NEW ORLEANS

Commercial City Paper,
PUBLISHED BY J. SAMUEL.
NEW-ORLEANS:
WEDNESDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 9, 1835.

Dr. Charles H Barton will deliver a lecture this evening at 21 Royal street—his introductory for the purpose of [illegible] his known abilities in his profession, and [illegible] in accumulating observations and statistics [illegible] have no doubt of its being highly interesting [illegible] will probably glance at the climate of [illegible] New Orleans; and the local causes assigned [illegible] diseases: for he has collected a vast [illegible] bearing on this subject; and there can be [illegible] of his ability.

[illegible] of the steamboat Marion.

At a late hour last night our shipping collector came up [illegible] the intelligence of the loss of the steamboat [illegible], which sank opposite the upper cotton [illegible], in consequence of having been run into by the steamer Levant. The Marion was from Port [illegible] and bound to this port, and loaded with cotton, [illegible] molasses. The cargo was principally saved [illegible] sustaining much injury, through the [illegible] aid of the neighboring boats that were at the [illegible] and near the harbor; especially ships Sair, [illegible] erner and Ohio. No further particulars have [illegible] been received.

We extract the following from the Union of yesterday.

Our friend of the Bee seems to be very unfortunate. At this moment he is attacked from three quarters.

1. He has expressed his opinion about the St. Charles ss. Theatre and his performances in a way not to please some.

2. He has had the audacity to publish some doggerel verses in relation to Mr O'Connel.

3. And, last, though not least, he has expressed the desire that but one language should prevail in Louisiana [illegible] subject at their next annual session.

[illegible] does not the Bank increase its capital to the 4 millions allowed by its charter, as its condition is highly prosperous? Could not the bank of Orleans have its charter amended so as to increase its capital? And the bank of Louisiana, would the pledge of the stockholders in augmentation of its capital?

Indeed our banks are so well conducted that the stockholders if desirous might easily prevail on the members of the legislature to increase the capitals of their respective banks. This resort with the Citizens' [illegible] of New Orleans; and the local causes assigned [illegible] diseases: for he has collected a vast [illegible] bearing on this subject; and there can be [illegible] of his ability.

Could not the bank of Orleans have its charter amended so as to increase its capital? And the bank of Louisiana, would the pledge of the stockholders in augmentation of its capital?

Indeed our banks are so well conducted that the stockholders if desirous might easily prevail on the members of the legislature to increase the capitals of their respective banks. This resort with the Citizens' [illegible] of New Orleans; and the local causes assigned [illegible] diseases: for he has collected a vast [illegible] bearing on this subject; and there can be [illegible] of his ability.

We [illegible] notice the theatres or any public amusement we do so with justice, and as far as possible with courtesy; and when we advert to any of our local institutions or improvements—when we endeavor to discriminate [illegible] existing in the administration of the laws of the state, we are guided solely by the same motive—benefiting the public and all concerned without [illegible] party, person or place.

Nay more we have honestly and humbly endeavored to improve the conduct of the newspaper press itself, by maintaining a gentlemanly and dignified tone in all our remarks; and within the past three or four months avoiding altercation of all kinds. Previous to that period the editor was guided rather by the desires of others, than his own but now he trusts he will establish a good reputation for industry, integrity and energy—if not for respectable talents. He cannot indeed escape nor remove the spirit of obloquy which has prevailed too long in New Orleans, where accidental errors are considered designed crimes; and where one of those errorsis almost sufficient to counterbalance bouts of good acts. This condition is lamentable; and has prevented him often from being more useful and energetic as an editor: for the good is looked on as a thankless duty, while an error is cherished by the thoughtless and ignorant as an unpardonable blasphemy.

But our conditoer of the Union is mistaken in his 3d division: on which however the 'least said the soonest mended.' Our remarks were not designed to give offence; yet as they are calculated to do so if continued, we shall not notice the subject again: for we do not wish rashly to contend against the prejudices or customs of any, when not in contravention with the general welfare or public interest.

Our remarks on the St Charles theatrical corps were true and impartial—hence their efficacy and sting.—And as for any articles original or selected which we may give on Mr O'Connell, we would disdain to reply; except to establish their truth. The doggerel verses were from Bell's Life in London; and we gave them solely as a sample of wit in parody. We have similarly inserted verses on ourselves, and would again with equal pleasure—if malignity did not guide the wit.

