PREFACE

THE essential characteristics of a first reader are the same as those of a good primer, — vitally interesting subject-matter, an effective system, and an attractiveness in the book itself that will arrest the child's attention and hold his interest.

Subject-matter. — The stories used in this book all deal with things that have been found to be intensely interesting to children; and they are told in language and in a style pleasing to children. Another feature of the material is its wide variety. As a result appeal is made to the widely differing temperaments among children, as well as to their various moods. The serious, the humorous, the pathetic, the real, the imaginative, the moral, — all find a place. In other words, the stories make a many-sided appeal to the child; and, consequently, lead to symmetrical mental development.

Method. — The method of teaching reading that underlies this book does not lay principal stress on the learning of a vocabulary, — a task which at best is irksome to the average child. The plan followed is simple, interesting, and extremely effective. The child is told the story by his teacher; he is led to talk about it, to tell it and retell it, till it becomes thoroughly his own, till he uses all the words freely and naturally in conversation. As soon as he has learned to tell the story fluently, he undertakes to read it, and the undertaking is a comparatively easy matter. The stories in the book are divided into natural units, so that it is an easy matter to take each lesson as a story in itself; while the several units, taken together, form a kind of serial story, which continually leads the child's interest forward. Finally, the child learns to write about the story he has read.

Illustrations.—The pictures in the book are an essential part of the method. Their attractiveness, of course, adds to their value. In the study of the story before the class undertakes to read at all, the pictures form the basis of interesting conversational exercises, which both develop the child's power of observation and make free use of his imagination. All of this tends toward naturalness and force of expression.

Vocabulary.—The number of new words used in this book is intentionally somewhat smaller than that of most first readers. Time is given the pupil to master what he uses, and to practice word building by means of rhyme-families. Many of the words in the stories are studied first in the lists of rhymes. The vocabulary is so arranged at the end of the book that the teacher can use it to test pupils on their knowledge of each day's lesson.

All the verse selections in the book should be memorized by the pupils.

The cat and the mouse
Played in the malt-house.

The cat bit off the tail of the mouse.
“Cat, cat, give me my tail,” said
the mouse.

“No,” said the cat, “I will not give you your tail till you go to the cow and bring me some milk.”

Till she came to the cow and thus

“Pray, cow, give me some milk,
That I may give the cat milk,
That the cat may give me my own

“No,” said the cow, “I will give you no milk till you go to the farmer and

First she leaped and then she ran,
Till she came to the farmer and thus
began :

“Pray, farmer, give me some hay,
That I may give the cow hay,
That the cow may give me milk,
That I may give the cat milk,
That the cat may give me my own

“No,” said the farmer, “I’ll not give you any hay till you go to the butcher and bring me some meat.”

First she leaped and then she ran,
Till she came to the butcher and thus
began :

“ Pray, butcher, give me some meat,
That I may give the farmer meat,
That the farmer may give me hay,
That I may give the cow hay,
That the cow may give me milk,
That I may give the cat milk,
That the cat may give me my own tail

“ No,” said the butcher, “ I’ll give you no meat till you go to the baker and bring me some bread.”

“Yes,” said the baker, “I’ll give you some bread, if you will guard my flour.”

“I will guard your flour,” she said.

Then the baker gave mouse some bread, and mouse gave bread to the butcher.

Then the butcher gave mouse some meat, and mouse gave meat to the farmer.

Then the farmer gave mouse some hay, and mouse gave hay to the cow.

Then the cow gave mouse some milk, and mouse gave milk to the cat, and the cat gave the mouse her own tail again.

Put words in the blank places.

1. The cat played with the

6. The mouse ran to the
_____.
7. Then she ran to the _____
for bread.

Write a story for each question.

1. What did the cat do?
2. Why did the mouse go to the farmer?
3. Why did the mouse go to the baker?
4. Did the mouse eat flour?
5. What did the mouse do with the bread?
6. What did the mouse give to the farmer?
7. What did the farmer give to the mouse?
8. Who gave the mouse her own tail again?

