths thou wear'st,
And feed thy self with them.

Bell. Alas! my Lord, I can get nothing for them:
The silly Country people think 'tis Treason
To touch such gay things.

Phi. Now by my life this is
Unkindly done, to vex me with thy sight,
Th'art faln again to thy dissembling trade:
How should'st thou think to cozen me again?
Remains there yet a plague untri'd for me?
Even so thou wept'st and spok'st when first
I took thee up; curse on the time. If thy Commanding tears can work on any other,
Use thy art, I'll not betray it. Which way

Wilt thou take, that I may shun thee ;
For thine eyes are poyson to mine ; and I
Am loth to grow in rage. This way, or that way ?

Bell. Any will serve. But I will chuse to have
That path in chafe that leads unto my grave.

[Exeunt Phil. and Bell. severally.]

Enter Dion and the Woodmen.

Di. This is the strangest sudden change! You Woodman.

1 Wood. My Lord Dion.

Di. Saw you a Lady come this way on a Sable-horse stub-bed with stars of white ?

2 Wood. Was she not young and tall ?

Di. Yes ; Rode she to the wood, or to the plain ?

2 Wood. Faith my Lord we saw none. [Exeunt Wood.]

Enter Clermont.

Di. Pox of your questions then. What, is she found ?

Cle. Nor will be I think.

Di. Let him seek his Daughter himself ; she cannot stray about a little necessary natural business, but the whole Court must be in Arms ; when she has done, we shall have peace.

Cle. There's already a thousand fatherless tales amongst us ; some say her Horse run away with her ; some a Wolf pursued her ; others, it was a plot to kill her ; and that Armed men were seen in the Wood : but questionless, she rode away willingly.

Enter King, and Thrafiline.

King. Where is she ? Cle. Sir, I cannot tell.

King. How is that ? Answer me so again.

Cle. Sir, shall I lie ?

King. Yes, lie and damn, rather than tell me that ;
I say again, where is she ? Mutter not ;
Sir, speak you where is she ? Di. Sir, I do not know.

King. Speak that again so boldly, and by Heaven
It is thy last. You fellows answer me,

Where is she ? Mark me all, I am your King.

I wish to see my Daughter, shew her me ;

I do command you all, as you are subjects,

To shew her me, what am I not your King ?

If I, then am I not to be obeyed ?

Di. Yes, if you command things possible and honest.

King. Things possible and honest ! Hear me, thou,
Thou Traytor, that darest confine thy King to things

Possible and honest ; shew her me,
Or let me perish, if I cover not all Cicily with blood.

Di. Indeed I cannot, unless you tell me where she is.

King. You have betray'd me, y'have, let me lose

The Jewel of my life, go ; bring her me,

And set her before me ; 'tis the King

Will have it so, whose breath can still the winds,

Uncloud the Sun, charm down the swelling Sea,

And stop the Clouds of Heaven ; speak, can it not ?

Di. No. King. No, cannot the breath of Kings do this ?

Di. No ; nor smell sweet it self, if once the Lungs
Be but corrupted. King. Is it so ? Take heed.

Di. Sir, take you heed ; how you dare the powers

That must be just. King. Alas ! what are we Kings ?

Why do you gods place us above the rest ;

To be serv'd, flatter'd, and ador'd till we Believe we hold within our hands your Thunder,

And when we come to try the power we have,

There's not a leaf shakes at our threatnings.

I have sin'd 'tis true, and here stand to be punish'd ;

Yet would not thus be punish'd ; let me chuse

My way, and lay it on.

Di. He Articles with the gods ; would some body would draw bonds, for the performance of Covenants betwixt them.

Enter Pha. Galatea, and Megra.

King. What, is she found ?

Pha. No, we have ta'ne her Horse:

He gallopt empty by : there's some Treason ;
You Galatea rode with her into the wood ; why left you her ?

Gal. She did command me.

King. Command ! you should not.

Gal. 'Twould ill become my Fortunes and my Birth
To disobey the Daughter of my King.

King. Y'are all cunning to obey us for our hurt,
But I will have her. Pha. If I have her not,

By this hand there shall be no more Cicily.

Di. What will he carry it to Spain in's pocket ?

Pha. I will not leave one man alive, but the King,
A Cook and a Taylor.

Di. Yet you may do well to spare your Ladies Bed-fellow, and her you may keep for a Spawner.

King. I see the injuries I have done must be reveng'd.

Di. Sir, this is not the way to find her out.

King. Run all, disperse your selves : the man that finds her,
Or (if she be kill'd) the Traytor ; Ple may him great.

Di. I know some would give five thousand pounds to find

Pha. Come let us seek. (her.

King. Each man a several way, here I my self.

Di. Come Gentlemen we here.

Cle. Lady you must go search too.

Meg. I had rather be search'd my self. [Exeunt omnes.]

Enter Arcthusa.

Are. Where am I now ? Fect find me out a way,
Without the counsel of my troubled head,
I'll follow you boldly about these woods,
O're mountains, thorow brambles, pits, and fouds :
Heaven I hope will ease me. I am sick.

Enter Bellario.

Bell. Yonder's my Lady ; Heaven knows I want nothing ;
Because I do not wish to live, yet I
Will try her Charity. O hear, you that have plenty,
From that flowing store, drop some on dry ground ; see,
The lively red is gone to guard her heart ;
I fear she faints. Madam look up, she breaths not ;
Open once more those rosie twins, and send
Unto my Lord, your latest farewell ; Oh, she stirs :
How is it Madam ? Speak comfort.

Are. 'Tis not gently done,
To put me in a miserable life,
And hold me there ; I pray thee let me go,
I shall do best without thee ; I am well.

Enter Philaster.

Phil. I am to blame to be so much in rage,
I'll tell her coolly, when and where I heard
This killing truth. I will be temperate
In speaking, and as just in hearing.
Oh monstrous ! Tempt me not ye gods, good gods
Tempt not a frail man, what's he, that has a heart
But he must ease it here ?

Bell. My Lord, help the Princess.

Are. I am well, forbear.

Phi. Let me love lightning, let me be embrac'd
And kist by Scorpions, or adore the eyes
Of Basilisks, rather than trust to tongues,
And shrink these veins up ; stick me here a stone
Lasting to ages in the memory

Of this damn'd act. Hear me you wicked ones,
You have put the hills on fire into this breast,
Not to be quench'd with tears, for which may guilt
Sit on your bosoms ; at your meals, and beds,
Despair await you : what, before my face ?
Poyson of Aspes between your lips ; Discases

Be your best issues ; Nature make a Curse
And throw it on you. Are. Dear Philaster, leave
To be enrag'd, and hear me. Phi. I have done ;
Forgive my passion, not the calm'd sea,
When Aeolus locks up his windy brood,
Is less disturb'd than I, I'll make you know it.

Dear Arethusa, do but take this sword,
And search how temperate a heart I have;
Then you and this your boy, may live and reign
In lust without control; Wilt thou Bellarion?
I prethee kill me; thou art poor, and maist
Nourish ambitious thoughts, when I am dead:
This way were freer; Am I raging now?
If I were mad I should desire to live;
Sirs, feel my pulse; whether have you known
A man in a more equal tune to die?

Bel. Alas my Lord, your pulse keeps madmans time,
So does your tongue. Phi. You will not kill me then?

Are. Kill you? Bell. Not for a world.

Phi. I blame not thee,
Bellarion; thou hast done but that, which gods
Would have transform'd themselves to do; be gone,
Leave me without reply; this is the last
Of all our meeting. Kill me with this sword;
Be wise, or worse will follow: we are two
Earth cannot bear at once. Resolve to do, or suffer.

Are. If my fortunes be so good to let me fall
Upon thy hand, I shall have peace in death.
Yet tell me this, will there be no slanders,
No jealousies in the other world, no ill there? Phi. No.

Are. Shew me then the way. Phi. Then guide
My feeble hand, you that have power to do it,
For I must perform a piece of justice. If your youth
Have any way offended Heaven, let prayers
Short and effectual reconcile you to it.

Are. I am prepared.

Enter a Country-fellow.

Coun. I'll see the King if he be in the Forest, I have hunted him these two hours; if I should come home and not see him my Sisters would laugh at me; I can see nothing but people better horst than my self, that outride me; I can hear nothing but shouting. These Kings had need of good brains, this whooping is able to put a mean man out of his wits. There's a Courtier with his sword drawn, by this hand upon a woman, I think.

Phi. Are you at peace?

Are. With Heavens and Earth.

Phi. May they divide thy soul and body?

Coun. Hold dastard, strike a Woman! th'art a craven I warrant thee, thou wouldst be loth to play half a dozen of venies at wasters with a good fellow for a broken head.

Phi. Leave us good friend.

Are. What ill bred man art thou, to intrude thy self
Upon our private sports, our recreations?

Coun. God 'uds, I understand you not, but I know the Rogue has hurt you.

Phi. Pursue thy own affairs: it will be ill (to)
To multiply blood upon my head; which thou wilt force me

Coun. I know not your Rhetorick, but I can lay it on if you touch the woman. [They fight.]

Phi. Slave, take what thou deservest.

Are. Heavens guard my Lord.

Coun. Oh do you breathe?

Phi. I hear the tread of people: I am hurt.
The gods take part against me, could this Boor
Have held me thus else? I must shift for life,
Though I do loath it. I would find a course,
To lose it, rather by my will than force. Exit Phil.

Coun. I cannot follow the Rogue. I pray thee wench come and kiss me now.

Enter Phara, Dion, Cle. Thra. and Woodmen.

Phi. What art thou?

Coun. Almost kil'd I am for a foolish woman; a knave has hurt her. dam?

Phi. The Princesses Gentlemen! Where's the wound Mais it dangerous? Are. He has not hurt me.

Coun. I'faith she lies, has hurt her in the breast, look else.

Phi. O sacred spring of innocent blood!

Di. 'Tis above wonder! who should dare this?

Are. I felt it not.

Phi. Speak villain, who has hurt the Princess?

Coun. Is it the Princess? Di. I.

Coun. Then I have seen something yet.

Phi. But who has hurt her?

Coun. I told you a Rogue I ne'er saw him before, I.

Phi. Madam who did it?

Are. Some dishonest wretch, Alas I know him not,
And do forgive him.

Coun. He's hurt too, he cannot go far, I made my Fathers old Fox flie about his ears.

Phi. How will you have me kill him?

Are. Not at all, 'tis some distracted fellow.

Phi. By this hand, I'll leave ne'er a piece of him bigger than a Nut, and bring him all in my Hat.

Are. Nay, good Sir;

If you do take him, bring him quick to me,
And I will study for a punishment,
Great as his fault. Phi. I will.

Are. But swear.

Phi. By all my love I will: Woodmen conduct the Princesses to the King, and bear that wounded fellow to dressing:
Come Gentlemen, we'll follow the chase close.

[Ex. Are. Phi. Di. Cle. Thra. and 1 Woodman.

Coun. I pray you friend let me see the King.

2 Wood. That you shall, and receive thanks. [Exeunt.]

Coun. If I get clear with this, I'll go see no more gay fights

Enter Bellario.

Bell. A heaviness near death sits on my brow,
And I must sleep: Bear me thou gentle bank,
For ever if thou wilt: you sweet ones all,
Let me unworthy press you: I could wish
I rather were a Coarse strewed o're with you,
Than quick above you. Dulness shuts mine eyes,
And I am giddy; Oh that I could take
So sound a sleep, that I might never wake.

Enter Philaster.

Phi. I have done ill, my conscience calls me false,
To strike at her, that would not strike at me:
When I did fight, me thought I heard her pray
The gods to guard me. She may be abus'd,
And I a loathed villain: if she be,
She will conceal who hurt her; He has wounds;
And cannot follow, neither knows he me.
Who's this; Bellarion sleeping? If thou beest Guilty, there is no justice that thy sleep [Cry within.]
Should be so sound, and mine, whom thou hast wrong'd,
So broken: Hark I am pursued: you gods
I'll take this offer'd means of my escape:
They have no mark to know me, but my wounds,
If she be true; if false, let mischief light
On all the world at once. Sword, print my wounds
Upon this sleeping boy: I ha' none I think
Are mortal, nor would I lay greater on thee. [Wounds him.]

Bell. Oh death I hope is come, blest be that hand,
It meant me well; again, for pities sake.

Phi. I have caught my self, [Phi. falls.]
The loss of blood hath stay'd my flight. Here, here,
Is he that stroke thee: take thy full revenge,
Use me, as I did mean thee, worse than death:
I'll teach thee to revenge this luckless hand
Wounded the Princess, tell my followers
Thou didst receive these hurts in staying me,
And I will second thee: Get a reward.

Bell. Fly, fly my Lord and save your self.

Phi. How's this?

Wouldst thou I should be safe?

Bell. Else it were vain

For me to live. These little wounds I have,
Ha' not bled much, reach me that noble hand,
I'll help to cover you. Phi. Art thou true to me?

Bell.

Bell. Or let me perish loath'd. Come my good Lord,
Creep in amongst those bushes: who does know
But that the gods may save your (much lov'd) breath?

Phi. Then I shall die for grief, if not for this,
That I have wounded thee: what wilt thou do?

Bell. Shift for my self well: peace, I hear 'em come.

Within. Follow, follow, follow; that way they went.

Bell. With my own wounds I'll bloody my own sword.
I need not counterfeit to fall; Heaven knows,
That I can stand no longer.

Enter Pha. Dion, Cle. and Thra.

Pha. To this place we have tract him by his blood.

Cle. Yonder, my Lord, creeps one away.

Di. Stay Sir, what are you?

Bell. A wretched creature wounded in these Woods
By Beasts; relieve me, if your names be men,
Or I shall perish. Di. This is he my Lord,
Upon my soul that hurt her; 'tis the boy,
That wicked boy that serv'd her.

Pha. O thou damn'd in thy creation!
What cause could'st thou shape to hurt the Princess?

Bell. Then I am betrayed.

Di. Betrayed! no, apprehended.

Bell. I confefs;
Urge it no more, that big with evil thoughts
I set upon her, and did take my aim
Her death. For charity let fall at once
The punishment you mean, and do not load
This weary flesh with tortures.

Pha. I will know who hir'd thee to this deed?

Bell. Mine own revenge. Pha. Revenge, for what?

Bell. It pleas'd her to receive
Me as her Page, and when my fortunes ebb'd,
That men strid o're them carelessly, she did show
Her welcome graces on me, and did swell
My fortunes, till they overflow'd their banks,
Threatning the men that cross'd 'em; when as swift
As storms arise at sea, she turn'd her eyes
To burning Suns upon me, and did dry
The streams she had bestow'd, leaving me worse
And more contemn'd than other little brooks,
Because I had been great: In short, I knew
I could not live, and therefore did desire
To die reveng'd. Pha. If tortures can be found,
Long as thy natural life, resolve to feel
The utmost rigour. [Philaster creeps out of a bush.]

Cle. Help to lead him hence.

Phi. Turn back you ravishers of Innocence,
Know ye the price of that you bear away so rudely?

Pha. Who's that? Di. 'Tis the Lord Philaster.

Phi. 'Tis not the treasure of all Kings in one,
The wealth of Tagus, nor the Rocks of Pearl,
That pave the Court of Neptune, can weigh down
That vertue. It was I that hurt the Princess.
Place me, some god, upon a Piramis,
Higher than hills of earth, and lend a voice
Loud as your Thunder to me, that from thence,
I may discourse to all the under-world,
The worth that dwells in him. Pha. How's this?

Bell. My Lord, some man
Weary of life, that would be glad to die.

Phi. Leave these untimely courtesies Bellario.

Bell. Alas he's mad, come will you lead me on?

Phi. By all the Oaths that men ought most to keep:
And Gods do punish most, when men do break,
He toucht her not. Take heed Bellario,
How thou dost drown the virtues thou hast shown
With perjury. By all that's good 'twas I:
You know the stood betwixt me and my right.

Pha. Thy own tongue be thy judge.

Cle. It was Philaster. Di. Is't not a brave boy?
Well Sirs, I fear we were all deceived.

Phi. Have I no friend here? Di. Yes.

Phi. Then shew it;
Some good body lend a hand to draw us nearer.
Would you have tears shed for you when you die?
Then lay me gentle on his neck that there
I may weep floods, and breath out my spirit:
'Tis not the wealth of Plutus, nor the gold
Lockt in the heart of earth, can buy away
This arm-full from me, this had been a ransom
To have redeem'd the great Augustus Caesar,
Had he been taken: you hard-hearted men,
More stony than these Mountains, can you see
Such clear pure blood drop, and not cut your flesh
To stop his life? To bind whose better wounds, Queens ought to tear their hair, and with their tears, (laster.
Bath 'em. Forgive me, thou that art the wealth of poor Phi.

Enter King, Arethusa and a Guard.

King. Is the villain ta'ne? (laster.

Pha. Sir, here be two confests the deed; but say it was Phi.

Phi. Question it no more, it was.

King. The fellow that did fight with him will tell us.

Are. Ay me, I know he will.

King. Did not you know him?

Are. Sir, if it was he, he was disguised.

Phi. I was so. Oh my stars! that I should live still.

King. Thou ambitious fool;
Thou that hast laid a train for thy own life;
Now I do mean to do, I'll leave to talk, bear him to prison.

Are. Sir, they did plot together to take hence
This harmless life; should it pass unreveng'd,
I should to earth go weeping: grant me then
(By all the love a Father bears his Child)

Their custodies, and that I may appoint
Their tortures and their death.

Di. Death? soft, our Law will not reach that, for this fault.

King. 'Tis granted, take 'em to you, with a Guard.
Come Princely Pharamond, this business past,
We may with more security go on to your intended match.

Cle. I pray that this action lose not Philaster the hearts of the people.

Di. Fear it not, their over wife heads will think it but a trick.

[Exeunt Omnes.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Dion, Cleremont, and Thrasiline.

Thra. HAS the King sent for him to death?

Di. Yes, but the King must know, 'tis not in his power to war with Heaven.

Cle. We linger time; the King sent for Philaster and the Headsmen an hour ago.

Thra. Are all his wounds well?

Di. All they were but scratches; but the loss of blood made him faint. Cle. We dally Gentlemen.

Thra. Away.

Di. We'll scuffle hard before he perish. [Exeunt.]

Enter Philaster, Arethusa, and Bellario.

Are. Nay dear Philaster grieve not, we are well.

Bell. Nay good my Lord forbear, we are wondrous well.

Phi. Oh Arethusa! O Bellario! leave to be kind:
I shall be shot from Heaven, as now from Earth,

If you continue so; I am a man,
False to a pair of the most trusty ones

That ever earth bore, can it bear us all?
Forgive and leave me, but the King hath sent

To call me to my death, Oh shew it me,
And then forget me: And for thee my boy,

I shall deliver words will mollifie
The hearts of beasts, to spare thy innocence.

Bell. Alas my Lord, my life is not a thing

Worthy your noble thoughts; 'tis not a life,
'Tis but a piece of child-hood thrown away:
Should I out-live, I shall then out-live
Vertue and honour. And when that day comes,
If ever I should close these eyes but once,
May I live spotted for my perjury,
And waste my limbs to nothing.

Are. And I (the woful'st maid as ever was, Forc'd with my hands to bring my Lord to death)
Do by the honour of a Virgin swear,
To tell no hours beyond it.

Phi. Make me not hated so.

Are. Come from this prison, all joyful to our deaths.

Phi. People will tear me when they find you true
To such a wretch as I; I shall die loath'd.
Enjoy your Kingdoms peaceably, whil'st I
For ever sleep forgotten with my faults,
Every just servant, every maid in love
Will have a piece of me if you be true.

Are. My dear Lord say not so.

Bell. A piece of you?

He was not born of women that can cut it and look on.

Phi. Take me in tears betwixt you,

For my heart will break with shame and sorrow.

Are. Why 'tis well. Bell. Lament no more.

Phi. What would you have done

If you had wrong'd me basely, and had found
My life no price, compar'd to yours? For love Sirs,
Deal with me truly.

Pell. 'Twas mistaken, Sir. Phi. Why if it were?

Bell. Then Sir we would have ask'd you pardon.

Phi. And have hope to enjoy it? Are. Enjoy it? I.

Phi. Would you indeed? be plain.

Bell. We would my Lord.

Phi. Forgive me then. Are. So, so.

Bell. 'Tis as it should be now.

Phi. Lead to my death.

[Exeunt.]

Enter King, Dion, Cleremont, and Thrasiline.

King. Gentlemen, who saw the Prince?

Cle. So please you Sir, he's gone to see the City,
And the new Platform, with some Gentlemen
Attending on him. King. Is the Princess ready
To bring her prisoner out? Thra. She waits your Grace.

King. Tell her we stay.

Di. King, you may be deceiv'd yet:
The head you aim at cost more setting on
Than to be lost so slightly: If it must off
Like a wild overflow, that soops before him
A golden Stack, and with it shakes down Bridges,
Cracks the strong hearts of Pines, whose Cable roots
Held out a thousand Storms, a thousand Thunders,
And so made mightier, takes whole Villages
Upon his back, and in that heat of pride,
Charges strong Towns, Towers, Castles, Palaces,
And layes them desolate: so shall thy head,
Thy noble head, bury the lives of thousands
That must bleed with thee like a sacrifice,
In thy red ruins.

Enter Phil. Are. and Bell. in a Robe and Garland.

King. How now, what Mask is this?

Bell. Right Royal Sir, I should
Sing you an Epithalamium of these Lovers,
But having lost my best ayres with my fortunes,
And wanting a celestial Harp to strike
This blessed union on; thus in glad story
I give you all. These two fair Cedar-branches,
The noblest of the Mountain, where they grew
Straightest and tallest, under whose still shades
The worthier beasts have made their layers, and slept
Free from the Syrian Star, and the fell Thunder-stroke,
Free from the Clouds, when they were big with humour,
And delivered in thousand spouts, their issues to the earth:

O there was none but silent quiet there!
Till never pleas'd fortune shot up shrubs,
Base under brambles to divorce these branches;
And for a while they did so, and did reign
Over the Mountain, and choakt up his beauty
With Brakes, rude Thorns and Thistles, till thy Sun
Scorcht them even to the roots, and dried them there:
And now a gentle gale hath blown again
That made these branches meet, and twine together,
Never to be divided: The god that sings
His holy numbers over marriage beds,
Hath knit their noble hearts, and here they stand
Your Children mighty King, and I have done.

King. How, how?

Are. Sir, if you love it in plain truth,
For there is no Masking in't; This Gentleman
The prisoner that you gave me is become
My keeper, and through all the bitter throws
Your jealousies and his ill fate have wrought him,
Thus nobly hath he strangled, and at length
Arriv'd here my dear Husband.

King. Your dear Husband! call in
The Captain of the Cittadel; There you shall keep Your Wedding. I'll provide a Mask shall make Your Hymen turn his Saffron into a fullen Coat,
And sing sad Requiems to your departing souls:
Bloud shall put out your Torches, and instead
Of gaudy flowers about your wanton necks,
An Ax shall hang like a prodigious Meteor
Ready to crop your loves sweets. Hear you gods:
From this time do I shake all title off,
Of Father to this woman, this base woman,
And what there is of vengeance, in a Lion
Cast amongst Dogs, or rob'd of his dear young,
The same inforc't more terrible, more mighty,
Expect from me. Are. Sir,

By that little life I have left to swear by,
There's nothing that can stir me from my self.
What I have done, I have done without repentance,
For death can be no Bug-bear unto me,
So long as Pharamond is not my headsmen.

Di. Sweet peace upon thy soul, thou worthy maid
When ere thou dyest; for this time I'll excuse thee,
Or be thy Prologue. Phi. Sir, let me speak next,
And let my dying words be better with you
Than my dull living actions; if you aime
At the dear life of this sweet Innocent,
Y'are a Tyrant and a savage Monster;
Your memory shall be as foul behind you
As you are living, all your better deeds
Shall be in water writ, but this in Marble:
No Chronicle shall speak you, though your own,
But for the shame of men. No Monument
(Though high and big as Pelion) shall be able
To cover this base murder; make it rich
With Brass, with purest Gold, and shining Jasper,
Like the Pyramids, lay on Epitaphs,
Such as make great men gods; my little marble
(That only cloaths my ashes, not my faults)
Shall far out shine it: And for after issues
Think not so madly of the heavenly wisdoms,
That they will give you more, for your mad rage
To cut off, unless it be some Snake, or something
Like your self, that in his birth shall strangle you.
Remember, my Father King; there was a fault,
But I forgive it: let that sin perswade you
To love this Lady. If you have a soul,
Think, save her, and be saved, for my self,
I have so long expected this glad hour,
So languisht under you, and daily withered,
That heaven knows it is my joy to dye,
I find a recreation in't.

Enter

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's the King? King. Here.

Mess. Get you to your strength,
And rescue the Prince Pharamond from danger,
He's taken prisoner by the Citizens,
Fearing the Lord Philaster. Di. Oh brave followers;
Mutiny, my fine dear Country-men, mutiny,
Now my brave valiant foremen, shew your weapons
In honour of your Mistresses.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. Arm, arm, arm.

King. A thousand devils take 'em.

Di. A thousand blessings on 'em.

Mess. Arm O King, the City is in mutiny, Led by an old Gray Ruffin, who comes on
In rescue of the Lord Philaster. [Exit with Are. Phi. Bell.

King. Away to the Cittadel, I'll see them safe,
And then cope with these Burgers: Let the Guard
And all the Gentlemen give strong attendance. [Ex. King.

[Manent Dion, Cleremont, Thrasiline.

Cle. The City up! this was above our wishes.

Di. I and the Marriage too; by my life,
This noble Lady has deceiv'd us all, a plague upon my self;
a thousand plagues, for having such unworthy thoughts of her dear honour: O I could beat my self, or do you beat me and I'll beat you, for we had all one thought.

Cle. No, no, 'twill but lose time.

Di. You say true, are your swords sharp? Well my dear Country-men, what ye lack, if you continue and fall not back upon the first broken shin, I'll have you chronicled, and chronicled, and cut and chronicled and all to be prais'd, and sung in Sonnets, and bath'd in new brave Ballads, that all tongues shall trouble you in Sacula Saculorum my kind
Can-carriers.

Thra. What if a toy take 'em i'th' heels now, and they run all away, and cry the Devil take the hindmost?

Di. Then the same Devil take the foremost too, and sowce him for his breakfast; if they all prove Cowards, my curfes fly amongst them and be speeding. May they have Murreins reign to keep the Gentlemen at home unbound in ease freez: May the Moths branch their Velvets, and their Silks only be worn before fore eyes. May their false lights undo 'em, and discover presses, holes, stains, and oldness in their Stuffs, and make them shop-rid: May they keep Whores and Horses, and break; and live mued up with necks of Beef and Turnips: May they have many children, and none like the Father: May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their Parcels, unless it be the goarish Latine they write in their bonds, and may they wreite that false, and lose their debts.

Enter the King.

King. Now the vengeance of all the gods confound them;
how they swarm together! what a hum they raise; Devils choak your wilde throats; If a man had need to use their valours, he must pay a Brokage for it, and then bring 'em on, they will fight like sheep. 'Tis Philaster, none but Philaster must allay this heat: They will not hear me speak, but fling dirt at me, and call me Tyrant. Oh run dear friend, and bring the Lord Philaster: speak him fair, call him
Prince, do him all the courtesie you can, commend me to him. Oh my wits, my wits! [Exit Cle.

Di. Oh my brave Countrymen! as I live, I will not buy a pin out of your walls for this; Nay, you shall cozen me, and I'll thank you; and send you Brawn and Bacon, and foil you every long vacation a brace of foremen, that at Michaelmas shall come up fat and kicking.

King. What they will do with this poor Prince, the gods know, and I fear.

Di. Why Sir: they'll flea him, and make Church Buckets on's skin to squench rebellion, then clap a rivet in's sconce, and hang him up for a sign.

Enter Cleremont with Philaster.

King. O worthy Sir fo. give me, do not make
Your miseries and my faults meet together,
To bring a greater danger. Be your self,
Still found amongst Diseases, I have wrong'd you,
And though I find it last, and beaten to it,
Let first your goodness know it. Calm the people,
And be what you were born to: take your love,
And with her my repentance, and my wishes,
And all my prayers, by the gods my heart speaks this:
And if the least fall from me not perform'd,
May I be struck with Thunder.

Phi. Mighty Sir,

I will not do your greatness so much wrong,
As not to make your word truth; free the Princess,
And the poor boy, and let me stand the shock
Of this mad Sea breach, which I'll either turn
Or perish with it.

King. Let your own word free them.

Phi. Then thus I take my leave kissing your hand,
And hanging on your Royal word: be Kingly,
And be not moved Sir, I shall bring your peace,
Or never bring my self back.

King. All the gods go with thee. [Exeunt Omnes.

Enter an old Captain and Citizens with Pharamond.

Cap. Come my brave Mirmidons let's fall on, let our caps
Swarm my boys, and you nimble tongues forget your mothers
Gibberish, of what do you lack, and set your mouths
Up Children, till your Pallats fall frighted half a
Fathom, past the cure of Bay-salt and gross Pepper.

And then cry Philaster, brave Philaster,
Let Philaster be deeper in request, my ding-dongs,
My pairs of dear Indentures, King of Clubs,
Than your cold water Chamblets or your paintings
Spitted with Copper; let not your hasty Silks,
Or your branch'd Cloth of Bodkin, or your Tishues,
Dearly belov'd of spiced Cake and Custard,
Your Robin-hoods scarlets and Johns, tie your affections
In darkness to your shops; no, dainty Duckers,
Up with your three pil'd spirits, your wrought valours.
And let your un-cut Coller make the King feel
The measure of your mightiness Philaster.

Cry my Rose nobles, cry. All. Philaster, Philaster.

Cap. How do you like this my Lord Prince, these are mad boys, I tell you, these are things that will not strike their top-sayles to a Foist. And let a man of war, an Argosie hull and cry Cockles.

Phi. Why you rude slave, do you know what you do?

Cap. My Pretty Prince of Puppets, we do know,
And give your greatness warning, that you talk
No more such Bugs-words, or that foldred Crown
Shall be scratch'd with a Musket: Dear Prince Pippen,
Down with your noble blood; or as I live,
I'll have you codled: let him lose my spirits,
Make us a round Ring with your Bills my Hectors,
And let us see what this trim man dares do.
Now Sir, have at you; here I it,

And with this swashing blow, do you swear Prince;
I could hulk your Grace, and hang you up cross-leg'd,
Like a Hare at a Poulters, and do this with this wiper.

Phi. You will not see me murder'd wicked Villains?

1 Cit. Yes indeed will we Sir, we have not seen one foe a great while.

Cap. He would have weapons would he? give him a Broad-side my brave boyes with your pikes, branch me his skin in Flowers like a Satin, and between every Flower a mortal cut, your Royalty shall ravel, jag him Gentlemen, I'll have him cut to the kell, then down the seams, oh for a whip
To make him Galoone-Laces,
I'll have a Coach-whip.

Phi. O spare me Gentlemen.

Cap. Hold, hold, the man begins to fear and know himself,
He

He shall for this time only be seal'd up
With a Feather through his nose, that he may only see Heaven, and think whither he's going, (King
Nay beyond-Sea Sir, we will proclaim you, you would be Thou tender Heir apparent to a Church-Ale,
Thou sleight Prince of single Sarcenet ;
Thou Royal Ring-tail, fit to fly at nothing
But poor mens Poultry, and have every Boy
Beat thee from that too with his Bread and Butter.

Phi. Gods keep me from these Hell-hounds.

2 Cit. Shall's geld him Captain ?

Cap. No, you shall spare his dowcets my dear Donfels,
As you respect the Ladies let them flourish, (Boys.
The curses of a longing woman kill as speedy as a Plague,

1 Cit. I'll have a Leg that's certain.

2 Cit. I'll have an Arm.

3 Cit. I'll have his Nose, and at mine own charge build a Colledge, and clap't upon the Gate.

4 Cit. I'll have his little Gut to string a Kit with,
For certainly a Royal Gut will sound like silver. (once.

Phi. Would they were in thy belly, and I past my pain

5 Cit. Good Captain let me have his Liver to feed Ferrets.

Cap. Who will have parcels else ? speak.

Phi. Good gods consider me, I shall be tortur'd.

1 Cit. Captain, I'll give you the trimming of your hand-sword, and let me have his Skin to make false Scabbards.

2 He had no horns Sir had he ? (horns ?

Cap. No Sir, he's a Pollard, what would'st thou do with

Cit. O if he had, I would have made rare Hafts and Whistles of 'em, but his Shin-bones if they be found shall serve me.

Enter Philaster.

All. Long live Philaster, the brave Prince Philaster.

Phi. I thank you Gentlemen, but why are these Rude weapons brought abroad, to teach your hands
Uncivil Trades ? Cap. My Royal Rosiclear,
We are thy Mirmidons, thy Guard, thy Rorers,
And when thy noble body is in durance,
Thus do we clap our musty Murrions on,
And trace the streets in terrour : Is it peace
Thou Mars of men ? Is the King sociable,
And bids thee live ? Art thou above thy foemen,
And free as Phœbus ? Speak, if not, this stand
Of Royal blood shall be abroach, atilt, and run
Even to the lees of honour.

Phi. Hold and be satisfied, I am my self
Free as my thoughts are, by the gods I am.

Cap. Art thou the dainty darling of the King ?
Art thou the Hylas to our Hercules ?
Do the Lords bow, and the regarded scarlets,
Kiss their Gumd-gols, and cry, we are your servants ?
Is the Court Navigable, and the presence struck
With Flags of friendship ? if not, we are thy Castle
And this man sleeps.

Phi. I am what I desire to be, your friend,
I am what I was born to be, your Prince.

Phi. Sir, there is some humanity in you,
You have a noble soul, forget my name,
And know my misery, set me safe aboard
From these wild Cambals, and as I live,
I'll quit this Land for ever: there is nothing,
Perpetual prisonment, cold, hunger, sickness
Of all sorts, all dangers, and all together
The worst company of the worst men, madnes, age,
To be as many Creatures as a woman,
And do as all they do, nay to despair;
But I would rather make it a new Nature,
And live with all those than endure one hour
Amongst these wild Dogs.

Phi. I do pity you: Friends discharge your fears,
Deliver me the Prince, I'll warrant you
I shall be old enough to find my safety.

3 Cit. Good Sir take heed he does not hurt you,

He's a fierce man I can tell you Sir.

Cap. Prince, by your leave I'll have a Surfingle,
And Male you like a Hawke. [He stirs.

Phi. Away, away, there is no danger in him:
Alas he had rather sleep to shake his fit off.
Look you friends, how gently he leads, upon my word
He's tame enough, he need no further watching.
Good my friends go to your houses and by me have your pardons, and my love,

And know there shall be nothing in my power
You may deserve, but you shall have your wishes.
To give you more thanks were to flatter you,
Continue still your love, and for an earnest
Drink this. All. Long maist thou live brave Prince, brave
Prince, brave Prince. [Exeunt Phi. and Pha.

Cap. Thou art the King of Courtesie:
Fall off again my sweet youths, come and every man
Trace to his house again, and hang his pewter up, then to
The Tavern and bring your wives in Muffes: we will have Musick and the red grape shall make us dance, and rise Boys.
[Exeunt.

Enter King, Arc. Gal. Meg. Cle. Dion, Thra. Bellario, and Attendants.

King. Is it appeas'd ?

Di. Sir, all is quiet as this dead of night,
As peaceable as sleep, my Lord Philaster
Brings on the Prince himself. King. Kind Gentlemen!
I will not break the least word I have given
In promise to him, I have heap'd a world
Of grief upon his head, which yet I hope
To wash away.

Enter Philaster and Pharamond.

Cle. My Lord is come. King. My Son!
Blest be the time that I have leave to call
Such vertue mine; now thou art in mine arms,
Me thinks I have a salve unto my breast
For all the stings that dwell there, streams of grief
That I have wrought thee, and as much of joy
That I repent it, issue from mine eyes:
Let them appease thee, take thy right; take her,
She is thy right too, and forget to urge
My vexed soul with that I did before.

Phi. Sir, is it blotted from my memory,
Past and forgotten: For you Prince of Spain,
Whom I have thus redeem'd, you have full leave
To make an honourable voyage home.
And if you would go furnish'd to your Realm
With fair provision, I do see a Lady
Me thinks would gladly bear you company:
How like you this piece ?

Meg. Sir, he likes it well,
For he hath tried it, and found it worth
His princely liking; we were ta'ne a bed,
I know your meaning, I am not the first
That Nature taught to seek a fellow forth:
Can shame remain perpetually in me,
And not in others? or have Princes selves
To cure ill names that meaner people want ?

Phi. What mean you ?

Meg. You must get another ship
To clear the Princess and the boy together.

Di. How now !

Meg. Others took me, and I took her and him
At that all women may be ta'ne sometimes:
Ship us all four my Lord, we can endure
Weather and wind alike.

King. Clear thou thy self, or know not me for Father.

Arc. This earth, How false it is? what means is left for me
To clear my self? It lies in your belief,
My Lords believe me, and let all things else
Struggle together to dishonour me.

Bell. O stop your ears great King, that I may speak

As freedom would, then I will call this Lady
As base as be her actions, hear me Sir,
Believe how hated blood when it rebels
Against your reason sooner than this Lady.

Meg. By this good light he bears it handsomely.

Phi. This Lady? I will sooner trust the wind
With Feathers, or the troubled Sea with Pearl,
Than her with any thing; believe her not!
Why think you, if I did believe her words;
I would outlive 'em: honour cannot take
Revenge on you, then what were to be known
But death? King. Forget her Sir, since all is knit Between us: but I must request of you
One favour, and will fadly be denied.

Phi. Command what ere it be.

King. Swear to be true to what you promise.

Phi. By the powers above,
Let it not be the death of her or him,
And it is granted. King. Bear away the boy
To Torture, I will have her clear'd or buried.

Phi. O let me call my words back, worthy Sir,
Ask something else, bury my life and right (once.
In one poor grave, but do not take away my life and fame at

King. Away with him, it stands irrevocable.

Phi. Turn all your eyes on me, here stands a man
The falsest and the basest of this world:
Set swords against this breast some honest man,
For I have liv'd till I am pitied,
My former deeds are hateful, but this last
Is pitifull, for I unwillingly
Have given the dear preserver of my life
Unto his Torture: is it in the power [Offers to kill himself.
Of flesh and blood, to carry this and live?

Are. Dear Sir be patient yet, or stay that hand.

King. Sirs, strip that boy.

Di. Come Sir, your tender flesh will try your constancie.

Bell. O kill me gentlemen. Di. No, help Sirs.

Bell. Will you Torture me?

King. Hast there, why stay you?

Bell. Then I shall not break my vow,
You know just gods, though I discover all.

King. How's that? Will he confess?

Di. Sir, so he says. King. Speak then.

Bell. Great King if you command
This Lord to talk with me alone, my tongue
Urg'd by my heart, shall utter all the thoughts
My youth hath known, and stranger things than these
You hear not often. King. Walk aside with him.

Di. Why speak'st thou not?

Bell. Know you this face my Lord?

Di. No. Bell. Have you not seen it, nor the like?

Di. Yes, I have seen the like, but readily
I know not where. Bell. I have been often told

In Court, of one Euphrasia, a Lady
And Daughter to you; betwixt whom and me
(They that would flatter my bad face would swear)
There was such strange resemblance, that we two
Could not be known asunder, dress alike.

Di. By Heaven and so there is.

Bell. For her fair sake,
Who now doth spend the spring time of her life
In holy Pilgrimage, move to the King,
That I may scape this Torture. Di. But thou speak'st
As like Euphrasia as thou dost look,
How came it to thy knowledge that she lives in Pilgrimage?

Bell. I know it not my Lord,
But I have heard it, and do scarce believe it.

Di. Oh my shame, is't possible? Draw near,
That I may gaze upon thee, art thou she?
Or else her Murderer? where wert thou born?

Bell. In Siracusa. Di. What's thy name?

Bell. Euphrasia. (hadst died

Di. O 'tis just, 'tis she now, I do know thee, Oh that thou
And I had never seen thee nor my shame,

How shall I own thee? shall this tongue of mine
E're call thee Daughter more?

Bell. Would I had died indeed, I wish it too,
And so I must have done by vow, e're published
What I have told, but that there was no means
To hide it longer, yet I joy in this,
The Princess is all clear.

King. What have you done?

Di. All is discovered. Phi. Why then hold you me?

Di. All is discovered, pray you let me go. } He offers to King. Stay him. Are. What is discovered? } stab himself.

Di. Why my shame, it is a woman, let her speak the rest.

Phi. How! that again. Di. It is a woman.

Phi. Blest be you powers that favour innocence.

King. Lay hold upon that Lady.

Phi. It is a woman Sir, hark Gentlemen!
It is a woman. Arethusa take

My soul into thy breast, that would be gone
With joy: it is a woman, thou art fair,
And vertuous still to ages, in despite of malice.

King. Speak you, where lies his shame?

Bell. I am his Daughter. Phi. The Gods are just.

Di. I dare accuse none, but before you two
The vertue of our age, I bend my knee
For mercy. Phi. Take it freely; for I know,
Though what thou didst were undiscreetly done,
'Twas meant well. Are. And for me,
I have a power to pardon sins as oft
As any man has power to wrong me.

Cle. Noble and worthy. Phi. But Bellarion,
(For I must call thee still so) tell me why
Thou didst conceal thy Sex, it was a fault,
A fault Bellarion, though thy other deeds
Of truth outweigh'd it: All these Jealousies
Had flown to nothing, if thou hadst discovered,
What now we know.

Bell. My Father would oft speak
Your worth and vertue, and as I did grow
More and more apprehensive, I did thirst
To see the man so rais'd, but yet all this
Was but a Maiden longing to be lost
As soon as found, till sitting in my window,
Printing my thoughts in Lawne, I saw a God
I thought (but it was you) enter our Gates,
My blood flew out, and back again as fast
As I had puff'd it forth, and suck't it in Like breath, then was I call'd away in haste
To entertain you. Never was a man
Heav'd from a Sheep-coat to a Scepter rais'd
So high in thoughts as I, you left a kiss
Upon these lips then, which I mean to keep
From you for ever, I did hear you talk
Far above singing; after you were gone,
I grew acquainted with my heart, and search'd
What stir'd it so, Alas I found it love,
Yet far from lust, for could I have but liv'd
In presence of you, I had had my end,
For this I did delude my noble Father
With a feign'd Pilgrimage, and dress my self
In habit of a boy, and, for I knew
My birth no match for you, I was past hope
Of having you. And understanding well
That when I made discovery of my Sex,
I could not stay with you, I made a vow
By all the most religious things a Maid
Could call together, never to be known,
Whilst there was hope to hide me from mens eyes,
For other than I seem'd; that I might ever
Abide with you, then fate I by the Fount
Where first you took me up.

King. Search out a match

Within our Kingdom where and when thou wilt,
And I will pay thy Dowry, and thy self
Wilt well deserve him.

Bell. Never Sir will I
Marry, it is a thing within my vow,
But if I may have leave to ſerve the Princeſs,
To ſee the virtues of her Lord and her,
I ſhall have hope to live. Are. I Philaſter,
Cannot be jealous, though you had a Lady
Dreſt like a Page to ſerve you, nor will I
Suspect her living here: come live with me,
Live free, as I do, ſhe that loves my Lord,
Cuſt be the wife that hates her.

Phi. I grieve ſuch virtues ſhould be laid in earth
Without an Heir; hear me my Royal Father,
Wrong not the freedom of our ſouls ſo much,
To think to take revenge of that baſe woman,
Her malice cannot hurt us: ſet her free
As ſhe was born, ſaving from ſhame and ſin.

King. Set her at liberty, but leave the Court,
This is no place for ſuch: you Pharamond
Shall have free paſſage, and a conduct home
Worthy ſo great a Prince, when you come there,
Remember 'twas your faults that loſt you her,
And not my purpoſ'd will. Pha. I do confeſs,
Renowned Sir.

King. Laſt joyn your hands in one, enjoy Philaſter
This Kingdom which is yours, and after me
What ever I call mine, my bleſſing on you,
All happy hours be at your Marriage joyes,
That you may grow your ſelves over all Lands,
And live to ſee your plenteous branches ſpring
Where ever there is Sun. Let Princes learn
By this to rule the paſſions of their blood,
For what Heaven wills, can never be withſtood.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Mardonius and Beſſus, two Captains.

Mar. Beſſus, the King has made a fair hand on't, he has ended the Wars at a blow, would my ſword had a cloſe basket hilt to hold Wine, and the blade would make knives, for we ſhall have nothing but eating and drinking.

Beſ. We that are Commanders ſhall do well enough.

Mar. Faith Beſſus, ſuch Commanders as thou may; I had as lieve ſet thee Perdue for a pudding i'th' dark, as Alexan- der the Great.

Beſ. I love theſe jeſts exceedingly.

Mar. I think thou lov'ſt 'em better than quarrelling Beſ- ſus, Ple ſay ſo much i'thy behalf, and yet thou 'rt valiant enough upon a retreat, I think thou wouldſt kill any man that ſtopt thee if thou couldſt.

Beſ. But was not this a brave Combate Mardonius?

Mar. Why, didſt thou ſee't?

Beſ. You ſtood wi'me.

Mar. I did ſo, but me thought thou wink'dſt every blow they ſtrook.

Beſ. Well, I believe there are better ſouldiers than I,
that never ſaw two Princes fight in liſts.

Mar. By my troth I think ſo too Beſſus, many a thouſand, but certainly all that are worſe than thou have ſeen as much. Beſ. 'Twas bravely done of our King.

Mar. Yes, if he had not ended the wars: I'me glad thou dar'ſt talk of ſuch dangerous buſineſſes.

Beſ. To take a Prince priſoner in the heart of 's own Country in ſingle combat.

Mar. See how thy blood curdles at this, I think thou couldſt be contented to be beaten i'this paſſion.

Beſ. Shall I tell you truly? Mar. I.

Beſ. I could willingly venture for't.

Mar. Um, no venture neither Beſſus.

Beſ. Let me not live, if I do not think 'tis a braver piece of ſervice than that I'me ſo ſam'd for.

Mar. Why, art thou ſam'd for any valour?

Beſ. Fam'd! I, I warrant you.

Ma. I'me e'en heartily glad on't, I have been with thee e're ſince thou cam'ſt to th'wars, and this is the firſt word that ever I heard on't, prethee who ſames thee.

Beſ. The Chriſtian world.

Mar. 'Tis heatheniſhly done of 'em in my conſcience, thou deſerv'ſt

deserv'st it not. Bes. Yes, I ha' don good service.

Mar. I do not know how thou may'st wait of a man in's Chamber, or thy agility of shifting of a Trencher, but o'therwise no service good Bessus.

Bes. You saw me do the service your self.

Mar. Not so hasty sweet Bessus, where was it, is the place vanish'd?

Bes. At Bessus desp'rate redemption.

Mar. At Bessus desp'rate redemption, where's that?

Bes. There where I redeem'd the day, the place bears my name. Mar. Pray thee, who Christened it?

Bes. The Souldiers.

Mar. If I were not a very merrily dispos'd man, what would become of thee? one that had but a grain of choler in the whole composition of his body, would send thee of an errand to the worms for putting thy name upon that field: did not I beat thee there i'th' head o'th' Troops with a Trunchion, because thou would'st needs run away with thy company, when we should charge the enemy?

Bes. True, but I did not run.

Mar. Right Bessus, I beat thee out on't.

Bes. But came I not up when the day was gone, and redeem'd all?

Mar. Thou knowest, and so do I, thou meant'st to flie, and thy fear making thee mistake, thou ranst upon the enemy, and a hot charge thou gav'st, as I'll do thee right, thou art furious in running away, and I think, we owe thy fear for our victory; If I were the King, and were sure thou would'st mistake alwaies and run away upon th' enemy, thou should'st be General by this light.

Bes. You'll never leave this till I fall foul.

Mar. No more such words dear Bessus, for though I have ever known thee a coward, and therefore durst never strike thee, yet if thou proceedest, I will allow thee valiant, and beat thee.

Bes. Come, our King's a brave fellow.

Mar. He is so Bessus, I wonder how thou can'st to know it. But if thou wer't a man of understanding, I would tell thee, he is vain-glorious, and humble, and angry, and patient, and merry and dull, and joyful and sorrowful in extremity in an hour: Do not think me thy friend for this, for if I car'd who knew it, thou should'st not hear it Bessus. Here he is with his prey in his foot.

Enter &c. Senet Flourish.

Enter Arbaces and Tigranes, two Kings and two Gentlemen.

Arb. Thy sadness brave Tigranes takes away
From my full victory, am I become
Of so small fame, that any man should grieve
When I o'recome him? They that plac'd me here, Intended it an honour large enough, (though he
For the most valiant living, but to dare oppose me single,
Lost the day. What should afflict you, you are as free as I,
To be my prisoner, is to be more free
Than you were formerly, and never think
The man I held worthy to combate me
Shall be us'd servilely: Thy ransom is
To take my only Sister to thy Wife.
A heavy one Tigranes, for she is
A Lady, that the neighbour Princes send Blanks to fetch home. I have been too unkind
To her Tigranes, she but nine years old
I left her, and ne're saw her since, your wars
Have held me long and taught me though a youth,
The way to victory, she was a pretty child,
Then I was little better, but now fame
Cries loudly on her, and my messengers
Make me believe she is a miracle;
She'll make you shrink, as I did, with a stroak
But of her eye Tigranes.

Tigr. Is't the course of Iberia to use their prisoners thus?
Had fortune thrown my name above Arbace,
I should not thus have talk'd Sir, in Armenia,
We hold it base, you should have kept your temper

Till you saw home again, where 'tis the fashion
Perhaps to brag.

Arb. Be you my witness earth, need I to brag,
Doth not this captive Prince speak
Me sufficiently, and all the acts
That I have wrought upon his suffering Land;
Should I then boast! where lies that foot of ground
Within his whole Realm, that I have not pass'd,
Fighting and conquering; Far then from me
Be ostentation. I could tell the world
How I have laid his Kingdom desolate
By this sole Arm prop't by divinity,
Strip't him out of his glories, and have sent
The pride of all his youth to people graves,
And made his Virgins languish for their Loves,
If I would brag, should I that have the power
To teach the Neighbour world humility;
Mix with vain-glory?

Mar. Indeed this is none.

Arb. Tigranes, Nay did I but take delight
To stretch my deeds as others do, on words,
I could amaze my hearers. Mar. So you do.

Arb. But he shall wrong his and my modesty,
That thinks me apt to boast after any act
Fit for a good man to do upon his foe.
A little glory in a souldiers mouth
Is well-becoming, be it far from vaint.

Mar. 'Tis pity that valour should be thus drunk.

Arb. I offer you my Sister, and you answer
I do insult, a Lady that no suite
Nor treasure, nor thy Crown could purchase thee,
But that thou fought'st with me.

Tigr. Though this be worfe
Than that you spake before, it strikes me not;
But that you think to overgrace me with
The marriage of your Sister, troubles me.
I would give worlds for ransoms were they mine,
Rather than have her. Arb. See if I insult
That am the Conquerour, and for a ransom
Offer rich treasure to the Conquered,
Which he refuses, and I bear his scorn:
It cannot be self-flattery to say,
The Daughters of your Country set by her,
Would see their shame, run home and blush to death,
At their own foulness; yet she is not fair,
Nor beautiful, those words exprefs her not,
They say her looks have something excellent,
That wants a name: yet were she odious,
Her birth deserves the Empire of the world,
Sister to such a brother, that hath ta'ne
Victory prisoner, and throughout the earth,
Carries her bound, and should he let her loose,
She durst not leave him; Nature did her wrong,
To Print continual conquest on her cheeks,
And make no man worthy for her to taste
But me that am too near her, and as strangely
She did for me, but you will think I brag.

Mar. I do I'll be sworn. Thy valour and thy passions fe-ver'd, would have made two excellent fellows in their kinds:
I know not whether I should be sorry thou art so valiant, or so passionate, wou'd one of 'em were away.

Tigr. Do I refuse her that I doubt her worth?
Were she as vertuous as she would be thought,
So perfect that no one of her own sex
Could find a want, had she so tempting fair,
That she could wish it off for damning souls,
I would pay any ransom, twenty lives
Rather than meet her married in my bed.
Perhaps I have a love, where I have fixt
Mine eyes not to be mov'd, and she on me,
I am not fickle. Arb. Is that all the cause?
Think you, you can so knit your self in love
To any other, that her searching sight
Cannot dissolve it? So before you tri'd,

You thought your self a match for me in fight,
Trust me Tigranes, she can do as much
In peace, as I in war, she'll conquer too,
You shall see if you have the power to stand
The force of her swift looks, if you dislike,
I'll send you home with love, and name your ransom
Some other way, but if she be your choice,
She frees you: To Iberia you must.

Tigr. Sir, I have learn'd a prisoners sufferance,
And will obey, but give me leave to talk
In private with some friends before I go.

Arb. Some to await him forth, and see him safe,
But let him freely send for whom he please,
And none dare to disturb his conference,
I will not have him know what bondage is, [Exit Tigranes.]
Till he be free from me. This Prince, Mardonius,
Is full of wisdom, valour, all the graces
Man can receive. Mar. And yet you conquer'd him.

Arb. And yet I conquer'd him, and could have don't Hadst thou joyn'd with him, though thy name in Arms
Be great; must all men that are vertuous
Think suddenly to match themselves with me?
I conquered him and bravely, did I not?

Bes. And please your Majesty, I was afraid at first.

Mar. When wert thou other? Arb. Of what?

Bes. That you would not have spy'd your best advantages, for your Majesty in my opinion lay too high, methinks, under favour, you should have lain thus.

Mar. Like a Taylor at a wake.

Bes. And then, if please your Majesty to remember, at one time, by my troth I wisht my self wi'you.

Mar. By my troth thou wouldst ha' stunk 'em both out o'th' Lists. Arb. What to do?

Bes. To put your Majesty in mind of an occasion; you lay thus, and Tigranes falsified a blow at your Leg, which you by doing thus avoided; but if you had whip'd up your Leg thus, and reach'd him on the ear, you had made the Blood-Royal run down his head.

Mar. What Country Fence-school learn'st thou at?

Arb. Fish, did not I take him nobly?

Mar. Why you did, and you have talked enough on't.

Arb. Talkt enough?

Will you confine my word? by heaven and earth,
I were much better be a King of beasts
Than such a people: if I had not patience
Above a God, I should be call'd a Tyrant
Throughout the world. They will offend to death
Each minute: Let me hear thee speak again,
And thou art earth again: why this is like
Tigranes speech that needs would say I brag'd.
Bessus, he said I brag'd. Bes. Ha, ha, ha.

Arb. Why dost thou laugh?

By all the world, I'm grown ridiculous
To my own Subjects: Tie me in a Chair
And jest at me, but I shall make a start,
And punish some that others may take heed
How they are haughty; who will answer me?
He said I boasted, speak Mardonius,
Did I? He will not answer, O my temper!
I give you thanks above, that taught my heart
Patience, I can endure his silence; what will none
Vouchsafe to give me answer? am I grown
To such a poor respect, or do you mean
To break my wind? Speak, speak, some one of you,
Or else by heaven. 1 Gent. So please your.

Arb. Monstrous,

I cannot be heard out, they cut me off,
As if I were too saucy, I will live
In woods, and talk to trees, they will allow me
To end what I begin. The meanest Subject
Can find a freedom to discharge his soul
And not I, now it is a time to speak,
I hearken. 1 Gent. May it please.

Arb. I mean not you,

Did not I stop you once? but I am grown
To balk, but I desire, let another speak,

2 Gent. I hope your Majesty.

Arb. Thou drawest thy words,

That I must wait an hour, where other men
Can hear in instants; throw your words away,
Quick, and to purpose, I have told you this.

Bes. And please your Majesty.

Arb. Wilt thou devour me? this is such a rudeness
As you never shew'd me, and I want
Power to command too, else Mardonius
Would speak at my request; were you my King,
I would have answered at your word Mardonius,
I pray you speak, and truly, did I boast?

Mar. Truth will offend you.

Arb. You take all great care what will offend me,
When you dare to utter such things as these.

Mar. You told Tigranes, you had won his Land,
With that sole arm propt by Divinity:
Was not that bragging, and a wrong to us,
That daily ventured lives?

Arb. O that thy name

Were as great, as mine, would I had paid my wealth,
It were as great, as I might combat thee,
I would through all the Regions habitable
Search thee, and having found thee, wi' my Sword
Drive thee about the world, till I had met
Some place that yet mans curiosity

Hath mist of; there, there would I strike thee dead:
Forgotten of mankind, such Funeral rites
As beasts would give thee, thou shouldst have.

Bes. The King rages extreamly, shall we flink away?
He'll strike us. 2 Gent. Content.

Arb. There I would make you know 'twas this sole arm.

I grant you were my instruments, and did
As I commanded you, but 'twas this arm
Mov'd you like wheels, it mov'd you as it pleas'd.

Whither slip you now? what are you too good
To wait on me (puffe), I had need have temper
That rule such people; I have nothing left
At my own choice, I would I might be private:
Mean men enjoy themselves, but 'tis our curse,
To have a tumult that out of their loves
Will wait on us, whether we will or no;
Go get you gone: Why here they stand like death,
My words move nothing. 1 Gent. Must we go?

Bes. I know not.

Arb. I pray you leave me Sirs, I'm proud of this,
That you will be intreated from my sight: } Exeunt all but
Why now the leave me all: Mardonius. } Arb. and Mar.

Mar. Sir.

Arb. Will you leave me quite alone? me thinks
Civility should teach you more than this,
If I were but your friend: Stay here and wait.

Mar. Sir shall I speak?

Arb. Why, you would now think much
To be denied, but I can scarce intreat
What I would have: do, speak.

Mar. But will you hear me out?

Arb. With me you Article to talk thus: well,
I will hear you out.

Mar. Sir, that I have ever lov'd you, my sword hath spoken for me; that I do, if it be doubted, I dare call an oath, a great one to my witness; and were you not my King, from amongst men, I should have chose you out to love above the rest: nor can this challenge thanks, for my own sake I should have done it, because I would have lov'd the most deserving man, for so you are.

Arb. Alas Mardonius, rise you shall not kneel,
We all are souldiers, and all venture lives:
And where there is no difference in mens worths,
Titles are jests, who can outvalue thee?

Mardonius thou hast lov'd me, and hast wrong,
Thy love is not rewarded, but believe

It shall be better, more than friend in arms,
My Father, and my Tutor, good Mardonius.

Mar. Sir, you did promise you would hear me out.

Arb. And so I will; speak freely, for from thee
Nothing can come but worthy things and true.

Mar. Though you have all this worth, you hold some qualities that do Eclipse your vertues.

Arb. Eclipse my vertues?

Mar. Yes, your passions, which are so manifold, that they appear even in this: when I commend you, you hug me for that truth: but when I speak your faults, you make a start, and flie the hearing but.

Arb. When you commend me? O that I should live
To need such commendations: If my deeds
Blew not my praise themselves about the earth,
I were most wretched: spare your idle praise:
If thou didst mean to flatter, and shouldst utter
Words in my praise, that thou thoughtst impudence,
My deeds should make 'em modest: when you praise I hug
you? 'tis so safe, that wert thou worthy thou shouldst receive a death, a glorious death from me: but thou shalt understand thy lies, for shouldst thou praise me into Heaven, and there leave me inthron'd, I would despise thee though as much as now, which is as much as dust because I see thy envie.

Mar. However you will use me after, yet for your own promise sake, hear me the rest.

Arb. I will, and after call unto the winds, for they shall lend as large an ear as I to what you utter: speak.

Mar. Would you but leave these hasty tempers, which
I do not say take from you all your worth, but darken 'em, then you will shine indeed. Arb. Well.

Mar. Yet I would have you keep some passions, lest men should take you for a God, your vertues are such.

Arb. Why now you flatter.

Mar. I never understood the word, were you no King, and free from these moods, should I choose a companion for wit and pleasure, it should be you; or for honesty to enterchange my bosom with, it should be you; or wisdom to give me counsel, I would pick out you; or valour to defend my reputation, still I should find you out; for you are fit to fight for all the world, if it could come in question: Now I have spoke, consider to your self, find out a use;
if so, then what shall fall to me is not material.

Arb. Is not material? more than ten such lives, as mine, Mardonius: it was nobly said, thou hast spoke truth, and boldly such a truth as might offend another. I have been too passionate and idle, thou shalt see a swift amendment, but I want those parts you praise me for: I fight for all the world? Give me a sword, and thou wilt go as far beyond me, as thou art beyond in years, I know thou dar'st and wilt; it troubles me that I should use so rough a phrase to thee, impute it to my folly, what thou wilt, so thou wilt paron me: that thou and I should differ thus!

Mar. Why 'tis no matter Sir.

Arb. Faith but it is, but thou dost ever take all things I do, thus patiently, for which I never can requite thee, but with love, and that thou shalt be sure of. Thou and I have not been merry lately: pray thee tell me where hadst thou that same jewel in thine ear?

Mar. Why at the taking of a Town.

Arb. A wench upon my life, a wench Mardonius gave thee that jewel.

Mar. Wench! they respect not me, I'm old and rough, and every limb about me, but that which should, grows stiffer, I those businessses I may swear I am truly honest: for I pay justly for what I take, and would be glad to be at a certainty.

Arb. Why, do the wenches encroach upon thee?

Mar. I by this light do they.

Arb. Didst thou sit at an old rent with 'em?

Mar. Yes faith.

Arb. And do they improve themselves?

Mar. I ten shillings to me, every new young fellow they come acquainted with.

Arb. How canst live on't?

Mar. Why I think I must petition to you.

Arb. Thou shalt take them up at my price.

Enter two Gentlemen and Bessus.

Mar. Your price? Arb. I at the Kings price.

Mar. That may be more than I'm worth.

2 Gent. Is he not merry now?

1 Gent. I think not.

Bes. He is, he is: we'll shew our selves.

Arb. Bessus, I thought you had been in Iberia by this, I bad you hast; Gobrias will want entertainment for me.

Bes. And please your Majesty I have a sute.

Arb. Is't not lousie Bessus, what is't?

Bes. I am to carry a Lady with me.

Arb. Then thou hast two sutes.

Bes. And if I can prefer her to the Lady Pentha your Majesties Sister, to learn fashions, as her friends term it, it will be worth something to me.

Arb. So many nights lodgings as 'tis thither, wilt not?

Bes. I know not that Sir, but gold I shall be sure of.

Arb. Why thou shalt bid her entertain her from me, so thou wilt resolve me one thing. Bes. If I can.

Arb. Faith 'tis a very disputable question, and yet I think thou canst decide it.

Bes. Your Majesty has a good opinion of my understanding.

Arb. I have so good an opinion of it: 'tis whether thou be valiant.

Bes. Some body has traduced me to you: do you see this sword Sir? Arb. Yes.

Bes. If I do not make my back-biters eat it to a knife within this week, say I am not valiant.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Health to your Majesty.

Arb. From Gobrias? Mes. Yes Sir.

Arb. How does he, is he well?

Mes. In perfect health.

Arb. Take that for thy good news. A trustier servant
to his Prince there lives not, than is good Gobrias.

1 Gent. The King starts back.

Mar. His blood goes back as fast.

2 Gent. And now it comes again.

Mar. He alters strangely.

Arb. The hand of Heaven is on me, be it far from me to struggle, if my secret sins have pull'd this curse upon me, lend me tears now to wash me white, that I may feel a child-like innocence within my breast; which once perform'd, O give me leave to stand as fix'd as constancy her self, my eyes set here unmov'd, regardless of the world though thousand miseries incompass me.

Mar. This is strange, Sir, how do you?

Arb. Mardonius, my mother, Mar. Is she dead?

Arb. Alas she's not so happy, thou dost know how she hath laboured since my Father died to take by treason hence this loathed life, that would but be to serve her, I have pardoned, and pardoned, and by that have made her fit to practise new sins, not repent the old: she now had stirr'd a slave to come from thence, and strike me here, whom Gobrias sifting out, took and condemn'd and executed there, the carefult servant: Heaven let me but live to pay that man; Nature is poor to me, that will not let me have as many deaths as are the times that he hath sav'd my life, that
I might dye 'em over all for him.

Mar. Sir let her bear her sins on her own head,
Vex not your self. Arb. What will the world

Conceive of me? with what unnatural sins

Will they suppose me loaden, when my life

Is sought by her that gave it to the world?

But yet he writes me comfort here, my Sister,

He saies, is grown in beauty and in grace.

In all the innocent vertues that become

A tender spotless maid: she stains her cheeks

With morning tears to purge her mothers ill,
 And 'mongst that sacred dew she mingles Prayers
 Her pure Oblations for my safe return:
 If I have lost the duty of a Son,
 If any pomp or vanity of state
 Made me forget my natural offices,
 Nay farther, if I have not every night
 Expostulated with my wandring thoughts,
 If ought unto my parent they have err'd,
 And call'd 'em back: do you direct her arm
 Unto this foul dissembling heart of mine:
 But if I have been just to her, fend out
 Your power to compass me, and hold me safe
 From searching treason; I will use no means
 But prayer: for rather suffer me to see
 From mine own veins issue a deadly flood,
 Than wash my danger off with mothers blood.

Mar. I n'ere saw such suddain extremities. [Exeunt.]

Enter Tigranes and Spaconia.

Tigr. Why? wilt thou have me die Spaconia,
 What should I do? Spa. Nay let me stay alone,
 And when you see Armenia again,
 You shall behold a Tomb more worth than I;
 Some friend that ever lov'd me or my cause,
 Will build me something to distinguish me
 From other women, many a weeping verse
 He will lay on, and much lament those maids,
 That plac'd their loves unfortunately high,
 As I have done, where they can never reach;
 But why should you go to Iberia?

Tigr. Alas, that thou wilt ask me, ask the man
 That rages in a Fever why he lies
 Distempered there, when all the other youths
 Are courting o're the Meadows with their Loves?
 Can I resist it? am I not a slave
 To him that conquer'd me?

Spa. That conquer'd thee Tigranes! he has won
 But half of thee, thy body, but thy mind
 May be as free as his, his will did never Combate thine, and take it prisoner.

Tigr. But if he by force convey my body hence,
 What helps it me or thee to be unwilling?

Spa. O Tigranes, I know you are to see a Lady there,
 To see, and like I fear: perhaps the hope
 Of her make you forget me, ere we part,
 Be happier than you know to wish; farewell.

Tigr. Spaconia, stay and hear me what I say:
 In short, destruction meet me that I may
 See it, and not avoid it, when I leave
 To be thy faithful lover: part with me
 Thou shalt not, there are none that know our love,
 And I have given gold unto a Captain
 That goes unto Iberia from the King,
 That he will place a Lady of our Land
 With the Kings Sister that is offered me;
 Thither shall you, and being once got in Perfwade her by what subtil means you can
 To be as backward in her love as I.

Spa. Can you imagine that a longing maid
 When she beholds you, can be pull'd away
 With words from loving you?

Tigr. Dispraise my health, my honesty, and tell her
 I am jealous.

Spa. Why, I had rather lose you: can my heart
 Consent to let my tongue throw out such words,
 And I that ever yet spoke what I thought,
 Shall find it such a thing at first to lie?

Tigr. Yet do thy best.

Enter Bessus.

Bes. What, is your Majesty ready?

Tigr. There is the Lady, Captain.

Bes. Sweet Lady, by your leave, I could wish my self more full of Courtship for your fair sake.

Spa. Sir I shall feel no want of that.

Bes. Lady, you must hast, I have received new letters from the King that require more hast than I expected, he will follow me suddenly himself, and begins to call for your Majesty already.

Tigr. He shall not do so long.

Bes. Sweet Lady, shall I call you my Charge hereafter?

Spa. I will not take upon me to govern your tongue Sir, you shall call me what you please.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Gobrias, Bacurius, Arane, Panthe, and Mandane, Waiting-women with Attendants.

Gob. MY Lord Bacurius, you must have regard unto the Queen, she is your prisoner, 'tis at your peril if she make escape.

Bac. My Lord, I know't, she is my prisoner from you committed; yet she is a woman, and so I keep her safe, you will not urge me to keep her close, I shall not shame to say I sorrow for her.

Gob. So do I my Lord; I sorrow for her, that so little grace doth govern her: that she should stretch her arm against her King, so little womanhood and natural goodness, as to think the death of her own Son.

Ara. Thou knowst the reason why, dissembling as thou art, and wilt not speak.

Gob. There is a Lady takes not after you,
 Her Father is within her, that good man
 Whose tears weigh'd down his sins, mark how she weeps,
 How well it does become her, and if you
 Can find no disposition in your self
 To sorrow, yet by gracefulness in her
 Find out the way, and by your reason weep:
 All this she does for you, and more she needs
 When for your self you will not lose a tear,
 Think how this want of grief discredits you,
 And you will weep, because you cannot weep.

Ara. You talk to me as having got a time fit for your purpose; but you know I know you speak not what you think. be urg'd

Pan. I would my heart were Stone, before my softness should Against my mother, a more troubled thought
 No Virgin bears about; should I excuse
 My Mothers fault, I should set light a life
 In losing which, a brother and a King
 Were taken from me, if I seek to save
 That life so lov'd, I lose another life
 That gave me being, I shall lose a Mother,
 A word of such a found in a childs ears
 That it strikes reverence through it; may the will
 Of heaven be done, and if one needs must fall,
 Take a poor Virgins life to answer all.

Ara. But Gobrias let us talk, you know this fault
 Is not in me as in another Mother.

Gob. I know it is not.

Ara. Yet you make it so.

Gob. Why, is not all that's past beyond your help?

Ara. I know it is.

Gob. Nay should you publish it before the world,
 Think you 'twould be believ'd?

Ara. I know it would not.

Gob. Nay should I joyn with you, should we not both be torn and yet both die uncredited?

Ara. I think we should.

Gob. Why then take you such violent courses? As for me I do but right in saving of the King from all your plots.

Ara. The King?

Gob. I bad you rest with patience, and a time
 Would come for me to reconcile all to

Your

Your own content, but by this way you take Away my power, and what was done unknown,
Was not by me but you: your urging being done
I must preserve my own, but time may bring
All this to light, and happily for all.

Ara. Accursed be this over curious brain
That gave that plot a birth, accurst this womb
That after did conceive to my disgrace.

Bac. My Lord Protector, they say there are divers Letters come from Armenia, that Bessus has done good service, and brought again a day, by his particular valour, receiv'd you any to that effect? Gob. Yes, 'tis most certain.

Bac. I'm sorry for't, not that the day was won,
But that 'twas won by him: we held him here
A Coward, he did me wrong once, at which I laugh'd,
And so did all the world, for nor I,
Nor any other held him worth my sword.

Enter Bessus and Spaconia.

Bes. Health to my Protector; from the King
These Letters; and to your grace Madam, these.

Gob. How does his Majesty?

Bes. As well as conquest by his own means and his valiant
Commanders can make him; your letters will tell you all.

Pan. I will not open mine till I do know
My Brothers health: good Captain is he well?

Bes. As the rest of us that fought are.

Pan. But how's that? is he hurt?

Bes. He's a strange souldier that gets not a knock.

Pan. I do not ask how strange that souldier is
That gets no hurt, but whether he have one.

Bes. He had divers. Pan. And is he well again?

Bes. Well again, an't please your Grace: why I was run twice through the body, and shot i'th' head with a cross-arrow, and yet am well again.

Pan. I do not care how thou do'st, is he well?

Bes. Not care how I do? Let a man out of the mightiness of his spirit, fructifie Foreign Countries with his blood for the good of his own, and thus he shall be answered: Why
I may live to relieve with spear and shield, such a Lady as you distressed.

Pan. Why, I will care, I'me glad that thou art well,
I prethee is he so?

Gob. The King is well and will be here to morrow.

Pan. My prayer is heard, now will I open mine.

Gob. Bacurius, I must ease you of your charge:
Madam, the wonted mercy of the King,
That overtakes your faults, has met with this,
And struck it out, he has forgiven you freely,
Your own will is your law, be where you please.

Ara. I thank him. (row?)

Gob. You will be ready to wait upon his Majesty to mor-

Ara. I will. [Exit Arane.]

Bac. Madam be wise hereafter; I am glad I have lost this Office.

Gob. Good Captain Bessus, tell us the discourse betwixt
Tigranes and our King, and how we got the victory.

Pan. I prethee do, and if my Brother were
In any danger, let not thy tale make
Him abide there long before thou bring him off,
For all that while my heart will beat.

Bes. Madam let what will beat, I must tell the truth, and thus it was; they fought single in lists, but one to one;
as for my own part, I was dangerously hurt but three days before, else, perhaps, we had been two to two, I cannot tell, some thought we had, and the occasion of my hurt was this, the enemy had made Trenches.

Gob. Captain, without the manner of your hurt be much material to this business, we'll hear't some other time.

Pan. I prethee leave it, and go on with my Brother.

Bes. I will, but 'twould be worth your hearing: To the Lists they came, and single-sword and gantlet was their fight.

Pan. Alas!

Bes. Without the Lists there stood some dozen Captains of either side mingled, all which were sworn, and one of those was I: and 'twas my chance to stand next a Captain o'th' enemies side, called Tribasus; Valiant they said he was; whilst these two Kings were stretching themselves, this Tribasus cast something a scornful look on me, and ask't me who I thought would overcome: I smil'd and told him if he would fight with me, he should perceive by the event of that whose King would win: something he answered, and a scuffle was like to grow, when one Zipetus offered to help him, I——

Pan. All this is of thy self, I pray thee Bessus tell something of my Brother, did he nothing?

Bes. Why yes, I'll tell your Grace, they were not to fight till the word given, which for my own part, by my troth I confes I was not to give.

Pan. See for his own part.

Bac. I fear yet this fellow's abus'd with a good report.

Bes. But I—— Pan. Still of himself.

Bes. Cri'd give the word, when as some of them say, Ti-granes was stooping, but the word was not given then, yet one Cosroes of the enemies part, held up his finger to me, which is as much with us Martialists, as I will fight with you: I said not a word, nor made sign during the combate, but that once done.

Pan. He slips o're all the fight.

Bes. I call'd him to me, Cosroes said I.

Pan. I will hear no more.

Bes. No, no, I lie.

Bac. I dare be sworn thou dost.

Bes. Captain said I, so it was.

Pan. I tell thee, I will hear no further.

Bes. No? Your Grace will wish you had.

Pan. I will not wish it, what is this the Lady
My brother writes to me to take?

Bes. And please your Grace this is she: Charge, will you come near the Princess?

Pan. You'r welcome from your Country, and this land shall shew unto you all the kindness that I can make it;
what's your name? Spa. Thalectris.

Pan. Y'are very welcome, you have got a letter to put you to me, that has power enough to place mine enemy here; then much more you that are so far from being so to me that you ne're saw me.

Bes. Madam, I dare pass my word for her truth.

Spa. My truth?

Pan. Why Captain, do you think I am afraid she'll steal?

Bes. I cannot tell, servants are slippery, but I dare give my word for her, and for honesty, she came along with me, and many favours she did me by the way, but by this light none but what she might do with modesty, to a man of my rank.

Pan. Why Captain, here's no body thinks otherwise.

Bes. Nay, if you should, your Grace may think your pleasure; but I am sure I brought her from Armenia, and in all that way, if ever I touch'd any bare of her above her knee, I pray God I may sink where I stand.

Spa. Above my knee?

Bes. No, you know I did not, and if any man will say, I did, this sword shall answer; Nay, I'll defend the reputation of my charge whilst I live, your Grace shall understand I am secret in these businesses, and know how to defend a Ladies honour.

Spa. I hope your Grace knows him so well already, I shall not need to tell you he's vain and foolish.

Bes. I you may call me what you please, but I'll defend your good name against the world; and so I take my leave of your Grace, and of you my Lord Protector; I am likewise glad to see your Lordship well.

Bac. O Captain Bessus, I thank you, I would speak with you anon.

Bes. When you please, I will attend your Lordship.

Bac. Madam, I'll take my leave too.

Pan. Good Bacurius.

[Exit Bess. and Bac.]

Gob. Madam what writes his Majesty to you?

Pan. O my Lord, the kindest words, Ple keep 'em whilst I live, here in my bosom, there's no art in 'em, they lie disordered in this paper, just as hearty nature speaks 'em.

Gob. And to me he writes what tears of joy he shed to hear how you were grown in every vertues way, and yields all thanks to me, for that dear care which I was bound to have in training you, there is no Princess living that enjoys a brother of that worth.

Pan. My Lord, no maid longs more for any thing, And feels more heat and cold within her breast, Than I do now, in hopes to see him.

Gob. Yet I wonder much
At this he writes, be brings along with him
A husband for you, that same Captive Prince,
And if he loves you as he makes a shew,
He will allow you freedom in your choice.

Pan. And so he will my Lord, I warrant you, he will but offer and give me the power to take or leave.

Gob. Trust me, were I a Lady, I could not like that man were bargain'd with before I choose him.

Pan. But I am not built on such wild humours, if I find him worthy, he is not less because he's offer'd.

Spa. 'Tis true, he is not, would he would seem less.

Gob. I think there's no Lady can affect Another Prince, your brother standing by;
He doth Eclipse mens vertues so with his.

Spa. I know a Lady may, and more I fear
Another Lady will. Pan. Would I might see him.

Gob. Why so you shall, my businesses are great,
I will attend you when it is his pleasure to see you.

Pan. I thank you good my Lord.

Gob. You will be ready Madam.

[Exit Gob.]

Pan. Yes.

Spa. I do beseech you Madam, send away
Your other women, and receive from me
A few sad words, which set against your joyes
May make 'em shine the more.

Pan. Sirs, leave me all. [Exeunt Women.]

Spa. I kneel a stranger here to beg a thing
Unfit for me to ask, and you to grant,
'Tis such another strange ill-laid-request,
As if a begger should intreat a King
To leave his Scepter, and his Throne to him
And take his rags to wander o're the world
Hungry and cold.

Pan. That were a strange request.

Spa. As ill is mine. Pan. Then do not utter it.

Spa. Alas 'tis of that nature, that it must Be utter'd, I, and granted, or I die:
I am ashamed to speak it; but where life
Lies at the stake, I cannot think her woman
That will not take something unreasonably to hazard saving of it: I shall seem a strange Petitioner, that wish all ill to them I beg of, e're they give me ought; yet so I must:
I would you were not fair, nor wise, for in your ill consists my good: if you were foolish, you would hear my prayer, if foul, you had not power to hinder me: he would not love you.

Pan. What's the meaning of it.

Spa. Nay, my request is more without the bounds
Of reason yet: for 'tis not in the power
Of you to do, what I would have you grant.

Pan. Why then 'tis idle, pray thee speak it out.

Spa. Your brother brings a Prince into this land,
Of such a noble shape, so sweet a grace,
So full of worth withal, that every maid
That looks upon him, gives away her self
To him for ever; and for you to have
He brings him: and so mad is my demand
That I desire you not to have this man,
This excellent man, for whom you needs must die,
If you should miss him. I do now expect
You should laugh at me.

Pan. Trust me I could weep rather, for I have found

In all thy words a strange disjoynted sorrow. (him.)

Spa. 'Tis by me his own desire so, that you would not love

Pan. His own desire! why credit me Thalestris,
I am no common wooer: if he shall wooe me, his worth may be such, that I dare not swear I will not love him; but if he will stay to have me wooe him, I will promise thee, he may keep all his graces to himself, and fear no ravishing from me.

Spa. 'Tis yet his own desire, but when he sees your face,
I fear it will not be; therefore I charge you as you have pity, stop these tender ears from his enchanting voice, close up those eyes, that you may neither catch a dart from him, nor he from you; I charge you as you hope to live in quiet;
for when I am dead, for certain I will walk to visit him if he break promise with me: for as fast as Oaths without a formal Ceremony can make me, I am to him.

Pan. Then be fearless;

For if he were a thing 'twixt God and man,
I could gaze on him; if I knew it sin
To love him without passion: Dry your eyes,
I swear you shall enjoy him still for me,
I will not hinder you; but I perceive
You are not what you seem, rise, rise Thalestris,
If your right name be so.

Spa. Indeed it is not, Spaconia is my name; but I desire not to be known to other.

Pan. Why, by me you shall not, I will never do you wrong, what good I can, I will, think not my birth or education such, that I should injure a stranger Virgin; you are welcome hither, in company you wish to be commanded, but when we are alone, I shall be ready to be your servant.

[Exeunt.]

Enter three Men and a Woman.

1 Come, come, run, run, run.

2 We shall out-go her.

3 One were better be hang'd than carry out women siding to these shews. Wom. Is the King hard by?

1 You heard he with the Bottles said, he thought we should come too late: What abundance of people here is?

Wom. But what had he in those Bottles?

3 I know not.

2 Why, Ink goodman fool.

3 Ink, what to do?

1 Why the King look you, will many times call for these Bottles, and break his mind to his friends.

Wom. Let's take our places, we shall have no room else.

2 The man told us he would walk o' foot through the people. 3 I marry did he.

1 Our shops are well look't to now.

2 'Slife, yonder's my Master, I think.

1 No 'tis not he.

Enter a man with two Citizens-wives.

1 Cit. Lord how fine the fields be, what sweet living 'tis in the Country!

2 Cit. I poor souls, God help 'em; they live as contentedly as one of us.

1 Cit. My husbands Cousin would have had me gone into the Country last year, wert thou ever there?

2 Cit. I, poor souls, I was amongst 'em once.

1 Cit. And what kind of creatures are they, for love of God?

2 Cit. Very good people, God help 'em.

1 Cit. Wilt thou go down with me this Summer when I am brought to bed?

2 Cit. Alas, it is no place for us.

1 Cit. Why, pray thee?

2 Cit. Why you can have nothing there, there's no body
crys brooms. 1 Cit. No?

2 Cit. No truly, nor milk.

1 Cit. Nor milk, how do they?

2 Cit. They are fain to milk themselves i'th' Country.

1 Cit. Good Lord! but the people there, I think, will be very dutiful to one of us.

2 Cit. I God knows will they, and yet they do not greatly care

care for our husbands.

1 Cit. Do they not? Alas! I good faith I cannot blame them: for we do not greatly care for them our selves. Philip, I pray choose us a place.

Phil. There's the best forsooth.

1 Cit. By your leave good people a little.

3 What's the matter?

Phil. I pray you my friend, do not thrust my Mistress so, she's with Child.

2 Let her look to her self then, has she not had showing enough yet? if she stay shouldring here, she may haps go home with a cake in her belly.

3 How now, goodman squitter-breech, why do you lean on me? Phil. Because I will.

3 Will you Sir sawce-box?

1 Cit. Look if one ha'not struck Philip, come hither Philip, why did he strike thee?

Phil. For leaning on him.

1 Cit. Why didst thou lean on him?

Phil. I did not think he would have struck me.

1 Cit. As God save me la thou'rt as wild as a Buck, there's no quarel but thou'rt at one end or other on't.

3 It's at the first end then, for he'l ne'r stay the last.

1 Cit. Well slip-string, I shall meet with you.

3 When you will.

1 Cit. Ple give a crown to meet with you,

3 At a Bawdy-house.

1 Cit. I you're full of your Roguery; but if I do meet you it shall cost me a fall.

Flourish. Enter one running.

4 The King, the King, the King. Now, now, now, now.

Flourish. Enter Arb. Tigr. the two Kings and Mardonius.

All. God preserve your Majesty.

Arb. I thank you all, now are my joyes at full, when I behold you safe, my loving Subjects; by you I grow, 'tis your united love that lifts me to this height: all the account that I can render you for all the love you have bestowed on me, all your expences to maintain my war, is but a little word, you will imagine 'tis slender payment, yet 'tis such a word, as is not to be bought but with your bloods, 'tis Peace.

All. God preserve your Majesty.

Arb. Now you may live securely i' your Towns, Your Children round about you; may sit Under your Vines, and make the miseries Of other Kingdoms a discourse for you, And lend them sorrows; for your selves, you may Safely forget there are such things as tears, And you may all whose good thoughts I have gain'd, Hold me unworthy, where I think my life A sacrifice too great to keep you thus In such a calm estate.

All. God blefs your Majesty.

Arb. See all good people, I have brought the man whose very name you fear'd, a captive home; behold him, 'tis Tigranes; in your heart sing songs of gladness, and deliverance. 1 Cit. Out upon him.

2 Cit. How he looks.

3 Wom. Hang him, hang him.

Mar. These are sweet people.

Tigr. Sir, you do me wrong, to render me a scorned spectacle to common people.

Arb. It was so far from me to mean it so: if I have ought deserv'd, my loving Subjects, let me beg of you, not to revile this Prince, in whom there dwells all worth of which the name of a man is capable, valour beyond compare, the terrour of his name has stretcht it self where ever there is sin; and yet for you I fought with him single, and won him too; I made his valour stoope, and brought that name soar'd to so unbelov'd a height, to fall beneath mine: this inspir'd with all your loves, I did perform, and will for your content, be ever ready for a greater work.

All. The Lord blefs your Majesty.

Tigr. So he has made me amends now with a speech in commendation of himself: I would not be so vain-glorious.

Arb. If there be any thing in which I may Do good to any creature, here speak out; For I must leave you: and it troubles me, That my occasions for the good of you, Are such as call me from you: else, my joy Would be to spend my days among you all. You shew your loves in these large multitudes That come to meet me, I will pray for you, Heaven prosper you, that you may know old years, And live to see your childrens children sit At your boards with plenty: when there is A want of any thing, let it be known To me, and I will be a Father to you: God keep you all.

Flourish. Excunt Kings and their Train.

All. God blefs your Majesty, God blefs your Majesty.

1 Come, shall we go? all's done.

Wom. I for God sake, I have not made a fire yet.

2 Away, away, all's done.

3 Content, farewell Philip.

1 Cit. Away you halter-lack you.

2 Philip will not fight, he's afraid on's face.

Phil. I marry am I afraid of my face.

3 Thou wouldst be Philip if thou sawst it in a glass; it looks so like a Visour. [Excunt 2, 3, and Woman.]

1 Cit. you'l be hang'd sirra: Come Philip walk before us homewards; did not his Majesty say he had brought us home Peafe for all our money?

2 Cit. Yes marry did he.

1 Cit. They're the first I heard of this year by my troth, I longed for some of'em: did he not say we should have some?

2 Cit. Yes, and so we shall anon I warrant you have every one a peck brought home to our houses.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Arbaces and Gobrias.

Arb. MY Sister take it ill?

Gob. Not very ill, Something unkindly she does take it Sir to have Her Husband chos'n to her hands.

Arb. Why Gobrias let her, I must have her know, my will and not her own must govern her: what will she marry with some slave at home?

Gob. O she is far from any stubbornness, you much mistake her, and no doubt will like where you would have her, but when you behold her, you will be loth to part with such a jewel.

Arb. To part with her? why Gobrias, art thou mad? she is my Sister.

Gob. Sir, I know she is: but it were pity to make poor our Land, with such a beauty to enrich another.

Arb. Pish will she have him?

Gob. I do hope she will not, I think she will Sir.

Arb. Were she my Father and my Mother too, and all the names for which we think folks friends, she should be forc't to have him when I know 'tis fit: I will not hear her say she's loth.

Gob. Heaven bring my purpose luckily to pass, you know 'tis just, she will not need constraint she loves you so.

Arb. How does she love me, speak?

Gob. She loves you more than people love their health, that live by labour; more than I could love a man that died for me, if he could live again.

Arb. She is not like her mother then.

Gob. O no, when you were in Armeria, I durst not let her know when you were hurt: For at the first on every little scratch,

She kept her Chamber, wept, and could not eat,
Till you were well, and many times the news
Was so long coming, that before we heard
She was as near her death, as you your health.

Arb. Alas poor soul, but yet she must be rul'd;
I know not how I shall requite her well.
I long to see her, have you sent for her,
To tell her I am ready? Gob. Sir I have.

Enter 1 Gent. and Tigranes.

1 Gent. Sir, here is the Armenian King.

Arb. He's welcome.

1 Gent. And the Queen mother, and the Princess wait without. Arb. Good Gobrias bring 'em in.

Tigranes, you will think you are arriv'd
In a strange Land, where Mothers cast to poyson
Their only Sons; think you you shall be safe?

Tigr. Too safe I am Sir.

Enter Gobrias, Arane, Panthea, Spaconia, Bacurius,
Mardonius and Bessus, and two Gentlemen.

Ara. As low as this I bow to you, and would
As low as is my grave, to shew a mind
Thankful for all your mercies. Arb. O stand up,
And let me kneel, the light will be asham'd
To see observance done to me by you.

Ara. You are my King.

Arb. You are my Mother, rise;

As far be all your faults from your own soul,
As from my memory; then you shall be
As white as innocence her self. Ara. I came
Only to shew my duty, and acknowledge
My sorrows for my sins; longer to stay
Were but to draw eyes more attentively
Upon my shame, that power that kept you safe
From me, preserve you still.

Arb. Your own desires shall be your guide. [Exit Arane.]

Pan. Now let me die, since I have seen my Lord the King
Return in safetie, I have seen all good that life
Can shew me; I have ne're another wish
For Heaven to grant, nor were it fit I should;
For I am bound to spend my age to come,
In giving thanks that this was granted me.

Gob. Why does not your Majesty speak?

Arb. To whom? Gob. To the Princess.

Pan. Alas Sir, I am fearful, you do look
On me, as if I were some loathed thing
That you were finding out a way to shun.

Gob. Sir, you should speak to her. Arb. Ha?

Pan. I know I am unworthy, yet not ill arm'd, with which innocence here I will kneel, till I am one with earth, but I will gain some words and kindness from you.

Tigr. Will you speak Sir?

Arb. Speak, am I what I was?

What art thou that dost creep into my breast,
And dar'st not see my face? shew forth thy self:
I feel a pair of fiery wings displai'd
Hither, from hence; you shall not tarry there,
Up, and be gone, if thou best Love be gone:
Or I will tear thee from my wounded breast,
Pull thy lov'd Down away, and with thy Quill
By this right arm drawn from thy wonted wing,
Write to thy laughing Mother i'thy blood,
That you are powers bely'd, and all your darts
Are to be blown away, by men resolv'd,
Like dust; I know thou fear'st my words, away.

Tigr. O misery! why should he be so slow?
There can no falsehood come of loving her;
Though I have given my faith; she is a thing
Both to be lov'd and serv'd beyond my faith:
I would he would present me to her quickly.

Pan. Will you not speak at all? are you so far
From kind words? yet to save my modesty,
That must talk till you answer, do not stand

As you were dumb, say something, though it be Poyson'd with anger, that it may strike me dead.

Mar. Have you no life at all? for man-hood fake
Let her not kneel, and talk neglected thus;
A tree would find a tongue to answer her,
Did she but give it such a lov'd respect.

Arb. You mean this Lady: lift her from the earth; why do you let her kneel so long? Alas, Madam, your beauty uses to command, and not to beg. What is your sute to me? it shall be granted, yet the time is short, and my affairs are great: but where's my Sister? I bade she should be brought.

Mar. What, is he mad?

Arb. Gobrias, where is she?

Gob. Sir. Arb. Where is she man?

Gob. Who, Sir?

Arb. Who, hast thou forgot my Sister?

Gob. Your Sister, Sir?

Arb. Your Sister, Sir? some one that hath a wit, answer, where is she? Gob. Do you not see her there?

Arb. Where? Gob. There.

Arb. There, where?

Mar. S'light, there, are you blind?

Arb. Which do you mean, that little one?

Gob. No Sir.

Arb. No Sir? why, do you mock me? I can see
No other here, but that petitioning Lady.

Gob. That's she. Arb. Away.

Gob. Sir, it is she.

Arb. 'Tis false. Gob. Is it?

Arb. As hell, by Heaven, as false as hell,
My Sister: is she dead? if it be so,
Speak boldly to me; for I am a man,
And dare not quarrel with Divinity;
And do not think to cozen me with this:
I see you all are mute and stand amaz'd,
Fearful to answer me; it is too true,
A decreed instant cuts off ev'ry life,
For which to mourn, is to repine; she dy'd
A Virgin, though more innocent than sheep,
As clear as her own eyes, and blessedness
Eternal waits upon her where she is:
I know she could not make a wish to change
Her state for new, and you shall see me bear
My crosses like a man; we all must die,
And she hath taught us how.

Gob. Do not mistake,
And vex your self for nothing; for her death
Is a long life off, I hope: 'Tis she,
And if my speech deserve not faith, lay death
Upon me, and my latest words shall force
A credit from you.

Arb. Which, good Gobrias? that Lady dost thou mean?

Gob. That Lady Sir,

She is your Sister, and she is your Sister
That loves you so, 'tis she for whom I weep,
To see you use her thus. Arb. It cannot be.

Tigr. Pish, this is tedious,
I cannot hold, I must present my self,
And yet the sight of my Spaconia
Touches me, as a sudden thunder-clap
Does one that is about to sin. Arb. Away,
No more of this; here I pronounce him Traytor,
The direct plotter of my death, that names
Or thinks her for my Sister, 'tis a lie,
The most malicious of the world, invented
To mad your King; he that will say so next,
Let him draw out his sword and sheath it here,
It is a sin fully as pardonable:
She is no kin to me, nor shall she be;
If she were ever, I create her none:
And which of you can question this? My power
Is like the Sea, that is to be obey'd,
And not disputed with: I have decreed her
As far from having part of blood with me, j

As the nak'd Indians; come and answer me,
He that is boldest now; is that my Sister?

Mar. O this is fine.

Bef. No marry, she is not, an't please your Majesty, I never thought she was, she's nothing like you.

Arb. No 'tis true, she is not.

Mar. Thou shou'dst be hang'd.

Pan. Sir, I will speak but once; by the same power
You make my blood a stranger unto yours,
You may command me dead, and so much love
A stranger may importune, pray you do;
If this request appear too much to grant,
Adopt me of some other Family,
By your unquestion'd word; else I shall live
Like sinfull issues that are left in streets
By their regardless Mothers, and no name
Will be found for me.

Arb. I will hear no more,
Why should there be such musick in a voyce,
And sin for me to hear it? All the world
May take delight in this, and 'tis damnation
For me to do so: You are fair and wise
And vertuous I think, and he is blest
That is so near you as my brother is;
But you are nought to me but a disease;
Continual torment without hope of ease;
Such an ungodly sickness I have got,
That he that undertakes my cure, must first
O'rethrow Divinity, all moral Laws,
And leave mankind as unconfin'd as beasts,
Allowing 'em to do all actions
As freely as they drink when they desire.
Let me not hear you speak again; yet see
I shall but langish for the want of that,
The having which, would kill me: No man here
Offer to speak for her; for I consider
As much as you can say; I will not toil
My body and my mind too, rest thou there,
Here's one within will labour for you both.

Pan. I would I were past speaking.

Gob. Fear not Madam,
The King will alter, 'tis some sudden rage,
And you shall see it end some other way.

Pan. Pray heaven it do.

Tig. Though she to whom I swore, be here, I cannot Stifle my passion longer; if my father
Should rise again disquieted with this,
And charge me to forbear, yet it would out.
Madam, a stranger, and a pris'ner begs
To be bid welcome. Pan. You are welcome, Sir,
I think, but if you be not, 'tis past me
To make you so: for I am here a stranger,
Greater than you; we know from whence you come,
But I appear a lost thing, and by whom
Is yet uncertain, found here i'th' Court,
And openly suffer'd to walk up and down,
As one not worth the owning. Spa. O, I fear
Tigranes will be caught, he looks, me-thinks,
As he would change his eyes with her; some help
There is above for me, I hope.

Tigr. Why do you turn away, and weep so fast,
And utter things that mis-become your looks,
Can you want owning? Spa. O 'tis certain so.

Tigr. Acknowledge your self mine.

Arb. How now?

Tigr. And then see if you want an owner.

Arb. They are talking.

Tigr. Nations shall owne you for their Queen.

Arb. Tigranes, art not thou my prisoner?

Tigr. I am. Arb. And who is this?

Tigr. She is your Sister. Arb. She is so.

Mar. Is she so again? that's well. (her?)

Arb. And then how dare you offer to change words with

Tigr. Dare do it! Why? you brought me hither Sir,

To that intent. Arb. Perhaps I told you so,
If I had sworn it, had you so much folly
To credit it? The least word that she speaks
Is worth a life; rule your disordered tongue,
Or I will temper it. Spa. Blest be the breath.
Tigr. Temper my tongue! such incivilities
As these, no barbarous people ever knew:
You break the lawes of Nature, and of Nations,
You talk to me as if I were a prisoner
For theft: my tongue be temper'd? I must speak
If thunder check me, and I will.

Arb. You will? Spa. Alas my fortune.

Tigr. Do not fear his frown, dear Madam, hear me.

Arb. Fear not my frown? but that 'twere base in me
To fight with one I know I can o'recome,
Again thou shouldst be conquer'd by me.

Mar. He has one ransom with him already; me-thinks
'T were good to fight double, or quit.

Arb. Away with him to prison: Now Sir, see
If my frown be regardless; Why delay you?
Seize him Bacurius, you shall know my word
Sweeps like a wind, and all it grapples with,
Are as the chaffe before it. Tigr. Touch me not.

Arb. Help there. Tigr. Away.

1 Gent. It is in vain to struggle.

2 Gent. You must be forc'd.

Bac. Sir, you must pardon us, we must obey.

Arb. Why do you dally there? drag him away
By any thing. Bac. Come Sir.

Tigr. Justice, thou ought'st to give me strength enough
To shake all these off; This is tyrannie,
Arbaces, suttler than the burning Bulls,
Or that fam'd Titans bed. Thou mightst as well
Search i'th' deep of Winter through the snow
For half starv'd people, to bring home with thee,
To shew 'em fire, and send 'em back again,
As use me thus.

Arb. Let him be close, Bacurius. [Exeunt Tigr. and Bac.

Spa. I ne're rejoyc'd at any ill to him,
But this imprisonment: what shall become
Of me forsaken? Gob. You will not let your Sister
Depart thus discontented from you, Sir?

Arb. By no means Gobrias, I have done her wrong,
And made my self believe much of my self,
That is not in me: You did kneel to me,
Whilest I stood stubborn and regardless by,
And like a god incensed, gave no ear
To all your prayers: behold, I kneel to you,
Shew a contempt as large as was my own,
And I will suffer it, yet at the last forgive me.

Pan. O you wrong me more in this,
Than in your rage you did: you mock me now.

Arb. Never forgive me then, which is the worst
Can happen to me. Pan. If you be in earnest,
Stand up and give me but a gentle look,
And two kind words, and I shall be in heaven.

Arb. Rise you then to hear; I acknowledge thee
My hope, the only jewel of my life,
The best of Sisters, dearer than my breath,
A happiness as high as I could think;
And when my actions call thee otherwise,
Perdition light upon me. Pan. This is better

Than if you had not frown'd, it comes to me,
Like mercie at the block, and when I leave
To serve you with my life, your curse be with me:

Arb. Then thus I do salute thee, and again,
To make this knot the stronger, Paradise
Is there: It may be you are yet in doubt,
This third kiss blots it out, I wade in sin,
And foolishly intice my self along;
Take her away, see her a prisoner
In her own chamber closely, Gobrias.

Pan. Alas Sir, why?

Arb. I must not stay the answer; doe it:

Gob. Good Sir. Arb. No more, doe it I say.

Mar. This is better and better.

Pan. Yet hear me speak.

Arb. I will not hear you speak,
Away with her, let no man think to speak
For such a creature; for she is a witch,
A prisoner, and a Traitor.

Gob. Madam, this office grieves me.

Pan. Nay, 'tis well the king is pleas'd with it.

Arb. Bessus, go you along too with her; I will prove
All this that I have said, if I may live
So long; but I am desperately sick,
For she has given me poison in a kiss;
She had't betwixt her lips, and with her eyes
She witches people: go without a word.

[Exeunt Gob. Pan. Bef. and Spaconia.]

Why should you that have made me stand in war
Like fate it self, cutting what threds I pleas'd,
Decree such an unworthy end of me,
And all my glories? What am I, alas,
That you oppose me? if my secret thoughts
Have ever harbour'd swellings against you,
They could not hurt you, and it is in you
To give me sorrow, that will render me
Apt to receive your mercy; rather so,
Let it be rather so, than punish me
With such unmanly sins: Incest is in me
Dwelling already, and it must be holy
That pulls it thence, where art Mardonius?

Mar. Here Sir.

Arb. I pray thee bear me, if thou canst,
Am I not grown a strange weight?

Mar. As you were. Arb. No heavier?

Mar. No Sir. Arb. Why, my legs
Refuse to bear my body; O Mardonius,
Thou hast in field beheld me, when thou knowst
I could have gone, though I could never run.

Mar. And so I shall again.

Arb. O no, 'tis past.

Mar. Pray you go rest your self.

Arb. Wilt thou hereafter when they talk of me,
As thou shalt hear nothing but infamy,
Remember some of those things?

Mar. Yes I will.

Arb. I pray thee do: for thou shalt never see me so again.

[Exeunt]

Enter Bessus alone.

Bef. They talk of fame, I have gotten it in the wars; and will afford any man a reasonable penny-worth: some will say, they could be content to have it, but that it is to be achiev'd with danger; but my opinion is otherwise: for if I might stand still in Cannon-proof, and have fame fall upon me, I would refuse it: my reputation came principally by thinking to run away, which no body knows but Mardonius, and I think he conceals it to anger me. Before I went to the warrs, I came to the Town a young fellow, without means or parts to deserve friends; and my empty guts perswaded me to lie, and abuse people for my meat, which I did, and they beat me: then would I fast two days, till my hunger cri'd out on me, rail still, then me-thought I had a monstrous stomach to abuse 'em again, and did it. I, this state I continu'd till they hung me up by th' heels, and beat me wth haffe sticks, as if they would have baked me, and have coustn'd some body wth me for Venison: After this I rail'd, and eat quietly: for the whole Kingdom took notice of me for a bass'd whipt fellow, and what I said was remembred in mirth but never in anger, of which I was glad; I would it were at that pass again. After this, heaven calls an Aunt of mine, that left two hundred pound in a cousins hand for me, who taking me to be a gallant young spirit, raised a company for me with the money and sent me into Armenia with 'em: Away I would have run from them, but that I could get no company, and alone I durst not run. I was never at battail but once, and there I was running, but Mardonius cudgel'd me; yet I got loofe at last, but was so fraid, that I saw no more than my shoulders doe, but fled with my whole company amongst my Enemies, and overthrew 'em: Now the report of my valour is come over before me, and they say I was a raw young fellow, but now I am improv'd, a Plague on their eloquence, 't will cost me many a beating; And Mardonius might help this too, if he would; for now they think to get honour on me, and all the men I have abus'd call me freshly worthily, as they call it by the way of challenge.

Enter a Gent.

3 Gent. Good morrow, Captain Bessus.

Bef. Good morrow Sir.

3 Gent. I come to speak with you.

Bef. You're very welcome.

3 Gent. From one that holds himself wrong'd by you some three years since: your worth he says is sam'd, and he doth nothing doubt but you will do him right, as befeems a souldier. Bef. A pox on 'em, so they cry all.

3 Gent. And a slight note I have about me for you, for the delivery of which you must excuse me; it is an office that friendship calls upon me to do, and no way offensive to you; since I desire but right on both sides.

Bef. 'Tis a challenge Sir, is it not?

3 Gent. 'Tis an inviting to the field.

Bef. An inviting? O Sir your Mercy, what a Complement he delivers it with? he might as agreeable to my nature present me poison with such a speech: um um um reputation, um um um call you to account, um um um forc'd to this, um um um with my Sword, um um um like a Gentleman, um um um dear to me, um um um satisfaction: 'Tis very well Sir, I do accept it, but he must await an answer this thirteen weeks.

3 Gent. Why Sir, he would be glad to wipe off his stain as soon as he could.

Bef. Sir upon my credit I am already ingag'd to two hundred, and twelve, all which must have their stains wip'd off, if that be the word, before him.

3 Gent. Sir, if you be truly ingag'd but to one, he shall stay a competent time.

Bef. Upon my faith Sir, to two hundred and twelve, and I have a spent body, too much bruis'd in battel, so that I cannot fight, I must be plain, above three combats a day: All the kindness I can shew him, is to set him resolutely in my rowle, the two hundred and thirteenth man, which is something, for I tell you, I think there will be more after him, than before him, I think so; pray you commend me to him, and tell him this.

3 Gent. I will Sir, good morrow to you.

[Exit 3 Gent.]

Bef. Good morrow good Sir. Certainly my safest way were to print my self a coward, with a discovery how I came by my credit, and clap it upon every post; I have received above thirty challenges within this two hours, marry all but the first I put off with engagement, and by good fortune, the first is no madder of fighting than I, so that that's referred, the place where it must be ended, is four days journey off, and our arbitratours are these: He has chosen a Gentleman in travel, and I have a special friend with a quarrel in his hand, like to hold him this five years; for mine: and when his man comes home, we are to expect my friends heal'th: If they would finde me challenges thus thick, as long as I liv'd, I would have no other living; I can make seven shillings a day o'th' paper to the Grocers: yet I learn nothing by all these but a little skill in comparing of stiles. I do finde evidently, that there is some one Scrivener in this Town, that has a great hand in writing of Challenges, for they are all of a cut, and six of 'em in a hand; and the y all end, my reputation is dear to me, and I must require satisfaction: Who's there? more paper I hope, no, 'tis my Lord Bacurinus, I fear all is not well betwixt us.

Enter

Enter Bacurius.

Bac. Now Captain Bessus, I come about a frivolous matter, caus'd by as idle a report: you know you were a coward. Bes. Very right.

Bac. And wronged me.

Bes. True my Lord.

Bac. But now people will call you valiant, desertlessly I think, yet for their satisfaction, I will have you fight with Bes. O my good Lord, my deep Engagements. (me.)

Bac. Tell not me of your Engagements, Captain Bessus, it is not to be put off with an excuse: for my own part, I am none of the multitude that believe your conversion from Coward.

Bes. My Lord, I seek not Quarrels, and this belongs not to me, I am not to maintain it.

Bac. Who then pray?

Bes. Bessus the Coward wrong'd you. Bac. Right.

Bes. And shall Bessus the Valiant, maintain what Bessus the Coward did?

Bac. I pray thee leave these cheating tricks, I swear thou shalt fight with me, or thou shalt be beaten extremly, and kick'd.

Bes. Since you provoke me thus far, my Lord, I will fight with you, and by my Sword it shall cost me twenty pound, but I will have my Leg well a week sooner purposely.

Bac. Your Leg? Why, what ailes your Leg? I'll do a cure on you, stand up.

Bes. My Lord, this is not Noble in you.

Bac. What dost thou with such a phrase in thy mouth? I will kick thee out of all good words before I leave thee.

Bes. My Lord, I take this as a punishment for the offence I did when I was a Coward.

Bac. When thou wert? Confess thy self a Coward still, or by this light, I'll beat thee into Spunge.

Bes. Why I am one.

Bac. Are you so Sir? And why do you wear a Sword then? Come unbuckle. Bes. My Lord.

Bac. Unbuckle I say, and give it me, or as I live, thy head will ake extremly.

Bes. It is a pretty Hilt, and if your Lordship take an affection to it, with all my heart I present it to you for a New-years-gift.

Bac. I thank you very heartily, sweet Captain, farewell.

Bes. One word more, I beseech your Lordship to render me my knife again.

Bac. Marry by all means Captain; cherish your self with it, and eat hard, good Captain; we cannot tell whether we shall have any more such: Adue dear Captain. [Exit Bac.]

Bes. I will make better use of this, than of my Sword: A base spirit has this vantage of a brave one, it keeps always at a stay, nothing brings it down, not beating. I remember I promis'd the King in a great Audience, that I would make my back-biters eat my sword to a knife; how to get another sword I know not, nor know any means left for me to maintain my credit, but impudence: therefore I will out-swear him and all his followers, that this is all that's left uneaten of my sword. [Exit Bessus.]

Enter Mardonius.

Mar. I'll move the King, he is most strangely alter'd; I guess the cause I fear too right, Heaven has some secret end in't, and 'tis a scourge no question justly laid upon him: he has followed me through twenty Rooms; and ever when I stay to wait his command, he blushes like a Girl, and looks upon me, as if modesty kept in his business: so turns away from me, but if I go on, he follows me again.

Enter Arbaces.

See, here he is. I do not use this, yet I know not how, I cannot chuse but weep to see him; his very Enemies I think, whose wounds have bred his fame, if they should see him now, would find tears in their eyes.

Arb. I cannot utter it, why should I keep

A breast to harbour thoughts? I dare not speak.

Darkness is in my bosom, and there lie

A thousand thoughts that cannot brook the light:

How wilt thou vex 'em when this deed is done,

Conscience, that art afraid to let me name it?

Mar. How do you Sir?

Arb. Why very well Mardonius, how dost thou do?

Mar. Better than you I fear.

Arb. I hope thou art; for to be plain with thee,

Thou art in Hell else, secret scorching flames

That far transcend earthly material fires

Are crept into me, and there is no cure.

Is it not strange Mardonius, there's no cure?

Mar. Sir, either I mistake, or there is something hid That you would utter to me.

Arb. So there is, but yet I cannot do it.

Mar. Out with it Sir, if it be dangerous, I will not shrink to do you service; I shall not esteem my life a weightier matter than indeed it is, I know it is subject to more chances than it has hours, and I were better lose it in my Kings cause, than with an ague, or a fall, or sleeping, to a Thief; as all these are probable enough: let me but know what I shall do for you.

Arb. It will not out: were you with Gobrias, And bad him give my Sister all content

The place affords, and give her leave to send

And speak to whom she please?

Mar. Yes Sir, I was.

Arb. And did you to Bacurius say as much About Tigranes? Mar. Yes.

Arb. That's all my business.

Mar. O say not so,

You had an answer of this before;

Besides I think this business might

Be utter'd more carelessly.

Arb. Come thou shalt have it out, I do beseech thee

By all the love thou hast profess'd to me,

To see my Sister from me.

Mar. Well, and what? Arb. That's all.

Mar. That's strange, I shall say nothing to her?

Arb. Not a word;

But if thou lovest me, find some subtil way

To make her understand by signs.

Mar. But what shall I make her understand?

Arb. O Mardonius, for that I must be pardon'd.

Mar. You may, but I can only see her then.

Arb. 'Tis true;

Bear her this Ring then, and

One more advice, thou shalt speak to her:

Tell her I do love My kindred all: wilt thou?

Mar. Is there no more?

Arb. O yes and her the best;

Better than any Brother loves his Sister: That's all.

Mar. Methinks this need not have been delivered with such a caution; I'll do it.

Arb. There is more yet,

Wilt thou be faithful to me?

Mar. Sir, if I take upon me to deliver it, after I hear it, I'll pass through fire to do it.

Arb. I love her better than a Brother ought;

Dost thou conceive me?

Mar. I hope you do not Sir.

Arb. No, thou art dull, kneel down before her, And ne'er rise again, till she will love me.

Mar. Why, I think she does.

Arb. But better than she does, another way; As wives love Husbands.

Mar. Why, I think there are few Wives that love their Husbands better than she does you.

Arb. Thou wilt not understand me: is it fit

This should be utter'd plainly? take it then

Naked as it is: I would desire her love

Lasciviously, lewdly; incestuously,

To do a sin that needs must damn us both,

And thee too: dost thou understand me now?

Mar. Yes, there's your Ring again; what have I done Dishonestly in my whole life, name it, That you should put so base a business to me?

Arb. Didst thou not tell me thou wouldst do it?

Mar. Yes; if I undertook it, but if all My hairs were lives, I would not be engag'd In such a case to save my last life.

Arb. O guilt! ha how poor and weak a thing art thou? This man that is my servant, whom my breath Might blow upon the world, might beat me here Having this cause, whil'ft I prest down with sin Could not resist him: hear Mardonius, It was a motion mis-beseeming man, And I am sorry for it.

Mar. Heaven grant you may be so: you must understand, nothing that you can utter, can remove my love and service from my Prince. But otherwise, I think I shall not love you more. For you are sinful, and if you do this crime, you ought to have no Laws. For after this, it will be great injustice in you to punish any offender for any crime. For my self I find my heart too big: I feel I have not patience to look on whilst you run these forbidden courses. Means I have none but your favour, and I am rather glad that I shall lose 'em both together, than keep 'em with such conditions; I shall find a dwelling amongst some people, where though our Garments perhaps be courser, we shall be richer far within, and harbour no such vices in 'em: the Gods preserve you, and mend.

Arb. Mardonius, stay Mardonius, for though My present state requires nothing but knaves To be about me, such as are prepar'd For every wicked act, yet who does know But that my loathed Fate may turn about, And I have use for honest men again? I hope I may, I prethee leave me not.

Enter Bessus.

Bes. Where is the King? Mar. There.

Bes. An't please your Majesty, there's the knife.

Arb. What knife?

Bes. The Sword is eaten.

Mar. Away you fool, the King is serious, And cannot now admit your vanities.

Bes. Vanities! I'me no honest man, if my enemies have not brought it to this, what, do you think I lie?

Arb. No, no, 'tis well Bessus, 'tis very well I'm glad on't.

Mar. If your enemies brought it to this, your enemies are Cutlers, come leave the King.

Bes. Why, may not valour approach him?

Mar. Yes, but he has affairs, depart, or I shall be something unmannerly with you.

Arb. No, let him stay Mardonius, let him stay, I have occasion with him very weighty, And I can spare you now. Mar. Sir?

Arb. Why I can spare you now.

Bes. Mardonius give way to these State affairs.

Mar. Indeed you are fitter for this present purpose.

[Exit Mar.

Arb. Bessus, I should employ thee, wilt thou do't?

Bes. Do't for you? by this Air I will do any thing without exception, be it a good, bad, or indifferent thing.

Arb. Do not swear.

Bes. By this light but I will, any thing whatsoever.

Arb. But I shall name the thing, Thy Conscience will not suffer thee to do.

Bes. I would fain hear that thing.

Arb. Why I would have thee get my Sister for me? Thou understandst me, in a wicked manner.

Bes. O you would have a bout with her? I'll do't, I'll do't, I'll do't.

Arb. Wilt thou, do't thou make no more on't?

Bes. More? no, why is there any thing else? if there be, it shall be done too.

Arb. Hast thou no greater sense of such a sin? Thou art too wicked for my company, Though I have hell within me, thou may'st yet Corrupt me further: pray thee answer me, How do I shew to thee after this motion?

Bes. Why your Majesty looks as well in my opinion, as ever you did since you were born.

Arb. But thou appear'st to me after thy grant, The ugliest, loathed detestable thing That I ever met with. Thou hast eyes Like the flames of Sulphur, which me thinks do dart Infection on me, and thou hast a mouth Enough to take me in where there do stand Four rows of Iron Teeth.

Bes. I feel no such thing, but 'tis no matter how I look, I'll do my business as well as they that look better, and when this is dispatch'd, if you have a mind to your Mother, tell me, and you shall see I'll set it hard.

Arb. My Mother! Heaven forgive me to hear this, I am inspir'd with horrour: now I hate thee Worse than my sin, which if I could come by Should suffer death Eternal ne're to rise In any breast again. Know I will die Languishing mad, as I resolve, I shall, E're I will deal by such an instrument: Thou art too sinful to employ in this; Out of the World, away.

Bes. What do you mean, Sir?

Arb. Hung round with Curses, take thy fearful flight Into the Desarts, where 'mongst all the Monsters If thou find'st one so beastly as thy self, Thou shalt be held as innocent. Bes. Good Sir.

Arb. If there were no such instruments as thou, We Kings could never act such wicked deeds: Seek out a man that mocks Divinity, That breaks each precept both of God and man, And natures too, and does it without lust, Meerly because it is a law, and good, And live with him: for him thou canst not spoil. Away I say, I will not do this sin. [Exit Bessus. I'll press it here, till it do break my breast, It heaves to get out, but thou art a sin, And spight of torture I will keep thee in.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Gobrias, Panthea, and Spaconia.

Gob. HAVE you written Madam?

Pan. Yes, good Gobrias.

Gob. And with a kindness, and such winning words As may provoke him, at one instant feel His double fault, your wrong, and his own rashness?

Pan. I have sent words enough, if words may win him From his displeasure; and such words I hope, As shall gain much upon his goodness, Gobrias. Yet fearing they are many, and a womans, A poor belief may follow, I have woven As many truths within 'em to speak for me, That if he be but gracious, and receive 'em—

Gob. Good Lady be not fearful, though he should not Give you your present end in this, believe it, You shall feel, if your vertue can induce you To labour on't, this tempest which I know, Is but a poor proof 'gainst your patience: All those contents, your spirit will arrive at, Newer and sweeter to you; your Royal brother, When he shall once collect himself, and see How far he has been asunder from himself; What a meer stranger to his golden temper: Must from those roots of vertue, never dying, Though somewhat stopt with humour, shoot again

Into a thousand glories, bearing his fair branches
High as our hopes can look at, straight as justice,
Loaden with ripe contents; he loves you dearly;
I know it, and I hope I need not farther
Win you to understand it. Pan. I believe it.
But howsoever, I am sure I love him dearly:
So dearly, that if any thing I write
For my enlarging should beget his anger,
Heaven be a witness with me and my faith,
I had rather live intomb'd here.

Gob. You shall not feel a worse stroke than your grief,
I am sorry 'tis so sharp, I kiss your hand,
And this night will deliver this true story,
With this hand to your Brother.

Pan. Peace go with you, you are a good man. [Exit Gob.
My Spaconia, why are you ever sad thus?

Spa. O dear Lady.

Pan. Prethee discover not a way to sadness,
Nearer than I have in me, our two sorrows
Work like two eager Hawks, who shall get highest;
How shall I lessen thine? for mine I fear
Is easier known than cur'd.

Spa. Heaven comfort both,
And give you happy ends, however I
Fall in my stubborn fortunes.

Pan. This but teaches
How to be more familiar with our sorrows,
That are too much our masters: good Spaconia
How shall I do you service?

Spa. Noblest Lady,
You make me more a slave still to your goodness,
And only live to purchase thanks to pay you,
For that is all the business of my life: now
I will be bold, since you will have it so,
To ask a noble favour of you.

Pan. Speak it, 'tis yours, for from so sweet a virtue;
No ill demand has issue.

Spa. Then ever vertuous, let me beg your will
In helping me to see the Prince Tigranes,
With whom I am equal prisoner, if not more.

Pan. Reserve me to a greater end Spaconia;
Bacurius cannot want so much good manners
As to deny your gentle visitation,
Though you came only with your own command.

Spa. I know they will deny me gracious Madam,
Being a stranger, and so little fam'd,
So utter empty of those excellencies
That tame Authority; but in you sweet Lady,
All these are natural; beside, a power
Deriv'd immediate from your Royal brother,
Whose least word in you may command the Kingdom.

Pan. More than my word Spaconia, you shall carry,
For fear it fail you.

Spa. Dare you trust a Token?
Madam I fear I am grown too bold a begger.

Pan. You are a pretty one, and trust me Lady
It joyes me, I shall do a good to you,
Though to my self I never shall be happy:
Here, take this Ring, and from me as a Token
Deliver it; I think they will not stay you:
So all your own desires go with you Lady.

Spa. And sweet peace to your Grace.

Pan. Pray Heaven I find it.

[Exeunt.

Enter Tigranes, in prison.

Tigr. Fool that I am, I have undone my self,
And with my own hand turn'd my fortune round,
That was a fair one: I have childishly
Plaid with my hope so long, till I have broke it,
And now too late I mourn for't; O Spaconia!
Thou hast found an even way to thy revenge now,
Why didst thou follow me like a faint shadow,
To wither my desires? But wretched fool,
Why did I plant thee 'twixt the Sun and me,

To make me freeze thus? Why did I prefer her
To the fair Princess? O thou fool, thou fool,
Thou family of fools, live like a slave still,
And in thee bear thine own hell and thy torment,
Thou hast deserv'd: Couldst thou find no Lady
But she that has thy hopes to put her to,
And hazard all thy peace? None to abuse,
But she that lov'd thee ever? poor Spaconia,
And so much lov'd thee, that in honesty
And honour thou art bound to meet her virtues:
She that forgot the greatness of her grief
And miseries, that must follow such mad passions,
Endless and wild as women; she that for thee
And with thee left her liberty, her name,
And Country, you have paid me equal, Heavens,
And sent my own rod to correct me with;
A woman: for inconstancy I'll suffer,
Lay it on justice, till my soul melt in me
For my unmanly, beastly, sudden doting
Upon a new face: after all my oaths
Many and strange ones,
I feel my old fire flame again and burn
So strong and violent, that should I see her
Again, the grief and that would kill me.

Enter Bacurius and Spaconia.

Bac. Lady, your token I acknowledge, you may pass;
There is the King.

Spa. I thank your Lordship for it. [Exit Bac.

Tigr. She comes, she comes, shame hide me ever from her,
Would I were buried, or so far remov'd
Light might not find me out, I dare not see her.

Spa. Nay never hide your self; or were you hid
Where earth hides all her riches, near her Center;
My wrongs without more day would light me to you:
I must speak ere I die; were all your greatness
Doubled upon you, y'are a perjur'd man,
And only mighty in your wickedness
Of wronging women. Thou art false, false Prince;
I live to see it, poor Spaconia lives
To tell thee thou art false; and then no more;
She lives to tell thee thou art more unconstant;
Than all ill women ever were together.

Thy faith is firm as raging over-flows,
That no bank can command; as lasting
As boyes gay bubbles, blown i'th' Air and broken:
The wind is fixt to thee: and sooner shall
The beaten Mariner with his shrill whistle
Calm the loud murmur of the troubled main,
And strike it smooth again; than thy soul fall
To have peace in love with any: Thou art all
That all good men must hate; and if thy story
Shall tell succeeding ages what thou wert,
O let it spare me in it, lest true lovers
In pity of my wrong, burn thy black Legend,
And with their curses, shake thy sleeping ashes.

Tigr. Oh! oh!

Spa. The destinies, I hope, have pointed out
Our ends, that thou maist die for love,
Though not for me; for this assure thy self,
The Princess hates thee deadly, and will sooner
Be won to marry with a Bull, and safer
Than such a beast as thou art: I have struck,
I fear, too deep; beshrow me for't; Sir,
This sorrow works me like a cunning friendship,
Into the same piece with it; 'tis asham'd,
Alas, I have been too rugged: Dear my Lord,
I am sorry I have spoken any thing,
Indeed I am, that may add more restraint
To that too much you have: good Sir, be pleas'd
To think it was a fault of love, not malice;
And do as I will do, forgive it Prince.
I do, and can forgive the greatest sins
To me you can repent of; pray believe.

Tigr.

Tigr. O my Spaconia! O thou vertuous woman!
Spa. Nay, more, the King Sir.

Enter Arbaces, Bacurius, Mardonius.

Arb. Have you been carefull of our noble Prisoner,
 That he want nothing fitting for his greatnes?

Bac. I hope his grace will quit me for my care Sir.

Arb. 'Tis well, royal Tigranes, health.

Tigr. More than the strictness of this place can give Sir,
 I offer back again to great Arbaces.

Arb. We thank you worthy Prince, and pray excuse us,
 We have not seen you since your being here,
 I hope your noble usage has been equall
 With your own person: your imprisonment,
 If it be any, I dare say is easie,
 And shall not last too dayes.

Tigr. I thank you;
 My usage here has been the same it was,
 Worthy a royal Conqueror. For my restraint,
 It came unkindly, because much unlook'd for;
 But I must bear it.

Arb. What Lady's that? Bacurius?

Bac. One of the Princesses women, Sir.

Arb. I fear'd it, why comes she hither?

Bac. To speak with the Prince Tigranes.

Arb. From whom, Bacurius?

Bac. From the Princess, Sir.

Arb. I knew I had seen her.

Mar. His fit begins to take him now again,
 'Tis a strange Feaver, and 'twill shake us all anon, I fear,
 Would he were well cur'd of this raging folly:
 Give me the warrs, where men are mad, and may talk
 what they list, and held the bravest fellows; This pelting prating peace is good for nothing: drinking's a vertue to't.

Arb. I see there's truth in no man, nor obedience,
 But for his own ends, why did you let her in?

Bac. It was your own command to barr none from him,
 Besides, the Princess sent her ring Sir, for my warrant.

Arb. A token to Tigranes, did she not?
 Sir tell truth. Bac. I do not use to lie Sir,
 'Tis no way I eat or live by, and I think,
 This is no token Sir.

Mar. This combat has undone him: if he had been well beaten, he had been temperate; I shall never see him handsome again, till he have a Horse-mans staffe yok'd thorow his shoulders, or an arm broken with a bullet.

Arb. I am trifled with. Bac. Sir?

Arb. I know it, as I know thee to be false.

Mar. Now the clap comes.

Bac. You never knew me so, Sir I dare speak it,
 And durst a worse man tell me, though my better——

Mar. 'Tis well said, by my soul.

Arb. Sirra, you answer as you had no life.

Bac. That I fear Sir to lose nobly.

Arb. I say Sir, once again.

Bac. You may say what yon please, Sir,
 Would I might do so.

Arb. I will, Sir, and say openly, this woman carries letters,
 By my life I know she carries letters, this woman does it.

Mar. Would Bessie were here to take her aside and search her, He would quickly tell you what she carried Sir.

Arb. I have found it out, this woman carries letters.

Mar. If this hold, 'twill be an ill world for Bawdes,
 Chamber-maids and Post-boys, I thank heaven I have none
 but his letters patents, things of his own enditing.

Arb. Prince, this cunning cannot do't.

Tigr. Doe, What Sir? I reach you not.

Arb. It shall not serve your turn, Prince.

Tigr. Serve my turn Sir?

Arb. I Sir, it shall not serve your turn.

Tigr. Be plainer, good Sir.

Arb. This woman shall carry no more letters back to your Love Panthea, by Heaven she shall not, I say she shall not.

Mar. This would make a Saint swear like a souldier.

Tigr. This beats me more, King, than the blowes you gave me.

Arb. Take 'em away both, and together let them prisoners be, strictly and closely kept, or Sirra, your life shall answer it, and let no body speak with 'em hereafter.

Tigr. Well, I am subject to you,
 And must indure these passions:
 This is the imprisonment I have look'd for always.
 And the dearer place I would choofe.

[Exeunt Tigr. Spa. Bac.]

Mar. Sir, you have done well now.

Arb. Dare you reprove it? Mar. No.

Arb. You must be crossing me.

Mar. I have no letters Sir to anger you,
 But a dry sonnet of my Corporals
 To an old Suttlers wife, and that I'll burn, Sir.
 'Tis like to prove a fine age for the Ignorant.

Arb. How darst thou so often forfeit thy life?
 Thou know'st 'tis in my power to take it.

Mar. Yes, and I know you wo't not, or if you doe, you'll miss it quickly. Arb. Why?

Mar. Who shall tell you of these childish follies
 When I am dead? who shall put to his power
 To draw those vertues out of a flood of humors,
 When they are drown'd, and make 'em shine again?
 No, cut my head off:
 Then you may talk, and be believed, and grow worfe,
 And have your too self-glorious temper rot
 Into a deep sleep, and the Kingdom with you,
 Till forraign swords be in your throats, and slaughter
 Be every where about you like your flatterers.
 Do, kill me.

Arb. Prethee be tamer, good Mardonius,
 Thou know'st I love thee, nay I honour thee,
 Believe it good old Souldier, I am thine;
 But I am rack'd clean from my self, bear with me,
 Woot thou bear with me my Mardonius?

Enter Gobrias.

Mar. There comes a good man, love him too, he's tempe-
 You may live to have need of such a vertue, (rate,
 Rage is not still in fashion.

Arb. Welcome good Gobrias.

Gob. My service and this letter to your Grace.

Arb. From whom?

Gob. From the rich Mine of vertue and beauty,
 Your mournfull Sister.

Arb. She is in prison, Gobrias, is she not?

Gob. She is Sir, till your pleasure to enlarge her,
 Which on my knees I beg. Oh 'tis not fit,
 That all the sweetness of the world in one,
 The youth and vertue that would tame wild Tygers,
 And wilder people, that have known no manners,
 Should live thus cloistred up; for your loves sake,
 If there be any in that noble heart,
 To her a wretched Lady, and forlorn,
 Or for her love to you, which is as much
 As nature and obedience ever gave,
 Have pity on her beauties.

Arb. Pray thee stand up; 'Tis true, she is too fair,
 And all these commendations but her own,
 Would thou had'st never so commended her,
 Or I nere liv'd to have heard it Gobrias;
 If thou but know'st the wrong her beautie does her,
 Thou wouldst in pity of her be a liar,
 Thy ignorance has drawn me wretched man,
 Whither my self nor thou canst well tell: O my fate!
 I think she loves me, but I fear another
 Is deeper in her heart: How thinkst thou Gobrias?

Gob. I do beseech your Grace believe it not,
 For let me perish if it be not false. Good Sir, read her Letter.
Mar. This Love, or what a devil it is I know not, begets more mischief than a Wake. I had rather be well beaten, starv'd, or lowsie, than live within the Air on't. He that had had seen this brave fellow Charge through a grove of Pikes but t'other day, and look upon him now, will ne'r believe his eyes again: if he continue thus but two days more, a Taylor may beat him with one hand tied behind him.

Arb. Alas, she would be at liberty.

And there be a thousand reasons Gobrias,
Thousands that will deny 't:

Which if she knew, she would contentedly
Be where she is: and blefs her vertues for it,
And me, though she were clofer, she would, Gobrias,
Good man indeed she would.

Gob. Then good Sir, for her satisfaction,
Send for her and with reason make her know
Why she must live thus from you.

Arb. I will; go bring her to me.

[Exeunt all.]

Enter Bessus, and two Sword-men, and a Boy.

Bef. Y'are very welcome both; some stools boy,
And reach a Table; Gentlemen o'th' Sword,
Pray sit without more complement; be gone child.
I have been curious in the searching of you,
Because I understand you wise and valiant persons.

1 We understand our selves Sir.

Bef. Nay Gentlemen, and dear friends o'th' Sword,
No complement I pray, but to the cause
I hang upon, which in few, is my honour.

2 You cannot hang too much Sir, for your honour,
But to your cause.

Bef. Be wise, and speak truth, my first doubt is,
My beating by my Prince.

1 Stay there a little Sir, do you doubt a beating?

Or have you had a beating by your Prince?

Bef. Gentlemen o'th' Sword, my Prince has beaten me.

2 Brother, what think you of this case?

1 If he has beaten him, the case is clear.

2 If he have beaten him, I grant the case;
But how? we cannot be too subtil in this business,
I say, but how?

Bef. Even with his Royal hand.

1 Was it a blow of love, or indignation?

Bef. 'Twas twenty blows of indignation, Gentlemen,
Besides two blows o'th' face.

2 Those blows o'th' face have made a new cause on't,
The rest were but an horrible rudeness.

1 Two blows o'th' face, and given by a worse man, I must confes, as the Sword-men say, had turn'd the business:
Mark me brother, by a worse man; but being by his Prince, had they been ten, and those ten drawn teeth, besides the hazard of his nose for ever; all this had been but favours:
this is my flat opinion, which I'll die in.

2 The King may do much Captain, believe it; for had he crackt your Scull through, like a bottle, or broke a Rib or two with tossing of you, yet you had lost no honour:
This is strange you may imagine, but this is truth now
Captain.

Bef. I will be glad to embrace it Gentlemen;
But how far may he strike me?

1 There is another: a new cause rising from the time and distance, in which I will deliver my opinion: he may strike, beat, or cause to be beaten: for these are natural to man: your Prince, I say, may beat you, so far forth as his dominion reacheth, that's for the distance; the time, ten miles a day, I take it.

2 Brother, you err, 'tis fifteen miles a day,
His stage is ten, his beatings are fifteen.

Bef. 'Tis the longest, but we subjects must—

1 Be subject to it; you are wise and vertuous.

Bef. Obedience ever makes that noble use on't,
To which I dedicate my beaten body;
I must trouble you a little further, Gentlemen o'th' Sword.

2 No trouble at all to us Sir, if we may Profit your understanding, we are bound
By vertue of our calling to utter our opinions,
Shortly, and discreetly.

Bef. My forestt business is, I have been kick'd.

2 How far Sir?

Bef. Not to flatter my self in it, all over, my sword forc'd but not lost; for discreetly I rendred it to save that imputation.

1 It shew'd discretion, the best part of valour.

2 Brother, this is a pretty cause, pray ponder on't;
Our friend here has been kick'd.

1 He has so, brother.

2 Sorely he saies: Now, had he set down here
Upon the meer kick, 't had been Cowardly.

1 I think it had been Cowardly indeed.

2 But our friend has redeem'd it in delivering
His sword without compulsion; and that man
That took it of him, I pronounce a weak one,
And his kicks nullities.

He should have kick'd him after the delivering
Which is the confirmation of a Coward.

1 Brother, I take it, you mistake the question;
For, say that I were kick'd.

2 I must not say so;

Nor I must not hear it spoke by the tongue of man.
You kick'd, dear brother! you're merry.

1 But put the case I were kick'd?

2 Let them put it that are things weary of their lives,
and know not honour; put the case you were kick'd?

1 I do not say I was kickt.

2 Nor no silly creature that wears his head without a
Case, his soul in a Skin-coat: You kickt dear brother?

Bef. Nay Gentlemen, let us do what we shall do,
Truly and honesty; good Sirs to the question.

1 Why then I say, suppose your Boy kick't, Captain?

2 The Boy may be suppos'd is liable.

1 A foolish forward zeal Sir, in my friend;
But to the Boy, suppose the Boy were kickt.

Bef. I do suppose it.

1 Has your Boy a sword?

Bef. Surely no; I pray suppose a sword too.

1 I do suppose it; you grant your Boy was kick't then.

2 By no means Captain, let it be supposed still; the word grant, makes not for us.

1 I say this must be granted.

2 This must be granted brother?

1 I, this must be granted.

2 Still this must?

1 I say this must be granted.

2 I, give me the must again, brother, you palter.

1 I will not hear you, wasp.

2 Brother, I say you palter, the must three times together; I wear as sharp Steel as another man, and my Fox bites as deep, musted, my dear brother.

But to the cause again.

Bef. Nay look you Gentlemen.

2 In a word, I ha' done.

1 A tall man but intemperate, 'tis great pity;
Once more suppose the Boy kick'd. 2 Forward.

1 And being thorowly kick'd, laughs at the kicker.

2 So much for us; proceed.

1 And in this beaten scorn, as I may call it,
Delivers up his weapon; where lies the error?

Bef. It lies i'th' beating Sir, I found it four dayes since.

2 The error, and a fore one as I take it,
Lies in the thing kicking.

Bef. I understand that well, 'tis so indeed Sir.

1 That is according to the man that did it.

2 There springs a new branch, whose was the foot?

Bef. A Lords.

1 The cause is mighty, but had it been two Lords,
And both had kick'd you, if you laugh, 'tis clear.

Bef. I did laugh,

But how will that help me, Gentlemen?

2 Yes, it shall help you if you laugh aloud.

Bef. As loud as a kick'd man could laugh, I laugh Sir.

1 My reason now, the valiant man is known

By suffering and contemning; you have Enough of both, and you are valiant.

2 If he be sure he has been kick'd enough:
For that brave sufferance you speak of brother,
Confits not in a beating and away,
But in a cudgell'd body, from eighteen
To eight and thirty; in a head rebuk'd
With pots of all size, degrees, stools, and bed-staves,
This shoves a valiant man.

Ref. Then I am valiant, as valiant as the proudest,
For these are all familiar things to me;
Familiar as my sleep, or want of money,
All my whole body's but one bruise with beating,
I think I have been cudgell'd with all nations,
And almost all Religions.

2 Embrace him brother, this man is valiant,
I know it by my self, he's valiant.

1 Captain, thou art a valiant Gentleman,
To bide upon, a very valiant man.

Ref. My equall friends o'th'sword, I must request your hands to this. 2 'Tis fit it should be.

Ref. Boy, get me some wine, and pen and Ink within:
Am I clear, Gentlemen?

1 Sir, the world has taken notice what we have done,
Make much of your body, for I'll pawn my steel,
Men will be coyer of their legs hereafter.

Ref. I must request you goe along and testify to the Lord
Bacurius, whose foot has struck me, how you find my cause.

2 We will, and tell that Lord he must be rul'd,
Or there are those abroad, will rule his Lordship. [Exeunt.]

Enter Arbaces at one door, and Gob. and Panthea at another.

Gob. Sir, here's the Princess.

Arb. Leave us then alone,
For the main cause of her imprisonment
Must not be heard by any but her self. [Exit Gob.]
You're welcome Sister, and would to heaven
I could so bid you by another name:

If you above love not such sins as these,
Circle my heart with thoughts as cold as snow
To quench these rising flames that harbour here.

Ban. Sir, does it please you I should speak?

Arb. Please me?

I, more than all the art of musick can,
Thy speech doth please me, for it ever sounds,
As thou brought'st joyfull unexpected news;
And yet it is not fit thou shouldst be heard.

I pray thee think so. Pan. Be it so, I will.

Am I the first that ever had a wrong
So far from being fit to have redress,
That 'twas unfit to hear it? I will back
To prison, rather than disquiet you,
And wait till it be fit. Arb. No, do not goe;
For I will hear thee with a serious thought:
I have collected all that's man about me
Together strongly, and I am resolv'd
To hear thee largely, but I do beseech thee,
Do not come nearer to me, for there is Something in that, that will undoe us both.

Pan. Alas Sir, am I venome? Arb. Yes, to me;

Though of thy self I think thee to be
In equall degree of heat or cold,
As nature can make: yet as unsound men
Convert the sweetest and the nourishing'st meats
Into diseases; so shall I distemper'd,
Do thee, I pray thee draw no nearer to me.

Pan. Sir, this is that I would: I am of late
Shut from the world, and why it should be thus,
Is all I wish to know.

Arb. Why credit me Panthea,
Credit me that am thy brother,
Thy loving brother, that there is a cause
Sufficient, yet unfit for thee to know,
That might undoe thee everlastingly,

Only to hear, wilt thou but credit this?

By Heaven 'tis true; believe it if thou canst.

Pan. Children and fools are ever credulous,
And I am both, I think, for I believe;
If you dissemble, be it on your head;
I'll be back unto my prison: yet me-thinks
I might be kept in some place where you are;
For in my self, I find I know not what
To call it, but it is a great desire
To see you often.

Arb. Fie, you come in a step, what do you mean?
Dear sister, do not so: Alas Panthea,
Where I am would you be? Why that's the cause
You are imprison'd, that you may not be
Where I am.

Pan. Then I must indure it Sir, Heaven keep you.

Arb. Nay, you shall hear the case in short Panthea,
And when thou hear'st it, thou wilt blush for me,
And hang thy head down like a Violet
Full of the mornings dew: There is a way
To gain thy freedom, but 'tis such a one
As puts thee in worse bondage, and I know,
Thou wouldst encounter fire, and make a proof
Whether the gods have care of innocence,
Rather than follow it: Know that I have lost,
The only difference betwixt man and beast,
My reason. Pan. Heaven forbid.

Arb. Nay 'tis gone;
And I am left as far without a bound,
As the wild Ocean, that obeys the winds;
Each sodain passion throwes me where it lists,
And overwhelms all that oppose my will:
I have beheld thee with a lustfull eye;
My heart is set on wickedness to act
Such sins with thee, as I have been afraid
To think of, if thou dar'st consent to this,
Which I beseech thee do not, thou maist gain
Thy liberty, and yield me a content;
If not, thy dwelling must be dark and close,
Where I may never see thee; For heaven knows
That laid this punishment upon my pride,
Thy sight at some time will enforce my madness
To make a start e'ne to thy ravishing;
Now spit upon me, and call all reproaches
Thou canst devise together, and at once
Hurl 'em against me: for I am a sickness
As killing as the plague, ready to seize thee.

Pan. Far be it from me to revile the King:
But it is true, that I shall rather choose
To search out death, that else would search out me,
And in a grave sleep with my innocence,
Than welcome such a sin: It is my fate,
To these cros accidents I was ordain'd,
And must have patience; and but that my eyes
Have more of woman in 'em than my heart,
I would not weep: Peace enter you again.

Arb. Farwell, and good Panthea pray for me,
Thy prayers are pure, that I may find a death
However soon before my passions grow
That they forget what I desire is sin;
For thither they are tending: if that happen,
Then I shall force thee tho' thou wert a Virgin
By vow to Heaven, and shall pull a heap
Of strange yet uninvented sin upon me.

Pan. Sir, I will pray for you, yet you shall know
It is a fullen fate that governs us,
For I could wish as heartily as you
I were no sister to you, I should then
Imbrace your lawfull love, sooner than health.

Arb. Couldst thou affect me then?

Pan. So perfectly,
That as it is, I ne're shall sway my heart,
To like another. Arb. Then I curse my birth,
Must this be added to my miseries

That thou art willing too? is there no stop
To our full happiness, but these meer sounds
Brother and Sister?

Pan. There is nothing else,
But these alas will separate us more
Than twenty worlds betwixt us.

Arb. I have liv'd
To conquer men and now am overthrown
Only by words Brother and Sister: where
Have those words dwelling? I will find 'em out,
And utterly destroy 'em; but they are
Not to be grasp'd: let 'em be men or beasts,
And I will cut 'em from the Earth, or Towns,
And I will raze 'em, and them blow 'em up:
Let 'em be Seas, and I will drink 'em off,
And yet have unquencht fire left in my breast:
Let 'em be any thing but meerly voice.

Pan. But 'tis not in the power of any force,
Or policy to conquer them.

Arb. Panthea, What shall we do?
Shall we stand firmly here, and gaze our eyes out?

Pan. Would I could do so,
But I shall weep out mine.

Arb. Accur'd man,
Thou bought'st thy reason at too dear a rate,
For thou hast all thy actions bounded in
With curious rules, when every beast is free:
What is there that acknowledges a kindred
But wretched man? Who ever saw the Bull
Fearfully leave the Heifer that he lik'd
Because they had one Dam?

Pan. Sir, I disturb you and my self too;
'Twere better I were gone.

Arb. I will not be so foolish as I was,
Stay, we will love just as becomes our births,
No otherwise: Brothers and Sisters may Walk hand in hand together; so will we,
Come nearer: is there any hurt in this?

Pan. I hope not.

Arb. Faith there is none at all:
And tell me truly now, is there not one
You love above me?

Pan. No by Heaven.

Arb. Why yet you sent unto Tigranes, Sister.

Pan. True, but for another: for the truth —

Arb. No more,
I'll credit thee, thou canst not lie,
Thou art all truth.

Pan. But is there nothing else,
That we may do, but only walk? methinks
Brothers and Sisters lawfully may kiss.

Arb. And so they may Panthea, so will we,
And kiss again too; we were too scrupulous,
And foolish, but we will be so no more.

Pan. If you have any mercy, let me go
To prison, to my death, to any thing:
I feel a sin growing upon my blood,
Worse than all these, hotter than yours.

Arb. That is impossible, what shou'd we do?

Pan. Flie Sir, for Heavens sake.

Arb. So we must away,
Sin grows upon us more by this delay.

[Exeunt several wayes.]

Actus Quintus.

Enter Mardonius and Lygones.

Mar. SIR, the King has seen your Commission, and believes it, and freely by this warrant gives you power to visit Prince Tigranes, your Noble Master.

Lyg. I thank his Grace and kifs his hand.

Mar. But is the main of all your business ended in this?

Lyg. I have another, but a worse, I am assur'd, it is a business.

Mar. You serve a worthy person, and a stranger I am sure you are; you may imploy me if you please without your purse, such Offices should ever be their own rewards.

Lyg. I am bound to your Nobleness.

Mar. I may have need of you, and then this courtesie,
If it be any, is not ill bestowed;
But may I civilly desire the rest?
I shall not be a hurter if no helper.

Lyg. Sir you shall know I have lost a foolish Daughter,
And with her all my patience, pilfer'd away
By a mean Captain of your Kings.

Mar. Stay there Sir:
If he have reacht the Noble worth of Captain,
He may well claim a worthy Gentlewoman,
Though she were yours, and Noble.

Lyg. I grant all that too: but this wretched fellow
Reaches no further than the empty name
That serves to feed him; were he valiant,
Or had but in him any noble nature
That might hereafter promise him a good man,
My cares were so much lighter, and my grave
A span yet from me.

Mar. I confesse such fellows
Be in all Royal Camps, and have and must be,
To make the sin of Coward more detested
In the mean souldier that with such a foil
Sets off much valour. By description
I should now guess him to you, it was Bessus,
I dare almost with confidence pronounce it. (he.

Lyg. 'Tis such a scurvie name as Bessus, and now I think 'tis

Mar. Captain do you call him?
Believe me Sir, you have a misery
Too mighty for your age: A pox upon him,
For that must be the end of all his service:
Your Daughter was not mad Sir?

Lyg. No, would she had been;
The fault had had more credit: I would do something:

Mar. I would fain counsel you, but to what I know not, he's so below a beating, that the Women find him not worthy of their Distaves, and to hang him were to cast away a Rope; he's such an Airie, thin unboddyed Coward, that no revenge can catch him: Ple tell you Sir, and tell you truth; this Rascal fears neither God nor man, he has been so beaten: sufferance has made him Wainscot: he has had since he was first a slave, at least three hundred Daggers set in's head, as little boys do new Knives in hot meat, there's not a Rib in's body o' my Conscience that has not been thrice broken with dry beating: and now his sides look like two Wicker Targets, every way bended;
Children will shortly take him for a Wall, and set their Stone-bows in his forehead, he is of so base a sense, I cannot in a week imagine what shall be done to him.

Lyg. Sure I have committed some great sin
That this fellow should be made my Rod,
I would see him, but I shall have no patience.

Mar. 'Tis no great matter if you have not: if a Laming of him, or such a toy may do you pleasure Sir, he has it for you, and Ple help you to him: 'tis no news to him to have a Leg broken, or Shoulder out; with being turn'd o'th stones like a Tansie: draw not your Sword if you love it; for on my Conscience his head will break it: we use him i'th' Wars like a Ram to shake a wall withal. Here comes the very person of him, do as you shall find your temper, I must leave you: but if you do not break him like a Bisket, you are much to blame Sir. [Exit Mar.]

Enter Bessus and the Sword men.

Lyg. Is your name Bessus?

Bes. Men call me Captain Bessus.

Lyg. Then Catain Bessus, you are a rank rascal, without more exordiums; a durty frozen slave; and with the favour

favor of your friends here I will beat you.

2 Sword. Pray use your pleasure Sir,
You seem to be a Gentleman.

Lyg. Thus Captain Bessius, thus; thus twing your nose, thus kick, thus tread you.

Bef. I do beseech you yield your cause Sir quickly.

Lyg. Indeed I should have told that first.

Bef. I take it so.

1 Sword. Captain, he should indeed, he is mistaken.

Lyg. Sir, you shall have it quickly, and more beating, you have stoln away a Lady, Captain coward, and such an one. beats him.

Bef. Hold, I beseech you, hold Sir, I never yet stole any living thing that had a tooth about it.

Lyg. I know you dare lie.

Bef. With none but Summer Whores upon my life Sir, my means and manners never could attempt above a hedge or hay-cock.

Lyg. Sirra, that quits not me, where is this Lady? do that you do not use to do; tell truth, or by my hand, I'll beat your Captains brains out, wash'em, and put'em in again, that will I.

Bef. There was a Lady Sir, I must confess, once in my charge: the Prince Tigranes gave her to my guard for her safety, how I us'd her, she may her self report, she's with the Prince now: I did but wait upon her like a groom, which she will testify I am sure: if not, my brains are at your service when you please Sir, and glad I have'em for you.

Lyg. This is most likely, Sir, I ask you pardon, and am sorry I was so intemperate.

Bef. Well I can ask no more, you will think it strange not to have me beat you at first sight.

Lyg. Indeed I would, but I know your goodness can forget twenty beatings, you must forgive me.

Bef. Yes there's my hand, go where you will, I shall think you a valiant fellow for all this.

Lyg. My daughter is a Whore, I feel it now too sensible;
yet I will see her, discharge myself from being father to her, and then back to my Country, and there die, farwell
Captain. [Exit Lygo.]

Bef. Farwell Sir, farwell, commend me to the gentlewoman I pray.

1 Sword. How now Captain? bear up man.

Bef. Gentlemen o'th'sword, your hands once more; I have been kickt agen, but the foolish fellow is penitent, has askt me Mercy, and my honour's safe.

2 Sword. We knew that, or the foolish fellow had better have kickt his grandfir.

Bef. Confirm, confirm I pray.

1 Sword. There be our hands agen, now let him come and say he was not sorry, and he sleeps for it.

Bef. Alas good ignorant old man, let him go, let him go, these courses will undo him. [Exeunt clear.]

Enter Lygones and Bacurius.

Bac. My Lord, your authority is good, and I am glad it is so, for my consent would never hinder you from seeing your own King, I am a Minister, but not a governor of this State, yonder is your King, I'll leave you. [Exit.]

Enter Tigranes and Spaconia.

Lyg. There he is indeed, and with him my disloyal child.

Tigr. I do perceive my fault so much, that yet me thinks thou shouldst not have forgiven me.

Lyg. Health to your Majesty.

Tigr. What? good Lygones welcome, what business brought thee hither?

Lyg. Several businesses. My publick businesses will appear by this, I have a message to deliver, which if it please you so to authorize, is an embassage from the Armenian
State, unto Arbaces for your liberty: the offer's there set down, please you to read it.

Tigr. There is no alteration happened since I came thence?

Lyg. None Sir, all is as it was.

Tigr. And all our friends are well?

Lyg. All very well.

Spa. Though I have done nothing but what was good, I dare not see my Father, it was fault enough not to acquaint him with that good.

Lyg. Madam I should have seen you.

Spa. O good Sir forgive me.

Lyg. Forgive you, why? I am no kin to you, am I?

Spa. Should it be measur'd by my mean deserts, indeed you are not.

Lyg. Thou couldest prate unhappily ere thou couldest go, would thou couldest do as well, and how does your custome hold out here? Spa. Sir?

Lyg. Are you in private still, or how?

Spa. What do you mean?

Lyg. Do you take mony? are you come to sell sin yet?
perhaps I can help you to liberal Clients: or has not the King cast you off yet? O thou vile creature, whose best commendation is, that thou art a young whore, I would thy Mother had liv'd to see this, or rather that I had died ere I had seen it; why didst not make me acquainted when thou wert first resolv'd to be a whore, I would have seen thy hot lust satisfied more privately: I would have kept a dancer and a whole consort of musicians in my own house only to fiddle thee. Spa. Sir, I was never whore.

Lyg. If thou couldest not say so much for thy self, thou shouldst be carted.

Tigr. Lygones, I have read it, and I like it, you shall deliver it.

Lyg. Well Sir, I will: but I have private business with you. Tigr. Speak, what is't?

Lyg. How has my age deserv'd so ill of you, that you can pick no strumpets i'th' land, but out of my breed?

Tigr. Strumpets, good Lygones?

Lyg. Yes, and I wish to have you know; I scorn to get a whore for any prince alive, and yet scorn will not help methinks: my Daughter might have been spar'd, there were enow besides.

Tigr. May I not prosper but she's innocent as morning light for me, and I dare swear for all the world.

Lyg. Why is she with you then? can she wait on you better than your man, has she a gift in plucking off your stockings, can she make Cawdles well or cut your cornes?
Why do you keep her with you? For a Queen I know you do contemn her, so should I, and every subject else think much at it.

Tigr. Let'em think much, but'tis more firm than earth:
thou see'st thy Queen there.

Lyg. Then have I made a fair hand, I call'd her Whore.
If I shall speak now as her Father, I cannot chuse but greatly rejoyce that she shall be a Queen: but if I shall speak to you as a States-man, she were more fit to be your whore.

Tigr. Get you about your business to Arbaces, now you talk idly.

Lyg. Yes Sir, I will go, and shall she be a Queen? she had more wit than her old Father, when she ran away: shall she be Queen? now by my troth 'tis fine, I'll dance out of all measure at her wedding: shall I not Sir?

Tigr. Yes marry shalt thou.

Lyg. I'll make these withered kexes bear my body two hours together above ground.

Tigr. Nay go, my business requires hast.

Lyg. Good Heaven preserve you, you are an excellent
King. Spa. Farwell good Father.

Lyg. Farwell sweet vertuous Daughter, I never was so joyfull in all my life, that I remember: shall she be a Queen?
Now I perceive a man may weep for joy, I had thought they had lyed that said so. [Exit Lygones.]

Tigr. Come my dear love.

Spa. But you may see another may alter that again.

Tigr. Urge it no more, I have made up a new strong constancy, not to be shook with eyes: I know I have the passions of a man, but if I meet with any subject that should hold my eyes

eyes more firmly than is fit, Ple think of thee, and run away from it: let that suffice.

[Exeunt all.]

Enter Bacurius and his Servant.

Bac. Three Gentlemen without to speak with me?

Ser. Yes Sir.

Bac. Let them come in.

Enter Bessus with the two Sword men.

Ser. They are entred Sir already.

Bac. Now fellows your business? are these the Gentlemen?

Bes. My Lord, I have made bold to bring these Gentlemen, my friends o'th' Sword along with me.

Bac. I am afraid you'l fight then.

Bes. My good Lord, I will not, your Lordship is much mistaken, fear not Lord.

Bac. Sir, I am sorry for't.

Bes. I ask no more in honour, Gentlemen you hear my Lord is sorry.

Bac. Not that I have beaten you, but beaten one that will be beaten: one whose dull body will require a laming, as Surfeits do the diet, spring and fall; now to your Sword-men; what come they for, good Captain Stock-fish?

Bes. It seems your Lordship has forgot my name.

Bac. No, nor your nature neither, though they are things fitter I must confess for any thing, than my remembrance, or any honest mans: what shall these Billets do; be pi'd up in my wood-yard?

Bes. Your Lordship holds your mirth still, Heaven continue it: but for these Gentlemen, they come—

Bac. To swear you are a Coward, spare your book, I do believe it.

Bes. Your Lordship still draws wide, they come to vouch under their valiant hands I am no Coward.

Bac. That would be a show indeed worth seeing: sirra be wise, and take Mony for this motion, travel with it, and where the name of Bessus has been known or a good Coward stirring, 'twill yield more than a tilting. This will prove more beneficial to you, if you be thrifty, than your Captainship, and more natural: men of most valiant hands is this true?

2 Sword. It is so, most renowned.

Bac. 'Tis somewhat strange.

1 Sword. Lord, it is strange, yet true; we have examined from your Lordships foot there, to this mans head, the nature of the beatings; and we do find his honour is come off clean and sufficient: this as our swords shall help us.

Bac. You are much bound to your Bil-bow-men, I am glad you are straight again Captain; 'twere good you would think on some way to gratifie them, they have undergone a labour for you, Bessus, would have puzl'd Hercules with all his valour.

2 Sword. Your Lordship must understand we are no men o'th' Law, that take pay for our opinions: it is sufficient we have clear'd our friend.

Bac. Yet there is something due, which I as toucht in Conscience will discharge Captain; Ple pay this Rent for you.

Bes. Spare your self my good Lord; my brave friends aim at nothing but the vertue.

Bac. That's but a cold discharge Sir for the pains.

2 Sword. O Lord, my good Lord.

Bac. Be not so modest, I will give you something.

Bes. They shall dine with your Lordship, that's sufficient.

Bac. Something in hand the while, you Rogues, you Apple-squires: do you come hither with your botled valour, your windy froth, to limit out my beatings?

1 Sword. I do beseech your Lordship.

2 Sword. O good Lord.

Bac. S'foot what a beavy of beaten slaves are here? get me a Cudgel sirra, and a tough one.

2 Sword. More of your foot, I do beseech your Lordship.

Bac. You shall, you shall dog, and your fellow-beagle.

1 Sword. O' this side good my Lord.

Bac. Off with your swords, for if you hurt my foot, Ple have you flead you Rascals.

1 Sword. Mine's off my Lord.

2 Sword. I beseech your Lordship stay a little, my strap's tied to my Cod piece-point: now when you please.

Bac. Captain these are your valiant friends, you long for a little too?

Bes. I am very well, I humbly thank your Lordship.

Bac. What's that in your pocket, hurts my Toe you Mungril? Thy Buttocks cannot be so hard, out with it quickly.

2 Sword. Here 'tis Sir, a small piece of Artillery, that a Gentleman a dear friend of your Lordships sent me with, to get it mended Sir, for if you mark, the nose is somewhat loose.

Bac. A friend of mine you Rascal? I was never wearier of doing any thing, than kicking these two Foot-balls.

Enter Servant.

Serv. Here is a good Cudgel Sir.

Bac. It comes too late l'me weary, pray thee do thou beat them.

2 Sword. My Lord, this is foul play i'faith, to put a fresh man upon us, men are but men Sir.

Bac. That jest shall save your bones; Captain, Rally up your rotten Regiment and be gone: I had rather thrash than be bound to kick these Rascals, till they cry'd ho; Bessus you may put your hand to them now, and then you are quit. Farewel, as you like this, pray visit me again, 'twill keep me in good health.

[Exit Bac.]

2 Sword. H'as a devilish hard foot, I never felt the like.

1 Sword. Nor I, and yet I am sure I have felt a hundred.

2 Sword. If he kick thus i'th' Dog-daies, he will be dry foundred: what cure now Captain besides Oyl of Baies?

Bes. Why well enough I warrant you, you can go.

2 Sword. Yes, heaven be thanked; but I feel a shrowd ach, sure h'as sprang my huckle-bone.

1 Sword. I ha' lost a hanch.

Bes. A little butter, friend a little butter, butter and parseley and a soveraign matter: probatum est.

2 Sword. Captain we must request your hand now to our honours.

Bes. Yes marry shall ye, and then let all the world come, we are valiant to our selves, and there's an end.

1 Sword. Nay then we must be valiant; O my ribs.

2 Sword. O my small guts, a plague upon these sharp-toed shooes, they are murderers.

[Exeunt clear.]

Enter Arbaces with his sword drawn.

Arb. It is resolv'd, I bare it whilst I could, I can no more, I must begin with murder of my friends, and so go on to that incestuous ravishing, and end my life and sins with a forbidden blow, upon my self.

Enter Mardonius.

Mar. What Tragedy is near? That hand was never wont to draw a sword, but it cry'd dead to something.

Arb. Mardonius, have you bid Gobrias come?

Mar. How do you Sir?

Arb. Well, is he coming?

Mar. Why Sir, are you thus? why do your hands proclaim a lawless War against your self?

Arb. Thou answerest me one question with an other, is Gobrias coming? Mar. Sir he is.

Arb. 'Tis well, I can forbear your questions then, be gone.

Mar. Sir, I have mark't.

Arb. Mark lefs, it troubles you and me.

Mar. You are more variable than you were.

Arb. It may be so.

Mar. To day no Hermit could be humbler than you were to us all.

Arb. And what of this?

Mar. And now you take new rage into your eyes, as you would look us all out of the Land.

Arb. I do confesse it, will that satisfie? I prethee get thee gone.

Mar. Sir, I will speak.

Arb. Will ye?

Mar. It is my duty. I fear you will kill your self: I am a subject, and you shall do me wrong in't: 'tis my cause, and I may speak.

Arb. Thou art not train'd in sin, it seems Mardonius: kill my self! by Heaven I will not do it yet; and when I will, I'll tell thee then: I shall be such a creature, that thou wilt give me leave without a word. There is a method in mans wickedness, it grows up by degrees: I am not come so high as killing of my self, there are a hundred thousand sins 'twixt me and it, which I must doe, and I shall come to't at last; but take my oath not now, be satisfied, and get thee hence.

Mar. I am sorry 'tis so ill.

Arb. Be sorry then, true sorrow is alone, grieve by thy self.

Mar. I pray you let me see your Sword put up before I go: I'll leave you then.

Arb. Why so? what folly is this in thee, is it not as apt to mischief as it was before? can I not reach it thinkst thou? these are toys for Children to be pleas'd with, and not men, now I am safe you think: I would the book of fate were here, my Sword is not so sure but I would get it out and mangle that, that all the destinies should quite forget their fixt decrees, and hast to make us new, for other fortunes, mine could not be worse, wilt thou now leave me?

Mar. Heaven put into your bosome temperate thoughts, I'll leave you though I fear.

Arb. Go, thou art honest, why should the hasty error of my youth be so unpardonable to draw a sin helpless upon me?

Enter Gobrias.

Gob. There is the King, now it is ripe.

Arb. Draw near thou guilty man, that art the authour of the loathedst crime five ages have brought forth, and hear me speak; curses more incurable, and all the evils mans body or his Spirit can receive be with thee.

Gob. Why Sir do you curse me thus?

Arb. Why do I curse thee? if there be a man subtil in curses, that exceeds the rest, his worst wish on thee, thou hast broke my heart.

Gob. How Sir, have I preserv'd you from a child, from all the arrows, malice, or ambition could shoot at you, and have I this for my pay?

Arb. 'Tis true, thou didst preserve me, and in that wert crueller than hardned murtherers of infants and their Mothers? thou didst save me only till thou hadst studied out a way how to destroy me cunningly thy self: this was a curious way of torturing.

Gob. What do you mean?

Arb. Thou knowst the evils thou hast done to me; dost thou remember all those witching letters thou sent'st unto me to Armenia, fill'd with the praise of my beloved Sister, where thou extol'st her beauty, what had I to do with that? what could her beauty be to me? and thou didst write how well she lov'd me, dost thou remember this? so that I doted something before I saw her.

Gob. This is true.

Arb. Is it? and when I was return'd thou knowst thou didst pursue it, till thou woundst me into such a strange and unbeliev'd affection, as good men cannot think on.

Gob. This I grant, I think I was the cause.

Arb. Wert thou? Nay more, I think thou meant'st it.

Gob. Sir, I hate to lie, as I love Heaven and honesty, I did, it was my meaning.

Arb. Be thine own sad judge, a further condemnation will not need, prepare thy self to dy.

Gob. Why Sir to dy?

Arb. Why shouldst thou live? was ever yet offender so impudent, that had a thought of Mercy after confession of a crime like this? get out I cannot where thou hurst me in, but I can take revenge, that's all the sweetness left for me.

Gob. Now is the time, hear me but speak.

Arb. No, yet I will be far more mercifull than thou wert to me; thou didst steal into me and never gav'st me warning: so much time as I give thee now, had prevented thee for ever. Notwithstanding all thy sins, if thou hast hope, that there is yet a prayer to save thee, turn and speak it to thy self.

Gob. Sir, you shall know your sins before you do 'em, if you kill me.

Arb. I will not stay then.

Gob. Know you kill your Father.

Arb. How?

Gob. You kill your Father.

Arb. My Father? though I know't for a lie, made out of fear to save thy stained life; the very reverence of the word comes cross me, and ties mine arm down.

Gob. I will tell you that shall heighten you again, I am thy Father, I charge thee hear me.

Arb. If it should be so, as 'tis most false, and that I should be found a Bastard issue, the despis'd fruit of lawless lust, I should no more admire all my wild passions: but another truth shall be wrung from thee: if I could come by the Spirit of pain, it should be poured on thee, till thou allow'st thy self more full of lies than he that teaches thee.

Enter Arane.

Ara. Turn thee about, I come to speak to thee thou wicked man, hear me thou tyrant.

Arb. I will turn to thee, hear me thou Strumpet; I have blotted out the name of Mother, as thou hast thy shame.

Ara. My shame! thou hast less shame than any thing; why dost thou keep my Daughter in a prison? why dost thou call her Sister, and do this?

Arb. Cease thy strange impudence, and answer quickly if thou contemnest me, this will ask an answer, and have it.

Ara. Help me Gentle Gobrias.

Arb. Guilt dear not help guilt though they grow together in doing ill, yet at the punishment they sever, and each flies the noise of other, think not of help, answer.

Ara. I will, to what?

Arb. To such a thing, as if it be a truth think what a creature thou hast made thy self, that didst not shame to do, what I must blush only to ask thee: tell me who I am, whose son I am without all circumstance, be thou as hasty as my Sword will be if thou refusest.

Ara. Why, you are his son.

Arb. His Son? swear, swear, thou worse than woman damn'd.

Ara. By all that's good you are.

Arb. Then art thou all that ever was known bad, now is the cause of all my strange mis-fortunes come to light: what reverence expectest thou from a child, to bring forth which thou hast offended heaven, thy husband, and the Land? adulterous witch, I know now why thou wouldst have poyson'd me, I was thy lust which thou wouldst have forgot: then wicked Mother of my sins, and me, show me the way to the inheritance I have by thee: which is a spacious world of impious acts, that I may soon possess it: plagues rot thee, as thou liv'st, and such diseases, as use to pay lust; recompence thy deed.

Gob. You do not know why you curse thus.

Arb. Too well; you are a pair of Vipers; and behold the Serpent you have got; there is no beast but if he knew it, has a pedigree as brave as mine, for they have more descents, and I am every way as beastly got, as far without the compass of Law as they.

Ara. You spend your rage and words in vain, and rail upon a gucs; hear us a little.

Arb. No, I will never hear, but talk away my breath, and and die.

Gob. Why, but you are no Bastard.

Arb. How's that?

Ara. Nor child of mine.

Arb. Still you go on in wonders to me.

Gob. Pray you be more patient, I may bring comfort to you.

Arb. I will kneel, and hear with the obedience of a child; good Father speak, I do acknowledge you, so you bring comfort.

Gob. First know, our last King, your supposed Father was old and feeble when he married her; and almost all the Land thought she was past hope of issue from him.

Arb. Therefore she took leave to play the whore; because the King was old: is this the comfort?

Ara. What will you find out to give me satisfaction, when you find how you have injur'd me? let fire consume me, if ever I were a whore.

Gob. For-bear these starts, or I will leave you wedded to despair, as you are now: if you can find a temper, my breath shall be a pleasant western wind that cools and blasts not.

Arb. Bring it out good Father. I'll lie, and listen here as reverently as to an Angel: if I breath too loud, tell me; for I would be as still as night.

Gob. Our King I say, was old, and this our Queen desir'd to bring an heir, but yet her husband she thought was past it, and to be dishonest I think she would not: if she would have been, the truth is, she was watcht so narrowly, and had so slender opportunities, she hardly could have been: but yet her cunning found out this way; she feign'd her self with child, and posts were sent in halt throughout the Land, and humble thanks was given in every Church, and prayers were made for her safe going and delivery: she feign'd now to grow bigger, and perceiv'd this hope of issue made her fear'd, and brought a far more large respect from every man, and saw her power increafe, and was resolv'd, since she believ'd, she could not hav't indeed, at least she would be thought to have a child.

Arb. Do I not hear it well? nay I will make no noise at all; but pray you to the point, quickly as you can.

Gob. Now when the time was full, she should be brought to bed, I had a Son born, which was you, this the Queen hearing of mov'd me to let her have you; and such reasons she shewed me, as she knew would tie my secrecie, she swore you should be King, and to be short, I did deliver you unto her, and pretended you were dead, and in mine own house kept a funeral, and had an empty coffin put in Earth, that night this Queen feign'd hastily to labour and by a pair of women of her own, which she had charm'd, she made the world believe she was delivered of you. You grew up as the Kings Son, till you were six years old; then did the King dye, and did leave to me Protection of the Realm; and contrary to his own expectation, left this Queen truely with child indeed, of the fair Princess Panthea: then she could have torn her hair and did alone to me, yet durst not speak in publick, for she knew she should be found a traytor: and her tale would have been thought madnes, or any thing rather than truth. This was the only cause why she did seek to poyson you, and I to keep you safe; and this the reason, why I sought to kindle some sparks of love in you to fair Panthea, that she might get part of her right again.

Arb. And have you made an end now? is this all? if not, I will be still till I be aged, till all my hairs be Silver.

Gob. This is all.

Arb. And is it true say you too Madam?

Ara. Yes heaven knows it is most true.

Arb. Panthea then is not my Sister?

Gob. No.

Arb. But can you prove this?

Gob. If you will give consent, else who dares go about it?

Arb. Give consent? why I will have 'em all that know it rackt, to get this from 'em, all that wait without, come in, what ere you be, come in and be partakers of my joy, O you are welcome.

Enter Bessus, Gentlemen, Mardonius, and other attendants.

Arb. The best news, nay draw no nearer, they all shall hear it, I am found no King.

Mar. Is that so good news?

Arb. Yes the happiest news that ere was heard.

Mar. Indeed 'twere well for you if you might be a little less obey'd.

Arb. One call the Queen.

Mar. Why she is there.

Arb. The Queen Mardonius, Panthea is the Queen and I am plain Arbaces; go some one, she is in Gobrias house, since I saw you there are a thousand things delivered to me, you little dream of. [Exit a Gent.]

Mar. So it should seem my Lord, what fury's this?

Gob. Believe me 'tis no fury, all that he saies is truth.

Mar. 'Tis very strange.

Arb. Why do you keep your hats off Gentlemen? is it to me? I swear it must not be; nay, trust me, in good faith it must not be; I cannot now command you, but I pray you for the respect you bare me, when you took me for your King, each man clap on his hat at my desire.

Mar. We will, you are not found so mean a man, but that you may be cover'd as well as we, may you not?

Arb. O not here, you may, but not I, for here is my Father in presence.

Mar. Where?

Arb. Why there: O the whole story would be a wildernes to lose thy self for ever: O pardon me dear Father for all the idle and unreverent words that I have spoke in idle moods to you: I am Arbaces, we all fellow-subjects, nor is the Queen Panthea now my Sister.

Bes. Why if you remember fellow-subject Arbaces; I told you once she was not your Sister: I, and she lookt nothing like you.

Arb. I think you did, good Captain Bessus.

Bes. Here will arise another question now amongst the Sword-men, whether I be to call him to account for beating me, now he is proved no King.

Enter Lygones.

Mar. Sir here's Lygones, the agent for the Armenian State.

Arb. Where is he? I know your business good Lygones.

Lyg. We must have our King again, and will.

Arb. I knew that was your business: you shall have your King again, and have him so again as never King was had, go one of you and bid Bacurius bring Tigranes hither; and bring the Lady with him, that Panthea, the Queen Panthea sent me word this morning, was brave Tigranes mistress. [Ex. two Gent.]

Lyg. 'Tis Spaconia.

Arb. I, I, Spaconia.

Lyg. She is my Daughter.

Arb. She is so: I could now tell any thing I never heard: your King shall go so home, as never man went.

Mar. Shall he go on's head?

Arb. He shall have chariots easier than air that I will have invented; and ne're think one shall pay any ransom; and thy self that art the messenger, shalt ride before him on a horse cut out of an intire Diamond, that shall be made to go with golden wheeles, I know not how yet.

Lyg. Why I shall be made for ever? they beli'd this King with us, and said he was unkind.

Arb. And then thy Daughter, she shall have some strange thing, wee'll have the Kingdom sold utterly, and put into a toy which she shall wear about her carelessly some where or other. See the vertuous Queen; behold the humblest subject that you have kneel here before you.

Enter

Enter Panthea and 1 Gent.

Pan. Why kneel you to me that am your Vassal?

Arb. Grant me one request.

Pan. Alas what can I grant you? what I can, I will.

Arb. That you will please to marry me if I can prove it lawfull.

Pan. Is that all? more willingly than I would draw this air.

Arb. I'll kiss this hand in earnest.

2 Gent. Sir, Tigranes is coming though he made it strange at first, to see the Princess any more.

Enter Tigranes and Spaconia.

Arb. The Queen thou meanest, O my Tigranes. Pardon me, tread on my neck, I freely offer it, and if thou beest so given take revenge, for I have injur'd thee.

Tigr. No, I forgive, and rejoyce more that you have found repentance, than I my liberty.

Arb. Mayest thou be happy in thy fair choice, for thou art temperate. You owe no ransom to the state, know that I have a thousand joyes to tell you of, which yet I dare not utter till I pay my thanks to Heaven for 'em: Will you go with me and help me? pray you do.

Tigr. I will.

Arb. Take then your fair one with you; and you Queen of goodness and of us, O give me leave to take your arm in mine: come every one that takes delight in goodness, help to sing loud thanks for me, that I am prov'd no King.

SCORNFUL LADY,
A COMEDY.

Persons Represented in the Play.

Elder Loveless, a Sutor to the Lady.
Young Loveless, a Prodigal.
Savil, Steward to Elder Loveless.
Lady and Martha, } Two Sisters.
Younglove, or Abigal, a waiting Gentlewoman.
Welford, a Sutor to the Lady.
Sir Roger, Curate to the Lady.

A { Captain,
Travailer,
Poet,
Tabaco-man, } Hangers on to Young Loveless.
Wenches.
Fidlers.
Morecraft, an Usurer.
A Rich Widow.
Attendants.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter the two Lovelesses, Savil the Steward, and a Page.

Elder Love. B Rother, is your last hope past to mollifie Morecrafts heart about your Morgage?
Young Love. Hopelessly past: I have presented the Usurer with a richer draught than ever Cleopatra swallowed; he hath sucked in ten thousand pounds worth of my Land, more than he paid for at a gulp, without Trumpets.

El. Lo. I have as hard a task to perform in this house.

Yo. Lo. Faith mine was to make an Usurer honest, or to lose my Land.

El. Lo. And mine is to persuade a passionate woman, or to leave the Land. Make the boat stay, I fear I shall begin my unfortunate journey this night, though the darkness of the night and the roughness of the waters might easily dissuade an unwilling man.

Savil. Sir, your Fathers old friends hold it the sounder course for your body and estate to stay at home and marry, and propagate and govern in our Country, than to Travel and die without issue.

El. Lo. Savil, you shall gain the opinion of a better servant, in seeking to execute, not alter my will, howsoever my intents succeed.

Yo. Lo. Yonder's Mistress Younglove, Brother, the grave rubber of your Mistresses toes.

Enter Mistres Younglove the waiting woman.

El. Lo. Mistress Younglove.

Young. Master Loveless, truly we thought your sails had been hoist: my Mistress is persuaded you are Sea-sick ere this.

El. Lo. Loves she her ill taken up resolution so dearly? Didst thou move her from me?

Young. By this light that shines, there's no removing her, if he get a stiffe opinion by the end. I attempted her to day when they say a woman can deny nothing.

El. Lo. What critical minute was that?

Young. When her smock was over her ears: but she was no more pliant than if it hung about her heels.

El. Lo. I prethee deliver my service, and say, I desire to see the dear cause of my banishment; and then for France.

Young. I'll do't: hark hither, is that your Brother?

El. Lo. Yes, have you lost your memory?

Young. As I live he's a pretty fellow.

Yo. Lo. O this is a sweet Brache.

El. Lo. Why she knows not you.

Yo. Lo. No, but she offered me once to know her: to this day she loves youth of Eighteen; she heard a tale how Cupid struck her in love with a great Lord in the Tilt-yard, but he never saw her; yet she in kindness would needs wear a Willow-garland at his Wedding. She lov'd all the Players in the last Queenstime once over: she was struck when they acted Lovers, and forsook some when they plaid Murthers. She has nine Spur-royals, and the servants say she hoards old gold; and she her self pronounces angerly, that the Farmers eldest son, or her Mistress Husbands Clerk shall be, that Marries her, shall make her a joynture of fouricore pounds a year; she tells tales of the serving-men.

El. Lo. Enough, I know her Brother. I shall intreat you only to salute my Mistress, and take leave, we'll part at the Stairs.

Enter Lady and waiting woman.

Lady. Now Sir, this first part of your will is performed: what's the rest?

El. Lo. First, let me beg your notice for this Gentleman my Brother.

Lady. I shall take it as a favour done to me, though the Gentleman hath received but an untimely grace from you, yet yet my charitable disposition would have been ready to have done him freer courtesies as a stranger, than upon those cold commendations.

Yo. Lo. Lady, my salutations crave acquaintance and leave at once.

Lady. Sir I hope you are the master of your own occasions. [Exit. Yo. Lo. and Savil.]

El. Lo. Would I were so. Mistress, for me to praise over again that worth, which all the world, and you your self can see.

Lady. It's a cold room this, Servant.

El. Lo. Mistress.

La. What think you if I have a Chimney for't, out here?

El. Lo. Mistress, another in my place, that were not tyed to believe all your actions just, would apprehend himself wrong'd: But I whose vertues are constancy and obedience.

La. Younglove, make a good fire above to warm me after my servants Exordium.

El. Lo. I have heard and seen your affability to be such, that the servants you give wages to may speak.

La. 'Tis true, 'tis true; but they speak toth' purpose.

El. Lo. Mistress, your will leads my speeches from the purpose. But as a man—

La. A Simile servant? This room was built for honest meaners, that deliver themselves hastily and plainly, and are gone. Is this a time or place for Exordiums, and Similes and Metaphors? If you have ought to say, break into't: my answers shall very reasonably meet you.

El. Lo. Mistress I came to see you.

La. That's happily dispatcht, the next.

El. Lo. To take leave of you.

La. To be gone?

El. Lo. Yes.

La. You need not have despair'd of that, nor have us'd so many circumstances to win me to give you leave to perform my command; is there a third?

El. Lo. Yes, I had a third had you been apt to hear it.

La. I? Never apter. Fast (good servant) fast.

El. Lo. 'Twas to intreat you to hear reason.

La. Most willingly, have you brought one can speak it?

El. Lo. Lastly, it is to kindle in that barren heart love and forgiveness.

La. You would stay at home?

El. Lo. Yes Lady.

La. Why you may, and doubtlesly will, when you have debated that your commander is but your Mistress, a woman, a weak one, wildly overborn with passions: but the thing by her commanded, is to see Dovers dreadful cliffe, passing in a poor Water-house; the dangers of the merciless Channel 'twixt that and Callis, five long hours sail, with three poor weeks victuals.

El. Lo. You wrong me.

La. Then to land dumb, unable to enquire for an English hoast, to remove from City to City, by most chargeable Post-horse, like one that rode in quest of his Mother tongue.

El. Lo. You wrong me much.

La. And all these (almost invincible labours) performed for your Mistress, to be in danger to forsake her, and to put on new allegiance to some French Lady, who is content to change language with your laughter, and after your whole year spent in Tennis and broken speech, to stand to the hazard of being laught at, at your return, and have tales made on you by the Chamber-maids.

El. Lo. You wrong me much.

La. Loukler yet.

El. Lo. You know your least word is of force to make me seek out dangers, move me not with toys: but in this banishment, I must take leave to say, you are unjust: was one kiss forc't from you in publick by me so unpardonable? Why all the hours of day and night have seen us kiss.

La. 'Tis true, and so you told the company that heard me chide.

Elder Lov. Your own eyes were not dearer to you than I.

Lady. And so you told 'em.

Elder Lo. I did, yet no sign of disgrace need to have stain'd your cheek: you your self knew your pure and simple heart to be most unspotted, and free from the least baseness.

Lady. I did: But if a Maids heart doth but once think that she is suspected, her own face will write her guilty.

Elder Lo. But where lay this disgrace? The world that knew us, knew our resolutions well: And could it be hop'd that I should give away my freedom; and venture a perpetual bondage with one I never kist? or could I in strict wisdom take too much love upon me, from her that chose me for her Husband?

Lady. Believe me; if my Wedding-smock were on, Were the Gloves bought and given, the Licence come, — Were the Rosemary-branches dipt, and all The Hypochrist and Cakes eat and drunk off, Were these two armes incompass't with the hands Of Bachelors to lead me to the Church, Were my feet in the door, were I John, said, If John should boast a favour done by me, I would not wed that year: And you I hope, When you have spent this year commodiously, In atchieving Languages, will at your return Acknowledge me more coy of parting with mine eyes, Than such a friend: More talk I hold not now If you dare go.

Elder Lo. I dare, you know: First let me kiss.

Lady. Farewel sweet Servant, your task perform'd, On a new ground as a beginning Sutor, I shall be apt to hear you.

Elder Lo. Farewel cruel Mistres.

[Exit Lady.]

Enter Young Loveless, and Savil.

Young Lo. Brother you'l hazard the losing your tide to Gravesend: you have a long half mile by Land to Greenwich?

Elder Lo. I go: but Brother, what yet unheard of course to live, doth your imagination flatter you with? Your ordinary means are devour'd.

Young Lo. Course? why Horse-courfing I think. Consume no time in this: I have no Estate to be mended by meditation: he that busies himself about my fortunes may properly be said to busie himself about nothing.

Elder Lo. Yet some course you must take, which for my satisfaction resolve and open; if you will shape none, I must inform you that that man but perswades himself he means to live, that imagines not the means.

Young Lo. Why live upon others, as others have lived upon me.

Elder Lo. I apprehend not that: you have fed others, and consequently dispos'd of 'em: and the same measure must you expect from your maintainers, which will be too heavy an alteration for you to bear.

Young Lo. Why I'll purse; if that raise me not, I'll bet at Bowling-alleyes, or man Whores; I would fain live by others: but I'll live whilst I am unhang'd, and after the thought's taken.

Elder Love. I see you are ty'd to no particular imploiment then?

Young Lo. Faith I may choose my course: they say nature brings forth none but she provides for them: I'll try her liberality.

Elder Lo. Well, to keep your feet out of base and dangerous paths, I have resolv'd you shall live as Master of my House. It shall be your care Savil to see him fed and cloath'd, not according to his present Estate, but to his birth and former fortunes.

Young Lo. If it be refer'd to him, if I be not found in Carnation yearse-stockins, blew devils breeches, with the gards down, and my pocket i'th' sleeves, I'll n'er look you i'th' face again.

Sa. A comelier wear I wufs it is than those dangling flops.

Elder Lo. To keep you readie to do him all service peaceably, and him to command you reasonably, I leave these further directions in writing, which at your best leasure together open and read.

Enter Younglove to them with a Jewell.

Abig. Sir, my Mistres commends her love to you in this token, and these words; it is a Jewell (she sayes) which as a favour from her she would request you to wear till your years travel be performed: which once expired, she will hastily expect your happy return.

Elder Lo. Return my service with such thanks, as she may imagine the heart of a suddenly over-joyed man would willingly utter, and you I hope I shall with slender arguments periwade to wear this Diamond, that when my Mistris shall through my long absence, and the approach of new Suitors, offer to forget me; you may cast your eye down to your finger, and remember and speak of me: She will hear thee better than those allied by birth to her; as we see many men much swayed by the Grooms of their Chambers, not that they have a greater part of their love or opinion on them, than on others, but for that they know their secrets.

Abi. O' my credit I swear, I think 'twas made for me:
 Fear no other Suitors.

Elder Love. I shall not need to teach you how to discredit their beginning, you know how to take exception at their shirts at washing, or to make the maids swear they found plasters in their beds.

Abi. I know, I know, and do not you fear the Suitors.

Elder Lo. Farewell, be mindfull, and be happie; the night calls me. [Exeunt omnes præter Younglove.

Abi. The Gods of the Winds befriend you Sir; a constant and a liberal Lover thou art, more such God fend us.

Enter Welford.

Wel. Let 'em not stand still, we have rid.

Abi. A suitor I know by his riding hard, I'll not be seen.

Wel. A prettie Hall this, no Servant in't? I would look freshly.

Abi. You have delivered your errand to me then: there's no danger in a handsome young fellow: I'll shew my self.

Wel. Lady, may it please you to bestow upon a stranger the ordinary grace of salutation: Are you the Lady of this house?

Abi. Sir, I am worthily proud to be a Servant of hers.

Wel. Lady, I should be as proud to be a Servant of yours, did not my so late acquaintance make me despair.

Abi. Sir, it is not so hard to atchieve, but nature may bring it about.

Wel. For these comfortable words, I remain your glad Debtor. Is your Lady at home?

Abi. She is no stragler Sir.

Wel. May her occasions admit me to speak with her?

Abi. If you come in the way of a Suitor, No.

Wel. I know your affable vertue will be moved to per-swade her, that a Gentleman benighted and strayed, offers to be bound to her for a nights lodging.

Abi. I will commend this message to her; but if you aim at her body, you will be deluded: other women of the household of good carriage and government; upon any of which if you can cast your affection, they will perhaps be found as faithfull and not so coy. [Exit Younglove.

Wel. What a skin full of lust is this? I thought I had come a wooing, and I am the courted partie. This is right Court fashion: Men, Women, and all woo, catch that catch may. If this soft hearted woman have infused any of her tendernefs into her Lady, there is hope she will be plyant.
 But who's here?

Enter Sir Roger the Curate.

Roger. Gad save you Sir. My Lady lets you know she desires to be acquainted with your name, before she confer

with you?

Wel. Sir, my name calls me Welford.

Roger. Sir, you are a Gentleman of a good name. I'll try his wit.

Wel. I will uphold it as good as any of my Ancestors had this two hundred years Sir.

Roger. I knew a worshipfull and a Religious Gentleman of your name in the Bishoprick of Durham. Call you him Cousen?

Wel. I am only allyed to his vertues Sir.

Roger. It is modestly said: I should carry the badge of your Christianity with me too.

Wel. What's that, a Cross? there's a tester.

Roger. I mean the name which your God-fathers and God-mothers gave you at the Font.

Wel. 'Tis Harry: but you cannot proceed orderly now in your Catechism: for you have told me who gave me that name. Shall I beg your name?

Roger. Roger.

Wel. What room fill you in this house?

Roger. More rooms than one.

Wel. The more the merrier: but may my boldnefs know, why your Lady hath sent you to decypher my name?

Roger. Her own words were these: To know whether you were a formerly denyed Suitor, disguised in this message:
 for I can assure you she delights not in Thalame: Hymen and she are at variance, I shall return with much hast.

[Exit Roger.

Wel. And much speed Sir, I hope: certainly I am arrived amongst a Nation of new found fools, on a Land where no Navigator has yet planted wit; if I had foreseen it, I would have laded my breeches with bells, knives, copper, and glasses, to trade with women for their virginities: yet
 I fear, I should have betrayed my self to a needlefs charge then: here's the walking night-cap again.

Enter Roger.

Roger. Sir, my Ladies pleasure is to see you: who hath commanded me to acknowledge her sorrow, that you must take the pains to come up for so bad entertainment.

Wel. I shall obey your Lady that sent it, and acknowledge you that brought it to be your Arts Master.

Rog. I am but a Batchelor of Art, Sir; and I have the mending of all under this roof, from my Lady on her down-bed, to the maid in the Pease-straw.

Wel. A Cobler, Sir?

Roger. No Sir, I inculcate Divine Service within these Walls.

Wel. But the Inhabitants of this house do often employ you on errands without any scruple of Conscience.

Rog. Yes, I do take the air many mornings on foot, three or four miles for eggs: but why move you that?

Wel. To know whether it might become your function to bid my man to neglect his horte a little to attend on me.

Roger. Most properly Sir.

Wel. I pray you doe so then: the whilst I will attend your Lady. You direct all this house in the true way?

Roger. I doe Sir.

Wel. And this door I hope conducts to your Lady?

Rog. Your understanding is ingenious. [Ex. severally

Enter young Loveless and Savil, with a writing.

Sa. By your favour Sir, you shall pardon me?

Yo. Lo. I shall bear your favour Sir, cross me no more; I say they shall come in.

Savil. Sir, you forget who I am?

Yo. Lo. Sir, I do not; thou art my Brothers Steward, his cast off mill-money, his Kitchen Arithmetick.

Sa. Sir, I hope you will not make so little of me?

Yo. Lo. I make thee not so little as thou art: for indeed there goes no more to the making of a Steward, but a fair Imprimis, and then a reasonable Item infus'd into him, and the thing is done.

Sa. Nay then you stir my duty, and I must tell you?

Young Lo. What wouldst thou tell me, how Hopps grow, or hold some rotten discourse of Sheep, or when our Lady-day falls? Prethee farewell, and entertain my friends, be drunk and burn thy Table-books: and my dear spark of velvet, thou and I.

Sa. Good Sir remember?

Young Lo. I do remember thee a foolish fellow, one that did put his trust in Almanacks, and Horfe-fairs, and rose by Hony and Pot-butter. Shall they come in yet?

Sa. Nay then I must unfold your Brothers pleasure, these be the lessons Sir, he left behind him.

Young Lo. Prethee expound the first.

Sa. I leave to maintain my house three hundred pounds a year; and my Brother to dispose of it.

Young Lo. Mark that my wicked Steward, and I dispose of it?

Sav. Whilest he bears himself like a Gentleman, and my credit falls not in him. Mark that my good young Sir, mark that.

Young Lo. Nay, if it be no more I shall fulfil it, whilest my Legs will carry me I'll bear my self Gentleman-like, but when I am drunk, let them bear me that can. Forward dear Steward.

Sav. Next it is my will, that he be furnished (as my Brother) with Attendance, Apparel, and the obedience of my people.

Young Lo. Steward this is as plain as your old Minikin-breeches. Your wisdom will relent now, will it not? Be mollified or—— you understand me Sir, proceed?

Sav. Next, that my Steward keep his place, and power, and bound my Brother's wildness with his care.

Young Lo. I'll hear no more of this Apocrypha, bind it by it self Steward.

Sav. This is your Brothers will, and as I take it, he makes no mention of such company as you would draw unto you. Captains of Gallyfoists, such as in a clear day have seen Callis, fellows that have no more of God, than their Oaths come to: they wear swords to reach fire at a Play, and get there the oyl'd end of a Pipe, for their Guerdon: then the remnant of your Regiment, are wealthy Tobacco-Merchants, that set up with one Ounce, and break for three: together with a Forlorn hope of Poets, and all these look like Carthusians, things without linnen: Are these fit company for my Masters Brother?

Young Lo. I will either convert thee (O thou Pagan Steward) or presently confound thee and thy reckonings, who's there? Call in the Gentlemen.

Sav. Good Sir.

Young Lo. Nay, you shall know both who I am, and where I am.

Sav. Are you my Masters Brother?

Young Lo. Are you the sage Master Steward, with a face like an old Ephemerides?

Enter his Comrades, Captain, Traveller, &c.

Sav. Then God help us all I say.

Young Lo. I, and 'tis well said my old peer of France: welcome Gentlemen, welcome Gentlemen; mine own dear Ladsy're richly welcome. Know this old Harry Groat.

Cap. Sir I will take your love.

Sav. Sir, you will take my Purse.

Cap. And study to continue it.

Sav. I do believe you.

Trav. Your honorable friend and Masters Brother, hath given you to us for a worthy fellow, and so we hugg you Sir.

Sav. Has given himself into the hands of Varlets, not to be carv'd out. Sir, are these the pieces?

Young Lo. They are the Morals of the Age, the vertues, men made of gold.

Sav. Of your gold you mean Sir.

Young Lo. This is a man of War, and cryes go on, and wears his colours.

Sav. In's nose.

Young Lo. In the fragrant field. This is a Traveller Sir, knows men and manners, and has plow'd up the Sea so far till both the Poles have knockt, has seen the Sun take Coach, and can distinguish the colour of his Horses, and their kinds, and had a Flanders-Mare leapt there.

Sav. 'Tis much.

Trav. I have seen more Sir.

Sav. 'Tis even enough o' Conscience; sit down, and rest you, you are at the end of the world already. Would you had as good a Living Sir, as this fellow could lie you out of, he has a notable gift in't.

Young Lo. This ministers the smoak, and this the Muses.

Sav. And you the Cloaths, and Meat, and Money, you have a goodly generation of 'em, pray let them multiply, your Brothers house is big enough, and to say truth, h'as too much Land, hang it durt.

Young Lo. Why now thou art a loving stinkard. Fire off thy Annotations and thy Rent-books, thou hast a weak brain Savil, and with the next long Bill thou wilt run mad. Gentlemen, you are once more welcome to three hundred pounds a year; we will be freely merry, shall we not?

Capt. Merry as mirth and wine, my lovely Loveless.

Poet. A serious look shall be a jury to excommunicate any man from our company.

Trav. We will not talk wisely neither?

Young Lo. What think you Gentlemen by all this Revenue in Drink?

Capt. I am all for Drink.

Trav. I am dry till it be so.

Poet. He that will not cry Amen to this, let him live sober, seem wise, and dye o'th' Coram.

Young Lo. It shall be so, we'll have it all in Drink, let Meat and Lodging go, they are transitory, and shew men meerly mortal: then we'll have Wenches, every one his Wench, and every week a fresh one: we'll keep no powdered flesh: all these we have by warrant, under the title of things necessary. Here upon this place I ground it, The obedience of my people, and all necessaries: your opinions Gentlemen?

Capt. 'Tis plain and evident that he meant Wenches.

Sav. Good Sir let me expound it?

Capt. Here be as found men, as your self Sir.

Poet. This do I hold to be the iuterpretation of it: In this word Necessary, is concluded all that be helps to Man; Woman was made the first, and therefore here the chiefeft.

Young Lo. Believe me 'tis a learned one; and by these words, The obedience of my people, you Steward being one, are bound to fetch us Wenches.

Capt. He is, he is.

Young Lo. Steward, attend us for instructions?

Sav. But will you keep no house Sir?

Young Lo. Nothing but drink Sir, three hundred pounds in drink.

Sav. O miserable house, and miserable I that live to see it! Good Sir keep some meat.

Young Lo. Get us good Whores, and for your part, I'll board you in an Alchouse, you shall have Cheefe and Onions.

Sav. What shall become of me, no Chimney smoaking? Well Prodigal, your Brother will come home. [Exit.

Young Lo. Come Lads, I'll warrant you for Wenches, three hundred pounds in drink. [Exeunt omnes.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Lady, her Sister Martha, Welford, Younglove, and others.

Lady. SIR, now you see your bad lodging, I must bid you good night.

Wel. Lady if there be any want, 'tis in want of you.

Lady. A little sleep will ease that complement. 'Once more good night.

Wel. Once more dear Lady, and then all sweet nights.

Lady. Dear Sir be short and sweet then.

Wel. Shall the morrow prove better to me, shall I hope my fate happier by this nights rest?

Lady. Is your fate so sickly that rest will help it? Pray ye let it rest then till I call for it. Sir as a stranger you have had all my welcome: but had I known your errand ere you came, your passage had been straiter. Sir, good night.

Welford. So fair, and cruel, dear unkind good night.

[Exit Lady.

Nay Sir, you shall stay with me, I'll press your zeal so far.

Roger. O Lord Sir.

Wel. Do you love Tobacco?

Rog. Surely I love it, but it loves not me; yet with your reverence I'll be bold.

Wel. Pray light it Sir. How do you like it?

Rog. I promise you it is notable stinging geer indeed. It is wet Sir, Lord how it brings down Rheum?

Wel. Handle it again Sir, you have a warm text of it.

Rog. Thanks ever promised for it. I promise you it is very powerful, and by a Trope, spiritual; for certainly it moves in sundry places.

Wel. I, it does so Sir, and me especially to ask Sir, why you wear a Night-cap.

Rog. Assuredly I will speak the truth unto you: you shall understand Sir, that my head is broken, and by whom; even by that visible beast the Butler.

Wel. The Butler? certainly he had all his drink about him when he did it. Strike one of your grave Calflock?
The offence Sir?

Rog. Reproving him at Tra-trip Sir, for swearing; you have the total surely.

Wel. You told him when his rage was set a tilt, and so he crackt your Canons. I hope he has not hurt your gentle reading: But shall we see these Gentlewomen to night.

Rog. Have patience Sir until our fellow Nicholas be deceast, that is, asleep: for so the word is taken: to sleep to dye, to dye to sleep, a very figure Sir.

Wel. Cannot you cast another for the Gentlewomen?

Rog. Not till the man be in his bed, his grave: his grave, his bed: the very same again Sir. Our Comick Poet gives the reason sweetly; Plenus rimarum est, he is full of loopeholes, and will discover to our Patroness.

Wel. Your comment Sir has made me understand you.

Enter Martha the Ladies Sister, and Younglove, to them with a Posset.

Rog. Sir be address't, the graces do salute you with the full bowl of plenty. Is our old enemy entomb'd?

Abig. He's safe?

Rog. And does he snore out supinely with the Poet?

Mar. No, he out-snores the Poet.

Wel. Gentlewoman, this courtesie shall bind a stranger to you, ever your servant.

Mar. Sir, my Sisters strictness makes not us forget you are a stranger and a Gentleman.

Abig. In sooth Sir, were I chang'd into my Lady, a Gentleman so well indued with parts, should not be lost.

Wel. I thank you Gentlewoman, and rest bound to you.
See how this foul familiar chews the Cud: From thee, and three and fifty good Love deliver me.

Mar. Will you sit down Sir, and take a spoon?

Wel. I take it kindly, Lady.

Mar. It is our best banquet Sir.

Rog. Shall we give thanks?

Wel. I have to the Gentlewomen already Sir.

Mar. Good Sir Roger, keep that breath to cool your part o'th' Posset, you may chance have a scalding zeal else; and you will needs be doing, pray tell your twenty to your self. Would you could like this Sir?

Wel. I would your Sister would like me as well Lady.

Mar. Sure Sir, she would not eat you: but banish that imagination; she's only wedded to her self, lyes with her self, and loves her self; and for another Husband than herself, he may knock at the gate, but ne're come in: be wife
Sir, she's a Woman, and a trouble, and has her many faults,
the least of which is, she cannot love you.

Abig. God pardon her, she'll do worse, would I were worthy his least grief, Mistress Martha.

Wel. Now I must over-hear her.

Mar. Faith would thou hadst them all with all my heart;
I do not think they would make thee a day older.

Abig. Sir, will you put in deeper, 'tis the sweeter.

Mar. Well said old sayings.

Wel. She looks like one indeed. Gentlewoman you keep your word, your sweet self has made the bottom sweeter.

Abig. Sir, I begin a frolick, dare you change Sir?

Wel. My self for you, so please you. That smile has turn'd my stomach: this is right the old Embleme of the Moyle cropping of Thistles: Lord what a hunting head she carries, sure she has been ridden with a Martingale. Now love deliver me.

Rog. Do I dream, or do I wake? surely I know not: am
I rub'd off? Is this the way of all my morning Prayers? Oh Roger, thou art but grass, and woman as a flower. Did I for this consume my quarters in Meditation, Vowes, and wood her in Heroical Epistles? Did I expound the Owl, and undertook with labour and expence the recollection of those thousand Pieces, consum'd in Cellars, and Tabacco-shops of that our honour'd Englishman Ni. Br. Have I done this, and am I done thus too? I will end with the wife man, and say; He that holds a Woman, has an Eel by the tail.

Mar. Sir 'tis so late, and our entertainment (meaning our Posset) by this is grown so cold, that 'twere an unman-nerly part longer to hold you from your rest: let what the house has be at your command Sir.

Wel. Sweet rest be with you Lady; and to you what you desire too.

[Exeunt.

Abig. It should be some such good thing like your self then.

Wel. Heaven keep me from that curse, and all my issue.

Good night Antiquity.

Rog. Solamen Miseris socios habuisse Doloris: but I alone.

Wel. Learned Sir, will you bid my man come to me? and requesting a greater measure of your learning, good night, good Master Roger.

Rog. Good Sir, peace be with you. [Exit Roger.

Wel. Adieu dear Domine. Half a dozen such in a Kingdom would make a man forswear confession: for who that had but half his wits about him, would commit the Counsel of a serious sin to such a cruel Night-cap? Why how now shall we have an Antick? Enter Servant.

Whose head do you carry upon your shoulders, that you jole it so against the Post? Is't for your ease? Or have you seen the Celler? Where are my slippers Sir?

Ser. Here Sir.

Wel. Where Sir? have you got the pot Verdugo? have you seen the Horses Sir?

Ser. Yes Sir.

Wel. Have they any meat?

Ser. Faith Sir, they have a kind of wholesome Rushes,
Hay I cannot call it.

Wel. And no Provender?

Ser. Sir, so I take it.

Wel. You are merry Sir, and why so?

Ser. Faith Sir, here are no Oats to be got, unless you'll have 'em in Porridge: the people are so mainly given to spoon-meat : yonder's a cast of Coach-mares of the Gentle-womans, the strangelt Cattel. Wel. Why?

Ser. Why, they are transparent Sir, you may see through them: and such a house!

Wel. Come Sir, the truth of your discovery.

Ser. Sir, they are in tribes like Jewes: the Kitchin and the Dayrie make one tribe, and have their faction and their fornication within themselves; the Buttery and the Landry are another, and there's no love lost; the chambers are in-tire, and what's done there, is somewhat higher than my knowledge: but this I am sure, between these copulations, a stranger is kept vertuous, that is, fasting. But of all this the drink Sir.

Wel. What of that Sir?

Ser. Faith Sir, I will handle it as the time and your patience will give me leave. This drink, or this cooling Julip, of which three spoonfuls kills the Calenture, a pint breeds the cold Palfie.

Wel. Sir, you bely the house.

Ser. I would I did Sir. But as I am a true man, if'twere but one degree colder, nothing but an Ass's hoof would hold it.

Wel. I am glad on't Sir, for if it had proved stronger, you had been tongue ti'd of these commendations. Light me the candle Sir, I'll hear no more. [Exeunt.]

Enter young Lovelefs and his Comrades, with wenches, and two Fidlers.

Yo. Lo. Come my brave man of war, trace out thy darling, And you my learned Council, sit and turn boyes, Kifs till the Cow come home, kifs close, kifs close knaves. My Modern Poet, thou shalt kifs in couplets.

Enter with Wine.

Strike up you merry varlets, and leave your peeping, This is no pay for Fidlers.

Capt. O my dear boy, thy Hercules, thy Captain Makes thee his Hylas, his delight, his solace.

Love thy brave man of war, and let thy bounty Clap him in Shamois: Let there be deducted out of our main Five Marks in hatchments to adorn this thigh, (potation Crampt with this rest of peace, and I will fight Thy battels.

Yo. Lo. Thou shalt hav't boy, and fly in Feather, Lead on a March you Michers.

Enter Savill.

Savill. O my head, O my heart, what a noyse and change is here! would I had been cold i'th' mouth before this day, and ne're have liv'd to see this dissolution. He that lives within a mile of this place, had as good sleep in the perpetual noyse of an Iron Mill. There's a dead Sea of drink i'th' Seller, in which goodly vessels lye wrackt, and in the middle of this deluge appear the tops of flagons and black jacks, like Churches drown'd i'th' marshes.

Yo. Lo. What, art thou come? My sweet Sir Amias welcome to Troy. Come thou shalt kifs my Helen, and court her in a dance.

Sav. Good Sir consider?

Yo. Lo. Shall we consider Gentlemen? How say you?

Capt. Consider? that were a simple toy i'faith, consider? whose moral's that? The man that cries consider is our foe: let my steel know him.

Young Lo. Stay thy dead doing hand, he must not die yet: prethee be calm my Heclor?

Capt. Peasant slave, thou groom compos'd of grudgings, live and thank this Gentleman, thou hadst seen Pluto else. The next consider kills thee.

Trav. Let him drink down his word again in a gallon of Sack?

Poet. 'Tis but a snuffe, make it two gallons, and let him doe it kneeling in repentance.

Savil. Nay rather kill me, there's but a lay-man lost. Good Captain doe your office?

Young Lo. Thou shalt drink Steward, drink and dance my Steward. Strike him a horn-pipe squeakers, take thy friver, and pace her till she stew.

Savil. Sure Sir, I cannot dance with your Gentlewomen, they are too light for me, pray break my head, and let me goe?

Capt. He shall dance, he shall dance.

Young Lo. He shall dance, and drink, and be drunk and dance, and be drunk again, and shall see no meat in a year.

Poet. And three quarters?

Young Lo. And three quarters be it.

Capt. Who knocks there? let him in.

Enter Elder Lovelefs disguised.

Savill. Some to deliver me I hope.

Elder Lo. Gentlemen, God save you all, my business is to one Master Lovelefs?

Capt. This is the Gentleman you mean; view him, and take his Inventorie, he's a right one.

Elder Lo. He promises no less Sir.

Young Lo. Sir, your business?

Elder Lo. Sir, I should let you know, yet I am loth, yet I am sworn to't, would some other tongue would speak it for me.

Young Lo. Out with it i' Gods name.

Elder Lo. All I desire Sir is, the patience and sufferance of a man, and good Sir be not mov'd more.

Young Lo. Then a pottle of sack will doe, here's my hand, prethee thy business?

Elder Lo. Good Sir excuse me, and whatsoever you hear, think must have been known unto you, and be your self discreet, and bear it nobly.

Young Lo. Prethee dispatch me?

Elder Lo. Your Brother's dead Sir?

Young Lo. Thou dost not mean dead drunk?

Elder Lo. No, no, dead and drown'd at sea Sir.

Young Lo. Art sure he's dead?

Elder Lo. Too sure Sir.

Young Lo. I but art thou very certainly sure of it?

Elder Lo. As sure Sir, as I tell it.

Young Lo. But art thou sure he came not up again?

Elder Lo. He may come up, but ne're to call you Brother?

Young Lo. But art sure he had water enough to drown him?

Elder Lo. Sure Sir, he wanted none.

Young Lo. I would not have him want, I lov'd him better; here I forgive thee: and i'faith be plain, how do I bear it?

Elder Lo. Very wifely Sir.

Young Lo. Fill him some wine. Thou dost not see me mov'd, these transitorie toys ne're trouble me, he's in a better place, my friend I know't. Some fellows would have cryed now, and have curst thee, and faln out with their meat, and kept a pudder; but all this helps not, he was too good for us, and let God keep him: there's the right use on't friend. Off with thy drink, thou hast a spice of sorrow makes thee dry: fill him another. Savill, your Master's dead, and who am I now Savill? Nay, let's all bear it well, wipe Savill wipe, tears are but thrown away: we shall have wenches now, shall we not Savill?

Savill. Yes Sir.

Young Lo. And drink innumerable.

Savil. Yes forfooth.

Young Lo. And you'll strain curtsie and be drunk a little?

Savil. I would be glad, Sir, to doe my weak endeavour.

Yo. Lo. You may be brought in time to love a wench too.

Savil. In time the sturdie Oak Sir.

Young Lo. Some more wine for my friend there.

Elder Lo. I shall be drunk anon for my good news: but I have a loving Brother, that's my comfort.

Youn Lo. Here's to you Sir, this is the worst I wish you for your news: and if I had another elder Brother, and say it were his chance to feed Haddocks, I should be still the same you see me now, a poor contented Gentleman. More wine for my friend there, he's dry again.

Elder Lo. I shall be if I follow this beginning. Well my dear Brother, if I scape this drowning, 'tis your turn next to sink, you shall duck twice before I help you. Sir I cannot drink more; pray let me have your pardon.

Young Lo. O Lord Sir, 'tis your modestie: more wine, give him a bigger glass; hug him my Captain, thou shalt be my chief mourner.

Capt. And this my pennon: Sir, a full carouse to you, and to my Lord of Land here.

Elder Lo. I feel a buzzing in my brains, pray God they bear this out, and I'll ne're trouble them so far again. Here's to you Sir?

Young Lo. To my dear Steward, down o' your knees you infidel, you Pagan; be drunk and penitent.

Savil. Forgive me Sir, and I'll be any thing.

Young Lo. Then be a Baud, I'll have thee a brave Baud.

Elder Lo. Sir, I must take my leave of you, my business is so urgent.

Young Lo. Let's have a bridling cast before you go. Fill's a new stoupe.

Elder Lo. I dare not Sir, by no means.

Young Lo. Have you any mind to a wench? I would fain gratifie you for the pains you took Sir.

Elder Lo. As little as to the t'other.

Young Lo. If you find any stirring do but say so.

Elder Lo. Sir, you are too bounteous, when I feel that itching, you shall assuage it Sir, before another; this only and Farewell Sir. Your Brother when the storm was most extrem, told all about him, he left a will which lies close behind a Chimney in the matted Chamber: and so as well Sir, as you have made me able, I take my leave.

Young Lo. Let us embrace him all: if you grow drie before you end your business, pray take a baite here, I have a fresh hoghead for you.

Savil. You shall neither will nor chuse Sir. My Master is a wonderfull fine Gentleman, has a fine state, a very fine state Sir, I am his Steward Sir, and his man.

Elder Lo. Would you were your own sir, as I left you. Well I must cast about, or all sinks.

Savil. Farewell Gentleman, Gentleman, Gentleman.

Elder Lo. What would you with me sir?

Savil. Farewell Gentleman.

Elder Lo. O sleep Sir, sleep. [Exit Elder Lo.]

Young Lo. Well boyes, you see what's fain, let's in and drink, and give thanks for it.

Capt. Let's give thanks for it.

Young Lo. Drunk as I live.

Savil. Drunk as I live boyes.

Young Lo. Why, now thou art able to discharge thine office, and cast up a reckoning of some weight; I will be knighted, for my state will bear it, 'tis sixteen hundred boyes: off with your husks, I'll skin you all in Sattin.

Capt. O sweet Loveless!

Savil. All in Sattin? O sweet Loveless!

Young Lo. March in my noble Compeeres: and this my Countess shall be led by two: and so proceed we to the Will.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Morecraft the Usurer, and Widow.

Morec. And Widow as I say be your own friend: your husband left you wealthy, I and wife, continue so sweet duck, continue so. Take heed of young smooth Varlets, younger Brothers: they are worms that will eat through your bags: they are very Lightning, that with a flash or two will melt your money, and never singe your purse-strings: they are Colts, wench Colts, heady and dangerous, till we take 'em up, and make 'em fit for Bonds: look upon me, I have had, and have yet matter of moment girle, matter of moment; you may meet with a worse back, I'll not commend it.

Wid. Nor I neither Sir?

Mor. Yet thus far by your favour Widow, 'tis tuffe.

Wid. And therefore not for my dyct, for I love a tender one.

Mor. Sweet Widow leave your frumps, and be edified: you know my state, I sell no Perspectives, Scarfs, Gloves, nor Hangers, nor put my trust in Shoe-ties; and where your Husband in an age was rising by burnt figs, dreg'd with meal and powdered sugar, faunders, and grains, wormseed and rotten Raisins, and such vile Tobacco, that made the footmen mangie; I in a year have put up hundreds inclos'd, my Widow, those pleasant Meadows, by a forfeit morgage: for which the poor Knight takes a lone chamber, owes for his Ale, and dare not beat his Hostess: nay more —

Wid. Good Sir no more, what ere my Husband was, I know what I am, and if you marry me, you must bear it bravely off Sir.

Mor. Not with the head, sweet Widow.

Wid. No sweet Sir, but with your shoulders: I must have you dub'd, for under that I will not stoop a feather. My husband was a fellow lov'd to toyle, fed ill, made gain his exercise, and so grew costive, which for that I was his wife, I gave way to, and spun mine own smocks course, and sir, so little: but let that pass, time, that wears all things out, wore out this husband, who in penitence of such fruitless five years marriage, left me great with his wealth, which if you'll be a worthie gossip to, be knighted Sir? [Enter Savil.]

Morec. Now, Sir, from whom come you? whose man are you Sir?

Savil. Sir, I come from young Master Loveless.

Mor. Be silent Sir, I have no money, not a penny for you, he's sunk, your Master's sunk, a perisht man Sir.

Savil. Indeed his Brother's sunk sir, God be with him, a perisht man indeed, and drown'd at Sea.

Morec. How saidst thou, good my friend, his Brother

Savil. Untimely sir, at Sea. (drown'd?)

Savil. Yes Sir.

Morec. And he wants money?

Savil. Yes, and sent me to you, for he is now to be knighted.

Mor. Widow be wise, there's more Land coming, widow be very wise, and give thanks for me widow.

Widow. Be you very wise, and be knighted, and then give thanks for me Sir?

Savil. What sayes your worship to this mony?

Mor. I say he may have mony if he please.

Savil. A thousand Sir?

Mor. A thousand Sir, provided any wife Sir, his Land lye for the payment, otherwise —

Enter Young Loveless and Comrades to them.

Savil. He's here himself Sir, and can better tell you.

Mor. My notable dear friend, and worthy Master Loveless, and now right worshipfull, all joy and welcom.

Yo. Lo. Thanks to my dear incloser Master Morecraft, prethee old Angel gold, salute my family, I'll do as much for yours; this, and your own desires, fair Gentlewoman.

Wid. And yours Sir, if you mean well; 'tis a handsome Gentleman.

Young Lo. Sirrah, my Brother's dead.

Morec. Dead?

Yo. Lo. Dead, and by this time soust for Ember Week.

Morecraft. Dead?

Young Lo. Drown'd, drown'd at sea man, by the next fresh Conger that comes we shall hear more.

Mor. Now by my faith of my body it moves me much.

Yo. Lo. What, wilt thou be an Ass, and weep for the dead? why I thought nothing but a general inundation would have mov'd thee, prethee be quiet, he hath left his land behind him.

Morecraft. O has he so?

Young Lo. Yes faith, I thank him for't, I have all boy, hast any ready mony?

Morecraft. Will you sell Sir?

Young Lo. No not out right good Gripe; marry, a morgage or such a slight securitie.

Morecraft.

More. I have no mony, Sir, for Morgage; if you will sell, and all or none, I'll work a new Mine for you.

Sav. Good Sir look before you, he'll work you out of all else: if you sell all your Land, you have sold your Country, and then you must to Sea, to seek your Brother, and there lye pickled in a Powdering tub, and break your teeth with Biskets and hard Beef, that must have watering Sir: and where's your 300 pounds a year in drink then? If you'll tun up the Straights you may, for you have no calling for drink there, but with a Canon, nor no scoring but on your Ships sides, and then if you scape with life, and take a Faggot boat and a bottle of Usquebaugh, come home poor men, like a tipe of Thames-street stinking of Pitch and Poor-John. I cannot tell Sir, I would be loth to see it.

