GROWERS! Why do you put into your houses big shade-casting, ice-clinging, wooden eave plates like this one—when you can buy our patented, Galvanized Ice Clearing

Plate that's half the size and twice as strong? Just compare the size of the two plates above. They are exact measurements. Then there's the roof bars—on one they are toe nailed on, making a beautiful joint for the water to lodge in and rot the bar. But not so with our patented plate—every bar is joined to it by a special socket clasp having a good big opening for carrying off the drip. Not only a dry joint—but a joint of great strength and well nigh endless endurance.

If you don't put another thing of ours in your next house—use our patented plate.

While you are about it, better have our Guaranteed Wrought Iron Side Posts, too. Send for prices.

Members of the Woman's Club of this city are taking an interest in the children's home garden project. The matter has been placed in the hands of a sub-committee of which Mrs. John T. D. Blackburn is chairman. As a result of the sub-committee's efforts three daily newspapers in the city have offered prizes ranging from $25 to $5 for best gardens. Charles Gibson, a prominent merchant, has offered prizes of $5 each for best display of growing asters, best growing salvias, and best growing gladiolus. A prize of $5 is offered also for best exhibits of plants grown in tin cans. Prof. Frank S. Gallup of the high school has secured a plot 4,300 feet by 700 feet near the Manning boulevard for the use of the high school boys, who will mark it off into plots. William C. Gloeckner, florist, 97 State street, will sell the one-cent packets of seeds which will be obtained from an association in Cleveland, Ohio. Philip Bender, superintendent of parks, has offered the use of the lake house in Washington park for an exhibition in October of the flowers and vegetables grown by the children.

J. F. Wilcox & Sons, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The present plant of J. F. Wilcox & Sons, comprising over 500,000 feet of glass is the largest cut flower establishment west of Chicago and is well known as one of the leading concerns of the country. This large plant is entirely built on a steep hillside and with the handsome residence of Mr. Wilcox in the foreground, makes a unique and striking picture, as on account of the situation every greenhouse in the plant can be seen from one point of view. Because of the encroachment of the growing city and the distance the coal must be hauled, no extensions will be made to the present plant. A new site of 120 acres of level land with facilities for railway switching has been purchased and a new plant will be started at once. With true western ideas, the start will be something big and 150,000 feet of glass will be erected at once, comprised in two detached houses, each 60 feet wide and of the great length of 1,000 feet each. A modern power house and service building with scientific coal handling arrangements will be built and everything about the plant will be strictly up-to-date. The contract for the complete construction has been given to King Construction Company of North Tonawanda, N. Y., and is a very creditable start for H. G. Miller, the newly appointed representative of the King Construction Company in the Chicago district. This is the most extensive piece of greenhouse construction that has ever been covered by a single contract, as it exceeds the great range built by the King Construction Company for H. A. Dreer Inc., at River-ton some months ago.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—V. J. Gorley has sold to Grimm & Gorly the property and greenhouses on St. Louis avenue.

NORWALK, CONN.—Howard V. Worden has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $719.72 unsecured and $1,200 accommodation paper, and assets are given at $220 stock in trade and $44.50 due on open accounts.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y.—The Oyster Bay Horticultural Society has been organized with a membership of 82. The officers are James Duthie, president; Joseph Robinson, vice-president; H. G. Vail, treasurer; John T. Ingraham, recording secretary; John Devine, financial secretary; James Goldsmith, John Miller and E. I. Grobel, trustees for one, two and three years respectively; William Eccles, Alfred Walker, Thomas Roberts, A. Lahodny, Floyd Blowers, J. R. Raynor and C. Chester Painter, executive committee. The meetings will be held on the third Friday of each month at the Board of Trade rooms.

Some Men Would
the Fence Than Walk in by the Gate.

Terse Talk No. 3.

SOME folks like to do things the hardest way—at least they persist in doing things that way.

They seem to think that it's a form of shrewdness to get inside by some other way than the straight, frank open gate way. Such fellows are always jockeying over prices. If you named a figure 50 per cent below cost, they would promptly declare your price was "way high."

In the end you and I know that these men actually pay more for what they buy. Pay more because it costs a lot more to sell them, and no one is in business just for the fun of it.

To the man who asks us if we can't get the price of our Iron Frame house down, we answer: "Of course we can, but we won't."

We won't, because we can't keep the quality up and the price down at the same time. We are determined to keep quality up and sell the best house it's possible to build and give the best value for a man's money. The price, at first, may seem a little more, but if you know how to figure, you will at once see that the actual cost is a great deal less.

Walk straight in by the gate and let's talk business.

Next Week's Terse Talk —

That's the Point."

SUPPLY LARGER THAN DEMAND.

With the weather about perfect for the past three days, neither too hot nor too cold with bright sunshine and clear skies, every thing points to a joyful and prosperous Easter. The weather has produced as fine flowers and as large a supply of all varieties as the markets here have ever handled. Business has been good, both in the retail and wholesale houses, but the supply has been really greater than the demand, the only scarcity being in violets.

NOTES.

Elaborate decorations of the city are planned during the Democratic convention. The Women's Civic league, the Home Garden committee and others interested, have suggested the planting of trees, hedges and flowers in a formal garden in the rear of Fifth Regiment Armory where the convention will be held, having flower boxes and trailing vines instead of the usual bunting from windows and balconies. Baskets should be placed on the top of trolley poles filled with gay flowers and vines, palms, evergreen and bright flowers to be lavishly used and a display of formal gardens around the monuments or where it would add the most in point of beauty. The plans were turned over to Wm. S. Manning, general superintendent of parks.

The storm of wind and rain on Tuesday did great damage in some parts of Baltimore county. Philip Welsh of Glenmorris met with considerable loss. Glass was broken in his range of houses, outbuildings were blown down and the roof from his dwelling nearly blown off. Cars that were standing on siding were overturned and he reports that a rick of fodder was blown so far away, they have never been able to find it.

A visit to Andrew Anderson this week to look through his range of rose houses found them full of bloom. Mr. Anderson grows American Beauties, Richmond, My. Maryland, Ivory, Killarney, Mrs. Taft and Radiance. The last named was very beautiful and has been doing finely all winter with a nice cutting for Easter. He will increase his stock of American Beauties next season by planting another house of that rose.

The next regular meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, will be held Monday, April 8, 1912. An address on "Roses" will be delivered by Wallace R. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn.

The privet hedges on the private estates and elsewhere were so damaged by the severe winter, that they are being pruned back to within six inches of the ground.

Hans Anderson, who went out of business after the hail storm of last spring, has purchased property at Towson and will erect two houses this spring.

This is the second article of a series describing machines used in our factory.

It is known as a Revolving Sifter, to which the semi-liquid clay flows from the Blunger Mill. It performs a most important function. Its covering is a fine copper wire screen with 1,600 meshes to the square inch, through which the thin clay is strained as the Sifter revolves.

All sand and grit is thus removed, leaving a fine smooth body; it is the same as clay is treated for dinner ware. The next operation will be described here later.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Hydrangeas.

There are very few plants that are generally grown that show more variance in their culture or in the returns to the grower than the hydrangeas, especially those that are grown for summer blooming. In looking over the stocks in the several markets one will often see the extremes of these plants grown in the same sized pot; one with eight to ten heads of bloom, short and stocky with fine foliage, an ornament on any porch or in any yard; and the other tall and long jointed, with two or three heads of bloom and five or six branches with no flowers and the foliage thin and small; the former bringing the grower $2.00 or $2.50 and the latter hardly averaging 75 cents. Yet these two plants have practically cost the grower the same amount of labor. These plants grow rapidly and must have plenty of room, an abundance of sun and lots of nourishment. It is useless to try to grow a good plant when they are crowded together. Many growers finish these plants by raising the pots over the benches of bedding plants that do not now require the full amount of sun, placing the hydrangeas about four feet apart in the center of the bench and standing the pot on a stand two feet above the other plants. This gives the hydrangeas a fine location. When the plants have set their buds the pots will probably be full of roots and a watering of liquid manure once or twice a week will greatly assist them in finishing up the flower and keep the foliage in good color. To grow good hydrangeas they must have plenty of food, room enough to grow shapely and for the air to circulate all around the plant and a light, well ventilated location. Under these conditions they are easily grown and are remunerative to the grower.

Freesias.

Although the freesias are a cheap bulb they should not be thrown away, for it takes but little attention to ripen them off after they are through blooming and as good bulbs can be procured as those that are purchased. The freesia is a native of southern Africa, so they are blooming at the natural season when flowered in midwinter in the north. But the bulbs must be allowed to mature their growth and then dried off gradually. The pots or boxes in which they are grown can then be placed in full sunlight and allowed to become very dry. A shelf near the glass makes an admirable place on which to place them after the growth has finished and no more watering is required, but they must not stand where any drip from the roof on a stormy day is liable to keep them moist. They can be shaken out in June and the bulbs sorted as it is comparatively easy to select the flowering bulbs and stored in a dry place until wanted for planting. For Christmas blooming the bulbs should be started early in July and a succession of plantings until September will give the grower flowers until the following spring.

Lilium Lancifolium.

Among the best flowers for greenhouse culture during the summer months is the Lilium lancifolium, of varieties rubrum, roseum album and Melpomene. While these varieties can all be grown outside yet under those conditions they rarely give perfect flowers and they also tarnish quickly in the direct rays of the sun or under heavy rains and to have flowers that can be used for decorative work or designs it is far better to grow them under glass. Those that are to bloom in July should have been started in March, but for August blooming they can be planted now. One of the easiest ways to grow these bulbs is to plant them in boxes from four to six inches deep, not too large, but of a size that one man can handle when filled with soil. Do not fill the boxes too full when planting the bulbs, for like all lilies they throw out roots at the surface, so it is well to leave room for top dressing later. Grow them in a cool, shady location and after the spikes begin to grow give them plenty of water and keep them tied erect to stakes. Constant fumigation will be necessary to keep the green fly in check. This is in no way forcing these bulbs and if properly dried off after blooming the bulbs may be grown year after year and a good crop of flowers obtained.

Celosia Plumosa.

The plants of Celosia plumosa or the ostrich plume celosia are of very easy culture and make very showy plants for either the garden or the greenhouse. They form pyramidal bushes and the yellow and red plumes which resemble ostrich feathers stand gracefully above the foliage. While they make showy plants for the garden, finer specimens are grown under glass and they make very showy plants in the late summer and fall. Seed sown in April will make fine plants for culture during the summer, but like all the celosias the young seedlings damp off easily. As soon as large enough they should be potted in good light soil in 2½-inch pots and later shifted to 4-inch and to grow large plants to 6-inch pots. They should be grown in a good, strong light, for if shaded the plants will become drawn and the dwarf compact plants are more desirable. C. plumosa aurea, the orange ostrich plume, and C. plumosa coccinea, the crimson ostrich plume, are the two best of the older varieties and Pride of Castle Gould, a new introduction of the last two years, is the best of all the ostrich plume varieties and can be obtained in many colors.

Gypsophila Paniculata.

There are few summer flowers that are of more use to the florist having a local trade than the gypsophilla, for it lightens up work beautifully and greatly aids in softening the appearance of the summer flowers, many of which have a coarse look in floral work, and in bouquets, sprays and basket work the sprays are particularly useful. The grower not possessing a good bed of this should procure stock at once and plant them in a good, sunny position, and after once becoming established they require no further attention than to keep the bed free from weeds and occasionally cultivated. Seed can be now sown and as soon as large enough transplanted in rows outside where they can remain until another spring, when they can be again transplanted to permanent quarters, but to have plants that will bloom this year it will be necessary to procure older stock. The double form of this plant is even more beautiful than the single for some purposes, and its lasting qualities make it more valuable for a cut flower than the older variety.

ORLANDO, FLA.—The Luther Floral Company is a new corporation which will absorb the business of J. F. Luther. The incorporators are John F. Luther, president; M. M. Stewart, secretary and treasurer, and Hugh C. Allen.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The election of a city flower from the selected candidates is in progress, the marigold, sweet pea, aster, petunia and coreopsis having been nominated. City Gardener Finney is receiving the votes of the school children and citizens.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.—John E. Yeats will on June 1 take charge of his greenhouses on Springfield avenue, which are now leased by Gustave Johnson, and will erect a new greenhouse which will have an area of 41,000 square feet, on Maple street.

ILION, N. Y.—Ward Gordon, the young florist, whose greenhouses were destroyed by fire a few months ago, has about completed his new greenhouses which are of concrete construction and more modern than the old structures which were burned.

Novel Floral Arrangements.

A clever corsage bouquet seen on the boardwalk parade Easter Sunday is somewhat an improvement on the round, colonial or old fashioned bouquet and very noticeable on the Easter Monday afternoon parade on Fifth avenue, New York. After making inquiries this proved to be the new "Mayfair" which introduces the pompadour colors in a bridesmaid's rose, a circle of violets, one of sweet peas, a few lilies of the valley and a many-looped bow of old blue velvet, and others of number eight double-faced Liberty ribbon, two-toned colors worked all around, taking the place of the paper bouquet holders, and I believe the credit is due Fleischman of New York.

Sand as a means of holding the flowers properly in a bowl has been superseded by the pretty Japanese green bronze or lead weights, made in turtle form or in rounds; into these the flower stems are thrust and the blooms upheld. The perforations enable the flowers to drink all the water they need and so keep fresh a longer time than in the former way. This effect is successfully being worked out in the lined baskets and plateaus; although the glass tubes are being used more, simply inserted in moss and then filled with water.

A pleasant conversation overheard to the effect regarding the spring luncheon or dinner table—flowers should have careful consideration as to color, for some of the spring flowers are so riotously gaudy that they cannot be used in profusion. Dark red tulips, for instance, should not appear on the dinner table, as they usually light up poorly, but a few brilliant tulips in a Delft bowl look charming at breakfast or luncheon. S. S.

Dennison's Booklets.

A booklet just issued by the Dennison Manufacturing Co. entitled "The Tale of the Tag" interestingly tells the story of the origin and growth of the tag and the many uses of that important piece of cardboard to the housewife, traveler and merchant. It is the first of a series of books which the corporation will publish and which they are distributing gratuitously to their customers or upon application to anyone interested enough to request a copy. The others to be issued are "The Adventure of Jim, John and Jane" in May, "Dennison's Christmas Book" in November, and "Dennison's Crepe Paper Almanac" in January, 1913.

Preparations for Memorial Day.

These are strenuous times for the greenhouse department of the modern cemeteries and the same applies to the florist who grows quantities of plants for sale and for planting out for Memorial day. Easter has passed and much room is made available and this should immediately be taken advantage of, for the cry from the plants is for room and still more room, and oftentimes a number of carnation plants have to be sacrificed to provide the space. The call at Memorial day, as at all other times, is for a clean, vigorous plant with plenty of bloom on it. It matters not whether it is a begonia, ageratum, geranium or any other flowering plant; the aim should be to provide as good a plant as possible, and this is the time to plan for such.

Geraniums being the leaders as bedding plants, we give them first place on our list. They should be now well established in 4-inch pots, and the work of shifting from 3-inch to this size should have been completed about March 15 to 20, for the plants need all of the time between those dates and the middle of May to be well grown with plenty of blooms on them. I think the two most important factors in growing a good geranium plant is: first, to treat them to a cool temperature, and second, be sparing about applying water to the roots. If treated in this way, nice, stocky plants can be had, but if grown warm and watered without judgment long, stalky plants will be the result. Be particular with the airing of the houses. Geraniums delight in a rise of 6° in the daytime, is best suited to them and as quickly as the plants show signs of being crowded a rise of six degrees in the daytime, is best suited to them and as quickly as the plants show signs of being crowded space should be given them to guard against their becoming drawn.

Arrangements should have been made to have the hot-beds ready to receive the alternantheras in the latter part of March. If the plants have been held over winter in flats or in a bench, a light sandy soil should be used in potting them. Some growers plant their plants out into the heated beds, but we prefer to pot them either into 2-inch or 2½-inch pots and plunge them in the beds; they are less liable to suffer after being transferred to the open ground.

Echeverias are the companions of the alternanthera and we cannot think of the one without the other. They should be given a place near the light in a cool house. One very important point to bear in mind is be sure there is sufficient space between the plants in the flats so that they do not become drawn.

EASTER DISPLAY AT BERTERMANN BROS. CO'S., INDIANAPOLIS, IND., APRIL 6, 1912.

A few of the larger sizes can be potted into 3½ or 4-inch pots—they come in handy for special purposes and some customers call for them.

The dwarf blue ageratum is a very useful plant for cemetery planting; fine, solid effects of this plant are very beautiful. At this time the stock should be in good growing condition if well flowered plants are expected.

Coleus are not used as much as in former years, but still large quantities are planted out every year. Keep putting cuttings into the sand, they root readily, but the growth is slow after potting until the weather gets somewhat warmer. A good coleus for immediate effect after planting should be stocky and branching in a 3-inch pot.

Large quantities of Mad. Sallerol geraniums are used, it being the best of the bordering plants to go with the geranium. The plants should have been shifted into 3-inch during the month of March and be making a good growth at this time.

Heliotropes, salvias, lantanas, fuchsias, cuphea, impatiens and petunias are all very important subjects to be considering. They are not grown in such large quantities as some other plants, but a good stock should be provided for, as they come mighty handy as fillers in and for special purposes.

The English ivy is used in enormous quantities for cemetery planting and is always short of demand. It is a good plan to run in all the cuttings that can be obtained in March and early April, so that a good stock of all sizes will be on hand. Any left unsold can be planted out for larger plants another season.

One of the most important things to consider, when figuring out the Memorial day stocks, is to provide for a good variety of plants to enable one to place before his customers a number of combinations of plantings, they will appreciate it and it adds a great deal to the effect of the grounds. Vernon begonias, pilea, sweet alyssum and lobelia, must not be overlooked, there is a big demand for them.

The seedlings in flats such as verbenas and pansies, should be replanted and attended to right along.

Look well to the matter of providing a good supply of vines for vases. There are none better than well grown plants of English ivy and vincas. Also work over the dracenas, etc., for center plants for vases.

FLOWERING PLANTS.

Big advances have been made of late years in the demand for well-grown plants in bloom for Memorial day and of all of the plants that come under this heading, there is not any better than well-grown Hydrangea hortensis. They are mostly needed for immediate display at that time and they fill the bill as well as anything. They should now be in their flowering pots, growing in a good rich soil, as they are vigorous feeders. Give plenty of light and grow cool; water sparingly until the roots have a good hold of the soil, after which they require an abundance of water.

If well flowered, the rambler and other roses in pots might be termed the elite of the flowering plants for this occasion, but when not in bloom, they are dead stock as far as sales are concerned. There is always a good call for any novelty in the way of flowering plants and anything out of the ordinary is bound to sell.

C. W. JOHNSON.

Evergreen Seedlings Free of Duty.

The following decision was made by the board of general appraisers March 20 upon the protest entered by W. K. Harris, Philadelphia, and others against assessing duty on evergreen seedlings as nursery or greenhouse stock:

The question here before the board arises over the importation of certain evergreens from Holland. A commission to take testimony abroad was issued, has been duly returned, and is part of the record in this case. The merchandise has been assessed 25 per cent ad valorem under paragraph 264, tariff act 1909, as nursery or greenhouse stock. It is claimed to be free of duty under paragraph 668 as evergreen seedlings.

Considerable confusion has been caused with reference to what testimony shall apply to specific protests, by reason of the fact that several hearings were had, and by further reason of the great variety of trees or shrubs involved. No question arises here as to whether the importations in question are evergreens within the meaning of the statute; the principal, in fact the only, questions is as to whether they are seedlings. This question has been before the board heretofore. Rolker's case, G. A. 5305 (T. D. 24305). It is contended on the part of the importers that any tree or shrub grown from seed is a seedling, regardless of its age, size, or treatment subsequent to germination. This is the ordinary meaning given to the term "seedling," and of necessity must be the meaning given in the construction of this statute unless it is shown there is another meaning warranted by commercial usage; or, in other words, it must be shown that there is a commercial designation arising from the use of the term in the trade in connection with such commodipart of the government. The law of 1897 contained the same expression, "evergreen seedlings," in paragraph 252 of that law, and it became necessary under that law to distinguish and determine what an evergreen seedling was. The board passed upon the question in Rolker's case, G. A. 5305 (T. D. 24305). It was there held, in what is to our mind a well-reasoned case, that an evergreen seedling, as defined by the statute, is any plant, shrub, or tree green seedlings and free of duty under paragraph 668.

The preparation of this case has made it very difficult to determine just which items should be termed evergreen seedlings. The testimony has not been properly arranged, tabulated, or carefully referred to the various items, which has entailed upon the board a great deal of work. In the effort to arrive at a just conclusion with reference to the testimony applicable proper application may not have been made in all instances. As we read the testimony, however, we are satisfied that the only plants in the above-named importations which are entitled to be termed evergreen seedlings under the rule above set forth are Abies Nordmanniana, Abies Brachyphylla, Taxus Baccata, and Skimmia Japonica. There may be some other items which under the rule above given would be evergreen seedlings, but the testimony is so vague and general we can find nothing upon which to base a determination that the particular plants included in these invoices were grown from seed. To illustrate, hollies with berries are sometimes grown from seed and sometimes propagated in the other ways mentioned, and the testimony fails to show that the hollies on these invoices were actually propagated from seed. What is true in this is also true as to some other varieties, the testimony not being confined specifically and pointedly to the importations in question.

The protests are sustained as to the four varieties above specified and overruled in all other respects.

TAMPA, FLA.—Prices ruled a little lower, says the Tampa Floral Co., but there was an increase of 33 per cent in the cash sales over the previous year. The supply in plants was equal to the demand and palms, ferns, geraniums and blooming plants sold well. Lilies, roses and carnations were all sold out early Saturday, but there was very little call for anything else. There is an increasing demand for ornamental plants and shrubbery by both old and new settlers for decorating the yards. The indications are that the long neglected surroundings of otherwise fine residences will receive proper attention.

ties. Considerable testimony has been taken and it is conflicting.

On the part of the importers it is shown by men who have been engaged in the wholesale trade for a number of years, both in the United States and in Holland, that an evergreen seedling is an evergreen plant grown from the seed as distinguished from those propagated by budding, grafting, slipping, or layering. On the part of the government there is testimony from experienced men, who have been long in the business, to the effect that there is a commercial meaning given to the expression "evergreen seedling," limiting it to those plants, shrubs, or trees which are grown from seed, but further limiting it by the size, age, and treatment of the plant after germination. The witnesses for the government do not agree as to what an evergreen seedling is so that any definite or uniform rule can be adopted from their testimony which may govern the classification of this merchandise. According to some, it is determined by the age and size of the plant; others think it depends on the planting and transplanting subsequent to germination; and there is testimony which tends to show it depends upon the development of the root and the amount of space given to the plant after transplanting. Under this testimony a different rule would have to be adopted for different plants. What would cease to be a seedling at the age of two years in one variety would still be a seedling at a greater age in another, and variations in size would similarly lead to different conclusions. We think the law was framed with a view to having the term "evergreen seedling" cover the various varieties of evergreens grown from seeds. With that in view, it would be impossible to interpret the law under the testimony given on the grown from the seed, and, being propagated from the seed, it always remains a seedling without regard to its size, age, or subsequent treatment. We think the government has failed to show that there exists a definite, uniform, and general commercial designation, as defined in the case of Maddock v. Magone (152 U. S., 368). Hence we conclude that the evergreens embraced within these importations which are shown to be propagated from the seed, as distinguished from the other methods of propagation referred to above, are ever-

ROSE MADAME CHARLES RUSSELL AT WABAN ROSE CONSERVATORIES, NATICK, MASS.

THE ROSE.

Rose Mme. Charles Russell.

Frequent mention has been made in the trade press during the last winter of the new rose which originated at the Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass., and which we illustrate. As a compliment to the treasurer of the corporation and his wife it has been named in her honor, Madame Charles Russell, and it was indeed a delicate compliment to such a charming and distinguished lady and one who makes a lovely sponsor.

The writers who have mentioned this rose have given their readers but a faint idea of its beauties and its prolific characteristics. The habit, perfume and general qualities places it in a class by itself for it is a fancy rose in all respects, very prolific in blooming and is good all the year round. We have seen it many times during the last winter and each time it has so impressed us that we predict, though unwillingly, that it will eventually supersede the American Beauty. The color is described by one of Boston's prominent artists as carmine pink, it is deep when the flower first opens and gradually shades to a pleasing pink when fully developed. The growth is very strong, and it throws long, strong shoots from the base of the plant, but these stems never produce a "bull-head" even in the coldest weather. The shoots are something like those of the American Beauty, three and four feet long, but unlike that variety there is always a flower at the top. The foliage is very glossy which will make it a great favorite. Alexander Montgomery, the manager of the Waban Conservatories, thinks that perhaps many would prefer foliage like the American Beauty but it is difficult to have every quality that would please everybody in one variety. At these greenhouses the plants are grown on their own roots and grafted and there is very little difference in the growth by either method, and also in solid beds and in benches, the growth in the beds is stronger but the flowers produced in both cases are about the same.

Mme. Charles Russell has been produced by the Waban Conservatories and it has taken 12 years to bring it to the perfection which has been attained, and it is the result of four separate crosses with parentage of good sturdy stock. It will replace the American Beauty at these houses, that variety being discarded, which plainly indicates in what high esteem it is held by these renowned growers. It will be disseminated in 1913 and, as we said before, we believe that it will supersede the American Beauty, for it will be a case of "the survival of the fittest," and the march of progress, and last of all, the best for the grower's pocketbook, that is, dollars and cents. We would advise every grower to keep in touch with this rose and see it growing if possible, for that is the best way to become acquainted with its good qualities, far better than any description penned by a correspondent. MAC.

Roses.

Paper read by Wallace R. Pierson before the Baltimore Gardeners' and Florists' Club, April 8, 1912.

I am reminded of the fact that I have crossed the Mason and Dixon line in coming to Baltimore to speak to you this evening, and that fact has a great deal of significance to me. In the north an invitation may be one prompted by courtesy pure and simple, but in the south an invitation is extended because of inherent hospitality and I feel that you really wanted to have me accept your hospitality and tell you a few of the points which I believe may aid some in the upbuilding of business, and which will tend to improve conditions in the flower world in which our lives are being spent. We are reminded that the business is not all flowers, for one subject tonight is roses and they all have thorns, and with the hope of relieving the rose-growing industry of some of its thorns I will attempt to give you in brief an outline of a path that leads to success in the rose-growing business.

I realize the subject is broad, for the rose-growing industry extends not from sea to sea but encircles the globe. We cannot all become familiar with conditions in Europe nor see the wonders of the Pacific Coast when the roses are in bloom, but we read of the cities of the western coast buying roses for street planting by the twenty-five thousand lots and we know that means the making of hundreds of thousands rose lovers, and these cities are famous more on account of their wonderful display of roses than for their great industrial establishments which are the backbone of their prosperity. We have not the climate here in the east which will permit such extensive operations but we have, nevertheless, wonderful opportunities which, if taken advantage of, would accomplish much that is to be desired and allowing for unfavorable climatic conditions, if we had some of the western spirit which is behind those wonderful displays on the western coast we might be at least close competitors and at least receive honorable mention in the awards, and a vote of thanks—although perhaps unspoken—from every man, woman or child who is fortunate enough to behold a well-kept rose garden in its prime.

We have a few such samples in our state of which Elizabeth park in Hartford is a striking example. Ramblers, hybrid perpetuals, hybrid teas and the polyantha type gathered together in a rose garden some acres in extent, and those who have never seen this park in the middle of June, I can only say that you have one of the good things of life in store for you, and if you are fortunate enough to visit it, the memory will linger long. And the result of such a rose garden is the education of the public. I have heard a rumor that the public is not interested except in a few flowers to make a wedding scene like an event of joy and a few flowers to make a burial seem proper, but don't you believe it. But I do ask you to believe that the public needs educating to discriminate between roses in other ways than by colors and that the public wants and needs as much variety in the flowers it buys as in the neckties it wears or the food it eats. I have seen the Elizabeth park rose garden crowded so that it was a case of follow the crowd to get through and these people were using the note book and pencil to such an extent that they moved slowly indeed. That, gentlemen, is educating the public in the best possible manner and the results come back to us all who are growers of plants and flowers, for a discriminating flower buyer is the best possible customer and often becomes so much of a crank on the subject as to be able to give us commercial men many a lesson in roses.

Men who plant seeds and who work the soil are hopeful men. Their enthusiasm is, somewhat in keeping with the man who sets a hen and counts his chickens before they are hatched. This, I believe, is a factor in the growth of the flower industry in this country and in the world. There is a feeling of satisfaction which comes with the construction of a new house and the planting of a crop, and that feeling is general with the florists of the country. They are building, and in this year, in spite of the fact that business as a whole has been unsettled and in many branches of industry extremely dull. As a rule a greenhouse man counts his profits by counting his glass area. A little more glass than last year is the general report so far as profit and loss statements go. I believe there are less failures among greenhouse men than in any other line of business in spite of the fact that practically everything which is handled is of a perishable nature and what does that prove? First, that they are honest, for honesty is of the soil and they are toilers who live from the products of the soil, and second, that they are hopeful and not easily discouraged, and last and more than all, that the public wants and is willing to buy what has been produced by the sweat from the brows of honest men.

Rose growing and the rose business is at least sixty per cent of the total flower business of the country, which fact places roses as a matter of first importance and consideration and I might venture to say that at least two-thirds of this is the product of roses grown under glass. Now let us for a moment consider the proper conditions which give us the best roses under glass. I want to name a few conditions which I consider ideal and first of all I should place soil. A heavy turf from lowlands that have been saving up the silt and richness from the hillsides for centuries, one that has an abundance of root fibre in it and one that has not been composted so long that it has lost that fibre which gives it life. It should have a clay body, for roses delight in a clay soil, but it should be porous enough to admit water and air freely. Air in soil is essential. The largest root is the root in the ashes on which plants in pots have been standing for some time and air which encourages root action is the only plausible explanation of this fact which I have ever heard. Cow manure for roses is the best fertilizer which we know of and in many soils a bone tankage running from four to five per cent nitrogen and not necessarily high in phosphoric acid will give strength and vitality to the plants. Good stock to start with is needed and the best is none too good. Consider that roses are often kept in the houses for two or three years and the proportionate cost of good above poor is too trifling to mention.

Steam heat is essential to roses, and although I know some growers make a fair success of roses with hot water alone, I have never seen roses of the best quality produced with hot water heat exclusively. Hot water and steam in conjunction we consider ideal. If one system breaks we have the other to keep out frost. If in the cold of winter the warm water pipe lays in the house the moderate heat is beneficial but we do not want this heat in the warmer days in spring and fall when a steam pipe about the houses is needed at night, and as the steam pipes cool quickly we have no heat on during the day when it is not wanted. A circulation of air at night by means of open ventilation with a steam pipe on which sulphur has been placed is the means of keeping off mildew and black spot which in summer are so apt to affect roses. From three to five in the morning is the danger time and the air at night is just as essential as in the day, and the morning that finds the white dew settled on the foliage at daylight is the morning trouble starts. It is all due to dead, stagnant air and poor ventilation, and which, more air, a little sulphur, and a steam pipe or two, will correct.

I have stated on other occasions that a good rose house is a house which will grow roses well and this is true but there are different kinds of roses just as there are different styles of houses. I have seen good summer roses in very poor houses running north and south, but these conditions are the opposite of the ideal. My personal opinion is that an even span wide house is the best house for roses and that qualification, even span, is put in because I believe the even span house is more properly ventilated than the two-thirds span or uneven span house and so far as shade goes, any good modern built iron construction house is light enough in all parts for the proper growing conditions. Although the more light the better, provided we do not go to the extreme of laying glass the twenty-four inch way to get it.

Drainage is an important factor which is worthy of consideration. With solid beds plain land tile covered with from ten to eighteen inches of coarse graded or coal ashes makes drainage that will give satisfaction and in building benches the builder should never forget that wet lumber swells and should allow for the swelling in building and leave the cracks wide. We grow practically all our roses in solid beds but for growing young stock and certain varieties of roses we prefer the bench.

Given then, good soil—good water—steam heat or steam and hot water—good houses—good plants, the question is, how to produce the goods. A few general pointers may be helpful. Build up a plant first. Get something to work on. Don't flower the first bottom breaks and sacrifice your future for the few pennies they will bring in a glut market in hot weather. Get back to good, sound eyes and let them grow. Root system will be in proportion to top growth and build the top and you'll have the roots. Water freely, and especially is this true if your roses are grafted. Wild roses grow best in the swamps and your manetti root is a wild root. Just so long as water can get away freely you will seldom be able to overwater grafted roses and that time comes only when you are cutting a heavy crop of flowers and thus checking the root action. Don't let spiders sap the life from the foliage, as it leaves them without lungs, for the leaves are the lungs, and some time when you see a sickly bunch of spider eaten plants think of a tuberculosis camp and clean their lungs out with numerous good applications of the hose and let them get a breath again and go ahead. Don't mulch heavy, not under any circumstances. Your root system will be buried and killed for lack of air as your feeders are near the top and until they have made new feeders there can be little growth. Don't cut back into the hard wood unless there is big money in sight. Your next crop will be longer breaking from the hard wood and you are losing valuable time. And most important of all for success in growing roses for the open market is, don't grow what everyone else grows just because they are growing it.

Increased glass area means more roses grown. Suppose, for example, all the new ranges were planted with Killarney, White Killarney and Richmond. Figure out the result for yourselves. And if you have any reason to be dissatisfied with this year's returns from your crop just figure what it will be in the future with more of the same product in the market. The way to avoid glut markets is to fill the market with a variety of roses and not with the same identical thing. Give your retailer a chance to show what he can do with something beside Killarney. That seems to me to be the solution of the problem. Education of the public to be discriminating flower buyers through our parks and flower shows, local advertising by the retailer, an assortment of roses in sufficient quantity to insure a steady supply, and in all these things the retailer, wholesaler and grower must work in harmony for the good of the trade.

Keep roses in your stores twelve months of the year. My Maryland, Double White Killarney, Mrs. Aaron Ward, Mrs. Taft, Radiance, and roses of the type of Christy Miller and Princeton will make a good combination from March to December. Killarney Queen, Killarney, Double Pink Killarney, White Killarney, Richmond, Lady Hillingdon, Sunburst, in addition to those previously mentioned will increase the variety and perhaps be at the best when the former are not. I regret that this list of varieties is not longer, but every year adds some that are worth growing and there is money in any when properly grown and properly handled.

The question of roses is broad and it takes in pot roses, which subject is a study in itself and on which I wish to speak but briefly. Baby Ramblers, Mrs. Cutbush, Dorothy Perkins, Flower of Fairfield, Tausendschon and others make a most interesting display and medium sized, well grown plants are as a rule very salable. The work of M. H. Walsh of Woods Hole, Mass., in bringing climbing roses into the high place they now hold was well worthy of the American Rose Society's gold medal. He is one of the men we honor, and you have in Baltimore one that deserves and is given the admiration and respect of all who know roses. You men of Baltimore are deservedly proud of John Cook and I feel grateful to your club to think that I have been honored by an invitation to speak on the subject of roses before a club of which he is a member.

Cause of Iron Gutters Bursting.

Paper read by H. S. Garland before the Tri-City Florists' Club, Davenport, Ia., April 11, 1912.

A recent issue of a horticultural paper in reporting the meeting of this society gave the topics which had been discussed, among which was "The Cause of the Bursting of Iron Gutters." Grasping the opportunity I immediately requested that I be granted the privilege of discussing the subject with you and to also make several demonstrations to prove what I have wished to say. Through the kindness of your secretary my petition was granted.

It gives me great pleasure therefore to be with you and meet here to discuss with you things which are to our mutual benefit. I heartily believe that the florist and the supply man should get together on a common plane and work out things which will benefit both. Before I begin in detail to enumerate to you step by step the points to be brought out in our discussion tonight, I wish to say that I have brought with me two Garland gutters, with which I will make my demonstrations. I know that the most of the florists have the "Show me" nature or the one complimentary thereto, "I am from Missouri." Therefore, I dared not come to you empty handed. One of these gutters is like the ones which many of you now have. The other is known as a semi-malleable gutter. All Garland gutters are now being put through a special process.

Now let us start from the bottom up. The first thing to be considered is the quality of the iron of which cast iron gutters should be made. Our twenty years' experience in the manufacture of iron gutters, for twelve years of which we maintained our own foundry, has taught us the kind of iron to use. You may know that there are four important component parts of iron: silicon, manganese, phosphorus and sulphur. Their respective amounts in percentage can only be determined by analysis. Each car of iron carries its analysis, by which we must be guided in mixing our iron. In order that you may understand why we must pay strict attention to the mixing of our iron, I will tell you what each component part represents in the quality of the iron. First, the silicon in iron acts as a softener when not used in too large quantities. Manganese adds strength and toughness when not used in excess. Phosphorus gives the iron fluidity in the molten state but, on the other hand, makes a weak iron. Sulphur, of which we use but very little, makes iron hard. You may ask why we do not eliminate the sulphur entirely. I must reply that there could be no iron without this component part. All these qualities must be thoroughly taken into consideration and the percentage for mixing must be calculated. Our formulas for mixing have also been practically arrived at by test analysis of the iron often made into castings.

Different kinds of castings require iron of different mixtures. Stove plate castings being very light and smooth require iron high in silicon and phosphorus. The silicon is needed to make an iron of close texture, while in order that the iron flow in so thin a casting it requires large amounts of phosphorus. Now if the percentage of silicon and phosphorus is high the percentage of the other two component parts which have their important function must be low. An ordinary machine casting being heavy, the components required would be manganese for strength and silicon for softness and closeness of texture. The percentage of these two component parts being high gives an iron which does not run readily on the account of the lack of phosphorus. Neither of the mixtures mentioned are adapted to cast iron gutters. Inasmuch as the iron of different qualities does not shrink alike we are under the necessity of adhering to one analysis. Gutters are made in specific lengths and must not vary. Variation in shrinkage is controlled by the use of small quantities of scrap iron. I have heard people say "O, they use scrap iron in their gutter." It may be true in certain makes of gutter, but when I tell you that it costs us more for scrap iron per ton delivered you will conclude that we use as little as possible. It is not a paying proposition to use all scrap. I have brought before you the first important factor in the manufacture of iron gutters.

Now let us proceed another step. When moulding a gutter the upper side is laid down. The iron is poured into the moulds through openings termed gates which are situated along the center line of the gutter, each gate being set crosswise of the gutter. It is impossible to make these gates large enough to reach across the entire width of the gutter. The iron must then pass through the mould until it forms the drip conductor on the outermost edge of the gutter. It stands to reason then that the iron on the outside edge of the gutter cools quicker and will be entirely contracted while the center still remains red. Thus the iron in the center is not allowed to contract and puts into the casting a strain which is hard to estimate. The strain in some gutters has been enough to break them before erection. You will note that the greatest amount of breakage is in cold weather. This is due to the fact that the drip conductor which you will remember cooled first in the moulds is within the greenhouse subject to heat, and has a tendency to expand, while the portion of the gutter exposed to the weather being subject to a lower temperature tends to either remain constant or to contract. Thus the two portions of the gutter acting in opposition is the cause of its breaking.

Only experience and experiments along the line of eliminating the strain in the gutter has given us necessary information to make a gutter that would not break and be more durable. The strain which we have been talking about is eliminated by putting the gutter through an annealing process. The gutter is brought to an even red heat, then taken from the furnace and laid upon a table for the purpose of cooling and straightening. Thus in cooling all shrinkage is equally distributed throughout the casting. From the cooling and straightening table the gutter is put in stock to await an order, when it is drilled or marked as the case may be. We found that a great deal of breakage happened in transit, but we have taken extra precautions in loading the gutters into cars, and we guarantee safe delivery of our material in good order.

I trust, gentlemen, that my demonstrations with the gutters will bear me out in all that I have had the pleasure of telling you. If any one has a question which he would like to ask further I shall be pleased to answer same if in my power to do so.

(The sample gutters were broken at the close of the meeting and proved that the theory of the demonstrator was nearly correct.)

Diseased Geraniums.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

I forward you leaves of geraniums and vincas that are diseased. They grew nicely until a few weeks ago when the disease first attacked them, but it is spreading very fast. It appears mostly on those that were reported in January. Can you inform me what it is and advise a remedy?

Illinois. E. M.

From an examination of leaves only it is impossible to determine the cause of the trouble. The presence of a parasitic organism cannot be determined upon either lot of material, and it must be that the plants are suffering from some unfavorable cultural conditions. G.

[If "E. M." will refer to the answer to "J. Y." in THE AMERICAN FLORIST, issue of April 13, page 697, he may possibly find the cause of the discoloring of the foliage of his geraniums.—Ed.]

Asters Troubled With Bugs.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

Last year we were greatly troubled with the black aster bug. Is there any remedy that can be applied to keep them away or exterminate them? O. S.

The only remedy we know of is, to poison them with Paris green or arsenate of lead. The former at the rate of one pound to 100 gallons of water, and the latter four pounds to 100 gallons. This should be applied at the first indication of their presence. It is often necessary to repeat the operation in a few days if they have not been entirely exterminated. They are more abundant some years than others, so we conclude climatic conditions somewhat govern their existence. ELMER D. SMITH.

A Freak Tulip.

The tulip which we illustrate was a freak bearing four flowers which bloomed in a lot grown by F. P. Dilger, Milwaukee, Wis., and is very interesting. The flowers were scarlet in color and the plant was very showy, and Mr. Dilger states that he has never seen or heard of a similar circumstance.

THE EASTER TRADE

Good Reports Still Come.

That the Easter trade this year exceeded that of any previous year is the almost unanimous testimony of the several correspondents in addition to those who reported last week who have kindly informed us of the conditions in their several sections. A very satisfactory report is that the stock was of such fine quality, many commenting upon this, the complaints of poor being almost entirely absent. This is certainly a very gratifying feature at a time when the demand is so large for there is no better advertisement for any business than the forwarding of satisfactory goods to the purchaser and in but few cases are advances in the prices noted. These two features cannot but greatly assist the trade to hold the important place it has assumed in the different communities.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Business was very good all around and the weather was perfect for the Easter trade, reports Matthew McNair. Carnations and roses of all colors were available, but prices advanced, and there was a persistent effort to maintain an artificial higher price on roses at wholesale. Violets were scarce and of only fair quality, but they had a large call. Sweet peas were grand and sold second to violets, closely followed by lily of the valley. Cut tulips and bulb stock was, as usual, only in fair demand. Plants sold well, azaleas being the leaders in the higher priced stock, and fine Dutch hyacinths in pots had the call. There was an immense quantity of bulbous stock in pots sold by other stores than florists at up-hill and down-dale prices, and the grower is to blame for not knowing his business in more ways than one.

FREDERICTON, N. B.—Easter this year was the most satisfactory that we ever had, writes John Bebbington & Son, and the business was larger by 75 per cent. Easter is the time that the people want to buy and that is the time the florist wants to sell. We had a fine stock of both plants and flowers and beside our own product bought flowers in Ontario and Boston, and we were able to fully supply our trade, shipping to most of the provincial towns. Lilies and bulbous plants were all sold, but spiræas were slow. Roses, carnations, violets, lily of the valley, and lilies for the churches were all in good demand. The weather was not of the best up to Sunday, but that day was beautiful and we were kept busy all day long, and besides we were called upon to arrange a number of funeral designs. The business outlook is very bright.

LEXINGTON, KY.—The weather during Easter was ideal, being just the kind that causes the public to desire flowers and purchase them, and the business was without doubt the best that the florists of this section ever had, the increase over last year, from general reports, being about 20 per cent, writes John A. Keller. There were plenty of pot lilies and hydrangeas, but roses and bulbous stock were somewhat short of the demand. There was no call for palms, but lilies, azaleas, roses, spiræas and bulbous plants sold equally well. The stock of cut flowers was plentiful with the exception of roses and violets, which were scarce. Prices on all stock were about the same as last year and all cut flowers sold well, especially roses, sweet peas, lily of the valley and violets.

WHEELING, W. VA.—"The weather was ideal," writes George F. Smith, "and the people had the money. Billy Sunday, the evangelist, had cleaned up the town and the converts took delight in filling the churches with flowers. Whether this was the cause of the large sale of plants and flowers or not it is difficult to say, but the trade was at least 50 per cent more than that of any previous year, and we suppose we will have to give him credit." Everything in both plants and cut flowers was in demand and every plant in bloom was salable and more could have been sold. The supply of cut flowers was large and with the exception of narcissus equal to the demand. Prices were at least 10 per cent better than those of the previous year.

NEW YORK.—The weather conditions were much in favor of the large business transacted, which was at least 20 per cent greater than last year, it being all that could be desired and one of the best Easters the market has ever seen. There was a plentiful supply of both plants and flowers and prices were no better than the previous year. All the plants sold well with the exception of some large plants with the retail stores. Lilies, lily of the valley, dark colored orchids and roses and colored carnations of best quality were all in good demand. White roses and carnations, stocks, light colored orchids and adiantum were the least salable. The flowers that were left in the wholesaler's hands were the white ones and those of poorer quality.—Y.

MISSOULA, MONT.—This was our first year here, but we sold out clean of Easter stock, writes the R. & S. Flower Store. The flower buyers of the west are the kind that do not mind paying a good price if they get what they want, and the trade in the three establishments was very good at Easter, our new store being rushed with orders. There was an adequate supply of plants and flowers, with the exception of good roses, which were scarce, and the plants of Baby Ramblers sold out early. In pot plants, narcissus, tulips, lily of the valley, lilies and spiræas were the best sellers, and in cut flowers, carnations, roses and violets, but violets were exceedingly scarce.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—The Easter business was about the same as last year, says W. A. Chalfant, with prices about as usual. The stock of lilies was plentiful enough to meet the call, but there were not enough tulips and hyacinths. There was also an abundant supply of cut flowers with the exception of violets. Everything in the blooming plants that was in good condition sold well. Carnations were perhaps the best selling cut flowers, with lilies and roses about equal. The Chalfant Conservatory has opened a downtown store in the Colonial hotel building under the management of F. W. Rauch. The opening was a great success, hundreds of visitors calling that day.

PETERSBURG, PA.—The Easter business was very much better than last year, the increase being at least 25 per cent, reports Wm. S. Young. There were more florists in the business here and more flowers on the market, and this seemed to create a larger demand. Prices averaged a little better and there was a good supply of plants but there were not enough cut flowers to fill the requests. Azaleas were the best selling plants and the least call was for hyacinths and lilies. The demand was largest for violets, sweet peas and lily of the valley in cut flowers, while for roses it was the least.

BOSTON, MASS.—The weather was very favorable, which alone considerably aided the sale of the stock and the business was larger than last year by 10 to 15 per cent. Prices were better on almost all stock and the supply of cut flowers was plentiful enough to meet the demand. Pink roses, American Beauties, lily of the valley, orchids and yellow marguerites all had a good sale, but it was difficult to dispose of all second class stock. Lilies and azaleas were the plants most in demand, the others selling slowly. The lilies were many of them short and poor, the plants being miserable imitations of lilies of some years.—MAC.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—The trade was no larger this year at Easter, writes Tipton & Hurst, for the rain poured all day Saturday, which no doubt damaged the cut flower trade at least 50 per cent. The supply of plants was equal to the demand and there was a surplus of cut flowers. Lilies were the best selling plants with made up plant baskets and spiræas next. In cut flowers roses sold the best with carnations next. The lilies that were shipped in were very poor and must have been in cold storage for two weeks. Some carnations were good and some were asleep when the box was opened.

ABERDEEN, S. D.—The city trade was larger than last year and the cash sales considerably more than ever before, states Richard Strohmeier, the business being greater by about 20 per cent. We had beautiful, warm weather every day, which made the delivery much easier. There was a good supply of plants and flowers which was about equal to the call, prices being about the same. The plants of lilies, roses, hydrangeas and azaleas sold in about that order and the larger plants were most in demand. Everything in cut flowers sold well.

STOUCES CITY, IA.—All the stock was better this year than it was last, states Rocklin & Lehman, the lilies being especially fine, and the increase in the Easter trade was 25 per cent over that of last year. The prices were far better and the supply of both plants and cut flowers was equal to the demand. Lilies and hyacinths were the plants most called for azaleas being the least salable. Carnations and roses were the most and orchids, lily of the valley and bulbous flowers the least in demand in cut flowers.

FALL RIVER, MASS.—The Easter trade this year was grand and was about 35 per cent greater than last year, is the report of Chatterton Warburton. The demand for flowering plants grows larger every year and we had a good supply, the only shortage being lilies, but we sold every plant, bulbous stock being in good demand. All the cut flowers were also sold. There was a large call for violets, but the supply of everything else was equal to the demand. Prices were about the same as last year.

CINCINNATI, O.—The total sales were greater this year than the previous Easter, but the percentage cannot be told as yet. The supply of plants was adequate and that of cut flowers more than enough of some kinds. The prices at retail were a little better, but at wholesale about the same. Lilies, spiræas, azaleas and hydrangeas were the plants in greatest demand, and bulbous stock sold the best in cut flowers, while carnations were least in demand.—H.

DALLAS, TEX.—“Our total sales were about 50 per cent more than last season,” writes the Texas Seed & Floral Co., “and the prices were good.” The only pot plants that we handled were hydrangeas and lilies and we were completely sold out of the latter at 5 o'clock p. m. Saturday, having sold at retail 2,000 pots in two days at 25 cents per bloom. We had a large supply of cut flowers which were all sold.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.—Greater by 15 per cent is the report of S. W. Coggan on the Easter trade. There was an abundant supply and prices were about the same as last year. Everything in plants was sold and carnations, violets and roses were in good demand, spring flowers not having so good a call. This city has a population of 30,000 and there are five other florists, but we disposed of 2,000 potted plants.

ATCHISON, KANS.—The Groves Greenhouses report an increased sale at Easter over the year previous, it being about 10 per cent larger. The supply of both plants and cut flowers was equal to the demand, with prices about the same. Lilies, marguerites and begonias were the plants and roses and carnations the cut flowers most in demand, and there was little call for snapdragon.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—The Easter trade was about the same as last year, with prices averaging a little better, says A. Washburn & Sons, and there was a plentiful supply to meet the demand. Lilies were the leaders in plants and roses and carnations in cut flowers, bulb stock being the least in demand. Owing to the unusually late spring, trade in seeds and shrubbery is behind a year ago.

TOPEKA, KANS.—Ideal weather with plenty of plants which all sold well and also plenty of flowers, resulted in a fine Easter trade, which will show an increase of 25 per cent, reports J. M. Kessler, and prices were about the same. We fortunately had a large crop of carnations, and with a large amount of funeral work the day after Easter we did everything we had.

NORWALK, CONN.—The Easter trade was somewhat better than last year, states R. G. Hanaford. Prices were about as usual, some cut flowers being somewhat lower. The supply of both plants and cut flowers was adequate to meet the demand. Azaleas were the best selling plants, and in cut flowers there was a great demand for jonquils and daffodils.

S. BERKELEY, CALIF.—The Kensington Florist reports a 10 per cent increase in the Easter trade over the previous year. Prices were not quite so good and there was a surplus of both plants and flowers. Flowering plants and spring flowers were the best sellers, while callas, lilies, carnations and ferns were the least salable.

OGDEN, UTAH.—The Easter trade was much larger than last year, says F. J. Hendershot & Son, with prices about the same and a plentiful supply of plants and flowers. In pot plants lilies were the most in demand with callas the least, while callas and lilies were the leaders in cut flowers and roses the poorest sellers.

POMONA, CALIF.—The sales at Easter this year, says O. Roessner, were about 15 per cent larger than in 1911. Prices were about the same and the supply of plants and flowers was equal to the demand. Flowering plants and ferns were the most in demand and carnations were the most popular cut flowers.

BAR HARBOR, ME.—The sales were about double what they were at Easter last year, states the Mt. Desert Nurseries. Prices were the same and there was a plentiful supply of cut flowers and plants. Lilies and small ferns in plants and carnations in cut flowers were most in demand.

ENID, OKLA.—The business at Easter will show a decrease of about 25 per cent, writes J. R. Detwiler. Prices were a little better and there was a plentiful supply to meet the demand. The cut flowers generally called for were roses and carnations.

GREELEY, COLO.—The Gardner Floral Co. report an increase of 35 per cent in the Easter trade of this year over the year previous. Prices were the same as last year and the supply of plants and cut flowers was plentiful enough to meet the demand.

NEW YORK.—Charles J. Wright of Ottawa, Ont., Can., was married in this city to Miss E. Louise Wright of the same city, while on an excursion to spend the Easter holidays.

MOTHERS' DAY is the second Sunday in May.

THAT evergreen seedling decision, to which attention was called in our last issue, page 702, is given in full elsewhere in this issue.

THERE are many vacancies in the shrubbery and perennial plantations, due to the hard winter, and this is the right time to note the plants not reliably hardy.

THE protest entered by H. Bayersdorfer & Co. of Philadelphia in regard to the assessment of duty on willow baskets has been sustained by the board of general appraisers.

WHEN the spring opens late, it often becomes warm with a rush and shrubbery leaves out quickly, granting but a short time for transplanting. Every preparation possible should be taken to rush the work as soon as the frost is out of the ground.

TRADE EXHIBITION AT CHICAGO.

Wertheimer Bros., New York importers of ribbons, have reserved 250 square feet of space and Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, have taken 300 square feet.

The ground plan, diagram and rules governing the trade exhibition will be sent out at an early date. Many inquiries have been received at this office regarding space which show the great interest that is being taken in the Chicago convention, which undoubtedly will be a record breaker.

THE ROSE TEST GARDEN.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society and representative growers held a meeting in New York specially called to confer with the representatives of the department of parks of the city of Hartford, Conn., relative to the establishment of a test rose garden. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved: That the offer of the Department of Parks of the City of Hartford, Conn., to establish a rose garden for testing new roses as the official testing ground of the American Rose Society be accepted.

Alex. Cumming, head gardener, stated that the department of parks proposes to take land and make a garden, to place roses of all varieties therein for development. Any and all roses sent to the garden will be guarded with the best of care.

The following rules were discussed and adopted:

1. Roses sent for testing should have five plants of each variety of the bedding types; two plants each of the climbing and pillar types.

2. Plants can be shipped dormant or growing in pots.

3. Two-year-old plants are most desirable.

4. A record for filing should accompany each variety stating name or number of variety, classification, parentage, age of plant, and whether worked on stock or on own roots.

5. Test varieties will remain in the garden for a period covering two growing seasons, when they can be judged the second season if necessary. The after disposal of the plants will be optional between the exhibitor and the authorities, the exhibits returned or given a permanent place in the garden as far as possible.

6. Each variety will be labeled by number until judged, when a painted label stating name or number of variety, the introducer, and award will be posted permanently.

7. Exhibits will be inspected by judges appointed by the American Rose Society at a designated time, and awards will be officially given according to merit. The park authorities will take due precaution to protect exhibits from vandalism and dissemination, and give the garden every cultural attention possible.

8. A new rose shall be considered one which has not been disseminated for a longer period than three years.

The official scale of points for judging out door roses is as follows:

Floriferousness	20
Vigor	20
Color	15
Size	15
Form	10
Substance	10
Fragrance	10
.....	— 100

MEDALS AND CERTIFICATES.

Gold medal for the best new rose not yet disseminated, whether of domestic or foreign origin. Exhibits to be judged by the official scale of the American Rose Society, and no gold medal to be awarded to any rose scoring less than 95 points.

Silver medal is offered at the same time and under the same conditions for a novelty scoring not less than 85 points.

A certificate of merit is awarded to all novelties scoring 80 points.

It is further ordered that the complete scores of all the entries in the competition be filed with the secretary of the American Rose Society before the award of any medal is confirmed.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society reserves to itself the right of selection of the judges who shall pass upon the exhibits in the competition for these medals.

Burbank Sells Rights to Creations

Luther Burbank, the wizard of horticulture, is reported to have sold all his fruit, flower and plant creations, present and future, to Rollo Hough of Oakland and W. Garner Smith of San Francisco. No statement of the sum that changed hands was made. Hough and Smith are understood to have the backing of capitalists whose names are withheld.

Hereafter Burbank will have nothing to do with the marketing of his products, but will be free to devote his entire time to experimental work. He wishes to leave commercial life altogether for science.

STOCK IN GREAT ABUNDANCE.

The usual conditions following a great floral holiday are manifest in all branches of the trade. The retail houses fully understand that their customers all have had a surfeit of flowers, and that the buying is going to be small for a few days and, consequently, are not buying heavily knowing from past experience that they can procure anything they desire from an overstocked market. The plants, however, keep producing and the result is that there is a great abundance of stock of all kinds coming into the market with no great demand, consequently prices have lowered quite a little and there are a few buyers who are trying to emulate the bears of the stock market and force the prices lower that they may be able to offer bargains in everything. There is a great supply of almost everything in the flower line. American Beauties of good quality, orchids and greens of all kinds are not in oversupply, and while they cannot be said to be scarce yet the demand is equal to the receipts, and smilax and good green material is at times difficult to obtain in large supply, and southern smilax is reported to be in short supply and good property. Roses are very plentiful and the daily receipts are very large and of excellent quality, and the buyers who can handle a large quantity can obtain them at bottom prices. Carnations are also very plentiful but some of the growers say that they are not cutting so heavily as is often the case at this time of the year. The best blooms are selling very well and at fair prices, but the flowers that are not of top-notch grade are sold very cheap and low prices are placarded in some store windows. Sweet peas are in bountiful supply and were featured in great numbers in some of the store windows at very low values. There are quantities of narcissus, the southern grown arriving in large quantities and are sold very low, but the receipts of tulips and hyacinths are very much smaller. Spanish iris is seen in quantities and they are made a feature by some of the retailers. Callas and lilies are to be had in quantity, large numbers being displayed, but the call for these during the last week has not been large. Freesia is about done and there is very little left on the market. Violets also are received only in much smaller shipments and in some cases are beginning to show the effects of the warm weather. Antirrhinums of excellent quality are shown in large vases, the white and pink being displayed in quantity. Pansies for corsages are freely offered and many of the ladies are wearing them. Mignonette, marguerites, stocks and calendulas are some of the smaller flowers seen in the store windows and on the counters of the wholesale stores. The first trailing arbutus of the season was offered this week. One of the wholesalers is bemoaning the loss of the street fakirs in the city for he thinks that these much-berated street salesmen are a benefit when the market is overstocked. The market will probably at the end of the week assume a firmer tone, states a prominent grower, for replanting is commencing and as it progresses the supply will begin to shorten up and as the usual spring demand again returns it will be found that the receipts will not be any larger than the requests.

NOTES.

George Sykes, Lord & Burnham Co.'s western manager, says "Orders are lively this way," and some of the liveliness is material for two pipe frame greenhouses for Fred Keppler, Springfield, O.; material and erection of two sectional iron frame curved-eave greenhouses, vegetable and violet pits for D. M. Cummings, Lake Forest; four sectional iron frame greenhouses for F. C. Van Dusen, Minnetonka, Minn.; range of sectional iron frame greenhouses, including palm house, for the Northern Hospital for the Insane, Logansport, Ind., and material and erection of iron frame greenhouse 48 x 133 feet for W. A. Harkett, Dubuque, Ia.

The Central Trust Company of Illinois pursuant to an order of the court, solicits bids for the assets of the American Metal Box Co., which will be received until April 23, consisting of a large stock of self-watering flower boxes and machinery and materials for the manufacture of these, chandeliers and electroliers, a full description of which may be obtained from the company.

Frank Johnson, the hustling sales manager for the A. L. Randall Co., started out on another business trip on April 15. Mr. Johnson did not leave any address but when he was last seen he was headed toward the sunny south.

Peter Reinberg is cutting a large supply of American Beauty roses and Tim Matchen, the efficient store manager, is now offering his customers something choice in the long, medium and shorter grades.

R. A. Smythe, the well known florist and fruit grower of Benton Harbor, Mich., was a welcome visitor here this week.

Miss H. V. Tonner has recovered from her recent illness and is again attending to her duties at the store.

Julius Kline is the latest addition to Wieter Bros.' force, having entered upon his duties Monday, April 15.

Miss M. C. Gunterberg is still receiving a good supply of fancy orange blossoms.

Wietor Bros. are having a good call for their Mrs. Jardine roses and the leading retailers everywhere are using them quite extensively in high-class and expensive floral work. The cut of stock in general is large, and fancy American Beauty roses is but one of the many offerings at this house.

John Krutchen is receiving a large supply of gardenias and is now prepared to fill orders for these popular flowers in dozen or 100 lots. Roses and carnations are also arriving in large quantities and Mr. Krutchen is inclined to think that he has an option on quantity.

Fred Liebermann, the Wells street florist, is getting his arm in shape and is doing a little pitching with the expectations of leading his nine to many victories this summer. No doubt the retailers will soon be challenging the wholesalers to cross bats again in the very near future.

Dwight L. Harris, of the Pulverized Manure Co., says that business is very good and that his firm is kept busy filling the many orders. The demand has been so large lately that the firm's warehouses look as if a cyclone had struck them.

John Zech received a souvenir album, containing 196 pages, from one of his New Orleans customers this week and is now devoting his spare moments in looking over the old familiar scenes of the southern metropolis.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are pleasing their customers with an exceptionally fine grade of sweet peas and Spanish iris. Max Ringer of this firm was laid up for a few days of the past week with a severe cold.

The Chicago Carnation Co.'s baseball team won its first and opening game in the Joliet city league last Sunday when it defeated the crack Odd Fellows' nine by an 8 to 7 score.

H. Van Gelder is giving his new Buick a good test and he can be seen on Sundays scurrying through the streets of this city and suburban towns on double-quick time.

The J. B. Deamud Co is still offering a fine grade of home-grown double violets and the first trailing arbutus of the season made their appearance on April 14.

Chas. H. Hudson, representing Hammond's Paint & Slug Shot Works, Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y., is calling on the trade here this week.

Nick Everts is planning on enlarging his plant this season, and the new addition will probably be two houses 32x150 feet.

A meeting of the Cook County Florists' Association will be held at the Union Restaurant (tonight) Thursday, April 18.

W. W. Fuller says that business was very good the past year and that last week was the first dull week he has had.

Chas. Bond of Naperville has placed an order with Kroeschell Bros. Co. for a No. 14 boiler and heating system.

Everybody's doing it! What? Attending the baseball games and reading THE AMERICAN FLORIST.

In again and out again. Clifford Pruner, E. H. Hunt's traveling salesman.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is receiving large quantities of exceptionally fine stock in their daily shipments. The novelties in roses are now coming in much more plentiful and some elegant blooms of Melody, Prince de Bulgarie or Mrs. Taft, Double Pink Killarney, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Dark Pink Killarney are in the daily receipts, and the older roses are in large supply and of superb quality. Poeticus narcissus and fine large pansies are among the novelties at this store. Henry Weiss is now one of the force at this establishment.

H. S. Garland returned on April 12 from Davenport, Ia., where he read a paper, "Why Cast Iron Gutters Break and How We Have Eliminated This Trouble," before the Tri-City Florists' Club the previous evening. Mr. Garland's company has many customers down there, and it is needless to add that he was given a royal welcome. B. J. Maynard and P. Rosenberg of the Geo. M. Garland Co. started out on their first trip of the year this week.

Chas W. McKellar expects to be located in his new store at 20 E. Randolph street about May 1 and says that he would greatly appreciate it if his customers would send their mail to that address on and after that date. Mr. McKellar's business has increased so rapidly that he was obliged to seek larger quarters and he feels that the new store will be plenty large enough for some time to come.

J. A. Budlong is particularly strong on lily of the valley, and Phil Schupp is now supplying his many customers with his famous Blue Ribbon brand. Frank Paznkiet is the latest addition to the store force, having entered upon his duties Monday, April 15. Fred Price of this firm is very popular and hardly a day goes by but what he receives a call from some charming young lady.

John Huebner's crack five, consisting of himself, Wm. Graff, Wm. Wolff, Fred Krauss and A. B. Marks, will bowl in the state tournament now being held at Bensinger's alleys. Ernest Farley will bowl with the Madisons No. 2, and like the members of the other five, says that he expects to win some of that $9,000 prize money.

J. F. Kidwell, president of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, says that the demand for greens has been very good and that Spanish iris is also moving well. The stockholders of this association held a meeting last night, April 18, and much important business was transacted.

Kroeschell Bros. Co., reports receiving many orders for their threaded tube piping system and Fred Lautenschlager says that the Painesville Garden & Greenhouse Co.'s order alone calls for 10,600 feet. William Kroeschell made a business trip to New York recently.

W. H. Pontius of the Superior Machine & Boiler Works returned last week from a most enjoyable business trip to Milwaukee. He says the outlook for a fine boiler business is bright and that his firm expects to sell a good many Superior boilers this season.

The Otto Wittbold Nursery shipped out two carloads of nursery stock the past week and the new concern is certainly making things move right at the start. Mr. Wittbold and his men are now busy with the outside work and everything points to a busy season.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. is planning on growing roses at their Edgebrook establishment and three houses will be devoted to growing of Killarney and White Killarney roses. Robert Hand, formerly with Poehlmann Bros. Co., will have charge of the rose section.

H. N. Bruns is using Moninger material in the new greenhouse, 35x125 feet, that he is now building on his lot east of his store. As soon as it is completed he will leave for Germany to visit his folks and attend to some business matters.

Bassett & Washburn had a very good shipping business on April 15, when the store looked more like its former self and reminded us of a holiday. This firm is still cutting heavily in lilies and many choice blooms are being sold daily.

Weiland & Risch have propagated a large number of Mrs. Taft rose plants and will grow this rose more heavily in the future. They have a large surplus of these plants and are now closing them out at reasonable prices.

The Des Plaines Floral Co. filed a large number of orders for rooted carnation cuttings the past season but still has a surplus to offer. This firm cut 13,000 blooms during Easter week from their 26,000 feet of glass.

Hoerber Bros. are in full crop with roses and carnations and the firm is busy trying to find an outlet for the large supply that is now being received.

Sol. Garland has a new dark pink carnation seedling, which he calls No. 2, that looks very promising and which he may disseminate this year.

A. Vanderpoel of the Douglas Boulevard Floral Co. says that he had a fine Easter trade and that it was much better than he expected.

Jack Byers, the Chicago Carnation Co.'s obliging young salesman, was on the sick list this week.

Art Blome, with Paul Blome & Co., is serving on the jury this week.

John Fuhrmann has just recovered from an attack of bronchitis.

A canopy of asparagus, bride's bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley, bride's muff decorated with Roman hyacinths, bridesmaid's bouquet of Killarney roses and flower girls' basket of Melody roses were beautifully arranged and appropriately tied with bows and ribbons. Among those admiring the flowers were noted many young ladies of marriageable age and they appeared very much interested.

Chicago Florists' Club.

An adjourned meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club was held at the Union Restaurant April 11, President Foley in the chair. There was a large attendance and considerable discussion of convention matters, and Geo. Asmus was elected trustee to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of E. C. Amling. R. Papineau, Jr., was proposed for membership.

W. D. Desmond, of the L. S. Donaldson Co., Minneapolis, Minn., was a visitor and told of Easter trade conditions in the Twin cities and the flower show to be held in St. Paul next fall for which preparations are now going forward. Mr. Desmond incidentally remarked that his section would be well represented at the coming convention, especially in the bowling contests.

Chairman Guy French of the Good of the Club committee announced that an address on "Concrete Construction in Greenhouses," with stereopticon views, would be given by S. A. Jamieson, of Universal Portland Cement Co., at the next meeting, May 2, when it is hoped there will be a large attendance of those interested in greenhouse building problems, as Mr. Jamieson is working hard to make his address an interesting and beneficial feature of the meeting.

President Foley then introduced August Koch, formerly of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, and recently appointed head gardener of the Chicago West side park system. Mr. Koch was given a cordial reception and spoke very favorably of the Chicago parks, outlining some of the work he has in view in his new position.

Fred Lautenschlager, with the Kroeschell Bros. Co., who recently made an extended business tour in the east, said that, judging from the comments heard on his trip, the attendance at the annual convention of the Society of American Florists, to be held in Chicago next August, will break all records.

Davenport, Ia.

The trade at Easter this year was about the same as last with perhaps an increase of about 10 per cent. There was a good supply of both plants and cut flowers and prices were about the same as last year. In cut flowers carnations took the lead and lilies of course were the leaders in plants, closely followed by spirgeas, tulips, daffodils, pelargoniums and roses. Lilies this year were exceptionally fine. Some fine azaleas were also on the market. Few violets were called for, sweet peas seemingly taking their place. The local supply of both cut flowers and plants was equal to the demand.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING.

Owing to the illness of the daughter of Harry Bills the meeting of the Tri-City Florists' Club, which was to have been held at his home, was held at the Outing Club, Davenport, and there was a good attendance. Owing to the absence of Theo. Ewoldt, president, Henry Pauli, vice president for Davenport, filled the chair. "Greenhouse Construction; Iron vs. Wooden Gutters; Cement vs. Wooden" was the evening's topic. H. S. Garland of Des Plaines, Ill., the man of the Iron Gutter fame, was a guest of the club and gave a very interesting and instructive talk along the line of iron gutters and greenhouse construction. Mr. Garland had on exhibition the new gutter which his firm is now putting out and after hearing his instructive paper there is no doubt but that every new house built by members of the club will feature Garland's gutters. Mr. Garland's talk was one of the best and most instructive ever given before the society and one every member appreciated.

After routine and banquet matters were disposed of the club adjourned into the dining room, where a fine supper was awaiting, and a very fine social time was had. The May meeting will be held at the home of Wm. Knees of South Fifteenth street, Moline.

Omaha, Neb.

The Easter business was as good as was expected and more stock was sold than in previous years. However, the prices were not as firm, being 10 to 20 per cent less than those of last year. Too much stock was the cause and lots of bulbous stock was left over as well as lilies. Roses and carnations sold very well and azaleas and made-up baskets had a good call. The weather was ideal, which greatly decreased the work in delivering the stock. Many shipping orders were lost on account of the high water, the express company refused to take any flowers for a whole week up to April 6, so no flowers could be sent west of the city.

NOTES.

The Omaha Florists' Club had a bowling night March 23, 24 men taking part, and two teams were formed, one from Council Bluffs and one from Omaha. The Council Bluffs team won two out of three games.

Very little building will be done in this vicinity this season. J. F. Wilcox & Sons of Council Bluffs will erect a range of houses for plants.

G. W. Sorenson was elected mayor of Florence by a large majority.

J. J. Hess and family will leave May 11 for Europe. GRIPPE.

KEANSBURG, N. J.—Daniel Tilton & Son are erecting a large greenhouse in which vegetable plants will be grown in the spring and carnations in the winter.

THE GREATEST GLUT OF CARNATIONS.

Trade the last week was strongly featured by perhaps the greatest glut this market ever experienced, particularly in carnations, when over 35,000 of these came into Michigan Cut Flower Exchange Saturday morning, which, added to the preceding day's accumulation, brought the number up to over 50,000 for disposal in a market normally calling for about 5,000 to 10,000 at most. Special sales at low prices by several of the retailers moved considerable of the stock, but left dissatisfaction all along the line, because of the necessarily low prices realized. Roses were plentiful, too, especially in the shorter grades, while good long-stemmed stock was short of the demand. Sweet peas are coming in from all directions in great quantities, but find a fairly good market. Violets are no longer popular, as the long days reduce the color, size and usual attractiveness. Sweet peas are superseding them for street wear, and few, if any, will be on the market after this week. Spanish iris has made its appearance, and the limited stock coming in finds ready sale. Lots of bulbous stock is still coming in, but is unnoticed by the buyers, when other items are so plentiful and of good quality.

NOTES.

The club meeting Monday evening, April 15, was fairly well attended, the chief attraction being an address by Charles Plumb on "Easter Experiences." As a grower of great quantities of flowering plants, he gave a resume of his Easter plant sale, as indicating the line of demand for future like events, and had many suggestions as to varieties and sizes of pot plants for popular demand. A discussion of the subject brought out the ideas of the retailers, which the essayist said would guide him in the future in supplying their wants. The present disastrous glut in the market called for a spirited discussion on ways and means to avert this annual recurring period of mental anguish to growers, wholesalers and retailers alike, but the solution is not yet found, and won't be as long as growers persist in enlarging their glass area sufficiently to supply completely the demand at Christmas and the two months following. A committee was appointed to secure new club quarters, as the present room will not be available after May 1 next. M. J. Burch was proposed for membership.

Albany, N. Y.

Easter, 1912, has gone into local records as an exceptionally good season. Prices ruled about the same as a year ago and in general it may be said that the retailers had little difficulty in getting all the supplies of plants and cut flowers they needed. All the dealers were cleaned out of stock by noon of Easter and about all that remained were large sizes of special plants and a few varieties that did not take. Some dealers reported that they had an extraordinary call for small plants and could have sold many more had they been able to procure them quickly. The plants that sold the least readily were hydrangeas, the demand for which in this market has become very low at Easter, rhododendrons and azaleas of large size. The cut flowers for which there was the least demand were carnations and many varieties of roses. The demand was strongest for violets, violet sweet peas, lily of the valley, gardenias, orchids, daffodils, and some of the better known bulbous stock. A more than usual demand for corsages was noticed and the large numbers worn on the streets were ample proof of the extraordinary demand which in a measure surprised the trade. Fancy baskets of combination plants to sell from $3 to $7 each were in good demand and proved to be one of the best drawing cards the retailer could have. The total sales were ahead of last year but an estimate of the percentage is difficult because very few of the dealers have finished posting their accounts for the week preceding Easter. There is no doubt, however, that Easter trade here is growing steadily from year to year and the florists are finding it quite a problem in the conduct of their business to devise a store system that will work effectively during the rush season.

NOTES.

At the regular meeting of the Florists' Club on the evening of April 11 at the establishment of Louie Marx, 1054 Madison avenue, Walter S. Martin, Troy, and Morris Cohen, New York, were elected members. Frederick Goldring started a discussion on the subject of the state's awarding compensation to growers whose stock is seized and destroyed by inspectors of the department of agriculture in the course of their duties. Such compensation is granted in this state to farmers whose cattle are condemned for tuberculosis. Mention was made also of the Simmons bill before congress which makes it necessary for the importer to secure a permit from the Department of Agriculture before importing stock from abroad. The secretary was instructed to write the state and national bodies for their views on these matters. Following the business session and discussions, refreshments were served and a pleasant social time brought the meeting to a close. President F. A. Danker announced that at future meetings he will endeavor to have specialists deliver short addresses on various topics of trade interest. It is probable that at the May meeting the speaker will be Prof. E. P. Felt, state entomologist, who will be asked to describe some of the insect pests that trouble the growers and the best means to combat them.

A prize of $5 has been offered by the board of directors of the Albany Chamber of Commerce for the best garden in connection with any mercantile or manufacturing establishment in the city. The offer is one of the results of the efforts of the Woman's club of the city to stimulate the beautifying of yards, lawns, and vacant spaces throughout the city. The club has a special list of prizes for all classes and different sections of the city.

The Greene Floral Co. did a splendid business Easter week, disposing of 25,000 Easter lilies and thousands of roses, carnations, Dutch hyacinths, snapdragons, Paper White narcissus, freesias, and lily of the valley, the larger part being shipped to florists in Texas as far as El Paso, Missouri, Oklahoma and Arkansas. The greenhouses are in excellent shape and they will commence cutting Spanish iris outside this week. Their new quarters are very handy, being situated within reach of all the local florists.

Fair weather, fair prices, good stock and good business briefly is the history of the Easter just passed. Crowding the business into about three days made interesting times for the florist, and caused considerable night work. The volume of trade was some better than last year, which had excelled all previous records. The supply in most lines was ample and the result was moderate prices and a consequent absence of protest against high prices by the customer. Plants sold well. Lilies had first call, with bulb stock and other flowering plants in good demand. Rambler roses in the various colors were good property. Cut flowers were of excellent quality and ample quantity. Roses and carnations led, with American Beauties and lilies closely following. Bulb stock was in heavy supply and met with moderate demands only. Violets were cleaned up. The weather was favorable for shopping and for the handling of stock.

NOTES.

