“Friendship”

THIS BOOK, dedicated as a Memorial Volume to the men of the First and Second Fort Sheridan Training Camps, who gave their lives to the cause of Liberty and Justice, is issued with the fervent hope that it may, in a small measure, convey tribute to those gallant sons of the Middle West whom we knew and loved.

Many willing hands have had to do with the compiling and gathering of material and data herewith presented, and the work, which has been over a year in preparation, is one in which no effort has been spared.

Thanks are first due to the officers and directors of the Fort Sheridan Association, that organization born of necessity during the Second Camp, for the broad and liberal aid which made this book possible. To the mothers and fathers of the lads who "Went West", the Fort Sheridan Association presents a copy; and to every member of the Association a volume will be donated. The cost of which comes out of the Association treasury.

Mrs. Chester M. MacChesney, director of the Home Service Department of the Fort Sheridan Association, has patiently and faithfully gathered photographs and data covering the records of the Roll of Honor.

Colonel Halsted Dorey, who commanded the Fourth Infantry overseas, and who, under the direction of Major-General Leonard Wood, was one of the most indefatigable workers for training camps throughout the United States, has aided the work with a short synopsis of the Training Camp Movement.

To Myron E. Adams, who, more than any other man, has made the Fort Sheridan Association what it is today, and who, as Director of Morale during the Second Training Camp, did so much to keep up the spirit of clean sports and healthy recreation and, as executive secretary of the Fort Sheridan Association, carried on the great work of the organization while the members were in service, the compiler is greatly indebted for the cheerful co-operation given.

To Waldo M. Allen, a member of the First Battery of the First Camp, for his descriptive word picture of the First Training Camp.

To the International Film Company and the Chicago Daily News for their hearty co-operation in securing the photographs of the training camp days.

And last, but not least, to the many individuals who furnished information when all other sources seemed futile.

If this Memorial Book, in its way, conveys a bit of human companionship and carries with it a breath of friendship from those who served to those whose loved ones sleep o'erseas and at home, its labor shall not have been in vain.

A GREATER GIFT

By Charlotte Becker

When on the clamorous battlefield
The captain fell,
Men said, "How great his sacrifice
No words may tell."

Ah, well, they did not know, those sons
Of drum and fife—
He did but give his death, while one Gives all her life.

Introduction

The Power of a Nation
Is Its Trained Manhood

By
BRIGADIER-GENERAL JAMES A. RYAN
Commanding Second Camp

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JAMES A. RYAN
Commanding Second R. O. T. C. at Fort Sheridan

THIS IS THE RECORD of the men from Fort Sheridan, "the minute men of the Great War", who were torn from desk and workshop and thrown in a camp to learn the rudiments of soldiering in the shortest possible time to save our country from a foreign foe. Almost two precious years were allowed to pass with the whole world aflame, yet no attempt was made to prepare for the conflict that we had to enter to save civilization.

They came as students, these full grown men, and became pupils again under school masters. They sat at the feet of anyone who could show them this game of war, this life and death game that was thrust upon us. They were filled with the zeal of crusaders, for they felt the call, the Nation's call to them for sacrifice.

No men ever responded more cheerfully or conformed to rigid military discipline with better grace than these same student soldiers. They worked hard for the prize of being a commissioned officer, and their application was thorough because each one realized that to omit anything might be fatal to him at a critical moment.

The graduates of Fort Sheridan have justified every prophecy made of them. The lessons they learned at Fort Sheridan they applied at Chateau Thierry, Belleau Woods, and the Argonne Forest. They entered every branch of the service; they acquitted themselves with honor; they were marked men because they reflected in the army the lessons taught them at Fort Sheridan.

This could be accomplished only because of the class of men sent to Fort Sheridan and the spirit of devotion to the cause they carried in their hearts. The pity of it all is the sacrifice they were called upon to make, on the altar of their country.

The task set for the men of Fort Sheridan they accomplished. They paid the price exacted and these pages record the heroic deeds performed by those who have gone beyond, but there is still another task undone which remains for those who have survived to make sure that those who died have not died in vain. The greatest monument that can be dedicated to their honor and the only one great enough for their sacrifice is "A law enacted that will forever prevent the necessity for such sacrifices in the future." You owe it to your sons, your grandsons, and all coming generations, that the lessons taught by this war will not pass unheeded. You owe it to yourself, and to your country, to train the youth of this land so that in any crisis that arises where resort to arms must govern, our young men will be trained in their youth in those elements of military life that will enable them to join the colors at once should they be called.

Drive the lesson home to everyone, make our people understand it, educate them to the necessity of saving this country from wars and rumors of wars, place the task on the shoulders of all and the burden will be light.

With this accomplished, our fallen student officers will sleep in peace. Their reward will be a prosperous nation, a war free nation.

Those who have been so fortunate as to have passed through this awful struggle and lived, let them spread the gospel of "Preparedness", let them remind their forgetful neighbors that, behind all agreements, behind all treaties, behind all League of Nations or Hague Tribunals, there must be organized power to compel obedience. This power of a nation is its trained manhood; without it we have to petition for peace, with it we dictate peace.

J. A. RYAN,
Brigadier-General U. S. Army,
Commandant of Second Fort Sheridan Training Camp.

Association

FRIENDSHIP and Necessity were the parents of the Fort Sheridan Association. Long before the actual organization was born and given a name, the way was being prepared.

The Spring of 1917 brought to Fort Sheridan thousands of men who had much in common. They had not waited. They had all stepped out of business, professions, colleges, and placed themselves at the disposal of the Government. They differed a great deal in age, ability, experience, and in other respects, but when they were packed away in the barracks at night or marched away on a hike by day, the past was erased and men were measured within the companies by what they had in their personalities, not by what the outside civilian said of them.

Never were men subjected to a more careful personal scrutiny than in these companies. Corporal Common Sense or General Ridicule warned each candidate daily against depending for his position upon something that his family had done or he had accomplished before enlisting.

It was a wholesome atmosphere. Men tried to win respect by doing their best and showing their strongest side, realizing that progress and opportunity depended largely upon the good will of their associates.

In these close associations, men came to know each other. They found out some of the difficulties that lay behind the daily routine. They rubbed elbows, not merely on the march, but in some of the quiet hours when they visited with their "bunkies."

Here is one illustration—there were hundreds more. Two men bunked side by side—one, a carpenter by trade, came from a small village up North; the other, a leading young business man, from a large city. As they worked together a real friendship developed and a mutual understanding.

In the course of their training the business man learned a great deal from the carpenter, who had military experience and real qualities of leadership, and the carpenter was never too tired to explain everything to him. Both were reticent about their personal affairs, but one night the business man knew that his "bunkie" was in trouble. The carpenter rolled sleeplessly on his cot. Early the next morning the business man took him aside and made him explain. This was what he found out:

The carpenter had left a sickly wife and two children at home in order to come to Fort Sheridan. His wife had been in the hospital. One of the children was sick and funds were exhausted. The paltry $100 a month which the candidate received, without an allowance of quarters of the family, would not meet his obligations. He must resign.

The business man went to see the commander of the company, told him the circumstances, and asked permission to have his pay given each month to his "bunkie," explaining that he regarded his experienced services as important enough to justify the Captain urging him not to resign.

This the company commander did, and when he told the carpenter that his "bunkie" wanted his monthly pay placed to his account, he hesitated for a moment and said, "If he can afford to do it, I will take it, although I wouldn't take it from any one else, for we are both in the same boat and he understands."

And the business man thought of the hundreds and thousands he had spent in pleasure in this and other lands and realized that he never had either the same pleasure or the same spirit of giving through all his experiences.

At the close of the camp, both these men were commissioned. The carpenter completed the service as a major and so did the business man, but back of that they both came out with a better understanding of life: a broader mutual kindness.

Through the course of the months the necessity and the spirit increased. Men who were to share the hazards of battle were not merely involving themselves, but thousands of others—Mothers and Fathers—Wives and Sisters.

Sometimes you would see a little woman come into the camp from a distance. Her little children were with her. There was a look of pride as the long lines swept by. There was a rush of tender embrace when the ranks were broken and the father greeted the new arrivals, and there was an equal touch of sadness when they departed.

Sometimes you would see a man, silent, apart, troubled. Investigation would show that he was not afraid of the battle line, he was not above going as a private if he did not win a commission, but he could not shake off the anxiety about those whom he should leave behind.

Worry and anxiety are the worst foe the soldier faces. They handicap him from the start. If he is an officer, they affect his intelligent direction of his men, his ability to grasp situations, as well as the spirit which he imparts to those who serve with him. His depression becomes not merely a personal inconvenience, but a severe handicap to all his men.

He accepts the risks of battle, the discomforts of camp, as the fortunes of war, but when he faces the anxiety for the ones he left behind him, that is another question. There is where he must have real friends. The organization of the army did not contemplate this. But there was nothing in the regulations to say it should not exist.

When the Fort Sheridan Association idea was suggested to the leaders in the Regular Army, they were immediately its strong backers. They appreciated the thought of linking together the friendship of leaders for the mutual protection and encouragement of the family; of caring for both the fighting edge of a man and for the relations which he can never leave behind him, go where he may.

The Fort Sheridan Association was the outgrowth of this fraternal spirit as well as the practical disposition to develop every factor possible which could help men through the period of their actual services.

With no precedent to guide them except the peculiar problems which emerged as their training period closed or loomed up in the more trying days ahead, the men of the two camps agreed to form a great fighting fraternity which would serve as a means of combining their strength for more efficient service.

Colonel James A. Ryan, Commanding Officer of the Second Reserve Officers' Training Camp, after consulting with representative leaders of the First Camp, selected officers who had been trained in the First Camp to represent every company, every officer being a graduate of the company which he represented. In addition, he instructed each company of the Second Camp to elect a delegate, to meet jointly in an executive session to complete arrangements for a permanent association.

These delegates met on November 2, 1917, and organized the Fort Sheridan Association. Several subsequent meetings were held by the committee, which resulted in the preparation of a constitution and by-laws and the adoption of the following plan of operation.

4. Employment of officers on return to civil life.

On November 7th the representatives met and adopted the plan. On November 14th a meeting of all candidates was held, the constitution was adopted, and the following officers were elected:

Col. James A. Ryan, President and Director.

Maj. Philip Fox, First Vice-President—Representing Illinois men.

Capt. J. Brooks Nichols, Second Vice-President—Representing Michigan and Wisconsin men.

Maj. J. W. E. Taylor, Third Vice-President—Representing Colorado and Missouri men.

Maj. William I. Shuman, Secretary and Director.

Lt. John A. Broeksmit, Treasurer.

Capt. Myron E. Adams, Chairman, Board of Directors.

Maj. Henry B. Gale, Director.

Lt. James C. Hutchins, Jr., Director.

Maj. A. A. Sprague, II, Director.

Capt. John A. Stevenson, Director.

The following day the men were called together by Regiments and were addressed by Colonel Ryan on the purposes of the organization. They were given an opportunity to join and to pay their annual membership fee, and practically every man at the camp joined at this time.

The closing days of camp were busy days. Many practical problems pressed upon the men. One of the largest was the high cost of equipment. The newly-commissioned officer had to purchase all of his equipment. Nothing could be had from the quartermasters. Each man had to go into the open market and purchase what he needed within a week after graduation.

Some 1,600 men were commissioned and ordered to foreign service; about 1,500 were assigned to divisions then in training at home. The average cost of complete equipment for foreign service was $500, so that the total purchases of these men would amount to a million and a half dollars.

The Fort Sheridan Association, as its first work, arranged to substitute collective buying for the individual purchasing. Myron E. Adams, Director of Morale, was instructed by Col. James A. Ryan to make such an arrangement for the men. A representation of every company was called together, a complete list of all purchases necessary was made. Men were selected who were familiar with making such purchases on a big scale. Harry Kimbark, of the Sixteenth Company, was made Chairman of this Committee and they rushed into Chicago to tackle the job. It was the first big skirmish of the Fort Sheridan men and they came back with the report that they had made arrangements with various Chicago stores whereby a deduction of practically 15 per cent would be made on all purchases. In cases where purchases had been made, that part would be returned. In the first three days of its operation, the Association, by mutual co-operation, had saved its members approximately $200,000. That was a good start, and sent many men away to their work with more heart for the task.

Lt. Col. J.W.E. Taylor

Capt. J.A. Stevenson

Capt. Marshall Field III

Maj. John S. Miller Jr.

Another situation arose when orders were opened and it was discovered that more than one-half of the men commissioned would have to go to France within a month.

Contrary to common reports, there were comparatively few men of large means in the Training Camps. The great majority, particularly among older men, were men who had made large financial sacrifices at great hazards both to themselves and families, and frequently these same men who were classified as the most capable leaders were absolutely dependent upon their salaries and the strictest economy to keep their families from disaster.

When these men and others who were without families, but who had no large reserve, read these orders, they did not see how they could comply with the regulations to report at the Port of Embarkation fully equipped. Some came to the Commandant's office to present their resignations. The situation was serious. These men must be provided with money without the usual security and without any delay.

The responsibility of meeting this situation fell immediately upon the Association Board of Directors. The policy adopted at that time lies at the foundation of all subsequent success the organization may have had. It was proposed to loan $250 to applicants who were ordered to foreign service and $75 to those ordered to home service—repayments to be made at the running rate of interest on the basis of $15 for Second Lieutenant, $20 for First Lieutenant, and $25 for Captain, per month, until paid. It was further agreed that the question of a man's financial condition or his personal standing should not be brought up, but that in every case possible where a man honorably stated that he needed the money for equipment, or for making emergency arrangements previous to such service, that the Board would grant him the amount.

In preparation for this loan, Maj. Albert A. Sprague, II, Capt. John A. Stevenson, Lt. James Hutchins, Jr., and Maj. J. W. E. Taylor interviewed Chicago banks and arranged with the Merchants Loan & Trust Company, Harris Trust & Savings Bank, First National Bank, Illinois Trust & Savings Bank and the Continental & Commercial National Bank for the necessary loans of $175,000. At the same time they arranged with Mr. J. J. Mitchell, president of the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, and others, for the organization of a Citizens' Committee.

Upon their return to Fort Sheridan on the closing day of the camp, information was sent to the companies that these loans would be made.

More than one thousand men were in the line that asked for these loans, and the Board of Directors worked practically all night, so that the men could get their checks and take the trains to their homes for the brief period before they reported for duty.

On the last morning of the camp, the Association advanced to its members over $125,000 and helped many a man to go home with head up and heart stronger and purposes higher because he had been able to depend upon the confidence and good will of the men who were to lead the New Army with him.

After the departure of the Second Camp, the office of the Association was moved to the Conway Building, Chicago, where applications for loans in person and by letter increased rapidly, all of our forces working on correspondence and upon investigation of loans. During the week when our Directors had their ten-day leave, it was necessary to incorporate our organization and reorganize its administrative force. This was done to the entire satisfaction of the officers who had previously served and the splendid spirit in which the new civilian officers accepted the responsibility has been greatly appreciated by all.

The following men were elected to serve during the period of the war:

Alfred Cowles, President and Director.
 William V. Kelley, Secretary and Director.
 Harry E. Weese, Asst. Treasurer.
 J. Harry Selz, Director.
 John W. Scott, Director.
 Wallace Winter, Director.
 George A. McKinlock, Director.
 William C. Boyden, Director.
 John J. Mitchell, Chairman Citizens' Committee.
 James C. Hutchins, Sr., Legal Adviser.
 William B. McIlvaine, Legal Adviser.

The Board of Directors then elected Capt. Myron E. Adams, who had been commissioned on the staff of the Adjutant General of Illinois, at the request of General Ryan, as Executive Manager in charge of the administrative work of the Association.

The Fort Sheridan Association was fortunate in securing the support and active help of these understanding business men. They gave largely of their time and experience and helped to establish the standing of the organization immediately in Chicago and throughout the country.

Alfred Cowles, who was the president of the organization from December 13, 1917, to July 16, 1919, gave the Association an immense amount of personal attention and daily service during the greater part of this period. His personal interest in the men, his determination that the work should be maintained on an efficient business basis, his willingness to take the initiative when any new emergency arose, were factors which early placed the Association in a position where it could operate with a maximum of service and a minimum of strain.

The officers on leave had only a few days in their home towns. In some cases they were able to secure voluntary support for the Fort Sheridan Association from home sources, but in the majority of cases they were instructed to leave this to civilian representatives of the Fort Sheridan Association who would assume the responsibility after their departure.

The Board of Directors, co-operating under Mr. J. J. Mitchell, Chairman of the Citizens' Committee, with the assistance of Mr. Charles W. Folds, conducted a financial campaign lasting only one week in the City of Chicago and raised approximately $125,000, which, with small amounts from other sources, has constituted the Fort Sheridan Association fund which has been used for loans, for assistance to families and for general work of readjustment after the war, but not a cent of this fund has ever been spent for current expenses.

From the beginning of the organization, every effort was made by correspondence and visitation to include in the membership of the Fort Sheridan Association all the men from the First Camp as well as from the Second. Pamphlets containing information with reference to the Association were put in the hands of all officers at Camp Custer and Camp Grant and the Executive Manager subsequently visited these camps in order to enlist their membership. In this connection, it is interesting to state that the organization has never limited its usefulness or its help extended to members of the Association, but has, in all cases, endeavored to serve the men of the First Camp and their families regardless of whether they were members of the Association or not, and this has been true of hundreds of men outside the Fort Sheridan camps. It has always been the policy of the organization to extend its helpful services wherever they would accomplish the most good and not to be limited by any narrow idea of service, or any thought of its personal advantage.

During the months of February and March, 1918, the Executive Manager visited the following camps:

Camp Funston, at Fort Riley, where we had about 40 men—mostly captains, in some very responsible positions, who afterwards went overseas with the Eighty-ninth Division; Camp Dodge, at Des Moines, where we had 130 men, all of whom went to France; Camp Zachary Taylor, at Louisville, where we had about 300 men; Camp Forest, at Chickamauga Park, near Chattanooga, Tenn., where we had 125 men; Camp Gordon, Atlanta, where we had 10 men; Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina, the camp of the New York National Guard, where we had about 100 first lieutenants in new regular army units; Camp Greene, Charlotte, North Carolina, where we had two Chiefs of Staff and more than 100 officers, all of whom went across with the Third and Fifth Divisions; Camp Lee, Petersburg, Virginia, where we had 200 officers, and Camp Meade, Annapolis, Maryland, where we had 10 officers.

The great majority of our men were at Camp Grant and Camp Custer. The entire officer organization, apart from a score of Regular Army officers at both camps, came from the First Fort Sheridan Camp. Camp Custer (the Eighty-fifth Division) was organized by the Michigan-Wisconsin Regiment of the First Camp, and Camp Grant (the Eighty-sixth Division) was organized by the Illinois Regiment of the First Camp. In most cases the officers were taken over intact by companies from these camps to train the new regiments, thus prolonging the friendship and acquaintances formed at Fort Sheridan throughout the period of the war. In each of these camps representatives of the Fort Sheridan Association were familiar with the work the organization could do and acted as an agent of the Association there.

How we helped in emergencies in these camps is illustrated by assistance rendered to the Eighty-sixth Division at the time they were preparing to leave Camp Grant for the Port of Embarkation.

Several regiments of the Division did not have its complement of second lieutenants, so a hundred second lieutenants who were to graduate from the Fourth Officers' Training Camp the day before the Division departed were ordered to secure equipment and to leave the following day. The Brigade Commanders exhausted every agency at Camp Grant, but could find no means of assistance.

They telegraphed to Chicago on Friday. On the same day the officers of the Association arrived at Camp Grant and advanced $25,000 to the men who were commissioned that day and were allowed Saturday only to secure their entire equipment before they entrained on Sunday morning.

Brig.-Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews wrote to the Association, as a result of this service, as follows:

"I feel that I must attempt to express officially our deep obligation to your Association for the splendid thing you did for our young graduate officers in coming here and financing them in getting their military outfits. Frankly, I do not see what would have happened without your assistance. Three cases have come to my personal notice in which these young men had felt constrained to give up the commissions they had so hardily won because of financial inability to equip themselves to go overseas on such short notice.

"Not only have they been helped out of this serious difficulty, but your Association has done this in such a way as to preserve their self-esteem and to add to their appreciation of the essential value of a bit of mutual consideration and co-operation in this vale of tears.

"So I say your work is splendid, and I hope you may always realize, as I do now, that nothing you could do in Europe would compare in value to our service with what you are doing here in making possible a high morale in our young officers over there."

During the same period the Association was busy organizing local civilian backing for the men who had left their families to go into the service. The plan was to have an officer organization or a representation in each of the States from which our men had been selected, to work in co-operation with the central office in Chicago. Well-organized offices were in operation in Wisconsin and Michigan and representatives co-operated in the other States.

The following constituted the organization:

Detroit, Michigan—

Murray Paterson, Secretary for Michigan.
Miss J. Irene Finn, Detroit, Office Secretary.
Miss J. C. Kershaw, Home Visitor.
Mrs. F. C. Kidner, Representative on Red Cross Board.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin—

Fred Vogel, Jr., Chairman, Board of Directors, Milwaukee.
Mrs. Robert E. Lee, Secretary for Wisconsin.
Mrs. George Lines, Representative on Red Cross Board, Milwaukee.

St. Louis, Missouri—

Mrs. Virginia M. Harriss, Secretary, Missouri Officers' Association,
St. Louis.
Capt. Luther Ely Smith, Assisting.

Lawrence, Kansas—

Gen. Wilder S. Metcalf, Representative for Kansas, Lawrence, Kans.

Denver, Colorado—

J. Poulterer Morris, Representative of Association, Denver.

Central Office—Chicago—

Fred M. Carton, Office Manager, Chicago.
Chris Churan, Chief Clerk, Deceased.
Lt. Chas. A. Rogers, Employment Secretary.
Miss Ruth Reiss, Finance Secretary.
Mrs. Chester M. MacChesney, Director Home Department.
Miss Margaret Port, Office Secretary.
Miss Mildred Mather, Office Secretary.
Mrs. Eunice M. Sullivan, Bookkeeper.
John Silverstein, Office Boy.

To each of these, as well as to others co-operating with them, the Association is deeply indebted.

In March, 1918, the Home Service Department was organized. Mrs. Chester M. MacChesney was made director. Her policy has always been to consider every member of the family of our men as a personal friend. We have not waited to be called upon, whenever there was a report of any misfortune; we have immediately acted. A personal visit has been made—a letter has been sent to our local auxiliary or to our nearest State representative. The volume of correspondence, the number of visits, and the amount of time and energy given would surprise many of our friends not familiar with this work.

In addition to this personal service, a very large amount of money has been advanced in the form of gifts and loans. A joint agreement was made with the National Officers of the Red Cross whereby there should be the closest co-operation between their local organizations and the Association. Representatives of the Association were to be selected in each community and placed on the Home Service Committee. Through this arrangement the usefulness of the Association was extended into hundreds of communities and the most harmonious and helpful service secured.

Such service is extremely confidential and one of the reasons why the Association has had such rare opportunities for genuine helpfulness has come from the fact that people have understood this. They have written and have come to the office relying upon the spirit of friendship to understand their situation and they have been made to feel that there is nothing we could do that would begin to equal the treatment they had merited from their country for the services they had rendered and the sacrifices many of them had made.

In this connection, it is almost needless to say that the biggest and best work done during this period can neither be described nor tabulated. Our

Mr. Geo. A. McKinlock

Mr. J. J. Mitchell

Mr. J. Harry Selz

personal correspondence with people throughout this country and France gave us large opportunities for varied service, including legal, medical, military and business advice, as well as constantly giving encouragement to men at the front and women at home.

The spirit of our office, both in Chicago and elsewhere, has always been to deal very directly and considerately with every opportunity that has come to us. We have tried to keep the personal relationship, believing that men and women who have been in trouble because of the emergency of the Great War deserve the greatest amount of personal consideration and that it is the aggregate of such personal service that actually makes up the test of the Association's value.

In connection with our Home Service Department we organized a Women's Auxiliary in the City of Chicago first and afterwards extended branches throughout our whole district. The plan was to have occasional meetings of the mothers and wives of the men, at which time prominent speakers would appear. The women would have an opportunity to make acquaintance with each other, to secure information about their husbands and sons in the service, and to get better acquainted with the officers of the Association. No more inspiring sight was witnessed at home than the meetings held by the Women's Auxiliary of the Fort Sheridan Association. As many as a thousand were together at one time, and every speaker and visitor was struck by the appearance of courage, kindness and hopefulness shown, and the mothers, wives and sisters of our men took a great deal of pride in the fact that they belonged to this membership. It will be one of the big, helpful memories of the war that they had so much in common and made so many real friends on occasions like this. Mrs. MacChesney and the Executive Manager both traveled throughout the State, as well as into Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Colorado and Kansas on this work, and saw a large proportion of these auxiliaries in action.

It was discovered early in 1918 that a great injustice was being done officers with families who were in the field service. A ruling of the War Department provided that the allowances technically known as commutation of quarters, heat and light would be withheld wherever the Government furnishes tents or similar accommodations. The effect of this ruling was to put a premium on service at a station such as Washington, at the expense of the men serving in the field.

The Association, early in March, began a campaign of enlightenment through the entire national press. Senator Chamberlain introduced a bill providing

“that during the present emergency every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States, on duty in the field, or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child or dependent parent, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere, the number of rooms prescribed by the Act of March 2, 1907, to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child or dependent parent; and in case such quarters are not available, every such commissioned officer shall be paid commutation thereof and commutation of heat and light, at the rate authorized by law in cases where public quarters are not available; but nothing in the Act shall be so construed as to reduce the allowances now authorized by law for any person in the Army."

We sent a special letter to all of the leading newspapers throughout the country, giving them the actual facts, the financial status of the officers with families, their responsibility, as well as an appeal for fair treatment. This letter was sent to more than 500 newspapers and immediately began to bring replies throughout every section. The following extract from the "Buffalo Express" is a fair sample of the type of response received:

"This being an officer in the United States Army is not all cakes and ale. Quite aside from the responsibilities which fall upon those in command, there are burdens which many of the young men who have gone into the service through the training camps are finding pretty heavy. They have discovered that it costs a good deal to be an officer, and a good many of the young men who are now lieutenants and captains in the National Army went into the game without much thought as to what this might mean. Many of them are married and therefore have dependents and doubtless most of them have no appreciable resources outside of their pay.

"A second lieutenant in the Army receives $141 a month, first lieutenant $166 and captain $200, with 10 per cent increase for foreign service. An officer, unlike a private, must maintain and equip himself. It has been figured that altogether these young officers are put to an expense of $450 for complete equipment for foreign service; or, figuring equipment and replacement, about $50 a month for the first year. Mess costs are considerable and in many of the camps officers have been compelled to provide their own quarters. They should take the Government insurance and they are supposed to buy a few Liberty Bonds. And about that time they begin to wonder where they are at, especially if married.

"These are among the reasons urged in support of legislation now before Congress looking for mitigation of existing conditions. Some commutation for family quarters and a partial equipment for foreign service are asked. That surely is not an unreasonable demand. Especially is it a just demand that the Government should furnish officers the service equipment required by regulations.

"An agitation which is being organized in support of measures to this end is deserving of universal and hearty support. The necessary laws should be enacted by Congress at once and made retroactive to the beginning of the war."

Shortly afterwards, special hearing was given the bill in the Senate and, partly as a result of the publicity we were able to obtain for it, but largely because of its obvious justice, it was sent to the House. We then sent a letter to every State Council of Defense in the country, as well as to the newspapers that had been helpful, and on Wednesday, April 10th, the bill was brought before the House for final hearing and, in spite of some opposition, it was passed by a fair majority. In view of the later unwillingness of Congress to provide any relief on the matter of cost of equipment, passage of this bill meant a great deal to the families of the men throughout the country who were leading the Army.

From the beginning of the organization, the granting of loans and the securing of repayments constituted one of our largest activities. In the first two days over $125,000 was loaned the men. The Association secured an allotment of pay, but discovered later that there was a regulation of the Quartermaster's Department which made it impossible to secure returns in that way. Every man who had made a loan was notified of this fact and many repaid their loans monthly by check direct.

In March the Executive Manager, on a visit to Washington, conferred with the Director of Finance in the Depot Quartermaster's Department, and a change in the regulation was made, providing that officers were to be allowed to make allotments to others besides their families. After this, the allotments came in monthly, as arranged at the close of camp, and the matter of collections from that time on was very much simplified, although a great deal of confusion resulted because the allotments were not paid for the first few months after the men left camp.

Up to date, we have loaned and given to men in service and to their families $350,000. This has helped in a great many ways and has been deeply appreciated by the men. Their repayments were conscientious and showed the fine spirit in which they accepted the help offered.

AFTER THE ARMISTICE

At the time of the armistice in November, 1918, we were pressing the organization of smaller local organizations and extending the work of the Association on the broadest basis. The armistice came as a great relief to the home folks and with it a great pride in the knowledge that the participation of our country in the war had helped to produce the final victory.

Immediately the Association changed its plans to meet the requirements of men returning to civil life. Those who had been absent from their usual occupations for two or three years found conditions changed upon their return. The readjustment back to a self-supporting position in civil life was even more difficult than the entrance into the Army.