An old woman was sweeping her house, and she found a little sixpence.

“What,” said she, “shall I do with this little sixpence?”

“I will go to market and buy a little pig.”

As she was coming home, she came to a stile, but the pig would not go over the stile.

An old woman bought a pig.
The pig would not get over a stile.
Then the old woman went to a stick.
The stick would not beat the pig.
The fire would not burn the stick.

She went a little farther, and she met some water. So she said:

“Water, water, put out fire;

But the ox said to her, “If you will go to yonder haystack and bring me a handful of hay, I will drink the water.”

Away went the old woman to the haystack, and came back, bringing a handful of hay.

When he had eaten the hay,
The ox began to drink the water;
The water began to put out the fire;
The fire began to burn the stick;
The stick began to beat the dog;
The dog began to bite the pig;
And the pig jumped over the stile.

And so the old woman got home that night.

Come and sing a song to me.

For I am building me a nest.

The rats and mice that lived in the mill

Came out one night to eat their fill.

They ate, and ate! how full they felt!

And every one let out his belt.

A little mill stood in a field.

In the mill lived some rats and mice.

One night they came out and ate and ate.

Every mouse had to let out his belt.

Then one old rat said to another:
“Come, let us have some fun, my brother.

Let’s go and slide down yonder hill,
And then come back to our dear

So rats and mice all left the mill
To take a slide adown the hill.
The hill was long, and smooth the

They slid so far they never got back.

THE WOMAN AND HER BEAUTIFUL
BUSH OF BERRIES

A woman had a beautiful bush of berries, and she wanted to pick them.

She could not do that unless she had some one to keep her house.

She went to a kid and said, “Kid, kid, come and keep my house till I pick my beautiful bush of berries.”

“Indeed, no,” said the kid, “I’ll not keep your house till you pick your beautiful bush of berries.”

Then the woman went to a dog and said :

“ Dog, dog, bite kid ;

Kid will not keep my house till I pick my beautiful bush of berries.”

“ Indeed,” said the dog, “ I’ll not bite the kid, for the kid never did me any harm.”

A woman had a bush of berries.

She wanted to pick the berries.

There was no one to keep the house.

Then the woman went to a stick.
“Stick, stick, beat dog,” she said;
“Dog will not bite kid;
And kid will not keep my house till I
pick my beautiful bush of berries.”
“Indeed,” said the stick, “I’ll not beat the dog, for the dog never did me any harm.”

See the little kids.
They will not keep the house.
The dog will not bite the little kids.
They never did the dog any harm.

Then the woman went to a fire.
“Fire, fire, burn stick,” she said;
“Stick will not beat dog;
Dog will not bite kid;
And kid will not keep my house till I
pick my beautiful bush of berries.”

“Indeed,” said the fire, “I’ll not burn the stick, for the stick never did me any harm.”

This is a little kid.
He will not keep the woman’s house.
He wants to run and play in the fields.

Will the fire burn the kid ?

Then the woman
went to some water
and said:

“Water, water,

Good-morrow, little rose-bush!

I pray thee, tell me true,
To be as sweet as a red, red rose,
What must a body do?

To be as sweet as a red, red rose,
A little girl like you
Just grows and grows and grows,
And that's what she must do.

A frog he would a-woeing go,
Whether his mother would let him or no.

So off he went with his opera hat,
And on the way he met with a rat.

See the frog in his opera hat.

He is going a-woeing.

Do you see a rat?

No, the frog met a rat on the way.

And when they came to Mouse's Hall,
They gave a loud knock, and they gave a loud call.

“Pray, Mrs. Mouse, are you within?”

“Yes, kind sir, I am sitting to spin.”

The frog and the rat went to see
Mrs. Mouse.

They found Mrs. Mouse sitting down to spin.

“Pray, Mrs. Mouse, will you let us dine here?

For Froggy and I are fond of good cheer.”

Now as they were making a merry
din,

The cat and her kittens came tumbling in.

The cat she caught the rat by the crown,
The kittens they pulled the little mouse down.

This put poor frog in a terrible fright,
So he took up his hat and wished them good night.

WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?

What does little birdie say
In her nest at peep of day?
“Let me fly,” says little birdie,
“Mother, let me fly away.”

“Birdie, rest a little longer,
Till the little wings are stronger.”
So she rests a little longer,
Then she flies away.

What does little baby say
In her bed at peep of day?
Baby says, like little birdie,
“Mother, let me fly away!”

“Baby, sleep a little longer,
Till the little limbs are stronger.”
If she sleeps a little longer,
Baby, too, may fly away.

—ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.

Jack Bunny was a little rabbit. He sometimes did not do as his mother told him.

One day Mrs. Bunny, Jack's mother, went out to call. She told Jack not to go away from home.

Jack stayed by the house till his mother was out of sight. Then he said: "What shall I do? I know. I'll go over into Mr. White's garden."

Jack knew that he had no business to be there.

He looked behind him now and then.

He did not see any one ; so he ate his fill.

Then he said, "I will climb up on this shed and take a look."

He was almost up, when something gave way. Poor Jack fell into an old net.

He got so tangled up that he could not get away.

"Oh, I am caught!" he cried. What would become of him? He did not know. He began to cry.

"What shall I do?" he said.

Mrs. Mouse heard him and ran out.

“What is it?” she said, when she saw Jack. “Oh, I see you are tangled up in the net. You have no business here, but I will help you this time.”

She began to gnaw, and soon had set Jack free.

“Now, do not get into trouble again, Jack Bunny,” she said. “Do as your mother tells you.”

Jack ran out of the garden. But there he met a dog and had to turn back.

Now he caught sight of Mr. White.

What could he do to get away? He did not know.

He saw a box and ran for it. He got into it and lay there till it was night.

Then he stole out and ran home. But his mother would not give him anything to eat that night.

One day a lion lay down to rest under a great tree.

As he lay sleeping, a family of mice ran over his back and waked him.

When he came near, he tried to quiet the lion.

“Be quiet,” the little creature said. “I am a friend, and will free you.”

Then the mouse began to gnaw, and soon the lion was free.

The lion was very humble now.

I SAW A SHIP A-SAILING

I saw a ship a-sailing,
A-sailing on the sea.
It was full of pretty things
For baby and for me.

There were comfits in the cabin,
And apples in the hold ;
The sails were all of velvet,
And the masts of beaten
gold.

The four-and-twenty sailors
That stood between the decks,
Were four-and-twenty white mice,
With chains about their necks.

The captain was a duck,
With a packet on his back.
When the ship began to move,

Once, a very long time ago, birds did not know how to build their nests.

“I wonder where we can learn how to build good nests,” said the robin.

“I cannot tell,” said the wren.

“We will ask all the other birds,” the robin said, “some one may know.”

So the wren and the robin asked all the other birds. But not one of them knew how to make a good nest.

“What are we to do?” asked the robin at last. “If we lay our eggs in the weeds, they will be stepped on. If we lay them in the trees, they will roll out.”

Just then some little fairies appeared near the birds.

The birds were frightened at first, and some of them were about to fly away.

“Do not be frightened,” said the queen of the fairies; “we are only little fairies. We do no harm, but like to do good. Can we do anything for you?”

“Can you teach us how to build a nest?” asked the wren.

“No,” answered the queen of the fairies; “but I know who can. Isn’t the magpie here?”

All the birds looked about for the magpie, but she was not there.

“I know where she is,” said the fairy. “She is sitting on her nest now. Come with me, and I will take you to her.”

“How far is it,” asked the cow-bird of one of the fairies.

“It is a long way from here,” answered the little fairy.

“I think I will not go,” said the cow-bird. “I am tired. I will ask the other birds when they come back.”

But the other birds did not come back. As soon as they learned how to build a nest, they flew away and went to work at once.

The cow-bird has never learned how to make a nest. It lays its eggs in the nests of other birds, when they are away from home.

So the cow-bird never has any babies. Its little ones are brought up by other birds.

