History of the New York Times

1851-1921

Cornell University Library

Ithaca, New York

FROM

New York Times

Cornell University Library PN 4899.N56T582

History of the New York times, 1851–1921

3 1924 027 500 069

alia

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

adometro

History

nf

The New York Times

1851-1921

By ELMER DAVIS

Of The New York Times Editorial Staff

ILLUSTRATED

NEW YORK

The New York Times

1921

ME

A503017 PN 4899 N56T582

CONTENTS

Inte	roduction vi	i
	PART I CHAP
I		3
H	Civil War and Reconstruction, 1860-1869 41	3
Ш	The Times and the Tweed Ring 81	E
	National Politics, 1872-1884 117	7
V	The Times in Transition, 1884-1896 155	5
	PART II
I	Restoration of The Times, 1896-1900 175	5
II	Conservatism, Independence, Democracy:
	1900-1914 24	3
ш	1900-1914
III IV		3
	Modern News-gathering, 1900-1914 27. Some Aspects of Business Policy 310	3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900-1914 277 Some Aspects of Business Policy 310	3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900-1914 27. Some Aspects of Business Policy 310 The Times in the War, 1914-1918 33. The Times Today	3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900–1914	3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900–1914	3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900–1914	3 0 1 0 2 3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900–1914	3 0 1 0 2 3
IV V	Modern News-gathering, 1900–1914	3 0 1 0 2 3 5

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

Adolph S. Ochs	F	ะดา	tis	bie	ce.	PAGE
Henry J. Raymond	_					26
George Jones	•	•	•	•	•	42
Louis J. Jennings, Editor-in-chief 1869						58
John C. Reid, Managing Editor 1872-1						_
John Foord, Editor-in-chief 1876-1883				•	٠	58
				•	•	58
Former Homes of The Times	•	•	•	•	•	74
Charles R. Miller, Editor-in-chief					•	90
The 4th Times Building, Park Row, 18					•	106
Edward Cary, Associate Editor, 1871-				٠	•	I 22
John Norris, Business Manager, 1900-				•	•	122
Times Square, the Center for News.				•	•	138
Adolph S. Ochs, August 18, 1896 .						187
The Times Editorial Council		•		•		203
Carr V. Van Anda, Managing Editor						218
Louis Wiley, Business Manager						218
The Present Home, The Times Annex						234
Honor Roll						258
Assistants to the Publisher						282
Laying the Cornerstone - Times Build					rv
18, 1904						298
Times Square World Series Baseball C	rov	vd				298
Rollo Ogden, Associate Editor						314
John H. Finley, Associate Editor .						314
Times Building Illuminated for Victor						330
Main Entrance — Times Building .						346
Times Business Office						347
Views of the Composing Room						362
A View of the News Room						363
					•
The First Press of The Times, 1851.	•	•	•	•	•	378

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

			PAGE
A View of The Times Pressroom		•	379
A View of The Times Rotogravus	re Pressroom .	•	394
Automobile Trucks		•	395

FACSIMILE PAGES OF "THE	NEW YORK TI	MES	,,
First Issue Se	eptember 18, 185:	Ι.	18
	ugust 17, 1858 .		34
The Outbreak of the Civil War	pril 13, 1861 .		50
	uly 6, 1863		66
	pril 4, 1865		82
	pril 10, 1865 .		98
The Assassination of Presi-
	pril 15, 1865 .		114
	ıly 22, 1871		130
	ovember 9, 1876		146
	lay 11, 1881	-	162
The First Issue of the New
	ugust 19, 1896		178
	eptember 9, 1909		242
	pril 16, 1912		274
	ugust 2, 1914		306
	lay 8, 1915		338
President Calls for War Dec-		A	33
laration	April 3, 1917		354
	lovember 11, 191		370
	une 13, 1920 .		386
_	· · ·	•

THIS historical sketch of The New York Times was prepared in commemoration of the quarter-centenary of the present management, which occurs on August 18, 1921, and of the seventieth anniversary of the first issue of the paper, which falls on September 18, 1921. It was written by a member of the editorial staff, Mr. Elmer Davis, with such advice and assistance as other members of the staff could give. Mr. Davis joined the staff of The Times in 1914, after his graduation from the University of Oxford, England, which he attended as a Rhodes Scholar from his native State, Indiana. He modestly disclaims any idea that his work is to be regarded as an ideal or definitive treatment of the subject. Most of the material of Part I has been drawn from the articles in The Times Iubilee Supplement of 1901, and from Augustus Maverick's "Henry I. Raymond and the New York Press." The second part has been compiled with the cooperation and assistance of many members of the staff. Without aspiring to a wholly detached point of view, which could hardly be achieved by men who have faith in and affection for the institution they serve, Mr. Davis believes that he has at any rate tried to tell the story impartially. However, it is but just to say that the unflagging industry and the literary skill with which Mr. Davis has executed his task command the sincere admiration of his associates.

The New York Times's peculiar position in the esteem of the public may make its history of interest not only to working newspapermen and students of journalism but to many readers who are unfamiliar with the technique of newspaper-making and unacquainted with the personnel of The Times. Some episodes, particularly controversial episodes, have been treated with a certain reserve, as it was felt that it would not be wholly fair to present only one side of the case. But in no instance has accuracy been sacrificed to brevity, and it is the belief that nothing relevant to the history of The Times, or to its interpretation, has been omitted.

With respect to my own sentiments on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the present management of The Times, I can do no better than to repeat here the following article, which appears in The Times of August 18, 1921:

Today — twenty-five years ago — August 18, 1896 — The New York Times passed to my management and has ever since been under my unrestricted control. So it may be fitting that I render an account of my stewardship to those who have made The New York Times of today possible — its readers — and take occasion to make clearer the forces that are truly directing and influencing its conduct. I am reluctant to strike the personal note that may manifest itself in this recital of the history of The New York Times, as it has been my endeavor to have the public as well as those who are associated in creating the paper regard it as an institution and, so far as possible and feasible, make impersonal the treatment of news and its interpretation. The human element, however, enters into all man's activities and it fortunately exists in the conduct of newspapers. A newspaper if possible freed from the frailties of humanity, with no sense of responsibility, no sympathies, no prejudices, no milk of human kindness, would be a nuisance and a plague, an excrescence on the bodies social and politic, and would be despised and shunned and consequently without influence and altogether an unnecessary evil. We have made an effort to make The New York Times a creditable human institution. what extent we have succeeded we are confident we can leave to others to say; whether this effort has contributed to the general welfare and to gaining respect for the honesty, integrity and patriotism of American newspapers.

viii

I am pleased to be able to say that The New York Times is firmly established as an independent conservative newspaper, free from any influence that can direct or divert its management from a righteous and public-spirited course. It is within itself financially independent and in the enjoyment of a large and increasingly profitable legitimate income from circulation receipts and advertising revenue—in the aggregate probably the largest income of any newspaper in the world. The net result of its operations is beyond the earlier dreams of those who are its chief beneficiaries, and fortunately they know no interest they can serve that can give them greater joy, satisfaction and comfort. I wish that thought could find lodgment in the minds of those who may be inclined to believe that some ulterior object may at times influence the policy of The New York Times. so that they may understand that, being free from pecuniary necessity or personal greed, no sane man would voluntarily forfeit the confidence and goodwill of intelligent people by degrading himself through loss of his self-respect or the surrender of his independence. Persons may disagree with The New York Times - with its treatment of news and its views thereon — but there is no ground on which they can attribute to it base or improper motives for such differences of opinion. The New York Times is an open book and may be taken at its face value; it is no worse than it may seem to appear; its faults are those of human fallibility and we cherish the knowledge that at least in purpose it is better than we have been able to make it appear.

On this occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the present management I wish first to make our grateful acknowledgments to the several hundred thousand readers of The New York Times who have expressed by their patronage their endorsement of the kind of newspaper we are endeavoring to produce. We are fully sensible of the fact that our editorial position on public questions has not always had the unanimous approval of our readers; many honestly differ from us; but whether we are right or wrong our views are not directly or indirectly presented with any thought that they may please or displease a reader. We do not now nor have we ever sought readers because of our favorable or unfavorable attitude toward men or measures. So we flatter ourselves that the third of a million persons who daily purchase The New York Times and the more than half a million who purchase it on Sunday do so because they approve of our kind of newspaper, and that is the inspiration to which we owe such success as we enjoy.

To the advertisers who have paid many millions of dollars for space in the advertising columns of The New York Times we are grateful for generous patronage and the many evidences of sympathy and encouragement they have manifested, and especially do we appreciate this proof of their understanding of the potency and value of newspaper circulation among those who find such a newspaper as The New York Times to their taste. York Times has been forced to steadily increase its advertising rates, and the difficulty was minimized because its discriminating advertisers have realized that the increases were not out of proportion to the increased service tendered. We have great pride in the high business standing of our advertisers. It is of the rarest occurrence that a high-class advertiser does not place The New York Times first on his list. In this connection it can be stated positively that no advertiser influences, or ever has influenced, the conduct of The New York Times or has been encouraged to seek any favors that are not accorded any good citizen. If in the past twenty-five years there has ever appeared an improper line written for the purpose of holding or securing advertising patronage, it was without the knowledge or consent of the management.

Words fail me when I try to express the obligation and gratitude I feel to the capable, earnest, loyal men who have been associated with me in making The New York Times. I am proud of the fact that we have been able to obtain and retain such men in the service of the paper. No newspaper organization in the world has or has ever had, as a group, so many experienced newspaper men with love and pride of profession giving enthusiastically and indefatigably their best thoughts and service to informing honestly the public of the happenings and occurrences of the day; who in their relations with each other are gentlemanly and courteous and all united in working harmoniously and with a common purpose for giving unselfishly their very best ability to making a newspaper that is enterprising, reliable and trustworthy, and at the same time decent and dignified; men who find joy in their work and have profound sympathy with the general policies of The New York Times, giving such zeal and devotion to their respective duties as to create a character and form a power that make The New York Times the great newspaper it is; men of almost every shade of political and religious opinion and belief, of every variety of sympathy and conviction, all working together in the belief that they are serving a newspaper that tolerates no tampering with the news, no coloring, no deception, and in the making of which no writer is required, requested or even invited to express any views that he does not honestly entertain. With such men and under such conditions the building up of The New York Times was a pleasant task. No publisher ever had more faithful and efficient assistants. I hesitate to make invidious distinctions among the army of men who have aided me in creating a newspaper, not so complete as I hope it may yet become as we are better enabled to take advantage of its opportunities, but which I believe, nevertheless, now to be the most complete in the world.

I wish, however, to select the notably conspicuous figures whose great contributions to the success of The New York Times I desire publicly to acknowledge, and to express my sense of obligation for their able support of my efforts to make The New York Times the best newspaper in the world:

To Charles R. Miller, who from the beginning has been my editor-in-chief, whose whole-hearted sympathy with my opinions and my aims and purposes with The Times has been an inspiration. His scholarly attainments, his facility and lucidity of expression, broad vision, extraordinary knowledge of public affairs, having a statesman's conception of their proper conduct, and his lofty patriotism have made the editorial page of The New York Times consulted and respected throughout the world, and distinguished it as the foremost exponent of enlightened American public opinion.

To CARR V. VAN ANDA, who has been managing editor of The New York Times for the past eighteen years; to whose exceptional newspaper experience, genius for news-gathering and marvelous appreciation of news value and fidelity to fairness and thoroughness, knowing no friend or foe when presiding over the news pages of The Times, the greatest measure of credit is due for the high reputation it has attained for the fullness, trustworthiness and impartiality of its news service. His vigilance and faithfulness to the very highest and best traditions of newspaper-making make him a tower of strength to the organization.

To Louis Wiley, the business manager, who has been associated with me almost from the beginning, particularly devoting himself to the circulation and advertising departments that have furnished the bone and sinew to the business, and has, while maintaining the very highest standards of business ethics. extended the greatest courtesy and painstaking attention to all having occasion to have transactions with The Times. Of unusual ability, alert, indefatigable and agreeable, and in full accord and sympathy with the policies of The Times, he has been one of my most useful and valuable assistants. has been more earnest and faithful to the duties that come under his management — and these have been multifarious - and he has made himself. as he is, an integral part of the institution.

Because of the loyal support and skillful aid of these three men, each preëminent in his particular and important field of responsibility, the publisher of The New York Times is free from some of the many problems and anxieties that are associated with newspaper-making for the reason that the reputation of the newspaper is in safe and prudent hands. There are others who have been of noteworthy aid in creating this great newspaper and their exceptional ability unstintingly given me was helpful and of enduring value, and their contribution is indelibly impressed in the results that have been achieved: Edward Cary (deceased), in the editorial department; John Norris (deceased), in the business and mechanical departments; William C. Reick, Henry Loewenthal, and Arthur R. Greaves (deceased), in the news department. The work of these men was constructive and an inspiration, and conspicuously helpful in the building of the newspaper. I dare not go further in the personnel of the splendid men and women who have so ably, unselfishly and enthusiastically aided in the work of bringing The New York Times to its high eminence in public favor, for fear of not properly and adequately estimating their individual contribution to that end. Suffice it that to their ability, devotion to duty, kind sympathy and confidence, credit is due in great measure for what has been accomplished. With such men and women to assist, almost any deserving enterprise should be a pronounced success. They are all entitled to share in whatever praise may be accorded The Times as a newspaper.

Now as to the ownership of The New York Times. It is owned by a corporation with $1,000,000 common and $4,000,000 preferred 8 per cent stock (the latter recently issued as a stock dividend). I and the immediate members of my family own and control 64 per cent of the shares of the company free and unencumbered, and not one share of our holdings is pledged or hypothecated; 25 per cent more of the shares is held by those who are or have been employed by The Times, and the remaining 11 per cent of the shares is distributed among twenty-eight individuals or estates (all Americans) who acquired the stock by exchanging for it shares of the old company, the largest individual holder of the latter group holding only one-quarter of 1 per cent of the capital stock. The New York Times Company has real estate and paper-mill properties costing more than $5,000,000, and on these properties there are unmatured bonds and mortgages amounting to $1,500,000, constituting the sum total of the indebtedness of the company except its current monthly accounts payable. The cash reserves of the company are more than sufficient to pay its total funded indebtedness and leave free a large and sufficient working capital. So it can be said that The New York Times Company is virtually free of indebtedness. It has a gross annual income exceeding $15,000,000, and only about 3 per cent of its gross annual income is distributed to its shareholders; the remainder of its income is employed in the development and expansion of its business. This result has been achieved in a business that twenty-five years ago was running at a loss of $1000 a day, by the investment of only $200,000 of new capital. It is the result of the application of practical common sense by experienced newspaper-makers who undertook the management of a newspaper of long and good reputation - temporarily crippled by mismanagement and untoward universal financial conditions — in the firm belief that a clientele existed in the greatest city in the world for a newspaper edited for intelligent, thoughtful people. At the time The Times passed to its present management -1896 - the rapidly increasing circulation and advertising of the sensational newspaper indulging in coarse, vulgar and inane features, muck-raking and crusades of every character were creating a widely extending impression that otherwise a newspaper would be dull, stupid and unprofitable. It was this situation that caused The New York Times to hoist its legend of "All the News That's Fit to Print." The wiseacres of journalism prophesied an early failure; the motto was made sport of and ridiculed. It was this prevailing impression that proved a valuable factor in the growth of The Times, for in the field it was trying to cover it met no serious competition and thus was for a considerable time left to its full benefit. The neglected non-sensational departments of news of the other daily morning newspapers were quietly and unostentatiously improved in The New York Times and made as far as possible complete - such as financial news, market reports, real estate transactions, court records, commercial and educational news; the news of books, the routine affairs of the National, State and City Governments; and there were also attractively presented decent and trustworthy pictures of men, women and events. Altogether the task undertaken in this direction was to tell promptly and accurately the happenings and occurrences that were not sensational but of real importance in the affairs of the people. This supplemented the general news of the day intelligently and quietly presented and with editorial interpretation that was fair and informative. The columns of The Times were open without money and without price for the presentation of views honestly differing with the opinions of The Times, and this was practiced to an extent never theretofore done by a newspaper. All of this soon gave The Times the reputation that its readers could expect full and trustworthy information regarding any and all angles of the news. In the very first political campaign during the régime of the present management such was the fairness and impartiality of The Times news reports that at its close both the Democratic and Republican managers of the National Committees voluntarily sent letters of thanks and appreciation to The Times management.

We began on August 18, 1896, with a daily issue of 18,000, over half of which were returned unsold, and, as said before, with a deficit of $1000 a day. gross income for the first year was $561,423, and at the end of the year the deficit was $68,121.67. second year the deficit was $78,559; but in the third year the balance was $50,252 on the right side and has been so increasingly every year since. The gross income for the period of twenty-five years has been, in round figures, $100,000,000, every dollar of which, less an average of $125,000 a year withdrawn from the business and distributed as dividends, has been expended in making The Times what it is today. Not one dollar of the $100,000,000 was a gift or a gratuity, but every cent a legitimate newspaper income. It is a fortunate outcome for those who own the shares of The New York Times Company and who have been hopeful and patient for so many years, but it has also been a happy and encouraging result for the country and particularly for American journalism.

There was a time when it was no secret in financial circles that The New York Times Company had limited resources and that it was an active borrower, and this gave rise to speculation as to where the necessary funds were obtained. As a result wild and stupid conjectures were given currency whenever it suited the purpose of malevolent persons to attempt to discredit the newspaper. Among the stories were these: That there was English or foreign capital in The Times; that traction interests were owners or controllers; that certain political factions were "backing" it; that department stores were financially interested; that well-known Wall Street concerns directed its policy, and variations ad libitum. The truth is that from the day I assumed the management of The New York Times twenty-five years ago today - I have been in absolute and free control, and no man or interest was ever in a position to direct or demand of me to do anything with The Times, and no one ever attempted to do so. So far as the management of The New York Times is concerned we can say, without fear of any contradiction from the thousands who in the past twenty-five years have been employed on The Times, that never a line appeared in its columns to pay a real or imaginary debt or to gain expected The New York Times owes no man or interest any support or goodwill that it does not owe to every good man and worthy cause.

The operation of so large an enterprise, including real estate transactions and large building construction, of course required capital, and the general impression that the newspaper business is extrahazardous, and the personal equation the all-important factor, made financing no easy task; so it cannot be surprising to know that we had many and continued financial problems made more than ordinarily difficult as we scrupulously avoided the easiest way, knowing full well that in that direction the enterprise would be imperiled and robbed of the attraction that made the work a joy, an inspiration and opportunity for public service. The financing, however, was always done on a strictly business basis. Not a dollar was borrowed at less than the prevailing rate of interest, and principal and interest were paid to the last cent. In no single instance did we receive any financial accommodation for a selfish motive, and never in a single instance was it predicated on any personal benefits, direct or indirect, asked or expected.

I was reluctant to go at such length into the business and financial history of The New York Times, but think this occasion is the time once and for all to make the indisputable facts clear.

I do not wish to overemphasize the material progress of The New York Times, as like results may be obtained in any well-conducted business in the world's greatest metropolis, for on this twenty-fifth anniversary of the present management we prefer to be appraised by the product we are offering the public for their information and guidance, and to have it judged by the highest standards of honesty. fairness and cleanliness, and public service applied in making newspapers. We present the nine thousand and thirty-one issues of The New York Times that have appeared during the past twenty-five years for review and criticism. They are not without faults and shortcomings and not altogether what we should have wished them to be, but they are our best under the circumstances of their construction. We have little to regret for what has appeared therein, but in no issue was principle ever surrendered or subordinated to expediency. We have not yet reached our ideal of a newspaper in contents or make-up and may never be able to achieve it, but we shall continue to improve, and to that end we hope to merit a continuance of our pleasant and profitable relations with intelligent men and women.

With respect to the principles and policies of The New York Times that represent our platform and our guide I can do no better than to repeat what was announced would be the policies of The Times when assuming its control and management, and shall leave to others to say how well we have lived up to that declaration. The following was the salutatory appearing in the issue of The New York Times of Wednesday, August 19, 1896:

ANNOUNCEMENT

To undertake the management of The New York Times, with its great history for right doing, and to attempt to keep bright the lustre which Henry J. Raymond and George Jones have given it, is an extraordinary task. But if a sincere desire to conduct a high-standard newspaper, clean, dignified and trustworthy, requires for success honesty, watchfulness, earnestness, industry, and practical knowledge applied with common sense, I entertain the hope that I can succeed and maintain the high estimate that thoughtful, pure-minded people have ever had of The New York Times.

It will be my earnest aim that The New York Times give the news, all the news, in concise and attractive form, in language that is permissible in good society, and give it as early, if not earlier than it can be learned through any other reliable medium; to give the news impartially, without fear or favor, regardless of party, sect, or interests involved; to make of the columns of The New York Times a forum for the consideration of all questions of public importance, and to that end to invite intelligent discussion from all shades of opinion.

There will be no radical changes in the personnel of the present efficient staff. Mr. Charles R. Miller, who has so ably for many years presided over the editorial page, will continue to be the editor; nor will there be a departure from the general tone and character and policies pursued with relation to public questions that have distinguished The New York Times as a non-partisan newspaper — unless it be, if possible, to intensify its devotion to the cause of sound money and tariff reform, opposition to wastefulness and peculation in administering public affairs, and in its advocacy of the lowest tax consistent with good government, and no more government than is absolutely necessary to protect society, maintain individual and vested rights, and assure the free exercise of a sound conscience.

ADOLPH S. OCHS.

New York City, August 18, 1896.

The foregoing was our invitation for public favor twenty-five years ago, and I reaffirm it today in the full conviction based on my experience that these are the proper principles that should be maintained in the conduct of a representative American daily newspaper.

ADOLPH S. OCHS.

New York City, August 18, 1921.

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES PART I

CHAPTER I

Beginnings of The Times, 1851-1859

IN a sense The New York Times is the result of an accident, or of a sequence of accidents. or later Henry J. Raymond and George Jones would have become partners in the production of a newspaper; and wherever or whatever that newspaper might have been, its character would have been fixed by the common ideals which these men held, as its prosperity would have been insured by their unusually fortunate combination of talents. But it was only a chance that this Raymond-Iones newspaper, whose early years established the standard and the character which The Times strives to maintain today, was The New York Times and not The Albany Evening Journal; and it took more accidents to bring Raymond and Iones together in 1851.

The acquaintance and friendship of the two men who directed The Times for the first four decades of its history began in the early forties, in the office of The New York Tribune. Jones, a native of Vermont, had come to New York and gone into business, and had been invited by Horace Greeley to become his partner in the establishment of The Tribune in 1841. Whether from a failure to realize the wider field for newspaper enterprise which was opening in New York, or from a well-grounded distrust of

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

Greelev's business judgment, Iones refused; but he did take a place in the Tribune business office, and there not only acquired a thorough familiarity with what may be called the alimentary system of a newspaper, but formed a friendship with Raymond, who was Greeley's principal editorial assistant. Presently Raymond went over to The Courier and Enquirer, then edited by General James Watson Webb, and Jones later moved to Albany, where he engaged in the business of redeeming bank notes. In those days, when almost anybody could start a bank and issue paper money which might or might not have a solid reserve behind it, this was a somewhat hazardous occupation, but Jones made it profitable. His business ability commended itself to Thurlow Weed, who had become acquainted with Raymond both as a newspaperman and as a rising young Whig politician. In 1848 Weed wanted to get out of The Albany Evening Journal, and offered to sell it to the two friends. Raymond and Iones were willing, but one of Weed's partners would not let go, so the enterprise came to nothing. But it had shown Raymond and Jones that they were not alone in thinking that they could get out a pretty good newspaper. For the moment Raymond's chief attention was diverted to politics; he was elected to the Assembly in 1849 and became its Speaker two vears later. But the idea of a Raymond-Iones newspaper never died thereafter.

In 1850 General Webb went to Europe and left Raymond in temporary charge of The Courier and Enquirer. Raymond not only failed to use his political influence to promote Webb's brief Senatorial boom, but incurred his chief's disfavor by speaking out some plain truths on the slavery question in connection with the compromise proposals of that year. Raymond was not then, and never was till well along in the Civil War, an abolitionist; but he did not think that the more urgent question of the slave power in politics could be cured by ignoring it or by tame surrender. His independence got him into Webb's bad graces, and when Raymond went to Albany for the legislative session that winter he was eager to get away from Webb and start out for himself.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

Jones was somewhat more reluctant to give up a business which he had made profitable, but it happened that a bill was then before the legislature which proposed to regulate the rate of bank-note redemption so severely that it would make the business entirely too hazardous for men of integrity. One day early in 1851, Jones and Raymond were walking across the Hudson on the ice when Jones observed that he had heard that The Tribune had made a profit of $60,000 — in those days an enormous sum — in the past year. This renewed Raymond's enthusiasm, and before they reached the other shore he had obtained Iones's promise to join him, if the redemption bill passed, in the establishment of a new daily in New York. The bill did pass. Jones closed up his business, and he and his business associate, E. B. Wesley, prepared to put their money, with Raymond's experience, into the new venture.

But if this series of accidents led directly to the establishment of The Times, it is nevertheless true that essentially the paper was brought into being to fill a keenly felt want in the New York journalism of the day. The conditions which made possible the prosperity of The Times in the fifties were in general the conditions which opened the way for the spectacularly successful reconstruction of The Times in the nineties. In each case New York newspapers, numerous and varied as they were, had none the less left vacant a large and profitable part of the newspaper field; and in each case the demand for a certain kind of paper — a paper characterized under Raymond as under Ochs by the somewhat unpretentious but still popular qualities of moderation and decency — created the supply. In the fifties as in the nineties there were many newspaper readers in New York who wanted a paper which first of all gave the news, but which was not distorted by eccentricities of a personal editorial attitude or tainted by excessive attention to folly, immorality and crime. The character which Raymond gave to The Times - excellence in news service, avoidance of fantastic extremes in editorial opinion, and a general sobriety in manner - is the character which The Times has retained ever since, and which those now engaged in producing the paper hope it still retains.

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

There was a field for a sane and sensible newspaper in New York in 1851. The city had not yet recovered from its surprise at finding itself a great metropolis, with more than half a million people, already far beyond its old rivals of the Atlantic seaboard and obviously destined to still greater growth in the future. It was spreading rapidly, sprawlingly, with little attention to the manner of its extension; its government was execrable, its civic beauties few and well concealed, its spirit still affected by the old small-town tradition. But it was growing; it was attracting new men by the thousands, ambitious young men like Raymond, from up-state; like Jones and others, many others, from New England. Those men were beginning the work of making New York, to which their most active and able successors of more recent times have done little more than add a few embellishments.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

Both the old spirit and the new were reflected in the newspapers of New York. There still survived some excellent examples of the type of newspaper which had prevailed in the earlier decades of the century - the so-called blanket sheets, literally big enough to be slept under, especially by those who had tried to read them. They were massive, expensive, and dull; dignified if not respectable; content with a small circulation among gentlemen who had plenty of time, if not much inclination, for reading, and were willing enough to get around to this morning's news about the middle of next week. The new era began with the establishment of The Sun in 1833 — a paper which for the first time in America discovered the rudimentary literacy of the lower classes. The Sun of 1833, or even of 1851, was nothing like The Sun as made famous by Dana long afterward; it was filled for the most part with trivialities, and according to Augustus Maverick, Raymond's biographer, was read in 1851 chiefly by "domestics in quest of employment, and cartmen dozing at street corners in waiting for a job." But it had opened up a new field, and this field was entered two years later by a much more interesting and much better newspaper, James Gordon Bennett's Herald.

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

Bennett was the inventor of almost everything, good and bad, in modern journalism. He was the first editor who gave his chief attention to the collection of news, and before long his competition had compelled all newspapers which made any pretension to influence to undertake unheard-of expenditures and to compete with him in the utilization of the railroad, the steamship, the telegraph and other new inventions just coming into use. In his salutatory to the public he disclaimed, among other things, "all principle, as it is called." His enemies and professional rivals — in the early days of The Herald the two terms were synonymous - would have said that he had merely rejected all good principles. Tammany Hall and slavery usually found The Herald on their side. Moreover, Bennett invented vellow journalism; he discovered and encouraged the popular taste for vicarious vice and crime, and before long respectable citizens who would have liked to read The Herald for the news felt constrained to exclude it from their homes for fear of its effect on the somewhat sensitive morals of the Victorian family.

It must be admitted that this "obscene" Herald which was regarded with such horror in the middle of the nineteenth century was not so very terrible, judged by the more elastic standards of our time. Every page of every issue bears the mark of Bennett's powerful and eccentric talent, and it undoubtedly did give more space to news of crime and human error than its rivals; but it respected certain reticences which had passed into history before many of the night city editors of 1921 were born. However, moral standards were more exigent in those days, and Bennett's frank and premature cynicism probably contributed to the ill repute of his paper. In the forties good principles were exemplified by few, but professed by everybody but Bennett; and it was the shrinking of virtuous citizens from the loathsome newspaper whose editor dared to talk as most people acted that opened the way for Greeley's success with The Tribune.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851–1859

When Greeley established The Tribune in 1841 Bennett had things pretty much his own way. Of the heavier and more conservative sheets The Courier and Enquirer was kept in the foreground by the aggressive and pugnacious personality of James Watson Webb, but none of these papers could vie with Bennett in popularity or financial success. The Sun had long since been beaten in its own field. and no one then foresaw its ultimate revenge in that recent and curious transaction wherein The Herald swallowed The Sun, and emerged from the process so exactly like The Sun as to furnish perhaps the best exemplification in history of the proverb, "Man ist was man isst." But Greeley soon gave Bennett real competition. In the first place, The Sun and The Herald leaned toward the Democrats. and Greelev first came forward to offer a cheap newspaper to the Whigs. Moreover, The Tribune as a newspaper was about as good as The Herald, and it carefully avoided all The Herald's offenses against the taste of the time. Yet The Tribune itself soon incurred moral disapproval because of Greeley's advocacy of the principles of Fourieristic Socialism.