W. H. Culp & Co. were in just right with a large crop of fine Lillium Giganteum, which found ready sale. They made a large display of made-up baskets of plants. This firm rented an extra storeroom directly across the street from their store and used it as an overflow annex. It proved a great convenience in handling the trade and as a delivery basis.

Chas. P. Mueller was heavily stocked with splendid Easter plants, showing fine ramblers, hydrangeas, spiræas, etc. His store display was very handsome and attracted much attention.

John Smith, a "Formerly of Wichita" boy, now with the Lawrence greenhouses, Lawrence, Kans., was a visitor last week.

Marquardt, representing Ralph M. Ward & Co., called upon the trade last week.

G. Kuechenmeister was in with a heavy crop of carnations and roses.

STOCK ABUNDANT.

Stock of all grades and varieties is plentiful and prices are correspondingly low. Carnations have been very abundant but the quality was fine. Roses of all grades are also in very large supply, with the exception of Mrs. Aaron Ward and American Beauty, which are about equal to the demand. Sweet peas are cleaning up nicely and stock is exceptionally good, both pink and lavender. Swainsona and Poeticus narcissus are seen. Easter lilies and callas are moving rather slowly at present and the market is well supplied. The novelties are cleaning up nicely, including stocks, mignonette, calendula, daisies, snapdragon and lupines. Pansies have been in good demand and violets have been a little slow. Greens of all kinds are plentiful. Lily of the valley has been in good demand, and the quality is as good as has been seen on the market. Orchids have been short of the call. Bulbous stock is still with us, but the demand is not large.

NOTES.

Harry Jones, of the Jones-Russell Co., has incorporated a company for the manufacture of a new brand of gum called "Mint-Lax Gum." The factory will be located in Cleveland, with branch offices in New York and Philadelphia. Mr. Jones is the largest stockholder and holds the position of secretary and treasurer. They will also manufacture other brands of gum but Mint-Lax will be the specialty.

It was a record-breaking Easter for cut flowers, every florist reporting an exceptionally good sale of roses, carnations, violets and lily of the valley. Cut lilies sold very well, as did all the novelties.

Fred Witthuhn has joined the ranks of automobile enthusiasts and his son Carl is making daily delivery trips (also joy rides), which he claims is helping business wonderfully.

Mrs. L. Brown, Lake and Detroit avenues, has been very busy with funeral work and reports an exceptionally good Easter trade, particularly in cut flowers.

Frank Brendell, who recently opened a retail store on Loraine avenue, was married on Tuesday, April 9, to Miss Lillian Ehrbar. Congratulations.

Miss Ehrbar of the Ohio Floral Co. has been ill for quite a while, and has just recently recovered sufficiently to appear at the store.

The McCallum Co. were well satisfied with their first Easter in this market and stock of all kinds was very plentiful with them.

Herman P. Knoble and J. M. Strojcek will shortly join the auto squad, each having an automobile, now being finished at the factory. C. F. B.

SWEET PEAS SUPERSEDING VIOLETS.

The market is in a very poor condition, carnations and roses are in oversupply with but little demand. Violets are about over; a few come in but the keeping qualities are poor and most of the growers have thrown them out; sweet peas are now taking their place for street wear. The weather causes the roses to open up quickly. Some fine outdoor jonquils and daffodils are coming in. Greens are in good demand.

NOTES.

The Florists' Club met Thursday, April 11, at Odd Fellows' Hall. Robert J. Windler in the chair. As usual the April meeting was very poorly attended, as this is the planting-out season and many were too busy to attend, so there were only 14 members present. E. W. Guy led the discussion of raising cut flowers in summer, followed by Frank Fillmore, W. J. Pilcher and others. At the next meeting J. F. Ammann will read an essay on "The Relations of the Grower with Retailer and Wholesaler." Dr. Halsted will reply as the grower, W. H. Smith as the wholesaler and Otto Sanders as the retailer.

The board of trustees of Shaw's Garden have decided to open the Garden every Sunday afternoon from May 1 to December 1. The annual fall chrysanthemum show will be given in the new house now being erected in place of the tent which blew down and ruined the plants last year.

Mrs. Mary Ostertag will remove from Delmar boulevard and open her store at Sarah and Chouteau avenues, which is a good location, there being no florist in that locality.

C. A. Kuehn is handling some fine lily of the valley, carnations and roses. His stock is strictly fresh and his growers with but few exceptions are all daily consignors.

Mullanphy, Florist, has made a standing offer of a very handsome bouquet to every Cardinal making a home run on the Robison field.

Grimm & Gorly had a special sale of sweet peas at five cents per bunch, and any carnation in the house for two cents.

What the growers should do with the glut and to prevent such ruinous prices is becoming very important.

The Alexander Floral Co. will build a new house 12x100 feet for growing specimen chrysanthemum blooms.

Geo. H. Angermueller is handling some exceptionally fine smilax, some strings measuring eight feet long.

VARIABLE WEATHER.

Since the great rush of Easter is over there has been a chance for florists, both growers and retailers, to think of something else. The growers are planting carnations in the field and some of the retailers have many orders for spring planting of shrubbery and other work on private estates incidental to the season. The filling of window boxes for hotels and other public buildings as well as many private houses has also been quite an item in last week's work. The great stock of hydrangeas on hand fits admirably into the window box situation. We note that some geraniums are also being used, but it is too early, even in this comparatively southern latitude, to plant out geraniums. The weather is too freakish. As an instance, on April 12 the noon temperature was 86°, on April 13 it was down nearly to 50°. On the next day it warmed up somewhat in the afternoon, but soon got cloudy.

NOTES.

Elmer Mayberry of the firm of Mayberry & Hoover and ex-president of the Florists' Club was knocked down by an automobile driven by a woman on the afternoon of April 12 and is confined to his home suffering from shock and numerous cuts and bruises. Mr. Mayberry was crossing Fourteenth street at the intersection of Rhode Island avenue, near his store, when the accident occurred. There are several florists in Washington that might have been hit by an automobile without the fact causing great surprise, but he is noted as a particularly careful man both in his daily walk and conversation. The possible solution is that women drive automobiles the way they throw stones—and hit something else.

The Daughters of the American Revolution are in session here this week and there should be considerable decorative work resulting. If the "olive branch of peace" was a commercial article it should find a ready sale among the daughters, for some of them can start a fight in less time than it takes Minority Leader Mann to get one going in the house of representatives. But unlike Mr. Mann, they weep and kiss and present the "olive branch." It is all very affecting.

The stock of plants grown and sold by the Gude Bros. Co. was simply immense and of fine quality. One of the sights of the days before Easter was one of the largest sized auto trucks transporting their plants from the Anacostia range to their F street store. Of the many good features of their stock, none were more noteworthy than their large rhododendrons. Both their wholesale and retail trade in plants and cut flowers was heavy.

Chas. Milburn, who has been with J. H. Small & Sons for the past year, has accepted a position on the estate of ex-Governor Warfield of Maryland. Mr. Milburn is a capable and companionable man and will doubtless become popular among the Baltimore florists. He is a member of the Florists' Club of Washington, and has been a regular attendant at the meetings.

There is considerable doing in the lines of decoration and funeral work. For the funeral of Clara Barton, April 14, founder of the American Red Cross Society and often spoken of as the John I. Raynor and wife of New York on their return from an extended trip to Cuba and other southern points, spent Easter here. Both are well and thoroughly enjoyed their trip. SOCIAL FUNCTIONS KEEP BUSINESS LIVELY.

The past week has been a busy one between the clearing up after the rush and caring for the numerous weddings and small dances which used up quantities of flowers, and the trade has kept moving lively. There are quantities of flowers—Easter lilies—that did not make the holiday to be had in unlimited quantities at buyer's figures. Roses are in plentiful supply of excellent quality. American Beauties are offered freely at quick-moving prices. Carnations are not in over-supply and white command good prices. Sweet peas are in demand and sell as well as anything. There is a trifle too much snapdragon and prices rule low. Violets are about done; this week will certainly see the last of them. The supply of lily of the valley is about equal to the demand again. Cattleyas are in good demand and prices hold well. Greens have taken on a new growth and are in full supply and quite equal to the demand. Southern daffodils are having their innings and the street men handle them in large quantities. The cool weather of last week was very favorable, flowers arriving in excellent condition.

NOTES.

Malcolm Franklin of this city has given a contract to the Lord & Burnham Co. for a house 72x600 feet, practically a duplicate of the new house of the Joseph Heacock Co. at Roelofs. The ventilating sash will be operated by the rack and pinion apparatus, using chain gears, and the house will be connected to the power house by a passage eight feet four inches wide by thirty feet long. This house is to be erected on a farm recently purchased by Mr. Franklin near Yards, Pa. Work is to commence at once, so that roses, which are to be the specialty, can be planted for the coming season's forcing. Mr. Franklin is an amateur with a love for flowers and is now going into the commercial end of flower growing in competition with others as a business.

The new house of the Joseph Heacock Co., 72x600, is going up with great speed, being now ready for the glass, and in a couple of weeks will likely be planted. This is certainly rapid work, as scarcely more than a month ago the order for the house was not given. Since that time the contract has been signed and the house practically completed. The Lord & Burnham Co. certainly have a great organization.

E. J. Fancourt of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. shows with pride a new line of iridescent ribbons in colors suitable to arrange with any flower. They certainly add style to any floral arrangement.

One of the features at Leo Niessen Co.'s is choice lilac—very fine stock it is—and for which Mr. Niessen says there is a constantly growing demand.

Robert Craig Co.'s pots of lily of the valley, a side line, were quick sellers. They were right in it with rambler roses in trained baskets, globes and umbrellas which sold well.

Azaleas were the feature at W. K. Harris', they supplying three-fourths of the stock that was sold in the city. Gardenias were also a feature.

J. W. Colfesh had a house of cinerarias, and another of genistas that found ready sale. Bulbous stock was also a feature.

W. J. Baker and Bernheimer both gave glowing accounts of their Easter business and were well satisfied with the results.

A GREAT OVERSUPPLY.

Business is very quiet. The warm weather has brought in the flowers at a very fast rate. The demand, however, instead of keeping up with the supply moved in the opposite direction until now the trade is very quiet. The offerings of every kind of flowers are large and the quality very good. A lot of it moves only at the greatest of sacrifice prices. Considerable surplus stock is being thrown into the market and serves only to make matters worse. Some very good belated bulb stock that missed Easter is arriving in every shipment. This consists principally of tulips. In short the supply of practically everything is large; the only exceptions are American Beauties, especially choice or first quality and lily of the valley. A few very good gladioli are included in the offerings and are picked up quickly.

NOTES.

C. E. Critchell is finding that the demand for fancy ferns is keeping up steadily in spite of the short call for cut flowers. His storage stock is coming out in fine shape.

Emmet Suttiniller of the J. M. McCullough Son's Co. has switched his allegiance from the cut flower to the seed department while the latter is in its busy season.

Lawrence Fritz of C. E. Critchell's says farewell to his bachelor days on Saturday evening of this week when he weds a Newport girl.

FEAST FOLLOWED BY FAMINE.

The holiday as usual has left its aftermath. It is a feast and then a hunger, although the appetite was not satisfied. Weddings have contributed to decrease the surplus. Carnations are not plentiful, although the price remains stationary. Roses are not quite as abundant and average good quality. So far this year there have been very few mildewed roses in the market. Violets are almost gone.

NOTES.

In the Co-Operative Market Wm. Cleary, Newton, has some excellent Jacqueminot roses grown in a cool house. These roses bring back some memories of by-gone days when they reached the $1.25 mark each.

A. S. Parker has a few violets left he also has good candytuft which is somewhat rare for this season.

REMOVAL NOTICE

WE wish to inform all our customers that owing to the large increase in our business we were compelled to secure larger quarters for our Pittsburg store and are now occupying the entire double building at 139-141 7th Street, where our facilities for handling Cut Flowers and Florists' Supplies are much improved. We always have any flower that is on the market and our prices and service is RIGHT.

PITTSBURG McCALLUM CO. CLEVELAND

We are sorry to announce the death of our friend, John Beaton, at Sandwich, N. H. It was a general breakdown following the long attack of rheumatism. For the past twenty-two years he had been in the employ of R. & J. Farquhar & So., in charge of the counter department. Of a sunny disposition, he endeared himself to more florists and private gardeners than any one in the trade in New England. Jack, as he was familiarly called by his friends, came from Aberdeen, Scotland, and was 45 years of age. His ready smile and pleasant manner will be missed at his old post.

Arthur Capers, Wellesley, has had excellent results from his two-year-old Pink Delight carnations. They were cut back hard in June and left in the same soil with a mulch added. The house grown in this manner is the best he ever had.

W. W. Tailby met with a serious accident Thursday, April 9, falling down stairs with a child in his arms. The child was unhurt, but Mr. Tailby received a broken hip and other contusions which will lay him up for some time. MAC.

Milwaukee.

A GLUT OF CARNATIONS.

The market fell off the past week with carnations a glut to the limit. Enchantress did not move very well and it seemed as though every grower was right on crop and this naturally had a tendency to overstock the market. The prices on other varieties cheapened under these conditions. Roses were also plentiful and sold at reasonable figures. The weather helped things along as it opened up the stock so that it did not have the keeping quality that it has possessed for the past months. Sweet peas and violets were plentiful and sold at reasonable figures. Smilax is very scarce in the market and it was hard to obtain at any price. There were plenty of other greens to fill all orders.

NOTES.

J. M. Fox & Son had a fine Easter trade and cleaned out their entire stock of blooming plants and flowers and have been kept busy right along with weddings and parties.

A. Currie Co. reports seed business fine, also the Easter trade, with which they say they were more than satisfied.

Mitchell Street Florists report a fine Easter trade and they cut a great many of their own carnations for both Palm and Easter Sunday.

LILIES A GLUT.

Hardly had Easter passed into history when such a lot of flowers came into the market that they filled every corner. This especially was true of roses. Of course prices dropped to a pretty low level. The demand and quality of violets and sweet peas continue very good. Lilies were a glut and brought very low figures.

A DROP IN PRICES.

The very unfavorable conditions that are seen in the wholesale cut flower market at present seem to be the general thing after a holiday. Flowers of all kinds have been over plentiful and the demand light, even the fine weather which permits the street men to get out, has made no apparent effect on the great amount of stock which is in the market. Prices have gone all to pieces and there is nothing at present in the market that does not far exceed the demand. Orchids, especially cattleyas, are being sold at the lowest prices of the season and gardenias the same. The finer grades of Killarneys, Mme. Chatenay, Radiance, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Richmond, which have been selling so well heretofore, are now being carried over from day to day. Special American Beauties and Ulrich Brunners are in over supply. The finer grades of carnations are accumulating everywhere. Bulbous stock with the possible exception of lily of the valley is being disposed of at very low prices. Sweet peas of the very best quality are in quite sufficient supply to satisfy all demands. Violets are of very poor quality and are sold at very low figures by the box just as received. Lilies are selling for about half the prices of a week ago.

NOTES.

The interesting event of the week was the celebration of the arrival of Joseph Schenck. At the offices of Traendly & Schenck an elaborate luncheon had been provided by his father, Charles Schenck, who entertained his many business friends in a most generous manner. "Johnnie" Weir was master of ceremonies, and Wm. F. Kasting was toastmaster. Interesting speeches were made by Charles Trepel, S. Masur, Henry Jaeger, Isaac Abrams, Walter F. Sheridan, C. B. Following the luncheon and entertainment Frank Traendly took the guests for an automobile ride through the parks and boulevards of the city.

S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. are making extensive alterations in their new quarters at 117 West Twenty-eighth street, and when completed will have one of the most up to date wholesale establishments in the city. Especial attention is being given the matter of counter room, so that they will now have the opportunity of displaying the fine stock they are receiving to better advantage.

There was an important meeting of the executive committee of the American Rose Society on Thursday, April 11, at the office of Traendly & Schenck, to discuss the matter of a "rose trial garden" at the parks in Hartford, Conn. There were present A. Farenwald, Benj. Hammond, Wallace R. Pierson, Harry O. May and A. Cummings.

EASTER TRADE SATISFACTORY.

The Easter trade this year was very satisfactory. The supply was sufficient to fill all demands, with the exception of lilies and some cut flowers. The quality was well above the average, notably roses in pots, which were a mass of bloom. Made-up baskets were not so plentiful, but more expensive. Lilies were really good, notwithstanding the hard forcing, and sold out early. The department stores caused some anxiety by displaying lilies and other flowering plants by the thousand, but the florists ought to be convinced by this time that this encourages trade rather than injures it, for no regular flower buyers purchase their supply at those stores and it is only those who never enter a florist store that are brought into contact with them and are often made regular customers of a florist. All plants were sold, even the bulbous plants sold well after the choicest of the others were gone, but there was little call for palms and ferns. There was a shortage of carnations and later of roses, but there was plenty of other stock of high quality, tulips, daffodils, sweet peas, violets, stocks and marguerites helped to fill the demand. Pansies also were seen. The delivery was greatly assisted by an exceptionally mild spell of weather, which just lasted long enough to finish this most difficult task. There was nothing new except some acacias. Prices of some stock were somewhat higher, but lilies sold the same as ever, 25 cents a bloom and bud, the department stores selling them for 18 cents.

NOTES.

At the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club A. C. Wilshire told of his experiences in New York at the banquet of the Florists' Club. He had a really good time and was entertained royally and visited the flower markets and saw the sights, piloted by his brother. He also visited most of the growers' establishments and the city parks, all of which were an eye opener to him. Upon motion that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the club be observed in a worthy manner in November a committee was appointed to arrange the details. LUCK.

The season is very backward, being four weeks late, and many hardy plants died during the severe winter, especially rose bushes which suffered greatly in some places. The heavy rains and floods have caused much alarm and many farmers have not yet ploughed, while a year ago at this time sweet potatoes were up and the cotton seed being planted.

NOTES.

At the Vestal greenhouses the force is working overtime filling orders that have been held since March, and the mail orders increase daily, and unless the warm weather comes too rapidly the trade will surpass that of last year. They have over a half million of young rose plants in every variety, including the newer introductions and a large quantity of soft-wooded stock of good quality. The nursery business has been good and is now nearly over.

P. M. Palez, proprietor of the Vestal retail store, returned last week. He stopped at Chicago purchasing Easter supplies. The Easter business was far in advance of last year; fancy baskets filled with lily of the valley, pansies, lilies and bulbous stock were daintily arranged, and they disposed of 6,000 lilies at the store, many being used for decorations.

J. W. Vestal, who is now 78 years of age, is still very active around the place, but he has been ill and confined to his bed for the last two weeks. ABYDOS.

FLOWERS PLENTIFUL AT EASTER.

Easter Sunday was cloudy with a slight drizzle about church time, but not enough to prevent people from attending service nor from wearing the new Easter bonnet. After service in the various churches the regular Easter parade took place. Charles street was well filled during the promenade hour. Flowers of many kinds were worn—violets and sweet peas were the favorites and many corsage bouquets of violets had a single gardenia nestled in the cluster of the purple. The altars were banked high with lilies and other flowers—a ceremony which served to attract large numbers to the Lutheran churches was the confirmation of young people. The sale of flowers was great. The Exchange did a lot of business until late Saturday evening. The great abundance of bulbous stock which was exceptionally fine this year and which sold very reasonably injured in a measured the cut flower trade. There really was too much of it this season. Business this week has been a little dull—the reaction after the holiday. A few weddings and small affairs, but nothing to call for a large quantity of flowers.

NOTES.

The meeting of the Florists' Club was very well attended Monday night, April 8. Wallace R. Pierson of Cromwell, Conn., held the interest of those present in his instructive talk upon "Roses." He exhibited vases of White Killarney and Killarney Queen. A vase of Killarney Queen was also shown from J. A. Budlong & Sons Co. Both varieties were fine specimens of these roses. Mr. Pierson expected to visit some of the rose houses in Baltimore, but was hurriedly called away by a telegram and was unable to do so.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, MASS. — The Phelps Greenhouses near the state musterfield have been purchased by James Seaver, who will conduct a thoroughly up-to-date business.

NEW LONDON, CONN.—The Horticultural Society will hold three exhibitions this year—an aster show in midsummer, a dahlia show later, and a chrysanthemum and fruit show in the fall.

DAYTON, O.—Warren G. Matthews, the enterprising and popular florist of this city, has leased the new building at 32 South Main street, where he will establish a store handsomely fitted and equipped.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Mallon's Flower Shop, William H. Mallon and Charles A. McInerney, proprietors, which was opened at the junction of Lafayette and Fort Greene avenues and Fulton street a few months ago, is a finely equipped establishment and centrally located.

The Seed Trade.

American Seed Trade Association.

Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago, President; Marshall H. Duryea, New York, First Vice-President; Edgar Gregory, Marblehead, Mass., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, Ohio, Secretary and Treasurer. Next annual convention at Chicago, June 25-27, 1912.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Jesse E. Northrup, of Northrup, King & Co., is expected home from California this week.

It is proverbial that a hard winter makes a good spring and generally puts the soil in an ideally receptive condition.

CHICAGO.—Prices on the Board of Trade, April 17, for grass seed were noted as follows: Timothy, $7 to $14 per 100 pounds.

G. C. ELDERING, of W. J. Eldering & Son, Overveen, Holland, will make his annual tour of the United States, arriving early next month.

SEED POTATOES at Chicago are well cleaned up. Latest prices on the few true Ohio stocks were $1.75 to $1.80. Late sorts, true to type, are no longer obtainable.

IN the Chicago onion set district very little seed has been sown, owing to the backward weather conditions. Last year much of the crop was showing above ground March 15.

WATKINS & SIMPSON, the well known seed growers of London, Eng., are inviting friends in the American trade to inspect their extensive trial grounds near the English metropolis while visiting the great international exhibition of the Royal Horticultural Society of England next month.

THE onion set market at Chicago has been a wild one the past week. Reds have gone out of stock, Yellows have advanced to $2.50 or better, and Whites have followed suit. A $3.00 figure is expected. There are but few left and some of these are off quality. The whole country seems to be in the market to buy at the advance.

VICTOR JOHANSEN, president and manager of the Victor Johansen Seed Company, Arroyo Grande, Calif., died suddenly of heart disease on the evening of April 8 at his home in Arroyo Grande. It is announced that the business will be continued under the management of his widow, Mrs. Mary Johansen, assisted by her son, Oscar W. Johansen, who has been connected with the business for the past four years.

Dead Seed Corn.

According to tests made seed corn is said to be from 25 to 75 per cent dead, is the statement made in a circular sent out by the Greater Des Moines booster committee of Des Moines, Iowa, and if farmers wait and plant untested seed it means a failure of at least one-half of the crop or a loss of $70,000,000. Tests made indicate that it will be necessary to test every ear. In testing 100 ears, from ten to seventy ears may be found that will be safe to use. It will take 1,200 good ears to plant 75 acres.

Seed Corn Germination.

As a result of the dry summer and wet fall, corn did not mature normally over the corn belt and much of the seed does not germinate well. In reply to a request of Secretary Wilson to representative farmers in 17 states, 1708 samples of corn intended for seed have been tested by the seed laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture, and they show an average germination of 81 per cent.

State	Number of Samples	Lowest Germination Per Cent	Average Germination Per Cent
Virginia	113	5	90.3
Kentucky	69	26	89.8
Missouri	351	2	88.7
Maryland	41	30	87.1
Iowa	141	20	85.4
Pennsylvania	144	0	84.2
West Virginia	55	8	82.5
Kansas	66	0	82.0
Ohio	189	10	80.7
Illinois	175	0	79.8
Indiana	108	0	79.0
Minnesota	106	0	76.1
Michigan	86	1	75.0
Wisconsin	88	0	73.9
Nebraska	100	30	73.1
South Dakota	57	1	64.6
North Dakota	19	0	56.8

The low average germination of the larger corn states show how serious the condition is, many of the samples being practically worthless. Single ear tests should be made where ear corn is used. Not less than two times one hundred kernels of shelled corn that has been well mixed should be tested and the planting regulated on the germination test so that enough live kernels will be planted to give a full stand.

Congressman Page Opposes Free Seeds.

Speech of Congressman Robert N. Page, of North Carolina, opposing the bill appropriating $260,000 for free seeds for the coming year, March 7, 1912.

"This democratic house has passed bills removing the tariff duty from farm implements, wire and wire fencing, woollen clothes and other necessities. We need to do more, and for that reason, as one, I stand and say today that instead of giving him a five cent package of garden seeds to remind him of the approach of spring and the congressional primaries, he should be given legislation that he is demanding in the form of parcel posts, and he should be given a fair chance to market his crops under normal conditions without the restrictions of exchanges and speculators upon the market. That is what the farmer in this country wants. He is tired of this bauble, and if those of my colleagues who disagree with me—and I realize, Mr. Chairman, that they are likely in the majority—think this congressional distribution of garden seeds, involving an expenditure of something over $260,000, out of which they may send their farmer constituents a package of seeds, and at the same time write a letter telling of their activities here—if they think they are going to satisfy him with that, they are mistaken. If they will pass some other legislation, and take out of this bill this paragraph, they will then find that it meets with the commendation and the praise of the men they are supposedly legislating for in this paragraph."

Results of Seed Analysis.

In order to ascertain the value for farm purposes of seeds in Maryland the State Agricultural Experiment Station engaged a man of special training to make germination and purity tests of seed secured from various sources in the state, the results of which are published in Bulletin No. 162 in tables giving the purity, germination and the average percentage of good germinable seed. The tests of small packages for home gardens by the Department of Agriculture showed an average of 62.2 per cent vitality varying from 27.3 per cent to 81.7 per cent and the uniformly low vitality of the seeds from some houses indicate a fraudulent business with those least able to protect themselves. The tests of clover for the two years of 1910 and 1911 showed a great improvement in the quality.

Free Seeds.

Those who hold that free seed distribution should be continued because of its benefits to farmers are not speaking honestly or are not well informed. Free seeds no longer connote agricultural improvement but the politician's graft.—Country Gentleman.

For Tree Seeds, send to Hill, Dundee, Ill.

The proper handling of Tree Seeds requires special equipment, skill and long experience. Some nurserymen, seedsmen and florists who would not for a moment risk buying flower and field seeds from irresponsible growers and dealers, will buy their Tree and Shrub Seeds from "any old firm".

Hill's Tree seeds are handled properly. This is a tree seed firm. Ask for prices on what you want. You will get the best of service.

I Have Been Dubbed The Dahlia Crank

I do not dislike the title, for I have been informed that it signifies an ENTHUSIAST—and acknowledge that I am. I have carried on a systematic study and trial tests for many years, increasing the list with novelties from abroad and at home, discarding as well as adding—and have at present perhaps the largest list of varieties grown by any one person up-to-date. For want of ground, as well as advancing years I am willing to dispose of much of my stock having a surplus over actual needs. Send for my descriptive list and prices.

Boddingtons Quality Cannas.

Are true to name, have two or three good eyes, are well cured, sound and dormant, and give absolute satisfaction. Our sales last year were nearly 700,000, and not an overgrown kick. The Canna crop this year, however, is very short, and we advise placing orders early to secure stock. Delivery can be made at purchaser's option.

Our Cannas are true to name—two and three, sometimes four eyes—are sound, dormant, and are packed 250 in a box; two can be "cleated" together and shipped as one. One box of 250 sold at a thousand rate; it is cheaper for you to buy a box or 250 than 200 at 100 rate. Write for special prices for quantities.

If any Cannas are not found here, it may be understood that they are superseded by the Oregon. If selection is let to us, we will substitute or send only the best for all purposes.

Tomatoes in Canada.

The tomato industry of Ontario dates back to 1881, writes Consul Fred C. Slater, Sarnia, Ont. Since then this industry has increased wonderfully. The acreage for canning factory purposes increased from 800 in 1891 to approximately 8,000 in 1908. During the same period the total number of bushels purchased by the canning factories increased from 132,000 to 1,400,000; the output of cases from 83,000 to 880,000; the cans utilized from 1,992,000 to 21,124,000; and the value of the pack from $190,000 to $1,672,000; and the payments to growers from $26,400 to $386,600. The number of canning factories has increased during the last five years from 27 to 53. The production is estimated at 400 bushels to the acre and the cost of production at about $45 per acre, including $5 rent for land. The seed is imported principally from the United States.

Importation of German Horse-Radish.

American farmers cannot grow horse-radish of first class quality in competition with the horse-radish shipped in large quantities from Hamburg to the United States, writes Consul General Robert P. Skinner, notwithstanding the American import duty of 20 per cent ad valorem, for it is stated that horse-radish cannot be grown by the American producer for less than four cents per pound. The declared value of horse-radish exported from Hamburg to the United States was $111 in 1909, $321 in 1910 and $23,917 in 1911, showing considerable increase from year to year.

The German horse-radish trade has developed considerably within the last few years chiefly in consequence of a thriving export trade. The land is favorable to the cultivation of the crop and while the Germans themselves are perhaps the largest consumers of horse-radish in the world, yet the exports of the root were 4,121 tons in 1911, with a valuation of $310,352. There is said to be quite a speculative side to the business which resulted in the accumulation of a stock of 10,000 bundles of German horse-radish in cold storage in New York. In the public markets of Hamburg 16.6 cents is the ordinary retail price of a bundle of 10 sticks of good horse-radish weighing 5.5 to 6.6 pounds, and in the same market 60 sticks can be had for 71 to 95 cents, according to quality. Commission merchants who operate on a large scale naturally secure better terms.

The very best roots come in bundles of 10 sticks, the prices varying between 26 and 33 cents a bundle. Second class sorts in bundles of 10 sticks are worth from 14 to 19 cents per bundle, this sort is also tied up in bundles of 15 or 16 sticks for export trade. Both of the grades are frequently packed loose in bags and sold by weight, the present price being from $2.85 to $3.57 per 50 kilos (110 pounds). A third root is made up in bundles of 20 sticks and is usually exported on a commission basis to England, the price depending upon the English demand.

Lima Beans.

From a selling point of view no crop we can produce approaches Lima beans. So far they have always proven "sure sale," which goes a long way in markets of close competition and frequent gluts. The great drawback to this crop is shelling of the beans, as our trade demands them in that shape. This is again in part offset by the reduced load going to market—in fact, quite a respectable load of shelled beans could be hauled in a buggy. We can hire women for shelling—working afternoons and evenings, shelling by piece work, which is necessary to keep costs down. After beans are shelled they rust rapidly, hence we try to do that as late as possible before marketing; further, the beans heat easily if packed too deep; to avoid this we spread them on cloth-covered frames not over one inch deep and leave them in good ventilation until ready to go to market. To shell readily the pods should be quite mature and if wilted a trifle in sun and wind so much the better. A good way to handle them is to use strawberry boxes and crates. We figure to get nine quarts of shelled beans from a bushel of pods and expect each operator to shell a quart in 15 minutes.

As regards cultural methods, these beans are gross feeders. We do not depend on "nitrogen from the air" but feed the crop with manure and fertilizers both. They are very sensitive to drouth, which causes the blossoms to drop, hence we have installed overhead irrigation which has paid on this crop. Being of South American origin one can readily understand why they flourish in showers and heat. Contrary to general belief, we have succeeded well on poor stiff clays if well enriched. The great trouble is to sprout the seed as these are easily lost in cool, wet weather.

We mark our land in four-foot rows, using a line to get perfect work. By using a wheel hoe with one cultivator tooth we mark and open a narrow slot at one move; into this the seed are stuck by hand, eye down, about 1½ inches apart. We aim to imbue the seed solidly, yet like to see the beans stick out a trifle. If dry we run a roller over the rows. If the weather is hot they come surprisingly fast; we aim to cultivate deeply and thoroughly, hilling a trifle as they grow and as soon as runners show pole them, or rather pole and string them. We prefer part strings for many reasons. By placing poles every eight feet and running a No. 13 wire overhead, we can string much like tomatoes or cucumbers under glass. The strings are less expensive than poles and better, as the vines climb the strings more readily and the pickers later on prefer to gather from strings rather than poles. The ends must be braced, as the load of vines is tremendous. We find it pays to mulch with coarse manure both to feed the crop and to preserve moisture. A patch well cared for should produce in excess of $500 per acre. The last two seasons have been abnormally dry, which resulted in poor crops generally, hence prices have run high. The bulk of our product last year sold for 30 cents per quart wholesale. In October, if picked before frost and placed in ventilated baskets, crates or hampers in a cool cellar, the beans will keep a long time, three weeks or a month, by which method good prices can always be secured. The bush Limas we do not grow as they do not produce as well as the pole varieties.

What's Back of the Dollar?
That's the Point.

Terse Talk No. 4.

HARRY LAUDER, the great Scotch enter-tainer gets $5000 a week — not for being a Scotchman, but for a special service in his character of a Scotchman."

We may ask a man $5000 for a house that our competitor offers to build for $4800. We ask it, not because the house itself is worth $5000, but that houses, the way we build them, are.

It's easy enough to talk the dollar side of a price, but it's the worth side that the sharp buyer digs into. What's back of the dollar? That's the point. You can't compare a horse and a cow — you must compare horses with horses.

For the same reason make our competitor bid on a house like ours (if he can) then you have a fair and square basis for comparison. It's the only way to be fair to yourself.

If you are fair to yourself, you'll be fair to us.

Let us come and have a heart to heart talk with you and explain just what kind of a house we base our price on.

Steam Coal Situation.

Chicago.—The bituminous coal mine operators of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and western Pennsylvania and miners of the states named reached an agreement at Cleveland, Ohio, during the closing days of March, whereby an increase is granted the miners of five cents per ton on lump coal and three cents per ton on mine run coal. There will be no change in working conditions. The new scale of prices will obtain during the ensuing two years from April 1, 1912. John H. Walker, president of the United Mine Workers' Union of Illinois, is credited with being the guiding spirit in averting a conflict between the opposing factions just at this time. All anthracite mines in the east are closed, but conferences are being held at frequent intervals and it is expected a working basis will be reached in the very near future.

With the large quantities of soft steam coal headed for the consuming points in anticipation of a shutdown at the mines; the enormous surplus laid up by the railroads and industrial plants, and the natural slack in demand for all kinds of fuel with the passing of winter, the sales departments of the leading coal companies are planning strenuously to effect contract sales to cover periods from May 1, 1912, to next contract season, and beyond. While the consumers are laying back for rock bottom prices for their contract coal supplies, a decided activity will be noticed during the coming two or three weeks to cover contracts and needs for the ensuing year when the surplus of coal now on hand is reduced, for, while an agreement satisfactory to the operators and miners was reached, the mines were closed April 1 for overhauling and will remain so on an average for three weeks. By that time something like a normal supply will have been reached again.

Everlasting Blow-Off Valves.

One of the common ailments of blow-off valves is the introduction of scale or sediment between the disc and the face of the valve which causes leakage, and when once introduced it is impossible to jam the valve tight. The Scully Steel & Iron Co., Chicago and New York, have introduced the "Everlasting Blow-Off" valve which is a simple, rugged and substantial device designed for severest conditions, and from its peculiar construction prevents the scale from settling between the face and disc, for the disc never leaves the face of the valve and is kept tightly pressed thereto by the pressure.

The prominent feature of this valve is that the case is made in halves bolted together. While this is more expensive than making it solid, as is the case with other valves, yet the accessibility for repairs and inspection is a strong feature of merit and very valuable to the engineer who has not a repair shop at his elbow. By unbolting the two bonnets the whole working mechanism comes out and by the use of a little energy and oil the faces may be resurfaced in ten or fifteen minutes. The valve face is chilled and ground and the disc is made of the very hardest nickel bronze, giving a wearing quality not obtained in other valves. For no other valve has these features which are imperative to the long life of a valve which stands more rough knocks and harder usage than any other valve in a power plant. These features will appeal strongly to the man who is looking for low up-keep charges.

The valve has no stuffing box, which enables an arrangement of the working mechanism on very much closer centers than would be possible with a stuffing box and gives a much smoother pull and reduces the resultant effort to open and close the valve. Another feature is the tapering of the inlet orifice which is slightly smaller than the opening in the valve face, in other words, it is "choke-bored." The openings are concentric and very close together and the greater part of the solid matter is delivered into the discharge pipe without infringement on the valve face at all, which relieves the face from much punishment it would otherwise receive, and by this means a syphoning action is attained on much the same principle as an injector which cleans the valve case at each operation.

The valves are simple, compact and easily repaired, being practically self-grinding, and if operated as advised once a day are kept in good condition, and this is a beneficial practice from the standpoint of a clean boiler. The valves from 1½ to 3-inch sizes will stand 1,500 pounds hydrostatic pressure and are tested with 250 pounds actual steam pressure before leaving the factory. Thousands of them have been sold in this country and in Europe and Australia and they are supplanting the older type of valves and cocks wherever tried. The firm makes a very liberal trial offer and issues a full descriptive booklet.

TORONTO, ONT., CAN.—A banquet decoration was arranged by J. H. Dunlop at South Porcupine, in the Cobalt section, March 30, that was considered one of the finest ever put up in that section. Manager Geraghty personally took charge of the decorations and it required a 20-hour journey for the force and flowers to reach that distant point in the north.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—At the monthly meeting of the Rochester Florists' Association, held April 4, President John Dunbar made an address on the pruning of trees and shrubs, illustrated by drawings and lantern slides. Invitations were extended to the Syracuse Florists' and Rose Associations to visit Rochester and inspect the lilacs at Highland park when in bloom next month.

Tacoma, Wash,

Another great day for the florist—from a business standpoint—has passed and every florist tells of its being the best they ever had. Weather conditions were ideal and the people seemed in a bright mood to correspond. Such splendid weather is fine for the florist for the pot plants can be carried or delivered practically unwrapped. The call for cheaper and medium priced pot plants was large and there were few left. Everyone had lilies, there never was such a call before, and as a general thing the quality was excellent. The only flowers that were scarce were good roses and violets. Most of them come from California and were not worth the price demanded. There were very few azaleas in the market and practically not a pot rose. Prices ruled the same as in former years and the great call was for carnations. The people here seem to prefer good carnations and no other flower will do for a large proportion. Bulbs of all sorts have so far produced excellent flowers this season and the demand has been good. Lilies were much better this season than ever before, the majority being Japanese longiflorum. Nothing very elaborate was called for in the way of church decoration. To sum up, we may say—Easter, 1912, was the best we ever had. S. L. H.

CORRY, PA.—A. E. Pettit will erect two greenhouses one 25x50 and the other 10x15 feet, to meet the increasing demand.

RIVERBANK GREENHOUSES GENEVA, ILLINOIS EVERY FLORIST SHOULD SEE THE KROESCHELL HOT WATER HEATING SYSTEM INSTALLED FOR THIS MODERN PLANT.

Rose Range of Riverbank Greenhouses, Geneva, Ill. Charles McCauley, Supt.

Heated by No. 15 Kroeschell Boiler, Kroeschell 2-inch Return Piping System and Kroeschell Generator. Greenhouses each 28 feet by 200 feet. Garland Construction.

The mains are arranged to take care of a future addition of 40,000 sq. ft. of glass; 2-inch returns are used throughout the entire range and each 2-inch return line is controlled by 1-inch gate valve (strictly a Kroeschell feature,) insuring perfect control. It is a gravity job; the circulation is perfect, reaching the extreme ends of range in fifteen minutes. The Kroeschell Generator (the high speed gear for hot water heating) is also used for this system.

"Your No. 15 Kroeschell Boiler heats our entire range. We maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in our greenhouses, and this temperature is easily maintained even in the very coldest weather. Your boiler has given entire satisfaction. It is the best and quickest heater I have ever used or seen. I have found the boiler very economical in the use of fuel and labor, as it is not necessary to use the best coal, and any labor will do for a fireman. The Kroeschell Piping System with Generator works like a charm. When I want to sulphur, I can heat the water up to 230 to 240 degrees and I get the same results as from steam. Seeing is believing—all growers are invited to call. Any further information concerning boiler and piping system will be gladly given. We had a large number of florists at our place recently, and they all thought we had the finest equipped plant in the business."

The Cost of a Leak

Conservative figures convincingly demonstrate the economy of Everlasting blow-off valves.

As an example to point, engineers estimate that the loss of one gallon of water under steam pressure equals one pound of coal.

Therefore, a blow cock leaking 2 cu. ft. per hour involves a loss of 15½ lbs. of coal, 372 lbs. in 24 hours, or 5.72 tons per 30 days. At $3.00 per ton this equals $17.16, or more than 10 per cent. over the initial cost of a 2½-in. non-leaking Everlasting blow-off valve.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Gladioli.

The gladioli that are being forced for spring blooming will soon begin to open their flowers and to have good clean stock they will require attention. The spikes should first of all be kept erect, for if they get bent and crooked half their value is gone, and this will occur very quickly on the bright sunny days when the plant leans over, so they should be kept tied either to stakes or wires to prevent this. The spike should be cut when the first flower opens and placed in water and the other flowers opened in the office or store room. These flowers spot very quickly if water is sprinkled upon them in the greenhouses and at this season of the year syringing on bright days is a necessity or red spider is sure to obtain a foothold, and if these pests become once well established it is almost impossible to eradicate them. Considerable discussion is often heard as to whether the corms of gladioli forced are of any value another year. If the plant is not cut too far down on the stem and the corms are given an opportunity to thoroughly ripen there is no doubt but that the bulbs may be grown another year and good results obtained, but if the plant is cut off clear down to the ground the corm has no chance to make its full growth or to ripen and the corms will be practically worthless. Corms that are forced this year, and the spike cut so as to leave three or more leaves, and if properly ripened can be planted outside another year and the following year first-class corms will be the result. The Gladiolus Colvillei can be forced year after year if grown properly.

Rambler Roses.

The rambler roses for Memorial day will demand constant attention, for at this season of the year aphids and red spider accumulate very rapidly if the conditions are propitious. It is far better to keep these insects down by proper culture than to be obliged to resort to measures to kill them. Give the plants all the ventilation possible but drafts will often cause mildew on the soft foliage, so these must be guarded against especially, and low ventilation, such as open doors with the wind drawing through the houses. Syringe thoroughly on bright days, there is no better prevention for red spider than a good syringing that will reach the under side of the leaves, which will quickly break up the colonies of spiders that gather there. If the plants require fumigation it should be light, for often the young foliage is very tender and heavy fumigation with smoke quickly burns it. Where the pots are full of roots a watering with liquid manure or a mulch of sheep manure mixed with sifted soil will be found very beneficial and will add a lustre to the foliage and deepen the color of the flowers.

Preparation for Memorial Day.

With the Easter stock out of the way, there will be room available for the plants that have of necessity been crowded more closely together for the last few weeks and the next great day before the grower is Memorial day. In those sections of the country where the late frosts are passed the bedding stock must be ready for planting out at that time, and the demand will be for plants in flower, for the customers will desire plants that will make a good showing by May 30, and the stock must be grown with that object in view to have a good sale. The geraniums and other blooming plants should be placed in their blooming pots, spaced out and given a good sunny location that they may be full of bloom by the last of May. It is next to impossible to sell plants that are not in flower at Memorial day. The production of flowers for that day must also receive prompt attention. Much of the floral work for Memorial day is what is called "cheap" work, that is, flowers that make a great show and are not expensive. So although there are many roses and carnations used, yet large quantities of the cheaper flowers are employed to fill in and make the sprays and bouquets larger. Early outdoor flowers and blooming shrubbery can be used, but in some sections these cannot be depended upon, so flowers must be grown in the houses. Stocks make a splendid flower for this purpose and should be benched at once. The plants should now be about three or four inches high and growing rapidly. Candytuft is grown in large quantities by some growers for Memorial day. Seedlings can be transplanted in early April and brought into flower the latter part of May. Spiraea, both as a pot plant and for cut flowers, are very useful at this time; six to eight weeks will bring them into flower at this season. There are other annuals that can be raised for Memorial day blooming, but the two mentioned are grown in largest quantities.

Begonia Gloire De Lorraine.

The plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, both the young rooted stock and the older plants, will now begin to make active growth. There is still time to propagate much stock; many growers prefer the May rooted plants to those propagated earlier, for the plants start right off into growth at this time while those rooted earlier grow very slowly during the late winter and early spring months. The young shoots that break from the old plants make fine cuttings at this time and if the plants are in good health are just as good as the leaf cuttings made earlier. As soon as rooted they should be potted in a light, fibrous loam in 2¼-inch pots, and placed in a light, well ventilated house, but should be protected from all chilling draughts. They cannot be successfully grown in a stuffy-moist temperature and to have strong, healthy plants should not be forced in too warm a temperature. They will require a house at which the night temperature does not fall below 60° and should be given all the air possible without chilling during pleasant, bright days, carefully avoiding drafts. They will need to be watered carefully, for the roots are very fine and are growing slowly yet, and over-watering quickly shows in the growth of the plant. It is now a good time to procure young stock if the grower is not supplied for those making a specialty of this plant have the best of stock at this time.

Asparagus Plumosus and Sprengeri.

Small stock of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri are now a necessity with all plantmen, for they are freely used in fern dishes and in plant baskets, being very satisfactory plants for house culture. Fresh seed can now be obtained and the stock grown on through the summer, which will make fine stock for the next winter. The seed will germinate more readily and evenly if soaked in luke warm water placed in a warm location for 24 hours before planting. Instead of sowing the seed broadcast it is better to sow them about three-quarters of an inch apart and they can then be allowed to remain in the flats until they are strong enough to transplant. Do not cover the seed too deeply, an eighth of an inch of soil sifted over the seed is ample. The first potting must be carefully done, for they make a long tap root with very few small roots and the soil does not adhere to it, and in the young stage this root is easily broken. A warm house with plenty of moisture, careful watering with a slight shade is all they require after being potted. Overwatering will always cause the fronds to take a yellowish hue.

Mothers' Day.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy light,

Make me a child again, just for a night!
Mother, come back from the echoless shore,
Take me again to your heart as of yore;
Kiss from my forehead the furrows of care,
Smooth the few silver threads out of my hair;
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep,
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep."

Sentiment is a great attribute of the American people, as shown in the great disaster which happened so recently in the sinking of the steamship Titanic and the immediate response of the government and people to the demands of the situation, and the gallantry of the men on that ill-fated ocean liner indicated the high regard in which woman is held by man. In no land has woman been regarded with more esteem, and the mother more highly revered, and it is not wonderful that a day dedicated to mother and her memory should so quickly be appreciated by her sons in this nation. It was but five years ago that Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia conceived the idea of selecting one day in the year upon which the devotion to mother's memory should be observed, and the second Sunday in May being the day upon which fell the anniversary of her mother's death, that day was chosen by her as Mothers' day. She wrote to churches, societies, public officials and noted people and the public press, and all at once joined with her in the movement which she had originated, and this spread so quickly that last year mayors of cities and governors of states all over the nation issued proclamations advising their constituents to observe Mothers' day and keep the memory of the departed mother green by wearing on that day some outward emblem, preferably a white carnation, "in honor of the best mother in the world, your mother," as Miss Jarvis expresses it. It is stated that the correspondence now addressed to Miss Jarvis in regard to Mothers' day has become so large that it is with great difficulty that she can give it the necessary attention.

To the florist this means of course an unusual demand for white carnations, and in many places the supply of this flower was not nearly adequate to supply the wants of those who desired to wear one in mother's memory, and all white flowers were substituted. A happy thought by many dealers overcame what might have caused to them an inadequate supply, by advocating the wearing of a white carnation in memory of the departed mother and a colored carnation in that of the mother living, and this was immediately well considered by the people who adopted the plan. Since the first observance of the day THE AMERICAN FLORIST has repeatedly brought to the attention of its readers each year the wonderful progress which the sentiment of observing Mothers' day has made and the necessity of being fully prepared to meet the demands of the people. It comes upon a date when flowers are quite plentiful and it is comparatively easy to be well supplied with the necessary flowers.

We last year received many letters from those who had taken advantage of the advice given them and acquainted the public with the objects of Mothers' day. The Livingston Seed Store, Columbus, O., wrote: "That the demand for flowers on Mothers' day was very large. All the white carnations in town were sold by 4 o'clock p. m. Saturday and every other white flower by closing time, with a lively trade in colored flowers of all kinds. Let the good work continue." The Stelzig's Floral Store of Bellefontaine, O., said that in a city of but 8,288 population they sold 1,275 carnations and could have sold many more. There was the largest sale of carnations on Saturday and Sunday ever made in the town. E. O. Lovell of Grand Fork, North Dakota, related that the supply of carnations did not begin to meet the demand, while other flowers were much in request, especially roses, and we look for greater things next year. In Omaha, Neb., the clubs interested in charity sold flowers from designated booths distributed about the city and from automobiles. These reports only show that a little enterprise on the part of those interested will awaken the sentiment of the public to a full remembrance of the day, and by having state and city officials promulgate proclamations requesting the people to observe the day which has been done by so many in the last two years, the public is then informed, and a little judicious advertising is all that will be required to make Mothers' day one of the floral days of the year.

Floral Pillow.

The pillow of flowers is one of the most popular floral designs arranged for the funeral service, but the compact, close arrangements of the past decade with the lettering thereon are a thing of the past with the designers today. While the form of the frame is adhered to closely enough to plainly show what the design is, yet the work is made light and artistic and the inscriptions are omitted in the make-up, or if necessary the bed upon which the letters are placed is made only large enough to hold them, this being the only compact part, and the rest of the design arranged in a light, artistic manner. The pillow without any lettering at all is greatly favored by the best designers and the one which we illustrate was arranged by George M. Geraghty of Dunlop's, Toronto, Ont.,

It is composed of roses, lily of the valley, and is edged with boxwood, which makes a fitting background for this beautiful piece of work. In the arrangement of pillows and wreaths the expert, up-to-date designers have made the greatest advance over the work of

The Making of a Country Home.

Paper read by J. A. Pettigrew before the Horticultural Club of Boston, January 3, 1912.

Among people of wealth and leisure a widespread interest is being felt in the subject of country life, and the founding of country homes. On every hand homes can be seen already established or in process of development by notes will not interest. There are those, however, having partial or abundant leisure and to whom country life appeals who would welcome the idea of engaging personally in the work of making a country home. It is for such that these notes are compiled.

The fascination of the work is such that a little sustained attention to it soon develops into a strong interest. A more intimate acquaintance with nature results, and with it a broader appreciation of its wonderful ways.

The advanced state in which horticulture is to be found in the English Isles today, and the charm, beauty and dignity of so many of the old homes to be found there, are due largely, no doubt, to the intense personal interest taken in their growth and development by the owners. This interest frequently grows into a close technical study of plant growth. Not only among the proprietors of old estates which are clothed with centuries of horticultural traditions is the love of the home and garden rife. It extends to the farmer and cottager. The farmer with pride will call your attention to the fine oaks or maples in his hedge-rows, while the cottager will be hard pinched indeed if he does not find the opportunity to clothe the walls of his cottage with climbing vines, or his windows with boxes of flowering plants. It is the love for gardening, so deeply implanted in the heart of the Britisher, which gives to England one of its greatest charms.

New England is so wonderfully endowed with the beauty that nature has implanted that the choice of a home site, it might be said, need only be governed by geographical considerations or convenience of location in its relation to transportation. Land, too, suitable for country estates is plentiful and cheap. The character of the flora is distinctly and charmingly interesting. Wooded hills and valleys abound while the soil is so well adapted to the growth that it is easily possible with good cultivation to produce their predecessors that has been made in all the different classes of floral work. It was but a few years ago that these designs were made so flat and compact that they are today regarded by many as ridiculous, and the designs executed at present are certainly works of art when compared with those that were the best of but a generation ago.

those whom the love of the country has induced to enjoy its advantages and delightful associations as an alternative to residences among walls of brick and mortar which so loudly echo the turmoil and strife of city life. a growth of hardwood trees 30 feet in height in a dozen years. Pines, also, 20 or 25 feet high may be grown in the same space of time, so that in the event of the prospective homeowner not being able to secure a fair proportion of natural woodland as a part of his estate he need not be discouraged. He may take comfort in the fact that he can plant where he will and create his own woodland, which often results more satisfactorily than the effort to bring into harmony with his design a piece of existing woodland which uncontrolled nature has distorted or marred or that may not be so located as to permit of blending it into natural harmony with the surroundings.

The ground for the country home having been selected, be it ten acres or be it three hundred acres in extent, fidelity to nature should be the keynote governing its development. The motive impelling the creation of the home is to wish to be associated with nature, therefore have the home express nature faithfully. Presumably the builder of a country estate is one of artistic taste or instincts who is qualified to plan the lines of the necessary walks and roads so that they may be convenient for their purpose yet unobtrusive so that there shall not be one linear foot in excess of absolute requirements and so that they shall be designed as much as possible to lie within the borders of the woodlands or intended plantations of trees and shrubbery, for walks and drives do not in themselves enter into the landscape design excepting as useful agents which may be masked by planting. If the home-builder will in addition locate his house in its proper relation to convenience, to the command of pleasing views, and to its setting, existing or to be made, with the help of a copy of Downing and a practical intelligent gardener as superintendent of the work and the occasional services of an engineer where exact lines and grades are necessary, have the enjoyment and pride of being the creator of his own home. An alternative could be the employment of a competent well-experienced landscape gardener to make a design for the estate, when with the staff before enumerated the owner can enter upon the work of construction.

In planning home grounds it is a good thing to remember that the moving of earth is one of the most expensive of works, a fact that is too often overlooked and much unnecessary expense is thereby incurred. The plan should, in its topographical features, be bent to fit the ground as closely as possible, the relation of soil and subsoil should not be distributed by grading if it can be avoided. In the removal of soils to other places it is essential that they be restored to their original relation, that is, with the subsoil below and the loam on top. The expense of such manipulation is more than double the cost of straight excavation work. A large amount of thought is not too much to expend in considering the removal of a very small amount of earth, that is, if it is expended in the effort to find some way in which the removal can be avoided. A little change in walk or grade or some other modification of an idea will often accomplish this result.

Attention cannot be given too soon to natural woodlands, which the estate may possess; such areas are generally made up in great part of thick growth of trees which have injured each other more or less, by close contact, natural perhaps in having sprung from the soil without the aid of man, but having, nevertheless, been subject to such unnatural conditions as to upset nature's balance. The first operation in a piece of thick woodland desired to be retained for natural effect should be that of thinning; trees of individual merit or beauty should have interfering trees removed to allow of their development.

In places areas of greater or less size may be found entirely filled with trees, which, by reason of overcrowding are so far impaired that they can never recover their lost beauty. In such cases a free cutting should be made to allow light to penetrate so as to permit of the growth of saplings or newly-planted material below and further cuttings made from year to year, as they may be needed. Judicious thinning of all trees should be made when they interfere with the growth of better ones, noting at the same time and retaining picturesque groupings and pleasing combinations of trees, preserving meanwhile a natural appearance in the general mass and encouraging as much individuality as possible without impairment of natural woodland effect. This thinning will permit of the passage of light to the undergrowth, which will respond quickly to its influence and will materially enhance the beauty and naturalness of the woodland. A woodland so dense as to prohibit the growth of vegetation on its floor is dreary and monotonous.

The improvement in the woodland by thinning is soon noticeable. The branches instead of struggling upward in search of light spread out to such an extent that it quickly becomes apparent that the work of the axe, whether in woodland or plantation, is never completed. It is vandalism to lay it aside. The best way for making selections for permanent trees, in plantation or woodland, is in the summer. At this season the condition of the trees can be more easily ascertained, as the relative position and needs are more apparent than at any other season. The treatment of old woodlands includes the careful cutting from the trees of dead or diseased limbs. A large proportion of trees come to an untimely end, because of the decay introduced into the larger limbs, and holes through the stumps of dead limbs or branches. Each cut should be made close and even with the hole or limbs where the severance is to be made and well painted over, renewing the coat when necessary until the wound is healed.

No work in the development of a country estate should take precedence over that of planting other than the work necessary to make the ground intended for plantation available. Roads and walks are of secondary importance in comparison. As a general principle it may be said that a bordering belt of trees should be planted on the boundaries of the estate. This may vary in width in conformity with the topography of the ground, or may be omitted when desirable to obtain cross-country views. This omission, however, should only be done in the case of the opening of views of exceptional interest or beauty. The bordering plantation serves as a screen to shut out undesirable features from within. It gives too a sense of seclusion and possession which in a country home is desirable. Another principle in planting is that generally it is desirable to plant on the high grounds and lay down to turf of the lower grounds, thus accentuating the topographical variation. Such planting, however, must be subject to the preservation or creation of pleasing views within the boundaries of the estate, or the shutting out of undesirable features.

The preparation of the ground for planting in masses should be done during the summer previously to planting, by plowing and deeply subsoiling. This should be repeated two or three times to produce a good condition of mellowness in the soil. Spring planting is preferable in our northern latitudes. Fall planted trees unless put in early enough to have made roots to sustain them are apt to dry out by evaporation during the long months of freezing. A good method is to make selections and purchases in the fall which can be heeled in and protected from drying winds. Then planting can be commenced much earlier unhampered by the delays of spring shipments from new series.

In planting for mass effects plant thickly; 12 feet apart is not too close; the ground is the more quickly shaded. The trees also shelter each other. Thin out by transplanting, or even by cutting out whenever the branches interfere. Under no consideration permit injury to be done by over-crowding. This method has many advantages; it provides shade for the ground and for the trunks of the trees. It permits of easy and cheap cultivation of the ground by horse machinery. It is also a convenient nursery from which finer trees can be secured each season than can be obtained from commercial nurseries. This plan also gives a greater number from which to select the permanent trees.

It is well to plant the intended permanent trees at a distance of from 30 to 50 feet apart according to expective development. A second or even a third arrangement might be made by using different kinds of trees in each. The advantage of this plan is that any one of the three arrangements may be adopted and retained when thinning. It is not desirable to plant shrubs throughout new plantations of trees; they interfere with the free use of the cultivator which is a valuable adjunct to the diligent planter desiring vigorous rapid growth. Cultivation should some are better adapted to our climate than others. Of exotic trees we can always find a place for the white willow, the European beech or the European elm and others. The planting of a New England country estate should consist largely of oaks, maples, beeches, birches, hickories, red cedars, pines, hemlocks and spruces; for appropriateness and beauty these cannot be excelled. Exclude from the planting lists exotic trees and shrubs which do not blend with native material, and above all, bar out variegated sports and monstrosities which have no place in planting for natural effects.

The selection of a location for the house is an important matter for consideration. It would be difficult to frame rules for guidance where so many combinations of topography or other existing features are apt to occur, each one a study in itself, to be solved on the ground. Let us take one example, however. Let it be that of level open ground, then let us if possible place the house with its back opposite to the most uninviting aspect and behind the house plant a mass of trees for a background, and irregular clumps off from two or more corners for support to the house. Behind the background of trees have the kitchen garden. This garden may be a walled garden, with espaliers, the walls and espaliers for training fruit trees.

It may have also flower borders between the espaliers, and the box-edged walks. In that case the espaliers could be used for framing flowering vines, delightfully quaint, also very convenient to the house for the pick-be maintained for a period of three to five years when shrubbery or ground cover may be introduced. Shrubbery may be planted on the borders of the plantations when the trees are planted, of such wood bordering plants as shad bush, red bud, witch hazel, viburnums, cornels, etc.

Of the kinds of trees to plant all our native trees are good, although

ing of flowers and fruit. In this garden may also be placed a low fruit house or two, and forcing pits or low houses for vegetables. Such facilities for providing early fruits and vegetables are I think desirable and even necessary in view of the long winter season, but I am of the opinion that the erection of ranges of houses for the growth of ornamental plants, or cut flowers for use in the house, is an expensive mistake. Can we not have an abundance of flowers from the garden? Commence early in spring with snow drops, and ending with the hardy asters and chrysanthemums with the fall frosts, what a succession of beautiful flowers we have? Thence on until spring again we have our myriads of fruits and berries to carry on beauty's procession, than which nothing can be more beautiful or appropriate for the season. Greenhouses themselves are unhandsome and cannot be made to fit into a garden gracefully; their products can be bought much more cheaply than they can be grown under the conditions that are liable to prevail. But, as the Frenchman said, "let us return to our sheeps."

Behind the background near the vegetable garden can be placed the stables and any other necessary building or house conveniences. The whole can then be screened by a heavy plantation of trees or shrubbery of varying outline.

From at least two points of advantage within the house, long vistas of simple open turf, stretching away into the distance, could be made. The boundary lines of these views should be broken up into deep bays and bold points of foliage, the lines of which again could be opened for lateral views.

Judicious planting of vines should be made against the house, for example, wistarias or bignonias at the corners, or at the porch or other projections, and ampelopsis and euonymus against flat portions of the facade, but all sparingly; the effect should be that of the house supporting the vines, which in turn soften the architectural lines, not that the vines are a support to the house or that the architecture needs to be hidden—breathe it not—sometimes that were better. Procumbent shrubs, too, planted along the base line at intervals will tend to soften the junction of turf and walls. This shrubby line may be of varying width. In front of, and under the edges of the shrubbery, spring-flowering bulbs could be planted, such as crocus, snow-drops, narcissi, etc.

As far back as gardening history can inform us there have been flower gardens round the house. In the old times they were even made within the lines of the moat for their protection. After civil wars ceased to trouble the land, or in the Elizabethan period, gardens took a place in the open lawn which occupied the place formerly occupied by the moat. The old gardens were planted with homelike and familiar friends of humble type, such as roses, artemesia, monkshood, argemone, marigold, foxglove, hollyhock, etc.—plants famous in song and story. Before the middle of the last century the fashion changed, the old-fashioned flowers were banished from all gardens of any pretensions, and the florid "bedding out" style adopted. This comprised lines as in the ribbon border of one color sometimes hundreds of feet long, also beds in the designs of animals, flags, carpet and rug work, planted with exotic material. Flowers were never prostituted to such base uses as they were during the period of this craze. At its height it seemed as though a gardener's ability could be only measured by his dexterity with the sheep shears in clipping the various plants into the desired shape, as in former years, when the test would be a hammer, cast iron nails, listing, and an inhospitably cold garden wall. While the old formal style still lingers in places the tendency in ornamental gardening now is to use tropical plants in beds and borders with a ground cover planting of smaller plants.

To return to the house, the flower garden should be on the lawn in front. The ground being level or nearly so terrace walls are not needed, there is no interruption in the foreground to the view down the vistas of tree-bordered turf. Off at either side of the vistas are irregular groups of trees, bordered rather by widely set shrubbery. Among and in front of this shrubbery the flower garden should be made, not in a clearly defined border, but with tall herbaceous plants such as delphiniums, foxglove, hollyhocks and lilies, etc., planted among the taller growing shrubs at the back, then down to the front among shrubs of dwarf growth let us have phloxes, salvias, hardy asters, pyrethrums, roses, lilies, heleniums, solidagos, and in front periwinkle, dwarf asters, iberis, veronicas, and many others almost too numerous to mention.

It is not intended to be understood that a grading down of shrubs or plants from tall at the back to dwarf in front is intended, rather let dwarf run back occasionally in short vistas, as it were, and let tall plants come to the front; the snug insipidity of graded planting can thus be broken up and more natural tone imparted. Nor should the lines of the border be too clearly defined, let it in a natural manner project itself boldly into the lawn, and again retreat back nearly to the tree line.

It is important in our garden to have space enough between the shrubs to give plenty of room for root growth of the shrubs and leave sufficient for the needs of the herbaceous plants, too. The shrubs will, if carefully selected for their berried effects in winter, or for the coloration of their branches, go far to cover the deficiencies of the bare herbaceous plants at that season.

The planting of a country home grounds opens a large field for enthusiastic gardeners; on the tree borders of the turf glades what a field there is for the development of a fringe of beautiful things; thorns, flowering dogwood, witch hazel, juneberry and red buds would frame the vistas with a succession of bloom during a great part of the spring and early summer. And what opportunity for the planting of spring-flowering bulbs by the thousand, sprinkling them partly under the branches of the shrubbery and having waves of them spread out over the turf in front,—narcissus, crocus, snowdrops, scillas, grape hyacinths, full blooming. Crocus would be the kinds suitable in the herbaceous border, May flowering and Darwin tulips might be added.

A piece of damp woodland bordering a creek could be planted with many beautiful plants, including ferns, which love moist and shady conditions, while the borders of the creek would give a home to the iris, the nyssas, senecios, swamp azaleas, andromedas, rhododendrons, loosestrifes, and gaultherias. A pond in the low ground fully exposed to the sun would give opportunity for the planting of Latour Marliacs, beautiful hybrid water lilies, as well as our own handsome native ones. A great wealth of material besides is at the service of the water gardener. Then a ravine or rocky dell possessing a good cover of leafy mulch suggests the absorbing delight of planting a collection of native ferns. A bank under partial shade suggests a mass of primroses, while another bank reminds one of the beautiful little Canadian cornel and how well it would be adapted for its growth. Here is an ideal spot for Solomon's seal, and over yonder are just the conditions required for the bear-berry. And so on. In such work the home-worker would find his days filled with the enjoyment and satisfaction of accomplishment, accentuated by a close association with nature in one of her most charming expressions.

PORTLAND, ME. — L. C. Goddard writes that there was but little difference between the total sales this year and last. There was a bountiful supply of plants, and with the exception of violets, of cut flowers. Plants of all kinds sold well, but the cut flower trade was not up to the standard of previous years; carnations were the best sellers with very little call for hyacinths.

THE ROSE.

Potting and Benching.

Following the Easter sales there is a general adjustment of things, and more or less room has been made through plant sales, etc. And about the first thing perhaps that will require our attention is the shifting of the young rose stock if this has been put off until now. The young stock, by the way, should not be allowed to make but one growth in a certain sized pot. That is, as soon as the first growth is made after the first potting and this growth is well ripened it should be shifted to a size larger pot before the starting of new growth. Small stock in 2¼-inch pots can go into the 3-inch. This usually means the 4-inch stock. Grafted stock from 2½-inch should go into 3½-inch pots, etc.

It is quite essential when using the 3-inch pots to use drainage. We prefer using two pieces of crock about the size of a quarter dollar, forming a kind of bridge over the drain hole, placing one to one side of the hole and resting the other on the edges of this one; it may take a little longer to do this, but it insures perfect drainage. A free circulation of the water and fairly rapid evaporation of the soil is to be desired. Pot very firmly and have the soil sifted through ½-inch screen in order to have the soil fill in compactly around the ball of the plant. Do not knock out too many at once and have them get dry in the flats, and do not delay watering them after potting and setting them up. When shifting the grafts into 3½-inch pots they should be carefully staked. A good way is to cut the raffia loose and stake them in the 2¼-inch pots beforehand, then there is no time lost when potting. Old wire rose stakes that have badly rusted ends being rather short for the benched plants, will do nicely for this work; cut into lengths of about 12 to 14 inches. Make two ties, one near the bottom and one near the top of the plant, placing the stake on the opposite side of rose where the scion tops the Manetti, as this has a tendency to keep the splice from splitting when tying and staking. These stakes need not be removed until they are replaced by the regular supports after benching.

How about early planting? We think it a good plan to do some early planting if only a few hundred plants. Benched about the middle of April, they will give much better cutting through the dark short days of winter than those planted six weeks later. They also furnish good blooms in the early fall and one does not have to start cutting from the June planted stock so early, as the latter can be getting nicely established by dividing a month later, while cutting from the early planted stock. Planting the rose houses in succession with an interval of a week or two between planting will be found a good plan when steady cutting is desired, especially on a comparatively small range where two or more varieties must be grown in each house in order to have a fair cut of each variety daily. As a rule on a small place about a third more pinks than white should be grown for all the year round demand, and then, say Killarney. White Killarney and Richmond are to be grown, half as many Richmond as either of the other varieties we would consider sufficient red. The small grower should avoid growing too many varieties, as a hundred of this thing, fifty of that, etc., or whatever it may happen to be will be found a very unsatisfactory state of affairs when it comes to filling orders. Of course one should devote some space to the new varieties and by reading the trade papers carefully, and still a better way to keep in touch with what is good in the new things is to visit the ranges where the new varieties are being grown and propagated. As we were going to say, through actual photographs and the descriptions given the new roses in the trade papers, one can usually get a fairly good idea of the merits of a new rose. It is always up to the skill of the grower whether any variety can be grown profitably. Very often a grower will make a success of a certain variety while his next door neigh-ber cannot do a thing with it, but this does not mean that the rose is not an all around good variety. The principal thing, we think, is to grow in quantity whatever does the best, and stick to the money maker.

From all accounts the newer varieties, Double White Killarney, Sunburst, Mrs. Aaron Ward, for instance, are said to do better at a little higher temperature than Killarney or White Killarney. So one would hardly expect either of the above varieties to be at their best grown in the same house with Killarney. My Maryland is also in a class with the warm-blooded ones. Dark Pink Killarney is another hard variety to handle, and strange to say, this rose seems to like a cooler house than any of the Killarneys. So when it comes right down to facts, the grower that has glass enough to devote each house to a certain variety, where the temperature can be run to suit it, that really has the best chance to get a line on the novelties. At the same time the little fellow need not feel discouraged, for he can let the other fellow that is better fixed run the trial grounds, while he grows goods that he can best afford to handle. E.

OBITUARY.

M. Rice.

M. Rice, the senior member of the firm of M. Rice & Co., wholesale florists and supply dealers, 1220 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., died early

The Late M. Rice.

Tuesday morning, April 23, of a fibrous tumor. Mr. Rice had been ailing for the past six months. He submitted to several operations but could not get relief and gradually grew weaker and passed away as above stated.

Mr. Rice began his business career as a partner of the Philadelphia Immortelle Design Co. about thirty years ago. Several years later he engaged with the firm of Marschutz & Bacca-roh, succeeding to the business at the death of Mr. Marschutz. About 1900 B. Eschner became associated with Mr. Rice and in 1904 the present building was purchased. The firm prospered and grew rapidly, which necessitated additions to the property and required the securing of additional space in adjoining buildings. Mr. Rice was thoroughly informed in his business, energetic and ambitious, always anxious and obliging and very well liked by all his business associates and those who came in contact with him. He was one of the charter members of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia and in the early years took a great interest in its welfare. He was also a Mason and a member of the Royal Arcanum. He leaves a widow and four sisters.

His funeral, which took place from his residence in Oak Lane on Thursday afternoon, was largely attended. There were quantities of flowers from his many friends, the Florists' Club sending a handsome emblem.

The business will be carried on as before, Mr. Rice having laid plans in case of his illness interfering with his presence that Mr. Eschner would have charge and carry out his ideas for the future. K.

John Smith.

John Smith, one of the pioneer florists of Cleveland, O., died at his home in that city April 21 of Bright's disease in his seventy-first year. At the close of the civil war, through which he served with the 4th Ohio cavalry, he became connected with the Wm. Case Nursery of Cleveland, with whom he remained for five years. He then established himself in the florists' business which he conducted until 11 years ago when he retired. He is survived by a widow and four children, George W. Smith, manager of the Cleveland Florists' Exchange, being a son. The funeral was held April 23, the interment being in the family lot in Lake View cemetery. C. F. B.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.—J. H. Thornley was found dead in bed April 8, death having been caused by heart trouble.

HARRY S. GARLAND desires to state that the demonstration with the gutters at the Tri-City Florists' Club meeting was entirely satisfactory, bringing out the points it was desired to disclose.

CLEANING UP DAY has been fixed as May 1 in many cities of the United States and whenever our florist and nursery friends have an opportunity they should seek to aid such a movement in their home town or city.

THE first number of The Rose Journal of the American Rose Society, to be issued quarterly, bears the date April, 1912. It contains in its eight pages the paper by W. G. McKendrick, Toronto, Ont., read before the society at Boston, and interesting articles by S. S. Sulliger, W. S. Sibson, J. F. Huss, J. A. Valentine, Theo. Wirth, M. H. Walsh, and details of the work of the American Rose Society, and is illustrated by half-tone portraits of President Farenwald, Robert Craig, father of the society, and E. Gurney Hill, the rose garden exhibit of Thomas Roland at the National Flower Show at Boston and Rose Newport Fairy. It is nically printed on extra quality paper and the subscription price is 35 cents a year.

PROPOSITION NOT DISCREDITED.

It is a matter of surprise that a man of Patrick O'Mara's standing and ability should make so bitter an attack on the executive committee and other men of repute in the Society of American Florists, as he has made recently, without attempting to ascertain and consider the facts at issue. Mr. O'Mara has not been an officer of the society for some ten years, has evidently not kept in close touch and has forgotten much of the routine in that long time.

Mr. O'Mara says the executive board has power of removal for disability on the part of any officer from the president down. Mr. O'Mara is mistaken. Nowhere do the by-laws grant such power.

Again Mr. O'Mara says "their [the executive board's] duties as a body are not legislative. Neither the letter nor the spirit of the constitution authorizes them to meddle with purely legislative matters. * * * I take issue flatly with him on these statements. Their duties are partly legislative. Both the letter and the spirit not only do authorize them to meddle (if Mr. O'Mara so chooses to put it) with legislative matters, but make it their express duty so to do. Further than this, the executive board has constantly done that very thing ever since the society was incorporated, and long before (eighteen years to my certain knowledge).

Let Mr. O'Mara read Article III of the constitution and by-laws (page 194, last annual report), also let him read the minutes of the executive board, page 21, and those of previous years; and, above all, let him try and remember what was done by the board in 1901 and 1902 when, I believe, he was a member.

He says the proposition was rejected twice by the society, but he ignores the fact that it was accepted by vote of the society last year. President Asmus recommended in his annual address that the office of secretary be made appointive. A committee consisting of Patrick Welch and four ex-presidents of the society submitted a committee report approving of the same and their report was "accepted and approved" by vote of the society (pages 96 and 97).

I feel sure that even so prejudiced a person as Mr. O'Mara will have to admit that there was no other course open to the board, following such action of the society, but to approve the necessary amendment so that it could be printed in the programme and come before the society to legally ratify or reject. The society is not in any way, shape or manner bound by this action of the board. The members are simply put in position to legally enact (by majority vote only, however) what they last year voted was desirable. My good friend does not want them to have any chance to vote on this proposition. I do.

I make no attempt at this time to discuss the real merits of the question, but have simply cut a slit in Patrick's balloon and let the hot air out of it. There is nothing left but the usual little handful of collapsed tissue paper—nothing else.

We have many of us considered Patrick O'Mara a big man, although with much of the demagogue in his make-up and an irresistible tendency to play to the gallery. I wonder if he is a big enough man to apologize for his unworthy insinuation against the integrity of the officers and directors of the S. A. F. contained in the following sentence: "What (or who) have they up their sleeve?" W. N. RUDD.

National Association of Gardeners.

The spring meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Gardeners was held at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, Pa., Monday afternoon, April 15. Action was taken on what the association's reward should be for meritorious exhibits at its meetings and it was decided that a certificate of merit would be the highest award within the gift of the association.

Following an invitation extended by Anton Bauer, representing the Elberon Horticultural Society of New Jersey, to the members of the association to participate in its summer show which is to be held at Asbury Park on July 3-6, the association tendered the P. Hamilton Goodsell cup, valued at $150, as a prize to be competed for at the Elberon summer show for the best collection of twenty-five foliage plants, palms and ferns included, in not over eight-inch pots. The association will also offer the William Kleinheinz cup, valued at $50, for the best collection of sweet peas of not less than twelve varieties, and not less than twenty-five sprays to the vase, exhibited at the sweet pea show of the National Sweet Pea Society, at Boston, in July. The contests for these cups are restricted to members of the association.

President Logan appointed Messrs. Kleinheinz, Ebel and Bachelor a committee on schedule, to prepare a special association schedule for the International Show to be held in New York City in April, 1913.

An invitation received from the Elberon Horticultural Society by the association to hold its convention at Asbury Park in conjunction with the fall show of the Elberon Society in October will be acted on at the next meeting of the executive committee.

John J. Dodds, Anton Bauer and Benjamin Wyckoff, appointed an awards committee to judge the fine exhibit before the meeting, rendered their decision as follows:—Certificates of merit to Henry A. Dreer, Inc., for group of hydrangeas, also for Hydrangea Mme. Radmone; to Charles H. Totty for the carnation Wodenethe; to William Kleinheinz for the carnation Miss Dimple Widener; to Brant-Hentz Company for the rose Madison; to Robert Scott & Son for the rose Double Pink Killarney. Special mention was made of the exhibits of John Lewis Childs for Calla Elliottiana, Robert Scott & Son for the rose Melody, William Kleinheinz for Calceolaria Weartiana.