Capt. Steward, you are an Ass, a meazel'd mungril, and were it not again the peace of my soveraign friend here, I would break your fore-casting Coxcomb, dog I would even with my staffe of Office there. Thy Pen and Inkhorn Noble boy, the God of gold here has fed thee well, take mony for thy durt: hark and believe, thou art cold of constitution, thy cat unhealthful, sell and be wise; we are three that will adorn thee, and live according to thine own heart child; mirth shall be only ours, and only ours shall be the black eyed beauties of the time. Mony makes men Eternal.

Poet. Do what you will, 'tis the noblest course, then you may live without the charge of people, only we four will make a Family, I and an Age that will beget new Animals, in which I'll write thy life my son of pleasure, equal with Nero and Caligula.

Young Lo. What men were they Captain?

Capt. Two roaring Boys of Rome, that made all split.

Young Lo. Come Sir, what dare you give?

Sav. You will not sell Sir?

Young Lo. Who told you so Sir?

Sav. Good Sir have a care.

Young Lo. Peace, or I'll tack your Tongue up to your Roof. What money? speak.

More. Six thousand pound Sir.

Capt. Take it, h'as overbidden by the Sun: bind him to his bargain quickly.

Young Lo. Come strike me luck with earnest, and draw the writings.

More. There's a Gods peny for thee.

Sav. Sir for my old Masters sake let my Farm be excepted, if I become his Tenant I am undone, my Children beggers, and my Wife God knows what: consider me dear Sir.

More. I'll have all or none.

Young Lo. All in, all in: dispatch the writings.

[Exit with Com.]

Wid. Go, thou art a pretty forehanded fellow, would thou wert wiser.

Sav. Now do I sensibly begin to feel my self a Rascal; would I could teach a School, or beg, or lye well, I am utterly undone; now he that taught thee to deceive and consen, take thee to his mercy; so be it. [Exit Savil.]

More. Come Widow come, never stand upon a Knight-hood, 'tis a meer paper honour, and not proof enough for a Serjant. Come, Come, I'll make thee——

Wid. To answer in short, 'tis this Sir. No Knight no Widow, if you make me any thing, it must be a Lady, and so I take my leave.

More. Farewel sweet Widow, and think of it. [Ex. Wid.]

Wid. Sir, I do more than think of it, it makes me dream Sir.

More. She's rich and sober, if this itch were from her: and say I be at the charge to pay the Footmen, and the Trumpets, I and the Horsemen too, and be a Knight, and she refuse me then; then am I hoist into the subsidy, and so by consequence should prove a Coxcomb: I'll have a care of that. Six thousand pound, and then the Land is mine, there's some refreshing yet. [Exit.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Abigal, and drops her Glove.

Abigal. IF he but follow me, as all my hopes tell me, he's man enough, up goes my rest, and I know I shall draw him.

Enter Welford.

Wel. This is the strangest pampered piece of flesh towards fifty, that ever frailty copt withal, what a trim lenmoy here she has put upon me; these women are a proud kind of Cattel, and love this whorson doing so directly, that they will not stick to make their very skins Bawdes to their flesh. Here's Dogskin and Storax sufficient to kill a Hawk: what to do with it, besides nailing it up amongst Irish heads of Teere, to shew the mightiness of her Palm, I know not: there she is. I must enter into Dialogue. Lady you have lost your Glove.

Abig. Not Sir, if you have found it.

Wel. It was my meaning Lady to restore it.

Abig. 'Twill be uncivil in me to take back a favour, Fortune hath so well bestowed Sir, pray wear it for me.

Wel. I had rather wear a Bell. But hark you Mistres, what hidden vertue is there in this Glove, that you would have me wear it? Is't good against fore eyes, or will it charm the Toothach? Or these red tops; being steep in white wine soluble, wil't kill the Itch? Or has it so conceal'd a providence to keep my hand from Bonds? If it have none of these and prove no more but a bare Glove of half a Crown a pair, 'twill be but half a courtesie, I wear two alwayes, faith let's draw cuts, one will do me no pleasure.

Abig. The tenderness of his years keeps him as yet in ignorance, he's a well moulded fellow, and I wonder his bloud should stir no higher; but 'tis his want of company: I must grow nearer to him.

Enter Elder Loveless disguised.

Elder Lo. God save you both.

Abig. And pardon you Sir; this is somewhat rude, how came you hither?

Elder Lo. Why through the doors, they are open.

Wel. What are you? And what business have you here?

Elder Lo. More I believe than you have.

Abig. Who would this fellow speak with? Art thou sober?

Elder Lo. Yes, I come not here to sleep.

Wel. Prethee what art thou?

Elder Lo. As much (gay man) as thou art, I am a Gentle-

Wel. Art thou no more? (man.)

Elder Lo. Yes more than thou dar'ft be; a Souldier.

Abig. Thou dost not come to quarrel?

Elder Lo. No, not with women; I come to speak here with a Gentlewoman.

Abig. Why, I am one.

Elder Lo. But not with one so gentle.

Wel. This is a fine fellow.

Elder Lo. Sir, I am not fine yet. I am but new come over, direct me with your ticket to your Taylor, and then I shall be fine Sir. Lady if there be a better of your Sex within this house, say I would see her.

Abig. Why am not I good enough for you Sir?

Elder Lo. Your way you'll be too good, pray end my business. This is another Sutor, O frail Woman!

Wel. This fellow with his bluntness hopes to do more than the long futes of a thousand could; though he be sowre he's quick, I must not trust him. Sir, this Lady is not to speak with you, she is more serious: you smell as if you were new calkt; go and be handsome, and then you may sit with her Servingmen. El. Lo. What are you Sir?

Wel. Guess by my outside.

Elder Lo. Then I take you Sir, for some new silken thing wean'd from the Country, that shall (when you come to keep good company) be beaten into better manners. Pray good good proud Gentlewoman, help me to your Mistrefs.

Abig. How many lives haft thou, that thou talk'ft thus rudely?

Elder Lo. But one, one, I am neither Cat nor Woman.

Wel. And will that one life, Sir, maintain you ever in fuch bold fawcinefs?

Elder Lo. Yes, amongst a Nation of fuch men as you are, and be no worfe for wearing, fhall I fpeak with this Lady?

Abig. No by my troth fhall you not.

Elder Lo. I muft ftay here then?

Wel. That you fhall not neither.

Elder Lo. Good fine thing tell me why?

Wel. Good angry thing I'll tell you:

This is no place for fuch companions,
Such lousie Gentlemen fhall find their bufinefs
Better i'th' Suburbs, there your ftrong pitch perfume,
Mingled with lees of Ale, fhall reek in fafhion:
This is no Thames ftreet, Sir.

Abig. This Gentleman informs you truly:

Prethee be fatisfied, and feek the Suburbs,
Good Captain, or what ever title elfe,
The Warlike Ele-boats have beftowed upon thee,
Go and reform thy felf, prethee be fwetter,
And know my Lady fpeaks with no Swabbers.

Elder Lo. You cannot talk me out with your tradition
Of wit you pick from Plays, go to, I have found ye:

And for you, Sir, whofe tender gentle blood
Runs in your Nofe, and makes you fnuft at all,
But three pil'd people, I do let you know,
He that begot your worships Sattin-fute,
Can make no men Sir: I will fee this Lady,
And with the reverence of your filkenfhip,
In thefe old Ornaments.

Wel. You will not fure?

Elder Lo. Sure Sir I fhall?

Abig. You would be beaten out?

Elder Lo. Indeed I would not, or if I would be beaten,
Pray who fhall beat me? this good Gentleman
Looks as he were o'th' peace.

Wel. Sir you fhall fee that: will you get you out?

Elder Lo. Yes, that, that fhall correct your boys tongue.
Dare you fight, I will ftay here ftill. [They draw.]

Abig. O their things are out, help, help for Gods fake,
Madam; Jefus they foine at one another.

Enter Lady.

Madam, why, who is within there?

Lady. Who breeds this rudenefs?

Wel. This uncivil fellow;
He faies he comes from Sea, where I believe,
H'as purg'd away his manners.

Lady. Why what of him?

Wel. Why he will rudely without once God blefs you,
Prefs to your privacies, and no denial
Muft ftand betwixt your perfon and his bufinefs;
I let go his ill Language.

Lady. Sir, have you bufinefs with me?

Elder Lo. Madam fome I have,
But not fo ferious to pawn my life for't:
If you keep this quarter, and maintain about you
Such Knights o'th' Sun as this is, to defie
Men of employment to ye, you may live,
But in what fame?

Lady. Pray ftay Sir, who has wrong'd you?

Elder Lo. Wrong me he cannot, though uncivilly
He flung his wild words at me: but to you
I think he did no honour, to deny
The haft I come withal, a paffage to you,
Though I feem courfe.

Lady. Excufe me gentle Sir, 'twas from my knowledge,
And fhall have no protection. And to you Sir,
You have fhew'd more heat than wit, and from your felf
Have borrowed power, I never gave you here,
To do thefe vile unmanly things: my houfe

Is no blind ftreet to fwagger in; and my favours
Not doting yet on your unknown deferts
So far, that I fhould make you Matter of my bufinefs;
My credit yet ftands fairer with the people
Than to be tried with fwords; and they that come
To do me fervice, muft not think to win me
With hazard of a murther; if your love
Confift in fury, carry it to the Camp:
And there in honour of fome common Mistrefs,
Shorten your youth, I pray be better temper'd:
And give me leave a while Sir.

Wel. You muft have it. [Exit Welford.]

Lady. Now Sir, your bufinefs?

El. Lo. Firft, I thank you for fchooling this young fellow,
Whom his own follies, which he's prone enough
Daily to fall into, if you but frown,
Shall level him a way to his repentance:
Next, I fhould rail at you, but you are a Woman,
And anger's loft upon you.

Lady. Why at me Sir?
I never did you wrong, for to my knowledge
This is the firft fight of you.

Elder Lo. You have done that,
I muft confefs I have the leaft curfe in Beaufe the leaft acquaintance: But there be
(If there be honour in the minds of men)
Thoufands when they fhall know what I deliver,
(As all good men muft fhare in't) will to fhame
Blaft your black memory.

Lady. How is this good Sir?

Elder Lo. 'Tis that, that if you have a foul will choak it:
Y'ave kill'd a Gentleman.

Lady. I kill'd a Gentleman!

Elder Lo. You and your cruelty have kill'd him Woman,
And fuch a man (let me be angry in't)
Whofe leaft worth weighed above all womens vertues
That are; I spare you all to come too: guefs him now?

Lady. I am fo innocent I cannot Sir.

Elder Lo. Repent you mean, you are a perfect Woman,
And as the firft was, made for mans undoing.

Lady. Sir, you have mift your way, I am not fhe.

Elder Lo. Would he had mift his way too, though he had Wandered farther than Women are ill fpoken of,
So he had mift this misery, you Lady.

Lady. How do you do, Sir?

Elder Lo. Well enough I hope.
While I can keep my felf out from temptations.

Lady. Leap into this matter, whither would ye?

Elder Lo. You had a Servant that your peevifhnefs
Injoined to Travel.

Lady. Such a one I have
Still, and fhall be griev'd 'twere otherwife.

El. Lo. Then have your asking, and be griev'd he's dead;
How you will answer for his worth, I know not,
But this I am fure, either he, or you, or both
Were ftark mad, elfe he might have liv'd
To have given a ftronger testimony to th' world
Of what he might have been. He was a man
I knew but in his evening, ten Suns after,
Forc'd by a Tyrant ftorm our beaten Bark
Bulg'd under us; in which fad parting blow,
He call'd upon his Saint, but not for life,
On you unhappy Woman, and whileft all
Sought to preferve their Souls, he desperately
Imbrac'd a Wave, crying to all that faw it,
If any live, go to my Fate that forc'd me
To this untimely end, and make her happy:
His name was Lovelefs: And I fcap't the ftorm,
And now you have my bufinefs.

Lady. 'Tis too much.

Would I had been that ftorm, he had not perift.
If you'll rail now I will forgive you Sir?
Or if you'll call in more, if any more
Come from this ruine, I fhall juftly fuffer

What they can say, I do confefs my self
A guiltie caufe in this. I would fay more,
But grief is grown too great to be delivered.

Elder Lo. I like this well: these women are strange things.

'Tis somewhat of the latest now to weep,
You should have wept when he was going from you,
And chain'd him with those tears at home.

La. Would you had told me then so, these two arms had been his Sea.

Elder Lo. Trust me you move me much: but say he lived, these were forgotten things again.

Lady. I, say you so? Sure I should know that voice: this is knavery. I'll fit you for it. Were he living Sir, I would persuade you to be charitable, I, and confefs we are not all so ill as your opinion holds us. O my friend, what penance shall I pull upon my fault, upon my most unworthy self for this?

Elder Lo. Leave to love others, 'twas some jealousy That turn'd him desperate.

Lady. I'll be with you straight: are you wrung there?

Elder Lo. This works amain upon her.

Lady. I do confefs there is a Gentleman Has born me long good will.

Elder Lo. I do not like that.

Lady. And vow'd a thousand services to me; to me, regardless of him: But since Fate, that no power can withstand, has taken from me my first, and best love, and to weep away my youth is a mere folly, I will shew you what I determine sir: you shall know all: Call M. Welford there: That Gentleman I mean to make the model of my Fortunes, and in his chaste embraces keep alive the memory of my lost lovely Loveless: he is somewhat like him too.

Elder Lo. Then you can love.

Lady. Yes certainly Sir?

Though it please you to think me hard and cruel,
I hope I shall persuade you otherwise.

Elder Lo. I have made my self a fine fool.

Enter Welford.

Wel. Would you have spoke with me Madam?

Lady. Yes M. Welford, and I ask your pardon before this Gentleman for being froward: this kiss, and henceforth more affection.

Elder Lo. So, 'tis better I were drown'd indeed.

Wel. This is a sudden passion, God hold it. This fellow out of his fear sure has Perswaded her. I'll give him a new suit on't.

La. A parting kiss, and good Sir, let me pray you To wait me in the Gallerie.

Wel. I am in another world, Madam where you please. [Exit Welford.]

Elder Lo. I will to Sea, and 't shall goe hard but I'll be drown'd indeed.

La. Now Sir you see I am no such hard creature, But time may win me.

Elder Lo. You have forgot your lost Love.

La. Alas Sir, what would you have me do? I cannot call him back again with sorrow; I'll love this man as dearly, and beshrow me I'll keep him far enough from Sea, and 'twas told me, now I remember me, by an old wife woman, that my first Love should be drown'd, and see 'tis come about.

Elder Lo. I would she had told you your second should be hang'd too, and let that come about: but this is very strange.

La. Faith Sir, consider all, and then I know you'll be of my mind: if weeping would redeem him, I would weep still.

Elder Lo. But say that I were Loveless, And scap'd the storm, how would you answer this?

Lady. Why for that Gentleman I would leave all the world.

Elder Lo. This young thing too?

Lady. That young thing too,
Or any young thing else: why, I would lose my state.

Elder Lo. Why then he lives still, I am he, your Loveless.

Lady. Alas I knew it Sir, and for that purpose prepared this Pageant: get you to your task. And leave these Players tricks, or I shall leave you, indeed I shall. Travel, or know me not.

Elder Lo. Will you then marry?

Lady. I will not promise, take your choice. Farewell.

Elder Lo. There is no other Purgatorie but a Woman. I must doe something. [Exit Loveless.]

Enter Welford.

Wel. Mistress I am bold.

Lady. You are indeed.

Wel. You so overjoyed me Lady.

Lady. Take heed you surfeit not, pray fast and welcom.

Wel. By this light you love me extreamly.

Lady. By this, and to morrows light, I care not for you.

Wel. Come, come, you cannot hide it.

Lady. Indeed I can, where you shall never find it.

Wel. I like this mirth well Lady.

Lady. You shall have more on't.

Wel. I must kiss you.

Lady. No Sir.

Wel. Indeed I must.

Lady. What must be, must be; I'll take my leave, you have your parting blow: I pray commend me to those few friends you have, that sent you hither, and tell them when you travel next, 'twere fit you brought less bravery with you, and more wit, you'll never get a wife else.

Wel. Are you in earnest?

Lady. Yes faith. Will you eat Sir, your horses will be readie straight, you shall have a napkin laid in the butterie for ye.

Wel. Do not you love me then?

Lady. Yes, for that face.

Wel. It is a good one Ladie.

Lady. Yes, if it were not warpt, the fire in time may mend it.

Wel. Me thinks yours is none of the best Ladie.

Lady. No by my troth Sir; yet o'my conscience, You would make shift with it.

Wel. Come pray no more of this?

Lady. I will not: Fare you well. Ho, who's within there? bring out the Gentlemans horses, he's in haste; and set some cold meat on the Table.

Wel. I have too much of that I thank you Ladie: take your Chamber when you please, there goes a black one with you Ladie.

Lady. Farewell young man.

[Exit Ladie.]

Wel. You have made me one, Farewell: and may the curse of a great house fall upon thee, I mean the Butler. The devil and all his works are in these women, would all of my sex were of my mind, I would make 'em a new Lent, and a long one, that flesh might be in more reverence with them.

Enter Abigail to him.

Abig. I am sorry M. Welford.

Wel. So am I, that you are here.

Abig. How does my Ladie use you?

Wel. As I would use you, scurvilie.

Abig. I should have been more kind Sir?

Wel. I should have been undone then. Pray leave me, and look to your sweet-meats; hark, your Ladie calls?

Abig. Sir, I shall borrow so much time without offence.

Wel. Y'are nothing but offence, for Gods love leave me.

Abig. 'Tis strange my Ladie should be such a tyrant?

Wel. To send you to me, 'Pray goe stitch, good doe, y'are more trouble to me than a Term.

Abig. I do not know how my good will, if I said love I lied not, should any way deserve this?

Wel. A thousand waies, a thousand waies; sweet creature let me depart in peace.

Abig. What Creature Sir? I hope I am a woman.

Wel. A hundred I think by your noise.

Abig.

Abig. Since you are angric Sir, I am bold to tell you that I am a woman, and a rib.

Wel. Of a roasted horse.

Abig. Conster me that?

Wel. A Dog can doe it better; Farwell Countess, and commend me to your Ladie, tell her she's proud, and scurvie, and so I commit you both to your tempter.

Abig. Sweet Mr. Welford.

Wel. Avoid old Satanus: Go daub your ruines, your face looks fouler than a storm: the Foot-man staves for you in the Lobby Lady.

Abig. If you were a Gentleman, I should know it by your gentle conditions? are these fit words to give a Gentlewoman?

Wel. As fit as they were made for ye: Sirrah, my horses. Farwell old Adage, keep your nose warm, the Rheum will make it horn else— [Exit Welford.

Abig. The blessings of a Prodigal young heir be thy companions Welford, marry come up my Gentleman, are your gums grown so tender they cannot bite? A skittish Filly will be your fortune Welford, and fair enough for such a packfaddle. And I doubt not (if my aim hold) to see her made to amble to your hand. [Exit Abigal.

Enter Young Loveless, and Comrades, Morecraft, Widow, Savil, and the rest.

Captain. Save thy brave shoulder, my young puissant Knight, and may thy back Sword bite them to the bone that love thee not, thou art an errant man, go on. The circumcis'd shall fall by thee. Let Land and labour fill the man that tills, thy sword must be thy plough, and Jove it speed. Mecha shall sweat, and Mahomet shall fall, and thy dear name fill up his monument.

Yo. L. It shall Captain, I mean to be a Worthy.

Cap. One Worthy is too little, thou shalt be all.

Mor. Captain I shall deserve some of your love too.

Cap. Thou shalt have heart and hand too, noble Morecraft, if thou wilt lend me mony. I am a man of Garrison, be rul'd, and open to me those infernal gates, whence none of thy evil Angels pass again, and I will stile thee noble, nay Don Diego. Ple woo thy Infanta for thee, and my Knight shall feast her with high meats, and make her apt.

Mor. Pardon me Captain, y'are beside my meaning.

Young Lo. No Mr. Morecraft, 'tis the Captains meaning I should prepare her for ye.

Cap. Or provok her. Speak my modern man, I say provoke her.

Poet. Captain, I say so too, or stir her to it. So say the Criticks.

Young Lo. But howsoever you expound it sir, she's very welcom, and this shall serve for witness. And Widow, since y'are come so happily, you shall deliver up the keyes, and free possession of this house, whilst I stand by to ratifie.

Wid. I had rather give it back again believe me, 'Tis a miserie to say you had it. Take heed?

Young Lo. 'Tis past that Widow, come, sit down, some wine there, there is a scurvie banquet if we had it. All this fair house is yours Sir Savil?

Savil. Yes Sir.

Young Lo. Are your keyes readie, I must ease your burden.

Sav. I am readie Sir to be undone, when you shall call me to't.

Young Lo. Come come, thou shalt live better.

Sav. I shall have less to doe, that's all, there's half a dozen of my friends i'th' fields sunning against a bank, with half a breech among 'em, I shall be with 'em shortly. The care and continuall vexation of being rich, eat up this rascall. What shall become of my poor familie, they are no sheep, and they must keep themselves.

Young Lo. Drink Maister Morecraft, pray be merrie all: Nay and you will not drink there's no societie, Captain speak loud, and drink: widow, a word.

Cap. Expound her throughly Knight. Here God o' gold, here's to thy fair possessions; Be a Baron and a bold one:

leave off your tickling of young heirs like Trouts, and let thy Chimnies smoke. Feed men of war, live and be honest, and be saved yet.

Mor. I thank you worthie Captain for your counsel. You keep your Chimnies smoking there, your nostrils, and when you can, you feed a man of War, this makes you not a Baron, but a bare one: and how or when you shall be saved, let the Clark o'th' companie (you have commanded) have a just care of.

Poet. The man is much moved. Be not angric Sir, but as the Poet sings, let your displeasure be a short furie, and goe out. You have spoke home, and bitterly, to me Sir? Captain take truce, the Miser is a tart and a wittie whorson—

Cap. Poet, you feign perdic, the wit of this man lies in his fingers ends, he must tell all; his tongue fills his mouth like a neats tongue, and only serves to lick his hungrie chaps after a purchase: his brains and brimstone are the devils diet to a fat usurers head: To her Knight, to her: clap her aboard, and stow her. Where's the brave Steward?

Savil. Here's your poor friend, and Savil Sir?

Cap. Away, th'art rich in ornaments of nature. First in thy face, thou hast a ferious face, a betting, bargaining, and saving face, a rich face, pawn it to the Usurer; a face to kindle the compassion of the most ignorant and frozen Justice.

Savil. 'Tis such I dare not shew it shortly sir,

Cap. Be blithe and bonny steward: Maister Morecraft, Drink to this man of reckoning?

Mor. Here's e'ne to him.

Savil. The Devil guide it downward: would there were in't an acre of the great broom field he bought, to sweep your durtie Conscience, or to choak ye, 'tis all one to me, Usurer.

Young Lo. Consider what I told you, you are young, unapt for worldly business: Is it fit one of such tenderness, so delicate, so contrarie to things of care, should stir and break her better meditations, in the bare brokage of a brace of Angels? or a new Kirtel, though it be Satten? eat by the hope of surfeits, and lie down only in expectation of a morrow, that may undo some easie hearted fool, or reach a widows curses? Let out mony, whose use returns the principal? and get out of these troubles, a consuming heir: For such a one must follow necessarily, you shall die hated, if not old and miserable; and that posselt wealth that you got with pining, live to see tumbled to anothers hands, that is no more a kin to you, than you to his couzenage.

Widow. Sir you speak well, would God that charity had first begun here?

Young Lo. 'Tis yet time. Bemerrie, me thinks you want wine there, there's more i'th' house. Captain, where rests the health?

Captain. It shall goe round boy?

Young Lo. Say you can suffer this, because the end points at much profit, can you so far bow below your blood, below your too much beautie, to be a partner of this fellowes bed, and lie with his diseases? if you can, I will nor press you further: yet look upon him: there's nothing in that hide-bound Usurer, that man of mat, that all decal'd, but aches, for you to love, unless his perisht lungs, his drie cough, or his scurvie. This is truth, and so far I dare speak yet: he has yet past cure of Physick, spaw, or any diet, a primitive pox in his bones; and o' my Knowledge he has been ten times rowell'd: ye may love him; he had a bastard, his own toward illue, whipt, and then cropt for washing out the roses, in three farthings to make 'em pence.

Widow. I do not like these Morals?

Young Lo. You must not like him then?

Enter Elder Love.

Elder Lo. By your leave Gentlemen?

Young Lo. By my troth sir you are welcom, welcom faith: Lord what a stranger you are grown; pray know this Gentlewoman, and if you please these friends here: we are merry, you see the worst on't; your house has been kept warm Sir?

Elder Lo. I am glad to hear it Brother, pray God you are wife too.

Young Lo. Pray Mr Morecraft know my elder Brother, and Captain do you complement. Savil I dare swear is glad at heart to see you; Lord, we heard Sir you were drown'd at Sea, and see how luckily things come about?

More. This money must be paid again Sir.

Young Lo. No Sir, pray keep the Sale, 'twill make good Tailors measures; I am well I thank you.

Wid. By my troth the Gentleman has stew'd him in his own Sawce, I shall love him for't.

Sav. I know not where I am, I am so glad: your worship is the welcomest man alive; upon my knees I bid you welcome home: here has been such a hurry, such a din, such dismal Drinking, Swearing and Whoring, 'thas almost made me mad: we have all liv'd in a continual Turnbalstreet; Sir, blest be Heaven, that sent you safe again, now shall I eat and go to bed again.

Elder Lo. Brother dismiss these people.

Young Lo. Captain be gone a while, meet me at my old Randevouse in the evening, take your small Poet with you. Mr Morecraft you were best go prattle with your learned Counsel, I shall preserve your money, I was couzen'd when time was, we are quit Sir.

Wid. Better and better still.

Elder Lo. What is this fellow, Brother?

Young Lo. The thirsty Usurer that suct my Land off.

Elder Lo. What does he tarry for?

Young Lo. Sir to be Landlord of your House and State: I was bold to make a little sale Sir.

More. Am I overreach'd? if there be Law I'll hamper ye.

Elder Lo. Prethee be gone, and rave at home, thou art so base a fool I cannot laugh at thee: Sirrah, this comes of couzening, home and spare, eat Reddish till you raise your fums again. If you stir far in this, I'll have you whipt, your ears nail'd for intelligencing o'the Pillory, and your goods forfeit: you are a stale couzener, leave my house: no more.

More. A pox upon your house. Come Widow, I shall yet hamper this young Gamester.

Wid. Good twelve i'th' hundred keep your way, I am not for your diet, marry in your own Tribe Jew, and get a Broker.

Young Lo. 'Tis well said Widow: will you jog on Sir?

More. Yes, I will go, but 'tis no matter whither:

But when I trust a wild Fool, and a Woman,
May I lend Gratis, and build Hospitals.

Young Lo. Nay good Sir, make all even, here's a Widow wants your good word for me, she's rich, and may renew me and my fortunes.

Elder Lo. I am glad you look before you. Gentlewoman, here is a poor distressed younger Brother.

Wid. You do him wrong Sir, he's a Knight.

Elder Lo. I ask you mercy: yet 'tis no matter, his Knight-hood is no inheritance I take it: whatsoever he is, he is your Servant, or would be, Lady. Faith be not mercilefs, but make a man; he's young and handsome, though he be my Brother, and his observances may deserve your Love: he shall not fail for means.

Wid. Sir you speak like a worthy Brother: and so much I do credit your fair Language, that I shall love your Brother: and so love him, but I shall blush to say more.

Elder Lo. Stop her mouth. I hope you shall not live to know that hour when this shall be repented. Now Brother I should chide, but I'll give no distaste to your fair Mistress. I will instruct her in't and she shall do't: you have been wild and ignorant, pray mend it.

Young Lo. Sir, every day now Spring comes on.

Elder Lo. To you good Mr Savil and your Office, thus much I have to say: Y'are from my Steward become, first your own Drunkard, then his Bawd: they say y'are excellent grown in both, and perfect: give me your keys Sir Savil?

Savil. Good Sir consider whom you left me to.

Elder Lo. I left you as a curb for, not to provoke my Brothers follies: where's the best drink, now? come, tell me Savil; where's the foundest Whores? Ye old he Goat, ye dried Ape, ye lame Stallion, must you be leading in my house your Whores, like Fairies dance their night rounds, without fear either of King or Constable, within my walls? Are all my Hangings safe; my Sheep unfold yet? I hope my Plate is currant, I ha' too much on't. What say you to 300 pounds in drink now?

Sav. Good Sir forgive me, and but hear me speak?

Elder Lo. Me thinks thou shouldst be drunk still, and not speak, 'tis the more pardonable.

Sav. I will Sir, if you will have it so.

Elder Lo. I thank ye: yes, e'ne pursue it Sir: do you hear? get a Whore soon for your recreation: go look out Captain Broken-breech your fellow, and Quarrel if you dare: I shall deliver these Keys to one shall have more honesty, though not so much fine wit Sir. You may walk and gather Cresses fit to cool your Liver; there's something for you to begin a Diet, you'll have the Pox else. Speed you well, Sir Savil: you may eat at my house to preserve life; but keep no Fornication in the Stables. [Ex. om. pr. Savil.

Sav. Now must I hang my self, my friends will look for't. Eating and sleeping, I do despise you both now: I will run mad first, and if that get not pitty, I'll drown my self, to a most dismal ditty. [Exit Savil.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Abigal sola.

Abigal. A Las poor Gentlewoman, to what a misery hath Age brought thee: to what a scurvy Fortune? Thou that hast been a Companion for Noblemen, and at the worst of those times for Gentlemen: now like a broken Servingman, must beg for favour to those, that would have crawl'd like Pilgrims to my Chamber but for an Apparition of me. You that be coming on, make much of fifteen, and so till five and twenty: use your time with reverence, that your profits may arise: it will not tarry with you, Ecce signum: here was a face, but time that like a surfeit eats our youth, plague of his iron teeth, and draw 'em for't, has been a little bolder here than welcome: and now to say the truth, I am fit for no man. Old men i'th' house of fifty, call me Granum; and when they are drunk, e'ne then, when Jone and my Lady are all one, not one will do me reason. My little Levite hath forsaken me, his silver found of Cittern quite abolish, this doleful hymns under my Chamber window, digested into tedious learning: well fool, you leapt a Haddock when you left him: he's a clean man, and a good edifier, and twenty nobles is his state de claro, besides his pigs in posse. To this good Homilist I have been ever stubborn, which God forgive me for, and mend my manners: and Love, if ever thou hadst care of forty, of such a piece of lape ground, hear my prayer, and fire his zeal so far forth that my faults in this renewed impression of my love may shew corrected to our gentle reader.

Enter Roger.

See how negligently he passes by me: with what an Equipage Canonical, as though he had broken the heart of Bellarmino, or added something to the singing Brethren. 'Tis scorn, I know it, and deserve it, Mr Roger.

Rog. Fair Gentlewoman, my name is Roger.

Abig. Then gentle Roger?

Rog. Ungentle Abigal.

(mans?)

Abig. Why Mr Roger will you set your wit to a weak wo-

Rog. You are weak indeed: for so the Poet sings.

Abig. I do confess my weakness, sweet Sir Roger.

Rog. Good my Ladies Gentlewoman, or my good Ladies Gentlewoman (this trope is lost to you now) leave your prating, you have a season of your first mother in ye: and surely had the Devil been in love, he had been abused too: go Dalilah, you make men fools, and wear Fig breeches.

Abig.

Abi. Well, well, hard hearted man; dilate upon the weak infirmities of women: these are fit texts, but once there was a time, would I had never seen those eyes, those eyes, those orient eyes.

Rog. I they were pearls once with you.

Abi. Saving your reverence Sir, so they are still.

Rog. Nay, nay, I do beseech you leave your cogging, what they are, they are, they serve me without Spectacles I thank 'em.

Abi. O will you kill me?

Rog. I do not think I can,

Y'are like a Copy-hold with nine lives in't.

Abi. You were wont to bear a Christian fear about you: For your own worships sake.

Rog. I was a Christian fool then: Do you remember what a dance you led me? how I grew qualm'd in love, and was a dunce? could expound but once a quarter, and then was out too: and then out of the stinking stir you put me in, I prayed for my own illue. You do remember all this?

Abi. O be as then you were?

Rog. I thank you for it, surely I will be wiser Abigal: and as the Ethnick Poet sings, I will not lose my oyl and labour too. Y'are for the worshipfull I take it Abigal.

Abi. O take it so, and then I am for thee?

Rog. I like these tears well, and this humbling also, they are Symptoms of contrition. If I should fall into my sin again, would you not shake me into a quotidian Coxcombe? Would you not use me scurvily again, and give me possets with purging Confets in't? I tell thee Gentlewoman, thou hast been harder to me, than a long pedigree.

Abi. O Curate cure me: I will love thee better, dearer, longer: I will do any thing, betray the secrets of the main house-hold to thy reformation. My Ladie shall look lovingly on thy learning, and when true time shall point thee for a Parson, I will convert thy egges to penny cultards, and thy tith goose shall graze and multiply.

Rog. I am mollified, as well shall testify this faithfull kiss, and have a great care Mistress Abigal how you deprees the Spirit any more with your rebukes and mocks: for certainly the edge of such a follie cuts it self.

Abigal. O Sir, you have pierc'd me thorow. Here I vow a recantation to those malicious faults I ever did against you. Never more will I despise your learning, never more pin cards and cony tails upon your Cassock, never again reproach your reverend nightcap, and call it by the mangie name of murrin, never your reverend person more, and say, you look like one of Baals Priests in a hanging, never again when you say grace laugh at you, nor put you out at prayers: never cramp you more, nor when you ride, get Sope and Thittles for you. No my Roger, these faults shall be corrected and amended, as by the tenour of my tears appears.

Rog. Now cannot I hold if I should be hang'd, I must crie too. Come to thine own beloved, and do even what thou wilt with me sweet, sweet Abigal. I am thine own for ever: here's my hand, when Roger proves a recreant, hang him i'th' Bel-ropes.

Enter Lady, and Martha.

Lady. Why how now Master Roger, no prayers down with you to night? Did you hear the bell ring? You are courting: your flock shall fat well for it.

Rog. I humbly ask your pardon: I'll clap up Prayers, but stay a little, and be with you again. [Exit Roger.

Enter Elder Love.

Lady. How dare you, being so unworthie a fellow, Presume to come to move me any more?

Elder Lo. Ha, ha, ha.

Lady. What ails the fellow?

Elder Lo. The fellow comes to laugh at you, I tell you Ladie I would not for your Land, be such a Coxcomb, such a whining Ass, as you decreed me for when I was last here.

Lady. I joy to hear you are wise, 'tis a rare Jewel In an Elder Brother: pray be wiser yet?

Elder Lo. Me thinks I am very wise: I do not come a wooing. Indeed I'll move no more love to your Ladiship.

Lady. What makes you here then?

Elder Lo. Only to see you and be merry Ladie: that's all my business. Faith let's be very merry. Where's little Roger? he's a good fellow: an hour or two well spent in wholesome mirth, is worth a thousand of these puling passions. 'Tis an ill world for Lovers.

Lady. They were never fewer.

Elder Lo. I thank God there's one less for me Ladie?

Lady. You were never any Sir.

Elder Lo. Till now, and now I am the prettiest fellow.

Lady. You talk like a Tailor Sir.

Elder Lo. Me thinks your faces are no such fine things now.

Lady. Why did you tell me you were wise? Lord what a lying age is this, where will you mend these faces?

Elder Lo. A Hogs face foust is worth a hundred of 'em.

Lady. Sure you had a Sow to your Mother.

Elder Lo. She brought such fine white Pigs as you, fit for none but Parsons Ladie?

Lady. 'Tis well you will allow us our Clergie yet.

Elder Lo. That shall not save you. O that I were in love again with a wilh.

Lady. By this light you are a scurvie fellow, pray be gone.

Elder Lo. You know I am a clean skin'd man.

Lady. Do I know it?

Elder Lo. Come, come, you would know it; that's as good: but not a snap, never long for't, not a snap dear Ladie.

Lady. Hark ye Sir, hark ye, get ye to the Suburbs, there's horse flesh for such hounds: will you goe Sir?

Elder Lo. Lord how I lov'd this woman, how I worshipt this prettie calf with the white face here: as I live, you were the prettiest fool to play withall, the wittiest little varlet, it would talk: Lord how it talk't! and when I angred it, it would cry out, and scratch, and eat no meat, and it would say, goe hang.

Lady. It will say so still, if you anger it.

Elder Lo. And when I askt it, if it would be married, it sent me of an errand into France, and would abuse me, and be glad it did so.

Lady. Sir this is most unmanly, pray by gon.

Elder Lo. And swear (even when it twitter'd to be at me) I was unhanfome.

Lady. Have you no manners in you?

Elder Lo. And say my back was melted, when God he knows, I kept it at a charge: Four Flaunders Mares would have been easier to me, and a Fencer.

Lady. You think all this is true now?

Elder Lo. Faith whether it be or no, 'tis too good for you. But so much for our mirth: Now have at you in earnest.

Lo. There is enough Sir, I desire no more.

El. Lo. Yes faith, wee'll have a cast at your best parts now. And then the Devil take the worst.

Lady. Pray Sir no more, I am not so much affected with your commendations, 'tis almost dinner, I know they stay for you at the Ordinary.

Elder Lo. E'ne a short Grace, and then I am gone; You are a woman, and the proudest that ever lov'd a Coach: the scornfullest, scurvieft, and most fenceless woman; the greediest to be prais'd, and never mov'd though it be gross and open; the most envious, that at the poor fame of another's face, would eat your own, and more than is your own, the paint belonging to it: of such a self opinion, that you think none can deserve your glove: and for your malice, you are so excellent, you might have been your Tempters tutor: nay, never cry.

Lady. Your own heart knows you wrong me: I cry for ye?

Elder Lo. You shall before I leave you.

Lady. Is all this spoke in earnest?

Elder Lo. Yes and more as soon as I can get it out.

Lady. Well out with't.

Elder Lo. You are, let me see.

Lady. One that has us'd you with too much respect.

Elder Lo. One that hath us'd me (since you will have it so) the basest, the most Foot-boy-like, without respect of what I was, or what you might be by me; you have us'd me, as I would use a jade, ride him off's legs, then turn him to the Commons; you have us'd me with discretion, and I thank ye. If you have many more such pretty Servants, pray build an Hospital, and when they are old, pray keep 'em for shame.

Lady. I cannot think yet this is serious.

Elder Lo. Will you have more on't?

Lady. No faith, there's enough if it be true: Too much by all my part; you are no Lover then?

Elder Lo. No, I had rather be a Carrier.

Lady. Why the Gods amend all.

Elder Lo. Neither do I think there can be such a fellow found i'th' world, to be in love with such a froward woman, if there be such, they're mad, Jove comfort 'em. Now you have all, and I as new a man, as light, and spirited, that I feel my self clean through another creature. O 'tis brave to be ones own man, I can see you now as I would see a Picture, sit all day by you and never kifs your hand: hear you sing, and never fall backward: but with as set a temper, as I would hear a Fidler, rise and thank you. I can now keep my mony in my purse, that still was gadding out for Scarfes and Waistcoats: and keep my hand from Mercers sheep skins finely. I can eat mutton now, and feast my self with my two shillings, and can see a play for eighteen pence again: I can my Ladie.

Lady. The carriage of this fellow vexes me. Sir, pray let me speak a little private with you, I must not suffer this.

Elder Lo. Ha, ha, ha, what would you with me? You will not ravish me? Now, your set speech?

Lady. Thou perjurd man.

Elder Lo. Ha, ha, ha, this is a fine exordium. And why I pray you perjurd?

Lady. Did you not swear a thousand thousand times you lov'd me best of all things?

Elder Lo. I do confess it: make your best of that.

Lady. Why do you say you do not then?

Elder Lo. Nay P'le swear it, And give sufficient reason, your own usage.

Lady. Do you not love me then?

Elder Lo. No faith.

Lady. Did you ever think I lov'd you dearly?

Elder Lo. Yes, but I see but rotten fruits on't.

Lady. Do not denie your hand for I must kifs it, and take my lat farewell, now let me die so you be happy.

El. Lo. I am too foolish: Ladie speak dear Ladie.

Lady. No let me die. She swounds.

Mar. Oh my Sister!

Abi. O my Ladie help, help.

Mar. Run for some Rosalis?

Elder Lo. I have plaid the fine as: bend her bodie, Lady, best, dearest, worthiest Ladie, hear your Servant, I am not as I shew'd: O wretched fool, to sling away the Jewel of thy life thus. Give her more air, see she begins to stir, sweet Mistris hear me?

Lady. Is my Servant well?

Elder Lo. In being yours I am so.

Lady. Then I care not.

Elder Lo. How do ye, reach a chair there; I confess my fault not pardonable, in pursuing thus upon such tendernefs my wilfull error; but had I known it would have wrought thus with ye, thus strangely, not the world had won me to it, and let not (my best Ladie) any word spoke to my end disturb your quiet peace: for sooner shall you know a general ruine, than my faith broken. Do not doubt this Mistris, for by my life I cannot live without you. Come, come, you shall not grieve, rather be angrie, and heap in-flition upon me: I will suffer. O I could curse my self, pray smile upon me. Upon my faith it was but a trick to trie you, knowing you lov'd me dearlie, and yet strangely that you would never shew it, though my means was all humilitie.

All. Ha, ha.

Elder Lo. How now?

Lady. I thank you fine fool for your most fine plot; this was a subtilie one, a stiff device to have caught Dottrels with. Good fenceles Sir, could you imagine I should fwound for you, and know your self to be an arrant as? I, a discovered one. 'Tis quit I thank you Sir. Ha, ha, ha.

Mar. Take heed Sir, she may chance to fwound again?

All. Ha, ha, ha.

Abi. Step to her Sir, see how she changes colour.

Elder Lo. P'le goe to hell first, and be better welcom. I am fool'd, I do confess it, finely fool'd, Ladie, fool'd Madam, and I thank you for it.

Lady. Faith 'tis not so much worth Sir: But if I knew when you come next a burding, P'le have a stronger noose to hold the Woodcock.

All. Ha, ha, ha.

Elder Lo. I am glad to see you merry, pray laugh on.

Mar. H'ad a hard heart that could not laugh at you Sir, ha, ha, ha.

Lady. Pray Sister do not laugh, you'le anger him, And then hee'l rail like a rude Coffermonger. That School-boys had couzened of his Apples, As loud and fenceles?

Elder Lo. I will not rail.

Mar. Faith then let's hear him Sister?

Elder Lo. Yes, you shall hear me.

Lady. Shall we be the better by it then?

Elder Lo. No, he that makes a woman better by his words, P'le have him Sainted: blows will not doe it.

Lady. By this light hee'll beat us.

Elder Lo. You do deserve it richly, And may live to have a Beadle doe it.

Lady. Now he rails?

Elder Lo. Come scornfull Folly, If this be railing, you shall hear me rail.

Lady. Pray put it in good words then.

Elder Lo. The worst are good enough for such a trifle, Such a proud piece of Cobweblawn.

Lady. You bite Sir?

Elder Lo. I would till the bones crackt, and I had my will.

Mar. We had best muzzle him, he grows mad.

Elder Lo. I would 'twere lawfull in the next great sickness to have the Dogs spared, those harmless creatures, and knock i'th' head these hot continual plagues, women, that are more infectious. I hope the State will think on't.

Lady. Are you well Sir?

Mar. He looks as though he had a grievous fit o'th' Colick.

Elder Lo. Green-ginger will cure me.

Abig. P'le heat a trencher for him.

Elder Lo. Dirty December doe, Thou with a face as old as Erra Pater, such a Prognosticating nose: thou thing that ten years since has left to be a woman, outworn the expectation of a Baud; and thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords or ninepins, pray goe fetch a trencher goe.

Lady. Let him alone, he's crackt.

Abig. P'le see him hang'd first, is a beastly fellow to use a woman of my breeding thus; I marry is he: would I were a man, P'de make him eat his *Knave*s words?

Elder Lo. Tie your she Otter up, good Lady folly, she stinks worfe than a Bear-baiting.

Lady. Why will you be angry now?

Elder Lo. Goe paint and purge, call in your kennel with you: you a Lady?

Abi. Sirra, look to't against the quarter Sessions, if there be good behaviour in the world, P'le have thee bound to it.

Elder Lo. You must not seek it in your Ladies house then; pray send this Ferret home, and spin good Abigal. And Madam, that your Ladiship may know, in what base manner you have us'd my service, I do from this hour hate thee thee heartily; and though your folly should whip you to repentance, and waken you at length to see my wrongs, 'tis not the endeavour of your life shall win me; not all the friends you have, intercession, nor your submissive letters, though they spoke as many tears as words; not your knees grown to th'ground in penitence, nor all your state, to kiss you, nor my pardon, nor will to give you Christian burial, if you dye thus; so farewell. When I am married and made sure, I'll come and visit you again, and vex you Ladie. By all my hopes I'll be a torment to you, worse than a tedious winter. I know you will recant and sue to me, but save that labour: I'll rather love a fever and continual thirst, rather contract my youth to drink and sacerdote upon quarrels, or take a drawn whore from an Hospital, that time, discafes, and Mercury had eaten, than to be drawn to love you.

Lady. Ha, ha, ha, pray do, but take heed though.

Elder Lo. From thee, false dice, jades, Cowards, and plaguy Summers, good Lord deliver me.

[Exit Elder Love.

Lady. But hark you Servant, hark ye: is he gon? call him again.

Abigail. Hang him Paddock.

Lady. Art thou here still? flie, flie, and call my Servant, flie or ne'r see me more.

Abigail. I had rather knit again than see that rascall, but I must doe it.

[Exit Abigail.

Lady. I would be loth to anger him too much; what fine foolery is this in a woman, to use those men most forwardly they love most? If I should lose him thus, I were rightly served. I hope he's not so much himself, to take it to th'heart: how now? will he come back?

Enter Abigail.

Abig. Never, he swears, whilst he can hear men say there's any woman living: he swore he would ha' me first.

Lady. Didst thou intreat him wench?

Abigail. As well as I could Madam. But this is still your way, to love being absent, and when he's with you, laugh at him and abuse him. There's another way if you could hit on't.

Lady. Thou saist true, get me paper, pen and ink, I'll write to him, I'de be loth he should sleep in's anger. Women are most fools when they think th'are wisest.

[Ex Omnes.

Musick. Enter Young Lovelocks, and Widow, going to be Married, with them his Comrades.

Widow. Pray Sir cast off these fellows, as unfitting for your bare knowledge, and far more your companie: is't fit such Ragamuffins as these are should bear the name of friends? and furnish out a civil house? ye're to be married now, and men that love you must expect a course far from your old carrier: if you will keep 'em, turn 'em toth' stable, and there make 'em grooms: and yet now consider it, such beggars once set o' horse back, you have heard will ride, how far you had best to look.

Captain. Hear you, you that must be Ladie, pray content yourself and think upon your carriage soon at night, what dressing will best take your Knight, what wastcote, what cordial will do well i'th' morning for him, what triers have you?

Widow. What do you mean Sir?

Capt. Those that must switeh him up: if he start well, fear not but ery Saint George, and bear him hard: when you perceive his wind growes hot and wanting, let him a little down, he's fleet, ne're doubt him, and stands sound.

Widow. Sir, you hear these fellows?

Young Love. Merrie companions, wench, Merry companions.

Widow. To one another let 'em be companions, but good Sir not to you: you shall be civil and slip off these base trappings.

Cap. He shall not need, my most sweed Ladie Grocer, if he be civil, not your powdered Sugar, nor your Raisins shall perswade the Captain to live a Coxcomb with him; let him be civil and eat i'th' Arches, and see what will come on't.

Poet. Let him be civil, doe: undo him; I, that's the next way. I will not take (if he be civil once) two hundred pound a year to live with him; be civil? there's a trim perswasion.

Capt. If thou beest civil Knight, as Jove defends it, get thee another nose, that will be pull'd off by the angry boyes for thy conversion: the children thou shalt get on this Civilian cannot inherit by the law, th'are Ethnicks, and all thy sport meer Moral leacherie: when they are grown, having but little in 'em, they may prove Haberdashers, or gross Grocers, like their dear Damm there: prethee be civil Knight, in time thou maist read to thy household, and be drunk once a year: this would shew finely.

Young Lo. I wonder sweet heart you will offer this, you do not understand these Gentlemen: I will be short and pithy: I had rather cast you off by the way of charge: these are Creatures, that nothing goes to the maintenance of but Corn and Water. I will keep these fellows just in the competencie of two Hens.

Wid. If you can cast it so Sir, you have my liking? If they eat less, I should not be offended: But how these Sir, can live upon so little as Corn and Water, I am unbelieving.

Young Lo. Why prethee sweet heart what's your Ale? is not that Corn and Water, my sweet Widow?

Wid. I but my sweet Knight where's the meat to this, and cloaths that they must look for?

Young Lo. In this short sentence Ale, is all included: Meat, Drink, and Cloth; These are no ravening Footmen, no fellows, that at Ordinaries dare eat their eighteen pence thrice out before they rise, and yet goe hungry to play, and crack more nuts than would suffice a dozen Squirrels; besides the din, which is damnable: I had rather rail, and be confin'd to a Boatmaker, than live amongst such rascals; these are people of such a clean discretion in their diet, of such a moderate sustenance, that they sweat if they but smell hot meat. Porredge is poison, they hate a Kitchin as they hate a Counter, and shew 'em but a Feather-bed they swoound. Ale is their eating and their drinking surely, which keeps their bodies clear, and soluble. Bread is a binder, and for that abolisht even in their Ale, whose lost room fills an apple, which is more airy and of subtiler nature. The rest they take is little, and that little is little easie: For like strict men of order, they do correct their bodies with a bench, or a poor stubborn table; if a chimney offer it self with some few broken rusties, they are in down: when they are sick, that's drunk, they may have fresh straw, else they do despise these worldly pamperings. For their poor apparel, 'tis worn out to the diet; new they seek none, and if a man should offer, they are angrie, scarce to be reconcil'd again with him: you shall not hear 'em ask one a cast doublet once in a year, which is modesty befitting my poor friends: you see their Wardrobe, though slender, competent: For shirts I take it, they are things worn out of their remembrance. Lousie they will be when they list, and mangie, which shows a fine variety: and then to cure 'em, a Tanners limepit, which is little charge, two dogs, and these; these two may be cur'd for 3. pence.

Wid. You have half perswaded me, pray use your pleasure: and my good friends since I do know your diet, I'll take an order, meat shall not offend you, you shall have Ale.

Capt. We ask no more, let it be, mighty Lady: and if we perish, then our own sins on us.

Young Lo. Come forward Gentlemen, to Church my boys, when we have done, I'll give you cheer in bowles.

[Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Elder Lovelefs.

Elder Lo. THis fenfelefs woman vexes me to th' heart, she will not from my memory: would she were a man for one two hours, that I might beat her. If I had been unhanfome, old or jealous, 'thad been an even lay she might have fcorn'd me; but to be young, and by this light I think as proper as the proudeft; made as clean, as ftraight, and ftrong backt; means and manners equal with the beft cloth of filver Sir i'th' kingdom: But thefe are things at fome time of the Moon, below the cut of Canvas: fure she has fome Meeching Rascal in her houfe, fome Hind, that she hath feen bear (like another Milo) quarters of Malt upon his back, and fing with't, Thrafh all day, and i'th' evening in his ftockings, ftrike up a Hornpipe, and there flink two hours, and ne're a whit the worfe man; thefe are they, thefe fteel chin'd Rascals that undo us all. Would I had been a Carter, or a Coachman, I had done the deed e're this time.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Sir, there's a Gentleman without would fpeak with Elder Lo. Bid him come in. (you.)

Enter Welford.

Wel. By your leave Sir.

Elder Lo. You are welcome, what's your will Sir?

Wel. Have you forgotten me?

Elder Lo. I do not much remember you.

Wel. You must Sir. I am that Gentleman you pleas'd to wrong, in your difguife, I have inquired you out.

Elder Lo. I was difguifed indeed Sir if I wrong'd you, pray where and when?

Wel. In fuch a Ladies houfe, I need not name her.

Elder Lo. I do remember you, you feem'd to be a Sutor to that Lady?

Wel. If you remember this, do not forget how fcurvily you us'd me: that was no place to quarrel in, pray you think of it; if you be honeft you dare fight with me, without more urging, elfe I must provoke ye.

Elder Lo. Sir I dare fight, but never for a woman, I will not have her in my caufe, she's mortal, and fo is not my anger: if you have brought a nobler fubject for our Swords, I am for you; in this I would be loth to prick my Finger. And where you fay I wrong'd you, 'tis fo far from my profefion, that amongst my fears, to do wrong is the greateft: credit me we have been both abufed, (not by our felves, for that I hold a spleen, no fin of malice, and may with man enough be beft forgotten,) but by that willfull, fcornful piece of hatred, that much forgetful Lady: for whose fake, if we should leave our reason, and run on upon our fenfe, like Rams, the little world of good men would laugh at us, and defpife us, fixing upon our desperate memories the never-worn out names of Fools and Fencers. Sir 'tis not fear, but reason makes me tell you; in this I had rather help you Sir, than hurt you, and you shall find it, though you throw your felf into as many dangers as she offers, though you redeem her loft name every day, and find her out new honours with your Sword, you shall but be her mirth as I have been.

Wel. I ask you mercy Sir, you have ta'ne my edge off: yet I would fain be even with this Lady.

Elder Lo. In which I'll be your helper: we are two, and they are two: two Sisters, rich alike, only the elder has the prouder Dowry: In troth I pity this difgrace in you, yet of mine own I am fenfelefs: do but follow my Counfel, and I'll pawn my fpirit, we'll overreach 'em yet; the means is this—

Enter Servant.

Ser. Sir there's a Gentlewoman will needs fpeak with you, I cannot keep her out, she's entred Sir.

Elder Lo. It is the waiting woman, pray be not feen: firrah hold her in difcourfe a while: hark in your ear, go and difpatch it quickly, when I come in, I'll tell you all the project.

Wel. I care not which I have.

[Exit Welford.]

Elder Lo. Away, 'tis done, she must not fee you: now Lady Guiniver what news with you?

Enter Abigal.

Abig. Pray leave thefe frumps Sir, and receive this letter.

Elder Lo. From whom good vanity?

Abig. 'Tis from my Lady Sir: Alas good foul, she cries and takes on!

Elder Lo. Do's she fo good Soul? wou'd she not have a Cawdle? do's she fend you with your fine Oratory goody Tully to tye me to believe again? bring out the Cat-hounds, I'll make you take a tree Whore, then with my tiller bring down your Gibship, and then have you caft, and hung up i'th' Warren.

Abig. I am no beaft Sir, would you knew it.

Elder Lo. Wou'd I did, for I am yet very doubtful, what will you fay now?

Abig. Nothing not I.

Elder Lo. Art thou a woman, and fay nothing?

Abig. Unless you'll hear me with more moderation, I can fpeak wife enough.

Elder Lo. And loud enough? will your Lady love me?

Abig. It feems fo by her letter, and her lamentations; but you are fuch another man.

Elder Lo. Not fuch another as I was, Mumps; nor will not be: I'll read her fine Epiftle: ha, ha, ha, is not thy Miftrefs mad?

Abig. For you she will be, 'tis a shame you should ufe a poor Gentlewoman fo untowardly; she loves the ground you tread on; and you (hard heart) becaufe she jested with you, mean to kill her; 'tis a fine conquest as they fay.

Elder Lo. Haft thou fo much moisture in the Whitleather hide yet, that thou canft cry? I wou'd have fworn thou hadft been touchwood five year fince; nay let it rain, thy face chops for a shower like a dry Dunghil.

Abig. I'll not indure this Ribauldry; farewel i'th' Devils name; if my Lady die, I'll be fworn before a Jury, thou art the caufe on't.

Elder Lo. Do Maukin do, deliver to your Lady from me this: I mean to fee her, if I have no other bufinefs: which before I'll want to come to her, I mean to go feek birds nests: yet I may come too: but if I come, from this door till I fee her, will I think how to rail vildly at her; how to vex her, and make her cry fo much, that the Physician if she fall fick upon't, shall find the caufe to be want of Urine, and she remedilefs dye in her Herefie: Farewell old Adage, I hope to fee the Boys make Potguns on thee.

Abig. Th'art a vile man, God blefs my iffue from thee.

Elder Lo. Thou haft but one, and that's in thy left crupper, that makes thee hobble fo; you must be ground i'th' breech like a Top, you'll ne're spin well elfe: Farewell Fytchock.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Lady alone.

Lady. Is it not ftrange that every womans will should track out new wayes to difturb her felf? if I should call my reason to account, it cannot answer why I keep my felf from mine own wish, and flop the man I love from his; and every hour repent again, yet still go on: I know 'tis like a man, that wants his natural fleep, and growing dull would gladly give the remnant of his life for two hours reft; yet through his frowardnefs, will rather choofe to watch another man, drowfie as he, than take his own refofe. All this I know: yet a ftrange peevifhnefs and anger, not to have the power to do things unexpected, carries me away to mine own ruine: I had rather die fometimes than not difgrace in publick him whom people think I love, and do't with oaths, and am in earnest then: ○

O what are we! Men, you must answer this, that dare obey such things as we command. How now? what news?

Enter Abigail.

Abi. Faith Madam none worth hearing.

Lady. Is he not come?

Abi. No truly.

Lady. Nor has he writ?

Abigail. Neither. I pray God you have not undone your self.

Lady. Why, but what saies he?

Abi. Faith he talks strangely.

Lady. How strangely?

Abi. First at your Letter he laught extremely?

Lady. What, in contempt?

Abi. He laught monstrous loud, as he would die, and when you wrote it I think you were in no such merry mood, to provoke him that way: and having done he cried Alas for her, and violently laught again.

Lady. Did he?

Abi. Yes, till I was angry.

Lady. Angry, why? why wert thou angry? he did doe but well, I did deserve it, he had been a fool, an unfit man for any one to love, had he not laught thus at me: you were angry, that show'd your folly; I shall love him more for that, than all that ere he did before: but said he nothing else?

Abi. Many uncertain things: he said though you had mockt him, because you were a woman, he could wish to do you so much favour as to see you: yet he said, he knew you rash, and was loth to offend you with the sight of one, whom now he was bound not to leave.

Lady. What one was that?

Abi. I know not, but truly I do fear there is a making up there: for I heard the servants, as I past by some, whisper such a thing: and as I came back through the hall, there were two or three Clerks writing great conveyances in hast, which they said were for their Mistris joynture.

Lady. 'Tis very like, and fit it should be so, for he does think, and reasonably think, that I should keep him with my idle tricks for ever ere he be married.

Abi. At last he said, it should go hard but he would see you for your satisfaction.

Lady. All we that are call'd Women, know as well as men, it were a far more noble thing to grace where we are grace't, and give respect there where we are respected: yet we practise a wilder course, and never bend our eyes on men with pleasure, till they find the way to give us a neglect: then we, too late, perceive the loss of what we might have had, and dote to death.

Enter Martha.

Mar. Sister, yonder's your Servant, with a Gentlewoman with him. Lady. Where?

Mar. Close at the door.

Lady. Alas I am undone, I fear he is berroth'd, What kind of woman is she?

Mar. A most ill favoured one, with her Masque on: And how her face should mend the rest I know not.

La. But yet her mind was of a milder stuff than mine was.

Enter Elder Loveless, and Welford in Womans apparel.

Lady. Now I see him, if my heart swell not again (away thou womans pride) so that I cannot speak a gentle word to him, let me not live.

Elder Lo. By your leave here.

Lady. How now, what new trick invites you hither? Ha'you a fine device again?

Elder Lo. Faith this is the finest device I have now: How dost thou sweet heart?

Wel. Why very well, so long as I may please You my dear Lover. I nor can, nor will Be ill when you are well, well when you are ill.

Elder Lo. O thy sweet temper! what would I have given, that Lady had been like thee: feelt thou her? that face (my love) join'd with thy humble mind, had made a wench indeed.

Wel. Alas my love, what God hath done, I dare not think to mend. I use no paint, nor any drugs of Art, my hands and face will shew it.

La. Why what thing have you brought to shew us there? do you take mony for it?

Elder Lo. A Godlike thing, not to be bought for mony: 'tis my Mistris: in whom there is no passion, nor no scorn: what I will is for law; pray you salute her.

Lady. Salute her? by this good light, I would not kiss her for half my wealth.

Elder Lo. Why? why pray you?

You shall see me do't afore you; look you.

Lady. Now sic upon thee, a beast would not have don't. I would not kiss thee of a month to gain a Kingdom.

Elder Lo. Marry you shall not be troubled.

Lady. Why was there ever such a Meg as this? Sure thou art mad.

Elder Lo. I was mad once, when I lov'd pictures; for what are shape and colours else, but pictures? in that tawnie hide there lies an endless mass of vertues, when all your red and white ones want it.

Lady. And this is she you are to marry, is't not?

Elder Lo. Yes indeed is't.

Lady. God give you joy. Elder Lo. Amen.

Wel. I thank you, as unknown for your good wish. The like to you when ever you shall wed.

Elder Lo. O gentle Spirit!

Lady. You thank me? I pray

Keep your breath nearer you, I do not like it.

Wel. I would not willingly offend at all, Much less a Lady of your worthie parts.

Elder Lo. Sweet, Sweet!

La. I do not think this woman can by nature be thus, Thus ugly; sure she's some common Strumpet, Deform'd with exercise of sin?

Wel. O Sir believe not this, for Heaven so comfort me as I am free from foul pollution with any man; my honour ta'ne away, I am no woman.

Elder Lo. Arise my dearest Soul; I do not credit it. Alas, I fear her tender heart will break with this reproach; fie that you know no more civility to a weak Virgin. 'Tis no matter Sweet, let her say what she will, thou art not worfe to me, and therefore not at all; be careles.

Wel. For all things else I would, but for mine honor; Me thinks.

Elder Lo. Alas, thine honour is not stain'd, Is this the business that you sent for me about?

Mar. Faith Sister you are much to blame, to use a woman, whatfoere she be, thus; I'll salute her: You are welcom hither.

Wel. I humbly thank you.

Elder Lo. Milde yet as the Dove, for all these injuries. Come shall we goe, I love thee not so ill to keep thee here a jesting stock.

Aduc to the worlds end.

Lady. Why whither now?

Elder Lo. Nay you shall never know, because you shall not find me.

Lady. I pray let me speak with you.

Elder Lo. 'Tis very well: come.

Lady. I pray you let me speak with you.

Elder Lo. Yes for another mock.

Lady. By Heaven I have no mocks: good Sir a word.

Elder Lo. Though you deserve not so much at my hands, yet if you be in such earnest, I'll speak a word with you; but I beseech you be brief: for in good faith there's a Parson and a licence stay for us i'th' Church all this while: and you know 'tis night.

Lady. Sir, give me hearing patiently, and whatsoever I have heretofore spoke jestingly, forget: for as I hope for mercy any where, what I shall utter now is from my heart, and and as I mean.

Elder Lo. Well, well, what do you mean?

Lady. Was not I once your Miltrefs, and you my Servant?

Elder Lo. O 'tis about the old matter.

Lady. Nay good Sir stay me out; I would but hear you excuse your self, why you should take this woman, and leave me.

Elder Lo. Prethee why not, deserves she not as much as you?

Lady. I think not, if you will look
With an indifferency upon us both.

Elder Lo. Upon your faces, 'tis true: but if judiciously we shall cast our eyes upon your minds, you are a thousand women of her in worth: she cannot fswound in jest, nor set her lover tasks, to shew her peevishness, and his affection, nor cross what he saies, though it be Canonical. She's a good plain wench, that will do as I will have her, and bring me lusty Boys to throw the Sledge, and lift at Pigs of Lead: and for a Wife, she's far beyond you: what can you do in a household to provide for your issue, but lye i' bed and get 'em? your business is to dress you, and at idle hours to eat; when she can do a thousand profitable things: she can do pretty well in the Pastry, and knows how Pullen should be cram'd, she cuts Cambrick at a thread, weaves Bone-lace, and quilts Balls; and what are you good for?

Lady. Admit it true, that she were far beyond me in all respects, does that give you a licence to forswear your self?

Elder Lo. Forswear my self, how?

Lady. Perhaps you have forgotten the innumerable oaths you have utter'd in disclaiming all for Wives but me: I'll not remember you: God give you joy.

Elder Lo. Nay but conceive me, the intent of oaths is ever understood: Admit I should protest to such a friend, to see him at his Lodging to morrow: Divines would never hold me perjur'd if I were struck blind, or he hid him where my diligent search could not find him: so there were no cross act of mine own in't. Can it be imagined I mean to force you to Marriage, and to have you whether you will or no?

Lady. Alas you need not. I make already tender of my self, and then you are forsworn.

Elder Lo. Some sin I see indeed must necessarily fall upon me, as whosoever deals with Women shall never utterly avoid it: yet I would chuse the least ill; which is to forsake you, that have done me all the abuses of a malignant Woman, contemn'd my service, and would have held me prating about Marriage, till I had been past getting of Children: then her that hath forsaken her Family, and put her tender body in my hand, upon my word—

Lady. Which of us swore you first to?

Elder Lo. Why to you.

Lady. Which oath is to be kept then?

Elder Lo. I prethee do not urge my sins unto me, Without I could amend 'em.

Lady. Why you may by wedding me.

Elder Lo. How will that satisfie my word to her?

Lady. 'Tis not to be kept, and needs no satisfaction, 'Tis an error fit for repentance only.

Elder Lo. Shall I live to wrong that tender hearted Virgin so? It may not be.

Lady. Why may it not be?

Elder Lo. I swear I had rather marry thee than her: but yet mine honesty?

Lady. What honesty? 'Tis more preserv'd this way: Come, by this light, servant, thou shalt, I'll kiss thee on't.

Elder Lo. This kiss indeed is sweet, pray God no sin lie under it.

Lady. There is no sin at all, try but another.

Wel. O my heart!

Mar. Help Sister, this Lady fswounds.

Elder Lo. How do you?

Wel. Why very well, if you be so.

Elder Lo. Since a quiet mind lives not in any Woman, I shall do a most ungodly thing. Hear me one word more, which by all my hopes I will not alter, I did make an oath when you delai'd me so, that this very night I would be married. Now if you will go without delay, suddenly, as late as it is, with your own Minister to your own Chappel, I'll wed you and to bed.

Lady. A match dear servant.

Elder Lo. For if you should forsake me now, I care not, she would not though for all her injuries, such is her spirit. If I be not ashamed to kiss her now I part, may I not live.

Wel. I see you go, as sily as you think to steal away: yet I will pray for you; all blessings of the world light on you two, that you may live to be an aged pair. All curses on me if I do not speak what I do wish indeed.

Elder Lo. If I can speak to purpose to her, I am a villain.

Lady. Servant away.

Mar. Sister, will you Marry that inconstant man? think you he will not cast you off to morrow, to wrong a Lady thus, lookt she like dirt, 'twas basely done. May you ne're prosper with him.

Wel. Now God forbid. Alas I was unworthy, so I told him.

Mar. That was your modesty, too good for him. I would not see your wedding for a world.

Lady. Chuse chuse, come Younglove.

[Exit La. Elder Lo. and Young.

Mar. Dry up your eyes forsooth, you shall not think we are all such uncivil beasts as these. Would I knew how to give you a revenge.

Wel. So would not I: No let me suffer truly, that I desire.

Mar. Pray walk in with me, 'tis very late, and you shall stay all night: your bed shall be no worse than mine; I wish I could but do you right.

Wel. my humble thanks:

God grant I may but live to quit your love. [Exeunt.

Enter Young Loveless and Savil.

Young Lo. Did your Master send for me Savil?

Sav. Yes, he did send for your worship Sir.

Young Lo. Do you know the business?

Sav. Alas Sir, I know nothing, nor am employed beyond my hours of eating. My dancing days are done Sir.

Young Lo. What art thou now then?

Sav. If you consider me in little, I am with your worships reverence Sir, a Rascal: one that upon the next anger of your Brother, must raise a sconce by the high way, and sell switches; my wife is learning now Sir, to weave inkle.

Young Lo. What dost thou mean to do with thy Children Savil?

Sav. My eldest boy is half a Rogue already, he was born bursten, and your worship knows, that is a pretty step to mens compassions. My youngest boy I purpose Sir to bind for ten years to a Goaler, to draw under him, that he may shew us mercy in his function.

Young Lo. Your family is quartered with discretion: you are resolv'd to Cant then: where Savil shall your scene lie?

Sav. Beggars must be no chusers.

In every place (I take it) but the stocks.

Young Lo. This is your drinking, and your whoring Savil, I told you of it, but your heart was hardened.

Sav. 'Tis true, you were the first that told me of it I do remember yet in tears, you told me you would have Whores, and in that passion Sir, you broke out thus; Thou miserable man, repent, and brew three Strikes more in a Hoghead. 'Tis noon e're we be drunk now, and the time can tarry for no man.

Young Lo. Y're grown a bitter Gentleman. I see misery can clear your head better than Mustard, I'll be a sutor for your Keys again Sir.

Sav. Will you but be so gracious to me Sir? I shall be bound.

Young Lo. You shall Sir

To your bunch again, or I'll miss foully.

Enter

Enter Morecraft.

Mor. Save you Gentleman, fave you.

Young Lo. Now Polcat, what young Rabets nest have you to draw?

Mor. Come, prethee be familiar Knight.

Young Lo. Away Fox, I'll send for Terriers for you.

Mor. Thou art wide yet: I'll keep thee companie.

Young Lo. I am about some busines; Indentures, If ye follow me I'll beat you: take heed, A I live I'll cancel your Coxcomb.

Mor. Thou art cozen'd now, I am no usurer: What poor fellow's this?

Savil. I am poor indeed Sir.

Mor. Give him mony Knight.

Young Lo. Do you begin the offering.

Mor. There poor fellow, here's an Angel for thee.

Young Lo. Art thou in earnest Morecraft?

Mor. Yes faith Knight, I'll follow thy example: thou hadst land and thousands, thou spendst, and flungst away, and yet it flows in double: I purchas'd, wrung, and wiewdraw'd, for my wealth, lost, and was cozen'd: for which I make a vow, to trie all the waies above ground, but I'll find a constant means to riches without curses.

Young Lo. I am glad of your conversion Master Morecraft: Y'are in a fair course, pray pursue it still.

Mor. Come, we are all gallants now, I'll keep thee companie; Here honest fellow, for this Gentlemans sake, there's two Angels more for thee.

Savil. God quite you Sir, and keep you long in this mind.

Young Lo. Wilt thou persevere?

Mor. Till I have a penny. I have brave cloathes a making, and two horses; canst thou not help me to a match Knight, I'll lay a thousand pound upon my crop-ear.

Yo. Lo. Foot, this is stranger than an Africk monster, There will be no more talk of the Cleve wars Whilst this lasts, come, I'll put thee into blood.

Sav. Would all his damn'd tribe were as tender hearted. I beseech you let this Gentleman join with you in the recovery of my Keyes; I like his good beginning Sir, the whilst I'll pray for both your worships.

Young Lo. He shall Sir.

Mor. Shall we goe noble Knight? I would fain be acquainted.

Young Lo. I'll be your servant Sir. [Exeunt.]

Enter Elder Loveless, and Lady.

Elder Lo. Faith my sweet Lady, I have caught you now, maugre your subtilties, and fine devices, be coy again now.

Lady. Prethee sweet-heart tell true.

Elder Lo. By this light, by all the pleasures I have had this night, by your lost maidenhead, you are cozened meerly. I have cast beyond your wit. That Gentleman is your retainer Welford. Lady. It cannot be so.

Elder Lo. Your Sister has found it so, or I mistake, mark how she blushes when you see her next. Ha, ha, ha, I shall not travel now, ha, ha, ha.

Lady. Prethee sweet heart be quiet, thou hast angred me at heart.

Elder Lo. I'll please you soon again. La. Welford?

Elder Lo. I Welford, hee's a young handsome fellow, well bred and landed, your Sister can instruct you in his good parts, better than I by this time.

Lady. Uds foot am I fetcht over thus?

Elder Lo. Yes i'faith.

And over shall be fetcht again, never fear it.

Lady. I must be patient, though it torture me: You have got the Sun Sir.

Elder Lo. And the Moon too, in which I'll be the man.

Lady. But had I known this, had I but surmiz'd it, you should have hunted three trains more, before you had come toth' course, you should have hankt o'th' bridle, Sir, i'faith.

El. Lo. I knew it, and min'd with you, and so blew you up. Now you may see the Gentiewoman: stand close.

Enter Welford, and Martha.

Mar. For Gods sake Sir, be private in this busines, You have undone me else. O God, what have I done?

Wel. No harm I warrant thee.

Mar. How shall I look upon my friends again? With what face?

Wel. Why e'ne with that: 'tis a good one, thou canst not find a better: look upon all the faces thou shalt see there, and you shall find 'em smooth still, fair still, sweet still, and to your thinking honest; those have done as much as you have yet, or dare doe Mistris, and yet they keep no stir.

Mar. Good Sir goe in, and put your womans cloaths on: If you be seen thus, I am lost for ever.

Wel. I'll watch you for that Mistris: I am no fool, here will I tarry till the house be up and witness with me.

Mar. Good dear friend goe in.

Wel. To bed again if you please, else I am fixt here till there be notice taken what I am, and what I have done: if you could juggle me into my woman-hood again, and so cog me out of your company, all this would be forsworn, and I again an asinego, as your Sister left me. No, I'll have it known and publisht; then if you'll be a whore, forsake me and be ashamed: and when you can hold no longer, marry some cast Cleve Captain, and sell Bottle-ale.

Mar. I dare not stay Sir, use me modestly, I am your wife.

Wel. Goe in, I'll make up all.

Elder Lo. I'll be a witness of your naked truth Sir: this is the Gentiewoman, prethee look upon him, this is he that made me break my faith sweet: but thank your Sister, she hath soder'd it.

Lady. What a dull ass was I, I could not see this wencher from a wench: twenty to one, if I had been but tender like my Sister, he had served me such a slippery trick too.

Wel. Twenty to one I had.

Elder Lo. I would have watcht you Sir, by your good patience, for ferreting in my ground.

Lady. You have been with my Sister.

Wel. Yes to bring.

Elder Lo. An heir into the world he means.

Lady. There is no chafing now.

Wel. I have had my part on't: I have been chafst this three hours, that's the least, I am reasonable cool now.

Lady. Cannot you fare well, but you must cry roast-meat?

Wel. He that fares well, and will not blest the founders, is either surfeited, or ill taught, Lady, for mine own part, I have found so sweet a diet, I can commend it, though I cannot spare it.

Elder Lo. How like you this dish, Welford, I made a supper on't, and fed so heartily, I could not sleep.

Lady. By this light, had I but scented out your turn, ye had slept with a bare pillow in your arms and kist that, or else the bed-post, for any wife ye had got this twelve-month yet: I would have vext you more than a try'd post-horse; and been longer bearing, than ever after-game at Irish was. Lord, that I were unmarried again.

Elder Lo. Lady I would not undertake ye, were you again a Haggard; for the best cast of four Ladys i'th' Kingdom: you were ever tickle-footed, and would not trufs round.

Wel. Is she fast?

Elder Lo. She was all night lockt here boy.

Wel. Then you may lure her without fear of losing: take off her Cranes. You have a delicate Gentiewoman to your Sister: Lord what a prettie furie she was in, when she perceived I was a man: but I thank God I satisfied her scruple, without the Parson o'th' town.

Elder Lo. What did ye?

Wel. Madam, can you tell what we did?

Elder Lo. She has a shrewd guess at it I see it by her.

Lady. Well you may mock us: but my large Gentiewoman, my Mary Ambre; had I but seen into you, you should have had another bed-fellow, fitter a great deal for your itch.

Wel. I thank you Lady, me thought it was well, You are so curious.

Enter Young Loveless, his Lady, Morecraft, Savil, and two Servingmen.

El. Lo. Get on your doublet, here comes my Brother.

Yo. Lo. Good morrow Brother, and all good to your Lady.

Mor. God save you and good morrow to you all.

El. Lo. Good morrow. Here's a poor brother of yours.

Lady. Fie how this shames me.

Mor. Prethee good fellow help me to a cup of beer.

Scr. I will Sir.

Yo. Lo. Brother what makes you here? will this Lady do?
Will she? is she not nett'd still?

Elder Lo. No I have cur'd her.

Mr. Welford, pray know this Gentleman is my Brother.

Wel. Sir I shall long to love him.

Yo. Lo. I shall not be your debter Sir. But how is't with you?

Elder Lo. As well as may be man: I am married: your new acquaintance hath her Sister, and all's well.

Yo. Lo. I am glad on't. Now my prettie Lady Sister,
How do you find my Brother?

Lady. Almost as wild as you are.

Yo. Lo. He will make the better husband: you have tried him?

Lady. Against my will Sir.

Yo. Lo. Hee'l make your will amends soon, do not doubt it.

But Sir I must intreat you to be better known

To this converted Jew here.

Scr. Here's Beer for you Sir.

Mor. And here's for you an Angel:

Pray buy no Land, 'twill never prosper Sir.

Elder Lo. How's this?

Yo. Lo. Bless you, and then I'll tell: He's turn'd Gallant.

Elder Lo. Gallant?

Yo. Lo. I Gallant, and is now called, Cutting Morecraft:
The reason I'll inform you at more leisure.

Wel. O good Sir let me know him presently.

Young Lo. You shall hug one another.

Mor. Sir I must keep you company.

Elder Lo. And reason.

Young Lo. Cutting Morecraft faces about, I must present another.

Mor. As many as you will Sir, I am for 'em.

Wel. Sir I shall do you service.

Mor. I shall look for't in good faith Sir.

Elder Lo. Prethee good sweet heart kifs him.

Lady. Who, that fellow?

Savil. Sir will it please you to remember me: my keys good Sir.

Young Lo. I'll do it presently.

El. Lo. Come thou shalt kifs him for our sport sake.

La. Let him come on then; and do you hear, do not instruct me in these tricks, for you may repent it.

El. Lo. That at my peril. Lusty Mr. Morecraft,
Here is a Lady would salute you.

Mor. She shall not lose her longing Sir: what is she?

Elder Lo. My wife Sir.

Mor. She must be then my Mistres.

Lady. Must I Sir? Elder Lo. O yes, you must.

Mor. And you must take this ring, a poor pawn

Of some fiftie pound.

El. Lo. Take it by any means, 'tis lawfull prize.

Lady. Sir I shall call you servant.

Mor. I shall be proud on't: what fellow's that?

Young Lo. My Ladies Coachman.

Mor. There's something, (my friend) for you to buy whips,
And for you Sir, and you Sir.

Elder Lo. Under a miracle this is the strangest
I ever heard of.

Mor. What, shall we play, or drink? what shall we doe?
Who will hunt with me for a hundred pounds?

Wel. Stranger and Stranger!

Sir you shall find sport after a day or two.

Young Lo. Sir I have a fute unto you

Concerning your old servant Savil.

Elder Lo. O, for his keys, I know it.

Savil. Now Sir, strike in.

Mor. Sir I must have you grant me.

Elder Lo. 'Tis done Sir, take your keys again:

But hark you Savil, leave off the motions

Of the flesh, and be honest, or else you shall graze again:

I'll try you once more.

Savil. If ever I be taken drunk, or whoring,
Take off the biggest key i'th' bunch, and open

My head with it Sir: I humbly thank your worships.

Elder Lo. Nay then I see we must keep holiday.

Enter Roger, and Abigal.

Here's the last couple in hell.

Roger. Joy be among you all.

Lady. Why how now Sir, what is the meaning of this emblem?

Roger. Marriage an't like your worship.

Lady. Are you married?

Roger. As well as the next Priest could doe it, Madam.

Elder Lo. I think the sign's in Gemini, here's such coupling.

Wel. Sir Roger, what will you take to lie from your sweet-heart to night?

Roger. Not the best benifice in your worships gift Sir.

Wel. A whorson, how he swells.

Young Lo. How many times to night Sir Roger?

Roger. Sir you grow scurrilous:

What I shall do, I shall do: I shall not need your help.

Young Lo. For horse flesh Roger.

Elder Lo. Come prethee be not angry, 'tis a day
Given wholly to our mirth.

Lady. It shall be so Sir: Sir Roger and his Bride,
We shall intreat to be at our charge.

El. Lo. Welford get you to the Church: by this light,
You shall not lie with her again, till y'are married.

Wel. I am gone.

Mor. To every Bride I dedicate this day
Six healths a piece, and it shall goe hard,
But every one a jewell: Come be mad boys.

El. Lo. Th'art in a good beginning: come who leads?
Sir Roger, you shall have the Van: lead the way:

Would every dogged wench had such a day.

[Exeunt.]

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Rutilio, and Arnolde.

Rut. WHY do you grieve thus still?
Arn. 'Twould melt a Marble,
 And tame a Savage man, to feel my fortune.
Rut. What fortune? I have liv'd this thirty years,
 And run through all these follies you call fortunes,
 Yet never fixt on any good and constant,
 But what I made my self: why should I grieve then
 At that I may mould any way?
Arn. You are wide still.
Rut. You love a Gentlewoman, a young handsom woman,
 I have lov'd a thousand, not so few.
Arn. You are dispos'd.
Rut. You hope to Marry her; 'tis a lawful calling
 And prettily esteem'd of, but take heed then,
 Take heed dear Brother of a stranger fortune
 Than e're you felt yet; fortune my foe is a friend to it.
Arn. 'Tis true I love, dearly, and truly love,
 A noble, vertuous, and most beauteous Maid,
 And am belov'd again.
Rut. That's too much o' Conscience,
 To love all these would run me out o' my wits.

Arn. Prethee give ear, I am to Marry her.
Rut. Dispatch it then, and I'll go call the Piper.
Arn. But O the wicked Custom of this Country,
 The barbarous, most inhumane, damned Custom.
Rut. 'Tis true, to marry is a Custom
 I' the world; for look you Brother,
 Wou'd any man stand plucking for the Ace of Harts,
 With one pack of Cards all dayes on's life?
Arn. You do not
 Or else you purpose not to understand me.
Rut. Proceed, I will give ear.
Arn. They have a Custom
 In this most beastly Country, out upon't.
Rut. Let's hear it first.
Arn. That when a Maid is contracted
 And ready for the tye o'th' Church, the Governour;
 He that commands in chief, must have her Maiden-head;
 Or Ransom it for mony at his pleasure.
Rut. How might a man atchieve that place? a rare Custom!
 An admirable rare Custom: and none excepted?
Arn. None, none.

Rut. The rarer still: how could I lay about me,
In this rare Office? are they born to it, or chosen?

Arn. Both equal damnable.

Rut. Me thinks both excellent,
Would I were the next heir.

Arn. To this mad fortune
Am I now come, my Marriage is proclaim'd,
And nothing can redeem me from this mischief.

Rut. She's very young.

Arn. Yes.

Rut. And fair I dare proclaim her,
Ere mine eyes fail.

Arn. Fair as the bud unblasted.

Rut. I cannot blame him then, if 'twere mine own case,
I would not go an Ace less.

Arn. Eye Rutilio,

Why do you make your brothers misery
Your sport and game?

Rut. There is no pastime like it.

Arn. I look'd for your advice, your timely Counsel,
How to avoid this blow, not to be mockt at,
And my afflictions jeer'd.

Rut. I tell thee Arnoldo,
An thou wert my Father, as thou art but my Brother,
My younger Brother too, I must be merry.
And where there is a wench yet can, a young wench,
A handsome wench, and sooner a good turn too,
An I were to be hang'd, thus must I handle it.
But you shall see Sir, I can change this habit
To do you any service; advise what you please,
And see with what Devotion I'll attend it?
But yet me thinks, I am taken with this Custom,

Enter Charino and Zenocia.

And could pretend to th' place.

Arn. Draw off a little;
Here comes my Mistress and her Father.

Rut. A dainty wench!
Wou'd I might farm his Custom.

Char. My dear Daughter,
Now to bethink your self of new advice
Will be too late, later this timeless sorrow,
No price, nor prayers, can infringe the fate
Your beauty hath cast on you, my best Zenocia,
Be rul'd by me, a Fathers care directs ye,
Look on the Count, look chearfully and sweetly;
What though he have the power to possess ye,
To pluck your Maiden honour, and then slight ye
By Custom unresistible to enjoy you;
Yet my sweet Child, so much your youth and goodness,
The beauty of your soul, and Saint-like Modesty,
Have won upon his mild mind, so much charm'd him,
That all power laid aside, what Law allows him,
Or sudden fires, kindled from those bright eyes,
He sues to be your servant, fairly, nobly
For ever to be tyed your faithful Husband:
Consider my best child.

Zeno. I have considered.

Char. The blessedness that this breeds too, consider
Besides your Fathers Honour, your own peace,
The banishment for ever of this Custom,
This base and barbarous use, for after once
He has found the happiness of holy Marriage,
And what it is to grow up with one Beauty,
How he will scorn and kick at such an heritage
Left him by lust and lewd progenitors.

All Virgins too, shall bless your name, shall Saint it,
And like so many Pilgrims go to your shrine,
When time has turn'd your beauty into ashes,
Fill'd with your pious memory.

Zeno. Good Father
Hide not that bitter Pill I loath to swallow
In such sweet words.

Char. The Count's a handsome Gentleman,

And having him, y'are certain of a fortune,
A high and noble fortune to attend you:
Where if you sling your Love upon this stranger
This young Arnoldo, not knowing from what place
Or honourable strain of blood he is sprung, you venture
All your own sweets, and my long cares to nothing,
Nor are you certain of his faith; why may not that Wander as he does, every where?

Zen. No more Sir;

I must not hear, I dare not hear him wrong'd thus,
Vertue is never wounded, but I suffer.
'Tis an ill Office in your age, a poor one,
To judge thus weakly: and believe your self too,
A weaker, to betray your innocent Daughter,
To his intemperate, rude, and wild embraces,
She hates as Heaven hates falshood.

Rut. A good wench,
She sticks close to you Sir,

Zeno. His faith uncertain?

The nobleness his vertue springs from, doubted?
D'ye doubt it is day now? or when your body's perfect,
Your stomach's well dispos'd, your pulse's temperate,
D'ye doubt you are in health? I tell you Father,
One hour of this mans goodness, this mans Nobleness
Put in the Scale, against the Counts whole being,
Forgive his lusts too, which are half his life,
He could no more endure to hold weight with him;
Arnoldo's very looks, are fair examples;
His common and indifferent actions,
Rules and strong ties of vertue: he has my first love,
To him in sacred vow I have given this body,
In him my mind inhabits.

Rut. Good wench still.

Zeno. And till he sling me off, as undeserving,
Which I confess I am, of such a blessing,
But would be loth to find it fo——

Arn. O never;
Never my happy Mistress, never, never,
When your poor servant lives but in your favour,
One foot i'th' grave the other shall not linger.
What sacrifice of thanks, what age of service,
What danger, of more dreadful look than death,
What willing Martyrdom to crown me constant
May merit such a goodness, such a sweetness?
A love so Nobly great, no power can ruine;
Most blessed Maid go on, the Gods that gave this,
This pure unspotted love, the Child of Heaven,
In their own goodness, must preserve and save it,
And raise you a reward beyond our recompence.

Zeno. I ask but you, a pure Maid to possess,
And then they have crown'd my wishes: If I fall then Go seek some better love, mine will debase you.

Rut. A pretty innocent fool; well, Governour,
Though I think well of your custom, and could wish my self
For this night in your place, heartily wish it:
Yet if you play not fair play and above board too,
I have a foolish gin here, I say no more;
I'll tell you what, and if your honours guts are not enchanted.

Arn. I should now chide you Sir, for so declining
The goodness and the grace you have ever shew'd me,
And your own vertue too, in seeking rashly
To violate that love Heaven has appointed,
To wrest your Daughters thoughts, part that affection
That both our hearts have tyed, and seek to give it

Rut. To a wild fellow, that would weary her;
A Cannibal, that feeds on the heads of Maids,
Then flings their bones and bodies to the Devil,
Would any man of discretion venture such a gristle,
To the rude claws of such a Cat-a-mountain?
You had better tear her between two Oaks, a Town Bull
Is a meer Stoick to this fellow, a grave Philosopher,
And a Spanish Jennet, a most vertuous Gentleman.

Arn. Does this seem handsome Sir?

Rut. Though I confess

Any man would desire to have her, and by any means,
 At any rate too, yet that this common Hangman,
 That hath whipt off the heads of a thousand maids already,
 That he should glean the Harvest, sticks in my stomach:
 This Rogue breaks young wenches to the Saddle,
 And teaches them to stumble ever after;
 That he should have her? for my Brother now
 That is a handsome young fellow; and well thought on,
 And will deal tenderly in the business;
 Or for my self that have a reputation,
 And have studied the conclusions of these causes,
 And know the perfect manage, I'll tell you old Sir,
 If I should call you wise Sir, I should bely you,
 This thing, you study to betray your child to,
 This Maiden monger. When you have done your best,
 And think you have fixt her in the point of honour,
 Who do you think you have tyed her to? a Surgeon,
 I must confess an excellent dissector,
 One that has cut up more young tender Lamb-pies——

Char. What I spake Gentlemen, was meer compulsion,
 No Fathers free-will, nor did I touch your person
 With any edge of spight; or strain your loves
 With any base, or hir'd persuasions;
 Witness these tears, how well I wisht your fortunes. [Exit.

Rut. There's some grace in thee yet, you are determined
 To marry this Count, Lady.

Zen. Marry him Rutilio?

Rut. Marry him, and lye with him I mean.

Zen. You cannot mean that,
 If you be a true Gentleman, you dare not,
 The Brother to this man, and one that loves him;
 I'll marry the Devil first.

Rut. A better choice
 And lay his horns by, a handsomer bed-fellow,
 A cooler o' my conscience.

Arn. Pray let me ask you;
 And my dear Mistris, be not angry with me
 For what I shall propound, I am confident,
 No promise, nor no power, can force your love,
 I mean in way of marriage, never stir you,
 Nor to forget my faith, no state can wound you.
 But for this Custom, which this wretched country
 Hath wrought into a law, and must be satisfied;
 Where all the pleas of honour are but laught at,
 And modesty regarded as a may-game,
 What shall be here considered? power we have none,
 To make resistance, nor policie to cross it:
 'Tis held Religion too, to pay this duty.

Zeno. I'll dye an Atheist then.

Arn. My noblest Mistris,
 Not that I wish it so, but say it were so,
 Say you did render up part of your honour,
 For whilst your will is clear, all cannot perish;
 Say for one night you entertain'd this monster,
 Should I esteem you worse, forc'd to this render?
 Your mind I know is pure, and full as beauteous;
 After this short eclipse, you would rise again,
 And shaking off that cloud, spread all your lustre.

Zeno. Who made you witty, to undoe your self, Sir?
 Or are you loaden, with the love I bring you,
 And fain would sling that burthen on another?
 Am I grown common in your eyes Arnoldo?
 Old, or unworthy of your fellowship?
 D'ye think because a woman, I must err,
 And therefore rather wish that fall before-hand
 Coloured with Custom, not to be resisted?
 D'ye love as painters doe, only some pieces,
 Some certain handsome touches of your Mistris,
 And let the mind pass by you, unexamined?
 Be not abus'd; with what the maiden vessel
 Is seasoned first, you understand the proverb.

Rut. I am afraid, this thing will make me vertuous.

Zeno. Should you lay by the least part of that love
 Y'ave sworn is mine, your youth and faith has given me,

To entertain another, nay a fairer,
 And make the case thus desp'rate, she must dy else;
 D'ye think I would give way, or count this honest?
 Be not deceiv'd, these eyes should never see you more,
 This tongue forget to name you, and this heart
 Hate you, as if you were born, my full Antipathie.
Empire and more imperious love, alone
 Rule, and admit no rivals: the purest springs
 When they are courted by lascivious land-floods,
 Their maiden pureness, and their coolness perish.
 And though they purge again to their first beauty,
 The sweetness of their taste is clean departed.
 I must have all or none; and am not worthy
 Longer the noble name of wife, Arnoldo,
 Than I can bring a whole heart pure and handfom.

Arnol. I never shall deserve you: not to thank you;
 You are so heavenly good, no man can reach you:
 I am sorrie I spake so rashly, 'twas but to try you.

Rut. You might have tryed a thousand women so, (fel.
 And 900, fourscore and 19 should ha'followed your coun-
 Take heed o' clapping spurrs to such free cattell.

Arn. We must bethink us suddenly and constantly,
 And wisely too, we expect no common danger.

Zen. Be most assur'd, I'll dye first.

Enter Clodio, and Guard.

Rut. An't come to that once,
 The Devil pick his bones, that dyes a coward,
 I'll jog along with you, here comes the Stallion,
 How smug he looks upon the imagination
 Of what he hopes to act? pox on your kidneys;
 How they begin to melt? how big he bears,
 Sure he will leap before us all: what a sweet company
 Of rogues and panders wait upon his lewdness?
 Plague of your chops, you ha'more handsome bits,
 Than a hundred honest men, and more deserving.
 How the dogg leers.

Clod. You need not now be jealous, (done,
 I speak at distance to your wife, but when the Priest has
 We shall grow nearer, and more familiar.

Rut. I'll watch you for that trick, baboon, I'll Smoke you: the rogue sweats, as if he had eaten
 Grains, he broyles, if I do come to the Basting of you.

Arno. Your Lordship
 May happily speak this, to fright a stranger,
 But 'tis not in your honour, to perform it;
 The Custom of this place, if such there be,
 At best most damnable, may urge you to it,
 But if you be an honest man you hate it,
 However I will presently prepare
 To make her mine, and most undoubtedly
 Believe you are abus'd, this custome feign'd too,
 And what you now pretend, most fair and vertuous.

Clod. Go and believe, a good belief does well Sir;
 And you Sir, clear the place, but leave her here.

Arn. Your Lordships pleasure.

Clod. That anon Arnoldo,
 This is but talk.

Rut. Shall we goe off?

Arn. By any means,
 I know she has pious thoughts enough to guard her:
 Besides, here's nothing due to him till the tye be done,
 Nor dare he offer.

Rut. Now do I long to worry him:
 Pray have a care to the main chance. [Exit. Ar. and Rut.

Zen. Pray Sir, fear not.

Clod. Now, what say you to me?

Zen. Sir it becomes
 The modestie, that maids are ever born with,
 To use few words.

Clod. Do you see nothing in me?
 Nothing to catch your eyes, nothing of wonder
 The common mould of men, come short, and want in?

Do you read no future fortune for your self here?
 And what a happiness it may be to you,
 To have him honour you, all women aim at?
 To have him love you Lady, that man love you,
 The best, and the most beauteous have run mad for?
 Look and be wise, you have a favour offer'd you
 I do not every day propound to women;
 You are a prettie one; and though each hour
 I am glutted with the sacrifice of beautie,
 I may be brought, as you may handle it,
 To cast so good a grace and liking on you.
 You understand, come kifs me, and be joyfull,
 I give you leave.

Zen. Faith Sir, 'twill not shew handsome;
 Our sex is blushing, full of fear, unskil'd too
 In these alarms.

Clod. Learn then and be perfect.

Zen. I do beseech your honour pardon me,
 And take some skilfull one can hold you play,
 I am a fool.

Clod. I tell thee maid I love thee,
 Let that word make thee happy, so far love thee,
 That though I may enjoy thee without ceremony,
 I will descend so low, to marry thee,
 Me thinks I see the race that shall spring from us,
 Some Princes, some great Souldiers.

Zen. I am afraid
 Your honour's couzen'd in this calculation;
 For certain, I shall ne're have a child by you.

Clod. Why?

Zen. Because I must not think to marry you,
 I dare not Sir, the step betwixt your honour,
 And my poor humble State.

Clod. I will descend to thee,
 And buoy thee up.

Zen. P'le sink to th' Center first. (sure
 Why would your Lordship marry, and confine that plea-
 You ever have had freely cast upon you?
 Take heed my Lord, this marrying is a mad matter,
 Lighter a pair of shackles will hang on you,
 And quieter a quartane feaver find you.
 If you wcd me I must enjoy you only,
 Your eyes must be called home, your thoughts in cages,
 To sing to no ears then but mine; your heart bound,
 The custom, that your youth was ever nurs'd in,
 Must be forgot, I shall forget my duty else,
 And how that will appear—

Clod. Wee'l talk of that more.

Zen. Besides I tell ye, I am naturally,
 As all young women are, that shew like handsome,
 Exceeding proud, being commended, monstrous.
 Of an unquiet temper, seldom pleas'd,
 Unless it be with infinite observance,
 Which you were never bred to; once well angred,
 As every cross in us, provokes that passion,
 And like a Sea, I roule, tofs, and chafe a week after.
 And then all mischief I can think upon,
 Abusing of your bed the least and poorest,
 I tell you what you're finde, and in these fitts,
 This little beauty you are pleas'd to honour,
 Will be so chang'd, so alter'd to an ugliness,
 To such a vizard, ten to one, I dye too,
 Take't then upon my death you murder'd me.

Clod. Away, away fool, why dost thou proclame these
 To prevent that in me, thou hast chosen in another?

Zen. Him I have chosen, I can rule and master,
 Temper to what I please, you are a great one
 Of a strong will to bend, I dare not venture.
 Bewise my Lord and say you were well counsel'd,
 Take money for my ransom, and forget me,
 'Twill be both safe, and noble for your honour,
 And wheresoever my fortunes shall conduct me,
 So worthy mentions I shall render of you,
 So vertuous and so fair.

Clod. You will not marrie me?

Zen. I do beseech your honour, be not angry
 At what I say, I cannot love ye, dare not;
 But set a ransom, for the flowr you covet.

Clod. No mony, nor no prayers, shall redeem that,
 Not all the art you have.

Zen. Set your own price Sir.

Clod. Goe to your wedding, never kneel to me,
 When that's done, you are mine, I will enjoy you:
 Your tears do nothing, I will not lose my custom
 To cast upon my self an Empires fortune. [Exit.

Zen. My mind shall not pay this custom, cruel man.

Clod. Your body will content me: I'le look for you. [Ex.

Enter Charino, and servants in blacks. Covering the place with blacks.

Char. Strew all your withered flowers, your Autumn
 By the hot Sun ravisht of bud and beauty (sweets
 Thus round about her Bride-bed, hang those blacks there
 The emblems of her honour lost; all joy
 That leads a Virgin to receive her lover,
 Keep from this place, all fellow-maids that bless her,
 And blushing do unloose her Zone, keep from her:
 No merry noise nor lusty songs be heard here,
 Nor full cups crown'd with wine make the rooms giddy;
 This is no masque of mirth, but murdered honour.
 Sing mournfully that sad Epithalamion
 I gave thee now: and prethee let thy lute weep.

Song, Dance. Enter Rutilio.

Rut. How now, what livery's this? do you call this a
 This is more like a funeral. (wedding?)

Char. It is one,
 And my poor Daughter going to her grave,
 To his most loath'd embraces that gapes for her.
 Make the Earles bed readie, is the marriage done Sir?
 Rut. Yes they are knit; but must this slubber degullion
 Have her maiden-head now?

Arn. There's no avoiding it?

Rut. And there's the scaffold where she must lose it.

Arn. The bed Sir.

Rut. No way to wipe his mouldy chaps?

Char. That we know.

Rut. To any honest well-deserving fellow,
 And 'twere but to a merry Cobler, I could sit still now,
 I love the game so well; but that this puckfist,
 This universal rutter—fare ye well Sir;
 And if you have any good prayers, put 'em forward,
 There may be yet a remedie.

Char. I wish it, [Exit Rut.
 And all my best devotions offer to it.

Enter Clodio, and Guard.

Clod. Now is this tye dispatch'd?

Char. I think it be Sir.

Clod. And my bed ready?

Char. There you may quickly find Sir,
 Such a loath'd preparation.

Clod. Never grumble,
 Nor sling a discontent upon my pleasure,
 It must and shall be done: give me some wine,
 And fill it till it leap upon my lips:
 Here's to the foolish maidenhead you wot of,
 The toy I must take pains for.

Char. I beseech your Lordship
 Load not a Fathers love.

Clod. Pledge it Charino,
 Or by my life I'le make thee pledge thy last,
 And be sure she be a maid, a perfect Virgin,
 (I will not have my expectation dull'd)
 Or your old pate goes off. I am hot and fiery,
 And my blond beats alarms through my body,
 And fancie high. You of my guard retire,
 And let me hear no noise about the lodging

But

But musick and sweet ayres, now fetch your Daughter,
And bid the coy wench put on all her beauties,
All her enticements, out-blush damask Roses,
And dim the breaking East with her bright Crystals.
I am all on fire, away.

Char. And I am frozen.

[Exit.

Enter Zenocia with Bow and Quiver, an Arrow bent,
Arnoldo and Rutilio after her, arm'd.

Zen. Come fearless on.

Rut. Nay an I budge from thee
Beat me with dirty sticks.

Clod. What Masque is this?

What pretty fancy to provoke me high?
The beauteous Huntress, fairer far, and sweeter;
Diana shewes an Ethiop to this beauty
Protected by two Virgin Knights.

Rut. That's a lye,
A loud one, if you knew as much as I do,
The Guard's dispers'd.

Arn. Fortune I hope invites us.

Clod. I can no longer hold, she pulls my heart from me.

Zen. Stand, and stand fixt, move not a foot, nor speak not,
For if thou doest, upon this point thy death fits.

Thou miserable, base, and fordid lecher,
Thou scum of noble blood, repent and speedily,
Repent thy thousand thefts, from helpless Virgins,
Their innocence betrayed to thy embraces.

Arn. The base dishonour, that thou doest to strangers,
In glorying to abuse the Laws of Marriage,
Thy Infamy thou hast slung upon thy Country,
In nourishing this black and barbarous Custom.

Clod. My Guard.

Arn. One word more, and thou diest.

Rut. One syllable

That tends to any thing, but I beseech you,
And as y'are Gentlemen tender my case,
And I'll thrust my Javeling down thy throat.
Thou Dog-whelp, thou, pox upon thee, what Should I call thee, Pompion,

Thou kists my Lady? thou scour her Chamber-pot:
Thou have a Maiden-head? a mottly Coat,
You great blind fool, farewell and be hang'd to ye,
Lose no time Lady.

Arn. Pray take your pleasure Sir,
And so we'll take our leaves.

Zen. We are determin'd,
Dye, before yield.

Arn. Honour, and a fair grave.

Zen. Before a lustful Bed, so for our fortunes.

Rut. Du cat awhee, good Count, cry, prethee cry,
O what a wench hast thou lost? cry you great booby. [Exe.

Enter Charino.

Clod. And is she gone then, am I dishonoured thus,
Cozened and baff'd? my Guard there, no man answer?
My Guard I say, firrah you knew of this plot;
Where are my Guard? I'll have your life you villain,
You politick old Thief.

Char. Heaven fend her far enough,

Enter Guard.

And let me pay the ransom.

Guard. Did your honour call us?

Clod. Post every way, and presently recover
The two strange Gentlemen, and the fair Lady.

Guard. This day was Married Sir?

Clod. The same.

Guard. We saw 'em
Making with all main speed to th' Port.

Clod. Away villains.

Recover her, or I shall dye; deal truly,
Didst not thou know?

Char. By all that's good I did not.

[Exit Guard.

If your honour mean their flight, to say I grieve for that,
Will be to lye; you may handle me as you please.

Clod. Be sure, with all the cruelty, with all the rigor,
For thou hast rob'd me villain of a treasure.

Enter Guard.

How now?

Guard. They're all aboard, a Bark rode ready for 'em,
And now are under Sail, and past recovery:

Clod. Rig me a Ship with all the speed that may be;
I will not lose her: thou her most false Father,
Shalt go along; and if I miss her, hear me,
A whole day will I study to destroy thee.

Char. I shall be joyful of it; and so you'll find me.

[Exeunt omnes.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Manuel du sofa, and Guiomar.

Man. I Hear and see too much of him, and that Compels me Madam, though unwillingly,
To wish I had no Uncles part in him,
And much I fear, the comfort of a Son
You will not long enjoy.

Gui. 'Tis not my fault,
And therefore from his guilt my innocence
Cannot be tainted, since his Fathers death,
(Peace to his soul) a Mothers prayers and care
Were never wanting, in his education.
His Child-hood I pass'd o're, as being brought up
Under my wing; and growing ripe for study,
I overcame the tenderness, and joy
I had to look upon him, and provided
The choicest Masters, and of greatest name
Of Salamanca, in all liberal Arts.

Man. To train his youth up.
I must witness that.

Gui. How there he prospered to the admiration
Of all that knew him, for a general Scholar,
Being one of note, before he was a man,
Is still remembred in that Academy.
From thence I sent him to the Emperours Court,
Attended like his Fathers Son, and there
Maintain'd him, in such bravery and height,
As did become a Courtier.

Man. 'Twas that spoil'd him, my Nephew had been happy.
The Court's a School indeed, in which some few
Learn vertuous principles, but most forget
What ever they brought thither good and honest.
Trifling is there in practice, serious actions
Are obsolete and out of use, my Nephew
Had been a happy man, had he ne're known
What's there in grace and fashion.

Gui. I have heard yet,
That while he liv'd in Court, the Emperour
Took notice of his carriage and good parts,
The Grandees did not scorn his company,
And of the greatest Ladies he was held
A compleat Gentleman.

Man. He indeed Daunc'd well;
A turn o'th' Toe, with a lofty trick or two,
To argue nimbleness, and a strong back,
Will go far with a Madam: 'tis most true,
That he's an excellent Scholar, and he knows it;
An exact Courtier, and he knows that too;
He has fought thrice, and come off still with honour,
Which he forgets not.

Gui. Nor have I much reason,
To grieve his fortune that way.

Man. You are mistaken,
Prosperity does search a Gentlemans temper,

More than his adverse fortune : I have known
 Many, and of rare parts from their success
 In private Duels, rais'd up to such a pride,
 And so transform'd from what they were, that all
 That lov'd them truly, wish'd they had fallen in them.
 I need not write examples, in your Son
 'Tis too apparent ; for e're Don Duarte
 Made trial of his valour, he indeed was Admired for civil courtesie, but now
 He's swoln so high, out of his own assurance,
 Of what he dares do, that he seeks occasions,
 Unjust occasions, grounded on blind passion,
 Ever to be in quarrels, and this makes him
 Shunn'd of all fair Societies.

Gui. Would it were
 In my weak power to help it: I will use
 With my entreaties th' Authority of a Mother,
 As you may of an Uncle, and enlarge it
 With your command, as being a Governour
 To the great King in Lisbon.

Enter Duarte and his Page.

Man. Here he comes.
 We are unseen, observe him.

Dua. Boy.

Page. My Lord.

Dua. What faith the Spanish Captain that I struck,
 To my bold challenge?

Page. He refus'd to read it.

Dua. Why didst not leave it there?

Page. I did my Lord,

But to no purpose, for he seems more willing
 To sit down with the wrongs, than to repair
 His honour by the sword ; he knows too well,
 That from your Lordship nothing can be got
 But more blows, and disgraces.

Dua. He's a wretch,
 A miserable wretch, and all my fury
 Is lost upon him ; holds the Mask, appointed I'th' honour of Hippolyta?

Page. 'Tis broke off.

Dua. The reason?

Page. This was one, they heard your Lordship
 Was by the Ladies choice to lead the Dance,
 And therefore they, too well assur'd how far
 You would outshine 'em, gave it o're and said,
 They would not serve for foiles to set you off.

Dua. They at their best are such, and ever shall be Where I appear.

Man. Do you note his modesty?

Dua. But was there nothing else pretended?

Page. Yes,

Young Don Alonzo, the great Captains Nephew,
 Stood on comparisons.

Dua. With whom?

Page. With you,
 And openly profess'd that all precedence,
 His birth and state consider'd, was due to him,
 Nor were your Lordship to contend with one
 So far above you.

Dua. I look down upon him
 With such contempt and scorn, as on my slave,
 He's a name only, and all good in him
 He must derive from his great grandfathers Ashes,
 For had not their victorious acts bequeath'd
 His titles to him, and wrote on his forehead,
 This is a Lord, he had liv'd unobserv'd
 By any man of mark, and died as one
 Amongst the common route. Compare with me?
 'Tis Gyant-like ambition; I know him,
 And know my self, that man is truly noble,
 And he may justly call that worth his own,
 Which his deserts have purchas'd, I could wish
 My birth were more obscure, my friends and kinsmen

Of lesser power, or that my provident Father
 Had been like to that riotous Emperour
 That chose his belly for his only heir ;
 For being of no family then, and poor
 My vertues wherefoe'r I liv'd, should make
 That kingdom my inheritance.

Gui. Strange self Love!

Dua. For if I studied the Countries Laws,
 I should so easily found all their depth,
 And rise up such a wonder, that the pleaders,
 That now are in most practice and esteem,
 Should starve for want of Clients: if I travell'd,
 Like wise Ulysses to see men and manners,
 I would return in act, more knowing, than
Homer could fancy him ; if a Physician,
 So oft I would restore death-wounded men,
 That where I liv'd, Galen should not be nam'd,
 And he that joyn'd again the scatter'd limbs
 Of torn Hippolytus should be forgotten.
 I could teach Ovid courtship, how to win
 A Julia, and enjoy her, though her Dower
 Were all the Sun gives light to : and for arms
 Were the Persian host that drank up Rivers, added
 To the Turks present powers, I could direct, Command, and Marshal them.

Man. And yet you know not
 To rule your self, you would not to a boy else
 Like Plautus Braggart boast thus.

Dua. All I speak,
 In act I can make good.

Gui. Why then being Master
 Of such and so good parts do you destroy them,
 With self opinion, or like a rich miser,
 Hoard up the treasures you possess, imparting
 Nor to your self nor others, the use of them?
 They are to you but like enchanted viands,
 On which you seem to feed, yet pine with hunger;
 And those so rare perfections in my Son
 Which would make others happy, render me
 A wretched Mother.

Man. You are too insolent.
 And those too many excellencies, that feed
 Your pride, turn to a Pleurisie, and kill
 That which should nourish vertue ; dare you think
 All blessings are confer'd on you alone?
 Y'are grossly coufen'd ; there's no good in you,
 Which others have not: are you a Scholar? so
 Are many, and as knowing: are you valiant?
 Waste not that courage then in braules, but spend it
 In the Wars, in service of your King and Country.

Dua. Yes, so I might be General, no man lives
 That's worthy to command me.

Man. Sir, in Lisbon
 I am: and you shall know it ; every hour
 I am troubled with complaints of your behaviour
 From men of all conditions, and all sexes.
 And my authority, which you presume
 Will bear you out, in that you are my Nephew,
 No longer shall protect you, for I vow
 Though all that's past I pardon, I will punish
 The next fault with as much severity
 As if you were a stranger, rest assur'd on't.

Gui. And by that love you should bear, or that duty
 You owe a Mother, once more I command you
 To cast this haughtiness off ; which if you do,
 All that is mine, is yours, if not, expect
 My prayers, and vows, for your conversion only,
 But never means nor favour. [Ex. Manuel and Guiomar.]

Dua. I am Tutor'd
 As if I were a child still, the base Peasants
 That fear, and envy my great worth, have done this ;
 But I will find them out, I will o' board
 Get my disguise ; I have too long been idle,
 Nor will I curb my spirit, I was born free,

And will pursue the course best liketh me. [Exeunt.]

Enter Leopold, Sailers, and Zenocia.

Leop. Divide the spoil amongst you, this fair Captive I only challenge for my self.

Sail. You have won her
And well deserve her: twenty years I have liv'd
A Burgess of the Sea, and have been present
At many a desperate fight, but never saw
So small a Bark with such incredible valour
So long defended, and against such odds,
And by two men scarce arm'd too.

Leop. 'Twas a wonder.
And yet the courage they express being taken,
And their contempt of death wan more upon me
Than all they did, when they were free: me thinks
I see them yet when they were brought aboard us,
Disarm'd and ready to be put in fetters
How on the suddain, as if they had sworn
Never to taste the bread of servitude,
Both snatching up their swords, and from this Virgin,
Taking a farewell only with their eyes,
They leapt into the Sea.

Sail. Indeed 'twas rare.
Leop. It wrought so much on me, that but I fear'd
The great ship that pursued us, our own safety
Hindring my charitable purpose to 'em,
I would have took 'em up, and with their lives
They should have had their liberties.

Zen. O too late,
For they are lost, for ever lost.

Leop. Take comfort
'Tis not impossible, but that they live yet,
For when they left the ships, they were within
A League o'th' shore, and with such strength and cunning
They swimming, did delude the rising Billows,
With one hand making way, and with the other,
Their bloody swords advanced, threatening the Sea-gods
With war, unless they brought them safely off,
That I am almost confident they live,
And you again may see them.

Zen. In that hope
I brook a wretched being, till I am
Made certain of their fortunes; but they dead,
Death hath so many doors to let out life,
I will not long survive them.

Leop. Hope the best,
And let the courteous usage you have found,
Not usual in men of War persuade you
To tell me your condition.

Zen. You know it,
A Captive, my fate and your power have made me,
Such I am now, but what I was it skills not:
For they being dead, in whom I only live,
I dare not challenge Family, or Country,
And therefore Sir enquire not, let it suffice,
I am your servant, and a thankful servant
(If you will call that so, which is but duty)
I ever will be, and my honour safe,
Which nobly hitherto ye have preserv'd,
No slavery can appear in such a form,
Which with a masculine constancy I will not
Boldly look on and suffer.

Leop. You mistake me:
That you are made my prisoner, may prove
The birth of your good fortune. I do find
A winning language in your tongue and looks;
Nor can a suit by you mov'd be deni'd,
And therefore of a prisoner you must be
The Victors advocate.

Zen. To whom?
Leop. A Lady:
In whom all graces that can perfect beauty
Are friendly met. I grant that you are fair:

And had I not seen her before, perhaps
I might have sought to you.

Zen. This I hear gladly.
Leop. To this incomparable Lady I will give you,
(Yet being mine, you are already hers)
And to serve her is more than to be free,
At least I think so; and when you live with her,
If you will please to think on him that brought you
To such a happiness, for so her bounty
Will make you think her service, you shall ever
Make me at your devotion.

Zen. All I can do,
Rest you assur'd of.
Leop. At night I'll present you,
Till when I am your Guard.

Zen. Ever your servant. [Exeunt.]

Enter Arnolde and Rutilio.

Arn. To what are we reserv'd?
Rut. Troth 'tis uncertain,
Drowning we have escap'd miraculously, and Stand fair for ought I know for hanging; mony
We have none, nor e're are like to have,
'Tis to be doubted: besides we are strangers,
Wondrous hungry strangers; and charity
Growing cold, and miracles ceasing,
Without a Conjurers help, cannot find
When we shall eat again.

Arn. These are no wants
If put in ballance with Zenocias los;:
In that alone all miseries are spoken:
O my Rutilio, when I think on her,
And that which she may suffer, being a Captive,
Then I could curse my self, almost those powers
That send me from the fury of the Ocean.

Rut. You have lost a wife indeed, a fair and chaste one,
Two blessings, not found often in one woman;
But she may be recovered, questionless
The ship that took us was of Portugal,
And here in Lisbon, by some means or other
We may hear of her.

Arn. In that hope I live.
Rut. And so do I, but hope is a poor Sallad
To dine and sup with, after a two dayes fast too,
Have you no mony left?

Arn. Not a Denier.
Rut. Nor any thing to pawn? 'tis now in fashion,
Having a Mistress, sure you should not be Without a neat Historical shirt.

Arn. For shame
Talk not so poorly.
Rut. I must talk of that
Necessity prompts us to, for beg I cannot,
Nor am I made to creep in at a window,
To filch to feed me, something must be done,
And suddenly resolve on't.

Enter Zabulon and a Servant.

Arn. What are these?
Rut. One by his habit is a Jew.

Zab. No more:
Thou art sure that's he.
Ser. Most certain.

Zab. How long is it
Since first she saw him?
Ser. Some two hours. [Exit Ser.]

Zab. Be gone— let me alone to work him.
Rut. How he eyes you!
Now he moves towards us, in the Devils name
What would he with us?

Arn. Innocence is bold:
Nor can I fear.
Zab. That you are poor and strangers,
I easily perceive.

Rut. But that you'll help us,
Or any of your tribe, we dare not hope Sir.

Zab. Why think you so?

Rut. Because you are a Jew Sir,
And courtesies come sooner from the Devil
Than any of your Nation.

Zab. We are men,
And have like you, compassion when we find
Fit subjects for our bounty, and for proof
That we dare give, and freely, not to you Sir,
Pray spare your pains, there's gold, stand not amaz'd,
'Tis current I assure you.

Rut. Take it man,
Sure thy good Angel is a Jew, and comes
In his own shape to help thee: I could wish now
Mine would appear too like a Turk;

Arn. I thank you,
But yet must tell you, if this be the Prologue
To any bad act, you would have me practise,
I must not take it.

Zab. This is but the earnest
Of what which is to follow, and the bond
Which you must seal to for't, is your advancement,
Fortune with all that's in her power to give,
Offers her self up to you: entertain her,
And that which Princes have kneel'd for in vain
Presents it self to you.

Arn. 'Tis above wonder.

Zab. But far beneath the truth, in my relation
Of what you shall possess, if you embrace it.
There is an hour in each mans life appointed
To make his happiness if then he seize it,
And this, (in which, beyond all expectation,
You are invited to your good) is yours,
If you dare follow me, so, if not, hereafter
Expect not the like offer.

Arn. 'Tis no vision. Rut. 'Tis gold I'm sure.

Arn. We must like brothers share;
There's for you.

Rut. By this light I'm glad I have it:
There are few Gallants, (for men may be such
And yet want gold, yea and sometimes silver)
But would receive such favours from the Devil,
Though he appear'd like a Broker, and demanded
Sixty i'th' hundred.

Arn. Wherefore should I fear
Some plot upon my life? 'tis now to me
Not worth the keeping. I will follow him,
Farewel, with me good fortune, we shall meet
Again I doubt not.

Rut. Or I'll ne're trust Jew more, [Exit Arnoldo.
Nor Christian for his sake— plague o' my stars,
How long might I have walkt without a Cloak,
Before I should have met with such a fortune?
We elder Brothers, though we are proper men,
Ha' not the luck, ha' too much beard, that spoils us;
The smooth Chin carries all: what's here to do now?

[Manet Rutilio.

Enter Duarte, Alonzo, and a Page.

Dua. I'll take you as I find you.

Alon. That were base—you see I am unarm'd.

Dua. Out with your Bodkin
Your Pocket-dagger, your Steletto, out with it,
Or by this hand I'll kill you: such as you are
Have studied the undoing of poor Cutlers,
And made all manly weapons out of fashion:
You carry Poniards to murder men,
Yet dare not wear a sword to guard your Honour.

Rut. That's true indeed: upon my life this gallant
Is brib'd to repeal banisht swords.

Dua. I'll shew you
The difference now between a Spanish Rapier
And your pure Pifa.

Alon. Let me fetch a sword,
Upon mine honour I'll return.

Dua. Not so Sir.

Alon. Or lend me yours I pray you, and take this.

Rut. To be disgrac'd as you are, no I thank you
Spight of the fashion, while I live, I am Instructed to go arm'd: what folly 'tis
For you that are a man, to put your self
Into your enemies mercy.

Dua. Yield it quickly
Or I'll cut off your hand, and now disgrace you,
Thus kick and baffle you: as you like this,
You may again prefer complaints against me
To my Uncle and my Mother, and then think
To make it good with a Poniard.

Alon. I am paid
For being of the fashion.

Dua. Get a sword,
Then if you dare redeem your reputation:
You know I am easily found: I'll add this to it
To put you in mind.

Rut. You are too insolent,
And do insult too much on the advantage
Of that which your unequal weapon gave you,
More than your valour.

Dua. This to me, you Peasant?
Thou art not worthy of my foot poor fellow,
'Tis scorn, not pity, makes me give thee life:
Kneel down and thank me for't: how, do you stare?

Rut. I have a sword Sir, you shall find, a good one;
This is no stabbing guard.

Dua. Wert thou thrice arm'd,
Thus yet I durst attempt thee.

Rut. Then have at you, [Fight.
I scorn to take blows.

Dua. O I am slain. [Falls.

Page. Help! murther, murther!

Alon. Shift for your self you are dead else,
You have kill'd the Governous Nephew.

Alon. If once you are beset you cannot scape,
Will you betray your self?

Rut. Undone for ever. [Exit Rut. and Alonzo.

Enter Officers.

1 Offi. Who makes this out-cry?

Page. O my Lord is murdered;
This way he took, make after him,
Help help there. [Exit Page.

2 Offi. 'Tis Don Duarte.

1 Offi. Pride has got a fall,
He was still in quarrels, scorn'd us Peace-makers,
And all our Bill authority, now h'as paid for't.
You ha' met with your match Sir now, bring off his body
And bear it to the Governour. Some pursue
The murderer; yet if he scape, it skills not;
Were I a Prince, I would reward him for't,
He has rid the City of a turbulent beast,
There's few will pity him: but for his Mother
I truly grieve indeed, she's a good Lady. [Exeunt.

Enter Guiomar and Servants.

Gui. He's not i'th' house?

Ser. No Madam.

Gui. Haste and seek him,
Go all and every where, I'll not to bed
Till you return him, take away the lights too,
The Moon lends me too much, to find my fears
And those devotions I am to pay
Are written in my heart, not in this book,
And I shall read them there without a Taper. [Ex. Ser. Kneel.

Enter Rutilio.

Rut. I am pursued; all the Ports are stop't too;

Not

Not any hope to escape, behind, before me,
On either side I am beset, cursed fortune
My enemy on the Sea, and on the Land too,
Redeem'd from one affliction to another :
Would I had made the greedy waves my tomb
And dyed obscure, and innocent, not as Nero (me?)
Smear'd o're with blood. Whither have my fears brought
I am got into a house, the doors all open,
This, by the largeness of the room, the hangings,
And other rich adornments, glittring through
The sable masque of night, sayes it belongs
To one of means and rank : no servant stirring ?
Murmur nor whisper ?

Guio. Who's that ?

Rut. By the voice,
This is a woman.

Guio. Stephano, Faspe, Julia,
Who waits there ?

Rut. 'Tis the Lady of the house,
I'll flie to her protection.

Guio. Speak, what are you ?

Rut. Of all that ever breath'd, a man most wretched.

Guio. I am sure you are a man of most ill manners,
You could not with so little reverence else
Pretend to my private chamber. Whither would you,
Or what do you seek for ?

Rut. Gracious woman hear me ;
I am a stranger, and in that I answer
All your demands, a most unfortunate stranger,
That call'd unto it by my enemies pride,
Have left him dead i'th' streets, Justice pursues me,
And for that life I took unwillingly,
And in a fair defence, I must lose mine,
Unless you in your charity protect me.
Your house is now my sanctuary, and the Altar,
I gladly would take hold of your sweet mercy.
By all that's dear unto you, by your vertues,
And by your innocence, that needs no forgiveness,
Take pity on me.

Guio. Are you a Castilian ?

Rut. No Madam, Italy claims my birth.

Guio. I ask not

With purpose to betray you, if you were
Ten thousand times a Spaniard, the nation
We Portugals most hate, I yet would save you
If it lay in my power : list up these hangings ;
Behind my Beds head there's a hollow place,
Into which enter ; so, but from this stir not
If the Officers come, as you expect they will doe,
I know they owe such reverence to my lodgings ;
That they will easily give credit to me
And search no further.

Rut. The blest Saints pay for me
The infinite debt I owe you.

Guio. How he quakes ?

Thus far I feel his heart beat, be of comfort,
Once more I give my promise for your safety,
All men are subject to such accidents,
Especially the valiant ; and who knows not,
But that the charity I afford this stranger
My only Son else where may stand in need of ?

Enter Officers, and Servants, with the body of Duarte---Page.

1 Ser. Now Madam, if your wisdom ever could Raise up defences against floods of sorrow
That haste to overwhelm you, make true use of Your great discretion.

2 Ser. Your only son
My Lord Duart's slain.

1 Off. His murderer, pursued by us
Was by a boy discovered
Entring your house, and that induced us
To press into it for his apprehension :

Guio. Oh ?

1 Ser. Sure her heart is broke.

Off. Madam.

Guio. Stand off.

My sorrow is so dear and pretious to me,
That you must not partake it, suffer it
Like wounds that do breed inward to dispatch me.
O my Duart, such an end as this
Thy pride long since did prophesie ; thou art dead,
And to encrease my misery, thy sad Mother
Must make a wilfull shipwrack of her vow
Or thou fall unreveng'd. My Soul's divided,
And piety to a son, and true performance
Of hospitable duties to my guest,
That are to others Angels, are my furies.
Vengeance knocks at my heart, but my word given
Denies the entrance, is no Medium left,
But that I must protect the murderer,
Or suffer in that faith he made his altar ?
Motherly love give place, the fault made this way,
To keep a vow, to which high Heaven is witness,
Heaven may be pleas'd to pardon.

Enter Manuel, Doctors, Surgeons.

Man. 'Tis too late,
Hee's gone, past all recovery : now reproof
Were but unseasonable when I should give comfort,
And yet remember Sister.

Guio. O forbear,
Search for the murderer, and remove the body,
And as you think fit, give it burial.
Wretch that I am, uncapable of all comfort,
And therefore I intreat my friends and kinsfolk,
And you my Lord, for some space to forbear
Your courteous visitations.

Man. We obey you. [Excunt omnes with the body.
Manet *Guio*mar.]

Rut. My Spirits come back, and now despair resigns
Her place again to hope.

Guio. What ere thou art
To whom I have given means of life, to witness
With what Religion I have kept my promise,
Come fearless forth, but let thy face be cover'd,
That I hereafter be not forc't to know thee,
For motherly affection may return
My vow once paid to heaven. Thou hast taken from me
The respiration of my heart, the light
Of my swoln eyes, in his life that sustain'd me :
Yet my word given to save you, I make good,
Because what you did, was not done with malice,
You are not known, there is no mark about you
That can discover you ; let not fear betray you.
With all convenient speed you can, flie from me
That I may never see you ; and that want
Of means may be no let unto your journie,
There are a hundred Crownes : you are at the door now,
And so Farewell for ever.

Rut. Let me first fall
Before your feet, and on them pay the duty
I owe your goodness ; next all blessings to you,
And Heaven restore the joyes I have bereft you,
With full increase hereafter, living be
The Goddesses stil'd of Hospitality.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Leopold, and Zenocia.

Leo. FLing off these fullen clouds, you are enter'd now
Into a house of joy and happiness,
I have prepar'd a blessing for ye.

Zen. Thank ye, my state would rather ask a curse.

Leo. You are peevish

And know not when ye are friended, I have us'd those means,
The Lady of this house, the noble Lady,
Will take ye as her own, and use ye graciously :
Make much of what you are, Mistress of that beauty,
And expose it not to such betraying sorrows,
When ye are old, and all those sweets hang wither'd,

Enter Servant.

Then sit and sigh.

Zen. My Autumn is not far off.

Leo. Have you told your Lady?

Ser. Yes Sir, I have told her

Both of your noble service, and your present,
Which she accepts.

Leo. I should be blest to see her.

Ser. That now you cannot doe: she keeps the Chamber
Not well dispos'd; and has denied all visits,
The maid I have in charge to receive from ye,
So please you render her.

Leo. With all my service,
But fain I would have seen.

Ser. 'Tis but your patience;

No doubt she cannot but remember nobly.

Leo. These three years I have lov'd this scornfull Lady,
And follow'd her with all the truth of service,
In all which time, but twice she has honour'd me
With sight of her blest beauty: when you please Sir,
You may receive your charge, and tell your Lady;
A Gentleman whose life is only dedicated
To her commands, kisses her beauteous hands;
And Faire-one, now your help, you may remember
The honest courtesies, since you are mine,
I ever did your modestie: you shall be near her,
And if sometimes you name my service to her,
And tell her with what nobleness I love her,
'Twill be a gratitude I shall remember.

Zen. What in my poor power lyes, so it be honest.

Leo. I ask no more.

Ser. You must along with me (Fair.)

Leo. And so I leave you two: but a fortune
Too happy for my fate: you shall enjoy her.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Zabulon and Servants.

Zab. Be quick, be quick, out with the banquet there,
These scents are dull; cast richer on, and fuller;
Scent every place, where have you plac'd the musick?

Ser. Here they stand ready Sir.

Zab. 'Tis well, be sure
The wines be lusty, high, and full of Spirit,
And Amber'd all.

Ser. They are.

Zab. Give fair attendance.

In the best trim, and state, make ready all. [Banquet set forth. Exit.]

2 Ser. We shall Sir,
What preparation's this?

Some new device
My Lady has in hand.

1 Ser. O, prosper it
As long as it carries good wine in the mouth,
And good meat with it, where are all the rest?

2 Ser. They are ready to attend.

1 Ser. Sure some great person,
They would not make this hurry else.

2 Ser. Hark the Musick.

Enter Zabulon, and Arnoldo.

It will appear now certain, here it comes.
Now to our places.

Arn. Whither will he lead me?
What invitation's this? to what new end
Are these fair preparations? a rich Banquet,
Musick, and every place stuck with adornment,

Fit for a Princes welcome; what new game
Has Fortune now prepar'd to shew me happy?
And then again to sink me? 'tis no illusion,
Mine eyes are not deceiv'd, all these are reall;
What wealth and state!

Zab. Will you sit down and eat Sir?
These carry little wonder, they are usual;
But you shall see, if you be wise to observe it,
That that will strike dead, strike with amazement,
Then if you be a man: this fair health to you.

Ar. What shall I see? I pledge ye Sir, I was never
So buried in amazement —

Zab. You are so still:
Drink freely.

Ar. The very wines are admirable:
Good Sir, give me leave to ask this question,
For what great worthy man are these prepar'd?
And why do you bring me hither?

Zab. They are for you, Sir;
And under-value not the worth you carry,
You are that worthy man: think well of these,
They shall be more, and greater.

Ar. Well, blind fortune
Thou hast the prettiest changes when thou art pleas'd,
To play thy game out wantonly —

Zab. Come be lusty,
And awake your Spirits.

Cease Musick
(Servants)

Ar. Good Sir, do not wake me.
For willingly I would dye in this dream, pray whose
Are all these that attend here?

Zab. They are yours;
They wait on you.

Ar. I never yet remember
I kept such faces, nor that I was ever able
To maintain so many.

Zab. Now you are, and shall be.

Ar. You'll say this house is mine too?

Zab. Say it? swear it.

Ar. And all this wealth?

Zab. This is the least you see Sir.

Ar. Why, where has this been hid these thirtie years?
For certainly I never found I was wealthy
Till this hour, never dream'd of house, and Servants.
I had thought I had been a younger Brother, a poor Gent.
I may eat boldly then.

Zab. 'Tis prepar'd for ye.

Ar. The taste is perfect, and most delicate:
But why for me? give me some wine, I do drink;
I feel it sensibly, and I am here,
Here in this glorious place: I am bravely us'd too,
Good Gentle Sir, give me leave to think a little,
For either I am much abus'd —

Zab. Strike Musick
And sing that lusty Song.

Musick, Song.

Ar. Bewitching harmony!
Sure I am turn'd into another Creature.

Enter Hippolyta.

Happy and blest, Arnoldo was unfortunate;
Ha! blest mine eyes; what pretious piece of nature
To pose the world?

Zab. I told you, you would see that
Would darken these poor preparations;
What think ye now? nay rise not, 'tis no vision.

Ar. 'Tis more: 'tis miracle.

Hip. You are welcom Sir.

Ar. It speaks, and entertains me still more glorious;
She is warm, and this is flesh here: how she stirs me!
Blest me what stars are there?

Hip. May I sit near ye?

Ar. No, you are too pure an object to behold,
Too excellent to look upon, and live;
I must remove.

Zab. She is a woman Sir,

Ey, what faint heart is this?

Arn. The house of wonder.

Zab. Do not you think your self now truly happy?

You have the abstract of all sweetnes by ye,
The precious wealth youth labours to arrive at;
Nor is she less in honour, than in beauty,
Ferrara's Royal Duke is proud to call her
His best, his Noblest, and most happy Sister,
Fortune has made her Mistress of herself,
Wealthy, and wise, without a power to sway her,
Wonder of Italy, of all hearts Mistress.

Arn. And all this is—

Zab. Hippolyta the beauteous.

Hip. You are a poor relator of my fortunes,
Too weak a Chronicle to speak my blessings,
And leave out that essential part of story
I am most high and happy in, most fortunate,
The acquaintance, and the noble fellowship
Of this fair Gentleman: pray ye do not wonder,
Nor hold it strange to hear a handsome Lady
Speak freely to ye: with your fair leave and courtesie
I will sit by ye.

Arn. I know not what to answer,
Nor where I am, nor to what end consider;
Why do you use me thus?

Hip. Are ye angry Sir,
Because ye are entertain'd with all humanity?
Freely and nobly us'd?

Arn. No gentle Lady,
That were uncivil, but it much amazes me
A stranger, and a man of no desert
Should find such floods of courtesie.

Hip. I love ye,
I honour ye, the first and best of all men,
And where that fair opinion leads, 'tis usual
These trifles that but serve to set off, follow.
I would not have you proud now, nor disdainful
Because I say I love ye, though I swear it,
Nor think it a stale favour I sling on ye,
Though ye be handsome, and the only man
I must confess I ever fixt mine eye on,
And bring along all promises that please us,
Yet I should hate ye then, despise ye, scorn ye,
And with as much contempt pursue your person,
As now I do with love. But you are wiser,
At least I think, more master of your fortune,
And so I drink your health.

Arn. Hold fast good honesty,
I am a lost man else.

Hip. Now you may kiss me,
'Tis the first kiss, I ever askt, I swear to ye.

Arn. That I dare do sweet Lady.

Hip. You do it well too;
You are a Master Sir, that makes you coy.

Arn. Would you would send your people off.

Hip. Well thought on.

Wait all without. [Exit Zab. and Servants.]

Zab. I hope she is pleas'd throughly.

Hip. Why stand ye still? here's no man to detect ye,
My people are gone off: come, come, leave conjuring,
The Spirit you would raise, is here already,
Look boldly on me.

Arn. What would you have me do?

Hip. O most unmanly question! have you do?
Is't possible your years should want a Tutor?
Ple teach ye: come, embrace me.

Arn. Fye stand off;
And give me leave, more now than e're, to wonder,
A building of so goodly a proportion,
Outwardly all exact, the frame of Heaven,
Should hide within so base inhabitants?
You are as fair, as if the morning bare ye,
Imagination never made a sweeter;
Can it be possible this frame should suffer;

And built on slight affections, fright the viewer?
Be excellent in all, as you are outward,
The worthy Mistress of those many blessings
Heaven has bestowed, make 'em appear still nobler,
Because they are trusted to a weaker keeper.
Would ye have me love ye?

Hip. Yes.

Arn. Not for your beauty;
Though I confess, it blowes the first fire in us,
Time as he passes by, puts out that sparkle;
Nor for your wealth, although the world kneel to it,
And make it all addition to a woman,
Fortune that ruins all, makes that his conquest;
Be honest, and be vertuous, P'le admire ye,
At least be wise, and where ye lay these nets,
Strow over 'em a little modesty,
'Twill well become your cause, and catch more Fools.

Hip. Could any one that lov'd this wholesome counsel
But love the giver more? you make me fonder:
You have a vertuous mind, I want that ornament;
Is it a sin I covet to enjoy ye?

If ye imagine I am too free a Lover,
And act that part belongs to you, I am silent:
Mine eyes shall speak my blushes, partly with ye;
I will not touch your hand, but with a tremble
Fitting a Vestal Nun; not long to kiss ye,
But gently as the Air, and undiscern'd too,
P'le steal it thus: P'le walk your shadow by ye,
So still and silent that it shall be equal,
To put me off, as that, and when I covet,
To give such toys as these—

Arn. A new temptation—

Hip. Thus like the lazie minutes will I drop 'em,
Which past once are forgotten.

Arn. Excellent vice!

Hip. Will ye be won? look stedfastly upon me,
Look manly, take a mans affections to you;
Young women, in the old world were not wont, Sir,
To hang out gaudy bushes for their beauties,
To talk themselves into young mens affections;
How cold and dull you are!

Arn. How I stagger?
She is wise, as fair; but 'tis a wicked wisdom;
P'le choak before I yield.

Hip. Who waits within there? [Zabulon within.]
Make ready the green Chamber.

Zab. It shall be Madam.

Arn. I am afraid she will enjoy me indeed.

Hip. What Musick do ye love?

Arn. A modest tongue.

Hip. We'll have enough of that: fye, fye, how lumpish?
In a young Ladyes arms thus dull?

Arn. For Heaven sake
Profess a little goodness.

Hip. Of what Country?

Arn. I am of Rome.

Hip. Nay then I know you mock me,
The Italians are not frighted with such bug-bears;
Prethee go in.

Arn. I am not well.

Hip. P'le make thee,
P'le kiss thee well.

Arn. I am not sick of that fore.

Hip. Upon my Conscience, I must ravish thee;
I shall be famous for the first example:
With this P'le tye ye first, then try your strength Sir.

Arn. My strength? away base woman, I abhor thee;
I am not caught with stales, disease dwell with thee. [Exit.]

Hip. Are ye so quick? and have I lost my wishes?
Hoe, Zabulon; my servants.

Enter Zabulon and Servants.

Zab. Call'd ye Madam?

Hip. Is all that beauty scorned, so many su'd for;

So many Princes? by a stranger too?
Must I endure this?

Zab. Where's the Gentleman?

Hip. Go presently, pursue the stranger, Zabulon.
He has broke from me, Jewels I have given him:
Charge him with theft: he has stoln my love, my freedome,
Draw him before the Governour, imprison him,
Why dost thou stay?

Zab. I'll teach him a new dance,
For playing fast and loofe with such a Lady.
Come fellows, come: I'll execute your anger,
And to the full.

Hip. His scorn shall feel my vengeance—— Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sulpicia and Jaques.

Sul. Shall I never see a lusty man again?

Ja. Faith Mistress

You do so over-labour 'em when you have 'em,
And so dry-founder 'em, they cannot last.

Sul. Where's the French-man?

Ja. Alas, he's all to fitters,
And lyes, taking the height of his fortune with a Syringe.
He's chin'd, he's chin'd good man, he is a mourner.

Sul. What's become of the Dane?

Ja. Who? goldy-locks?

He's foul i'th' touch-hole; and recoils again,
The main Spring's weaken'd that holds up his cock,
He lies at the sign of the Sun, to be new breech'd.

Sul. The Rutter too, is gone.

Ja. O that was a brave Rascal,
He would labour like a Thrasher: but alas
What thing can ever last? he has been ill mew'd,
And drawn too soon; I have seen him in the Hospital.

Sul. There was an English-man.

Ja. I there was an English-man;

You'll scant find any now, to make that name good:
There were those English that were men indeed,
And would perform like men, but now they are vanisht:
They are so taken up in their own Country,
And so beaten of their speed by their own women,
When they come here, they draw their legs like Hackneys:
Drink, and their own devices have undone 'em.

Sul. I must have one that's strong, no life in Lisbon else,
Perfect and young: my Custom with young Ladies,
And high fed City dames, will fall, and break else.
I want my self too, in mine age to nourish me:
They are all sunk I maintain'd: now what's this business,
What goodly fellow's that?

Enter Rutilio and Officers.

Rut. Why do you drag me?

Pox o' your justice; let me loose.

1 Offi. Not so Sir.

Rut. Cannot a man fall into one of your drunken Cellars,
And venture the breaking on's neck, your trap-doors open,
But he must be us'd thus rascally?

1 Offi. What made you wandring
So late i'th' night? you know that is imprisonment.

Rut. May be I walk in my sleep.

2 Offi. May be we'll walk ye.

What made you wandring Sir, into that vault
Where all the City store, and the Munition lay?

R. t. I fell into it by chance, I broke my shins for't:
Your worships feel not that: I knockt my head
Against a hundred posts, would you had had it.
Cannot I break my neck in my own defence?

2 Offi. This will not serve: you cannot put it off so,
Your coming thither was to play the villain,
To fire the Powder, to blow up that part o'th' City.

Rut. Yes, with my nose: why were the trap doors open?
Might not you fall, or you, had you gone that way?
I thought your City had sunk.

1 Offi. You did your best Sir,

We must presume, to help it into th' Air,
If you call that sinking: we have told you what's the law,
He that is taken there, unless a Magistrate,
And have command in that place, presently
If there be nothing found apparent near him
Worthy his torture, or his present death,
Must either pay his fine for his presumption,
(Which is six hundred Duckets) or for six years
Tug at an Oar i'th' Gallies: will ye walk Sir,
For we presume you cannot pay the penalty.

Rut. Row in the Gallies, after all this mischief?

2 Offi. May be you were drunk, they'll keep you sober there.

Rut. Tug at an Oar? you are not arrant rascals,
To catch me in a pit-fall, and betray me?

Sul. A lusty minded man.

Ja. A wondrous able.

Sul. Pray Gentlemen, allow me but that liberty
To speak a few words with your prisoner,
And I shall thank you.

1 Offi. Take your pleasure Lady.

Sul. What would you give that woman should redeem ye,
Redeem ye from this slavery?

Rut. Besides my service

I would give her my whole self, I would be her vassal.

Sul. She has reason to expect as much, considering
The great sum she pays for't, yet take comfort,
What ye shall do to merit this, is easie,
And I will be the woman shall befriend ye,
'Tis but to entertain some handsome Ladies,
And young fair Gentlewomen: you guess the way:
But giving of your mind——

Rut. I am excellent at it:

You cannot pick out such another living.

I understand ye: is't not thus?

Sul. Ye have it.

Rut. Bring me a hundred of 'em: I'll dispatch 'em.

I will be none but yours: should another offer
Another way to redeem me, I should scorn it.
What women you shall please: I am monstrous lusty:
Not to be taken down: would you have Children?
I'll get you those as fast, and thick as flie-blows.

Sul. I admire him: wonder at him!

Rut. Hark ye Lady,
You may require sometimes——

Sul. I by my faith.

Rut. And you shall have it by my faith, and handsomly:
This old Cat will suck shrewdly: you have no Daughters?
I flye at all: now am I in my Kingdom.

Tug at an Oar? no, tug in a Feather-bed,
With good warm Caudles; hang your bread and water,
I'll make you young again, believe that Lady.
I will so frubbish you.

Sul. Come, follow Officers,

This Gentleman is free: I'll pay the Duckets.

Rut. And when you catch me in your City-powdring-tub
Again, boil me with Cabbage.

1 Offi. You are both warn'd and arm'd Sir. [Exeunt.]

Scena quarta. Enter Leopold, Hippolyta, Zenocia.

Zen. Will your Ladyship wear this Dressing?

Hip. Leave thy prating:

I care not what I wear.

Zen. Yet 'tis my duty

To know your pleasure, and my worst affliction
To see you discontented.

Hip. Weeping too?

Prethee forgive me: I am much distemper'd,
And speak I know not what: to make thee amends
The Gown that I wore yesterday, is thine;
Let it alone awhile.

Leo. Now you perceive,
And taste her bounty.

Zen. Much above my merit.

Leo. But have you not yet found a happy time

To move for me.

Zen. I have watched all occasions,
But hitherto, without success: yet doubt not
But I'll embrace the first means.

Leo. Do, and prosper:
Excellent creature, whose perfections make
Even sorrow lovely, if your frowns thus take me,
What would your smiles do?

Hip. Pox o' this stale Courtship:
If I have any power.

Leo. I am commanded,
Obedience is the Lovers sacrifice
Which I pay gladly.

Hip. To be forc'd to wooe,
Being a woman, could not but torment me,
But bringing for my advocates, youth and beauty,
Set off with wealth, and then to be deni'd too
Do's comprehend all tortures. They flatter'd me,
That said my looks were charms, my touches fetters,
My locks soft chains, to bind the arms of Princes,
And make them in that wish'd for bondage, happy.
I am like others of a courser feature,
As weak to allure, but in my dotage, stronger:
I am no Circe; he, more than Ulysses,
Scorns all my offer'd bounties, slight's my favours,
And, as I were some new Egyptian, flies me,
Leaving no pawn, but my own shame behind him.
But he shall finde, that in my fell revenge,
I am a woman: one that never pardons
The rude contemner of her proffer'd sweetness.

Enter Zabulon.

Zab. Madam, 'tis done.

Hip. What's done?

Zab. The uncivill stranger
Is at your suite arrested.

Hip. 'Tis well handled.

Zab. And under guard sent to the Governour,
With whom my testimony, and the favour
He bears your Ladieship, have so prevail'd
That he is sentenc'd.

Hip. How?

Zab. To lose his head.

Hip. Is that the means to quench the scorching heat
Of my inrag'd desires? must innocence suffer,
'Cause I am faulty? or is my Love so fatall
That of necessity it must destroy
The object it most longs for? dull Hippolyta,
To think that injuries could make way for love,
When courtesies were despis'd: that by his death
Thou shouldst gain that, which only thou canst hope for
While he is living: My honour's at the stake now,
And cannot be preserv'd, unless he perish,
The enjoying of the thing I love, I ever
Have priz'd above my fame: why doubt I now then?
One only way is left me, to redeem all:
Make ready my Caroch.

Leo. What will you Madam?

Hip. And yet I am impatient of such stay:
Bind up my hair: fye, fye, while that is doing
The Law may seize his life: thus as I am then,
Not like Hippolyta, but a Bacchanall
My frantique Love transports me.

Leo. Sure she's distracted.

Zab. Pray you follow her: I will along with you:
I more than ghes the cause: women that love
Are most uncertain, and one minute crave,
What in another they refuse to have.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Clodio, Charino.

Clo. Assure thy self Charino, I am alter'd
From what I was; the tempests we have met with
In our uncertain voyage, were smooth gales

Compar'd to those, the memory of my lusts
Rais'd in my Conscience: and if ere again
I live to see Zenocia, I will sue,
And seek to her as a Lover, and a Servant,
And not command affection, like a Tyrant.

Char. In hearing this, you make me young again,
And Heaven, it seems, favouring this good change in you
In setting of a period to our dangers
Gives us fair hopes to find that here in Lisbon
Which hitherto in vain we long have fought for.
I have receiv'd assur'd intelligence,
Such strangers have been seen here: and though yet
I cannot learn their fortunes, nor the place
Of their abode, I have a Soul prefages
A fortunate event here.

Clo. There have pass'd
A mutual interchange of courtesies
Between me, and the Governour; therefore boldly
We may presume of him, and of his power
If we finde cause to use them, otherwise
I would not be known here, and these disguises
Will keep us from discovery.

Enter Manuel, Doctor, Arnoldo, Guard.

Char. What are these?

Clo. The Governour: with him my Rival, bound.

Char. For certain 'tis Arnoldo.

Clo. Let's attend
What the success will be.

Man. Is't possible
There should be hope of his recovery,
His wounds so many and so deadly?

Doct. So they appear'd at first, but the blood stop'd,
His trance forsook him, and on better search
We found they were not mortal.

Man. Use all care
To perfect this unhop'd for cure: that done
Propose your own rewards: and till you shall Hear farther from me, for some ends I have,
Conceal it from his Mother.

Doct. Wee'l not fail Sir.

[Exit

Man. You still stand confident on your innocence.

Arn. It is my best and last guard, which I will not Leave, to relye on your uncertain mercy.

Enter Hippolyta, Zabulon, Leopold, Zenocia, 2 Servants.

Hip. Who bad you follow me! Goe home, and you Sir,
As you respect me, goe with her.

Arn. Zenocia!

And in her house a Servant!

Char. 'Tis my Daughter.

Clo. My love? Contain your joy, observe the sequel. Zen.

Man. Fye Madam, how undecent 'tis for you, (passes
So far unlike your self to bee seen thus
In th'open streets? why do you kneel? pray you rise;
I am acquainted with the wrong; and los
You have sustain'd, and the Delinquent now
Stands ready for his punishment.

Hip. Let it fall, Sir,

On the offender: he is innocent,
And most unworthy of these bonds he wears;
But I made up of guilt.

Man. VVhat strange turn's this?

Leo. This was my prisoner once.

Hip. If chastity

In a young man, and tempted to the height too
Did ere deserve reward, or admiration,
He justly may claim both. Love to his person
(Or if you please give it a fouler name)
Compel'd me first to train him to my house,
All engines I rais'd there to shake his vertue,
VVhich in the assault were useles; he unmov'd still
As if he had no part of humane frailty:
Against the nature of my Sex, almost

I plaid

I plaid the Ravisher. You might have seen
In our contention, young Apollo fly
And love-sick Daphne follow, all arts failing,
By flight he wan the victory, breaking from
My scorn'd embraces: the repulse (in women
Unfufferable) invited me to practise
A means to be reveng'd: and from this grew
His Accusation, and the abuse
Of your still equall justice: My rage ever
Thanks heaven, though wanton, I found not my self
So far engag'd to Hell, to prosecute
To the death what I had plotted, for that love
That made me first desire him, then accuse him,
Commands me with the hazard of my self
First to entreat his pardon, then acquit him.

Man. VVhat ere you are, so much I love your vertue,
That I desire your friendship: do you unloose him
From those bonds, you are worthy of: your repentance
Makes part of satisfaction; yet I must Severely reprehend you.

Leo. I am made
A stale on all parts: But this fellow shall Pay dearly for her favour.

Arn. My life's so full
Of various changes, that I now despair
Of any certain port; one trouble ending,
A new, and worse succeeds it: what should Zenocia
Do in this womans house? Can chastity
And hot Lust dwell together without infection?
I would not be or jealous, or secure,
Yet something must be done, to sound the depth on't:
That she lives is my blifs, but living there,
A hell of torments; there's no way to her
In whom I live, but by this door, through which
To me 'tis death to enter, yet I must,
And will make tryal.

Man. Let me hear no more
Of these devices, Lady: this I pardon,
And at your intercession I forgive
Your instrument the Jew too: get you home.
The hundred thousand crowns you lent the City
Towards the setting forth of the last Navy
Bound for the Islands, was a good then, which
I balance with your ill now.

Char. Now Sir, to him,
You know my Daughter needs it.

Hip. Let me take
A farewell with mine eye, Sir, though my lip
Be barr'd the Ceremonie, courtesie
And Custom too allows of.

Arn. Gentle Madam,
I neither am so cold, nor so ill bred
But that I dare receive it: you are unguarded,
And let me tell you that I am asham'd
Of my late rudeness, and would gladly therefore
If you please to accept my ready service
Wait on you to your house.

Hip. Above my hope:
Sir, if an Angel were to be my convoy,
He should not be more welcom.— [Ex. Arn. and Hip.]

Clod. Now you know me.

Man. Yes Sir, and honour you: ever remembering
Your many bounties, being ambitious only
To give you cause to say by some one service
That I am not ungratefull.

Clod. 'Tis now offer'd:
I have a suit to you, and an easie one,
Which e're long you shall know.

Man. When you think fit Sir,
And then as a command I will receive it,
Till when, most welcom: you are welcom too Sir,
'Tis spoken from the heart, and therefore needs not Much protestation: at your better leisure
I will enquire the cause that brought you hither:

In the mean time serve you.
Clod. You out-doe me Sir.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duarte, Doctor.

Dua. YOU have bestow'd on me a second life,
For which I live your creature, and have better'd
What nature fram'd imperfect, my first being
Insolent pride made monstrous; but this later
In learning me to know my self, hath taught me
Not to wrong others.

Doct. Then we live indeed,
When we can goe to rest without alarm
Given every minute to a guilt-sick conscience
To keep us waking, and rise in the morning
Secure in being innocent: but when
In the remembrance of our worse actions
We ever bear about us whips and furies,
To make the day a night of sorrow to us,
Even life's a burthen.

Dua. I have found and felt it;
But will endeavour having first made peace
VVith those intestine enemies my rude passions,
To be so with man-kind: but worthy Doctor,
Pray if you can resolve me; was the Gentleman
That left me dead, ere brought unto his tryal?

Doct. Nor known, nor apprehended.

Dua. That's my grief.

Doct. Why, do you wish he had been punished?

Dua. No,
The stream of my swoln sorrow runs not that way:
For could I find him, as I vow to Heaven
It shall be my first care to seek him out,
I would with thanks acknowledge that his sword,
In opening my veins, which proud blood poison'd,
Gave the first symptoms of true health.

Doct. 'Tis in you
A Christian resolution: that you live
Is by the Governours, your Uncles charge
As yet conceal'd. And though a sons loss never
Was solemniz'd with more tears of true sorrow
Than have been paid by your unequal'd Mother
For your supposed death, she's not acquainted
With your recovery.

Dua. For some few dayes
Pray let her so continue: thus disguis'd
I may abroad unknown.

Doct. Without suspicion
Of being discovered

Dua. I am confident
No moisture sooner dies than womens tears,
And therefore though I know my Mother vertuous,
Yet being one of that frail sex I purpose
Her farther tryal.

Doct. That as you think fit—I'll not betray you.

Dua. To find out this stranger
This true Physician of my mind and manners
Were such a blessing. He seem'd poor, and may Perhaps be now in want; would I could find him.
The Innes I'll search first, then the publick Stewes;
He was of Italy, and that Country breeds not
Precifians that way, but hot Libertines;
And such the most are: 'tis but a little travail:
I am unfurnisht too, pray Mr. Doctor,
Can you supply me?

Doct. VVith what summ you please.

Dua. I will not be long absent.

Doct. That I wish too;

For till you have more strength, I would not have you
To be too bold.

Dua.

Dua. Fear not, I will be carefull.

Enter Leopold, Zabulon, Bravo.

Zab. I have brought him Sir, a fellow that will do it
Though Hell stood in his way, ever provided
You pay him for't.

Leop. He has a strange aspect,
And looks much like the figure of a hang-man
In a table of the Passion.

Zab. He transcends
All precedents, believe it, a flesh'd ruffian,
That hath so often taken the Strappado,
That 'tis to him but as a lofty trick
Is to a tumbler: he hath perused too
All Dungeons in Portual, thrice seven years
Rowed in the Gallies for three several murders,
Though I presume that he has done a hundred,
And scap't unpunisht.

Leop. He is much in debt to you,
You set him off so well. VVhat will you take Sir
To beat a fellow for me, that thus wrong'd me?

Bra. To beat him say you?

Leop. Yes, beat him to lameness,
To cut his lips or nose off; any thing,
That may disfigure him.

Bra. Let me consider?
Five hundred pistolets for such a service
I think were no dear penniworth.

Zab. Five hundred!
VVhy there are of your Brother-hood in the City,
I'll undertake, shall kill a man for twenty.

Bra. Kill him? I think so; I'll kill any man
For half the mony.

Leop. And will you ask more
For a sound beating than a murder?

Bra. I Sir,
And with good reason, for a dog that's dead,
The Spanish proverb says, will never bite:
But should I beat or hurt him only, he may Recover, and kill me.

Leo. A good conclusion,
The obduracie of this rascal makes me tender.
I'll run some other course, there's your reward
VVithout the employment.

Bra. For that as you please Sir;
When you have need to kill a man, pray use me,
But I am out at beating.

Zab. What's to be done then?
Leop. I'll tell thee Zabulon, and make thee privy
To my most near designs: this stranger, which Hippolyta so dotes on, was my prisoner
When the last Virgin, I bestowed upon her,
Was made my prize; how he escaped, hereafter
I'll let thee know; and it may be the love
He bears the servant, makes him scorn the Mistris.

Zab. 'Tis not unlike; for the first time he saw her
His looks exprest so much, and for more proof
Since he came to my Ladys house, though yet
He never knew her, he hath practis'd with me
To help him to a conference, without
The knowledge of Hippolyta; which I promis'd.

Leop. And by all means perform it for their meeting,
But work it so, that my disdainful Mistris (Whom, notwithstanding all her injuries,
'Tis my hard fate to love) may see and hear them.

Zab. To what end Sir?
Leop. This Zabulon: when she sees
Who is her rival, and her Lovers baseness
To leave a Princess for her bondwoman,
The sight will make her scorn, what now she dotes on,
I'll double thy reward.

Zab. You are like to speed then:
For I confesse what you will soon believe,
We serve them best that are most apt to give.

[Exeunt.

For you, I'll place you where you shall see all, and yet be unobserv'd. Leop. That I desire too. [Exeunt.

Enter Arnoldo.

Arn. I cannot see her yet, how it afflicts me
The poyson of this place should mix it self
With her pure thoughts? 'Twas she that was commanded,
Or my eyes failed me grossly; that youth, that face
And all that noble sweetnesss. May she not live here,
And yet be honest still?

Enter Zenocia.

Zen. It is Arnoldo,
From all his dangers free; fortune I blefs thee.
My noble husband! how my joy swells in me,
But why in this place? what business hath he here?
He cannot hear of me, I am not known here.
I left him vertuous; how I shake to think now?
And how that joy I had, cools, and forsakes me?

Enter above Hippolyta and Zabulon.

This Lady is but fair, I have been thought so Without compare admired; She has bewitched him
And he forgot ———

Arn. 'Tis she again, the same ——— the same Zenocia.

Zab. There they are together. ——— Now you may marry

Hip. Peace, let 'em parly.

Arn. That you are well Zenocia, and once more
Bless my despairing eyes, with your wisht presence,
I thank the gods; but that I meet you here ———

Hip. They are acquainted.

Zab. I found that secret Madam,
When you commanded her go home: pray hear 'em.

Zen. That you meet me here, ne're blush at that Arnoldo.
Your coming comes too late: I am a woman,
And one woman with another may be trusted;
Do you fear the house?

Arn. More than a fear, I know it,
Know it not good, not honest.

Zen. VVhat do you here then?
I'th' name of vertue why do you approach it?
Will you confesse the doubt and yet pursue it?
Where have your eyes been wandring, my Arnoldo?
What constancy, what faith do you call this? Fie,
Aim at one wanton mark, and wound another?

I do confesse, the Lady fair, most beauteous,
And able to betray a strong mans liberty,
But you that have a love, a wife — you do well
To deal thus wisely with me: yet Arnoldo,
Since you are pleas'd to study a new beauty,
And think this old and ill, beaten with misery,
Study a nobler way for shame to love me,
VVrong not her honesty.

Arn. You have confirm'd me.

Zen. VVho though she be your wife, will never hinder
So much I rest a servant to your wishes,
And love your Loves, though they be my destructions,
No man shall know me, nor the share I have in thee;
No eye suspect I am able to prevent you;
For since I am a slave to this great Lady,
Whom I perceive you follow,

Arn. Be not blinded.

Zen. Fortune shall make me useful to your service,
I will speak for you.

Arn. Speak for me? you wrong me.

Zen. I will endeavour all the wayes I am able To make her think well of you; will that please?
To make her dote upon you, dote to madness,
So far against my self I will obey you.
But when that's done, and I have shewed this duty,
This great obedience, few will buy it at my price,
Thus will I shake hands with you, wish you well,
But never see you more, nor receive comfort
From any thing, Arnoldo.

[Exit.

{ Leopold places himself unseen below.

Arn. You are too tender ;
I neither doubt you, nor desire longer
To be a man, and live, than I am honest
And only yours ; our infinite affections
Abus'd us both.

Zab. Where are your favours now ?

The courtesies you shew'd this stranger, Madam ?

Hip. Have I now found the cause ?

Zab. Attend it further.

Zen. Did she invite you, do you say ?

Arn. Most cunningly,

And with a preparation of that state
I was brought in and welcom'd.

Zen. Seem'd to love you ?

Arn. Most infinitely, at first sight, most dotingly.

Zen. She is a goodly Lady.

Arn. VVondrous handfom :

At first view, being taken unprepar'd,
Your memory not present then to assist me,
She seem'd so glorious sweet, and so far stir'd me,
Nay be not jealous, there's no harm done.

Zen. Prethee—didst thou not kiss, Arnoldo ?

Arn. Yes faith did I.

Zen. And then——

Arn. I durst not, did not——

Zen. I forgive you,

Come tell the truth.

Arn. May be I lay with her.

Hip. He mocks me too, most basely.

Zen. Did ye faith ? did ye forget so far ?

Arn. Come, come, no weeping ;

I would have lyen first in my grave, believe that.
VVhy will you ask those things you would not hear ?
She is too untemperate to betray my vertues,
Too openly lascivious: had she dealt
But with that seeming modesty she might,
And stung a little Art upon her ardor,
But 'twas forgot, and I forgot to like her,
And glad I was deceiv'd. No my Zenocia,
My first love here begun, rests here unreact yet,
And here for ever.

Zen. You have made me happy,
Even in the midst of bondage blest.

Zab. You see now

What rubs are in your way.

Hip. And quickly Zabulon

I'll root 'em out.—Be sure you do this presently.

Zab. Do not you alter then.

Hip. I am resolute.

[Exit Zabulon.

Arn. To see you only I came hither last,
Drawn by no love of hers, nor base allurements,
For by this holy light I hate her heartily.

Leop. I am glad of that, you have sav'd me so much ven-
And so much fear, (geance
From this hour fair befall you.

Arn. Some means I shall make shortly to redeem you,
Till when, observe her well, and sit her temper,
Only her lust contemn.

Zen. When shall I see you ?

Arn. I will live hereabouts, and bear her fair still,
Till I can find a fit hour to redeem you.

Hip. Shut all the doors.

Arn. Who's that ?

Zen. We are betray'd,
The Lady of the house has heard our parly,
Seen us, and seen our Loves.

Hip. You courteous Gallant,
You that scorn all I can bestow, that laugh at
The afflictions, and the groans I suffer for you,
That slight and jeer my love, contemn the fortune
My favours can sling on you, have I caught you ?
Have I now found the cause ? ye fool my wishes ;
Is mine own slave, my bane ? I nourish that
That sucks up my content. I'll pray no more,

Nor woove no more ; thou shalt see foolish man,
And to thy bitter pain and anguish, look on
The vengeance I shall take, provok'd and slighted ;
Redeem her then, and steal her hence : ho Zabulon
Now to your work.

Enter Zabulon, and Servants, some holding Arnoldo, some ready with a cord to strangle Zenocia.

Arn. Lady, but hear me speak first,
As you have pity.

Hip. I have none. You taught me,
When I even hung about your neck, you scorn'd me.

Zab. Shall we pluck yet ?

Hip. No, hold a little Zabulon,
I'll pluck his heart-strings first : now am I worthy
A little of your love ?

Arn. I'll be your Servant,
Command me through what danger you shall aime at,
Let it be death.

Hip. Be sure Sir, I shall fit you.

Arn. But spare this Virgin.

Hip. I would spare that villain first,
Had cut my Fathers throat.

Arn. Bounteous Lady,
If in your sex there be that noble softness,
That tenderness of heart, women are crown'd for——

Zen. Kneel not Arnoldo, doe her not that honour,
She is not worthy such submission,
I scorn a life depends upon her pity.
Proud woman do thy worst, and arm thy anger
With thoughts as black as Hell, as hot and bloody,
I bring a patience here, shall make 'em blush,
An innocence, shall outlook thee, and death too.

Arn. Make me your slave, I give my freedom to ye,
For ever to be fetter'd to your service ;
'Twas I offended, be not so unjust then,
To strike the innocent, this gentle maid
Never intended fear and doubt against you :
She is your Servant, pay not her observance
With cruel looks, her duteous faith with death.

Hip. Am I fair now ? now am I worth your liking ?

Zen. Not fair, not to be liked, thou glorious Devil,
Thou vernisht piece of lust, thou painted fury.

Arn. Speak gently sweet, speak gently.

Zen. I'll speak nobly.

'Tis not the saving of a life I aim at,
Mark me lascivious woman, mark me truly,
And then consider, how I weigh thy anger.
Life is no longer mine, nor dear unto me,
Than usefull to his honour I preserve it.
If thou hadst studied all the courtesies
Humanity and noble blood are linkt to,
Thou couldst not have propounded such a benefit,
Nor heapt upon me such unlookt for honour
As dying for his sake, to be his Martyr,
'Tis such a grace.

Hip. You shall not want that favour,
Let your bones work miracles.

Arn. Dear Lady
By those fair eyes——

Hip. There is but this way left ye
To save her life.——

Arn. Speak it, and I embrace it.

Hip. Come to my private chamber presently,
And there, what love and I command——

Arn. I'll doe it,
Be comforted Zenocia.

Zen. Do not do this
To save me, do not lose your self I charge you,
I charge you by your love, that love your bear me ;
That love, that constant love you have twin'd to me,
By all your promises, take heed you keep 'em,
Now is your constant tryal. If thou dost this,
Or mov'st one foot, to guide thee to her lust,

My curses and eternal hate pursue thee.
Redeem me at the base price of disloyalty?
Must my undoubted honesty be thy Bawd too?
Go and intwine thy self about that body;
Tell her, for my life thou hast lost thine honour,
Pull'd all thy vows from heaven, basely, most basely
Stoop'd to the servile flames of that foul woman,
To add an hour to me that hate thee for it,
Know thee not again, nor name thee for a Husband.

Arn. What shall I do to save her?
Hip. How now, what hast there?

Enter a Servant.

Ser. The Governour, attended with some Gentlemen,
Are newly entred, to speak with your Ladiship.

Hip. Pox o' their business, relieve her for this hour,
I shall have other time.

Arn. Now fortune help us.

Hip. I'll meet 'em presently: retire awhile all. [Exeunt.]

Zab. You rise to day upon your right side Lady;
You know the danger too, and may prevent it,
And if you suffer her to perish thus,
As she must do, and suddenly, believe it,
Unless you stand her friend; you know the way on't,
I guess you poorly love her, less your fortune.
Let her know nothing, and perform this matter,
There are hours ordained for several businesses,
You understand.

Arn. I understand you Bawd Sir,
And such a Counsellour I never car'd for.

Enter the Governour, Clodio, Leopold, Charino and Attendants at one door, Hippolyta at the other.

Hip. Your Lordship does me honour.

Gover. Fair Hippolyta,
I am come to ease you of a charge.

Hip. I keep none
I count a burthen Sir: and yet I lye too.

Gover. Which is the Maid; is she here?

Clod. Yes Sir,
This is she, this is Zenocia,
The very same I sued to your Lordship for.

Zen. Clodio again? more misery? more ruin?
Under what angry star is my life govern'd?

Gov. Come hither Maid, you are once more a free woman,
Here I discharge your bonds.

Arn. Another smile,
Another trick of fortune to betray us!

Hip. Why does your Lordship use me so unnobly?
Against my will to take away my bond-woman?

Gov. She was no lawful prize, therefore no bond-woman:
She's of that Country we hold friendship with,
And ever did, and therefore to be used
With entertainment, fair and courteous.
The breach of League in us gives foul example,
Therefore you must be pleas'd to think this honest;
Did you know what she was?

Leop. Not till this instant;
For had I known her, she had been no prisoner.

Gov. There, take the Maid, she is at her own dispose now,
And if there be ought else to do your honour
Any poor service in——

Clod. I am vowed your servant.

Arn. Your Father's here too, that's our only comfort,
And in a Country now, we stand free people,
Where Clodio has no power, be comforted.

Zen. I fear some trick yet.

Arn. Be not so dejected.

Gover. You must not be displeas'd; so farewell Lady.
Come Gentlemen; Captain, you must with me too,
I have a little business.

Leop. I attend your Lordship:
Now my way's free, and my hope's Lord again.

[Exeunt all but Hip. and Zab.]

Hip. D'ye jeer me now ye are going?
I may live yet—— to make you howl both.

Zab. You might have done; you had power then,
But now the chains are off, the command lost,
And such a story they will make of this
To laugh out lazie time.

Hip. No means yet left me?
For now I burst with anger: none to satisfy me?
No comfort? no revenge?

Zab. You speak too late;
You might have had all these, your useful servants,
Had you been wife, and suddain: what power, or will
Over her beauty, have you now? by violence
To constrain his love; she is as free as you are,
And no law can impeach her liberty,
And whilst she is so, Arnoldo will despise you.

Hip. Either my love or anger must be satisfied,
Or I must dye.

Zab. I have a way wou'd do it,
Wou'd do it yet, protect me from the Law.

Hip. From any thing; thou knowest what power I have,
What mony, and what friends.

Zab. 'Tis a devilish one:
But such must now be us'd: walk in, I'll tell you;
And if you like it, if the Devil can do any thing——

Hip. Devil, or what thou wilt, so I be satisfied. [Ex.]

Enter Sulpitia, and Jaques.

Sulp. This is the rarest and the lustiest fellow,
And so bestirs himself——

Jaq. Give him breath Mistress,
You'll melt him else.

Sulp. He does perform such wonders——
The women are mad on him.

Jaq. Give him breath I say;
The man is but a man, he must have breath.

Sulp. How many had he yesterday?
And they paid bravely too.

Jaq. About fourteen,
But still I cry give breath, spare him and have him.

Sulp. Five Dames to day; this was a small stage,
He may endure five more.

Jaq. Breath, breath I cry still;
Body o' me give breath, the man's a lost man else.
Feed him and give him breath.

Enter 2 Gentlewomen.

Sulp. Welcome Gentlewomen,
Y'are very welcome. (fellow

1 Gen. We hear you have a lusty and well complexion'd
That does rare tricks; my Sister and my self here,
Would trifle out an hour or two, so please you.

Sulp. Jaques, conduct 'em in. [Ex. Jaq. and Gent.]

Sulp. Good pay still, good round pay, this happy fellow
Will set me up again; he brings in gold
Faster than I have leisure to receive it.

O that his body were not flesh and fading;
But I'll so pap him up—— nothing too dear for him;
What a sweet scent he has?—Now what news Jaques?

Jaq. He cannot last, I pity the poor man,
I suffer for him; two Coaches of young City dames,
And they drive as the Devil were in the wheels,
Are ready now to enter: and behind these
An old dead-palsied Lady in a Litter,
And she makes all the haste she can: the man's lost,
You may gather up his dry bones to make Nine-pins,
But for his flesh.

Sulp. These are but easie labours
Yet, for I know he must have rest.

Ja. He must—— you'll beat him off his legs else presently.

Sul. Go in, and bid him please himself, I am pleas'd too:
To morrow's a new day; but if he can
I would have him take pity o' the old Lady.

Alas 'tis charity.

Faq. I'll tell him all this,
And if he be not too fool-hardy.

Enter Zabulon.

Sulp. How now?

What news with you?

Zab. You must presently

Shew all the art you have, and for my Lady.

Sulp. She may command.

Zab. You must not dream nor trifle.

Sulp. Which way?

Zab. A spell you must prepare, a powerful one,
Peruse but these directions, you shall find all;
There is the picture too, be quick, and faithful,
And do it with that strength—when 'tis perform'd,
Pitch your reward at what you please, you have it.

Sulp. I'll do my best, and suddenly: but hark ye,
Will you never lye at home again?

Zab. Excuse me,
I have too much business yet.

Sulp. I am right glad on't.

Zab. Think on your business, so farewell.

Sulp. I'll do it.

Zab. Within this hour I'll visit you again
And give you greater lights.

Sulp. I shall observe ye;
This brings a brave reward, bravely I'll do it,
And all the hidden art I have, express in't.

[Exeunt at both doors.]

Enter Rutilio with a Night-cap.

Rut. Now do I look as if I were Crow-trodden,
Fye, how my hams shrink under me! O me,
I am broken-winded too; is this a life?
Is this the recreation I have aim'd at?
I had a body once, a handsome body,
And wholesome too. Now I appear like a rascal,
That had been hung a year or two in Gibbets.
Fye how I faint! women? keep me from women;
Place me before a Cannon, 'tis a pleasure;
Stretch me upon a Rack, a recreation;
But women? women? O the Devil! women?
Curtius Gulf was never half so dangerous.
Is there no way to find the Trap-door again,
And fall into the Cellar, and be taken?
No lucky fortune to direct me that way?
No Gallies to be got, nor yet no Gallows?
For I fear nothing now, no earthly thing
But these unsatisfied Men-leeches, women.
How devilishly my bones ache! O the old Lady!
I have a kind of waiting-woman lyes cross my back too,
O how she stings! no treason to deliver me?
Now what are you? do you mock me?

Enter 3. with Night-caps very faintly.

1 No Sir, no;
We were your Predecessors in this place.

2 And come to see you bear up.

Rut. Good Gentlemen;
You seem to have a snuffing in your head Sir,
A parlous snuffing, but this same dampish air——

2 A dampish air indeed.

Rut. Blow your face tenderly,
Your nose will ne're endure it: mercy o' me,
What are men chang'd to here? is my nose fast yet?
Me thinks it shakes i'th' hilts: pray tell me gentlemen,
How long is't since you flourish'd here?

3 Not long since.

Rut. Move your self easily, I see you are tender,
Nor long endured.

2 The labour was so much Sir,
And so few to perform it——

Rut. Must I come to this?

And draw my legs after me like a lame Dog?

I cannot run away, I am too feeble:

Will you sue for this place again Gentlemen? (plexions.

1 No truly Sir, the place has been too warm for our com.

2 We have enough on't, rest you merry Sir,
We came but to congratulate your fortune,
You have abundance.

3 Bear your fortune soberly,
And so we leave you to the next fair Lady. [Ex. the 3.]

Rut. Stay but a little, and I'll meet you Gentlemen,
At the next Hospital: there's no living thus,
Nor am I able to endure it longer,
With all the helps and heats that can be given me,
I am at my trot already: they are fair and young
Most of the women that repair unto me,
But they stick on like Burs, shake me like Feathers.

Enter Sulpitia.

More Women yet?

Would I were honestly married
To any thing that had but half a face,
And not a groat to keep her, nor a smock,
That I might be civilly merry when I pleased,
Rather than labouring in these Fulling-mills.

Sulp. By this the spell begins to work: you are lusty,
I see you bear up bravely yet.

Rut. Do you hear Lady,
Do not make a game-bear of me, to play me hourly,
And fling on all your whelps; it would not hold;
Play me with some discretion; to day one course,
And two dayes hence another.

Sulp. If you be so angry
Pay back the mony I redeem'd you at
And take your course, I can have men enough:
You have cost me a hundred crowns since you came hither,
In Broths and strengthening Caudles; till you do pay me,
If you will eat and live, you shall endeavour,
I'll chain you to't else.

Rut. Make me a Dog-kennel,
I'll keep your house and bark, and feed on bare bones,
And be whipt out o' doors,
Do you mark me Lady? whipt,
I'll eat old shoes.

Enter Duarte.

Dua. In this house I am told
There is a stranger, of a goodly person,
And such a one there was; if I could see him,
I yet remember him.

Sulp. Your business Sir,
If it be for a woman, ye are couzen'd,
I keep none here.

[Exit.]

Dua. Certain this is the Gentleman;
The very same.

Rut. Death, if I had but mony,
Or any friend to bring me from this bondage,
I would Thresh, set up a Coblers shop, keep Hogs,
And feed with 'em, sell Tinder-boxes,
And Knights of Ginger-bread, Thatch for three
Half pence a day, and think it Lordly,
From this base Stallion trade: why does he eye me,
Eye me so narrowly?

Dua. It seems you are troubled Sir,
I heard you speak of want.

Rut. 'Tis better hearing
Far, than relieving Sir.

Dua. I do not think so, you know me not.

Rut. Not yet that I remember.

Dua. You shall, and for your friend: I am beholding to ye,
Greatly beholding Sir; if you remember,
You fought with such a man, they call'd Duarte,
A proud distemper'd man: he was my enemy,
My mortal foe, you slew him fairly, nobly.

Rut. Speak softly Sir, you do not mean to betray me,

I wisht the Gallows, now th'are coming fairly.

Dua. Be confident, for as I live, I love you,
And now you shall perceive it : for that service,
Me, and my purse command : there, take it to ye,
'Tis gold, and no small sum, a thousand Duckets,
Supply your want.

Rut. But do you do this faithfully ?

Dua. If I mean ill, spit in my face and kick me :
In what else I may serve you, Sir——

Rut. I thank you,

This is as strange to me as Knights adventures.
I have a project, 'tis an honest one,
And now I'll tempt my fortune.

Dua. Trust me with it.

Rut. You are so good and honest I must trust ye,
'Tis but to carry a letter to a Lady
That sav'd my life once.

Dua. That will be most thankful,
I will do't with all care.

Rut. Where are you, white-broth ?
Now lusty blood,
Come in, and tell your mony :
'Tis ready here, no threats, nor no orations,
Nor prayers now.

Sulp. You do not mean to leave me.

Rut. I'll live in Hell sooner than here, and cooler.
Come quickly come, dispatch, this air's unwhosom :
Quickly good Lady, quickly to't.

Sulp. Well, since it must be,
The next I'll fetter faster sure, and closer.

Rut. And pick his bones, as y'have done mine, pox take ye.

Dua. At my lodging for a while, you shall be quartered,
And there take Physick for your health.

Rut. I thank ye,
I have found my Angel now too, if I can keep him.

[Exeunt omnes.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Rutilio and Duarte.

Rut. YOU like the Letter ?

Dua. Yes, but I must tell you
You tempt a desperate hazard, to sollicite
The mother, (and the grieved one too, 'tis rumor'd)
Of him you slew so lately.

Rut. I have told you
Some proofs of her affection, and I know not
A nearer way to make her satisfaction
For a lost Son, than speedily to help her
To a good Husband ; one that will beget
Both Sons and Daughters, if she be not barren.
I have had a breathing now, and have recovered
What I lost in my late service, 'twas a hot one :
It fired and fired me ; but all thanks to you Sir,
You have both freed and cool'd me.

Dua. What is done Sir,
I thought well done, and was in that rewarded,
And therefore spare your thanks.

Rut. I'll no more Whoring :
This fencing 'twixt a pair of sheets, more wears one
Than all the exercise in the world besides.
To be drunk with good Canary, a meer Julip
Or like gourd-water to't ; twenty Surfeits
Come short of one nights work there. If I get this Lady
As ten to one I shall, I was ne're denied yet,
I will live wondrous honestly ; walk before her
Gravely and demurely
And then instruct my family ; you are sad,
What do you muse on Sir ?

Dua. Truth I was thinking
What course to take for the delivery of your letter,

And now I have it : but faith did this Lady
(For do not gull your self) for certain know,
You kill'd her Son ?

Rut. Give me a Book I'll swear't ;
Deny'd me to the Officers, that pursu'd me,
Brought me her self to th' door, then gave me gold
To bear my charges, and shall I make doubt then
But that she lov'd me ? I am confident
Time having ta'ne her grief off, that I shall be Most welcome to her : for then to have wooed her
Had been unseasonable.

Dua. Well Sir, there's more mony,
To may you handsome ; I'll about your business ;
You know where you must stay ?

Rut. There you shall find me :
Would I could meet my Brother now, to know,
Whether the Jew, his Genius, or my Christian,
Has prov'd the better friend.

[Exit.]

Dua. O who would trust
Dceiving woman ! or believe that one
The best, and most Canoniz'd ever was
More than a seeming goodness ? I could rail now
Against the sex, and curse it ; but the theam
And way's too common : yet that Guioamar
My Mother ; (nor let that forbid her to be The wonder of our nation) she that was
Mark'd out the great example, for all Matrons
Both Wife and Widow ; she that in my breeding
Exprest the utmost of a Mothers care,
And tenderness to a Son ; she that yet feigns
Such sorrow for me ; good God, that this mother ;
After all this, should give up to a stranger,
The wreak she ow'd her Son ; I fear her honour.
That he was sav'd, much joyes me, and grieve only
That she was his preserver. I'll try further,
And by this Engine, find whether the tears,
Of which she is so prodigal, are for me,
Or us'd to cloak her base hypocrisie.

[Exit.]

Enter Hippolyta and Sulpitia.

Hip. Are you assur'd the charm prevails ?

Sulp. Do I live ?

Or do you speak to me ? Now this very instant
Health takes its last leave of her ; meager paleness
Like winter, nips the Roses and the Lilies,
The Spring that youth, and love adorn'd her face with.
To force affection, is beyond our art,
For I have prov'd all means that hell has taught me,
Or the malice of a woman, which exceeds it,
To change Arnoldo's love, but to no purpose :
But for your bond-woman——

Hip. Let her pine and dye ;
She remov'd, which like a brighter Sun,
Obscures my beams, I may shine out again,
And as I have been, be admir'd and fought to :
How long has she to live ?

Sulp. Lady, before
The Sun twice rise and set, be confident,
She is but dead ; I know my Charm hath found her.
Nor can the Governours Guard ; her lovers tears ;
Her Fathers sorrow, or his power that freed her,
Defend her from it.

Enter Zabulon.

Zab. All things have succeeded,
As you could wish ; I saw her brought sick home ;
The image of pale death, stamp'd on her fore-head.
Let me adore this second Hecate,
This great Commandress, of the fatal Sisters,
That as she pleases, can cut short, or lengthen
The thread of life.

Hip. Where was she when the enchantment
First seiz'd upon her ?

Zab. Taking the fresh air,

In

In the company of the Governour, and Count Clodio,
Arnoldo too, was present with her Father,
When, in a moment (so the servants told me)
As she was giving thanks to the Governour,
And Clodio, for her unexpected freedom,
As if she had been blasted, she sunk down,
To their amazement.

Hip. 'Tis thy master-piece
Which I will so reward, that thou shalt fix here;
And with the hazard of thy life, no more
Make trial of thy powerful Art; which known
Our Laws call death: off with this Magical Robe,
And be thy self.

Enter Governour, Clodio, and Charino.

Sup. Stand close, you shall hear more.

Man. You must have patience; all rage is vain now,
And piety forbids, that we should question
What is decreed above, or ask a reason
Why heaven determines this or that way of us.

Clod. Heaven has no hand in't; 'tis a work of hell.
Her life hath been so innocent, all her actions
So free from the suspicion of crime,
As rather she deserves a Saints place here,
Than to endure, what now her sweetness suffers.

Char. Not for her fault, but mine Sir, Zenocia suffers:
The sin I made, when I sought to rase down
Arnoldo's love, built on a Rock of truth,
Now to the height is punish'd. I profess,
Had he no birth, nor parts, the present sorrow
He now expresses for her, does deserve her
Above all Kings, though such had been his rivals.

Clod. All ancient stories, of the love of Husbands
To vertuous Wives, be now no more remembered.

Char. The tales of Turtles, ever be forgotten,
Or, for his sake believ'd.

Man. I have heard, there has been
Between some married pairs, such sympathy,
That th' Husband has felt really the throws
His Wife then teeming suffers, this true grief
Confirms, 'tis not impossible.

Clod. We shall find
Fit time for this hereafter; let's use now
All possible means to help her.

Man. Care, nor cost,
Nor what Physicians can do, shall be wanting;
Make use of any means or men.

Char. You are noble. [Exeunt Man. Clod. and Char.]

Sulp. Ten Colledges of Doctors shall not save her.
Her fate is in your hand.

Hip. Can I restore her?

Sulp. If you command my Art.

Hip. I'll dye my self first.

And yet I'll go visit her, and see
This miracle of sorrow in Arnoldo's:
And 'twere for me, I should change places with her,
And dye most happy, such a lovers tears
Were a rich monument, but too good for her,
Whose misery I glory in: come Sulpitia,
You shall along with me, good Zabulon
Be not far off.

Zab. I will attend you Madam. [Exeunt.]

Enter Duarte, and a Servant.

Ser. I have serv'd you from my youth, and ever
You have found me faithful: that you live's a treasure
I'll lock up here; nor shall it be let forth,
But when you give me warrant.

Dua. I rely
Upon thy faith; nay, no more protestations,
Too many of them will call that in question,
Which now I doubt not: she is there?

Ser. Alone too,
But take it on my life, your entertainment,

Appearing as you are, will be but course,
For the displeasure I shall undergo
I am prepar'd.

Dua. Leave me, I'll stand the hazard. [Exit Servant.]
The silence that's observ'd, her close retirements,
No visitants admitted, not the day;
These fable colours, all signs of true sorrow,
Or hers is deeply counterfeit. I'll look nearer;
Manners give leave—— she sits upon the ground;
By heaven she weeps; my picture in her hand too;
She kisses it and weeps again.

Enter Guiomar.

Gui. Who's there?

Dua. There is no starting back now Madam.

Gui. Ha, another murderer! I'll not protect thee,
Though I have no more Sons.

Dua. Your pardon Lady,
There's no such foul fact taints me.

Gui. What makes thou here then?
Where are my servants, do none but my sorrows
Attend upon me? speak, what brought thee hither?

Dua. A will to give you comfort.

Gui. Thou art but a man.

And 'tis beyond a humane reach to do it,
If thou could raise the dead out of their graves,
Bid time run back, make me now what I was,
A happy Mother; gladly I would hear thee,
But that's impossible.

Dua. Please you but read this;
You shall know better there, why I am sent,
Than if I should deliver it.

Gui. From whom comes it?

Dua. That will instruct you. I suspect this stranger,
Yet she spake something that holds such alliance
With his reports; I know not what to think on't;
What a frown was there? she looks me through, & through,
Now reads again, now pauses, and now smiles;
And yet there's more of anger in't than mirth;
These are strange changes; oh I understand it,
She's full of serious thoughts.

Gui. You are just, you Heavens,
And never do forget to hear their prayers,
That truly pay their vows, the defer'd vengeance,
For you, and my words sake so long defer'd,
Under which as a mountain my heart groans yet
When 'twas despair'd of, now is offer'd to me;
And if I lose it, I am both wayes guilty.
The womans mask, dissimulation help me.
Come hither friend, I am sure you know the Gentleman,
That sent these charms.

Dua. Charms Lady?

Gui. These charms;

I well may call them so, they've won upon me,
More than ere letter did; thou art his friend,
(The confidence he has in thee, confirms it)
And therefore I'll be open breasted to thee;
To hear of him, though yet I never saw him,
Was most desir'd of all men; let me blush,
And then I'll say I love him.

Dua. All men see,
In this a womans vertue.

Gui. I expected
For the courtesie I did, long since to have seen him,
And though I then forbid it, you men know,
Between our hearts and tongues there's a large distance;
But I'll excuse him, may be hitherto
He has forborn it, in respect my Son
Fell by his hand.

Dua. And reason Lady.

Gui. No, he did me a pleasure in't, a riotous fellow,
And with that insolent, not worth the owning;
I have indeed kept a long solemn sorrow,
For my friends sake partly; but especially
For his long absence.

Dua.

Dua. O the Devil.

Guio. Therefore
Bid him be speedy; a Priest shall be ready
To tye the holy knot; this kifs I fend him,
Deliver that and bring him.

Dua. I am dumb:
A good cause I have now, and a good sword,
And something I shall do, I wait upon you.

[Exeunt.

Enter Manuel, Charino, Arnolde, Zenocia, born
in a chair. 2 Doctors, Clodio.

Doct. Give her more air, she dyes else.

Arn. O thou dread power,
That mad'st this all, and of thy workmanship
This virgin wife, the Master piece, look down on her;
Let her minds virtues, cloth'd in this fair garment,
That worthily deserves a better name
Than flesh and bloud, now sue, and prevail for her.
Or if those are denyed, let innocence,
To which all passages in Heaven stand open,
Appear in her white robe, before thy throne;
And mediate for her: or if this age of sin
Be worthy of a miracle, the Sun
In his diurnal progress never saw
So sweet a subject to imploy it on.

Man. Wonders are ceas'd Sir, we must work by means.

Arno. 'Tis true, and such reverend Physicians are;
To you thus low I fall then; so may you ever
Be stil'd the hands of Heaven, natures restorers;
Get wealth and honours; and by your success,
In all your undertakings, propagate
Your great opinion in the world, as now
You use your saving art; for know good Gentlemen,
Besides the fame, and all that I possess,
For a reward, posterity shall stand
Indebted to you, for (as Heaven forbid it)
Should my Zenocia dye, robbing this age
Of all that's good or gracefull, times succeeding,
The story of her pure life not yet perfect,
Will suffer in the want of her example.

Doct. Were all the world to perish with her, we Can do no more, than what art and experience
Give us assurance of, we have us'd all means
To find the cause of her disease, yet cannot;
How should we then, promise the cure?

Arn. Away,
I did bely you, when I charg'd you with
The power of doing, ye are meer names only,
And even your best perfection, accidental;
Whatever malady thou art, or Spirit,
As some hold all diseases that afflict us,
As love already makes me sensible
Of half her sufferings, ease her of her part,
And let me stand the butt of thy fell malice,
And I will swear th'art mercifull.

Doct. Your hand Lady;
What a strange heat is here? bring some warm water.

Arn. She shall use nothing that is yours; my sorrow
Provides her of a better bath, my tears
Shall do that office.

Zeno. O my best Arnolde!
The truest of all lovers! I would live
Were heaven so pleas'd, but to reward your sorrow
With my true service; but since that's denied me,
May you live long and happy: do not suffer
(By your affection to me I conjure you)
My sickness to infect you; though much love
Makes you too subject to it.

Arn. In this only
Zenocia wrongs her servant; can the body
Subsist, the Soul departed? 'tis as easie
As I to live without you; I am your husband,
And long have been so, though our adverse fortune,
Banding us from one hazard to another,

Would never grant me so much happiness,
As to pay a husbands debt; despite of fortune;
In death I'll follow you, and guard mine own;
And there enjoy what here my fate forbids me.

Clod. So true a sorrow, and so feelingly
Express'd, I never read of.

Man. I am struck
With wonder to behold it, as with pity.

Char. If you that are a stranger, suffer for them,
Being tied no further than humanity
Leads you to soft compassion; think great Sir,
What of necessity I must endure,
That am a Father?

Hippolyta, Zabulon, and Sulpitia at the door.

Zab. Wait me there, I hold it
Unfit to have you seen; as I find cause,
You shall proceed.

Man. You are welcom Lady.
Hip. Sir, I come to do a charitable office,
How does the patient?

Clod. You may enquire
Of more than one; for two are sick, and deadly,
He languishes in her, her health's despair'd of,
And in hers, his.

Hip. 'Tis a strange spectacle,
With what a patience they sit unmov'd?
Are they not dead already?

Doct. By her pulse,
She cannot last a day.

Arn. Oh by that summons,
I know my time too!

Hip. Look to the man.

Clod. Apply
Your Art, to save the Lady, preserve her,
A town is your reward.

Hip. I'll treble it,
In ready gold, if you restore Arnolde;
For in his death I dye too.

Clod. Without her
I am no more.

Arn. Are you there Madam? now
You may feast on my miseries; my coldness
In answering your affections, or hardness,
Give it what name you please, you are reveng'd of;
For now you may perceive, our thred of life
Was spun together, and the poor Arnolde
Made only to enjoy the best Zenocia,
And not to serve the use of any other;
And in that she may equal; my Lord Clodio
Had long since else enjoyed her, nor could I
Have been so blind, as not to see your great
And many excellencies far, far beyond
Or my deservings, or my hopes; we are now
Going our latest journey, and together,
Our only comfort we desire, pray give it,
Your charity to our ashes, such we must be,
And not to curse our memories.

Hip. I am much mov'd.

Clod. I am wholly overcome, all love to women
Farewell for ever; ere you dye, your pardon;
And yours Sir; had she many years to live,
Perhaps I might look on her, as a Brother,
But as a lover never; and since all
Your sad misfortunes had original
From the barbarous Custom practis'd in my Country,
Heaven witness, for your sake I here release it;
So to your memory, chaste Wives and Virgins
Shall ever pay their vowes. I give her to you;
And wish, she were so now, as when my lust
Forc'd you to quit the Country.

Hip. It is in vain
To strive with destiny, here my dotage ends;
Look up Zenocia, health in me speaks to you;

She gives him to you, that by divers ways,
So long has kept him from you : and repent not,
That you were once my servant, for which health
In recompence of what I made you suffer,
The hundred thousand Crowns, the City owes me,
Shall be your dower.

Man. 'Tis a magnificent gift,
Had it been timely given.

Hip. It is believe it, Sulpitia.

Enter a Servant, and Sulpitia.

Sulp. Madam.

Hip. Quick, undoe the charm ;
Ask not a reason why ; let it suffice,
It is my will.

Sulp. Which I obey and gladly.

[Exit.

Man. Is to be married, sayest thou ?

Ser. So she sayes Sir,
And does desire your presence.

They are born off in chairs.

Man. And tell her I'll come.

Hip. Pray carry them to their rest ; for though already,
They do appear as dead, let my life pay for't,
If they recover not.

Man. What you have warranted,
Assure your self, will be expected from you ;
Look to them carefully ; and till the tryal,——

Hip. Which shall not be above four hours.

Man. Let me

Intreat your companies : there is something
Of weight invites me hence.

All. We'll wait upon you.

[Exeunt.

Enter Guiomar, and Servants.

Gui. You understand what my directions are,
And what they guide you to ; the faithfull promise
You have made me all.

All. We do and will perform it.

Gui. The Governour will not fail to be here presently ;
Retire a while, till you shall find occasion,
And bring me word, when they arrive.

All. Wee shall Madam.

Gui. Only stay you to entertain.

Ser. I am ready.

Gui. I wonder at the bold, and practis'd malice,
Men ever have o' foot against our honours,
That nothing we can do, never so vertuous,
No shape put on so pious, no not think
What a good is, be that good ne're so noble,
Never so laden with admir'd example,
But still we end in lust ; our aims, our actions,
Nay, even our charities, with lust are branded ;
Why should this stranger else, this wretched stranger,
Whose life I sav'd at what dear price sticks here yet,
Why should he hope ? he was not here an hour,
And certainly in that time, I may swear it
I gave him no loose look, I had no reason ;
Unless my tears were flames, my curses courtships ;
The killing of my Son, a kindness to me.
Why should he fend to me, or with what safety
(Examining the ruine he had wrought me)
Though at that time, my pious pity found him,
And my word fixt ; I am troubled, strongly troubled.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. The Gentlemen are come.

Gui. Then bid 'em welcom—I must retire. [Exit.

Enter Rutilio, and Duarte.

Ser. You are welcom Gentlemen.

Rut. I thank you friend, I would speak with your Lady.

Ser. I'll let her understand.

Rut. It shall besit you.

How do I look Sir, in this handsome trim ? [Exit Servant.
Me thinks I am wondrous brave.

Duar. You are very decent.

Rut. These by themselves, without more helps of nature,
Would set a woman hard ; I know 'em all,
And where their first aims light ; I'll lay my head on't,
I'll take her eye, as soon as she looks on me,
And if I come to speak once, woe be to her,
I have her in a nooze, she cannot scape me ;
I have their several lasts.

Dua. You are throughly studied,
But tell me Sir, being unacquainted with her,
As you confesse you are——

Rut. That's not an hours work,
I'll make a Nun forget her beads in two hours.

Dua. She being set in years, next none of those lusters
Appearing in her eye, that warm the fancy ;
Nor nothing in her face, but handsom ruines.

Rut. I love old stories : those live believ'd, Authentique,
When 20. of your modern faces are call'd in,
For new opinion, paintings, and corruptions ;
Give me an old confirm'd face ; besides she sav'd me,
She sav'd my life, have I not cause to love her ?
She's rich and of a constant state, a fair one,
Have I not cause to wooe her ? I have tryed sufficient
All your young Phillies, I think this back has try'd 'em,
And smarterd for it too : they run away with me,
Take bitt between the teeth, and play the Devils ;
A staied pace now becomes my years ; a sure one,
Where I may sit and crack no girths.

Dua. How miserable,
If my Mother should confirm, what I suspect now,
Beyond all humane cure were my condition !
Then I shall wish, this body had been so too.
Here comes the Lady Sir.

Enter Guiomar.

Rut. Excellent Lady,
To shew I am a creature, bound to your service,
And only yours——

Gui. Keep at that distance Sir ;
For if you stir——

Rut. I am obedient.
She has found already, I am for her turn ;
With what a greedy hawks eye she beholds me ?
Mark how she musters all my parts.

Gui. A goodly Gentleman,
Of a more manly set, I never look'd on. (of 'em.

Rut. Mark, mark her eyes still ; mark but the carriage

Gui. How happy am I now, since my Son fell,
He fell not by a base unnooble hand ?

As that still troubled me ; how far more happy
Shall my revenge be, since the Sacrifice,
I offer to his grave, shall be both worthy
A Sons untimely loss, and a Mothers sorrow ?

Rut. Sir, I am made believe it ; she is mine own,
I told you what a spell I carried with me,
All this time does she spend in contemplation
Of that unmatch'd delight : I shall be thankfull to ye ;
And if you please to know my house, to use it ;
To take it for your own.

Gui. Who waits without there ?

Enter Guard, and Servants, they seize upon Rut. and bind him.

Rut. How now ? what means this, Lady ?

Gui. Bind him fast.

Rut. Are these the bride-laces you prepare for me ?
The colours that you give ?

Dua. Fye Gentle Lady,
This is not noble dealing.

Gui. Be you fatisfied,
If seems you are a stranger to this meaning,
You shall not be so long. (mens persecutions ?

Rut. Do you call this wooing—— Is there no end of wo-
Must I needs fool into mine own destruction ?
Have I not had fair warnings, and enough too ?

Still

Still pick the Devils teeth? you are not mad Lady;
Do I come fairly, and like a Gentleman,
To offer you that honour?

Guio. You are deceiv'd Sir,
You come besotted, to your own destruction:
I sent not for you; what honour can ye add to me,
That brake that staff of honour, my age lean'd on?
That rob'd me of that right, made me a Mother?
Hear me thou wretched man, hear me with terrour,
And let thine own bold folly shake thy Soul,
Hear me pronounce thy death, that now hangs o're thee,
Thou desperate fool; who bad thee seek this ruine?
What mad unmanly fate, made thee discover
Thy curst face to me again? was't not enough
To have the fair protection of my house,
When misery and justice close pursued thee?
When thine own bloody sword, cryed out against thee,
Hatcht in the life of him? yet I forgave thee.
My hospitable word, even when I saw
The goodliest branch of all my blood lopt from me,
Did I not seal still to thee?

Rut. I am gone.

Guio. And when thou went'st, to Imp thy miserie,
Did I not give thee means? but hark ungratefull,
Was it not thus? to hide thy face and fly me?
To keep thy name for ever from my memory?
Thy curst blood and kindred? did I not swear then,
If ever, (in this wretched life thou hast left me,
Short and unfortunate,) I saw thee again,
Or came but to the knowledge, where thou wandrest,
To call my vow back, and pursue with vengeance
With all the miseries a Mother suffers?

Rut. I was born to be hang'd, there's no avoiding it.

Guio. And dar'st thou with this impudence appear here?
Valk like the winding sheet my Son was put in,
Stand with those wounds?

Dua. I am happy now again;
Happy the hour I fell, to find a Mother,
So pious, good, and excellent in sorrows.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. The Governour's come in.

Guio. O let him enter.

Rut. I have fool'd my self a fair thred of all my fortunes,
This strikes me most; not that I fear to perish,
But that this unmannerly boldness has brought me to it.

Enter Governour, Clodio, Charino.

Gov. Are these fit preparations for a wedding Lady?
I came prepar'd a guest.

Guio. O give me justice;
As ever you will leave a vertuous name,
Do justice, justice, Sir.

Gov. You need not ask it,
I am bound to it.

Guio. Justice upon this man
That kill'd my Son.

Gov. Do you confes the act?

Rut. Yes Sir.

Clod. Rutilio?

Char. 'Tis the same.

Clod. How fell he thus?

Here will be sorrow for the good Arnoldo.

Gov. Take heed Sir what you say.

Rut. I have weigh'd it well,
I am the man, nor is it life I start at;
Only I am unhappy I am poor,
Poor in expence of lives, there I am wretched,
That I have not two lives lent me for his sacrifice;
One for her Son, another for her sorrows.
Excellent Lady, now rejoyce again,
For though I cannot think, y'are pleas'd in blood,
Nor with that greedy thirst pursue your vengeance;
The tenderness, even in those tears denies that;

Yet let the world believe, you lov'd Duarte;
The unmatched courtesies you have done my miseries,
Without this forfeit to the law, would charge me
To tender you this life, and proud 'twould please you.

Guio. Shall I have justice?

Gov. Yes.

Rut. I'll ask it for ye,

I'll follow it my self, against my self.
Sir, 'Tis most fit I dye; dispatch it quickly,
The monstrous burthen of that grief the labours with
Will kill her else, then blood on blood lyes on me;
Had I a thousand lives, I'd give 'em all,
Before I would draw one tear more from that vertue.

Guio. Be not too cruel Sir, and yet his bold sword—
But his life cannot restore that, he's a man too—
Of a fair promise, but alas my Sou's dead;
If I have justice, must it kill him? Gov. Yes.

Guio. If I have not, it kills me, strong and goodly:
Why should he perish too?

Gov. It lies in your power,
You only may accuse him, or may quit him.

Clod. Be there no other witnesses?

Guio. Not any.

And if I save him, will not the world proclaim,
I have forgot a Son, to save a murderer?
And yet he looks not like one, he looks manly.

Hip. Pity so brave a Gentleman should perish.
She cannot be so hard, so cruel hearted.

Guio. Will you pronounce? yet stay a little Sir.

Rut. Rid your self, Lady, of this misery;
And let me go, I do but breed more tempests,
With which you are already too much shaken.

Guio. Do now, pronounce; I will not hear.

Dua. You shall not,
Yet turn and see good Madam.

Gov. Do not wonder.
'Tis he, restor'd again, thank the good Doctor;
Pray do not stand amaz'd, it is Duarte;
Is well, is safe again.

Guio. O my sweet Son,
I will not press my wonder now with questions—
Sir, I am sorry for that cruelty,
I urg'd against you.

Rut. Madam, it was but justice.

Dua. 'Tis true, the Doctor heal'd this body again,
But this man heal'd my soul, made my minde perfect,
The good sharp lessons his sword read to me, sav'd me;
For which, if you lov'd me, dear Mother,
Honour and love this man.

Guio. You sent this letter?

Rut. My boldness makes me blush now.

Guio. I'll wipe off that,
And with this kiss, I take you for my husband,
Your wooing's done Sir; I believe you love me,
And that's the wealth I look for now.

Rut. You have it.

Dua. You have ended my desire to all my wishes.

Gov. Now 'tis a wedding again. And if Hippolyta
Make good, what with the hazard of her life,
She undertook, the evening will set clear

Enter Hippolyta, leading Leopold, Arnoldo, Zenocia, in either hand, Zabulon, Sulpitia.

After a stormy day.

Char. Here comes the Lady.

Clod. With fair Zenocia,
Health with life again
Restor'd unto her.

Zen. The gift of her goodness.

Rut. Let us embrace, I am of your order too,
And though I once despair'd of women, now
I find they relish much of Scorpions,
For both have stings, and both can hurt, and cure too;
But what have been your fortunes?

Arn. Wee'l deseñ
Our story, and at time more fit, relate it.
Now all that reverence vertue, and in that Zenocia's constancy, and perfect love,
Or for her sake Arnoldo, join with us
In th' honour of this Lady.

Char. She deserves it.

Hip. Hippolytus's life shall make that good hereafter,
Nor will I alone better my self but others:
For these whose wants perhaps have made their actions
Not altogether innocent, shall from me
Be so supplied, that need shall not compel them,
To any course of life, but what the law
Shall give allowance to.

Zab. Sulpitia, Your Ladiships creatures.

Rut. Be so, and no more you man-huckster.

Hip. And worthy Leopold, you that with such fervour,
So long have fought me, and in that deserv'd me,
Shall now find full reward for all your travels,

Which you have made more dear by patient sufferance.
And though my violent dotage did transport me,
Beyond those bounds, my modesty should have kept in,
Though my desires were loose, from unchast art
Heaven knows I am free.

Leop. The thought of that's dead to me;
I gladly take your offer.

Rut. Do so Sir,
A piece of crackt gold ever will weigh down
Silver that's whole.

Gov. You shall be all my guests,
I must not be denied.

Arn. Come my Zenocia.
Our bark at length has found a quiet harbour;
And the unspotted progress of our loves
Ends not alone in safety, but reward,
To instruct others, by our fair example;
That though good purposes are long withstood,
The hand of Heaven still guides such as are good. [Ex. omnes.]

The Prologue.

SO free this work is, Gentlemen, from offence,
That we are confident, it needs no defence
From us, or from the Poets—we dare look
On any man, that brings his Table-book
To write down, what again he may repeat
At some great Table, to deserve his meat.
Let such come swell'd with malice, to apply
What is mirth here, there for an injurie.
Nor Lord, nor Lady we have tax'd; nor State,
Nor any private person, their poor hate
Will be starv'd here, for envy shall not finde
One touch that may be wrested to her minde.
And yet despair not, Gentlemen, The play
Is quick and witty; so the Poets say,
And we believe them; the plot neat, and new,
Fashion'd like those, that are approv'd by you.

Only 'twill crave attention, in the most;
Because one point unmark'd, the whole is lost.
Hear first then, and judge after, and be free,
And as our cause is, let our censure be.

Epilogue.

WHY there should be an Epilogue to a play,
I know no cause: the old and usuall way,
For which they were made, was to entertain the grace
Of such as were spectators in this place,
And time, 'tis to no purpose; for I know
What you resolve already to bestow,
Will not be alter'd, what so e're I say,
In the behalf of us, and of the Play;
Only to quit our doubts, if you think fit,
You may, or cry it up, or silence it.

Another Prologue for the Custom of the Country.

WE wish, if it were possible, you knew
What we would give for this night's look, if new.
It being our ambition to delight
Our kind spectators with what's good, and right.
Yet so far know, and credit me, 'twas made
By such, as were held workmen in their Trade,
At a time too, when they as I divine,
Were truly merrie, and drank lusty wine,
The nectar of the Muses; Some are here
I dare presume, to whom it did appear
A well-drawn piece, which gave a lawfull birth
To passionate Scenes mixt with no vulgar mirth.
But unto such to whom 'tis known by fame
From others, perhaps only by the name,
I am a suitor, that they would prepare
Sound palats, and then judge their bill of fare.
It were injustice to decry this now

For being like'd before, you may allow (Your candor safe) what's taught in the old schools,
All such as liv'd before you, were not fools.

The Epilogue.

I Spake much in the Prologue for the Play,
To its desert I hope, yet you might say
Should I change now from that, which then was meant,
Or in a syllable grow less confident,
I were weak-hearted. I am still the same
In my opinion, and forbear to frame
Qualification, or excuse: If you
Concur with me, and hold my judgement true,
Shew it with any sign, and from this place,
Or send me off exploded, or with grace.

Ladies.

LECTORI.

*Would'st thou all Wit, all Comick Art survey?
Read here and wonder; Fletcher writ the Play.*

Ætus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Lewis, Angellina, and Sylvia.

Lewis. NA Y, I must walk you farther.
Ang. I am tir'd, Sir, and ne'er shall foot it home.

Lew. 'Tis for your health; the want of exercise takes from your Beauties, and sloth dries up your sweetness: That you are my only Daughter and my Heir, is granted; and you in thankfulness must needs acknowledge, you ever find me an indulgent Father, and open handed.

Ang. Nor can you tax me, Sir, I hope, for want of duty to deserve these favours from you.

Lew. No, my Angellina, I love and cherish thy obedience to me, which my care to advance thee shall confirm: all that I aim at, is, to win thee from the practice of an idle foolish state, us'd by great Women, who think any labour (though in the service of themselves) a blemish to their fair fortunes.

Ang. Make me understand, Sir, what 'tis you point at.

Lew. At the custom, how Virgins of wealthy Families waste their youth; after a long sleep, when you wake, your Woman presents your Breakfast, then you sleep again, then rise, and being trimm'd up by other hands, y'are led to Dinner, and that ended, either to Cards or to your Couch, (as if you were born without motion) after this to Supper, and then to Bed: and so your life runs round without variety or action, Daughter.

Syl. Here's a learned Lecture!

Lew. Frow this idleness, Diseases, both in body and in mind, grow strong upon you; where a stirring nature, with wholesome exercise, guards both from danger: I'd have thee rise with the Sun, walk, dance, or hunt, visit the Groves and Springs, and learn the vertue of Plants and Simples: Do this moderately, and thou shalt not, with eating Chalk, or Coles, Leather and Oatmeal, and such other trash, fall into the Green-sickness.

Syl. With your pardon (were you but pleas'd to minister it) I could prescribe a Remedy for my Lady's health, and her delight too, far transcending those your Lordship but now mention'd.

Lew. What is it, Sylvia?

Syl. What is't! a noble Husband; in that word, a noble Husband, all content of Woman is wholly comprehended; He will rouse her, as you say, with the Sun; and so pipe to her, as she will dance, ne'er doubt it; and hunt with her, upon occasion, until both be weary; and then the knowledge of your Plants and Simples, as I take it, were superfluous. A loving, and, but add to it, a game-some Bedfellow, being the sure Physician.

Lew. Well said, Wench.

Ang. And who gave you Commission to deliver your Verdict,

Verdict, Minion?

Syl. I deserve a Fee, and not a frown, dear Madam: I but speak her thoughts, my Lord, and what her modesty refuses to give voice to. Shew no mercy to a Maidenhead of fourteen, but off with't: let her lose no time, Sir; Fathers that deny their Daughters lawful pleasures, when ripe for them, in some kinds edge their appetites to taste of the fruit that is forbidden.

Lew. 'Tis well urg'd, and I approve it: No more blushing, Girl, thy Woman hath spoke truth, and so prevented what I meant to move to thee. There dwells near us a Gentleman of blood, Monsieur Brisac, of a fair Estate, six thousand Crowns per annum, the happy Father of two hopeful Sons, of different breeding; the Elder, a meer Scholar; the younger, a quaint Courtier.

Ang. Sir, I know them by publick fame, though yet I never saw them; and that oppos'd antipathy between their various dispositions, renders them the general discourse and argument; one part inclining to the Scholar Charles, the other side preferring Eustace, as a man compleat in Courtship.

Lew. And which way (if of these two you were to chuse a Husband) doth your affection sway you?

Ang. To be plain Sir, (since you will teach me boldness) as they are simply themselves, to neither: let a Courtier be never so exact, let him be bless'd with all parts that yield him to a Virgin gracious; if he depend on others, and stand not on his own bottoms, though he have the means to bring his Mistress to a Masque, or by conveyance from some great ones lips, to taste such favour from the King: or grant he purchase precedency in the Court, to be sworn a servant Extraordinary to the Queen; nay, though he live in expectation of some huge preferment in reversion; if he want a present fortune, at the best those are but glorious dreams, and only yield him a happiness in posse, not in esse; nor can they fetch him Silks from the Mercer, nor discharge a Tailors Bill, nor in full plenty (which still preserves a quiet Bed at home) maintain a Family.

Lew. Aptly consider'd, and to my wish: But what's thy censure of the Scholar?

Ang. Troth (if he be nothing else) as of the Courtier, all his Songs and Sonnets, his Anagrams, Acrosticks, Epigrams, his deep and Philosophical Discourse of Nature's hidden Secrets, makes not up a perfect Husband; he can hardly borrow the Stars of the Celestial Crown to make me a Tire for my Head, nor Charles's Wain for a Coach, nor Ganymede for a Page, nor a rich Gown from Juno's Wardrobe, nor would I lie in (for I despair not once to be a Mother) under Heaven's spangled Canopy, or Banquet my Guests and Gossips with imagin'd Nectar; pure Orleans would do better: No, no, Father, though I could be well pleas'd to have my Husband a Courtier, and a Scholar, young, and valiant; these are but gawdy nothings, if there be not something to make a substance.

Lew. And what is that?

Ang. A full Estate, and that said, I've said all; and get me such a one with these Additions, farewell Virginitie, and welcome Wedlock.

Lew. But where is such a one to be met with, Daughter? A black Swan is more common; you may wear grey Tresses e're we find him.

Ang. I am not so punctual in all Ceremonies, I will 'bate two or three of these good parts, before I'll dwell too long upon the choice.

Syl. Only, my Lord, remember, that he be rich and active, for without these, the others yield no relish, but these perfect. You must bear with small faults, Madam.

Lew. Merry Wench, and it becomes you well; I'll to Brisac, and try what may be done; i'th' mean time home, and feast thy thoughts with th'pleasures of a Bride.

Syl. Thoughts are but airy food, Sir, let her taste them.

ACTUS I. SCENA II.

Enter Andrew, Cook, and Butler.

And. Unload part of the Library, and make room for th'other dozen of Carts; I'll straight be with you.

Cook. Why, hath he more Books?

And. More than ten Marts send over.

But. And can he tell their names?

And. Their names! he has 'em as perfect as his Pater Noster; but that's nothing, h'as read them over leaf by leaf three thousand times; but here's the wonder, though their weight would sink a Spanish Carrock, without other Ballast, he carrieth them all in his head, and yet he walks upright.

But. Surely he has a strong brain.

And. If all thy pipes of Wine were fill'd with Books, made of the Barks of Trees, or Mysteries writ in old moth-eaten Vellam, he would sip thy Cellar quite dry, and still be thirsty: Then for's Diet, he eats and digests more Volumes at a meal, than there would be Larks (though the Sky should fall) devoured in a month in Paris. Yet fear not Sons o'the Buttery and Kitchin, though his learn'd stomach cannot be pleas'd; he'll seldom trouble you, his knowing stomach contemns your Black-Jacks, Butler, and your Flagons; and Cook, thy Boil'd, thy Rost, thy Bak'd.

Cook. How liveth he?

And. Not as other men do, few Princes fare like him; he breaks his fast with Aristotle, dines with Tully, takes his watering with the Muses, sups with Livy, then walks a turn or two in Via Lactea, and (after six hours conference with the Stars) sleeps with old Erra Pater.

But. This is admirable.

And. I'll tell you more hereafter. Here's my old Master, and another old ignorant Elder; I'll upon 'em.

Enter Brisac, Lewis.

Bri. What, Andrew? welcome; where's my Charles? speak, Andrew, where did'st thou leave thy Master?