As for O'Connell himself, he would be the first to laugh at the stanzas. We have had personally the pleasure of his acquaintance; and know him too well to think he could be affected by pasquinades. Yet what have we in America to do with him, except as regards his trades concerning slavery in the southern states? He has few feelings in common with us; and he has absolutely repudiated all American citizens emigrants from Ireland.

Shall they therefore be more solicitous concerning his fame than he himself? And why should citizens formerly of Ireland care more about the reputation of any of their patriots real or alleged, than an Englishman about Lord Brougham or Sir Robert Peel; or a Frenchman concerning Degin or Chateaubriand? We are ourselves of England, yet have we seldom adverted to any of the worthies of our customs there, except when we thought that our knowledge to communicate might be of use in elucidating the politics and manners prevalent. When an emigrant becomes an American citizen, he forswears allegiance to all other countries than his adopted; and an honest gentleman must think this compulsory on him to eradicate all predilections or prejudices formerly entertained of his native land. He is under the obligation of an oath, in which there should be no mental reservation; and he should become an Americ[illegible] in thought, word and deed—as he has voluntarily emigrated and forsworn his country.

For our own part, such is the view of citizenship taken by the editors for himself in his conduct as an American citizen: to this honor and duty impel him. And when the subscribers of the Bee are thus assured that his conduct will be so guided; when they are apprised that his exertions are made chiefly to acquire and secure their esteem; and that nothing but our honorable sense of duty to them and himself inspirits his efforts, without any hope of commensurate reward or gain, they will probably not refuse what he asks—their confidence and esteem.

However competent Judge Maurian may be in his judicial station—and of his competency we believe there is little doubt, it must be conceded by all attending the courts that too much duty is imposed on him as parish judge. He is not only obliged to hear all causes arising in the parish; to decide finally upon all causes of appeal from the city courts; but he is armed with concurrent jurisdiction with the district court, and requisite to determine on all cases of succession, and suits which may result from them.

These duties are too cumulative and onerous. The responsibility is too great for one man; and hence suitors in the court of Judge Maurian can never have justice speedily or efficiently administered.

Would it not therefore be well to bring in a bill at next session of the legislature, to divide the duties and distribute this responsibility of the parish judge?—Might not a probate or an orphan's court be specially created, for the exclusive purpose of determining on all matters and causes relating to successions? and the parish court be deprived of the power of appeal, and confined to suits arising in the parish within the parish which are not already [illegible] Justice be better administered by such a [illegible] it not now absolutely indispensable?

The subscription [illegible] commence on Saturday next at the Orleans [illegible], with a good [illegible] querade.

Miss Russell will appear at the Camp street theatre, as Rosina in the Barber of Seville, on Monday evening. Rightser speaks up handsomely and laudably of her vocal abilities, that we are very solicitous to witness their effects.

The tragedy of Venice Preserved was performed last evening at the St. Charles theatre. Pears on performed the part of Pierre; and Tornini represented Jaffier with much effect, but his bodyguard the star of the evening, as Belvidere. Her style of acting must be a treat in N. Orleans, so chaste, correct and finished—genty and delightful in appearance—whilst her accents in delivery, and naturally pathetic and sympathetic in her gesticulations. We might not indulge in any remarks on the other performers for the tragedy for we unabhlushes supernaturam them wholesale.

It would be well if the managers of this theatre commenced at the hour announced; and were more regular between the acts. Our citizens do not like to be detained till midnight.

Anglo Creole—Grand theatre, young Roscius's drama of the Maid of Artois was well represented, well applauded, and well [illegible]—as far as we saw, and learned.

Why does the [illegible] of the 1st and 6th wards require their [illegible] to preserve the obstructions daily [illegible] on the pavements and the goods exposed for sale? This evil is [illegible] the 3d ward; particularly in St Peter street.

[illegible] would not this [illegible] Will the [illegible] subject at their next annual [illegible]

To do [illegible] does not the [illegible] bank increase its capital to the 4 millions allowed by its charter, as its condition is highly prosperous? Could not the bank of Orleans have its charter amended so as to increase its capital? And the bank of Louisiana, would the pledge of the stockholders in augmentation of its capital?