The chief characteristic of The Tribune under Greeley was an aggressive and even ostentatious purity. "Immoral and degrading police reports," and any notices of the existence of the theater, whether in news or advertising, were at first scrupulously excluded. Greeley appealed to man as he likes to pretend to be, Bennett to man as he is occasionally compelled to admit he really is. Greeley promoted temperance with a zeal equaled only by that other eminent moralist of the time, P. T. Barnum, and professed an intention to make The Tribune, though a penny paper, "a welcome visitor at the family fireside." Heads of families soon found it rather startling that a paper with such an ambition was becoming the vehicle of doctrines whose logical application would make the family obsolete. Greeley's Socialism was no doubt sincere - he seems to have been the type of man who was so sincere in everything he did as to make the impartial observer somewhat more tolerant of judicious hypocrisy and certainly his observation of the panic of 1837, and of the struggles between Tammany and the local Whig machine for the control of the city government, might have justified him in concluding that no political and economic organization of society could be much worse than that which actually obtained. Fourierism was popular; Brook Farm, the Oneida Community, New Harmony, and hundreds of less known and less successful communistic experiments were being attempted in various parts of the country. Greeley's advocacy of the reorganization of society on the basis of the "social phalanx" was not hampered by any consideration of the difficulty of fitting a metropolitan newspaper with a large circulation into a state of phalangites, but doubtless he was taking only one step at a time, and saw no reason for crossing this bridge before he came to it. In the meantime Albert Brisbane, father of the better known Arthur Brisbane, and an eminent apostle of what Mr. Wells would doubtless call the Neanderthal type of Socialism, was allowed the run of The Tribune, and enjoyed the esteem of its editors.

Greeley, to be sure, was no more than what would now be called a parlor Bolshevik, but it was only natural that his professional and commercial rivals. in that acrimonious age, should suspect him of a willingness to acquiesce in the logical extension of his doctrines to other parts of the house. Despite his protests and denials, it suited the other newspapers of the city to regard him as the advocate of free love; and the controversy found fullest expression in the autumn of 1846, in an editorial warfare between Greeley and his old employé Raymond, then on The Courier and Enquirer. A dozen or so long articles were written on each side, and Raymond succeeded in proving, to the entire satisfaction of everybody who agreed with him, that the doctrines advocated by The Tribune not only would be destructive of property right, family affection. and political association, but were contrary to the teachings of revealed religion - an assertion which he evidently regarded as crushing, and which in 1846 undoubtedly was.

The Tribune prospered in spite of these handicaps; but there were a great many people who wanted the news as The Tribune printed it, without the sensational matter to be found in The Herald, and equally without the questionable and subversive doctrines which might be seen lurking beneath the chestthumping morality of The Tribune's editorial page. To its enthusiasm for Socialism, moreover, The Tribune added a vigorous propaganda for Irish freedom, and the growing power of the Irish element in Tammany Hall had already aroused a certain reluctance, readily intelligible today, to allow New York City to be used as an overseas base for this hardy perennial conflict. To this public Raymond and Jones decided to appeal - not only because it was there and waiting for a paper suited to its taste, but also because its taste happened to be the taste of Raymond and Iones.

Raymond went to Europe for a vacation in the summer of 1851, after drawing up with Jones and Wesley the plans for the new paper. His own expression in a letter to his brother, dated from London in June, 1851, is modest enough—"Two gentlemen in Albany propose to start a new paper in New York early in September, and I shall probably edit it." This was undoubtedly the way it seemed to Raymond at the time, but it was Raymond's personality that made the paper's character at the outset, and in the Jubilee Supplement of The Times, issued in 1901, it was set down as the measured judgment of the editors of the paper that "The Times has always been at its best when its conduct approached most nearly to his ideal of a daily newspaper." After Raymond's death circumstances compelled Jones to discover and display for a time his own very great talent as supervisor of the editorial policy of The Times; but for the eighteen years from its establishment to Raymond's death it was known to the country as Raymond's newspaper. Its virtues were largely his; its weakness was chiefly due to his one uncontrollable defect, an addiction to politics.

Raymond was born on a farm near Lima, N. Y., in 1820, and graduated from the University of Vermont in 1840. For a few months thereafter he supported himself in New York as a free lance newspaperman, but was about to give it up in despair and become a school teacher in North Carolina when Greelev, for whom he had done some writing on space, offered him a salary of eight dollars a week. It was Greeley who in later years, when Raymond was a rival editor, bestowed on him the title of "the Little Villain" - a mild enough epithet according to the standards of journalistic courtesy in the fifties; but Greeley in his more moderate moments liked Raymond, and said that "a more generally efficient journalist I never saw," and that Raymond was the only man who ever worked for him whom he had had to reprove for working too hard.

After three years with Greeley, Raymond went over to The Courier and Enquirer, and remained with that paper till plans had been made for the establishment of The Times. By that time, though only thirty-one, he was one of the best known and ablest newspapermen in New York. He was a small man, but pugnacious, as editors had to be in those days. Though it was Raymond's fortune to begin his independent career after the close of the period when editors went about in momentary expectation (or meditation) of personal violence, he had occasion more than once to display not only moral but physical courage in defense of his principles. As a reporter and editorial writer he was remarkably gifted; his writing was rapid, his style clear; a rarer virtue in those times, his copy was legible. A feat recorded by his biographer, Maverick, who says he was an eyewitness, is here cited without comment: on the day of Daniel Webster's death Raymond wrote, in the late afternoon and early evening, sixteen columns of the obituary — in longhand, and without the aid of such material as a newspaper "morgue" now furnishes.

In his views on public questions Raymond was if anything too well balanced. He often lamented a habit of mind which inclined him to see both sides in any dispute. This may have hampered him as a politician, but on the whole it probably did The Times more good than harm. There were plenty of infuriated and vituperant newspapers in those days, and the success of The Times in the fifties showed that a considerable part of the public approved a measure of temperance in opinions on public affairs. To a certain extent, however, Raymond was really ahead of the time. His attitude toward the problems which led to and arose out of the Civil War, for example, is in almost every detail that which is approved by the judgment of history in so far as that judgment can ever be set down with certainty. He was a Whig in the early fifties, but not a bigoted Whig. He was not an abolitionist, but he believed that the domination of the federal government by the slave states in the interest of slavery — the domination of a majority by a minority — must be ended. middle of the decade he became a free-soil man and then one of the founders of the Republican party. During the war he was a bitter-ender, even in the dark days when better advertised patriots were willing to accept a peace without victory; but when the end was reached Raymond did his best to remove the bitterness. It would have been infinitely better for the whole country if Raymond and not Thaddeus Stevens had been allowed to lay down the reconstruction policy, and though Raymond went astray in thinking for a time that Andrew Johnson was all that a man in his position, with his enemies, ought to have been, the soundness of the principles which Raymond held and which Johnson rather spasmodically tried to apply has been demonstrated by the subsequent course of history.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

There can be no doubt, however, that Raymond's preoccupation with politics distracted much of his attention from The Times, and the paper suffered heavily, though not for long, from his unpopularity in the early days of reconstruction. In the fifties it was not yet realized that the editor of a successful New York paper was a bigger man than the Speaker of the Assembly, or even the Lieutenant-Governor; yet it was characteristic of Raymond that when some of his friends wanted to put him up for Governor, in 1856, he refused for fear his aggressive record as a Whig might stand in the way of the rapprochement of free-soil Whigs and free-soil Democrats in the new Republican party.

Raymond has perhaps too hastily been called a political follower of Thurlow Weed and William H. Seward, and some writers have even regarded Weed as a sort of man behind the throne on The Times. It is a curious foible of a certain type of mind that it is unable to imagine a newspaper editor as one who may, on some public questions, honestly have the same view as that held by other persons. Unless he is absolutely unique and eccentric in his political opinions, he is presumed by certain critics to be bought or otherwise controlled by the people who agree with him. Raymond did indeed have a great respect for Weed's political judgment, a general agreement with Weed's political views, and a friendly relation with Weed himself. In his early political career he was in a sense a follower of Weed, just as he was a "follower" of Seward in 1860 to the extent of supporting him for the presidential nomination. But on many matters he disagreed with these gentlemen, and while their relative rank in political affairs was considerably higher than his in the fifties, Raymond's vigorous support of Lincoln gave him a personal influence during the Civil War that was due to Raymond alone. In 1864, as chairman of the Republican National Committee, he could hardly be described as a follower of anybody but Lincoln. who fully recognized his immense value in that year to the party and the nation.

Weed often and naturally came into the Times office to talk politics with Raymond, and no doubt to offer occasional thoughts on political journalism; but Raymond knew a good deal about politics and a good deal more about journalism, and would have known it if he had never seen Weed in his life. For a short time just after the Civil War Weed was a contributor of political articles to the paper; but there seems to be no foundation for the theory that he was ever its dominating influence, or ever tried to be. Raymond was not so inhuman as to have no friends, or so original as to have no political associates, but he and he alone was editor of The Times.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

On August 5, 1851, the association which was to publish the new paper was formed under the name of Raymond, Jones & Company. In August, 1860, the name was changed to H. J. Raymond & Company; and in July, 1871, after Raymond's heirs had sold out their holdings, to The New York Times. The stock was divided into a hundred shares, the nominal par value of which seems to have been set by tacit agreement at $1000. Raymond received twenty shares "as an equivalent for his editorial ability." Jones and Wesley had forty shares each "as an equivalent for their capital and business ability," but the actual cash investment then made was only $40,000, each man putting up half. When the paper was established in the following month the cash investment seems to have totaled $60,000. Jones and Wesley had already found it necessary to increase their own investment, and to give up some of the stock which was to have been an equivalent for their business ability in return for cash. At the outset Jones and Wesley held 25 shares each; J. B. Plumb, Daniel B. St. John, and Francis B. Ruggles five shares each, and E. B. Morgan and Christopher Morgan two shares each. The Morgan interest, small as it was, has a considerable place in the Times history, for at a later crisis in the affairs of the paper (during the fight against Tweed), E. B. Morgan came in and bought the stock of the Raymond estate, thereby giving Jones invaluable security in his struggle with Tammany.

Raymond chose for the new paper the name of The New-York Daily Times, which had been borne in the thirties by a publication so short-lived that for all practical purposes the name was as good as new. A prospectus was already in circulation and had been published (as an advertisement) in the other dailies of the city. On the whole, and inevitably, the prospectus contained blameless generalities; The Times was going to include all that was good in both conservatism and radicalism, while avoiding the defects of either; it announced in firm tones its belief in the doctrines of Christianity and republicanism, which nobody in the United States except the Indians would in that day have denied; and it declared the intention of the publishers "to make The Times at once the best and the cheapest daily family newspaper in the United States." But along with these routine announcements there were one or two which meant something. The Times "is not established for the advancement of any party, sect or person." "It will be under the editorial management and control of Henry I. Raymond, and while it will maintain firmly and zealously those principles which he may deem essential to the public good, and which are held by the great Whig Party of the United States more nearly than by any other political organization, its

New-York Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1851.

Dru-Park Baily Cines.

The second of th

VOL. L.... VO. 1.

Pru-Park Bailg Cines.

AMBIVAL OF THE WURDPAY MAILS. AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

THE NEWS FROM EUROPE.

The Flortion in Premos-Arrests, &c. APPREHENDED DISTURBANCE IN AUSTRI

The Reyal Mad Steamer Europe arrived at Boston yearchest memory, at about 6 orders. Her mains were near us by the New Baren failuned mula, which the an 0 orders, and resched this city as on early have like received. SOLTHERN REMOFE.

line evening to have reveived our regular Zaglish this arrivel we have reveived our regular Zaglish Proch files with correspondency servings, & C., to day, Espender Elle-die Zewyer's May of militar, in geven by this arrival has considering adverse,

the control of the co

Control allows in confined, but the Charles in Charles Tonyonal attention is absolved by an accounters Calines Miniper of befory. He bes resigned und United Resists. symptom presents an fearure of marked in-The Queen wes absent on has visit to Scot-of when his had have very medicalizationly previous, to Exhibition emission to attract numerous visitors.

The state of the s The control of the co S.F., Ang. B7. The section of the section of meaning in the are services, the Mengale of Angleway upon resistant to report of have remarked, "If you want to the remarked," "If you are the remarked," "If you is made to be remarked, "If you is made to be remarked, "If you is made to be remarked," "If you is not be remarked." "If you want you the first is a first of constant for a first factor, per expectation of the first of the first factor is a first factor of the And the second state of th trang to fetters from Berno of the SSth tranges council in the states by resea two research at the states of the state of the recognition of the state of the state of the 14,000th. AUSTRANCE of the Empestoling of the Manager, and on the endoubles of the manager, and on the endoubles of the manager, and on the enthe provisions to describe the the Provisions of the end of the the paraboration of Verone and Itathe paraboration of Verone. The

The Dict of Iceland was correct our the 5th type dictional. Amongs in all insented was easiest from the processed was easiest from the processed was an interest of the processed to the type of Salayary of Salayary willout in the late of the bland, and shall be appreciated to the bland, and shall be

Practice River Biof in Loncassor Co., Ft., by readers will be already advised of the co. or ways of a homesteel rice and low of the co. or signal, already C., Pt., on the Bh inst. — arising near of the attendant of experts of two fagnites eater to give the conclusion of this affair in an lighten shape. a latef summary of the circum.

Heli worden in September, Les evening. Our harden of the p overlang is citized out by the Fortign Sense, in the transmooth production take our readers in the about mooth of the scholing to The Sense out It was which stall to publish at a motor data allege. PRICE ONE CENT.

on individualities with the general transfer of the properties of lost is to make two trips vach way a day, and be a personnent arrangement. We had with

No. The forth of the market a consert in the account of the state of t

DAATH 14 A CELL—AL & Ivo hore best To-ley also, polloment Celler, of the Central Passes, to the Central Passes, to the Santonean General Asses, the statement of the Central Passes, the Santonean General Celler and Celler

The state of the s The state of the s

viers of Tatin tendentions military creatible was propercolled that battle of Vanisana is 1500, eponed they to the increase of in Unevent is between internated with the

The Theory Montro publishes a series of the Consette of the 29th u.k. nr. o'goler of enablemen, who in 1864, o'the present who powed as chapter to a contract the formation of the word of the formation in Comments.

While in a list of eremediace and activities for the state of the stat greader parement by decidion. "New Mean" are of produced to the world before the talls recognishes mad form. Tark Ethebrary appraisal Resolvery and two in Westington apparery piecerstry.

Aby is such grants.

A dissolution of the Ministry has taken place, as such as yet 18 kg as a souther Chance jean from the Dissolution of the Ministry has taken place, as the many of the grants are described jean from the Dissolution of the grants are the grants.

EF' it has been risted that Senator Douglass was use all to fulfs he engagement, to deliver the angular at les sittle Fatt. We redered that he has me far recevered from his undeposition, that he left for Rechreter has revening.

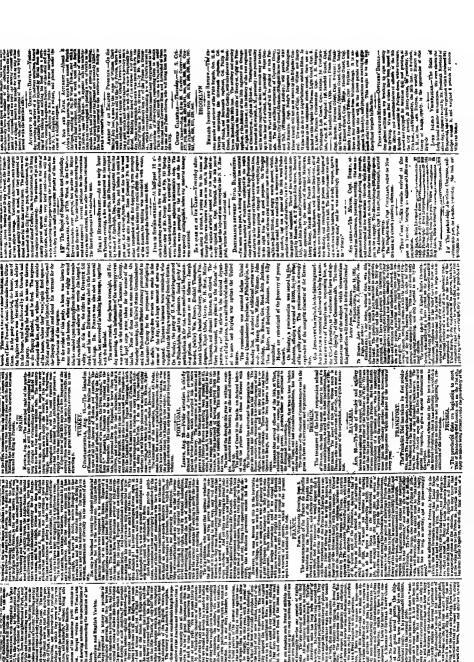

Rell bell rang as alarm

FALSE ALARM The I 6

the boundaries with the second of the second NEW-YORK CITY.

Left The weather was the theme upon which are there as increase as a mentage eliminates are survey as the three the factor of it upon the position of a proceedings of the formal inching, which our operation of the factor of th a Barrier Minglonant. We engret to seak of Rev. We. T. Dieners, of this city, that like yestering marring, at the boson of ring, D. D., where he was publicg a lamcolumns will be free from bigoted devotion to narrow interests." For a party politician and office-holder to admit that his party could conceivably fall short of perfection was a novelty in the fifties.

Off one

Moreover, "while it will assert and exercise the right freely to discuss every subject of public interest, it will not countenance any improper interference, on the part of the people of any locality, with the institutions, or even the prejudices, of another."

There was a reason for this. During the summer there had been many rumors about the new paper, and the motive of its founders was set down as almost everything but what it really was - to establish a new paper that would publish, as a later motto of The Times put it, "all the news that's fit to print," a phrase which exactly expresses the intentions of Raymond and Iones. It suited Raymond's political and journalistic enemies to accuse him of being an abolitionist, and the apprehensive rivals of the new paper tried to discredit it by asserting in advance that it was going to further the doctrine of abolition, or the presidential candidacy of General Scott, or the presidential candidacy of some other dignitary, or anything else that might seem likely to bring it into disrepute. The motive of this was clear enough even at the time; for the established newspapers made the same efforts to hamper the circulation of The Times that had been tried successively on The Sun, The Herald, and The Tribune — and with no more effect. New York was growing so fast that the extraordinary prosperity which attended The Times almost from the outset brought no real injury to any of its important rivals; for years thereafter they all grew and prospered together.

These attacks had given the paper a good deal of free advertising, which was soon turned to good account. Raymond had collected the nucleus of an excellent staff - several reporters and editors, and a dozen employés of the mechanical departments. left the Tribune in a body to come over to the new paper — and despite the unreadiness of the building at 113 Nassau Street which had been rented as the first home of the paper, it appeared eventually only two days later than the date promised in the prospectus. "On the night of the 17th of September [1851]," says Maverick, "the first number of The Times was made up, in open lofts, destitute of windows, gas, speaking tubes, dumb waiters, and general conveniences. All was raw and dismal. The writer remembers sitting by the open window at midnight, looking through the dim distance at Raymond's first lieutenant, who was diligently writing brevier" [editorial copy, so called from the name of the type in which it was set] "at a rickety table at the end of the barren garret; his only light a flaring candle, held upright by three nails in a block of wood; at the city editor, and the news-man, and the reporters, all eagerly scratching pens over paper, their countenances half lighted, half shaded. by other candles; at Raymond, writing rapidly and calmly, as he always wrote, but under similar disadvantages."

The first number of The Times on the streets the following morning contained an editorial article (by Raymond, of course) headed "A Word About

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

Ourselves," and beginning with the declaration: "We publish today the first number of The New York Daily Times. and we intend to issue it every morning (Sundays excepted) for an indefinite number of vears to come." This salutatory contained promise which was soon justified by performance: "We do not mean to write as if we were in a passion, unless that shall really be the case; and we shall make it a point to get into a passion as rarely as possible. There are very few things in this world which it is worth while to get angry about; and they are just the things that anger will not improve." There was rather more anger than was needful in most of the New York papers of that period, especially in their editorial controversies with each other. Yet it is pleasant to record that editorial ethics in this city have shown a steady improvement. In the earlier decades of the nineteenth century editors were compelled by public opinion to back up their tirades against each other by appearances on the field of honor. By the time of Greelev and Bennett this practise, which made an already hazardous occupation somewhat too troublesome for comfort, was dving out, and the ethics of the period permitted rival editors to fight out their quarrels with walking sticks or horsewhips when they met on Broadway, instead of taking to pistols and the Weehawken ferry. And in 1851 even horsewhipping was beginning to go out of fashion. No doubt an argument could be made out for this custom, in theory, but as a practical measure it did not seem to moderate editorial passions, though not everybody was as unconcerned as Bennett, who published the account of one of his own unfortunate personal encounters in The Herald under the heading, "Horsewhipped Again."

By 1851, however, the traffic on Broadway had become so heavy that it was impossible to hold it up while rival newspaper proprietors belabored each other with malacca sticks, and emotion had to be expressed on the editorial page. There, to be sure, it flourished with intensity; "vile wretch," "profligate scoundrel," and "infamous reprobate" were terms commonly employed as designations of professional colleagues, and for decades thereafter the newspapers gave a good deal more editorial attention to each other's misfortunes and shortcomings than the relative importance of the topic deserved. Today, aside from one or two publications whose ethical standards are palaeolithic in other respects as well, the newspapers of New York usually have sufficient self-restraint to conceal their opinions of each other, and devote such editorial reference as they make to criticisms of specific views of a contemporary rather than to animadversions on its editor's personal appearance and moral character. No doubt this mollification of manners is all for the best, but veteran editorial writers complain that it has taken a good deal of the fierce joy out of the newspaper business.

The Times was by no means wholly free from controversies with its rivals, but except in one or two instances it did not carry this practise so far as was the custom, and thereby gave a pleasing instance to New York newspaper readers of the possibility of filling up a newspaper without recourse to the material of personal quarrels. Raymond was only once challenged to fight a duel (by an indignant Irish patriot) and a little diplomacy got him honorably out of that.

This paper which was produced under the difficult conditions described by Maverick consisted of four pages, of six columns each. The page was about a third shorter and a third narrower than a page of today's Times. There were morning and evening editions — the latter published at one and three o'clock in the afternoon; but there was only one Times. Neither the office files nor the memory of the oldest living members of the staff furnish much information about these evening editions, but apparently they contained merely the news arriving after the paper went to press at midnight, with the editorial, advertising and other features persisting in all editions. The evening editions, in other words, took the place of, and in time were supplanted by, the second, third and later editions which the improvement of newspaper mechanics presently made it possible to issue before daylight.

There was also in the beginning, and for years thereafter, a Weekly Family Times. Every daily paper had to have a weekly in those days for circulation on the farm, and in the case of The Tribune at least the weekly was largely responsible for Greeley's great influence. But with the extension of railroads it eventually became possible to get the daily paper circulated over a much larger part of the country than was possible in 1851, and after a long and respectable career the weekly edition of The Times was finally discontinued in the late seventies.

A Semi-weekly Times, chiefly for rural readers, lasted some years longer.

There was, besides, in the early days, a Times for California, put together whenever a mail boat happened to be sailing for San Francisco; and a Campaign Times issued in presidential years. The Times for California passed away with the rise of the California press, and the campaign edition, which was a weekly, died out for the same reason as The Weekly Family Times.

From the beginning The Times was a good newspaper. The first page of the first number is a good specimen of the art of newspapermaking as understood in 1851. In the first column, under the "masthead" containing the terms of subscription, and so on, is the heading, "The News from Europe." Single-column headlines were the invariable rule then, of course, as they were until a much later period; and the descriptive headline had not yet been invented. "The news from Europe" is preceded by a short summary, the opening lines of which illustrate the method of obtaining foreign news in that day:

The Royal Mail steamer Europa arrived at Boston yesterday, at about six o'clock. Her mails were sent on by the New Haven railroad train, which left at 9 o'clock, and reached this city at an early hour last evening.

evening.

By this arrival we have received our regular English and French files, with correspondence, circulars, etc., to Saturday, September 6—the Europa's day of sailing.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

The news by this arrival has considerable interest, although it is not of startling importance.

Then follows a brief summary of the news, and after that the news itself, under the headings "Great Britain," "France," etc. — most of it taken from the London papers. There are some three and a half columns of European news; then a column about a fugitive slave riot at Lancaster, Pennsylvania; the rest of the page is filled with brief local items, ending with perhaps a quarter of a column from Brooklyn. At the head of the local news is this paragraph:

The weather was the theme upon which we hinged an item for our morning edition, but we have been forced to forego the infliction of it upon the public, by the proceedings of the Boston Jubilee, which our special correspondent has forwarded us. Never mind, the President cannot always be lionizing through the country, and as soon as he returns home we shall endeavor to do this important subject full justice.

Other local items include the announcement that "the fountain in Washington Square gets on toward completion with moderate speed," and reports of the appearance of the bloomer costume in Greenwich Village. Two or three fires are chronicled, and under the heading of "False Alarm" The Times announces:

The Hall bell rang an alarm at 9 o'clock last evening for the Sixth District, but our item-gatherer failed to discover the first spark of a fire.

It must be recorded with regret that The Herald's "item-gatherer" did find that fire; but this did not establish a precedent. The Times's merits soon forced its way to recognition, and the circulation soon began to approach that of The Herald and The Tribune. Reviewing the first year of the paper on September 18, 1852, Raymond said that "it has been immeasurably more successful, in all respects, than any newspaper of a similar character ever before published in the United States." So far as public esteem was concerned that was unquestionably true, but if Raymond had stopped to consult Jones and Wesley he might have said "in all respects but one." The Times was not yet paying its way. Fifty thousand dollars had been spent at the outset for mechanical equipment. Newsprint paper was then as now the heaviest drain on the treasury (though, as paper, it was a good deal better in those days); of The Times's first-year expense more than half — $40,000 — was spent for paper; $25,000 for the wages of the mechanical and business departments; $13,000 on correspondents, editors, and reporters. The circulation at the end of the year was more than 26,000 - a figure highly creditable, in the circumstances; but the small size of the paper restricted the space available for advertising. rates were accordingly high, and advertisers saw no reason for paying extra to appear in The Times when they could reach as many readers for less money in the Tribune, Sun or Herald.

The stipulations of the articles of incorporation as to the division of profits were so far a mere exercise in fantasy. Raymond as editor of the paper received a salary of $2500 a year; Jones and Wesley had had only the privilege of putting in more money. But with the second year The Times took the plunge and doubled its size. It also doubled the price, going up to two cents a copy, and the circulation at once shrank from 26,000 to 18,000. But the extra pages gave room not only for more advertising, but for more news, and before long the loss in circulation had been more than made up. In 1857 The Times claimed a circulation of 40,000.

HENRY J. RAYMOND.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851–1859

Jones had managed the business during the first year, but then was constrained to take a trip to Europe on account of his health. Wesley had charge of the business office for some time thereafter, but in 1853 Fletcher Harper, Jr., was installed as publisher, having purchased some of Jones's and some of Wesley's stock. Harper, it seems, did not get along with the other partners, and in 1856 he sold out to them. By that time the paper was prospering; it appeared in some litigation in connection with this sale that the dividends were $20,000 a year, and Jones and Wesley paid $1666 a share for Harper's stock, the par value of a share being $1000.

Wesley sold out his interest in September, 1860, to Raymond and Leonard W. Jerome, the latter of whom served as "consulting director" until 1870. After Harper's departure, however, Jones had resumed the management of the business office, and the prosperity thus early established continued unbroken, under his direction, for more than a quarter of a century.

The Times's reputation for balance was almost upset only three months after its establishment, when Louis Kossuth came to New York to find in America, if he could, "material aid" for the renewal of the Hungarian struggle against Austria. Magyar-Americans of today may be surprised to learn that in 1851 the Times was the principal champion in America of the Magyar cause, but the Hungary of 1849 was not the Hungary of 1914. Raymond's enthusiasm over Kossuth - whose reception everywhere in America was remarkably favorable, and whose progress excited almost as much public interest as the movements of Joffre in 1917 - was unquestionably genuine, and sprang from a love for the principles of liberty and nationalism, for which Hungary had lately fought so gallantly. Also, it must be admitted, the arrival of Kossuth was the first big local news story after the foundation of The Times, and it was necessary to show New York what the new paper could do. As a result readers of The Times often found that of their twentyfour columns of news and advertising three or four would be devoted to a speech by Kossuth (sometimes with the postscript, "Remainder tomorrow") and another column or so to an account of his doings.

Nevertheless, the virtual adoption of Kossuth and Hungary by The Times was probably a good thing for the paper. Kossuth himself, after his return to Europe, acted for a time as London correspondent; and during his stay here Raymond was enabled to defend him—a grateful labor it must have been, too—against James Watson Webb, whose newspaper had taken on itself the function of advocate of the Hapsburgs and Romanoffs. The conflict between the two came to a head at a dinner given by the city to Kossuth on December 11, 1851, where Raymond had been appointed to respond to the "The Press - the organized Voice of Freedom - it whispers hope to the oppressed, and thunders defiance at the tyrant." As Raymond rose to respond to the toast and express the sentiment of the company, Webb also rose, of his own accord. From the editorial attitude of his paper it was clear that he was going to whisper hope to the tyrant, and thunder defiance at the oppressed. There was a good deal of confusion, and Webb was finally suppressed by the police. Raymond delivered his speech, and then entreated the audience to hear Webb on the other side; but Webb's remarks were drowned by hisses and hoots, and he was compelled to save them up and print them in his paper next day.