And. Contemplating the number of the Sands in the High-way, and from that, purposes to make a Judgment of the remainder in the Sea: he is, Sir, in serious study, and will lose no minute, nor out of's pace to knowledge.

Lew. This is strange.

And. Yet he hath sent his duty, Sir, before him in this fair Manuscript.

Bri. What have we here? Pot-hooks and Andirons!

And. I much pity you, it is the Syrian Character, or the Arabick. Would you have it said, so great and deep a Scholar as Mr Charles is, should ask blessing in any Christian Language? Were it Greek I could interpret for you, but indeed I'm gone no farther.

Bri. And in Greek you can lie with your smug Wife Lilly.

And. If I keep her from your French Dialect, as I hope I shall, Sir; however she is your Landrefs, she shall put you to the charge of no more Soap than usual for th'washing of your Sheets.

Bri. Take in the Knave, and let him cat.

And. And drink too, Sir.

Bri. And drink too Sir, and see your Masters Chamber ready for him.

But. Come, Dr Andrew, without Disputation thou shalt Commence i'the Cellar.

And. I had rather Commence on a cold Bak'd meat.

Cook. Thou shalt ha't, Boy.

Bri. Good Monsieur Lewis, I esteem my self much honour'd in your clear intent, to joyn our ancient Families, and make them one; and 'twill take from my age and cares, to live and see what you have purpos'd but in act, of which your visit at this present is a hopeful Omen; I each minute expecting the arrival of my Sons; I have not wrong'd their Birth for want of Means and Education, to shape them to that course each was addicted; and therefore that we may proceed discreetly, since what's concluded rashly seldom pro-prosper, you first shall take a strict perusal of them, and then from your allowance, your fair Daughter my fashion her affection.

Lew. Monsieur Brisac, you offer fair and nobly, and I'll meet you in the same line of Honour; and I hope, being blest but with one Daughter, I shall not appear impertinently curious, though with my utmost vigilance and study, I labour to bestow her to her worth: Let others speak her form, and future Fortune from me descending to her; I in that sit down with silence.

Bri. You may, my Lord, securely, since Fame aloud proclaimeth her perfections, commanding in its tongues to sing her praises; should I say more, you well might censure me (what yet I never was) a Flatterer. What trampling's that without of Horses?

Enter Butler.

But Sir, my young Masters are newly alighted.

Bri. Sir, now observe their several dispositions.

Enter Charles.

Char. Bid my Supper carry my Hackney to the Butt'ry, and give him his Bever; it is a civil and sober Beast, and will drink moderately; and that done, turn him into the Quadrangle.

Bri. He cannot out of his University tone.

Enter Eustace, Egremont, Cowfy.

Eust. Lackey, take care our Courfers be well rubb'd, and cloath'd; they have out-stripp'd the Wind in speed.

Lew. I marry, Sir, there's metal in this young Fellow! What a Sheep's look his elder Brother has!

Char. Your blessing, Sir.

Bri. Rise, Charles, thou hast it.

Eust. Sir, though it be unusual in the Court, (since 'tis the Courtiers garb) I bend my knee, and do expect what follows.

Bri. Courtly begg'd. My blessing, take it.

Eust. (to Lew.) Your Lordship's vow'd adorer. What a thing this Brother is! yet I'll vouchsafe him the new Italian shrug—

How clownishly the Book-worm does return it?

Char. I'm glad ye are well.

[Reads.

Eust. Pray you be happy in the knowledge of this pair of accomplish'd Monsieurs; they are Gallants that have seen both Tropicks.

Bri. I embrace their love.

Egr. Which we'll repay with servulating.

Cow. And will report your bounty in the Court.

Bri. I pray you make deserving use on't first. Eustace, give entertainment to your Friends; what's in my house is theirs.

Eust. Which we'll make use of; let's warm our brains with half a dozen Healths, and then hang cold discourse, for we'll speak Fire-works.

[Ex.

Lew. What, at his Book already?

Bri. Fie, fie, Charles, no hour of interruption?

Char. Plato differs from Socrates in this.

Bri. Come, lay them by; let them agree at leisure.

Char. Man's life, Sir, being so short, and then the way that leads unto the knowledge of our selves, so long and tedious, each minute should be precious.

Bri. In our care to manage worldly business, you must part with this Bookish contemplation, and prepare your self for action; to thrive in this Age is held the blame of Learning: You must study to know what part of my Land's good for the Plough, and what for Pasture; how to buy and sell to the best advantage; how to cure my Oxen when they're o'er-grown with labour.

Char. I may do this from what I've read, Sir; for, what concerns Tillage, who better can deliver it than Virgil in his Georgicks? and to cure your Herds, his Bucolicks is a Master-piece; but when he does describe the Commonwealth of Bees, their industry, and knowledge of the herbs from which they gather Honey, with their care to place it with decorum in the Hive; their Government among themselves, their order in going forth, and coming laden home; their obedience to their King, and his rewards to such as labour, with his punishments only inflicted on the slothful Drone; I'm ravish'd with it, and there reap my Harvest, and there receive the gain my Cattle bring me, and there find Wax and Honey.

Bri. And grow rich in your imagination; heyday, heyday! Georgicks, Bucolicks, and Bees! art mad?

Char. No, Sir, the knowledge of these guards me from it.

Bri. But can you find among your bundle of Books (and put in all your Dictionaries that speak all Tongues) what pleasure they enjoy, that do embrace a well-shap'd wealthy Bride? Answer me that.

Char. 'Tis frequent, Sir, in Story, there I read of all kind of virtuous and vicious women; the antient Spartan Dames, and Roman Ladies, their Beauties and Deformities; and when I light upon a Portia or Cornelia, crown'd with still flourishing leaves of truth and goodness; with such a feeling I peruse their Fortunes, as if I then had liv'd, and freely tasted their ravishing sweetness; at the present loving the whole Sex for their goodness and example. But on the contrary, when I look on a Cycnneustra, or a Tullia; the first bath'd in her Husband blood; the latter, without a touch of piety, driving on her Chariot o'er her Father's breathless Trunk, horror invades my faculties; and comparing the multitudes o'th' guilty, with the few that did die Innocents, I detest and loath 'em as Ignorance or Atheism.

Bri. You resolve then ne'er to make payment of the debt you owe me.

Char. What debt, good Sir?

Bri. A debt I paid my Father when I begat thee, and made him a Grandfire, which I expect from you.

Char. The Children, Sir, which I will leave to all posterity, begot and brought up by my painful Studies, shall be my living Issue.

Bri. Very well; and I shall have a general Collection of all the quiddits from Adam to this time, to be my Grandchild.

Char. And such a one, I hope, Sir, as shall not shame the Family.

Bri. Nor will you take care of my Estate?

Char. But in my wishes; for know, Sir, that the wings on which my Soul is mounted, have long since born her too high, to stoop to any Prey that soars not upwards. Sordid and dunghil minds, compos'd of earth, in that gross Element fix all their happiness; but purer Spirits, purged and refin'd, shake off that clog of humane frailty; give me leave to enjoy my self; that place that does contain my Books (the best Companions) is to me a glorious Court, where hourly I converse with the old Sages and Philosophers, and sometimes for variety, I confer with Kings and Emperors, and weigh their Counsels, calling their Victories (if unjustly got) unto a strict accompt, and in my phancy, deface their ill-plac'd Statues; can I then part with such constant pleasures, to embrace uncertain vanities? No, be it your care to augment your heap of wealth; it shall be mine to increase in knowledge—Lights there for my Study—

[Exit.

Bri. Was ever man that had reason thus transported from all sense and feeling of his proper good? It vexes me, and if I found not comfort in my young Eustace, I might well conclude my name were at a period!

Lew. He is indeed, Sir, the surer base to build on.

Enter Eustace, Egremont, Cowfy, and Andrew.

Bri. Eustace.

Eust. Sir.

Bri. Your ear in private.

And. I suspect my Master has found harsh welcome, he's gone Supperless into his Study; could I find out the cause, it may may be borrowing of his Books, or so, I shall be satisfied.

Eust. My duty shall, Sir, take any form you please; and in your motion to have me married, you cut off all dangers the violent heats of youth might bear me to.

Lew. It is well answer'd.

Eust. Nor shall you, my Lord, for your fair Daughter ever find just cause to mourn your choice of me; the name of Husband, nor the authority it carries in it, shall ever teach me to forget to be, as I am now, her Servant, and your Lordship's; and but that modesty forbids, that I should sound the Trumpet of my own deserts, I could say, my choice manners have been such, as render me lov'd and remarkable to the Princes of the Blood.

Cow. Nay, to the King.

Eyre. Nay to the King and Council.

And. These are Court-admirers, and ever echo him that bears the Bag. Though I be dull-ey'd, I see through this juggling.

Eust. Then for my hopes.

Cow. Nay certainties.

Eust. They stand as fair as any mans. What can there fall in compass of her wishes, which she shall not be suddenly possess'd of? Loves she Titles? by the grace and favour of my Princely Friends, I am what she would have me.

Bri. He speaks well, and I believe him.

Lew. I could wish I did so. Pray you a word, Sir. He's a proper Gentleman, and promises nothing, but what is possible. So far I will go with you; nay, I add, he hath won much upon me; and were he but one thing that his Brother is, the bargain were soon struck up.

Bri. What's that, my Lord?

Lew. The Heir.

And. Which he is not, and I trust never shall be.

Bri. Come, that shall breed no difference; you see Charles has given o'er the world; I'll undertake, and with much ease, to buy his Birth-right of him for a Dry-fat of new Books; nor shall my state alone make way for him, but my elder Brothers, who being issueless, to advance our name, I doubt not will add his. Your resolution?

Lew. I'll first acquaint my Daughter with the proceedings; on these terms I am yours, as she shall be, make you no scruple. Get the Writings ready, she shall be tractable; to morrow we will hold a second conference. Farewell noble Eustace; and you brave Gallants.

Eust. Full increase of honour wait ever on your Lordship.

And. The Gout rather, and a perpetual Meagrim.

Bri. You see, Eustace, how I travel to possess you of a Fortune you were not born to; be you worthy of it: I'll furnish you for a Suitor: visit her, and prosper in't.

Eust. She's mine, Sir, fear it not: in all my travels, I ne'er met a Virgin that could resist my Courtship. If it take now, we're made for ever, and will revel it.

[Ex.

And. In tough Welsh Parsly, which, in our vulgar Tongue, is strong Hempen Halters; my poor Master cozen'd, and I a looker on! If we have studi'd our Majors and our Minors, Antecedents and Consequents, to be concluded Coxcombs, w'have made a fair hand on't. I am glad I have found out all their plots, and their Conspiracies; this shall t'old Monsieur Miramont, one, that though he cannot read a Proclamation, yet dotes on Learning, and loves my Master Charles for being a Scholar; I hear he's coming hither, I shall meet him; and if he be that old, rough, testy blade he always us'd to be, I'll ring him such a peal, as shall go near to shake their Belroom, peradventure beat'm, for he is fire and flax; and so have at him.

[Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Miramont, Brisac.

Mir. NAY, Brother, Brother.

Bri. Pray, Sir, be not moved, I meddle with no business but mine own, and in mine own 'tis reason I should govern.

Mir. But how to govern then, and understand, Sir, and be as wise as y'are hasty, though you be my Brother, and from one blood sprung, I must tell ye heartily and home too.

Bri. What, Sir?

Mir. What I grieve to find, you are a fool, and an old fool, and that's two.

Bri. We'll part'em, if you please.

Mir. No, they're entail'd to 'em. Seek to deprive an honest noble Spirit, your eldest Son, Sir, and your very Image, (but he's so like you, that he fares the worse for't) because he loves his Book, and dotes on that, and only studies how to know things excellent, above the reach of such coarse Brains as yours, such muddy Fancies, that never will know farther than when to cut your Vines, and cozen Merchants, and choak your hide-bound Tenants with musty Harvests.

Bri. You go too fast.

Mir. I'am not come to my pace yet. Because h'has made his study all his pleasure, and is retir'd into his Contemplation, not meddling with the dirt and chaff of Nature, that makes the spirit of the mind mud too; therefore must he be flung from his inheritance? must he be dispossefs'd, and Monsieur Gingle-boy his younger Brother —

Bri. You forget your self.

Mar. Because h'has been at Court, and learn'd new Tongues, and how to speak a tedious piece of nothing; to vary his face as Sea-men do their compass, to worship Images of gold and silver, and fall before the She-calves of the season; therefore must he jump into his Brother's Land?

Bri. Have you done yet, and have you spoke enough in praise of Learning, Sir?

Mir. Never enough.

Bri. But, Brother, do you know what Learning is?

Mir. It is not to be a Justice of Peace as you are, and palter out your time i'th' penal Statutes. To hear the curious Tenets controverted between a Protestant Constable, and Jesuite Clobber; to pick Natural Philosophy out of Bawdry, when your Worship's pleas'd to correctise a Lady; nor 'tis not the main Moral of blind Justice, (which is deep Learning) when your Worships Tenants bring a light cause, and heavy Hens before ye, both fat and feeble, a Goose or Pig; and then you'll sit like equity with both hands weighing indifferently the state o'th' question. These are your Quodlibets, but no Learning, Brother.

Bri. You are so parlously in love with Learning, that I'd be glad to know what you understand, Brother; I'm sure you have read all Aristotle.

Mir. Faith no; but I believe I have a learned faith, Sir, and that's it makes a Gentleman of my sort; though I can speak no Greek, I love the sound of't, it goes so thund'ring as it conjur'd Devils: Charles speaks it loftily, and if thou wert a man, or had'st but ever heard of Homers Iliads, Hesiod, and the Greek Poets, thou wouldst run mad, and hang thy self for joy th'hadst such a Gentleman to be thy Son: O he has read such things to me!

Bri. And you do understand 'em, Brother?

Mir. I tell thee, No, that's not material; the sound's sufficient to confirm an honest man: Good Brother Brisac, does your young Courtier, that wears the fine Cloaths, and is the excellent Gentleman, (the Traveller, the Soldier, as you think too) understand any other power than his Tailor? or knows what motion is more than an Horse-race? What the Moon means, but to light him home from Taverns? or the comfort of the Sun is, but to wear flash'd clothes in?

And

And must this piece of ignorance be popt up, because 't can kiss the hand, and cry, sweet Latly? Say it had been at Rome, and seen the Reliques, drunk your Verdea Wine, and rid at Naples, brought home a Box of Venice Treacle with it, to cure young Wenches that have eaten Ashes: Must this thing therefore? —

Bri. Yes Sir, this thing must; I will not trust my Land to one so fotted, so grown like a Disease unto his Study; he that will sling off all occasions and cares, to make him understand what state is, and how to govern it, must, by that reason, be flung himself aside from managing. My younger Boy is a fine Gentleman.

Mir. He is an Ass, a piece of Ginger-bread, gilt over to please foolish Girls puppets.

Bri. You are my elder Brother.

Mir. So I had need, and have an elder Wit, thou'dst shame us all else. Go to, I say, Charles shall inherit.

Bri. I say, no, unless Charles had a Soul to understand it; can he manage six thousand Crowns a year out of the Metaphysics? or can all his learn'd Astronomy look to my Vineyards? Can the drunken old Poets make up my Vines? (I know they can drink 'em) or your excellent Humanists sell 'em the Merchants for my best advantage? Can History cut my Hay, or get my Corn in? And can Geometry vend it in the Market? Shall I have my sheep kept with a Jacobs-staff now? I wonder you will magnifie this madman, you that are old, and should understand.

Mir. Should, say'st thou? thou monstrous piece of ignorance in Office! thou that hast no more knowledge than thy Clerk infuses, thy dapper Clerk, larded with ends of Latin, and he no more than custom of offences. Thou unreprieveable Dunce! that thy formal Bandstrings, thy Ring, nor pomander cannot expiate for, dost thou tell me I should? I'll pose thy Worship in thine own Library and Almanack, which thou art daily poring on, to pick out days of iniquity to cozen fools in, and Full Moons to cut Cattle: dost thou taint me, that have run over Story, Poetry, Humanity?

Bri. As a cold nipping shadow does o'er ears of Corn, and leave 'em blasted, put up your anger, what I'll do, I'll do.

Mir. Thou shalt not do.

Bri. I will.

Mir. Thou art an Ass then, a dull old tedious Ass; th' art ten times worse, and of less credit than Dunce Hollingshead the Englishman, that writes of Shows and Sheriffs.

Enter Lewis.

Bri. Well, take your pleasure, here's one I must talk with.

Lew. Good-day, Sir.

Bri. Fair to you, Sir.

Lew. May I speak w'ye?

Bri. With all my heart, I was waiting on your goodness.

Lew. Good morrow, Monsieur Miramont.

Mir. O sweet Sir, keep your good morrow to cool your Worships pottage; a couple of the worlds fools met together to raise up dirt and dunghills.

Lew. Are they drawn?

Bri. They shall be ready, Sir, within these two hours; and Charles set his hand.

Lew. 'Tis necessary; for he being a joint purchaser, though your Estate was got by your own industry, unless he seal to the Conveyance, it can be of no validity.

Bri. He shall be ready and do it willingly.

Mir. He shall be hang'd first.

Bri. I hope your Daughter likes.

Lew. She loves him well, Sir; young Eustace is a bait to catch a Woman, a budding spritely Fellow; y'are resolv'd then, that all shall pass from Charles?

Bri. All, all, he's nothing; a bunch of Books shall be his Patrimony, and more than he can manage too.

Lew. Will your Brother pass over his Land to your son Eustace? you know he has no Heir.

Mir. He will be dead first, and Horse collars made of 's skin.

Bri. Let him alone, a willful man; my Estate shall serve the turn, Sir. And how does your Daughter?

Lew. Ready for the hour, and like a blushing Rose that stays the pulling.

Bri. To morrow then's the day.

Lew. Why then to morrow I'll bring the Girl; get you the Writings ready.

Mir. But hark you, Monsieur, have you the virtuous conscience to help to rob an Heir, an Elder Brother, of that which Nature and the Law flings on him? You were your Father's eldest Son, I take it, and had his Land; would you had had his wit too; or his discretion, to consider nobly, what 'tis to deal unworthily in these things; you'll say he's none of yours, he's his Son; and he will say, he is no Son to inherit above a shelf of Books: Why did he get him? why was he brought up to write and read, and know these things? why was he not like his Father, a dumb Justice? a flat dull piece of phlegm, shap'd like a man, a reverend Idol in a piece of Arras? Can you lay disobedience, want of manners, or any capital crime to his charge?

Lew. I do not, nor do weigh your words, they bite not me, Sir; this man must answer.

Bri. I have don't already, and given sufficient reason to secure me: and so good morrow, Brother, to your patience.

Lew. Good morrow, Monsieur Miramont.

Mir. Good Night caps keep brains warm, or Maggots will breed in 'em. Well, Charles, thou shalt not want to buy thee Books yet, the fairest in thy Study are my gift, and the University of Lovain, for thy sake, hath tasted of my bounty; and to vex the old doting Fool thy Father, and thy Brother, they shall not share a Solz of mine between them; nay more, I'll give thee eight thousand Crowns a year, in some high strain to write my Epitaph.

ACTUS II. SCENA II.

Enter Eustace, Egremont, Cowfy.

Eust. How do I look now, my Elder Brother? Nay, 'tis a handsome Suit.

Cow. All Courtly, Courtly.

Eust. I'll assure ye, Gentlemen, my Tailor has travel'd, and speaks as lofty Language in his Bills too; the cover of an old Book would not shew thus. Fie, fie; what things these Academicks are! these Book-worms, how they look!

Egre. They're meer Images, no gentle motion or behaviour in 'em; they'll prattle ye of Primum Mobile, and tell a story of the state of Heaven, what Lords and Ladies govern in such Houses, and what wonders they do when they meet together, and how they spit Snow, Fire, and Hail, like a Jugler, and make a noise when they are drunk, which we call Thunder.

Cow. They are the sneaking'st things, and the contemptiblest; such Small-beer brains, but ask 'em any thing out of the Element of their understanding, and they stand gaping like a roasted Pig: do they know what a Court is, or a Council, or how the affairs of Christendom are manag'd? Do they know any thing but a tired Hackney? and they cry absurd as the Horse understood 'em. They have made a fair Youth of your Elder Brother, a pretty piece of flesh!

Eust. I thank 'em for't, long may he study to give me his Estate. Saw you my Mistris?

Egre. Yes, she's a sweet young Woman; but be sure you keep her from Learning.

Eust. Songs she may have, and read a little unbak'd Poetry, such as the Dablers of our time contrive, that has no weight nor wheel to move the mind, nor indeed nothing but an empty found; she shall have cloaths, but not made by Geometry; Horses and Coach, but of no immortal Race: I will not have a Scholar in my house above a gentle Reader; they corrupt the foolish Women with their subtle Problems;

Problems; I'll have my house call'd ignorance, to fright prating Philosophers from Entertainment.

Cow. It will do well, love those that love good fashions, good cloaths, and rich; they invite men to admire 'em, that speak the lisp of Court. Oh 'tis great Learning! to Ride well, Dance well, Sing well, or Whistle Courtly, they're rare endowments; that they have seen far Countreys, and can speak strange things, though they speak no truths, for then they make things common. When are you marri'd?

Enst. To morrow, I think; we must have a Masque, Boys, and of our own making.

Egre. 'Tis not half an hours work, a Cupid, and a Fiddle, and the thing's done: but let's be handsome, shall's be Gods or Nymphs?

Enst. What, Nymphs with Beards?

Cow. That's true, we'll be Knights then; some wandring Knights, that light here on a sudden.

Enst. Let's go, let's go, I must go visit, Gentlemen, and mark what sweet lips I must kiss to morrow.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS II. SCENA III.

Enter Cook, Andrew, Butler.

Cook. And how do's my Master?

And. He's at's Book; peace, Coxcomb, that such an unlearned tongue as thine should ask for him!

Co. Do's he not study conjuring too?

And. Have you lost any Plate, Butler?

But. No, but I know I shall to morrow at dinner.

And. Then to morrow you shall be turn'd out of your place for't; we meddle with no spirit o'th' Buttery, they taste too small for us; keep me a Pie in Folio, I beseech thee, and thou shalt see how learnedly I'll translate him. Shall's have good cheer to morrow?

Co. Excellent good cheer, Andrew.

And. The sight on't is, that much about that time, I shall be arguing, or deciding rather, which are the Males or Females of Red Herrings, and whether they be taken in the Red-Sea only; a question found out by Copernicus, the learned Motion maker.

Co. I marry, Butler, here are rare things; a man that look'd upon him, would swear he understood no more than we do.

But. Certain, a learned Andrew.

And. I've so much on't, and am so loaden with strong understanding, I fear, they'll run me mad. Here's a new Instrument, a Mathematical Glisten to purge the Moon with when she is laden with cold phlegmatick humours; and here's another to remove the Stars, when they grow too thick in the Firmament.

Co. O Heavens! why do I labour out my life in a Beef-pot? and only search the secrets of a Sallad, and know no farther?

And. They are not reveal'd to all heads; these are far above your Element of Fire, Cook. I could tell you of Archimedes Glass, to fire your Coals with; and of the Philosophers Turf, that ne'er goes out: and, Gilbert Butler, I could ravish thee with two rare inventions.

But. What are they, Andrew?

And. The one to blanch your Bread from chippings base, and in a moment, as thou wouldst an Almond; the Sect of the Epicureans invented that: The other for thy Trenchers, that's a strong one, to cleanse you twenty dozen in a minute, and no noise heard, which is the wonder, Gilbert; and this was out of Plato's new Idea's.

But. Why, what a learned Master do'st thou serve, Andrew?

And. These are but the scrapings of his understanding, Gilbert; with gods and goddesses, and such strange people he deals, and treats with in so plain a fashion, as thou do'st with thy Boy that draws thy drink, or Ralph there, with his Kitchen Boys and Scalders.

Co. But why should he not be familiar, and talk sometimes, as other Christians do, of hearty matters, and come into the Kitchen, and there cut his Breakfast?

But. And then retire to the Buttery, and there eat it, and drink a lusty Bowl to my young Master, that must be now the Heir, he'll do all these, I and be drunk too; these are mortal things.

And. My Master studies immortality.

Co. Now thou talk'st of immortality, how do's thy Wife, Andrew? my old Master did you no small Pleasure when he procur'd her, and stock'd you in a Farm. If he should love her now, as he hath a Colts tooth yet, what says your learning and your strange Instruments to that, my Andrew? Can any of your learned Clerks avoid it? can ye put by his Mathematical Engine?

And. Yes, or I'll break it: thou awaken'st me, and I'll peep i'th' Moon this month but I'll watch for him. My Master rings, I must go make him a fire, and conjure o'er his Books.

Co. Adieu, good Andrew, and fend thee manly patience with thy learning. [Exeunt.]

ACTUS II. SCENA IV.

Enter Charles.

Cha. I have forgot to eat and sleep with reading, and all my faculties turn into study; 'tis meat and sleep; what need I outward garments, when I can cloath my self with understanding? The Stars and glorious Planets have no Tailors, yet ever new they are, and shine like Courtiers. The Seasons of the year find no fond Parents, yet some are arm'd in silver Ice that glistens, and some in gawdy Green come in like Masquers. The Silk-worm spins her own suit and lodging, and has no aid nor partner in her labours. Why should we care for any thing but knowledge, or look upon the World but to condemn it?

Enter Andrew.

And. Would you have any thing?

Char. Andrew, I find there is a flie grown o'er the Eye o'th' Bull, which will go near to blind the Constellation.

And. Put a Gold-ring in's nose, and that will cure him.

Char. Ariadne's Crown's away too; two main Stars that held it fast are slip out.

And. Send it presently to Galateo, the Italian Star-wright, he'll set it right again with little labour.

Char. Thou art a pretty Scholar.

And. I hope I shall be; have I swept Books so often to know nothing?

Char. I hear thou art married.

And. It hath pleas'd your Father to match me to a Maid of his own chusing; I doubt her Constellation's loose too, and wants nailing; and a sweet Farm he has given us a mile off, Sir.

Char. Marry thy self to understanding, Andrew; these Women are Errata in all Authors, they're fair to see to, and bound up in Vellam, smooth, white and clear, but their contents are monstrous; they treat of nothing but dull age and diseases. Thou hast not so much wit in thy head, as there is on those shelves, Andrew.

And. I think I have not, Sir.

Char. No, if thou had'st, thou'd'st ne'er married a Woman in thy bosom, they're Cataplasms made o'th' deadly sins: I ne'er saw any yet but mine own Mother; or if I did, I did regard them but as shadows that pass by of under creatures.

And. Shall I bring you one? I'll trust you with my own Wife; I would not have your Brother go beyond ye; they're the prettiest Natural Philosophers to play with.

Char. No, no, they're Opticks to delude mens eyes with. Does my younger Brother speak any Greek yet, Andrew?

And. No, but he speaks High Dutch, and that goes daintily.

Char. Reach me the Books down I read yesterday, and make make a little fire, and get a manchet; make clean those Instruments of Brass I shew'd you, and set the great Sphere by; then take the Fox tail, and purge the Books from dust; last, take your Lilly, and get your part ready.

And. Shall I go home, Sir? my Wife's name is Lilly, there my best part lies, Sir.

Charles. I mean your Grammar, O thou Dunderhead would'st thou be ever in thy Wife's Syntaxis? Let me have no noise, nor nothing to disturb me; I am to find a secret.

And. So am I too; which if I find, I shall make some smart for't ——— [Exeunt.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Lewis, Angellina, Sylvia, Notary.

Lewis. This is the day, my Daughter Angellina, the happy, that must make you a Fortune, a large and full one, my care has wrought it, and yours must be as great to entertain it. Young Eustace is a Gentleman at all points, and his behaviour affable and courtly, his person excellent; I know you find that, I read it in your eyes, you like his youth; young handsome people should be match'd together, then follows handsome Children, handsome fortunes; the most part of his Father's Estate, my Wench, is ti'd in a Jointure, that makes up the harmony; and when ye are married, he's of that soft temper, and so far will be chain'd to your observance, that you may rule and turn him as you please. What, are the Writings drawn on your side, Sir?

Not. They are, and here I have so fetter'd him, that if the Elder Brother set his hand to, not all the power of Law shall e'er release him.

Lew. These Notaries are notable confident Knaves, and able to do more mischief than an Army. Are all your Clauses sure?

Not. Sure as proportion; they may turn Rivers sooner than these Writings.

Lew. Why did you not put all the Lands in, Sir?

Not. 'Twas not condition'd; if it had been found, it had been but a fault made in the Writing; if not found, all the Land.

Lew. These are small Devils, that care not who has mischief, so they make it; they live upon the meer scent of dissention. 'Tis well, 'tis well; are you contented, Girl? for your will must be known.

Ang. A Husband's welcome, and as an humble Wife I'll entertain him; no Sovereignty I aim at, 'tis the man's, Sir; for she that seeks it, kills her husband's honour: The Gentleman I have seen, and well observ'd him, yet find not that grac'd excellence you promise; a pretty Gentleman, and he may please too, and some few flashes I have heard come from him, but not to admiration as to others: He's young, and may be good, yet he must make it, and I may help, and help to thank him also. It is your pleasure I should make him mine, and 't has been still my duty to observe you.

Lew. Why then let's go, and I shall love your modesty. To Horse, and bring the Coach out, Angellina; to morrow you will look more womanly.

Ang. So I look honestly, I fear no eyes, Sir. [Exeunt.]

ACTUS III. SCENA II.

Enter Brisac, Andrew, Cook, Lilly.

Bris. Wait on your Master, he shall have that befits him.

And. No Inheritance, Sir?

Bris. You speak like a fool, a coxcomb; he shall have annual means to buy him Books, and find him cloathes and meat, what would he more? Trouble him with Land? 'tis flat against his nature. I love him too, and honour those gifts in him.

And. Shall Master Eustace have all?

Bris. All, all; he knows how to use it, he's a man bred in the world, th'other i'th' Heavens. My Masters, pray be wary, and serviceable; and Cook, see all your Sawces be sharp and poynant in the palate, that they may commend you; look to your Roast and Bak'd meats handsomely, and what new Kickshaws and delicate made things — Is th' Musick come?

But. Yes, Sir, they're here at Breakfast.

Bris. There will be a Masque too; you must see this Room clean, and, Butler, your door open to all good fellows; but have an eye to your Plate, for there be Furies; my Lilly, welcome you are for the Linen, sort it, and see it ready for the Table, and see the Bride-bed made, and look the cords be not cut asunder by the Gallants too, there be such knacks abroad. Hark hither, Lilly, to morrow night at twelve a clock I'll sup w'ye: your husband shall be safe, I'll send ye meat too; before I cannot well slip from my company.

And. Will you so, will you so, Sir? I'll make one to eat it, I may chance make you stagger too.

Bris. No answer, Lilly?

Lil. One word about the Linen; I'll be ready, and rest your Worships still.

And. And I'll rest w'ye, you shall see what rest 'twill be. Are ye so nimble? a man had need have ten pair of ears to watch you.

Bris. Wait on your Master, for I know he waits ye, and keep him in his Study, that the noise do not molest him. I will not fail my Lilly — Come in, sweet-hearts, all to their several duties. [Exeunt.]

And. Are you kissing ripe, Sir? Double but my Farm, and kiss her till thy heart ake. These Smock-vermine, how eagerly they leap at old mens kisses, they lick their lips at profit, not at pleasure; and if 't were not for the scurvy name of Cuckold, he should lie with her. I know she'll labour at length with a good Lordship. If he had a Wife now, but that's all one, I'll fit him. I must up unto my Master, he'll be mad with Study ——— [Exit.]

ACTUS III. SCENA III.

Enter Charles.

Char. What a noise is in this house? my head is broken, within a Parenthesis, in every corner, as if the Earth were shaken with some strange Collect, there are stirs and motions. What Planet rules this house?

Enter Andrew.

Who's there?

And. 'Tis I, Sir, faithful Andrew.

Char. Come near, and lay thine ear down; hear'st no noise?

And. The Cooks are chopping herbs and mince-meat to make Pies, and breaking Marrow-bones —

Char. Can they set them again?

And. Yes, yes, in Broths and Puddings, and they grow stronger for the use of any man.

Char. What speaking's that? sure there's a Massacre.

And. Of Pigs and Geese, Sir, and Turkeys, for the spit. The Cooks are angry Sirs, and that makes up the medley.

Char. Do they thus at every Dinner? I ne'er mark'd them yet, nor know who is a Cook.

And. They're sometimes sober, and then they beat as gently as a Tabor.

Char. What loads are these?

And. Meat, meat, Sir, for the Kitchen, and stinking Fowls the Tenants have sent in; they'll ne'er be found out at a general eating; and there's fat Venison, Sir.

Char. What's that?

And. Why Deer, those that men fatten for their private pleasures, and let their Tenants starve upon the Commons.

Char. I've read of Deer, but yet I ne'er eat any.

And. There's a Fishmongers Boy with Caviar, Sir, Anchoves, Anchoves, and Potargo, to make ye drink.

Char. Sure these are modern, very modern meats, for I understand 'em not.

And. No more does any man from Caca merda, or a substance worse, till they be greas'd with Oyl, and rubb'd with Onions, and then flung out of doors, they are rare Sallads.

Char. And why is all this, prethce tell me, Andrew? are there any Princes to dine here to day? by this abundance sure there should be Princes; I've read of entertainment for the gods at half this charge; will not six Dishes serve 'em? I never had but one, and that a small one.

And. Your Brother's marri'd this day; he's marri'd your younger Brother Eustace.

Char. What of that?

And. And all the Friends about are bidden hither; there's not a Dog that knows the house, but comes too.

Char. Marri'd! to whom?

And. Why to a dainty Gentlewoman, young, sweet, and modest.

Char. Are there modest women? how do they look?

And. O you'll blefs your self to see them. He parts with's Books, he ne'er did so before yet.

Char. What does my Father for 'em?

And. Gives all his Land, and makes your Brother heir.

Char. Must I have nothing?

And. Yes, you must study still, and he'll maintain you.

Char. I am his eldest Brother.

And. True, you were so; but he has leap'd o'er your shoulders, Sir.

Char. 'Tis well; he'll not inherit my understanding too?

And. I think not; he'll scarce find Tenants to let it out to.

Char. Hark! hark!

And. The Coach that brings the fair Lady.

Enter Lewis, Angellina, Ladies, Notary, &c.

And. Now you may see her.

Char. Sure this should be modest, but I do not truly know what women make of it, Andrew; she has a face looks like a story, the story of the Heavens looks very like her.

And. She has a wide face then.

Char. She has a Cherubin's, cover'd and vail'd with modest blushes. Eustace, be happy, whiles poor Charles is patient. Get me my Books again, and come in with me—

[Exeunt.]

Enter Brifac, Eustace, Egremont, Cowfy, Miramont.

Bri. Welcome, sweet Daughter; welcome, noble Brother; and you are welcome, Sir, with all your Writings; Ladys, most welcome: What, my angry Brother! you must be welcome too, the Feast is flat else.

Mir. I am not come for your welcome, I expect none; I bring no joys to blefs the bed withall; nor Songs, nor Masques to glorifie the Nuptials; I bring an angry mind to see your folly, a sharp one too, to reprehend you for it.

Bri. You'll stay and dine though.

Mir. All your meat smells musty, your Table will shew nothing to content me.

Bri. I'll answer you here's good meat.

Mir. But your sauce is scurvie, it is not season'd with the sharpness of discretion.

Eust. It seems your anger is at me, dear Uncle.

Mir. Thou art not worth my anger, th'art a Boy, a lump o'thy Father's lightness, made of nothing but antick cloathes and cringes; look in thy head, and 'twill appear a foot-ball full of fumes and rotten smoke. Lady, I pity you; you are a handsome and a sweet young Lady, and ought to have a handsom man yok'd t'ye, an understanding too; this is a Gimcrack, that can get nothing but new fashions on you; for say he have a thing shap'd like a child, 'twill either prove a Tumbler or a Tailor.

Eust. These are but harsh words, Uncle.

Mir. So I mean 'em. Sir, you play harsher play w'your elder Brother.

Eust. I would be loth to give you.

Mir. Do not venture, I'll make your wedding cloaths fit closer t'ye then; I but disturb you, I'll go see my Nephew.

Lew. Pray take a piece of Rosemary.

Mir. I'll wear it, but for the Ladys sake, and none of yours; may be I'll see your Table too.

Bri. Pray do, Sir:

Ang. A mad old Gentleman.

Bri. Yes faith, sweet Daughter, he has been thus his whole age, to my knowledge; he has made Charles his Heir, I know that certainly; then why should he grudge Eustace any thing?

Ang. I would not have a light head, nor one laden with too much learning, as, they say, this Charles is, that makes his Book his Mistis; Sure there's something hid in this old man's anger, that declares him not a meer sot.

Bri. Come, shall we go and seal, Brother? all things are ready, and the Priest is here. When Charles has set his hand unto the Writings, as he shall instantly, then to the Wedding, and so to dinner.

Lew. Come, let's seal the Book first for my Daughters Jointure.

Bri. Let's be private in't, Sir.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS III. SCENA IV.

Enter Charles, Miramont, Andrew.

Mir. Nay, y'are undone.

Char. Hum.

Mir. Ha'ye no greater feeling?

And. You were sensible of the great Book, Sir, when it fell on your head, and now the house is ready to fall, do you fear nothing?

Char. Will he have my Books too.

Mir. No, he has a Book, a fair one too, to read on, and read wonders; I would thou hadst her in thy Study, Nephew, and 'twere but to new string her.

Char. Yes, I saw her, and me thought 'twas a curious piece of Learning, handsomely bound, and of a dainty Letter.

And. He flung away his Book.

Mir. I like that in him; would he had flung away his dulness too, and spoke to her.

Char. And must my Brother have all?

Mir. All that your Father has.

Char. And that fair woman too?

Mir. That woman also.

Char. He has enough then. May I not see her sometimes, and call her Sister? I will do him no wrong.

Mir. This makes me mad, I could now cry for anger: these old Fools are the most stubborn and the wilfullest Coxcombs; Farewell, and fall to your Book, forget your Brother: you are my Heir, and I'll provide y'a Wife: I'll look upon this marriage, though I hate it.

[Exit.]

Enter Brifac.

Bri. Where is my Son?

And. There, Sir, casting a Figure what chopping children his Brother shall have.

Bri. He does well. How do'st Charles? still at thy Book?

And. He's studying now, Sir, who shall be his Father.

Bri. Peace, you rude Knave — Come hither, Charles, be merry.

Char. I thank you, I am busie at my Book, Sir.

Bri. You must put your hand, my Charles, as I would have you, unto a little piece of Parchment here: only your name; you write a reasonable hand.

Char. But I may do unreasonably to write it. What is it, Sir?

Bri. To pass the Land I have, Sir, unto your younger Brother.

Char. Is't no more?

Bri. No, no, 'tis nothing: you shall be provided for, and new Books you shall have still, and new Studies, and have your means means brought in without thy care, Boy, and one still to attend you.

Char. This shews your love, Father.

Bri. I'm tender to you.

And. Like a stone, I take it.

Char. Why Father, I'll go down, an't please you let me, because I'd see the thing they call the Gentlewoman; I see no Woman but through contemplation, and there I'll do't before the company, and wish my Brother fortune.

Bri. Do, I prethee.

Char. I must not stay, for I have things above require my study.

Bri. No, thou shalt not stay; thou shalt have a brave dinner too.

And. Now has he o'erthrown himself for ever; I will down into the Cellar, and be stark drunk for anger. [Exeunt.]

ACTUS III. SCENA V.

Enter Lewis, Angellina, Eustace, Priest, Ladies, Cowfy, Notary, and Miramont.

Not. Come, let him bring his Sons hand, and all's done. Is your's ready?

Pri. Yes, I'll dispatch ye presently, immediately, for in truth I am a hungry.

Eust. Do, speak apace, for we believe exactly: do not we stay long, Mistrefs?

Ang. I find no fault, better things well done, than want time to do them. Uncle, why are you sad?

Mir. Sweet smelling blossom, would I were thine Uncle to thine own content, I'd make thy Husband's state a thousand better, a yearly thousand. Thou hast mist a man, (but that he is addicted to his study, and knows no other Mistrefs than his mind) would weigh down bundles of these empty kexes.

Ang. Can he speak, Sir?

Mir. Faith yes, but not to Women; his language is to Heaven, and heavenly wonder; to Nature, and her dark and secret causes.

Ang. And does he speak well there?

Mir. O admirably! but he's too bashful to behold a Woman, there's none that sees him, and he troubles none.

Ang. He is a man.

Mir. Faith yes, and a clear sweet spirit.

Ang. Then conversation me thinks——

Mir. So think I; but it is his rugged Fate, and so I leave you.

Ang. I like thy nobleness.

Eust. See my mad Uncle is courting my fair Mistrefs.

Lew. Let him alone; there's nothing that allays an angry mind so soon as a sweet Beauty: he'll come to us.

Enter Brisac, and Charles.

Eust. My Father's here, my Brother too! that's a wonder, broke like a Spirit from his Cell.

Bri. Come hither, come nearer, Charles; 'twas your desire to see my noble Daughter, and the company, and give your Brother joy, and then to Seal, Boy; you do, like a good Brother.

Lew. Marry does he, and he shall have my love for ever for't. Put to your hand now.

Not. Here's the Deed, Sir, ready.

Char. No, you must pardon me a while, I tell ye, I am in contemplation, do not trouble me.

Bri. Come, leave thy Study, Charles.

Char. I'll leave my life first; I study now to be a man, I've found it. Before what Man was, was but my Argument.

Mir. I like this best of all, he has taken fire; his dull mist flies away.

Eust. Will you write, Brother?

Char. No, Brother, no; I have no time for poor things; I'm taking the height of that bright Constellation.

Bri. I say you trifle time, Son.

Char. I will not seal; Sir; I am your Eldest, and I'll keep my Birth-right, for Heaven forbid I should become example: Had y'only shew'd me Land, I had deliver'd it, and been a proud man to have parted with it; 'tis dirt, and labour. Do I speak right, Uncle?

Mir. Bravely, my Boy, and bless thy tongue.

Char. I'll forward: but you have open'd to me such a treasure, I find my mind free; Heaven direct my fortune.

Mir. Can he speak now? Is this a son to sacrifice?

Char. Such an inimitable picce of Beauty, that I have studied long, and now found only, that I'll part sooner with my soul of Reason, and be a Plant, a Beast, a Fish, a Flic, and only make the number of things up, than yield to one foot of Land, if she be ti'd to't.

Lew. He speaks unhappily.

Ang. And methinks bravely. This the meer Scholar?

Eust. You but vex your self, Brother, and vex your study too.

Char. Go you and study, for 'tis time, young Eustace; you want both man and manners; I've study'd both, although I made no shew on't. Go turn the Volumes over I have read, eat and digest them, that they may grow in thee; wear out the tedious night with thy dim Lamp, and sooner lose the day, than leave a doubt. Distil the sweetness from the Poets Spring, and learn to love; thou know'st not what fair is: Traverse the stories of the great Heroes, the wise and civil lives of good men walk through; thou hast seen nothing but the face of Countrys, and brought home nothing but their empty words: why shouldst thou wear a Jewel of this worth, that hast no worth within thee to preserve her?

Beauty clear and fair,

Where the Air

Rather like a perfume dwells,

Where the Violet and the Rose

The blew Veins in blush disclose,

And come to honour nothing else.

Where to live near,

And planted there,

Is to live, and still live new;

Where to gain a favour is

More than light, perpetual bliss,

Make me live by serving you.

Dear again back recall

To this light,

A stranger to himself and all;

Both the wonder and the story

Shall be yours, and eke the glory;

I am your servant and your thrall.

Mir. Speak such another Ode, and take all yet. What say ye to the Scholar now?

Ang. I wonder; is he your Brother, Sir?

Eust. Yes, would he were buried; I fear he'll make an Ass of me a younger.

Ang. Speak not so softly, Sir, 'tis very likely.

Bri. Come, leave your finical talk, and let's dispatch; Charles.

Char. Dispatch, what?

Bri. Why the Land.

Char. You are deceiv'd, Sir. Now I perceive what 'tis that woos a woman, and what maintains her when she's woo'd: I'll stop here. A wilful poverty ne'er made a Beauty, nor want of means maintain'd it virtuously: though land and moncys be no happiness, yet they are counted good additions. That use I'll make; he that neglects a blessing, though he want a present knowledge how to use it, neglects himself. May be I have done you wrong, Lady, whose love and hope went hand in hand together; may be my Brother, that has long expected the happy hour, and bless'd my ignorance; pray give me leave, Sir, I shall clear all doubts; why did they shew me you? pray tell me that? Q 2. (Mir.)

(Mir. He'll talk thee into a pension for thy knavery.)

Char. You, happy you, why did you break unto me? The Rosie sugred morn ne'er broke so sweetly: I am a man, and have desires within me, affections too, though they were drown'd a while, and lay dead, till the Spring of beauty rais'd them; till I saw those eyes, I was but a lump, a chaos of confus'dness dwelt in me; then from those eyes shot Love, and he distinguish'd, and into form he drew my faculties; and now I know my Land, and now I love too.

Bri. We had best remove the Maid.

Char. It is too late, Sir. I have her figure here. Nay frown not, Eufiace, there are less worthy Souls for younger Brothers; this is no form of Silk, but Sanctity, which wild lascivious hearts can never dignifie. Remove her where you will, I walk along still, for, like the light, we make no separation; you may sooner part the Billows of the Sea, and put a barr betwixt their fellowships, than blot out my remembrance; sooner shut old Time into a Den, and stay his motion, wash off the swift hours from his downy wings, or steal Eternity to stop his glass, than shut the sweet Idea I have in me. Room for an Elder Brother, pray give place, Sir.

Mir. H'as studied duel too; take heed, he'll beat thee. H'as frighted the old Justice into a Feather; I hope he'll disinherit him too for an Ass; for though he be grave with years, he's a great Baby.

Char. Do not you think me mad?

Ang. No certain, Sir, I have heard nothing from you but things excellent.

Char. You look upon my cloaths, and laugh at me, my scurvy cloaths!

Ang. They have rich linings, Sir. I would your Brother

Char. His are gold and gawdie.

Ang. But touch 'em inwardly, they smell of Copper.

Char. Can ye love me? I am an Heir, sweet Lady, however I appear a poor dependent; love you with honour, I shall love so ever. Is your eye ambitious? I may be a great man; is't wealth or lands you covet? my Father must die.

Mir. That was well put in, I hope he'll take it deeply.

Char. Old men are not immortal, as I take it; is it you look for, youth and handsomness? I do confess my Brother's a handsome Gentleman, but he shall give me leave to lead the way, Lady. Can you love for love, and make that the reward? The old man shall not love his heaps of Gold with a more doting superstition, than I'll love you. The young man his delights, the Merchant, when he ploughs the angry Sea up, and sees the mountain billows falling on him, as if all the Elements, and all their angers, were turn'd into one vow'd destruction; shall not with greater joy embrace his safety. We'll live together like two wanton Vines, circling our souls and loves in one another, we'll spring together, and we'll bear one fruit; one joy shall make us smile, and one grief mourn; one age go with us, and one hour of death shall shut our eyes, and one grave make us happy.

Ang. And one hand seal the Match, I'm yours for ever.

Lew. Nay, stay, stay, stay.

Ang. Nay certainly, 'tis done, Sir.

Bri. There was a contract.

Ang. Only conditional, that if he had the Land, he had my love too; this Gentleman's the Heir, and he'll maintain it. Pray be not angry, Sir, at what I say; or if you be, 'tis at your own adventure. You have the out-side of a pretty Gentleman, but by my troth your inside is but barren; 'tis not a face I only am in love with, nor will I say your face is excellent, a reasonable hunting face to court the wind with; nor they're not words, unless they be well plac'd too, nor your sweet Dam-mes, nor your hired Verses, nor telling me of Clothes, nor Coach and Horses, nor your visits each day in new Suits, nor your black Patches you wear variously, some cut like Stars, some in Half-moons, some Lozenges, (all which but shew you still a younger Brother.)

Mir. Gramercy, Wench, thou hast a noble Soul too.

Ang. Nor your long travels, nor your little knowledge, can make me doat upon you. Faith go study, and glean some goodness, that you may shew manly; your Brother at my suit I'm sure will teach you; or only study how to get a Wife, Sir. Y'are cast far behind, 'tis good you should be melancholy, it shews like a Gamester that had lost his mony; and 'tis the fashion to wear your arm in a scarf, Sir, for your have had a shrewd cut o'er the fingers.

Lew. But are y'in earnest?

Ang. Yes, believe me, Father, you shall ne'er choose for me; y'are old and dim, Sir, and th' shadow of the earth Eclips'd your judgment. Y'have had your time without control, dear Father, and you must give me leave to take mine now, Sir.

Bri. This is the last time of asking, will you set your hand to?

Char. This is the last time of answering, I will never.

Bri. Out of my doors.

Char. Most willingly.

Mir. He shall, Jew, thou of the Tribe of Man-y-asses, Coxcomb, and never trouble thee more till thy chops be cold, fool.

Ang. Must I be gone too?

Lew. I will never know thee.

Ang. Then this man will; what Fortune he shall run, Father, be't good or bad, I must partake it with him.

Enter Egremont.

Egre. When shall the Masque begin?

Eust. 'Tis done already; all, all is broken off, I am undone, Friend, my Brother's wife again, and has spoil'd all, will not release the Land, has won the Wench too.

Egre. Could he not stay till the Masque was past? w'are ready. What a scurvy trick's this?

Mir. O you may vanish, perform it at some Hall, where the Citizens Wives may see't for Six-pence a piece, and a cold Supper. Come, let's go, Charles. And now, my noble Daughter, I'll sell the Tiles of my House, e're thou shalt want, Wench. Rate up your Dinner, Sir, and sell it cheap: some younger Brother will take't up in Commodities. Send you joy, Nephew Eufiace; if you study the Law, keep your great Pippin-pies, they'll go far with ye.

Char. I'd have your blessing.

Bri. No, no, meet me no more. Farewel, thou wilt blast mine eyes else.

Char. I will not.

Lew. Nor send not you for Gowns.

Ang. I'll wear course Flannel first.

Bri. Come, let's go take some counsel.

Lew. 'Tis too late.

Bri. Then stay and dine; it may be we shall vex 'em.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Brisac, Eufiace, Egremont, Cowfy.

Brisac. NE'er talk to me, you are no men but Masquers; shapes, shadows, and the signs of men, Court bubbles, that every breath or breaks or blows away. You have no souls, no metal in your bloods, no heat to stir ye when ye have occasion: frozen dull things, that must be turn'd with Leavers. Are you the Courtiers, and the travell'd Gallants? the spritely Fellows that the people talk of? Ye have no more spirit than three sleepy sopers.

Eust. What would ye have me do, Sir?

Bri. Follow your Brother, and get ye out of doors, and seek your Fortune. Stand still becalm'd, and let an aged Dotard, a hair-brain'd Puppy, and a Bookish Boy, that never never knew a Blade above a Pen-knife, and how to cut his meat in Characters, croses my design, and take thine own Wench from thee, in mine own house too? Thou despis'd poor fellow!

Eust. The reverence that I ever bare to you, Sir, then to my Uncle, with whom 't had been but sawciness t' have been so rough——

Egre. And we not seeing him strive in his own cause, that was principal, and should have led us on, thought it ill manners to begin a quarrel here.

Bri. You dare do nothing. Do you make your care the excuse of your Cowardise? Three Boys on Hobby-horses, with three penny Halberds, would beat you all.

Cow. You must not say so.

Bri. Yes, and sing it too.

Cow. You are a man of peace, therefore we must give way.

Bri. I'll make my way, and therefore quickly leave me, or I'll force you; and having first torn off your slanting feathers, I'll trample on 'em; and if that cannot teach you to quit my house I'll, kick ye out of my gates; you gawdy Glow-worms, carrying seeming fire, yet have no heat within ye.

Cow. O blest travel! how much we owe thee for our power to suffer?

Egre. Some spleenive Youths now, that had never seen more than thy Country smoak, will grow in choler; it would shew fine in us.

Eust. Yes marry would it, that are prime Courtiers, and must know no angers, but give thanks for our injuries, if we purpose to hold our places.

Bri. Will you find the door? and find it suddenly? you shall lead the way, Sir, with your perfum'd retinue, and recover the now lost Angellina, or build on it, I will adopt some beggar's doubtful issue, before thou shalt inherit.

Eust. We'll to counsel, and what may be done by man's wit or valour, we'll put in Execution.

Bri. Do, or never hope I shall know thee. [Exeunt.]

Enter Lewis.

Lew. O Sir, have I found you?

Bri. I never hid my self; whence flows this fury, with which, as it appears, you come to fright me?

Lew. I smell a plot, meer conspiracy amongst ye all to defeat me of my Daughter; and if she be not suddenly deliver'd, untainted in her reputation too, the best of France shall know how I am jugled with. She is my Heir, and if she may be ravish'd thus from my care, farewell Nobility; Honour and Blood are meer neglected nothings.

Bri. Nay then, my Lord, you go too far, and tax him, whose innocency understands not what fear is. If your unconstant Daughter will not dwell on certainties, must you thenceforth conclude that I am fickle? what have I omitted, to make good my integrity and truth? nor can her lightness, nor your supposition, cast an aspersion on me.

Lew. I am wounded in fact, nor can words cure it: do not trifle, but speedily, once more I do repeat it, restore my Daughter as I brought her hither, or you shall hear from me in such a kind, as you will blush to answer.

Bri. All the world, I think, conspires to vex me, yet I will not torment my self: some sprightful mirth must banish the rage and melancholy which hath almost choak'd me; t' a knowing man 'tis Physick, and 'tis thought on; one merry hour I'll have in spite of Fortune, to cheer my heart, and this is that appointed; this night I'll hug my Lilly in mine arms, provocatives are sent before to cheer me, we old men need 'em, and though we pay dear for our stoll pleasures, so it be done securely, the charge much like a sharp sauce, gives 'em relish. Well, honest Andrew, I gave you a Farm, and it shall have a Beacon, to give warning to my other Tenants when the Foe approaches, and presently, you being bestow'd else-where, I'll graff it with dexterity on your forehead; indeed I will, Lilly, I come, poor Andrew. [Exit.]

ACTUS IV. SCENA II.

Enter Miramont, Andrew.

Mir. Do they chafe roundly?

And. As they were rubb'd with Soap, Sir, and now they swear aloud, now calm again; like a Ring of Bells, whose sound the wind still alters, and then they sit in counsel what to do, and then they jar again what shall be done; they talk of Warrants from the Parliament, Complaints to the King, and Forces from the Province; they have a thousand heads in a thousand minutes, yet ne'er a one head worth a head of Garlick.

Mir. Long may they chafe, and long may we laugh at 'em; a couple of pure Puppies yok'd together. But what says the young Courtier Master Eustace, and his two warlike Friends?

And. They say but little, how much they think I know not; they look ruefully, as if they had newly come from a vaulting-house, and had been quite shot through 'tween wind and water by a she Dunkirk, and had sprung a Leak, Sir. Certain my Master was to blame.

Mir. Why, Andrew?

And. To take away the Wench o'th' sudden from him, and give him no lawful warning; he is tender, and of a young Girls constitution, Sir, ready to get the Green sickness with conceit. Had he but ta'ne his leave in availing Language, or bought an Elogy of his condolment, that the world might have ta'ne notice, he had been an Ass, 't had been some favour.

Mir. Thou say'st true, wise Andrew; but these Scholars are such things, when they can prattle.

And. And very parlous things, Sir.

Mir. And when gain the liberty to distinguish the difference 'twixt a Father and a Fool, to look below, and spie a younger Brother pruning up, and dressing up his expectations in a rare glass of beauty, too good for him; those dreaming Scholars then turn Tyrants, Andrew, and shew no mercy.

And. The more's the pity, Sir.

Mir. Thou told'st me of a trick to catch my Brother, and anger him a little farther, Andrew. It shall be only anger, I assure thee, and little shame.

And. And I can fit you, Sir. Hark in your ear.

Mir. Thy Wife?

And. So I assure ye; this night at twelve a clock.

Mir. 'Tis neat and handsome; there are twenty Crowns due to thy project, Andrew; I've time to visit Charles, and see what Lecture he reads to his Mistress. That done, I'll not fail to be with you.

And. Nor I to watch my master — [Exeunt.]

ACTUS IV. SCENA III.

Enter Angellia, Sylvia, with a Taper.

Ang. I'm worse than e'er I was; for now I fear, that that I love, that that I only dote on; he follows me through every room I pass, and with a strong set eye he gazes on me, as if his spark of innocence were blown into a flame of lust. Virtue defend me. His Uncle too is absent, and 'tis night; and what these opportunities may teach him — What fear and endless care 'tis to be honest! to be a Maid what misery, what mischief! Would I were rid of it, so it were fairly.

Syl. You need not fear that, will you be a child still? He follows you, but still to look upon you; or if he did desire to lie with ye, 'tis but your own desire, you love for that end; I'll lay my life, if he were now a bed w'ye, he is so modest; he would fall asleep straight.

Ang. Dare you venture that?

Syl. Let him consent, and have at ye; I fear him not, he knows not what a woman is, nor how to find the mystery men aim at. Are you afraid of your own shadow, Madam?

Ang. He follows still, yet with a sober face; would I might know the worst, and then I were satisfied.

Syl.

Syl. Ye may both, and let him but go with ye.

Char. Why do you flie me? what have I fo ill about me, or within me, to deserve it?

Ang. I am going to bed, Sir.

Char. And I am come to light ye; I am a Maid, and 'tis a Maidens office.

Ang. You may have me to bed, Sir, without a scruple, and yet I am chary too who comes about me. Two Innocents should not fear one another.

Syl. The Gentleman says true. Pluck up your heart, Madam.

Char. The glorious Sun both rising and declining we boldly look upon; even then, sweet Lady, when, like a modest Bride, he draws nights curtains, even then he blushes, that men should behold him.

Ang. I fear he will perswade me to mistake him.

Syl. 'Tis easily done, if you will give your mind to't.

Ang. Pray ye to your bed.

Char. Why not to yours, dear Mistris? one heart and one bed.

Ang. True, Sir, when 'tis lawful: but yet you know—

Char. I would not know, forget it; those are but sickly loves that hang on Ceremonies, nurs'd up with doubts and fears; ours high and healthful, full of belief, and fit to teach the Priest: Love shall seal first, then hands confirm the bargain.

Ang. I shall be a Heretick if this continue. What would you do a bed? you make me blush, Sir.

Char. I'd see you sleep, for sure your sleeps are excellent, you that are waking such a noted wonder, must in your slumber prove an admiration. I would behold your dreams too, if 't were possible; those were rich showes.

Ang. I am becoming Traitor.

Char. Then like blew Neptune courting of an Island, where all the perfumes and the precious things that wait upon great Nature are laid up, I'd clip it in my arms, and chactly kiss it, dwell in your bosome like your dearest thoughts, and sigh and weep.

Ang. I've too much woman in me.

Char. And those true tears falling on your pure Crystals, should turn to armelets for great Queens t'adore.

Ang. I must be gone.

Char. Do not, I will not hurt ye; this is to let you know, my worthiest Lady, y'have clear'd my mind, and I can speak of love too: Fear not my manners, though I never knew, before these few hours, what a Beauty was, and such a one that fires all hearts that feel it; yet I have read of vertuous Temperance, and study'd it among my other Secrets; and sooner would I force a separation betwixt this spirit and the case of flesh, than but conceive one rudeness against Chastity.

Ang. Then we may walk.

Char. And talk of any thing, any fit for your ears, and my language; though I was bred up dull, I was ever civil; 'tis true, I have found it hard to look on you, and not desire, 'twill prove a wife mans task; yet those desires I have so mingled still, and tempered with the quality of honour, that if you should yield, I should hate you for't. I am no Courtier of a light condition, apt to take fire at every beautiful face; that only serves his will and wantonness, and lets the serious part run by as thin neglected sand. Whiteness of name, you must be mine; why should I rob my self of that that lawfully must make me happy? why should I seek to cuckold my delights, and widow all those sweets I aim at in you? We'll lose our selves in Venus Groves of Myrtle, where every little Bird shall be a Cupid, and sing of love and youth, each wind that blows, and curls the velvet-leaves, shall breed delights, the wanton Springs shall call us to their banks, and on the perfum'd flowers we'll feast our senses; yet we'll walk by untainted of their pleasures, and as they were pure Temples we'll talk in them.

Ang. To bed, and pray then, we may have a fair end of our fair loves; would I were worthy of you, or of such parents that might give you thanks: But I am poor in all but in your love. Once more, good night.

Char. A good night t'ye, and may the dew of sleep fall gently on you, sweet one, and lock up those fair lights in pleasing slumbers; no dreams but chaste and clear attempt your fancy, and break betimes sweet morn, I've lost my light elfe.

Ang. Let it be ever night when I lose you.

Syl. This Scholar never went to a Free-School, he's so simple.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your Brother, with two Gallants, is at door, Sir, and they're so violent, they'll take no denial.

Ang. This is no fit time of night.

Char. Let 'em in, Mistris.

Serv. They stay no leave; shall I raise the house on 'em?

Char. Not a man, nor make no murmur of't I charge ye.

Enter Eustace, Egremont, Cowfy.

Eust. They're here, my Uncle absent, stand close to me. How do you, Brother, with your curious story? have you not read her yet sufficiently?

Char. No, Brother, no; I stay yet in the Preface: the style's too hard for you.

Eust. I must entreat her; she's parcel of my goods.

Char. She's all when you have her.

Ang. Hold off your hands, unmannerly, rude Sir; nor I, nor what I have depend on you.

Char. Do, let her alone, she gives good counsel; do not trouble your self with Ladies, they are too light: Let out your Land, and get a provident Steward.

Ang. I cannot love ye, let that satisfy you; such vanities as you, are to be laugh'd at.

Eust. Nay, then you must go; I must claim mine own.

Both. Away, away with her.

Char. Let her alone, pray let her alone, } She strikes off Eustace's hat. and take your Coxcomb up: Let me talk civilly a while with you, Brother. It may be on some terms I may part with her.

Eust. O, is your heart come down? what are your terms, Sir? Put up, put up. } Snatches away his sword.

Char. This is the first and chiefest; let's walk a turn. Now stand off, fools, I advise ye, stand as far off as you would hope for mercy: this is the first sword yet I ever handled, and a sword's a beautiful thing to look upon; and if it hold, I shall go hunt your insolence: 'tis sharp, I'm sure, and if I put it home, 'tis ten to one I shall new pink your Sattins; I find I have spirit enough to dispose of it, and will enough to make ye all examples; let me toss it round, I have the full command on't. Fetch me a native Fencer, I defie him; I feel the fire of ten strong spirits in me. Do you watch me when my Uncle is absent? this is my grief, I shall be flesh'd on Cowards; teach me to fight, I willing am to learn. Are ye all gilded flies, nothing but shew in ye? why stand ye gaping? who now touches her? who calls her his, or who dares name her to me? but name her as his own; who dares look on her? that shall be mortal too; but think, 'tis dangerous. Art thou a fit man to inherit Land, and hast no wit nor spirit to maintain it? Stand still, thou sign of a man, and pray for thy friends, pray heartily, good prayers may restore ye.

Ang. But do not kill 'em, Sir.

Char. You speak too late, Dear; it is my first fight, and I must do bravely, I must not look with partial eyes on any; I cannot spare a button of these Gentlemen; did life lie in their heel, Achilles like, I'd shoot my anger at those parts, and kill 'em. Who waits within?

Serv. Sir.

Char. View all these, view 'em well, go round about 'em, and still view their faces; round about yet, see how death waits upon 'em, for thou shalt never view 'em more.

Eust. Pray hold, Sir.

Char. I cannot hold, you stand so fair before me; I must not not hold; 'twill darken all my glories. Go to my Uncle, bid him post to the King, and get my pardon instantly, I have need on't.

Eust. Are you so unnatural?

Char. You shall die last, Sir, I'll take thee dead, thou art no man to fight with. Come, will ye come? Me-thinks I've fought whole Battels.

Cov. We have no quarrel to you that we know on, Sir.

Egre. We'll quit the house, and ask ye mercy too. Good Lady, let no murder be done here; we came but to parly.

Char. How my sword thirsts after them? Stand away, Sweet.

Eust. Pray, Sir, take my submission, and I disclaim for ever.

Char. Away, ye poor things, ye despicable creatures! do you come poste to fetch a Lady from me? from a poor School-boy that ye scorn'd of late, and grow lame in your hearts when you should execute? Pray take her, take her, I am weary of her: What did you bring to carry her?

Egre. A Coach and four Horses.

Char. But are they good?

Egre. As good as France can shew Sir.

Char. Are you willing to leave those, and take your safeties? Speak quickly.

Eust. Yes with all our hearts.

Char. 'Tis done then. Many have got one Horse, I've got four by th' bargain.

Enter Miramont.

Mir. How now, who's here?

Ser. Nay, now y'are gone without bail.

Mir. What, drawn, my Friends? Fetch me my two-hand Sword; I will not leave a head on your shoulders, Wretches.

Eust. In troth, Sir, I came but to do my duty.

Both. And we to renew our loves.

Mir. Bring me a Blanket. What came they for?

Ang. To borrow me a while, Sir; but one that never fought yet, has so curri'd, so bastinado'd them with manly carriage, they stand like things Gorgon had turn'd to stone: they watch'd your being absent, and then thought they might do wonders here, and they have done so; for by my troth I wonder at their coldness, the nipping North or Frost never came near them; S^t George upon a sign would grow more sensible. If the name of Honour were for ever to be lost, these were the most sufficient men to do it in all the world; and yet they are but young, what will they rise to? They're as full of fire as a frozen Glow-worms rattle, and shine as goodly: Nobility and patience are match'd rarely in these three Gentlemen, they have right use on't; they'll stand still for an hour and be beaten. These are the Anagrams of three great Worthies.

Mir. They will infect my house with cowardize, if they breath longer in it; my roof covers no baff'd Monseurs, walk and air your selves; as I live they stay not here. White-liver'd wretches, without one word to ask a reason why. Vanish, 'tis the last warning, and with speed; for if I take ye in hand, I shall dissect you, and read upon your flegmatick dull Carcases. My Horse again there: I have other business, which you shall hear hereafter, and laugh at it. Good-night Charles, fair goodness to your dear Lady; 'tis late, 'tis late.

Ang. Pray, Sir, be careful of us.

Mir. It is enough, my best care shall attend ye.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS IV. SCENA IV.

Enter Andrew.

And. Are you come, old Master? Very good, your Horse is well fet up; but ere you part, I'll ride you, and spur your Reverend Justice such a question, as I shall make the sides of your Reputation bleed, truly I will. Now must I play at Bo-peep—— A Banquet—— well, Potatoes and Eringoes, and, as I take it, Cantharides—— Excellent, a Priapisin follows, and as I'll handle it, it shall, old Lecherous Goat in Authority. Now they begin to Bill; how he flavers her! Gramercy Lilly, she spits his kisses out, and now he offers to fumble. she falls off, (that's a good Wench) and cries fair play above board. Who are they in the corner? As I live, a covey of Fiddlers; I shall have some Musick yet at my making sine o'th' Company of Horners; there's the comfort, and a Song too! He beckons for one—— Sure 'tis no Anthem, nor no borrow'd Rhymes out of the School of Vertue; I will listen—— [A Song. This was never penn'd at Geneva, the Note's too sprightly. So, so, the Musick's paid for, and now what follows? O that Monseur Miramont would but keep his word; here were a Feast to make him fat with laughter; at the most 'tis not six minutes riding from his house, nor will he break, I hope—— O are you come, Sir? the prey is in the Net, and will break in upon occasion.

Mir. Thou shalt rule me, Andrew. O th'infinite fright that will assail this Gentleman! the Quartans, Tertians, and Quotidians that will hang like Serjeants on his Worships shoulders! the humiliation of the flesh of this man, this grave, austere man will be wondred at. How will those solemn looks appear to me; and that severe face, that speaks chains and shackles? Now I take him in the nick, e're I have done with him, he had better have stood between two panes of Wainscot, and made his recantation in the Market, than hear me conjure him.

And. He must pass this way to th' only Bed I have; he comes, stand close.

Bri. Well done, well done, give me my night-cap. So. Quick, quick, untruss me; I will truss and trounce thee. Come, Wench, a kiss between each point; kiss close, it is a sweet Parenthesis.

Lil. Y'are merry, Sir.

Bri. Merry I will be anon, and thou shalt feel it, thou shalt, my Lilly.

Lil. Shall I air your Bed, Sir?

Bri. No, no; I'll use no Warming-pan but thine, Girl, that's all. Come kiss me again.

Lil. Ha'ye done yet?

Bri. No; but I will do, and do wonders, Lilly. Shew me the way.

Lil. You cannot miss it, Sir; you shall have a Cawdle in the morning for your Worship's breakfast.

Bri. How, i'th' morning, Lilly? th'art such a witty thing to draw me on. Leave fooling, Lilly, I am hungry now, and th'ast another-Kickshaw, I must taste it.

Lil. 'Twill make you surfeit, I am tender of you: y'have all y'are like to have.

And. And can this be earnest?

Mir. It seems so, and she honest.

Bri. Have I not thy promise, Lilly?

Lil. Yes, and I have performed enough to a man of your years, this is truth; and you shall find, Sir, you have kiss'd and tous'd me, handl'd my leg and foot; what would you more, Sir? As for the rest, it requires youth and strength, and the labour in an old man would breed Agues, Sciatica's, and Cramps: You shall not curse me for taking from you what you cannot spare, Sir. Be good unto your self, y'have ta'ne already all you can take with ease; you are past threshing, it is a work too boisterous for you, leave such drudgery to Andrew.

Mir. How she jeers him?

Lil. Let Andrew alone with his own tillage, he's tough, and can manure it.

Bri. Y'are a quean, a scoffing, jeering quean.

Lil. It may be so, but I'm sure I'll ne'r be yours.

Bri. Do not provoke me, if thou do'st I'll have my Farm again, and turn thee out a begging.

Lil. Though you have the will, and want of honesty to deny your deed, Sir; yet I hope Andrew has got so much learning from my young Master, as to keep his own; at the worst I'll tell a short tale to the Judges, for what grave ends

Ends you sign'd your Lease, and on what terms you would revoke it.

Bri. Whore, thou dar'st not. Yield, or I'll have thee whipt: how my Bloud boils, as if 't were o're a Furnace!

Mir. I shall cool it.

Bri. Yet, gentle Lilly, pity and forgive me, I'll be a friend t'ye, such a loving bountifull friend—

Lil. To avoid Suits in Law, I would grant a little; but should fierce Andrew know it, what would become of me?

And. A Whore, a Whore!

Bri. Nothing but well Wench, I shall put such a strong Bit in his mouth, as thou shalt ride him how thou wilt, my Lilly; nay, he shall hold the door, as I will work him, and thank thee for the Office.

Mir. Take heed, Andrew, these are shrewd temptations.

And. Pray you know your Cue, and second me, Sir. By your Worship's favour.

Bri. Andrew!

And. I come in time to take possession of th'Office you assign me; hold the door! alas, 'tis nothing for a simple man to stay without, when a deep understanding holds conference within, say with his Wife: a trifle, Sir. I know I hold my Farm by Cuckolds Tenure; you are Lord o'th' Soil, Sir. Lilly is a West, a stray, she's yours to use, Sir, I claim no interest in her.

Bri. Art thou serious? speak, honest Andrew, since thou hast o'erheard us, and wink at small faults, man; I'm but a pidlar, a little will serve my turn; thou'lt find enough when I've my belly full: Wilt thou be private and silent?

And. By all means, I'll only have a Ballad made o't, sung to some lewd Tune, and the name of it shall be Justice Trap; it will sell rarely with your Worships name, and Lilly's on the top.

Bri. Seek not the ruine o' my reputation, Andrew.

And. 'Tis for your credit, Monsieur Brisac, printed in Capital Letters, then pasted upon all the posts in Paris.

Bri. No mercy, Andrew?

And. O, it will proclaim you from the City to the Court, and prove Sport Royal.

Bri. Thou shalt keep thy Farm.

Mir. He does afflict him rarely.

And. You trouble me. Then his intent arriving, the vizard of his hypocrisie pull'd of to the Judge criminal.

Bri. O I am undone.

And. He's put out of Commission with disgrace, and held incapable of bearing Office ever hereafter. This is my revenge, and this I'll put in practice.

Bri. Do but hear me.

And. To bring me back from my Grammar to my Horn-book, it is unpardonable.

Bri. Do not play the Tyrant; accept of composition.

Lil. Hear him, Andrew.

And. What composition?

Bri. I'll confirm thy Farm, and add unto it a hundred Acres more, adjoining to it.

And. Umb, this mollifies; but y'are so fickle, and will again deny this, there being no witness by.

Bri. Call any witness, I'll presently assure it.

And. Say you so? troth there's a friend of mine, Sir, within hearing, that's familiar with all that's past, his testimony will be authentical.

Bri. Will he be secret?

And. You may tie his tongue up, as you would do your purse-strings.

Bri. Miramont!

Mir. Ha-ha-ha!

And. This is my witness. Lord how you are troubled! sure you have an Agne, you shake so with choler: Here's your loving Brother, Sir, and will tell no body but all he meets, that you have eat a Snake, and are grown young, gamefome, and rampant.

Bri. Caught thus!

And. If he were one that would make jests of you, or plague ye, with making your Religious gravity ridiculous to your Neighbours, then you had some cause to be perplex'd.

Bri. I shall become discourse for Clowns and Tapsters.

And. Quick, Lilly, quick, he's now past kissing, between point and point. He fwounds, fetch him some Cordial— Now put in, Sir.

Mir. Who may this be? sure this is some mistake: let me see his face, wears he not a false beard? it cannot be Brisac that worthy Gentleman, the Pillar and the Patron of his Country; he is too prudent, and too cautelous; experience hath taught him t'avoid these fooleries; he is the punisher, and not the doer; besides he's old and cold, unfit for Woman: This is some counterfeit, he shall be whipt for't, some base abuser of my worthy Brother.

Bri. Open the doors; will ye imprison me? are ye my Judges?

Mir. The man raves! this is not judicious Brisac: yet now I think on't, h'has a kind of Dog look like my Brother, a guilty hanging face.

Bri. I'll suffer bravely, do your worst, do, do.

Mir. Why, it's manly in you.

Bri. Nor will I rail nor curse, you slave, you whore, I will not meddle with you; but all the torments that e're fell on men, that fed on mischief, fall heavily on you all.

[Exit.]

Lil. You have given him a heat, Sir.

Mir. He will ride you the better; Lilly.

And. We'll teach him to meddle with Scholars.

Mir. He shall make good his promise t'increase thy Farm, Andrew, or I'll jeer him to death. Fear nothing, Lilly, I am thy Champion. This jeast goes to Charles, and then I'll hunt him out, and Monsieur Eustace the gallant Courtier; and laugh heartily to see 'em mourn together.

And. 'Twill be rare, Sir.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Eustace, Egremont, Cowsy.

Eust. Turn'd out of doors and baffled!

Egre. We share with you in the affront.

Cow. Yet bear it not like you with such dejection.

Eust. My Coach and Horses made the ransom of our Cowardize!

Cow. Pish, that's nothing, 'tis damnum reparabile, and soon recover'd.

Egre. It is but feeding a Suitor with false hopes, and after squeeze him with a dozen of Oaths, You are new rigg'd, and this no more remembred.

Eust. And does the Court, that should be the Example and Oracle of the Kingdom, read to us no other Doctrine?

Egre. None that thrives so well as that, within my knowledge.

Cow. Flattery rubs out; but since great men learn to admire themselves, 'tis something crest-faln.

Egre. To be of no Religion, argues a subtle, moral understanding, and it is often cherish'd.

Eust. Piety then, and valour, nor to do and suffer wrong, are they no virtues?

Egre. Rather vices, Eustace; Fighting! what's fighting? it may be in fashion among provant fwords, and Buff-jerkin men: But w'us that swim in choice of Silks and Tissues; though in defence of that word Reputation, which is indeed a kind of glorious nothing, to lose a dram of blood must needs appear as coarse as to be honest.

Eust. And all this you seriously believe?

Cow. It is a faith that we will die in, since from the black Guard to the grim Sir in Office, there are few hold other Tenets.

Eust. Now my eyes are open, and I behold a strong necessity that keeps me knave and coward.

Cow. Y'are the wiser.

Eust.

Eust. Nor can I change my copy, if I purpose to be of your Society.

Egre. By no means.

Eust. Honour is nothing with you?

Cow. A meer bubble; for what's grown common, is no more regarded.

Eust. My sword forc'd from me too, and still detain'd, you think 'tis no blemish.

Egre. Get me a Batton, 'tis twenty times more Court-like, and less trouble.

Eust. And yet you wear a sword.

Cow. Yes, and a good one, a Milan hilt, and a Damascio blade for ornament, not use, the Court allows it.

Eust. Will't not fight of it self?

Cow. I ne'er tri'd this, yet I have worn as fair as any man; I'm sure I've made my Cutler rich, and paid for several weapons, Turkish and Toledo's, two thousand Crowns, and yet could never light upon a fighting one.

Eust. I'll borrow this, I like it well.

Cow. 'Tis at your service, Sir, a Lath in a Velvet Scabbard will serve my turn.

Eust. And now I have it, leave me; y'are infectious, the plague and leprosie of your baseness spreading on all that do come near you; such as you render the Throne of Majesty, the Court, suspected and contemptible; you are Scarabee's that batten in her dung, and have no palats to taste her curious Viands; and like Owles, can only see her night deformities, but with the glorious splendor of her beauties, you are struck blind as Moles, that undermine the sumptuous Building that allow'd you shelter: you stick like running ulcers on her face, and taint the pureness of her native candor, and being bad Servants, cause your Masters goodnes to be disputed of; you make the Court, that is the abstract of all Academies, to teach and practise noble undertakings, (where courage sits triumphant crown'd with Lawrel, and wisdom loaded with the weight of honour) a School of Vices.

Egre. What sudden rapture's this?

Eust. A heavenly one, that raising me from sloth and ignorance, (in which your conversation long hath charm'd me) carries me up into the air of action, and knowledge of my self; even now I feel, but pleading only in the Court's defence (though far short of her merits and bright lustre) a happy alteration, and full strength to stand her Champion against all the world, that throw aspersions on her.

Cow. Sure he'll beat us, I see it in his eyes.

Egre. A second Charles; pray look not, Sir, so furiously.

Eust. Recant what you have said, ye Mungrils, and lick up the vomit ye have cast upon the Court, where you unworthily have had warmth and breeding, and swear that you, like Spiders, have made poison of that which was a saving Antidote.

Egre. We will swear any thing.

Cow. We honour the Court as a most sacred place.

Egre. And will make oath, if you enjoyn us to't, nor knave, nor fool, nor coward living in it.

Eust. Except you two, you Rascals.

Cow. Yes, we are all these, and more, if you will have it so.

Eust. And that until you are again reform'd and grown new men, you ne'ere presume to name the Court, or press into the Porter's Lodge but for a penance, to be disciplin'd for your roguery, and this done with true contrition.

Both. Yes, Sir.

Eust. You again may eat scraps, and be thankful.

Cow. Here's a cold breakfast after a sharp nights walking.

Eust. Keep your oaths, and without grumbling vanish.

Both. We are gone, Sir. [Exeunt.]

Eust. May all the poorness of my spirit go with you: the fetters of my thraldom are fil'd off, and I at liberty to right my self; and though my hope in Angellina's little, my honour (unto which compar'd she's nothing) shall, like the Sun, disperse those lowring Clouds that yet obscure and dim it; not the name of Brother shall divert me, but from him, that in the world's opinion ruin'd me, I will seek reparation, and call him unto a strict accompt. Ha! 'tis near day, and if the Muses friend, Rose-cheek'd Aurora, invite him to this solitary Grove, as I much hope she will, he seldom missing to pay his vows here to her, I shall hazard to hinder his devotions — The door opens, 'tis he most certain, and by's side my Sword. Blest opportunity.

Enter Charles.

Char. I have o'er-slept my self, and lost part of the morn, but I'll recover it: Before I went to bed, I wrote some Notes within my Table-book, which I will now consider. Ha! what means this? What do I with a Sword? Learn'd Mercury needs not th'aid of Mars, and innocence is to it self a guard; yet since Arms ever protect Arts, I may justly wear and use it; for since 'twas made my prize, I know not how I'm grown in love with't, and cannot eat nor study, and much less walk without it. But I trifle, matters of more weight ask my judgment.

Eust. Now, Sir, treat of no other Theme, I'll keep you to it, and see y'expound it well.

Char. Eustace!

Eust. The same, Sir, your younger Brother, who, as duty binds him, hath all this night (turn'd out of door) attended, to bid Good-morrow t'ye.

Char. This not in scorn, commands me to return it. Would you ought else?

Eust. O much, Sir, here I end not, but begin; I must speak to you in another strain than yet I ever us'd; and if the language appear in the delivery rough and harsh, you (being my Tutor) must condemn your self, from whom I learn'd it.

Char. When I understand (be't in what style you please) what's your demand, I shall endeavour, in the self-same phrase, to make an answer to the point.

Eust. I come not to lay claim to your birth-right, 'tis your own, and 'tis fit you enjoy it; nor ask I from you your learning and deep knowledge; (though I am not a Scholar as you are) I know them Diamonds by your sole industry, patience and labour, forc'd from steep Rocks, and with much toil attended, and but to few that prize their value granted, and therefore without Rival freely wear them.

Char. These not repin'd at (as you seem t'inform me) the motion must be of a strange condition, if I refuse to yield to't; therefore, Eustace, without this tempest in your looks, propound it, and fear not a denial.

Eust. I require then (as from an Enemy, and not a Brother) the reputation of a man, the honour, not by a fair War won when I was waking, but in my sleep of folly ravish'd from me; with these, the restitution of my Sword, with large acknowledgment of satisfaction, my Coach, my Horses; I will part with life, ere lose one hair of them; and, what concludes all, my Mistress Angellina, as she was before the musical Magick of thy tongue enchanted and seduc'd her. These perform'd, and with submission, and done publicly, at my Father's and my Uncle's intercession, (that I put in too) I perhaps may listen to terms of reconciliation; but if these, in every circumstance, are not subscrib'd to, to the last gasp I defy thee.

Char. These are strict conditions to a Brother.

Eust. My rest is up, nor will I give less.

Char. I'm no Gamester, Eustace, yet I can guess your resolution stands to win or lose all; I rejoyce to find ye thus tender of your honour, and that at length you understand what a wretched thing you were, how deeply wounded by your self, and made almost incurable in your own hopes, the dead flesh of pale cowardise growing over your festred reputation, which no Balm or gentle Unguent could ever make way to; and I am happy that I was the Surgeon that did apply those burning corrosives, that render you already sensible o'th'danger you were plung'd in, in teaching you, and by a fair gradation, how far, and with what curious respect and care the peace and credit of a man within, (which you ne'er thought till now) should be prefer'd before a gawdy outside; pray you fix here, for so far I go with you.

R

Eust.

Eust. This discourse is from the subject.

Char. I'll come to it, Brother; but if you think to build upon my ruines, you'll find a false foundation: your high offers, taught by the Masters of dependencies, that by compounding differences 'tween others, supply their own necessities, with me will never carry 't: as you are my Brother, I will dispense a little, but no more than honour can give way to; nor must I destroy that in my self I love in you; and therefore let not hopes or threats persuade you I will descend to any composition for which I may be censur'd.

Eust. You shall fight then.

Char. With much unwillingness with you; but if there's no evasion —

Eust. None.

Char. Hear yet a word; as for the Sword and other fripperies, in a fair way send for them, you shall have 'em. But rather than surrender Angellina, or hear it again mention'd, I oppose my breast unto loud thunder, cast behind me all eyes of Nature.

Eust. She detain'd, I'm deaf to all persuasion.

Char. Guard thy self then, Eustace; I use no other Rhetorick.

Enter Miram.

Mir. Clashing of swords so near my house! Brother oppos'd to Brother! here's no fencing at half sword; hold, hold, Charles, Eustace.

Eust. Second him, or call in more help. Come not between us, I'll not know nor spare you; D'ye fight by th'book?

Char. 'Tis you that wrong me, off Sir, and suddenly, I'll conjure down the Spirit that I have rais'd in him.

Eust. Never, Charles, 'tis thine, and in thy death, be doubled in me.

Mir. I'm out of breath, yet trust not too much to't, Boys; for if you pause not suddenly, and hear reason, do, kill your Uncle, do; but that I'm patient, and not a choleric old teasty fool, like your Father, I'd dance a matachin with you, should make you sweat your best blood for't; I would, and it may be I will. Charles, I command thee, and Eustace, I entreat thee, th'art a brave Spark, a true tough-metall'd blade, and I begin to love thee heartily; give me a fighting Courtier, I'll cherish him for example; in our Age they're not born every day.

Char. You of late, Sir, in me lov'd learning.

Mir. True, but take me w'ye, Charles; 'twas when young Eustace wore his heart in's breeches, and fought his Battels in Complements and Cringes, when's understanding way'd in a slanting Feather, and his best contemplation look'd no further than a new fashion'd doublet; I confess then, the lofty noise your Greek made, only pleas'd me; but now he's turn'd an Oliver and a Rowland, nay, the whole dozen of Peers are bound up in him: Let me remember, when I was of his years, I did look very like him; and did you see my Picture as I was then, you would swear that gallant Eustace (I mean, now he dares fight) was the true substance, and the perfect figure. Nay, nay, no anger, you shall have enough, Charles.

Char. Sure, Sir, I shall not need addition from him.

Eust. Nor I from any, this shall decide my interest; though I am lost to all deserving men, to all that men call good, for suffering tamely insufferable wrongs, and justly slighted by yielding to a minute of delay in my revenge, and from that made a stranger unto my Father's house and favour, o'erwhelm'd with all disgraces; yet I will mount upward, and force my self a fortune, though my birth and breeding do deny it.

Char. Seek not, Eustace, by violence, what will be offer'd to you on easier composition; though I was not allid unto your weakness, you shall find me a Brother to your bravery of spirit, and one that, not compell'd to't by your sword, (which I must never fear) will share with you in all but Angellina.

Mir. Nobly said, Charles, and learn from my experience, you may hear reason, and never maim your fighting; for your credit, which you think you have lost, spare, Charles, and swinge me, and soundly; three or four walking velvet Cloaks, that wear no swords to guard 'em, yet deserve it, thou art made up again.

Eust. All this is Lip-salve.

Mir. It shall be Hearts-ease, Eustace, ere I have done; as for thy Father's anger, now thou dar'st fight, ne'er fear it, for I've the dowcets of his gravity fast in a string, I will so pinch and wring him, that, spight of his authority, thou shalt make thine own conditions with him.

Eust. I'll take leave a little to consider.

Char. Here comes Andrew.

Mir. But without his comical and learned face; what sad disaster, Andrew?

And. You my read, Sir, a Tragedy in my face.

Mir. Art thou in earnest?

And. Yes, by my life, Sir; and if now you help not, and speedily, by force, or by persuasion, my good old Master (for now I pity him) is ruin'd for ever.

Char. Ha, my Father!

And. He, Sir.

Mir. By what means? speak.

And. At the suit of Monsieur Lewis; his house is seiz'd upon, and he in person is under guard, (I saw it with these eyes, Sir) to be convey'd to Paris, and there Sentenc'd.

Mir. Nay, then there is no jesting.

Char. Do I live, and know my Father injur'd?

And. And what's worse, Sir, my Ladie Angellina —

Eust. What of her?

And. She's carri'd away too.

Mir. How?

And. While you were absent, a crew of Monsieur Lewis's friends and kinsmen, by force, brake in at th' back part of the house, and took her away by violence; faithful Andrew (as this can witness for him) did his best in her defence, but 'twould not do.

Mir. Away, and see our Horses saddled, 'tis no time to talk, but do. Eustace, you now are offer'd a spacious field, and in a pious War to exercise your valour; here's a cause, and such a one, in which to fall is honourable, your dutie and reverence due to a fathers name commanding it; but these unnatural jars arising between Brothers (should you prosper) would shame your victory.

Eust. I would do much, Sir, but still my reputation!

Mir. Charles shall give you all decent satisfaction; nay, joyn hands, and heartily, why, this is done like Brothers; and as old as I am, in this cause that concerns the honour of our Family, Monsieur Lewis (if reason cannot work) shall find and feel there's hot blood in this arm, I'll lead you bravely.

Eust. And if I follow not, a cowards name be branded on my forehead.

Char. This spirit makes you a sharer in my fortunes.

Mir. And in mine, of which (Brisac once freed, and Angellina again in our possession) you shall know, my heart speaks in my tongue.

Eust. I dare not doubt it, Sir.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS V. SCENA II.

Enter Lewis, Brisac, Angellina, Sylvia, Officers.

Lew. I'm deaf to all persuasions.

Bri. I use none, nor doubt I, though a while my innocence suffers, but when the King shall understand how false your malice hath inform'd him, he in justice must set me right again.

Ang. Sir, let not passion so far transport you, as to think in reason, this violent course repairs, but ruins it; that honour you would build up, you destroy; what you would seem to nourish, if respect of my preferment or my pattern may challenge your paternal love and care, why do you, now good fortune has provided a better Husband for me than your hopes could ever fancy, strive to rob me of him? In what is my Lord Charles defective, Sir? unless deep Learning ing be a blemish in him, or well proportion'd limbs be mulct's in nature, or, what you only aim'd at, large Revenues, are, on the sudden, grown distasteful to you. Of what can you accuse him?

Lew. Of a Rape done to Honour, which thy ravenous lust made thee consent to.

Syl. Her lust! you are her Father.

Lew. And you her Bawd.

Syl. Were you ten Lords, 'tis false; the pureness of her chaste thoughts entertains not such spotted instruments.

Ang. As I have a Soul, Sir.

Lew. I am not to be alter'd; to sit down with this disgrace, would argue me a Peasant, and not born Noble: all rigour that the Law, and that increase of power by favour yields, shall be with all severity inflicted; you have the King's hand for't, no Bail will serve, and therefore at your perils, Officers, away with 'em.

Bri. This is madness.

Lew. Tell me so in open Court, and there I'll answer you.

Enter Miramont, Charles, Eustace, Andrew.

Mir. Well overtaken.

Char. Ill if they dare resist.

Eust. He that advances but one step forward dies.

Lew. Shew the King's Writ.

Mir. Shew your discretion, 'twill become you better.

Char. Y'are once more in my power, and if again I part with you, let me for ever lose thee.

Eust. Force will not do't, nor threats; accept this service from your despair'd of Eustace.

And. And beware your Reverend Worship never more attempt to search my Lilly pot, you see what follows.

Lew. Is the King's power contemn'd?

Mir. No, but the torrent o' your wilful folly stopp'd. And for you, good Sir, if you would but be sensible, what can you wish, but the satisfaction of an obstinate will, that is not endear'd to you? rather than be cross'd in what you purpos'd, you'll undo your Daughter's fame, the credit of your judgment, and your old foolish Neighbour; make your Estates, and in a Suit not worth a Cardcue, a prey to Advocates, and their buckram Scribes, and after they have plum'd ye, return home like a couple of naked Fowles without a feather.

Char. This is a most strong truth, Sir.

Mir. No, no, Monsieur, let us be right Frenchmen, violent to charge; but when our follies are repell'd by reason, 'tis fit that we retreat, and ne'er come on more: Observe my learned Charles, he'll get thee a Nephew on Angellina, shall dispute in her belly, and suck the Nurse by Logick: and here's Eustace, he was an Ass, but now is grown an Amadis; nor shall he want a Wife, if all my Land, for a Joynture, can effect: Y'are a good Lord, and of a gentle nature, in your looks I see a kind consent, and it shews lovely: and do you hear, old Fool? but I'll not chide, hereafter, like me, ever doat on Learning, the meer belief is excellent, 'twill save you; and next love Valour, though you dare not fight your self, or fright a foolish Officer, young Eustace can do it to a hair. And, to conclude, let Andrew's Farm b' encreas'd, that is your penance, you know for what, and see you rut no more; you understand me. So embrace on all sides.

Ple pay those Bilmen, and make large amends, Provided we preserve you still our Friends —

[Exit.]

Prologue.

BUT that it would take from our modesty
To praise the Writer, or the Comedy,
Till your fair suffrage crown it, I should say,
Y'are all most welcome to no vulgar Play;
And so far w'are confident: And if he
That made it, still lives in your memorie,
You will expect what we present to night,
Should be judg'd worthy of your ears and sight.
You shall hear Fletcher in it, his true strain,
And neat expressions; living he did gain
Your good opinions; but now dead commends
This Orphan to the care of Noble Friends;
And may it raise in you content and mirth,
And be receiv'd for a legit'mate birth.

Your grace erects new Trophies to his fame,
And shall, to after-times, preserve his name.

Epilogue.

Is not the hands, or smiles, or common way
Of approbation to a well lik'd Play,
We only hope; but that you freely would
To th' Author's memory so far unfold,
And shew your loves and liking to his Wit,
Not in your praise, but often seeing it;
That being the grand assurance that can give
The Poet and the Player means to live.

Robert Benfeild.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Angelo, Milanes, and Arfenio.

Arfenio.

L Leandro paid all.

Mil. 'Tis his usual custom,

And requisite he should: he has now put off

The Funeral black, (your rich heir wears with joy,

When he pretends to weep for his dead Father)

Your gathering Sires, so long heap muck together,

That their kind Sons, to rid them of their care,

Wish them in Heaven; or if they take a taste

Of Purgatory by the way, it matters not,

Provided they remove hence; what is befalln

To his Father, in the other world, I ask not;

I am sure his prayer is heard: would I could use one

For mine, in the same method.

Arf. Fie upon thee.

This is prophane.

Mil. Good Doctor, do not school me

For a fault you are not free from: On my life

Were all Heirs in Corduba, put to their Oaths,

They would confes with me, 'tis a sound Tenet:

I am sure Leandro do's.

Arf. He is th'owner

Of a fair Estate.

Mil. And fairly he deserves it,

He's a Royal Fellow: yet observes a mean

In all his courses, careful too on whom

He showers his bounties: he that's liberal

To all alike, may do a good by chance,

But never out of Judgment: This invites

The prime men of the City to frequent

All places he resorts to, and are happy

In his sweet Converse.

Arf. Don Jamie the Brother

To the Grandee Don Henrique, appears much taken

With his behaviour.

Mil.

Mil. There is something more in't:
He needs his Purse, and knows how to make use on't.
'Tis now in fashion for your Don, that's poor,
To vow all Leagues of friendship with a Merchant
That can supply his wants, and howfoe're
Don Jamie's noble born, his elder Brother
Don Henrique rich, and his Revenues long since
Increas'd by marrying with a wealthy Heir
Call'd, Madam Vialante, he yet holds
A hard hand o're Jamie, allowing him
A bare annuity only.

Arf. Yet 'tis said
He hath no child, and by the Laws of Spain
If he die without issue, Don Jamie
Inherits his Estate.

Mil. Why that's the reason
Of their so many jars: though the young Lord
Be sick of the elder Brother, and in reason
Should flatter, and observe him, he's of a nature
Too bold and fierce, to stoop so, but bears up,
Presuming on his hopes.

Arf. What's the young Lad
That all of 'em make so much of?

Mil. 'Tis a sweet one,
And the best condition'd youth, I ever saw yet,
So humble, and so affable, that he wins
The love of all that know him, and so modest,
That (in despite of poverty) he would starve
Rather than ask a courtesie: He's the Son
Of a poor cast-Captain, one Octavio;
And She, that once was call'd th'fair Jacinta,
Is happy in being his Mother: for his sake,

Enter Jamie, Leandro, and Ascanio.

(Though in their Fortunes fallen) they are esteem'd of,
And cherish'd by the best. O here they come.
I now may spare his Character, but observe him,
He'll justify my report.

Jam. My good Ascanio,
Repair more often to me: above Women
Thou ever shalt be welcome.

Asc. My Lord your favours
May quickly teach a raw untutour'd Youth
To be both rude and fawcy.

Leam. You cannot be
Too frequent where you are so much desir'd:
And give me leave (dear friend) to be your Rival
In part of his affection; I will buy it
At any rate.

Jam. Stood I but now possess'd
Of what my future hope presages to me,
I then would make it clear thou hadst a Patron
That would not say but do: yet as I am,
Be mine, I'll not receive thee as a servant,
But as my Son, (and though I want my self)
No Page attending in the Court of Spain
Shall find a kinder master.

Asc. I beseech you
That my refusal of so great an offer
May make no ill construction, 'tis not pride
(That common vice is far from my condition)
That makes you a denial to receive
A favour I should sue for: nor the fashion
Which the Country follows, in which to be a servant
In those that groan beneath the heavy weight
Of poverty, is held an argument
Of a base abject mind, I wish my years
Were fit to do you service in a nature
That might become a Gentleman (give me leave
To think my self one) My Father serv'd the King
As a Captain in the field; and though his fortune
Return'd him home a poor man, he was rich
In Reputation, and wounds fairly taken.
Nor am I by his ill success deterr'd,

I rather feel a strong desire that sways me
To follow his profession, and if Heaven
Hath mark'd me out to be a man, how proud,
In the service of my Country, should I be,
To trail a Pike under your brave command!
There, I would follow you as a guide to honour,
Though all the horrors of the War made up
To stop my passage.

Jam. Thou art a hopeful Boy,
And it was bravely spoken: For this answer,
I love thee more than ever.

Mil. Pity such seeds
Of promising courage should not grow and prosper.

Ang. What ever his reputed Parents be,
He hath a mind that speaks him right and noble.

Leam. You make him blush: it needs not sweet Ascanio,
We may hear praises when they are deserv'd,
Our modesty unwounded. By my life
I would add something to the building up
So fair a mind, and if till you are fit
To bear Arms in the Field, you'll spend some years
In Salamanca, I'll supply your studies
With all conveniences.

Asc. Your goodness (Signiors)
And charitable favours overwhelm me.
If I were of your blood, you could not be
More tender of me: what then can I pay
(A poor Boy and a stranger) but a heart
Bound to your service? with what willingness
I would receive (good Sir) your noble offer,
Heaven can bear witness for me: but alas,
Should I embrace the means to raise my fortunes,
I must destroy the lives of my poor Parents
(To whom I ow my being) they in me Place all their comforts, and (as if I were
The light of their dim eyes) are so indulgent
They cannot brook one short dayes absence from me;
And (what will hardly win belief) though young,
I am their Steward and their Nurse: the bounties
Which others bestow on me serves to sustain 'em,
And to forsake them in their age, in me
Were more than Murther.

Enter Henrique.

Ang. This is a kind of begging
Would make a Broker charitable.

Mil. Here, (sweet heart)
I wish it were more.

Leam. When this is spent,
Seek for supply from me.

Jam. Thy piety
For ever be remembered: nay take all,
Though 'twere my exhibition to a Royal
For one whole year.

Asc. High Heavens reward your goodness.
Hen. So Sir, is this a slip of your own grafting,
You are so prodigal?

Jam. A slip Sir?

Hen. Yes,
A slip; or call it by the proper name,
Your Bastard.

Jam. You are foul-mouth'd; do not provoke me,
I shall forget your Birth if you proceed,
And use you, (as your manners do deserve) uncivilly.

Hen. So brave! pray you give me hearing,
Who am I Sir?

Jam. My elder Brother: One
That might have been born a fool, and so reputed,
But that you had the luck to creep into
The world a year before me.

Leam. Be more temperate.

Jam. I neither can nor will, unless I learn it
By his example: let him use his harsh
Unfavoury reprehensions upon those

That are his Hinds, and not on me. The Land
Our Father left to him alone rewards him,
For being twelve months elder, let that be Forgotten, and let his Parasites remember
One quality of worth or vertue in him
That may authorize him, to be a censurer
Of me, or my manners, and I will Acknowledge him for a Tutor, till then, never.

Hen. From whom have you your means Sir?

Jam. From the will

Of my dead Father; I am sure I spend not
Nor give't upon your purse.

Hen. But will it hold out
Without my help?

Jam. I am sure it shall, I'll sink else,
For sooner I will seek aid from a Whore,
Than a courtesie from you.

Hen. 'Tis well; you are proud of
Your new Exchequer, when you have cheated him
And worn him to the quick, I may be found
In the List of your acquaintance.

Lean. Pray you hold
And give me leave (my Lord) to say thus much
(And in mine own defence) I am no Gull
To be wrought on by perswasion: nor no Coward
To be beaten out of my means, but know to whom
And why I give or lend, and will do nothing
But what my reason warrants; you may be
As sparing as you please, I must be bold
To make use of my own, without your licence.

Jam. 'Pray thee let him alone, he is not worth thy anger.
All that he do's (Leandro) is for my good,
I think there's not a Gentleman of Spain,
That has a better Steward, than I have of him.

Hen. Your Steward Sir?

Jam. Yes, and a provident one:

Why, he knows I am given to large expence,
And therefore lays up for me: could you believe else
That he, that sixteen years hath worn the yoke
Of barren wedlock, without hope of issue
(His Coffers full, his Lands and Vineyards fruitful)
Could be so fold to base and fordid thrift,
As almost to deny himself, the means
And necessaries of life? Alas, he knows
The Laws of Spain appoint me for his Heir,
That all must come to me, if I out-live him,
Which sure I must do, by the course of Nature,
And the assistance of good Mirth, and Sack,
How ever you prove Melancholy.

Hen. If I live,
Thou dearly shalt repent this.

Jam. When thou art dead,
I am sure I shall not.

Mil. Now they begin to burn
Like oppos'd Meteors.

Arf. Give them line, and way,
My life for Don Jamie.

Jam. Continue still
The excellent Husband, and joyn Farm to Farm,
Suffer no Lordship, that in a clear day
Falls in the prospect of your covetous eye
To be anothers; forget you are a Grandee;
Take use upon use, and cut the throats of Heirs
With cozening Mortgages: rack your poor Tenants,
Till they look like so many Skeletons
For want of Food; and when that Widows curses,
The ruines of ancient Families, tears of Orphans
Have hurried you to the Devil, ever remember
All was rak'd up for me (your thankful Brother)
That will dance merrily upon your Grave,
And perhaps give a double Pistolet
To some poor needy Friar, to say a Mass
To keep your Ghost from walking.

Hen. That the Law

Should force me to endure this!

Jam. Verily,

When this shall come to pass (as sure it will)
If you can find a loop-hole, though in Hell,
To look on my behaviour, you shall see me
Ransack your Iron Chests, and once again
Pluto's flame-colour'd Daughter shall be free
To domineer in Taverns, Masques, and Revels
As she was us'd before she was your Captive.
Me thinks the meer conceit of it, should make you
Go home sick, and distemper'd; if it do's,
I'll send you a Doctor of mine own, and after
Take order for your Funeral!

Hen. You have said, Sir,
I will not fight with words, but deeds to tame you,
Rest confident I will, and thou shalt wish
This day thou hadst been dumb. —

Mil. You have given him a heat,
But with your own distemper.

Jam. Not a whit,
Now he is from mine eye, I can be merry,
Forget the cause and him: all plagues go with him,
Let's talk of something else: what news is stirring?
Nothing to pass the time?

Mil. 'Faith it is said
That the next Summer will determine much
Of that we long have talk'd of, touching the Wars.

Lean. What have we to do with them? Let us discourse
Of what concerns our selves. 'Tis now in fashion
To have your Gallants set down in a Tavern,
What the Arch-Dukes purpose is the next spring, and what Defence my Lords (the States) prepare: what course
The Emperour takes against the encroaching Turk,
And whether his Moony-standards are design'd
For Persia or Polonia: and all this
The wiser sort of State-Worms seem to know
Better than their own affairs: this is discourse
Fit for the Council it concerns; we are young,
And if that I might give the Theme, 'twere better
To talk of handsome Women.

Mil. And that's one,
Almost as general.

Arf. Yet none agree
Who are the fairest.

Lean. Some prefer the French,
For their conceited Dressings: some the plump
Italian Bona-Robas, some the State
That ours observe; and I have heard one swear,
(A merry friend of mine) that once in London,
He did enjoy the company of a Gamester,
(A common Gamester too) that in one night
Met him th' Italian, French, and Spanish wayes,
And ended in the Dutch; for to cool her self,
She kiss'd him drunk in the morning.

Jam. We may spare
The travel of our tongues in forraign Nations,
When in Corduba, if you dare give credit
To my report (for I have seen her, Gallants)
There lives a Woman (of a mean birth too,
And meanly match'd) whose all-excelling Form
Disdains comparison with any She
That puts in for a fair one, and though you borrow
From every Country of the Earth the best
Of those perfections, which the Climat yields
To help to make her up, if put in Ballance,
This will weigh down the Scale.

Lean. You talk of wonders.

Jam. She is indeed a wonder, and so kept,
And, as the world deserv'd not to behold
What curious Nature made without a pattern,
Whose Copy she hath lost too, she's shut up,
Sequestred from the world.

Lean. Who is the owner
Of such a Gem? I am fire'd.

[Exit.

Jam. One Bartolus,
A wrangling Advocate.

Arf. A knave on Record.

Mil. I am sure he cheated me of the best part Of my Estate.

Jam. Some Business calls me hence,
(And of importance) which denies me leisure
To give you his full character: In few words
(Though rich) he's covetous beyond expression,
And to encrease his heap, will dare the Devil,
And all the plagues of darkness: and to these
So jealous, as if you would parallel
Old Argus to him, you must multiply
His Eyes an hundred times: of these none sleep.
He that would charm the heaviest lid, must hire
A better Mercuric, than Jove made use of:
Bless your selves from the thought of him and her,
For 'twill be labour lost: So farewell Signiors. — [Exit.]

Arf. Leandro? in a dream? wake man for shame.

Mil. Trained into a fools paradise with a tale
Of an imagin'd Form.

Lea. Jamie is noble,
And with a forg'd Tale would not wrong his Friend,
Nor am I so much fir'd with lust as Envie,
That such a churl as Bartolus should reap
So sweet a harvest, half my State to any
To help me to a share.

Arf. Tush do not hope for Impossibilities.

Lea. I must enjoy her,
And my prophetique love tells me I shall,
Lend me but your assistance.

Arf. Give it o're.

Mil. I would not have thee fool'd.

Lea. I have strange Engines
Fashioning here: and Bartolus on the Anvil,
Disswade me not, but help me.

Mil. Take your fortune,
If you come off well, praise your wit; if not,
Expect to be the subject of our Laughter. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Octavio, and Jacinta.

Jac. You met Don Henrique?

Oct. Yes.

Jac. What comfort bring you?
Speak cheerfully: how did my letter work
On his hard temper? I am sure I wrote it
So feelingly, and with the pen of sorrow,
That it must force Compunction.

Oct. You are cozen'd;
Can you with one hand prop a falling Tower?
Or with the other stop the raging main,
When it breaks in on the usurped shore?
Or any thing that is impossible?
And then conclude that there is some way left,
To move him to compassion.

Jac. Is there a Justice
Or thunder (my Octavio) and he
Not sunk unto the center?

Oct. Good Jacinta,
With your long practis'd patience bear afflictions,
And by provoking call not on Heavens anger,
He did not only scorn to read your letter,
But (most inhumane as he is) he cursed you,
Cursed you most bitterly.

Jac. The bad mans charity.
Oh that I could forget there were a Tye,
In me, upon him! or the relief I seek,
(If given) were bounty in him, and not debt,
Debt of a dear accompt!

Oct. Touch not that string,
'Twill but encrease your sorrow: and tame silence,

(The Balm of the oppressed) which hitherto
Hath eas'd your griev'd soul, and prefer'd your fame,
Must be your Surgeon still.

Jac. If the contagion
Of my misfortunes had not spread it self
Upon my Son Afcanio, though my wants
Were centupli'd upon my self, I could be patient:
But he is so good, I so miserable,
His pious care, his duty, and obedience,
And all that can be with'd for from a Son,
Discharg'd to me, and I, barr'd of all means
To return any scruple of the debt
I owe him as a Mother, is a Torment,
Too painfull to be born.

Oct. I suffer with you,
In that; yet find in this assurance comfort,
High Heaven ordains (whose purposes cannot alter)

Enter Afcanio.

Children that pay obedience to their Parents,
Shall never beg their Bread.

Jac. Here comes our joy,
Where has my dearest been?

Afc. I have made, Mother,
A fortunate voyage and brought home rich prize,
In a few hours: the owner too contented,
From whom I took it. See here's Gold, good store too,
Nay, pray you take it.

Jac. Mens Charities are so cold;
That if I knew not, thou wert made of Goodness,
'Twould breed a jealousy in me by what means,
Thou cam'st by such a sum.

Afc. Were it ill got,
I am sure it could not be employed so well,
Asto relieve your wants. Some noble friends,
(Rais'd by heavens mercy to me, not my merits)
Bestow'd it on me.

Oct. It were a sacrilege
To rob thee of their bounty, since they gave it
To thy use only.

Jac. Buy thee brave Cloathes with it
And fit thee for a fortune, and leave us
To our necessities; why do'st thou weep?

Afc. Out of my fear I have offended you;
For had I not, I am sure you are too kind,
Not to accept the offer of my service,
In which I am a gainer; I have heard
My tutor say, of all aerial fowl
The Stork's the Embleme of true pietie,
Because when age hath seiz'd upon her dam,
And made unfit for flight, the gratefull young one
Takes her upon his back, provides her food,
Repaying so her tender care of him,
E're he was fit to fly, by bearing her:
Shall I then that have reason and discourse
That tell me all I can doe is too little,
Be more unnatural than a silly bird?
Or feed or cloath my self superfluously,
And know, nay see you want? holy Saints keep me.

Jac. Can I be wretched,
And know my self the Mother to such Goodness?

Oct. Come let us drie our eyes, we'll have a feast,
Thanks to our little Steward.

Jac. And in him,
Believe that we are rich.

Afc. I am sure I am,
While I have power to comfort you, and serve you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Henrique, and Violante.

Viol. Is it my fault, Don Henrique, or my fate?
What's my offence? I came young to your bed,
I had a fruitfull Mother, and you met me

With

With equall ardour in your May of blood ;
And why then am I barren ?

Hen. 'Tis not in Man

To yield a reason for the will of Heaven,
Which is inscrutable.

Viol. To what use serve

Full fortunes, and the meaner sort of blessings,
When that, which is the Crown of all our wishes,
The period of humane happiness,
One only Child that may possess what's ours,
Is cruelly deny'd us ?

Hen. 'Tis the curse

Of great Estates to want those Pledges, which
The poor are happy in: They in a Cottage,
With joy, behold the Models of their youth,
And as their Root decays, those budding Branches
Sprout forth and flourish, to renew their age ;
But this is the beginning, not the end
Of misery to me, that 'gainst my will (Since Heaven denies us Mine of our own)
Must leave the fruit of all my care and travel
To an unthankfull Brother that insults
On my Calamity.

Viol. I will rather choose

A Bastard from the Hospital and adopt him,
And nourish him as mine own.

Hen. Such an evasion

(My Violante) is forbid to us ;
Happy the Romane State, where it was lawfull,
(If our own Sons were vicious) to choose one
Out of a vertuous Stock, though of poor Parents,
And make him noble. But the laws of Spain,
(Intending to preserve all ancient Houses)
Prevent such free elections ; with this, my Brother's Too well acquainted, and this makes him bold to Reign o're me, as a Master.

Viol. I will fire

The Portion I brought with me, ere he spend
A Royal of it: no Quirck left? no Quiddit
That may defeat him ?

Hen. Were I but confirmed,

That you would take the means I use with patience,
As I must practise it with my dishonour,
I could lay level with the earth his hopes
That soar above the clouds with expectation
To see me in my grave.

Viol. Effect but this,

And our revenge shall be to us a Son
That shall inherit for us.

Hen. Do not repent

When 'tis too late.

Viol. I fear not what may fall

He dispossess'd that does usurp on all.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Leandro, (with a letter writ out) Milanes, and Arsenio.

Mil. Can any thing but wonder ?

Lea. Wonder on,
I am as ye see, and, what will follow, Gentlemen ?

Arf. Why dost thou put on this form ? what can this do ?
Thou lookest most sillily.

Mil. Like a young Clerk,
A half pin'd-puppy that would write for a Royal.
Is this a commanding shape to win a beauty?
To what use, what occasion ?

Lea. Peace, ye are fools,
More silly than my out-side seems, ye are ignorant ;
They that pretend to wonders must weave cunningly.

Arf. What manner of access can this get ? or if gotten
What credit in her eyes ?

Lea. Will ye but leave me ?

Mil. Me thinks a young man and a handfom Gentleman
(But sure thou art lunatick) me thinks a brave man
That would catch cunningly the beams of beauty,
And so distribute 'em unto his comfort,
Should like himself appear, young, high, and buxom,
And in the brightest form.

Lea. Ye are cozen'd (Gentlemen)
Neither do I believe this, nor will follow it,
Thus as I am, I will begin my voyage.
When you love, lanch it out in silks and velvets,
I'll love in Serge, and will outgo your Sattins.
To get upon my great horse and appear
The sign of such a man, and trot my measures,
Or fiddle out whole frosty nights (my friends)
Under the window, while my teeth keep tune,
I hold no handfomness. Let me get in,
There trot and fiddle where I may have fair play.

Arf. But how get in ?

Lea. Leave that to me, your patience,
I have some toys here that I dare well trust to :
I have smelt a Vicar out, they call him Lopez.
You are ne're the nearer now.

Mil. We do confesse it.

Lea. Weak simple men, this Vicar to this Lawyer
Is the most inward Damon.

Arf. What can this do ?

Mil. We know the fellow, and he dwells there.

Lea. So.

Arf. A poor, thin thief: he help ? he ? hang the Vicar,
Can reading of an ——— prefer thee ?
Thou art dead-sick in love, and hee' I pray for thee.

Lea. Have patience (Gentlemen) I say this Vicar,
This thing I say is all one with the Close Bartolus
(For so they call the Lawyer) or his nature
Which I have studied by relation :
And make no doubt I shall hit handfomly,
Will I work cunningly, and home : understand me.

Enter Lopez, and Diego.

Next I pray leave me, leave me to my fortune
Difficilia pulchra, that's my Motto (Gentlemen)
I'll win this Diamond from the rock and wear her,
Or ———

Mil. Peace, the Vicar: send ye a full fail, Sir.

Arf. There's your Confessor, but what shall be your pe-

Lea. A fools head if I fail, and so forsake me. (nance ?
You shall hear from me daily.

Mil. We will be ready.

[Exeunt Mil. Arf.]

Lop. Thin world indeed !

Lea. I'll let him breath and mark him :
No man would think a stranger as I am
Should reap any great commodity from his pigbelly.

Lop. Poor stirring for poor Vicars.

Diego. And poor Sextons.

Lop. We pray and pray, but to no purpose,
Those that enjoy our lands, choak our Devotions.
Our poor thin stipends make us arrant dunces,

Diego. If you live miserably, how shall we do (Master)
That are fed only with the sound of prayers ?
We rise and ring the Bells to get good stomachs,
And must be fain to eat the ropes with reverence.

Lop. VVhen was there a Christning, Diego ?

Diego. Not this ten weeks :

Alas, they have forgot to get children (Master)
The VVars, the Seas, and usurie undoe us,
Takes off our minds, our edges, blunts our plough-shares.
They eat nothing here, but herbs, and get nothing but green
There are some poor Labourers, that perhaps (fauce :
Once in seven year, with helping one another,
Produce some few pin'd-Butter-prints, that scarce hold
The christning neither.

Lop. Your Gallants, they get Honour,
A strange fantastical Birth, to defraud the Vicar,

And

And the Camp Christens their Issues, or the Curtizans,
'Tis a lewd time.

Die. They are so hard-hearted here too,
They will not dye, there's nothing got by Burials.

Lop. Diego, the Air's too pure, they cannot perish.
To have a thin Stipend, and an everlasting Parish,
Lord what a torment 'tis!

Die. Good sensible Master,
You are allow'd to pray against all weathers.
(Both foul, and fair, as you shall find occasion)
Why not against all airs?

Lop. That's not i'th' Canons.
I would it had, 'tis out of our way forty pence. (here,

Di. 'Tis strange, they are starv'd too yet they will not die
They will not earth: a good stout plague amongst 'em,
Or half a dozen new fantastical Fevers
That would turn up their heels by whole-sale (Master)
And take the Doctors too, in their grave Counsels,
That there might be no natural help for mony:
How merrily would my Bells goe then?

Lop. Peace Diego,
The Doctors are our friends, let's please them well.
For though they kill but slow, they are certain, Diego,
We must remove into a muddy Air,
A most contagious Climate.

Die. VVe must certain,
An air that is the nursery of agues,
Such agues (Master) that will shake mens souls out,
Ne're itay for Possers, nor good old wives plasters.

Lop. Gowts and dead Palsies.
Die. The dead do's well at all times,
Yet Gowts will hang an arse a long time (Master)
The Pox, or English Surfeits if we had 'em;
Those are rich marle, they make a Church-yard fat,
And make the Sexton sing, they never miss, Sir.

Lop. Then Wills and Funeral Sermons come in season,
And Fcasts that make us frolick.

Die. VVould I could see 'em.
Lop. And though I weep i'th' Pulpit for my Brother,
Yet (Diego) here I laugh.

Die. The cause requires it.
Lop. Since people left to die I am dunce, Diego.
Die. 'Tis a strange thing, I have forgot to dig too.
Lea. A pretious pair of youths! I must make toward 'em.
Lop. Who's that? look it seems he would speak to us:
I hope a Marriage, or some Will to make, Diego.

Die. My friend your business?
Lea. 'Tis to that grave Gentleman;
Bless your good learning, Sir.
Lop. And bless you also,
He bears a promising face, there's some hope toward.
Lea. I have a Letter to your worship.

Lop. VVell Sir,
From whence I pray you?
Lea. From Nova Hispania, Sir,
And from an ancient friend of yours.

Lop. 'Tis well, Sir,
'Tis very well: the devil a one I know there. (tenance,
Die. Take heed of a Snap, Sir, h'as a cozening coun-
I do not like his way.

Lop. Let him goe forward.
Cantabit vacuum, They that have nothing fear nothing,
All I have to lose, Diego, is my learning,
And when he has gotten that, he may put it in a Nut shell.

LETTER READ.

Signior Lopez, Since my arrival from Cordova to these parts,
I have written divers Letters unto you, but as yet received no Answer of any (Good and very good) And although so great a forgetfulness might cause a want in my due correspondence, yet the desire I have still to serve you must more prevail with me (Better and better: the devil a man know I yet) and therefore with the present occasion offered I am willing to crave a continuance of the favours, which I have heretofore received from you, and do recommend my Son Leandro the Bearer to you with request that he may be admitted in that Universtie till such time as I shall arrive at home; his studies he will make you acquainted withall: This kindness shall supply the want of your slackness:

And so heaven keep you. Yours

Alonzo Tiveria.

Alonzo Tiveria, very well,
A very ancient friend of mine, I take it,
For till this hour I never heard his name yet.

Lea. You look, Sir, as if ye had forgot my Father.

Lop. No, no, I look, as I would remember him,
For that I never remembred, I cannot forget, Sir,
Alonzo Tiveria?

Lea. The same, Sir.

Lop. And now i'th' Indies?

Lea. Yes.

Lop. He may be any where,
For ought that I consider.

Lea. Think again, Sir,
You were Students both at one time in Salamanca,
And, as I take it, Chamber-fellows.

Lop. Ha?

Lea. Nay, sure you must remember.

Lop. Would I could.

Lea. I have heard him say, you were Gossips too.

Lop. Very likely,
You did not hear him say, to whom? for we Students
May oft-times over-reach our memories.

Do'st thou remember, Diego, this same Signiour?
Thou hast been mine these twenty years.

Die. Remember?

Why this Fellow would make ye mad: Nova Hispania?
And Signiour Tiveria? what are these?

He may as well name ye Friends out of Cataya.

Take heed I beseech your worship: do you hear, (my
You have no Letters for me? friend?)

Lea. Not any letter,
But I was charged to doe my Fathers love
To the old honest Sexton Diego: are you he, Sir?

Die. Ha? have I friends, and know 'em not? my name is
But if either I remember you or your Father, (Diego,
Or Nova Hispania (I was never there Sir)
Or any kindred that you have—for heaven-sake, Master,
Let's cast about a little, and consider,
We may dream out our time.

Lea. It seems I am deceiv'd, Sir,
Yet, that you are Don Lopez all men tell me,
The Curate here, and have been some time, Sir,
And you the Sexton Diego, such I am sent to,
The letter tells as much: may be they are dead,
And you of the like names succeed: I thank ye Gentlemen,
Ye have done honestly, in telling truth,
I might have been forward else. For to that Lopez,
That was my Fathers friend, I had a charge,
(A charge of mony) to deliver (Gentlemen)
Five hundred Duckets, a poor small gratuity,
But since you are not he—

Lop. Good Sir, let me think,
I pray ye be patient,
Pray ye stay a little,
Nay, let me remember, I beseech ye stay, Sir.
Di. An honest noble friend, that sends so lovingly;
An old friend too; I shall remember sure, Sir.

Lop. Thou sayst true Diego.

Die. 'Pray ye consider quickly,
Doc, doc, by any means, me thinks already
A grave staid gentleman comes to my memory.

Lea. He's old indeed, sir.

Die. With a goodly white Beard,
(For now he must be so: I know he must be)
Signiour Alonzo, Master.

Lop. I begin to have him.

Die. H'as been from hence, about some twenty years, sir.

Lea. Some five and twenty, sir.

Die. You say most true, Sir,
Just to an hour; 'tis now just five and twenty,
A fine straight timber'd man, and a brave soldier,
He married: let me see, ———

Lea. De Castro's Daughter.

Die. The very same.

Lea. Thou art a very Rascal.

De Castro is the Turk to thee, or any thing:
The Money rubbs 'em into strange remembrances,
For as many Duckets more they would remember Adam.

Lop. Give me your hand, you are welcome to your
Now I remember plainly, manifestly, (country,
As freshly, as if yesterday I had seen him,
Most heartily welcome: sinfull that I am,
Most sinfull man! why should I lose this Gentleman?
This loving old Companion? we had all one soul, sir,
He dwelt here hard by, at a handsome ———

Lea. Farn sir,
You say most true.

Lop. Alonzo Tiverin! (thus?
Lord, Lord that time should play the treacherous knave
Why, he was the only friend I had in Spain, sir,
I knew your Mother too, a handsome Gentlewoman,
She was married very young: I married 'em:
I do remember now the Maskes and Sports then,
The Fire works, and the fine delights; good faith, sir,
Now I look in your face, whose eyes are those, Diego?
Nay, if he be not just Alonzo's picture ———

Lea. Lord, how I blush for these two impudents!

Die. Well Gentleman, I think your name's Leandro.

Lea. It is indeed, sir,
Gra'-mercy letter, thou hadst never known else.

Die. I have dandled ye, and kist ye and plaid with ye
A hundred, and a hundred times, and danc'd ye,
And swong ye in my Bell-ropes, ye lov'd swinging.

Lop. A sweet Boy.

Lea. Sweet lying knaves.

What would these doe for thousands?

Lop. A wondrous sweet Boy then it was, see now
Time that consumes us, shoots him up still sweeter.
How do's the noble Gentleman? how fares he?
When shall we see him? when will he bless his Country?

Lea. O, very shortly, Sir, till his return
He has sent me over to your charge.

Lop. And welcome,
Nay, you shall know you are welcome to your friend, sir.

Lea. And to my Study, Sir, which must be the Law.

To further which, he would entreat your care
To plant me in the favour of some man
That's expert in that knowledge: for his pains
I have three hundred Duckets more: For my Diet,
Enough, Sir, to defray me: which I am charged
To take still, as I use it, from your custodie,
I have the money ready, and I am weary. (come,

Lop. Sit down, sit down, and once more ye are most wel-
The Law you have hit upon most happily,
Here is a Master in that art, Bartolus,
A neighbour by, to him I will prefer ye,
A learned man, and my most loving neighbour,
I'll doe ye faithfull service, Sir.

Die. He's an Ass,
And so wee'll use him; he shall be a Lawyer.

Lo. But if ever he recover this money again—before, Diego,
And get some pretty pittance: my Pupill's hungry.

Lea. Pray ye Sir, unlade me.

Lop. I'll refresh ye Sir;
When ye want, you know your Exchequer.

Lea. If all this get me but access, I am happy.

Lop. Come, I am tender of ye.

Lea. I'll go with ye.

To have this fort betray'd these souls must fleece me.

[Exeunt.

SCENA II.

Enter Bartolus, and Amaranta.

Bar. My Amaranta, a retir'd sweet life,
Private and close, and still, and houswifely,
Becomes a Wife, sets off the grace of woman.
At home to be believ'd both young, and handsome,
As Lilies that are cas'd in crySTALL Glasses,
Makes up the wonder: shew it abroad 'tis stale,
And still the more eyes cheapen it 'tis more slubber'd,
And what need windowes open to inviting?
Or evening Tarrasses, to take opinions?
When the most wholesome air (my wife) blows inward,
When good thoughts are the noblest Companions,
And old chaste stories, wife, the best discourses;
But why do I talk thus, that know thy nature?

Ama. You know your own disease: distrust, and jealousy,
And those two, give these Lessons, not good meaning,
What trial is there of my honestie,
When I am mew'd at home? to what end Husband,
Serves all the vertuous thoughts, and chaste behaviours
Without their uses? Then they are known most excellent
When by their contraries they are set off, and burnish'd.
If ye both hold me fair, and chaste, and vertuous,
Let me goe fearless out, and win that greatness:
These seeds grow not in shades, and conceal'd places:
Set 'em i'th' heat of all, then they rise glorious.

Bar. Peace, ye are too loud.

Ama. You are too covetous.

If that be rank'd a vertue, you have a rich one.
Set me (like other Lawyers wives) off handsomely,
Attended as I ought, and as they have it,
My Coach, my people, and my handsome women,
My will in honest things.

Bar. Peace Amaranta.

(cures 'em,
Ama. They have content, rich clothes, and that se-binds, to their careful husbands, their observance,
They are merry, ride abroad, meet, laugh.

Bar. Thou shalt too.

Ama. And freely may converse with proper Gentlemen,
Suffer temptations daily to their honour.

Enter Woman-More.

Bar. You are now too far again: thou shalt have any Let me but lay up for a handsome Office, (thing,
And then my Amaranta ———

Ama. Here's a thing now,
Ye place as pleasure to me: all my retinue,
My Chamber-maid, my Kitchin-maid, my friend,
And what she fails in, I must doe my self.
A foyle to set my Beauty off, I thank ye,
You will place the Devil next for a Companion.

Bar. No more such words, good wife,
What would you have, Maid?

Moor. Master Curate, and the Sexton, and a stranger, sir,
Attend to speak with your worship.

Bar. A stranger?

Ama. You had best to be jealous of the man you know not.

Bar. 'Pray thee no more of that.

Ama. 'Pray ye goe out to 'em,
That will be safest for ye, I am well here,
I only love your peace, and serve like a slave for it.

Bar. No, no, thou shalt not; 'tis some honest Client,
Rich, and litigious, the Curate has brought to me,
Pre'thee goe in (my Duck) I'll but speak to 'em,
And return instantly.

Ama. I am commanded,
One day you will know my sufferance. ——— [Exit.

Bar. And reward it.
So, so, fast bind, fast find; Come in my neighbours,
My loving neighbours pray ye come in, ye are welcome.

Enter

Enter Lopez, Leandro, and Diego.

Lop. Bless your good reverence.

Bar. Good-day, good Master Curate,
And neighbour Diego, welcom: what's your business?
And pray ye be short (good friends) the time is pretious,
Welcom, good Sir.

Lop. To be short then with your Mastership,
(For I know your several hours are full of business)
We have brought ye this young-man, of honest parents,
And of an honest face.

Bar. It seems so, Neighbours,
But to what end?

Lop. To be your Pupil, Sir,
Your Servant, if you please.

Lea. I have travell'd far, Sir,
To seek a worthy man.

Bar. Alas, good Gentleman,
I am a poor man, and a private too,
Unfit to keep a Servant of your Reckoning;
My house a little Cottage, and scarce able
To hold my self, and those poor few live under it;
Besides, you must not blame me Gentlemen,
If I were able to receive a Servant,
To be a little scrupulous of his dealing,
For in these times —

Lop. Pray let me answer that, sir,
Here is five hundred Duckets, to secure him,
He cannot want, Sir, to make good his credit,
Good gold, and coin.

Bar. And that's an honest pledge;
Yet sure, that needs not, for his face, and carriage,
Seem to declare an in-bred honesty.

Lea. And (for I have a ripe mind to the Law, sir,
In which I understand you live a Master)
The least poor corner in your house, poor Bed, sir,
(Let me not seem intruding to your worship)
With some Books to instruct me, and your counsel,
Shall I rest most content with: other Acquaintance
Than your grave presence, and the grounds of Law
I dare not covet, nor I will not seek, sir,
For surely mine own nature desires privacy.
Next, for your monthly pains (to shew my thanks,)
I do proportion out some twenty Duckets;
As I grow riper, more: three hundred now, sir,
To shew my love to learning, and my Master,
My diet I'll defray too, without trouble.

Lop. Note but his mind to learning. (mony.)

Bar. I do strangely, yes, and I like it too, thanks to his

Die. Would he would live with me, and learn to dig too.

Lop. A wondrous modest man, sir.

Bar. So it seems,
His dear love to his Studie must be nourish'd,
Neighbour, he's like to prove.

Lop. With your good counsel,
And with your diligence, as you will ply him;
His Parents, when they know your care —

Bar. Come hither.

Die. An honest young man, your worship ne're kept,
But he is so bashfull —

Bar. O I like him better.

Say I should undertake ye, which indeed, sir,
Will be no little straitness to my living,
Considering my Affairs, and my small house, sir;
For I see some promises that pull me to ye;
Could you content your self, at first thus meanly,
To lie hard, in an out-part of my house, sir?
For I have not many Lodgings to allow ye;
And studie should be still remote from company;
A little fire sometimes too, to refresh ye;
A Student must be frugal: sometimes Lights too,
According to your labour. Lea. Any thing, Sir;
That's dry, and wholsome: I am no bred-wanton:

Bar. Then I receive you: but I must desire ye

To keep within your confines. Lea. Ever Sir,
There's the Gold, and ever be your servant,
Take it and give me Books: may I but prove, sir,
According to my wish, and these shall multiply.

Lop. Do, study hard, pray ye take him in, and settle him,
He's only fit for you; Shew him his Cell, sir. (yer,

Die. Take a good heart; and when ye are a cunning Law-
Ple sell my Bells, and you shall prove it lawfull.

Bar. Come, sir, with me: neighbours I thank your diligence.

Lop. I'll come sometimes, and crack a cafe with ye.

Bar. Welcom — [Exit.

Lop. Here's mony got with ease: here, spend that jovially,
And pray for the fool, the Founder.

Die. Many more fools

I heartily pray may follow his example,
Lawyers, or Lubbers, or of what condition,
And many such sweet friends in Nova Hispania.

Lop. It will do well; let 'em but send their monys;
Come from what quarter of the world, I care not,
I'll know 'em instantly; nay I'll be kin to 'em;
I cannot miss a man, that sends me mony:
Let him law there, long as his Duckets last, Boy,
I'll grace him, and prefer him.

Die. I'll turn Trade, Master, and now live by the living,
Let the dead stink, 'tis a poor stinking Trade.

Lop. If the young fool now

Should chance to chop upon his fair Wife, Diego?

Die. And handle her Cafe, Master, that's a law point,
A point would make him start, and put on his Spectacles,
A hidden point, were worth the canvassing.

Lop. Now surely, surely, I should love him, Diego,
And love him heartily: nay, I should love my self,
Or any thing that had but that good fortune,
For to say truth, the Lawyer is a dog-bolt,
An arrant worm: and though I call him worshipfull,
I wish him a canoniz'd Cuckold, Diego,
Now, if my youth do dub him —

Di. He is too demure, Sir. Lop. If he do sting her hoine.

Dieg. There's no such matter,
The woman was not born to so much blessedness,
He has no heat: study consumes his oyl, Master.

Lop. Let's leave it to the will of Fate, and presently
Over a cup of lustie Sack, let's prophesie.

I am like a man that dreamt he was an Emperour;
Come Diego, hope, and whilst he lasts, we'll lay it on. [Ex.

SCENA III.

Enter Jamy, Milanes, Arsenio.

Jam. Angelo, Milanes, did you see this wonder?

Mil. Yes, yes. Jam. And you Arsenio?

Arf. Yes he's gone, Sir,
Strangely disguis'd, he's set upon his voyage.
Love guide his thoughts: he's a brave honest fellow.
Sit close Don Lawyer, O that arrant knave now,
How he will stink, will smoak again, will burst!
He's the most arrant Beast.

Mil. He may be more beast.

Jam. Let him bear six, and six, that all may blaze him;
The villany he has sowed into my Brother,
And from his State, the Revenue he has reach'd at:
Pay him, my good Leandro, take my prayers.

Arf. And all our wishes plough with his fine white heifer.

Jam. Mark him (my dear friend) for a famous Cuckold;
Let it out-live his Books, his pains, and hear me,
The more he seeks to smother it with Justice,

Enter a Servant.

Let it blaze out the more: what news Andrea?

Andr. News I am loth to tell ye: but I am charg'd, sir,
Your Brother layes a strict command upon ye,
No more to know his house, upon your danger,
I am sorry, Sir.

Jam. Faith never be: I am glad on't, keeps the house of pride, and foolery :

 I can to shun it : so return my Answer,
 I will shortly spew him out ; Come, let's be merry,
 And lay our heads together, carefully
 How we may help our friend ; and let's lodge near him,
 Be still at hand : I would not for my patrimony,
 But he should crown his Lawyer, a learned Monster ;
 Come, let's away, I am stark mad till I see him. [Exit.]

SCENA IV.

Enter Bartolus, and Amaranta.

Amar. Why will ye bring men in, and yet be jealous?
 Why will ye lodge a young man, a man able,
 And yet repine?

Bar. He shall not trouble thee, sweet,
 A modest poor slight thing, did I not tell thee
 He was only given to the Book, and for that
 How Royally he paises? finds his own meat too.

Amar. I will not have him here : I know your courses,
 And what fits you will fall into of madnes.

Bar. Faith, I will not, Wife.

Amar. I will not try ye.

Bar. He comes not near thee : shall not dare to tread
 Within thy Lodgings : in an old out-Room
 Where Logs, and Coles were laid.

Amar. Now ye lay fire ; fire to consume your quiet.

Bar. Didst thou know him,
 Thou wouldst think as I do : he disquiet thee ?
 Thou mayst wear him next thy heart, and yet not warm him.
 His mind (poor man)'s o'th' Law, how to live after,
 And not on lewdness : on my Conscience
 He knows not how to look upon a Woman
 More than by reading what Sex she is.

Amar. I do not like it, Sir.

Bar. Do'st thou not see (Fool)
 What presents he sends hourly in his gratefulness?
 What delicate meats?

Amar. You had best trust him at your Table,
 Do, and repent it, do.

Bar. If thou be't willing,
 By my troth, I think he might come, he's so modest,
 He never speaks : there's part of that he gave me,
 He'll eat but half a dozen bits, and rise immediately,
 Even as he eats, he studies : he'll not disquiet thee,
 Do as thou pleasest, Wife.

Amar. What means this Wood-cock? [Knock within.]

Bar. Retire, Sweet, there's one knocks : come in, your bu(siness).

Enter Servant.

Ser. My Lord, Don Henrique, would entreat ye, Sir,
 To come immediately, and speak with him,
 He has business of some moment.

Bar. I'll attend him,
 I must be gone : I pre'thee think the best, Wife,
 At my return, I'll tell thee more, good morrow ;
 Sir, keep ye close, and study hard : an hour hence
 I'll read a new Case to ye. — Exit. [Leandro within.]

Lean. I'll be ready.

Amar. So many hundred Duckets, to ly scurvily?
 And learn the pelting Law? this sounds but slenderly,
 But very poorly : I would see this fellow,
 Very fain see him, how he looks : I will find
 To what end, and what study : there's the place :
 I'll go o'th' other side, and take my Fortune.
 I think there is a window. [Exit.]

Enter Leandro.

Lean. He's gone out
 Now, if I could but see her : she is not this way :
 How nastily he keeps his house? my Chamber,
 If I continue long, will choak me up,
 It is so damp : I shall be mortified

For any woman, if I stay a month here :
 I'll be in, and strike my Lute, that sound may call her. [Exit.]

Lute and Song.

I

*Dearest do not you delay me,
 Since thou knowest I must be gone ;
 Wind and Tide 'tis thought doth stay me,
 But 'tis wind that must be blown
 From that breath, whose native smell
 Indian Odours far excel.*

*Oh then speak thou fairest fair,
 Kill not him that vows to serve thee,
 But perfume this neighbouring Air ;
 Else dull silence sure will starve me :
 'Tis a word that's quickly spoken,
 Which being restrain'd a heart is broken.*

Enter Amaranta.

Amar. He keeps very close: Lord, how I long to see him!
 A Lute strook handsomely, a voice too; I'll hear that:
 These Verses are no Law, they sound too sweetly,
 Now I am more desirous. [Leandro peeping.]

Lean. 'Tis she certain.

Amar. What's that that peeps?

Lean. O admirable face!

Amar. Sure 'tis the man.

Lean. I will go out a little.

Amar. He looks not like a fool, his face is noble:
 How still he stands!

Lean. I am stricken dumb with wonder,
 Sure all the Excellence of Earth dwells here.

Amar. How pale he looks! yet, how his eyes like torches,
 Fling their beams round: how manly his face shews!
 He comes on: surely he will speak: he is made most hand-
 This is no Clerk behaviour; now I have seen ye, (singly :
 I'll take my time: Husband, ye have brought home tinder. [Exit.]

Lean. Sure she has transform'd me,
 I had forgot my tongue clean,
 I never saw a face yet, but this rare one,
 But I was able boldly to encounter it,
 And speak my mind, my lips were lockt up here.
 This is divine, and only serv'd with reverence ;
 O most fair cover of a hand far fairer,
 Thou blessed Innocence, that guards that whiteness,
 Live next my heart. I am glad I have got a relick, } A noise
 A relick when I pray to it, may work wonders. } within.
 Hark, there's some noise : I must retire again.
 This blessed Apparition makes me happy ;
 I'll suffer, and I'll sacrifice my substance,
 But I'll enjoy : now softly to my Kennel. [Exit.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Henrique, and Bartolus.

Hen. YOU know my cause sufficiently?

Bar. I do Sir.

Hen. And though it will impair my honesty,
 And strike deep at my Credit, yet, my Bartolus,
 There being no other evasion left to free me
 From the vexation of my spiteful Brother,
 That most insultingly reigns over me,
 I must and will go forward.

Bar. Do, my Lord,
 And look not after credit, we shall cure that,
 Your bended honesty we shall set right, Sir,
 We Surgeons of the Law do desperate Cures, Sir,

And

And you shall see how heartily I'll handle it:
Mark how I'll knock it home: be of good cheer, Sir,
You give good Fees, and those beget good Causes,
The Prerogative of your Crowns will carry the matter,
(Carry it sheer) the Assistant sits to-morrow,
And he's your friend, your moneyed men love naturally,
And as your loves are clear, so are your Causes.

Hen. He shall not want for that.

Bar. No, no, he must not,

Line your Cause warmly, Sir, the times are Aguish,
That holds a Plea in heart; hang the penurious,
Their Causes (like their purses) have poor Issues.

Hen. That way, I was ever bountiful.

Bar. 'Tis true, Sir,

That makes ye fear'd, forces the Snakes to kneel to ye,
Live full of money, and supply the Lawyer,
And take your choice of what mans lands you please, Sir,
What pleasures, or what profits; what revenges,
They are all your own: I must have witnesses
Enough, and ready.

Hen. You shall not want, my Bartolus.

Bar. Substantial fearless souls, that will swear suddenly,
That will swear any thing.

Hen. They shall swear truth too.

Bar. That's no great matter: for variety
They may swear truth, else 'tis not much look'd after:
I will serve Process, presently, and strongly,
Upon your Brother, and Octavio,
Jacintha, and the Boy; provide your proofs, Sir,
And set 'em fairly off, be sure of Witnesses,
Though they cost money, want no store of witnesses,
I have seen a handsome Cause so foully lost, Sir,
So beastly cast away for want of Witnesses.

Hen. There shall want nothing.

Bar. Then be gone, be provident,
Send to the Judge a secret way: you have me,
And let him understand the heart.

Hen. I shall, Sir.

Bar. And feel the pulses strongly beat, I'll study,
And at my hour, but mark me, go, be happy,
Go and believe 'th' Law.

Hen. I hope 'twill help me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Lopez, Diego, and four Parishioners and Singers.

Lop. Ne're talk to me, I will not stay amongst ye,
Debauch'd and ignorant lazie knaves I found ye,
And fools I leave ye. I have taught these twenty years,
Preacht spoon-meat to ye, that a Child might swallow,
Yet ye are Block-heads still: what should I say to ye?
Ye have neither faith, nor money left to save ye,
Am I a fit companion for such Beggars?

1 If the Shepherd will suffer the sheep to be scab'd, Sir—

Lop. No, no ye are rotten.

Die. Would they were, for my sake.

Lop. I have Nointed ye, and Tarr'd ye with my Doctrine,
And yet the Murren sticks to ye, yet ye are Mangy,
I will avoid ye.

2 Pray ye, Sir, be not angry,

In the pride of your new Caslock, do not part with us;
We do acknowledge ye are a careful Curate,
And one that seldom troubles us with Sermons,
A short slice of a Reading serves us, Sir,
We do acknowledge ye a quiet Teacher,
Before you'll vex your Audience, you'll sleep with 'em,
And that's a loving thing:

3 We grant ye, Sir,

The only benefactor to our Bowling,
To all our merry Sports the first provoker;
And at our Feasts, we know there is no reason,
But you that edifie us most, should eat most.

Lop. I will not stay for all this, ye shall know me
A man born to amore befeeming fortune

Than ringing all-in, to a rout of Dunces.

4 We will increase your Tithes, you shall have Eggs too,
Though they may prove most dangerous to our Issues.

1 I am a Smith; yet thus far out of my love,
You shall have the tenth Horse I prick, to pray for,
I am sure I prick five hundred in a year, Sir.

2 I am a Cook, a man of a dri'd Conscience,
Yet thus far I relent: you shall have tith Pottage.

3 Your stipend shall be rais'd too, good Neighbour Diego.

Die. Would ye have me speak for ye? I am more angry,
Ten times more vex'd, not to be pacified:
No, there be other places for poor Sextons,
Places of profit, Friends, fine stirring places,
And people that know how to use our Offices,
Know what they were made for: I speak for such Capons?
Ye shall find the Key o'th' Church
Under the door, Neighbours,
You may go in, and drive away the Dawes.

Lop. My Surple's, with one sleeve, you shall find there,
For to that dearth of Linnen you have driven me;
And the old Cutwork Cope, that hangs by Geometry:
'Pray ye turn 'em carefully, they are very tender;
The remnant of the Books, lie where they did, Neighbours,
Half puft away with the Church-wardens pipings,
Such smoaky zeals they have against hard places.
The Poor-mans Box is there too: if ye find any thing
Beside the Posie, and that half rub'd out too,
For fear it should awake too much charity,
Give it to pious uses, that is, spend it.

Die. The Bell-ropes, they are strong enough to hang ye,
So we bequeath ye to your destiny.

1 'Pray ye be not so hasty.

Die. I'll speak a proud word to ye,
Would ye have us stay?

2 We do most heartily pray ye.

3 I'll draw as mighty drink, Sir.

Lop. A strong motive,
The stronger still, the more ye come unto me.

3 And I'll send for my Daughter.

Lop. This may stir too:

The Maiden is of age, and must be edified.

4 You shall have any thing: lose our learned Vicar?
And our most constant friend; honest dear Diego?

Die. Yet all this will not do: I'll tell ye, Neighbours,
And tell ye true: if ye will have us stay,
If you will have the comforts of our companies,
You shall be bound to do us right in these points,
You shall be bound, and this the obligation;
Dye when 'tis fit, that we may have fit duties,
And do not seek to draw—out our undoings,
Marry try'd Women, that are free, and fruitful,
Get Children in abundance, for your Christnings,
Or suffer to be got, 'tis equal justice,

Lop. Let Weddings, Christnings, Churchings, Funerals,
And merry Gossippings go round, go round still,
Round as a Pig, that we may find the profit.

Die. And let your old men fall sick handsomely,
And dye immediately, their Sons may shoot up:
Let Women dye o'th' Sullens too, 'tis natural,
But be sure their Daughters be of age first,
That they may stock us still: your queazie young Wives
That perish undeliver'd, I am vext with,
And vext abundantly, it much concerns me,
There's a Childs Burial lost, look that be mended.

Lop. Let 'em be brought to Bed, then dye when they please.
These things considered, Country-men, and sworn to.

2 All these, and all our Sports again, and Gambols.

3 We must dye, and we must live, and we'll be merry,
Every man shall be rich by one another.

2 We are here to-morrow and gone to-day, for my part
If getting Children can befriend my Neighbours.
I'll labour hard but I'll fill your Font, Sir.

1 I have a Mother now, and an old Father;

They are as sure your own, within these two months—

4 My Sister must be pray'd for too, she is desperate,
Desperate in love.

Die. Keep desperate men far from her,
Then 'twill go hard: do you see how melancholy?
Do you mark the man? do you profess ye love him?
And would do any thing to stay his fury?
And are ye unprovided to refresh him,
To make him know your loves? fie Neighbours.

2 We'll do any thing.
We have brought Musick to appease his spirit,
And the best Song we'll give him.

Die. 'Pray ye sit down, Sir,
They know their duties now, and they stand ready
To tender their best mirth.

Lop. 'Tis well, proceed Neighbours,
I am glad I have brought ye to understand good manners,
Ye had Puritan hearts a-while, spurn'd at all pastimes,
But I see some hope now.

Die. We are set, proceed Neighbours.

SONG.

*Let the Bells ring, and let the Boys sing,
The young Lasses skip and play,
Let the Cups go round, till round goes the ground,
Our Learned old Vicar will stay.*

*Let the Pig turn merrily, merrily ah,
And let the fat Goose swim,
For verily, verily, verily ah,
Our Vicar this day shall be trim.*

*The stew'd Cock shall Crow, Cock-a-loodle-loo,
A loud Cock-a-loodle shall he Crow;
The Duck and the Drake, shall swim in a lake
Of Onions and Claret below.*

*Our Wives shall be neat, to bring in our meat;
To thee our most noble adviser,
Our pains shall be great, and Bottles shall sweat,
And we our selves will be wiser.*

*We'll labour and swinck, we'll kiss and we'll drink,
And Tithes shall come thicker and thicker;
We'll fall to our Plow, and get Children enough,
And thou shalt be learned old Vicar.*

Enter Arsenio and Milanes.

Arf. What ails this Priest? how highly the thing takes it?

Mil. Lord how it looks? has he not bought some Prebend?

Leandro's mony makes the Rascal merry,
Merry at heart; he spies us.

Lop. Be gone Neighbours,
Here are some Gentlemen: be gone good Neighbours,
Be gone, and labour to redeem my favour,
No more words, but be gone: these two are Gentlemen,
No company for crusty-handed fellows.

Die. We will stay for a year or two, and try ye.

Lop. Fill all your hearts with joy, we will stay with ye,
Be gone, no more; I take your pastimes graciously. [Exeunt
Would ye with me, my friends? [Parishioners.

Arf. We would look upon ye,
For me thinks ye look lovely.

Lop. Ye have no Letters?
Nor any kind Remembrances?

Mil. Remembrances?

Lop. From Nova Hispania, or some part remote, Sir,
You look like Travel'd men: may be some old friends
That happily I have forgot; some Signiours

In China or Catays; some Companions——

Die. In the Moguls Court, or else-where.

Arf. They are mad sure.

Lop. Ye came not from Peru? do they look, Diego,
As if they had some mystery about 'em?
Another Don Alonzo now?

Die. I marry,

And so much mony, Sir, from one you know not,
Let it be who it will.

Lop. They have gracious favours.

Would ye be private?

Mil. There's no need on't, Sir,
We come to bring ye a Remembrance from a Merchant.

Lop. 'Tis very well, 'tis like I know him.

Arf. No, Sir,

I do not think ye do.

Lop. A new mistake, Diego,

Let's carry it decently.

Arf. We come to tell ye,

You have received great sums from a young Factor
They call Leandro, that has rob'd his Master,
Rob'd him, and run away.

Die. Let's keep close, Master;

This news comes from a cold Country.

Lop. By my faith it freezes,

Mil. Is not this true? do you shrink now good-man Curat?

Do I not touch ye?

Lop. We have a hundred Duckets

Yet left, we do beseech ye, Sir——

Mil. You'll hang both.

Lop. One may suffice.

Die. I will not hang alone, Master,

I had the least part, you shall hang the highest.

Plague o' this Tiveria, and the Letter,

The Devil sent it post, to pepper us,

From Nova Hispania, we shall hang at home now.

Arf. I see ye are penitent, and I have compassion:

Ye are secure both; do but what we charge ye,
Ye shall have more gold too, and he shall give it,
Yet ne're indanger ye.

Lop. Command us, Master,

Command us presently, and see how nimbly——

Die. And if we do not handsomely endeavour——

Arf. Go home, and till ye hear more, keep private,
Till we appear again, no words, Vicar,
There's something added.

Mil. For you too.

Lop. We are ready.

Mil. Go and expect us hourly, if ye falter,

Though ye had twenty lives——

Die. We are fit to lose 'em.

Lop. 'Tis most expedient that we should hang both.

Die. If we be hang'd, we cannot blame our fortune.

Mil. Farewel, and be your own friends.

Lop. We expect ye.——

[Exeunt.

SCENA III.

Enter Octavio, Jacintha, and Ascanio.

Octa. We cited to the Court! { A Bar, Table-book, 2 Chairs
Jac. It is my wonder. { and Paper, standish set out.

Octa. But not our fear, Jacintha; wealthy men,
That have Estates to lose; whose conscious thoughts
Are full of inward guilt, may shake with horror
To have their Actions sifted, or appear
Before the Judge. But we that know our selves
As innocent, as poor, that have no Fleece
On which the Talons of the griping Law
Can take sure hold, may smile with scorn on all
That can be urg'd against us.

Jac. I am confident

There is no man so covetous, that desires
To ravish our wants from us, and less hope
There can be so much Justice left on earth,

(Though

(Tough sued, and call'd upon) to ease us of
The burthen of our wrongs.

Off. What thinks Afc. mio?

Should we be call'd in question, or accus'd
Unjustly, what would you do to redeem us
From tyrannous oppression?

Afc. I could pray

To him that ever has an open ear,
To hear the innocent, and right their wrongs;
Nay, by my troth, I think I could out-plead
An Advocate, and sweat as much as he Do's for a double Fee, ere you should suffer
In an honest cause.

Enter Jamie and Bartolus.

Off. Happy simplicitie!

Jac. My dearest and my best one, Don Jamie.

Off. And the Advocate, that caus'd us to be summon'd.

Afc. My Lord is mov'd, I see it in his looks,
And that man, in the Gown, in my opinion
Looks like a proguing Knave.

Jac. Peace, give them leave.

Jam. Serve me with Process?

Bar. My Lord, you are not lawless.

Jam. Nor thou honest;

One, that not long since was the buckram Scribe,
That would run on mens errands for an Asper,
And from such baseness, having rais'd a Stock
To bribe the covetous Judge, call'd to the Bar.
So poor in practice too, that you would plead
A needy Clyents Cause, for a starv'd Hen,
Or half a little Loin of Veal, though fly-blown,
And these, the greatest Fees you could arrive at
For just proceedings; but since you turn'd Rascal—

Bar. Good words, my Lord.

Jam. And grew my Brothers Bawd,
In all his vitious courses, soothing him
In his dishonest practises, you are grown
The rich, and eminent Knave, in the Devils name,
What am I cited for?

Bar. You shall know anon,
And then too late repent this bitter language,
Or I'll mis of my ends.

Jam. Were't not in Court,
I would beat that fat of thine, rais'd by the food
Snatch'd from poor Clyents mouths, into a jelly:
I would (my man of Law) but I am patient,
And would obey the Judge.

Bar. 'Tis your best course:
Would every enemy I have would beat me,
I would wish no better Action.

Off. 'Save your Lordship.

Afc. My humble service.

Jam. My good Boy, how dost thou?
Why art thou call'd into the Court?

Enter Assistant, Henrique, Officer, and Witnesses.

Afc. I know not,
But 'tis my Lord the Assistants pleasure
I should attend here.

Jam. He will soon resolve us.

Off. Make way there for the Judge.

Jam. How? my kind Brother?

Nay then 'tis rank: there is some villany towards.

Assist. This Sessions purchas'd at your suit, Don Henrique,
Hath brought us hither, to hear and determine
Of what you can prefer.

Hen. I do beseech

The honourable Court, I may be heard
In my Advocate.

Assist. 'Tis granted.

Bar. Humh, humh.

Jam. That Preface,
If left out in a Lawyer, spoils the Cause,

Though ne're so good, and honest.

Bar. If I stood here,

To plead in the defence of an ill man,
(Most equal Judge) or to accuse the innocent
(To both which, I profess my self a stranger)
It would be requisite I should deck my Language
With Tropes and Figures, and all flourishes
That grace a Rhetorician, 'tis confess'd
Adulterate Metals need the Gold-smiths Art,
To set 'em off; what in it self is perfect
Contemns a borrowed gloss: this Lord (my Client)
Whose honest cause, when 'tis related truly,
Will challenge justice, finding in his Conscience
A tender scruple of a fault long since
By him committed, thinks it not sufficient
To be absolv'd of 't by his Confessor,
If that in open Court he publish not
What was so long conceal'd.

Jam. To what tends this?

Bar. In his young years (it is no miracle
That youth, and heat of blood, should mix together)
He look'd upon this woman, on whose face
The ruines yet remain, of excellent form,
He look'd on her, and lov'd her.

Jac. You good Angels,
What an impudence is this?

Bar. And us'd all means
Of Service, Courtship, Presents, that might win her
To be at his devotion: but in vain;
Her Maiden Fort, impregnable held out,
Until he promis'd Marriage; and before
These Witnesses a solemn Contract pass'd
To take her as his Wife.

Assist. Give them their Oath.

Jam. They are incompetent Witnesses, his own Creatures,
And will swear any thing for half a Royal.

Off. Silence.

Assist. Proceed.

Bar. Upon this strong assurance
He did enjoy his wishes to the full,
Which satisfied, and then with eyes of Judgement
(Hood-wink'd with Lust before) considering duly
The inequality of the Match, he being Nobly descended, and allyed, but she
Without a name, or Family, secretly
He purchas'd a Divorce, to disanul
His former Contract, Marrying openly
The Lady Violante.

Jac. As you sit here

The Deputy of the great King, who is
The Substitute of that impartial Judge,
With whom, or wealth, or titles prevail nothing,
Grant to a much wrong'd Widow, or a Wife
Your patience, with liberty to speak
In her own Cause, and let me face to face
To this bad man, deliver what he is:
And if my wrongs, with his ingratitude ballanc'd,
Move not compassion, let me die unpitied;
His Tears, his Oaths, his Perjuries, I pass o're;
To think of them is a disease; but death
Should I repeat them. I dare not deny,
(For Innocence cannot justify what's false)
But all the Advocate hath alledged concerning
His falshood, and my shame, in my consent,
To be most true: But now I turn to thee,
To thee Don Henrique, and if impious Acts
Have left thee blood enough to make a blush,
I'll paint it on thy cheeks. Was not the wrong
Sufficient to defeat me of mine honour,
To leave me full of sorrow, as of want,
The witness of thy lust left in my womb,
To testify thy falshood, and my shame?
But now so many years I had conceal'd
Thy most inhumane wickedness, and won

This Gentleman, to hide it from the world,
To Father what was thine (for yet by Heaven,
Though in the City he pass'd for my husband,
He never knew me as his wife.)

Assist. 'Tis strange:

Give him an Oath.

Off. I gladly swear, and truly.

Jac. After all this (I say) when I had born
These wrongs, with Saint-like patience, saw another
Freely enjoy, what was (in Justice) mine,
Yet still so tender of thy rest and quiet,
I never would divulge it, to disturb
Thy peace at home; yet thou most barbarous,
To be so careless of me, and my fame,
(For all respect of thine in the first step
To thy base lust, was lost) in open Court
To publish my disgrace? and on record,
To write me up an easie-yielding wanton?
I think can find no precedent: In my extreams,
One comfort yet is left, that though the Law
Divorce me from thy bed, and made free way
To the unjust embraces of another,
It cannot yet deny that this thy Son
(Look up Ascanio since it is come out)
Is thy legitimate heir.

Jam. Confederacie!

A trick (my Lord) to cheat me; e're you give
Your Sentence, grant me hearing.

Assist. New Chimera's?

Jam. I am (my Lord) since he is without Issue,
Or hope of any, his undoubted heir,
And this forg'd by the Advocate, to defeat me
Of what the laws of Spain confer upon me,
A meer Imposture, and conspiracie
Against my future fortunes.

Assist. You are too bold.

Speak to the cause Don Henrique.

Hen. I confess,

(Though the acknowledgment must wound mine honour,)
That all the Court hath heard touching this Cause,
(Or with me, or against me) is most true:
The later part my Brother urg'd, excepted:
For what I now doe, is not out of Spleen
(As he pretends) but from remorse of conscience
And to repair the wrong that I have done
To this poor woman: And I beseech your Lordship
To think I have not so far lost my reason,
To bring into my familie, to succeed me,
The stranger—Issue of another's Bed,
By proof, this is my Son, I challenge him,
Accept him, and acknowledge him, and desire
By a definitive Sentence of the Court,
He may be so recorded, and full power
To me, to take him home.

Jac. A second rape

To the poor remnant of content that's left me,
If this be granted: and all my former wrongs
Were but beginnings to my miseries,
But this the height of all: rather than part
With my Ascanio, I'll deny my oath,
Profess my self a Strumpet, and endure
What punishment soe're the Court decrees
Against a wretch that hath forsworn her self,
Or plai'd the impudent whore.

Assist. This tastes of passion,

And that must not divert the course of Justice;
Don Henrique, take your Son, with this condition
You give him maintenance, as becomes his birth,
And'twill stand with your honour to doe something
For this wronged woman: I will compel nothing,
But leave it to your will. Break up the Court:
It is in vain to move me; my doom's pass'd,
And cannot be revok'd. —

Hen. There's your reward.

[Exit.]

Bar. More causes, and such Fees. Now to my Wife,
I have too long been absent: Health to your Lordship.

[Exit.]

Asc. You all look strangely, and I fear believe
This unexpected fortune makes me proud,
Indeed it do's not: I shall ever pay you
The duty of a son, and honour you
Next to my Father: good my Lord, for yet
I dare not call you, uncle, be not sad,
I never shall forget those noble favours
You did me being a stranger, and if ever
I live to be the master of a fortune,
You shall command it.

Jam. Since it was determin'd
I should be cozen'd, I am glad the profit
Shall fall on thee, I am too tough to melt,
But something I will do.

Hen. 'Pray you take leave
Of your steward (gentle Brother) the good husband
That takes up all for you.

Jam. Very well, mock on,
It is your turn: I may have mine —

[Exit.]

Off. But do not Forget us, dear Ascanio.

Asc. Do not fear it,

I every day will see you: every hour
Remember you in my prayers.

Off. My grief's too great

To be express'd in words —

[Exit.]

Hen. Take that and leave us, [gives money to Jacinta]
Leave us without reply, nay come back firrah
And study to forget such things as these
As are not worth the knowledge. [Asc. offers to follow.]

Asc. O good Sir,
These are bad principles —

Hen. Such as you must learn
Now you are mine, for wealth and poverty
Can hold no friendship: and what is my will
You must observe and do, though good or ill.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA IV.

Enter Bartolus.

Bar. Where is my wife? 'fore heaven, I have done won-Done mighty things to day, my Amaranta, (ders,
My heart rejoices at my wealthy Gleanings,
A rich litigious Lord I love to follow,
A Lord that builds his happiness on brawlings,
O 'tis a blessed thing to have rich Clyents,
Why, wife I say, how fares my studious Pupil?
Hard at it still? ye are too violent,
All things must have their rests, they will not last else,
Come out and breathe. [Leandro within.]

Lean. I do beseech you pardon me,
I am deeply in a sweet point Sir.

Bar. Ple instruct ye:

Enter Amaranta.

I say take breath, seek health first, then your study.
O my sweet soul, I have brought thee golden birds home,
Birds in abundance: I have done strange wonders:
There's more a hatching too.

Am. Have ye done, good husband?
Then 'tis a good day spent.

Bar. Good enough chicken,
I have spread the nets o'th' law, to catch rich booties,
And they come fluttering in: how do's my Pupil?
My modest thing, hast thou yet spoken to him?

Am. As I pass'd by his chamber I might see him,
But he is so bookish.

Bar. And so bathfull too,
I' faith he is, before he will speak, he will starve there.

Am. I pitie him a little.

Bar. So do I too.

Am.

Am. And if he please to take the air o'th' gardens,
Or walk i'th' inward rooms, so he molest not —
Bar. He shall not trouble thee, he dare not speak to thee.

Enter Moor, with Chess-board.

Bring out the Chess-board,— come let's have a game wife
I'll try your masterie, you say you are cunning
Am. As learned as ye are, Sir, I shall beat ye.

Enter Leandro.

Bar. Here he steals out, put him not out of countenance,
Prethee look another way, he will be gone else
Walk and refresh your self, I'll be with you presently.

Lean. I'll take the air a little. [Play at chess.

Bar. 'Twill be healthfull.

Am. Will ye be there? then here? I'll spare ye that man.

Lea. Would I were so near too, and a mate fitting.

Am. What think ye, Sir, to this? have at your Knight now.

Bar. 'Twas subtilly play'd: your Queen lies at my service.
Prethee look off, he is ready to pop in again,
Look off I say, do'st thou not see how he blushes?

Am. I do not blast him.

Lean. But ye do, and burn too,
What killing looks she steals?

Bar. I have you now close,
Now for a Mate.

Lean. You are a blessed man that may so have her.
Oh that I might play with her— [knock within.

Bar. Who's there? I come, you cannot scape me now wife.
I come, I come. [knock.

Lean. Most blessed hand that calls him.

Bar. Play quickly wife.

Am. 'Pray ye give leave to think, Sir.

Enter Moor.

Moor. An honest neighbour that dwells hard by, Sir,
Would fain speak with your worship about business.

Lean. The devil blow him off.

Bar. Play.

Am. I will study:

For if you beat me thus, you will still laugh at me— [knock.

Bar. He knocks again; I cannot stay. Leandro,
'Pray thee come near.

Lean. I am well, Sir, here.

Bar. Come hither:

Be not afraid, but come.

Am. Here's none will bite, Sir.

Lean. God forbid Lady.

Am. 'Pray come nearer.

Lean. Yes forfooth.

Bar. 'Prethee observe these men: just as they stand here,
And see this Lady do not alter 'em,
And be not partial, Pupil.

Lean. No indeed Sir.

Bar. Let her not move a pawn, I'll come back presently,
Nay you shall know I am a Conquerour.

Have an eye Pupil — [Exit.

Am. Can ye play at Chess Sir?

Lean. A little, Lady.

Am. But you cannot tell me

How to avoid this Mate, and win the Game too;
H'as noble eyes: ye dare not friend me so far.

Lean. I dare do any thing that's in mans power Lady,
To be a friend to such a noble beauty.

Am. This is no Lawyers language: I pray ye tell me,
Whither may I remove, Ye see I am fet round,
To avoid my husband?

Lean. I shall tell ye happily,
But happily you will not be instructed.

Am. Yes, and thank ye too, shall I move this man?

Lean. Those are unseemly: move one can serve ye,
Can honour ye, can love ye.

Am. 'Pray ye tell quickly,

He will return, and then.

Lean. I'll tell ye instantly,
Move me, and I will move any way to serve ye,
Move your heart this way, Lady.

Am. How?

Lean. 'Pray ye hear me.
Behold the sport of love, when he is imperious,
Behold the slave of love.

Am. Move my Queen this way?
Sure, he's some worthy man: then if he hedge me,
Or here to open him.

Lean. Do but behold me,
If there be pity in you, do but view me,
But view the misery I have undertaken
For you, the povertie.

Am. He will come presently.
Now play your best Sir, though I lose this Rook here,
Yet I get lib'ertie.

Lean. I'll seise your fair hand,
And warm it with a hundred, hundred kisses.
The God of love warm your desires but equal,
That shall play my game now.

Am. What do you mean Sir?

Why do you stop me?

Lean. That ye may intend me.
The time has blest us both: love bids us use it.
I am a Gentleman nobly descended,
Young to invite your love, rich to maintain it.

I bring a whole heart to ye, thus I give it,
And to those burning altars thus I offer,
And thus, divine lips, where perpetual Spring grows——

Am. Take that, ye are too saucy.

Lean. How, proud Lady?

Strike my deserts?

Am. I was to blame.

Enter Bartolus.

Bar. What wife, there?
Heaven keep my house from thieves.

Lean. I am wretched:
Opened, discovered, lost to my wifes.
I shall be whooted at.

Bar. What noise was this, wife?
Why dost thou smile?

Lean. This proud thing will betray me.

Bar. Why these lie here? what angry, dear?

Am. No, Sir,
Only a chance, your pupil said he plaid well,
And so indeed he do's: he undertook for ye,
Because I would not sit so long time idle,
I made my liberty, avoided your mate,
And he again as cunningly endangered me,
Indeed he put me strangely to it. When presently
Hearing you come, & having broke his ambush too,
Having the second time brought off my Queen fair,
I rose o'th' sudden smilingly to shew ye,
My apron caught the Chess-board, and the men,
And there the noise was.

Bar. Thou art grown a Master,
For all this I shall beat ye.

Lean. Or I, Lawyer,
For now I love her more, 'twas a neat answer,
And by it hangs a mighty hope, I thank her,
She gave my pate a sound knock that it rings yet;
But you shall have a founder if I live lawyer,
My heart akes yet, I would not be in that fear——

Bar. I am glad ye are a gamester, Sir, sometimes
For recreation we two shall fight hard at it.

Am. He will prove too hard for me.

Lean. I hope he shall do, (good Lady.
But your Chess-board is too hard for my head, line that,

Bar. I have been attoning two most wrangling neigh-
They had no mony, therefore I made even. (bours,
Come, let's go in and eat; truly I am hungry.

Lean. I have eaten already, I must intreat your pardon.

Bav. Do as ye please, we shall expect ye at supper.
He has got a little heart, now it seems handfomly.

Am. You'l get no little head, if I do not look to ye.

Lean. If ever I do catch thee again thou vanity—

Am. I was to blame to be forrall, I am sorry—

[Exeunt]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Don Henrique, Violante, Ascanio.

Hen. Hear but my reasons.

Viol. O my patience, hear 'em!
Can cunning falshood colour an excuse
With any seeming shape of borrowed truth?
Extenuate this wofull wrong, not error?

Hen. You gave consent that, to defeat my brother
I should take any course.

Vio. But not to make
The cure more loathfom than the soul disease:
Was't not enough you took me to your bed,
Tir'd with loose dalliance, and with emptie veins,
All those abilities spent before and wasted,
That could confer the name of mother on me?
But that (to perfect my account of sorrow
For my long barnneness) you must heighten it
By shewing to my face, that you were fruitfull
Hug'd in the base embraces of another?
If Solitude that dwelt beneath my roof,
And want of children was a torment to me,
What end of my vextion to behold
A bastard to upbraid me with my wants?
And hear the name of father paid to ye,
Yet know my self no mother,
What can I say?

Hen. Shall I confes my fault and ask your pardon?
Will that content ye?

Vio. If it could make void,
What is confirm'd in Court: no, no, Don Henrique,
You shall know that I find my self abus'd,
And adde to that, I have a womans anger,
And while I look upon this Basilisk,
Whose envious eyes have blasted all my comforts
Rest confident I'll study my dark ends,
And not your pleasures.

Asc. Noble Lady, hear me,
Not as my Fathers son, but as your servant,
Vouchsafe to hear me, for such in my duty,
I ever will appear: and far be it from
My poor ambition, ever to look on you,
But with that reverence, which a slave stands bound
To pay a worthy Mistris: I have heard
That Dames of highest place, nay Queens themselves
Disdain not to be serv'd by such as are
Of meanest Birth: and I shall be most happie,
To be employ'd when you please to command me
Even in the coursest office, as your Page,
I can wait on your trencher, fill your wine,
Carry your pantofles, and be sometimes blest'd
In all humilitie to touch your feet:
Or if that you esteem that too much grace,
I can run by your Coach: observe your looks,
And hope to gain a fortune by my service,
With your good favour, which now, as a Son,
I dare not challenge.

Vio. As a Son?

Asc. Forgive me,
I will forget the name, let it be death
For me to call you Mother.

Vio. Still upbraided?

Hen. No way left to appease you?

Vio. None: now hear me:

Hear what I vow before the face of Heaven,
And if I break it, all plagues in this life,
And those that alter death are fear'd fall, on me,
While that this Bastard stiaes under my roof,
Look for no peace at home, for I renounce
All Offices of a wife.

Hen. What am I faln to?

Vio. I will not eat, nor sleep with you, and those hours,
Which I should spend in prayers for your health,
Shall be employ'd in Curses.

Hen. Terrible.

Vio. All the day long, I'll be as tedious to you
As lingring fevers, and I'll watch the nights,
To ring aloud your shame, and break your sleeps.
Of if you do but slumber, I'll appear
In the shape of all my wrongs, and like a fury
Fright you to madness, and if all this fail
To work out my revenge, I have friends and kinsmen,
That will not sit down tame with the disgrace
That's offer'd to our noble familie
In what I suffer.

Hen. How am I divided
Between the duties I owe as a Husband,
And pietie of a Parent?

Asc. I am taught Sir
By the instinct of nature that obedience
Which bids me to prefer your peace of mind,
Before those pleasures that are dearest to me,
Be wholly hers (my Lord) I quit all parts,
That I may challenge: may you grow old together,
And no distaste e're find you, and before
The Characters of age are printed on you
May you see many Images of your selves,
Though I, like some false glass, that's never look'd in,
Am cast aside, and broken; from this hour
(Unless invited, which I dare not hope for)
I never will set my forbidden feet
Over your threshold: only give me leave
Though cast off to the world to mention you
In my devotions, 'tis all I sue for
And so I take my last leave.

Hen. Though I am
Devoted to a wife, nay almost sold
A slave to serve her pleasures, yet I cannot
So part with all humanity, but I must
Shew something of a Father: thou shalt not goe
Unfurnish'd and unfriended too: take that
To guard thee from necessities; may thy goodness
Meet many favours, and thine innocence
Deserve to be the heir of greater fortunes,
Than thou wer't born to. Scorn me not Violante,
This banishment is a kind of civil death,
And now, as it were at his funeral
To shed a tear or two, is not unmanly,
And so farewell for ever: one word more,
Though I must never see thee (my Ascanio)
When this is spent (for so the Judge decreed)
Send to me for supply: are you pleas'd now?

Vio. Yes: I have cause: to see you howl and blubber
At the parting of my torment, and your shame.
'Tis well: proceed: supply his wants: doe doe:
Let the great dower I brought serve to maintain
Your Bastards riots: send my Clothes and Jewels,
To your old acquaintaince, your dear dame his Mother.
Now you begin to melt, I know 'twill follow.

Hen. Is all I doe misconstru'd?

Viol. I will take
A course to right my self, a speeding one:
By the blest'd Saints, I will; if I prove cruel,
The shame to see thy foolish pity, taught me
To lose my natural softness, keep off from me,
Thy flatteries are infectious, and I'll flee thee
As I would doe a Leper.

Hen.

Hen. Let not fury
Transport you so: you know I am your Creature,
All love, but to your self, with him, hath left me.
I'll joyn with you in any thing.

Viol. In vain,
I'll take mine own waies, and will have no partners.

Hen. I will not cross you.

Viol. Do not, they shall find
That to a Woman of her hopes beguil'd
A Viper trod on, or an Aspick's mild.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Lopez, Milanese, Arsenio.

Lop. Sits the game there? I have you by mine order,
I love Leandro for't.

Mil. But you must shew it
In lending him your help, to gain him means
And opportunity.

Lop. He shall want nothing,
I know my Advocate to a hair, and what
Will fetch him from his Prayers, if he use any,
I am honied with the project: I would have him horn'd
For a most precious Beast.

Ars. But you lose time.

Lop. I am gone, instruct you Diego, you will find him
A sharp and subtle Knave, give him but hints
And he will amplify. See all things ready,
I'll fetch him with a vengeance—

[Exit.]

Ars. If he fail now,
We'll give him over too.

Mil. Tush, he is flesh'd,
And knows what vein to strike for his own credit.

Ars. All things are ready.

Mil. Then we shall have a merry Scene, ne're fear it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Amaranta, with a note, and Moor.

Amar. Is thy Master gone out?

Moor. Even now, the Curate fetch'd him,
About a serious business as it seem'd,
For he snatch'd up his Cloak, and brush'd his Hat straight,
Set his Band handsomely, and out he gallop'd.

Amar. 'Tis well, 'tis very well, he went out, Egla,
As luckily, as one would say, go Husband,
He was call'd by providence: fling this short Paper
Into Leandro's Cell, and waken him,
He is monstrous vexed, and musty, at my Chefs-play;
But this shall supple him, when he has read it:
Take your own Recreation for two hours,
And hinder nothing.

Moor. If I do, I'll hang for't.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA IV.

Enter Octavio, Jacintha.

Octa. If that you lov'd Ascanio for himself,
And not your private ends, you rather should Bless the fair opportunity, that restores him
To his Birth-right, and the Honours he was born to,
Than grieve at his good Fortune.

Jac. Grieve, Octavio?

I would resign my Essence, that he were
As happy as my love could fashion him,
Though every blessing that should fall on him,
Might prove a curse to me: my sorrow springs
Out of my fear and doubt he is not safe.

I am acquainted with Don Henrique's nature,
And I have heard too much the fiery temper
Of Madam Violante: can you think
That she, that almost is at war with Heaven
For being barren, will with equal eyes
Behold a Son of mine?

Octa. His Father's care,
That for the want of Issue, took him home,
(Though with the forfeiture of his own fame)
Will look unto his safety.

Jac. Step-mothers
Have many eyes, to find a way to mischief,
Though blind to goodness.

Enter Jamie and Ascanio.

Octa. Here comes Don Jamie,
And with him our Ascanio.

Jam. Good youth leave me,
I know thou art forbid my company,
And only to be seen with me, will call on Thy Father's anger.

Ars. Sir, if that to serve you
Could lose me any thing (as indeed it cannot)
I still would follow you. Alas I was born
To do you hurt, but not to help my self,
I was, for some particular end, took home,
But am cast off again.

Jam. Is't possible?

Ars. The Lady, whom my Father calls his Wife,
Abhors my sight, is sick of me, and forc'd him
To turn me out of doors.

Jac. By my best hopes
I thank her cruelty, for it comes near
A saving Charity.

Ars. I am only happy
That yet I can relieve you, pray you share:
My Father's wondrous kind, and promises
That I should be supplied: but sure the Lady
Is a malicious Woman, and I fear
Means me no good.

Enter Servant.

Jam. I am turn'd a stone with wonder,
And know not what to think.

Ser. From my Lady,
Your private ear, and this—

Jam. New Miracles?

Ser. She says, if you dare make your self a Fortune,
She will propose the means; my Lord Don Henrique
Is now from home, and she alone expects you,
If you dare trust her, so, if not despair of
A second offer.

[Exit.]

Jam. Though there were an Ambush
Laid for my life, I'll on and sound this secret.
Retire thee, my Ascanio, with thy Mother:
But stir not forth, some great design's on foot;
Fall what can fall, if e're the Sun be set
I see you not, give me for dead.

Ars. We will expect you,
And those bless'd Angels, that love goodness, guard you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA V.

Enter Lopez and Bartolus.

Bar. Is't possible he should be rich?

Lop. Most possible,
He hath been long, though he had but little gettings,
Drawing together, Sir.

Bar. Accounted a poor Sexton,
Honest poor Diego.

Lop. I assure ye, a close Fellow,
Both close, and scraping, and that fills the Bags, Sir.

Bar. A notable good fellow too?

Lop. Sometimes, Sir,
When he hop'd to drink a man into a Surfeit,
That he might gain by his Grave.

Bar. So many thousands?

Lop. Heaven knows what.

Bar. 'Tis strange,
'Tis very strange; but we see by endeavour,

And honest labour——

Lop. Milo, by continuance

Grew from a silly Calf (with your worships reverence)
To carry a Bull, from a penny, to a pound, Sir,
And from a pound, to many: 'tis the progress.

Bar. Ye say true, but he lov'd to feed well also,
And that me-thinks——

Lop. From another mans Trencher, Sir,
And there he found it season'd with small charge:
There he would play the Tyrant, and would devour ye
More than the Graves he made; at home he liv'd
Like a Camelion, suckt th' Air of misery, } Table out, Stan-
And grew fat by the Brewis of an Egg-shell, } dish, Paper, Stools.
Would smell a Cooks-shop, and go home and surfeit.
And be a month in fasting out that Fever.

Bar. These are good Symptoms: do's he lye so sick say ye?

Lop. Oh, very sick.

Bar. And chofen me Executor?

Lop. Only your Worship.

Bar. No hope of his amendment?

Lop. None, that we find.

Bar. He hath no Kinsmen neither?

Lop. 'Truth, very few,

Bar. His mind will be the quieter.

What Doctors has he?

Lop. There's none, Sir, he believes in.

Bar. They are but needles things, in such extremities.

Who draws the good mans Will?

Lop. Marry that do I, Sir,

And to my grief.

Bar. Grief will do little now, Sir,

Draw it to your comfort, Friend, and as I counsel ye,

An honest man, but such men live not always:

Who are about him?

Lop. Many, now he is passing,
That would pretend to his love, yes, and some Gentlemen
That would fain counsel him, and be of his Kindred;
Rich men can want no Heirs, Sir.

Bar. They do ill,

Indeed they do, to trouble him; very ill, Sir.

But we shall take a care.

Enter Diego, in a Bed, Milanes, Arsenio, and Parishioners.

Lop. Will ye come near, Sir?

'Pray ye bring him out; now ye may see in what state:
Give him fresh Air.

Bar. I am sorry, Neighbour Diego,
To find ye in so weak a state.

Die. Ye are welcome,

But I am slecting, Sir.

Bar. Me-thinks he looks well,
His colour fresh, and strong, his eyes are chearful.

Lop. A glimmering before death, 'tis nothing else, Sir,
Do you see how he fumbles with the Sheet? do ye note that?

Di. My learned Sir, 'pray ye sit: I am bold to send for ye,
To take a care of what I leave.

Lop. Do ye hear that?

Ars. Play the Knave finely.

Die. So I will, I warrant ye,
And carefully.

Bar. 'Pray ye do not trouble him,
You see he's weak and has a wandring fancy.

Di. My honest Neighbours, weep not, I must leave ye,
I cannot always bear ye company,

We must drop still, there is no remedy:
'Pray ye Master Curate, will ye write my Testament,

And write it largely it may be remembred,
And be witness to my Legacies, good Gentlemen;

Your Worship I do make my full Executor,

You are a man of wit and understanding:

Give me a cup of Wine to raise my Spirits,
For I speak low: I would before these Neighbours
Have ye to swear, Sir, that you will see it executed,
And what I give let equally be rendred

For my souls health.

Bar. I vow it truly, Neighbours,
Let not that trouble ye, before all these,
Once more I give my Oath.

Die. Then set me higher,
And pray ye come near me all.

Lop. We are ready for ye.

Mil. Now spur the Ass, and get our friend time.

Die. First then,

After I have given my body to the worms,
(For they must be serv'd first, they are seldom cozen'd.)

Lop. Remember your Parish, Neighbour.

Die. You speak truly,

I do remember it, a lewd vile Parish,
And pray it may be mended: To the poor of it,

(Which is to all the Parish) I give nothing,
For nothing, unto nothing, is most natural,
Yet leave as much space, as will build an Hospital,
Their Children may pray for me.

Bar. What do you give to it?

Die. Set down two thousand Duckets.

Bar. 'Tis a good gift,
And will be long remembred.

Die. To your worship,
(Because you must take pains to see all finish'd)
I give two thousand more, it may bethree, Sir,
A poor gratuity for your pains-taking.

Bar. These are large fums.

Lop. Nothing to him that has 'em.

Die. To my old Master Vicar, I give five hundred,
(Five hundred and five hundred are too few, Sir)
But there be more to serve.

Bar. This fellow coins sure.

(Books,

Die. Give me some more drink. Pray ye buy Books, buy
You have a learned head, stuff it with Libraries,
And understand 'em, when ye have done, 'tis Justice.
Run not the Parish mad with Controversies,
Nor preach Abstinence to longing Women,
'Twill burge the bottoms of their Consciences:
I would give the Church new Organs, but I prophesie
The Church-wardens would quickly pipe'em out o'th' Parish,
Two hundred Duckets more to mend the Chancel,
And to paint true Orthographie, as many,
They write Sunt with a C, which is abominable,
'Pray you set that down; to poor Maidens Marriages.

Lop. I that's well thought of, what's your will in that point?
A meritorious thing.

Bar. No end of this Will?

Die. I give per annum two hundred Ells of Lockram,
That there be no strait dealings in their Linnens,
But the Sails cut according to their Burthens.
To all Bell-ringers, I bequeath new Ropes,
And let them use 'em at their own discretions.

Ars. You may remember us.

Die. I do good Gentlemen,

And I bequeath you both good careful Surgions,
A Legacy, you have need of, more than mony,
I know you want good Diets, and good Lotions,
And in your pleasures, good take heed.

Lop. He raves now,
But 'twill be quickly off.

Die. I do bequeath ye

Commodities of Pins, Brown-papers, Pack-threads,
Rost Pork, and Puddings, Ginger-bread, and Jews-trumps,
Of penny Pipes, and mouldy Pepper, take 'em,
Take 'em even where you please and be cozen'd with 'em,
I should bequeath ye Executions also,
But those I'll leave to th' Law.

Lop. Now he grows temperate.

Bar. You will give no more?

Die. I am loth to give more from ye,
Because I know you will have a care to execute.

Only, to pious uses, Sir, a little.

Bar. If he be worth all these, I am made for ever.

Die.

Die. I give to fatal Dames, that spin mens threads out,
And poor distressed Damfels, that are militant
As members of our own Afflictions,
A hundred Crowns to buy warm Tubs to work in,
I give five hundred pounds to buy a Church-yard,
A spacious Church-yard, to lay Thieves and Knaves in,
Rich men and honest men take all the room up.

Lop. Are ye not weary?

Die. Never of well doing.

Bar. These are mad Legacies.

Die. They were got as madly;

My Sheep, and Oxen, and my moveables,
My Plate, and Jewels, and five hundred Acres;
I have no heirs.

Bar. This cannot be, 'tis monstrous.

Die. Three Ships at Sea too.

Bar. You have made me full Executor?

Die. Full, full, and total, would I had more to give ye,
But these may serve an honest mind.

Bar. Ye say true,

A very honest mind, and make it rich too;
Rich, wondrous rich, but where shall I raise these moneys,
About your house? I see no such great promises;
Where shall I find these fums?

Die. Even where you please, Sir,
You are wise and provident, and know business,
Ev'n raise 'em where you shall think good, I am reasonable.

Bar. Think good? will that raise thousands?
What do you make me?

Die. You have sworn to see it done, that's all my comfort.

Bar. Where I please? this is pack'd sure to disgrace me.

Die. Ye are just, and honest, and I know you will do it,
Ev'n where you please, for you know where the wealth is.

Bar. I am abused, betrayed, I am laugh'd at, scorn'd, Baff'd, and boarded, it seems.

Arf. No, no, ye are fooled.

Lop. Most finely fooled, and handsomely, and neatly,
Such cunning Masters must be fool'd sometimes, Sir,
And have their Worships noses wiped, 'tis healthful,
We are but quit: you fool us of our moneys
In every Cause, in every Quiddit wipe us. (men.)

Die. Ha, ha, ha, ha, some more drink, for my heart, Gentle-
This merry Lawyer—— ha, ha, ha, ha, this Scholar——
I think this fit will cure me: this Executor——
I shall laugh out my Lungs.

Bar. This is derision above sufferance, villany
Plotted and set against me.

Die. Faith 'tis Knavery,

In troth I must confess, thou art fool'd indeed, Lawyer.

Mil. Did you think, had this man been rich——

Bar. 'Tis well, Sir.

Mil. He would have chosen such a Wolf, a Canker,
A Maggot-pate, to be his whole Executor?

Lop. A Lawyer, that entangles all mens honesties,
And lives like a Spider in a Cobweb lurking,
And catching at all Flies, that pass his pit-falls?
Puts powder to all States, to make 'em caper?
Would he trust you? Do you deserve?

Die. I find, Gentlemen,
This Cataplasm of a well cozen'd Lawyer
Laid to my stomach, lenifies my Fever,
Methinks I could eat now, and walk a little.

Bar. I am aham'd to feel how flat I am cheated,
How grossly, and maliciously made a May-game,
A damned trick; my Wife, my Wife, some Rascal:
My Credit, and my Wife, some lustful Villain,
Some Bawd, some Rogue.

Arf. Some crafty Fool has found ye:
This 'tis, Sir, to teach ye to be too busy,
To covet all the gains, and all the rumours,
To have a stirring Oare in all mens actions.

Lop. We did this, but to vex your fine officiousness.

Bar. Good yield ye, and good thank ye: I am fooled, Gen-
The Lawyer is an Ass, I do confess it, (tlemen;

A weak dull shallow Ass: good even to your Worships:
Vicar, remember Vicar, Rascal, remember,
Thou notable rich Rascal.

Die. I do remember, Sir,
'Pray ye stay a little, I have ev'n two Legacies
To make your mouth up, Sir.

Bar. Remember Varlets,
Quake and remember, Rogues;
I have brine for your Buttocks. [Exit.

Lop. Oh how he frets, and fumes now like a Dunghil!

Die. His gall contains fine stuff now to make poysons,
Rare damned stuff.

Arf. Let's after him, and still vex him,
And take my Friend off: by this time he has prosper'd,
He cannot lose this dear time: 'tis impossible.

Mil. Well Diego, thou hast done.

Lop. Hast done it daintily.

Mil. And shalt be as well paid, Boy——

Arf. Go, let's crucifie him. [Exeunt.

SCENA VI.

Enter Amaranta, Leandro.

Lean. I have told ye all my story, and how desperately.

Ama. I do believe: let's walk on, time is pretious,
Not to be spent in words, here no more wooing,
The open Air's an enemy to Lovers,
Do as I tell ye.

Lean. I'll do any thing,
I am so over-joyn'd, I'll fly to serve ye.

Ama. Take your joy moderately, as it is ministred;
And as the cause invites: that man's a fool
That at the sight o'th' Bond, dances and leaps,
Then is the true joy, when the money comes.

Lean. You cannot now deny me.

Ama. Nay, you know not,
Women have crotchets, and strange fits.

Lean. You shall not.

Ama. Hold ye to that and swear it confidently,
Then I shall make a scruple to deny ye:
'Pray ye let's step in, and see a friend of mine,
The weather's sharp: we'll stay but half an hour,
We may be mis'd else: a private fine house 'tis, Sir,
And we may find many good welcomes.

Lean. Do Lady,
Do happy Lady.

Ama. All your mind's of doing,
You must be modest.

Lean. I will be any thing. [Exeunt.

SCENA VII.

Enter Bartolus.

Bar. Open the doors, and give me room to chafe in Mine own room, and my liberty: why Maid there,
Open I say, and do not anger me,
I am subject to much fury: when, ye Dish-clout?
When do ye come? asleep ye lazie Hell-hound?
Nothing intended, but your ease, and eating?
No body here? why Wife, why Wife? why Jewel?
No tongue to answer me? pre'thee, good Pupil,
Dispense a little with thy careful study,
And step to th' door, and let me in; nor he neither?
Ha! not at's study? nor asleep? nor no body?
I'll make ye hear: the house of ignorance,
No sound inhabits here: I have a Key yet
That commands all: I fear I am Metamorphiz'd.

Enter Lopez, Arsenio, Milanes, Diego.

Lop. He keeps his fury still, and may do mischief.

Mil. He shall be hang'd first, we'll be itickers there, boys.

Die. The hundred thousand Dreams now, that possess him
Of jealousy, and of revenge, and frailtie;
Of drawing Bills against us, and Petitions.

Lop.

Lop. And casting what his credit shall recover.

Mil. Let him call till his Maw come up, we care not.

You shall be still secured. [A great noise within.]

Die. We'll pay him home then;

Hark what a noise he keeps within!

Lop. Certain

H'as set his Chimneys o' fire, or the Devil roars there.

Die. The Codices o'th' Law are broke loose, Gentlemen.

Arf. He's fighting sure.

Die. Ple tell ye that immediately—— [Exit.]

Mil. Or doing some strange out-rage on himself.

Arf. Hang him, he dares not be so valiant.

Enter Diego.

Die. There's no body at home, and he chafes like a Lyon,
And stinks withal. [Noise still.]

Lop. No body?

Die. Not a Creature,

Nothing within, but he and his Law-tempest,
The Ladles, Dishes, Kettles, how they flie all!
And how the Glasses through the Rooms!

Enter Bartolus.

Arf. My friend sure

Has got her out, and now he has made an end on't.

Lop. See where the Sea comes? how it foams, and bristles?
The great Leviathan o'th' Law, how it tumbles?

Bar. Made every way an Afs? abus'd on all sides?
And from all quarters, people come to laugh at me?
Rise like a Comet, to be wonder'd at?
A horrid Comet, for Boys tongues, and Ballads?
I will run from my wits.

Enter Amaranta, Leandro.

Arf. Do, do, good Lawyer,
And from thy mony too, then thou wilt be quiet.

Mil. Here she comes home: now mark the salutations;
How like an Afs my friend goes?

Arf. She has pull'd his ears down.

Bar. Now, what sweet voyage? to what Garden, Lady?
Or to what Cousins house?

Ama. Is this my welcome?

I cannot go to Church, but thus I am scandal'd,
Use no devotion for my soul, but Gentlemen——

Bar. To Church?

Amar. Yes, and ye keep sweet youths to wait upon me,
Sweet bred-up youths, to be a credit to me.
There's your delight again, pray take him to ye,
He never comes near me more to debase me. (ye?)

Bar. How's this? how's this? good wife, how, has he wrong'd

Ama. I was fain to drive him like a sheep before me,
I blush to think how people fleer'd, and scorn'd me.
Others have handsome men, that know behaviour,
Place, and observance: this silly thing knows nothing,
Cannot tell ten; let every Rascal juggle me,
And still I push'd him on as he had been coming.

Bar. Ha! did ye push him on? is he so stupid?

Ama. When others were attentive to the Priest,
Good devout Gentleman, then fell he fast,
Fast, sound asleep: then first began the Bag-pipes,
The several stops on's nose made a rare musick,
A rare and loud, and those plaid many an Anthem.
Put out of that, he fell straight into dreaming.

Arf. As cunning, as she is sweet; I like this carriage.

Bar. What did he then?

Ama. Why then he talked in his Sleep too,
Nay, Ple divulge your moral vertues (sheeps face)
And talk'd aloud, that every ear was fixt to him:
Did not I suffer (do you think) in this time?
Talk of your hawling Law, of appellations
Of Declarations, and Excommunications:
Warrants, and Executions: and such Devils
That drove all the Gentlemen out o'th' Church, by hurries,
With execrable oaths, they would never come there again.

Thus am I served and man'd.

Lean. I pray ye forgive me,
I must confes I am not fit to wait upon ye:

Alas, I was brought up——

Ama. To be an Assè,
A Lawyers Assè, to carry Books, and Buckrams.

Bar. But what did you at Church?

Lop. At Church, did you ask her?

Do you hear Gentlemen, do you mark that question?
Because you are half an Heretick your self, Sir,
Would ye breed her too? this shall to the Inquisition,
A pious Gentlewoman reproved for praying?
Ple see this filed, and you shall hear further, Sir.

Arf. Ye have an ill heart.

Lop. It shall be found out, Gentlemen,
There be those youths will search it.

Die. You are warm Signiour,
But a Faggot will warm ye better: we are witnesses.

Lop. Enough to hang him, do not doubt.

Mil. Nay certain,
I do believe h'as rather no Religion. (Sir?)

Lop. That must be known too, because she goes to Church,
O monstrum informe ingens!

Die. Let him go on, Sir,
His wealth will build a Nunnery, a fair one,
And this good Lady, when he is hang'd and rotten,
May there be Abbess.

Bar. You are cozen'd, honest Gentlemen,
I do not forbid the use but the form, mark me.

Lop. Form? what do you make of form?

Bar. They will undo me,
Swear, as I oft have done, and so betray me;
I must make fair way, and hereafter, Wife,
You are welcome home, and henceforth take your pleasure,
Go when ye shall think fit, I will not hinder ye,
My eyes are open now, and I see my errour,
My shame, as great as that, but I must hide it.
The whole conveyance now I smell, but Basta,
Another time must serve: you see us friends, now
Heartily friends, and no more chiding, Gentlemen,
I have been too foolish, I confes, no more words,
No more, sweet Wife.

Ama. You know my easie nature.

Bar. Go get ye in: you see she has been angry:
Forbear her sight a while and time will pacify;
And learn to be more bold.

Lean. I would I could,
I will do all I am able.

Bar. Do Leandro,
We will not part, but friends of all hands.

Lop. Well said,
Now ye are reasonable, we can look on ye.

Bar. Ye have jerkt me: but for all that I forgive ye,
Forgive ye heartily, and do invite ye
To morrow to a Breakfast, I make but seldom,
But now we will be merry.

Arf. Now ye are friendly,
Your doggedness and niggardize flung from ye.
And now we will come to ye.

Bar. Give me your hands, all;
You shall be welcome heartily.

Lop. We will be,
For we'll eat hard.

Bar. The harder, the more welcome,
And till the morning farewell; I have business. [Exit.]

Mil. Farewel good bountiful Bartolus, 'tis a brave wench,
A suddain witty thief, and worth all service:
Go we'll all go, and crucifie the Lawyer.

Die. Ple clap four tire of teeth into my mouth more
But I will grind his substance.

Arf. Well Leandro,
Thou hast had a strange Voyage, but I hope
Thou'rid'st now in safe harbour.

Mil. Let's go drink, Friends,

And laugh aloud at all our merry may-games.

Lop. A match, a match, 'twill whet our stomachs better.
[Exeunt.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Violante and Servant.

Ser. M Adam, he's come. [Chair and stools out.]

Viol. 'Tis well, how did he look, (led?)
When he knew from whom you were sent? was he not start-
Or confident? or fearful?

Ser. As appear'd
Like one that knew his fortune at the worst,
And car'd not what could follow.

Viol. 'Tis the better,
Reach me a Chair: so, bring him in, be careful
That none disturb us: I will try his temper,
And if I find him apt for my employments,

Enter Jamie, Servant.

I'll work him to my ends; if not, I shall Find other Engines.

Ser. There's my Lady.

Viol. Leave us.

Jam. You sent for me?

Viol. I did, and do's the favour,
Your present state considered and my power,
Deserve no greater Ceremony?

Jam. Ceremonie?

I use to pay that where I owe a duty,
Not to my Brothers wife: I cannot fawn,
If you expect it from me, you are cozen'd,
And so farewell.

Viol. He bears up still; I like it.
Pray you a word.

Jam. Yes, I will give you hearing
On equal terms, and sit by you as a friend,
But not stand as a Sutor: Now your pleasure?

Viol. You are very bold.

Jam. 'Tis fit: since you are proud,
I was not made to feed that foolish humour,
With flattery and observance.

Viol. Yet, with your favour,
A little form joyn'd with respect to her,
That can add to your wants, or free you from 'em
(Nay raise you to a fate, beyond your hopes)
Might well become your wisdom.

Jam. It would rather
Write me a Fool, should I but only think
That any good to me could flow from you,
Whom for so many years I have found and prov'd
My greatest Enemy: I am still the same,
My wants have not transform'd me: I dare tell you,
To your new cerus'd face, what I have spoken
Freely behind your back, what I think of you,
You are the proudest thing, and have the least
Reason to be so that I ever read of.

In stature you are a Giants: and your Tailor
Takes measure of you with a Jacobs Staff,
Or he can never reach you, this by the way
For your large size: now, in a word or two,
To treat of your Complexion were decorum:
You are so far from fair, I doubt your Mother
Was too familiar with the Moor that serv'd her,
Your Limbs and Features I pass briefly over,
As things not worth description; and come roundly
To your Soul, if you have any; for 'tis doubtful.

Viol. I laugh at this, proceed.

Jam. This Soul I speak of,
Or rather Salt to keep this heap of flesh
From being a walking stench, like a large Inn;

Stands open for the entertainment of
All impious practices: but there's no Corner
An honest thought can take up; and as it were not Sufficient in your self to comprehend
All wicked plots, you have taught the Fool, my Brother,
By your contagion, almost to put off
The nature of the man, and turn'd him Devil,
Because he should be like you, and I hope
Will march to Hell together: I have spoken,
And if the Limning you in your true Colours
Can make the Painter gracious, I stand ready
For my reward, or if my words distaste you,
I weigh it not, for though your Grooms were ready
To cut my Throat for't, be assur'd I cannot Use other Language.

Viol. You think you have said now,
Like a brave fellow: in this Womans War
You ever have been train'd: spoke big, but suffer'd
Like a tame Ass; and when most spur'd and gall'd
Were never Master of the Spleen or Spirit,
That could raise up the anger of a man,
And force it into action.

Jam. Yes, vile Creature,
Wer't thou a subject worthy of my Sword,
Or that thy death, this moment, could call home
My banish'd hopes, thou now wer't dead; dead, woman;
But being as thou art, it is sufficient
I scorn thee, and contemn thee.

Viol. This shews nobly,
I must confess it: I am taken with it,
For had you kneel'd and whin'd and shew'd a base
And low dejected mind, I had despis'd you.
This bravery (in your adverse fortune) conquers
And do's command me, and upon the suddain
I feel a kind of pity, growing in me,
For your misfortunes, pity some say's the Parent,
Of future love, and I repent my part
So far in what you have suffered, that I could
(But you are cold) do something to repair
What your base Brother (such Jamie I think him)
Hath brought to ruine.

Jam. Ha?

Viol. Be not amaz'd,
Our injuries are equal in his Bastard,
You are familiar with what I groan for,
And though the name of Husband holds a eye
Beyond a Brother, I, a poor weak Woman,
Am sensible, and tender of a wrong,
And to revenge it would break through all lets,
That durst oppose me.

Jam. Is it possible?

Viol. By this kiss: start not: thus much, as a stranger
You may take from me; but, if you were pleas'd,
I should select you as a bosom friend,
I would print 'em thus, and thus.

Jam. Keep off.

Viol. Come near;
Near into the Cabinet of my Counsels:
Simplicity and patience dwell with Fools,
And let them bear those burthens, which wise men
Boldly shake off; be mine and joyn with me,
And when that I have rais'd you to a fortune,
(Do not deny your self the happy means)
You'll look on me with more judicious eyes
And swear I am most fair.

Jam. What would this Woman?
The purpose of these words? speak not in riddles;
And when I understand, what you would counsel,
My answer shall be suddain.

Viol. Thus then Jamie,
The objects of our fury are the same,
For young Ascanio, whom you Snake-like hug'd
(Frozen with wants to death) in your warm bosom,
Lives to supplant you in your certain hopes,

And kills in me all comfort.

Jam. Now 'tis plain,
I apprehend you: and were he remov'd ———

Viol. You, once again, were the undoubted heir.

Jam. 'Tis not to be deny'd; I was ice before,
But now ye have fir'd me. ———

Viol. Ple add fuel to it,
And by a nearer cut, do you but steer
As I direct you, wee'l bring our Bark into
The Port of happiness.

Jam. How?

Viol. By Henriques death:
But you'l say he's your Brother; in great fortunes
(Which are epitomes of States and Kingdoms)
The politick brook no Rivals.

Jam. Excellent!

For sure I think out of a scrupulous fear,
To feed in expectation, when I may (Dispensing but a little with my conscience)
Come into full possession, would not argue
One that desir'd to thrive.

Viol. Now you speak like
A man that knows the World.

Jam. I needs must learn
That have so good a Tutrefs: and what think you,
(Don Henrique and Ascanio cut off)
That none may live, that shall desire to trace us
In our black paths, if that Octavio
His foster Father, and the sad Facinta,
(Faith pitie her, and free her from her Sorrows)
Should fall companions with 'em? When we are red
With murder, let us often bath in blood,
The colour will be scarlet.

Viol. And that's glorious,
And will protect the fact.

Jam. Suppose this done:
(If undiscovered) we may get for money,
(As that you know buyes any thing in Rome)
A dispensation.

Viol. And be married?

Jam. True.

Or if it be known, trufs up our Gold and Jewels,
And fly to some free State, and there with scorn——

Viol. Laugh at the laws of Spain.

'Twere admirable.

Jam. We shall beget rare children. I am rapt with
The meer imagination. ———

Viol. Shall it be done?

Jam. Shall? 'tis too tedious: furnish me with means
To hire the instruments, and to your self
Say it is done already: I will shew you,
E're the Sun set, how much you have wrought upon me,
Your province is only to use some means,
To send my Brother to the Grove that's neighbour
To the west Port of th' City; leave the rest
To my own practice; I have talk'd too long,
But now will doe: this kifs, with my Confession,
To work a fell revenge: a man's a fool,
If not instructed in a Womans School. [Exeunt.

SCENA II.

Enter Bartolus, Algazeirs, and a Paratour.
The Table set out and stools.

Bar. You are well enough disguiz'd, furnish the Table,
Make no shew what ye are, till I discover:
Not a foul knows ye here: be quick and diligent,
These youths I have invited to a Breakfast,
But what the Sawce will be, I am of opinion
I shall take off the edges of their Appetites,
And greafe their gums for eating heartily
This month or two, they have play'd their prizes with me,
And with their several flurts they have lighted dangerously,
But sure I shall be quit: I hear 'em coming.

Go off and wait the bringing in your service,
And do it handsomely: you know where to have it.

Enter Milanes, Arsenio, Lopez, Diego.

Welcom i' Faith.

Arf. That's well said, honest Lawyer.

Lop. Said like a neighbour.

Bar. Welcom all: all over,
And let's be merry.

Mil. To that end we came Sir,
An hour of freedome's worth an age of juglings.

Die. I am come too Sir, to specifie my Stomach
A poor retainer to your worships bountie.

Bar. And thou shalt have it fill'd my merry Diego,
My liberal, and my bonny bounteous Diego,
Even fill'd till it groan again.

Die. Let it have fair play,
And if it founder then. ———

Bar. Ple tell ye neighbours,
Though I were angry yesterday with ye all,
And very angry, for methought ye bob'd me.

Lop. No, no, by no means.

Bar. No, when I considered
It was a jest, and carried off so quaintly,
It made me merry: very merry, Gentlemen,
I do confess I could not sleep to think on't,
The mirth so tickled me, I could not slumber.

Lop. Good mirth do's work so: honest mirth,
Now, should we have meant in earnest ——

Bar. You say true neighbour.

Lop. It might have bred such a distast and fownness,
Such fond imaginations in your Brains, Sir,
For things thrust home in earnest. ——

Bar. Very certain,

But I know ye all for merry wagg, and ere long
You shall know me too in another fashion,
Though y'are pamper'd, ye shall bear part o'th' burthen.

Enter Amaranta, and Leandro.

Come wife; Come bid 'em welcom; Come my Jewel:
And Pupil, you shall come too; ne're hang backward,
Come, come the woman's pleas'd, her anger's over,
Come, be not bashfull.

Am. What do's he prepare here?

Sure there's no meat i'th' house, at least not drest,
Do's he mean to mock 'em? or some new bred crotchet
Come o're his brains; I do not like his kindness:
But silence best becomes me: if he mean foul play,
Sure they are enough to right themselves, and let 'em,
I'll sit by, so they beat him not to powder, (bour,
Bar. Bring in the meat there, ha? Sit down dear neigh-
A little meat needs little Complement,
Sit down I say.

Am. What do you mean by this Sir?

Bar. Convey away their weapons handsomely.

Am. You know there's none i'th' house to answer ye,
But the poor Girle; you know there's no meat neither.

Bar. Peace and be quiet; I shall make you smoak else,
There's men and meat enough, set it down formally.

Enter Algazeirs, with dishes.

Am. I fear some lewd trick, yet I dare not speak on't.

Bar. I have no dainties for ye Gentlemen,
Nor loads of meat, to make the room smell of 'em.
Only a dish to every man I have dedicated,
And if I have pleas'd his appetite.

Lop. O, a Capon,

A Bird of grace, and be thy will, I honour it.

Die. For me some fortic pound of lovely Beef,
Plac'd in a mediterranean sea of Brewis.

Bar. Fall to, fall to, that we may drink and laugh after,
Wait diligently knaves.

Mil. What rare bit's this?
An execution! blefs me!

Bar. Nay take it to ye,
There's no avoiding it, 'tis somewhat tough Sir,
But a good stomach will endure it easily,
The sum is but a thousand duckets Sir.

Asf. A Capias from my Surgeon, and my Silk-man!

Bar. Your careful makers, but they have mar'd your diet.
Stir not, your Swords are gone: there's no avoiding me,
And these are Algazeirs, do you hear that passing bell?

Lop. A strong Citation, blefs me!

Bar. Out with your Beads, Curate,
The Devil's in your dish: bell, book, and Candle.

Lop. A warrant to appear before the Judges!
I must needs rise, and turn to th' wall.

Bar. Ye need not,
Your fear I hope will make ye find your Breeches.

All. We are betray'd.

Bar. Invited do not wrong me,
Fair to, good Guests, you have diligent men about ye,
Ye shall want nothing that may persecute ye,
These will not see ye start; Have I now found ye?
Have I requited ye? You fool'd the Lawyer,
And thought it meritorious to abuse him,
A thick ram-headed knave: you rid, you spur'd him,
And glorified your wits, the more ye wronged him;
Within this hour ye shall have all your Creditours,
A second dish of new debts, come upon ye,
And new invitations to the whip, Don Diego,
And Excommunications for the learned Curate,
A Masque of all your furies shall dance to ye.

Asf. You dare not use us thus?

Bar. You shall be bob'd, Gentlemen,
Stir, and as I have a life, ye goe to prison,
To prison, without pitie instantly,
Before ye speak another word to prison.
I have a better Guard without, that waits;
Do you see this man, Don Curate? 'tis a Paratour
That comes to tell ye a delightfull story
Of an old whore ye have, and then to teach ye
What is the penaltie; Laugh at me now Sir,
What Legacie would ye bequeath me now,
(And pay it on the nail?) to fly my fury?

Lop. O gentle Sir.

Bar. Do'st thou hope I will be gentle,
Thou foolish unconsiderate Curate?

Lop. Let me goe Sir.

Bar. I'll see thee hang first.

Lop. And as I am a true Vicar,
Hark in your ear, hark softly ———

Bar. No, no bribery.

I'll have my swindge upon thee; Sirra? Rascal?
You Lenten Chaps, you that lay sick, and mockt me,
Mockt me abominably, abused me lewdly,
I'll make thee sick at heart, before I leave thee,
And groan, and dye indeed, and be worth nothing,
Not worth a blessing, nor a Bell to knell for thee,
A sheet to cover thee, but that thou stealest,
Stealest from the Merchant, and the Ring he was buried with Stealest from his Grave, do you smell me now?

Die. Have mercy on me!

Bar. No Psalm of mercy shall hold me from hanging thee.
How do ye like your Breakfast? 'tis but short, Gentlemen,
But sweet and healthfull; Your punishment, and yours, Sir,
For some near reasons that concern my Credit,
I will take to my self.

Am. Doe Sir, and spare not:

I have been too good a wife, and too obedient,
But since ye dare provoke me to be foolish ———

Lea. She has, yes, and too worthie of your usage,
Before the world I justify her goodness,
And turn that man, that dares but taint her virtues,
To my Swords point; that lying man, that base man,
Turn him, but face to face, that I may know him.

Bar. What have I here?

Lea. A Gentleman, a free man,

One that made trial of this Ladies confrancie,
And found it strong as fate; leave off your fooling,
For if you follow this course, you will be Chronicled

Enter Jamy and Assistant.

For a devil, whilst a Saint she is mentioned,
You know my name indeed; I am now no Lawyer.

Die. Some comfort now, I hope, or else would I were hang-
And yet the Judge, he makes me sweat. (cd up.)

Bar. What news now?

Jam. I will justify upon my life and credit
What you have heard, for truth, and will make proof of.

Assist. I will be ready at the appointed hour there,
And so I leave ye.

Bar. Stay I beseech your worship,
And do but hear me.

Jam. Good Sir, intend this business,
And let this bawling fool, no more words lawyer,
And no more angers, for I guess your reasons,
This Gentleman, Ple justify in all places,
And that fair Ladies worth; let who dare cross it.
The Plot was cast by me, to make thee jealous,
But not to wrong your wife, she is fair and vertuous.

Die. Take us to mercy too, we beseech your honour,
We shall be justified the way of all flesh else.

Jam. No more talk, nor no more dissention lawyer,
I know your anger, 'tis a vain and slight one,
For if you doe, I'll lay your whole life open,
A life that all the world shall — I'll bring witness,
And rip before a Judge the ulcerous villainies,
You know I know ye, and I can bring witness.

Bar. Nay good Sir, noble Sir.

Jam. Be at peace then presently,
Immediatley take honest and fair truce (tleman;
With your good wife, and shake hands with that Gen-
H's honour'd ye too much, and doe it cheerfully.

Lop. Take us along, for Heaven sake too.

Bar. I am friends,
There is no remedie, I must put up all,
And like my neighbours rub it out byth' shoulders,
And perfect friends; Leandro now I thank ye,
And there's my hand, I have no more grudge to ye,
But I am too mean henceforward for your Companie.

Lea. I shall not trouble ye.

Asf. We will be friends too.

Mil. Nay Lawyer, you shall not fright us farther,
For all your devils we will bolt.

Bar. I grant ye,

The Gentleman's your Bail, and thank his coming,
Did not he know me too well, you should smart for't;
Goe all in peace, but when ye fool next, Gentlemen,
Come not to me to Breakfast.

Die. I'll be bak'd first.

Bar. And pray ye remember, when ye are bold and merry,
The Lawyers Banquet, and the Sawce he gave ye.

Jam. Come: goe along; I have employment for ye,
Employment for your lewd brains too, to cool ye,
For all, for every one.

All. We are all your Servants.

Die. All, all for any thing, from this day forward
I'll hate all Breakfasts, and depend on dinners:

Jam. I am glad you come off fair.

Lea. The fair has blest me. [Exit.

SCENA III.

Enter Octavia, Jacinta, Arsenio.

Oct. This is the place, but why we are appointed
By Don Jamie to stay here, is a depth
I cannot found.

Asf. Believ't he is too noble
To purpose any thing but for our good.
Had I assurance of a thousand lives,
And with them perpetuitie of pleasure,

And should lose all, if he prov'd only false,
Yet I durst run the hazard.

Jac. 'Tis our comfort,
We cannot be more wretched than we are,
And death concludes all misery.

Of. Undiscovered

Enter Henrique, Jamie.

We must attend him.

Asc. Our stay is not long.
With him Don Henrique?

Jac. Now I fear;
Be silent.

Hen. Why dost thou follow me?

Jam. To save your life,
A plot is laid for't, all my wrongs forgot,
I have a Brothers Love.

Hen. But thy false self
I fear no enemy.

Jam. You have no friend,
But what breathes in me: If you move a step
Beyond this ground you tread on, you are lost.

Hen. 'Tis by thy practice then: I am sent hither
To meet her, that prefers my life and safety
Before her own.

Jam. That you should be abus'd thus
With weak credulity! She for whose sake
You have forgot we had one noble Father,
Or that one Mother bare us, for whose love
You brake a contract to which heaven was witness,
To satisfy whose pride and wilful humour
You have expos'd a sweet and hopeful Son
To all the miseries that want can bring him,
And such a Son, though you are most obdurate,
To give whom entertainment Savages
Would quit their Caves themselves, to keep him from Bleak cold and hunger: This dissembling woman,
This Idol, whom you worship, all your love
And service trod under her feet, designs you
To fill a grave, or dead to lye a prey
For Wolves and Vulturs.

Hen. 'Tis false; I defy thee,
And stand upon my Guard.

Enter Leandro, Milanes, Arsenio, Bart. Lopez, Diego, Octavio, Jacinta, Ascanio, and Servants.

Jam. Alas, 'tis weak:
Come on, since you will teach me to be cruel,
By having no faith in me, take your fortune,
Bring the rest forth, and bind them fast.

Oct. My Lord.

Asc. In what have we offended?

Jam. I am deaf,
And following my will, I do not stand
Accountable to reason: See her Ring
(The first pledge of your love, and service to her)
Deliver'd as a Warrant for your death:
These Bags of gold you gave up to her trust,
(The use of which you did deny your self)
Bestow'd on me, and with a prodigal hand,
Whom she pick'd forth to be the Architect
Of her most bloody building; and to see
These Instruments, to bring Materials
To raise it up, she had me spare no cost,
And (as a surplusage) offer'd her self
To be at my devotion.