THE MAGPIE'S LESSON

An old story says that the fairies showed the birds the way to Mrs. Magpie's home.

Then all at once the fairies were gone.

"What do you wish?" asked Mrs. Magpie.

"Will you please teach us how to build nests like yours?" said the robin.

"Oh, yes," answered the magpie. "I will show you how to do it."

They all came close to the magpie to see what she did.

“Just watch what I do,” she said.

She first took some mud. This she made into a round cake.

“Oh!” cried the thrush, “I see how the nest is built. You make a cake of mud, and pat it down in the middle.”

She flew away. And that is the way the thrush builds her nest to-day.

The magpie next took some twigs and laid them around the cake of mud.

“Oh!” cried the blackbird, “I know how the nest is built now.”

Away she flew to the trees by the river. And that is the way the black-birds build their nests to this very day.

Then the magpie put some mud on the twigs and smoothed it a little.

“I see,” said the owl, “I know how to build a nest.”

He flew away to a great oak tree, and built a nest like that. And that is the only way an owl knows to build his nest.

The magpie next took some long, slender twigs, and twined them around the outside.

“I know now how to build a nest,” cried the song sparrow.

Away he flew. Sparrows still twine twigs to make their nests.

After this, the magpie took some feathers and fine moss. With these she lined the nest, making it very soft and warm.

“I know now,” said the starling. “I will make a nest like that.”

Off he flew to make a nest for himself. Starlings still line their nests with feathers and moss.

The magpie kept on working. But soon all the birds had gone. They all thought they knew how to build nests like the magpie's.

At last the magpie looked up from her work. Not a bird was to be seen.

“That is the last lesson I shall ever give,” said the magpie to herself.

She flew away to her own nest. And never from that day to this has she told another bird how to build a nest.

A lion and a bear went out to look for something to eat one day.

They found nothing but a hen. It was too little for both the lion and the bear. Each wished to have all of it.

“I should have it,” said the bear, “because I saw it first.”

“I should have it,” said the lion, “because I caught it.”

because some thing wished nothing

The bear was angry and began to growl. The lion was angry, too, and began to roar.

Then the bear put his paw on the hen as if to take it. At this the angry lion slapped the bear. Then they began to fight.

They fought and fought, till neither the lion nor the bear could stand up.

The bear lay down under one tree, and the lion lay down under another. They could neither fight nor eat now.

While they were resting, a fox came along. He saw the hen on the ground.

“What fine friends you are!” he said. “If it had not been for you, I should have had to go hungry. You are the kind of friends to have.”

At this the fox took the hen and went away with it. The bear and the lion watched the fox, as he went off with the hen, but could not move.

“How silly we have been!” they both thought. But they did not say a word, and they have never said anything about it since.

Billy's real name is Opossum, but many people call him Billy Possum for short.

One day Billy was taking a walk with Jim Coon, his friend. It was a beautiful day, and the two friends were having a good time.

"O Jim!" cried Billy, "just see that fine peach tree over in the field! What a fine feast we shall have."

They started for the tree.

All at once they heard the bark of a dog. They both stopped and looked around.

“What are you going to do, Jim, my friend, if the dog comes this way?” asked Billy.

“I shall teach him something that he does not know,” replied Jim Coon. “What will you do, Billy?”

“I shall stand by you,” said Billy.

Just then the dog came into sight. He ran straight for Billy Possum.

Billy fell over and lay quite still.

Then Mr. Dog turned to the coon. But Jim Coon knew how to fight, and Mr. Dog got away as soon as he could.

He didn't even stop long enough to look around. Jim Coon ran after him.

Billy Possum lay very still, just as if he were dead. But after a while he got up and looked around.

He saw no one about; so he went home as fast as he could.

On the way he met Jim Coon. Jim Coon held his head high and would not speak to Billy.

“What is the matter, Jim?” said Billy.

“I don’t speak to cowards,” replied Jim, and started on.

“Why, Jim,” said Billy, “did you think I was afraid? No, Jim, Billy Possum was not afraid. But I can’t stand tickling. My father was like that, and his father was like that, too.”