On another occasion in that first year Raymond's aggressive personality brought himself and his paper into prominence. The Whig National Convention met at Baltimore in June, 1852. Like the national conventions of both parties for years past, it was dominated by a vigorous and truculent group of southern leaders who were determined that neither the platform nor the candidate should be suspected of hostility to the extension of the "peculiar institution." Fillmore was generally favored by the southern delegates, General Winfield Scott by the northern; with a little group of willful men sticking to Daniel Webster.

The southerners had their way in every detail of organization and in the writing of the platform, but the northern leaders expected that their complaisance in this respect would be met by southern acceptance of Scott's candidacy. Raymond, who was present as the chief correspondent of The Times, mentioned this expectation in a dispatch to the paper during the balloting, and added, "If Scott is not nominated, they will charge breach of faith on the South." This was promptly telegraphed back to James Watson Webb from his paper in New York, and Webb at once gave the dispatch (which had somewhat misrepresented Raymond's language) to some of the southern leaders. The balloting for a candidate was interrupted on the last day by a demand for the expulsion of Raymond from the convention as the author of an infamous and false attack on the integrity of the delegates.

For Raymond was by this time a delegate, having been chosen by the New York representatives to take the place of a man who had gone home. At the time this was represented as a mere accident; but it appears to have been done with intent. Some of the northern leaders were disgusted and ashamed at their continual humiliations at the hands of the southern fire-eaters; and knowing Raymond as a brilliant orator of unquestioned courage, they had told a delegate from Oswego to go home and give his seat to Raymond. The offending dispatch and the intrusive Webb were consequently more or less accidental provocatives of a fight already arranged, to which both sides were looking forward — the southerners with confidence, the New Yorkers with trepidation.

Raymond's speeches on this occasion were a good example of his manner. At the beginning they were mild, conciliatory, almost evasive; he disclaimed any intention to charge a bargain between North and South; he had merely expressed his own opinion. But then he exploded into a declaration that he would assert and continue to assert his opinion that if the South did not meet the North halfway its delegates would be justly open to charge of a breach of faith, and he, Raymond, would charge them with it "here and everywhere." Then he turned on one Cabell, of Florida, a veteran bravo of the debating platform, who had volunteered to "put the Abolitionist in his place." In a moment Raymond had Cabell indignantly declaring to the chairman, "Sir, I cannot, I shall not, submit to language of that kind." Raymond replied, "Permit me to tell the gentleman from Florida that when he puts words into my mouth which I have not used, for the purpose of founding an accusation upon me, he will submit to whatever language I may see fit to use in repelling his aspersions."

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

It was the first time in many years that a northerner had dared to use such language toward a representative of the southern oligarchy. According to southerners present, this speech "not only annihilated Cabell at the convention, but he never got rid of its damaging effects when he got home." And a writer, evidently an eyewitness, who gave an account of the episode in The Albany Evening Journal after Raymond's death, observed:

From that hour the Whig Party assumed a new character, and its representatives (with a few disgraceful exceptions) a bolder attitude. . . . Mr. Raymond's clarion voice, on that memorable occasion, sounded the opening notes in the death knell of slavery.

This incident deserves some notice for the reason that in those early years Raymond's career was so largely identical with the history of The Times. it was not altogether so. In 1854 the Kansas-Nebraska Act had begun to split both parties at the North, and was preparing the way for the great organization which carried Lincoln to the White House only six years later. Raymond was nominated for Lieutenant-Governor by the Whig state convention in 1854 (to the great disgust of Greeley, who had wanted the office), but he had already been present as a delegate at an Anti-Nebraska convention, which accepted the regular nominations that had been forced largely by its threat of secession. The Whigs carried the state by a few hundred votes, and Raymond ran a few hundred more ahead of the gubernatorial candidate; but the editorial attitude of The Times was reserved during the campaign, and it certainly was never used to promote its editor's political fortunes.

Two years later Raymond's friends wanted him to become a candidate for Governor, but, as already related, he refused. Whigs and Democrats were uniting in the organization of a new party to prevent the further extension of slavery, and Raymond did not want his personality, or any recollection of old animosities either between parties or among Whigs, to stand in the way of that movement. The Republican party, as a national organization, had been established at an informal convention held at Pittsburgh in February, 1856, a convention which gave the call for the Philadelphia convention in June that nominated Fremont. Raymond was at Pittsburgh and wrote the long confession of faith on which the Republican party was established an able and convincing document, which showed no sympathy with the abolitionists, but did express the determination of moderate northerners to end the domination of public life by southern terrorism. This declaration, some 10,000 words in length, was telegraphed from Pittsburgh and published in The Times, but there was little in the paper about the doings of the Pittsburgh convention, and no editorial comment till long after Raymond's return. the campaign of 1856 The Times and Raymond took a prominent part, and from that time on for twentyeight years The Times stood in the front rank of the Republican journalism of the country; but whatever neglect the institution might have been able to charge against its editor when he straved aside into politics, it could never have accused him of making the paper an instrument of propaganda or a means to personal advancement.

Newspaper mechanics was an infant art in the fifties, and the papers of those days of course differed greatly in contents and make-up from those of today. Whether all the changes have been for the better or not is to be doubted. Considering the conditions, The Times in the fifties was an excellent newspaper — so for that matter were The Herald and The Tribune. The telegraph was coming into more and more general use, but still was something of a novelty, and an expensive novelty. "The latest by telegraph" was a heading apt to stand over a column or two of brief and heterogeneous items from everywhere, with most of the details coming along later by mail.

Local news was written much more in the editorial manner than is common today. If a reporter was writing about a spade he called it a spade, instead of describing it generally as an agricultural implement, or referring the responsibility for calling it a spade to the District Attorney. Sometimes, naturally, he was apt to apply the offensive designation of spade to something which was a mere trowel, and the local news probably lost in impartiality what it gained in piquancy. The editorial page was more opinionated, and more violent in the expression of opinion, than civilized editorial pages today. But, allowing for the different manners of the time, it can hardly be doubted that, however primitive the newspapermen of that time may have been, they had a keen scent for news.

An example from the early history of The Times: In September, 1854, the steamer Arctic was sunk in a collision in the North Atlantic, with a loss of several hundred lives. Rumors of the disaster had been prevalent for several days, after the steamer's failure to arrive had excited apprehension, but not till the night of October 10th did these rumors become precise. Even then nobody could find responsible authority for the report that the Arctic had been sunk, and the night city editor of The Times, having "put the paper to bed," climbed on a horse car to go home in the early morning hours, thinking that nothing more could be done. By one of those pieces of good luck which do happen to newspapermen more often than a skeptical world believes.

THE OCEAN TELEGRAPH.

VICTORY AT LAST!

VOL. VII....NO. 2155.

for the Norgans. As soon as the substance of his Queen's dispaired was known, these was a chapter of How the News Was Received Elvewhere. for-works from the Pewter Mug. THE FIRST MESSAGE.

The Rayor of Washington, the afternoop, east a measure to the City Councils recommending that measures he taken to celebrate the success of the The intulligence of the reception of the Queen's evidence of the meescalat working of the Atlantic quarters, hywaver, its authenticity was questioned, clated Press removed all Jendie. The first informatreaty, when the President refurned to the city Frone the manage from Her Majesty Queen Vierolion on the subject to the President was communicathd through Manelot Brazan, fram Information ob-ENGLAND GREETS AMERICA DUEEN VICTORIA graph will be celebrated in this city to morrow, as Abantle Telegraph. Special Committage ure ap-The specessful working of the Atlantic Tele-Besron, Monday, Ang. 15. selutate la agree on the programme.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

TRIUMPHANT COMPLETION

OF THE

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN,

Contracts, at moon, and all the bells in the city rang. manic will directed route on the Common. The follows One kundred guas will be ared on the buildings will also be Huminated, and four hands of ong with French and Chinese hetarus, all the city eidenne generally will also illumitate their real-

There is immeass excitement have owing to the MUIgence reached the city, enerels were fired from opposite the talegraph office, bonfres blassed to all the rocalpi of the Queen's Memage. As soon as the in-ALBANT, Monday, Aug. 36-103; P. M.

Control of the Control of Control A salute of one fundred goes will be first here theels, and the greatest rejoiding areaalied, Canat seven o'clock to-morrow mornion, and all the hatter cons are onw being fired and the bells are ringing.

rung, in bonnt of the successful working of the Ocean Telegraph. The news of the encessful working of the NAMES OF R. ASS. 18 - 16 P. M.

The 014 World and the New United.

GREAT WORK OF THE CENTURY.

land of joy. The bells were rung, asonon fred, states whistes blows, and the most jubilant exemp-Attanta Cabte and of the raceipt of the Quean's Manage was received here with frentle demonstra-

GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

These was a general aguitation bese on the recelpt of the Eucen's Mernigs. Cutmner and belle and cheers gave otterance to the general joy, walls The Message of Queen Victoria to President Ruchasans. To the Honorable the President of the United Her Majesty desires to congradulate the greef exultament throughout the City. St. Punits enthentam prevaile. Proparations for a President upon the successful completion of his great international work, in which the Horz.-The above Mussage was received by the President, with some double as to its Einers, Mentay, Any, 16-10 P. M.

Belly are sharing, as now firing, and manifests.

grand illumination are in progress, sufbenticity; but the matter was suffered of ill doubt by the following message from the neen has taken the deepest interest. .

he Wew-Dork Times.

NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1858.

and Stream and other united to be a contract of LATEST BY TELEGRAPH, INTERESTING PROM WASHINGTON. ONE WEEK LATER PROU EUROFE, COTTOR UNCEANORD—FROVISIONS LOWER Collision Belwegu the Europa and Arabia. The Burops at St. Johns, N. F. The Arabia of Cape Race.

Can of the first and different parts of the control of the control

The angle of the a A communication was received from T. Urma, Ir., defining the Committee to the showwagene with Freper vendents in the processing. Otherwagene with Free advocated and less day have the stay of the sta sice & Razerr's mall claim of $1,500,000. The claim-ents made a conditional contract, in 1853, for the con-The annoticement of the arrival of the Apanement is out to the paper to hand, but if we can possibly subser the parlimiters of her way, key aball he forhaper of pardos freed he existialized by any persons bomediately connected in the morder of British reted.) The rebetilon in Cantral India and been offectually we requested to and the same form is storing to the chief was the same statement.

The chief was the parallel problems and the chief was the c Covic Medica conductors in the first and make a finite conductors with the discount ball At the first and make a finite conductors at the first and make a finite conduction of an interest and any of first one on the large, in a finite conductor with the first and any of first one on the large in a finite conductor with any of first one of the large in a finite conductor with a finite con Days was still expectations at Park that the

are had been a large embartment of morpe day eneron-noune eigen en yng ynelfone be-while the opposes at that graltman are al-plare in force, and armed with statistics, doos-is and records which faster for they proleas our Collesier the reasonability of all City dis-consists the Descondatify of all City dis-

PRICE TWO CENTS.

New York Custom House Links in the Gent Warney-The Cauvage la Indiana-India Gen. Ctast may continue to cobduct the Indian Sepaint Banars left to day far the West. Ho things sor, of Indiane, will stone Illinets in support of a non Politics—The Mearagus Treaty-Mail Waterstee, Monday, Aug. 16, Gen. Haaner is not yet ordered to the Pacific. It is miderated that the Hon, Rectans W. Treats-Special Disputch to the New-York Times. Treasury Department.

Cunract Beelelen, de.

THE TIEDES OF DESCRIPT, CASS—A REPRODUCTION OF STREET, CASS—A VICES—III PERBOBAL PROULEMENTE.
WAITSHOW MOCKEY, AND. 14, 1838
The Illnaw of General Case of coorne again shifts. The revalvement yest is mercha again to til manklud. Pew politicians survive his attaces t. Bounants does the kard work of the De There is a proposed that the President will accord the amendments proposed by Mannaza to the Case3 sismal Treaty. The President is in excellent health, and will hold Gentral Watentibde and Jane Consarr tal an fageotlemen will de candidates for Cuogrem this Pall, and the Privations takes a Breiy interest to their sagbargain between the Pilimore Americans and lerriew to day on the New-York appointments, Belb.

Ceneral Cass attended at the State Department to.

ominions after the control of ann. It is not one to the control of ann. It is not one to the control of ann. It is not one to the control of ann. It is not one to the control of an annual to the control of annual to the c

A surrounder or to see crisis of the publication of the surrounder or to see crisis of the publication of the surrounder The property of the property o the control of the co with the Annie, copiered to bina Espain, and maded match the read of forces, that, and detailed by a notifier, the following the copiered of t Department of the Vanderbille, Callow of McWorfer Tunner. Callow of McWorfer Tunner, Callow of McWorfer Tunner, Callow of McWorfer Tunner, Callow of McMorfer Tunner, Callow of McMorfe of frees E. D. Schause, the Park Name of these E. D. Schause, the Park Name of the Park Name of the Park Schause of the Schause I to the Sange Perught spaces of the Sange Perught spaces, and the Name of the Nam yes days of Jean Tr. presented his claim, a gold, Fork Tre-1: The state of the s Library, "Dispension "The property of the prop Participated and account of the law of the name of the | Feb. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 The second forms of the second may be held in first and the second forms of the second The Constitute Frances residence of the constitute of the constitution of the constituti Williams Engage (Book), 11.

The Rena Text Note, proteining to their enforcement of their confidence of th Bother Bradents of warested and the first property of the first pr Canado Watters. Canado, Monday, Aug. 16. aparintendent of the Great of at Springeld, ILL at ? Seat we have been considered Congan was hald to the best of the second collection of the second Larsen Pricing Angle — Pental in sector, and her become from the perfect of the control of the control in granted from the control of the control of the large search from the control of the control of the large control of the control of the control of the the port and the field in the many manufact, in the port and the field in the many manufact, in the control of the field in the manufact of the little aleman is not the field in the manufact of the control of the little aleman is not the field in the control of the control o The Definees and Ohle Bead and the New-York and Belt and New-York Control Enthronds. Bure had desilined he foldfide, no effects. Pons was steady but innerties. Bacon, as a reduction of J p cont. The demand was increasing. The price of the p in the profession is produced and the profession of the profession matter. Demann, Spindler, Age Sander, earloted a fromention scrattement. Large bodies or non headed with bands of music paraded the stress! this evening, bondres were lighted, and halls were All Jull to the complete nocesse of the "Won-der of the Age," the forest Telepingh. We are cal-abusing it by Breworks, mode, and decoles. Huw-datasas, Monday, aug. 18.
The Queen's Memapy was received by the Mathough Mas at related the renals.
It caused 7. A sectioned, and the dischausers John Cammittee on the Telegraph Cubin-Letter from Com. Stewary and Capital Unyman. The Joint Committee assembled for the fifth re-cades on Menday, to the City Hall, Alderman Tool Medyares to the Chair. A talegraphic meanscaled on was resilved from Communication Bartan, of H. M. steem-sloop Govern, accepting the professed boughtship of the derest in he printed in the corporation on the forthcostale collectual of derest in he printed in the misuites. od to be printed in the misuter.

communication was received by tabagraph from intell bloomed Strucks, of the British Pury, delag sech horiginally, from the presence of other professional suggesmants, Ordered to be printed. Sv. Jozep, M. P., Baturday, August 1915, 1838, T. Machenschen, Sec. Committee of Common steel, N. Y. egrays. Often here and other buildings were bell-lianly illeminated. Cames see one filter, fage typing, bendres binging, and Vive new's been band to playing Boption and American octional airs to frant if the Telegraph Office. of the Busin's Meause have on-Wingsbann, Pa., Moddy, Aug. 18-11 F. M.
The now of the sterendal working of the At-lants Triegraph Cable, and the resign of the Queen's Kennge, produced the wiless treatlength. Scansour, Pa., Ang. 16-10 P.M.
The announcement of the racelot of the Queen's though our eiligene, Grand properations are being Somethrille Braze Band. Kagthe feils and whis-Upon the proute of the Queen's Message, the Tel-Message to President Abtuatan was received hare with the greatest eatherstoom. Gons were fixed, bells rung, mude, see. Erienaira arrengements are cam-Naturate, Tenn., Squar, July, 16. 16. Long Barnes, N. Y., Monday, Aug., 30. Innas, N. Y., August 18-19 P.M. plette for Mominating, &n., on Tuentay evaning. ring for half an hour to bonce of the great event. made for a releasation to marrow. and total to-marrow. winning platform as a special to have a content of an open of the special to the content of the special to the content of the special to the Admirel Heterast Scholand Scholand act professional and They are we follow The preschsome reliable establishment. They weithed, not the the the gas they walked the more the excitement incrussed. Wieceret regiding their may phosed open the Trust building, by you'dly created around it in saminable disorder—bose to the perificie of the aircle abouting to there means the crates of etters than, to reach it adout and these was the control abouting to the periphery, the hold for there and listen. With the engaged, the assumblety would wentilate some old papers, and announce the Massage. The eager crowd would buy them up repfelly, and ruth under a lump to perate them, and discover that they had been told. Then exother ballelin would appear, and another roth would be the recult. The Runkement Abent the Quenn's M. spinge The President's Regip.
Wannered Cer, Aug. 18, 184.
Re Majorty Victoria, Quan of Great Massage from the British to the Amer-DIRECTORS ATLANTIC TRESCRAPE COMPANY. operation of the allando Telegraph Catle was re-voiced yesterday, antil 10 o'plock ", night, when the The President condaily reciprocates the sengratulations of Her Majesty, the Queen, um the success of the great international enerprise scoonblated by the actones, skill, It is a triemph more giorious, because far sere undid to mankind, then was ever son May the Atlantia Telegraph under the petual pasce and triendably between the kindred nations, and an instrument dontined by Divise Providence to diffuse religion, clulies-tion, liberty and law throughout the world In this view will not all nations of Christenlon sponteneausly units in the declaration hat it shall be forever neutral, and chat its communications shall be held sacred to page, of their places of destination, even in the To the Directors of the Atlantic Tolegraph Company, Surope and America are united by teleraph. Glory to God to the highest; on earth and todamitable anengy of the two countries. blessing of Hegerca prove to be a bond of perwill be sont as boon as received.

A. MACKAY, Superintendent. JAMES BUCHANAN. From the time the first message conf. aming hausted by Cheir efforts, they augu oblige before harby seen the Prendant's senie. by conqueror on the find of buttle. peace and good, will towards men. midst of boatilities? (Signed) Burat Betratte. Rim Yest: British: Ġ

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851–1859

though not so often as the harassed reporter could desire, the editor's attention was attracted to a befuddled passenger on the horse car who was attempting to tell the conductor all about the terrible disaster at sea. The conductor, no doubt, was not so attentive as could be desired, nor was the narrator entirely clear in thought and speech. The editor did his best, but could overhear only a few disjoined phrases, among which were "Herald" and "bottle of wine." The first of these told him where the news had gone, and the second warned him that the prudent Herald staff had done what they could do to make it impossible for anybody else to get a coherent story from their informant.

But there was another way out. The editor hurried back to the Times building and had the presses stopped. The Herald was already on the press, beyond doubt; and a man from the Times press room, in whose ability to do difficult things everybody seems to have had confidence, was told to go to the Herald building and get the first copy printed. He returned presently and reported that the Herald press room was locked up and that the carriers who ordinarily distributed the paper before daylight had been shut out. The Herald, having a big exclusive story, had sent out its mail circulation, but had determined to hold up the papers for the city until an hour after all its competitors were in the hands of their readers - when the appearance of The Herald with this huge beat would be the more impressive.

The pressman was promised fifty dollars if he could get a copy of The Herald in spite of these obstacles; and by means not recorded by the ancient chroniclers, he did it. And there was the full story of the Arctic disaster by the first returning survivor, George H. Burns. The Times composing room staff was hastily reassembled — no doubt some of them were found in near-by and easily accessible gathering places such as the vigilance of Mr. Volstead has now abolished — and The Herald's story was reset and injected into the first page of The Times.

The Times city edition was circulated at the usual time the next morning, and no doubt when The Herald appeared an hour later many worthy citizens thought with contempt that it had merely lifted Burns's story from The Times. The next day a number of survivors arrived, and Raymond himself turned reporter and put himself under the city editor's orders for a task which, considering the limited facilities of the day, was about as hard as that which the Times staff confronted after the Titanic was sunk — and which was met as successfully.

Maverick, in recording this episode, appears to think it necessary to forestall criticism by saying that of course Burns had undoubtedly given his story to The Herald in the supposition that it would at once be communicated to all the other papers, and that in lifting it The Times was merely carrying out his wishes and thwarting an iniquitous competitor. Maybe so. At any rate, the night city editor was raised five dollars a week, which was quite a lot of money in those days.

The front page of a New York newspaper in the fifties was usually devoted for the most part either to telegraphic news of the doings of Congress and the administration, or to European news, of which a much larger amount was printed in proportion to the size of the paper than was dreamed of in recent years, until the war. In August, 1858, New York was in a frenzy of excitement over the successful laying of the first Atlantic cable, but that fragile connection survived barely long enough to endure some polite interchange of felicitations between Queen Victoria and President Buchanan, and then became unworkable. Not till almost a decade later was permanent cable communication established, and even in the Franco-Prussian War cable news consisted of little but a collection of brief official dispatches and announcements, with most of the news conveyed by mail.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

In the fifties it all came by mail, and an ingenious and elaborate technique had been evolved to get it as quickly as possible. Correspondents of papers and news associations in Europe sent their letters. their digests of current happenings, and the latest English or French papers by the last mail to the transatlantic steamers, which were met off Cape Race by pilot boats which took off the news dispatches. These were then taken ashore and telegraphed to New York, when this was possible; usually only the briefest skeleton of the latest news could be sent by wire, and the bulk of it had to come by train. More than once The Times's dispatches during the war in Italy in 1859 were published in a fragmentary condition, with the explanation that a telegraph operator at some relay point between New York and the Nova Scotian coast had closed his office and gone home for the night, leaving news dispatches to wait till tomorrow.

The news thus arriving would be headed somewhat as follows:

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE

Arrival of the "City of Paris"
THE NEW ENGLISH CABINET

And so on.

Other overseas mail correspondence to which much space was given was the news from California, where men who had gone to dig wealth from the ground were preparing the way for a race which should develop new possibilities in the exercise of the free imagination, and from Central America, where William Walker and his associates were valiantly trying to repeat the exploits of Pizarro and Cortez, and create the Golden Circle which would compensate the slave states for the prospective loss of control of the Federal government.

On the second and third pages were book reviews, and general articles something like those now appearing in newspaper magazine sections. The fourth page, editorial, began with a summary of the day's news, and usually included dramatic and musical news and critiques, besides leading articles. Very late telegraphic news was often put on the editorial page, or the page opposite. Local news and advertisements occupied much of the fifth, sixth, and seventh pages, and the last page was devoted chiefly to financial and commercial news and advertising. This is of course a generalized description, and any given issue of any paper might depart considerably from the type; but substantially this seems to have been the idea of a good newspaper in the fifties. And, allowing for the handicaps imposed by the immature mechanical development of the time, it is a pretty good newspaper even yet.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

Raymond is credited with the invention of the display headline in 1856, but ideas of display were more modest in those days, and found sufficient exercise within the limits of a single column. Even in the Civil War single-column heads sufficed. The Times on April 4, 1865, for example, told of the capture of the Confederate capital under a single-column head as follows:

GRANT RICHMOND

and

VICTORY

This was in the first of the six columns; in the last was the story of the effect of the news in New York, of course with its own head; and the four columns between were filled in with a cut of the American eagle, somewhat precariously grasping his thunderbolts, his olive branch, and Richmond all at the same time. Lee's surrender was displayed with a single-column head, and so was Lincoln's death—which The Times, for the guidance of its readers, described in the top line of the head as an "Awful Event." On great occasions the telegraph editor sometimes found it desirable to attract attention by beginning his head with the admonitory line, "Highly Important News," but not till the days of the Tweed ring, when The Times had the biggest local exclusive story that had ever come to a New York paper, did the headlines go beyond a single column. However, display headlines, and even descriptive headlines, are an acquired taste, as is evident from the fact that most of the world outside the United States still gets along without them. The newspapers of the fifties afforded little consolation to those who want to read the headlines because they lack the time or the intelligence to read the news; they were published for people who had time to spend on finding out what was going on. It may be that our generation prefers to read the headline "Manning, Elevated to Bishop, Voices Curb on Radicalism" (to select a recent example, not from The Times), rather than look into the article in the hope of finding out exactly to what, and in what sense, Dr. Manning was elevated, and just how a curb may be voiced. Perhaps this preference is natural and inevitable, an outgrowth of the spirit of the time, whatever that is. If so, as Henry Adams said about life, one may accept it without feeling the necessity of pretending to admire it.

The Times was never (with the conspicuous exception of its campaign against Tweed) a crusading paper. It has on occasion done its share in exposing conditions that needed correction, but it does not select this one out of many activities of a good newspaper as a life work. It crusaded occasionally and mildly in the fifties, but after the time of Kossuth it never lost its balance. In 1856, for example.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851-1859

it gave a good deal of attention to the condition of the streets, and seemed much encouraged when public indignation was aroused and an attempt was made to compel the city government to give back a little service in return for unlimited opportunity of peculation. They had much to learn in the fifties; not for forty years were New York streets to be measurably improved, and the art of snow removal is far from perfection even yet.

In 1857 James W. Simonton, then Washington correspondent of The Times, exposed a magnificent scheme of land-stealing and corruption in connection with the extension of railroads into Minnesota. The affair seems to have been conducted in the grand manner, very much as the similar enterprise described in "The Gilded Age." The House of Representatives was outraged in its finest sensibilities by Simonton's charges that four of its members were corruptly involved, and he was summoned before a Congressional committee for proper rebuke. By the time the committee had finished with Simonton it had been compelled to admit that he was telling the truth, and to recommend that the four guilty men be expelled.

Soon after Simonton was sent across the plains with General Albert Sidney Johnston's expeditionary force against the Mormons. To the regret, perhaps, of certain persons, among them newspaper editors eager to show how ably they could cover a war, Brigham Young came down as promptly as Davy Crockett's coon. Simonton went on to California and was lost to The Times. But another and greater war was on hand, and The Times added greatly to its prestige by its efficiency in giving the news of the war in Italy in 1859.

Raymond covered that war himself, ably assisted by his Paris correspondent, Dr. W. E. Johnston, who, following a custom prevalent then and till much later, wrote over the pen name of "Malakoff." The most brilliant incident of Raymond's career as a war correspondent was his evewitness account of the battle of Solferino, perhaps the best of many admirable pictures of the war which The Times published. Solferino displayed not only Raymond's ability as a writer but his talent as a news editor. In those days the press of the world was divided into two classes. In Class I, alone and unapproachable, stood The London Times; the other newspapers of Europe and America differed only in their degree of inferiority — at least, in the public estimation. A London Times correspondent was of course Solferino, apparently as essential a part of the battle as the three sovereigns who honored it with their personal attention; and Raymond knew that when The London Times with this man's account reached New York every editor would feel that the definitive and decisive story had arrived. Raymond decided not only to have as good a story as The London Times, but to beat it to New York - a feat which of course would have to be accomplished by mail. Through "Malakoff's" influence Raymond's dispatch, written among the wounded in Castiglione while the guns still sounded a few miles away, was taken to Paris with Napoleon's own dispatches by a French military messenger, and given to Mrs. Raymond, then at a Paris hotel. With it were directions from her husband to put it on the first steamer leaving either England or France for New York. Mrs. Raymond seems to have been a pretty good reporter herself, in emergencies; thirty hours later she put her husband's dispatch on the Liverpool mail boat with her own hands. At that moment The London Times, whose story had come up from Italy by the same messenger, was just appearing on the streets in London; but it missed the New York mail and arrived ten days after Raymond's account of the battle had been published.

GEORGE JONES.

Solferino may serve as an illustration of the slowness with which European news reached New York in those days before the cable. The battle was fought on the 24th of June. On July 7, under the heading "The War in Italy-Advices Three Days Later," The Times published the batch of news brought on a steamer leaving Ireland on June 26. The beginning of the two columns of news announced that the steamer had been "boarded off Cape Race by the news yacht of the Associated Press," which took off "the synopsis of news prepared by our Liverpool agent." This reached St. John's, Newfoundland, on July 4, and managed to get to New York by telegraph on the 6th. "Our Liverpool agent's" synopsis closed on June 23, and consisted mainly of official announcements in Vienna and Paris that a battle might be fought, would be fought, but had not yet been fought. Down below all this, an inch or two above the bottom of the column, appeared a modest item dated in Paris, on June 25, and headed "The Very Latest by Telegraph to Galway." It contained Napoleon's dispatch to Eugenie announcing the decisive victory at Solferino.

This dispatch, of course, had been mentioned in the headline — three or four banks below the top and it was handled editorially with a due sense of its importance. The leading article was an admirable analysis of the campaign and drew from very scanty material inferences fully justified by the event. But the custom of printing the news first received at the top of the column and letting the later dispatches follow in chronological order had a strong hold on newspaper tradition. Not till the seventies did it occur to some enterprising journalist that it might be a good idea to put the latest or most important news at the head of the column. The next mail boat brought Raymond's and "Malakoff's" dispatches, which The Times published on July 12 again with the first dispatch first, and the story of Solferino trailing along toward the end. The Times that day gave up two of its eight pages to news and correspondence from the war. As early as 1852 it had devoted seven of its 24 columns to the news of the final day in the famous Whig convention at Baltimore (and this without any undue prominence for Raymond); and in 1856 nine columns of the 48 (including the whole front page) were one morning given up to the publication of the full text of correspondence in a diplomatic dispute with England. Whether these displays were disproportionate is a matter of taste.