Hen. O accurs'd!

Jam. But be incredulous still; think this my plot;
Fashion excuses to your self, and swear
That she is innocent, that she doats on ye;
Believe this, as a fearful Dream, and that
You lie not at my mercy, which in this
I will shew only: She her self shall give
The dreadful Sentence, to remove all scruple

Who 'tis that sends you to the other world.

Enter Violante.

Appears my Violante? speak (my dearest)
Do's not the object please you?

Viol. More than if
All treasure that's above the earth, with that,
That lyes conceal'd in both the Indian Mines,
Were laid down at my feet: O bold Jamy,
Thou only canst deserve me.

Jam. I am forward,
And (as you easily may perceive,) I sleep not
On your commands.

Enter Assistant, and Officers.

Viol. But yet they live: I look'd
To find them dead.

Jam. That was deferr'd, that you
Might triumph in their misery, and have the power
To say they are not.

Viol. 'Twas well thought upon:
This kiss, and all the pleasures of my Bed
This night, shall thank thee.

Hen. Monster!

Viol. You Sir, that
Would have me Mother Bastards, being unable
To honour me with one Child of mine own,
That underneath my roof, kept your cast-Strumpet,
And out of my Revenues would maintain
Her riotous issue: now you find what 'tis
To tempt a woman: with as little feeling
As I turn off a slave, that is unfit
To do me service; or a horse, or dog
That have out-liv'd their use, I shake thee off,
To make thy peace with heaven.

Hen. I do deserve this,
And never truly felt before, what sorrow
Attends on wilful dotage.

Viol. For you, Mistress,
That had the pleasure of his youth before me,
And triumph'd in the fruit that you had by him,
But that I think, to have the Bastard strangled
Before thy face, and thou with speed to follow
The way he leads thee, is sufficient torture,
I would cut off thy nose, put out thine eyes,
And set my foot on these bewitching lips,
That had the start of mine: but as thou art,
Goe to the grave unpitied.

Assist. Who would believe?
Such rage could be in woman?

Viol. For this fellow,
He is not worth my knowledge.

Jam. Let him live then,
Since you esteem him innocent.

Viol. No Jamy,
He shall make up the mefs: now strike together,
And let them fall so.

Assist. Unheard of cruelty!
I can endure no longer: seize on her.

Viol. Am I betray'd?
Is this thy faith, Jamy?

Jam. Could your desires
Challenge performance of a deed so horrid?
Or, though that you had sold your self to hell,
I should make up the bargain? Live (dear Brother)
Live long, and happy: I forgive you freely;
To have done you this service, is to me
A fair Inheritance: and how e're harsh language
(Call'd on by your rough usage) pass'd my lips,
In my heart I ever lov'd you: all my labours
Were but to shew, how much your love was cozen'd,
When it beheld it self in this false Glass,
That did abuse you; and I am so far
From envying young Ascanio his good fortune,

That

That if your State were mine, I would adopt him,
These are the Murtherers my noble friends,
Which (to make trial of her bloody purpose)
I won, to come disguis'd thus.

Hen. I am too full
Of grief, and shame to speak: but what I'll do,
Shall to the world proclaim my penitence;
And howsoever I have liv'd, I'll die
A much chang'd man.

Jam. Were it but possible
You could make satisfaction to this woman,
Our joys were perfect.

Hen. That's my only comfort,
That it is in my power: I ne'er was married
To this bad woman, though I doted on her,
But daily did defer it, still expecting
When grief would kill Jacintha.

Assist. All is come out,
And finds a fair success: take her Don Henrique,
And once again embrace your Son.

Hen. Most gladly.

Assist. Your Brother hath deserv'd all.

Hen. And shall share
The moiety of my State.

Assist. I have heard, advocate,

What an ill Instrument you have been to him,
From this time strengthen him with honest counsels;
As you'll deserve my pardon.

Bar. I'll change my Copy:
But I am punish'd, for I fear I have had
A smart blow, though unseen.

Assist. Curate, and Sexton,
I have heard of you too, let me hear no more,
And what's past, is forgotten; For this woman,
Though her intent were bloody, yet our Law
Calls it not death: yet that her punishment
May deter others from such bad attempts,
The dowry she brought with her, shall be employ'd
To build a Nunnery, where she shall spend
The remnant of her life.

Viol. Since I have miss'd my ends,
I scorn what can fall on me.

Assist. The strict discipline
Of the Church, will teach you better thoughts. And Sig-
You that are Batchelours, if you ever marry, (niors,
In Barolus you may behold the issue
Of Covetousness and Jealousie; and of dotage,
And falsehood in Don Henrique: keep a mean then;

*For be assur'd, that weak man meets all ill,
That gives himself up to a womans will.*

[Exeunt.]

Prologue.

TO tell ye (Gentlemen,) we have a Play,
A new one too, and that 'tis launch'd to day,
The Name ye know, that's nothing to my Story;
To tell ye, 'tis familiar, void of Glory,
Of State, of Bitterness: of wit you'll say,
For that is now held wit, that tends that way,
Which we avoid: To tell ye too 'tis merry,
And meant to make ye pleasant, and not weary:
The Stream that guides ye, easie to attend:
To tell ye that 'tis good, is to no end,
If you believe not. Nay, to goe thus far,
To swear it, if you swear against, is war.
To assure you any thing, unless you see,
And so conceive, is vanity in me;
Therefore I leave it to it self, and pray
Like a good Bark, it may work out to day,

And stem all doubts; 'twas built for such a proof;
And we hope highly: if she lye aloof
For her own wantage, to give wind at will;
Why let her work, only be you but still,
And sweet opinion'd, and we are bound to say,
You are worthy Judges, and you crown the Play.

Epilogue.

THE Play is done, yet our Suit never ends,
Still when you part, you would still part our friends;
Our noblest friends; if ought have faln amiss,
O let it be sufficient, that it is,
And you have pardon'd it. In Buildings great
All the whole Body cannot be so neat,
But something may be mended; Those are fair,
And worthy love, that may destroy, but spare.

Persons Represented in the Play.

Valentine, a Gallant that will not be perswaded to keep his Estate.

Francisco, his younger Brother.

Master Lovegood their Uncle.

A Merchant, Friend to Master Lovegood.

Fountain, } companions of Valentine, and Sutors to Bellamore, } the Widow.
Hairbrain }

Lance, a Falkner, and an ancient servant to Valentines Father.

Shorthose, the Clown, and servant to the Widow.
Roger, Ralph, and Humphrey, three servants to the Widow.

Three Servants.

Muscians.

Lady Hartwel, a Widow.

Isabel, her Sister.

Luce, a waiting Gentlewoman to the Widow.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Uncle and Merchant.

Mer. When saw you Valentine?

When saw you Valentine?
Uncle. Not since the Horse-race, he's taken up with those that woo the Widow.

Mer. How can he live by snatches from such people? he bore a worthy mind,

Uncle. Alas, he's sunk, his means are gone, he wants, and which is worse, Takes a delight in doing so.

Mer. That's strange.

Unc. Runs Lunatick, if you but talk of states, he cannot be brought (now he has spent his own) to think there's inheritance, or means, but all a common riches, all men bound to be his Bailiffs.

Mer. This is something dangerous.

Uncle. No Gentleman that has estate to use it in keeping house, or followers, for those wayes he cries against, for Eating sins, dull Surfeits, cramming of Serving-men, mustering of Beggars, maintaining Hospitals for Kites, and Curs, grounding their fat faiths upon old Country proverbs, God bless the Founders; these he would have ventured into more manly uses, Wit, and carriage, and never thinks of state, or means, the ground-works: holding it monstrous, men should feed their bodies, and starve their understandings.

Mer. That's most certain.

Uncle. Yes, if he could stay there.

Mer. Why let him marry, and that way rise again.

Uncle. It's most impossible, he will not look with any handsomeness upon a Woman.

Mer. Is he so strange to Women?

Uncle. I know not what it is, a foolish glory he has got, I know not where, to balk those benefits, and yet he will converse and flatter 'em, make 'em, or fair, or foul, rugged, or smooth, as his impression serves, for he affirms, they are only lumps, and undigested pieces, lickt over to a form by our affections, and then they show. The Lovers let 'em pass.

Enter Fountain, Bellamore, Hairbrain.

Mer. He might be one, he carries as much promise; they are wondrous merry.

Uncle. O their hopes are high, Sir.

Fount. Is Valentine come to Town?

Bella. Last night, I heard.

Fount. We miss him monstrously in our directions, for this Widow is as stately, and as crafty, and stands I warrant you—

Hair. Let her stand sure, she falls before us else, come let's go seek Valentine.

Mer. This Widow seems a Gallant.

Uncle. A goodly Woman, and to her handsomeness she bears her state, reserved, and great Fortune has made her Mistress of a full means, and well she knows to use it.

Mer.

Mar. I would Valentine had her.

Uncle. There's no hope of that, Sir.

Mer. O' that condition, he had his Mortgage in again.

Uncle. I would he had.

Mer. Seek means, and see what I'll do, however let the Money be paid in, I never sought a Gentlemans undoing, nor eat the bread of other mens vexations, you told me of another Brother.

Uncle. Yes Sir, more miserable than he, for he has eat him, and drunk him up, a handsome Gentleman, and fine Scholar.

Enter three Tenants.

Mer. What are these?

Unc. The Tenants, they'll do what they can.

Mer. It is well prepared, be earnest, honest friends, and loud upon him, he is deaf to his own good.

Lance. We mean to tell him part of our minds an't please you.

Mer. Do, and do it home, and in what my care may help, or my persuasions when we meet next.

Unc. Do but persuade him fairly; and for your money, mine, and these mens thanks too, and what we can be able.

Mer. Y'are most honest, you shall find me no less, and so I leave you, prosper your business my friends. [Ex. Mer.]

Unc. Pray Heaven it may, Sir.

Lance. Nay if he will be mad, I'll be mad with him, and tell him that I'll not spare him, his Father kept good Meat, good Drink, good Fellows, good Hawks, good Hounds, and bid his Neighbours welcome; kept him too, and supplied his prodigality, yet kept his state still; must we turn Tenants now, after we have lived under the race of Gentry, and maintained good Yeomantry, to some of the City, to a great shoulder of Mutton and a Custard, and have our state turned into Cabbage Gardens, must it be so?

Unc. You must be milder to him.

Lance. That's as he makes his game.

Unc. Intreat him lovingly, and make him feel.

Lance. I'll pinch him to the bones else.

[Valen. Within.] And tell the Gentleman, I'll be with him presently, say I want money too, I must not fail boy.

Lance. You'll want Cloaths, I hope.

Enter Valentine.

Val. Bid the young Courtier repair to me anon, I'll read to him.

Unc. He comes, be diligent, but not too rugged, start him, but affright him not.

Val. Phew, are you there?

Unc. We come to see you Nephew, be not angry.

Val. Why do you dog me thus, with these strange people? why, all the world shall never make me rich more, nor master of these troubles.

Tenants. We beseech you for our poor Childrens sake.

Val. Who bid you get 'em? have you not threshing work enough, but Children must be bang'd out o'th' sheaf too? other men with all their delicates, and healthful diets, can get but wind eggs: you with a clove of Garlick, a piece of Cheefe would break a Saw, and sowre Milk, can mount like Stallions, and I must maintain these tumblers.

Lance. You ought to maintain us, we have maintained you, and when you slept provided for you; who bought the Silk you wear? I think our labours; reckon, you'll find it so: who found your Horses perpetual pots of Ale, maintain'd your Taverns, and who extol'd you in the Half-crown-boxes, where you might sit and muster all the Beauties? we had no hand in these; no, we are all puppies? Your Tenants base vexations.

Val. Very well, Sir.

Lance. Had you Land, Sir, and honest men to serve your purposes, honest and faithful, and will you run away from 'em, betray your self, and your poor Tribe to misery; mortgage all us, like old Cloaks; where will you hunt next? you had a thousand Acres, fair and open: The Kings-Bench is enclosed, there's no good riding, the Counter is full of thorns and brakes, take heed Sir, and boggs, you'll quickly find what broth they're made of.

Val. Y'are short and pithy.

Lance. They say y'are a fine Gentleman, and of excellent judgement, they report you have a wit; keep your self out o'th' Rain, and take your Cloak with you, which by interpretation is your State, Sir, or I shall think your fame belied you, you have money, and may have means.

Val. I pretnee leave prating, does my good lye within thy brain to further, or my undoing in thy pity? go, go, get you home; there whistle to your Horses, and let them edifie; away, sow Hemp to hang your selves withal: what am I to you, or you to me; am I your Landlord, puppies?

Unc. This is uncivil.

Val. More unmerciful you; to vex me with these Bacon Broth and Puddings; they are the walking shapes of all my sorrows.

3 Tenants. Your Fathers Worship would have used us better.

Val. My Fathers Worship was a Fool.

Lance. Hey, hey boys, old Valentine i'faith, the old boy still.

Unc. Fie Cousin.

Val. I mean befotted to his state, he had never left me the misery of so much means else, which till I sold, was a meer meagrim to me: If you will talk, turn out these Tenants, they are as killing to my nature Uncle, as water to a Fever.

Lance. We will go, but it is like Rams, to come again the stronger, and you shall keep your state.

Val. Thou lyeest, I will not.

Lance. Sweet Sir, thou lyeest, thou shalt, and so good morrow. [Exeunt Tenants.]

Val. This was my man, and of a noble breeding: now to your business Uncle.

Unc. To your state then.

Val. 'Tis gone, and I am glad on't, name it no more, 'tis that I pray against, and Heaven has heard me, I tell you, Sir, I am more fearful of it, I mean, of thinking of more lands, or livings, than sickly men are travelling o' Sundays, for being quell'd with Carriers; out upon't, caveat emptor, let the fool out-sweat it, that thinks he has got a catch on't.

Unc. This is madness to be a wilful begger.

Val. I am mad then, and so I mean to be, will that content you? How bravely now I live, how jocund, how near the first inheritance, without fears, how free from title-troubles!

Unc. And from means too.

Val. Means? why all good men's my means; my wit's my Plow, the Town's my stock, Tavern's my standing-house, and all the world knows there's no want; all Gentlemen that love Society, love me; all Purfes that wit and pleasure opens, are my Tenants; every mans Cloaths fit me, the next fair lodging is but my next remove, and when I please to be more eminent, and take the Air, a piece is levied, and a Coach prepared, and I go I care not whitlier, what need state here?

Unc. But say these means were honest, will they last, Sir?

Val. Far longer than your jerkin, and wear fairer, should I take ought of you, 'tis true, I beg'd now, or which is worse than that, I stole a kindness, and which is worst of all, I lost my way in't; your mind's enclosed, nothing lies open nobly, your very thoughts are Hinds that work on nothing but daily sweat and trouble: were my way so full of dirt as this, 'tis true I'd shift it; are my acquaintance Grassers? but Sir, know, no man that I am allied to, in my living, but makes it equal, whether his own use, or my necessity pull first, nor is this forc'd, but the meer quality and poisure of goodness, and do you think I venture nothing equal?

Unc. You pose me Cousin.

Val. What's my knowledge Uncle, is't not worth mony? what's my understanding, travel, reading, wit, all these digested, digested, my daily making men, some to speak, that too much stegm had frozen up, some that spoke too much, to hold their peace, and put their tongues to pensions, some to wear their cloaths, and some to keep 'em, these are nothing Uncle; besides these wayes, to teach the way of nature, a manly love, community to all that are deservers, not examining how much, or what's done for them, 'tis wicked, and such a one like you, chews his thoughts doule, making 'em only food for his repentance.

Enter two Servants.

1 Ser. This cloak and hat Sir, and my Masters love.

Val. Commend's to thy Master, and take that, and leave 'em at my lodging.

1 Ser. I shall do it Sir.

Val. I do not think of these things.

2 Ser. Please you Sir, I have gold here for you.

Val. Give it me, drink that and commend me to thy Master; look you Uncle, do I beg these?

Unc. No sure, 'tis your worth, Sir.

Val. 'Tis like enough, but pray satisfie me, are not these ways as honest as persecuting the starved inheritance, with musty Corn, the very rats were fain to run away from, or selling rotten wood by the pound, like spices, which Gentlemen do after burn by th' ounces? do not I know your way of feeding beasts with grains, and windy stuff, to blow up Butchers? your racking Pastures, that have eaten up as many singing Shepherds, and their issues, as Andeluzia breeds? these are authentique, I tell you Sir, I would not change ways with you, unless it were to sell your state that hour, and if it were possible to spend it then too, for all your Beans in Rumnillo, now you know me.

Unc. I would you knew your self, but since you are grown such a strange enemy to all that fits you, give me leave to make your Brothers fortune.

Val. How?

Unc. From your mortgage, which yet you may recover, I'll find the means.

Val. Pray save your labour Sir, my Brother and my self will run one fortune, and I think what I hold a meer vexation, cannot be safe for him, I love him better, he has wit at will, the world has means, he shall live without this trick of state, we are heirs both, and all the world before us.

Unc. My last offer, and then I am gone.

Val. What is't, and then I'll answer.

Unc. What think you of a wife yet to restore you, and tell me seriously without these trifles.

Val. And you can find one, that can please my fancy, you shall not find me stubborn.

Unc. Speak your Woman.

Val. On without eyes, that is, self commendations, for when they find they are handsom, they are unwholsome; one without ears, not giving time to flatterers, for she that hears her self commended, wavers, and points men out a way to make 'em wicked; one without substance of her self; that woman without the pleasure of her life, that's wanton; though she be young, forgetting it, though fair, making her glass the eyes of honest men, not her own admiration, all her ends obedience, all her hours new blessings, if there may be such a woman.

Unc. Yes there may be.

Val. And without state too.

Unc. You are disposed to trifle, well, fare you well Sir, when you want me next, you'll seek me out a better sence.

Val. Farewell Uncle, and as you love your estate, let not me hear on't. [Exit.

Unc. It shall not trouble you, I'll watch him still, And when his friends fall off then bend his will. [Exit.

Enter Isabella, and Luce.

Luce. I know the cause of all this sadness now, your sister I asingroft all the brave Lovers.

Isab. She has wherewithall, much good may't do her, pre-thee speak softly, we are open to mens ears.

Luce. Fear not, we are safe, we may see all that pass, hear all, and make our selves merry with their language, and yet stand undiscovered, be not melancholy, you are as fair as she.

Isab. Who I? I thank you, I am as haste ordain'd me, a thing slubber'd, my sister is a goodly portly Lady, a woman of a presence, she spreads fattens, as the Kings ships do canvas every where, she may spare me her misen, and her bonnets, strike her main Petticoat, and yet outfail me, I am a Carvel to her.

Luce. But a tight one.

Isab. She is excellent, well built too.

Luce. And yet she's old.

Isab. She never saw above one voyage. Luce, and credit me after another, her Hull will serve again, a right good Merchant: she plaies, and sings too, dances and discourfes, comes very near Essays, a pretty Poet, begins to piddle with Philosophic, a subtil Chymick Wench, and can extract the Spirit of mens Estates, she has the light before her, and cannot mis her choice for me, 'tis reason I wait my mean fortune.

Luce. You are so bashfull.

Isab. It is not at first word up and ride, thou art cozen'd, that would shew mad i' faith: besides, we lose the main part of our politick government: if we become provokers, then we are fair, and fit for mens imbraces, when like towns, they lie before us ages, yet not carried, hold out their strongest batteries, then compound too without the loss of honour, and march off with our fair wedding, Colours flying. Who are these?

Enter Franc. and Lance.

Luce. I know not, nor I care not.

Isab. Prethee peace then, a well built Gentleman.

Luce. But poorly thatcht.

Lance. Has he devour'd you too?

Fran. H'as gulp'd me down Lance.

Lance. Left you no means to study?

Fran. Not a farthing: dispatcht my poor annuity I thank him, here's all the hope I have left, one bare ten shillings.

Lan. You are fit for great mens services.

Fran. I am fit, but who'll take me thus? mens miseries are now accounted stains in their natures. I have travelled, and I have studied long, observed all Kingdoms, know all the promises of Art and manners, yet that I am not bold, nor cannot flatter, I shall not thrive, all these are but vain Studies, art thou so rich as to get me a lodging Lance?

Lan. I'll sell the titles of my house else, my Horse, my Hawk, nay's death I'll pawn my wife: Oh Mr. Francis, that I should see your Fathers house fall thus!

Isab. An honest fellow.

Lan. Your Fathers house, that fed me, that bred up all my name!

Isab. A gratefull fellow.

Lan. And fall by——

Fran. Peace, I know you are angry Lance, but I must not hear with whom, he is my Brother, and though you hold him slight, my most dear Brother: A Gentleman, excepting some few rubs, he were too excellent to live here else, fraughted as deep with noble and brave parts, the issues of a noble and manly Spirit, as any he alive. I must not hear you; though I am miserable, and he made me so, yet still he is my Brother, still I love him, and to that tye of blood link my affections.

Isab. A noble nature! dost thou know him Luce?

Luce. No, Mistrefs.

Isab. Thou shouldest ever know such good men, what a fair body and mind are married! did he not say he wanted?

Luce. What's that to you?

Isab. 'Tis true, but 'tis great pity.

Luce. How she changes! ten thousand more than he, as handsom men too.

Isab.

Isab. 'Tis like enough, but as I live, this Gentleman among ten thousand thousand! is there no knowing him? why should he want? fellows of no merit, slight and puffi souls, that walk like shadows, by leaving no print of what they are, or poise, let them complain.

Luce. Her colour changes strangely.

Isab. This man was made, to mark his wants to waken us; alas poor Gentleman, but will that keep him from cold and hunger, believe me he is well bred, and cannot be but of a noble lineage, mark him, mark him well.

Luce. 'Is a handſom man.

Isab. The sweetness of his sufferance sets him off, O Luce, but whither go I?

Luce. You cannot hide it.

Isab. I would he had what I can spare.

Luce. 'Tis charitable.

Lance. Come Sir, I'll see you lodg'd, you have tied my tongue fast, I'll steal before you want, 'tis but a hanging.

Isab. That's a good fellow too, an honest fellow, why, this would move a stone, I must needs know; but that some other time. [Exit Lance, and Franc.

Luce. Is the wind there? that makes for me.

Isab. Come, I forgot a business.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Widow, and Luce.

Wid. MY sister, and a woman of so base a pity! what was the fellow?

Luce. Why, an ordinary man, Madam.

Wid. Poor?

Luce. Poor enough, and no man knows from whence neither.

Wid. What could she see?

Luce. Only his misery, for else she might behold a hundred handſomer.

Wid. Did she change much?

Luce. Extreemly, when he spoke, and then her pity; like an Orator, I fear her love framed such a commendation, and followed it so far, as made me wonder.

Wid. Is she so hot, or such a want of lovers, that she must doat upon afflictions? why does she not go romage all the prisons, and there bestow her youth, bewray her wantonness, and flie her honour, common both to beggery: did she speak to him?

Luce. No, he saw us not, but ever since, she hath been mainly troubled.

Wid. Was he young?

Luce. Yes, young enough.

Wid. And looked he like a Gentleman?

Luce. Like such a Gentleman, that would pawn ten oaths for twelve pence.

Wid. My sister, and sink basely! this must not be, does she use means to know him?

Luce. Yes Madam, and has employed a Squire called Shorthose.

Wid. O that's a precious Knaves: keep all this private, but still be near her lodging: Luce, what you can gather by any means, let me understand: I'll stop her heat, and turn her charity another way, to bless her self first; be still close to her counsels; a begger and a stranger! there's a blessing! I'll none of that; I have a toy yet, sister, shall tell you this is foul, and make you find it, and for your pains take you the last gown I wore; this makes me mad, but I shall force a remedy.

Enter Fountain, Bellamore, Harebrain, Valentine.

Fount. Sirra, we have so lookt for thee, and long'd for thee; this widow is the strangest thing, the stateliest, and stands so much upon her excellencies.

Bel. She hath put us off, this month now, for an answer.

Hare. No man must visit her, nor look upon her, no, not say, good morrow, nor good even, till that's past.

Val. She has found what dough you are made of, and so kneads you: are you good at nothing, but these after-games? I have told you often enough what things they are, what precious things, these widows ———

Hare. If we had 'em.

Val. Why the Devil has not craft enough to wooe 'em, there be three kinds of fools, mark this note Gentlemen, mark it, and understand it.

Fount. Well, go forward.

Val. An Innocent, a knave fool, a fool politick: the last of which are lovers, widow lovers.

Bell. Will you allow no fortune?

Val. No such blind one.

Fount. We gave you reasons, why 'twas needful for us.

Val. As you are those fools, I did allow those reasons, but as my Scholars and companions damn'd 'em: do you know what it is to wooe a widow? answer me coolly now, and understandingly.

Hare. Why to lie with her, and to enjoy her wealth.

Val. Why there you are fools still, crafty to catch your selves, pure politick fools, I lookt for such an answer; once more hear me, it is, to wed a widow, to be doubted mainly, whether the state you have be yours or no, or those old boots you ride in. Mark me, widows are long extents in Law upon news, livings upon their bodies winding-sheets, they that enjoy 'em, lie but with dead mens monuments, and beget only their own ill Epitaphs: Is not this plain now?

Bell. Plain spoken.

Val. And plain truth; but if you'll needs do things of danger, do but lose your selves, not any part concerns your understandings, for then you are Meacocks, fools, and miserable, march off amain, within an inch of a Fircug, turn me o'th' toe like a Weather-cock, kill every day a Sergeant for a twelve month, rob the Exchequer, and burn all the Rolls, and these will make a shew.

Hare. And these are trifles.

Val. Considered to a Widow, empty nothings, for here you venture but your persons, there the varnish of your persons, your discretions; why 'tis a monstrous thing to marry at all, especially as now 'tis made; me thinks a man, an understanding man, is more wise to me, and of a nobler tie, than all these trinkets; what do we get by women, but our senses, which is the rankest part about us, satisfied, and when that's done, what are we? Crest-fallen Cowards. What benefit can children be, but charges and disobedience? What's the love they render at one and twenty years? I pray die Father: when they are young, they are like bells rung backwards, nothing but noise and giddiness; and come to years once, there drops a son byth' sword in his Mistresses quarel, a great joy to his parents: A Daughter ripe too, grows high and lusty in her blood, must have a heating, runs away with a supple ham'd Servingman: his twenty Nobles spent, takes to a trade, and learns to spin mens hair off; there's another, and most are of this nature, will you marry?

Fount. For my part yes, for any doubt I feel yet.

Val. And this same widow?

Fount. If I may, and me thinks, however you are pleased to dispute these dangers, such a warm match, and for you, Sir, were not hurtfull.

Val. Not half so killing as for you, for me she cannot with all the Art she has, make me more miserable, or much more fortunate, I have no state left, a benefit that none of you can brag of, and there's the Antidote against a Widow, nothing to lose, but that my soul inherits, which she can neither law nor claw away; to that, but little flesh, it were too much else; and that unwholsom too, it were too rich else; and to all this contempt of what she do's I can laugh at her tears, neglect her angers, hear her without a faith, so pity her as if she were a Traytour, moan her person, but deadly hate her pride; if you could do these, and had but this discretion, and like fortune, it were but an equal venture.

Fount.

Fount. This is malice.

Val. When she lies with your land, and not with you, grows great with joyntures, and is brought to bed with all the state you have, you'll find this certain; but is it come to pass you must marry, is there no buff will hold you?

Bel. Grant it be so.

Val. Then chuse the tamer evil, take a maid, a maid not worth a penny; make her yours, knead her, and mould her yours, a maid worth nothing, there's a virtuous spell in that word nothing; a maid makes conscience of half a Crown a week for pins and puppets, a maid will be content with one Coach and two Horses, not falling out because they are not matches; with one man satisfied, with one rein guided, with one faith, one content, one bed, aged she makes the wife, preserves the fame and issue; a widow is a Christ-mas box that sweeps all.

Fount. Yet all this cannot sink us.

Val. You are my friends, and all my loving friends, I spend your mony, yet I deserve it too, you are my friends still, I ride your horses, when I want I sell 'em; I eat your meat, help to wear her linnen, sometimes I make you drunk, and then you seal, for which I'll do you this commodity, be ruled, and let me try her, I will discover her, the truth is, I will never leave to trouble her, till I see through her, then if I find her worthy.

Hare. This was our meaning Valentine.

Val. 'Tis done then, I must want nothing.

Hare. Nothing but the woman.

Val. No jealousy; for when I marry, the Devil must be wiser than I take him; and the flesh foolisher: come let's to dinner, and when I am well whetted with wine, have at her.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Isabella, and Luce.

Ifab. But art thou sure?

Luce. No surer than I heard.

Hare. That it was that flouting fellows Brother?

Luce. Yes, Shorthose told me so.

Hare. He did scarce out the truth?

Luce. It seems he did.

Hare. Prethee Luce call him hither, if he be no worse, I never repent my pity, now sirra, what was he we sent you after, the Gentleman i'th' black?

Enter Shorthose.

Short. I'th' torn black?

Ifab. Yes, the same Sir.

Short. What would your Worship with him?

Ifab. Why, my Worship would know his name, and what he is.

Short. 'Is nothing, he is a man, and yet he is no man.

Ifab. You must needs play the fool.

Short. 'Tis my profession.

Ifab. How is he a man, and no man?

Short. He's a begger, only the sign of a man, the bush pull'd down, which shows the house stands empty.

Ifab. What's his calling?

Short. They call him begger.

Ifab. What's his kindred?

Short. Beggars.

Ifab. His worth?

Short. A learned begger, a poor Scholar.

Ifab. How does he live?

Short. Like worms, he eats old Books.

Ifab. Is Valentine his Brother.

Short. His begging Brother.

Ifab. What may his name be?

Short. Orson.

Ifab. Leave your fooling.

Short. You had as good say, leave your living.

Ifab. Once more tell me his name directly.

Short. I'll be hang'd first, unless I heard him Christned, but I can tell what foolish people call him.

Ifab. What?

Short. Francisco.

Ifab. Where lies this learning, Sir?

Short. In Pauls Church yard fofooth.

Ifab. I mean the Gentleman, fool.

Short. O that fool, he lies in loose sheets every where, that's no where.

Luce. You have glean'd since you came to London: in the Country, Shorthose, you were an arrant fool, a dull cold coxcombe, here every Tavern teaches you, the pint pot has so belaboured you with wit, your brave acquaintance that gives you Ale, so fortified your mazard, that now there's no talking to you.

Ifab. 'Is much improved, a fellow, a fine discourser.

Short. I hope so, I have not waited at the tail of wit so long to be an Ass.

Luce. But say now, Shorthose, my Lady should remove into the Country.

Short. I had as lieve she should remove to Heaven, and as soon I would undertake to follow her.

Luce. Where no old Charnico is, nor no Anchoves, nor Master such-a-one, to meet at the Rose, and bring my Lady, such-a-ones chief Chamber-maid.

Ifab. No bouncing healths to this brave Lad, dear Shorthose, nor down o'th' knees to that illustrious Lady.

Luce. No fiddles, nor no lusty noise of drawer, carry this pottle to my Father Shorthose.

Ifab. No plays, nor gally foists, no strange Embassadors to run and wonder at, till thou beest oyl, and then come home again, and lye byth' Legend.

Luce. Say she should go.

Short. If I say, I'll be hang'd, or if I thought she would go.

Luce. What?

Short. I would go with her.

Luce. But Shorthose, where thy heart is?

Ifab. Do not fright him.

Luce. By this hand Mistis 'tis a noise, a loud one too, and from her own mouth, presently to be gone too, but why, or to what end?

Short. May not a man die first? she'll give him so much time.

Ifab. Gone o'th' sudden? thou dost but jest, she must not mock the Gentlemen.

Luce. She has put them off a month, thy dare not see her, believe me Mistis, what I hear I tell you.

Ifab. Is this true, wench? gone on so short a warning! what trick is this? she never told me of it, it must not be, sirra, attend me presently, you know I have been a carefull friend unto you, attend me in the Hall, and next be faithful, cry not, we shall not go.

Short. Her Coach may crack.

Enter Valentine, Francisco, and Lance.

Val. Which way to live! how darest thou come to town, to ask such an idle question?

Fran. Me thinks 'tis necessary, unless you could restore that Annuity you have tiple up in Taverns.

Val. Where hast thou been, and how brought up Francisco, that thou talkest thus out of France? thou wert a pretty fellow, and of a handsom knowledge; who has spoiled thee?

Lan. He that has spoil'd himself, to make him sport, and by Copie; will spoil all comes near him: buy but a Glafs, if you be yet so wealthy, and look there who?

Val. Well said, old Copihold.

Lan. My heart's good Frechold Sir, and so you'll find it, this Gentleman's your Brother, your hopeful Brother, for there is no hope of you, use him thereafter.

Val. E'ne as well as I use my self, what wouldst thou have Frank?

Fran. Can you procure me a hundred pound?

Lan. Hark what he saies to you, O try your wits, they say you are excellent at it, for your Land has lain long bed-rid, and unsensible.

Fran. And I'll forget all wrongs, you see my state, and to what what wretchedness your will has brought me; but what it may be, by this benefit, if timely done, and like a noble Brother, both you and I may feel, and to our comforts.

Val. (A hundred pound!) dost thou know what thou hast said Boy?

Fran. I said a hundred pound.

Val. Thou hast said more than any man can justify, believe it: procure a hundred pounds! I say to thee there's no such sum in nature, forty shillings there may be now i'th' Mint and that's a Treasure, I have seen five pound, but let me tell it, and 'tis as wonderful as Calves with five Legs; here's five shillings, Frank, the harvest of five weeks, and a good crop too, take it, and pay thy first fruits, I'll come down and eat it out.

Fran. 'Tis patience must meet with you Sir, not love.

Lanc. Deal roundly, and leave these fiddle faddles.

Val. Leave thy prating, thou thinkest thou art a notable wife fellow, thou and thy rotten Sparrow Hawk; two of the reverent.

Lanc. I think you are mad, or if you be not, will be, with the next moon, what would you have him do?

Val. How?

Lanc. To get money first, that's to live, you have shewed him how to want.

Val. 'Slife how do I live? why, what dull fool would ask that question? three hundred three pilds more, I and live bravely: the better half o'th' Town live most gloriously, and ask them what states they have, or what Annuities, or when they pray for seasonable Harvests: thou hast a handsome Wit, stir into the world, Frank, stir, stir for shame, thou art a pretty Scholar: ask how to live? write, write, write any thing, the World's a fine believing World, write News.

Lanc. Dragons in Suffex, Sir, or fiery Battels seen in the Air at Aspurge.

Val. There's the way Frank, and in the tail of these, fright me the Kingdom with a sharp Prognostication, that shall scowr them, Dearth upon Dearth, like leven Taffaties, predictions of Sea-breaches, Wars, and want of Herings on our Coast, with bloody Noses.

Lanc. Whirl-winds, that shall take off the top of Grantham Steeple, and clap it on Pauls, and after these, a Lenvoy to the City for their sins.

Val. Probatum est, thou canst not want a pension, go switch me up a Covey of young Scholars, there's twenty nobles, and two loads of Coals, are not these ready ways? Cosmography thou art deeply read in, draw me a Map from the Mermaid, I mean a midnight Map to scape the Watches, and such long senseless examinations, and Gentlemen shall feed thee, right good Gentlemen, I cannot stay long.

Lanc. You have read learnedly, and would you have him follow these Megera's, did you begin with Ballads?

Fran. Well, I will leave you, I see my wants are grown ridiculous, yours may be so, I will not curse you neither; you may think, when these wanton fits are over, who bred me, and who ruined me, look to your self, Sir, a providence I wait on.

Val. Thou art passionate, hast thou been brought up with Girls?

Enter Shorthose with a bag.

Short. Rest you merry, Gentlemen.

Val. Not so merry as you suppose, Sir.

Short. Pray stay a while, and let me take a view of you, I may put my Spoon into the wrong Pottage-pot else.

Val. Why, wilt thou muster us?

Short. No, you are not he, you are a thought too handsome.

Lanc. Who wouldst thou speak withal, why dost thou peep so?

Short. I am looking birds nests, I can find none in your bush beard, I would speak with you, black Gentleman.

Fran. With me, my friend?

Short. Yes sure, and the best friend; Sir, it seems you spake withal this twelve month, Gentleman, there's money for you.

Val. How?

Short. There's none for you, Sir, be not so brief, not a penny; law how he itches at it, stand off, you stir my colour.

Lanc. Take it, 'tis money.

Short. You are too quick too, first be sure you have it, you seem to be a Faulkoner, but a foolish one.

Lanc. Take it, and say nothing.

Short. You are cozen'd too, 'tis take it, and spend it.

Fran. From whom came it, Sir?

Short. Such another word, and you shall have none on't.

Fran. I thank you, Sir, I doubly thank you.

Short. Well, Sir, then buy you better Cloaths, and get your Hat drest, and your Laundress to wash your Boots white.

Fran. Pray stay Sir, may you not be mistaken.

Short. I think I am, give me the money again, come quick, quick, quick.

Fran. I would be loth to render, till I am sure it be so.

Short. Hark in your ear, is not your name Francisco?

Fran. Yes.

Short. Be quiet then, it may Thunder a hundred times, before such stones fall: do you not need it?

Fran. Yes.

Short. And 'tis thought you have it.

Fran. I think I have.

Short. Then hold it fast, 'tis not fly-blown, you may pay for the poundage, you forget your self, I have not seen a Gentleman so backward, a wanting Gentleman.

Fran. Your mercy, Sir.

Short. Friend, you have mercy, a whole bag full of mercy, be merry with it, and be wise.

Fran. I would fain, if it please you, but know—

Short. It does not please me, tell over your money, and be not mad, Boy.

Val. You have no more such bags?

Short. More such there are, Sir, but few I fear for you, I have cast your water, you have wit, you need no money.

[Exit.

Lanc. Be not amazed, Sir, 'tis good gold, good old gold, this is restorative, and in good time, it comes to do you good, keep it and use it, let honest fingers feel it, yours be too quick Sir.

Fran. He named me, and he gave it me, but from whom?

Lanc. Let 'em send more, and then examine it, this can be but a Preface.

Fran. Being a stranger, of whom can I deserve this?

Lanc. Sir, of any man that has but eyes, and manly understanding to find mens wants, good men are bound to do so.

Val. Now you see, Frank, there are more ways than certainties, now you believe: What Plow brought you this Harvest, what sale of Timber, Coals, or what Annuities? These feed no Hinds, nor wait the expectation of Quarterdaies, you see it showers in to you, you are an Ass, lie plodding, and lie fooling, about this Blazing Star, and that bo-peep, whining, and fasting, to find the natural reason why a Dog turns twice about before he lie down, what use of these, or what joy in Annuities, where every man's thy study, and thy Tenant, I am ashamed on thee.

Lanc. Yes, I have seen this fellow, there's a wealthy Widow hard by.

Val. Yes marry is there.

Lanc. I think he's her servant, or I am couzen'd else, I am sure on't.

Fran. I am glad on't.

Lanc. She's a good Woman.

Fran. I am gladder.

Lanc. And young enough believe.

Fran. I am gladder of all, Sir.

Val. Frank, you shall lye with me soon.

Fran. I thank my money.

Lanc. His money shall lie with me, three in a Bed, Sir, will be too much this weather.

Val. Meet me at the Mermaid, and thou shalt see what things

Luce. Trust to your self Sir.

[Exeunt Fran. and Val.]

Enter Fount. Bella. and Valentine.

Fount. O Valentine!

Val. How now, why do you look so?

Bella. The Widow's going, man.

Val. Why let her go, man.

Hare. She's going out o'th' Town.

Val. The Town's the happier, I would they were all gone.

Fount. We cannot come to speak with her.

Val. Not to speak to her?

Bel. She will be gone within this hour, either now Val.

Fount. Hare. Now, now, now, good Val.

Val. I had rather march i'th' mouth o'th' Cannon, but adieu, if she be above ground, go, away to your prayers, away I say, away, she shall be spoken withall. [Exeunt.]

Enter Shorthose with one boot on, Roger, and Humphrey.

Rog. She will go, Shorthose.

Short. Who can help it Roger?

Raph. [within.] Help down with the hangings.

Rog. By and by Raph. I am making up o'th' trunks here.

Raph. Shorthose.

Short. Well.

Raph. Who looks to my Ladys wardrobe? Humphrey.

Hum. Here.

Raph. Down with the boxes in the gallery, and bring away the Coach cushions.

Short. Will it not rain, no conjuring abroad, nor no devices to stop this journey?

Rog. Why go now, why now, why o'th' sudden now? what preparation, what horses have we ready, what provision laid in i'th' Country?

Hum. Not an egge I hope.

Rog. No nor one drop of good drink boyes, there's the devil.

Short. I heartily pray the malt be musty, and then we must come up again.

Hum. What says the Steward?

Rog. He's at's wits end, for some four hours since, out of his haste and providence, he mistook the Millars mangie mare, for his own nagge.

Short. And she may break his neck, and save the journey. Oh London how I love thee!

Hum. I have no boots nor none I'll buy: or if I had, refuse me if I would venture my ability, before a Cloak-Bag, men are men.

Short. For my part, if I be brought, as I know it will be aimed at, to carry any dirty dairy Cream-pot, or any gentle Lady of the Laundry, Chambring, or wantonness behind my Gelding, with all her Streamers, Knapsacks, Glasscs, Guggawes, as if I were a running slipper, I'll give 'em leave to cut my girls, and slay me. I'll not be troubled with their Distibations, at every half miles end, I understand my self, and am resolved.

Hum. To morrow night at Olivers! who shall be there boys, who shall meet the wenches?

Rog. The well brew'd stand of Ale, we should have met at!

Short. These griefs like to another Tale of Troy, would mollifie the hearts of barbarous people, and Tom Butcher weep, Aeneas enters, and now the town's lost.

Raph. Well whither run you, my Lady is mad.

Short. I would she were in Bedlam.

Raph. The carts are come, no hands to help to load 'em? the stuff lies in the hall, the plate.

[Within Widow.] Why knaves there, where be these idle

Short. Shall I ride with one Boot?

(fellows?)

Wid. Why where I say?

Raph. Away, away, it must be so.

Short. O for a tickling storm, to last but ten days. [Exeunt.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Isabella, and Luce.

Luce. BY my troth Mistress I did it for the best.

Ifab. It may be so, but Luce, you have a tongue, a dish of meat in your mouth, which if it were minced Luce, would do a great deal better.

Luce. I protest Mistress.

Ifab. It will be your own one time or other: Walter.

Walter [within.] Anon forsooth.

Ifab. Lay my hat ready, my fan and cloak, you are so full of providence; and Walter, tuck up my little box behind the Coach, and bid my maid make ready, my sweet service to your good Lady Mistress; and my dog, good let the Coachman carry him.

Luce. But hear me.

Ifab. I am in love sweet Luce, and you are so skilfull, that I must needs undo my self; and hear me, let Oliver pack up my Glafs discreetly, and see my Curles well carried. O sweet Luce, you have a tongue, and open tongues have open you know what, Luce.

Luce. Pray you be satisfied.

Ifab. Yes and contented too, before I leave you: there's a Roger, which some call a Butcher, I speak of certainties, I do not fish Luce, nay do not stare, I have a tongue can talk too: and a Green Chamber Luce, a back door opens to a long Gallerie; there was a night Luce, do you perceive, do you perceive me yet? O do you blush Luce? a Friday night I saw your Saint, Luce: for t'other box of Marmalade, all's thine sweet Roger, this I heard and kept too.

Luce. E'ne as you are a woman Mistress.

Ifab. This I allow as good and Physical sometime, these meetings, and for the cheering of the heart; but Luce, to have your own turn served, and to your friend to be a dogbolt.

Luce. I confes it Mistress.

Ifab. As you have made my sister jealous of me, and foolishly, and childishly pursued it, I have found out your haunt, and traced your purposes; for which mine honour suffers; your best waies must be applied to bring her back again, and seriously and suddenly, that so I may have a means to clear my self, and she a fair opinion of me, else you peevish

Luce. My power and prayers Mistress.

Ifab. What's the matter?

Enter Shorthose, and Widow.

Short. I have been with the Gentleman, he has it, much good may do him with it.

Wid. Come, are you ready? you love so to delay time, the day grows on.

Ifab. I have sent for a few trifles, when those are come; And now I know your reason.

Wid. Know your own honour then, about your business, see the Coach ready presently, I'll tell you more then.

[Ex. Luce, and Shorthose.]

And understand it well, you must not think your sister so tender eyed as not to see your follies, alas I know your heart, and must imagine, and truly too; 'tis not your charitie can coin such sums to give away as you have done, in that you have no wisdom Isabel, no nor modesty, where nobler uses are at home; I tell you, I am ashamed to find this in your years, far more in your discretion, none to chuse but things for pity, none to seal your thoughts on, but one of no abiding, of no name; nothing to bring you to but this, cold and hunger: A jolly Joynture sister, you are happy, no mony, no not ten shillings.

Ifab. You search nearly.

Wid. I know it as I know your folly, one that knows not where he shall eat his next meal, take his rest, unless it be i'th' stocks; what kindred has he, but a more wanting Brother,

Brother, or what vertues.

Isab. You have had rare intelligence, I see, sister.

Wid. Or say the man had vertue, is vertue in this age a full inheritance? what Joynture can he make you, Plutarchs Morals, or so much penny rent in the small Poets? this is not well, 'tis weak, and I grieve to know it.

Isab. And this you quit the town for?

Wid. Is't not time?

Isab. You are better read in my affairs than I am, that's all I have to answer, I'll go with you, and willingly, and what you think most dangerous, I'll sit laugh at.

For sister 'tis not folly but good discretion governs our main fortunes.

Wid. I am glad to hear you say so.

Isa. I am for you.

Enter Shorthose, and Humphrey, with riding rods.

Hum. The Devil cannot stay her, she'll on't, eat an egg now, and then we must away.

Short. I am gaul'd already, yet I will pray, may London wayes from henceforth be full of holes, and Coaches crack their wheels, may zealous Smiths so housel all our Hackneys, that they may feel compunction in their feet, and tire at High-gate, may it rain above all Almanacks till Carriers sail, and the Kings Fish monger ride like Bike Arion upon a Trout to London.

Hum. At S. Albanes, let all the Inns be drunk, not an Host sober to bid her worship welcom.

Short. Not a Fiddle, but all preach't down with Puritans; no meat but Legs of Beef.

Hum. No beds but Wool-Packs.

Short. And those so crammed with Warrens of starved Fleas that bite like Bandogs; let Mims be angry at their S. Bel Swager, and we pass in the heat on't and be beaten, beaten abominably, beaten horse and man, and all my Ladies linnen sprinkled with suds and dish-water.

Short. Not a wheel but out of joynt.

Enter Roger laugh-ing.

Hum. Why dost thou laugh?

Rog. There's a Gentleman, and the rarest Gentleman, and makes the rarest sport.

Short. Where, where?

Rog. Within here, h'as made the gayest sport with Tom the Coachman, so tewed him up with Sack that he lies lashing a But of Malmse for his Mares.

Short. 'Tis very good.

Rog. And talks and laughs, and sings the rarest songs, and Shorthose, he has so maul'd the Red Deer pies, made such an alms i'th' butterie.

Short. Better still.

Enter Val. Widow.

Hum. My Lady in a rage with the Gentleman?

Short. May he anger her into a feather. [Exeunt.]

Wid. I pray tell me, who sent you hither? for I imagine it is not your condition, you look so temperately, and like a Gentleman, to ask me these milde questions.

Val. Do you think I use to walk of errands, gentle Lady, or deal with women out of dreams from others?

Wid. You have not know me sure?

Val. Not much.

Wid. What reason have you then to be so tender of my credit, you are no kinsman?

Val. If you take it so, the honest office that I came to do you, is not so heavy but I can return it: now I perceive you are too proud, not worth my visit.

Wid. Pray stay, a little proud.

Val. Monstrous proud, I griev'd to hear a woman of your value, and your abundant parts stung by the people, but now I see 'tis true, you look upon me as if I were a rude and faucie fellow that borrowed all my breeding from a dunghil, or such a one, as should now fall and worship you in hope of pardon: you are cozen'd Lady, I came to prove opinion a loud liar, to see a woman only great in goodness, and Mistress of a greater fame than fortune, but —

Wid. You are a strange Gentleman, if I were proud now, I should be monstrous angry, which I am not, and shew the effects of pride; I should despise you, but you are welcom Sir: To think well of our selves, if we deserve it, it is a lulture in us, and every good we have, strives to shew gracious, what use is it else? old age like Seer-trees, is seldom seen affected, stirs sometimes at rehearal of such acts as his daring youth endeavour'd.

Val. This is well, and now you speak to the purpose, you please me, but to be place proud?

Wid. If it be our own, why are we set here with distinction else, degrees, and orders given us? In you men, 'tis held a coolness, if you lose your right, affronts and loss of honour: streets, and walls, and upper ends of tables, had they tongues could tell what blood has followed, and what feud about your ranks; are we so much below you, that till you have us, are the tops of nature, to be accounted drones without a difference? you will make us bealts indeed.

Val. Nay worse than this too, proud of your cloaths, they swear a Mercers Lucifer, a tumour tackt together by a Taylor, nay yet worse, proud of red and white, a varnish that butter-milk can better.

Wid. Lord, how little will vex these poor blind people! if my cloaths be sometimes gay and glorious, does it follow, my mind must be my Mercers too? or say my beauty please some weak eyes, must it please them to think, that blows me up, that every hour blows off? this is an Infants anger.

Val. Thus they say too, what though you have a Coach lined through with velvet, and four fair Flanders mares, why should the streets be troubled continually with you, till Carmen curse you? can there be ought in this but pride of shew Lady, and pride of bum beating, till the learned lawyers with their fat bags, are thrust against the bulks till all their causes crack? why should this Lady, and t'other Lady, and the third sweet Lady, and Madam at Mile-end, be daily visited, and your poorer neighbours, with course napfes neglected, fashions conferr'd about, pouncings, and paintings, and young mens bodies read on like Anatomies.

Wid. You are very credulous, and somewhat desperate, to deliver this Sir, to her you know not, but you shall confesse me, and find I will not start; in us all meetings lie open to these lewd reports, and our thoughts at Church, our very meditations some will swear, which all should fear to judge, at least uncharitably, are mingled with your memories, cannot sleep, but this sweet Gentleman swims in our fancies, that scarlet man of war, and that smooth Senior; not drefs our heads without new ambushes, how to surprize that greatness, or that glorie; our very smiles are subject to constructions; nay Sir, it's come to this we cannot pish, but 'tis a favour for some fool or other: should we examine you thus, wer't not possible to take you without Perspectives?

Wid. It may be, but these excuse not.

Wid. Nor yours force no truth Sir, what deadly tongues you have, and to those tongues what hearts, and what inventions? O' my conscience, and 'twere not for sharp justice, you would venture to aim at your own mothers, and account it glorie to say you had done so: all you think are counsels, and cannot erre, 'tis we still that shew double, giddy, or gorg'd with passion; we that build Babels for mens conclusions, we that scatter, as day does his warm light; our killing curses over Gods creatures, next to the devils malice: lets intreat your good words.

Val. Well, this woman has a brave soul.

Wid. Are not we gaily blest then, and much beholding to you for your substance? you may do what you list, we what befeems us, and narrowly do that too, and precisely, our names are served in else at Ordinaries, and belcht abroad in Taverns.

Val. O most brave Wench, and able to redeem an age of women.

Wid. You are no Whoremasters? Alas, no, Gentlemen, it were an impudence to think you vicious: you are so holy, handsome Ladies fright you, you are the cool things of the time, the temperance, meer Emblems of the Law, and veils of Vertue, you are not daily mending like Dutch Watches, and plastering like old Walls; they are not Gentlemen, that with their secret sins increase our Surgeons, and lie in Foreign Countries, for new fores; Women are all these Vices; you are not envious, false, covetous, vain-glorious, irreligious, drunken, revengeful, giddie-eyed like Parrots, eaters of others honours.

Val. You are angry.

Wid. No by my troth, and yet I could say more too, for when men make me angry, I am miserable.

Val. Sure 'tis a man, she could not bear it thus bravely else, it may be I am tedious.

Wid. Not at all, Sir, I am content at this time you should trouble me.

Val. You are distrustful.

Wid. Where I find no truth, Sir.

Val. Come, come, you are full of passion.

Wid. Some I have, I were too near the nature o' God else.

Val. You are monstrous peevish.

Wid. Because they are monstrous foolish, and know not how to use that should try me.

Val. I was never answered thus; were you never drunk Lady?

Wid. No sure, not drunk, Sir; yet I love good Wine, as I love health and joy of heart, but temperately, why do you ask that question?

Val. For that sin that they most charge you with, is this sin's servant, they say you are monstrous——

Wid. What, Sir, what?

Val. Most strangely.

Wid. It has a name sure?

Val. Infinitely lustful, without all bounds, they swear you kill'd your Husband.

Wid. Let us have it all for Heavens sake, 'tis good mirth, Sir.

Val. They say you will have four now, and those four stuck in four quarters, like four winds to cool you: will she not cry nor curse?

Wid. On with your story.

Val. And that you are forcing out of dispensations with sums of money to that purpose.

Wid. Four Husbands! should not I be blest, Sir, for example? Lord, what should I do with them? turn a Mill, or Tithe them out like Town-bulls to my Tenants, you come to make me angry, but you cannot.

Val. Ple make you merry then, you are a brave Woman, and in despite of envy a right one, go thy wayes, truth thou art as good a Woman, as any Lord of them all can lay his Leg over, I do not often commend your Sex.

Wid. It seems so, your commendations are so studied for.

Val. I came to see you and sift you into Flowr to know your pureness, and I have found you excellent, I thank you; continue so, and shew men how to tread, and women how to follow: get an Husband, an honest man, you are a good woman, and live hedg'd in from scandal, let him be too an understanding man, and to that stedfast; 'tis pity your fair Figure should miscarry, and then your are fixt: farewell.

Wid. Pray stay a little, I love your company now you are so pleasant, and to my disposition set so even.

Val. I can no longer.

[Exit.

Wid. As I live a fine fellow, this manly handsome bluntness shews him honest; what is he, or from whence? blest me, four Husbands! how prettily he fooled me into Vices, to stir my jealousy, and find my nature; a proper Gentleman: I am not well o'th' sudden, such a companion I could live and dye with, his angers are meer mirth.

Enter Isabella.

Isa. Come, come, I am ready.

Wid. Are you so?

Isa. What ails she? the Coach staies, and the people, the day goes on, I am as ready now as you desire, Sister: fie, who stays now, why do you sit and pout thus?

Wid. Prethee be quiet, I am not well.

Isa. For Heav'n's sake let's not ride staggering in the night, come, pray you take some Sweet-meats in your pocket, if your Stomach——

Wid. I have a little business.

Isab. To abuse me, you shall not find new dreams, and new suspitions, to horse withal.

Wid. Lord who made you a Commander! hey ho, my heart.

Isab. Is the wind come thither, and Coward like, do you lose your Colours to 'em? are you sick o'th' Valentine? sweet Sister, come let's away, the Country will so quicken you, and we shall live so sweetly: Luce, my Ladies Cloak; nay, you have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world; if I live here, you have so knock'd this love into my head, that I shall love any body, and I find my body, I know not how, so apt—— pray let's be gone, Sister, I stand on thorns.

Wid. I prethee Isabella, i'faith I have some business that concerns me, I will suspect no more, here, wear that for me, and Ple pay the hundred pound you owe your Taylor.

Enter Shorthose, Roger, Humphrey, Ralph.

Isab. I had rather go, but——

Wid. Come walk in with me, we'll go to Cards, unsaddle the Horses.

Short. A Jubile, a Jubile, we stay, Boys.

Enter Uncle, Lan. Foun. Bella. Harebrain following.

Unc. Are they behind us?

Lan. Close, close, speak aloud, Sir.

Unc. I am glad my Nephew has so much discretion, at length to find his wants: did she entertain him?

Lance. Most bravely, nobly, and gave him such a welcome!

Unc. For his own sake do you think?

Lance. Most certain, Sir, and in his own cause bestir'd himself too, and wan such liking from her, she dotes on him, h'as the command of all the house already.

Unc. He deals not well with his friends.

Lance. Let him deal on, and be his own friend, he has most need of her.

Unc. I wonder they would put him——

Lan. You are in the right on't, a man that must raise himself, I knew he would couzen 'em, and glad I am he has: he watched occasion, and found it i'th' nick.

Unc. He has deceived me.

Lan. I told you howsoever he wheel'd about, he would charge home at length: how I could laugh now, to think of these tame fools!

Unc. 'Twas not well done, because they trusted him, yet.

Bel. Hark you Gentlemen.

Unc. We are upon a business, pray excuse us, they have it home.

Lanc. Come let it work good on Gentlemen.

[Exeunt Uncle, Lance.

Font. 'Tis true, he is a knave, I ever thought it.

Hare. And we are fools, tame fools.

Bell. Come let's go seek him, he shall be hang'd before he colt us basely.

[Exeunt.

Enter Isabella, Luce.

Isab. Art sure she loves him?

Luce. Am I sure I live? and I have clapt on such a commendation on your revenge.

Isab. Faith, he is a pretty Gentleman.

Luce. Handsome enough, and that her eye has found out.

Isa. He talks the best they say, and yet the maddest.

Luce. H'as the right way.

Isa. How is she?

Luce.

Luce. Bears it well, as if she cared not, but a man may see with half an eye through all her forced behaviour, and find who is her Valentine.

Isa. Come let's go see her, I long to prosecute.

Luce. By no means Mistress, let her take better hold first.

Isab. I could burst now.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Valentine, Fountain, Bellamore, Harebrain.

Val. Upbraid me with your benefits, you Pilchers, you shotten, sold, slight fellows? was't not I that undertook you first from empty barrels, and brought those barking mouths that gaped like bung-holes to utter fence? where got you understanding? who taught you manners and apt carriage to rank your selves? who filled you in fit Taverns? were those born with your worships when you came hither? what brought you from the Universities of moment matter to allow you, besides your small base sentences?

Bell. 'Tis well, Sir.

Val. Long Cloaks with two-hand-rapiers, boot-hoses with penny poses, and twenty fools opinions, who looked on you but piping rites that knew you would be prizing, and Prentices in Paul's Church-yard, that scented your want of Britains Books.

Enter Widow, Luce, Hairbrain.

Fount. This cannot save you.

Val. Taunt my integrity you Whelps?

Bell. You may talk the stock we gave you out, but see no further.

Hair. You tempt our patience, we have found you out, and what your trust comes to, ye're well feathered, thank us, and think now of an honest course, 'tis time; men now begin to look, and narrowly into your tumbling tricks, they are stale.

Wid. Is not that he?

Luce. 'Tis he.

Wid. Be still and mark him.

Val. How miserable will these poor wretches be when I forsake 'em! but things have their necessities, I am sorry, to what a vomit must they turn again, now to their own dear Dunghil breeding; never hope after I cast you off, you men of Motley, you most undone things below pity, any that has a soul and six-pence dares relieve you, my name shall bar that blessing, there's your Cloak, Sir, keep it close to you, it may yet preserve you a fortnight longer from the fool; your Hat, pray be covered, and there's the Sattin that your Worship sent me, will serve you at a Sizes yet.

Fount. Nay, faith Sir, you may e'ne rub these out now.

Val. No such relique, nor the least rag of such a fordid weakness shall keep me warm, these Breeches are mine own, purchased, and paid for, without your compassion, a Christian Breeches founded in Black-Friers, and so I'll maintain 'em.

Hare. So they seem, Sir.

Val. Only the thirteen shillings in these Breeches, and the odd groat, I take it, shall be yours, Sir, a mark to know a Knave by, pray preserve it, do not displease more, but take it presently, now help me off with my Boots.

Hare. We are no Grooms, Sir.

Val. For once you shall be, do it willingly, or by this hand I'll make you.

Bell. To our own, Sir, we may apply our hands.

Val. There's your Hangers, you may deserve a strong pair, and a girdle will hold you without buckles; now I am perfect, and now the proudest of your worships tell me I am beholding to you.

Fount. No such matter.

Val. And take heed how you pity me, 'tis dangerous, exceeding dangerous, to prate of pity; which are the poorer? you are now puppies; I without you, or you without my knowledge? be Rogues, and so be gone, be Rogues and reply not, for if you do—

Bell. Only thus much, and then we'll leave you: the Air is far sharper than our anger, Sir, and these you may reserve to rail in warmer.

Hare. Pray have a care, Sir, of your health. [Ex. Lovers.]

Val. Yes Hog-hounds, more than you can have of your wits; 'tis cold, and I am very sensible, extremely cold too, yet I will not off, till I have shamed these Rascals; I have indured as ill heats as another, and every way if one could perish my body, you'll bear the blame on't; I am colder here, not a poor penny left.

Enter Uncle with a Bag.

Unc. 'Thas taken rarely, and now he's dead he will be ruled.

Lan. To him, tew him, abuse him, and nip him close.

Unc. Why how now, Cousin, sunning your self this weather?

Val. As you see, Sir, in a hot fit, I thank my friends.

Unc. But Cousin, where are your Cloaths man? those are no inheritance, your scruple may compound with those I take it, this is no fashion, Cousin.

Val. Not much followed, I must confess; yet Uncle I determine to try what may be done next Term.

Lance. How came you thus, Sir, for you are strangely moved.

Val. Rags, toys and trifles, fit only for those fools that first possessed 'em, and to those Knaves they are rendred. Freeman, Uncle, ought to appear like innocents, old Adam, a fair Fig-leaf sufficient.

Unc. Take me with you, were these your friends, that clear'd you thus?

Val. Hang friends, and even reckonings that make friends.

Unc. I thought till now, there had been no such living, no such purchase, for all the rest is labour, as a list of honourable friends; do such men as you, Sir, in lieu of all your understandings, travels, and those great gifts of nature, aim at no more than casting off your Coats? I am strangely cozen'd.

Lance. Should not the Town shake at the cold you feel now, and all the Gentry suffer interdiction, no more sense spoken, all things Goth and Vandal, till you be summed again, Velvets and Scarlets, anointed with gold Lace, and Cloth of silver turned into Spanish Cottens for a penance, wits blasted with your Bulls, and Taverns withered, as though the Term lay at S^t Albans?

Val. Gentlemen, you have spoken long and level, I beseech you take breath a while and hear me; you imagine now, by the twirling of your strings, that I am at the last, as also that my friends are flown like Swallows after Summer.

Unc. Yes, Sir.

Val. And that I have no more in this poor Pannier, to raise me up again above your rents, Uncle.

Unc. All this I do believe.

Val. You have no mind to better me.

Unc. Yes, Cousin, and to that end I come, and once more offer you all that my power is master of.

Val. A match then, lay me down fifty pounds there.

Unc. There it is, Sir.

Val. And on it write, that you are pleased to give this, as due unto my merit, without caution of land redeeming, tedious thanks, or thrift hereafter to be hoped for.

Unc. How? [Luce lays a Suit and Letter at the door.]

Val. Without daring, when you are drunk, to relish of revilings, to which you are prone in Sack, Uncle.

Unc. I thank you, Sir.

Lance. Come, come away, let the young wanton play a while, away I say, Sir, let him go forward with his naked fashion, he will seek you too morrow; goodly weather, sultry hot, sultry, how I sweat!

Unc. Farewel, Sir.

[Exeunt Uncle and Lance.]

Val. Would I sweat too, I am monstrous vext, and cold too; and these are but thin pumps to walk the streets streets in; clothes I must get, this fashion will not fadge with me; besides, 'tis an ill winter wear, ——— What art thou? yes, they are clothes, and rich ones, some fool has left 'em: and if I should utter ——— what's this paper here? Let these be only worn by the most noble and deserving Gentleman Valentine, ——— dropt out o'th' clouds! I think they are full of gold too; well, I'll leave my wonder, and be warm again, in the next house I'll shift.

[Exit.]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Francisco, Uncle, and Lance.

Fran. WHY do you deal thus with him? 'tis unnobly.
Unc. Peace Cousin peace, you are too tender of him, he must be dealt thus with, he must be cured thus, the violence of his disease Francisco, must not be jested with, 'tis grown infectious, and now strong Corrosives must cure him.

Lance. H'as had a stinger, has eaten off his clothes, the next his skin comes.

Unc. And let it search him to the bones, 'tis better, 'twill make him feel it.

Lance. Where be his noble friends now? will his fantastical opinions cloath him, or the learned Art of having nothing feed him?

Unc. It must needs greedily, for all his friends have flung him off, he is naked, and where to skin himself again, if I know, or can devise how he should get himself lodging, his Spirit must be bowed, and now we have him, have him at that we hoped for.

Lance. Next time we meet him cracking of nuts, with half a cloak about him, for all means are cut off, or borrowing six-pence, to shew his bounty in the pottage Ordinary?

Fran. Which way went he?

Lance. Pox, why should you ask after him, you have been trimm'd already, let him take his fortune, som spunit out himself, Sir, there's no pitie.

Unc. Besides some good to you now, from this miserie.

Fran. I rise upon his ruines! fie, fie, Uncle, fie honest Lance. Those Gentlemen were base people, that could so soon take fire to his destruction.

Unc. You are a fool, you are fool, a young man.

Enter Valentine.

Val. Morrow Uncle, morrow Frank, sweet Frank, and how, and how d'ce, think now, how shew matters? morrow Bandog.

Unc. How?

Fran. Is this man naked, forsaken of his friends?

Val. Th'art handsom, Frank, a pretty Gentleman, i'faith thou lookest well, and yet here may be those that look as handsom.

Lance. Sure he can conjure, and has the Devil for his Tailor.

Unc. New and rich! 'tis most impossible he should recover.

Lan. Give him this luck, and fling him into the Sea.

Unc. 'Tis not he, imagination cannot work this miracle.

Val. Yes, yes, 'tis he, I will assure you Uncle, the very he, the he your wisdom plaid withall, I thank you for't, neighed at his nakedness, and made his cold and poverty your pastime; you see I live, and the best can do no more Uncle, and though I have no state, I keep the streets still, and take my pleasure in the Town, like a poor Gentleman, wear clothes to keep me warm, poor things they serve me, can make a shew too if I list, yes uncle, and ring a peal in my pockets, ding dong, uncle, these are mad foolish ways, but who can help 'em?

Unc. I am amazed.

Lan. Ple sell my Copyhold, for since there are such excellent new nothings, why should I labour? is there no Fairy haunts him, no Rat, nor no old woman?

Unc. You are Valentine.

Val. I think so, I cannot tell, I have been call'd so, and some say Christened, why do you wonder at me, and swell, as if you had met a Sergeant fasting, did you ever know desert want? y'are fools, a little stoop there may be to allay him, he would grow too rank else, a small eclipse to shadow him, but out he must break, glowingly again, and with a great lustre, look you uncle, motion and majesty.

Unc. I am confounded.

Fran. I am of his faith.

Val. Walk by his careles kinsman, and turn again and walk, and look thus Uncle, taking some one by the hand, he loves best, leave them to the mercy of the hog-market, come Frank, Fortune is now my friend, let me instruct thee.

Fran. Good morrow Uncle, I must needs go with him.

Val. Flay me, and turn me out where none inhabits, within two hours I shall be thus again, now wonder on, and laugh at your own ignorance. [Ex. Val. and Fran.]

Unc. I do believe him.

Lan. So do I, and heartily upon my conscience, burie him stark naked, he would rise again, within two hours imbroidered: sow mustard-seeds, and they cannot come up so thick as his new fattens do, and clothes of silver, there's no striving.

Unc. Let him play a while then, and let's search out what hand: ———

Lan. I, there the game lies.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Fountain, Bellamore, and Harebrain.

Foun. Come, let's speak for our selves, we have lodg'd him sure enough, his nakedness dare nor peep out to cross us.

Bel. We can have no admittance.

Hare. Let's in boldly, and use our best arts, who she deigns to favour, we are all content.

Foun. Much good may do her with him, no civil wars.

Bel. By no means, now do I wonder in what old tod Ivie he lies whistling for means, nor clothes he hath none, nor none will trust him, we have made that side sure, teach him a new wooing.

Hare. Say it is his Uncles spite.

Foun. It is all one Gentlemen, 'thas rid us of a fair incumbrance, and makes us look about to our own fortunes. Who are these?

Enter Isabel and Luce.

Isab. Not see this man yet! well, I shall be wiser: but Luce, didst ever know a woman melt so? she is finely hurt to hunt.

Luce. Peace, the three Suitors.

Isab. I could so titter now and laugh, I was lost Luce, and I must love, I know not what; O Cupid, what pretty gins thou hast to halter Woodcocks! and we must into the Country in all haste, Luce.

Luce. For Heavens sake, Mistris.

Isab. Nay, I have done, I must laugh though; but Scholar, I shall teach you.

Foun. 'Tis her sister.

Bel. Save you Ladies.

Isab. Fair met Gentlemen, you are visiting my sister, I assure my self.

Hare. We would fain blefs our eyes.

Isab. Behold and welcom, you would see her?

Foun. 'Tis our business.

Isab. You shall see her, and you shall talk with her.

Luce. She will not see 'em, nor spend a word.

Isab. I'll make her frat a thousand, nay now I have found the sab, I will so scratch her.

Luce. She cannot endure 'em.

Isa. She loves 'em but too dearly, come follow me, I'll bring you toth' party Gentlemen, then make your own conditions.

Luce.

Luce. She is sick you know.

Ifab. I'll make her well, or kill her, and take no idle answer, you are fools then, nor stand off for her state, she'll scorn you all then, but urge her still, and though she fret, still follow her, a widow must be won so.

Bel. She speaks bravely.

Ifab. I would fain have a Brother in law, I love mens company, and if she call for dinner to avoid you, be sure you stay; follow her into her chamber, if she retire to Pray, pray with her, and boldly, like honest lovers.

Luce. This will kill her.

Fount. You have shewed us one way, do but lead the tother.

Ifab. I know you stand o'thorns, come I'll dispatch you.

Luce. If you live after this.

Ifab. I have lost my aim.

Enter Valentine, and Francisco.

Fran. Did you not see 'em since.

Val. No hang 'em, hang 'em.

Fran. Nor will you not be seen by 'em?

Val. Let 'em alone Frank, I'll make 'em their own justice, and a jerker.

Fran. Such base discourteous Dog-whelps.

Val. I shall dog 'em, and double dog 'em, ere I have done.

Fran. Will you go with me, for I would fain find out this piece of bountie, it was the Widows man, that I am certain of.

Val. To what end would you go?

Fran. To give thanks.

Val. Hang giving thanks, hast not thou parts deserve it? it includes a further will to be beholding, beggers can do no more at door, if you will go, there lies your way.

Fran. I hope you will go.

Val. No not in ceremony, and to a woman, with mine own Father, were he living Frank; I would toth' Court with Bears first, if it be that wench, I think it is, for t'other's wifer, I would not be so lookt upon, and laught at, so made a ladder for her wit, to climb upon, for 'tis the tartest tit in Christendom, I know her well Frank, and have buckled with her, so lickt, and stroaked, fear'd upon, and flouted, and shown to Chambermaids, like a strange beast, she had purchased with her penny.

Fran. You are a strange man, but do you think it was a woman?

Val. There's no doubt on't, who can be there to do it else? besides the manner of the circumstances.

Fran. Then such courtesies, who ever does 'em sir, saving your own wisdom, must be more lookt into, and better answered, than with deserving flights, or what we ought to have conferred upon us, men may starve else, means are not gotten now with crying out I am a gallant fellow, a good Souldier, a man of learning, or fit to be employed, immediate blessings cease like miracles, and we must grow by second means, I pray go with me, even as you love me Sir.

Val. I will come to thee, but Frank, I will not stay to hear your fopperies, dispatch those e're I come.

Fran. You will not fail me.

Val. Some two hours hence expect me.

Fran. I thank you, and will look for you. [Exeunt.]

Enter Widow, Shorthose, and Roger.

Wid. Who let in these puppies? you blind rascals, you drunken Knaves several.

Short. Yes forsooth, I'll let 'em in presently, ——— Gentlemen.

Wid. Sprecious, you blown Pudding, bawling Rogue.

Short. I bawl as loud as I can, would you have me fetch 'em upon my back.

Wid. Get 'em out rascal, out with 'em, out, I sweat to have 'em near me.

Short. I should sweat more to carry 'em out.

Roger. They are Gentlemen Madam.

Short. Shall we get 'em into th' butteric, and make 'em drunk?

Wid. Do any thing, so I be eased.

Enter Isabel, Fount. Bella. Hare.

Ifab. Now to her Sir, fear nothing.

Rog. Slip aside boy, I know she loves 'em, howsoever she carries it, and has invited 'em, my young Mistress told me so.

Short. Away to tables then. [Exeunt.]

Ifab. I shall burst with the sport on't.

Fount. You are too curious Madam, too full of preparation, we expect it not.

Bella. Me thinks the house is handsom, every place decent, what need you be vext?

Hare. We are no strangers.

Fount. What though we come e're you expected us, do not we know your entertainments Madam are free, and full at all times?

Wid. You are merry, Gentlemen.

Bel. We come to be merry Madam, and very merry, men love to laugh heartily, and now and then Lady a little of our old plea.

Wid. I am busie, and very busie too, will none deliver me.

Hare. There is a time for all, you may be busie, but when your friends come, you have as much power Madam.

Wid. This is a tedious torment.

Fount. How handsomly this little piece of anger shews upon her! well Madam well, you know not how to grace your self.

Bel. Nay every thing she does breeds a new sweetness.

Wid. I must go up, I must go up, I have a business waits upon me, some wine for the Gentlemen.

Hare. Nay, we'll go with you, we never saw your chambers yet. Ifab. Hold there boyes.

Wid. Say I go to my prayers?

Fount. We'll pray with you, and help your meditations.

Wid. This is boysterous, or say I go to sleep, will you go to sleep with me?

Bel. So suddenly before meat will be dangerous, we know your dinner's ready Lady, you will not sleep.

Wid. Give me my Coach, I will take the air.

Hare. We'll wait on you, and then your meat after a quickned stomach.

Wid. Let it alone, and call my Steward to me, and bid him bring his reckonings into the Orchard, these unmannerly rude puppies ——— [Exit Widow.]

Fount. We'll walk after you and view the pleasure of the place.

Ifab. Let her not rest, for if you give her breath, she'll scorn and flout you, seem how she will, this is the way to win her, be bold and prosper.

Bel. Nay if we do not tire her. ——— [Exeunt.]

Ifab. I'll teach you to worm me, good Lady sister, and peep into my privacies to suspect me, I'll torture you, with that you hate, most daintily, and when I have done that, laugh at that you love most.

Enter Luce.

Luce. What have you done, she chafes and fumes outrageously, and still they persecute her.

Ifab. Long may they do so, I'll teach her to declaim against my pities, why is she not gone out o'th' town, but gives occasion for men to run mad after her?

Luce. I shall be hanged.

Ifab. This in me had been high treason, three at a time, and private in her Orchard! I hope she'll cast her reckonings right now.

Enter Widow.

Wid. Well, I shall find who brought 'em.

Ifab. Ha, ha, ha.

Wid. Why do you laugh sister? I fear me 'tis your trick, 'twas neatly done of you, and well becomes your pleasure.

Ifab. What have you done with 'em?

Wid. Lockt 'em i'th' Orchard, there I'll make 'em dance and caper too, before they get their liberty, unmannerly rude puppies.

Ifab.

Isab. They are somewhat saucy, but yet I'll let 'em out, and once more sound 'em, why were they not beaten out?

Wid. I was about it, but because they came as suiters.

Isab. Why did you not answer 'em?

Wid. They are so impudent they will receive none: More yet! how came these in?

Enter Francisco and Lance.

Lan. At the door, Madam.

Isab. It is that face.

Luce. This is the Gentleman.

Wid. She sent the money to?

Luce. The same.

Isab. I'll leave you, they have some business.

Wid. Nay, you shall stay, Sister, they are strangers both to me; how her face alters!

Isab. I am sorry he comes now.

Wid. I am glad he is here now though. Who would you speak with, Gentlemen?

Lan. You Lady, or your fair Sister there, here's a Gentleman that has received a benefit.

Wid. From whom, Sir?

Lan. From one of you, as he supposes, Madam, your man delivered it.

Wid. I pray go forward.

Lan. And of so great a goodness, that he dares not, without the tender of his thanks and service, pass by the house.

Wid. Which is the Gentleman?

Lan. This, Madam.

Wid. What's your name, Sir?

Fran. They that know me call me Francisco, Lady, one not so proud to scorn so timely a benefit, nor so wretched to hide a gratitude.

Wid. It is well bestowed then.

Fran. Your fair self, or your Sister as it seems, for what desert I dare not know, unless a handsome subject for your charities, or aptness in your noble will to do it, have shew'd upon my wants a timely bounty, which makes me rich in thanks, my best inheritance.

Wid. I am sorry 'twas not mine, this is the Gentlewoman, fie, do not blush, go roundly to the matter, the man is a pretty man.

Isab. You have three fine ones.

Fran. Then to you, dear Lady?

Isab. I pray no more, Sir, if I may persuade you, your only aptness to do this is recompence, and more than I expected.

Fran. But good Lady.

Isab. And for me further to be acquainted with it besides the imputation of vain glory, were greedy thankings of my self, I did it not to be more affected to; I did it, and if it happened where I thought it fitted, I have my end; more to enquire is curious in either of us, more than that suspicious.

Fran. But gentle Lady, 'twill be necessary.

Isab. About the right way nothing, do not fright it, being to pious use and tender sighted, with the blown face of Compliments, it blasts it; had you not come at all, but thought thanks, it had been too much, 'twas not to see your person.

Wid. A brave dissembling Rogue, and how she carries it!

Isa. Though I believe few handsomer; or hear you, though I affect a good tongue well; or try you, though my years desire a friend, that I relieved you.

Wid. A plague cunning quean.

Isab. For so I carried it, my end's too glorious in mine eyes, and bettered the goodness I propounded with opinion.

Wid. Fear her not, Sir.

Isa. You cannot catch me, Sister.

Fran. Will you both teach, and tie my tongue up Lady?

Isa. Let it suffice you have it, it was never mine, whilst good men wanted it.

Lan. This is a Saint sure.

Isa. And if you be not such a one, restore it.

Fran. To commend my self, were more officious than you think my thanks are, to doubt I may be worth your gift a treason, both to mine own good and understanding, I know my mind clear, and though modesty tells me, he that intreats intrudes; yet I must think something, and of some reason, met with your better taste, this had not been else.

Wid. What ward for that, wench?

Isa. Alas, it never touched me.

Fran. Well, gentle Lady, yours is the first money I ever took upon a forced ill manners.

Isa. The last of me, if ever you use other.

Fran. How may I do, and your way to be thought a grateful taker?

Isa. Spend it, and say nothing, your modesty may deserve more.

Wid. O Sister will you bar thankfulness?

Isa. Dogs dance for meat, would ye have men do worse? for they can speak, cry out like Wood-mongers, good deeds by the hundreds, I did it that my best friend should not know it, wine and vain glory does as much as I else, if you will force my merit, against my meaning, use it in well bestowing it, in shewing it came to be a benefit, and was so; and not examining a Woman did it, or to what end, in not believing sometimes your self, when drink and stirring conversation may ripen strange persuasions.

Fran. Gentle Lady, I were a base receiver of a courtesie, and you a worse disposer, were my nature unfurnished of these fore-sights. Ladies honours were ever in my thoughts, unspotted Crimes, their good deeds holy Temples, where the incense burns not; to common eyes your fears are vertuous, and so I shall preserve 'em.

Isa. Keep but this way, and from this place to tell me so, you have paid me; and so I wish you see all fortune. [Exit.

Wid. Fear not, the Woman will be thanked, I do not doubt it. Are you so crafty, carry it so precisely? this is to wake my fears, or to abuse me, I shall look narrowly: despair not Gentlemen, there is an hour to catch a Woman in, if you be wife, so, I must leave you too; Now will I go laugh at my Suitors. [Exit.

Lan. Sir, what courage?

Fran. This Woman is a founder, and cites Statutes to all her benefits.

Lan. I never knew yet, so few years and so cunning, yet believe me she has an itch, but how to make her confess it, for it is a crafty Tit, and plays about you, will not bite home, she would fain, but she dares not; carry your self but so discreetly, Sir, that want or wantonness seem not to search you, and you shall see her open.

Fran. I do love her, and were I rich, would give two thousand pound to wed her wit but one hour, oh 'tis a Dragon, and such a spritely way of pleasure, ha Lance.

Lan. Your ha Lance broken once, you would cry, ho, ho, Lance.

Fran. Some leaden landed Rogue will have this wench now, when all's done, some such youth will carry her, and wear her, greasie out like stuff, some Dunce that knows no more but Markets, and admires nothing but a long charge at Sizes: O the fortunes!

Enter Isabel and Luce.

Lan. Comfort your self.

Luce. They are here yet, and alone too, boldly upon't; nay, Mistress, I still told you, how 'twould find your trust, this 'tis to venture your charity upon a boy.

Lan. Now, what's the matter? stand fast, and like your self.

Isa. Prethee no more Wench.

Luce. What was his want to you?

Isa. 'Tis true.

Luce. Or misery, or say he had been i'th' Cage, was there no mercy to look abroad but yours?

Isa. I am paid for fooling.

Lu. Must every slight companion that can purchase a shew of poverty and beggerly planet fall under your compassion?

Luce.

Lanc. Here's a new matter.

Luce. Nay, you are served but too well, here he staies yet, yet as I live.

Fran. How her face alters on me!

Luce. Out of a confidence I hope.

Ifab. I am glad on't.

Fran. How do you gentle Lady?

Ifab. Much ashamed Sir, (but first stand further off me, y^e are infectious) to find such vanitie, nay almost impudence, where I believ'd a worth: is this your thanks, the gratitude you were so mad to make me, your trim counsel Gentlemen?

Lanc. What, Lady?

Ifab. Take your device again, it will not serve Sir, the woman will not bite, you are finely cozened, drop it no more for shame.

Luce. Do you think you are here Sir amongst your wast-coateers, your base wenches that scratch at such occasions? you are deluded: This is a Gentlewoman of a noble house, born to a better fame than you can build her, and eyes above your pitch.

Fran. I do acknowledge ———

Ifab. Then I beseech you Sir, what could 'see, (speak boldly, and speak truly, shame the Devil,) in my behaviour of such easiness that you durst venture to do this?

Fran. You amaze me, this Ring is none of mine, nor did I drop it.

Luce. I saw you drop it, Sir.

Ifab. I took it up too, still looking when your modesty should miss it, why, what a childish part was this?

Fran. I vow.

Ifab. Vow me no vowes, he that dares do this, has bred himself to boldness, to forswear too; there take your gew-gaw, you are too much pampered, and I repent my part, as you grow older grow wiser if you can, and so farewell Sir.

[Exeunt Isabella, and Luce.

Lanc. Grow wiser if you can? she has put it to you, 'tis a rich Ring, did you drop it?

Fran. Never, ne're saw it afore, Lance.

Lanc. Thereby hangs a tail then: what slight she makes to catch her self! look up Sir, you cannot lose her if you would, how daintily she flies upon the Lure, and cunningly she makes her stops! whistle and she'll come to you.

Fran. I would I were so happy.

Lanc. Maids are Clocks, the greatest Wheel they show, goes slowest to us, and make's hang on tedious hopes; the lesser, which are concealed, being often oyl'd with wishes, flee like desires, and never leave that motion, till the tongue strikes; she is flesh, blood and marrow, young as her purpose, and soft as pity; no Monument to worship, but a mould to make men in, a neat one, and I know how e're she appears now, which is near enough, you are stark blind if you hit not soon at night; she would venture forty pounds more but to feel a Flea in your shape bite her: drop no more Rings forsooth, this was the prettiest thing to know her heart by.

Fran. Thou puttst me in much comfort.

Lanc. Put your self in good comfort, if she do not point you out the way, drop no more Rings, she'll drop her self into you.

Fran. I wonder my Brother comes not.

Lanc. Let him alone, and feed your self on your own fortunes; come be frolick, and let's be monstrous wife and full of counsel, drop no more Rings. [Exeunt.

Enter Widow, Fountain, Bellamore, Harebrain.

Wid. If you will needs be foolish you must be used so: who sent for you? who entertained you Gentlemen? who bid you welcom hither? you came crowding, and impudently bold; prefs on my patience, as if I kept a house for all Companions, and of all sorts: will 'have your wills, will vex me and force my liking from you I ne're ow'd you?

Fount. For all this we will dine with you.

Bel. And for all this will have a better answer from you.

Wid. You shall never, neither have an answer nor dinner, unless you use me with a more staid respect, and stay your time too.

Enter Isabella, Shortose, Roger, Humphrey, Ralph, with dishes of meat.

Ifab. Forward with the meat now.

Rog. Come Gentlemen, march fairly.

Short. Roger, you are a weak Serving-man; your white broath runs from you; fie, how I sweat under this Pile of Beef; an Elephant can do more! Oh for such a back now, and in these times, what might a man arrive at! Goose, grafe you up, and Woodcock march behinde thee, I am almost foundred.

Wid. Who bid you bring the meat yet? away you knaves, I will not dine these two hours: how am I vexed and chafed! go carry it back and tell the Cook, he's an arrant Rascal, to send before I called.

Short. Face about Gentlemen, beat a mournfull march then, and give some supporters, or else I perish ——— [Exeunt Servants.

Ifab. It does me much good to see her chafe thus.

Hare. We can stay Madam, and will stay and dwell here, 'tis good Air.

Fount. I know you have beds enough, and meat you never want.

Wid. You want a little.

Bel. We dare to pretend no. Since you are churlish, we'll give you Physick, you must purge this anger, it burns you and decays you.

Wid. If I had you out once, I would be at the charge of a portcullis for you.

Enter Valentine.

Val. Good morrow noble Lady.

Wid. Good morrow Sir. How sweetly now he looks, and how full manly! what slaves were these to use him so!

Val. I come to look a young man I call Brother.

Wid. Such a one was here Sir, as I remember your own Brother, but gone almost an hour agoe.

Val. Good ee'n then.

Wid. You must not so soon Sir, here be some Gentlemen, it may be you are acquainted with 'em.

Hare. Will nothing make him miserable?

Fount. How glorious!

Bel. It is the very he, does it rain fortunes, or has he a familiar?

Hare. How doggedly he looks too?

Fount. I am beyond my faith, pray let's be going.

Val. Where are these Gentlemen?

Wid. Here.

Val. Yes I know 'em, and will be more familiar.

Bel. Morrow Madam.

Wid. Nay stay and dine.

Val. You shall stay till I talk with you, and not dine neither, but fastingly my fury, you think you have undone me, think so still, and swallow that belief, till you be company for Court-hand Clarks, and starved Attornies, till you break in at playes like Prentices for three a groat, and crack Nuts with the Scholars in peny Rooms again, and fight for Apples, till you return to what I found you, people betray'd into the hands of Fencers, Challengers, Tooth-drawers Bills, and tedious Proclamations in Meal-markets, with throngings to see Cutpurfes: stir not, but hear, and mark, P'le cut your throats else, till Water works, and rumours of New Rivers rid you again and run you into questions who built Thames, till you run mad for Lotteries, and stand there with your Tables to glean the golden Sentences, and cite 'em secretly to Servingmen for sound Essayes, till Taverns allow you but a Towel room to Tipple Wine in, that the Bell hath gone for twice, and Glasses that look like broken promises, tied up with wicker protestations, English Tobacco with half Pipes; nor in half a year once burnt.

and Bisket that Bawds have rubb'd their gums upon like Corals to bring the mark again, tell these hour Rascals so, this most fatal hour will come again, think I sit down the looser.

Wid. Will you stay Gentlemen, a piece of Beef and a cold Capon, that's all, you know you are welcom.

Hum. That was cast to abuse us.

Bel. Steal off, the Devil is in his anger.

Wid. Nay I am sure you will not leave me so discourteously, now I have provided for you.

Val. What do you here? why do ye vex a woman of her goodness, her state and worth? can you bring a fair certificate that you deserve to be her footmen? husbands, you puppies? husbands for Whores and Bawds, away you wind suckers; do not look big, nor prate, nor stay, nor grumble, and when you are gone, seem to laugh at my fury, and slight this Lady, I shall hear, and know this: and though I am not bound to fight for women, as far they are good I dare preserve 'em: be not too bold, for if you be, I'll swinge you monstrously without all pity, your honours now goe, avoid me mainly. [Exit.

Wid. Well Sir, you have delivered me, I thank you, and with your nobleness prevented danger, their tongues might utter, we'll all go and eat Sir.

Val. No, no, I dare not trust my self with women, go to your meat, eat little, take less ease, and tie your body to a daily labour, you may live honestly, and so I thank you. [Exit.

Wid. Well go thy ways, thou art a noble fellow, and some means I must work to have thee know it. [Exit.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Uncle, and Merchant.

Unc. Most certain 'tis her hands that hold him up, and her sister relieves Frank,

Mer. I am glad to hear it: but wherefore do they not pursue this fortune to some fair end?

Unc. The women are too craftie, Valentine too coy, and Frank too bashfull, had any wise man hold of such a blessing, they would strike it out o'th' flint but they would form it.

Enter Widow, and Shorthose.

Mer. The Widow sure, why does she stir so early?

Wid. 'Tis strange, I cannot force him to understand me, and make a benefit of what I would bring him: tell my sister I'll use my devotions at home this morning, she may if she please go to Church.

Short. Hey ho.

Wid. And do you wait upon her with a torch Sir.

Short. Hey ho.

Wid. You lazie Knave.

Short. Here is such a tinkle tanklings that we can ne'er lie quiet, and sleep our prayers out. Ralph, pray empty my right shoe that you made your Chamber-pot, and burn a little Rosemarie in't, I must wait upon my Lady. This morning Prayer has brought me into a consumption, I have nothing left but flesh and bones about me.

Wid. You drouse slave, nothing but sleep and swilling?

Short. Had you been bitten with Bandoz fleas, as I have been, and haunted with the night Mare.

Wid. With an Ale-pot.

Short. You would have little list to morning Prayers, pray take my fellow Ralph, he has a Psalm Book, I am an ingrum man.

Wid. Get you ready quickly, and when she is ready wait upon her handsomely; no more, be gone.

Short. If I do snore my part out — [Exit Short.

Unc. Now to our purposes.

Mer. Good morrow, Madam.

Wid. Good morrow, Gentlemen.

Unc. Good joy and fortune.

Wid. These are good things, and worth my thanks, I thank you Sir.

Mer. Much joy I hope you'll find, we came to gratulate your new knit marriage-band.

Wid. How?

Unc. He's a Gentleman, although he be my kinsman, my fair Niece.

Wid. Niece, Sir?

Unc. Yes Lady, now I may say so, 'tis no shame to you, I say a Gentleman, and winking at some light fancies, which you most happily may affect him for, as bravely carried, as nobly bred and managed.

Wid. What's all this? I understand you not, what Niece, what marriage-knot?

Unc. I'll tell plainly, you are my Niece, and Valentine the Gentleman has made you so by marriage.

Wid. Marriage?

Unc. Yes Lady, and 'twas a noble and vertuous part, to take a falling man to your protection, and buoy him up again to all his glories.

Wid. The men are mad.

Mer. What though he wanted these outward things, that flie away like shadows, was not his mind a full one, and a brave one? You have wealth enough to give him gloss and outside, and he wit enough to give way to love a Lady.

Unc. I ever thought he would do well.

Mer. Nay, I knew how ever he wheel'd about like a loose Cabine, he would charge home at length, like a brave Gentleman; Heavens blessing o' your heart Lady, we are so bound to honour you, in all your service so devoted to you.

Unc. Do not look so strange Widow, it must be known, better a general joy; no stirring here yet, come, come, you cannot hide 'em.

Wid. Pray be not impudent, these are the finest toys, be like I am married then?

Mer. You are in a miserable estate in the worlds account else, I would not for your wealth it come to doubting.

Wid. And I am great with child?

Unc. No, great they say not, but 'tis a full opinion you are with child, and great joy among the Gentlemen, your husband hath bestrid himself fairly.

Mer. Alas, we know his private hours of entrance, how long, and when he stayed, could name the bed too, where he paid down his first-fruits.

Wid. I shall believe anon.

Unc. And we consider for some private reasons, you would have it private, yet take your own pleasure; and so good morrow, my best Niece, my sweetest.

Wid. No, no, pray stay.

Unc. I know you would be with him, love him, and love him well.

Mer. You'll find him noble, this may beget —

Unc. It must needs work upon her.

[Exit Uncle, and Mer.

Wid. These are fine bobs i'faith, married, and with child too! how long has this been, I trow? they seem grave fellows, they should not come to flout; married, and bedded, the world takes notice too! where lies this May-game? I could be vex't extreamly now, and rail too, but 'tis to no end, though I itch a little, must I be scratcht I know not how, who waits there?

Enter Humphrey, a Servant.

Hum. Madam.

Wid. Make ready my Coach quickly, and wait you only, and hark you Sir, be secret and speedy, inquire out where he lies.

Hum. I shall do it, Madam.

Wid. Married, and got with child in a dream! 'tis fine i'faith, sure he that did this, would do better waking.

[Exit.

Enter

Enter Valentine, Fran. Lance, and a Boy with a Torch.

Val. Hold thy Torch handsomely: how dost thou Frank?
Peter Bassel, bear up.

Fran. You have fried me soundly, Sack do you call this drink?

Val. A shrewd dog, Frank, will bite abundantly.

Lan. Now could I fight, and fight with thee.

Val. With me, thou man of Memphis?

Lan. But that thou art mine own natural master, yet my sack says thou art no man, thou art a Pagan, and pawnest thy land, which a noble cause.

Val. No arms, nor arms, good Lancelot, dear Lance, no fighting here, we will have Lands boy, Livings, and Titles, thou shalt be a Vice-Roy, hang fighting, hang't 'tis out of fashion.

Lan. I would fain labour you into your lands again, go to, it is behoveful.

Fran. Fic Lance, fie.

Lan. I must beat some body, and why not my Master, before a stranger? charity and beating begins at home.

Val. Come, thou shalt beat me.

Lan. I will not be compel'd, and you were two Masters, I scorn the motion.

Val. Wilt thou sleep?

Lan. I scorn sleep.

Val. Wilt thou go eat?

Lan. I scorn meat, I come for rompering, I come to wait upon my charge discreetly; for look you, if you will not take your Mortgage again, here do I lie S^t George, and so forth.

Val. And here do I S^t George, bestride the Dragon, thus with my Lance.

Lan. I sting, I sting with my tail.

Val. Do you so, do you so, Sir? I shall tail you presently.

Fran. By no means, do not hurt him.

Val. Take this Nelson, and now rise, thou Maiden Knight of Malligo, lace on thy Helmet of enchanted Sack, and charge again.

Lan. I'll play no more, you abuse me, will you go?

Fran. I'll bid you good morrow, Brother, for sleep I cannot, I have a thousand fancies.

Val. Now thou art arrived, go bravely to the matter, and do something of worth, Frank.

Lan. You shall hear from us. [Exeunt Lance and Frank.]

Val. This Rogue, if he had been sober, sure had beaten me, is the most tittish Knave.

Enter Uncle and Merchant, Boy with a Torch.

Unc. 'Tis he.

Mer. Good morrow.

Val. Why, Sir, good morrow to you too, and you be so lusty.

Unc. You have made your Brother a fine man, we met him.

Val. I made him a fine Gentleman, he was a fool before, brought up amongst the midst of Small-Beer-Brew-houses, what would you have with me?

Mer. I come to tell you, your latest hour is come.

Val. Are you my sentence?

Mer. The sentence of your state.

Val. Let it be hang'd then, and let it be hang'd high enough, I may not see it.

Unc. A gracious resolution.

Val. What would you have else with me, will you go drink, and let the world slide, Uncle? Ha, ha, ha, boyes, drink Sack like Whey, boyes.

Mer. Have you no feeling, Sir?

Val. Come hither Merchant: make me a supper, thou most reverent Land-catcher, a supper of forty pounds.

Mer. What then, Sir?

Val. Then bring thy Wife along, and thy fair Sisters, thy Neighbours and their Wives, and all their trinkets, let me have forty Trumpets, and such Wine, we'll laugh at all the miseries of Mortgage, and then in state I'll render thee an answer.

Mer. What say you to this?

Unc. I dare not say, nor think neither.

Mer. Will you redeem your state, speak to the point, Sir?

Val. Not, not if it were mine heir in the Turks Gallies.

Mer. Then I must take an order?

Val. Take a thousand, I will not keep it, nor thou shalt not have it, because thou camest i'th' nick, thou shalt not have it, go take possession, and be sure you hold it, hold fast with both hands, for there be those hounds uncoupled, will ring you such a knell, go down in glory, and march upon my land, and cry, All's mine; cry as the Devil did, and be the Devil, mark what an Echo follows, build fine March-panes, to entertain Sir Silk-worm and his Lady, and pull the Chappel down, and raise a Chamber for Mistress Silver-pin, to lay her belly in, mark what an Earthquake comes. Then foolish Merchant my Tenants are no Subjects, they obey nothing, and they are people too never Christened, they know no Law nor Conscience, they'll devour thee; and thou mortal, the stopple, they'll confound thee within three days; no bit nor memory of what thou wert, no not the Wart upon thy Nose there, shall be e're heard of more; go take possession, and bring thy Children down to rost like Rabbets, they love young Toasts and Butter, Bow-bell Suckers; as they love mischief, and hate Law, they are Cannibals; bring down thy kindred too, that be not fruitful, there be those Mandrakes that will mollifie 'em, go take possession. I'll go to my Chamber, afore Boy go.

[Exeunt.]

Mer. He's mad sure.

Unc. He's half drunk sure: and yet I like this unwillingness to lose it, this looking back.

Mer. Yes, if he did it handsomely, but he's so harsh and strange.

Unc. Believe it 'tis his drink, Sir, and I am glad his drink has thrust it out.

Mer. Cannibals? if ever I come to view his Regiment, if fair terms may be had.

Unc. He tells you true, Sir, they are a bunch of the most boisterous Rascals disorder ever made, let 'em be mad once, the power of the whole Country cannot cool 'em, be patient but a while.

Mer. As long as you will, Sir, before I buy a bargain of such Runts, I'll buy a Colledge for Bears, and live among 'em.

Enter Francisco, Lance, Boy with a Torch.

Fran. How dost thou now?

Lan. Better than I was, and straighter, but my head's a Hog'shead still, it rowls and tumbles.

Fran. Thou wert cruelly paid.

Lan. I may live to require it, put a Snaffle of Sack in my mouth and then ride me very well.

Fran. 'Twas all but sport, I'll tell thee what I mean now, I mean to see this Wench.

Lan. Where a Devil is she? and there were two, 'twere better.

Fran. Dost thou hear the Bell ring?

Lan. Yes, yes.

Fran. Then she comes to prayers, early each morning thither: Now if I could but meet her, for I am of another mettle now.

Enter Isabel, and Shorthose with a Torch.

Lan. What light's yon?

Fran. Ha, 'tis a light, take her by the hand and court her.

Lan. Take her below the girdle, you'll never speed else, it comes on this way still, oh that I had but such an opportunity in a Saw-pit, how it comes on, comes on! 'tis here.

Fran. 'Tis she: fortune I kiss thy hand— Good morrow Lady.

Isa. What voice is that, Sirra, do you sleep as you go,

'tis he, I am glad on't, Why, Short-hose?

Short. Yes forsooth, I was dreamt, I was going to Church.

Lan. She sees you as plain as I do.

Isab. Hold the torch up.

Short. Here's nothing but a stall, and a Butchers Dog asleep in't, where did you see the voice?

Fran. She looks still angry.

Lan. To her and meet Sir.

Isab. Here, here.

Fran. Yes Lady, never blefs your self, I am but a man, and like an honest man, now I will thank you ———

Isab. What do you mean, who sent for you, who desired you?

Short. Shall I put out the Torch forsooth?

Isab. Can I not go about my private meditations, Ha, but such companions as you must ruffle me? you had best go with me Sir?

Fran. 'Twas my purpose.

Isab. Why, what an impudence is this! you had best, being so near the Church, provide a Priest, and perswade me to marry you.

Fran. It was my meaning, and such a husband, so loving, and so careful, my youth, and all my fortunes shall arrive at ——— Hark you?

Isab. 'Tis strange you should be thus unmannerly, turn home again sirra, you had best now force my man to lead your way.

Lan. Yes marry shall he Lady, forward my friend.

Isab. This is a pretty Riot, it may grow to a rape.

Fran. Do you like that better? I can ravish you an hundred times, and never hurt you.

Short. I see nothing, I am asleep still, when you have done tell me, and then I'll wake Mistress.

Isab. Are you in earnest Sir, do you long to be hang'd?

Fran. Yes by my troth Lady in these fair Tressels.

Isab. Shall I call out for help?

Fran. No by no means, that were a weak trick Lady, I'll kiss, and stop your mouth.

Isab. You'll answer all these?

Fran. A thousand kisses more.

Isab. I was never abused thus, you had best give out too, that you found me willing, and say I doted on you?

Fran. That's known already, and no man living shall now carry you from me.

Isab. This is fine i'faith.

Fran. It shall be ten times finer.

Isab. Well, seeing you are so valiant, keep your way, I will to Church.

Fran. And I will wait upon you.

Isab. And it is most likely there's a Priest, if you dare venture as you profess, I would wish you look about you, to do these rude tricks, for you know the recompences, and trust not to my mercy.

Fran. But I will Lady.

Isab. For I'll so handle you.

Fran. That's it I look for.

Lan. Afore thou dream.

Short. Have you done?

Isab. Go on Sir, and follow if you dare.

Fran. If I do not, hang me.

Lan. 'Tis all thine own boy, an 'twere a million, god a mercy Sack, when would small Beer have done this?

Knocking within. Enter Valentine.

Val. Whose that that knocks and bounces, what a Devil ails you, is hell broke loose, or do you keep an Iron mill?

Enter a Servant.

Ser. 'Tis a Gentlewoman Sir that must needs speak with you.

Val. A Gentlewoman? what Gentlewoman, what have I to do with Gentlewomen?

Ser. She will not be answered Sir.

Val. Fling up the bed and let her in, I'll try how gentle

she is ———

[Exit Servant.

This Sack has fill'd my head so full of bables, I am almost mad; what Gentlewoman should this be? I hope she has brought me no butter print along with her to lay to my charge, if she have 'tis all one, I'll forswear it.

Enter Widow.

Wid. O you're a noble Gallant, send off your Servant pray.

[Exit Servant.

Val. She will not ravish me? by this light she looks as sharp set as a Sparrow hawk, what wouldst thou woman?

Wid. O you have used me kindly, and like a Gentleman, this is to trust to you.

Val. Trust to me, for what?

Wid. Because I said in jest once, you were a handsome man, one I could like well, and fooling, made you believe I loved you, and might be brought to marrie.

Val. The widow is drunk too.

Wid. You out of this, which is a fine discretion, give out the matter's done, you have won and wed me, and that you have put, fairly put for an heir too, these are fine rumours to advance my credit: i'th' name of mischief what did you mean?

Val. That you loved me, and that you might be brought to marrie me? why, what a Devil do you mean, widow?

Wid. 'Twas a fine trick too, to tell the world though you had enjoyed your first wish you wished, the wealth you aimed at, that I was poor, which is most true, I am, have sold my lands, because I love not those vexations, yet for mine honours sake, if you must be prating, and for my credits sake in the Town.

Val. I tell thee widow, I like thee ten times better, now thou hast no Lands, for now thy hopes and cares lye on thy husband, if e're thou marryest more.

Wid. Have not you married me, and for this main cause, now as you report it, to be your Nurse?

Val. My Nurse? why, what am I grown to, give me the Glass, my Nurse.

Wid. You n'er said truer, I must confess I did a little favour you, and with some labour might have been perswaded, but when I found I must be hourly troubled, with making broths, and dawbing your decayes with swadling, and with stitching up your ruines, for the world so reports.

Val. Do not provoke me.

Wid. And half an eye may see.

Val. Do not provoke me, the world's a lying world, and thou shalt find it, have a good heart, and take a strong faith to thee, and mark what follows, my Nurse, yes, you shall rock me: Widow I'll keep you waking.

Wid. You are disposed Sir.

Val. Yes marry am I Widow, and you shall feel it, nay and they touch my freehold, I am a Tiger.

Wid. I think so.

Val. Come.

Wid. Whither?

Val. Any whither.

[Sings.

The fit's upon me now, the fit's upon me now,
Come quickly gentle Ladie, the fit's upon me now,
The world shall know they're fools,
And so shalt thou do too,
Let the Cobler meddle with his tools,
The fit's upon me now.

Take me quickly, while I am in this vein, away with me, for if I have but two hours to consider, all the widows in the world cannot recover me.

Wid. If you will, go with me Sir.

Val. Yes marrie will I, but 'tis in anger yet, and I will marrie thee, do not cross me; yes, and I will lie with thee, and get a whole bundle of babies, and I will kiss thee, stand still and kiss me handsomely, but do not provoke me, stir neither hand nor foot, for I am dangerous, I drunk sack yesternight, do not allure me: Thou art no widow of this world, come in pitie, and in spite I'll marrie thee, not a word more, and I may be brought to love thee.

[Exeunt.

Enter

Enter Merchant, and Uncle, at several doors.

Mer. Well met again, and what good news yet?

Unc. Faith nothing.

Mer. No fruits of what we sowed?

Unc. Nothing I hear of.

Mer. No turning in this tide yet?

Unc. 'Tis all flood, and till that fall away, there's no expecting.

Enter Fran. Isab. Lance, Shorthose, a torch.

Mer. Is not this his younger Brother?

Unc. With a Gentlewoman the widow's sister, as I live he smiles, he has got good hold, why well said Frank i' faith, let's stay and mark.

Isab. Well, you are the prettiest youth, and so you have handled me, think you ha' me sure.

Fran. As sure as wedlock.

Isab. You had best lie with me too.

Fran. Yes indeed will I, and get such black ey'd boyes.

Unc. God a Mercy, Frank.

Isab. This is a merrie world, poor simple Gentlewomen that think no harm, cannot walk about their business, but they must be caught up I know not how.

Fran. I'll tell you, and I'll instruct ye too, have I caught you, Mistress?

Isab. Well, and it were not for pure pity, I would give you the slip yet, but being as it is.

Fran. It shall be better.

Enter Valentine, Widow, and Ralph, with a torch.

Isab. My sister, as I live, your Brother with her! sure, I think you are the Kings takers.

Unc. Now it works.

Val. Nay, you shall know I am a man.

Wid. I think so.

Val. And such proof you shall have.

Wid. I pray speak softly.

Val. I'll speak it out Widow, yes and you shall confess too, I am no Nurse-child, I went for a man, a good one; if you can beat me out o'th' pit.

Wid. I did but jest with you.

Val. I'll handle you in earnest, and so handle you: Nay, when my credit calls.

Wid. Are you mad?

Val. I am mad, I am mad.

Fran. Good morrow, Sir, I like your preparation.

Val. Thou hast been at it, Frank,

Fran. Yes faith, 'tis done Sir.

Val. Along with me then, never hang an arse, widow.

Isab. 'Tis to no purpose, sister.

Val. Well said Black-brows, advance your torches Gentlemen.

Unc. Yes, yes Sir.

Val. And keep your ranks.

Mer. Lance, carrie this before him.

Unc. Carrie it in state.

Enter Musicians, Fount. Hare. Bel.

Val. What are you, Musicians? I know your coming, and what are those behind you?

Musi. Gentlemen that sent us to give the Lady a good morrow.

Val. O I know them, come boy sing the song I taught you, And sing it lustily, come forward Gentlemen, you're welcom, Welcom, now we are all friends, go get the Priest ready, And let him not be long, we have much business:

Come Frank, rejoyce with me, thou hast got the start boy, But I'll so tumble after, come my friends lead, Lead cheerfully, and let your Fiddles ring boyes, My follies and my fancies have an end here, Display the morgage Lance, Merchant I'll pay you, And every thing shall be in joynt again.

Unc. Afore, afore.

Val. And now confess, and know,

Wit without Money, sometimes gives the blow.

[Exeunt.]

The Scene Flanders.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter a Merchant and Herman.

Mer. I S he then taken?

Her. And brought back even now, Sir.

Mer. He was not in disgrace?

Her. No man more lov'd,

Nor more deserv'd it, being the only man
 That durst be honest in this Court.

Mer. Indeed

We have heard abroad, Sir, that the State hath suffered
 A great change, since the Countesses death.

Her. It hath, Sir.

Mer. My five years absence hath kept me a stranger
 So much to all the occurrences of my Country,
 As you shall bind me for some short relation
 To make me understand the present times.

Her. I must begin then with a War was made
 And seven years with all cruelty continued
 Upon our Flanders by the Duke of Brabant,
 The cause grew thus: during our Earls minority,
Wolfort, (who now usurps) was employed thither
 To treat about a match between our Earl
 And the Daughter and Heir of Brabant: during which treaty
 The Brabander pretends, this Daughter was Stolen from his Court, by practice of our State,
 Though we are all confirm'd, 'twas a fought quarrel
 To lay an unjust gripe upon this Earldom,
 It being here believ'd the Duke of Brabant

Had no such loss. This War upon't proclaim'd,
 Our Earl, being then a Child, although his Father
 Good Gerrard liv'd, yet in respect he was Chosen by the Countesses favour, for her Husband,
 And but a Gentleman, and Florez holding
 His right unto this Country from his Mother,
 The State thought fit in this defensive War,
Wolfort being then the only man of mark,
 To make him General.

Mer. Which place we have heard
 He did discharge with honour.

Her. I, so long,
 And with so blest successes, that the Brabander
 Was forc't (his treasures wasted, and the choice
 Of his best men of Armes tyr'd, or cut off)
 To leave the field, and found a base retreat
 Back to his Country: but so broken both
 In mind and means, er'e to make head again,
 That hitherto he sits down by his loss,
 Not daring, or for honour, or revenge
 Again to tempt his fortune. But this Victory
 More broke our State, and made a deeper hurt
 In Flanders, than the greatest overthrow
 She ever receiv'd: For Wolfort, now beholding
 Himself, and actions, in the flattering glass
 Of self-deservings, and that cherish't by

The strong assurance of his power, for then
All Captains of the Army were his creatures;
The common Souldier too at his devotion,
Made so by full indulgence to their rapines
And secret bounties, this strength too well known
And what it could effect, soon put in practice,
As further'd by the Child-hood of the Earl:
And their improvidence, that might have pierc't
The heart of his designs, gave him occasion
To seize the whole, and in that plight you find it.

Mer. Sir, I receive the knowledge of thus much,
As a choice favour from you.

Her. Only I must add,
Bruges holds out.

Mer. Whither, Sir, I am going,
For there last night I had a ship put in,
And my Horse waits me.

Her. I wish you a good journey.

Enter Wolfort, Hubert.

Wol. What? Hubert stealing from me? who disarm'd him?
It was more than I commanded; take your sword,
I am best guarded with it in your hand;
I have seen you use it nobly.

Hub. And will turn it
On my own bosom, ere it shall be drawn
Unworthily or rudely.

Wol. Would you leave me
Without a farewell, Hubert? flie a friend
Unwearied in his study to advance you?
What have I e're possess'd which was not yours?
Or either did not court you to command it?
Who ever yet arriv'd to any grace,
Reward or trust from me, but his approaches
Were by your fair reports of him prefer'd?
And what is more I made my self your Servant,
In making you the Master of those secrets
Which not the rack of Conscience could draw from me,
Nor I, when I askt mercy, trust my prayers with;
Yet after these assurances of love,
These ties and bonds of friendship, to forsake me?
Forsake me as an enemy? come you must Give me a reason.

Hub. Sir, and so I will,
If I may do't in private: and you hear it.

Wol. All leave the room: you have your will; sit down
And use the liberty of our first friendship.

Hub. Friendship? when you prov'd Traitor first, that va-
Nor do I owe you any thought, but hate,
I know my flight hath forfeited my head;
And so I may make you first understand
What a strange monster you have made your self,
I welcome it.

Wol. To me this is strange language.

Hub. To you? why what are you?

Wol. Your Prince and Master,
The Earl of Flanders.

Hub. By a proper title!
Rais'd to it by cunning, circumvention, force,
Blood, and proscriptions.

Wol. And in all this wisdom,
Had I not reason? when by Gerrards plots
I should have first been call'd to a strict accompt
How, and which way I had consum'd that mass
Of money, as they term it, in the War,
Who underhand had by his Ministers
Detraacted my great action, made my faith
And loyalty suspected, in which failing
He fought my life by practice.

Hub. With what fore-head
Do you speak this to me? who (as I know't)
Must, and will say 'tis false.

Wol. My Guard there.

Hub. Sir, you bad me sit, and promis'd you would hear,

Which I now say you shall; not a sound more,
For I that am contemner of mine own,
Am Master of your life; then here's a Sword
Between you, and all aids, Sir, though you blind
The credulous beast, the multitude, you pass not
These gross untruths on me.

Wol. How? gross untruths?

Hub. I, and it is favourable language,
They had been in a mean man lyes, and foul ones.

Wol. You take strange Licence.

Hub. Yes, were not those rumours
Of being called unto your answer, spread
By your own followers? and weak Gerrard wrought
(But by your cunning practice) to believe
That you were dangerous; yet not to be
Punish'd by any formal course of Law,
But first to be made sure, and have your crimes
Laid open after, which your quaint train taking
You fled unto the Camp, and their crav'd humbly
Protection for your innocent life, and that,
Since you had scap'd the fury of the War,
You might not fall by treason: and for proof,
You did not for your own ends make this danger;
Some that had been before by you suborn'd,
Came forth and took their Oaths they had been hir'd
By Gerrard to your Murther. This once heard,
And easily believ'd, th' enraged Souldier
Seeing no further than the outward-man,
Snatch'd hastily his Arms, ran to the Court,
Kill'd all that made resistance, cut in pieces
Such as were Servants, or thought friends to Gerrard,
Vowing the like to him.

Wol. Will you yet end?

Hub. Which he foreseeing, with his Son, the Earl;
Forsook the City; and by secret wayes
As you give out, and we would gladly have it,
Escap'd their fury: though 'tis more than fear'd
They fell amongst the rest; Nor stand you there
To let us only mourn the impious means
By which you got it, but your cruelties since
So far transcend your former bloody ills,
As if compar'd, they only would appear
Essays of mischief; do not stop your ears,
More are behind yet.

Wol. O repeat them not,
'Tis Hell to hear them nam'd.

Hub. You should have thought;
That Hell would be your punishment when you did them,
A Prince in nothing but your princely lusts,
And boundless rapines.

Wol. No more I beseech you.

Hub. Who was the Lord of house or land, that stood
Within the prospect of your covetous eye?

Wol. You are in this to me a greater Tyrant,
Than e're I was to any.

Hub. I end thus

The general grief: now to my private wrong;
The loss of Gerrards Daughter Faqueline:
The hop'd for partner of my lawful Bed;
Your cruelty hath frighted from mine arms;
And her I now was wandring to recover.
Think you that I had reason now to leave you,
When you are grown so justly odious,
That ev'n my stay here with your grace and favour;
Makes my life irksome? here, surely take it,
And do me but this fruit of all your friendship;
That I may dye by you, and not your Hang-man.

Wol. O Hubert, these your words and reasons have
As well drawn drops of blood from my griev'd heart,
As these tears from mine eyes;
Despise them not.

By all that's sacred, I am serious, Hubert,
You now have made me sensible, what furies,
Whips, Hangmen, and Tormentors a bad man

Do's ever bear about him : let the good
That you this day have done, be ever number'd
The first of your best actions ;
Can you think,
Where Goswin is or Gerrard, or your love,
Or any else, or all that are proscrib'd ?
I will resign, what I usurp, or have
Unjustly forc'd ; the dayes I have to live
Are too too few to make them satisfaction
With any penitence : yet I vow to practise
All of a man.

Hub. O that your heart and tongue
Did not now differ !

Wol. By my griefs they do not.
Take the good pains to search them out : 'tis worth it,
You have made clean a Leper : trust me you have,
And made me once more fit for the society,
I hope of good men.

Hub. Sir, do not abuse
My aptness to believe.

Wol. Suspect not you
A faith that's built upon so true a sorrow,
Make your own safety : ask them all the ties
Humanity can give, Hemskirk too shall
Along with you to this so wish'd discovery,
And in my name profess all that you promise ;
And I will give you this help to't : I have
Of late receiv'd certain intelligence,
That some of them are in or about Bruges
To be found out : which I did then interpret,
The cause of that Towns standing out against me ;
But now am glad, it may direct your purpose
Of giving them their safety, and me peace.

Hub. Be constant to your goodness, and you have it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter 3. Merchants.

1 Mer. 'Tis much that you deliver of this Goswin.

2 Mer. But short of what I could, yet have the Country
Confirm'd it true, and by a general oath,
And not a man hazard his credit in it :
He bears himself with such a confidence
As if he were the Master of the Sea,
And not a wind upon the Sailers compass,
But from one part or other was his factor,
To bring him in the best commodities,
Merchant e're ventur'd for.

1. 'Tis strange.

2. And yet

This do's in him deserve the least of wonder,
Compared with other his peculiar fashions,
Which all admire : he's young, and rich, at least
Thus far reputed so, that since he liv'd
In Bruges, there was never brought to harbour
So rich a Bottom, but his bill would pass
Unquestion'd for her lading.

3 Mer. Yet he still Continues a good man.

2 Mer. So good, that but
To doubt him, would be held an injury
Or rather malice, with the best that traffique ;
But this is nothing, a great stock, and fortune,
Crowning his judgement in his undertakings
May keep him upright that way : But that wealth
Should want the power to make him dote on it,
Or youth teach him to wrong it, best commends
His constant temper ; for his outward habit
'Tis suitable to his present course of life :
His table furnish'd well, but not with dainties
That please the appetite only for their rareness,
Or their dear price : nor given to wine or women,
Beyond his health, or warrant of a man,

I mean a good one : and so loves his state
He will not hazard it at play ; nor lend
Upon the assurance of a well-pen'd Letter,
Although a challenge second the denial
From such as make th' opinion of their valour
Their means of feeding.

1 Mer. These are ways to thrive,
And the means not curs'd.

2 Mer. What follows, this Makes many venturers with him, in their wishes,
For his prosperity : for when desert
Or reason leads him to be liberal,
His noble mind and ready hand contend
Which can add most to his free courtesies,
Or in their worth, or speed to make them so.
Is there a Virgin of good fame wants dower ?
He is a Father to her ; or a Souldier
That in his Countreys service, from the war
Hath brought home only scars, and want ? his house
Receives him, and relieves him, with that care
As if what he possess'd had been laid up
For such good uses, and he steward of it.
But I should lose my self to speak him further
And stale in my relation, the much good
You may be witness of, if your remove
From Bruges be not speedy.

1 Mer. This report
I do assure you will not hasten it,
Nor would I wish a better man to deal with
For what I am to part with.

3 Mer. Never doubt it,
He is your man and ours, only I wish
His too much forwardness to embrace all bargains
Sink him not in the end.

2 Mer. Have better hopes,
For my part I am confident ; here he comes.

Enter Goswin, and the fourth Merchant.

Gos. Itake it at your own rates, your wine of Cyprus,
But for your Candy sugars, they have met
With such foul weather, and are priz'd so high
I cannot save in them.

4. Mer. I am unwilling
To seek another Chapman : make me offer
Of something near price, that may assure me
You can deal for them.

Gos. I both can, and will,
But not with too much loss ; your bill of lading
Speaks of two hundred chests, valued by you
At thirty thousand gilders, I will have them
At twenty eight ; so, in the payment of Three thousand sterling, you fall only in
Two hundred pound.

4 Mer. You know, they are so cheap. —

Gos. Why look you ; I'll deal fairly, there's in prison,
And at your suit, a Pirat, but unable
To make you satisfaction, and past hope
To live a week, if you should prosecute
What you can prove against him : set him free,
And you shall have your mony to a Stiver,
And present payment.

4 Mer. This is above wonder,
A Merchant of your rank, that have at Sea
So many Bottoms in the danger of
These water-Thieves, should be a means to save 'em,
It more importing you for your own safety
To be at charge to scour the Sea of them
Than stay the sword of justice, that is ready
To fall on one so conscious of his guilt
That he dares not deny it.

Gos. You mistake me,
If you think I would cherish in this Captain
The wrong he did to you, or any man ;
I was lately with him, (having first, from others

True testimony been assured a man
Of more desert never put from the shore)
I read his letters of Mart from this State granted
For the recovery of such losses, as
He had receiv'd in Spain, 'twas that he aim'd at,
Not at three tuns of wine, bisket, or beef,
Which his necessity made him take from you.
If he had pillag'd you near, or sunk your ship,
Or thrown your men o'r-board, then he deserv'd
The Laws extreamest rigour. But since want
Of what he could not live without, compell'd him
To that he did (which yet our State calls death)
I pity his misfortune; and to work you
To some compassion of them, I come up
To your own price: save him, the goods are mine;
If not, seek else-where, I'll not deal for them.

4 Mer. Well Sir, for your love, I will once be led
To change my purpose.

Gof. For your profit rather.

4 Mer. I'll presently make means for his discharge,
Till when, I leave you.

2 Mer. What do you think of this?

1 Mer. As of a deed of noble pity: guided
By a strong judgement.

2 Mer. Save you Master Gofwin.

Gofwin. Good day to all.

2 Mer. We bring you the refusall
Of more Commodities.

Gof. Are you the owners
Of the ship that last night put into the Harbour?

1 Mer. Both of the ship, and lading.

Gof. What's the fraught?

1 Mer. Indico, Cochineel, choise Chyna stuffs.

3 Mer. And cloath of Gold brought from Cambal.

Gof. Rich lading,

For which I were your Chapman, but I am
Already out of cash.

1 Mer. I'll give you day

For the moiety of all.

Gof. How long?

3 Mer. Six months.

Gof. 'Tis a fair offer: which (if we agree
About the prices) I, with thanks accept of,
And will make present payment of the rest;
Some two hours hence I'll come aboard.

1 Mer. The Gunner shall speak you welcom.

Gof. I'll not fail.

3 Mer. Good morrow.

[Ex. Merch.]

Gof. Heaven grant my Ships a safe return, before
The day of this great payment: as they are Expected three months sooner: and my credit
Stands good with all the world.

Enter Gerrard.

Ger. Bless my good Master,
The prayers of your poor Beadsmen ever shall
Be sent up for you.

Gof. God o' mercy Clause,
There's something to put thee in mind hereafter
To think of me.

Ger. May he that gave it you
Reward you for it, with encrease, good Master.

Gof. I thrive the better for thy prayers.

Ger. I hope so.

This three years have I fed upon your bounties,
And by the fire of your blest charity warm'd me,
And yet, good Master, pardon me, that must,
Though I have now receiv'd your alms, presume
To make one sute more to you.

Gof. What is't Clause?

Ger. Yet do not think me impudent I beseech you,
Since hitherto your charity hath prevented
My begging your relief, 'tis not for mony
Nor cloaths (good Master) but your good word for me.

Gof. That thou shalt have, Clause, for I think thee honest.

Ger. To morrow then (dear Mr.) take the trouble
Of walking early unto Beggars Bush,

And as you see me, among others (Brethren
In my affliction) when you are demanded
Which you like best among us, point out me,
And then pass by, as if you knew me not.

Gof. But what will that advantage thee?

Ger. O much Sir,

'Twill give me the preheminance of the rest;
Make me a King among 'em, and protect me
From all abuse, such as are stronger, might Offer my age; Sir, at your better leisure
I will inform you further of the good
It may do to me.

Gof. 'Troth thou mak'st me wonder;
Have you a King and common-wealth among you?

Ger. We have, and there are States are govern'd worse.

Gof. Ambition among Beggars?

Ger. Many great ones

Would part with half their states, to have the place,
And credit to beg in the first file, Master:
But shall I be so much bound to your furtherance
In my Petition?

Gof. That thou shalt not miss of,
Nor any worldly care make me forget it,
I will be early there.

Ger. Heaven bless my Master.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

*Enter Higgen, Ferret, Prig, Clause, Jacqueline,
Snap, Ginks, and other beggars.*

Hig. Come Princes of the ragged regiment,
You o' the blood, Prig my most upright Lord,
And these (what name or title, e're they bear)
Farkman, or Patrico, Cranke, or Clapperdudgeon,
Frater, or Abram man; I speak to all
That stand in fair Election for the title
Of King of Beggars, with the command adjoining,
Higgen, your Orator, in this Inter-regnum,
That whilom was your Dommerer, doth beseech you
All to stand fair, and put your selves in rank,
That the first Comer, may at his first view
Make a free choice, to say up the question.

Fer. Pr. 'Tis done Lord Higgen.

Hig. Thanks to Prince Prig, Prince Ferret.

Fer. Well, pray my Masters all, Ferret be chosen,
Y'are like to have a mercifull mild Prince of me.

Prig. A very tyrant, I, an arrant tyrant,
If e're I come to reign; therefore look to't,
Except you do provide me hum enough
And Lour to bouze with: I must have my Capons
And Turkeys brought me in, with my green Geese,
And Ducklings i'th' season: fine fat chickens,
Or if you chance where an eye of tame Phefants
Or Partridges are kept, see they be mine,
Or straight I seize on all your priviledge,
Places, revenues, offices, as forfeit,
Call in your crutches, wooden legs, false bellies,
Fore'd eyes and teeth, with your dead arms; not leave you
A dirty clout to beg with o' your heads,
Or an old rag with Butter, Frankincense,
Brimston and Rozen, birdlime, blood, and cream,
To make you an old sore; not so much soap
As you may some with i'th' Falling-sickness;
The very bag you bear, and the brown dish
Shall be escheated: All your daintiest Dells too
I will desflower, and take your dearest Doxyes
From your warm sides; and then some one cold night
I'll watch you what old barn you go to roost in,

And there I'll smother you all i'th' musty hay.

Hig. This is tyrant-like indeed: But what would
Of Clause be here, if either of them should reign? (Ginks)

Clau. Best ask an Ass, if he were made a Camel,
What he would be; or a dog, and he were a Lyon.

Ginks. I care not what you are, Sirs, I shall be
A Begger still I am sure, I find my self there.

Enter Goswin.

Snap. O here a Judge comes.

Hig. Cry, a Judge, a Judge.

Gof. What ail you Sirs? what means this outcry?

Hig. Master,

A sort of poor souls met: Gods fools, good Master,
Have had some little variance amongst our selves
Who should be honestest of us, and which lives
Uprightest in his calling: Now, 'cause we thought
We ne're should 'gree on't our selves, because Indeed 'tis hard to say: we all dissolv'd, to put it
To him that should come next, and that's your Master-ship,
Who, I hope, will 'termine it as your mind serves you,
Right, and no otherwise we ask it: which?

Which does your worship think is he? sweet Master
Look over us all, and tell us; we are seven of us,
Like to the seven wise Masters, or the Planets.

Gof. I should judge this the man with the grave beard,
And if he be not ———

Clau. Bless you, good Master, bless you. (you

Gof. I would he were: there's something too amongst
To keep you all honest. [Exit.

Snap. King of Heaven go with you.

Om. Now good reward him, (hour.
May he never want it, to comfort still the poor, in a good

Fer. What is't? see: Snap has got it.

Snap. A good crown, marry.

Prig. A crown of gold.

Fer. For our new King: good luck.

Ginks. To the common treasury with it; if't be gold,
Thither it must.

Prig. Spoke like a Patriot, Ferret ———

King Clause, I bid God save thee first, first, Clause,
After this golden token of a crown;
Where's oratour Higgen with his gratuling speech now
In all our names?

Fer. Here he is pumping for it.

Gin. H'has cough'd the second time, 'tis but once more
And then it comes.

Fer. So, out with all: expect now ———

Hig. That thou art chosen, venerable Clause,
Our King and Sovereign; Monarch o'th' Maunders,
Thus we throw up our Nab-cheats, first for joy,
And then our filches; last, we clap our fables,
Three subject signs, we do it without envy:
For who is he here did not wish thee chosen,
Now thou art chosen? ask 'em: all will say so,
Nay swear't: 'tis for the King, but let that pass.
When last in conference at the bouzing ken
This other day we sat about our dead Prince
Of famous memory: (rest go with his rags:)
And that I saw thee at the tables end,
Rise mov'd, and gravely leaning on one Crutch,
Lift the other like a Scepter at my head,
I then presag'd thou shortly wouldst be King,
And now thou art so: but what need presage
To us, that might have read it in thy beard
As well, as he that chose thee? by that beard
Thou wert found out, and mark'd for Sovereignty.
O happy beard! but happier Prince, whose beard
Was so remark'd, as marked out our Prince,
Not bating us a hair. Long may it grow,
And thick, and fair, that who lives under it,
May live as safe, as under Beggars Bush,
Of which this is the thing, that but the type.

Om. Excellent, excellent orator, forward good Higgen,

Give him leave to spit: the fine, well-spoken Higgen.

Hig. This is the beard, the bush, or bushy-beard,
Under whose gold and silver reign 'twas said
So many ages since, we all should smile
On impositions, taxes, grievances,
Knots in a State, and whips unto a Subject,
Lye lurking in this beard, but all kemb'd out:
If now, the Beard be such, what is the Prince
That owes the Beard? a Father; no, a Grand-father;
Nay the great Grand-father of you his people.
He will not force away your hens, your bacon,
When you have ventur'd hard for't, nor take from you
The fattest of your puddings: under him
Each man shall eat his own stolen eggs, and butter,
In his own shade, or sun-shine, and enjoy
His own dear Dell, Doxy, or Mort, at night
In his own straw, with his own shirt, or sheet,
That he hath filch'd that day, I, and possess
What he can purchase, back, or belly-cheats
To his own prop: he will have no purveyers
For Pigs, and poultry.

Clau. That we must have, my learned oratour,
It is our will, and every man to keep
In his own path and circuit. Hig. Do you hear?
You must hereafter maund on your own pads he saies.

Clau. And what they get there, is their own, besides
To give good words.

Hig. Do you mark? to cut been whids,
That is the second Law. Clau. And keep a-foot
The humble, and the common phrase of begging,
Lest men discover us.

Hig. Yes, and cry sometimes,
To move compassion: Sir, there is a table,
That doth command all these things, and enjoyns 'em,
Be perfect in their crutches, their feign'd plaisters,
And their torn pass-ports, with the ways to stammer,
And to be dumb, and deaf, and blind, and lame,
There, all the halting paces are set down,
I'th' learned language.

Clau. Thither I refer them,
Those, you at leisure shall interpret to them.
We love no heaps of laws, where few will serve.

Om. O gracious Prince, 'save, 'save the good King Clause.

Hig. A Song to crown him.

Fer. Set a Centinel out first.

Snap. The word?

Hig. A Cove comes, and fumbumbis to it. — Strike.

The SONG.

Cast our Caps and cares away: this is Beggars Holy-day,
At the Crowning of our King, thus we ever dance and sing.
In the world look out and see: where's so happy a Prince as he?
Where the Nation live so free, and so merry as do we?
Be it peace, or be it war, here at liberty we are,
And enjoy our ease and rest; To the field we are not prest;
Nor are call'd into the Town, to be troubled with the Gown.
Hang all Officers we cry, and the Magistrate too, by;
When the Subsidie's encrease, we are not a penny Sest.
Nor will any go to Law, with the Beggar for a straw.
All which happiness he brags, he doth owe unto his rags.

Enter Snap, Hubert, and Hemskirke:

Snap. A Cove comes: Fumbumbis.

Prig. To your postures; arm.

Hub. Yonder's the Town: I see it.

Hemsk. There's our danger
Indeed afore us, if our shadows save not.

Hig. Bless your good Worships.

Fer. One small piece of mony.

Prig. Amongst us all poor wretches.

Clau. Blind, and lame.

Ginks. For his sake that gives all.

Hig. Pitifull Worships.

Snap.

Snap. One little doyt.

Enter Jaculin.

Jac. King, by your leave, where are you?

Fer. To buy a little bread.

Hig. To feed so many

Mouths, as will ever pray for you.

Prig. Here be seven of us.

Hig. Seven, good Master, O remember seven,
Seven blessings.

Fer. Remember, gentle Worship.

Hig. 'Gainst seven deadly sins.

Prig. And seven sleepers.

Hig. If they be hard of heart, and will give nothing—
Alas, we had not a charity this three days.

Hub. There's amongst you all.

Fer. Heaven reward you.

Prig. Lord reward you.

Hig. The Prince of pity blefs thee.

Hub. Do I see? or is't my fancy that would have it so?
Ha? 'tis her fate: come hither maid.

Jac. What ha' you,
Bells for my squirrel? I ha' giv'n bun meat,
You do not love me, do you? catch me a butterfly,
And I'll love you again; when? can you tell?
Peace, we go a birding: I shall have a fine thing. [Exit.]

Hub. Her voyce too faves the same; but for my head
I would not that her manners were so chang'd.
Hear me thou honest fellow; what's this maiden,
That lives amongst you here?

Gin. Ao, ao, ao, ao.

Hub. How? nothing but signs?

Gin. Ao, ao, ao, ao.

Hub. This is strange,

I would fain have it her, but not her thus. (dumb Sir.)

Hig. He is de-de-de-de-de-deaf, and du-du-dude—

Hub. Slid they did all speak plain ev'n now me thought.
Do'st thou know this fame maid? (fool)

Snap. Why, why, why, why, which, gu, gu, gu, gu, Gods
She was bo-bo-bo-bo-born at the barn yonder,
By-be-be-be-be-Beggars Bush-bo-bo-Bush
Her name is, My-my-my-my-my-match: so was her Mo-

(mo-mo-Mothers too-too)

Hub. I understand no word he says; how long
Has she been here? (go-go-go good luck,

Snap. Lo-lo-long enough to be ni-ni-nigled, and she ha'

Hub. I must be better inform'd, than by this way.

Here was another face too, that I mark'd
Of the old mans: but they are vanish'd all
Most suddenly: I will come here again,
O, that I were so happy, as to find it,
What I yet hope: it is put on.

Hem. What mean you Sir,
To stay there with that stammerer?

Hub. Farewell friend, ———
It will be worth return, to search: Come,
Protect us our disguise now, pre'thee Hemskirk,
If we be taken, how do'st thou imagine
This town will use us, that hath stood so long
Out against Wolfert?

Hem. Ev'n to hang us forth
Upon their walls a funning, to make Crows meat,
If I were not assur'd o' the Burgomaster,
And had a pretty excuse to see a niece there,
I should scarce venture.

Hub. Come 'tis now too late
To look back at the ports: good luck, and enter. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Goswin.

Gos. Still blow'st thou there? and from all other parts,
Do all my agents sleep, that nothing comes?
There's a conspiracy of windes; and servants;

If not of Elements, to ha' me break;
What should I think unless the Seas, and Sands
Had swallow'd up my ships? or fire had spoil'd
My ware-houses? or death devour'd my Factors?
I must ha' had some returns.

Enter Merchants.

1 Mer. 'Save you Sir.

Gos. 'Save you.

1 Mer. No news yet o' your Ships?

Gos. Not any yet Sir.

1 Mer. 'Tis strange.

[Exit.]

Gos. 'Tis true Sir: what a voyce was here now?
This was one passing bell, a thousand ravens
Sung in that man now, to presage my ruins.

2 Mer. Goswin, good day, these winds are very constant.

Gos. They are so Sir; to hurt ———

2 Mer. Ha' you had no letters
Lately from England, nor from Denmark?

Gos. Neither.

2 Mer. This wind brings them; nor no news over land,
Through Spain, from the Straits?

Gos. Not any.

2 Mer. I am sorry Sir.

[Exit.]

Gos. They talk me down: and as 'tis said of Vulturs
They scent a field fought, and do smell the carcases
By many hundred miles: So do these, my wracks
At greater distances. Why, thy will Heaven
Come on, and be: yet if thou please, preserve me;
But in my own adventure, here at home,
Of my chaste love, to keep me worthy of her,
It shall be put in scale 'gainst all ill fortunes:
I am not broken yet: nor should I fall,
Me thinks with less than that, that ruins all. [Exit.]

SCENA III.

Enter Van-dunck, Hubert, Hemskirk; and Margaret, Boors.

Van. Captain, you are welcom; so is this your friend
Most safely welcom, though our Town stand out
Against your Master, you shall find good quarter:
The troth is, we not love him: Margaret some wine,
Let's talk a little treason, if we can
Talk treason, 'gainst the traitors; by your leave, Gentlemen,
We, here in Bruges, think he do's usurp,
And therefore I am bold with him.

Hub. Sir, your boldness
Happily becomes your mouth, but not our ears,
While we are his servants; And as we come here,
Not to ask questions, walk forth on your walls,
Visit your courts of guard, view your munition,
Ask of your corn-provisions, nor enquire
Into the least, as spies upon your strengths,
So let's entreat, we may receive from you
Nothing in passage or discourse, but what
We may with gladness, and our honesties here,
And that shall seal our welcom.

Van. Good: let's drink then,
Fill out, I keep mine old pearl still Captain.

Marg. I hang fast man.

Hen. Old Jewels commend their keeper, Sir.

Van. Here's to you with a heart, my Captains friend;
With a good heart, and if this make us speak
Bold words, anon, 'tis all under the Rose
Forgotten: drown all memory, when we drink.

Hub. 'Tis freely spoken noble Burgomaster,
I'll do you right.

Hem. Nay Sir mine heer Van-dunck
Is a true Statesman.

(Wolfert)

Van. Fill my Captains cup there; O that your Master
Had been an honest man.

Hub. Sir?

Van. Under the Rose.

Hem. Here's to you Marget.

Marg. Welcome, welcome Captain.

Van. Well said my pearl still.

Hem. And how does my Niece?

Almost a Woman, I think? This friend of mine, I drew along with me, through so much hazard, Only to see her: she was my errand.

Van. I, a kind Uncle you are (fill him his glass) That in seven years, could not find leisure—

Hem. No, It's not so much.

Van. I'll bate you ne'er an hour on't, It was before the Brabander 'gan his War, For moon-shine, i'the water there, his Daughter That never was lost: yet you could not find time To see a Kinswoman: but she is worth the seeing, Sir, Now you are come, you ask if she were a Woman? She is a Woman, Sir, fetch her forth Marget. [Exit Marg. And a fine Woman, and has Suitors.

Hem. How?

What Suitors are they?

Van. Bachelors; young Burgers: And one, a Gallant, the young Prince of Merchants We call him here in Bruges.

Hem. How? a Merchant?

I thought, Vandunke, you had understood me better, And my Niece too, so trusted to you by me, Than t'admit of such in name of Suitors.

Van. Such? he is such a such, as were she mine I'd give him thirty thousand crowns with her.

Hem. But the same things, Sir, fit not you and me. [Ex.

Van. Why, give's some wine, then; this will fit us all: Here's to you still, my Captains friend: All out:

And still, would Wolfort were an honest man, Under the Rose, I speak it: but this Merchant Is a brave boy: he lives so, i'the Town here, We know not what to think on him: at some times We fear he will be Bankrupt; he do's stretch Tenter his credit so; embraces all, And to't, the winds have been contrary long. But then, if he should have all his returns, We think he would be a King, and are half sure on't. Your Master is a Traitor, for all this, Under the Rose: Here's to you; and usurps The Earldom from a better man.

Hub. I marry, Sir, Where is that man?

Van. Nay soft: and I could tell you 'Tis ten to one I would not: here's my hand, I love not Wolfort: sit you still, with that: Here comes my Captain again, and his fine Niece, And there's my Merchant; view him well: fill wine here.

Enter Hemskirk, Gertrude, and Gofwin.

Hem. You must not only know me for your Uncle Now, but obey me: you, go cast your self Away, upon a Dunghil here? a Merchant? A petty fellow? one that makes his Trade With Oaths and perjuries?

Gof. What is that you say, Sir? If it be me you speak of, as your eye Seems to direct, I wish you would speak to me, Sir.

Hem. Sir, I do say, she is no Merchandize, Will that suffice you?

Gof. Merchandize good Sir? Though ye be Kinsman to her, take no leave thence To use me with contempt: I ever thought Your Niece above all price.

Hem. And do so still, Sir, I assure you, her rates are more than you are worth.

Gof. You do not know, what a Gentleman's worth, Sir, Nor can you value him.

Hub. Well said Merchant.

Van. Nay,

Let him alone, and ply your matter.

Hem. A Gentleman?

What o'the Wool pack? or the Sugar-chest? Or lists of Velvet? which is't pound, or yard, You vent your Gentry by?

Hub. O Hemskirk, fye.

Van. Come, do not mind 'em, drink, he is no Wolfort, Captain, I advise you.

Hem. Alas, my pretty man, I think't be angry, by its look: Come hither, Turn this way, a little: if it were the blood Of Charlemaine, as't may (for ought I know) Be some good Botchers issue, here in Bruges.

Gof. How?

Hem. Nay: I'm not certain of that; of this I am, If it once buy, and sell, its Gentry is gone.

Gof. Ha, ha.

Hem. You are angry, though ye laugh.

Gof. No, now 'tis pity Of your poor argument. Do not you, the Lords Of Land (if you be any) sell the grass, The Corn, the Straw, the Milk, the Cheefe?

Van. And Butter:

Remember Butter; do not leave out Butter. (with?)

Gof. The Beefs and Muttons that your grounds are stor'd Swine, with the very mast, beside the Woods?

Hem. No, for those fordid uses we have Tenants, Or else our Bailiffs.

Gof. Have not we, Sir, Chap-men, And Factors, then to answer these? your honour Fetch'd from the Heralds ABC, and said over With your Court faces, once an hour, shall never Make me mistake my self. Do not your Lawyers Sell all their practice, as your Priests their prayers? What is not bought, and sold? The company That you had last, what had you for't, i'faith?

Hem. You now grow sawcy.

Gof. Sure I have been bred

Still, with my honest liberty, and must use it.

Hem. Upon your equals then.

Gof. Sir, he that will Provoke me first, doth make himself my equal.

Hem. Do ye hear? no more.

Gof. Yes, Sir, this little, I pray you, And't shall be aside, then after, as you please. You appear the Uncle, Sir, to her I love More than mine eyes; and I have heard your scorns With so much scoffing, and so much shame, As each strive which is greater: But, believe me, I suck'd not in this patience with my milk. Do not presume, because you see me young, Or cast despights on my profession For the civility and tameness of it.

A good man bears a contumely worse Than he would do an injury. Proceed not To my offence: wrong is not still successful, Indeed it is not: I would approach your Kinswoman With all respect, done to your self and her.

Hem. Away Companion: handling her? take that.

[Strikes him.

Gof. Nay, I do love no blows, Sir, there's exchange,

Hub. Hold, Sir.

Mar. O murder.

Ger. Help my Gofwin.

Mar. Man.

Van. Let 'em alone; my life for one.

Gof. Nay come, If you have will.

Hub. None to offend you, I, Sir.

Gof. He that had, thank himself: not hand her? yes Sir, And clasp her, and embrace her; and (would she Now go with me) bear her through all her Race, Her Father, Brethren, and her Uncles, arm'd, And all their Nephews, though they stood a wood

Of Pikes, and wall of Canon: kifs me Gertrude,
Quake not, but kifs me.

Van. Kifs him, Girl, I bid you;
My Merchant Royal; fear no Uncles: hang 'em,
Hang up all Uncles: Are not we in Bruges?
Under the Rose here?

Gof. In this circle, Love,
Thou art as safe, as in a Tower of Brass;
Let such as do wrong, fear.

Van. I, that's good,
Let Wolfort look to that.

Gof. Sir, here she stands,
Your Niece, and my beloved. One of these titles
She must apply to; if unto the last,
Not all the anger can be sent unto her,
In frown, or voyce, or other art, shall force her,
Had Hercules a hand in't: Come, my Joy,
Say thou art mine, aloud Love, and profess it.

Van. Doe: and I drink to it.

Gof. Prethce say so, Love.

Ger. 'Twould take away the honour from my blushes:
Do not you play the tyrant, sweet: they speak it.

Hem. I thank you niece.

Gof. Sir, thank her for your life,
And fetch your sword within.

Hem. You insult too much
With your good fortune, Sir. [Exit Gof. and Ger.

Hub. A brave clear Spirit;
Hemskirk, you were to blame: a civil habit
Oft covers a good man: and you may meet
In person of a Merchant, with a soul
As resolute, and free, and all wayes worthy,
As else in any file of man-kind: pray you,
What meant you so to slight him?

Hem. 'Tis done now,
Ask no more of it; I must suffer. [Exit Hemskirk.

Hub. This
Is still the punishment of rashness, sorrow.
Well; I must to the woods, for nothing here
Will be got out. There, I may chance to learn
Somewhat to help my enquiries further.

Van. Ha?

A Looking-glafs?

Hub. How now, brave Burgomaster?

Van. I love no Wolforts, and my name's Vandunk,

Hub. Van drunk it's rather: come, go sleep within.

Van. Earl Florez is right heir, and this same Wolfort

Under the Rose I speak it —

Hub. Very hardly.

Van-d. Ufurps: and a rank Traitor, as ever breath'd,
And all that do uphold him. Let me goe,
No man shall hold me, that upholds him;
Do you uphold him?

Hub. No.

Van. Then hold me up. [Exit.

Enter Gofwin, and Hemskirk.

Hem. Sir, I presume, you have a sword of your own,
That can so handle anothers.

Gof. Faith you may Sir. (of you

Hem. And ye have made me have so much better thoughts
As I am bound to call you forth.

Gof. For what Sir?

Hem. To the repairing of mine honour, and hurt here.

Gof. Express your way.

Hem. By fight, and speedily.

Gof. You have your will: Require you any more?

Hem. That you be secret: and come single.

Gof. I will.

Hem. As you are the Gentleman you would be thought.

Gof. Without the Conjurat[i]on: and I'll bring
Only my sword, which I will fit to yours,
I'll take his length within.

Hem. Your place now Sir?

Gof. By the Sand-hills.

Hem. Sir, nearer to the woods,
If you thought so, were fitter.

Gof. There, then.

Hem. Good.

Your time?

Gof. 'Twixt seven and eight.

Hem. You'll give me Sir

Cause to report you worthy of my Niece,
If you come, like your promise.

Gof. If I do not,

Let no man think to call me unworthy first,
I'll do't my self, and justly wish to want her. — [Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter three or four Boors.

1 B. Come, English beer Hostess, English beer by 'th' belly.
2 B. Stark beer boy, stout and strong beer: so, sit
And drink me upsey-Dutch: (down Lads,
Frolick, and fear not.

Enter Higgen like a Sow-gelder, singing.

Hig. Have ye any work for the Sow-gelder, ho,
My horn goes too high too low, too high too low.
Have ye any Piggs, Calves, or Colts,
Have ye any Lambs in your holt
To cut for the Stone,
Here comes a cunning one.
Have ye any braches to spade,
Or e're a fair maid
That would be a Nun,
Come kifs me, 'tis done.
Hark how my merry horn deith blow,
Too high too low, too high too low.

(piece.

1 B. O excellent! two-pence a piece boyes, two-pence a
Give the boys some drink there. Piper, wet your whistle,
Canst tell me a way now, how to cut off my wifes Con-
Hig. I'll sing ye a Song for't. (cupifcence?)

The SONG.

TAke her, and hug her,
And turn her and tug her,
And turn her again boy, again,
Then if she mumble,
Or if her tail tumble,
Kifs her amain boy, amain.
Do thy endeavour,
To take off her seaver,
Then her disease no longer will reign.
If nothing will serve her,
Then thus to preserve her,
Swinge her amain boy amain.
Give her cold jelly
To take up her belly,
And once a day swinge her again,
If she stand all these pains,
Then knock out her brains,
Her disease no longer will reign.

1 Bo. More excellent, more excellent, sweet Sow-gelder.

2 Bo. Three-pence a piece, three-pence a piece.

Hig. Will you hear a Song how the Devil was gelded?

3 Bo. I, I, let's hear the Devil roar, Sow-gelder.

SONG.

SONG.

1.

Here as at me first in the shape of a Ram,
And over and over the Sow-Gelder came;
I rise and I halter'd him fast by the horn,
I pluckt out his Stones as you'd pick out a Corn.
Baa, quoth the Devil, and forth he slunk,
And left us a Carcase of Mutton that stunk

2.

The next time I rode a good mile and a half,
Where I heard he did live in disguise of a Calf,
I bound and I gelt him, ere he did any evil;
He was here at his best, but a sucking Devil.
Maa, yet he cry'd, and forth he did steal,
And this was sold after, for excellent Veal.

3.

Some half a year after in the form of a Pig,
I met with the Rogue, and he look'd very big;
I catch'd at his leg, laid him down on a log,
Ere a man could fart twice, I had made him a Hog.
Ough, quoth the Devil, and forth gave a Jerk,
That a Jew was converted, and eat of the Perk.

1 Bo. Groats apiece, Groats apiece, Groats apiece,
There sweet Sow-Gelder.

Enter Prig and Ferret.

Prig. Will ye see any feats of activity,
Some Sleight of hand, Legerdemain? hey pass,
Presto, be gone there?

2 Bo. Sit down Jugler.

Prig. Sirrah, play you your art well; draw near Piper:
Look you, my honest friends, you see my hands;
Plain dealing is no Devil: lend me some Money,
Twelve-pence a piece will serve.

1. 2. B. There, there.

Prig. I thank you;

Thank ye heartily: when shall I pay ye?

All B. Ha, ha, ha, by th' Mafs this was a fine trick.

Prig. A merry sleight toy: but now I'll show your Wor-
A trick indeed. (ships)

Hig. Mark him well now my Masters.

Prig. Here are three balls,
These balls shall be three bullets,
One, two, and three: ascensibus, malentibus.

Presto, be gone: they are vanish'd: fair play, Gentlemen.
Now these three, like three Bullets, from your three Noses
Will I pluck presently: fear not, no harm Boys,
Tuere, tu patule.

1 B. Oh, oh, oh.

Prig. Recubans sub jermine fagi.

2 B. Ye pull too hard; ye pull too hard.

Prig. Stand fair then:

Silver in trim-tram.

3 B. Hold, hold, hold.

Prig. Come aloft, bullets three, with a whim-wham.
Have ye their Moneys?

Hig. Yes, yes.

1 B. Oh rare Jugler!

2 B. Oh admirable Jugler!

Prig. One trick more yet;

Hey, come aloft; sa, sa, flim, flum, taradumbis?
East, West, North, South, now fly like Jack with a bumbis.
Now all your money's gone; pray search your pockets.

1 B. Humh.

2 B. He.

3 B. The Devil a penny's here!

Prig. This was a rare trick.

1 B. But 'twould be a far rarer to restore it.

Prig. I'll do ye that too; look upon me earnestly,

And move not any ways your eyes from this place,
This Button here? pow, whir, whifs, shake your pockets.

1 B. By th' Mafs 'tis here again, boys.

Prig. Rest ye merry;

My first trick has paid me.

All B. I, take it, take it,

And take some drink too.

Prig. Not a drop now I thank you;
Away, we are discover'd else.

[Exit.

Enter Gerrard like a blind Aqua vitæ man, and a Boy, singing the Song.

Bring out your Cony-skins, fair maids to me,
And hold 'em fair that I may see;
Grey, black, and blue: for your smaller skins,
I'll give ye looking-glasses, pins:
And for your whole Coney, here's ready, ready Money.
Come Gentle Jone, do thou begin
With thy black, black, black Coney-skin.
And Mary then, and Jane will follow,
With their silver hair'd skins, and their yellow.
The white Cony-skin, I will not lay by,
For though it be faint, 'tis fair to the eye;
The grey, it is warm, but yet for my Money,
Give me the bonny, bonny black Cony.
Come away fair Maids, your skins will decay:
Come, and take money, maids, put your ware away.
Cony-skins, Cony-skins, have ye any Cony-skins,
I have fine bracelets, and fine silver pins.

Ger. Buy any Brand Wine, buy any Brand Wine?

Boy. Have ye any Cony-skins? (ship)

2 Boy. My fine Canary-bird, there's a Cake for thy Wor-

1 B. Come fill, fill, fill, fill suddenly: let's see Sir,
What's this?

Ger. A penny, Sir.

1 B. Fill till't be six-pence,

And there's my Pig.

Boy. This is a Counter, Sir.

1 B. A Counter! stay ye, what are these then?

O execrable Jugler! O damn'd Jugler!
Look in your hose, ho, this comes of looking forward.

3 B. Devil a Dunkirk! what a Rogue's this Jugler!
This hey pass, repass, h'as repast us sweetly.

2 B. Do ye call these tricks.

Enter Higgen.

Hig. Have ye any Ends of Gold, or Silver? (Copper.

2 B. This Fellow comes to mock us; Gold or Silver? cry

1 B. Yes, my good Friend,

We have e'n an end of all we have.

Hig. 'Tis well Sir,

You have the less to care for: Gold and Silver. [Exit.

Enter Prigg. (to sell? [Exit.

Pr. Have ye any old Cloaks to sell, have ye any old Cloaks

1 B. Cloaks! Look about ye Boys: mine's gone!

2 B. A—— juggle 'em?

—O they're Prestoes: mine's gone too!

3 B. Here's mine yet.

1 B. Come, come let's drink then more Brand Wine.

Boy. Here Sir. (strip him:

1 B. If e'r I catch your Sow-gelder, by this hand I'll Were ever Fools so ferkt? We have two Cloaks yet;
And all our Caps; the Devil take the Flincher.

All B. Yaw, yaw, yaw, yaw.

Enter Hemskirk.

Hem. Good do'n my honest Fellows,
You are merry here I see.

3 B. 'Tis all we have left, Sir.

Hem. What hast thou? Aqua vitæ?

Boy. Yes.

Hem. Fill out then;

And

And give these honest Fellows round.

All B. We thank ye.

Hem. May I speak a word in private to ye?

All B. Yes Sir.

Hem. I have a business for you, honest Friends, If you dare lend your help, shall get you crowns.

Ger. Ha!

Lead me a little nearer, Boy.

1 B. What is't Sir?

If it be any thing to purchase money, Which is our want, commands us.

Boors. All, all, all, Sir.

Hem. You know the young spruce Merchant in Bruges?

2 B. Who? Master Goswin?

Hem. That he owes me money, And here in town there is no stirring of him.

Ger. Say ye so?

Hem. This day, upon a sure appointment, He meets me a mile hence, by the Clare side, Under the row of Oaks; do you know it?

All B. Yes Sir.

Hem. Give 'em more drink: there if you dare but venture When I shall give the word to seize upon him Here's twenty pound,

3 B. Beware the Jugler.

Hem. If he resist, down with him, have no mercy.

1 B. I warrant you, we'll hamper him,

Hem. To discharge you, I have a Warrant here about me.

3 B. Here's our Warrant,

This carries fire i'th' Tail.

Hem. Away with me then,

The time draws on,

I must remove so insolent a Suitor,

And if he be so rich, make him pay ransom

Ere he see Bruges Towers again. Thus wise men

Repair the hurts they take by a disgrace,

And piece the Lions skin with the Foxes case.

Ger. I am glad I have heard this sport yet. (Boys,

Hem. There's for thy drink, come pay the house within And lose no time.

Ger. Away with all our haste too. Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter Goswin.

Gos. No wind blow fair yet? no return of moneys? Letters? nor any thing to hold my hopes up? Why then 'tis destin'd, that I fall, fall miserably! My credit I was built on, sinking with me. Thou boystrous North-wind, blowing my misfortunes, And frosting all my hopes to cakes of coldness; Yet stay thy fury; give the gentle South Yet leave to court those sails that bring me safety, And you auspicious fires, bright twins in heaven Daunce on the showds; he blows still stubbornly, And on his boystrous Rack rides my sad ruin; There is no help, there can be now no comfort, To morrow with the Sun-set, sets my credit. Oh misery! thou curse of man, thou plague, In the midst of all our strength thou strik'st us; My vertuous Love is lost too: all, what I have been, No more hereafter to be seen than shadow; To prison now? well, yet there's this hope left me; I may sink fairly under this days venture, And so to morrow's cross'd, and all those curses: Yet manly I'll invite my Fate, base fortune Shall never say, she has cut my throat in fear. This is the place his challenge call'd me to, And was a happy one at this time for me, For let me fall before my Foe i'th' field, And not at Bar, before my Creditors; H'as kept his word: now Sir, your swords tongue only Loud as you dare, all other language—

Enter Hemskirke.

Hem. Well Sir, You shall not be long troubled: draw.

Gos. 'Tis done Sir, And now have at ye.

Hem. Now.

Enter Boors.

Gos. Betray'd to Villains! Slaves ye shall buy me bravely, And thou base coward.

Enter Gerrard and Beggars.

Ger. Now upon 'em bravely, Conjure 'em soundly Boys.

Boors. Hold, hold.

Ger. Lay on still, Down with that Gentleman rogue, swinge him to sirrup. Retire Sir, and take Breath: follow, and take him, Take all, 'tis lawful prize.

Boors. We yield.

Ger. Down with 'em Into the Wood, and rifle 'em, tew 'em, swinge 'em, Knock me their brains into their Breeches. Exeunt.

Boors. Hold, hold.

Gos. What these men are I know not, nor for what cause They shoud thus thrust themselves into my danger, Can I imagine. But sure Heavens hand was in't! Nor why this coward Knave should deal so basely To eat me up with Slaves: but Heaven I thank thee, I hope thou hast reserv'd me to an end Fit for thy creature, and worthy of thine honour: Would all my other dangers here had suffered, With what a joyful heart should I go home then? (tence, Where now, Heaven knows, like him that waits his sen- Or hears his passing Bell; but there's my hope still.

Enter Gerrard.

Ger. Blessing upon you Master.

Gos. Thank ye; leave me, For by my troth I have nothing now to give thee.

Ger. Indeed I do not ask Sir, only it grieves me To see ye look so sad; now goodness keep ye From troubles in your mind.

Gos. If I were troubled, What could thy comfort do? prithee Clause, leave me.

Ger. Good Master be not angry; for what I say Is out of true love to ye.

Gos. I know thou lov'st me.

Ger. Good Mr. blame that love then, if I prove so sawcy To ask ye why ye are sad.

Gos. Most true, I am so, And such a sadness I have got will sink me.

Ger. Heaven shield it, Sir.

Gos. Faith, thou must lose thy Master.

Ger. I had rather lose my neck, Sir: would I knew—

Gos. What would the knowledg do thee good so miserable, Thou canst not help thyself? when all my ways (rable, Nor all the friends I have—

Ger. You do not know Sir, What I can do: cures sometimes, for mens cares Flow, where they least expect 'em.

Gos. I know thou wouldst do, But farewell Clause, and pray for thy poor Master.

Ger. I will not leave ye.

Gos. How?

Ger. I dare not leave ye, Sir, I must not leave ye; And till ye beat me dead, I will not leave ye. By what ye hold most precious, by Heavens goodness, As your fair youth may prosper, good Sir tell me: My mind believes yet something's in my power May ease you of this trouble.

Gos.

Gof. I will tell thee,
For a hundred thousand crowns upon my credit,
Taken up of Merchants to supply my traffiques,
The winds and weather envying of my fortune,
And no return to help me off, yet shewing
To morrow, (Clause, to morrow, which must come,
In prison thou shalt find me poor and broken.

Ger. I cannot blame your grief Sir.

Gof. Now, what say'st thou?

Ger. I say you should not shrink, for he that gave ye,
Can give you more; his power can bring ye off Sir,
When friends and all forsake ye, yet he sees you.

Gof. There's all my hope.

Ger. Hope still Sir, are you ty'd
Within the compass of a day, good Master,
To pay this mass of money?

Gof. Ev'n to morrow:

But why do I stand mocking of my misery?
Is't not enough the floods, and friends forget me?

Ger. Will no less serve?

Gof. What if it would?

Ger. Your patience,

I do not ask to mock ye: 'tis a great sum,
A sum for mighty men to start and stick at;
But not for honest: have ye no friends left ye,
None that have felt your bounty? worth this duty?

Gof. Duty? thou know'st it not.

Ger. It is a duty,

And as a duty, from those men have felt ye,
Should be return'd again: I have gain'd by ye,
A daily alms these seven years you have show'r'd on me,
Will half supply your want?

Gof. Why do'st thou fool me?

Can't it thou work miracles?

Ger. To save my Master,

I can work this.

Gof. Thou wilt make me angry with thee.

Ger. For doing good?

Gof. What power hast thou?

Ger. Enquire not:

So I can do it, to preserve my Master;
Nay if it be three parts.

Gof. O that I had it,

But good (Clause, talk no more, I feel thy charity,
As thou has felt mine: but alas!

Ger. Distrust not,

'Tis that that quenches ye: pull up your Spirit,
Your good, your honest, and your noble Spirit;
For if the fortunes of ten thousand people
Can save ye, rest assur'd; you have forgot Sir,
The good ye did, which was the power you gave me;
Ye shall now know the King of Beggars treasure:
And let the winds blow as they list, the Seas roar,
Yet, here to morrow, you shall find your harbour.
Here fail me not, for if I live I'll fit ye.

Gof. How fain I would believe thee!

Ger. If I ly Master,
Believe no man hereafter.

Gof. I will try thee,
But he knows, that knows all.

Ger. Know me to morrow,
And if I know not how to cure ye, kill me;
So pass in peace, my best, my worthiest Master. [Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Hubert, like a Huntsman.

Hub. Thus have I stoln away disguiz'd from Hemskirk
To try these people, for my heart yet tells me
Some of these Beggars, are the men I look for:
Appearing like my self, they have no reason
(Though my intent is fair, my main end honest)
But to avoid me narrowly, that face too,
That womans face, how near it is! O may it

But prove the same, and fortune how I'll bless thee!
Thus, sure they cannot know me, or suspect me,
If to my habit I but change my nature;
As I must do; this is the wood they live in,
A place fit for concealment: where, till fortune
Crown me with that I seek, I'll live amongst 'em. [Exit.]

Enter Higgen, Prigg, Ferret, Ginks, and the rest of the Boors.

Hig. Come bring 'em out, for here we sit in justice:
Give to each one a cudgel, a good cudgel:
And now attend your sentence. That you are rogues,
And mischievous base rascals, (there's the point now)
I take it, is confess'd.

Prig. Deny it if you dare knaves.

Boors. We are Rogues Sir.

Hig. To amplify the matter then, rogues as ye are,
And lamb'd ye shall be e're we leave ye.

Boors. Yes Sir.

Hig. And to the open handling of our justice,
Why did ye this upon the proper person
Of our good Master? were you drunk when you did it?

Boors. Yes indeed were we.

Prig. You shall be beaten sober.

Hig. Was it for want you undertook it?

Boors. Yes Sir.

Hig. You shall be swing'd abundantly.

Prig. And yet for all that,
You shall be poor rogues still.

Hig. Has not the Gentleman,
Pray mark this point Brother Prig, that noble Gentleman
Reliev'd ye often, found ye means to live by,
By imploying some at Sea, some here, some there;
According to your callings?

Boors. 'Tis most true Sir.

Hig. Is not the man, an honest man?

Boors. Yes truly.

Hig. A liberal Gentleman? and as ye are true rascals
Tell me but this, have ye not been drunk, and often,
At his charge?

Boors. Often, often.

Hig. There's the point then,
They have cast themselves, Brother Prig.

Prig. A shrewd point, Brother.

Hig. Brother, proceed you now; the cause is open,
I am some what weary.

Prig. Can you do these things?

You most abominable stinking Rascals,
You turnip-eating Rogues.

Boors. We are truly sorry.

Prig. Knock at your hard hearts Rogues, and presently
Give us a sign you feel compunction,
Every man up with's cudgel, and on his neighbour
Bestow such alms, 'till we shall say sufficient,
For there your sentence lyes without partiality;
Either of head, or hide Rogues, without sparing,
Or we shall take the pains to beat you dead else:
You shall know your doom.

Hig. One, two, and three about it.

Prig. That fellow in the blue, has true Compunction,
[Beat one another.]
He beats his fellows bravely, oh, well struck boyes.

Enter Gerrard.

Hig. Up with that blue breech, now playes he the Devil.
So get ye home, drink small beer, and be honest;
Call in the Gentleman.

Ger. Do, bring him presently,
His cause I'll hear my self.

Enter Hemskirk.

Hig. Prig. With all due reverence,
We do resign Sir.

Ger. Now huffing Sir, what's your name?

Hem.

Hem. What's that to you Sir?

Ger. It shall be ere we part.

Hem. My name is Hemskirk,
I follow the Earl, which you shall feel.

Ger. No threatning,
For we shall cool you Sir; why did'st thou basely
Attempt the murder of the Merchant Goswin?

Hem. What power hast thou to ask me?

Ger. I will know it,
Or fley thee till thy pain discover it.

Hem. He did me wrong, base wrong.

Ger. That cannot save ye,
Who sent ye hither? and what further villanies
Have you in hand?

Hem. Why would'st thou know? what profit,
If I had any private way, could rise
Out of my knowledge, to do thee commodity?
Be sorry for what thou hast done, and make amends fool,
I'll talk no further to thee, nor these Rascals.

Ger. Tye him to that tree.

Hem. I have told you whom I follow.

Ger. The Devil you should do, by your villanies,
Now he that has the best way, wring it from him.

Hig. I undertake it: turn him to the Sun boyes;
Give me a fine sharp rush, will ye confes yet?

Hem. Ye have rob'd me already, now you'll murder me.

Hig. Murder your nose a little: does your head purge Sir?
To it again, 'twill do ye good.

Hem. Oh,
I cannot tell you any thing.

Ger. Proceed then.

Hig. There's maggots in your nose, I'll fetch 'em out Sir.

Hem. O my head breaks.

Hig. The best thing for the rheum Sir,
That falls into your worships eyes.

Hem. Hold, hold.

Ger. Speak then.

Hem. I know not what.

Hig. It lyes in's brain yet,
In lumps it lyes, I'll fetch it out the finest;
What pretty faces the fool makes? heigh!

Hem. Hold,
Hold, and I'll tell ye all, look in my doublet;
And there within the lining in a paper,
You shall find all.

Ger. Go fetch that paper hither,
And let him loose for this time.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Good ev'n my honest friends.

Ger. Good ev'n good fellow.

Hub. May a poor huntsman, with a merry heart,
A voice shall make the forest ring about him,
Get leave to live amongst ye? true as steel, boyes?
That knows all chafes, and can watch all hours,
And with my quarter staff, though the Devil bid stand,
Deal such an alms, shall make him roar again?
Prick ye the fearfull hare through cros ways, sheep-walks,
And force the crafty Reynard climb the quicksetts;
Rouse ye the lofty Stag, and with my bell-horn,
Ring him a knel, that all the woods shall mourn him,
'Till in his funeral tears, he fall before me?
The Polcat, Marterne, and the rich skin'd Lucerne
I know to chafe, the Roe, the wind out-stripping
Isgrin himself, in all his bloody anger
I can beat from the bay, and the wild Sounder
Single, and with my arm'd staff, turn the Boar, Spight of his foamy tushes, and thus strike him;
'Till he fall down my feast.

Ger. A goodly fellow.

Hub. What mak'st thee here, ha?

[aside

Ger. We accept thy fellowship.

Hub. Hemskirk, thou art not right I fear, I fear thee.

[aside

Enter Ferret, with a Letter.

Fer. Here is the paper: and as he said we found it,
Ger. Give me it, I shall make a shift yet, old as I am,
To find your knavery: you are sent here, Sirra,
To discover certain Gentlemen, a spy-knave,
And if ye find 'em, if not by perswasion
To bring 'em back, by poyson to dispatch 'em.

Hub. By poyson, ha?

Ger. Here is another, Hubert;
What is that Hubert Sir?

Hem. You may perceive there.

Ger. I may perceive a villany and a rank one,
Was he joyn'd partner of thy knavery?

Hem. No.

He had an honest end, would I had had so;
Which makes him scape such cut-throats.

Ger. So it seems.

For here thou art commanded, when that Hubert
Has done his best and worthiest service, this way
To cut his throat, for here he's set down dangerous.

Hub. This is most impious.

Ger. I am glad we have found ye,
Is not this true?

Hem. Yes; what are you the better?

Ger. You shall perceive Sir, ere you get your freedom:
Take him aside, and friend, we take thee to us,
Into our company, thou dar'st be true unto us?

Hig. I, and obedient too?

Hub. As you had bred me.

Ger. Then take our hand: thou art now a servant to us,
Welcom him all.

Hig. Stand off, stand off: I'll do it,
We bid ye welcom three wayes; first for your person,
Which is a promising person, next for your quality,
Which is a decent, and a gentle quality,
Last for the frequent means you have to feed us,
You can steal 'tis to be presum'd.

Hub. Yes, venison, and if you want ———

Hig. 'Tis well you understand right,
And shall practise daily: you can drink too?

Hub. Soundly.

Hig. And ye dare know a woman from a weathercock?

Hub. If I handle her.

Ger. Now swear him.

Hig. I crown thy nab, with a gag of benbouse,
And stall thee by the Salmon into the clows,
To mand on the pad, and strike all the cheats;
To Mill from the Ruffmans, comission and slates;
Twang dell's, i' the stiomell, and let the Quire Cuffin:
And Herman Beck strine, and trine to the Ruffin.

Ger. Now interpret this unto him.

Hig. I pour on thy pate a pot of good ale,
And by the Rogues o'th' a Rogue thee instal:
To beg on the way, to rob all thou meets;
To steal from the hedge, both the shirt and the sheets:
And lye with thy wench in the straw till she twang,
Let the Constable, Justice, and Devil go hang.

Hig. You are welcom Brother.

(keeping

All. Welcom, welcom, welcom, but who shall have the
Of this fellow?

Hub. Sir, if you dare but trust me;
For if I have kept wild dogs and beasts for wonder;
And made 'em tame too: give into my custody
This roaring Rascal, I shall hamper him,
With all his knacks and knaveries, and I fear me
Discover yet a further villany in him;
O he smells ranck o'th' Rascal.

Ger. Take him to thee,
But if he scape ———

Hub. Let me be ev'n hang'd for him,
Come Sir, I'll tye ye to my leash.

Hem. Away Rascal.

Hub. Be not so stubborn: I shall swindge ye soundly,

A a

And

And ye play tricks with me.

Ger. So, now come in,

But ever have an eye Sir, to yout Prisoner.

Hub. He must blind both mine eyes, if he get from me.

Ger. Go get some victuals, and some drink, some good
For this day we'll keep holy to good fortune, (drink;
Come, and be frolick with us.

Hig. You are a Stranger, Brother; I pray lead,
You must, you must, Brother.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Goswin and Gertrude.

Ger. Indeed you're welcome: I have heard your scape,
And therefore give her leave, that only loves you;
(Truly and dearly loves you) give her joy leave
To bid you welcome: what is't makes you sad man?
Why do you look so wild? Is't I offend you?
Behrew my heart, not willingly.

Gosf. No, Gertrude.

Ger. Is't the delay of that ye long have look'd for,
A happy marriage? now I come to urge it.
Now when you please to finish it?

Gosf. No News yet?

Ger. Do you hear Sir?

Gosf. Yes.

Ger. Do you love me?

Gosf. Have I liv'd

In all the happiness Fortune could feat me,

In all mens fair opinions?

Ger. I have provided

A Priest, that's ready for us.

Gosf. And can the Devil,

In one ten days, that Devil Chance devour me?

Ger. We'll fly to what place you please.

Gosf. No Star prosperous!

All at a swoop?

Ger. You do not love me Goswin?

You will not look upon me?

Gosf. Can mens Prayers

Shot up to Heaven, with such a zeal as mine are,

Fall back like lazy mists, and never prosper?

Gives I must wear, and cold must be my comfort;

Darkness, and want of meat; alas she weeps too,

Which is the top of all my sorrows, Gertrude.

Ger. No, no, you will not know me; my poor beauty,
Which has been worth your eyes.

Gosf. The time grows on still;

And like a tumbling wave, I see my ruine

Come rowling over me.

Ger. Yet will ye know me?

Gosf. For a hundred thousand Crowns.

Ger. Yet will ye love me?

Tell me but how I have deserv'd your slighting?

Gosf. For a hundred thousand Crowns?

Ger. Farewel Dissembler.

Gosf. Of which I have scarce ten: O how it starts me!

Ger. And may the next you love, hearing my ruine.

Gosf. I had forgot my self, O my best Gertrude,

Crown of my joys and comforts.

Ger. Sweet what ails ye?

I thought you had been vext with me.

Gosf. My mind, Wench,

My mind o'rsflow'd with sorrow, sunk my memory.

Ger. Am I not worthy of the knowledg of it?

And cannot I as well affect your sorrows,

As your delights? you love no other Woman?

Gosf. No, I protest.

Ger. You have no ships lost lately?

Gosf. None, that I know of.

Ger. I hope you have spilt no blood, whose innocence
May lay this on your conscience.

Gosf. Clear, by Heaven.

Ger. Why should you be thus then?

Gosf. Good Gertrude ask not;
Ev'n by the love you bear me.

Ger. I am obedient.

Gosf. Go in, my fair, I will not be long from ye,
Nor long I fear me with thee. At my return
Dispose me as you please.

Ger. The good gods guide ye. [Exit.]

Gosf. Now for my self, which is the least I hope for,
And when that fails, for mans worst fortune, pity. [Exit.]

Ætus quartus. Scena prima.

Enter Goswin and 4. Merchants.

Gosf. WHY gentlemen, 'tis but a week more, I intreat you
But 7. short days, I am not running from ye;
Nor, if you give me patience, is it possible
All my adventures fail; you have ships abroad
Endure the beating both of Wind and Weather:
I am sure 'twould vex your hearts, to be protested;
Ye are all fair Merchants.

1 Mer. Yes, and must have fair play:
There is no living here else; one hour's failing
Fails us of all our friends, of all our credits:
For my part, I would stay, but my wants tell me,
I must wrong others in't.

Gosf. No mercy in ye!

2 Mer. 'Tis foolish to depend on others mercy:
Keep your self right, and even cut your cloth, Sir,
According to your calling, you have liv'd here,
In Lord-like Prodigality, high, and open,
And now ye find what 'tis: the liberal spending
The Summer of your Youth, which you should glean in,
And like the labouring Ant, make use and gain of,
Has brought this bitter, stormy Winter on ye,
And now you cry.

3 Mer. Alas, before your Poverty,
We were no men, of no mark, no endeavour;
You stood alone, took up all trade, all business
Running through your hands, scarce a Sail at Sea,
But loaden with your Goods: we poor weak Pedlers;
When by your leave, and much intreaty to it,
We could have stowage for a little Cloath,
Or a few Wines, put off, and thank your Worship.
Lord, how the World's chang'd with ye? now I hope, Sir,
We shall have Sea-room.

Gosf. Is my misery

Become my scorn too! have ye no humanity?
No part of men left? are all the Bounties in me
To you, and to the Town, turn'd my reproaches?

4 Mer. Well, get your moneys ready: 'tis but 2 hours;
We shall protest ye else, and suddenly.

Gosf. But two days.

1 Mer. Not an hour, ye know the hazard. [Exeunt.]

Gosf. How soon my light's put out! hard hearted Bruges!
Within thy Walls may never honest Merchant
Venture his fortunes more: O my poor Wench too.

Enter Gerrard.

Ger. Good fortune, Master.

Gosf. Thou mistak'st me, Clause,
I am not worth thy Blessing.

Ger. Still a sad man!

Enter Higgen and Prigg, like Porters.

No belief gentle Master? come bring it in then,
And now believe your Beadsman.

Gosf. Is this certain?
Or dost thou work upon my troubled sense?

Ger. 'Tis gold, Sir,

Take

Take it and try it.

Gof. Certainly 'tis treasure;
Can there be yet this Blessing?

Ger. Cease your wonder,
You shall not sink, for ne'r a fowst Flap-dragon,
For ne'r a pickl'd Pilcher of 'em all, Sir,
'Tis there, your full sum, a hundred thousand crowns:
And good sweet Master, now be merry; pay 'em,
Pay the poor pelting Knaves, that know no goodness:
And cheer your heart up handsomely.

Gof. Good Clause,
How cam'st thou by this mighty Sum? if naughtily,
I must not take it of thee, 'twill undo me.

Ger. Fear not, you have it by as honest means
As though your father gave it: Sir, you know not
To what a mass, the little we get daily,
Mounts in seven years; we beg it for Heavens charity,
And to the same good we are bound to render it.

Gof. What great security?

Ger. Away with that, Sir,
Were not ye more than all the men in Bruges;
And all the money in my thoughts——

Gof. But good Clause,
I may dye presently.

Ger. Then this dies with ye:
Pay when you can good Master, I'll no Parchments,
Only this charity I shall entreat you;
Leave me this Ring.

Gof. Alas, it is too poor, Clause.

Ger. 'Tis all I ask, and this withal, that when
I shall deliver this back, you shall grant me
Freely one poor petition.

Gof. There, I confirm it, [Gives the Ring.]
And may my faith forsake me when I shun it.

Ger. Away, your time draws on. Take up the money,
And follow this young Gentleman.

Gof. Farewell Clause,
And may thy honest memory live for ever.

Ger. Heaven blefs you, and still keep you, farewell Master:
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. I have lockt my Youth up close enough for gad-
In an old Tree, and set watch over him. (ding,

Enter Jaculin.

Now for my Love, for sure this Wench must be she,
She follows me; Come hither, pretty Minche.

Jac. No, no, you'll kiss.

Hub. So I will.

Jac. Y'ded law?

How will ye kiss me, pray you?

Hub. Thus, soft as my loves lips.

Jac. Oh!

Hub. What's your Father's name?

Jac. He's gone to Heaven.

Hub. Is it not Gerrard, Sweet?

Jac. I'll stay no longer;

My Mother's an old Woman, and my Brother
Was drown'd at Sea, with catching Cockles. O Love!
O how my heart melts in me: how thou fir'st me!

Hub. 'Tis certain she; pray let me see your hand, Sweet?

Jac. No, no, you'l bite it.

Hub. Sure I should know that Gymmal!

Jac. 'Tis certain he: I had forgot my Ring too.

O Hubert! Hubert!

Hub. Ha! methought she nam'd me——

Do you know me, Chick?

Jac. No indeed, I never saw ye;

But methinks you kiss finely.

Hub. Kiss again then;

By Heaven 'tis she.

Jac. O what a joy he brings me!

Hub. You are not Minche?

Jac. Yes, pretty Gentleman;

And I must be marry'd to morrow to a Capper.

Hub. Must ye my Sweet, and does the Capper love ye?

Jac. Yes, yes, he'll give me pie, and look in mine eyes thus.
'Tis he: 'tis my dear Love: O blest Fortune.

Hub. How fain she would conceal her self, yet shew it!
Will you love me, and leave that man? I'll serve.

Jac. O I shall lose my self!

Hub. I'll wait upon you,
And make you dainty Nose-gays.

Jac. And where will you lick 'em?

Hub. Herein my bosom, Sweet, and make a crown of Lilies
For your fair head.

Jac. And will you love me deed-law?

Hub. With all my Heart.

Jac. Call me to morrow then,
And we'll have brave cheer, and go to Church together:
Give you good ev'n Sir.

Hub. But one word fair Minche.

Jac. I must be gone a milking.

Hub. Ye shall presently.

Did you never hear of a young maid called Jaculin?

Jac. I am discover'd; hark in your ear, I'll tell ye:
You must not know me, kiss and be constant ever.

Hub. Heaven curse me else 'tis she, and now I am certain
They are all here: now for my other project— [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Enter Gofwin, 4. Merchants, Higgen, and Prigg.

1 Mer. Nay, if 'twould do you courtesie.

Gof. None at all, Sir:

Take it, 'tis yours, there's your ten thousand for ye,
Give in my Bills. Your sixteen.

3 Mer. Pray be pleas'd Sir

To make a further use.

Gof. No.

3 Mer. What I have, Sir,
You may command; pray let me be your Servant.

Gof. Put your Hats on: I care not for your courtesies,
They are most untimely done, and no truth in 'em.

2 Mer. I have a frougt of Pepper.

Gof. Rot your Pepper,
Shall I trust you again? there's your seven thousand.

4 Mer. Or if you want fine Sugar, 'tis but sending.

Gof. No, I can send to Barbary, those people
That never yet knew faith, have nobler freedoms:
These carry to Vanlock, and take my Bills in,
To Peter Zuten these: bring back my Jewels,
Why are these pieces?

Enter Saylor.

Saylor. Health to the noble Merchant;
The Susan is return'd.

Gof. Well?

Say. Well, and rich Sir,
And now put in.

Gof. Heaven thou hast heard my prayers.

Say. The brave Rebecca too, bound from the Straits;
With the next Tide is ready to put after.

Gof. What news o'th' fly-boat?

Say. If this Wind hold till midnight,
She will be here, and wealthy, 'scap'd fairly.

Gof. How, prithee, Saylor?

Say. Thus Sir, she had fight
Seven hours together, with six Turkish Gallies,
And she fought bravely; but at length was boarded
And overlaid with strength: when presently
Comes boring up the wind Captain Vannoke,
That valiant Gentleman, you redeem'd from prison;
He knew the Boat, set in, and fought it bravely:
Beat all the Gallies off; sunk three, redeem'd her,
And as a service to ye sent her home Sir.

A a z

Gof.

Gof. An honest noble Captain, and a thankfull ;
There's for thy news : go drink the Merchants health, Saylor.

Say. I thank your bounty, and I'll do it to a doyt, Sir, [Exit Saylor.

1 Mer. What miracles are pour'd upon this fellow !

Gof. This here I hope, my friends, I shall scape prison,
For all your cares to catch me.

2 Mer. You may please Sir

To think of your poor servants in displeasure,
Whose all they have, goods, moneys, are at your service.

Gof. I thank you,
When I have need of you I shall forget you :
You are paid I hope.

All. We joy in your good fortunes.

Enter Van dunck.

Van-d. Come Sir, come take your ease, you must go home
With me, yonder is one weeps and howls.

Gof. Alas how does she ?

Van-d. She will be better soon I hope.

Gof. Why soon Sir ?

Van-d. Why when you have her in your arms, this
My boy she is thy wife. (night)

Gof. With all my heart I take her.

Van-d. We have prepar'd, all thy friends will be there,
And all my Rooms shall smoak to see the revel ;
Thou hast been wrong'd, and no more shall my service
Wait on the knave her Uncle, I have heard all,
All his baits for my Boy, but thou shalt have her ;
Hast thou dispatch't thy business ?

Gof. Most.

Van-d. By the mass Boy,
Thou tumblest now in wealth, and I joy in it,
Thou art the best Boy, that Bruges ever nourish'd.
Thou hast been sad, I'll cheer thee up with Sack,
And when thou art lusty I'll fling thee to thy Mistress.
She'll hug thee, firrah.

Gof. I long to see it,
I had forgot you : there's for you my friends :
You had bur heavy burthens ; commend my love
To my best love, all the love I have
To honest Claust, shortly I will thank him better. [Exit.

Hig. By the mass a royal Merchant,
Gold by the handfull, here will be sport soon, Prig.

Prig. It partly seems so, and here will I be in a trice.

Hig. And I boy,
Away apace, we are look'd for.

Prig. Oh these bak'd meats,
Me thinks I smell them hither.

Hig. Thy mouth waters.

[Exeunt.

SCENA IV.

Enter Hubert, and Hemskirk.

Hub. I Must not.

Hem. Why ? 'tis in thy power to do it, and in mine
To reward thee to thy wishes.

Hub. I dare not, nor I will not.

Hem. Gentle Huntsman,
Though thou hast kept me hard : though in thy duty,
Which is requir'd to do it, th' hast used me stubbornly ;
I can forgive thee freely.

Hub. You the Earls servant ?

Hem. I swear I am near as his own thoughts to him ;
Able to doe thee —

Hub. Come, come, leave your prating.

Hem. If thou dar'st but try.

Hub. I thank you heartily, you will be
The first man that will hang me, a sweet recompence,
I could do, but I do not say I will,
To any honest fellow that would think on't,
And be a benefactor.

Hem. If it be not recompenc'd, and to thy own desires,
If within these ten days I do not make thee —

Hub. What, a false knave !

Hem. Prethee, prethee conceive me righty, any thing
Of profit or of place that may advance thee.

Hub. Why what a Goofecap would'st thou make me,
Do not I know that men in misery will promise
Any thing, more than their lives can reach at ?

Hem. Believe me Huntsman,
There shall not one short syllable
That comes from me, pass
Without its full performance.

Hub. Say you so Sir ?

Have ye e're a good place for my quality ?

Hem. A thousand Chafes, Forcits, Parks : I'll make thee
Chief ranger over all the games.

Hub. When ?

Hem. Presently.

(too.

Hub. This may provoke me : and yet to prove a knave

Hem. 'Tis to prove honest : 'tis to do good service,
Service for him thou art sworn to, for thy Prince,
Then for thy self that good ; what fool would live here,
Poor, and in misery, subject to all dangers,
Law, and lewd people can inflict, when bravely
And to himself he may be law and credit ?

Hub. Shall I believe thee ?

Hem. As that thou holdst most holy.

Hub. Ye may play tricks.

Hem. Then let me never live more.

Hub. Then you shall see Sir, I will do a service
That shall deserve indeed.

Hem. 'Tis well said, Huntsman,
And thou shalt be well thought of. (meer nothing,

Hub. I will do it : 'tis not your setting free, for that's
But such a service, if the Earl be noble,
He shall for ever love me.

Hem. What is't Huntsman ?

Hub. Do you know any of these people live here ?

Hem. No.

Hub. You are a fool then : here be those, to have 'em,
I know the Earl so well, would make him caper.

Hem. Any of the old Lords that rebel'd ?

Hub. Peace, all,

I know 'em every one, and can betray 'em.

Hem. But wilt thou doe this service ?

Hem. If you'll keep

Your faith, and free word to me.

Hem. Wilt thou swear me ?

Hub. No, no, I will believe ye : more than that too,
Here's the right heir.

Hem. O. honest, honest huntsman !

Hub. Now, how to get these Gallants, there's the matter,
You will be constant, 'tis no work for me else.

Hem. Will the Sun shine again ?

Hub. The way to get 'em.

Hem. Propound it, and it shall be done.

Hub. No sleight ;

(For they are Devilish crafty, it concerns 'em,)
Nor reconcilment, (for they dare not trust neither)
Must doe this trick.

Hem. By force ?

Hub. I, that must doe it.

And with the person of the Earl himself,
Authority (and mighty) must come on 'em :
Or else in vain : and thus I would have ye do it.
To morrow-night be here : a hundred men will bear 'em,
(So he be there, for he's both wife and valiant,
And with his terrour will strike dead their forces)
The hour be twelve a Clock, now for a guide
To draw ye without danger on these persons,
The woods being thick, and hard to hit, my self
With some few with me, made unto our purpose,
Beyond the wood, upon the plain, will wait ye
By the great Oak.

Hem. I know it : keep thy faith huntsman,
And such a showr of wealth —

Hub.

Hub. I warrant ye :
Miss nothing that I tell ye.

Hem. No.

Hub. Farewel ;
You have your liberty, now use it wisely ;
And keep your hour, goe closer about the wood there,
For fear they spy you.

Hem. Well.

Hub. And bring no noise with ye. [Exit.

Hem. All shall be done toth' purpose: farewel huntf man.

Enter Gerrard, Higgen, Prig, Ginks, Snap, Ferret.

Ger. Now, what's the news in town ?

Ginks. No news, but joy Sir ;
Every man wooing of the noble Merchant,
Who has his hearty commendations to ye.

Fer. Yes this is news, this night he's to be married.

Ginks. Byth' mafs that's true, he marrys Vandunks
The dainty black-ey'd bell. (Daughter,

Hig. I would my clapper
Hung in his baldrick, a what a peal could I Ring ?

Ger. Married ?

Ginks. 'Tis very true Sir, O the pyes,
The piping hot mince-pyes !

Prig. O the Plum-pottage ! (boys,

Hig. For one leg of a goose now would I venture a limb
I love a fat goose, as I love allegiance,
And—upon the Boors, too well they know it,
And therefore starve their poultry.

Ger. To be married

To Vandunks Daughter ?

Hig. O this pertious Merchant :
What sport he will have: but hark you brother Prig,
Shall we do nothing in the foresaid wedding ?
There's mony to be got, and meat I take it,
What think ye of a morise ?

Prig. No, by no means,
That goes no further than the street, there leaves us,
Now we must think of something that must draw us
Into the bowels of it, intoth' buttery,
Into the Kitchin, into the Cellar, something
That that old drunken Burgo-master loves,
What think ye of a wassel ?

Hig. I think worthily.

Prig. And very fit it should be, thou, and Ferret,
And Ginks to sing the Song : I for the structure,
Which is the bowl.

Hig. Which must be up-sey English,
Strong, lusty London beer ; let's think more of it.

Ger. He must not marry.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. By your leave in private,
One word Sir, with ye ; Gerrard : do not start me,
I know ye, and he knows ye, that best loves ye :
Hubert speaks to ye, and you must be Gerrard.
The time invites you to it.

Ger. Make no show then,
I am glad to see you Sir ; and I am Gerrard.
How stand affairs ?

Hub. Fair, if ye dare now follow,
Hemskirk I have let goe, and these my causes,
Ple tell ye privately, and how I have wrought him,
And then to prove me honest to my friends,
Look upon these directions, you have seen his.

Hig. Then will I speak a speech, and a brave speech
In praise of Merchants, where's the Ape ?

Prig.— Take him,
A gowty Bear-ward stole him the other day.

Hig. May his Bears worry him, that Ape had paid it,
What dainty tricks ? — O that burfen Bear-ward :
In his French doublet, with his blister'd bullions,
In a long stock ty'd up ; O how daintily
Would I have made him wait, and shift a trencher,

Carry a cup of wine ? ten thousand stinks
Wait on thy mangy hide, thou lowzy Bear ward.

Ger. 'Tis passing well, I both believe and joy in't,
And will be ready : keep you here the mean while,
And keep in, I must a while forsake ye,
Upon mine anger no man stir, this two hours.

Hig. Not to the wedding Sir ?

Ger. Not any whither.

Hig. The wedding must be seen sir ; we want meat too.
We are horrible out of meat.

Prig. Shall it be spoken,
Fat Capons shak't their tails at's in defiance ?
And turkey toms such honorable monuments,
Shall piggs, Sir, that the Parsons self would envy,
And dainty Ducks——

Ger. Not a word more, obey me. [Exit Ger.

Hig. Why then come dolefull death, this is flat tyranny,
And by this hand ——

Hub. What ?

Hig. Ple goe sleep upon't. [Exit Hig.

Prig. Nay, and there be a wedding, and we wanting,
Farewel our happy days : we do obey Sir. [Exeunt.

SCENA V.

Enter two young Merchants.

1 Mer. Well met Sir, you are for this lusty wedding.

2 Mer. I am so, so are you I take it.

1 Mer. Yes,

And it much glads me, that to doe him service
Who is the honour of our trade, and lustre,
We meet thus happily.

2 Mer. He's a noble fellow,
And well becomes a bride of such a beauty.

1 Mer. She is passing fair indeed, long may their loves
Continue like their youths, in spring of sweetness,
All the young Merchants will be here
No doubt on't,
For he that comes not to attend this wedding,
The curse of a most blind one fall upon him,
A loud wife, and a lazie : here's Vanlock.

Enter Vanlock and Francis.

Vanl. Well overtaken Gentlemen : save ye.

1 Mer. The same to you sir ; save ye fair Mistris Francis,
I would this happy night might make you blush too.

Vanl. She dreams apace.

Fran. That's but a drowsie fortune.

3 Mer. Nay take us with ye too ; we come to that end,
I am sure ye are for the wedding.

Vanl. Hand and heart man :
And what their feet can doe, I could have tript it
Before this whorson gout.

Enter Clause.

Clau. Bless ye Masters. (Master,

Vanl. Clause ? how now Clause ? thou art come to see thy
(And a good master he is to all poor people)
In all his joy, 'tis honestly done of thee.

Clau. Long may he live sir, but my business now is
If you would please to doe it, and to him too.

Enter Goswin.

Vanl. He's here himself.

Gof. Stand at the door my friends ?
I pray walk in : welcom fair Mistris Francis,
See what the house affords, there's a young Lady
Will bid you welcom.

Vanl. We joy your happiness. [Exeunt.

Gof. I hope it will be so : Clause nobly welcom,
My honest, my best friend, I have been careful
To see thy monys ——

Clau. Sir, that brought not me,
Do you know this Ring again ?

Gof. Thou hadst it of me.
Cl. And do you well remember yet, the boun you gave me
 Upon the return of this?
Gof. Yes, and I grant it,
 Be it what it will: ask what thou canst; I'll do it;
 Within my power.
Cl. Ye are not married yet?
Gof. No.
Cl. Faith I shall ask you that that will disturb ye,
 But I must put ye to your promise.
Gof. Do,
 And if I faint and flinch in't—
Cl. Well said Master,
 And yet it grieves me too: and yet it must be.
Gof. Prethee distrust me not.
Cl. You must not marry,
 That's part of the power you gave me: which to make up,
 You must presently depart, and follow me.
Gof. Not marry, Cl. use?
Cl. Not if you keep your promise,
 And give me power to ask.
Gof. Prethee think better,
 I will obey, by Heaven.
Cl. I have thought the best, Sir.
Gof. Give me thy reason, do'st thou fear her honesty?
Cl. Chaste as the ice, for any thing I know, Sir. (pose?)
Gof. Why should'st thou light on that then? to what pur-
Cl. I must not now discover.
Gof. Must not marry?
 Shall I break now when my poor heart is pawn'd?
 When all the preparation?
Cl. Now or never. (me.)
Gof. Come, 'tis not that thou would'st: thou do'st but fright
Cl. Upon my soul it is, Sir, and I bind ye.
Gof. Cl. use, canst thou be so cruel?
Cl. You may break, Sir,
 But never more in my thoughts appear honest.
Gof. Did'st ever see her?
Cl. No.
Gof. She is such a thing,
 O Cl. use, she is such a wonder, such a mirror,
 For beauty, and fair vertue, Europe has not:
 Why hast thou made me happy, to undo me?
 But look upon her; then if thy heart relent not,
 I'll quit her presently: who waits there?
Ser. [within] Sir.
Gof. Bid my fair love come hither, and the Company.
 Prethee be good unto me; take a mans heart
 And look upon her truly: take a friends heart
 And feel what misery must follow this.
Cl. Take you a noble heart and keep your promise;
 I forsook all I had, to make you happy.

Enter Gertrude, Vandunk, and the rest Merchants.

Can that thing call'd a Woman, stop your goodness?
Gof. Look there she is, deal with me as thou wilt now,
 Did'st ever see a fairer?
Cl. She is most goodly.
Gof. Pray ye stand still.
Ger. What ails my love?
Gof. Did'st thou ever,
 By the fair light of Heaven, behold a sweeter?
 O that thou knew'st but love, or ever felt him,
 Look well, look narrowly upon her beauties.
 1 Mer. Sure h'as some strange design in hand, he starts so.
 2 Mer. This Beggar has a strong power over his pleasure.
Gof. View all her body.
Cl. 'Tis exact and excellent.
Gof. Is she a thing then to be lost thus lightly?
 Her mind is ten times sweeter, ten times nobler,
 And but to hear her speak, a Paradise,
 And such a love she bears to me, a chaste love,
 A vertuous, fair, and fruitful love: 'tis now too
 I am ready to enjoy it; the Priest ready, Cl. use,

To say the holy words shall make us happy,
 This is a cruelty beyond mans study,
 All these are ready, all our joyes are ready,
 And all the expectation of our friends,
 'Twill be her death to do it.

Cl. Let her dye then.

Gof. Thou canst not: 'tis impossible.

Cl. It must be.

Gof. 'Twill kill me too, 'twill murder me: by heaven Cl. use
 I'll give thee half I have; come thou shalt save me.

Cl. Then you must go with me: I can stay no longer,
 If ye be true, and noble.

Gof. Hard heart, I'll follow:

Pray ye all go in again, and pray be merry,
 I have a weighty business, (give my Cloak there,)

Enter Servant (with a Cloak.)

Concerns my life, and state, (make no enquiry,)
 This present hour befall me: with the soonest
 I shall be here again: nay pray go in, Sir,
 And take them with you, 'tis but a night lost, Gentlemen.

Van. Come, come in, we will not lose our meat yet,
 Nor our good mirth, he cannot stay long from her,
 I am sure of that.

Gof. I will not stay; believe, Sir. [Exit.]

Gertrude, a word with you.

Ger. Why is this stop, Sir?

Gof. I have no more time left me, but to kiss thee,
 And tell thee this, I am ever thine: farewell wench. [Exit.]

Ger. And is that all your Ceremony? Is this a wedding?
 Are all my hopes and prayers turn'd to nothing?
 Well, I will say no more, nor sigh, nor sorrow;
 Till to thy face I prove thee false. Ah me! [Exit.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gertrude, and a Boor.

Ger. Lead, if thou thinkst we are right: why dost thou make
 These often stands? thou saidst thou knewst the way.

Bo. Fear nothing, I do know it: would 'twere homeward.

Ger. Wrought from me by a Beggar? at the time
 That most should tye him? 'tis some other Love
 That hath a more command on his affections,
 And he that fetcht him, a disguised Agent,
 Not what he personated; for his fashion
 Was more familiar with him, and more powerful
 Than one that ask'd an alms: I must find out
 One, if not both: kind darkness be my shroud,
 And cover loves too curious search in me,
 For yet, suspicion, I would not name thee.

Bo. Mistress, it grows somewhat pretty and dark.

Ger. What then?

Bo. Nay, nothing; do not think I am afraid,
 Although perhaps you are.

Ger. I am not, forward.

Bo. Sure but you are? give me your hand, fear nothing.
 There's one leg in the wood, do not pull me backward:

What a sweat one on's are in, you or I?

Pray God it do not prove the plague; yet sure

It has infected me; for I sweat too,

It runs out at my knees, feel, feel, I pray you.

Ger. What ails the fellow?

Bo. Hark, hark I beseech you,

Do you hear nothing?

Ger. No.

Bo. List: a wild Hog,

He grunts: now 'tis a Bear: this wood is full of 'em,

And now, a Wolf, Mistress, a Wolf, a Wolf,

It is the howling of a Wolf.

Ger. The braying of an Ass, is it not?

Bo. Oh, now one has me;

Oh,

Oh my left haunch, farewell.

Ger. Look to your Shanks,
Your Breech is safe enough, the Wolf's a Fern-brake.

Bo. But see, see, see, there is a Serpent in it;
It has eyes as broad as Platters; it spits fire;
Now it creeps towards us, help me to say my Prayers:
It hath swallowed me almost, my breath is stopt;
I cannot speak: do I speak Mistress? tell me.

Ger. Why, thou strange timorous Sot, canst thou perceive
Any thing i' th' Bush but a poor Glo-worm?

Bo. It may be 'tis but a Glo-worm now, but 'twill
Grow to a Fire-drake presently.

Ger. Come thou from it:
I have a precious guide of you, and a courteous,
That gives me leave to lead my self the way thus.

Bo. It thunders, you hear that now?

Ger. I hear one hollow.

Bo. 'Tis thunder, thunder:

See, a Flash of Lightning:

Are you not blasted Mistress? pull your Mask off,
It has plaid the Barber with me here: I have lost
My Beard, my Beard, pray God you be not shaven,
'Twill spoil your Marriage Mistress.

Ger. What strange Wonders
Fear fancies in a Coward!

Bo. Now the Earth opens.

Ger. Prithce hold thy peace.

Bo. Will you on then?

Ger. Both love and jealousy have made me bold,
Where my Fate leads me, I must go.

Bo. God be with you then.

[Exit.

Enter Woolfort, Hemskirk, and Attendants.

Hem. It was the Fellow sure, he that should guide me,
The Hunts-man that did hollow us.

Woolf. Best make a stand,
And listen to his next: Ha!

Hem. Who goes there?

Bo. Mistress, I am taken.

Hem. Mistress? Look forth Souldiers.

Woolf. What are you Sirrah?

Bo. Truly all is left

Of a poor Boor, by day-light, by night no body,
You might have spar'd your Drum, and Guns, and Pikes too
For I am none that will stand out Sir, I.

You may take me in with a walking Stick,
Even when you please, and hold me with a packthred.

Hem. What woman was't you call'd to?

Bo. Woman! none Sir.

Woolf. None! did you not name Mistress?

Bo. Yes, but she's

No woman yet: she should have been this night,
But that a Beggar stole away her Bridegroom,
Whom we were going to make hue and cry after;
I tell you true Sir, she should ha' been married to day;
And was the Bride and all; but in came Clause,
The old lame Beggar, and whips up Mr Goswin
Under his arm; away with him as a Kite,
Or an old Fox would swoop away a Gosling.

Hem. 'Tis she, 'tis she, 'tis she: Niece?

Ger. Ha!

Hem. She Sir,

This was a noble entrance to your fortune,
That being on the point thus to be married,
Upon her venture here, you should surprize her.

Woolf. I begin, Hemskirk, to believe my fate,
Works to my ends.

Hem. Yes Sir, and this adds trust
Unto the fellow our guide, who assur'd me Florez
Liv'd in some Merchants shape, as Gerrard did

I' the old Beggars, and that he would use
Him for the train, to call the other forth;
All which we find is done—— That's he again——

(again
Holla

Woolf. Good, we sent out to meet him.

Hem. Here's the Oak.

Ger. I am miserably lost, thus sailn
Into my Uncles hands from all my hopes,
Can I not think away my self and dye?

Enter Hubert, Higgen, Prig, Ferret, Snap, Ginklike Boors.

Hub. I like your habits well: they are safe, stand close.

Hig. But what's the action we are for now? Ha!
Robbing a Ripper of his Fish.

Prig. Or taking
A Poulterer Prisoner, without ransome, Bullycs?

Hig. Or cutting off a Convoy of Butter?

Fer. Or surprizing a Boors ken, for granting cheats!

Prig. Or cackling Cheats?

Hig. Or Mergery-praters, Rogers,
And Tibs o'th' Buttery?

Prig. O I could drive a Regiment
Of Geese afore me, such a night as this,
Ten Leagues with my Hat and Staff, and not a hiss
Heard, nor a wing of my Troops disordered.

Hig. Tell us,
If it be milling of a lag of duds,
The fetching of a back of cloaths or so;
We are horribly out of linnen.

Hub. No such matter.

Hig. Let me alone with the Farmers dog,
If you have a mind to the cheese-lost; 'tis but thus,
And he is a silenc'd Mastiff, during pleasure.

Hub. Would it would please you to be silent.

Hig. Mum. Woolf. Who's there?

Hub. A friend, the Hunts-man.

Hem. O 'tis he.

Hub. I have kept touch Sir, which is the Earl of these?
Will he know a man now?

Hem. This my Lord's the Friend;
Hath undertook the service.

Hub. If't be worth

His Lordships thanks anon, when 'tis done
Lording, I'll look for't, a rude Wood-man,
I know how to pitch my toils; drive in my game:
And I have don't, both Florez and his Father
Old Gerrard, with Lord Arnold of Benthuisen, Cozen, and Jaculin, young Florez's Sister:
I have 'em all.

Woolf. Thou speak'st too much, too happy,
To carry faith with it.

Hub. I can bring you

Where you shall see, and find 'em.

Woolf. VVe will double

VVhat ever Hemskirk then hath promis'd thee.

Hub. And I'll deserve it treble: what horse ha' you?

Woolf. A hundred. That's well: ready to take Upon surprize of 'em.

Hem. Yes. Hub. Divide then

Your force into five Squadrons; for there are
So many out-lets, ways through the wood
That issue from the place where they are lodg'd:
Five several ways, of all which Passages,
VVe must possess our selves, to round 'em in;
For by one starting hole they'll all escape else:

I and 4. Boors here to me will be guides,
The Squadron where you are, my self will lead:
And that they may be more secure, I'll use
My wonted whoops, and hollows, as I were
A hunting for 'em; which will make them rest
Careless of any noise, and be a direction
To the other guides, how we approach 'em still.

Woolf. 'Tis order'd well, and relisheth the Souldier;
Make the division Hemskirk; you are my charge,
Fair One, I'll look to you.

Boo. Shall no body need

To look to me? I'll look unto my self.

Hub. 'Tis but this, remember.

Hig. Say, 'tis done; Boy.

Exeunt.

SCENE

SCENA II.

Enter Gerrard and Florez.

Ger. By this time Sir I hope you want no reasons Why I broke off your marriage, for though I should as a Subject study you my Prince In things indifferent, it will not therefore Discredit you, to acknowledge me your Father, By harkning to my necessary counsels.

Flo. Acknowledge you my Father? Sir I do, And may impiety, conspiring with My other Sins, sink me, and suddenly When I forget to pay you a Sons duty In my obedience, and that help'd forth With all the cheerfulness.

Ger. I pray you rise, And may those powers that see and love this in you, Reward you for it: Taught by your example Having receiv'd the rights due to a Father, I tender you th' allegiance of a Subject: Which as my Prince accept of.

Flo. Kneel to me?
May mountains first fall down beneath their valleys, And fire no more mount upwards, when I suffer An act in nature so preposterous; I must o'come in this, in all things else The victory be yours: could you here read me, You should perceive how all my faculties Triumph in my blest fate, to be found yours; I am your son, your son Sir, and am prouder To be so, to the Father, to such goodness (Which heaven be pleas'd, I may inherit from you) Than I shall ever of those specious titles That plead for my succession in the Earldom (Did I possess it now) left by my Mother.

Ger. I do believe it: but ———

Flo. O my lov'd Father, Before I knew you were so, by instinct, Nature had taught me, to look on your wants, Not as a stranger's: and I know not how, What you call'd charity, I thought the payment Of some religious debt, nature stood bound for; And last of all, when your magnificent bounty In my low ebb of fortune, had brought in A flood of blessings, though my threatening wants And fear of their effects, still kept me stupid, I soon found out, it was no common pity That led you to it.

Ger. Think of this hereafter When we with joy may call it to remembrance, There will be a time, more opportune, than now To end our story, with all circumstances, I add this only: when we fled from Wolfort I sent you into England, and there placed you With a brave Flanders Merchant, call'd rich Goswin, A man supplied by me unto that purpose, As bound by oath never to discover you, Who dying, left his name and wealth unto you As his reputed Son, and yet receiv'd so; But now, as Florez, and a Prince, remember The countreys, and the subjects general good Must challenge the first part in your affection: The fair maid, whom you chose to be your wife, Being so far beneath you, that your love Must grant she's not your equal.

Flo. In descent Or borrowed glories from dead Ancestors, But for her beauty, chastity, and all virtues Ever remembered in the best of women, A Monarch might receive from her, not give, Though she were his Crowns purchase; in this only Be an indulgent Father: in all else, Use your authority.

Enter Hubert, Hemskirk, Wolfort, Bertha, and Souldiers.

Hub. Sir, here be two of 'em, The Father and the Son, the rest you shall have As fast as I can rouse them.

Ger. Who's this? Wolfort?

Wol. I Cripple, your feigned crutches will not help you, Nor patch'd disguise that hath so long conceal'd you, It's now no halting: I must here find Gerrard, And in this Merchants habit, one call'd Florez Who would be an Earl.

Ger. And is, wert thou a subject.

Flo. Is this that Traitor Wolfort?

Wol. Yes, but you Are they that are betray'd: Hemskirk.

Ber. My Goswin Turn'd Prince? O I am poorer by this greatness, Than all my former jealousies or misfortunes.

Florez. Gertrude?

Wol. Stay Sir, you were to day too near her, You must no more aim at those easie accesses, Lest you can do't in air, without a head, Which shall be suddenly tri'd.

Ber. O take my heart, first, And since I cannot hope now to enjoy him, Let me but fall a part of his glad ransom.

Wol. You know not your own value, that entreat.

Ger. So proud a fiend as Wolfort.

Wol. For so lost

A thing as Florez.

Flo. And that would be so Rather than she should stoop again to thee; There is no death, but's sweeter than all life, When Wolfort is to give it: O my Gertrude, It is not that, nor Princedom that I goe from, It is from thee, that loss includeth all.

Wol. I, if my young Prince knew his loss, he would (say so, he would) Which that he yet may chew on, I will tell him This is no Gertrude, nor no Hemskirk's Niece, Nor Vandunks Daughter: this is Bertha, Bertha, The heir of Brabant, she that caus'd the war, Whom I did steal, during my treaty there, In your minority, to raise my self; I then fore-seeing 'twould beget a quarel, That, a necessity of my employment, The same employment, make me master of strength, That strength, the Lord of Flanders, so of Brabant, By marrying her: which had not been to doe Sir, She come of years, but that the expectation First of her Fathers death, retarded it, And since the standing out of Bruges, where Hemskirk had hid her, till she was near lost: But Sir, we have recover'd her: your Merchant ship May break, for this was one of your best bottoms I think.

Ger. Insolent Devil!

Enter Hubert, with Jaqueline, Ginks, and Costin.

Wol. Who are these, Hemskirk?

Hem. More, more, Sir.

Flo. How they triumph in their treachery!

Hem. Lord Arnold of Benthusin, this Lord Costin, This Jaqueline the sister unto Florez.

Wol. All found? why here's brave game, this was sport (royall, And puts me in thought of a new kind of death for 'em.

Huntf-man, your horn: first wind me Florez fall, Next Gerrards, then his Daughter Jaquelines, Those rascals, they shall dye without their rights: Hang 'em Hemskirk on these trees; Ple take The assay of these my self.

Hub. Not here my Lord, Let 'em be broken up upon a scaffold,

'Twill shew the better when their arbour's made.

Ger. Wretch, art thou not content thou hast betray'd us,
But mock us too?

Ginks. False Hubert, this is monstrous.

Wol. Hubert? Hem. Who, this?

Ger. Yes this is Hubert, Wolfort,
I hope he has helpt himself to a tree.

Wol. The first,

The first of any, and most glad I have you Sir,
I let you goe before, but for a train;
Is't you have done this service?

Hub. As your Huntsman,
But now as Hubert; save your selves, I will,
The Wolf's afoot, let slip; kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter with a drum Van-dunk, Merchants, Higgen, Prig, Ferret, Snap.

Wol. Betray'd?

Hub. No, but well catch'd: and I the Huntsman.

Van-d. How do you Wolfort? Rascal, good knave Wolfort,
I speak it now without the Rose, and Hemskirk,
Rogue Hemskirk, you that have no niece, this Lady
Was stoln by you, and ta'ne by you, and now
Resign'd by me, to the right owner here:
Take her my Prince.

Flo. Can this be possible,
Welcom my love, my sweet, my worthy love. (thank

Van-d. I ha' giv'n you her twice: now keep her better, and Lord Hubert, that came to me in Gerrards name,
And got me out, with my brave Boyes, to march
Like Cesar, when he bred his Commentaries,
So I, to bread my Chronicle, came forth
Cesar Van-dunk, & veni, vidi, vici,
Give me my Bottle, and set down the drum;
You had your tricks Sir, had you? we ha' tricks too,
You stole the Lady?

Hig. And we led your Squadrons,
Where they ha' scratch'd their leggs a little, with brambles,
If not their faces.

Prig. Yes, and run their heads Against trees.

Hig. 'Tis Captain Prig, Sir.

Prig. And Coronel Higgen.

Hig. We have fill'd a pit with your people, some with
Some with arms broken, and a neck or two
I think be loose.

Prig. The rest too, that escap'd,
Are not yet out o'the briars,

Hig. And your horses, Sir,
Are well set up in Bruges all by this time:
You look as you were not well Sir, and would be Shortly let blood; do you want a scarf?

Van-d. A halter.

Ger. 'Twas like your self, honest, and noble Hubert:
Can't thou behold these mirrors all together,
Of thy long, false, and bloody usurpation?
Thy tyrannous proscription, and fresh treason:
And not so see thy self, as to fall down
And sinking, force a grave, with thine own guilt,
As deep as hell, to cover thee and it?

Wol. No, I can stand: and praise the toyles that took me
And laughing in them dye, they were brave snares.

Flo. 'Twere truer valour, if thou durst repent
The wrongs th' hast done, and live.

Wol. Who, I repent?
And say I am sorry? yes, 'tis the fool's language
And not for Wolfort.

Van-d. Wolfort, thou art a Devil,
And speakst his language, oh that I had my longing
Under this row of trees now would I hang him.

Flo. No let him live, until he can repent,
But banish'd from our State, that is thy doom. (skirk

Van-d. Then hang his worthy Captain here, this Hem-
For profit of th' example.

Flo. No let him

Enjoy his shame too: with his conscious life,
To shew how much our innocence contemns
All practice from the guiltiest, to molest us.

Van-d. A noble Prince.

Ger. Sir, you must help to join
A pair of hands, as they have done their hearts here,
And to their loves with joy.

Flo. As to mine own,
My gracious Sister, worthiest Brother.

Van. I'll go afore, and have the bon-fire made,
My fire-works, & flap dragons, and good backrack,
With a peck of little fishes, to drink down
In healths to this day.

Hig. 'Slight, here be changes,
The Bells ha' not so many, nor a dance, Prig.

Prig. Our Company's grown horrible thin by it,
What think you Ferret?

Fer. Marry I do think,
That we might all be Lords now, if we could stand for't.

Hig. Not I if they should offer it: I'll dislodge first,
Remove the Bush to another climat.