“That is a fine story,” said Jim.

“Well, it is the truth, Jim. Nobody in my family could stand tickling.”

Jim did not say a word.

“And that dog just ran his nose against my ribs. I could not stand it, and just fell over to catch my breath.”

“Well, I see you caught it, Billy,” said Jim.

“Yes, I caught it, but it took me a long time.”

This happened a long time ago.
But to this day Billy Possum cannot stand tickling.

If anybody touches him, he falls
over and seems to lose his breath.
He never catches it again till all danger is over. Then he steals away.

Write a short story for each question.

1. What is Billy's real name?
2. Who was taking a walk with Billy?
3. What did they see in the field?
4. What did the dog do to Billy?
5. What did Jim Coon do?
6. Why would Jim not speak to Billy?
7. What did Billy tell Jim?

PUSSY WILLOW

Once a little gray kitten ran away from her mother. It was a bright day in spring, and the kitten wandered far away from home.

At last the kitten became hungry. Then she wished to go home, but could not find the way. She was lost and did not know where to go.

The little kitten wandered about all day. She only got farther and farther from home.

She had come to a stream. She was very tired and hungry now. She was greatly frightened, too. It was getting dark. So she sat down and began to cry.

It happened that the kitten sat down near some willows, which a fairy loved.

One of the willows heard the kitten cry, and was sorry. She bent close over as if to love the kitten.

“Do not be afraid,” said the willow; “I will keep you safe. Oh, how soft and warm your fur is!”

“Can’t you take me home to my mother?” asked the kitten.

“No,” said the kind willow, “I can’t do that. I always have to stay right here at home. I can never go away.”

“I wish I had never gone from home,” said the kitten. Then she began to cry again.

“Do not cry any more,” said the willow. “I will bend over you and keep you safe all night. I like you very much. Now lie down and sleep.”

The kitten soon fell asleep and dreamed of her own dear mother. The willow bent closer and closer. She liked to touch the soft fur.

“I wish I had soft fur like that,” she sighed.

Just then the fairy that loved the willow appeared. She heard what the willow said.

“What would you do in the summer, when it is so warm?” asked the fairy. “You would not like the fur then.”

“But I should like it in the spring,” answered the willow. “It would be very soft and warm. Besides, it would make people love me. But, dear fairy, take the poor little kitten home to its mother.”

“Well, you are a kind willow,” said the fairy, “and I will give you what you wish. You shall have fur every spring, and all people shall love you. Good night, Pussy Willow.”

Next morning the little kitten awoke in her own little bed. And the willow found herself covered with little soft balls of fur. The willow has catkins every spring. And people love her and call her Pussy Willow.

One day Rob wished to go fishing.

Rob's mother did not like to have him go alone. But Rob begged to go.

"You may go for a little while," his mother said at last; "but don't get on the logs in the pond."

Rob promised. He took his pole and ran all the way to the pond.

m ay w ay t ook h ook

He fished a long time, but caught nothing. He wanted to catch at least one fish. So he stayed and stayed.

Then he tried another place. He thought that the fishes might be under the logs. So he threw his line out near them.

“There!” he said, “I have a bite now.”

He pulled up his line quickly. There was nothing on the hook. He threw it back again. Again there was a pull on the line. He pulled up the line once more.

This time the hook caught on one of the logs. Without thinking what he had promised his mother, Rob climbed out on the log to free his hook.

As he bent over, the log began to roll, and Rob fell into the pond.

Rob was sorry that he had not kept his promise. He thought of that the first thing when he fell into the water. He crawled out on to the bank and sat down for his clothes to dry.

“I will fish while they are drying,” he said. “Maybe I can catch one yet.”

At last he did catch one fish, but it was not big enough to eat. Rob threw it back.

“What will Mamma say?” he thought, as he sat on the bank waiting. “My clothes are dry; but how they look! Well, I will go home and tell just how it happened. If Mamma had only been a boy, she would understand.”

Rob pulled up his line. There was a large fish on the hook. He took it and ran as fast as he could.