Raymond's feats, however, were not the only source of distinction for The Times in the Italian war. Quite as much attention was aroused by an exploit on the internal front which tradition ascribes to William Henry Hurlburt, whom Raymond had left in charge of the editorial page. On the morning of July 15, 1859, this gentleman was one of a party who saw a friend off on a steamer. The party spent an enjoyable morning, and then Hurlburt went to the office to write an editorial about the Quadrilateral, the famous Austrian fortress group to which the armies of Francis Joseph retired after the defeat at Solferino. Apparently his mind wandered from time to time - now to the cabinet crisis in England, now to the new fortifications of Paris, and now to the social morning just ended. The result appeared on the Times editorial page the next morning under the heading, "The Defensive Square of Austrian Italy." Future sociologists of this well prohibited republic are commended to a study of this article.

The Times proofroom was then regarded as the best in New York, but a few days before that a proofreader had ventured to change a word in one of Hurlburt's editorials, and had been ordered, with much indignation, never to do so again. He read this article on the Quadrilateral, and found therein such expressions as the following: "If we shall follow the windings of the Mincio, we shall find countless elbows formed in the elbows of the regular army." . . . "If we follow up the course of the Mincio, we shall find innumerable elbows formed by the sympathy of youth."... "Notwithstanding the toil spent by Austria on the spot, we should have learned that we are protected by a foreign fleet suddenly coming up on our question of citizenship. A canal cuts Mantua in two, but we may rely on the most cordial cabinet minister of the new power in England."... "The Adige is deep and swift at Verona; Paris is strong in her circle of fortifications." Along with much else which was plausible and often accurate.

Whereupon the proofreader remembered that he had been forbidden to touch a word of Hurlburt's copy, and the article was printed as written.

Next day it was reprinted as it ought to have been written, with an apologetic note that "by a confusion of manuscripts sent up at a late hour" a regrettable error had occurred; which, The Times admitted, had furnished "a happy occasion for airing a little envy, malice, and uncharitableness to the less respectable among the daily journals." A friend of Raymond's reports that when he read this article in Paris, weeks later, he "denounced it," as was natural enough; but did not disavow it. This generosity is praiseworthy, but it would have been rather late for a disavowal by that time.

So by the opening of the Civil War The New York Times (the "Daily" had been dropped from the title in 1857) had already won itself a place as one of the great papers of America. Also, it had prospered. As early as 1855 it claimed the honor of being second only to The Herald in circulation, and by the end of its first decade nobody in the Times office would admit that it had any superior.

The original quarters were long since outgrown. As early as 1854 The Times had begun to think of moving, but when plans for a new home became more definite the paper had reached such a degree of prosperity that it was possible to build on a more magnificent scale than could have been hoped a few years earlier. The first Times Building—first, that is, of those which the paper built for itself—into which the paper entered on May 1, 1858, occupied the triangle between Park Row and Nassau and Beekman Streets, on the spot where the second Times Building, erected in 1888, still stands. The growth of the paper in recent years led to the erection of the Times Building in Times Square, and then of the Times Annex in West 43d Street, which already is uncomfortably small; and each of the four homes of The Times has in its turn been the finest newspaper building in the country.

BEGINNINGS OF THE TIMES, 1851–1859

The structure which seemed so magnificent in the fifties would of course be somewhat commonplace today, but in its time it was far superior to anything ever built for the accommodation of an American newspaper. For its erection a sixty per cent assessment was levied on the stock, and all profits above twenty per cent a year were set aside for the time being for a building fund. The Times was making money - enough money to justify its owners in what then seemed to some of their contemporaries a rather hazardous investment in unnecessary luxury. The five stories of the Times Building rose to the dizzy height of eighty feet above City Hall Park, and from the windows of the top floor, as Maverick wrote, "the upper part of New York is spread out before the eye in one grand panoramic view."

CHAPTER II

Civil War and Reconstruction, 1860-1869

RAYMOND, as has been said, seems to have been somewhat ashamed of his ability, even rarer in that day than at present, to see both sides of a question, and felt that it sometimes gave him an appearance of irresolution. Probably the fault was more evident to him than to others. Certainly in the great crisis that led up to the Civil War, and throughout the war itself, there was nothing irresolute or Laodicean about either Raymond or his paper; and the disfavor into which both fell for a time in the early days of reconstruction was due to the fact that Raymond happened to be right when the majority was wrong.

The oldest living member of the present Times staff dates his connection with the paper from some years after the close of the Civil War. Probably every member of the staff of 1860 is dead; certainly all the men who contributed to the formation of an editorial policy which in all its essentials was directed by Raymond himself. Present workers on The Times may be pardoned, then, for expressing a somewhat impersonal admiration for the manner in which the paper met the crisis. It was firm in a time when there was a great deal of irresolution; but what was a rarer virtue, it saw the issues clearly in a period when loose thinking was even more general, and perhaps more destructive, than weakness of will.

Raymond had no more sympathy with Phillips and Garrison and the rest of the abolitionist radicals of the North than with the sabre-toothed fire-eaters of South Carolina. While some other New York papers took the occasion of John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry to offer the South some words of warning as to the constant danger of insurrection that was an inevitable concomitant of slavery, The Times dwelt rather on the fact that the slaves had not joined Brown's party, and called the raid itself the work of either "irresponsible anarchy or wild and reckless crime." Raymond was entirely in sympathy with the moderate attitude on slavery which was held by most thinking men at the North. did not admire slavery; and eventually, in the letters to Yancey, which will be noticed below, he did go at some length into the difficulties and dangers which the institution might be expected eventually to bring upon any society by which it was tolerated. But he felt that slavery in the South, though objectionable on moral and political grounds, was a southern question; the great issue of the day was not slavery but the slave power in politics, and the struggle with that power was indeed an irrepressible conflict.

In the campaign of 1860 The Times was one of the leading Republican papers of the country, and though it favored Seward for the presidential nomination, from first to last it displayed a degree of confidence in Abraham Lincoln that was not universal among Republicans of the East. It may be supposed that in a period of such violent political emotions and such important issues the natural tendency of a newspaper to find unsuspected merits in the candidate of its party would be strengthened; but The Times was not content with expressing its own confidence in Lincoln, it quoted copiously from his speeches of the past as well as reproducing those of the current campaign, and did its best to give the East a proper picture of this man whom an overruling providence, or the accidents of political manipulation, had set up as the candidate of the Republicans. At the same time, its treatment of Stephen A. Douglas won from that gentleman an acknowledgment of "the courtesy and kindness which it alone of the New York journals has shown me."

After the election, when the secessionists at last began to put their theories into practise, Raymond set forth his idea of the national issues in a series of four letters to William L. Yancey of Alabama, whom he regarded as at that time the leading spirit in the secession movement, and who had provoked him by a letter to The Herald. Those letters, published in The Times during November and December. 1860, are perhaps the ablest of Raymond's writings. and after the lapse of sixty years still furnish perhaps as satisfactory an analysis of the underlying issues of the Civil War as has ever been compressed into this space. "We shall stand," Raymond wrote in his concluding letter, published after South Carolina had already seceded, "on the Constitution which our fathers made. We shall not make a new one, nor shall we permit any human power to destroy the old one. . . . We seek no war -- we

The New-York Times.

VOL. X....NO. 2983,

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1861.

PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE WAR COMMENCED. Seem director has the practically septiate but

The First Cun Fired by Fort and Per Johann bang the any for operation held in practive. Moultrie Against Fort ter of cusemats ordnance. THE BOMBABOMENT CONTINUED ALL DAY. sumpter.

The fight in going on with interne carnestness, The encitement to the community is indescriband all day every available place has been througed able. With the very first boom of the guns thougands runhed from their both to the harbor front, by helies and gradeness, riewing the speciacio and will continue all night. Spirited Beturn frem Major Anderson's Guns.

The lelllest and patriotic conduct of Major An-Persons speaks for laself. through their glasses. The Firing from Fort Suppler Ceased or the Night

Bushess is entirely employed. Only these stores open necessary to supply articles regulasi by the Army Mortificier to Commence Again at Drylight.

Gev. Picking has all day been to the residence of a gentleman which commands a view of the whole some-s meet interacted observer. Gen. Havenegan commands in parson the mults The Correspondence which Preceded hav " ... and for a Surrender and Major the Rembardment Andersons Referal.

It is reported that the Barriet Lene has received a abot through her whosihouse. She is in Troops are pouring into the town by handspids, the offing. He other Covernment ships in sight up to the present moment, but cheeld thay appear the cotins rather is batteries will open upon the

THE RELIEF FLEET OFF THE HARBOR.

but are beld to reserve for the present, the force already on the island being upple, People are the arriving every moment so herseback, and by CEANAGENS, Friday; April 25-6 P. H. overy other conveyance.

Capt. B. S. Paneza brings disputches from the How the News is Beecived in Washington.

Senator With all in sense manner bers die. feeting betiery, stating that up to this time only two have been wounded no Sollivas's Island. He had to row through Mayer Anomastic's warms fre in a small bent. The betterfee of Sullivan's Island, Morris Island, and scher points, were opened as Port Sumpler CRARLESTON, Priding, April 18, The ball has opened. Wer is lassgumbed. OUR CHARLESTON DISPATORIES. nd d e'elrek this mersing

Fort Soupter has returned the fire, and . brisk emponeding has been kept up. No informatter has been received from the seaboughyee. The millary are under arres, and the whole of our population are on the streets. Every avail. also space facing the harbor is filled with explora patches to Marris Island, through the fire from Senator Chickey, another member of the sent of Gen. BRAUMERARD, fired a gun, by way of encement, from Moner Pleasent, which made a Fort Sampter.

The fetter has condinsed all day without intellilarge hals to the paraper.

Monitrie, the Storem and Plouting Battery, them To L. P. Waandn, Becretary of War:

Major Arranton in at present teing his lower

PORT, AND TO RAY IN REPLY THERRITO, , too exert to be time speedly reduced by any bal-THAT IT IS A DEMAND WITH WHICH I way in the picklession of the memy. The motive REGRET THAT MY SERIES OF BONDS AND "Prefably I will await the first abot, and if you, do not batter as to pieces, we will be starred out HY OBLIDATIONS TO MY GOVERNMENT WILL PREVERF MY COMPLIANCE. He adds: in a few days."

Memberson, April 12. G. P. DIAMPOAND, Be. 1.

If, Savan and the President have concilled frequently with the frequent dislement here conissul and Prance, it is well quelescental that there is ne spropulty whatever for the Boats. Lord Lrous erys that he sees no beneaft to be derived by the coming the present condition of our national of English Government, or any foreign Power, from the cohremacy of its people; that there is, of course false and the course of their respective Governmente. On the part of the representatives of Eughis gune ngulnet no uniess ours should be emplayed sgrind Port Sumpter. Ton um thas to evald the effecton of blood. If this er its squiretest be teftaed, reduce the first as your judgment Wade not desire needlandy to bembard Fore Sumpler, if Majer Arrangen will etate the time and spree that, in the meantlane, he will not use of which, as indicated by him, he will eracusts, Con. Bransagano-Charleston > decides to be the most practicable.

(Bigned) L. P. Wallers, Secretary of War. W. 10.

na prospect of foreign supremery on this condi-nent in any overt; while Beginsh and the United himpels, that misformen to the is dissector to the other to all policie of material interests. The States have become to straigly united in mutual Boftham Completioners had reason to discover HE WOULD NOT COMBINE. I with to-day. Cantingent, April 19. U. P. BEAVERSARY. L. P. WALKER, Socretary of Wer.

hees facts while in Weshington, and have probe bly given Davis and his competricts some new idees not at all flatfaring to their vanity and visions of chimnels proceed. Cutatores, Prilay, April 11. Intercepted dispetches, disclose the fact MR. POX'S VIELY TO TOST SUMPTER.

The report that R. A. Paron, of Ph. gives color to the runor that mysted over-parties had talk illelymost for Olmifesten, to Assumes in the pinke that his purpose was platfie, implying that MS reportually be derive a plan for registrating the derive to plan for registrating the state of the plan had been adopted by the "confidence Correspond, and with his propries of expectation. that Mr. Fox, who had been allowed to vielt Major sen the rabel Spread Under the circumstances. get miy celd combat hen Mr. Lestons, elthough tration cannot disclose its purposes while a rebaithe Virginia Committee who arrived to day, will they will be trizifed courteerally, as the Adminithem army in opposing he person. Dispatches have come have to had the Day friely Telection for given in realizate to prove at money to prove the money of the prove at monestic notice from the War Daystrasast at THE RESTRICT VOLUMENTURE INDUSTRIES. EXCITEMENT IN MOSINE.

The disableance of this fact is apparent when his remembered that the test of financial stundance of the $1,000,000 Trearmy Nosts, hand by the wern taken "by the Beerntarbes of Wer and the &c. Have you noticed, also, that the vary first Previsional Community of the second States, Tressory in payment of their quarter's solaries." Yes companies of the Second Corniry are or Should the serne of techight he confirmed, the Pestmanter-General will mapped at once all mail THE VIALITORS' MAINS TO ME SPOTTER. mmmpleations with the robbl Blates.

There is intense excitement and rejecting how.
Fifteen grass been been fired in houve of the attack on Part Shungtar

The man is one perfect then is the months.

circulating to the city.

Two of Port Hampler's grass have been adenced, and it is expected that a broatch has been made in

by. Many fragments of these misufies are abundy Quite a outaber been been etruck by syent places of shell and knocked down, but none hart serious sent Denoces of the State of New-York who intedes connection with the present military more deal remains in the following in the connection to the minute to the city.

Monta, Priving, April 12.

APPLIES IN STATEMENT OF CONSECUTION APPLIES. set the dentis of the fight at Chaisston, but very state has lashed on except the includes antimene flast, the fighties begun. The last remove no the states is that

Mockeds of the forts of Rio Hachs, Sants Marts Carthagens and Zapola, in the Atlantic, these fort being in the comptain possession of the revels tonists, So fer so the Pacific is concurred, the fund of Burnetestars, Turasco, etc., have been partially with which to render effective to ment decea There is little probability of an extra session of oblivies. I could multiply a dozen each instances Conginer. As was telegraphed you yestarday, enument has all the power which Congress needd thate is no necessary for such a results. The Ger-SO SETTA SECTION OF DORITION. to my experience of to-day. breach has been effected hit the walls of Port discredit on the whale story, as Pert Bumplar is Bumpter. Military men beire ong 1f this statement is part of the Associated Press paws, it throws

DEMANDING THE EVACUATION DF THE

THE RECEIPT OF YOUR COMMUNICATION

"I HAVE THE HONOR TO ACKINGRARDER

Mey, Arraugest veptles.

CELEBRATE, MASSILL

The Government of New-Granada has an form blockaded for the past six months or more, by sma emfar, except the money.

of the statement that a breach has been effected, that the whele affair would be ended before rein-forcements could arrive. The curmies is elemenththe transports sa Charleston, se there can be no doubly that some of these resched there before Oth. The President is analogs but culm ar this trying here of responsibility, confident in the recbride of his course, and he approved by the people.

is copposed to to the country the President from expeting inditional fasces there on the idea vessels fitted out at Panana-but I believe this ests, although It does as indirectly, as the bartneet of the Paname Railroad is somewhee beganed by any disturbances affecting the trade of the does not directly much concern American inter-Legislature. Were it to be called together cow, it could do nothing more to maintain the national Until the thats of Treasnry Notes is resulted, the Correspond to the disposal as its waste are likely to origanst before the regu-ler peried for the assembling of the National HOFFE PLESTY.

exect by the fallune to get men, of the arrival of

United States District. Attenney, Richard R. There was a great rosk at the White Rouse to gain solutiones on account of the entiting bewa. The entire remainder of the Boston apagain to day of office-seabors. Most at them falled pointsonnis were made, to day, es follows : UPARATED RUGBINGS DESCRIPTOR. Nay Agent, Boomes L. Honron. Sureyor, Crances A. Prince. is might seriously jeoperdize the early success of the Generalized forces by nambearbut exciting lebaten. In the hands of a present, just and delagrity is much eafer than experience has proved henor than Mr. Lincoln is now deing, while sided Fresident, and an intelligent and barmonious Cubinet, the national heaver and the national inis would be to the heaplog of Congress.

PERMISS ASSTRUCT OF SPECIALION.

The alleged imperfections and improdumes of OKUKAL WASHINGTON BEWR. TRE MORRILL TARIFF ROY BA RAD.

Markel, Jose B. Kerm. A strong, but moscosaful effort to dishes this The crowd of How-York office-watern is in-creating. Caramar A. Brancos deales that he be bem étémded, are fençe to be largely staggarded, if not milhely unfounded. Mr. Sanner upontes the Martil Tariff, upon which en extra session has

The following additional appointments here e candidate for Marahal, or any other office. seen made for California : kew with his present force, said that he provisions ove quite to explicit to ruch have on sensity me that to will find no difficulty in executing the made, and that the changes from the previous > posed. A gualistean from Maryland told one tothy that the new tariff was delag much to keep that State loyal. He represents the fron and cost See a factor of the factor of the second of North Curelina. In both of which States the mis-get as an an activist and guests as is my Ribretta of the State, and he thinks the same

Collector at Bonchton, B. W. Byrnay., Collector at Bunich, B. M. Swarr., Collector at San Diego, Journa Bloarr., Collector of Monterey, Jour T. Poners. Collector at San Padro, Optian Magr. Apprehen, Jone P. Karn.

Waterest, Friday, April 13. The Virginia Commissioners arrived in this C? WE. BELL has been appointed Postmarter DIRPARCE TO THE ARROGATED PRINGS Great Balt Lake City, Diah Turrilory. The figures ambummenents of the "Confeddisputed in Particular and Particular Standard in systematics in the Particular and Particular a G. C. P. Balewin, Martin, and Contra Horn, Al-Bit morning, and during the afternoon they visit the President, not in their efficial expansity, and we received by him Obestly after the Cabbast see Sistes are being "upportioned emong" (that is, werd open) the Banks of Maw-Orleans, Mobile, turn. Testerday's Trans expeed some of the orl-duces of the perindicy transles of secsolar by 000 of the $15,000,000 loan of the Confederate ralling public attention to the fact that the $5,000, and the top are beinging themselves of every

PERSONAL SPECIAL CONTRACTOR PRINCES

ing interests on fast becoming paramount.

TRIDDILL TRAINER

Ances C. Arren, Martini, and Ro. O. Baarour Howey for Delivere. Letters O. Varea, Prefession at Mariness

Prices brangers will the tands it explose to the property of the control of the c refact has florest plates and predessed superplace of surprise billigation and rejectionly assemble to the anders of the maled to which they were breaght. Bu-justices were recedent states that President Downs had, after courtletten with he Chokles, strenet Gen. Beartheann in allow unseclested parage of the localists by the report of the commencement of anomaly a positive of Tablesian the name of the first deposition of Charlesian this name of the very

The form was there and twee exclusion faring of Major Arramstor, that he has a much There have been two rule stories during the Everybody is in a forment. Some at those fight-

It is also thought, from the regular and frequent

Mark a careaty has per depended in my of the most.

Of the adaptem hetteries in position only seven are spened fire as Port Stumpler, the remainder larger force of men than was supposed. At any rate, to is fighting bravely.

day, but without effect upon the battle.

Two thousand men resched this city this moreing and embanked for Motris Inland and the neigh-Cuanarum, Priday, april 12.

es held in reserve for the expected fleet.

tonight by the report of the com-

Wanteren, Prider, April 12.

Press agent at Charleston, gring all the partien-lers of the compandence between Radymeans and Major Ambraton, the commensagest of the ottack by the Becessionists, and Ammagar's re-

THOM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Ing hostile ferra-dare and neem to have improved his judgment at thenes to come as wide at the mark at over. In all in the matter of foundal estimates, for he cenconvenention referred it, he expressed the spinits, that the revenous of the Treasury would

Principal interface and the principal control of the principal control he only about $1,000,000 per month; that, under $33,000,000, while the expenses of the Government mean be about $65,000,000, the Treamy most be this stars of facts, the funds would be speedily mheneted, and that, so there is suchetty to borrow only $17,000,000, which, with the $1,000,000 per menth for the enough year, would foot up only harilites of Universe all marmles at a clotch. The first depaths from the sent of war were the same on heaven of the profess sewer of recent he hall old public 7 effects has reciple, parts and hallet of provides at New Rougher. The extrement cause is the marger baildings. The same same to add from the American Public wars possed at the principal heavis, where impunes entwis galacted to the amount need. at to the east, there was to infinite verify of conjection at to the samble specified. The public sentiment is very decided that in the way has prove to be legs to my that while there was but one opinion

On victor.

The serve was posted at unce in all the hotels, and the wildow sense of excitances envoed.

The following is the telegraphic correspondence between the Wes Department of Mengomewand Gen. Baarapaans immediately praceeding eponse from his batteries.

CRAMMENT, Priday, April 18,

DEPOSTABLE CORRESPONDENCE PRECEDURG

is a restricted to the walet.

THE BOMBARDMEST.

The Blocket when and Stephene Bellany are persting freely, and warming the R is reported that there was realth the temberdment of Port Sumpley continues.

Among the Union men here there was general rejefcing that an laste was made at lest, while me was at once taken to the White Rouse. All vie-lers will be excluded, and the Cabinet symmetric to ewell further information and act open it. One

The currently before over met at the formal natilication by the Washington Government, which the Property

The first has coased the the nift, but will he spected of doylight in the mernings bless on at sant is made to reinforce, which and armage-

1

The Parents, Harriet Lines, and a thirt parent

mente have been made to rapel. the reported off the bur.

la disclossed in Gen. Beavengann's first dispatches.

.O. 1.1

Government, at all haunda;

cour, jost informed Gov. Proxime and seyed! thet

An authorized messenger from President Linprovisions will be sent to Port Sumpter percently,

I. P. WAKER, Secretary of War:

CRAMMON, April 6.

amalt forther nows.

new Tariff are allowed to remain. Unless a war chall occur, Government is Utaly to how abundant offection of Senhart riples were in he foast.

There is in functions for the imp stories shall be formulated in the formulation for the imp stories in the formulation in the formulatio intilized any rath purpose. He has enterthined to grapess but le malishik possession of the Gen-erment property and editors the laws. All priorests that megalations were on-tend upon for the departure of Major-Armend were mere franklight . REVEN THUBERT OF SPACEARIOS.

within one days other Mr. Lawcone's Insugeration. If evidence were wanting of this, is would be found upon the contligency of eracustim. It was fixed got up for the purpose of covering paintent defeats. The policy of the Administration notes depended In the fact that the Government was propered to dispatch such quantities of same and material as laff the port of Maw-Pork within foor days, thing I am certain of, from positive knowledge-that if this hat information proves true, the Ad-ministration will empore Assessor and his A crowd assembled at the telegraph effice to Everyone had been writing englously all day for course, with the whole power and means of the the report of an attack upon the Government supply messle, which it was escentahed lass evening would probably approach Charleston harbor some time during the alght or this morning. The surprise

The tapid chiment of supplies, men and muni-tions was the result of forthought and previous preparation—the and at means long before ma-tured. The Government confense to results m-PORKYROGERY OF THE ADMINISTRATION—FIRE expect. necessioned by the report from repeated dispatches that they had experted the harbor without molesta-lation, and water landing the supplies without any difficulty, present or apprehensive, created nearly > year B. Washington, Government to supply as ever by force, year will at some demand each man, and if this is refused, proceed in Answer. you may determine to reduce R.

bers no doubt of the unihodered character

P. T. Braunscane, Charleston:

ent who communicated to you the inter-

Promps arrive heatly. Every hales in guarded.

Thete are lively times fore.

ennool get in. The souls rough.

Canxageon, Priduy, April 12.

Monrossers, 10th.

G. F. Brathmand. [No. 2.]

(Signed,)

The bombardness is still geing on every twentier etherwise by force.

Canadonner, Pristay, Spril 1th

Troops are arreing by originals state root pirotae from our motiver. It is supposed that Three vessels of was are reported orbide. They Rebody is hert. The fleshing battery works well.

its jet Aunungen is realing his ment for the night.

restricts of the popularity of the measures is had taken until the same of all parties. I'ver tabling with a gentlemen from Maryland this evening, who unsured me that the stope taken to maintain the the. The President was inference by dispercions to three different parties, amounting the safe land-ing, ratil be feasily concluded that they ment be cornect, and that botton course is ware prevailing Mr. Lancolar commerced the Cabinet together the per graeft an excitement ar the later reports of bat-

CANDIDA COUNCILA.

among the Southern men.

L. P. Walker, Br. Cassarres, April 18, The demond with of Was: Signed; to-morrow at 17 o'clock.

The morter bottenien will he playing un Part Oril was bas at best befres. A terrible fight is ter, to alph, se a many is new rapids.

L. P. WALKER, Soc. of War.

1218

There are reviving times on the "Palmette It is nearly impossible to relateice Fort Shmp-

The Lines on Fort Sumpler continues.

Cannerson, Priday, April 15-9 4. M.

pose they are admirally effected : no "wooden walls" could withchead the fire from their batteries, or do themselves harm; but a well-mainlesd five from different points on the adjacent shores, it is majataland, will reduce them both in time,--mless they have men enough and grass enough to promptly demoulab the assemble forte. upremary of the General Government had done more to eithe seconden to his Shale other all the comprendice propositions. He was at home year flot had taken place in the harbor of Charleston. publicase and "very four" Bougles Democrats and Bell-Benedt men. There was a universal exprestenday where a dispatch was received that a con-About forty persons were present including Re-M. There was general rejeicing of the prospects of peace and final objectment of our indicesal diffi-culties, dampened emerwheat, however, by fear that second time to consult. They had met ence at 19 A. M. and now convened again at I o'clock F.

yeas own condition, it is apparented with (figured) L. P. Waitzelly bour.

[76, 2.1] Vol. Waitzelly bour.

The berne was enhantlisted to Major Armendon of

of this moment going on between Fort Simplar

Canadres, Fiblin, April 12.

PROM AROTHER COMMETORIST.

Bunytes all night.

and the fortifications by which is is entremeded.

serrendering as noth as his supples were schanel. ed, na al bardax a fire operate on later within a cor-

Unless there are especial.

I. P. WALKER, Secretary of Was, Man IR.

This he refused to do, and merciclingly, at twenby seven minutes peed from evelock this morning and time

Port Municipe began the bennbardment by faring two guna. To these Major Arrentson replied with three of his barbatts guns, after which the better-

The reasons are special for 12 o'cld; (Signed) G. F. Ban

[He. 6.]

L. P. Walker, Societary of War

velock to samwer.

Positing Battery opened a british fire of what and Major Annesson this not veryly except at Jung bearests, until between 1 and 5 ectors, when he Up to this hour-& o'clock-they have talled to les on Monnt Pleasant, Commissor' Poles, and the

Gen. Bratumaian, Charteonner, April 16.

O. P. BALUMARIA

. As agent of the New Department sulph be precisedly employed is an occasional stroid through the best lobbin, 3s Washington, to review the increase and department of some who were the eaved buttons, and yet constantly and publicly evergger about the felly of the Government underfaiting to bring the "Bonthern Confederacy" to terms. It is not often their a navel officer thus disten that surprises all. The storm realities of enactual conflict appear to have sobered the people PANCOLLING MINOMETERS OF MIL. LINCOLLING sion of hope that the Gevernment would succeed. This facility pervades the Border States to an anand beought them to realize the duties of the Gen. emment and their own responsibility as chissna. by his act. If was in this store that the provision-ing of the fort was ordered to be adempted, near-organging by urband denomateristics. The President further suit, while asseming that the repidies had been bested, that the did not consider submittaing; that without Kaing a gun. He sedded that he did not consider the Government at war with the South, and did not intend H should k would prove false. Limon, said to a friend that if these advices were correct, the crisis had been passed, and the whole pussion set-

Leaves the button,—but when he does, if he has are the manifines to resign, it would be advisable to this him to see somewhere where he could do I met a Democrat to-day, whom I have known all through the exchanges of the host election as an art and out friend of the Menthern Seconder. the Bouth, but simply a visitation of the the had always reposed in the ultimits good they cance of justice sensy the American (sprenacy of the Federal Government any victory on harm if he about take the notion in turn A. B. Directors, on Thursday, formuly ascapted the mission in Meanges. ists. He is a live. Forker, and widely connected with its batteres, he himself being one of the actorished to hear him precision sugmentedly his approval of the policy of the Administration, his hope that the vigor displayed in the beginning would cartiers to the md, and his willingmen to make all the sacrifices which war imposes upon heaviest dealers in organs in your City. I was

> The War Department old not place any they us the peace dispatches. Secretary thered that he arw an entape from

Married April 15. (Signed) 0. F. Braveness Dannel and of 12 o'clock, Albertod

It is suggested that the Secretaries of the varietts to take way all the loyal employee will be very departments call upon the clerks to perform grand doty at anth Department where they are stationed. I have the sessurated that the experiment is to be GRAID DON'T OF SORE CLEAKE.