Ger. Sir, you must thank this worthy Burgomaster,
Here be friends ask to be look'd on too,
And thank'd, who though their trade, and course of life
Be not so perfect, but it may be better'd,
Have yet us'd me with courtesy, and been true
Subjects unto me, while I was their King,
A place I know not well how to resign,
Nor unto whom: But this I will entreat
Your grace, command them follow you to Bruges;
Where I will take the care on me, to find
Some manly, and more profitable course
To fit them, as a part of the Republicque.

Flo. Do you hear Sirs? do so.

Hig. Thanks to your good grace.

Prig. To your good Lordship.

Fer. May you both live long. (all but Beggars.

Ger. Attend me at Van-dunks, the Burgomasters. [Ex.

Hig. Yes, to beat hemp, and be whipt twice a week,
Or turn the wheel, for Crab the Rope maker:
Or learn to go along with him, his course;
That's a fine course now, i' the common-wealth, Prig,
What say you to it?

Prig. It is the backwardst course,
I know i' the world.

Hig. Then Higgen will scarce thrive by it,
You do conclude?

Prig. Faith hardly, very hardly.

Hig. Troth I am partly of your mind, Prince Prig;
And therefore farewell Flanders, Higgen will seek
Some safer shelter, in some other Climat,
With this his tatter'd Colony: Let me see
Snap, Ferret, Prig, and Higgen, all are left
O' the true blood: what? shall we into England?

Prig. Agreed.

Hig. Then bear up bravely with your Brute my lads,
Higgen hath prig'd the prancers in his dayes,
And sold good penny-worths; we will have a course,
The Spirit of Bottom, is grown bottomless.

Prig. I'll mand no more, nor cant.

Hig. Yes, your sixpenny worth
In private, Brother, sixpence is a sum
I'll steal you any mans Dogg for.

Prig. For sixpence more
You'll tell the owner where he is.

Hig. 'Tis right,
Higgen must practise, so must Prig to eat;
And write the Letter: and gi' the word. But now
No more, as either of these.

Prig. But as true Beggars,
As e're we were.

Hig. We stand here, for an Epilogue;
Ladies, your bounties first; the rest will follow;

For womens favours are a leading alms,
If you be pleas'd look cheerly, throw your eyes
Out at your masks.

Prig. And let your beauties sparkle.

Hig. So may you ne'er want dressings, Jewels, gowns
Still i' the fashion.

Prig. Nor the men you love,
Wealth nor discourse to please you.

Hig. May you Gentlemen,
Never want good fresh suits nor liberty.

Prig. May every Merchant here see safe his ventures.

Hig. And every honest Citizen his debts in.

Prig. The Lawyers again good Clyents.

Hig. And the Clyents good Counsel.

Prig. All the Gamesters here good fortune.

Hig. The Drunkards too good wine.

Prig. The eaters meat
Fit for their tastes and palats.

Hig. The good wives kind Husbands.

Prig. The young maids choyce of Sutors.

Hig. The Midwives merry hearts.

Prig. And all good cheer.

Hig. As you are kind unto us and our Bush,
We are the Beggars and your daily Beadsmen,
And have your mony, but the Alms we ask
And live by, is your Grace, give that, and then We'll boldly say our word is, Come again.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter 2 Ushers, and Grooms with perfumes.

1 Usher.
Round, round, perfume it round, quick, look ye
Diligently the state be right, are these the richest
Cushions? Fie, fie, who waits i'th' wardrobe?
2 Ush. But pray tell me, do you think for certain
These Embassadors shall have this morning audience?
1 Ush. They shall have it: Lord that you live at Court
And understand not! I tell you they must have it.
2 Ush. Upon what necessity?
1 Ush. Still you are out of the trick of Court, sell your place,

Enter Ladies and Gentlemen.
And sow your grounds, you are not for this tillage.
Madams, the best way is the upper lodgings,
There you may see at ease.
Ladies. We thank you, Sir. [Ex. Ladies, Gent.
1 Ush. Would you have all these slighted? who should report
The Embassadors were handsome men? his beard (then,
A neat one? the fire of his eyes quicker than lightning,
And when it breaks, as blasting? his legs, though little ones,
Yet movers of a mass of understanding?

Who shall commend their Cloaths? who shall take notice
Of the most wise behaviour of their Feathers?

Ye live a raw man here.

2 Ush. I think I do so.

Enter 2 Citizens, and Wives.

1 Ush. Why, whither would ye all press?

1 Cit. Good Master Usher.

(here.)

2 Cit. My wife, and some few of my honest neighbours,

1 Ush. Prethee begone thou and thy honest Neighbours,
Thou lookst like an Ass, why, whither would you fish face?

2 Cit. If I might have

But the honour to see you at my poor house, Sir,
A Capon bridled and saddled, I'll assure your worship,
A shoulder of Mutton and a pottle of Wine, Sir,
I know your Brother, he was as like ye,
And shot the best at Butts——

1 Ush. A—— upon thee.

2 Cit. Some Musick I'll assure you too,
My toy, Sir, can play o'th' Virginals.

1 Ush. Prethee good toy,
Take away thy shoulder of Mutton, it is flie-blown,
And shoulder take thy flap along, here's no place for ye;
Nay then you had best be knock'd.

[Ex. Cit.]

Enter Celia.

Cel. I wou'd fain see him,
The glory of this place makes me remember,
But dye those thoughts, dye all but my desires,
Even those to death are sick too; he's not here,
Nor how my eyes may guide me——

1 Ush. What's your business?

Who keeps the outward door there? here's fine shuffling,
You wastcoateer you must go back.

Cel. There is not,
There cannot be, six days and never see me?
There must not be desire; Sir, do you think
That if you had a Mistress——

1 Ush. Death, she is mad.

Cel. And were your self an honest man? it cannot——

1 Ush. What a Devil hast thou to do with me or my ho-
Will you be jogging, good nimble tongue, (neesty?)
My fellow door-keeper.

2 Ush. Prethee let her alone.

1 Ush. The King is coming,
And shall we have an agent from the Suburbs
Come to crave audience too?

Cel. Before I thought ye
To have a little breeding, some tang of Gentry;
But now I take ye plainly,
Without the help of any perspective,
For that ye cannot alter.

1 Ush. What's that?

Cel. An Ass, Sir, you bray as like one,
And by my troth, me thinks as ye stand now,
Considering who to kick next, you appear to me
Just with that kind of gravity, and wisdom;
Your place may bear the name of Gentleman,
But if ever any of that butter stick to your bread——

2 Ush. You must be modester.

Cel. Let him use me nobler,
And wear good Cloaths to do good Offices;
They hang upon a fellow of his vertue,
As though they hung on Gibbets.

2 Ush. A perillous wench.

1 Ush. Thrust her into a corner, I'll no more on her.

2 Ush. You have enough, go pretty Maid, stand close,
And use that little tongue, with a little more temper.

Cel. I thank ye, Sir.

2 Ush. When the show's past,
I'll have ye into the Cellar, there we'll dine.

A very pretty wench, a witty Rogue,
And there we'll be as merry; can ye be merry?

Cel. O very merry.

2 Ush. Only our selves; this churlish fellow shall not know.

Cel. By no means.

2 Ush. And can you love a little?

Cel. Love exceedingly:

I have cause to love you, dear Sir.

2 Ush. Then I'll carry ye;

And shew you all the pictures, and the hangings,
The Lodgings, Gardens, and the walks: and then, sweet,
You shall tell me where you lyc.

Cel. Yes marry will I.

2 Ush. And't shall go hard but I'll send ye a Venison Pastey,
And bring a bottle of wine along.

1 Ush. Make room there.

2 Ush. Room there afore, stand close, the train is coming.

Enter King Antigonus, Timon, Charinthus, Menippus.

Cel. Have I yet left a beauty to catch fools?

Yet, yet, I see him not. O what a misery
Is love, expected long, deluded longer!

Ant. Conduct in the Embassadors.

1 Ush. Make room there.

Ant. They shall not wait long answer—— [Flourish.]

Cel. Yet he comes not.

Enter 3 Embassadors.

Why are eyes set on these, and multitudes
Follow to make these wonders? O good gods!
What would these look like if my love were here?
But I am fond, forgetful.

Ant. Now your grievance,
Speak short, and have as short dispatch.

1 Emb. Then thus, Sir:

In all our Royal Masters names, We tell you,
Ye have done injustice, broke the bonds of concord,
And from their equal shares, from Alexander
Parted, and so possess'd, not like a Brother,
But as an open Enemy, Ye have hedged in Whole Provinces, man'd and maintain'd these injuries;
And daily with your sword (though they still honour ye)
Make bloody inroads, take Towns, and ruin Castles,
And still their sufferance feels the weight.

2 Em. Think of that love great, Sir, that honor'd friendship
Your self held with our Masters, think of that strength
When you were all one body, all one mind;
When all your swords struck one way, when your angers,
Like so many brother Billows rose together,
And curling up your foaming Crests, defied
Even mighty Kings, and in their falls entomb'd 'em;
O think of these; and you that have been Conquerours,
That ever led your Fortunes open ey'd,
Chain'd fast by confidence; you that fame courted,
Now ye want Enemies and men to match ye,
Let not your own Swords seek your ends to shame ye.

Enter Demetrius with a Javelin, and Gentlemen.

3 Em. Choose which you will, or Peace or War,
We come prepar'd for either.

1 Ush. Room for the Prince there.

Cel. Was it the Prince they said? how my heart trembled!
'Tis he indeed; what a sweet noble fierceness
Dwells in his eyes! young Meleager like,
When he return'd from slaughter of the Boar,
Crown'd with the loves and honours of the people,
With all the gallant youth of Greece, he looks now,
Who could deny him love?

Dem. Hail Royal Father.

(Gent.)

Ant. Ye are welcome from your sport, Sir, do you see this
You that bring Thunders in your mouths, and Earthquakes
To shake and totter my designs: can you imagine
(You men of poor and common apprehensions)
While I admit this man, my Son, this nature
That in one look carries more fire and fierceness,
Than all your Masters in their lives, dare I admit him,
Admit him thus, even to my side, my bosom,

When

When he is fit to rule, when all men cry him,
And all hopes hang about his head; thus place him,
His weapon hatched in blood, all these attending
When he shall make their fortunes, all as fudden
In any expedition he shall point 'em,
As arrows from a Tartars bow, and speeding
Dare I do this, and fear an enemy?
Fear your great Master? yours? or yours?

Dem. O Hercules!

Who saies you do, Sir? Is there any thing
In these mens faces, or their Masters actions,
Able to work such wonders?

Cel. Now he speaks:

O I could dwell upon that tongue for ever.

Dem. You call 'em Kings, they never wore those Royalties,
Nor in the progress of their lives arriv'd yet
At any thought of King: Imperial dignities,
And powerful God-like actions, fit for Princes
They can no more put on, and make 'em fit right,
Than I can with this mortal hand hold Heaven:
Poor petty men, nor have I yet forgot
The chiefest honours time, and merit gave 'em:
Lisimachus your Master, at the best,
His highest, and his hopeful'st Dignities
Was but grand-master of the Elephants;
Seleucus of the Treasure; and for Ptolomey,
A thing not thought on then, scarce heard of yet,
Some Master of Ammunition: and must these men—

Cel. What a brave confidence flows from his spirit!
O sweet young man!

Dem. Must these hold pace with us,
And on the same file hang their memories?
Must these examine what the wills of Kings are?
Prescribe to their designs, and chain their actions
To their restraints? be friends, and foes when they please?
Send out their Thunders, and their menaces,
As if the fate of mortal things were theirs?
Go home good men, and tell your Masters from us,
We do 'em too much honour to force from 'em
Their barren Countries, ruin their vast Cities,
And tell 'em out of love, we mean to leave 'em
(Since they will needs be Kings) no more to tread on,
Than they have able wits, and powers to manage,
And so we shall befriend 'em. Ha! what does she there?

Emb. This is your answer King?

Ant. 'Tis like to prove so.

Dem. Fie, sweet, what makes you here?

Cel. Pray ye do not chide me.

Dem. You do your self much wrong and me.

Cel. Pray you pardon me,

I feel my fault which only was committed
Through my dear love to you: I have not seen ye,
And how can I live then? I have not spoke to ye—

Dem. I know this week ye have not; I will redeem all.
You are so tender now; think where you are, sweet.

Cel. What other light have I left?

Dem. Prethee Celia,
Indeed I'll see you presently.

Cel. I have done, Sir:

You will not miss?

Dem. By this, and this, I will not.

Cel. 'Tis in your will and I must be obedient.

Dem. No more of these assemblies.

Cel. I am commanded.

1 Ush. Room for the Lady there: Madam, my service—

1 Gent. My Coach an't please you Lady.

2 Ush. Room before there.

2 Gent. The honour, Madam, but to wait upon you—
My servants and my state.

Cel. Lord, how they flock now?

Before I was afraid they would have beat me;
How these flies play i'th' Sun-shine? pray ye no services,
Or if ye needs must play the Hobby-horses,
Seek out some beauty that affects 'em: farewell,

Nay pray ye spare: Gentlemen I am old enough
To go alone at these years, without crutches. [Exit.

2 Ush. Well I could curse now: but that will not help me,
I made as sure account of this wench now, immediately,
Do but consider how the Devil has crost me,
Meat for my Master she cries, well—

3 Em. Once more, Sir,

We ask your resolutions: Peace or War yet?

Dem. War, War, my noble Father.

1 Em. Thus I sling it:

And fair ey'd peace, farewell.

Ant. You have your answer;

Conduct out the Embassadors, and give 'em Convoyes.

Dem. Tell your high hearted Masters, they shall not seek us,
Nor cool i'th' field in expectation of us,
We'll ease your men those marches: In their strengths,
And full abilities of mind and courage,
We'll find 'em out, and at their best trim buckle with 'em

3 Em. You will find so hot a Souldier's welcome, Sir,
Your favour shall not freeze.

2 Em. A forward Gentleman,
Pity the Wars should bruise such hopes—

Ant. Conduct 'em—

[Ex. Em]

Now, for this preparation: where's Leontius?

Call him in presently: for I mean in person Gentlemen
My self, with my old fortune—

Dem. Royal Sir:

Thus low I beg this honour: fame already
Hath every where rais'd Trophies to your glory,
And conquest now grown old, and weak with following
The weary marches and the bloody shocks
You daily set her in: 'tis now scarce honour
For you that never knew to fight, but conquer;
To sparkle such poor people: the Royal Eagle
When she hath tri'd yer young ones 'gainst the Sun,
And found 'em right; next teacheth 'em to prey,
How to command on wing, and check below her
Even Birds of noble plume; I am your own, Sir,
You have found my spirit, try it now, and teach it
To stoop whole Kingdoms: leave a little for me:
Let not your glory be so greedy, Sir,
To eat up all my hopes; you gave me life,
If to that life you add not what's more lasting
A noble name, for man, you have made a shadow:
Bless me this day: bid me go on, and lead,
Bid me go on, no less fear'd, than Antigonus,
And to my maiden sword, tye fast your fortune:
I know 'twill fight it self then: dear Sir, honour me:
Never fair Virgin long'd so.

Ant. Rise, and command then,

And be as fortunate, as I expect ye:
I love that noble will; your young companion's
Bred up and foster'd with ye, I hope Demetrius,
You will make souldiers too: they must not leave ye.

Enter Leontius.

2 Gent. Never till life leave us, Sir.

Ant. O Leontius,

Here's work for you in hand:

Leon. I am ev'n right glad, Sir.

For by my troth, I am now grown old with idleness;
I hear we shall abroad, Sir.

Ant. Yes, and presently,

But who think you commands now?

Leon. Who commands, Sir?

Methinks mine eye should guide me: can there be (If you your self will spare him so much honour)

Any found out to lead before your Armies,
So full of faith, and fire, as brave Demetrius?

King Philips Son, at his years was an old Souldier,

'Tis time his Fortune be o' wing, high time, Sir,

So many idle hours, as here he loyers,

So many ever-living names he loses,

I hope 'tis he.

Ant.

Ant. 'Tis he indeed, and nobly
He shall set forward : draw you all those Garrisons
Upon the frontiers as you pass : to those
Joyn these in pay at home, our ancient souldiers,
And as you go press all the Provinces.

Leo. We shall not need ;
Believe, this hopefull Gentleman
Can want no swords, nor honest hearts to follow him,
We shall be full, no fear Sir.

Ant. You Leontius,
Because you are an old and faithfull servant,
And know the wars, with all his vantages,
Be near to his instructions, lest his youth
Lose valours best companion, staid discretion,
Shew where to lead, to lodge, to charge with safetie ;
In execution not to break, nor scatter,
But with a provident anger, follow nobly :
Not covetous of blood, and death, but honour,
Be ever near his watches ; cheer his labours,
And where his hope stands fair, provoke his valour ;
Love him, and think it no dishonour (my Demetrius)
To wear this Jewel near thee ; he is a tri'd one,
And one that even in spight of time, that sunk him,
And frosted up his strength, will yet stand by thee,
And with the proudest of thine Enemies
Exchange for blood, and bravely : take his Counsel.

Leo. Your grace hath made me young again, and wanton.

Ant. She must be known and suddenly :
Do ye know her ? [to Mimippus.]

Gent. (har. No, believe Sir.

Ant. Did you observe her, Timon ?

Tim. I look'd on her,
But what she is ———

Ant. I must have that found.

Come in and take your leave.

Tim. And some few Prayers along.

Dem. I know my duty, [Exit Ant.]
You shall be half my Father.

Leo. All your Servant :
Come Gentlemen, you are resolv'd I am sure
To see these wars.

Gent. We dare not leave his fortunes,
Though most assur'd death hung round about us.

Leo. That bargain's yet to make ;
Be not too hasty, when ye face the Enemy,
Nor too ambitious to get honour instantly,
But charge within your bounds, and keep close bodies,
And you shall see what sport we'll make these mad-caps ;
You shall have game enough, I warrant ye,
Every mans Cock shall fight.

Dem. I must go see Sir :
Brave Sir, as soon as I have taken leave,
I'll meet you in the park ;
Draw the men thither,
Wait you upon Leontius.

Gent. We'll attend Sir.

Leo. But I beseech your Grace, with speed ; the sooner
We are i'th' field. ———

Dem. You could not please me better. [Exit.]

Leo. You never saw the wars yet ?

Gent. Not yet Colonel.

Leo. These foolish Mistresses do so hang about ye,
So whimper, and so hug, I know it Gentlemen,
And so intice ye, now ye are i'th' bud ;
And that sweet tilting war, with eyes and kisses,
Th' alarms of soft vows, and sighs, and fiddle faddles,
Spoils all our trade : you must forget these knick knacks,
A woman at some time of year, I grant ye
She is necessarie ; but make no business of her.
How now Lieutenant ?

Enter Lieutenant.

Lieu. Oh Sir, as ill as ever ;
We shall have wars they say ; they are mustering yonder :

Would we were at it once : fie, how it plagues me.

Leo. Here's one has served now under Captain Cupid,
And crackt a Pike in's youth : you see what's come on't.

Lieu. No, my disease will never prove so honourable.

Leo. Why sure, thou hast the best pox.

Lieu. If I have 'em,
I am sure I got 'em in the best company ;
They are pox of thirty Coats.

Leo. Thou hast mew'd 'em finely :
Here's a strange fellow now, and a brave fellow,
If we may say so of a pocky fellow,
(Which I believe we may) this poor Lieutenant ;
Whether he have the scratches, or the scabs,
Or what a Devil it be, I'll say this for him,
There fights no braver souldier under Sun, Gentlemen ;
Show him an Enemy, his pain's forgot straight ;
And where other men by beds and bathes have ease,
And easie rules of Physick ; set him in a danger,
A danger, that's a fearfull one indeed,
Ye rock him, and he will so play about ye,
Let it be ten to one he ne'er comes off again,
Ye have his heart : and then he works it bravely,
And throughly bravely : not a pang remembered :
I have seen him do such things, belief would shrink at.

Gent. 'Tis strange he should do all this, and diseas'd so.

Leo. I am sure 'tis true : Lieutenant, canst thou drink well ?

Lieu. Would I were drunk, dog-drunk, I might not feel Gent. I would take Physick. (this.

Lieu. But I would know my disease first. (backward ?

Leon. Why ? it may be the Colique : canst thou blow

Lieu. There's never a bag-pipe in the Kingdom better.

Gent. Is't not a pleuresie ?

Lieu. 'Tis any thing
That has the Devil, and death in't : will ye march Gentle-
The Prince has taken leave. (men ?

Leo. How know ye that ?

Lieu. I saw him leave the Court, dispatch his followers,
And met him after in a by street : I think
He has some wench, or such a toy, to lick over
Before he go : would I had such another
To draw this foolish pain down.

Leo. Let's away Gentlemen,
For sure the Prince will stay on us.

Gent. We'll attend Sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Demetrius, and Celia.

Cel. Must ye needs go ?

Dem. Or stay with all dishonour.

Cel. Are there not men enough to fight ?

Dem. Fie Celia.

This ill becomes the noble love you bear me ;
Would you have your love a coward ?

Cel. No ; believe Sir,

I would have him fight, but not so far off from me.

Dem. Wouldst have it thus ? or thus ?

Cel. If that be fighting ———

Dem. Ye wanton fool : when I come home again
I'll fight with thee, at thine own weapon Celia,
And conquer thee too.

Cel. That you have done already,
You need no other Arms to me, but these Sir ;
But will you fight your self Sir ?

Dem. Thus deep in blood wench,
And through the thickest ranks of Pikes.

Cel. Spur bravely
Your fire Courser, beat the troops before ye,
And cramb the mouth of death with executions.

Dem. I would do more than these : But prethee tell me,
Tell me my fair, where got'st thou this male Spirit ?
I wonder at thy mind.

Cel. Were I a man then,
You would wonder more.

Dem.

Dem. Sure thou wouldst prove a Souldier,
And some great Leader.

Cel. Sure I should do somewhat;
And the first thing I did, I should grow envious,
Extreamly envious of your youth, and honour.

Dem. And fight against me?

Cel. Ten to one, I should do it.

Dem. Thou wouldst not hurt me?

Cel. In this mind I am in
I think I should be hardly brought to strike ye,
Unless 'twere thus; but in my mans mind ———

Dem. What?

Cel. I should be friends with you too,
Now I think better.

Dem. Ye are a tall Souldier:
Here, take these, and these;
This gold to furnish ye, and keep this bracelet;
Why do you weep now?
You a masculine Spirit?

Cel. No, I confess, I am a fool, a woman:
And ever when I part with you ———

Dem. You shall not,
These tears are like prodigious signs, my sweet one,
I shall come back, loaden with fame, to honour thee.

Cel. I hope you shall:
But then my dear Demetrius,
When you stand Conquerour, and at your mercy
All people bow, and all things wait your sentence;
Say then your eye (surveying all your conquest)
Finds out a beautie, even in sorrow excellent,
A constant face, that in the midst of ruine
With a forc'd smile, both scorns at fate, and fortune:
Say you find such a one, so nobly fortified,
And in her figure all the sweets of nature?

Dem. Prethee,
No more of this, I cannot find her.

Cel. That shews as far beyond my wither'd beauty;
And will run mad to love ye too.

Dem. Do you fear me,
And do you think, besides this face, this beauty,
This heart, where all my hopes are lock'd ———

Cel. I dare not:
No sure, I think ye honest; wondrous honest.
Pray do not frown, I'll swear ye are.

Dem. Ye may choose.

Cel. But how long will ye be away?

Dem. I know not.

Cel. I know you are angry now: pray look upon me:
I'll ask no more such questions.

Dem. The Drums beat,
I can no longer stay.

Cel. They do but call yet:
How fain you would leave my Company?

Dem. I wou'd not,
Unless a greater power than love commanded,
Commands my life, mine honour.

Cel. But a little.

Dem. Prethee farewell, and be not doubtfull of me.

Cel. I would not have ye hurt: and ye are so ventrous ———
But good sweet Prince preserve your self, fight nobly,
But do not thrust this body, 'tis not yours now,
'Tis mine, 'tis only mine: do not seek wounds, Sir,
For every drop of blood you bleed ———

Dem. I will Celia,
I will be carefull.

Cel. My heart, that loves ye dearly.

Dem. Prethee no more, we must part:
Hark, they march now.

Cel. Pox on these bawling Drums: I am sure you'll kiss
But one kiss? what a parting's this? (me,

Dem. Here take me,
And do what thou wilt with me, smother me;
But still remember, if your fooling with me,
Make me forget the trust ———

Cel. I have done: farewell Sir,
Never look back, you shall not stay, not a minute.

Dem. I must have one farewell more.

Cel. No, the Drums beat;
I dare not slack your honour; not a hand more,
Only this look; the gods preserve, and save ye.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Antigonus, Carinthus, Timon.

Ant. What, have ye found her out?

Char. We have hearkned after her.

Ant. What's that to my desire?

Char. Your grace must give us time,
And a little means.

Tim. She is sure a stranger,
If she were bred or known here ———

Ant. Your dull endeavours

Enter Menippus.

Should never be employ'd. Welcom Menippus.

Men. I have found her Sir,
I mean the place she is lodg'd in; her name is Celia,
And much adoe I had to purchase that too.

Ant. Dost think Demetrius loves her?

Men. Much I fear it,
But nothing that way yet can win for certain.
I'll tell your grace within this hour.

Ant. A stranger?

Men. Without all doubt.

Ant. But how should he come to her?

Men. There lies the marrow of the matter hid yet.

Ant. Hast thou been with thy wife?

Men. No Sir, I am going to her.

Ant. Go and dispatch, and meet me in the garden,
And get all out ye can. [Exit.]

Men. I'll doe my best Sir. [Exit.]

Tim. Blest be thy wife, thou wert an arrant afs elle.

Char. I, she is a stirring woman indeed:
There's a brain Brother.

Tim. There's not a handsom wench of any mettle
Within an hundred miles, but her intelligence
Reaches her, and out-reaches her, and brings her
As confidently to Court, as to a sanctuary:
What had his mouldy brains ever arriv'd at,
Had not she beaten it out o'th' Flint to fasten him?
They say she keeps an office of Concealments:
There is no young wench, let her be a Saint,
Unless she live i'th' Center, but she finds her,
And every way prepares addresses to her:
If my wife would have followed her course Charinthus,
Her lucky course, I had the day before him:
O what might I have been by this time, Brother?
But she (forsooth) when I put these things to her,
These things of honest thrift, groans, O my conscience,
The load upon my conscience, when to make us cuckolds,
They have no more burthen than a brood-goose, Brother;
But let's doe what we can, though this wench fail us,
Another of a new way will be lookt at:
Come, let's abroad, and beat our brains, time may
For all his wisdom, yet give us a day. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Drum within, Alarm, Enter Demetrius, and Leontius.

Dem. I will not see 'em fall thus, give me way Sir,
I shall forget you love me else.

Leo. Will ye lose all?
For me to be forgotten, to be hated,
Nay never to have been a man, is nothing,

So you, and those we have preserv'd from slaughter
Come safely off. Dem. I have lost my self.

Leo. You are cozen'd.

Dem. And am most miserable.

Leo. There's no man so, but he that makes himself so.

Dem. I will goe on.

Leo. You must not: I shall tell you then,
And tell you true, that man's unfit to govern,
That cannot guide himself: you lead an Army?
That have not so much manly suff'rance left ye,
To bear a loss?

Dem. Charge but once more Leontius,
My friends and my companions are engag'd all.

Leo. Nay give 'em lost, I saw 'em off their horses,
And the enemy master of their Arms; nor could then
The policie, nor strength of man redeem 'em.

Dem. And shall I know this, and stand fooling?

Leo. By my dead Fathers soul you stir not, Sir,
Or if you doe, you make your way through me first.

Dem. Thou art a Coward.

Leo. To prevent a Madman.

None but your Fathers Son, durst call me so,
'Death if he did—Must I be scandal'd by ye,
That hedg'd in all the helps I had to save ye?
That, where there was a valiant weapon stirring,
Both search'd it out, and singl'd it, unedg'd it,
For fear it should bite you, am I a coward?
Go, get ye up, and tell 'em ye are the Kings Son;
Hang all your Ladys favours on your Crest,
And let them fight their shares; spur to destruction,
You cannot miss the way: be bravely desperate,
And your young friends before ye, that lost this battel,
Your honourable friends, that knew no order,
Cry out, Antigonus, the old Antigonus,
The wife and fortunate Antigonus,
The great, the valiant, and the fear'd Antigonus,
Has sent a desperate son, without discretion
To bury in an hour his age of honour.

Dem. I am ashamed.

Leo. 'Tis ten to one, I die with ye:

The coward will not long be after ye;
I scorn to say I saw you fall, sigh for ye,
And tell a whining tale, some ten years after
To boyes and girls in an old chimney corner,
Of what a Prince we had, how bravely spirited;
How young and fair he fell: we'll all go with ye,
And ye shall see us all, like sacrifices
In our best trim, fill up the mouth of ruine.
Will this faith satisfie your folly? can this show ye
'Tis not to die we fear, but to die poorly,
To fall, forgotten, in a multitude?
If you will needs tempt fortune now she has held ye,
Held ye from sinking up.

Dem. Pray do not kill me,
These words pierce deeper than the wounds I suffer,
The smarting wounds of loss.

Leo. Ye are too tender;
Fortune has hours of loss, and hours of honour,
And the most valiant feel them both: take comfort,
The next is ours, I have a soul descries it:
The angry bull never goes back for breath,
But when he means to arm his fury double.
Let this day set, but not the memorie,
And we shall find a time: How now Lieutenant?

Enter Lieutenant.

Lieu. I know not: I am mall'd: we are bravely beaten,
All our young gallants lost.

Leo. Thou art hurt. Lieu. I am pepper'd,
I was i'th' midst of all: and bang'd of all hands:
They made an anvil of my head, it rings yet;
Never so thresh'd: do you call this fame? I have fam'd it;
I have got immortal fame, but I'll no more on't;
I'll no such scratching Saint to serve hereafter;

O' my conscience I was kill'd above twenty times,
And yet I know not what a Devil's in't,
I crawled away, and lived again still; I am hurt plaguily,
But now I have nothing near so much pain Colonel,
They have sliced me for that maladie.

Dem. All the young men lost?

Lie. I am glad you are here: but they are all i'th' pound fir,
They'll never ride o're other mens corn again, I take it,
Such frisking, and such flaunting with their feathers,
And such carcering with their Mistres favours;
And here must he be pricking out for honour,
And there got he a knock, and down goes pilgarlick,
Commends his soul to his she-saint, and Exit.
Another spurs in there, cries make room villains,
I am a Lord, scarce spoken, but with reverence
A Rascal takes him o're the face, and fells him;
There lyes the Lord, the Lord be with him.

Leo. Now Sir,
Do you find this truth?

Dem. I would not. Lieu. Pox upon it,
They have such tender bodies too; such Culisses,
That one good handsom blow breaks 'em a pieces.

Leo. How stands the Enemy?

Lieu. Even cool enough too:

For to say truth he has been shrewdly heated,
The Gentleman no doubt will fall to his jewlips.

Leo. He marches not i'th' tail on's.

Lieu. No, plague take him,
He'll kiss our tails as soon; he looks upon us,
As if he would say, if ye will turn again, friends,
We will belabor you a little better,
And beat a little more care into your coxcombs.
Now shall we have damnable Ballads out against us,
Most wicked madrigals: and ten to one, Colonel,
Sung to such lowsie, lamentable tunes.

Leo. Thou art merry,

How e're the game goes: good Sir be not troubled,
A better day will draw this back again.
Pray go, and cheer those left, and lead 'em off,
They are hot, and weary.

Dem. I'll doe any thing.

Leo. Lieutenant, send one presently away
Toth' King, and let him know our state: and hark ye,
Be sure the messenger advise his Majesty
To comfort up the Prince: he's full of sadness.

Lieu. When shall I get a Surgeon? this hot weather,
Unless I be well pepper'd, I shall stink, Colonel.

Leo. Go, I'll prepare thee one.

Lieu. If ye catch me then,
Fighting again, I'll eat hay with a horse. [Exit.]

SCENA III.

Enter Leucippe (reading) and two Maids at a Table writing.

Leo. Have ye written to Merione?

1 Ma. Yes, Madam.

Leo. And let her understand the hopes she has,
If she come speedilie ———

1 Ma. All these are specified.

Leo. And of the chain is sent her,
And the rich stuff to make her shew more handsom here?

1 Maid. All this is done, Madam.

Leo. What have you dispatch there?

2 Maid. A letter to the Country maid, and't please ye.

Leo. A pretty girl, but peevish, plaguy peevish:
Have ye bought the embroydered gloves, and that purse for
And the new Curle? (her,

2 Maid. They are ready packt up Madam.

Leo. Her maiden-head will yield me; let me see now;
She is not fifteen they say: for her complexion ———
Cloe, Cloe, Cloe, here, I have her,
Cloe, the Daughter of a Country Gentleman;
Her age upon fifteen: now her complexion,
A lovely brown; here 'tis; eyes black and rolling,

The body neatly built : she strikes a Lute well,
Sings most inticingly, these helps consider'd,
Her maiden-head will amount to some three hundred,
Or three hundred and fifty Crowns, 'twill bear it handsomly.
Her Father's poor, some little share deducted,
To buy him a hunting Nag ; I, 'twill be pretty.
Who takes care of the Merchants Wife ?

1 Ma. I have wrought her.
Leu. You know for whom she is ?

1 Ma. Very well, Madam,
Though very much ado I had to make her
Apprehend that happiness.

Leu. These Kind are subtle ;
Did she not cry and blubber when you urg'd her ? (perish.

1 Ma. O most extremly, and swore she would rather

Leu. Good signs, very good signs,
Symptoms of ealie nature.
Had she the Plate ?

1 Ma. She lookt upon't, and left it,
And turn'd again, and view'd it.

Leu. Very well still.

1 Ma. At length she was content to let it lye there,
Till I call'd for't, or so.

Leu. She will come ?

1 Ma. Do you take me

For such a Fool, I would part without that promise ?

Leu. The Chamber's next the Park.

1 Ma. The Widow, Madam,

You bad me look upon.

Leu. Hang her, she is musty :
She is no mans meat ; besides, she's poor and fluttishi :
Where lyes old Thisbe now, you are so long now——

2 Ma. Thisbe, Thisbe, Thisbe, agent Thisbe, O I have her,
She lyes now in Nicopolis.

Leu. Dispatch a Packet,

And tell her, her Superiour here commnds her
The next month not to fail, but see deliver'd
Here to our use, some twenty young and handfom,
As also able Maids, for the Court service,
As she will answer it : we are out of beauty,
Utterly out, and rub the time away here
With such blown stuff, I am asham'd to send it. } Knock
Who's that ? look out, to your business, Maid, } within.
There's nothing got by idleness : there is a Lady,
Which if I can but buckle with, Altea,
A, A, A, A, Altea young, and married,
And a great lover of her husband, well,
Not to be brought to Court ! say ye so ? I am sorry, (is't ?
The Court shall be brought to you then ; how now, who

1 Ma. An ancient woman, with a maid attending,
A pretty Girl, but out of Cloaths ; for a little money,
It seems she would put her to your bringing up, Madam.

Enter Woman and Phebe.

Leu. Let her come in. Would you ought with us, good
I pray be short, we are full of business. (woman ?

Wo. I have a tender Girl here, an't please your honour.

Leu. Very well.

Wom. That hath a great desire to serve your worship.

Leu. It may be so ; I am full of Maids:

Wom. She is young forsooth——

And for her truth ; and as they say her bearing. (pulse,

Leu. Ye say well ; come ye hither maid, let me feel your
'Tis somewhat weak, but Nature will grow stronger,
Let me see your leg, she treads but low i'th' Pasterns.

Wom. A cork Heel, Madam.

Leu. We know what will do it,
Without your aim, good woman ; what do you pitch her at ?
She's but a slight toy—— cannot hold out long.

Wom. Even what you think is meet.

Leu. Give her ten Crowns, we are full of business ;
She is a poor Woman, let her take a Cheese home.

Enter the wench i' th' Office. [Ex. Wom. and 1 Ma.

2 Ma. What's your name, Sister ?

Phe. Phebe, forsooth.

Leu. A pretty name ; 'twill do well :
Go in, and let the other Maid instruct you, Phebe. [Ex. Phe.
Let my old Velvet skirt be made fit for her.
I'll put her into action for a Walt-coat ;
And when I have rigg'd her up once, this small Pinnace
Shall sail for Gold, and good store too, who's there ? } Knock Lord, shall we never have any ease in this world ! } within Still troubled ! still molested ! what would you have ?

Enter Menippe.

I cannot furnish you faster than I am able,
And ye were my Husband a thousand times, I cannot do it.
At least a dozen posts are gone this morning
For several parts of the Kingdom : I can do no more
But pay 'em, and instruct 'em.

Men. Prithee, good sweet heart,
I come not to disturb thee, nor discourage thee,
I know thou labour'st truly : hark in thine ear.

Leu. Ha !

What do you make so dainty on't ? look there
I am an Ass, I can do nothing.

Men. Celia ?

I, this is she ; a stranger born.

Leu. What would you give for more now ?

Men. Prithee, my best Leucippe, there's much hangs on't,
Lodg'd at the end of Mars's street ? that's true too ;
At the sack of such a Town, by such a Souldier
Preserv'd a Prisoner : and by Prince Demetrius
Bought from that man again, maintain'd and favour'd :
How came you by this knowledg ?

Leu. Poor, weak man,

I have a thousand eyes, when thou art sleeping,
Abroad, and full of business.

Men. You never try'd her ?

Leu. No, she is beyond my level ; so hedg'd in
By the Princes infinite Love and Favour to her——

Men. She is a handsome Wench.

Leu. A delicate, and knows it ;
And out of that proof arms her self.

Men. Come in then ;

I have a great design from the King to you,
And you must work like wax now.

Leu. On this Lady ?

Men. On this, and all your wits call home.

Leu. I have done

Toys in my time of some note ; old as I am,
I think my brains will work without barm ;
Take up the Books.

Men. As we go in, I'll tell ye. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Antigonus, Timon, Lords and a Souldier:

Ant. No face of sorrow for this loss, 'twill choak him,
Nor no man miss a friend, I know his nature
So deep impress with grief, for what he has suffer'd ;
That the least adding to it adds to his ruine ;
His loss is not so infinite, I hope, Souldier.

Soul. Faith neither great, nor out of indiscretion.
The young men out of heat:

Enter Demetrius, Leontius, and Lieutenant.

Ant. I guess the manner.

Lord. The Prince and't like your Grace—— s.

Ant. You are welcome home, Sir :
Come, no more sorrow, I have heard your fortune ;
And I my self have try'd the like : clear up man,
I will not have ye take it thus ; if I doubted.
Your fear had lost, and that you had turn'd your back to 'em,
Bafely besought their mercies——

Leo. No, no, by this hand, Sir ;

We fought like honest and tall men.

Antig. I know't Leontius : or if I thought

Neglect of rule, having his counsel with ye,
Or too vain glorious appetite of Fame,
Your men forgot and scatter'd.

Leo. None of these, Sir,
He shew'd himself a noble Gentleman,
Every way apt to rule.

Ant. These being granted;
Why should you think you have done an act so hainous,
That nought but discontent dwells round about ye?
I have lost a battel.

Leo. I, and fought it hard too.

Ant. With as much means as man——

Leo. Or Devil could urge it.

Ant. Twenty to one of our side now.

Leo. Turn Tables,

Beaten like Dogs again, like Owls, you take it
To heart for flying but a mile before 'em;
And to say the truth, 'twas no flight neither, Sir,
'Twas but a walk, a handsome walk,
I have tumbld with this old Body, beaten like a Stock-fish,
And stuck with Arrows, like an arming Quiver,
Blouded and bang'd almost a day before 'em,
And glad I have got off then. Here's a mad Shaver,
He fights his share I am sure, when e'r he comes to't;
Yet I have seen him trip it tithly too,
And cry the Devil take the hindmost ever.

Lieu. I learnt it of my Betters.

Leo. Bodge at this?

Ant. Has Fortune but one Face?

Lieu. In her best Vizard

Methinks she looks but lowzily.

Ant. Chance, though she faint now,
And sink below our expectations,
Is there no hope left strong enough to buoy her?

Dem. 'Tis not, this day I fled before the Enemy,
And lost my People, left mine Honour murder'd,
My maiden Honour, never to be ransom'd,
(Which to a noble Soul is too too sensible)
Afflicts me with this sadness; most of these,
Time may turn straight again, experience perfect,
An I new Swords cut new ways to nobler Fortunes.
O I have lost——

Ant. As you are mine forget it:
I do not think it loss.

Dem. O Sir, forgive me,
I have lost my friends, those worthy Souls bred with me,
I have lost my self, they were the pieces of me:
I have lost all Arts, my Schools are taken from me,
Honour and Arms, no emulation left me:
I liv'd to see these men lost, look'd upon it:
These men that twin'd their loves to mine; their vertues;
O shame of shames! I saw and could not save 'em,
This carries Sulphur in't, this burns, and boils me,
And like a fatal Tomb, bestrides my memory.

Ant. This was hard fortune, but if alive, and taken,
They shall be ransom'd: let it be at Millions.

Dem. They are dead, they are dead.

Lieu. When wou'd he weep for me thus?
I may be dead and powder'd.

Leo. Good Prince, grieve not:
We are not certain of their deaths: the Enemy,
Though he be hot, and keen,
Yet holds good Quarter.
What Noise is this?

Great Shout within: Enter Gentlemen.

Lieu. He does not follow us?
Give me a Steeple top?

Leo. They live, they live, Sir.

Ant. Hold up your manly face.
They live, they are here, Son.

Dem. These are the men.

1 Gent. They are, and live to honour ye.

Dem. How 'scap'd ye noble friends? methought I saw ye
Even in the Jaws of Death.

2 Gent. Thanks to our folly,
That spur'd us on; we were indeed hedg'd round in't;
And ev'n beyond the hand of succour, beaten,
Unhors'd, disarm'd: and what we lookt for then, Sir,
Let such poor weary Souls that hear the Bell knoll,
And see the Grave a digging, tell.

Dem. For Heavens sake
Delude mine Eyes no longer! how came ye off?

1 Gent. Against all expectation, the brave Seleucus,
I think this day enamour'd on your Vertue,
When, through the Troops, he saw ye shoot like lightning;
And at your manly courage all took fire;
And after that, the misery we fell to
The never-certain Fate of War, considering,
As we stood all before him, Fortunes ruines,
Nothing but Death expecting, a short time
He made a stand upon our Youths and Fortunes.
Then with an eye of mercy inform'd his Judgment,
How yet unripe we were, unblown, unharden'd,
Unfitted for such fatal ends; he cryed out to us,
Go Gentlemen, commend me to your Master,
To the most High, and Hopeful Prince, Demetrius;
Tell him the Valour that he showed against me
This day, the Virgin Valour, and true fire,
Deserves even from an Enemy this courtesie;
Your Lives, and Arms freely I'll give 'em: thank him.
And thus we are return'd, Sir.

Leo. Faith, 'twas well done;
'Twas bravely done; was't not a noble part, Sir?

Lieu. Had I been there, up had I gone, I am sure on't;
These noble tricks I never durst trust 'em yet.

Leo. Let me not live, and't were not a famed honesty;
It takes me such a tickling way: now would I wish Hea-
But e'n the happiness, e'n that poor blessing (ven,
For all the sharp afflictions thou hast sent me,
But e'n i'th' head o'th' field, to take Seleucus.
I should do something memorable: fie, sad still?

1 Gent. Do you grieve, we are come off?

Dem. Unransom'd, was it?

2 Gent. It was, Sir.

Dem. And with such a fame to me?
Said ye not so?

Leo. Ye have heard it.

Dem. O Leontius!
Better I had lost 'em all: my self had perished,
And all my Fathers hopes.

Leo. Mercy upon you;
What ails you, Sir? Death, do not make fools on's;
Neither go to Church, nor tarry at home,
That's a fine Horn-pipe?

Ant. What's now your grief, Demetrius?

Dem. Did he not beat us twice?

Leo. He beat, a Pudding;
Beat us but once.

Dem. H'as beat me twice, and beat me to a Coward.
Beat me to nothing.

Lieu. Is not the Devil in him?

Leo. I pray it be no worse.

Dem. Twice conquer'd me.

Leo. Bear witness all the world, I am a Dunce here.

Dem. With valour first he struck me, then with honour,
That stroak Leontius, that stroak, dost thou not feel it?

Leo. Whereabouts was it? for I remember nothing yet.

Dem. All these Gentlemen
That were his Prisoners——

Leo. Yes, he set 'em free, Sir,
With Arms and honour.

Dem. There, there, now thou hast it;
At mine own weapon, Courtesie has beaten me,
At that I was held a Master in, he has cow'd me,
Hotter than all the dint o'th' Fight he has charg'd me:
Am I not now a wretched fellow? think on't;

And

And when thou hast examin'd all wayes honorable,
And find'st no door left open to requite this,
Conclude I am a wretch, and was twice beaten.

Ant. I have observ'd your way, and understand it,
And equal love it as Demetrius,
My noble child thou shalt not fall in vertue,
I and my power will sink first: you Leontius,
Wait for a new Commission, ye shall out again,
And instantly: you shall not lodge this night here,
Not see a friend, nor take a blessing with ye,
Before ye be i'th' field: the enemy is up still,
And still in full design: Charge him again, Son,
And either bring home that again thou hast lost there,
Or leave thy body by him.

Dem. Ye raise me,
And now I dare look up again, Leontius.

Leo. I, I, Sir, I am thinking who we shall take of 'em,
To make all straight; and who we shall give toth' Devil.
What saist thou now Lieutenant?

Lieu. I say nothing.
Lord what ail I, that I have no mind to fight now?
I find my constitution mightily alter'd
Since I came home: I hate all noises too,
Especially the noise of Drums; I am now as well
As any living man; why not as valiant?
To fight now, is a kind of vomit to me,
It goes against my stomach.

Dem. Good Sir, presently;
You cannot doe your Son so fair a favour.

Ant. 'Tis my intent: I'le see ye march away too.
Come, get your men together presently, Leontius,
And pres where please you, as you march.

Leo. We goe Sir.
Ant. Wait you on me, I'le bring ye to your command,
And then to fortune give you up.

Dem. Ye love me. [Exit.]

Leo. Goe, get the Drums, beat round, Lieutenant.
Lieu. Hark ye, Sir,

I have a foolish business they call marriage.
Leo. After the wars are done.
Lieu. The partie staies Sir,
I have giv'n the Priest his mony too: all my friends Sir,
My Father, and my Mother.

Leo. Will you goe forward?
Lieu. She brings a pretty matter with her.

Leo. Half a dozen Bastards.
Lieu. Some fortie Sir.
Leo. A goodly competency.
Lieu. I mean Sir, pounds a year; I'le dispatch the matter,
'Tis but a night or two; I'le overtake ye Sir.

Leo. The 2 old legions, yes: where lies the horse-quarter?
Lieu. And if it be a boy, I'le even make bold Sir.
Leo. Away with your whore,

A plague o' your whore, you damn'd Rogue,
Now ye are cur'd and well; must ye be clicketing?
Lieu. I have broke my mind to my Ancient, in my absence,
He's a sufficient Gentleman.

Leo. Get forward.
Lieu. Only receive her portion:

Leo. Get ye forward;
Else I'le bang ye forward.
Lieu. Strange Sir,

A Gentleman and an officer cannot have the liberty
To doe the office of a man.

Leo. Shame light on thee,
How came this whore into thy head?

Lieu. This whore Sir?
'Tis strange, a poor whore.

Leo. Do not answer me,
Troop, Troop away; do not name this whore again,
Or think there is a whore.

Lieu. That's very hard Sir.
Leo. For if thou dost, look to't, I'le have thee guelded;
I'le walk ye out before me: not a word more. [Exit.]

SCENA V.

Enter Leucippe, and Governesse.

Leu. Ye are the Mistris of the house ye say,
Where this young Lady lies.

Gov. For want of a better.
Leu. You may be good enough for such a purpose:
When was the Prince with her? answer me directly.

Gov. Not since he went a warring.
Leu. Very well then:
What carnal copulation are you privic to
Between these two? be not afraid, we are women,
And may talk thus amongst our selves, no harm in't.

Gov. No sure, there's no harm in't, I conceive that;
But truly, that I ever knew the Gentlewoman
Otherwise given, than a hopefull Gentlewoman—

Leu. You'l grant me the Prince loves her?
Gov. There I am with ye.

And the gods blefs her, promises her mightily.
Leu. Stay there a while. And gives her gifts?

Gov. Extreemly;
And truly makes a very Saint of her.

Leu. I should think now,
(Good woman let me have your judgement with me,
I see 'tis none of the worst: Come sit down by me)
That these two cannot love so tenderly.

Gov. Being so young as they are too.
Leu. You say well—

But that methinks some further promises—
Gov. Yes, yes,

I have heard the Prince swear he would marry her.
Leu. Very well still: they do not use to fall out?

Gov. The tenderest Chickens to one another,
They cannot live an hour asunder.

Leu. I have done then;
And be you gone; you know your charge, and do it.
You know whose will it is; if you transgress it—

That is, if any have access, or see her,
Before the Kings will be fulfill'd—

Gov. Not the Prince, Madam?
Leu. You'l be hang'd if you doe it, that I'le assure ye.

Gov. But ne'retheless, I'le make bold to obey ye.
Leu. Away, and to your business then.

Gov. 'Tis done, Madam. [Exit.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Antigonus, and Menippus.

Ant. Thou hast taken wondrous pains; but yet Menippus,
You understand not of what blood and country:

Men. I labour'd that, but cannot come to know it.
A Greek I am sure she is, she speaks this language.

Ant. Is she so excellent handsom?
Men. Most inticing.

Ant. Sold for a prisoner?
Men. Yes Sir,

Some poor creature.
Ant. And he loves tenderly?

Men. They say extreemly.
Ant. 'Tis well prevented then: yes, I perceiv'd it:

When he took leave now, he made a hundred stops;
Desir'd an hour, but half an hour, a minute,

Which I with anger cross'd; I knew his business,
I knew 'twas she he hunted on; this journey, man,

I beat out suddenly for her cause intended,
And would not give him time to breath. When comes she?

Men. This morning Sir.
Ant. Lodge her to all delight then:

For I would have her try'd toth' test: I know,
She must be some crackt coyn, not fit his traffique,

Which when we have found, the shame will make him leave
Or we shall work a nearer way: I'll bury him, her,
And with him all the hopes I have cast upon him,
E're he shall dig his own grave in that woman:
You know which way to bring her: I'll stand close there,
To view her as she passes: and do you hear Menippus,
Observe her with all sweetness: humour her,
'Twill make her lie more careless to our purposes.
Away, and take what helps you please.

Men. I am gone Sir.

[Exeunt.

SCENA II.

Enter Celia, and Governess.

Cel. Governess, from whom was this Gown sent me?
Præthee be serious true; I will not wear't else:
'Tis a handsom one.

Gov. As though you know not?

Cel. No faith:

But I believe, for certain too, yet I wonder,
Because it was his caution, this poor way,
Still to preserve me from the curious searchings
Of greedy eyes.

Gov. You have it: does it please you?

Cel. 'Tis very rich, methinks too, præthee tell me?

Gov. From one that likes you well, never look coy, Lady;
These are no gifts, to be put off with pownings.

Cel. Pownings, and gifts? is it from any stranger?

Gov. You are so curious, that there is no talk to ye.
What if it be I pray ye?

Cel. Unpin good Governess,
Quick, quick.

Gov. Why, what's the matter?

Cel. Quick, good Governess:

Fie on't, how beastly it becomes me? poorly?
A trick put in upon me? well said Governess:
I vow I would not wear it——out, it smells musty.
Are these your tricks? now I begin to smell it,
Abominable musty; will you help me?
The Prince will come again——

Gov. You are not mad sure?

Cel. As I live I'll cut it off: a pox upon it; (cries?)
For sure it was made for that use; do you bring me Live-
Stales to catch Kites? dost thou laugh too, thou base wo-

Gov. I cannot chuse, if I should be hang'd. (man?)

Cel. Abuse me,

And then laugh at me too?

Gov. I do not abuse ye:

Is it abuse, to give him drink that's thirsty?
You want cloaths; is it such a hainous sin I beseech ye,
To see you stor'd?

Cel. There is no greater wickedness
Than this way.

Gov. What way?

Cel. I shall curse thee fearfully,
If thou provok'st me further: and take heed, woman;
My curses never miss.

Gov. Curse him that sent it.

Cel. Tell but his name——

Gov. You dare not curse him.

Cel. Dare not?

By this fair light——

Gov. You are so full of passion——

Cel. Dare not be good? be honest? dare not curse him?

Gov. I think you dare not: I believe so.

Cel. Speak him.

Gov. Up with your valour then, up with it bravely,
And take your full charge.

Cel. If I do not, hang me;

Tell but his name.

Gov. 'Twas Prince Demetrius sent it:

Now, now, give fire, kill him i'th' eye now Lady.

Cel. Is he come home?

Gov. It seems so; but your curse now.

Cel. You do not lie, I hope.

Gov. You dare not curse him.

Cel. Præthee do not abuse me: is he come home indeed?
For I would now with all my heart believe thee.

Gov. Nay, you may chuse: alas, I deal for strangers,
That send ye scurvie musty Gowns, stale Liveries:
I have my tricks.

Cel. 'Tis a good gown, a handsome one;
I did but jest; where is he?

Gov. He that sent it——

Cel. How? he that sent it? is't come to that again?
Thou canst not be so foolish: præthee speak out,
I may mistake thee.

Gov. I said he that sent it.

Cel. Curse o' my life: why dost thou vex me thus?
I know thou meanest Demetrius, dost thou not?

I charge thee speak truth: if it be any other,
Thou knowst the charge he gave thee, and the justice
His anger will inflict, if e're he know this,
As know he shall, he shall, thou spightfull woman,
Thou beastly woman; and thou shalt know too late too,
And feel too sensible, I am no ward,
No sale stuff for your money Merchants that sent it?
Who dare send me, or how durst thou, thou——

Gov. What you please:

For this is ever the reward of service.

The Prince shall bring the next himself.

Cel. 'Tis strange

That you should deal so peevishly: beshrew ye,
You have put me in a heat.

Gov. I am sure ye have kill'd me:

I ne're receiv'd such language: I can but wait upon ye,
And be your drudge; keep a poor life to serve ye.

Cel. You know my nature is too easie, Governess,
And you know now, I am sorry too: how does he?

Gov. O God, my head.

Cel. Præthee be well, and tell me,
Did he speak of me, since he came? nay, see now,
If thou wilt leave this tyranny? good sweet governess,
Did he but name his Celia? look upon me,
Upon my faith I meant no harm: here, take this,
And buy thy self some trifles: did he good wench?

Gov. He loves ye but too dearly.

Cel. That's my good Governess.

Gov. There's more cloaths making for ye.

Cel. More cloaths?

Gov. More:

Richer and braver; I can tell ye that news;
And twenty glorious things.

Cel. To what use Sirrah?

Gov. Ye are too good for our house now: we poor
Shall lose the comfort of ye. (wretches)

Cel. No, I hope not.

Gov. For ever lose ye Lady.

Cel. Lose me? wherefore?

I hear of no such thing.

Gov. 'Tis sure it must be so:

You must shine now at Court: such preparation,
Such hurry, and such hanging rooms——

Cel. Toth' Court wench?

Was it toth' Court thou saidst?

Gov. You'll find it so.

Cel. Stay, stay, this cannot be.

Gov. I say it must be:

I hope to find ye still the same good Lady. (wench,

Cel. Toth' Court? this stumbles me: art sure for me
This preparation is?

Gov. She is perilous crafty:

I fear too honest for us all too. Am I sure I live?

Cel. Toth' Court? this cannot down: what should I do
Why should he on a suddain change his mind thus, (there?)
And not make me acquainted? sure he loves me;
His vow was made against it, and mine with him:
At least while this King liv'd: he will come hit her,

And

And see me e're I goe?

Gov. Wou'd some wise woman
Had her in working. That I think he will not,
Because he means with all joy there to meet ye.
Ye shall hear more within this hour.

Cel. A Courtier?
What may that meaning be? sure he will see me
If he be come, he must: Hark ye good Governes,
What age is the King of?

Gov. He's an old man, and full of busines.
Cel. I fear too full indeed: what Ladys are there?
I would be loth to want good company.

Gov. Delicate young Ladys, as you would desire;
And when you are acquainted, the best company.
Cel. 'Tis very well: prethee goe in, let's talk more.
For though I fear a trick, I'll bravely try it.

Gov. I see he must be cunning,
Knocks this Doe down.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Lieutenant, and Leontius, Drums within.

Leo. You shall not have your will, sirrah, are ye running?
Have ye gotten a toy in your heels? Is this a season,
When honour pricks ye on, to prick your ears up,
After your whore, your Hobby-horse?

Lieu. Why look ye now:
What a strange man are you? would you have a man fight
At all hours all alike?

Leo. Do but fight something;
But half a blow, and put thy stomach to't:
Turn but thy face, and do make mouths at 'em.

Lieu. And have my teeth knockt out; I thank ye heartily,
Ye are my dear friend.

Leo. What a Devil ails thee?
Dost long to be hang'd?

Lieu. Faith Sir, I make no suit for't:
But rather than I would live thus out of charity,
Continually in brawling ———

Leo. Art thou not he?
I may be cozen'd ———

Lieu. I shall be discover'd.
Leo. That in the midst of thy most hellish pains,
When thou wert crawling sick, didst aim at wonders,
When thou wert mad with pain?

Lieu. Ye have found the cause out;
I had ne're been mad to fight else: I confesse Sir,
The daily torture of my side that vext me,
Made me as daily careles what became of me,
Till a kind sword there wounded me, and eas'd me;
'Twas nothing in my valour fought; I am well now,
And take some pleasure in my life, methinks now,
It shews as mad a thing to me to see you scuffle,
And kill one another foolishly for honour,
As 'twas to you, so see me play the coxcomb.

Leo. And wilt thou ne're fight more?
Lieu. I' th' mind I am in.

Leo. Nor never be sick again?
Lieu. I hope I shall not.

Leo. Prethee be sick again; prethee, I beseech thee,
Be just so sick again.

Lieu. I'll just be hang'd first.
Leo. If all the Arts that are can make a Colique,
Therefore look to't: or if imposthumes, mark me,
As big as foot-balls ———

Lieu. Deliver me.
Leo. Or stones of ten pound weight i' th' kidneys,
Through ease and ugly dyets may be gather'd;
I'll feed ye up my self Sir, I'll prepare ye,
You cannot fight, unless the Devil tear ye,
You shall not want provocations, I'll scratch ye,
I'll have thee have the tooth-ach, and the head-ach.

Lieu. Good Colonel, I'll doe any thing.
Leo. No, no, nothing ———

Then will I have thee blown with a pair of Smiths bellows,
Because ye shall be sure to have a round gale with ye,
Fill'd full of oyle o' Devil, and Aqua-fortis,
And let these work, these may provoke.

Lieu. Good Colonel.
Leo. A coward in full blood; prethee be plain with me,
Will roasting doe thee any good?
Lieu. Nor basting neither, Sir.
Leo. Marry that goes hard.

Enter 1 Gentleman.

1 Gent. Where are you Colonel?
The Prince expects ye Sir; h'as hedg'd the enemy
Within a streight, where all the hopes and valours
Of all men living cannot force a passage,
He has 'em now.

Leo. I knew all this before Sir,
I chalk'd him out his way: but do you see that thing there?

Lieu. Nay good sweet Colonel, I'll fight a little.

Leo. That thing?
1 Gent. What thing? I see the brave Lieutenant.

Leo. Rogue, what a name hast thou lost?

Lieu. You may help it,
Yet you may help't: I'll doe ye any courtesie:
I know you love a wench well.

Enter 2 Gentlemen.

Leo. Look upon him;
Do you look too.

2 Gent. What should I look on?
I come to tell ye, the Prince stays your direction;
We have 'em now i' th' Coop, Sir.

Leo. Let 'em rest there,
And chew upon their miseries: but look first ———

Lieu. I cannot fight for all this.

Leo. Look on this fellow.
2 Gent. I know him; 'tis the valiant brave Lieutenant.

Leo. Canst thou hear this, and play the Rogue? steal off
Behind me quickly, neatly do it, (quickly,
And rush into the thickest of the enemy,
And if thou kill'st but two.

Lieu. You may excuse me,
'Tis not my fault: I dare not fight.

Leo. Be rul'd yet,
I'll beat thee on; goe wink and fight: a plague upon your

2 Gent. What's all this matter? (heeps heart.

1 Gent. Nay I cannot shew ye.

Leo. Here's twenty pound, goe but smell to 'em.

Lieu. Alas Sir,
I have taken such a cold I can smell nothing.

Leo. I can finell a Rascal, a rank Rascal:
Fye, how he stinks, stinks like a tyred Jade.

2 Gent. What Sir?

Leo. Why, that Sir, do not you smell him?

2 Gent. Smell him? Lieu. I must endure.

Leo. Stinks like a dead Dog, Carrion —
There's no such damnable smell under Heaven,
As the faint sweat of a Coward; will ye fight yet?

Lieu. Nay, now I defie ye; ye have spoke the worst ye can
Of me, and if every man should take what you say
To the heart. — Leo. God ha' Mercy,

God ha' Mercy with all my heart; here I forgive thee;
And fight, or fight not, do but goe along with us,
And keep my Dog.

Lieu. I love a good Dog naturally.

1 Gent. What's all this stir, Lieutenant?

Lieu. Nothing Sir,
But a slight matter of argument. Leo. Pox take thee.
Sure I shall love this Rogue, he's so pretty a Coward.

Come Gentlemen, let's up now, and if fortune
Dare play the slut again, I'll never more Saint her,
Come play-fellow, come, prethee come up; come chicken;
I have a way shall fit yet: A tame knave,
Come, look upon us.

Lieu.

Lies. I'll tell ye who does best boyes.

[Exeunt.

SCENA IV.

Enter Antigonus, and Menippus, above.

Men. I saw her coming out.

Ant. Who waits upon her?

Men. Timon, Charinthus, and some other Gentlemen, By me appointed.

Ant. Where's your wife?

Men. She's ready To entertain her here Sir; and some Ladies Fit for her lodgings.

Ant. How shews she in her trim now?

Men. Oh most divinely sweet.

Ant. Prethee speak softly. How does she take her coming?

Men. She bears it bravely; But what she thinks— For Heaven sake Sir preserve me— If the Prince chance to find this.

Ant. Peace ye old fool; She thinks to meet him here.

Men. That's all the Project.

Ant. Was she hard to bring?

Men. No she believ'd it quickly, And quickly made her self fit, the Gown a little, And those new things she has not been acquainted with, At least in this place, where she liv'd a prisoner, Troubled and stirr'd her mind. But believe me Sir, She has worn as good, they fit so apted to her; And she is so great a Mistis of disposure: Here they come now: but take a full view of her.

Enter Celia, Timon, Charinthus, and Gent.

Ant. How cheerfully she looks? how she salutes all? And how she views the place? she is very young sure: That was an admirable smile, a catching one, The very twang of Cupids bow sung in it: She has two edg'd eyes, they kill o' both sides.

Men. She makes a stand, as though she would speak.

Ant. Be still then.

Cel. Good Gentlemen, trouble your selves no further, I had thought sure to have met a noble friend here.

Tim. Ye may meet many Lady.

Cel. Such as you are I covet few or none, Sir.

Char. Will you walk this way, And take the sweets o'th' garden? cool and close, Lady.

Cel. Methinks this open air's far better, tend ye that Pray where's the woman came along? (way.

Char. What woman?

Cel. The woman of the house I lay at.

Tim. Woman?

Here was none came along sure.

Cel. Sure I am catcht then:

Pray where's the Prince?

Char. He will not be long from ye, We are his humble Servants.

Cel. I could laugh now, To see how finely I am cozen'd: yet I fear not, For sure I know a way to scape all dangers.

Tim. Madam, your lodgings lye this way.

Cel. My Lodgings?

For Heaven sake Sir, what office do I bear here?

Tim. The great commander of all hearts.

Enter Leucippe, and Ladies.

Cel. You have hit it.

I thank your sweet heart for it. Who are these now?

Char. Ladies that come to serve ye.

Cel. Well consider'd, Are you my Servants?

Lady. Servants to your pleasures.

Cel. I dare believe ye, but I dare not trust ye:

Catch'd with a trick? well, I must bear it patiently: Methinks this Court's a neat place: all the people Of so refin'd a size——

Tim. This is no poor Rogue.

Leu. Were it a Paradise to please your fancy, And entertain the sweetness you bring with ye.

Cel. Take breath;

You are fat, and many words may melt ye, This is three Bawdes beaten into one; blefs me Heaven, What shall become of me? I am i'th' pitfall: (ones O' my conscience, this is the old viper, and all these little Creep every night into her belly; do you hear plump fer- And you my little sucking Ladies, you must teach me, (vant For I know you are excellent at carriage, How to behave my self, for I am rude yet: But you say the Prince will come?

Lady. Will sic to see you.

Cel. For look you if a great man, say the King now Should come and visit me?

Men. She names ye.

Ant. Peace fool.

Cel. And offer me a kindness, such a kindness.

Leu. I, such a kindness.

Cel. True Lady such a kindness, What shall that kindness be now?

Leu. A witty Lady, Learn little ones, learn.

Cel. Say it be all his favour.

Leu. And a sweet saying 'tis.

Cel. And I grow peevish?

Leu. You must not be neglectfull.

Cel. There's the matter, There's the main doctrine now, and I may miss it, Or a kind handsome Gentleman?

Leu. You say well.

Cel. They'l count us basely bred.

Leu. Not freely nurtur'd.

Cel. I'll take thy counsel.

Leu. 'Tis an excellent woman.

Cel. I find a notable volum here, a learned one; Which way? for I would fain be in my chamber; In truth sweet Ladies, I grow weary; sic, How hot the air beats on me?

Lady. This way Madam.

Cel. Now by mine honour, I grow wondrous faint too.

Leu. Your fans sweet Gentlewomen, your fans.

Cel. Since I am fool'd, I'll make my self some sport, though I pay dear for't. [Ex.

Men. You see now what a manner of woman she is Sir.

Ant. Thou art an afs.

Men. Is this a fit love for the Prince?

Ant. A coxcombe:

Now by my crown a daintie wench, a sharp wench, And a matchless Spirit: how she jeer'd 'em? How carelessly she scoff'd 'em? use her nobly; I would I had not seen her: wait anon, And then you shall have more to trade upon. [Exeunt.

SCENA V.

Enter Leontius, and the 2. Gentlemen.

Leo. We must keep a round, and a strong watch to night, The Prince will not charge the Enemy till the morning: But for the trick I told ye for this Rascal,

This rogue, that health and strong heart makes a coward,

1 Gent. I, if it take.

Leo. Ne're fear it, the Prince has it, And if he let it fall, I must not know it; He will suspect me presently: but you two May help the plough.

2 Gent. That he is sick again.

Leo. Extreemly sick: his disease grown incurable, Never yet found, nor touch'd at.

Enter

Enter Lieutenant.

2 Gent. Well, we have it,
And here he comes.

Leo. The Prince has been upon him,
What a flatten face he has now? it takes, believe it;
How like an Ass he looks?

Lieu. I feel no great pain,
At least, I think I do not; yet I feel sensibly
I grow extremely faint: how cold I sweat now?

Leo. So, so, so.

Lieu. And now 'tis ev'n too true, I feel a pricking,
A pricking, a strange pricking: how it tingles?
And as it were a stitch too: the Prince told me,
And every one cri'd out I was a dead man;
I had thought I had been as well——

Leo. Upon him now Boys,
And do it most demurely.

1 Gent. How now Lieutenant?

Lieu. I thank ye Gentlemen.

1 Gent. 'Life, how looks this man?
How dost thou good Lieutenant?

2 Gent. I ever told ye
This man was never cur'd, I see it too plain now;
How do you feel your self? you look not perfect,
How dull his eye hangs?

1 Gent. That may be discontent.

2 Gent. Believe me friend, I would not suffer now
The tith of those pains this man feels; mark his forehead
What a cloud of cold dew hangs upon't?

Lieu. I have it,
Again I have it; how it grows upon me?
A miserable man I am.

Leo. Ha, ha, ha,
A miserable man thou shalt be,
This is the tamest Trout I ever tickl'd.

Enter 2 Physicians.

1 Phy. This way he went.

2 Phy. Pray Heaven we find him living,
He's a brave fellow, 'tis pity he should perish thus.

1 Phy. A strong hearted man, and of a notable sufferance.

Lieu. Oh, oh.

1 Gent. How now? how is it man?

Lieu. Oh Gentlemen,
Never so full of pain.

2 Gent. Did I not tell ye?

Lieu. Never so full of pain, Gentlemen.

1 Phy. He is here;

How do you, Sir?

2 Phy. Be of good comfort, Souldier,
The Prince has sent us to you.

Lieu. Do you think I may live?

2 Phy. He alters hourly, strangely.

1 Phy. Yes, you may live: but——

Leo. Finely butted, Doctor.

1 Gent. Do not discourage him.

1 Phy. He must be told truth,

'Tis now too late to trifle.

Enter Demetrius, and Gent.

2 Gent. Here the Prince comes.

Dem. How now Gentlemen?

2 Gent. Bewailing, Sir, a Souldier,
And one I think, your Grace will grieve to part with;
But every living thing——

Dem. 'Tis true, must perish,
Our lives are but our marches to our graves;
How dost thou now Lieutenant?

Lieu. Faith 'tis true, Sir,

We are but spans, and Candles ends.

Leo. He's finely mortified.

Dem. Thou art heart whole yet I see, he alters strangely,
And that apace too; I saw it this morning in him;

When he poor man, I dare swear——

Lieu. No believ't, Sir,
I never felt it.

Dem. Here lies the pain now: how he is swel'd?

1 Phy. The Impostume
Fed with a new malignant humour now,
Will grow to such a bigness, 'tis incredible,
The compass of a Bushel will not hold it.
And with such a Hell of torture it will rise too——

Dem. Can you endure me touch it?

Lieu. Oh, I beseech you, Sir:
I feel you sensibly ere you come near me.

Dem. He's finely wrought, he must be cut, no Cure else,
And suddenly, you see how fast he blows out.

Lieu. Good Master Doctors, let me be beholding to you,
I feel I cannot last.

2 Phy. For what Lieutenant?

Lieu. But ev'n for half a dozen Cans of good Wine,
That I may drink my will out: I faint hideously. (men,

Dem Fetch him some Wine; and since he must go Gentle-
Why let him take his journey merrily.

Enter Servant with Wine.

Lieu. That's ev'n the nearest way.

Leo. I could laugh dead now.

Dem. Here, off with that.

Lieu. These two I give your Grace,
A poor remembrance of a dying man, Sir,
And I beseech you wear 'em out.

Dem. I will Souldier,
These are fine Legacies.

Lieu. Among the Gentlemen,
Even all I have left; I am a poor man, naked,
Yet something for remembrance: four a piece Gentlemen,
And so my body where you please.

Leo. It will work.

Lieu. I make your Grace my Executor, and I beseech ye
See my poor Will fulfill'd: sure I shall walk else.

Dem. As full as they can be fill'd, here's my hand, Souldier.

1 Gent. The Wine will tickle him.

Lieu. I would hear a Drum beat,
But to see how I could endure it.

Dem. Beat a Drum there.

[Drum within.

Lieu. Oh Heavenly Musick, I would hear one sing to't;
I am very full of pain.

Dem. Sing? 'tis impossible.

Lieu. Why, then I would drink a Drum full:
Where lies the Enemy?

2 Gent. Why, here close by.

Leo. Now he begins to muster:

Lieu. And dare he fight?

Dare he fight Gentlemen?

1 Phy. You must not cut him:

He's gone then in a moment; all the hope left; is
To work his weakness into suddain anger,
And make him raise his passion above his pain;
And so dispose him on the Enemy;
His body then, being stir'd with violence,
Will purge it self and break the fore.

Dem. 'Tis true, Sir.

1 Phy. And then my life for his.

Lieu. I will not dye thus.

Dem. But he is too weak to do——

Lieu. Dye like a Dog?

2 Phy. I, he's weak, but yet he's heart whole.

Lieu. Hem.

Dem. An excellent sign.

Lieu. Hem.

Dem. Stronger still, and better.

Lieu. Hem, hem; ran, tan, tan, tan, tan.

[Exit.

1 Phy. Now he's i'th' way on't.

Dem. Well go thy waies, thou wilt do something certain.

Leo. And some brave thing, or let mine ears be cut off.
He's finely wrought.

Dem.

Dem. Let's after him.

Leo. I pray, Sir;
But how this Rogue, when this cloud's melted in him,
And all discover'd——

Dem. That's for an after mirth, away, away, away. [Ex.]

SCENE VI.

Enter Seleucus, Lyfimachus, Ptolomie, Souldiers.

Sel. Let no man fear to dye: we love to sleep all,
And death is but the sounder sleep; all ages,
And all hours call us; 'tis so common, easie,
That little Children tread those paths before us;
We are not sick, nor our souls prest with sorrows,
Nor go we out like tedious tales, forgotten;
High, high we come, and hearty to our Funerals,
And as the Sun that sets, in blood let's fall.

Lyfi. 'Tis true, they have us fast, we cannot scape 'em,
Nor keeps the brow of fortune one smile for us,
Dishonourable ends we can scape though,
And (worse than those Captivities) we can die,
And dying nobly, though we leave behind us
These clods of flesh, that are too massie burthens,
Our living souls flie crown'd with living conquests.

Ptol. They have begun, fight bravely, and fall bravely;
And may that man that seeks to save his life now
By price, or promise, or by fear falls from us,
Never again be blest with name of Souldier.

Enter a Souldier.

Sel. How now? who charged first? I feek a brave hand
To set me off in death.

Soul. We are not charg'd, Sir,
The Prince lies still.

Sel. How comes this Larum up then?

Soul. There is one desperate fellow, with the Devil in him
(He never durst do this else) has broke into us,
And here he bangs ye two or three before him,
There five or six; ventures upon whole Companies.

Ptol. And is not seconded?

Soul. Not a man follows.

Sel. Nor cut i' pieces?

Soul. Their wonder yet has staid 'em.

Sel. Let's in, and see this miracle?

Ptol. I admire it.

[Ex.]

Enter Leontius, and Gentlemen.

Leon. Fetch him off, fetch him off; I am sure he's clouted;
Did I not tell you how 'twould take?

1 Gent. 'Tis admirable.

Enter Lieutenant with Colours in his hand, pursuing 3 or 4 Souldiers.

Lie. Follow that blow, my friend, there's at your coxcombs,
I fight to save me from the Surgions miseries.

Leo. How the Knave carries 'em?

Lieu. You cannot Rogues,

Till you have my Diseases, flie my fury,
Ye Bread and Butter Rogues, do ye run from me?
And my side would give me leave, I would so hunt ye,
Ye Porridg gutted Slaves, ye Veal-broth Boobies.

Enter Demetrius, and Physicians, and Gentlemen.

Leo. Enough, enough Lieutenant, thou hast done bravely.

Dem. Mirrour of man.

Lieu. There's a Flag for ye, Sir,
I took it out o'th' shop, and never paid for't,
I'le to 'em again, I am not come to th' text yet.

De No more my Souldier: beshrew my heart he is hurt sore.

Leo. Hang him, he'll lick all those whole.

1 Phy. Now will we take him,
And Cure him in a trice.

Dem. Be careful of him.

Lieu. Let me live but two years,

And do what ye will with me;
I never had but two hours yet of happines;
Pray ye give me nothing to provoke my valour,
For I am ev'n as weary of this fighting——

2 Phy. Ye shall have nothing; come to the Princes Tent
And there the Surgions presently shall search ye,
Then to your rest.

Lieu. A little handsome Litter
To lay me in, and I shall sleep.

Leo. Look to him.

Dem. I do believe a Horse begot this fellow,
He never knew his strength yet; they are our own.

Leo. I think so, I am cozen'd else; I would but see now
A way to fetch these off, and save their honours.

Dem. Only their lives.

Leo. Pray ye take no way of peace now,
Unless it be with infinite advantage.

Dem. I shall be rul'd;
Let the Battels now move forward,
Our self will give the signal:

Enter Trumpet and Herald.

Now Herald, what's your message?

Her. From my Masters,
This honourable courtesie, a Parley
For half an hour, no more, Sir.

Dem. Let 'em come on,
They have my Princely word.

Enter Seleucus, Lyfimachus, Ptolomie, Attendants, Souldiers.

Her. They are here to attend ye.

Dem. Now Princes, your demands?

Sel. Peace, if it may be Without the too much tainture of our honour:
Peace, and we'll buy it too.

Dem. At what price?

Lyfi. Tribute.

Ptol. At all the charge of this War.

Leo. That will not do.

Sel. Leontius, you and I have serv'd together,
And run through many a Fortune with our swords,
Brothers in Wounds and Health; one meat has fed us;
One Tent a thousand times from cold night cover'd us:
Our loves have been but one; and had we died then,
One Monument had held our names, and actions:
Why do you set upon your friends such prices?
And sacrifice to giddy chance such Trophies?
Have we forgot to dye? or are our vertues
Less in afflictions constant, than our fortunes?
Ye are deceiv'd old Souldier.

Leo. I know your worths,
And thus low bow in reverence to your vertues:
Were these my Wars, or led my power in chief here,
I knew then how to meet your memories:
They are my Kings employments; this man fights now,
To whom I ow all duty, faith, and service;
This man that fled before ye; call back that,
That bloody day again, call that disgrace home,
And then an easie Peace may sheath our Swords up.
I am not greedy of your lives and fortunes,
Nor do I gape ungratefully to swallow ye.
Honour, the spur of all illustrious natures,
That made you famous Souldiers, and next Kings,
And not ambitious envy strikes me forward.
Will ye unarm, and yield your selves his prisoners?

Sel. We never knew what that sound meant: no Gyves
Shall ever bind this body, but embraces;
Nor weight of sorrow here, till Earth fall on me.

Leo. Expect our charge then.

Lyfi. 'Tis the nobler courtesie:
And so we leave the hand of Heaven to blefs us.

Dem. Stay, have you any hope?

Sel. We have none left us,
But that one comfort of our deaths together;

Give us but room to fight.

Leo. Win it, and wear it.

Prot. Call from the hills those Companies hang o're us,
Like bursting Clouds; and then break in, and take us.

Dem. Find such a Souldier will forsake advantage,
And we'll draw off to shew I dare be noble,
And hang a light out to ye in this darkness,
The light of peace; give up those Cities, Forts,
And all those Frontier Countries to our uses.

Sel. Is this the Peace? Traitors to those that feed us,
Our Gods and people? give our Countries from us?

Lyfi. Begin the Knell, it sounds a great deal sweeter.

Prot. Let loose your servant, death.

Sel. Fall fate upon us,

Our memories shall never stink behind us.

Dem. Seleucus, great Seleucus.

Sol. The Prince calls, Sir.

Dem. Thou stock of nobleness, and courtesie,
Thou Father of the War——

Leo. What means the Prince now?

Dem. Give me my Standard here.

Lyfi. His anger's melted.

Dem. You Gentlemen that were his prisoners,
And felt the bounty of that noble nature,
Lay all your hands, and bear these Colours to him,
The Standard of the Kingdom; take it Souldier.

Prot. What will this mean?

Dem. Thou hast won it, bear it off,
And draw thy men home whilest we wait upon thee.

Sel. You shall have all our Countries.

Lyfi. Prot. All by Heaven, Sir.

Dem. I will not have a stone, a bush, a bramble,
No, in the way of courtesie, I'll start ye;
Draw off, and make a lane through all the Army,
That these that have subdu'd us, may march through us.

Sel. Sir, do not make me surfeit with such goodness,
I'll bear your Standard for ye; follow ye.

Dem. I swear it shall be so, march through me fairly,
And thine be this days honour, great Seleucus.

Prot. Mirrour of noble minds.

Dem. Nay then ye hate me.

Leo. I cannot speak now: [Ex. with Drums, and Shouts.]
Well, go thy wayes; at a fure piece of bravery
Thou art the best, these men are won by th' necks now:
I'll send a Post away.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Antigonus, and Menippus.

Ant. NO aptness in her?

Men. Not an immodest motion,
And yet when she is courted,
Makes as wild witty answers.

Ant. This more fires me,
I must not have her thus.

Men. We cannot alter her.

Ant. Have ye put the youths upon her?

Men. All that know any thing,
And have been studied how to catch a beauty,
But like so many whelps about an Elephant——
The Prince is coming home, Sir.

Ant. I hear that too,
But that's no matter; am I alter'd well?

Men. Not to be known I think, Sir.

Ant. I must see her.

Enter 2 Gentlemen, or Lords.

1 Gent. I offered all I had, all I could think of,
I tri'd her through all the points o'th' compass, I think.

2 Gent. She studies to undo the Court, to plant here
The Enemy to our Age; Chastity;

She is the first, that e're bauk'd a close Harbour,
And the sweet contents within: She hates curl'd heads too,
And setting up of beards she swears is Idolatry.

1 Gent. I never knew so fair a face so froze;
Yet she would make one think——

2 Gent. True by her carriage,
For she's as wanton as a Kid to th' out side,
As full of Mocks and Taunts: I kiss'd her hand too,
Walkt with her half an hour.

1 Gent. She heard me sing,
And sung her self too; she sings admirably;
But still when any hope was, as 'tis her trick
To minister enough of those, then presently
With some new sham or other, nothing to the matter;
And such a frown, as would sink all before her,
She takes her Chamber; come, we shall not be the last fools.

2 Gent. Not by a hundred I hope; 'tis a strange wench.

Ant. This screws me up still higher.

[Enter Celia, and Ladies behind her.]

Men. Here she comes, Sir.

Ant. Then be you gone; and take the Women with ye,
And lay those Jewels in her way.

Cel. If I stay longer

I shall number as many Lovers as Lais did;
How they flock after me? upon my Conscience;
I have had a dozen Horses given me this morning,
I'll ev'n set up a Troop, and turn She-souldier,
A good discreet wench now, that were not hidebound Might raise a fine estate here, and suddenly: (where
For these warm things will give their Souls——I can go no
Without a world of offerings to my Excellence:
I am a Queen, a Goddesse, I know not what——
And no constellation in all Heaven, but I out-shine it;
And they have found out now I have no eyes
Of mortal lights, but certain influences,
Strange vertuous lightnings, humane nature starts at,
And I can kill my twenty in a morning,
With as much ease now——

Ha! what are these? new projects?
Where are my honourable Ladies? are you out too?
Nay then I must buy the stock, send me good Carding:
I hope the Princes hands be not in this sport;
I have not seen him yet, cannot hear from him,
And that troubles me: all these were recreations
Had I but his sweet company to laugh with me:
What fellow's that? another Apparition?
This is the lovingst Age: I should know that face,
Sure I have seen't before, not long since neither.

Ant. She sees me now: O Heaven, a most rare creature!

Cel. Yes, 'tis the same: I will take no notice of ye,
But if I do not fit ye, let me fry for't;
Is all this Cackling for your egg? they are fair ones,
Excellent rich no doubt too; and may stumble
A good staid mind, but I can go thus by 'em;
My honest friend; do you set off these Jewels?

Ant. Set 'em off, Lady?

Cel. I mean, sell 'em here, Sir?

Ant. She's very quick: for sale they are not meant sure.

Cel. For sanctity I think much less: good even Sir.

Ant. Nay noble Lady, stay: 'tis you must wear 'em:
Never look strange, they are worthy your best beauty.

Cel. Did you speak to me?

Ant. To you or to none living:
To you they are sent; to you they are sacrificed.

Cel. I'll never look a Horse i'th' mouth that's given:
I thank ye, Sir: I'll send one to reward ye.

Ant. Do you never ask who sent 'em?

Cel. Never I:

Nor never care, if it be an honest end,
That end's the full reward, and thanks but slubber it;
If it be ill, I will not urge the acquaintance.

Ant. This has a foul indeed: pray let me tell ye——

Cel. I care not if ye do, so you do it handsomly;

And not stand picking of your words.

Ant. The King sent 'em.

Cel. Away, away, thou art some foolish fellow,
And now I think thou hast stole 'em too; the King sent 'em?
Alas good man, wouldst thou make me believe
He has nothing to do with things of these worths,
But wantonly to sling 'em? he's an old man,
A good old man, they say too: I dare swear
Full many a year ago he left these gambols:
Here, take your trinkets.

Ant. Sure I do not lye, Lady.

Cel. I know thou lyest extreaimly, damnably:
Thou hast a lying face.

Ant. I was never thus ratted.

Cel. But say I should believe: why are these sent me?
And why art thou the Messenger? who art thou?

Ant. Lady, look on 'em wisely, and then consider
Who can send such as these, but a King only?
And, to what beauty can they be oblations,
But only yours? For me that am the carrier,
'Tis only fit you know I am his servant,
And have fulfil'd his will.

Cel. You are short and pithy;
What must my beauty do for these?

Ant. Sweet Lady,
You cannot be so hard of understanding,
When a King's favour shines upon ye gloriously,
And speaks his love in these——

Cel. O then love's the matter;
Sir-reverence love: now I begin to feel ye:
And I should be the Kings Whore, a brave title;
And go as glorious as the Sun, O brave still:
The chief Commandress of his Concubines,
Hurried from place to place to meet his pleasures.

Ant. A devilish subtil wench, but a rare spirit. (dry,

Cel. And when the good old sponge had suckt my youth
And left some of his Royal aches in my bones:
When time shall tell me I have plough'd my life up,
And cast long furrows in my face to sink me.

Ant. You must not think so, Lady.

Cel. Then can these, Sir,
These precious things, the price of youth and beauty;
This shop here of sin-offerings set me off again?
Can it restore me chaste, young, innocent?
Purge me to what I was? add to my memory
An honest and a noble fame? The Kings device;
The sin's as universal as the Sun is,
And lights an everlasting Torch to shame me.

Ant. Do you hold so sleight account of a great Kings favour,
That all knees bow to purchase?

Cel. Prethee peace:
If thou knewst how ill favouredly thy tale becomes thee,
And what ill root it takes——

Ant. You will be wiser.

Cel. Could the King find no shape to shift his pander into,
But reverend Age? and one so like himself too?

Ant. She has found me out.

Cel. Cozen the world with gravity?
Prethee resolve me one thing, do's the King love thee?

Ant. I think he do's.

Cel. It seems so by thy Office:
He loves thy use, and when that's ended, hates thee:
Thou seemest to me a Souldier.

Ant. Yes, I am one.

Cel. And hast fought for thy Country?

Ant. Many a time.

Cel. May be, commanded too?

Ant. I have done, Lady.

Cel. O wretched man, below the state of pity!
Canst thou forget thou wert begot in honour?
A free Companion for a King? a Souldier?
Whose Nobleness dare feel no want, but Enemies?
Canst thou forget this, and decline so wretchedly,
To eat the Bread of Bawdry, of base Bawdry?

Feed on the scum of Sin? sling thy Sword from thee?
Dishonour to the noble name that nursed thee?
Go, beg diseases: let them be thy Armour,
Thy fights, the flames of Lust, and their foul issues.

Ant. Why then I am a King, and mine own Speaker.

Cel. And I as free as you, mine own Disposer:
There, take your Jewels; let them give them lustres
That have dark Lives and Souls; wear 'em your self, Sir,
You'l seem a Devil else.

Ant. I command ye stay.

Cel. Be just, I am commanded.

Ant. I will not wrong ye.

Cel. Then thus low falls my duty.

Ant. Can ye love me?

Say I, and all I have——

Cel. I cannot love ye;
Without the breach of faith I cannot hear ye;
Ye hang upon my love, like frosts on Lilies:
I can dye, but I cannot love: you are answer'd.

Ant. I must find apter means, I love her truly.

[Exit.

[Exit.

SCENE II.

Enter Demetr. Leon. Lieu. Gent. Sould. and Host.

Dem. Hither do you say she is come?

Host. Yes Sir, I am sure on't:

For whilest I waited upon ye, putting my Wife in trust,
I know not by what means, but the King found her,
And hither she was brought; how, or to what end——

Dem. My Father found her?

Host. So my Wife informs me.

Dem. Leontius, pray draw off the Souldiers,
I would a while be private.

Leon. Fall off Gentlemen,

The Prince would be alone. [Ex. Leo. and Soul.

Dem. Is he so cunning?

There is some trick in this, and you must know it,
And be an agent too: which if it prove so——

Host. Pull me to pieces, Sir.

Dem. My Father found her?

My Father brought her hither? went she willingly?

Host. My Wife says full of doubts.

Dem. I cannot blame her,
No more: there's no trust, no faith in mankind.

Enter Antigonus, Menippus, Leontius, and Souldiers.

Ant. Keep her up close, he must not come to see her:
You are welcome nobly now, welcome home Gentlemen;
You have done a courteous service on the Enemy
Has tyed his Faith for ever; you shall find it;
Ye are not now in's debt Son: still your sad looks?
Leontius, what's the matter?

Leo. Truth Sir, I know not.
We have been merry since we went.

Lieu. I feel it.

Ant. Come, what's the matter now? do you want mony?
Sure he has heard o'th' wench.

Dem. Is that a want, Sir?

I would fain speak to your Grace.

Ant. You may do freely.

Dem. And not deserve your anger?

Ant. That ye may too.

Dem. There was a Gentlewoman, and sometimes my pri-
Which I thought well of Sir: your Grace conceives me.

Ant. I do indeed, and with much grief conceive ye;
With full as much grief as your Mother bare you.
There was such a Woman: would I might as well say,
There was no such, Demetrius.

Dem. She was vertuous,
And therefore not unfit my youth to love her:
She was as fair——

Ant. Her beauty I'll proclaim too,
To be as rich as ever reign'd in Woman;
But how she made that good, the Devil knows.

Dem.

Dem. She was—— O Heaven!
Ant. The Hell to all thy glories,
 Swallow'd thy youth, made shipwrack of thine honour:
 She was a Devil.
Dem. Ye are my Father, Sir.
Ant. And since ye take a pride to shew your follies,
 I'll muster 'em, and all the world shall view 'em.
Leo. What heat is this? the Kings eyes speak his anger.
Ant. Thou hast abus'd thy youth, drawn to thy fellowship
 Instead of Arts and Arms, a Womans kisses,
 The subtilties, and soft heats of a Harlot.
Dem. Good Sir, mistake her not.
Ant. A Witch, a Sorcerers:
 I tell thee but the truth; and hear Demetrius,
 Which has so dealt upon thy bloud with charms,
 Devilish and dark; so lockt up all thy vertues;
 So pluckt thee back from what thou sprungst from, glorious.
Dem. O Heaven, that any tongue but his durst say this!
 That any heart durst harbour it! Dread Father,
 If for the innocent the gods allow us
 To bend our knees——
Ant. Away, thou art bewitch'd still;
 Though she be dead, her power still lives upon thee.
Dem. Dead? O sacred Sir: dead did you say?
Ant. She is dead, fool.
Dem. It is not possible: be not so angry,
 Say she is fain under your sad displeasure,
 Or any thing but dead, say she is banished,
 Invent a crime, and I'll believe it, Sir.
Ant. Dead by the Law: we found her Hell, and her,
 I mean her Charms and Spells, for which she perish'd;
 And she confest she drew thee to thy ruine,
 And purpos'd it, purpos'd my Empires overthrow.
Dem. But is she dead? was there no pity Sir?
 If her youth err'd, was there no mercy shown her?
 Did ye look on her face, when ye condemn'd her?
Ant. I look'd into her heart, and there she was hideous.
Dem. Can she be dead? can vertue fall untimely?
Ant. She is dead, deservingly she died.
Dem. I have done then.
 O matchless sweetness, whither art thou vanished?
 O thou fair soul of all thy Sex, what Paradise
 Hast thou enrich'd and blest? I am your son, Sir,
 And to all you shall command stand most obedient,
 Only a little time I must intreat you
 To study to forget her; 'twill not be long, Sir,
 Nor I long after it: art thou dead Celia,
 Dead my poor wench? my joy, pluckt green with violence:
 O fair sweet flower, farewell; Come, thou destroyer
 Sorrow, thou melter of the soul, dwell with me;
 Dwell with me solitary thoughts, tears, cryings,
 Nothing that loves the day, love me, or seek me,
 Nothing that loves his own life haunt about me:
 And Love, I charge thee, never charm mine eyes more,
 Nor ne're betray a beauty to my curses:
 For I shall curse all now, hate all, forswear all,
 And all the brood of fruitful nature vex at,
 For she is gone that was all, and I nothing—— [Ex. & Gent.
Ant. This opinion must be maintained.
Men. It shall be, Sir.
Ant. Let him go; I can at mine own pleasure
 Draw him to th' right again: wait your instructions,
 And see the souldier paid, Leontius:
 Once more ye are welcome home all.
All. Health to your Majesty. [Exit Antig. &c.
Leo. Thou wentest along the journey, how canst thou tell?
Hofst. I did, but I am sure 'tis so: had I staid behind,
 I think this had not proved.
Leo. A Wench the reason?
Lieu. Who's that talks of a Wench there?
Leo. All this discontent
 About a Wench?
Lieu. Where is this Wench, good Colonel?
Leo. Prithee hold thy Peace: who calls thee to counsel?

Lieu. Why, if there be a Wench——
Leo. 'Tis fit thou know her:
 Enter 2 Gentlemen.
 That I'll say for thee, and as fit thou art for her,
 Let her be mew'd or stopt: how is it Gentlemen?
1 Gent. He's wondrous discontent, he'll speak to no man.
2 Gent. H'as taken his Chamber close, admits no entrance;
 Tears in his eyes, and cryings out.
Hofst. 'Tis so, Sir,
 And now I wish my self half hang'd ere I went this journey.
Leo. What is this Woman?
Lieu. I.
Hofst. I cannot tell ye,
 But handsome as Heaven.
Lieu. She is not so high I hope, Sir.
Leo. Where is she?
Lieu. I, that would be known.
Leo. Why, Sirrah.
Hofst. I cannot show ye neither;
 The King has now dispos'd of her.
Leo. There lyes the matter:
 Will he admit none to come to comfort him?
1 Gent. Not any near, nor, let 'em knock their hearts out,
 Will never speak.
Lieu. 'Tis the best way if he have her;
 For look you, a man would be loth to be disturb'd in's pastime;
 'Tis every good mans case.
Leo. 'Tis all thy living,
 We must not suffer this, we dare not suffer it:
 For when these tender souls meet deep afflictions,
 They are not strong enough to struggle with 'em,
 But drop away as Snow does, from a mountain,
 And in the torrent of their own sighs sink themselves:
 I will, and must speak to him.
Lieu. So must I too:
 He promised me a charge.
Leo. Of what? of Children
 Upon my Conscience, thou hast a double company,
 And all of thine own begetting already.
Lieu. That's all one,
 I'll raise 'em to a Regiment, and then command 'em;
 When they turn disobedient, unbeget 'em:
 Knock 'em o'th' head, and put in new.
Leo. A rare way;
 But for all this, thou art not valiant enough
 To dare to see the Prince now?
Lieu. Do ye think he's angry?
1 Gent. Extreemly vext.
2 Gent. To the endangering of any man comes near him.
1 Gent. Yet, if thou couldst but win him out,
 What e're thy suit were,
 Believe it granted presently.
Leo. Yet thou must think though,
 That in the doing he may break upon ye,
 And——
Lieu. If he do not kill me.
Leo. There's the question.
Lieu. For half a dozen hurts.
Leo. Art thou so valiant?
Lieu. Not absolutely so neither: no it cannot be;
 I want my impostumes, and my things about me,
 Yet I'll make danger, Colonel.
Leo. 'Twill be rare sport,
 Howe're it take; give me thy hand; if thou dost this,
 I'll raise thee up a horse Troop, take my word for't:
Lieu. What may be done by humane man.
Leo. Let's go then.
1 Gent. Away before he cool: he will relapse else. [Ex.

SCENE III.

Enter Antigonus, Menippus, and Leucippe.

Ant. Will she not yield?

Leo. For all we can urge to her;
I swore you would marry her, she laugh'd extremely,
And then she rail'd like thunder.

Ant. Call in the Magician.

Enter Magician with a Bowl.

I must, and will obtain her, I am ashes else.
Are all the Philters in? Charms, Powder, Roots?

Mag. They are all in; and now I only stay
The invocation of some helping Spirits.

Ant. To your work then, and dispatch.

Mag. Sit still, and fear not.

Leo. I shall ne'r endure these fights.

Ant. Away with the Woman: go wait without.

Leo. When the Devil's gone, pray call me. [Exit.]

Ant. Be sure you make it powerful enough.

Mag. Pray doubt not— He Conjures.

A S O N G.

Rise from the Shades below,
All you that prove
The helps of looser Love;
Rise and bestow
Upon this Cup, what ever may compel
By powerful Charm, and unresisted Spell.
A Heart un-warm'd to melt in Loves desires,
Distill into this Liquor all your fires:
Heats, longings, tears,
But keep back frozen fears;
That she may know, that has all power desired,
Art is a power that will not be denied.

The ANSWER.

I Obey, I Obey,
And am come to view the day,
Brought along, all may compel,
All the Earth has, and our Hell:
Here's a little, little Flower,
This will make her sweat an hour,
Then unto such flames arise,
A thousand joys will not suffice.
Here's the powder of the Moon,
With which she caught Endymion;
The powerful tears that Venus cryed,
When the Boy Adonis dyed.
Here's Medea's Charm, with which
Jason's heart she did bewitch,
Omphale this Spell put in,
When she made the Libyan spin.
This dull root pluckt from Lethe flood,
Purges all pure thoughts, and good.
These I stir thus, round, round, round,
Whilst our light feet beat the ground.

Mag. Now Sir, 'tis full, and whosoever drinks this Shall violently doat upon your person,
And never sleep nor eat unsatisfied:
So many hours 'twill work, and work with Violence;
And those expired, 'tis done. You have my art, Sir.

Enter Leucippe.

Ant. See him rewarded liberally— Leucippe.
Here, take this bowl, and when she calls for Wine next,
Be sure you give her this, and see her drink it;
Delay no time when she calls next.

Leo. I shall, Sir.

Ant. Let none else touch it on your life.

Leo. I am charg'd, Sir.

Ant. Now if she have an antidote art let her 'scape me. [Exeunt.]

Enter Leontius, Lieutenant, Gent. (thing.)

1 Gent. There's the door, Lieutenant, if you dare do any

Leo. Here's no man waits.

1 Gent. H'as given a charge that none shall,
Nor none shall come within the hearing of him:
Dare ye go forward?

Lieu. Let me put on my Skull first.
My head's almost beaten into th' pap of an Apple.
Are there no Guns i' th' door?

Leo. The Rogue will do it.
And yet I know he has no Stomach to't. (stones,

Lieu. What loop-holes are there when I knock for
For those may pepper me? I can perceive none.

Leo. How he views the Fortification.

Lieu. Farewel Gentlemen,
If I be kill'd—

Leo. We'll see thee buried bravely. (softly,

Lieu. Away, how should I know that then? I'll knock.
Pray heaven he speak in a low voice now to comfort me:
I feel I have no heart to't:— Is't well, Gentlemen?
Colonel, my Troop—

Leo. A little louder.

Lieu. Stay, stay;
Here is a window, I will see, stand wide.
By— he's charging of a Gun.

Leo. There's no such matter.
There's no body in this room.

Lieu. O 'twas a fire-shovel:
Now I'll knock louder; if he say who's there?
As sure he has so much manners, then will I answer him
So finely & demurely; my Troop Colonel— (knocks louder.)

1 Gent. Knock louder, Fool, he hears not.

Lieu. You fool, do you.

Do and you dare now.

1 Gent. I do not undertake it. (matters.)

Lieu. Then hold your peace, and meddle with your own

Leo. Now he will knock. [Knocks louder.]

Lieu. Sir, Sir, will't please you hear Sir?

Your Grace, I'll look again, what's that?

Leo. He's there now.

Lord! How he stares! I ne'r yet saw him thus alter'd:
Stand now, and take the Troop.

Lieu. Would I were in't,
And a good horse under me: I must knock again,
The Devil's at my fingers ends: he comes now.
Now Colonel, if I live—

Leo. The Troop's thine own Boy.

Enter Demetrius, a Pistol.

Dem. What desperate fool, ambitious of his ruine?

Lieu. Your Father would desire ye, Sir, to come to dinner.

Dem. Thou art no more.

Lieu. Now, now, now, now.

Dem. Poor Coxcomb:

Why do I aim at thee? [Exit.]

Leo. His fear has kill'd him.

Enter Leucippe with a Bowl.

2 Gent. I protest he's almost stiff: bend him and rub him,
Hold his Nose close, you, if you be a woman,
Help us a little: here's a man near perish'd.

Leo. Alas alas, I have nothing here about me.
Look to my Bowl; I'll run in presently
And fetch some water: bend him, and set him upwards.

Leo. A goodly man— [Exit.]
Here's a brave heart: he's warm again: you shall not Leave us i' th' lurch so, Sirrah.

2 Gent. Now he breaths too.

Leo. If we had but any drink to raise his Spirits.
What's that i' th' Bowl? upon my life, good Liquor;
She would not own it else.

1 Gent. He fees.

Leo. Look up Boy.
And take this Cup, and drink it off; I'll pledge thee.
Guide it to his mouth, he swallows heartily.

2 Gent. Oh! fear and sorrow's dry; 'tis off—

Leo.

Leo. Stand up man.
 Lieu. Am I not shot?
 Leo. Away with him, and cheer him:
 Thou hast won thy Troop.
 Lieu. I think I won it bravely.
 Leo. Go, I must see the Prince, he must not live thus;
 And let me hear an hour hence from ye.
 Well, Sir—— [Exeunt Gent. and Lieu.]

Enter Leucippe with water.

Leo. Here, here: where's the sick Gentleman?
 Leo. He's up, and gone, Lady.
 Leo. Alas, that I came so late.
 Leo. He must still thank ye;
 Ye left that in a Cup here did him comfort.
 Leo. That in the Bowl?
 Leo. Yes truly, very much comfort,
 He drank it off, and after it spoke lustily.
 Leo. Did he drink it all?
 Leo. All off.
 Leo. The Devil choak him;
 I am undone: h'as twenty Devils in him;
 Undone for ever, left he none?
 Leo. I think not.
 Leo. No, not a drop: what shall become of me now?
 Had he no where else to ffound? a vengeance ffound
 Undone, undone, undone: stay, I can lye yet (him:
 And swear too at a pinch, that's all my comfort.
 Look to him; I say look to him, & but mark what follows. Ex.

Enter Demetrius.

Leo. What a Devil ails the Woman? here comes the
 With such a sadness on his face, as sorrow, (Prince again,
 Sorrow her self but poorly imitates.
 Sorrow of Sorrows on that heart that caus'd it.
 Dem. Why might she not be false and treacherous to me?
 And found so by my Father? she was a Woman,
 And many a one of that Sex, young and fair,
 As full of faith as she, have fallen, and foully.
 Leo. It is a Wench! O that I knew the circumstance.
 Dem. Why might not, to preserve me from this ruine,
 She having lost her honour, and abused me,
 My father change the forms o'th' coins, and execute
 His anger on a fault she ne'r committed,
 Only to keep me safe? why should I think so?
 She never was to me, but all obedience,
 Sweetness, and love.
 Leo. How heartily he weeps now?
 I have not wept this thirty years, and upward;
 But now, if I should be hang'd I cannot hold from't:
 It grieves me to the heart.
 Dem. Who's that that mocks me?
 Leo. A plague of him that mocks ye: I grieve truly,
 Truly, and heartily to see you thus, Sir:
 And if it lay in my power, gods are my witness,
 Who e'r he be that took your sweet peace from you;
 I am not so old yet, nor want I spirit——
 Dem. No more of that, no more Leontius,
 Revenges are the gods: our part is sufferance:
 Farewell, I shall not see thee long. (in't;
 Leo. Good Sir, tell me the cause, I know there is a woman
 Do you hold me faithful? dare you trust your Souldier?
 Sweet Prince, the cause?
 Dem. I must not, dare not tell it,
 And as thou art an honest man, enquire not.
 Leo. Will ye be merry then?
 Dem. I am wondrous merry.
 Leo. 'Tis wondrous well: you think now this becomes ye.
 Shame on't, it does not, Sir, it shews not handsomely;
 If I were thus; you would swear I were an Afs straight;
 A wooden afs; whine for a Wench?
 Dem. Prithee leave me.
 Leo. I will not leave ye for a tit.
 Dem. Leontius?

Leo. For that you may have any where for six pence,
 And a dear penny-worth too.
 Dem. Nay, then you are troublesome.
 Leo. Not half so troublesome as you are to your self, Sir;
 Was that brave Heart made to pant for a placket:
 And now i'th' dog-days too, when nothing dare love!
 That noble Mind to melt away and moulder
 For a hey nonny, nonny! Would I had a Glass here,
 To shew ye what a pretty toy ye are turn'd to.

Dem. My wretched Fortune.

Leo. Will ye but let me know her?
 I'll once turn Bawd: go to, they are good mens offices;
 And not so contemptible as we take 'em for:
 And if she be above ground, and a Woman;
 I ask no more; I'll bring her o' my back, Sir,
 By this hand I will, and I had as lieve bring the Devil,
 I care not who she be, nor where I have her;
 And in your arms, or the next Bed deliver her, (galliard.
 Which you think fittest, and when you have danc'd your
 Dem. Away, and fool to them are so affected:
 O thou art gone, and all my comfort with thee!
 Wilt thou do one thing for me?

Leo. All things i'th' World, Sir,
 Of all dangers.

Dem. Swear. Leo. I will.

Dem. Come near me no more then.

Leo. How?

Dem. Come no more near me:

Thou art a plague-fore to me [Exit.]

Leo. Give you good ev'n Sir;
 If you be suffer'd thus, we shall have fine sport.
 I will be sorry yet.

Enter 2 Gentlemen.

1 Gent. How now, how does he?

Leo. Nay, if I tell ye, hang me, or any man else
 That hath his nineteen wits; he has the bots I think,
 He groans, and roars, and kicks.

2 Gent. Will he speak yet?

Leo. Not willingly:
 Shortly he will not see a man; if ever
 I look'd upon a Prince so metamorphos'd,
 So juggl'd into I know not what, shame take me;
 This 'tis to be in love.

1 Gent. Is that the cause on't?

Leo. What is it not the cause of but bear-baitings?
 And yet it stinks much like it: out upon't;
 What giants, and what dwarffs, what owls and apes, (it,
 What dogs, and cats it makes us? men that are possest with Live as if they had a Legion of Devils in 'em,
 And every Devil of a several nature;
 Nothing but Hey-pafs, re-pafs: where's the Lieutenant?
 Has he gather'd up the end on's wits again?

1 Gent. He is alive: but you that talk of wonders,
 Shew me but such a wonder as he is now.

Leo. Why? he was ever at the worst a wonder.

2 Gent. He is now most wonderful; a Blazer now, Sir.

Leo. What ails the Fool? and what Star reigns now
 We have such Prodigies? (Gentlemen)

2 Gent. 'Twill pose your heaven-hunters;
 He talks now of the King, no other language,
 And with the King as he imagines, hourly.
 Courts the King, drinks to the King, dies for the King,
 Buys all the Pictures of the King, wears the Kings colours.

Leo. Does he not lye i'th' King street too?

1 Gent. He's going thither,
 Makes prayers for the King, in sundry languages,
 Turns all his Proclamations into metre;
 Is really in love with the King, most dotingly,
 And swears Adonis was a Devil to him:
 A sweet King, a most comely King, and such a King——

2 Gent. Then down on's marrow-bones; O excellent King
 Thus he begins, Thou Light, and Life of Creatures,
 Angel-ey'd King, vouchsafe at length thy favour;

And

And so proceeds to incision: what think ye of this forrow?

1 Gent. Will as familiarly kifs the King horses
As they pass by him: ready to ravish his footmen.

Leo. Why, this is above Ela?
But how comes this?

1 Gent. Nay that's to understand yet,
But thus it is, and this part but the poorest, (these.)
'Twould make a man leap over the Moon to see him act

2 Gent. With sighs as though his heart would break:
Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit.

Leo. I must go see him presently,
For this is such a gig, for certain, Gentlemen,
The Fiend rides on a Fiddle-stick.

2 Gent. I think so.

Leo. Can ye guide me to him for half an hour? I am his
To see the miracle.

1 Gent. We sure shall start him.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

Enter Antigonus and Leucippe.

Ant. Are you sure she drank it?

Leu. Now must I lye most confidently.
Yes Sir, she has drunk it off.

Ant. How works it with her?

Leu. I see no alteration yet. Ant. There will be,
For he is the greatest Artist living made it.
Where is she now?

Leu. She is ready to walk out, Sir.

Ant. Stark mad, I know she will be.

Leu. So I hope, Sir.

Ant. She knows not of the Prince?

Leu. Of no man living——

Ant. How do I look? how do my cloaths become me?
I am not very grey.

Leu. A very youth, Sir,
Upon my maiden-head as smug as April:
Heaven blefs that sweet face, 'twill undo a thousand;
Many a soft heart must sob yet, e'r that wither,
Your Grace can give content enough.

Enter Celia with a Book.

Ant. I think so.

Leu. Here she comes, Sir.

Ant. How shall I keep her off me?

Go, & perfume the room: make all things ready. [Ex. Leu.]

Cel. No hope yet of the Prince! no comfort of him!
They keep me mew'd up here, as they mew mad folks,
No company but my afflictions.
This royal Devil again! strange, how he haunts me!
How like a poyson'd potion his eyes fright me!
Has made himself handsome too.

Ant. Do you look now, Lady?
You will leap anon.

Cel. Cur'd and perfum'd? I smell him;
He looks on's legs too, sure he will cut a caper;
God-a-mercy, dear December.

Ant. O do you smile now;
I knew it would work with you; come hither pretty one.

Cel. Sir.

Ant. I like those courtesies well; come hither and kifs me.

Cel. I am reading, Sir, of a short Treatise here,
That's call'd the Vanity of Lust: has your Grace seen it?
He says here, that an Old Mans loose desire
Is like the Glow-worms light, the Apes so wonder'd at:
Which when they gather'd sticks, and laid upon't,
And blew, and blew, turn'd tail, and went out presently:
And in another place he calls their loves,
Faint Smells of dying Flowers, carry no comforts;
They're doting, stinking fogs, so thick and muddy,
Reason with all his beams cannot beat through 'em.

Ant. How's this? is this the potion? you but fool still;
I know you love me.

Cel. As you are just and honest;
I know I love and honour you: admire you.

Ant. This makes against me, fearfully against me,
Cel. But as you bring your power to persecute me,

Your traps to catch mine innocence to rob me;
As you lay out your lusts to overwhelm me,
Hell never hated good, as I hate you, Sir;
And I dare tell it to your face: What glory
Now after all your Conquests got, your Titles,
The ever-living memories rais'd to you,
Can my defeat be? my poor wrack, what triumph?
And when you crown your swelling Cups to fortune,
What honourable tongue can sing my story?
Be as your Emblem is, a gorious Lamp
Set on the top of all, to light all perfectly:
Be as your office is, a god-like Justice,
Into all shedding equally your Vertues. (ness;

Ant. She has drencht me now; now I admire her good-
So young, so nobly strong, I never tasted:

Can nothing in the power of Kings perswade ye?

Cel. No, nor that power command me.

Ant. Say I should force ye?

I have it in my will. Cel. Your will's a poor one;
And though it be a King's Will, a despis'd one.
Weaker than Infants legs, your will's in swadling Clouts,
A thousand ways my will has found to check ye;
A thousand doors to 'scape ye, I dare dye, Sir;
As suddenly I dare dye, as you can offer:
Nay, say you had your Will, say you had ravish'd me,
Perform'd your lust, what had you purchas'd by it?
What Honour won? do you know who dwells above, Sir,
And what they have prepar'd for men turn'd Devils?
Did you never hear their thunder? start and tremble,
Death sitting on your blood, when their fires visit us.
Will nothing wring you then do you think? sit hard here,
And like a Snail curl round about your Conscience,
Biting and stinging: will you not roar too late then?
Then when you shake in horroir of this Villainy,
Then will I rise a Star in Heaven, and scorn ye. (ness!

Ant. Lust, how I hate thee now! and love this sweet-
Will you be my Queen? can that price purchase ye?

Cel. Not all the World, I am a Queen already,
Crown'd by his Love, I must not lose for Fortune;

I can give none away, sell none away, Sir,
Can lend no love, am not mine own Exchequer;

For in anothers heart my hope and peace lies. (nough

Ant. Your fair hands, Lady? for yet I am not pure e-
To touch these Lips, in that sweet Peace ye spoke of.

Live now for ever, and I to serve your Vertues——

Cel. Why now you show a god! now I kneel to ye;
This Sacrifice of Virgins Joy send to ye:

Thus I hold up my hands to Heaven that touch'd ye,
And pray eternal Blessings dwell about ye. (tue;

Ant. Vertue commands the Stars: rise more than Ver-
Your present comfort shall be now my business.

Cel. All my obedient service wait upon ye. [Ex. severally.]

SCENE VI.

Enter Leontius, Gentlemen, and Lieutenant.

Leo. Hast thou clean forgot the Wars?

Lieu. Prithee hold thy peace.

1 Gent. His mind's much elevated now.

Leo. It seems so.

Sirrah.

Lieu. I am so troubled with this Fellow.

Leo. He will call me Rogue anon.

1 Gent. 'Tis ten to one else. (thee.

Lieu. O King that thou knew'st I lov'd thee, how I lov'd
And where O King, I barrel up thy beauty.

Leo. He cannot leave his Sutlerstrade, he woos in't.

Lieu. O never, King.

Leo. By this hand, when I consider——

Lieu. My honest friend, you are a little sawcy.

1 Gent. I told you you would have it.

Lieu. When mine own worth——

Leo. Is slung into the ballance, and found nothing.
Lieu. And yet a Soldier.
Leo. And yet a sawcy one.
Lieu. One that has followed thee.
Leo. Fair and far off.
Lieu. Fought for thy grace.
Leo. 'Twas for some grief, you lye Sir.
Lieu. He's the son of a whore denies this: will that fa-
Leo. Yes, very well. (tisfie ye?
Lieu. Shall then that thing that honours thee?
 How miserable a thing soever, yet a thing still;
 And though a thing of nothing, thy thing ever.
Leo. Here's a new thing.
2 Gent. He's in a deep dump now.
Leo. I'll fetch him out on't. When's the Kings birth-day?
Lieu. When e're it be, that day I'll dye with ringing.
 And there's the resolution of a Lover. [Exit.
Leo. A goodly resolution sure I take it.
 He is bewitch'd, or moop'd, or his brains melted,
 Could he find no body to fall in love with; but the King,
 The good old King, to doat upon him too?
 Stay, now I remember, what the fat woman warn'd me,
 Bad me remember, and look to him too:
 I'll hang if she have not a hand in this: he's conjured,
 Goe after him, I pity the poor Rascal,
 In the mean time I'll wait occasion
 To work upon the Prince.
2 Gent. Pray doe that seriously. [Ex. severally.

SCENA VII.

Enter Antigonus, Menippus, Lords.

Lord. He's |very ill.
Ant. I am very sorry for't,
 And much ashamed I have wronged her innocence,
Menippus, guide her to the Princes lodgings,
 There leave her to his love again.
Men. I am glad Sir.
Lord. He will speak to none.
Ant. O I shall break that silence;
 Be quick, take fair attendance.
Men. Yes Sir presently. [Exit.
Ant. He will find his tongue, I warrant ye; his health too;
 I send a physick will not fail.
Lord. Fair work it.
Ant. We hear the Princes mean to visit us
 In way of truce.
Lord. 'Tis thought so.
Ant. Come: let's in then,
 And think upon the noblest wayes to meet 'em. [Exeunt.

SCENA VIII.

Enter Leontius.

Leo. There's no way now to get in: all the light stopt
 Nor can I hear a sound of him, pray Heaven (too;
 He use no violence: I think he has more Soul,
 Stronger, and I hope nobler: would I could but see once
 This beauty he groans under, or come to know
 But any circumstance. What noise is that there?
 I think I heard him groan: here are some coming;
 A woman too, I'll stand aloof, and view 'em.

Enter Menippus, Celia, Lords.

Cel. Well, some of ye have been to blame in this point,
 But I forgive ye: The King might have pickt out too
 Some fitter woman to have tri'd his valour.
Men. 'Twas all to the best meant, Lady.
Cel. I must think so,
 For how to mend it now: he's here you tell me?
Men. He's Madani, and the joy to see you only
 Will draw him out.
Leo. I know that womans tongue,
 I think I have seen her face too: Ple goe nearer:

If this be she, he has some cause of sorrow:
 'Tis the same face; the same, most excellent woman.
Cel. This should be Lord Leontius: I remember him.
Leo. Lady, I think ye know me.
Cel. Speak soft, good Souldier:
 I do, and know ye worthy, know ye noble;
 Know not me yet openly, as you love me;
 But let me see ye again, I'll satisfie ye:
 I am wondrous glad to see those eyes.
Leo. You have charged me.
Cel. You shall know where I am.
Leo. I will not off yet:
 She goes to knock at's door: This must be she
 The fellow told me of: right glad I am on't,
 He will bolt now for certain.
Cel. Are ye within Sir?
 I'll trouble you no more: I thank your courtesie,
 Pray leave me now.
All. Me. We rest your humble servants. [Ex. Me. &c.
Cel. So now my jives are off: pray Heaven he be here!
 Master, my royal Sir: do you hear who calls ye?
 Love, my Demetrius.
Leo. These are pretty quail-pipes,
 The Cock will Crow anon.
Cel. Can ye be drowsie,
 When I call at your Window?
Leo. I hear him stirring:
 Now he comes wondring out.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. 'Tis Celias found sure:
 The sweetnes of that tongue draws all hearts to it;
 There stands the shape too.
Leo. How he stares upon her?
Dem. Ha? do mine eyes abuse me?
 'Tis she, the living Celia: your hand Lady?
Cel. What should this mean?
Dem. The very self same Celia.
Cel. How do ye Sir?
Dem. Only turn'd brave.
 I heard you were dead my dear one, compleat,
 She is wondrous brave, a wondrous gallant Courtier.
Cel. How he surveyes me round? here has been foul play.
Dem. How came she thus?
Cel. It was a kind of death Sir,
 I suffered in your absence, mew'd up here,
 And kept conceal'd I know not how.
Dem. 'Tis likely:
 How came you hither Celia? wondrous gallant:
 Did my Father send for ye?
Cel. So they told me Sir,
 And on command too.
Dem. I hope you were obedient?
Cel. I was so ever.
Dem. And ye were bravely us'd?
Cel. I wanted nothing:
 My maiden-head to a mote i'th' Sun, he's jealous:
 I must now play the knave with him, though I dye for't,
 'Tis in my nature.
Dem. Her very eyes are alter'd:
 Jewels, and rich ones too, I never saw yet —
 And what were those came for ye?
Cel. Monstrous jealous:
 Have I liv'd at the rate of these scorn'd questions?
 They seem'd of good sort, Gentlemen.
Dem. Kind men?
Cel. They were wondrous kind:
 I was much beholding to 'em;
 There was one Menippus Sir.
Dem. Ha?
Cel. One Menippus,
 A notable merry Lord, and a good companion.
Dem. And one Charinthus too?
Cel. Yes, there was such a one.

Dem.

Dem. And Timon?

Cel. 'Tis most true.

Dem. And thou most treacherous :
My Fathers bawds by—they never misf course ;
And were these daily with ye ?

Cel. Every hour Sir.

Dem. And was there not a Lady, a fat Lady ?

Cel. O yes ; a notable good wench.

Dem. The Devil fetch her.

Cel. 'Tis ev'n the merriest wench ———

Dem. Did she keep with ye too ?

Cel. She was all in all ; my bed-fellow, eat with me,
Brought me acquainted.

Dem. You are well know here then ?

Cel. There is no living here a stranger I think.

Dem. How came ye by this brave gown ?

Cel. This is a poor one :

Alas, I have twenty richer : do you see these jewels ?
Why, they are the poorest things, to those are sent me,
And sent me hourly too.

Dem. Is there no modestie ?

No faith in this fair Sex ?

Leo. What will this prove too ?

For yet with all my wits, I understand not.

Dem. Come hither ; thou art dead indeed, lost, tainted ;
All that I left thee fair, and innocent,
Sweet as thy youth, and carrying comfort in't ;
All that I hoped for vertuous, is fled from thee,
Turn'd back, and bankrupt.

Leo. By'r Lady, this cuts shrewdly.

Dem. Thou art dead, for ever dead ; sins surfeit slew thee ;
The ambition of those wanton eyes betray'd thee ;
Go from me, grave of honour ; go thou foul one,
Thou glory of thy sin ; go thou despis'd one,
And where there is no vertue, nor no virgin ;
Where Chastity was never known, nor heard of ;
Where nothing reigns but impious lust, and looser faces.
Go thither, child of blood, and sing my doating.

Cel. You do not speak this seriously I hope Sir ;
I did but jest with you.

Dem. Look not upon me,
There is more hell in those eyes, than hell harbours ;
And when they flame, more torments.

Cel. Dare ye trust me ?

You durst once even with all you had : your love Sir ?
By this fair light I am honest.

Dem. Thou subtle Circe,
Cast not upon the maiden light eclipses :
Curse not the day.

Cel. Come, come, you shall not do this :
How fain you would seem angry now, to fright me ;
You are not in the field among your Enemies ;
Come, I must cool this courage.

Dem. Out thou impudence,
Thou ulcer of thy Sex ; when I first saw thee,
I drew into mine eyes mine own destruction,
I pull'd into my heart that sudden poyson,
That now consumes my dear content to cinders :
I am not now Demetrius, thou hast chang'd me ;
Thou, woman, with thy thousand wiles hast chang'd me ;
Thou Serpent with thy angel-eyes hast slain me ;
And where, before I touch'd on this fair ruine,
I was a man, and reason made, 'and mov'd me,
Now one great lump of grief, I grow and wander.

Cel. And as you are noble, do you think I did this ?

Dem. Put all the Devils wings on, and flie from me.

Cel. I will go from ye, never more to see ye :
I will flie from ye, as a plague hangs o're me ;
And through the progress of my life hereafter ;
Where ever I shall find a fool, a false man,
One that ne're knew the worth of polish'd vertue ;
A base suspecter of a virgins honour,
A child that flings away the wealth he cri'd for,
Him will I call Demetrius : that fool Demetrius,

That mad man a Demetrius ; and that false man,
The Prince of broken faiths, even Prince Demetrius.
You think now, I should cry, and kneel down to ye,
Petition for my peace ; let those that feel here
The weight of evil, wait for such a favour,
I am above your hate, as far above it,
In all the actions of an innocent life,
As the pure Stars are from the muddy meteors,
Cry when you know your folly : howl and curse then,
Beat that unmanly breast, that holds a false heart
When ye shall come to know, whom ye have flung from ye.

Dem. Pray ye stay a little.

Cel. Not your hopes can alter me.

Then let a thousand black thoughts muster in ye,
And with those enter in a thousand doatings ;
Those eyes be never shut, but drop to nothing :
My innocence for ever haunt and fright ye :
Those arms together grow in folds ; that tongue,
That bold bad tongue that barks out these disgraces.
When you shall come to know how nobly vertuous
I have preserv'd my life, rot, rot within ye.

Dem. What shall I doe ?

Cel. Live a lost man for ever.

Go ask your Fathers conscience what I suffered,
And through what seas of hazards I say'd through :
Mine honour still advanced in spite of tempests,
Then take your leave of love ; and confess freely,
You were never worthy of this heart that serv'd ye,
And so farewell ungratefull ———

[Exit.

Dem. Is she gone ?

Leo. I'll follow her, and will find out this matter.—[Exit

Enter Antigonus, and Lords.

Ant. Are ye pleas'd now ? have you got your heart a-
Have I restor'd ye that ? gain ?

Dem. Sir even for Heaven sake,
And sacred truth sake, tell me how ye found her.

Ant. I will, and in few words. Before I tri'd her,
'Tis true, I thought her most unfit your fellowship,
And fear'd her too : which fear begot that story
I told ye first : but since, like gold I toucht her.

Dem. And how dear Sir ?

Ant. Heavens holy light's not purer :
The constancy and goodness of all women
That ever liv'd, to win the names of worthy,
This noble Maid has doubled in her : honour,
All promises of wealth, all art to win her,
And by all tongues employ'd, wrought as much on her
As one may doe upon the Sun at noon day
By lighting Candles up : her shape is heavenly,
And to that heavenly shape her thoughts are angels.

Dem. Why did you tell me Sir ?

Ant. 'Tis true, I err'd in't :

But since I made a full proof of her vertue,
I find a King too poor a servant for her.
Love her, and honour her ; in all observe her.
She must be something more than time yet tells her :
And certain I believe him best, enjoys her :
I would not lose the hope of such a Daughter,
To adde another Empire to my honour.—

[Exit.

Dem. O wretched state ! to what end shall I turn me ?
And where begins my penance ? now, what service
Will win her love again ? my death must doe it :
And if that sacrifice can purge my follies,
Be pleas'd, O mightie Love, I dye thy servant—

[Exit.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Leontius, and Celia.

Leo. I Know he do's not deserve ye ; h'as us'd you poorly :
I And to redeem himself ———

Cel. Redcem ?

Leo.

Leo. I know it —
There's no way left.
Cel. For Heavens sake do not name him,
Do not think on him Sir, he's so far from me
In all my thoughts now, methinks I never knew him.
Leo. But yet I would see him again.
Cel. No, never, never.
Leo. I do not mean to lend him any comfort ;
But to afflict him, so to torture him ;
That even his very Soul may shake within him :
To make him know, though he be great and powerfull,
'Tis not within his aim to deal dishonourably,
And carry it off, and with a maid of your fort.
Cel. I must confes, I could most spightfully afflict him ;
Now, now, I could whet my anger at him ;
Now, arm'd with bitterness, I could shoot through him ;
I long to vex him.
Leo. And doe it home, and bravely.
Cel. Were I a man ?
Leo. Ple help that weaknes in ye :
I honour ye, and serve ye.
Cel. Not only to disclaim me,
When he had seal'd his vowes in Heaven, sworn to me,
And poor believing I became his servant :
But most maliciously to brand my credit,
Stain my pure name.
Leo. I would not suffer it :
See him I would again, and to his teeth too :
Od's precious, I would ring him such a lesson —
Cel. I have done that already.
Leo. Nothing, nothing :
It was too poor a purge ; besides, by this time
He has found his fault, and feels the helts that follow it.
That, and your urg'd on anger to the highest,
Why, 'twill be such a stroak —
Cel. Say he repent then,
And seek with tears to soften, I am a woman ;
A woman that have lov'd him, Sir, have honour'd him :
I am no more.
Leo. Why, you may deal thereafter.
Cel. If I forgive him, I am lost.
Leo. Hold there then,
The sport will be to what a poor submission —
But keep you strong.
Cel. I would not see him.
Leo. Yes,
You shall Ring his knell.
Cel. How if I kill him ?
Leo. Kill him ? why, let him dye.
Cel. I know 'tis fit so.
But why should I that lov'd him once, destroy him ?
O had he scap't this sin, what a brave Gentleman —
Leo. I must confes, had this not saln, a nobler,
A handsomer, the whole world had not show'd ye :
And to his making such a mind —
Cel. 'Tis certain :
But all this I must now forget.
Leo. You shall not
If I have any art : goe up sweet Lady,
And trust my truth :
Cel. But good Sir bring him not.
Leo. I would not for the honour ye are born to,
But you shall see him, and neglect him too, and scorn him.
Cel. You will be near me then.
Leo. I will be with ye ;
Yet there's some hope to stop this gap, Ple work hard. [Ex.

SCENA II.

Enter Antigonus, Menip. two Gent. Lieutenant, and Lords.
Ant. But is it possible this fellow took it ?
2 Gent. It seems so by the violence it wrought with,
Yet now the fits ev'n off.
Men. I beseech your Grace.

Ant. Nay, I forgive thy wife with all my heart,
And am right glad she drank it not her self,
And more glad that the vertuous maid escap't it,
I would not for the world 'thad hit : but that this Souldier,
Lord how he looks, that he should take this vomit ;
Can he make rimes too ?
2 Gent. H'as made a thousand Sir,
And plaies the burthen to 'em on a Jews-trump.
Ant. He looks as though he were besift : do you love Lieu. Yes surely even with all my heart. (me Sir ?
Ant. I thank ye ;
I am glad I have so good a subject : but pray ye tell me,
How much did ye love me, before ye drank this matter ?
Lieu. Even as much as a sober man might ; and a Souldier
That your grace owes just half a years pay to.
Ant. Well remembered ;
And did I seem so young and amiable to ye ?
Lieu. Methought you were the sweetest youth —
Ant. That's excellent.
Lieu. I truly Sir : and ever as I thought on ye,
I wished, and wished —
Ant. What didst thou wish prethee ?
Lieu. Ev'n, that I had been a wench of fifteen for ye,
A handsom wench Sir.
Ant. Why ? God a Mercy Souldier :
I seem not so now to thee.
Lieu. Not all out :
And yet I have a grudging to your grace still.
Ant. Thou wast never in love before ?
Lieu. Not with a King,
And hope I shall never be again : Truly Sir,
I have had such plunges, and such bickrings ;
And as it were such runnings atilt within me,
For whatsoever it was provok't me toward ye :
Ant. God a-mercy still.
Lieu. I had it with a vengeance,
It plaid his prize.
Ant. I would not have been a wench their ;
Though of this age.
Lieu. No sure, I should have spoil'd ye.
Ant. Well, goe thy waies, of all the lusty lovers
That e're I saw — wilt have another potion ?
Lieu. If you will be another thing, have at ye.
Ant. Ha, ha, ha : give me thy hand, from henceforth thou
Do bravely, Ple love thee as much. (art my souldier,
Lieu. I thank ye ;
But if you were mine enemy, I would not wish it ye :
I beseech your Grace, pay me my charge.
2 Gent. That's certain Sir ;
H'as bought up all that e're he found was like ye,
Or any thing you have lov'd, that he could purchase ;
Old horses, that your Grace has ridden blind, and foundr'd ;
Dogs, rotten hawks, and which is more than all this,
Has worn your Graces Gauntlet in his Bonnet.
Ant. Bring in your Bills : mine own love shall be satisfi'd ;
And firrah, for this potion you have taken,
I'll point ye out a portion ye shall live on.
Men. 'Twas the best draught that e're ye drunk.
Lieu. I hope so.
Ant. Are the Princes come toth' Court ?
Men. They are all ; and lodg'd Sir.
Ant. Come then, make ready for their entertainment,
Which presently we'll give : wait you on me Sir.
Lieu. I shall love drink the better whilst I live boyes.

SCENA III.

Enter Demetrius, and Leontius.

Dem. Let me but see her, dear Leontius ;
Let me but dye before her.
Leo. Would that would doe it :
If I knew where she lay now, with what honestie,
You having slung so main a mischief on her,
And on so innocent and sweet a Beauty,

Dare I present your visit?

Dem. I'll repent all:
And with the greatest sacrifice of sorrow,
That ever Lover made.

Leo. 'Twill be too late Sir:
I know not what will become of you.

Dem. You can help me.

Leo. It may be to her sight: what are you nearer?
She has sworn she will not speak to ye, look upon ye,
And to love ye again, O she cries out, and thunders,
She had rather love——there is no hope——

Dem. Yes Leontius,
There is a hope, which though it draw no love to it,
At least will draw her to lament my fortune,
And that hope shall relieve me.

Leo. Hark ye Sir, hark ye:
Say I should bring ye——

Dem. Do not not trifle with me?

Leo. I will not trifle; both together bring ye,
You know the wrongs ye' done.

Dem. I do confess 'em.

Leo. And if you should then jump into your fury,
And have another querk in your head.

Dem. I'll dye first.

Leo. You must say nothing to her; for 'tis certain,
The nature of your crime will admit to excuse.

Dem. I will not speak, mine eyes shall tell my penance.

Leo. You must look wondrous sad too.

Dem. I need not look so,
I am truly sadness self.

Leo. That look will do it:
Stay here, I'll bring her to you instantly:
But take heed how you bear your self: sit down there,
The more humble you are, the more she'll take compassion.
Women are per'ulous thing to deal upon. [Exit.]

Dem. What shall become of me? to curse my fortune,
Were but to curse my Father; that's too impious;
But under whatsoever fate I suffer,
Bless I beseech thee heaven her harmless goodness.

Enter Leontius, and Celia.

Leo. Now arm your self.

Cel. You have not brought him?

Leo. Yes faith,
And there he is: you see in what poor plight too,
Now you may doe your will, kill him, or save him.

Cel. I will goe back.

Leo. I will be hang'd then Lady,
Are ye a coward now?

Cel. I cannot speak to him.

Dem. O me.

Leo. There was a sigh to blow a Church down;
So, now their eyes are fixt, the small shot playes,
They will come totli' batterie anon.

Cel. He weeps extreemly.

Leo. Rail at him now.

Cel. I dare not.

Leo. I am glad on't.

Cel. Nor dare believe his tears.

Dem. You may, blest beauty,
For those thick streams that troubled my repentance,
Are crept out long agoe.

Leo. You see how he looks.

Cel. What have I to doe how he looks? how lookt he
When with a poisoned tooth he bit mine honour? (then,
It was your counsel too, to scorn and slight him

Leo. I, if ye saw fit cause; and you confess too,
Except this sin, he was the bravest Gentleman,
The sweetest, noblest: I take nothing from ye,
Nor from your anger; use him as you please:
For to say truth, he has deserved your justice;
But still consider what he has been to you.

Cel. Pray do not blind me thus.

Dem. O Gentle Mistis,

If there were any way to expiate
A sin so great as mine, by intercession,
By prayers, by daily tears, by dying for ye:
O what a joy would close these eyes that love ye.

Leo. They say women have tender hearts, I know not,
I am sure mine melts.

Cel. Sir, I forgive ye heartily,
And all your wrong to me I cast behind me,
And wish ye a fit beauty to your vertues:
Mine is too poor, in peace I part thus from you;
I must look back: gods keep your grace: he's here still. [Ex.]

Dem. She has forgiven me.

Leo. She has directed ye:
Up, up, and follow like a man: away Sir,
She lookt behind her twice: her heart dwells here Sir,
Ye drew tears from her too: she cannot freeze thus;
The door's set open too, are ye a man?

Are ye alive? do ye understand her meaning?
Have ye bloud and spirit in ye?

Dem. I dare not trouble her.

Leo. Nay, and you will be nipt i'th' head with nothing,
Walk whining up and down; I dare not, I cannot:
Strike now or never: faint heart, you know what Sir——
Be govern'd by your fear, and quench your fire out.

A Devil on't, stands this door ope for nothing?

So get ye together, and be naught: now to secure all,
Will I go fetch out a more soveraign plaister. [Exeunt.]

SCENA IV.

Enter Antigonus, Seleucus, Lyfimachus, Ptolomy, Lieutenant, Gentlemen, Lords.

Ant. This peace is fairly made.

Seleu. Would your Grace wish us
To put in more: take what you please, we yield it;
The honour done us by your son constrains it,
Your noble son.

Ant. It is sufficient, Princes;
And now we are one again, one mind, one body,
And one sword shall strike for us.

Lyf. Let Prince Demetrius
But lead us on: for we are his vowed servants;
Against the strength of all the world we'll buckle.

Ptol. And even from all that strength we'll catch at vi-

Sel. O had I now recover'd but the fortune (story.
I lost in Antioch, when mine Uncle perish'd;
But that were but to surfeit me with blessings.

Lyf. You lost a sweet child there.

Sel. Name it no more Sir;
This is no time to entertain such sorrows;
Will your Majesty do us the honour, we may see the Prince,
And wait upon him?

Enter Leon.

Ant. I wonder he staves from us:
How now Leontius, where's my son?

Sel. Brave Captain.

Lyf. Old valiant Sir.

Leo. Your Graces are welcom:
Your son and't please you Sir, is new cashiered yonder,
Cast from his Mistis favour: and such a coil there is;
Such fending, and such proving; she stands off,
And will by no means yield to composition:
He offers any price; his body to her.

Sel. She is a hard Lady, denies that caution.

Leo. And now they whine, and now they rave: faith Prin-
'Twere a good point of charity to piece 'em; (ces,
For less than such a power will doe just nothing:
And if you mean to see him, there it must be,
For there will he grow, till he be transplanted.

Sel. Beseech your grace, let's wait upon you thither,
That I may see that beauty dares deny him,
That scornfull beauty.

Ptol. I should think it worse now;

Ill brought up beauty.

Ant. She has too much reason for't ;
Which with too great a grief, I shame to think of,
But we'll go see this game.

Lys. Rather this wonder.

Ant. Be you our guide Leontius, here's a new peace. [Ex.]

SCENE V.

Enter Demetrius and Celia.

Cel. Thus far you shall persuade me, still to honour ye,
Still to live with ye, Sir, or near about ye ;
For not to lye, you have my first and last love :
But since you have conceiv'd an evil against me,
An evil that so much concerns your honour,
That honour aim'd by all at for a pattern :
And though there be a false thought, and confess too,
And much repentance fall in 'shows to purge it ;
Yet, whilst that great respect I ever bore ye,
Dwells in my blood, and in my heart that duty ;
Had it but been a dream, I must not touch ye.

Dem. O you will make some other happy ?

Cel. Never,
Upon this hand I'll seal that faith.

Dem. We may kiss,
Put not those out o'th' peace too.

Cel. Those I'll give ye,
So there you will be pleas'd to pitch your ne ultra,
I will be merry with ye ; sing, discourse with ye,
Be your poor Mistress still : in truth I love ye.

Enter Leontius, Antigonus, Seleucus, Lysimachus, Ptolomie, Lieutenant, and Gentleman.

Dem. Stay, who are these ?

Lys. A very handsome Lady.

Leo. As e're you saw.

Sel. Pity her heart's so cruel.

Lys. How does your Grace ? he stands still, will not hear us.

Prol. We come to serve ye, Sir, in all our fortunes.

Lys. He bows a little now ; he's strangely alter'd.

Sel. Ha ? pray ye a word Leontius, pray ye a word with ye,
Lysimachus ? you both knew mine Enanthe,
I lost in Antioch, when the Town was taken,
Mine Uncle slain, Antigonus had the sack on't ?

Lys. Yes, I remember well the Girl.

Sel. Methinks now

That face is wondrous like her : I have her picture,
The same, but more years on her ; the very same.

Lys. A Cherry to a Cherry is not liker.

Sel. Look on her eyes.

Leo. Most certain she is like her :

Many a time have I dandled her in these arms, Sir,
And I hope who will more.

Ant. What's that ye look at, Princes ?

Sel. This Picture, and that Lady, Sir.

Ant. Ha ! they are near :

They only err in time.

Lys. Did you mark that blush there ?
That came the nearest.

Sel. I must speak to her.

Leo. You'll quickly be resolved.

Sel. Your name sweet Lady ?

Cel. Enanthe, Sir : and this to beg your blessing.

Sel. Do you know me ?

Cel. If you be the King Seleucus,
I know you are my Father.

Sel. Peace a little,
Where did I lose ye ?

Cel. At the Sack of Antioch,
Where my good Uncle di'd, and I was taken,
By a mean Souldier taken : by this Prince,
This noble Prince, redeem'd from him again,
Where ever since I have remain'd his Servant.

Sel. My joys are now too full : welcome Enanthe,
Mine own, my dearest, and my best Enanthe.

Dem. And mine too desperate.

Sel. You shall not think so,
This is a peace indeed.

Ant. I hope it shall be,
And ask it first.

Cel. Most Royal Sir, ye have it.

Dem. I once more beg it thus.

Sel. You must not be deny'd, Sir.

Cel. By me, I am sure he must not : sure he shall not ;
Kneeling I give it too ; kneeling I take it ;
And from this hour, no envious spight e're part us.

All. The gods give happy joyes ; all comforts to ye.

Dem. My new Enanthe.

Ant. Come, beat all the Drums up,
And all the noble instruments of War :
Let 'em fill all the Kingdom with their sounds ;
And those the brazen Arch of Heaven break through ;
While to the Temple we conduct these two.

Leo. May they be ever loving, ever young,
And ever worthy of those lines they sprung ;
May their fair issues walk with time along.

Lieu. And hang a Coward now ; and there's my song.

[Exeunt.]

Prologue.

Would some man would instruct me what to say:
 For this same Prologue, usual to a Play,
 Is tied to such an old form of Petition;
 Men must say nothing now beyond commission:
 The Cloaks we wear, the Leggs we make, the place
 We stand in, must be one; and one the face.
 Nor alter'd nor exceeded; if it be,
 A general hisse hangs on our levitie:
 We have a Play, a new Play to play now,
 And thus low in our Playes behalf we bow;
 We bow to beg your suffrage, and kind ear;
 If it were naught, or that it might appear,
 A thing buoy'd up by prayer, Gentlemen,
 Believe my faith, you should not see me then.
 Let them speak then have power to stop a storm:
 I never lov'd to feel a House so warm:
 But for the Play if you dare credit me,
 I think it well: All new things you shall see,
 And these dispos'd to all the mirth that may;
 And short enough we hope: and such a Play
 You were wont to like: sit nobly then, and see:
 If it miscarry, pray look not for me.

Epilogue,

Spoke by the Lieutenant.

I Am not cur'd yet throughly; for believe
 I feel another passion that may grieve,
 All over me I feel it too: and now
 It takes me cold, cold, cold, I know not how:
 As you are good men help me, a Carowse
 May make me love you all, all here i'th' house,
 And all that come to see me doatingly:
 Now lend your hands; and for your courtesie,
 The next imployment I am sent upon,
 I'll swear you are Physicians, the War's none.

T H E
Faithful Shepherdes.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Clorin a Shepherdes, having buried her Love in an Arbour.

HAil, holy Earth, whose cold Arms do embrace
The truest man that ever fed his flocks
By the fat plains of fruitful Theffaly,
Thus I salute thy Grave, thus do I pay
My early vows, and tribute of mine eyes
To thy still loved ashes; thus I free
My self from all insuing heats and fires
Of love: all sports, delights and jolly games
That Shepherds hold full dear, thus put I off.
Now no more shall these smooth brows be begirt
With youthful Coronals, and lead the Dance;
No more the company of fresh fair Maids
And wanton Shepherds be to me delightful,
Nor the shrill pleasing sound of merry pipes
Under some shady dell, when the cool wind
Plays on the leaves: all be far away,
Since thou art far away; by whose dear side
How often have I sat Crown'd with fresh flowers
For summers Queen, whil'st every Shepherds Boy
Puts on his lusty green, with gaudy hook,
And hanging scrip of finest Cordevan.
But thou art gone, and these are gone with thee,
And all are dead but thy dear memorie;
That shall out-live thee, and shall ever spring
Whilest there are pipes, or jolly Shepherds sing.
And here will I in honour of thy love,
Dwell by thy Grave, forgetting all those joys,
That former times made precious to mine eyes,
Only remembering what my youth did gain
In the dark, hidden vertuous use of Herbs:
That will I practise, and as freely give
All my endeavours, as I gain'd them free.
Of all green wounds I know the remedies
In Men or Cattel, be they stung with Snakes,
Or charm'd with powerful words of wicked Art,
Or be they Love-sick, or through too much heat
Grown wild or Lunatick, their eyes or ears
Thickned with misty filme of dulling Rheum,
These I can Cure, such secret vertue lies
In Herbs applyed by a Virgins hand:
My meat shall be what these wild woods afford,
Berries, and Chesnuts, Plantanes, on whose Cheeks,
The Sun sits smiling, and the lofty fruit
Pull'd from the fair head of the straight grown Pine;
On these I'll feed with free content and rest,
When night shall blind the world, by thy side blest.

Enter a Satyr.

Satyr. Through yon same bending plain
That flings his arms down to the main,
And through these thick woods have I run;
Whose bottom never kist the Sun
Since the lusty Spring began,
All to please my master Pan,
Have I trotted without rest
To get him Fruit; for at a Feast

He entertains this coming night
His Paramour, the Syrinx bright:
But behold a fairer sight!
By that Heavenly form of thine,
Brightest fair thou art divine,
Sprung from great immortal race
Of the gods, for in thy face
Shines more awful Majesty,
Than dull weak mortalitie
Dare with misty eyes behold,
And live: therefore on this mold
Lowly do I bend my knee,
In worship of thy Deitie;
Deign it Goddes from my hand,
To receive what e're this land
From her fertile Womb doth send
Of her choice Fruits: and but lend Belief to that the Satyre tells,
Fairer by the famous wells,
To this present day ne're grew,
Never better nor more true.
Here be Grapes whose lusty bloud
Is the learned Poets good,
Sweeter yet did never crown
The head of Bacchus, Nuts more brown
Than the Squirrels Teeth that crack them;
Deign O fairest fair to take them.
For these black ey'd Driope
Hath oftentimes commanded me,
With my clasped knee to clime;
See how well the lusty time
Hath deckt their rising cheeks in red;
Such as on your lips is spread,
Here be Berries for a Queen,
Some be red, some be green,
These are of that luscious meat,
The great God Pan himself doth eat:
All these, and what the woods can yield,
The hanging mountain or the field,
I freely offer, and ere long
Will bring you more, more sweet and strong,
Till when humbly leave I take,
Lest the great Pan do awake,
That sleeping lies in a deep glade,
Under a broad Beeches shade,
I must go, I must run
Swifter than the fiery Sun.

[He stands amazed.]

[Exit.]

Clor. And all my fears go with thee.
What greatness or what private hidden power,
Is there in me to draw submission
From this rude man, and beast? sure I am mortal:
The Daughter of a Shepherd, he was mortal:
And she that bore me mortal: prick my hand
And it will bleed: a Fever shakes me,
And the self same wind that makes the young Lambs shrink,
Makes me a cold: my fear says I am mortal:
Yet I have heard (my Mother told it me)
And now I do believe it, if I keep
My Virgin Flower uncropt, pure, chaste, and fair,
No Goblin; Wood-god; Fairy; Elfe, or Fiend,

..... Satyr,

Saryr or other power that haunts the Groves,
 Shall hurt my body, or by vain illusion
 Draw me to wander after idle fires ;
 Or voyces calling me in dead of night,
 To make me follow, and so tole me on
 Through mire and standing pools, to find my ruine :
 Else why should this rough thing, who never knew
 Manners, nor smooth humanity, whose heats
 Are rougher than himself, and more mishapen,
 Thus mildly kneel to me ? sure there is a power
 In that great name of Virgin, that binds fast
 All rude uncivil bloods, all appetites
 That break their confines: then strong Chastity,
 Be thou my strongest guard, for here I'll dwell
 In opposition against Fate and Hell.

Enter an old Shepherd, with him four couple of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Old Shep. Now we have done this holy Festival
 In honour of our great God, and his rites
 Perform'd, prepare your selves for chaste
 And uncorrupted fires: that as the Priest,
 With powerful hand shall sprinkle on yours Brows
 His pure and holy water, ye may be
 From all hot flames of lust, and loose thoughts free.
 Kneel Shepherds, kneel, here comes the Priest of Pan.

Enter Priest.

Priest. Shepherds, thus I purge away,
 Whatsoever this great day,
 Or the past hours gave not good,
 To corrupt your Maiden blood :
 From the high rebellious heat
 Of the Grapes, and strength of meat ;
 From the wanton quick desires,
 They do kindle by their fires,
 I do wash you with this water,
 Be you pure and fair hereafter.
 From your Liver and your Veins,
 Thus I take away the stains.
 All your thoughts be smooth and fair,
 Be ye fresh and free as Air.
 Never more let lustful heat
 Through your purged conduits beat,
 Or a plighted troth be broken,
 Or a wanton verse be spoken
 In a Shepherdesses ear ;
 Go your wayes, ye are all clear.

[They rise and sing in praise of Pan.]

The SONG.

*Sing his praises that doth keep
 Our Flocks from harm,
 Pan the Father of our Sheep,
 And arm in arm
 Tread we softly in a round,
 Whilest the hollow neighbouring ground
 Fills the Musick with her sound.*

*Pan, O great God Pan, to thee
 Thus do we sing :
 Thou that keep'st us chaste and free
 As the young Spring,
 Ever be thy honour spoke,
 From that place the morn is broke,
 To that place Day doth unyoke.*

[Exeunt omnes but Perigot and Amoret.]

Peri. Stay gentle Amoret, thou fair brow'd Maid,
 Thy Shepherd prays thee stay, that holds thee dear,
 Equal with his souls good.

Amo. Speak ; I give
 Thee freedom Shepherd, and thy tongue be still
 The same it ever was ; as free from ill,

As he whose conversation never knew
 The Court or City be thou ever true.

Peri. When I fall off from my affection,
 Or mingle my clean thoughts with foul desires,
 First let our great God cease to keep my flocks,
 That being left alone without a guard,
 The Wolf, or Winters rage, Summers great heat,
 And want of Water, Rots ; or what to us
 Of ill is yet unknown, full speedily,
 And in their general ruine let me feel.

Amo. I pray thee gentle Shepherd wish not so,
 I do believe thee: 'tis as hard for me
 To think thee false, and harder than for thee
 To hold me foul. Peri. O you are fairer far
 Than the chaste blushing morn, or that fair star
 That guides the wandring Sea men through the deep,
 Straighter than straightest Pine upon the steep
 Head of an aged mountain, and more white
 Than the new Milk we strip before day-light
 From the full freighted bags of our fair flocks :
 Your hair more beauteous than those hanging locks
 Of young Apollo.

Amo. Shepherd be not lost,
 Y'are sail'd too far already from the Coast
 Of our discourse.

Peri. Did you not tell me once
 I should not love alone, I should not lose
 Those many passions, vows, and holy Oaths,
 I've sent to Heaven? did you not give your hand,
 Even that fair hand in hostage? Do not then
 Give back again those sweets to other men,
 You your self vow'd were mine.

Amo. Shepherd, so far as Maidens modesty
 May give assurance, I am once more thine,
 Once more I give my hand ; be ever free
 From that great foe to faith, foul jealousy.

Peri. I take it as my best good, and desire
 For stronger confirmation of our love,
 To meet this happy night in that fair Grove,
 Where all true Shepherds have rewarded been
 For their long service: say sweet, shall it hold?

Amo. Dear friend, you must not blame me if I make
 A doubt of what the silent night may do,
 Coupled with this dayes heat to move your blood :
 Maids must be fearful ; sure you have not been Wash'd white enough ; for yet I see a stain
 Stick in your Liver, go and purge again.

Peri. O do not wrong my honest simple truth,
 My self and my affections are as pure
 As those chaste flames that burn before the shrine
 Of the great Dian: only my intent
 To draw you thither, was to plight our troths,
 With enterchange of mutual chaste embraces,
 And ceremonious tying of our selves :
 For to that holy wood is consecrate
 A vertuous well, about whose flowry banks,
 The nimble-footed Fairies dance their rounds,
 By the pale moon-shine, dipping oftentimes
 Their stolen Children, so to make them free
 From dying flesh, and dull mortalitie ;
 By this fair Fount hath many a Shepherd sworn,
 And given away his freedom, many a troth
 Been plight, which neither envy, nor old time
 Could ever break, with many a chaste kiss given,
 In hope of coming happiness ; by this
 Fresh Fountain many a blushing Maid
 Hath crown'd the head of her long loved Shepherd
 With gaudy flowers, whilest he happy sung
 Layes of his love and dear Captivitie ;
 There grows all Herbs fit to cool loofer flames
 Our sensual parts provoke, chiding our bloods,
 And quenching by their power those hidden sparks
 That else would break out, and provoke our sense
 To open fires, so vertuous is that place:

Then gentle Shepherdes, believe and grant,
In troth it fits not with that face to scant
Your faithful Shepherd of those chaste desires
He ever aim'd at, and——

Ama. Thou hast prevail'd, farewell, this coming night
Shall crown thy chaste hopes with long wish'd delight.

Peri. Our great god Pan reward thee for that good
Thou hast given thy poor Shepherd: fairest Bud
Of Maiden Vertues, when I leave to be
The true Admirer of thy Chastitie,
Let me deserve the hot polluted Name
Of the wild Woodman, or affect some Dame,
Whose often Prostitution hath begot
More foul Diseases, than ever yet the hot
Sun bred through his burnings, whilst the Dog
Pursues the raging Lion, throwing Fog,
And deadly Vapour from his angry Breath,
Filling the lower World with Plague and Death. [Ex. Am.]

Enter Amaryllis.

Ama. Shepherd, may I desire to be believ'd,
What I shall blushing tell?

Peri. Fair Maid, you may.

Am. Then softly thus, I love thee, Perigot,
And would be gladder to be lov'd again,
Than the cold Earth is in his frozen arms
To clip the wanton Spring: nay do not start,
Nor wonder that I woo thee, thou that art
The prime of our young Grooms, even the top
Of all our lusty Shepherds! what dull eye
That never was acquainted with desire,
Hath seen thee wrattle, run, or cast the Stone
With nimble strength and fair delivery,
And hath not sparkled fire, and speedily
Sent secret heat to all the neighbouring Veins?
Who ever heard thee sing, that brought again
That freedom back, was lent unto thy Voice;
Then do not blame me (Shepherd) if I be
One to be numbred in this Companie,
Since none that ever saw thee yet, were free.

Peri. Fair Shepherdes, much pity I can lend
To your Complaints: but sure I shall not love:
All that is mine, my self, and my best hopes
Are given already; do not love him then
That cannot love again: on other men
Bestow those heats more free, that may return
You fire for fire, and in one flame equal burn.

Ama. Shall I rewarded be so slenderly
For my affection, most unkind of men!
If I were old, or had agreed with Art
To give another Nature to my Cheeks,
Or were I common Mistresse to the love
Of every Swain, or could I with such ease
Call back my Love, as many a Wanton doth;
Thou might'st refuse me, Shepherd; but to thee
I am only fixt and set, let it not be
A Sport, thou gentle Shepherd to abuse
The love of silly Maid.

Peri. Fair Soul, ye use
These words to little end: for know, I may Better call back that time was Yesterday,
Or stay the coming Night, than bring my Love
Home to my self again, or recreant prove.
I will no longer hold you with delays,
This present night I have appointed been
To meet that chaste Fair (that enjoys my Soul)
In yonder Grove, there to make up our Loves.
Be not deceiv'd no longer, chuse again,
These neighbouring Plains have many a comely Swain,
Fresher, and freer far than I e'r was,
Bestow that love on them, and let me pass.
Farewel, be happy in a better Choice. [Exit.]

Ama. Cruel, thou hast struck me deader with thy Voice
Than if the angry Heavens with their quick flames

Had shot me through: I must not leave to love,
I cannot, no I must enjoy thee, Boy,
Though the great dangers 'twixt my hopes and that
Be infinite: there is a Shepherd dwells
Down by the Moor, whose life hath ever shown
More fullen Discontent than Saturns Brow,
When he sits frowning on the Births of Men:
One that doth wear himself away in loneness;
And never joys unless it be in breaking
The holy plighted troths of mutual Souls:
One that lulls after ever several Beauty,
But never yet was known to love or like,
Were the face fairer, or more full of truth,
Than Phæbe in her fulness, or the youth
Of smooth Lycus; whose nigh starved flocks
Are always scabby, and infect all Sheep
They feed withal; whose Lambs are ever lost,
And dye before their waining, and whose Dog
Looks like his Master, lean, and full of scurf,
Not caring for the Pipe or Whistle: this man may
(If he be well wrought) do a deed of wonder,
Forcing me passage to my long-desires:
And here he comes, as fitly to my purpose,
As my quick thoughts could wish for.

Enter Shepherd.

Shep. Fresh Beauty, let me not be thought uncivil,
Thusto be Partner of your loneness: 'twas
My Love (that ever working passion) drew
Me to this place to seek some remedy
For my sick Soul: be not unkind and fair,
For such the mighty Cupid in his doom
Hath sworn to be aveng'd on, then give room
To my consuming Fires, that so I may Enjoy my long Desires, and so allay
Those flames that else would burn my life away.

Ama. Shepherd, were I but sure thy heart were found
As thy words seem to be, means might be found
To cure thee of thy long pains; for to me
That heavy youth-consuming Miserie
The love-sick Soul endures, never was pleasing;
I could be well content with the quick easing
Of thee, and thy hot fires, might it procure
Thy faith and farther service to be sure.

Shep. Name but that great work, danger, or what can Be compass'd by the Wit or Art of Man,
And if I fail in my performance, may
I never more kneel to the rising Day.

Ama. Then thus I try thee, Shepherd, this same night,
That now comes stealing on, a gentle pair
Have promis'd equal Love, and do appoint
To make yon Wood the place where hands and hearts
Are to be ty'd for ever: break their meeting
And their strong Faith, and I am ever thine.

Shep. Tell me their Names, and if I do not move
(By my great power) the Centre of their Love
From his fixt being, let me never more
Warm me by those fair Eyes I thus adore.

Ama. Come, as we go, I'll tell thee what they are,
And give thee fit directions for thy work. [Exit.]

Enter Cloe.

Cloe. How have I wrong'd the times, or men, that thus
After this holy Feast I pass unknown
And unsaluted? 'twas not wont to be
Thus frozen with the younger companie
Of jolly Shepherds; 'twas not then held good,
For lusty Grooms to mix their quicker blood
With that dull humour, most unfit to be
The friend of man, cold and dull Chastitic.
Sure I am held not fair, or am too old,
Or else not free enough, or from my fold
Drive not a flock sufficient, great to gain

The greedy eyes of wealth-alluring Swain:
Yet if I may believe what others say,
My face has foil enough; nor can they lay
Justly too strict a Coyneſs to my Charge;
My Flocks are many, and the Downs as large
They feed upon: then let it ever be
Their Coldneſs, not my Virgin Modeſtie
Makes me complain.

Enter Thenot.

The. Was ever Man but I
Thus truly taken with uncertainty?
Where ſhall that Man be found that loves a mind
Made up in Conſtancy, and dare not find
His Love rewarded? here let all men know
A Wretch that lives to love his Miſtreſs ſo.

Cl. Shepherd, I pray thee ſtay, where haſt thou been?
Or whither go'ſt thou? here be Woods as green
As any, air likewiſe as freſh and ſweet,
As where ſmooth Zephyrus plays on the fleet
Face of the curled Streams, with Flowers as many
As the young Spring gives, and as choiſe as any;
Here be all new Delights, cool Streams and Wells,
Arbors o'rgrown with Woodbinds, Caves, and Dells,
Chuſe where thou wilt, whiſt I ſit by, and ſing,
Or gather Ruſhes to make many a Ring
For thy long fingers; tell thee tales of Love,
How the pale Phæbe hunting in a Grove,
Fiſt ſaw the Boy Endymion, from whoſe Eyes
She took eternal fire that never dyes;
How ſhe convey'd him ſoftly in a ſleep,
His temples bound with poppy to the ſleep
Head of old Latmus, where ſhe ſtoops each night,
Gilding the Mountain with her Brothers light,
To kiſs her ſweeteſt. The. Far from me are theſe
Hot ſaſhes, bred from wanton heat and eaſe;
I have forgot what love and loving meant:
Rhimes, Songs, and merry Rounds, that oft are ſent
To the ſoft Ears of Maids, are ſtrange to me;
Only I live t' admire a Chaſtitie,
That neither pleaſing Age, ſmooth tongue, or Gold,
Could ever break upon, ſo pure a Mold
Is that her Mind was caſt in; 'tis to her
I only am reſerv'd; ſhe is my form I ſtir
By, breath and move, 'tis ſhe and only ſhe
Can make me happy, or give miſerie.

Cl. Good Shepherd, may a Stranger crave to know
To whom this dear obſervance you do ow?

The. You may, and by her Vertue learn to ſquare
And level out your Life; for to be fair
And nothing vertuous, only fits the Eye
Of gaudy Youth, and ſwelling Vanitie.
Then know, ſhe's call'd the Virgin of the Grove,
She that hath long ſince bury'd her chaſte Love,
And now lives by his Grave, for whoſe dear Soul
She hath vow'd her ſelf into the holy Roll
Of ſtrict Virginity; 'tis her I ſo admire,
Not any looſer Blood, or new deſire.

Cl. Farewel poor Swain, thou art not for my bend,
I muſt have quicker Souls, whoſe works may tend
To ſome free action: give me him dare love
At fiſt encounter, and as ſoon dare prove.

The SONG.

Come Shepherds, come,
Come away without delay
Whiſt the gentle time doſt ſtay.
Green Woods are dumb,
And will never tell to any Thoſe dear Kiſſes, and thoſe many Sweet Embraces that are given
Dainty Pleaſures that would even
Paſe in coldeſt Age a fire,
And give Virgin Blood deſire,

Then if ever,
Now or never,
Come and have it,
Think not I,
Dare deny,
If you crave it.

Enter Daphnis.

Here comes another: better be my ſpeed,
Thou god of Blood: but certain, if I read
Not falſe, this is that modeſt Shepherd, he
That only dare ſalute, but ne'r could be Brought to kiſs any, hold diſcourſe, or ſing,
Whiſper, or boldly ask that wiſhed thing
We all are born for; one that makes loving Faces,
And could be well content to covet Graces,
Were they not got by boldneſs; in this thing
My hopes are frozen; and but Fate doth bring Him hither, I would ſooner chuſe
A Man made out of Snow, and freer uſe
An Eunuch to my ends: but ſince he's here,
Thus I attempt him. Thou of men moſt dear,
Welcome to her, that only for thy ſake,
Hath been content to live: here boldly take
My hand in pledg, this hand, that never yet
Was given away to any: and but ſit
Down on this ruſhy Bank, whiſt I go pull
Freſh Bloſſoms from the Boughs, or quickly cull
The choiceſt delicates from yonder Mead,
To make thee Chains, or Chaplets, or to ſpread
Under our fainting Bodies, when delight
Shall lock up all our ſenſes. How the ſight
Of thoſe ſmooth riſing Cheeks renew the ſtory
Of young Adonis, when in Pride and Glory
He lay infolded 'twixt the beating arms
Of willing Venus: methinks ſtronger Charms
Dwell in thoſe ſpeaking eyes, and on that brow
More ſweetneſs than the Painters can allow
To their beſt pieces: not Narciffus, he
That wept himſelf away in memorie
Of his own Beauty, nor Silvanus Boy,
Nor the twice raviſh'd Maid, for whom old Troy
Fell by the hand of Pirrhus, may to thee
Be otherwiſe compar'd, than ſome dead Tree
To a young fruitful Olive. Daph. I can love,
But I am loth to ſay ſo, leſt I prove Too ſoon unhappy.

Cl. Happy thou would'ſt ſay,
My deareſt Daphnis, bluſh not, if the day
To thee and thy ſoft heats be enemy,
Then take the coming Night, fair youth 'tis free
To all the World, Shepherd, I'll meet thee then
When darkneſs hath ſhut up the eyes of men,
In yonder Grove: ſpeak, ſhall our Meeting hold?
Indeed you are too baſhful, be more bold,
And tell me I. Daph. I'm content to ſay ſo,
And would be glad to meet, might I but pray ſo
Much from your Fairneſs, that you would be true.

Cl. Shepherd, thou haſt thy Wiſh.

Daph. Freſh Maid, adieu:

Yet one word more, ſince you have drawn me on
To come this Night, fear not to meet alone
That man that will not offer to be ill,
Though your bright ſelf would ask it, for his fill
Of this Worlds goodneſs: do not fear him then,
But keep your 'pointed time; let other men
Set up their Bloods to ſale, mine ſhall be ever
Fair as the Soul it carries, and unchaſt never. [Exit.

Cl. Yet am I poorer than I was before.
Is it not ſtrange, among ſo many a ſcore
Of luſty Bloods, I ſhould pick out theſe things
Whoſe Veins like a dull River far from Springs,
Is ſtill the ſame, ſlow, heavy, and unfit

For stream or motion, though the strong winds hit
With their continual power upon his sides?
O happy be your names that have been brides,
And tasted those rare sweets for which I pine:
And far more heavy be thy grief and time,
Thou lazie swain, that maist relieve my needs,
Than his, upon whose liver alwayes feeds
A hungry vultur.

Enter Alexis.

Alex. Can such beauty be Safe in his own guard, and not draw the eye
Of him that passeth on, to greedy gaze,
Or covetous desire, whilst in a maze
The better part contemplates, giving rein
And wished freedom to the labouring vein?
Fairest and whitest, may I crave to know
The cause of your retirement, why ye goe
Thus all alone? methinks the downs are sweeter,
And the young company of swains far meeter,
Than those forsaken and untroden places.
Give not your self to loneness, and those graces
Hid from the eyes of men, that were intended
To live amongst us swains.

Cloe. Thou art befriended,
Shepherd, in all my life I have not seen
A man in whom greater contents have been
Than thou thy self art: I could tell thee more,
Were there but any hope left to restore
My freedom lost. O lend me all thy red,
Thou shamefast morning, when from Tithons bed
Thou risest ever maiden.

Alex. If for me,
Thou sweetest of all sweets, these flashes be,
Speak and be satisfied. O guide her tongue,
My better angel; force my name among
Her modest thoughts, that the first word may be —

Cloe. Alexis, when the sun shall kiss the Sea,
Taking his rest by the white Thetis side,
Meet in the holy wood, where I'll abide Thy coming, Shepherd.

Alex. If I stay behind,
An everlasting dulness, and the wind,
That as he passeth by shuts up the stream
Of Rhine or Volga, whilst the suns hot beam
Beats back again, seise me, and let me turn
To coldness more than ice: oh how I burn
And rise in youth and fire! I dare not stay.

Cloe. My name shall be your word.

Alex. Fly, fly thou day.

[Exit.]

Cloe. My grief is great if both these boyes should fail:
He that will use all winds must shift his sail.

[Exit.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter an old Shepherd, with a bell ringing, and the Priest of Pan following.

Priest. Shepherds all, and maidens fair,
Fold your flocks up, for the Air
Gins to thicken, and the sun
Already his great course hath run.
See the dew-drops how they kiss
Every little flower that is:
Hanging on their velvet heads,
Like a rope of crystal beads.
See the heavy clouds low falling,
And bright Hesperus down calling
The dead night from under ground,
At whose rising mists unbound,
Damps, and vapours fly apace,
Hovering o're the wanton face

Of these pastures, where they come,
Striking dead both bud and bloom;
Therefore from such danger lock
Every one his loved flock,
And let your Dogs lye loose without,
Lest the Wolf come as a scout
From the mountain, and e're day
Bear a Lamb or kid away,
Or the crafty theevish Fox,
Break upon your simple flocks:
To secure your selves from these,
Be not too secure in ease;
Let one eye his watches keep,
Whilst the t'other eye doth sleep;
So you shall good Shepherds prove,
And for ever hold the love
Of our great god. Sweetest slumbers
And soft silence fall in numbers
On your eye-lids: so farewell,
Thus I end my evenings knel.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Clorin, the Shepherdess, sorting of herbs, and telling the natures of them.

Clor. Now let me know what my best Art hath done,
Helpt by the great power of the vertuous moon
In her full light; O you sons of Earth,
You only brood, unto whose happy birth
Vertue was given, holding more of nature
Than man her first born and most perfect creature,
Let me adore you; you that only can
Help or kill nature, drawing out that span
Of life and breath even to the end of time;
You that these hands did crop, long before prime
Of day; give me your names, and next your hidden power.
This is the Clothe bearing a yellow flower,
And this black Horehound, both are very good
For sheep or Shepherd, bitten by a wood-
Dogs venom'd tooth; these Ranunculus branches are,
Which stuck in entries, or about the bar
That holds the door fast, kill all enchantments, charms,
Were they Medeus verses that doe harms
To men or cattel; these for frenzy be
A speedy and a soveraign remedie,
The bitter Wormwood, Sage, and Marigold,
Such sympathy with mans good they do hold;
This Tormentil, whose vertue is to part
All deadly killing poyson from the heart;
And here Narcissus roots for swellings be:
Yellow Lysimachus, to give sweet rest
To the faint Shepherd, killing where it comes
All busie gnats, and every fly that hums:
For leprose, Darnel, and Sellondine,
With Calamint, whose vertues do refine
The blood of man, making it free and fair
As the first hour it breath'd, or the best air.
Here other two, but your rebellious use
Is not for me, whose goodness is abuse;
Therefore foul Standergrafs, from me and mine
I banish thee, with lustful Turpentine,
You that intice the veins and stir the heat
To civil mutiny, scaling the seat
Our reason moves in, and deluding it
With dreams and wanton fancies, till the fit
Of burning lust be quencht; by appetite,
Robbing the soul of blessedness and light:
And thou light Varvin too, thou must go after,
Provoking easie souls to mirth and laughter;
No more shall I dip thee in water now,
And sprinkle every post, and every bough
With thy well pleasing juyce, to make the grooms
Swell with high mirth, as with joy all the rooms.

Enter Thenot.

The. This is the Cabin where the best of all

F f

Her

Her Sex, that ever breath'd, or ever shall Give heat or happiness to the Shepherds side,
Doth only to her worthy self abide.
Thou blessed star, I thank thee for thy light,
Thou by whose power the darkness of sad night
Is banisht from the Earth, in whose dull place
Thy chaster beams play on the heavy face
Of all the world, making the blue Sea smile,
To see how cunningly thou dost beguile
Thy Brother of his brightness, giving day
Again from Chaos, whiter than that way
That leads to Joves high Court, and chaster far
Than chastity it self, yon blessed star
That nightly shines: Thou, all the constancie
That in all women was, or e're shall be,
From whose fair eye-balls flies that holy fire,
That Poets stile the Mother of desire,
Infusing into every gentle brest
A soul of greater price, and far more blest
Than that quick power, which gives a difference,
'Twixt man and creatures of a lower sense.

Clor. Shepherd, how cam'st thou hither to this place?

No way is troden, all the verdant grass
The spring shot up, stands yet unbruised here
Of any foot, only the dappled Deer
Far from the feared sound of crooked horn
Dwels in this fastness. Th. Chaster than the morn,
I have not wandred, or by strong illusion
Into this vertuous place have made intrusion:
But hither am I come (believe me fair)
To seek you out, of whose great good the air
Is full, and strongly labours, whilst the sound
Breaks against Heaven, and drives into a sound
The amazed Shepherd, that such vertue can
Be resident in lesser than a man.

Clor. If any art I have, or hidden skill
May cure thee of disease or festred ill,
Whose grief or greenness to anothers eye
May seem unpossible of remedy,
I dare yet undertake it.

The. 'Tis no pain
I suffer through disease, no beating vein
Conveyes infection dangerous to the heart,
No part impostum'd to be cur'd by Art,
This body holds; and yet a feller grief
Than ever skilfull hand did give relief
Dwells on my soul, and may be heal'd by you,
Fair beauteous Virgin.

Clor. Then Shepherd, let me sue
To know thy grief; that man yet never knew
The way to health, that durst not shew his fore.

Then. Then fairest, know, I love you.

Clor. Swain, no more,
Thou hast abus'd the strictness of this place,
And offred Sacrilegious foul disgrace
To the sweet rest of these interred bones,
For fear of whose ascending, fly at once,
Thou and thy idle passions, that the sight
Of death and speedy vengeance may not fright
Thy very soul with horror.

Then. Let me not
(Thou all perfection) merit such a blot
For my true zealous faith.

Clor. Dar'st thou abide
To see this holy Earth at once divide
And give her body up? for sure it will,
If thou pursu'st with wanton flames to fill
This hallowed place; therefore repent and goe,
Whilst I with praise appease his Ghost below,
That else would tell thee what it were to be
A rival in that vertuous love that he Imbraces yet.

Then. 'Tis not the white or red
Inhabits in your cheek that thus can wed

My mind to adoration; nor your eye,
Though it be full and fair, your forehead high,
And smooth as Pelops shoulder; not the smile
Lies watching in those dimples to beguile
The easie soul, your hands and fingers long
With veins inamel'd richly, nor your tongue,
Though it spoke sweeter than Arions Harp,
Your hair wove into many a curious warp,
Able in endless error to infold
The wandring soul, nor the true perfect mould
Of all your body, which as pure doth show
In Maiden whiteness as the Alpsian snow.
All these, were but your constancie away,
Would please me less than a black stormy day
The wretched Seaman toying through the deep.
But whilst this honour'd strictness you dare keep,
Though all the plagues that e're begotten were
In the great womb of air, were settled here,
In opposition, I would, like the tree,
Shake off those drops of weakness, and be free
Even in the arm of danger.

Clor. Wouldst thou have

Me raise again (fond man) from silent grave,
Those sparks that long agoe were buried here,
With my dead friends cold ashes?

Then. Dearest dear,
I dare not ask it, nor you must not grant;
Stand strongly to your vow, and do not faint:
Remember how he lov'd ye, and be still
The same Opinion speaks ye; let not will,
And that great god of women, appetite,
Set up your blood again; do not invite
Desire and fancie from their long exile,
To set them once more in a pleasing smile:
Be like a rock made firmly up 'gainst all
The power of angry Heaven, or the strong fall
Of Neptunes battery; if ye yield, I die
To all affection; 'tis that loyaltie
Ye tie unto this grave I so admire;
And yet there's something else I would desire,
If you would hear me, but withall deny.
O Pan, what an uncertain destiny
Hangs over all my hopes! I will retire,
For if I longer stay, this double fire
Will lick my life up.

Clor. Doe, let time wear out
What Art and Nature cannot bring about.

Then. Farewel thou soul of vertue, and be blest
For ever, whilst that here I wretched rest
Thus to my self; yet grant me leave to dwell
In kenning of this Arbor; yon fame dell
O'retopt with morning Cypress and sad Yew
Shall be my Cabin, where I'le early rewe,
Before the Sun hath kist this dew away,
The hard uncertain chance which Fate doth lay
Upon this head.

Clor. The gods give quick release
And happy cure unto thy hard disease.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Sullen Shepherd.

Sullen. I do not love this wench that I should meet,
For ne'r did my unconstant eye yet greet
That beauty, were it sweeter or more fair,
Than the new blossoms, when the morning air
Blows gently on them, or the breaking light,
When many maiden blushes to our sight
Shoot from his early face: were all these set
In some neat form before me, 'twould not get
The least love from me; some desire it might,
Or present burning: all to me in sight
Are equal, be they fair, or black, or brown,
Virgin, or careless wanton, I can crown
My appetite with any; swear as oft
And weep, as any, melt my words as soft

Into

Into a maiden ears, and tell how long
My heart has been her servant, and how strong
My passions are: call her unkind and cruel,
Offer her all I have to gain the Jewel
Maidens so highly prize: then loath, and fly:
This do I hold a blissed destiny.

Enter Amaryllis.

Amar. Hail Shepherd, Pan blest both thy flock and thee,
For being mindful of thy word to me.

Sul. Welcom fair Shepherdess, thy loving swain
Gives thee the self same wishes back again,
Who till this present hour ne're knew that eye,
Could make me cross mine arms, or daily dye
With fresh consumings: boldly tell me then,
How shall we part their faithful loves, and when?
Shall I bely him to her, shall I swear
His faith is false, and he loves every where?
I'll say he mockt her th' other day to you,
Which will by your confirming shew as true,
For he is of so pure an honesty,
To think (because he will not) none will lye:
Or else to him I'll slander Amoret,
And say, she but seems chaste; I'll swear she met
Me'mongst the shady Sycamores last night
And loosely offed up her flame and spright
Into my bosom, made a wanton bed
Of leaves and many flowers, where she spread
Her willing body to be prest by me;
There have I carv'd her name on many a tree,
Together with mine own; to make this show
More full of seeming, Hobinall you know,
Son to the aged Shepherd of the glen,
Him I have sorted out of many men,
To say he found us at our private sport,
And rouz'd us 'fore our time by his resort:
This to confirm, I have promis'd to the boy
Many a pretty knack, and many a toy,
As gins to catch him birds, with bow and bolt,
To hoot at nimble Squirrels in the holt;
A pair of painted Buskins, and a Lamb,
Soft as his own locks, or the down of swan;
This I have done to win ye, which doth give Me double pleasure. Discord makes me live.

Amar. Lov'd swain, I thank ye, these tricks might prevail
With other rustick Shepherds, but will fail
Even once to stir, much more to overthrow
His fixed love from judgement, who doth know
Your nature, my end, and his chofens merit;
Therefore some stranger way must force his spirit,
Which I have found: give second, and my love
Is everlasting thine.

Sul. Try me and prove.

Amar. These happy pair of lovers meet straightway,
Soon as they fold their flocks up with the day,
In the thick grove bordering upon yon Hill,
In whose hard side Nature hath carv'd a well,
And but that matchless spring which Poets know,
Was ne're the like to this: by it doth grow
About the sides, all herbs which Witches use,
All simples good for Medicine or abuse,
All sweets that crown the happy Nuptial day,
With all their colours, there the month of May
Is ever dwelling, all is young and green,
There's not a grass on which was ever seen
The falling Autumn; or cold Winters hand,
So full of heat and vertue is the land,
About this fountain, which doth slowly break
Below yon Mountains foot, into a Creek
That waters all the vally, giving Fish
Of many sorts, to fill the Shepherds dish.
This holy well, my grandam that is dead,
Right wife in charms, hath often to me said,
Hath power to change the form of any creature,

Being thrice dipt o're the head, into what feature,
Or shape 'twould please the letter down to crave,
Who must pronounce this charm too, which she gave Me on her death-bed; told me what, and how,
I should apply unto the Patients brow,
That would be chang'd, casting them thrice asleep,
Before I trusted them into this deep.

All this she shew'd me, and did charge me prove
This secret of her Art, if crost in love.

I'lle this attempt; now Shepherd, I have here
All her prescriptions, and I will not fear
To be my self dipt: come, my temples bind
With these sad herbs, and when I sleep you find,
As you do speak your charm, thrice down me let,
And bid the water raise me Amoret;
Which being done, leave me to my affair,
And e're the day shall quite it self out-wear,
I will return unto my Shepherds arm,
Dip me again, and then repeat this charm,
And pluck me up my self, whom freely take,
And the hottest fire of thine affection slake.

Sul. And if I fit thee not, then fit not me:
I long the truth of this wells power to see.

[Exeunt.

Enter Daphnis.

Daph. Here will I stay, for this the covert is Where I appointed Cloe; do not mis,
Thou bright-ey'd virgin, come, O come my fair,
Be not abus'd with fear, nor let cold care
Of honour stay thee from the Shepherds arm,
Who would as hard be won to offer harm
To thy chaste thoughts, as whiteness from the day;
Or yon great round to move another way.
My language shall be honest, full of truth,
My flames as smooth and spotless as my youth:
I will not entertain that wandring thought,
Whose easie current may at length be brought
To a loose vastness. Alexis within. Cloe!

Daph. 'Tis her voyce,
And I must answer, Cloe! Oh the choice
Of dear embraces, chaste and holy strains
Our hands shall give! I charge you all my veins
Through which the blood and spirit take their way,
Lock up your disobedient heats, and stay
Those mutinous desires that else would grow
To strong rebellion: do not wilder show
Than blushing modesty may entertain,

Alexis within. Cloe!

Daph. There sounds that blessed name again,

Enter Alexis.

And I will meet it: let me not mistake,
This is some Shepherd! sure I am awake;
What may this riddle mean? I will retire,
To give my self more knowledg.

Alex. Oh my fire,
How thou consum'st me? Cloe, answer me,
Alexis, strong Alexis, high and free,
Calls upon Cloe. See mine arms are full
Of entertainment, ready for to pull
That golden fruit which too too long hath hung
Tempting the greedy eye: thou stayest too long,
I am impatient of these mad delays;
I must not leave unfought these many ways
That lead into this center, till I find
Quench for my burning lust. I come, unkind.

[Exit Alexis.

Daph. Can my imagination work me so much ill,
That I may credit this for truth, and still Believe mine eyes? or shall I firmly hold
Her yet untainted, and these sights but bold
Illusion? Sure such fancies oft have been Sent to abuse true love, and yet are seen,

Daring to blind the vertuous thought with errour.
But be they far from me with their fond terrour:
I am resolv'd my Cloe yet is true. [Cloe within.

Cloe, hark, Cloe: Sure this voyce is new,
Whose shrillness like the sounding of a Bell,
Tells me it is a Woman: Cloe, tell
Thy blessed name again. Cloe. [within] Here.
Oh what a grief is this to be so near,
And not incounter?

Enter Cloe.

Co. Shepherd, we are met,
Draw close into the covert, lest the wet
Which falls like lazy mists upon the ground
Soke through your Startups. Daph. Fairest are you found?
How have we wandred, that the better part
Of this good night is perisht? Oh my heart!
How have I long'd to meet ye, how to kifs
Those lilly hands, how to receive the blifs
That charming tongue gives to the happy ear
Of him that drinks your language! but I fear
I am too much unmanner'd, far too rude,
And almost grown lascivious to intrude
These hot behaviours; where regard of fame,
Honour, and modesty, a vertuous name,
And such discourse as one fair Sister may
Without offence unto the Brother say,
Should rather have been tendred: but believe,
Here dwells a better temper; do not grieve
Then, ever kindest, that my first salute
Seasons so much of fancy, I am mute
Henceforth to all discourses, but shall be
Suiting to your sweet thoughts and modestie.
Indeed I will not ask a kifs of you,
No not to wring your fingers, nor to sue
To those blest pair of fixed stars for smiles,
All a young lovers cunning, all his wiles,
And pretty wanton dyings, shall to me
Be strangers; only to your chastitie
I am devoted ever. Co. Honest Swain,
First let me thank you, then return again
As much of my love: no thou art too cold,
Unhappy Boy, not tempred to my mold,
Thy blood falls heavy downward, 'tis not fear
To offend in boldness wins, they never wear
Deserved favours that deny to take
When they are offered freely: Do I wake
To see a man of his youth, years and feature,
And such a one as we call goodly creature,
Thus backward? What a world of precious Art
Were meerly lost, to make him do his part?
But I will shake him off, that dares not hold,
Let men that hope to be belov'd be bold.
Daphnis, I do desire, since we are met
So happily, our lives and fortunes set
Upon one stake, to give assurance now,
By interchange of hands and holy vow,
Never to break again: walk you that way
Whilest I in zealous meditation stray
A little this way: when we both have ended
These rites and duties, by the woods befriended,
And secrecie of night, retire and find
An aged Oak, whose hollownes may bind
Us both within his body, thither go,
It stands within yon bottom. Daph. Be it so. [Ex. Daph.
Co. And I will meet there never more with thee,
Thou idle shamefastness. Alex. [within] Cloe! Co. 'Tis he
That dare I hope be bolder. Alex. Cloe! Co. Now
Great Pan for Syrinx sake bid speed our Plow. [Exit Cloe.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Sullen Shepherd with Amaryllis in a sleep.

Sull. FROM thy forehead thus I take These herbs, and charge thee not awake
Till in yonder holy Well,
Thrice with powerful Magick spell,
Fill'd with many a baleful word,
Thou hast been dipt; thus with my cord
Of blasted Hemp, by Moon-light twin'd,
I do thy sleepey body bind;
I turn thy head into the East,
And thy feet into the West,
Thy left arm to the South put forth,
And thy right unto the North:
I take thy body from the ground,
In this deep and deadly sfound,
And into this holy spring
I let thee slide down by my string.
Take this Maid thou holy pit,
To thy bottom, nearer yet,
In thy water pure and sweet,
By thy leave I dip her feet;
Thus I let her lower yet,
That her ankles may be wet;
Yet down lower, let her knee
In thy waters washed be;
There stop: Fly away
Every thing that loves the day.
Truth that hath but one face,
Thus I charm thee from this place.
Snakes that cast your coats for new,
Camelions that alter hue,
Hares that yearly Sexes change,
Proteus alt'ring oft and strange,
Hecate with shapes three,
Let this Maiden changed be,
With this holy water wet,
To the shape of Amoret:
Cynthia work thou with my charm,
Thus I draw thee free from harm
Up out of this blessed Lake,
Rise both like her and awake. [She awakes.
Amar. Speak Shepherd, am I Amoret to fight?
Or hast thou mist in any Magick rite;
For want of which any defect in me,
May make our practices discovered be?
Sul. By yonder Moon, but that I here do stand,
Whose breath hath thus transform'd thee, and whose hand
Let thee down dry, and pluckt thee up thus wet,
I should my self take thee for Amoret;
Thou art in cloths, in feature, voice and hew
So like, that sense cannot distinguish you.
Amar. Then this deceit which cannot crossed be,
At once shall lose her him, and gain thee me.
Hither she needs must come by promise made,
And sure his nature never was so bad,
To bid a Virgin meet him in the wood,
When night and fear are up, but understood,
'Twas his part to come first: being come, I'll say,
My constant love made me come first and stay,
Then will I lead him further to the grove,
But stay you here, and if his own true love
Shall seek him here, set her in some wrong path,
Which say, her lover lately troden hath;
I'll not be far from hence, if need there be,
Here is another charm, whose power will free
The dazeled sense, read by the Moons beams clear,
And in my own true map make me appear.

Enter

Enter Perigot.

Sull. Stand close, here's Perigot, whose constant heart
Longs to behold her in whose shape thou art.

Per. This is the place (fair Amoret) the hour
Is yet scarce come: Here every Sylvan power
Delights to be about yon sacred Well,
Which they have blest with many a powerful Spell;
For never Traveller in dead of Night,
Nor strayed Beasts have fallen in, but when sight
Hath fail'd them, then their right way they have found
By help of them, so holy is the ground:
But I will farther seek, lest Amoret
Should be first come, and so stray long unmet.

My Amoret, Amoret. [Ex. Amaryllis, Perigot.

Per. My Love.

Amar. I come my Love.

[Exit.

Sull. Now she has got
Her own desires, and I shall gainer be
Of my long lookt for hopes as well as she.
How bright the moon shines here, as if she strove
To show her Glory in this little Grove,

Enter Amoret.

To some new loved Shepherd. Yonder is Another Amoret. Where differs this
From that? but that she Perigot hath met,
I should have ta'n this for the counterfeit:
Herbs, Woods, and Springs, the power that in you lies,
If mortal men could know your Properties!

Amo. Methinks it is not Night, I have no fear,
Walking this Wood, of Lions, or the Bear,
Whose Names at other times have made me quake,
When any Shepherdess in her tale spake
Of some of them, that underneath a Wood
Have torn true Lovers that together stood.
Methinks there are no Goblins, and mens talk,
That in these Woods the nimble Fairies walk,
Are fables; such a strong heart I have got,
Because I come to meet with Perigot.

My Perigot! who's that, my Perigot?

Sull. Fair maid. Amo. Ay me, thou art not Perigot.

Sull. But I can tell ye news of Perigot:
An hour together under yonder tree
He sat with wreathed arms and call'd on thee,
And said, why Amoret stayest thou so long?
Then starting up, down yonder path he flung,
Lest thou hadst mis'd thy way: were it day light,
He could not yet have born him out of sight.

Amar. Thanks, gentle Shepherd, and beshrew my stay,
That made me fearful I had lost my way;
As fast as my weak Legs (that cannot be Weary with seeking him) will carry me,
I'll seek him out; and for thy Courtesie
Pray Pan thy Love may ever follow thee.

[Exit.

Sull. How bright she was, how lovely did she show!
Was it not pity to deceive her so?

She pluckt her Garments up, and tript away,
And with her Virgin-innocence did pray
For me that perjurd her. Whilst she was here,
Methought the Beams of Light that did appear
Were shot from her; methought the Moon gave none,
But what it had from her: she was alone
With me, if then her presence did so move,
Why did not I essay to win her Love?
She would not sure have yielded unto me;
Women love only Opportunitie,
And not the Man; or if she had deny'd,
Alone, I might have forc'd her to have try'd
Who had been stronger: O vain Fool, to let Such blest Occasion pass; I'll follow yet,
My Blood is up, I cannot now forbear.

Enter Alex. and Cloe.

I come sweet Amoret: Soft who is here?

A pair of Lovers? He shall yield her me;
Now Lust is up, alike all Women be.

Alex. Where shall we rest? but for the love of me,
Cloe, I know ere this would weary be.

Clo. Alexis, let us rest here, if the place
Be private, and out of the common trace
Of every Shepherd: for I understood
This Night a number are about the Wood:
Then let us chuse some place, where out of sight
We freely may enjoy our stoln delight.

Alex. Then boldly here, where we shall ne're be found,
No Shepherds way lies here, 'tis hallow'd ground:
No Maid seeks here her strayed Cow, or Sheep,
Fairies, and Fawns, and Satyrs do it keep:
Then carelessly rest here, and clip and kiss,
And let no fear make us our pleasures miss.

Clo. Then lye by me, the sooner we begin,
The longer ere the day descry our sin.

Sull. Forbear to touch my Love, or by yon flame,
The greatest power that Shepherds dare to name,
Here where thou sit'st under this holy tree
Her to dishonour, thou shalt buried be.

Alex. If Pan himself, should come out of the lawns,
With all his Troops of Satyrs and of Fawns,
And bid me leave, I swear by her two eyes,
A greater Oath than thine, I would not rise.

Sull. Then from the cold Earth never shalt thou move,
But lose at one stroke both thy Life and Love.

Clo. Hold gentle Shepherd. Sull. Fairest Shepherdess,
Come you with me, I do not love you less
Than that fond man, that would have kept you there
From me of more desert. Alex. O yet forbear
To take her from me; give me leave to dye
By her.

[The Satyr enters, he runs one way, and she another.

Sat. Now whilst the Moon doth rule the Skie,
And the Stars, whose feeble light
Give a pale Shadow to the night,
Are up, great Pan commanded me
To walk this Grove about, whilst he
In a corner of the Wood,
Where never mortal foot hath stood;
Keeps dancing, musick, and a feast
To entertain a lovely Guest,
Where he gives her many a Rose,
Sweeter than the breath that blows
The leaves; Grapes, Berries of the best,
I never saw so great a feast.
But to my Charge: here must I stay,
To see what mortals lose their way,
And by a false fire seeming bright,
Train them in and leave them right:
Then must I watch if any be Forcing of a Chastitie:

If I find it, then in haste
Give my wreathed horn a Blast,
And the Fairies all will run,
Wildly dancing by the Moon,
And will pinch him to the bone,
Till his lustful thoughts be gone.

Alex. O Death! Sat. Back again about this ground,
Sure I hear a mortal sound;
I bind thee by this powerful Spell,
By the Waters of this Well,
By the glimmering Moon beams bright,
Speak again, thou mortal wight.

Alex. Oh! Sat. Here the foolish mortal lies,
Sleeping on the ground: arise.
The poor wight is almost dead,
On the ground his wounds have bled,
And his cloaths foul'd with his blood:
To my Goddess in the Wood
Will I lead him, whose hands pure,
Will help this mortal wight to cure.

Enter

Enter Cloe again.

Clo. Since I beheld yon shaggy man, my Breast
Doth pant, each bush, methinks, should hide a Beast :
Yet my desire keeps still above my fear,
I would fain meet some Shepherd, knew I where :
For from one cause of fear I am most free,
It is impossible to ravill me,
I am so willing. Here upon this ground
I left my Love all bloody with his wound ;
Yet till that fearful shape made me be gone,
Though he were hurt, I furnisht was of one,
But now both lost. Alexis, speak or move,
If thou hast any life, thou art yet my Love.
He's dead, or else is with his little might Crept from the Bank for fear of that ill Spright.
Then where art thou that struck'st my love ? O stay,
Bring me thy self in change; and then I'll say
Thou hast some justice, I will make thee trim
With Flowers and Garlands that were meant for him ;
I'll clip thee round with both mine arms, as fast
As I did mean he should have been embrac'd :
But thou art fled. What hope is left for me ?
I'll run to Daphnis in the hollow tree,
Whom I did mean to mock, though hope be small,
To make him bold ; rather than none at all,
I'll try him ; his heart, and my behaviour too
Perhaps may teach him what he ought to do. [Exit.

Enter Sullen Shepherd.

Sul. This was the place, 'twas but my feeble sight,
Mixt with the horror of my deed, and night,
That shap't these fears, and made me run away,
And lose my beauteous hardly gotten prey.
Speak gentle Shepherdess, I am alone,
And tender love for love : but she is gone
From me, that having struck her Lover dead,
For silly fear left her alone and fled.
And see the wounded body is remov'd
By her of whom it was so well below'd.

Enter Perigot and Amaryllis in the shape of Amoret.

But these fancies must be quite forgot,
I must lye close. Here comes young Perigot
With subtle Amaryllis in the shape
Of Amoret. Pray Love he may not 'scape.
Amar. Beloved Perigot, shew me some place,
Where I may rest my limbs, weak with the Chace
Of thee, an hour before thou cam'st at least.
Per. Beshrew my tardy steps: here shalt thou rest
Upon this holy bank, no deadly Snake
Upon this turf her self in folds doth make.
Here is no poyson for the Toad to feed ;
Here boldly spread thy hands, no venom'd Weed
Dares blister them, no slimy Snail dare creep
Over thy face when thou art fast asleep,
Here never durst the babling Cuckow spit,
No slough of falling Star did ever hit
Upon this bank: let this thy Cabin be,
This other set with Violets for me.

Ama. Thou dost not love me Perigot. Per. Fair maid,
You only love to hear it often said ;
You do not doubt. Amar. Believe me but I do.

Per. What shall we now begin again to woo ?
'Tis the best way to make your Lover last,
To play with him, when you have caught him fast.

Amar. By Pan I swear, I loved Perigot,
And by yon Moon, I think thou lov'st me not.

Per. By Pan I swear, and if I falsely swear,
Let him not guard my flocks, let Foxes tear
My earliest Lambs, and Wolves whilst I do sleep
Fall on the rest, a Rot among my Sheep.
I love thee better than the careful Ewe

The new-yea'd Lamb that is of her own hew ;
I dote upon thee more than the young Lamb
Doth on the bag that feeds him from his Dam.
Were there a sort of Wolves got in my Fold,
And one ran after thee, both young and old
Should be devour'd, and it should be my strife
To save thee, whom I love above my life.

Ama. How shall I trust thee when I see thee chuse
Another Bed, and dost my side refuse ?

Per. 'Twas only that the chaste thoughts might be shewn
'Twixt thee and me, although we were alone,

Ama. Come, Perigot will shew his power, that he Can make his Amoret, though she weary be,
Rise nimble from her Couch, and come to his.

Here take thy Amoret, embrace and kiss. (shou'd,

Per. What means my Love ? Ama. To do as lovers
That are to be enjoy'd, not to be woo'd.

There's ne'r a Shepherdess in all the plain
Can kiss thee with more Art, there's none can feign
More wanton tricks. Per. Forbear, dear Soul, to trie
Whether my Heart be pure ; I'll rather die
Than nourish one thought to dishonour thee.

Amar. Still think'st thou such a thing as Chastitie
Is amongst Women ? Perigot there's none,

That with her Love is in a Wood alone,
And would come home a maid ; be not abus'd
With thy fond first Belief, let time be us'd :

Why dost thou rise ? Per. My true heart thou hast slain.

Ama. Faith Perigot, I'll pluck thee down again.

Per. Let go, thou Serpent, that into my brest
Hast with thy cunning div'd ; art not in Jest ?

Ama. Sweet love, lye down. Per. Since this I live to see,
Some bitter North-wind blast my flocks and me.

Ama. You swore you lov'd, yet will not do my will.

Per. O be as thou wert once, I'll love thee still.

Ama. I am, as still I was, and all my kind,
Though other shows we have poor men to blind.

Per. Then here I end all Love, and lest my vain
Belief should ever draw me in again,
Before thy face that hast my Youth misled,
I end my life, my blood be on thy head.

Ama. O hold thy hands, thy Amoret doth cry.

Per. Thou counsel'st well, first Amoret shall dye,
That is the cause of my eternal smart. [He runs after her.

Ama. O hold. Per. This steel shall pierce thy lustful heart.
[The Sullen Shepherd steps out and uncharms her.

Sul. Up and down every where,
I strew the herbs to purge the air :
Let your Odour drive hence
All mists that dazel sense.
Herbs and Springs whose hidden might Alters Shapes, and mocks the sight,
Thus I charge you to undo
All before I brought ye to :
Let her flye, let her 'scape,
Give again her own shape.

Enter Amaryllis in her own shape.

Amar. Forbear thou gentle Swain, thou dost mistake,
She whom thou follow'dst fled into the brake,
And as I crost thy way, I met thy wrath,
The only fear of which near slain me hath.

Per. Pardon fair Shepherdess, my rage and night
Were both upon me, and beguil'd my sight ;
But far be it from me to spill the blood
Of harmless Maids that wander in the Wood. Ex. Ama.

Enter Amoret.

Amor. Many a weary step in yonder path
Poor hopeles Amoret twice trodden hath
To seek her Perigot, yet cannot hear
His Voice ; my Perigot, she loves thee dear
That calls. Per. See yonder where she is, how fair
She shows, and yet her breath infects the air.

Ama.

Amo. My Perigot. Per. Here.
Amo. Happy. Per. Haplefs first:
 It lights on thee, the next blow is the worft.

Amo. Stay Perigot, my love, thou art unjust.
Peri. Death is the beft reward that's due to luft.

[Exit Perigot.]

Sul. Now fhall their love be croft, for being ftuck,
 I'll throw her in the Fount, left being took
 By fome night-travaller, whofe honeft care
 May help to cure her. Shepherdes prepare
 Your felf to die.

Amo. No Mercy I do crave,
 Thou canft not give a worfe blow than I have;
 Tell him that gave me this, who lov'd him too,
 He ftuck my foul, and not my body through,
 Tell him when I am dead, my foul fhall be
 At peace, if he but think he injur'd me.

Sul. In this Fount be thy grave, thou wert not meant
 Sure for a woman, thou art fo innocent.
 She cannot fcape, for underneath the ground, ^{flings her in-}
 In a long hollow the clear fpring is bound, _{to the well.}
 Till on yon fide where the Morns Sun doth look,
 The ftugling water breaks out in a Brook. [Exit.]

[The God of the River rifeth with Amoret in his arms.]

God. What powerfull charms my ftreams do bring Back again unto their fpring,

With fuch force, that I their god,
 Three times ftriking with my Rod,
 Could not keep them in their ranks:
 My Fifhes fhoot into the banks,
 There's not one that ftayes and feeds,
 All have hid them in the weeds.
 Here's a mortal almoft dead,
 Faln into my River head,
 Hallowed fo with many a fpell,
 That till now none ever fell.

'Tis a Female young and clear,
 Caft in by fome Ravifher.
 See upon her breaft a wound,
 On which there is no plaifter bound.
 Yet ſhe's warm, her pulfes beat,
 'Tis a fign of life and heat.
 If thou be'ft a Virgin pure,
 I can give a prefent cure:
 Take a drop into thy wound
 From my watry locks more round
 Than Orient Pearl, and far more pure
 Than unchaft flefh may endure.
 See ſhe pants, and from her flefh
 The warm blood guffeth out afrefh.
 She is an unpolluted maid;
 I muft have this bleeding ftaid.
 From my banks I pluck this flower
 With holy hand, whofe vertuous power
 Is at once to heal and draw.
 The blood returns. I never ſaw
 A fairer Mortal. Now doth break
 Her deadly flumber: Virgin, ſpeak.

Amo. Who hath reftor'd my fenfe, given me new breath,
 And brought me back out of the arms of death?

God. I have heal'd thy wounds. Amo. Ay me!

God. Fear not him that fuccour'd thee:

I am this Fountains god; below,
 My waters to a River grow,
 And 'twixt two banks with Ofiers fet,
 That only prosper in the wet,
 Through the Meadows do they glide,
 Wheeling ftill on every fide,
 Sometimes winding round about,
 To find the eveneft channel out.
 And if thou wilt go with me,
 Leaving mortal companie,
 In the cool ftreams fhalt thou lye,
 Free from harm as well as I:

I will give thee for thy food,
 No Fiſh that ufeth in the mud,
 But Trout and Pike that love to ſwim
 Where the gravel from the brim
 Through the pure ftreams may be ſeen:
 Orient Pearl fit for a Queen,
 Will I give thy love to win,
 And a ſhell to keep them in:
 Not a Fiſh in all my Brook
 That ſhall difobey thy look,
 But when thou wilt, come ſliding by,
 And from thy white hand take a fly.
 And to make thee underftand,
 How I can my waves command,
 They ſhall bubble whiſt I ſing
 Sweeter than the ſilver ſpring.

The SONG.

Do not fear to put thy feet
 Naked in the River ſweet;
 Think not Leach, or Newt or Toad
 Will bite thy foot, when thou haſt troad;
 Nor let the water riſing high,
 As thou wad'ſt in, make thee crie
 And ſob, but ever live with me,
 And not a wave ſhall trouble thee.

Amo. Immortal power, that rul'ſt this holy flood;
 I know my ſelf unworthy to be woo'd
 By thee a god: for e're this, but for thee
 I ſhould have ſhown my weak Mortalitie:
 Befides, by holy Oath betwixt us twain,
 I am betroath'd unto a Shepherd ſwain,
 Whoſe comely face, I know the gods above
 May make me leave to ſee, but not to love.

God. May he prove to thee as true.

Faireſt Virgin, now adieu,
 I muſt make my waters fly,
 Left they leave their Channels dry,
 And beaſts that come unto the ſpring
 Miſs their mornings watering,
 Which I would not; for of late
 All the neighbour people ſate
 On my banks, and from the fold,
 Two white Lambs of three weeks old
 Offered to my Deitie:

For which this year they ſhall be free
 From raging floods, that as they paſs
 Leave their gravel in the graſs:
 Nor ſhall their Meads be overflown,
 When their graſs is newly mown.

Amo. For thy kindneſs to me ſhown;
 Never from thy banks be blown
 Any tree, with windy force,
 Croſs thy ſtreams, to ſtop thy courſe:
 May no beaſt that comes to drink,
 With his horns caſt down thy brink;
 May none that for thy fiſh do look,
 Cut thy banks to damm thy Brook;
 Bare-foot may no Neighbour wade
 In thy cool ſtreams, wife nor maid,
 When the ſpawns on ſtones do lye,
 To waſh their Hemp, and ſpoil the Fry.

God. Thanks Virgin, I muſt down again;
 Thy wound will put thee to no pain:
 Wonder not ſo ſoon 'tis gone:
 A holy hand was laid upon.

[Exit.]

Amo. And I unhappy born to be,
 Muſt follow him that flies from me.

ACTUS Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Perigot.

Per. SHe is untrue, unconstant, and unkind,
She's gone, she's gone, blow high thou North-west
And raise the Sea to Mountains, let the Trees (wind,
That dare oppose thy raging fury, leave
Their firm foundation, creep into the Earth,
And shake the world, as at the monstrous birth
Of some new Prodigy, whilst I constant stand,
Holding this trustie Boar-spear in my hand,
And falling thus upon it.

Enter Amaryllis, running.

Amar. Stay thy dead-doing hand, thou art too hot
Against thy self, believe me comely Swain,
If that thou dyest, not all the showers of Rain
The heavy clods send down can wash away
That foul unmanly guilt, the world will lay
Upon thee. Yet thy love untainted stands :
Believe me, she is constant, not the sands
Can be so hardly numbred as she won :
I do not trifle, Shepherd, by the Moon,
And all those lesser lights our eyes do view,
All that I told thee Perigot, is true :
Then be a free man, put away despair,
And will to dye, smooth gently up that fair
Dejected forehead : be as when those eyes
Took the first heat. Per. Alas he double dyes,
That would believe, but cannot ; 'tis not well
Ye keep me thus from dying, here to dwell
With many worse companions : but oh death,
I am not yet inamour'd of this breath
So much, but I dare leave it, 'tis not pain
In forcing of a wound, nor after gain
Of many dayes, can hold me from my will :
'Tis not my self, but Amoret, bids kill.

Ama. Stay but a little, little, but one hour,
And if I do not show thee through the power
Of herbs and words I have, as dark as night,
My self turn'd to thy Amoret, in sight,
Her very figure, and the Robe she wears,
With tawny Buskins, and the hook she bears
Of thine own Carving, where your names are set,
Wrought underneath with many a curious fret,
The Prim-Rose Chaplet, taudry-lace and Ring,
Thou gavest her for her singing, with each thing
Else that she wears about her, let me feel
The first fell stroke of that Revenging steel.

Per. I am contented, if there be a hope
To give it entertainment, for the scope
Of one poor hour ; goe, you shall find me next
Under yon shady Beech, even thus perplexed,
And thus believing. Ama. Bind before I goe,
Thy soul by Pan unto me, not to doe
Harm or outrageous wrong upon thy life,
Till my return.

Per. By Pan, and by the strife
He had with Phœbus for the Mastery,
When Golden Midas judg'd their Minstrelcy,
I will not.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Satyr, with Alexis, hurt.

Satyr. Softly gliding as I goe,
With this burthen full of woe,
Through still silence of the night,
Guided by the Glee-worms light,
Hither am I come at last,
Many a Thicket have I past
Not a twig that durst deny me,
Not a bush that durst descry me,

To the little Bird that sleeps
On the tender spray : nor creeps
That hardy worm with pointed tail,
But if I be under fail,
Flying faster than the wind,
Leaving all the clouds behind,
But doth hide her tender head
In some hollow tree or bed
Of seeded Nettles : not a Hare
Can be started from his fare,
By my footing, nor a wish
Is more sudden, nor a fish
Can be found with greater ease,
Cut the vast unbounded seas,
Leaving neither print nor sound,
Than I, when nimbly on the ground,
I measure many a league an hour :
But behold the happy power,
That must ease me of my charge,
And by holy hand enlarge
The soul of this sad man, that yet
Lyes fast bound in deadly fit ;
Heaven and great Pan succour it !
Hail thou beauty of the bower,
Whiter than the Paramour
Of my Master, let me crave
Thy vertuous help to keep from Grave
This poor Mortal that here lyes,
Waiting when the destinies
Will cut off his thred of life :
View the wound by cruel knife
Trencht into him.

Clor. What art thou call'dst me from my holy rites,
And with thy feared name of death affrights
My tender Ears ? speak me thy name and will.

Satyr. I am the Satyr that did fill
Your lap with early fruit, and will,
When I hap to gather more,
Bring ye better and more store :
Yet I come not empty now,
See a blossom from the bow,
But beshrew his heart that pull'd it,
And his perfect sight that cull'd it
From the other springing blooms ;
For a sweeter youth the Grooms
Cannot show me, nor the downs,
Nor the many neighbouring towns ;
Low in yonder glade I found him,
Softly in mine Arms I bound him,
Hither have I brought him sleeping
In a trance, his wounds fresh weeping,
In remembrance such youth may
Spring and perish in a day.

Clor. Satyr, they wrong thee, that do term thee rude,
Though thou beest outward rough and tawny hu'd,
Thy manners are as gentle and as fair
As his, who brags himself, born only heir
To all Humanity : let me see the wound :
This Herb will stay the current being bound
Fast to the Orifice, and this restrain
Ulcers, and swellings, and such inward pain,
As the cold air hath forc'd into the sore :
This to draw out such putrifying gore
As inward falls.

Satyr. Heaven grant it may doe good.

Clor. Fairly wipe away the blood :
Hold him gently till I sling
Water of a vertuous spring
On his temples ; turn him twice
To the Moon beams, pinch him thrice,
That the labouring soul may draw
From his great eclipse. Satyr. I saw
His eye-lids moving. Clor. Give him breath,
All the danger of cold death

Now is vanisht; with this Plaster,
And this unction, do I master
All the festred ill that may
Give him grief another day.

Satyr. See he gathers up his spright
And begins to hunt for light;
Now he gapes and breaths again:
How the blood runs to the vein,
That erst was empty! Alex. O my heart,
My dearest, dearest Cloe, O the smart
Runs through my side: I feel some pointed thing
Pass through my Bowels, sharper than the sting
Of Scorpion.

Pan preserve me, what are you?
Do not hurt me, I am true
To my Cloe, though she flye,
And leave me to thy destiny.
There she stands, and will not lett
Her smooth white hand to help her friend:

But I am much mistaken, for that face
Bears more Austerity and modest grace,
More reproving and more awe
Than these eyes yet ever saw
In my Cloe. Oh my pain
Eagerly renews again.

Give me your help for his sake you love best.

Clor. Shepherd, thou canst not possibly take rest,
Till thou hast laid aside all hearts desires
Provoking thought that stir up lusty fires,
Commerce with wanton eyes, strong blood, and will
To excute, these must be purg'd, untill
The vein grow whiter; then repent, and pray
Great Pan to keep you from the like decay,
And I shall undertake your cure with ease.
Till when this vertuous Plaster will displease
Your tender sides; give me your hand and rise:
Help him a little Satyr, for his thighs
Yet are feeble.

Alex. Sure I have lost much blood:

Satyr. 'Tis no matter, 'twas not good.
Mortal you must leave your wooing,
Though there be a joy in doing,
Yet it brings much grief behind it,
They best feel it, that do find it.

Clor. Come bring him in, I will attend his fore:
When you are well, take heed you lust no more.

Satyr. Shepherd, see what comes of kissing,
By my head 'twere better missing.
Brightest, if there be remaining
Any service, without feigning
I will do it, were I set
To catch the nimble wind, or get
Shadows gliding on the green,
Or to steal from the great Queen
Of Fayries, all her beauty,
I would do it, so much duty
Do I owe those precious Eyes.

Clor. I thank thee honest Satyr, if the cryes
Of any other that be hurt or ill,
Draw thee unto them, prithee do thy will
To bring them hither.

Satyr. I will, and when the weather
Serves to Angle in the brook,
I will bring a silver hook,
With a line of finest silk,
And a rod as white as milk,
To deceive the little fish:
So I take my leave, and wish,
On this Bower may ever dwell
Spring, and Summer. Clor. Friend farewell. [Exit.

Enter Amoret, seeking her Love.

Amor. This place is Ominous, for here I lost
My Love and almost life, and since have crost

All these Woods over, never a Nook or Dell,
Where any little Bird, or Beast doth dwell,
But I have sought him, never a bending brow
Of any Hill or Glade, the wind sings through,
Nor a green bank, nor shade where Shepherds use
To sit and Riddle, sweetly pipe, or chuse
Their Valentines, that I have mist, to find
My love in. Perigot, Oh too unkind,
Why hast thou fled me? whither art thou gone?
How have I wrong'd thee? was my love alone
To thee worthy this scorn'd recompence? 'tis well,
I am content to feel it: but I tell
Thee Shepherd, and these lusty woods shall hear,
Forsaken Amoret is yet as clear
Of any stranger fire, as Heaven is
From foul corruption, or the deep Abyffe
From light and happiness; and thou mayst know
All this for truth, and how that fatal blow
Thou gav'st me, never from desert of mine,
Fell on my life, but from suspect of thine,
Or fury more than madness; therefore, here,
Since I have lost my life, my love, my dear,
Upon this cursed place, and on this green,
That first divorc'd us, shortly shall be seen
A sight of so great pity, that each eye
Shall dayly spend his spring in memory
Of my untimely fall.

Enter Amaryllis.

Amar. I am not blind,
Nor is it through the working of my mind,
That this shows Amoret; for sake me all
That dwell upon the soul, but what men call
Wonder, or more than wonder, miracle,
For sure so strange as this the Oracle
Never gave answer of; it passeth dreams,
Or mad mens fancy, when the many streams
Of new imaginations rise and fall:
'Tis but an hour since these Ears heard her call
For pity to young Perigot; whilst he,
Directed by his fury bloodily
Lanc't up her brest, which bloodless fell and cold;
And if belief may credit what was told,
After all this, the Melancholy Swain
Took her into his arms being almost slain,
And to the bottom of the holy well
Flung her, for ever with the waves to dwell:
'Tis she, the very same, 'tis Amoret,
And living yet, the great powers will not let
Their vertuous love be crost. Maid, wipe away
Those heavy drops of sorrow, and allay
The storm that yet goes high, which not deprest;
Breaks heart and life, and all before it rest:
Thy Perigot— Amor. Where, which is Perigot?
Amar. Sits there below, lamenting much, god wot,
Thee thy and fortune, go and comfort him,
And thou shalt find him underneath a brim
Of sailing Pines that edge yon Mountain in.
Amo. I go, I run, Heaven grant me I may win
His foul again. [Exit Amoret.

Enter Sullen,

Sull. Stay Amaryllis, stay,
Ye are too fleet, 'tis two hours yet to day.
I have perform'd my promise, let us sit
And warm our bloods together till the fit
Come lively on us. Amor. Friend you are too keen,
The morning riseth and we shall be seen,
Forbear a little. Sull. I can stay no longer.
Amor. Hold Shepherd hold, learn not to be a wronger
Of your word, was not your promise laid,
To break their loves first?
Sull. I have done it Maid.
Amor. No, they are yet unbroken, met again,

And are as hard to part yet as the stain
Is from the finest Lawn. Sull. I say they are Now at this present parted, and so far,
That they shall never meet.

Amar. Swain 'tis not so,
For do but to yon hanging Mountain go,
And there believe your eyes.

Sull. You do but hold
Off with delays and trifles; farewell cold
And frozen bashfulness, unfit for men;
Thus I salute thee Virgin.

Amar. And thus then,
I bid you follow, catch me if you can.

[Exit.]

Sull. And if I stay behind I am no man.

[Exit running after her.]

Enter Perigot.