The Board of Directors, in January, 1919, voted that all the activities of the Association should be directed toward replacing the returning men in suitable positions and in assisting the men and their families to get a fair start in civil life—that all other plans and purposes should be set aside in order that this work might be well done.

In keeping with this policy, the Executive Manager organized, first, a group of employment advisers, representing every prominent profession, trade and industry in Chicago. He then attempted, although without great success, to organize similar committees throughout the six States of this district. In December, as chairman of the Organizing Committee of the newly formed Bureau of Soldiers and Sailors, he outlined the plan of organization which was subsequently adopted—namely, a centralized office, sufficiently large to take care of the problem of re-employing all men from the service; of employing service men to do this work on a business-like basis; also presenting the plan which eventually was adopted, by which the co-operating organizations should agree to support this Bureau of Soldiers and Sailors out of their own funds as a part of their readjustment work rather than to trust to Government support, which eventually would have failed, or to private initiative, which would never have been adequate.

Mr. W^m C. Boyden

Mr. W^m V. Kelley

Major Henry G. Gale

From December to March the Employment Bureau was maintained in connection with the United States Employment service at Dearborn and Washington streets. But in March, through the efforts of Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood, who had just become commander of the Central Department, the Bureau of Soldiers, Sailors and Marines was much strengthened. Larger financial support was secured from co-operating agencies and the work was removed to 120 West Adams street.

For a year this Bureau was the center of work for the returning soldiers, sailors and marines. More than 100,000 returning men registered there for some kind of service, and more than 40,000 positions were secured for men in civil life.

The Fort Sheridan Association removed to the Bureau as soon as it opened and worked with it until it closed. Lieut. C. A. Rogers, Jr., was employed to take charge of the employment of returning officers and of specialized professions or businesses where special efforts were necessary. This position gave unusual opportunities for service. Thousands of men and women were helped directly in our office, while by correspondence with members and others at a distance we tried to assist returning men in every available way.

From January 1st to March 1, 1920, the Association, at the request of General Wood, and with the approval of the Citizens' Committee which secured the special funds, agreed to assume all running expenses of the Bureau of Soldiers, Sailors and Marines until it closed its year's work. This completed a record of practical and persistent service which compares favorably in Chicago with the largest national agencies.

Members outside of Illinois can testify that the organization has also endeavored to reach out as far as possible. During the past year $50,000 has been advanced to men and their families in all sections of the country and, as far as we have been able, we have co-operated with local agencies to accomplish everything possible.

On July 17, 1919, the Civilian Board, having served faithfully during the period of the war, resigned in order that the machinery of the Association might be returned to the men who originally organized it.

As a recognition of the broad lines adopted and the generous purposes for the future the Board of Directors elected in their places for the remainder of the term of three years, the following officers: General James A. Ryan, president; Maj. Albert A. Sprague, II, chairman Board of Directors; Maj. Philip Fox, first vice president; Maj. J. W. E. Taylor, second vice-president; Col. Abel Davis, third vice-president; Maj. John S. Miller, Jr., secretary; Lt. John S. Broeksmit, treasurer; Harry E. Weese, assistant treasurer. Directors: Col. Abel Davis, Capt. Marshall Field, III, Maj. Thomas R. Gowenlock, Maj. John S. Miller, Jr., Gen. James A. Ryan, Maj. Albert A. Sprague, II, Capt. John A. Stevenson.

The Association has consistently backed every effort to secure for returning ex-service men every help the Government could give them, and has championed their cause on every occasion. Complaints have been investigated. Information that wounded men were to be discharged from army hospitals before they were fit for civil life brought speedy action at Washington from the Chairman of our Board of Directors, Maj. A. A. Sprague, and resulted in the order being revoked. Special cases outside the membership have been taken care of in homes and hospitals. In addition, the Association has given $10,000 to the American Legion to install a service department, believing that through such an organization large results would be secured.

Throughout its whole career the Association has sought to do the greatest possible good to the largest number, without seeking credit or considering its own personal advantages.

After the return of the men, several reunions have been held. Men came from long distances to be present. A larger reunion was held in Chicago, to which all of the members were invited. More than seven hundred attended. Every company in the First and Second Camps was represented. There was a spirit of a good fellowship which carried every man back to Fort Sheridan in 1917. Such reunions will be planned in the future in other cities and at Fort Sheridan.

Records of men killed or wounded have been carefully kept. Full information is on file in our office and is always available to members.

The memorial section of this volume contains a brief resume of each. No attempt has been made to go into detail. The fuller records carry a wealth of honorable service which will always be an inspiration to the members of the Association.

Two hundred and seventy of our members were killed in the service. Many of them left dependent families, to which we are obligated by every law of life. Sometimes they have needed the simple testimony of our continued interest and appreciation to help them over the lonely hours and the heavier responsibility.

At Christmas time in December, 1919, the Association sent to the seventy children, whose fathers were our fellow officers and friends, a beautiful solid silver table ring with this inscription:

“To.....

From his Father's Brother Officers who served with him at Fort Sheridan in 1917.”

One of the replies will testify to how much even such a little token was appreciated:

“Words so feebly express my feelings towards the men of the Association that it is almost useless to try to put them on paper. The silver napkin rings which you sent to my babies were of themselves beautiful, but the sentiment which prompted the gift is to me of priceless value—to be treasured in my heart to life’s end and left as a wonderful heritage for my children. * * * I would like to personally thank every man of the Association, to clasp his hand and say, ‘God bless and prosper you.’ I do bless each one from the depth of my heart and some day, when my babies are able to understand, they will too. Will you, personally, please accept my thanks and prayers for all good things for you and whenever possible pass them on to the men of the Association.”

We want to close this story of the Fort Sheridan Association with the statement that all that is written here seems insignificant and paltry as compared with the living and deathless accomplishment of the thousands of men who, silently and unheralded, gave their best to their country. Men who even now are held by their wounds in distant hospitals—men who are handicapped in their future struggle for existence—wives and little children, mothers and fathers who paid the immeasurable price.

We cannot do it justice, but there came to our office from a home where two sons (Lieuts. Bernard and Leon D. Van’t Hof) never returned, these words with which we close, believing that the truly great record was written in such lives as these:

We had two sons;
 No braver lads than they.
 Those of their friends who knew them best can testify.
 In manliness their equal hard to find,
 In tenderness and love none might compare.
 Their kiss at greeting like unto the kiss of a sweet girl,
 Their parting kiss a benediction rare.
 Love and devotion marked their every step,
 And love grew on apace beneath our roof.
 Through darkening days of trouble and despair,
 Their true worth shone with a devotion rare.
 And wheresoever censure reared her head
 Their faithfulness remained without compare.
 Came country’s call.
 Arise! ye men. Arise!
 Give me your manhood’s strength.
 Go forth to battle for the cause
 The cause of mankind’s weal
 Democracy triumphant.
 They heard,
 They faltered not,
 They went.
 They spake in solemn tone and low,
 The call has come and we must go.
 Our country calls, and we,
 Shall we be slow to answer?
 No.
 Does not God choose his instruments to carry out His plans
 And place within their hearts desire to serve?
 We go.
 We shall return if God so wills,
 But if it be His will that we should fall
 We pray for grace that we may give Him all.
 And so they went.
 Our hearts beat high as word came of their deeds,

Our tears flowed as we heard of wounds received.
And when news came of decorations granted
For valiant deeds performed,
Supplanted were our tears and fears by pride and joy
And grateful song we raised
That God had given us two sons, two men,
Who in the hour of trial failed not, nor faltered,
But with head erect, and flashing eye and lion heart
Met foe and vanquished him.
Then came the sad, sad news,
'Regret to state your son, leading
His men to victory, was brought in bleeding from fatal wounds
And has 'gone west,'
Smiling, glad to have done his best."
Ah, God, now give us grace to say,
Thy will be done. Thou gave and Thou hast taken.
Be brave dear hearts, yet is thy cup not filled.
God in His providence has willed,
That you should offer all.
And came the other message.
Blotting like a pall remaining light,
And hope took flight, and—
We had given all.
Ah, God, Thou art a Father
And Thou didst give Thy Son that we might live,
But Thou are God,
And we are only human,
And we are sad and lonesome for our lads,
We miss their loving kiss,
Their hearty greeting,
Their cheering smile,
And all the while the home-fire bright we're keeping
For their dear sakes.
Perhaps, who knows, some day they will return,
At night when all is silent,
When stars are bright,
And they will come
And they will press our lips
With the accustomed, ne'er to be forgotten goodnight kiss,
Ah, God,—

A ROLL OF HONOR

Eager and steadfast, keen and gay and brave
In all the radiant vigor of their prime,
They left sweet promises of life and time,
And hand and heart and mind unflinching gave
That they their country's liberty might save
From any menace of dishonor; glad To share what strength, power and gifts they had Lest greed and tyranny the world enslave—

And, though beneath the poppy fields of France
Rest now the zest and wonder of their youth,
Their was the glory and the high romance
Of rescuing peace, mercy, justice, truth,
That future generations might possess
All that they lost of love and happiness—

From November 26, 1912, until January 26, 1914, he served with the Wisconsin National Guard. He then re-enlisted in Company F of the 2nd Regiment, Illinois National Guard, serving on the Mexican border in 1916, where he was promoted to a sergeantcy and offered a commission. Was rejected for admission to West Point and failed to win a commission in the First Officers' Training Camp, Fort Sheridan, 4th Company, on account defective eyesight. He was called in the first draft and again rejected for the same reason. He then re-enlisted in the 2nd Infantry, Illinois National Guard, with his old rank as duty sergeant. At Houston, Tex., he passed examination for commission and was awarded a first lieutenantcy. He sailed for France with the 132nd Infantry in May, 1918. In August, 1918, he was promoted to a captaincy and cited for bravery. On October 11, 1918, while leading his company in the Bois de Chaumes, east of the Meuse, he was instantly killed by enemy machine gun fire. Captain Wood was unmarried. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. George S. Wood, and two brothers, Captain Norman B. Wood, Company C, 132nd Infantry, and Captain George S. Wood, Jr., Company A, 337th Infantry, survive.

Training Camp

Early Steps in Preparedness

By
COLONEL HALSTED DOREY
4th Infantry, U. S. A.

SOME one has said that the great reunion of the Blue and the Gray on the battlefield of Gettysburg in the Summer of 1913 was a most fitting close to the great drama of the Civil War. While the camp may have been built to serve as the stage for the last scene of the great Civil War, it was later used for the opening act of another play, which has already had a far-reaching effect upon our country, as it was really the prologue of our preparation for the great World War.

As the camp began to take form, General Wood, who was then Chief of Staff in the Army, was inspired with the thought that, although it was being constructed for what would probably be the last great reunion of the men who had fought in the Civil War, it could well be used, when they were through with it, for the beginning of the training of men who were to fight in our future wars, and for whom so little had been done up to that time. He felt that in the next war, as in all our previous wars, the greater part of the fighting would be done by those who were just finishing or had just finished their preparation for their life's fight in civil life. He felt that just as their parents had made sacrifices to prepare them for their future civil life, their country should prepare them for the future military life which was almost bound to be thrust upon them.

He therefore decided that the commencement should be made with college men, as they could best spare the time during their summer vacations. He communicated with the various colleges and universities in the country and finally succeeded in interesting enough to justify the holding of the first Students' Training Camp. As there were no Government funds available for the purpose, the young men attending necessarily had to pay their own expenses and, in order to reduce the expenses as much as possible for the young men living in the far western part of the country, it was decided to hold a second camp at Monterey, California. As in all new movements of this kind, it was difficult to get publicity and only some 220 men attended these two camps in 1913, but, with the exception of the small attendance, the camps were in every way a success, and the men who attended them, upon returning to their colleges, spread the news among their fellow students. The heads of nearly all the larger universities and colleges in the country also became interested—notably Doctor Brinker, of Lehigh, who visited the Gettysburg camp several times, and was indefatigable in spreading the news of the good work accomplished there. The men who attended these first two camps organized themselves into "The National Reserve Corps," which was supported by the "College Presidents' Advisory Committee," the membership of which included the presidents of all but one or two of the prominent colleges and universities of the country. Among the members of this committee were President Lowell of Harvard, Hadley of Yale, and James of the University of Illinois.

In 1914, camps were held at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont; Ludington, Michigan; Asheville, North Carolina, and Monterey, California, with an attendance of over 700. In 1915, camps were held at Plattsburg, New York, and Ludington, Michigan, and the attendance rose to several thousand. All these camps were called Students' Camps, and the age limit for admission was between 19 and 26 years.

As the preparations for the 1915 camps progressed, it was noted that men beyond the maximum age limit were applying for permission to attend. This was partly due, of course, to the fact that a great war had broken out in Europe. The question was finally taken up with General Wood, who was then in command of the Eastern Department, and he decided if a hundred of these older men indicated their desire to attend a training camp, he would authorize the holding of a camp for their benefit at Plattsburg, after the students had finished their course. At first the men interested in the promotion of this camp received little encouragement. Up to about the middle of March, only some forty-six men had indicated a desire to attend. However, when the camp opened in July, the list had grown to some 1,250. On account of the prominent men who were enrolled in this camp, the attention of the whole country was called to it, and soon requests began to pour in from other localities throughout the country, asking for assistance in establishing similar camps. Few of the applicants appreciated the length of time necessary to make preparations for such a camp, and some, no doubt, felt that they did not receive the encouragement they were entitled to. The only additional camp that Summer was at Fort Sheridan, Illinois. The second business men's camp was held at Plattsburg, from the middle of August to the middle of September, with an attendance of some 750. The men who attended these so-called business men's camps formed an organization, which was combined with the society already organized by the students, under the name of "The Military Training Camps Association," and this new organization immediately started a vigorous campaign for recruits for the training camps, to be held in the Summer of 1916. They also took up with Congress the question of a fuller recognition by the Government of these camps and the payment of expenses of the men attending them. In addition, they urged the establishment of an Officers' Reserve Corps. The success of their work is to be found in provisions for these two purposes in the National Defense Act, passed by Congress in the Spring of 1916. They also arranged for Winter correspondence courses, for those who desired to do Winter military work at home. Although the enthusiasm of the men taking this correspondence course was remarkable, the Army officers preparing the course felt that it was not all what it should have been, their excuse being that none of them could be detailed on that exclusive duty, and that they had to prepare the lessons and criticise the papers in moments stolen from their other duties.

In 1916 camps were held at Plattsburg, Fort Sheridan, and at the Presidio of San Francisco, the students being organized into separate units from the older men. Four of these camps were held at Plattsburg, the largest one being in July, with an attendance of about 7,000. Although over 25,000 men enrolled, only some 17,000 actually attended, the shortage being due to the call of troops of the Regular Army and the National Guard to the Border, and the threatened railroad strike. Because of the latter, many business men were afraid to get far away from their business. Another handicap due to the call of troops to the Border was the resulting shortage of regular officers who were available to act as instructors. The new membership to the training camps association, resulting from the 1916 camps, gave an increased impetus to the recruiting and other activities of the association, and when we entered the war in 1917 the stage was set for a very much larger attendance in the 1917 camps than had been had in all the previous camps put together.

As soon as it was ascertained that we were to enter the war, the members of the training camps association began to plan how they, as an organization, could best help the country, and it was due to their efforts that the first series of Officers' Training Camps were inaugurated at such an early date, and with such a large attendance.

THE United States of America need fear no war. If the sacred soil of that Nation is threatened with invasion, or her glorious name and honor defamed, a million men will spring to arms overnight to overthrow the most powerful and designing of invaders. Why be afraid? Have the armies of America ever been defeated by a foreign foe?

Shortly after the Civil War the germ of such reasoning took root and, as the country prospered, the more deeply did it become imbedded. Nor did the Spanish-American War halt this train of thought. It seemed to convince a multitude that the United States could subdue a great European aggressor with a negligible amount of sacrifice and expense.

Then came August 14, 1914. The laws of humanity violated, the honor of treaties destroyed, and Europe plunged in blood. America stood aghast.

The months dragged on. The war progressed. Its scope increased. Country after country became involved. The fact that, by the end of the year 1916, the United States had not entered the conflict was in itself lamentable in the estimation of honor-loving Americans, although not so inexcusably tragic as the refusal as a nation to take steps on a large scale for preparation in order to be ready when the fatal day arrived.

The War Department chafed under the situation. They knew only too well the difficulties ahead if war should come. They had extensive plans, but lacked the authority to carry them out. True, thanks to the untiring efforts of General Leonard Wood, training camps for college students were inaugurated during the summer of 1913. These camps were so successful that similar instruction was given each succeeding summer through the year 1916, not only for college men, but for business men as well. These camps were responsible for the enthusiasm of the men who established military instruction in various universities, such as the formation of a Battalion of Field Artillery at Yale, and an Infantry Regiment at Harvard. Desire for preparedness alike spurred on the National Guard, an especial example of which was the development of the First Illinois Field Artillery and the First Cavalry of New York.

In 1916 came the Mexican trouble which sidetracked temporarily interest in the European struggle but proved to be of benefit in exposing our deplorable state of unpreparedness and in affording field training to the Regular Army, National Guard and some college organizations belonging to the National Guard.

The Mexican crisis passed in the Fall of 1916. Europe again became the point of interest. Germany, realizing our unpreparedness and imagining that we would never awake, became bolder, extending her submarine warfare and paying scant attention to numerous presidential notes. The sinking of the "Lusitania" on May 7, 1915, was the turning point. How could the United States avoid war with honor after that? The answer to the tragedy was another "note", but righteous indignation throughout the country from this time on began to rapidly crystallize. On February 3, 1917, diplomatic relations with Germany were severed. And, on April the 6th, 1917—April—the month of the Battle of Lexington which precipitated the Revolution, the month of Sumpter which pitted North against South,—the United States declared war against Germany.

Did we mobilize a million men overnight and rush them across the water the following day to stop the gruesome carnage? Thanks to the British Navy, the foe, then at the height of his power on land, was prevented from invading our shore at a time when we should have been almost powerless to resist. The United States—a Samson shorn of his locks—had contracted for a battle with a powerful giant, fit, and shall we say victorious? What was to be done?

A tremendous army was needed. The assembling of a large number of men was not in itself the most difficult task; but once assembled, where was the material with which they were to train and where would be the officers to train them? The German nation appreciated this problem more than we ourselves. General Hindenburg stated when we entered the war that it was impossible for America to organize an army because of the lack of officers capable of operating in a battle area. Germany at the time treated our entry into the conflict as trivial, because she hoped to victoriously terminate the war before we could produce an effective military machine.

But the lack of preparation in this country was due to ignorance—not to lack of patriotism. Once in the war the Nation was in it heart and soul. We had failed to prepare for the test, but it was still not too late. Teuton logic was scheduled for one of its premier jolts.

While Congress was striving to thrash out the vexing question of how to raise an army, the War Department was authorized to launch at once its plan for laying the foundation for that army. Little did it matter at that time to the army officials as to whether recruits were to be secured by voluntary enlistment or draft. They knew that one million men were needed at the earliest possible moment and that before those men were called, there must be officers to train and lead them.

The United States, for military purposes, was divided into sixteen sections, each section containing approximately the same population, although obviously not an equal number of square miles. From each of these sections, the War Department was to pick 2,500 men—those apparently most promising in mind and body of all applicants who volunteered—to take a course of training designed to prepare them to become officers. For these sixteen sections there were to be established, in appropriate sections of the country, fourteen training camps. Men from the first and second sections were to train at the same camp—Plattsburg. Men from the tenth and eleventh sections were also to train at a single camp—Fort Sheridan. This accounts for there being two less camps than sections.

The declaration of war with Germany did not bring a simultaneous announcement of this plan, although the War Department must have been considering it for many months, probably since the success of the first student training camps in 1913. Consequently, although thousands made up their minds to volunteer as soon as they had read the news on April 6th, a great majority hesitated to act at once, wishing to place what military experience they had, or their advanced or technical training, in that service which would be of greatest advantage to the country. Rumor (that word to be heard so much of later) had it that the War Department was very likely to adopt some such plan, and this resulted in hundreds of men scurrying about in a strenuous effort to verify the rumor. Men closed their desks and boarded trains for college towns, hoping that the army officers at their university might have some special information unobtainable at home. Members of National Guard organizations kept in constant touch with headquarters. Former training camp men phoned and wrote. Seniors laid down their books.

The plan was at last announced early in April, 1917. Application blanks were to be obtained at any recruiting station or army office. What the pecuniary compensation was to be was not then known. To most of the men that did not matter. They knew there would be some compensation, but most of all they wanted to serve.

Former training camps men and men from university organizations eagerly requested blanks. National Guardsmen applied for discharge in order that they might enter the camps. Undergraduates of universities—mostly seniors—sought admission. Hundreds of other university trained men and business men of no previous military experience requested the privilege of enlisting in the camps. It was like the first call for volunteers, yet Congress was still trying to decide what method to employ in raising the army of the United States.

The following centers were selected for the establishment of the camps: Ft. Ogelthorpe, Ga.; Plattsburg, N. Y.; Des Moines, Iowa; Leon Springs, Tex.; Presidio, San Francisco, Calif.; Ft. Snelling, Minn.; Ft. Sheridan, Ill.; Camp Lee, Va.; Ft. Benj. Harrison, Indianapolis, Ind.; Ft. Riley, Kans.; Ft. Sill, Okla.; Ft. Monroe, Va., and Camp Johnson, Fla.

Many of these stations—regular army posts—already were equipped with barracks suitable for the housing of the expected men. Others, however, had few if any barracks of a permanent sort. Illinois generously proffered the brick buildings at Fort Sheridan to the 2,500 who were coming from Wisconsin and Michigan. To the men of Illinois were assigned the fields south of these barracks—across the ravine. But the fields of May the first were not the fields of May tenth in Sheridan or any of the other permanently barrackless camps. Hammers rattled, saws hummed, wagons rumbled, men toiled. The evening of the tenth witnessed a village of sixty buildings on the west of the road, across the ravine and twenty-four more on the eastern side. Carpenters swept up the last of the shavings and sawdust within the glistening barracks while mammoth trench diggers gnawed noisily and deeply great ditches without.

On May the first, applications for entrance closed. The next week was spent by the responsible officers in carefully selecting those who in their estimation were the most deserving of the hundreds of applicants. These many hundreds, during the same period, filled with uncertainty, anxiously awaited the fateful news. Candidates had been rated A, B, or C, according to age and the amount of previous military experience and education they had had. This system had its human weaknesses, but it seemed to bear considerable weight in the selection of the prospects. On May 10th, the first momentous postal cards were received by some few hundred "A" men, requesting them to start at once for the Citizens' Camp at Fort Sheridan. They were to bring the cards with them to present to the Camp Adjutant upon arrival. From then on to the 15th, several hundred of these cards were mailed daily, thus virtually completing the call of 5,000 men to Fort Sheridan and 40,000 to all the camps of the United States.

Those early days of arrival before work really commenced on the 15th were filled with many scenes of interest and action. Each train which stopped in front of that famous stone station with its antiquated brass cannon and caged cannon balls (one missing) poured forth from every step a stream of youth whose cheery faces and eager spirit augured the unfailing success of the future. Of course all were not cheery. Some faces were distinctly set with determination. But there were none downcast.

From the station the newcomers streamed across the electric tracks, across the road and along the cinder path which cuts diagonally over a field and leads past the guardhouse to the main brick barracks. Some wore overcoats; some had none. A few were in uniform—relics of the "Border" or old National Guard days. In the hands or on the shoulders of many there was baggage of every description from telescope suit cases to blanket rolls, and even some bundles done up in genuine old shelter halves. The yellow of brand new army shoes occasionally caught the eye. There was little levity as this stream crunched over the path. None knew definitely what was ahead, but the majority realized there would be work, and plenty of it. Then, too, all were not positively sure they were "in." There were those wretched physical exams!

From cinders they echoed along the hard concrete in front of the tall barracks just past the drive which leads under the tower. Beside the door—the first on the left of the tower—was a board sign which read, "Wallace B. Scales, Adjutant." This was the goal of the postal card. The trainload formed in single file outside of this door, and each man searched for his precious "ticket." A man would knock, step in, present his card as genteelly as possible "non modo belli", receive instructions from the adjutant, awkwardly face about and step out. His next goal was the drill hall. Here there were men sitting at tables—fellows who already had been commissioned in the reserve—who would enter his name in a book and again on a little card. On the card also was written the number of the company to which the man was assigned and the number of the barracks in which he should sleep. It happened that the company a man was assigned to was all a matter of chance. The companies were filled up in order, beginning with the number 1 and running through 15 in the Illinois regiment; and beginning with A and ending with P in the Michigan-Wisconsin regiment, the letter J, as usual, being omitted.

Upon finding out the number or letter of his company, the candidate next sought out the temporary headquarters of his organization, which headquarters were located somewhere in the permanent barracks. The room located, the candidate would find there usually two men—reserve officers assigned to the company to assist in its administration—who would have them register in a book and then would proceed to give instructions as to where to eat, sleep and secure a uniform and other immediately necessary equipment. The first object then sought by the newcomer was his bed. For those who arrived before the 12th, these were in the main barracks, for the Illinois as well as the Michigan and Wisconsin men, because the Illinois barracks were not fully complete. Up until the 15th all meals were served in the permanent barracks, and those whose bunks were in the huts across the ravine marched three times daily back to receive their rations.

Having secured a bed, the candidate's next move was to be fitted for a uniform. There was a room in the permanent barracks for this purpose. Two or three supply sergeants were there to measure and equip. Service hats, coats, breeches, canvas leggings, sox and shoes were available if a man could find a size that would fit him, but no hat cords. The training camp hat cords had not yet arrived and did not come in until several weeks later. Many men unable to get a fit in coat or breeches were forced to appear in part civilian attire for more than a week. No part of the uniform was of gratuitous issue. The value of the portions secured was deducted from the monthly compensation. This compensation was later announced to be $100.00 a month.

For those that arrived before the 15th there was little to do after permanent barracks had been located, and cots, mattresses and uniform secured. Time was consumed in hiking, policing, buying text books, perhaps taking out a little insurance, and visiting friends.

On the 15th of May, training started in earnest under the direction of Colonel William J. Nicholson, Commandant of the Camp. Assisting Colonel Nicholson in instruction were Major H. LaT. Cavanaugh as senior instructor; Lieut.-Colonel James A. Ryan and Major James S. Parker; Lieut.-Colonel Ryan being in direct charge of the Michigan-Wisconsin group; Major Parker being responsible for the Illinois men. The Michigan-Wisconsin camp was called the Tenth Provisional Training Regiment (abbreviated "10th P. T. R."); and the Illinois section, the "11th P. T. R."; the numbers being derived from the military section of the country from which candidates were chosen. Each of these regiments was made up of fifteen companies; each company, of between 160 and 170 men. The instructors placed in command of companies were Regular Army officers of the rank of either captain or first lieutenant. Assisting the company instructor were generally two reserve officers of the rank of captain, first or second lieutenant.

There were three chaplains at the camp. Major E. J. Vattman, who was the dean of all Regular Army chaplains and had a record that went back to the Indian campaigns as well as a conspicuous record in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. With him were associated Chaplain Charles W. Gilkey and Chaplain Myron E. Adams, by appointment of the commanding officer.

By most companies, the morning of the 15th was spent in organizing temporarily into squads and platoons, with men acting in the various positions of non-commissioned officers and officers. The men were first arranged according to size, having the tallest man on the right of the line. Then men who had had some previous military experience were temporarily placed to act as non-coms and lieutenants. Some sort of organization having thus been accomplished the balance of the day's work consisted of preliminary drill in the school of the soldier, physical exercise, lectures and hikes. Speedily the men progressed with their infantry drill until by the end of the first week they were marching and going through physical exercises with rifles.

Adjutant First R. O. T. C.

“Late” civilians, accustomed to sauntering up to a desk at the luxurious hour of 9 or 10 A. M., welcomed not the cruel notes of “first call” at the uncomfortable stroke of 5:30—especially in chill barracks on a frosty May morn. To add to the misery, “reveille” was blown at 5:40 and “assembly” five minutes later. Those first few mornings some could “make it” only by omitting a portion of the apparel—generally those two miserable pieces of canvass. But one such offense was enough. Following roll call the company would proceed to the nearest available open space and there, either by squads or as a whole, proceed to stimulate circulation and appetite with thirty minutes of vigorous calisthenics.

“Soupy”—that call to which the expression “A. W. O. L.” is never applied—was blown at 6:20, whereat the line, already eagerly formed again since dismissal from physical drill would “right face”, go “column left” and pound over the board floors of the mess shacks with a hungry viciousness which caused enameled dishes and tin spoons to leap in the air and rattle, seeking a voice to cry “route step” and thus “save the bridge.” The breakfast fare was a goodly one of some variety of canned fruits, cooked or “dry” cereal, eggs and bacon, and large slices of bread, the consumption of which was greatly enhanced by the presence of pitchers of molasses. There seemed to be a sufficient supply of “Pullman” cooks and waiters to cheerfully produce a never-ending stream of supplies.