Following a suggestion that the association each year adopt a favorite flower as its symbol for the year, the carnation Wodenethe was selected as the emblem of the association for the year 1912.

Among the speakers heard at the meeting were William Kleinheinz, who urged the gardeners to do their utmost to make the International Show of next year a big success; John Dodds, who spoke on the benefits of belonging to the Society of American Florists, stating that the more the gardeners will identify themselves with floricultural and horticultural organizations the greater will become the influence of their profession in the affairs of horticulture. George C. Watson strongly endorsed what Mr. Dodds had to say and added there was also a great work ahead for the association in the solving of the many problems which are still confronting the professional gardeners, but that co-operation among the gardeners will soon make this organization a power which would be of lasting benefit to the gardener. John Westcott also spoke of the great good that the Society of American Florists has accomplished for the commercial men, saying that the same field is open to the association to accomplish equal good for the professional or private gardeners. Other speakers heard were James Kennedy, president of the Elberon Horticultural Society; Benjamin Wyckoff, of Asbury Park; Austin C. Saylor and Walter Mott. Their subjects treated principally on the great progressiveness of the gardeners of this country and the bright outlook for the national association.

At the close of the meeting the visiting members were entertained at a dinner given by the local members at the Hotel Dooner. The dinner was served in the private dining room, the table being handsomely decorated with flowers provided by George C. Watson. After dinner the bowling contest between the individual members of the team which won the cup at the National Show in Boston, in March of last year, was rolled on the alleys of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, the high score being rolled by John H. Dodds, making him the individual owner of the team's trophy. The summer meeting of the executive committee will take place at Boston on July 13, 1912.

THE OUTLOOK MORE OPTIMISTIC.

The pleasant smiles and happy faces of the proprietors of the several stores in the wholesale market indicate very plainly that the trade has completely recovered from the stagnation that invariably follows a floral holiday and has resumed its normal condition, and business during the last few days of the past week and the beginning of this has improved wonderfully. While there is a large amount of stock being received yet it is finding a good call and cleans up very well. The receipts of roses are still very large, especially of the teas and hybrid teas, but there is an excellent demand, both by the home trade and for shipment, and the stock does not tarry long in the hands of the dealers. American Beauties are having a good sale and the amount of stock is not too large to meet the requests. Killarney, White Killarney, My Maryland, Richmond and Mrs. Jardine are of most excellent quality and in large quantities, and are all having good sale. There are also good receipts of the newer roses and they also sell readily, some very fine Mrs. Aaron Ward are now shown. Carnations are none too plentiful, the demand fully equalling the receipts and the call for the first quality is exceptionally good, some of the dealers advancing the price during the last week. Lilies and callas are in great supply and are moving very slowly. Lily of the valley is also quite plentiful, the quality is, however, very fine and there is a good call for this brides' favorite flower. Orchids are not in large supply, but they are sold at a price which enables the retailer to feature them in the window displays. Sweet peas are very plentiful and some of the stock is of the highest grade and can be seen in profusion in the windows. Gardenias are plentiful enough to easily supply all the requests. Bulbous stock from outside is beginning to make its appearance and the greenhouse product is shortening up very rapidly. Trailing arbutus is being received in quantity and the stores are showing it prominently and many corsages of this exceedingly sweet, fragrant flower are seen decorating the shoppers. Lilac is arriving from the south and there is still some bulb stock being received from that quarter. Antirrhinums are very plentiful and some of the stock is grand, one of the retailers making a great show of the beautiful pink shade. Pansies are very plentiful and there are some very large flowers to be had. Mignonette is of good quality and some extra long stock is seen. Marguerites are shown in good quantity, both yellow and white, and there is a very good demand for them. Greens are in only fair supply, asparagus being the most plentiful and smilax is quite short. Hardy ferns are still held at good prices.

NOTES.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association held a very successful meeting last week and the third quarterly report sounded so good to the directors and the 25 stockholders that were present that they made arrangements with J. F. Kidwell, the president, to accept the management and to look after the welfare of the association in the future. Mr. Kidwell has engaged Michael Fink to fill the vacancy which will occur soon when Chas. Ernie goes into the wholesale business for himself.

Chas. W. McKellar is moving into his new store at 20 East Randolph street and will soon be comfortably located in his handsome new quarters. The well known florist needs no introduction to the readers for he has been identified with the wholesale business for a great many years and has a host of friends and a large number of customers who wish him continued prosperity in his new location.

Tim Matchen says that trade at Peter Reinberg's is very good and that stock in all lines is finding good sale. This firm is now receiving a good supply of long stemmed American Beauty and Sunrise roses. The latter are meeting with good sale and leading florists are now using them quite extensively in decorative work.

The Horticultural Society held an adjourned meeting at the Art Institute April 22, when plans for the next spring show were discussed. Important business will come up for consideration at the next meeting, to be held at the City Club, Tuesday, April 30, at 6:30 p. m.

Mrs. E. E. Pieser was operated upon in the St. Luke's Hospital this week for appendicitis and gall stones and is reported to be in a very serious condition.

W. P. Kyle says that trade at Kyle & Foerster's store has picked up considerably and that April 19 and 20 were both exceptionally good days.

The spring importation of box trees is being unpacked at Vaughan's Greenhouses this week and Japanese cycas stems are giving out.

Miss Gertrude Wallace has returned from a pleasant visit with friends at Milwaukee, Wis.

Wietor Bros. are still cutting a good supply of long, medium and short stemmed American Beauty roses and the quality is so good that the proprietors are experiencing but little trouble in disposing of them at fancy prices. N. J. Wietor is still undecided as to whether he will make his coast to coast tour in his auto or whether he will join the "Pikers' Club" and fish for muskies at White Sand Lake, Wis. The firm planted their first carnations out doors this week and about 500,000 plants will be set out.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is supplying their customers with all kinds of seasonable flowers from the little pansy to large American Beauty roses. The cut of stock in general is very large and is moving readily, especially lily of the valley, which is one of the leading features at this house this week. The supply department is doing a good business and a nice trade is now being worked up in this line.

Wilder Deamud has returned from a successful business trip to Rhinebeck, N. Y., and Cleveland, O., and is again attending to his duties at the J. B. Deamud Co.'s store. Wilder says that he had a delightful trip even though he traveled about 5,000 miles in five days.

A. T. Pyfer says that the Chicago Carnation Co.'s baseball team lost their first game this season when they crossed bats with the crack White Cross nine at Joliet last Sunday. The score stood 4 to 3 in the sixth inning, when the game was called on account of rain.

C. L. Washburn and son, E. B. Washburn, are devoting their spare time to overhauling the auto in anticipation of a tour to southern California. Master Story Washburn will celebrate his first birthday with a party next Saturday, April 27.

A. L. Vaughan has returned from West Baden where he took the bath treatments and enjoyed the time by riding horseback through the surrounding country. The genial wholesaler is feeling fine and is back on the job ready for a busy season.

Miss Hertha V. Tonner's many friends think that she is happy these days because stock is selling at much better prices, but the more observing ones are inclined to think that it is because she is wearing a beautiful diamond ring.

John Michelsen says that trade at the E. C. Amling Co.'s store is much better this week and that stock in general cleans up well. This house is as usual offering a full line of stock and fancy Killarney roses are very noticeable.

Paul M. Bryant, formerly with E. H. Hunt, has returned from a visit to Milwaukee and St. Louis and is now seriously considering going into one of the branches of the florist business for himself.

W. L. Sullivan, of the Woodlawn Floral Shop, is featuring a log cabin scene in his window display in his East Sixty-third street store, that is attracting attention and favorable comment.

Joe Weis, who recently gave up the wholesale business to go into the retail business on Southport avenue, says that trade is fine and that there is a good demand for funeral work.

E. E. Pieser, the Peony King, says that the last reports from his peony farms were to the effect that the crops would be light but the supply of pink will be good.

Harry Manheim, Hoerber Bros' store man, is again teaching his former assistant, Joe Eringer, the ins and outs of the wholesale cut-flower business.

Weiland & Risch are filling a large number of orders for plants and they say that the demand for marguerites is exceedingly large.

John Kruchten is finding a good market for his choice gardenias and is now filling some large orders for his regular customers.

O. Johnson says that the Batavia Greenhouse Co. is enjoying a fine business and that stock is now cleaning up fairly well.

M. Wolniewicz, 3301 N. Claremont avenue, is remodeling his place and getting things in shape for the coming season.

Winterson's Seed Store has leased the basement of several of the adjoining buildings for use during the busy season.

Zech & Mann say that both the local and shipping trade is good and that business in general is very satisfactory.

Stollery Bros. have just purchased a new 30 h. p. E. M. F. delivery car and are now offering their horse for sale.

H. C. Blewitt, of Des Plaines, is serving on the jury in the municipal court this week.

Wieland's new store on East Washington street is very commodious and nicely furnished. It has two entrances, one on the street, above which is a fine show window filled with plants and flowers, and the other directly opposite the elevator in the main hall of the building. Beside this entrance is a nice showcase in which flowers are kept to attract the many visitors to the building. Manager John Risch feels very well satisfied with the trade which has patronized the new enterprise and feels justly encouraged with the venture.

Louis Wittbold was on the sick list for a few days this week. His firm, the Geo. Wittbold Co., is expecting a large shipment of bay trees, the box trees having arrived some time previous. A circular has been mailed their patrons which contains a beautiful colored illustration of the planting of an estate and executed by them. It is nicely printed and plainly indicates the beautiful effect of appropriate planting of trees and shrubs.

A very busy week is reported at the store of W. J. Smyth on Michigan avenue. A wedding decoration in the Congress hotel and two elaborate casket covers in addition to the regular trade kept the force very busy.

Vaughan's Seed Store is now receiving its new season's output of sphagnum in burlap bags. This supply comes from a large marsh never before "mossed," insuring clean, live sphagnum.

H. Van Gelder, of Percy Jones, is expecting another large shipment of supplies and is now better prepared than ever to take care of his increasing trade.

The A. L. Randall Co. is showing a full line of all kinds both in cut flowers and in supplies and the demand is very good.

O. P. Bassett Auto Touring in California.

O. P. Bassett, of the firm of Bassett & Washburn, and father-in-law of C. L. Washburn, the well known wholesale dealer of Chicago, is thoroughly enjoying life in California traveling over the state in an automobile. He is now 77 years old and is a great lover of outdoor life and has traveled many thousands of miles in his auto and when not enjoying himself in this way emulates President Taft and takes his turn on the golf links. He lately took a trip covering 650 miles in 2½ days, the roads being like a boulevard, and on the second day making an early start covered 286 miles, stopping only for lunch. The recent rains, however, have made the roads very muddy and in a trip from San Francisco to Los Angeles, after the car ploughed through the mud up and down hill, even requiring the low gear on some of the down grades, in Eagle canyon after nightfall the engine became heated and finally caught fire. The blaze was extinguished without serious damage, but the battery was so burned that the car was stalled. Not knowing the roads Mr. and Mrs. Bassett decided to stay in the car until morning, notwithstanding it was one of the coldest nights of the year, so wrapped up in blankets they made themselves as comfortable as possible until morning, when a farm house was sought and a telephone message brought a trouble car to their assistance. The car was able to reach a garage with its own power but had to be thoroughly overhauled before the journey could be continued. Mr. Bassett cordially invites any of the florists to visit him at his home in the Golden State and desires them to remember that the latch string is always out and they will meet with a cordial welcome.

Rochester, N. Y.

The enormous rush of the Easter season is over, but business on the whole is very good indeed. All that is needed is some real spring weather. This would make a great difference to trade. The supply of flowers remains quite plentiful. Sweet peas are abundant and of good quality. Flowering plants are still in evidence and sell fairly well. The bulbs are beginning to fall off. The weather is hardly suitable to commence gardening, but as soon as it becomes settled and warmer many of the florists will get in full swing. Spring plant trade promises to be good, and many orders are being taken.

NOTES.

At the last monthly meeting of the Rochester Florists' Association President Dunbar gave a very interesting address on "Pruning." He illustrated his talk with lantern slides, showing the proper way to obtain beautiful trees and shrubs. At the next monthly meeting William Perie (gardener to George Eastman) will speak on "The Way to Make a Good Lawn." All members interested in this part of the business should be present.

The decorations at the Pure Food Show, held at Convention Hall and consisting of hanging baskets filled with geraniums, rhododendrons and other blooming plants, and ferns around the orchestra stand, was the work of George T. Boucher.

Miss Lillian Wheeler of the Rochester Floral Co. has been very sick for nearly two weeks. We are glad to state that she is making slow but good progress. Miss Myrtie Bradstreet of the same company is expected home about May 1. She, with her mother and sister, have spent the winter in Florida.

H. E. Wilson is growing some extra fine lily of the valley and the stock of spring plants is in fine condition, there being thousands of variegated vincas. The new delivery atno, which is painted yellow, is attracting much attention.

Chas. Curtis is cutting some extra fine sweet peas that find ready sale; the lavender variety is especially good.

Northern Indiana Florists' Association.

The spring quarterly meeting of the Northern Indiana Florists' Association was held at Kokomo, Wednesday, April 17, in the Frances hotel, with President Johnson in the chair, and twenty-two members present. W. W. Coles of Kokomo presented the names of T. L. Knipe, W. A. Bitler and Fred Kelly, of Kokomo, for membership, who were accepted and admitted.

A practical talk on growing carnations was given by W. J. Vesey, Jr., of Ft. Wayne, and a general discussion followed. Brief addresses were made by W. W. Coles and T. L. Knipe and the meeting adjourned to meet in July at Warsaw.

An elegantly appointed dinner was served at the hotel, the room being elaborately decorated with potted plants and cut flowers from the Knipe greenhouses and the Coles Rose Farm. Among the guests were Mrs. Alonzo Ullsh of Wabash, Mrs. W. W. Coles and Mrs. W. J. McElwaine of Kokomo, being the only ladies present. During the afternoon the visiting florists were taken on a tour of inspection to the greenhouses of the city. They expressed themselves as being well pleased with their reception and entertainment and hoped to have a meeting in Kokomo again in the near future.

Thorburn & Co., Julius Roehrs Co., Peter Henderson & Co., Vaughan's Seed Store, Stumpp & Walter Co., Cottage Gardens, Mrs. J. R. Wasewell, Pino Typtol Co., R. Meserol and H. C. Smith. THE MARKET DEMORALIZED.

The weather has been much cooler, the thermometer falling to the freezing point. Whether this will damage nursery stock will be known later, but the cold and rain has delayed planting. The market has been in a demoralized condition, everything plentiful with but little demand. Sweet peas at five cents per bunch, carnations and roses at 15 cents per dozen are seen in the downtown stores, and the poor street fakir is outdone completely.

NOTES.

Two thousand persons are to receive detailed instructions from the tree planting committee of the Civic League in the choice of plants and the protection of city trees. The committee recommended for general use silver maple and cherry trees. The members of the committee are H. C. Irish, Charles W. Fullgraff, Otto G. Koenig, Andrew Meyer, Jr., F. A. Weber, Chas. Rebstock, H. N. Spencer, Jr., W. J. Stevens and Dr. Selden.

The Paris Floral Co. was burglarized Friday night, the thieves entering through the transom. Fred Foster, Jr., found $18 missing from the cash register, and also his father's gold rim glasses.

Vincent Gorly and wife left April 19 for Mobile, Ala., to meet friends who are touring in an automobile. They will be absent about 10 days, going to Jacksonville, Fla., and other southern resorts.

The Florists' dance committee met at Geo. H. Angermueller's and decided to make it a shirt waist party, May 8, at Westminster hall. Tickets will be on sale at the wholesalers at $1.00 per couple.

A white carnation is the proper thing for Mothers' day. If they can be sold at retail for five cents, with good advertising thousands will be disposed of, but the public will not stand extortion.

Grimm & Gorly and Alex Siegel have kept the downtown district busy with special sales of sweet peas, carnations and roses.

Ostertag Bros. have put on extra help to meet the demand for funeral work and the mail order business.

C. Young & Sons Co. and Wm. Schray & Sons have been doing a nice plant trade at the Union market.

A. Werner & Bros. are bringing in a fine stock of Killarney and White Killarney roses. W. F.

Indianapolis.

Business for the larger part of last week was practically at a standstill, causing prices to drop as much as fifty per cent. Saturday with increasing demand prices rallied almost to normal. Carnations and roses continue of excellent quality and with the decrease of supply of bulbous flowers the demand may be safely expected to be much larger. A limited number of gladioli reach market and find ready sale.

NOTES.

LARGE RECEIPTS OF GOOD QUALITY.

Stock continues to arrive in large quantities, with quality right up to standard, but prices have been comparatively low where large orders were concerned. Sweet peas are selling fairly well but violets are in very poor demand, one retailer selling at 10 cents a bunch; and lily of the valley was only in fair request. Roses are moving nicely, some fine medium and long-stemmed stock arriving daily. Carnations cleaned up the latter part of the week, "Carnation Sales" being the order of the day on Saturday. Easter lilies and callas move slowly. Bulb stock still arrives, but the quality is not satisfactory and the demand consequently is rather light. Greens of all kinds are in good demand and the supply equal to the request. Novelties are selling well. C. F. B.

CONDITIONS IMPROVING.

During the past week the market conditions have improved somewhat, nevertheless there was plenty of stock of all descriptions, especially the Enchantress carnations, which were in abundance. Red carnations were in the greatest demand and sold exceptionally well considering the state of the market. Roses were in plenty in all colors, but smilax was very scarce. Other green goods were plentiful; lilies and callas are not selling well and have been a drag on the market for the past two weeks. Good sweet peas are scarce; there have been plenty in the market but the majority are short stemmed and of poor color.

NOTES.

At the wedding of Henry Marquardt and Miss Freida Mallue, which took place Wednesday evening, April 17, the church was beautifully decorated with flowers and greens. The young couple have the best wishes of the entire trade.

Gust Rusch & Co. reports business very satisfactory, with plenty of stock of all kinds to fill orders.

MANY SOCIAL FUNCTIONS AND WEDDINGS.

We have had frosty nights and ice this week, with quite a drop in the temperature, and a slight shortage in roses is the consequence. A great many social events have occurred during April. Society seems to be trying to make up for the lenten season and is trying to crowd in all the gay doings possible before the hot weather begins. Some notable weddings have taken place both in the city and county and some are yet to come at which flowers and greens will be used in quantity.

STOCK IN GREAT SUPPLY.

There is not much of an encouraging nature to be said of the business of the last week. There was a great sufficiency of stock in all lines, in fact, so much so that it ran to waste. Some of this was saved by the street gentlemen who storm the markets on Fridays and try to make new low price records as each week end presents itself. It is as good as a circus to see these deals pulled off with the buyers generally getting the best of it. The quality of the stock is good for the season and considering the larger output owing to the increased glass area over that of a year ago the greater volume can be said to have been handled as profitably as that of last season, which shows the business to have been in a healthy condition. About the only flowers that seemed at times to sell out clean were sweet peas; almost everything else appeared to be slow to move. Lily of the valley, which was so scarce after Easter, is now to be had in quantity. Violets are done; they have held up very well. Lily of the valley, gardenias, orchids and sweet peas will take their place as flowers for the corsage. Gardenias are in more than good supply and are offered very low by the street men. The White Killarney while yet good has commenced to show the yellowish pink tinge that puts it out of the running, and as Kaiserin growers have commenced to drop out the few that still retain these and Brides should have a good market in the near future. Callas and Easter lilies are still very fine, but are offered low, there are so many coming in. Those who make a specialty of filling window boxes are now right in it. Buxus almost to a plant was winter killed the past season. Many boxes have already been filled with pansies and button daisies, and now the geraniums are going out. Where is the low-priced cement box? Some enterprising man should be able to put out an ornamental and yet moderate priced window box in stock sizes that would be light enough to handle without a derrick. Some very beautiful effects in large sizes for the windows or other ledges of hotels are seen but nothing for the ordinary thirty to forty-inch window ledge of the average city house has appeared.

NOTES.

Miss Anna Jarvis has gotten out a Mothers' day display card for florists' and other windows which should be used everywhere. She will furnish them by the hundred or thousand at a price very little above cost and much cheaper than they could be obtained from the printer in small lots. The display of the French hybrid hydrangeas exhibited at the meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Gardeners held last week in Horticultural Hall was a revelation. Pasadena Spring Flower Show.

The seventh annual flower show of the Pasadena Horticultural Society, which was held in Central Park April 11-14, was the largest ever held by the Pasadena gardeners, there being 201 classes in the premium list, nearly every class having more than one entry. The weather on the opening day was very unfavorable, so the exhibition was kept open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Sunday. It was generally considered the best, prettiest and most successful show ever held in the city. Among the large exhibitors were Howard & Smith of Los Angeles, who made an extensive exhibit of bulbous and perennial flowers. Mrs. S. W. Allerton (E. Kirby, gardener), won the cup for best 12 carnations, and also prize for cinerarias and best group of plants. Mrs. H. M. Singer (L. Brandt, gardener), was first on collection of ferns. Other exhibitors were the Germain Seed & Plant Co., ornamental trees; Coolidge Rose Plant Gardens, ornamental plants and fruits; Figueroa Street Nursery, Los Angeles, Japanese garden; Rose Nursery; Mentor Nursery; Edward H. Rust; John H. Teekamp, bulbous flowers; Montaroso Nursery of Santa Barbara, new flowering plants; Miss Sadie A. Thomas; Will S. Laurie, bulbs and cut flowers; Dean Iris Gardens, and A. J. Morris. The prizes for floral baskets arranged by the children of the sixth grade schools, of which there were 11 entries, were closely contested.

CONDITIONS BRIGHTER.

The market opened up this week with conditions seeming much brighter than for a fortnight. The cheap sales men cleaned up all the old stock Saturday and when the wholesalers opened Monday they began with an almost fresh supply of everything. The prevailing prices were the same as the previous week, but it was evident that conditions were brighter. Cooler weather the early part of this week helped considerably, for stock shipped from a distance arrived in the best condition possible and showed again mid-winter shipping conditions. The supply of roses is easily sufficient for wants and unless the demand grows greater quickly or the supply should drop will be so for a time. Some good American Beauties and Richmonds are included in the offerings. Lilies and carnations may be classed together in so far as their supply has been too large for the call. The latter were cleaned up at the end of the week at any price, while the former could not be. Sweet peas continue to sell fairly well and good bulb stock is cleaning up after a fashion. Choice gladioli and iris sell well. Some of the offerings in these lines are among the best this market has ever seen. Lily of the valley is none too plentiful and is enjoying a good call. But the experience of several months past with the flower has been that when there is plenty of it there is little call and when the supply is short everyone wants it. Business in decorative greens is good. The supply of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri is a trifle larger than required.

NOTES.

The marriage of Lawrence Fritz of C. E. Critchell's and Miss Norma Carins of Newport was duly solemnized on Saturday evening. Ed. Buschle acted as best man and his fiancée, Miss T. Schilderink, as bridesmaid. The newlyweds will reside in Newport.

Albert McCullough has been sending in some very good tulips and hyacinths from his private conservatories at Pleasant Ridge.

C. J. Jones is now a proud grandfather, since the visit of the stork at his son's home last week.

C. E. Critchell has been having quite a call from out of town for magnolia.

BAD WEATHER.

The wet weather caused somewhat of a depression, but as usual Saturday was good and the stock cleaned up. The loss of the S. S. Titanic has caused sorrow in many of the prominent New England homes, by the loss of some loved one in the family circle. Prominent Boston business men were among the victims, and in some of the towns around Boston there are sorrowing wives and children who have lost the support of the home. Those are the cases that more than mere sympathy should be extended to at this time.

SUPPLY EXCEEDS THE DEMAND.

The conditions of the wholesale cut flower market are still very unsatisfactory. The supply of stock of all kinds far exceeds the demand, and prices have dropped to the lowest level of the season. On Friday and Saturday the market was very active but the increased demand on those days was not sufficient to increase prices to any extent. American Beauties are not as plentiful as they have been, and there is more call for Mrs. Aaron Ward, Lady Hillingdon, Radiance and Mme. Chate-nay than the other varieties of roses. Carnations are of exceptionally good quality but there is only a fair demand for even the very best of them. The supply of orchids remains about the same, some of the varieties of cattleyas clearing out at very good figures. Gardenias are in over-supply. There is a good demand for lily of the valley of the best quality. Shipments of sweet peas are heavier, with a tendency to lower prices. Lilies are very abundant and the very finest have accumulated with the wholesale dealers in large quantities. Other bulbous stock is a glut everywhere. Outside lilac from the south of very good quality has made its appearance. Smilax and asparagus are selling as well as can be expected.

Monday, April 22.—The weather is very bad and stormy but the increased demand that was noticeable on Saturday seems to prevail today and the market is more active, though prices are still very low.

The bowling match on Wednesday evening, April 17, at Carlstadt alleys, N. J., when Rutherford rolled the New York team, was won by New York in two straight games. There was a good crowd, good spread and good reception. The scores follow and a return match will be played on Thum's alleys in the middle of May.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. are well pleased with the progress they have made since starting business here. Their specialties in roses were Mrs. Aaron Ward, Mrs. Waddell, Rhea Reid and Lady Hillingdon, and they are in very good demand and at times the supply is not equal to the call.

J. K. Allen has made extensive alterations in his store, the office being enlarged and many other improvements have been made. Mr. Allen did the largest business in his career at Easter time and if his business continues to grow he will have to seek much larger quarters.

Paul Meconi in addition to a fine supply of orchids and gardenias is receiving heavy shipments of lily of the valley and sweet peas of the very best quality.

OUTSIDE STOCK APPEARING.

The business of the past week was fair but not exceptional. Flowers are plentiful and the poorer grades are selling cheap, but good stock is not a glut. Lilac, dogwood and numerous other outdoor blossoms are now on the market and it is to be expected that they will have a run while they last. The quality of both purple and white lilac is much better than it was last year. This week sees the last of the violets and it is another case of "welcome the stranger, speed the parting guest," as violets are getting to be poor stock indeed. To replace them there is an abundance of orchids, lily of the valley and sweet peas, in fact it would be hard to name any commercial flower that is not now on the market in greater or less quantity.

NOTES.

A number of dinners and other society events that called for decorations have been cancelled on account of the Titanic horror. Major "Archie" Butt, the president's military aid, was a great favorite among the society people and they are correspondingly shocked and saddened over his tragic end. All reports agree that he faced death like the brave man that every officer and soldier of the United States is expected to be. Although the newspapers have given them scant mention it is doubtless a fact that there were also brave men in the steerage and in the engine and boiler rooms of the Titanic.

William Clark has a fine crop of the new white daisy, Mrs. Sander, disseminated last year by H. A. Dreer. About ninety per cent of the flowers are double, very attractive and sell well. Mr. Clark will soon have a fine cut of President Carnot roses but quite a number of his plants were killed by the severe frosts of last winter.

Herbert Wright, formerly gardener for Lars Anderson, has accepted a position with John R. McLean and will go to Bar Harbor, Me., to take charge of the gardening at the McLean summer home. Since Lars Anderson was appointed ambassador to Belgium his fine new residence in this city has been closed.

The Washington Florists' Co. has closed its store at 14th and R streets N. W. and after June 1 all the business will be conducted at the fine new store, 15th and H streets N. W.

The Gude Bros. Co. is now having a fine cut of American Beauty roses. A recent visit to their new range on the Bladensburg road showed fine crops of carnations, tea roses and sweet peas.

At the J. R. Freeman store we recently noticed a very nice stock of the small Japanese maples. This store is also showing some good stock of gladiolus.

William Lacey has succeeded his brother Robert as rose grower for F. H. Kramer. Robert Lacey is now in business for himself as a grower.

Elmer Mayberry, who as reported last week was struck by an automobile, is still confined to his home.

EXPORTERS

Connecticut Horticultural Society.

The meeting held April 12 was "Amaryllis night," and President Hnss exhibited some very beautiful specimens of potted plants in full bloom, and was accorded a vote of thanks, as was also J. Alfred Weber for a plate of mushrooms.

The feature of the evening was an address by George H. Hollister, foreman of Keney Park, Hartford, on the new Chestnut bark disease. Mr. Hollister attended the national conference on the subject, and is well versed in its details. He brought specimen limbs from the park, showing its different stages of development. He estimated that the monetary loss already sustained in this country, on account of this disease, approximates twenty million dollars, and some regard it as high as fifty millions. He traced its history from its supposed discovery, eight years ago, by Dr. Myrkle, in Bronx Park, New York, to the present day, during which time five hundred infected trees have had to be cut down in Keney Park. One hundred sixty-three towns in Connecticut have already reported its presence. The 17,000 chestnut trees in Bronx Park, he said, have had to be removed. Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and six or seven other eastern states, especially Pennsylvania, have this serious menace to their forests. Pennsylvania alone has appropriated $275,000 in its efforts to suppress it. Excision of the affected part of the tree does not avail, and nothing effectual has yet been found to stay its ravages. Mr. Hollister estimated that the entire destruction of the chestnut trees of the United States would mean a loss to the people of at least three hundred million dollars. He was cordially thanked, by vote, for his instructive discourse.

We are expecting to be soon favored by a lecture by Thomas Grey, of Boston, on the subject of "Some Observations of Horticulture in Europe."

GEORGE W. SMITH, Sec'y.

Lancaster Florists' Club.

A meeting of Lancaster Florists' Club was held on April 18 with a full attendance and several new members. Chas. B. Weaver of Ronks read a paper on "Sweet Peas" and exhibited fine vases of Mont Blanc, Mrs. Chas. H. Totty, Mrs. F. H. Dolansky and a selection from Earliest of All.

The usual fine display of carnations was staged with a very fine vase of Mrs. T. W. Lawson from a new source, Mr. Brackbill of Lampeter, Pa. It is really remarkable how fine Mrs. Lawson is grown by a few of our local growers. A committee was appointed to arrange for a summer picnic and it was suggested that at our next meeting several of the retail growers bring plants in and have a discussion as to what it costs to produce them and see if a more uniform rate of selling can not be established. A. M. HERR.

WAUKEGAN, ILL.—The Easter business increased about ten per cent over 1911, writes Theo. Meyer. Prices were about the same and there was a plentiful supply of plants and flowers. Lilies and hyacinths in plants and carnations and roses in cut flowers, were the most in demand. There was little call for tulips, either in pots or cut.

Salt Lake City.

The cut flower business in this city is far better than has ever been experienced before at this time of the year. Easter was a "hummer" the retail houses all report large sales and were worked to their full capacity. The wholesale houses were all cleaned up. The indications are that Memorial day will break all records, the greenhouses are all making preparations for that day which is the most profitable day of the year for the florists in this locality. The season has been very backward and consequently, they are all behind in their work, no planting out having been done yet.

NOTES.

The Miller Floral Co., the leading wholesale house in this locality, have decided to add two houses to their plant, 40x300 feet each, to meet the demands of their increasing business. The new houses will be planted to carnations.

Olaf Lingreen will erect one small house for propagating purposes.

CHANGEABLE WEATHER.

We have had changeable and unpleasant weather since Easter, but trade has been very good and the supply equal to all demands. The past week showed a tendency to be quiet owing to the near approach of moving time, consequently stock has been plentiful, especially Saturday, when all florists were selling violets at 25 cents per bunch of 50, the same as department stores. Roses also were made bargains, some selling at $1 a box of 20 roses and others selling at five cents each. One Main street store, not to be outdone by the others, gave roses away. It is needless to say that no one ventured to get lower than this. Many weddings of fair size are on the calendar for this week and during the month of May there will be several weddings, some large dinners and debutantes' receptions. The down town stores have had some very attractive windows lately.

NOTES.

Last week one of W. J. Palmer & Son's night men at the Lancaster plant was found brutally murdered in the boiler house and partly burned. He was found by the other night man who has charge of the other section and not hearing from him in an hour or more started on a search and found him murdered. There is a slight clue that the sheriff is working on which it is hoped will lead to the capture of the murderer.

F. C. W. Brown, of S. A. Anderson's, has his books of floral photographs ready, and they are the finest on the market.

John Kramer of Chippewa street expects to close his store May 11 and devote his time to his father's business.

S. A. Anderson has purchased a new Pierce automobile for delivery and it is a beauty.

The R. M. Rebstock Co. have got a new delivery car. BISON.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.—We had the finest Easter trade we ever had, being about forty per cent more than last year, writes Mrs. M. A. Hansen, notwithstanding that Easter Sunday was a rainy, cold and miserable day, which handicapped delivery very much. We could have sold more plants if we had had them and the prices on these were a little better than last year. Lilies, hydrangeas and rambler roses were most in demand, but everything in blooming plants sold well. The cut flower prices were about the same as a year ago, but the quality was not A1. Lilies and roses were the flowers most desired and snapdragons and stock sold well. It seems to us that it would be advisable for florists to provide themselves with plants, for the wholesale houses will ship "pickled" stock, may be not intentionally, but we received "sleepy" carnations from four places, obtaining good stock from only one.

The Seed Trade.

American Seed Trade Association.

Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago, President; Marshall H. Duryea, New York, First Vice-President; Edgar Gregory, Marblehead, Mass., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, Ohio, Secretary and Treasurer. Next annual convention at Chicago, June 25-27, 1912.

AT Chicago only white bottom onion sets are available now, prices $2.75 to $3.00 per bushel.

WESTERN grown alfalfa seed is scarce, even Kansas planters being reported as using imported seed.

J. C. VAUGHAN, Chicago seedsman, nurseryman and florist, wound up the sixth decade, April 23, with a full day's work and several hours' overtime.

MAIL trade is holding remarkably well in the west and the demand for seed potatoes, corn and onion sets continues very brisk at record prices.

PASADENA, CALIF., April 15.—We have had a total of 17.54 inches of rain for the season, which I think will do more good than the 24 inches of last year.—H.

BOSTON, MASS.—Thomas J. Grey Co. report a record seed trade and the orders in implements have been very large. The demand for lawn grass seed is the best they have ever had.—MAC.

CHICAGO.—Prices on the Board of Trade, April 24, for grass seed were noted as follows: Timothy, $7 to $13 per 100 pounds.—Fire at the Heinz pickle plant, South Clark street, April 24, caused more than $200,000 loss.

NEW YORK.—Ralph M. Ward, of Ralph M. Ward & Co., sailed on the steamer George Washington for Europe, where he will visit the various connections of his firm, and attend the London flower show in May. In June Mr. Ward will sail from England for China and Japan, returning to New York in the fall.

THE Hotel Sherman will be headquarters for the annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association at Chicago June 25-27. Arrangements have been made to take care of 300 guests at special prices and reservations should be made at once, by writing the hotel management direct, so as to secure rooms specified. The rates are $2 to $6, European plan, each room having a private bath.

SAN JOSE, CALIF.

California Seed Crops.

San Jose, April 17.—Conditions in seed growing sections of California are materially improved since the last rain, though some sections are backward in growth owing to drought of winter. In the Santa Clara valley we have had 9.04 inches of rain to date; average here is 15.25 inches, so it will be readily seen that we are far below the normal precipitation and will require late showers to mature the seed.—E.

California Bean Growers.

Whether the Lima Bean Growers' association is a trust, or is doing business strictly in accordance with the laws of the country, is a matter the department of justice at Washington will decide as a result of the report submitted to it by a government investigator after a searching inquiry into the methods of the association, its books and accounts, made at the association's office in Oxnard and just concluded. Should it be found a trust, prosecution may follow. If its business methods are legitimate, a clean bill of health will be issued it by the attorney general. Following the announcement of the fact that an investigation of the association has been made by a representative of the department of justice, J. M. Waterman, manager of the association, declared the inquiry has been made at the instance of the directors of the association.

"The lima bean growers banded together the better to preserve their mutual interests and to eliminate the middlemen's profits and manipulation by professional dealers of the bean market," explained Waterman. "Some dealers, and others, robbed of the profits they used to make out of our industry and labor, raised the cry that we were a trust. To set these charges at rest, I personally visited the department of justice and requested an investigation of our affairs. A government agent was sent to Oxnard and thoroughly examined our books, accounts and methods of doing business.

"This agent will now report to the department the results of his inquiry, and as a result, we know that our association will be held to be doing business according to law. It was for the purpose of obtaining such a decision, which will kill the charge that we are a trust, that we solicited the investigation that has just been concluded."

Seed Catalogues.

The almost simultaneous arrival of many seed catalogues does not strike us as irony in this awful weather. They are almost as potent as summer to make us forget the mud that is splashing in the streets and the gloom which is mud in atmospheric solution.

There is no optimist like the seedsman, for no bagman has such stores to unfold. We are not asked to buy lightning-conductors or insurance policies against days of woe, but to buy banners for a well-assured season of joy. For we find no room in a real seed list for those lugubrious pages some unknowing merchants give us of slug poisons, aphid brushes and other apparatus of strife. We buy such things of the ironmonger or chemist, and we prepare for the reading of the flower lists that contain them by tearing them out.

It is impossible to learn from these bright pages what are the favorite flowers of him who prepared them. He seems to reserve the superlatives of praise for each of them, though on close attention his words are but plain statements of the unique merits of each. Every genus of flowers and almost every species has its method of flowering, its texture of petal, its quality of color, and even its own tints that no other group shares. There is every kind of lateral difference, but no more question of superiority and inferiority than there is between the several notes in a scale of music.—London Nation.

I Have Been Dubbed The Dahlia Crank

I do not dislike the title, for I have been informed that it signifies an ENTHUSIAST—and I acknowledge that I am.

I have carried on a systematic study and trial tests for many years, increasing the list with novelties from abroad and at home, discarding as well as adding—and have at present perhaps the largest list of varieties grown by any one person up-to-date.

For want of ground, as well as advancing years I am willing to dispose of much of my stock having a surplus over actual needs. Send for my descriptive list and prices.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, April 22.—Mushrooms, 40 cents to 45 cents per pound; radishes, 15 cents to 50 cents per dozen bunches; lettuce, 22½ cents to 25 cents, small cases; cucumbers, $1 to $1.35 per dozen.

New York, April 20.—Mushrooms, 40 cents to $1.25 per 4-pound basket; cucumbers, 75 cents to $1 per dozen; tomatoes, 10 cents to 25 cents per pound; radishes, $1.50 to $2.00 per 100 bunches; lettuce, $1 to $1.50 per strap; rhubarb, 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen bunches. $3 to $5 per 100 bunches; mint, 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen bunches.

Growing Watercress.

Many gardeners have learned the satisfaction of having a bit of parsley and mint growing in the garden. Once in the ground they care for themselves and furnish appetizing additions to soups, salads and meats, that are always at hand. Why not add watercress? says The Rural Californian. It is not even necessary to have running water to grow good watercress. It can be grown in moist soil in a box or half barrel, or in any pool, or ditch, or shallow watercourse. All you have to do to start it is to sow a little seed, or plant a few freshly cut branches. The cress grows wild in nearly every little stream in California, but you may as well have it in your own yard. The tender tips and leaves are delicious for salad in place of lettuce, or may be used in combination with it. A salad every one likes is watercress with little balls of cottage cheese or soft cream cheese with French dressing. It also adds taste when cooked with spinach greens.

Sprouting Seeds.

The method of soaking or sprouting seeds before planting is well known and much practiced by the nurserymen and should have a place in the market gardens. The main objection is we find that our average seed drills will not handle damp seeds. On that account we can often apply the method to such seeds only as we plant by hand. The object of advance soaking may be various; at times we can secure and hold an earlier start; next we may wish to be sure of an even stand; again the moisture in the field may recede gradually, thus giving dry seeds no time to get a hold; we may wish to get ahead of weeds, which is of great importance with slow seeds like parsley and celery, or we may wish to cover a longer period of germination by mixing dry and sprouted seeds to avoid damage by frosts or insects.

At this writing we have a field of spinach, the seed for which was sprouted in a hotbed and then broadcasted; we were lucky to strike a few nice days just when the seeds were ready and the result is we will very likely have the market for a week to ourselves. Frames which have held cabbage and lettuce plants we sowed to celery and by the sprouting method we have a stand of celery only a few days after the sowing.

While under treatment the seeds need attention. We place them in flats, pots or pans according to quantity and water thoroughly; place in proper temperature and cover with wet cloth or paper. Every day we stir thoroughly and examine moisture; if allowed to sprout uniformly they are lost—hence we must get them out before the germs show or at least as soon as the first appear.

MARKETMAN.

GOUVERNEUR, N. Y.—J. T. Humphrey, who last year leased the Brainard greenhouses and renovated them, has had a very fine season and an excellent Easter trade. The rebuilding of the houses was not completed in season for the growing of flowers and lettuce was planted during the winter which has had a splendid sale.

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen
 J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O., President;
 W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass., Vice-
 President; John Hall, Rochester, N. Y., Sec'y.
 Thirty-seventh annual convention to be held at Boston, Mass., June 12-14, 1912.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—To stimulate an interest in Arbor day the L. S. Donaldson Co. offered to distribute 50,000 young trees to the public school children.

The nursery trade is having very serious difficulties in executing orders this month. The lingering of winter in the lap of March delayed nursery operations very much.

A New Fruit Enemy in New York.

In a limited section of the Hudson valley the pear orchards were severely damaged in 1911 by an insect which the entomologist of the State Experiment Station discovered to be the pear thrips, which have been a destructive insect in California for several years, but were unknown in the east, states the bulletin of the station. These little insects reduced the crop of Kieffer pears from one-third to nine-tenths or even more. Bartlett's and Clapp's Favorites were not seriously injured, but other varieties were badly affected. These thrips are very small, being only one-twentieth of an inch long, and emerge from the soil the last of April and first of May, attack the opening flowers, puncturing the center and sucking the juice. The injured buds cease to grow and the whole blossom cluster becomes stunted and shrivelled. As they are a sucking insect they cannot be reached by internal poisons but must be destroyed by contact insecticides. The nicotine preparations are effective when combined with soap or kerosene emulsion, and two or three sprayings are required when the buds are swollen and partly open and until they are entirely open at the tips, and to secure the greatest benefit the spraying mixture should be applied in liberal quantities as a coarse driving spray, holding the nozzle fairly close to the buds in order to force the liquid into the ends of the buds.

Early Flowers in Arnold Arboretum.

There are already many flowers to be seen in the Arnold Arboretum, states the Bulletin of April 18. The elms, and the red maple, the poplars and some of the hazels are in flower. The flowers of the silver maple are already falling. Many of the alders are now covered with their delicate flowers. One of the most interesting of these is the Japanese Alnus tinctoria. This is a medium sized shapely tree with smooth pale bark and large dark green leaves, two specimens of which were raised from seeds brought from Japan by Professor Sargent in 1892 and have grown more rapidly and to a larger size than any of the plants of that collection. This is a good time, too, to examine the willows, as many of the shrubby species are in flower.

The first plant to bloom in the shrub collection is Daphne Mezereum where the white flowered form has been flowering for more than a week. This small shrub, of which there are several forms in cultivation, is a native of the mountains of Europe and western Asia. It is valuable for its very early fragrant flowers, appearing with or before the leaves, and for its showy scarlet fruits. Two native shrubs are masses of blooms. The first, the Spice Bush (Benzoin activale), is a common inhabitant of northern swamp borders. It is a tall shrub with slender branches on which the small yellow flowers are now opening. The male and female flowers are found on different individuals, so that only some of the plants bear the small, bright scarlet, shining fruits which are so attractive in the autumn. The leaves, which are fragrant like those of its relative the sassafras, are uninjured by insects and turn bright yellow before falling. This is one of the common shrubs which should be better known by gardeners. Just above the Spice Bushes is a group of the Leatherwood (Dirca palustris), which in the perfection of its specimens is one of the most successful groups in the Arboretum. The Leatherwood is valuable for its small but very early and abundant yellow flowers which appear before the leaves and will soon be fully open. It owes its common name to the toughness of the bark of the branches. The geographical distribution of the genus is unusual, as of its two species one is widely distributed in the eastern United States and the other is found only in California.

The Deacon and the "Hoss"

A True Story with a Moral.

Terse Talk No. 5.

OUR minister's horse strayed away last Sunday, and he couldn't find him. So he went over to Deacon Jones for help. Very soon afterwards the deacon came up the yard leading the horse; "How did you get him so soon?" asked the surprised minister. "Well, after you had gone, I just sat down and figured where I'd go if I was a hoss—then I went there an' there he was." The deacon sure had horse sense.

It's a thing some of the so-called "wise growers" need to get a supply of. When it comes to building, for instance, some of them go pretty much every place for their materials but to the right place—a greenhouse concern. They buy their cypress material of a planing mill—their boiler of some second-hand dealer. They have a foundry cast a few crude fittings, and so on. After wasting their time and money that way, they finally wake up and go tell Deacon Jones their troubles. He "jest naturally" sends them to Hitchings & Co. because he knows that it's only horse sense, that a firm who has been making greenhouse building and equipping their sole business for over half a century, ought to thoroughly know their business. You can laugh at the deacon's chin whiskers, but you can't get around his horse sense.

Let you and I at once have a good old fashioned horse sense talk on that house you are going to build. Write and tell us when you can see us.

Our Two-Column, 60-Foot Iron Frame House

HERE is a safe house because it is made a safe way. A few years ago our first 40-foot Iron Frame House having only two small columns was much the talk. Some of the old gray beards shook their heads and "had their doubts if such a house, 700 feet long, would stand the wind and snow strain."

Since then we have built many "4" footers." During the last year we did a lot of hard thinking about how an equally safe house, half as wide again, could be made with the same number of columns. We knew that it was not safe engineering practice to put the strain of that immense roof on the side posts and fittings at the ridge, which was bound to be the case if supported by trusses alone.

We also realized that a series of trusses that were brought in place "by a nut and thread tension plan" were dangerous, as any sudden, unexpected strain might strip the threads, and should this occur on several of the trusses' the roof would be in great danger of collapse. It was evident that to keep watch of these innumerable tension truss rods was out of the question.

Knowing these things, we have gone slow—slow, but sure—and now here is a house 60 feet wide, that is stiffened between the two columns, spaced 29 feet apart, by an angle iron compression truss, which is formed by bolting the angle irons directly to the fish plates and the column and ridge fittings. No trussing between the iron rafters is necessary.

You get nine 4-feet 6-inch benches; two 24-inch side-walks and eight 22-inch walks.

If you want more particulars of this house, write us. Or, better yet, call at any of our offices.

Indianapolis, and if the mines remain dormant hereafter it will be to enable the accumulated storage coal to reach consuming channels. The opinion prevails that entirely too much coal is above ground for the good of the trade. The Chicago Great Western Railroad Company found itself with some seventeen hundred cars of steam coal on its hands for which it has no immediate use now that the strike clouds have dissipated; the same can be said also of the storage coal developed by other railroads, notably the Rock Island, Pennsylvania, Illinois Central, Chicago & Alton, and other carriers. In view of so much coal in evidence the operators are reluctant to admit the mines will open anyway soon, and it may be the Hot-Bed Sash, Too.

Houston, Texas.

One of the most severe hail and rain storms that has visited this section in years passed over the city April 16, and greatly damaged roses and shrubbery and beat down vegetable and flower gardens. H. H. Kuhlman's houses on Jackson street were almost demolished by hail, 95 per cent of the glass broken and the plants damaged by the second hail storm which followed, 6,000 lilies in bud were cut and bruised, the loss being 85 per cent. Roses, geraniums and bedding stock were all damaged, and his loss will be nearly $3,000. R. C. Kerr's city houses were fairly riddled but the house on Westheimer road did not suffer so badly. He estimates his loss at $1,000. The Hauser & Sons Floral Co. sustained damage to the extent of $2,000 to $3,000, the glass being practically all broken and plants destroyed. It will take 400 boxes of glass to replace that which was broken.

NOTES.

H. H. Kuhlman opened a new store March 21 at 919 Capitol avenue. He is cutting some very fine Spanish iris.

Charles Ehlers is now nicely located on Capitol street, and reports business as very good. His loss from hail and the storm was small.

Hauser & Sons Floral Co. will open a store opposite the post office. J. H. Hauser will manage the store at 708 San Jacinto street. ABYDOS.

MONTREAL, QUE., CAN.—The quality of both plants and flowers was well above the average, the prices of some of the stock were better, and the increase in the amount of Easter business was about 10 per cent. There was a good supply of plants and flowers, lilies in pots being in short supply and carnations in cut flowers, but everything sold well.—LUCK.

¶ You don't need to burn out your fire trying to get heat quickly into the greenhouse farthest from your boiler. A Castle Automatic Circulator

will force the hot water throughout the system and do it without putting on a pressure that is liable to cause leakage. It does it by mechanically setting the water in motion and keeping it moving until the desired heat is just where you want it.

The Castle Circulator has entirely cured the faults of hot-water systems which could not be satisfactorily operated before it was put in. We would like to show you the results of tests.

Our new booklet tells how the circulator works.

The Cost of a Leak

Conservative figures convincingly demonstrate the economy of Everlasting blow-off valves.

As an example to point, engineers estimate that the loss of one gallon of water under steam pressure equals one pound of coal.

Therefore, a blow cock leaking 2 cu. ft. per hour involves a loss of 15½ lbs. of coal, 372 lbs. in 24 hours, or 5.72 tons per 30 days. At $3.00 per ton this equals $17.16, or more than 10 per cent. over the initial cost of a 2½-in. non-leaking Everlasting blow-off valve.

Besides being non-leaking, the Everlasting valve has other points that will commend themselves to you strongly.

Our booklet and test offer will interest you.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Callas.

As the summer weather approaches the callas will cease producing flowers and will require a rest to prepare them for another year. They should be dried off gradually until they become "dust dry," when the roots will be thoroughly ripened. If watered the calla will grow all the year round, but plants grown this way will not produce as many flowers as those that are rested. Those grown in pots can be laid on their sides in the greenhouse until all danger from freezing weather is passed when they can be removed outdoors, still placing the pots on the side in full sunlight. Those grown on the bench can be lifted with as much soil as possible and placed under the bench where they will dry out gradually and later planted in the full sun outside in a dry location, and as soon as thoroughly ripened shaken out and stored until wanted to start for another season. The yellow calla, Richardia Elliottiana, is being grown more largely and the blooms have been used the last winter in many elaborate decorations. The culture of these is in pots and similar to the older varieties.

Marguerites for Winter.

To have good marguerites for winter flowers the plants must have a good start in the spring, for large plants the stock should now be in 2½ or 3-inch pots and growing vigorously, but if the cuttings have not been made they can now be propagated in a cool bench and good-sized plants grown, or stock should be secured at once. Do not allow these plants to become pot bound but shift them into 4-inch pots as soon as they require it and pot very firmly. Keep the plants pinched back that they may branch more freely and keep all flowers and buds picked off. For many years these plants were grown in the open ground but in some localities they have been attacked with a club root in field culture and inside culture has become necessary for success. A cold frame in which the pots are plunged is the culture successfully practiced by many growers. In late summer they should be potted in large pots, 8-inch or 9-inch, or planted in the bench in good rich soil, so that they will be well established for fall and winter flowering. The plants grown in pots are more prolific in flowering and the size of the flowers can be maintained with liquid manure. Aphids should be kept down by fumigation and the leaf miner is a very destructive insect if once firmly established, but persistent spraying with strong nicotine solution will eradicate this pest.

Asters.

The early and midseason asters should be planted out as early as the season will allow. If the plants are hardened off for two or three weeks in a cold frame and gradually given night air as soon as safe, they will endure the outside temperature much better than those carried directly from the warm greenhouses. The land should be prepared at once, and while asters will grow on almost any piece of ground the success or failure depends much on the proper preparation of the soil. Land that was manured last fall and ploughed is by far the best, and all that will be required in the spring is a shallow ploughing or discing and then leveled. It is well not to level off too large a tract at once for heavy rains occur at this season which pack the soil down hard. Before planting give the young plants a thorough watering and if in boxes or the bench cut through the rows with a knife a day before planting. Lay the field out in rows from 15 to 20 inches apart, giving the branching varieties the greater distance, with a wider space every fifth or sixth row to provide a walk when cutting the flowers, and set the plants from 12 to 18 inches apart. Plant with a trowel, for the plants set in a dibbled hole will not take hold as quickly, and with the early asters the slight difference in time taken in planting is more than made up in the early blooming; the dibble packs the soil around the plant and the roots do not grow into it as freely, and the roots are also contracted in the small hole made by the dibble. As soon as the field is planted, if possible, give the plants a good watering and then cultivate lightly with a wheel hoe to loosen up the soil.

Primulas.

For plants of both P. sinensis and obconica for blooming next spring May is the best time to sow the seed, which germinates very readily at this time, but if this is delayed until June it will often be found quite difficult to get the seed to start well, and as the young seedlings grow very slowly they will require constant attention during the warm weather, for a few hours sun when they are dry will cause the loss of all the plants. The soil should be sifted in a fine sieve as the seed is very small and they should not be covered with the soil, but sown thinly on the soil when loose and then pressed flat with a board. Watering should be done with a very fine rose on the can so as not to wash the seeds or soil. At this season of the year the seed will germinate readily in almost any greenhouse but it is well to cover the seed pan or box with glass to prevent too rapid evaporation and until the plants begin to make growth keep the pots well shaded. Many growers wrap a piece of paraffine paper around the glass that is placed on the seed pan, this allows plenty of light to germinate the seed and will prevent the direct rays of the sun from burning up the young seedlings when they start to grow. As these young plants grow very slowly some soils will often become caked or scaly and if this occurs the top should be carefully broken up to allow the air to enter. As soon as three or four leaves are formed put in 2½-inch pots, not too deeply, but yet deep enough to have them stand erect. They should then be placed in a cool house and much of the success of their culture depends upon the care and watering in their early growth. They are a moisture-loving plant and should never become dry, yet they are easily over-watered and will not make a good growth if continually kept soaked, frequent and light waterings are the best. A lightly shaded frame with the pots plunged in the soil and the sash lifted at top and bottom for a free circulation of air is the best location for summer culture.

Pansies.

The sale of pansy plants will soon be at its height and there is nothing that the florist or grower sells upon which more time is wasted than in selecting a small order of pansies if the customer is shown a frame of a few thousand plants. The better way is to have boxes or baskets holding a dozen plants all made up for the customer. It is not necessary to put up more than will be required for one or two days' sale, but as fast as sold keep the stock replenished. There are many patrons who will be well satisfied with a good selection already placed in a basket who will take an hour of a salesman's time in making their choice out of a frame. Any late seedlings should be planted in the frames at once, and these will make fine plants for late May or June planting when the older plants are either sold or have become too large for bedding purposes.

Mothers' Day.

Mothers' day occurs the second Sunday in May—May 12—this year, that day having been chosen by Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia, founder of the day, as that on which all should honor the memory of their mother, it being the anniversary of the day upon which her mother passed away. In the issue of THE AMERICAN FLORIST of last week April 27, page 810, appeared an article giving a history of the day and stating the manner in which it should be observed. The governors of thirty states and the mayors of many cities, issued proclamations last year requesting the citizens to observe the day and in the public press throughout the country appeared many articles giving publicity to the inception, the objects and the manner of observing the day, that is the wearing of a white carnation in honor of one's mother. Churches made the day the subject of the service and sermons were delivered upon the theme of mother and Mothers' day, one clergyman using these words, "Best of all, if you wear the white flower, someone will ask you the reason why, and your answer will make them do likewise, and God only knows the good that your suggestion and example will do that one's soul."

The observance of the day can be greatly assisted by the florists of the country, not only by attracting the attention of the public by neatly printed showcards in the window or the store, but by giving to the papers such knowledge and matter as is at their command, and they are only too glad to publish the same, and by inserting appropriate advertisements inform the public as to the day and the manner in which it is observed. Last year many florists gave to their local papers the articles which appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST and extracts were made from them by the editors, and these with attractive advertisements are reported to have created a great demand for carnations and other flowers.

Mothers' day is founded upon sentiment and it comes at a date when flowers are very plentiful, still the demand was so large in many places that white carnations were entirely sold out the day before. There is danger, however, in advancing the price to any point which the public would regard as an extortion. They are willing to pay a fair advance, but will not allow sentiment to be the cause of their being held up. To obviate this, many dealers anticipating that the supply of white carnations would not be sufficient, advocated the white carnation for the departed mother and colored for the living. The Iowa Seed Co. and other florists of Des Moines, Ia., inserted in their advertisements "A white flower for mother's memory, a bright flower for mothers living," and this resulted in relieving the demand which would otherwise have been created for white alone. The Brown Floral Co. of Canton, O., not only through publicity by giving to the daily press of the city the account of Mothers' day which appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST and which they published and by appropriate advertising informed the public, but Charles Brown, the proprietor, in memory of his mother, donated 3,000 carnations, the cut of one day, to the churches and to the hospitals, workhouse and county jail that the unfortunates there confined might honor "the best mother in the world, their mother." The result of thus attracting the attention of the people was a general observance of Mothers' day in the whole city.

The founding of Mothers' day was to Miss Jarvis a work of love, but it has not only entailed a vast amount of work in keeping up the correspondence required, but also quite an expense. Each year this has been larger and it has now become quite a burden. At the April meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, the matter of assisting Miss Jarvis pecuniarily or otherwise was discussed, for her labors have resulted in great assistance to the florists. She has this year had printed display cards for florists' and other windows and these can be obtained by addressing her at 2031 North Twelfth street, Philadelphia Pa., by those who have no advertising card of their own. And the work which she has performed is well worth recognition by those who have profited by her labor of love and sentiment.

Wedding Flowers at Washington, D C.

One of the most noticeable wedding decorations of the Washington season was executed by Z. D. Blackstone on April 24 for the wedding of Miss Louise Chapin Fletcher, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Duncan Upshaw Fletcher of Florida, to Dr. Thomas J. Kemp. The marriage took place at All Souls' Unitarian church, which President Taft attends.

The decorations in the church were rich in American Beauty roses and the finest of spring blossoms. After the wedding a brilliant reception was held in the banquet room of Rancher, the leading caterer of the city where the decorations were equally elaborate. The illustrations show part of the bouquets, there being ten bridesmaids.

French Floral Industry.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS.

Chiefly agricultural, the Department of the Var is more largely interested in open-air flower and bulb culture than any other region in France, writes Consular Agent Francis Miltoun Mansfield, Toulon. According to the statistics of the departmental professor of agriculture the bulk of the area given over to horticulture is that devoted to flowering bulbs, grown for the bulbs (of which there were exported to the United States in 1911 nearly $200,000 worth) and for their blooms, which, during the winter season, are shipped to the wholesale flower markets of Paris, London, and Berlin by special train leaving the coast towns each night.

LARGE AREA IN FLOWERS.

The most extensive area noted in 1911 was that devoted to the narcissus, 3,552.54 acres, followed by hyacinths, 717.75 acres, and Lilium candidum, 395.36 acres. This total, which does not take count of the freesia, gladiolus, ranunculus, or the violet, had approximately the same acreage as in 1910, with a certain gain in area of Lilium candidum and about the same loss on hyacinths.

There are, in addition, 1,465.3 acres devoted to violets and 212.5 acres to mimosa. Approximately 100 acres are given to growing perfume plants—jasmine, roses, tuberose, mint, etc. This latter returns a crop valued at $20,000 annually, a small total as compared with the extent of the crop of similar plants farther east on the coast in the neighborhood of Cannes and Grasse. The industry is developing, however, and with the recent establishment of a perfume distillery at Hyeres a considerable increase in the crop volume of perfume plants is looked for within the next two years.

The average return per hectare (2.47 acres) is 1,000 to 1,200 francs ($78 to $93 an acre), which, considering that this comes largely from cut flowers, seems a low return according to American standards.

Immortelles, or "everlastings," cover an area of 531.25 acres and produce a crop valued at $38,600, of which nearly 75 per cent is exported to the United States. Including all the horticultural products of the Department of the Var (of which immortelles and flowering bulbs only are exported to the United States), there has been a steady annual increase, averaging 20 per cent.

In general, the bulb crop of narcissus, hyacinth, and Lilium candidum was large in 1911, particularly of the finer varieties. Prices at the beginning of the shipping season (July 1) were high. As the season approached its end, desirable stock was seeking buyers at reduced prices, and it is claimed that there was some "dumping." If this occurred, it did not appear from the consular invoices on file at this office. It is quite possible, however, that a certain part of this overstock was shipped to Holland and may even have found its way thence to the United States later in the season as Holland-grown bulbs. It is thought by many that for the 1912 season there will be somewhat of a curtailment in quantity of bulbs grown, or at least offered, with the idea that this will sustain market prices, which in a very large degree are speculative, because the grower is seldom a shipper.

SYNDICATION—ROSE SHORTAGE.

At Ollioules and Hyeres many of the small growers reach the market through their "syndicate," but with the competitive Narcissus grandiflora offered at $3.50 per 1,000 by outsiders the generally agreed upon syndicate rate of $3.85 was this season often broken. The Roman hyacinth, which in some instances reached the desired $20 or more per 1,000, later fell to $15.50 and even less. The marketing of the bulb crop through the growers' unions or syndicates undoubtedly sustains and even raises prices. In a dozen years this has caused an advance in Roman hyacinths from $5.40 to $15.50 and more, and in Narcissus grandiflora from $2.30 to $3.85.

These shipping syndicates are an advantage to the buyer in offering a certain implied guaranty as to the quality of the stock shipped, so that claims are seldom made against them for rotted or damaged bulbs. A few years ago unscrupulous individuals made such shipments, their inducements being prices very much below the market quotation. This class of middlemen has practically disappeared, at least so far as they are able to extend relations in the United States.

A horticultural journal recently referred to a bulb-sorting machine lately adopted in Holland, doubtless a machine similar to the average potato sorter. The subject was mentioned by the writer to various bulb growers and shippers hereabouts, who ridiculed the idea, denying the possibility of any method of mechanical sorting without injuring the stock. There is certainly no disposition on the part of growers here to make use of anything but the inexpensive hand labor of men, women and girls for all operations of growing and shipping flowering bulbs.

Roses and carnations are not so largely grown in the immediate neighborhood of Toulon as in the vicinity of Antibes, but their culture shows a steady annual increase. This is natural, as the demand of the Paris dealers for cut roses during the winter months is in excess of the supply. Large quantities are imported into France from the Italian Riviera coast towns, and because of an embargo laid upon their importation on January 10, 1912, attention has been called to the possibility of further developing rose culture in this vicinity.

With modern methods of packing, chiefly in reed or cane flat baskets, to hold three and five kilos (shipped by hundreds of thousands from the Mediterranean coast towns by parcel post during the winter months), hyacinths, narcissus, carnations, violets, roses, tuberoses, ranunculus and mimosa are now successfully shipped to London, Berlin, and St. Petersburg, as well as to Paris.

PARCEL POST HELPS INDUSTRY.

The parcel-post service handling this special traffic is exceptionally well organized, expeditious and cheap. It is this that may be said to have given the real impetus to the cut-flower industry of the French Riviera. Developing upon the same idea the system has recently been widened in scope, so that 12,355 acres are now devoted to early truck-garden vegetables (tomatoes, eggplant, artichokes, carrots, leeks, cauliflowers, peas, beans, etc.), in the Department of the Var. These vegetables can now be sent on express-speed trains in parcels weighing 20 to 40 kilos (44.09 to 88.18 pounds), at 30 cents to $1.45, delivered at the address of the consignee. This may prove one solution for the high cost of living by supplying early fresh vegetables economically. While this new service was established for agricultural products, its scope allows meat, game, fish, and eggs to be sent under the same classification.

The floricultural industry, especially in the cut-flower branch, is continually undergoing changes and development, with a general increase in volume. As to the methods of marketing both horticultural and purely agricultural products in these parts, there is a notable tendency toward syndication among farmers and growers as well as among middlemen and shippers. The flower and bulb growing and shipping syndicates have accomplished much toward beneficial legislation affecting their interests, as well as establishing and verifying credits and customs in the trade.

NEW DISTRICT.

A region newly opened to flower culture on an extensive scale is that lying along the coast between Toulon and St. Tropez, following closely the Mediterranean shore and the narrow-gauge railway line of the Chemin de Fer du Sud. From rather slow and timid beginnings the district is at last taking its place among the flower-growing centers of southern France. The importance of the district may be gathered from the number of parcel-post shipments of cut flowers from various points along the coast during the winter season of 1910-1911, which aggregated 133,227 to French cities and 44,258 to foreign countries. The total weight of these separate parcels amounted to 2,421,066 pounds.

Floral Work at University of Illinois.

With every climatic condition favoring the early open-air growth of roses, carnations, violets, and hyacinths, this little-known strip of Mediterranean shore promises expansion in this industry and may become a new source of direct supply for Paper White and Grandiflora narcissus and the Roman hyacinth. The latter are now the specialties of what may be called the Toulon district, which in area comprises the Mediterranean coast region lying between St. Cyr, Bandol, and Ollioules on the west and Ste. Maxime on the east, with the inclusion of another narrow strip lying in the valley of the Gapeau and the Real-Marin cutting into the foothills of the mountain background.

IRRIGATION—SMALL GROWERS.

Irrigation is often employed and while primarily cultivation is in the open, plants are often protected on chilly nights by coverings of straw or reed matting. Cultivation is seldom practiced under glass frames or in the more elaborate greenhouses such as are used in America. Many of the plantations are on the most modest scale, the grower turning his crop over to the commission agent for an almost immediate cash return. This applies to early vegetable, bulb, and cut-flower growing alike.

Floral Work at the University of Illinois.

During the past half semester four students in floriculture have been taking the course in floral decoration. The object of this course is to give the students a knowledge of decorative materials and their uses. The lectures of the course covered such subjects as decorative materials, accessory materials, studies in arrangements and such other points as are of interest to the decorator. The laboratory work consisted in the preparation of designs, sprays, baskets and other floral arrangements. The course was completed on April 4. Early in February the class made a trip to Lafayette, Ind., to study the details of the new work shop of the F. Dorner & Sons Co.

Before the close of the course it was decided that an exhibition of decorative work should be held on April 20 in the auditorium of the university. Miss Emily Dorner of Lafayette, Ind., took part in the exhibition and assisted the students in the preparation of the various floral arrangements. About twelve hundred university and town people attended the exhibition. Each visitor was presented with a flower as a souvenir. The various exhibits were numbered and catalogued as are the paintings at an art exhibition. The catalogue was neatly printed in the form of a programme and gave a description of the flowers used in each of the thirty pieces exhibited.

Temperature for Bedding Plants and Ferns

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

Will you kindly inform me at what temperature the house should be maintained in which are grown vincas, geraniums and other bedding stock and ferns. E. M.

There are several species of ferns and they do not all require the same treatment, and "E. M." does not state what ferns he desires to grow, but they all require a house with a night temperature of at least 60° and some warmer than this. This is a little too warm for geraniums and vincas, but they can be grown in this temperature if carefully attended to and hardened off in a cold frame before planting out, for grown in so high a temperature they will be very soft. Coleus and the bedding stock requiring more heat would grow in this temperature. It would be best to have the ferns at the warmer end of the house where they can be shaded, and the cool bedding stock at the cooler end and they will require all the sun they can get.

W.

FLORISTS' FERNS.

Nephrolepis and Other Ferns

The various forms of nephrolepis still take a most prominent place among the florist's ferns, and these useful plants find a ready sale in spring for many purposes, and at that season are sometimes found in short supply. For outdoor use, for example, for porch boxes, or for porch specimens, it is doubtful if any nephrolepis has more good points than the original Boston fern. Its vigorous growth and graceful outline being well adapted to such uses.

But where a more compact plant is needed there are N. Scottii and N. Scholzellii to choose from, and these may also be used for outdoor work during the summer if needed, one purpose to which they are well adapted being in the form of an edging for a bed of foliage plants. It is better that these ferns should be used in a partly shaded position if possible, but it is also surprising how much sunshine they will stand, provided that they are given an abundance of water. When fully exposed to the sun these ferns naturally make a shorter growth than they do in the shade, and plants that are to be used in such a manner should be prepared for it by having an abundance of sun and air while they are in the greenhouse.

The young stock of the nephrolepis will also need attention at this season, the stock plants that are planted out on benches throwing out runners freely as the days grow longer, and as fast as the runners make roots and crowns they may be taken off and potted up, giving the young plants some shade until they become established, but afterward an abundance of light to induce a short and stocky growth. Later on these young plants may be potted two or three together in 5-inch pots, in order to make bushy stock quickly, and with proper care will soon make salable stock. When pot-bound, the nephrolepis enjoy rich feeding, liquid manure being the safest fertilizer to use, but at this season the only plants that are likely to need such treatment are those that have not been repotted since last autumn, and a little extra fertilizer will help much in keeping such plants in color.

Adiantum Farleyense usually begins to grow in April, and it is therefore a good time to divide the plants that are needed for stock, bearing in mind that the divisions of the crowns of this fern must have shade and bottom heat to start them into growth. A mixture of sand and sphagnum moss makes a good medium in which to plant the divided crowns of A. Farleyense, and a good method is to plant them in rows like cuttings in about three inches of sand mixture in the propagating house, keeping the crowns about level with the surface of the sand, and being careful at all times to keep them moist. At about the same time these divisions form a new frond or two, they will be found to have some fresh roots, and may then be potted off into small pots, placed in a warm and shaded house and watered carefully, for at this stage of their growth they will not stand indiscriminate watering with a hose.

When the young plants have made a few fronds and are fairly rooted, they will be in condition for a shift to 3-inch pots, and from this time forward some provision should be made for drainage in the pots, a piece of crock with a little sphagnum over it answering well for this purpose in the small-sized pots. Well-rotted sod, to which has been added one-fourth in shifting on as they need it, such plants will reach a fair size for autumn sales. This fern is a free rooter, and after the plants are established they will use a considerable quantity of water and enjoy an abundance of fresh air both day and night throughout the warm season. Cibotium requires space for its proper development, and as the foliage grows longer it becomes nec-bulk of dry cow manure forms a good compost for Adiantum Farleyense, and it is always best to have the soil rather on the dry side at the time of potting, and not to permit it to become sodden before the plants have a chance to root into it, for these plants are very impatient of sodden soil. A little extra care during the early stages of growth may make the difference between a crop of good A. Farleyense and a crop of failures, so it is worth the trouble, for a well-grown specimen of this fern is one of the most beautiful ornaments for a greenhouse, but a poor specimen is hardly worth house room.

Cibotium Schiedei continues to find many friends in the trade, and quite deservedly so, this being one of the most satisfactory ferns for house culture or window decoration, provided that it be given an abundance of water. The spring season is the proper time to secure young stock of this fern for growing on, good plants from 3-inch pots being a satisfactory size to begin with at this early date, and by essary to raise the plants up on inverted pots or other pedestals, otherwise the tips of the fronds will suffer.

At the close of another season for table ferneries (for this trade usually falls off to a great extent after Easter), it is well to look over the list of varieties used during the season and thus to find out what is best adapted for the trade, the aspidiums and pteris providing the sorts that are most in demand generally, while a fair percentage of Cyrtomium falcatum, and a few adiantums are still required to supply the demands of customers who know what they want and insist upon having it. Then place your order for young stock with some reliable specialist, and make sure of having good stock from the early deliveries of the slow-growing species.

THE CARNATION.

Planting Out the Young Stock.

Wherever the condition of the land is such that it can be properly worked, arrangements can be made for getting it in shape for planting out the young stock, but it should be dry enough to work up finely, if not, a few more days drying out is far better than working it while in a wet condition, because it requires a great deal more labor to prepare the land while wet and it cannot be got into as satisfactory condition for the plants. The ground should be fine and mellow so that after planting the hand cultivator can be easily worked from the start, thus insuring a good pulverized mulch of fine soil to protect the roots of the plants. I am not in favor of any manuring of the land at this time, particularly if the soil is inclined to be rich, my reason for this is that we have found that whenever the manuring has been done at planting time the plants have not been as satisfactory, and instead of making a sturdy, stocky growth, have inclined toward a long-jointed, soft growth, so that any manuring of our carnation ground that we think is needed is done in the fall. If the ground was turned over last fall it is not necessary to do any deep plowing at this time, all that is required is to give it a shallow turn over and make the surface of the field as even and as level as possible. There is nothing quite so bad for the plants as to have them stand under water for a day or two at a time after a heavy thunder shower, owing to the water remaining in places that were left uneven when preparing the land. Everything should be ready at hand for planting directly the land is prepared, it being much easier to do the work then than it will be a few days after, particularly if a rain comes.

The preparation of the young plants inside, before taking them out, is very important, the first thing is to thoroughly harden them off by keeping the temperature as cool as possible and giving plenty of ventilation on every favorable occasion. It is also a good plan to treat the plants to a thorough fumigating on a cool, favorable evening, or kill any thrip or red spider that may be hanging around. Another very important point is to be sure the topping of the young plants is followed up close a few days before planting out, they will not then need anything more along this line for a week or two after being planted in the field. The planting out of the young stock coming at this time when every grower is very busy with the spring rush, makes it necessary to get the job out of the way as quickly as possible, therefore, put the whole force at the work to complete it quickly. The plants should be knocked out of the pots in the greenhouse and set in shallow flats ready for the planters, getting enough ready ahead to keep them busy, and if the plants are growing in the bench or flats they should be taken up and set in flats the same way. Do not allow the plants to be set out before being watered, if they are dry at the roots. The question of the arrangement of the planting ground must be governed according to the conditions each grower has to contend with—we plant our plants about 16 inches apart between the rows and about 12 inches apart in the rows. C. W. JOHNSON.

W. E. Wallace's Carnation Prizes.

The remarkable success of W. E. Wallace at the show of the Perpetual Carnation Society held in the Botanic Garden, London, England, will be of particular interest to the many friends who met him on his visit to this country last year and to whom he wrote the letter of appreciation for the courtesies extended which appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST, issue of May 13, 1911, page 828. According to the report in the press, the group which won the society's gold medal for the best group in the show was in the opinion of the judges the finest ever exhibited in England at the season. Mr. Wallace's other awards were: the American Carnation Society's challenge cup for American novelties; the Covent Garden challenge cup for two boxes and two vases of 60 blooms, each of two varieties, packed for market; the Felton cup for best decorative vase of 36 blooms; the society's silver gilt medal for the best vase in the show; first prize for the best vase of a new variety not in commerce, and nine first and two second prizes. He thus took nearly all the leading prizes in the open classes. At the dinner after the show Mr. Wallace was described by one of the judges who had spent some time in America, as the best carnation grower in the world. He was unanimously appointed vice-chairman of the society.

Carnation Flower.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

We forward a bloom of a carnation that appeared in a bench of Enchantress. It is very large, full, strong stem and calyx and very fragrant. The growth is strong, shorter jointed than Enchantress, with darker foliage. Can you tell us what variety it is?

E. W.

The flower was very sleepy upon arrival so that it was a difficult matter to form any opinion of it. It does not belong to the Enchantress family, not being full enough in the center, and I do not know any variety now in commerce that resembles it. The fragrance was very strong but in other respects the variety does not appear to be of any great merit.

C. W. JOHNSON.

Watering Carnations.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

Will you kindly inform me whether it is better during spring to water carnations in the morning or in the evening? Should the plants be sprayed at noon or shortly after that hour?

J. A.

The time to water and syringe the carnation plants is before noon if the work can be finished up by that time, but sometimes it happens one cannot get through by that hour and it will take until about two o'clock to finish up. This is all right, but we do not advise watering or spraying later in the day than this because the plants do not have time to dry out enough before night.

C. W. JOHNSON.

Horticultural Society of Chicago.

An adjourned session of the annual meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago was held at the City Club, April 30, Vice-President Rudd in the chair. The usual reports were submitted and plans discussed for coming exhibitions. The report of the premium list committee showed that considerable progress has been made with the schedule for the second spring show, to be held next year, the date of which was fixed for March 31 to April 5, inclusive. This will be the society's second venture in the way of spring shows and all indications point to great improvement over the similar event held at the Art Institute March last. In addition, the executive committee was instructed to arrange for a fall and other minor exhibitions through the present year where this course is considered expedient. These minor exhibitions will include a peony show, which will be held probably at the Art Institute in June, the date to be fixed so that these flowers will be exhibited at their best. J. B. Deamud, 160 North Wabash avenue, was appointed manager of the peony exhibition and will announce arrangements later. A committee consisting of N. H. Carpenter and R. J. Haight was appointed to co-operate with the Chicago Florists' Club in the entertainment of the Society of American Florists during its annual convention, to be held at the Coliseum, this city, August 20-23.