Indeed our banks are so well conducted that the stockholders if desirous might easily prevail on the members of the legislature to increase the capitals of their respective banks. A man of tact and talent will best overcome by opposing, till an honorable and safe retreat becomes indispensable.

H M ship Vestal about the 10th ult, captured in the neighbourhood of the island of Grenada, a Spanish slave vessel with 370 slaves on board. The vessel and cargo were sent to Havana. The crew were on board the Vestal,

A meeting held in Boston on Friday evening resolved to adopt measures to secure subscriptions for the $170,000 necessary to complete the amount of $6,000,000 for the connection of the western railroad which is to connect Boston with the Hudson river at Hudson, Albany, and probably Troy. The ward committees on the subject were enlarged by an addition of three members to each.

Stupendous Mail.—The Boston Mercantile Journal says:—"Owing to some misunderstanding between the post office department and the Boston and Providence railroad company, the steamboat mail is no longer conveyed with that from Providence by the railroad cars. This is exceedingly unfortunate in many points of view. The passengers by the steamboat arrive in this city several hours before the regular mail, and speculators have thus a grand opportunity to take advantage of any sudden change in the prices of any articles of merchandize."

IRELAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

The following melancholy picture of the Emerald Isle, is extracted from a late Liverpool paper. How startling the contrast between the two countries—especially when one of her statesmen is travelling thro portions of Europe, villifying and abusing that portion of our country where slavery exists. We beg the reader to peruse it attentively, and then cast his eyes around and view the happy and contented slave, and judge between them. It will not admit of a comparison. We are satisfied that if the individual we allude to would visit our country and witness the happiness and contentment which reigns throughout, to consider at the same time that the evil was forced upon us by the mother country, and that it is difficult to be eradicated, we think his opinions would be entirely changed. We have heard of several gentlemen from the North whose opinions have undergone an entire change relative to the subject, by coming amongst us. And why not desire one who has been endeavoring to emancipate his own country from bondage, to visit one, whose sympathies have ever been with the green isle of Erin; whose institutions have been misrepresented in such a manner, as to prejudice, no doubt, a great many against it, and to him among others. We trust, however, the land of the illustrious Emmet may not be always doomed to misfortune, and that the day may not be far distant, when she will rise up and take that rank among the nations of the earth to which she is so eminently entitled.

Soon may we behold thee as thou ought'st to be,
First flower of the earth, first gem of the sea.

"Here we behold a population, a great portion of which, is almost in the state of human destitution, large tracts of country in a frightful state of disorganization— property unsafe—life insecure or exposed to destruction with a prodigality which too plainly speaks the worthless consideration in which it is held—thousands perishing in the midst of plenty, for want of the means of supporting existence, and hundreds driven from the land of their fathers into almost involuntary exile, from the overpowering dread of inevitable ruin."

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA.

A stated meeting was held Nov. 18, 1835, at their Hall in the Exchange.

The president, Chief Justice Gibson in the, chair.

The following communications were made.

1 The President read a notice of fossil reliquæ in the coal measures on the Kiskiminetas. Some of these were of the species described by the late Rev. Mr. Steinhauer in the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, vol. 1, new series, but more symmetrically formed and finished.

A paper on the origin of the district of which Tamaqua, in Schuylkill county, is included, considered as a part of the general coal formation, by Leonard Koehler, member of the Geological Society.

1. The question as to the dates of the formation of conglomerate rocks, and the coal, and conclusions that they are contempory, from the facts they exhibit.

2. The nature of the materials comprising these formations, and [illegible] to their transformation into coal. The existence of impressions of various plants, and even trees, in the clay or clayey marl, and stone &c. which accompany coal, was [illegible], the different strata in which they are found, and the conclusion derived, that every part of the coal [illegible] through, the globe must have been formed at [illegible] the same time, by the agency of a powerful [illegible] of corrosive acids at short intervals. The [illegible] opinion on the coast of England and other countries [illegible] referred to, and the theory adopted of the vegetable origin of coal.

Modern delicacy—Walter Scott, [illegible] like, perhaps, and perhaps for not so good a reason as they have,

Where shall the traitor rest,
He the deceiver!
Who can win a maiden's breast,
Ruin and leave her.