[Continued on Bigath Page.]

gricel here until after midalght. It preciseed myes found semission, and general expressions of regard changed his vote in aye on the Worbill. All the Democrats of both Urways voted against it. The after the Charleston dispatches were received fill njpropriatur $200,000 for the purpose of sembal and outploying the millest, natheries a beapermy leasy provides for the appointment of an Alphanic General, Commissip-General, and Genérandes General, who, with the Germmor, are to farm power The Charleton zews was not greenly present RFFECTS OF THE WAR IN DALFTHORE. Is cutty the and twin effect.

targe that the promicommercial enterprise. He (Signed.). L. P. Walants, Sourciary of Wes.

Talograph the ropky of Maj. Asymmetric.

[30, 1.]

benefit into oction the two ther of guns hosing sewards Fost Monthide and Stormes from Inchesy.

poduce my artism effet.

13.3 o'clock in the afternoon, however, all many

HERTER AND FIGURES CANDOT STAND BOSCHARD.

peans during the coming year. Ė to increase in the two standard lack by a following which is a transland of cold promised and the standard of the promised and the standard of the promised and the standard of the standard and the standard of the standard Gentlemen akilled as dengineers, and whose judgment is carelly sound, expense the opinion that saither Pichace acr Somptar can withstand bombardment, if their assailants are not operated and constructed to surtain a stege, but to defend berharrs egrafnet hostille deste. Por the latter por-

SWASSINGS HAVAL OFFICING.

ont antendment. Gen. Corrar walled at the Kunes. dee offen to tign ft. It to aigned. The War bill passed both House to night, with THE PEYNSTLY AND WAR MILE.

The Challeton dispatches about healthliss warn supomized in both Houses, and preduced a prairiest

Mr. Sum, a Demotratio member of the Mount shall wage no war except in defense of the constitution and against its foes. But we have a country and a constitutional government. We know its worth to us and to mankind, and in case of necessity we are ready to test its strength."

That sentiment guided the editorial course of The Times through the turbulent winter between Lincoln's election and the attack on Fort Sumter. Raymond deprecated, as all sensible men deprecated, any hasty aggression which might provoke to violence men who could still, perhaps, be brought back to reason; but he insisted that as a last resort the union must be maintained by any means necessary. To the proposals for compromise he was favorable, on condition that they did not compromise the essential issue — that they did not nullify the election of 1860 and give back to the slave power the control of the national government which it had lost. Because no other compromise would have been acceptable the issue inevitably had to be fought out, and from Sumter to Appomattox The Times was unwavering in its support of Lincoln and its determination that the Federal union must and should be preserved. Its editorial comment on Lincoln's first inaugural address was an index of its position in the weeks just before war broke out. After reviewing Lincoln's program The Times observed: "If the dangers of the hour can be averted and the Union can be saved, this is the basis on which alone it can be accomplished. If the Union cannot be saved on this basis and consistently with these principles it is better that it should not be saved at all."

Raymond's letters to Yancev took up several columns each, but they were worth it. The editor of the paper certainly did not allow it to become in any sense a personal organ; on March 1, 1861, it published an address which he had delivered some days before on the policy of the Republican party, but with an apologetic note that it was inserted "perhaps to the exclusion of more interesting matter." It was as a matter of fact an illuminating statement on the prospective course of the new administration, from a man who spoke with some authority - and with an authority which was to increase from year to year. Besides directing The Times in the war years, Raymond engaged in a good deal of active work for the Republican party in state and nation. He became one of Lincoln's most valued political helpers, and in 1864 was the chairman of the New York delegation at the national convention. He had a good deal to do with the composition of the platform, and was largely responsible for the vice-presidential nomination of Andrew Johnson, a gentleman in whom Raymond not only had a personal confidence which he eventually admitted was misplaced, but whom he valued as a representative of the Union minority in the South. and a sort of living symbol that the Union had not been and would not be disrupted.

Raymond was presently made chairman of the Republican National Committee and directed the campaign that reëlected Lincoln. Unfortunately, he also allowed himself to be a congressional candidate in New York City. In 1863 he had received some votes for the Senatorship, but not enough.

He was elected to the lower House, however, and took his seat in March, 1865. His course, as will be related presently, was highly creditable to his judgment and principles, but temporarily unfortunate not only for his own political repute but for the welfare of The Times.

During the war, however, The Times made an excellent record not only as an organ of opinion but as a medium of the news. And the Civil War, it is hardly necessary to recall, effected a great transformation in American journalism. For the first time in American history since the invention of the railroad and telegraph a situation had arisen in which the public wanted to know what had happened vesterday rather than some man's opinion on what had happened last week. Before hostilities had begun papers which previously had printed not more than two or three columns of telegraph news a day were printing two or three pages. Correspondence by mail still existed, but was accepted only with reluctance, when nothing better could be obtained. Even in the fifties, New York papers, maintaining regular correspondents in Washington, could depend for news from the rest of the country for the most part on brief telegrams to the Associated Press, supplemented by details from the local papers when these arrived by mail, and occasionally by letters from correspondents who as likely as not were volunteers. But by 1860 every New York newspaper that wanted to deserve that name had to maintain a large staff of its own correspondents in the southern states. Thanks to their exertions, the North knew pretty well what the South was thinking in that critical year; and the South might have been better off if its knowledge of the North had been as extensive.

The work of these correspondents involved a good deal both of difficulty and of danger. When secession came to be a fact and civil war was visibly just around the corner, northerners in the South were under suspicion. The hazards that attended journalism under these conditions may be illustrated by the case of "Jasper," the Times correspondent in Charleston. From the secession of the state until the beginning of the war, Iasper sent every day full, and apparently fair, dispatches giving the news from Charleston and the sentiments of South Carolina. The reactions of some indignant readers of The Times were of the sort with which The Times became familiar during the recent war. Honest citizens felt that only news which they liked could be true. It was assumed that because The Times printed news which might be favorable to the rebels it, or its correspondent, Jasper, was consequently in sympathy with rebellion. There were demands that this "secessionist" be no longer permitted to spread his propaganda in the columns of The Times. To one of these complaints The Times replied editorially that "Jasper went to Charleston with instructions to write strictly what was true, and to give the facts as they might fall under his observation, whether favorable to secession or otherwise." It was added that perhaps the desirability of getting his dispatches through the Charleston telegraph office had led Jasper to take a view of some phases of the situation which would be acceptable to the Carolina censors — a consideration which hampered correspondents in Germany from 1914 to 1917. But that Jasper was doing his best to tell the truth was evident from his later misfortunes. After he had watched the bombardment of Fort Sumter for several hours he was suddenly arrested as a Federal spy and locked up in a jail which, he complained, was fit only for negroes. A day or so later he was released and ordered to take the first train north, and his demand for the restoration of his watch and pocketbook was met by the warning from the Governor that he had better not linger in Charleston. as the authorities would probably be unable to protect him from the mob. Jasper finally escaped to Washington, in disguise. His experiences differ in degree rather than in kind from those of any newspaperman who tries to tell the truth as he sees it about a question on which there is violent difference of opinion; but they were not unusual in 1861. number of northern correspondents had narrow escapes from lynching.

When the war actually began these men who knew the South for the most part became correspondents with the armies. Raymond, with some assistance from the Times Washington bureau, covered the first battle of Bull Run himself. As at Solferino, he saw most of it—or most of the earlier phase of it. At two o'clock, convinced that the victory was complete and that McDowell's army had nothing more to do but to march on to Richmond, Raymond went back to Washington to file his dispatch. Returning to the battlefield toward sunset he suddenly encountered much of the army and all of the spectators in precipitate retreat. The correspondent who had written and filed the story of a great victory now had to set to work to collect the news of a great disaster. Raymond did it; he covered the story all over and sent a substitute dispatch to The Times. But there was a censor in Washington that night, and of Raymond's two or three columns only a few disconnected and innocuous sentences ever got into the paper.

This seems to have been Raymond's last appearance as a war correspondent, but the men who followed the Union armies for The Times in the East and in the West lived up to the standard which he had set both as a writer and as a gatherer of news.

In the sixties it seems to have been regarded as a natural manifestation of the news instinct to beat the other correspondents on the general's intentions for tomorrow's battle, no matter what the injury to the public interests.

According to a rumor preserved in the army, though not in the Times office, one correspondent of the paper was carried away so far by his eagerness for news, during the battle of the Wilderness, that he was lucky to escape with being thrown out of the camp. One night Grant and Meade, being desirous of talking over in the utmost privacy what they thought they could do to Lee the next day, strolled out of the headquarters tent and down to a thicket just beyond the light of the campfire. As they were talking in low tones they heard a movement in the bushes, and making investigation discovered a Times correspondent lying on his belly and busily noting down the strategic plans of the Army of the Potomac. Chased away from headquarters as a result of this, the correspondent made his way to Burnside's corps, and hunted news so diligently there that he came near being shot by an unsympathetic subordinate officer before Grant's leniency permitted him to get off with a reprimand.

A more innocent and certainly more creditable manifestation of newspaper enterprise, made possible by the imperfect communications of those days, was the beating of official reports by the dispatches of correspondents. This happened with such frequency that one suspects that a general pursuing a beaten enemy, or trying to save the remnants of his army from a victorious one, often thought that he might as well wait till tomorrow to tell the War Department what had happened to him, as they would see it all in the papers anyhow. And The Times had the felicity, or the prudence, to beat the official reports only in the case of good news. Most expert at this was Major Ben C. Truman, one of the chief Times correspondents with the western armies. His story of the repulse of the Confederates at Franklin. Tennessee, reached The Times four days before the War Department heard from Schofield, and five days before any other paper had the news. He also accomplished a notable "beat" with an advance notice of Sherman's march from Atlanta to the sea, which luckily had no disastrous effect on the campaign.

Truman, in the opinion of some of his contemporaries, was the most brilliantly successful of all the correspondents of the Civil War. But other Times men, including George F. Williams, William Swinton, and Lorenzo L. Crounse, served the paper almost as well. Swinton and Crounse were the principal Times correspondents with the Army of the Potomac. Crounse in particular had his share of the risks of war which correspondents encountered in those days much more often than in modern times when they are allowed to see battles only with infrequency and from a long distance in the rear. He was wounded by a shell in 1862, and later, with some other New York newspapermen, was captured by Mosby's raiders, who let them go after taking possession of their notebooks and carrying their news back for publication in the southern papers —a fact which suggests that newspapermen in those days must have taken much more legible notes than is the rule at present.

Called back from the front for a time, Crounse served as night editor of the paper in the spring of 1864, and his vigilance prevented The Times from being deceived by a forged document purporting to be a Presidential proclamation appointing a day of fasting and prayer, which was invented for its effect on the stock market, and was actually published in three New York papers. After this he got back to the Army of the Potomac in time to cover the fall of Richmond and the surrender of Lee.

But not all the hazards of the Civil War were experienced by men in the field. The "internal front" as painfully known in recent years was one of the great facts of the Civil War also, though men had not then given it a name; and the internal front in New York became in July, 1863, one of the liveliest portions of the fighting line when the troops had all gone to Pennsylvania to stop Lee and the draft riots broke out. Raymond was no more afraid of rebellion across the street than of rebellion in the cotton states. Some of the New York papers, congenitally sympathetic not only with the Southern Confederacy but with Tammany Hall and the elements from which that body and the draft riots both derived their chief support, found it convenient as well as congenial to pat the mob on the head. So did some of the public men of the time; the Governor of the State did not think it beneath his dignity, such as it was, to try to conciliate the rioters. But while the mob was burning houses, plundering stores, and shooting policemen, Raymond was writing such lines as these:

LOUIS J. JENNINGS, Editor-in-Chief, 1869-1876.

JOHN C. REID, Managing Editor, 1872-1889.

JOHN FOORD, Editor-in-Chief, 1876-1883.

This mob is not our master. It is not to be compounded with by paying blackmail. It is not to be supplicated and sued to stay its hand. It is to be defied, confronted, grappled with, prostrated, crushed.

Warned by the misfortune of The Tribune, which had actually been attacked by the rioters and saved only by opportune arrival of a detachment of the overworked police, The Times had fortified itself.

The Gatling gun had lately been invented and offered to the War Department, though it was not used either widely or successfully in the war. Two specimens of this gun had been obtained by The Times, according to tradition through the President's friendship for Raymond, and were mounted just inside the business office under the command of Leonard W. Jerome. If the mob had not been more interested in attacking those who were unable to defend themselves, it would have found some trouble waiting for it at the Times office, for the entire staff had been armed with rifles; and there was a third Gatling gun on the roof, mounted so that it could sweep the streets in any direction. It is only a malicious invention of jealous rivals that this gun was kept trained on the window of Horace Greeley's office in the near-by Tribune Building.

Raymond insisted that the draft was only the excuse and not the cause of the riot.

Were the conscription law to be abrogated tomorrow [he wrote] the controlling inspiration of the mob would remain the same. It comes from sources independent of that law, or of any other — from malignant hate toward those in better circumstances, from a craving for plunder, from a love of commotion, from a barbarous spite against a different race, from a disposition to bolster up the failing fortunes of the southern rebels.

Indeed, the only utterance of The Times in the period of the riot which was in any degree ambiguous was its editorial comment on Archbishop Hughes's address, which managed, with evident difficulty, to be as polite, as vague, and as noncommittal as the utterances of the prelate himself.

Thirty-two members of the Times staff, it may be added, served in the Union armies, and two went south to join the Confederate forces.

Allowing for the curious taste of the time, which dictated such practises as beginning a long series of dispatches with the oldest of the lot, and burying the latest news at the bottom of a five-column story, the news judgment of war-time editors was pretty good. Now and then, of course, there were exceptions to this rule. On November 20, 1863, for example, The Times published an editorial article on two remarkable orations which it printed in full that morning in its news columns. One, which took up two columns of the first page, was Henry Ward Beecher's speech at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, reporting his experiences as a propagandist in England. The other, by Edward Everett, briefly mentioned in the front-page news story where it belonged, was published verbatim on page 2, and took up all of it.

In its editorial comment The Times remarked:

We devote a broadside of this morning's Times to the publication of two orations which we are sure will command the attention of the day, and not of this day only. The elaborate and finished discourses of two such men as Edward Everett and Henry Ward Beecher, upon topics of such great national interest as those they discuss, will not be lightly passed over, much less ignored altogether, by any intelligent citizen.

There was another speech in that day's news—a speech which The Times printed on the front page because it was part of a front-page story, and in full—it was only two sticks long; printed in full just after the much longer invocation by the officiating clergyman, also given word for word, and just ahead of the equally detailed list of prominent persons present. That address was received with applause, according to the Times report; but the applause was certain, even if not perfunctory, on account of the high position of the orator, and if the news story is to be believed it provoked none of the enthusiasm called forth by Everett's speech on the same occasion. And as for editorial comment, it was not merely lightly passed over, but ignored altogether, not only in the Times office but everywhere else. It was the address delivered by Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg.

The transformations which the war accomplished in newspaper making were not confined to the demand for more news, and an increase in the expense of getting it. The public which reads the newspapers is apt to forget that the mechanical task of getting the news before the public is on the whole as difficult as the obtaining of the news in the first place. and usually a good deal more expensive. The war drove The Times to buy additional presses, and to adopt (in July, 1861) the process of stereotyping. which The Tribune had already tried out and without which it would have been all but impossible to meet the demands of a rapidly increasing circulation. Typesetting machines were not known until much later, and newspapermen of today may still experience a salutary awe as they contemplate the very respectable results which their predecessors accomplished with such inferior tools.

On April 20, 1861, eight days after the attack on Fort Sumter, The Times for the first time was issued on Sunday. There had long been in existence in New York papers issued on Sunday only, as there are in England today; but New York dailies were driven to the issuance of Sunday editions by the Civil War, as were London dailies in the war lately ended. A newspaper published seven days a week still seems uncongenial to the English temperament; the Sunday issues published occasionally between 1914 and 1919 did not establish a precedent. But the New York morning papers, once committed to the Sunday edition, never gave it up.

At first The Sunday Times was issued at the regular price of two cents. Before its first year was ended, however, it had gone up to three cents, to which price the daily paper followed it in 1862. The enormously increased telegraph tolls, the mounting prices of print paper, and the general increase in the cost of everything made this increase inevitable. In 1864 The Times, daily and Sunday, went up to four cents a copy, at which price it remained for nineteen years. During the war the Sunday paper was virtually the same as the issue of any other day; but it gradually came to include first of all a considerable literary element, and then more and more of what would today be known as magazine features; so that long before The Sunday Times had departed from the daily norm of eight pages it had a character which made it a sort of link between the weekly edition, by that time passing out of favor. and the modern Sunday newspaper with its many departments.

The war brought increased expense, but also increased circulation. On May 2, 1861, while the war was still a novelty, The Times made the editorial declaration that it had gained 40,000 in circulation in the preceding two weeks. It may be noted that one of the few lapses of Raymond's paper from the standard of dignity which he set was a somewhat unworthy controversy with Bennett at the end of 1861 about the relative circulation of The Times and The Times offered to put up a forfeit The Herald. of $2500 for the families of volunteer soldiers in support of its assertion that The Herald's circulation did not average more than 100,000, as Bennett asserted, but less than 75,000, and that The Times's daily average was more than 75,000. Bennett, perhaps from considerations of prudence, responded in a manner worthy of Greeley that "the practise of betting is immoral; we cannot approve of it." And the consequence was the publication on the first page of The Times of two caricatures of Bennett — the first pictorial illustrations ever carried in the paper. Raymond, according to tradition, was afterwards ashamed of this, and certainly the paper which he published was able to stand on its merits without entering into a species of controversy in which The Herald was much more experienced.

At any rate, The Times gained steadily in prosperity throughout the war, and in December of 1865 took a step which the pressure both of news and advertising had long since made advisable—the enlargement of its page in both directions. It continued for some years thereafter to restrict itself to eight pages, but the pages were now seven columns wide and of the present length. At that time it was the largest paper in the United States, and equal in size to the ordinary edition of The London Times. There were pessimistic newspapermen in 1865 who thought that Raymond and Jones overestimated the possibilities of their business, and that a newspaper of such size could not be supported in New York. They soon learned otherwise.

CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION, 1860-1869

Shortly after this, however, The Times did suffer a serious — though temporary — setback in influence and prosperity as a consequence of Raymond's position in politics. Raymond took his seat in Congress in the special session called in March, 1865. The rebellion was visibly coming to an end, and the conditions of peace and plans of reconstruction were now the topics of greatest importance in public Throughout the war The Times had been the strongest of newspaper opponents of any sort of defeatist propaganda or of the influences working for a peace by negotiation. It had, to be sure, looked with favor on Lincoln's conference with the Confederate leaders early in the year, for it knew and trusted Lincoln. It knew that Lincoln would, as he did, refuse to consider a compromise peace. With the volunteer experts in statecraft (of a type with which our generation became familiar in the winter of 1917-18) who would have made peace by some sort of happy magic formula without settling any of the questions that were being fought out. The Times had no sympathy, but it did believe, with Grant and Lincoln, that the southerners were our own people, citizens of an indestructible union. It favored the punishment — at least by exile — of the few men whom it regarded as the fomenters of the rebellion; but it regarded the mass of the southern people as led astray by its leaders.

Raymond's views had been expressed in outline in the course of a speech at Wilmington, as early as November, 1863. In the last months of the war they found frequent expression in the columns of The Times. On April 13, 1865, for example, The Times declared that "if the people lately in revolt choose to accept the result of the war like reasonable men . . . every facility should be accorded them for the speedy repossession of every franchise and privilege existing under the constitution." insisted, to be sure, that we must wait and see if they were going to accept the result of the war, for at that time Jefferson Davis was still at large and there were die-hards in the South who would have taken to the woods for a guerrilla war. But these extremists found no support; in a few weeks the southern armies had surrendered, the soldiers who might have formed guerrilla bands had gone wearily back home, and the war was at an end. By that time, however, Abraham Lincoln was dead.

The war against secession had been won, but support of the constitutional theory of secession had reappeared in the most unlikely quarter, among the extreme leaders of the Republican party. Thaddeus Stevens, Ben Wade and their colleagues maintained that the southern states had accomplished what no northerner in 1861 would have admitted as possible—that they had cut themselves off from the union. Possibly Lincoln, if he had lived, would by his great prestige have been able to beat down the opposition of these men who, before his death, had re-

No change of effairs sisce my dispatch of noon-To Mof. Gon. Baller? : Splendid Triamph of the Army of the Potomac.

BOLT OF LEE'S FORCES ON FRIDAY.

The Most Terrible Struggle of the War.

TREMENDOUS ARTILLERY DUEL. Repeated Charges of the Rebel Colomos, Upon Oor Pusition.

Erery Charge Repufsed with Great Stauguteff.

The Death of Langstreet and cess to the cause of the Guion, and to claim the candolence of all for the many gallant fellen; our Cavalry Active on the Enemy's wish profoundest gratitude.

THE GREAT BATTLE OF FRIDAY. Chambershurgh in Our Posseastor.

One Special Telegrams from the Batile-Field, Advance of the Militia under Gea. Smith to Important Positions.

Hamsport Bestroyed.

Another great battle was fought pesterday efternoun, resulting in a megalificent success to Natu Gerrispaen, fleinner, Joly 4. The Rebes Postoos Bridge at Will-

A130'clock F. M. Lonospann's whole corps edeanced from the rabel centre against our contra. the National arms. The Contents of the Captured Dispatches from Jeff. tion by colomne in mass, and also it lines of batth. Our centre was held by Gen. HANCOCK, with a . . . C. . the Debal liv.

Davie to Lee.

The enemy's forces were barled upon our postslan of our artiflere.

THE GREAT BATTLES. of the secrety halled and wooded in sectuated. Thousand of princers here sent to the justice have described the outside the secretary and the secretary halled the content of the secretary halled the content of the secretary halled the secretary hall the secretary halled the secretary hall the secretary hall the secretary halled the secretary hall the secretary Wateck uppered of three thousand priberates. The NEW-YORK, MONDAY, JULY 6, 1863.

Jobed. The first results of the section, I hope to enemy has been magnificantly repulsed for three from publishing without being sornered that they It is near surent. Our proops hold the field, with many arbei priganers in their bands. The dern-repalard on all eides-most megnificently to-day. Every effort made by bim since Wednesday morning to penetrate Manne Since has been be able to give you at a later hoor this evening. are positively in the list of excuelties.

Geo, Borrasreto was stuck to the creast, sod 18 is terred laterauly injered, by a place of shell which san, of the Stad, bad bis leit nim peritented by w Gying fragment of shell, and it seemed a priracle that borses were killed ground till nouse.

exploded to the building. Livit-Cot, Just's Dictin-

Hathenstrate Aner or the Porchad. S. WILKSLOE DECEMBER TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Sergin of aur general officers were wounded in no greeter damage was done to life,or limb.

the engagement. Gay, Baccock was wausded to the ed. In consequence of the exchement and difficulty to excertaining their tocations, the usman of mony leg. Gent. Ganet, Wannen and Hour went meund. dagiight, apperently to feel our position. They found us " at home," and some acapended operations. They also endegrared to push forward their front on our right, but were driven back The enemy's guns optiond on our left wing at

- Too much credit conds be given to vor artillerists.

cannot be ascertained to-olght.

prominest officers reported agentified or wounded

caltudas and Heppers were exhausted of emenalities. The tofaciry oppaged site nobly did their duly, and the enemy le-day at their bands ban reemed the gratest desser erer administered by the Dunn, who for house stood to their gues order a brotting ing sale to give their positions to others, when their con, and autrounded by the missies of death, ratiored in break our line. The Twelfth corps, which furmed our right, steadily drove them back for and a portion of the first corps was wint to its balf an hour, when the enemy were relatoreed, 940 A. M .- An bour 8go, 1bo encay meden strong Infentry etteck on our right, and endeav-signs he assumed commend, and particularly for his poolnone, decision and energy on this memorable nd Last eight, ballering it to be bit dely to the anote, All official award the highest hoppre to Gen. Means for the this generaliship to but displayed

DETAILS FROM DOR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT. elalon commanders for ronsaltation.

eyes are ausmortably fartened upon a pentral baute of transcendingly absorbing ibitrest-the deed body af Who can write the history of a battle whuse Haabquarens Annr or Potento, } op and see Christ spenning this bettle-field ly up to harven. Bie right hand opens the gritas of Paradiag-with his laft he beckens in these mullisled, with his feet and reaching fraternal and dering was tlay I have passionalely hissed, and I lead in bort them upon the really weather point of our bared. Thu rebel army moved 120 goes to the west, and memed there Lorepraise's torpe and filts's earpe. cetted. A ellenas as of deep steep felt upon the eitien, and tag faitpury columns had withdiawn to fold of beille. Gor aimy conted, ate and sigm.

Bloody, awallen forms th assend.

sothe position.

The resel prieders seport that Co. 4. P. Hill enemy captured but few if any of our med.

cere antiered fer greater caspelles tann in any pre-So haville was the enemy's dre that the smell house where Geo. Manne and Sind were quartered, was perforeted by aregral abold. Muny of the Staff.

elous engagement.

was killed outright upon the field, and that their offtoen them open bor lorang, when thus ware driven of bravelotatity. At this moment Cupt, Cruuve racelved his death wound, and fell ilfulum to the earth. Respect cotpare and wounded to front of his praces, and sore of their capture, were wiccapilag to serely wanneds carly to the afternoon, he related to sava bis pest beside his gurs, but caminged thener graps and canister into the advancing columns of the rabels wall they had reached the eary munnter of his Copt. Cunning, Company A, Poorth Bogular arilliery, was hilled, and bis ballery puffered meetaly, The politotry of this uffort is dayond praire. So-PRCIOGRAPH OF PRS RATTER. wints the ting yard of the while washed motinge. In the mides of its earthing, a shell screemed over the boum, instantly followed by seather, and soother, most complete arilliery prelude to an ibfacier baille that was ever entibited. Breer Bisven o'clask-iweive o'clock-one o'clock. In the shadow cast by the ting farm house 16 by 20, which Gen. Manbe had made his Realiqueries iny wented Staff efficere and lived reporters. There was net wantleg to the peaceloiners of the acres the daging of a bird, which bee a near in a peach hee and to a moment the air was fall of the fell dand ibn rebot Gen, Gien Canentt, who was contegeousy lacolog his unen in this charge upon one deficites on Grow Hill. The subel Con. Australes None of the company were faken prisenters by the remained uninjered—the rist basing tean diamonate. ed or demoya by the terrible fre of the enemywhich for the time was endeeptrated group the Daite. rice on this east of the field. In front of this podition rebelt. After the battie but overgon of this hattery barrinest to the fence on both stars, garnished as dead and manufed before the fire seared. Then one fell, then another-dates laid tied and wrelkfolly fluttered over aur ground. As burning and screening over and around the beedquariers, unedn a vary tell of fre that nacel with the Litebed borses of glds and orderlies. The fastgood notimals reared and privated and h terror. many as els in asseond, constantly two in a second, amused the oldest officers. They butst in the yard-

battery this monotes, told a terrible tale of the offect

the end form of theil Brown to British and to American gunnary thrieked, mairted, mouned, whitwas also wounded here while any anding at the best of his brigadn.

eith fartened by their haltern, which gewe thouspression of being wienedly tied no to die peinfully. These brole stelling of a casel war touched all tog sed espioding chells, an ambaismes, drives by fis

Crason's division, composed of Gens, Wase's, Ram RELL'S and Hall's brigeder, at the point of the beyonet. tible by gaured late their ranks from only giant, so Impetunce was the cherge of the rebals that they ing upon our batteries, several of which they captured, but the explure was only temporary. Gan, stone wall, running from our centre in a nouthwestorty direction, bubled which taid asserts of our up the slape of the hill. Notwithsheding the terdrove our men from thail position, and were advance About Sity yards in fract of our butlerius was a segiments, picking of the enemy as they advanced transled enodester at full speed, presented th

hearts. Through the middle of the cloth of servan-

Gen, Ginton's dieielen enpfored fourieen stand ad Gen. Annierad, when takes priceder, saked polore and a large number of prisoners. Tweatyeight stands of colors to all ware explored by the Corp. Barnen, of the Piret Minoracle, was explurof certained, retained a market, and netted in certain op-Col. Wan, of the Pilianth Mastrehopits, was porticulty and netuelly muon ten rebain currentals.

to realts their purposed totentry nitests, and as sweet away the stight defences babind which twenty plenes of artiflery, trying th out from the held spary haltery we had to portless

our wounded ufficers ers Hangoun, Gippon and a great many others whose names I isol resirained Readquarter Anth Pornull, Wasanaras, Beren, Johr 6-1230 A. M. The following is the latest official disparch: POURTH DISPATCH.

Ggo. G. Maans, Bajor-General.

under count of the night and the heavy rain, in Majon-Gen. Balason: The suemy relied Brangoraras Saur es vas Porceauc.

Leannaigire yan inn detalle of ear replares to the direction of Pairfield and Cashlown. Our careiry are in parent. prisents, ediors and arms.

by enough and those of the enemy are to the Uppered of sweety battle-fags will be forced in frem one porph.

GOO, G. BEADE, Majoi-Geoeral.

THE PRESIDENT TO THE COUNTRY.

with loss that hews from the Army of the Petomac, up to The President announces to the country 10 F. M. of the 3d, is such so to cover that army with the highest honor; to promise a great auc-Waterpfres, D. G., July 4-10 10 A. M.