The annual election of officers resulted as follows: W. N. Rudd, president; J. C. Vaughan, first vice-president; Ernst Wienhoeber, second vice-president; J. B. Deamud, third vice-president; N. H. Carpenter, treasurer; C. W. Dusner, secretary; executive committee (for one year) George Asmus, August Poehmann, Carl Cropp and Thomas Wallace; (for two years) E. A. Kanst, M. Barker, R. J. Haight and J. C. Vaughan; directors, C. L. Hutchinson, James Keeley, N. W. Harris, Edward Ahlswede, E. G. Uihlein, F. W. Bryan, Frank K. Reilly, George E. Rickcords, Henry Bartholomay and Benjamin J. Rosenthal.

BOSTON, MASS.—N. F. McCarthy & Co. have leased the store and basement at 31 Otis street and 112 Arch street for a long term of years and after the necessary alterations will remove from the location at 84 Hawley street which they have so long occupied.

Spring in the South.

It is wonderful how Dame Nature can busy herself and work overtime in order to catch up in a late spring. When a case of influenza confined me to my room and bed the first week in March there was not a sign of spring except the live oaks and bird cherries showed their swelling buds. What a surprise, what a delight when I got out again into the garden, field and forest a month later. Everything green and growing and blooming. I just brought home a beautiful bunch of yellow ground orchids, a species of sarracenia which now abounds in our woods, preferring boggy spots. From a single clump I picked twenty-three large open flowers. The dwarf perennial wild phlox is lovely with its pink and lavender flowers. I shall give this a trial in the garden as it would make a very effective border plant, its height being only about eight inches. I discovered a wild bignonia loaded down with masses of dark, scarlet trumpets, inside light red, fading to a clear yellow at the end of the five lobed flower. The vivid color effect attracted my attention from the distance, the space covered by this single plant was several hundred square feet. I took some cuttings of it and shall speak of it after a test in the nursery. The dogwood, Cornus florida and the wild azalea are in full bloom, what an effect together with the pink blossoms of the crabapple. The ferns made a wonderful growth. I found osmunda three feet high showing well developed spore fronds. The yellow jasmine, gelsemium is just now at its best in our woods. It grows best in moist, swampy places and where a fine clump is surrounded by a patch of purple iris the color effect is grand.

But now back to the garden. The daffodils are gone, a few stragglers of Victoria and Emperor peeping out from the tall foliage. Mrs. Langtry is the only one holding out so late and though small is a very graceful and useful flower. The first sweet peas are opening their buds. This is very late for New Orleans, where we generally have them in bloom the whole winter, but such a winter as we had will not be forgotten for many years. Here is a surprise and a very pleasant one—the first pæonies in full bloom—not alone the first pæonies of the season but the first ever grown in New Orleans to any perfection. It is the result of a trial of a number of varieties and of course the reward is very gratifying. Strawberries, ripe and juicy, what a pleasure to pick and eat these luscious berries in the field! The dahlias are just peeping out of the ground, gladiolus of the first planting are showing the bud and our Creole Easter lily opens its first flowers in the warm spring sun. Climbing roses are in full bloom, especially a combination of Marechal Niel and Marie Henrietta shows to good advantage. From the porches and Magnolia grandiflora trees the wistaria hangs in glorious lavender masses. Spring is here for good, a little late, but thank God, it comes to us with its charms once a year, a memento of resurrection.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The home circle of the ladies of the Rochester Florists' Association have elected the following officers: Mrs. William Keller, president; Mrs. Fred Vick, Mrs. Edward Wilson, Mrs. Charles Suhr, vice-presidents; Mrs. John Dunbar, secretary; Mrs. E. R. Fry, treasurer.

OBITUARY.

Fred. Ehret.

The friends of Fred Ehret of Philadelphia, Pa., were pained to hear of his sudden death April 26, after an operation at the German hospital. He had been ailing for some time, but had been able to attend to business until a week ago. The doctors were mistaken in their diagnosis, finding during the operation that his case was more serious than they supposed, and he had not the strength to rally from the shock. Fred Ehret was born in Niederschopfheim, Baden, Germany, forty-eight years ago. He came to this country when seventeen years of age and worked at the business first in Union Hill, Hoboken. Coming to

The Late Fred Ehret.

Philadelphia, he worked for John Horbert and also conducted greenhouses in Atlantic City for a time. Returning to Philadelphia, he sold plants on the street at Broad street and Fairmount avenue, finally renting his present store and establishing a wholesale cut flower business. Later he added retailing, which branch of the business grew so that he added another store around the corner on Broad street, which connected with his Fairmount avenue store in the rear. The retail business grew rapidly, so much so that the wholesale department was discontinued, and his whole attention given to retailing.

Mr. Ehret was an enterprising business man and popular with the trade. He was a member of the Florists' Club and always active in the management of its affairs. In his business he had a valued assistant in his wife, who was a practical store manager, and much of the work passed through her hands. It is understood that she will continue the business. He was a member of a number of German and other organizations.

At a special meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, on April 26, called to take action on the death of Fred Ehret, the following resolutions were submitted and passed:

Resolved: That in the death of Mr. Ehret the club has lost one of its most esteemed members, one who was at all times a most loyal supporter of the club and all its policies.

Resolved: That it be put on record our high sense of appreciation of the sterling character of our fellow member. He was one of the finest men, in every phase of life—in business and socially—and was held in the highest esteem.

Resolved: That the club hereby express its feelings of sorrow and esteem, and orders that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the club and a copy of same be sent to the family of the deceased.

GEORGE C. WATSON,
CHARLES F. KRUEGER,
DAVID RUST,

Committee.

His funeral on Monday, April 29, was very largely attended by the trade, and the display of flowers from his friends and societies completely filled the room. His wife and one daughter survive him. K.

Harry J. Hunter.

Harry J. Hunter, city forester of Detroit, Mich., died at his home, 364 McGraw avenue, April 17, of pneumonia, after an illness lasting ten days, aged 64 years. He had been city forester for thirteen years and through his efforts Detroit's streets and parks have become known throughout the country and he founded the nursery at Palmer park. Prior to becoming city forester, he was connected with D. M. Ferry & Co. and earlier with large nursery concerns in Rochester, N. Y., and St. Louis, Mo. He was a member of the Detroit Florists' Club and is survived by a widow, son and daughter. J. F. S.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Easter trade for 1912 was larger by about 15 per cent than last year, states Clarke Bros. The supply was very large being almost inexhaustible, and prices were in consequence not quite as good. Lilies and rambler roses were the best selling plants, and in cut flowers roses, violets, lily of the valley and sweet peas were those which seemed to be most sought. Owing to the late Easter date bulbous stock moved slowly.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The Easter trade this year was about 10 per cent larger than that of last. Prices were about the same and with the exception of lilies there was an adequate supply of plants and cut flowers. All flowering and foliage plants sold well and in consequence of the great sale for them the general demand for cut flowers decreased. Original and artistic arrangements of corsages, and birch bark baskets, provided with pans in which were roses, lily of the valley and spring flowers, for table use and as presents, were featured in the place of boxes of roses and carnations.—Bison.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—The Easter business was approximately the same as last year, reports the Crabb & Hunter Floral Co. There was a large stock of plants with some to spare and a good supply of cut flowers, but the demand was large. Prices were a little better and the plants and cut flowers of best quality were held at good figures and sold readily. Lilies and azaleas were the leading plants, with marguerites the least popular. Roses and carnations were the cut flowers most in demand; tulips sold fairly well but were the least called for. Lilacs, Azalea mollis and rhododendrons were in fair supply and were very popular. The weather was mild enough to deliver plants without the necessity of wrapping them. Crabb & Hunter Floral Co. opened their new store at 114 E. Fulton street the Friday before Easter and at that late date of opening did more than a satisfactory business and had a new delivery wagon. Henry Smith and Eli Cross both had new auto deliveries.

CAPE JASMINE CROP.—The Cape Jasmine crop will be rather short this season and on account of the late spring the blossoms will not open before May 15 to 20.

THE annual meeting of the New England Cemetery Association will be held in June at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst. The officers of the organization are: H. Wilson Ross, Newton, president; Edgar King, Springfield, vice-president; H. A. Derry, Everett, secretary and treasurer.

IMMORTElLES.—French reports on the immortelle crop indicate that last year's plants have been damaged by frost which may seriously affect their flowering. It is thought, however, that the crop on the whole will be better than last year's unless the severe weather which injured the plants in April, 1911, should again occur. Prices, it is thought should be twenty per cent lower than last year.

National Council of Horticulture.

The first installment of articles for 1912 issued by the National Council of Horticulture, contains the following: "High Living at Low Cost," "Points About Sowing Seed," and "Vegetables for City Back-yards." These timely and practical articles are issued to nurserymen, seedsmen, florists, and the editors of local papers, and can be obtained upon application to the secretary, James H. Burdett, 1620 West 104th Place, Chicago.

Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The following additional special premiums have been donated to the Chrysanthemum Society of America to be offered at the annual exhibition at American Institute, New York, November, 6-8, 1912.

Harry E. Converse, The Moorings, Marion Mass., offers a $25 cup for the best six blooms of Chrysanthemum Harry E. Converse.

William Kleinheinz, Ogontz, Pa., for best five blooms of Chrysanthemum William Kleinheinz, first prize, $5.00, second prize $3.00.

The following firms have also contributed to the special prize list: The Foley Manufacturing Co., Chicago; Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, Pa; Lord & Burnham Co., Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y.; Hitchings & Co., New York.

Mothers' Day.

It was with great pleasure that we received from our subscribers numerous accounts of the Mothers' day trade last year, and the complimentary evidence of the aid which they had derived from articles in THE AMERICAN FLORIST. Charles Brown, of the Brown Floral Co., Canton, O., forwarded us clippings from the daily paper containing the articles which appeared in our issue of May 6, 1911, page 768, and we received many other clippings containing extracts from the same issue. THE AMERICAN FLORIST was the first to report the observance of the day, in its issue of May 16, 1908, page 840, and to see the great possibilities of Mothers' day to the florists when Miss Jarvis first presented the idea to the people, immediately advising its readers to do their utmost to inform the public of the day and the manner of its observance and it is exceedingly pleasant to receive their testimonials of gratitude.

Society of American Florists.

President Richard Vincent, Jr., has appointed Charles J. Graham, Cleveland, Ohio, chairman of the committee on sports.

DEPARTMENT OF PLANT REGISTRATION.

Public notice is hereby given that J. F. Anderson, Short Hills, N. J., offers for registration the following fern. Any person objecting to the registration or to the use of the proposed name, is requested to communicate with the secretary at once. Failing to receive objection to the registration, the same will be made three weeks from this date.

RAISER'S DESCRIPTION.

Pteris Cretica Andersonii—This fern has the variegated character observed in Pteris cretica albo-lineata, but of more distinct variegation, the broad belt of white down the center of each leaflet occupies one-half of the breadth. The plant, however, is taller, of more compact habit and larger dimensions, the fertile fronds often reaching the height of two feet. All the leaflets either barren or fertile are undulated, terminating in crests of large dimensions, the crests heavier and larger, but most resembling the cristation form of Pteris cretica Wilsonii.

April 27, 1912. JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Cardeners' Examinations.

The article by W. N. Rudd which appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST, issue of March 9, is interesting to a gardener of the old school. In London 50 years ago very few of the young gardeners who intended to follow the trade would have failed to answer correctly 90 per cent of the questions, barring those dealing with modern construction, etc. This does not indicate that there has been no progress, but that we live in an age of specialties. Those young men if placed in a modern rose house would not equal the modern cut flower grower. The gardeners of the old school were all around men, good plant growers and familiar with general gardening, bedding out, etc., and were usually good botanists. Life was not as strenuous and quick potting not required so much as to do it well, though some of Peter Henderson's men of the seventies were equal to the modern experts. Orchid growing has made a great advance but there were some fine collections in the old time. At a private place we had a collector in South America. I remember Veitch of Chelsea selling a plant for $400, and seeing him showing to admiring ladies the first Lillium auratum ever grown in Europe. R. GRAHAM FERGUSSON. Osawatomie, Kans.

Heating Problem.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

We have a range of houses 22x200 feet, with lean-to at the north, in which are mains, both flow and returns. We contemplate removing lean-to and adding 75 feet. Would this make too long a range to heat with hot water successfully? The results at present are very satisfactory. We now have two boilers, one rated to heat 1,500 feet of 4-inch pipe and the other 3,000 feet, and our experience is that we get better results from the smaller boiler than the larger one. With the alterations completed we shall have about 35,000 feet of glass. Would it not be better to have four small boilers, connected in pairs so that one of each pair could be used in mild weather than to have larger boilers? G. J. B.

British Columbia.

Whether the houses will be too long to heat with hot water will depend upon the number and size of the flow and return pipes as well as upon their elevation above the boilers. There should be no difficulty about heating coils 275 feet long, but whether it can be done with the present arrangement of the pipes cannot be determined from the data given.

For a plant of the size mentioned it is always well to have at least two boilers, and if the small one gives better results than the large one it might be best to put in two more of that size, but ordinarily it would be better to put in one more boiler sufficiently large, with the two now in use, to heat the range in the coldest weather. Two of the boilers should be able to handle the houses in ordinary weather and one of the larger boilers in mild weather.

Cutworms.

One of the most injurious insects with which the florist and gardener in some localities has to contend, is the cutworm, especially with soft growing plants which are started under glass and transplanted. They appear sometimes in great numbers in spring and early summer and frequently do severe injury before their ravages are noticed. The method of attack is to cut off the young plants at about the surface of the ground, and as these insects are of large size and voracious feeders they are capable of destroying many plants in a single night, frequently more than they can devour. During the past two years these insects, working generally throughout the United States, destroyed hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of crops. By the timely application of remedies, however, it was demonstrated, states the Department of Agriculture, through field agents and others of the Bureau of Entomology engaged in the investigation of insects injurious to truck crops and sugar beets in some of the principal trucking regions, notably in tide-water Virginia, in southern Texas, in the vicinity of Rocky Ford, Colo., in southern California, in the vicinity of Sacramento, Calif., in Stark County, Ind., and in some other regions, that these insects can be readily controlled, large areas being successfully treated. The usual method of control is by the use of poisoned baits.

Take a bushel of dry bran, add one pound of arsenic or Paris green, and mix it thoroughly into a mash with eight gallons of water, in which has been stirred half a gallon of sorghum, or other cheap molasses. After the mash has stood several hours, scatter it in lumps of about the size of a marble over the fields where injury is beginning to appear and about the bases of the plants set out. Apply late in the day so as to place the poison about the plants over night, which is the time when the cutworms are active. Apply a second time if necessary.

When cutworms occur in unusual abundance which happens locally, and sometimes generally, in some seasons, they exhaust their food supply and are driven to migrate to other fields. This they do, literally in armies, assuming what is called the army-worm habit. At such times it is necessary to treat them as we do army worms. While the methods which have been advised are valuable in such cases, these remedies may be too slow to destroy all the cutworms and we, therefore, have to employ other methods. These include trenching, ditching, the plowing of deep furrows in advance of the traveling cutworms to trap them, and the dragging of logs or brush through the furrows. If the trenches can be filled with water, the addition of a small quantity of kerosene so as to form a thin scum on the surface will prove fatal. In extreme cases barriers of fence boards are erected and the tops smeared with tar or other sticky substances to stop the cutworms as they attempt to crawl over.

Clean cultural methods and rotation of crops are advisable, as also fall plowing and disking. Many cutworms can be destroyed where it is possible to overflow the fields. This is particularly applicable where irrigation is practiced.

LEBANON, PA.—H. E. Snyder lost his Easter stock of plants and flowers by fire which destroyed the greenhouses and which probably originated from an overheated boiler flue.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Lord & Burnham Co. are erecting two greenhouses for C. D. Armstrong, 12x41 feet each.

ALL STOCK VERY PLENTIFUL.

The market conditions of the past week have not shown any improvement of those of the week previous, and the state of the trade is about what it has generally been during the last of April and first of May. Stock of all kinds is received in large quantities and it is a question with all the dealers what is to be done with the amount received and prevent a large accumulation. Buyers who can handle a large amount can purchase at very low prices and as there is plenty of good stock to fill all orders any that does not come up to the best standard is either discarded entirely or sold at a low figure. Roses are in great supply and the receipts are very large every day. American Beauty, however, is not in any great over-supply and good stock of all grades sell well and at good prices. The others with the exception of the novelties are received in large quantities every day. But the stock is all of very fine quality for the weather has been cool and with the exception of the rainy days just what the growers most desire to produce good stock. Carnations are in large enough supply to meet all the demands but the shipments of these flowers are nowhere near as large as they have been at this time in some years. The best blooms are very easily disposed of and at good prices for the first of May, but there are many of inferior grade that sell at low figures, and some of the retail stores are offering them at bargain prices. There will not be any too many to fill the large demand that will be received for Mothers' day is the opinion of most of those who handle them in large quantities. Lilies and callas are still quite plentiful and the demand for these is not large. Sweet peas are in very good supply but the long-stemmed stock is still bringing good prices and the only cheap stock to be had is those that are short-stemmed. The Spencer varieties or "Butterfly" as they are known on the market are now being received in larger quantities. Violets are fast disappearing and are to be had but with few dealers. Some of the home-grown stock is of very good quality, but the shipments are not large. The outdoor bulbous stock is not nearly of so good quality as has been on the market all the spring and it sells at very low prices. Narcissus was displayed in some of the windows at the end of last week at two dozen for ten cents, which certainly is not giving the growers any great profit, even if it is grown outside. Some very beautiful orchids are seen and the retail stores are displaying plants full of flowers. Antirrhinum of the finest quality is shown and the large vases of this flower make a beautiful display. Trailing arbutus and pansies are still shown for corsages. Greens are not overplentiful and hardy ferns are still held at good prices which they will probably maintain until after Memorial day.

NOTES.

The marriage of George T. Elliott, eldest son of William H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., and Miss Alma Brochart of Morton Grove, was solemnized Thursday, April 25, Rev. Joseph Hayes Chandler officiating. T. E. Waters acted as best man, with Miss Ethel Brochart, a sister of the bride, as bridesmaid. The happy couple left on the evening train for Council Bluffs, Ia., where Mr. Elliott will take up duties for the King Construction Company. The regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the Union Resrestaurant, May 2, at 8 p. m. The special feature of this meeting will be the address of S. A. Jamieson, of the Universal Portland Cement Co., on "Concrete Construction in Greenhouses" with stereopticon views. We understand Mr. Jamieson has secured a large amount of valuable data, besides many interesting lantern slides, for the occasion.

Chas. Erne, formerly with E. H. Hunt and the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, and Fred G. Klingel, bookkeeper for John Kruchten for many years, are going into the wholesale business together and will open soon under the firm name of Erne & Klingel. They have leased the old Chas. W. McKellar store and their many friends wish them much success in their new undertaking.

The Alpha Floral Co.'s store now presents a most favorable appearance with its newly decorated interior and its fine window displays are certainly a credit to George Economopolis, the hustling proprietor.

F. A. Longren, E. H. Hunt's well known traveling salesman, has returned with his order book pretty well filled, from a most successful business trip in the sunny south.

O. Johnson says that the Batavia Greenhouse Co. will soon start work on their new addition of 50,000 feet of glass.

J. F. Kidwell, president and manager of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, is calling on the growers of the corporation this week, and making arrangements for next year's supply. It is the association's aim to have each one of its members grow a certain line of stock instead of everyone growing the same kind of flowers and the plan is already being followed for Schuman & Kohout of Libertyville will grow American Beauty roses only and the Wellworth Farms roses exclusively.

Wietor Bros. have booked some good sized orders for roses and carnations for Mothers' day, and also a few for Memorial day, which goes to show that their customers are placing their orders early. American Beauty roses are still being received in good supply and N. J. Wietor says that the quality is far better than usual for this time of the year.

Hoerber Bros. are well pleased with their new rose Wilhelmina and some of the bench space formerly devoted to the culture of Richmond, Bride and Killarney roses will now be planted with this variety. This firm is cutting a fine grade of seasonable stock with Butterfly sweet peas showing up exceptionally well.

A. Henderson & Co. have had such a good season that they were obliged to rent larger quarters and are now comfortably located in old historic Fort Dearborn building at 352 North Michigan avenue. This enterprising firm extends a cordial invitation to the trade to visit them in their new store.

E. E. Pieser, the Peony King, says that the reports from two of his other peony farms are to the effect that the crops will be very light, which seems to be the report in general throughout the country. His firm, Kennicott Bros. Co., is now offering a fine grade of sweet peas and carnations.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are receiving a great many compliments from their many customers on their new stationery, which is something original and exceptionally fine. This house is well supplied with stock of all kinds and is filling a large number of orders for carnations and sweet peas.

The Des Plaines Floral Co. has placed an order with the Geo. M. Garland Co. for a traveling greenhouse, 34x100 feet. The contract calls for the highest type house that Garland builds, including the new invention which the firm will feature in the future.

John Kruchten is receiving a large supply of choice stock of all kinds and is particularly well fixed on white roses and white carnations. The gardenia crop has shortened up considerably but the supply here is equal to the demand.

Chas. W. McKellar moved into his new store, at 30 East Randolph street, this week and when the finishing touches are completed he will have one of the finest stores in the city.

Ed. Armstrong, formerly with A. Lange, has accepted a position with Kennicott Bros. Co., and Ben Connors, formerly with Zech & Mann, is now with Poehlmann Bros. Co.

Ed. Vilter, formerly with the J. E. Deamud Co., but later with Paul Blome & Co., is back in the wholesale business and in the employ of Zech & Mann.

Henry Wittbold has several large decorations on for the household show at the Coliseum and one, a camp scene, promises to be something out of the ordinary.

Peter Olsen bowled in the state tournament at Bensinger's alleys last Sunday, April 28, but was evidently in poor form for he failed to break any records.

Miss Pauline Wienhoeber and Albert Huss were married at St. Michael's church last Tuesday, April 30, and are now making their home in Oak Park.

Bassett & Washburn are having a good call for their Rhea Reid and Mrs. Aaron Ward roses and are cutting just enough stock to fill their orders.

Michael Fink entered the employ of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association on April 29 and is now looking after this firm's customers.

Frank Johnson, A. L. Randall Co.'s hustling sales manager, is expected back this week from his southern business trip.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is particularly strong on carnations and Tom (?) says the supply will be large for Mothers' day.

E. B. Washburn is offering his residence in Hinsdale for sale and is now on the lookout for a suitable buyer.

Miss Nelson, saleslady for O. J. Friedman, will leave soon for Europe to visit friends and relatives.

Frank Oechslein is visiting friends and relatives in New York and other eastern cities.

Miss Elsie Winterson is helping out at Winterson's Seed Store during the rush.

Fred Sperry, now of Los Angeles, Calif., surprised his friends in the trade here this week by visiting the local market. His mission here was to dispose of his property in Oak Park and to meet his wife and son Frederick, Jr., who have just returned from spending the winter in Florida. Mr. Sperry expects to return to the Golden State some time this month.

The John C. Moninger Co. has just received an order from Joseph Grabowski of Lansing, Mich., for three greenhouses, 22½x150 feet, and a lean-to, 16x72 feet. Mr. Grabowski, who was formerly with the Maplewood Violet Co., is an efficient grower and will conduct his business under the firm name of the Lansing Violet & Floral Co.

The A. Dietsch Co. is having a splendid year and one of the latest orders that has been booked is that of Mr. Uffman of Toledo, O., which calls for 10 houses 40¾x230 feet. Carl Ickes says that his firm's new catalogue is now ready and that it would probably be in the mail this week.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is having a good call for their new roses and a large quantity of Prince de Bulgarie, Melody and Mrs. Aaron Ward are being sold daily. The supply department is very busy and T. E. Waters, who looks after this department, is building up a nice trade.

J. B. Deamud came near being entered on the sick list this week. That he felt miserable there was no doubt for that genial smile and aggressive spirit were missing, but his indomitable pluck kept him on the job and he rapidly regained his usual good humor and hustle.

H. Van Gelder has decided to go into the supply business on a much larger scale and when the new stock arrives Percy Jones will be in fine shape to take Sweet Peas.

Paper read by Charles B. Weaver before the Lancaster City and County Florists' Club, April 18, 1912.

Having been given a broad scope to write upon I will treat each subject briefly as I know it. We began the culture of sweet peas commercially twelve or fourteen years ago in a small way with more or less disappointment financially. The start was with a row about fifty feet long, of the old pink and white variety, Earliest of All. This row, as I remember, bloomed during the spring months and paid only moderately well. Right here I wish to mention that on questioning S. S. Penock of Philadelphia as to the advisability of growing sweet peas to be in bloom at Christmas I received for an answer that if it were possible to produce peas at that time it would be next to impossible to sell them. However, the following winter, owing to stem rot in carnations, I again sowed peas in one bed 140 by five feet, but these flowers I did not attempt to market in Philadelphia but shipped them to Pittsburg with not very satisfactory results until toward spring, when they gradually increased in value.

The following season two beds were planted, one with Earliest of All, the other with a variety not now in cultivation named Josephine White. In this year's experience the Earliest of All were affected with a disease that delayed their blooming period until nearly spring. The Josephine White opened a few flowers in November and I remember shipping fifty flowers to Philadelphia for which I received fifty cents, which caused me to feel encouraged, but this was of short duration, as the week following all I received was a stroke with a blue pencil accompanied by a note saying that peas were more of a spring flower in their market. After this what sweet peas I had were shipped again to Pittsburg for several months or until warmer weather, when I received word that they were arriving in poor condition, which was more the fault of the variety, Josephine White, which was a miserable keeper.

After receiving this word my only recourse was to again ship to Philadelphia, which was, as I remember, about three weeks before Easter. From the first shipment, to my recollection, the sweet peas sold well in spite of their quality, and continued to sell well until some time after Easter. It may seem peculiar, but this same Easter I received the highest price for sweet peas I ever received, before or since; the largest part of my Easter crop realized from $1.50 to $2.50 per 100. I well remember one retailer in Philadelphia buying 800 from my commission man, paying him $2.50 per 100, and then made complaint that they kept poorly and asked that the price be reduced to $1.50, which I was glad to do, and I did not blame the kicker, either. I want to say in fairness that $2.50 per 100 is too high a price for sweet peas even during the holiday season, but of course this price was not refused. From this time on, which was about eight years ago, peas began to sell in Philadelphia in midwinter, although in a moderate way at first, until at the present time tens of thousands are disposed of during the Christmas holidays; other cities, too, for a time, did not take to these flowers during midwinter, but now I venture to say that few cities of fair size in this country are without sweet peas less than three months of the year and in many they are an all year flower.

Formerly there was very little choice of varieties, say two or three; now, owing to the labors of different men there are possibly two dozen different colors and shades of winter flowering sweet peas, although there is some confusion through duplication of names, which in my opinion should be looked into by the National Sweet Pea Society; as, for instance, should a grower decide that he would try several varieties of white and buy from the different sources the following: Watchung, Earliest White and Snowbird or Snowdrift, and find at blooming time that he has four rows of the same variety; also, the only difference between Christmas Pink and Earliest of All is the price of the seed. Mont Blanc, Christmas White and Florence Denzer, too, are identical. I want to say in connection with this that no man in this country or in the world for that matter has done more toward the advancement of winter flowering sweet peas than Anton Zvolanek of Bound Brook, N. J. He has at the present time succeeded in producing practically all of the colors that we have in the summer blooming varieties in the winter blooming section, and I am informed that he is now at work on the Spencer varieties and in fact has partly succeeded in having them to acquire the winter blooming habit. Many of the colors that Mr. Zvolanek has succeeded in fixing to type have as yet to prove salable, but as the field broadens we can expect a wider range of colors to become popular.

At the present time the old pink and white variety Earliest of All or Christmas Pink is the best seller, followed by white of the different varieties, these followed by lavender, of which I will mention the following: Mrs. Alexander Wallace and Wallacea, a dark lavender, and I believe not so likely to drop their buds as Mrs. Charles H. Totty, although this is the most desirable shade of the three. In the light pink class we have Mrs. Dolansky, Mrs. Wm. Sim and one or two others not so desirable. The variety Mrs. Sim will produce longer stems than any variety in cultivation under like conditions; the color is very pretty when first picked, but when slightly faded soon shows too much salmon, while Mrs. Dolansky, although not quite so bright when first opening, holds a uniform color throughout. Gov. Fort is a fine color and should become popular, as should Pink Beauty, although this has to be proven in most markets. Of the striped purple and violet shades little can be said in a commercial way at present.

I have read opinions of different growers relative to seed from different localities producing better results, some holding that California seed produces weaker growth and is responsible for different diseases in comparison with home grown seed. With these opinions I do not agree, as for hardness of shell and good germination California seed cannot be surpassed. I have grown some seed of a few special varieties and find it an expensive undertaking, as in addition to having to carefully support the vines I find it necessary at intervals to jar the vines to secure thorough pollination, also when the pods begin to dry they must be picked off every few days owing to a tendency to burst open and scatter the seed. This trouble of course is seldom met with in California, as their climate is more dry and not so changeable at seeding time.

Usually the first sowing is made about the middle of August with us, some growers sow earlier, I understand. August is a very troublesome time to sow peas, as the intense heat we often experience at that time is entirely adverse to the conditions this plant will thrive in. We often have trouble with the tender vines damping off at the ground; in fact on more than one occasion to the extent of fifty or 100 feet of row. I have tried different methods to prevent this and have used lime in the soil at planting time, sterilized with formaldehyde, and tried keeping the soil both wet and dry, and have come to the conclusion that a practical preventative is a well dampened soil at sowing time and care to keep conditions as uniform as possible. We have with us a disease called black root, which seems to be the most troublesome during extremely hot weather; I have on several occasions sown an entire house which became affected with this disease. It is noticeable soon after the vines appear above the surface of the ground, by their stunted, yellowish appearance, the roots on examination are black for several inches of their length below the surface of the soil, also many of the rootlets are entirely rotted off. If one has patience, with the coming of cooler weather many of these vines will send out new roots and make a fair growth of vine, but never as good as those not affected. My method usually is to make a furrow beside the diseased rows and sow a fresh supply of seed, usually with good results, as the second sowing, while in the same soil, was naturally made considerably later in the season. This present season, owing to a fear of again having this disease to contend with, I planted another crop in the house in summer and delayed sowing peas until the beginning of October, and with little or no trouble from this disease, which goes to prove that it is a hot weather disease. Sweet peas for midwinter blooming were sown in August at a new location remote from the older houses where as yet I could find no trace of this very troublesome disease. Possibly by using movable greenhouses we could travel ahead of this trouble.

The green worm never caused us much trouble until last season, when they seemed to come in droves. I tried poisoning with different compounds, but very few seemed to be killed by this means and we had to resort to hand picking. Bud dropping is caused by too sudden changes from long continued warm weather to dark, cloudy weather or the reverse, or from too high an artificial temperature followed by a sudden drop. As to temperature during midwinter, we run a night temperature of about 50° to 55° and 60° to 65° during bright, clear weather. Toward spring we drop to 45° to 47° at night and during the same day temperature as during midwinter.

Sweet peas require constant attention after the vines are tall enough for support, so that they are kept growing erect, and in fact from that time on during the blooming period more labor is required than for any other greenhouse crop, that is if you wish to handle the stock carefully and for profit. The demand for these flowers is increasing as is also the supply, and I find that you must have decidedly better stock now than several years ago to obtain a fair average price. We ship altogether to commission houses in different cities, which I consider the only way to market cut flowers.

European Horticulture.

FROM THE BRITISH TRADE PAPERS.

Prunus Japonica for Forcing.—The two double-flowered varieties of this member of the cherry family are particularly valuable for forcing. For this purpose they are grown in very large numbers by the Dutch, both as dwarfs and standards. Not only are they beautiful under glass early in the year, but they form a delightful feature in the open ground later on. Unfortunately for those who wish to take advantage of their beauty in this way, they are nearly always propagated by budding or grafting on to the sloe, whose suckers soon choke up the weaker growth, unless the plants are continually attended to. What is more, the point of union is sometimes affected with canker. Grafted plants of the charming Prunus triloba are open to just the same objection. This mode of increase need not be universally adopted, as both these species can be had from layers, though, of course, not so quickly as when grafted. Still, they are well worth paying extra for—that is, if one can obtain them. I have also struck Prunus japonica from cuttings of the young soft shoots early in spring. These shoots were produced by forced plants, and treated much as fuchsias they soon produced roots. This species is, according to the books, a native of China as well as Japan, and that fact, no doubt, accounts for it being often met with as Prunus or Cerasus sinensis.

A New Nerine.—At the meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society an award of merit was given to Nerine Veitchi, shown by Robert Veitch & Sons of Exeter. It may be likened to the now comparatively well-known Nerine Bowdeni (remarkable for the large size of its individual blossoms), except that the flowers are of a blush tint. It is certainly a very pleasing addition to this charming family of South African bulbous plants. The bulbs of this newcomer are said to have been imported direct from South Africa. In addition to this, examples of the typical N. Bowdeni were also noted, as well as a hybrid form—Exonia—raised between N. Bowdeni and N. Fothergilli. The flowers of this variety are large, with wavy segments, the color being deep carmine. The beauty of these nerines was well exemplified in another part of the hall by large, splendidly-flowered masses of the brilliant scarlet Nerine Fothergilli. It is, as in this case, when several bulbs are grown in one pot, that these nerines are seen at their best, while, what is more, they flower best when the bulbs are crowded together in large pots, provided the roots are in good condition. To ensure this, the potting compost should consist principally of good, fibrous, yellow loam and sand, as this will keep sweet and fresh for years.

Lilium Roseum.—This is a rare and distinct Himalayan lily. Anyone not familiar with Lilium roseum, and seeing it flowering for the first time, would scarcely recognize the plant as a lily. The leaves and flower spikes are more suggestive of Ornithogalum nutans, or an anthericum, while the flowers are not unlike a funkia. It has also apparently puzzled botanists, for in addition to the name at the head of this note, the names Fritillaria Thomsonianum, and Fritillaria Hookeri, have been used. The leaves are narrow, and for the size of the plant unusually long, several exceeding a foot. As they ascend the stem the leaves become shorter and farther apart, gradually merging into bracts. The stem, which averages about 1½ feet high, terminates in a raceme of twenty or more pale mauve flowers. These are small, bell-shaped, 1½ inches long, and nearly as broad at the mouth. The perianth consists of six sepals, which are free to the base. The stigma is not at all like that of a lily, being trifid. This lily flowers outdoors at Kew, in light, sandy soil, at the base of a sheltered south wall. The natural flowering season is April and May.

A Winter-flowering Greenhouse Climber.—The hibbertias form a class of Australian shrubs, a couple of which at least are of a twining nature. The first is the vigorous-growing H. volubilis, whose showy yellow flowers have an evil smell; and the second,

H. dentata, which is a really valuable climber for the greenhouse, whose merits are enhanced by the fact that it blooms throughout the entire winter months. It is of fairly quick growth, and mounts upward by twining its thong-like shoots around any support. The ovate leaves are leathery in texture, and of a dark bronzy green when mature; but when young they, as well as the bark of the young shoots, are red. This latter feature varies in intensity according to the amount of exposure to which the plant is subjected. The golden yellow flowers are about a couple of inches across, and somewhat suggestive of those of an hypericum. From a foliage point of view alone it is a very pretty climber, and, of course, additionally so when in bloom. A third species, H. Readii, forms a dense, twiggy bush, with yellow flowers about the size of a shilling.

Plumbago Rosea Superba.—A correct estimate of the value of this charming Indian shrub can be made when it is seen in flower, as in the greenhouse at Kew, with numerous other plants which bloom during the two dullest months of the year, for throughout the last few weeks it has presented a most attractive feature and readily commands a large share of attention from visitors. Its clear, rose-colored flowers are larger than those of the type, and they are carried in finer inflorescences. Whether grown in 5-inch or 6-inch pots, with several branches rising to a height of three feet or more, or as single stems, terminated with a large head of flowers, in 3-inch pots, they are equally pleasing, and are very effective when arranged with green foliage plants, Roman hyacinths or Paper-white narcissus. The larger plants may be obtained from cuttings rooted during spring, and single-stemmed plants from cuttings rooted in summer. Whoever is responsible for keeping a warm greenhouse or conservatory gay during winter would do well to make a note of this plant.

A Little-known Red Salvia.—I should like to recommend to your readers Salvia Pittieri. This seems a little-known plant which deserves to be much more generally cultivated. It is not hardy, but is less tender than S. splendens and much more easily grown. When planted out in May it soon makes large, bushy plants three feet high and as much across. The flowers are a beautiful blood red (not quite so scarlet as S. splendens), each flower as large as, or larger than, S. patens, and of the same shape and velvet-like consistency, forming spikes of bloom from six inches to ten inches long. By the end of September the whole plant is a blaze of red, making a most effective and welcome bit of color thus late in the year. It is a plant which likes a good deal of moisture to its roots, but should be fully exposed to the sun, when it will retain its beauty until cut down by the frost. It is very easily propagated by cuttings.

Ardisia Olivieri.—The ardisias in general cultivation are remarkable more for the beauty of their fruits than for their blossoms. That at the head of this note is well worth consideration as a flowering plant, while the berries, which are, when ripe, of a shining black, are also noteworthy. It is a native of Costa Rica, and in this country requires the protection of a warm greenhouse or stove. The flowers, freely borne in clusters at the points of the shoots, are individually about one-half inch across, of a bright rose-pink color, with a light center, and remain in condition a considerable time. This ardisia forms a freely-branched evergreen shrub, that will soon attain an effective size. Cuttings of the young shoots are not at all difficult to strike if put into pots of sandy soil and placed in a close propagating case in the stove.

A Rose-Colored Pasque-Flower.—One of the most interesting hardy plants shown at the Royal Horticultural Society's exhibition was a rose pink flowered variety of the pasque-flower, Anemone pulsatilla. This plant is naturally variable, but hitherto its variations in color have been confined to shades of blue and white. The new-comer bore the rather cumbersome name of Anemone pulsatilla rosea Mrs. Vanderelst. It is practically identical with the type so far as habit and silkiness of foliage and flowers are concerned, but the color of the blossoms is, as already stated, a most pleasing shade of soft rose pink. We understand that it originated as a sport, but will now come almost, if not quite, true from seeds.

A Beautiful Stove Plant.—Astrapea Wallichii is a most elegant stove evergreen tree; it has often been described as being one of the finest plants introduced into this country, and when seen in flower it captivates the attention of all gardeners. Its native home is Madagascar, and it was introduced to this country about 1820. The color of the flowers on the true plant should be scarlet. In 1910 a seedling plant was sent to us from the Royal Horticultural Society's gardens; it was carefully grown on till it reached a height of 12 feet, and about the middle of December it began to flower. The color of the blossoms of this plant is rather a pale pink, and they are fragrant. It is very easy to grow, providing one has sufficient heat.

A Useful Greenhouse Begonia.—A charming effect is produced in the greenhouse at Kew at the present time by a large group of the Mexican Begonia manicata, and we cannot but wish that the plant found more general favor among people who are responsible for keeping greenhouses and conservatories gay at this time of the year. Belonging to the rhizomatous section of the genus, B. manicata is recognized by its large, handsome green foliage and upright, elegant panicles of pink flowers. On vigorous examples the inflorescences sometimes approach a height of 2½ feet, while those 1½ feet high are common. Arranged with foliage plants, or with hippeastrums as at Kew, the effect is very pleasing.

Winter Broccoli.—Rarely indeed has the visitor to the fortnightly meetings of the Royal Horticultural Society had an opportunity of inspecting so fine a group of winter broccolis as that staged by Messrs. Sutton and Sons, Reading. There were three notable varieties arranged on a spacious table. Basket after basket of the compactly-formed heads or curds demonstrated to what high excellence the culture of these greatly-esteemed winter vegetables has attained, yet, despite this, improvement by selection and otherwise is constantly going on. The three sorts staged were Snow White, Winter Mammoth and Sutton's Superb Early White, than which latter none could possibly be more beautiful or inviting.

Primula Knuthiana.—A new hardy species collected in the mountains of the Tai-pei-shan province of Shensi, North China, by W. Purdom when plant-hunting for James Veitch & Son. Its nearest ally is, to all appearances, the so-called P. frondosa, of which it is a glorified form. The species is obviously a variable one, the plants shown demonstrating this unmistakably in the size and coloring of the flowers. When more fully established, the plants may be expected to attain a much greater vigor than those now shown.

KINGSVILLE, TEX.—The Rio Grande Horticultural Society will hold its field day here May 4. The programme includes an auto ride to the celebrated orchards and vineyards, a dinner at the Commercial club and discussions at the Opera house.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.—The Easter business was much greater, at least 50 per cent increase, says Grant Newport. All plants in bloom were in good demand and fancy potted plants sold well at fancy prices. The supply of some plants was adequate but of others there was not enough and the lilies were very short-stemmed. Carnations sold much better than roses, the sales being 50 per cent larger. The prices were about the same as last year.

A GREAT OVERSUPPLY.

The month just passed was absolutely the worst April that this market has known in many years. Never before has the supply been so much larger than the demand. It is rare in this market for really choice stock not to bring some fair price, and be entirely taken up. Many times during the month just closed the choicest stock hardly moved at any price. Buyers would not even set their own figures, saying simply: "What's the use? I can't use them." Last year the very opposite was the rule; after Easter business was glorious. The demand quickly took up the entire good supply and ruling prices in most lines were easily double those of this year's and in some instances more. At that time, too, rushing business kept up from Easter to the first of July. Business should again pick up before long. The recital season is just beginning and commencement season will be again with us before long. The June weddings should also bring up the demand. Combined with these prospects, the quantity of the offerings has been decreased. The dumped shipments have almost stopped and local cuts are getting back to the point where if there is any fair amount of business at all they will clean up nicely. The start of this week's business was fair and the market is in a tolerably good condition. Plenty of good stock is offered and for the first days of the week most all of it was taken up. It is hard, however, to tell what the close will bring. On other weeks the end has shown a large accumulation and this week will hardly, judging from present indications, prove different. A bright feature of this past week has been the increase in cut of choice American Beauty roses. Easter lilies and callas are selling as low as $3 a hundred and many are being dumped. The first-class retailers are maintaining their price on lilies from $2.50 to $5 a dozen, while many of the cheap sale stores are selling them as low as $1 a dozen.

NOTES.

One new flower store has been opened and another will open in the near future. The first is that of Andrew Buchner at 2823 Vine street in Corryville, and the other by Mrs. Thadden, near Peebles corner, in Walnut Hills. The latter bought out most of the floral fixtures and supplies of the Shop Perfect receivers' sale.

Harrie B. McCullough, while returning from the south, where he and his wife and family have been for some time past, was injured in a wreck on the Southern railway near Crittenden, Ky., Monday morning.

P. J. Olinger was in New Castle, Ind., for a few days last week. Mr. Olinger says that the condition of his plant is very satisfactory to him.

Gus Adrian has in his greenhouses at Clifton a choice lot of bedding stock which he will dispose of in a hurry when the season opens properly.

Burglars visited Henry Schwarz's greenhouses in South Norwood last week, but took little of value.

C. E. Critchell reports that he is having a good call for metal wreaths for Memorial day business.

BOOMING MOTHERS' DAY.

Business is again back to a good sound basis, the demand being all that can be desired, and stock is cleaning up nicely, with receipts decreasing in some lines. The demand for color is far and away ahead of light shades, and red carnations and Richmond roses have cleaned up daily. Sweet peas of the better grades and pansies are having a good demand. Lily of the valley is good, with a good call. Snapdragon, mignonette, lupines, daisies, calendulas and orchids find ready sale. American Beauties, long-stemmed are arriving daily and also plenty of shorter stock, with good flowers. Mrs. Aaron Ward, Richmond, Killarney, White Killarney and My Maryland roses, are all in fine shape with plenty of stock for all requirements. Smilax of good quality is now being received and adiantum is in good demand as in fact are all other greens. Callas and Easter lilies move slowly. Violets are but in little request and swainsonia, although plentiful, is not much in demand. The outside bulbous flowers are now coming in, as well as iris of all colors. The late spring is causing much discussion as to whether peonies will be in for Memorial day, most growers claiming there will be very little outdoor stock on the market. Mothers' day is to be freely advertised in this city and it is hoped that all the retailers will respond and help the advertising committee both financially and otherwise in boosting "Mother's day," May 12. THE GLUT DISAPPEARING.

The glut has somewhat decreased but the supply is still sufficient. Outdoor lilacs have arrived and are selling well. Violets have passed and sweet peas are daily showing shorter stems and poorer quality. Carnations also are deteriorating and show the effects of the warmer weather. It has been very rainy accompanied with high wind which has delayed outside work, and the growers are waiting for dryer weather.

MARCH WEATHER IN APRIL.

Wet, cold weather has been our lot this month. April has borrowed from March this year and continued unsettled weather has interfered with the early building operations. Some are thus early predicting a shortage of flowers for Memorial day, but that is an annual song. Business at the end is better than at the first part of the week. Carnations are selling well, roses, although not overstocked, are lower, gardenias are not wanted, sweet peas are not over plentiful, and what there is are exceptionally good, and bringing good prices. The pink variety of lupines is seen, if the flower had a perfume it might sell better. The early plant trade is beginning to assert itself, bedding plants are seen. May flowers have been for sale on the streets for the past week. Mignonette is a drug. Lilac does not take, the people want this flower about Memorial day. We noticed a large shipment of pink and white, with no buyers. President Carnot roses are not enjoying their former popularity.

NOTES.

A corporation has been formed in Montreal under the laws of Canada, to do a commission business in that city, under the name of the Montreal Floral Co., Ltd. P. Welch of Boston is the treasurer. Monday, April 29, was the opening day and with only one wholesale commission store in a city of 600,000 people, it seems at the start to spell success. It will concentrate the cut of the Canadian growers, and open avenues of trade hitherto unknown.

The store is at 123 Mansfield street and will be in charge of a manager, and has been thoroughly equipped with ice-chests, etc., to do a first-class business. P. Welch is enthusiastic over the project. We hear the calamity howlers, the tariff hot air men, and the bunco politicians fight at long range on reciprocity, but this has been carried quietly through and American capital has been put into Canada to enlarge and develop a business that many think is in its infancy. Who knows but some enterprising Yankee may go to the North Pole and open a swell store and show the Eskimo bride how to carry a wedding bouquet, and pin orange blossoms on her veil. Talk is cheap, but it takes brains to do business properly.

At present we are in the center of a political struggle. The old days of Downybrook fair was nothing to it. Let us hope it will soon be over, and business settle down again to its normal condition. It seems funny that men

AN ABUNDANCE OF STOCK.

There are large quantities of flowers, particularly roses, now being placed on the market, for which there is little demand. Snapdragon is another flower that helps overstock. Easter lilies are in the same class and there is a general fullness along the line. My Maryland roses are looking up as the warmer weather appears to suit them, and while Killarney is weakening and losing in size and form, My Maryland is holding its own or getting better. Carnations are still in good shape, but losing their bright colors. The demand for this flower for Mothers' day promises to be as strong as ever, as orders are being booked even now. There is a fair demand for lily of the valley. Orchids are in seasonable demand, as are also gardenias, which, while plentiful, bring a fair price. There have been plenty of local Emperor narcissus, which have been in good demand, the cool weather of the past week keeping them in good condition. There has been a good sale for blossoms of apple, peach, cherry and other fruit and flowering trees. The first dogwood arrived from the south and made quite a hit. There have been several important weddings, at which there was considerable decorative work. J. J. Habermehl's Sons had the decorations for the Grant anniversary dinner at the Union League. The electric light effects were also placed by their own force, and altogether the effect was very fine.

NOTES.

Mr. Feursterberg has given up his first love, the Floral Exchange greenhouses at Edgely, Pa. He is a pioneer in economical greenhouse building, and it was here that the first large rose house, 52x300 feet, was erected. Rose growers from all over the country came to look at it, and most all agreed that it would not stand the strong winds nor the heavy snows; that it could not be heated properly, and found other objections, such as difficulty of painting or repair work over such a large glass area. A year's experience, however, showed them that their fears were mostly groundless, and the economies of space and labor-saving became so evident that all large growers soon had houses up that made this look very small by comparison. The Floral Nurseries Co. have purchased the greenhouses and will continue the business under the management of Albert Arnold. The superintendent, Harry Simpson, who has been so successful, will remain. We believe another innovation, that of pumping the condensed steam back to the boiler instead of having it return by gravity, was first successfully demonstrated here and is now almost universally used in all new systems of greenhouse heating. Mr. Feursterberg will devote

At a special meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, held on April 24, to take action upon the death of their fellow member, Moses Rice, the following resolutions were adopted:

We, the members of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, having heard with deep regret of the death of our fellow member, Moses Rice, be it

Resolved: That he, having been a very active member in the early history of the club and taking a great interest in its welfare, and,

Resolved: That we express our great sorrow at his having been taken from us. He will be greatly missed, not only in the club, but also by the trade in general; and be it further

Whereas: He had greatly endeared himself to us by his genial disposition and upright character, be it further

Resolved: That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes and a copy sent to the family.

The untimely death of Fred Ehret was sad news to his many friends of the craft. He was a genial, kindly man, a large buyer and successful business man who will certainly be missed by his business associates.

E. R. Martin of the Tustin Floral Co., who is in the German hospital recovering from an operation for appendicitis, is getting on nicely, and it is hoped will soon be able to be about again.

John Cleary of New York auctioned off an importation of bay trees in this city for the Philadelphia Auction Co. They brought fair prices.

Edward Reid is on the sick list and has gone south for a brief rest.

STOCK SELLING WELL.

A good demand coupled with a decidedly scarce crop of carnations kept the boards clean of these flowers the entire week, and on Saturday almost all the flowers cleaned up nearly as well. Sweet peas are in very good demand, and violets still sell. Inside lilac is done, and outside stock is not far away. Quantities of outside daffodils and tulips are brought in by the country people.

NOTES.

The warm weather is bringing out a little baseball talk, and we look for the florists' teams to soon get at it. Last year the A. W. Smith Co., The E. C. Ludwig Floral Co., Randolph & McClements, The Zieger Co., The McCalum Co., and The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., all had teams in the field, and we hope to see a few more teams line up this season.

Mrs. E. A. Williams made a very fine display of uncut Kaiser Kroon tulips, which gave passerbys a change from the usual made up baskets, specimen plants, etc.

The South Hill Floral Co., is the name under which the new purchasers are running the old South View Floral Co.

I. Rosnosky of Henry F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, spent several days among the florists.

Nick and John Harris spent several days in New York this week.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.—Lord & Burnham Co. are building a greenhouse for R. W. Johnson, 18x50 feet.

Rochester, N. Y.

The past week's trade was about the same as last, with plenty of good stock on hand. Carnations on the whole are fairly plentiful, and of good quality, although the prices have dropped slightly since our last report. Roses are also plentiful and hundreds were sold on the street Saturday, among them being quite a lot of Marechal Niel. Violets have been of fair quality, considering the lateness of the season, but last Saturday brought our last shipment. Sweet peas are good and are coming along in fine shape, it seems as if greater care was being taken with them this season. Several of the growers adding a few spray of adiantum, which greatly improves them. Easter lilies are in shorter supply. Some especially fine snupdragon is coming in from an out-of-town grower, which finds ready customers. Large quantities are being used for decorations. Smilax is still scarce and very little can be obtained.

NOTES.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Association it was voted to invite the Syracuse Rose Society and Syracuse Florists' Association to visit Highland Park during the lilac season, about May 20. President John Dunbar has appointed the following to act as the entertainment committee: E. T. Wilson, chairman, George B. Hart, F. W. Vick, W. L. Keller, E. R. Fry, with the secretary H. B. Stringer. The ladies have also been invited to accompany the visitors as the guests of the Ladies' Society of the body.

John Dunbar of the Park Board says that they have started to plant shrubs and trees in the Exposition park. The planting is under the supervision of the Park Board, but the funds come from the Exposition Park Board. The planting of evergreens and shrubs has also been commenced at the Durand-Eastman park. Work is well under way at the Cobb's-Hill park, where 2,000 evergreens will be planted.

George T. Boucher has a good display of fancy pelargoniums in his window. Last week was especially heavy with funeral work, many large pieces were made for the Stecker funeral.

J. B. Keller's Sons have a very artistic window display this week, consisting of green moss, with marguerites, and in the center pink rambler roses. The effect is fine.

Mrs. H. E. Wilson had the misfortune to sprain her ankle the other day as she was descending some steps. We learn that she is improving.

H. E. Wilson is still cutting some fine bulbous flowers, including jenuils, tulips, hyacinths. He finds the potted bulbs very ready sellers.

Miss Rosetta Brown had a picture postal card shower last week, when something like 30 cards were received.

The new conservatory at Highland park is attracting large crowds to see the immense display of spring flowers.

E. R. Fry reports good business. the spring bedding plants are in fine shape and ready for the customers.

Miss Lillian Wheeler has returned to work again, after two weeks' sickness with tonsillitis. H. J. H.

SPRING WEATHER.

April showers bring May flowers and truly we have had a week of showers. The country is beautiful, lawns like velvet, little tender green leaves bursting out of the maples, fruit trees full of bloom and the flowering shrub and trees are a mass of yellow and white flowers. Weddings have been numerous and many flowers have been used for those functions. Lily of the valley is the favorite for the bride's bouquet with the addition of garden-

ias. Some of course prefer the Bride roses, while the attendants use quantities of sweet peas and Killarney roses. We noticed one wedding where quantities of yellow daisies were used. The color scheme being yellow and white. Violets are still with us, but scarce. Everything else seems plentiful. Prices have dropped and business has resumed normal conditions again. Easter is a thing of the past and Memorial day will be next to create a demand for flowers. The flower market has not been rushed this week, but still a fair business has kept things moving.

Arbor Day was observed in the schools as it has been since 1894. Trees were planted at the Eastern and Western High schools and elementary schools, also talks on trees. There will be considerable greenhouse building this year. James Hamilton, Mt. Washington, will erect a house 40x200 feet for roses; B. S. Merritt, Grange, a house 54x100 feet for American Beauty roses; Hans Anderson, Towson, two houses 30x80 feet. Lehr Bros. and Lohr & Fritz are both planning to build new houses.

The garden committee of the Women's Civic League proposes to hold a flower market May 9 at Monument place, similar to the one that was such a pleasant incident last spring.

Minneapolis, Minn.

All the growers claim to have had a very satisfactory Easter, and the retailers all did well. There was an abundance of lilies, but the cheap competition of the department and grocery stores, was in the opinion of many detrimental to the business. Stock at present is not as plentiful as it should be, the carnations being generally off crop. Bedding stock looks well, and with good weather there is no reason why all should not enjoy a prosperous spring trade.

NOTES.

At a meeting of the Minnesota State Florists' Association held at the Minneapolis Park Board greenhouses, April 17, in discussing the Easter trade there was much controversy over the practice of the growers selling their stock to outside stores, which sold lilies at 15 cents and even 10 cents per flower, many retailers claiming that it injured their business. L.

WORCESTER, MASS.—The weather was very fine for the deliveries and good stock was in abundance, reports H. F. A. Lange, and the business increased about 25 per cent. Regular prices prevailed and lilies were the plants most in demand but all plants sold well. Cut bulbous flowers, carnations, violets and roses all had a good call, but violets were scarce; with this exception stock was adequate. Some of the lilies were short but the people have become accustomed to these and they like them better than the tall ones.

New York.

A MORE ENCOURAGING OUTLOOK.

Last week was very much more encouraging in the wholesale market, there was a brisk demand all along the line. Prices while not advancing to any extent, were better than they have been. American Beauties of the best quality have been doing very well and Ulrich Brunners are also selling better, while moss roses meet with ready sale. Mme. Chatenay, Lady Hillingdon, Radiance, Mrs. Aaron Ward are all doing better and Richmonds are not so plentiful. There is a great supply of Killarney, Brides and Bridesmaids which do not sell as well as the other varieties, but the supply of roses of all varieties has increased very much. Carnations are doing somewhat better, the best quality are not so plentiful and the prices have advanced. The prices on orchids remain stationary, but there has been a great call for these during the week for funeral work and the supply which had been accumulating for several days has been reduced considerably. Only the finest gardenias meet with ready sale, all of the poorer grades and short-stemmed flowers have to be disposed of to the street men. Sweet peas are of only fair quality and it is only the very best that are realizing good prices. Lilies are plentiful and the prices low and it is the same with callas. The violets that are coming in are not worth quoting. Lily of the valley, daffodils and tulips are more plentiful and the demand for these has been firmer. Good smilax is scarce and the best asparagus is also in limited supply.

NOTES.

The local governing board of the National Flower Show committee are still holding weekly meetings and are much pleased with the progress already made. They would be glad to hear from any retailer, seedsman, grower or dealer with any suggestions as to what would be an attractive feature and would be glad to receive special prizes to be awarded as the donor desires. Sub-committees have been appointed to interview the members of different branches of the trade, but they desire that no one shall feel slighted, in case they are overlooked.

Jonathan Nash reported that the Bedford Hills Nurseries are being completely overhauled and with an early start they expect to have a full supply of all novelties in roses the coming season and every effort will be made to have the output from this large place in keeping with the quality of stock that Moore, Hentz & Nash have been receiving in the past.

Philip F. Kessler, although in the midst of a very busy season, is devoting a lot of time to the next annual outing of the New York Florists' Club. Mr. Kessler is chairman of the Outing committee and promises new features that are bound to make this affair the most successful in the history of the club.

Mrs. A. M. Henshaw is slowly recovering from the operation which she underwent for appendicitis last week. Mr. Henshaw has purchased a building site at South Orange, N. J., where he will erect a bungalow and make his summer home.

Mrs. Eccles, wife of Wm. Eccles, Oyster Bay, L. I., died on April 19 and was buried on the Monday following. Several members of the New York Florists' Club of which Mr. Eccles was a member attended the services.

W. H. Siebrecht of Astoria, L. I., is making heavy shipments of bulbous stock to Badgley, Reidel & Meyer. This stock is of the usual very fine quality that comes from this place.

The sales at the auction rooms have been very successful during the past

A SATISFACTORY BUSINESS.

Although much stock is selling cheap, there is a healthy movement and dealers seem fairly well satisfied. This week will about clean up the lilac and other spring blossoms of its class and roses, carnations and sweet peas, will for a time be standbys. American Beauty roses are now rather plentiful and wholesale shipments have recently been made to neighboring cities. Carnations are holding out well, but there is no great surplus and the probabilities are that wholesale prices will be somewhat higher in a week or two. Some excellent carnation stock has recently been received here from northern points. The past two weeks have been favorable for outdoor work and most of the young carnation stock has been planted in the fields. Sweet peas sown about a month ago, are now making good growth.

NOTES.

F. H. Kramer, who is very enterprising, had a number of the surviving sailors of the Titanic sell grapevines in his store, April 29, and the entire proceeds were given to the sailors. The sale was managed by Mrs. DuBois of Mr. Kramer's staff. These sailors, it may be added in explanation, are here under subpoenas of the senate committee investigating the disaster. Some of them have families in England who are depending on them for support and they deserve any assistance given them. The Imperial theatre in which Mr. Kramer is interested has also given the sailors a benefit.

George H. Cooke executed an elaborate wreath April 28, to be placed on Washington's tomb at Mt. Vernon. The wreath was very large, of magnolia leaves, American Beauty roses and other flowers and was ordered by the delegation of French notables which has come to this country to present as a gift from the people of France to the people of the United States, the bust of "La France," by Anguste Rodin. It has become a custom for the representatives of foreign governments, visiting the national capitol on special missions, to place a wreath on the tomb of Washington.

Frederick J. Crittenden, who at various times within the past few years had been a salesman for Alex. B. Garden in the Centre Market, died April 27 of typhoid pneumonia. He was about forty-five years old and leaves a large family. Though not a florist, he had a good general knowledge of commercial stock, sufficient to make him a good salesman. He was also genial and obliging and his death is deeply regretted by many who knew him.

J. H. Small & Sons decorated for the wedding of Miss Amy Richardson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Richardson, to Ensign William Dwight Chandler, Jr., U. S. N. The bride is a niece of John H. Small of this city and Charles A. Small of New York; the groom is a grandson of Hon. William E. Chandler, a former United States senator from New Hampshire, and once secretary of the navy.

There were quite a number of weddings during the past week, several of which called for fine decorations. Notable among them was the Fletcher-Kemp wedding for which Z. D. Blackstone executed elaborate decorations, both at the church and at Rancher's where the reception was held.

Gude Bros. Co. sent 300 American Beauty roses to Philadelphia, April 27, to be used in an elaborate decoration at the Union League Club.

Arthur Garden has a fine stock of geraniums, well flowered, which are selling fast.

W. W. Kimmell has been sick.

Elmer Mayberry is improving.

NOTES.

George H. Burgess, chief engineer of the Delaware & Hudson railroad, has announced that the company hereafter will not use plants in the beds surrounding the stations on the line. Men are at work planting shrubbery to take the place of the plants. Mr. Burgess said that hereafter shrubs and lawns will take the place of the flowers during the season. It was said that the move to plant shrubbery was in the line of economy, but Mr. Burgess denied this and said that the same number of men will be employed to take care of the station grounds as formerly.

Announcement is made that Arnold Brunner has been named by the city officials as municipal planner. Mr. Brunner has done some important work for Chicago, Washington, Cleveland, and Grand Rapids in the line of city improvement. He will act in an advisory capacity in connection with the department of public works. The common council has appropriated $5,000 to pay for Mr. Brunner's services and for any public hearings that may be required in connection with the carrying out of his suggestions. R. D.

Northern Indiana Florists' Association.

The Northern Indiana Florists' Association held a very interesting meeting at Kokomo, April 17. A large number of members attended and some important business was transacted. One of the leading features was the exhibits which were extremely good, W. Frank & Sons, Portland, showing large vases of Richmond, White Killarney and Killarney roses which would have done credit to them at the National Rose Show. In carnations, they were also leaders, with vases of Enchantress, Mrs. Lawson, Mayday, Mrs. C. W. Ward and two seedlings, one red which was of good color, good stem, and large size, they claim it to be a free grower and good bloomer, the other a white, which was taken by some for White Wonder, which it resembled in some ways. W. W. Coles displayed a large vase of Mrs. C. W. Ward, which were far above the average commercial varieties. Henry W. Johnson, Kendallville, displayed a number varieties of carnations and some very fine Godfrey callas. J. H. Shelton of Rochester, displayed some giant callas, which he called the California, of enormous size and different shape from the ordinary calla. Muncie Floral Co. had specimens of 4-inch geraniums which were alright. Simon Humfeld had a variety of plants in small sizes which he displayed as samples.

An elegant banquet was served at the Francis Hotel after which the members were escorted to the different greenhouses of the city, which were all very prosperous looking and everyone seemed to have all he could conveniently do. After a short closing session, the meeting adjourned until July, when the annual meeting will be held.

problem than producing the winter supply. We are having an abundance of iris, snowball, lilac and lily of the valley now, out-of-door cutting, and even the dog-wood blossom is being used very effectively for decoration, but it brings no grist to the florist mill, as all one has to do is to go to the woods and cut it.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Company has had a wonderful sale on potted plants, especially hydrangeas. The firm is going entirely out of the bedding plant and nursery business and will confine itself strictly to the cut flower trade, and is experimenting with home grown lily of the valley for forcing.

Geny Bros, have had a fine trade in funeral work and have furnished one beautiful wedding order. It was an Easter lily wedding and hundreds of these lovely blossoms were used in the wedding decorations.

The J. New Iron At B

MR. J. W. DAVIS is just another one of your men "from Missouri." As a matter of fact, he wasn't satisfied with being "shown"—he did some vigorous investigating on his own account before placing his order. Not only did he visit western layouts, but many of the splendid Iron Frame ranges in the east.

One of them was John Stephenson & Sons, just outside of Philadelphia. Just before his visit a cyclone passed through the neighborhood and had torn down immense trees on each side of the new Stephenson Iron Frame house 70 x 400 feet. Not a light of glass had been broken, although many other houses in the vicinity were twisted out of shape and badly racked.

The Three L

THE sides are seven feet. The posts are guaranteed wrought iron imbedded in concrete and bolted to the rafters at the eaves by double gusset plates.

A curtain concrete wall extends twelve inches above the floor line. It is capped by a cypress sill bedded into the concrete and the glazing bars extend from this sill to the transom sash.

The sash are hinged directly to the patented angle iron eave plate, which is equipped with a drip gutter.

This conclusive bit of evidence was a strong factor in Mr. Davis deciding upon the L. & B. Iron Frame construction.

His brother, of W. B. Davis Co. of Aurora, Ill., was so impressed with the superiority of J. W.'s new range that he placed with Mr. Sykes, of the Chicago office, an order for two houses, 30 by 200 feet.

Send for our new Iron Frame catalog. It not only explains the construction in detail, but gives a dozen leading growers' opinions of it.

THIS detail shows the construction of the pipe frame propagating house, 34 feet 7 inches by 260 feet.

Like the Iron Frame one, the posts are guaranteed wrought iron imbedded in concrete footings.

The Giant Arch of pipe clamped together by our Bull Dog Grip double bolted fittings forms the main supporting members.

VISITED CHICAGO: A. T. Ferrell, Saginaw, Mich.

GLADIOLUS growers report the season very wet and backward, and only a small portion of the stock in the ground.

FOR timothy seed, Pine Tree brand, $15.75 was asked May 1, the price being $1 off in 10 days. Millets are all higher, something like 50 cents advance in the last 10 days.

NEW YORK.—Loewith, Larson & Co. have succeeded to the business of Julius Loewith and are located at 150 Nassau street, having moved from 99 Nassau street, May 1.

MICHIGAN experts report that severe winter weather has heaved out the red clover plants on the hillsides and in other cases the ice sheet has killed the plants on low ground.

APRIL business with western seed houses has been a record-breaker in volume, partly because of increased values and largely by real increase in number and size of orders.

SOME Wisconsin experts report red clover has suffered severely, mainly because the summer drought either killed the plants or weakened them seriously; in the northern part of the state clover and grasses wintered nicely.

CHICAGO.—Prices on the Board of Trade, May 1, for grass seed were noted as follows: Timothy, $7 to $13 per 100 pounds.—A. Henderson & Co. have moved from the Atlas building to larger quarters in the old Fort Dearborn building, 352 North Michigan avenue.

French Bulb Prices, Crop of 1912.

The French Syndicate for the Defense of Agriculture fixed on Saturday afternoon, April 27, prices for growers, their members, for the present season as follows: White Roman hyacinths, the crop, 12 centimeters and up, per 1,000, 80 francs; Narcissus Paper White Grandiflora, 13 centimeters and up, 20 francs; same, 14 centimeters and up, 25 francs. From other reliable sources THE FLORIST is advised that the crop is likely to be less than an average one, though whether the crop is sufficiently advanced to verify this claim now can not be positively stated. French dealers are, of course, asking prices at an advance over those mentioned above to cover their profits. Whether American jobbers will be disposed to cover their wants at the above high rates can not at this date be foreseen.

Duty on Corn in the Ear.

The treasury department having received a letter from a firm of seedsmen requesting information as to the proper basis for the assessment of duty upon field corn imported in the ear, advises the collector of customs at Detroit, Mich., as follows: As it appears that the firm contemplates importing the corn through your port, I have to advise you that it is the commercial practice to treat 70 pounds of corn husked but not shelled, as the equivalent of 56 pounds of shelled corn, and you are accordingly directed to assess duty upon field corn, husked, imported in the ear, at the rate of 15 cents per bushel under paragraph 235, 70 pounds of the corn to be treated as the equivalent of the 56 pounds provided for in the said paragraph.

United States Department of Agriculture

BLACK LIST FOR 1911.

The manager of this list, E. Brown, botanist of the seed laboratory, reports as follows:

Red Clover—510 samples secured; none found adulterated.

Orchard Grass—305 samples obtained; 28 found to be adulterated.

Kentucky Blue Grass—430 samples secured; 35 found to be wholly or in part seed of Canada Blue Grass, timothy, redtop or bentgrass.

Running short of firms to black list in the grass seed lines formerly examined by the department, Mr. Brown, needing filling for his annual "Knock" on the seed trade of the country, started a campaign on imported seed of Hairy Vetch—303 samples secured; 187 adulterated.

Here he found a rich field, sixty-two per cent being wrong. Mr. Brown does not have the grace to say that evidently this seed was adulterated in Europe, which he could easily prove by the samples the Department of Agriculture has the opportunity to take from any importation at the various custom houses, but evidently prefers to let the inference stand that sixty-two per cent of American seedsmen in securing this valuable soiling plant for their customers from Europe, the only source available, have deliberately adulterated this seed or knowingly acquiesced in the same. The United States Department of Agriculture engaged in distributing free seeds, as well as bulbs and shrubs, to the value of over a quarter of a million dollars annually, is pleased to spend some more of the public money in "Knocking" this industry, which it is already deliberately competing against, without suggesting a remedy.

Such is the beneficence radiating from the administration of Tama Jim Wilson and his anti-seed-business machine. Why does not the department publish the errors made by its own agents in sending out misnamed vegetable seeds and falsely publishing the firm of N. J. Burt & Son of Burlington, Ia., as selling adulterated seeds? Be fair, gentlemen, if you can and give us in these annual black lists the details of your own errors in the seed business.

Dissemination of Cabbage Diseases.

Fungous and bacterial diseases of the cabbage are carried from one plant to another by insects, infected seed, transplanting from an infected seed bed to the field, drainage water, stable manure and compost, animals and wind, states the United States Department of Agriculture in a recent bulletin entitled, "Diseases of Cabbage and Related Crops and Their Control." Insects are potent factors in the distribution of some diseases, the bacteria causing the black rot is carried from one plant to another by slugs and snails, and club root has an offensive odor at some stages which attracts insects, and new infections are brought about by their visiting other plants. Germs of some diseases are found on the seed, and as a precautionary measure the seed can be disinfected by being placed for 15 minutes in a solution of one-quarter pint of formaldehyde (40 per cent) in seven gallons of water, then dipped in pure water to wash off the formaldehyde and then spread out to dry. The seed bed should be carefully prepared and steam sterilization is recommended. Drainage water from a field on which the refuse of diseased plants was allowed to remain will infect the land upon which it flows. The throwing of refuse of cabbage or other crops into the manure is bad practice, for the germs are distributed on the fields another year, and also allowing cattle or sheep to feed on the roughage of cabbage fields, for the organisms may pass through unharmed and become incorporated in the manure.

Club root is a soil parasite and can not be controlled by any fungicide, but slaked lime at the rate of 75 bushels to the acre will keep the disease in check and rotation of crops will starve it out, but long rotations are necessary, for instances are known where six or seven years have failed to eradicate the malady. Root-knot is caused by eelworms and confined to light, sandy soils, and a rotation of at least three years with crops known to be immune and clean cultivation will eradicate the disease. Black rot infection takes place at the margin of and works through, the leaf, the heads growing dwarf or one-sided, in early infections absence of the head, and in extreme cases the death of the plant. No methods of controlling black rot are known, and every precaution must be taken to prevent serious loss by this destructive disease. Black leg or wilt is not widely distributed in this country, and commonly attacks the plant when young. Steam sterilization of the soil will keep the disease down in the seed bed, and where fields are infected diseased plants should be burned, crop rotation practiced, the seed disinfected, and cattle and other stock should not be allowed to roam in infected fields. Other minor diseases are described and their control outlined, but they do not as a rule cause serious loss.

Tomato Growing in Canada.

The production of early tomatoes has become prominent in the more favored parts of Ontario province, including the Niagara peninsula, the Leamington district in Essex county, and the neighborhood of Toronto, and it is carried on to a lesser extent throughout the tomato-growing sections of the province. The total shipments from the Leamington district, exclusive of those consigned to Winnipeg, from July 1 to August 12, 1911, amounted to 40,000 baskets. No reliable information is available of the shipments from the other districts. Most of the early tomatoes are marketed through Toronto, states Consul Felix S. S. Johnson, Kingston. The Essex growers claim that the western trade has not proved satisfactory, the first shipments by express are expensive and come in competition with the American product, while later the cheaper shipments by freight compete with the St. Catharines tomatoes. It is also said that the fruit is not handled to the best advantage in Winnipeg, the jobber taking too large a share of the profits.

Most of the seed comes from the United States, the price running from $1 to $10 per pound, the general price being about $3. The duty on seed imported from the United States is 10 percent ad valorem, when importation is in packages weighing over one pound, and 25 per cent ad valorem when in packages weighing one pound or less. In 1911 Canada imported fresh tomatoes as follows: From the United States, 203,349 bushels, valued at $256,127; from Cuba, 480 bushels, value $770; from the United Kingdom, 743 bushels, value $996.

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen
 J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O., President;
 W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass., Vice-
 President; John Hall, Rochester, N. Y., Sec'y.
 Thirty-seventh annual convention to be held at Boston, Mass., June 12-14, 1912.

"THE More Important Insect and Fungous Enemies of the Fruit and Foliage of the Apple" is the title of Bulletin No. 492 issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, which describes such enemies and recommends the necessary treatment for prevention and remedy, and contains illustrations of both insects and fungous infestation, with directions for the manufacture and spraying of fungicides and poisonous applications.

Another Evergreen Seedling Decision.

Another decision in regard to admitting the importation of evergreens grown from seed free of duty was made by the board of United States general appraisers on the protest of Wm. Larzelere & Co., Philadelphia, against the assessment of twenty-five per cent duty, as follows:

It is claimed in these protests that merchandise which has been assessed as nursery stock under paragraph 264, tariff act of 1909, should be free of duty as evergreen seedlings under paragraph 668. In the case of Re Harris, Abs. (T. D.) 408080, etc., the question of the meaning and scope of the term "evergreen seedling" was considered, and the previous decision of the board (G. A. 5305 T. D. 24305) on the same question was followed, holding that the term applies to an evergreen propagated from the seed, as distinguished from one grown from a stock or cutting, regardless of the age or size of the plant, or the fact that it may have been transplanted. We therefore adopt that definition in arriving at a conclusion regarding the items involved in these protests.

From the testimony taken in these cases and the catalogues introduced in evidence marked exhibit A-1 and exhibit 2, it appears that the following described evergreens involved in these protests were from seeds: Abies excelsa, Abies concolor, Abies pectinata, Abies pinsapo, Pinus austriaca, Pinus sylvestris, Juniperus Virginiana, Thuja occidentalis, Abies Nordmanniana, Texas baccata, Kalmia latifolia (flowering plant). The protests are therefore sustained in so far as they relate to the above enumerated varieties of evergreens, and the collector is instructed to grant free entry thereon under paragraph 668. In all other respects and as to all other goods, the protests are over-ruled.

The Japanese Umbrella Pine.

This is one of the most distinct and choicest hardy conifers introduced into this country. The sciadopitys is a monotypic genus, and quite different from any other conifer. It is a native of Japan, where the Umbrella Pine is said to grow wild only on the mountains of Nippon. The tree has, however, been freely planted by the Japanese, more especially in the vicinity of their temples. The Swedish botanist, Thunberg, records its cultivation in Japan in 1776. To Thomas Lobb belongs the credit of introducing the first plant in 1853. This, unfortunately, died, but eight years later John Gould Veitch brought home seeds from Japan.

Although perfectly hardy, states The Garden, the conditions favorable to the development of the tree appear to be warm, sheltered positions and a light, sandy peat with plenty of moisture in summer; lime is said to be detrimental. Several trees of moderate size are recorded as growing in this country—a specimen at Hemsted, Kent, over forty feet in height, and one in South Devon 30 feet in height—but there are no large specimens. Trees in Japan attain a height of 100 feet to 120 feet. It is an interesting fact, told me by a Japanese, that while young, transplanted trees cone in quite a small state, the wild trees grow to a very large size before producing cones. A notable character of the tree is the narrow, pyramidal shape with a tapering leader. Cones and ripe seeds are produced in this country, taking two years to mature; in fact, cones are produced so freely that it has been thought desirable for the health of the plant to remove a large percentage of them. The cones are cylindrical in shape, about three inches long and 1½ inches in diameter. Seeds germinate freely, but to rear them successfully great care and plenty of attention are necessary in a young state. A second means of propagation is to graft the terminal shoots on pieces of the root taken from a young tree during March or April.