Per. Night do not steal away: I woo thee yet
To hold a hard hand o're the rusty bit
That guides the lazy Team: go back again,
Bootes, thou that driv'st thy frozen Wain
Round as a Ring, and bring a second Night
To hide my sorrows from the coming light;
Let not the eyes of men stare on my face,
And read my falling, give me some black place
Where never Sun-beam shot his wholesome light,
That I may sit and pour out my sad spright
Like running water, never to be known
After the forced fall and sound is gone.

Enter Amoret looking for Perigot.

Amo. This is the bottom: speak if thou be here,
My Perigot, thy Amoret, thy dear
Calls on thy loved Name.

Per. What art thou darrest
Tread these forbidden paths, where death and care
Dwell on the face of darkness?

Amo. 'Tis thy friend,
Thy Amoret, come hither to give end
To these consumings; look up gentle Boy,
I have forgot those Pains and dear annoy
I suffer'd for thy sake, and am content
To be thy love again; why hast thou rent
Those curled locks, where I have often hung
Riband and Damask-roses, and have slung
Waters distill'd to make thee fresh and gay,
Sweeter than the Nosegayes on a Bridal day?
Why dost thou cross thine Arms, and hang thy face
Down to thy bosom, letting fall apace
From those two little Heavens upon the ground
Showers of more price, more Orient, and more round
Than those that hang upon the Moons pale brow?
Cease these complainings, Shepherd, I am now
The same I ever was, as kind and free,
And can forgive before you ask of me.
Indeed I can and will.

Per. So spoke my fair.
O you great working powers of Earth and Air,
Water and forming fire, why have you lent
Your hidden vertues of so ill intent?
Even such a face, so fair, so bright of hue
Had Amoret; such words so smooth and new,
Came flying from her tongue; such was her eye,
And such the pointed sparkle that did fly
Forth like a bleeding shaft; all is the same,
The Robe and Buskins, painted Hook, and frame
Of all her Body. O me, Amoret!

Amo. Shepherd, what means this Riddle? who hath set
So strong a difference 'twixt my self and me
That I am grown another? look and see
The Ring thou gav'st me, and about my wrist
That curious Bracelet thou thy self didst twist
From those fair Tresses: know'st thou Amoret?
Hath not some newer love forc'd thee forget

Thy Ancient faith?

Per. Still nearer to my love;
These be the very words she oft did prove
Upon my temper, so she still would take Wonder into her face, and silent make
Signs with her head and hand, as who would say,
Shepherd remember this another day.

Amo. Am I not Amoret? where was I lost?
Can there be Heaven, and time, and men, and most Of these unconstant? Faith where art thou fled?
Are all the vows and protestations dead,
The hands help up, the wishes, and the heart,
Is there not one remaining, not a part
Of all these to be found? why then I see
Men never knew that vertue Constancie.

Per. Men ever were most blessed, till crass fate
Brought Love and Women forth, unfortunate
To all that ever tasted of their smiles,
Whose actions are all double, full of wiles:
Like to the subtil Hare, that 'fore the Hounds
Makes many turnings, leaps and many rounds,
This way and that way, to deceive the scent
Of her pursuers.

Amo. 'Tis but to prevent
Their speedy coming on that seek her fall,
The hands of cruel men, more Bestial,
And of a nature more refusing good
Than Beasts themselves, or Fishes of the Flood.

Per. Thou art all these, and more than nature meant,
When she created all, frowns, joys, content;
Extream fire for an hour, and presently
Colder than sleepy poyson, or the Sea,
Upon whose face sits a continual frost:
Your actions ever driven to the most,
Then down again as low, that none can find
The rise or falling of a Womans mind.

Amo. Can there be any Age, or dayes, or time,
Or tongues of men, guilty so great a crime
As wronging simple Maid? O Perigot,
Thou that wast yesterday without a blot,
Thou that wast every good, and every thing
That men call blessed; thou that wast the spring
From whence our looser grooms drew all their best;
Thou that wast alwayes just, and alwayes blest
In faith and promise; thou that hadst the name
Of Vertuous given thee, and made good the same
E'en from thy Cradle; thou that wast that all
That men delighted in; Oh what a fall
Is this, to have been so, and now to be
The only best in wrong and infamic,
And I to live to know this! and by me
That lov'd thee dearer than mine eyes, or that
Which we esteem'd our honour, Virgin state;
Dearer than Swallows love the early morn,
Or Dogs of Chace the sound of merry Horn;
Dearer than thou canst love thy new Love, if thou hast
Another, and far dearer than the last;
Dearer than thou canst love thy self, though all
The self love were within thee that did fall
With that coy Swain that now is made a flower,
For whose dear sake, Echo weeps many a shower.
And am I thus rewarded for my flame?
Lov'd worthily to get a wantons name?
Come thou forsaken Willow, wind my head,
And noise it to the world my Love is dead:
I am forsaken, I am cast away,
And left for every lazy Groom to say,
I was unconstant, light, and sooner lost
Than the quick Clouds we see, or the chill Frost
When the hot Sun beats on it. Tell me yet,
Canst thou not love again thy Amoret?

Per. Thou art not worthy of that blessed name,
I must not know thee, sling thy wanton flame
Upon some lighter blood, that may be hot

With words and feigned passions : Perigot
Was ever yet unstain'd, and shall not now
Stoop to the meltings of a borrowed brow.

Amo. Then hear me heaven, to whom I call for right,
And you fair twinkling stars that crown the night ;
And hear me woods, and silence of this place,
And ye sad hours that move a fullen pace ;
Hear me ye shadows that delight to dwell
In horrid darkness, and ye powers of Hell,
Whilst I breath out my last ; I am that maid,
That yet untainted Amoret, that plaid
The careless prodigal, and gave away
My soul to this young man, that now dares say
I am a stranger, not the same, more wild ;
And thus with much belief I was beguil'd.
I am that maid, that have delaid, deny'd,
And almost scor'd the loves of all that try'd
To win me, but this swain, and yet confess
I have been woo'd by many with no less
Soul of affection, and have often had Rings, Belts, and Cracknels sent me from the lad
That feeds his flocks down westward ; Lambs and Doves
By young Alexis ; Daphnis sent me gloves,
All which I gave to thee : nor these, nor they
That sent them did I smile on, or e're lay
Up to my after-memory. But why
Do I resolve to grieve, and not to dye ?
Happy had been the stroke thou gav'st, if home ;
By this time had I found a quiet room
Where every slave is free, and every brest
That living breeds new care, now lies at rest,
And thither will poor Amoret.

Per. Thou must.
Was ever any man so loth to trust
His eyes as I ? or was there ever yet
Any so like as this to Amoret ?
For whose dear sake, I promise if there be
A living soul within thee, thus to free
Thy body from it. [He hurts her again.

Amo. So, this work hath end :
Farewel and live, be constant to thy friend
That loves thee next.

Enter Satyr, Perigot runs off.

Satyr. See the day begins to break,
And the light shoots like a streak
Of subtil fire, the wind blows cold,
Whilst the morning doth unfold ;
Now the Birds begin to rouse,
And the Squirrel from the boughs
Leaps to get him Nuts and fruit ;
The early Lark that erst was mute,
Carrols to the rising day
Many a note and many a lay :
Therefore here I end my watch,
Lest the wandring swain should catch
Harm, or lose himself. Amo. Ah me !

Satyr. Speak again what e're thou be,
I am ready, speak I say :
By the dawning of the day,
By the power of night and Pan,
I inforce thee speak again.

Amo. O I am most unhappy.

Satyr. Yet more blood !
Sure these wanton Swains are wode.
Can there be a hand or heart
Dare commit so vile a part
As this Murder ? By the Moon
That hid her self when this was done,
Never was a sweeter face :
I will bear her to the place
Where my Goddes keeps ; and crave
Her to give her life, or grave.

[Exit.

Enter Clorin.

Clor. Here whilst one patient takes his rest secure
I steal abroad to doe another Cure.
Pardon thou buryed body of my love,
That from thy side I dare so soon remove,
I will not prove unconstant, nor will leave
Thee for an hour alone. When I deceive
My first made vow, the wildest of the wood
Tear me, and o're thy Grave let out my blood ;
I goe by wit to cure a lovers pain
Which no herb can ; being done, I'll come again. [Exit.

Enter Thenot.

The. Poor Shepherd in this shade for ever lye,
And seeing thy fair Clorins Cabin, dye :
O hapless love, which beings answer'd, ends ;
And as a little infant cries and bends
His tender Brows, when rowling of his eye
He hath espy'd some thing that glisters nigh
Which he would have, yet give it him, away
He throws it straight, and cries afresh to play
With something else : such my affection, set
On that which I should loath, if I could get.

Enter Clorin.

Clor. See where he lyes ; did ever man but he Love any woman for her Constancie
To her dead lover, which she needs must end
Before she can allow him for her friend,
And he himself must needs the cause destroy,
For which he loves, before he can enjoy ?
Poor Shepherd, Heaven grant I at once may free
Thee from thy pain, and keep my loyaltie :
Shepherd, look up.

The. Thy brightness doth amaze !
So Phœbus may at noon bid mortals gaze,
Thy glorious constancie appears so bright,
I dare not meet the Beams with my weak sight.

Clor. Why dost thou pine away thy self for me ?

The. Why dost thou keep such spotless constancie ?

Clor. Thou holy Shepherd, see what for thy sake
Clorin, thy Clorin, now dare under take. [He starts up.

The. Stay there, thou constant Clorin, if there be
Yet any part of woman left in thee,
To make thee light : think yet before thou speak
Clor. See what a holy vow for thee I break.
I that already have my fame far spread
For being constant to my lover dead.

The. Think yet, dear Clorin, of your love, how true,
If you had dyed, he would have been to you.

Clor. Yet all I'll lose for thee.

The. Think but how blest

A constant woman is above the rest.

Clor. And offer up my self, here on this ground,
To be dispos'd by thee.

The. Why dost thou wound
His heart with malice, against woman more,
That hated all the Sex, but thee before ?
How much more pleasant had it been to me
To dye, than to behold this change in thee ?
Yet, yet, return, let not the woman sway.

Clor. Insult not on her now, nor use delay,
Who for thy sake hath ventur'd all her fame.

The. Thou hast not ventur'd, but bought certain shame,
Your Sexes curse, foul falshood must and shall,
I see, once in your lives, light on you all.
I hate thee now : yet turn.

Clor. Be just to me :

Shall I at once both lose my fame and thee ?

The. Thou hadst no fame, that which thou didst like good,
Was but thy appetite that sway'd thy blood
For that time to the best : for as a blast
That through a house comes, usually doth cast

Things out of order, yet by chance may come,
And blow some one thing to his proper room;
So did thy appetite, and not thy zeal,
Sway thee be chance to doe some one thing well.
Yet turn.

Clor. Thou dost but try me if I would Forfake thy dear embraces, for my old
Love's, though he were alive: but do not fear.

Th. I do contemn thee now, and dare come near,
And gaze upon thee; for me thinks that grace,
Austeritie, which fate upon that face
Is gone, and thou like others: false maid see,
This is the gain of foul inconstancie. [Exit.]

Clor. 'Tis done, great Pan I give thee thanks for it,
What art could not have heal'd, is cur'd by wit.

Enter Thenot, again.

The. Will ye be constant yet? will ye remove
Into the Cabin to your buried Love?

Clor. No let me die, but by thy side remain.

The. There's none shall know that thou didst ever stain
Thy worthy strictness, but shall honour'd be,
And I will lye again under this tree,
And pine and dye for thee with more delight,
Than I have sorrow now to know the light.

Clor. Let me have thee, and I'll be where thou wilt.

The. Thou art of womens race, and full of guilt.
Farewel all hope of that Sex, whilst I thought
There was one good, I fear'd to find one naught:
But since their minds I all alike espie,
Henceforth I'll choose as others, by mine eye.

Clor. Blest be ye powers that give such quick redress,
And for my labours sent so good success.
I rather choose, though I a woman be,
He should speak ill of all, than die for me.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Priest, and old Shepherd.

Priest. Shepherds, rise and shake off sleep,
See the blushing Morn doth peep

Through the window, whilst the Sun
To the mountain tops is run,
Gilding all the Vales below
With his rising flames, which grow
Greater by his climbing still.

Up ye lazie grooms, and fill
Bagg and Bottle for the field;
Clasp your cloaks fast, lest they yield
To the bitter North-east wind.

Call the Maidens up, and find
Who lay longest, that she may
Goe without a friend all day;
Then reward your Dogs, and pray
Pan to keep you from decay:

So unfold and then away.

What not a Shepherd stirring? sure the grooms
Have found their beds too easie, or the rooms
Fill'd with such new delight, and heat, that they
Have both forgot their hungry sheep, and day;
Knock, that they may remember what a shame
Sloath and neglect layes on a Shepherds name.

Old Shep. It is to little purpose, not a swain
This night hath known his lodging here, or lain
Within these cotes: the woods, or some near town,
That is a neighbour to the bordering Down,
Hath drawn them thither, 'bout some lustie sport,
Or spiced Wassel-Boul, to which resort
All the young men and maids of many a cote,
Whilst the trim Minstrel strikes his merry note.

Priest. God pardon sin, show me the way that leads

To any of their haunts.

Old Shep. This to the meads,
And that down to the woods.

Priest. Then this for me;
Come Shepherd let me crave your companie. [Exeunt.]

Enter Clorin, in her Cabin, Alexis, with her.

Clor. Now your thoughts are almost pure,
And your wound begins to cure:
Strive to banish all that's vain,
Lest it should break out again.

Alex. Eternal thanks to thee, thou holy maid:
I find my former wandring thoughts well staid
Through thy wise precepts, and my outward pain
By thy choice herbs is almost gone again:
Thy sexes vice and vertue are reveal'd
At once, for what one hurt, another heal'd.

Clor. May thy grief more appease,
Relapses are the worst disease.
Take heed how you in thought offend,
So mind and body both will mend.

Enter Satyr, with Amoret.

Amo. Beest thou the wildest creature of the wood,
That bearst me thus away, drown'd in my blood,
And dying, know I cannot injur'd be,
I am a maid, let that name fight for me.

Satyr. Fairest Virgin do not fear
Me, that do thy body bear,
Not to hurt, but heal'd to be;
Men are ruder far than we.
See fair Goddes in the wood,
They have let out yet more blood.
Some savage man hath struck her breast
So soft and white, that no wild beast
Durst ha' toucht asleep, or wake:
So sweet, that Adder, Newt, or Snake,
Would have lain from arm to arm,
On her bosom to be warm
All a night, and being hot,
Gone away and stung her not.
Quickly clap herbs to her breast;
A man sure is a kind of beast.

Clor. With spotless hand, on spotless breast
I put these herbs to give thee rest:
Which till it heal thee, will abide,
If both be pure, if not, off slide.
See it falls off from the wound,
Shepherdess thou art not found,
Full of lust.

Satyr. Who would have thought it,
So fair a face?

Clor. Why that hath brought it.

Amo. For ought I know or think, these words, my last:
Yet Pan so help me as my thoughts are chaste.

Clor. And so may Pan bless this my cure,
As all my thoughts are just and pure;
Some uncleanness nigh doth lurk,
That will not let my Medicines work.
Satyr search if thou canst find it.

Satyr. Here away me thinks I wind it,
Stronger yet: Oh here they be,
Here, here, in a hollow tree,
Two fond mortals have I found.

Clor. Bring them out, they are unsound.

Enter Cloe, and Daphnis.

Satyr. By the fingers thus I wring ye,
To my Goddes thus I bring ye;
Strife is vain, come gently in,
I scented them, they're full of sin.

Clor. Hold Satyr, take this Glas,
Sprinkle over all the place,
Purge the Air from lustfull breath,

To save this Shepherdess from death,
And stand you still whilst I do dress
Her wound for fear the pain increase.

Sat. From this glass I throw a drop
Of Crystal water on the top
Of every grass, on flowers a pair:
Send a fume and keep the air
Pure and wholsom, sweet and blest,
Till this Virgins wound be dress'd.

Clor. Satyr, help to bring her in.

Sat. By Pan, I think she hath no sin,
She is so light: lye on these leaves.
Sleep that mortal sense deceives,
Crown thine Eyes, and ease thy pain,
Maist thou soon be well again.

Clor. Satyr, bring the Shepherd near,
Try him if his mind be clear.

Sat. Shepherd come.

Daph. My thoughts are pure.

Sat. The better trial to endure.

Clor. In this flame his finger thrust,
Which will burn him if he lust;
But if not, away will turn,
As loth unspotted flesh to burn:
See, it gives back, let him go,
Farewel mortal, keep thee so.

Sat. Stay fair Nymph, flye not so fast,
We must try if you be chaste:
Here's a hand that quakes for fear,
Sure she will not prove so clear.

Clor. Hold her finger to the flame,
That will yield her praise or shame.

Sat. To her doom she dares not stand,
But plucks away her tender hand,
And the Taper darting sends
His hot beams at her fingers ends:
O thou art foul within, and hast
A mind, if nothing else, unchaste.

Alex. Is not that Cloe? 'tis my Love, 'tis she!
Cloe, fair Cloe.

Clor. My Alexis. Alex. He.

Clor. Let me embrace thee. Clor. Take her hence,
Lest her sight disturb his fence.

Alex. Take not her, take my life first.

Clor. See, his wound again is burst:
Keep her near, here in the Wood,
Till I ha' stopt these Streams of Blood.
Soon again he ease shall find,
If I can but still his mind:
This Curtain thus I do display,
To keep the piercing air away.

Enter old Shepherd, and Priest.

Priest. Sure they are lost for ever; 'tis in vain
To find 'em out with trouble and much pain,
That have a ripe desire, and forward will
To flye the Company of all but ill,
What shall be counsel'd now? shall we retire?
Or constant follow still that first desire
We had to find them?

Old. Stay a little while;
For if the Morning mist do not beguile
My sight with shadows, sure I see a Swain;
One of this jolly Troop's come back again.

Enter Thenot.

Pri. Dost thou not blush young Shepherd to be known,
Thus without care, leaving thy flocks alone,
And following what desire and present blood
Shapes out before thy burning sense, for good,
Having forgot what tongue hereafter may
Tell to the World thy falling off, and say
Thou art regardless both of good and shame,
Spurning at Vertue, and a vertuous Name,

And like a glorious, desperate man that buys
A poyson of much price, by which he dies,
Dost thou lay out for Lust, whose only gain
Is soul disease, with present age and pain,
And then a Grave? These be the fruits that grow
In such hot Veins that only beat to know
Where they may take most ease, and grow ambitious
Through their own wanton fire, and pride delicious.

The. Right holy Sir, I have not known this night,
What the smooth face of Mirth was, or the sight
Of any looseness; musick, joy, and ease,
Have been to me as bitter drugs, to please
A Stomach lost with weakness, not a game
That I am skill'd at throughly; nor a Dame,
Went her tongue smoother than the feet of Time,
Her beauty ever living like the Rime
Our blessed Tityrus did sing of yore,
No, were she more enticing than the store
Of fruitful Summer, when the loaden Tree
Bids the faint Traveller be bold and free,
'Twere but to me like thunder 'gainst the bay,
Whose lightning may enclose but never stay
Upon his charmed branches; such am I
Against the catching flames of Womans eye.

Priest. Then wherefore hast thou wandred?

The. 'Twas a Vow

That drew me out last night, which I have now
Strictly perform'd, and homewards go to give
Fresh pasture to my Sheep, that they may live.

Pri. 'Tis good to hear ye, Shepherd, if the heart
In this well sounding Musick bear his part,
Where have you left the rest?

The. I have not seen,
Since yesternight we met upon this green
To fold our Flocks up, any of that train;
Yet have I walkt these Woods round, and have lain
All this same night under an aged Tree,
Yet neither wandring Shepherd did I see,
Or Shepherdess, or drew into mine ear
The sound of living thing, unless it were
The Nightingale among the thick leav'd spring
That sits alone in sorrow, and doth sing
Whole nights away in mourning, or the Owl,
Or our great enemy that still doth howl
Against the Moons cold beams.

Priest. Go and beware
Of after falling.

The. Father 'tis my care.

[Exit Thenot.

Enter Daphnis.

Old. Here comes another Stragler, sure I see
A Shame in this young Shepherd. Daphnis!

Daph. He.

Pri. Where hast thou left the rest, that should have been Long before this, grazing upon the green
Their yet imprison'd flocks?

Daph. Thou holy man,
Give me a little breathing till I can
Be able to unfold what I have seen;
Such horror that the like hath never been Known to the ear of Shepherd: Oh my heart
Labours a double motion to impart
So heavy tidings! You all know the Bower
Where the chaste Clorin lives, by whose great power
Sick men and Cattel have been often cur'd,
There lovely Amoret that was assur'd
To lusty Perigor, bleeds out her life,
Forc'd by some Iron hand and fatal knife;
And by her young Alexis.

Enter Amaryllis running from her Sullen Shepherd.

Amar. If there be

Ever

Ever a Neighbour Brook, or hollow tree,
Receive my Body, close me up from lull
That follows at my heels; be ever just,
Thou god of Shepherds, Pan, for her dear sake
That loves the Riversbrinks, and still doth shake
In cold remembrance of thy quick pursuit:
Let me be made a reed, and ever mute,
Nod to the waters fall, whilst every blast
Sings through my slender leaves that I was chaf't.

Pri. This is a night of wonder, Amaryll
Be comforted, the holy gods are still Revengeurs of these wrongs.

Amur. Thou blessed man,
Honour'd upon these plains, and lov'd of Pan,
Hear me, and save from endless infamie
My yet unblasted Flower, Virginie:
By all the Garlands that have crown'd that head,
By the chaste office, and the Marriage bed
That still is blest by thee, by all the rights
Due to our gods; and by those Virgin lights
That burn before his Altar, let me not Fall from my former state to gain the blot
That never shall be purg'd: I am not now
That wanton Amaryllis: here I vow
To Heaven, and thee grave Father, if I may
'scape this unhappy Night, to know the Day,
To live a Virgin, never to endure
The tongues, or Company of men impure.
I hear him come, save me.

Pri. Retire a while
Behind this Bush, till we have known that vile
Abuser of young Maidens.

Enter Sullen.

Sul. Stay thy pace,
Most loved Amaryllis, let the Chafe
Grow calm and milder, flye me not so fast,
I fear the pointed Brambles have unlac'd
Thy golden Buskins; turn again and see
Thy Shepherd follow, that is strong and free,
Able to give thee all content and ease.
I am not bashful, Virgin, I can please
At first encounter, hug thee in mine arm,
And give thee many Kisses, soft and warm
As those the Sun prints on the smiling Cheek
Of Plums, or mellow Peaches; I am sleek
And smooth as Neptune, when stern Eolus
Locks up his surly Winds, and nimbly thus
Can shew my active Youth; why dost thou flye?
Remember Amaryllis, it was I
That kill'd Alexis for thy sake, and set
An everlasting hate 'twixt Amoret
And her beloved Perigot: 'twas I
That drown'd her in the Well, where she must lye
Till Time shall leave to be; then turn again,
Turn with thy open arms, and clip the Swain
That hath perform'd all this, turn, turn I say:
I must not be deluded.

Pri. Monster stay,
Thou that art like a Canker to the State
Thou liv'st and breath'st in, eating with debate
Through every honest bosome, forcing still
The Veins of any that may serve thy Will,
Thou that hast offer'd with a sinful hand
To seize upon this Virgin that doth stand
Yet trembling here.

Sull. Good holiness declare,
What had the danger been, if being bare
I had embrac'd her, tell me by your Art,
What coming wonders would that sight impart?

Pri. Lust, and a branded Soul.

Sull. Yet tell me more,
Hath not our Mother Nature for her store
And great encrease, said it is good and just,

And wills that every living Creature must Beget his like?

Pri. Ye are better read than I,
I must confess, in blood and Lechery.
Now to the Bower, and bring this Beast along,
Where he may suffer Penance for his wrong. [Exit.

Enter Perigot with his hands bloody.

Per. Here will I wash it in this mornings dew,
Which she on every little grass doth strew
In silver drops against the Sun's appear:
'Tis holy water, and will make me clear.
My hands will not be cleans'd. My wronged Love,
If thy chaste spirit in the air yet move,
Look mildly down on him that yet doth stand
All full of guilt, thy blood upon his hand,
And though I struck thee undeservedly,
Let my revenge on her that injur'd thee
Make less a fault which I intended not,
And let these dew drops wash away my spot.
It will not cleanse. O to what sacred Flood
Shall I resort to wash away this blood?
Amid'st these Trees the holy Clorin dwells
In a low Cabin of cut Boughs, and heals
All Wounds; to her I will my self address,
And my rash faults repentantly confess;
Perhaps she'll find a means by Art or Prayer,
To make my hand with chaste blood stained, fair:
That done, not far hence underneath some Tree,
I'll have a little Cabin built, since she Whom I ador'd is dead, there will I give
My self to strictness, and like Clorin live. [Exit.

The Curtain is drawn, Clorin appears sitting in the Cabin, Amoret sitting on the one side of her, Alexis and Cloe on the other, the Satyr standing by.

Clo. Shepherd, once more your blood is staid,
Take example by this Maid,
Who is heal'd ere you be pure,
So hard it is lewd lust to cure.
Take heed then how you turn your eye
On each other lustfully:
And Shepherdess take heed lest you
Move his willing eye thereto;
Let no wring, nor pinch, nor smile
Of yours his weaker sense beguile.
Is your Love yet true and chaste,
And for ever so to last?

Alex. I have forgot all vain desires,
All looser thoughts, ill tempred fires,
True Love I find a pleasant fume,
Whose moderate heat can ne'r consume.

Clo. And I a new fire feel in me,
Whose chaste flame is not quencht to be.

Clor. Join your hands with modest touch,
And for ever keep you such.

Enter Perigot.

Per. Yon is her Cabin, thus far off I'll stand,
And call her forth; for my unhallowed hand
I dare not bring so near yon sacred place.
Clorin come forth, and do a timely grace
To a poor Swain.

Clo. What art thou that dost call?
Clorin is ready to do good to all:
Come near.

Peri. I dare not.

Clor. Satyr, see
Who it is that calls on me.

Sat. There at hand, some Swain doth stand,
Stretching out a bloody hand.

Peri. Come Clorin, bring thy holy waters clear,
To wash my hand.

Clo. What wonders have been here

To night? stretch forth thy hand young Swain,
Wash and rub it whilest I rain
Holy water.

Peri. Still you pour,
But my hand will never scower.

Clor. Satyr, bring him to the Bower,
We will try the Sovereign power
Of other waters.

Satyr. Mortal, sure
'Tis the Blood of Maiden pure
That stains thee so.

[The Satyr leadeth him to the Bower, where he spieth
Amoret, and kneeling down, she knoweth him.

Peri. What e're thou be,
Be'tt thou her spright, or some divinitie,
That in her shape thinks good to walk this grove,
Pardon poor Perigot.

Amor. I am thy love,
Thy Amoret, for evermore thy love:
Strike once more on my naked breast, I'le prove
As constant still. O couldst thou love me yet;
How soon should I my former griefs forget!

Peri. So over-great with joy, that you live, now
I am, that no desire of knowing how
Doth seize me; hast thou still power to forgive?

Amo. Whilest thou hast power to love, or I to live;
More welcome now than hadst thou never gone
Astray from me.

Peri. And when thou lov'st alone
And not I, death, or some lingring pain
That's worse, light on me.

Clor. Now your stain
This perhaps will cleanse again;
See the blood that erst did stay,
With the water drops away.
All the powers again are pleas'd,
And with this new knot appeas'd.
Joyn your hands, and rise together,
'Pan be blest that brought you hither.

Enter Priest, and Old Shepherd:

Clor. Go back again what ere thou art, unless Smooth Maiden thoughts possess thee, do not prefs
This hallowed ground. Go Satyr, take his hand,
And give him present trial.

Satyr. Mortal stand,
Till by fire I have made known
Whether thou be such a one,
That mayst freely tread this place.
Hold thy hand up; never was
More untainted flesh than this.
Fairest, he is full of blifs.

Clor. Then boldly speak, why dost thou seek this place?

Priest. First, honour'd Virgin, to behold thy face
Where all good dwells that is: Next for to try
The truth of late report was given to me:
Those Shepherds that have met with foul mischance,
Through much neglect, and more ill governance,
Whether the wounds they have may yet endure
The open Air, or stay a longer cure.
And lastly, what the doom may be shall light
Upon those guilty wretches, through whose spight
All this confusion fell: For to this place,
Thou holy Maiden, have I brought the race
Of these offenders, who have freely told,
Both why, and by what means they gave this bold
Attempt upon their lives.

Clor. Fume all the ground,
And sprinkle holy water, for unsound
And foul infection 'gins to fill the Air:
It gathers yet more strongly; take a pair
Of Censurs fill'd with Frankincense and Mirrh,
Together with cold Camphyre: quickly stir
Thee, gentle Satyr, for the place begins

To sweat and labour with the abhorred sins
Of those offenders; let them not come nigh,
For full of itching flame and leprosie
Their very souls are, that the ground goes back,
And shrinks to feel the fullen weight of black
And so unheard of venome; hic thee fast
Thou holy man, and banish from the chaff
These manlike monsters, let them never more
Be known upon these downs, but long before
The next Suns rising, put them from the sight
And memory of every honest wight.
Be quick in expedition, lest the fores
Of these weak Patients break into new gores. [Ex. Priest.

Per. My dear, dear Amoret, how happy are Those blessed pairs, in whom a little jar
Hath bred an everlasting love, too strong
For time, or steel, or envy to do wrong?
How do you feel your hurts? Alas poor heart,
How much I was abus'd; give me the smart
For it is justly mine.

Amo. I do believe.
It is enough dear friend, leave off to grieve,
And let us once more in despite of ill
Give hands and hearts again.

Per. With better will
Than e're I went to find in hottest day
Cool Crystal of the Fountain, to allay
My eager thirst: may this band never break.
Hear us O Heaven,

Amo. Be constant.

Per. Else Pan wreak,
With double vengeance, my disloyalty;
Let me not dare to know the company
Of men, or any more behold those eyes.

Amo. Thus Shepherd with a kifs all envy dyes.

Enter Priest.

Priest. Bright Maid, I have perform'd your will, the Swain
In whom such heat and black rebellions reign
Hath undergone your sentence, and disgrace:
Only the Maid I have reserv'd, whose face
Shews much amendment, many a tear doth fall
In sorrow of her fault, great fair recal
Your heavy doom, in hope of better daies,
Which I dare promise; once again upraise
Her heavy Spirit that near drowned lyes
In self consuming care that never dyes,

Clor. I am content to pardon, call her in;
The Air grows cool again, and doth begin
To purge it self, how bright the day doth show
After this stormy Cloud? go Satyr, go,
And with this Taper boldly try her hand,
If she be pure and good, and firmly stand
To be so still, we have perform'd a work
Worthy the Gods themselves. [Satyr brings Amaryllis in.

Satyr. Come forward Maiden, do not lurk
Nor hide your face with grief and shame,
Now or never get a name
That may raise thee, and recure
All thy life that was impure:
Hold your hand unto the flame,
If thou beest a perfect dame,
Or hast truly vow'd to mend,
This pale fire will be thy friend.
See the Taper hurts her not.
Go thy wayes, let never spot
Henceforth seize upon thy blood.
Thank the Gods and still be good.

Clor. Young Shepherdess now ye are brought again
To Virgin state, be so, and so remain
To thy last day, unless the faithful love
Of some good Shepherd force thee to remove;
Than labour to be true to him, and live
As such a one, that ever strives to give

A blessed memory to after time.
 Be famous for your good, not for your crime.
 Now holy man, I offer up again
 These patients full of health, and free from pain:
 Keep them from after ills, be ever near
 Unto their actions, teach them how to clear
 The tedious way they pass through, from suspect,
 Keep them from wronging others, or neglect
 Of duty in themselves, correct the bloud
 With thrifty bits and labour, let the floud,
 Or the next neighbouring spring give remedy
 To greedy thirst, and travel not the tree
 That hangs with wanton clusters, let not wine,
 Unless in sacrifice, or rites divine,
 Be ever known of Shepherd, have a care
 Thou man of holy life. Now do not spare
 Their faults through much remissness, nor forget
 To cherish him, whose many pains and sweet
 Hath giv'n increase, and added to the downs.
 Sort all your Shepherds from the lazy clowns
 That feed their Heifers in the budded Brooms:
 Teach the young Maidens strictness, that the grooms
 May ever fear to tempt their blowing youth;
 Banish all complements, but single truth
 From every tongue, and every Shepherds heart,
 Let them still use perswading, but no Art:
 Thus holy Priest, I wish to thee and these,
 All the best goods and comforts that may please.

Alex. And all those blessings Heaven did ever give,
 We pray upon this Bower may ever live.

Priest. Kneel every Shepherd, whilest with powerful hand
 I bless your after labours, and the Land
 You feed your flocks upon. Great Pan defend you
 From misfortune, and attend you,
 Keep you from those dangers still,
 That are followed by your will,
 Give ye means to know at length
 All your riches, all your strength,
 Cannot keep your foot from falling
 To lewd lust, that still is calling
 At your Cottage, till his power
 Bring again that golden hour
 Of peace and rest to every soul.
 May his care of you controul
 All diseases, sores or pain
 That in after time may rain
 Either in your flocks or you,
 Give ye all affections new,
 New desires, and tempers new,
 That ye may be ever true.
 Now rise and go, and as ye pass away
 Sing to the God of Sheep, that happy lay,
 That honest Dorus taught ye, Dorus, he
 That was the soul and god of melodie.

The SONG.

[They all Sing.]

All ye woods, and trees and bowers,
 All you vertues and ye powers
 That inhabit in the lakes,
 In the pleasant springs or brakes,

Move your feet
 To our sound,
 Whilest we greet
 All this ground,
 With his honour and his name
 That defends our flocks from blame.

He is great, and he is just,
 He is ever good, and must
 Thus be honour'd: Daffadillies,
Roses, Pinks, and loved Lillies,
 Let us sing,
 Whilest we sing,
 Ever holy,
 Ever holy,
 Ever honour'd ever young,
 Thus great Pan is ever sung.

[Exeunt.]

Satyr. Thou divinest, fairest, brightest,
 Thou most powerful Maid, and whitest,
 Thou most vertuous and most blessed,
 Eyes of stars, and golden tressed
 Like Apollo, tell me sweetest
 What new service now is meetest
 For the Satyr? shall I stray
 In the middle Air, and stay
 The sayling Rack, or nimbly take Hold by the Moon, and gently make
 Sute to the pale Queen of night
 For a beam to give thee light?
 Shall I dive into the Sea,
 And bring thee Coral, making way
 Through the rising waves that fall
 In snowie fleeces; dearest, shall
 I catch the wanton Fawns, or Flyes,
 Whose woven wings the Summer dyes
 Of many colours? get thee fruit?
 Or steal from Heaven old Orpheus Lute?
 All these I'll venture for, and more,
 To do her service all these woods adore.

Clor. No other service, Satyr, but thy watch
 About these thickets, lest harmless people catch
 Mischief or sad mischance.

Satyr. Holy Virgin, I will dance
 Round about these woods as quick
 As the breaking light, and prick
 Down the Lawns, and down the vails
 Faster than the Wind-mill sails.
 So I take my leave, and pray
 All the comforts of the day,
 Such as Phaebus heat doth send
 On the earth, may still befriend
 Thee, and this arbour.

Cle. And to thee,
 All thy Masters love be free.

[Exeunt.]

To my Friend Master JOHN FLETCHER upon his Faithfull Shepherdes.

I know too well, that, no more than the man
That travels through the burning Desarts, can
When he is beaten with the raging Sun,
Half smother'd in the dust, have power to run
From a cool River, which himself doth find,
E're he be slack'd; no more can he whose mind
Joyes in the Muses, hold from that delight,
When nature, and his full thoughts bid him write:
Yet wish I those whom I for friends have known,
To sing their thoughts to no ears but their own.
Why should the man, whose wit ne'r had a stain,
Upon the publick Stage present his vain,
And make a thousand men in judgment sit,
To call in question his undoubted wit,
Scarce two of which can understand the laws
Which they should judge by, nor the parties cause?
Among the rout there is not one that hath
In his own censure an explicate faith;
One company knowing they judgement lack,
Ground their belief on the next man in black:
Others, on him that makes signs, and is mute,
Some like as he does in the fairest sute,
He as his Mistres doth, and she by chance:
Nor want there those, who as the Boy doth dance
Between the Acts, will censure the whole Play;
Some if the Wax-lights be not new that day;
But multitudes there are whose judgement goes
Headlong according to the Actors clothes.
For this, these publick things and I, agree
So ill, that but to do a right for thee,
I had not been perswaded to have hurl'd
These few, ill spoken lines, into the world,
Both to be read, and censur'd of, by those,
Whose very reading makes Verse senseless Prose:
Such as must spend above an hour, to spell
A Challenge on a Post, to know it well:
But since it was thy hap to throw away
Much wit, for which the people did not pay,
Because they saw it not, I not dislike
This second publication, which may strike
Their consciences, to see the thing they scorn'd,
To be with so much wit and Art adorn'd.
Besides one vantage more in this I see,
Your censurers now must have the qualitie
Of reading, which I am afraid is more
Than half your shrewdest Judges had before.

Fr. Beaumont.

To the worthy Author Mr. JO. FLETCHER.

The wise, and many headed Bench, that sits
Upon the Life, and Death of Playes, and Wits, (Compos'd of Gamester, Captain, Knight, Knight's man,

Lady, or Puffill, that wears mask or fan,
Velvet, or Taffata cap, rank'd in the dark
With the shops Foreman, or some such brave spark,
That may judge for his six-pence) had, before
They saw it half, damn'd thy whole Play, and more,
Their motives were, since it had not to doe
With vices, which they look'd for, and came to.

I, that am glad, thy Innocence was thy Guilt,
And wish that all the Muses blood were spilt
In such a Martyrdome, to vex their eyes,
Do crown thy murdered Poeme: which shall rise
A glorified work to Time, when Fire,
Or mothes shall eat, what all these Fools admire.

BEN. JONSON.

This Dialogue newly added, was spoken by way of Prologue to both their Majesties, at the first acting of this Pastoral at Somers-house on Twelfth-night, 1633.

Priest:

A Broiling Lamb on Pans chief Altar lies,
My Wreath, my Censor, Virge, and Incense by:
But I delay'd the pretious Sacrifice,
To shew thee here, a Gentle Deity.

Nymph.

Nor was I to thy sacred Summons slow,
Hither I came as swift as th' Eagles wing,
Or threatening shaft from vext Dianacs bow,
To see this Islands God; the worlds best King.

Priest.

Bless then that Queen, that doth his eyes invite
And ears, t'obey her Scepter, half this night.

Nymph.

Let's sing such welcomes, as shall make Her sway
Seem easie to Him, though it last till day.

Welcom as Peace t'unwalled Cities, when
Famine and Sword leave them more graves than men.
As Spring to Birds, or Noon-dayes Sun to th' old
Poor mountain Muscovite congeal'd with cold.
As Shore toth' Pilot in a safe known Coast
When's Card is broken and his Rudder lost.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Flourish. Enter Astorax King of Paphos, his Sister Calis, Train, and Cleanthe, Lucippe Gentlewomen, at one door; at the other Eumenes a Souldier.

Eume. Health to my Sovereign.
H King. Eumenes, welcome:
Welcome to Paphos, Souldier, to our love,
And that fair health ye wish us, through
May it disperse it self, and make all happy; (the Camp
How does the General, the valiant Memnon,
And how his Wars, Eumenes?

Eume. The Gods have giv'n you (Royal Sir) a Souldier,
Better ne're fought a danger, more approv'd
In way of War, more master of his fortunes,
Expert in leading 'em; in doing valiant,
In following all his deeds to Victories,
And holding fortune certain there.

King. O Souldier,
Thou speak'st a man indeed; a Generals General,

A foul conceiv'd a Souldier.

Eumen. Ten set Battels
Against the strong usurper Diocles
(Whom long experience had begot a Leader, Ambition rais'd too mighty) hath your Memnon
Won, and won gloriously, distrest and shook him
Even from the head of all his hopes to nothing:
In three, he beat the Thunder-bolt his Brother,
Forc'd him to wall himself up: there not safe,
Shook him with warlike Engins like an Earthquake,
Till like a Snail he left his shell and crawl'd
By night and hideous darknes to destruction:
Disarm'd for ever rising more: Twelve Castles,
Some thought impregnable; Towns twice as many;
Countries that like the wind knew no command
But savage wildnes, hath this General
With los of blood and youth, through Storms and Tempests
Call'd to your fair obedience.

King. O my Souldier

That

That thou wert now within my arms; what drums
Are those that beat Eumenes? { Drums within.

Eumen. His, my Sovereign;
Himself i'th' head of conquest drawing home,
An old man now to offer up his glories,
And endless conquest at your shrine.

King. Goe all,
And entertain him with all Cereemonie,
We'l keep him now a Courtier.

Eumen. Sir, a strange one,
Pray God his language bear it; by my life, Sir
He knows no complement, nor curious casting
Of words into fit places e're he speak 'em,
He can say fight well fellow, and I'le thank thee:
He that mult eat, mult fight; bring up the rear there,
Or charge that wing of horie home. [Flourish.]

King. Goe too, goe too.

Enter Memnon, and a train of Courtiers, and Souldiers, two Captains, Chilax.

Valiant and wise are twins Sir: welcom; welcom,
Welcom my fortunate and famous General,
High in thy Princes favour, as in fame,
Welcom to Peace, and Paphos.

Mem. Thank your Grace,
And would to God my dull tongue had that sweetness
To thank you as I should; but pardon me,
My sword and I speak roughly Sir: your battels
I dare well say, I have fought well; for I bring ye
That lazie end you wish for Peace, so fully,
That no more name of war is: who now thinks
Sooner or safer these might have been ended,
Begin 'em if he dare again; I'le thank him.
Souldier and Souldiers Mate these twenty five years;
At length your General, (as one whose merit
Durst look upon no less,) I have waded through Dangers would damp these soft souls, but to hear of.
The maidenheads of thousand lives hang here Sir,
Since which time Prince, I know no Court but Marshal,
No oylie language, but the shock of Arms,
No dalliance but with death; No lofty measures
But weary and sad marches; cold and hunger,
Larums at midnight Valours self would shake at,
Yet I ne're shrunk: Balls of consuming Wildfire,
That lickt men up like lightning, have I laught at,
And tost 'em back again like childrens trifles.
Upon the edges of my Enemies swords
I have marcht like whirle-winds, fury at this hand waiting.
Death at my right; Fortune my forlorn hope,
When I have graped with destruction,
And tug'd with pale fac'd Ruine, Night and Mischiefe,
Frighted to see a new day break in bloud;
And every where I conquer'd; and for you Sir,
Mothers have wanted wombs to make me famous,
And blown ambition, dangers; Those that griev'd ye,
I have taken order for i'th' earth: those fools
That shall hereafter —

King. No more wars my Souldier: { K. takes Mem. aside and talks with him.
We must now treat of peace Sir.

Clean. How he talks,
How gloriously.

Cal. A goodly timber'd fellow,
Valiant no'doubt.

Cle. If valour dwell in vaunting;
In what a phraze he speaks, as if his actions
Could be fet off in nothing but a noise;
Sure h'as a drum in's mouth.

Cal. I wonder wenches
How he would speak to us.

Clean. Nothing but Larum,
Tell us whose throat he cut, shew us his sword,
And blefs it for sure biting.

Lucippe. And 't like your Grace,
I do not think he knows us what we are,

Or to what end; for I have heard his followers
Affirm he never saw a woman that exceeded
A Sutlers wife yet, or in execution
Old bedrid Beldames without teeth or tongues,
That would not sic his furie? how he looks.

Clea. This way devoutly.

Cal. Sure his Lordship's viewing
Our Fortifications.

Lucip. If he mount at me,
I may chance choak his Battery.

Cal. Still his eye
Keeps quarter this way: Venus grant his valour
Be not in love.

Clean. If he be, presently
Expect a Herald and a Trumpet with ye
To bid ye render; we two Perdi's pay for't else.

King. I'le leave ye to my sister, and these Ladies
To make your welcom fuller: my good souldier
We must now turn your sternness into Courtship;
When ye have done there, to your fair repose Sir: [Flourish.]
I know you need it Memnon; welcom Gentlemen.

[Exit King.]

Luci. Now he begins to march: Madam the Van's yours,
Keep your ground sure; 'tis for your spurrs:

Mem. O Venus.

Cal. How he stares on me.

{ He kneels amaz'd, and forgets to speak.

Clean. Knight him Madam, knight him,
He will grow toth' ground else.

Eumenes. Speak Sir, 'tis the Princess.

Cap. Ye shame your self, speak to her.

Cal. Rise and speak Sir.

Ye are welcome to the Court, to me, to all Sir.

Lucip. Is he not deaf?

Cal. The Gentleman's not well.

Eumen. Fie noble General.

Lucip. Give him fresh air, his colour goes, how do ye?
The Princess will be glad Sir.

Mem. Peace, and hear me.

Clean. Command a silence there.

Mem. I love thee Lady.

Cal. I thank your Lordship heartily: proceed Sir.

Lucip. Lord how it stuck in's stomach like a surfeit.

Clean. It breaks apace now from him, God be thanked,
What a fine spoken man he is.

Lucip. A choice one, of singular variety in carriage.

Clean. Yes and I warrant you he knows his distance.

Mem. With all my heart I love thee.

Cal. A hearty Gentleman,
And I were e'en an arrant beast, my Lord,
But I lov'd you again.

Mem. Good Lady kifs me.

Clean. I marry, Mars, there thou can't close up to her.

Cal. Kifs you at first my Lord? 'tis no fair fashion,
Our lips are like Rose buds, blown with mens breaths,
They lose both sap and favour; there's my hand Sir.

Eumen. Fie, fie, my Lord, this is too rude.

Mem. Unhand me,
Consume me if I hurt her; good sweet Lady
Let me but look upon thee.

Cal. Doe.

Mem. Yet —

Cal. Well Sir,

Take your full view.

Lucip. Bless your eyes Sir.

Cal. Mercy,

Is this the man they talkt of for a Souldier,
So absolute and Excellent: O the Gods,
If I were given to that vanitie
Of making sport with men for ignorance,
What a most precious subject had I purchas'd?
Speak for him Gentlemen: some one that knows,
What the man ails; and can speak sense.

Clean. Sure Madam,

This fellow has been a rare Hare finder.

See how his eyes are set.

Cal. Some one goe with me,
I'll send him something for his head, poor Gentleman,
He's troubled with the staggers.

Lucip. Keep him dark,
He will run March mad else, the fumes of Battels
Ascend into his brains.

Clean. Clap to his feet
An old Drum head, to draw the thunder downward.

Cal. Look to him Gentlemen: farewell, Lord I am sorry
We cannot kiss at this time, but believe it
We'll find an hour for all: God keep my Children,
From being such sweet Souldiers; Softly wenches,
Lest we disturb his dream. [Exeunt Calis and Ladies.]

Eumen. Why this is Monstrous.

1 Capt. A strange forgetfulness, yet still he holds it.

2 Capt. Though he ne're saw a woman of great fashion
Before this day, yet methinks 'tis possible
He might imagine what they are, and what Belongs unto 'em: meer report of others.

Eumen. Fish, his head had other whimsies in't: my Lord,
Death I think y'are struck dumb; my good Lord General.

1 Capt. Sir.

Mem. That I do love ye Madam; and so love ye
An't like your grace.

2 Capt. He has been studying this speech.

Eumen. Who do ye speak to Sir?

Mem. Why where's the Lady,
The woman, the fair woman?

1 Capt. Who?

Mem. The Princess,
Give me the Princess.

Eumen. Give ye counsel rather
To use her like a Princess: Fy my Lord,
How have you born your self, how naked
Laid your soul open, and your ignorance
To be a sport to all. Report and honour
Drew her to doe you favours, and you bluntly,
Without considering what, or who she was,
Neither collecting reason, nor distinction.

Mem. Why, what did I my Masters?

Eumen. All that shews
A man unhandfom, undigested dough.

Mem. Did not I kneel unto her?

Eumen. Dumb and senseless,
As though ye had been cut out for your fathers tomb,
Or stuck a land-mark; when she spoke unto you,
Being the excellence of all our Island,
Ye star'd upon her, as ye had seen a monster.

Men. Was I so foolish? I confess Eumenes,
I never saw before so brave an outside,
But did I kneel so long?

Eumen. Till they laugh at ye,
And when you spoke, I am ashamed to tell ye
What 'twas my Lord; how far from order;
Bless me, is't possible the wild noise of war
And what she only teaches should possess ye?
Knowledge to treat with her, and full discretion
Being at flood still in ye: and in peace,
And manly conversation smooth and civil,
Where gracefulness and glory twyn together,
Thrust your self out an exile?

Do you know Sir, what state she carries?
What great obedience waits at her beck continually?

Mem. She ne're commanded

A hundred thousand men, as I have done,
Nor ne're won battel; Say I would have kiss'd her.

Eumen. There was a dainty offer too, a rare one.

Mem. Why, she is a woman, is she not?

Eumen. She is so.

Mem. Why, very well; what was she made for then?
Is she not young, and handfom, bred to breed?
Do not men kiss fair women? if they doe,
If lips be not unlawfull ware; Why a Princess

Is got the same way that we get a begger
Or I am cozen'd; and the self-same way
She must be handled ere she get another;
That's rudeness is it not?

2 Capt. To her 'tis held so, & rudeness in that high degree—

Mem. 'Tis reason,

But I will be more punctual; pray what thought she?

Eum. Her thoughts were merciful, but she laugh'd at ye,
Pitying the poorness of your complement,
And so she left ye. Good Sir shape your self
To understand the place, and noble persons
You live with now.

1 Capt. Let not those great deserts
The King hath laid up of ye, and the people,
Be blasted with ill bearing.

Eume. The whole name of souldier then will suffer.

Mem. She's a sweet one,
And good sirs leave your exhortations,
They come untimely to me, I have brains
That beat above your reaches: She's a Princess,
That's all: I have killed a King, that's greater.
Come let's to dinner, if the Wine be good,
You shall perceive strange wisdom in my blood.

[Exeunt all but Chilax.]

Chil. Well, would thou wert i' the wars again
Old Memnon, there thou wouldst talk toth' purpose,
And the proudest of all these Court Camelions.
Would be glad to find it sense too: plague of this
Dead peace, this Bastard breeding, lowzie, lazie idleness,
Now we must learn to pipe, and pick our livings
Out of old rotten ends: these twenty five years
I have serv'd my Country, lost my youth and blood,
Expos'd my life to dangers more than dayes;
Yet let me tell my wants, I know their answers,
The King is bound to right me, they good people
Have but from hand to mouth. Look to your wives
Your young trim wives, your high-day wives, your march-
For if the souldiers find not recompence, (panes,
As yet there's none a hatching; I believe
You men of wares, the men of wars will nick ye,
For starve nor beg they must not; my small means
Are gone in fumo: here to raise a better
Unless it be with lying, or Dog flattering,
At which our Nation's excellent; observing Dog-days,
When this good Lady broyles and would be basted
By that good Lord, or such like moral learnings,
Is here impossible; Well; I will rub among 'em
If any thing for honestie be gotten,
Though't be but bread and cheefe I can be satisfied:
If otherwise the wind blow, stiff as I am
Yet I shall learn to shuffle: There's an old Lads
That shall be nameless yet alive, my last hope,
Has often got me my pocket full of crowns.
If all fail — Jack-Dawes, are you alive still? (per.
Then I see the coast clear, when fools and boyes can prof-

Enter Fool, and Page.

Page. Brave Lieutenant.

Fool. Hail to the man of worship.

Chi. You are fine sirs,
Most passing fine at all points.

Fool. As ye see Sir,
Home-bred and handsome, we cut not out our clothes Sir
At half sword as your Taylors doe, and pink 'em
With Pikes and Partizans, we live retir'd Sir
Gentlemen like, and jealous of our honours.

Chi. Very fine Fool, and fine Boy, Peace playes with you,
As the wind playes with Feathers, dances ye,
You grind with all gusts, gallants.

Page. We can bounce Sir,
When you Soldados bend i'th' hams, and frisk too.

Fool. When twenty of your trip coats turn their tippets,
And your cold fallets without salt or vineger
Be wambling in your stomachs; hemp and hobnails

Will bear no price now, hangings and old harness
Are like to over-run us. Pz. Whores and hot houses.

Fool. Surgeons and Syringes ring out your sance-bells.

Page. Your Jubile, your Jubile.

Fool. Prob Deum.

How our St. Georges will beltride the Dragons,
The red and ramping Dragons.

Page. Advanc't fool——

Fool. But then the sting i'th' tail boy.

Page. Tanto Melior.

For so much the more danger, the more honour.

Chi. You're very pleasant with our occupation Gent.
Which very like amongst these fierie Serpents
May light upon a Blind-worm of your blood,
A Mother or a Sister.

Fool. Mine's past saddle,
You should be sure of her else: but say Sir Huon,
Now the Drums dubb; and the sticks turn'd bed-staves,
All the old Foxes hunted to their holes,
The Iron age return'd to Erebus,
And Honorificabilitudinitatibus
Thrust out o'th' Kingdom by the head and shoulders,
What trade do you mean to follow?

Chi. That's a question.

Fool. Yes and a learned question if ye mark it,
Consider and say on.

Chi. Fooling as thou dost, that's the best trade I take it.

Fool. Take it straight then

For fear your fellows be before ye, hark ye Lieutenant
Fooling's the thing, the thing worth all your fightings,
When all's done ye must fool Sir.

Chi. Well, I must then.

Fool. But do you know what fooling is? true fooling,
The circumstances that belong unto it?

For every idle knave that showes his teeth,
Wants and would live, can juggle, tumble, fiddle,
Make a dog face, or can abuse his fellow,
Is not a fool at first dash; you shall find Sir
Strange turnings in this trade; to fool is nothing
As fooling has been, but to fool the fair way,
The new way, as the best men fool their friends,
For all men get by fooling, meerly fooling,
Desert does nothing, valiant, wise, vertuous,
Are things that walk by without bread or breeches.

Chi. I partly credit that.

Fool. Fine wits, fine wits Sir,
There's the young Boy, he does well in his way too,
He could not live else in his Masters absence;
He tyes a Ladyes garters so, so prettily,
Say his hand slip, but say so.

Chi. Why let it slip then.

Fool. 'Tis ten to one the body shall come after,
And he that works deserves his wages.

Chi. That's true.

Fool. He riddles finely to a waiting Gentlewoman,
Expounds dreams like a Prophet, dreams himself too,
And wishes all dreams true; they cry Amen,
And there's a Memorandum: he can sing too
Bawdy enough to please old Ladies: he lies rarely,
Pawns ye a sute of clothes at all points, fully,
Can pick a pocket if ye please, or casket;
Lisps when he lists to catch a Chambermaid,
And calls his Hostess mother, these are things now,
If a man mean to live: to fight and swagger,
Beaten about the Ears with bawling sheepskins,
Cut to the soul for Summer: here an arm lost,
And there a leg; his honourable head
Seal'd up in falves and cereclothes, like a packet,
And so sent over to an Hospital, stand there, charge there,
Swear there, whore there, dead there,
And all this sport for cheese, and chines of dog-flesh,
And mony when two wednesdayes meet together,
Where to be lowzie is a Gentleman,
And he that wears a clean shirt has his shrowd on.

Chi. I'll be your scholar, come if I like fooling.

Fool. You cannot choose but like it, fight you one day
I'll fool another, when your Surgeon's paid,
And all your leaks stopt, see whose stops are heaviest;
I'll have a shilling for a can of wine,
When you shall have two Sergeants for a Counter.

Boy. Come learn of us Lieutenant, hang your Iron up,
We'll find you cooler wars.

Chi. Come let's together,
I'll see your tricks, and as I like 'em.—— [Exeunt.]

Enter Memnon, Eumenes, and Captains.

Men. Why was there not such women in the camp then
Prepar'd to make me know 'em?

Eum. 'Twas no place Sir.

1 Capt. Why should they live in Tumults? they are crea-
Soft and of sober natures.

Mem. Cou'd not your wives,
Your Mothers, or your Sisters have been sent for
To exercise upon?

Eume. We thank your Lordship.

2 Capt. But do you mean?

Mem. I do mean.

2 Capt. What Sir?

Mem. To see her,
And see thee hang'd too an thou anger'st me,
And thousands of your throats cut, get ye from me,
Ye keep a prating of your points of manners,
And fill my head with lowzie circumstances,
Better have Ballads in't, your courtly worships,
How to put off my hat, you, how to turn me,
And you (forsooth) to blow my nose discreetly;
Let me alone, for I will love her, see her,
Talk to her, and mine own way.

Eume. She's the Princess.

Mem. Why let her be the Devil, I have spoke
When Thunder durst not check me, I must love;
I know she was a thing kept for me.

Eume. And I know Sir,
Though she were born yours, yet your strange behaviour
And want——

Mem. Thou liest.

Eum. I do not.

Mem. Ha!

Eume. I do not lye Sir,
I say you want fair language, nay 'tis certain
You cannot say good morrow.

Mem. Ye Dog-whelps,
The proudest of your prating tongues——

Eume. Doe, kill us,
Kill us for telling truth: for my part, General,
I would not live to see men make a may-game
Of him I have made a Master, kill us quickly,
Then ye may——

Mem. What?

Eume. Doe what you list, draw your sword childishly
Upon your Servants that are bound to tell ye;
I am weary of my life.

1 Capt. And I.

2 Capt. And all Sir.

Eume. Goe to the Princess, make her sport, cry to her
I am the glorious man of war.

Mem. Pray ye leave me,
I am sorry I was angry, I'll think better,
Pray no more words.

Eume. Good Sir.

Mem. Nay then.

2 Capt. We are gone Sir. [Exeunt Eume. and Capt.]

Enter Princess, Calis, Lucippe, Cleanthe.

Cal. How came he hither? see for Heavens sake wenchies,
What face, and what postures he puts on,
I do not think he is perfect.

Cle. If your love

{ Mem. walks aside full of strange gestures.
Have

Have not betray'd his little wits, he's well enough,
As well as he will be.

Cal. Mark how he muses.

Lucip. H'as a Batalia now in's brains, he draws out, now
Have at ye Harpers.

Cle. See, see, there the fire fails.

Lucip. Look what an Alphabet of faces he runs through.

Cle. O love, love, how amorously thou look'st
In an old rusty armour.

Cle. I'll away, for by my troth I fear him.

Lucip. Fear the gods, Madam,
And never care what man can do, this fellow
With all his frights about him and his furies,
His Larums, and his Launces, Swords, and Targets,
Nay case him up in armour Cap-a-pe,
Yet durst I undertake within two hours,
If he durst charge, to give him such a shake,
Should shake his Valour off, and make his shanks to ake.

Cle. For shame no more.

Cal. He muses still.

Cle. The Devil——

Why should this old dryed timber chopt with thunder——

Cal. Old Wood burns quickest.

Lucip. Out, you would say Madam,
Give me a green slick that may hold me heat,
And smoak me soundly too; He turns, and sees ye. Memnon
Cle. There's no avoiding now, have at ye. comes to her.

Mem. Lady.

The more I look upon ye. [Stays her.]

Cle. The more you may, Sir.

Cal. Let him alone.

Mem. I would desire your patience.

The more I say I look, the more —— [Stays her.]

Lucip. My Fortune,

'Tis very apt, Sir.

Mem. Women, let my Fortune

And me alone I wish ye, pray come this way,
And stand you still there Lady.

Cal. Leave the words Sir, and leap into the meaning.

Mem. Then again :

I tell you I do love ye.

Cal. Why?

Mem. No questions: pray no more questions.

I do love you, infinitely: why do you smile?

Am I ridiculous?

Cal. I am monstrous fearful, no, I joy you love me.

Mem. Joy on then, and be proud on't, I do love you,
Stand still, do not trouble me you Women.

He loves you Lady at whose feet have kneel'd
Princes to beg their freedoms, he whose valour
Has overrun whole Kingdoms.

Cal. That makes me doubt, Sir,

'Twill overrun me too.

Mem. He whose Sword.

Cle. Talk not so big, Sir, you will fright the Princess,

Mem. Ha. Lucippe. No forsooth.

Cal. I know ye have done wonders.

Mem. I have and will do more and greater, braver;
And for your beauty miracles, name that Kingdom
And take your choice.

Cal. Sir I am not ambitious.

Mem. Ye shall be, 'tis the Child of Glory: she that I love
Whom my desires shall magnifie, time stories,
And all the Empires of the Earth.

Cle. I would fain ask him——

Lucip. Prithee be quiet, he will beat us both else.

Cle. What will ye make me then, Sir?

Mem. I will make thee

Stand still and hold thy peace; I have a heart, Lady.

Cal. Ye were a monster else.

Mem. A loving heart,

A truly loving heart.

Cal. Alas, how came it?

Mem. I would you had it in your hand, sweet Lady,

To see the truth it bears you.

Cal. Do you give it.

Lucip. That was well thought upon.

Cle. 'Twill put him to't Wench.

Cal. And you shall see I dare accept it, Sir,
Tak't in my hand and view it: if I find it
A loving and a sweet heart, as you call it,
I am bound, I am.

Mem. No more, I'll send it to ye,
As I have honour in me, you shall have it.

Cle. Handsomly done, Sir, and perfum'd by all means,
The Weather's warm, Sir.

Mem. With all circumstance.

Lucip. A Napkin wrought most curiously.

Mem. Divinely.

Cle. Put in a Goblet of pure Gold.

Mem. Yes in Jacinth

That she may see the Spirit through.

Lucip. Ye have greas'd him
For chewing love again in haste.

Cle. If he should do it.

Cal. If Heaven should fall we should have larks; he do it!

Cle. See how he thinks upon't.

Cal. He will think these three years
Ere he prove such an Ass, I lik't his offer,
There was no other way to put him off else.

Mem. I will do it——

Lady expect my heart.

Cal. I do, Sir.

Mem. Love it, for 'tis a heart that—— and so I leave ye.
Exit Mem.

Cle. Either he is stark mad,

Or else I thinks he means it.

Cal. He must be stark mad

Or else he will never do it, 'tis vain Glory,
And want of judgment that provokes this in him;
Sleep and Society cures all: his heart?

No, no, good Gentleman there's more belongs to't,
Hearts are at higher prices, let's go in
And there examine him a little better.

Shut all the doors behind for fear he follow,
I hope I have lost a lover, and am glad on't. [Ex. Lady.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Memnon alone.

Mem. 'Tis but to dye, Dogs do it, Ducks with dabling,
Birds sing away their Souls, & Babies sleep 'em,
Why do I talk of that is treble vantage?
For in the other World she is bound to have me;
Her Princely word is past: my great desert too
Will draw her to come after presently,
'Tis justice, and the gods must see it done too.
Besides, no Brother, Father, Kindred there
Can hinder us, all languages are alike too.
There love is everlasting, ever young,
Free from Diseases, ages, jealousies,
Bawds, Beldames, Painters, Purgers: dye? 'tis nothing,
Men drown themselves for joy to draw in Juleps
When they are hot with Wine: In dreams we do it.
And many a handsom Wench that loves the sport well,
Gives up her Soul so in her Lovers bosome;
But I must be incised first, cut and open'd,
My heart, and handsomely, ta'n from me; stay there,
Dead once, stay, let me think again, who do I know there?
For else to wander up and down unwaited on
And unregarded in my place and project,
Is for a Sowters Soul, not an old Souldiers.
My brave old Regiments—— I there it goes,
That have been kill'd before me, right. ——

Enter

Enter Chilax.

Chil. He's here, and I must trouble him.
Mem. Then those I have conquer'd
 To make my train full.
Chi. Sir.
Mem. My Captains then——
Chi. Sir, I beseech ye.
Mem. For to meet her there
 Being a Princess and a Kings sole Sister
 With great accomodation must be cared for.
Chi. Weigh but the Souldiers poverty.
Mem. Mine own Troop first
 For they shall die.
Chi. How, what's this?
Mem. Next——
Chi. Shall I speak louder, Sir?
Mem. A square Battalia——
Chi. You do not think of us
Mem. Their Armour's gilded——
Chi. Good noble Sir
Mem. And round about such Engines
 Shall make Hell shake.
Chi. Ye do not mock me.
Mem. For, Sir,
 I will be strong. as brave——
Chi. Ye may consider,
 You know we have serv'd you long enough.
Mem. No Souldier
 That ever landed on the blest Elyzium
 Did or shall march, as I will.
Chi. Would ye would march, Sir,
 Up to the King and get us——
Mem. King nor Keiser
 Shall equal me in that world.
Chi. What a Devil ails he?
Mem. Next, the rare beauties of those Towns I fir'd.
Chi. I speak of money, Sir.
Mem. Ten thousand Coaches——
Chi. O pounds, Sir, pounds I beseech your Lordship,
 Let Coaches run out of your remembrance.
Mem. In which the wanton Cupids, and the Graces
 Drawn with the Western winds kindling desires,
 And then our Poets——
Chi. Then our pay.
Mem. For Chilax when the triumph comes; the Princess
 Then, for I will have a Heaven made——
Chi. Bless your Lordship!
 Stand still, Sir.
Mem. So I do, and in it——
Chi. Death Sir,
 You talk you know not what.
Mem. Such rare devices:
 Make me I say a Heaven.
Chi. I say so too, Sir.
Mem. For here shall run a Constellation.
Chi. And there a pissing Conduit.
Mem. Ha!
Chi. With wine, Sir.
Mem. A Sun there in his height, there such a Planet.
Chi. But where's our money, where runs that?
Mem. Ha?
Chi. Money,
 Money an't like your Lordship.
Mem. Why all the carriage shall come behind, the stuff,
 Rich hangings, treasure;
 Or say we have none.
Chi. I may say so truly,
 For hang me if I have a Groat: I have serv'd well
 And like an honest man: I see no reason——
Mem. Thou must needs die good Chilax.
Chi. Very well, Sir.
Mem. I will have honest, valiant souls about me,
 I cannot miss thee.

Chi. Dye?
Mem. Yes die, and Pelius,
Eumenes and Polybius: I shall think
 Of more within these two hours.
Chi. Dye Sir?
Mem. I, Sir,
 And ye shall dye.
Chi. When, I beseech your Lordship?
Mem. To morrow see ye do dye.
Chi. A short warning,
 Troth, Sir, I am ill prepar'd.
Mem. I dye my self then,
 Beside there's reason——
Chi. Oh!
Mem. I pray thee tell me,
 For thou art a great Dreamer.
Chi. I can dream, Sir,
 If I eat well and sleep well.
Mem. Was it never
 By Dream or Apparition open'd to thee——
Chi. He's mad.
Mem. What the other world was, or Elyzium?
 Didst never travel in thy sleep?
Chi. To Taverns,
 When I was drunk o're night; or to a Wench,
 There's an Elyzium for ye, a young Lady
 Wrapt round about ye like a Snake: is that it?
 Or if that strange Elyzium that you talk of
 Be where the Devil is, I have dream't of him,
 And that I have had him by the horns, and rid him,
 He trots the Dagger out o'th' sheath.
Mem. Elyzium,
 The blessed fields man.
Chi. I know no fields blessed, but those I have gain'd by.
 I have dream't I have been in Heaven too.
Mem. There, handle that place; that's Elyzium:
Chi. Brave singing, and brave dancing,
 And rare things.
Mem. All full of flowers.
Chi. And Pot-herbs.
Mem. Bowers for lovers,
 And everlasting ages of delight.
Chi. I slept not so far.
Mem. Meet me on those banks
 Some two days hence.
Chi. In Dream, Sir?
Mem. No in death, Sir.
 And there I Muster all, and pay the Souldier.
 Away, no more, no more.
Chi. God keep your Lordship:
 This is fine dancing for us.

Enter Siphax.

Si. Where's the General?
Chi. There's the old sign of Memnon, where the soul is
 You may go look as I have.
Si. What's the matter?
Chi. Why question him and see; he talks of Devils;
 Hells, Heavens, Princes, Powers, and Potentates,
 You must to th' pot too:
Si. How? (chafe of.)
Chi. Do you know Elyzium? a tale he talks the Wild-goose
Si. Elyzium? I have read of such a place.
Chi. Then get ye to him,
 Ye are as fine company as can be fitted: [Exit Chilax.]
 Your Worships fairly met.
Si. Mercy upon us,
 What ails this Gentleman?
Mem. Provision——
Si. How his head works?
Mem. Between two Ribbs,
 If he cut short or mangle me; I'll take him
 And twirle his neck about.
Si. Now Gods defend us.

Mem.

Mem. In a pure Cup transparent, with a writing
To signifie——
Si. I never knew him thus :
Sure he's bewitch'd, or poyson'd.
Mem. Who's there ?
Si. I Sir.
Mem. Come hither, Siphax.
Si. Yes, how does your Lordship ?
Mem. Well, God a mercy Souldier, very well,
But prithee tell me——
Si. Any thing I can, Sir.
Mem. What durst thou do to gain the rarest Beauty
The World has ?
Si. That the World has ? 'tis worth doing.
Mem. Is it so ; but what doing bears it ?
Si. Why ? any thing ; all danger it appears to.
Mem. Name some of those things : do.
Si. I would undertake, Sir,
A Voyage round about the World.
Mem. Short, Siphax.
A Merchant does it to spice pots of Ale.
Si. I wou'd swim in Armour.
Mem. Short still ; a poor Jade
Loaden will take a stream and stem it strongly
To leap a Mare.
Si. The plague, I durst.
Mem. Still shorter,
I'll cure it with an Onion.
Si. Surfeits.
Mem. Short still :
They are often Physicks for our healths, and help us.
Si. I wou'd stand a breach.
Mem. Thine honour bids thee, Souldier :
'Tis shame to find a second cause.
Si. I durst, Sir,
Fight with the fellest Monster.
Mem. That's the poorest,
Man was ordain'd their Master ; durst ye dye, Sir ?
Si. How ? dye my Lord !
Mem. Dye Siphax ; take thy Sword,
And come by that door to her ; there's a price
To buy a lusty love at.
Si. I am content, Sir,
To prove no Purchaser.
Mem. Away thou World-worm,
Thou win a matchless Beauty ?
Si. 'Tis to lose't Sir,
For being dead, where's the reward I reach at ?
The love I labour for ?
Mem. There it begins Fool,
Thou art meerly cozen'd ; for the loves we now know
Are but the heats of half an hour ; and hated
Desires stir'd up by nature to encrease her ;
Licking of one another to a lust ;
Course and base appetites, earths meer inheritours
And Heirs of Idleness and blood ; Pure Love,
That, that the soul affects, and cannot purchase
While she is loaden with our flesh, that Love, Sir,
Which is the price of honour, dwells not here,
Your Ladies eyes are lampless to that Vertue,
That beauty smiles not on a cheek washt over,
Nor scents the sweet of Ambers ; below, Siphax
Below us, in the other World Elyzium,
Where's no moredying, no despairing, mourning,
Where all desires are full, desarts down loaden,
There Siphax, there, where loves are ever living.
Si. Why do we love in this World then ?
Mem. To preserve it,
The maker lost his work else ; but mark Siphax,
What issues that love bears.
Si. Why Children, Sir.
I never heard him talk thus ; thus divinely
And sensible before.
Mem. It does so, Siphax,

Things like our selves, as sensual, vain, unvented
Bubbles, and breaths of air, got with an itching
As blisters are, and bred, as much corruption
Flows from their lives, sorrow conceives and shapes 'em,
And oftentimes the death of those we love most.
The breeders bring them to the World to curse 'em,
Crying they creep amongst us like young Cats.
Cares and continual Crosses keeping with 'em,
They make Time old to tend them, and experience
An afs, they alter so ; they grow and goodly,
Ere we can turn our thoughts, like drops of water
They fall into the main, are known no more ;
This is the love of this World ; I must tell thee
For thou art understanding.
Si. What you please, Sir.
Mem. And as a faithful man :
Nay I dare trust thee,
I love the Princess.
Si. There 'tis, that has fired him,
I knew he had some inspiration.
But does she know it, Sir ?
Mem. Yes marry does she,
I have given my heart unto her.
Si. If ye love her.
Mem. Nay, understand me, my heart taken from me,
Out of my Body, man, and so brought to her.
How lik'st thou that brave offer ? there's the love
I told thee of ; and after death, the living ;
She must in justice come Boy, ha ?
Si. Your heart, Sir ?
Mem. I, so by all means, Siphax.
Si. He loves roast well
That eats the Spit.
Mem. And since thou art come thus fitly,
I'll do it presently and thou shalt carry it,
For thou canst tell a story and describe it.
And I conjure thee, Siphax, by thy gentry,
Next by the glorious Battels we have fought in,
By all the dangers, wounds, heats, colds, distresses,
Thy love next, and obedience, nay thy life.
Si. But one thing, first, Sir, if she pleas'd to grant it,
Could ye not love her here and live ? consider.
Mem. Ha ? Yes, I think I could.
Si. 'Twould be far nearer,
Besides the sweets here would induce the last love
And link it in.
Mem. Thou sayest right, but our ranks here
And bloods are bars between us, she must stand off too
As I perceive she does.
Si. Desert and Duty
Makes even all, Sir.
Mem. Then the King, though I
Have merited as much as man can, must not let her,
So many Princes covetous of her beauty ;
I wou'd with all my heart, but 'tis impossible.
Si. Why, say she marry after.
Mem. No, she dares not ;
The gods dare not do ill ; come.
Si. Do you mean it ?
Mem. Lend me thy knife, and help me off.
Si. For heaven sake ;
Be not so stupid mad, dear General.
Mem. Dispatch, I say.
Si. As ye love that ye look for,
Heaven and the blessed life.
Mem. Hell take thee, Coxcomb,
Why dost thou keep me from it ? thy knife I say.
Si. Do but this one thing, on my knees I beg it,
Stay but two hours till I return again.
For I will to her, tell her all your merits,
Your most unvalu'd love, and last your danger ;
If she relent, then live still, and live loving,
Happy, and high in favour : if she frown——
Mem. Shall I be sure to know it ?

Si. As I live, Sir,
My quick return shall either bring ye fortune,
Or leave you to your own fate.

Mem. Two hours?

Si. Yes, Sir.

Mem. Let it be kept away, I will expect it. [Ex. Mem. Si.]

Enter Chilax, Fool and Boy.

Chi. You dainty wits? two of ye to a Cater,
To cheat him of a dinner?

Boy. Ten at Court, Sir,
Are few enough, they are as wise as we are.

Chi. Hang ye, I'll eat at any time, and any where,
I never make that part of want, preach to me
What ye can do, and when ye list.

Fool. Your patience,
'Tis a hard day at Court, a fish day.

Chi. So it seems, Sir,
The fins grow out of thy face.

Fool. And to purchase
This day the company of one dear Custard,
Or a morsel of Rice ap Thomas, needs a main wit;
Beef we can bear before us lined with Brewes
And tubs of Pork; vociferating Veals,
And Tongues that ne're told lye yet.

Chi. Line thy mouth with 'em.

Fool. Thou hast need, and great need,
For these finny fish-dayes,
The Officers understandings are so flegmatick,
They cannot apprehend us.

Chi. That's great pity,
For you deserve it, and being apprehended
The whip to boot; Boy what do you so near me?
I dare not trust your touch Boy.

Enter Stremon and his Boy.

Boy. As I am vertuous,
What, thieves amongst our selves?

Chi. Stremon.

Stre. Lieutenant.

Chi. Welcome a shore, a shore.

Fool. What Monsieur Musick?

Stre. My fine Fool.

Boy. Fellow Crack, why what a consort
Are we now blest withal?

Fool. Fooling and fiddling,
Nay and we live not now boys; what new songs, Sirra?

Stre. A thousand, man, a thousand.

Fool. Itching Airs
Alluding to the old sport.

Stre. Of all sizes.

Fool. And how does small Tym Treble here; the heart on't?

Boy. To do you service.

Fool. O Tym the times, the times Tym.

Stre. How does the General,
And next what money's stirring?

Chi. For the General
He's here, but such a General!
The time's chang'd, Stremon,
He was the liberal General, and the loving,
The feeder of a Souldier, and the Father,
But now become the stupid'st.

Stre. Why, what ails he?

Chi. Nay, if a Horse knew, and his head's big enough,
I'll hang for't; did'st thou ever see a Dog
Run mad o'th' tooth-ache, such another toy
Is he now, so he glotes and grins, and bites.

Fool. Why hang him quickly,
And then he cannot hurt folks.

Chi. One hour raving,
Another smiling, not a word the third hour,
I tell thee Stremon h'as a stirring soul,
What ever it attempts or labours at
Would wear out twenty bodies in another.

Fool. I'll keep it out of me, for mine's but Buckram,
He would bounce that out in two hours.

Chi. Then he talks

The strangest and the maddest stuff from reason,
Or any thing ye offer; stand thou there,
I'll show thee how he is, for I'll play Memnon
The strangest General that ere thou heardst of, Stremon.

Stre. My Lord.

Chi. Go presently and find me
A black Horse with a blew tail; bid the blank Cornet
Charge through the Sea, and sink the Navy: softly,
Our souls are things not to be waken'd in us
With larums, and loud bawlings, for in Elyzium
Stillness and quietness, and sweetness, Sirra,
I will have, for it much concerns mine honour,
Such a strong reputation for my welcome
As all the world shall say: for in the forefront
So many on white Unicorns, next them
My Gentlemen, my Cavaliers and Captains,
Ten deep and trapt with Tenter-hooks to take hold
Of all occasions: for Friday cannot fish out
The end I aim at; tell me of Diocles,
And what he dares do? dare he meet me naked?
Thunder in this hand? in his left—— Fool——

Fool. Yes, Sir.

Chi. Fool, I would have thee fly i'th' Air, fly swiftly
To that place where the Sun sets, there deliver.

Fool. Deliver? what, Sir?

Chi. This Sir, this ye slave, Sir, [All laugh.
Death ye rude Rogues, ye Scarabe's.

Fool. Hold for Heav'ns sake, Lieutenant, sweet Lieutenant.

Chi. I have done, Sir.

Boy. You have wrung his neck off.

Chi. No Boy, 'tis the nature
Of this strange passion when't hits to hale people
Along by th' hair, to kick 'em, break their heads.

Fool. Do ye call this Acting, was your part to beat me?

Chi. Yes, I must act all that he does.

Fool. Plague act ye,
I'll act no more.

Stre. 'Tis but to shew man:

Fool. Then man

He should have shew'd it only, and not done it,
I am sure he beat me beyond Action,
Gouts o' your heavy fist.

Chi. I'll have thee to him,
Thou hast a fine wit, fine fool, and canst play rarely.
He'll hug thee, Boy, and stroke thee.

Fool. I'll to the stocks first,
E're I be strok't thus.

Stre. But how came he, Chilax?

Chi. I know not that.

Stre. I'll to him.

Chi. He loves thee well,
And much delights to hear thee sing; much taken
He has been with thy battel songs.

Stre. If Musick
Can find his madness; I'll so fiddle him,
That out it shall by th' shoulders.

Chi. My fine Fidler,
He'll firk you and ye take not heed too: 'twill be rare sport
To see his own trade triumph over him;
His Lute lac'd to his head, for creeping hedges;
For many there's none stirring; try good Stremon
Now what your silver sound can do; our voices
Are but vain Echoes.

Stre. Something shall be done
Shall make him understand all; let's toth' Tavern,
I have some few Crowns left yet: my whistle wet once
I'll pipe him such a Paven——

Chi. Hold thy head up,
I'll cure it with a quart of wine; come Coxcomb;
Come Boy take heed of Napkins.

Fool. You'd no more acting?

Cal. No more Chicken.

Fool. Go then.

[Exeunt omnes.]

Enter Siphax at one door, and a Gentleman at the other.

Si. God save you Sir; pray how might I see the Princess?

Gent. Why very fitly, Sir, she's even now ready
To walk out this way intoth' Park; stand there,
Ye cannot miss her sight, Sir.

Si. I much thank ye.

[Exit Gentleman.]

Enter Calis, Lucippe, and Cleanthe.

Cal. Let's have a care, for I'll assure ye Wenches
I wou'd not meet him willingly again;
For though I do not fear him, yet his fashion
I wou'd not be acquainted much with.

Cle. Gentle Lady,
Ye need not fear, the walks are view'd and empty,
But me thinks, Madam, this kind heart of his—

Lucip. He's slow a coming.

Si. Keep me ye blest Angels,
What killing power is this?

Cal. Why, dost thou look for't?
Dost think he spoke in earnest?

Lucip. Methinks, Madam,
A Gentleman should keep his word; and to a Lady,
A Lady of your excellencies.

Cal. Out Fool!
Send me his heart? what should we do with't? dance it?

Lucip. Dry it and drink it for the Worms.

Cal. Who's that?

What man stands there?

Clean. Where?

Cal. There.

Cle. A Gentleman,
Which I beseech your grace to honour so much,
As know him for your servants Brother.

Cal. Siphax?

Cle. The same an't please your grace; what does he here?
Upon what business? and I ignorant?

Cal. He's grown a handsome Gentleman: good Siphax
Y'are welcome from the Wars; wou'd ye with us, Sir?
Pray speak your will: he blushes, be not fearful,
I can assure ye for your Sisters sake, Sir,
There's my hand on it.

Cle. Do you hear, Sir?

Cal. Sure these Souldiers
Are all grown senseless.

Cle. Do ye know where ye are, Sir?

Cal. Tongue-tyed,
He looks not well too, by my life, I think—

Cle. Speak for shame speak.

Lucip. A man wou'd speak—

Cal. These Souldiers
Are all dumb Saints: consider and take time, Sir,
Let's forward Wenches, come, his Palat's down.

Luc. Dare these men charge i'th' face of fire and bullets?
And hang their heads down at a handsome Woman?

Good master Mars, that's a foul fault. [Ex. Prim. Lucippe.]

Cle. Fye beast,
No more my Brother.

Si. Sister, honoured Sister.

Cle. Dishonoured fool.

Si. I do confes.

Cle. Fye on thee.

Si. But stay till I deliver.

Cle. Let me go,
I am ashamed to own thee.

Si. Fare ye well then,

Ye must ne're see me more.

Cle. Why stay dear Siphax,
My anger's past; I will hear ye speak.

Si. O Sister!

Cle. Out with it Man.

Si. O I have drunk my mischief.

Cle. Ha? what?

Si. My destruction.

In at mine eyes I have drunk it; O the Princess,
The rare sweet Princess!

Cle. How fool? the rare Princess?

Was it the Princess that thou said'st?

Si. The Princess.

Cle. Thou dost not love her sure, thou darst not.

Si. Yes by Heaven.

Cle. Yes by Heaven? I know thou darst not.
The Princess? 'tis thy life the knowledge of it,
Presumption that will draw into it all thy kindred,
And leave 'em slaves and succourless; the Princess?
Why she's a sacred thing to see and worship,
Fixt from us as the Sun is, high, and glorious,
To be ador'd not doted on; desire things possible,
Thou foolish young man, nourish not a hope
Will hale thy heart out.

Si. 'Tis my destinie,
And I know both disgrace and death will quit it,
If it be known.

Cle. Pursue it not then, Siphax,
Get thee good wholesome thoughts may nourish thee,
Go home and pray.

Si. I cannot.

Cle. Sleep then, Siphax,
And dream away thy doting.

Si. I must have her,

Or you no more your Brother; work Cleanthe,
Work, and work speedily, or I shall die Wench.

Cle. Dye then, I dare forget; farewell.

Si. Farewel Sister.

Farewel for ever, see me buried.

Cle. Stay.

Pray stay: he's all my brothers: no way Siphax,
No other Woman?

Si. None, none, she or sinking.

Cle. Go and hope well, my life I'll venture for thee
And all my art, a Woman may work miracles;
No more, pray heartily against my fortunes,
For much I fear a main one.

Si. I shall do it.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter a Priestess of Venus and a Boy.

Pri. Find him by any means; and good child tell him
He has forgot his old friend, give him this,
And say this night without excuse or business,
As ever he may find a friend, come to me,
He knows the way and how, begun.

Boy. I gallop.

[Exit Boy.]

Enter Cleanthe.

Cle. I have been looking you.

Pri. The fair Cleanthe,
What may your business be?

Cle. O holy Mother
Such business, of such strange weight, now or never.
As ye have loved me, as ye do or may do,
When I shall find a fit time.

Pri. If by my means
Your business may be fitted; ye know me,
And how I am tyed unto you; be bold Daughter
To build your best hopes.

Cle. O but 'tis a strange one,
Stuck with as many dangers—

Pri. There's the working,
Small things perform themselves and give no pleasures;
Be confident, through death I'll serve.

Clea. Here. Pri. Fye no corruption.

Cle. Take it; 'tis yours,

And goodness is no gall to th' Conscience,
I know ye have ways to vent it: ye may hold it.

Pr. I'll keep it for ye; when?

Cle. To morrow morning

I'll visit ye again; and when occasion
Offers it self—

Pr. Instruct me, and have at ye.

Cle. Farewel till then; be sure.

Pri. As your own thoughts, Lady.

Cle. 'Tis a main work, and full of fear. [Exit Cle.]

Pri. Fools only

Make their effects seem fearful, farewell daughter.
This gold was well got for my old tuff Souldier,
Now I shall be his sweet again; what business
Is this she has a foot? some lusty lover
Beyond her line, the young Wench would fain piddle,
A little to revive her must be thought of,
'Tis even so, she must have it; but how by my means,
A Devil, can she drive it? I that wait still
Before the Goddess, giving Oracle,
How can I profit her? 'tis her own project,
And if she cast it false, her own fault be it. [Exit Priest.]

Enter Polydore, Eumenes, Captains, Stremon.

Pol. Why, this is utter madness.

Eum. Thus it is, Sir.

Pol. Only the Princess's sight?

1 Cap. All we can judge at.

Pol. This must be lookt to timely.

Eum. Yes, and wisely.

Pol. He does not offer at his life?

Eum. Not yet, Sir,

That we can hear of.

Pol. Noble Gentlemen,

Let me entreat your watches over him,
Ye cannot do a worthier work.

2 Cap. We came, Sir,
Provided for that service.

Pol. Where is Chitax?

Stremon. A little busie, Sir.

Pol. Is the Fool and Boy here?

Stremon. They are, Sir.

Enter Memnon.

Pol. Let 'em be still so; and as they find his humours.

Eumenes. Now ye may behold him.

Pol. Stand close, and make no noise;

By his eyes now, Gentlemen,
I guess him full of anger.

Eumenes. Be not seen there.

Mem. The hour's past long ago, he's false and fearful,
Coward, go with thy Caitive soul, thou Cur Dog.
Thou cold Clod, wild fire warm thee, monstrous fearful,
I know the Slave shakes but to think on't.

Pol. Who's that?

Eumenes. I know not, Sir.

Mem. But I shall catch ye, Rascal,
Your mangy Soul is not immortal here, Sir,
Ye must dye, and we must meet; we must, maggot,
Be sure we must, for not a Nook of Hell,
Not the most horrid Pit shall harbour thee;
The Devils tail sha'n't hide thee, but I'll have thee,
And how I'll use thee? whips and firebrands:
Tosting thy tail against a flame of wild fire,
And basting it with Brimstone, shall be nothing,
Nothing at all; I'll teach ye to be treacherous:
Was never Slave so swing'd since Hell was Hell
As I will swinge thy Slaves Soul; and be sure on't.

Pol. Is this imagination, or some circumstance?
For 'tis extream strange.

Eumenes. So is all he does, Sir. (Surgeon?)

Mem. Till then I'll leave ye; who's there? where's the Demagoras?

Dem. My Lord.

Mem. Bring the Surgeon:
And wait you too.

Enter Surgeon.

Pol. What wou'd he with a Surgeon?

Eum. Things mustering in his head: pray mark.

Mem. Come hither,
Have you brought your Instruments?

Sur. They are within, Sir.

Mem. Put to the doors a while there; ye can incise
To a hairs breadth without defacing.

Sur. Yes Sir.

Mem. And take out fairly from the flesh.

Sur. The least thing.

Mem. Well come hither; take off my doublet,
For look ye Surgeon, I must have ye cut
My Heart out here, and handsomly: Nay, stare not,
Nor do not start; I'll cut your throat else, Surgeon,
Come swear to do it.

Sur. Good Sir—

Mem. Sirrah, hold him,
I'll have but one blow at his head.

Sur. I'll do it,
Why what should we do living after you, Sir?
We'll dye before if ye please.

Mem. No, no.

Sur. Living? hang living.
Is there ne'r a Cat hole where I may creep through?
Would I were in the Indies. [Aside.]

Mem. Swear then, and after my death presently
To kill your selves and follow, as ye are honest,
As ye have faiths, and loves to me.

Dem. We'll do it.

Eum. Pray do not stir yet, we are near enough
To run between all dangers.

Mem. Here I am, Sir;
Come, look upon me, view the best way boldly,
Fear nothing, but cut home; if your hand shake, Sirrah,
Or any way deface my heart i'th' cutting,
Make the least scratch upon it; but draw it whole,
Excellent fair, shewing at all points, Surgeon,
The Honour and the Valour of the Owner,
Mixt with the most immaculate love I send it,
Look to't, I'll slice thee to the Soul.

Sur. Ne'r fear, Sir,
I'll do it daintily; would I were out once.

Mem. I will not have ye smile, Sirrah, when ye do it,
As though ye cut a Ladies Corn; 'tis scurvy:
Do me it as thou dost thy Prayers, seriously.

Sur. I'll do it in a dump, Sir.

Mem. In a Dog, Sir,
I'll have no dumps, nor dumplings; fetch your tools,
And then I'll tell ye more.

Sur. If I return
To hear more, I'll be hang'd for't.

Mem. Quick, quick,

Dem. Yes Sir,
With all the heels we have. [Exeunt Surgeon, Demagoras.]

Eumenes. Yet stand.

Pol. He'll do it.

Eum. He cannot, and we here.

Mem. Why when ye Rascals,
Ye dull Slaves: will ye come, Sir? Surgeon, fyringe,
Dog-leach, shall I come fetch ye?

Pol. Now I'll to him.
God save ye honour'd Brother.

Mem. My dear Polydore,
Welcome from travel, welcome; and how do ye?

Pol. Well Sir, would you were so.

Mem. I am, I thank ye.
You are a better'd man much, I the same still,
An old rude Souldier, Sir.

Pol. Pray be plain, Brother,
And tell me but the meaning of this Vision;
For to me it appears no more: so far
From common Course and Reason.

Mem. Thank thee, Fortune,
At length I have found the man: the man must do it,
The man in honour bound.

Pol. To do what?

Mem. Hark, for I will bless ye with the circumstance
Of that weak shadow that appear'd.

Pol. Speak on, Sir. [Walks with him.]

Mem. It is no Story for all ears.

Pol. The Princess?

Mem. Peace and hear all. [Whispers.]

Pol. How?

Eum. Sure 'tis dangerous
He starts so at it.

Pol. Your heart? do you know, Sir?

Mem. Yes, Pray thee be softer.

Pol. Me to do it?

Mem. Only reserv'd, and dedicated.

Pol. For shame, Brother,
Know what ye are, a man.

Mem. None of your Athens,
Good sweet Sir, no Philosophy, thou feel'st not
The honourable end, fool.

Pol. I am sure I feel
The shame and scorn that follows; have ye serv'd thus long
The glory of your Country, in your Conquests?
The envy of your Neighbours, in your Vertues?
Rul'd Armies of your own, given Laws to Nations,
Belov'd and fear'd as far as Fame has travell'd,
Call'd the most fortunate and happy Memnon,
To lose all here at home, poorly to lose it?
Poorly, and pettishly, ridiculously

To sling away your fortune? where's your Wisdom?
Where's that you govern'd others by, discretion?
Do's your Rule lastly hold upon your self? fie Brother,
How ye are fall'n? Get up into your honour,
The top branch of your bravery, and from thence,
Look and behold how little Memnon seems now.

Mem. Hum! 'tis well spoken; but dost thou think young
The tongues of Angels from my happiness (Scholar,
Could turn the end I aim at? no, they cannot.
This is no Book-case, Brother; will ye do it?
Use no more art, I am resolv'd.

Pol. Ye may Sir
Command me to do anything that's honest,
And for your noble end: but this, it carries——
Mem. Ye shall not be so honour'd; live an Ass still,
And learn to spell for profit: go, go study.

Eum. Ye must not hold him up so, he is lost then.
Mem. Get thee to School again, and talk of turnips,
And find the natural Cause out, why a Dog
Turns thrice about ere he lyes down: there's Learning.

Pol. Come, I will do it now; 'tis brave, I find it,
And now allow the reason.

Mem. O do you so, Sir?
Do ye find it currant?

Pol. Yes, yes, excellent.

Mem. I told ye.

Pol. I was foolish: I have here too
The rarest way to find the truth out; hark ye?
Ye shall be rul'd by me.

Mem. It will be: but——

Pol. I reach it,
If the worst fall, have at the worst; we'll both go.
But two days, and 'tis thus; ha?

Mem. 'Twill do well so.
Pol. Then is't not excellent, do ye conceive it?

Mem. 'Twill work for certain.

Pol. O'twill tickle her,
And you shall know then by a line.

Mem. I like it,

But let me not be fool'd again.

Pol. Doubt nothing,
You do me wrong then, get ye in there private
As I have taught ye; Basta.

Mem. Work. [Exit Memnon.]

Pol. I will do.

Eum. Have ye found the cause?

Pol. Yes, and the strangest, Gentlemen,
That e'r I heard of, anon I'll tell ye: Stremon
Be you still near him to affect his fancy,
And keep his thoughts off: let the Fool and Boy
Stay him, they may do some pleasure too: Eumenes
What if he had a Wench, a handsome Whore brought,
Rarely drest up, and taught to state it?

Eum. Well Sir.

Pol. His cause is meerly heat: and made believe
It were the Princess mad for him.

Eum. I think

'Twere not amiss.

1 Cap. And let him kiss her.

Pol. What else? (some

2 Cap. I'll be his Bawd an't please you, young and whole-
I can assure ye he shall have.

Eum. Faith let him.

Pol. He shall, I hope 'twill help him, walk a little
I'll tell you how his case stands, and my project
In which you may be mourners, but by all means
Stir not you from him, Stremon.

Strem. On our lives, Sir. [Exeunt.]

Enter Priests, and Chilax.

Pri. O y'are a precious man? two days in town
And never see your old Friend?

Chi. Prithee pardon me.

Pri. And in my Conscience if I had not sent.

Chi. No more, I would ha' come; I must.

Pri. I find ye,
God a mercy want, ye never care for me
But when your Slops are empty.

Chi. Ne'r fear that, Wench;
Shall find good currant Coin still; Is this the old House?

Pri. Have ye forgot it?

Chi. And the door still standing
That goes into the Temple?

Pri. Still.

Chi. The Robes too,
That I was wont to shift in here?

Pri. All here still. (through?)

Chi. O ye tuff Rogue, what troubles have I trotted
What fears and frights? every poor Mouse a Monster
That I heard stir, and every stick I trod on,
A sharp sting to my Conscience.

Pri. 'Las poor Conscience.

Chi. And all to liquor thy old Boots, Wench.

Pri. Out Beast:

How you talk?

Chi. I am old, Wench,
And talking to an old man is like a stomacher,
It keeps his blood warm.

Pri. But pray tell me?

Chi. Any thing.

Pri. Where did the Boy meet with ye? at a Wench sure?
At one end of a Wench, a Cup of Wine, sure?

Chi. Thou know'st I am too honest.

Pri. That's your fault,
And that the Surgeon knows.

Chi. Then farewell,

I will not fail ye soon.

Pri. Ye shall stay Supper;
I have sworn ye shall, by this ye shall.

Chi. I will, Wench;

But after Supper for an hour, my business.

Pri. And but an hour?

Chi. No

Chi. No by this kifs, that ended
I will return and all night in thine Arms wench. (time
Pr. No more, I'll take your meaning; come 'tis Supper
[Exeunt.

Enter Calis, Cleanthe, Lucippe.

Calis. Thou art not well.

Clean. Your grace fees more a great deal
Than I feel. (yet I lye) O Brother!

Cal. Mark her,
Is not the quickness of her eye consumed, wench?
The lively red and white?

Lucip. Nay she is much alter'd,
That on my understanding, all her sleeps Lady
Which were as found and sweet

Cle. Pray do not force me,
Good Madam, where I am not, to be ill,
Conceit's a double sickness; on my faith your highness
Is meer mistaken in me. } A Dead March within

Cal. I am glad on't. } of Drum and Sagbutts
Yet this I have ever noted when thou wast thus,
It still forerun some strange event: my Sister
Died when thou wast thus last: hark hark, ho,
What mournfull noise is this comes creeping forward?
Still it grows nearer, nearer, do ye hear it?

Enter Polydor, and Captains, Eumenes mourning.

Lucip. It seems some Souldiers funeral: see it enters.

Cal. What may it mean?

Pol. The Gods keep ye fair Calis.

Cal. This man can speak, and well; he stands and views us;
Wou'd I were ne'r worse look't upon: how humbly
His eyes are cast now to the Earth! pray mark him
And mark how rarely he has rankt his troubles:
See now he weeps, they all weep; a sweeter sorrow
I never look't upon, nor one that braver
Became his grief; your will with us?

Pol. Great Lady, } Plucks out the Cup.
Excellent beauty.

Cal. He speaks handsomely.
What a rare rhetorician his grief plaies!
That stop was admirable.

Pol. See, see thou Princess,
Thou great commander of all hearts.

Cal. I have found it,
Oh how my soul shakes!

Pol. See, see the noble heart
Of him that was the noblest: see and glory
(Like the proud God himself) in what thou hast purchas'd,
Behold the heart of Memnon: does it start ye?

Cal. Good gods, what has his wildness done?

Pol. Look boldlie,
You boldlie said you durst, look wretched woman,
Nay flie not back fair follie, 'tis too late now,
Vertue and blooming honour bleed to death here,
Take it, the Legacie of Love bequeath'd ye,
Of cruel Love a cruel Legacie;
What was the will that wrought it then? can ye weep?
Imbalm it in your truest tears
If women can weep a truth, or ever sorrow funk yet
Into the soul of your sex, for 'tis a Jewel
The worlds worth cannot weigh down,
Take it Lady; And with it all (I dare not curse) my sorrows,
And may they turn to Serpents.

Eumen. How she looks
Still upon him! see now a tear steals from her.

2 Capt. But still she keeps her eye firm.

Pol. Next read this,
But since I see your spirit somewhat troubled
Ple doe it for ye.

2 Capt. Still she eyes him mainlie.

*Goe happy heart for thou shalt lye
Intomb'd in her for whom I dye
Example of her cruelty.*

*Tell her if she chance to chide
Me for slowness in her pride
That it was for her I died.*

*If a tear escape her eye
'Tis not for my memory
But thy rights of obsequy.*

*The Altar was my loving breast,
My heart the sacrificed beast,
And I was my self the Priest.*

*Your body was the sacred shrine,
Your cruel mind the power divine
Pleas'd with hearts of men, not kine.*

Eumen. Now it pours down.

Pol. I like it rare: Ladie.

Eumen. How greedily she swallows up his language?
2 Capt. Her eye inhabits on him.

Pol. Cruel Ladie,
Great as your beautie scornfull; had your power
But equal poise on all hearts, all hearts perish't;
But Cupid has more shafts than one, more flames too;
And now he must be open ey'd, 'tis Justice:
Live to enjoy your longing; live and laugh at
The losses and the miseries we suffer;
Live to be spoken when your crueltye
Has cut off all the vertue from this Kingdom,
Turn'd honour into earth, and faithful service.

Cal. I swear his anger's excellent.

Pol. Truth, and most tried love
Into disdain and downfall.

Calis. Still more pleasing.

Pol. Live then I say famous for civil slaughters,
Live and lay out your triumphs, gild your glories,
Live and be spoken this is she, this Ladie,
This goodly Ladie, yet most killing beautie;
This with the two edg'd eyes, the heart for hardness
Outdoing rocks; and coldness, rocks of Crystal.
This with the swelling soul, more coy of Courtship
Than the proud sea is when the shores embrace him;
Live till the mothers find ye, read your story,
And fow their barren curses on your beauty,
Till those that have enjoy'd their loves despise ye,
Till Virgins pray against ye, old age find ye,
And even as wasted coals glow in their dying,
So may the Gods reward ye in your ashes:
But y'are the Sister of my King; more prophecies
Else I should utter of ye, true loves and loyal
Bless themselves ever from ye: so I leave ye.

Cal. Prethee be angry still young man: good fair Sir
Chide me again, what wou'd this man doe pleas'd,
That in his passion can bewitch souls? stay.

Eumen. Upon my life she loves him.

Calis. Pray stay. Pol. No.

Cal. I do command ye.

Pol. No, ye cannot Ladie,
I have a spell against ye, Faith and Reason,
Ye are too weak to reach me: I have a heart too;
But not for hawks meat Ladie.

Cal. Even for Charity

Leave me not thus afflicted: you can teach me.

Pol. How can you Preach that Charity to others
That in your own soul are an Atheist,
Believing neither power nor fear? I trouble ye,
The Gods be good unto ye.

Cal. Amen.

Lucip. Ladie.

[She Swounds

Cel. O royal Madam, Gentlemen for heaven sake. } They
Pol. Give her fresh air, she comes again: away firs } come
And here stand close till we perceive the working. } back.

Eumen. Ye have undone all.

Pol. So I fear.

2 Capr. She loves ye.

Eumen. And then all hopes lost this way.

Pol. Peace she rises.

Clean. Now for my purpose Fortune.

Calis. Where's the Gentleman?

Lucip. Gone Madam.

Calis. Why gone?

Lucip. H'as dispatch't his business.

Calis. He came to speak with me,
He did.

Clean. He did not.

Calis. For I had many questions.

Lucip. On my Faith Madam, he
Talk't a great while to ye.

Calis. Thou conceiv'st not,
He talk't not as he should doe; O my heart
Away with that sad sight; didst thou e're love me?

Lucip. Why do you make that question?

Calis. If thou didst

Run, run wench, run: nay see how thou stir'st.

Lucip. Whither?

Calis. If 'twere for any thing to please thy self Thou woud'st run toth' devil: but I am grown—

Clean. Fie Lady.

Cal. I ask none of your fortunes, nor your loves,
None of your bent desires I slack, ye are not
In love with all men, are ye? one for shame
You will leave your honour'd mistress? why do ye stare so?
What is that ye see about me, tell me?
Lord what am I become? I am not wilde sure,
Heaven keep that from me: O Cleanthe help me,
O. I am sunk to death. (gainst ye,

Cle. Ye have offended and mightily, love is incenst a-
And therefore take my Counsel, to the Temple,
For that's the speediest physick: before the Goddess
Give your repentant prayers: ask her will,
And from the Oracle attend your sentence,
She is milde and mercifull.

Calis. I will: O Venus

Even as thou lov'st thy self!

Clean. Now for my fortune. [Exeunt Cal. and women.

Pol. What shall I doe?

1 Capr. Why make your self.

Pol. I dare not,

No Gentlemen, I dare not be a villain,
Though her bright beauty would entice an Angel.
I will toth' King my last hope: get him a woman
As we before concluded: and as ye pass
Give out the Spartans are in arms; and terrible;
And let some letters to that end be feign'd too
And sent to you, some Posts too, to the General;
And let me work: be ne're him still.

Eumen. We will Sir.

Pol. Farewel: and pray for all: what e're I will ye
Doe it, and hope a fair end.

Eumen. The Gods speed ye. [Exeunt.

Enter Stremon, Fool, Boy, and Servants.

Servants. He lies quiet.

Strem. Let him lye, and as I told ye
Make ready for this shew: h'as divers times
Been calling upon Orpheus to appear
And shew the joyes: now I will be that Orpheus,
And as I play and sing, like beasts and trees
I wou'd have you shap't and enter: thou a Dog, fool,
I have sent about your sutes: the Boy a bush,
An Ass you, you a Lion.

Fool. I a Dog?

I'll fit you for a Dog. Bow wow.

Strem. 'Tis excellent,
Steal in and make no noise.

Fool. Bow wow.

Strem. Away Rogue. [Exeunt.

Enter Priestess, and Chilax.

Priest. Good sweet friend be not long.

Chi. Thou think'st each hour ten
Till I be ferreting.

Prie. You know I love ye.

Chi. I will not be above an hour; let thy robe be readie
And the door be kept. } Knock. Cleanthe

Prie. Who knocks there? } knocks within.
Yet more business?

Enter Cleanthe.

Chi. Have ye more pensioners? the Princess woman?
Nay then I'll stay a little, what game's a foot now?

Clean. Now is the time.

Chi. A rank bawd by this hand too,
She grinds o' both sides: hey boyes.

Priest. How, your Brother Siphax?
Loves he the Princess?

Cle. Deadlie, and you know
He is a Gentleman descended noble.

Chi. But a rank knave as ever pist.

Cle. Hold Mother,
Here's more gold and some Jewells.

Chi. Here's no villany,
I am glad I came toth' hearing.

Priest. Alas Daughter,
What would ye have me doe?

Chi. Hold off ye old whore;
There's more gold coming; all's mine, all.

Cle. Do ye shrink now,
Did ye not promise faithfully, and told me
Through any danger?

Pri. Any I can wade through.

Cle. Ye shall and easily, the sin not seen neither,
Here's for a better stole and a new vail mother:
Come, ye shall be my friend.

Chi. If all hit, hang me,
I'll make ye richer than the Goddess.

Pri. Say then,
I am yours, what must I doe?

Cle. I'th' morning
But very early, will the Princess visit
The Temple of the Goddess, being troubled
With strange things that distract her: from the Oracle
(Being strongly too in love) she will demand
The Goddess pleasure, and a Man to cure her,
That Oracle you give: describe my Brother,
You know him perfectly.

Pri. I have seen him often. (with

Cle. And charge her take the next man she shall meet
When she comes out: you understand me.

Priest. Well.

Cle. Which shall be he attending; this is all,
And easily without suspicion ended,
Nor none dare disobey, 'tis Heaven that does it,
And who dares cross it then, or once suspect it?
The venture is most easie.

Pri. I will doe it.

Cle. As ye shall prosper?

Pri. As I shall prosper.

Cle. Take this too, and farewel; but first hark hither.

Chi. What a young whore's this to betray her Mistress?
A thousand Cuckolds shall that Husband be,
That marries thee, thou art so mischievous.
I'll put a spoak among your wheels.

Clean. Be constant.

Priest. 'Tis done.

Chi. I'll doe no more at drop shot then. [Exit Chilax.

Pri. Farewel wench. [Exeunt Priest and Cleanthe.

AÆtus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Servant, and Stremon, at the door.

Servant. HE stirs, he stirs.
Stremon. Let him, I am ready for him,
He shall not this day perish, if his passions
May be fed with Musick; are they ready?

Enter Memnon.

Ser. All, all: see where he comes.

Stremon. Ple be straight for him. [Exit Stremon.]

Enter Eumenes, and Captains.

Ser. How sad he looks and sullen! [Stand close.]
Here are the Captains: my fear's past now.

Mem. Put case i' th' other world
She do not love me neither? I am old 'tis certain.

Eumen. His spirit is a little quieter.

Mem. My blood lost, and limbs stiff; my embraces
Like the cold stubborn bark, hoarie, and heatless,
My words worse: my fame only and achievements
Which are my strength, my blood, my youth, my fashion,
Must wooe her, win her, wed her; that's but wind,
And women are not brought to bed with shadows:
I do her wrong, much wrong; she is young and blessed,
Sweet as the spring, and as his blossoms tender,
And I a nipping North-wind, my head hung
With hails, and frostie Isicles: are the souls so too
When they depart hence, lame and old, and loveless?
No sure, 'tis ever youth there; Time and Death
Follow our flesh no more: and that forc'd opinion
That spirits have no sexes, I believe not.

Enter Stremon, like Orpheus.

There must be love, there is love: what art thou?

S O N G.

Stre. Orpheus I am, come from the deeps below,
To thee fond man the plagues of love to show:
To the fair fields where loves eternal dwell
There's none that come, but first they pass through hell:
Hark and beware unless thou hast lov'd ever,
Belov'd again, thou shalt see those joyes never.

Hark how they groan that dy'd despairing,
O take heed then:
Hark how they howl for over-daring,
All these were men.

They that be fools, and dye for fame
They lose their name;
And they that bleed
Hark how they speed.

Now in cold frosts, now scorching fires
They sit, and curse their lost desires:
Nor shall these souls be free from pains and fears,
Till Women waft them over in their tears.

Mem. How should I know my passage is deni'd me?
Or which of all the Devils dare?

Eumen. This Song
Was rarely form'd to fit him.

S O N G.

Orph. Charon O Charon,
Thou waster of the souls to blifs or bane.
Cha. Who calls the Ferry-man of Hell?
Orph. Come near,

And say who lives in joy, and who in fear.

Cha. Those that dye well, Eternal joy shall follow;
Those that dye ill, their own foul fate shall swallow.

Orph. Shall thy black Bark those guilty spirits stow
That kill themselves for love?

Cha. O no, no,
My cordage cracks when such great sins are near,
No wind blows fair, nor I myself can steer.

Orph. What lovers pass and in Elyzium raig?

Cha. Those Gentle loves that are below'd again.

Orph. This Souldier loves, and fain wou'd dye to win,
Shall he goe on?

Cha. No 'tis too foul a sin.
He must not come aboard: I dare not row,
Storms of despair, and guilty blood will blow.

Orph. Shall time release him, say?

Cha. No, no, no, no.
Nor time nor death can alter us, nor prayer;
My boat is destinie, and who then dare
But those appointed come aboard? Live still,
And love by reason, Mortal, not by will.

Orph. And when thy Mistris shall close up thine eyes,

Cha. Then come aboard and pass,

Orph. Till when be wise.

Cha. Till when be wise.

Eumen. How still he sits: I hope this Song has setled him.

1 Capt. He bites his lip, and rowles his fiery eyes, yet
I fear for all this ———

2 Capt. Stremon still apply to him.

Stremon. Give me more room, sweetly strike, divinely
Such strains as old earth moves at.

Orph. The power I have over both beast and plant,
Thou man alone feelst miserable want. Musick
Strike you rare Spirits that attend my will,
And lose your savage wildness by my skill.

Enter a Mask of Beasts.

This Lion was a man of War that died,
As thou wouldst do, to gild his Ladies pride:
This Dog a fool that hung himself for love:
This Ape with daily hugging of a glove,
Forgot to eat and died. This goodly tree,
An usher that still grew before his Ladie,
Wither'd at root. This, for he could not wooe,
A grumbling Lawyer: this pyed Bird a page,
That melted out because he wanted age.
Still these lye howling on the Stygian shore,
O love no more, O love no more. [Exit Memnon.]

Eumen. He steals off silently, as though he would sleep,
No more, but all be near him, feed his fancie
Good Stremon still; this may lock up his follie.
Yet Heaven knows I much fear him; away softly.

[Exeunt Captains.]

Fool. Did I not doe most doggedly?

Stremon. Most rarelie.

Fool. He's a brave man, when shall we dog again?

Boy. Unty me first for Gods sake, (hony Stremon)

Fool. Help the Boy; he's in a wood poor child: good
Let's have a bear-baiting; ye shall see me play
The rarest for a single Dog: at head all;
And if I do not win immortal glorie,
Play Dog play Devil.

Stremon. Peace for this time.

Fool. Prethee

Let's sing him a black Santis, then let's all howl
In our own beastly voices; tree keep your time,
Untye there; bow, wow, wow.

Stremon. Away ye Ass, away.

Fool. Why let us doe something
To satisfie the Gentleman, he's mad;
A Gentleman-like humour, and in fashion,
And must have men as mad about him.

Stremon. Peace,

And

And come in quicklie, 'tis ten to one else
He'll find a staff to beat a dog; no more words,
I'll get ye all employment; soft, soft in all. [Exeunt.]

Enter Chilax and Cloe.

Chi. When camest thou over wench?

Clo. But now this evening,
And have been ever since looking out Siphax,
P'th' w'as he would have lookt me: sure h'as gotten
Some other Mistris?

Chi. A thousand, wench, a thousand,
They are as common here as Caterpillers
Among the corn, they eat up all the Souldiers,

Clo. Are they so hungry? yet by their leave Philax,
I'll have a snatch too.

Chi. Dost thou love him still wench?

Co. Why should I not? he had my Maiden-head
And all my youth.

Chi. Thou art come the happiest,
In the most blessed time, sweet wench the fittest,
If thou darst make thy fortune: by this light, Cloe,
And so I'll kiss thee: and if thou wilt but let me,
For 'tis well worth a kindness.

Clo. What shou'd I let ye?

Chi. Enjoy thy miniken.

Clo. Thou art still old Chilax.

Chi. Still still, and ever shall be: if, I say, (wench.)
Thou wo't strike the stroke: I cannot do much harm

Clo. Nor much good.

Chi. Siphax shall be thy Husband,
Thy very Husband woman, thy fool, thy Cuckold,
Or what thou wilt make him: I am over joy'd,
Ravisht, clean ravisht with this fortune; kiss me,
Or I shall lose my self,

Clo. My Husband said ye?

Chi. Said I? and will say, Cloe: nay and do it
And do it home too; Peg thee as close to him
As birds are with a pin to one another;
I have it, I can do it: thou wantst clothes too,
And hee'll be hang'd unless he marry thee
E're he maintain thee: now he has Ladies, Courtiers
More than his back can bend at, multitudes;
We are taken up for threshers, will ye bite?

Clo. Yes.

Chi. And let me ———

Clo. Yes and let ye ———

Chi. What!

Clo. Why that ye wote of.

Chi. I cannot stay, take your instructions
And something toward household, come, what ever
I shall advise ye, follow it exactlie,
And keep your times I point ye; for I'll tell ye
A strange way you must wade through.

Clo. Fear not me Sir.

Chi. Come then, and let's dispatch this modicum,
For I have but an hour to stay, a short one,
Besides more water for another mill,
An old weak over-shot I must provide for,
There's an old Nunnerie at hand.

Clo. What's that?

Chi. A bawdie house.

Clo. A pox consume it.

Chi. If the stones 'tis built on
Were but as brittle as the flesh lives in it,
Your curse came handsomlie: fear not, there's ladies,
And other good sad people: your pinkt Citizens
Think it no shame to shake a sheet there: Come wench.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Cleanthe and Siphax.

Clean. A Souldier and so fearful?

Siph. Can ye blame me;
When such a weight lies on me?

Clean. Fye upon ye,

I tell ye, ye shall have her: have her safeleie,
And for your wife with her own will.

Siph. Good Sister ———

Clo. What a distrustfull man are you? to morrow,
To morrow morning ———

Siph. Is it possible?

Can there be such a happiness?

Clean. Why hang me

If then ye be not married: if to morrow night,
Ye doe not ———

Siph. O dear Sister ———

Clean. What ye wou'd doe,
What ye desire to doe; lie with her: Devil,
What a dull man are you?

Siph. Nay I believe now,
And shall she love me?

Clean. As her life, and stroke ye.

Siph. O I will be her Servant.

Clean. 'Tis your dutie.

Siph. And she shall have her whole will.

Clean. Yes 'tis reason,
She is a Princess, and by that rule boundless.

Si. What wou'd you be? for I wou'd have ye Sister
Chuse some great place about us: as her woman
Is not so fit.

Clean. No, no, I shall find places.

Siph. And yet to be a Ladie of her bed-chamber,
I hold not so fit neither,

Some great title, believe it, shall be look't out.

Clean. Ye may, a Dutches

Or such a toye, a small thing pleases me Sir.

Siph. What you will Sister: if a neighbour Prince,
When we shall come to reign ———

Clean. We shall think on't,
Be ready at the time, and in that place too,
And let me work the rest, within this half hour
The Princess will be going, 'tis almost morning,
Away and mind your business.

Siph. Fortune blefs us.

[Exeunt.]

Enter King, Polydor and Lords.

Pol. I do beseech your grace to banish me.

King. Why Gentleman, is she not worthy marriage?

Pol. Most worthy, Sir, where worth again shall meet her,
But I like thick clouds sailing slow and heavy,
Although by her drawn higher, yet shall hide her,
I dare not be a traitor; and 'tis treason,

But to imagine: as you love your honour ———

King. 'Tis her first maiden doting, and if crost,

I know it kills her.

1 Lord. How knows your grace she loves him?

King. Her woman told me all (beside his story)
Her maid Lucippe, on what reason too,
And 'tis beyond all but enjoying.

Polydor. Sir,
Even by your wisdom; by that great discretion
Ye owe to rule and order ———

2 Lord. This man's mad sure,
To plead against his fortune ———

1 Lord. And the King too,
Willing to have it so?

Pol. By those dead Princes
From whose descents ye stand a star admir'd at,
Lay not so base a lay upon your vertues;
Take heed, for honours sake take heed: the bramble
No wise man ever planted by the rose,
It cankers all her beauty; nor the vine
When her full blushes court the sun, dares any Choke up with wanton Ivy: good my Lords,
Who builds a monument, the Basis Jasper,
And the main body Brick?

2 Lord. Ye wrong your worth,
Ye are a Gentleman descended nobly.

1 Lord. In both bloods truly noble.

King.

King. Say ye were not,
My will can make ye fo.

Pol. No, never, never;
'Tis not descent, nor will of Princes does it,
'Tis Vertue which I want, 'tis Temperance,
Man, honest man: is't fit your Majesty
Should call my drunkennes, my rashness, Brother?
Or such a blessed Maid my breach of faith,
(For I am most lascivious) and fell angers
In which I am also mischievous, her Husband?
O Gods preserve her! I am wild as Winter,
Ambitious as the Devil: out upon me,
I hate my self, Sir, if ye dare bestow her
Upon a Subject, ye have one deserves her.

King. But him she does not love: I know your meaning.
This young mans love unto his noble Brother
Appears a mirrour; what must now be done Lords?
For I am gravel'd, if she have not him,
She dies for certain, if his Brother miss her,
Farewel to him, and all our honours.

1 Lord. He is dead, Sir,
Your Grace has heard of that, and strangely.

King. No,
I can assure you no, there was a trick in't,
Read that, and then know all; what ails the Gentleman?
Hold him; how do ye Sir? [Polydor is sick o'th' sudden.]

Pol. Sick o'th' sudden,
Extreamly ill, wondrous ill.

King. Where did it take ye?

Pol. Here in my head, Sir, and my heart, for Heaven sake.

King. Conduct him to his Chamber presently,
And bid my Doctors——

Pol. No, I shall be well, Sir,
I do beseech your Grace, even for the Gods sake
Remember my poor Brother, I shall pray then.

King. Away, he grows more weak still: I will do it,
Or Heaven forget me ever. Now your Counsels, [Ex. Pol.]
For I am at my witsend; what with you Sir?

Enter Messenger with a Letter.

Mess. Letters from warlike Pelius.

King. Yet more troubles?
The Spartans are in Arms, and like to win all:
Supplies are sent for, and the General;
This is more cross than t'other; come let's to him,
For he must have her, 'tis necessity,
Or we must lose our honours, let's plead all,
For more than all is needful, shew all reason
If love can hear o' that side, if she yield
We have fought best, and won the noblest field. [Exeunt.]

Enter Eumenes, Captains, Stremon.

1 Cap. I have brought the wench, a lusty wench,
And somewhat like the Princess.

Eumen. 'Tis the better, let's see her,
And go you in and tell him, that her Grace
Is come to visit him: how sleeps he Stremon?

Stre. He cannot, only thinks, and calls on Polydor,
Swears he will not be fool'd; sometimes he rages,
And sometimes sits and mufes. [Exit Stremon.]

Enter Whore, and Captain.

Eume. He's past all help sure?
How do ye like her?

2 Cap. By th' mafs a good round Virgin,
And at first sight resembling, she is well cloath'd too.

Eume. But is she found?

2 Cap. Of wind and limb, I warrant her.

Eume. You are instructed Lady?

Who. Yes, and know, Sir,
How to behave my self, ne're fear.

Eume. Polybius,
Where did he get this Vermin?

1 Cap. Hang him Badger,

There's not a hole free from him, whores and whores mates
Do all pay him obedience.

Eume. Indeed i'th' War,
His quarter was all Whore, Whore upon Whore,
And lin'd with Whore; beshrew me 'tis a fair Whore.

1 Cap. She has smockt away her blood; but fair or foul,
Or blind or lame, that can but lift her leg up,
Comes not amifs to him, he rides like a night Mare,
All Ages, all Religions.

Eume. Can ye state it?

Who. I'll make a shift.

Eume. He must lie with ye, Lady.

Who. Let him, ne's not the first man I have lain with,
Nor shall not be the last.

Enter Memnon.

2 Cap. He comes, no more words,
She has her lesson throughly; how he views her?

Eumen. Go forward now, so, bravely, stand!

Mem. Great Lady,
How humbly I am bound——

Who. You shall not kneel, Sir,
Come, I have done you wrong; stand my Souldier,
And thus I make amends—— [Kisses him]

Eumen. A Plague confound ye,
Is this your state?

2 Cap. 'Tis well enough.

Mem. O Lady,
Your Royal hand, your hand my dearest beauty
Is more than I must purchase: here divine one,
I dare revenge my wrongs: ha?

1 Cap. A damn'd foul one.

Eume. The Lees of Baudy prewns: mourning Gloves?
All spoil'd by Heaven.

Mem. Ha! who art thou?

2 Cap. A shame on ye,
Ye clawing scabby Whore.

Mem. I say, who art thou?

Eumen. Why 'tis the Princess, Sir.

Mem. The Devil, Sir,
'Tis some Roguey thing.

Who. If this abuse be love, Sir,
Or I that laid aside my modesty——

Eumen. So far thou't never find it.

Mem. Do not weep,
For if ye be the Princess, I will love ye,
Indeed I will, and honour ye, fight for ye,
Come, wipe your eyes; by Heaven she stinks; who art thou?
Stinks like a poyson'd Rat behind a hanging?
Woman, who art? like a rotten Cabbage.

2 Cap. Y'are much to blame, Sir, 'tis the Princess.

Mem. How?
She the Princess?

Eumen. And the loving Princess.

1 Cap. Indeed the doating Princess.

Mem. Come hither once more,
The Princess smells like mornings breath, pure Amber,
Beyond the courted Indies in her spices.
Still a dead Rat by Heaven; thou a Princess?

Eumen. What a dull Whore is this?

Mem. I'll tell ye presently,
For if she be a Princess, as she may be
And yet stink too, and st ongly, I shall find her;
Fetch the Numidian Lyon I brought over,
If she be sprung from the Royal blood, the Lyon,
He'll do you reverence, else——

Who. I beseech your Lordship——

Eumen. He'll tear her all to pieces.

Who. I am no Princess, Sir.

Mem. Who brought thee hither?

2 Cap. If ye confess, we'll hang ye.

Who. Good my Lord——

Mem. Who art thou then?

Who. A poor retaining Whore, Sir,

To one of your Lordships Captains.

Mem. Alas poor Whore,
Go, be a Whore still, and stink worse: Ha, ha, ha. [Ex. Cloe.
What fools are these, and Coxcombs? [Exit Memnon.

Eumen. I am right glad yet,
He takes it with such lightness.

1 Cap. He thinks his face too
Is not so clouded as it was; how he looks?

Eume. Where's your dead Rat?

2 Cap. The Devil dine upon her
Loins; why what a Medicine had he gotten
To try a Whore?

Enter Stremon.

Stre. Here's one from Polydor stays to speak with ye.

Eume. With whom?

Stre. With all; where has the General been?
He's laughing to himself extremely.

Eumen. Come,
I'll tell thee how; I am glad yet he's so merry. [Exeunt.

Aëtus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Chilax and Priestess, Calis, Lady and Nun.

Chi. What lights are those that enter there, still nearer?
Plague o' your rotten itch, do you draw me hither
Into the Temple to betray me? was there no place
To satisfy your sin in? Gods forgive me,
Still they come forward.

Priest. Peace ye fool, I have found it,
'Tis the young Princess Calis.

Chi. 'Tis the Devil,
To claw us for our catterwawling.

Priest. Retire softly,
I did not look for you these two hours, Lady,
Beshrew your haste: that way. [To Chilax.

Chi. That goes to the Altar?
Ye old blind Beast.

Priest. I know not, any way;
Still they come nearer,
I'll in to th' Oracle.

Chi. That's well remembered I'll in with ye.

Priest. Do. [Exeunt Priest. and Chilax.

Enter Calis and her Train with lights, singing:
Lucippe, Cleanthe.

S O N G.

*O fair sweet Goddess Queen of Loves,
Soft and gentle, as thy Doves,
Humble ey'd, and ever ruing
Those poor hearts, their Loves pursuing:
O thou Mother of delights,
Crown'd of all happy nights,
Star of dear content, and pleasure,
Of mutual loves the endless treasure,
Accept this sacrifice we bring,
Thou continual youth and Spring,
Grant this Lady her desires,
And every hour we'll crown thy fires.*

Enter a Nun.

Nun. You about her all retire,
Whilest the Princess feeds the fire,
When your Devotions ended be
To the Oracle I will attend ye.

[Exit Nun and draws the Curtain close to Calis.

Enter Stremon and Eumenes.

Stremon. He will abroad.

Eumen. How does his humour hold him?

Stre. He is now grown wondrous sad, weeps often too,
Talks of his Brother to himself, starts strangely.

Eumen. Does he not curse?

Stremon. No.

Eumen. Nor break out in fury,
Offering some new attempt?

Stremon. Neither; to th' Temple
Is all we hear of now: what there he will do——

Eumen. I hope repent his folly, let's be near him.

Stremon. Where are the rest?

Eumen. About a business
Concerns him mainly, if Heav'n cure his madness,
He's made for ever, Stremon.

Stremon. Does the King know it?

Eumen. Yes, and much troubled with it, he's now gone
To seek his Sister out.

Stremon. Come let's away then. [Exeunt Eumen. Stremon. Calis.

*Enter Nun, she opens the Curtain to Calis.

Nun. Peace to your Prayers Lady, will it please ye
To pass on to the Oracle?

Calis. Most humbly. [Chilax and Priest. in the Oracle.

Chi. Do ye hear that?

Priest. Yes, lie close.

Chi. A wildfire take ye,
What shall become of me? I shall be hang'd now:
Is this a time to shake? a halter shake ye,
Come up and juggle, come.

Priest. I am monstrous fearful.

Chi. Up ye old gaping Oyster, up and answer;
A mouldy Mange upon your chops, ye told me
I was safe here till the Bell rung.

Priest. I was prevented,
And did not look these three hours for the Princess.

Chi. Shall we be taken?

Priest. Speak for loves sake, Chilax;
I cannot, nor I dare not.

Chi. I'll speak Treason, for I had as lieve be hang'd for that.

Priest. Good Chilax.

Chi. Must it be sung or said? what shall I tell 'em?
They are here; here now preparing.

Priest. O my Conscience!

Chi. Plague o' your spurgall'd Conscience, does it tire now?
Now when it should be tuffest? I could make thee——

Priest. Save us, we are both undone else.

Chi. Down ye Dog then,
Be quiet, and be stanch to no inundations.

Nun. Here kneel again, and Venus grant your wishes.

Calis. *O Divine Star of Heaven,
Thou in power above the seven:
Thou sweet kindler of desires,
Till they grow to mutual fires:
Thou, O gentle Queen, that art
Curer of each wounded heart:
Thou the fuel, and the flame;
Thou in Heaven, and here the same:
Thou the wooer, and the woo'd:
Thou the hunger, and the food:
Thou the prayer, and the pray'd;
Thou what is, or shall be said:
Thou still young, and golden tress'd,
Make me by thy Answer blessed.*

Chi. When?

Priest. Now speak handfomly, and small by all means,
I have told ye what. [Thunder.

Chi. But I'll tell you a new tale,
Now for my Neck-verse; I have heard thy prayers,
And mark me well.

Musick. Venus descends.

Nun. The Goddess is displeas'd much,

The temple shakes and totters; she appears,
Bow, Lady, bow.

Venus. *Purge me the Temple round,
And live by this example henceforth sound.
Virgin, I have seen thy tears,
Hear'd thy wishes, and thy fears;
Thy holy Incense flew above,
Hark therefore to thy doom in Love;
Had thy heart been soft at first,
Now thou had'st allay'd thy thirst;
Had thy stubborn will but bended,
All thy sorrows here had ended;
Therefore to be just in Love,
A strange Fortune thou must prove,
And, for thou hast been stern and coy,
A dead Love thou shalt enjoy.*

Chi. O gentle goddess!

Ven. Rise, thy doom is said,
And fear not, I will please thee with the dead. [Venus ascends.

Nun. Go up into the Temple and there end
Your holy Rites, the Goddess smiles upon ye.

[Exeunt Cal. and Nun.

Enter Chilax in his Robe.

Chi. I'll no more Oracles, nor Miracles,
Nor no more Church work, I'll be drawn and hang'd first.
Am not I torn a pieces with the thunder?
Death, I can scarce believe I live yet,
It gave me on the buttocks, a cruel, a huge bang,
I had as lieve ha' had 'em scratcht with Dog-whips:
Be quiet henceforth, now ye feel the end on't,
I would advise ye my old friends, the good Gentlewoman
Is struck dumb, and there her Grace sits mumping
Like an old Ape eating a Brawn; sure the good Goddess
Knew my intent was honest, to save the Princess,
And how we young men are entic'd to wickedness,
By these lewd Women, I had paid for't else too.
I am monstrous holy now, and cruel fearful,
O'twas a plaguey thump, charg'd with a vengeance.

Enter Siphax, walks softly over the stage, and goes in.

Would I were well at home; the best is, 'tis not day:
Who's that? ha? Siphax! I'll be with you anon, Sir;
Ye shall be oracled I warrant ye,
And thunder'd too, as well as I; your Lordship

Enter Memnon, Eumenes, Stremon, and two carrying Torches.

Must needs enjoy the Princess, yes: ha?! Torches?
And Memnon coming this way? he's Dog-mad,
And ten to one appearing thus unto him,
He worries me, I must go by him.

Eum. Sir?

Mem. Ask me no further questions; what art thou?
How dost thou stare? stand off; nay look upon me,
I do not shake, nor fear thee—— [Draws his Sword.

Chi. He will kill me,
This is for Church work.

Mem. Why dost thou appear now?
Thou wert fairly slain: I know thee, Diocles,
And know thine envy to mine honour: but——

Chi. Stay Memnon,
I am a Spirit, and thou canst not hurt me.

Eum. This is the voice of Chilax.

Stremon. What makes him thus?

Chi. 'Tis true, that I was slain in field, but foully,
By multitudes, not manhood: therefore mark me,
I do appear again to quit mine honour,
And on thee single.

Mem. I accept the challenge.
Where?

Chi. On the Stygian Banks.

Mem. When?

Chi. Four days hence.

Mem. Go noble Ghost, I will attend.

Chi. I thank ye.

Stre. Ye have sav'd your throat, and handsomly:
Farewell, Sir. [Exit Chilax.

Mem. Sing me the Battles of Pelusium,
In which this Worthy dyed.

Eum. This will spoil all, and make him worse
Than e'r he was: sit down, Sir,
And give your self to rest.

SONG.

*Arm, arm; arm, arm; the Scouts are all come in,
Keep your Ranks close, and now your honours win.
Behold from yonder Hill, the Foe appears,
Bows, Bills, Glaves, Arrows, Shields, and Spears,
Like a dark Wood he comes, or tempest pouring;
O view the Wings of Horse the Meadows scowring,
The vanguard marches bravely, hark, the Drums—— dub,
They meet, they meet, and now the Battel comes: dub.
See how the Arrows fly,
That darken all the Skye;
Hark how the Trumpets sound,
Hark how the Hills rebound.—— Tara, tara, tara.
Hark how the Horses charge: in Boys, Boys in—— tara, tara.
The Battel totters; now the wounds begin;
O how they cry,
O how they dy!
Room for the valiant Memnon arm'd with thunder,
See how he breaks the Ranks asunder:
They flye, they flye, Eumenes has the Chace,
And brave Polybius makes good his place.
To the Plains, to the Woods,
To the Rocks, to the Floods,
They flie for succour: Follow, follow, follow, Hey, hey.
Hark how the Souldiers hollow
Brave Diocles is dead,
And all his Souldiers fled,
The Battel's won, and lost,
That many a life hath cost.*

Mem. Now forward to the Temple. [Exeunt.

Enter Chilax.

Chi. Are ye gone?
How have I 'scap'd this morning! by what miracle!
Sure I am ordain'd for some brave end.

Enter Cloe.

Cloe. How is it?

Chi. Come, 'tis as well as can be.

Cloe. But is it possible

This should be true you tell me?

Chi. 'Tis most certain.

Cloe. Such a gross Ass to love the Princess?

Chi. Peace,

Pull your Robe close about ye: you are perfect
In all I taught ye?

Cloe. Sure.

Chi. Gods give thee good luck.

'Tis strange my Brains should still be beating Knavery
For all these dangers, but they are needful mischiefs,
And such are Nuts to me; and I must do 'em.
You will remember me——

Cloe. By this kiss, Chilax.

Chi. No more of that, I fear another thunder.

Cloe. We are not i'th' Temple, man.

Enter Siphax.

Chi. Peace, here he comes, (and Cloe.
Now to our business handsomly; away now. Ex. Chilax,
Si. 'Twas sure the Princess, for he kneel'd unto her,
And she lookt every way: I hope the Oracle
Has made me happy; me I hope she lookt for,

Enter Chilax, and Cloe at the other door.

Fortune, I will so honour thee, Love, so adore thee.
She is here again, looks round about her, again too,
'Tis done, I know 'tis done; 'tis Chilax with her,
And I shall know of him; who's that?

Chi. Speak softly,
The Princess from the Oracle.

Si. She views me,
By Heaven she beckons me.

Chi. Come near, she wou'd have ye.

Si. O royal Lady. [Kisses her hand.

Chi. She wills ye read that, for belike she's bound to sit
For such a time; she is wondrous gracious to ye. (lence

Si. Heav'n make me thankful.

Chi. She would have ye read it. [He reads.

Si. Siphax, the will of Heaven hath cast me on thee
To be thy Wife, whose Will must be obey'd:
Use me with honour, I shall love thee dearly,
And make thee understand thy worths hereafter;
Convey me to a secret Ceremony,
That both our hearts and loves may be united,
And use no Language, till before my Brother
We both appear, where I will shew the Oracle,
For till that time I am bound, I must not answer.

Si. O happy I!

Chi. Ye are a made man.

Si. But Chilax,
Where are her Women?

Chi. None but your Graces Sister,
Because she would have it private to the World yet,
Knows of this business.

Si. I shall thank thee, Chilax,
Thou art a careful man.

Chi. Your Graces Servant.

Si. I'll find a fit place for thee.

Chi. If you will not,
There's a good Lady will, she points ye forward,
Away and take your fortune; not a word, Sir:
So, you are greas'd I hope. [Ex. Si. and Cloe, manet Chilax.

Enter Stremon, Fool, and Boy.

Chi. Stremon, Fool, Picus,
Where have you left your Lord?

Stremon. I' th' Temple, Chilax.

Chi. Why are ye from him?

Stremon. Why, the King is with him,
And all the Lords.

Chi. Is not the Princess there too?

Stremon. Yes.

And the strangest Coil amongst 'em; She weeps bitterly:
The King entreats, and frowns, my Lord like Autumn
Drops off his hopes by handfulls; all the Temple
Sweats with this Agony.

Chi. Where's young Polydore?

Stremon. Dead, as they said, o' th' sudden.

Chi. Dead?

Stremon. For certain,
But not yet known abroad.

Chi. There's a new trouble,
A brave young man he was; but we must all dye.

Stremon. Did not the General meet you this morning
Like a tall Stallion Nun?

Chi. No more o' that, Boy.

Stremon. You had been ferretting.

Chi. That's all one, Fool;
My Master Fool that taught my wits to traffick,
What has your Wisdom done? how have you profited?
Out with your Audit: come, you are not empty,
Put out mine eye with twelve-pence? do you shaker?
What think you of this shaking? here's wit, Coxcomb,
Ha Boys? ha my fine Rascals, here's a Ring, } Pulls out
How right they go! } a Purse.

Fool. O let me ring the fore Bell.

And here are thumpers, Chiqueens, golden rogues,
Wit, wit, ye Rascals.

Fool. I have a Styre here, Chilax:

Chi. I have no Gold to cure it, not a penny,
Not one cross, Cavalier; we are dull Souldiers,
Gross heavy-headed fellows; fight for Victuals?

Fool. Why, ye are the Spirits of the time.

Chi. By no means.

Fool. The valiant firie.

Chi. Fie, fie, no.

Fool. Be-lee me, Sir.

Chi. I wou'd I cou'd, Sir.

Fool. I will fatisfie ye.

Chi. But I will not content you; alas poor Boy,
Thou shew'st an honest Nature, weepst for thy Master,
There's a red Rogue to buy thee Handkerchiefs.

Fool. He was an honest Gentleman, I have lost too.

Chi. You have indeed your labour, Fool; but Stremon,
Dost thou want money too? no Vertue living?
No firking out at fingers ends?

Stremon. It seems so.

Chi. Will ye all serve me?

Stremon. Yes, when ye are Lord General,
For less I will not go.

Chi. There's Gold for thee then,
Thou hast a Souldiers mind. Fool——

Fool. Here, your first man.

Chi. I will give thee for thy Wit, for 'tis a fine wit,
A dainty diving Wit; hold up, just nothing,
Go graze i' th' Commons, yet I am merciful——
There's six-pence: buy a Saucer, steal an old Gown,
And beg i' th' Temple for a Prophet, come away Boys,
Let's see how things are carried, Fool, up Sirrah,
You may chance get a dinner: Boy, your preferment
I'll undertake, for your brave Masters fake,
You shall not perish.

Fool. Chilax.

Chi. Please me well, Fool.
And you shall light my pipes: away to the Temple.
But stay, the King's here, sport upon sport, Boys.

Enter King, Lords, Siphax kneeling, Cloe with a Vail.

King. What would you have, Captain?
Speak suddenly, for I am wondrous busie.

Si. A pardon, Royal Sir.

King. For what?

Si. For that

Which was Heaven's Will, should not be mine alone, Sir;
My marrying with this Lady.

King. It needs no pardon,
For Marriage is no Sin.

Si. Not in it self, Sir;
But in prefuming too much: yet Heaven knows,
So does the Oracle that cast it on me,
And—— the Princess, royal Sir.

King. What Princess?

Si. O be not angry my dread King, your Sister.

King. My Sister; she's i' th' Temple, Man.

Si. She is here, Sir.

Lord. The Captain's mad, she's kneeling at the Altar.

King. I know she is; with all my heart good Captain,
I do forgive ye both: be unvail'd, Lady. [Puts off her Vail.
Will ye have more forgiveness? the man's frantick,
Come let's go bring her out: God give ye joy, Sir.

Si. How, Cloe? my old Cloe? [Ex. King, Lords.

Clo. Even the same, Sir.

Chi. Gods give your manhood much content.

Stremon. The Princess
Looks something musty since her coming over.

Fool. 'Twere good you'd brush her over.

Si. Fools and Fidlers

Make sport at my abuse too?

Fool. O 'tis the Nature

Of us Fools to make bold with one another,

But you are wise, brave sirs.

Chi. Cheer up your Princes,
Believe it Sir, the King will not be angry,
Or say he were; why, 'twas the Oracle:
The Oracle, an't like your Grace, the Oracle.

Strem. And who, most mighty Siphax?

Siph. With mine own whore. (science,

Cloe. With whom else should ye marry, speak your con-
Will ye transgress the law of Arms, that ever
Rewards the Souldier with his own sins?

Siph. Devils.

Cloe. Ye had my maiden-head, my youth, my sweetness,
Is it not justice then? — Siph. I see it must be,
But by this hand, Ple hang a lock upon thee.

Cloe. You shall not need, my honour shall do it.

Siph. If there be wars in all the world —

Cloe. Ple with ye,

For you know I have been a Souldier,
Come, curse on: when I need another Oracle.

Chi. Send for me Siphax, Ple fit ye with a Princess,
And so to both your honours. Fool. And your graces.

Siph. The Devil grace ye all.

Cloe. God a mercy Chilax.

Chi. Shall we laugh half an hour now?

Strem. No the King comes,
And all the train.

Chi. Away then, our Act's ended. [Exeunt.

Enter King, Calis, Memnon, and Cleanthe, Lords.

King. You know he do's deserve ye, loves ye dearly,
You know what bloody violence had us'd
Upon himself, but that his Brother cross it,
You know the same thoughts still inhabit in him
And covet to take birth: Look on him Lady,
The wars have not so far consum'd him yet,
Cold age disabled him, or sickness sunk him

The Hearse ready, Poly-dor, Eumenes & Captains.

To be abhor'd: look on his Honour Sister,
That bears no stamp of time, no wrinkles on it,
No sad demolishment, nor death can reach it:
Look with the eyes of Heaven that nightly waken,
To view the wonders of the glorious Maker,
And not the weakness: look with your vertuous eyes,
And then clad royaltie in all his conquests,
His matchless love hung with a thousand merits,
Eternal youth attending, Fame and Fortune,
Time and Oblivion vexing at his vertues,
He shall appear a miracle: look on our dangers,
Look on the publick ruin. Calis. O, dear Brother.

King. Fic, let us not like proud and greedy waters
Gain to give off again: this is our Sea,
And you his Cynthia, govern him, take heed,
His floods have been as high, and full as any,
And gloriously now is got up to the girdle,
The Kingdomes he hath purchas'd; noble Sister,
Take not your vertue from him, O take heed
We ebbe not now to nothing, take heed Calis.

Calis. The will of Heaven not mine, which must not alter,
And my eternal doom for ought I know
Is fixt upon me; alas, I must love nothing,
Nothing that loves again must I be blest with:
The gentle Vine climbs up the Oke and clips him,
And when the stroke comes, yet they fall together;
Death, death must I enjoy, and live to love him,
O noble Sir! Mem. Those tears are some reward yet,
Pray let me wed your sorrows.

Calis. Take 'em Souldier,
They are fruitfull ones, lay but a sigh upon 'em,
And straight they will conceive to infinites;
I told ye what ye would find 'em.

Enter Funeral, Captains following, and Eumenes.

King. How now, what's this? more drops to th' Ocean?
Whose body's this? Eum. The noble Polydor,
This speaks his death. Mem. My Brother dead?

Calis. O Goddes!

O cruel, cruel Venus, here's my fortune.

King. Read Captain.

Mem. Read aloud: farewell my follies.

[Eumen. reads to the Excellent Princess Calis.

Eum. Be wise, as you are beauteous, love with judgement,
And look with clear eyes on my noble Brother,
Value desert and vertue, they are Jewels,
Fit for your worth and wearing: take heed Lady,
The Gods reward ingratitude most grievous;
Remember me no more, or if you must,
Seek me in noble Memmons love, I dwell there:
I durst not live, because I durst not wrong him,
I can no more, make me eternal happy
With looking down upon your loves. Farewel.

Mem. And did'st thou die for me?

King. Excellent vertue!

What will ye now doe?

Calis. Dwell for ever here Sir.

Mem. For me dear Polydor? O worthy young man!
O love, love, love, love above recompence!
Infinite love, infinite honesty!

Good Lady leave, you must have no share here,
Take home your sorrows: here's enough to store me,
Brave glorious griefs! was ever such a Brother?
Turn all the stories over in the world yet,
And search through all the memories of mankind,
And find me such a friend; h'as out-done all,
Outstript 'em sheerly, all, all, thou hast Polydor,
To die for me; why, as I hope for happiness,
'Twas one of the rarest thought on things,
The bravest, and carried beyond compass of our actions,
I wonder how he hit it, a young man too,
In all the blossomes of his youth and beautie,
In all the fulness of his veins and wishes
Woo'd by that Paradise, that would catch Heaven;
It starts me extreamly, thou blest Ashes,
Thou faithfull monument, where love and friendship
Shall while the world is, work new miracles.

Calis. O! let me speak too.

Mem. No not yet; thou man,
(For we are but mans shadows,) only man,
I have not words to utter him; speak Lady,
Ple think a while.

Calis. The Goddes grants me this yet,
I shall enjoy the dead: no tomb shall hold thee
But these two arms, no Trickments but my tears
Over thy Hearse, my sorrows like sad arms
Shall hang for ever: on the tuffest Marble
Mine eyes shall weep thee out an Epitaph,
Love at thy feet shall kneel, his smart bow broken;
Faith at thy head, youth and the Graces mourners;
O sweet young man!

King. Now I begin to melt too.

Mem. Have ye enough yet Lady? room for a gamester.
To my fond Love, and all those idle fancies
A long farewell, thou diedst for me dear Polydor,
To give me peace, thou hast eternal glory,
I stay and talk here; I will kiss thee first,
And now I'll follow thee. [Polydor rises.

Pol. Hold, for Heavens sake! Mem. Ha!

Does he live?
Dost thou deceive me? Pol. Thus far,
Yet for your good, and honour.

King. Now dear Sister.

Calis. The Oracle is ended, noble Sir,
Dispose me now as you please.

Pol. You are mine then?

Calis. With all the joyes that may be.

Pol. Your consent Sir? King. Ye have it freely.

Pol. Walk along with me then,

And as you love me, love my will. Calis. I will so.

Pol. Here worthy Brother, take this vertuous Princess,
Ye have deserv'd her nobly, she will love ye,

And when my life shall bring ye peace, as she does,
Command it, ye shall have it. Mem. Sir, I thank ye.

King. I never found such goodnes in such years.

Mem. Thou shalt not over-doe me, though I die for't,
O how I love thy goodnes, my best Brother,
You have given me here a treasure to enrich me,
Would make the worthiest King alive a begger,
What may I give you back again?

Pol. Your love Sir.

Mem. And you shall have it, even my dearest love,
My first, my noblest love, take her again, Sir,
She is yours, your honesty has over-runme,
She loves ye, lose her not: excellent Princess,
Injoy thy wish, and now get Generals.

Pol. As ye love heaven, love him, she is on'y yours, Sir.

Mem. As ye love heaven, love him, she is only yours, Sir;
My Lord, the King. Pol. He will undoe himself Sir,
And must without her perish; who shall fight then?
Who shall protect your Kingdom?

Mem. Give me hearing,

And after that, belief, were she my soul
(As I do love her equal) all my victories,
And all the living names I have gain'd by war,
And loving him that good, that vertuous good man,
That only worthy of the name of Brother,
I would resign all freely, 'tis all love

To me, all marriage rites, the joy of issues
To know him fruitfull, that has been so faithfull. (Inter-

King. This is the noblest difference; take your choice Sir.

Calis. I see they are so brave, and noble both,
I know not which to look on. Pol. Chuse discreetly,
And vertue guide ye, there all the world in one man
Stands at the mark. Mem. There all mans honestie,

The sweetnes of all youth— Cal. O God's!

Mem. My Armour,

By all the God's she's yours; my Arms, I say,
And I beseech your Grace, give me imployment,
That shall be now my Mistres, there my Courtship.

King. Ye shall have any thing.

Mem. Vertuous Lady,

Remember me, your Servant now; Young man,
You cannot over-reach me in your goodnes;
O love! how sweet thou look'st now? and how gentle?
I should have slubber'd thee, and stain'd thy beauty;
Your hand, your hand Sir?

King. Take her, and Heaven blefs her.

Mem. So.

Pol. 'Tis your will Sir, nothing of my merit;
And as your royal gift, I take this blessing.

Cal. And I from heaven this gentleman: thanks Goddess.

Mem. So ye are pleas'd now Lady?

Calis. Now or never.

Mem. My cold stiff carcass would have frozen ye,
Wars, wars.

King. Ye shall have wars.

Mem. My next brave battel

I dedicate to your bright honour, Sister,
Give me a favour, that the world may know
I am your Souldier.

Calis. This, and all fair Fortunes.

Mem. And he that bears this from me, must strike boldly.
[Cleanthe kneeling.]

Calis. I do forgive thee: be honest; no more wench.

King. Come now to Revels, this blest day shall prove
The happy crown of noble Faith and Love.

[Exeunt.]

Prologue.

TO please all's impossib'le, and to despair
Ruins our selves, and damps the Writers care:
Would we knew what to doe, or say, or when
To find the mindes here equal with the men:
But we must venture; now to Sea we goe,
Faire fortune with us, give us room, and blow;
Remember ye're all venturers; and in this Play
How many twelve-pences ye have 'stow'd this day:
Remember for return of your delight,
We launch, and plough through storms of fear, and spight:
Give us your fore-winds fairly, fill our wings,
And steer us right, and as the Saylor sings,
Loaden with Wealth, on wanton seas, so we Shall make our home-bound-voyage chearfully;
And you our noble Merchants, for your treasure
Share equally the fraught, we run for pleasure.

Epilogue.

Here lyes the doubt now, let our Playes be good,
Our own care sailing equall in this Flood;
Our preparations new, new our Attire,
Yet here we are becalm'd still, still i'th' mire,
Here we stick fast; Is there no way to clear
This passage of your judgement, and our fear,
No mitigation of that law? Brave friends,
Consider we are yours, made for your ends,
And every thing preserves it self, each will
If not perverse, and crooked, utter still
The best of that it ventures in: have care
Ev'n for your pleasures sake, of what we are,
And do not ruine all, You may frown still,
But 'tis the nobler way, to check the will.

Actus primus. Scena prima.

Enter Theodor and Putskie.

The. Captain, your friend's prefer'd, the Princess has
Who, I assure my self, will use her nobly;
A pretty sweet one 'tis indeed.

Put. Well bred, Sir,

I do deliver that upon my credit,
And of an honest stock.

The. It seems so, Captain,
And no doubt will do well.

Put. Thanks to your care, Sir;
But tell me Noble Colonel, why this habit
Of discontent is put on through the Army?
And why your valiant Father, our great General,
The hand that taught to strike, the Love that led all;
Why he, that was the Father of the War,
He that begot, and bred the Souldier,
Why he sits shaking of his Arms, like Autumn,

(her,

His Colours folded, and his Drums cas'd up,
The tongue of War for ever ty'd within us?

The. It must be so: Captain you are a stranger,
But of a small time here a Souldier,
Yet that time shews ye a right good, and great one;
Else I could tell ye hours are strangely alter'd:
The young Duke has too many eyes upon him,
Too many fears 'tis thought too, and to nourish those,
Maintains too many Instruments.

Put. Turn their hearts,
Or turn their heels up, Heaven: 'Tis strange it should be:
The old Duke lov'd him dearly.

The. He deserv'd it;
And were he not my Father, I durst tell ye,
The memorable hazards he has run through
Deserv'd of this man too; highly deserv'd too;
Had they been less, they had been safe Putskie,
And sooner reach'd regard.

Put.

Put. There you struck sure, Sir.

The. Did I never tell thee of a vow he made
Some years before the old Duke dyed?

Put. I have heard ye
Speak often of that vow; but how it was,
Or to what end, I never understood yet.

The. Ple tell thee then: and then thou wilt find the reason:

The last great Muster, ('twas before ye serv'd here,
Before the last Dukes death, whose honour'd bones
Now rest in peace) this young Prince had the ordering,
(To Crown his Fathers hopes) of all the Army:
Who (to be short) put all his power to practise;
Fashion'd, and drew 'em up: but alas, so poorly,
So raggedly and loofely, so unfouldier'd,
The good Duke blush'd, and call'd unto my Father,
Who then was General: Go, Archus, speedily,
And chide the Boy, before the Souldiers find him,
Stand thou between his ignorance and them,
Fashion their bodies new to thy direction;
Then draw thou up, and shew the Prince his errours.
My Sire obey'd, and did so; with all duty
Inform'd the Prince, and read him all directions:
This bred distaste, distaste grew up to anger,
And anger into wild words broke out thus:
Well, Archus, if I live but to command here,
To be but Duke once, I shall then remember.
I shall remember truly, trust me; I shall,
And by my Fathers hand—the rest his eyes spoke.
To which my Father answer'd (somewhat mov'd too)

And with a vow he seal'd it: Royal Sir,
Since for my faith and fights, your scorn and anger
Only pursue me; if I live to that day,
That day so long expected to reward me,
By his so ever noble hand you swore by,
And by the hand of Justice, never Arms more
Shall rib this body in, nor sword hang here, Sir:
The Conflicts I will do you service then in,
Shall be repentant prayers: So they parted.
The time is come; and now ye know the wonder.

Put. I find a fear too, which begins to tell me,
The Duke will have but poor and slight defences,
If his hot humour reign, and not his honour:
How stand you with him, Sir?

The. A perdue Captain,
Full of my Fathers danger.

Pet. He has rais'd a young man,
They say a slight young man, I know him not,
For what desert?

The. Believe it, a brave Gentleman,
Worth the Dukes respect, a clear sweet Gentleman,
And of a noble soul: Come let's retire us,
And wait upon my Father, who within this hour
You will find an alter'd man.

Put. I am sorry for't, Sir.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Olympia, and two Gentlewomen.

Olym. Is't not a handsome Wench?

2 Wom. She is well enough, Madam:
I have seen a better face, and a straighter body,
And yet she is a pretty Gentlewoman.

Olym. What thinkst thou Petesca?

Pet. Alas, Madam, I have no skill, she has a black eye,
Which is of the least too, and the dullest water:
And when her mouth was made, for certain Madam,
Nature intended her a right good stomach.

Olym. She has a good hand.

2 Wom. 'Tis good enough to hold fast,
And strong enough to strangle the neck of a Lute.

Olym. What think ye of her colour?

Pet. If it be her own

'Tis good black blood: right weather-proof
I warrant it.

2 Wom. What a strange pace she has got?

Olym. That's but her breeding.

Pet. And what a manly body? me thinks she looks
As though she would pitch the Bar, or go to Buffets.

2 Wom. Yet her behaviour's utterly against it,
For me thinks she is too bashful.

Olym. Is that hurtful?

2 Wom. Even equal to too bold: either of 'em, Madam,
May do her injury when time shall serve her.

Olym. You discourse learnedly, call in the wench. [Ex. Gent.]
What envious fools are you? Is the rule general,
That Women can speak handsomly of none,
But those they are bred withal?

Pet. Scarce well of those, Madam,
If they believe they may out shine 'em any way:
Our natures are like Oyl, compound us with any thing,
Yet still we strive to swim o' th' top:

Suppose there were here now,
Now in this Court of Mosco, a stranger Princess,
Of bloud and beauty equal to your excellence,
As many eyes and services stuck on her;
What would you think?

Olym. I would think she might deserve it.

Pet. Your Grace shall give me leave not to believe ye;
I know you are a Woman, and so humour'd:
Ple tell ye Madam, I could then get more Gowns on ye,
More Caps and Feathers, more Scarfs, and more Silk-stockings
With rocking you asleep with nightly railings
Upon that Woman, than if I had nine lives
I could wear out: by this hand ye would scratch her eyes out.

Olym. Thou art deceiv'd fool;
Now let your own eye mock ye.

Enter Gentlewoman and Alinda.

Come hither Girl: hang me and she be not a handsome one.

Pet. I fear it will prove indeed so.

Olym. Did you ever serve yet
In any place of worth?

Alin. No, Royal Lady.

Pet. Hold up your head; fie.

Olym. Let her alone, stand from her.

Alin. It shall be now,

Of all the blessings my poor youth has pray'd for,
The greatest and the happiest to serve you;
And might my promise carry but that credit
To be believ'd, because I am yet a stranger,
Excellent Lady, when I fall from duty,
From all the service that my life can lend me,
May everlasting misery then find me.

Olym. What think ye now? I do believe, and thank ye;
And sure I shall not be so far forgetful,
To see that honest faith die unrewarded:
What must I call your name?

Alin. Alinda, Madam.

Olym. Can ye sing?

Alin. A little, when my grief will give me leave, Lady.

Olym. What grief canst thou have Wench?
Thou art not in love?

Alin. If I be Madam, 'tis only with your goodness;
For yet I never saw that man I sigh'd for.

Olym. Of what years are you?

Alin. My Mother oft has told me,
That very day and hour this land was blest
With your most happy birth, I first saluted
This worlds fair light: Nature was then so busie,
And all the Graces to adorn your goodness,
I stole into the world poor and neglected.

Olym. Something there was, when I first look'd upon thee,
Made me both like and love thee: now I know it;
And you shall find that knowledge shall not hurt you:
I hope ye are a Maid?

Alin. I hope so too, Madam;

I am sure for any man: and were I otherwise,
Of all the services my hopes could point at,

I durst not touch at yours.

Flourish. Enter Duke, Burris, and Gent.

Pet. The great Duke, Madam.

Duk. Good morrow, Sister.

Oym. A good day to your highness.

Duk. I am come to pray you use no more persuasions
For this old stubborn man: nay to command ye:
His fail is swell'd too full: he is grown too insolent,
Too self affected, proud: those poor slight services
He has done my Father, and my self, has blown him
To such a pitch, he flies to stoop our favours.

Oym. I am sorry Sir: I ever thought those services
Both great and noble.

Bur. However, may it please ye
But to consider 'em a true hearts Servants,
Done out of faith to you, and not self-fame:
Do but consider royal Sir, the dangers;
When you have slept secure, the mid-night tempests,
That as he marcht sung through his aged locks;
When you have fed at full, the wants and famins;
The fires of Heaven, when you have found all temperate,
Death with his thousand doors ———

Duk. I have consider'd;
No more: and that I will have, shall be.

Oym. For the best,
I hope all still.

Duk. What handfom wench is that there?

Oym. My Servant, Sir.

Duk. Prethee observe her Burris,
Is she not wondrous handfom? speak thy freedom.

Bur. She appears no less to me Sir.

Duk. Of whence is she?

Ol. Her Father I am told is a good Gentleman,
But far off dwelling: her desire to serve me
Brought her to th' Court, and here her friends have left her.

Du. She may find better friends:
Ye are welcom fair one,
I have not seen a sweeter: By your Ladies leave:
Nay stand up sweet, we'll have no superstition:
You have got a Servant; you may use him kindly,
And he may honour ye: [Ex. Duke and Burris.
Good morrow Sister. (shes?)

Ol. Good morrow to your Grace. How the wench blu-
How like an Angel now she looks?

Wom. At first jump
Jump into the Dukes arms? we must look to you,
Indeed we must, the next jump we are journeymen.

Pet. I see the ruine of our hopes already,
Would she were at home again, milking her Fathers Cows.

Wom. I fear she'll milk all the great Courtiers first.

Oym. This has not made ye proud?

Al. No certain, Madam.

Oym. It was the Duke that kist ye.

Al. 'Twas your Brother,
And therefore nothing can be meant but honour.

Ol. But say he love ye?

Al. That he may with safety:

A Princes love extends to all his subjects.

Ol. But say in more particular?

Al. Pray fear not:

For vertues sake deliver me from doubts, Lady:
'Tis not the name of King, nor all his promises,
His glories, and his greatness stuck about me,
Can make me prove a Traitor to your service:
You are my Mistris, and my noble Master,
Your vertues my ambition, and your favour
The end of all my love, and all my fortune:
And when I fail in that faith ———

Ol. I believe thee,
Come wipe your eyes; I do: take you example ———

Petf. I would her eyes were out.

Wom. If the wind stand in this door,
We shall have but cold custome: some trick or other,

And speedily.

Pet. Let me alone to think on't.

Ol. Come, be you near me still.

Al. With all my duty.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Archas, Theodor, Putskie, Ancient, and Souldiers, carrying his armour piece-meale, his Colours wound up,
and his Drums in Cases.

Theod. This is the heaviest march we e're trod Captain.

Putsf. This was not wont to be: these honour'd pieces
The fierie god of war himself would smile at,
Buckl'd upon that body, were not wont thus,
Like Reliques to be offer'd to long rust,
And heavy-ey'd oblivion brood upon 'em.

Arch. There set 'em down: and glorious war farewell;
Thou child of honour and ambitious thoughts,
Begot in bloud, and nurs'd with Kingdomes ruines;
Thou golden danger, courted by thy followers
Through fires and famins, for one title from thee ———
Prodigal man-kind spending all his fortunes;
A long farewell I give thee: Noble Arms,
You ribs for mighty minds, you Iron houses,
Made to defie the thunder-claps of Fortune,
Rust and consuming time must now dwell with ye:
And thou good Sword that knewst the way to conquest,
Upon whose fatal edge despair and death dwelt,
That when I shook thee thus, fore-shew'd destruction,
Sleep now from bloud, and grace my Monument:
Farewel my Eagle; when thou flew'st, whole Armies
Have stoopt below thee: At Passage I have seen thee,
Ruffle the Tartars, as they fled thy furie;
And bang 'em up together, as a Tassel,
Upon the stretch, a flock of fearfull Pigeons.
I yet remember when the Volga curl'd;

The aged Volga, when he heav'd his head up;
And rais'd his waters high, to see the ruines;
The ruines our Swords made, the bloody ruines,
Then flew this Bird of honour bravely, Gentlemen;
But these must be forgotten: so must these too,
And all that tend to Arms, by me for ever.
Take 'em you holy men; my Vow take with 'em,
Never to wear 'em more: Trophies I give 'em,
And sacred Rites of war to adorn the Temple:
There let 'em hang, to tell the world their master
Is now Devotions Souldier, fit for prayer.
Why do ye hang your heads? why look you sad friends?
I am not dying yet.

Theod. Ye are indeed to us Sir.

Putsf. Dead to our fortunes, General.

Arch. You'll find a better,

A greater, and a stronger man to lead ye,
And to a stronger fortune: I am old, friends,
Time, and the war together make me stoop, Gentlemen,
Stoop to my grave: my mind unfurnish'd too,
Emptie and weak as I am: my poor body,
Able for nothing now but contemplation;
And that will be a task too to a Souldier:
Yet had they but encourag'd me, or thought well
Of what I have done, I think I should have ventur'd
For one knock more, I should have made a shift yet
To have broke one staff more handfomly, and have died
Like a good fellow, and an honest Souldier,
In the head of ye all, with my Sword in my hand,
And so have made an end of all with credit.

Theod. Well, there will come an hour, when all these
These secure slights ——— (injuries,

Ar. Ha! no more of that siraah,
Not one word more of that I charge ye.

Theod. I must speak Sir.

And may that tongue forget to sound your service,
That's dumb to your abuses.

Ar. Understand fool,

That voluntary I sit down.

Theod. You are forced, Sir,
Forced for your safety: I too well remember
The time and cause, and I may live to curse 'em:
You made this Vow, and whose unnobleness,
Indeed forgetfulness of good——

Ar. No more,
As thou art mine no more.

The. Whose doubts and envies——
But the Devil will have his due.

Putf. Good gentle Colonel.

The. And though disgraces, and contempt of Honour
Reign now, the Wheel must turn again.

Ar. Peace Sirrah,
Your tongue's too saucy: do you stare upon me?
Down with that heart, down suddenly, down with it,
Down with that disobedience; tye that tongue up.

Theod. Tongue?

Ar. Do not provoke me to forget my Vow, Sirrah.
And draw that fatal Sword again in anger.

Putf. For Heavens sake, Colonel,

Ar. Do not let me doubt
Whose Son thou art, because thou canst not suffer:
Do not play with mine anger; if thou dost,
By all the Loyalty my heart holds——

Theod. I have done, Sir,
Pray pardon me.

Ar. I pray be worthy of it:
Beswore your heart, you have vexed me.

The. I am sorry, Sir.

Ar. Go to, no more of this: be true and honest,
I know ye are man enough, mould it to just ends,
And let not my disgraces, then I am miserable,
When I have nothing left me but thy angers.

Flourish. Enter Duke, Burris, Boroskie, Attend. and Gent.

Putf. And't please ye, Sir, the Duke.

Duk. Now, what's all this?

The meaning of this ceremonious Emblem?

Ar. Your Grace should first remember——

Borosf. There's his Nature.

Duk. I do, and shall remember still that injury,
That at the Muster, where it pleas'd your Greatness
To laugh at my poor Souldiership, to scorn it;
And more to make me seem ridiculous,
Took from my hands my charge.

Bur. O think not so, Sir.

Duk. And in my Fathers sight.

Ar. Heaven be my witness,

I did no more, (and that with modesty,
With Love and Faith to you) than was my warrant,
And from your Father seal'd: nor durst that rudeness,
And impudence of scorn fall from my 'haviour,
I ever yet knew duty.

Du. We shall teach ye,
I well remember too, upon some words I told ye,
Then at that time, some angry words ye answer'd,
If ever I were Duke, you were no Souldier.
You have kept your word, and so it shall be to you,
From henceforth I dismiss you; take your ease, Sir.

Ar. I humbly thank your Grace; this walted Body,
Beaten and bruised with Arms, dry'd up with troubles,
Is good for nothing else but quiet, now Sir,
And holy Prayers; in which, when I forget
To thank Heaven for all your bounteous favours,
May that be deaf, and my Petitions perish. (pride in?)

Borosf. What a smooth humble Cloak he has cas'd his
And how he has pull'd his Claws in? there's no trusting——

Bur. Speak for the best.

Bor. Believe I shall do ever.

Du. To make ye understand, we feel not yet
Such dearth of Valour, and Experience,
Such a declining Age of doing Spirits,
That all should be confin'd within your excellence,

And you, or none be honour'd, take Boroskie,
The place he has commanded, lead the Souldier;
A little time will bring thee to his honour,
Which has been nothing but the Worlds opinion,
The Souldiers fondness, and a little fortune,
Which I believe his Sword had the least share in.

Theod. O that I durst but answer now.

Putf. Good Colonel.

Theod. My heart will break else: Royal Sir, I know not
What you esteem mens lives, whose hourly labours,
And loss of Blood, consumptions in your service,
Whose Bodies are acquainted with more miseries,
And all to keep you safe, than Dogs or Slaves are.
His Sword the least share gain'd?

Du. You will not fight with me?

Theod. No Sir, I dare not,
You are my Prince, but I dare speak to ye,
And dare speak truth, which none of their ambitions
That be informers to you, dare once think of;
Yet truth will now but anger ye; I am sorry for't,
And so I take my leave. [Exit.

Du. Ev'n when you please, Sir.

Ar. Sirrah, see me no more.

Du. And so may you too:

You have a house i'th' Country, keep you there, Sir,
And when you have rul'd your self, teach your Son man-
For this time I forgive him, (ners,

Ar. Heaven forgive all;

And to your Grace a happy and long Rule here.
And you Lord General, may your fights be prosperous.
In all your Course may Fame and Fortune court you.
Fight for your Country, and your Princes safety;
Boldly, and bravely face your Enemy,
And when you strike, strike with that killing Vertue,
As if a general Plague had seiz'd before ye;
Danger, and doubt, and labour cast behind ye;
And then come home an old and noble Story.

Bur. A little comfort, Sir.

Du. As little as may be:

Farewel, you know your limit.

[Ex. Duke, &c.

Bur. Alas, brave Gentleman.

Ar. I do, and will observe it suddenly,
My Grave; I, that's my limit; 'tis no new thing,
Nor that can make me start, or tremble at it,
To buckle with that old grim Souldier now:
I have seen him in his fowrest shapes, and dreadfull'st;
I, and I thank my honesty, have stood him:
That audit's cast; farewel my honest Souldiers,
Give me your hands; farewel, farewel good Ancient,
A stout man, and a true, thou art come in sorrow.
Blessings upon your Swords, may they ne'r fail ye;
You do but change a man; your fortune's constant;
That by your ancient Valours is ty'd fast still;
Be valiant still, and good: and when ye fight next,
When flame and fury make but one face of horror,
When the great rest of all your honour's up,
When you would think a Spell to shake the enemy,
Remember me, my Prayers shall be with ye:
So once again farewel.

Putf. Let's wait upon ye.

Ar. No, no, it must not be; I have now left me
A single Fortune to my self, no more,
Which needs no train, nor complement; good Captain,
You are an honest and a sober Gentleman,
And one I think has lov'd me.

Putf. I am sure on't.

Ar. Look to my Boy, he's grown too headstrong for me.
And if they think him fit to carry Arms still,
His life is theirs; I have a house i'th' Country,
And when your better hours will give you liberty,
See me: you shall be welcome. Fortune to ye. [Exit.

Anc. I'll cry no more, that will do him no good,
And 'twill but make me dry, and I have no money:
I'll fight no more, and that will do them harm;

And

And if I can do that, I care not for money: (luck too
I could have curst reasonable well, and I have had the
To have 'em hit sometimes. Whosoever thou art,
That like a Devil didst possess the Duke
With these malicious thoughts, mark what I say to thee,
A Plague upon thee, that's but the Preamble.

Sold. O take the Pox too.

Anc. They'll cure one another;
I must have none but kills, and those kill stinking:
Or look ye, let the single Pox possess them,
Or Pox upon Pox.

Putf. That's but ill i'th' arms, Sir.

Anc. 'Tis worse i'th' Legs, I would not wish it else:
And may those grow to scabs as big as Mole-hills,
And twice a day, the Devil with a Curry-Comb
Scratch 'em, and scrub 'em: I warrant him he has 'em.

Sold. May he be ever lowzie.

Anc. That's a pleasure,
The Beggar's Lechery; sometimes the Souldiers:
May he be ever lazie, stink where he stands,
And Maggots breed in's Brains.

Sold. I, marry Sir,
May he fall mad in love with his Grand-mother,
And kissing her, may her teeth drop into his mouth,
And one fall cross his throat, then let him gargle.

Enter a Post.

Putf. Now, what's the matter?

Post. Where's the Duke, pray, Gentlemen?

Putf. Keep on your way, you cannot miss.

Post. I thank ye.

[Exit.]

Anc. If he be married, may he dream he's cuckold'd,
And when he wakes believe, and swear he saw it,
Sue a Divorce, and after find her honest:
Then in a pleasant Pigstye, with his own garters,
And a fine running knot, ride to the Devil.

Putf. If these would do——

Anc. I'll never trust my mind more,
If all these fail.

Sold. What shall we do now, Captain?
For by this honest hand I'll be torn in pieces,
Unless my old General go, or some that love him,
And love us equal too, before I fight more:
I can make a Shooe yet, and draw it on too,
If I like the Leg well.

Anc. Fight? 'tis likely:
No, there will be the sport Boys, when there's need on's.
They think the other Crown will do, will carry us,
And the brave golden Coat of Captain Cankro
Boroskie. What a noise his very name carries?
'Tis Gun enough to fright a Nation,
He needs no Souldiers; if he do, for my part,
I promise ye he's like to seek 'em; so I think you think too,
And all the Army; No, honest, brave old Archas,
We cannot so soon leave thy memory,
So soon forget thy goodness: he that does,
The scandal and the scumm of Arms be counted.

Putf. You much rejoice me now you have hit my meaning.
I durst not prefs ye, till I found your spirits:
Continue thus.

Anc. I'll go and tell the Duke on't.

Enter 2 Post.

Putf. No, no, he'll find it soon enough, and fear it,
When once occasion comes: Another Packet!
From whence, Friend, come you?

2 Post. From the Borders, Sir.

Putf. What news, Sir, I beseech you?

2 Post. Fire and Sword, Gentlemen;
The Tartar's up, and with a mighty force,
Comes forward, like a tempest, all before him
Burning and killing.

Anc. Brave Boys, brave news, Boys.

2 Post. Either we must have present help——

Anc. Still braver.

2 Post. Where lies the Duke?

Sold. He's there.

2 Post. 'Save ye, Gentlemen.

[Exit.]

Anc. We are safe enough, I warrant thee:
Now the time's come.

Putf. I, now 'tis come indeed, and now stand firm, Boys,
And let 'em burn on merrily.

Anc. This City would make a fine marvellous Bone-fire:
'Tis old dry timber, and such Wood has no fellow.

2 Sold. Here will be trim piping anon and whining,
Like so many Pigs in a storm,
When they hear the news once.

Enter Boroskie, and Servant.

Putf. Here's one has heard it already;
Room for the General.

Boros. Say I am fain exceeding sick o'th' sudden,
And am not like to live.

Putf. If ye go on, Sir,
For they will kill ye certainly; they look for ye.

Anc. I see your Lordship's bound, take a suppository,
'Tis I, Sir; a poor cast Flag of yours. The foolish Tartars
They burn and kill, and't like your honour, kill us,
Kill with Guns, with Guns my Lord, with Guns, Sir.
What says your Lordship to a chick in forrel sops?

Putf. Go, go thy ways old true-penny,
Thou hast but one fault: thou art ev'n too valiant. (ted.
Come, to'th' Army Gentlemen, and let's make them acquaint-

Sold. Away, we are for ye. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.

Enter Alinda, and two Gentlemen.

Alin. Why, whither run ye Fools; will ye leave my Lady?

Petes. The Tartar comes, the Tartar comes.

Alin. Why, let him,

I thought you had fear'd no men: upon my conscience
You have try'd their strengths already; stay for shame.

Pet. Shift for thy self, Alinda.

[Exit.]

Alin. Beauty blefs ye:

Into what Grooms Feather-Bed will you creep now?
And there mistake the enemy; sweet youths ye are,
And of a constant courage; are you afraid of foining?

Enter Olympia.

Olym. O my good Wench, what shall become of us?
The Posts come hourly in, and bring new danger;
The enemy is past the Volga, and bears hither
With all the blood and cruelty he carries,
My Brother now will find his fault.

Alin. I doubt me,
Somewhat too late, Madam. But pray fear not,
All will be well, I hope. Sweet Madam, shake not.

Olym. How cam'st thou by this Spirit? our Sex trembles.

Alin. I am not unacquainted with these dangers;
And you shall know my truth; for ere you perish,
A hundred Swords shall pass through me: 'tis but dying,
And Madam we must do it: the manner's all:
You have a Princely Birth, take Princely thoughts to you,
And take my counsel too; go presently,
With all the haste ye have, (I will attend ye)
With all the possible speed, to old Lord Archas,
He honours ye; with all your art persuade him,
('Twill be a dismal time else) woo him hither,
But hither Madam, make him see the danger;
For your new General looks like an Ass;
There's nothing in his face but loss.

Olym. I'll do it.

And thank thee, sweet Alinda: O my Jewel,
How much I'm bound to love thee! by this hand, Wench,
If thou wert a man——

Alin. I would I were to fight for you.

But haste dear Madam.

Olym. I need no Spurs Alinda.

SCENE V.

Enter Duke, 2 Posts, Attendants, Gentlemen.

Du. The Lord General sick now? is this a time
For men to creep into their Beds? What's become, Post,
Of my Lieutenant?

Post. Beaten, and't please your Grace,
And all his Forces sparkled.

Enter a Gentleman.

Du. That's but cold news:
How now, what good news? are the Souldiers ready?

Ge. Yes Sir, but fight they will not, nor stir from that place
They stand in now, unless they have Lord Archas
To lead 'em out; they rail upon this General,
And sing Songs of him, scurvy Songs, to worse tunes:
And much they spare not you, Sir: here they swear
They'll stand and see the City burnt, and dance about it,
Unless Lord Archas come before they fight for't:
It must be so, Sir.

Du. I could wish it so too;
And to that end I have sent Lord Burris to him;
But all I fear will fail; we must dye, Gentlemen,
And one stroke we'll have for't.

Enter Burris.

What bring'st thou, Burris?

Bur. That I am loth to tell; he will not come, Sir;
I found him at his Prayers, there he tells me,
The Enemy shall take him, fit for Heaven:
I urg'd to him all our dangers; his own worths,
The Countries ruine; nay I kneel'd and pray'd him;
He shook his head, let fall a tear, and pointed
Thus with his finger to the Ground; a Grave
I think he meant; and this was all he answer'd.
Your Grace was much to blame:
Where's the new General?

Du. He is sick, poor man.

Bur. He's a poor man indeed, Sir:
Your Grace must needs go to the Souldier.

Du. They have sent me word
They will not stir, they rail at me,
And all the spight they have——
What shout is that there?
Is the Enemy come so near?

[Shout within.]

Enter Archas, Olympia, and Alinda.

Olym. I have brought him, Sir,
At length I have woo'd him thus far.

Du. Happy Sister,
O blessed Woman!

Olym. Use him nobly, Brother;
You never had more need: And Gentlemen,
All the best powers ye have, to tongues turn presently,
To winning and perswading tongues: all my art,
Only to bring him hither, I have utter'd;
Let it be yours to arm him; And good my Lord,
Though I exceed the limit you allow'd me,
Which was the happiness to bring ye hither,
And not to urge ye farther; yet, see your Country,
Out of your own sweet Spirit now behold it:
Turn round, and look upon the miseries,
On every side the fears; O see the dangers;
We find 'em soonest, therefore hear me first, Sir.

Du. Next hear your Prince:
You have said you lov'd him, Archas,
And thought your life too little for his service;
Think not your vow too great now, now the time is,
And now you are brought to th' test, touch right now Soul-
Now shew the manly pureness of thy mettle; (dier,
Now if thou beest that valued man, that vertue,
That great obedience teaching all, now stand it.
What I have said forget, my youth was hasty,

And what you said your self forgive, you were angry.
If men could live without their faults, they were gods, Ar-
He weeps, and holds his hands up: to him, Burris. (chas.

Bur. You have shew'd the Prince his faults;
And like a good Surgeon you have laid
That to 'em makes 'em smart; he feels it,
Let 'em not fester now, Sir; your own honour,
The bounty of that mind, and your allegiance,
'Gainst which I take it, Heaven gives no Command, Sir,
Nor seals no Vow, can better teach ye now
What ye have to do, than I, or this necessity;
Only this little's left; would ye do nobly,
And in the Eye of Honour truly triumph?
Conquer that mind first, and then men are nothing.

Alin. Last, a poor Virgin kneels; for loves fake General,
If ever you have lov'd; for her sake, Sir,
For your own honesty, which is a Virgin,
Look up, and pity us, be bold and fortunate,
You are a Knight, a good and noble Souldier,
And when your Spurs were given ye, your Sword buckl'd,
Then were you sworn for Vertues Cause, for Beauties,
For Chastity to strike; strike now, they suffer;
Now draw your Sword, or else you are recreant,
Only a Knight i'th' Heels, i'th' Heart a Coward;
Your first Vow honour made, your last but anger. (too?)

Ar. How like my vertuous Wife this thing looks, speaks
So would she chide my dulness: fair one, I thank ye.
My gracious Sir, your pardon, next your hand:
Madam, your favour, and your prayers: Gentlemen,
Your wishes, and your loves: and pretty sweet one,
A favour for your Souldier.

Olymp. Give him this, Wench.

Alin. Thus do I tye on Victory.

Arc. My Armour,
My Horse, my Sword, my tough Staff, and my Fortune,
And Olin now I come to shake thy glory.

Du. Go, brave and prosperous, our loves go with thee.

Olymp. Full of thy vertue, and our Prayers attend thee.

Bur. &c. Loaden with Victory, and we to honour thee.

Alin. Come home the Son of Honour,
And I'll serve ye.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Burris, and two Gentlemen.

Duke. NO news of Archas yet?
Bur. But now, and't please ye,
A Post came in, Letters he brought none with him,
But this deliver'd: He saw the Armies join,
The game of Blood begun, and by our General,
Who never was acquainted but with Conquest,
So bravely fought, he saw the Tartars shaken,
And there he said he left 'em.

Du. Where's Boroskie?

1 Gent. He's up again, and't please ye.

Bur. Sir, methinks

This News should make ye lightsome, bring joy to ye,
It strikes our hearts with general Comfort. [Exit Duke.]
Gone? What should this mean, so suddenly?
He's well?

2 Gent. We see no other.

1 Gent. Would the rest were well too,
That put these starts into him.

Bur. I'll go after him.

2 Gent. 'Twill not be fit, Sir: h'as some secret in him
He would not be disturb'd in: know you any thing
Has cross him since the General went?

Bur. Not any:

If there had been, I am sure I should have found it:
Only I have heard him oft complain for money:
Money he says he wants.

1 Gent.

1 Gent. It may be that then.

Bur. To him that has so many ways to raise it,
And those so honest, it cannot be.

Enter Duke and Boroskie.

1 Gent. He comes back,
And Lord Boroskie with him.

Bur. There the game goes,
I fear some new thing hatching.

Duke. Come hither Burris.
Go see my Sister, and commend me to her,
And to my little Mistrifs give this Token;
Tell her I'll see her shortly.

Bur. Yes, I shall, Sir. [Ex. Bur. and Gent.]

Duke. Wait you without: I would yet try him further.

Bor. 'Twill not be much amiss: has your Grace heard yet
Of what he has done i'th' Field?

Duke. A Post but now
Came in, who saw 'em joyn, and has delivered,
The Enemy gave ground before he parted.

Bor. 'Tis well.

Duke. Come, speak thy mind man: 'tis not for fighting,
A noise of War, I keep thee in my bosom;
Thy ends are nearer to me; from my Childhood
Thou brought'st me up: and like another nature,
Made good all my necessities: speak boldly.

Bor. Sir, what I utter, will be thought but envy
Though I intend, high heaven knows, but your honour,
When vain and empty people shall proclaim me—
Good Sir excuse me.

Duke. Do you fear me for your Enemy?
Speak on your duty.

Bor. Then I must, and dare, Sir:
When he comes home, take heed the Court receive him not,
Take heed he meet not with their loves and praises,
That Glafs will shew him ten times greater, Sir,
(And make him strive to make good that proportion,)
Than ere his fortune bred him, he is honourable,
At least I strive to understand him so,
And of a nature, if not this way poyson'd, (Sir;
Perfect enough, easie, and sweet, but those are soon seduc'd,
He's a great man, and what that Pill may work,
Prepar'd by general voices of the people,
Is the end of all my Counsel, only this, Sir,
Let him retire a while, there's more hangs by it
Than you know yet: there if he stand a while well,
But till the Souldier cool, whom, for their service
You must pay now most liberally, most freely,
And showre your self into 'em; 'tis the bounty
They follow with their loves, and not the bravery.

Enter two Gent.

Duke. But where's the Money? how now?

2 Gent. Sir, the Colonel,
Son to the Lord Archas, with most happy news
Of the Tartars overthrow, without here
Attends your Graces pleasure.

Bor. Be not seen, Sir,
He's a bold fellow, let me stand his Thunders,
To th' Court he must not come: no blessing here, Sir,
No face of favour, if you love your honour.

Enter Theodore.

Duke. Do what you think is meetest; I'll retire, Sir. [Ex.]

Bor. Conduct him in, Sir— welcome noble Colonel.

The. That's much from your Lordship: pray where's the Bor. We hear you have beat the Tartar. (Duke?)

The. Is he busie, Sir?

Bor. Have ye taken Olin yet?

The. I would fain speak with him.

Bor. How many men have ye lost?

The. Do's he lye this way?

Bor. I am sure you fought it bravely.

The. I must see him.

Bor. You cannot yet, ye must not, what's your Commission?

The. No Gentleman o'th' Chamber here?

Bor. Why, pray ye, Sir?

Am not I fit to entertain your business?

The. I think you are not, Sir; I am sure ye shall not.
I bring no tales, nor flatteries: in my tongue, Sir,
I carry no fork'd stings.

Bor. You keep your bluntness.

The. You are deceiv'd: it keeps me: I had felt else
Some of your plagues ere this: but good Sir trifle not,
I have business to the Duke.

Bor. He's not well, Sir,
And cannot now be spoke withal.

The. Not well, Sir?

How would he ha'been, if we had lost? not well, Sir?
I bring him news to make him well: his enemy
That would have burnt his City here, and your House too,
Your brave gilt house, my Lord, your honours hangings,
Where all your Ancestors, and all their Battels,
Their silk and golden Battels are decipher'd:
That would not only have abus'd your buildings, (ries,
Your goodly buildings, Sir, and have drunk dry your butte-
Purloin'd your Lordships Plate, the Duke bestow'd on you,
For turning handsomly o'th' toe, and trim'd your Virgins,
Trim'd 'em of a new cut, and't like your Lordship,
'Tis ten to one, your Wife too, and the curse is
You had had no remedy against these Rascals,
No Law, and't like your Honour; would have kill'd you too
And roasted ye, and eaten ye, ere this time:
Notable Knaves my Lord, unruly Rascals:
These youths have we ty'd up, put muzzels on 'em,
And par'd their Nails, that honest civil Gentlemen,
And such most noble persons as your self is,
May live in peace, and rule the land with a twine thread.
These news I bring.

Bor. And were they thus deliver'd ye?

The. My Lord, I am no pen-man, nor no Orator,
My tongue was never Oyl'd with Here and't like ye,
There I beseech ye, weigh, I am a Souldier,
And truth I covet only, no fine terms, Sir;
I come not to stand treating here; my business
Is with the Duke, and of such general blessing—

Bor. You have overthrown the enemy, we know it,
And we rejoyce in't; ye have done like honest Subjects,
You have done handsomely and well.

Theo. But well, Sir?

But handsomely and well? what are we juglers?
I'll do all that in cutting up a Capon.
But handsomely and well? does your Lordship take us
For the Dukes Tumblers? we have done bravely, Sir,
Ventur'd our lives like men.

Bor. Then bravely be it.

Theo. And for as brave rewards we look, and graces,
We have sweat and bled for't, Sir.

Bor. And ye may have it,
If you will stay the giving. Men that thank themselves first
For any good they do, take off the lustre,
And blot the benefit.

Theo. Are these the welcomes,
The Bells that ring out our rewards? pray heartily,
Early and late, there may be no more Enemies:
Do my good Lord, pray seriously, and sigh too,
For if there be—

Bor. They must be met, and fought with.

Theo. By whom? by you? they must be met and flatter'd.
Why, what a Devil ail'd ye to do these things?
With what assurance dare ye mock men thus?
You have but single lives, and those I take it
A Sword may find too: why do ye dam the Duke up?
And choak that course of love, that like a River
Should fill our empty veins again with comforts?
But if ye use these knick knacks,
This fast and loose, with faithful men and honest,
You'll be the first will find it.

Enter

Enter Archas, Souldiers, Putskey, Ancient, and others.

Boros. You are too untemperate.

Theo. Better be so, and thief too, than unthankful :

Pray use this old man so, and then we are paid all. (ye,

The Duke thanks ye for your service, and the Court thanks

And wonderful desirous they are to see ye;

Pray Heaven we have room enough to march for May-games,

Pageants, and Bone-fires for your welcome home, Sir.

Here your most noble friend the Lord Boroskie,

A Gentleman too tender of your credit,

And ever in the Dukes ear, for your good, Sir,

Crazie and sickly, yet to be your servant,

Has leapt into the open air to meet ye. (home, Sir ;

Bor. The best is, your words wound not, you are welcome

Heartily welcome home, and for your service,

The noble overthrow you gave the Enemy,

The Duke salutes ye too with all his thanks, Sir.

Anc. Sure they will now regard us.

Puts. There's a reason :

But by the changing of the Colonels countenance,

The rolling of his eyes like angry Billows ;

I fear the wind's not down yet, Ancient.

Arch. Is the Duke well, Sir ?

Boros. Not much unhealthy,

Only a little grudging of an Ague,

Which cannot last: he has heard, which makes him fearful,

And loth as yet to give your worth due welcome,

The sickness hath been somewhat hot i'th' Army,

Which happily may prove more doubt than danger,

And more his fear than fate ; yet howsoever,

An honest care——

Arch. Ye say right, and it shall be;

For though upon my life 'tis but a rumor,

A meer opinion, without faith or fear in't ;

For Sir, I thank Heaven, we never stood more healthy,

Never more high and lusty ; yet to satisfy,

We cannot be too curious, or too careful

Of what concerns his state, we'll draw away, Sir,

And lodge at further distance, and less danger.

Boros. It will be well.

Anc. It will be very scurvy :

I smell it out, it stinks abominably,

Stir it no more.

Boros. The Duke, Sir, would have you too,

For a short day or two, retire to your own house,

Whither himself will come to visit ye,

And give ye thanks.

Arch. I shall attend his pleasure.

Anc. A trick, a lousie trick: so ho, a trick Boys.

Arch. How now, what's that ?

Anc. I thought I had found a Hare, Sir,

But 'tis a Fox, an old Fox, shall we hunt him ?

Arch. No more such words.

Boros. The Souldier's grown too sawcy,
You must tie him straiter up.

Arch. I do my best, Sir ;

But men of free-born minds sometimes will flie out.

Anc. May not we see the Duke ?

Boros. Not at this time, Gentlemen,

Your General knows the cause.

Anc. We have no Plague, Sir,

Unless it be in our pay, nor no Pox neither ;

Or if we had, I hope that good old Courtier

Will not deny us place there.

Puts. Certain my Lord,

Considering what we are, and what we have done ;

If not, what need ye may have, 'twould be better,

A great deal nobler, and taste honestier

To use us with more sweetness ; men that dig

And lash away their lives at the Carts tail,

Double our comforts ; meat, and their Masters thanks too,

When they work well, they have ; Men of our quality,

When they do well, and venture for't with valour,

Fight hard, lye hard, feed hard, when they come home, Sir,
And know these are deserving things, things worthy,
Can you then blame 'em if their minds a little
Be stir'd with glory ? 'tis a pride becomes 'em,
A little season'd with ambition,
To be respected, reckon'd well, and honour'd
For what they have done: when to come home thus poorly,
And met with such unjointed joy, so looked on,
As if we had done no more but dress a Horse well ;
So entertain'd, as if, I thank ye Gentlemen,
Take that to drink, had pow'r to please a Souldier ?
Where be the shouts, the Bells rung out, the people ?
The Prince himself ?

Arch. Peace: I perceive your eye, Sir,
Is fixt upon this Captain for his freedom,
And happily you find his tongue too forward ;
As I am Master of the place I carry,
'Tis fit I think so too ; but were I this man,
No stronger tie upon me, than the truth
And tongue to tell it, I should speak as he do's,
And think with modesty enough, such Saints
That daily thrust their loves and lives through hazards,
And fearless for their Countries peace, march hourly
Through all the doors of death, and know the darkest,
Should better be canoniz'd for their service:
What labour would these men neglect, what danger
Where honour is, though seated in a Billow,
Rising as high as Heaven, would not these Souldiers,
Like to so many Sea-gods charge up to it ?
Do you see these swords ? times Sythe was ne'er so sharp, Sir ;
Nor ever at one harvest mow'd such handfuls:
Thoughts ne'er so sudden, nor belief so sure
When they are drawn, and were it not sometimes
I swim upon their angers to allay 'em,
And like a calm depress their fell intentions ;
They are so deadly sure, nature would suffer——
And whose are all these glories ? why, their Princes,
Their Countries, and their Friends ? Alas, of all these,
And all the happy ends they bring, the blessings,
They only share the labours: A little joy then,
And outside of a welcome, at an upshot
Would not have done amiss, Sir ; but howsoever
Between me and my duty, no crack, Sir,
Shall dare appear: I hope by my example
No discontent in them: without doubt Gentlemen,
The Duke will both look suddenly and truly
On your deserts: Methinks 'twere good they were paid, Sir.
Bor. They shall be immediately ; I stay for money ;
And any favour else——

Arch. We are all bound to ye ;
And so I take my leave, Sir ; when the Duke pleases
To make me worthy of his eyes——

Bor. Which will be suddenly,
I know his good thoughts to ye.

Arch. With all duty,
And all humility, I shall attend, Sir. (tisfied.

Bor. Once more you are welcome home: these shall be fa-

The. Be sure we be: and handsomly.

Arch. Wait you on me, Sir.

The. And honestly: no juggling.

Arch. Will ye come, Sir ? [Exit.

Bor. Pray do not doubt.

The. We are no Boys. [Exit.

Enter a Gent. and 2 or 3 with Money.

Bor. Well Sir. (Lordship.

Gent. Here's mony from the Duke, and't please your

Bor. 'Tis well.

Gent. How sowre the Souldiers look ?

Bor. Is't told ?

Gent. Yes, and for every company a double pay,
And the Dukes love to all.

Anc. That's worth a Duckett.

Bor. You that be Officers, see it discharg'd then,
Why do not you take it up ?

Anc. 'Tis too heavy :
'Body o'me, I have strain'd mine arm.
Bor. Do ye scorn it?
Anc. Has your Lorship any dice about ye? fit round
And come on seven for my share. (Gentlemen,

Put. Do you think Sir,
This is the end we fight? can this durt draw us
To such a stupid tameness, that our service
Neglected, and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at
With a few honourable words, and this, is righted?
Have not we eyes and ears, to hear and see Sir,
And minds to understand the slights we carry?
I come home old, and full of hurts, men look on me
As if I had got 'em from a whore, and shun me;
I tell my griefs, and fear my wants, I am answer'd,
Alas 'tis pity! pray dine with me on Sunday:
These are the sores we are sick of, the minds maladies,
And can this cure 'em? you should have us'd us nobly,
And for our doing well, as well proclaim'd us
To the worlds eye, have shew'd and fainted us,
Then ye had paid us bravely: then we had shin'd Sir,
Not in this gilded stuff but in our glory:
You may take back your mony.

Gent. This I fear'd still.

Bor. Consider better Gentlemen.

Anc. Thank your Lordship:

And now I'll put on my considering cap:
My Lord, that I am no Courtier, you may guess it
By having no sute to you for this mony:
For though I want, I want not this, nor shall not,
Whilst you want that civility to rank it
With those rights we expected; mony grows Sir,
And men must gather it, all is not put in one purse.
And that I am no Carter, I could never whistle yet:
But that I am a Souldier, and a Gentleman,
And a fine Gentleman, and't like your honour,
And a most pleasant companion: all you that are witty,
Come list to my ditty: come set in boyes,
With your Lordships patience.

[Song. How do you like my Song, my Lord? (better,

Bor. Even as I like your self, but 'twould be a great deal
You would prove a great deal wiser, and take this mony,
In your own phrase I speak now Sir, and 'tis very well
You have learn'd to sing; for since you prove so liberal,
To refuse such means as this, maintain your voice still,
'Twill prove your best friend.

Anc. 'Tis a singing age Sir,
A merry moon here now: I'll follow it:
Fidling, and fooling now, gains more than fighting.

Bor. What is't you blench at? what would you ask? speak

Sol. And so we dare: a triumph for the General. (freely.

Put. And then an honour special to his vertue.

Anc. That we may be prefer'd that have serv'd for it,
And cram'd up into favour like the worshipful,
At least upon the Cities charge made drunk
For one whole year; we have done 'em ten years service;
That we may enjoy our lechery without grudging,
And mine, or thine be nothing, all things equal,
And catch as catch may, be proclaim'd: that when we bor-
And have no will to pay again, no Law (row,
Lay hold upon us, nor no Court controule us.

Bor. Some of these may come to pass; the Duke may do
And no doubt will: the General will find too, ('em,
And so will you, if you but stay with patience: I have no

Put. Nor will: come fellow Souldiers. (power.

Bor. Pray be not so distrustfull.

Put. There are waies yet,
And honest waies; we are not brought up Statues.

Anc. If your Lordship
Have any silk stockings, that have holes i'th' heels,
Or ever an honourable Cassock that wants buttons,
I could have cur'd such maladies: your Lordships custome
And my good Ladies, if the bones want setting
In her old bodies——

Bor. This is disobedience.

Anc. Eight pence a day, and hard Eggs.

Put. Troop off Gentlemen,
Some Coin we have, whilst this lasts, or our credits,
We'll never sell our Generals worth for six-pence.
Ye are beholding to us.

Anc. Fare ye well Sir,
And buy a pipe with that: do ye see this scarf Sir?
By this hand I'll cry Brooms in't, birchen Brooms Sir,
Before I eat one bit from your benevolence.
Now to our old occupations again.
By your leave Lord.

[Exeunt.

Bor. You will bite when ye are sharper; take up the
This love I must remove, this fondness to him, (mony.
This tenderness of heart; I have lost my way else:
There is no sending man, they will not take it,
They are yet too full of pillage,
They'll dance for't ere't be long:
Come, bring it after.

Enter Duke.

Duke. How now, refus'd their mony?

Bor. Very bravely,
And stand upon such terms 'tis terrible.

Duke. Where's Archas?

Bor. He's retir'd Sir, to his house,
According to your pleasure, full of dutie
To outward shew: but what within——

Duke. Refuse it?

Bor. Most confidently: 'tis not your revenues
Can feed then Sir, and yet they have found a General
That knows no ebbe of bountie: there they eat Sir;
And loath your invitations.

Duke. 'Tis not possible,
He's poor as they.

Bor. You'll find it otherwise.
Pray make your journey thither presently,
And as ye goe I'll open ye a wonder.
Good Sir this morning.

Duke. Follow me, I'll doe it.

[Exeunt.

SCENA II.

Enter Olympia, Alinda, Burris, and Gentlewomen.

Olym. But do you think my Brother loves her?

Bur. Certain Madam,
He speaks much of her, and sometimes with wonder,
Oft wishes she were nobler born.

Olym. Do you think him honest?

Bur. Your Grace is nearer to his heart, than I am,
Upon my life I hold him so.

Olym. 'Tis a poor wench,
I would not have her wrong'd: methinks my Brother——
But I must not give rules to his affections;
Yet if he weigh her worth——

Bur. You need not fear Madam.

Olym. I hope I shall not: Lord Burris
I love her well; I know not, there is something
Makes me bestow more than a care upon her:
I do not like that ring from him to her;
I mean to women of her way, such tokens
Rather appear as baits, than royal bounties:
I would not have it so.

Bur. You will not find it,
Upon my troth I think his most ambition
Is but to let the world know h'as a handsom Mistris:
Will your grace command me any service to him?

Olym. Remember all my duty.

Bur. Blessings crown ye:
What's your will Lady?

Al. Any thing that's honest;
And if you think it fit, so poor a service,
Clad in a ragged vertue, may reach him,
I do beseech your Lordship speak it humbly.

Bur.

Bur. Fair one I will: in the best phrase I have too,
And so I kiss your hand. [Exit.]
Al. Your Lordships Servant.
Olym. Come hither wench, what art thou doing with that
Al. I am looking on the posse, Madam. (Ring?)
Olym. What is't?
Al. The Jewel's set within.
Olym. But where the joy wench,
When that invisible Jewel's lost? why dost thou smile so?
What unhappy meaning hast thou?
Al. Nothing Madam,
But only thinking what strange spells these Rings have,
And how they work with some.
Pet. I fear with you too.
Al. This could not cost above a Crown.
Pet. 'Twill cost you
The shaving of your crown, if not the washing.
Olym. But he that sent it, makes the vertue greater.
Al. I and the vice too Madam: goodness blefs me:
How fit 'tis for my finger!
2 W. No doubt you'll find too
A finger fit for you.
Al. Sirrah, Petesca,
What wilt thou give me for the good that follows this?
But thou hast Rings enough, thou art provided:
Heigh ho, what must I doe now?
Pet. You'll be taught that,
The easiest part that e're you learn't, I warrant you.
Al. Ay me, ay me.
Pet. You will divide too, shortly,
Your voice comes finely forward.
Olym. Come hither wanton,
Thou art not surely as thou faist.
Al. I would not:
But sure there is a witchcraft in this Ring, Lady,
Lord how my heart leaps!
Pet. 'Twill goe pit a pat shortly.
Al. And now methinks a thousand of the Dukes shapes.
2 W. Will no less serve ye?
Al. In ten thousand smiles.
Olym. Heaven blefs the wench.
Al. With eyes that will not be deni'd to enter;
And such soft sweet embraces; take it from me,
I am undone else Madam: I'm lost else.
Olym. What ail's the girle?
Al. How suddenly I'm alter'd!
And grown my self again! do not you feel it?
Olym. Wear that, and I'll wear this:
I'll try the strength on't.
Al. How cold my blood grows now!
Here's sacred vertue:
When I leave to honour this,
Every hour to pay a kiss,
When each morning I arise,
Or I forget a sacrifice:
When this figure in my faith,
And the pureness that it hath,
I pursue not with my will,
Nearer to arrive at still:
When I lose, or change this Jewel,
Flie me faith, and heaven be cruel.
Olym. You have half confirm'd me,
Keep but that way sure,
And what this charm can doe, let me endure. [Exeunt.]

SCENA III.

Enter Archas, Theodore, 2 Daughters Honora and Viola.

Ar. Carry your self discreetly, it concerns me,
The Duke's come in, none of your froward passions,
Nor no distasts to any: Prethee Theodor,
By my life, boy, 'twill ruine me.
The. I have done Sir,
So there be no foul play he brings along with him.

Ar. What's that to you?
Let him bring what please him,
And whom, and how.
The. So they mean well ———
Ar. Is't fit you be a Judge sirrah?
The. 'Tis fit I feel Sir.
Ar. Get a banquet ready,
And trim your selves up handsomly.
The. To what end?
Do you mean to make 'em whores?
Hang up a sign then,
And set 'em out to Livery.
Ar. Whose son art thou?
The. Yours Sir, I hope: but not of your disgraces.
Ar. Full twenty thousand men I have commanded,
And all their minds, with this calm'd all their angers;
And shall a boy of mine own breed too, of mine own blood,
One crooked stick ———
The. Pray take your way, and thrive in't,
I'll quit your house; if taint or black dishonour
Light on ye, 'tis your own, I have no share in't.
Yet if it do fall out so, as I fear it,
And partly find it too ———
Ar. Hast thou no reverence?
No dutie in thee?
The. This shall shew I obey ye:
I dare not stay: I would have shew'd my love too,
And that you ask as duty, with my life Sir,
Had you but thought me worthy of your hazards,
Which heaven preserve ye from, and keep the Duke too:
And there's an end of my wishes, God be with ye. [Exit.]
Ar. Stubborn, yet full of that we all love, honesty.

Enter Burris.

Lord Burris, where's the Duke?
Bur. In the great chamber Sir,
And there staves till he see you, ye 'have a fine house here.
Ar. A poor contented lodge, unfit for his presence,
Yet all the joy it hath.
Bur. I hope a great one, and for your good, brave Sir.
Ar. I thank ye Lord:
And now my service to the Duke.
Bur. Ple wait on ye. [Exeunt.]

Enter Duke, Boroskey, Gent. and Attendants.

Duke. May this be credited?
Bor. Disgrace me else,
And never more with favour look upon me.
Duke. It seems impossible.
Bor. It cannot chuse Sir,
Till your own eyes behold it; but that it is so,
And that by this means the too haughtie Souldier
Has been so cramm'd and fed, he cares not for ye;
Believe, or let me perish: Let your eyes
As you observe the house, but where I point it,
Make stay, and take a view, and then you have found it.

Enter Archas, Burris, 2 Daughters, and Servant.

Du. I'll follow your direction: welcome Archas,
You are welcome home brave Lord, we are come to visit ye,
And thank ye for your service.
Ar. 'Twas so poor Sir,
In true respect of what I owe your Highness,
It merits nothing.
Du. Are these fair ones yours, Lord?
Ar. Their Mother made me think so Sir.
Du. Stand up Ladies:
Besheiw my heart they are fair ones; methinks fitter
The lustre of the Court, than thus live darken'd:
I would see your house Lord Archas, it appears to me
A handfom pile.
Ar. 'Tis neat but no great structure;
I'll be your Graces guide, give me the keys there.
Du. Lead on, we'll follow ye: begin with the Gallery,
I think

I think that's one.

Arc. 'Tis so, and't please ye, Sir,
The rest above are lodgings all.

Du. Go on, Sir.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Enter Theodore, Putskey, and Ancient.

Putsf. The Duke gone thither, do you say?

The. Yes marry do I,

And all the Ducklings too; but what they'll do there——

Putsf. I hope they'll crown his service.

The. With a Custard;

This is no weather for rewards: they crown his service?
Rather they go to shave his Crown: I was rated
As if I had been a Dog had worried Sheep, out of doors,
For making but a doubt.

Putsf. They must now grace him.

The. Mark but the end. (him.)

Anc. I am sure they should reward him, they cannot want

The. They that want honesty, want any thing.

Putsf. The Duke is so noble in his own thoughts.

The. That I grant ye,

If those might only sway him: but 'tis most certain,
So many new born Flies his light gave life to,
Buzze in his beams, Flesh-flies, and Butterflies,
Hornets, and humming Scarabs, that not one honey Bee
That's loaden with true labour, and brings home
Encrease and Credit, can 'scape riving,
And what she sucks for sweet, they turn to bitternefs. ('em?

Anc. Shall we go see what they do, and talk our mind to Putsf. That we have done too much, and to no purpose.

Anc. Shall we be hang'd for him?

I have a great mind to be hang'd now (take me,
For doing some brave thing for him; a worse end will
And for an action of no worth; not honour him?
Upon my Conscience, even the Devil, the very Devil
(Not to belie him) thinks him an honest man, (years,
I am sure he has sent him souls any time these twenty
Able to furnish all his Fish-markets.

The. Leave thy talking,

And come, let's go to dinner and drink to him,
We shall hear more ere supper time: if he be honour'd,
He has deserv'd it well, and we shall fight for't:
If he be ruin'd, so, we know the worst then,
And for my self, I'll meet it.

Putsf. I ne'r fear it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

Enter Duke, Archas, Boroskey, Burris, Gentlemen, and Attendants.

Du. They are handsome rooms all, well contriv'd and Full of convenience, the prospect's excellent. (fitted,

Arc. Now will your Grace pass down, and do me but To taste a Countrey Banquet? (the honour

Du. What room's that?

I would see all now; what conveyance has it?

I see you have kept the best part yet; pray open it.

Arc. Ha! I misdoubted this: 'tis of no receipt, Sir,
For your eyes most unfit——

Du. I long to see it, (lent painting,
Because I would judge of the whole piece: some excel-
Or some rare spoils you would keep to entertain me
Another time, I know.

Anc. In troth there is not,
Nor any thing worth your sight; below I have
Some Fountains, and some Ponds.

Du. I would see this now.

Ar. Boroskie, thou art a Knave; it contains nothing
But rubbish from the other rooms and unnecessaries:
VVill't please you see a strange Clock?

Du. This or nothing: [Little Trunk ready.]

Why should you bar it up thus with defences

Above the rest, unless it contain'd something
More excellent, and curious of keeping?
Open't, for I will see it.

Arc. The Keys are lost, Sir:

Does your Grace think if it were fit for you;
I could be so unmannerly?

Du. I will see it, and either shew it——

Arc. Good Sir——

Du. Thank ye, Archas,
You shew your love abundantly,
Do I use to entreat thus? force it open.

Bur. That were inhospitable; you are his Guest, Sir,
And with his greatest joy, to entertain ye.

Du. Hold thy peace, Fool; will ye open it?

Arc. Sir, I cannot.

I must not if I could.

Du. Go, break it open.

(tlemen.)

Arc. I must withstand that force: Be not too rash, Gen-
Du. Unarm him first, then if he be not obstinate
Preserve his life.

Arc. I thank your Grace, I take it;
And now take you the Keys, go in, and see, Sir; (tor,
There feed your eyes with wonder, and thank that Tray-
That thing that sells his faith for favour. [Exit Duke.

Bur. Sir, what moves ye? (das,

Arc. I have kept mine pure: Lord Burris, there's a Ju-
That for a smile will sell ye all: a Gentleman?
The Devil has more truth, and has maintain'd it;
A Whores heart more belief in't.

Enter Duke.

Du. What's all this, Archas?

I cannot blame you to conceal it so,

This most inestimable Treasure. Ar. Yours Sir.

Du. Nor do I wonder now the Souldier sleights me.

Arc. Be not deceiv'd; he has had no favour here, Sir,
Nor had you known this now, but for that Pick-thank,
The lost man in his faith, he has reveal'd it,
To suck a little honey from ye has betray'd it.

I swear he smiles upon me, and forsworn too,
Thou crackt, uncurrant Lord: I'll tell ye all, Sir:
Your Sire, before his death, knowing your temper,
To be as bounteous as the air, and open,
As flowing as the Sea to all that follow'd ye,
Your great mind fit for War and Glory, thriftily
Like a great Husband to preserve your actions,
Collected all this treasure; to our trusts,
To mine I mean, and to that long-tongu'd Lord's there,
He gave the knowledg and the charge of all this,
Upon his death-Bed too: And on the Sacrament
He swore us thus, never to let this Treasure
Part from our secret keepings, till no hope
Of Subject could relieve ye, all your own wasted,
No help of those that lov'd ye could supply ye,
And then some great exploit a foot; my honesty
I would have kept till I had made this useful;
I shew'd it, and I stood it to the tempest,
And useful to the end 'twas left: I am cozen'd,
And so are you too, if you spend this vainly;
This Worm that crept into ye has abus'd ye,
Abus'd your fathers care, abus'd his Faith too:
Nor can this mass of money make him man more,
A flea'd Dog has more soul, an Ape more honesty;
All mine ye have amongst it, farewell that,
I cannot part with't nobler; my heart's clear,
My Conscience smooth as that, no rub upon't:
But O thy Hell!

Bor. I seek no Heaven from you, Sir.

Arc. Thy gnawing Hell, Boroskey, it will find thee:
Would ye heap Coals upon his head has wrong'd ye,
Has ruin'd your estate? give him this money,
Melt it into his mouth.

Du. What little Trunk's that?
That there o'th' top, that's lockt?

Bor. You'll find it rich, Sir,

M m

Richer

Richer I think than all.

Arc. You were not covetous,
Nor wont to weave your thoughts with such a courseness;
Pray rack not Honesty.

Bor. Be sure you see it.

Du. Bring out the Trunk.

Enter with the Trunk.

Arc. You'll find that treasure too,
All I have left me now.

Du. What's this, a poor Gown?
And this a piece of Seneca?

Arc. Yes sure, Sir,
More worth than all your Gold, yet ye have enough on't,
And of a Mine far purer, and more precious;
This sells no friends, nor searches into counsels,
And yet all counsel, and all friends live here, Sir;
Betrays no Faith, yet handles all that's trusty:
Will't please you leave me this?

Du. With all my heart, Sir.

Ar. What says your Lordship to't?

Bor. I dare not rob ye.

(both;

Arc. Poor miserable men, you have rob'd your selves
This Gown, and this unvalu'd Treasure, your brave Father,
Found me a Child at School with, in his progress.
Where such a love he took to some few answers,
Unhappy Boyish toys hit in my head then,
That suddenly I made him, thus as I was,
(For here was all the Wealth I brought his Highness)
He carried me to Court, there bred me up,
Bestow'd his favours on me, taught me the Arms first,
With those an honest mind; I serv'd him truly,
And where he gave me trust, I think I fail'd not;
Let the World speak: I humbly thank your Highness,
You have done more, and nobler, eas'd mine age, Sir;
And to this care a fair Quietus given,
Now to my Book again.

Du. You have your wish, Sir,
Let some bring off the treasure.

Bor. Some is his, Sir.

Arc. None, none, a poor unworthy reaper,
The Harvest is his Graces.

Du. Thank you, Archas.

Arc. But will not you repent, Lord? when this is gone
Where will your Lordship?—

Bor. Pray take you no care, Sir.

Arc. Does your Grace like my House?

Du. Wondrous well, Archas,
You have made me richly welcome.

Arc. I did my best, Sir.

Is there any thing else may please your Grace?

Du. Your Daughters

I had forgot, send them to Court.

Arc. How's that, Sir?

Du. I said your Daughters; see it done: I'll have 'em
Attend my Sister, Archas.

Arc. Thank your Highness.

Du. And suddenly.

[Exit.

Arc. Through all the ways I dare,
I'll serve your temper, though you try me far.

[Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Theodore, Putskey, Ancient and Servant.

The. I wonder we hear no news.

Putsf. Here's your fathers servant,
He comes in haste too, now we shall know all, Sir.

The. How now?

Ser. I am glad I have met you, Sir; your father
Intreats you presently make haste unto him.

The. What news?

Ser. None of the best, Sir, I am asham'd to tell it,
Pray ask no more.

The. Did not I tell ye, Gentlemen?
Did not I prophesie? he's undone then.

Ser. Not so, Sir, but as near it—

Putsf. There's no help now;
The Army's scatter'd all, through discontent,
Not to be rallied up in haste to help this.

Anc. Plague of the Devil; have ye watch'd your seasons?
We shall watch you ere long.

The. Farewel, there's no cure,
We must endure all now: I know what I'll do.

[Exit Theodore and Servant.

Putsf. Nay, there's no striving, they have a hand upon us,
A heavy and a hard one.

Anc. Now I have it,
We have yet some Gentlemen, some Boys of mettle,
(What, are we bob'd thus still, colted, and carted?)
And one mad trick we'll have to shame these Vipers;
Shall I blefs 'em?

Putsf. Farewel; I have thought my way too. [Exit.

Anc. Were never such rare Cries in Christendome,
As Mosco shall afford: we'll live by fooling
Now fighting's gone, and they shall find and feel it. [Exit.

SCENE II.

Enter Archas, Honora, and Viola.

Ar. No more, it must be so; do you think I would fend ye,
Your father and your friend—

Viol. Pray Sir, be good to us,
Alas, we know no Court, nor seek that knowledge;
We are content with harmless things at home,
Children of your content, bred up in quiet,
Only to know our selves, to seek a Wisedome
From that we understand, easie and honest;
To make our actions worthy of your Honour,
Their ends as innocent as we begot 'em;
What shall we look for Sir, what shall we learn there,
That this more private sweetness cannot teach us?

Vertue was never built upon ambition,
Nor the Souls Beauties bred out of Bravery:
What a terrible Father would you seem to us,
Now you have moulded us, and wrought our tempers
To easie and obedient ways, uncrooked,
Where the fair mind can never lose nor loiter,
Now to divert our Natures, now to stem us
Roughly against the tide of all this treasure?
Would ye have us proud? 'tis sooner bred than buried;
Wickedly proud? for such things dwell at Court, Sir.

Hon. Would ye have your Children learn to forget their
And when he dies dance on his Monument? (father,

Shall we seek Vertue in a Sattin Gown;
Embroider'd Vertue? Faith in a well-curl'd Feather?
And set our Credits to the tune of green sleeves?