Politog in this, the enemy opened a heavy canappeads all slong the line. The ettack on the sight le belleved to have been a feint to cover a more formidable fank movement on the left. The camonading is now heavy in that direction, and THE REGEL RETREAT CUT GFF. | Not day Bt. where will not only hand over be and that for this, be superially desires that on A. Lincola.

The Third Corps auffreid greatly resterdry. | and to tarm bem far be would be sopporten to the The number of wounded is heavy, with a large aumber of seffents. No estimate can be formed appears to be extending.

Heavy musketry has opened now on our right ation. Nothing can surpass the ulgor and preci-The memy are fighting with the greatest desputagain and peanonading on our laft to stackening. of the killed or this writing.

..... have hear taken on | menced on the tet of July, a mile corts of the town. go oldesi bern, crushed by a shell io a position where doned to drein in a building where curgeons dared The bailt of Gelgrhorgh! Inte icht that it sema battery abauld saver have been each and abannot ta ring ? division (Huareney's, I think.) cuilled and Testerday, the rehale tonk twe of our gunk, for went of harres and infantry support, but the receptured them. We took one from the immediately for Cen. Hanon, who was his abantanie drove them back over the stone wall into the plain at West Polni Berwind porps. not a stregger was ta be seen open the pinks swept by " this lampast of orchestral death thirty minutes after Doring this fire the bauses at tweety and thirty saidlers to Pederal bine were tore to pieces to the rout and died with the peculiar potts that bleed the exhited err of pels with borner nod despeir. Not an orderiy-not en sonbolancebus barbard and set was bushed and The remaining piller went simont immediately to the feet glount, weme grotivisg their douth, and ex: eas with a kalfe. Another noun earted off one af the apen dear-enother styped through the law gerret. all of we the merrelous spectacle of a nerte peing emplity en them lege. A binder une bad been shot off at las back. A chell fore op the little stap of the Bradquartain Coltage, and ripped bugs of He two pillars. Soon appealest case burst opposite bows of a hand thot that Winnesses must have made.

their forces with great impalagally appa out poeltion. Harrock received the princh with great Semmean, and after a fortuge battle, lasting until 5 Warungaron, Salurday, July 4-10 to A. M. The following has just been received :

At 5 P. M. sebat was left of the suumy exferenced in uiter confusion, leaving dozens of dagn and The roorego of our men was perfectly sublime. spee both pregsions, hardsamely repulsed, with iandred and ally guna, roncentrated open my oft courre, continuin without intermission for thus three boars, at the expiration of which low, he asseulted my left centre twice, being, The everny apened at 1 P. M. from about one Maangaanan Angar or Porouan. layer-Gen. Hallack, Gannaral-us-Chusf :

The battle was fought by Gen. Eannoon with aplendid valor. He won imparitubable honor, and Gen, Bancoca estimated at least five thousand billed and wounded on the field. serve loss to blin, leaving in our hands easely bmong the prisoners to Brig. Gen. Aturento and many Coloquis and officer a of lasser rank. bres thousand prisoners.

thigh, but remeined on the Seld. The enemy left many deed upon the field, and a The loss upon our aids has been considerable. hy Grn Mancock and Brig.-Gen. Gibnon ways age number of sounded in our hands.

Wunnded staling to the soilef that the everny might be Aire the repelling of the assemble, indications withdrawing, a reconnolatines was pushed formed from the left and ahe cuemy found to be in

My ravairy have been engaged all day on both disching him with great socrem, notwithstand. og they encountered superiar numbers both or knis of the curmy, barasaing and wigorously At the present hour all is quirt.

The way is in fine sphile. threlity out infatting.

York, was wounded in the Brox.

Wammeren, Sunday, July 6-4 F. M. Mel Gen. Commending GAUSTIN O. MEADE.

The latest official dispatch processed here, up to ble baur, from Cag. Maaus, is dated at Headunters Andy of Polognes, 7 & M., John C. which perely states that the enemy had withdrawn iron his position, occupied for attach, on Friday.

Reliable information received here to-day aslaws yeaterday afternoon, and further represents that the rebels overs lordlying at Moornan's Cur. the South Monutains, apparently to count a is that bour, did not develop the character of erte that Gen Lun's Enniguartere mare ut Caeb. the lofermation in the possession of Gen. Manne. Lo inc.av's morement, whether it was a getreat w a managere for other purpage.

The experience of all the tried and veteras officers of the Aeny of the Fotomec mile of no such-desperate conflict on has been in progress during this day. The connenging of Cluncelloravitle, Unlegen and Munanas were pastines. compared with this. At the headquarters, where write, einnen of the horses of Gen. Maaon's BEFFERNIKED, was knocked down by a fragment of chee-shot. Cal. Dickinnus, Antalian Adjalam-General, had the bone of his wrist piercad brungh by a piece of thell. Lieut Guven of beed ; and Capt. Cannaran, of Gen. Meana's

Carryenage, Pildag, July 9,

PECK ANUTHE CORRESPONDERS.

Luter. official dispetches are expected this SECOSD DISPARCE.

usif officers were billed by shell. The house ene completely rifidled. The Chief of Staff, Geb.

BEARGUARDERS ARMY BY POTOREA,

The enemy has abandoned letge aumbers of The position of affairs tenot materially changed bla billed and wounded on the field face my last dispatch of 7 A. M. We now hold Gatty shargh.

Gen. Hurrnentenb's Siad, was strnet to the

" rigiutes and toute tringthight, and a return thick with jabel dend, mingied with our own lahail probably to L' to to give you mitten of

While 1 write the ground at-oot use is covered secort, was wounded in the eye.

was bayond parallel. Bome of the guns were o'clack, the enemy were driven from the field, The battle was a most marnifeent enacheds. It was fought on an open plain, just south of Get-Loxderness's corps being almost annihilated.

mached, and did not open until the enemy water elthin canlster range.

Babel prinoners any when their fainntry charged

onr left-wing batterles ynzinrdny, the musucre

The decisive battle has been fought to-day, and Eproposition Asky by the Potento. MPOSTANT SEMI-OFFICIAL OETAILS. tysburgh, with bot a tree to interrupt the view.

folly favorable to ut. A popular denbripilon of It mould be to usy that it was in form an elongated and tog and relificating ; care the cover of stonewalls, table and the erests of hills. The graded apon mhich we mare driven to accept battle was wooderlawed. Ather half an hour's canconsides, dolog but At daylight Lash right wing belieries opened upon our left, and therily after those of his seatire follittle camber to pa, the fire sischaped, and only occathe noamy have toon repained with tetrific loan.

the aid of the butteries in the rast, and the todoodtafirst position, exploring a considerable number of so out right wing. Be unden und impelueus wastt accomplished that our attemishers and front line ware drieen back from 1beir istranchmenta; but, by binbinerry of the Twellth carps, we regained the litely of infactry and aburgabooters, made at pittel Shortly attermed the anemy's left, enuposed onstones shots were exchanged. p-lioners. The anaduct of our veterage was perfectly mag-Dificent. More than twenty hattle dage were tray and the country. He was wounded in the The number of prisoners taken is estimated at 3,000, including at least 1 wo Brigadier-Goners a-Gaustran, of Georgin, and another-both Gon. Mesus thanked him in the name of the

Lat's pies of gaille was cimple. Be marned his

theiling of our batteries from the nearest orasiool-tamewhat tharpeare horseshoe, with the ton to Beltreeps upon the east side of tota about of position, and thundered on it outsinessive to brand it. The ing bill, and the undirching paveans and excepted discipling of the aims of the Potennan re-graduals and the heel to the south.

apparently an algorite for the grandest artitlery fight erer withemed on tals walkent. Beibre amment opened ayon at. Qur beiterten erturnen the exceptle. the two previous days, was wantles on this occusion. float of their shrife, explicited far in jibo rems of our Several bours of emisons ellease fallowed this reupine. At I o'check the eventy first lare their, had elapsed it is estimated that at least ofging gons ment with ingreet. Dar uir premed biteralig tatek wiln that man or beart could live through it. Attanget to and the sorney's accuracy of range, an eshibited on trees, and for more then an hour it seemed impossible front, and proprietly facinate our batteries. At ? u'eluck last evening, tien Maana ordered the Third corps, supported by the Bigth, to attach rie inetrd until dark, when a good deal of ground up. Ben Ginna was wounded in the shoulder. Grn. Wans was wounded and remained on the field. Col. Hawners, of the Mary-clath Nowthe enemy's right, which was deter and the bettaken by our troops. Mearly svery regiment has one. The Minutesoth Manuschusetts captured foor. The repulse was so disastinus to the momy, that Laugaventa's corps is prifecily used and the marrellous quiepread upon the board of death of dead unicitera and dead animals-of dead solutes in the, and deed solviers in gray-cone marrellous to me than unything I bare erat teen th lares of officers, med and horses Comes sustained-Hoder cover of this fee winder, Lie tovanced bis columns of lotterity from the cuvers. and man we eral desperate attempts to corry tor lines by essent: not each successive stiempt was repulsed with terrihie Bay De to their ranks.

war-are a ghanty and anaching testimony to the terrible fight of the French carpe that home will galosay. Test norps will ever have the distinction of lass lotents for a short time, but was again renewed After abbour's foresteet combading the fire grow farm Bitle walte, wild, great toleft. During that pe-

Our eavairy is to-day playing arrangely upon the enemy's fank end mer. L. L. Cauusas.

tory attack upon Stucoss on the right, but was repulsed.

Dating the day Erett's corps bept up a derul.

had been gaturd.

ring ufine sun. A thick wood eeffed this fight, but out at its leafy dephotes atote the smoke and the sorgthreads, and eruniley, told of the tries tartes of the subels of attaching in force and ourse-Da dey une to be made through thet wood. The For each dejails as I liave the hears for, The beide namerocad anday sight, on the side of the Same-Soo position, specify opposits to that which Emet had game to creth through, Buthatry practed the has not smalling of the fire, from Interscitient to coningly troops. Seemingly the nitacts of demonstration was protracted—it was absolutely punylag ibe muskelry, nod ahrend officere in eny greparabre ; but there was no artitlery are accombreaking the gride and power of the rebei invasion. on the approach of the searce batteries, willdrow to Longstreet was muriolity wounded and captured. He expected and the toen established, seased to fire, and the rear. The enemy only secting the outteries withdrawing, and mistabing this for a reirest, lates d a position to our lines, cutileg to places and eled, rome of our believice whose ammunition was made a mance infantry charge up the bill, and obbid ; brooken tileniel lines and folialist sequences ; but being they had time to rejoice at their imaginary and casa, the fresh batteries poured in adustif fire of cantrier and nate-abol. The balanty reserves joined co eilber fank of the gap, charged them, and added greatle to their destruction. They were completely turpiled; and hourists of them three form then grant and arted for guester. Hearly the entire brignoe of Gen. Dict Canam noriender 16, and Bantum littaell wounded, basely med's but sacape.

wattert front mentlened, with the gracity due so the (net, first the rebels had felled trees as intervals open the state of the wood tony sacupted in face of our position. These were breastworks for the grenation Sadteniy, and abent 18 in the foreness, the firth Abunt 430 P 35, the artiflary of the normy elvels. is reparted to have olse in an nour afterward.

enga and had entirely cented at 3, the tast after I an the east adds, was presympted, about one lines, I surging report that Gan, Santur L. Jourses, of place for health uga sty out, "Refrance;" "res use to be seen. Wounded prinners taken in Gettysburgh this Maryland, war killed to Thursday's attack on our sepolited in bave bad sis let abot off, and from the ch right. Be was struck by a shell white charging our Unes at the bond of his division, Oso. Dues to blas Sabel officers with whom (have ponvensit freatily edmit that the result of the last two days has ince nicade, and Startes came in with viewen topilem. acts of which he has stone died. shall into the chinasey that duringly did and septods. Exalts to the gard. Too air thinkerand foller and more desiraing with the hawilby and whirring of these tofernal colastine. The oblief of aisk struck-farm Witteret-|Desid and zaspaoted through the army, esparated from testent death by two inches of space vertically measured. An Aide bored with a fragment of tren through the bone of the arm, Another, cut with an exploded pipes. And the time restained on the single-waterbes was one near and forty minutes. the death of Margette, the wine was the young and the old blood with weigh it was brought. The error gut us on the defendes, and gare on the choice of position. From the noment last our extillery and lotsetry rolled back tarongh the main street of Outly tourgh and rolled out of the town to the eirele of aniances much of M. We were out to atlack to i to be ettached. The right, Selectives and the distressinger of the coming haille were the animy's. Our ware the Leights for artillery; ours the short, laside liess for manauere-

were grester still, in one part of the Beld, in pilled on top of each other, And alone by to m dend and wounded, a large propertion of States. A wasanded rebei Coloust told me that, in the fret und wernen depe" fight, the rebel funnt ware between fen and eleren Downed. Yesterday lasy e space not coore thus twenty feet in eirnaturalled seven dend recoils, three of whom wore appt not more than filten Seet square tay 4ffem "graytache," etretched in danb. These ware the terge numbers of wounded were nim strawn around, not the mention more was had erawled gway as been taken away. The field in front of the stonewall was Unraily becord with man ware tabets. Where our muthally and setillary took effest thay lay in awalds, and enaws down by a acytha. This field presented a bartfble sight-auch as has never yet been wilreson during the war, first ferr tung one thousand dued and the next of war from Virginia to the Morthern Berden enmiterence. In front of One. Graseas' division advectorous spirits, who in the face of the horrible stream of capiatrs, afril and mushetry, scaled the feope wall in ibrir alte ingl upon our batterien. Verf most disserbut is their coose. which depended, the wounded teld in a space of less than four acres i my, ages the success of Las's sitemyt to Unast Leftetty west-obserfage. And apleadely they did this mork .- the highest and severest test of the stoff that soldiers are made of. Bina's division, in line of beille, came fint an the double-quick. Their muthele at the "right-shoulder-thift." Louissant's came as remed in perfect order across the open field up to the very neughlet of the gunt, which tore tsons broogh them so they came. But they met men fences. Thuy had elegated exconsisers and horses from one of the groue, and were whichas it around to one upon us. The depopal drove them bach. Dutte. bard pressed was this brave infantry that at one time, battery upon the principal event of ettack was aileat, eampl Cauwaa's. Die im vies of grape and then to charge upon him, and take a great number of bis men and bitatelf prisonera. Strunge eigin. So terrible was our mutheiry and pitiliary dre, that Then there was a laff, odd we knew that the robel the support, at the neast distance, with war erfee and a aveage torolence as yet unlutored by defeat. They who were their equals in spirit, and their superforz in lapacity. There peres was better fighting alace Thermoprain that was done parterday by our infantry and artillery. The redels were over our defrom the ethauftion of their ammaultion, avery cannister was switch. It canbled our libr, cutnumhered two to one, drat to beat back Lonogramm, and > polled the starts. It was reported at the point of all the thon-represed daypostely at the nouthwest best - reasoned on the westby Exercis carneal caths, and on which the fate of line midet of therers of bosilie bilgades pould the with an effort consecrated to somes the inesalon of Pennsylvania was fully pol at slake. Only a perfect infantry and so arilliery educated in

į

The enemy's indense, awfig a small force of enarpshooters, was wholly out of algest as daylight on that they exuld have ruo sgalast the seconomit of Saturday marping. There were salk on Eriday algul, alderably -the Signel Ochiera reported land an immense train of anny wayons wis poing only distri-Lysburgh northwest, as the read to Camblewis. Oh! Beiers the Arting was accreditors mused, con natent, and thei, too, atter numbere had ernwie after the bettle, of organizing spatings of pursuit. away to placest of shelfer. the Berrisburgh army. charge, and stood realing, all of its men dropped their mushers and crawful on their hands nod hores undersaals the attents of abot till close to our Defore they got there the gradd charge of Ewatt, solemnie ewent no and curefully prepared, had-The rebels had retreated to their flows, and spread gaew the storm of shell and alter from their 130 gung. Those who complied at the riddled headqueries will aver the arouchlog, and dedgias, and conside, of troops, where they made algoe of someodering. They passed through our suchs scarcely nodered, and monty want-does the alope to the read in the fear, when Assertant's brigade was conched in fits two buttery-the lat of its stiled and wounded-the coca's cores did sustain it, and has corered itself with immertal honors by its congradey and enorage. The lotal wreck of Sobasustelord [this trenull.

Betstilly have presented a ghantly sight. He was great in the tare aire daraily to two. Half of als they was also tare semy by a fragment of usell.

Charles F. Leelene, Co. E. 1840 N. T. Allied. Liest. Geston L. Eard, tommanding Co. B, 1080 rew Tork, was hilled lastently by aubell. Mis bod PARTIAL LIST OF RILLED AND WOUNDED. middle of the braust by a minel which anpieded 3, Withham, Co. E. 108th H. Y.-wanuded. world as the middle of the borne shoe on the work the Butternat-colored coptives when they got under anie, their friends, fire. It was supaliting to se good What remains to say of the Sphif It stagion graw big and nager on the best at the multward. lasted there till I o'clock to sits avening, when the skileg Birihanye wan joyansiy by an a relaforce.

soldlere eres te they were.

James Geng, Otte C. Billings, Jacob Bergenal A. E. Banlay, do. do. wwwended. Berg. B. C. Eryani, Co. B. 186th N. T.—wat J. D. Anzlab, Co. B. 196th Now-York—West Comm's Res- Took Battery—Wild. menthrough the wood, bright with ceffer pets on Br. Haur. My panta cony. Ch. yon dond, who als I jance estalts to my expellent friend and apportate

Womatel.
Liout. Wm. P. Weight-right bread, probably Continues on Lighth Pare.

ond birth of Frendem in America, bom you nes in an applical it the Lam a grave whose Gettrabergh have baptised with gant bleed the ser-

the Bra.

solved to fight him as bitterly as they afterward fought Johnson. Whether or not Lincoln could have done it, the fight was left in the hands of a President whose defects of personal character and ability brought his principles into discredit; and Raymond, who for a long time stood behind Johnson as he would have stood behind Lincoln, suffered for his defense of the ideas which, if carried out, would have made reconstruction something more than an ironic euphemism.

Raymond was still chairman of the Republican National Committee, a position which gave him prestige sufficient to overcome, to a certain degree, his newness in Congress. Before the end of 1865 he was actively opposing Stevens and the other leaders of the radical Republicans, notably by a speech on December 24. But already it was apparent that the radical control of Congress could not be shaken. At a public meeting in New York in the following February Raymond undertook to defend Johnson for his veto of the Freedman's Bureau bill, and laid the blame for the "increase of ill-feeling" in the South during the past few months to the action of Congress and to the radical Republican press in the North. Raymond favored the immediate acceptance of the state governments which had been set up in some of the border states. and he wanted above all to prevent the reestablishment of the old sectional antagonism. But the tendency of the time was too strong for him.

Nevertheless, he persisted in spite of repeated setbacks, and finally took a leading part in the "National Union Convention" which met at Philadelphia in August, 1866, where for the first time since the outbreak of the war men from all the states, Republicans and Democrats, met to bury the hatchet and try to lay down a program for national reunion. Raymond had had his suspicions that this body might not be of such a character as to command the confidence even of the moderate men in his party; within four weeks before it met he had in a private letter remarked that "it looks now as though it would be mainly in the hands of Copperheads." But evidently he thought, when the convention actually assembled, either that this fear was unwarranted or that his influence might counteract the presence of undesirable members from the North. At any rate, he composed the "Philadelphia Address" which the convention set before the country, declaring that "the results of the war did not either enlarge, abridge, or in any way change or affect the powers the constitution confers on the Federal government, or release that government from the restrictions which it has imposed."

This address and the declaration of principles appended was on the whole a piece of reasoning on constitutional theory not unworthy of the author of the letters to Yancey of 1860. It closed with an enthusiastic endorsement of Andrew Johnson as "a chief magistrate worthy of the nation, and equal to the great crisis upon which his lot is cast." Even then Raymond was not altogether in sympathy with Johnson's course; he supported the constitutional amendments which were eventually grouped into one (the Fourteenth) and thought Johnson unwise in opposing them.

Raymond's only contention was that Congress had no right to make acceptance of them a condition of the "readmission" of any state lately in revolt. He held that the rebellion had been, all along, what Union men considered it in the spring of 1861—an insurrection and not a dissolution of partnership.

But those views were too advanced for the time. Secession was accepted as a fact by the dominant group in Congress, and under the stress of passion constitutional amendments were put through by unusual, if not absolutely irregular, methods, establishing precedents some of whose harmful effects have been seen within recent years. Raymond was at once furiously assailed by the majority of his party, and was accused of having gone over to the Democrats. He lost his place as chairman of the National Committee for his part in the Philadelphia convention, and the paper lost thousands of readers. Naturally, his journalistic rivals seized the opportunity to try to turn the momentary deviation of The Times from the majority opinion to their own financial profit. During the war, and before it, The Times and The Tribune had been the leading Republican papers of the nation. No doubt Raymond and Greeley had on the whole the same ideals, as in general they upheld the same political principles on the great issues of the Civil War period; but their reactions differed according to their temperaments. Raymond, in the critical months before the war, thought that the suspicions of the South might and should be alleviated by certain prudent concessions from the Republicans, and that Southerners unsympathetic with secession should not be driven into the arms of the fire-eaters by unconsidered violence; but he insisted that the union must be preserved at any cost, that there must be no tolerance of secession, and that the supremacy of the Federal government must be vindicated. After war had begun he never weakened in the belief that there was no choice between complete victory and ruinous disaster; that peace without victory was peace with defeat; that the war must be fought out to the complete vindication of the Federal authority. But when that result had been accomplished he felt that the interests of the nation required the speediest possible reëstablishment of real national unity.

Greeley, in the period between Lincoln's election and the attack on Sumter, had oscillated between plaintive declarations that "the republic could not be pinned together with bayonets" and insistence on immediate and violent coercive measures which might have put the government in the wrong in the eyes of the border states. When war had come Greeley was a pretty good barometer; he was an enthusiast when things were going well, but after Fredericksburg, and again after Chancellorsville, he was willing to throw up the sponge; and he had that curious conviction that peace might be obtained by some backstairs negotiation on neutral soil and suddenly presented on a platter to a surprised nation, which while it endured furnished valuable moral support to Lee as it later did to Ludendorff.

But when the republic had been pinned together with bayonets, nobody displayed more sanctimonious horror than Greeley at Raymond's adventures in conciliation. The man who was to go Jeff Davis's bail in 1867, and accept a Democratic Presidential nomination in 1872, in 1866 was accusing Raymond of "acting as a Copperhead" and of betraying the party, because he thought that southern Democrats were still citizens of the United States. The man who, in 1860, thought the South might as well go its way, who early in 1863 was talking of "bowing our heads to the inevitable," and was looking forward gloomily to "the best attainable peace," could in 1866 compare the editor of a competing and more prosperous paper to Judas Iscariot for standing out against vindictive punishment of the South.

But Greeley cherished no unchristian rancor; when Raymond was safely dead, Greeley was magnanimous enough to write that "he was often misjudged as a trimmer and a time server, when in fact he spoke and wrote exactly as he thought and felt." It was true; Raymond was called a trimmer; whereas Greeley acquired a great reputation as a courageous moral leader. The difference seems to have been that Greeley took a certain time off each day to advertise his morality to the public, whereas Raymond was too busy reaching conclusions a year or so ahead of the times.

A moral might be drawn from this, but it could hardly be commended to ambitious young journalists.

Raymond afterward confessed that it would have been worth $100,000 to The Times if he had never attended the Philadelphia convention, for great numbers of its loyal supporters promptly turned away from a paper which they regarded as having gone over to the Copperheads. As it turned out, however, if Raymond had lived a few years longer it might have been worth a hundred thousand to the paper that he had attended the convention; for it had the result of putting him out of politics and turning him back to give his whole attention to The Times.

The conservative Republicans among his constituents (it is perhaps needless to observe that the terms "conservative" and "radical" had in the years just after the Civil War a technical significance entirely apart from their ordinary meanings) wanted him to try his chances for renomination to Congress, but in a letter dated only a month after the Philadelphia convention he refused. He denied that he had changed his politics. "With the Democratic party as it has been organized and directed since the rebellion broke out," he assured his friends, "I have nothing in common." But the evils of renewed factional strife which he had attempted to avert were already afflicting the country, and Raymond realized that he could no longer do anything to resist them. And he observed that "a seat in Congress ceases to have for me any attraction, or to offer any opportunity for useful public service." It is easy enough to say that Raymond knew he could not be renominated; the man's whole history is proof that considerations of this sort had nothing to do with his decision.

The last three years of Raymond's life were of great importance to his paper. On the chief of the new issues following the war he had taken the unpopular side, and was presently forced to admit that he was following an unworthy leader. Johnson's personal shortcomings were largely responsible for compromising the cause of the moderate reconstructionists, but it may be supposed that Raymond's personal feeling had perhaps something to do with the fact that when The Times finally repudiated him it was on the question of paying off the national debt with fiat money. The paper opposed the impeachment of Johnson, not so much from love of Johnson as from an estimate of the motives, and a dislike of the methods, of his enemies. In the campaign of 1868 the paper was once more able to be whole-heartedly Republican, for its editors had a great deal of confidence in General Grant and in the policies which the party in that year professed.

But other new questions were arising which were to dominate the generation after the war, and on the chief of these Raymond set a policy which in general was long followed. As Edward Cary, for nearly half a century one of the principal members of the editorial staff of The Times, wrote in 1911:

Apart from his policy regarding reconstruction, he had marked out three lines of discussion for his paper which were of great and lasting importance, and which even now . . . that paper follows with profound respect for the sound brain and loyal heart that set it upon them.

The first of these was the struggle against various forms of easy but unsound money — in the sixties and seventies the Greenback movement, and later free silver. Its insistence on sound money was at least a minor reason in The Times's unwillingness to see any merit in the Presidential candidacy of Tilden, who had given it support in the most spectacular fight of its history; it drove the paper to stand for its principles behind the Gold Democratic ticket in 1896; and it was the first ground for a disbelief in the miraculous powers of William Jennings Bryan for which other reasons in sufficiency were soon discovered.

In Raymond's last days, also, the paper began a campaign for reform of the tariff, a principle to which it has been consistently loyal ever since. David A. Wells and Benjamin F. Tracy were called in to write special articles on this subject under Raymond, and The Times, though beaten in its first fight as it has been beaten in many more, began in the later sixties a steady campaign for popular education on this question which it may be hoped has contributed in some degree to the more intelligent views now prevalent. In spite of the genuflections of the present Republican Congress in the house of Rimmon, it is possible to hope that before long the protective tariff as the past generation has known it will be as dead as greenbackism and free silver.

The third of the policies which Raymond laid down for his paper was the fight for the introduction of the merit system into the civil service—a question on which the paper had sometimes expressed itself even in its earliest years, but which it took up in earnest after the Civil War. During the next two decades The Times was one of the most insistent and persistent advocates of a reform which finally triumphed, in principle, and which after two decades more of obstruction by practical politicians of the older sort is now at last beginning to be the rule and not the exception in administration.

FORMER HOMES OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

It was the enduring faith of The Times in all these causes, no less than its conductors' lack of confidence in a man who seemed to embody stiff-necked opposition to most of the needed reforms of his time, which finally led the paper to break away from the Republican party in 1884. Raymond was always a good Republican — best, perhaps, when he was most completely out of harmony with the dominant group in the party — but there can be no doubt that he would have approved of the decision which his partner and successor, Jones, had to make in that campaign.

Local issues, too, were becoming insistent in Raymond's last years. The conduct of the New York City government had always been a scandal, varying only in degree, but by the later sixties the city had fallen into the hands of William M. Tweed and the scandal was becoming unendurable. Tweed had formed an entente, useful to both parties, with the faction of Wall Street manipulators headed by Jay Gould and James Fisk, Jr., which was unable to see any need for going into the long, laborious and expensive process of building railroads when it was so much easier to acquire them already built. In 1868 The Times carried on a vigorous fight against the men who were making the Erie Railroad a name notable even in the scandalous chronicle of that period, and before Raymond's death there had already been threats that some of the political instruments of the Wall Street-Tammany inner circle might be used to attack the management of the paper. That Raymond, if he had lived, would have fought the ring as valiantly as did Jones and Jennings cannot be doubted; and no greater tribute can be given them than the statement that not even Raymond could have been more successful.

The setback caused by Raymond's position in 1866 did not long affect the fortunes of The Times. It was so good a newspaper that people did not like to go without it, and its return to the outward form at least of party regularity furnished an excuse for a good many Republicans to come back to their old favorite. Some idea of the position which The Times held in the estimation of intelligent men at this time can be obtained from "The Education of Henry Adams." Adams had known Raymond in Washington before the war, and some of his letters to Raymond from London had been published in The Times, which thus may perhaps claim to have discovered him as a writer. Coming back from London with an experience which in any other country, as he has remarked, would have qualified him admirably for a post in the diplomatic service, he knew that it was hopeless to look for anything of the sort at a time when legations, secretaryships and consulates were ranked with post offices as the reward of political merit; so he thought that the best chance to use his talents and realize his ambitions was in newspaper work. But when Raymond died Adams gave up hope; for him it was The Times or nothing. He objected to the political views of The Tribune; on The Herald, aside from other objections, he thought there was no room for any important personality but Bennett; and he disliked the "strong dash of blackguardism" which Dana had given The Sun. Writing for The Times, Adams could have reached a large and influential public; as for any of the other papers which his tastes would have permitted him to consider, he thought that he might as well keep on contributing to The North American Review.