THE KROESCHELL GREENHOUSE BOILER

Here is the boiler that is making the most wonderful greenhouse heating record in the world. Florists and gardeners who have used other makes are constantly giving the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler the highest praise.

10,788,000 square feet of glass was equipped with the Kroeschell Boiler during the past five years. You will find the new 1910 model Kroeschell Hot Water Boiler in every state in the Union and Canada.

Our Eastern business has been exceedingly heavy the past season.

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place: this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

What The Users Say

Kroeschell Replaces Three (3) Cast Iron Boilers,

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this—your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m., November 24, and the next morning at 7 o'clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn't magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler. We know if parties wishing a boiler would get one from you they never would try any other. We think in 5 years' running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain,
Very truly yours,

ADAM LAUB & SON, Hughsonville, N. Y.

Kroeschell Boiler Better than Tubular Boilers or Cast Iron Boilers.

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, OHIO.

Have used upright boiler, tubular boiler and cast iron boiler. The Kroeschell Boiler heats up better and easier than any other boiler we have ever had anything to do with. If we ever buy another, it will certainly be a Kroeschell. Very truly yours, POOLE & PURLLANT.

Kroeschell Piping System—

Circulation is perfect. Cheaper and better than 1, 1½, 1½, or 2-in. threaded pipe. Overcomes all the disadvantages of 4-in. cast iron pipes. No deep boiler pits required.

The Kroeschell Generator—

Cures sluggish circulation. Water travels three to five times faster. Saves fuel. Prevents boiling over. Water can be heated to 240 degrees without boiling, making it possible to have steam temperatures in your piping if wanted. Greatly improves systems having long mains and coils. Can be connected to any hot water system, no matter what kind of boiler or piping is used. Easy to install—simply attach to your present expansion pipe.

What The Users Say

Cast Iron Boilers Cause Freeze-out—Kroeschell Boilers no Worry.

I bought a No. 2 boiler in 1902. Takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass—would take care of 2000 more. I have had a cast iron boiler, but it broke down twice in four years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down Dec. 29, 1904, and I lost all my stock in consequence. I have now two No. 2 and one No. 6 Kroeschell Boilers and do not worry about their breaking down. GRANT NEWPORT, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

The Kroeschell Does Our Work Easier than Cast Iron Boilers and Saves 20% to 25% Fuel.

The No. 4 boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast-iron boilers, one rated for 1200 ft. of pipe and one rated for 1500 ft. These boilers never did the work at their best and when the greenhouses were new. According to our experience with yours, we will save 20 to 25 per cent of fuel. HILD BROS., Lake Forest, Ill.

Try the Kroeschell First—It's Ahead of Them All.

I have had eight or ten other types of boilers. The Kroeschell is the best I have ever used. Your boiler heats the water very quickly—almost as fast as steam. Yours very truly,
H. K. Lewis, Dorotby, N. J.

PATTERSON FILTER PRESS.

ENTERTAINMENT FROM Peters & Reed

This is the fifth article of a series showing machines used in our factory that are necessary to the production of high grade pottery.

The one shown here is known as the Filter Press. It is a long iron frame, through which extends a horizontal rod that carries the circular frames in segment like layers on which the filter sacks hang.

The soft clay is pumped from a cistern through a tube into these sacks and by the heavy pump pressure the water is separated from the solid part, which is then removed in soft smooth cakes perfectly free from all foreign matter and is ready for the last process, which will be given later.

Write for the illustrated description of the full scheme.

WINDOW AND PORCH BOXES.

Decorative Features of Window Boxes.

Boxes of flowering and decorative plants make one of the finest embellishments for the city or suburban home whether the costly mansion or the humble cottage. Many owners of small estates object to cutting up the lawn into flower beds and since the almost universal discarding of fences and hedges on city lots, beds of plants are not safe from the depredations of dogs that roam at will, so the boxes and vases of plants which are so placed that they cannot be injured by trespassers are very popular, and where once adopted are seldom given up for they prove very decorative when properly filled and well cared for. In some of the larger cities and for the residences of wealthy people, boxes are filled with expensive plants and used in profusion, but the greatest demand is for boxes that are filled with the more common and cheaper plants such as geraniums and flowering bedding stock with vines and foliage plants. But to have these boxes thoroughly satisfactory the boxes must be so constructed that good growing conditions can be maintained and the mixture and composition of the soil should be such that will guarantee good results, and above all that the plants receive the necessary care.

Boxes and Soil.

The boxes must be made to conform to the location in which they are to be placed, but they should be made deep enough to hold the soil that will be required to sustain the plants through the season and should therefore be not less than six or seven inches deep, inside measurement. In regard to the length it is much to be preferred that they are not made over six feet long and for the easiest handling four feet is better, for if made in this length they can be filled at the greenhouses and can then be transported to the residences and fastened in their permanent locations. In cases where the space they are to occupy is longer than this the boxes can be made in sections for it entails much less labor to have the boxes about this length and have two or three separate boxes rather than one long one. Where the boxes are made 10 or 12 feet long, they are too heavy to place after being filled and it will be necessary to transport the soil and plants and fill the boxes after they are permanently located, which will require more labor. Where boxes are used year after year it is preferable to make them of some durable wood such as cypress, chestnut or oak, but the majority of the cheaper boxes are made of spruce, hemlock or fir. There seems to be a good opening for a cement box that could be made light enough to be easily handled, and if such a box could be constructed, there is no doubt but that it would be largely employed for it would last much longer than any box made of wood. Many boxes are provided with galvanized trays that may be taken out of the wooden coverings and filled, but with the larger sized boxes these have to be very heavily made, and in this case it is necessary, and as well in the wooden boxes, that good drainage holes are provided. The boxes should be painted and the best effect is produced where they are of the same color as the house, but if not, green seems to be the color most used, but this makes a poor background for the hanging vines, yet light colored boxes soon become dirty unless the watering is carefully done. It seems as if it should be hardly necessary to state that the soil should be of the best compost, but we have often found many customers that thought any garden soil was good enough. But a compost of good sod and rotted manure with a generous addition of bone meal, well mixed, will give the best results and the box filled with good soil will make a much more creditable showing than the one filled with any old material. It can be safely said that to fully satisfy the customer it must be impressed upon their mind that the first necessity is the best of soil. Ample drainage of broken crocks should be placed in the bottom and a thin layer of moss will prevent the fine soil from washing down and blocking up the drainage. Be sure that the boxes are securely fastened, for after the plants and vines have attained size they offer considerable resistance to high winds.

Plants for Window Boxes.

The grower who has many boxes to fill will require first a good assortment of trailing plants or vines for much of the effectiveness of these plant boxes is produced by the vines that droop in front of them. Vines, especially the variegated, are, as a rule, the most popular and they should be well grown with plenty of streamers. Ivies, both English and German, are used in large quantities, and the former if well grown are very ornamental. Other vines that are suitable are trailing nasturtiums, Lobelia gracilis, Solanum jasminoides, Lepospermum, thunbergias and ivy geraniums. It is well not to use too many different kinds in the same box, but one of the flowering vines planted with those of green or variegated foliage make a very effective arrangement. Boston ferns and Asparagus Sprengeri make splendid fillers behind the vines, or boxes filled entirely with the ferns are very effective in shady locations. The selection of the blooming and foliage plants will depend greatly upon the desires of the customer, the price, location and the surroundings, for almost all the assortment of stock at the grower's command can be used. For tropical effects the palms, ficus, dracaenas, crotons, aspidistra, aralias and grevillias can be used and can be made exceedingly ornamental on porches that are too shady for blooming plants. In boxes that are in full sunlight, geraniums and the other flowering bedding plants make the best show and are more often preferred. The best effects, however, are produced by not having too great a variety or too many colors, and in choosing colors that harmonize, one combination that is often seen and should be avoided is a dark pink or bright red geranium and a light pink ivy geranium, the colors often being very inharmonious and produce a patchy effect. A box of one color is by far the most effective.

Planting the Boxes.

It hardly seems necessary to say anything as to the manner of setting the plants in the boxes, but like everything else in gardening there is more than one way of performing the work, and there is a way that the majority think produces the best result. The vines, if they are large and heavy, receive the effect of the wind and if not firmly planted easily become loosened, resulting in weak growths. It is better that these be planted first and the soil well firmed around them. Between the vines the ferns and asparagus can be placed and then the other plants. For boxes that are to be placed in locations which are very dusty such as overhanging streets, avoid the rougher leaved plants, using only those which have smooth and glossy leaves, and these can be frequently sprinkled and the dirt washed off. Where the boxes are filled at the greenhouses and are to be at once transported it is better not to water too heavily, but just enough to settle the soil when they are first planted, and then give them a good watering when they are located. It will be much easier handling and fastening up a box that is not made heavy by water. Where the filling of the boxes is done upon the porch or at the windows by the help, impress upon their mind the necessity of cleaning up and leaving everything neat and to be as careful as possible in blemishing the paint or distributing dirt around. We know of more than one good customer who has been lost by not looking after these little details.

The Show Window.

The different manner of trimming and decorating the windows at Easter could not but attract the attention of the observer, not only those of the florist but also those of other tradesmen. The window in which the dealer displays his stock should be the best advertisement that he has and should also be a silent salesman in so far that the goods are displayed to such advantage that the attention of the shoppers is first attracted to the window and then cause a desire to purchase. The window on one of the crowded thoroughfares in the larger cities is an expensive feature, for the rental of a store greatly depends upon the number of people that pass during the day, the more crowded the thoroughfare the higher the rent, the landlord fully taking into consideration the advantages which the window possesses to a large number of people in fixing the rental, and the valuation of property by municipal officials is greatly influenced by this factor. It is therefore necessary that the proprietor take advantage of these opportunities to attract business.

In looking at the several windows during the Easter holidays, one very marked feature was observed. Some dealers had a large variety of stock displayed, in fact, it seemed that every article that could be found in the store was crowded into the window, while others would have but a very few prominent features of the store on display. We could not help but notice the large stores and admire the arrangement, a large window would have but one figure with a rich garment and an appropriate background. One high class millinery window had one elaborate hat with rich hangings to contrast with the arrangement. In carefully noting which windows attracted the attention of the shoppers, we could easily see that these simple window arrangements were always crowded with eager spectators and before the crowded windows there were very few. Speaking to one well versed in the trade, that although the florist was supposed to be an artist in the arrangement of his stock, the large department store far surpassed him in showing the goods and he immediately said, "It is high salaried men that arrange those window displays." Of course it is, and rightly they should command good salaries for the ability they show in displaying the goods, but why should we not take a lesson from these high-salaried men and endeavor to incorporate their best features?

The florists' windows as a rule are very attractive, but they are not diversified enough. They are arranged each morning and the flowers renewed and the proprietor makes a change in his windows, today he has carnations, roses and violets, tomorrow he will have roses, violets and carnations, and the next day he will have violets, roses and carnations. They may be different in quantity and variety, and he will note a great difference in the appearance, but to the casual observer they look the same every day, and fail to attract his attention. Another has every flower in his store displayed and so crowded together that there is nothing prominent in the whole window. The customer will certainly judge a man's artistic ability by what they see and if some of the windows are a sample of the decorative work of the designers, we doubt if one intending to have a decoration would desire any such arrangement as is displayed in the window.

This is the opportunity which should be grasped. Arrange the window as the drawing room would be decorated and make a decided change often enough to attract attention. In the spring arrange an all yellow window of tulips and daffodils with a nice setting, and see the number of people that will stop and admire it. Have a large vase of American Beauty or other roses with the window draped with green, but no other flower for contrast and see how everyone that passes will stop and gaze at these beautiful flowers. A well arranged basket on a table draped with asparagus with nothing to draw the attention from it, always attracts. By making these changes the window soon becomes a great drawing card, and it would pay any window decorator to walk down the principal streets and notice which windows attract not only his, but everyone's attention, and then make it a study to see what there is that causes the attention. The window can be made one of the best paying features of the store, but it must be constantly attended to, not made a feature once in a while, and it takes study and artistic ability to bring out the best effects. SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Winter Flowering Geraniums.

With all growers having a greenhouse and doing a retail business there is in the fall a good demand for pot geraniums for house culture. Plants lifted from the open ground and potted in the fall are not very satisfactory, for the plants recover from the later transplanting slowly and go out of bloom, and often do not flower again until spring. It is better to grow plants for this purpose in pots through the summer and these with good culture will bloom all winter long if in a sunny position. Cuttings taken at this time will make nice stock for this purpose, or small plants left over after the spring sales can be used. The plants should be potted firmly so that they will make a short, stocky growth, and kept well pinched back throughout the summer, that as many branches may be procured as is possible. All buds should be picked off as soon as formed, allowing no blooms until the plants are firmly established in blooming pots, in which they should be planted the last of August. A 6-inch pot makes the best size for house culture and the plant can be easily grown so that it will fill this size nicely. A frame outside is the most convenient and best place for growing them through the summer months.

Dahlias.

Although the dahlia is of very robust growth and comparatively easy of culture, yet it is one of the most tender plants and will not stand any cold treatment, for the slightest frost will check the growth and almost invariably kill the plant back. It is then too early yet to plant the clumps except where all danger of late frosts has passed, but the eyes may start into growth during the warm days of May, so they should be kept in safe and warm quarters. Where the grower has a good, tight frame that is frost proof the clumps can be taken from storage and placed in the frame and the tubers will grow plump and the eyes break ready for planting as soon as the weather grows warm enough. The place selected for growing them the coming season should, however, be prepared, the ground spaded deeply and if not manured last fall some well-rotted manure spaded in. Many growers do not advise heavy manuring when the clumps are planted and especially no fresh manure, much preferring to get a fair supply in the ground the previous fall so that the rankness will be dissipated in the soil, for too strong manure causes a rank growth and the plants do not bloom as early. With enough manure incorporated in the soil to produce a good hard growth and not too soft, and then mulch with manure when the Concrete Greenhouse Construction.

Abstract of paper read by S. A. Jamieson before the Chicago Florists' Club May 2, 1912, and illustrated with lantern slides.

With the rapid decrease of our timber supply and the resulting increase in the price of lumber, there has come a necessary demand for a new building material. The progressive florist has hailed with delight the advent and rapid rise of the use of the new building material, concrete—a manufactured stone as durable as rock, stronger than brick or rubble stone masonry, adaptable to practically any form of detail, but more important than all these to the florist is its ultimate cheapness for construction purposes.

Portland cement is a term applied to the finely ground product resulting States whose total output for the year 1911 was approximately 78,000,000 barrels. This gives some idea as to the great progress made in a few years. One of the five mills of the Universal Portland Cement Co. turns out 40,000 barrels of the finished product per day, which amounts to 12,000,000 barrels, or 48,000,000 sacks, per year.

Concrete is the hardened rock-lime product resulting from a mixture of Portland cement, sand, and gravel or broken stone with water. Cement is the material which binds the sand, gravel or broken stone together, the whole being referred to as concrete. There are many brands of cement on the market, each manufacturer giving his product a special brand name which is printed on the sacks in which his product is packed. The terms "cement" and "concrete" while frequently used interchangeably, are in no sense synonymous.

Up to a few years ago lumber was used extensively in greenhouse bench construction, but with the constant increase in price, florists began to experiment with concrete. At first the application was for posts only, and as no drawback to the concrete posts with a spread footing were found it became standard practice. Next came the monolithic bench of which there are such excellent samples in use today. Following these came the benches constructed in sections, splendid examples of which are to be seen at the greenhouse plant of Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, Ill. This concrete lumber is cast in a central plant, and as no piece is heavier than one man can lift, is easily handled, stacked up in piles, and then carried to the houses and erected by common labor. The illustration shows a section of a bench which was set up by three men in ten minutes for the purpose of being photographed. This bench consists of 6-inch tapered posts having 10-inch bases; cross beams 49 inches long, six inches deep and 1½ inches thick resting on slots in the posts; stringers 6-foot 2½ inches long, 2x4-inch section resting on the cross beams; the side pieces are of "L" construction, six feet long, 10 inches high by 1½ inches thick, the "L" angle at the base, 3½ inches wide, forming the rests for the bottom slabs; and pieces the same as the sides and bench slabs buds begin to set, is the manner of some of the most successful growers. The young stock that was propagated from clumps started in March should now be good, stocky little plants, and the last of the propagating should be done early in May to have good stock for June planting. Keep the young plants under safe cover and plunge the pots in soil to keep them moist and not require too frequent or too heavy watering.

Stevia.

If the stevia cuttings have not been rooted this should be attended to at once. As these plants grow very rapidly they are generally the last to be propagated, but the rooting of any stock in June is always attempted with more or less chance of failure unless under the most favorable conditions. As soon as rooted they should be potted in 3-inch pots and placed in a cold frame, the pots plunged in the soil and shifted into large sizes as required. Keep the plants pinched back until the middle or last of July when they should be potted in their blooming pots and placed in quarters safe from high winds and early frosts. The dwarf stevias may be grown in the field, being kept pinched back during the summer and potted the last of August or first of September.

from the burning together of various materials of proper chemical composition. It is not called Portland cement because it was first made in Portland, Me., or in Portland, Ore., but because the Englishman who first made it thought he detected a resemblance between the material and a certain natural stone known as Portland. The first cement mill in this country was built by David O. Saylor at Coplay, Pa., in 1871. There were January 1, 1912, about 100 cement manufacturing companies throughout the United 53 inches long, 9½ inches wide, and 1½ inches thick, resting on the sides and also on the stringers in the center. The bottom slabs lock the whole structure together so that it has the stability of a monolith and yet cannot be cracked or injured by a settlement or movement of any part. Each member is carefully reinforced with both chicken wire and several quarter-inch twisted square bars, except the stringers, which have one-inch bars only. This bench may be erected with any number of sections, is readily moved when changes become necessary, has perfect drainage, cannot tip over, cannot rot or rust, never requires repairs, is economical, and is a permanent asset to the florist.

The plant required for making the lumber consists of a batch mixture, sill molds, and a number of special molds for the sides and ends which are made up by carpenters. The first cost of construction was two and one-third times what it would have been in lumber, but 15 years from now the concrete benches will be as good as they are today, while in the same period three sets of wooden benches would have been built at a greater cost than for the concrete. The actual economy of concrete is demonstrated conclusively. Other uses of concrete in this plant are numerous. All drains and sewers are of cement drain tile, sidewalks and tracks are extensive, the concrete being carried up flush with the rails; the manure pits are of concrete and those in use for years show no deterioration, though constantly subjected to live steam and organic acids. Concrete has proved very satisfactory and economical in this work and has required no special engineering supervision, the owners having not only developed the system, but also personally supervised the construction.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. of Chicago have benches of concrete built by the use of patented forms and clamps perfected by Louis Wittbold after many years of experimenting. The benches are five feet wide, supported by two rows of concrete posts, 44 inches on centers each way, five inches in diameter and poured at the same time as the bench. No reinforcement is used in the posts, while the bench is reinforced by a single thickness of standard 2-inch mesh poultry netting, a strip of which a foot wider than the finished bench is laid in the forms before pouring. The edges are bent up so as to reinforce the side walls and it is supported at the proper height from the bottom form by small tapering blocks placed at intervals, according to soil conditions. These blocks are left in place when the concrete is poured and are withdrawn when the forms are removed, thus providing openings for proper drainage. The mixture used for this work consisted of one part of cement to three parts of washed torpedo sand, no coarse aggregate being used. The materials were mixed with sufficient water to form a slush concrete and the entire bench, including posts, bottom and side walls, was poured at one operation, the forms being left on the work for two days.

Other greenhouse owners who have successfully used cement construction are Walter S. Hall, Osage, Ia., who manufactures the blocks for his benches one foot wide and as long as the width of the bench during the winter, the Schiller establishment at Chicago, Robert G. Wilson's retail place at Brooklyn, N. Y., Garfield Park conservatories. Kroeschell Bros. Co. for many years have been using concrete for the base of their boilers, both for exhibition purposes and for permanent use. William Hill of Irondequoit, N. Y., has erected a concrete block house and packing shed and a stack made of concrete blocks, 65 feet high, the inside diameter of which is 21 inches at the outlet and 32 inches at the bottom, it being made larger at the base so as to permit a fire brick lining a few feet above the smoke inlet. Forty such stacks are now used by the Rochester vegetable growers, a company having been formed by two young men who build these stacks complete with labor and material at $2.00 per foot. Concrete stacks are also to be seen in Illinois, B. Eldredge of Belvidere built a few years ago a stack 60 feet high and 30 inches in diameter inside measurement.

Progressive greenhouse men are using concrete in the construction of retaining walls, examples of which are the show house of G. Brassler, Buffalo, N. Y., A. C. Bartlett, Lake Geneva, Wis., and Riverbank Greenhouses, Geneva, Ill. E. Jacobi of Newark, N. J., has constructed a mushroom cellar under his greenhouse entirely of concrete, as are also the floors of the houses. The Jewel Nursery Co. of Lake City, Minn., recently built a house of concrete for the storage of nursery products. Robert Simpson of Clifton, N. J., is to be congratulated upon the fine workmanship of the side boards for the solid beds in which are grown his roses.

Concrete is used extensively in "tree dentistry," the decayed portion being removed from the rotting trunk and the cavity then built out into the original outline of the tree. The bark will eventually cover the filled-in wound at the rate of an inch a year, and the tree in time regains its normal appearance. Concrete also lends itself as easily to artistic and ornamental construction as to utilitarian purposes, as may be seen in the flower vases and ornamental lighting posts at Humboldt park, Chicago. In conclusion, I wish to state that the Universal Portland Cement Co. has made a special feature and study of concrete in its application to greenhouse construction which information is freely given to any or all contemplating the use of concrete in any way.

Moninger Watering Outfits.

A matter that will be of interest to every greenhouse owner is the news that the John C. Moninger Co. has at last perfected their greenhouse watering systems. The power mostly used is the gasoline engine but systems are also designed to operate with electric motors and by steam. The pneumatic system is probably the most important of all the outfits and will be used extensively. Systems ranging in size from 200 gallons per hour capacity to 100,000 gallons per hour will be made ready for shipment on short notice.

A large system is being installed in the new plant of the Stevens & Hepting Co., Kansas City, and for Jos. Grabowski, Lansing, Mich. The Moninger Company has sold pipe, fittings, gauges, hose, valves and other supplies for watering systems for several years and are prepared to go into this new part of the work in detail. A large new catalogue dealing with this subject is just off the press and ready for mailing. The book gives information that will be of value to the florist, containing tables of various kinds about tank capacities, pressure of water, velocity, pump capacities, etc.

New Greenhouses at University of Illinois.

In preparing plans for the enlargement of the campus of the University of Illinois, it has been found necessary to move the horticultural buildings to a new piece of land. This new site is directly across the campus from the old horticultural grounds and is to be used for the various interests of the horticultural department. This will necessitate the moving of the present horticultural building and the floricultural experimental houses, so as to vacate the present grounds which are to be used as drill grounds.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees, however, it was decided to leave the present experimental houses stand for a year or two and so the moving will not interfere with the experimental work. They also appropriated the money for the new vegetable and plant breeding range and for the floricultural show houses. These are to be located upon the new site. Work upon these houses will be begun as soon as the bids are received and the contracts let. The present experimental houses will be moved within the next year or two.

THE GLADIOLUS.

New Firm of Gladiolus Growers.

Montague Chamberlain of Groton, Mass., and L. Merton Gage of Orange have formed a partnership as Chamberlain & Gage for the cultivation and sale of gladioli. Mr. Gage has been well known for years as a skillful cultivator the gladiolus and holds the responsible position of secretary of the American Gladiolus Society. Mr. Chamberlain is a Boston business man, being financial manager of a large dry goods concern. He was some years ago connected with the scientific school of Harvard University and is the author of several works principally on birds and the history and language of eastern tribes of Indians. Both have been enthusiastic collectors and growers of gladioli, gathering the best offerings of all the growers, and the joining of the two collections form a wealth of varieties that would be hard to duplicate. They should make a successful firm, and as there is a good opening in the eastern states they will be welcomed into the ranks of the florists.

Gladiolus Culture for Exhibition.

The first consideration in successfully cultivating this bulb is, without doubt, the preparation of the soil, for, however naturally good the land may be, or whatever time the bulbs are planted, the soil should be brought into a good tilth, states the Handbook of the National Gladiolus Society of England. If the soil is a stiff loam on clay clog the feet when walking over it. It should then be hacked over at least six inches deep with a potato-hoc; when this is done drill out the whole piece in drills 18 inches apart and three inches deep, and mark it out into beds of four feet wide and with paths two feet in width.

Commence planting by placing a corm against each line and filling up the space with two, three or four corms according to their size. If the corms are very large, four in a row will be quite sufficient. Planting thus in beds is preferable, as it affords the cultivator facilities for examining and tending individual spikes without danger to the rest. In this way continue planting, at intervals of a fortnight, from the end of February until May 20, and you will extend the succession of bloom from the commencement to the end of the season, which is usually the end of November, unless the flowers are previously destroyed by frost.

The plants will require no attention until they commence to show signs of blooming, except in keeping them quite free from weeds. When signs of blooming are apparent stimulants may be advantageously applied. We have for the last twenty years used a preparation of our own, which we dissolve in water and apply about once a week according to the state of the weather. Stakes will now be necessary for any spikes specially required for exhibition, and these when fixed in the ground should not reach higher than the lowest bloom, as when a taller stake is used the flowers are liable to it should be drained; but if in chalk or gravel this is not necessary.

In September, or early in October, when the land is in a dry state, lay on a liberal quantity of stable or cow manure; spread the manure and dig deeply with a fork in order to mix it well with the soil. Then allow the land to lie rough until the latter part of February or the beginning of March, until it is once more so dry as not to be injured by friction against it. Mulching is also now necessary—in the first place to keep down the weeds, and secondly to keep the ground moist. I formerly used rotten manure for this double purpose, but find that straw chaff is quite as efficacious, and it is much nicer and cleaner to walk upon when tying or cutting the spikes.

If the weather should prove very dry during the season, a liberal supply of water should be given, but some judgment is required, particularly where the soil is of a clayey nature, as it often happens that heavy watering or much rain followed by low temperature causes the fibrous roots to perish, resulting in a sickly yellow tint of the leaves—an undesirable result sometimes erroneously called a disease.

The time of lifting the corms should be carefully attended to, as it is a point of great importance in preventing their decay. No harm will arise from early lifting, even if it is done as soon as the spikes of bloom are cut; but, on the other hand, if the gladiolus be left in the ground after signs of its decay are apparent by the foliage turning yellow, then the corms of the most delicate sorts will gradually perish.

The Blue Amaryllis.

Of the numerous species and hybrid hippeastrums in cultivation, there are few more beautiful when in flower than H. procerum. It is, however, quite distinct from any other species, the most remarkable characteristic being the large, long-necked bulb, which often measures four feet in length. In this respect it might easily be taken for a crinum. The bulb of a plant recently flowered at Kew, states a writer in The Garden, is about four feet in length; from the center rises an umbel consisting of five flowers of a delightful pale purple color. Individually the flowers are from six to seven inches long, by five inches in diameter across the tips of the segments. The leaves are sickle-shaped, from two to three feet long, and two inches broad, and these alone provide a most attractive feature of the plant. It is one of the most interesting of greenhouse bulbous plants and has already attracted the attention of many visitors to the gardens.

H. procerum was introduced from South Brazil in 1863, and was first flowered in this country by Dr. Rayner of Uxbridge in 1870. On account of its shyness in blooming, it is not surprising that it is so little known. Other names by which the plant is known are Amaryllis procera and A. Rayneri. It is also commonly known as the blue amaryllis, the name having been derived from the unusual color of the flowers.

Royal Caledonian Horticultural Society.

The Royal Caledonian Horticultural Society held their spring exhibition in Edinburgh on April 10-11, and it was a most successful gathering in spite of the dreadful coal strike from which the United Kingdom has been suffering. The entries were well over the average although a number of English trade exhibitors were prevented from exhibiting.

The leading features of the exhibition were: orchids, roses, carnations, tulips, daffodils and azaleas. One exhibit which attracted universal attention was the grand lot of seedling amaryllis from The Royal Nurseries, Craigmillar, which we illustrate. Dickens & Co. have for the past fifteen years been crossing and improving the amaryllis and seem to have created a strain which for size, form, color and substance leaves little to be desired. The whole of this exhibit was purchased by the Corporation of Glasgow for their municipal gardens.

THE CARNATION.

Carnation Culture.

Paper read by G. F. Nlepp before the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society, March 13, 1912.

Within the last fifteen years more progress has been made in the culture of the carnation than of any other flower. Yet when we visit the flower markets of the large cities we find alongside of the finest carnations lots up-to-date establishment. But the trouble is mostly that these so-called carnation growers are too conceited to look for any information, or, as with some I have met, they would not believe anybody. Others gather all information they can get but have not the brains to work it out. If somebody suggests that their carnations need feeding they would overdo it, or if told that they keep their plants too dry, or too wet, or the houses too warm or cold, they would fall into the other of very poor ones and one cannot help asking the question, "Why do florists keep on growing such rubbish that never pays for the work, not to say expenses?" There is no excuse whatever, since there is no longer any secret in carnation culture and it does not cost any, or but little more, to produce good flowers than poor ones. Good carnations can even be produced in small houses, if they receive the proper treatment, and yet I have seen produced in good up-to-date houses the poorest carnations I ever laid my eyes on.

Ignorance is no excuse since we can read articles on carnation culture from the best authors in the country nearly every week in our trade papers. We can get plenty of information in our societies and we do not need to go far to see good carnations grown in an extreme. I once had a neighbor who had four small greenhouses and always kept them too warm, and never had any success with carnations, yet he said if he had the money he would keep the houses at 90° to 100° for carnations, and I now think he has only one greenhouse instead of four.

As is the same with other plants, in carnation culture propagation is the foundation upon which to build up the structure necessary to success. Therefore the greatest care should be given to selecting the stock and the production of healthy and well rooted cuttings. Many cuttings are spoiled by putting them too deep in the sand, shading too much, keeping too wet, or too warm, and also by waiting too long in potting them up. They should be potted as soon as all cuttings which are placed in the sand at the same time are rooted. Some will have a little longer roots than others, but this cannot be helped.

We use 2½-inch pots and a good live soil without any addition of manure or fertilizer. As soon as the pots are full of roots, but before getting pot bound, and while too early to plant in the field, knock out the plants and plant them in a bench, or sometimes in a cold frame, according to season and weather, using about the same kind of soil as in potting. As soon as lateral shoots start to show on the bottom, we pinch out the main shoot. The young plants should be kept in a light house with plenty of ventilation and the temperature kept cool. It is of much importance to have the crown of the roots never covered more than one-half inch as this prevents stem-rot and insures a healthy growth. As I only practice field culture, I shall not touch pot culture.

It is of much importance what kind of soil and location is available. The soil should not be too heavy nor too light, but almost any kind can be used if properly treated. I prefer a field almost level or with a slight slope, to give water no chance of standing after rain, but not steep enough to make washing out possible. The field should be well manured in August or September the previous year, and plowed and harrowed several times. A late plowing should be done in November and the surface left in a rough condition. No field should be selected without good drainage. In the same manner we prepare our bench soil, only manure heavier and keep on plowing and harrowing until we bring the soil inside.

The field to receive the young plants is plowed again in spring as soon as the soil is dry enough and the surface smoothed off with the harrow. As soon as steady weather can be expected all hands join in planting out, planting in rows 15 to 18 inches apart. Again I see it that the plants are not planted too deep, just a little bit deeper than they stood in the pots. This reminds me of my first experience with carnations in this country, seventeen years ago. It was my first job in a plant-growing establishment of sixteen or eighteen rather small houses. Three of the houses were devoted to carnations, but I started in March and the houses looked more like geranium houses as most of the carnations had died and geraniums in four-inch pots took their place. We also had probably 10,000 young carnation stock in a sash house, some in pots, the others in flats with about two inches of soil in them and all looking as yellow as a lemon. When planting time came we brought them out to the field, pots, flats and all. From the flats we had to cut them out in squares and then the boss told us to plant as deep as possible, showing me, as a greenhorn, how deep, which was about two inches of soil above the roots. The soil being very sandy, in fact, all sand, I did not wonder much about deep planting, but I found out later on when many plants rotted off just above the ground after some heavy rains. In the latter part of August they were to be benched. The boss with his brother doing the planting and I having the pleasure of bringing in the plants. This, of course, gave me a chance to see how they did it. They dug a big hole in the soil, nearly to the bottom, stuck the plants way down and the ends of the roots, which were very long and few, stuck up. Then the hole was filled up and the ends of the roots frequently stuck out of the soil. I could not help asking, "Do you expect these plants to grow?" The answer was, "They don't need to grow, they must only flower. The growing was done in the field." I was thoroughly speechless, but thought this must certainly be a great country if they could make carnations flower without growing. But one day a friend asked me how I liked the job and I said, "First rate, I think it's a good place to learn how things should not be done," and he laughed. I did not stay much longer, but had a chance to carry out a good percentage of those plants to the dump heap, and the next spring I had a look at the houses but most of the plants were gone, the geraniums taking their place again.

But to come back to the field,—we start cultivating with the wheel-hoe as soon as planting is over, going through once a week. As soon as the plants have made some growth, topping commences to form the plant and also to prevent flowering which would only stop the growth to some extent. By July 1 the plants should be large enough to be benched, and as the old plants are usually thrown out there is no reason why preparation ought not to be made. After the old plants and soil are carted out, the benches ought to receive a thorough cleaning and white-washing and also all the necessary painting done before the benches are filled again. As soon as the soil is on the benches all hands have to get slower in a very wet soil. The house should always be well ventilated and the atmosphere kept as cool as possible.

We put no shade on after benching, but a light shading in spring, which gradually wears off. Watering for the first few weeks should be done carefully. Some recommend to plant in a depression and water each plant separately, but I would rather plant on a hill and have the water run away from the plants. Of course, the plants should never suffer for want of water. In one large house we have installed Skinner irrigation, which we consider ideal, watering in the summer months as it leaves the soil always in a loose, open condition, so that no cultivation is needed, except weeding, which should not be neglected.

As soon as planting is done, we give the first support, using the well-known wire rings with two legs stuck in the ground. They keep the plants in a natural round shape. Soon flowering shoots grow up and we put another support in place. This time we stretch wires lengthwise and twine crosswise. Gradually, we put two more on, making four in all, each six inches above the other. Disbudding should commence as soon as the buds are large enough to handle.

The plants consume more water now and should never be without sufficient moisture, although not be overwatered. On a dull day, watering should not be done, and while the plants enjoy busy and get the benching done in short order, one or more planting and the others digging and bringing in. Care should be taken to leave some soil on the roots, as the plants will grow on much quicker. As soon as a number are planted they should be watered. But I would not soak the bench all through at once, but would rather go over the same place three or four times until the soil is all moist, but not real wet, as root action will be syringing in the summer months, they will not do so when the days are getting short and the sun low. As soon as the nights get cold enough to make it impossible to keep the temperature at 48° or 50° with some air on at night, a little heat should be given to keep up the temperature and give the desired results. Throughout the winter months, ventilation should be given as much as possible. Even when the outside temperature goes down to 19° or 20' above, a crack of air should be given to keep the air pure and moving.

In October the plants can usually stand a little feeding and if no bone or other fertilizer has been mixed in the soil before bringing the plants into the house, I usually put either a sprinkling between the plants and cover with a light mulch consisting of half soil and half sheep manure, or mix the fertilizer with the mulch, the latter way being preferred. This fertilizer should not contain more than three per cent of nitrogen, but can be rich in phosphoric acid and potash. I warn against the use of nitrate of soda, blood, ammonia or tankage, at any time when the plants are in bud or flower, as they will come bullheaded and will not keep. Mulching not only gives nourishment, but prevents the formation of scum and keeps the surface open to admit the air. I usually put it on half an inch and later on repeat it several times. Toward spring manure watering will be beneficial, but the manure water should not be too rich and made with cow or sheep manure. As long as the plants make a heavy growth with dark and broad leaves, feeding is not needed.

This is all I can say about the culture of the carnation, but we must not forget our little enemies. The first one in the season we usually notice is the so-called thrip. We cannot see much of him, but suspect his presence when some of the shoots come out twisted and crippled, and when the buds show color the edges of the petals on white flowers look burned, while on colored varieties they look striped. A few good fumigations or sprayings with tobacco extract in short succession will clean this pest out. Aphis or green fly appear very persistently, but will also be killed by tobacco or other insecticides. As a rule I have carnations sprayed once a week with tobacco solution during the whole season. Just after benching, the plants are benefited by a spraying with Bordeaux mixture against both fungus and insects.

One of the worst enemies is Mr. Red Spider, as he will not succumb to fumigation of any kind, not even to hydrocyanic acid gas as was frequently recommended. I know by experience that the plants would have to be killed first and then the spiders starved to death. I find Aphine will kill all that can be reached, but a little expensive in bad cases. After all, good and persistent syringing is the best cure.

Two Dangerous Imported Plant Diseases.

Two very serious European plant diseases have been brought to North America upon plants in the past few years which are of more than ordinary economic importance, and especially serious because both have stages of development in which they cannot be detected by inspection. These two diseases, the white pine blister rust and the wart disease of the potato, which are the subject of Bulletin No. 489 issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, are considered the worst enemies of these plants.

The white pine blister rust originated in Europe and has two different hosts, the five-leaved pines for one stage of growth and currants or gooseberries for the other. The winter spores are blown from the currant or gooseberry leaves on to the bark of the white pine, where they germinate, the branching threads penetrate the inner tissues but cause no external sign until a year or more later, when the bark tissues begin to thicken and a spindle-shaped swelling is formed. Early in the spring the fruiting bodies burst forth from the inner bark setting free the yellow spring spores, which are blown about and fall on the leaves of currant or gooseberry where in turn the winter spores are produced. It is sure to kill the affected trees most of which die the first season that the fungus fruits, however, there may be a small number survive and bear a new crop of spores, but each year the number decreases until the disease finally dies out if there are no currants or gooseberries near enough to be affected. Large numbers of infected trees are known to have been imported into the country and the disease cannot be determined by inspection, and the authorities in some states have taken active measures to eradicate the disease. The most effective methods are, however, to stop importing any of the five-leaved pines from Europe, and where infection is found to remove all wild and cultivated currants and gooseberries to a distance of 300 to 500 feet from the edge of the area containing the pines and burn the infected trees.

The potato wart is comparatively a new disease which was discovered in Germany and Hungary 16 years ago but has spread with great rapidity. As far as known it has not appeared in the United States but has become established in Newfoundland. It attacks the tubers forming warty excrescences, which are green where they project above ground and white below, turning as they grow old to dark brown or black. A still more advanced stage occurs where the fungus has utilized every particle of food stored in the tuber and has reduced it to a brownish-black soft mass giving off a very unpleasant putrefactive odor. Such potatoes can not be harvested whole, the pulpy mass breaks up, liberating millions of spores which live for years in the soil. In a mild attack the eyes first appear grayish, then turn brown and finally black, while in a healthy tuber they are white or purple. It is almost impossible to ascertain the presence of the disease in this stage, but such potatoes used for seed prove to be the source of new infections where planted. This has been the chief means of the distribution of the disease, but the feeding of diseased potatoes (not boiled) to stock has caused infection through the manure, and the spores are carried from one field to another by stock, men and tools. Fungicides are not efficacious in controlling the disease, the only remedy being rotation of crops, and the fungus has been known to live eight years in the soil. The disease has spread rapidly in England and in the worst cases from 75 per cent up to the entire crop has been affected. The bulletin states that the only practical method of dealing with these two diseases is that of total prohibition of importations of white pines and potatoes from certain localities and to be made effective this should be done at once to prevent them from becoming permanently established.

GLoucester, MASS.—A horticultural exhibition will be held July 11 under the auspices of the Scientific and Literary Association.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. W. F. Kasting

Mrs. Laura A. Kasting, wife of William F. Kasting, the well-known florist of Buffalo, N. Y., and treasurer of the Society of American Florists, died at the German hospital in that city at 11:50 o'clock Saturday morning, May 4, following an operation for gall stones. The operation, which was the third in two years, was performed the day before. Mrs. Kasting had been suffering for so long a time that her condition was not strong enough to withstand the shock attending the operation. She rallied for a brief period, but subsequently had a relapse that ended in her death. Mr. Kasting, who had been with her constantly during her illness, was at his wife's side when she passed away. Mrs. Kasting was thirty-three years old and was the daughter of the late Philip La Tour, who was one of the oldest florists of Buffalo. Aside from Mr. Kasting, she is survived by three children of tender years, William, ten; Laura, eight and John, two and one-half years old. Mr. and Mrs. Kasting had returned from Atlantic City but a few days before, where they had gone hoping to benefit Mrs. Kasting's health. Mrs. Kasting was well known in the trade, very popular and a prominent member of the Ladies' Society of American Florists.

The funeral services were held at Notre Dame de Lourdes church May 7, Rev. Father Phillips officiating. There was a very large attendance and interment followed at Forest Lawn cemetery, where the Orpheus Singing Society rendered a beautiful musical service. The floral offerings were very numerous and elaborate, conspicuous among them being those of the Society of American Florists, Executive Committee of the Society of American Florists, Ladies' Society of American Florists, Chicago Florists' Club, Buffalo Florists' Club, Buffalo Park Commissioners, Rochester Florists' Club, Orpheus Singing Society, German Hospital, Officers' People's Bank, Bassett & Washburn, Chicago; P. J. Breitmeyer, Detroit, Mich.; Lawrence Cotter, Jamestown, N. Y.; E. J. Fancourt, Philadelphia, Pa.; P. J. Foley, Chicago; D. R. Herron, Olean, N. Y.; W. L. Keller, Rochester, N. Y.; C. E. Meehan, Philadelphia, Pa.; E. I. Mepsted, Ottawa, Ont.; Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Detroit, Mich.; Chas. Offerle, Erie, Pa.; S. S. Penneck, Philadelphia, Pa.; Reed & Keller, New York; W. N. Rudd and Mrs. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; Chas. Schenck, New York; Frank H. Traendly, New York; Trost & Steinfurth, Erie, Pa.; J. C. Vaughan, Chicago; Patrick Welch, Boston, Mass.; E. F. Winter-son, Chicago; H. J. Wise, Erie, Pa., and John Young, New York. In addition to the foregoing every florist in Buffalo and vicinity was represented in these beautiful tokens of sympathy. The pallbearers were Dr. E. S. Tobie, Wm. Porter, W. J. Palmer, Harry J. Knepper, Chas. Duchmann, Emil C. Brucker, Fred P. Kull and Wm. P. Luedke. The out-of-town trade was represented by Frank Traendly, New York, George Asmus and M. Barker, Chicago.

THE DALLES, ORE.—The sales at Easter this year were about half that of last year, states the Tackman Greenhouses, and the trade was principally in cheap stock in small bunches. Everything was low in price but lilies and they were about the same as in previous years. Cinerarias were the only plants in demand, and there was no sale for carnations, the demand being for eastern sweet peas and daffodils.

International Exhibition, Bruges, Belgium

The Societe Royale d'Horticulture de Bruges is arranging an international exhibition this summer which is to be held August 11-18 at the old market place and in the adjoining government buildings and belfry of Bruges, Belgium. The government and town are assisting very largely, which will assure the success of the enterprise. The Royal Horticultural Society of Bruges is the oldest in the world, having been founded February 5, 1651, since which time it has without intermission followed and aided in its work and shows the evolution of horticulture until the present day, when it has become one of the important local industries. In August the famous market place in Bruges will be transformed into a flower garden surrounded by giant baytrees of which Bruges is so famed, and in the adjacent buildings below the belfry, immortalized by Longfellow, exhibitors will find spacious halls where they will be able to group their collection of orchids and palms, new and rare plants, etc., to their best advantage. The very increasing number of visitors which arrive yearly in August to see "The Venice of the North," with its museums and art galleries and quaint Flemish architecture, will find another attraction in this horticultural exhibition. Programmes will be supplied and inquiries answered by Ch. Steinmetz, secretary, Bruges, Belgium.

Pittsburg.

CARNATIONS IN SHORT SUPPLY.

The scarcity of carnations is still noteworthy and if it continues it will be hard to get enough for Mothers' day orders. All other stock is quite plentiful. Lilies and American Beauty roses have been very scarce, but are in full supply now. Great quantities of outside lilac is being sold at the market houses.

NOTES.

Nick Harris was married May 5 at Newark, N. J., to Miss Anna Psichos of that place. Quite a number of friends from Pittsburg, Cleveland and other cities attended the wedding.

The much talked of garden scene in A. W. Smith Co.'s windows is changed with the season, beds of flowers, etc., now being featured. Wm. Arnold has severed his connection with this firm.

All the errand boys at the McCallum Co. walked out one day during last week, not on account of wages or hours, but because "one of the gang" was discharged.

Randolph & McClements are in their new home, at Penn avenue and Waitfield street, but say there is still a lot of work to be done.

James Herrow was married May 1 to Miss Shaffer, of Ingram, and the happy couple are spending their honeymoon in the east.

Mrs. E. A. Williams has been making effective use of dog-wood in her window displays and decorations.

E. C. Ludwig is getting his big line of outside flowers planted at his Butler county farm.

Theo. Beckert is sending the McCallum Co. a very nice line of lupines. Very fine yellow daisies are a feature at the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.

S. J. Hatch now has charge of the planting in the Allegheny Cemetery.

Mrs. Mike Steiner is reported very low, and is not expected to live.

G. & J. W. Ludwig expect to reorganize and incorporate shortly.

Portland, Ore.

Florists, seedsmen, growers, landscape architects, nurserymen and park people to the number of forty assembled at the convention hall of the Commercial club, Friday evening, April 26, preliminary to effecting a permanent horticultural organization. F. A. Van Kirk was temporary chairman, and a committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws, and every indication is apparent that Portland is to have a large and effective working horticultural organization. All of the larger retail florists in the city were represented as well as several of the largest nurserymen and seedsmen in this vicinity, and as a whole each seemed to be very much interested in the project. E. T. MISCHKE, Secy.

GREENVILLE, PA.—William Baird has purchased the Williams greenhouses and has provided himself with an auto truck for quick delivery.

WORCESTER, MASS.—Charles D. MacKie has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. The liabilities are $11,453 of which $7,820 is unsecured and the assets are estimated at $8,300.

RHINEBECK, N. Y.—J. C. Rockefeller has purchased the greenhouse and estate of George A. Salford. The joining of the two places makes Mr. Rockefeller one of the largest violet growers of this section.

CARNATIONS SCARCE.

Business as a whole is very good. Carnations are scarce and command good prices. The growers say that prices are ahead of this time last year. Bulbous stock is getting shorter, and this in conjunction with better business has given the carnations a boost. Easter lilies do not move very swiftly. Marguerites are good and there is quite a quantity of snapdragon in the market, which for length of stem and flower may be called good, but it looks too unwieldy for delicate work, and smacks of something outside. There is also some very nice lily of the valley. Roses are not any too plentiful. We noticed some of the best Cardinal roses we have ever seen. This rose has had a struggle for recognition, but if it can be grown like those we saw it is something good, but that depends on the grower. The Killarney had a hard time, had it not been for a gentleman in Pennsylvania that resurrected it, it might have died a premature death. Boston discarded it because it was short stemmed, and single flowered, but the Killarney of today is not the Killarney it was when first sent out by Dickson & Sons. It is much better. Mothers' day, May 12, let us all pay homage to the name and memory of our best friend, and let each florist forget the financial part and give away a few flowers to some of those who are not blest with worldly goods to purchase the emblem, and then let George Watson raise his clarion voice and proclaim Fathers' day, and proclaim what flower is to be worn—leaving thistles out of the flower line.

NOTES.

The seedsmen are having a boom just now, their forces working early and late getting out orders, and of course every customer wants his or roses.

H. M. Robinson & Co. report good business, especially on carnations and her order attended to first. MAC.

Denver, Colo.

Business has improved very much during the past week, carnations in particular are moving much better. The prices are still moderate, but all are being sold, and the retailers can not now fix the price as was the case a short time ago. There is a brisk demand for Spanish iris. This is noteworthy in view of the fact that the few on the market here last year could hardly be given away. Sweet peas are in great demand, they are very popular for corsages with the theatre patrons. Mothers' day has not been advertised as extensively as it should be and as a consequence is not observed here so much as in some other parts of the country.

NOTES.

It is reported that some 200 young ladies are going to sell celluloid buttons with a picture of a carnation on them instead of real flowers on Mothers' day. The proceeds are to be given to a charitable institution. While we are probably as charitably minded as any class of tradesmen it seems a little unfair to have the day so confiscated.

C. Zbinden, formerly of Denver, has opened a flower store in Rock Springs, Wyoming. Since going there he has had the misfortune to lose a leg, but reports now are very bright for him. L. A. Kintzele is the proud father of a ten pound baby boy. T. W. H.

SPRING FLOWERS ARE HERE.

The warm days early in the week were productive of a large quantity of stock, especially roses, which were received in heavy shipments Monday and Tuesday, but the market was pretty well cleaned up at the end of the previous week, and notwithstanding that the receipts were so large the stock seemed to be disposed of almost as fast as it came in and there was no accumulation in some of the refrigerators. There is, however, a great variety of flowers to be had for the outside flowers are now beginning to come in and with the outside tulips and narcissus and quantities of lilac, both white and purple, and the large amount of greenhouse stock available at this season the buyer has a great variety from which to select and with which to make a display. The roses are still of excellent quality and there is a plentiful supply of all grades. The newer roses are now being received in larger quantities and are being featured by the retailers, vases of Mrs. Aaron Ward, Mrs. Taft and the newer Killarneys are to be seen in quantities large enough to attract the attention of the buyers. Mrs. Jardine and My Maryland are also to be had in good quantity and in splendid quality and these varieties also are freely displayed. Carnations are in adequate supply to meet the demand, but there is no over supply, the stock that comes in finds ready sale and at good prices. There certainly is not the large receipts of this flower that are generally seen on the market at this time of the year and one of the large growers states that he does not believe there will be any glut of this flower this spring for the plants are not producing the large quantities of flowers which they generally do at this season. It does not look as if there would be any great quantity for Mothers' day and the florist will have to induce the buyers to use some other flower. Sweet peas are in great supply and the stock is very fine and some beautiful bunches of the Spencer varieties are to be procured. The trailing arbutus did not last long on the market, but it was shipped in such large quantities and all at once, so many of the shipments did not pay the gatherers anything, and much of it came in poor condition, the sprays loosely tied up. These flowers to be profitable to the gatherers should be properly bunched so that when it reaches the market it is in a salable condition. Orchids are a little more plentiful and are more generally displayed. Gladioli have made their appearance, the Bride is now daily offered and the first Mrs. Francis King was to be seen this week. Lily of the valley is of splendid quality, and the supply is fully adequate to meet the demand. Antirrhinum is very plentiful and is displayed in large quantities, the vases of pink are very beautiful and are a great attraction with some of the retailers. Marguerites, both yellow and white, and the new variety Mrs. Sander, are seen in good quantity. The first peonies of the season arrived this week and both Queen Victoria, white and Officialis rubra red are seen on the market. Spanish iris is shown in large quantities and is having a good sale. Mignonette, lupines, pansies, and calendulas all add to the great variety obtainable. Greens are not in any too large supply, smilax is still short, and asparagus is not received in any great quantity, and hardy ferns are still selling at good prices. The supply of sphagnum moss is also not large.

U S Budlong's E Blue Ribbon Valley.

NOTES.

Erne & Klingel, the new wholesalers at 30 East Randolph street, are now open for business and cordially invite the trade to pay them a visit. The new concern will handle everything in cut flowers and greens, and in course of a few days will be in fine shape to take care of all orders. Fred G. Klingel, one of the proprietors, takes great pleasure in telling his friends of the receipt of his first shipment, which was twin baby girls that arrived Sunday, May 5. The mother and children are all doing very nicely and the proud papa is as happy as a lark.

J. A. Peterson of Cincinnati was a welcome visitor among the trade this week, and his short enthusiastic visit to the several stores spread an optimistic feeling among the tradesmen. He is making preparations for his visit to the great international show in London this month and there is no doubt but that he will bring back some noteworthy novelty which he will grow to the high culture which he has attained in the plants which have made him so celebrated.

Klug & Stahmer, Park Rldge, formerly in the mushroom business, are embarking in flower growing, building two houses of Foley construction and materials.

The A. Dietsch Company has issued an illustrated and descriptive catalogue of their construction and the manner of building greenhouses is explained in detail with cuts of the different sash bars, gutters and fittings which they manufacture. It has beautiful illustrations of greenhouses in all sections of the country, including among the prominent ranges those of Peter Reinberg, of this city; South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind.; G. Van Bochove & Bro., Kalamazoo, Mich.; L. L. May & Co., St. Paul, Minn.; C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; H. A. Dreer, Riverton, N. J.; Bristol Floral Co., Bristol, Tenn., and Ernst Mueller, St. Joseph, Mo., the latter plainly showing the straight alignment obtained with their patent V gutters. Manager Ickes is always anxious to explain the advantages of their construction to all greenhouse men, and a copy of this catalogue can be had by anyone interested upon request.

Wietor Bros. are having a big call for carnations for Mothers' day and the orders are coming in thick and fast. The stock that is now being received at the store is of fine quality especially the American Beauty and Mrs. Jardine roses. The latter are now at their best and some of the flowers that are being received at the store have stems fully five feet long. N. J. Wietor says that his firm has already planted one section of American Beauty roses and is now busy with one of the Killarney sections.

Carl Bachler is going to sell his place at 2209 West Thirty-fifth street and buy a new store at Archer avenue and Leavitt street, one block south of his present location. He is also talking about building several greenhouses and the manufacturer of greenhouse materials that steps lively is likely to get his order. Go to it, Everybody!

H. Van Gelder, the hustling manager at Percy Jones, has lost no time in fitting out his supply department for he has several small cases already well filled with stock in this line. The cut flower department is very busy and some fine sweet peas are attracting favorable attention from the local buyers.

The Atlas Floral Co. had a bank decoration this week that called for a good supply of seasonable stock and this together with their club work and a brisk transient trade is keeping all hands busy. Frank Williams is improving from day to day and is now feeling more like his old self again.

A. T. Pyfer says that the demand for carnations for Mothers' day at the Chicago Carnation Co.'s store is very good and the orders are large and numerous. His store man, Jack Byers, writes that he is having a lovely time at Hot Springs, Ark., and that he likes the mountain district very well.

S. Freund, with A. A. Arnold, manufacturer of paper boxes, says that his firm will have a large exhibit at the S. A. F. convention in the Coliseum in August. A. A. Arnold makes a very good box for the florist and sells a large quantity to both the local and out of town trade.

W. W. Randall returned on May 1 from a western business trip and left the following Monday on another trip to parts unknown. He says that business is picking up throughout the country and that his last trip was the best he ever had.

Hoerber Bros. are right on deck again with a large supply of roses and carnations and a fine grade of Butterfly sweet peas. This firm is steadily building up a fine trade and the stock is nearly always sure to find a buyer.

Tony Einweck, of E. H. Hunt's cut-flower department, was severely burned this week when a box of matches that he was holding in the palm of his left hand became ignited. Dear Jack says "It was too hot to handle."

Geo. Walther will have a series of artistic and novel window decorations at his store in Englewood during the street carnival which will be held in the near future by the business men of that section.

Herman Schiller is particularly well pleased with the amount of landscape work that is coming his way, and says that trade is also very lively in the seed and bulb departments.

John Starrett is kept busy with floral decorations at the Hotel La Salle, and the numerous banquets and occasional weddings always call for a good supply of seasonable flowers.

Peter Risch says that everything is fine and lovely at Wieland & Risch's greenhouses and that he has several men busy now planting out carnations.

O. M. Frifeldt, the Armitage avenue florist, says that business is lively and that he has all the work to which he can properly attend.

The Foley Mfg. Co. is shipping Kidwell & Ellsworth material for their new structures at Downers Grove.

County Commissioner, J. A. Mendel, is now spending his Sundays at his summer home at Fox Lake.

P. M. Brodbeck has been suffering considerably the past three weeks with rheumatism.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting large quantities of lily of the valley and roses and a large supply of extra fancy American Beauties, Melody, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Prince de Bulgarie are plainly visible at the store this week. The demand for carnations for Mothers' day, especially white, has been tremendous, and Otto W. Frese says that he has never known it to be so large before.

George Reinberg's leaders this week are fine Killarney, White Killarney and Richmond roses and cattleyas. His storeman, Robert Northam, is proud of the Richmond roses and says the growers will have to go some to equal his, for the flowers and stems are perfect.

Chas. W. McKellar is offering some fine orchids and is finding but little trouble in disposing of his choice Cattleya Schroedereae and C. Mossiae. He is now quite at home in his new store and is in fine shape to take care of his Memorial day trade.

Bassett & Washburn have acquired the property which they have had in view for some time, consisting of 80 acres at Greets' station, two miles west of Hinsdale, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, and will build there and soon start to move the old range.

John Mangel is showing some beautiful plant baskets in his new store in the Palmer House. Crotons, pandanus and other decorative plants are nicely arranged and are attractive features.

Roy P. Bolander of Hillside is building three new houses 27x100 feet, and will use the Kroeschell threaded tube pipe system for the new addition as well as the present range.

John Schillo says the spring business is on at the Adam Schillo Lumber Co.'s yards and the growers are now ordering their pecky cypress for the necessary repair work.

We are confident that we can please you for we have had many years of experience on the Chicago Cut Flower Market and are handling none but first-class stock. We would greatly appreciate it if you would favor us with an opportunity to show you just what we can do.

Growers are invited to consign stock to us.

ERNE & KLINGEL

30 E. Randolph St., CHICAGO.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros., has received word from one of his growers, W. A. Reiman, of Vincennes, Ind., that if the weather continues as pleasant as it has been the past few days he will have one of the biggest crops of peonies he ever had and that the quality will be fine. One thing that the trade is greatly missing this year is the "Peony King's" gambling which for many years has been one of the features of the peony season. This firm received its first shipment of Peony Officinalis rubra, on Monday, May 6.

The George Wittbold Co. is in the midst of a very busy season and each department of this well known firm is having all that it can attend to. The Edgebrook plant reports a good demand for bedding stock and the local establishment a good call for bay trees and boxwood trees. The recent shipments of the latter were so large that the firm was obliged to use the walk in front of the store and it now resembles a driveway in a small park lined with trees of this character.

E. H. Hunt received his first shipment of Queen Victoria peonies on May 6, and the quality of the stock was fine. C. M. Dickinson says that he will handle about 7,000 dozen of these flowers this season from three different sources and also says that one thing the retailer will probably be pleased to hear is that there will practically be no stock put in storage for Memorial day owing to the lateness of the season.

John Sinner is getting the fishing fever and it would not be at all surprising if he and N. J. Wietor, the Chief Piker of the Pikers' Club, and a few of the other Pikers would soon be leaving for White Sand Lake, Wis. One thing is certain, that if the magazine reader goes along it will be under promise that he will not go looking for a drug store, bakery or a news stand in the dense wilderness.

Otto Wittbold attended the last meeting of the Florists' Club on May 2, and was very much interested in the address of "Concrete Construction in Greenhouses" which was given by his friend, S. A. Jamieson, the gifted young speaker from Bob Lafollette's state. This was the first meeting Mr. Wittbold has attended for the past 15 years and it is hoped by his many friends that it will not be the last.

It is rumored that Hans Rowaltz, Kyle & Foerster's efficient bookkeeper who recently embarked in the retail business with E. Leslie, under the name of the Kedzie Florist, has fitted up a flat above the store and that one of the promising young seed houses will soon be looking for a new stenographer. Congratulations will soon be in order.

Peter Reinberg is right in crop with roses and carnations and the supply is so large that Tim Matchen and his force of assistants have found it necessary to work over time to properly take care of the many orders that are always coming in. The shipping trade is very brisk and large quantities of choice stock are shipped out daily.

John Kruchten visited his gardenia growers at the Deerfield Nurseries last week and came back well pleased with the report that the crops are fine and will be large for the wedding season. Mr. Kruchten is now doing a fine business and says that he could handle some consignments of peonies to good advantage.

J. A. Budlong is fortunate in having a large crop of carnations for Mothers' day and from the present indications it appears as if he will dispose of every bloom. My Maryland and Mrs. Jardine roses of fine quality are attracting the attention of the buyers at this store this week.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is supplying their customers with a fine grade of carnations and other seasonable stock and the genial proprietor says that business both in the cut flower department and seed store is exceptionally good.

Kyle & Foerster are disposing of a large supply of seasonable stock and the demand for carnations for Mothers' day at this house is brisk and the orders are still coming.

Miss M. C. Gunterberg says orange blossoms are practically out of the market and she is now devoting her time to disposing of the roses and carnations.

O. Johnson says that this is fine weather for the peonies and that the Batavia Greenhouse Co. will have a good supply for Memorial day.

The E. C. Amling Co. has had a carpenter busy at the store the past week building new tables to accommodate their increased supply of stock.

Sol. Garland is cutting some fine blooms of his new seedling carnation Rosamond and says that it is the best paying carnation on the place.

Peter Papas is enjoying a fine business at his store at 502 South Wabash avenue and is well pleased with his present location.

Frank Garland is expecting his daughter Rennie to return home from Albuquerque, N. M., some time next week.

Kooble's, 1935 Irving Park boulevard, were very busy this week with funeral work and wedding decorations.

Miss H. V. Tonner is headquarters for a fine grade of Spanish Iris, snapdragons and single stocks.

Mrs. Anton Then is on the sick list this week.

May 30, the Big Day

In the last few years Decoration Day has become the big day in the flower business. Practically every florist can, if he tries sell more flowers May 29 and 30 than in any other two days in the year. And it is fine business. Flowers are plentiful and cheap, so that there is a good margin of profit. Also, the customer usually takes the flowers along, so there is no expense for delivery. That adds a whole lot to the profit.

The Peony Is the Special Decoration Day Flower.

It makes the biggest show for the money. Also it is the most reliable shipper; you can be sure your Peonies will reach you in fine condition, that they will not go to sleep on your hands, and that they will give your customers satisfaction.

Kennicott's Is the Peony House. It was our exploitation of the Peony that made the Peony and the Decoration Day business what it is today. We handle more Peonies than any other house in America. For Decoration Day we ship them from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard and to the Pacific coast.

Now booking orders. The stock this year promises to be the finest ever, and with the many thousands of plants we own or control we are assured many thousands of dozens, even with the light crops most growers report.

The finest, $8.00 per 100: medium, $5.00 to $6.00 per 100; good stock, $4.00 per 100

J. B. Deamud Co. is showing a fine assortment of stock just now, the growers sending in a large quantity of exceptionally fine quality. Particularly noticeable this week were excellent lily of the valley and fancy tulips. A large quantity of Poeticus narcissus is now being received and this week the first peonies were seen, a fine lot of Officinalis rubra.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is the recipient of a full assortment of seasonable stock with Killarney roses of exceptionally fine quality.

J. F. Kidwell is still calling on the growers in the interest of the corporation, and it is needless to say that he is having a delightful time with the growers in his visits.

Frank Johnson, A. L. Randall Co's. enterprising sales manager, is back from his southern trip with a smile and a big bunch of orders.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are receiving quantities of stock. Spanish iris are a great feature of this store in a great variety and of excellent quality. The roses, carnations, tulips and other stock

All late orders for Mothers' Day will be filled in full.

Wendland & Keimel have finished planting the following roses: 7,000 Mrs. Aaron Ward, 3,000 Rhea Reid, 2,000 Sunburst, 2,000 Radiance, 1,000 Killarney Queen, 40,000 Killarney, 14,000 White Killarney, and as W. J. Keimel jokingly says, 3,500 Prince de Bulgarie, Antoine Revoire and Mrs. Taft. They have 150,000 feet of glass and the output is all consigned to the E. C. Amling Co.

Jac. Lederer, 644-48 West Madison street, is now manufacturing florist refrigerators and two of their new style boxes are already in use by the Chicago Floral Co., 41 West Randolph street, and Nick. Korson, 120 North State street. M. Lederer, who looks after the florist trade, is making special inducements to those who are considering installing a new box.

George Perdikas is making preparations to enlarge his store on South Wabash avenue and when the new alterations are made he will have double the present store space. He now has three stores in the loop and it is rumored that he will open another one in the near future.

Lublinter & Trinz, the East Randolph street florists, had one of their biggest days of the year last Friday, May 3, when business was more than brisk. This firm believes in making a fine window showing and a good assortment of seasonable flowers always meets the eye of the passerby.

The George M. Garland Co. is receiving a great number of inquiries from prospective builders and they are pleased to note that some are very much interested in their movable greenhouses.

Fred Lautenschlager, northern state vice-president of the S. A. F., is putting in a lot of hard work for the society these days and is constantly adding new names to the list of membership.

The glass manufacturers have withdrawn their prices and the local dealers say that there is likely to be an advance of 7½ per cent to 10 per cent in the price of greenhouse glass.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to A. T. Hey in the loss of his mother, whose death occurred on Friday, May 3.

D. E. Freres' stock is arriving in fine shape and some fancy roses and carnations can be obtained here this week.

Chicago Florists' Club.

The regular meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club was held at the Union Restaurant May 2, with a large attendance, President Foley in the chair. The following new members were elected: John Lambert, Lake Forest; H. Van Gelder, 56 East Randolph street; August Koch, 3500 Washington boulevard; S. A. Jamieson, 72 West Adams street; and R. Papineau, Jr., Madison and Canal streets.

The vacancy on the board of trustees was filled by the election of C. L. Washburn, the other members of this board now being H. N. Bruns and George Asmus. E. R. Farley was appointed chairman of the Sports and Pastimes committee and an appropriation of $50 was made for the use of the bowlers. C. F. McCormick was elected secretary to fill the unexpired term of the current year.

President Foley announced the appointment of a general committee on convention ways and means, which, with some additions and other presidential announcements, will appear later. At the close of business the members adjourned to the main dining hall of the Union Restaurant where S. A. Jamieson gave a very interesting discourse on "Concrete Construction in Greenhouses," with stereopticon views, for which he was accorded a hearty vote of thanks, the entire audience standing in appreciation.

Charles Bond of Naperville exhibited a plant of Cattleya Mossiae Wageneri bearing one large spike. The flowers were large, the sepals and petals being almost pure white, the lip being slightly colored with yellow and a tinge of purple.

Cincinnati.

LARGE DEMAND FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

The market this week is somewhat firmer than it was, due mostly to the smaller but still easily sufficient supply of flowers received. The average quality, too, is fairly good. Prices in some lines are somewhat better. The demand for Mothers' day is very large and has sent the price of white carnations sky rocketing. The improvement of the quality of American Beauty roses is most apparent. The supply of good stock is large and seems to sell fairly well. The carnation supply has decreased considerably in volume and while prices are low jobbing has about ceased. Lilies continue to be in a much larger supply than the call for them, and as a result many are going to waste. They hardly sell at any price. This applies to callas as well as longiflorum, Harrisii and giganteum. The supply of good snapdragon is very large and as a result the market is very easy in this line. Iris still sells nicely, but the price has weakened and the large German iris are now coming in. The first peonies have arrived and more are following. Large, choice gladioli are selling nicely. The large outdoor tulips are in, and red are more in abundance than the other colors.

FLOWER DAY A GREAT SUCCESS.

Stock is again back to a normal condition with carnations cleaning out readily and enough roses to fill all orders. Sweet peas have been a scarce article the past week, but there are prospects of a big crop coming in. Smilax is still scarce. Easter lilies are coming in regularly, but the majority are short-stemmed. Good long lilies are selling readily. Flower day, which was originated for a charitable purpose, was very successful financially and was surely a great thing for the market and the growers, as it cleaned up everything that was salable. Had this day come when the markets were over-stocked it might have been more beneficial to the florists in general, as it would have helped to do away with the surplus of stock that existed for several weeks after Easter. It would have been a much easier task to have supplied the committee, for it was impossible to fill their demands. The majority of young ladies complained of not having anything to sell during the best part of the day, for the local markets were cleaned out, and it was necessary to get in a supply from Chicago, with the result of the loss of many good sales. This being their first experience, the committee will know better how to go at it next year.

NOTES.

Joseph Perstein, well known to the local trade, died Saturday evening after a two weeks' illness, at Trinity hospital. This was the closing of what appeared to be a brilliant career, as Joe had been successful in the winning of medals during his high school career and was just finishing up two successful years at Wisconsin university, where he had been studying law.

SUMMER WEATHER.

Warm weather is here at last and the market has already put on its summer appearance. The growers are talking of organizing; their last report of sales has caused them look up and take notice. Large quantities of stock unsold and the prevailing low prices at last woke them up to the conditions. Mothers' day is on hand and if properly advertised and the prices held at reasonable values some business may be expected, but a rise in prices will kill the goose that laid the golden egg. Carnations and roses are showing the effect of the warm weather. Home-grown lilacs are in large supply and the early varieties of gladiolus are received. Hardy and fancy ferns are getting scarce, but the new local crop can be expected in a week or so. The growers of plants and garden stock are out in full force and the florists' wagons are loaded with blooming plants.

NOTES.

A RUSHING BUSINESS.

Trade the past week was active all along the line and well maintained to the present time. Carnations held firmly, as the daily receipts were materially reduced from the former week's tremendous cut. Roses, though in heavy supply, were well used up and more long stemmed stock could have been sold. There was a heavy supply of lilies and bulbous stock that moved slowly. Iris made its initial appearance on the market but quickly developed an oversupply. Baby gladioli, too, are now coming in but find a limited demand. American Beauties of all grades are in good supply but easily disposed of. Sweet peas, now an important factor in the market, are coming in heavy, but are daily consumed with no surplus. Even the white varieties were popular, particularly for May day, when great quantities were used, sharing the good fortune of the colored sorts. Greens of all kinds are in good supply and sell well, particularly the short Asparagus plumosus, the demand for which is coincident with that of the sweet peas and other flowers to satisfy the call for corsage bouquets. Saturday developed a surprisingly large trade, which completely used up the entire cut on the market and special consignments were made late in the day to completely fill orders. This activity continued Monday, May 6, and indicates a good trade throughout the week, with prices strengthening as Mothers' day approaches with its special prices. For the event white carnations will be scarce, as orders already booked exceed the visible supply. In colored varieties a better supply is promised, though prices on these, too, will advance. Roses will probably be in sufficient supply to forbid any considerable advance.

CLUB MEETING.

The club meeting Monday evening, May 6, was held for the first time in the club's new quarters over the new store of Moebius & Hufford, 247 Randolph street. About twenty members were present, with President George Brown in the chair. The essayist for the evening was unavoidably absent, but the time was well spent in the discussion of various topics, chief of which was Mothers' day trade and the means of developing it. A considerable sum of money was subscribed for exploiting the event in the daily papers and a committee consisting of R. Rahaley and J. F. Sullivan was appointed to judiciously devote the fund to newspaper publicity that will lead to the proper observance of this day, becoming annually of more importance to the trade.

Announcement was made at the meeting of the death of Mrs. Wm. F. Kasting, Buffalo. This was received with deep regret by all among whom the bereaved husband has many warm friends. A committee was appointed consisting of M. Bloy, Wm. Dilger and J. F. Sullivan to draw up suitable resolutions expressive of the club condolence and forward the same to Mr. Kasting.

W. J. Burch, a west side florist, was elected to membership in the club.

TORONTO, ONT.—The weather was mild and spring-like and the trade at Easter was about twenty-five per cent larger than last year, says H. G. Dille-muth. The prices were about the same as a year ago and there was a good supply of plants with the exception of lilies. American Beauty roses and mand, but enough of all other cut flowers to fill orders. Rhododendrons, lilies, roses and made up baskets of plants sold well, but azaleas were a little slow. Everything in cut flowers sold well with a large demand for violets and flowers for corsages. There was no frost to interfere with deliveries, but it started to rain Sunday morning and later in the day it grew colder and became very wintry again.

ALL STOCK SELLING WELL.

The week wound up with a grand hurrah, about anything of value being bought up before Saturday was over. There was no particular one thing that caused the demand, just a sort of quickening all around. The quality of stock is still good, but roses are retrograding, getting smaller with more evident touches of mildew. Kaiserin are now coming to the front and growers with any quantity of stock should do well. Carnations are very good, but the white ones are going out of sight for next Friday and Saturday delivery. Eight to ten dollars per hundred is the price asked and some of the store men say that rather than pay such prices they will not carry them in stock. Sweet peas have been in good demand and sell up close every day at satisfactory prices. Violets are done for the season; they have been a good crop with most growers. Snapdragon is very fine. The best stock of the season is now offered and it is a good seller. Cattleyas are in demand, as is lily of the valley. White and yellow daisies are now in full crop and very fine flowers are seen, as they are sold in quantity lots at low figures. They are carried in quantities in the stores and are much used in baskets and bouquet work and to touch up boxes of cut flowers. White forcing lilac is done for the season and the streets are lined with the outdoor purple, of which great quantities are sold. The wholesale men are having large stocks to handle these days and in order to turn over their consignments quickly are making special prices in quantity lots. Many shipments go out in the original packages, thus saving handling and the damage incident thereto.

The special feature of the June meeting will be an exhibition of peonies.

NOTES.

The Philadelphia Rod and Gun Club, which holds its business meetings monthly at the office of the W. K. Harris greenhouse establishment, adds to the enjoyment of the occasion after the business session, with a lecture on topics that interest the members and their friends. The subject last Friday evening was "The Wild Flowers of the Canadian Rockies," a lecture given by President Thilow of the Florists' Club. It was magnificently illustrated by colored lantern slides: The story of the visit to this mountain wonderland was very graphically described by Mr. Thilow, whose description of the wonderful scenery and the flora of these regions kept his audience spellbound. He received a rousing vote of thanks from the company at the conclusion of the lecture. W. K. Harris and Mark Mills had turned the large shed into a very acceptable auditorium. There was a liberal display of flags and plants in flower decorated both sides of the shed, while seats for several hundred guests were ranged in the center. At the close of the lecture refreshments were served by the gun club. Wm. E. Meehan, late fish commissioner of the state, now in charge of the aquarium in Fairmount Park, is to tell of the fisheries and the work of the commission in stocking the streams with trout, bass and other game fish.

The flower stand privilege at the east and west ends of the Market street entrances to the city hall has been let to Samuel G. per month for each stand, at which latter figure Mr. Harris secured the privilege for one year. It seems as if this was a pretty steep price, as there is no shelter and very little business can be transacted on stormy days or during the extreme winter weather. This was formerly a police perquisite, but the reform administration made it a free-for-all contest to be allotted to the highest bidder, with the above result.

C. W. Ward, late of Queens, L. I., paid a flying visit to this city the past week. He is now conducting a large tract of 20,000 acres on the coast of the Bay of Mexico in the state of Louisiana, about one hundred and fifty miles from New Orleans. The soil is very rich, corn growing to a height of fifteen feet. He is experimenting with several plants which will be of use to the trade when he can offer them in quantity.

Spanish iris is a feature with the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., although everything is seen in such quantities in this great market that almost anyone can be supplied at a moment's notice.

The Leo Niessen Co. say their rose specials have met with great success and many repeat orders are received. American Beauties and snapdragon are two leaders this week.

John Cella has sold his business at Twenty-second and Columbia avenue and will open a store within the next month at Twenty-ninth and Dauphin streets.

The new house of the Joseph Heacock Co. at Roelofs is rapidly approaching completion, the glazing being finished this week.

Edward Reid has returned from his southern trip in better health. Business, he says, is all right with him.

The market conditions have improved somewhat, but there is plenty of good fresh stock arriving every morning. Carnations are in great abundance, although a little falling off in quantity is noticed, but the demand is good and prices keep up fairly well. Sweet peas are in splendid shape and find quick sales, and lily of the valley is in fair quality. Roses are plentiful in all colors. Smilax is scarce and the receipts of lilies and callas are smaller. The supply of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri is no larger than the requirements. Business during April was unusually good and the flowers exceptionally fine.

A GENERAL IMPROVEMENT.