He went to his mother and told her everything. She understood, even if she were not a boy, and cooked the fish for Rob's supper.

Write a short story for each question.

1. What did Rob wish to do?
2. Why did Rob wait so long at the pond?
3. Where did Rob throw his line at last?
4. On what did the line catch?
5. What happened to Rob? .
6. What kind of fish did Rob catch at last?
7. What did Rob tell his mother?
8. Did Rob's mother understand?

BOATS SAIL ON THE RIVERS

Boats sail on the rivers,
And ships sail on the seas;
But clouds that sail across the sky
Are prettier than these.

There are bridges on the rivers,
As pretty as you please;
But the bow that bridges heaven
And overtops the trees,
And builds a road from earth to sky,
Is prettier far than these.

A HAMMOCK SONG

Swing high, swing low,
Swing to and fro!
Up to the moon
Shall the baby go.

Up to the moon
So big and round,
Then shall the baby
Touch the ground.

Swing high, swing low,
Swing to and fro!
And steal the moon
For the baby-o!

THE GIANT MAIDEN

Once very, very long ago, there lived a race of giants. They were as tall as the hills. To them the world was very small.

When these giants went out to walk, they stepped from hill to hill. They never went down into the valleys.

The king of the giants was a great and a good man. He was good to his people and to his children. One of his children was a beautiful girl. Soon she would be a woman. But she still loved playthings. Only her playthings were so very large.

One day the maiden went out for a walk. It was a beautiful day, and she walked a long way, even for a giant's daughter.

The maiden stepped over valley after valley, from hill to hill, till she was far from home. She had never gone so far.

At last, she stopped and looked down into the valley before her. There she saw a man plowing with horses. She had never seen anything like that.

How nice the little creature was!

And how nice the little creatures were that drew the plow! And the plow, she liked that, too.

“What beautiful playthings they would make!” she said; “I must have them.” So she picked up the man, the horses, and the plow, and put them into her apron. Then she went home as fast as she could.

“See what nice playthings I have found!” she called to her father, the king.

“My child,” said the king, “these are no playthings. You must take them back where you found them. You must never touch them again. This is a man, and he has a wife and a daughter. They will be very sad if he does not come back to them.”

“By and by,” he went on, “the world will be owned by little creatures like this man, and we shall be no more.”

The giant maiden was very sad. She did not want to give up her playthings. But she had a good heart, and she loved her father. She always did as he said. So she put the man, the plow, and the horses into her apron again, and took them back.

The man was very happy when the maiden set him down. He went to plowing at once.

The maiden looked on for a time. It made her glad to see the man happy. Then she was not sorry that she had brought them back.

THE LITTLE PLANT

In the heart of a seed
Buried deep, so deep,
A dear little plant
Lay fast asleep.

“Wake!” said the sunshine,
“And creep to the light.”
“Wake!” said the voice
Of the raindrops bright.

The little plant heard,
And it rose to see
What the wonderful
Outside world might be.

Sleep, baby, sleep!
Thy father watches his sheep;
Thy mother is shaking the dreamland tree,
And down comes a little dream on thee.

Sleep, baby, sleep!

Sleep, baby, sleep!
The large stars are the sheep;
The little stars are the lambs, I guess;
The gentle moon is the shepherdess.

Sleep, baby, sleep!

WHERE GO

Dark brown is the river,
Golden is the sand.
It flows along for ever,
With trees on either hand.

Green leaves a-floating,
Castles of the foam,
Boats of mine a-boating —
Where will all come home ?

THE BOATS?

On goes the river
And out past the mill,
Away down the valley,
Away down the hill.

Away down the river,
A hundred miles or more,
Other little children
Shall bring my boats ashore.

THE SUN IS GONE DOWN

The sun is gone down,
And the moon's in the sky;
But the sun will come up,
And the moon be laid by.

The flower is asleep,
But it is not dead;
When the morning shines
It will lift its head.

When the winter comes
It will die — no, no;
It will only hide
From the frost and snow.

Sure is the summer,
Sure is the sun;
The night and the winter
Away they run.