Whether Adams would have been permanently satisfied as a newspaper man may be doubted; his case is cited here only as an incidental testimonial to The Times's rapid recovery from the misfortune of 1866. Early in 1869 an offer of a million dollars was made, and refused, for the property which had been established eighteen years before on a cash investment of sixty-nine thousand. So before Raymond's death The Times had recovered all the ground it had lost even in this department, which Raymond himself would undoubtedly have regarded as the last and least of a good newspaper's claims to eminence. His own material fortunes had risen with those of the paper; at his death he owned a third of the stock. The salary which had been fixed at $2500 a year when The Times was founded had been raised to $4000 in 1860. At the beginning of 1860 this was increased to $10,000 - a huge salary for that day - and at the same time an annual salary of $9000 was voted to Jones as business manager. The Times could afford it: the dividend that year was eighty per cent.

Had Raymond lived, and kept out of politics, the paper which under Jones's direction became more influential and powerful than ever before, and performed at least one public service which must rank as one of the greatest ever accomplished by an American newspaper, would probably have been still more distinguished. For Raymond was only forty-nine when he died suddenly on June 19, 1869, two months before completing his eighteenth year as editor of the paper. Soon after E. L. Godkin, who had served under him, wrote in The Nation that

The Times under his management probably came nearer the newspaper of the good time coming than any other in existence; in this, that it encouraged truthfulness - the reproduction of the facts uncolored by the necessities of a "cause" or the editor's personal feelings—among reporters; that it carried decency, temperance, and moderation into discussion, and banished personality from it; and thus not only supplied the only means by which rational beings can get at the truth, but helped to abate the greatest nuisance of the age, the coarseness, violence, calumny, which does so much to drive sensible and high-minded men out of public life or keep them from entering it.

Certainly Raymond was almost the inventor of the notion that it was possible to believe in a party, to belong to a party, and in general to support that party without being slavishly bound to its policies, right or wrong; and his course in the Civil War showed that this independence of sentiment did not involve any weakening of energies in upholding the truth as he saw it. In Cary's language, he established the corporate conscience of The Times; his successors have tried to live up to it.

CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION, 1860-1869

Yet George Henry Payne, in his "History of Journalism in the United States," seems to think it necessary to account for Raymond's "failure," and does so by explaining that "a journalist can never succeed unless he is fathering popular or moral causes." This extraordinary statement deserves notice because it appears in the most recent book on a subject which has never yet been treated adequately, and because Mr. Payne used to be a newspaperman himself. Without going into metaphysical definitions of success, it may suffice to say that from any point of view Raymond was a brilliant success as a journalist. He was certainly a failure as a politician, if failure means the inability to hold the most powerful political position to which he rose, the chairmanship of the Republican National Committee: but even in this sense he was a failure only because he happened to die, in the prime of life, a few years before the majority came around to his view.

As to Mr. Payne's curious theories on the foundation of newspaper success, it may be observed that The Times, which its worst enemies will admit is successful in the sense that it is widely read, influential and prosperous, has never fathered any causes, popular or unpopular, moral or immoral; nor have some others of the most famous and richest newspapers of the world. If "fathering" was a slip of the pen for "furthering," one may wonder what "moral causes" James Gordon Bennett the First ever promoted. Neither abolition nor Fourieristic Socialism could be described as a "popular cause" in New York seventy-five years ago, yet Horace Greeley made a paper which advocated one of these doctrines, and leaned strongly toward the other, successful in every sense of the word. Nor does this simple definition meet the case of a newspaper which may find prosperity in spite of the furtherance of causes which are both moral and unpopular, or in furthering those which are both popular and immoral. Whatever may be the secret of journalistic success, it can hardly be given away to the world as freely as Mr. Payne seems to think. The art of making a good newspaper is somewhat more than a mere gift for guessing what is going to be popular and moral at the same time; and as can be proved by the examples of Greeley, Raymond, and Bennett (to come no nearer our own time) that art may be exemplified by men who sometimes guess wrong.

CHAPTER III

The Times and the Tweed Ring

THE Times had been so emphatically Raymond's paper that a good many people naturally wondered, after his death, what was going to become of it. Raymond's partner, George Jones, had long been in charge of the business office, and was the ranking officer, so to speak, of those who were left. But he had had no experience in the supervision of editorial policy; his life had been spent in the business office, and few outsiders realized how thoroughly the long friendship and partnership between Ravmond and Iones had indoctrinated each with the principles of the other. Nor did Jones have anything like a controlling interest in the paper. Raymond estate, with thirty-four of the hundred shares, was the heaviest stockholder; Jones had or controlled, in 1869, about thirty. And since Ravmond's son, then finishing his course at Yale, was preparing to learn the newspaper business from the ground up, it was the general expectation that in time he would succeed his father.

But The Times could not wait for him. On July 22, 1869, some five weeks after Raymond's death, the three directors of the company — Jones, Leonard W. Jerome, and James B. Taylor — elected John Bigelow editor. It might have been supposed that this was an excellent selection. Bigelow had for years been associated with William Cullen Bryant in the editorial direction of The Evening Post, and his service as Minister to France had increased his reputation and given him an experience in international politics which at that particular time was extremely valuable. Yet his career as editor of The Times lasted only a few weeks, and is interesting chiefly as illustrating the fact that in the equipment of a newspaper editor the wisdom of the serpent is a somewhat more useful quality than the harmlessness of the dove.

The summer of 1869 saw Jay Gould and Jim Fisk and their associates going on from the plunder of a railroad to the more ambitious scheme of cornering the gold supply of a nation in which the resumption of specie payments was still something of a millennial dream. As is well known, they counted on the neutrality of President Grant, who was neither a financial expert nor a connoisseur in human wile, and whose brother-in-law, Corbin, a friend of the Fisk-Gould group, was generally supposed to supply most of the financial information for the White House.

Bigelow, who knew the President well, saw him early in August, and as a result of the interview wrote for The Times two editorial articles on Grant's economic policy which were generally understood as representing the views of the White House. At Gould's suggestion, Corbin prepared another editorial article, which a gentleman who was a friend of both Corbin and Bigelow succeeded in persuading the editor was also a reflection of Grant's opinion. This article, headed "Financial Policy of the Ad-

ie New-Hork Cinics,

VOL. XIV.....NO. 4220.

NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1865.

及公公公公公公

PRICE FOUR CENTS

GRANT

RICHMOND

VICTORY!

The Union Army in the Rebel

Root end Flight of the Great Rehel Army from Richmond.

Jeff. Davis and His Crew Driven Out. Grant in Close Pursuit of Lee's Ronted Forces.. Riehmond and Petersborgh in Feel Possession of Our Furces.

ENTRUSIASM IN THE REBEL CAPITAL.

the Cilizens Welcome Our Army with Demonstrations of Jay.

RICHMOND FIRED BY THE ENEMY | It and towns its windowskie. Being pursuined Our Treens Save the City from ordered to go to his andrianes, in order to relieve diridisa of the iSemod Corps was adranced by | Fon Biesdinia, and he is consequently eaternally | principally Boothely Boothely Boothely Balletin Boothely Balletin Boothely Balletin Balletin On, and moticitous respection it. The frost of Tutt Stood-

South, Carolina. They have fought hard alove the Porres and his alaff are to the bottest part of the | heavy, bel et this bour it wimp

THE GLORIOUS NEWS.

Rejaioings in City and Country

Enthusinem, Solemnity and Thanksgiving. Business Suspanded and Plags Dis-

The Pealse of the Army on Everg

Great Mass Meetings in Wall Street and at Union Squere.

Patriotic Spacobes and Poirtaile

The Whole City Aglow with

Exoitement,

ILLUMINATIONS AND PIREWORKS. At no time since the Fall of Somter bas the atribites, and cettes the Berdest hehrt to beat with strange whitper filled the sir, panetraling to th damped the jayiel naws appe the public mind. Derzels was sufficient to erouse the most tres thed themselves at their verious evecations when

Wan Desilenten. [OFFICIAL.]

In texture firm. Dier .

The following telegram from the President, messecing the Evectorism or Farmannen and probably of Richmond, has just been received by this department

This morning Lieut. Gen. GRANT reporth Peters. EDWIN M. Byanzon, Secretary of War Cerr Pourt, Va., April 3-6:30 A. M. To Ren, Edurit, M. Stemion, Secretary of Water

surgh eventered, and he is confident that Rich-He is pushing forward to cal off, if possible, mond also is.

A. Lincoln. THE CAPTORY DF SICHMORD. the retreating redel army.

Was Daranteur, Wannates, 0.6. BECOND DISPATOR.

It appears from a dispatch of Gen. Warenza. pust received by this Department, that our forces under bie command ARS EN RICEMOND, having taken it et 8 15 this morning. To Met.-Gen. Die :

EDWIN M. STABNON, Secretary of Wan. Wan Department, Wandungton, Monday, April 3-11 o'clock noon. THIRD DISPATOR.

fith, and two in the Second, with a stew of moting tereral demonstrations on the .nouny's warts and totag through them, if manageary, for the complete lavelopment of the plee of attack. In pursuases with this dealgn say grilliery genned n forlone

> The following official confirmation of the capure of Pichmond, and the emounesment that the city to on fire has been received. Mon. Gen. Die:

R. M. Stauron, Becretary of Wor.

"We took Richmond at 8:15 this morning. I captured many guan. The casing laft le great beste. The city is on fre in one place. Am making avary effort to put it out. The people receive a with anthualastic expansions of joy." Gen Grant ateried ourly this morning with Crey Fourt, transtay, April 2-11 &. M. Gen. Warrann telegrophs se follows: Th Etien M. Stanton, Secretary of Wer:

T. S. Bowses, A. A. President Lingots has gons to the front. R M. Syakrok.

the army taward the Danyille road, to out off

LEE's retreating array, if possible.

OUR SPECIAL ACCOUNTS.

Mavemeeta by Quu. Bluridus-Mid Call fap Relaterzousett-Vour Thousand Prices. ere Captured-Dperations on the Poters-

hargh Frant-The Guebunt Pinet Doing

After we quitted the field on Friday availing the left of the Flith Corps swang about helf a mile further round, and drove the spemy before them. Hannguarress dans of the Potonic, Shoney, April 2-6 A. M. Freez Cur Own Borrespondent.

pure moteury mare tout alterithers, were were directed to rell hank Mulbohad, The Regest Dirisina of the Fifth Carps, Den. Arnas, rot unt easily this morning to support Gon, Bannaun, and the tilel. elans of Cate Onlers and Den. Catweons followed SERMMEN'S Cortes at a distances of some, fire miles from the Mer. Butter bours, and a gehral agegte-B about mean. They all formed a juncting with Den. ment mammenered there about I o'slout.

wounded and tangeted done. The fighting was fenght our men bend in hand when we wers about quinting the perapet of the fort, although lytag down at the Une to avoid the fers of aur udvancing has, Gap. Caurits, of the Second Brigads of the Division, led the way lote thair works, and when den, Porreg sept in eibif be nauld hald las rated necessarily by very beary. The rebells no cerere that the loss on and monafad, to wall to ear own was 1817 hunry. On any tines during the day there was no fighting an--tixle has behand wounded and sixly-In the afthropea one Gongs were intered or them. pleese in the Ninth Corps front, at two in teo Siath, I wee not able to go on the the nistance is less great of Gane, fletning and Warray succeeded, after tour betinties of artillary, a large train of loaded wagens and a numbar of earlies. The renel leve in killed but I am chable in give any netimate of the semble. nepi an inn Twenty-fenrib Corps frant. The rabels tenecited the nichate of this corps, and nitempled to rolete the planet libe, from a hich they were driven perferdag. They were speedily reguland with a loss bar priseners. One loss was Elloen in the negroguie. and ous ib the Twenty-Burit, one in the Twentyfor me for accomplish appthing to time tor the mail. I anderstand, however, that the combined forces a holly malerated fight, in pulling the enemy th Steat. They captured four thousand primewfa.

our forces should be reselled and disordered, the The these has are also very clare together, and if Gan. Wiccas is elso ta che field wite his sieft. enemy would have an excellent opportunity to infiles serious damage, and make us pay dearly for the In Pichmand. o'clock this menting. At 2 this merels,, meb of our knops as it was deemed proper to send in were get into position in freat of our works and hald which was continued with little intermisation and it I have not yet had time to acceptain which froops ready to muke the creenil.

cannunging glong the entire frant st about 11 P. M.,

tematty we have awinced to aftemption to attend Con. Marranarra Dieleton is angued in themment but that of the 25th tolt, but they behaved an apply on that occasion that great things are expected. of toem. And they have such regard for their brave and noble Division Commander that they will no donnt strive hard tor the sake of his reputation and their own, Gen. Panen, the Corps Cammander, in elso near the scane of action with his staff and within Prom the present sapect of office he will here cause in be proud of his corps are the day closes as we are such nimost impregizable warks as those he accopies coint or with want specasts. It is composed whelin of new troubs who have sever been in any ongoterange of the enemy's gans directing the operations. ssuit, bul I am not able to say at what particular glogg this line, were led to the assault, nor the results at different rlaten, Gap. Porran's, af the Binit Corps. This dipoints, and the naily this to speak of the Second Dirieinn was posted on that past of the line between knas of allack sarived the Brigade Commanders Onn. Others and Courts, perceiving the apporually in do so without andangaring thair own men mede a cartie and naptured one hundred and telelythree men and four officers of the rebal pickels. Wit ploteline was nompietly sarpried, and only Atthib bear, d. M., there is extractingly beary firtag along the nuttre line from Danp Bostom to ide Ropdiown alant-resd, and the first of gunbank on bris Befgwick and Davis, and same time hefore the mewnf the affect when called upon in entrander Thenreadle on the second's works commerced ut develock in several places, and is still progressing, hat with what success is not yet hown. In the front of the Second Division of the Wisth Corps the Jomes Blone are participating to it.

no doubt elvendy partially witeln toe enemy's lines. thought they are, whether we can hold them will Stady, and have laken two francis more volumern. On baldy relationsed this motiving by the Pith The ngill is till racing halborts. On four most as Corps, the narmy full back to reposity that therefore sons bulanews. It is thought here that we can both 1 stelect, A. M.-The demonstration in front of the Second dielaton of the Winth Corps promites to be a meases. We have explored two of their forts, guesand all, and the iten of works beleaus and an eliber tabe and bold them. there sacms the be more brilliery niggad the ganbonis are engained. Garren and Currer, are hotolog their men well up than eleowhere on the Mas, except of the Bat Den. Perras and nie toge able Brigede Denerals, the work, and the determination is aptversed through.

ont the dirietan to go through if rapolied, Oun.

But lotatingspers being secales frem Chin, funtiwithin their has at weeks and will hald them. Ry to-night, I dope, he write you from Pourrhulps, Among the prisences suppress by the Riet Corps nen uffebt nitt care, ann of them a Motor. Cal. Count, of the Porty-sighth Pennsylvania, was eastly wound-

etend parembate, but we have now a strong tares will rend par particulars, disputching it no Gay

Point by angrem beines the boat lanves.

Deirwinding an Murch 20 Jane Buppoby od, as also Col. Wastow and Major Brerressun, of the Oan Randred and Stath Row-York ; Col. Gusco.

One Bondest and Savanty-plath Rem. Tork, badly

Derwinde Coursaces, To., Thursder Moods & ... Viv. Wassacros, Monday, April 2-2-48 F. M. ... The advance of Occ. Heiripan's commend crassed Relative Bob yesteter, meeting only allab! opposition and nanopasses at that place flow the on-Frem Our Own Startespendent.

W. St. F. Let's seenire, three brigades, was the front, but oft so are fit to make a signe. To-day, to an attempt to reach draparty crea-rends, one of Ponnar's comment and Lun's sark ulny formed a Une of hattite and held the ground, In

. CILLID AND WOUNDED. wages, and if not to fall bads, his toply wat, " Toll Den, Porruet enn hald the warbe, Sand me mefre men if you can but I will told the work." Be that annuand of the division on Oce, Porter being

The control of the co Pint telobiges ; George Start ; Corp. George Der-rick ; Bergt. Bebert Rorden, Stalt Sem-Tork ; Corp. George B. Lott, Twanicht Prensyleania. wounded. Don. Cunter. of the Pirst Brigtrakes was edicing, and then deming forward at teatr head driving the enemy before him. This fight. Klath, Corps to be equal to any amugenor. The Everybady bere thinks these who are left of as will ade, also behared with great gallanire, task not for it fo the worst this army erer bad to du, and so for it has necompileted the abject ugalded, querter ib Potoreburgh to-night, and thut the old stare and stripes will wave near the cockade ofth are drew the cord that will soon strangle the rebellion halding" his men ng to the worte till to oneren if not nitimately successfol, prover the nid the retting of the sub. In taking Poternborgh we Dispetches to the Associated Fress. Details of the Victory.

firedognaries Anny of 1911 Portuge, | | |

When the serve of Southar's repoles resoluted never that the corps was an once despotated to bit and, and this appeared that to-sight or to the moraligne that it is appeared that to-sight or to the moraligne. The greater portion of the army has not been encupied th excelling warks on the new line, andre. inch took forly-eight boure to more dre mitte with cattries facestry and permentance of the afficers in charge of the Quartermanier's and Commissery Degognd wild the anseny to-day. The Uma has been onpairing the roads cannelles, the alferent norps. the amiliants of easthousend tree. Bot through the The late raise bed rendered it imparable to more the wagen iteles so fast na the troops advanced. One

Tas river race a foot his ser this morehose.
The shoulded over the of he sign are covered with
The shoulded over and house,
A personic of the greater paid of the western and an about a service cannot be been added the only as necessable cannot be hard.
The dood is abouted the greater of ordering hed venture and too tacoeries is lonndated. in thosant the factors, we noted an the read in the read in the read in the read of the Tune fort. About the souther forther about the read in thirteen when we require in the read of Frozer of thicks, when he has more out in given four the read could be an united to the read croping from Subtraction to the country and the read croping from Subtraction and the read croping from the first bear of the present discusses. It is not a substantial that the read croping from the first present discusses and the read croping from th probable course. Cos man, who kept the crowd deer our buildin in a contant oproce, suggested bergennn & Ce.'s dry guods einer...Contleg, were sie jage jage jage gete felling mala na wier. The nggie- get fort a $60,000, upon willen there is very little NUMBER'S dry goods store, on Market-street, marolog. Evennan's bebery and barned this get his command back with noty a slight loss, at the eams time taking about 160 prizoners. Both iss Lane were present, but one of them was at a respice.

Copps kendquarters this martilop, pierten carulty-pen photogene O'N, thuse Law do commend. Tang tand were no pinket day and were out off by the piers making went to line anisance of Kenautala. Subsequartus or rus dans or con Porsuad, and "The magnetin of children was the series and a series of the children was the series of the children was the series of the children was th chools as much and as gradio schools we we obligate as to the harbor amount of will and William states. Approplies addresses serio made in particular and them to the proposition of the serior of the control of them by the Proposition of the man to the control of the control o in pictor water. The many of pictors are a second or the collect of the collect o tade, och men astraaged for montas grayed evek others willing palm, while their Benta bout in dar-motious thankagiving. In the public and pidrata A source from Kajor-Geo. Settiona ber Jud'ne-ffeed with the most obstrict news. The pumbland forces of versity and Mafor Gen. Wannes's intentry advanced appliet ine coung tale They ratroated to Pies Fotha, whore they ware ad dawn the tonite Oak raad. It was bere the letyn aftersoon, driving them tocoral miten, and captoring about 4,000 prisoners and n comber of places of ac-Banked by a part of the Pitth Corps, which had mov-

the stages, the street were full of chaerton, happy, an unking, togeling specify, who wades of nate many, all potate of atthusing, and chapted built such with his actitable speen the one great converse. amber of pulsoers with a figure of pulsoes of the figure of pulsoes of the figure of t twante by tola to dispoire the fact that our prein circuit supplit the brane of the Consederate Prident, he said of the generates Prident, he said of the generates of yet ones Allino, Brane has been dely the though Allino, Brane has been dely the frame of the control of the control of the frame of the control of the control of the

frame of the control of the control of the frame of the control of the control of the frame of the principal of the frame of the control of the frame of the control
frame of the principal of the frame of the control
frame of the principal of the frame of the control
frame of the control The latest news here this morning is, that ohr forces had emplored Fort Demonston last night, with all lies armament and many pilaneers. This fort is all he armoment and many prisoners. This forth neer Part Hall, and one of the promper and most It to alke esparting that Petersburgh has been cop-so but ston: but he rabel loss thus for for the three than more than burn.

In a ballesed that Exzerce by this time has out The Piece in the St. Luvrence-Bubmenries at Mastrent-The Victoria Dridge in The fighting has been terrible, and the tomas beavy classical surgernation begins for the consenter.

Tree search in lifes of electron brans as all 16-7 (decisions explored—by sured Jun. David electron of the consent of the consent of the consent Jun. David electron of the cons In particular, the correction to machine; and it is not desired in the vest studies of the correction of the vest studies of the testing studies of the vest section of the vest section of the vest parts are placed toous the studies of the studies of the vest parts are placed toous the studies, but the parts are placed toous the vest parts are treated the speak to be considered to the studies of the vest of the The first ress neveral fest as Saturday and use piece sea served fest as Saturday and use piece with tee as a great shapin. One of the theore cans near striking a pub of the Vetoria Yatterday morning, the river tone much higher, doeding William, Wellington and other brests. Brunned's and 6 o'clock in the secolog, the fee ment wall, flooding Commission-threat. At about II p'oloch, it agein mas an billo ut El. Paul and St. Glit The Brand Truck Reliway track between Bone. shored ageln and the unter routed over the rever-pope for a respulsion, and no bits was eventually and a personal for a constitution of a personal for a personal for a personal for a personal for a personal form and to for a personal form and not formation of a personal formation and a per distrant. Later-4 Ocioch P. M.-The mater is now slowly falling. Fire at Leuisville, Kr. Lonsville, Kr., Sconey, April 2, neaty to avery mother's adm in reheldom, simple excepting old Jerr., . Mason, . ned Bial take fours or the Spotremen Reute, and ministration," was published in The Times on August 25. Luckily Caleb C. Norvell, the financial editor, had seen it in proof and had suggested to the surprised Bigelow that it showed evidence of a purpose to "bull gold," presumably in furtherance of the enterprise whose beginnings were already visible to men in Wall Street. The last paragraph was struck out and the article thereby rendered innocuous; but the rest of it was published. Less than a month later came Black Friday, when Grant shattered the final assault of the gold conspirators by opening up the Treasury's reserves; and shortly after that Bigelow left The Times.

Continued on Eighth Page,

THE TIMES AND THE TWEED RING

Iones was justifiably alarmed by this experience, and was consequently forced to set himself, at the age of fifty-eight, to learn something about the editorial management as well as the business affairs of the paper. There seems to have been some surprise among newspapermen of the time when it was discovered that Jones wanted to go on alone. Greeley, for example, attempted to buy The Times in the summer after Raymond's death. When The Tribune was established Greelev had owned it all, but he was no financier, and at the time of his death retained only one sixteenth of the stock. This coincidence of an editor without a newspaper and a newspaper without an editor suggested to Greelev the idea of buying The Times, which he seems to have supposed would be a burden on Jones's hands. But Jones replied that he would never sell out "so long as he was on top of the sod," so Greeley had to stick to The Tribune.

After Bigelow's retirement the post of editor of The Times, under Jones's supervision, was given to George Shepard, who for some time had been one of the political editorial writers. In the 1901 Jubilee Supplement of The Times Shepard's editorship was thus characterized: "The decorum and solid ability which had long characterized The Times were perfectly safe in his hands, but sprightliness was undoubtedly lacking." There were those on the paper, however, who had perhaps an excess of sprightliness, and chief of these was Louis J. Jennings, a man with a great deal of talent, a great deal of temperament, and a character so commingled of opposite qualities that one wonders alternately why he did not achieve brilliant success, and how he managed to get as far as he did. Jennings was an Englishman, who had edited The Times of India, served as American correspondent of The London Times just after the Civil War, and then written London correspondence for The New York Times. He seems to have had an affection for the name, and during Bigelow's brief editorship he had been added to the editorial staff of the paper.

Shortly after Shepard took over the direction of the editorial page, on November 25, 1869, there was a murder in the Tribune office. Albert D. Richardson, one of the stockholders in and contributors to that paper, was shot and mortally wounded by a gentleman whose wife had left him for a complex of reasons of which Richardson was one. Mrs. McFarland had obtained a divorce in Indiana, her husband having been served by publication in local papers, and she was married to Richardson on his deathbed. Two or three eminent clergymen signalized their breadth of opinion, if not their literal fidelity to the doctrines of their churches, by defending the relation as an innocent one and turning public sympathy against the injurious husband, if indeed it was not running in that direction already.

THE TIMES AND THE TWEED RING

This was too much for Jennings's moral principles, especially as it had happened in the office of a rival newspaper. Despite Shepard's hesitation, Jennings succeeded in getting into The Times a number of editorials on this case - which indeed was celebrated enough, at the time, to deserve some com-Beginning with the innocuous and generally acceptable doctrine that newspapermen had no special privilege of seduction, he went on to ask what else could be expected from those who had preached the malignant doctrines of Fourier, destructive of family ties. This must have surprised Greeley, who by that time had almost forgotten his youthful adventures in Socialism, along with other ebullient eccentricities of his earlier years. But nothing was clearer to Jennings than that the infection imported by Brisbane still befouled the Tribune office, and that free love, with its consequences of murder or suicide, was the natural result of taking The Tribune editorial page seriously.

Jennings had an exceptional talent for stirring up the animals. The Tribune presently began to retaliate against these editorial attacks by a counter-offensive; but Jennings being a recent arrival and little known, its editors naturally took for their target the respectable Shepard. After a few weeks of this Shepard told Jones that Jennings could fight his own battles. Shepard retired to his old position as a writer of political articles and Jennings became editor of The Times. In the great battle against Tweed which soon followed Jennings was the leader of the offensive. Jones had the responsibility, and a heavy responsibility it was; John Foord, who had lately joined the editorial staff, handled most of the work of analyzing political and financial evidence that came into the hands of the paper; and equipped with the facts exhumed by Foord, and fortified by the knowledge that Jones was standing behind him, Jennings put his talent for invective to a somewhat more useful employment than annoyance of The Tribune.

It is customary, in discussing the Tweed ring, to call attention to the gradual and in the long view quite considerable improvement in the standard of New York municipal politics. Even in the worst scandals of more recent periods the offenders showed a certain regard for outward order and decency. City officials no longer thrust their arms into the city treasury and steal money outright, as Tweed and his associates used to do; modern peculations are measured by thousands where they stole millions, and the unearned increment in the fortunes of certain political leaders of today and vesterday can be traced back to such diverse and subsidiary transactions as taking a percentage from gamblers and prostitutes, or a fortunate and extremely silent partnership in contracting firms dealing with the city or with corporations dependent for franchises on municipal favor.

The percentage of honest men in Tammany Hall is probably higher now than in the days of Croker, certainly higher than in the days of Tweed or Fernando Wood; and the improvement in public morals has affected even the reform movements. They are no longer, as they were apt to be in the forties and fifties, about as bad as Tammany. They no longer can be bought off by judicious distribution of offices to their leaders, as sometimes happened in the sixties and seventies; nor, in spite of the recent declamations of enthusiastic Republican leaders, are they as likely to make themselves impotent by divisions and quarreling as they were in the eighties and nineties. It is perhaps a matter for dispute whether stupidity and incompetence is an improvement on venality, but there is no doubt that there is a great deal of mere stupidity today where in similar conditions even twenty years ago there would have been corruption.

THE TIMES AND THE TWEED RING

Still, when all allowance is made for these laudable tendencies, the dispassionate observer can hardly admit that New York would be justified in giving three cheers for itself. Nor does the study of a century of municipal history tend to make converts for the philosophy of Pippa and Polly-It is a painful chronicle of alternating indignation, apathy, and despair; if it teaches anything, it is only the old lesson that the solution of political problems is not to be found in changes of political machinery. In the last hundred years New York has tried about everything. Greater measures of home rule have been introduced as a desperate remedy, in the hope that centralization of responsibility would enable the public to keep officials up to the mark; but it was exactly such centralization that made possible the enormous stealings of Tweed and his confederates. In reaction from this the city, or that part of it interested in honest government, has from time to time thrown itself on the mercy of the legislature, only to find presently, not exactly that it has exchanged King Log for King Stork, but that between storks the one who spends stolen money at home has at least some advantage over the one who plunders the city for the enrichment of up-state.

In the period of Tweed's supremacy New York had the misfortune of enduring practically all these varieties of political experience, and for some years each new arrangement proved to be worse than what had gone before. The chief accomplishment of The Times's exposure of Tweed was the breaking of this ascending spiral. Thievery soon began again, but on a much humbler scale and with considerably more caution. And never since has municipal corruption been anything like so enormous, or so flagrant, as in the period between 1868 and 1871. There have been no more Tweeds; but in view of the lessons of New York City's history, it would be rather venturesome to assert that there will never be another Tweed in the future.