The general condition in the wholesale market continues to be very satisfactory. Prices have advanced somewhat and in some cases the supply is not sufficient for the demands. Carnations have improved considerably. Orchids have been clearing out nicely as there have been large calls for them, owing to the great number of orders for elaborate funeral work during the week. While the supply of roses has not been so great, the quotations remain about the same and as usual it seems impossible to dispose of Brides and Bridesmaids at any fair figure. The higher grades of these two varieties are carried over from day to day and finally have to be disposed of in large quantities at the same prices as are obtained for No. 1 and No. 2. American Beauties and Ulrich Brunners are selling somewhat better. Top grades of Prince de Bulgarie, Lady Hillingdon, Mrs. Jardine, Radiance, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Richmond are most in demand. There has been an extra call for white roses, especially White Killarney. Some of the choicest blooms of carnations are bringing almost double the price of ten days ago. Gardenias are over plentiful and most of them have to be disposed of to the street men. Lilies, both longiflorum and rubrum and callas, are moving slowly. Single daffodils are very plentiful. Lily of the valley is far more plentiful and is not selling as well as formerly. The supply of southern lilac, of very good quality, is rapidly increasing. Sweet peas of the best quality are in quite sufficient supply for all demands. There is a very poor sale for adiantum, but the demand for first quality smilax and asparagus is still good.

Monday Noon, May 6.—Weather stormy, the supply shortening up. The demand very fair with prices having a downward tendency.

NOTES.

A very unfortunate accident occurred in Twenty-eighth street on Wednesday. The Kervan Co. had been excavating in the rear of their store for the purpose of erecting a four-story addition. This property adjoins the new quarters of the Pennock-Meehan Co., at 117 West Twenty-eighth street. Through the carelessness of some one, the Pennock-Meehan building was not properly shored up and the result was that all of the rear end of this store toppled over into the excavation made in the rear of the Kervan building. This is now known in the "street" as the "landslide." Fortunately no one was injured and the business of both firms was not interrupted.

Owing to the unfortunate disaster to the steamship Titanic, the party going to Europe to visit the International Exposition has been greatly scattered. Several will sail next week on the steamship Philadelphia. Charles H. Totty, chairman of the National Flower Show, and Harry A. Bunyard, secretary of the National Sweet Pea Society, will sail on the Kronprinzessin Cecelie May 14. John Evans, director of the S. A. F., leaves on the Lusitania. Richard Vincent, Jr., president of the S. A. F., and Mrs. Vincent will join the party going on the Philadelphia.

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be very interesting. There will be an exhibition of spring plants in honor of the memory of the late John Birnie. For years Mr. Birnie took great pleasure in making this spring exhibition one of the special features of the May meeting. Philip Mindil, 1547 Broadway, will deliver an address on "What Happened to Flowers in 1913."

Harry A. Bunyard has returned from his recent visit to Boston, which was taken in the interest of the National Sweet Pea Society.

From all accounts there will be an extra call for carnations for Mothers' day, especially the white varieties.

Insects that give trouble to the florist was the subject of an interesting and instructive address by Dr. E. P. Felt, state entomologist, at the May meeting of the Albany Florists' Club. Dr. Felt was introduced by Frederick Goldring, president pro tem., after which he began by calling attention to the fact that the florist is a little better situated than the fruit grower because he has conditions under control under glass. Prevention, he believed, was the best remedy. He advised those before him to start a greenhouse with clean stock and to be sure that no insect eggs or grubs were in the soil brought in for the beds. With a good beginning the battle is more than half won and persistent and regular attacks by spraying will keep the stock thrifty. Dr. Felt said the florist can learn many things about spraying from the orchardist. The best nozzle, he said, is the so-called "cyclone type," which diverts the spray upward with force against the under side of the leaves. The speaker emphasized the last portion of the above sentence and illustrated it by remarking that water alone applied with force through a rather coarse "cyclone" nozzle will be sufficient to combat almost 90 per cent of the greenhouse pests. Dr. Felt favored the standard insecticides such as whale oil soap and kerosene emulsion, fir tree oil and Ivory soap solution, and some forms of powders. He said that a number of the specialties are good but did not advise the general use of potassium cyanide fumes as they are likely to be harmful, especially in houses with a miscellaneous collection of plants. Dr. Felt described a large number of injurious insects and explained the kinds of mealy bugs and the differences between the several varieties of scale. In combating many of these, he said, the important thing is to bring the insecticide into contact with the body of the insect, spraying frequently and regularly to bring about elimination. That the entomologist has a large problem on his hands the speaker showed by a few figures. To date 50,000 insects have been noted and described in this country. Of the number the state of New York has about 20,000. Each insect during its life passes through four different stages. The entomologist who would be familiar with those in New York must have knowledge of 80,000 forms. Some of these are so unusual that they have to be learned by close application and committed to memory—all of which is more than a task for a lifetime. An interesting discussion followed the address. A rising vote of thanks was given to Prof. Felt and he was unanimously elected an honorary member of the club. Two proposals for membership were received to be acted upon at the June meeting. The members voted to affiliate with the state society organized in February at Ithaca and the secretary was instructed to complete the arrangements.

Members and directors of the American Forestry association on May 3 inspected the state tree nurseries at Lake Clear. Among the party were Governor Robert P. Bass, New Hampshire, president of the association, and C. S. Pettis, state superintendent of forests. R. D.

STOCK SELLING WELL.

We have had a few days of ideal weather and stock arriving on the market shows a vast improvement, especially in this true of Killarney roses, which show excellent color and good size. Mrs. Aaron Ward are in good demand, the quantity received not being near enough to go around. Carnations have been short in supply, with a slight rise in price. Sweet peas are arriving in quantity but clean up early in the day. Daffodils and tulips are arriving in large quantities, and in the absence of carnations meet with a good demand. Callas and Easter lilies move slowly. Greens of all kinds are plentiful and in good demand. Mothers' day orders for carnations are arriving by mail, telegraph and telephone, and unless ideal conditions prevail up to Saturday the problem of filling orders will be a puzzler. Pansies are in good demand and stock is of good quality. Roses of all kinds and grades cleaned up on Saturday, the demand being far above the average.

NOTES.

The florists of this city are talking of going to the convention in their automobiles. There will be about a dozen machines if arrangements can be made.

Ed. Wilhelmy reports business at his three stores as very good, and it keeps him busy buying for them.

The Cleveland Florists' Exchange has added a "Cadillac" to their service. C. F. B.

MERIDEN, CONN.—The increase in the Easter trade was about fifty per cent, writes The Batchley Co., with prices about the same and a plentiful supply of plants and cut flowers, with the exception of violets and sweet peas. Azaleas and lilies were the best sellers in plants and genistas and ferns the poorest. There was a large sale of violets and sweet peas. We had an unusual amount of competition, two outside florists opening stores and the department stores sold plants and cut flowers at about one-half prices, but they were of very poor quality.

BOULDER, COLO.—The weather conditions were ideal and the Easter trade was about twenty per cent larger than last year, states C. F. Fawcett. Prices were about the same and there was a good supply of stock, but more rambler roses and tulips in pots and roses, violets and lily of the valley could have been sold. Spræas, tulips and azaleas were in good demand and all sold. Violets, roses and lily of the valley were the flowers most called for. Carnations were a glut and no one seemed to want them. A card, with cultural instructions fastened to each plant saved much time in preventing telephone messages in regard to their treatment.

GRAND NOVELTY ORCHID-FLOWERED GLADIOLUS KUNDERDI "GLORY"

has "distinctiveness" stamped all over it; it will not only revolutionize the family of garden Gladiolus but will be one of the most important factors in commercial floriculture. The type is distinctively new. Broad-expanded, wide-open flowers, paired by twos, face all in the same direction, and are carried on straight, stout stalks never less than 3½ ft. in height. From four to eight flowers are open at one time. The form: each petal is exquisitely ruffled and fluted at the edges, such as is only noticeable in Orchids. It gives the flower a refined appearance, and it appeals instantly to the fancier. The color is delicate cream-pink with a neat, attractive crimson stripe in the center of each lower petal. The shade of pink is unknown in Gladiolus. 10 cts. each, $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100, $70.00 per 1000.

Boddington's Quality Gloxinias

Gloxinia Erecta Grandiflora.

This popular flowering plant is coming into greater vogue than ever, not only as a pot plant for house decoration, but also for cut flower purposes. Our strains of Gloxinias are the true erect-flowering type, grown by a specialist in Europe.

FLOWERS FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

Business is still fair, there are no big rush orders, but a good steady trade and no great quantity of flowers are left over at the end of the day. The only flower we noticed in quantity was the carnation and the best of these were being sold. Let us say right here that white carnations are going to bring a price for Mothers' day. We quote from one who buys and sells extensively: "Why should we stick to the custom of the white carnation being the only flower used to decorate the mother's grave or to present to the mother on that day? Possibly the white carnation was not our mother's favorite flower, it may have been a glowing rose, a bunch of lily of the valley, a cluster of violets, a lily or the modest daisy, but just to follow a custom established every one must purchase or try to purchase white carnations. With the price way up—how are the poor, who think just as much of their mothers as the wealthy, to purchase this flower? We think the florists should get together and try to change the custom and let it be a more universal flower giving on that day." The retail stores have had plenty of orders, weddings, funerals and other affairs.

NOTES.

The Florists' Exchange is having a good steady trade. J. J. Perry, the manager, took a trip to Philadelphia this week. He went by boat and enjoyed it very much. This is the season to take that trip by water. Mr. Perry speaks well of the Princeton rose and thinks it will prove to be a good seller, being of a very pleasing shade of pink a little deeper than the Killarney, and it holds up well after cutting.

S. Feast & Sons, Charles street, had the bulk of the funeral work for the funeral of the late Ross Winans, a millionaire of this city, connected with a fine old family, but owing to ill health had lived very quietly for several years. Violets, his favorite flower, were used in abundance, and lily of the valley, these two leading, though roses and other flowers were used.

We have been in the hands of the politicians this week—Woodrow Wilson leading, with the two "T's" close at his heels. Crowds of people, with bands playing and speeches have been the order of things. Who says Baltimore is slow?

F. Baur has been cutting some very fine outdoor lily of the valley which has found ready sale. B.

HOLLISTER, CALIF., May 2.—Crops are greatly improved by the recent rains but we think there is not sufficient moisture in the soil to make a good crop of seeds.—W.

VISITED CHICAGO: C. C. Massie, of Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Jerome B. Rice and party, Cambridge, N. Y.; Kirby B. White, of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

GROWERS, of cantaloupes in the Imperial Valley, California, estimate this season's production at 50,000,000 melons. Approximately 5,500 acres have been planted this spring, the yield, under normal conditions, being computed at 50,000,000 melons, about 1,000,000 crates.

PEDRICKTOWN, N. J.—George R. Pedrick & Son are now rushed with seed corn orders. Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Pedrick and daughter, Mrs. A. Detwiler, who have been spending the winter in Florida, have returned. Mr. Pedrick still continues in very poor health.

CHICAGO.—Prices on the Board of Trade, May 8, for grass seed were noted as follows: Timothy, $7 to $13 per 100 pounds.—Seed corn, field varieties, of high test is selling at record prices; we hear of farmers who are getting locally $6 to $8 per bushel.—The freight handlers' strike here is a serious handicap to the field seed business as well as to the garden seed and supply men.

Alfalfa and Clover Damage.

The damage to alfalfa and clover has been very great. There seems to be very little clover left, writes Leonard Hegnauer, professor of crop production, University of Illinois, and not very much alfalfa even where established for a number of years. There is no definite information on timothy and redtop, but the belief is that they have stood the winter very well.

New York Seed Law.

The Wilson Seed Bill, which was introduced in the New York assembly March 7, 1912, and passed by the assembly and senate, as announced in THE AMERICAN FLORIST, issue of April 13, page 724, has been signed by Governor Dix and becomes law, to take effect July 1, 1912. This law provides for tests by count instead of weight, the latter being the manner of testing seed by the United States Department of Agriculture and state seed analysts, which will require seedsmen doing an interstate business to have two tests made, one by weight and the other by count.

but these do not cause trouble after the first year. Other foreign seeds were found in alfalfa seed but they are not liable to cause trouble. Failures in oat seedlings were found to be due to sowing oats that had been bleached with sulphur fumes.

Growing Peas on Contract.

The following statement from a firm of contract pea growers explains certain conditions worthy of notice. "We have discontinued the practice of growing field peas on contract as our experience has been very unsatisfactory. In case of a short crop and the prices on the market are higher than the contract, it is impossible, without more

JEROME B. RICE OF CAMBRIDGE, N. Y., AND PARTY AT CHICAGO, MAY 4, 1912.

Seed Tests at New York Station

DURING THE YEAR 1911.

There were received and tested for purity by the New York Experiment Station during 1911, according to the bulletin just issued, 1,015 samples of agricultural seeds, 548 of alfalfa, 253 of red clover, 98 of timothy, 86 of alsike clover, and 30 of miscellaneous plants. In the alfalfa samples, dodder occurred in 12.9 per cent, and in red clover, 4.74 per cent, which was a slightly larger percentage in each than in 1910. Large-seeded dodder occurred in twice as many samples as did the small-seeded kind. Red and alsike clover both contained more noxious seeds than in the previous year. Adulteration was found in two cases of red clover (one of which contained 35 per cent alsike clover and 60 per cent yellow trefoil), and twelve cases of alsike clover. Yellow trefoil grows readily in alsike clover fields and from observation it would indicate that several adulterations were due to the presence of yellow trefoil in the field. Many samples were altogether too small for dependable tests. Centaurea repens was found in several alfalfa seed samples—an indication that the seed was imported. Russian thistle and roquette have caused anxiety to alfalfa growers expense than the profit involved, to prevent farmers from stealing a large proportion of the crop and selling them elsewhere, and in case the market prices are lower than contract, they will deliver their own and their neighbors' peas. The local grain elevators throughout the pea growing district encouraged the farmers in this practice, and it is more annoyance than it is worth to attempt to do anything with them."

Potato Disease.

A malady is beginning to attack the potato plant in Europe which is caused by an insect, Phthorimea solanella, and Prof. Bouvier has been studying the disease. It appears that it was unknown in France up to this time, but was noticed in America and New Zealand some years ago. The potatoes when piled in a cellar, for instance, are attacked by larvæ, which bore holes in them and spoil the potato entirely so that it cannot be used even for feeding stock. It has only appeared in the south of France at present, but did much damage in some places. It is easy to destroy the larvæ by sprinkling the cellars several times with bisulphide of carbon.—Scientific American.

Tomato Seed Oil.

The following is a translation of a French exchange article copied in one of the local newspapers, writes Consul L. J. Keena, Florence, Italy:

"A new oil which has made its appearance on the market was until recently quite unknown. The oil is extracted from tomato seeds. Especially in Italy it is possible to obtain in considerable quantities this oil, owing to the extensive cultivation of the tomato. The Province of Parma alone conserves 84,000 tons of tomatoes, the residue from which, thrown away until a short time ago, has yielded 600 tons of oil. From a chemical standard the tomato-seed oil is classed as a dry-seed oil of the type of cottonseed oil. It will find, therefore, an immediate employment in soap making and in all industries where cottonseed or similar oils are used."

In investigating this matter I have found that the oil mentioned is not known at all in the local market. The Chamber of Commerce of Parma writes that the industry is as yet in the experimental stage. From the experiments and tests which have been made they are, nevertheless, certain of the success of this new industry. This tomato-seed oil should therefore appear on the local market this coming fall, and its success there will undoubtedly be at the expense of the American cottonseed oil, a large quantity of which is annually imported from the United States.

A Good Dry-Weather Vegetable.

In all too many gardens the merits of New Zealand spinach are not appreciated, and so a valuable dry-season vegetable does not become so popular as it deserves to be. It is a first-rate substitute for spinach, and in a dry, hot season like that of 1911 it is a great success, when ordinary spinach quickly runs to flower, and is disappointing.

New Zealand spinach (Tetragonia expansa) is a native of New Zealand and Australia, and, though a hardy perennial, its value lies entirely in its usefulness in the summer and early autumn. In the matter of flavor New Zealand spinach compares favorably with the common form, states a writer in The Gardeners' Magazine; indeed, some people like it better because of the absence of bitterness. It is possible to obtain an early crop by sowing seeds in heat in March, pricking off the seedlings into boxes, and hardening them ready for planting out on a sunny site at the end of May, but such a method will be rarely necessary.

An outdoor sowing at the end of April on rich, light, well cultivated land that lies warm, will meet the demands in most cases, and the hotter the site the better. The drills for the outdoor sowing should be three feet apart, as it must be remembered that Tetragonia expansa is a trailing plant, and needs room to develop. Sow thinly in shallow drills, and thin the seedlings to two feet apart. Beyond hoeing, weeding, and picking the fully-developed leaves as they are ready, little attention is needed, although a few good waterings are appreciated, and result in stronger growth and more leaves.

In 1911 one of our market growing friends had several acres of New Zealand spinach, this crop following lettuces; we have never seen finer produce, and as fast as the pickers had worked right across the big field, there was plenty of leafage ready to pick at the original starting point. The crop must have been a very paying one in such a season.

Hardening-Off Plants.

Of the greatest importance, is the proper hardening-off with any plants grown in heat under glass. Not only must they be prepared to meet lower temperatures outdoors, but very often high winds prove disastrous. This hardening is necessary for both hardy and tender subjects, for even such a hardy plant as cabbage is easily injured if moved at once from a warm hotbed to the open field. We have found that it pays us well to use cloth in the process as it protects against cold as well as winds, yet admitting both light and air. The cloth also conserves moisture which reduces our attention, making a big saving in the busy days of spring. We use both plant-bed cloth and common cheesecloth extensively. We have both kinds tacked on 3x6 frames to take the place of sash, also have both kinds in lengths to fit our sixteen-foot frames and for large work in 200-foot lengths. These long pieces are made by sewing two three-foot widths together on a sewing machine, any length. To fasten them we drive finishing nails at close intervals into the frames and the cloth is simply pushed on these nails which makes it easily removable without damage. It is necessary to support the sag in the center which we accomplish by stretching a wire. For newly transplanted stock or seeds sown, there is nothing nicer than cheesecloth—give enough light and air and yet shade to insure safety. As before mentioned in these notes, we use cheesecloth to protect our radishes from the maggot flies; use it on outdoor leaf lettuce to produce crisp and tender stock. The future market gardening will see more intense methods—glass and frames, cloth and irrigation.

American Association of Nurserymen
 J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O., President;
 W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass., Vice-
 President; John Hall, Rochester, N. Y., Sec'y.
 Thirty-seventh annual convention to be held at Boston, Mass., June 12-14, 1912.

BOXFORD, MASS.—Harlan P. Kelsey has purchased eighty acres of land which he will use for nursery purposes.

THE annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Cemetery Superintendents to be held, June 26-27, at Sidney and Piqua, promises to be of unusual interest. The officers of the society are, Charles Crain, Tiffin, president; Fred Sloan, Ironton, vice-president; G. C. Anderson, Sidney, secretary and treasurer.

American Association of Nurserymen.

THIRTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The thirty-seventh annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, to be held at the Hotel Somerset, Boston, June 12-14, ought to be one of the best in its history, and we urge upon every nurseryman everywhere the importance to him personally of being identified with an organization that has been of incalculable benefit to the nursery business generally. The programme and entertainment features are alike exceedingly attractive. The secretary, John Hall, 204 Granite Building, Rochester, N. Y., will be glad to receive applications and information for membership. Any present member who has not yet renewed should give it his immediate attention, as the badge book is being prepared for publication.

Cherries in Arnold Arboretum.

A most interesting event is the flowering of several Japanese cherries, states the Bulletin issued by the Arnold Arboretum. The first of the Japanese cherries to flower is Prunus Sargentii. This is a tall tree in the native forests of the Northern Island where it is valued as a timber tree. There are six specimens covered with clusters of large pink or rose-colored single flowers, for the color of the flowers of this tree vary considerably on different individuals. The small black fruits which ripen in June are almost hidden by the large dark green leaves which in the autumn turn to shades of orange and red; the smooth, shining, reddish bark adds to the beauty of this tree. Travelers who have seen cherry blossoms in many lands declare that Prunus Sargentii as it now appears in the Arboretum surpasses in beauty all other cherry trees. Whether this is an exaggeration or not it is certainly a tree of first rate importance for New England; and its hardiness, rapid growth, large size, the abundance of its flowers even on small plants, and its handsome foliage make it the most valuable deciduous leaved tree we have yet obtained from Japan. The trees in the Arboretum produce large crops of seeds and these germinate readily so that there is no reason why Prunus Sargentii should not become a common tree if nurserymen will recognize its value and make a business of making it known to the public.

The better known Prunus pendula flowers a few days later. This tree is remarkable for its long, slender, pendulous branches which before the leaves expand are covered with small pink flowers. P. pendula, which does not appear to be common in a wild state in Japan, is often planted in Japanese gardens in which it sometimes grows to a large size. It was brought to the United States many years ago, and specimens from twenty to thirty feet high can be seen in the neighborhood of Boston. By nurserymen it has usually been propagated by grafting on tall stems of the common cherry, with the result that the trees look unnatural and are rarely long-lived. Plants produced by grafting at the ground level grow to a larger size, live longer, and when in flower look like fountains of pink mist. It has been shown at the Arboretum that the drooping habit of the branches is reproduced in seedlings, and as this cherry bears seeds freely, seedling plants will, it is to be hoped, become more common.

A plant with even more beautiful and more abundant flowers than Prunus pendula is Prunus subhirtella, or as it is now labeled in the Arboretum, P. pendula ascendens, a small tree, or as it has grown here a large shrub, from central Japan, and now known through Wilson's collections to occur also in western China. It is perfectly hardy and flowers freely every year. Introduced into the Arboretum twenty years ago, and from here sent to Europe, it is surprising that this handsome plant has remained so little known in gardens.

Prunus triloba is a shrub with bright clear pink flowers which are about an inch in diameter and appear before the leaves. The double flowered form of this shrub (var. multiplex) is a favorite garden plant in China whence forty or fifty years ago it was introduced into Europe and the United States where it is often cultivated. The much more beautiful single-flowered plant grows on the mountains near Peking and appears to have been cultivated for the first time in the Arboretum to which seeds were sent from China in 1882. Although perfectly hardy P. triloba is not a particularly vigorous plant. It well deserves a place, however, in every garden for the charming color of the flowers.

EVERYONE REASONABLY BUSY.

There is little change in the condition of business from that of a week ago. All the retail stores seem to be reasonably busy, but there has been nothing on a large scale. The horse show was held last week, the Colonial Dames were in session, as well as several other visiting delegations; but few people come to Washington to buy flowers. The announcer on one of the sight-seeing wagons says he can always tell a bridal couple because they wear new shoes, which lends color to the supposition that some people come here to show their raiment. Of outdoor stock, iris and snowballs are now on the market. Although last winter was particularly severe, the outdoor flowering stock that has come in is of a good quality.

NOTES.

James Quinn is now head gardener for Joseph Leiter's new place on the Virginia side of the Potomac, near Cabin John bridge. Mr. Leiter bought 400 acres of woodland and in addition to erecting a fine residence has a large force of men employed building roads and drives. It is said that later he will erect greenhouses for vegetable growing.

Theodore Dietrich is sending to Geo. H. Cooke the finest sweet peas on the market. They are of the Spencer type and attract attention wherever seen.

Elmer Mayberry is now able to walk out a little with the aid of a cane. He was very badly hurt, but being a young man was in his favor.

The Castle Automatic Circulator.

Some years ago a small party of prominent men went out to Dorchester, Mass., to see a test of the (then) new Castle automatic circulator. We were fortunate enough to receive an invitation and be one of the party. The construction of the machine then was somewhat different than it is now. On the shaft to draw the water, working in the cylinder, was a contrivance like an auger. The shaft was propelled by a one-eighth h. p. electric motor. The house was 200 feet long with 2-inch pipes and the temperature of the water in the returns was 80° lower than that in the flow, and in eight minutes after turning the switch the difference between the temperature of the flow and return pipes in the boiler room was only some 5°. The circulator having forced the water through the boiler and sent it spinning through the house with the result mentioned. In the new circulator there is a regular propeller which has more drawing power than the old one. A hinged balanced valve is another addition, the water instead of going through the cylinder of the machine, goes straight through, thereby saving two bends. When the power is off the valve lies flat, but the moment the power is turned the valve rises and the water is drawn through the propelling chamber.

The operation of the machine is not expensive and the saving on coal can be readily seen by any one. Friction is one of the drawbacks in hot water heating, especially in small pipes, and where a pipe sags a pocket is formed and the circulation is then sluggish. This machine remedies all these, and there is no waiting for the water to boil before getting the pipes hot. The slower the circulation the more coal and the more heat wasted and sometimes violent language added on top of that. The speed of the machine can be regulated by the size of the wheel on the shaft. If run by electricity the switch can be placed anywhere. In Power, issue of March 26, 1911 this circulator is given editorial mention, with illustrations, and when an engineering paper of such prominence is willing to extol the mechanical side it must be all right and the operation of the machine must be satisfactory. Many of the florists with kinks and troubles in their hot water systems have solved the problem by using this machine, and from the knowledge we have obtained, we gladly recommend it.

Which Shall It Be?

CAST IRON BOILERS—FOOL ECONOMY (false ratings, fuel waste, danger of breakdowns, dealers' profits), OR

KROESCHELL BOILERS—FUEL ECONOMY (honest ratings, safety, quick heat, no boiler pits, no dealers' profits).

WHAT THE USERS SAY:

Kroeschell versus Cast Iron

I have one of your new 1910 model Kroeschell Boilers, and same has proven very satisfactory. We have no trouble to keep temperatures in the coldest weather. We fire once or twice during the day and once at night and have had the best satisfaction I have ever experienced in a boiler. Formerly I had two cast iron boilers; one cracked, and I took both of these boilers out. My coal bill with the cast iron boilers ran from $195.00 to $207.00 per season during the past seven years. This year, with your boiler and soft coal, my coal bill was only $103.00, and I still have some coal left. Your boiler is the best and cheapest on the market, not alone for the price, but also in fuel saving. I am very glad that you are so well known in Buffalo, N. Y. I have never heard anything but praise, in which I join heartily. Wishing you every success, I remain,

MAX BUEHLER, Forks, N. Y.

WHAT THE USERS SAY:

Cast Iron Boilers Waste Fuel

The No. 4 Kroeschell Boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The Kroeschell Boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast iron boilers which never did the work at their best when the greenhouses were new. According to our experience with the Kroeschell, we will save 20 to 25 per cent of fuel.

Don't Be Spider Trapped It Tangles You Up.

Terse Talk No. 7.

THESE are two kinds of folks:
(1) One kind stands firmly by the real good there is in a thing, no matter how old it is.

(2) The other kind is always ready to try any new fangled thing that comes along, the newer the better.

Number One spends precious little money that don't count twelve for him. He sort of keeps to the middle of the road—neither hangs on to the old too long, or is too hasty to grab at the new. His neighbors say "he has a long head"; they probably know.

Number Two is always keen to spring something new on you; he wants to be considered the leader in things; he is perfectly willing to try out any new construction that any greenhouse peddler has to offer him. First thing you know he is all tangled up because making an experiment station out of himself on a large scale hasn't paid. It never can pay.

The "show me" kind of men "from Missouri" are the safest, surest kind. They may be a little slow to start, but when they do start, they are thoroughly ready.

If you are "from Missouri," we want to talk with you about our Cantilever System of supporting Iron Frame houses. It's an old engineering principle applied in a new way. Send for catalog.

IF SO, YOU NEED A

Castle Automatic Circulator

If your greenhouses are not heated perfectly, ask us to help you out.

- ☐ It quickly forces the hot water to the uttermost parts of the system.
- ☐ It corrects errors in piping without expensive alterations and without putting additional pressure on your system.
- ☐ It reduces the coal bill.
- ☐ By speeding up the circulation, more water flows through the piping, more heat is taken from the fire, and more heat units are actually used for heating your houses.

SUGGESTIONS FOR MEMORIAL DAY. ✓

The Observance of the Day.

The last floral day of the yearly season for the florist is Memorial day, May 30, and to the retailer this means a much larger amount of labor for the same return than on any other floral holiday, for where much of the trade at Christmas and Easter is in plants and cut flowers, a large proportion of the sales at Memorial day are for flowers arranged in designs and bouquets. To the grower, Memorial day is one of the best of the year for there is not only a demand for all that can be produced and at a good price, but the expense of growing is comparatively small in comparison to that of other large flower days, for the coal bill is almost at the lowest figure and the labor expended in wrapping is almost nothing. Yet both the grower and retailer must be fully prepared to meet this great demand which will necessitate not only a large supply of flowers but also a great quantity of supplies and accessories for which there is always a large sale.

While the selection of one day in the year which was to be observed in memory of the dead by decorating their graves with flowers originated with those who desired to commemorate the deeds of the soldiers who gave their lives in the great civil war fifty years ago, yet it has been adopted by the general public, and in many places the cemeteries are covered with flowers by the relatives and friends of those who have departed. The publication of the war stories by the public press during the last year has attracted the attention of the younger generation to that great conflict and inculcated a respect for the few veterans of that war that are left, and Memorial day, notwithstanding its general observance, is regarded as the day of the Grand Army of the Republic and last year was more extensively observed than ever before in many sections of the nation, and without question this will be increased this year.

It has often been remarked that the observance of the day is much more general in some sections of the country than in others, especially in New England, where the demand for everything in flowers is almost impossible to fill, notwithstanding the large supply. This may be perhaps somewhat accounted for by the intense feeling throughout that section before and during the war which has been handed down by fable and anecdote and the official observance of the day by state and municipalities which devote the day by proclamation, making it a legal holiday, and appropriation of money to assist the Grand Army of the Republic in holding processions, having orations, and in decoration of the graves. In some cities and towns a large proportion of the populace attend the services which are held at the cemetery and everybody decorates their family burial lot and the graves of their relatives.

Bouquets and Sprays.

While there is always a large demand for cut flowers which are taken by the purchasers to the cemetery and arranged, yet as a rule the greatest call is for bouquets and sprays which are placed upon the graves. Those that have provided themselves with vases at the cemetery generally prefer the round bouquet while those not having these will purchase the flowers in spray form, that they may lay them on the grave or fasten them to the monuments. Many of these will be of low price and it is necessary that a large quantity of the cheaper flowers be employed, but generally there is some outside stock, such as lilacs and shrubbery, flowers that can be advantageously used for filling up the bunch. The demand will naturally be in both bouquets and sprays for something that is rather showy and not for the more select flowers and smaller work, as it is the desire of the purchaser to make as good an effect as possible at a distance and not for close inspection. The greenhouses in some cities that are located at the entrance or near the cemeteries do an immense business in bouquets and sprays, the number sold reaching into the thousands and the force frequently has to work all night arranging bouquets. While there are many of them low in price, the majority being one and two dollars each, yet where such a quantity is sold and the necessary stock obtained, the trade, although it entails much labor, is very remunerative. Large quantities of roses, carnations and late bulbous stock are used as well as the cheaper greenhouse flowers such as stocks, spirea and candytuft, and the size of the sprays is increased by the liberal use of green and lilac. Spirea Van Houttei, deutzia or any outside stock that is procurable. Peonies are one of the flowers, par excellence, and when the season is far enough advanced to procure them in large numbers at fair value, large quantities are used, for they make an admirable display. But the florist is not restricted to any of the several flowers, for everything that is in bloom can be adapted to their use. The outside stock is sometimes quite unsatisfactory, especially if the weather is warm, on account of its wilting, but this can be overcome to a great degree if it is picked the day before and allowed to stand in deep jars of water overnight in a cool place, thereby becoming well filled with moisture. A large supply of greens is necessary, hardy ferns to back the sprays or finish the bouquets, and as well to fill in, and quantities of asparagus, both A. plumosus and A. Sprengeri are used. Another green that is very useful is the foliage of Spirea Japonica, the bright shiny leaves adding materially to the work.

Floral Designs.

While the florist will probably have demands for many different floral designs, yet the wreath is by far the one most desired for Memorial day. Crosses are often ordered and pillows are also the design selected by some for Memorial day, but the wreath is adapted for so many locations that it is always, next to the bouquets and sprays, the most popular floral design. Floral wreaths can be made of all the flowers of the season, depending greatly upon the price obtained, but the dealer must be prepared to arrange them at all prices, many desiring this arrangement for they can be used to fasten upon the monument, lay upon the grave or stand upon an easel. The several green and colored leaves are used in large quantities on this occasion; the galax, both green and bronze, can be made up in beautiful arrangements; the magnolia leaves also are to be had in green and bronze and these make one of the richest wreaths when nicely arranged. Another green that makes up in artistic work is the leucothoe and the cycas fronds are beautifully adapted for backgrounds or intermingling with flowers or other foliage. These prepared and natural leaves have the great advantage of standing the rigors of the weather, whether hot or stormy, and lasting in fine condition a long while. A spray of flowers on one side of these foliage wreaths are a great ornamentation, and can be made so as to please the most fastidious customer. Our illustrations show what beautiful work can be arranged by combining the leaves and flowers.

Bedding and Other Plants.

The floral work for Memorial day is not nearly as large in some localities as is the plant trade. In the northern sections of the country the last of May is too early for the setting out of many bedding plants, but throughout the intermediate and southern sections all the plants ordinarily used for beds can safely be transplanted outside, and the demand for these is exceedingly large. The dealer must be fully prepared to meet the call, but of one thing he must be assured, and that is that the plants must be in bloom. At this time the lot owners will desire that the beds make a fine showing. While it is possible at other times to sell plants enough to fill the bed with a few in flower and the rest showing bud, in the beds set out for Memorial day the customer will desire all the flowers possible, and the promise of a beautiful showing later will be of no avail. Geraniums will probably be in greatest demand and the popular varieties S. A. Nutt, Alphonse Ricard, Beaute Poitevine and Mme. Buchner will in many cases be far short of the demand for plants in bloom. Pansies are another flower that are used largely in cemeteries and these are particularly adapted for planting in beds that are shaded by trees, but to make a pansy bed last through the season they must be planted in such a location and not in the full sun, and arrangements must be made to keep the bed watered through the warm weather and attention given the bed as far as picking off the old flowers and seed pods or the plants will go out of bloom, and the beds, instead of being a thing of beauty, will be a blot on the lot. Echeverias are used extensively in some cemeteries and they are especially adapted to warm and dry locations and require but little attention, and the other bedding plants such as coleus, alternantheras, heliotropes and stock suitable for small beds, will be in great demand. A plant that the dealer having a good cemetery trade must always have in supply is grave myrtle, Vinca minor. This plant is used in great quantities all over the country to plant over graves and when once established makes a very ornamental feature on a cemetery lot and does not require any great attention. Urns and vases are popular with many who can give them the necessary attention throughout the summer, or in cemeteries where perpetual care is the rule and these will be attended to by the help. If these are not given the proper care, however, they are never satisfactory. Vines are a necessary stock for the dealer having vases to fill. Vinca major and English ivy are the two best and the other vines so freely used in window boxes and vases are also in much demand. One necessary feature which the dealer should impress upon the mind of those ordering vases or urns filled is the replenishing of the soil with good live compost; it is useless to suppose that plants set out in exhausted soil in the hot sun and whipped by the wind can survive and be ornamental.

The plantsman will surely have demand for specimen plants to place upon the lot or plunge in the ground at the base of monuments or foot of the graves, and there are some beautiful plants at this time that can be used for this purpose. The hydrangeas are particularly suited and they make a grand show. The rambler roses are also fine plants and can be easily bloomed at this time. For cheaper plants the spireas are adapted and are very satisfactory. There is one thing in selling these plants that should never be neglected and that is that the plants be given a good soaking of water before leaving the greenhouse, and if this is attended to properly the plant will be in good condition when the lot owner visits the cemetery on Memorial day, but if this is not done and the plant placed on the ground in a dry condition the chances are that it will be wilted when the purchaser sees it and a dissatisfied customer is the result. When the buyers take the plant themselves impress this necessary detail upon their mind.

Immortelle Designs.

Wreaths and other designs made of immortelles and other dried flowers are a prominent feature of the Memorial day trade with many dealers. There is one great use that the florist can make of these—they can be arranged some time before, for they will last in good condition for a long time, and a great display can be arranged in the window the week before Memorial day, which will remind many a shopper of the approach and observance of the day and induce many a sale that would not otherwise be attained. The immortelles can be obtained in several colors and very pretty combinations arranged and these flowers, as well as cape flowers, can be wired by the force during leisure moments and arranged long before any rush, and if well displayed are sure to attract attention. They can be further ornamented with the preserved adiantum and other vines and they will find much favor with some people. If made up in this manner they are inexpensive either as regards material or labor and will prove to be a paying investment and attract a customer who would not buy flowers on account of their being so perishable, or having to be sent a long distance with no one to take proper care of them. The metal floral work is also shown in large quantities and is popular with some people, for we have seen large numbers of the different designs in many cemeteries. Where there is a demand for this class of work the florist should have a stock on hand, for the purchasers are sure to desire it, and he might just as well obtain the sale as to leave it to some other tradesman, yet if it interferes with the sale of flowers it had better be discontinued as far as the florist is concerned, and let him devote his energies to the rightful product of his business.

Cemetery Vases.

The florist located near a cemetery will have many customers come to purchase flowers who have not beforehand provided themselves with any receptacles in which to place them. These people will always be anxious to obtain some vessel which will hold water in which they can place the flowers so that they will not immediately wilt, and if they can obtain such a receptacle so that the flowers will last so much longer it is a great satisfaction to them. We have often seen almost everything from fruit jars to pitchers pressed into service at such a time, and these people who perhaps have purchased their flowers of some other dealer or cut them from their own plants at home, will gladly purchase a suitable vase if easily procurable. A dealer so situated should have a stock of these vases on hand. They can be obtained in different materials, glass, pottery or iron, and are made very ornamental, will stand hard usage and can be bought so that they can be sold at a very moderate price. Having these on hand and making a good display of them may also materially assist in disposing of much stock for many persons will often buy when the flowers can be properly cared for who would let the matter go by default or refuse to purchase unless they had the necessary fixtures. Demands for some vase or receptacle in which to place the flowers are often made and the dealer having a Memorial day trade should have a good supply in various sizes.

Mothers' Day.

The reports of the Mothers' day trade from all sections of the country testify to the rapidly growing observance of the day and also the inadequate supply to meet the demand for white carnations. There is no question whatever that the form of observing the day by wearing a white carnation will have to be modified in some manner, for the law of supply and demand immediately causes the price of carnations to advance beyond that which the people will pay and the large majority of the public not understanding the situation immediately draws wrong conclusions and will then refuse to listen to any explanation. It is next to impossible to make the flower buyers pay from 15 cents to 25 cents for a single carnation, and where such prices are charged the day will be brought into disrepute and the trade in general will suffer injury. Some organized movement will have to be made to broaden the observance to include any and all flowers that the poor who revere the memory of mother with just as much ardor as the wealthy can afford to observe the day. This is the time to commence such a movement and the florists owe it not only to themselves but to Miss Jarvis, the founder of the day, to write to her and let her understand that they do not desire to commercialize the sentiment of Mothers' day, but in justice to all that the original idea must be modified.

The day was observed in Chicago notwithstanding that one of the worst storms of the season passed over the city and that it rained all day. This interfered to a great extent with the Sunday trade, but the retail stores all did an immense business on Saturday, the cut flower trade increasing wonderfully and the family orders were larger than usual. "A great Mothers' day trade" is the statement at A. Lange, and an extraordinary fine business was done on Saturday. "A fine trade" was reported at John Mangel's new store in the Palmer House, and everybody was busy all day Saturday. "One of the best Saturdays we have had," says John Canger of Canger & Gormley. "A splendid Saturday business but too bad it rained Sunday," is the remark of the Alpha Floral Co.

informed the people of the day, and the call for carnations was larger than the supply and there was an increased demand for all flowers. The supply in Philadelphia did not begin to be adequate to fill the orders and the prices for carnations soared beyond reason to the buyers. The wholesale houses everywhere did an immense business, easily disposing of what stock they had. Mothers' day has touched the

WREATH OF CARNATIONS AND OTHER FLOWERS ON EASEL.

The down town trade of course felt the transient trade which is the result of Mothers' day more than the stores in the residential sections. While the governors of the state and mayor of the city omitted their annual proclamation this year, yet all the churches and many organizations held services in commemoration of mother and her labors.

The florists in many cities combined in their advertising of the day. The florists of Detroit, Mich., used the daily papers, inserting large display advertisements calling the attention of the public to the day, and the manner of its observance, stating that all florists were prepared to serve those wishing to observe the day and a great trade resulted. Grower, Wholesaler and Retailer.

Paper read by J. F. Ammann of Edwardsville, Ill., before the St. Louis Florists' Club, May 9, 1912.

The subject assigned to me for discussion at this meeting I consider one of the most important in our trade today, and I frankly confess I do not feel at all competent to do justice to one of such vital importance, yet I am always willing to give the best I have, and in the best way I can.

My experience as a grower dates back a quarter of a century. During these years I have been a close student of the various ways of marketing our products. I have often heard the grower call the wholesaler a crook, and the retailer call him a robber, but about all the wholesaler could do was to "grin and bear it" and be happy. I will now take up each branch separately, and give my observations and suggestions.

THE GROWER.

First of all comes the grower, or in other words the producer. In referring to this branch I am considering the average sized plant consisting of 50,000 to 75,000 square feet of glass. If he be one who is an exclusive grower for the wholesale market, he is all the more fortunate. The majority of plants of this size, especially those located in smaller cities, while claiming to be wholesale growers, do quite a little retail business at times; I say at times, for this is as a rule irregular, a funeral occasionally and the usual holiday demand. Now a grower so situated, and this is the position of most of us, has a much more serious problem before him than one who is exclusively a grower for market. His shipments are irregular, and for that reason his wholesaler is at a loss to know what to expect, unless he is a worthy grower who expects clean sales and will take the trouble to keep his wholesaler posted. By this I mean, when a local demand is apparent which would reduce shipments to his wholesaler, he should so notify him at once. Prospective crops for the holidays should be gone over carefully 10 days before, and every succeeding day or two estimates made, and the wholesaler notified as to progress of crops and as near as possible an estimate of just what may be expected. This work is not done for the wholesaler alone, but also for the benefit of the retailer, who is the ultimate customer of the grower, buying through his wholesaler. The principal beneficiary, however, of such prompt and careful work on the part of the grower, is the grower himself, and I venture to say right here, you show me a grower who keeps his wholesaler posted on his various crops, puts his trust in him, consigns to one firm only and regularly, growing a good average run of stock, not retailing at home for a less price than he gets at wholesale, and I will show you a grower who is making a success. On the other hand, a grower who is always in a stew about that 15 per cent commission, trying honestly to save this wherever he can, by peddling, or selling direct to the retailer all he can, under-selling this same retailer at home to further save that 15 per cent, and dumping the remnants on the wholesaler, is not only unsuccessful as a rule, but is his own worst enemy, and doing not only himself, but the trade at large an injustice. This, in most cases I think, is not intended to wrong anyone, or to take particular advantage of anyone, rather I dare say it is rank ignorance, and a victim of a system any trade should deplore.

The grower of flowers today is entirely too much of a retailer and wholesaler himself to be a successful grower. Look at our neighbor the truck gardener; he is very seldom a wholesaler, and rarely a retailer; let us take a lesson from him. Never mind the 15 per cent commission, dear grower. I was in conversation not long ago with the head of a large Chicago grower's firm who wholesale their own product, and he informed me that it cost them last year 12½ per cent to wholesale their product, not including any salary for the two leading members of the firm who devoted their entire time to this branch. If your wholesaler is making money and you are not, there is a leak somewhere. This leak may be at your end; better look for it there first, anyway. If you cannot find it, ask the wholesaler to help you look for it. If he is at all deserving of your patronage he will help you, and I bet you will find it. I want to close on the grower by saying, if you cannot trust a wholesaler, do not do business with him, and if you cannot trust anybody, get out of business as soon as possible and have your mind at peace.

THE WHOLESALER.

Next to the grower comes to my mind the wholesaler. This most important individual has been lambasted by both grower and retailer ever since his first appearance in the arena. We, however, have him still with us, and I fully believe he is even more important than ever. I have no defense to offer more than that we need him and the sooner both growers and retailers fully realize this the better it will be for us all. I feel the one important duty of the wholesaler is to keep his growers advised as to market conditions, visit their plants at regular intervals, advise with them what to grow for the coming season, and be intelligently informed on general conditions about a greenhouse.

This same duty he owes to the retailer and to give them general information of the crop conditions of his growers. He should also keep in touch with their business wants, in fact as the representative of both grower and retailer, he should be in very close touch with both. Character and habits are one of the chief assets of a wholesaler. The reputation he gets without much effort on his part. While he should trust the retailer, he should be very watchful not to trust too much. I have found from observation that while the grower does not trust the wholesaler enough, the wholesaler on the other hand often trusts the retailer too much. Both extremes should be remedied.

We often hear remarks about certain growers being favorites with the wholesaler. This is quite common among growers who are not quite up with some of their more fortunate fellow growers, so this progressive individual is often called a favorite of his wholesaler. Now I venture to say, if those imposing the compliment on this so-called favorite will proceed carefully and fairly to observe the way he conducts his business, they will invariably find the kind of man I have already pictured in the previous remarks. For effect I will repeat, however. This will be the grower who does no peddling, consigns all his stock to one wholesaler, keeps him posted as to the progress of his various crops, puts his trust in him, is a good grower, and above all attends to his own business by keeping proper records on all his plants, thereby finding the leaks, and when a plant of any kind is grown at a loss, it will promptly be reduced next season, or be discarded all together. This, my friends, is my description of the favorite. Let us all try and be favorites.

THE RETAILER.

While the last on my list, this is not by far the least, of the three branches of our trade. In fact I consider each as important as the other. To the wholesaler he is a direct customer. To the grower he is an indirect customer, and I want to add here, in most instances a better customer to the grower than his so-called direct customers. The greatest injustice to the retailer is that done by the grower who sells to him at a good wholesale figure, and then under-sells him at retail, whether in the immediate neighborhood or a hundred miles away. A retailer should visit the grower whose stock he uses, frequently, and if possible in company with his wholesaler. Retailers frequently contract with growers direct for stock. It invariably happens that just when stock is very scarce, the retailer has an increased demand, his grower cannot furnish it, then he has to fall back on the wholesaler. If this worthy individual does not give him first choice and all he wants, the retailer gets on his high horse because this robber of a wholesaler was so unjust as to take care of his regular patrons first. Well, now I don't blame the wholesaler for that, do you, Mr. Retailer? Better make up your mind to expect only what is fair. And all of you, grower, wholesaler and retailer, remember we are, and always will be, of mutual benefit to each other only in so far as we are fair to each other, and then only can we expect fair treatment ourselves. So let us co-operate more and more to make our interests mutual.

Greenhouse Construction. ✓

Paper read before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, May 7, by Montague C. Wright of Lord & Burnham Co., and illustrated with lantern slides.

The subject upon which I will speak this evening is such an extensive one that it is impossible in one lecture to touch other than briefly on the various parts and the part each of the various details play in a finished up-to-date greenhouse. Each of these parts, such as the superstructure, ventilation, plant benches, heating, etc., are capable of being considered separately. I can only cover the subject in a general way and trust that the illustrations shown, and what is said in regard to same, may prove interesting. I shall not go into the mathematics and the other various sciences, but simply present in a pictorial way the results that have been obtained and progress made in greenhouse construction during the past fifty years.

FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS.

It is a long step from the cumbersome greenhouse of fifty years ago to the modern cobwebby structure of today. They were generally built against a high wall, the wall being on the north side. This was quite a factor in supplying heat during the night. You know how a piece of masonry will absorb heat when exposed to the warmth of the sun, and how warm it feels for a long time after the sun has ceased to shine upon it. So these high walls absorbed the heat and gave it up to the greenhouse during the night. In those days, the only method of heating was by means of stoves, or a long flue, either of pipe or masonry, extending the entire length of the greenhouse, through which heated air generated by a furnace or flue heater was attempted to be carried. This method of heating was not satisfactory for the reason that unless the flues were frequently gone over and repaired there was always the danger of their giving out, which meant a serious loss of plants damaged by the gases and fumes which would escape into the greenhouse. This arrangement of heating was also unsatisfactory, for that portion of the flue nearest the heater was naturally the hottest and the furthest end the coolest, which made it impossible to secure an even temperature throughout the greenhouse. Later this trouble was overcome to some extent by a hot water heating system arranged by placing a pipe coil inside the heater and connected by mains with heating coils placed at the coolest end of the greenhouse. Finally the flue heater was abandoned entirely and the heating accomplished altogether by a hot water heating apparatus.

Now as to the construction of the superstructure, a heavy wooden sill was placed on top of the front wall. Heavy wooden rafters were placed about three feet apart, extending from the sill to the ridge, and sash glazed with glass only six inches wide were placed in the roof. The top sash were arranged to slide down for ventilation and were operated with a system of ropes and pulleys. The crops raised in houses of this type were far from satisfactory as you can readily realize, as with the amount of wood in their construction and the narrow glass the percentage of light admitted was very small, to say nothing of the cold air admitted through imperfect construction. Later, full span houses were built of similar construction.

Mr. Lord, who was the founder of the Lord & Burnham Company, was a great lover of flowers and also a thorough mechanic. He had a small greenhouse in his yard built similar to the one just described. Mr. Lord became dissatisfied with the results obtained and made up his mind that if horticulture was to make any progress it would be necessary to greatly improve the construction of the greenhouse, so he built himself a house which proved to be so far ahead of anything then built that his services were soon in demand among the local community.

greenhouse, and also furnished a weather-proof construction. Methods of supporting the roof members are today numerous, but they all are simply a means of making the principle stated above stable and lasting. In the early days there was no glass on the sides. Walls of brick or stone

It was not long before the success attained in these new houses spread beyond these narrow limits, and the greenhouse business, as a business by itself, was launched. It has continued from that time to grow until it has reached its present proportions. The outlook for its continued expansion, improvement and stability is very bright indeed.

The principle of the construction adopted and built by Mr. Lord is the same as is universally used today, namely, building the roof as a permanent structure with ventilating sash at the ridge, built continuous or separated by one or more lights of glass between each sash. This method increased the amount of light in the were built and the roof sprung directly from the top of these walls. The inside level of the greenhouse was generally on a lower level than the outside grade. This was done to reduce the surfaces exposed to the outside air as much as possible. Most of the houses were narrow and the plant benches were so close to the glass that it was impossible to grow plants of any size, except on the inner edge of the side plant benches and in the center benches.

The next step forward was to make the roof curved instead of straight. The roof was constructed with two radials. The lower one was about eight-foot radius, the upper forty-five feet. This gave more room for the plants on the outer sides of the side plant beds. The glass was not bent, but short lights were used, and as the radius was large compared to the length of each light, the difficulty was solved the same as in building a curved part to a brick house with ordinary straight brick. With the introduction of hot water and steam as a heating medium, it became possible to increase the width of greenhouses, and houses of twenty feet and twenty-five feet in width became common. This gave room for center plant benches.

Next came the introduction of glass on the sides, increasing the height from the walk level to the gutter line. By doing this, it was possible to build the roof without the curve and still have room on the side benches for medium-sized plants. The masonry wall was cut down to almost grade, and wooden ventilating panels about two feet high placed on the sides below the top of the plant bench. This in a measure is an ideal way of ventilating a house where side ventilation is required, as the cool air from outside has to first pass over and around the heating pipes, which takes the chill from the air.

At that time commercial houses were built with locust posts set about three feet in the ground, four feet above and boarded up to the eaves. As the tendency towards wider houses increased and wood decreased in quality, it became necessary to find some material that would take the place of that then in use. Iron and steel as a building medium was at that time attracting attention, and to this metal attention in the construction of greenhouses was turned. Cast iron sills for capping the masonry walls were therefore substituted for the three-piece wooden sill. Iron rafters were substituted in place of the heavy wooden ones, these iron rafters are capped with wood grooved to fit over the rafters and designed to receive the glass. By covering this portion of the steel frame with wood all trouble from expansion and contraction of metal is avoided. Iron purlins were also substituted instead of wooden ones. The first iron frame greenhouses to be built were those for Jay Gould at Irvington-on-Hudson, New York. Here the cast iron sills, iron rafters and purlins capped with wood were used to support the superstructure. The principle of this construction today is still used on all iron and steel greenhouses. The details may be changed, but the principle of having the iron or steel framework on the inside of the greenhouses, while all members on the outside which receive the glass, of wood, is the same. This construction, after repeated experiments, has proved to be the most durable and suitable to our variable climate and has stood the test well.

IRON FRAME COMMERCIAL GREENHOUSES.

The next important step in the construction of commercial greenhouses was the introduction of what is known as the cast iron foot-piece construction. A post or foot-piece made of cast iron was placed in the ground about thirty inches, and to these steel rafters were bolted. The sides, up to within two feet of the eaves, were built of two thicknesses of boards, with building paper between. This made a cheap and substantial construction. Next, wooden gutters and eaves plates were dropped out and angle iron used in place of the wooden plate. The eaves plate is fully one-third smaller than the wooden one and many times as strong. It strengthened the greenhouse at its vital point. The bars and rafter caps were fastened to this angle iron with a small cast iron fitting. The eaves plate having part of its surface exposed to the inside temperature of the greenhouse conveys the heat to the outside surfaces and to a certain extent prevents the formation of icicles on the outside. Certainly it was and is a great improvement over the wood plate, which was one of the first members in a greenhouse to decay.

Concrete and hollow tile are now being used for the sides instead of double boarding. Where hollow tile is used, it is necessary to plaster the outside and inside surfaces of same with Portland cement mortar. Then, too, the tile have to be cut, and it requires more or less time and ingenuity to use the tile to the best advantage without waste. From observation and tests it seems as if concrete made with clean cinders was the cheapest and best to use. The cinders, being more or less porous, make a concrete full of air cells which accomplishes the same results as the hollow spaces in the tile. One of the largest growers in the vicinity of Philadelphia builds his concrete walls, which are very satisfactory, with a proportion of one part cement to eight parts of cinders. The cinders he uses are nearly of a size. They are small hard cinders. His method of measuring the proportions is by using one bag of cement to four wheelbarrow loads of cinders. As I have said, this method is very satisfactory and is considered even better than stone for the sides of greenhouses because it is more porous and a better non-conductor. If stone and sand are used instead of cinders the following proportions are recommended: One part Portland cement.

During all this time the distance between the rafters has steadily increased, the wood members made smaller and the width of the glass increased. From glass six inches wide to twenty-four inches is the history, although for many reasons of economy glass sixteen inches wide has been, and is generally used. There is no perceptible difference in the amount of light in a house glazed with 16-inch and 24-inch wide glass, and the majority of the leading growers claim the growing qualities are approximately the same. Most people prefer the 16-inch as it costs less to replace a broken light, and also a tighter roof can be made with this width glass. If you examine the edge of a light of glass you will notice that the glass is wavy and not perfectly straight, so that when two lights of glass are lapped you will find that there is a certain amount of open space between the lights of glass. The wider the glass the more uneven it is.

With the light construction now used, I do not believe it makes any difference, in cases where a greenhouse is used for growing a general assortment of plants, whether a house is built facing south, east or west, providing there are no trees, hills or other objects to shade the house. The topographical conditions of the site play an important part in the location. As these usually vary in each case, each case requires individual consideration. Of course where growers desire a greenhouse for raising roses or carnations, etc., as a speciality, three parts good sharp sand and six parts of crushed stone or clean gravel. This is a very satisfactory mixture and makes good strong work. The walls need only be four inches thick and when a light cast iron sill is placed on top of same, you have a construction which is practically indestructible, and as the upkeep is small this form of construction is the cheapest in the end.

more consideration and attention is given in this direction. More sunlight is obtained by placing the greenhouse east and west, so that the sun at noon time when at its strongest, shines directly between the bars and rafters in the roof. I understand from some of the largest rose growers that it is an advantage to place the house from ten to fifteen degrees north of east in order to get the advantage of the morning sun a trifle earlier, the morning sun being of course more beneficial than the afternoon sun, and it is an advantage to start vegetation as early in the morning as possible.

As the glass has increased in width, so has the width of the houses, so that now houses 30, 40, 50, 55, 60 and 72 feet wide are common. Some have been built over 100 feet in width, but in order to reduce the height of the ridge as much as possible, the roofs are usually designed with a very flat pitch. It is doubtful if houses as wide as this are a success unless built on a sloping ground so that the roof can have sufficient slope to properly shed the water and not have a shower on the inside of the greenhouse as well as on the outside. A pitch of 32 degrees in houses up to thirty feet in width is preferable, and from thirty to fifty feet 28 degrees have been found a good angle for roofs. Twenty-six degrees is satisfactory for houses fifty feet wide and over.

Now as to supports: Thirty-foot wide houses require no columns; 35-foot require two columns; 40-foot require two columns; 55-foot require four columns; 60-foot require four columns; 70-foot require six columns. Houses seventy or seventy-two feet wide require only four rows of columns if they are used in combination with compression trusses. There are some greenhouses constructed today in which the principle of construction is to truss the roofs, thus eliminating columns to a great extent. This would be more satisfactory if the trusses were constructed on a compression basis, but they are constructed to a large extent on a tension basis, and depend upon all members being constantly in tune, as it were. Now there is considerable vibration in a greenhouse roof and the constant movement is bound to stretch the light rods, etc., which are used in this construction. As soon as one member loses its tune it puts all the others out also, and I believe that a greenhouse constructed on this principle will deteriorate more rapidly than one supported by columns or with a combination of columns and compression trusses. Time will tell, but if you compare two houses of the same age I am sure that the house constructed on the compression principle will be in better shape than the one constructed on the tension principle.

SEMI-IRON OR PIPE FRAME CONSTRUCTION.

We have been considering what is known as the iron-frame construction. There is another type known as the pipe frame or semi-iron construction. The difference between the two is not very great, the difference being that the steel rafters are omitted in the semi-iron construction and the roof bars, etc., are supported by longitudinal purlins made of pipe or angle iron. I believe pipe is preferable for the reason that it casts the least amount of shade. These purlins are in turn supported by pipe columns. The painting and glazing in this construction are the same as in the houses where iron rafters are used. There is a slight saving in the cost of this house as the steel used is less, and the parts require less mill work. The width of the houses has been carefully calculated to use stock lengths of lumber and glass so as to minimize the amount of waste. Wider houses can successfully be built of this construction, although I would not advocate building a house of semi-iron or pipe frame construction much over forty-three feet in width. Where the house is too wide for common stock lengths the bars can be spliced to make a rigid and tight joint and are as substantial as using a one-piece bar of long length. Beyond twenty feet the lumber obtained for bars is not as good quality as that obtained in twenty-foot lengths or less, and by using a splice plate the better stock can be used at less expense. A cast iron gutter is used between houses when it is desired to run two houses parallel and connected together. This has drip gutters cast in the sides, and a greater part of the surface of the gutter is exposed to the inside temperature of the greenhouse, thus insuring a free gutter under all conditions of weather.

IRON FRAME PRIVATE GREENHOUSES.

We have considered the two best types of commercial construction, and called the curved eaves design. The principle of construction in this design is the same as in the straight and curved roof houses, the variation being in omitting the cast iron gutter at the eaves line, thus allowing the bars and glass in the roof being carried down to the top of a combination cast iron sill and gutter, which rests on the masonry walls. This type of house presents a very pleasing appearance, and snow and ice do not accumulate on the roof as readily as when a gutter is used at the eaves. There is very little breakage of the curved glass at the eaves and the cost of a curved now we will take up the construction of greenhouses built on masonry walls. This is what is known as cast iron sill and gutter construction, and is generally built on private estates. The sills, gutters, rafters and purlins being iron makes a construction that is practically indestructible. The cast iron gutter forms part of the framework as well as a waterway, and is an important structural feature. These gutters are cast in lengths extending from rafter to rafter, to which they are secured with cast iron brackets, which also serve to form the joints between the various lengths of gutters. The gutters are so constructed that they serve as a support for the sash bars in roof, and for the sash, etc., at the sides. A house with a curved roof makes a practical greenhouse, and flowers can be grown in such a house just as well as in greenhouses having straight roofs. The appearance of a curved roof is very attractive and for this reason is preferred by some people, but of course the cost of same is more than the cost of a straight-roof house, as all members, including the glass, have to be bent to fit the curve of the roof. Another design of iron frame greenhouses which has of late been used considerably is what is light costs but little more than a straight light.

METHOD OF GLAZING.

We have considered glass of various widths. Now as to the quality and method of setting same. Double thick, quality "A" glass is used almost exclusively in all houses except in vegetable houses. "B" glass is used quite extensively in commercial houses used for growing vegetables. There is no doubt that "B" glass is improving in quality and if closely inspected and the poorest lights rejected, serves very well in a great many cases. The glass in the roofs is laid with lapped joints, each lap being about one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch. In glazing curved roofs, the glass is bent to the proper radius. In glazing sashes and doors, large lights are used of sufficient size so that one light of glass will fill in the space between each division of the sash and doors. Great care must be exercised in the selection of the putty used. All first-class greenhouse builders manufacture their own putty. Putty should be made of pure kiln-dried whiting and strictly unadulterated linseed oil. In setting the glass the putty is rolled out into long pieces and laid on the shoulder of the glazing bars. The glass is then forced or bedded into place, which pushes a portion of the putty up, filling in the small space between the edge of the glass and the sides of the bars. When painted, a tight roof is secured, and the weather and water does not affect same as it would if the roof were glazed in the manner common to glazing sash.

PLANT BENCHES.

Several forms of plant benches are used. First is a bench constructed entirely of wood. The supports are placed about every four feet apart and are constructed of two-by-four-inch lumber. The bottoms and sides are one and one-eighth inches thick. The bottom boards are placed with a ½-inch space between same, which is done to allow proper drainage, and the sides are braced with wrought iron braces. The usual depth of plant beds is six inches. In some benches the upright legs are constructed of pipe. Holes are bored into the wood crosspieces and into which the pipe legs are fitted. This arrangement closes the opening in the pipe at the top and prevents the water from getting inside and corroding the pipe. It is a very simple arrangement and costs but little more, if any, than the all-wood bench. I know of a number of florists who have used second-hand pipe for the purpose which was considerably cheaper than wooden legs. Galvanized iron pipe frame, cypress sides and bottoms, makes a very durable plant bench. The plant bench constructed with galvanized steel frames with cast iron bottoms and sides is the most durable plant bench made. The cast iron bottoms have holes, allowing proper drainage. A special tile may be substituted for the cast iron bottoms, and is preferred by some to the cast iron bottoms. The tile absorbs a certain amount of moisture, thus insuring a bed that will not dry out too rapidly. The use of solid plant beds in commercial greenhouses is rapidly taking the place of raised plant benches. Many growers plant directly in the ground, plowing the ground and working the crop the same as out of doors. Where beds are used they are not usually built over 12 inches above the grade and the soil confined with planks or light concrete walls.

VENTILATION.

For ordinary use, two lines of ventilating sash are sufficient for houses up to 25 or 30 feet in width. These are generally placed one line on each side of the roof at the ridge. Sometimes one line at the ridge on one side of the roof and on one vertical side below the eave line. Carnation growers and some rose growers use four lines—one line on each side of the roof at the ridge and one line on each vertical side of the greenhouse. Houses used for growing fruit and vegetables require four lines. The amount of ventilation necessary depends a great deal on the location of the greenhouse, also on the variety of plants or blooms grown (some plants require more ventilation than others), the size of the greenhouse and on the opinion of the owner. It has been pretty well established, however, that two lines of ventilation are necessary and at least one of them must be placed in the roof at the ridge. Where the houses are built with curved eaves, the ventilators are placed in the walls below the glass.

There are numerous types of ventilating machines on the market, but they are all constructed on about the same principle, namely, a continuous shaft of pipe or steel rod, to which are attached arms and rods, which in turn are fastened to the sash. A gear of the self-locking design and operated by hand power is arranged to turn the shaft, which communicates its power to the arms and rods, causing the sash to open and close.

CYPRESS AND PAINTING.

All iron and wood members entering into the construction of the superstructure of a greenhouse should have three coats of paint. If possible, the first coat should be applied before the material leaves the factory, as it is then protected from the weather. After the framework is erected and before the glass is set, it should be given another coat. After the glass is set the last or finishing coat should be applied. This last coat should be somewhat thicker than the first two. Great care is and should be taken to use only pure white lead and pure linseed oil. Some zinc is added to the paint. In painting the iron work a paint especially adapted to metals should be applied for the first coat.

Clear, air-dried, cypress has proven to be the most satisfactory wood to use in greenhouse construction. It has many advantages, namely, its durability, lightness and capabilities of being easily worked.

GREENHOUSE HEATING.

The heating of a greenhouse is certainly one of the most important features. It is here that one shovels his dollars into the furnace. Too much attention cannot be given to the installation and management of the heating system. At the present time there are two mediums employed—steam and hot water. Both have advantages, but I believe it is pretty well established that heating by hot one, or 3½-inch pipes for a system heating a small range of glass. The pipes are placed along the sides of the house, hung to the side walls or under side benches. This of course depends entirely on the arrangement of the plant benches or beds. There should always be some pipe laid through the center of the house. The number of pipes required, of course, depends entirely on the temperature required, the amount of glass surface, the extreme average outside temperature of the locality in winter, the exposed or protected situations of the greenhouse, the good or bad construction of the greenhouse itself and many other small details which are used in designing a successful and economical heating system.

If steam is used, it should be a low pressure system, as the wear and tear on the pipes should high pressure be used would be great, to say nothing of the too-intense heat generated. The boilers may be set in a cellar the level of which is considerably below the level of the greenhouse, in such cases the condensed water being returned to the boilers by gravity. If the boilers are placed on the same level as the greenhouse a pump of some kind must be used to return the condensation. It is the same with hot water. In a hot water system there are two ways employed in generating the heat. The first and one most used is to heat the water directly in a boiler and circulate same through the pipes in the greenhouse; the other is to heat the water in tanks, using exhaust or live steam water produces the best results. Hot water produces a condition more like the heat generated by the sun. Steam gives a more intense heat. While steam has proved very satisfactory, it is a fact that the large florists are more and more reverting to hot water as a heating medium. If steam is used the best results are obtained from 1¼-inch pipes, and if hot water 2-inch pipes if the system is a large to heat the water. In the latter case, the steam passes through a coil in an enclosed tank, the water surrounding the coil. The steam in the coil imparts its heat to the water, which in turn leaves the tank, circulates through the pipes, returning to the tank to be again heated.

There are two other methods used to circulate the water other than by the gravity method. One is to have an accelerator connected to the mains. This device is simply a propeller turned by an engine of some kind. The propeller hastens the speed at which the water circulates, helps it over many declivities and returns it at a higher temperature to the boiler. The other method is what is known as forced circulation. This method requires the services of a pump of some kind. The water is heated and then forced by the pump through the pipes in the greenhouse and back to the boiler. The pump may be operated by steam, electricity or gasoline. The old-fashioned plunge steam pump is, I believe, the most reliable, but pumps driven by the other methods that I have mentioned have proved satisfactory. There are several advantages of heating by forced circulation and I believe it is the method which will be used in all large plants in the future. In the first place the size of the pipe used for the mains and heating coils can be smaller than in a gravity system. The water returns to the boiler at a higher temperature, thereby making it possible to heat a house more evenly.

In small and medium-sized plants, boilers constructed of cast iron are used almost exclusively. A cast iron boiler has many advantages over a steel tubular boiler. In the first place, cast iron is not so susceptible to the chemicals contained in water; it does not deteriorate with rust so readily and does not require to be bricked in, being made in sections it is easily set up or taken down. The flues are large, consequently do not get choked up as readily as in a tubular boiler, the flues are also easier of access in cleaning. A cast iron boiler, when properly made and rated will carry a fire throughout the night without attention, while a tubular boiler requires, to get good results, night firing. By using two cast iron boilers and connecting them together one boiler may be used in mild weather, thus reducing the cost of operation, while in a tubular boiler it is necessary to use the entire boiler. If the greenhouse plant is a large one, say containing over 35,000 square feet of glass, tubular boilers are without doubt the most practical for many reasons. Forced draft, allowing small-size coal to be used, has been successfully introduced in many large plants. This of course requires power to operate the blower, pumps, etc., but the saving in being able to use a cheap grade of coal more than offsets the cost and operation of the machinery.

I am sorry that I have not more time at my disposal to go into the subject of heating more fully. It is one that is full of pitfalls, even to the initiated. What I have said outlines the general principles. The ratio of determining the number of pipes to the glass surface, capacity of boiler required, the distribution of and grading of pipes, size of mains, etc., should really be left to a reputable greenhouse concern or a heating engineer. Some growers, especially the new beginners, consider the superstructure the all-important question and the heating but a minor consideration. If they would only realize that one is just as important as the other there would be fewer unsatisfactory heating systems designed and installed; their bank account at the end of the season would be considerably larger from the saving of labor and coal, and the larger returns obtained from the sale of their more perfect stock or blooms.

You can realize from what I have said this evening the details and knowledge required to build an up-to-date greenhouse. There are a thousand and one details that it has taken years to evolve and perfect, a lot of knowledge that can only be gained by experience is brought into play in the solving of most every problem. In spite of the great advance made in greenhouse construction we are still continually striving to improve and bring to higher perfection and utility the various parts of the construction.

In closing I wish to say it is necessary for firms making a specialty of greenhouse building to join hands with the growers—to keep in close touch with each other and to push and pull together. It is to our mutual benefit to do so because each business is a separate specialty; you are experts in your business, we in ours. As horticulture and floriculture advance, and Cement Construction.

The use of cement or concrete in the construction of buildings has been universally adopted in the last few years, and great advancement has been made in its adaptability for parts of construction in place of wood that were unthought of 20 years ago. Many greenhouse proprietors have experimented of their houses, and Charles F. Newell of West Newbury, Mass., is one who has been successful in moulding cement in different forms. He says, "In commercial greenhouses I think that iron or steel gutters are the mented with concrete in the different competition grows keener and keener, you must change your growing methods to meet them. Greenhouses must be designed and built to suit such methods. Therefore, new details and special features in the construction of your greenhouses must consequently be evolved. This means that the growers and greenhouse builders must work closely together. Only by open-handed co-operation can a greenhouse construction giving the highest possible growing conditions be obtained. To the greenhouse builder this means a more nearly perfect greenhouse and consequently larger sales and increased business. To you it means better stock, larger sales and better returns on your investment, and that is what we are all after. Co-operation, then, is the vital thing.

best and to be preferred and cement used for other parts of the construction. There is a limit to the use of cement and its use may be carried too far. I have seen walls, gutters, plate, sills, sash bars and purlins all made of reinforced cement, but the result was a dark house with too much shade. The best construction to my mind is to have cement sides and ends up to the glass with sills and plate of cypress in the under side of which is a rabbet to form a good joint with the cement wall and fasten the plate and sill to long bolts inserted in the cement with plates and nuts to fasten the sill down, then cypress sash bars and an iron gutter.

"A cement gutter to be strong enough to stand the necessary strain, even if reinforced, will cast much more shade than an iron gutter and taking cost and everything else in consideration, I do not see where a cement gutter would be of any advantage unless it might be with the two outside gutters on a range of houses where shade would not be objectionable.

"I can recommend cement construction for benches, posts, walls and walks and they cannot be excelled with any other material, but I would not recommend it for gutters, plates or sills. I am building a propagating house and am making benches, walks and piers to hold the pipe of cement, and cement blocks for the propagating bench, for they hold the heat, but am using 1½-inch pipe and 1¼-inch pipe frame, with plate, sill and sash bars of cypress. The southern wall is three feet of cement and three feet of glass with no gutter above the glass, the only gutter being on top of the cement wall with which water is carried to the boiler well."

Important Patent Decision.

In a recent decision handed down by the judges of the U. S. Circuit Court, the court of last resort in patent cases—the Burnham patent No. 583247 was sustained. This decision sustains Lord & Burnham Company's right to the exclusive use in greenhouses of their galvanized ice clearing eave plate which has so long been one of the features of their construction. This decision applies alike to the regular angle plate, the Z-Bar plate, or any modification of the original plate now licensed to be used by the Lord & Burnham Co. Such a decision, it is said, not only affects any manufacturer using the plate for greenhouses, but renders liable the owners of such greenhouses, as well.

Chicago Florists' Club.

At the regular meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club, held at the Union Restaurant May 2, President Foley announced his Committee of Convention Ways and Means and now issues his communication, with some additional names, as appended herewith:

PRESIDENT FOLEY'S COMMITTEE.

To the Members of the Chicago Florists' Club:

Gentlemen—While some of our members have shown impatience at the delay in naming committees, I have been convinced that it was better to make haste slowly in the matter of selecting them, and in view of the fact that I was elected on a platform which had for its basic foundation the cementing together of all trade interests and the elimination of any semblance of favoritism, it is with pleasure I present the Committee of Ways and Means, to handle the approaching S. A. F. convention matters, which committee I have endeavored to make so broad and far-reaching that no branch of our trade in any of its ramifications shall be omitted, reserving, with your kind permission, the privilege of adding any good name which I may have overlooked. Making a Garden.

'Tis time to go with spade and hoe
Into the yard to toil.
The shattered sash and other trash
Helps fertilize the soil.

The broken glass which we amass
Ere Springtime makes its bow
Will come in fine, as I opine,
For good top dressing now.

OBITUARY.

John F. Wilcox.

After a determined fight for ten days, during the greater part of which time his life hung in the balance, John F. Wilcox, head of the firm of J. F. Wilcox & Sons of Council Bluffs, Ia., one of the largest greenhouse concerns of the country, died at his home, Friday, May 10, aged 48 years. Mr. Wilcox had just started the erection of two large greenhouses 60x1,000 feet each, and ten days before his death spent part of the day assisting the work in his energetic manner. He later drove home in his automobile, still perspiring from his labors, took a severe cold and was seized with a chill. The next day he was considerably better but pleurisy developed, followed by pneumonia, and notwithstanding the best of medical skill and his wonderful vitality, he gradually grew worse and passed away.

Mr. Wilcox was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, February 3, 1864, his parents later moving to Wahoo, Neb. When he was sixteen years of age he obtained employment with L. A. Casper, a large vegetable grower, of Council Bluffs, Ia., and showed such ability that two years later was made foreman, and at the age of twenty-one was admitted into partnership in the vegetable business, Mr. Casper having also embarked in the flower business. In 1885 he married Miss Young, a niece of Mrs. Casper, at Atlantic, Ia. Four years later he purchased his partner's interest in the vegetable department and later bought the floral business. He immediately began enlarging the plant until it was one of the largest, if not the largest, west of the Mississippi river. By close application to his business which he always gave his personal attention, he built up an immense trade, shipping his product all through the western part of the country as far as the Pacific coast. He joined the Society of American Florists in the early nineties, which membership he has always maintained, being a frequent attendant at the conventions. In addition to his flower business he owned a great amount of property in his home city and also large tracts of land in Canada. He was a zealous member of the Council Bluffs Commercial Club and one of the executive committee. He also belonged to the Elks, the Eagles and the Masons.

He is survived by the widow and five sons, Roy Franklin, aged 25; Blaine Casper, 20; Glen Max, 16; John Franklin Jr., 9; and Donald Howard 6 years, two sons and a daughter having died. The funeral was held at the family home Sunday afternoon, May 12, and was one of the largest ever held in Council Bluffs, both at the home and at the cemetery. Never before has such profound sorrow been expressed by all classes of people. The large lawns surrounding the home were filled with friends anxious to view the body for the last time. Great crowds gathered at the cemetery to view the interment. The floral offerings were numerous, and elaborate tributes were forwarded from members of the trade in different parts of the country, among which were a massive cross of Richmond roses with base of lilies and chain of lily of the valley from the employes of J. F. Wilcox & Sons, and other offerings from E. H. Hunt, Chicago; Miss Rennison, Sioux City, Ia.; Ernst Weinhoeber, daughter and William, Chicago; T. E. Waters, Chicago; J. B. Deamud, Chicago; J. C. Vaughan, Chicago; Carl Cropp, Chicago; Mrs. L. J. Stuppy and Sons., St. Joseph, Mo.; Miss H. B. Witted, Minneapolis, Minn.; J. G. Taylor and Mrs. Taylor, Minneapolls, Minn.; John Adolph and August Pochlmann, Chicago; E. B. Washburn, and Mrs. Washburn, Chicago; C. L. Washburn, Chicago; and John and Mrs. Bath, S. J. and Mrs. Hess, Mr. and Mrs. Swoboda, George and Mrs. Suris, L. M. and Mrs. Rovatzas, and Miss Riba McNamara of Omaha. The interment was at Walnut Hill cemetery, where services were held under the auspices of the Masonic order.