Any inclination to “linger over the cups” received an abrupt jolt at 6:45. The company area must be “policed”, and this was the time set aside for the performance of that task. It was accomplished in each company by an avalanche of men who “vultured” everything north and south between two imaginary lines, from barrels to match sticks. If any scrap remained after the initial tour, it was the duty of the first sergeant to see that the performance was repeated.

Then came the assembly at seven o'clock. Here commenced the work of the day except for those who, either because of enterprise or inability to prepare the night before, snatched a few moments for study between “first call” and assembly for drill.

From May 15th until June 15th the training for the thirty companies of the two regiments was carried out along lines that would give the same type and amount of training to all. The aim seemed to be to give all men an equal foundation in the rudiments of infantry drill and tactics, no matter what branch of the service they were striving eventually to enter. It was an excellent plan, especially for those men who were destined to train the National Army.

The day was full from 7 to 12 and from 1 to 4 with drill, lectures and hikes. The evening from 7:30 to 9:30 was devoted to study.

“Success in battle is the ultimate object of all military training; success may be looked for only when the training is intelligent and thorough.” The staff of instructors at Fort Sheridan—an exceedingly able and efficient group of officers—seemed to bear this opening paragraph of the Infantry Drill Regulations constantly in mind and endeavored to impress it indelibly upon the men, for the success of whom as future officers they were to be so largely responsible. Generalities, however true, meant nothing to them. A man must know his drill regulations precisely. The result was that many candidates were trained to the point of being able to give instructions to others in language as explicit and almost identical to that of the drill regulations. Work in the drill regulations the first month covered the School of the Soldier up through the School of the Battalion. Also definitions, orders, commands and signals. The men became skilled in the manual of arms, in sighting, sub-caliber practice, and in the use of the rifle in physical drill. The first principles of bayonet drill were established. The manual of guard duty was taken up and acquaintance made with “Sergeant Hill” in the “Studies in Minor Tactics.” The men learned how to roll their packs and to carry them full for hikes of several miles. They learned how to keep their quarters in an orderly manner, to care for their rifle, and to conduct a Saturday inspection. More than learning to command, this first month, they learned the really first essential—to obey.

An idea of the rapidity with which work commenced and some impressions of a candidate giving a glimpse of the early Camp days are given in a letter dated May 17, 1917:

We are down to solid work now, and it seems as though life of any other sort were something of a very distant past.

I surely was soft when this new life commenced, and am just beginning to experience the old time feelings of health driving out the results of confinement and smoke.

It's just as it was last summer—you see very little of anybody outside of your own company. Of course it isn't much fun not knowing many in the company,—makes it seem like the first few days of school or college—but we aren't here for fun anyway.

Every company has a regular captain in charge. We have a good instructor for our first platoon—a regular army sergeant, who has been drilling high school companies in the city. He holds a captain's commission in the reserve.

We were issued new equipment today—cartridge belts, canteens, mess kits, haversacks, rifles and bayonets. All of the latest model and new.

Artillery knowledge of drill has been sufficient so far, but when work with the rifles commences, there will be lots to learn.

FRIDAY A. M.

Had only a fair night last night, because I drew a cot without a mattress when we were shifted from barracks B to A. We bunk now according to squads.

Have just been out drilling with a bunch with rifles, trying to learn the manual of arms.

The food is great——

There has been no confusion at all in handling this crowd of men. The experience of last summer must have taught them a good many lessons.

There are a good many men of a deal of experience here—some have been in the Spanish War and Philippine Insurrection. One man named——— is a past captain of Chicago police—large, deep voice and humorous.

The majority seem to keep in good health. They are working up distances in the hikes gradually so that there are few sore feet. All are well-browned already. It will be a far more imposing crowd, though, when all get uniforms. There are still a great many without them.

Have been in swimming twice. Water as cold as ice. So are the showers. No hot water at all.

Heard of one company where an employer was a private under his office boy as sergeant.

The newspapers run a column or so of "bull" every day which is pretty well colored up. You read them to find out what is going on in camp.

Don't worry about us. It's a wonderfully healthy life.

The drill of the day during the first month was over at 4 P. M., and at 4:30 during the last two. The realization of the longed-for moment of parole to a long pent-up prisoner could hardly be more welcome than was the brassy blast of "recall" to the brain-fagged, dust-begrimed embryo officer. When a heavy-footed column swung scuffling along the road and finally turned down the proper company "street", it was with much inward groaning that eyes lolled to the right trying to get the proper "dress" after the acting officer in charge had called "Squads right! Compan-e-e—!" And when the command of execution finally came there was a breathless silence lest there be some useless words before "dismissed!" Whoops of glee, sighs of relief and silence followed equally this magic word. Those still "peppy" ran for the wooden doors. Others aimed for the same goal, but time was of no import. Bathrobe or slicker, towel, soap and slippers were first in the minds of all. Then down the line of barracks they would stroll or run having these articles not merely in mind. That chilly month of May produced showers of equal hue. Needless to say the time consumed thereunder was not immense. Milder weather brought milder showers. By July they were really hot. Some bothered not with indoor spraying. The open lake held more charm, so down the bluff they would romp, across the sand and into the chilly deep, a few, absent in mind, still with a wrist watch on.

There is nothing like a chill lake for refreshment. This, combined with a day of open air and action, was responsible in part for the great canteen popularity. There were two such places of chocolate bars, crackers and "pop"—one in the permanent barracks and one in a little shack beside the bridge on the Illinois side of the ravine. Between 4:30 and 6, and even after supper, there were patrons massed there, buying. Of course, everybody was not there. Many indulged in indoor or outdoor baseball, while others amused themselves playing "Leap Frog" and "Duck on the Rock." On July 9th a large throng was entertained by an exhibition ball game between the Sox and Athletics, in which the Sox were defeated, 5 to 1.

Some few of the candidates whose homes were but a short distance from the Camp would occasionally hasten away to enjoy a home-cooked supper and rush back to be present at the 7:30 assembly for study. Such a treat was not open to all. Over the week-ends, however, there was more of a chance. Saturday mornings were devoted principally to policing, inspections and the making up of back work. At noon the day's work ended. The War Department well realized that relaxation was an absolute necessity and that work at a high pitch could not continue with benefit even through the whole of Saturday. Rapid training was necessary, but not training to a point of complete exhaustion.

The siding, leading from the main line of the "North-Western" to the quartermaster storehouses, had been extended to a point beyond the guard-house. This extension was appreciated in no small degree by the majority of those fortunate enough to secure passes over the much anticipated week-end, for when bedlam broke loose at 12 o'clock there was always a lengthy line of yellow coaches on this recent extension, waiting to swallow up the seekers of diversion from the military.

Many of the men had homes to go to. The families of others lived too far away to make a week-end trip possible. It was for the sake of these latter that many families of Lake Forest, Highland Park, Glencoe, Winnetka, Kenilworth, Evanston and Lake Bluff offered the hospitality of their homes. It meant a great deal to the men to be so generously entertained. These people of the nearby towns who were so kind will have the everlasting gratitude of the men who, in their own misfortune, were fortunate enough to have been the recipients of this hospitality.

Recreation and entertainment were by no means entirely of an impromptu nature, nor was the planning for them left wholly in the hands of the candidates. The men themselves were responsible for a great deal of the fun and sport, but the general direction of organized sports, planned entertainment and studies other than military, was under the supervision of that organization which had men on its staff whose time was devoted entirely to encouraging those activities which would be of greatest all around benefit to the men—the Y. M. C. A.

Just as the Y. M. C. A. moved with the troops to the Border in 1916, so did one of its huts grow up together with the quarters of the men at Fort Sheridan. The building consisted of a lecture and entertainment hall large enough to seat over 500 people; library, game and music rooms (also used as committee rooms), five small study rooms, writing tables to accommodate over one hundred men at a time, moving picture booth, and rooms for five secretaries. Mr. G. M. Martin, General Secretary, was in charge. Associated with him were Chaplains Charles W. Gilkey and Myron E. Adams, in charge of religious and educational activities; Mr. E. C. Stevens, director of social activities; Mr. H. B. Miller (later appointed Camp Athletic Officer by Colonel Nicholson), in charge of physical and recreative activities, and Mr. J. H. Nudkiff.

Some such a center as that afforded by the Y. M. C. A. in a training camp is more than a luxury. It is a necessity. And all members of the camps at Sheridan will agree that, thanks to the able secretaries working there, the need at the Fort was admirably filled. Fourteen classes in French were organized out of the "Young College" of 400 who applied for the course. Each company had its athletic officer, and inter-company ball games were accordingly arranged. Every Tuesday and Thursday evening band concerts were given. There were amateur theatricals, movies, or both, once a week. On Sundays services were held where could be heard such interesting men as Chaplain Gilkey, Chaplain Adams, Dr. John Timothy Stone and Dean Shailer Matthews. Among other speakers heard during the week were Julius Rosenwald, President Harry Pratt Judson, Dr. W. A. Evans, Homer Rodeheaver, Major Koehler and Colonel Nicholson. The "Y" was ever open and ready to serve the men of the Camp. Many who for the first time at Fort Sheridan became acquainted with the work which it was striving to do became and remained its staunch friends ever after.

There were others, too, in the Camp whose main purpose was to serve. These were the Boy Scouts who reported for duty during the opening days of the Camp. They acted as guides to bewildered recruits. They served long tedious hours as orderlies. They performed innumerable odd tasks and errands for instructors and students who had little time for details. And last but not least, they acted as carriers and distributors for that most-looked-forward-to treat of the day—the mail. It is hardly necessary to say that during the early days especially their services were well nigh indispensable.

Physical examinations—most dread of all things to the man who was eager to get into the fray—commenced their threatening grind the last week of the first month of training. Every man was supposed to have had an examination of some sort before filing his application for admission, but many of these examinations had not been thorough and were of course conducted by a great number of physicians not schooled in some of the peculiar military technicalities. At a certain scheduled hour, a company would be marched over to the old hospital on the north side of the ravine. The men would form a single file outside and by jumps of about ten at a time, gradually become assimilated through the front entrance. Long before the last of the men had gone in, the first were coming out from some side door, left sleeves rolled to the shoulder and upper arms feeling strangely queer but showing nothing except occasionally a tiny crimson drop. If the stories of these aching-armed jolliers could be believed, Dante himself was within personally conducting a tour through those regions which he has so well pictured for us. The low-spirited remainder knew not whether to laugh it off or become more concerned. The usual result was a forced grin and absolute petrification.

On Thursday, June 14th, one month after the commencement of training, appeared the first copy of "The Ft. Sheridan Reveille", the paper which, after the issue of Thursday, June 21st, was to be published every Friday until training at Fort Sheridan ceased to be. It was a paper gotten up to keep the men informed as to what had gone on, what was going on, and what was to go on in camp and in the military world. It also aimed to cheer with a fund of fun. The editors consisted of E. B. Lockwood, managing editor; R. F. Rolfe, advertising manager, and Lew Merrill, artist and correspondent. There were eight good pages of reading matter, cartoons and advertisements.

SPECIAL FREIGHT SERVICE

NEW ONES ON "THE DOUBLE"

In addition to important news articles and "Latest Bulletins", a sketch, usually of a prominent officer of the camp, occupied the front page. A "Y. M. C. A. Column", "R. O. T. C. Notes", poems and jingles, bits of news and cartoons, with "ads", sprinkled in, filled the other seven. The paper was a great success.

The first column of the first page of the first "Reveille" tells an interesting story:

This is the fifth week at the Reserve Officers' Training Camp—five weeks of downright, hard work. The results are wholly satisfactory to both the men and the instructors.

The rapidity with which the rudiments of military training have been grasped by men who have heretofore had no experience in that line is one of the remarkable features of the first five weeks.

In spite of a lot of wild rumors to the effect that the final physical tests would result in wholesale rejections, quite the contrary is true. The men are showing up well in these final tests and it now appears that the rejections from the physical standpoint will be very few. The grind in getting into trim has been very hard, and the work incident to this task, added to the tense uncertainty about the final outcome of the tests, has placed a severe strain upon the men. That they are coming out well even under this strain shows that when they get into full swing Uncle Sam will have no occasion to worry about the conduct of his new officers under the trying conditions soon to confront them.

The willingness and eagerness of the men to learn is another feature of the Camp. It is grim business for which they are preparing, and they are going about their preparations for the firing line with a grimness that bodes ill for the adversary.

Up to this time the general rudiments of the training have been along practically the same lines. Beginning next week it is generally understood that a general shake-up will occur and that from then on the branches of the service will divide. Those who are assigned to Cavalry service will then be given special instruction along that line. The Artillery men will proceed to points designated by the Government for special instruction in their branch, while the Infantry men will be instructed in trench fighting, sniping, etc. It is generally understood that the engineers will be transferred to points where they can continue their preparatory work with the full use of engineering equipment.

WAVING BACK AT THE LAKE

The tabulation of reports from company instructors showing the choice made by every man in Camp as to the arm he would like to enter was completed, and the task of grouping them in accordance with orders of the War Department was begun. These orders provide that there shall be nine companies of infantry, three batteries of field artillery and one troop of cavalry to each of the two provisional regiments—one made up of Illinois and the other of Michigan and Wisconsin men. In addition, each regiment already has its company of engineers.

But one part of the redistribution jumped ahead of the others. One hundred out of 254 men who chose to try for commissions in the Coast Artillery were set aside as the group for this branch and ordered to prepare to leave for a seaboard point where they can be given training with the big guns. Fifty of these men come from each regiment.

The tabulation of the choices made by the candidates shows that both the Field Artillery and the Cavalry were "over-subscribed." The excess probably will be used in infantry.

The tabulation follows:

	ILLINOIS	MICH.-WISC.
Infantry	1,022	1,389
Field Artillery	565	426
Cavalry	236	245
Coast Artillery.....	110	144

Col. W. J. Nicholson, the Commandant, said he felt sure that the number to be discharged in the physical tests now going on will not exceed 3 per cent—or about 150 men.

The above prophecy for the most part came true with the exception that the artillery men did not make a change of station for their training. Although the number of men failing to pass the physical tests was not in excess of three per cent, still every company lost from three to five men. This was the first transfer to take place and it served to impress the seriousness of the situation more than ever on the men who survived it. This iron hand of rigid rules which plucked men away because of various physical handicaps, seemed unnecessarily severe, yet it had to be. Some of the most promising candidates were thus mercilessly forced out of the running. Eyes were the cause in many cases. It was a sorrowful day for the remaining comrades when these plucky fellows had to pack up and leave. And the men themselves must have felt even worse, although they bore it all with a smile. If one should follow the future actions of these men he would find that the great majority immediately redoubled their efforts to enter some branch of the service where their slight ailments would be of no hindrance. Some even went to Canada to enlist in order to give their services to the common cause.

On Saturday, June 16th, reorganization took place in preparation for the work of specialization. The Engineers, members of old Company E of the Michigan-Wisconsin Regiment and old Company 1 of the Illinois Camp, had left the latter part of the week for the Army Service Schools at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. Their quarters were to be used for administration pur-

The afternoon of the 16th was one of great activity. A change of quarters was necessary for practically every man. He first must locate his new barracks, then a cot. The cot, of course, he preferred to have near a former friend, but this was not always possible. Friends of the first month were separated, but new bunks in new companies were to lay the foundation for new friendships. The moving of personal possessions did not take long after a cot had been located. In fact, the entire transformation was accomplished with a surprising lack of confusion. By Saturday evening the majority were ready for the new tasks of Monday, and week-end passes were enjoyed as usual.

On Monday, June 18th, at 7 A. M., the newly-formed companies, batteries and troops assembled, were temporarily organized into platoons and squads, and entered upon the work of specialization with an enthusiasm seemingly increased by the vision of a definite goal.

On the following day a communication was published in the newspapers of the country, giving notice of the standard demanded of the future officers, signed by Adjutant General McCain. The edict follows:

It is time to correct erroneous impressions. The best qualified of all reserve officers and candidates will be selected to become officers of the regiment which the training company represents. The object is to appoint from each company troop and battery men in such numbers and grades as to complete the quota of officers needed for each regiment after officers of the regular army have been provided. The total number selected and the number in each grade will therefore depend upon the regular army contingent appointed to each regiment. While the age limits prevent the appointment of older men to lower grades, they do not prevent the appointment of younger men to higher grades—thus, a man of 30 may be a captain or a major.

Appointments to Be Speeded

Those qualified to be reserve officers at the end of the training period, but not selected as indicated above, will be appointed officers at once and continued in service for the duration of the war, subject, of course, to elimination for misconduct, etc., or to relief from active duty as the result of a material and unforeseen change in the military situation.

Those classified under the paragraph should be such as are competent to serve as additional officers of the prospective regiment during its organization period and should be the kind of men who are able to assist in organizing and training the new regiment, to assist in teaching inexperienced and non-commissioned officers their special duties.

They should be the kind of men that can be counted upon as good officers for troops to be organized later when they have had the advantage of their experience with the half million in its formation period. Or they should be good temporary officers in the regular army. They will be recommended for appointment as second lieutenant if under 31 years and 6 months of age; otherwise, as first lieutenant. The number will, of course, vary. It is more a matter of enforcing a high standard than appointing a large number.

Quality to Be First Aim

It should be borne in mind that other camps will follow if the war continues. An excellent man with three months' training is much superior to a weak man with a year's training; hence, it is better to rely on the excellent men of the next camp than to rely on weak men, no matter how much time they have devoted to training.

Men who have definite promise of being competent officers, assuming additional training, will be encouraged to enter the next camp. It is expected that the number of these men will be quite small and will include only young men of most exceptional merit and natural ability who have had no military experience prior to the opening of these camps. No reserve officer of enlisted men of the regular army or national guard will be included in this class.

Sifting Process Described

All others, being those who have merely survived the training period without having demonstrated affirmatively that they possess the fitness and efficiency necessary in an officer, will be discharged with the expiration of enlistment. Reserve officers in this class will be recommended for discharge.

Enlisted men of the Regular Army and National Guard will be ordered to their respective regiments. Men of indifferent promise will not be compelled to remain in training.

Cognizance must be taken of the fact that the men of the National Army will be between 21 and 31 years and of every gradation of intelligence and standing. Immature, weak-looking or unpresentable officers are absolutely out of the question. The requisite is military efficiency. It is emphasized that military efficiency implies ability to lead.

The men were hungry for any authoritative information from Washington which might indicate the plans and prospects of the future. Such an announcement as that of General McCain served to furnish an idea of what was expected of candidates and what the rewards of their efforts would be.

This second and final period of training commenced and continued with an intensity even greater than that of the first. The preliminary training of an all-around nature had been completed. Energy was now diverted towards the work of specialization, although there were several subjects which of necessity were continued and taken up anew, alike by all.

Infantry, Artillery and Cavalry continued the "Studies in Minor Tactics" for a period of four weeks more.

A new study of importance to be taken up simultaneously by the three arms was that of mapping. The subject was carefully explained by the instructors, text-books entitled "Notes on Sketching" and "Notes on Contouring" were distributed, and preliminary studies commenced. The first week of study on this subject was devoted to becoming familiar with the contents of the two text-books. The next week position sketches were made, contouring practiced, and road sketches drawn, three inches to one mile. Before making the road sketches it was necessary to become acquainted with the mysterious "alidade." Drawing boards, too, were purchased or fashioned. To establish accuracy in one's "alidade," a man had to determine his "pace scale." Stakes were placed 100 yards apart and men strode from one stake to the next, intently counting, in an endeavor to find their average number of strides.

Following the road sketch, a map of a certain portion of the camp area was required. This, of course, was the hardest work of all, for it required the accurate locating of roads, buildings and contours. Mappers worked in pairs. A board on a tripod, a sketch on the board and an alidade on the sketch, with a man squinting carefully along the alidade, was a common sight during mapping week. Tripods, however, were not plentiful. The partner's back or a handy post or rock generally served the purpose. The area sketch was the last required of all but the artillery men. It was necessary for them to go further into the making of "panoramic sketches."

There were two other subjects, not touched upon in the first period, which were introduced during the second "term" in every company, battery and troop—the study of the "Manual for Courts-Martial" and "U. S. Army Regulations." To the lawyers, and there were a good many present, the verbiage of the former was in no minor way pleasing. Instructors of some of the outfits were even known to entrust the teaching of this military penal code to habits of the traditionally hostile civil courts. Nevertheless, the military instructor was generally present during such classes, in order that there might be no question as to the proper interpretation of the army text. The term "Military Jurisdiction," found at the top of the first page of Chapter 1, glared staggeringly at the candidate of a non-legal turn of mind. He wondered if he ever would be able to master the strange sounding words and phrases which followed. After a few days' study, however, he found that the explanations were not so terribly vague after all. He learned the sources and kinds of military jurisdiction and the tribunals through which this jurisdiction should be exercised. Of most interest to him among these tribunals were the summary, special and general courts. He found out the distinction between these three "courts-martial"—who had power to appoint members, those persons and offenses over which each court had jurisdiction, the method of procedure, organization, right to witnesses and depositions, rules of evidence, concluding incidents of the trial, punishments, records of trial, and final action to be taken by the appointing or superior authority.

After a knowledge of the courts and their powers had been gained, the important Articles of War, especially the "punitive," 54th to 96th, inclusive, were studied in detail. The 110th warned of certain vital articles which must be read and explained to every soldier at the time of his enlistment and every six months thereafter. If this warning were adhered to, a military offender could never say, "I did not know." A casual reading of the last of the "punitive articles" would almost lead a prospective member of a court to think, "Why all the other articles? When in doubt apply the 96th!"

The study of the "Manual" revealed the iron hand of power which might be called upon to enforce discipline, but there was no portion of the law which, if delegated to the judgment of fair and conscientious officers, would be considered unjust. In truth, the candidates learned that sentences in the majority of cases, meted out by military courts-martial, savored more of justice than those awarded by the helter-skelter twelve of the civil courts, who, at times, unfortunately, are swayed by sentimentality.

Knowledge gained from the "Manual" was visualized during the latter days of study through the appointment, by the instructors, of courts, culprits and counsel. Trials were carried through from start to finish. Thus did a few test the military legal machinery, while the rest stood by to criticize and learn.

Study of the "U. S. Army Regulations" revealed a vast field of military customs and rules, knowledge of a large portion of which must be gained by a candidate in order that he might become a successful officer. There was not time to study the contents of the entire volume. Only the most important "paragraphs" were assigned. These must be mastered. Information contained in those unassigned would have to be looked up when occasion demanded. The subjects covered in "Army Regulations" are vast and diverse—from courtesies to arrest and confinement, from the Adjutant General's Department to the Indians, from Money Accountability to Post Gardens.

There was great excitement in Camp on Monday, July 9th, for on that day Col. Henry J. Reilly, with the old First Illinois Field Artillery, recently named the 149th, arrived at the Fort. The camping ground in the woods south of the barracks was none too choice, but with the aid of sand and gravel the men made habitable the soggy, swampy ground. The coming of this regiment was of particular interest to many of the men at the Training Camp, for the summer before they themselves had been members of one or another of its batteries. It was of vital interest to all of the men taking artillery training, because the guns and horses of the 149th were to be the ones with which they should train. It was of general interest to all in Camp because this was a regiment which was shaping itself for service overseas, and before long would be there. The regiment stirred not only the interest of all, but likewise the envy—it would soon be at the front!

Equilibrium must not be upset by such immediate prospects of action as this. The candidate's greatest opportunity for service, whether here or overseas, lay in doing well the task which lay ahead, no matter how distant the goal might seem.

Besides "Studies in Minor Tactics," "Mapping," "Manual for Courts-Martial" and "U. S. Army Regulations," all outfits continued physical drill (except some of the batteries, the instructors of which, because pressed for time to cover the work required, unfortunately seemed to believe that calisthenics might well be omitted). Semaphore work, to a certain extent, was likewise carried on, and the art of tent-pitching undertaken.

All other training taken up by the infantry, artillery and cavalry was of marked dissimilarity. The infantry commenced upon work with the rifle and also continued into the most advanced stages of drill. Before undertaking the perfection of the former, however, they first, with the assistance of the Ohio engineers, laid out and constructed trenches and fortifications of the most modern type, patterned to conform with the latest advices from Europe. It was strenuous work for hands and backs, but the finished network of trenches—advance, support, reserve and communicating, with outposts and dugouts appropriately placed, was a notable reward for all the trying exertion.

For work with the rifle, the infantry went north to the range and there, not only fired, but practiced the estimating of distances and use of the range-finder.

Practical work on the range was supplemented by the study of "battle fire training" and "Rules of Land Warfare." Lectures by the instructors on American methods of warfare, continuing into the present day methods of foreign armies, served to establish a comprehensive understanding of the subject in the mind of the candidate.

Special machine gun instruction was given by Capt. James D. Melville, of the First Illinois Infantry.

There was additional practical training in road and field work. One company, representing a battalion, regiment, or perhaps merely a company, would go out to oppose another company, representing an equal body of men. To distinguish one side from the other, the members of one of the forces would wear white handkerchiefs around their hats or left arms, while the other side wore no distinguishing mark. Points, Advance Parties, Supports, Reserves and Main Bodies would be properly instructed, and after one side had set off for parts unknown, the other unit, a reasonable length of time having elapsed, would set out to find the enemy and strive to effect its capture. There was much exciting scout work, heated clashes, rifle snappings, and battles strenuously fought, with victory claimed by both participating sides.

The spectacular culmination of the battle training took place in and opposing the labyrinth of trenches, when all was dark and those not fighting were endeavoring to study and slumber. The first shot was fired one night at about nine. A sentry in a forward observation post had seen a dim figure moving in a mist south across the ravine. He fired. The shot snapped every rifleman to attention. Nerves, formerly quivering, fairly hummed. Eyes strained. An indefinite line of figures rose in the mist. Five rifles cracked. The line abruptly faded. An officer in the trenches whispered a command—Swish! High in a tall tree a flare burst into dazzling light. The line in the field, formerly indefinite, loomed as an extensive force of prone forms. Behind lay another. The first was 200 yards away. The attackers hugged the ground in agony at the exposure of the brightness. The light quivered. Up sprang the rear line, rushing forward. Trenches crackled with fire. Down sank the moving forms. The first line, now behind, sprang up, advancing. A new flare in another tree dazzled field and sky. Trench rifles volleyed. The new forward attacking line flopped to the ground and opened up with rapid flashes. Crouching figures ran haltingly back and forth along the line. Firing from both sides became intense. The attacking lines drew nearer. They were in the ravine. In the wire! Rifles spoke in humming roar. They were past the outposts! In the first line! In the—A bugle blew. The waxen warfare ceased. Grimy, muddy and dusty warriors excitedly grouped together and straggled home. One hundred verbal volleys throughout the night failed to decide which had won the honors—Reds or Blues.

In drill the infantry continued beyond the "School of the Battalion" into the study of the "Regiment." They also went on with vigorous extended and close order drill to perfect and enlarge upon the preliminary work of the first month.

Bayonet work was an important branch of infantry specialization which was brought to a point of perfection in all the companies. Some candidates, who had seen service overseas, assisted in this work through lectures and the personal leading of drills. The finer points of the art of bayonet fighting were taught on the field north of the trenches, where wire entanglements were placed to baffle, and brushwood dummies to resist, the attacks and thrusts of eager destroyers.

The second week of July found in Camp a man destined to fill the infantry with a thorough appreciation of "accuracy, precision and smack." Major Herman J. Koehler, for 31 years principal physical director and instructor of military gymnastics at West Point, had arrived. For two weeks he snapped various companies (and one or two representatives from each battery and troop) through vigorous physical exercises and bayonet drill. His remarks on the "Field Physical Training of the Soldier", as voiced in a syllabus prepared for the War Department, were exceedingly valuable and to the point:

THE "REDS" AGIN THE "BLUES"

1. Efficiency of Military Establishments.—That the efficiency of a military establishment is in a direct ratio to the physical fitness of its individual units has never before been demonstrated so forcibly as it has been during the present war.

The demands made upon those engaged in this conflict are so far in excess of what was thought to be the limit of human endurance, judged by a before-the-war standard, that it is almost impossible to conjecture even what that limit really is.

2. Demand of Modern Warfare.—While modern warfare has not hesitated to impress almost every known science into its service for the purpose of overcoming man, the trained man has up to the present time demonstrated his ability to hold his own against the most terrible odds successfully; and in the end it will be discovered that it is the man, the carefully trained and conditioned man, who alone can make victory possible.

3. Necessity for Physical Training.—With these facts before us it follows logically that the physical training development, and conditioning of those recruited for military service must be the first and most important concern of a nation at war.

4. Objects Sought by This Course.—The object, therefore, that a course in physical training for recruits must aim to attain, is the development of every individual physical attributes to the fullest extent of their possibilities, so that he may enter upon the duties his profession imposes with the utmost confidence in his ability to discharge them successfully under any and all circumstances.

5. What Course Must Embrace.—In order to accomplish this object the course must embrace those means that will develop:

- (a) General health and organic vigor.
- (b) Muscular and nervous strength, endurance and fortitude.
- (c) Self-reliance and confidence.
- (d) Smartness, activity, alertness, and precision.

6. As the extent of the development of all the physical attributes is determined by health and vigor, these must be considered the basis of all physical training.

7. The possession of robust health and organic vigor is not, however, sufficient for the field soldier; his profession requires that he also possess more than the average amount of muscular and nervous strength, endurance and fortitude, against which he may draw in times of stress.