This may be done; and if you like, it shall be.
You should have sent us thither when we were younger,
Our maiden-heads at a higher rate; our Innocence
Able to make a Mart indeed: we are now too old, Sir,
Perhaps they'll think too cunning too, and slight us;
Besides, we are altogether unprovided,

Unfurnisht utterly of the rules should guide us:
This Lord comes, licks his hand, and protests to me;
Compares my Beauty to a thousand fine things;
Mountains, and Fountains, Trees, and Stars, and Goblins;
Now have not I the faith for to believe him;
He offers me the honourable courtesie,
To lye with me all night, what a misery is this?
I am bred up so foolishly, alas, I dare not,
And how madly these things will shew there.

Arc. I send ye not,
Like parts infected, to draw more corruption;
Like Spiders to grow great, with growing evil:
With your own Vertues season'd, and my prayers,

The Card of goodnes in your minds, that shows ye
When ye sail false; the needle toucht with honour,
That through the blackest storms, still points at happines;
Your Bodies the tall barks, rib'd round with goodnes,
Your Heavenly Soules the Pilots, thus I send you;
Thus I prepare your Voyage; found before ye,
And ever as you sail through this Worlds Vanity,
Discover Sholes, Rocks, Quick sands, cry out to ye,
Like a good Malter tack about for Honour:
The Court is Vertue's School, at least it should be;
Nearer the Sun the Mine lies, the metal's purer:
Be it granted, if the spring be once infected,
Those Branches that flow from him must run muddy;
Say you find some Sins there, and those no small ones,
And they like lazie fits begin to shake ye:
Say they affect your strengths, my happy Children,
Great things through greatest hazards are atchiev'd still,
And then they shine, then goodnes has his glory,
His Crown fast rivetted, then time moves under,
Where, through the mist of errors, like the Sun,
Through thick and pitchy Clouds, he breaks out nobly.

Hon. I thank you Sir, you have made me half a Soul-
I will to Court most willingly, most fondly. (dier,
And if there be such stirring things amongst 'em,
Such Travellers into Virginia

As Fame reports, if they can win me, take me;
I think I have a close Ward, and a sure one;
An honest mind I hope, 'tis petticoat-proof,
Chain-proof, and Jewel-proof; I know 'tis Gold-proof,
A Coach and four Horses cannot draw me from it:
As for your handsome Faces, and filed Tongues,
Curl'd Millers heads, I have another word for them,
And yet I'll flatter too, as fast as they do,
And lye, but not as lewdly; Come, be valiant, Sister,
She that dares not stand the push o'th' Court, dares nothing,
And yet come off ungraced: Sir, like you,
We both affect great dangers now, and the World shall see
All glory lies not in Mans Victorie.

Arc. Mine own Honora.

Viol. I am very fearful,

Would I were stronger built: you would have me honest?

Arc. Or not at all my Viola.

Viol. I'll think on't,

For 'tis no easie promise, and live there:

Do you think we shall do well?

Hon. Why, what should aile us?

Viol. Certain they'll tempt us strongly; beside the glory
Which Women may affect, they are handfom Gentlemen,
Every part speaks: nor is it one denial,
Nor two, nor ten; from every look we give 'em,
They'll frame a hope; even from thy prayers, promises.

Hon. Let 'em feed so, and be fat; there is no fear; wench,
Is thou best fast to thy self.

Viol. I hope I shall be;

And your example will work more.

Enter Theodore.

Hon. Thou shalt not want it.

The. How do you, Sir? can you lend a man an Angel?
I hear you let out money.

Arc. Very well, Sir,

You are pleasantly dispos'd: I am glad to see it.

Can you lend me your patience, and be rul'd by me?

The. Is't come to patience now?

Arc. Is't not a Vertue?

The. I know not: I ne'r found it so.

Arc. That's because

Thy anger ever knows, and not thy judgment.

The. I know you have been rifl'd.

Arc. Nothing less, Boy;

Lord, what opinions these vain People publish!
Risl'd of what?

The. Study your Vertue, Patience,
It may get Mustard to your Meat. Why in such haste, Sir,

Sent ye for me?

Arc. For this end only, Theodore,
To wait upon your Sisters to the Court;
I am commanded they live therè.

The. To th' Court, Sir?

Arc. To th' Court I say.

The. And must I wait upon 'em?

Arc. Yes, 'tis most fit you should, you are their Brother.

The. Is this the business? I had thought your mind, Sir,
Had been set forward on some noble action,
Something had truly stir'd ye. To th' Court with these?
Why, they are your Daughters, Sir.

Arc. All this I know, Sir.

The. The good old Woman on a Bed he threw:
To th' Court?

Arc. Thou art mad.

The. Nor drunk as you are:

Drunk with your duty, Sir: do you call it duty?
A pox of duty, what can these do there?
What should they do? Can ye look Babies, Sisters,
In the young Gallants eyes, and twirl their Band-strings?
Can ye ride out to air your selves? Pray Sir,
Be serious with me, do you speak this truly?

Arc. Why, didst thou never hear of Women
Yet at Court, Boy?

The. Yes, and good Women too, very good Women,
Excellent honest Women: but are you sure, Sir,
That these will prove so?

Hon. There's the danger, Brother.

The. God-a-mercy Wench, thou hast a grudging of it.

Arc. Now be you serious, Sir, and observe what I say,
Do it, and do it handsomly; go with 'em.

The. With all my heart, Sir; I am in no fault now;
If they be thought Whores for being in my Company;
Pray write upon their Backs, they are my Sisters,
And where I shall deliver 'em.

Arc. Ye are wondrous jocund,
But prithee tell me, art thou so lewd a Fellow?
I never knew thee fail a truth.

The. I am a Souldier,
And spell you what that means.

Arc. A Souldier?

What dost thou make of me?

The. Your Palate's down, Sir.

Arc. I thank ye, Sir.

The. Come, shall we to this matter?

You will to Court?

Hon. If you will please to honour us.

The. I'll honour ye, I warrant; I'll set ye off
With such a lustre, Wenches; alas poor Viola,
Thou art a fool, thou criest for eating white bread:
Be a good Huswife of thy tears, and save 'em,
Thou wilt have time enough to shed 'em, Sister.
Do you weep too? nay, then I'll fool no more.
Come worthy Sisters, since it must be so,
And since he thinks it fit to try your Vertues,
Be you as strong to truth, as I to guard ye,
And this old Gentleman shall have joy of ye. [Exit.

SCENE III.

Enter Duke, and Burris.

Du. Burris take you ten thousand of those Crowns,
And those two Chains of Pearl they hold the richest,
I give 'em ye.

Bur. I humbly thank your Grace;
And may your great example work in me
That noble Charity to men more worthy,
And of more wants.

Du. You bear a good mind, Burris;
Take twenty thousand now: be not so modest,
It shall be so, I give 'em: go, there's my ring for't.

Bur. Heaven blefs your Highness ever. [Exit.

Du. You are honest.

Enter Alinda, and Putskey at door.

Put. They're coming now to Court, as fair as vertue:
Two brighter Stars ne'er rose here.

Alin. Peace, I have it,
And what my Art can do; the Duke——

Put. I am gone,
Remember.

Alin. I am counsell'd to the full, Sir.

Duke. My pretty Mistris, whither lyes your busines?
How kindly I should take this, were it to me now?

Alin. I must confes immediately to your Grace,
At this time.

Duke. You have no address, I do believe ye,
I would ye had.

Alin. 'Twere too much boldness, Sir,
Upon so little knowledge, less deserving.

Duke. You'll make a perfect Courtier.

Alin. A very poor one.

Duke. A very fair one, sweet; come hither to me.
What killing eyes this Wench has? in his glory
Not the bright Sun, when the Sirian Star reigns,
Shines half so fiery.

Alin. Why does your Grace so view me?
Nothing but common handsomness dwells here, Sir,
Scarce that: your Grace is pleas'd to mock my meanness.

Duke. Thou shalt not go: I do not lie unto thee,
In my eye thou appear'st——

Alin. Dim not the sight, Sir,
I am too dull an object.

Duke. Canst thou love me?
Canst thou love him will honour thee?

Alin. I can love,
And love as you do too: but 'twill not shew well:
Or if it do shew here where all light lustres,
Tinsel affections make a glorious glistening,
'Twill halt i'th' handfom way.

Duke. Are ye so cunning?
Dost think I love not truly?

Alin. No, ye cannot,
You never travel'd that way yet: pray pardon me,
I prate so boldly to you.

Duke. There's no harm done:
But what's your reason, sweet?

Alin. I would tell your Grace,
But happily——

Duke. It shall be pleasing to me.

Alin. I should love you again, and then you would hate me.
With all my service I should follow ye,
And through all dangers.

Duke. This would more provoke me,
More make me see thy worths,
More make me meet 'em.

Alin. You should do so, if ye did well and truly:
But though ye be a Prince, and have power in ye,
Power of example too, ye have fail'd and falter'd.

Duke. Give me example where?

Alin. You had a Mistris,
Oh Heaven, so bright, so brave a dame, so lovely,
In all her life so true!

Duke. A Mistris?

Alin. That serv'd you with that constancy, that care,
That lov'd your will, and woo'd it too.

Duke. What Mistris?

Alin. That nurs'd your honour up, held fast your vertue,
And when she kist encreas'd, not stole your goodness.

Duke. And I neglected her?

Alin. Lost her, forfook her,
Wantonly flung her off.

Duke. What was her name?

Alin. Her name as lovely as her self, as noble,
And in it all that's excellent.

Duke. What was it?

Alin. Her name was Beau-desert:

Do you know her now, Sir?

Duke. Beau-desert? I do not remember——

Alin. Fknow you do not;

Yet she has a plainer name; Lord Archas service;
Do you yet remember her? there was a Mistris
Fairer than Woman, far fonder to you, Sir,
Than Mothers to their first-born joyes: Can you love?
Dare you profess that truth to me a stranger,
A thing of no regard, no name, no lustre,
When your most noble love you have neglected,
A beauty all the world would woo and honour?
Would you have me credit this? think you can love me,
And hold ye constant, when I have read this story?
Is't possible you should ever favour me,
To a slight pleasure prove a friend, and fast too,
When, where you were most ty'd, most bound to benefit,
Bound by the chains of honesty and honour,
You have broke and boldly too? I am a weak one,
Arm'd only with my fears: I beseech your Grace
Tempt me no further.

Du. Who taught you this Lesson?

Alin. Woful experience, Sir: if you seek a fair one,
Worthy your love, if yet you have that perfect,
Two Daughters of his ruin'd vertue now
Arrive at Court, excellent fair indeed, Sir,
But this will be the Plague on't, they're excellent honest.

Enter Olympia and Petesca privately.

Du. I love thy face.

Alin. Upon my life ye cannot:

I do not love it my self, Sir, 'tis a lewd one,
So truly ill Art cannot mend it; but if 'twere handsome,
At least if I thought so, you should hear me talk, Sir,
In a new strain; and though ye are a Prince,
Make ye Petition to me too, and wait my answers;
Yet o' my Conscience I should pity ye,
After some ten years siege.

Du. Prethee do now.

Alin. What would ye do?

Du. Why I would lye with ye.

Alin. I do not think ye would.

Du. In troth I would Wench.

Here, take this Jewel.

Alin. Out upon't, that's scurvy.

Nay, if we do, sure we'll do for good fellowship,
For pure love, or nothing: thus you shall be sure, Sir,
You shall not pay too dear for't.

Du. Sure I cannot.

Alin. By'r Lady but ye may: when ye have found me able
To do your work well, ye may pay my wages.

Pet. Why does your Grace start back?

Olym. I ha' seen that shakes me:

Chills all my blood: O where is faith or goodness?

Alinda thou art false, false, false thou fair one,

Wickedness false; and (wo is me) I see it.

For ever false.

Pet. I am glad 't has taken thus right.

[Exeunt.

Alin. I'll go ask my Lady, Sir.

Du. What?

(ling——

Alin. Whether I shall lye with ye, or no: If I find her wil-
For look ye Sir, I have sworn, while I am in her service—
('Twas a rash Oath I must confes.)

Du. Thou mockst me.

Alin. Why, would ye lye with me, if I were willing?
Would you abuse my weakness?

Du. I would piece it,
And make it stronger.

Alin. I humbly thank your highness,
When you piece me, you must piece me to my Coffin:
When you have got my Maiden-head, I take it,
'Tis not an inch of an Apes tail will restore it,
I love ye, and I honour ye, but this way
I'll neither love nor serve ye.

Heaven change your mind, Sir.

[Exit.
Duke.

Duke. And thine too :
For it must be chang'd, it shall be.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.

Enter Boroskie, Burris, Theodore, Viola and Honora.

Bor. They are goodly Gentlewomen.

Bur. They are,
Wondrous sweet Women both.

Theo. Does your Lordship like 'em?
They are my Sisters, Sir; good lusty Lasses,
They'll do their labour well, I warrant ye,
You'll find no Bed-straw here, Sir.

Hon. Thank ye Brother.

The. This is not so strongly built : but she is good mettle,
Of a good stirring strain too : she goes tith, Sir.

Enter two Gentlemen.

Here they be, Gentlemen, must make ye merry,
The toys you wot of : do you like their complexions?
They be no Moors: what think ye of this hand, Gentlemen?
Here's a white Altar for your sacrifice :
A thousand kisses here. Nay, keep off yet Gentlemen,
Let's start first, and have fair play : what would ye give now
To turn the Globe up, and find the rich Moluccas?
To pass the straights? here (do ye itch) by S^t Nicholas,
Here's that will make ye scratch and claw,
Claw my fine Gentlemen, move ye in divers sorts :
Pray ye let me request ye, to forget
To say your prayers, whilst these are Courtiers ;
Or if ye needs will think of Heaven, let it be no higher
Than their eyes.

Bor. How will ye have 'em bestow'd, Sir?

Theo. Even how your Lordship please,
So you do not bake 'em.

Bor. Bake 'em?

Theo. They are too high a meat that way, they run to gelly.
But if you'll have 'em for your own diet, take my counsel,
Stew 'em between two Feather-beds.

Bur. Please you Colonel
To let 'em wait upon the Princess?

Theo. Yes, Sir,
And thank your honour too : but then happily,
These noble Gentlemen shall have no access to 'em,
And to have 'em buy new Cloaths, study new faces,
And keep a stinking stir with themselves for nothing,
'Twill not be well i' faith : they have kept their bodies,
And been at charge for Bathes : do you see that shirt there?
Weigh but the moral meaning, 'twill be grievous :
Alas, I brought 'em to delight these Gentlemen,
I weigh their wants by mine : I brought 'em wholesome,
Wholesome, and young my Lord, and two such blessings
They will not light upon again in ten years.

Bor. 'Tis fit they wait upon her.

Theo. They are fit for any thing :
They'll wait upon a man, they are not bashful,
Carry his Cloak, or unty his points, or any thing,
Drink drunk, and take Tobacco; the familiar'st fools——
This wench will leap over Stools too, and sound a Trumpet,
Wrattle, and pitch the Bar; they are finely brought up.

Bor. Ladies, ye are bound to your Brother,
And have much cause to thank him :
I'll ease ye of this charge, and to the Princess,
So please you, I'll attend 'em.

Theo. Thank your Lordship :
If there be e're a private corner as ye go, Sir,
A foolish lobbie out o'th' way, make danger,
Try what they are, try——

Bor. Ye are a merry Gentleman.

The. I would fain be your honours kinsman.

Bor. Ye are too curst, Sir.

(else.

The. Farewel wenches, keep close your ports, y'are washt
Hon. Brother, bestow your fears where they are needful.

[Exit Borosk. Honor. Viol.

The. Honor thy name is, and I hope thy Nature.
Go after, Gentlemen, go, get a snatch if you can,
Yond' old Erra Pater will never please 'em.
Alas I brought 'em for you, but see the luck on't;
I swear I meant as honestly toward ye——
Nay do not cry good Gentlemen : a little counsel
Will do no harm : they'll walk abroad i'th' Evenings,
Ye may surprize 'em easily, they wear no Pistols:
Set down your minds in Metre, flowing Metre,
And get some good old linnen Woman to deliver it,
That has the trick on't : you cannot fail :
Farewel Gentlemen.

[Exeunt Gent.

Bur. You have frighted off these flesh-flies.

The. Flesh-flies indeed my Lord.

Enter a Servant.

And it must be very stinking flesh they will not seize on.

Serv. Your Lordship bid me bring this Casket.

Bur. Yes, Good Colonel
Commend me to your worthy Father, and as a pledge
He ever holds my love, and service to him,
Deliver him this poor, but hearty token,
And where I may be his——

The. Ye are too noble ;
A wonder here my Lord, that dare be honest,
When all men hold it vitious : I shall deliver it,
And with it your most noble love. Your servant. [Ex. Bur.
Were there but two more such at Court, 'twere Sainted,
This will buy Brawn this Christmas yet, and Muscadine. [Ex.

SCENE V.

Enter Ancient, crying Brooms, and after him severally, four Souldiers, crying other things. Boroskie and Gent. over the Stage observing them.

I. SONG.

Anc. Broom, Broom, the bonnie Broom,
Come buy my Birchen Broom,
I'th' Wars we have no more room,
Buy all my bonnie Broom,
For a kiss take two ;
If those will not do,
For a little, little pleasure,
Take all my whole treasure :
If all these will not do't,
Take the Broom-man to boot.
Broom, Broom, the bonnie Broom.

II. SONG.

1 Soul. The Wars are done and gone,
And Souldiers now neglected, Pedlers are,
Come Maidens, come alone,
For I can show you handsome, handsome ware ;
Powders for, for the head,
And drinks for your bed,
To make ye blith and bonney.
As well in the night we Souldiers can fight,
And please a young wench as any.

2 Soul. I have fine Potato's,
Ripe Potato's.

III SONG.

3 Soul. Will ye buy any Honesty, come away,
I sell it openly by day,
I bring no forced light, nor no Candle
To cozen ye ; come buy and handle :
This will shew the great man good,
The Tradesman where he swears and lyes,
Each Lady of a noble blood,
The City dame to rule her eyes :
Ye are rich men now : come buy, and then
I'll make ye richer, honest men.

IV SONG.

IV. SONG.

4 Sol. *Have ye any crackt maiden-heads, to new leach or mend?
Have ye any old maiden-heads to sell or to change?
Bring 'em to me with a little pretty gin,
I'll clout 'em, I'll mend 'em, I'll knock in a pin,
Shall make 'em as good maids agen,
As ever they have been.*

Bor. What means all this, why do y' sell Brooms Ancient?
Is it in wantonness, or want?

An. The only reason is, (nonce.
To sweep your Lordships conscience: here's one for the Gape Sir, you have swallowed many a goodlier matter—
The only casting for a crazie conscience.

3 Sol. Will your Lordship buy any honestie? 'twill be Bur. How is this? (worth your mony.

3 Sol. Honestie my Lord, 'tis here in a quill.
An. Take heed you open it not, for 'tis so subtle,
The least puffe of wind will blow it out o'th' Kingdom.

2 Sol. Will your Lordship please to taste a fine Potato?
'Twill advance your wither'd state.

Anc. Fill your honour full of most noble itches,
And make Jack dance in your Lordships breeches.

1 Sol. *If your Daughters on their beds,
Have bow'd, or crackt their maiden-heads;
If in a Coach with two much tumbling,
They chance to crie, fie, fo, what fumbling;
If her foot slip, and down fall she,
And break her leg 'bove the knee,
The one and thirtieth of Februarie let this bet a'ne,
And they shall be arrant maids again.*

Bor. Ye are brave Souldiers; keep your wantonness,
A winter will come on to shake this wilfulness.

Disport your selves, and when you want your mony—

Anc. Broom, Broom, &c. [Exit.
[Exeunt Singing.

SCENA VI.

Enter Alinda, Honora, Viola.

Al. You must not be so fearfull, little one,
Nor Lady you so sad, you will ne're make Courtiers
With these dull sullen thoughts; this place is pleasure,
Preserv'd to that use, so inhabited;
And those that live here, live delightfull, joyfull:
These are the Gardens of Adonis, Ladies,
Where all sweets to their free and noble uses,
Grow ever young and courted.

Hon. Bless me Heaven,
Can things of her years arrive at these rudiments?
By your leave fair Gentlewoman, how long have you been

Al. Faith much about a week. (here?

Hon. You have studied hard,
And by my faith arriv'd at a great knowledge.

Viola. Were not you bashfull at first?

Al. I, I, for an hour or two:
But when I saw people laugh'd at me for it,
And thought it a dull breeding—

Hon. You are govern'd here then
Much after the mens opinions.

Al. Ever Lady.

Hon. And what they think is honourable.—

Al. Most precisely

We follow with all faith.

Hon. A goodly Catechisme.

Viola. But bashfull for an hour or two?

Al. Faith to say true,

I do not think I was so long: for look ye,
'Tis to no end here, put on what shape ye will,
And soure your self with ne're so much austeritie,
You shall be courted in the same, and won too,

'Tis but some two hours more; and so much time lost,
Which we hold precious here: In so much time now
As I have told you this, you may lose a Servant,
Your age, nor all your Art can e're recover.
Catch me occasion as she comes, hold fast there,
Till what you do affect is ripn'd to ye.

Has the Duke seen ye yet?

Hon. What if he have not?

Al. You do your beauties too much wrong, appearing
So full of sweetness, newness; set so richly,
As if a Counsel beyond nature fram'd ye.

Hon. If we were thus, say heaven had given these blef.
Must we turn these to sin oblations? (sings,

Al. How foolishly this Countrey way shews in ye?
How full of flegm? do you come here to pray, Ladies?
You had best cry, stand away, let me alone Gentlemen,
I'll tell my Father else.

Viola. This woman's naught sure,
A very naughtie woman.

Hon. Come, say on friend,
I'll be instructed by ye.

Al. You'll thank me for't. (king of.

Hon. Either I or the devil shall: The Duke you were spea-

Al. 'Tis well remembered: yes, let him first see you,
Appear not openly till he has view'd ye.

Hon. He's a very noble Prince they say.

Al. O wondrous gracious;
And as you may deliver your self at the first viewing.
For look ye, you must bear your self; yet take heed
It be so season'd with a sweet humilitie,
And grac'd with such a bountie in your beautie—

Hon. But I hope he will offer me no ill?

Al. No, no:

'Tis like he will kiss ye, and play with ye.

Hon. Play with me, how?

Al. Why, good Lord, that you are such a fool now!
No harm assure your self.

Viola. Will he play with me too?

Al. Look babies in your eyes, my prettie sweet one:
There's a fine sport: do you know your lodgings yet?

Hon. I hear of none.

Al. I do then, they are handfom,
Convenient for access.

Viola. Access?

Al. Yes little one,

For visitation of those friends and Servants,
Your beauties shall make choice of: friends and visits:
Do not you know those uses? Alas poor novice;
There's a close Cowch or two, handfomely placed too.

Viola. What are those I pray you? (are to lie upon,

Al. Who would be troubled with such raw things? they
And your love by ye; and discourse, and toy in.

Viola. Alas I have no love.

Al. You must by any means:
You'll have a hundred, fear not.

Viola. Honestie keep me:

What shall I doe with all those?

Al. You'll find uses:

Ye are ignorant yet, let time work; you must learn too,
To lie handfomly in your bed a mornings, neatly drest
In a most curious Waistcoat, to set ye off well,
Play with your Bracelets, sing: you must learn to rhyme too,
And riddle neatly; studie the hardest language,
And 'tis no matter whether it be sense, or no,
So it go seemlie off. Be sure ye profit
In kissing, kissing sweetly: there lies a main point,
A key that opens to all practick pleasure;
I'll help ye to a friend of mine shall teach ye,
And suddenlie: your Countrey way is fulsome.

Hon. Have ye schools for all these mysteries?

Al. O yes,

And several hours prefix'd to studie in:
Ye may have Kalenders to know the good hour,
And when to take a jewel: for the ill too,

When to refuse, with observations on 'em;
Under what Sign 'tis best meeting in an Arbor,
And in what Bower, and hour it works; a thousand,
When in a Coach, when in a private lodging,
With all their vertues.

Hon. Have ye studied these?

How beastly they become your youth? how bawdily?

A woman of your tendernefs, a teacher,
Teacher of these lewd Arts? of your full beauty?

A man made up in lust would loath this in ye:

The rankest Leacher, hate such impudence.

They say the Devil can assume heavens brightnefs,

And so appear to tempt us: sure thou art no woman.

Al. I joy to find ye thus.

Hon. Thou hast no tendernefs,

No reluctance in thy heart: 'tis mischief.

Al. All's one for that; read these and then be satisf'd,

A few more private rules I have gather'd for ye,

Read 'em, and well observe 'em: so I leave ye. [Exit.

Viol. A wondrous wicked woman: shame go with thee.

Hon. What new Pandoras box is this? Ple see it,

Though presently I tear it. Read Thine Viola,

'Tis in our own wills to believe and follow.

Worthy Honora, as you have begun
In vertues spotless school, so forward run:
Pursue that nobleness, and chaste desire
You ever had, burn in that holy fire;
And a white Martyr to fair memorie
Give up your name, unsoil'd of infamy.

How's this? Read yours out Sister: this amazes me.

Vio. Fear not thou yet unblasted Violet,
Nor let my wanton words a doubt beget,
Live in that peace and sweetness of thy bud,
Remember whose thou art, and grow still good.
Remember what thou art, and stand a storie
Fit for thy noble Sex, and thine own glorie.

Hon. I know not what to think.

Viol. Sure a good woman,

An excellent woman, Sister.

Hon. It confounds me;

Let 'em use all their arts, if these be their ends,

The Court I say breeds the best foes and friends.

Come, let's be honest wench, and doe our best service.

Viol. A most excellent woman, I will love her.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Olympia, with a Casket, and Alinda.

Al. MAdam, the Duke has sent for the two Ladies.
Olym. I prethee go: I know thy thoughts are Go, go Alinda, do not mock me more. (with him.)

I have found thy heart wench, do not wrong thy Mistris,
Thy too much loving Mistris: do not abuse her.

Al. By your own fair hands I understand ye not.

Olym. By thy own fair eyes I understand thee too much,
Too far, and built a faith there thou hast ruin'd.

Goe, and enjoy thy wish, thy youth, thy pleasure,

Enjoy the greatnefs no doubt he has promised,

Enjoy the service of all eyes that see thee,

The glory thou hast aim'd at, and the triumph:

Only this last love I ask, forget thy Mistris.

Al. Oh, who has wrong'd me? who has ruin'd me?

Poor wretched Girle, what poyson is slung on thee?

Excellent vertue, from whence flows this anger?

O. Go, ask my Brother, ask the faith thou gav'st me,

Ask all my favours to thee, ask my love,
Last, thy forgetfulness of good: then slye me,
For we must part Alinda.

Al. You are weary of me;

I must confess, I was never worthy your service,
Your bounteous favours less; but that my duty,

My ready will, and all I had to serve ye ———

O Heaven thou know'st my honestie.

Olym. No more:

Take heed, heaven has a justice: take this ring with ye;

This doting spell you gave me: too well Alinda,

Thou knew'st the vertue in't; too well I feel it:

Nay keep that too, it may sometimes remember ye;

When you are willing to forget who gave it,

And to what vertuous end.

Al. Must I goe from ye?

Of all the sorrows sorrow has ——— must I part with ye?

Part with my noble Mistris?

Olym. Or I with thee wench.

Al. And part stain'd with opinion? Farewel Lady;

Happy and blessed Lady, goodness keep ye:

Thus your poor Servant full of grief turns from ye,

For ever full of grief, for ever from ye.

I have no being now, no friends, no Country,

I wander heaven knows whither, heaven knows how.

No life, now you are lost: only mine innocence,

That little left me of my self, goes with me,

That's all my bread and comfort. I confess Madam;

Truely confess, the Duke has often courted me.

Olym. And pour'd his Soul into thee, won thee.

Al. Do you think so?

Well, time that told this tale, will tell my truth too,

And say ye had a faithfull, honest Servant:

The business of my life is now to pray for ye,

Pray for your vertuous loves; Pray for your children,

When Heaven shall make ye happy.

Olym. How she wounds me!

Either I am undone, or she must go: take these with ye,

Some toys may doe ye service; and this mony;

And when ye want, I love ye not so poorly,

Not yet Alinda, that I would see ye perish.

Prethee be good, and let me hear: look on me,

I love those eyes yet dearly; I have kiss'd thee,

And now I'de doe't again: Farewel Alinda,

I am too full to speak more, and too wretched. [Exit.

Al. You have my faith,

And all the world my fortune. [Exit.

SCENA II.

Enter Theodor.

The. I would fain hear
What becomes of these two Wenches:
And if I can, I will doe 'em good.

Enter Gentleman, passing over the Stage.

Do you hear my honest friend?
He knows no such name:
What a world of business,
Which by interpretation are meer nothings,
These things have here? 'Mafs now I think on't better,
I wish he be not sent for one of them
To some of these by-lodgings: me thought I saw
A kind of reference in his face to Bawderie.

Enter Gentleman, with a Gentlewoman, passing over the Stage.

He has her, but 'tis none of them: hold fast thief:
An excellent touzing knave. Mistris
You are to suffer your penance some half hour hence now.
How far a fine Court Custard with Plums in it
Will prevail with one of these waiting Gentlewomen,
They are taken with these soluble things exceedingly;
This is some yeoman o'th' bottles now that has sent for her,

That she calls Father : now woe to this Ale incense.
By your leave Sir.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Well Sir ; what's your pleasure with me ?

The. You do not know the way to the maids lodgings ?

Ser. Yes indeed do I Sir.

The. But you will not tell me ?

Ser. No indeed will not I, because you doubt it. [Exit.]

Enter 2 Servant.

The. These are fine gim-cracks : hey, here comes another,
A Flagon full of wine in's hand, I take it.
Well met my friend, is that wine ?

2 Ser. Yes indeed is it.

The. Faith I'll drink on't then.

2 Ser. Ye may, because ye have sworn Sir.

The. 'Tis very good, I'll drink a great deal now Sir.

2 Ser. I cannot help it Sir.

The. I'll drink more yet.

2 Ser. 'Tis in your own hands.

The. There's your pot, I thank ye.

Pray let me drink again.

2 Ser. Faith but ye shall not.

Now have I sworn I take it. Fare ye well Sir. [Exit.]

Enter Lady.

The. This is the fin'ft place to live in I e're enter'd.
Here comes a Gentlewoman, and alone ; I'll to her.
Madam, my Lord my Master.

Lady. Who's your Lord Sir ?

The. The Lord Boroskey, Lady.

Lady. Pray excuse me :

Here's something for your pains : within this hour Sir,
One of the choice young Ladies shall attend him :
Pray let it be in that Chamber juts out to the water ;
'Tis private and convenient : doe my humble service
To my honourable good Lord, I beseech ye Sir ;
If it please you to visit a poor Lady ———
You carrie the 'haviour of a noble Gentleman.

The. I shall be bold.

Lady. 'Tis a good aptness in ye.

I lye here in the Wood-yard, the blue lodgings Sir ;
They call me merrily the Lady of the ——— Sir ;
A little I know what belongs to a Gentleman,
And if it please you take the pains. [Exit.]

The. Dear Lady, take the pains ? (now,
Why a horse would not take the pains that thou requir'ft
To cleave old crab-tree : one of the choice young Ladies ?
I would I had let this Bawd goe, she has frighted me ;
I am cruelly afraid of one of my Tribe now ;
But if they will doe, the Devil cannot stop 'em.
Why should he have a young Lady ? are women now
O'th' nature of Bottles, to be stop't with Corks ?
O the thousand little furies that flye here now ?
How now Captain ?

Enter Putsky.

Putf. I come to seek you out Sir,
And all the Town I have travell'd.

The. What's the news man ?

Putf. That that concerns us all, and very nearly :
The Duke this night holds a great feast at Court,
To which he bids for guests all his old Counsellors,
And all his favourites : your Father's sent for.

The. Why he is neither in council, nor in favour.

Putf. That's it : have an eye now, or never, and a quick one,
An eye that must not wink from good intelligenc.
I heard a Bird sing, they mean him no good office.

Enter Ancient.

The. Art sure he sups here ?

Putf. Sure as 'tis day.

The. 'Tis like then :

How now, where hast thou been Ancient ?

Anc. Measuring the City :

I have left my Brooms at gate here ;

By this time the Porter has stole 'em to sweep out Rascals.

Theod. Brooms ?

Anc. I have been crying Brooms all the town over,
And such a Mart I have made, there's no tread near it.
O the young handfom wenches, how they twitter'd,
When they but saw me shake my ware, and sing too ;
Come hither Master Broom-man I beseech ye :
Good Master Broom-man hither, cries another.

The. Thou art a mad fellow.

Anc. They are all as mad as I : they all have traeds now,
And roar about the streets like Bull-beggars.

The. What company of Souldiers are they ?

Anc. By this means I have gather'd
Above a thousand tall and hardy Souldiers,
If need be Colonel.

The. That need's come Ancient,
And 'twas discreetly done : goe, draw 'em presently,
But without suspicion : this night we shall need 'em ;
Let 'em be near the Court, let Putskje guide 'em ;
And wait me for occasion : here I'll stay still.

Putf. If it fall out we are ready ; if not we are scatter'd :
I'll wait ye at an inch.

The. Doe, Farewel.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA III:

Enter Duke, Borosky.

Duke. Are the Souldiers still so mutinous ?

Bor. More than ever,

No Law nor Justice frights 'em : all the Town over
They play new pranks and gambols : no mans person,
Of what degree soever, free from abuses :
And durst they doe this, (let your grace consider)
These monstrous, most offensive things, these villanies,
If not set on, and fed ? if not by one
They honour more than you ? and more aw'd by him ?

Duke. Happily their own wants.

Boros. I offer to supply 'em,

And every hour make tender of their moneys :
They scorn it, laugh at me that offer it :
I fear the next device will be my life Sir ;
And willingly I'll give it, so they stay there.

Duke. Do you think Lord Archas privie ?

Bor. More than thought,

I know it Sir, I know they durst not doe
These violent rude things, abuse the State thus,
But that they have a hope by his ambitions ———

Duke. No more : he's sent for ?

Boros. Yes, and will be here sure.

Duke. Let me talk further with you anon.

Boros. I'll wait Sir.

Duke. Did you speak to the Ladies ?

Boros. They'll attend your grace presently.

Duke. How do you like 'em ?

Boros. My eyes are too dull Judges.

They wait here Sir.

[Exit.]

Enter Honora, and Viola.

Duke. Be you gone then : Come in Ladies,
Welcom toth' court sweet beauties ; now the court shines,
When such true beams of beauty strike amongst us :
Welcom, welcom, even as your own joyes welcom.
How do you like the Court ? how seems it to you ?
Is't not a place created for all sweetness ?
Why were you made such strangers to this happiness ?
Barr'd the delights this holds ? the richest jewels
Set ne're so well, if then not worn to wonder,
By judging eyes not set off, lose their lustre :
Your Country shades are faint ; blasters of beauty ;
The manners like the place, obscure and heavie ;
The Rose buds of the beauties turn to cankers,

Eaten

Eaten with inward thoughts: whilst there ye wander.
Here Ladies, here, you were not made for Cloisters,
Here is the Sphere you move in: here shine nobly,
And by your powerfull influence command all:
What a sweet modestie dwells round about 'em,
And like a nipping morn pulls in their blossoms?

Hon. Your grace speaks cunningly, you doe not this,
I hope Sir, to betray us; we are poor triumphs;
Nor can our losse of honour adde to you Sir:
Great men, and great thoughts, seek things great and wor-
Subjects to make 'em live, and not to lose 'em; (thy,
Conquests so nobly won, can never perish;
We are two simple maids, untutor'd here Sir;
Two honest maids, is that a sin at Court Sir?
Our breeding is obedience, but to good things,
To vertuous and to fair: what wou'd you win on us?
Why do I ask that question, when I have found ye?
Your Preamble has pour'd your heart out to us;
You would dishonour us; which in your translation
Here at the Court reads thus, your grace would love us,
Most dearly love us: stick us up for mistresses:
Most certain, there are thousands of our sex Sir
That would be glad of this, and handsom women,
And crowd into this favour, fair young women,
Excellent beauties Sir: when ye have enjoy'd 'em, (then?
And suckt those sweets they have, what Saints are these
What worship have they won? what name you ghes's Sir,
What storie added to their time, a sweet one?

Duke. A brave spirited wench.
Hon. I'll tell your grace,
And tell ye true: ye are deceiv'd in us two,
Extreamly cozen'd Sir: And yet in my eye
You are the handsomst man I ever lookt on,
The goodliest Gentleman; take that hope with ye;
And were I fit to be your wife (so much I honour ye)
Trust me I would scratch for ye but I would have ye.
I would wooe you then.

Duke. She amazes me:
But how am I deceiv'd?
Hon. O we are too honest,
Believe it Sir, too honest, far too honest,
The way that you propound too ignorant,
And there is no meddling with us; for we are fools too,
Obstinate, peevish fools: if I would be ill,
And had a wantons itch, to kick my heels up,
I would not leap into th' Sun, and doe't there,
That all the world might see me: an obscure shade Sir,
Dark as the deed, there is no trusting light with it,
Nor that that's lighter far, vain-glorious greatness.

Duke. You will love me as your friend?
Hon. I will honour ye,
As your poor humble handmaid serve, and pray for ye.
Du. What sayes my little one; you are not so obstinate?
Lord how she blushes: here are truly fair souls:
Come you will be my love?

Viol. Good Sir be good to me,
Indeed I'll doe the best I can to please ye;
I do beseech your grace: Alas I fear ye.

Duke. What shouldst thou fear?
Hon. Fie Sir, this is not noble.
Duke. Why do I stand entreating, where my power——
Hon. You have no power, at least you ought to have none
In bad and beastly things: arm'd thus, I'll dye here,
Before she suffer wrong.

Duke. Another Archas?
Hon. His child Sir, and his spirit.
Duke. I'll deal with you then,
For here's the honour to be won: sit down sweet,
Prethee Honora sit.

Hon. Now ye intreat I will Sir.
Duke. I doe, and will deserve it.
Hon. That's too much kindness.
Duke. Prethee look on me.
Hon. Yes: I love to see ye,

And could look on an age thus, and admire ye:
Whilst ye are good and temperate I dare touch ye;
Kiss your white hand.

Duke. Why not my lips?
Hon. I dare Sir.
Duke. I do not think ye dare.
Hon. I am no coward.

Dou you believe me now? or now? or now Sir?
You make me blush: but sure I mean no ill Sir:
It had been fitter you had kiss'd me.

Du. That I'll doe too.
What hast thou wrought into me?

Hon. I hope all goodness:
Whilst ye are thus, thus honest, I dare do any thing,
Thus hang about your neck, and thus doat on ye;
Bless those fair lights: hell take me if I durst not——
But good Sir pardon me. Sister come hither,
Come hither, fear not wench: come hither, blush not,
Come kiss the Prince, the vertuous Prince, the good Prince:
Certain he is excellent honest.

Du. Thou wilt make me——
Hon. Sit down, and hug him softly.

Du. Fie Honora,
Wanton Honora; is this the modesty,
The noble chastity your on-set shew'd me,
At first charge beaten back? Away.

Hon. Thank ye:
Upon my knees I pray, heaven too may thank ye;
Ye have deceiv'd me cunningly, yet nobly
Ye have cozen'd me: In all your hopefull life yet,
A Scene of greater honour your ne're acted:
I knew fame was a lyar, too long, and loud tongu'd,
And now I have found it: O my vertuous Master.

Viol. My vertuous Master too.
Hon. Now you are thus,
What shall become of me let fortune cast for't.

Enter Alinda.

Du. I'll be that fortune, if I live Honora,
Thou hast done a cure upon me, counsell could not.
Al. Here take your ring Sir, and whom ye mean to ruine,
Give it to her next; I have paid for't dearly.

Hon. A Ring to her?
Du. Why frowns my fair Alinda?
I have forgot both these again. Al. Stand still Sir,
Ye have that violent killing fire upon ye,
Consumes all honour, credit, faith. Hon. How's this?

Al. My Royal Mistris favour towards me,
Woe-worth ye Sir, ye have poyson'd, blasted.
Duke. I sweet?

Al. You have taken that unmanly liberty,
Which in a worse man, is vain-glorious feigning,
And kill'd my truth.

Du. Upon my life 'tis false wench.
Al. Ladies,

Take heed, ye have a cunning gamester,
A handsom, and a high; come stor'd with Antidotes,
He has infections else will fire your blouds.

Du. Prethee Alinda hear me.
Al. Words steep't in hony,
That will so melt into your minds, buy Chastity,
A thousand wayes, a thousand knots to tie ye;
And when he has bound ye his, a thousand ruines.
A poor lost woman ye have made me.

Du. I'll maintain thee,
And nobly too.

Al. That Gin's too weak to take me:
Take heed, take heed young Ladies: still take heed,
Take heed of promises, take heed of gifts,
Of forced feigned sorrows, sighs, take heed.

Du. By all that's mine, Alinda——
Al. Swear

By your mischiefs:
O whither shall I goe?

Duke. Go back again,
I'll force her take thee, love thee.

Alm. Fare ye well, Sir,
I will not curse ye; only this dwell with ye,
When ever ye love, a false belief light on ye.

Hon. We'll take our leaves too, Sir.

Duke. Part all the world now,
Since she is gone.

Hon. You are crooked yet, dear Master,
And still I fear——

Duke. I am vext,
And some shall find it.

[Exit.

[Exeunt.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.

Enter Archas and a Servant.

Ar. 'Tis strange
To me to see the Court, and welcome:
O Royal place, how have I lov'd and serv'd thee?
Who lies on this side, know'st thou?

Ser. The Lord Burriss.

Ar. Thou hast nam'd a Gentleman
I stand much bound to:
I think he sent the Casket, Sir?

Ser. The same, Sir.

Ar. An honest minded man, a noble Courtier:
The Duke made perfect choice when he took him.
Go you home, I shall hit the way
Without a guide now.

Ser. You may want something, Sir.

Ar. Only my Horses,
Which after Supper let the Groom wait with:
I'll have no more attendance here.

Ser. Your will, Sir.

[Exit.

Enter Theodore.

Theo. You are well met here, Sir.

Ar. How now boy,
How dost thou?

The. I should ask
You that question: how do you, Sir?
How do you feel your self?

Ar. Why well, and lusty.

The. What do you herethen?

Ar. Why I am sent for
To Supper with the Duke.

The. Have you no meat at home?
Or do you long to feed as hunted Deer do,
In doubt and fear?

Ar. I have an excellent stomach,
And can I use it better
Than among my friends, Boy?
How do the Wenches?

The. They do well enough, Sir,
They know the worst by this time: pray be rul'd, Sir,
Go home again, and if ye have a Supper,
Eat it in quiet there: this is no place for ye,
Especially at this time,
Take my word for't.

Ar. May be they'll drink hard;
I could have drunk my share, Boy.
Though I am old, I will not out.

The. I hope you will.
Hark in your ear: the Court's
Too quick of hearing.

Ar. Not mean me well?
Thou art abus'd and cozen'd.
Away, away.

The. To that end Sir, I tell ye.
Away, if you love your self.

Ar. Who dare do these things,
That ever heard of honesty?

The. Old Gentleman,
Take a fools counsel.

Ar. 'Tis a fools indeed;
A very fools: thou hast more of These flams in thee, these musty doubts:
Is't fit the Duke send for me,

And honour me to eat within his presence,
And I, like a tale fellow, play at bo-peep
With his pleasure?

The. Take heed
Of bo-peep with your pate, your pate, Sir,
I speak plain language now.

Ar. If'twere not here,
Where reverence bids me hold,
I would so swinge thee, thou rude,
Unmanner'd Knave; take from his bounty,
His honour that he gives me, to beget
Sawcy, and fullen fears?

The. You are not mad sure:
By this fair light, I speak
But what is whisper'd,
And whisper'd for a truth.

Ar. A Dog: drunken people,
That in their Pot see visions,
And turn states, mad-men and Children:
Prethee do not follow me;
I tell thee I am angry:
Do not follow me.

The. I am as angry
As you for your heart,
I and as wilful too: go, like a Wood-cock,
And thrust your neck i'th' noose.

Ar. I'll kill thee,
And thou speakst but three words more.
Do not follow me.

[Exit.

The. A strange old foolish fellow: I shall hear yet,
And if I do not my part, hiss at me.

[Exit.

SCENE V.

Enter two Servants preparing a Banquet.

1 Serv. Believe me fellow here will be lusty drinking.
Many a washt pate in Wine I warrant thee. (science)

2 Serv. I am glad the old General's come: upon my Con-
That joy will make half the Court drunk. Hark the Trumpets,
They are coming on; away.

1 Serv. We'll have a rowse too.

[Exeunt.

Enter Duke, Archas, Burriss, Boroskie, Attend. Gent.

Duke. Come seat your selves: Lord Archas sit you there.

Ar. 'Tis far above my worth.

Duke. I'll have it so:

Are all things ready?

Bor. All the Guards are set,

The Court Gates are shut.

Duke. Then do as I prescrib'd ye.

Be sure no further.

Bor. I shall well observe ye.

(men;

Du. Come bring some wine: here's to my Sister, Gentle-
A health, and mirth to all.

Ar. Pray fill it full, Sir.

'Tis a high health to vertue: here Lord Burriss,
A maiden health: you are most fit to pledge it,
You have a maiden soul and much I honour it.
Passion o' me, ye are sad man.

Duke. How now, Burriss?

Go to, no more of this.

Ar. Take the rowse freely,

'Twill warm your blood, and make ye fit for jollity.

Your Graces pardon: when we get a cup, Sir,

We old men prate a pace.

Du. Mirth makes a Banquet;

As you love me no more.

Bur. I thank your Grace.

Give me it; Lord Boroskie.

Boros. I have ill brains, Sir.

Bur.

Bur. Damnable ill, I know it.

Borof. But I'll pledge, Sir,
This vertuous health.

Bur. The more unfit for thy mouth.

Enter two Servants with Cloaks.

Du. Come, bring out Robes, and let my guests look nobly,
Fit for my love and presence: begin downward.
Off with your Cloaks, take new.

Ar. Your grace deals truly,
Like a munificent Prince, with your poor subjects,
Who would not fight for you? what cold dull coward
Durst seek to save his life when you would ask it?
Begin a new health in your new adornments,
The Dukes, the Royal Dukes: ha! what have I got
Sir? ha! the Robe of death?

Du. You have deserv'd it.

Ar. The Livery of the Grave? do you start all from me?
Do I smell of earth already? Sir, look on me,
And like a man; is this your entertainment?
Do you bid your worthiest guests to bloody Banquets?

Enter a Guard.

A Guard upon me too? this is too foul play
Boy to thy good, thine honour; thou wretched Ruler,
Thou Son of fools and flatterers, Heir of hypocrites,
Am I serv'd in a Hearse that sav'd ye all?
Are ye men or Devils? Do ye gape upon me,
Wider, and swallow all my services?
Entomb them first, my faith next, then my integrity,
And let these struggle with your mangy minds,
Your fear'd, and seal'd up Consciences, till they burst.

Borof. These words are death.

Ar. No those deeds that want rewards, Sirrah,
Those Battels I have fought, those horrid dangers,
Leaner than death, and wilder than destruction,
I have march'd upon, these honour'd wounds, times story,
The blood I have lost, the youth, the sorrows suffer'd,
These are my death, these that can ne're be recompenced,
These that ye sit a brooding on like Toads,
Sucking from my deserts the sweets and favours,
And render me no pay again but poysons.

Bor. The proud vain Souldier thou hast set

Ar. Thou lyeft.

Now by my little time of life lyeft basely,
Malitiously and loudly: how I scorn thee!
If I had swel'd the Souldier, or intended
An act in person, leaning to dishonour,
As ye would fain have forced me, witness Heaven,
Where clearest understanding of all truth is,
(For these are spiteful men, and know no piety)
When Olin came, grim Olin, when his marches,
His last Incurfions made the City sweat,
And drove before him, as a storm drives Hail,
Such shows of frosted fears, shook all your heart-strings;
Then when the Volga trembled at his terrour,
And hid his seven curl'd heads, afraid of bruising,
By his arm'd Horses hoofs; had I been false then,
Or blown a treacherous fire into the Souldier,
Had but one spark of villany liv'd within me,
Ye'ad had some shadow for this black about me.
Where was your Souldiership? why went not you out?
And all your right honourable valour with ye?
Why met ye not the Tartar, and des'd him?
Drew your dead-doing sword, and buckl'd with him?
Shot through his Squadrons like a fiery Meteor?
And as we see a dreadful clap of Thunder
Rend the stiff hearted Oaks, and tofs their roots up:
Why did not you so charge him? you were sick then,
You that dare taint my credit slipt to bed then,
Stewing and fainting with the fears ye had,
A whorson shaking fit oppress your Lordship:
Blush Coward, Knave, and all the world his at thee.

Du. Exceed not my command.

[Exit.]

Bor. I shall observe it.

Ar. Are you gone too? Come weep not honest Burris,
Good loving Lord, no more tears: 'tis not his malice,
This fellows malice, nor the Dukes displeasure,
By bold bad men crowded into his nature,
Can startle me: fortune ne're raz'd this Fort yet:
I am the same, the same man, living, dying;
The same mind to 'em both, I poize thus equal;
Only the jugling way that toll'd me to it,
The Judas way; to kifs me, bid me welcome,
And cut my throat, a little sticks upon me.
Farewel, commend me to his Grace, and tell him,
The world is full of servants, he may have many:
And some I with him honest: he's undone else:
But such another doating Archus never,
So try'd and touch'd a faith: farewell for ever.

Bur. Be strong my Lord: you must not go thus lightly.

Ar. Now, what's to do? what says the Law unto me?
Give me my great offence that speaks me guilty.

Bor. Laying aside a thousand petty matters,
As scorns, and insolencies both from your self and followers,
Which you put first fire to, and these are deadly,
I come to one main cause, which though it carries
A strangeness in the circumstance, it carries death too,
Not to be pardon'd neither: ye have done a sacrilege.

Ar. High Heaven defend me man: how, how Boroskie?

Bor. Ye have took from the Temple those vow'd Arms,
The holy Ornament you hung up there,
No absolution of your vow, no order
From holy Church to give 'em back unto you
After they were purified from War, and rested
From blood, made clean by ceremony: from the Altar
You snatch'd 'em up again, again ye wore 'em,
Again you stain'd 'em, stain'd your vow, the Church too,
And rob'd it of that right was none of yours, Sir,
For which the Law requires your head, ye know it.

Ar. Those arms I fought in last?

Bor. The same.

Ar. God a mercy,

Thou hast hunted out a notable cause to kill me:
A subtle one: I dye, for saving all you;
Good Sir, remember if you can, the necessity,
The suddenness of time, the state all stood in;
I was entreated to, kneel'd to, and pray'd to,
The Duke himself, the Princes, all the Nobles;
The cries of Infants, Bed-rid Fathers, Virgins;
Prethee find out a better cause, a handsomer,
This will undo thee too: people will spit at thee,
The Devil himself would be ashamed of this cause;
Because my haste made me forget the ceremony,
The present danger every where, must my life satisfy?

Bor. It must, and shall.

Ar. O base ungrateful people,
Have ye no other Swords to cut my throat with
But mine own nobleness? I confess, I took 'em,
The vow not yet absolv'd I hung 'em up with:
Wore 'em, fought in 'em, gilded 'em again
In the fierce Tartars bloods; for you I took 'em,
For your peculiar safety, Lord, for all,
I wore 'em for my Countries health, that groan'd then:
Took from the Temple, to preserve the Temple;
That holy place, and all the sacred monuments,
The reverent shrines of Saints, ador'd and honour'd,
Had been consum'd to ashes, their own sacrifice;
Had I been slack, or staid that absolution,
No Priest had liv'd to give it; my own honour,
Cure of my Country murder me?

Bor. No, no Sir,

I shall force that from ye, will make this cause light too,
Away with him: I shall pluck down that heart, Sir.

Ar. Break it thou mayest; but if it bend, for pity,
Doggs, and Kites eat it: come I am honours Martyr. [Ex.]

SCENE VI.

Enter Duke, and Burris.

Du. Exceed my Warrant?

Bur. You know he loves him not.

Du. He dares as well eat death, as do it, eat wild-fire,
Through a few fears I mean to try his goodness,
That I may find him fit, to wear here, Burris;
I know Boroskie hates him, to death hates him,
I know he's a Serpent too, a swoln one, [Noise within.
But I have pull'd his sting out: what noise is that?

The. within. Down with 'em, down with 'em, down

Sold. within. Stand, stand, stand. (with the gates.

Putf. within. Fire the Palace before ye.

Bur. Upon my life the Souldier, Sir, the Souldier,
A miserable time is come.

Enter Gentleman.

Gent. Oh save him,
Upon my knees, my hearts knees, save Lord Archas,
We are undone else.

Du. Dares he touch his Body?

Gent. He racks him fearfully, most fearfully.

Du. Away Burris,

Take men, and take him from him; clap him up,
And if I live, I'll find a strange death for him. Ex. Bur.
Are the Souldiers broke in?

Gent. By this time sure they are, Sir,
They beat the Gates extreamly, beat the people.

Du. Get me a guard about me; make sure the lodgings,
And speak the Souldiers fair.

Gent. Pray Heaven that take, Sir. [Exeunt.

Enter Putskic, Ancient, Souldiers, with Torches.

Putf. Give us the General, we'll fire the Court else,
Render him safe and well.

Anc. Do not fire the Cellar, (weather,
There's excellent Wine in't, Captain, and though it be cold
I do not love it mull'd; bring out the General,
We'll light ye such a Bone-fire else: where are ye?
Speak, or we'll tofs your Turrets, peep out of your Hives,
We'll smoak ye else: Is not that a Nose there?
Put out that Nose again, and if thou dar'st
But blow it before us: now he creeps out on's Burrough.

Enter Gentleman.

Putf. Give us the General.

Gent. Yes, Gentlemen;
Or any thing ye can desire.

Anc. You musk-cat,
Cordevant-skin we will not take your answer. hither.

Putf. Where is the Duke? speak suddenly, and send him

Anc. Or we'll so frye your Buttocks.

Gent. Good sweet Gentlemen——

Anc. We are neither good nor sweet, we are Souldiers,
And you miscreants that abuse the General.
Give fire my Boys, 'tis a dark Evening,
Let's light 'em to their lodgings.

Enter Olympia, Honora, Viola, Theodore, Women.

Hon. Good Brother be not fierce.

The. I will not hurt her,
Fear not sweet Lady.

Olym. Nay, do what you please, Sir,
I have a sorrow that exceeds all yours,
And more, contemns all danger.

Enter Duke, above.

The. Where is the Duke?

Du. He's here; what would ye Souldiers? wherefore
Like mutinous mad-men thus? (troop ye

The. Give me my Father.

Putf. Anc. Give us our General.

The. Set him here before us,
Ye see the pledge we have got; ye see the Torches;
All shall to ashes, as I live, immediately,
A thousand lives for one.

Du. But hear me?

Putf. No, we come not to dispute.

Enter Archas, and Burris.

The. By Heaven I swear he's rackt and whipt.

Hon. Oh my poor Father!

Putf. Burn, kill and burn.

Arc. Hold, hold, I say: hold Souldiers,
On your allegiance hold.

The. We must not.

Arc. Hold:

I swear by Heaven he is a barbarous Traitor stirs first,
A Villain, and a stranger to Obedience,
Never my Souldier more, nor Friend to Honour:
Why did you use your old Man thus? thus cruelly
Torture his poor weak Body? I ever lov'd ye.

Du. Forget me in these wrongs, most noble Archas.

Arc. I have balm enough for all my hurts: weep no more
A satisfaction for a thousand sorrows; (Sir,
I do believe you innocent, a good man,
And Heaven forgive that naughty thing that wrong'd me:
Why look ye wild, my friends? why stare ye on me?
I charge ye, as ye are men, my men, my lovers,
As ye are honest faithful men, fair Souldiers,
Let down your anger: Is not this our Sovereign?
The head of mercy, and of Law? who dares then,
But Rebels, scorning Law, appear thus violent?
Is this a place for Swords? for threatning fires?
The Reverence of this House dares any touch,
But with obedient knees, and pious duties?
Are we not all his Subjects? all sworn to him?
Has not he power to punish our offences?

And do we not daily fall into 'em? assure your selves
I did offend, and highly, grievously,
This good, sweet Prince I offended, my life forfeited,
Which yet his mercy and his old love met with,
And only let me feel his light rod this way:
Ye are to thank him for your General,
Pray for his life and fortune; swear your bloods for him.
Ye are offenders too, daily offenders,
Proud infolencies dwell in your hearts, and ye do 'em,
Do 'em against his Peace, his Law, his Person;
Ye see he only sorrows for your sins,
And where his power might persecute, forgives ye:
For shame put up your Swords, for honesty,
For orders sake, and whose ye are, my Souldiers,
Be not so rude.

The. They have drawn blood from you, Sir.

Arc. That was the blood rebell'd, the naughty blood,
The proud provoking blood; 'tis well 'tis out, Boy;
Give you example first; draw out, and orderly.

Hon. Good Brother, do.

Arc. Honest and high example,
As thou wilt have my Blessing follow thee,
Inherit all mine honours: thank ye Theodore,
My worthy Son.

The. If harm come, thank your self, Sir,
I must obey ye. [Exit.

Arc. Captain, you know the way now:
A good man, and a valiant, you were ever,
Inclin'd to honest things; I thank ye, Captain. [Ex. Soul.
Souldiers, I thank ye all: and love me still,
But do not love me so you lose Allegiance,
Love that above your lives: once more I thank ye.

Du. Bring him to rest, and let our cares wait on him;
Thou excellent old man, thou top of honour,
Where Justice, and Obedience only build,
Thou flock of Vertue, how am I bound to love thee!
In all thy noble ways to follow thee!

Bur. Remember him that vext him, Sir.

Du. Remember?
When I forget that Villain, and to pay him
For all his mischiefs, may all good thoughts forget me.

Arc. I am very fore.

Du. Bring him to Bed with ease, Gentlemen,
For every stripe I'll drop a tear to wash 'em,
And in my sad Repentance——

Arc. 'Tis too much,
I have a life yet left to gain that love, Sir. [Exeunt.]

Aëtus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Burris, and Gentlemen.

Duke. How does Lord Archas?
Bur. But weak, and't please ye;
Yet all the helps that art can, are applied to him;
His heart's untoucht, and whole yet; and no doubt, Sir,
His mind being sound, his body soon will follow. (too;

Du. O that base Knave that wrong'd him, without leave
But I shall find an hour to give him thanks; for't;
He's fast, I hope.

Bur. As fast as irons can keep him:
But the most fearful Wretch——

Du. He has a Conscience,
A cruel stinging one I warrant him,
A loaden one: But what news of the Souldier?
I did not like their parting, 'twas too fullen.

Bur. That they keep still, and I fear a worse clap;
They are drawn out of the Town, and stand in counsels,
Hatching unquiet thoughts, and cruel purposes:
I went my self unto 'em, talkt with the Captains,
Whom I found fraught with nothing but loud murmurs,
And desperate curses, founding these words often
Like Trumpets to their angers: we are ruin'd,
Our services turn'd to disgraces, mischiefs;
Our brave old General, like one had pilfer'd,
Tortur'd, and whipt: the Colonels eyes, like torches,
Blaze every where and fright fair peace.

Gent. Yet worse, Sir;
The news is currant now, they mean to leave ye,
Leave their Allegiance; and under Olin's Charge
The bloody Enemy march straight against ye.

Bur. I have heard this too, Sir.

Du. This must be prevented,
And suddenly, and warily.

Bur. 'Tis time, Sir,
But what to minister, or how?

Du. Go in with me,
And there we'll think upon't: such blows as these,
Equal defences ask, else they displease. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Petesca, and Gentlewoman.

Pet. Lord, what a coil has here been with these Soul-
They are cruel fellows. (diers!

Wom. And yet methought we found 'em
Handsome enough; I'll tell thee true, Petesca,
I lookt for other manner of dealings from 'em,
And had prepar'd my self: but where's my Lady?

Pet. In her old dumps within: monstrous melancholy;
Sure she was mad of this Wench.

Wom. And she had been a man, (is shifted.
She would have been a great deal madder, I am glad she

Pet. 'Twas a wicked thing for me to betray her,
And yet I must confess she stood in our lights.

Enter Alinda.

What young thing's this?

Alin. Good morrow beauteous Gentlewomen:
'Pray ye is the Princess stirring yet?

Wom. He has her face.

Pet. Her very tongue, and tone too: her youth upon him.

Alin. I guess ye to be the Princess Women.

Pet. Yes, we are, Sir. (Grace,

Alin. Pray is there not a Gentlewoman waiting on her
Ye call Alinda?

Pet. The Devil sure in her shape.

Wom. I have heard her tell my Lady of a Brother,
An only Brother that she had: in travel——

Pet. 'Mafs, I remember that: this may be he too:
I would this thing would serve her.

Enter Olympia.

Wom. So would I Wench,
We should love him better sure: Sir, here's the Princess,
She best can satisfie ye.

Alin. How I love that presence!
O blessed Eyes, how nobly shine your comforts!
Olym. What Gentleman is that?

Wom. We know not, Madam:
He ask'd us for your Grace: and as we guess it,
He is Alinda's Brother.

Olym. Ha! let me mark him:
My grief has almost blinded me: her Brother?
By Venus, he has all her sweetness upon him:
Two silver drops of dew were never liker.

Alin. Gracious Lady——

Olym. That pleasant pipe he has too.

Alin. Being my happiness to pass by this way,
And having as I understand by Letters,
A Sister in your vertuous service, Madam——

Olym. O now my heart, my heart akes.

Alin. All the comfort
My poor youth has, all that my hopes have built me,
I thought it my first duty, my best service,
Here to arrive first, humbly to thank your Grace
For my poor Sister, humbly to thank your Nobleness,
That bounteous Goodness in ye.

Olym. 'Tis he certainly.

Alin. That spring of favour to her; with my life, Madam,
If any such most happy means might meet me,
To shew my thankfulness.

Olym. What have I done, Fool!

Alin. She came a stranger to your Grace, no Courtier;
Nor of that curious breed befits your service,
Yet one I dare assure my Soul, that lov'd ye
Before she saw ye; doted on your Vertues;
Before she knew those fair eyes, long'd to read 'em,
You only had her prayers, you her wishes;
And that one hope to be yours once, preserv'd her.

Olym. I have done wickedly.

Alin. A little Beauty,
Such as a Cottage breeds, she brought along with her;
And yet our Country-eyes esteem'd it much too:
But for her beauteous mind, forget great Lady,
I am her Brother, and let me speak a stranger,
Since she was able to beget a thought, 'twas honest.
The daily study how to fit your services,
Truly to tread that vertuous path you walk in,
So fir'd her honest Soul, we thought her Sainted;
I presume she is still the same: I would fain see her,
For Madam, 'tis no little love I owe her.

Olym. Sir, such a maid there was, I had——

Alin. There was, Madam?

Olym. O my poor Wench: eyes, I will ever curse ye
For your Credulity, Alinda.

Alin. That's her name, Madam.

Olym. Give me a little leave, Sir, to lament her.

Alin. Is she dead, Lady?

Olym. Dead Sir, to my service.
She is gone, pray ye ask no further.

Alin. I obey Madam:

Gone? now must I lament too: said ye gone Madam?

Olym. Gone, gone for ever.

Alin. That's a cruel saying:
Her honour too?

Olym. Prithee look angry on me,

And

And if thou ever lovedst her, spit upon me ;
Do something like a Brother, like a friend,
And do not only say thou lov'dst her ———

Al. Ye amaze me.

Oly. I ruin'd her, I wrong'd her, I abus'd her ;
Poor innocent soul, I slung her ; sweet Alinda,
Thou vertuous maid, my soul now calls thee vertuous.
Why do ye not rail now at me ?

Al. For what Lady ?

Oly. Call me base treacherous woman.

Al. Heaven defend me.

Oly. Rashly I thought her false, and put her from me,
Rashly, and madly I betray'd her modesty,
Put her to wander, heaven knows where : nay, more Sir,
Stuck a black brand upon her.

Al. 'Twas not well Lady,

Oly. 'Twas damnable : she loving me so dearly,
Never poor wench lov'd so : Sir believe me,
'Twas the most dutious wench, the best companion,
When I was pleas'd, the happiest, and the gladdest,
The modestest sweet nature dwelt within her :
I saw all this, I knew all this, I lov'd it,
I doated on it too, and yet I kill'd it :
O what have I forsaken ? what have I lost ?

Al. Madam, I'll take my leave, since she is wandering,
'Tis fit I know no rest.

Oly. Will you go too Sir ?

I have not wrong'd you yet, if you dare trust me,
For yet I love Alinda there, I honour her,
I love to look upon those eyes that speak her,
To read that face again, (modesty keep me,) Alinda,
in that shape : but why should you trust me,
'Twas I betray'd your Sister, I undid her ;
And believe me, gentle youth, 'tis I weep for her :
Appoint what penance you please : but stay then,
And see me perform it : ask what honour this place
Is able to heap on ye, or what wealth :
If following me will like ye, my care of ye,
Which for your sisters sake, for your own goodness ———

Al. Not all the honour earth has, now she's gone Lady,
Not all the favour ; yet if I fought preferment,
Under your bounteous Grace I would only take it.
Peace rest upon ye : one sad tear every day
For poor Alinda's sake, 'tis fit ye pay. [Exit.

Oly. A thousand noble youth, and when I sleep,
Even in my silver slumbers still I'll weep. [Exit.

SCENA III.

Enter Duke, and Gentlemen.

Duke. Have ye been with 'em ?

Gent. Yes, and 't please your Grace,
But no persuasion serves 'em, nor no promise,
They are fearfull angry, and by this time Sir,
Upon their march to the Enemy.

Du. They must be stopt.

Enter Burris.

Gent. I, but what force is able ? and what leader —

Du. How now, have you been with Archas ?

Bur. Yes, and 't please ye,

And told him all : he frets like a chaf'd Lyon,
And calls for his Arms : and all those honest Courtiers
That dare draw Swords.

Du. Is he able to do any thing ?

Bur. His mind is well enough ; and where his charge is,
Let him be ne're so fore, 'tis a full Army.

Du. Who commands the Rebels ?

Bur. The young Colonel,
That makes the old man almost mad : he swears Sir,
He will not spare his Sons head for the Dukedom.

Du. Is the Court in Arms ?

Bur. As fast as they can bustle,
Every man mad to goe now : inspir'd strangely,

As if they were to force the Enemy,
I beseech your grace to give me leave.

Du. Pray go Sir,

And look to the old man well ; take up all fairly,
And let no blood be spilt ; take general pardons,
And quench this fury with fair peace.

Bur. I shall Sir,

Or seal it with my service ; they are villains :
The Court is up : good Sir, go strengthen 'em,
Your Royal fight will make 'em scorn all dangers ;
The General needs no proof.

Duke. Come let's go view 'em. [Exit.

SCENA IV.

Enter Theodore, Putskie, Ancient, Souldiers, Drums, and Colours.

The. 'Tis known we are up, and marching : no submission,
No promise of base peace can cure our maladies,
We have suffer'd beyond all repair of honour :
Your valiant old man's whipt ; whipt Gentlemen,
Whipt like a slave : that flesh that never trembled,
Nor shrunk one sinew at a thousand charges,
That noble body rib'd in arms, the Enemy
So often shook at, and then shun'd like thunder,
That body's torn with lashes.

Anc. Let's turn head.

Put. Turn nothing Gentlemen, let's march on fairly,
Unless they charge us.

The. Think still of his abuses,
And keep your angers.

Anc. He was whipt like a top,
I never saw a whore so lac'd : Court school-butter ?
Is this their diet ? I'll dress 'em one running banquet :
What Oracle can alter us ? did not we see him ?
See him we lov'd ?

The. And though we did obey him,
Forc'd by his reverence for that time ; is't fit Gentlemen ?
My noble friends, is't fit we men, and Souldiers,
Live to endure this, and look on too ?

Put. Forward :

They may call back the Sun as soon, stay time,
Prescribe a Law to death, as we endure this.

The. They will make ye all fair promises.

Anc. We care not.

The. Use all their arts upon ye.

Anc. Hang all their arts.

Put. And happily they'll bring him with 'em.

Anc. March apace then,

He is old and cannot overtake us.

Put. Say he doe.

Anc. We'll run away with him : they shall never see him
The truth is, we'll hear nothing, stop at nothing, (more :
Consider nothing but our way ; believe nothing, (thing,
Not though they say their prayers : be content with no-
But the knocking out their brains : and last, do nothing
But ban 'em and curse 'em, till we come to kill 'em.

The. Remove then forwards bravely ; keep your minds
And the next time we face 'em, shall be fatal. (whole, [Exit.

SCENA V.

Enter Archas, Duke, Burris, Gent. and Sould.

Ar. Peace to your Grace ; take rest Sir, they are before us-
Gent. They are Sir, and upon the march. [Exit Duke.

Ar. Lord Burris, (tage,
Take you those horse and coast 'em : upon the first advan-
If they will not flake their march, charge 'em up roundly,
By that time I'll come in. [Exit.

Bur. I'll do it truly.

Gent. How do you feel your self Sir ?

Ar. Well, I thank ye ;
A little weak, but anger shall supply that ;
You will all stand bravely to it ?

All.

All. Whilst we have lives Sir.

Ar. Ye speak like Gentlemen; I'll make the knaves know,
The proudest, and the strongest hearted Rebel,
They have a law to live in, and they shall have;
Beat up a pace, by this time he is upon 'em, [Drum within.
And sword, but hold me now, thou shalt play ever. [Exeunt.

Enter Drums beating, Theodore, Putskie, Ancient, and their Souldiers.

The. Stand, stand, stand close, and sure;

Enter Burris, and 1 or 2 Souldiers.

The horse will charge us.

Anc. Let 'em come on, we have provender fit for 'em.

Put. Here comes Lord Burris Sir, I think to parly.

The. You are welcom noble Sir, I hope to our part.

Bur. No, valiant Colonel, I am come to chide ye,
To pity ye; to kill ye, if these fail me;

Fie, what dishonour seek ye! what black infamy!

Why do ye draw out thus? draw all shame with ye?

Are these fit cares in subjects? I command ye

Lay down your arms again, move in that peace,

That fair obedience you were bred in.

Put. Charge us:

We come not here to argue.

The. Charge up bravely,

And hotly too, we have hot spleens to meet ye,

Hot as the shames are offer'd us.

Enter Archas, Gent. and Souldiers.

Bur. Look behind ye.

Do you see that old man? do you know him Souldiers?

Put. Your Father Sir, believe me ———

Bur. You know his marches,

You have seen his executions: is it yet peace?

The. We'll dye here first.

Bur. Farewel: you'll hear on's presently.

Ar. Stay Burris: this is too poor, too beggerly a body

To bear the honour of a charge from me,

A sort of tatter'd Rebels; go provide Gallowfes;

Ye are troubled with hot heads, I'll cool ye presently:

These look like men that were my Souldiers

Now I behold 'em nearly, and more narrowly,

My honest friends: where got they these fair figures?

Where did they steal these shapes?

Bur. They are struck already.

Ar. Do you see that fellow there, that goodly Rebel?

He looks as like a Captain I lov'd tenderly:

A fellow of a faith indeed.

Bur. He has sham'd him.

Ar. And that that bears the Colours there, most certain

So like an Ancient of mine own, a brave fellow,

A loving and obedient, that believe me Burris,

I am amaz'd and troubled: and were it not

I know the general goodness of my people,

The duty, and the truth, the stedfast honestie,

And am assur'd they would as soon turn Devils

As rebels to allegiance, for mine honour.

Bur. Here needs no wars.

Put. I pray forgive us Sir.

Anc. Good General forgive us, or use your sword,

Your words are double death.

All. Good noble General.

Bur. Pray Sir be mercifull.

Ar. Weep out your shames first,

Ye make me fool for companie: fie Souldiers,

My Souldiers too, and play these tricks? what's he there?

Sure I have seen his face too; yes, most certain

I have a son, but I hope he is not here now,

'Would much resemble this man, wondrous near him,

Just of his height and making too, you seem a Leader.

The. Good Sir, do not shame me more: I know your an-
And less than death I look not for. (ger,

Ar. You shall be my charge Sir, it seems you want foes,

When you would make your friends your Enemies.
A running blood ye have, but I shall cure ye.

Bur. Good Sir ———

An. No more good Lord: beat forward Souldiers:
And you, march in the rear, you have lost your places.

[Exeunt.

SCENA VI.

Enter Duke, Olympia, Honora, Viola.

Du. You shall not be thus fullen still with me Sister,

You do the most unnobly to be angry,

For as I have a soul, I never touch'd her,

I never yet knew one unchast thought in her:

I must confess, I lov'd her: as who would not?

I must confess I doated on her strangely,

I offer'd all, yet so strong was her honour,

So fortifi'd as fair, no hope could reach her,

And whilst the world beheld this, and confirm'd it,

Why would you be so jealous?

Oly. Good Sir pardon me,

I feel sufficiently my follies penance,

And am asham'd, that shame a thousand sorrows

Feed on continually, would I had never seen her,

Or with a clearer judgement look'd upon her,

She was too good for me, so heavenly good Sir,

Nothing but Heaven can love that soul sufficiently,

Where I shall see her once again.

Enter Burris.

Du. No more tears,

If she be within the Dukedom, we'll recover her:

Welcom Lord Burris, fair news I hope.

Bur. Most fair Sir,

Without one drop of blood these wars are ended,

The Souldier cool'd again, indeed asham'd Sir,

And all his anger ended. Du. Where's Lord Archas?

Bur. Not far off Sir: with him his valiant son,

Head of this fire, but now a prisoner,

And if by your sweet mercy not prevented,

I fear some fatal stroke. [Drums.

Enter Archas, Theodore, Gentlemen, Souldiers.

Du. I hear the Drums beat,

Welcom, my worthy friend.

Ar. Stand where ye are Sir,

Even as you love your country, move not forward,

Nor plead for peace till I have done a justice,

A justice on this villain; none of mine now,

A justice on this Rebel. Hon. O my Brother.

Ar. This fatal firebrand ———

Du. Forget not old man,

He is thy son, of thine own blood.

Ar. In these veins

No treacherie e're harbour'd yet, no mutinie,

I ne're gave life to lewd and headstrong Rebels.

Du. 'Tis his first fault.

Ar. Not of a thousand Sir,

Or were it so, it is a fault so mightie,

So strong against the nature of all mercy,

His Mother were she living, would not weep for him,

He dare not say he would live. The. I must not Sir,

Whilst you say 'tis not fit: your Graces mercy

Not to my life appli'd, but to my fault Sir,

The worlds forgiveness next, last, on my knees Sir,

I humbly beg,

Do not take from me yet the name of Father,

Strike me a thousand blows, but let me dye yours.

Ar. He moves my heart: I must be suddain with him,
I shall grow faint else in my execution; (bravely.

Come, come Sir, you have seen death; now meet him

Du. Hold, hold I say, a little hold, consider

Thou hast no more sons Archas to inherit thee.

Ar. Yes Sir, I have another, and a nobler:

No treason shall inherit me: young Archas

A boy,

A boy, as sweet as young, my Brother breeds him,
My noble Brother Bruskie breeds him nobly,
Him let your favour find: give him your honour.

Enter Putskie (alias Briskie) and Alinda, (alias Archas.)

Put. Thou hast no child left Archas, none to inherit thee
If thou strik'st that stroke now: behold young Archas;
Behold thy Brother here, thou bloody Brother,
As bloody to this sacrifice as thou art:
Heave up thy sword, and mine's heav'd up: strike Archas,
And I'll strike too as suddenly, as deadly:
Have mercy, and I'll have mercy: the Duke gives it.
Look upon all these, how they weep it from thee,
Choose quickly, and begin. Du. On your obedience,
On your allegiance save him.

Ar. Take him to ye, [Soul. shout.]
And sirrah, be an honest man, ye have reason:
I thank ye worthy Brother: welcom child,
Mine own sweet child.

Du. Why was this boy conceal'd thus?

Put. Your graces pardon:
Fearing the vow you made against my Brother,
And that your anger would not only light
On him, but find out all his familie,
This young boy, to preserve from after danger,
Like a young wench, hither I brought; my self
In the habit of an ordinarie Captain
Disguis'd, got entertainment, and serv'd here
That I might still be ready to all fortunes:
That boy your grace took, nobly entertain'd him,
But thought a Girl, Alinda, Madam. Ol. Stand away,
And let me look upon him. Du. My young Mistress?
This is a strange metamorphosis, Alinda?

Al. Your graces humble servant.

Du. Come hither Sister:
I dare yet scarce believe mine eyes: how they view one ano-
Do'st thou not love this boy well? (ther?)

Oly. I should lye else,
Trust me, extreemly lye Sir.

Du. Didst thou never wish Olympia,
It might be thus? Oly. A thousand times.

Du. Here take him:

Nay, do not blush: I do not jest; kiss sweetly:
Boy, ye kiss faintly boy; Heaven give ye comfort;
Teach him, he'll quickly learn: there's two hearts eas'd now.

Ar. You do me too much honour Sir. Du. No Archas,
But all I can, I will; can you love me? speak truly.

Hon. Yes Sir, dearly.

Du. Come hither Viola, can you love this man?

Vio. I'll do the best I can Sir. Du. Seal it Burris,
We'll all to Church together instantly:

And then a vie for boyes; stay, bring Boroskie.

Enter Boroskie.

I had almost forgot that lump of mischief.
There Archas, take the enimie to honour,
The knave to worth: do with him what thou wilt.

Ar. Then to my sword again; you to your prayers;
Wash off your villanies, you feel the burthen.

Bor. Forgive me ere I die, most honest Archas;
'Tis too much honour that I perish thus;

O strike my faults to kill them, that no memorie,
No black and blasted infamy hereafter

Ar. Come, are ye ready? Bor. Yes.

Ar. And truly penitent, to make your way straight?

Bor. Thus I wash off my sins.

Ar. Stand up, and live then,

And live an honest man; I scorn mens ruines:

Take him again, Sir, trie him: and believe
This thing will be a perfect man. Du. I take him.

Bor. And when I fail those hopes, heavens hopes fail me.

Du. You are old: no more wars Father:

Theodore take you the charge, be General.

The. All good blefs ye.

Du. And my good Father, you dwell in my bosom,
From you rise all my good thoughts: when I would think

And examine time for one that's fairly noble,
And the same man through all the streights of vertue,
Upon this Silver book I'll look, and read him.

Now forward merrily to Hymens rites,

To joyes, and revels, sports, and he that can

Most honour Archas, is the noblest man. [Exeunt.]

Prologue.

WE need not noble Gentlemen to invite Attention, preinstruct you who did write
This worthy Story, being confident
The mirth join'd with grave matter, and Intent
To yield the hearers profit, with delight,
Will speak the maker: and to do him right,
Would ask a Genius like to his; the age
Mourning his loss, and our now widdowed stage
In vain lamenting. I could adde, so far Behind him the most modern writers are,
That when they would commend him, their best praise
Ruins the buildings which they strive to raise
To his best memory, so much a friend
Presumes to write, secure 'twill not offend
The living that are modest, with the rest
That may repine he cares not to contest.

This debt to Fletcher paid; it is profess'd
By us the Actors, we will do our best
To send such favouring friends, as hither come
To grace the Scene, pleas'd, and contented home.

Epilogue.

THough something well assur'd, few here repent
Three hours of precious time, or money spent
On our endeavours, Yet not to relye
Too much upon our care, and industrie,
'Tis fit we should ask, but a modest way
How you approve our action in the play.
If you vouchsafe to crown it with applause,
It is your bountie, and you give us cause
Hereafter with a general consent
To study, as becomes us, your content.

Rule a Wife, and have a Wife.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Juan de Castro, and Michael Perez.

Mich. ARE your Companies full, Colonel?
Juan. No, not yet, Sir: (kon;
 Nor will not be this month yet, as I rec-
 How rises your Command?

Mich. We pick up still, and as our monies hold out,
 We have men come, about that time I think
 We shall be full too, many young Gallants go.

Juan. And unexperienced,
 The Wars are dainty dreams to young hot spirits,
 Time and Experience will allay those Visions,
 We have strange things to fill our numbers,
 There's one Don Leon, a strange goodly fellow,
 Recommended to me from some noble Friends,
 For my Alferes, had you but seen his Person,
 And what a Giants promise it protesteth. (too.

Mich. I have heard of him, and that he hath serv'd before

Juan. But no harm done, nor never meant, Don Michael,
 That came to my ears yet, ask him a question,
 He blushes like a Girl, and answers little,
 To the point less, he wears a Sword, a good one;
 And good Cloaths too, he is whole skin'd, has no hurt yet,
 Good promising hopes, I never yet heard certainly
 Of any Gentleman that saw him angry.

Mich. Preserve him, he'll conclude a peace if need be,
 Many as strong as he will go along with us,
 That swear as valiantly as heart can wish, (ones,
 Their mouths charg'd with six oaths at once, and whole
 That make the drunken Dutch creep into Mole-hills.

Juan. 'Tis true, such we must look for: but Mich. Perez,
 When heard you of Donna Margarita, the great Heirefs?

Mich. I hear every hour of her, though I never saw her,
 She is the main discourse: noble Don Juan de Castro,
 How happy were that man could catch this Wench up,
 And live at ease! she is fair, and young, and wealthy,
 Infinite wealthy, and as gracious too
 In all her entertainments, as men report.

Juan. But she is proud, Sir, that I know for certain,
 And that comes seldom without wantonness,
 He that shall marry her, must have a rare hand.

Mich. Would I were married, I would find that Wisdom,
 With a light rein to rule my Wife: if ever Woman
 Of the most subtile mould went beyond me,
 I would give the Boys leave to whoot me out o'th' Parish.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Sir, there be two Gentlewomen attend to speak
 With you.

Juan. Wait on 'em in.

Mich. Are they two handsome Women?

Ser. They seem so, very handsom, but they are vail'd, Sir.

Mich. Thou put'st sugar in my mouth, how it melts with
 I love a sweet young Wench. (me!

Juan. Wait on them in I say. [Exit Servant.

Mich. Don Juan.

Juan. How you itch, Michael! how you burnish!

Will not this Souldiers heat out of your bones yet,
 Do your Eyes glow now?

Mich. There be two.

Juan. Say honest, what shame have you then?

Mich. I would fain see that,

I have been in the Indies twice, and have seen strange things,
 But two honest Women; ———one I read of once.

Juan. Prithee be modest.

Mich. I'll be any thing.

Enter Servant, Donna Clara, and Estifania vail'd.

Juan. You are welcome Ladies.

Mich. Both hooded, I like 'em well though,
 They come not for advice in Law sure hither;
 May be they would learn to raise the Pike,
 I am for 'em: they are very modest, 'tis a fine Preludium.

Juan. With me, or with this Gentleman,
 Would you speak, Lady?

Clara. With you, Sir, as I guess, Juan de Castro.

Mich. Her Curtain opens, she is a pretty Gentlewoman.

Juan. I am the Man, and shall be bound to Fortune,
 I may do any service to your Beauties. (Flanders,

Clara. Captain, I hear you are marching down to
 To serve the Catholick King.

Juan. I am sweet Lady.

Clara. I have a Kinsman, and a noble Friend,
 Employ'd in those Wars, may be, Sir, you know him,

Don Campuzano Captain of Carbines,

To whom I would request your Nobleness,

To give this poor Remembrance. [A Letter.

Juan. I shall do it,

I know the Gentleman, a most worthy Captain.

Clara. Something in private.

Juan. Step aside: I'll serve thee. [Ex. Juan, and Clara.

Mich. Prithee let me see thy face.

Estif. Sir, you must pardon me,
 Women of our sort, that maintain fair memories,
 And keep suspect off from their Chastities,
 Had need wear thicker Vails.

Mich. I am no blaster of a Ladies Beauty,
 Nor bold intruder on her special favours,
 I know how tender Reputation is,
 And with what guards it ought to be preserv'd, Lady,
 You may to me.

Estif. You must excuse me, Seignior, I come
 Not here to sell my self.

Mich. As I am a Gentleman, by the honour of a Souldier.

Estif. I believe you,

I pray you be civil, I believe you would see me,
 And when you have seen me I believe you will like me,
 But in a strange place, to a stranger too,
 As if I came on purpose to betray you,
 Indeed I will not.

Mich. I shall love you dearly,
 And 'tis a sin to sling away affection,
 I have no Mistres, no desire to honour
 Anybut you, will not this Oyster open?

O o

I know

I know not, you have struck me with your modesty ;
She will draw sure ; so deep, and taken from me
All the desire I might bestow on others ,
Quickly before they come.

Estif. Indeed I dare not :
But since I see you are so desirous, Sir,
To view a poor face that can merit nothing
But your Repentance.

Mich. It must needs be excellent.

Estif. And with what honesty you ask it of me,
When I am gone let your man follow me,
And view what house I enter, thither come,
For there I dare be bold to appear open :
And as I like your vertuous carriage then,

Enter Juan, Clara, a Servant.

I shall be able to give welcome to you ;
She hath done her business, I must take my leave, Sir.

Mich. I'll kiss your fair white hand and thank you, Lady.
My man shall wait, and I shall be your Servant ;
Sirrah, come near, hark.

Serv. I shall do it faithfully.

[Exit.

Juan. You will command me no more services ?

Clara. To be careful of your noble health, dear Sir,
That I may ever honour you.

Juan. I thank you,
And kiss your hands, wait on the Ladies down there.

[Exeunt Ladies, and Servants.

Mi. You had the honour to see the face that came to you ?

Juan. And 'twas a fair one ; what was yours, Don Michael ?

Mi. Mine was i'th'clipse, and had a Cloud drawn over it.
But I believe well, and I hope 'tis handsome,
She had a hand would stir a holy Hermite.

Juan. You know none of 'em ?

Mich. No.

Juan. Then I do, Captain,
But I'll say nothing till I see the proof on't,
Sit close Don Perez, or your Worship's caught.
I fear a Flye.

Mich. Were those she brought Love-Letters ?

Juan. A Packet to a Kinsman now in Flanders,
Yours was very modest methought.

Mich. Some young unmanag'd thing,
But I may live to see——

Juan. 'Tis worth experience,
Let's walk abroad and view our Companies.

[Exeunt.

Enter Sanchio, and Alonzo.

Sanch. What, are you for the Wars, Alonzo ?

Alon. It may be I,

It may be no, e'n as the humour takes me.
If I find peace amongst the female Creatures,
And easie entertainment, I'll stay at home,
I am not so far obliged yet to long Marches
And mouldy Biskets, to run mad for Honour,
When you are all gone I have my choice before me.

Sanch. Of which Hospital thou wilt sweat in ; wilt thou
Never leave whoring ?

Alon. There is less danger in't than gunning, Sanchio,
Though we be shot sometimes, the shot's not mortal,
Besides, it breaks no limbs.

Sanch. But it disables 'em,
Dost thou see how thou pull'st thy legs after thee, as they Hung by points.

Alon. Better to pull 'em thus than walk on wooden ones,
Serve bravely for a Billet to support me.

Sanch. Fye, fye, 'tis base.

Alon. Dost thou count it base to suffer ?
Suffer abundantly ? 'tis the Crown of Honour ;
You think it nothing to lie twenty days
Under a Surgeons hands that has no mercy.

Sanch. As thou hast done I am sure, but I perceive now
Why you desire to stay, the orient Heirefs,
The Margarita, Sir.

Alonz. I would I had her.

Sanch. They say she will marry.

Alonz. I think she will.

Sanch. And marry suddenly, as report goes too,
She fears her Youth will not hold out, Alonzo.

Alonz. I would I had the sheathing on't.

Sanch. They say too

She has a greedy eye that must be fed
With more than one mans meat.

Alonz. Would she were mine,

I would cater for her well enough ; but Sanchio,
There be too many great men that adore her,
Princes, and Princes fellows, that claim priviledge.

Sanch. Yet those stand off i'th' way of marriage,
To be tyed to a mans pleasure is a second labour.

Alon. She has bought a brave house here in town.

Sanch. I have heard so.

Alonz. If she convert it now to pious uses,
And bid poor Gentlemen welcome.

Sanch. When comes she to it ?

Alonz. Within these two days, she is in the Country yet,
And keeps the noblest House.

Sanch. Then there's some hope of her,
Wilt thou go my way ?

Alonz. No, no, I must leave you,
And repair to an old Gentlewoman
That has credit with her, that can speak a good word. (first.)

Sanch. Send thee good fortune, but make thy Body found

Alonz. I am a Souldier,

And too found a Body becomes me not ;
Farewel, Sanchio.

[Exeunt.

Enter a Servant of Michael Perez.

Serv. 'Tis this or that house, or I have lost my aim,
They are both fair buildings, she walked plaguy fast,

Enter Estifania.

And hereabouts I lost her ; stay, that's she,
'Tis very she,—— she makes me a low court'sie,
Let me note the place, the street I well remember. [Exit.

She is in again, certain some noble Lady.

How happy should I be if she love my master :
A wondrous goodly house, here are brave lodgings,
And I shall sleep now like an Emperour,
And eat abundantly : I thank my fortune,
I'll back with speed, and bring him happy tidings. [Exit.

Enter three old Ladies.

1 Lady. What should it mean, that in such haste
We are sent for ?

2 Lady. Belike the Lady Margaret has some business
She would break to us in private.

3 Lady. It should seem so.
'Tis a good Lady, and a wise young Lady.

2 Lady. And vertuous enough too I warrant ye
For a young Woman of her years ; 'tis pity
To load her tender Age with too much Vertue. (with.)

3 Lady. 'Tis more sometimes than we can well away

Enter Altea.

Alt. Good morrow, Ladies.

All. 'Morrow my good Madam.

(ret ?)

1 Lad. How does the sweet young Beauty, Lady Marga-

2 Lady. Has she slept well after her walk last night ?

1 Lady. Are her dreams gentle to her mind ?

Alt. All's well,

She's very well, she sent for you thus suddenly
To give her counsel in a business
That much concerns her.

2 Lady. She does well and wisely,
To ask the counsel of the ancientst, Madam,
Our years have run through many things she knows not.

Alt. She would fain marry.

1 Lady. 'Tis a proper calling.

And

And well befits her years, who would she yoke with?

Air. That's left to argue on, I pray come in
And break your fast, drink a good cup or two,
To strengthen your understandings, then she'll tell ye.

2. And good wine breeds good counsel,
We'll yield to ye.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Juan de Castro, and Leon.

Juan. Have you seen any service?

Leon. Yes.

Juan. Where?

Leon. Every where.

Juan. What office bore ye?

Leon. None, I was not worthy.

Juan. What Captains know you?

Leon. None, they were above me.

Juan. Were you never hurt?

Leon. Not that I well remember,
But once I stole a Hen, and then they beat me;
Pray ask me no long questions, I have an ill memory.

Juan. This is an Allè, did you never draw your sword yet?

Leon. Not to do any harm I thank Heaven for't.

Juan. Nor ne'r ta'ne prisoner?

Leon. No, I ran away,
For I had ne'r no mony to redeem me.

Juan. Can you endure a Drum?

Leon. It makes my head ake.

Juan. Are you not valiant when you are drunk?

Leon. I think not, but I am loving Sir.

Juan. What a lump is this man,

Was your Father wife?

Leon. Too wife for me I'm sure,
For he gave all he had to my younger Brother.

Juan. That was no foolish part I'le bear you witness.

Canst thou lye with a woman?

Leon. I think I could make shift Sir,
But I am bashfull.

Juan. In the night?

Leon. I know not,

Darkness indeed may do some good upon me.

Juan. Why art thou sent to me to be my officer,
I, and commended too, when thou darst not fight?

Leon. There be more officers of my opinion,
Or I am cozen'd Sir, men that talk more too.

Juan. How wilt thou scape a bullet?

Leon. Why by chance,

They aim at honourable men, alas I am none Sir.

Juan. This fellow has some doubts in's talk that strike me,

Enter Alonzo.

He cannot be all fool: welcom Alonzo: (company?)

Alon. What have you got there, temperance into your
The spirit of peace? we shall have wars

Enter Cacafo.

By th'ounce then. O here's another pumpion,
Let him loofe for luck sake, the cram'd son
Of a stav'd Usurer, Cacafo, both their brains butter'd,
Cannot make two spoonfulls.

Caca. My Father's dead: I am a man of war too,
Monyes demefns; I have ships at sea too,
Captains.

(else.)

Juan. Take heed o'th' Hollanders, your ships may leak

Caca. I scorn the Hollanders, they are my drunkards.

Alon. Put up your gold Sir, I'le borrow it else.

Caca. I am satisfied, you shall not,

Come out, I know thee, meet mine anger instantly:

Leon. I never wrong'd ye.

Caca. Thou hast wrong'd mine honor;
Thou look'dst upon my Mistris thrice lasciviously;
I'le make it good.

Juan. Do not heat your self, you will surfeit.

Caca. Thou wan'st my mony too, with a pair of base bones,
In whom there was no truth, for which I beat thee,

I beat thee much, now I will hurt thee dangerously.

This shall provoke thee.

[He strikes.]

Alon. You struck too low by a foot Sir.

Juan. You must get a ladder when you would beat
This fellow.

Leon. I cannot chuse but kick again, pray pardon me.

Caca. Hadst thou not ask'd my pardon, I had kill'd thee,
I leave thee as a thing despis'd, affoles manus a vostra siniare
a Meistre.

[Exit Cac.]

Alon. You have scap'd by miracle, there is not in all Spain,
A spirit of more fury than this fire drake.

Leon. I see he is hasty, and I would give him leave
To beat me soundly if he would take my bond.

Juan. What shall I do with this fellow?

Alon. Turn him off,
He will infect the camp with cowardise,
If he goe with thee.

Juan. About some week hence Sir,
If I can hit upon no abler officer,
You shall hear from me.

Leon. I desire no better.

[Exit.]

Enter Estifania, and Perez.

Per. You have made me now too bountifull amends, Lady
For your strict carriage when you saw me first,
These beauties were not meant to be conceal'd,
It was a wrong to hide so sweet an object,
I cou'd now chide ye, but it shall be thus,
No other anger ever touch your sweetness.

Estif. You appear to me so honest, and so civil,
Without a blush Sir, I dare bid ye welcom.

Per. Now let me ask your name.

Estif. 'Tis Estifanie, the heir of this poor place.

Per. Poor do you call it?

There's nothing that I cast mine eyes upon,
But shews both rich and admirable, all the rooms
Are hung as if a Princess were to dwell here,
The Gardens, Orchards, every thing so curious:
Is all that plate your own too?

Estif. 'Tis but little,
Only for present use, I have more and richer,
When need shall call, or friends compel me use it,
The futes you see of all the upper chamber,
Are those that commonly adorn the house,
I think I have besides, as fair, as civil,
As any town in Spain can parallel.

Per. Now if she be not married, I have some hopes.
Are you a maid?

Estif. You make me blush to answer,
I ever was accounted so to this hour,
And that's the reason that I live retir'd Sir.

Per. Then would I counsel you to marry presently;
(If I can get her, I am made for ever)
For every year you lose, you lose a beauty;
A Husband now, an honest careful Husband,
Were such a comfort: will ye walk above stairs?

Estif. This place will fit our talk, 'tis fitter far Sir,
Above there are day-beds, and such temptations
I dare not trust Sir.

Per. She is excellent wife withal too.

Estif. You nam'd a husband, I am not so strict Sir;
Nor ti'd unto a Virgins solitariness,
But if an honest, and a noble one,
Rich, and a souldier, for so I have vowed he shall be;
Were offer'd me, I think I should accept him,
But above all he must love.

Perez. He were base else,
There's comfort ministred in the word souldier;
How sweetly should I live!

Estif. I am not so ignorant, but that I know well,
How to be commanded,
And how again to make my self obey'd Sir,
I waste but little, I have gather'd much,
My rial not the less worth, when 'tis spent;

If spent by my direction, to please my Husband,
I hold it as indifferent in my duty,
To be his maid i'th' kitchen, or his Cook,
As in the Hall to know my self the Mistris.

Per. Sweet, rich, and provident, now fortune stick
To me; I am a Souldier, and a bachelour, Lady,
And such a wife as you, I cou'd love infinitely,
They that use many words, some are deceitfull,
I long to be a Husband, and a good one,
For 'tis most certain I shall make a president
For all that follow me to love their Ladies,
I am young you see, able I would have you think too,
If't please you know, try me before you take me.

'Tis true I shall not meet in equal wealth
With ye, but Jewels, Chains, such as the war
Has given me, a thousand Duckets I dare
Presume on in ready gold, now as your Care may handle it, as rich cloths too, as Any he bears arms Lady.

Estif. You are a true gentleman, and fair, I see by ye,
And such a man I had rather take.

Perez. Pray do so, I'le have a Priest o'th' sudden.

Estif. And as suddenly you will repent too.

Perez. I'le be hang'd or drown'd first,
By this and this, and this kiss.

Estif. You are a Flatterer,
But I must say there was something when I saw you
First, in that most noble face, that stirr'd my fancy.

Per. I'le stir it better e're you sleep sweet Lady,
I'le send for all my trunks and give up all to ye,
Into your own dispose, before I bed ye,
And then sweet wench.

Estif. You have the art to cozen me.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Margarita, and two Ladies, and Altea.

Margar SIT down and give me your opinions seriously.

1 La. You say you have a mind to marry Lady.

Marg. 'Tis true, I have for to preserve my credit,
Yet not so much for that as for my state Ladies,
Conceive me right, there lies the main o'th' question,
Credit I can redeem, mony will imp it,
But when my monie's gone, when the law shall Seize that, and for incontincy strip me
Of all.

1 La. Do you find your body so malicious that way?

Marg. I find it as all bodies are that are young and lusty,
Lazy, and high fed, I desire my pleasure,
And pleasure I must have.

2 Lady. 'Tis fit you should have,
Your years require it, and 'tis necessary,
As necessary as meat to a young Lady,
Sleep cannot nourish more.

1 La. But might not all this be, and keep ye single.
You take away variety in marriage,
The abundance of the pleasure you are bar'd then,
Is't not abundance that you aim at?

Marg. Yes why was I made a woman?

2 Lady. And every day a new?

Marg. Why fair and young but to use it?

1 Lady. You are still i'th' right, why would you marry then?

Alte. Because a husband stops all doubts in this point,
And clears all passages.

2 Lady. What Husband mean ye?

Alte. A Husband of an easy faith, a fool,
Made by her wealth, and moulded to her pleasure,
One though he see himself become a monster,
Shall hold the door, and entertain the maker.

2 Lady. You grant there may be such a man.

1 Lady. Yes marry, but how to bring 'em to this rare Perfection.

2 Lady. They must be chosen so, things of no honour,
Nor outward honesty.

Marga. No 'tis no matter,
I care not what they are, so they be lusty.

2 La. Me thinks now a rich Lawyer, some such fellow,
That carries credit, and a face of awe,
But lies with nothing but his clients business.

Marg. No there's no trusting them, they are too subtil,
The Law has moulded 'em of natural mischief.

1 Lady. Then some grave governor,
Some man of honour, yet an easy man.

Marg. If he have honour I am undone, I'le none such,
I'le have a lusty man, honour will cloy me.

Altea. 'Tis fit ye should Lady;
And to that end, with search and wit and labour,
I have found one out, a right one and a perfect,
He is made as strong as brass, is of brave years too,
And doughty of complexion.

Marga. Is he a Gentleman?

Alte. Yes and a souldier, as gentle as you would wish him,
A good fellow, wears good cloaths.

Marga. Those I'le allow him,
They are for my credit, does he understand
But little?

Altea. Very little.

Marga. 'Tis the better,
Have not the wars bred him up to anger?

Al. No, he will not quarrel with a dog that bites him,
Let him be drunk or lober, is one silence.

Marg. H'as no capacity what honor is?
For that's the Souldiers god.

Alte. Honour's a thing too subtil for his wisdom,
If honour lye in eating, he is right honourable.

Marg. Is he so goodly a man do you say?

Altea. As you shall see Lady,
But to all this is but a trunk.

Marg. I would have him so,
I shall adde branches to him to adorn him,
Goe, find me out this man, and let me see him,
If he be that motion that you tell me of,
And make no more noise, I shall entertain him,
Let him be here.

Altea. He shall attend your Ladiship. [Exeunt.]

Enter Juan, Alonzo, and Perez.

Juan. Why thou art not married indeed?

Perez. No, no, pray think so,
Alas I am a fellow of no reckoning,
Not worth a Ladies eye.

Alon. Wou'dst thou steal a fortune,
And make none of all thy friends acquainted with it,
Nor bid us to thy wedding?

Perez. No indeed,
There was no wisdom in't, to bid an Artist,
An old seducer to a femal banquet,
I can cut up my pye without your instructions.

Juan. Was it the wench i'th' veil?

Perez. Baste 'twas she,
The prettiest Rogue that e're you look'd upon,
The lovingst thief.

Juan. And is she rich withal too?

Perez. A mine, a mine, there is no end of wealth Coronel,
I am an asse, a bashfull fool, prethee Coronel,
How do thy compaines fill now?

Juan. You are merry Sir,
You intend a safer war at home belike now.

Perez. I do not think I shall fight much this year Coronel,
I find my self given to my case a little,
I care not if I sell my foolish company,
They are things of hazard.

Alon. How it angers me,
This fellow at first fight should win a Lady,

A rich

A rich young wench, and I that have consum'd
My time and art in searching out their subtleties,
Like a fool'd Alchymist blow up my hopes still?
When shall we come to thy house and be freely merry?

Perez. When I have manag'd her a little more,
I have an house to entertain an army.

Alon. If thy wife be fair, thou wilt have few less Come to thee. (Signior.

Perez. But where they'l get entertainment is the point
I beat no Drum.

Alon. You need none but her taber,
May be I'll march after a month or two,
To get me a fresh stomach. I find Coronel
A wantonness in wealth, methinks I agree not with,
'Tis such a trouble to be married too,
And have a thousand things of great importance,
Jewels and plates, and fooleries molest me,
To have a mans brains whimsied with his wealth:
Before I walk'd contentedly.

Enter Servant.

Serv. My Mistris Sir is sick, because you are absent,
She mourns and will not eat.

Perez. Alas my Jewel,
Come I'll goe with thee, Gentlemen your fair leaves,
You see I am ti'd a little to my yoke,
Pray pardon me, would ye had both such loving wives.

Juan. I thank ye [Exit Perez, Servant.
For your old boots, never be blank Alonzo,
Because this fellow has outstript thy fortune,
Tell me ten daies hence what he is, and how
The gracious state of matrimony stands with him,
Come, let's to dinner, when Margarita comes
We'l visit both, it may be then your fortune. [Exit.

Enter Margarita, Altea, and Ladies.

Marg. Is he come?

Altea. Yes Madam, h'as been here this half hour,
I have question'd him of all that you can ask him,
And find him as fit as you had made the man,
He will make the goodliest shadow for iniquity.

Marg. Have ye searcht him Ladies?

Omnis. Is a man at all points, a likely man.

Marg. Call him in Altea. [Exit Lady.

Enter Leon, Altea.

A man of a good pefence, pray ye come this way,
Of a lusty body, is his mind so tame?

Alt. Pray ye question him, and if you find him not Fit for your purpose, shake him off, there's no harm Done.

Marg. Can you love a young Lady? How he blushes!

Alt. Leave twirling of your hat, and hold your head up,
And speak to th' Lady.

Leon. Yes, I think I can,
I must be taught, I know not what it means Madam.

Marg. You shall be taught, and can you when she pleases
Go ride abroad, and stay a week or two?
You shall have men and horses to attend ye,
And mony in your purse.

Leon. Yes I love riding,
And when I am from home I am so merry.

Marg. Be as merry as you will: can you as handsomely
When you are sent for back, come with obedience,
And doe your dutie to the Lady loves you?

Leon. Yes sure, I shall.

Marg. And when you see her friends here,
Or noble kinsmen, can you entertain
Their servants in the Celler, and be busied,
And hold your peace, what e're you see or hear of?

Leon. 'Twere fit I were hang'd else.

Marg. Let me try your kisses,
How the fool shakes, I will not eat ye Sir,
Behrew my heart he kisses wondrous manly,

Can ye doe any thing else?

Leon. Indeed I know not;
But if your Ladiship will please to instruct me,
Sure I shall learn.

Marg. You shall then be instructed:
If I should be this Lady that affects ye;
Nay say I marry ye?

Altea. Hark to the Lady.

Marg. What mony have ye?

Leon. None Madam, nor friends,
I wou'd doe any thing to serve your Ladiship.

Marg. You must not look to be my Mr Sir,
Nor talk i'th' house as though you wore the breeches,
No, nor command in any thing.

Leon. I will not,
Alas I am not able, I have no wit Madam.

Marg. Nor do not labour to arrive at any,
'Twill spoil your head, I take ye upon charity,
And like a Servant ye must be unto me,
As I behold your duty I shall love ye,
And as you observe me, I may chance lye with ye;
Can you mark these?

Leon. Yes indeed forsooth.

Marg. There is one thing,
That if I take ye in I put ye from me,
Utterly from me, you must not be sawcy,
No, nor at any time familiar with me,
Scarce know me, when I call ye not.

Leon. I will not, alas I never knew my self sufficiently.

Marg. Nor must not now.

Leon. I'll be a Dog to please ye.

Marg. Indeed you must fetch and carry as I appoint ye.

Leon. I were to blame else.

Marg. Kifs me again; a strong fellow,
There is a vigor in his lips: if you see me
Kifs any other, twenty in an hour Sir,
You must not start, nor be offended.

Leon. No, if you kifs a thousand I shall be contented;
It will the better teach me how to please ye.

Altea. I told ye Madam,

Marg. 'Tis the man I wisht for; the less you speak;

Leon. I'll never speak again Madam,
But when you charge me, then I'll speak softly too.

Marg. Get me a Priest, I'll wed him instantly,
But when you are married Sir, you must wait
Upon me, and see you observe my laws.

Leon. Else you shall hang me.

Marg. I'll give ye better clothes when you deserue 'em,
Come in, and serve for witness.

Omnis. We shall Madam.

Marg. And then away toth' city presently,
I'll to my new house and new company.

Leon. A thousand crowns are thine, and I am a made man.

Altea. Do not break out too soon.

Leon. I know my time wench. [Exit.

Enter Clara, and Estifania with a paper.

Clara. What, have you caught him?

Estif. Yes.

Clara. And do you find him

A man of those hopes that you aim'd at?

Estif. Yes too,
And the most kind man, and the ablest also
To give a wife content, he is found as old wine,
And to his soundness rises on the pallat,
And there's the man; find him rich too Clara.

Clara. Hast thou married him?

Estif. What dost thou think I fish without a bait wench?

I bob for fools? he is mine own, I have him,
I told thee what would tickle him like a trout,
And as I cast it so I caught him daintily,

And all he has I have 'stow'd at my devotion. (to town,

Clara. Does thy Lady know this? she is coming now
Now to live here in this house.

Estif.

Estif. Let her come,
She shall be welcom, I am prepar'd for her,
She is mad sure if she be angry at my fortune,
For what I have made bold.

Clara. Dolt thou not love him?

Estif. Yes, intirely well,
As long as there he staies and looks no farther
Into my ends, but when he doubts, I hate him,
And that wife hate will teach me how to cozen him:
How to decline their wives, and curb their manners,
To put a stern and strong reyn to their natures,
And holds he is an Assè not worth acquaintance,
That cannot mould a Devil to obedience,
I owe him a good turn for these opinions,
And as I find his temper I may pay him,

Enter Perez.

O here he is, now you shall see a kind man.

Perez. My Estifania, shall we to dinner lamb?
I know thou stay'lt for me.

Estif. I cannot eat else.

Perez. I never enter but me thinks a Paradise
Appears about me.

Estif. You are welcom to it Sir.

Perez. I think I have the sweetest seat in Spain wench,
Me thinks the richest too, we'l eat i'th' garden
In one o'th' arbours, there 'tis cool and pleasant,
And have our wine cold in the running fountain.
Who's that?

Estif. A friend of mine Sir.

Perez. Of what breeding?

Estif. A Gentlewoman Sir.

Perez. What business has she?
Is she a learned woman i'th' Mathematicks,
Can she tell fortunes?

Estif. More than I know Sir.

Perez. Or has she e're a letter from a kinswoman,
That must be delivered in my absence wife,
Or comes she from the Doctor to salute ye,
And learn your health? she looks not like a confessor.

Estif. What need all this, why are you troubled Sir?
What do you suspect, she cannot cuckold ye,
She is a woman Sir, a very woman.

Perez. Your very woman may do very well Sir
Toward the matter, for though she cannot perform it
In her own person, she may do it by Proxie,
Your rarest jugglers work still by conspiracy.

Estif. Cry ye mercy husband, you are jealous then,
And happily suspect me.

Perez. No indeed wife.

Estif. Me thinks you should not till you have more cause
And clearer too: I am sure you have heard say husband,
A woman forced will free her self through Iron,
A happy, calm, and good wife discontented
May be taught tricks.

Perez. No, no, I do but jest with ye.

Estif. To morrow friend I'll see you.

Clara. I shall leave ye

Till then, and pray all may goe sweetly with ye. [Exit

Estif. Why where's this girl, whose at the door? [Knock.

Perez. Who knocks there?

Is't for the King ye come, you knock so boisterously?
Look to the door.

Enter Maid.

Maid. My Lady, as I live Mistris, my Ladie's come,
She's at the door, I peept through, and I saw her,
And a stately company of Ladies with her.

Estif. This was a week too soon, but I must meet with her,
And set a new wheel going, and a subtle one,
Must blind this mighty Mars, or I am ruin'd.

Perez. What are they at door?

Estif. Such my Michael

As you may blest the day they enter'd there,

Such for our good.

Perez. 'Tis well.

Estif. Nay, 'twill be better

If you will let me but dispose the business,
And be a stranger to it, and not disturb me,
What have I now to do but to advance your fortune?

Perez. Doe, I dare trust thee, I am asham'd I am angry,
I find thee a wife young wife.

Estif. I'll wife your worship
Before I leave ye, pray ye walk by and say nothing,
Only salute them, and leave the rest to me Sir,
I was born to make ye a man.

Perez. The Rogue speaks heartily,
Her good will colours in her cheeks, I am born to love her;
I must be gentler to these tender natures,
A Souldiers rude harsh words besit not Ladies,
Nor must we talk to them as we talk to
Our Officers, I'll give her way, for 'tis for me she Works now, I am husband, heir, and all she has.

Enter Margarita, Estifania, Leon, Altea, and Ladies.

Who are these, what flanting things, a woman
Of rare presence! excellent fair, this is too big
For a bawdy house, too open seated too.

Estif. My Husband, Lady.

Marg. You have gain'd a proper man.

Perez. What e're I am, I am your servant Lady. [Kisses.

Estif. Sir, be rul'd now,
And I shall make ye rich, this is my cousin,
That Gentleman dotes on her, even to death, see how he ob-Perez. She is a goodly woman. (serves her.

Estif. She is a mirrour,
But she is poor, she were for a Princes side else,
This house she has brought him too as to her own,
And presuming upon me, and upon my courtesie.
Conceive me short, he knows not but she is wealthy,
Or if he did know otherwise, 'twere all one,
He is so far gone.

Perez. Forward, she has a rare face.

Estif. This we must carry with discretion Husband,
And yield unto her for four daies.

Perez. Yield our house up, our goods and wealth?

Estif. All this is but in seeming,
To milk the lover on, do you see this writing,
200^l a year when they are married
Has she sealed to for our good; the time's unfit now,
I'll shew it you to morrow.

Perez. All the house?

Estif. All, all, and we'll remove too, to confirm him,
They'll into th' country suddenly again
After they are matcht, and then she'll open to him.

Perez. The whole possession wife? look what you doe,
A part o'th' house.

Estif. No, no, they shall have all,
And take their pleasure too, 'tis for our 'vantage.
Why, what's four daies? had you a Sister Sir,
A Niece or Mistris that required this courtesie,
And should I make a scruple to do you good?

Perez. If easily it would come back.

Estif. I swear Sir,
As easily as it came on, is't not pity
To let such a Gentlewoman for a little help—
You give away no house.

Perez. Clear but that question.

Estif. I'll put the writings into your hand.

Perez. Well then.

Estif. And you shall keep them safe.

Perez. I am satisfied; wou'd I had the wench so too.

Estif. When she has married him,
So infinite his love is linkt unto her,
You, I, or any one that helps at this pinch
May have Heaven knows what.

Perez. I'll remove the goods straight,
And take some poor house by, 'tis but for four days.

Estif.

Estif. I have a poor old friend; there we'l be.
Perez. 'Tis well then.
Estif. Goe handfom off, and leave the house clear.
Perez. Well.
Estif. That little stuff we'l use shall follow after;
 And a boy to guide ye, peace and we are made both. (wench?)
Marg. Come, let's goe in, are all the rooms kept sweet
Estif. They are sweet and neat. [Exit Perez.
Marg. Why where's your Husband?
Estif. Gone Madam.
 When you come to your own he must give place Lady.
Marg. Well, send you joy, you would not let me know't,
 Yet I shall not forget ye.
Estif. Thank your Ladyship. [Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Margarita, Altea, and Boy.

Altea. ARE you at ease now, is your heart at rest,
 Now you have got a shadow, an umbrella
 Tok eep the scorching worlds opinion
 From your fair credit.
Marg. I am at peace Altea,
 If he continue but the same he shews,
 And be a master of that ignorance
 He outwardly professes, I am happy,
 The pleasure I shall live in and the freedom
 Without the squint-eye of the law upon me,
 Or prating liberty of tongues, that envy.
Altea. You are a made woman.
Marg. But if he should prove now
 A crafty and dissembling kind of Husband,
 One read in knavery, and brought up in the art
 Of villany conceal'd.
Altea. My life, an innocent.
Marg. That's it I aim at,
 That's it I hope too, then I am sure I rule him,
 For innocents are like obedient Children
 Brought up under a hard Mother-in-law, a cruel,
 Who being not us'd to break-fasts and collations,
 When they have course bread offer'd 'em, are thankfull,
 And take it for a favour too. Are the rooms
 Made ready to entertain my friends? I long to dance now
 And to be wanton; let me have a song, is the great couch up
 The Duke of Medina sent?
Altea. 'Tis up and ready.
Marg. And day-beds in all chambers?
Altea. In all Lady,
 Your house is nothing now but various pleasures,
 The Gallants begin to gaze too.
Marg. Let 'em gaze on,
 I was brought up a Courtier, high and happy,
 And company is my delight, and courtship,
 And handfom servants at my will: where's my good husband,
 Where does he wait?
Altea. He knows his distance Madam,
 I warrant ye he is busie in the celler
 Amongst his fellow servants, or asleep,
 Till your command awake him.

Enter Leon.

Marg. 'Tis well Altea.
 It should be so, my ward I must preserve him.
 Who sent for him, how dare he come uncall'd for,
 His bonnet on too?
Altea. Sure he sees you not.
Marg. How scornfully he looks!
Leon. Are all the chambers
 Deckt and adorn'd thus for my Ladies pleasure?
 New hangings every hour for entertainment,
 And new plate bought, new Jewels to give lustre?

Ser. They are, and yet there must be more and richer,
 It is her will.
Leon. Hum, is it so? 'tis excellent,
 It is her will too, to have feasts and banquets,
 Revells and masques.
Ser. She ever lov'd 'em dearly,
 And we shall have the bravest house kept now Sir,
 I must not call ye master she has warn'd me,
 Nor must not put my hat off to ye.
Leon. 'Tis no fashion,
 What though I be her husband, I am your fellow,
 I may cut first.
Ser. That's as you shall deserve Sir.
Leon. And when I lye with her.
Ser. May be l'le light ye,
 On the same point you may doe me that service.

Enter 1 Lady.

1 Lady. Madam, the Duke Medina with some Captains
 Will come to dinner, and have sent rare wine,
 And their best services.
Marg. They shall be welcom,
 See all be ready in the noblest fashion,
 The house perfum'd, now I shall take my pleasure,
 And not my neighbour Justice maunder at me.
 Go, get your best cloths on, but till I call ye,
 Be sure you be not seen, dine with the Gentlewomen,
 And be have your self cleanly Sir, 'tis for my credit.

Enter 2 Lady.

2 Lady. Madam, the Lady Julia.
Leon. That's a bawd,
 A three pil'd bawd, bawd major to the army.
 2 Lady. Has brought her coach to wait upon your Ladiship,
 And to be inform'd if you will take the air this morning.
Leon. The neat air of her nunnery.
Marg. Tell her no, i'th' afternoon l'le call on her.
 2 Lady. I will Madam. [Exit.
Marg. Why are not you gone to prepare your self,
 May be you shall be sewer to the fire course,
 A portly presence, Altea he looks lean,
 'Tis a wash knave, he will not keep his flesh well.
Altea. A willing, Madam, one that needs no spurring.
Leon. Faith madam, in my little understanding,
 You had better entertain your honest neighbours,
 Your friends about ye, that may speak well of ye,
 And give a worthy mention of your bounty.
Marg. How now, what's this?
Leon. 'Tis only to perswade ye,
 Courtiers are but tickle things to deal withal,
 A kind of march-pane men that will not last Madam,
 An egge and pepper goes farther than their potions,
 And in a well built body, a poor parsnip
 Will play his prize above their strong potables.
Marg. The fellow's mad.
Leon. He that shall counsel Ladies,
 That have both liquorish and ambitious eyes,
 Is either mad, or drunk, let him speak Gospel.
Altea. He breaks out modestly.
Leon. Pray ye be not angry,
 My indiscretion has made bold to tell ye,
 What you'l find true.
Marg. Thou darest not talk.
Leon. Not much Madam,
 You have a tye upon your servants tongue,
 He dares not be so bold as reason bids him,
 'Twere fit there were a stronger on your temper.
 Ne're look so stern upon me, I am your Husband,
 But what are Husbands? read the new worlds wonders,
 Such Husbands as this monstrous world produces,
 And you will scarce find such deformities,
 They are shadows to conceal your venial vertues,
 Sails to your mills, that grind with all occasions,
 Balls that lye by you, to wash out your stains,

And

And bills nail'd up with horn before your stories,
To rent out last.

Marg. Do you hear him talk?

Leon. I have done Madam,

An ox once spoke, as learned men deliver,
Shortly I shall be such, then I'll speak wonders,
Till when I tye my self to my obedience. [Exit.]

Mar. First I'll unty my self, did you mark the Gentleman,
How boldly and how sawcily he talk'd,
And how unlike the lump I took him for,
The piece of ignorant dow, he stood up to me
And mated my commands, this was your providence,
Your wisdom, to elect this Gentleman,
Your excellent forecast in the man, your knowledge,
What think ye now?

Altea. I think him an Assé still,
This boldness some of your people have blown
Into him, this wisdom too with strong wine,
'Tis a Tyrant, and a Philosopher also, and finds
Out reasons.

Mar. I'll have my celler lockt, no school kept there,
Nor no discovery. I'll turn my drunkards,
Such as are understanding in their draughts,
And dispute learnedly the whyes and wherefores,
To grafs immediatly, I'll keep all fools,
Sober or drunk, still fools, that shall know nothing,
Nothing belongs to mankind, but obedience,
And such a hand I'll keep over this Husband,

Altea. He will fall again, my life he cries by this time,
Keep him from drink, he has a high constitution.

Enter Leon.

Leon. Shall I wear my new sute Madam?

Mar. No your old clothes,
And get you into the country presently,
And see my hawks well train'd, you shall have victuals,
Such as are fit for sawcy palats Sir,
And lodgings with the hindes, it is too good too.

Alt. Good Madam be not so rough, with repentance,
You see now he's come round again.

Mar. I see not what I expect to see. (Ship.)

Leon. You shall see Madam, if it shall please your Lady-

Altea. He's humbled,
Forgive good Lady,

Marg. Well go get you handsom,
And let me hear no more.

Leon. Have ye yet no feeling?
I'll pinch ye to the bones then my proud Lady. [Exit.]

Marg. See you preserve him thus upon my favour,
You know his temper, tye him to the grindstone,
The next rebellion I'll be rid of him,
I'll have no needy Rascals I tye to me,
Dispute my life: come in and see all handsom.

Altea. I hope to see you so too, I have wrought ill else.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Perez.

Per. Shall I never return to mine own house again?
We are lodg'd here in the miserablest dog-hole,
A Conjurers circle gives content above it,
A hawks mew is a princely palace to it,
We have a bed no bigger than a basket,
And there we lie like butter clapt together,
And sweat our selves to sawce immediatly,
The fumes are infinite inhabite here too;
And to that so thick, they cut like marmalet,
So various too, they'll pose a gold-finder,
Never return to mine own paradise?
Why wife I say, why Estifania.

Estifania [within.] I am going presently.

Perez. Make haste good Jewel,
I am like the people that live in the sweet Islands:
I dye, I dye, if I stay but one day more here,

My lungs are rotten with the damp that rise,
And I cough nothing now but stinks of all sorts,
The inhabitants we have are two starv'd rats,
For they are not able to maintain a cat here,
And those appear as fearfull as two Devils,
They have eat a map of the whole world up already,
And if we stay a night we are gone for company.
There's an old woman that's now grown to marble,
Dri'd in this brick hill, and she sits i'th' chimnie,
Which is but three tiles rais'd like a house of cards,
The true proportion of an old smok'd Sibyl,
There is a young thing too that nature meant
For a maid-servant, but 'tis now a monster,
She has a husk about her like a chefnut
With basiness, and living under the line here,
And these two make a hollow sound together,
Like frogs or winds between two doors that murmur:

Enter Estifania.

Mercy deliver me. O are you come wife,
Shall we be free again?

Estif. I am now going,
And you shall presently to your own house Sir,
The remembrance of this small vexation
Will be argument of mirth for ever:
By that time you have said your orisons,
And broke your fast, I shall be back and ready,
To usher you to your old content, your freedom.

Per. Break my neck rather, is there any thing here to eat
But one another, like a race of Cannibals?
A piece of butter'd wall you think is excellent,
Let's have our house again immediatly,
And pray ye take heed unto the furniture,
None be imbezil'd.

Estif. Not a pin I warrant ye.

Perez. And let 'em instantly depart.

Estif. They shall both,
There's reason in all courtesies, they must both,
For by this time I know she has acquainted him,
And has provided too, she sent me word Sir,
And will give over gratefully unto you.

Perez. I'll walk i'th' Church-yard,
The dead cannot offend more than these living,
An hour hence I'll expect ye.

Estif. I'll not fail Sir.

Perez. And do you hear, let's have a handsom dinner,
And see all things be decent as they have been,
And let me have a strong bath to restore me,
I stink like a stal-fish shambles, or an oyl-shop.

Estif. You shall have all, which some interpret nothing,
I'll send ye people for the trunks afore-hand,
And for the stuff.

Perez. Let 'em be known and honest,
And do my service to your niece.

Estif. I shall Sir,
But if I come not at my hour, come thither,
That they may give you thanks for your fair courtesy,
And pray ye be brave for my sake.

Perez. I observe ye.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Juan de Castro, Sancho, and Cacafo.

Sanc. Thou art very brave.

Caca. I have reason, I have mony.

Sanc. Is mony reason?

Caca. Yes and rime too Captain,
If ye have no mony y'are an Assé.

Sanc. I thank ye.

Caca. Ye have manners, ever thank him that has mony.

Sanc. Wilt thou lend me any?

Caca. Not a farthing Captain,
Captains are casual things.

Sanc. Why so are all men, thou shalt have my bond.

Caca. Nor bonds nor setters Captain,
My mony is mine, I make no doubt on't.

Juan. What dost thou do with it?

Cac. Put it to pious uses,

Buy Wine and Wenches, and undo young Coxcombs
That would undo me.

Juan. Are those Hospitals?

Cac. I first provide to fill my Hospitals
With Creatures of mine own, that I know wretched,
And then I build: those are more bound to pray for me:
Besides, I keep th' inheritance in my Name still.

Juan. A provident Charity; are you for the Wars, Sir?

Cac. I am not poor enough to be a Souldier,
Nor have I faith enough to ward a Bullet;
This is no lining for a trench, I take it.

Juan. Ye have said wisely.

Cac. Had you but my money,
You would swear it Colonel, I had rather drill at home
A hundred thousand Crowns, and with more honour,
Than exercise ten thousand Fools with nothing,
A wife Man safely feeds, Fools cut their fingers.

Sanch. A right State Usurer; why dost thou not marry,
And live a reverend Justice? (to be one?)

Cac. Is't not nobler to command a reverend Justice, than
And for a Wife, what need I marry, Captain,
When every courteous Fool that owes me money,
Owes me his Wife too, to appease my fury?

Juan. Wilt thou go to dinner with us?

Cac. I will go, and view the Pearl of Spain, the Orient
Fair One, the rich One too, and I will be respected,
I bear my Patent here, I will talk to her,
And when your Captain's Ships shall stand aloof,
And pick your Noses, I will pick the purse
Of her affection. (dina.)

Juan. The Duke dines there to day too, the Duke of Me-

Cac. Let the King dine there,
He owes me money, and so far's my Creature,
And certainly I may make bold with mine own, Captain?

Sanch. Thou wilt eat monstrously.

Cac. Like a true born Spaniard,
Eat as I were in England where the Beef grows,
And I will drink abundantly, and then
Talk ye as wantonly as Ovid did,
To stir the Intellectuals of the Ladies;
I learnt it of my Father's amorous Scrivener.

Juan. If we should play now, you must supply me.

Cac. You must pawn a Horse troop,
And then have at ye Colonel.

Sanch. Come, let's go:

This Rascal will make rare sport; how the Ladies
Will laugh at him?

Juan. If I light on him I'll make his Purse sweat too.

Cac. Will ye lead, Gentlemen? [Exeunt]

Enter Perez, an old Woman, and Maid.

Per. Nay, pray ye come out, and let me understand ye,
And tune your pipe a little higher, Lady;
I'll hold ye fast: rub, how came my Trunks open?
And my Goods gone, what Pick-lock Spirit?

Old Wom. Ha, what would ye have?

Per. My Goods again, how came my Trunks all open?

Old Wom. Are your Trunks open?

Per. Yes, and Cloaths gone,
And Chains, and Jewels: how she smells like hung Beef,
The Palsey, and Picklocks, fye, how she belches,
The Spirit of Garlick.

Old Wom. Where's your Gentlewoman?
The young fair Woman?

Per. What's that to my question?
She is my wife, and gone about my business.

Maid. Is she your Wife, Sir?

Per. Yes Sir, is that wonder?

Is the name of Wife unknown here?

Old Wom. Is she truly, truly your Wife?

Per. I think so, for I married her;
It was no Vision sure!

Maid. She has the Keys, Sir.

Per. I know she has, but who has all my goods, Spirit?

Old Wom. If you be married to that Gentlewoman,
You are a wretched man, she has twenty Husbands.

Maid. She tells you true.

Old Wom. And she has cozen'd all, Sir.

Per. The Devil she has! I had a fair house with her,
That stands hard by, and furnisht royally. (Gentleman.)

Old Wom. You are cozen'd too, 'tis none of hers, good Gen-

Maid. The Lady Margarita, she was her Servant,
And kept the house, but going from her, Sir,
For some lewd tricks she plaid.

Per. Plague o' the Devil,
Am I th' full Meridian of my Wisdom
Cheated by a stale Quean! what kind of Lady
Is that that owes the House?

Old Wom. A young sweet Lady:

Per. Of a low stature?

Old Wom. She is indeed but little, but she is wondrous fair.

Per. I feel I am cozen'd;
Now I am sensible I am undone,

This is the very Woman sure, that Cousin
She told me would entreat but for four days,
To make the house hers; I am entreated sweetly.

Maid. When she went out this morning, that I saw, Sir,
She had two Women at the door attending,
And there she gave 'em things, and loaded 'em,
But what they were—— I heard your Trunks to open,
If they be yours?

Per. They were mine while they were laden,
But now they have cast their Calves, they are not worth
Owning: was she her Mistrefs say you? (you saw)

Old Wom. Her own Mistrefs, her very Mistrefs, Sir, and all
About and in that house was hers.

Per. No Plate, no Jewels, nor no Hangings? (thing.)

Maid. Not a farthing, she is poor, Sir, a poor shifting

Per. No money?

Old Wom. Abominable poor, as poor as we are,
Money as rare to her unless she steal it,
But for one civil Gown her Lady gave her,
She may go bare, good Gentlewoman.

Per. I am mad now,
I think I am as poor as she, I am wide else,
One civil Sute I have left too, and that's all,
And if she steal that she must fley me for it;
Where does she use?

Old Wom. You may find truth as soon,
Alas, a thousand conceal'd corners, Sir, she lurks in.

And here she gets a fleece, and there another,
And lives in milks and sinoaks where none can find her.

Per. Is she a Whore too? (Sir, because)

Old Wom. Little better, Gentleman, I dare not say she is so
She is yours, Sir, these five years she has firkt
A pretty Living,
Until she came to serve; I fear he will knock my Brains out for lying.

Per. She has serv'd me faithfully,
A Whore and Thief? two excellent moral learnings
In one she-Saint, I hope to see her legend.
Have I been fear'd for my discoveries,
And courted by all Women to conceal 'em?
Have I so long studied the art of this Sex,
And read the warnings to young Gentlemen?
Have I profest to tame the Pride of Ladies,
And make 'em bear all tests, and am I trickt now?
Caught in mine own nooze? here's a royal left yet,
There's for your lodging and your meat for this Week.
A silk Worm lives at a more plentiful ordinary,
And sleeps in a sweeter Box: farewell great Grandmother,
If I do find you were an accessary,
'Tis but the cutting off too smoaky minutes,
I'll hang ye presently.

Old Wom. And I deserve it, I tell but truth.

Per. Not I, I am an Afs, Mother.

[Exeunt.

Enter the Duke of Medina, Juan de Castro, Alonzo, Sanchio, Cacasago. Attendants.

Duke. A goodly house.

Juan. And richly furnisht too, Sir.

Alonz. Hung wantonly, I like that preparation, It stirs the blood unto a hopeful Banquet, And intimates the Miltrefs free and jovial, I love a house where pleasure prepares welcome.

Duke. Now Cacasago, how like you this mansion? 'Twere a brave Pawn.

Caca. I shall be master of it, 'Twas built for my bulk, the rooms are wide and spacious, Airy and full of ease, and that I love well, I'll tell you when I taste the Wine, my Lord, And take the height of her Table with my Stomach, How my affections stand to the young Lady.

Enter Margarita, Altea, Ladies, and Servants.

Mar. All welcome to your Grace, and to these Souldiers, You honour my poor house with your fair presence, Those few slight pleasures that inhabit here, Sir, I do beseech your Grace command, they are yours, Your servant but preserves 'em to delight ye.

Duke. I thank ye Lady, I am bold to visit ye, Once more to bless mine eyes with your sweet Beauty, 'T has been a long night since you left the Court, For till I saw you now, no day broke to me.

Mar. Bring in the Dukes meat.

Sanch. She is most excellent.

Juan. Most admirable fair as e'r I look'd upon, I had rather command her than my Regiment,

Caca. I'll have a fling, 'tis but a thousand Duckets, Which I can cozen up again in ten days, And some few Jewels to justify my Knavery, Say, I should marry her, she'll get more money Than all my Ufury, put my Knavery to it, She appears the most infallible way of Purchase, I cou'd wish her a size or two stronger for the encounter, For I am like a Lion where I lay hold, But these Lambs will endure a plaguy load, And never bleat neither, that Sir, time has taught us, I am so vertuous now, I cannot speak to her, The arrant'st shamefac'd Afs, I broil away too.

Enter Leon.

Mar. Why, where's this dinner?

Leon. 'Tis not ready, Madam, Nor shall not be until I know the Guests too, Nor are they fairly welcome till I bid 'em.

Juan. Is not this my Alferes? he looks another thing; Are miracles afoot again?

Marg. Why, Sirrah, why Sirrah, you?

Leon. I hear you, saucy Woman, And as you are my Wife, command your absence, And know your duty, 'tis the Crown of modesty.

Duke. Your Wife?

Leon. Yes good my Lord, I am her Husband, And pray take notice that I claim that honour, And will maintain it.

Caca. If thou beest her Husband, I am determin'd thou shalt be my Cuckold, I'll be thy faithful friend.

Leon. Peace, dirt and dunghil, I will not lose my anger on a Rascal, Provoke me more, I'll beat thy blown body Till thou rebound'st again like a Tennis-Ball.

Alonz. This is miraculous.

Sanch. Is this the Fellow That had the patience to become a Fool, A flurtd Fool, and on a sudden break, As if he would shew a wonder to the World, Both in Bravery, and Fortune too?

I much admire the man, I am astonisht.

Mar. I'll be divorced immediately.

Leon. You shall not, You shall not have so much will to be wicked. I am more tender of your honour, Lady, And of your Age, you took me for a shadow; You took me to gloss over your discredit, To be your Fool, you had thought you had found a Coxcomb; I am innocent of any foul dishonour I mean to ye. Only I will be known to be your Lord now, And be a fair one too, or I will fall for't.

Mar. I do command ye from me, thou poor fellow, Thou cozen'd Fool.

Leon. Thou cozen'd Fool? 'tis not so, I will not be commanded: I am above ye: You may divorce me from your favour, Lady, But from your state you never shall, I'll hold that, And then maintain your wantonness, I'll wink at it.

Mar. Am I braved thus in mine own house?

Leon. 'Tis mine, Madam, You are deceiv'd, I am Lord of it, I rule it and all that's in't; You have nothing to do here, Madam; But as a Servant to sweep clean the Lodgings, And at my farther will to do me service, And so I'll keep it.

Mar. As you love me, give way.

Leon. It shall be better, I will give none, Madam, I stand upon the ground of mine own Honour, And will maintain it, you shall know me now To be an understanding feeling man, And sensible of what a Woman aims at, A young proud Woman that has Will to sail with, An itching Woman, that her blood provokes too, I cast my Cloud off, and appear my self, The master of this little piece of mischief, And I will put a Spell about your feet, Lady, They shall not wander but where I give way now.

Duke. Is this the Fellow that the People pointed at, For the meer sign of man, the walking Image? He speaks wondrous highly.

Leon. As a Husband ought, Sir, In his own house, and it becomes me well too, I think your Grace would grieve if you were put to it To have a Wife or Servant of your own, (For Wives are reckon'd in the rank of Servants,) Under your own roof to command ye.

Juan. Brave, a strange Conversion, thou shalt lead In chief now.

Duke. Is there no difference betwixt her and you, Sir?

Leon. Not now, Lord, my Fortune makes me even, And as I am an honest man, I am nobler.

Mar. Get me my Coach.

Leon. Let me see who dares get it Till I command, I'll make him draw your Coach too, And eat your Coach, (which will be hard diet) That executes your Will; or take your Coach, Lady, I give you liberty, and take your People Which I turn off, and take your Will abroad with ye, Take all these freely, but take me no more, And so farewell.

Duke. Nay, Sir, you shall not carry it So bravely off, you shall not wrong a Lady In a high huffing strain, and think to bear it, We stand not by as Bawds to your brave fury, To see a Lady weep.

Leon. They are tears of anger, I beseech ye note 'em, not Wrung from her rage, because her Will prevails not, She would swoond now if she could not cry, Else they were excellent, and I should grieve too, But falling thus, they show nor sweet nor orient. Put up my Lord, this is oppression, And calls the Sword of Justice to relieve me, The law to lend her hand, the King to right me,

All which shall understand how you provoke me,
In mine own house to brave me, is this princely?
Then to my Guard, and if I spare your Grace,
And do not make this place your Monument,
Too rich a Tomb for such a rude behaviour,
I have a Cause will kill a thousand of ye, mercy forsake me.

Juan. Hold, fair Sir, I beseech ye,
The Gentleman but pleads his own right nobly.

Leon. He that dares strike against the husbands freedom,
The Husbands Curse stick to him, a tam'd Cuckold,
His Wife be fair and young, but most dishonest,
Most impudent, and have no feeling of it,
No conscience to reclaim her from a Monster,
Let her lye by him like a flattering ruine,
And at one instant kill both Name and Honour,
Let him be lost, no eye to weep his end,
Nor find no earth that's base enough to bury him.
Now Sir, fall on, I am ready to oppose ye.

Du. I have better thought, I pray Sir use your Wife well.

Leon. Mine own humanity will teach me that, Sir,
And now you are all welcome, all, and we'll to dinner,
This is my Wedding-day.

Duke. I'll cross your joy yet.

Juan. I have seen a miracle, hold thine own, Souldier,
Sure they dare fight in fire that conquer Women.

Sanch. He's beaten all my loose thoughts out of me,
As if he had threst 'em out o' th' husk.

Enter Perez.

Per. 'Save ye, which is the Lady of the house?

Leon. That's she, Sir, that pretty Lady,
If you would speak with her.

Juan. Don Michael, Leon, another darer come.

Per. Pray do not know me, I am full of business,
When I have more time I'll be merry with ye.
It is the Woman: good Madam, tell me truly,
Had you a Maid call'd Estifania?

Marg. Yes truly, had I.

Per. Was she a Maid do you think?

Marg. I dare not swear for her,
For she had but a scant Fame.

Per. Was she your Kinswoman?

Marg. Not that I ever knew, now I look better
I think you married her, 'give you joy, Sir,
You may reclaim her, 'twas a wild young Girl.

Per. Give me a halter: is not this house mine, Madam?
Was not she owner of it, pray speak truly?

Marg. No, certainly, I am sure my money paid for it,
And I ne'r remember yet I gave it you, Sir.

Per. The Hangings and the Plate too?

Marg. All are mine, Sir,
And every thing you see about the building,
She only kept my house when I was absent,
And so ill kept it, I was weary of her.

Sanch. What a Devil ails he?

Juan. He's possess'd I'll assure you.

Per. Where is your Maid?

Marg. Do not you know that have her?
She is yours now, why should I look after her?
Since that first hour I came I never saw her.

Per. I saw her later, would the Devil had had her,
It is all true I find, a wild-fire take her. wife.

Juan. Is thy Wife with Child, Don Michael? thy excellent
Art thou a Man yet?

Alonz. When shall we come and visit thee? (chards,

Sanch. And eat some rare fruit? thou hast admirable Or-
You are so jealous now, pox o' your jealousy,
How scurvily you look!

Per. Prithee leave fooling,

I am in no humour now to fool and prattle,
Did she ne'r play the wag with you? (keep her,

Marg. Yes many times, so often that I was asham'd to
But I forgave her, Sir, in hope she would mend still,
And had not you o' th' instant married her,

I had put her off.

Per. I thank ye, I am blest still,
Which way so e'r I turn I am a made man,
Miserably gull'd beyond recovery.

Juan. You'll stay and dine?

Per. Certain I cannot, Captain,
Hark in thine ear, I am the arrantst Puppy,
The miserablest Ass, but I must leave ye,
I am in haste, in haste, blefs you, good Madam,
And you prove as good as my Wife. [Exit.

Leon. Will you come near, Sir, will your Grace but honour
And taste our dinner? you are nobly welcome, (me,
All anger's past I hope, and I shall serve ye.

Juan. Thou art the stock of men, and I admire thee. [Ex.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Perez.

Per. I'll go to a Conjurer but I'll find this Pol-cat,
This pilfering Whore: a plague of Vails, I cry,
And covers for the impudence of Women,
Their sanctity in show will deceive Devils,
It is my evil Angel, let me blefs me.

Enter Estifania with a Casket.

Estif. 'Tis he, I am caught, I must stand to it stoutly,
And show no shake of fear, I see he is angry,
Vext at the uttermost.

Per. My worthy Wife,
I have been looking of your modesty
All the town over.

Estif. My most noble Husband,
I am glad I have found ye, for in truth I am weary,
VVeary and lame with looking out your Lordship.

Per. I have been in Bawdy Houses.

Estif. I believe you, and very lately too.

Per. 'Pray you pardon me,
To seek your Ladyship, I have been in Cellars,
In private Cellars, where the thirsty Bawds
Hear your Confessions; I have been at Plays,
To look you out amongst the youthful Actors,
At Puppet Shews, you are Mistress of the motions;
At Gossippings I hearkned after you,
But amongst those Confusions of lewd Tongues
There's no distinguishing beyond a Babel.
I was amongst the Nuns because you sing well,
But they say yours are Bawdy Songs, they mourn for ye,
And last I went to Church to seek you out,
'Tis so long since you were there, they have forgot you.

Estif. You have had a pretty progress, I'll tell mine now:
To look you out, I went to twenty Taverns.

Per. And are you sober?

Estif. Yes, I reel not yet, Sir,
VWhere I saw twenty drunk, most of 'em Souldiers;
There I had great hope to find you disguis'd too.
From hence to th' dicing-house, there I found dlesticks,
Quarrels needless, and senceless, Swords and Pots, and Can-
Tables and Stools, and all in one confusion,
And no man knew his Friend. I left this Chaos,
And to the Chirurgions went, he will'd me stay,
For says he learnedly, if he be tipled,
Twenty to one he whores, and then I hear of him,
If he be mad, he quarrels, then he comes too.
I sought ye where no safe thing would have ventur'd,
Amongst diseases, base and vile, vile Women,
For I remembred your old Roman axiom,
The more the danger, still the more the Honour.
Last, to your Confessor I came, who told me,
You were too proud to pray, and here I have found ye.
Per. She bears up bravely, and the Rogue is witty,
But I shall dash it instantly to nothing.

Cac. We are not wife to talk thus,
Carry her the gold, I'le look her out a Jewel,
Shall sparkle like her eyes, and thee another,
Come prethee come; I long to serve thy Lady,
Long monstrously, now valor I shall meet ye,
You that dare Dukes.

Estif. Green goose you are now in sippets. [Exit.]

Enter the Duke, Sanchio, Juan, Alonzo.

Duke. He shall not have his will, I shall prevent him,
I have a toy here that will turn the tide,
And suddenly, and strangely, hear Don Juan,
Do you present it to him.

Juan. I am commanded. [Exit.]

Duke. A fellow founded out of Charity,
And moulded to the height condemn his maker,
Curb the free hand that fram'd him? This must not be.

Sanc. That such an oyster shell should hold a pearl;
And of so rare a price in prison,
Was she made to be the matter of her own undoing,
To let a slovenly unweildy fellow,
Unruly and self will'd, dispose her beauties?
We suffer all Sir in this sad Eclipse,
She should shine where she might show like her self,
An absolute sweetness, to comfort those admire her,
And shed her beams upon her friends.

We are gull'd all,
And all the world will grumble at your patience,
If she be ravish't thus.

Duke. Ne'r fear it Sanchio,
We'll have her free again, and move at Court
In her clear orb: but one sweet handsomeness,
To bless this part of Spain, and have that slubber'd?

Alon. 'Tis every good mans cause, and we must stir in it.

Duke. I'le warrant he shall be glad to please us,
And glad to share too, we shall hear anon
A new song from him, let's attend a little. [Exit.]

Enter Leon, and Juan, with a commission.

Leon. Coronel, I am bound to you for this nobleness,
I should have been your officer, 'tis true Sir,
And a proud man I should have been to have serv'd you,
'T has pleas'd the King out of his boundless favours,
To make me your companion, this commission
Gives me a troop of horse.

Juan. I do rejoice at it,
And am a glad man we shall gain your company,
I am sure the King knows you are newly married,
And out of that respect gives you more time Sir.

Leon. Within four daies I am gone, so he commands me,
And 'tis not mannerly for me to argue it,
The time grows shorter still, are your goods ready?

Juan. They are aboard.

Leon. Who waits there?

Enter Servant.

Servant. Sir.

Le. Do you hear ho, go carry this unto your Mistris Sir,
And let her see how much the King has honour'd me,
Bid her be lusty, she must make a Souldier. [Exit.]

Enter Lorenzo.

Lorenzo, Sir,
Go take down all the hangings,
And pack up all my cloths, my plate and Jewels,
And all the furniture that's portable,
Sir when we lye in garrison, 'tis necessary
We keep a handsom port, for the Kings honour;
And do you hear, let all your Ladies wardrobe
Be safely plac'd in trunks, they must along too.

Lor. Whither must they goe Sir?

Leon. To the wars, Lorenzo,
And you and all, I will not leave a turn-spit,
That has one dram of spleen against a Dutchman.

Lor. Why then S' Jacques hey, you have made us all Sir,
And if we leave ye——does my Lady goe too?

Leon. The stuff must goe to morrow towards the sea Sir,
All, all must goe.

Lor. Why Pedro, Vasco, Dego,
Come help me, come come boys, soldadoes, comrades,
We'll sley these beer-bellied rogues, come away quickly.

Juan. H'as taken a brave way to save his honour, [Exit.]
And cross the Duke, now I shall love him dearly,
By the life of credit thou art a noble Gentleman.

Enter Margarita, led by two Ladies.

Leon. Why how now wife, what, sick at my preferment?
This is not kindly done.

Marg. No sooner love ye,
Love ye intirely Sir, brought to consider
The goodness of your mind and mine own duty,
But lose you instantly, be divorc'd from ye?
This is a cruelty, I'le to the King
And tell him 'tis unjust to part two souls,
Two minds so nearly mixt.

Leon. By no means sweet heart.

Marg. If he were married but four daies as I am,

Leon. He would hang himself the fifth, or fly his Country.

Marg. He would make it treason for that tongue that
But talk of war, or any thing to vex him; (durst
You shall not goe.

Leon. Indeed I must sweet wife;
What shall I lose the King for a few kisses?
We'll have enough.

Marg. I'le to the Duke my cousin, he shall to th' King.

Leon. He did me this great office,
I thank his grace for't, should I pray him now,
To undoe't again? fye 'twere a base discredit.

Marg. Would I were able Sir to bear you company,
How willing should I be then, and how merry!
I will not live alone.

Leon. Be in peace, you shall not.

[knock within.]
Mar. What knocking's this? oh Heaven my head, why
I thinks the war's begun i'th' house already. (rascals)

Leon. The preparation is, they are taking down,
And packing up the hangings, plate and Jewels;
And all those furnitures that shall besit me
When I lye in garrison.

Enter Coachman.

Coachm. Must the Coach goe too Sir?

Leon. How will your Lady pass toth' sea else easily?
We shall find shipping for't there to transport it.

Marg. I goe? alas!

Leon. I'le have a main care of ye,
I know ye are sickly, he shall drive the easier;
And all accommodation shall attend ye.

Marg. Would I were able,

Leon. Come I warrant ye,
Am not I with ye sweet? are her cloaths packt up,
And all her linnen? give your maids direction,
You know my time's but short, and I am commanded.

Marg. Let me have a nurse,
And all such necessary people with me,
And an easie bark.

Leon. It shall not trot I warrant ye,
Curvet it may sometimes.

Marg. I am with child Sir.

Leon. At four days warning? this is something speedy,
Do you conceive as our jennets do with a west winde?
My heir will be an arrant fleet one Lady,
I'le swear you were a maid when I first lay with ye.

Mar. Pray do not swear, I thought I was a maid too,
But we may both be cozen'd in that point Sir.

Leon. In such a strait point sure I could not err Madam.

Juan. This is another tenderness to try him,
Fetch her up now.

Mar. You must provide a cradle, and what a troubles that?

Leon.

Leon. The sea shall rock it,
'Tis the best nurse; 'twill roar and rock together,
A swinging storm will sing you such a lullaby.

Marg. Faith let me stay, I shall but shame ye Sir.

Leon. And you were a thousand shames you shall along
At home I am sure you'll prove a million, (with me,
Every man carries the bundle of his sins
Upon his own back, you are mine, I'll sweat for ye.

Enter Duke, Alonzo, Sanchio.

Duke. What Sir, preparing for your noble journey?
'Tis well, and full of care.
I saw your mind was wedded to the war,
And knew you would prove some good man for your coun-
Therefore fair Cousin with your gentle pardon, (try,
I got this place: what, mourn at his advancement?
You are to blame, he will come again sweet cousin,
Mean time like sad Penelope and sage,
Amongst your maids at home, and hufwifely.

Leon. No Sir, I dare not leave her to that solitariness,
She is young, and grief or ill news from those quarters
May daily cross her, she shall goe along Sir.

Duke. By no means Captain.

Leon. By all means an't please ye.

Duke. What take a young and tender bodied Lady,
And expose her to those dangers, and those tumults,
A sickly Lady too?

Leon. 'Twill make her well Sir,
There's no such friend to health as wholsom travel.

Sanch. Away it must not be.

Alon. It ought not Sir,
Go hurry her? it is not humane, Captain.

Duke. I cannot blame her tears, fright her with tempests,
With thunder of the war.

I dare swear if she were able. Leon. She is most able.

And pray ye swear not, she must goe, there's no remedy,
Nor greatness, nor the trick you had to part us,
Which I smell too rank, too open, too evident

(And I must tell you Sir, 'tis most unnoble)
Shall hinder me: had she but ten hours life,
Nay less, but two hours, I would have her with me,
I would not leave her fame to so much ruine,
To such a desolation and discredit
As her weakness and your hot will wou'd work her to.

Enter Perez.

What Masque is this now?
More tropes and figures, to abuse my sufferance,
What cousin's this?

Juan. Michael van owle, how dost thou?
In what dark barn or tod of aged Ivy
Hast thou lyen hid?

Perez. Things must both ebbe and flow, Coronel,
And people must conceal, and shine again.
You are welcom hither as your friend may say, Gentleman,
A pretty house ye see handsomely seated,
Sweet and convenient walks, the waters crystal.

Alon. He's certain mad.

Juan. As mad as a French Tayler,
That has nothing in's head but ends of fustians.

Perez. I see you are packing now my gentle cousin,
And my wife told me I should find it so,
'Tis true I do, you were merry when I was last here,
But 'twas your will to try my patience Madam.
I am sorry that my swift occasions
Can let you take your pleasure here no longer,
Yet I would have you think my honour'd cousin,
This house and all I have are all your servants.

Leon. What house, what pleasure Sir, what do you mean?

Perez. You hold the jest so stiff, 'twill prove discourteous,
This house I mean, the pleasures of this place.

Leon. And what of them?

Perez. They are mine Sir, and you know it,
My wifes I mean, and so confer'd upon me,

The hangings Sir I must entreat, your servants,
That are so busie in their offices,
Again to minister to their right uses,
I shall take view o'th' plate anon, and furnitures
That are of under place; you are merry still cousin,
And of a pleasant constitution,
Men of great fortunes make their mirths at placitum.

Leon. Prethee good stubborn wife, tell me directly,
Good evil wife leave fooling and tell me honestly,
Is this my kinsman?

Marg. I can tell ye nothing.

Leon. I have many kinsmen, but so mad a one,
And so phantastick—all the house?

Perez. All mine,
And all within it. I will not bate ye an ace on't.
Can you not receive a noble courtesie,
And quietly and handsomely as ye ought Couz,
But you must ride o'th' top on't?

Leon. Canst thou fight?

Per. I'll tell ye presently, I could have done Sir.

Leon. For ye must law and claw before ye get it.

Juan. Away, no quarrels.

Leon. Now I am more temperate,
I'll have it prov'd if you were never yet in Bedlam,
Never in love, for that's a lunacy,
No great state left ye that you never lookt for,
Nor cannot manage, that's a rank distemper;
That you were christen'd, and who answer'd for ye,
And then I yield.

Perez. H'as half perswaded me I was bred i'th' moon,
I have ne'r a bush at my breech, are not we both mad,
And is not this a phantastick house we are in,
And all a dream we do? will ye walk out Sir,
And if I do not beat thee presently
Into a sound belief, as sense can give thee,
Brick me into that wall there for a chimney piece,
And say I was one o'th' Cesars, done by a seal-cutter.

Leon. I'll talk no more, come we'll away immediatly.

Marg. Why then the house is his, and all that's in it,
I'll give away my skin but I'll undoe ye,
I gave it to his wife, you must restore Sir,
And make a new provision. (cousin,

Perez. Am I mad now or am I christen'd, you my pagan
My mighty Mahound kinsman, what quirk now?
You shall be welcom all, I hope to see Sir
Your Grace here, and my couz, we are all Souldiers,
And must do naturally for one another.

Duke. Are ye blank at this? then I must tell ye Sir,
Ye have no command, now ye may goe at pleasure
And ride your ass troop, 'twas a trick I us'd
To try your jealousy upon entreatie,
And saving of your wife.

Leon. All this not moves me,
Nor stirs my gall, nor alters my affections,
You have more furniture, more houses Lady,
And rich ones too, I will make bold with those,
And you have Land i'th' Indies as I take it,
Thither we'll goe, and view a while those climats,
Visit your Factors there, that may betray ye,
'Tis done, we must goe.

Marg. Now thou art a brave Gentleman,
And by this sacred light I love thee dearly.
The house is none of yours, I did but jest Sir,
Nor you are no couz of mine, I beseech ye vanish,
I tell you plain, you have no more right than he
Has, that senseless thing, your wife has once more fool'd ye:
Goe ye and consider.

Leon. Good morrow my sweet cousin, I should be glad Sir.

Perez. By this hand she dies for't,

Or any man that speaks for her.

[Exit Perez.]

Juan. These are fine toys.

Marg. Let me request you stay but one poor month,
You shall have a Commission and I'll goe too,
Give me but will so far.

Leon.

Leon. Well I will try ye,
Good morrow to your Grace, we have private businefs.
Duke. If I misf thee again, I am an arrant bungler.
Funn. Thou shalt have my command, and I'll march under Nay be thy boy before thou shalt be baffled, (thee,
Thou art so brave a fellow.
Alon. I have seen visions. [Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Leon, with a letter, and Margarita.

Leon. Come hither wife, do you know this hand ?
Marg. I do Sir,
'Tis Estifania, that was once my woman.

Leon. She writes to me here, that one Cacafogo
An ufuring Jewellers fon (I know the Rascal)
Is mortally fain in love with ye.

Marg. Is a monster, deliver me from mountains.

Leon. Do you goe a birding for all sorts of people?
And this evening will come to ye and shew ye Jewels,
And offers any thing to get accefs to ye,
If I can make or sport or profit on him,
(For he is fit for both) she bids me use him,
And so I will, be you conformable, and follow but my will.

Marg. I shall not fail, Sir.

Leon. Will the Duke come again do you think ?

Marg. No sure Sir,
H'as now no policie to bring him hither.

Leon. Nor bring you to him, if my wit hold fair wife :
Let's in to dinner. [Exeunt.

Enter Perez.

Perez. Had I but lungs enough to bawl sufficiently,
That all the queans in Christendom might hear me,
That men might run away from contagion,
I had my wif; would it were most high treason,
Most infinite high, for any man to marry,
I mean for any man that would live handsomely,
And like a Gentleman, in his wits and credit.
What torments shall I put her to, Phalaris bull now?
Pox they love bulling too well, though they smoak for't.
Cut her apieces ? every piece will live still,
And every morfel of her will do mischief ;
They have so many lives, there's no hanging of 'em,
They are too light to drown, they are cork and feathers ;
To burn too cold, they live like Salamanders ;
Under huge heaps of stones to bury her,
And so deprefs her as they did the Giants ;
She will move under more than built old Babel,
I must destroy her.

Enter Cacafogo, with a Casket.

Caca. Be cozen'd by a thing of clouts, a she moth,
That every silkman's shop breeds ; to be cheated,
And of a thousand duckets by a whim whom ?

Perez. Who's that is cheated, speak again thou vision,
But art thou cheated ? minister some comfort :
Tell me directly art thou cheated bravely ?
Come, prethee come, art thou so pure a coxcomb
To be undone ? do not dissemble with me,
Tell me I conjure thee.

Caca. Then keep thy circle,
For I am a spirit wild that flies about thee,
And who e're thou art, if thou be'st humane,
I'll let thee plainly know, I am cheated damnably.

Perez. Ha, ha, ha.

Caca. Dost thou laugh ? damnably, I say most damnably.

Perez. By whom, good spirit speak, speak ha, ha, ha.

Caca. I will utter, laugh till thy lungs crack, by a rascal
A lewd, abominable, and plain woman. (woman,
Dost thou laugh still ?

Perez. I must laugh, prethee pardon me,
I shall laugh terribly.

Caca. I shall be angry, terrible angry, I have cause.

Perez. That's it, and 'tis no reason but thou shouldst be Angry at heart, yet I must laugh still at thee. (angry ;
By a woman cheated ? art' sure it was a woman ?

Caca. I shall break thy head, my valour itches at thee.

Perez. It is no matter, by a woman cozen'd,
A real woman ?

Caca. A real Devil,
Plague of her Jewels and her copper chains,
How rank they smell.

Perez. Sweet cozen'd Sir let me see them,
I have been cheated too, I would have you note that ;
And lewdly cheated, by a woman also,
A scurvie woman, I am undone sweet Sir,
Therefore I must have leave to haugh.

Caca. Pray ye take it,
You are the merriest undone man in Europe.
What need we fiddles, bawdy fongs and sack,
When our own miseries can make us merry ?

Perez. Ha, ha, ha.
I have seen these Jewels, what a notable penniworth
Have you had next your heart ? you will not take Sir
Some twenty Duckets ?

Caca. Thou art deceiv'd, I will take.

Perez. To clear your bargain now.

Caca. I'll take some ten, some any thing, some half ten,
Half a Ducket.

Perez. An excellent lapidary fet these stones sure,
Do you mark their waters ?

Caca. Quick sand choak their waters,
And hers that bought 'em too, but I shall find her.

Perez. And so shall I, I hope, but do not hurt her,
You cannot find in all this Kingdom,
(If you had need of cozening, as you may have,
For such gross natures will desire it often,
'Tis at some time too a fine variety,)
A woman that can cozen ye so neatly,
She has taken half mine anger off with this trick. [Exit.

Caca. If I were valiant now, I would kill this fellow,
I have many enough lies by me at a pinch
To pay for twenty Rascals lives that vex me,
I'll to this Lady, there I shall be satisfied. [Exit.

Enter Leon, and Margarita.

Leon. Come, we'll away unto your country house,
And there we'll learn to live contently,
This place is full of charge, and full of hurry,
No part of sweetness dwells about these cities.

Marg. Whither you will, I wait upon your pleasure ;
Live in a hollow tree Sir, I'll live with ye.

Leon. I, now you strike a harmony, a true one,
When your obedience waits upon your Husband,
And your sick will aims at the care of honour,
Why now I dote upon ye, love ye dearly,
And my rough nature falls like roaring streams,
Clearly and sweetly into your embraces.

O what a Jewel is a woman excellent,
A wife, a vertuous and a noble woman !
When we meet such, we bear our stamps on both sides,
And through the world we hold our currant virtues,
Alone we are single medals, only faces,
And wear our fortunes out in usefess shadows,
Command you now, and ease me of that trouble,
I'll be as humble to you as a servant,
Bid whom you please, invite your noble friends,
They shall be welcome all, visit acquaintance,
Goe at your pleasure, now experience
Has link't you fast unto the chain of goodness :
What noise is this, what dismal cry ?

Marg. 'Tis loud too.
Sure there's some mischief done i'th' street, look out there.

Leon. Look out and help.

Clashing
swords. A cry within, down with their swords.

Enter

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Oh Sir the Duke Medina.

Leon. What of the Duke Medina?

Serv. Oh sweet Gentleman, is almost slain.

Marg. Away away and help him, all the house help.

[Exit Servant.]

Leon. How slain? why Margarita,
Why wife, sure some new device they have a foot again,
Some trick upon my credit, I shall meet it,
I had rather guide a ship Imperial
Alone, and in a storm, than rule one woman.

Enter Duke, Margarita, Sanchio, Alonzo, Servant.

Marg. How came ye hurt Sir?

Duke. I fell out with my friend the noble Coronel,
My cause was naught, for 'twas about your honour:
And he that wrongs the Innocent ne'r prospers,
And he has left me thus for charity,
Lend me a bed to ease my tortur'd body,
That e're I perish I may show my penitence,
I fear I am slain.

Leon. Help Gentlemen to carry him,
There shall be nothing in this house my Lord,
But as your own.

Duke. I thank ye noble Sir,

Leon. To bed with him, and wife give your attendance.

Enter Juan.

Juan. Doctors and Surgions.

Duke. Do not disquiet me,
But let me take my leave in peace.

[Ex. Duke, Sanchio, Alon. Marg. Servant.]

Leon. Afore me
'Tis rarely counterfeited.

Juan. True, it is so Sir,
And take you heed, this last blow do not spoil ye,
He is not hurt, only we made a scuffle,
As though we purpos'd anger; that same scratch
On's hand he took, to colour all and draw compassion,
That he might get into your house more cunningly.
I must not stay, stand now, and y'are a brave fellow.

Leon. I thank ye noble Coronel, and I honour ye. [Exit
Never be quiet? (Juan.)

Enter Margarita.

Marg. He's most desperate ill Sir,
I do not think these ten months will recover him.

Leon. Does he hire my house to play the fool in,
Or does it stand on Fairy ground, we are haunted,
Are all men and their wives troubled with dreams thus?

Marg. What ail you Sir?

Leon. Nay what ail you sweet wife,
To put these daily pastimes on my patience?
What dost thou see in me, that I should suffer thus,
Have not I done my part like a true Husband,
And paid some desperate debts you never look'd for?

Marg. You have done handsomely I must confess Sir.

Leon. Have I not kept thee waking like a hawk?
And watcht thee with delights to satisfy thee?
The very tithes of which had won a Widow.

Marg. Alas I pity ye.

Leon. Thou wilt make me angry,
Thou never saw'st me mad yet.

Marg. You are always,
You carry a kind of bedlam still about ye.

Leon. If thou pursuest me further I run stark mad,
If you have more hurt Dukes or Gentlemen,
To lye here on your cure, I shall be desperate,
I know the trick, and you shall feel I know it,
Are ye so hot that no hedge can contain ye?
P'le have thee let blood in all the veins about thee,
P'le have thy thoughts found too, and have them open'd,
Thy spirits purg'd, for those are they that fire ye,

Thy maid shall be thy Mistris, thou the maid,
And all those servile labours that she reach at,
And goe through cheerfully, or else sleep empty,
That maid shall lye by me to teach you duty,
You in a pallet by to humble ye,
And grieve for what you lose.

Marg. I have lost my self Sir,
And all that was my base self, disobedience, [kneels
My wantonnefs, my stubbornness I have lost too,
And now by that pure faith good wives are crown'd with,
By your own noblenefs.

Enter Altea.

Leon. I take ye up, and wear ye next my heart,
See you be worth it. Now what with you?

Altea. I come to tell my Lady,
There is a fulsome fellow would fain speak with her.

Leon. 'Tis Cacafogo, goe and entertain him,
And draw him on with hopes.

Marg. I shall observe ye.

Leon. I have a rare design upon that Gentleman,
And you must work too.

Altea. I shall Sir most willingly.

Leon. Away then both, and keep him close in some place
From the Dukes sight, and keep the Duke in too,
Make 'em believe both, I'll find time to cure 'em. [Exeunt.]

Enter Perez, and Estifania, with a Pistol, and a Dagge.

Perez. Why how darst thou meet me again thou rebel,
And knowst how thou hast used me thrice, thou rascal?
Were there not waies enough to fly my vengeance,
No holes nor vaults to hide thee from my fury,
But thou must meet me face to face to kill thee?
I would not seek thee to destroy thee willingly,
But now thou comest to invite me,
And comest upon me,
How like a sheep-biting Rogue taken i'th' manner,
And ready for the halter dost thou look now?
Thou hast a hanging look thou scurvy thing, hast ne'r a knife
Nor ever a string to lead thee to Elysium?
Be there no pitifull 'Pothecaries in this town,
That have compassion upon wretched women,
And dare administer a dram of rats-bane,
But thou must fall to me?

Estif. I know you have mercy.

Per. If I had tuns of mercy thou deserv'st none,
What new trick is now a foot, and what new houses
Have you i'th' air, what orchards in apparition,
What canst thou say for thy life?

Estif. Little or nothing,
I know you'll kill me, and I know 'tis useles
To beg for mercy, pray let me draw my book out,
And pray a little.

Perez. Do, a very little,
For I have farther business than thy killing,
I have mony yet to borrow, speak when you are ready.

Estif. Now now Sir, now, [Shows a Pistol.
Come on, do you start off from me,
Do you swear great Captain, have you seen a spirit?

Perez. Do you wear guns?

Estif. I am a Souldiers wife Sir,
And by that priviledge I may be arm'd,
Now what's the news, and let's discourse more friendly,
And talk of our affairs in peace.

Perez. Let me see,
Prethee let me see thy gun, 'tis a very pretty one.

Estif. No no Sir, you shall feel.

Perez. Hold ye villain, what thine own Husband?

Estif. Let mine own Husband then
Be in's own wits, there, there's a thousand duckets,
Who must provide for you, and yet you'll kill me.

Per. I will not hurt thee for ten thousand millious. (cm,

Estif. When will you redeem your Jewels, I have pawn'd
You

You see for what, we must keep touch.

Perez. I'll kiss thee,
And get as many more, I'll make thee famous,
Had we the house now!

Estif. Come along with me,
If that be vanish't there be more to hire Sir.

Perez. I see I am an ass when thou art near me.

Enter Leon, Margarita, and Altea, with a Taper.

Leon. Is the fool come?

Altea. Yes and i'th' celler fast,
And there he stales his good hour till I call him,
He will make dainty musick among the sack-butts,
I have put him just, Sir, under the Dukes chamber.

Leon. It is the better.

Altea. Has given me royally,
And to my Lady a whole load of portigues.

Leon. Better and better still, go Margarita,
Now play your prize, you say you dare be honest,
I'll put ye to your best.

Marg. Secure your self Sir, give me the candle,
Pass away in silence. [Ex. Leon and Altea.

She knocks.

Duke. Who's there, oh oh.

Marg. My Lord.

Duke within. Have ye brought me comfort?

Marg. I have my Lord,
Come forth 'tis I, come gently out I'll help ye,

Enter Duke, in a gown.

Come softly too, how do you?

Duke. Are there none here?

Let me look round; we cannot be too wary, noise below.
Oh let me bless this hour, are you alone sweet friend?

Marg. Alone to comfort you. Cacafogo makes

Duke. What's that you tumble? a noise below.

I have heard a noise this half hour under me,
A fearful noise.

Marg. The fat thing's mad i'th' celler,
And stumbles from one hogs-head to another,
Two cups more, and he ne'r shall find the way out.
What do you fear? come, sit down by me chearfully,
My Husband's safe, how do your wounds?

Duke. I have none Lady, noise below.
My wounds I counterfeit cunningly,
And feign'd the quarrel too, to enjoy you sweet,
Let's lose no time, heark the same noise again.

Marg. What noise, why look ye pale? I hear no stirring,
This goblin in the vault will be so tipl'd.
You are not well I know by your flying fancy,
Your body's ill at ease, your wounds.

Duke. I have none, I am as lusty and as full of health,
High in my blood.

Marg. Weak in your blood you would say,
How wretched is my case, willing to please ye,
And find you so disable?

Duke. Believe me Lady.

Marg. I know you will venture all you have to satisfy me,
Your life I know, but is it fit I spoil ye,
Is it my love do you think?

Cacaf. below. Here's to the Duke.

Duke. It nam'd me certainly,
I heard it plainly found.

Marg. You are hurt mortally,
And sifter for your prayers Sir than pleasure,
What starts you make? I would not kiss you wantonly,
For the worlds wealth; have I secur'd my Husband,
And put all doubts aside to be deluded?

Cacaf. below. I come, I come.

Duke. Heaven blest me.

Marg. And blest us both, for sure this is the Devil,
I plainly heard it now, he will come to fetch ye,
A very spirit, for he spoke under ground,
And spoke to you just as you would have snatcht me,

You are a wicked man, and sure this haunts ye,
Would you were out o'th' house.

Duke. I would I were,
O'that condition I had leapt a window.

Marg. And that's the least leap if you mean to scape Sir,
Why what a frantick man were you to come here,
What a weak man to counterfeit deep wounds,
To wound another deeper?

Duke. Are you honest then?

Marg. Yes then and now, and ever, and excellent honest,
And exercise this pastime but to shew ye,
Great men are fools sometimes as well as wretches.
Would you were well hurt, with any hope of life,
Cut to the brains, or run clean through the body,
To get out quietly as you got in Sir,
I wish it like a friend that loves ye dearly,
For if my Husband take ye, and take ye thus a counterfeit,
One that would clip his credit out of his honour,
He must kill ye presently,
There is no mercy nor an hour of pity,
And for me to intreat in such an agony,
Would shew me little better than one guilty,
Have you any mind to a Lady now?

Duke. Would I were off fair,
If ever Lady caught me in a trap more.

Marg. If you be well and lusty, fy fy shake not,
You say you love me, come, come bravely now,
Despise all danger, I am ready for ye.

Duke. She mocks my misery, thou cruel Lady.

Marg. Thou cruel Lord, wouldst thou betray my honesty,
Betray it in mine own house, wrong my Husband,
Like a night thief, thou darst not name by day-light?

Duke. I am most miserable.

Marg. You are indeed,
And like a foolish thing you have made your self so,
Could not your own discretion tell ye Sir,
When I was married I was none of yours?
Your eyes were then commanded to look off me,
And I now stand in a circle and secure,
Your spells nor power can never reach my body,
Mark me but this, and then Sir be most miserable,
'Tis sacrilege to violate a wedlock,
You rob two Temples, make your self twice guilty,
You ruine hers, and spot her noble Husbands.

Du. Let me be gone, I'll never more attempt ye.

Mar. You cannot goe, 'tis not in me to save ye,
Dare ye do ill, and poorly then shrink under it?
Were I the Duke Medina, I would fight now,
For you must fight and bravely, it concerns you,
You do me double wrong if you sneak off Sir,
And all the world would say I lov'd a coward,
And you must dye too, for you will be kill'd,
And leave your youth, your honour and your state,
And all those dear delights you worship't here.

Duke. The noise again!

Cacaf. below. Some small beer if you love me.

Mar. The Devil haunts you sure, your sins are mighty.
A drunken Devil too, to plague your villany.

Duke. Preserve me but this once.

Marg. There's a deep well
In the next yard, if you dare venture drowning,
It is but deah.

Duke. I would not dye so wretchedly.

Marg. Out of a garret window I'll let you down then,
But say the rope be rotten, 'tis huge high too.

Duke. Have you no mercy?

Marg. Now you are frighted throughly,
And find what 'tis to play the fool in folly,
And see with clear eyes your detested folly,
I'll be your guard.

Duke. And I'll be your true servant,
Ever from this hour vertuously to love ye,
Chastly and modestly to look upon ye,
And here I seal it.

Marg. I may kiss a stranger, for you must now be so.

Enter Leon, Juan, Alonzo, Sanchio.

Leon. How do you my Lord,
He thinks you look but poorly on this matter.
Has my wife wounded ye, you were well before,
Pray Sir be comforted, I have forgot all,
Truly forgiven too, wife you are a right one,
And now with unknown nations I dare trust ye.

Juan. No more feign'd fights my Lord, they never prosper.

Leon. Who's this? the Devil in the vault? (died it.

Alc. 'Tis he Sir, and as lovingly drunk, as though he had stu-

Caca. Give me a cup of Sack, and kiss me Lady,
Kiss my sweet face, and make thy Husband cuckold,
An Ocean of sweet Sack, shall we speak treason?

Leon. He is Devilish drunk.

Duke. I had thought he had been a Devil.
He made as many noises and as horrible.

Leon. Oh a true lover Sir will lament loudly,
Which of the butts is your Mistress?

Caca. Butt in thy belly. (monstrous.

Leon. There's two in thine I am sure, 'tis grown so

Caca. Butt in thy face.

Leon. Go carry him to sleep,
A fools love should be drunk, he has paid well for't too.
When he is sober let him out to rail,
Or hang himself, there will be no loss of him.

[Exit Caca, and Servant.

Enter Perez, and Estifania.

Leon. Who's this? my Mauhound cousin?

Per. Good Sir, 'tis very good, would I had a house too,
For there is no talking in the open air,
My Tarmogant Couz, I would be bold to tell ye,
I durst be merry too; I tell you plainly,
You have a pretty feat, you have the luck on't,
A pretty Lady too, I have mist both,
My Carpenter built in a mist I thank him,
Do me the courtesie to let me see it,
See it but once more. But I shall cry for anger.
I'll hire a Chandlers shop close under ye,
And for my foolerie, sell rope and whip-cord,

Nay if you do not laugh now and laugh heartily,
You are a fool couz. Leon. I must laugh a little,
And now I have done, couz thou shalt live with me,
My merry couz, the world shall not divorce us,
Thou art a valiant man, and thou shalt never want,
Will this content thee?

Perez. I'll cry, and then I'll be thankfull,
Indeed I will, and I'll be honest to ye.

I would live a swallow here I must confess.

Wife I forgive thee all if thou be honest,

At thy peril, I believe thee excellent.

Estif. If I prove otherwaies, let me beg first,
Hold, this is yours, some recompence for service,
Use it to nobler ends than he that gave it.

Du. And this is yours, your true commission, Sir,
Now you are a Captain.

Leon. You are a noble Prince Sir,
And now a fouldier, Gentleman, we all rejoyce in't.

Juan. Sir, I shall wait upon you through all fortunes.

Alon. And I.

Altea. And I must needs attend my Mistress.

Leon. Will you goe Sister?

Altea. Yes indeed good Brother,
I have two ties, mine own blood,
And my Mistress.

Marg. Is she your Sister?

Leon. Yes indeed good wife,
And my best Sister,

For the prov'd so, wench,
When she deceiv'd you with a loving Husband.

Alc. I would not deal so truly for a stranger.

Marg. Well I could chide ye,
But it must be lovingly and like a Sister,
I'll bring you on your way, and feast ye nobly,
For now I have an honest heart to love ye,
And then deliver you to the blue Neptune. (ly,

Juan. Your colours you must wear, and wear 'em proud-
Wear 'em before the bullet, and in blood too,
And all the world shall know
We are Vertues servants.

Duke. And all the world shall know, a noble mind
Makes women beautifull, and envie blind. [Exeunt.

Prologue.

Pleasure attend ye, and about ye sit
The Springs of mirth, fancy, delight and wit
To stir you up, do not your looks let fall,
Nor to remembrance our late errors call,
Because this day w'are Spaniards all again,
The story of our Play, and our Scene Spain:
The errors too, do not for this cause hate,
Now we present their wit and not their state.
Nor Ladies be not angry if you see,
A young fresh beauty, wanton and too free,
Seek to abuse her Husband, still 'tis Spain,
No such gross errors in your Kingdom reign,
W'are Vestals all, and though we blow the fire,
We seldom make it flame up to desire,
Take no example neither to begin,
For some by precedent delight to sin:
Nor blame the Poet if he slip aside
Sometimes lasciviously if not too wide.

But hold your Fans close, and then smile at ease,
A cruel Scene did never Lady please.
Nor Gentlemen, pray be not you displeas'd,
Though we present some men fool'd, some diseas'd,
Some drunk, some mad: we mean not you, you're free,
We take no farther than our Comedie,
You are our friends, sit noble then and see.

Epilogue.

Good night our worthy friends, and may you part
Each with as merry and as free a heart
As you came hither; to those noble eyes
That deign to smile on our poor faculties,
And give a blessing to our labouring ends,
As we hope many, to such fortune sends
Their own desires, wives fair as light as chaste;
To those that live by spight Wives made in haste.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gaspero, and Melitus.

Mel. SIR, you're the very friend I wish'd to meet with, I have a large discourse invites your ear.
 To be an Auditor.

Gaf. And what concerns it?

Mel. The sadly thriving progress of the loves between my Lord, the Prince, and that great Lady, whose insolence, and never-yet-match'd Pride, can by no Character be well express'd; But in her only name, the proud Erota.

Gaf. Alas, Melitus, I should guess the best success your Prince could find from her, to be as harsh as the event doth prove: but now

'Tis not a time to pity passionate griefs,
 When a whole Kingdom in a manner lyes
 Upon its Death-Bed bleeding.

Mel. Who can tell
 Whether or no these plagues at once
 Hang over this unhappy Land for her sake
 That is a Monster in it?

Gaf. Here's the misery
 Of having a Child our Prince; else I presume
 The bold Venetians had not dar'd to attempt
 So bloody an invasion.

Mel. Yet I wonder
 Why (Master Secretary) still the Senate
 So almost superstitiously adores

Gonzalo, the Venetian Lord, considering
The outrage of his Countrymen——

Gaf. The Senate
Is wise, and therein just, for this Gonzalo,
Upon a Massacre performed at Sea
By the Admiral of Venice, on a Merchant
Of Candy, when the cause was to be heard
Before the Senate there, in open Court
Professed, that the cruelty the Admiral
Had shewed, deserved not only fine, but death;
For Candy then, and Venice were at peace:
Since when upon a motion in the Senate,
For Conquest of our Land, 'tis known for certain,
That only this Gonzalo dar'd to oppose it,
His reason was, because it too much favour'd
Of lawless and unjust ambition.

The Wars were scarce begun, but he (in fear
Of quarrels 'gainst his life) fled from his Country,
And hither came, where (to confirm his truth)
I know, (Melitus), he out of his own store,
Hath monied Cassilanes the General.

Mel. What, without other pledges than Cassilanes
Bare promise of payment?

Gaf. No, it may be
He has some pretty Lordship to retire to;
But thus he hath done; now 'tis fit, Melitus,
The Senate should be thankful, otherwise
They should annihilate one of those Laws
For which this Kingdom is throughout the World
Unfollowed and admired.

Mel. What Laws are those, Sir?
Let me so much importune you.

Gaf. You shall,
And they be worth your knowledge: briefly thus:
Who e'r he be that can detect apparently
Another of ingratitude, for any Received Benefit, the Plaintiff may Require the Offenders life; unless he please
Freely and willingly to grant remission.

Mel. By which strict Law, the Senate is in danger,
Should they neglect Gonzalo?

Gaf. Right, the Law
Permits a like equality to Aliens,
As to a home-bred Patriot.

Mel. Pray Sir, the other?

Gaf. Know, Melitus,
The elder Cretans flourish'd many years;
In War, in Peace unparallel'd, and they
(To spur heroick Spirits on to Vertue)
Enacted that what man so ere he were,
Did noblest in the field against his enemy,
Soby the general voice approv'd, and known,
Might at his home-return, make his demand
For satisfaction, and reward.

Mel. They are
Both famous Laws indeed.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Master Secretary,
The Senate is about to sit, and crave
Your presence.

Gaf. What, so suddenly?

Mes. These Letters
Will shew the causes why.

Gaf. Heaven, thou art great,
And worthy to be thanked!

Mel. Your countenance, Sir,
Doth promise some good tidings.

Gaf. O the best
And happiest for this land that e'r was told!
All the Venetian Forces are defeated.

Mel. How, Sir?

Gaf. And what doth add some delight more,
There is amongst the Souldiers a contention

Who shall be the triumpher, and it stands
Doubtful between a Father and his Son,
Old Cassilanes, and young Antinous.

Mel. Why may not both demand it?

Gaf. The Law denies it,
But where the Souldiers do not all consent,
The Parties in contention, are refer'd
To plead before the Senate; and from them
Upon an open audience to be judg'd
The Chief, and then to make demands.

Mel. You ravish me
With wonder and delight.

Gaf. Come; as we walk,
I shall more fully inform you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Cassilanes, Arcanes, Antinous, and Decius.

Cas. Admit no Souldier near us till the Senate
Have took their places.

Arc. You are obey'd, my Lord.

Ant. Decius, fall off.

Dec. I shall.

Cas. Give leave Arcanes:

Young man, come nearer to me: who am I?

Ant. It were a sin against the piety
Of filial duty, if I should forget
The debt I owe my Father on my knee:
Your pleasure?

Cas. What, so low? canst thou find joints,
Yet be an Elephant? Antinous, rise;
Thou wilt belye opinion, and rebate
The ambition of thy gallantry, that they
Whose confidence thou hast bewitch'd, should see
Their little God of War, kneel to his Father,
Though in my hand I did grasp Thunder.

Ant. Sir,

For proof that I acknowledge you the Author
Of giving me my Birth, I have discharg'd
A part of my Obedience. But if now
You should (as cruel fathers do) proclaim
Your right, and Tyrant-like usurp the glory
Of my peculiar honours, not deriv'd
From successary, but purchas'd with my blood,
Then I must stand first Champion for my self
Against all interposers.

Cas. Boldly urg'd,
And proudly, I could love thee, did not anger
Consult with just disdain, in open language
To call thee most ungrateful. Say freely,
Wilt thou resign the flatteries whereon
The reeling pillars of a popular breath
Have rais'd thy Giant-like conceit, to add
A suffrage to thy Fathers merit? speak.

Ant. Sir, hear me: were there not a Chronicle
Well pen'd by all their tongues, who can report
What they have seen you do; or had you not
Best in your own performance writ your self,
And been your own text, I would undertake
Alone, without the help of Art, or Character,
But only to recount your deeds in Arms,
And you should ever then be fam'd a President
Of living victory: But as you are Great, and well worthy to be stiled Great,
It would betray a poverty of Spirit
In me to obstruct my fortunes, or descent,
If I should coward-like surrender up
The interest which the inheritance of your vertue
And mine own thrifty fate can claim in honour:
My Lord, of all the mass of Fame, which any
That wears a Sword, and hath but seen me fight,
Gives me, I will not share, nor yield one jot,
One tittle.

Cas. Not to me?

Ant.

Ant. You are my Father,
Yet not to you.

Caf. Ambitious Boy, how dar'st thou
To tell me, that thou wilt contend?

Ant. Had I
Been slothful, and not follow'd you in all
The streights of death, you might have justly then Reputed me a Bastard: 'tis a cruelty
More than to murder Innocents, to take
The life of my yet infant-honour from me.

Caf. Antinous, look upon this badge of age,
Thy Father's grey-hair'd beard: full fifty years,
(And more than half of this, ere thou wert born)
I have been known a Souldier, in which time
I found no difference 'twixt War and Peace,
For War was Peace to me, and Peace was War.

Antinous, mark me well; there hath not liv'd
These fifty years a man whom Crete prefer'd
Before thy Father; let me boldly boast,
Thy Father, both for Discipline and Action
Hath so long been the first of all his Nation;
Now, canst thou think it honest, charitable,
Nay humane, being so young, my Son, my Child,
Begot, bred, taught by me, by me thy Father,
For one days service, and that on thy first,
To rob me of a glory which I fought for
A half of hundred years?

Ant. My case observes
Both equity and presidents; for Sir,
That very day whereon you got your Fame,
You took it from some other, who was then
Chief in repute, as you are now, and has been Perhaps as many years deserving that
Which you gain'd in a day, as I have mine.

Caf. But he was not my Father then, Antinous;
Thou leav'st out that.

Ant. Sir, had he been your Father,
He had been then immortal; for a Father
Heightens his reputation where his Son
Inherits it, as when you give us life,
Your life is not diminish'd but renew'd
In us when you are dead, and we are still
Your living Images,

Caf. So be thou curs'd
In thy posterity, as I in thee,
Dishonourable Boy; O shall that Sun,
Which not a year yet since beheld me mounted
Upon a fiery Steed, waving my Sword,
And teaching this young Man to manage Arms,
That was a raw, fresh Novice in the feats
Of Chivalrie, shall that same Sun be witness
Against this Brat of his Ingratitude?
Who, to eclipse the light of my renown,
Can no way hope to get a noble Name,
But by the treading on his Father's Greatness;
Thou wilt not yield?

Enter Arcanes.

Ant. My life, but not the prize
My Sword hath purchas'd.

Arc. The Senate,
My Lord, are here at hand, and all the Souldiers
Begin to throng about them.

Caf. Now, Arcanes, the Arc. What, Sir?

Caf. Trifles will affront us; that Fine fighting Stripling:

Arc. Let him have the shame on't;
'Please you withdraw on this side.

Caf. My great heart
Was never quail'd before.

Dec. My Lord, be confident,
Let not your Father daunt you.

Ar. Decius, whither

Must I withdraw?

Dec. On this side.—— See, the Souldiers
Attend your pleasure—— courage, Sir; the Senate.

Caf. Way for the Senate.

Enter Porphyccio, Possenne, (three Senators) Gonzalo, Gaspero, Souldiers.

My good Lords I know not
What tax of arrogance I may incurr,
Should I presume, though courted by your Favours,
To take a place amongst you; I had rather Give proof of my unfeign'd humility
By force, though mean, yet more becoming place,
Than run the hazard of a doubtful censure.

Pos. My Lord, your wisdom is both known and try'd;
We cannot rank you in a nobler Friendship
Than your great service to the State deserves.

Por. Will't please you, Sir?

Enter Fernando with Souldiers.

Gonz. What's here, my Lord Porphyccio?

It must not be.

Por. My Lord, you are too modest.

Gonz. It is no season to be troublesome,
Else—— but I have done: your Lordships are observ'd,

Caf. Is the demandant ready?

Arc. He is ready.

Caf. Produce him then.

Arc. Before this sacred presence,

I, by a general consent, am made
The Souldiers voice, and to your gracious Wisedoms,
Present as chief in Arms, his Countries Champion, Cassilanes.

Dec. Most reverend Lords, you hear the lesser number
Of those who have been Guardians to this Country,
Approve this Champion; I, in all their names,
Who fought for Candy, here present before you
The mightiest man in Arms, Antinous.
Speak fellow Souldiers.

Sold. Antinous, Antinous.

Caf. Stand by all, save the two Competitors. (both,

Pos. My Lords, how much your Countrey owes you
The due reward of your desertful glories
Must to Posterity remain: but yet
Since, by our Law, one only can make claim
To the proposed honours which you both
(It seems) have truly merited, take leave
Freely to plead your rights; we shall attend ye.

Por. Wherein priority of voice is granted,
Lord Cassilanes to you; for that your rare
And long experience in the Course of War,
As well doth challenge it as the best priviledge
Of Order and Civility, for that
You are your brave Opponents worthy Father.
Say, Country-men, are you content?

Sold. I, I.

Cass. Right grave, right gracious Fathers; how unfit
It is for me, that all my life time have
Been practis'd in the School of Bloud, and Slaughter
To bandy words now in my lifes last farewell,
Your Wisedomes will consider; were there pitcht
Another, and another field, like that
Which, not yet three days since, this Arm hath scatter'd,
Defeated, and made nothing, then the man
That had a heart to think he could but follow
(For equal me he should not) through the lanes
Of danger and amazement, might in that
That only of but following me, be happy,
Reputed worthy to be made my Rival;
For 'tis not, Lords, unknown to those about me,
(My fellow Souldiers) first, with what a confidence
I led them on to fight, went on still, and
As if I could have been a second Nature,
As well in heartening them by my example,

As by my exhortation, I gave life
 To quicken courage, to inflame revenge,
 To heighten resolution; in a word,
 To out-doe action: It boots not to discover,
 How that young man, who was not fledg'd nor skill'd
 In Martial play, was even as ignorant
 As childish: But I list not to disparage
 His non ability: The signal given
 Of Battel, when our enemies came on,
 (Directed more by fury, than by warrant
 Of Policy and Stratagem) I met them,
 I in the fore-front of the Armies met them;
 And as if this old weather-beaten body
 Had been compos'd of cannon-proof, I stood
 The volleys of their shot. I, I my self
 Was he that first dis-rankt their woods of Pikes:
 But when we came to handy-strokes, as often
 As I lent blows, so often I gave wounds,
 And every wound a death. I may be bold
 To justifie a truth, this very sword
 Of mine slew more than any twain besides:
 And, which is not the least of all my glorie,
 When he, this young man, hand to hand in fight,
 Was by the General of the Venetians,
 And such as were his retinue, unhors'd,
 I stept between, and rescu'd him my self,
 Or horses hoofs had trampled him to dirt;
 And whilst he was re-mounting, I maintain'd
 The combate with the gallant General,
 Till having taken breath, he throng'd before me,
 Renew'd the fight, and with a fatal blow,
 Stole both that honour from me, and his life
 From him, whom I before my self alone,
 Had more than full three quarters kill'd: a man
 Well worthy only by this hand to have dy'd,
 Not by a Boys weak push: I talk too much,
 But 'tis a fault of age: If to bring home
 Long peace, long victorie, even to your Capitol;
 If to secure your Kingdom, wives, and children,
 Your lives and liberties; if to renown
 Your honours through the world, to fix your names,
 Like Blazing stars admir'd, and fear'd by all
 That have but heard of Candy, or a Cretan,
 Be to deserve the approvement of my man-hood,
 Then thus much have I done: what more, examine
 The annals of my life; and then consider
 What I have been, and am. Lords I have said.

Gonz. With reverence to the Senate, is it lawfull,
 Without your Customes breach, to say a word?

Pof. Say on my Lord Gonzalo.

Gonz. I have heard,
 And with no little wonder, such high deeds
 Of Chivalrie discours'd, that I confesse,
 I do not think the Worthies while they liv'd
 All nine, deserv'd as much applause, or memorie,
 As this one: But who can do ought to gain
 The crown of honour from him, must be somewhat
 More than a man; you tread a dangerous path,
 Yet I shall hear you gladly: for believe me,
 Thus much let me profess, in honours cause,
 I would not to my Father, nor my King,
 (My Countries Father) yield: if you transcend
 What we have heard, I can but only say,
 That Miracles are yet in use. I fear
 I have offended.

Porp. You have spoken nobly.

Antinous use your priviledge.

Ant. Princely Fathers,
 E're I begin, one suit I have to make,
 'Tis just, and honourable.

Porp. Poff. Speak, and have it.

Ant. That you would please the souldiers might all stand
 Together by their General.

Poff. 'Tis granted.

All fall to yonder side: Go on, Antinous.

Ant. I shall be brief and plain: all what my Father
 (This Countries Patron) hath discours'd, is true.
 Fellows in Arms: speak you, is't true?

Sol. True, true.

Ant. It follows, that the blaze of my performance
 Took light from what I saw him do: and thus
 A City (though the flame be much more dreadfull)
 May from a little spark be set on fire;
 Of all what I have done, I shall give instance
 Only in three main proofs of my desert.
 First I fought out (but through how many dangers
 My Lords judge ye) the chief, the great Commander,
 The head of that huge body, whose proud weight
 Our Land shrunk under, him I found and fought with,
 Fought with, and slew. Fellows in Arms, speak you,
 Is't true or not?

Sold. True, true.

Ant. When he was slain,
 The hearts of all our adversaries
 Began to quail, till young Fernando, son
 To the last Duke of Venice gather'd head,
 And soon renew'd the field, by whose example
 The bold Venetians doubling strength and courage
 Had got the better of the day; our men
 Supposing that their adversaries grew
 Like Hydra's head, recoyle, and 'gan to flye:
 I follow'd them; and what I said, they know;
 The summe on't is; I call'd them back, new rankt them;
 Led on, they follow'd, shrunk not tell the end:
 Fellows in Arms is't true, or no?

Sold. True, true.

Ant. Lastly, to finish all, there was but one,
 The only great exploit; which was to take
Fernando prisoner, and that hand to hand
 In single fight I did: my self without
 The help of any arm, save the arm of Heaven.
 Speak Souldiers, is it true, or no?

Sold. Antinous, Antinous.

Ant. Behold my prisoner, Fathers.

Fern. This one man

Ruin'd our Army, and hath glorifi'd
Crete in her robes of mightiness and conquest.

Pof. We need not use long circumstance of words,
Antinous thou art conquerer: the Senate,
 The souldiers, and thy valour have pronounc'd it.

All. Antinous, Antinous.

Porp. Make thy demand.

Caf. Please ye (my Lords) give leave
 That I may part.

Pof. No Cassilane, the Court
 Should therein be dishonour'd, do not imagin
 We prize your presence at so slight a rate.
 Demand, Antinous.

Ant. Thus (my Lords) to witness
 How far I am from arrogance, or thinking
 I am more valiant, though more favour'd
 Than my most matchless father, my demand is,
 That for a lasting memorie of his name,
 His deeds, his real, nay his royal worth,
 You set up in your Capitol in Brass
 My Fathers Statue, there to stand for ever
 A Monument and Trophy of his victories,
 With this Inscription to succeeding ages,
Great Cassilanes, Patron of Candy's Peace,
Perpetual Triumpher.

Por. Pof. It is granted. What more?

Ant. No more.

Caf. How Boy?

Gonz. Thou art immortal,
 Both for thy Son-like pietie, and beauties
 Of an unconquer'd minde.

Ant. My Prisoner, Lords,
 To your more sacred wisdoms I surrender:

Fit you his ransom ; half whereof I give
For larges to the Souldiers : the other half
To the erection of this monument.

Cass. Ambitious villain.

Gonz. Thou art all un-imitable.

My Lords, to work a certain peace for Candy
With Venice, use Fernando like a Prince ;
His ransom I'll disburse what e're it be :
Yet you may stay him with you, till conditions
Of amitie shall be concluded on :

Are ye content ?

Porp. We are, and ever rest

Both friends and debtors to your nobleness.

Gonz. Souldiers attend me in the Market-place,
Ple thither send your larges.

Sold. Antinous, Antinous.

[Exeunt.

Cas. I have a sute too, Lords.

Porp. Pos. Propose it, 'tis yours, if fit and just.

Cas. Let not my services,

My being forty years a drudge, a pack-horse
To you, and to the State, be branded now
With Ignominy ne're to be forgotten :
Rear me no Monument, unless you mean
To have me fam'd a Coward, and be stamp'd so.

Pos. We understand you not.

Cas. Proud boy, thou dost,

And Tyrant-like insult'st upon my shame.

Ant. Sir, Heaven can tell, and my integrity,
What I did, was but only to inforce
The Senates gratitude. I now acknowledge it.

Cas. Observe it Fathers, how this haughty boy
Grows cunning in his envy of mine honours :
He knows no mention can of me be made,
But that it ever likewise must be told,
How I by him was master'd ; and for surety
That all succeeding times may so report it,
He would have my dishonour, and his Triumphs
Ingrav'd in Brass : hence, hence proceeds the fallhood
Of his insinuating piety.

Thou art no child of mine : thee and thy blood,
Here in the Capitol, before the Senate,
I utterly renounce : So thrift and fate
Confirm me ; henceforth never see my face,
Be, as thou art, a villain to thy Father.

Lords I must crave your leaves : come, come Arcanes. [Ex.

Gonz. Here's a strange high-born spirit.

Pos. 'Tis but heat

Of suddain present rage ; I dare assure
Antinous of his favour.

Ant. I not doubt it,

He is both a good man, and a good Father.
I shall attend your Lordships.

Pos. Do Antinous.

Gonz. Yes : feast thy Triumphs
With applause and pleasures.

Por. Pos. Lead on.

[Exeunt.

Flor. Cornets.

Ant. I utterly renounce——'Twas so ?

Was't not, my Decius ?

Dec. Pish, you know, my Lord,
Old men are choleric.

Ant. And lastly parted

With, never henceforth see my face : O me,
How have I lost a Father ? Such a Father ?
Such a one Decius ! I am miserable,
Beyond expression.

Dec. Fic, how unbecoming
This shews upon your day of fame ?

Ant. O mischief !

I must no more come near him ; that I know,
And am assur'd on't.

Dec. Say you do not ?

Ant. True :

Put case I do not : what is Candy then
To lost Antinous ? Malta, I resolve

To end my dayes in thee.

Dec. How's that ?

Ant. Ple trie

All humble means of being reconcil'd,
Which if deny'd, then I may justly say,
This day has prov'd my worst : Decius, my worst.

[Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gonzalo, and Gaspero.

Gasp. NOW to what you have heard ; as no man can Better than I, give you her Character ;
For I have been both nurs'd, and train'd up to
Her petulant humours, and been glad to bear them,
Her Brother, my late Master, did no less :
Strong apprehensions of her beauty hath
Made her believe that she is more than woman :
And as there did not want those flatterers
'Bout the worlds Conquerour, to make him think,
And did perswade him that he was a god ;
So there be those base flies, that will not stick
To buzze into her ears she is an Angel,
And that the food she feeds on is Ambrosia.

Gonz. She should not touch it then, 'tis Poets fare.

Gasp. I may take leave to say, she may as well
Determine of her self to be a goddess,
With lesser flatterie than he a god :
For she does conquer more, although not farther.
Every one looks on her, dyes in despair,
And would be glad to do it actually,
To have the next age tell how worthily,
And what good cause he had to perish so :
Here beauty is superlative, she knows it,
And knowing it, thinks no man can deserve,
But ought to perish, and to dye for her :
Many great Princes for her love have languish'd,
And given themselves a willing sacrifice,
Proud to have ended so : And now there is
A Prince so madded in his own passions,
That he forgets the Royaltie he was born to,
And deems it happiness to be her slave.

Gonz. You talk as if you meant to winde me in,
And make me of the number.

Gasp. Sir, mistake me not, the service that I owe ye Shall plead for me : I tell you what she is,
What she expects, and what she will effect,
Unless you be the miracle of men,
That come with a purpose to behold,
And goe away your self.

Gonz. I thank you, I will do it : But pray resolve me,
How is she stor'd with wit ?

Gasp. As with beauty,
Infinite, and more to be admired at,
Than medled with.

(feet ?

Gonz. And walks her tongue the same gate with her
Gasp. Much beyond : what e're her heart thinks, she utters :
And so boldly, so readily, as you would judge
It penn'd and studied.

Enter Erola, Philander, Annophil, Hyparcha, Mochingo, Attendants.

Gonz. She comes.

Gasp. I must leave you then,
But my best wishes shall remain with you.

[Exit.

Gonz. Still I must thank you.
This is the most passionate,
Most pitifull Prince,
Who in the Caldron of affections,
Looks as he had been pat-boy'd.

Phil.

Phil. If I offend with too much loving you,
It is a fault that I must still commit,
To make your mercy shine the more on me.

Erot. You are the self-same creature you condemn,
Or else you durst not follow me with hope
That I can pity you, who am so far
From granting any comfort in this kind,
That you and all men else shall perish first:
I will live free and single, till I find
Something above a man to equal me;
Put all your brave Heroes into one,
Your Kings and Emperours, and let him come
In person of a man, and I should scorn him:
Must, and will scorn him.
The god of love himself hath lost his eyes,
His Bow and Torch extinguish'd, and the Poets
That made him first a god, have lost their fire
Since I appear'd, and from my eyes must steal it.
This I dare speak; and let me see the man,
Now I have spoke it, that doth, dare deny;
Nay, not believe it.

Mo. He is mad that does not.

Erot. Have not all the nations of the Earth heard of me?
Most come to see me, and seeing me, return'd
Full of my praises? teaching their Chroniclers
To make their Stories perfect? for where the name,
Merely the word of fair Erota stands,
It is a lasting History to time,
Begetting admiration in the men,
And in my own Sex envie: which glorie's lost,
When I shall stick my beautie in a cloud,
And clearly shine through it.

Gonz. This woman's in the altitudes, and he must be
A good Astrologer shall know her Zodiack.

Phil. For any man to think
Himself an able purchaser of you,
But in the bargain there must be declar'd
Infinite bounty: otherwise I vow,
By all that's excellent and gracious in you,
I would untenant every hope lodg'd in me,
And yield my self up loves, or your own Martyr.

Erot. So you shall please us.

Phil. O you cannot be
So heavenly, and so absolute in all things,
And yet retain such cruel tyranny.

Erot. I can, I do, I will.

Gonz. She is in her
Moods, and her Tenses: I'll Grammer with you,
And make a trial how I can decline you:
By your leave (great Lady.)

Erot. What are you?

Gonz. A man, a good man, that's a wealthy;
A Proper man, and a proud man too; one
That understands himself, and knows, unless
It be your self, no woman on the Universe deserves him.
Nay, Lady, I must tell you too withal,
I may make doubt of that, unless you paint
With better judgement next day than on this;
For (plain I must be with you) 'tis a dull Fucus.

Erot. Knows any one here what this fellow is?

Atten. He is of Venice (Madam) a great Magnifico,
And gracious with the Senate. (here?)

Erot. Let him keep then among them; what makes he Here's state enough where I am: here's a do——
You, tell him, if he have ought with us, let him
Look lower, and give it in Petition.

Mo. Mighty Magnifico, my Mistris bid me tell you,
If you have ought with her, you must look lower,
And yield it in Petition.

Gonz. Here is for thee a Duckct.

Mon. You say well Sir, take your own course.

Gonz. I will not grace you
(Lady) so much as take you by the hand;
But when I shall vouchsafe to touch your lip,

It shall be through your Court a holy-day
Proclaimed for so high favour.

Erot. This is some Great mans Jester: Sirrah, begon, here is
No place to fool in.

Gonz. Where are the fools you talk of?
I do keep two.

Erot. No question of it: for
In your self you do maintain an hundred.

Gonz. And besides them I keep a noble train,
Statists, and men of action: my purse is large and deep,
Beyond the reach of riot to draw drie:
Fortune did vie with Nature, to bestow
(When I was born) her bountie equally:
'Tis not amiss you turn your eyes from me;
For should you stand and gaze me in the face,
You perish would, like Semele by Jove:
In Venice at this instant there do lye
No less than threefcore Ladies in their graves,
And in their Beds five hundred for my love.

Mo. You lie more than they; yet it becomes him bravel;
Would I could walk and talk so? I'll endeavour it.

Erot. Sir, do you know me?

Gonz. Yes, you were sister to the late Prince of Candy,
Aunt to this young one: and I in Venice,
Am born a Lord; equall to you in fortunes,
In shape; I'll say no more, but view.

Mon. There needs no more be said, were I a woman——
O he does rarely: in shape; I'll say no more,
But view: who could say more, who better?
Man is no man, nor woman woman is,
Unless they have a pride like one of these.
How poor the Prince of Cyprus shews to him!
How poor another Lady unto her!
Carriage and State makes us seem demi-gods,
Humility, like beasts, worms of the Earth.

Enter Antinous, and Decius.

Ant. Royal Lady, I kiss your hand.

Erot. Sir, I know you not.

Anno. O my noble Brother, welcom from the wars.

Ant. Dear Sister.

Ann. Where is my Father, that you come without him?
We have news of your success: he has his health I hope?

Ant. Yes Sister, he has his health, but is not well.

Ann. How not well? what Riddles do your utter?

Ant. I'll tell you more in private.

Gonz. Noble Sir,
I cannot be unmindfull of your merit,
Since I last heard it: you are a hopeful youth,
And (indeed) the Soul of Candy.
I must speak my thoughts.

Ann. The Prince of Cyprus Brother, good Decius.

Ant. I am his Servant.

Phil. You are the Patron of your Countrie, Sir,
So your unimitable deeds proclaim you,
It is no language of my own, but all mens.

Gonz. Your Enemies must needs acknowledge it:
Then do not think it flatterie in your friends,
For if they had a heart, they could not want a tongue.

Erot. Is this your Brother Annophil?

Ann. Yes Madam.

Erot. Your name's Antinous?

Ant. I am (Lady) that most unfortunate man.

Erot. How unfortunate? are you not the Souldier,
The Captain of those Captains, that did bring Conquest and Victory home along with you?

Ant. I had some share in't; but was the least
Of the least worthy.

Gonz. O Sir, in your modesty you'd make
A double Conquest: I was an ear-witness
When this young man spoke lesser than he acted,
And had the Souldiers voice to help him out:
But that the Law compell'd him for his honour,

To enforce him make a claim for his reward,
I well perceive he would have stood the man
That he does now, buried his worth in silence.

Erot. Sir, I hearken not to him, but look on you,
And find more in you than he can relate :
You shall attend on me.

Ant. Madam, your pardon.

Erot. Deny it not Sir, for it is more honour
Than you have gotten i'th' field: for know you shall,
Upon Erota's asking, serve Erota.

Ant. I may want answers, Lady,
But never want a will to do you service.
I came here to my Sister, to take leave,
Having enjoy'd my self to banishment,
For some cause that hereafter you may hear,
And wish with me I had not the occasion.

Anno. There shall be no occasion to divide us :
Dear Madam for my sake use your power,
Even for the service that he ought to owe,
Must, and does owe to you, his friends, and country.

Erot. Upon your Loyalty to the state and me,
I do command you Sir, not depart Candy :
Am I not your Princess ?

Ant. You are a great Lady.

Erot. Then shew your self a Servant and a Subject.

Ant. I am your vassal.

Mon. You are a Coward ; I that dare not fight,
Scorn to be vassal to any Prince in Europe :
Great is my heart with pride, which I'll encrease
When they are gone, with practise on my Vassals.

Atten. The noble Cassilane is come to see you Madam.

Dec. There's comfort in those words, Antinous :
For here's the place, and persons that have power,
To reconcile you to his love again.

Ant. That were a fortunate meeting.

Enter Cassilane, and Arcanes.

Cas. Greatness still wait you Lady.

Erot. Good Cassilane, we do maintain our greatness,
Through your valour.

Cas. My prayers pull daily blessings on thy head,
My un-offending child, my Annophel.
Good Prince, worthy Gonzalo ! ha ? art thou here
Before me ? in every action art thou ambitious ?
My duty (Lady) first offered here,
And love to thee (my child) though he out-strip me ;
Thus in the wars he got the start on me,
By being forward, but performing less ;
All the endeavours of my life are lost,
And thrown upon that evil of mine own
Curfed begetting, whom I shame to father.
O that the heat thou rob'dst me of, had burnt
Within my Entrails, and begot a fever,
Or some worse sickness, for thou art a disease
Sharper than any Physick gives a name to.

Anno. Why do you say so ?

Cas. O Annophel ; there is good cause my girl :
He has plaid the thief with me, and filch'd away
The richest jewel of my life, my honour,
Wearing it publickly with that applause,
As if he justly did inherit it.

Ant. Would I had in my Infancy been laid
Within my grave, covered with your blessings rather Than grown up to a man, to meet your curses.

Cas. O that thou hadst.

Then I had been the Father of a child,
Dearer than thou wert ever unto me,
When hope perswaded me I had begot
Another self in thee : Out of mine eyes,
As far as I have thrown thee from my heart,
That I may live and dye forgetting thee.

Erot. How has he deserv'd this untam'd anger,
That when he might have ask't for his reward
Some honour for himself, or mass of self,

He only did request to have erected
Your Statue in the Capitol, with Titles
Ingrav'd upon't, The Patron of his Countrey ?

Cas. That, that's the poison in the gilded cup,
The Serpent in the flowers, that stings my honour ;
And leaves me dead in fame : Gods do a justice,
And rip his bosom up, that men may see,
Seeing, believe the subtle practises
Written within his heart : But I am heated ;
And do forget this presence, and my self.
Your pardon, Lady.

Erot. You should not ask, 'less you knew how to give.
For my sake Cassilane, cast out of your thoughts
All ill conceptions of your worthy son,
That (questionless) has ignorantly offended,
Declared in his penitence.

Cas. Bid me dye, Lady, for your sake I'll do it ;
But that you'll say is nothing, for a man
That has out-liv'd his honour : But command me
In any thing save that, and Cassilane
Shall ever be your servant. Come Annophel,
(My joy in this world) thou shalt live with me,
(Retired in some solitarie nook,)
The comfort of my age ; my dayes are short,
And ought to be well spent : and I desire
No other witness of them but thy self,
And good Arcanes.

Anno. I shall obey you Sir.

Gonz. Noble Sir :

If you taste any want of worldly means,
Let not that discontent you : know me your friend,
That hath, and can supply you.

Cas. Sir, I am too much bound to you already,
And 'tis not of my cares the least, to give you
Fair satisfaction.

Gonz. You may imagine I do speak to that end,
But trust me, 'tis to make you bolder with me.

Cas. Sir, I thank you, and may make trial of you,
Mean time my service.

Anno. Brother be comforted ; so long as I continue
Within my Fathers love, you cannot long
Stand out an Exile : I must goe live with him,
And I will prove so good an Orator
In your behalf, that you again shall gain him ;
Or I will stir in him another anger,
And be lost with you.

Ant. Better I were neglected : for he is hasty,
And through the Choler that abounds in him,
(Which for the time divides from him his judgement)
He may cast you off, and with you his life ;
For grief will straight surprize him, and that way
Must be his death : the sword has try'd too often,
And all the deadly Instruments of war
Have aim'd at his great heart, but ne're could touch it :
Yet not a limb about him wants a scar.

Cas. Madam my duty ———

Erot. Will you be gone ?

Cas. I must, Lady, but I shall be ready,
When you are pleas'd command me, for your service.
Excellent Prince ——— To all my heartie love,
And a good Farewel.

Mon. Thanks honest Cassilane.

Cas. Come Annophel.

Gonz. Shall I not wait upon you Sir ?

Cas. From hence you shall not stir a foot :
Loving Gonzalo, it must be all my study
To requite you.

Gonz. If I may be so fortunate to deserve
The name of friend from you, I have enough.

Cas. You are so, and you have made your self so.

Gonz. I will then preserve it.

Erot. Antinous you are my servant, are you not ?

Ant. It hath pleas'd you so to grace me.

Erot. Why are you then dejected ? you will say,

You have lost a father; but you have found a Mistress
Doubles that loss: be master of your spirit;
You have a cause for it, which is my favour.

Gonz. And mine.

Erot. Will no man ease me of this fool?

Gonz. Your fellow.

Erot. Antinous wait upon us.

Ant. I shall Madam.

Gonz. Nay but Ladie, Ladie.

Erot. Sir, you are rude: and if you be the Master
Of such means as you do talk of, you should Learn good manners.

Gonz. O Lady, you can find a fault in me,
But not perceive it in your self: you must, shall hear me:
I love you for your pride, 'tis the best vertue
In you.

Erot. I could hang this fellow now: by whom
Are you supported, that you dare do this?
Have you not example here in a Prince
Transcending you in all things, yet bears himself
As doth become a man had seen my beautie?
Back to your Country, and your Curtizans,
Where you may be admired for your wealth,
Which being consum'd, may be a means to gain you
The opinion of some wit. Here's nothing
To be got but scorn, and loss of time.

Gonz. Which are things I delight in.

Erot. Antinous follow me.

Gonz. She is vext to the soul.

Mon. Let her be vext, 'tis fit she should be so:
Give me thy hand Gonzalo, thou art in our favour,
For we do love to cherish lofty spirits,
Such as percusse the Earth, and bound
With an erected countenance to the clouds.

Gonz. 'S-foot, what thing is this?

Mon. I do love fire-works, because they mount:
An Exhalation I profess to adore,
Beyond a fixed star, 'tis more illustrious,
As every thing rais'd out of smoak is so:
Their vertue is in action: what do you think of me?

Gonz. Troth Sir,
You are beyond my ghes, I know you not.

Mon. Do you know your self?

Gonz. Yes Sir.

Mon. Why you and I are one: I am proud, and Very proud too, that I must tell you; I saw
It did become you, cousin Gonzalo, prethee
Let it be so.

Gonz. Let it be so good cousin.

Mon. I am no great ones fool.

Gonz. I hope so, for alliance sake. (nimous)

Mon. Yet I do serve the Mighty, Monstrous, and Magna-Invincible Erotia. (your Coat.

Gonz. O good cousin, now I have you: Ple meet you in
Mon. Coat? I have my horse-mans coat I must confess

Lin'd through with Velvet, and a Scarlet out-side;

If you'll meet me in't, Ple send for't;

And cousin you shall see me with much comfort,

For it is both a new one, and a right one,

It did not come collateral. (sinefs.

Gonz. Adieu good cousin; at this present I have some bu-

Mon. Farewel, excellent cousin.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Gonzalo, and Fernando.

Gonz. Candy, I say, is lost already.

Fern. Yes, (them.
If to be conqueror be to be lost.

Gonz. You have it; one days conquest hath undone
And sold them to their vassalage; for what

Have I else toyl'd my brains, profusely emptied
My moneys, but to make them slaves to Venice,
That so in case the sword did lose his edge,
Then art might sharpen hers?

Fer. Gonzalo how?

Gonz. Fernando thus: you see how through this Land,
Both of the best and basest I am honour'd;
I only gave the State of Venice notice,
When, where, and how to land, or you had found
A better entertainment: I was he
Encourag'd young Antinous to affront
The Devil his Father: for the Devil I think
Dares not do more in battel.

Fer. But why did ye?

I find no such great policie in that.

Gonz. Indeed Fernando, thou canst fight, not plot:
Had they continu'd one, they two alone
Were of sufficient courage and performance
To beat an Armie.

Fer. Now by all my hopes,
I rather shall admire, than envy vertue.

Gonz. Why then by all your hopes you'll rather have
Your Brains knockt out, than learn how to be wise;
You States-man? Well Sir, I did more than this,
When Cassilane crav'd from the common treasure
Pay for his Souldiers, I strook home, and lent him
An hundred thousand Duckets.

Fer. Marry Sir,
The policy was little, the love loss,
And honesty least of all.

Gonz. How say ye by that?

Go fight, I say goe fight, Ple talk no more with you,
You are insensible.

Fer. Well, I shall observe ye.

Gonz. Why look you Sir, by this means have I got
The greatest part of Cassilanes estate
Into my hands, which he can ne're redeem,
But must of force sink: do you conceive me now?

Fer. So:

But why have you importuned the Senate,
For me to sojourn, with them?

Gonz. There's the quintessence,
The soul, and grand elixir of my wit:
For he (according to his noble nature)
Will not be known to want, though he do want,
And will be bankrupted so much the sooner,
And made the subject of our scorn and laughter.

Fern. Here's a perfect plotted stratagem.

Gonz. Why? could you
Imagine, that I did not hate in heart
My Countryes enemies? yes, yes, Fernando,
And I will be the man that shall undoe them.

Fern. Ye are in a ready way.

Gonz. I was never out on't.