TRIBUTE OF C. L. WASHBURN.

The untimely death of J. F. Wilcox of Council Bluffs, Ia., was a severe shock to his friends in the floral trade as few of us knew that he was at all ill. There was probably no man in the trade who had more friends than he, for to know him was to be a friend. His genial and kindly disposition sprang from a warm and tender heart. He always spoke a pleasant word to everyone and when visiting a fellow florist's greenhouses always found something favorable to comment on.

The Late J. F. Wilcox.

His criticisms were just but spoken in a kindly way. To those of his friends who knew him best his dominant characteristics were his kind heartedness, his charitable and lovable nature and his absolute integrity. His business methods throughout raised the standard of the florist trade to a higher plane. We all have lost a tried and true friend and words cannot do him justice.

CHARLES L. WASHBURN.

William F. Wagner.

William F. Wagner, a florist of Cooperstown, N. Y., died April 29, after an illness of several months, aged 57 years. He was born in Utica, N. Y., and established a florist business in Cooperstown fifteen years ago and erected a greenhouse which he has conducted ever since. He was a member of the Masons who conducted the funeral services, May 1.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The residence of William J. Barnes, Jr., was destroyed by fire April 28, probably caused by defective wiring. The family were not at home when the fire started.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Emile Bounot and wife sailed on the Lusitania, May 8, for England. They will visit the International Exhibition to be held at London and will then tour the continent.

New York Florists' Club.

An enthusiastic meeting of the New York Florists' Club with 70 members present was held May 13. Secretary Young read the resolutions prepared on the death of our late fellow member, Herman Maeyer.

Philip Kessler, chairman of the Outing committee, reported that the steamer Isabel had been engaged for July 2, and the place was Wetzel's Point Grove. Mr. Kessler also stated the committee was pleased with the way the members were offering prizes for the usual events.

A. C. Saylor, Herman Warendorff, Charles Smeig, George C. Siebrecht, Walter R. Siebrecht, J. H. Reock were nominated for membership. George Pearce, Paul A. Rigo, Peter Duff, J. A. Muller, Andrew C. Scott, Samuel Redstone, Edward A. Manda, August Gunge, were elected members of the club, Frank Traendly, chairman of the local governing board of the National Flower Show committee, reported that everything was progressing very favorably in the National Flower Show matters.

The following committees were appointed: W. F. Sheridan, Frank H. Traendly and John Young to draw up resolutions on the death of Mrs. W. F. Kasting; John Young, A. J. Rickards, W. E. Marshall to prepare resolutions on the death of Mrs. Wm. Eccles; Philip Kessler, J. A. Shaw, W. C. Rickards to prepare resolutions on the death of Peter MacDonald; Frank H. Traendly, W. F. Sheridan, Chas. B. Weathered, Anton Schultheis, Jr., Arthur Bucholz, Transportation committee, to make all arrangements for the trip to the convention in Chicago.

The committee on awards reported: Chrysanthemum, Glory of Seven Oaks, exhibited by John Lewis Childs, honorable mention. Collection of Diplacus Grandiflorum and Felicia, thanks of the club. Vase of Calla Devonensis and small plant of the same in pot, honorable mention.

Philip Mindel was the speaker of the evening and read a thoughtful, interesting paper supposed to have been written in 1925 on "What Happened to Flowers in 1913." Mr. Mindel received the standing vote of thanks of the club. This address seemed to wake up many of the members present, and Patrick O'Mara, Harry A. Bunyard, Wallace R. Pierson, W. E. Marshall all gave their views on the subject.

The club went on record in passing a resolution appointing a delegation to go to the convention in Chicago to endeavor to secure an appropriation for general publicity to boom the florists' business in the United States. It was understood that the larger part of this money would have to come through private subscription. William H. Duckham made an eloquent appeal for the National Flower Show, giving a full account of what had been done and promising an exhibition in April, 1913, that would overshadow any exhibition of plants or flowers ever held in this country or anywhere else.

Wallace R. Pierson, H. A. Bunyard, W. E. Marshall, J. H. Pepper, M. C. Ebel is the committee to take up the matter of "Publicity" and to endeavor to get an appropriation from the S. A. F. at the convention in Chicago. The committee will get together and organize at once so that at the time of the convention they will have some concrete plan to offer to the convention on this important matter.

Five plants of each variety of the bedding type and two each of the climbing type constitute an exhibit. The American Rose Society will judge the exhibits and a gold and silver medal award is open to undisseeded varieties. Certificates of merit will also be awarded to new roses of merit which have not been on the market over three years. Exhibits should be shipped to Department of Parks, G. A. Parker, Supt., Hartford, Conn.

ALEX. CUMMING, JR.

Superintendent Irish Resigns.

Henry C. Irish, superintendent of the Missouri Botanical Garden for the last ten years has resigned that position and will enter business, probably landscape gardening. Mr. Irish was graduated from the Iowa State College and was given the degree of Master of Science in 1897. He began his work at the Missouri Botanical Garden in 1894, has become an authority on gardening, and is one of the founders of the gardening system established in connection with the public schools. He was one of the organizers of the St. Louis Horticultural Society and has served as president of the Engelmann Botanical Society and St. Louis Florists' Club, and is a member of the Tree-Planting committee of the Civic League.

Appeal to Sweet Pea Growers.

There is no one flower which appeals both to the gardener and amateur as the sweet pea. Of recent years considerable difficulty has been experienced in raising this beautiful flower. In fact the last season has witnessed complete failures of the sweet pea in several localities and especially in the state of Delaware. Realizing this, extensive investigations of the diseases of the sweet pea were undertaken at the Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station. The co-operation is asked of all those who are interested in the results of these investigations. Correspondence with growers or amateurs who have experienced difficulty in raising the sweet pea will be welcomed. It is especially desirous that all who are interested should forward diseased specimens. The Department of Plant Pathology in making a plant disease survey of Delaware, in co-operation with the Bureau of Plant Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, has the franking privilege on diseased plant material. The franks will be sent to those who ask for them and this will entitle them to send four pounds, or less, of diseased material by mail without postage. All communications should be addressed to Department of Plant Pathology, Agricultural Experiment Station, Newark, Delaware.

Investigation of Gladiolus Diseases.

Certain obscure diseases of the corms of gladiolus in storage have occasioned considerable loss in the past and are apparently on the increase. Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., has interested the plant disease experts at Cornell University in this trouble and H. H. Whetzel, professor of plant pathology at Cornell, together with Dr. E. Wallace, his assistant, have made an extended study of one of these diseases in the laboratories at Ithaca. The cause of the disease has been found to be a fungus, a vegetable growth which lives as a parasite in the tissues of the corm and slowly reduces it to a black, hard worthless mass. Now, that the cause of the disease has been ascertained, the experts claim that there are hopes of devising a method of killing the parasite without injuring the gladiolus corms.

As the investigation progressed, it became apparent that the problem was a much bigger one than at first appeared. A special appropriation was made by the state legislature of 1911 for the specific purpose of financing and furthering this investigation which it appears was previously financed by Mr. Cowee, himself. We learn that the legislature of 1912 has again appropriated an increased fund for continuing the work, the funds to become available October 1, next.

It appears that considerable work has been done during the winter at Cornell. Today Dr. Donald Reddick and L. M. Massey, both of the pathological department of the Agricultural College at Cornell, are in Berlin inspecting the methods of preparing and planting the corms. Dr. Reddick has charge of the investigations in plant diseases and is now directing the field work of fifteen or eighteen young men who are investigating the diseases of various plants. Mr. Massey has been employed to do the gladiolus disease work and has brought with him a full laboratory equipment for the most careful study of these diseases. He plans to remain at Berlin for an indefinite period in order to couple up extended field observations and experiments with his laboratory work. Mr. Cowee has turned over his studio to Mr. Massey and this is to be converted into a laboratory. Field tests are being made and Mr. Massey cautiously expressed a hope that material progress might be made during the coming summer. Mr. Cowee's studio, equipped with dark room, electric light from power developed upon his farm, and other advantageous facilities such as excellent soil, etc., prompted the establishment of the station here. Mr. Cowee also is the New York state committee of the American Gladiolus Society on gladiolus diseases. Any grower having affected corms should ship samples without delay via mail or express prepaid addressed to L. M. Massey, Supt. Field Experiment Station, Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y.

FINE PLANTING WEATHER.

Business is good for this season of the year. As a matter to be expected, there is a surplus of stock and it is surprising that sales are as good as they are. The early varieties of peonies are now coming in and in another week we may expect a fair supply. The weather is warm and showery and very favorable for the growth of young carnations and other stock planted outdoors. There is considerable decorative work for weddings, small dinners and teas being done.

COMMERCIALIZING FILIAL AFFECTION.

We have before us a half-page advertisement which on May 11 appeared in the Washington Herald. It is signed by two wholesale concerns and four retailers who are satellites of said wholesalers. They are careful to state that the advertisement is paid for. We quote a paragraph: "The purpose of this announcement is to properly bring 'Mothers' day' to the attention of the public and to increase the popularity of this beautiful idea." That is very good reading. The sequel and the next stage in this grand game of increasing "the popularity of this beautiful idea" was worthy of the antediluvian ancestors of the more or less esteemed signers of this proclamation. They put the wholesale price of white carnations up to four, five, six and eight cents, put it up to the highest figure they thought the public would stand, in order to educate them in the use of flowers. Ten cents each, retail, was asked for carnations and $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00 by the dozen. Nobody need hereafter wonder what most of the fools are doing. The answer is easy. They are going into the wholesale florist business. At a time when flowers were scarce there might have been some justification for such proceedings, but there was none on this occasion. It is doubtless a fact that the excellent lady who originated Mothers' day was prompted by the purest motives, and she is worthy of all praise. It would have been a graceful act for the florists to have made prices so low that the day would in fact have been popularized. A. F. F.

A GREAT MOTHER'S DAY TRADE.

Although Mothers' day was one of the stormiest days of the year, the rain falling in sheets and the wind blowing a hurricane that kept everybody except the most venturesome and those having necessary business indoors, which greatly curtailed the business of the retailers, yet Friday and Saturday were as busy days as the days preceding Christmas and Easter with the wholesale houses. Shipments were going in all directions on both days and one of the expressmen stated that there were a larger number of shipments on Saturday than on the day before Easter. Orders were received and forwarded in every direction, east, west, north and south, some exceptionally large shipments being made to eastern cities. There was a large supply of carnations and roses received but they were forwarded as fast as the orders could be laid out and packed and on Saturday noon there was not a white carnation left and very few colored ones to be had, Enchantress being the only variety in any over-supply. One of the dealers stated that it looked as if this favorite was being overdone. White roses also sold up well. It was a sad disappointment to the retailers to have such an inclement day on Sunday, but they all did an immense business on Saturday and the stock was pretty well sold up the night before. The transient trade of Sunday was of course lost, and this would have no doubt amounted to a large sum. The stock this week has been coming in in great quantities, the shipments of roses being very large. American Beauty is in great supply of all grades, some elegant long-stemmed stock being received in every shipment and plenty of the shorter grades. Killarney is also in large supply and some of the stock is of splendid quality; there not having been warm weather enough yet to affect the quality, and the color is still grand. White Killarney seems to show the approaching summer more than the pink variety, some of the blooms being a little off color, still there is plenty of elegant stock. My Maryland and Mrs. Jardine are growing better each day and some splendid stock is being received. Richmond is in good supply but the buds are not so long as they were earlier in the season. Mrs. Aaron Ward, Melody and Prince de Bulgarie are featured in the window displays. Carnations came in Monday in good supply and there was a fair demand. Peonies are received in large quantities and the assortment of varieties increases every day. To the white and red offered last week have been added the early pink varieties. Spanish iris is in great quantities and they are freely shown in all colors. Tulips and narcissus are to be had in plenty. There is a very large supply of antirrhinum, especially the pink, and it is lavishly shown in the retailers' windows. Poeticus narcissus is also received in large shipments. Sweet peas are plentiful and the beautiful Spencer varieties are to be had in good quantity and of excellent quality. Mignonette is still in good supply but the blooms are not so large or the stems so long on much of this stock. Marguerites are being used in good quantities, baskets of these flowers being shown by some dealers. Gladiolus is now coming in larger supply. There is plenty of Colvillei varieties, both Bride and Blushing Bride, and some fine blooms of Mrs. Francis King and Augusta. Orchids are plentiful enough to fill the demand, and gardenias are much cheaper. Lupines, pansies, calendula and stocks can be procured at all times. Lilacs are to be seen everywhere. Greens are not in great supply; hardy ferns are still at high prices, smilax is short and there is no great quantity of asparagus, but adiantum is plentiful enough to fill all requests.

NOTES.

Work on the new West Side park will be begun at once. The commission has procured the tract of land bounded by Central avenue, Adams street, Austin avenue and the Metropolitan "L" tracks, paying $300,000 for the property. This will fill a long felt want in this section of the west side.

The trade was greatly shocked to hear on Saturday last of the death of J. F. Wilcox of Council Bluffs, Ia. He has been a frequent visitor to this city and was well known and very popular with all those whom he met.

W. J. Keimel is now telling his many friends about the new rose grower which arrived at his home on Monday, April 6. He is a splendid little chap and takes after his daddy.

Art Keenan says that business at his East Sixty-third street store is fully up to the standard and that the season, on the whole, is a very satisfactory one.

The Des Plaines Floral Co. is going to install the Skinner system of watering at their plant this season.

Clifford Pruner, E. H. Hunt's traveling man, started out on another business trip on May 15.

The words "small cases" in Percy Jones' item last week should have been wall cases, and we gladly correct this for fear that we may be doing him an injustice and the reader might think he was going in the supply business on a small scale. This is, however, just to the contrary, for Mr. Van Gelder already has enough stock on hand to fill more than a dozen of the large sized cases that are now in use and he is constantly adding more to his line.

E. E. Pieser, the Peony King, takes great pleasure in showing Kennicott Bros. Co.'s customers what he calls his famous unknown peony which is of a beautiful shell pink color and has a fragrance similar to that of the American Beauty rose. The Peony King is very enthusiastic about his favorite flower and says that the peony is still in its infancy and that it will be for Memorial day what the carnation is for Mothers' day.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are offering a fine lot of peonies of all the seasonable varieties, and the reports from their growers are very encouraging, and from the present outlook the supply for Memorial day will be very large. This firm enjoyed a brisk Mothers' day trade and sold out of white and red carnations at a very early hour.

Chas. W. McKellar is building a balcony in his store and when this is completed, which will be in a few days, he will be in fine shape to take care of his Memorial day trade. His tables are heavily laden with choice stock and fancy peonies of all colors are now daily offerings.

Chas. Klehm will again make his headquarters at Kyle & Foerster's store during the peony season, and he says that as far as his crops are concerned it looks at present as if the Erne & Klingel opened their new wholesale store this week and the proprietors are well pleased with the amount of business that they have already done. They are now receiving a good supply of stock of all kinds and are in fine shape to take care of all orders for Memorial day.

John Kruchten has added a peony grower to his list and is now offering a good supply of several of the leading varieties of this popular Memorial day flower. The gardenias that this house is offering are of fine quality and the supply is fully equal to the demand.

Jack Byers, the Chicago Carnation Co.'s popular young salesman, has returned from a few weeks' stay at Hot Springs, Ark., feeling much improved in health and is again back at work at the old stand.

The J. B. Deamud Co. is again offering a fine grade of Double White narcissus, and the last reports from this firm's growers are to the effect that the crops are in fine condition and that the outlook is bright for a large supply for Memorial day.

The Des Plaines Violet Co. is still shipping a good supply of double violets to the J. B. Deamud Co., and the quality is fine for so late in the season.

The Cook County Florists' Association will hold its next regular monthly meeting at the Union Restaurant (tonight) May 16.

J. W. Morton is now keeping Kyle & Foerster's books, having entered upon his duties Thursday, May 9.

George Collins, formerly with Peter Reinberg, is now with Henry Smith at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Geo. A. Kuhl, of Pekin, left the hospital for home, May 9.

The Chicago Carnation Co. is showing a large quantity of exceptionally fine Mrs. Francis King, Augusta and America gladioli and A. T. Pyfer says that he will have plenty of these flowers with which to supply his customers Memorial day. The carnations are still arriving in large quantities and the quality is of their usual high standard.

Fred Hoerber is serving on the jury this week and is being greatly missed at the store by his firm's many regular customers. Will Hoerber who looks after the greenhouses at Des Plaines is assisting Harry Manheim at the city salesroom during his brother's absence.

Peter Reinberg is supplying his customers with a very fine grade of Mrs. Aaron Ward roses and the cut of American Beauties, especially the long stemmed stock, and Killarney and Richmond roses is very large. The call for carnations for Mothers' day was very good and the large supply of white soon sold out at a very early hour.

Zech & Mann had a fine shipment of magnolias on May 14 that received a great deal of favorable attention from the local buyers.

J. A. Budlong did a fine Mothers' day business and succeeded in cleaning out everything in carnations with the exception of a few Enchantress.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Horn have returned from their honeymoon and are now residing at 1827 Cornelia avenue. Mrs. Horn is a daughter of George Pochlmann and was married a few weeks previous, Reverend Kircher officiating.

C. L. Washburn and E. T. Kurowski and wife attended the funeral of J. F. Wilcox, the well-known florist of Council Bluffs, Ia., which was held in that city last Sunday, May 12.

R. A. Smythe of Benton Harbor, Mich., was in the city on business for a few days this week.

Al Lazaroff formerly with Pochlmann Bros. Co., is now with Peter Reinberg.

Vieter Bros. are filling a large number of orders for plants of all kinds and one of the many orders that was received recently was for 7200 American Beauty plants and another for 5000 Killarney plants. The cut flower orders are also coming in very heavily and the demand for carnations for Mothers' day was so large that the firm was obliged to turn down many good sized orders.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is having a good call for the new roses. Melody, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Prince de Bulgarie and these flowers are becoming more and more popular with the trade every day. Lily of the valley and catleyas of fine quality are leading features at this house this week.

Bassett & Washburn have not yet placed their order for their new greenhouses, but will most likely do so in the very near future, and it is the firm's intention to build as large a plant as they now have at Hinsdale, but only a portion of the range will be erected this year.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is enjoying a fine season and the stock that they are now offering to their customers is of very good quality. A fine lot of geraniums of all the leading varieties is offered at the store and they are meeting with very ready sale.

Arthur Weatherwax, more familiarly known as Sag, was seriously injured on Monday, May 13, in a street car collision and is now under the care of a physician. He was badly cut about the face and body and also had several teeth knocked out.

Sprinkleproof Sam., Wertheimer Bros.' star ribbon and chiffon salesman, is on his way to this city and is expected to arrive here at any moment. Get your umbrellas ready!

The E. F. Winterson Co. is the recipient of some choice stock and will be right on deck again for Memorial day with a full line of seasonable cut flowers and greens.

W. W. Randall is again calling on the A. L. Randall Co.'s out-of-town customers and left this week with a fine line of samples of all kinds.

The special park commission has scheduled a civil service examination for superintendent of parks to be held June 5.

VARIABLE WEATHER.

The weather was warm during the first part of the week but Saturday and Sunday were very cool and windy, which curtailed trade somewhat. The reports of Mothers' day are favorable and prices were reasonable, white carnations selling from two to four cents. Peonies are now in. Sweet peas are growing shorter stemmed and the warm weather does not improve their keeping qualities.

NOTES.

The St. Louis Florists' Club met Thursday, May 9, with 14 members present, Robert J. Windler, in the chair, J. F. Ammann of Edwardsville, Ill., read a very able paper on the relations of grower, retailer and wholesaler. W. J. Pilcher replied for the grower, Otto Sander for the retailer, and Wm. Smith, of Wm. Smith Wholesale Floral Co., for the wholesaler. At the June meeting the value of under and over irrigation will be discussed.

The florists' dance was a great success and was enjoyed by a very select and nice attendance. The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, and refreshments were served. The young men worked hard to make it a success. Frank Windler, P. Paddon, Al Gumz and Fred Alves deserve great credit. They will later give a select steam boat party.

Special sales of sweet peas by Paris Floral Co., Alex Seigel and Grimm & Gorly, two bunches for five cents were made Saturday, May 11. These firms are philanthropists and good to the public, but what does the grower get?

George Waldbart, Metropolitan Floral Co., M. M. Ayres and Mrs. Newmann report a good increase for Mothers' day.

Professor Irish has resigned his position as superintendent at Shaw's Garden, to take effect July 1.

C. A. Kuehn is receiving a fine stock of all varieties of peonies. A fine trade was enjoyed on Mothers' day.

Geo. H. Angermueller did a fine business Mothers' day and had fine orchids, carnations and roses. W. F.

GREAT DEMAND MOTHER'S DAY.

Business last week, with the exception of the wind-up, was dull and for the most part unsatisfactory. There were quantities of flowers of all kinds with the exception of carnations, which were apparently being held back for the last two days. American Beauties are to be had in quantity and are still of very fair quality, although the tendency is to cut them too tight. All the other roses are beginning to show the effects of the advancing season and are quite perceptibly smaller. Carnations are in good shape. Sweet peas are off on account of the cloudy and rainy weather. Snapdragon is fine and can be had in quantity. Peonies are in, coming from Virginia. The quality is good for the first. Nothing local will be seen for perhaps two weeks, the height of the peony season being about Decoration day. Cattleyas and lily of the valley are about up to the demand. Gardenias find favor with the street men so they are too plentiful. Lilac has been a factor the past week, large quantities being used, and this has helped to keep down the price of the inside stock. The demand for Mother's day dominated the market on Friday and Saturday. With many it was white carnations or nothing, and in consequence prices soared. Six to twelve dollars was the price. For $6 the smallest Boston Market and culls of other white sorts were handed out; $8 brought the best Boston Market and others in same grade, while $10 to $12 secured the best white Alma Ward, White Perfection and White Enchantress. Everything in the white carnation line was sold out clean and many more could have been disposed of, out-of-town orders being cut heavily, as the stock was not to be had to fill them. Quite a number of the large buyers sought the New York market, one retail dealer bringing in over 5,000 flowers. First-class Enchantress and Mrs. C. W. Ward could be had for $4 per 100 in quantity, but the public wanted white and would rather pay from 15 to 25 cents a flower for the white than $1 per dozen for other colors. The high price caused much grumbling. Quite a few of the stores would not pay the price, saying they were sold out rather than inflict the high prices on their customers. Others sold from $1 to $1.50 per dozen, handling without profit rather than seem to hold up for a high price. Charles Meehan said he wished he had been away, as there was so much dissatisfaction from some at the increased prices and with others because they could not fill their orders. He said that the supply and demand makes the price when customers were anxious to get the best, and if the supply is limited; values jump; it is impossible to keep them down. We offered splendid flowers of other colors at $4 per 100, but buyers would pay $8 to $12 for the white, showing that they must have thought them worth the money. Now is the time to prepare for the return of this celebration for next year. Let the interested parties, the large growers and commission men in the different parts of the country agree on some plan to help Miss Jarvis in her work of popularizing this custom. She is indignant that such high prices are charged for white carnations by the florists. Whether she could change the emblem to any white flower, or to colored flowers for the living mother is a question. But if the trade would get together and lend a helping hand—a hand that had money in it—and explain the almost impossibility of furnishing enough white carnations should the custom become as universal as Miss Jarvis hopes to make it, she would no doubt co-operate with them so that nearly all flowers would be used.

NOTES.

Bowling has taken a new lease of life on the club alleys, and a game on Monday last between a team of old-timers and another selected from the associate members gave a cheerful atmosphere to the club room that has been sadly missed for a long time. Some very good scores were made, notably that of Adelberger, 221, and Connor, 269—all strikes except a spare for the third frame and the second ball of the last frame. A return match will be bowled between the same teams on Monday night.

SUCCESSFUL ADVERTISING.

Mothers' day developed a surprisingly big business for the florists of this city. In marked contrast with the efforts of the trade to develop business for McKinley day, the results in connection with the former were highly satisfactory, while McKinley day scarcely calls forth a comment in florists' circles. A large share of the credit for the phenomenal trade we enjoyed was due to the efforts of the florists themselves, who, early in the week, began to advertise the approaching event and exploited it with extensive window decorations and cards suggestive of remembering mother with flowers on the day officially set apart for that purpose. The florists, too, caused the mayor to issue a proclamation eulogizing the practice of sending flowers to the dearest one on earth, and with these agencies at work all the week crystallized Saturday into a demand for all kinds of flowers similar to that of Easter, and even though the weather was unfavorable for shopping, being cloudy with occasional showers, nevertheless the florists' stores were sought by thousands. Sunday itself there was rain almost constantly, but still much trade was done. Fortunately the supply of flowers was equal to the demand, with the exception of white carnations, and on these alone were prices advanced, wholesaling at $4 per hundred and retailing uniformly at 10 cents each, or a dollar per dozen.

Rochester, N. Y.

The bright warm weather of the past week has done much to brighten the hearts of the city florists. The market is pretty well cleaned up and there is no oversupply of any one kind of flowers. Prices continue to be about as last report. Growers have been holding back white carnations for Mothers' day for they are in great demand, having fragrance, purity, lasting quality and firmness, symbolic of motherhood. Sweet peas are plentiful and come in very useful for all kinds of work. Pansies are good and used a great deal for corsages. There is an oversupply of outdoor bulbs. Roses are very good on arrival but soon begin to show the brown petals if kept a little time. Yellow, pink and white snapdragons are still in their prime and are sold at very reasonable prices. Carnations begin to show brown outer petals and do not keep well. Some especially good lily of the valley is now seen. Gladioli is being shipped in but is not very good. Mothers' day was observed far more than last year, most of the stores doing a good business. A far better trade could be done Mothers' day if it was advertised in the local papers. Let us remember this next year.

NOTES.

One of the most beautiful exhibits at this season is the magnolia trees in Oxford street. They were at their best on Sunday last. Persons come from distant cities every year to see them. This row of trees in the middle of the street is one of the best displays of magnolias in the world. On each side of the street is a row of Norway maples, which are now in bloom.

Visitors:—S. Green of H. Bayersdorfer & Co. and James F. Smith of Wm. J. Boas & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; M. Adler, the novelty man; W. Reed of Reed & Keller, New York; E. K. Sithens of the Bowen-Dungan Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Henry P. Neun of North street has a fine display of boxwoods, both standards and pyramids, in front of his store, which makes it look very attractive. He had a special on sweet peas for Saturday at 25 cents a bunch.

Over 20,000 tulips are in blossom in Jones park, including some very interesting species received from Europe a year or two ago. Some of these are very expensive and in some cases only 25 of a kind are grown.

Mrs. Edwin P. Wilson will entertain the Lady Florists' Association at her home Tuesday, May 14.

E. R. Fry reports business as very good and is doing a good business in spring plants.

The Park Board planted something like 150,000 bulbs in the various parks of the city. H. J. H.

ECHO OF MOTHER'S DAY.

We often read of a bullish market in Wall Street, and such a condition existed in the carnation market Saturday, May 11. An advance from 60 cents to $1.00 per 100 in January to $8.00 per 100 on that day. Mothers' day was responsible for this boom in the price of white carnations. From the wholesaler's, retailer's and the public's point of view it was robbery, but with the grower it was just getting square for the hard times passed through last winter. Carnations at present are very scarce and the call for white caused the jump in prices. Certainly the public will not stand for it, for they are under the impression that the florists have boosted the prices when there was no need of it, and they do not understand the situation. One dealer ordered 1,000 carnations at a certain reasonable price and 200 were delivered. Of course the person who ordered them of the dealer will make a protest, and the individual orders he had would have to be refused. There will be growling, kicking and general dissatisfaction over the results of the day. It would have been much better had the lady who promoted the day made it broader so that any white flower could have been used. We all make mistakes and this is one. McKinley day is different. The late president was partial to the pink carnation, but the public after a while will be heartily sick of the whims and caprices of picking a certain flower, with the price boosted. The grower will eventually have them left on his hands. The market in other lines of goods is healthy. Little outside work has been done yet. Many of the carnation growers have not started planting. We are still having wet, cold weather, and the matter of working the ground has been a problem. Unless it gets too warm we ought to get a good crop of hay, that commodity at present reaching $30 per ton wholesale.

NOTES.

Welch Bros. report good business on all lines and say the volume of business for Memorial day will be large. Orders are already coming in freely.

The Public Garden is a blaze of color. This is one of the breathing places, and this year for variety of color it maintains its former glory.

John Barr could not root or get cuttings of Pink Delight fast enough for the orders he received.

Wm. Patterson is cutting some excellent tulips, Pride of Harlem. MAC.

Omaha.

J. J. Hess and wife, their son Carl, and daughter Margaret and Miss Swoboda, left May 11, for Europe, their intention being to sail from New York by the S. S. President Grant of the Hamburg-American line, May 18. Mr. Hess and his family will make an extended tour, returning next fall. Miss Swoboda, who has just graduated from high school, will remain abroad a year or more to complete her studies.

John Peterson has the sympathy of the trade in the sudden death of his oldest daughter, who was happily married to a young South Dakota banker last year, and visited her parents here less than two weeks ago. The funeral was held May 12.

MOVING TIME.

From all sides business the past week has been good considering the fact that many are moving, and this city unlike any other has its moving time from May 1 until about May 6. If only leases were made out from the date of occupancy there would not be that cessation of social festivities which should be held in May, when many flowers that are past after the second week are those which are wanted for a special date. Localities of course govern flowers, but lilac is one flower that the local growers have had inside. Now the call is for white lilac and it is gone by inside and the weather is so cold that our outdoor stock is backward. So much for lilac, but tulips, narcissi and daffodils are in, but in what condition? Not any such flower that the florist who is doing an up to date business can sell to his customers. Carnations and roses have been in good supply, the latter being over stocked. While carnations have not been going to waste the enterprising growers held them back for Mothers' day. Mothers' day is one that should be encouraged by the florist not only for business reasons, but for mother. Now from a business point of view if we are to make Mothers' day a popular day, it must be done in a different way from that desired by the lady who inaugurated it. A white carnation for everyone who wanted it for a mother who is dead, would place a prohibitive price on all white carnations and only the few could honor her memory. But if it can be said, wear a white flower for mother dead, and a colored flower for mother if living, not only would the florist be able to supply all the demands, but the man or woman be they blonde or brunette, auburn or otherwise with the dress or suit of any color could wear all the time and must offer some reasonable excuse for the sudden rise in the price of a certain flower. If it is to be a yearly observance, make it a white and colored flower with no restrictions, otherwise we will have to discourage Mothers' day, but the people will always remember mother.

BISON.

Albany, N. Y.

Whittle Bros. have taken over the store at 52 North Pearl street and are about to renovate it completely for a retail business. Marcus T. Reynolds, architect, has prepared plans for a new front which will be unlike anything of the kind at any florist's shop in this section. The entrance will be in the center of the store and flanked by large semicircular windows almost wholly of plate glass. A new ice box was installed within, near the front, a few days ago. Later in the season the interior will be refinished, the ceiling being done in cream color and the side walls in light green burlap. The furniture and fittings will be white and in the rear of the store, elevated by a few steps, will be a conservatory.

R. D.

DANBURY, CONN.—E. E. Mathewson has opened a store at 87 White street, in addition to the one at 63 North street. The new store has been attractively refitted.

NEWARK, N. J.—The sales at Easter averaged about the same as they have the last few years, states H. C. Strobbe & Bro., as did also the prices, and the supply of both plants and cut flowers was adequate. Azaleas, roses, bulbous plants and made-up baskets sold well, but genistas, rhododendrons and lilac went slowly. Cut flowers all sold well, roses, carnations, narcissus and sweet peas being the favorites. The weather was fine and there was more competition, but everybody had a fine trade.

GRAND NOVELTY ORCHID-FLOWERED GLADIOLUS KUNDERDI "GLORY"

has "distinctiveness" stamped all over it; it will not only revolutionize the family of garden Gladiolus but will be one of the most important factors in commercial floriculture. The type is distinctively new. Broad-expanded, wide-open flowers, paired by twos, face all in the same direction, and are carried on straight, stout stalks never less than 3½ ft. in height. From four to eight flowers are open at one time. The form: each petal is exquisitely ruffled and fluted at the edges, such as is only noticeable in Orchids. It gives the flower a refined appearance, and it appeals instantly to the fancier. The color is delicate cream-pink with a neat, attractive crimson stripe in the center of each lower petal. The shade of pink is unknown in Gladiolus. 10 cts. each, $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100, $70.00 per 1000.

LYCORIS SQUAMIGERA, OR AMARYLLIS HALLII.

(The Magic Lily of Japan.)

A perfectly hardy Amaryllis, producing beautiful pink flowers. One of the hardy Amaryllis never widely introduced and almost lost to floriculture.

Lycoris squamigera produces in early Spring foliage which grows until July, when it ripens off and disappears, and one not familiar with its habits would think the bulb had died, but about a month later, as if by magic, the flower-stalks spring from the ground to a height of 2 or 3 feet, developing an umbel of large and beautiful lily-shaped flowers 3 to 4 inches across and from eight to twelve in number, of a delicate lilac-pink.

As the bulb is perfectly hardy without any protection, it can be planted either in the fall or spring. Cover the crown about 4 inches. Very useful for cut flowers in the summer.

Strong blooming bulbs, 10 cts. each, $1.00 per doz., $6.50 per 100.

CALLAS—SPOTTED LEAF.

(Richardia albo-maculata.)

Very free summer-blooming variety. $2.25 per 100, $20.00 per 1000.

CALLA ELLIOTTIANA.

This is the great new Yellow Calla of marvelous beauty. Flowers are large, rich dark golden yellow, often 4 to 5 inches across the mouth; leaves are beautifully spotted with white. Bulbs of this variety are very scarce. Extra large bulbs, 25 cts. each, $2.25 per doz., $17.00 per 100.

HYACINTHUS CANDICANS.

(Cape Hyacinth.)

Large bulbs, $1.50 per 100, $12.00 per 1000.

THE GREAT ISMENE.

(Ismene Calathina Graudiflora.)

Those who are familiar with the true Giant Ismene cannot say enough in praise of its beauty and purity. The flowers are of a very large size, like an Amaryllis, novel form and of snowy whiteness, and are also exceedingly fragrant. Bulbs are large and strong and begin to flower in two or three weeks after planting; a fine florists' flower. $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100.

SPIRAEA Aruncus—The grand hardy white Spiraea. 4 to 5 feet. $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100.

IRIS PALLIDA DALMATICA.

This is the grandest variety of all the German Iris. Color deep, clear lavender, very large, flowers sweet-scented. This Iris should be planted largely where cut flowers are in demand, as it is certainly the best of its class. A grand variety for massing in borders; it is superb. $1.50 per doz., $12.00 per 100.

AZALEA MOLLS.

Most attractive in the shrubbery; also extensively forced on account of the brilliancy of colors. 15 buds, 15 inches high, $4.50 per doz., $35.00 per 100.

HYDRANGEA PANICULATA GRANDIFLORA.

Two-year-old, 3 to 4 feet, 3 to 4 branches. Bushy $1.50 per doz., $12.00 per 100.

STORMY WEATHER CAUSES POOR BUSINESS.

In the early part of the week, conditions in the wholesale market were very unsatisfactory, owing to the stormy weather, but on Friday the weather cleared and there was an increased demand for many things, though the situation as far as roses are concerned is much worse; even the best of these are meeting with poor demand. There is very little call for the very best blooms of Richmond, Brides and Bridesmaids. Richmond are of very fine quality, but have to be cleared out with large lots of the smaller grades. There is no improvement in the price of American Beauties or Ulrich Brunners. Orchids are over-plentiful, gardenias are moving very slowly, and sweet peas, fairly well. Carnations advanced very much towards the latter end of the week, especially the white varieties. There was an increased demand from out of town for these, and prices have not been so high previously at this season of the year. The dark unseasonable weather probably was the cause of shortening up the supply to a large extent. Lilies are plentiful. Lilac from the south is still of exceptionally good quality and arriving in great quantity. There is the usual demand for good lily of the valley, smilax and asparagus. Adiantum is in over-supply.

Monday noon, May 13—Prices have again taken a drop, especially the carnations, which had been advanced considerably on account of Mothers' day.

NOTES.

The question of "gluts" in the wholesale market in different cities would be satisfactorily settled if they all had a Charley Trepel. During the recent slack spell when consignments of all flowers have been so heavy and the demand slow, Mr. Trepel has through the three largest department stores in the city disposed of the greater part of the surplus. This is all done by judicious advertising in the daily papers, having special sales, and permitting flowers to reach the general public at very moderate prices. Carloads of nursery stock, seeds and bulbs are disposed of by the same methods. The business done in the cut flower departments of these three establishments is enormous.

There are a great many visitors en route to the International Exposition in London. President Richard Vincent, Jr., of the S. A. F. and Mrs. Vincent and J. A. Peterson of Cincinnati were of the party sailing on the Philadelphia on Saturday. W. Albert Manda sailed on the Lusitania, and B. Hammond Tracy and Mrs. Tracy, Harry A. Bunyard and Charles H. Totty sailed Tuesday on the Kronprinzessin Cecelie.

Probably the finest Alma Ward carnations ever seen in New York were a bunch sent to Traendly & Schenck on Wednesday by Wm. Eccles, superintendent for Mortimer Schiff, Oyster Bay, L. I. They were magnificent large flowers and were as good on Saturday morning as the day they were shipped in.

Henshaw & Fenrich were fortunate in having a large supply of carnations for the increased demand for Mothers' day, Wodenethe, sent in by Charles H. Totty, being exceptionally fine, and this famous white carnation was quickly bought up.

A new paper entitled "Outdoor World," devoted to outdoor life and amateur sports, is now on sale at all news stands. Charles Willis Ward is the president of the company publishing this very attractive paper.

Robert E. Berry has taken a lease of the Valentine Hamman greenhouses at Summit, N. J., and will grow high-grade carnations and chrysanthemums for the New York market.

Robert M. Schultz of Madison, N. J., has leased his greenhouses in that place, and the lessee will take possession June 1.

GARDENING HELP SCARCE.

Montreal florists have been very busy the last week. The presence of the Governor General and horse show week caused large orders for table and other decorations, but the rush for flowers on Saturday for Mothers' day found most of the retailers quite unprepared. Everything was cleared up, and as one florist stated, everything sold and stock is so hard to get we might just as well close up for the night. Orders for bedding plants are coming in nicely. Customers who could not get their orders filled last year apparently took a lesson and are ordering in time. There is considerable bedding stock around and should about fill any reasonable demand, but the growers generally forget to figure on the ever-increasing consumption. Roses and carnations are very fine, no doubt being benefited by the very favorable weather we are experiencing. The perennial borders suffered severely last winter, hollyhocks, foxglove, Anemone Japonica, hybrid perpetual roses, weigelea and a host of other things are partly or wholly killed. There is a great scarcity of gardeners and garden laborers. The daily papers are advertising constantly for men, and some vegetable growers find it exceedingly hard to get anybody, some of those on rented farms having nearly all their glass idle. At this rate vegetables will be dear this season, for many farms have been bought by real estate people and others are lying idle for want of laborers. Hotbed lettuce costs $4 per box of four dozen, a price never paid before, and if this keeps up living will be up in the air.

NOTES.

E. Hayward, Cote St. Paul, has his new dwelling completed and is occupying it. The house-warming party will be given in the near future. His mushrooms have paid him well and he will considerably increase his space next year.

Hall & Robinson have sold their Outremont property for a price which is placed above a hundred thousand dollars, but it is stated the greenhouses will be run for a time yet.

S. S. Bain was the floral artist who arranged the immense anchor seen in Godvin's window in memory of the victims of the Titanic. LUCK.

Business the past two weeks has been very satisfactory from every viewpoint. Plant trade has been brisk and every indication points to a record-breaker. People seem to be veing with each other as to who can make the finest show in their front yards—many very large beds are being made, where up to this year nothing along that line had been done. The parks no doubt have a great deal to do with the education of the people, as to the proper use and placing of flowers. They see a fine bed of this or that, and want to duplicate the same at their home. The bulb beds at the parks have been in their glory the past week, and as the weather has been very summer-like, thousands of people have viewed them and in consequence several orders have been placed for this fall's planting. Outdoor flower prospects are very poor for Decoration day—lilacs, snowballs and other out-of-door shrubs will be out of bloom by that time and I doubt if the peonies will be in time.

CLUB MEETING.

The Tri-City Florist Club met at the residence of Wm. Knees of Moline, Ill., on Thursday, May 9, for their May meeting, with a goodly number in attendance. The boys were all tired out after a strenuous week, but nevertheless a lively meeting was had. The banquet committee made their final report, claims were allowed and quite a neat sum was still found to be in the hands of the treasurer. Learning this, the boys started a movement for the annual picnic, which is to be held on Thursday, July 11, at the beautiful summer home of Wm. Knees on the banks of Rock River. The committee into whose hands the great responsibility rests is as follows: A. Anderson, — Pierson, Henry Gaethje, — Lorengen and John Staack. These boys have promised to show the rest of the club what a real picnic is like, so now it is up to them to make good. No doubt they will, for John Staack and several of the others have handled the picnic before and are up to snuff at the picnic business. Challenges no doubt will soon fill the air in regard to the usual baseball game and other events to be pulled off. We Davenporters will be the first in the ring, and hereby bet the Moliners two white geraniums against a 3-inch pot that we can beat their base ball nine to a frazzle at the coming picnic. Are you on? This year's novelties and outdoor planting were up for discussion. Several members gave interesting talks on bedding, filling vases, window boxes, etc., but nothing new of any great importance was introduced. President Ewoldt's invitation to his annual strawberry supper was accepted, to take place at his home some time the latter part of June. A fine supper was then served by Mrs. Knees and her daughter, and a social hour enjoyed, a vote of thanks being extended to Mr. Knees and family for their hospitality.

GOOD ROSES SHORT.

Business has been good this week, especially at the week end. Flowers of all kinds are plentiful, with the exception of good roses, of which there has been a shortage this week. Mother's day has created a demand for white carnations. The day will be observed in many churches of the city. Sermons will be preached from many pulpits extolling the virtues of the mother.

his country" looks calmly down, was greatly enhanced by the annual flower market which took place there this week. Bright awnings covered the booths and gay Japanese parasols. A flower-covered trellis formed the roof of a tea room. Besides all the plants and beautiful flowers there were garden tools, fancy baskets, quaint pottery, window boxes, etc. The florists contributed to this affair liberally and the proceeds go toward the work on vacant lot gardens under the direction of the Woman's Civic League. The beautiful wares are presided over by the ladies who are interested in this good work and labor hard to make it a success.

The Park Board decided to spend about $5,000 in planting trees and shrubbery on temporary stairways to be erected at the entrance to the Fifth Regiment Armory. Also to place an electric fountain in Druid Hill Park, illuminate the different monuments of note, and to decorate the city hall with trees and growing plants. All this is to help make the city attractive during the democratic convention. The trees and shrubbery to be used are to be brought here from a nursery on Long Island, permission having previously been given them to spend this money by the board of estimates.

The Maryland Steel Co. are encouraging their employes at Sparrow Point to beautify their homes and lawns. They will give cash prizes to the amount of $200 to those having the most attractive looking places in the fall. This has been the custom for years and the result is that it bears the name of the cleanest steel town in the United States. The company maintains a hothouse from which it annually distributes 5,000 plants to its employes.

John Cook, the well-known florist who resides near Catonsville, has shipped to San Diego, Calif., seven new roses which will be entered in the $1,000 Panama-California Exposition rose contest. Two roses of Mr. Cook's which have been extensively grown and are popular with the people are My Maryland and Radiance.

The suburban portion of the city in the northern and western sections is developing so rapidly into new homes that bedding plants are greatly in demand, consequently a shortage in geraniums and, in fact, of all bedding plants is noticed this season. B.

Southampton Horticultural Society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Southampton Horticultural Society was held in the Odd Fellows' hall May 2, Vice-President Julius King presiding. There was not much business to bring before the society. The chief work at the present time is getting ready for the summer show, July 21-25. A committee of nine members with the vice-president as chairman has full charge in making all arrangements for that event. The premium list is out and the total amount of prize money is $600, which should induce a good show. After business the members present had an interesting discussion on the various insect pests and remedies for the same. Secretary Benj. Palmer gave a short talk on his wonderful success in growing cucumbers outdoors. He sinks a common drain pipe two feet in the ground and plants his seeds around the pipe. He pours a pail of water into the pipe once a day and has barrow loads of cucumbers all season with one planting. WM. McLEON, Secy.

Greenwich Horticulturists.

The regular meeting of the Westchester and Fairfield Horticultural Society was held in Greenwich Friday, May 10, with the usual good attendance. Nine members were elected and eight applications received. Additional prizes for our fall show were received from the Lord & Burnham Co., Burnett Bros., Bon Arbor Chemical Co., Stump & Walter Co., J. M. Thorburn & Co., A. T. Boddington, Vaughan's Seed Store, Chas. Waterbury, Thos. McGee and James Stuart.

The prize offered for best calceolaria was won by Pres. Stuart, with an exceptionally fine specimen of great beauty. Cultural certificates were awarded to James Aitchison for a splendid pelargonium, Harry Wild for some very fine strawberries (Marshall). Three spreas exhibited by A. Peterson and collection of vegetables by J. Foster were both highly commended. Vote of thanks was accorded to J. Aitchison for some fine carnations. Great progress has been made so far for the summer show, to be held in Greenwich on June 15.

The Seed Trade.

American Seed Trade Association.

Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago, President; Marshall H. Durvea, New York, First Vice-President; Edgar Gregory, Marblehead, Mass., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, Ohio, Secretary and Treasurer. Next annual convention at Chicago, June 25-27, 1912.

BOTH mail and counter trade show signs of the waning season.

VISITED MINNEAPOLIS: A. H. Goodwin and J. C. Vaughan, Chicago.

LATEST advices are that French bulb prices are holding firm and that Roman hyacinths are a light crop.

ONION sets are all cleaned up at Chicago, the last sales of bushel lots to the trade being made at $3.50 to $4.

CHICAGO.—Prices on the Board of Trade, May 15, for grass seed were noted as follows: Timothy, $9 to $14 per 100 pounds.

"SWEET CLOVER" is the title of a bulletin recently issued by the Department of Agriculture, J. M. Westgate and H. N. Vinall, authors.

ORD, Valley County, Neb., is quite a popcorn center, one warehouse there storing thousands of bushels. The district also produces alfalfa and oats.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. A. Robinson, representing the J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Rocky Ford, Colo.; Theo. Cobb, representing D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

CORN planting in the west is already a week late and likely to be generally 12 days late unless drying weather comes at once. Very early seed corn not being available, late land will need millet seed or other forage crops.

AT Chicago more than four-fifths of the onion set acreage is now planted, but probably not over 50 per cent is above ground. The stand is generally good, the seed having germinated well. Heavy rain May 12 is not thought to have done much damage.

California Bean Growers.

According to the report of special agents, it is charged that the method employed in marketing the lima bean crop is not based on the law of supply and demand, but upon arbitrary figures fixed by the business agents of the growers. It is asserted that the growers can force the produce firms to pay the price asked, and that the few independent growers do not dare to incur the ill will of the alleged combine by selling for prices lower than those fixed by the Lima Bean Growers' Association. The latest report, if such it could be called, from A. L. McCormick, United States attorney in Los Angeles, who talks mostly in the clam language, indicates that the government investigation of the "bean trust" will end in a compromise, and the dissolution of the combination.

First Insecticide Prosecutions.

Novel suits were filed in the United States district court today by the government against two paint manufacturing concerns. The Sherwin-Williams Co., 28 East Jackson boulevard, and the Devoe & Reynolds Co., 171 West Randolph street, are charged with the adulteration of poisons used by farmers. This action is among the first taken by the government under the new insecticide law enacted by congress April 26, 1910, designed to protect the farmer from the sale of impure poisons to be used in the destruction of insects on trees and plants.

The Sherwin-Williams Co. is charged in the suit filed by A. R. Hulbert, assistant United States district attorney, with the adulteration of lead arsenate, an insect exterminator. The government alleges that the article in question was adulterated with more than 50 per cent of water and misbranded. The charge against the Devoe & Reynolds Co. is the adulteration of paris green and lead arsenic.—Chicago Daily News.

The Holland Outlook.

Sassenheim, April 26.—The weather was very cold from April 1 to April 15, with heavy frosts at night, writes one of our correspondents. There were several hailstorms, and many tulips and hyacinths went backward. While everything looked healthy and strong at the end of March, the cold weather caused the plants to look miserable, and the early tulips in some fields lost all their leaves and the flowers and leaves of others were broken. Hyacinths were injured very much by the frost. Nearly all the bulbs looked badly and a poor crop was expected. But the weather, changed and everything started to grow so that at present very little damage can be seen except in a few acres. What the crop will be, however, is still difficult to state. A number of growers are afraid that if the warm weather continues without rain, some varieties will die too quickly, especially bulbs that are planted on mixed, sandy, or dry, clay ground. We are now having variable weather, good and bad, but the crops are in fair condition.

In regard to green auction sales, we cannot understand, how the growers dare to raise prices on market varieties of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi, which are grown in quantities, when we consider how the trade has been in the United States, how business has been and is in England, owing to the coal strike, and then the thousands and thousands of acres planted with bulbs. Such varieties as Vermilion Brilliant, Couronne d'Or, Prince of Austria, Proserpine, Le Matelas, Thomas Moore, Salvator Rosa, Rubra Maxima, etc., are sold from 30 to 40 per cent higher than last year. Single late tulips, Bouton d'Or, Gesneriana, Spathulata, etc., and Darwins from 80 to 100 per cent higher and hyacinths and narcissus also bring better prices.

Von Sion narcissi are held very high. It seems as though many buyers are willing to risk quite a sum of money on a gamble that prices will advance. Of course all depends on the harvest but it certainly looks like higher prices this year and perhaps the next.

"Gladolus in Holland must have 'gold bottoms' by the prices that are paid for some varieties," says a Dutch nurseryman.

WINNIPEG, MAN., CAN.—Two interesting addresses were delivered at a meeting held by the Winnipeg Horticultural Society, April 24, one by James Barrett on the cultivation of celery and the other by D. W. Buchanan on tree, shrub and flower planting for the city garden.

Prices of Fruits and Indoor Vegetables.

Chicago, May 13.—Mushrooms, 20 cents to 35 cents per pound; radishes, 25 cents to 35 cents per dozen bunches; lettuce, 27½ cents to 30 cents, small cases; cucumbers, 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen.

New York, May 11.—Mushrooms, 50 cents to $1.50 per 4-pound basket; cucumbers, 75 cents to $4 per box; tomatoes, 10 cents to 20 cents per pound; lettuce, 25 cents to 75 cents per dozen; mint, 10 cents to 30 cents per dozen bunches; cauliflower, $2 to $3 per dozen.

Transplanting Versus Direct Seeding.

We have become so accustomed to transplanting certain plants that we have almost fallen into a rut—that is, we take it for granted these must be transplanted to do well. This is certainly not the case, for at best transplanting is a delicate operation and always done with more or less injury to the plant, which injury will show in the crop. The writer has met people who claim that tomato seeds by lying outdoors all winter deteriorate thereby to such an extent as to be worthless in breed, which opinion is unfounded. It is based upon the experience with voluntary plants, but we must consider that as a rule all good fruit is picked and the worthless left in the field, which has more to do with the resultant mongrels than the exposure. In our long experience we have demonstrated that superior crops of cabbage, cauliflower, tomatoes, leaf and head lettuce, etc., can be grown by direct seeding. The reason is plain, for these seedlings strike deep into the subsoil and will resist hot weather where transplanted stocks with their shallow roots would fail. Further, for transplanting we need favorable conditions, while for thinning and weeding dry hot weather is desirable. Another factor is the poor help often obtainable. They will stick a plant into the ground any old way—loose or doubled roots, deep or shallow, while the seedling establishes a true root system. In this connection we cannot consider cost of seed, cost of seeding nor thinning; we aim at the other end—a good crop. We would advise parties who have failed with cauliflower, cabbage and late tomatoes to try direct seeding and note results. To defray expenses, check row planting is essential.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y.—The newly organized horticultural society will hold its first annual flower show in June.

Truck Farming in the Canary Islands.

The truck farmers of the Canary Islands engage in intensive farming almost exclusively, as the farms average but two to five acres in size, rarely more, writes Consul William W. Kitchen, Teneriffe. The largest farm in the islands is about 140 fanegadas (the fanegada varies in the different islands, being usually a little less than 1 acre). Plowing is done with primitive plows, consisting of a rough-hewn pole or tongue to which is fastened an iron-pointed stick, drawn by oxen. These plows are not so easily injured by the large loose rocks below the surface of the soil as steel blades would be, and the low cost of labor, about 50 cents American a day, makes the demand for a modern time-saving implement slight. The results obtained with this method of cultivation are excellent, and the appearance of a newly plowed finca (farm) is equal to that of the best English and European market gardens.

The irrigation, which the average yearly rainfall of 15 inches makes imperative, is supplied on these miniature farms by the use of hand watering cans. The larger farms have cement-lined stone reservoirs, some of which have a capacity of several thousand gallons. These are filled from permanent streams by cement troughs. These leads are economically provided by forming cement grooves on the tops of the stone fences, which separate all the farms and are often used in dividing hillside farms into terraces.

A fanegada may produce 300 bunches of bananas a year. Six hundred kilos (1,300 pounds) of seed potatoes are required to plant the same area, the yield being five to 20 times the amount planted. One and a half to two pounds of tomato seed will plant a fanegada and yield two hundred to six hundred 60-pound cases.

CLUB BANQUET.

The principal event of the week was the second annual banquet of the Colorado Florists' Club, held at the Adams Hotel May 6, sixty-eight being present. As a number of the members live in other towns throughout the state, every such occasion that brings us together in a spirit of friendly intercourse is undoubtedly of great benefit to the trade. Much of our business is necessarily with each other, and much is added to the pleasure of business life when there is a mutual feeling of confidence and accord. Even in cases of direct competition, bitterness of feeling does not lessen the competition, and there never is a real fight in which only one is hurt. J. A. Valentine was toastmaster and a very able one he proved to be, drawing out sallies of wit and humor from all parts of the room. As many who are now in business for themselves were formerly employed by the Park Floral Co., they were one and all so free with their expressions of friendship and loyalty to Mr. Valentine, it seemed for a while as if the meeting would become just one great ovation to him.

NOTES.

Mothers' day was a great success. If it keeps on growing in popularity as it now has, in two or three years it will be as big a business day as Easter. First, though, we must educate the people to the idea of using colored flowers as well as white. Even this year there were not one-half enough white carnations. The weather was dark and threatening too, which kept the crowds from coming out as they would on a bright day.

The season is very late and there is poor prospect for outdoor flowers for Memorial day. There may be a few lilacs, which will be about all.

Thornless Prickly Pears.

The culture of the spineless prickly pears in the United States is limited to the coast and interior valleys of California, the extreme southern portion of the Rio Grande valley in Texas, the warmer portions of southern Arizona and possibly the coastal region of southern Florida. Their growth upon the elevated regions of California and Arizona is soon limited by the increasing low temperatures and they will not endure the winter temperatures of any locality in New Mexico. These plants have been the subject of a bulletin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture which states that the prevalent notion that these plants need no water is erroneous and should be given no credence, nor are they as resistant to drought as the spiny varieties. They are surface feeders and do not draw vigorously from the lower layers of subsoil for their moisture, but they can be grown on one-third of the water required to grow alfalfa. Like all other perennials it is impossible to state definitely what degree of temperature the plants of thornless prickly pears will stand, or at what temperature they will be killed, so much depends on surrounding conditions and circumstances, but generally speaking, it is believed that a minimum of 20° marks the limit of the endurance of these plants.

Accurate information regarding the yield is hardly possible, for they have not been yet planted extensively enough or for a long enough time, but a yield of 20 to 25 tons to the acre pays well and such a yield means sufficient roughage for one cow from one acre without irrigation. The best feeding results are obtained by using some dry roughage in connection with the prickly pear, yet this food has been used successfully for months at a time, in one instance a herd of 80 to 100 cows had no other roughage for two years.

The most important point to be considered is the rapidity of growth of the prickly pear, but it is a great mistake to expect that it will grow anywhere or on any kind of soil. If well cared for, given a good supply of water and good drainage it will thrive on almost any soil where the temperature does not run too low, but the best crop is on the best soils. The propagation is from both cuttings and seeds, but the former is the more rapid way of procuring mature plants. The plants are set in rows six feet apart and three feet apart in the row in ground thoroughly prepared and cultivated like other crops frequent enough to maintain a good tilth and to keep down weeds, but the plants are shallow-rooted and the cultivation should not be deep. They can be harvested at any time, but the cattle do not like the young joints for some time after they first form.

On account of the bulky and heavy nature it is impracticable to transport prickly pears in large quantities and it is better for the grower to obtain a moderate quantity to start with and grow his own stock. One cutting will yield an average of eight to 12 in a season and 100 will stock a quarter of an acre the second season. The department has collected and imported 25 or more varieties and distributed eight or 10 in large quantities among nurserymen.

RALEIGH, N. C.—“We did the largest business at Easter we ever did in our life,” writes J. L. O’Quinn & Co., “and could not wait on the trade by a long way, and the rush has not stopped up to Friday (April 12).” The sales were fully 25 per cent greater than last year. There was an adequate supply of almost all varieties of plants and all the cut flowers we could handle, and the prices were about the same. Blooming plants of all kinds were the most in demand and carnations, violets and lilies were the cut flowers most in request.”

SEDALIA, Mo.—The weather was exceptionally good and the business increase was fully twenty-five per cent over that of last Easter, says the Archias Floral Co. The stock of both plants and flowers was in fine condition and the supply was adequate to fill the demand, but the prices were not quite so good as last year, the violets were a little short of the demand seeming to be for cheap plants. Bulbous stock in pans, lilies, pot roses and small azaleas sold well, but large azaleas were slow. All cut flowers sold well at fair prices.

OAKLAND, CALIF.—The trade at Easter was 25 per cent larger than last year, writes Clarke Bros. Prices were about the same and the supply of plants and flowers was fully equal to the demand. Pot lilies were the plants most in demand, and cut lilies, tulips and bulbous flowers the leaders in cut flowers, although all kinds sold fairly well. Callas from outside were in great abundance in California, many churches using them entirely on account of their cheapness. Other garden flowers take the place of the choicer products, and the florist does not get a fair chance at the people.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

CAST IRON BOILERS—FOOL ECONOMY (false ratings, fuel waste, danger of breakdowns, dealers’ profits), OR

KROESCHELL BOILERS—FUEL ECONOMY (honest ratings, safety, quick heat, no boiler pits, no dealers’ profits).

The extravagant ratings of Cast Iron Boilers are misleading, and during the past cold winter, have been the cause of much disappointment and serious trouble to many growers. The fuel waste is enormous when cast iron boilers are used for commercial purposes, such as greenhouse heating, etc.

Do you want true heating values for your money? Many florists, to their sorrow, have made the mistake in buying Cast Iron Boilers, which, because of their ratings, appeared to be cheaper than the Kroeschell Boiler.

Range of Adam Laub & Son, Hughsonville, N. Y. Their letter speaks for itself.

CAST IRON BOILERS WASTE FUEL.

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this—your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m. Nov. 24, and the next morning at 7 o’clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn’t magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler.

We know if parties wishing a boiler would get one from you they never would try any other. We think in five years’ running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain, Very truly yours,

ADAM LAUB & SON, Hughsonville, N. Y.

Not So Much

Is What You Want in Your Greenhouse.

Terse Talk No. 8.

ENGINEERING is much of it theory—it looks great on paper, all fixed up by the draftsmen. Common sense is pretty much all fact. Fact founded on level headedness.

Mix together one-quarter part engineering, one-quarter common sense, and then fill the rest of the bottle up with a half a century's experience, and you have Hitchings' greenhouse construction prescription that will cure the very worst cases.

It's a great spring medicine.

You can't take too much of it.

It's a great reducer of repair bills and a wonderful sweller of bank accounts.

Beware of hottles that look look like it and dope that tastes like it. The genuine has a picture on the label of our Iron Frame house, and Hitchings' signature is blown in the glass.

Let us send you our new Iron Frame Catalog—it's the greatest remedy book on commercial construction published.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO. CHICAGO, ILL.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.—The sales at Easter were about ten per cent larger than last year is the report of John Reck & Son. There was a plentiful supply of everything and the prices were cheaper than ever. Hyacinths, lilies, roses and tulips were the pot plants most in demand and large azaleas sold the poorest. Roses, orchids, sweet peas and violets were the cut flowers requested and carnations the last to sell. The florists' trade was greatly cut into by the department stores, grocery stores, markets and the 5-cent and 10-cent stores who had a large stock of blooming plants which were supplied by local growers having no stores.

NASHUA, N. H.—The increase in the Easter trade this year over that of last year was about 10 per cent, reports Aug. Gaedeke & Co., and the weather conditions were very good, making delivery easy. There was a plentiful stock of plants and cut flowers and the prices were about the same. Everything in the plant line sold well and daffodils were the flower most in demand.

"My L. & B. House Is as Stiff as a Stone Wall."

"I have been growing vegetables under glass for twenty-one years. This 258-foot Lord & Burnham Iron Frame House is positively the most satisfactory of any in my experience. Broken glass I never have, as the house is as stiff as a stone wall. The eaves shed the ice and snow at once. It's weather-proof.

"I recommended the L. & B. Iron Frame house to other growers around Fitchburg, two of whom have since built the same kind of house. This should be convincing proof that I think the house is good."

"Let's Go Fishin'."

I'm hungerin' to get away
Off yonder where the pickler play,
Off yonder where the skies are blue
And every breeze that blows is true,
Where there's no ceaseless fight for gold
And things aren't being bought and sold.
I'm hungerin' to get away
An' steep my soul in joys of May.

I'm growin' weary of the game,
The strife for wealth and power and fame.
I want to stretch my soul a bit
An' give earth's joys a chance at it.
I want to live a day or two
Where there is nothing much to do
Save stretchin' out upon the sod
An' gloryin' in the works of God.

I'm hungerin' to get away
Off yonder where the pickler play.
I want to rest beside a stream
An' gaze up to the sky an' dream
An' quite forget that there's a town
Where engines hum an' chimneys frown.
I'm tired of hearin' people say
That "time is money" every day.

I want to let the hours slip by Without a thought that maybe I Am losin' opportunities

Some day to live a life of ease.
I want to quite forget the need
Of dollars an' life's fearful speed.
Rich men may say that I'm unwise,
But, then, my soul wants exercise.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Peonies.

The peony is one of the most important flowers to the florist during the early part of June, and they are used in large quantities for decorations and other floral work. In cutting peonies for market especially those that are to be shipped it is best to cut them when the first petals unfold, and allow them to open in water, they ship much better in this condition and also last much longer. Where they are allowed to remain on the plant until open the flowers not only bruise more or less in transportation, but the petals drop more easily when the flowers are unpacked if they are open when cut and made ready for shipment. In cutting the flowers from the plant, many growers make the mistake of cutting too low. The demand of the customers is of course for long stems, but for the good of the plant there should be left two well formed leaves upon the stem when the flower is cut off. This will allow enough foliage for the plant to continue its growth and thoroughly ripen off. Where the plant is cut back too severely the root action is injured and a diminished number of flowers will be the result in the succeeding year. Keep the plants tied up by stakes and strings outside of the row; a heavy rain when the plants are heavy with buds will often knock them down and ruin many of the flowers.

Ficus Elastica.

While the rubber plants do not enjoy the popularity that they did ten or more years ago, yet there is always more or less demand for good small plants every fall and cuttings rooted now and given good culture can be grown to fine stock at that time. Every plantsman will have plants of Ficus elastica that have outgrown the saleable size or have lost many of the lower leaves and the tops of these can be propagated during the warm weather. The best way to root the young plants is on the plant by mousing the cut. Make an incision in the stem about half way through, in which insert a small stick about the size of a match stick to keep the cut open. Bind around the cut wet moss which should be firmly tied on with raffia and kept wet constantly. The plant should then be placed in a warm, moist house, kept fairly close, and in two to four weeks the roots will be seen protruding from the moss. The top should then be cut off and potted in a 4-inch or 5-inch pot and grown in a warm, close house until the roots have become established in the soil. If a number of these plants are being grown, a mild hotbed can be made up outside, built up with boards so as to allow 18 inches of room between the soil and glass, and covered with a shaded sash. Plunge the pots in the soil and if the frame is kept close, allowing air only on the warmest days, the plants will grow rapidly. As fall approaches more air can be admitted and the plants gradually hardened off and splendid stock will be the result.

Rambler Roses.

The plants of the different varieties of rambler roses that were forced for Easter and late winter flowering will have passed out of bloom and should be grown on for another year's flowering, and will make larger plants than those of this year. These plants immediately after blooming commence the growth of the wood that will bear flowers another year, and as the soil in the pots has become pretty well exhausted they will require potting at once. Uncoil the canes of those plants that were twisted into forms and tie them to a strong stake, for with the new growths that will be made it will be almost impossible to keep them to the shape. New canes will spring from the base of the plant which will make fine blooming wood and these should be given room to grow and mature. With the plants that were grown in standard form, such as umbrellas or parasols, it will be necessary to cut these young canes out if that form is to be retained another year, and induce new growth at the top. Re-pot the plants in a good rose soil, that is, a compost of three-quarters fibrous loam and one-quarter old cow manure. Many of the plants will not require a larger pot, for much of the old soil can be shaken off, if carefully done, and the plant re-potted in the same pot in the new soil. Pot firmly ramming the soil down hard with a blunt stick. Keep the plants in the shade for a few days until the roots have obtained a hold in the new soil. Then they should be placed outside, the pots plunged in the ground to the rim, and in a place where they can be supplied with water throughout the summer.

Ardisias.

One of the most popular berried plants for Christmas is the ardisia, but it is not grown as generally as it should be, the production being left to a few plants growers, for it is of very easy culture, the only drawback being that it is of very slow growth. The seeds on the old plants are now thoroughly ripened and should be sown at this time, they germinate slowly and should be sown about an inch apart, in rows the same distance apart, and they can then be left in the seed box until early summer, and potted in 2½-inch or 3-inch pots, and grown in a warm, lightly shaded location. They should be potted in good fibrous loam and kept in a moist, close house that all the growth possible may be obtained at this time, for the plant naturally checks in winter. In early spring these young plants will flower and produce a crop of berries for the next winter. The plants that have been grown for three years or more have generally passed the ornamental stage for they lose their leaves and have a "leggy" appearance. When they reach this stage the tops can be rooted and a fine plant obtained. This can be best done at this time of the year by cutting in to the stem and wrapping the cut with wet moss firmly tied around. Keep the plants in a warm, close atmosphere and the moss continually damp, and in four or five weeks new roots will grow in the moss when the top can be cut off and potted, still keeping the plant in the same temperature until new growth starts. This operation will not interfere in any way with the plant blooming for they frequently set an abundance of buds while the top is making new roots. The brown scale is the greatest enemy of ardisias even in the young stage and they must be removed at once when found for they sap the strength of the plant. The older plants should be frequently sponged with strong nicotine solution.

Foliage for Design Work.

During the hot summer weather, it is often difficult to obtain what might be called select flowers for funeral work, but orders will be received for some very nice work and the dealer is at his wits' end to supply or obtain the necessary materials. The retailer having a greenhouse can readily have a good assortment of high colored foliage plants that make most beautiful designs for just such an occasion. The crotons are particularly adapted for this purpose, and a few plants kept growing in the house, especially the varieties bearing large and highly colored leaves, will give a supply which can be had at any time. The Rex begonias are also very useful for making designs and the silver leaved ones make beautiful work with other foliage. Begonia metallica and B. argentea guttata are also good plants to grow for design work, and there are a number of other plants of variegated foliage that can be used for this purpose. All of this foliage is quite soft during the summer and unless properly prepared, wilts quickly. The leaves and branches should be cut the day before and allowed to stand in a tub of water over night and they will then absorb enough water to stand up for a long while.

Lawn and Porch Vases.

Vases filled with plants placed in prominent locations on the lawn or porch can be made very decorative features for the cottage or on the large estate if of appropriate size and design for the surroundings and given the necessary care through the summer. These vases can be obtained in different materials for they are made of iron, cement, terra cotta and wood. In selecting the vase it should be borne in mind that often after being filled with plants it is placed in a position where the sun shines upon it the whole day long and it is unprotected from winds, consequently the evaporation of moisture is exceedingly large. It is therefore necessary that there should be a good body of soil, and where the vase is so exposed to sun and wind there should be at least a depth of soil of 10 or 12 inches and the vase should not be less than 16 inches in diameter. The iron vases last a long time and will stand a lot of abuse in the hands of careless labor, but when placed in the blazing sun they heat very quickly in warm weather and are much better for more shady locations, and many of these are far too shallow for practical use. The cement and terra cotta vases are now made very decorative and ornamental, and some of the imported terra cotta ware is very expensive. These do not heat through as quickly as the iron for they are of much greater thickness and the material is not so good a conductor of heat. The vases of wood are really the most practical for plant culture for the moisture is more easily retained and the soil much cooler, but they rot very quickly and must be renewed. The wooden vases covered with rustic material are very decorative and where the constant expense of renewal can be afforded are very satisfactory.

The planting of vases requires an entirely different treatment than the plant boxes for windows or porches, for these are generally planted with the low and blooming plants in front and higher plants at the back, while the vase must present a front from any view point. The soil with which the vase is filled should be of the best compost with a liberal addition of rotted manure, and a sprinkling of ground bone, and the drainage in the bottom of the vase should be ample to insure sweetness of the soil. Select plants that will grow in the place where the vase is to stand, whether in sun or shade. Avoid overcrowding, much of the effectiveness of these ornamental and decorative features of a residence is lost by planting a mixture of small plants so closely together that they can never grow so as to make a creditable appearance. A center plant of good height is the first necessity when planted to assorted arrangements. Dracaena indivisa is the most popular plant for this purpose, for it will stand the hottest sun and will grow equally as well in shady locations, and is always graceful. The dwarf blooming cannas are often used for this purpose and are very satisfactory and Grevillia robusta, or silk oak, makes a good center plant. Around this may be arranged the flowering plants that will be the most appropriate or please the fancy of the customer, geraniums are probably the most popular and satisfactory in light and sunny positions. Many foliage plants make fine vases, such as the brilliant colored coleus or crotons. The vines or dropping plants should not be as large as those that are used in the window boxes for the close and solid effect desired in the latter does not look so well in the vases for it entirely hides the vase, while this is not as a rule the wish of the owner. The vincas are more often used but many of the slower growing vines are satisfactory. English ivy, lobelias, Solanum jasminoides, money vine and ivy geraniums are all good for the sides of these vases. Where the vases are permanent fixtures, such as on stumps of old trees, the Ampelopsis quinquefolia, known so well as woodbine or Virginia creeper, can be planted and this will cover the stump and grow over the lower part of the box. The vase which we illustrate is such an arrangement, with a flowering canna, a Caladium esculentum, a dwarf pompon dahlia, and highly colored coleus to complete a successful lawn ornament.

Specimen blooming plants are very effective in the lawn and porch vases and where this can be afforded gives the opportunity of making a change during the season. The pot plants of rambler roses can be used in June and these followed by hydrangeas which make a beautiful showing on a lawn or porch. It is much better that these remain in the pots and the space between the vase and pot filled with soil which will greatly aid in conserving the moisture. There is one great necessity in the keeping of the vases in good condition and that is constant attention, and this should be impressed upon the mind of those who have the care of them. They must be watered frequently; it is not possible to water heavily and then leave them for two or three days; they must be watered every bright day and in hot weather when dry winds are blowing should be looked over in the middle of the day and if dry watered. A nice vase with a good selection of plants and proper care will make a beautiful ornament on any porch or lawn.

Romance of Rubber.

About this time thirty-six years ago the daring scheme of smuggling a large cargo of Para rubber seeds from Brazil was carried to a successful conclusion. The seeds were intended for the propagation of the rubber tree in the Malay states and other British possessions, and the results have more than realized the dream of the originator of the plan. Credit for the conception and execution of the plan is ascribed to one H. W. Wickham, an Englishman, who had spent many years along the reaches of the Upper Amazon, where only in all the world, until a generation ago, the rubber tree was to be found.

Wickham came to the conclusion that the tree could be cultivated and grown in other countries, and determined to make the attempt. Now Brazil had enjoyed a monopoly of the production of Para rubber for more than two hundred years, and, wishing to continue the monopoly, had enacted stringent laws against the exportation of the rubber tree or its seed.

Wickham is said to have enlisted the interest and aid of Sir Joseph Hooker, director of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew, England. At any rate, one morning the Zapatay Indians on the banks of the Upper Amazon saw looming through the mist a large steamer, the largest they had ever seen, slowly making her way up the river to Manoa. There a cargo of miscellaneous supplies was discharged, after which the steamer dropped down stream to an obscure point for the return cargo. Unknown, of course, to the authorities this cargo proved to be fresh seed of the famous rubber tree, nearly 100,000 of them, which the energetic Wickham had secretly collected with the aid of the simple Indians.

At Para, the Brazilian port of entry, the authorities were bribed or hoodwinked into believing that the cargo consisted of "rare botanical specimens for Her Majesty's Botanical Garden at Kew." And so Brazil lost one of her richest natural heritages. For right next door to Brazil, in British Guinea and in the Malay states, the rubber tree is being successfully cultivated from the seed surreptitiously taken from the Amazon country some thirty years ago.

In its wild state the rubber tree grows not more than two or three to the acre, but under cultivation it is found that an acre will provide for a hundred or more. This fact and scientific methods of tapping have greatly reduced the price of rubber in the great markets of the world. In fact, it is a question whether the immense increase in the use of rubber in manufacture and commerce would have been possible if it had not been for Wickham and his mysterious steamer on the Upper Amazon a generation ago.

It is said that rubber adds approximately a billion dollars yearly to the manufactured wealth of the world.

Memorial Day Suggestions.

It may be that the custom of carrying flowers to the cemeteries is considered a mark of temporary distinction and practiced only when to commemorate an event, but when Memorial day comes round it is then that the florists look to securing more business through some novelties along different lines—something that will make the day more profitable. The following suggestions may be found of practical interest and value:

The garland cross is easily made and effective when arranged with red tulips and their foliage; this can be fastened to the grave with a red ribbon of the same shade by means of a stout wire made into prongs. A large palm leaf with a fine bunch of yellow tulips is excellent, especially if the tulips are of the variegated variety, and tied with a wide ribbon to match. A family lot can be artistically arranged by placing a large full garland of white and purple lilac around the monument and tied with ribbons of white and purple to match the flowers. For each individual grave arrange a wreath of lavender pansies—being so significant in meaning "thought." Or, if each grave has a headstone, place around it a garland of pansies to harmonize with the decoration of the monument, that is, purple and white pansies can be used.

A wreath made in the shape of a heart is good and can be beautifully arranged with the wild violets and white pansies. The double heart or one linked to the other is pretty of lavender sweet peas with a touch of pink, or made of red carnations or red roses. The small heart wreath made of forget-me-nots for a child's grave is good.

A sword made of red carnations is appropriate for a soldier's grave or for an emblematic suggestion for a monument, where several rest. A pilgrim's staff made of American Beauty roses tied with a wide sash ribbon is excellent for the basic effect of a soldier's monument. Two of these staffs can be used to advantage by crossing them in the center, from which extend garlands of roses in white; also placing a bunch of the same roses on each grave. This can be surmounted by a small cross of lily of the valley.

Two keys are also appropriate, and when made of red carnations or yellow pansies are well suited for the day, using boxwood as a background for the keys. One key made of lily of the valley and the other of yellow rose buds and tied together with the two shades of ribbon will make a very pretty offering, suggesting as it were, "to open the gates of heaven."