8. With robust health and organic vigor as a basis, and with the knowledge that he possesses an unusual amount of muscular and nervous strength, he must be taught how to preserve the former and how to use the latter to the best advantage. By learning to do this he will unwittingly develop self-reliance and confidence, which are, after all, physical qualities, since they give to him the courage to dare because of the consciousness of the ability to do.

9. Smartness, activity, alertness, and precision are all physical expressions of mental activity, and as such are the powers that guide and control the physical forces to the best advantage. They also make for personal pride and self-respect and discipline, the voluntary, intelligent, co-ordinated, and equal subordination of every individual unit, through which alone the objects of the mass can be achieved.

What Major Koehler said to a member of the "Reveille" staff concerning Fort Sheridan and other camps is also worthy of note:

"In my opinion, the camp measures up to all the others I have visited in every respect, and the material found at all the training camps gives us the assurance that we can count on a large number of capable and conscientious officers who need only experience to qualify them for the serious profession for which they are training.

"There is so much splendid material to draw from that it must be a difficult matter for the authorities to determine, not whom they shall select, but whom they shall drop. It has been my experience that, in the beginning, there were a number of men who were of the opinion that the training was to be of the 'fuss and feathers' variety. It is needless to say that these young men are no longer to be found in any of the camps."

When the time came for Major Koehler to leave Fort Sheridan and proceed to some other officers' training camp, further west, every man, however weary as a result of the Major's astounding driving power, was loathe to see him depart.

The influence of such a leader was to have a great effect on the future armies of the United States. All his time could not be devoted to one group of men. He must press on to make every moment count—an equal period for every 2000 men—and by August 15th a spirit of vigor created among 30,000 that would help to make of the coming National Army a fearless multitude of well-nigh perfect men whose work towards furthering the righteous cause at stake could not help but be tremendous.

From Major Koehler and the infantry—those men who, with 20 out of the 28 organizations of the Camp, comprised far more than half of the attending candidates—let us turn to that smaller group which filled but six of the 28—the artillery. The artillerymen, as is always the case in countries of unpreparedness, commenced training under a serious handicap. For three weeks after the Camp reorganization their work was greatly retarded because of lack of proper equipment. They went ahead with those subjects which were studied alike by all of the organizations, and they had for study copies of "Drill and Service Regulations for Field Artillery" (at least, each squad had a copy and some individuals who owned their own), but guns and horses were sadly lacking. There were but four 3-inch guns with caissons and limbers available for the instruction of the six batteries of the Camp. They were the ones which belonged to Battery "C" of the First Illinois Field Artillery and fortunately had been kept at the Fort since the mustering out of that organization the preceding Fall. Instruction in nomenclature and use went on in spite of the handicap. Each training battery, during these three weeks of gun famine, had one hour a day to be spent in the presence of the four valuable pieces.

During the first week Captain Morley of the Michigan-Wisconsin camp and Captain Osborne of the Illinois, instructed each battery of their respective regiments at the guns. They talked on the subject of artillery in general, and of different types of American field guns of past and present use. They explained in detail the American 3-inch gun, pointing out and naming every visible part. Many invisible parts, as of the breech block, were brought to view by an assistant to help in clarifying the explanation. The dismounting of the gun was explained and also such weird sounding terms as angle of site mil and corrector. The circle of eager listeners strained eyes and ears in an effort to catch every word. Queer names were scrawled in notebooks. At the end of the lecture heads whirled like a rotating band blown through a rifled tube.

The next two weeks each instructor went with his own battery at the allotted hour and, with the assistance of a few men of previous experience, continued in familiarizing the men with the nomenclature of all parts of the materiel—pieces, caissons and limbers—and took up preliminary work in gun drill.

The arrival of the entire First Illinois Field Artillery with more 3-inch guns, relieved the situation tremendously. There was then equipment enough so that each of the four platoons of a battery could have separate periods at the guns every day. Cannoneer drill was practiced, then drill of the gun squad. The work culminated in the training of entire firing batteries, commands being given by executives and data set off and carried into effect at the guns.

An hour and a half a day was spent in lectures and conferences on the "Drill Regulations." Special attention was paid to Volume III, which was devoted to instruction in firing. The objects of this instruction as given in the "Regulations" are:

1. To train the personnel in the mechanism of the methods of fire so that, at the word of command, fire of the desired nature may be delivered with certainty and celerity. (Fire discipline.)

2. To train officers and their assistants so that they may utilize the weapons at their disposal to the best advantage. (Conduct of fire.)

Problems involving the use of the parallax and parallel methods of computing fire data and formulas for figuring the site and crest problems gave many men a preliminary taste of the intricacies of the work ahead. To the man with a limited training in mathematics the subject seemed almost impossible. To many others more highly schooled it seemed the same. But it would take more than seeming impossibility to down the spirits of these eager candidates. By diligent study and working together—those of some experience helping those who were new—all strove and hoped to finish the course with success.

Practice in semaphore was given up for work with the "buzzer." Instructors asked for any men who had a knowledge of wireless or the "Morse code" to volunteer their services in helping to teach the other men the use of these strange little instruments. From six to eight of the volunteers from each battery were chosen to teach sections of their respective batteries. Each section was "issued" a "buzzer." The instructor first showed the proper method of holding the key and then explained and gave out the mysterious Morse alphabet of dashes and dots. "Operators" for the most part caught on quickly and by the end of the period of training were able to send and receive at the rate of eight to ten words a minute.

Automatic pistols were issued to the batteries and work commenced at once in learning the nomenclature of the parts and the method of stripping and assembling the weapon. Then came aiming drill or "making triangles", which was conducted with a pistol in the same manner as with a rifle.

Each squad had a chest high tripod which supported a bag of sand. A pistol pointing toward a barrack wall was firmly set in the sandbag, the tripod being fifteen to twenty feet away from the wall. A man with a little black cardboard bull's eye (about an inch in diameter) fastened to a stick would stand close to the wall and hold the bull's eye over a sheet of paper somewhere in the vicinity of the range of vision of another man who glanced along the sights of the pistol. At the verbal command or hand signal of the man aiming, the man by the wall would move the bull's eye up or down, right or left, until the aimer called "stop!" He would then, through a pinhole in the center of the bull's eye, mark a little dot on the paper with a sharp pointed pencil. The man at the pistol would aim three times. Seldom did one dot coincide with another. But they were not meant to. The object was to get three dots very close together and equidistant, so that when lines were drawn connecting the points, the result would be a minute equilateral triangle. A man who could accomplish that, proved himself a skillful aimer.

After demolishing the barracks with triangular broadsides the marksmen ventured onto the range and there were shown how to hold the weapon and the proper posture to take in firing. Six to eight targets were used, behind and beneath which men were stationed to point out with long markers the spot where a bullet hit, and then to lower the target and paste over the holes so as to be able to distinguish the perforations of the succeeding marksmen. These men who fired stood in single file facing the target, a line of equal length for each target. Men who had fired helped load clips for those who had not. Each man fired once at fifteen yards and again at twenty-five, five shots each time. After that firing was continued at twenty-five yards by men in turn until the period ended. To those who had not fired before, at least with an automatic, the sensation was strange, and a good many shots ploughed the ground. Some of the men made very high scores. It was most unfortunate that each battery had an opportunity to fire on the range but once.

THE ARTILLERY WAS THERE

For training with horses as well as with guns, the Fort artillerymen were indebted to the 149th Field Artillery. Each of the six training batteries were assigned the horses and harness of one of the batteries of that regiment for training purposes. The men first learned how to feed and care for a horse and how to groom him. They studied his terminology and learned through lectures his common diseases and the proper treatment for them. Instruction was next given on the care and cleaning of harness, then in saddling. Equitation followed, and the struggle to create horsemen out of every man, no matter how awkward his initial attempt on the back of a four-footed equine might be. Round and round the corrals lines of horses would go, first at a walk, then at a trot; instructors and candidate assistants constantly calling attention to fallacies of reins, arms, legs or heels, with a frequent plea for daylight saving between the horse and knees. Equitation progressed until some of the common figures of cavalry drill were ably performed, the majority of riders feeling a great deal of confidence in the saddle. Following instruction in individual riding came harnessing and the driving of teams. This was familiar work to the old "Bordermen", and their experience was a great factor in helping out the others. Platoon drill, mounted, was carried out, but drill by battery was for some reason not attempted.

In order that the men might gain a slight idea of conditions on the march and in the field, each battery, with horses, materiel, packs and rations, set off, in battery column, mounted, bound for a location chosen by the instructor, suitable for a night encampment. When such a spot was reached, the carriages having been formed properly in line, drivers and cannoneers would dismount, the drivers proceeding to unhitch, lead or ride their pairs to water and back to the picket lines, while cannoneers stretched picket lines between the wheels of the carriages and prepared to camp for the night. When the drivers had securely tied their horses, they joined with the cannoneers in unmaking their packs and pitching shelter tents at the regulation distance of not closer than ten yards "in rear of the rear line of carriages." A formation was then held followed by supper, individually cooked, consisting of bacon, potatoes, onions, bread and coffee. Many of the chefs were neophytes, but successes far exceeded failures. At least no one went to bed hungry. After mess-kits had been cleaned, there was a little time for recreation and then bed, if hard ground could be called such, at nine o'clock. After a 5:30 reveille, breakfast similar to supper was prepared, tents struck, packs rolled and horses groomed. Grounds were "policed", horses hitched, packs tied on carriages and animals, and, after drivers and cannoneers had mounted, the battery rumbled back to Camp somewhat wiser and aching in many joints.

To train candidates in the conduct of fire, the blackboard method was first used. A target of four sections, representing an enemy battery, was sketched upon the board and in and about these enemy guns the instructor would indicate with chalk, points where a candidate's shots had hit or burst. Proper initial commands had to be given before the first salvo was fired, and each succeeding salvo or volley was registered only after new commands, making supposedly proper corrections, had been given. Whether the adjustments ordered had been correct or not was indicated on the board with a new set of chalk "bursts." By this scheme of instruction candidates learned to properly sense bursts, to control direction, distribution, height of burst and range, in fire for adjustment; and to pass at the right moment into the proper method of fire for effect.

Other devices used to facilitate training in the principles of fire were miniature targets placed on the ground, the instructor using a long stick with a round disc on the end to designate the kind and location of bursts; and miniature painted "ranges", called "terrain boards." Lack of materials, time and room made it impossible to carry on smoke-bomb or sub-calibre practice, each of which would have helped still more to clarify and give practice in this difficult art of fire control. Opportunity to use these methods and actual fire were to be enjoyed after August 15th.

While the infantry dug trenches, west of the main north and south road, the artillery dug model gun emplacements on the eastern side. That was one form of blister-raising amusement not enjoyed by the cavalry.

The majority of the work covered by the two cavalry troops of the Camp was similar to that of the artillery with the exception that additional study of horses and mounted drill took the place of the firing instruction on the artillery schedule. They mastered the cavalry drill regulations, studied in detail the anatomy of the horse and his diseases—common and uncommon—and rode and drilled mounted with and without saddles, until by fours they performed with remarkable finish and skill. It was not until the Camp was nearly over that a rumor spread about that the cavalry troops of the training camps would in all probability not be used to officer new squadrons to be sent abroad. The true news came too late to permit of any revision in the cavalry training schedule. It was a blow that struck disappointment in the heart of many whose love of horses had led them into that branch of the service. But the cavalymen willingly were equal to any emergency, as was later so well indicated by the type of machine gun companies which they whipped into shape at Camps Custer and Grant.

A time of dire dread to every man in Camp was Saturday morning, after inspection. Hour tests were given, covering the work of the week. Marks made on these would be sure to affect a man's chances of surviving all cuts. The papers in some organizations, marked by men chosen by the instructor for the purpose, were given back the following week, and brought joy and sorrow in varying degrees to the recipients.

True enough, there were cuts made. Some came at the time of reorganization, some one month later and, after that a few men were dropped from each organization every week. These were serious times of thought and worry to both candidates and instructors.

ON AND OFF AGAIN

A great opportunity which was offered, especially to the younger men, was the chance to make application for admittance to aviation officers' training schools. The number allowed to apply was not limited. The response was quite large and many passed the required physical tests. Some were sent to Canada and some to camps in this country, principally the University of Illinois Ground School, for training.

Opportunities were also offered and accepted to become administrative and truck train officers in the quartermasters' corps and to become officers in the ordnance department.

It may be imagined that in the intensity of training, the problems affording military enlightenment were assailed with the primary purpose of finding a solution—all thought of a definite enemy being out of mind. To a certain extent this was true. Surely Germans were not continually talked about, nor was the righteousness of the cause of the Allies; but nevertheless these two subjects lay in the near background of every man's mind, and events were frequently happening which would bring these latent feelings to the fore.

Early in June the First Liberty Loan was launched throughout the United States. Did this drive omit the Training Camps, feeling perhaps that the men there were doing enough without calling upon them to subscribe? Not a bit of it. The men would have deeply resented having the opportunity of helping to the utmost taken away from them. The drives included the camps, and, even though some men were having difficulty in meeting obligations on the pay received, nevertheless the response of the candidates was generous. An account in the "Reveille" reads:

If the Emperor of Germany has allowed himself to look at the returns from Liberty Bond subscriptions in the United States he has seen where the student officers at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, have given more than $107,000 to their government to aid in financing the American end of the world war. If he has permitted himself to ponder on the significance of this offer of both life and money on the altar of freedom he has done so with a catch in his murderous throat.

Men in the Reserve Officers' Training Camp are not minimizing in the least the difficulties of the task ahead in clearing the road to democracy in Europe, but they are going to do their part in clearing the road. This grim determination to make the world safe for peace-loving people ever after is shown by the spirit of loyalty back of the Liberty Bond subscriptions.

The kaiser can well exclaim, "Mein Gott, those Americans mean business!" for they mean nothing else, and they are going to do business under the folds of Old Glory until the last "divine right" blasphemer is driven from power.

News Bulletins on the Liberty Loan in America furnish the hand writing on the wall for the bloodiest hand of swashbucklers the world has yet seen, and the returns at R. O. T. C. stand out among all the rest. Having given their money as the least they can do, they are preparing to add their lives to their subscriptions as the most they can do. If more can be done it will be done.

A DAILY EXERCISE

Boche propaganda which had fooled the people of this nation for several years, did not cease with the declaration of war on April 6th. True, at the Training Camps it did not descend to the cowardly depths reached at Camp Grant, and some other cantonments, where hungry men in the mess halls crunched, unwarned, on breakfast food flavored with ground glass; nor was there opportunity to mangle innocent men by creating defective airplane parts. The gentle method adopted was the spreading of rumors with the intention of belittling the strength of the Allies and enlarging on the prowess of the Hun; thus creating a sense of fear among the candidates. Needless to say, even had the rumors been true, the men were not of a type, and no true American is, to be thus easily intimidated. One rumor told of the tremendous mortality of Allied officers. Some parents, perhaps, were affected by such rumors. It was for them, no doubt, that the following statement by Roger Babson, the eminent statistician, appeared in the papers during July:

Fourteen men out of every fifteen have been safe so far. Under present conditions, where man power is being saved, not more than one in thirty is killed.

Only one man in five hundred loses a limb—a chance no greater than in hazardous conditions at home.

Most of the wounds sustained in the trenches are clean cut and of a nature that a few weeks in the hospital makes the subject as fit as ever. But 300,000 French soldiers have been discharged on account of wounds during the three years of the war.

From fighting in the trenches most of the wounds are in the top of the head, simply scalp wounds. Practically speaking, a wound is either fatal or slight, with few in between these two extremes.

Of course, the whole thing is horrible enough as it is. But I wish to tell the fathers and mothers left behind by the boys that, looking at the matter in the light of cold-blooded statistics, these boys are not going into anywhere near the danger the folks at home imagine.

It is not the custom of Americans to adopt a hymn of hate and become depraved in the chanting of it. But to refrain from truth, the proclaiming of which would help to enhance righteous indignation, already kindled, would be an act of omission difficult to pardon. There were many men of our government working to bring to the eye of the public the truth about conditions as they were known to exist. Prominent among these was Secretary of State Robert Lansing. In a speech to the student officers at Madison Barracks he said:

The evil character of the German government is laid bare before the world. We know that that government is inspired with ambitions which menace human liberty, and that to gain its end does not hesitate to break faith or to perpetrate interminable acts of humanity.

It needed but the words reported to have been uttered by the German chancellor to complete the picture of the character of his government when he announced that the only reason why the intensified submarine campaign was delayed until February last was that sufficient submarines could not be built before that time to make the attacks on commerce efficient.

Do you realize that this means that the promises to refrain from brutal submarine warfare which Germany had made to the United States were never intended to be kept, that they were only made in order to gain time to build more submarines and that when the time came to act German promises were unhesitatingly torn to pieces like other "scraps of paper"?

Let us understand once for all that this is no war to establish an abstract principle of right. It is a war in which the future of the United States is at stake.

Imagine Germany victorious in Europe because the United States remained neutral. Who, then, think you would be the next victim of those who are seeking to be masters of the whole earth? Would not this country with its enormous wealth arouse the cupidity of an impoverished though triumphant Germany?

Would not this democracy be the only obstacle between the autocratic rulers of Germany and their supreme ambition? Do you think they would withhold their hand from so rich a prize?

Primarily then every man who crosses the ocean to fight on foreign soil against the armies of the German emperor goes forth to fight for his country and the preservation of those things for which our forefathers were willing to die.

To those who thus offer themselves we owe the same debt that we do to those men who in the past fought on American soil in the cause of liberty. No, not the same debt, but a greater one.

It calls for more patriotism, more self-denial, and a truer vision to wage war on distant shores than to repel an invader or defend one's home. I, therefore, congratulate you young men in your choice of service. You have done a splendid thing.

You have earned already the gratitude of your countrymen and of generations of Americans to come.

Your battle flags will become the cherished trophies of a nation which will never forget those who bore them in the cause of liberty.

ATTACK AND DEFENSE

Were every people on earth able to express their will there would be no wars of aggression, and if there were no wars of aggression there would be no wars, and lasting peace would come to this earth. The only way that a people can express their will is through democratic institutions. Therefore, when the world is made safe for democracy, when that great principle prevails, universal peace will be an accomplished fact.

No nation of people will be fit more than the United States when that time comes. But it has not yet come.

Gala occasions at Fort Sheridan were few and far between. There was little time for "fuss and feathers" during the few precious weeks of preparation. Two parades were indulged in, however—one on July 4th when the members of both regiments tramped to Lake Forest and back; and the other on Saturday, August 5th, when both regiments entrained for Chicago to participate in the great National Army parade.

The committee in charge of this parade consisted of: John T. Stockton, chairman; Angus S. Hibbard, secretary; Howard Elting, Charles Hopper, E. U. Kimbark, H. H. Merrick, Victor Olander, Paul Steinbrecher, Charles H. Wacker, Thomas E. Wilson, Kay Wood, John W. O'Leary, ex-officio.

The finance committee which provided for the necessary expenses of the event—transportation, grand stand, flags, invitations—consisted of John A. Spoor, chairman; Samuel Insull, E. D. Hulbert, B. E. Sunny and Frank O. Wetmore, treasurer.

The idea of the parade had strongly appealed to citizens of foreign birth, so that Polish, Servian and other societies were active in organizing marchers and in arranging for the representation of their citizens along the parade route.

The National Army Day Committee, with the co-operation of the members of the exemption boards for the registration divisions of the city, distributed 10,000 posters prepared to command the attention of the registered men, and mailed directly to those in the first quota to be called, 50,000 invitations.

The officers of the parade were: Grand Marshal, Colonel W. J. Nicholson; Assistant to Grand Marshal, Major Raymond Sheldon; Chief of Staff, Captain E. R. W. McCabe; Aids, Captain Benson, Captain Wharton Clay, executive secretary Military Training Camps Association.

After the event, seven trains carried the members of the R. O. T. C. to the Stock Yards, where luncheon was served to all troops and where, in the pavilion, the men were received and addressed by members of the Russian commission and others.

The "Reveille" of Friday following the parade gives an interesting description:

Student officers at R. O. T. C. still feel the thrill of Chicago's welcome to the new National Army and its leaders.

Crowds that made the loop district a seething mass of humanity gathered to honor the men who will fight for liberty on the battlefields of France will long be remembered by the men at Fort Sheridan.

The fighting men were on parade. With seven bands playing the soulful battle hymns of all the allied nations, soldiers, sailors and potential fighters passed before tens of thousands of spectators who were there to pay them worship.

It was National Army day, and the men who have or will be called to the colors were the guests of honor. Thousands of men who will serve in the new army were in line. Every one of them carried an American flag. A more stirring spectacle hardly could be imagined. They looked like a giant wave of red, white and blue to a spectator from a skyscraper window.

Representatives of every military establishment in Chicago and Cook County took part in the parade. Four thousand members of the Reserve Officers' Training Camp at Fort Sheridan, 6,000 National Guardsmen, the jackies with their great band and the National Army men, with policemen and firemen, composed the make-up. The guardsmen lined the sides of the streets until the registered men had passed, then fell in and covered the complete line of march.

Twenty-two thousand seven hundred soldiers, sailors and civilians marched in the parade. It took one hour and twenty-five minutes for the parade to pass the reviewing stand, and three-quarters of an hour for the National Army men alone.

The marchers stood as follows in numerical strength: National Army men, 10,000; student officers, 4,100; National Guardsmen, 6,000; aliens and foreign-born citizens, 2,000; policemen, 300; firemen, 300.

The parade started practically on the minute. Ten o'clock was the scheduled time, and exactly at 10:10 the troops from Fort Sheridan swung out of Grant Park at Van Buren street and entered Michigan avenue to march north until reaching Randolph street.

A mighty cheer went up as the khaki-clad student officers started up the avenue. There was a ripple of flags on the side-lines as far as one could see. The cheers had the effect of a tonic on the men. Heads up, chests out, they marched in perfect unison.

The troops approached the reviewing stand at the Art Institute. Everywhere there was shouting and flag waving. At times the music of the bands could hardly be heard. Hats came off in salute to the colors.

Colors of America and her allies were everywhere. On the front of the Art Institute the American and Russian flags were entwined. Everywhere else the flags of all nations fighting for liberty were displayed. Nearly every spectator carried a flag or wore the colors.

In the reviewing stand stood Maj.-Gen. Thomas H. Barry, commanding the Central Department, U. S. A., members of the Russian commission, representatives of the civic organizations that organized the big demonstration, and relatives of the "258's."

After an escort of motorcycle and mounted police had passed, the student officers, led by Col. W. J. Nicholson, their commander, who was grand marshal as well, came even with the reviewing stand the cheering grew deafening. General Barry watched the troops go swinging by. His face lighted and he clapped his hands.

"Wonderful, wonderful, and in three months, too," he said.

Four thousand one hundred of the student officers passed the stand.

"What a wonderful performance for only three months of training!" exclaimed General Barry, his face wreathed in smiles of satisfaction, as he turned to the head of the Russian mission, Ambassador Boris H. Bakhmetieff.

"That shows," he added, clapping his hands vigorously, "what Americans can do when the heart is right."

And the eminent Russian, his gaze riveted upon the marchers, their heads erect, their steps in splendid unison, could not restrain his enthusiasm.

"It is the finest body of men I ever saw!" he said. "The men are remarkably drilled. It is an inspiring sight!"

Ambassador Bakhmetieff of the Russian mission gave vent to his feelings with applause, then turned to say:

"What an inspiring sight. Such a demonstration as this gives me further confidence for the world-wide success of democracy"

Meanwhile, the Great Lakes Naval Training Station band, divided into two sections, played continuously the war hymns of America and her allies.

Then came detachments of policemen and firemen. There was a separate detachment of the men in the two services who are subject to service in the National Army. The crowds applauded them, too. First Deputy Chief Westbrook and Capt. John B. Alcock led the policemen, and Battalion Chiefs Edward F. McGurn and Michael Corrigan led the firemen.

Suddenly the cheering became earsplitting. The noise became one great roar. The National Army men were coming!

The "258's" were first. Leading them were four men, a white American, a black American, a Russian and a Chinese, representative of the cosmopolitan throng that was to follow.

The National Army men, marching in regiments and under their own district banners, formed a long line. According to the estimate of the official recorder in the stand, there were 10,000 civilians in line.

Every one of the 10,000 saluted with his flag as he came even with the reviewing stand. General Barry and the crowd on the stand returned it with smiles and applause. Women jumped on chairs and waved flags. Pandemonium reigned until the last man had passed. Never was there such a demonstration of favor in the city's history, in the belief of many observers.

Following the National Army men came a tank with a banner on its sides, containing just one word: "Enlist."

Then 6,000 Chicago members of the Illinois National Guard fell in, preceded by the Naval Training Station band. At this time 14,700 men had marched past the reviewing stand.

Three regiments of guardsmen were in line—the Second, Seventh and Eighth Infantry.

Following the guardsmen came 2,000 or more aliens and foreign-born citizens above the age limit for the National Army. They were there because they wished the people to know that the foreign born are with the United States in her hour of need.

Every flag of America's allies was carried in the ranks of the aliens. Boy Scouts carried banners designating the nationalities of the men they preceded.

Cheers greeted the foreign born, as they had the student officers, the policemen and firemen, the jackies and the National Guardsmen. There was not a break in the ranks of the spectators until the last man had passed.

Arrangements for the parade, well perfected beforehand, were carried out without a hitch. Although the crush of spectators was great, the police had control over the crowd at all times.

Committees in charge of the parade expressed great satisfaction at the demonstration. Chicago is the first city so to honor its men called for service in the National Army, and it is probable that the example will be followed by other cities.

Immediately after the parade, General Barry wrote the following letter to Colonel Nicholson:

I cannot speak in too high praise of the magnificent appearance made by the Training Camp men in this morning's parade. The impression they made on everybody who was fortunate enough to witness the parade will be lasting and should convince all of the necessity for, and the great benefits to be derived from, universal service and training. Chicago never saw a more magnificent body of intellectually, morally and physically perfect young American manhood than they saw today in the Training Camp Regiment, including the Training Camp men who magnificently handled the selected men. I congratulate them and you and all the instructors at the Camp for the wonderful results attained in the past three months.

I am satisfied, too, that the selected men were impressed by the proficiency of the men who are to command them.

I would like to have you assemble all the Training Camp men and read them this letter.

During the latter days of July, Lt.-Col. James A. Ryan and Maj. James S. Parker personally interviewed every member of their respective regiments. Certain hours were assigned to each company, battery and troop for these inspections. When the chief instructor arrived at a company at the appointed hour, the men were waiting in line outside the door, in a mysterious order, not alphabetical, having been placed there in accordance with a list in the hands of their instructor. Could it be that the position a man held in this file meant his order of rank in the company? Eyes glanced up and down the lengthy line. The men toward the head undoubtedly had made excellent records. Before the line commenced to move the men were told to give certain information as soon as they had properly addressed the inspector, without waiting to be questioned. They should then replace their hat, about face, and walk out. The line commenced to move. The first man had gone in and out successfully. He had recited his "piece" without a hitch. All down the line he was eagerly questioned. "Wasn't anything. They don't ask you a thing," was his smiling reply. Nervousness continued to grow, however. A speck of mud on a shoe, a scratch on a puttee, a bit of dust on a sleeve loomed alarmingly annoying as the momentous door was approached. No, it "wasn't anything," but some men's minds, nevertheless, became an utter void in the midst of a simple statement, and others awkwardly faced about to the left and bolted for the door, when their "speech" had been finished, only to have the humiliation of being recalled by the inspecting officer and told to about face properly to the right before leaving. Some believed themselves "queered" for good, but actually it is doubtful if this inspection counted for much, as the final lists of recommendations were already made up and ready to send in to Washington. It was merely a little act of checking up by the higher authorities on the recommendations of the company, battery and troop instructors. And the speculation of many was right concerning the order of the line awaiting inspection—the men had been arranged to appear in order of rank that the work of checking recommendations might be facilitated.

On August 3rd the following bit of news was published, resulting in the creation of multitudes of rumors, speculations and moments of anxiety:

Sealed verdicts are ready in the cases of the 4,000 members of the Officers' Training Camp who have survived the grueling work of the last eleven weeks.

The company boards which pass upon the recommendations of the instructor of a company, battery and troop completed their two weeks' grind this evening. They have listened to the case of every candidate for a commission, have read his record, have looked him over, and have approved or modified the recommendation of his instructor.

An emphatic order from the War Department directs that no publicity whatever shall be given the recommendations until they have been acted upon at Washington.

It is expected that Washington will have acted upon the reports from the Camp before August 11th, the close of the instruction period; but in the meantime the students are supposed to be in ignorance of their fate. This is not entirely true, as some of them have discovered exactly where they stand, but Col. W. J. Nicholson, commanding officer, has asked that no reports of this sort be published.

The regimental board which passed upon recommendations for staff positions—quartermaster and ordnance department—completed its work several days ago.

There were not many more days of work remaining before the fatal news would be known. It was hard to study under these conditions of uncertainty, but, nevertheless, work and study did go on with the accustomed seriousness of purpose.