We have heard these very lines after they were set to music, sung thus:

Who can win a maiden's breast,
Ruin away and leave her.

Yet show me a popular lovesong, which a modest woman would be willing to put into prose and read aloud in company.

Ball-dress—We have seen a majestic woman at a ball, with cobweb muslin over a flamecolored petticoat. Of course we had an idea of her character. If no poet, she was at least, or appeared, as luminous with passion, all ether within.

Success—In large crowded cities, success depends more on accident than on merit—let that theory be over as much.

Memories—Are made by accident rather than by calculation, even in arithmetic. Correspondent results being observed, correspondent processes are inferred—that's all.

Yankee—Shet yer rop. That's spunkey, boss! I shat hurt nary one o' my bands; wanting more o' me!—Heaven forbid.

Education—We have seen children whipped in their playground. Being satisfied that play was needed they were made to play.

From the Boston Post.

Indian Britain Difficulties in New Hampshire.—Although no lives have as yet been lost, as stated in the Newburyport Herald, these difficulties are of a more serious nature than has been generally supposed. The last severe battle originated from an affair in which the deputy sheriff had been arrested on the warrant of a Britain magistrate, and who was rescued by the citizens, after an affray in which one or two individuals were slightly wounded.

In accordance with instructions from the governor, the adjutant-general of New Hampshire has repaired to the scene of difficulty, with discretionary powers to order out so much of the 24th regiment of militia as may be necessary to restore order and maintain the supremacy of the laws. In a letter to the governor, dated the 11th inst, he states that the excitement is very great—that the Canadian inhabitants and some of the authorities in the vicinity, seem determined to render to the disaffected and rebellious citizens all the countenance and support in their power, and throw every impediment in the way of the laws, and that [illegible] in this late difficulties—expresses the opinion that a standing military force will be necessary for the safety of the well-disposed citizens who reside upon that disturbed territory, and announces his determination to depend on the force to support the laws, and enable the sheriff to perform his duty.

The richest Simeon territory is that portion of New Hampshire lying north of the 45th degree of north latitude containing, exclusive of what has been reclaimed by actual settlers, about 150,000 acres of land still at the disposal of the state, and worth on an average at least $1 per acre. The right of property in this tract was involved in the decision of the boundary question referred to the king of the Netherlands a few years since, and in consequence of the determination of that question, was first deferred, the New Hampshire legislature, at its last session, determined to commence the location of the disputed ground; until the final settlement of the question, and requested the governor to make all necessary aid to the executive officers of that county, in causing the laws of the state to be duly enforced. A large majority of the citizens are quiet and orderly, and a spirit of rebellion has been established by only eighteen or twenty individuals.

A RAT WORTH LOOKING AFTER.—Two hats were yesterday stolen from the hall of Mr John Mulford's house in Bayard street, while the family were at dinner, and in one of the hats was a draft from New Orleans on the house of Rogers and co, of this city for $800 dollars. On the hats being missed, and enquiry made after them, it was ascertained that a woman was seen going along the street with two hats a short time before, and

FOR sale a handsome small property, situated in the parish of St. James, on the left bank of the river, in the middle of that section called Longue-Vue, bounded on the upper part by the property of Madame widow Dameuil Le Bourgeois, and on the lower part by that of Mr. Simon Pellet, measuring half arpent front by two arpents in depth, French measurement. On said land there are several buildings newly constructed, which consist in a dwelling house, having 51 feet long by 48 in depth; nine apartments, all in the lower part. Also another building, with two stories, measuring 51 feet long by 18 wide, the two buildings have a handsome gallery. In the yard a pigeon-house 10 feet sq.; a livery st.ble 68 feet long, covered with shingles, and well divided to admit horses; two chicken houses; a brick oven, kitchen and negro houses; a handsome garden with paved alleys, a well, privies, &c. &c.

This property is well known by travellers as being in an advantageous place, and would answer to a person wishing to keep a store and boarding house, or to a family as a country seat, being only at quarters leagues from New Orleans.

If said property is not sold between this and the 25th instant, it will be offered at public auction, at Hewlett's Exchange, in New Orleans, corner of St. Louis and Chartres streets, at very accommodating terms. For further particulars apply to Mr. Noel Dayot, at Gentilly-ville; or at no. 28, St. Philip street, New Orleans.