In place of the regulation wreath, why not use the perfect square, making it of white and pink sweet peas, stretching a pink ribbon across the center tied with a rosette effect. This can be made very inexpensively of snowballs, using white gauze ribbon, and can be made very showy and attractive. A loving cup, made of violets and filled with lily of the valley with a bunch of forget-me-nots in the center is also appropriate. The shield with the cross is showy where a set piece is desired. This can be made of pink roses and white sweet peas, combined with maidenhair, and will look well. The broken wheel and the wheel with spokes made of red and white roses is very attractive.

A chain of links, each link made of a different flower and stretched from grave to grave is good. The Greek cross is used a good deal. Made of scarlet geraniums is effective and inexpensive. This can be combined with ivy leaves. A simple ring made of red peonies or lilacs or tulips or any of the spring flowers can be thrown over the corner of a headstone and is showy. An oval wreath made of pink roses and mignonette and maidenhair lends a pretty setting for a Memorial memento.

When two family names appear on the monument a monogram made of flowers and suspended from the center of the monument with garlands is effective. The monograms can be of violets and the garland of sweet peas and foliage. A wreath made of lily of the valley with a shamrock design in the center, the shamrock being made of tiny ivy leaves, is excellent. This shamrock may be made of pansies in the different shades of dark purple and wreath of violets. Care should be used in making the wreath part so that the shamrock or clover leaf in the center does not lose its shape. This combination with lily of the valley and forget-me-nots is good. A crown of flowers can always be effectively arranged and is appropriate on Memorial day. For an inscription on a memorial design this sentence suggests itself: "Peace I leave with you;" or "To the gates of heaven." Let us re-adorn the day in commemoration.

Final Preparations for Memorial Day.

The work of planting vases is a very important and in a great many cases a very unsatisfactory part of the work for Memorial day. If the vase is large enough and its location favorable for the plants to grow then it is a pleasure to do the work, but when we are called upon to plant a vase that is more ornamental than useful so far as any plant growing well in it is concerned, and again perhaps it is to be stationed under heavy, shady trees and the customer expects a fine array of bloom. These are problems that confront us many times and must be worked out to the best advantage of all concerned. We can advise the customer that the location of the vase is not favorable for the growing and blooming of geraniums and flowering plants, and recommend the planting of ferns and foliage plants such as dracaenas, ficus and palms with English ivy for the hanging vines, a very fine effect can be worked out with this material, and if properly done will be most satisfactory. Of course it will be necessary to charge more for vases planted in this manner than for those planted to the cheaper plants such as geraniums, vincas etc. To satisfy the customer with a fine display for Memorial day, it is necessary to put in more plants than our judgment knows is really best for the well being of the growth of the plants later on, but by filling in a few extra showy ivy geraniums in bloom and a few Nierembergia gracilis, a fine immediate effect can be had, and then as the plants get established any that are crowding can be thinned out a little. The general run of vases will call for well grown geraniums with good trusses of bloom, flowering ivy geraniums, Nierembergia gracilis, Lobelia gracilis with plenty of well foliaged vincas. Solanum jasminoides and English and German ivy.

The most important things in filling vases is to provide for good drainage, and use a good live soil for the plants to grow in. If there is not a free drainage to allow the water to pass away freely, it is impossible for the plants to do well. One great trouble is that the smaller vases are so shallow that very little-crock can be used as drainage, to overcome this with the reservoir vases a cheap sponge can be inserted in the funnel at the bottom of the vase and a small portion of broken pot or rubble placed over it. The soil should be live enough to promote good plant growth but not rich enough to encourage a heavy growth at the expense of bloom. When large numbers of vases have to be filled it is a considerable task and to transport plants around the grounds to where they are situated means a lot of work. The best way is to set apart a greenhouse and carry the vases there, or in cases where it can be done, parts of the vase and plant them inside, they can then remain there for a few days to get started before being set out again, but do not allow them to remain in a shed or shady greenhouse to become drawn and the foliage of the plants turn yellow.

There are so many other items of preparation for this occasion, that it is bewildering to advise which is the most important, but it is necessary to be up to the minute with everything. In a few days the planting out will be in full swing, and in addition to this the number of customers will multiply ten times as the days go by. The waiting on these should be arranged in the most expedient manner possible, have plenty of baskets for the customers to carry away their plants in cases where they can, and in other cases have a number of strong boys to do the carrying. Do not let it fall to the lot of the clerks or gardeners, their time is much too valuable at this season. Another important point is to keep the stock looking well. Do not allow the place to be littered up with empty pots or rubbish, the work will go much faster when there is a clean, clear road for everything, and above all do not allow the stock to suffer for water even though it is in the heat and rush of bustle, plants that are neglected in this modern range of glass consisting of five houses 34 feet wide and 304 feet long containing an area of more than 50,000 square feet. The houses are Garland's truss iron frame with the celebrated Garland gutter built in ridge and furrow. The gutters are high, set on posts in cast iron foot pieces, the posts being non-corrosible. This construction gives a large, light house, there being no posts except under the gutter, and with the narrow gutters which the construction allows, there is no shade and the maximum amount of light obtained. The ventilation is accomplished with two continuous rows of ventilator sash, one on each side of the ridge operated by the Evans improved Challenge ventilating apparatus, manufactured by the Quaker City Machine Works, Richmond, Ind. This gives plenty of fresh air and the houses are so high that there are no draughts which grants ideal conditions for the best culture. A broad walk extends through the center of the range entering the service building, which makes the working of the force very convenient and time saving.

The houses are devoted to roses entirely, and the larger proportion of plants are Killarney and White Killarney, there being 12,000 each of these two varieties, 4,000 Richmond and 2,000 My Maryland. There are five benches in each house built high enough to work easily, which gives ample circulation of air and the proper fall for the heating pipes under the benches. The crop was in full growth and a large cut being made with a good promise for the balance of the season.

The boiler house and service building are of Garland iron truss and concrete construction, and situated on the north side in the middle of the range, with cement floors and plenty of table room to sort, count and pack the cut rapidly as soon as brought from the houses. A large boiler room is provided and a No. 17 Kroeschell boiler installed and piped with the Kroeschell thread tube piping, there being four miles of pipe in the five houses which give ample heat in the severest weathrespect at this season of bright sunlight and strong winds, very quickly show it. The stock that is growing in frames, such as pansies, should be put up in baskets of a dozen, or more if necessary, and taken to a place handy to reach for the customers, a lot of time is saved in this manner over the way of running to the frames for each dozen plants. As Memorial Day approaches, a good supply of galax and boxwood wreaths should be arranged for a large number of people like to place a fresh wreath on the graves at this time, and a good supply ought to be on hand. Also abundance of cut flowers, peonies, carnations and roses, of course have the first call, but there is a big demand for bunches of cheap flowers which should also be catered to and preparations made.

C. W. JOHNSON.

A Good Forcing Shrub.

It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful sight than a well-flowered bush of Prunus triloba flore pleno, for the delicate rose-colored flowers are one inch across and borne with great freedom from most of the buds on the previous year's growth. In the south of England it may be grown as a bush in the open ground; further north it thrives more satisfactorily against a wall with a south or west aspect. Of late years it has become very popular for forcing for greenhouse decoration, states The Garden. For whichever use it is grown it is necessary to observe one item; that is, in order to obtain the best flowering shoots, it is necessary to prune the annual branches hard back to within an eye or two of the base as soon as the flowers have fallen, for it is only by this means that really good shoots can be expected.

cago, he is in the center of a vast greenhouse district, for no matter which way he turns the roofs of greenhouses and the tall chimneys of the headhouses meet his gaze. This is not only the home of many florists, but on every hand are also market gardeners and acres upon acres devoted to truck gardens, and each of these has its range of houses. A short distance from the station, beside the railroad track, F. Stielow last year erected a er. The circulation is assisted by the Kroeschell circulators, which force the hot water around very rapidly, making it extremely easy to obtain the required temperatures. Next to the boiler room is a large coal bunker in which can be stored a winter's supply, which opens right on the railway tracks. The water is supplied from an artesian well, being pumped with a gasoline engine.

Mr. Stielow came to Chicago and settled at Niles Center in 1874, having learned the business in Boston, Mass., and is therefore one of the oldest florists in this section. He erected a range of houses which he has rebuilt and remodelled three times and it now contains about 50,000 square feet in which are grown carnations, callas and mignonette. The new range in which the roses are grown is managed by F. Stielow, Jr., the son, and the appearance of the crop fully showed that he was able to superintend the range, for the stock was in fine condition and the whole plant as neat as it could be kept.

Nelson & Johnston, Framingham, Mass.

For a number of years Framingham has been celebrated for high grade carnations produced there and shipped into the Boston market, and the large number of prizes awarded the growers of that town, have made it a Mecca for carnation growers. The firm of Nelson & Johnston started seven years ago and they have added not a little to the well earned reputation of the town's products. They have a plant of 35,000 square feet of glass all of which is devoted to carnations with the exception of three small sash houses in which they grow violets, but these also are used for the young carnation stock in the spring. Two of the large houses are glazed with 16x24-inch glass, the glass being set the 24-inch way between sash bars, and the proprietors say that the breakage is less than when set the 16-inch way, and the gain in the amount of light is certainly a great factor. Two 75 h. p. boilers supply steam with which to heat the range.

Everything is well kept and the plants are very vigorous, all the leading varieties being grown. They have built up a fine business on wholesale lines, the product being shipped to Boston where W. A. Hastings handles their whole output. The place always has a prosperous look, and it is a pleasure to see these two men, after hard and diligent work, reach a position where it will be much easier for them in the near future. Mr. Nelson has just finished a cozy dwelling for himself and wife, fitted with hot water heating and electric lights. Mr. Johnston we have personally known for the past twenty years. He, like many others, started when a greenhorn at the Waban Rose Conservatories at Natick, Mass. The partnership of the Swede and the Dane is just as close as it always has been, and they make a pair of level-headed, hard-working business men. MAC.

Carrying Over Cyclamens.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:—

We have some cyclamens left from last year's plants that are now in 3½-inch pots. What would be the best way to grow them so that they would be in bloom for Christmas? H. S.

Cyclamen plants in 3½-inch pots should be treated in the same manner as seedlings and grown right along. It is not often that cyclamen are carried through the winter in such small pots, for with seed sown at the proper time and the plants well grown they are large enough for 6-inch pots in early fall. If the plants are in a healthy condition they will make good stock for Christmas, but if they have become stunted or badly pot bound, it would be better to discard them and procure strong plants. Repot the plants in the same size pots, shaking off some of the old soil, in good fibrous loam with an addition of one-third leaf mold and a little sand and give plenty of drainage. Plunge the pots in a cold frame and cover with sash which is shaded moderately heavy. Raise the sash at both top and bottom to provide good ventilation. Water carefully until the new leaves begin to grow. W.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Planting the Early Varieties.

When it is the best time to plant is a question which often confronts us. It is very difficult to answer such a question intelligently without first considering the kinds to be planted, quality of blooms desired and conditions, both climatic and otherwise, which surround the undertaking. Those who desire the highest grade blooms must resort to early planting, or, in other words, it is more important that their plants are placed early in their flowering quarters than it is to those who desire only a medium grade. Those interested in exhibitions or those who require flowers in September as well as those wishing to produce the highest grade of commercial stock must lose no time, for May is the month this work should be done. We do not infer that very good quality may not be the result from June or early July planting, but those with early planted stock have the advantage, where all other conditions are equal.

When we take into consideration the effect climatic conditions have upon the results we realize how difficult it is to give dates that will insure success. Cool weather during August hastens bud development, a condition considered favorable, or at least preferable, to excessive heat. For the foregoing reasons those in the northern states can often secure the desired bud, whereas the southern grower can not on account of the high temperature and the great amount of water required to sustain the plants, which promotes growth rather than ripening of the wood and bud development.

In this latitude we would pursue the following course as to planting, and in a normal season expect bud to appear at the proper time: To cut Golden Glow and Smith's Advance early in September, plant May 1 to May 15; for crop the last of September to early October, the last of May would be preferable.

We have no pink variety which will come as early as the yellow and white mentioned above. The first large bright pink is Unaka, which, when correctly timed, will be in perfection the first week of October. This variety offers a very limited time for selecting buds, which should be done the first week of August. Those selected earlier are too light in color and those at a later date give thin, open centered flowers. When properly handled this is the best early pink and should be planted from the last of April to the end of May. We planted ours this year April 24. To those who cannot plant soon, we would advise to select some other sort like Pacific Supreme, Gloria, etc., which will give better blooms even if not planted at the proper time (during May), but they will not be ready to cut much before October 20.

The next early variety of special merit and one which will be grown in large quantities in the next few years is Chrysolora. It is not early in the same sense as Golden Glow, but is of the dimensions of Col. D. Appleton, only a trifle lighter in color, fine incurved form, of exceptionally clean, sturdy growth and an easy propagator, maturing October 15 to 25. This we prefer to plant May 20 to June 1 and select bud as near August 20 as possible, either earlier or later buds will give good salable blooms, but this date is best, all things considered.

Comoleta, Early Snow, Glory of Pacific and its two sports, Crema and Polly Rose (sometimes catalogued Estelle), Ivory and its pink and yellow sports are all dwarf and should be planted during May if long stems are desired. Virginia Poehlmann and Donatello will be satisfactory from early June planting. October Frost and the yellow form should be benched in May so they will become strong and to insure a bud early in August, otherwise they are inclined to grow tall, and the late buds give thin and rather small flowers. Chas. Razer, white and yellow Tousey are more rampant in growth, so that the planting may be deferred until early June. Most of the midseason kinds are usually satisfactory if benched by June 20. These as well as the later ones will be considered in another chapter.

It is difficult to advise others what kinds to plant and really it is a problem for each grower to decide upon. He knows, or at least should be in a position to determine, which colors as well as quality are best suited to his purpose, and if the earlies, midseason or late are most in demand. The brisk demand for pompons and pompon anemones last season in all the large cities through the middle west indicates they are gaining in popularity and should be considered. These can be planted in July with good results. They may also be planted outside and lifted the first week of August if space can not be provided in July.

ELMER D. SMITH.

Chrysanthemum William Turner.

In reading the interesting article on Elmer D. Smith & Co.'s establishment at Adrian, Mich., which appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST, issue of November 11, page 832, with descriptions of this season's novelties of chrysanthemums, I notice where it states William Turner is an immense white with firm foliage but a hard doer. Here in the east it is the reverse. A remarkably free grower, having seen it growing in several different establishments this season and in every instance of strong, robust growth. While the flower is extremely large the growth is according, and will support the flower without the slightest bend. I believe William Turner will prove one of the greatest achievements ever sent out as an exhibition incurved white or for general purposes, while Naomah is excellent and very valuable, particularly so through maturing ahead of the other; otherwise it cannot compare with the Well's-Pocket creation as a prize winner in competition. For instance, this fall at the American Institute chrysanthemum exhibition I put up six blooms of Naomah for incurved white. Beautiful though they were, they had to be placed second against a wonderful vase of William Turner. Also, the morning after the three days' exhibition this vase was apparently as fresh as when placed there on the first day, whereas all the others had gone down. I myself exhibited a vase at the Monmouth County Horticultural Society's exhibition for two days; the following week exhibited the same at Asbury Park for two days. They were again brought home, apparently as fresh as the first day when they started out without a blemish or a damaged petal. These are absolute facts in regard to its wonderful keeping qualities which are worthy of note. I predict for 1912 William Turner will be decidedly the leader of its class, namely, incurved white.

WM. TURNER.

A Landscape in Miniature.

The Japanese landscape garden is purely a work of art, constructed after a definite scheme and plan, ordered by fixed conventions, every detail as much a matter of prearrangement as the strategy of a military campaign. Like the Japanese painting, it aims to express the spirit, the soul, the sentiment of a landscape; and while it is conventional and the product of arbitrary arrangement, it is yet nature—nature idealized, tamed, trained and brought to the perfect scale and harmony.

It is a great landscape in miniature, often the mere suggestion, the impression of some famous landscape of the empire, but never the abject copy of any one natural scene. Rather it is an idealization of some happy accident of nature or an improvement on it.—Century.

What to Plant Under Trees.

P. Hanschitz (in a note in Die Gartenwelt, March 2, 1912) on the subject of plants suitable for growing under trees, recommends the following:—Iris foetidissima, which is evergreen, grows to a height of about two feet, and bears blue to lilac flowers and bright scarlet seeds; Helleborus foetidus; H. lividus and H. viridis; species of geranium, such as G. phaeum (flowers dark velvety-red); G. pratense (with purple-red flowers); G. album; G. ibericum (flowers bright blue); G. malvaeflorum (with rose flowers and evergreen and agreeably-scented leaves); and the shrub Hypericum calycinum.

SPEONK, N. Y.—A large tract of land has been purchased and a company formed to erect greenhouses for the cultivation of flowers and vegetables.

CARNATION CALIFORNIA GIANT AS GROWN OUTSIDE IN CALIFORNIA.

A Variety Originated by Richard Diener, Mountain View, Calif.

THE CARNATION.

Carnation California Giant.

Carnation California Giant, which we illustrate, is a variety produced by Richard Diener, Mountain View, Calif., the result of crossing Prosperity and Enchantress. This variety is wonderfully strong and vigorous according to the originator, and very prolific, the plants yielding four or five times as many flowers when field grown as other varieties produce in the houses. The illustration clearly shows the habit, size and quantity of bloom produced as grown in California. A peculiarity of this variety is that in order that the flower may reach perfection it is necessary that the calyx, which is papaver shaped, be split in three or four places, which is done when the flower is about half open. The flowers when fully open are more than five and almost six inches in diameter. Mr. Diener has also developed some fine geraniums which excel existing varieties in size, form of truss and coloring.

Planting and Care of Young Stock.

The most important matter to the carnation grower at this season is to get the young stock planted out, and then to look after it faithfully until it is time to bring it in again, the latter operation usually beginning about the last week of July. This means a great deal of work, especially in the large establishments, where there may be several hundred thousands of plants to handle, for there is no satisfactory way to do it without handling each plant individually, and whether the plants have been grown in pots or planted out on benches in the houses, each one must be taken up separately.

Of course one may plant a large number of plants in a day, provided that the soil is in good condition, being not too wet nor too lumpy, the ground having been well plowed, thoroughly harrowed and leveled. The system of planting will naturally depend upon the quantity to be grown and the ground space available for the purpose. Some growers prefer to space the rows wide enough to use a horse cultivator between them, simply leaving the spaces between the plants in the row to be hoed, while others plant in five-row beds, with a narrow walk between the beds, the plants being spaced 8x10 inches, or 10x10 inches, according to the space to be occupied. It is but a short season that the plants are out in the field, averaging but little more than three months, and during that period they do not fill the ground, even when planted close.

Much hand labor in the field may be saved by being careful to take out all weeds from around the plants before planting out, for weeds that are planted out with the plants have a good start, and mean much hand labor for their elimination. Another safe precaution is that of doing just as much topping as possible before the plants are put out, and careful spraying with insecticides during the spring months will do much towards keeping the young stock free from the various pests that are always waiting to devour it. In a dry season the insects have a much better chance to get ahead outdoors, and both red spiders and green fly will get in their work of crippling the growth of the young carnations, to say nothing of the thrips, these latter frequently giving much trouble during dry weather, and particularly when the carnation beds are bordered with grass and weeds, certain grasses and weeds acting as host-plants for the thrips, and on which they increase and multiply amazingly.

The careful grower will also see to it that none of the young plants are dry at the time of planting, for such a condition hinders the plant from starting away into growth, and is particularly injurious in case the weather should turn dry, a chance that is always possible after having had such abundant rains as those of the present spring. Then there is that necessary cultivation that should be given frequently enough to keep the surface of the soil in an open condition, and at the same time to keep down the weeds, this cultivation being essentially a surface cultivation, and is only deep enough to give a shallow mulch of loose soil. Then there will be topping to be done from week to week, for every plant is not ready to be topped at the same time, and this means many steps in the field and much exercise for the backs of those engaged in the work. These are but routine details, but some of them may be forgotten in the press of work, and it is the object of these notes to remind some of the busy growers that the time has come for them to apply their knowledge.

The flowering stock that is still occupying the benches in the houses also demands attention every day and nearly all day, for with stronger sunshine the plants take up great quantities of water every day, and those in light soil will need watering almost every bright day, while others that occupy heavy soil may get along with a watering two or three times a week. Vigorous syringing will also be in order at short intervals, for red spiders crawl up towards the buds very rapidly, and when this occurs it does not take long for the flowers to lose grade. Lots of air, sufficient water, early cutting of the blooms, that is, before they have a chance to suffer from the effects of the sun, and then to store the flowers away in a cool room—these are some of the things that one needs to remember at this season, and then having grown some good flowers, the latter need careful bunching and tying, and last but not least, they should be carefully packed for market, for the finding of several broken flowers in a bunch does not have a soothing effect upon the mind of the dealer. W. H. TAPLIN.

THE ROSE.

Spring Culture.

As the weather grows warmer day by day and consequently more air is allowed the plants, the moisture in the soil naturally evaporates rapidly, and if one is not rather watchful the plants will be found to show a leaning toward weak growths and loss of substance in the flowers. Of course this is due to the enormous amount of water the soil may have taken up or absorbed. It will be well to remember that for a whole season of forcing a few inches of soil (even with the mulchings applied regularly throughout the season), especially on the raised benches the soil must be considerably exhausted and one must do some extra feeding in order to keep the quality of the blooms at their best for the remainder of the season.

The raised benches should be mulched quite heavily, using fairly well-rotted-cow manure. Some growers often use a mixture of cow and horse manure, but we find at this season that horse manure contains too much ammonia to be used to good advantage, at the same time making a mulch of short feeding duration, whereas the cow manure will furnish nourishment to the plants for a much longer period, which can be made to do double duty by using liquid cow manure once per week full strength. It is quite important that the mulch should be gone over frequently and broken up so as to allow the air to reach the soil from time to time. It is a good plan to remove whatever is left of a previous mulch, that will come away easily without disturbing any of the roots.

Perhaps one desires to carry over some of the stock for the second year on the raised benches. This makes it all the more important to have the plants built up as strongly as possible through intelligent feeding. Some of the finest roses we have ever seen were the two year old plants carried over on raised benches. Some may hesitate to attempt this method, yet at times on a small place the grower is forced to do this in order to have the cuts last practically the whole year around. Better results can no doubt be obtained as a rule by transferring the plants from the raised benches to the solid beds, and giving them an entirely new soil to work in, yet by removing two-thirds of the soil carefully from the benches and refilling with a good compost, splendid results can be obtained by a careful grower. It may be a little early to talk of the carrying over methods, etc., at the same time, one must decide ahead of time and make preparations accordingly.

Do not put off buying young stock until the last minute; take a careful inventory of the stock on hand; do the figuring now, figure accurately; and order at once so as to get the stock potted off and going ahead in the soil they are to be grown in during the rest of the season. Keep the young stock you have on hand clean, free of weeds, and allow them the necessary room, and it may be necessary to give them a second watering every day where they are found to be a little too dry, each morning. There is nothing quite so injurious as to let the roots of the young stock get too dry, especially new root stock. Plants in pots readily become infested with eelworms under conditions stated above.

Do not be in any great hurry to dispense with the night fireman, even if the steam heat should only be in circulation for an hour or two. The houses may go along in good shape apparently till midnight, but the damage usually occurs between 3 a. m. and daylight, causing the condensations to collect on the foliage which will do much toward ruining the otherwise cheerful outlook for the coming season than can be blamed to any other cause, for the effect of the cold dew on the foliage is deadly. The damage is materially lessened by keeping the air on day and night, but let me repeat that for economy's sake keep the fireman on just as long as there is any danger of the foliage being found with a coating of frost or something almost as damaging. Water Lilies and Other Aquatics.

Paper read before the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society by William Tricker, May 8, 1912.

This topic may appear unreasonable or unseasonable, as at this date flowers are out of season and I have no pictures to exhibit with lantern-slides. On the face of it, it may appeal to you as being very dry, but I hope I may say a few words in favor of these plants that will interest you. Florists, gardeners and those who own suburban homes and the mass of humanity love the country, the green fields, hills and valleys, woods and plains and the landscape in general with all its varied beauties in nature as they appear to us in the spring of the year with its resurrection of life, its unfolding leafage, buds and flowers pointing to summer's fullness and fruition and autumn's gathering in.

The landscape through all the changing seasons is a panorama of beauty and richness of color, the handwork of the great architect of the universe, created for our adoration, our enjoyment, our life and health. As we are all sons of our father Adam (the first gardener) we naturally take to his profession and we think of the old homestead, the old fashioned flowers, the fruit, the trees, the landscape and one thing more prominent than any other on the landscape, most picturesque and which no artist omits on the canvas, is the widening stream—that piece of water. Yes, in the first garden we read of rivers of water and something of the plants and trees planted by the side and down through the ages to this twentieth century those fortunate enough to possess a large share of the world's goods have also had their beautiful gardens, and where there were gardens there were rivers and streams and water courses, and with these naturally were aquatic plants. See how nature has distributed aquatic plants on this great continent of ours. You take your machine and tour through the great mid-Atlantic and other states; you pass by numerous lakes and ponds and other sluggish streams. On the surface of some you espy the lily pads and the opening lilies of purity kissed by the dews of the Heavens as they float in crystal waters. Here you find one gem, there another, each emitting a rich, delicate perfume, inviting, enticing, entrapping a host of winged gay insects. We have ten or a dozen species and varieties of water lilies in the United States and of aquatic plants there is no end, but allow me to mention the cat tails, Typha latifolia, together with the sedges, the hibiscus with its mammoth flowers, the gorgeous cardinal flower and its blue companion, the many arrow-heads, the calthas, the lithrum, esclapia, thalictum, irises, etc., far too many to mention, but everywhere you turn the moist places are resplendent with verdure and beauty. Turn to Europe, and there you will find her ponds, pools and lakes no less beautiful, yet adorned with other gems mostly white, reflecting their pure flowers on the placid surface as in a mirror.

We journey and we visit the cool lakes of Sweden and Switzerland. There we find another tenant of the cool, crystal lakes, modest and retreating and scarcely seen or heard of away from its native haunts. There are still others in the temperate climes, and we cross over to Siberia and Japan and there we find a miniature creation of a water lily, the smallest known. Alongside with this we have the gigantic lotus, with its petalate leaves, six, eight or more feet in circumference, with monstrous flowers, 24 or more inches in circumference, standing four, five, six feet above the surface of the water. These were held in such esteem that they were considered worthy to be carved over the chapters of the pillars of King Solomon's temple. Let us pass over to ancient Egypt, where the Egyptian lotus was pre-eminent but now extinct, and see there the ancient bullrush, the papyrus, the peer of cyperus or any other zinnia, but what of the nymphaeas, the water lilies of Africa from north to south, from east to west, and the islands of Zanzibar. Nowhere else in the world are there found such a wealth of flowers; here only are found the blue species together with a white and yellow (not yet in commerce). Let us pass on to the great continent of India. Here under a tropical sun and burning heat that would wither its flowers, nature provided that the water lilies should unfold their splendor in the cool of the evening, and as blue is no night color (or serviceable under artificial light) the water lilies of India are red and white.

There are still others in the tropics of South America and on the Amazon tributaries we arrive at the climax, the most wonderful of all aquatic plants, the Victoria Regia. Further down on the tributaries of the Para river is found the Victoria Cruziana, introduced into cultivation by the speaker and now grown more largely than the Victoria Regia, as it yields readily to cultivation under similar conditions to the tender nymphaeas and can be grown without artificial heat in our own state and elsewhere, save north of New York, although it has been grown with excellent results in Elizabeth Park, Hartford, Conn., by a man whose name is worth mentioning.

Gentlemen, I have alluded to a class of wild flowers largely distributed that have attracted the attention of the human race for thousands of years. They are mostly exotic, they have been collected from the four quarters of the globe, they have been brought together as one family and the botanist, hybridist and the cultivator have worked these flowers with as great and astonishing results as in any one class of flowers, with the result that the water lilies of today are not known in their native homes; they do not belong there; if they belong anywhere it is the new world where they are recognized and prized for their great worth and where they may be honorably styled "Florists' Flowers." We have an increasing demand every year for these flowers for special occasions, at summer resorts, especially the night bloomers; they are not only well adapted for such purposes, but they are equally adapted for natural and artificial ponds, etc., as the flowers remain open until near noon and many people do not know that they belong to a class by themselves, as they are open with the others in the early morning.

Florists are using them for window display in summer where no other flowers are so attractive and especially suited for the occasion. But let us take it as a decorative plant where it is adapted for the cottage garden or the more pretentious garden of the wealthy; also public parks. There is an immense field to draw from and varieties in miniature and gigantic proportions to suit every case and condition. For the small garden we have the pygmea, white, pink, yellow and blue, with the nelumbiums also adapted for such culture. As the area increases and the facility for culture there are numerous varieties adapted for the Italian garden, the semi-wild or natural garden, ponds and lakes, both artificial and natural. For several years our public parks have made an effort to instruct the public; it is more or less of a success and it is here the public have been enthused with the desire to have their own water garden and today many are inquiring how they may grow these beautiful flowers, when to plant and numerous questions. As I have said before, we have water lilies from all sections of the globe and their many hybrids. It will take a novice a little time to get acquainted with all of these; suffice it to say that almost every known nymphaea, nelumbium and Victoria can be grown successfully in our state and most every state in the Union. Their wants are few; they are all sun loving plants; full exposure to the sun; protection against strong winds, a rich soil and plenty of it. Here is where many failures are made—water lilies grow in water. Yes, but in their native water natural ponds and sluggish streams there is a rich soil at the bottom and plants in artificial ponds must be provided with ample soil of a rich, mellow loam enriched with thoroughly rotted cow, sheep or horse manure. The hardy nymphaeas may be planted in May when growth is active or assured. Nelumbiums are better deferred a while longer; they are impatient of being disturbed. The tender varieties should not be planted until the latter end of May or beginning of June. Don't forget they are tropical and we are not living there.

With this collection of water lilies we have our first flowers early in May and I have had some in June, but in July and August (our hot months) they decline somewhat, the flowers being smaller, but in June the tender varieties commence to flower and increase in size and color until they eclipse the hardy varieties and they hold their own until the cool nights of September are upon us. The lotus are generally at their best during July and August. As to the depth of artificial ponds, I have had excellent results where the water has been two feet deep, allowing boxes one foot deep to be submerged one foot. The boxes may be made of ordinary lumber or packing cases and a good plant so desired would require from four to nine cubic feet of soil and a tender or tropical variety would cover about 75 to 100 square feet of surface. The hardy varieties are not so vigorous and I would plant three hardy where I would plant one tender. The lotus in about the same proportion as the tender nymphaeas.

All natural or artificial ponds, tubs, etc., should have gold fish in the water to keep down the mosquitoes. The water will not of necessity have to be changed. An overflow pipe is very desirable, although the plants oxygenize the water. There will occasionally be a scum on the water which can be washed off. Do not have running water or cold spring water running all the time; fill only to replace loss by evaporation.

Thought Bulbs.

BY GARDENIA SMART WEED.

Although I am passionately fond of flowers, I do not love all flowers equally. Flowers are like people—modest or bold, virtuous or dissolute, shy or forward, and so on. Some flowers like Lilium rhapsodia, make no attempt to be beautiful—they simply are so; others, like the sunflower, are as vain of their beauty as Yum-Yum; while scarlet poppies are the most abandoned things!

Then some flowers, I am sure, have no souls. The nasturtium has no soul, nor the tiger lily; I am not so sure about the hollyhock. Generally speaking, flowers without odors are without souls; and that is why the rose is so soulful; the rose, I am sure, is immortal.

Mornings and evenings I sit in the garden and talk to my flowers. I love to enter into their lives, to share their thoughts, their aspirations, their hopes; to rejoice with them in the fullness of their flowerhood; and, sweetly sad duty, to be alone with them when they die. It is beautiful to think that some of my pets are imperishable. Poppycoccus literatus and Folderolla sentimentalis can never die!—Chicago Tribune.

NEXT week's issue will go to press earlier than usual on account of the holiday and advertisers and correspondents will therefore oblige by mailing their copy one day earlier than usual.

THE price of the French-grown immortelles is expected by the best authorities to be lower than last year, but still very high. The market rates are established about the first ten days in July.

THE Arizona Horticultural Commission has issued a circular which embodies the "Arizona Horticultural Law and its Applications Concerning the Importations of Plants" which florists and nursery men should obtain before making shipments to that state. A copy may be secured by applying to the Arizona Horticultural Commission, Phoenix, Ariz.

Yearbook of Agriculture.

We are in receipt of the yearbook of the United States Department of Agriculture for 1911 which, in addition to the customary reports of bureau chiefs, contains many interesting papers by experts, of which the following are likely to interest some of our readers: "The Reduction of Waste in Marketing," by Frank Andrews; "Relation between Rotation Systems and Insect Injury in the South," by W. D. Hunter; "Important American Soils," by Jay A. Bonsteel; "Bird Enemies of the Codling Moth," by W. L. McAtee; "Tree Planting by Farmers," by C. R. Tillotson; "Plant Introduction for the Plant Breeder," by David Fairchild; "Promising New Fruits," by W. A. Taylor and H. P. Gould; "Green Vegetables and Their Uses in the Diet," by C. F. Langworthy; "The Value of Predaceous Beetles in Destroying Insect Pests," by A. F. Burgess and C. W. Collins.

Importation and Movement of Plants.

A bill to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts and to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants and vegetables, is reproduced on page 1096 of this issue, known as Bill H. R. 24, 119, was presented to the House of Representatives of the United States May 3, 1912, by Representative Simmons and referred to the committee on agriculture. In reporting the bill back to the house May 6 when it was committed to the committee of the whole house, the committee explained the provisions of the bill and called attention to the conditions which necessitate the legislation, as the United States is the only great power without protection from the importation of insect infestes and diseased plant stock, and recounted the several injurious insects and diseases which had been introduced into the country on imported stock. They also stated that there has been practically a universal demand for the legislation, the only opposition being that of importing nurserymen, who feared that a law might be passed that would interfere with the nursery interests, but the bill had been fully discussed with the committee on legislation of the National Association of Nurserymen and this committee has accepted it as satisfactory to them and as desirable legislation.

The bill now presented has been considerably altered from preceding bills to meet the contentions of the nurserymen, among important changes are: To the several states are left the responsibility of inspection at destination of imported stock and the cleaning up and disinfection of local quarantine districts and the appointment of the Federal Horticultural Board is more in the manner advocated by the nurserymen.

What England Can Teach Us in Gardening.

That we imitate England wrongly in gardening and that the only way we can surpass that country, which has been called "The most beautiful country in the world," is by a study and planting of our longest-lived native trees and thereby obtain 90 per cent of the English luxuriance in our own lifetime. "Let every country use chiefly its own trees, shrubs, vines and other permanent material and let the style of gardening grow naturally out of necessity, soil and the new conditions." These are the lessons taught in a volume entitled "What England Can Teach Us About Gardening," by Wilhelm Miller, Ph. D., just issued, which describes the beautiful results that have been obtained in English gardens, and draws conclusions as to what may be done in similar lines in America. Different styles of planting and all the separate gardens are taken up under their respective headings such as general landscape, hardy borders, water gardens, wild rock and wall gardening, peat and rose gardens. The effects which are obtained in England with the different plants and flowers and the lessons America can learn are clearly described. At the end of each chapter are cited the best books on each special subject. The book is a masterpiece of the printer's art, bound in board and contains in 360 pages, 112 beautiful photographic plates of the best examples of the several styles of English gardening and eight plates in color that depict the beautiful effects obtained by natural planting. The subject is handled by the author in the most complete and comprehensive manner and is a work of thorough research as well as advanced teaching in the planting of small gardens as well as extended estates.

Wants the Earth.

One of the most unusual claims ever filed with a city department is that of Squire Herrick, at one time a well known nurseryman, recently filed with the Cincinnati Park Commission. Herrick had leased his nursery on Price Hill to the commission which raised seedling trees and shrubs there. These were later transplanted in various city parks.

Herrick now says that when the trees and shrubs were dug up some of his earth clung to the roots. He wants to be paid for the earth which was thus removed from his property. He says that during the last four years there must have been fifty-five cart-loads of it, and asks $2 a load.—N. Y. Tribune.

BUSINESS VERY ACTIVE.

The business at all the wholesale stores enjoyed a great boom the latter part of last week and the first of this and all the stock cleaned up nicely, and with Memorial day only a week ahead there is no question but that all the available stock will find a ready sale. Roses are being received in good quantities and so are sweet peas, but the carnation receipts are far below what are generally to be had at this season of the year. The weather has been more like April than May, there being frequent showers followed by sunshine, but the buyers are out and the retailers are enjoying a good trade. The weddings are beginning and there are many banquets being held which keep the decorators busy and use large quantities of flowers. It looks as if there would be no immense supply for Memorial day, for the carnation growers are not holding back any great amount of stock. They simply are not cutting the usual quantity and there is very little inducement to hold back for the prices are almost as good as they will be for Memorial day. The houses that handle peonies say that there will not be as many of these flowers as there generally is; the southern crop is quite short and the spring has been so backward that they do not expect a large local out. Roses are the principal product of the market; the receipts are large and the quality is fine, but there is a demand for all the stock that is received and some of the large growers are waiting for the shipments to arrive to fill their orders. American Beauties are of good quality and can be had in all grades by the early buyers. Killarney, My Maryland, Mrs. Jardine and Prince de Bulgarie are the best of the pink, and the best stock all finds ready sale; White Killarney is the white in largest quantity, but Bride and Kaiserin are both to be had; Richmond and Rhea Read are the reds; while in yellow, Perle des Jardins, Melody, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Sunrise are all offered. There is a fine selection of varieties, but to obtain the best stock an advance order is often necessary. Carnations, as has been stated, are selling at good prices, and fortunately, so one of the wholesalers says, for many of the carnation growers have had a bad season. Sweet peas are of splendid quality and some elegant Spencer varieties are to be had. Orchids are in fair supply and the demand is good. Gladiolus are being received in large shipments. Mrs. Francis King, Augusta and America are to be had and plenty of Bride and Blushing Bride. Tulips are in good supply and many fancy varieties, including Parrots, are seen. Outside lily of the valley are now among the daily offerings. Lilies and callas are received in smaller quantities and they clean up well. Spanish iris is freely displayed in many colors. Lilac is to be had in quantity, the home grown being now in. Peonies are being received in good sized shipments and in several colors; that grand variety, Festiva Maxima, was seen this week. The first double white narcissus came this week and should be just right for Memorial day. Forget-me-nots, pansies, marguerites, antirrhinum, calendulas, mignonette are the other flowers to be had. Greens are still none too plentiful, hardy ferns are bringing good prices, smilax is still in short supply and the receipts of asparagus are not large. The conditions are such at present that it looks as if the out-of-town florists would do well to place their Memorial day orders early, for the prospects are that the supply will be spoken for in advance.

NOTES.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cook County Florists' Association was held at the Union Restaurant last Thursday, May 16, with President Kohbrand in the chair. Many communications were read and the Sports and Pastime Committee was instructed to go ahead and make the necessary arrangements for the grand picnic which will be given at Karthausers grove on July 14. It was also voted to have a Dutch lunch at the next regular monthly meeting when the new by-laws will be discussed and the life members presented with a suitable token of appreciation.

The Lord & Burnham Co.'s office of which George Sykes is manager, reports the following orders for building: Southern Illinois Penitentiary, Menard, Ill., three curved eave greenhouses and installing hot water heating apparatus; Vincent Schwabe, Vancouver, B. C., material for five greenhouses; J. W. Davis Co., Bettendorf, Ia., two sectional iron frame greenhouses, 64½x600 feet.

Joe Welsh, for many years employed on the local market, is now with Kyle & Foerster, the firm that is handling some of the fancy Butterfly sweet peas.

L. Hoekner is again conducting his flower booth at Riverview park, and "Stogie's" many friends wish him a most successful season.

J. A. Sikuta, West Twelfth street, has finished remodeling his store and it now presents a most favorable appearance.

A. Miller of A. Henderson & Co. is again calling on his out-of-town customers.

The J. B. Deamud Co. received its first shipment of Double White narcissus on May 21 and the quality of the 28,000 flowers that were unpacked was exceptionally fine and a credit to the grower. The surprise was a perfect success for they caught him painting his back porch. Everybody had a fine time and many were the compliments extended to Mrs. Matchen on the repast and her culinary art.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is filling a good many orders for carnations and the stock is of high quality and very good for shipping orders. J. F. Kidwell, the manager, says that he is pleased to see the carnations bring such good prices for the growers on the whole have not had a most satisfactory season.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. is featuring a fine grade of peonies in all the leading varieties as well as a choice grade of Mrs. Francis King, America and Augusta gladioli. This house is receiving a large number of Memorial day orders and everything points to a very satisfactory holiday trade.

F. O. Franzen, the Summerdale avenue florist, says that the demand for boxwood trees and bay trees is very good and that business in general is very satisfactory. He is using printers' ink quite heavily and the result is a rapidly increasing business.

Peter Reinberg is cutting more heavily now in Mrs. Aaron Ward roses and a very select grade of My Maryland, Killarney, White Killarney, American Beauties and Richmond are also arriving at the store in large quantities.

Peonies is the word at the E. F. Winterson Co. and the stock that is Dwight L. Harris says that the Pulverized Manure Co. is having a fine season and that the force is working day and night.

Chas. W. McKellar is offering a good supply of fancy peonies and one of his growers writes that his stock is in fine shape and that he will be full crop for Memorial day. The supply department is busy filling holiday orders and probably one of the best sellers in this line is the Meyer Green Silkaline. This thread has been in use for over a quarter of a century and is recognized by most florists as being the best thread on the market.

John Kruchten is supplying his customers with a fine grade of carnations, peonies and roses and is finding no trouble in disposing of his select stock. The gardenia crop is very light now, but Mr. Kruchten figures that they will be better property in June, the month of weddings. Cape Jasmine of good quality is now being offered freely and is meeting with very good sale.

Wietor Bros. are just about in full crop and will be strong in everything for Memorial day, especially in long stemmed American Beauties, Richmond, Killarney and White Killarney roses and carnations. The American Beauty roses are especially fine and the long canes carry magnificent buds and are well laden with luxuriant foliage.

J. A. Budlong is cutting a large quantity of his blue ribbon lily of the valley and the stock that is now seen at the store is the finest of the season. The cut of stock in general is good and consists of some exceptionally fine My Maryland roses, Butterfly sweet peas and Aristocrat and Afterglow carnations.

Vaughan's Seed Store distributed a car of burlapped sphagnum to the trade this week, shipments going from New England to California. This stock came from their newly opened live moss ranch near the head waters of the west branch of the Wisconsin river.

John Mangel had a very busy week. The banquet at the Union League called for a large number of bouquets and other flowers.

Canger & Gormley had the decoration and bridal flowers for an elaborate wedding, Saturday, May 18.

President Loveridge has appointed the following committee to be in charge of the booth at the convention of the Society of American Florists to be held in Chicago in August as a headquarters for the members of the society and to solicit membership: C. L. Washburn, Hinsdale; A. C. Brown, Springfield; I. L. Pillsbury, Galesburg; H. E. Smith, Danville; J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville; C. L. Loveridge (ex-officio), Peoria.

In pursuance to provision in the constitution the president has appointed H. W. Buckbee and I. L. Pillsbury, vice presidents to serve for three years. J. F. AMMANN, Secy.

Chicago-Milwaukee Bowling.

Two six-men teams representing the Milwaukee Florists' bowling league came down from the Cream City last Sunday, May 19, to trim up the local bowlers, and it looked for a while as if they would succeed, but the locals came back strong in the second and last games and won by a big margin. The Milwaukee boys are good losers and took their defeat gracefully, but the local boys had better be careful, for the visitors are coming down strong for the convention and intend to be on the top of the list when the bowling is over. After the bowling at Bensinger's new alleys was over a lunch was tendered the visitors and after all had their fill Fred Holton thanked the local boys in behalf of the visitors for the kind reception they had received and concluded with the remark that his crowd had had a most enjoyable time. Chas. Balliff and John Zech, with a chorus of thirty, entertained the gathering and it was 9:30 p. m. before the happy crowd broke up and escorted the Cream City gentlemen to the depot. The following scores were made:

STOCK CONSIDERABLY SHORTER.

The first part of the week stock came in quite plentiful as bright weather prevailed for a few days, but toward the latter part with the cold, dismal rainy weather stock shortened up considerably, especially in carnations and prices immediately advanced. Roses also have reached a high price and in fact most all stock has shortened up, but, nevertheless, prospects for Memorial day are good. The first gladioli have made their appearance on the local market, but as this is the first they are not here in quantity. Sweet peas are coming in in better colors, although there is also a shortage in this line. There is plenty of bedding stock, such as geraniums and pansies and other outdoor stock, which keeps the local nurserymen busy. Plenty of green goods to supply the demand.

NOTES.

Fred W. Mueller, business manager, and Gustav C. Mueller, his son, grower of the Mueller & Schroeder Co., sold their share in the business to Wm. R. Schroeder, who will in the future conduct the business under the name Schroeder Floral Co. Fred W. Mueller, his son, Gustav C., and his brother, Gustav H., have formed a corporation under the name of Mueller Greenhouse Co., with authorized capital of $25,000. This firm bought a beautiful 20-acre tract of land near the Holton & Hunkel Co.'s plant in Brown Deer, and at once let the contract for the erection of two greenhouses each 25½x300 feet. The plant, which is devoted to the growing of carnations only, will be enlarged by one or two houses next spring, and will be known by the name of Fairview Gardens. The officers of the corporation are: Gustav Charles Mueller, president; Gustav Herman Mueller, vice-president; Fred W. Mueller, secretary and treasurer; the same three gentlemen also forming the board of trustees. Fred V. Mueller will be the general manager and Gustav C. Mueller the superintendent and grower. Hot water heat will be used and all the latest and most modern appliances installed. The boiler house, 30x60 feet, will be of concrete blocks, and the chimney, 60 feet high, of brick. Gutter posts set in concrete are eight feet above the ground and the heating system will be overhead. The whole plant is to be completed by July 1, when the housing of the carnation plants is to be begun.

The Milwaukee Florists' Bowling Club bowled a match game with the Chicago boys at Bensinger's alleys, Chicago, and certainly were treated royally and had a good time. It is not necessary to say that they were beaten, as this is the usual case. Nevertheless, the Milwaukee bowlers always go back for more, as they are game losers and do not care about getting beaten. After the bowling a luncheon was served at the tavern and this was certainly done up in fine shape. Chas. Bailiff entertained the boys in fine shape with songs which were highly appreciated by the crowd. The Milwaukee florists left Chicago on the 10 o'clock train with every one satisfied with the good time.

At the Gust Rusch & Co. wholesale house the entire force is kept busy and reports are that business is far beyond their expectations. This concern is handling some very fine greenhouse larkspur and lupines.

Peter Nohos, of the Nohos Co., is in the hospital to be operated on for gall stones, which have troubled him for some time.

Holton & Hunkel Co. are looking forward to a large Memorial day business and have been kept busy at the greenhouses and store for the past two weeks.

C. C. Pollworth Co.'s greenhouse force is kept busy with their bedding stock. They also report business good at the store.

A. Currie Co. are well pleased with their seed trade and have had a full force working all of the time.

Currie Bros. Co. report business good and have been kept busy with funeral work and other events.

PLENTIFUL SUPPLY.

The rainy weather last week had its effect upon the sale of flowers. Business was very quiet, picking up some at the week end. The shipping orders on Wednesday and Thursday were quite large for southern Memorial day, but the city trade was a little dull. Peonies are coming in now. Outdoor lily of the valley is about over. The supply of roses and carnations and in fact all cut flowers is plentiful.

NOTES.

The preliminary schedule of premiums for the annual fruit, floral and vegetable show, held in connection with the annual meeting of the State Horticultural Society, November 18-23, has been issued. The premiums have been increased and all information will be furnished by T. B. Symons, College Park, Md.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club have sent out invitations to an entertainment and dance May 27 at the club rooms.

Window boxes in several homes and beds and borders are being planted.

STOCK LIMITED.

The depletion of stock of all kinds as a result of the big trade Mother's day, and the cloudy, cold weather that followed during the past week, had the effect of keeping up stiff prices, for the limited stock obtainable. The quality, too, was poorer than at any time this spring, roses alone, maintaining fair quality as well as quantity. Sweet peas were not as attractive nor were carnations, up to the usual standard of merit. The progress of plant trade so nicely started early in the month was by the inclement weather materially hindered, and all are awaiting the lifting of the clouds and warmer weather, and even with the latter conditions flowers of all kinds will be scarce for Memorial day. The carnation growers being sure of a shortage.

CLUB MEETING.

The club meeting Monday evening, May 20, was attended by twenty members. The essayist for the evening, J. J. Kairins, was unavoidably absent, but the time was well spent in a general discussion of Mother's day trade, and perfecting plans for getting newspaper publicity in a similar way for exploiting Memorial day. The efforts of the club through its committees to popularize Mother's day were eminently successful, and gave encouragement for similar work for May 30. A fund was raised for advertising and placed in charge of R. Rahaley and J. F. Sullivan, and efforts will be made to cause the people to remember the departed by the free use of flowers in the cemeteries. R. H. Flowerday was elected to membership.

NOTES.

Mrs. Elizabeth Beard, mother of Edwin Beard of Beard Bros., died Saturday morning, May 18, at the advanced age of nearly eight-four years. The funeral was held Monday afternoon, May 20, interment at Woodmere Cemetery. A great number of floral emblems were sent, many of them from florists, and many of the latter attended the funeral.

M. Bloy is disposing of thousands of plants this week, by his low-priced cash sales, with no deliveries.

Mrs. Hugo Schroeter left May 21 for Boston and Newport, her old home, where she will remain several weeks.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at Pembroke hall, Glen Cove, on the evening of May 8, President Johnston in the chair. L. Hubbard of Glen Cove was elected to active membership. Communications were read from the following, offering special prizes for the coming fall show: D. Burns, Kohler Bros. and A. G. Hodenpyle. The judges, Everett Johnson and Robertson, examined the exhibits and made awards as follows: Six tomatoes, V. Cleres, first; three cauliflower, V. Cleres, first; three lettuce, V. Cleres, first. Exhibition of lettuce, F. Pettrocia; mushrooms, F. Pettrocia; radishes, J. Marmaroli, thanks of society; sweet peas, J. MacDonald, honorable mention.

The executive committee submitted a schedule for exhibits by the pupils of the public school at the dahlia show and the society made an appropriation of $25 for the same. A. Herrington is to speak on out-door horticulture at the June meeting, and members should make every effort to have a good attendance. The society's prizes for that meeting will be for 12 hardy roses, 12 strawberries and vase of German iris. JAMES MACDONALD, Sec'y.

St. Louis.

A DULL MARKET.

The market was dull the first of the week but toward the latter part there was a decrease in supply which caused somewhat stiffer prices, but the quality is much poorer. Cape Jasmine are in but the buds are small. It is not expected that the supply of outdoor stock for Memorial day will be plentiful.

NOTES.

The annual floral sermon was preached at Christ's Church cathedral last Sunday. The church was beautifully decorated with rhododendrons and peonies. This service is held annually by provisions in the will of the late Henry Shaw.

Mrs. Marguerite Eggeling has a very pretty new store which was recently erected. Trade is very good and she is doing a satisfactory business. G. Eggeling has been ill but is around again.

Mullanphy, Florist, are doing a nice trade, and for the short space of time they have been in business have been very successful. Mr. Seeger and Mr. Kingley are both enterprising.

F. H. Weber has a busy time as vice president of the S. A. F. He hopes to swell the list of members and have a big delegation to attend the next convention.

The florists' union met at the House of Flowers of Ostertag Bros. at Coliseum City. This firm is strictly union and pays its employes overtime for extra work.

Grimm & Gorly and Ostertag Bros. furnished many elaborate designs for the funeral of Senator Kinnay, May 18.

SOCIETY LEAVING THE CITY.

Things are beginning to look summery, folks going out of town, many are already away and the houses are boarded up. The result of this exodus is being felt to a degree by the stores with the fashionable trade and the wholesale dealers have quite a time disposing of their stock. The supply is about normal for the season, there is plenty of everything. American Beauties are offered very low in hundred lots, the quality of the stock being fine. Other roses are plentiful, but the quality is deteriorating with the warm weather. Carnations are not piling up much and are holding fairly well in price. Southern peonies are quite a factor as orders for almost any quantity can be furnished on a day's notice, and quite large stocks were seen at all times the past week. Sweet peas were poor during the damp days of last week, but are showing better and new crops coming in will make a good showing in a few days. Some fine Cattleya gigas are seen; these were offered by the Jos. Heacock Co., being exhibition flowers.

NOTES.

The Lord & Burnham Co. have recently booked orders for pipe frame greenhouses for J. C. Schmidt, York; Miss G. C. Wakelin, Quinton, N. J.; Stevenson Bros., Baltimore, Md.; Albert Beckman, Raspeburg, Md.; Lemuel Ball Estate, Wisconsin, 22x125 feet, with two largest sectional hot water boilers. Iron frame houses for Harry A. The new greenhouse work is getting along nicely. George Anderson's new range of communicating houses are to take the place of old houses and adding about one-third more to the ground covered by increasing the length and taking up the space between the old ones is almost completed. The Lord & Burnham Co.'s house at Roele's, for the Jos. Heacock Co., is so far under way that it may be said to be finished and will be planted next week. The large Franklin house, 72x600 feet, at Yards, is also going up fast and will be finished in plenty of time for early planting.

Founders' day at Girard College, one of the institutions of this city for fatherless boys, took place May 20. The money for which was willed for the purpose by Stephen Girard in 1832. The fund originally amounted to about seven million dollars; it is now estimated at between sixty and seventy millions and growing fast. 1,600 boys are now in charge of the college, which in its years of service, has been of untold worth to the community. A farm of one thousand acres near the city is being secured with the idea of giving the boys a love for outdoor country life. Charles Cox, the superintendent of the grounds, had the flower beds and lawns in fine condition and had handsome plant decorations in the prominent buildings in honor of the day.

Henry A. Dreer received about a shipload of choice kentias, araucarias and bay trees the past week; it would have caused comment the length of the land a few years ago, but is now by them considered just a little addition to the stock to make up in lines that have been thinned out by the remarkable sales of this season, which so far have broken all records of the company.

Adolph Farenwald of Roslyn, president of the American Rose Society, sailed for Europe on May 14 from New York. He will take in the International Flower Show and visit the home of his birth, where Mrs. Farenwald will join him in June. K.

Rochester, N. Y.

The conditions in the wholesale market continue to be very satisfactory, but flowers are getting scarcer, though the quality keeps up well. Roses of all kinds are good, some exceptionally good American Beauties being received. The beautiful snapdragons which we have had for several weeks are almost at an end. White sweet peas of good quality, having exceedingly long stems, are received and are very useful for decorative purposes. Orchids have cleared out nicely, many having been used for funeral work, which most of the florists have had. Callas and Easter lilies are good, and lily of the valley is of fine quality.

Smilax is still very scarce, the supply being far below the ordinary requirements.

ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Association was held May 13, when committees to prepare for the summer flower show were named, who will decide upon the date. The general committee selected consists of the local florists' organization and a large number of prominent citizens, the mayor included. President John Dunbar, in speaking of the early selections of committees; said that immediate organization and a survey of the field would be a great aid to the success of the flower show. It was decided at the last meeting to invite the Syracuse association and May 22 was recommended as the date for that visit. There is also a possibility of the Horticultural Society of St. Catharines, Can., paying us a visit with a delegation of about 250 to inspect Highland park, whom it is thought will arrive May 24, and a committee of eight members was appointed to meet them on arrival. President Dunbar gave a talk on the history of the narcissus, which was illustrated by showing 33 varieties in the nine groups of this flower. Following Mr. Dunbar, Professor A. C. Beal, assistant of Cornell University, was called upon to talk on sweet peas. He told of the disease that was being combated at Cornell, and then launched out into his real theme. He came primarily with the intention of interesting the local florists, amateur and commercial, in a centralized power for protection from harmful legislation at Albany. This state-wide federation offers a remedy for the existing evils and he hoped the Rochester organization would take the matter up. With Mr. Young, also of Cornell, he has been working on a revision of the premium list at the State Fair, and is boosting the experimental greenhouse project for Cornell. William Perie, head gardener for George Eastman, spoke on "Renovating of Old Lawns and How to Make a Good Lawn." This proved a very interesting talk and caused the asking of several questions. Colin B. Ogston introduced the following resolution in regard to the free distribution of seeds, which was adopted, and a copy sent to Representative Danforth:

"Whereas, certain distribution of the Department of Agriculture has gone beyond the limit of what congress (by law) originally intended, and whereas, by that section since added, free distribution of seeds has become repugnant and vicious in its entirety, be it

"Resolved, That this society does condemn and oppose fearlessly this disreputable outrage committed on all floral, horticultural and agricultural societies, and we hereby send a report of this action to our representative, asking him to oppose this free seed distribution act, it being in direct opposition to which it was first intended."

This is possibly a beginning to a great end. What other societies will help us in our endeavor?

NOTES.

Chas. Curtis of Irondequoit is growing extra fine pelargoniums with which he supplies several of the leading florists.

Mrs. Edwin P. Wilson entertained the ladies of the Florists' Association at her home on Edgerton street Tuesday, May 14.

Henry P. Neun reports business as being fairly good and was very busy Saturday with funeral work.

H. E. Wilson has been rushed with funeral work all last week. Business is keeping up well. H. J. H.

SATISFACTORY CONDITIONS.

Everything good is cleaning up quickly, and some stock not of the best is selling. Only one exception should be made, and that is in lilies. The market on these continues very slow, the supply is large and sales only fair. Carnations are slowing up more every day and according to indications will be very short for Memorial day. At this writing they are almost all selling at sight. Roses, too, are selling fairly well, the good, clean stock is in demand, the offerings include Pink and White Killarney, Brides, Bridesmaids, Richmond, Rhea Reid, Ivory and Golden Gates. American Beauties are selling nicely. The sweet pea supply has let up considerably and they are running short of the call. The supply of lily of the valley and the demand is about even. Orchids are moving nicely. Both large and miniature gladioli clean up regularly and are much in demand. Other flowers are peonies, pansies, stocks and marguerites. According to reports there will be plenty of peonies for Memorial day.

FOR DECORATION DAY

We have made special arrangements for Large Supplies all along the line, and will as usual be "HEADQUARTERS" for all kinds of Cut Flowers and Greens. We can fill any size order. Remember you have all to gain and nothing to lose in placing your Memorial Day order now.

CLUB MEETING.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held on Monday evening, May 13, at its club rooms, with President Gus. Adrian in the chair. Alex. Ostendary read the report of the committee who audited the Flower Show Committee's books and report, and complimented Secretary Geo. Bartlett upon the way in which they were kept. A committee consisting of Chas. H. Hoffmeister, chairman; Roy Murphy, A. C. Heckman and A. H. Hoffmeister was appointed to arrange for the annual outing. This outing will be given by the Bowling Club of the society. After the meeting, at a social session, we were informed of a visit by the stork to the home of Wm. Schumann that morning where a boy was left. All those present took occasion to call up the happy and proud papa and offered their heartiest congratulations and also much advice.

The Bloomhurst Floral Co. of Lockland are cutting very excellent roses. All their stock is good and clean.

C. E. Critchell is having a good run on orchids and lily of the valley.

Geo. Klotter of West Price Hill is cutting very good outdoor sweet peas. He started them in hot beds and took off the sash when the weather opened.

W. R. Miller has bought C. H. Dohrmann & Co.'s greenhouses in Covington, Ky.

Visitors: John Meyers, Lowell, Mass.

DES MOINES, IA.—Dr. Fletcher, dahlia specialist of the W. K. Fletcher Bulb & Floral Co., was thrown from a wagon, breaking two ribs and being otherwise severely injured during the latter part of April.

produced in great abundance until late in autumn, they are carried erect on long stiff stems, and are very lasting, even when cut. The plant, pure tea by the pollen parent, is of good vigor and possesses a very decorative foliage. It seems to have a great future for all purposes. During the past abnormally warm, dry summer it did admirably in the open, blooming incessantly, and producing perfect well-colored flowers.

Gardening for Soldiers.—By a special decree of the Austrian War Office fruit and vegetable gardens are to be formed on waste ground around barracks, drill yards, rifle ranges, etc. The soldiers will be encouraged to cultivate these in their spare time, and any profits derived from them will be divided among the men. It is hoped that the plan will not only provide the soldiers with a profitable and interesting occupation in their spare time, but will enable them to learn much that will be an advantage to them on their return to civil life. A similar plan has proved most successful in Germany.

Hellebores As Cut Flowers.—A delightful flower for cutting at this time is the Christmas rose, and the best leafage to use with it is that of the mahonia, the rich bronzy chocolate color bringing out the clear whiteness of the hellebore. It would be better if less reliance were sometimes placed upon maiden-hair fern—useful, of course, but not essential, as such things as the mahonia in the case of Christmas roses and many other flowers give a splendid contrast or association of colors.

Hyacinthus Candicans in Combination with Cannas.—This Gaitonia or Cape Hyacinth, which carries its flowers three to four feet high, is novel and pretty mixed with cannas. If started about April 15, three or four in a 5-inch pot, they will be ready to plant out with the cannas, and will blossom with them; the pots may be sunk in the earth to the rim. In the park of Versailles the proportion is of 10 pots of the hyacinths to 100 cannas, but any desired arrangement can be used.

Public Agricultural Horticultural Schools for Young Girls have been established in Belgium, Germany, England, and now in France. On the theory that the farmer's wife is the logical manager of the housework, the dairy, the poultry yard, and also of the vegetable and flower gardens, preparation is to be given her for this added responsibility.

Viburnum rhytidophyllum. — This new viburnum grows slowly, hardly more than 3½ feet high, and is decorative for its persistent lanceolate foliage and erect, rather stiff, habit. Its flowers are insignificant, fruiting in a STOCK ACCUMULATING.

The wholesale cut flower market is in a very discouraging condition. There seems to be no active call for anything. The supply of American Beauty roses far exceeds the demand; the varieties most called for are Mme. Chate-nay, Lady Hillingdon, Radiance, Prince de Bulgarie and Mrs. Aaron Ward. Brides and Bridesmaids as usual are cleared out with difficulty at very low prices. Carnations have taken a decided drop in price, but the outlook is that there will be a large call for these from out of town for Memorial day, and prices will be much higher towards the end of the week. But it is with orchids that the worst conditions prevail. The finest cattleyas have been sold in large lots as low as ten dollars per hundred. The market is overstocked with lily of the valley of the very best quality. Sweet peas, stocks, antirrhinum, mignonette, pansies are accumulating with all the dealers. The supply of callas and longiflorum and rubrum lilies has shortened up and prices on these are steadier. Out-door lilac is very much in over supply, and prices obtained for large shipments are very low. Peonies are getting plentiful, but the quality is very poor. Smilax, asparagus and adiantum meet with the usual indifferent demand.

Monday noon, November 12.—The weather is all that can be desired. Stock is not overplentiful but there is only a small demand, and only small lots of selected stock are bringing anywhere near top quotations.

NOTES.

F. C. Scherer of 55 West Twenty-sixth street, is now receiving fine American Beauty roses from Carl Jurgens, Newport, R. I. In addition to roses, Mr. Scherer receives heavy shipments of the very finest bulbous stock from the same place.

J. J. Coan, manager of the Growers' Cut Flower Co., reports many large orders for carnations for Memorial day. Just at present this company is receiving large shipments of carnations, lilies and sweet peas of the very best quality.

There have been column articles in the daily press regarding the four-leaved clover that is being distributed by Max Schling and grown by Julius Roehrs Co. Mr. Schling reports an unprecedented demand for these plants from all sections of the country.

Philip F. Kessler, chairman of the outing committee, has completed arrangements for that affair and the outlook is now that it will be most successful ever held by the New York Florists' Club.

H. M. Robinson & Co. are having an active call for their many novelties in the rose line. Mrs. Aaron Ward seen at this establishment being especially fine.

B. S. Slimm, Jr. has rented space on the top floor of the Coogan building in the Cut Flower Exchange and will be a close neighbor of Philip F. Kessler.

COOL WEATHER RETARDS OUTSIDE STOCK.

The weather of the past week was very cool and wet and tended to retard peonies and other outside stock from blooming, but the sun is out again and the indications point to an oversupply for this week. Growers are hoping for a good supply for Memorial day, ten days hence. Notwithstanding dull weather, there has been a bountiful supply of all salable, and some rather unsalable, stock. In comparison, American Beauty roses are about the cheapest things on the market. They are so cheap that the long stems are being cut off and the residue sold for short stems, but even at that they are scarcely on a par with good Killarney. The best selling roses on the market at present are Red Killarney and Mrs. Taft, but the supply is not large. The local supply of roses is rather indifferent in quality but good stock is coming in from the north. My Maryland, once believed to be a good summer rose, is now in the discard, so far as this market is concerned. As a matter of course, good Killarney and White Killarney sell, but for a summer rose the latter is far behind Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. The supply of peonies for the past week was about right, owing to previously mentioned weather conditions. Retail prices on peonies range from $1.00 to $3.00 per dozen. The German and Spanish iris is now a factor in the market and is being made useful. Carnations are holding out well though deteriorating in quality, but not as much as might be expected at this season. Sweet peas are abundant and of very fine quality.

EXPORTERS

NOTES.

Z. D. Blackistone had the decoration for the Dolly Madison breakfast at Rauscher's on May 20. To explain what the "Dolly Madison" breakfast means, I quote from a local paper. "Feminine Democracy, composed of wives of the politicians whose choice lies between Clark, Wilson, Underwood and Harmon, will assemble at a 'harmony breakfast,' to be given at Rauscher's at 12:30 o'clock today in honor of Dolly Madison." However, Blackistone's decoration, all in pink, was very fine and doubtless inspired the fair politicians to fervid eloquence and hopeful views.

The Washington Florist Co. will soon take possession of its new store on H street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets. Through the courtesy of Manager Otto Bauer we recently had an opportunity of looking through this fine store. There will be elegant facilities for business and display and no pains have been spared to make it a strictly first-class store.

Alex. B. Garden is having a very fine cut of the best varieties of peonies. Having 20 acres of land, Mr. Garden is well prepared for the production of outdoor stocks and each year increases his output, both in quantity and quality.

It is stated that Elmer Mayberry has entered suit for heavy damages against the people who ran him down with an auto. A. F. F.

MADISON, N. J.—The regular meeting of the Morris County Gardeners' & Florists' Club was held May 8 in Masonic hall. William Tricker read a paper on "Aquatics." Alexander McClellan delivered an address on "Dahlias," and Albert Baldwin on "Early Flowering Chrysanthemums."

A DULL MARKET.

Some say it is more pleasant to give than to receive. In the market neither the giving nor the receiving part is pleasant. Whether it was the aftermath of the high prices of last week that led the people to tie their purse-strings tight, and bemoan the high cost of living and dying, or whether it is getting ready for the next squeeze on Memorial day, we cannot say, but we have had a dull market. Cannot some of our bright lights tell us for nothing, "but genuine love for the trade," why it is there is always a depression after a holiday? A hero medal awaits the solver of the problem. Roses the past week have been slow. Carnations are to be top-notched again Memorial day. Outside flowers if the cool weather continues ought to be in prime condition and that will help out. Memorial day is for rich and poor alike, a day that brings all to one thought and level, and extortionate prices ought to be frowned upon unless it is something scarce and rare, and the buyer has money to burn. There is more harm done by some fresh salesmen and salted flowers.

NOTES.

N. F. McCarthy & Co. have moved into their new quarters on Otis and Arch streets. It is more conveniently located than the old stand, and Mr. McCarthy has not lost any of his old-time crispness as an auctioneer.

Some of the best white stocks we have seen for years are those grown by John McFarland. Quality is usually on John's side in whatever he grows, orchids included.

We are having a breathing spell from the rain and hope it may continue for some time. Carnations are being put in the field.

CRAWFORD, N. J.—Mrs. L. Ussing has sold the business conducted by her late husband for 25 years to Joseph Megary, who will assume charge July 1.

PITTSBURG, PA.—The Blind Floral Co. has been issued a charter of incorporation. The capital stock is $10,000 and the incorporators are Conrad Blind, A. E. Davis, and E. L. McGrath.

BENNINGTON, VT.—The prices were lower at Easter this year than last, states L. C. Holton, but the business increased about thirty per cent. There was a good supply of both plants and flowers, the demand for violets and roses, however, was in excess of the home supply. Lilies were the pot plants most in demand and tulips, hyacinths and other bulb stock in pans sold finely. Carnations had a good call, but roses sold slowly.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—The Easter trade was about ten per cent greater than last year, states William Schlatter & Son. Prices were about the same and the supply of both plants and flowers was adequate to meet the demand. The largest call was for lilies, azaleas, rambler roses and bulbous stock, in fact all first-class plants sold well. In cut flowers, violets and sweet peas were most in demand and there was quite a falling off in the sale of carnations. There was an increased demand for plant baskets.

Dutch Bulbs.

Recent reports of Holland bulbs are favorable. Fine weather the latter part of April and in early May has eliminated all effects of the hail storms early in the season. Hyacinths and tulips in all leading varieties will be in good supply with prices about the same as last year. Narcissi also promise well but there will be a shortage of the large double-nosed bulbs of Von Sion and the prices on this item will be higher, also on Emperor, Empress and Golden Spur. Crocuses were not planted so extensively as in former years and on this account the crop will be short and price decidedly higher.

Government Free Seeds.

Seeds and plants were distributed upon congressional order as in former years. Between six and seven hundred tons of vegetable and flower seeds, put up in approximately 60,000,000 packets, were distributed the past season. Of this quantity about 10 per cent was flower seed and 90 per cent vegetable seed. Approximately one-third of the total quantity was procured from surplus stocks, and the remainder was grown under contract for the department during the current season. In every case seed was secured on competitive bids, and no seed was accepted for distribution unless it was found after repeated tests to be of satisfactory purity and vitality. Every lot of seed is tested for germination two or more times before and after shipment, and a sample of each lot is grown on the trial grounds of the department under the direct supervision of expert horticulturists to determine its trueness to type. Many thousand pounds of vegetable and flower seeds which do not meet the requirements of the department are rejected every year and returned to the seedsmen by whom they were shipped. Where seeds are contracted to be grown for the department the fields are inspected at the proper season by specialists, who see that the plants are uniformly true to type and that a proper system of rog-uing out variations and mixtures is followed. This system has resulted in steady improvement in the quality of seeds distributed by the department, as shown by the results obtained on the trial grounds and by hundreds of reports from all sections of the country.

The work of packeting, assembling and mailing the vegetable and flower seeds was done under contract at a cost of $1.10½ per thousand packets, which included delivery of the packeted seed in mail sacks direct to the Union Station. A new contract has been entered into for putting up and mailing the seeds for the coming distribution at a saving over the former contract of 1 cent per thousand packets.

The propagation of Dutch bulbs in the Puget Sound region in connection with the congressional distribution is progressing favorably. Trial sets of narcissus and tulip bulbs propagated near Bellingham, Wash., were planted at Washington, D. C., with sets of bulbs of the same varieties imported from Holland, and the Bellingham bulbs produced better blossoms 10 days earlier than the imported bulbs. The early blooming period of American-grown bulbs is of importance to all professional florists, because of the saving in time and fuel where bulbs are forced for market.—Report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1911.

Clover and Timothy Seed.

In the yearbook of agriculture issued by United States Department of Agriculture appears a table giving the different prices of clover seed in the four cities, Cincinnati, Chicago, Toledo and Detroit, and of timothy seed in Cincinnati, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Louis for the years 1898-1911. There has been an almost steady increase in the prices of both seeds at all of the cities.
At Cincinnati, prime seed of clover was priced at $2.45 in 1898, advancing to $7.00 in 1907, reaching $8.00 in 1908 and 1907 and ranged from $4.20 to $6.00 during 1911. The average last year being slightly less than in 1910.
The prices of poor to prime at Chicago show a similar advance from 60 cents as low price in 1898 to $10 for high in 1907. During April, 1908, a figure of $14.40 and in August, 1910, $15.50 was recorded. The prices at Toledo for poor to choice do not show so large a fluctuation, the lowest price being $2.80 in 1898 and the highest $12.80 in 1911.
The variance at Detroit is about the same as at Toledo, ranging from $2.80 in 1898 to $12.50 in 1911.

Timothy seed has advanced in a similar proportion to clover. At Cincinnati from 95 cents low per bushel of 45 pounds in 1898 to $6.90 in 1911. At Chicago the price for poor to choice has advanced from $2.15 per 100 pounds in 1898 to $16.25 at the close of 1911, the highest figure of the 14 years. Milwaukee shows a range from $1.50 to $15.50 and St. Louis for poor to prime from $2.40 as low figure in
cember, 1911.

The following bill to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Simmons May 3, 1912, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and on May 6, 1912, committed to Committee of the Whole House on the

3 SEC. 4. That no person shall ship or deliver for ship-4 ment from one State or Territory or District of the United 5 States into any other State or Territory or District any such 6 imported nursery stock the case, box, package, crate, bale, or 7 bundle whereof is not plainly marked so as to show the gen-

9 dress of the consignee, and the country and locality where 10 such stock was grown, unless and until such imported stock
11 has been inspected by the proper official of a State, Territory, 12 or District of the United States.

13 SEC. 5. That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture
14 shall determine that the unrestricted importation of any 15 plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant 16 products not included by the term "nursery stock" as de-

2 before the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate his de-3 termination that the unrestricted importation of any plants,
4 fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products
5 not included by the term "nursery stock" as defined in sec-6 tion six of this Act may result in the entry into the United 7 States or any of its Territories or Districts of injurious plant
8 diseases or insect pests he shall, after due notice, give a public 9 hearing, under such rules and regulations as he shall pre-10 scribe, at which hearing any interested party may appear and 11 be heard, either in person or by attorney.

12 SEC. 6. That for the purpose of this Act the term
13 "nursery stock" shall include all field-grown florists' stock,

19 SEC. 7. That whenever, in order to prevent the intro-

3 nation, specifying the country and locality and the class of 4 nursery stock or other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, 5 roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products which, in his 6 opinion, should be excluded. Following the promulgation 7 of such determination by the Secretary of Agriculture, and 8 until the withdrawal of the said promulgation by him, the 9 importation of the class of nursery stock or of other class
10 of plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other 11 plant products specified in the said promulgation from the 12 country and locality therein named, regardless of the use for 13 which the same is intended, is hereby prohibited; and until 14 the withdrawal of the said promulgation by the Secretary of 15 Agriculture, and not withstanding that such class of nursery 16 stock, or other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, 17 seeds, or other plant products be accompanied by a certificate 18 of inspection from the country of importation, no person shall 19 import or offer for entry into the United States from any 20 country or locality specified in such promulgation, any of 21 the class of nursery stock or of other class of plants, fruits, 22 vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products named 23 therein, regardless of the use for which the same is intended:
24 Provided, That before the Secretary of Agriculture shall 25 promulgate his determination that it is necessary to forbid

16 in such State or Territory or District; and the Secretary
17 of Agriculture is directed to give notice of the establishment 18 of such quarantine to common carriers doing business in or

20 newspapers in the quarantined area as he shall select notice 21 of the establishment of quarantine. That no person shall 12 the United States, or quarantined portion thereof, into or 13 through any other State or Territory or District, in man-14 ner or method or under conditions other than those pre-15 scribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. That it shall be 16 the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to make and pro-

20 stock or of any other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, 21 roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products specified in the 22 notice of quarantine hereinbefore provided, and regard-

6 that it is necessary to quarantine any State, Territory, or 7 District of the United States, or portion thereof, under the 8 authority given in this section, he shall, after due notice to 9 interested parties, give a public hearing under such rules
10 and regulations as he shall prescribe, at which hearing any 11 interested party may appear and be heard, either in person 12 or by attorney.

13 SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make 14 and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be neces-
15 sary for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

16 SEC. 10. That any person who shall violate any of the 18 provided for, or who shall forge, counterfeit, alter, deface, 19 or destroy any certificate provided for in this Act or in the 20 regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be deemed 21 guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, 22 be punished by a fine of not exceeding five hundred dollars or 23 by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both such fine

24 and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided,

1 That no common carrier shall be deemed to have violated

6 of the United States into or through any other State, Ter-