Three farewell receptions, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., were held during the next to final week of Camp. The order of companies attending these meetings and the speakers and committees of reception follow:

AWARDING COMMISSIONS

The remarks of all of the speakers at these meetings created a deep impression on these men who were on the verge of an experience without precedent in American history. The words of the commanding officer, Colonel Nicholson, were especially taken to heart:

A previous speaker has told you that many of you will be officers. I would like to make officers of all of you, but we are limited by Washington. You know the good book says that many are called, but few are chosen. We are going a little further and say that many have been called and nearly all will be chosen.

You are going to take upon yourselves grave responsibilities. The term officer carries the idea of leadership. You know your duties and know yourselves. You are going to be up against some hard propositions—propositions that you haven't been used to, and you have got to make up your minds before you go across to France that nothing can stop you from reaching your goal. Whether you have one trench or fifty trenches to take, you must decide that as long as you have life in your bodies you must fight to the end. Many of you men have never been leaders. You have always been told what to do. Now you are going to tell other men what to do and teach them. So remember this—all men appreciate justice and a square deal. You must be square and just in all your dealings. Be honest and direct. Don't be afraid to go up to a man and take hold of him if necessary. The law permits you to use necessary force. Keep yourselves above reproach and never do anything that will enable a man to say, "Oh, well, if that man does anything to me, I'll inform on him."

Keep your consciences clean, live like men, and nothing will ever make you ashamed or afraid.

I hope it will be my privilege to go to France with you, and from what I have seen of the men at this camp I am sure their commanders will not blush for them, for I feel that you realize that you have a high duty to perform and that you will do that duty to the best of your ability.

On Thursday evening, August 9th, the rewards of three months of tireless study and struggle were meted out. It was an evening of intense and hushed excitement. Some studying had been done following supper, but after a few moments of attempted application, all endeavor failed. Soon there were distant cries of "All out!", "Fall in!", and one company after another, at intervals of fifteen minutes, tramped tensely and silently out of their company streets. But the entire quota of a company did not go. After the men had formed in the dim light of dusk, the captain called to his men "at ease" and read the names of about thirty candidates. Why these men had been told to step from the ranks was not immediately announced, but it was later made known that among them were those who had been assigned to the Regular Army as provisional second lieutenants, those who were to be commissioned in the quartermaster or ordnance corps, some who were dismissed for good and those who would be given the choice either of attending the Second Officers' Training Camp or going into service in the National Army as non-commissioned officers. Let it be said to the great credit of this latter group that the majority of those who entered the National Army as non-commissioned officers first rendered invaluable service in helping to train the new recruits, followed in nearly all cases by recommendation to the Third Officers' Training Camp and the winning of a commission; while of those who chose to enter the Second Officers' Training Camp, practically every man gained a commission, some of them even of the grade of first lieutenant.

The remainder of the company—about 80 to 100 men—closed ranks to the right, and, at the appointed minute, under command of their captain instructor, faced to the right and followed the road which led to the ominous tower. A few feet from that first door, which had been entered in May with the little postal of admission, was another door. Here entered the solemn procession, and trudged up the stairs. After indefinitely climbing, the instructor grasped a knob. The door opened and the men filed in. There were desks there. They seated themselves before any desk. The instructor walked to the front of the room. His steps were painfully loud. He unbuttoned a breast pocket and pulled out a crackling roll of paper. Some candidates leaned forward, others slouched carelessly back. With a slight cough, he commenced to read:

Adjutant General's Office, August 7, 1917.
To Commanding Officer, Training Camp,
Fort Sheridan, Illinois.

Inform those concerned that the following appointments have been made from.....Company,Provisional Training Regiment, to date from August fifteen, nineteen seventeen.

To be Majors: Section (Infantry, Artillery, Cavalry) Officers' Reserve Corps.

To be Captains:

To be First Lieutenants:

To be Second Lieutenants:

On down the line he read, the names being in order of rank, each name registering a sentiment of approval, commendation or surprise. Feelings of approval outnumbered those of surprise, and it was generally agreed that awards had been properly made. The task of the instructor in classifying so large a number of men, known by him for so brief a period, was admittedly one of extreme difficulty. Age, previous experience and training camp record had been carefully weighed. Of these, age was considered of greatest importance. Of course, some mistakes were made, but the majority of appointments, considering the fund of excellent material, could not have been improved upon.

The awards of August 9th were to be kept secret until public announcement in the newspapers had been made.

Following the general publication of the commissions awarded came the announcement of the names of those men who had been appointed to act as instructors at the Second Officers' Training Camp. Two such men of the rank of either captain or first lieutenant were chosen from each company, battery and troop.

Another announcement which came as a total surprise to every candidate, whether included in the appointment or not, was a list of officers assigned for duty overseas. The method of choosing these men varied in different camps of the country. At Plattsburg announcement of the opportunity was made and French-speaking volunteers were given the privilege of going. In order camps, volunteers, whether French-speaking or not, were sent. At Sheridan the men to go were chosen by the instructors. An average of ten men from each company, battery and troop were selected—half of them first lieutenants and half second lieutenants. Needless to say, these men were the envy of their comrades.

NOTABLES OF MANY STATES REVIEWING THE FIRST CAMP MEN

THE REVIEW—SOLEMN IN ITS GRANDEUR

The day following the announcement of commissions, a grand review was held on the large parade ground opposite the permanent barracks. Present in the reviewing stand were Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, Gov. Woodbridge N. Ferris of Michigan, Gov. E. M. Philipp of Wisconsin, Maj. Gen. Thomas H. Barry and Col. William J. Nicholson. The troops, in command of Col. James A. Ryan, formed at 2:15 P. M. in line of masses opposite the reviewing stand; the 11th Regiment, Maj. James S. Parker commanding, on the right; the 10th Regiment, Maj. R. B. Parrott commanding, on the left. The mass of 4,000 candidates presented a thrilling spectacle to those in the stand and the hundreds of visitors. Addresses were made by each of the Governors and General Barry. Following the speeches, the men were called to attention and swung proudly and happily in review, in column of platoons, past the admiring group of distinguished guests.

Prospect of scattered training companies within less than a week's time, after which many of the men would never see each other again, prompted practically every organization to indulge in a "Farewell Banquet," where happy and humorous experiences of the three months might be reviewed, and due honor paid to instructors who had so successfully piloted their ships through the seething sea of struggling candidates. Dining rooms in neighboring clubs and hotels were chartered for the purpose, and the fun, speeches and stunts which took place made these farewell celebrations occasions of the happiest sort.

The turning in of all possible equipment commenced on Saturday, August 11th. Then, too, those who had been holding back for fear of not meeting with success, began to busy themselves in an attempt to secure officers' uniforms and equipment of every sort. Others, who had taken a chance in ordering clothes, had their final fittings.

No week-end passes were allowed the last Sunday in camp. The men were held, awaiting new developments or instructions from Washington.

Monday and Tuesday, August 13th and 14th, were occupied with lectures and the turning in of more equipment. Definite word also arrived stating that men who were to be assigned to the National Army would be allowed two weeks' "leave," reporting to their various stations—Camps Custer or Grant—on August 29th. Men who were to go overseas must make ready at once and sail within a very few days.

August 15, 1917, found in the United States of America a new type of man. Of these, there were 30,000. Three months before, they had volunteered for training, many of them civilians, unschooled in the art of war. They had felt the call, made the decision, won on the first lap of the race. The camps had filled them with a spirit of patriotism not felt before. The training had given them a greater confidence. Some few hundred sailed for important service abroad. The greater portion, held temporarily in sixteen cantonments throughout the United States, undertook the training of and brought into being the finest type of soldier that America or Europe has ever seen. Where duty bid them go, the "first 30,000" went. And not least among them, striving ever to accomplish their work with thoroughness, loyalty and patriotism, were members of that memorable group who trained on the shores of Lake Michigan from May to August, 1917, at that camp, the record of which as an officers' training center in the United States has been unsurpassed—Fort Sheridan.

After reporting for duty you will not leave the post without permission from your company commander.

After reporting for duty uniforms will be worn at all times. When permission is granted to leave post candidates will be completely uniformed, i. e., blouse will be worn and no one will appear on pass unless he be in complete uniform.

Do not hesitate to seek your company commander about anything you wish to know.

Obtain permission of your company commander if you desire to speak to the commanding officer.

There is a general store and barber shop in the gymnasium building.

Books, stationery, etc., to be used in your work will be furnished by your company commander.

J. A. RYAN, Colonel Cavalry, Commanding.

Headquarters Second Training Camp, Fort Sheridan, Illinois,
August 23, 1917.

TO THE CANDIDATES OF THE SECOND TRAINING CAMP:

You have been selected from some twenty thousand applicants because your qualifications indicate that you can become efficient officers in the armies of the United States.

The success of the First Training Camp was due to the spirit that moved its members to apply themselves from the start to the work in hand. You will have with you as instructors officers of the Regular Army and officers who have just completed their course of training in the First Training Camps. Their whole object will be to give you the best instruction, practical and theoretical, that is possible within the three months' time allotted. The success of their work will depend on your hearty co-operation, which means close attention to study and drill and strict compliance with all the regulations of the camp.

Most of the candidates who come here have already achieved success in civil life—success in military life is achieved by the same means, namely, work and study. You know the methods, and the very fact that you have come here shows your intention to apply them.

The two qualities in men which brought about the greatest returns in the last encampment were patience and team-work. Patience enables us to examine with care the requirements of any problem, and team-work brings the united efforts of all who achieve success. Cheerfulness, good humor, and the habit of looking at the bright side of things will be of great assistance. The man who can retain his cheerfulness under the most trying circumstances is the man who wins in the end.

Remember, you are in a way going back to school, and the comradeship which you will find among your fellow candidates in the various companies will be an incentive to effort. The friendships you will form here will be lasting, and one of the greatest results that will come under your observation will be the many good qualities you will discover among your comrades during these three months which you little suspected when you first met them.

Remember, this is the world's greatest problem, and everything you do each day here contributes to the final results as much as if you were in the trenches in Flanders.

J. A. RYAN,
Colonel of Cavalry.

THEY WERE OFF!

For several months they had been waiting in cities and towns back home. The cantonments were being constructed. Some of the regulars had gone across. The National Guard, mobilized for months on the border, was prepared to embark. The First Officers' Training Camp was completed. The newly-commissioned officers had already been assigned to Camp Grant or Camp Custer, while hundreds, who had not received commissions, had enlisted at the recruiting stations, determined to see service at all costs.

Twenty thousand men had applied for the Second Reserve Officers' Training Camp at Fort Sheridan. Four thousand had been chosen. The examining boards which went through the cities and towns of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kansas, Colorado and Missouri, were instructed to select men on the basis of merit only. They were to choose men who were physically fit, men of experience who had already won places of responsibility in civil life. They found men anxious, ready, competing for places, proud to be chosen and prepared to go through.

Early on the morning of August 23rd, the new "Rookies" appeared at Fort Sheridan. Some came the night before to avoid the rush. But the majority streamed in that August morning and filled up the long rows that began in the gymnasium and stretched out through the door around the corner and up the street. There were all kinds of men in that line. Grandfathers, several of them, trying to look like college graduates, and pulling their age records across the dead line without batting an eye. Congressmen, bankers and brokers, business leaders, professional leaders, deans of universities, clergymen, mechanics, golf champions and hurdle champions, actors, playwrights, musical critics, farmers, ranchers, miners, students.

Look at them. They are coming up in long lines like children on the first day of school.

Look at them—clothes do make some difference in a man. But in a day the natty hat band, the silk shirt, the carefully pressed suit will disappear. In their place, the old service hat, the second-grade khaki shirt, the service uniform, canvas putts and broad-toed shoes.

You will not recognize them again until you get up close and peer beneath the broad brim. Then you smile the first time. They were the same but so different.

You may never see them again in the distinguishing clothes of the civilian, for many a man who went up the line that August morning, laid down for his final sleep in the Somme or in the Argonne, dressed in the khaki which he donned for the first time at Fort Sheridan.

After they had registered and made selection of the branch of service they wished to enter they went to their new quarters.

The men from Kansas, Colorado, Missouri—newcomers to Fort Sheridan and, in a sense, guests of Illinois, were given the Brick Barracks. So were the majority of the men from Michigan and Wisconsin, as in the First Camp.

WE ARE COMING

HERE WE ARE

PATIENCE

ASSIGNMENT

Three companies and two batteries from Michigan, Wisconsin and two batteries and the companies from Illinois occupied the wooden barracks south of the gully.

After leaving the gymnasium that August morning the new rookie went to the company to which he was assigned. Provisions had been made for his coming. Equipment was ready. Consequently there was not the long period of waiting where men only half-equipped march with their company for weeks.

Early in the afternoon of the first day the commandant looked out on the parade grounds. He saw company after company marching by—the officers of the companies competing with each other to see who could get their men to work first and who could make the best showing. No one will pretend the marching was perfect. There were some sad efforts to maintain the pace—there were some wornout rookies before night—but they got to it fast, and when they went to mess at 6 P. M.,—Oh, Boy!

That first mess—it was interesting. Long wooden tables—and long benches—men closely packed. Cooks and waiters who had been through three months' grind, unaffected by "Who is who." Just "cooking the chow" and putting it before the crowd.

Some courtesy and politeness that first mess. Just getting acquainted, trying to get a right start with the men of the squad. Looking things over casually then passing them to the next fellow, thinking that they would return as they did back home, but they had a way of not returning, and "there wasn't any more"—so the waiter said. That was an army lesson they didn't forget.

Then came the second mess after the hike of that first afternoon and home rules were off. Men did not scan the dishes placed before them—they reached and ate and then reached again. The coffee wasn't just like the Blackstone, but it was warm and it went to the spot and after they had eaten everything placed in front of them they went to the canteen and bought some more.

To show just how rules of army etiquette are formed we believe the prize should go to the man who gave the following bits of advice to his comrades on "How to become popular in the Mess Hall."

1. As soon as the signal is given to "take seats" get your feet under the table as quickly as possible. Never do it the same way twice, though. In this way you keep the fellows on both sides of you in doubt and generally result in your getting first stab at the meat.

2. Grab the coffee pitcher with one hand and the bread plate with the other and never let go of either until you've laid in your supply.

3. If there are only three pieces of anything left on a plate when it gets to you, take two. The plate may not come back again and the chances are that the other fellows didn't want any anyway.

4. When biscuits are passed, don't forget your party tricks, for you may grow hungry later and uniforms have pockets.

5. Try to sip your soup as noisily as possible. It helps to drown the noise of dishes.

Back Row (left to right)—Capt. M. S. Murray, Capt. H. V. Meissner, Capt. B. R. Gleason,

6. Think of some pleasant subject to discuss with your neighbors, such as religion or the death of some dear friend.

7. Splash as much syrup as possible on the handle of the syrup holder. The other men will thank you for this, as it will prevent them from letting it slip through their hands.

8. Always pull a big laugh when your mouth is full of crackers. Crackers in one's face is far more preferable than dust.

9. Don't forget to point out all the mistakes made by the other boys during the day. It does much to elevate the opinion of your hearers on your own knowledge.

10. If a fly lands in your meat be sure and call the attention of every one to it. It isn't everyone can land a fly.

11. Use your knife freely. Sword swallows are scarce these days, and besides the knives are not sharp.

12. In leaving the mess hall slap as many fellows as possible on the back. It's a real "fratty" stunt, and helps those slapped to digest their meal.

Few days in the service were more interesting than those early days at Fort Sheridan. At first there were tired legs and weary arches, but that was not all. Then came weary brains. Men accustomed to large affairs, and to broad experiences were suddenly called upon to start in and master the A. B. C. of military tactics—the school of the soldier, the school of the squad, the school of the company, or, in other words, the I. D. R.

Candidate, the executive head of one of the great industries of the country, sat on the side of his bunk at the close of one of these early days. He was not physically tired. He was too well-trained for that—but he was evidently all in. What had happened? Well, the A. B. C.'s of military training was too much for the mind that knew how to handle big affairs without strain.

No one will know how conscientiously these men tried to memorize every word, every detail of those infantry regulations, repeating them by day and by night—perfecting each page as though life itself depended upon it. They made their brains sweat. They opened up the old avenues of memory. Their wills forced the old brain to go back and to master the methods of youth. They learned what they should have learned as boys as a part of their citizenship, the ability not merely to protect themselves but to protect their country as leaders.

No man of forty who went through those early days will ever forget how impossible it seemed to ever master the essentials of military training upon which the lives of thousands would depend further on. No men ever worked harder than they did then. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy", and it does the same thing with the rookie.

Colonel Ryan watched the men work, read the reports, inspected the companies and was pleased. Could they keep up the pace? If they could this would be the most military training camp in the country.

They must play as well as work, he said, and they must learn lessons of proper training and caring for their men at Fort Sheridan which they could apply elsewhere. Music, for instance, was a relief at the close of the day. So the Director of Morale was instructed to provide a piano for every company. Some hard-boiled old timers smiled the next day when a fleet of trucks came out from Chicago loaded with pianos. The movers smiled too when they unloaded a piano into the company barracks—but when the men came marching in on a cold afternoon and some man who knew how went in and tickled the keys, you could hear the old wooden barracks harmonize from one end to another—and everybody smiled—caught the spirit and went to mess a little more cheerful and to study at night with great zest because of it. Of course there were some rotten musicians, some terrible discord, some real makers of agony, that prepared everybody for the worst, but it was a lot better than gossip and grouches, or even silence and snores, and more and more the piano became an important piece of furniture in the Camp.

Speed, energy, enthusiasm marked the first week's work. Colonel James A. Ryan, by his careful plans, his complete grasp of details and his considerate spirit, taught these men a wonderful lesson on the very first day and by the end of a week, they knew that they had a real leader—competent, courteous, strict in discipline, but considerate, thoughtful, and always holding in mind the purpose of giving his men the best training possible.

At the close of the first week the Commanding Officer spoke to the men in the Y. M. C. A. building. His speech was a prophecy of what the Camp became in time. He said:

Mess Officer, Second R. O. T. C.

I want vim in everything. I want this camp to be the most military in the United States. Smile; be courteous; be patient.

You have come here to perform a task. Your officers will carry out their part and by the progress which was made yesterday, and today, I am inspired by the hope that you will carry out your part.

You men have come here because you have made a decision between right and wrong. There are only two things in this world—right and wrong. God has given you a conscience which is His voice speaking within you. When anything in your daily lives come up there is a broad line of demarcation between the right and the wrong and in your decisions never waver, but manfully speak out for the right. That habit of decision is one of the most important things in military life.

Upon your decisions may depend men's lives. You must accustom yourselves to decisions. You will find in this Camp a great many things to which you are not accustomed. The attitude you take toward them will determine your success or failure.

THE HOUSE IN ORDER

Look at the humorous side of things. Don't forget that humor is the saving thing of life. When you men are worn out by a hard day in the trenches or on the march remember that there's always a bright side to everything.

Train yourselves to the habit of precision even in the smallest things. Be slow to decide about the characters of the men about you. In time you will discover qualities in your companions that you never suspected before. Look upon your officer as your big brother. Bear toward him the brotherly love that he will bear toward you. I want my officers to give careful consideration to all questions and to give appropriate replies.

It is a serious question to decide in three months who shall be officers. Don't forget that the officers who command you will do justice not only to you but to the United States Government. This country wants ability in leaders. It wants men who will win.

I want my officers to allow no outside influence to affect their decisions. I want nothing to control but the qualities they observe in you from day to day. That's what we want, that's what they want and that's what you want.

Methods of warfare are changing every day. I have to study just as you are studying. We are going to give you the most advanced course possible in three months' time. You are going to live, eat and sleep in the trenches for forty-eight hours at a time. There may even be gas attacks. In short, we are going to give you as nearly as possible those things which will make up your experience on the other side.

Remember that in military life, as in civil life, there is one thing that smooths out all rough places—the oil of courtesy. Use it in everything. Remember that to all propositions that you approach there are always two handles—rough and smooth. Use the smooth every time. Be patient. Don't be selfish, but work for the success of your squad, your platoon and your company. Approach all your tasks with a smile.

On Saturday the men were given their first leave. It came as a great relief to many. Tired bodies and tired brains tempted men to sleep for twenty-four hours in some quiet place. Many went to their homes—some to the city for a change; but tucked away in some corner, or down by the lake you could see man after man trying to make up during the brief respite for his slowness in grasping what had been taught through the week.

In many a secluded spot on that first day of leave, some hard-pressed rookie drilled and studied, hoping by this added effort to maintain his place in the ranks until his body and brain would respond to the gruelling test.

Many months after the war a former rookie who had a son in the service, confessed that he had not only used his days of leave but had also used the brief hour of rest between 4:30 and 5:30 to catch up. Down in the gully concealed by bushes he had employed an old army sergeant to tutor him and to put him right. This spirit was invaluable.

Upon their return for the second week the rookie found the official schedule posted on the Company Bulletin Board. We reprint it. Those who helped to carry it through will remember how some of it felt and how much it eventually helped.

Many of the Regular Army officers who had acted as staff officers or instructors in the First Camp were promoted and assigned to other organizations when that Camp closed.

The Second Camp had not progressed far before the majority of those who were left were assigned elsewhere and only a small number remained to act as majors of battalions and as staff officers.

Too much cannot be said for the Regular Army officers who were at Fort Sheridan. They disproved from the start the common idea that the officers of the United States Army in times of peace had lived an inactive life.

These men had been kept in the finest training. Many of them, after years of education and experience, had come to Fort Sheridan at the First Camp ranking as first lieutenants and captains, yet they had built a physical and technical foundation upon which they were able to extend their qualities for leadership, so that within a year they were acting on some of the most responsible positions in the A. E. F.

Years of intensive training and study, the discipline to keep themselves fit for such a time as this, as well as their simple, direct, considerate, confident manner, all conspired to make them ideal training leaders for such a Camp.

The men were quick to perceive in them qualities of real leadership and an unusual loyalty developed between the Regular Army officers who showed any distinguishing characteristics and the men who were to be the leaders of the new National Army. This loyalty and admiration continues even after the details are forgotten—and the officers of the Regular Army will always have some better friends in civil life, because of the associations of those earlier days.

Every Fort Sheridan man, no matter how large his experience in business or professional life may have been, realized that there is something in the kind of intensive military training, the knowledge of practical details, the ease and simplicity of commanding leadership which cannot be imitated nor can it be learned with rapidity.

As a foundation for any future policy of adequate defense, they realize that there must be maintained a large and capable group of such highly trained military leaders.

As the Regular Army officers departed, the Reserve officers who had been selected in the First Camp at Fort Sheridan and Fort Reilly took their places. Most of these new officers had some previous military training before coming to the First Camp. They had shown to their instructors their ability along these lines and were selected on this basis.

A great deal of credit belongs to the instructors of companies in the Second Camp, every one of whom was a Reserve officer. It was a difficult problem they faced. In addition to the responsibility of giving correct military instruction and of keeping up with the constantly changing methods of warfare, these men had in their companies older, more experienced men who were leaders in every walk of life, and younger men who had had little training and some who were not qualified for leadership. These must be continually inspired and their true values estimated with fairness. It was some job.

They did it, and did it well. It was one of the fine accomplishments of these early days. Sure—there were some who were not satisfied—others who felt that their personal abilities were not properly recognized, but the rank and file recognized the splendid services given and much of the loyalty so evident between officers and men in the First Camp was transferred to the more intimate relationships of the Second.

There were several noticeable changes in the Second Camp. One was the weather. July and August, with their bright sun, their hot days, their warm nights, had departed. September tried to be kind, but it couldn't.

Whew! B-r-r-r! The old wind began to blow off the lake. The early cold of Northern Wisconsin came hustling across the waves.

Some of the candidates who had been enjoying a brief leave came back the third Sunday afternoon looking like "Washington's forces at Valley Forge."

Big sheet-iron stoves went up in the wooden barracks and every one joined the "Hot stove brigade." Lumber was brought hurriedly to the rescue to line the walls of the wooden barracks and to reinforce the floors. The old sun came back in a few days—smiled deceptively as much as to say, "I was just playing with you." But he didn't fool the rookies again. They were ready next time and although there were some cold, wet days before December 1st, they were all set.

On Sunday evenings, the men came back from leave at 4 P. M. Colonel Ryan arranged for get-together meetings in the gymnasium. The opening address was made by Major-General William H. Carter, Commander of the Central Department.

A crowded house greeted General Carter. With soldier-like simplicity he seemed to speak directly to each individual man. He said:

I urge every one of you to maintain the standard of ethics laid down by General Washington.

Conduct yourselves in a way that will be a source of pride to yourselves, your family, your friends and your country.

Some of you, when you become officers, will feel that you are not appreciated. I warn you against that feeling. The only object of your living should be to give the best that is in you. Opportunity plays a great part. Some may be observed to perform achievements while others may be ignored for a time, but, remember, if you continue to perform the task before you that fact will not go unheeded.

I. F. CONNEROY, COLONEL RYAN, ROGER SULLIVAN, J. J. CORBETT

Common sense is the chief element involved in leadership besides courage. Remember, the boys of the National Army are as full of energy and spirit as you are, and you must make allowance for shortcomings due to exuberance.

In the old days of Greece it was the custom to bring to Athens for the great games only those of the provinces who were supreme in prowess. The final event in the contests was the torch bearers' race, where the leading athletes were placed in line and each given a torch. It was not the runner who merely crossed the line first that was victorious, but the man who led the van of those who kept their torches alight.

Those old Greeks through this contest desired to instill into the minds of their strong men the fact that they must keep aglow the fire of their patriotism that the liberties of Greece might be preserved.

Do you see to it, too, that you keep aglow the torch of liberty and that you reach the goal with something still left in you.

From Sunday to Monday seemed like a step from the Sublime to the Ridiculous. They had listened to the Commander of the Central Department urging them "to keep aglow the torch of liberty." What was this they hear on Monday?—"Grab up your pick and shovel and dig trenches."

Out there on the parade grounds there were some trenches already. They represented blisters, sore backs and callouses developed in the First Camp, but they were only a beginning. With one-half the number of men,

WORK? I'LL SAY SO

there was to be four times the digging. The gully was to be crossed. The trenches were to extend out into the woods and when completed were to include the entire category of field fortifications, dugouts, latrines, machine-gun placements, observation points, first aid stations and ambulance depots. The system was to be large enough to accommodate an entire regiment of infantry.

In the digging of trenches there had to be developed a technique not to be found in military work before this war. It was fortunate that at this time there came to Fort Sheridan a man who won a big place in the hearts of all the men and who was greatly admired both for his spirit and ability. This man was Captain Georges Etienne Bertrand of the Sixth Battalion, Alpine Chasseurs.

He had taken part in the great battles of the war. He had been wounded four times and had received the Cross of the Legion of Honor. His arrival brought a new air of reality as well as a more technically perfect plan of operation.

Early on Monday morning the companies marched out to the job, armed with picks and shovels—each company assigned to a specific job. The earth began to fly—trees were cut down, old trenches were drained. The rain came down to complicate the job. Wherever men could get high rubber boots it helped, but sometimes you would see a man almost up to his waist in mud going to it, as though his life depended on it.

At night the Illinois regiment that had been working through the day slept in the trenches. Somewhere off there in the woods Michigan and Wisconsin men had been making ready to act. Diplomacy had failed. Since the Michigan-Wisconsin men had lived in style over in the brick barracks, a fight was inevitable. Michigan-Wisconsin had a practically easy day, except for the rain. No tired backs—no blistered hands—no poorly drained ditches to stand in. They were waiting for darkness to make their attack. Illinois was waiting to meet them.

The trenches on the Somme—the dugouts so vividly pictured by Bairnsfather—had their duplicate that night at Fort Sheridan. As ditch diggers, some of the rookies were better comedians than plumbers. For in their zeal to dig faster than the next company, some forgot that water ran down hill.

If you were there, you will remember the first night in the trenches at Fort Sheridan. It had all the horrors except bursting shells. The bottom of the trenches soon became sluiceways of mud. The rain, cold and clinging, came down in floods. Patrols climbing over the top could neither be seen nor heard a few feet distant. Guards stood looking over the parapets and wondering when morning would come.

Who could describe the dugouts on that first rainy night? There was one in which the company had taken particular pride during the day. A group of men afterwards notable in the service helped to build it and they were proud. They only forgot one thing that was important—water runs down hill.

In the early evening it was fine. A happy group—at the end of a hard day, whispered their experiences, imitating real warfare. They had built a dirt seat for comfort around the dugout, and a cozy sheet-iron stove in the center. Then the rain began to operate. Down the trenches it came until it found the welcome trench that led to the dugout and then it just kept on running. Higher and higher it rose, while the men looked at each other in despair. They were men who were generally resourceful, but they never had faced a situation like this. So, like Noah, they tried standing on the seats and hanging their coats and guns on improvised racks, but at last they gave it up as a bad job and with cold, wet feet and clothing soaked, they went out into the night to take their chances with weather and water straight. Oh, that night!

During the night sharp encounters took place and the student officers were given every opportunity to develop proficiency in patrol and interior guard duty. When the battle was over and the sun came out in the morning, the Illinois regiment had taken nine prisoners and the Michigan-Wisconsin regiment three.

Day after day through that week, day work and night watching was repeated, until every man had been at both several times and until five miles of completed trenches with bridges and barb-wire entanglements stretched across drill grounds and woods beyond.