Enter Gaspero.

Gonz. Peace,
Here comes a wife Coxcombe, a tame Coward.
Now worthy Gaspero, what,
You come (I know) to be my Lord Fernando's
Conductor to old Cassilane?

Gasp. To wait upon him.

Gonz. And my Lords the Senators sent you?

Gasp. My noble Lord they did.

Gonz. My Lord Fernando,
This Gentleman, (as humble as you see him)
Is even this Kingdoms treasure; In a word,
'Tis his chief glory that he is not wiser
Than honest, nor more honest than approv'd
In truth and faith.

Gasp. My Lord.

Gonz. You may be bold
To trust him with your bosom, he'll not deceive
If you relie upon him once.

Erot. Your name is Gaspero?
Gasp. Your servant.
Gonz. Go commend me
(Right honest Gaspero) commend me heartily
To noble Cassilane, tell him my love
Is vow'd to him.

Gasp. I shall.
Gonz. I know you will.
My Lord I cannot long be absent from you.

Fer. Sir, you are now my guide.

Gonz. Thus my designs
Run uncontroul'd; yet Venice though I be Intelligencer to thee, in my brain
Are other large Projects: for if proud Erota
Bend to my lure, I will be Candy's King,
And Duke of Venice too. Ha? Venice too?
O 'twas prettily shov'd in: why not? Erota
May in her love seal all sure: if she swallow
The bait, I am Lord of both; if not, yet Candy
Despight of all her power shall be ruin'd.

[Exit.

Enter Cassilane, Arcanes, and Annophel.

Cas. Urge me no farther Annophel.

Anno. My Lord.

Cas. Thy fathers poverty has made thee happy;
For though 'tis true, this solitary life
Sutes not with youth and beautie, O my child,
Yet 'tis the sweetest Guardian to protect
Chast names from Court-asperions; there a Lady
Tender and delicate in years and graces,
That doats upon the charms of ease and pleasure,
Is ship-wrackt on the shore; for 'tis much safer
To trust the Ocean in a leaking ship,
Than follow greatness in the wanton rites
Of luxurie and sloth.

Anno. My wishes Sir,
Have never soar'd a higher flight, than truly
To find occasion wherein I might witness
My duty and obedience.

Cas. 'Tis well said,
Canst thou forbear to laugh Arcanes?

Arc. Why Sir?

Cas. To look upon my beggerie, to look upon
My patience in my beggerie: Tell me,
Does it shew handsom? bravely?
Handsom? thou wilt flatter me,
And swear that I am miserable.

Arc. Nothing
More glorifies the noble, and the valiant,
Than to despise contempt: if you continue
But to enjoy your self, you in your self
Enjoy all store besides.

Cas. An excellent change:
I that some seven Apprentice-ships commanded
A hundred Ministers, that waited on
My nod, and sometimes twenty thousand souldiers,
Am now retir'd, attended in my age
By one poor maid, follow'd by one old man.

Arc. Sir, you are lower in your own repute
Than you have reason for.

Cas. The Roman Captains,
I mean the best, such as with their blouds
Purchas'd their Countreys peace, the Empires glorie,
Were glad at last to get them to some Farms,
Off from the clamours of the ingratefull great ones,
And the unsteady multitude, to live
As I do now, and 'twas their blessing too,
Let it be ours Arcanes.

Arc. I cannot but
Applaud your scorn of injuries.

Cas. Of injuries?
Arcanes, Annophel, lend both your hands.
So, what say ye now?

Arc. Why now my Lord ———

Cas. I swear
By all my past prosperities; thus standing
Between you two, I think my self as great,
As mighty, as if in the Capitol
I stood amidst the Senators, with all
The Cretan subjects prostrate at my feet,

Ann. Sir, you are here more safe.

Cas. And more beloved:
Why look ye Sirs, I can forget the weaknes
Of the traduced Souldiers, the neglect
Of the fair-spoken Senate, the impietie
Of him, the villain, whom (to my dishonour)
The World miscalls my son.

But by the ———

Arc. Sir, remember that you promis'd no occasion
Should move your patience.

Cas. Thou do'st chide me friendly,
He shall not have the honour to be thought upon
Amongst us.

Enter a Servant,

Now? the news?

Serv. The Secretarie,
With the Venetian prisoner, desire
Admittance to your Lordship.

Cas. How? to me?
What mysterie is this? Arcanes can they,
Thinkst thou, mean any good?

Arc. My Lord, they dare not Intend ought else but good.

Cas. 'Tis true, they dare not;
Arcanes welcom them: Come hither Annophel,
Stand close to me, we'l change our affability
Into a form of State: and they shall know
Our heart is still our own.

Enter Arcanes, Fernando, and Gaspero;

Arc. My Lord ———

Casp. Arcanes,
I know them both: Fernando, as you are
A man of greatness, I should under-value
The right my sword hath fought for, to observe
Low-fawning complements, but as you are
A Captive and a stranger, I can love you,
And must be kind. You are welcom.

Fern. 'Tis the all
Of my ambition.

Cas. And for proof how much
He truly honours your heroick virtues,
The Senate on his importunity,
Commend him to your Lordships guard.

Cas. For what?

Cas. During the time of his abode in Candy,
To be your household guest.

Fer. Wherein my Lord,
You shall more make me debtor to your nobleness,
Than if you had return'd me without ransom.

Cas. Are you in earnest Sir?

Fern. My sute to the Senate
Shall best resolve you that.

Cas. Come hither Secretarie,
Look that this be no trick now put upon me:
For if it be ——— Sirrah ———

Cas. As I have troth
(My Lord) it only is a favour granted
Upon Fernando's motion, from himself:
Your Lordship must conceive, I'de not partake Ought, but what should concern your honour; Who Has been the prop, our Countries shield, and safety,
But the renowned Cassilane?

Cas. Applause?
Is Gaspero — puff — nothing — why, young Lord,
Would you so much be sequester'd from those
That are the blazing Comets of the time,

To live a solitary life with me?
 A man forsaken? all my hospitality
 Is now contracted to a few; these two,
 The tempest-wearied Souldier, and this Virgin;
 We cannot feast your eyes with Masques and Revels,
 Or Courtly Anticks; the sad Sports we riot in,
 Are tales of foughten fields, of Martial scars,
 And things done long ago, when men of courage
 Were held the best, not those well-spoken Youths,
 Who only carry Conquest in their tongues:
 Now stories of this nature are unseasonable
 To entertain a great Duke's Son with.

Fer. Herein

Shall my Captivity be made my happiness,
 Since what I lose in freedom, I regain
 (With int'rest) by conversing with a Souldier,
 So matchless for experience, as great Cassilane:
 'Pray Sir, admit me.

Cas. If you come to mock me,
 I shall be angry.

Fer. By the love I bear

To goodness, my intents are honourable.

Cas. Then in a word, my Lord, your visitations
 Shall find all due respect: but I am now
 Grown old, and have forgot to be an Host;
 Come when you please, you are welcome.

Fer. Sir, I thank you.

Ann. Good Sir, be not too urgent; for my Father
 Will soon be mov'd: yet, in a noble way
 Of courtesie, he is as easily conquer'd.

Fer. Lady, your words are like your beauty, powerful;
 I shall not strive more how to do him service,
 Than how to be your servant.

Cas. She's my Daughter,
 And does command this House.

Fer. So I conceive her.

Cas. Do you hear?

Gas. My honour'd Lord.

Cas. Commend me to them:
 Tell 'em I thank them.

Gas. Whom, my Lord?

Cas. The Senate;

Why, how come you so dull? O they are gracious,
 And infinitely grateful—— Thou art eloquent,
 Speak modestly in mentioning my services;
 And if ought fall out in the By, that must
 Of meer necessity touch any act
 Of my deserving praises, blush when you talk on't,
 'Twill make them blush to hear on't.

Gas. Why, my Lord——

Cas. Nay, nay, you are too wise now; good, observe me.
 I do not rail against the hopeful Springall,
 That builds up Monuments in Bras; rears Trophies
 With Mottoes and Inscriptions, quaint devices
 Of Poetry and Fiction; let's be quiet.

Arc. You must not cross him.

Gas. Not for Candy's Wealth.

Fer. You shall for ever make me yours.

Ann. 'Twere pity to double your Captivity.

Arc. Who's here, Decius?

Enter Decius.

Cas. Ha! Decius? who nam'd Decius?

Dec. My duty to your Lordship, I am bold,
 Presuming on your noble, and known goodness
 To——

Cas. What?

Dec. Present you with this——

Cas. Letter?

Dec. Yes, my honour'd Lord.

Cas. From whom?

Dec. 'Please you peruse

The inside, and you shall find a name subscrib'd,
 In such humility, in such obedience,

That you your self will judge it tyranny
 Not to receive it favourably.

Cas. Hey-day!

Good words my Masters: this is Court-infection,
 And none but Cowards ply them: tell me, Decius,
 Without more circumstance, who is the Sender?

Dec. Your most griev'd Son, Antinous.

Cas. On my life

A Challenge; speak, as thou art worthy, speak;
 I'll answer't.

Dec. Honour'd Sir.

Cas. No honour'd Sirs——

Fool your young Idol with such pompous Attributes.
 Say briefly, what contains it?

Dec. 'Tis a lowly

Petition for your favour.

Cas. Rash young man,

But that thou art under my own roof, and know'st
 I dare not any way infringe the Laws
 Of Hospitality, thou should'st repent
 Thy bold and rude intrusion. But presume not Again to shew thy Letter, for thy life;
Decius, not for thy life.

Arc. Nay then, (my Lord)

I can with-hold no longer; you are too rough,
 And wrestle against nature with a violence
 More than becomes a Father; wherein would ye
 Come nearer to the likeness of God,
 Than in your being entreated? Let not thirst
 Of Honour, make you quite forget you are
 A Man, and what makes perfect manhoods, comforts
 A Father.

Ann. If a memory remain
 Of my departed Mother; if the purity
 Of her unblemish'd faith deserve to live
 In your remembrance, let me yet by these
 Awake your love to my uncomforted Brother.

Fer. I am a Stranger, but so much I tender
 Your Sons desertful Vertues, that I vow
 His Sword ne'r conquer'd me so absolutely,
 As shall your courtesie, if you vouchsafe
 At all our instances, to new receive him
 Into your wonted favour.

Gas. Sir, you cannot Require more low submission.

Ann. Am I not

Grown vile yet in your eyes? then by the name
 Of Father, let me once more sue for him,
 Who is the only now remaining Branch
 With me, of that most ancient root, whose Body
 You are, dear Sir.

Cas. 'Tis well, an host of furies
 Could not have baited me more torturingly,
 More rudely, or more most unnaturally.
Decius, I say, let me no more hear from him;
 For this time go thou hence, and know from me
 Thou art beholding to me that I have not
 Kill'd thee already, look to't next, look to't.

Arcanes fie, fie Annophel.

Arc. He's gone;

Chaf'd beyond sufferance; we must follow him.

Dec. Lady, this Letter is to you.

Ann. Come with me,

For we must speak in private; 'please you, Sir,
 To see what entertainment our sad house
 Can yield?

Fer. I shall attend you, Lady.

Gas. How do you like
 To sojourn here, my Lord?

Fer. More than to feast

With all the Princes of the Earth besides:
Gonzalo told me that thou wert honest.

Gas. Yes Sir,
 And you shall find it.

[Exit.

[Exit.

Fer.

Fer. Shall I?

Gaf. All my follies
Be else recorded to my shame.

Fer. Enough,
My heart is here for ever lodg'd.

Gaf. The Lady.

Fer. The place admits no time to utter all,
But Gaspero if thou wilt prove my friend,
I'll say thou art——

Gaf. Your Servant; I conceive ye,
We'll chuse some fitter leifure.

Fer. Never man
Was (in a moment) or more blest'd or wretched. [Exeunt.]

Enter Hyparcha (placing two Chairs) Antinous, and Erotia.

Er. Leave us,

Hyp. I shall. [Exit.]

Er. Antinous, sit down.

Ant. Madam.

Er. I say sit down, I do command you sit;
For look what honour thou dost gain by me,
I cannot lose it: happy Antinous,
The graces and the higher Deities
Smil'd at thy Birth, and still continue it:
Then think that I (who scorn lesser examples)
Must do the like: such as do taste my power,
And talk of it with fear and reverence,
Shall do the same unto the man I favour.
I tell thee Youth, thou hast a conquest won,
Since thou cam'st home, greater than that last,
Which dignified thy Fame, greater than if
Thou should'st go out again, and conquer farther;
For I am not ashamed to acknowledge
My self subdued by thee.

Ant. Great Lady——

Er. Sit still, I will not hear thee else; now speak,
And speak like my Antinous, like my Souldier,
Whom Cupid, and not Mars hath sent to Battel.

Ant. I must (I see) be silent.

Er. So thou maist;

There's greater action in it than in clamour,
A look (if it be gracious) will begin the War,
A word conclude it; then prove no Coward,
Since thou hast such a friendly enemy,
That teaches thee to conquer.

Ant. You do amaze me, Madam,
I have no skill, no practice in this War,
And whether you be serious, or please
To make your sport on a dejected man,
I cannot rightly guess; but be it as it will,
It is a like unhappinefs to me:
My discontents bear those conditions in them,
And lay me out so wretched, no designs
(However truly promising a good)
Can make me relish ought but a sweet-bitter
Voluntary Exile.

Er. Why an Exile?

What comfort can there be in those Companions
Which sad thoughts bring along with?

Enter Hyparcha.

Hyp. Madam.

Er. Whence comes this well tun'd found? [Musick.]

Hyp. I know not, Madam.

Er. Listen Wench;

Whatever friendly hands they are that send it,
Let 'em play on; they are Masters of their faculty: [Song.]
Doth it please you, Sir?

Ant. According to the time.

Er. Go to 'em, Wench,
And tell 'em, we shall thank 'em; for they have kept
As good time to our disposition, as to their instruments;
Unless Antinous shall say he loves,

There never can be sweeter accents utter'd.

Enter Philander.

Phi. Let then the heart that did employ those hands;
Receive some small share of your thanks with them;
'Tis happinefs enough that you did like it;
A fortune unto me, that I should send it
In such a lucky minute; but to obtain
So gracious welcome did exceed my hopes.

Er. Good Prince, I thank you for't.

Phi. O Madam, pour not (too fast) joys on me,
But sprinkle 'em so gently I may stand 'em;
It is enough at first, you have laid aside
Those cruel angry looks out of your eyes,
With which (as with your lovely) you did strike
All your Beholders in an Ecstasie.

Er. Philander, you have long profest to love me.

Phi. Have I but profest it, Madam?

Er. Nay, but hear me?

Phi. More attentively than to an Oracle.

Er. And I will speak more truly, if more can be;
Nor shall my language be wrapt up in Riddles,
But plain as truth it self; I love this Gentleman,
Whose grief has made him so uncapable
Of Love, he will not hear, at least not understand it.
I, that have lookt with scornful eyes on thee,
And other Princes, mighty in their states,
And in their friends as fortunate, have now pray'd,
In a petitionary kind almost,
This man, this well-deserving man, (that I must say
To look upon this beauty, yet you see
He casts his eyes rather upon the ground,
Than he will turn 'em this way; Philander,
You look pale; I'll talk no more.

Phi. Pray go forward; I would be your Martyr,
To dye thus, were immortally to live.

Er. Will you go to him then, and speak for me?
You have loved longer, but not ferventer,
Know how to speak, for you have done it like
An Orator, even for your self; then how will you for me
Whom you profests to love above your self.

Phi. The Curses of Dissemblers follow me
Unto my Grave, and if I do not so.

Er. You may (as all men do) speak boldlier, better
In their friends cause still, than in your own;
But speak your utmost, yet you cannot feign;
I will stand by, and blush to witness it.

Tell him, since I beheld him, I have lost
The happinefs of this life, food, and rest;
A quiet bosome, and the state I went with.

Tell him how he has humbled the proud,
And made the living but a dead Erotia.
Tell him withal, that she is better pleas'd
With thinking on him, than enjoying these.
Tell him—— Philander, Prince; I talk in vain
To you, you do not mark me.

Phi. Indeed I do.

Er. But thou dost look so pale,
As thou wilt spoil the story in relating.

Phi. Not, if I can but live to tell it.

Er. It may be you have not the heart:

Phi. I have a will I am sure how e'r my heart
May play the Coward, but if you please, I'll try.

Er. If a kiss will strengthen thee, I give you leave
To challenge it, nay, I will give it you.

Phi. O that a man should taste such heavenly blifs,
And be enjoy'd to beg it for another!

Er. Alas, it is a misery I grieve
To put you to, and I will suffer rather
In his tyranny, than thou in mine,

Phi. Nay Madam, since I cannot have your love,
I will endeavour to deserve your pity;
For I had rather have within the grave
Your love, than you should want it upon earth.

But how can I hope, with a feeble tongue
To instruct him in the rudiments of love,
When your most powerful Beauty cannot work it?

Er. Do what thou wilt (Philander) the request
Is so unreasonable, that I quit thee of it.
I desire now no more but the true patience,
And fortitude of Lovers, with those helps
Of sighs and tears, which I think is all the Physick—

Phi. O if he did but hear you 'twere enough;
And I will 'wake him from his Apoplexie.

Antinous.

Ant. My Lord?

Phi. Nay, 'pray,
No courtesie to me, you are my Lord,
(Indeed you are) for you command her heart
That commands mine; nor can you want to know it.
For look you, she that told it you in words,
Explains it now more passionately in tears;
Either thou hast no heart, or a marble one,
If those drops cannot melt it; prithee look up
And see how sorrow sits within her eyes,
And love the grief she goes with (if not her)
Of which thou art the Parent; and never yet
Was there (by Nature) that thing made so stony
But it would love what ever it begot.

Ant. He that begot me did beget these cares
Which are good issues, though happily by him
Esteemed Monsters: Nay, the ill-judging World
Is likely enough to give them those Characters.

Phi. What's this to love, and to the Lady? he's old,
Wrathful, perverse, self-will'd, and full of anger,
Which are his faults; but let them not be thine;
He thrusts you from his love, she pulls thee on;
He doubts your Vertues, she doth double them;
O either use thine own eyes, or take mine,
And with them my heart, then thou wilt love her,
Nay, dote upon her more than on thy duty,
And men will praise thee equally for it,
Neglecting her, condemn thee as a man
Unworthy such a fortune: O Antinous,
'Tis not the friendship that I bear to thee,
But her command, that makes me utter this;
And when I have prevail'd, let her but say,
Philander, you must dye or this is nothing,
It shall be done together with a breath,
With the same willingness I live to serve her.

Er. No more, Philander.

Phi. All I have done, is little yet to purpose,
But ere I leave him I will perceive him blush;
And make him feel the passions that I do,
And every true Lover will assist me in't,
And lend me their sad sighs to blow it home,
For Cupid wants a Dart to wound this bosome.

Er. No more, no more, Philander, I can endure no more,
Pray let him go; go good Antinous, make peace
With your own mind, no matter though I perish. Ex.

Acius Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hyparcha, and Mochingo.

Hyp. I Cannot help it.

Moch. Nor do I require it,
The malady needs no Physician,
Help hospital people.

Hyp. I am glad to hear
You are so valiant.

Moch. Valiant?
Can any man be proud that is not valiant?
Foolish Woman, what would'st thou say? thou—
I know not what to call thee.

Hyp. I can you,

For I can call you Coxcomb, Ass, and Puppy.

Moch. You do doe it, I thank you.

Hyp. That you'll lose a Fortune,
Which a Cobler better deserves than thou dost.

Moch. Do not provoke my magnanimity,
For when I am incens'd I am insensible,
Go tell thy Lady, that hath sent me word
She will discard me, that I discard her,
And throw a scorn upon her, which I would not,
But that she does me wrong.

Enter Erota, and Antinous.

Erot. Do you not glory in your Conquest more,
To take some great man Prisoner, than to kill him?
And shall a Lady find less mercy from you,
That yields her self your Captive, and for her Ransome,
Will give the Jewel of her life, her heart,
Which she hath lockt from all men but thy self?
For shame (Antinous) throw this dulness off;
Art thou a man no where but in the field?

Hyp. He must hear Drums, and Trumpets ere he sleeps,
And at this instant dreams he's in his Armour;
These iron-hearted Souldiers are so cold,
Till they be beaten to a Womans Arms,
And then they love 'em better than their own;
No Fort can hold them out.

Ant. What pity it is (Madam) that your self,
Who are all Excellence, should become so wretched,
To think on such a Wretch as Grief hath made me!
Seldome despairing men look up to Heaven,
Although it still speak to 'em in its Glories;
For when sad thoughts perplex the mind of man,
There is a Plummert in the heart that weighs,
And pulls us (living) to the dust we came from;
Did you but see the miseries you pursue,
(As I the happiness that I avoid
That doubles my afflictions) you would flye
Unto some Wilderness, or to your Grave,
And there find better Comforts than in me,
For Love and Cares can never dwell together.

Er. They should,
If thou hadst but my Love and I thy Cares.

Ant. What wild Beast in the Desert but would be Taught by this Tongue to leave his Cruelty,
Though all the beauties of the face were vail'd!
But I am savager than any Beast,
And shall be so till Decius does arrive,
Whom with so much submission I have sent
Under my hand, that if he do not bring
His Benediction back, he must to me
Be much more cruel than I to you.

Er. Is't but your Fathers pardon you desire?

Ant. With his love, and then nothing next that, like yours.

Enter Decius.

Er. Decius is come.

Ant. O welcome Friend; if I apprehend not Too much of joy, there's comfort in thy looks.

Er. There is indeed; I prithee Decius speak it. (ter'd.

Dec. How! prithee Decius! this Woman's strangely al-

Ant. Why dost not speak (good friend) and tell me how
The reverend Blessing of my life receiv'd
My humble lines; wept he for joy?

Dec. No, there's a Letter will inform you more;
Yet I can tell you what I think will grieve you,
The Old Man is in want and angry still,
And poverty is the Bellows to the Coal
More than distaste from you as I imagine.

Ant. What's here? how's this? It cannot be! now sure
My griefs delude my senses.

Er. In his looks
I read a world of Changes; Decius, mark
With what a sad amazement he surveys

The News; canst thou guess what 'tis?

Dec. None good, I fear.

Er. I fear so too; and then——

Ant. It is her hand.

Er. Are you not well?

Ant. Too well: if I were ought

But Rock, this Letter would conclude my miseries,
Peruse it (Lady) and resolve me then,
In what a case I stand.

Dec. Sir, the worst is,
Your Fathers lowness and distaste.

Ant. No, Decius,
My Sister writes Fernando has made suit
For love to her; and to express sincerely
His constant truth, hath like a noble Gentleman,
Discovered plots of treachery; contriv'd
By false Gonzalo; not intending more
The utter ruine of our house, than generally
Candies Confusion.

Dec. 'Tis a generous part
Of young Fernando.

Ant. 'Tis, and I could wish
All thrift to his affections, Decius.
You find the sum on't, Madam.

Er. Yes, I do.

Ant. And can you now yet think a heart oppress'd
With such a throng of cares, can entertain
An amorous thought? Love frees all toils but one,
Calamity and it can ill agree.

Er. Will't please you speak my doom?

Ant. Alas, great Lady,
Why will you flatter thus a desperate Man
That is quite cast away? O had you not Procur'd the Senates Warrant to enforce
My stay, I had not heard of these sad News.
What would ye have me do?

Er. Love me, or kill me,
One word shall sentence either; for as Truth
Is just, if you refuse me, I am resolute
Not to out-live my thraldome.

Ant. Gentle Lady.

Er. Say, must I live, or dye?

Dec. My Lord, how can you
Be so inexorable? here's Occasion
Of succouring your Father in his wants
Securely profer'd, pray Sir, entertain it.

Er. What is my sentence?

Ant. What you pleas'd to have it.

Er. As thou art gentle speak those words again.

Ant. Madam, you have prevail'd; yet give me leave
Without offence, ere I resign the interest
Your heart hath in my heart, to prove your secrecie.

Er. Antinous, 'tis the greatest argument
Of thy affections to me.

Ant. Madam, thus then,
My Father stands for certain sums engag'd
To treacherous Gonzalo; and has morgag'd
The greatest part of his estate to him;
If you receive this Morgage, and procure
Acquittance from Gonzalo to my Father,
I am what you would have me be.

Er. You'll love me then?

Ant. Provided (Madam) that my Father know not
I am an Agent for him.

Er. If I fail

In this, I am unworthy to be lov'd.
Ant. Then (with your favour) thus I seal my truth,
Today, and Decius witness how unchangingly
I shall still love Erota.

Er. Thou hast quickned
A dying heart, Antinous.

Dec. This is well;
Much happiness to both.

Enter Hyparcha.

Hyp. The Lord Gonzalo
Attends you, Madam.

Er. Comes as we could wish,
Withdraw Antinous, here's a Closet, where
You may partake his errand; let him enter.

Enter Gonzalo.

Ant. Madam you must be wary.

[Exit.

Er. Fear it not,
I will be ready for him; to entertain him
With smiling Welcome. Noble Sir, you take Advantage of the time; it had been fit
Some notice of your presence might have fashion'd
A more prepared state.

Gonz. Do you mock me, Madam?

Er. Trust me, you wrong your judgment, to repute
My Gratitude a fault; I have examin'd
Your portly carriage, and will now confess
It hath not slightly won me.

Gonz. The Wind's turn'd;
I thought 'twould come to this; it pleas'd us, Madam,
At our last interview, to mention Love;
Have you consider'd on't?

Er. With more than common
Content: but Sir, if what you spoke you meant,
(As I have cause to doubt) then——

Gonz. What, (sweet Lady?)

Er. Methinks we should lay by this form of stateliness;
Loves Courtship is familiar, and for instance,
See what a change it hath begot in me,
I could talk humbly now, as Lovers use.

Gonz. And I, and I, we meet in one self-centre
Of blest Consent.

Er. I hope my weakness, Sir,
Shall not deserve neglect; but if it prove so
I am not the first Lady has been ruin'd
By being too credulous; you will smart for't one day.

Gonz. Angel-like Lady, let me be held a Villain,
If I love not sincerely.

Er. Would I knew it.

Gonz. Make proof by any fit Command.

Er. What, do you mean to marry me?

Gonz. How! mean? nay more, I mean
To make you Empress of my Earthly Fortunes,
Regent of my desires, for did you covet
To be a real Queen, I could advance you.

Er. Now I perceive you slight me, and would make me
More simple than my Sexes frailty warrants.

Gonz. But say your mind, and you shall be a Queen.

Er. On those Conditions, call me yours.

Gonz. Enough.

But are we safe?

Er. Assuredly.

Gonz. In short,
Yet, Lady, first be plain; would you not chuse
Much rather to prefer your own Sun-rising,
Than any's else though ne'r so near entituled
By Blood, or right of Birth?

Er. 'Tis a question
Needs not a resolution.

Gonz. Good; what if
I set the Crown of Candy on your head?

Er. I were a Queen indeed then.

Gonz. Madam, know
There's but a Boy 'twixt you and it; suppose him
Transhap'd into an Angel.

Er. Wife Gonzalo,
I cannot but admire thee.

Gonz. 'Tis worth thinking on;
Besides, your Husband shall be Duke of Venice.

Er. Gonzalo, Duke of Venice?

Gonz. You are mine you say?

Er.

Er. Pish : you but dally with me ; and would lull me
In a rich golden dream.

Gonz. You are too much distrustfull of my truth.

Er. Then you must give me leave to apprehend
The means, and manner how.

Gonz. Why thus ———

Er. You shall not,

We may be over-heard ; Affairs and counsels
Of such high nature, are not to be trusted
Not to the Air it self, you shall in writing,
Draw out the full design ; which if effected,
I am as I profess.

Gonz. O I applaud
Your ready care, and secrecie.

Er. Gonzalo,

There is a bar yet, 'twixt our hopes and us,
And that must be remov'd.

Gonz. What is't ?

Er. Old Cassilane.

Gonz. Ha ? fear not him : I build upon his ruines Already.

Er. I would find a smoother course
To shift him off.

Gonz. As how ?

Er. We'l talk in private,
I have a ready plot.

Gonz. I shall adore you.

[Exeunt.

Enter Fernando, and Annophel.

Fer. Madam, although I hate unnooble practices,
And therefore have perform'd no more than what
I ought, for honours safety : yet Annophel,
Thy love hath been the spur, to urge me forward
For speedier diligence.

Anno. Sir your own fame
And memory will best reward themselves.

Fer. All gain is los (sweet beauty) if I mis
My comforts here : The Brother and the Sister
Have doubleconquer'd me, but thou maist triumph.

Anno. Good Sir, I have a Father.

Fern. Yes, a brave one ;
Could'st thou obscure thy beauty, yet the happiness
Of being but his Daughter, were a dower
Fit for a Prince : what say ye ?

Anno. You have deserv'd
As much as I should grant.

Fer. By this fair hand
I take possession.

Anno. What in words I dare not,
Imagine in my silence.

Fer. Thou art all vertue.

Enter Cassilanes, and Arcanes.

Cas. I'll tell thee how : Baldwin the Emperour,
Pretending title, more through tyranny ;
Than right of conquest, or descent, usurp'd
The stile of Lord o're all the Greecian Islands,
And under colour of an amity
With Creet, prefer'd the Marquess Mountferato
To be our Governor ; the Cretians vex'd
By the ambitious Turks, in hope of aid
From the Emperour, receiv'd for General,
This Mountferato ; he (the wars appeas'd)
Plots with the state of Venice, and takes money
Of them for Candy : they paid well, he steals
Away in secret ; since which time, that right
The state of Venice claims o're Candy, is
By purchase, not inheritance or Conquest :
And hence grows all our quarrel.

Arc. So an Usurer
Or Lumbard-Jew, might with some bags of trash,
Buy half the Western world.

Cas. Mony, Arcanes,
Is now a God on Earth : it cracks virginities,

And turns a Christian, Turk ;
Bribes justice, cut-throats honour, does what not ?

Arc. Not captives Candy.

Cas. Nor makes thee dishonest,
Nor me a Coward—Now Sir, here is homely,
But friendly entertainment.

Fer. Sir, I find it.

Arc. And like it, do ye not ?

Fer. My repair speaks for me.

Cas. Fernando we were speaking off—how this ?

Enter Gonzalo, and Gaspero, with a Casket.

Gon. Your friend, and servant.

Cas. Creditors, my Lord,
Are Masters and no Servants : as the world goes,
Debtors are very slaves to those to whom
They have been beholding to ; in which respect,
I should fear you Gonzalo.

Gon. Me, my Lord ?

You owe me nothing.

Cas. What, nor love, nor mony ?

Gon. Yes, love, I hope, not mony.

Cas. All this braverie
Will scarcely make that good.

Gonz. 'Tis done already :

See Sir, your Mortgage which I only took,
In case you and your son had in the wars
Miscarried : I yield it up again : 'tis yours.

Cas. Are ye so conscionable ?

Gonz. 'Tis your own.

Cas. Pish, pish, I'll not receive what is not mine,
That were a dangerous business.

Gon. Sir, I am paid for't,
The summes you borrowed, are return'd ; The bonds
Cancel'd, and your acquittance formerly seal'd :
Look here Sir, Gaspero is witness to it.

Cas. My honoured Lord, I am.

Gon. My Lord Fernando,
Arcanes and the rest, you all shall testifie,
That I acquit Lord Cassilane for ever,
Of any debts to me.

Cas. 'Tis plain and ample :
Fortune will once again smile on us fairly.

Cas. But hark ye, hark ye, if you be in earnest,
Whence comes this bounty ? or whose is't ?

Gon. In short,
The great Erota by this Secretary,
Return'd me my full due.

Cas. Erota ? why
Should she do this ?

Gon. You must ask her the cause,
She knows it best.

Cas. So ho, Arcanes, none
But women pity us ? soft-hearted women ?
I am become a brave fellow now, Arcanes,
Am I not ?

Arc. Why Sir, if the gracious Princess
Have took more special notice of your services,
And means to be more thankfull than some others,
It were an injury to gratitude,
To disesteem her favours.

Anno. Sir she ever
For your sake most respectfully lov'd me.

Cas. The Senate, and the body of this Kingdom
Are herein (let me speak it without arrogance)
Beholding to her : I will thank her for it ;
And if she have reserv'd a means whereby
I may repay this bounty with some service,
She shall be then my Patroness : come Sirs,
We'l taste a cup of wine together now.

Gon. Fernando, I must speak with you in secret.

Fer. You shall—Now Gaspero, all's well.

Cas. There's news
You must be acquainted with.

Come, there is no master-piece in Art, like Policie.
[Exeunt.]

AÆius Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Fernando, and Michael.

Fer. THE Senate is inform'd at full.
Mic. Gonzalo

Dreams not of my arrival yet.

Fer. Nor thinks
'Tis possible his plots can be discover'd :
He fatts himself with hopes of Crowns, and Kingdoms,
And laughs securely, to imagine how
He means to gull all but himself : when truly,
None is so grossly gull'd as he.

Mich. There was never
A more arch villain.

Fer. Peace, the Senate comes.

Enter Porphicio, Pof. Senators, and Gaspero, Attend.

Por. How closely Treason cloaks it self in forms
Of Civil honesty ?

Pof. And yet how palpably
Does heaven reveal it ? Fer. Gracious Lords.

Gaf. The Embassadour,
Lord Paulo Michael, Advocate
To the great Duke of Venice.

Por. You are most welcome,
Your Master is a just and noble Prince.

Mic. My Lords, he bad me say, that you may know
How much he scorns, and (as good Princes ought)
Defies base indirect, and godless treacheries ;
To your more Sacred wisdoms he refers
The punishment due to the false Gonzalo,
Or else to send him home to Venice.

Pof. Herein
The Duke is royal : Gaspero, the Prince
Of Cyprus answer'd he would come.

Gaf. My Lords,
He will not long be absent.

Enter Philander, and Melitus.

Porp. You Fernando,
Have made the State your debter : worthy Prince,
We shall be tutors to you for your presence,
In hearing, and determining of matters
Greatly concerning Candy.

Phi. Fathers, I am
A stranger.

Pof. Why, the cause, my Lord, concerns
A stranger : please you feat your self.

Phi. How e're
Unfit, since you will have it so, my Lords,
You shall command me.

Por. You my Lord Fernando,
With the Ambassador, withdraw a while.

Fer. My Lords, we shall.

Pof. Melitus, and the Secretary,
Give notice to Gonzalo, that the Senate
Requires his presence. [Ex. Gaf. and Mel.]

Enter Cassilane, and Arca.

Phi. What concerns the business ?

Por. Thus noble Prince

Cas. Let me alone, thou troublest me,
I will be heard.

Arc. You know not what you do.

Pof. Forbear : who's he that is so rude ? what's he that
To interrupt our counsels ? (dares

Cas. One that has guarded,
Those Purple robes from Cankers worse than Moths,

One that hath kept your fleeces on your backs,
That would have been snatch'd from you : but I see
'Tis better now to be a Dog, a Spaniel
In times of Peace, then boast the bruised scars,
Purchas'd with loss of blood in noble wars,
My Lords, I speak to you.

Por. Lord Cassilane,

We know not what you mean.

Cas. Yes, you are set

Upon a bench of justice ; and a day
Will come (hear this, and quake ye potent great ones)
When you your selves shall stand before a judge,
Who in a pair of scales will weigh your actions,
Without abatement of one grain : as then
You would be found full weight, I charge ye fathers
Let me have justice now.

Pof. Lord Cassilane,
What strange distemperature provokes distrust
Of our impartiality ? be sure
We'll flatter no mans injuries.

Cas. 'Tis well ;

You have a Law, Lords, that without remorse
Dooms such as are belepred with the curse
Of foul ingratitude unto death.

Por. We have.

Cas. Then do me justice.

Enter Antinous, Decius, Erotia, Hyparcha.

Dec. Mad man, whither run'st thou ?

Ant. Peace Decius, I am deaf.

Hyp. Will you forget

Your greatness, and your modesty ?

Er. Hyparcha leave, I will not hear.

Ant. Lady ; great, gentle, Lady.

Er. Prethee young man forbear to interrupt me,
Triumph not in thy fortunes ; I will speak.

Pof. More uproars yet ! who are they that disturb us ?

Cas. The viper's come ; his fears have drawn him hither,
And now, my Lords, be Chornicled for ever,
And give me justice against this vile Monster,
This bastard of my blood.

Er. 'Tis justice, Fathers,
I sue for too : and though I might command it,
(If you remember Lords, whose child I was)
Yet I will humbly beg it ; this old wretch
Has forfeited his life to me.

Cas. Tricks, tricks ;

Complots, devices, 'twixt these pair of young-ones,
To blunt the edge of your well temper'd Swords,
Wherewith you strike offenders, Lords, but I Am not a baby to be fear'd with bug bears,
'Tis justice I require.

Er. And I.

Ant. You speak too tenderly ; and too much like your
To mean a cruelty ; which would make monstrous (self
Your Sex : yet for the loves sake, which you once
Pleas'd to pretend, give my griev'd Father leave
To urge his own revenge ; you have no cause
For yours : keep peace about ye.

Cas. Will you hear me ?

Phil. Here's some strange novelty.

Pof. Sure we are mock'd,
Speak one at once : say wherein hath your Son
Transgress'd the Law ?

Cas. O the gross mists of dulness !
Are you this Kingdomes Oracles, yet can be
So ignorant ? first hear, and then consider.
That I begot him, gave him birth and life,
And education, were, I must confess,
But duties of a Father : I did more ;
I taught him how to manage Arms, to dare
An Enemy ; to court both death and dangers ;
Yet these were but additions to compleat
A well accomplish'd Souldier : I did more yet.

I made him chief Commander in the field
Next to my self, and gave him the full prospect
Of honour, and preferment; train'd him up
In all perfections of a Martiallist:

But he unmindful of his gratitude,
You know with what contempt of my deserts,
First kick'd against mine honour, scorned all
My services; then got the palm of glory
Unto himself: yet not content with this,
He (lastly) hath conspir'd my death, and fought
Means to engage me to this Lady's debt,
Whose bounty all my whole estate could never
Give satisfaction to: now honoured Fathers,
For this cause only, if your Law be law,
And you the Ministers of justice; then
Think of this strange ingratitude in him.

Phil. Can this be so Antinous?

Ant. 'Tis all true,

Nor hath my much wrong'd father limn'd my faults
In colours half so black, as in themselves,
My guilt hath dy'd them: were there mercy left,
Yet mine own shame would be my Executioner:
Lords, I am guilty. Er. Thou beliefst, Antinous,
Thine innocence: alas, my Lords, he's desperate,
And talks he knows not what: you must not credit
His lunacy; I can my self disprove
This accusation: Cassilane, be yet
More mercifull; I beg it.

Cas. Time, nor fate,
The world, or what is in it, shall not alter
My resolution: he shall dye. Er. The Senats
Prayers, or weeping Lovers, shall not alter
My resolution: thou shalt dye. Ant. Why Madam,
Are ye all Marble?

Pos. Leave your shifts Antinous,
What plead you to your Fathers accusation?

Ant. Most fully guilty.

Pos. You have doom'd your self,
We cannot quit you now.

Cas. A burthen'd conscience
Will never need a hang-man: hadst thou dar'd
To have deni'd it, then this Sword of mine
Should on thy head have prov'd thy tongue a liar.

Er. Thy sword? wretched old man, thou hast liv'd too
To carry peace or comfort to thy grave; (long
Thou art a man condemn'd: my Lords, this tyrant
Had perish'd but for me, I still suppli'd
His miserable wants; I sent his Daughter
Mony to buy him food; the bread he eat,
Was from my purse: when he (vain-gloriously)
To dive into the peoples hearts, had pawn'd
His birth-right, I redeem'd it, sent it to him,
And for requitall, only made my suite,
That he would please to new receive his son
Into his favour, for whose love I toid him
I had been still so friendly: but then he
As void of gratitude, as all good nature,
Distracted like a mad man, boasted hither
To pull this vengeance on himself, and us;
For why, my Lords, since by the Law, all means
Is blotted out of your commission,
As this hard hearted Father hath accus'd
Noble Antinous, his unblemished Son,
So I accuse this Father, and crave judgement.

Cas. All this is but deceit, meer trifles forg'd
By combination to defeat the process
Of Justice, I will have Antinous life.

Arc. Sir, what do ye mean?

Er. I will have Cassilane's.

Ant. Cunning and cruel Lady, runs the stream
Of your affections this way? have you not
Conquest enough by treading on my grave?
Unless you send me thither in a shroud
Steept in my fathers blood? as you are woman,

As the protests of love you vow'd were honest;
Be gentler to my Father. Er. Cassilane;
Thou hast a heart of flint: let my intreaties,
My tears, the Sacrifice of griefs unfeigned,
Melt it: yet be a Father to thy son,
Unmask thy long besotted judgement, see
A low obedience kneeling at the feet
Of nature, I beseech you.

Cas. Pish, you cozen

Your hopes: your plots are idle: I am resolute.

Er. Antinous, urge no further.

Ant. Hence thou Sorcery
Of a beguiling softness, I will stand,
Like the earths center, unmov'd; Lords your breath
Must finish these divisions: I confesse
Civility doth teach I should not speak
Against a Lady of her birth, so high
As great Erota, but her injuries
And thankless wrongs to me, urge me to cry
Aloud for justice, Fathers.

Dec. Whither run you?

Ant. For (honoured fathers) that you all may know
That I alone am not unmatchable
In crimes of this condition, lest perhaps
You might conceive, as yet the case appears,
That this foul stain, and guilt runs in a blood;
Before this presence, I accuse this Lady
Of as much vile ingratitude to me.

Cas. Impudent Traitor!

Phi. Her? O spare Antinous;
The world reputes thee valiant, do not soyle
All thy past nobleness with such a cowardize.
As murdering innocent Ladies will stamp on thee.

Ant. Brave Prince, with what unwillingness I force
Her follies, and in those her sin, be witness,
All these about me: she is bloody minded,
And turns the justice of the Law to rigor:
It is her cruelites, not I accuse her:
Shall I have Audience?

Er. Let him speak my Lords.

Dec. Your memory will rot.

Ant. Cast all your eyes

On this, what shall I call her? truthless woman,
When often in my discontents, the sway
Of her untuly blood, her untam'd passion,
(Or name it as you list) had hour by hour
Solicited my love, she vow'd at last
She could not, would not live unless I granted
What shelong sued for: I in tender pity,
To save a Lady of her birth from ruine,
Gave her her life, and promis'd to be hers:
Nor urg'd I ought from her, but secrecie,
And then enjoyn'd her to supply such wants
As I perceiv'd my Fathers late engagements
Had made him subject to; what shall I heap up
Long repetitions? she to quit my pity,
Not only hath discover'd to my Father
What she had promis'd to conceal, but also
Hath drawn my life into this fatal forfeit;
For which since I must dye, I crave a like
Equality of justice against her;
Not that I covet blood, but that she may not
Practise this art of falsehood on some other,
Perhaps more worthy of her love hereafter.

Por. If this be true ———

Er. My Lords, be as the Law is,
Indifferent, upright, I do plead guilty:
Now Sir, what glory have you got by this?
'Las man, I meant not to outlive thy doom,
Shall we be friends in death?

Cas. Hear me, the villain
Scandals her, honour'd Lords.

Er. Leave off to doat,
And dye a wife man.

Ant. I am over-reach'd,
And master'd in my own resolution.

Phi. Will ye be wilfull Madam? here's the curse
Of loves disdain.

Caf. Why fit you like dumb Statues?
Demur no longer.

Pos. Cassilane, Erotia,
Antinous, death ye ask; and 'tis your dooms,
You in your follies liv'd, dye in your follies.

Caf. I am reveng'd, and thank you for it.

Er. Yes, and I: Antinous hath been gracious.

Ant. Sir, may I presume to crave a blessing from you
Before we part?

Caf. Yes, such a one as Parents
Bestow on curs'd sons, now now I laugh
To see how those poor younglings are both cheated
Of life and comfort: look ye, look ye, Lords,
I go but some ten minutes (more or less)
Before my time, but they have finely cozen'd
Themselves of many, many hopefull years
Amidst their prime of youth and glory; now

Enter Annophel.

My vengeance is made full. Welcom my joy,
Thou com'st to take a seasonable blessing
From thy half buried Fathers hand; I am dead
Already girle, and so is she and he,
We all are worms-meat now.

Anno. I have heard all;
Nor shall you dye alone: Lords on my knees
I beg for justice too.

Porp. 'Gainst whom, for what?

Anno. First let me be resolv'd; does the Law favour
None, be they ne're so mighty?

Porp. Not the greatest.

Anno. Then justly I accuse of foul ingratitude
My Lords, you of the Senate all, not one
Excepted. Pos. Porp. Us?

Phil. Annophel — Ann. You are the Authors
Of this unthrifty blood-shed; when your enemies
Came marching to your gates, your children suck'd not Safe at their Mothers breasts, your very Cloysters
Were not secure, your starting-holes of refuge
Not free from danger, nor your lives your own:
In this most desperate Ecstasie, my Father,
This aged man, not only undertook
To guard your lives, but did so; and beat off
The daring foe; for you he pawn'd his lands,
To pay your Souldiers, who without their pay
Refus'd to strike a blow: but, Lords, when peace
Was purchas'd for you, and victorie brought home,
Where was your gratitude, who in your Coffers
Hoarded the rustie treasure which was due
To my unminded Father? he was glad
To live retir'd in want, in penurie,
Whilst you made feasts of surfeit, and forgot
Your debts to him: The sum of all is this,
You have been unthankfull to him; and I crave
The rigor of the Law against you all.

Caf. My Royal spirited daughter!

Ero. Annophel

Thou art a worthy wench; let me embrace thee.

Ann. Lords, why do ye keep your seats? they are no
For such as are offenders. (places)

Pos. Though our ignorance
Of Cassilanes engagements might asswage
Severity of justice, yet to shew
How no excuse should smooth a breach of Law,
I yield me to the trial of it. Porp. So must I:
Great Prince of Cyprus, you are left
The only Moderator in this difference;
And as you are a Prince be a Protector
To wofull Candy. Phil. What a Scene of miserie
Hath thine obdurate frowardness (old man)

Drawn on thy Countries bosom? and for that Thy proud ambition could not mount so high
As to be stil'd thy Countries only Patron,
Thy malice hath descended to the depth
Of Hell, to be renowned in the Title
Of the destroyer? dost thou yet perceive
What curses all posterity will brand
Thy grave with? that at once hast rob'd this Kingdom
Of honour and of safety.

Erot. Children yet unborn
Will stop their ears when thou art nam'd.

Arc. The world will be too little to contain
The memorie of this detested deed;
The Furies will abhorr it.

Dec. What the sword
Could not enforce, your peevisish thirst of honour
(A brave, cold, weak, imaginarie fame)
Hath brought on Candy: Candy groans, not these
That are to die.

Phil. 'Tis happiness enough
For them, that they shall not survive to see
The wounds wherewith thou stab'st the land that gave Thee life and name.

Dec. 'Tis Candy's wrack shall feel —

Caf. The mischief of your folly.

Porp. Pos. Annophel —

Ann. I will not be entreated.

Caf. Prethee Annophel.

Ann. Why would ye urge me to a mercy which
You in your self allow not?

Caf. 'Tis the Law,
That if the party who complains, remit
The offender, he is freed: is't not so Lords?

Porp. Pos. 'Tis so.

Caf. Antinous, By my shame observe:
What a close witch-craft popular applause is:
I am awak'd, and with clear eyes behold
The Lethargie wherein my reason long
Hath been be-charm'd: live, live, my matchless son,
Blest in thy Fathers blessing; much more blest
In thine own vertues: let me dew thy cheeks
With my unmanly tears: Rise, I forgive thee:
And good Antinous, if I shall be thy Father
Forgive me: I can speak no more.

Ant. Dear Sir,
You new beget me now — Madam your pardon;
I heartily remit you. Erot. I as freely
Discharge thee Cassilane.

Anno. My gracious Lords,
Repute me not a blemish to my Sex,
In that I strove to cure a desperate evil
With a more violent remedy: your lives,
Your honours are your own.

Phil. Then with consent
Be reconcil'd on all sides: Please you Fathers
To take your places.

Pos. Let us again ascend,
With joy and thankfulness to Heaven: and now
To other business Lords.

Enter Gaspero, and Melitus, with Gonzalo.

Mel. Two hours and more Sir,
The Senate hath been set.

Gonz. And I not know it?
Who sits with them?

Mel. My Lord, the Prince of Cyprus.

Gonz. Gaspero,
Why how comes that to pass?

Caf. Some weighty cause
I warrant you.

Gonz. Now Lords the business? ha?
Who's here, Erota?

Porp. Secretarie do your charge
Upon that Traitor.

Gonz. Traitor? Gaf. Yes, Gonzalo; Traitor,
Of treason to the peace and state of Candy,
I do arrest thee. Gonz. Me? thou Dog?

Enter Fernando, and Michael.

Mich. With Licence
From this grave Senate, I arrest thee likewise
Of treason to the State of Venice. Gonz. Ha?
Is Michael here? nay then I see
I am undone.

Erot. I shall not be your Queen,
Your Dutchess, or your Empress.

Gonz. Dull, dull brain.

O I am fool'd?

Gaf. Look Sir, do you know this hand? (to Venice,

Mic. Do you know this Seal? First, Lords, he writes
To make a perfect league, during which time
He would in private keep some Troops in pay,
Bribe all the Centinels throughout this Kingdom,
Corrupt the Captains; at a Banquet poyson
The Prince, and greatest Peers, and in conclusion
Yield Candy slave to Venice.

Gaf. Next, he contracted
With the illustrious Princess, the Lady Erota,
In hope of marriage with her, to deliver
All the Venetian gallantry, and strength,
Upon their first arrival, to the mercy
Of her and Candy. Erot. This is true, Gonzalo.

Gonz. Let it be true: what then?

Pos. My Lord Ambassadour,
What's your demand?

Mich. As likes the State of Candy,
Either to sentence him as he deserves
Here, or to send him like a slave to Venice.

Porph. We shall advise upon it.

Gonz. O the Devils,
That had not thrust this trick into my pate——
A Politician fool? destruction plague
Candy and Venice both.

Pos. Porph. Away with him.

Mel. Come Sir, I'll see you safe. [Exeunt Gonz. Mel.

Erot. Lords, e're you part

Be witness to another change of wonder;
Antinous, now be bold, before this presence,
Freely to speak, whether or not us'd
The humblest means affection could contrive,
To gain thy love. Ant. Madam, I must confess it,
And ever am your servant. Erot. Yes Antinous,
My servant, for my Lord thou shalt be never:
I here disclaim the interest thou hadst once
In my too passionate thoughts. Most noble Prince,
If yet a relique of thy wonted flames
Live warm within thy bosom, then I blush not
To offer up the assurance of my faith,
To thee that hast deserv'd it best. Phil. O Madam,
You play with my calamity. Erot. Let heaven
Record my truth for ever. Phil. With more joy
Than I have words to utter, I accept it.
I also pawn you mine.

Ero. The man that in requital
Of noble and un-sought affection
Grows cruel, never lov'd, nor did Antinous.
Yet herein (Prince) ye are beholding to him;
For his neglect of me humbled a pride,
Which to a vertuous wife had been a Monster.

Phil. For which I'll rank him my deserving friend.

Ant. Much comfort dwell with you, as I could wish
To him I honour most. Caf. O my Antinous,
My own, my own good son.

Fer. One suit I have to make.

Phil. To whom Fernando?

Fer. Lord Cassilane to you.

Caf. To me? Fer. This Lady

Hath promised to be mine. Ann. Your blessing Sir;
Brother your love. Ant. You cannot Sir bestow her
On a more noble Gentleman.

Caf. Saist thou so?

Antinous I confirm it. Here Fernando,
Live both as one; she is thine.

Ant. And herein Sister,

I honour you for your wise settled love.

This is a day of Triumph, all Contentions

Are happily accorded: Candy's peace

Secur'd, and Venice vow'd a worthy friend. [Exeunt.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Achilles, and Achoreus.

Achil. I Love the King, nor do dispute his power,
 (For that is not confin'd, nor to be censur'd
 By me; that am his Subject) yet allow me
 The liberty of a Mah, that still would be
 A friend to Justice, to demand the motives
 That did induce young Ptolomy, or Photinus,
 (To whose directions he gives up himself,
 And I hope wisely) to commit his Sister,
 The Princess Cleopatra (if I said
 The Queen (Achillas) 'twere (I hope) no treason,
 She being by her Fathers Testament

(Whose memory I bow to) left Co-heir
 In all he stood possesst of.

Achil. 'Tis confess
 (My good Achoreus) that in these Eastern Kingdoms
 Women are not exempted from the Sceptre,
 But claim a priviledge, equal to the Male;
 But how much such divisions have ta'en from
 The Majesty of Egypt, and what factions
 Have sprung from those partitions, to the ruine
 Of the poor Subject, (doubtful which to follow,)
 We have too many, and too sad examples,
 Therefore, the wife Photinus, to prevent
 The Murthers, and the Massacres, that attend

On disinited Government, and to shew
The King without a Partner, in full splendour,
Thought it convenient the fair Cleopatra,
(An attribute not frequent to the Climate)
Should be committed in safe Custody,
In which she is attended like her Birth,
Until her Beauty, or her royal Dowre,
Hath found her out a Husband.

Ach. How this may
Stand with the rules of policy, I know not;
Most sure I am, it holds no correspondence
With the Rites of Egypt, or the Laws of Nature;
But grant that Cleopatra can sit down
With this disgrace (though insupportable)
Can you imagine, that Romes glorious Senate
(To whose charge, by the will of the dead King
This government was deliver'd) or great Pompey, (That is appointed Cleopatra's Guardian
As well as Ptolomies) will e're approve
Of this rash counsel, their consent not sought for,
That should authorize it?

Achil. The Civil war
In which the Roman Empire is embarqu'd
On a rough Sea of danger, does exact
Their whole care to preserve themselves, and gives them
No vacant time to think of what we do,
Which hardly can concern them.

Ach. What's your opinion
Of the success? I have heard, in multitudes
Of Souldiers, and all glorious pomp of war,
Pompey is much superiour.

Achil. I could give you
A Catalogue of all the severall Nations
From whence he drew his powers: but that were tedious.
They have rich arms, are ten to one in number,
Which makes them think the day already won;
And Pompey being master of the Sea,
Such plenty of all delicates are brought in,
As if the place on which they are entrench'd,
Were not a Camp of Souldiers, but Rome,
In which Lucullus and Apicius joyn'd,
To make a publike Feast: they at Dirachium
Fought with success; but knew not to make use of Fortunes fair offer: so much I have heard
Cesar himself confesse.

Ach. Where are they now?

Achil. In Theffalie, near the Pharsalian plains
Where Cesar with a handfull of his Men
Hems in the greater number: his whole troops
Exceed not twenty thousand, but old Souldiers
Flesh'd in the spoils of Germany and France,
Inur'd to his Command, and only know
To fight and overcome; And though that Famine
Raigns in his Camp, compelling them to tast
Bread made of roots, forbid the use of man,
(Which they with scorn threw into Pompeys Camp
As in derision of his Delicates)
Or corn not yet half ripe, and that a Banquet:
They still besiege him, being ambitious only
To come to blows, and let their swords determine
Who hath the better Cause.

Enter Septinius.

Ach. May Victory
Attend on't, where it is.

Achil. We every hour
Expect to hear the issue.

Sep. Save my good Lords;
By Isis and Osiris, whom you worship;
And the four hundred gods and goddesses
Ador'd in Rome, I am your honours servant.

Ach. Truth needs, Septinius, no oaths.

Achil. You are cruel,
If you deny him swearing, you take from him

Three full parts of his language.

Sep. Your Honour's bitter,
Confound me, where I love I cannot say it;
But I must swear't: yet such is my ill fortune,
Nor vows, nor protestations win belief,
I think, and (I can find no other reason)
Because I am a Roman.

Ach. No Septinius,
To be a Roman were an honour to you,
Did not your manners, and your life take from it,
And cry aloud, that from Rome you bring nothing
But Roman Vices, which you would plant here,
But no seed of her vertues.

Sep. With your reverence
I am too old to learn.

Ach. Any thing honest,
That I believe, without an oath.

Sep. I fear
Your Lordship has slept ill to night, and that Invites this sad discourse: 'twill make you old
Before your time: — O these vertuous Morals,
And old religious principles, that fool us!
I have brought you a new Song, will make you laugh,
Though you were at your prayers.

Ach. What is the subject?

Be free Septinius.

Sep. 'Tis a Catalogue
Of all the Gamesters of the Court and City,
Which Lord lyes with that Lady, and what Gallant
Sports with that Merchants wife; and does relate
Who sells her honour for a Diamond,
Who, for a tiffew robe: whose husband's jealous,
And who so kind, that, to share with his wife,
Will make the match himself:

Harmless conceits,
Though fools say they are dangerous: I sang it
The last night at my Lord Photinus table.

Ach. How? as a Fidler?

Sep. No Sir, as a Guest,
A welcom guest too: and it was approv'd of
By a dozen of his friends, though they were touch'd in't:
For look you, 'tis a kind of merriment,
When we have laid by foolish modesty
(As not a man of fashion will wear it)
To talk what we have done; at least to hear it;
If meerily set down, it fires the blood,
And heightens Crest-faln appetite.

Ach. New doctrine!

Achil. Was't of your own composing?

Sep. No, I bought it
Of a skulking Scribler for two Ptolomies:
But the hints were mine own; the wretch was fearfull:
But I have damn'd my self, should it be question'd,
That I will own it.

Ach. And be punished for it:
Take heed: for you may so long exercise
Your scurrilous wit against authority,
The Kingdoms Counsels; and make profane Jest,
(Which to you (being an atheist) is nothing)
Against Religion, that your great maintainers
(Unless they would be thought Co-partners with you)
Will leave you to the Law: and then, Septinius,
Remember there are whips.

Sep. For whore's I grant you,
When they are out of date, till then are safe too,
Or all the Gallants of the Court are Eunuchs,
And for mine own defence I'll only add this,
I'll be admitted for a wanton tale
To some most private Cabinets, when your Priest-hood
(Though laden with the mysteries of your goddesses)
Shall wait without unnoted: so I leave you
To your pious thoughts.

Achil. 'Tis a strange impudence,
This fellow does put on.

[Exit.]

Ach.

Ach. The wonder great,
He is accepted of.

Achil. Vices, for him,
Make as free way as vertues doe for others.
'Tis the times fault: yet Great ones still have grace'd
To make them sport, or rub them o're with flattery,
Observers of all kinds.

Enter Photinus, and Septinius.

Ach. No more of him,
He is not worth our thoughts: a Fugitive
From Pompeys army: and now in a danger
When he should use his service.

Achil. See how he hangs
On great Photinus Ear.

Sep. Hell, and the furies,
And all the plagues of darkness light upon me:
You are my god on earth: and let me have
Your favour here, fall what can fall hereafter.

Pho. Thou art believ'd: dost thou want mony?

Sep. No Sir.

Pho. Or hast thou any suite? these ever follow
Thy vehement protestations.

Sep. You much wrong me;

How can I want, when your beams shine upon me,
Unless employment to express my zeal
To do your greatness service? do but think
A deed so dark, the Sun would blush to look on,
For which Man-kind would curse me, and arm all
The powers above, and those below against me:
Command me, I will on.

Pho. When I have use,
I'll put you to the test.

Sep. May it be speedy,
And something worth my danger: you are cold,
And know not your own powers: this brow was fashion'd
To wear a Kingly wreath, and your grave judgment,
Given to dispose of monarchies, not to govern
A child's affairs, the peoples eye's upon you,
The Souldier courts you: will you wear a garment
Of fordid loyalty when 'tis out of fashion?

Pho. When Pompey was thy General, Septinius,
Thou saidst as much to him.

Sep. All my love to him,
To Cesar, Rome, and the whole world is lost
In the Ocean of your Bounties: I have no friend,
Project, design, or Countrey, but your favour,
Which I'll preserve at any rate.

Pho. No more;
When I call on you, fall not off: perhaps Sooner than you expect, I may employ you,
So leave me for a while.

Sep. Ever your Creature.

Pho. Good day Achoreus; my best friend Achillas,
Hath fame deliver'd yet no certain rumour
Of the great Roman Action?

Achil. That we are
To enquire, and learn of you Sir: whose grave care
For Egypt's happiness, and great Ptolomies good,
Hath eyes and ears in all parts.

Enter Ptolomy, Labienus, Guard.

Pho. I'll not boast,
What my Intelligence costs me: but 'ere long
You shall know more. The King, with him a Roman.

Ach. The scarlet livery of unfortunate war
Dy'd deeply on his face.

Achil. 'Tis Labienus
Cesars Lieutenant in the wars of Gaul,
And fortunate in all his undertakings:
But since these Civil jars he turn'd to Pompey,
And though he followed the better Cause
Not with the like success,

Pho. Such as are wife

Leave falling buildings, flye to those that rise;
But more of that hereafter.

Lab. In a word, Sir,
These gaping wounds, not taken as a slave,
Speak Pompey's loss: to tell you of the Battail,
How many thousand several bloody shapes
Death wore that day in triumph: how we bore
The shock of Cesars charge: or with what fury
His Souldiers came on as if they had been
So many Cesars, and like him ambitious
To tread upon the liberty of Rome:
How Fathers kill'd their Sons, or Sons their Fathers,
Or how the Roman Piles on either side
Drew Roman blood, which spent, the Prince of weapons,
(The sword) succeeded, which in Civil wars
Appoints the Tent on which wing'd victory
Shall make a certain Stand; then, how the Plains
Flow'd o're with blood, and what a cloud of vulturs
And other birds of prey, hung o're both armies,
Attending when their ready Servitors,
(The Souldiers, from whom the angry gods
Had took all sense of reason, and of pity)
Would serve in their own carcasses for a feast,
How Cesar with his Javelin force'd them on
That made the least stop, when their angry hands
Were lifted up against some known friends face;
Then coming to the body of the army
He shews the sacred Senate, and forbids them
To waite their force upon the Common Souldier,
Whom willingly, if e're he did know pity,
He would have spar'd.

Ptol. The reason Labienus?

Lab. Full well he knows, that in their blood he was
To pass to Empire, and that through their bowels
He must invade the Laws of Rome, and give
A period to the liberty of the world.
Then fell the Lepidi, and the bold Corvini,
The fam'd Torquati, Scipio's, and Marcelli,
(Names next to Pompeys, most renown'd on Earth)
The Nobles, and the Commons lay together,
And Pontique, Punique, and Assyrian blood
Made up one crimson Lake: which Pompey seeing,
And that his, and the fate of Rome had left him
Standing upon the Rampier of his Camp,
Though scorning all that could fall on himself,
He pities them whose fortunes are embark'd
In his unlucky quarrel; cries aloud too
That they should sound retreat, and save themselves:
That he desir'd not, so much noble blood
Should be lost in his service, or attend
On his misfortunes: and then, taking horse
With some few of his friends, he came to Lesbos,
And with Cornelia, his Wife, and Sons,
He's touch'd upon your shore: the King of Parthia,
(Famous in his defeature of the Crassi)
Offer'd him his protection, but Pompey
Relying on his Benefits, and your Faith,
Hath chosen Egypt for his Sanctuary,
Till he may recollect his scattered powers,
And try a second day: now Ptolomy,
Though he appear not like that glorious thing
That three times rode in triumph, and gave laws
To conquer'd Nations, and made Crowns his gift
(As this of yours, your noble Father took
From his victorious hand, and you still wear it
At his devotion) to do you more honour
In his declin'd estate, as the straightest Pine
In a full grove of his yet flourishing friends,
He flies to you for succour, and expects
The entertainment of your Fathers friend,
And Guardian to your self.

Ptol. To say I grieve his fortune
As much as if the Crown I wear (his gift)
Were ravish'd from me, is a holy truth;

Our Gods can witness for me: yet, being young,
And not a free disposer of my self;
Let not a few hours, borrowed for advice,
Beget suspicion of unthankfulness,
(Which next to Hell I hate) pray you retire,
And take a little rest, and let his wounds
Be with that care attended, as they were Carv'd on my flesh: good Labienu, think
The little respite, I desire shall be Wholly employ'd to find the readiest way
To doe great Pompey service.

Lab. May the gods
(As you intend) protect you.

Ptol. Sit: sit all,
It is my pleasure: your advice, and freely.

Ach. A short deliberation in this,
May serve to give you counsel: to be honest,
Religious and thankfull, in themselves
Are forcible motives, and can need no flourish
Or gloss in the perswader; your kept faith,
(Though Pompey never rise to th' height he's fallen from)
Cesar himself will love; and my opinion
Is (still committing it to graver censure)
You pay the debt you owe him, with the hazard
Of all you can call yours,

Ptol. What's yours, Photinus?

Pho. Achoreus (great Ptolomy) hath counsell'd
Like a Religious, and honest man,
Worthy the honour that he justly holds
In being Priest to Isis: But alas,
What in a man, sequester'd from the world,
Or in a private person, is prefer'd,
No policy allows of in a King,
To be or just, or thankfull, makes Kings guilty,
And faith (though prais'd) is punish'd that supports
Such as good Fate forsakes: joyn with the gods,
Observe the man they favour, leave the wretched,
The Stars are not more distant from the Earth
Than profit is from honesty; all the power,
Prerogative, and greatness of a Prince
Is lost, if he descend once but to steer
His course, as what's right, guides him: let him leave
The Scepter, that strives only to be good,
Since Kingdoms are maintain'd by force and blood.

Ach. Oh wicked!

Ptol. Peace: goe on.

Pho. Proud Pompey shews how much he scorns your youth,
In thinking that you cannot keep your own
From such as are or'e come. If you are tired
With being a King, let not a stranger take
What nearer pledges challenge: resign rather
The government of Egypt and of Nile
To Cleopatra, that has title to them,
At least defend them from the Roman gripe,
What was not Pompey's, while the wars endured,
The Conquerour will not challenge; by all the world
Forsaken and despis'd, your gentle Guardian
His hopes and fortunes desperate, makes choice of What Nation he shall fall with: and pursu'd
By their pale ghosts, slain in this Civil war,
He flies not Cesar only, but the Senate,
Of which, the greater part have cloi'd the hunger
Of sharp Pharsalian fowl, he flies the Nations
That he drew to his Quarrel, whose Estates
Are sunk in his; and in no place receiv'd,
Hath found out Egypt, by him yet not ruin'd:
And Ptolomy, things consider'd, justly may Complain of Pompey: wherefore should he stain
Our Egypt, with the spots of civil war?
Or make the peaceable; or quiet Nile
Doubted of Cesar? wherefore should he draw
His loss, and overthrow upon our heads?
Or choose this place to suffer in? already
We have offended Cesar, in our wishes,

And no way left us to redeem his favour
But by the head of Pompey.

Ach. Great Osiris,
Defend thy Egypt from such cruelty,
And barbarous ingratitude!

Pho. Holy trifles,
And not to have place in designs of State;
This sword, which Fate commands me to unsheath,
I would not draw on Pompey, if not vanquish'd.
I grant it rather should have pass'd through Cesar,
But we must follow where his fortune leads us;
All provident Princes measure their intents
According to their power, and so dispose them:
And thinkst thou (Ptolomy) that thou canst prop
His Ruines, under whom sad Rome now suffers?
Or 'tempt the Conquerours force when 'tis confirm'd?
Shall we, that in the Battail fate as Neuters
Serve him that's overcome? No, no, he's lost.
And though 'tis noble to a sinking friend
To lend a helping hand, while there is hope
He may recover, thy part not engag'd
Though one most dear, when all his hopes are dead,
To drown him, set thy foot upon his head.

Ach. Most execrable Counsel.

Pho. To be follow'd,
'Tis for the Kingdoms safety.

Ptol. We give up
Our absolute power to thee: dispose of it
As reason shall direct thee.

Pho. Good Achillas,
Seek out Septinius: do you but sooth him,
He is already wrought: leave the dispatch
To me of Labienu: 'tis determin'd
Already how you shall proceed: nor Fate
Shall alter it, since now the dye is cast,
But that this hour to Pompey is his last.

[Exit.]

SCENA II.

Enter Apollodorus, Eros, Arfino.

Apol. Is the Queen stirring, Eros?

Eros. Yes, for in truth
She touch'd no bed to night.

Apol. I am sorry for it,
And wish it were in me, with my hazard,
To give her ease.

Arf. Sir, she accepts your will,
And does acknowledge she hath found you noble,
So far, as if restraint of liberty
Could give admission to a thought of mirth,
She is your debtor for it.

Apol. Did you tell her
Of the sports I have prepar'd to entertain her?
She was us'd to take delight, with her fair hand,
To angle in the Nile, where the glad fish
(As if they knew who 'twas sought to deceive 'em)
Contended to be taken: other times
To strike the Stag, who wounded by her arrows,
Forgot his tears in death, and kneeling thanks her
To his last gasp, then prouder of his Fate,
Than if with Garlands Crown'd, he had been chosen
To fall a Sacrifice before the altar
Of the Virgin Huntress: the King, nor great Photinus
Forbid her any pleasure; and the Circuit
In which she is confin'd, gladly affords Variety of pastimes, which I would
Encrease with my best service.

Eros. O, but the thought
That she that was born free, and to dispense
Restraint, or liberty to others, should be
At the devotion of her Brother, whom
She only knows her equal, makes this place
In which she lives (though stor'd with all delights)
A loathsome dungeon to her.

Apol.

Ap. Yet, (howe're
She shall interpret it) I'll not be wanting
To do my best to serve her: I have prepar'd
Choice Musick near her Cabinet, and compos'd
Some few lines, (set unto a solemn time)
In the praise of imprisonment. Begin Boy.

The SONG.

Look out bright eyes, and bless the air:
Even in shadows you are fair.
Shut-up beauty is like fire,
That breaks out clearer still and higher.
Though your body be confin'd,
And soft Love a prisoner bound,
Yet the beauty of your mind
Neither check, nor chain hath found.
Look out nobly then, and dare
Even the Fetters that you wear.

Enter Cleopatra.

Cleo. But that we are assur'd this tastes of duty,
And love in you, my Guardian, and desire
In you, my Sister, and the rest, to please us,
We should receive this, as a sawcy rudeness
Offer'd our private thoughts. But your intents
Are to delight us: alas, you wash an Ethiop:
Can Cleopatra, while she does remember
Whose Daughter she is, and whose Sister? (O
I suffer in the name) and that (in Justice)
There is no place in Agypt, where I stand,
But that the tributary Earth is proud
To kiss the foot of her, that is her Queen,
Can she, I say, that is all this, e're relish
Of comfort, or delight, while base Photinus,
Bond-man Achillas, and all other monsters
That reign o're Ptolomy, make that a Court,
Where they reside, and this, where I, a Prison?
But there's a Rome, a Senate, and a Cesar,
(Though the great Pompey lean to Ptolomy)
May think of Cleopatra.

Ap. Pompey, Madam?

Cleo. What of him? speak: if ill, Apollodorus,
It is my happiness: and for thy news
Receive a favour (Kings have kneel'd in vain for)
And kiss my hand:

Ap. He's lost.Cleo. Speak it again?

Ap. His army routed: he fled and pursu'd
By the all-conquering Cesar.

Cleo. Whither bends he?Ap. To Egypt.Cleo. Ha! in person?Ap. 'Tis receiv'd

For an undoubted truth.

Cleo. I live again,

And if assurance of my love, and beauty
Deceive me not, I now shall find a Judge
To do me right: but how to free my self,
And get access? the Guards are strong upon me,
This door I must pass through. Apollodorus,
Thou often hast profess'd (to do me service,)
Thy life was not thine own.

Ap. I am not alter'd;

And let your excellency propound a means,
In which I may but give the least assistance,
That may restore you, to that you were born to,
(Though it call on the anger of the King,
Or, (what's more deadly) all his Minion
Photinus can do to me) I, unmov'd,
Offer my throat to serve you: ever provided,
It bear some probable shew to be effected.
To lose my self upon no ground, were madness,
Not loyal duty.

Cleo. Stand off: to thee alone,
I will discover what I dare not trust
My Sister with, Cesar is amorous,
And taken more with the title of a Queen,
Than feature or proportion, he lov'd Eunoe,
A Moor, deformed too, I have heard, that brought
No other object to inflame his blood,
But that her Husband was a King, on both
He did bestow rich presents; shall I then,
That with a princely birth, bring beauty with me,
That know to prize my self at mine own rate,
Despair his favour? art thou raine?

Ap. I am.

Cleo. I have found out a way shall bring me to him,
Spight of Photinus watches; if I prosper,
(As I am confident I shall) expect
Things greater than thy wishes; though I purchase
His grace with loss of my virginity,
It skills not, if it bring home Majesty.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Septimius, with a head, Achilles, Guard.

Sep. 'TIS here, 'tis done, behold you fearfull viewers,
Shake, and behold the model of the world here,
The pride, and strength, look, look again, 'tis finish'd;
That, that whole Armies, nay whole nations,
Many and mighty Kings, have been struck blind at,
And fled before, wing'd with their fears and terrours,
That steel war waited on, and fortune courted,
That high plum'd honour built up for her own;
Behold that mightiness, behold that fierceness,
Behold that child of war, with all his glories;
By this poor hand made breathless, here (my Achillas)
Egypt, and Cesar, owe me for this service,
And all the conquer'd Nations.

Ach. Peace Septimius,

Thy words sound more ungratefull than thy actions;
Though sometimes safety seek an instrument
Of thy unworthy nature, thou (loud boaster)
Think not she is bound to love him too, that's barbarous.
Why did not I, if this be meritorious,
And binds the King unto me, and his bounties,
Strike this rude stroke? I'll tell thee (thou poor Roman)
It was a sacred head, I durst not heave at,
Not heave a thought.

Sep. It was.Ach. I'll tell thee truly,

And if thou ever yet heard'st tell of honour,
I'll make thee blush: It was thy General's;
That mans that sed thee once, that mans that bred thee,
The air thou breath'dst was his; the fire that warm'd thee,
From his care kindled ever, nay, I'll show thee,
(Because I'll make thee sensible of the business;
And why a noble man durst not touch at it)
There was no piece of Earth, thou putt'st thy foot on
But was his conquest; and he gave thee motion.
He triumph'd three times, who durst touch his person?
The very walls of Rome bow'd to his presence,
Dear to the Gods he was, to them that fear'd him
A fair and noble Enemy. Didst thou hate him?
And for thy love to Cesar, fought his ruine?
Arm'd in the red Pharsalian fields, Septimius,
Where killing was in grace, and wounds were glorious,
Where Kings were fair competitors for honour,
Thou shouldst have come up to him, there have fought him,
There, Sword to Sword.

Sep. I kill'd him on commandment,
If Kings commands be fair, when you all fainted,
When none of you durst look

T t

Ach.

Ach. On deeds so barbarous,
What hast thou got?

Sep. The Kings love, and his bounty,
The honour of the service, which though you rail at,
Or a thousand envious souls fling their foams on me,
Will dignifie the cause, and make me glorious:
And I shall live.

Ach. A miserable villain,
What reputation, and reward belongs to it
Thus (with the head) I seize on, and make mine;
And be not impudent to ask me why, Sirrah,
Nor bold to stay, read in mine eyes the reason:
The shame and obloquy I leave thine own,
Inherit those rewards, they are fitter for thee,
Your oyl's spent, and your snuff stinks: go out basely.

Sep. The King will yet consider.

[Exit.

Enter Ptolomy, Achoreus, Photinus.

Achil. Here he comes Sir.

Ach. Yet if it be undone: hear me great Sir,
If this inhumane stroak be yet unstrucken,
If that adored head be not yet sever'd
From the most noble Body, weigh the miseries,
The desolations that this great Eclipse works,
You are young, be provident: fix not your Empire
Upon the Tomb of him will shake all Egypt,
Whose warlike groans will raise ten thousand Spirits,
(Great as himself) in every hand a thunder;
Destructions darting from their looks, and sorrows
That easy womens eyes shall never empty.

Pho. You have done well; and 'tis done, see Achillas,
And in his hand the head.

Ptol. Stay come no nearer,
Me thinks I feel the very earth shake under me,
I do remember him, he was my guardian,
Appointed by the Senate to preserve me:
What a full Majesty sits in his face yet?

Pho. The King is troubled: be not frightened Sir,
Be not abus'd with fears; his death was necessary,
If you consider, Sir, most necessary,
Not to be mis'd: and humbly thank great Isis,
He came so opportunely to your hands;
Pity must now give place to rules of safety.
Is not victorious Cæsar new arriv'd,
And enter'd Alexandria, with his friends,
His Navy riding by to wait his charges?
Did he not beat this Pompey, and pursu'd him?
Was not this great man, his great enemy?
This Godlike vertuous man, as people held him,
But what fool dare be friend to flying vertue?

Enter Cæsar, Anthony, Dolabella, Sceva.

I hear their Trumpets, 'tis too late to stagger,
Give me the head, and be you confident:
Hail Conquerour, and head of all the world,
Now this head's off.

Cæsar. Ha?

Pho. Do not shun me, Cæsar,
From kingly Ptolomy I bring this present,
The Crown, and sweat of thy Pharsalian labour:
The goal and mark of high ambitious honour.
Before thy victory had no name, Cæsar,
Thy travel and thy loss of blood, no recompence,
Thou dreamst of being worthy, and of war;
And all thy furious conflicts were but slumbers,
Here they take life: here they inherit honour,
Grow fixt, and shoot up everlasting triumphs:
Take it, and look upon thy humble servant,
With noble eyes look on the Princely Ptolomy,
That offers with this head (most mighty Cæsar)
What thou would'st once have given for it, all Egypt.

Ach. Nor do not question it (most royal Conquerour)
Nor disesteem the benefit that meets thee,
Because 'tis casily got, it comes the safer:

Yet let me tell thee (most imperious Cæsar)
Though he oppos'd no strength of Swords to win this,
Nor labour'd through no showres of darts, and lances:
Yet here he found a fort, that faced him strongly
An inward war: he was his Grand-fires Guest;
Friend to his Father, and when he was expell'd
And beaten from this Kingdom by strong hand,
And had none left him, to restore his honour,
No hope to find a friend, in such a misery;
Then in slept Pompey; took his feeble fortune:
Strengthen'd, and cherish'd it, and set it right again;
This was a love to Cæsar.

Sceva. Give me, hate, Gods.

Pho. This Cæsar may account a little wicked,
But yet remember, if thine own hands, Conquerour,
Had fallen upon him, what it had been then?
If thine own sword had touch'd his throat, what that way!
He was thy Son in Law, there to be tainted,
Had been most terrible: let the worst be render'd,
We have deserv'd for keeping thy hands innocent.

Cæsar. Oh Sceva, Sceva, see that head: see Captains,
The head of godlike Pompey.

Sceva. He was basely ruin'd,
But let the Gods be griev'd that suffer'd it,
And be you Cæsar ———

Cæsar. Oh thou Conquerour,
Thou glory of the world once, now the pity:
Thou awe of Nations, wherefore didst thou fall thus?
What poor fate follow'd thee, and pluckt thee on
To trust thy sacred life to an Egyptian;
The life and light of Rome, to a blind stranger,
That honorable war ne'r taught a nobleness,
Nor worthy circumstance shew'd what a man was,
That never heard thy name sung, but in banquets;
And loose lascivious pleasures? to a Boy,
That had no faith to comprehend thy greatness,
No study of thy life to know thy goodness;
And leave thy Nation, nay, thy noble friend,
Leave him (distrusted) that in tears falls with thee?
(In soft relenting tears) hear me (great Pompey)
(If thy great spirit can hear) I must task thee:
Thou hast most unnobly rob'd me of my victory,
My love, and mercy.

Ant. O how brave these tears shew!
How excellent is sorrow in an Enemy!

Dol. Glory appears not greater than this goodness.

Cæsar. Egyptians, dare you think your high Pyramides,
Built to out-dare the Sun, as you suppose,
Where your unworthy Kings lye rak'd in ashes,
Are monuments fit for him? no, (brood of Nilus)
Nothing can cover his high fame, but Heaven;
No Pyramides set off his memories,
But the eternal substance of his greatness
To which I leave him: take the head away,
And (with the body) give it noble burial,
Your Earth shall now be bless'd to hold a Roman,
Whose braveries all the worlds-Earth cannot ballance.

Sce. If thou bee'st thus loving, I shall honour thee,
But great men may dissemble, 'tis held possible,
And be right glad of what they seem to weep for,
There are such kind of Philosophers; now do I wonder
How he would look if Pompey were alive again,
But how he would set his face?

Cæsar. You look now, King,
And you that have been Agents in this glory,
For our especial favour?

Ptol. We desire it.

Cæsar. And doubtless you expect rewards.

Sceva. Let me give 'em:

I'll give 'em such as nature never dreamt of,
I'll beat him and his Agents (in a mortar)
Into one man, and that one man I'll bake then.

Cæsar. Peace: I forgive you all, that's recompence:
You are young, and ignorant, that pleads your pardon,

And.

And fear it may be more than hate provok'd ye,
Your Ministers, I must think, wanted judgment,
And so they err'd: I am bountiful to think this;
Believe me most bountiful; be you most thankful,
That bounty share amongst ye: if I knew
What to send you for a present, King of Egypt,
(I mean a head of equal reputation
And that you lov'd) though it were your brightest Sisters,
(But her you hate) I would not be behind ye.

Prot. Hear me, (Great Cesar.)

Ces. I have heard too much,
And study not with smooth shews to invade
My noble Mind as you have done my Conquest.
Ye are poor and open: I must tell ye roundly,
That Man that could not recompence the Benefits,
The great and bounteous services of Pompey,
Can never dote upon the Name of Cesar;
Though I had hated Pompey, and allow'd his ruine,
Hasty to please in Blood are seldom trusty;
And but I stand environ'd with my Victories,
My Fortune never failing to befriend me,
My noble strengths, and friends about my Person,
I durst not try ye, nor expect a Courtesie,
Above the pious love you shew'd to Pompey.
You have found me merciful in arguing with you;
Swords, Hangmen, Fires, Destructions of all natures,
Demolishments of Kingdoms, and whole Ruines
Are wont to be my Orators; turn to tears,
You wretched and poor seeds of Sun-burnt Egypt,
And now you have found the nature of a Conquerour,
That you cannot decline with all your flatteries,
That where the day gives light will be himself still,
Know how to meet his Worth with humane Courtesies,
Go, and embalm those bones of that great Souldier;
Howl round about his Pile, fling on your Spices,
Make a Sabaean Bed, and place this Phoenix
Where the hot Sun may emulate his Vertues,
And draw another Pompey from his ashes
Divinely great, and fix him 'mongst the Worthies.

Prot. We will do all.

Ces. You have rob'd him of those tears
His Kindred and his Friends kept sacred for him;
The Virgins of their Funeral Lamentations:
And that kind Earth that thought to cover him,
(His Countries Earth) will cry out 'gainst your Cruelty,
And weep unto the Ocean for revenge,
Till Nilus raise his seven heads and devour ye;
My grief has stopt the rest: when Pompey liv'd
He us'd you nobly, now he is dead use him so. [Exit.]

Prot. Now, where's your confidence? your aim (Photinus)
The Oracles, and fair Favours from the Conquerour
You rung into mine Ears? how stand I now?
You see the tempest of his stern displeasure,
The death of him you urged a Sacrifice
To stop his Rage, prefaging a full ruine;
Where are your Counsels now?

Acho. I told you, Sir,

(And told the truth) what danger would flye after;
And though an Enemy, I satisfied you
He was a Roman, and the top of Honour;
And howsoever this might please Great Cesar,
I told ye that the foulness of his Death,
The impious baseness—

Pho. Peace, you are a Fool,
Men of deep ends must tread as deep ways to 'em;
Cesar I know is pleas'd, and for all his sorrows
(Which are put on for forms and meer dissemblings)
I am confident he's glad; to have told ye so,
And thank ye outwardly, had been too open,
And taken from the Wisdom of a Conquerour.
Be confident and proud ye have done this service;
Ye have deserv'd, and ye will find it highly:
Make bold use of this benefit, and be sure
You keep your Sister, (the high-soul'd Cleopatra)

Both close and short enough, she may not see him;
The rest, if I may counsel, Sir—

Prot. Do all;

For in thy faithful service rests my safety.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.

Enter Septimius.

Sept. Here's a strange alteration in the Court;
Mens Faces are of other setts and motions,
Their minds of subtler stuff; I pass by now
As though I were a Rascal, no man knows me,
No Eye looks after; as I were a Plague
Their doors shut close against me; and I wondred at Because I have done a meritorious Murder;
Because I have pleas'd the Time, does the Time plague me?
I have known the day they would have hug'd me for it,
For a less stroke than this have done me Reverence;
Open'd their Hearts and secret Closets to me,
Their Purses, and their Pleasures, and bid me wallow.
I now perceive the great Thieves eat the less,
And the huge Leviathans of Villany
Sup up the merits, nay the men and all
That do them service, and spowt 'em out again
Into the air, as thin and unregarded
As drops of Water that are lost i'th' Ocean:
I was lov'd once for swearing, and for drinking,
And for other principal Qualities that became me,
Now a foolish unthankful Murder has undone me,
If my Lord Photinus be not merciful

Enter Photinus.

That set me on; And he comes, now Fortune.

Pho. Cesar's unthankfulness a little stirs me,
A little frets my blood; take heed, proud Roman,
Provoke me not, stir not mine anger farther;
I may find out a way unto thy life too,
(Though arm'd in all thy Victories) and seize it.
A Conquerour has a heart, and I may hit it.

Sept. May it please your Lordship?

Pho. O Septimius!

Sept. Your Lordship knows my wrongs.

Pho. Wrongs?

Sept. Yes, my Lord,

How the Captain of the Guard, Achillas, slights me.

Pho. Think better of him, he has much befriended thee,
Shew'd thee much love in taking the head from thee.

The times are alter'd (Souldier) Cesar's angry,
And our design to please him lost and perish'd;
Be glad thou art unnam'd, 'tis not worth the owning;
Yet, that thou maist be useful—

Sept. Yes, my Lord,

I shall be ready.

Pho. For I may employ thee
To take a rub or two out of my way,
As time shall serve, say that it be a Brother?
Or a hard Father?

Sept. 'Tis most necessary,
A Mother, or a Sister, or whom you please, Sir.

Pho. Or to betray a noble Friend?

Sept. 'Tis all one.

Pho. I know thou wilt stir for Gold.

Sept. 'Tis all my motion.

Pho. There, take that for thy service, and farewell;
I have greater business now.

Sept. I am still your own, Sir.

Pho. One thing I charge thee, see me no more, Septimius,
Unless I send. [Exit.]

Sept. I shall observe your hour.
So, this brings something in the mouth, some favour;
This is the Lord I serve, the Power I worship,
My Friends, Allies, and here lies my Allegiance.
Let People talk as they please of my rudeness,

And shun me for my deed; bring but this to 'em,
(Let me be damn'd for blood) yet still I am honourable,
This God creates new tongues, and new affections;
And though I had kill'd my Father, give me Gold
I'll make men swear I have done a pious Sacrifice;
Now I will out-brave all; make all my Servants,
And my brave deed shall be writ in Wine, for vertuous.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.

Enter Cæsar, Antony, Dolabella, Sceva.

Cæf. Keep strong Guards, and with wary eyes (my friends)
There is no trusting to these base Egyptians;
They that are false to pious benefits,
And make compell'd necessities their faiths
Are Traitors to the gods.

Ant. We'll call ashore
A Legion of the best.

Cæf. Not a Man, Antony,
That were to shew our fears, and dim our greatness:
No, 'tis enough my Name's ashore.

Sce. Too much too,
A sleeping Cæsar is enough to shake them;
There are some two or three malicious Rascals
Train'd up in Villany, besides that Cerberus
That Roman Dog, that lick'd the blood of Pompey.

Dol. 'Tis strange, a Roman Souldier?

Sce. You are cozen'd,
There be of us as be of all other Nations,
Villains, and Knaves; 'tis not the name contains him,
But the obedience; when that's once forgotten,
And Duty flung away, then welcome Devil.
Photinus and Achillas, and this Vermine
That's now become a natural Crocodile
Must be with care observ'd.

Ant. And 'tis well counsel'd
No Confidence, nor trust——

Sce. I'll trust the Sea first,
When with her hollow murmurs she invites me,
And clutches in her storms, as politick Lions
Conceal their Claws; I'll trust the Devil first.

Cæf. Go to your rests, and follow your own Wisedoms,
And leave me to my thoughts: pray no more complement,
Once more strong Watches.

Dol. All shall be observ'd, Sir.

[Exit.]

Cæf. I am dull and heavy, yet I cannot sleep,
How happy was I in my lawful Wars,
In Germany, and Gaul, and Britanny?
When every night with pleasure I set down
What the day ministred? The sleep came sweetly:
But since I undertook this home-division,
This civil War, and past the Rubicon;
What have I done that speaks an ancient Roman?
A good, great man? I have enter'd Rome by force,
And on her tender Womb (that gave me life)
Let my insulting Souldiers rudely trample,
The dear Veins of my Country I have open'd,
And sail'd upon the torrents that flow'd from her,
The bloody streams that in their confluence
Carried before 'em thousand desolations;
I rob'd the Treasury, and at one gripe
Snatch'd all the wealth, so many worthy triumphs
Plac'd there as sacred to the Peace of Rome;
I raz'd Massilia, in my wanton anger:
Petreibus and Afranius I defeated:
Pompey I overthrew: what did that get me?
The stubber'd Name of an authoriz'd Enemy. [Noise within.]
I hear some Noise; they are the Watches sure.
What Friends have I ty'd fast by these ambitions?
Cato, the Lover of his Countries freedom,
Is now past into Africk to affront me,
Juba (that kill'd my friend) is up in Arms too;

The Sons of Pompey are Masters of the Sea,
And from the reliques of their scatter'd faction,
A new head's sprung; Say I defeat all these too;
I come home crown'd an honourable Rebel.
I hear the Noise still, and it still comes nearer;
Are the Guards fast? Who waits there?

Enter Sceva with a Packet, Cleopatra in it.

Sce. Are ye awake Sir?

Cæf. I'th' name of Wonder.

Sce. Nay, I am a Porter,

A strong one too, or else my sides would crack, Sir,
And my sins were as weighty, I should scarce walk with 'em.

Cæf. What hast thou there?

Sce. Ask them which stay without,
And brought it hither, your Presence I deny'd 'em,
And put 'em by; took up the load my self,
They say 'tis rich, and valu'd at the Kingdom,
I am sure 'tis heavy; if you like to see it
You may: if not, I'll give it back.

Cæf. Stay Sceva,
I would fain see it.

Sce. I'll begin to work then;
No doubt, to flatter ye they have sent ye something,
Of a rich value, Jewels, or some rich Treasure;
May be a Rogue within to do a mischief;
I pray you stand farther off, if there be villany,
Better my danger first; he shall 'scape hard too,
Ha! what art thou?

Cæf. Stand farther off, good Sceva,
What heavenly Vision! do I wake or slumber!
Farther off that hand, Friend.

Sce. What Apparition?

What Spirit have I rais'd? sure 'tis a Woman,
She looks like one; now she begins to move too:
A tempting Devil, o' my life; go off, Cæsar,
Bless thy self, off: a Bawd grown in mine old days?
Bawdry advanc'd upon my back? 'tis noble:
Sir, if you be a Souldier come no nearer,
She is sent to dispossess you of your honour,
A Sponge, a Sponge to wipe away your Victories:
And she would be cool'd, Sir, let the Souldiers trim her?
They'll give her that she came for, and dispatch her;
Be loyal to your self. Thou damned Woman,
Dost thou come hither with thy flourishes,
Thy flaunts, and faces to abuse mens manners?
And am I made the instrument of Bawdry?
I'll find a Lover for ye, one that shall hug ye.

Cæf. Hold, on thy life, and be more temperate,
Thou Beast.

Sce. Thou Beast?

Cæf. Could'st thou be so inhumane,
So far from noble Men, to draw thy Weapon
Upon a thing divine?

Sce. Divine, or humane,
They are never better pleas'd, nor more at hearts ease,
Than when we draw with full intent upon 'em.

Cæf. Move this way (Lady)

'Pray ye let me speak to ye.

Sce. And Woman, you had best stand.

Cæf. By the gods,
But that I see her here, and hope her mortal,
I should imagine some celestial sweetness,
The treasure of soft love.

Sce. Oh, this sounds mangily,
Poorly, and scurvily in a Souldiers mouth:
You had best be troubled with the Tooth-ach too,
For Lovers ever are, and let your Nose drop
That your celestial Beauty may befriend ye;
At these years do you learn to be fantastical?
After so many bloody fields, a Fool?
She brings her Bed along too, she'll lose no time,
Carries her Litter to lye soft, do you see that?

Invites

Invites ye like a Gamester : note that impudence,
For shame reflect upon your self, your honour,
Look back into your noble parts, and blush :
Let not the dear sweat of the hot Pharsalia,
Mingle with base Embraces ; am I he
That have receiv'd so many wounds for Cesar ?
Upon my Target groves of darts still growing ?
Have I endur'd all hungers, colds, distresses,
And (as I had been bred that Iron that arm'd me)
Stood out all weathers, now to curse my fortune ?
To ban the blood I lost for such a General ?

Cesar. Offend no more : be gone.

See. I will, and leave ye,

Leave ye to womens wars, that will proclaim ye :
You'll conquer Rome now, and the Capitol
With Fans, and Looking-glasses, farewell Cesar.

Cleo. Now I am private Sir, I dare speak to ye :
But thus low first, for as a God I honour ye.

See. Lower you'll be anon.

Cesar. Away.

See. And privater,
For that you covet all.

[Exit.

Cesar. Tempt me no farther.

Cleo. Contemn me not, because I kneel thus, Cesar,
I am a Queen, and coheir to this country,
The Sister to the mighty Ptolomy,
Yet one distress'd, that flies unto thy justice,
One that layes sacred hold on thy protection
As on an holy Altar, to preserve me.

Cesar. Speak Queen of beauty, and stand up.

Cleo. I dare not,

'Till I have found that favour in thine eyes,
That godlike great humanity to help me,
Thus, to thy knees must I grow (sacred Cesar,)
And if it be not in thy will, to right me,
And raise me like a Queen from my sad ruines,
If these soft tears cannot sink to thy pity,
And waken with their murmurs thy compassions ;
Yet for thy nobleness, for vertues sake,
And if thou beest a man, for despis'd beauty,
For honourable conquest, which thou doat'st on,
Let not those cankers of this flourishing Kingdom,
Photinus, and Achillas, (the one an Eunuch,
The other a base bondman) thus raig over me.
Seize my inheritance, and leave my Brother
Nothing of what he should be, but the Title,
As thou art wonder of the world.

Cesar. Stand up then

And be a Queen, this hand shall give it to ye,
Or choose a greater name, worthy my bounty :
A common love makes Queens : choose to be worshipped,
To be divinely great, and I dare promise it ;
A suitor of your sort, and blessed sweetness,
That hath adventur'd thus to see great Cesar,
Must never be denied, you have found a patron
That dare not in his private honour suffer
So great a blemish to the Heaven of beauty :
The God of love would clap his angry wings,
And from his singing bow let flye those arrows
Headed with burning griefs, and pining sorrows,
Should I neglect your cause, would make me monstrous,
To whom and to your service I devote me.

Enter Seeva.

Cleo. He is my conquest now, and so I'll work him,
The conquerour of the world will I lead captive,

See. Still with this woman, tilting still with Babies ?
As you are honest think the Enemy,
Some valiant Foe indeed now charging on ye :
Ready to break your ranks, and sling these ———

Cesar. Hear me,
But tell me true, if thou hadst such a treasure,
(And as thou art a Souldier, do not flatter me)
Such a bright gem, brought to thee, wouldst thou not

Most greedily accept ?

See. Not as an Emperour,

A man that first should rule himself, & then others ;
As a poor hungry Souldier, I might bite, Sir,
Yet that's a weakness too : hear me, thou Tempter :
And hear thou Cesar too, for it concerns thee,
And if thy flesh be deaf, yet let thine honour,
The soul of a commander, give ear to me,
Thou wanton bane of war, thou guilded Lethargy,
In whose embraces, ease (the rust of Arms)
And pleasure, (that makes Souldiers poor) inhabites.

Cesar. Fye, thou blasphem't.

See. I do, when she is a goddess.

Thou melter of strong minds, dar'st thou presume
To smother all his triumphs, with thy vanities,
And tye him like a slave, to thy proud beauties ?
To thy imperious looks ? that Kings have follow'd
Proud of their chains ? have waited on ? I shame Sir. [Exit.

Cesar. Alas thou art rather mad : take thy rest Seeva,
Thy duty makes thee erre, but I forgive thee :

Go, go I say, shew me no disobedience :
'Tis well, farewell, the day will break dear Lady,
My Souldiers will come in ; please you retire,
And think upon your servant ?

Cleo. Pray you Sir, know me,
And what I am.

Cesar. The greater, I more love ye,
And you must know me too.

Cleo. So far as modesty,
And majesty gives leave Sir, ye are too violent.

Cesar. You are too cold to my desires.

Cleo. Swear to me,
And by your self (for I hold that oath sacred)
You will right me as a Queen ———

Cesar. These lips be witness,
And if I break that oath ———

Cleo. You make me blush Sir,
And in that blush interpret me.

Cesar. I will do,
Come let's go in, and blush again : this one word,
You shall believe.

Cleo. I must, you are a conquerour.

[Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Ptolomy, Photinus.

Pho. Good Sir, but hear.

Ptol. No more, you have undone me ;
That, that I hourly fear'd, is falln upon me,
And heavily, and deadly.

Pho. Hear a remedy.

Ptol. A remedy now the disease is ulcerous ?
And has infected all ? your secure negligence
Has broke through all the hopes I have, and ruin'd me :
My Sister is with Cesar, in his chamber,
All night she has been with him ; and no doubt
Much to her honour.

Pho. Would that were the worst, Sir,
That will repair it self : but I fear mainly,
She has made her peace with Cesar.

Ptol. 'Tis most likely,
And what am I then ?

Pho. 'Plague upon that Rascal
Apollodorus, under whose command,
Under whose eye ———

Enter Achillas.

Ptol. Curse on you all, ye are wretches.

Pho. 'Twas providently done, Achillas.

Achil. Pardon me.

Pho. Your guards were rarely wise, and wondrous

Achil.

(watchfull.

Achil. I could not help it, if my life had lain for't,
Alas, who would suspect a pack of bedding,
Or a small Truss of household furniture?
And as they said, for Cesar's use: or who durst
(Being for his private chamber) seek to stop it?
I was abus'd.

Enter Achoreus.

Ach. 'Tis no hour now for anger:
No wisdom to debate with fruitless choler,
Let us consider timely what we must do,
Since she is flown to his protection,
From whom we have no power to sever her,
Nor force conditions —

Protol. Speak (good Achoreus)

Ach. Let indirect and crooked counsels vanish,
And straight, and fair directions —

Pho. Speak your mind Sir.

Ach. Let us choose Cesar, (and endear him to us,)
An Arbitrator in all differences
Betwixt you, and your Sister; this is safe now:
And will shew off, most honourable.

Pho. Safe,

Most safe and poor; a servile, cold submission:
Hear me, and pluck your hearts up, like stout Counsellours,
Since we are sensible this Cesar loathes us,
And have begun our fortune with great Pompey,
Be of my mind.

Ach. 'Tis most uncomely spoken,
And if I say most bloodily, I lye not:
The law of hospitality it poysons,
And calls the Gods in question that dwell in us,
Be wife O King.

Protol. I will be: go my counsellour,
To Cesar go, and do my humble service:
To my fair Sister my commends negotiate,
And here I ratifie what e're thou treat'st on.

Ach. Crown'd with fair peace, I go.

Protol. My love go with thee,

And from my love go you, you cruel vipers:
You shall know now I am no ward, Photinus.

Pho. This for our service?

Princes do their pleasures,
And they that serve obey in all disgraces:
The lowest we can fall to, is our graves,
There we shall know no difference: heark Achillas,
I may do something yet, when times are ripe,
To tell this raw unthankfull King.

Achil. Photinus,

What e're it be I shall make one: and zealously:
For better dye attempting something nobly,
Than fall disgraced.

Pho. Thou lov'st me and I thank thee.

SCENA II.

Enter Antony, Dolabella, Sceva.

Dol. Nay there's no rowling him: he is bewitch'd sure,
His noble blood curdled, and cold within him;
Grown now a womans warrior.

Sce. And a tall one:

Studies her fortifications, and her breaches,
And how he may advance his ram to batter
The Bullwork of her chastitie.

Ant. Be not too angry,

For by this light, the woman's a rare woman,
A Lady of that catching youth, and beauty,
That unmatch'd sweetness —

Dol. But why should he be fool'd so?

Let her be what she will, why should his wisdom,
His age, and honour —

Ant. Say it were your own case,

Or mine, or any mans, that has heat in him:
'Tis true at this time when he has no promise

Of more security than his sword can cut through,
I do not hold it so discrete: but a good face, Gentlemen,
And eyes that are the winningst Orators:
A youth that opens like perpetual spring,
And to all these, a tongue that can deliver
The Oracles of Love —

Sce. I would you had her,
With all her Oracles, and Miracles,
She were fitter for your turn.

Ant. Would I had, Sceva,

With all her faults too: let me alone to mend 'em,
O'that condition I made thee mine heir.

Sce. I had rather have your black horse, than your harlots.

Dol. Cesar writes Sonnets now, the sound of war
Is grown too boystrous for his mouth: he sighs too.

Sce. And learns to fiddle most melodiously,
And sings, 'twould make your ears prick up, to hear him
Shortly she'l make him spin: and 'tis thought (Gent.
He will prove an admirable maker of Bonelace,
And what a rare gift will that be in a General?

Ant. I would he could abstain.

Sce. She is a witch sure,
And works upon him with some damn'd enchantment.

Dol. How cunning she will carry her behaviours,
And set her countenance in a thousand postures,
To catch her ends?

Sce. She will be sick, well, fullen,
Merry, coy, over-joy'd, and seem to dye
All in one half hour, to make an asse of him:
I make no doubt she will be drunk too damnably,
And in her drink will fight, then she fits him.

Ant. That thou shouldst bring her in?

Sce. 'Twas my blind fortune,
My Souldiers told me, by the weight 'twas wicked:
Would I had carried Milo's Bull a furlong,
When I brought in this Cow-Calf: he has advanced me
From an old Souldier, to a bawd of memory:
O, that the Sons of Pompey were behind him,
The honour'd Cato, and fierce Juba with 'em,
That they might whip him from his whore, and rowze him:
That their fierce Trumpets, from his wanton trances,
Might shake him like an Earth-quake.

Enter Septinius.

Ant. What's this fellow?

Dol. Why, a brave fellow, if we judge men by their clothes.

Ant. By my faith he is brave indeed: he's no commander?

Sce. Yes, he has a Roman face, he has been at fair wars
And plenteous too, and rich, his Trappings shew it.

Sep. And they will not know me now, they'l never know
Who dare blush now at my acquaintance? ha? (me.

Am I not totally a span-new Gallant,
Fit for the choycest eyes? have I not gold?
The friendship of the world? if they shun me now
(Though I were the arrantest rogue, as I am well forward)
Mine own curse, and the Devils too light on me.

Ant. Is't not Septinius?

Sce. Yes.

Dol. He that kill'd Pompey?

Sce. The same Dog, Scab; that guilded botch, that rascal.

Dol. How glorious villany appears in Egypt?

Sep. Gallants, and Souldiers, sure they do admire me.

Sce. Stand further off, thou stinkest.

Sep. A likely matter:

These Cloaths smell mustily, do they not, Gallants?
They stink, they stink, alas poor things, contemptible.
By all the Gods in Egypt, the perfumes
That went to trimming these clothes, cost me —

Sce. Thou stinkest still.

Sep. The powdering of this head too —

Sce. If thou hast it,

Ple tell thee all the Gumms in sweet Arabia
Are not sufficient, were they burnt about thee,
To purge the scent of a rank Rascal from thee.

Ant.

Ant. I smell him now : fie, how the Knave perfumes him,
How strong he scents of Traitor ?

Dol. You had an ill Millener,
He laid too much of the Gum of Ingratitude
Upon your Coat, you should have wash'd off that Sir,
Fie, how it choaks ! too little of your loyaltie,
Your honesty, your faith, that are pure Ambers ;
I smell the rotten smell of a hired Coward,
A dead Dog is sweeter.

Sep. Ye are merry Gentlemen,
And by my troth, such harmless mirth takes me too,
You speak like good blunt Souldiers ; and 'tis well enough :
But did you live at Court, as I do, Gallants,
You would refine, and learn an apter language ;
I have done ye simple service on your Pompey,
You might have lookt him yet this brace of twelve months
And hunted after him, like foundred Beagles,
Had not this fortunate hand ———

Ant. He brags on't too :
By the good Gods, rejoyses in't ; thou wretch
Thou most contemptible Slave.

See. Dog, mangy Mongrel,
Thou murdering mischief, in the shape of Souldier
To make all Souldiers hateful ; thou disease
That nothing but the Gallows can give ease to. ———

Dol. Thou art so impudent, that I admire thee,
And know not what to say.

Sep. I know your anger
And why you prate thus : I have found your melancholy :
Ye all want money, and you are liberal Captains,
And in this want will talk a little desperately :
Here's gold, come share ; I love a brave Commander :
And be not peevish, do as Cesar does :
He's merry with his wench now, be you jovial,
And let's all laugh and drink : would he have partners ?
I do consider all your wants, and weigh 'em,
He has the Mistress, you shall have the maids,
I'll bring 'em to ye, to your arms.

Ant. I blush,
All over me, I blush, and sweat to hear him :
Upon my conscience, if my arms were on now
Through them I should blush too : pray ye let's be walking.

See. Yes, yes : but e're we goe, I'll leave this lesson,
And let him study it : first Rogue, then Pander,
Next Devil that will be ; get thee from mens presence,
And where the name of Souldier has been heard of
Be sure thou live not : to some hungry desert
Where thou canst meet with nothing but thy conscience,
And that in all the shapes of all thy villainies
Attend thee still, where bruit Beasts will abhor thee,
And even the Sun will shame to give thee light,
Goe hide thy head : or if thou think'st it fitter
Goe hang thy self.

Dol. Hark to that clause.

See. And that speedily,
That nature may be eas'd of such a Monster. [Exit.]

Sep. Yet all this moves not me : nor reflects on me :
I keep my gold still, and my confidence,
Their want of breeding makes these fellows murmur,
Rude valors, so I let 'em pass ; rude honours :
There is a wench yet, that I know, affects me
And company for a King : a young plump villain,
That when she sees this gold, she'll leap upon me.

Enter Eros.

And here she comes : I am sure of her at midnight,
My pretty Eros welcom.

Eros. I have business.

Sep. Above my love, thou canst not.

Eros. Yes indeed Sir,
Far, far above.

Sep. Why, why so coy ? 'pray ye tell me
We are alone.

Eros. I am much ashamed we are so.

Sep. You want a new Gown now, & a handfom Petticoat,
A Skarf, and some odd to yes : I have gold here ready,
Thou shall have any thing.

Eros. I want your absence :
Keep on your way, I care not for your company.

Sep. How ? how ? you are very short : do you know me
And what I have been to ye ? (Eros ?

Eros. Yes I know ye :
And I hope I shall forget ye : Whilst you were honest
I lov'd ye too.

Sep. Honest ? come prethee kifs me.
Eros. I kifs no knaves, no Murderers, no Beasts,
No base betrayers of those men that fed 'em,
I hate their looks ; and though I may be wanton,
I scorn to nourish it with bloody purchase,
Purchase so foully got ; I pray ye unhand me
I had rather touch the plague, than one unworthy :
Goe seek some Mistress that a horse may marry,
And keep her company, she is too good for ye. [Exit.]

Sep. Marry this goes near ; now I perceive I am hateful,
When this light stuff can distinguish, it grows dangerous,
For money, seldom they refuse a Leper :
But sure I am more odious, more diseas'd too :

Enter three lame Souldiers.

It fits cold here ; what are these ? three poor Souldiers ?
Both poor and lame : their misery may make 'em
A little look upon me, and adore me,
If these will keep me company, I am made yet.

1 Sol. The pleasure Cesar sleeps in, makes us miserable,
We are forgot, our maims and dangers laugh'd at ;
He Banquets, and we beg.

2 Sol. He was not wont
To let poor Souldiers that have spent their Fortunes,
Their Bloods, and limbs, walk up and down like vagabonds.

Sep. Save ye good Souldiers : good poor men, heaven help
You have born the brunt of war, and shew the story. (ye :

1 Sol. Some new commander sue.
Sep. You look (my good friends)
By your thin faces, as you would be Suitors.

2 Sol. To Cesar, for our means, Sir.
Sep. And 'tis fit Sir.

3 Sol. We are poor men, and long forgot.
Sep. I grieve for it :
Good Souldiers should have good rewards, and favours,
I'll give up your petitions, for I pity ye,
And freely speak to Cesar.

All. O we honour ye.
1 Sol. A good man sure ye are : the Gods preserve ye.
Sep. And to relieve your wants the while, hold Soldiers,
Nay 'tis no dream : 'tis good gold : take it freely,
'Twill keep ye in good heart.

2 Sol. Now goodnels quit ye.
Sep. I'll be a friend to your afflictions,
And eat, and drink with ye too, and we'll be merry :
And every day I'll see ye.

1 Sol. You are a Souldier,
And one sent from the Gods, I think.
Sep. I'll cloth ye,
Ye are lame, and then provide good lodging for ye :
And at my Table, where no want shall meet ye.

Enter Sceva.

All. Was never such a man.
1 Sold. Dear honour'd Sir,
Let us but know your name, that we may worship ye.

2 Sold. That we may ever thank ?
Sep. Why, call me any thing,
No matter for my name, that may betray me.

See. A cunning thief, call him Septimus, Souldiers,
The villain that kill'd Pompey.

All. How ?
Sep. Call him the shame of men. [E-
1 Sold. O that this money

Were weight enough to break thy brains out : fling all :
And fling our curses next : let them be mortal,
Out bloody wolf, dost thou come guilded over,
And painted with thy charitie, to poyson us ?

2 Sold. I know him now : may never Father own thee,
But as a monst'rous birth shun thy base memory :
And if thou hadst a Mother (as I cannot Believe thou wert a natural Burden) let her womb
Be curs'd of women for a bed of vipers.

3 Sol. Me thinks the ground shakes to devour this rascal,
And the kind air turns into foggs and vapours,
Infectious mists, to crown his villanies.
Thou maist go wander, like a thing heaven hated.

1 Sold. And valiant minds hold poysonous to remember.
The Hangman will not keep thee company,
He has an honourable house to thine,
No, not a thief though thou couldst save his life for't
Will eat thy bread, nor one, for thirst starv'd, drink with

2 Sol. Thou art no company for an honest dog, (thee.
And so we'll leave thee to a ditch (thy destiny.) [Exit.

Sep. Contemn'd of all ? and kickt too ? now I find it ;
My valour's fled too, with mine honesty,
For since I would be knave I must be Coward :
This 'tis to be a Traitor, and betrayer.
What a deformity dwells round about me !
How monstrous shews that man, that is ungratefull ?
I am afraid the very beasts will tear me,
Inspir'd with what I have done : the winds will blast me :
Now I am paid, and my reward dwells in me,
The wages of my fact, my soul's opprest ;
Honest and noble minds, you find most rest. [Exit

SCENA III.

Enter Ptolomy, Achoreus, Photinus, Achilles.

Ptol. I have commanded, and it shall be so,
A preparation I have set o' foot,
Worthy the friendship and the fame of Cæsar,
My Sisters favours shall seem poor and wither'd :
Nay she her self, (trim'd up in all her beautys)
Compar'd to what I'll take his eyes withall,
Shall be a dream.

Pho. Do you mean to shew the glory,
And wealth of Egypt ?

Ptol. Yes: and in that lustre,
Rome shall appear in all her famous Conquests,
And all her riches of no note unto it.

Ach. Now you are reconcil'd to your fair Sister,
Take heed Sir, how you step into a danger :
A danger of this precipice : but note Sir,
For what Rome ever rais'd her mighty armies ;
First for ambition, then for wealth : 'tis madness,
Nay more, a secure impotence, to tempt
An armed Guest : feed not an eye, that conquers,
Nor teach a fortunate sword the way to be covetous.

Ptol. Ye judge amiss, and far too wide to alter me,
Yet all be ready, as I gave direction :
The secret way of all our wealth appearing
Newly, and handsomely : and all about it :
No more dissuading : 'tis my will.

Ach. I grieve for't.

Ptol. I will dazel Cæsar, with excess of glory.

Pho. I fear you'll curse your will, we must obey ye. [Exit.

SCENA IV.

Enter Cæsar, Antony, Dolabella, Scæva, above.

Cæsar. I wonder at the glory of this Kingdom,
And the most bounteous preparation,
Still as I pass, they court me with.

Scæva. Ple tell ye :

In Gaul, and Germany, we saw such visions,
And stood not to admire 'em, but possess 'em :
When they are ours, they are worth our admiration.

Enter Cleopatra.

Ant. The young Queen comes : give room.

Cæsar. Welcom (my dearest)
Come blefs my side.

Scæva. I marry : here's a wonder,
As she appears now, I am no true Souldier,
If I be not readie to recant.

Cleo. Be merry Sir,
My Brother will be proud to do you honour
That now appears himself.

Enter Ptolomy, Achoreus, Achillas, Photinus, Apollodorus.

Pto. Haile to great Cæsar
My Royal Guest, first I will feast thine eyes
With wealthy Egypt's store, and then thy palate,
And wait my self upon thee. Treasure brought in.

Cæsar. What rich Service ?
What mines of treasure ?

Cleo. My Cæsar,
What do you admire ? pray ye turn, and let me talk to ye.
Have ye forgot me Sir ? how, a new object ?
Am I grown old o'th' sudden, Cæsar ?

Cæsar. Tell me
From whence comes all this wealth ?

Cleo. Is your eye that way ?
And all my Beauties banisht ?

Ptol. Ple tell thee Cæsar,
We owe for all this wealth to the old Nilus :
We need no dropping rain to cheer the husband-man,
Nor Merchant that ploughs up the Sea, to seek us ;
Within the wealthy womb of reverent Nilus,
All this is nourish'd : who to do thee honour,
Comes to discover his seven Deities,
(His conceal'd heads) unto thee : see with pleasure.

Cæsar. The matchless wealth of this Land !

Cleo. Come, ye shall hear me.

Cæsar. Away : let me imagine.

Cleo. How ? frown on me ?

The eyes of Cæsar wrapt in storms ?

Cæsar. I am sorry :

But let me think —

Musick, SONG.

Enter Isis, and three Labourers.

Isis, the Goddess of this Land,
Bids thee (great Cæsar) understand
And mark our Customes, and first know,
With greedy eyes these watch the flow
Of plenteous Nilus : when he comes,
With Songs, with Daunces, Timbrels, Drums
They entertain him, cut his way,
And give his proud Heads leave to play :
Nilus himself shall rise, and show
His matchless wealth in Over-flow.

Labourers SONG.

Come let us help the reverend Nile,
He's very old (alas the while)
Let us dig him easie wayes,
And prepare a thousand Playes :
To delight his streams let's sing
A loud welcom to our Spring.
This way let his curling Heads
Fall into our new made Beds.
This way let his wanton spawnes,
Frisk, and glide it o're the Lawns.
This way profit comes, and gain :
How he tumbles here amain !
How his waters haste to fall
Into our Channels ! Labour all

And

And let him in: Let Nilus flow,
And perpetual plenty show.
With Incense let us bless the brim,
And as the wanton fishes swim,
Let us Gums, and Garlands fling,
And loud our Tambrels ring.
Come (old Father) come away,
Our labour is our holy day.

Ifis. Here comes the aged River now
With Garlands of great Pearl, his Brow
Begirt and rounded: In his Flow
All things take life; and all things grow.
A thousand wealthy Treasures still,
To do him service at his will Follow his rising Flood, and pour
Perpetuall blessings in our store.
Hear him: and next there will advance,
His sacred Heads to tread a Dance,
In honour of my Royal Guest,
Mark them too: and you have a Feast.

Cleo. A little drops betray me?

Cesar. I am ashamed I warr'd at home, (my friends)
When such wealth may be got abroad: what honour?
Nay everlasting glory had Rome purchas'd,
Had she a just cause but to visit Egypt?

Nilus SONG, and Dance.

Make room for my rich waters fall,
and bless my Flood,
Nilus comes flowing, to you all increase and good.
Now the Plants and Flowers shall spring,
And the merry Plough-man sing
In my bidden waves I bring
Bread, and wine, and every thing.
Let the Damsells sing me in:
Sing aloud that I may rise:
Your holy Feasts and hours begin,
And each hand bring a Sacrifice.
Now my wanton Pearls I show
That to Ladies fair necks grow.
Now my gold
And treasures that can ne're be told,
Shall bless this Land, by my rich Flow,
And after this, to crown your Eyes,
My hidden holy head arise.

Cesar. The wonder of this wealth so troubles me,
I am not well: good-night.

See. I am glad ye have it:

Now we shall stir again.

Ptol. Thou wealth, still haunt him.

See. A greedy spirit set thee on: we are happy.

Ptol. Lights: lights for Caesar, and attendance.

Cleo. Well,

I shall yet find a time to tell thee Caesar,
Thou hast wrong'd her Love: the rest here.

Ptol. Lights along still:

Musick, and Sacrifice to sleep for Caesar.

[Exeunt.]

Ætus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Ptolomy, Photinus, Achilles, Achoreus.

Ach. Itold ye carefully, what this would prove to,
What this inestimable wealth and glory
Would draw upon ye: I advis'd your Majesty
Never to tempt a Conquering Guest: nor add
A bait, to catch a mind, bent by his Trade

To make the whole world his.

Pho. I was not heard Sir;

Or what I said, lost, and contemn'd; I dare say,
(And freshly now) 'twas a poor weakness in ye,
A glorious Childishness: I watch'd his eye,
And saw how Faulcon-like it tower'd, and flew
Upon the wealthy Quarry: how round it mark'd it:
I observ'd his words, and to what it tended;
How greedily he ask'd from whence it came,
And what Commerce we held for such abundance:
The shew of Nilus, how he laboured at
To find the secret wayes the Song delivered.

Ach. He never smil'd, I noted, at the pleasures,
But fixt his constant eyes upon the treasure;
I do not think his ears had so much leisure
After the wealth appear'd, to hear the Musique?
Most sure he has not slept since, his mind's troubled
With objects that would make their own still labour.

Pho. Your Sister he ne're gaz'd on: that's a main note,
The prime beauty of the world had no power over him.

Ach. Where was his mind the whilst?

Pho. Where was your carefulness

To shew an armed thief the way to rob ye?
Nay, would you give him this, 'twill excite him
To seek the rest. Ambition feels no gift,
Nor knows no bounds, indeed ye have done most weakly.

Ptol. Can I be too kind to my noble friend?

Pho. To be unkind unto your noble self, but favours
Of indiscretion, and your friend has found it.
Had ye been train'd up in the wants and miseries
A souldier marches through, and known his temperance
In offer'd courtesies, you would have made
A wiser Master of your own, and stronger.

Ptol. Why, should I give him all, he would return it:
'Tis more to him, to make Kings.

Pho. Pray be wiser,
And trust not with your lost wealth, your lov'd liberty.
To be a King still at your own discretion
Is like a King; to be at his, a vassail.
Now take good counsel, or no more take to ye
The freedom of a Prince.

Achil. 'Twill be too late else:
For, since the Masque, he sent three of his Captains
(Ambitious as himself) to view again
The glory of your wealth.

Pho. The next himself comes,
Not staying for your courtesie, and takes it.

Ptol. What counsel, my Achoreus?

Ach. Plea goe pray Sir,
(For that is best counsel now) the gods may help ye. [Ex.]

Pho. I found ye out a way but 'twas not credited,
A most secure way: whither will ye flye now? (follow.)

Achil. For when your wealth is gone, your power must
Pho. And that diminisht also, what's your life worth?
Who would regard it?

Ptol. You say true.

Achil. What eye
Will look upon King Ptolomy? if they do look,
It must be in scorn:

For a poor King, is a monster;
What can remember ye? 'twill be then a courtesie
(A noble one) to take your life too from ye:
But if reserv'd, you stand to fill a victory,
As who knows Conquerours minds? though outwardly
They bear fair streams.

O Sir, does this not shake ye?

If to be honoyed on to these afflictions ———

Ptol. I never will: I was a Fool.

Pho. For then Sir

Your Countreys cause falls with ye too, and fetter'd:
All Egypt shall be plough'd up with dishonour.

Ptol. No more: I am sensible: and now my spirit
Burns hot within me.

Achil. Keep it warm and fiery:

U u

Pho.

Tho. And last be counsel'd.
Fid. I will, though I perish.
Tho. Goe in; we'll tell you all: and then we'll execute.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Cleopatra, Arsino, Eros.Ars. You are so impatient.Cleo. Have I not cause?

Women of common Beauties, and low Births,
 When they are slighted, are allow'd their angers,
 Why should not I (a Princess) make him know
 The baseness of his usage?

Ars. Yes: 'tis fit:

But then again you know what man.

Cleo. He is no man:

The shadow of a Greatness hangs upon him,
 And not the vertue: he is no Conquerour,
 H'as suffer'd under the base dross of Nature:
 Poorly delivered up his power to wealth,
 (The god of bed-rid men) taught his eyes treason
 Against the truth of love: he has rais'd rebellion:
 Desi'd his holy flames.

Eros. He will fall back again,
 And satisfy your Grace.Cleo. Had I been old,

Or blasted in my bud, he might have shew'd
 Some shadow of dislike: But, to prefer
 The lustre of a little art, Arsino,
 And the poor glow-worm light of some faint Jewels,
 Before the life of Love, and soul of Beauty,
 Oh how it vexes me! he is no Souldier,
 (All honourable Souldiers are Loves servants)
 He is a Merchant; a meer wandring Merchant,
 Servile to gain: he trades for poor Commodities, (tains
 And makes his Conquests, thefts; some fortunate Cap-
 That quarter with him, and afe truly valiant,
 Have slung the name of happy Cesar on him,
 Himself ne're won it: he is so base and covetous,
 He'll sell his sword for gold.

Ars. This is too bitter.

Cleo. Oh I could curse my self, that was so foolish,
 So fondly childish to believe his tongue,
 His promising tongue, e're I could catch his temper,
 I had trash enough to have cloy'd his eyes withal,
 His covetous eyes; such as I scorn to tread on:
 Richer than e're he saw yet, and more tempting; (nour,
 Had I known he had stoop'd at that, I had sav'd mine ho-
 I had been happy still: but let him take it,
 And let him brag how poorly I am rewarded:
 Let him goe conquer still weak wretched Ladies:
 Love has his angry Quiver too, his deadly,
 And when he finds scorn, armed at the strongest:
 I am a fool to fret thus, for a fool:
 An old blind fool too: I lose my health? I will not:
 I will not cry: I will not honour him
 With tears diviner than the gods he worships:
 I will not take the pains to curse a poor thing.

Eros. Doe not: you shall not need.Cleo. Would I were prisoner

To one I hate, that I might anger him,
 I will love any man, to break the heart of him:
 Any, that has the heart and will to kill him.

Ars. Take some fair truce.

Cleo. I will goe study mischief,
 And put a look on, arm'd with all my cunning,
 Shall meet him like a Basilisque, and strike him:
 Love, put destroying flames into mine eyes,
 Into my smiles, deceits, that I may torture him,
 That I may make him love to death, and laugh at him.

Enter Apollodorus.Ap. Cesar commends his Service to your Grace.Cleo. His service? what's his service?Eros. Pray ye be patient,
 The noble Cesar loves still.Cleo. What's his will?Ap. He craves access unto your Highness.Cleo. No:

Say no: I will have none to trouble me.

Ars. Good Sister.Cleo. None I say: I will be private.

Would thou hadst slung me into Nilus, keeper,
 When first thou gav'st consent, to bring my body
 To this unthankfull Cesar.

Ap. 'Twas your will, Madam,
 Nay more, your charge upon me, as I honoured ye:
 You know what danger I endured.

Cleo. Take this,

And carry it to that Lordly Cesar sent thee:
 There's a new Love, a handsom one, a rich one:
 One that will hug his mind: bid him make love to it:
 Tell the ambitious Broker, this will suffer ———

Enter Cesar.Ap. He enters.Cleo. How?Cesar. I do not use to wait, Lady,
 Where I am, all the doers are free, and open.Cleo. I ghes so, by your rudeness.Cesar. Ye are not angry?

Things of your tender mold, should be most gentle;
 Why do you frown? good gods, what a set-anger
 Have you forc'd into your face? Come, I must temper ye:
 What a coy finile was there, and a disdainfull?
 How like an ominous flash it broke out from ye?
 Defend me, Love, Sweet, who has anger'd ye?

Cleo. Shew him a glass; that false face has betrai'd me:
 That base heart wrought me ———

Cesar. Be more sweetly angry;

I wrong'd ye fair?

Cleo. Away with your foul flatteries:

They are too gross: but that I dare be angry,
 And with as great a god as Cesar is,
 To shew how poorly I respect his memory,
 I would not speak to ye.

Cesar. Pray ye undoe this riddle,
 And tell me how I have vext ye?

Cleo. Let me think first

Whether I may put on a Patience
 That will with honour suffer me: know, I hate ye,
 Let that begin the story: Now I'll tell ye.

Cesar. But do it milder: In a noble Lady,
 Softness of spirit, and a sober nature, (ness;
 That moves like summer winds, cool, and blows sweet-
 Shews blessed like her self.

Cleo. And that great blessedness
 You first reap'd of me: till you taught my nature
 Like a rude storm to talk aloud, and thunder,
 Sleep was not gentler than my soul, and stiller;
 You had the Spring of my affections:
 And my fair fruits I gave you leave to taste of:
 You must expect the winter of mine anger:
 You slung me off, before the Court disgrac'd me,
 When in the pride I appear'd of all my beauty,
 Appear'd your Mistress, took into your eyes
 The common stumptet love of hated lucre,
 Courted with covetous heart, the slave of nature,
 Gave all your thoughts to gold, that men of glory,
 And minds adorn'd with noble love, would kick at:
 Souldiers of royal mark, scorn such base purchase:
 Beauty and honour are the marks they shoot at;
 I spake to ye then; I courted ye, and woo'd ye:
 Call'd ye dear Cesar, hung about ye tenderly:
 Was proud to appear your friend..

Cesar. You have mistaken me.

Cleo. But neither Eye, nor Favour, not a Smile
 Was I blessed back with; but shook off rudely,

And,

And, as ye had been sold to fordid infamy,
You fell before the Images of treasure,
And in your soul you worship'd : I stood slighted,
Forgotten and contemn'd ; my soft embraces,
And those sweet kisses you call'd Elyzium,
As letters writ in sand, no more remembered :
The name and glory of your Cleopatra
Laugh'd at, and made a story to your Captains,
Shall I endure ?

Cesar. You are deceiv'd in all this,
Upon my life you are, 'tis your much tenderness.

Cleo. No, no, I love not that way ; you are cozen'd :
I love with as much ambition as a Conquerour,
And where I love, will triumph.

Cesar. So you shall :
My heart shall be the Chariot that shall bear ye,
All I have won shall wait upon ye : By the gods
The bravery of this womans mind, has fired me :
Dear Mistress shall I but this night ? —

Cleo. How Cesar ?
Have I let slip a second vanity
That gives thee hope ?

Cesar. You shall be absolute,
And Reign alone as Queen : you shall be any thing.

Cleo. Make me a maid again, and then I'll hear thee ;
Examine all thy art of War, to do that ;
And if thou find'st it possible, I'll love thee :
Till when, farewell, unthankfull.

Cesar. Stay.

Cleo. I will not.

Cesar. I command.

Cleo. Command, and goe without, Sir.
I do command thee be my slave for ever,
And vex while I laugh at thee.

Cesar. Thus low, beauty.

Cleo. It is too late ; when I have found thee absolute,
The man that Fame reports thee, and to me,
May be I shall think better. Farewel Conquerour. [Exit.

Cesar. She mocks me too : I will enjoy her Beauty :
I will not be deni'd ; I'll force my longing.
Love is best pleas'd, when roundly we compel him,
And as he is Imperious, so will I be.
Stay fool, and be advis'd : that dulls the appetite,
Takes off the strength and sweetness of delight.
By Heaven she is a miracle, I must use
A handsom way to win : how now ; what fear
Dwells in your faces ? you look all distracted.

Enter Sceva, Anthony, Dolabella.

Sceva. If it be fear, 'tis fear of your undoing,
Not of our selves : fear of your poor declining :
Our lives and deaths are equall benefits,
And we make louder prayers to dye nobly, (here,
Than to live high, and wantonly : whilst you are secure
And offer Hecatombs of lazie kisses
To the lewd god of love, and cowardize,
And most lasciviously dye in delights,
You are begirt with the fierce Alexandrians.

Dol. The spawn of Egypt flow about your Palace,
Arm'd all : and ready to assault.

Ant. Led on
By the false and base Photinus and his Ministers ;
No stirring out ; no peeping through a loop-hole,
But straight saluted with an armed Dart.

Sce. No parley : they are deaf to all but danger,
They swear they will slay us, and then dry our Quarters :
A rather of a salt lover, is such a Shooing-horn :
Can you kiss away this conspiracy, and set us free ?
Or will the Giant god of love fight for ye ?
Will his fierce war-like bow kill a Cock-sparrow ?
Bring out the Lady, she can quell this mutiny :
And with her powerfull looks strike awe into them :
She can destroy, and build again the City,
Your Goddesses have mighty gifts : shew 'em her fair breasts,

The impregnable Bulworks of proud Love, and let 'em
Begin their battery there : she will laugh at 'em ;
They are not above a hundred thousand, Sir.
A mist, a mist, that when her Eyes break out,
Her powerfull radiant eyes, and shake their flashes,
Will flye before her heats.

Cesar. Begirt with Villains ?

Sce. They come to play you, and your Love a Huntsup.
You were told what this same whorson wenching, long (agoe would come to :

You are taken napping now : has not a Souldier,
A time to kiss his friend, and a time to consider,
But he must lye still digging, like a Pioneer,
Making of mines, and burying of his honour there ?
'Twere good you would think —

Dol. And time too, or you will find else
A harder task, than Courting a coy Beauty.

Ant. Look out and then believe.

Sce. No, no, hang danger :
Take me provoking broth, and then goe to her :
Goe to your Love, and let her feel your valour ; (Sir,)
Charge her whole body, when the sword's in your throat
You may cry, Cesar, and see if that will help ye.

Cesar. I'll be my self again, and meet their furies,
Meet, and consume their mischiefs : make some shift, Sceva,
To recover the Fleet, and bring me up two Legions,
And you shall see me, how I'll break like thunder
Amongst these beds of slimy Eeles, and scatter 'em.

Sce. Now ye speak sense I'll put my life to the hazard,
Before I goe, No more of this warm Lady,
She will spoil your sword-hand.

Cesar. Goe : come, let's to Counsel
How to prevent, and then to execute.

SCENA III.

Enter Souldiers.

1 Sold. Did ye see this Penitence ?

2 Sold. Yes : I saw, and heard it.

3 Sold. And I too : look'd upon him, and observ'd it,
He's the strangest Septinius now —

1 Sold. I heard he was altered,
And had given away his Gold to honest uses :
Cry'd monstrously.

2 Sold. He cries abundantly :
He is blind almost with weeping.

3 Sold. 'Tis most wonderfull
That a hard hearted man, and an old Souldier (dy'd
Should have so much kind moisture : when his Mother
He laugh'd aloud, and made the wickedst Ballads —

1 Sold. 'Tis like enough : he never lov'd his Parents ;
Nor can I blame him, for they ne'r lov'd him.
His Mother dream'd before she was deliver'd
That she was brought abed with a Buzzard, and ever after
She whistl'd him up to th' world : his brave clothes too
He has flung away, and goes like one of us now :
Walks with his hands in's pockets, poor and sorrowfull,
And gives the best instructions. —

2 Sold. And telis stories
Of honest and good people that were honour'd,
And how they were remembered : and runs mad
If he but hear of any ungratefull person,
A bloody, or betraying man —

3 Sold. If it be possible
That an Arch-Villain may ever be recovered,
This penitent Rascal will put hard : 'twere worth our labour
To see him once again.

Enter Septinius.

1 Sold. He spares us that labour,
For here he comes.

1 Sep. — Bless ye my honest friends,
Bless ye from base unworthy men ; come not near me,
For I am yet too taking for your company.

1 Sold. Did I not tell ye?

2 Sold. What book's that?

1 Sold. No doubt

Some excellent Salve for a sore heart: are you
Septimius, that base knave, that betray'd Pompey?

Sep. I was, and am; unless your honest thoughts
Will look upon my penitence, and save me,
I must be ever Villain: O good Souldiers
You that have Roman hearts, take heed of falsehood:
Take heed of blood; take heed of foul ingratitude.
The Gods have scarce a mercy for those mischiefes,
Take heed of pride, 'twas that that brought me to it.

2 Sol. This fellow would make a rare speech at the gal-

2 Sol. 'Tis very fit he were hang'd to edifie us: (lows.)

Sep. Let all your thoughts be humble, and obedient,
Love your Commanders, honour them that feed ye:
Pray, that ye may be strong in honesty
As in the use of arms; Labour, and diligently
To keep your hearts from ease, and her base issues,
Pride, and ambitious wantonness, those spoil'd me.
Rather lose all your limbs, than the least honesty,
You are never lame indeed, till loss of credit
Benumb ye through: Scars, and those mains of honour
Are memorable crutches, that shall bear
When you are dead, your noble names to Eternity.

1 Sol. I cry.

2 Sol. And so do I.

3 Sol. An excellent villain.

1 Sol. A more sweet pious knave I never heard yet.

2 Sol. He was happie he was Rascal, to come to this.

Enter Achoreus.

Who's this? a Priest?

Sep. O stay, most holy Sir!
And by the Gods of Egypt, I conjure ye,
(Isis, and great Osiris) pity me,
Pity a loaden man, and tell me truly
With what most humble Sacrifice I may
Wash off my sin, and appease the powers that hate me?
Take from my heart those thousand thousand furies,
That restless gnaw upon my life, and save me.
Orestes bloody hands fell on his Mother,
Yet, at the holy altar he was pardon'd.

Ach. Orestes out of madness did his murder,
And therefore he found grace: thou (worst of all men)
Out of cold blood, and hope of gain, base lucre,
Slew'st thine own Feeder: come not near the altar,
Nor with thy recking hands pollute the Sacrifice,
Thou art markt for shame eternal. [Exit.

Sep. Look all on me,
And let me be a story left to time
Of blood and Infamy, how base and ugly
Ingratitude appears, with all her profits,
How monstrous my hop'd grace; at Court? good souldiers
Let neither flattery, nor the witching sound
Of high and soft preferment, touch your goodness:
To be valiant, old, and honest, O what blessedness —

1 Sold. Dost thou want any thing?

Sep. Nothing but your prayers.

2 Sol. Be thus, and let the blind Priest do his worst,
We have gods as well as they, and they will hear us.

3 Sol. Come, cry no more: thou hast wept out twenty Pompeys.

Enter *Pho*tinus, Achilles.

Pho. So penitent?

Achil. It seems so.

Pho. Yet for all this

We must employ him.

1 Sol. These are the arm'd Souldier leaders:
Away: and let's toth' Fort, we shall be snapt else. [Exit.

Pho. How now? why thus? what cause of this dejection?

Achil. Why dost thou weep?

Sep. Pray leave me, you have ruin'd me,
You have made me a famous Villain.

Pho. Does that touch thee?

Achil. He will be hard to win: he feels his lewdness.

Pho. He must be won, or we shall want our right hand.
This fellow dares, and knows, and must be heartned.
Art thou so poor to blench at what thou hast done?
Is Conscience a comrade for an old Soldier?

Achil. It is not that: it may be some disgrace
That he takes heavily; and would be cherish'd,
Septimius ever scorn'd to shew such weakness.

Sep. Let me alone; I am not for your purpose,
I am now a new man.

Pho. We have new affairs for thee,
Those that would raise thy head.

Sep. I would 'twere off,
And in your bellies for the love you bear me.
I'll be no more Knave: I have stings enough
Already in my breast.

Pho. Thou shalt be noble:
And who dares think then that thou art not honest?

Achil. Thou shalt command in Chief, all our strong
And if thou serv'st an use, must not all justify it? (Forces

Sep. I am Rogue enough.

Pho. Thou wilt be more, and baser:

A poor Rogue is all Rogues: open to all shames:
Nothing to shadow him: dost thou think crying
Can keep thee from the censure of the Multitude?
Or to be kneeling at the altar save thee?

'Tis poor and servile:

Wert thou thine own Sacrifice

'Twould seem so low, people would spit the fire out.

Achil. Keep thy self glorious still, though ne're so stain'd,
And that will lessen it, if not work it out.

To goe complaining thus, and thus repenting
Like a poor Girl that had betray'd her maidend-head —

Sep. I'll stop mine ears.

Achil. Will shew so in a Souldier,
So simply, and so ridiculously, so tamely —

Pho. If people would believe thee, 'twere some honesty,
And for thy penitence would not laugh at thee
(As sure they will) and beat thee for thy poverty:
If they would allow thy foolery, there were some hope.

Sep. My foolery?

Pho. Nay, more than that, thy misery,
Thy monstrous misery.

Achil. He begins to hearken:

Thy misery so great, men will not bury thee.

Sep. That this were true!

Pho. Why does this conquering Cesar

Labour through the worlds deep Seas of toyls and troubles,
Dangers, and desperate hopes? to repent afterwards?

Why does he slaughter thousands in a Battel,

And whip his Country with the sword? to cry for't?

Thou kill'd'st great Pompey; he'll kill all his kindred,

And justify it: nay raise up Trophies to it.

When thou hear'st him repent, (he's held most holy too)

And cry for doing daily bloody murders,

Take thou example, and go ask forgiveness,

Call up the thing thou nam'st thy conscience,

And let it work: then 'twill seem well Septimius.

Sep. He does all this.

Achil. Yes: and is honour'd for it;
Nay call'd the honour'd Cesar, so maist thou be:

Thou wert born as near a Crown as he.

Sep. He was poor.

Pho. And desperate bloody tricks got him this credit.

Sep. I am afraid you will once more —

Pho. Help to raise thee:

Off with thy pining black, it dulls a Souldier,

And put on resolution like a man,

A noble Fate waits on thee.

Sep. I now feel

My self-returning Rascal speedily.

O that I had the power —

Achil. Thou shalt have all:

And do all through thy power, men shall admire thee,
And the vices of Septinius shall turn vertues.

Sep. Off: off: thou must off: off my cowardize,
Puling repentance off.

Pho. Now thou speakst nobly.

Sep. Off my dejected looks: and welcom impudence:

My daring shall be Deity, to save me:

Give me instructions, and put action on me:

A glorious cause upon my swords point, Gentlemen,

And let my wit, and valour work: you will raise me,

And make me out-dare all my miseries?

Pho. All this, and all thy wishes.

Sep. Use me then,

Womanish fear farewell: I'll never melt more,

Lead on, to some great thing, to wake my spirit:

I cut the Cedar Pompey, and I'll fell

This huge Oak Cesar too.

Pho. Now thou singst sweetly:

And Protomy shall crown thee for thy service.

Achil. He's well wrought: put him on apace for cooling.

[Exeunt.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Cesar, Antony, Dolabella.

Ant. THE tumult still encreases.

Cesar. O my fortune!

My lustfull folly rather! but 'tis well,

And worthily I am made a bondmans prey,

That after all my glorious victories,

In which I pass'd so many Seas of dangers,

When all the Elements conspir'd against me,

Would yield up the dominion of this head

To any mortal power: so blind and stupid,

To trust these base Egyptians, that proclaim'd

Their perjuries, in noble Pompeys death,

And yet that could not warn me.

Dol. Be still Cesar,

Who ever lov'd to exercise his fate,

Where danger look't most dreadful.

Ant. If you fall,

Fall not alone: let the King and his Sister

Be buried in your ruines: on my life

They both are guilty: reason may assure you

Photinus nor Achillas durst attempt you,

Or shake one Dart, or sword, aim'd at your safety,

Without their warrant.

Cesar. For the young King I know not

How he may be misled; but for his Sister

(Unequall'd Cleopatra) 'twere a kind

Of blasphemy to doubt her: ugly treason

Durst never dwell in such a glorious building,

Nor can so clear and great a spirit, as hers is,

Admit of falsehood.

Ant. Let us seize on him then:

And leave her to her fortune.

Dol. If he have power

Use it to your security, and let

His honesty acquit him: if he be false

It is too great an honour he should dye

By your victorious hand.

Cesar. He comes: and I

Shall do as I find cause.

Enter Protomy, Achoreus, Apollodorus.

Ptol. Let not great Cesar

Impute the breach of hospitality,

To you (my guest) to me; I am contemn'd,

And my rebellious subjects lift their hands

Against my head: and would they aim'd no farther,

Provided that I fell a sacrifice

To gain you safety: that this is not feign'd,

The boldness of my innocence may confirm you:

Had I been privy to their bloody plot,

I now had led them on, and given fair gloss

To their bad cause, by being present with them:

But I that yet taste of the punishment,

In being false to Pompey, will not make

A second fault to Cesar uncompe'l'd

With such as have not yet shook off obedience,

I yield my self to you, and will take part

In all your dangers.

Cesar. This pleads your excuse,

And I receive it.

Ach. If they have any touch

Of justice, or religion, I will use

The authority of our Gods, to call them back

From their bad purpose.

Apo. This part of the palace

Is yet defensible: we may make it good,

Till your powers rescue us.

Cesar. Cesar besieg'd?

O stain to my great actions: 'twas my custom,

An Army routed, as my feet had wings

To be first in the chase: nor walls, nor Bulworks

Could guard those that escap'd the Battels fury

From this strong Arm; and I to be enclos'd?

My heart! my heart! but 'tis necessity,

To which the Gods must yield, and I obey,

'Till I redeem it by some glorious way.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

Enter Photinus, Achillas, Septinius, Souldiers.

Pho. There's no retiring now, we are broke in:

The deed past hope of pardon: if we prosper

'Twill be stil'd lawfull, and we shall give laws

To those that now command us: stop not at

Or loyalty, or duty: bold ambition,

To dare and power to do, gave the first difference

Between the King, and subject, Cesars Motto,

Aut Cesar aut Nihil, each of us must claim,

And use it as our own.

Achil. The deed is bloody

If we conclude in Ptolomies death.

Pho. The better,

The globe of Empire must be so manur'd.

Sep. Rome, that from Romulus first took her name,

Had her walls water'd with a Crimson showr

Drain'd from a Brothers heart: nor was she rais'd

To this prodigious height, that overlooks

Three full parts of the Earth, that pay her tribute,

But by enlarging of her marrow bounds

By the Sack of Neighbour Cities, not made hers

Till they were Cemented with the Blood of those

That did possess 'em: Cesar, Ptolomy,

(Now I am steel'd) to me are empty names

Esteem'd as Pompeys was.

Pho. Well said Septinius,

Thou now art right again.

Achil. But what course take we

For the Princess Cleopatra?

Pho. Let her live

A while to make us sport: she shall authorize

Our undertakings to the ignorant people,

As if what we do were by her command:

But our triumvirat Government once confirm'd,

She bears her Brother company that's my Province:

Leave me to work her.

Achil. I will undertake

For Ptolomy.

Sep. Cesar shall be my task,

And as in Pompey I began a name

I'll perfect it in Cesar.

Enter

Enter (above) Cæsar, Ptolomy, Achoreus, Apollodorus, Antony, Dolabella.

Pho. 'Tis resolv'd then,
We'll force our passage.

Achil. See, they do appear
As they desir'd a Parley.

Pho. I am proud yet
I have brought 'em to capitulate.

Ptol. Now, Photinus?

Pho. Now, Ptolomy?

Ptol. No addition?

Pho. We are equal,
Though Cæsars name were put into the scale,
In which our worth is weigh'd.

Cæs. Presumptuous Villain,
Upon what grounds hast thou presum'd to raise
Thy servile hand against the King, or me,
That have a greater name?

Pho. On those, by which
Thou didst presume to pass the Rubicon
Against the Laws of Rome; and at the name
Of Traitor smile; as thou didst when Marcellus,
The Consul, with the Senates full consent
Pronounc'd thee for an Enemy to thy Country,
Yet thou wentst on, and thy rebellious Cause
Was crown'd with fair success: Why should we fear then?
Think on that, Cæsar.

Cæs. O the gods! be brav'd thus,
And be compell'd to bear this from a Slave
That would not brook Great Pompey his Superiour?

Achil. Thy glories now have toucht the highest point,
And must descend.

Pho. Despair, and think we stand
The Champions of Rome, to wreak her wrongs,
Upon whose liberty thou hast set thy foot.

Sept. And that the Ghosts of all those noble Romans
That by thy Sword fell in this Civil War
Expect revenge.

Ant. Dar'it thou speak, and remember
There was a Pompey?

Pho. There is no hope to 'scape us:
If that against the odds we have upon you
You dare come forth, and fight, receive the honour
To dye like Romans, if ye faint, resolve
To starve like Wretches; I disdain to change
Another syllable with you.

[Exeunt.]

Ant. Let us dye nobly;
And rather fall upon each others Sword
Than come into these Villains hands.

Cæs. That Fortune,
Which to this hour hath been a Friend to Cæsar,
Though for a while she cloath her Brow with frowns,
Will smile again upon me: who will pay her,
Or sacrifice, or Vows, if she forsake
Her best of works in me? or suffer him,
Whom with a strong hand she hath led triumphant
Through the whole western world, and Rome acknowledg'd
Her Sovereign Lord, to end in gloriously
A life admir'd by all? The threatned danger
Must by a way more horrid be avoided,
And I will run the hazard; Fire the Palace,
And the rich Magazines that neighbour it,
In which the Wealth of Egypt is contain'd:
Start not, it shall be so; that while the people
Labour in quenching the ensuing flames,
Like Cæsar, with this handful of my friends
Through Fire, and Swords I force a passage to My conquering Legions. King, if thou dar'd follow
Where Cæsar leads, or live or dye a Free man;
If not, stay here a Bond-man to thy Slave,
And dead, be thought unworthy of a Grave.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Enter Septimius.

Sept. I feel my resolution melts again
And that I am not Knave alone, but fool,
In all my purposes. The Devil, Photinus,
Employs me as a Property, and grown useles
Will shake me off again; he told me so
When I kill'd Pompey; nor can I hope better,
When Cæsar is dispatch'd; Services done
For such as only study their own ends,
Too great to be rewarded, are return'd
With deadly hate; I learn'd this Principle
In his own School, yet still he fools me, well;
And yet he trusts me: Since I in my nature
Was fashion'd to be false, wherefore should I
That kill'd my General, and a Roman, one
To whom I ow'd all nourishments of life,
Be true to an Egyptian? To save Cæsar,
And turn Photinus's plots on his own head,
As it is in my power, redeem my credit,
And live to lye and swear again in fashion,
Oh, 'twere a master-piece? ha! — me Cæsar,
How's he got off!

Enter Cæsar, Ptolomy, Antony, Dolabella, Achoreus, Apollodorus, Souldiers.

Cæs. The fire has took,
And shews the City like a second Troy,
The Navy too is scorch'd, the people greedy
To save their Wealth and Houses, whilst their Souldiers
Make spoil of all; only Achillas's Troops
Make good their Guard, break through them, we are safe;
I'll lead you like a Thunder-bolt.

Sept. Stay, Cæsar.

Cæs. Who's this? the Dog, Septimius?

Ant. Cut his throat.

Dol. You bark'd but now, fawn you so soon?

Sept. O hear me,
What I'll deliver is for Cæsars safety,
For all your good.

Ant. Good from a mouth like thine, (days?)
That never belch'd but blasphemy, and treason on Festival

Sept. I am an altered man, altered indeed,
And will give you cause to say I am a Roman.

Dol. Rogue, I grant thee.

Sept. Trust me, I'll make the passage smooth, and easie
For your escape.

Ant. I'll trust the Devil sooner,
And make a safer Bargain.

Sept. I am trusted

With all Photinus's secrets.

Ant. There's no doubt then
Thou wilt be false.

Sept. Still to be true to you.

Dol. And very likely.

Cæs. Be brief, the means?

Sept. Thus, Cæsar,
To me alone, but bound by terrible oaths
Not to discover it, he hath reveal'd
A dismal Vault, whose dreadful mouth does open
A mile beyond the City: in this Cave
Lye but two hours conceal'd.

Ant. If you believe him,
He'll bury us alive.

Dol. I'll flye in the Air first,

Sept. Then in the dead of night I'll bring you back
Into a private room, where you shall find
Photinus, and Achillas, and the rest
Of their Commanders close at Council.

Cæs. Good, what follows?

Sept. Fall me fairly on their throats,
Their heads cut off and shorn, the multitude
Will easily disperse.

Cæs.

Ces. O Devil! away with him;
Nor true to Friend nor Enemy? Cesar scorns
To find his safety, or revenge his wrongs
So base a way; or owe the means of life
To such a leprous Traytor. I have tow'r'd
For Victory like a Faulcon in the Clouds,
Nor dig'd for't like a Mole; our Swords and Cause
Make way for us, and that it may appear
We took a noble Course, and hate base Treason,
Some Souldiers that would merit Cesar's favour,
Hang him on yonder Turret, and then follow
The lane this Sword makes for you.

Exit.

1 Sold. Here's a Belt,
Though I dye for it I'll use it.

2 Sold. 'Tis too good
To trufs a Cur in.

Sept. Save me, here's Gold.

1 Sold. If Rome
Were offer'd for thy ransom, it could not help thee.

2 Sold. Hang not an arse.

1 Sold. Goad him on with thy Sword;
Thou dost deserve a worser end, and may
All such conclude so, that their friends betray. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Enter (severally) Arsino, Eros, Cleopatra.

Ars. We are lost.

Eros. Undone.

Ars. Confusion, Fire, and Swords,
And fury in the Souldiers face more horrid
Circle us round.

Eros. The Kings Command they laugh at,
And jeer at Cesars threats.

Ars. My Brother seiz'd on
By the Roman, as thought guilty of the tumult,
And forc'd to bear him company, as mark'd out
For his protection or revenge.

Eros. They have broke
Into my Cabinet; my Trunks are ranfack'd.

Ars. I have lost my jewels too: but that's the least:
The barbarous Rascals, against all humanity,
Or sense of pity, have kill'd my little Dog,
And broke my Monkeys Chain.

Eros. They rifled me:
But that I could endure, would they proceed no further.

Ars. O my Sister!

Eros. My Queen, my Mistrefs!

Ars. Can you stand unmov'd
VVhen the Earth-quake of Rebellion shakes the City,
And the Court trembles?

Cleo. Yes, Arsino,
And with a Masculine Constancy deride
Fortunes worst malice, as a Servant to
My Vertues, not a Mistrefs; then we forsake
The strong Fort of our selves, when we once yield,
Or shrink at her assaults; I am still myself,
And though disrob'd of Sovereignty, and ravish'd
Of ceremonious duty, that attends it,
Nay, grant they had slav'd my Body, my free mind
Like to the Palm-tree walling fruitful Nile,
Shall grow up straighter and enlarge it self
'Spight of the envious weight that loads it with:
Think of thy Birth (Arsino) common burdens
Fit common Shoulders; teach the multitude
By suffering nobly what they fear to touch at;
The greatness of thy mind does soar a pitch,
Their dim eyes (darkened by their narrow souls)
Cannot arrive at.

Ars. I am new created,
And owe this second being to you (best Sister)
For now I feel you have infus'd into me
Part of your fortitude.

Eros. I still am fearful;
I dare not tell a lie; you that were born
Daughters and Sisters unto Kings, may nourish
Great thoughts, which I, that am your humble handmaid
Must not presume to rival.

Cleo. Yet (my Eros)
Though thou hast profited nothing by observing
The whole course of my life, learn in my death,
Though not to equal, yet to imitate
Thy fearless Mistrefs.

Enter Photinus.

Eros. O, a man in Arms!
His Weapon drawn too?

Cleo. Though upon the point
Death fate, I'll meet it, and outdare the danger.

Pho. Keep the Watch strong, and guard the passage sure
That leads unto the Sea.

Cleo. What Sea of rudeness
Breaks in upon us? or what Subjects Breath
Dare raise a storm, when we command a calm?
Are Duty and Obedience fled to Heaven?
And in their room ambition and pride

Sent into Egypt? That Face speaks thee, Photinus,
A thing thy Mother brought into the World;
My Brother's and my Slave: but thy behaviour,
Oppos'd to that, an insolent intruder
Upon that Sovereignty thou shouldst bow to.
If in the Gulph of basing ingratitude,

All loyalty to Ptolomy the King
Be swallowed up, remember who I am,
Whose Daughter and whose Sister; or suppose
That is forgot too, let the name of Cesar
Which Nations quake at, stop the desperate madness
From running headlong on to thy Confusion.

Throw from thee quickly those rebellious Arms,
And let me read submission in thine Eyes;
Thy wrongs to us we will not only pardon,
But be a ready advocate to plead for thee
To Cesar, and my Brother.

Pho. Plead my Pardon?
To you I bow, but scorn as much to stoop thus
To Ptolomy or Cesar, Nay, the gods,
As to put off the figure of a man,
And change my Essence with a sensual Beast;
All my designs, my counsels, and dark ends
Were aim'd to purchase you.

Cleo. How durst thou, being
The scorn of baseness, nourish such a thought?
Pho. They that have power are royal; and those base
That live at the devotion of another.
VVhat birth gave Ptolomy, or fortune Cesar,
By Engines fashion'd in this Protean Anvil
I have made mine; and only stoop at you,
Whom I would still preserve free to command me;
For Cesar's frowns, they are below my thoughts,
And but in these fair Eyes I still have read
The story of a supream Monarchy,
To which all hearts with mine gladly pay tribute,
Photinus's Name had long since been as great
As Ptolomies e'r was, or Cesars is,
This made me as a weaker tye to unloose
The knot of Loyalty, that chain'd my freedom,
And slight the fear that Cesars threats might cause,
That I and they might see no Sun appear
But Cleopatra in the Egyptian Sphere.

Cleo. O Giant-like Ambition! married to Cymmerian darkness! inconsiderate Fool,
(Though flatter'd with self love) couldst thou believe,
Were all Crowns on the Earth made into one,
And that (by Kings) set on thy head; all Scepters,
Within thy grasp, and laid down at my feet,
I would vouchsafe a kiss to a no-man?
A gelded Eunuch?

Pho.

Pho. Fairest, that makes for me,
And shews it is no sensual appetite,
But true love to the greatness of thy Spirit,
That when that you are mine shall yield me pleasures,
Hymen, though blessing a new married Pair
Shall blush to think on, and our certain issue,
The glorious splendor of dread Majesty,
Whole beams shall dazel Rome, and aw the world,
My wants in that kind others shall supply,
And I give way to it.

Cleo. Baser than thy Birth;
Can there be gods, and hear this, and no thunder
Ram thee into the Earth?

Pho. They are asleep,
And cannot hear thee;
Or with open Eyes,
Did Jove look on us, I would laugh and swear
That his artillery is cloy'd by me:
Or if that they have power to hurt, his Bolts
Are in my hand.

Cleo. Most impious!

Pho. They are dreams,
Religious Fools shake at: yet to assure thee,
If Nemesis, that scourges pride and scorn,
Be any thing but a name, she lives in me;
For by my self (an oath to me more dreadful
Than Stix is to your gods) weak Ptolomy dead,
And Cæsar (both being in my toil) remov'd,
The poorest Rascals that are in my Camp
Shall in my presence quench their lustful heat
In thee, and young Arsino, while I laugh
To hear you howl in vain:

I deride those gods,
That you think can protect you.

Cleo. To prevent thee,
In that I am the Mistress of my Fate;
So hope I of my sister to confirm it.
I spit at thee, and scorn thee.

Pho. I will tame
That haughty courage, and make thee stoop too.

Cleo. Never,
I was born to command, and will dye so.

Enter Achilles, and Souldiers, with the Body of Ptolomy.

Pho. The King dead? this is a fair entrance to
Our future happiness.

Ars. Oh my dear Brother!

Cleo. Weep not, Arsino, common women do so,
Nor lose a tear for him, it cannot help him;
But study to dye nobly.

Pho. Cæsar fled!
'Tis deadly aconite to my cold heart,
It choaks my vital Spirits: where was your care?
Did the Guards sleep?

Achil. Herowz'd them with his Sword;
We talk of Mars, but I am sure his Courage
Admits of no comparison but it self,
And (as inspir'd by him) his following friends
With such a confidence as young Eagles prey
Under the large wing of their fiercer Dam,
Brake through our Troops and scatter'd them, he went on
But still pursu'd by us, when on the sudden,
He turn'd his head, and from his Eyes flew terrour;
Which strook in us no less fear and amazement,
Than if we had encounter'd with the lightning
Hurl'd from Jove's cloudy Brow.

Cleo. 'Twas like my Cæsar

Achil. We faln back, he made on, and as our fear
Had parted from us with his dreadful looks,
Again we follow'd, but got near the Sea;
On which his Navy anchor'd; in one hand
Holding a Scroll he had above the waves,
And in the other grasping fast his Sword,
As it had been a Trident forg'd by Vulcan

To calm the raging Ocean, he made away
As if he had been Neptune, his friends like
So many Tritons follow'd, their bold shouts
Yielding a chearful musick; we showr'd darts
Upon them, but in vain, they reach'd their ships
And in their safety we are sunk; for Cæsar
Prepares for War.

Pho. How fell the King?

Achil. Unable

To follow Cæsar, he was trod to death
By the Pursuers, and with him the Priest
Of Isis, good Achorus.

Ars. May the Earth
Lye gently on their ashes.

Pho. I feel now,

That there are powers above us; and that 'tis not
Within the searching policies of man
To alter their decrees.

Cleo. I laugh at thee;
Where are thy threats now, Fool, thy scoffs and scorns
Against the gods? I see calamity
Is the best Mistress of Religion,
And can convert an Atheist. [Shout within.]

Pho. O they come,
Mountains fall on me! O for him to dye
That plac'd his Heaven on Earth, is an assurance
Of his descent to Hell; where shall I hide me?
The greatest daring to a man dishonest,
Is but a Bastard Courage, ever fainting. [Exit.]

Enter Cæsar, Sceva, Antony, Dolabella.

Cæs. Look on your Cæsar; banish fear, my fairest,
You now are safe.

Sce. By Venus, not a kiss
Till our work be done; the Traitors once dispatch'd
To it, and we'll cry aim.

Cæs. I will be speedy. [Exeunt.]

Cleo. Farewel again, Arsino; how now, Eros?
Ever faint-hearted?

Eros. But that I am assur'd,
Your Excellency can command the General,
I fear the Souldiers, for they look as if
They would be nibling too.

Cleo. He is all honour,
Nor do I now repent me of my favours,
Nor can I think that Nature e'r made a Woman
That in her prime deseru'd him.

Enter Cæsar, Sceva, Antonie, Dolabella, Souldiers, with the Heads.

Ars. He's come back,
Pursue no further; curb the Souldiers fury.

Cæs. See (beauteous Mistris) their accursed heads
That did conspire against us.

Sce. Furies plague 'em,
They had too fair an end to dye like Souldiers,
Pompey fell by the Sword, the Cross or Halter
Should have dispatch'd them.

Cæs. All is but death, good Sceva,
Be therefore satisfied: and now my dearest,
Look upon Cæsar, as he still appear'd
A Conquerour, and this unfortunate King
Entomb'd with honour, we'll to Rome, where Cæsar
Will shew he can give Kingdoms; for the Senate,
(Thy Brother dead) shall willingly decree
The Crown of Egypt (that was his) to thee. [Exeunt omnes.]

Prologue.

Prologue.

NEW Titles warrant not a Play for new,
 The Subject being old; and 'tis as true,
 Fresh and neat matter may with ease be fram'd
 Out of their Stories, that have oft been nam'd
 With glory on the Stage; what borrows he
 From him that wrote old Priam's Tragedy,
 That writes his love to Hecuba? Sure to tell
 Of Cæsars amorous heats, and how he felt
 In the Capitol, can never be the same
 To the Judicious; Nor will such blame
 Those who pen'd this, for Barr'ennes when they find
 Young Cleopatra here, and her great Mind
 Express'd to the height, with us a Maid, and free,
 And how he rated her Virginitie.
 We treat not of what boldness she did dye,
 Nor of her fatal Love to Antony.
 What we present and offer to your view,
 Upon their faiths the Stage yet never knew.
 Let Reason then first to your Wills give laws,
 And after judge of them and of their cause.

Epilogue.

I Now should wish another had my place,
 But that I hope to come off, and with Grace;
 And but express some sign that you are pleas'd,
 We of our doubts, they of their fears are eas'd.
 I would beg further (Gentlemen) and much say
 In favour of our selves, them, and the Play;
 Did I not rest assur'd, the most I see
 Hate Impudence, and cherish Modestie.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Dinant, and Cleremont.

Din. Diffwade me not.
 Cler. It will breed a brawl.
 Din. I care not, I wear a Sword.
 Cler. And wear discretion with it,
 Or cast it off, let that direct your arm,
 'Tis madness else, not valour, and more base
 Than to receive a wrong.
 Din. Why would you have me
 Sit down with a disgrace, and thank the doer?

We are not Stoicks, and that passive courage
 Is only now commendable in Lackies,
 Peasants, and Tradesmen, not in men of rank
 And qualitie, as I am.

Cler. Do not cherish
 That daring vice, for which the whole age suffers.
 The blood of our bold youth, that heretofore
 Was spent in honourable action,
 Or to defend, or to enlarge the Kingdom,
 For the honour of our Country, and our Prince,
 Pours it self out with prodigal expence

Upon our Mothers lap, the Earth that bred us
For every trifle; and these private Duells,
Which had their first original from the French
(And for which, to this day, we are justly censured)
Are banisht from all civil Governments:
Scarce three in Venice, in as many years;
In Florence, they are rarer, and in all
The fair Dominions of the Spanish King,
They are never heard of: Nay, those neighbour Countries,
Which gladly imitate our other follies,
And come at a dear rate to buy them of us,
Begin now to detest them.

Din. Will you end yet ———

Cler. And I have heard that some of our late Kings,
For the lie, wearing of a Mistress favour,
A cheat at Cards or Dice, and such like causes,
Have lost as many gallant Gentlemen,
As might have met the great Turk in the field
With confidence of a glorious Victorie,
And shall we then ———

Din. No more, for shame no more,
Are you become a Patron too? 'tis a new one,
No more on't, burn't, give it to some Orator,
To help him to enlarge his exercise,
With such a one it might do well, and profit
The Curat of the Parish, but for Cleremont,
The bold, and undertaking Cleremont,
To talk thus to his friend, his friend that knows him,
Dinant that knows his Cleremont, is absurd,
And meer Apocrypha.

Cler. Why, what know you of me?

Din. Why if thou hast forgot thy self, I'll tell thee,
And not look back, to speak of what thou wert
At fifteen, for at those years I have heard
Thou wast flesh'd, and enter'd bravely.

Cler. Well Sir, well.

Din. But yesterday, thou wast the common second,
Of all that only knew thee, thou hadst bills
Set up on every post, to give thee notice
Where any difference was, and who were parties;
And as to save the charges of the Law
Poor men seek arbitrators, thou wert chosen
By such as knew thee not, to compound quarrels:
But thou wert so delighted with the sport,
That if there were no just cause, thou wouldst make one,
Or be engag'd thy self: This goodly calling
Thou hast followed five and twenty years, and studied
The Criticisms of contentions, and art thou
In so few hours transform'd? certain this night
Thou hast had strange dreams, or rather visions.

Cler. Yes, Sir,
I have seen fools, and fighters, chain'd together,
And the Fighters had the upper hand, and whipt first,
The poor Sots laughing at 'em. What I have been
It skills not, what I will be is resolv'd on.

Din. Why then you'll fight no more?

Cler. Such is my purpose.

Din. On no occasion?

Cler. There you stagger me.

Some kind of wrongs there are which flesh and blood
Cannot endure.

Din. Thou wouldst not willingly
Live a protested coward, or be call'd one?

Cler. Words are but words.

Din. Nor wouldst thou take a blow? (enemy

Cler. Not from my friend, though drunk, and from an
I think much less.

Din. There's some hope of thee left then,
Wouldst thou hear me behind my back disgrac'd?

Cler. Do you think I am a rogue? they that should do it
Had better been born dumb.

Din. Or in thy presence
See me o'recharg'd with odds?

Cler. I'd fall my self first.

Din. Would'st thou endure thy Mistress be taken from thee,
And thou sit quiet?

Cler. There you touch my honour,
No French-man can endure that.

Din. Pl ——— upon thee,
Why dost thou talk of Peace then? that dar'st suffer
Nothing, or in thy self, or in thy friend
That is unmanly?

Cler. That I grant, I cannot:
But I'll not quarrel with this Gentleman
For wearing stammel Breeches, or this Gamester
For playing a thousand pounds, that owes me nothing;
For this mans taking up a common Wench
In raggs, and lowfie, then maintaining her
Caroach'd in cloth of Tissue, nor five hundred
Of such like toys, that at no part concern me;
Marry, where my honour, or my friend is questioned,
I have a Sword, and I think I may use it
To the cutting of a Rascals throat, or so,
Like a good Christian.

Din. Thou art of a fine Religion,
And rather than we'll make a Schism in friendship
I will be of it: But to be serious,
Thou art acquainted with my tedious love-suit
To fair Lamira?

Cler. Too well Sir, and remember
Your presents, courtship, that's too good a name,
Your slave-like services, your morning musique;
Your walking three hours in the rain at midnight,
To see her at her window, sometimes laugh'd at,
Sometimes admitted, and vouchsaf'd to kiss
Her glove, her skirt, nay, I have heard, her slippers,
How then you triumph'd?
Here was love forsooth.

Din. These follies I deny not,
Such a contemptible thing my dotage made me,
But my reward for this ———

Cler. As you deserv'd,
For he that makes a goddess of a Puppet,
Merits no other recompence.

Din. This day friend,
For thou art so ———

Cler. I am no flatterer.

Din. This proud, ingratefull she, is married to Lame Champernel.

Cler. I know him, he has been
As tall a Sea-man, and has thriv'd as well by't,
The loss of a legg and an arm deducted, as any
That ever put from Marseilles: you are tame,
Pl ——— on't, it mads me; if it were my case,
I should kill all the family.

Din. Yet but now
You did preach patience.

Cler. I then came from confession,
And 'twas enjoyn'd me three hours for a penance,
To be a peaceable man, and to talk like one,
But now, all else being pardon'd, I begin
On a new Tally, Foot do any thing,
I'll second you.

Din. I would not willingly
Make red, my yet white conscience, yet I purpose
In the open street, as they come from the Temple,
(For this way they must pass,) to speak my wrongs,
And do it boldly. [Musick playes.

Cler. Were thy tongue a Cannon,
I would stand by thee, boy, they come, upon 'em.

Din. Observe a little first.

Cler. This is fine fiddling.

Enter Vertaign, Champernel, Lamira, Nurse, Beaupre, Verdone. An Epithalamium.

SONG at the Wedding.

*C*ome away, bring on the Bride
And place her by her Lovers side:
You fair troop of Maids attend her,
Pure and holy thoughts befriend her.
Blush, and wish, you Virgins all,
Many such fair nights may fall.

Chorus.

*Hymen, fill the house with joy,
All thy sacred fires employ:
Bless the Bed with holy love,
Now fair orb of Beauty move.*

Din. Stand by, for I'll be heard.

Verta. This is strange rudeness.

Din. 'Tis courtship, ballanced with injuries,
You all look pale with guilt, but I will dy
Your cheeks with blushes, if in your fear'd veins
There yet remain so much of honest blood
To make the colour; first to ye my Lord,
The Father of this Bride, whom you have sent Alive into her grave.

Champ. How? to her grave?

Dina. Be patient Sir, I'll speak of you anon
You that allow'd me liberal access,
To make my way with service, and approv'd of
My birth, my person, years, and no base fortune:
You that are rich, and but in this held wife too,
That as a Father should have look'd upon
Your Daughter in a husband, and aim'd more
At what her youth, and heat of blood requir'd
In lawfull pleasures, than the parting from
Your Crowns to pay her dowr: you that already
Have one foot in the grave, yet study profit,
As if you were assur'd to live here ever;
What poor end had you, in this choice? in what
Deserve I your contempt? my house, and honours
At all parts equal yours, my fame as fair,
And not to praise my self, the City ranks me
In the first file of her most hopefull Gentry:
But Champernel is rich, and needs a nurse,
And not your gold: and add to that, he's old too,
His whole estate in likelihood to descend
Upon your Family; Here was providence,
I grant, but in a Nobleman base thrift:
No Merchants, nay, no Pirates, fell for Bondmen
Their Country-men, but you, a Gentleman,
To save a little gold, have sold your Daughter
To worse than slavery.

Cler. This was spoke home indeed.

Beau. Sir, I shall take some other time to tell you,
That this harsh language was delivered to
An old man, but my Father.

Din. At your pleasure.

Cler. Proceed in your design, let me alone,
To answer him, or any man.

Verd. You presume

Too much upon your name, but may be couzen'd.

Din. But for you, most unmindfull of my service,
For now I may upbraid you, and with honour,
Since all is lost, and yet I am a gainer,
In being deliver'd from a torment in you,
For such you must have been, you to whom nature
Gave with a liberal hand most excellent form,
Your education, language, and discourse,
And judgement to distinguish, when you shall
With feeling sorrow understand how wretched

And miserable you have made your self,
And but your self have nothing to accuse,
Can you with hope from any beg compassion?
But you will say, you serv'd your Fathers pleasure,
Forgetting that unjust commands of Parents
Are not to be obey'd, or that you are rich,
And that to wealth all pleasure else are servants,
Yet but consider, how this wealth was purchas'd,
'Twill trouble the possession.

Champ. You Sir know
I got it, and with honour.

Din. But from whom?

Remember that, and how: you'll come indeed
To houses bravely furnish'd, but demanding
Where it was bought, this Souldier will not lie,
But answer truly, this rich cloth of Arras
I made my prize in such a Ship, this Plate
Was my share in another; these fair Jewels,
Coming a shore, I got in such a Village,
The Maid, or Matron kill'd, from whom they were ravish'd,
The Wines you drink are guilty too, for this,
This Candie Wine, three Merchants were undone,
These Suckets break as many more: in brief,
All you shall wear, or touch, or see, is purchas'd
By lawless force, and you but revel in
The tears, and groans of such as were the owners.

Champ. 'Tis false, most basely false.

Verta. Let losers talk.

Din. Lastly, those joyes, those best of joyes, which Hy-
Freely bestows on such, that come to tye
The sacred knot he blesses, won unto it
By equal love, and mutual affection,
Not blindly led with the desire of riches,
Most miserable you shall never taste of.
This Marriage night you'll meet a Widows bed,
Or failing of those pleasures all Brides look for,
Sin in your wish it were so.

Champ. Thou art a Villain,
A base, malicious slanderer.

Cler. Strike him.

Din. No, he is not worth a blow.

Champ. O that I had thee
In some close vault, that only would yield room
To me to use my Sword, to thee no hope
To run away, I would make thee on thy knees,
Bite out the tongue that wrong'd me.

Verta. Pray you have patience.

Lamira. This day I am to be your Sovereign,
Let me command you.

Champ. I am lost with rage,
And know not what I am my self, nor you:
Away, dare such as you, that love the smoke
Of peace more than the fire of glorious War,
And like unprofitable drones, feed on
Your grandfires labours, that, as I am now,
Were gathering Bees, and fill'd their Hive, this Country
With brave triumphant spoils, censure our actions?
You object my prizes to me, had you seen
The horrour of a Sea-fight, with what danger
I made them mine; the fire I fearless fought in,
And quenched it in mine enemies blood, which straight
Like oyle pour'd out on't, made it burn anew;
My Deck blown up, with noise enough to mock
The lowdest thunder, and the desperate fools
That boarded me, sent, to desie the tempests
That were against me, to the angrie Sea,
Frighted with men thrown o're; no victory,
But in despite of the four Elements,
The Fire, the Air, the Sea, and sands hid in it
To be achiev'd, you would confesse poor men,
(Though hopeless, such an honourable way
To get or wealth, or honour) in your selves
He that through all these dreadfull passages
Pursued and overtook them, unaffrighted,

Deserves reward, and not to have it stil'd
By the base name of theft.

Din. This is the Courtship,
That you must look for, Madam.

Cler. 'Twill do well,
When nothing can be done, to spend the night with:
Your tongue is sound good Lord, and I could wish
For this young Ladies sake this leg, this arm,
And there is something else, I will not name,
(Though 'tis the only thing that must content her)
Had the same vigour.

Champ. You shall buy these scoffs
With your best blood : help me once noble anger,
(Nay stir not, I alone must right my self)
And with one leg transport me, to correct
These scandalous praters : O that noble wounds
Should hinder just revenge ? D'ye jear me too ?
I got these, not as you do, your diseases
In Brothels, or with riotous abuse
Of wine in Taverns ; I have one leg shot,
One arm disabled, and am honour'd more,
By losing them, as I did, in the face
Of a brave enemy, than if they were
As when I put to Sea ; you are French-men only,
In that you have been laied, and cur'd, goe to :
You mock my leg, but every bone about you,
Makes you good Almanack-makers, to foretell
What weather we shall have.

Din. Put up your Sword,

Cler. Or turn it to a Crutch, there't may be usefull,
And live on the relation to your Wife
Of what a brave man you were once.

Din. And tell her,
What a fine vertue 'tis in a young Lady
To give an old man pap.

Cler. Or hire a Surgeon
To teach her to roul up your broken limbs.

Din. To make a Pulstefs, and endure the scent
Of oils, and nasty Plasters.

Verta. Fie Sir, fie,
You that have stood all dangers of all kinds, to Yield to a Rivalls scoffe ?

Lamira. Shed tears upon
Your Wedding day ? this is unmanly Gentlemen.

Champ. They are tears of anger : O that I should live
To play the woman thus ! All powerfull heaven,
Restore me, but one hour, that strength again,
That I had once, to chastise in these men
Their folies, and ill manners, and that done,
When you please, P'le yield up the fort of life,
And do it gladly.

Cler. We ha' the better of him,
We ha' made him cry.

Verdo. You shall have satisfaction.
And I will do it nobly, or disclaim me.

Beaup. I say no more, you have a Brother, Sister,
This is your wedding day, we are in the street,
And howsoever they forget their honour,
'Tis fit I lose not mine, by their example.

Vert. If there be Laws in Paris, look to answer
This insolent affront.

Cler. You that live by them,
Study 'em for heavens sake ; for my part I know not Nor care not what they are. Is their ought else
That you would say ?

Din. Nothing, I have my ends.

Lamira weeps, I have said too much I fear ;
So dearly once I lov'd her, that I cannot Endure to see her tears. [Exeunt Dinant, and Cleremont.

Champ. See you perform it,
And do it like my Nephew. Verdo. If I fail in't Ne'r know me more, Cousin Beaupre.

Champ. Repent not
What thou hast done, my life, thou shalt not find

I am decrepit ; in my love and service,
I will be young, and constant, and believe me,
For thou shalt find it true, in scorn of all
The scandals these rude men have thrown upon me
I'll meet thy pleasures with a young mans ardour ;
And in all circumstances of a Husband,
Perform my part.

Lamira. Good Sir, I am your servant,
And 'tis too late now, if I did repent,
(Which as I am a virgin yet, I do not)
To undoe the knot, that by the Church is tyed.
Only I would beseech ye, as you have
A good opinion of me, and my vertues,
For so you have pleas'd to stile my innocent weakness,
That what hath pass'd between Dinant and me,
Or what now in your hearing he hath spoken,
Beget not doubts, or fears.

Champ. I apprehend you,
You think I will be jealous ; as I live
Thou art mistaken sweet ; and to confirm it
Discourse with whom thou wilt, ride where thou wilt,
Feast whom thou wilt, as often as thou wilt,
For I will have no other guards upon thee
Than thine own thoughts.

Lamira. I'll use this liberty
With moderation Sir.

Beaup. I am resolv'd.
Steal off, I'll follow you.

Champ. Come Sir, you droop ;
Till you find cause, which I shall never give ;
Dislike not of your Son in Law.

Verta. Sir, you teach me
The language I should use ; I am most happy
In being so near you. [Exeunt Verdane, and Beaupre.

Lamira. O my fears ! good nurse
Follow my Brother unobserv'd, and learn
Which way he takes.

Nurse. I will be carefull Madam. [Exit Nurse.

Champ. Between us complements are superfluous,
On Gentlemen, th' affront we have met here
We'll think upon hereafter, 'twere unfit
To cherish any thought to breed unrest,
Or to our selves, or to our Nuptial feast. [Exeunt.

Enter Dinant, and Cleremont.

Cler. We shall have sport, ne'r fear't.

Din. What sport I prethee ?

Cler. Why we must fight, I know it, and I long for't,
It was apparent in the fiery eye
Of young Verdone, Beaupre look'd pale and shook too,
Familiar signs of anger. They are both brave fellows
Tri'd and approv'd, and I am proud to encounter
With men, from whom no honour can be lost ;
They will play up to a man, and set him off.
When e're I go to the field, heaven keep me from
The meeting of an unlesh'd youth or, Coward,
The first, to get a name, comes on too hot,
The Coward is so swift in giving ground,
There is no overtaking him without
A hunting Nag, well breath'd too.

Din. All this while,
You ne'r think on the danger.

Cler. Why 'tis no more
Than meeting of a dozen friends at Supper,
And drinking hard ; mischief comes there unlook'd for,
I am sure as suddain, and strikes home as often,
For this we are prepar'd.

Din. Lamira Loves
Her Brother Beaupre dearly.

Cler. What of that ?

Din. And should he call me to account for what
But now I spake, nor can I with mine honour
Recant my words, that little hope is left me,
E're to enjoy what (next to Heaven) I long for,

Is taken from me.

Cler. Why what can you hope for,
She being now married?

Din. Oh my Cleremont,
To you all secrets of my heart I've open,
And I rest most secure that whatsoever
I lock up there, is as a private thought,
And will no farther wrong me. I am a French-man,
And for the greater part we are born Courtiers,
She is a woman, and however yet
No heat of service had the power to melt
Her frozen Chastity, time and opportunitie
May work her to my ends, I confess ill ones,
And yet I must pursue 'em: now her marriage,
In probability, will no way hurt,
But rather help me.

Cler. Sits the wind there? pray you tell me
How far off dwells your love from lust?

Din. Too near,
But prethee chide me not.

Cler. Not I, goe on boy,
I have faults my self, and will not reprehend
A crime I am not free from: for her Marriage,
I do esteem it (and most batchellors are
Of my opinion) as a fair protection,
To play the wanton without loss of honour.

Din. Would she make use of't so, I were most happy.

Cler. No more of this. Judge now,
Whether I have the gift of propheticie.

Enter Beaupre, and Verdone.

Beaup. Monsieur Dinant,
I am glad to find you, Sir.

Din. I am at your service.

Verd. Good Monsieur Cleremont, I have long wish'd
To be known better to you.

Cler. My desires
Embrace your wishes Sir.

Beaup. Sir, I have ever
Esteem'd you truly noble, and profess
I should have been most proud, to have had the honour
To call you Brother, but my Fathers pleasure
Denied that happiness. I know no man lives,
That can command his passions, and therefore Dare not condemn the late intemperate language
You were pleas'd to use to my Father and my Sister,
He's old and she a woman, I most sorrie
My honour does compel me to entreat you,
To do me the favour, with your sword to meet me
A mile without the Citie.

Din. You much honour me
In the demand, I'll gladly wait upon you.

Beaup. O Sir you teach me what to say: the time?

Din. With the next Sun, if you think fit.

Beaup. The place?

Din. Near to the vineyard eastward from the Citie.

Beaup. I like it well, this Gentleman if you please
Will keep me company.

Cler. That is agreed on;
And in my friends behalf I will attend him.

Verd. You shall not miss my service.

Beaup. Good day Gentlemen. [Ex. Beaup. and Verd.]

Din. At your Commandment.

Cler. Proud to be your servants.

I think there is no Nation under Heaven
That cut their enemies throats with complement,
And such fine tricks as we do: If you have Any few Prayers to say, this night you may Call 'em to mind and use 'em, for my self,
As I have little to lose, my care is less,
So till to morrow morning I bequeath you
To your devotions; and those paid, but use
That noble courage I have seen, and we Shall fight, as in a Castle.

Din. Thou art all honour,
Thy resolution would steel a Coward,
And I most fortunate in such a Friend;
All tenderness and nice respect of woman
Be now far from me, reputation take
A full possession of my heart, and prove Honour the first place holds, the second Love. [Exeunt.]

Enter Lamira, Charlotte.

Lami. Sleeps my Lord still, Charlotte?

Char. Not to be wak'd.

By your Ladiships cheerfull looks I well perceive
That this night the good Lord hath been
At an unusual service, and no wonder
If he rest after it. Lamira. You are very bold.

Char. Your Creature Madam, and when you are pleas'd
Sadness to me's a stranger, your good pardon
If I speak like a fool, I could have wish't
To have ta'ne your place to night, had bold Dinant
Your first and most obsequious servant tasted
Those delicacies, which by his lethargie
As it appears, have cloy'd my Lord.

Lamira. No more.

Charl. I am silenc'd, Madam.

Lamira. Saw you my nurse this morning?

Charl. No, Madam.

Lamira. I am full of fears.

Knock within.

Who's that?

Charl. She you enquir'd for.

Lamira. Bring her in, and leave me. [Exit Charlotte.]
Now nurse what news?

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O Ladie dreadfull ones.
They are to fight this morning, there's no remedie.
I saw my Lord your Brother, and Verdone
Take horse as I came by.

Lamira. Where's Cleremont?

Nurse. I met him too, and mounted.

Lamira. Where's Dinant?

(trick,

Nurse. There's all the hope, I have staid him with a
If I have done well so.

Lamira. What trick?

Nurse. I told him,

Your Ladiship laid your command upon him,
To attend you presently, and to confirm it,
Gave him the ring he oft hath seen you wear,
That you bestowed on me: he waits without
Disguis'd, and if you have that power in him,
As I presume you have, it is in you
To stay or alter him.

Lamira. Have you learnt the place,
Where they are to encounter?

Nurse. Yes 'tis where

The Duke of Burgundie met Lewis th' eleventh.

Lamir. Enough, I will reward thee liberally, [Exit Nurse.]

Goe bring him in: full dear I loved Dinant,
While it was lawfull, but those fires are quench'd,
I being now anothers, truth forgive me
And let dissimulation be no crime,
Though most unwillingly I put it on
To guard a Brothers safetie.

Enter Dinant.

Din. Now your pleasure,
Though ill you have deserv'd it, you perceive
I am still your fool, and cannot but obey
What ever you command.

Lamira. You speak, as if
You did repent it, and 'tis not worth my thanks then,
But there has been a time, in which you would Receive this as a favour.

Din. Hope was left then
Of recompence.

Lamira.

Lamira. Why I am still Lamira,
And you Dinant, and 'tis yet in my power,
I dare not say I'll put it into act,
To reward your love and service.

Din. There's some comfort.

Lami. But think not that so low I prize my fame,
To give it up to any man that refuses
To buy it, or with danger of performance
Of what I shall enjoin him.

Din. Name that danger
Be it of what horrid shape soever Ladie
Which I will shrink at; only at this instant
Be speedie in't.

Lamira. I'll put you to the trial:
You shall not fight to day, do you start at that?
Not with my Brother, I have heard your difference,
Mine is no Helens beauty to be purchas'd
With blood, and so defended; if you look for Favours from me, deserve them with obedience,
There's no way else to gain 'em.

Din. You command
What with mine honour I cannot obey
Which lies at pawn against it, and a friend
Equally dear as that, or life, engag'd,
Not for himself, but me.

Lamira. Why, foolish man,
Dare you sollicit me to serve your lust,
In which not only I abuse my Lord,
My Father, and my family, but write whore,
Though not upon my forehead, in my conscience,
To be read hourly, and yet name your honour?
Yours suffers but in circumstance; mine in substance.
If you obey me, you part with some credit,
From whom? the giddy multitude; but mankind
Will censure me, and justly.

Din. I will lose,
What most I do desire, rather than hazard
So dear a friend, or write my self a coward,
'Tis better be no man.

Lamira. This will not do;
Why, I desire not, you should be a coward,
Nor do I weigh my Brothers life with yours,
Meet him, fight with him, do, and kill him fairly,
Let me not suffer for you, I am careles.

Din. Suffer for me?

Lamira. For you, my kindness to you
Already brands me with a strumpets name.

Din. O that I knew the wretch!

Lamira. I will not name him,
Nor give you any Character to know him;
But if you dare, and instantly ride forth
At the west port of the City, and defend there
My reputation, against all you meet,
For two hours only, I'll not swear Dinant,
To fatisfie, (though sure I think I shall)
What ever you desire, if you denie this,
Be desperate, for willingly, by this light,
I'll never see thee more.

Din. Two hours, do you say?

Lamira. Only two hours.

Din. I were no Gentleman,
Should I make scruple of it; this favour arms me,
And boldly I'll perform it.

Lamira. I am glad on't.

This will prevent their meeting yet, and keep
My Brother safe, which was the mark I shot at.

[Exit.

[Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Cleremont, as in the field.

Cler. I Am first i'th' field, that honour's gain'd of our side,
Pray Heaven I may get off as honourable,
The hour is past, I wonder Dinant comes not,
This is the place, I cannot see him yet;
It is his quarrel too that brought me hither,
And I ne'r knew him yet, but to his honour
A firm and worthy Friend, yet I see nothing,
Nor Horse nor man; 'twould vex me to be left here,
To th' mercy of two swords, and two approv'd ones.
I never knew him last.

Enter Beaupre, and Verdone.

Beaup. You are well met Cleremont.

(Sir.

Verdo. You are a fair Gentleman, and love your friend
What are you ready? the time has overta'ne us.

Beaup. And this you know the place.

Cler. No Dinant yet?

Beaup. We come not now to argue, but to do;
We wait you Sir.

Cler. There's no time past yet Gentlemen,
We have day enough: is't possible he comes not?
You see I am ready here, and do but stay
Till my Friend come, walk but a turn or two,
'Twill not be long.

Verd. We came to fight.

Cler. Ye shall fight Gentlemen,
And fight enough, but a short turn or two,
I think I see him, set up your watch, we'll fight by it.

Beaup. That is not he; we will not be deluded.

Cler. Am I hob'd thus? pray take a pipe of tobacco,
Or sing but some new air; by that time, Gentlemen——

Verd. Come draw your Sword, you know the custome
First come, first serv'd.

(here Sir,

Cler. Though it be held a custom,
And practis'd so, I do not hold it honest;
What honour can you both win on me single?

Beaup. Yield up your Sword then.

Cler. Yield my Sword? that's Hebrew;
I'll be first cut a pecies; hold but a while,
I'll take the next that comes.

Enter an old Gentleman.

You are an old Gentleman?

Gent. Yes indeed am I, Sir.

Cler. And wear no Sword?

Gent. I need none, Sir.

Cler. I would you did, and had one;
I want now such a foolish courtesie.
You see these Gentlemen?

Gent. You want a second.

In good Faith Sir, I was never handsom at it,
I would you had my Son, but he's in Italy,
A proper Gentleman; you may do well gallants
If your quarrel be not capital, to have more mercy,
The Gentleman may do his Country——

Cler. Now I beseech you, Sir,

If you dare not fight, do not stay to beg my pardon.
There lies your way.

Gent. Good morrow Gentlemen.

[Exit.

Verd. You see your fortune,
You had better yield your Sword.

Cler. Pray ye stay a little.

Enter two Gentlemen.

Upon mine honestie, you shall be fought with;
Well, Dinant, well, these wear swords and seem brave fel-
As you are Gentlemen, one of you supply me.

(lows.
I want

I want a Second now to meet these gallants,
You know what honour is.

1 Gent. Sir you must pardon us,
We goe about the same work, you are ready for;
And must fight presently, else we were your servants.

2 Gent. God speed you, and good day. [Exit Gent.

Cler. Am I thus Colted?

Beaup. Come either yield ———

Cler. As you are honest Gentlemen,
Stay but the next, and then I'll take my fortune,
And if I fight not like a man — Fy Dinant,
Cold now and treacherous.

Enter Monsieur La-writ, within.

La-writ. I understand your causes.
Yours about corn, yours about pins and glasses,
Will you make me mad, have I not all the parcells?
And his Petition too, about Bell-founding?
Send in your witnesses, what will you have me do?
Will you have me break my heart? my brains are melted;
And tell your Master, as I am a Gentleman,
His Cause shall be the first, commend me to your Mistress,
And tell her, if there be an extraordinary feather,
And tall enough for her—I shall dispatch you too,
I know your cause, for transporting of Farthingales
Trouble me no more, I say again to you,
No more vexation: bid my wife send me some puddings;
I have a Cause to run through, requires puddings,
Puddings enough. Farewel.

Cler. God speed you, Sir.

Beaup. Would he would take this fellow.

Verd. A rare Youth.

Cler. If you be not hastie, Sir.

La-writ. Yes, I am hastie,
Exceeding hastie, Sir, I am going to the Parliament,
You understand this bag, if you have any business
Depending there, be short, and let me hear it,
And pay your Fees.

Cler. Faith, Sir, I have a business,
But it depends upon no Parliament.

La-writ. I have no skill in't then.

Cler. I must desire you,

'Tis a Sword-matter, Sir.

La-writ. I am no Cutler,
I am an Advocate, Sir.

Beaup. How the thing looks?

Verd. When he brings him to fight.

Cler. Be not so hastie,
You wear a good Sword.

La-writ. I know not that,
I never drew it yet, or whether it be a Sword ———

Cler. I must entreat you try, Sir, and bear a part Against these Gentlemen, I want a second;
Ye seem a man, and 'tis a noble office.

La-writ. I am a Lawyer, Sir, I am no fighter.

Cler. You that breed quarels, Sir, know best to satisfie.

Beaup. This is some sport yet.

Verd. If this fellow should fight. (ward,

La-writ. And for any thing I know, I am an arrant co-
Do not trust me, I think I am a coward.

Cler. Try, try, you are mistaken: walk on Gentlemen,
The man shall follow presently.

La-writ. Are ye mad Gentleman?

My business is within this half hour.

Cler. That's all one,

We'll dispatch within this quarter, there in that bottom,

'Tis most convenient Gentlemen.

Beaup. Well, we'll wait, Sir.

Verd. Why this will be a comick fight, you'll follow.

La-writ. As I am a true man, I cannot fight.
[Ex. Beaupre, Verd.

Cler. Away, away,
I know you can: I like your modesty,
I know you will fight and so fight, with such metal,

And with such judgement meet your enemies fury;
I see it in your eye, Sir.

La-writ. I'll be hang'd then;

And I charge you in the Kings name, name no more fight. (ting.

Cler. I charge you in the Kings name, play the man,
Which if you do not quickly, I begin with you,
I'll make you dance, do you see your fiddlestick?
Sweet Avocate thou shalt fight.

La-writ. Stand farther Gentleman,
Or I'll give you such a dust o'th' chapps ———

Cler. Spoke bravely,
And like thy self, a noble Advocate:
Come to thy tools.

La-writ. I do not say I'll fight;

Cler. I say thou shalt, and bravely.

La-writ. If I do fight;

I say, if I do, but do not depend upon't,
And yet I have a foolish itch upon me,
What shall become of my Writings?

Cler. Let 'em ly by,

They will not run away, man.

La-writ. I may be kill'd too;

And where are all my causes then? my business?
I will not fight, I cannot fight, my Causes ———

Cler. Thou shalt fight, if thou hadst a thousand causes,
Thou art a man to fight for any cause,
And carry it with honour.

La-writ. Hum, say you so? if I should Be such a coxcombe to prove valiant now ———

Cler. I know thou art most valiant.

La-writ. Do you think so?

I am undone for ever, if it prove so,
I tell you that, my honest friend, for ever;
For I shall ne're leave quarrelling.
How long must we fight? for I cannot stay,
Nor will not stay, I have business.

Cler. We'll do't in a minute, in a moment. (belly,

La-writ. Here will I hang my bag then, it may save my
I never lov'd cold Iron there.

Cler. You do wisely. (quickly,

La-writ. Help me to pluck my Sword out then, quickly,
'Tis not ten Sun these ten years.

Cler. How it grumbles?

This Sword is vengeance angry.

La-writ. Now I'll put my hat up,
And say my prayers as I goe; away boy,
If I be kill'd, remember the little Lawyer. [Exit.

Enter Beaupre.

Beaup. They are both come on, that may be a stubborn
Take you that ground; (rascal,

Enter La-writ.

I'll stay here, fight bravely. (play,

La-writ. To't cheerfully my boyes, you'll let's have fair
None of your soyning tricks.

Beaup. Come forward Monsieur; Fight.

What hast thou there? a pudding in thy belly?
I shall see what it holds.

La-writ. Put your spoon home then:
Nay, since I must fight, have at you without wit, Sir:
God a mercy bagg. Beaup. Nothing but bumbast in ye?
The Rogue winks and fights.

La-writ. Now your fine fencing, Sir: Beau. loses his sword.
Stand off, thou diest on point else, La-writ treads on it.

I have it, I have it: yet further off:
I have his Sword. Cler. Then keep it, be sure you keep it.

La-writ. I'll put it in my mouth else.
Stand further off yet, and stand quietly,
And look another way, or I'll be with you,
Is this all? I'll undertake within these two daies
To furnish any Cutler in this Kingdom.

Beau. Pox, what fortune's this? difarm'd by a puppie?
A snail? a Dog?

La-writ.

La-writ. No more o' these words Gentleman,
Sweet Gentleman no more, do not provoke me,
Go walk i'th' horse-fair; whistle Gentleman,
What must I do now?

Enter Cleremont, pursued by Verdone.

Cler. Help me, I am almost breathless.

La-writ. With all my heart, there's a cold pye for you, Sir.

Cler. Thou strik'st me, fool.

La-writ. Thou fool, stand further off then,
Deliver, deliver.

Cler. Hold fast.

He strikes up the others heels,

La-writ. I never fail in't, and takes his Sword too.

There's twelve pence, go buy you two leaden Daggers,
Have I done well?

Cler. Most like a Gentleman.

Beau. And we two basely lost.

Verd. 'Tis but a fortune,

We shall yet find an hour.

[Ex. Beau. Verd. sad.]

Cler. I shall be glad on't.

La-writ. Where's my cloak, and my trinkets?
Or will you fight any longer, for a crash or two?

Cler. I am your noble friend, Sir.

La-writ. It may be so.

Cler. What honour shall I do you,
For this great courtesie?

La-writ. All I desire of ye, (more on't,

Is to take the quarrel to your self, and let me hear no
I have no liking to't, 'tis a foolish matter,
And help me to put up my Sword.

Cler. Most willingly.

But I am bound to gratifie you, and I must not leave you.

La-writ. I tell you, I will not be gratified,
Nor I will hear no more on't: take the Swords too,
And do not anger me but leave me quietly.
For the matter of honour, 'tis at your own disposeure,
And so, and so. [Exit La-writ.]

Cler. This is a most rare Lawyer:
I am sure most valiant. Well Dinant, as you satisfie me,
I say no more: I am loaden like an Armorer. [Exit Cler.]

Enter Dinant.

Din. To be dispatcht upon a sleeveless errand?
To leave my friend engag'd, mine honour tainted?
These are trim things. I am set here like a Perdue,
To watch a fellow, that has wrong'd my Mistris,
A scurvy fellow that must pass this way,
But what this scurvy fellow is, or whence,
Or whether his name be William or John,
Or Anthony or Dick, or any thing, I know not;
A scurvy rascally fellow I must aim at,
And there's the office of an Assie slung on me.
Sure Cleremont has fought, but how come off,
And what the world shall think of me hereafter:
Well, woman, woman, I must look your rascals,
And lose my reputation: ye have a fine power over us.
These two long hours I have trotted here, and curiously
Survey'd all goers by, yet find no rascal,
Nor any face to quarrel with: La-writ sings within,
What's that? then Enters.

This is a rascally voice, sure it comes this way.

La-writ. He strook so hard, the Bason broke,
And Tarquin heard the sound.

Din. What Mister thing is this? let me survey it.

La-writ. And then he strook his neck in two.

Din. This may be a rascal, but 'tis a mad rascal,
What an Alphabet of faces he puts on?
Hey how it fences? if this should be the rogue,
As 'tis the likeliest rogue I see this day —

La-wr. Was ever man for Ladies sake? down, down.

Di. And what are you good Sir? down, down, down, down.

La-writ. What's that to you good Sir? down, down.

Din. A pox on you good Sir, down, down, down,

You with your Buckram bag, what make you here? (now,
And from whence come you? I could fight with my shadow

La-wr. Thou fierce man that like Sir Lancelot dost appear,
I need not tell thee what I am, nor eke what I make here.

Din. This is a precious knave, stay, stay, good Tristram,
And let me ask thy mightiness a question,
Did ye never abuse a Lady?

La-writ. Not; to abuse a Lady, is very hard, Sir.

Din. Say you so, Sir?

Didst thou never abuse her honour?

La-writ. Not; to abuse her honour, is impossible.

Din. Certain this is the rascal: What's thy name?

La-writ. My name is Cock o' two, use me respectfully,
I will be Cock of three else. Din. What's all this?
You say, you did abuse a Lady. La-writ. You ly.

Din. And that you wrong'd her honour.

La-writ. That's two lyes,

Speak suddenly, for I am full of business. (goose,

Din. What art thou, or what canst thou be, thou pea-
That dar'st give me the ly thus? thou mak'st me wonder.

La-writ. And wonder on, till time make all things plain.

Din. You must not part so, Sir, art thou a Gentleman?

La-writ. Ask those upon whose ruins I am mounted.

Din. This is some Cavellero Knight o'th' Sun.

La-wr. I tell thee I am as good a Gentleman as the Duke;
I have atchieved — goe follow thy business.

Din. Bur for this Lady, Sir —

La-writ. Why, hang this Lady, Sir, (dies?
And the Lady Mother too, Sir, what have I to do with La-

Enter Cleremont.

Cler. 'Tis the little Lawyers voice: has he got my way?
It should be hereabouts.

Din. Ye dry bisket rogue,
I will so fwinge you for this blasphemie —
Have I found you out?

Cler. That should be Dinants tongue too. (tho.

La-wr. And I defy thee do thy worst: O ho quoth Lancelot
And that thou shalt know, I am a true Gentleman,
And speak according to the phrase triumphant;
Thy Lady is a scurvy Lady, and a shitten Lady,
And though I never heard of her, a deboshed Lady,
And thou, a squire of low degree; will that content thee?
Dost thou way-lay me with Ladies? A pretty sword, Sir,
A very pretty sword, I have a great mind to't.

Din. You shall not lose your longing, rogue.

Cler. Hold, hold.

Hold Dinant, as thou art a Gentleman.

La-writ. As much as you will, my hand is in now.

Cler. I am your friend, Sir: Dinant you draw your sword
Upon the Gentleman preserv'd your honour:
This was my second, and did back me nobly,
For shame forbear.

Din. I ask your mercy, Sir, and am your servant now.

La-writ. May we not fight then?

Cler. I am sure you shall not now.

La-wr. I am sorry for't, I am sure I'll stay no longer then,
Not a jot longer: are there any more on ye afore?
I will sing still, Sir. [Exit La-writ, singing.]

Din. I look now you should chide me, and 'tis fit,
And with much bitterness express your anger,
I have deserv'd: yet when you know —

Cler. I thank ye,

Do you think that the wrong you have off'red me,
The most unmanly wrong, unfriendly wrong —

Din. I do confess —

Cler. That boyish sleight —

Din. Not so, Sir.

Cler. That poor and base renouncing of your honour,
Can be allai'd with words?

Din. I give you way still.

Cler. Coloured with smooth excuses? Was it a friends
A Gentlemans, a mans that wears a Sword,
And stands upon the point of reputation,

To hide his head then, when his honour call'd him?
Call'd him aloud, and led him to his fortune?
To halt and slip the collar? by my life,
I would have given my life I had never known thee,
Thou hast eaten Canker-like into my judgement
With this disgrace, thy whole life cannot heal again.

Din. This I can suffer too, I find it honest.

Cler. Can you pretend an excuse now may absolve you,
Or any thing like honest, to bring you off?
Engage me like an Allè?

Din. Will you but hear me?

Cler. Expose me like a Jade to tug, and hale through,
Laugh'd at, and almost hooted? your disgraces
Invite mens Swords and angers to dispatch me.

Din. If you will be patient. (friend,

Cler. And be abus'd still: But that I have call'd thee
And to that name allow a Sanctuary,
You should hear further from me, I would not talk thus:
But henceforth stand upon your own bottom, Sir,
And bear your own abuses, I scorn my sword
Should travel in so poor and empty quarrels.

Din. Ha'you done yet? take your whole swing of anger,
I'll bear all with content.

Cler. Why were you absent?

Din. You know I am no Coward, you have seen that,
And therefore, out of fear forsook you not:
You know I am not false, of a treacherous nature,
Apt to betray my friend, I have fought for you too;
You know no business, that concern'd my state,
My kindred, or my life.

Cler. Where was the fault then?

Din. The honour of that Lady I adore,
Her credit, and her name: ye know she sent for me,
And with what haste.

Cler. What was he that traduc'd?

Din. The man i'th' Moon, I think, hither I was sent,
But to what end ———

Enter old Lady.

Cler. This is a pretty flim-flam.

O. La. I am glad I have met you Sir, I have been seeking,
And seeking every where.

Cler. And now you have found him,
Declare what business, our Embassadour. (Lady.

O. Lady. What's that to ye good man flouter? O Sir, my

Din. Prethee no more of thy Lady, I have too much on't.

Cler. Let me have a little, speak to me.

Old Lady. To you Sir?

'Tis more than time: All occasions set aside Sir,
Or whatsoever may be thought a business ———

Din. What then?

Old Lady. Repair to me within this hour.

Cler. Where? (sent for.

O. Lady. What's that to you? come you, Sir, when y'are

Cler. God a mercy Mumpsimus,
You may goe Dinant, and follow this old Fairie,
Till you have lost your self, your friends, your credit,
And Hunt away your youth in rare adventures,
I can but grieve I have known you.

Old Lady. Will ye goe Sir?

I come not often to you with these blessings,
You may believe that thing there, and repent it,
That dogged thing.

Cler. Peace touchwood.

Din. I will not goe:

Goe bid your Lady seek some fool to fawn on her,
Some unexperienc'd puppie to make sport with,
I have been her mirth too long, thus I shake from me
The fetters she put on; thus her enchantments
I blow away like wind, no more her beauty ———

Old Lady. Take heed Sir what you say.

Cler. Goe forward, Dinant.

Din. The charms shot from her eyes ———

Old Lady. Be wise.

Cler. Be Valiant.

(Clions
Din. That tongue that tells fair tales to mens destru-
Shall never rack me more.

Old Lady. Stay there.

Cler. Goe forward.

Din. I will now hear her, see her as a woman,
Survey her, and the power man has allow'd, Sir,
As I would do the course of common things,
Unmov'd, unstruck.

Cler. Hold there, and I forgive thee.

Din. She is not fair, and that that makes her proud,
Is not her own, our eyes bestow it on her,
To touch and kiss her is no blessedness,
A Sun-burnt Ethiops lip's as soft as her's.
Goe bid her stick some other triumph up,
And take into her favour some dull fool,
That has no pretious time to lose, no friends,
No honour, nor no life, like a bold Merchant,
A bold and banquerupt man, I have ventur'd all these,
And split my bottom: return this answer to her,
I am awake again and see her mischiefs,
And am not now, on every idle errand,
And new coyn'd anger, to be hurried,
And then despis'd again, I have forgot her.

Cler. If this be true ———

O. Lady. I am sorry, I have troubled you,
More forrie, that my Lady has adventur'd
So great a favour in so weak a mind:
This hour you have refus'd that when you come to know it,
Will run you mad, and make you curse that fellow,
She is not fair, nor handsom, so I leave you.

Cler. Stay Lady, stay, but is there such a business?

O. Lady. You would break your neck 'twere yours.

Cler. My back, you would say.

O. La. But play the friends part still, Sir, and undoe him,
'Tis a fair office.

Din. I have spoke too liberally.

O. Lady. I shall deliver what you say.

Cler. You shall be hang'd first,
You would fain be prating now; take the man with you.

O. Lady. Not I, I have no power.

Cler. You may goe Dinant.

O. Lady. 'Tis in's own will, I had no further charge, Sir,
Than to tell him what I did, which if I had thought
It should have been receiv'd so ———

Cler. 'Faith you may,

You do not know how far it may concern you.
If I perceiv'd any trick in't.

Din. 'Twill end there.

Cler. 'Tis my fault then, there is an hour in fortune,
That must be still observ'd: you think I'll chide you,
When things must be, nay see, an he will hold his head up?
Would such a Lady send, with such a charge too?
Say she has plaid the fool, play the fool with her again,
The great fool, the greater still the better.
He shall goe with you woman.

Old Lady. As it please him,
I know the way alone else.

Din. Where is your Lady?

O. Lady. I shall direct you quickly.

Din. Well, I'll goe,

But what her wrongs will give me leave to say. (you.

Cler. We'll leave that to your selves: I shall hear from

Din. As soon as I come off ———

Cler. Come on then bravely;

Farewel till then, and play the man.

Din. You are merry;

All I expect is scorn: I'll lead you Lady.

[Exeunt severally.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Champernel, Lamina, Beaupre, Verdone, Charlotte.

Beaup. WE'l venture on him. (no more.)
Cham. Out of my doors I charge thee, see me

Lami. Your Nephew?

Cham. I disclaim him,

He has no part in me, nor in my blood,
My Brother that kept fortune bound, and left
Conquest hereditary to his Issue
Could not beget a coward.

Verd. I fought, Sir,
Like a good fellow, and a Souldier too,
But men are men, and cannot make their fates:
Ascribe you to my Father what you please,
I am born to suffer.

Cham. All disgraces wretch.

Lam. Good Sir be patient.

Cham. Was there no tree,
(For to fall by a noble enemies sword,
A Coward is unworthy) nor no River,
To force thy life out backward or to drown it,
But that thou must survive thy infamie?
And kill me with the sight of one I hate,
And gladly would forget?

Beaup. Sir, his misfortune
Deserves not this reproof.

Cham. In your opinion,
'Tis fit you two should be of one belief,
You are indeed fine gallants, and fight bravely
I'th' City with your tongues, but in the field
Have neither spirit to dare nor power to do,
Your swords are all lead there.

Beaup. I know no duty,
(How ever you may wreak your spleen on him,)
That binds me to endure this.

Cham. From Dinant
You'll suffer more; that ever cursed I,
Should give my honour up, to the defence
Of such a thing as he is, or my Lady
That is all Innocent, for whom a dove would Assume the courage of a daring Eagle,
Repose her confidence in one that can
No better guard her. In contempt of you
I love Dinant, mine enemy, nay admire him,
His valour claims it from me, and with justice,
He that could fight thus, in a cause not honest,
His sword edg'd with defence of right and honour,
Would pierce as deep as lightning, with that speed too,
And kill as deadly.

Verd. You are as far from justice
In him you praise, as equitie in the censure
You load me with.

Beaup. Dinant? he durst not meet us.

Lam. How? durst not, Brother?

Beaup. Durst not, I repeat it.

Verd. Nor was it Cleremont's valour that disarm'd us,
I had the better of him; for Dinant,
If that might make my peace with you, I dare
Write him a Coward upon every post,
And with the hazard of my life defend it.

Lam. If 'twere laid at the stake you'd lose it, Nephew.

Cham. Came he not, say you?

Verd. No, but in his room,
There was a Devil, hir'd from some Magician
I'th' shape of an Attorney.

Beau. 'Twas he did it.

Verd. And his the honour.

Beau. I could wish Dinant —
But what talk I of one that stept aside,

And durst not come?

Lam. I am such a friend to truth,
I cannot hear this: why do you detract
Thus poorly (I should say to others basely)
From one of such approv'd worth?

Cham. Ha! how's this?

Lam. From one so excellent in all that's noble,
Whose only weakness is excess of courage?
That knows no enemies, that he cannot master,
But his affections, and in them, the worst
His love to me.

Cham. To you?

Lam. Yes, Sir, to me,
I dare (for what is that which Innocence dares not)
To you profess it; and he shun'd not the Combat
For fear or doubt of these: blush and repent,
That you in thought e're did that wrong to valour.

Beaup. Why, this is rare.

Cham. 'Fore heaven, exceeding rare;
Why modest Lady, you that sing such Encomiums
Of your first Suiter —

Verd. How can ye convince us
In your reports?

Lam. With what you cannot answer,
'Twas my command that staid him.

Cham. Your command?

Lam. Mine, Sir, and had my will rank'd with my power,
And his obedience, I could have sent him
With more ease, weaponless to you, and bound,
Than have kept him back, so well he loves his honour
Beyond his life.

Cham. Better, and better still.

Lam. I wrought with him in private to divert him
From your assur'd destruction, had he met you.

Cham. In private?

Lam. Yes, and us'd all Arts, all Charms
Of one that knew her self the absolute Mistress
Of all his faculties.

Cham. Gave all rewards too
His service could deserve; did not he take
The measure of my sheets?

Lam. Do not look yellow,
I have cause to speak; frowns cannot fright me,
By all my hopes, as I am spotless to you,
If I rest once assur'd you do but doubt me,
Or curb me of that freedom you once gave me —

Cham. What then?

Lam. Ple not alone abuse your bed, that's nothing,
But to your more vexation, 'tis resolv'd on,
Ple run away, and then try if Dinant
Have courage to defend me.

Champ. Impudent!

Verd. And on the sudden —

Beau. How are ye transform'd
From what you were?

Lam. I was an innocent Virgin,
And I can truly swear, a Wife as pure
As ever lay by Husband, and will dy so,
Let me live unsuspected, I am no servant,
Nor will be us'd like one: If you desire
To keep me constant as I would be, let
Trust and belief in you beget and nurse it;
Unnecessary jealousies make more whores
Than all baits else laid to entrap our frailties.

Beau. There's no contesting with her, from a child
Once mov'd, she hardly was to be appeas'd,
Yet I dare swear her honest.

Cham. So I think too,
On better judgement: I am no Italian
To lock her up: nor would I be a Dutchman,
To have my Wife, my sovereign, to command me:
Ple try the gentler way, but if that fail,
Believe it, Sir, there's nothing but extreams
Which she must feel from me.

Beau. That, as you please, Sir. (sweetly,
Charl. You have won the breeches, Madam, look up
My Lord limps toward you.

Lam. You will learn more manners.

Charl. This is a fee, for counsel that's unask'd for.

Cham. Come, I mistook thee sweet, prethee forgive me,
I never will be jealous: e're I cherish
Such a mechanick humour, I'll be nothing;
I'll say, Dinant is all that thou wouldst have him,
Will that suffice?

Lam. 'Tis well, Sir.

Cham. Use thy freedom
Uncheck'd, and unobserv'd, if thou wilt have it,
These shall forget their honour, I my wrongs.
We'll all dote on him, hell be my reward
If I dissemble.

Lam. And that hell take me
If I affect him, he's a lustfull villain,
(But yet no coward) and sollicit me
To my dishonour, that's indeed a quarrel,
And truly mine, which I will so revenge,
As it shall fright such as dare only think
To be adulterers.

Cham. Use thine own waies,
I give up all to thee.

Beau. O women, women!

When you are pleas'd you are the least of evils.

Verd. Ple rime to't, but provokt, the worst of Devils.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Monsieur Sampson, and three Clients.

Samp. I know Monsieur La-writ.

1 Cly. Would he knew himself, Sir.

Samp. He was a pretty Lawyer, a kind of pretty Lawyer,
Of a kind of unable thing.

2 Cly. A fine Lawyer, Sir,
And would have fir'd you up a business,
And out of this Court into that.

Samp. Ye are too forward
Not so fine my friends, something he could have done,
But short short.

1 Cly. I know your worships favour,
You are Nephew to the Judge, Sir.

Samp. It may be so, (friends;
And something may be done, without trotting i'th' dirt,
It may be I can take him in his Chamber,
And have an hours talk; it may be so,
And tell him that in's ear; there are such courtesies;
I will not say, I can.

3 Cly. We know you can, Sir. (writ?)

Samp. Peradventure I, peradventure no: but where's La-
Where's your sufficient Lawyer?

1 Cly. He's blown up, Sir.

2 Cly. Run mad and quarrels with the Dog he meets;
He is no Lawyer of this world now.

Samp. Your reason?

Is he defunct? is he dead?

2 Cly. No he's not dead yet, Sir;
But I would be loth to take a lease on's life for two hours:
Alas, he is posselt Sir, with the spirit of fighting
And quarrels with all people; but how he came to it —

Samp. If he fight well and like a Gentleman,
The man may fight, for 'tis a lawfull calling.
Look you my friends, I am a civil Gentleman,
And my Lord my Uncle loves me.

3 Cly. We all know it, Sir. (business,)

Samp. I think he does, Sir, I have business too, much
Turn you some forty or fifty Causes in a week;
