ADVERTISEMENT.

EVERY year witnesses the gradual decay or the total destruction of those monuments of ancient wealth and splendour, and those curious remains of art, which, so long as they continue to exist, are the documents both of general and local history. These events are to be regretted, especially as the lapse of such evidences often sheds an obscurity over the facts and hypotheses, which they were well calculated to illustrate.

The accidents to which Collections of Drawings and Papers kept in MS. are liable, have also proved very inauspicious to the science of History and Antiquities. Of these, so many instances are recorded in the "British Topography" of Mr. Gough, as having occurred sometimes during the lives of those by whom they had been collected, but most frequently in consequence of their death, that the perusal of his volumes can hardly fail of exciting in the mind of any person possessed of such materials, a desire to place beyond the reach of accidental destruction or dispersion, some part, at least, of what has been obtained by means of considerable labour and expense.

That the County of BEDFORD should never yet have found a separate Historian, and that so little should hitherto have been published respecting it, must excite surprise; especially when considered with reference to the number and interesting character of the remains to be found within its narrow limits, their general high state of preservation, and the urbanity and hospitality invariably evinced towards persons actually engaged in graphical pursuits or literary inquiries.

The foregoing considerations have been thought sufficient to justify the publication of the present Work, consisting of a selection (from a much larger Collection of Drawings) of such subjects in the County of BEDFORD as appeared most interesting, either for their architectural beauty, singularity, antiquity, or connection with the respectable Families which have formerly flourished, or are at present established, in that County.

The Drawings were originally made with a particular view to the preservation of the antiquities, rather than with any intention to display the scenery, of the County; the subjects now selected for publication are, for the most part, inedited, and the different styles of etching or engraving employed have been chosen as they appeared best adapted to promote the chief object held in view—accuracy of representation.