A former attorney from the Michigan Telephone Company had labored long and earnestly with his squad in the construction of a "dugout" and, though tired and muddy, was taking comfort in the thought that his job was nearly completed.

The captain came along and, after looking things over, smiled pleasantly. The rookie lawyer misunderstood the smile of approval and said, "Pretty good job, sir." "Yes," said the officer, "as far as it goes. When you get that finished you can start on your communicating trenches."

The rookie's face rapidly registered incredulity — then the shock of surprise—then disgust and, as the captain walked away, he remarked, "What's the use of digging six feet of trench six feet deep, just for communications, when a telephone wire would give quicker and better service and be a darn sight easier to rig up?"

Another younger man who had never dug very hard at anything before and whose idea of training to be an officer had been gained largely from colored posters, was heard to remark, "What's the use of my learning to do this? I could get a Dago to do this better than I could for a few dollars a day and it will cost me more than that to get fixed up after this mess."

But for the majority of the men it was the first real entrance into the hardships of war. Many had been engaged at home in sedentary occupations and the terrific change had been a real test and the way the men stood up to it was a foretaste of the way thousands of them stood up to the eventual gruelling test in the front lines of the Argonne.

There were a lot of things that came out of the trenches besides mud and weary men at the close of that week. One was poetry. Listen to this: _____ of the Fifteenth Company, 2nd Regiment:

"Who is this guy whose last name is Day,
And where in h——l did he come from?
He's big and strong and tall, they say,
And wears a considerable 'tum-tum.'

He is the feller who walks along the top,
While we're digging below in the mud,
And shouts out his orders with not a stop,
In tones that fair thrills your blood.

It may be, at heart, he's a regular guy,
But he'll have to prove it to us,
'Cause since he's been running along there in high,
He's done nothing but make us all cuss."

An event of unusual interest after the work in the trenches was the arrival of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. The famous Roosevelt smile illuminated his face as he greeted the representatives of the Camp at the station.

He was escorted through the Camp and then inspected the trenches. He exhibited a great interest in every detail of construction and asked many questions of the officers who conducted him.

Standing on the brink of the gully and looking over toward the lake, he gave utterance to one of his explosive thoughts:

"What we need," he said, "is a hydraulic engineer at work in Northern France. How easy it would be to take the water from the coast and transfer it over to the German trenches and force them out by hydraulic pressure."

Some who had seen water at work during the previous week realized that there was something more than humor in his suggestion.

After a thorough inspection, he was escorted to the parade ground, where a large reviewing stand had been erected. The band began playing, the candidate officers passed in review. At the conclusion the men advanced in mass formation and stood at attention while he addressed them.

He stood there that day the living embodiment of American valor. A real fighting man, still affected by the refusal of the War Department to let him go to France with a fighting division, he referred to this early in his remarks when he said:

For us, this opportunity is denied; the supreme privilege is yours. It is our duty to back up at home the fighting men at the front in every way we can. It is our duty to keep the spirit alive and burning and victory will come speedily, and, Lord, men, how I wish I were going with you!

Every man feels that the war should go on and once for all remove the menace of Prussianism and the iron and bloody rule of the Hohenzollerns forever. Yours is the honor of going. You will not have to explain to your children why you did not go to war. This is the great chance. Be equal to it. You are the flower of our country chosen for this great task. It is a great opportunity and a great responsibility.

The British and French are fighting our battles and we are their debtors. Your duty is to go forth as missionaries, and when you have awakened this country from its lazy, opulent slumber, see that you keep it awake forever. See that we are never again put in the position we are now, of vast, lazy strength unmobilized. The men of France and England are protecting us with their bodies. Let us, here, in the first place make America safe. We owe a big debt to the Allies in this war, and I say again, be missionaries, so that never again shall we be so helpless to defend our honor. Never again should we owe our safety to the blood of others. The one step for our protection is universal obligatory military training for all our young men.

EVERY ONE GOT A PUNCH

It is significant that with the coming of Roosevelt there should also come the period of "boxing." The introduction of mass boxing at Fort Sheridan for the first time in any large way in any American Army camp paved the way for its larger use throughout the whole army.

After a conference between Colonel Ryan, Major Bach and others, the Commanding Officer purchased two hundred sets of gloves, secured the services of Martin Delaney, Athletic Director of the Chicago Athletic Club, and gave orders that for three weeks every company in the Camp was to report daily for boxing practice.

It looked mild. It seemed like a soft game, the first morning the companies marched out and surrounded the reviewing stand. Some smiled and anticipated a restful lark. Then a man stood on the stand and began to walk around, leaning over the protecting rail. He talked and gesticulated in in such a way that the men knew he was there for business. Then four boys from the Great Lakes Training Station took their places on the stand—professionals who knew the game, both of them. They went through some simple maneuvers—then there was a rush of gloves. The stand was surrounded on four sides by men who looked like boxers. They were paired off. These were made to follow the simple movements of the boxers. Oh, my!—who doesn't remember what happened? Delaney let the rookies take the lid off and every man seemed to think that he was fighting in France. Did they go after each other. We'll say they did. Black eyes, broken noses and cracked ribs. Husky six-footers from first squads, unfamiliar with boxing, taking their medicine from light little fellows from the last squad. All in a good spirit, developing faster footwork, quickness of eye and the habit of personal encounter.

For three weeks this continued, each man in the Camp having fifteen minutes a day practice in the field and additional time as they were able in the barracks. At the close of the course the improvement was marked, and many of the men handled themselves like veterans.

Fort Sheridan men of the Second Camp will not forget Martin Delaney with his wholesome smile, his winning style and his walloping punch, and the army as a whole was the gainer by the successful course which was early introduced in the training system.

Numerous speakers came to Fort Sheridan, each bringing a message of interest. Samuel Insull spoke of the qualities necessary for leadership. Sergeant William Dugan, formerly of the Foreign Legion, and at the time a member of the La Fayette Escadrille, told of his experiences as an American boy in the famous French flying unit. T. P. O'Connor and others spoke from time to time.

The daily routine of work, taking in every hour of the day, increased in intensity as the man became hardened to it. Physical and bayonet drills, pistol and rifle practice, conference and studies, followed each other with ceaseless regularity.

The companies were becoming more proficient in drill. They were developing that pride and esprit de corps which makes competition between the groups helpful and progressive. The men were becoming better neighbors. Real friendships and interesting acquaintances which would outlast the war were being formed.

A report from one of the companies when the Camp was a month old was typical of the Camp as a whole. It is reproduced exactly as it appeared in "The Reveille," because it shows how many different kinds of men went to make up a company:

From clergyman to bookkeeper in a shooting gallery are over 70 occupations stringing out in either column or line formation. Men who never performed harder labor than winding a Victrola are in the same squad with instructors of athletics. One civilian is attached to the company, William J. Ryan, clerk, and his ambition is to take on enough weight to fill an O. D. blouse.

Charles E. Davanon is top sergeant and is the real goods. He doesn't give a continental care whether Cleopatra was a real nice lady or not; he is interested only in the strict discipline of his company.

George O. Beebe is the only Regular Army man on our roster. Five in the company are enlisted men in the National Guard. They are: Leslie F. Eggert, Homer A. Goddard, Raymond O. Staten, Noble W. White and Stephen C. Williams.

Thomas E. Hefferan, until a few weeks before the opening of this Camp, was a member of the American Ambulance Service in France.

Alfred D. Allen is the manager of the Leland Hotel of Springfield, Ill., the rendezvous of politicians.

The following are practicing attorneys: Otto A. Arnston, Milo O. Bennett, John C. Bulger, Glen L. Cowing, Clark M. Donigan, Elmer T. Doocy, James L. Dougherty, Adrian C. Edwards, William M. Gleiss, Downer McCord, Donald S. McWilliams, William K. Otis, William E. Pearce, George J. Basta, Arthur G. Poorman and Barratt O'Hara, who for four years was Lieutenant Governor of Illinois.

Cecil R. Bomann is a telephone expert who likes to arise early, and Voris P. Brown is a show dealer who never gets up ahead of the first call. William H. Convoy is an ex-regular who acts the part with credit.

Fred M. Ford is with the Pathe Film Company and Robert C. Lloyd is a 'phone operator.

William J. Fraser, Francis Kibort, Roy A. Stanton, Harry G. Miller and Harry E. Weldgen, dealers in real estate.

George T. and Knox P. Walker are engaged in stock brokerage when not driving a high-powered car of latest designs. John W. Winberg is a caterer, Noble White a civil engineer, William J. Armstrong is a coal operator. John C. Sague is a distributor of Clysmic, and Joseph A. Gorman sells lumber and lots of it.

Joseph S. Pliska represents the company in the camp athletic conference and banks on James A. Turner to carry off the honors in the contests. William A. Robinson is a comfortable-looking man, built for comfort if not for speed.

David M. Roderick has the prefix Rev. to his name and is a soldier in the making every minute of the day.

The banks are represented by Forest B. Hutchison, Adolph W. Wirtz and Richard D. Chapman.

Truman W. Allen is an assistant county treasurer, and Irving Crego puts Aurora, Ill., on the map.

Edward Carlson is as well known in Rock Island, Ill., as he is liked by the members of his platoon. George L. Smith is a real, honest to goodness farmer from Geneseo, Ill., and therefore the early-to-bed and early-to-rise rule is no hardship to him.

Verne E. Rogers is an athletic coach who could carry two packs easier than many of his comrades can lug one.

Guy V. Anderson sells electrical utensils because he knows all about them, and Ernest E. Baird is a stock broker who doesn't pretend to know what is best to do always.

Leon Schneider is the man who always has a little time to give to the other fellow in his barracks, when the order to sack comes.

Uncle Sam has given several of his regular employes to this company. Edwin P. Christopherson is a postal clerk, Bertram E. Green is superintendent of the Forest Park P. O., James W. Starner of the Railway Mail Service, and David C. R. Paradis is the superintendent of mail at Chicago, Ill.

Edward M. Cummins is an office furniture supplier, and as good in this line of endeavor as he is on the links.

Sears-Roebuck gave its head, Julius Rosenwald, to Washington and Paul Derrickson to our camp, where each does his full duty.

Herbert N. Eadon is secretary of a piano manufacturing company. George J. Engelthaler is the "get the order out on time" of the Western Electric, after Hugh H. Hanna of the American Express completes the job.

Victor F. Harris, Max Morris, Fred C. Irwin, Milton R. Parish, Howard C. Sawyer, Reginald G. Squibb, John E. Thomas, Samuel W.

FIRST AID STUNTS

Timson, Lyman T. Whitehead, are all engaged in various manufacturing industries. Lew E. Holland is connected with the Parmalee Company, Warren A. Johns is with Donnelly, the directory company, and the struggling Standard Oil Co. will be unable to declare over a 400 per cent dividend because Lawrence M. Kiplinger is here.

Benj. W. Landborg is in the shoe business, but cannot buy shoes as cheap as the quartermaster at the Camp sells them. Howard J. Liston is an electrical engineer by profession and a soldier by preference.

Many of the streets we travel over are easy to manicure because James S. McCann induced the municipal authorities to use brick as a pavement.

Richard S. McConnell and John P. Tansey, members of the Iroquois Club, prefer politics to golf as a pastime.

William McCredie put in nearly a week digging trenches and showed fewer blisters than any man in the squad. Do you recall the candidate who threw clay in cadence, had a handkerchief tied across his forehead, and unconsciously impersonated one of the trio representing "the Spirit of '76"? His name was Charles E. Owens.

George R. Becker is a professional singer, whose voice has as much charm in congenial company as his rifle aim has terror for the enemy.

Arthur A. Gelatt is an expert on advertising, and the Panhandle railroad lost a good yardmaster when Patrick J. Sweeney offered his services to Uncle Sam.

Victor O. Crane is a theatrical manager, and he never engaged a better "on the march" singer than Henry S. Kingwill of the 10th squad.

Several student officers are also students in civil life. They are: David W. Beckwith, William H. Eastman, August L. Sundvall and Walter I. Uden.

Urban G. Willis is the dean of the Pullman Manual Training School. Otto A. Birr, Waldo H. Drake, Eugene Selleck, Warren M. Nutter and Arnold E. Heeter are instructors in various educational institutions. If it is more blessed to give than to receive surely they enjoy an enviable state of pleasure.

George W. Trickey was the State of Michigan Commander of Spanish-American War Veterans and is the purveyor of good cheer in the barracks. Sidney J. V. Bovey is a member of the Veteran Corps, 1st Regiment, I. N. G. Rowland P. Manuel is a professor of music, and can keep his end up in a trench with William H. Collins, a civil engineer.

Harry E. Rice belongs to one of the best squads in the company and he helped make it so.

John R. Boston understands construction work to the last letter, while Curtis H. Brainard has spent his years of study in metallurgy.

Nathan G. Nelson is an accountant for the Western Union.

Charles E. Turner was the sergeant in charge of equipment during the first week of Camp, and his genial manners made many a candidate feel more at home than would be possible to were a less pleasant or capable man in charge.

Michael Callahan dispatches trains, Orville Bunnell advertises good shows, William F. Conner is the able secretary of the Commercial Club of his town, and Willis E. Dick makes farming a pleasure.

Truman O. Pooler is a gardener, Allan C. Wilson is an engineering expert, and Edwin Zeleny conserves electrical energy for elevated railroads.

Nelson P. Parkinson and Murray C. Wilson are a team of good fellows that contribute much to the feeling of good fellowship that permeates the company barracks.

A company like this could not be without insurance men. Like the devil, they are always with us: Charles P. Shaw, Frank D. Henry, Harold J. Payette and Richard M. Lewis look after the fire risks; Robert Johnson specializes in life.

The worst, however, is yet to come. We have newspaper men here and they are in the open; no camouflage in the make-up. Norman W. Gregg is an editor, Donald G. Heinly is with a trade journal.

In the summer the activities of the Camp were interspersed by the coming and going of friends. Many of the men's families came from distances to stay in surrounding towns. Every evening at five the company streets would be filled with sight-seers and from five to seven-thirty there was a constant coming and going of mothers, wives and others; and on Sunday nights the roads would be crowded with cars bringing the men back before taps sounded.

Much of this disappeared at the Second Camp. The weather was raw and cold. Great numbers of the men came from long distances. Sixty per cent were married men with families. Much of the social life so prominent in the First Camp was absent. But not the good times, which will always be mingled in the minds of the officer students with the intensive training and hard work.

There was the Charity Ball, the proceeds of which went to army relief. The gymnasium wouldn't hold the great crowds that came. It was the first military ball for most of the men and one that will linger a long time in the memory of all there.

There was the trip to the World Series in Chicago. Just as soon as it was evident that the White Sox would win the American League championship, a wire went from Fort Sheridan to the National Baseball Commission requesting that 2,500 tickets be set aside for the men who were in training. Soon an answer came back that 1,500 had been reserved. These 1,500 were divided between the thirty companies. And each company drew to see what men should go. The result was that there were 1,500 successful contestants. Leave was given for the day. Special cars conveyed the men to the grounds, Colonel Ryan and Staff attending. Long before the game began they were all seated in the right field balcony and the game was on. For many it was the first World Series game. It was a good one, well played, and resulted in a win for the West and the White Sox.

To some unfamiliar with the work that was done and had to be done daily, these occasional excursions seemed to be somewhat outside the preparations for war—but to those who had in mind well-rounded, good-spirited, physically-fit leaders for the National Army, they all played their part.

There was always a deep earnestness about the work done and the plans and thoughts for the future, but an entire absence of drab and pessimistic or unnatural attitude toward life. It was the studied effort of those who were responsible for the morale of the Camp to see that there was a proper balancing of work and recreation, so that the best results of the work might be always kept to the front.

In this connection nothing was more interesting to the former civilian than the part that "Rumors" play in army life. The newcomer in the army is quickly shut off from the matters which interested him before. Sometimes he will go for weeks without reading papers carefully and what he reads is of little interest. His mind narrows down to the confines of the Camp, the doings in the company, and to insignificant matters that he would have smiled at weeks before.

Corporal H meets Private A while they are shaving in the washroom. "The Colonel called the Captain to Headquarters," says the Corporal. "What's doing?" says the Private. "I hear they are only going to commission 20 per cent of the men from each company," says the Corporal. Then the rumor gets busy, runs up and down the barracks, across the company street, and finally gets down to headquarters a huge-sized tornado, with Corporal H and Private A oblivious of the storm. Then the Commanding Officer nails that one.

Private X, in a fit of anger because some one sat on his bunk, messed it up and brought him a reprimand, swears in German, forgetting for the time being how hard he has tried to keep the fact that his ancestors were Germans in the background. That was enough. Private Y starts "old rumor" a-going that there are German spies in the companies. Some one sees a man who looks like Private X being taken away from the guardhouse to Chicago by the military police. Another finds that there is a small amount of dynamite laid away in the Arsenal and "Rumor" is off again with a "wholesale conspiracy of German spies to blow up the Camp, and a wonderful capture by the army intelligence department."

Here is a series of conflicting rumors from one mess hall on the subject of commissions and the time the Camp would close—a favorite subject of conversation and the parent of prolific rumors:

- (a) That the Camp will be over November 7th.
- (b) That the Camp will be over October 27th.
- (c) That the Camp will be over November 27th.
- (d) That those commissioned will receive six week's more training at Fort Sheridan.
- (e) That very few will be commissioned.
- (f) That most of the candidates will be commissioned.
- (g) That those commissioned will be rushed to France.
- (h) That practically none of those commissioned will get to France in less than six months.
- (i) And other reports.

Some less serious and more interesting are starting all the time. Men are sitting on the edges of their bunks with staring eyes, listening to each new report. It is the life—and twice welcome the man who can bring some word from overhead that will give them a chance to build a new one. Who cares or remembers that nine out of ten are without sense and never come true? They gave a sensation greater than a murder, a cyclone or a mighty victory in France, because they ran right into the place where the men lived.

No one will ever know, unless they were in it, how quickly and utterly the men who were in training were cut off from the civil life with which they had lately been so familiar.

Just to show what the Second Fort Sheridan Camp could do in the way of selling bonds, Colonel Ryan called together representatives from each regiment with the following result: The First Regiment sold $1,108,100, the Second $526,250, and the Third $3,027,700, making a total sale of $4,700,000 for the Camp, or three times as much as any army camp or cantonment in America.

GOVERNOR LOWDEN OF ILLINOIS ADDRESSING THE MEN

WAG

A welcome visitor to both Fort Sheridan Camps was Frank O. Lowden, war Governor of Illinois. His words were always listened to with great respect and appreciation. They were strengthened by an obvious interest and sincerity that carried the message home. On the occasion of a review in his honor, he said:

You go to fight against the idea which would hold the individual to no moral obligation, which would absolve the state from every consideration of truth or justice or equity. And the President is right when he says that no peace can be made with those who openly have said that a treaty is only a scrap of paper and that any state has a right secretly to withdraw from any obligation it has incurred to any other country.

I don't know when I have looked on such an inspiring scene as this. I was here in June and July and witnessed your predecessors of the First Camp and was thrilled then with what I saw. But today, looking into your faces, having learned of the tremendous work you are doing, having learned of the patriotic purpose which has inspired you, I feel a new hope for the future of our country.

I have no doubt that when the war is over, with the lessons we shall have learned, with the training which we were without, but which, I hope, we will be wise enough to continue to the remotest day, we will have a new and better country, a deeper sense of brotherhood. We will be tenderer of the right of the common man than ever before, and out of the heroism which you are exhibiting, out of all the tears that always attend a war, will come a greater, a better and a kindlier republic, and humanity forevermore will be indebted to you.

On other occasions Governor Sleeper of Michigan, Governor Phillips of Wisconsin and Governor Capper of Kansas were present and spoke to the student officers. Many other notables came out to visit the Camp. General Alvarado Obregon, conqueror of Pancho Villa at the battle of Celago and one of the foremost soldiers of Mexico, was the guest of Colonel Ryan.

In the company of Colonel Ryan, who is a personal friend of General Obregon, the Mexican chieftain spent several hours reviewing the drills and inspecting cantonments and trenches. He constantly expressed his delight and astonishment at the progress made by the rookies.

No one who ever saw Federal Judge Kenesaw Landis at Fort Sheridan will forget it. His son, Reed Landis, entered the First Camp and was transferred with others to the aviation section, where he made a reputation of which every Fort Sheridan man is proud. Judge Landis got down to brass tacks immediately, just as he does in his court. He was not satisfied to look on. He went through the communicating trenches, ignored the mud, climbed over obstacles and investigated lookout stations and dugouts and saw things as they were. He had a word of kindly interest for all. Just wanted to be one of the men and to get into the game.

A notable group of Chicago men were constant visitors to Fort Sheridan and did much to help make the Camp a success. Among them may be named Samuel Insull, Chairman State Council of Defense; Charles Wacker, Col. H. M. Byllesby, Roger Sullivan, John P. Hopkins, H. H. Merrick, Frederick W. Upham, Arthur Meeker, John P. Stockton and Samuel Hastings.

These men, with others from Lake Forest, Highland Park and surrounding towns were not merely casual visitors but backed up every effort that needed help from outside the Camp to make it successful.

The Commanding Officer and all the students at Fort Sheridan will remember the splendid paper published by Mr. Lew Merrill and his partners under the name of the Reveille. This paper appeared weekly and was full of good illustrations, fine selections of material and attractive articles which invariably added to the interest and training of the men. There were never enough to supply the big demand and eagerness to get the paper increased as the Camp went on. Mr. Merrill preserved a great many of the records of the Camp in the Reveille which have been largely used in this article.

In the eighth week the rookies repeated their war game in the trenches. The question as to which army was finally victorious will probably be a subject for student argument as long as the Camp is remembered.

The following account appeared in the Reveille:

Exact battle conditions, as they exist on the Western Front, have been reproduced as faithfully as possible, and the rifle fire, coupled with the salvos of the batteries delivering their barrage fire, has kept up continuously night and day.

Each company was in the trenches for thirty-six hours at a stretch, eating, sleeping and living exactly as they expect to live later on in the European battlefields.

At 11 o'clock every night, G. M. Martin and his staff of Y. M. C. A. workers, carried cans of steaming coffee and sandwiches through the winding communicating trenches to the dugouts and shelters and were welcomed with subdued shouts of joy by the men who had been so valiantly defending their respective positions.

There was little chance for sleep during the thirty-six hour periods that the men were in the trenches. Amid the crash and roar of artillery and the fusillade of rifle shots every man was on the alert. The wide expanse of No Man's Land at night was lit up by the fitful radiance of the flares and the red and white rockets which were signals for barrage fire to break up attacking raids.

In conformity with the plans of Colonel Ryan, Major Cromwell Stacey, senior instructor, who personally spent the nights in observation, no detail was omitted to make it a real war game for the candidate officers.

The grim determination of the men and their alertness in the face of driving rains and raw night winds excited the admiration of their commanders.

"The work this week was marked by steady improvement," said Colonel Ryan yesterday. "The first night the men were not so keen, but there was steady progress noted throughout the succeeding days. The failure of the attacks to reach the first line Wednesday night was due to the keenness of the sentinels, the excellent work of standing patrols and the perfect system of communicating signals which enabled a barrage fire to be delivered in one minute and reinforcements to be supplied immediately.

"The earnestness of the men, shown in carrying out the work in the trenches is another manifestation of the zeal and determination which permeates this Second Officers' Training Camp. The showing that the men made during the week proved very gratifying to me."

"The men deployed in good shape and came up in good shape," said Major Stacey, senior instructor. "There has been marked improvement all the way through, especially in patrolling. The men have learned the value of silence, both in patrolling and defense work. The relief of the trenches was carried out without a hitch and it is the intention of the instructors that they will get the same movement during the twelfth week at midnight, instead of at 12 noon, as was the case last week.

"The men are getting a very good idea of trench duties and above all are learning to take care of themselves.

"This trench week has been very instructive to the men and splendid progress has been shown all along the line."

One incident of special interest was the coup executed Monday night by Captain James Woolnough of the Illinois battalion.

Penetrating dense thickets in the murk long before dawn, he advanced his companies right up to Michigan's barbed wire and dug kneeling shelter. Two hours elapsed before the defenders of Fort Sheridan's trenches knew what had happened, but by that time Woolnough was so strongly established that he was secure against everything but very accurate barrage fire.

If supported, these trenches could be strengthened so as to make them impossible of capture. From them a deadly assault could be launched.

Major Cromwell Stacey, senior instructor, was so enthusiastic about what the Illinois captain and his companies had done that, when they marched back to the huts during an armistice, he repeatedly yelled to them, "Bully work, men; bully work."

Michigan's forces, under command of Captain R. G. Peck, "colonel" for the night, took over the five miles of trenches at seven in the evening. By 10:45 patrols of Major Farrand of the Michigan regiment discovered Captain Woolnough's camp 600 yards to the southward. Colonel Peck ordered Captain James P. Marley to drive him out with artillery.

All over the North Shore the bombardment could be heard. Umpire Lawrence Martin then proceeded to Woolnough's forces and told them they would have to evacuate. But instead of going backward, Woolnough bided his time and crept forward, capturing all Michigan patrols that might reveal his maneuver. Then he dug in seventy-five yards in front of Michigan's line.

Woolnough had done so well that Chief Umpire Stacey decreed that he might have four more companies to support him shortly after 3 a. m. Companies 17, 18, 19 and 20 were routed out of their barracks and, with full pack and under command of Captain X. F. Blauvelt, they detoured around Michigan's west flank.

Dawn found the support driving off a wave of two companies that Colonel Peck had sent over the top.

Woolnough had scored heavily. "In the early part of the night patrolling on both sides was excellent," said Major Stacey.

"From midnight on up until 4 o'clock the patrolling of the Michigan forces fell off in efficiency. This enabled Illinois soldiers to creep through the bushes and intrench unmolested for two hours before they were positively reported.

"Small Michigan patrols sent out to investigate were captured by Illinois. Consequently the information that the Illinois battalion under Captain Woolnough was only 100 yards in front of the trenches digging in was not known until 3 a. m., at which time Captain Woolnough had sufficient cover to hold his position.

OCCUPATION

"The organization of the Michigan position, trench duties, liaison between the infantry and artillery barrage fire, the telephone system, claims of runners and signal rockets were managed so efficiently that little was left to be desired."

On Tuesday they had maneuvered through the night as troops of the State of Michigan, which is at war with the State of Illinois. The heavy rain flooded boyaux, traverses and dugouts and parapets and parapets exuded a slimy ooze.

Under command of Captain J. J. Wuest, acting as colonel for the night, Michigan's forces defended the trenches against the operations of hostile Illinois battalions in charge of Captain W. C. F. Nicholson. Advancing from Evanston, Captain Nicholson bivouacked at Highwood.

Patrols from both sides occasionally met in sharp contact. After making a demonstration on Michigan's left flank, Captain Nicholson, with Companies 12, 21, 22 and 23, rushed the trenches on Michigan's right and center. Michigan sentries gave the signal for barrage from Captain Marley's batteries. In two minutes the guns began to roar, but in that interval three of Nicholson's companies managed to seize a sector of Michigan's front line.

Major Farrand, in Michigan's second line trenches, ordered a counter charge over the top and Nicholson was dislodged. Then Colonel Wuest ordered the artillery to sweep the entire front and Illinois was routed.

"Captain Nicholson's approach from Highwood was well managed," said Colonel Ryan, who was an all-night spectator. "The momentary occupation of the Michigan front line by Captain Nicholson was made possible because of a single barbed wire entanglement. Entanglements would not have been crossed so easily if actual war conditions existed.

"The lesson here is that no enemy could have gotten in under real war conditions, and one notable thing that developed in the repulsion of Nicholson's troops was the charge over the top. That showed very good tactical judgment, as Major Farrand's action enabled him quickly to move a large force, which could not have been done if the troops had been sent forward through the trenches."

Real music, the best in the country, was brought to Fort Sheridan. It had to be good, for there were hundreds of rookies there who, as producers, artists and critics, could maintain highest standards.

The first big musicale was given by the Paulist Choir, Father Flynn conducting. This great chorus with its international reputation, sang one Sunday night to a crowded gymnasium full of student officers.

Those who were there will not forget either the beautiful singing or the close appreciative attention of the audience. Somehow music seemed to have a big place in men's emotions those days. Someone versed in national psychology will explain why war and music seem to be so close in their interdependence.

Both those who sang and those who listened seemed to feel music with a new forcefulness. Perhaps it filled some lonely places in their hearts—perhaps it soothed emotions that had been overstrained or satisfied feelings which could not be spoken in words.

At least those black vestments of this wonderful chorus—the sweet voices of the boys and the strong voices of the men made a deep impression upon those hundreds of upturned faces, with the dull brown of the khaki as a background. Those who had seen them at the boxing and bayonet practice and who might later see some of these men in the trenches in France could say truly, "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

Later the Chicago Symphony Orchestra came for an evening. The stage was enlarged—several truck loads of instruments were brought to Fort Sheridan. When the doors of the Gymnasium were opened that Sunday evening at 6 P. M. the hall was soon crowded and then, by an arrangement with the orchestra, those who could not get in at the first concert were given a chance to hear several numbers afterward.

No one will forget the wonderful music that night. Clyde M. Carr, the president of the Association; Mr. Frederick J. Wessels, the manager, and Mr. Frederick Stock, the conductor, as well as hundreds of old friends, said they never heard the orchestra play as it did that night. The audience was carried away by the music and the musicians were lifted out of the mechanical by the appreciation of their audience.

The following program was rendered:

1. Overture to "Rienzi", Wagner.
2. Andante molto moto (By the Brook), from Symphony, "Pastorale", Beethoven.
3. Meditation from "Thais", Massenet. (Violin obligato by Mr. Harry Weisbach.)
4. Capriccio Espagnol, Opus 34, Rimsky-Korsakow; Alborada, Variations, Alborada, Scene and Gypsy Song, Fandango of the Asturias. (Played without pause.)
5. Berceuse from "Jocelyn" Suite, Godard. (Violincello obligato by Mr. Bruno Steindel.)
6. Concert Waltz No. 1, Flazounow.
7. Marche, "Slave", Tschaikowsky.

At the close Mr. Stock turned to the audience and said, "Now I will show you how we can play the American airs." And they played.

Such cheering. Time after time the audience rose to its feet, but no matter how loud the cheering, the mighty swing of the music carried above it all, and when the last note died out and the conductor turned and bowed, men realized that probably never again would they hear such music or such enthusiasm combined under such circumstances throughout all their lives.

What value has this in the training of soldiers? A value so great that in the near future the entire army adopted these methods, and spent millions of dollars to provide the best in order that they might keep the minds and spirits strong for the gruelling tests and the tiresome watches that weakens men's force for leadership and battle.

During the First and Second Camps the Y. M. C. A., under the direction of Mr. George Martin as General Secretary, did a splendid work for the student officers in training.

The commanding officer expressed his appreciation in the following letter:

"My dear Mr. Trude: During my tour of duty with the First Training Camp at Fort Sheridan and since I have been in command of the Second Fort Sheridan Training Camp I have had occasion to observe the work of the Young Men's Christian Association here. Their work has been of great assistance in instructing and guiding the welfare of the young men here, making provision for wholesome lectures, reading material, writing material and entertainments of various kinds. They have assisted in athletics and in every way have co-operated with the officers in command to create ideal moral atmosphere around these young men. Their tact, diplomacy and good will has won for them the admiration of every member of this Camp. Their work is democratic and universal in its effect upon these men and most beneficial.

"Yours very truly,

"(Signed) J. A. RYAN,

25. Generous use of magazines and small games.
26. Money orders written, $25,000 a month.
27. Trench service.

In addition the Knights of Columbus maintained a reading room in the Gymnasium under the supervision of Major E. J. Vattman, and the Y. M. C. A. had a rest room during the Second Camp in the southeast room of the Gymnasium.

At the beginning of the Second Fort Sheridan Camp the Department of Morale was originated and organized. It was decided by the Commanding Officer that in addition to the welfare organizations mentioned, that there should be a definite department under the control of the Commanding Officer through which he could secure the best co-operation of all agencies as well as the commanders of companies and the men themselves, in order that there might be maintained the highest standard of morale.

As outlined, the duty of the Director of Morale was to assist the instructors in building up within their companies a spirit of harmony, an enthusiasm for their work, a clear conception of the motives in which the war was undertaken, a high standard of personal living and a definite sense of the large responsibilities of the officers in training and maintaining the morale of their companies in the new army.

These directors worked in close harmony with the instructors and with all other agencies in the Camp. Their activities were particularly those within the company life, where they co-operated with the captains in every possible way.

At first many of the men smiled at this new department in the service and those who were entrusted with the responsibility had to withstand their full share of good-natured bantering and witticisms. However, the idea of a Department of Morale as an integral part of an Army organization originating at this time eventually prevailed in the offices of the Secretary of War and was adopted as a Department of the Chief of Staff of the American Armies.

The Commanding Officer had the satisfaction long after the Second Fort Sheridan Camp was closed of receiving an order which was sent to every division of the Army instructing them to appoint a Director of Morale for each division. Brigadier-General Munson, a Regular Army officer, was ordered to Washington and put in charge of this department. It operated in this country with a good deal of success in the camps and was the parent of the plan which developed after the armistice of placing all matters of welfare work in the Army directly in the control of the Commanding Officer.

Not only did this department aim to give every man in the Camp the very best chance to make the most of his period of training, but in addition it organized a course of training to familiarize the men of the companies with the best methods of taking care of the men under their command. Every Wednesday night a representative of each company met Colonel Ryan and the Director of Morale for an hour in the Gymnasium, at which time a discussion was held covering the four points of intellectual, physical, social and moral interests of the enlisted man.

At the close of the Camp the information brought together by each of these departments was embodied in book form, the foreword of which was written by Colonel Ryan, and which reads:

Many books have been written on the training of enlisted men of our army, most of which have dealt with the military side only. There is another side, the influence of which is quite as important in rounding out the soldier's training to make him the ideal among the Nation's defenders.

This book is sent forth as the results of the combined efforts of men of the Second Fort Sheridan Training Camp, to place in the hands of newly-commissioned officers, in concrete form, a system of solving the many problems they will meet in the development and training of the newly-formed regiments in the armies of the United States. It is believed that the benefits to be gained will increase in proportion to the spirit with which it is accepted and applied.

As far as we know this is one of the first books prepared by men in training covering the officer's responsibility for his men, and while it may have seemed incomplete and amateurish to men who had had large experience in service, its spirit and courage carried it a long way. A single page covering the moral responsibility of the officer to his men will give a slight idea of the general bearing of the book upon personal problems.

Moral quality and purpose underlie efficiency and reliability among the enlisted men. However strong men may be in other respects, without good morals they must ultimately break down. Whenever you find an enlisted man physically clean, intellectually alert, and vigorously alive, credit it to his moral character. In the army moral qualities must be virile, positive and useful. The officer should reward such character with larger opportunities. He should try to develop larger moral strength among his men, by instruction and personal influence.

A celebrated Englishman, speaking to troops during the present war, called their attention to the fact that the surgeon, before beginning an operation, makes sure that his instrument is antiseptically clean and cannot infect the body it is employed to relieve. "In like manner," said the speaker, "the army employed to cut the cancer of Autocracy and Militarism out of the social body must be composed of men who are physically and morally clean; lest in ridding the world of its loathsome cancer, it be infected with a virus more loathsome still."

Our soldiers carry the National reputation to the front. They must be kept clean; otherwise, not only the men, themselves, but our future American life to the third and fourth generation will be affected.

Repressive measures are helpful to a certain degree only. We should give them reasonable support. Prohibition of drink, and regulations to keep camps and their environs free from immoral resorts and bad characters, must be enforced. Civil authorities should be encouraged in making this condition effective in communities surrounding the camp.

In the last analysis, the whole matter of morals in the army comes down to the moral fibre of the man himself. A man of positive moral character will be safe even in an immoral environment; while a man lacking a moral recourse will seek and find opportunity for indulgence, however repressive the measures adopted for his protection. This manual is prepared for the purpose of assisting the officer to build up personal character, as well as company spirit.

The other chapters dealt with the mental training of the enlisted man,—his physical condition and his recreation. Some of the contributions made by the delegates for the company to the weekly conference and later to the book showed how great the interest and determination was to play fair with this biggest of all problems.

In their early training the majority of the men realized that if they were to have any success in creating efficient loyal soldiers, it would be in proportion to the thoughtful leadership, the spirit of consideration, the knowledge of their needs and the ability to care for them fairly and adequately.

They came to realize that positive plans for the continuous development of the good spirit of their companies will accomplish far more in the long run than irregular attempts at severe discipline.

Such consideration should not be given as a bait for popularity or as a substitute for intelligent leadership or necessary discipline and training. It should aim to build up a spirit around the commander and within the company which would furnish a wholesome influence to training in teamwork, a splendid morale for battle, a condition where the failure or delinquency of men will so affect the rest of the company that personal discipline would not be necessary.

Major Christian A. Bach, whose record at Fort Sheridan and afterwards as Chief of Staff of the Fourth Division in France, will always be one of the outstanding personalities of the war in the minds of all the men who served with him, expressed in simple yet imperishable form what a real soldier thought on this subject of leadership.

In perpetuating his great address on Leadership in the records of the Fort Sheridan Training Camp, we believe we are doing a service to many a man who will read it again and who will realize that in times of peace, as in times of war, real leadership requires the very best a man possesses.

Speaking in the Gymnasium shortly before the close of the Second Camp, Major Bach said:

In a short time each of you men will control the lives of a certain number of other men. You will have in your charge a greater or less number of loyal, but untrained, citizens who look to you for instruction and guidance. Your word will be their law. Your most casual remark will be remembered. Your mannerisms will be aped. Your clothing, your carriage, your vocabulary, your manner of command will be imitated. When you join your organization you will find waiting for you, or you will receive, a willing body of men who ask from you nothing more than the qualities that will command their respect, their loyalty and their obedience. They are perfectly ready and eager to follow you so long as you can convince them that you have these qualities. When the time comes that they are satisfied you do not possess them, you might as well kiss yourself good-by. Your usefulness in that organization is at an end.

From the standpoint of society, the world is divided into leaders and followers. The professions have their leaders, the financial world has its leaders. We have religious leaders and political leaders and society leaders. In all this leadership it is difficult, if not impossible, to separate from the element of pure leadership that selfish element of personal gain or advantage to the individual, without which such leadership would lose its value. It is in the military service only where men freely sacrifice their lives for a faith, where men are willing to suffer and die for the right or the prevention of a great wrong, that we can hope to realize leadership in its highest, most exalted and disinterested sense. Therefore, when I say leadership, I mean military leadership.

In a few days the great mass of you men will receive commissions as officers. These commissions will not make you leaders; they will merely make you officers. They will place you in a position where you can become leaders if you possess the proper attributes. But you must make good, not so much with the men over you as with the men under you.

Men must and will follow into battle officers who are not leaders; but the driving power behind these men is not enthusiasm, but discipline. They go with doubt and trembling and with an awful fear tugging at their heart-strings that prompts the unspoken question, "What will he do next?" Such men obey the letter of their orders, but no more. Of devotion to their commander; of exalted enthusiasm which scorns personal risk; of their self-sacrifice to insure his personal safety, they know nothing. Their legs carry them forward because their brain and their training tell them they must go. Their spirit does not go with them. Great results are not achieved by cold, passive, unresponsive soldiers. They don't go very far and they stop as soon as they can. Leadership not only demands, but receives, the willing, unhesitating, unfaltering obedience and loyalty of other men; and a devotion that will cause them, when the time comes, to follow their uncrowned king to hell and back again if necessary.

You will ask yourselves, "Of just what, then, does leadership consist?" "What must I do to become a leader?" "What are the attributes of leadership and how can I cultivate them?"

Leadership is a composite of a number of qualities. Among the most important I would list self-confidence, moral ascendancy, self-sacrifice, paternalism, fairness, initiative, decision, dignity, courage.

Let me discuss these with you in detail.

Self-confidence results, first, from exact knowledge; second, the ability to impart that knowledge, and, third, the feeling of superiority over others that naturally follows. All these give the officer poise.

To lead, you must know—you may bluff all your men some of the time, but you can't do it all the time. Men will not have confidence in an officer unless he knows his business, and he must know it from the ground up. The officer should know more about paper work than his first sergeant and company clerk put together; he should know more about messing than his mess sergeant; more about diseases of the horse than his troop farrier. He should be at least as good a shot as any man in his company. If the officer does not know, and demonstrates the fact that he does not know, it is entirely human for the soldier to say to himself: "To hell with him; he doesn't know as much about this as I do," and calmly disregard the instructions received. There is no substitute for accurate knowledge. Become so well informed that men will hunt you up to ask questions; that your brother officers will say to one another, "Ask Smith—he knows." And not only should each officer know thoroughly the duties and responsibilities of his own grade, but he should study those of the two grades next above him. A two-fold benefit attaches to this. He prepares himself for duties which may fall to his lot at any time during battle; he further gains a broader viewpoint which enables him to appreciate the necessity for the issuance of orders and joins more intelligently in their execution.

Not only must the officer know, but he must be able to put what he knows into grammatical, interesting, forceful English. He must learn to stand on his feet and speak without embarrassment. I am told that in British training camps student officers are required to deliver ten-minute talks on any subject they may choose. That is excellent practice. For to speak clearly, one must think clearly, and clear, logical thinking expresses itself in definite positive orders. While self-confidence is the result of knowing more than your men, moral ascendancy is based upon your belief that you are the better man. To gain and maintain this ascendancy you must have self-control, physical vitality and endurance and moral force. You must have yourself so well in hand that, even though in battle you be scared stiff, you will never show fear. For if you, by so much as a hurried movement or a trembling of the hands or a change of expression or a hasty order hastily revoked, indicate your mental condition, it will be reflected in your men in a far greater degree. In garrison or camp, many instances arise to try your temper and wreck the sweetness of your disposition. If at such time you "fly off the handle" you have no business to be in charge of men. For men in anger say and do things that they, almost invariably, regret afterwards. An officer should never apologize to his men; also, an officer should never be guilty of an act for which his sense of justice tells him he should apologize.

Another element in gaining moral ascendancy lies in the possession of enough physical vitality and endurance to withstand the hardships to which you and your men are subjected and a dauntless spirit that enables you to not only accept them cheerfully, but to minimize their magnitude. Make light of your troubles, belittle your trials, and you will help vitally to build up within your organization an esprit whose value in time of stress cannot be measured.

Moral force is the third element in gaining moral ascendancy. To exert moral force you must live clean; you must have sufficient brain power to see the right and the will to do the right. Be an example to your men. An officer can be a power for good or a power for evil. Don't preach to them—that will be worse than useless. Live the kind of a life you would have them lead and you will be surprised to see the number that will imitate you. A loud-mouthed, profane captain, who is careless of his personal appearance, will have a loud-mouthed, profane, dirty company. Remember what I tell you. Your company will be the reflection of yourself. If you have a rotten company it will be because you are a rotten captain.

Self-sacrifice is essential to leadership. You will give; give all the time. You will give of yourself physically, for the longest hours, the hardest work and the greatest responsibility is the lot of the captain. He is the first man up in the morning and the last man in at night. He works while others sleep. You will give of yourself mentally, in sympathy and appreciation for the troubles of men in your charge. This one's mother has died and that one has lost all his savings in a bank failure. They may desire help, but more than anything else they desire sympathy. Don't make the mistake of turning such men down with the statement that you have troubles of your own. For every time that you do you knock a stone out of the foundation of your house. Your men are your foundation, and your house of leadership will tumble about your ears unless it rests securely upon them. Finally, you will give of your own slender financial resources. You will frequently spend your own money to conserve the health and well being of your men or to assist them when in trouble. Generally you get your money back. Very frequently you must charge it to profit and loss.

When I say that paternalism is essential to leadership I use the term in its better sense. I do not now refer to that form of paternalism which robs men of initiative, self-reliance and self-respect. I refer to the paternalism that manifests itself in a watchful care for the comfort and welfare of those in your charge. Soldiers are much like children. You must see that they have shelter, food and clothing, the best that your utmost efforts can provide. You must see that they have food to eat before you think of your own; that they have each as good a bed as can be provided before you consider where you will sleep. You must be far more solicitous of their comfort than of your own. You must look after their health. You must conserve their strength by not demanding needless exertion or useless labor. And by doing all these things you are breathing into life what would otherwise be a man machine. You are creating a soul in your organization that will make the mass respond to you as though it were one man. And that is esprit. And when your organization has this esprit you will wake up some morning and discover that the tables have been turned; that instead of your constantly looking out for them, they have, without even a hint from you, taken up the task of looking out for you. You will find that a detail is always there to see that your tent, if you have one, is promptly pitched; that the most and the cleanest bedding is brought to your tent; that from some mysterious source two eggs have been added to your supper when no one else had any; that an extra man is helping your stryker to give your horse a super-grooming; that your wishes are anticipated; that every man is "Johnny on the spot." And then you have arrived.

Fairness is another element without which leadership can neither be built up nor maintained. There must be, first, that fairness which treats all men justly. I do not say alike, for you cannot treat all men alike—that would be assuming that all men are cut from the same piece; that there is no such thing as individuality or a personal equation. You cannot treat all men alike; a punishment that would be dismissed by one man with a shrug of the shoulders is mental anguish for another. A company commander who for a given offense has a standard punishment that applies to all is either too indolent or too stupid to study the personality of his men. In his case justice is certainly blind. Study your men as carefully as a surgeon studies a difficult case. And when you are sure of your diagnosis, apply the remedy. And remember that you apply the remedy to effect a cure; not merely to see the victim squirm. It may be necessary to cut deep; but when you are satisfied as to your diagnosis don't be diverted from your purpose by any false sympathy for the patient.

Hand in hand with fairness in awarding punishment walks fairness in giving credit. Everybody hates a human hog. When any one of your men has accomplished an especially creditable piece of work see that he gets his proper reward.

Turn heaven and earth upside down to get it for him. Don't try to take it away from him and hog it for yourself. You may do this and get away with it, but you have lost the respect and loyalty of your men. Sooner or later, your brother officers will hear of it and shun you like a leper. In war there is glory enough for all. Give the man under you his due. The man who always takes and never gives is not a leader. He is a parasite.

There is another kind of fairness—that which will prevent an officer from abusing the privileges of his rank. When you exact respect from soldiers, be sure you treat them with equal respect. Build up their manhood and self-respect. Don't try to pull it down. For an officer to be overbearing and insulting in the treatment of enlisted men is the act of a coward. He ties the man to a tree with the ropes of discipline and then strikes him in the face, knowing full well that the man cannot strike back. Consideration, courtesy and respect from officers toward enlisted men are not incompatible with discipline; they are part of our discipline.

Without initiative and decision no man can expect to lead. In maneuvers, you will frequently see, when an emergency arises, certain men calmly give instant orders, which later, on analysis, prove to be, if not exactly the right thing, very nearly the right thing to have done. You will see other men in emergency, become badly rattled; their brains refuse to work, or they give a hasty order, revoke it, give another, revoke that; in short, show every indication of being in a blue funk. Regarding the first man you may say: "That man is a genius. He hasn't had time to reason this thing out. He acts intuitively." Forget it. Genius is merely the capacity for taking infinite pains. The man who was ready is the man who has prepared himself. He has studied beforehand the possible situations that might arise; he has made tentative plans covering such situations. When he is confronted by the emergency, he is ready to meet it. He must have sufficient mental alertness to appreciate the problem that confronts him and the power of quick reasoning to determine what changes are necessary in his already formulated plan. He must have also the decision to order the execution and stick to his order. Any reasonable order in an emergency is better than no order. The situation is there. Meet it. It is better to do something and do the wrong thing than to hesitate, hunt around for the right thing to do and wind up by doing nothing at all. And having decided on a line of action, stick to it. Don't vacillate. Men have no confidence in an officer who doesn't know his own mind. Occasionally you will be called upon to meet a situation which no reasonable human being could anticipate. If you have prepared yourselves to meet other emergencies which you could anticipate, the mental training you have thereby gained will enable you to act promptly and with calmness. You must frequently act without orders from higher authority. Time will not permit you to wait for them. Here again enters the importance of studying the work of the officers above you. If you have a comprehensive grasp of the entire situation and can form an idea of the general plan of your superiors, that and your previous emergency training will enable you to determine that the responsibility is yours and to issue the necessary orders without delay.

The element of personal dignity is important in military leadership. Be the friend of your men, but do not become their intimate. Your men should stand in awe of you; not fear. If your men presume to become familiar, it is your fault, not theirs. Your actions have encouraged them to do so. And above all things don't cheapen yourself by courting their friendship or currying their favor. They will despise you for it. If you are worthy of their loyalty and respect and devotion they will surely give all these without asking. If you are not, nothing that you can do will win them.

It is exceedingly difficult for an officer to be dignified while wearing a dirty, spotted uniform and a three days' stubble of whiskers on his face. Such a man lacks self-respect and self-respect is an essential of dignity. There may be occasions when your work entails dirty clothes and an unshaven face. Your men all look that way. At such times there is ample reason for your appearance. In fact, it would be a mistake to look too clean—they would think that you were not doing your share. But as soon as this unusual occasion has passed, set them an example of personal neatness.

And then I would mention courage. Moral courage you need as well as physical courage. That kind of moral courage which enables you to adhere without faltering to a determined course of action which your judgment has indicated as the one best suited to secure the desired result. You will find many times, especially in action, that, after having issued your orders to do a certain thing, you will be beset by misgivings and doubts; you will see or think you see other and better means for accomplishing the object sought. You will be strongly tempted to change your orders. Don't do it until it is clearly manifested that your first orders were radically wrong. For, if you do, you will be again worried by doubts as to the efficacy of your second orders. Every time you change your orders without obvious reason you weaken your authority and impair the confidence of your men. Have the moral courage to stand by your order and see it through.

Moral courage further demands that you assume the responsibility for your own acts. If your subordinates have loyally carried out your orders and the movement you directed is a failure, the failure is yours, not theirs. Yours would have been the honor, had it been successful. Take the blame if it results in disaster. Don't try to shift it to a subordinate and make him the goat. That is a cowardly act.

Furthermore, you will need moral courage to determine the fate of those under you. You will frequently be called upon for recommendations for the promotion or demotion of officers and N. C. O. in your immediate command. Keep clearly in mind your personal integrity and the duty you owe your country. Do not let yourself be deflected from a strict sense of justice by feelings of personal friendship. If your own brother is the second lieutenant and you find him unfit to hold the commission, eliminate him. If you don't, your lack of moral courage may result in the loss of valuable lives. If, on the other hand, you are called upon for a recommendation concerning a man whom, for personal reasons, you dislike, do not fail to do him full justice. Remember that your aim is the general good, not the satisfaction of an individual grudge.

I am taking it for granted that you have physical courage. I need not tell you how necessary that is.

Courage is more than bravery. Bravery is fearlessness—the absence of fear. The merest dolt may be brave because he lacks the mentality to appreciate his danger; he doesn't know enough to be afraid. Courage, however, is that firmness of spirit, that moral backbone which, while fully appreciating the danger involved, nevertheless goes on with the undertaking. Bravery is physical courage, is mental and moral. You may be cold all over, your hands may tremble, your legs may quake, your knees be ready to give way—that is fear. If nevertheless you go forward, if in spite of this physical defection you continue to lead your men against the enemy, you have courage. The physical manifestations of fear will pass away. You may never experience them but once. They are the "buck fever" of the hunter who tries to shoot his first deer. You must not give way to them.

A number of years ago, while taking a course in demolitions, the class of which I was a member, was handling dynamite. The instructor said, regarding its manipulation, "I must caution you gentlemen to be careful in the use of these explosives. One man has but one accident." And so I would caution you. If you give way to the fear that will doubtless beset you in your first action; if you show the white feather; if you let your men go forward while you hunt a shell-crater, you will never again have the opportunity of leading those men.

Use judgment, in calling on your men for displays of physical courage or bravery. Don't ask any man to go where you would not go yourself. If your common sense tells you that the place is too dangerous for you to venture into, then it is too dangerous for him. You know his life is as valuable to him as yours is to you. Occasionally some of your men must be exposed to danger which you cannot share. A message must be taken across a fire-swept zone. You call for volunteers. If your men know you, and know that you are "right" you will never lack volunteers; for they will know your heart is in your work, that you are giving your country the best you have, that you would willingly carry the message yourself if you could. Your example and enthusiasm will have inspired them.

And lastly, if you aspire to leadership, I would urge you to study men. Get under their skins, and find out what is inside. Some men are quite different from what they appear to be on the surface. Determine the workings of their minds. Much of General Robert E. Lee's success as a leader may be ascribed to his ability as a psychologist. He knew most of his opponents from West Point days; knew the workings of their minds. He believed that they would do certain things under certain circumstances. In nearly every case, he was able to anticipate their movements and block the execution. You cannot know your opponents in this war, in the same way. But you can know your own men. You can study each to determine wherein lies his strength and his weakness. Which man can be relied upon to the last gasp and which cannot. Know your men, know your business, know yourself.

Only three weeks remained. Early in November there had been a fall of snow. The men were kept out of the trenches and off the ranges, but doubled up in lectures and study.

Three Friday nights were set aside for entertainments by the men. It was explained by the Commanding Officer that the work was compulsory and a part of their training.

The first was a minstrel show given by the members of the Kansas-Colorado-Missouri Regiment. Following is the program:

1. Opening Chorus—Medley, arranged by Candidate Booth, Fifteenth Battery.
2. Solo—"Joan of Arc," Candidate Payne, Eighth Company.
3. Song—"Sleepy Rag," Candidate Childs, Second Company.
4. Song—"Somewhere in France Is the Lily," Candidate Nathan, Third Company.
5. Solo—"There's a Long, Long Trail," Candidate Frank Hughes, Fifth Company.
6. Song—"Yaaka Hula Hicky Dula," Candidate Jack Hughes, Sixth Company.
7. The Yale Quartette—"Doan' You Cry, My Honey," Candidates Witte, Bate, Park, Nathan.
8. Solo—"Can't You Hear Me Calling, Caroline," Candidate Witte, Eighth Company.

Intermission five minutes.

1. The First Company Vocal Grenadiers—Candidates Fairchild, Foote, Johnson, Dubin, Kluss, Mills, Strecker, Bate, Harrison.
2. Specialty—"If I Were Mr. Morgan," "The Irish Jubilee," Candidate Childs, Second Battery.

5. Finale—Closing Chorus—Patriotic, arranged by Candidate Booth, Fifteenth Battery. The entire company.
Tableau.

The next week a vaudeville show was given by the Michigan-Wisconsin Regiment under the direction of Candidate Frank R. Adams, formerly of Hough & Adams, author of many successful plays.

The work of preparation was done with difficulty as the men were in the trenches all week, but on Friday night, the Gymnasium was a real show land and hundreds of trench-wearied veterans and uneasy candidates welcomed a real diversion for an evening.

They presented the following program:

1. "Have a Heart"—Candidate Snyder and Candidates Gillette, Collette, Boardman, R. D. Cooper, Lewis and Pierce, Third Battery.
2. "The Fourth Battery Rides Away"—Candidates Hartesvelt, Nahikian, Leek, Stewart and Kitson, Fourth Battery.
3. Accordeon Specialty—Candidates Schneider and Bechtold, Eleventh Company.
4. Songs—Candidate Jenkin, Third Battery.
5. "Prisoners at Large"—Candidates Dunne, Story, Brickhead, Stanton, Porter, Crane and Reed, Fifth Battery.
6. "Princess Ino"—Psychic Demonstration—Candidates Gruetner and Torson, Fifth Battery.
7. "Prepare for Action"—Candidates Brookhart and Talkes, Third Battery.
8. Songs—Candidates Henning, Dunne, Thomas and Weller, Fifth Battery.
9. "Gravy"—Candidates Geert and Parchor, Tenth Company.
10. "My Honolulu Honey Lou"—Candidate Millet and Candidates Snyder, Gillette, Collette, Mahon, Pierce, Lewis, Lane, Boardman, Frost, Norton, Tait, Tilleson, Wells, Cooper, Quinnell, Thomas, Bennett, Knutson, Baldwin, Vogel, Brant, Johnston and Roark.

The final show was given by the Illinois Regiment. It began with a play entitled, "Inertia," written by J. Lee Nichols of the British Army, with Candidate Dick Travers as the star. This was followed by a comedy sketch entitled "Barracks Bust," and another, "Third Regiment Hash," in which "Sergeant Hill," of Small Problems of Infantry fame made his first entrance on the dramatic stage.

One of the best features of the entertainment was the Third Regiment Glee Club and Orchestra, which had been suddenly whipped into shape by Candidate Hodge of the Eighteenth Company, formerly bandmaster for Ringling Brothers Circus.

All candidates agreed that nothing could beat the three entertainments given and the applause and enthusiasm throughout repaid the extra effort and time given.

The final week in the trenches—the third in the series—began on the twelfth week. The instructors desired during this week to teach the following lessons:

1. Camouflage of Trenches.—The student officers camouflaged the important sections of the trenches, the machine gun emplacements, battery supports. Part of it was a work of art.
2. Organization of the Position.—This included posting of sentinels; relief of sentinels; posting of observers; relief of observers; posting of watches; relief of watches; giving the alarm in case of troop attack or a gas attack and other matters relating to interior life of the trenches.
3. Providing against night attacks by patrols in No Man's Land.
4. Construction of barbed wire entanglements.
5. Communication between the different parts of Trench System by chains of runners and communication with the artillery support by means of rockets, etc. Drill in the placing and firing of flares.
6. Drill in offensive and defensive attacks and general maneuvers by day and night.

The week went off fine. The three months' work of instruction, training and organization were beginning to tell. There was confidence, earnestness and rapid movement. Underlying it all was the constant pressure of the fact that probably the next trial out in the trenches would be in far away France.

The movements in the trenches and in the attacks went off like clock work. The night was illumined by constant setting off of flares, the sharp cracking of rifles and the whirr and crack of the bursting rockets, while the boom of the heavy guns carried far distant and kept the North Shore awake through a large part of the night and brought hundreds from all sections who witnessed the night movements from the central road.

The "Reveille" said, "Tuesday night's sham battle was the most interesting and spectacular held at Fort Sheridan. Seven companies under command of Major H. R. Smalley attacked the trenches, defended by eleven companies under command of Major C. A. Bach. The attack came in waves, twenty minutes apart, running from the East to the West Sectors.

All commands were given by rockets and signal fires. Thirteen trench mortars firing aerial bombs simulated exploding shells over the trenches and No Man's Land. Star shells, flares, rockets and "Bengal" lights kept up a constant illumination and the booming of rockets and rifles in the hands of 2,000 fighting men made the work most realistic yet attempted."

During the week one of the officers took some friends to dinner at a neighborhood hotel. This hotel had prospered largely during the Camps and had always been particularly gracious to the men at Fort Sheridan.

The proprietor's humor seemed to be way off. He called the officer aside and told him that the big guns woke up some of his nervous guests in the middle of the night and that there were a lot of complaints from people who came out there to be quiet.

The officer listened to him courteously and attentively and then without a smile on his face, replied, "Leave it to me. I will fix it up all right. I will communicate with headquarters and have them stop the war."

The last week in the trenches gave both officers and men new confidence and a deep sense of satisfaction for all the work done, and helped to deepen ties of friendship and personal acquaintance already strong among the men. Assisting Senior Instructor Major Cromwell Stacey in all the plans for trench work, were Major Solbert of the Engineers and Captain Georges Etienne Bertrand, whose wealth of experience and practical knowledge were a great factor in the rapid development of the student candidates.

In closing his service at Fort Sheridan and before going to Camp Grant, Captain Bertrand wrote this letter to the men of the Camp:

My dear Comrades:

You will soon receive your commissions. And now you, in your turn, are called to lead men into battle. You will do it with the double application of audacity and that efficiency which every American puts into practice when he treats of a business matter. You will do it also with that positive consciousness of the right road, that freshness of sentiment, that enthusiasm which characterizes your people when it concerns a moral matter. As I have written over there to my chiefs, to my friends and also to that little family which I left for a time, the officers and men of my battalion—I have no fears about seeing you at work. In fact, I am confident of the work which you are going to accomplish because of the results which you have gained here in three months. It was not possible to do more in this space of time. I do not say that you are military experts, but this war, in its application, is not a science, it is a practical art. You will be good workmen, for you have a clear and general knowledge of your trade. You are qualified to take a command. Now you must bend your efforts toward two points. I have the privilege of giving you this last advice. First, train yourself in leading your unit—that is to say, practice your command on the ground, make rapid decisions, and make them well, because on them depends the life of the men who follow you, and therefore they are the very element of success. Then perfect your instruction by going into details, particularly into those which concern the specialties born of this war. You will see according as you study them what value they have. For him who has faith, the command of a company under fire has a powerful attraction. One of my comrades said, "War would have passionate interest without shells, bullets, mud or barbed wire." He was right, but he could have added, at the risk of complimenting himself: "It is that which makes it inspiring."

If I have had some influence on the course of your military instruction, I am happy and grateful. My help would have been impossible without your indulgence and good will. I thank you with all my heart. I thank your instructors who have made my task easy, Colonel Ryan, Commandant of the Camp; Lieut.-Col. Stacey, senior instructor, and all the officers, my comrades, with whom we have co-operated in the common task. In particular the collaboration which Major O. N. Solbert and I have brought to bear on the drawing up of our lectures remains as one of the most vivid memories of my mission as a French officer in this country.

There is also something for which I wish to thank you which does not transmit itself into tangible and material form. It is the sympathy which you have shown me, it is the welcome you have given me here. I will never forget the sight of you as an audience when I addressed you. Your eyes were so bright and so clear, your smiles were so frank, your appreciation was so loyal and so spontaneous, that fearful at the beginning of my speech to hurl myself before you "over the top," I felt at ease in the middle of it, and toward the end I did not want to stop. I have come to love you as I have loved my officers and my chassesurs. And it is not without a heart wrench that I say to you "adieu." I do not think there is any people more hospitable than yours. In the circle of our work, in the atmosphere of the post, you have proved it to me, as I have felt it with emotion in the larger frame of the social life of America.

And now, continue to work until the end, until victory. The date is immaterial, since it will come. I have even heard it said here through courtesy to me that the United States owed a debt to France, because France had assisted at its birth and at the beginning of its formidable entrance into contemporary history. Be that as it may, if it were true as those pretend who do not know us, that France before this war was very ill, was already dead, if this were true, then you may be sure that the great American Republic will assist in the near future to the rebirth of the old, but always glorious France.

CAPTAIN G. E. BERTRAND,
Sixth Battalion de Chasseurs Alpine,
On Mission to the United States of America.

During the last week, which might be fittingly entitled "Worry Week," there were many minor happenings. There was a review by the Governors of Kansas and Michigan and the Commanding Officer. There was the farewell reception in the Gymnasium on the last Sunday evening with addresses by the Commanding Officer, Colonel James A. Ryan, Major E. J. Vattman, Chaplain of both Camps; W. F. Hypes, representing the Y. M. C. A., and Myron E. Adams, Director of Morale.

Those who had a chance to look the three regiments in the face that Sunday night as one after another they marched into the hall and took their places, will not soon forget, the wonderful good spirit, the high purpose or the strong manliness of these men. It was the privilege of a lifetime to have had these associations—to have been even for a time part of an organization that was made up of the best men ever.

There were 4,000 nervous, anxious men trying to smile and work and sleep that last week, but "Their minds had but a single thought." Those who had been at the First Camp will recall the same experience. All pride, confidence and assurance seemed to depart. There were no exceptions. It was a week of real humiliation.

The state of mind was hard to describe. Probably it was much harder inside than even the outside impression. It might be compared to a man just about to hear the decision of a jury that is to acquit or convict him; a man waiting to hear what his beloved is going to say to his proposal, or the man who hesitates to open the business letter on his desk which will make or break him.

AN AIRPLANE VIEW OF THE WOODEN BARRACKS

The morning finally came when the candidates were slated to appear before the examining board. They didn't say much. Some sat on the edges of their bunks, others walked aimlessly around. The company humorist, with his teeth chattering, tried to pull something funny, but it sounded like a laugh at a funeral. They looked at each other and then fell to musing.

Then the sergeant, as nervous as the rest appeared, and with an air about as snappy as a conscientious objector on police duty, said "Fall in."

They fell in. It was the strangest company formation in the entire Camp. Like a winding snake it watched outside the door. Sometimes when we see some self-confident ex-officer striding down Michigan avenue we think of how he looked that morning as he approached the judgment place where sat Colonel Ryan, Major Stacey and his regimental battalion and company commanders.

The door opens. A name is called. What will it mean? Success or failure—a majority or nothing. The victim steps out—the center of staring eyes and burdened hearts. He starts for the door—tries to smile, but no smile will come.

He has planned every step in advance. He has dreamed about it all night—he approaches the mess hall where the board is sitting, stumbles on the step and almost falls headlong. His plans are gone—the Red Tape is cut into smithereens. The door opens and he finds himself inside.

What is he there for? Shall he salute? What will he do with his hands? Must he stand at attention or at ease? Should he smile and be natural or be stern and severe?

FATHER "WENT WEST" "OVER THERE"

"Your name," someone asks. He remembers that. Other questions follow equally simple. Are they asking him such easy ones because they think he doesn't know anything more? Then they ask him one which makes him stumble and he wishes they hadn't.

They don't seem to be listening to what he says anyway. They are glancing at his reports on that piece of paper. What is there on it? Have they located the time he dropped his gun or the time he gave the wrong command and spoiled the company formation? Has the company commander noted the period when he was discouraged and blue and didn't keep up the pace?

Now they are looking the candidate over. He is tall and thin; he wishes he was stocky and fat. He is stout and short. He wishes he was as thin as a bean pole. He is past forty. He wishes he was twenty-five. He is twenty-two. He wishes he was past forty. He is a college graduate and a lawyer—he wishes he was a mechanic or a miner. Just for a moment to be somebody else, the man they are looking for.

He is asked other questions. Then the board seems to be in a dispute. Someone is against him. He knew it all the time. They had it in for him because, etc. Then a crisp command—"That will do! You may go!" What will do? Why must he go? Go out of this room and let them talk about him behind his back. Not he. He almost forgets he is a soldier.

He looks at them. They are no longer interested. Another number and another name are before him. Twenty-three is on his way. He must do something. He is still a soldier. There is something a soldier does when he withdraws from his superior officer even when he is sore. Subconsciously he is sure of that. He hesitates, hoping it will come to him.

His head does not work, but his feet will. Suddenly they act. He opens the door, passes out into the open air. The cool breezes waken his soldier sense. HE HAS FORGOTTEN TO SALUTE! Now it is too late. What a tale. He has traveled these three months along the path of training and discipline to forget the simplest act of army discipline? He recognizes his comrades who, all in turn, go through the same experience.

The commissions were given out on Monday and with them an assignment to duty. Of course there were happy surprises and disappointments. Some three thousand new officers were made that day for the field forces of the Army.

One unfortunate rookie who had carelessly but freely shown his bunkies a nice pair of gold oak leaves for his majority, which he had bought at the beginning of the Camp was compelled to go out and buy the single gold bar of "the shave-tail" and he was lucky at that.

After the newly-commissioned officers had seen their assignments there was many changes of plan. More than 1,500 were ordered to immediate service overseas. Some to put into practice what they had begun to learn in the protected area of Fort Sheridan.

All was bustle and haste. Only time to buy equipment, to say good-bye to friends and to take the train back home before entering on the great adventure.

Assistant Treasurer Ft. Sheridan
Association

It was at this time the Fort Sheridan Association first showed its worth, as thousands of men reaped its benefits in decreased cost of equipment and loans amounting to more than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. There was a deep human tie in the Fort Sheridan Camp of friendship and mutual confidence out of which such an idea was born and made practical. It was with real hope of a perpetual friendship that these days were ended.

As the last man left the Camp behind him and moved toward his home and afterward toward the great test beyond, the real purpose of these camps became known and the final record was written—written in the service of thousands of leaders in camps and on far battlefields. Their spirit never faltered. Their courage and ability surpassed even our own faith in them. If we could only record what they had done this book would be complete. We can only introduce into this volume the pictures and final records of those who never came back.

The Test of Their Training Was the Strength and Spirit of Their Service—A Matchless, Deathless Record—of Some Among the Many Who Made the Supreme Sacrifice.

THE BATTLEFIELD OF SERGY

(Cabled by an Eye-witness)

The American Front! There's a meadow of memories today at Sergy. Back home Americans may remember the thrill they got when they read in their newspapers how husky American doughboys met the flower of the German Army—the picked Prussian Guard—and licked him in good American fashion. They may recall that Sergy changed hands nine times in the fighting that swayed back and forth over the town and the field. They may know now, as was stated then, that not a battlefield in all battle-torn France has seen more desperate conflict than this.

But today all is sunny and peaceful around Sergy. One must look beneath the fast-growing wheat and oats of the green hillside to see the countless evidences of the battle. Only it is a strange carpet and one that has not yet, in a month's time, had time to weave its greenery over bare graves, pitifully bare, under which repose heroic American dead and over which defiantly waves the Red, White and Blue for which they died in glory.

Below the meadow lies Sergy, the powdered ruin of a city, its houses tumbled in shaky cardboard shapes where American artillery and American machine gun fire—even American hands—pulled it down, but it is the ground above that thrills the most. Almost every square yard has its evidence of how Americans fought and died. Not a month's kindly sunshine and cooling rains, not even the Army of Reclamation that travels back of the Army of Occupation has yet effaced these marks of conflict.

The dead are gone, of course. Crosses rear above the grass. The sun slants on American identification discs tacked to the arms, showing where American dead sleep in the peace that knows no wars.

Back in a little clump of woods above the slope, American soldiers evidently prepared for battle. Still tucked in a splinter of sapling—cut down by a German shell—is a bit of trench mirror. Some husky American boy smoothed his hair by its reflection, perhaps shaved as he joyously prepared for battle.

Here it was also that these boys stripped for action. An overcoat lies dropped on the ground exactly as it was thrown from some pair of stalwart shoulders as they sturdily bore an American rifle forward toward Germany.

A shattered rifle butt tells another story.

In two or three hurriedly scooped out shelters, there are still blue-green German uniforms—their wearers killed or fled back as the Americans came victoriously on.

A perfect litter of letters, of shaving paste, of toothbrushes, of extra shoes, of broken belts, predominates everywhere as one walks onward and downward toward Sergy. They crunch under foot. They lie in heaps and mounds next to tiny little scoops in the ground where some American boys stooped close to get shelter from the deadly rain of steel and lead that swept into their faces. They line the rims of queer inverted cone-shaped holes in the ground that one knows from the churned-up soil, where shells from the German batteries landed.

Splinters of those same shells clanked with metallic sound with the empty cartridge shells. American "tin hats" are strewn around. Some are seared and torn, some are punctured in such fashion that one knows that if worn the head it covered must have been torn.

Further on down, thrice as much litter tells where the German line finally wavered and broke and swept back on Sergy. The gray-green overcoats, tunics, gas masks and even small tent flaps proclaim eloquently how hot must have been the fighting there and how hurriedly the Boche slipped down the hill in front of the Americans.

Here and there is an American uniform, not many, but they show how the two lines must have met and struggled back and forth.

Just back of this someone has mercifully ploughed under what must have been the greatest ruin and litter of all.

One comes almost to the village and looks back over the greening ground; silhouetted on the horizon a new forest has grown up. It is a forest of American graves and American crosses where the seeds of death sown in that inferno have blossomed their crop.

Close to the winding country road is one group just a little more pretentious than the rest.

One cross stands a little more proudly erect in its vigil over the sleeping legions. It broods over two smaller ones inclosed in a rudely constructed little fence. One goes closer. The largest cross bears on its sweeping arm, written in black pencil, the inscription "Lieutenant Lee N. Wall, St. Louis, Missouri" [18th Co. 2nd Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.]. And below, half-obliterated by the rain and weather are written the lines, "He met his God like a soldier." And below boldly, so that all may read: "Killed in action, July 31st, 1918." Atop the cross, tacked on, is the gold bar that the lieutenant once bore so gallantly on his shoulder.

The two graves on either side show he died beside two of his own dough-boys—an officer fighting side by side with his men.

One hesitates to push back a fast-coloring and slowly yellowing slip of cardboard that is tacked square on the grass where Lieutenant Wall lies; but one edge shows the face of a smilingly happy baby and the ink on the back of the photograph carried some inscription of love and cheer.

There is a memory in every inch of Sergy.

There will be memories ever proud in the hearts of mothers, sisters, fathers, brothers and friends of those who lie buried there.

There must be a reverent memory in the hearts of all Americans who may come later to know what Sergy meant.

A CITATION

For extraordinary heroism in action northeast of Chateau Thierry, France, 28th July, 1918, 1st Lieutenant Bernard Van't Hof, M. Co., 168th Infantry [4th Company, Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, September 2, 1918, with the following citation: "He directed his platoon so skillfully in the attack near Sergy, and conducted himself with such bravery and fearlessness, that his men captured six machine guns from the Prussian Guards and took twenty-five prisoners. The guns were then used with effect in driving the enemy from their positions."

The Adjutant General of the Army has been requested to present this cross to you.

By command of General Pershing.

HIS POSTHUMOUS LETTER TO HIS MOTHER

Mother:

If such a thing should happen that some Hun should beat me to it, I want my family should feel only proud that I was permitted to die for so just a cause and that you, my Mother and sisters were permitted to give your son and brother to this Cause.

Don't let anyone console you about your "poor son." I'm not your "poor son." I may not be so wealthy so far as earthly treasures go but have indeed been rich in being able to give what I have, and you have, to my country, and you may be sure that I went out like a man; with my face toward the foe, a smile on my lips and a prayer in my heart.

I'm only sorry for you, and that my Father couldn't have been proud of me too, in this.

BERNARD.

A CITATION

"Holliday, Harry A., First Lieutenant, 30th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Mezy, France, July 15, 1918. Although wounded during the enemy's barrage, Lieutenant Holliday remained in charge of his gun squad, protecting it from the flank with a pistol and hand grenades. He was again wounded by a hand grenade, but persisted in protecting the flank of the gun, though the enemy had advanced as close as the muzzle. After keeping his gun in action for ten hours, he organized a platoon of his gunners and stragglers and fought a retiring action for over a mile. He remained with his men until ordered to the hospital on account of his wounds. Home address, Dr. G. A. Holliday, Traverse City, Mich. [Second Camp, 11th Company, R. O. T. C. Late reports state that the Medal of Honor has been awarded.]

A CITATION

The Commanding General of the American Expeditionary Forces has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously to your husband, 1st Lieutenant Harry H. Marsh, 30th Infantry [18th Company, Second Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], for "extraordinary heroism in action near Cunel, France, October 14, 1918." Lieutenant Marsh with a force of fifty men took a line of trenches, at the same time capturing prisoners greatly in excess of the members of his own command. It was due to his gallant example that this feat was accomplished. He was killed by machine gun fire as the trench was taken.

The Quartermaster General of the Army has been directed to cause the Distinguished Service Cross to be forwarded to you.

A CITATION

General Michael J. Lenihan, Headquarters of the 77th Division in France, recorded in the following general orders of the Division, a tribute to the valorous conduct of the following officer who has distinguished himself by his splendid courage, service and sacrifice, the citation reads:

"Lieut. Frank Talbot Montgomery, 305th Infantry [3rd Company, 1st Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.] (deceased), did on Oct. 3rd, 1918, in the Bois de la Naza, Argonne Forest, proceed under the command of one other officer with a detachment of the 305th Infantry, Machine Gun Co., into an exposed position in order to beat down enemy fire and thus facilitate the infantry's advance; the commander of the detachment was killed by enemy shell fire, and at the same time Lieut. Montgomery was mortally wounded. Yet, he took command and refused to be evacuated until he had given orders for the carrying out of the mission; in so doing, he not only set a fine example for his men, but also displayed exceptional devotion to duty."

A CITATION

The Commander-in-Chief has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously to 1st Lieut. Isaac V. Goltra, Co. D, 23rd Infantry, 2nd Division [2nd Co., First Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], for "extraordinary heroism in action in the Chateau Thierry section, France, June 6 and 7, 1918. Lieut. Goltra exhibited exceptional self-sacrifice and courage in the face of heavy machine gun fire, promptly taking command of his platoon when its leader was killed and fearlessly leading its advance. The second day of the attack he was killed while directing his platoon through a heavy German barrage."

A CITATION AND A MOTHER'S TRIBUTE

The Commander-in-Chief has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously to Lieutenant Paul Waples Derrickson, 28th Infantry [22nd Company, Second Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], for extraordinary heroism in action at Cantigny, France, 28th May, 1918. "He courageously went forward with his platoon and reached the position he had been ordered to take. Fearlessly walking up and down his line, he cheered and directed the work of his men until he was killed."

A MOTHER'S TRIBUTE TO HER DISTINGUISHED SON, PAUL DERRICKSON

"Dear Sir:—

"Your kind sympathy so much appreciated. I have tried so often to write you but sometimes I must say it is impossible.

"I have received so many letters from his college presidents, his professors, his employers covering his work from the age of fifteen. It has been so comforting to me to know that other people always appreciated him. I want to tell you a few things about my boy so that you will know him better too.

"From his boyhood he was always so fond of me, and used to say he was going to be a great man some day, so at the age of fifteen he finished grammar school and went to New York. There he stayed for two years working during the day for one firm from 7 a. m. until 6 p. m.—for another from 8 p. m. to 12 p. m. and on Sundays for another.

Then he came home and worked two years more. By that time he went to the academy, working always at some extra task. Later he entered Dwight working at night as advertising agent for the New York Times. The next fall he entered Washington and Lee University. There he was manager of the college paper, also the Student Hotel for a while until he found he could not stand it all.

He worked all vacation until he graduated at law, then went to Chicago and worked in the Executive Department of Sears, Roebuck & Co. At night he attended Kent Law School.

"To the best of my knowledge he has not taken three weeks' vacation since he was twelve years of age and I have not bought him a suit of clothes since then or given him a dollar. Now, that was not because he had to, that was the unusual part of the boy, but because he was so responsible, so independent and he was always helping others.

"His father died in 1913 just as he was entering college. Of course after that I could not help him, but before I could if he would let me. His friends who knew him best have told me since, he had done work enough for any man at the age of fifty.

"He had just attained the place where it was not so hard for him to go forward and enjoy some ease when Uncle Sam called. He asked for the privilege of being the first to register in his district and was granted it.

"It was so hard for me to let him go, as his brother was already a member of the National Guard, 4th Virginia. I felt that if one went that I should have one left at home to take care of his sister and me. But when I would argue, he would say, 'Mamma, you did not raise slackers. I can do more really fighting for you than I can staying back.'

"Then I would say, 'Son, why will you and your brother go to the slaughter pen as I see the infantry?' He would say, 'Mother our physical examinations are perfect.' Then he went to the Fort Sheridan Officers Training Camp. A year ago yesterday he wired me these words: 'Mamma, my happiest Thanksgiving I made my commission.'

"From then until Christmas he traveled for Uncle Sam downing German propaganda, arriving home Christmas day. He gave all of his time after the camp to the government except the brief stay for the holidays.

"On the eleventh of January, he and I went to New York City to report for overseas. He sailed January 20, 1918. All his letters were so cheerful, begging me not to worry, he was coming back so much better than he went over. That was his plan, but God willed it otherwise. He sent a letter to his brother-in-law for me written May 15th to be opened in case the enemy knocked him out for good, and in that letter as all others, he still planned for me as if he was going on a long journey. And his last message was 'Au revoir till we meet again.'"

LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT ADRIAN C. EDWARDS, CARROLLTON, ILL. [22nd Company, Second Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], TO HIS MOTHER—READ BEFORE CONGRESS

"Somewhere-in-France, June 12, 1918.

"My dear Mother: I am about to go into battle and have instructed the company clerk to send you this letter in case I become a casualty, hence the receipt of this letter by you will indicate that I am either with God or a prisoner in the hands of the enemy. Since I will never become a prisoner of the Huns, if I remain conscious and able to fight, it is doubtful if I will ever be an inmate of a German prison camp.

"Do not grieve that I am among the missing, but rather rejoice that you have given a son in sacrifice to make the greatest military caste of all times lay down the sword, to save civilization, to prevent future wars, to punish the Huns—who have disregarded every law of God and mankind, whose only god is the god of war and military force—and to make the world safe for democracy. I desire that you view the matter in the light and spirit of the Spartan mothers of old, who, when their sons went forth to battle for freedom and their native land, said to their sons: 'Either come home proudly bearing your shield before you or upon it.'

"War was absolutely necessary on the part of my country, and, although I was 34 years old and nobody expected me to go, yet some one had to go; some one must make the sacrifice; some mother must lose her son.

"In the light of these facts, and knowing our country's great need, I volunteered and have never for one moment regretted my decision, and I will not, although my life and the useful career must end. Life is not the highest boon of existence. There are ideals that are superhuman, interests greater than life itself, for which it is worth while fighting, suffering and dying.

"If possible, after the war, I would like for my remains to be brought to America and interred at White Hall. I have provided well for your support, as I have a $10,000 insurance policy with the Government and several thousand with the old-line companies. My friend, Thompson, and Jess have these policies and other valuable papers.

"Good-bye, mother; I will see you in the next world. You may know that I died fighting for you, my country, and all that life holds dear.

"Your son, ADRIAN."

A CITATION

Theodore Hoyer [9th Company, Second Fort Sheridan R. O. T. C.], serving with the famous Second Division in the Chateau Thierry Drive, who had been through the hard fighting of many days, writes to his wife on the Fourth of July, 1918, as follows:

"On the Fourth of July I was in the front line. A number of men from each company were sent to Paris to represent the division. On returning, these men told me that the orators in the various banquet halls all referred to our Division as the 'glorious regiments which saved Paris.' Nothing in Paris was too good for these boys. Naturally, we are quite proud now. While Paris was celebrating the Fourth, we were being mercilessly shelled in our position. A feeling of great exhilaration went through my whole being when I thought that I, poor little 'IQ,' should be on the line doing my little bit, but yet my best bit, in holding the line, so that the people back there in Paris might enjoy the Fourth. It shall always be the greatest Fourth of July in my experience. Many men were decorated by General Pershing for special bravery, and they deserve the honor. As for me, it took all my physical energy and moral stamina to carry out my orders. Don't expect any hero stunts from me. A few who want to be especially heroic come out alive, but most of them die. This is no war for grandstand plays. Hard, earnest work and saving of your own men's lives, if you can do so and still carry out orders, is my policy. If orders come to gain an objective which cannot be got except through a specially difficult and heroic effort, why then, of course, we shall not fail to play our part; you can trust us for that. But I have never believed in having your men slaughtered uselessly. This is a Hun idea, not an American. As it is, I have lost more men than I care to tell about."

Shortly afterward, Lieutenant Hoyer was killed.

Here is the letter which his Commanding Officer wrote, concerning the manner of his death:

On July 18th your husband, who was an officer in my company, attacked the Germans along with the rest of us, at a point just about southwest of Soissons. I saw him just as the company started out. He was at the head of his platoon, and strolling along as though out for a pleasure walk. After the battle I learned from his men that he was calm and cool during the whole attack; and that his actions and his manner of unconcern for the bullets that were flying about gave them great confidence and courage.

"Lieutenant Hoyer carried his platoon through to the objective and then ordered the men to 'dig in' and get under cover. While they were doing this he noticed several wounded men, lying in the open, exposed to machine gun fire and snipers' bullets. He called for volunteers to go with him to bring in the wounded and, with two non-commissioned officers, he went out and carried back three of the wounded. He started on his second trip, but just as he passed a stone wall several rifles opened fire on the party and your husband, who was in the lead, fell forward on his face. The rifle fire was getting very close to them, so the other men had to leave Lieutenant Hoyer and get under fire.

"I was your husband's company commander and I thought a great deal of him, as a soldier and as a gentleman—all of the men were very fond of him, too."

Here is a strange aftermath of the War—a type of heroism which happens not merely at the front, but wherever real men face a great emergency.

Among the many instructors at the First Fort Sheridan Camp was a Captain of Artillery named Harold Hubert Bateman. He was 28 years old when the war started. He had been in the army since 1909, served two years in the Philippines, was in the Mexican Expeditionary Forces, and had been instructor at Fort Sheridan and Plattsburg. During the war he commanded the 16th Field Artillery of the Fourth Division, in the Chateau Thierry, Marne, St. Mihiel and Argonne-Meuse offensives, where he made a name for himself, both as to his ability and his courage. He typified all that was best in the Regular Army officer; a very quiet, simple man, thoroughly interested in his work, efficient in his knowledge of artillery operations and wonderfully interested in the care of the men who served under him. He was the kind of a man that would be followed blindly by his men, not merely because he was courageous, but because he had a real gift in showing his consideration for them. He knew that the power to command was not an arbitrary one, but that it grew out of the mutual relationship of dependency between officers and men.

After returning from his services abroad, Colonel Bateman was stationed at Fort Sill, Okla. Late on July 4, 1919, Private Joe Bukoby, of the 14th Field Artillery, was riding along the bank near Medicine Creek. Colonel Bateman had been fishing nearby and saw Private Bukoby thrown from his horse in a deep and dangerous water. As the man was unable to swim, Colonel Bateman rushed to his assistance and swam out to him. The soldier grabbed hold of Colonel Bateman in such a way as to prevent him from giving any material assistance. The Colonel could have broken the hold and left the man to his fate, but he refused to do this. He tried his best to struggle with the soldier and to bring him back in safety to the bank, but both sank. They rose to the surface and Captain LeGette, who had been nearby, rushed in and tried to help him, but all three went down. Captain LeGette, however, was able to save himself, and the Colonel of the regiment and the private in the ranks, with their arms about each other, lay down in Hoyl's Hole in Medicine Creek. Colonel Bateman leaves a wife and a little girl. It is not in vain that a Lieutenant Colonel, commanding a regiment, should offer up the supreme sacrifice for an enlisted man that happened not to be even a member of his own command.

A LETTER

In closing, just a word from the bravest of the brave—a wife and three little girls who gave their best with as brave a heart as the strongest who went over the top:

"I wish I were able to tell you how much your kind letter meant to me at the time when there was such a great big ache in our hearts, but words seem to fail, and I can only say to you, and to Mr. Moseley's [Captain Arthur Eames Moseley, 23rd Company, Second R. O. T. C.] Brother Officers, 'Thank you,' not only for your kind expressions of sympathy, but for your interest in us. We have three little girls: Lily, aged twelve; Frances, ten, and Olive, nine. Lily is in the seventh grade; Frances in the sixth, and Olive in the fourth.

"They have been very brave and a great comfort to me. They said, while their eyes were filled with tears, 'Mother, dear, you know Daddy died just like he would have chosen to die, right in the front line, leading his men, and we are just going to help you do all we can, until victory is won.'

"Of course, we get dreadfully lonely sometimes, but there is only joy in our hearts that we were able to give our very best for the cause of freedom. His sacrifice and ours was made willingly, and we are trusting daily for strength for every need, and our Heavenly Father is not failing us."

“To such lives there is no end”