In the fifties and early sixties the dominant figure in Tammany Hall was Fernando Wood, but even then Tweed was doing pretty well for himself. The charter of 1857 had given control of the city's finances to an elective bipartisan Board of Supervisors, twelve in number, on which Tweed managed to obtain a dominant position. Corruption, which had always existed in the city government, rapidly increased under the benign sway of this virtually irremovable body, but the golden days of graft began only with the election of 1868, when by wholesale naturalizations at the last minute, the voting of cartloads of repeaters, stuffing of the ballot boxes, and other devices now happily gone out of fashion, Tammany elected John T. Hoffman governor of the state and A. Oakey Hall mayor of the city. The legislature was also Democratic by a very slight majority; but the precarious margin could be, and on occasion was, enlarged by the purchase of any necessary number of upstate Republicans. Tweed came into control of both state and city governments on January 1, 1869; his domination was ended in the fall of 1871. It is a tribute both to his ingenuity and to the largeness of his view that estimates of the amount which he and his associates stole in that brief period range from fifty million to a hundred million dollars.

To remove the possibility of inconvenient inquiry into his doings Tweed put through the legislature in 1870—with the aid of purchased Republican votes—a new city charter. In its preliminary advertising it was proclaimed as a home rule measure; on that understanding it got a good deal of respectable support; even The Times, disgusted with the conditions that had arisen under the prevalent system, in the beginning favored the measure. But it presently turned out that the document was full of jokers, and that its real effect, as John Foord has put it, was to turn the city over to the control of four men—the Mayor, Hall; the president of the Board of Supervisors, Tweed; the Controller,

89

Richard B. Connolly; and the president of the Park Board, Peter B. Sweeney. Heads of departments were appointed by the Mayor, for terms of four or eight years, and during their terms were practically irremovable. This alone would have been enough for moderate men; but for good measure a provision was thrown in that all claims against the County of New York incurred previous to the passage of the act should be audited by Hall, Tweed, and Connolly, and met by revenue bonds payable during 1871.

This board met only once, and then voted that all claims certified by the Board of Supervisors to the County Auditor and presented by him to the Board of Audit should be authorized. In other words, Tweed sent his bills to the Auditor — James Watson, one of his own creatures — and this functionary passed them on to the Board of Audit to receive a blanket endorsement - from Tweed. In this manner some six million dollars was "audited," mainly in connection with work done, or alleged to have been done, on the construction, equipment and repair of the County Court House. Some of the claims were purely fictitious; the others were all set down at far more than the real value of the work: and of it all Tweed and certain of his associates received 65 per cent at first, and eventually 85 per cent.

This was the most scandalous and the most easily visible of the multitudinous thefts promoted by Tweed. Others were of the familiar sort — fraudulent contracts, payrolls padded with the names of dead men, of babes in arms, or of Tammany ward heelers who had to be supported but did not want to soil their hands with work except on election day; appropriations for the support of non-existent institutions, huge payments to companies in which Tweed or his friends had an interest. suspicions which were inevitably aroused by such enormous and ubiquitous peculations were slow in taking definite form. Ostensibly, Tweed was saving money for the city. He reduced the tax rate in 1871, and thereby won the gratitude of taxpayers who had become alarmed at the rapid and unaccountable increase in municipal expenses. Just how much the city was spending or how much it owed nobody knew, but it was evidently a great deal. Tweed's sudden show of economy had its effect in winning support for him among the propertyowning classes, and though their suspicions were not killed by any means, a good many respectable and prosperous citizens had become so discouraged with municipal politics, so willing to grasp at any straw of hope, that they were pleased to adopt the policy of the ostrich, and try to pretend that they believed public affairs were being honestly conducted, instead of undertaking the difficult and dangerous process of attempting to find out.

CHARLES R. MILLER, Editor-in-Chief.

As a matter of fact, Tweed had reduced the tax rate by the very simple process of abandoning the pay-as-you-go plan of municipal finance, and meeting most of the claims which he and his friends presented to the city—together with the comparatively infrequent bills from honest creditors—by the issue of thirty-year bonds; while so far as possible the demands were met by short-term obligations not funded at all. In a city containing as many competent financiers as New York there were a good many men who saw through this, but none who dared to speak out. The man who did dare to speak was George Jones, and under his direction The Times began in September, 1870, a campaign which resulted, after fourteen months, in the complete overthrow of Tweed.

That The Times did not begin its attack sooner may perhaps be ascribed to the influence of James B. Taylor, who was one of the three directors of the paper, and one of Tweed's four partners in the New York Printing Company. The history of this organization would alone furnish valuable matter for reflection to political reformers, and some useful hints to thieving politicians; but for the purposes of this narrative it is enough to say that before the exposure of the ring it had received some millions of public money for very slight services, and that Tweed's far-ranging plans looked to making it the sole agency for the printing not only of the city, but of the state and eventually of the nation.

Taylor had been a stockholder in The Times since April, 1861, and his associates evidently had a good opinion of him, since though he held only one tenth of the stock he was elected to Raymond's place on the directorate. But that he would have been able to hold back the paper forever from its assault on the ring is a quite untenable supposition, in view of the character of George Jones. Taylor died early in September, 1870, and The Times's campaign began soon after; but for the first few months the paper had nothing to go on but its suspicions, and Taylor's objections could well have been, and presumably were, based on the risk of commencing an attack on the most formidable and best intrenched group of political conspirators the country had ever known without conclusive evidence.

It would be agreeable to suppose that similar considerations of prudence were alone responsible for the fact that the other dailies of the city were at best neutral in the fight, while most of them actually supported Tweed until his guilt was proved beyond any question; but the record shows otherwise. There was a reason why The Times had to fight single-handed, except for the support of Harper's Weekly, which in Nast's cartoons had a weapon even more powerful than Jennings's vituperation. Enormous sums were being spent for municipal advertising, most of which was quite unnecessary. A good deal of it went to obscure publications either existing solely for the purpose of printing public advertisements, or chiefly maintained by that source of revenue, and owned by various members of the ring; but much of it went to the regular newspapers of the city, and cannot be called anything but a hush fund.

For a while The Times received its share of this advertising, which was rejected when it became apparent that it was a hush fund. But Tweed and his subordinates had been wise enough to see that the city was always pretty well in arrears of payment; when The Times refused to accept further city advertising, the city refused to pay its bill. The Times went to court and got a judgment, but the litigation furnished an excuse by which Mayor Hall tried—though unsuccessfully—to explain the "animus" which the paper eventually displayed by telling the truth about the city government. In the meantime the account refused by The Times was turned over to The Tribune, which for some time showed a reluctance to believe, or to publish, anything reflecting on Tweed. In view of the fact that Tweed was at that time the boss of the Democratic party not only in the city but in the state, and was becoming dangerously powerful in his influence on the national leaders of the party, this is an instance of magnanimity toward a political enemy quite without parallel in the history of the period.

The hush fund did its work. When the other papers said anything about Tweed, it was in his defense. The Sun, to be sure, did make the ironic proposal of a monument to the "benefactor of the people," the fund to be started by a contribution of ten cents which The Sun professed to have received from one of Tweed's admirers. Tweed indeed suspected that Dana was not altogether in earnest, and for this and other reasons refused to accept any such testimonial; but a good many of The Sun's readers, as well as some historians of later days, took the suggestion seriously.

The attack was begun by the most obvious method, and the one most readily available in view of the lack of any definite evidence. The Times called the attention of its readers to Tweed's sudden and enormous wealth, and asked where he had got it. Again and again the paper called on the respectable leaders of the Democratic party to disown their associate; but just then that would have been somewhat difficult. Tweed could have disowned them and remained a Democrat, but they could hardly disown the man who had carried the state for the presidential ticket in 1868, and who was still in absolute control of the state organization, without finding themselves out in the cold.

Then The Times began to ask for a little information about the city's finances. For a year and a half no statement of them had been published. was presumed that the Controller, Connolly, was still keeping books, but they were locked away as carefully as the golden plates of the Book of Mormon. despite a law which prescribed that they should be open to the public. For two months the campaign was carried on with all the vigor of which Jennings was capable, but apparently it had little effect. In the fall of 1870 the reform ticket - supported by Republicans, independents, and those Democrats who had turned against Tweed either on principle, or because they had been excluded from the profits that were reserved for the favorites of the inner circle — was beaten by a handsome majority. There was a good deal of reason to suppose that Governor Hoffman and Mayor Hall owed their reelection largely to Tweed's foresight in buying up a good many of the Republican election inspectors; but whatever the reason, they were reëlected.

But The Times and Harper's Weekly kept on fighting. They kept on despite the discouragement of the election, the evidence that only a minority of New Yorkers took any interest in the continuous and enormous thefts of their own money; despite the opposition of all the other papers, which imputed motives to The Times running all the way down from partisan malice against the Democratic leader, and vindictive efforts to force the payment of the overdue advertising bill, to accusations that the editors of the paper had been bought. In view of the fact that Tweed and his friends could, and eventually did, offer a good deal more for The Times's silence than could conceivably be bid by anybody for its continuance of the attacks, this was not a very plausible accusation; but it was often repeated and doubtless believed by a good many who had their own reasons for clinging to their faith in Tweed.

A great many worthy citizens thought that The Times was unreasonable and vindictive. There was heard the complaint, since become painfully familiar, that criticisms of the administration were injuring the good name and the credit of the city. and that it was the duty of all good citizens to boost New York — and its officials. Even the reformers of the period were silent. The Citizens' Association had lately been formed for the promotion of higher standards of municipal government. It was organized and intended for reform; it began as a representative of public-spirited taxpayers, and its president was Peter Cooper. But its secretary was soon won over by the gift of a municipal office: and Peter Cooper presently allowed himself to be convinced that Tweed and his friends had stolen as much as they could use, and that hereafter it would be to their interest to turn conservative and save money for the taxpayer.

If this happened to the chief reform organization of the period, it may be surmised how easily Tweed flattered, bribed or terrorized other respectable citizens into giving him at least tacit support. It was dangerous to oppose him — particularly dangerous for rich men, since Tweed controlled the assessments for taxation and could raise them to any figure that suited him if property owners gave him cause for hostility. And undoubtedly a good many men kept still out of sheer apathy — the apathy begotten of long experience with city governments each of which was more corrupt than its predecessor, and the conviction that even if good citizens got together they would probably be beaten up at the polls by Tammany thugs, or counted out by Tammany election inspectors.

The most amazing instance of Tweed's ability to mobilize the respectability of the city in his support is the famous audit of the Controller's books in the fall of 1870. The Times had been calling on Connolly to let the citizens know how much the city was spending, and what it owed. In October Connolly suddenly announced that he would do so, and would submit his books to the inspection of six of the most distinguished and reputable business men of New York - Moses Taylor, E. D. Brown, John Jacob Astor, George K. Sistare, Edward Schell, and Marshall O. Roberts. Their report was published on November I — just before the election and undoubtedly gave to many good citizens a plausible pacifier for the disturbed conscience. For the committee reported that "the account books of the department are faithfully kept. . . . We have come to the conclusion and certify that the financial affairs of the city, under the charge of the Controller, are administered in a correct and faithful manner."

As Foord observes in his "Life of Andrew H. Green":

These names represent the foremost financial interests of their time, and no group of men could have been selected more likely to command the confidence of the people of New York. Yet, at the very time they certified to the correctness of the Controller's books, those records contained the evidence of direct thefts amounting to about twelve million dollars, while the testimony they bore to indirect stealing was equivalent to many millions more.

Connolly's books, indeed, were "correct." They showed that thus much money had been paid to such and such persons for this and that. When The Times later published these records it was at once observed that payments of several hundred thousand dollars to individual carpenters or painters for a month's work seemed somewhat unusual, and that it was curious that three or four men had endorsed all the receipts, no matter in whose names the claims stood; but nothing of the sort seems to have occurred to the six respectable citizens.

Their report, however, was convincing enough to those who wanted to be convinced; but Tweed discovered that there was one man in New York who could not be bought off or scared off. The Times continued the fight. Tweed did everything he could to fight back. Two years before, when the paper was fighting the Erie Railroad conspirators, a Tweed-Fisk judge had suggested to the grand jury that it had better indict Raymond and Jones; but the grand jury did not take the advice. Now a new

he New-Bork Cimes.

VOL. XIVNO. 4225.

HANG OUT YOUR BANNERS the Richmood and Lynchburgh read to the pose of errougles definitely the terms upon the Control of the Atmy of Northers and Lanchburgh Vlegiois will be received. willing about foor miles West of Walter's Farmville and Lynchburgh mad, I am at this church, and will push forward to the front for the purpose of meeting you.

with the interview to take place, will meet Notice and to me, on this road, where you Fory respectfully, your ob'd't servant, Leutenaot-General.

letters to you of the 8th list., I gropone to seceive the surrender of the Army of North-In accordance with the substance of my Arrestres Cous-Boom, April 9, 1863. Smars! R. B. Lee, Commonding C. S. A. :

VICTORXI | In deplicate, one copy to be given to no offiained by such officers as you may designate. not to take arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged, ern Virginia on the following terms, to wit : Rolls of all the officers and men to be made tad esob company or regimental commender sign a like parale for the men of their com-

the United Blotes, The arme, artillery and public property to Surrender of Gen. be passed and elected and three over to the officers appointed by me to receive them.

eral Lee and His Whole Army.

This will not embrace the side arms of the As I have no authority to test on the subject of United States authority so long un they ob. | foeting. The terms upon utiled peace un be had officers, nor their private horses or buggings. This done, EACH OFFICER AND MAN WILL BE ALLOWED TO RETURN TO THEIR HOMES, not to be disturbed by THE WORK OF PALE SUNDAY, serve , where parche and the lawe in Three Very impectfully. share they enable.

Final Triamph of the Army of the Potomoc.

U. S. Gaarr, Lieutenant-Ceneral. Salequarted Aust in Moseum Thousa, Sales,

GEFREAL: I have received your letter of many wrenders . a. nearonal by went An this date, CONTAINING THE TERMS OF SURRENDER OF THE ARMY OF HORTH, Lieut, Gra. U. B. Grend, Communical U. E. A.: The Strategy and Diplomacy of Lleut.-Gen.

THE

NEW-YORK, MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1865.

D, 6, GRANT, Lisht. General, Yery respectfully, your obedient servent, Gramat. I received, at a late hour, your note Honeyre to Gon, Grant and His April 8, 1865. of to-day, in spewer to mine of yesterday.

I did not lettend to propose the savrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, but to auk the terms the emergency has arleen to call for the sur-

A NATIONAL SALUTE ORDERED.

Gallant Army.

Two Boedred Gane to be Fired at the Beadguarters of Every frmy, Bepartment, Post upd Arsenal. [OFFICIAL.]

But an ide restoration of peace should be the colo chiert of all, I desira to know whether your pro-

The officers to give their individual paroles | to Richmond, batween the picket lines of the two you at 10 A. M., to-morrow, on the old stage road I cannot, therefore, mest you with a view to eurreades the Army of Northern Virginia, bet an fer ne your proposition may offeet the Confederate States forces under my command, and lend to the restaration of paure, I should be placed to meat

Very respectfully, your obedtent servent,

PEACE!

Thanks be to Almighty God for the grant vietory with which he has this day occurred you

Links Great:

Was Derastran, Wasewoot, D. C., Y. April 9, 1863--9.39 F. M.

The thanks of this Department and of the Dovenument, and of the People of the United filates will be rendered to you and the brave and gallant officers and saidless of your army for all time.

and the gallant armies under your command.

-their reverence and honor have been deserved-

EDWIN M. SPANTOR, Secretary of Wer.

Was Dinaminary, Washington, D. C., April 9, 1805-10 o'clink P. M.

To Limit. Con. GRAFT, Commercing Armics of

be fired at the headquarters of overy army and United States, and et the Miliary Academy et West Point on the day nithe receipt of this order, to commendention of the anreader of Gen. Box-ERT E LES and the Army of Horthun Virginia to mand. Report of the receipt and execution of this order to be made to the Adjutunt-General at Ordered: That a uslute of two hundred gune department, and at every post and ersenat to the Lient.-Gen, Giany and the army nuder his com-Washington be settled without the lass of insorber life, I sub-

od. complessoily seeked to the clara fanals. It enjoy the frentition that the Impone building ne

PRICE FOUR CANTS

distonce after to the Provident's headname distribt, the River Queen. Not for behind in the benedited stee headiled etce) gradues day, ex-blorings reserves general equier to dislogationd geens, and one of the feature vessels in the navy. The fairer quere, which loot the president paths then, speceeds no faither than the chairculon at Orway's Bled. We ere some Bere is the chief the of obstructions such by the n, blockade-ronnen, do. Well bas it been reid a confluement in Cartie Thougan ba inretarie principars confined flore, it will be recollected, was every approaching than to a verific planding fire. It is readily effectled that the was the impossible beriefer to it is needed of the fire party arrow, and the more wool of large excessionally will more desires. The observe s mere placed directly sorver the river, and filled inactivity with the innestine of a gay of thy or I that, led for the passage of the rebal fiest and deferror death. They annuist of the balls of two orombling to 446sr, still rise eners, the water, and er kreb od stonosklps, ibal formerly pland beforen Richmondand New Tork. The wheel bones, fest

natigral to atary eather upon the dist farelf or upon palets

the series of Jonn Reann, and was laund by the rabel Gorgeomert. They were originally hall for etories, bol subsequently toward tole takened manny Tole batiding, tapelber with the Libby belonge lieg, thet we have such the theoretic such that the confidence of the confidence of the confidence to the confidence of the confidence to the confidence of the confidence of eacusts not less than forty guns, All them, the booken's more, are our tropales without blewish or fac above Fort Dieting lies the wrest of oge solited and sonk exame: Se 'ascarlained from of the functionabel find to the Iques, the binicial Veginsa. Worlder she has bank blown up or sim

the sity is now abut out from all mapfiles bean escented over on his side, hawing a partien, overhang visible edora the weiny-line, Dittee porth to the could ofthe of the Junes. Bee remaining Richmond we pass two more of the came that, though bertly so well built in the fart, but all des hove now steemed safely by all obstractions trendention which we flists were wind

EDWIE M. Brancon,

mareni reafered than usuefe, and prehably, too. na.

VICTORY.

Thanks to God, the Giver Commanding armies of the United States.

of Victory.

of your proposition. To be frenk, I do not think possle would tend to that end. ,

General, U. S. A.

Aran 9, 1863. Orneret R. E. Lee, communiting C. S. A. :

pasce, the meeting proposed for 10 A. M. to-day could lead to no good. I will state, however, General, that I am squally anxions for peace with gaurrelf; and the whole North entertain the same are trell understood. By the South laying down their arms, they will harten that most destrable seept, uses thousands of human times and hum-Stacerely hoping that all our difficulties may GENERAL. Your note of yeslerdey is received. areds of mellions of property not yet destroyed.

Very respectfolly,

Lleulevant-General Dolled Otates Army. Forty obedient sereant,

Lettaward ; the emote still thing from the om-farmion's ceful rule, and the florested Meljen modify from a hundred hours-tops and markeule, Parits nod Rusimments of a Voyage Us the Incident Along the Secretary of War. FROM RICHMOND.

The Bedri Arms, Artillery, and Public. Property Surrandered. Rebel Officers Retain Their Side Arms and Private Property.

Micer, and Men Pareled Atlowed to Retarn to

The following correspondence has taken place ng refanation so the pursuit during its pendency.

Curron Smith, Va., April 9, 1855. Hon. Edwin M. Signion, Streetlery of War :

tery of War:

between Gen. Lan and myself. There has been

U. S. GRANT, Lleutenant-General.

The Correspondence Between Grant Their Bomes.

and Lee.

Wan Deesterner, Warmmerne, April S, 1943 -8 o'Clock F M. OFFICIAL. Maj.- Gap. Din:

sport of the SCRRENDER, THIS DAY, OF REH. LEE AND HIS ARMY TO LIEUT. This department, has received the official BEN. GRANT, on the terms proposed by Gen.

Betaile will be given so opendily us possible. Secretary of War. EDWIN M. STARYOR,

The accompanying additional correspondence DP NORTHERN VIRGINIA THIS AFTER. 900N, upon the terms proposed by anyself. GEN LEE SURRENDBRED THE ARMY Baabebarras Austre ov ern Unver Brarn, Ebn. Sauen M. Stanten, Serretger uf War :

General; I have received gour note of this Lleutenent-General. April 7, 1866.

Pour obedient eer eant, ery Bespectfally, of Northern Vaginit.

B. S. Gaanp,

Communding Armire of the United States.

Thougn not entholy of the oblision you express part of the army of Northern Tlegicia, I reciproof the hopelessness of further resistence on the U. S. Guant, Lieut.-Oen'l. will show the conditions fully.

cete your desire to avoid useless effusion of blood, and therefore, before considering your proposition, and the terms you will offer am condition of site extremater. Gangatt-I received your note of this morning, on the picket line, whither I had Sonnar, April 9, 1663.

ome to meet you and ascertain definitely

To Lient. Gon. B. S. Caser, Commenting Armies of what terms were embraced in your proposidon of yesterday with reference to the sur-

R. E. Lun, Generel

Arm 8, 1865. To Gen. E. E. Les, Commending C. S. A. I now request an interview in accordance Gaugaal. Zour note of lest erecing in reply which I will accept the surrender of the Army of In reply, I mould say that peace being my first to mine of same date, asking the conditions on Northern Virginia, is just raceived. With the offer contained in your lotter of yea-

Very respectfully your obedient seesant, terday for that purpose.

ender of this army

R E. Lin, General. Bunday, April 9, 1815.

derire, there its but one condition that I mand upon, fle Te Lieut.-Gen. Gazar. Commanding United for taking up same again against the Government That the men correndered engli be diequelified I will meet you, ar deelgnote officere to meet esy officers you may name, for the same pur of the United States until properly exchanged.

> Brn R. E. Ler. Communiting Confederale States Your note of this date is but this moment,

Na fee Armica,

have resequence of my having phoned from | pose, at any goint agreeaths to you, for the pos-

13 50 A M received

deliner estebations for the astions stroits retained distinguishes the first through a master stroit of the Souther Bellef Aradials, was both free located.

tog hare over the news of about midnight State and Peerl strawle were diled The cells are ringles, eacus Bring, while the mai-THE PRELIMINARY CORRESPONDENCE. The following is the previews correspondence

R. E. Lin, General,

Your obedient servent.

Very rappecitally, from finet to final, thatmightly firtiffed throughout ste entire longth? Think of the olifes captured, of 'the of gour, greet and smell, of the meterist of shar now to gar hands, yet seyond the passibility of com-The State Bours and many prieste residences are

The Governor, was called up and briefly addressed between Lieut.-Gen. Gant and Oan, Lat. 78forred to in the forugoing teftegram to the Beers-of the primates captored. Counted by the tans of his few desperale miniones, of the briumpheel aning Lat avers lover of his cooping depict the vari coops consider to the section of the original was possible to the section of the original possible to the section of aditiudes made the whole city ring.

Wonestel, Maat, Mondow, April 9.
The caws of the servender of Les and his suny greeted an lotans excitement bres to night. The

APMET, 1868.

he fire companies turnes eut, and meny tieres and salle were cung, guns were fired, benfirer kindied, Pressonos, Pe., Susdey, April B.

sistance on the part of the Army of Narthern Vir-gerd it as my daily to chift from mycell the responsibility of any further offselen of bleed, by Confederate States Army, known so the Army

GENRAL: .The result of the last week must consince you of the hopelessness of farther 14ginin in this struggle. I feel that it is so and resubleg of you the sprrander of that portlen of the

B. B. Let, Commonding C. S. A.'s tation late the attests. The recruiting houses must mad fait booken, salular wate first specials

The apricus powe was received here sells obser-ing and claying of beits. The public are torning out emeans to receive and rejoice over the gist littings.
Peavineses, R. I., Bonday, Ratif 9—1914night. Bella are staging, easson are fring, and the clifsens are out rejoicing over the nears of tender, & large southre is herning on Werbener BROW THE PACINIC COART.

way of Man Penalsov-Franch Forests Bladen-Sranch War Stewors in Call-Jorniu Ports-Tao Overland Malia. San Rascum, Prider, April 7. Janess said to be Coming to Warbtogton by the as though it might have been by a chillow, we at open aniar name. It-

The eleamer John L. Strphens, from Bezeiten, The theretian Press, the Imperialist organ, give the report that Joses was on roots for Cape 6t, Louss, whence he would sail for flan Francisco on brings $97,000 to treasure and a thousand bage of allhis war ib Washington.

offert made the tun through our feet some months A Propos neval expedition had selled, it was supcorrespondent of the San Preschee Sultma. though morey, stace, and stammelition are nestre.
The Prench was alsomer Futers and interport still at Chibnanus, with his minipiera raising traope, he cant point of interest in Fort Brady, on the

our Army of the James What stellige opens resilag tebet rame. Mad thataheen lerger gung very semakable here is the fact that ewing to the forticals whichings of the James there are two rebel fairly in that part of the river held and abrituctions to manufacts accounty to a sale strongs. Too gambast Men'treifs in the softer hallock Do Abiar was at Innia Barbara, an the coast of Cali-Inight. They hape to obtain supplies of cost at Sta. listy Committee, tradited in temilisaces, by tain-graph, within the pest few flays, of $20,000 in gold. The marrity of flour and wheel continues. The delly Overland Mail, beare in Sait Lete, re-expendite trips preferdeg. The first mail this way The recent meeting in behall of the Christien Sapsince the total ruption or ived last olahf.

when you begin to despine in datell, the lack to einely spreiling in its mogetinde, Think of a line

tient rhetorig, no rivig word-gainting, no prainting of opsitetions, beld deleasively and agereled from angengefreife wift eant erbasest, ibfrip-nine miter feng tertificationes starmed and taken, with their headrads

Let me my, though, at the ontest, that the bast art of the city is a rails. That the certai 210 himthe nearny, and which at first promined in rising wind, theibetors it sould be get under en jecling, thirty spaces, comprising an itse than eig. name but a few buildigas, was no tapand by Interaction to being, the Insurants companie From Gus Dwn Docremondeht.

usends; of the territors fight of the tach-triller and his own langifestion for wordy th Bily discribe it hrough the copplier of Process Merchal Gas.

these and fully increase falles eachy

potetion of the tarritie betifes, and the secretedimdeltet, nud rout of the chief stree of the rab altion um iffetch, to whom they have given the to the order of the order of the order with even benefitzen, to the course of the manger gloom mange care that the preferred by the late to the ally or the gelest of Wavie error, it is appe-red to half or the gelest of Wavie error, it is appe-red to half or the gelest of Wavie error, it is appe-red to half or the gelest of Wavie error, it is appeenter ton and properties of the same berge with gebirucijas und sopposed loroegos, was on exceedingly dalicula test, and foll of excitangly. Our pliot have its change of all in to kee's bot

We ware, however, very fortuntle, and the expressed in the city, especially during the last sight miles from Drawny's Blud, was fall at the labraness thin $4 or more, any of the money the 'se-dence,' hat two high graphyse, 'se subtract in the subtract art for the subtract in the subtract (the rolls agreement here in Riceasch, it will surry the subtract in the subtract in the subtract in the his subtract in the subtract in the subtract in the his subtract in the subtract in the subtract in the his subtract in the subtract in the subtract in the his subtract in the landing part of the first and subtraction in the wind opticity however the subtraction to the but Bengennings, in rouly, excisions that he effect ears a 4-8 of energ banes in Reckmont was consumed, the unredepart maal be burnet. Thus this wrelahad rebel, Polaine injo a agwerful position with na con-sitinguis, is responsible for the draudial cuts, and valend the desiration of the city, and it was no decided by the leading citieson. Gen. Bress, and M inhabitants thousantly perged of transic his majur Barn ir thowns empeorible, bearges be to pre was started in two pieces, among the conply wernbongen neur the wherrer, and ni the Digg-pille Dagot, where there were 1,300 hogebands of tablanco belonging to ins Contadersis Coremment.

darata officials for ordels to also the real sites of the case, A strong guard was stational at the Bearties drope, and four brisis was so lot sets; the last of witch beg, was Davin on beart, it isyon science, in the sevening, and the last at addition. Barea e oblai notisische, though not much al thair glar force, goi away. The propare fous for the are One. Las, consistent of the facility, who he sterning and the designation, as smooth the work of principal control and the facility here as by principal for their presentations well districtions are the facilities are the facilities of the facili little stapicton was exelled panes; the util assistes of Jury, Davis sed Oar, Mair Burns leading than one is walk of Landle. The feel a Mayod saintence of a strong Onlon mestives the dir, I actified myself of the openinosity il appre periods here whom I ask bert theigh to the beautonints at Tolon mest, and I wen, y, last appent you of the happing hours of my 18 folland free dageseration with some of the me scroogle are tradical Opion were in the sove y; such of yearly and positive, who year an over papered for no instant, and wh even folers, as they gard denamed they Vagonia also ib necettib the annel trath with rafpro-Frem One Own Gerriesonden?

Calmy Australia is Michaeld Trajous Bracastracion - Distinguish of Vinterra Borrelling Boggs Trajor-The Train about Machael Ballatance of Bagrone.

tine feetlments, in tale stratg form enfelbere gracios exidelitan has yet been conce

course was adopted; Tweed tried to amend the criminal code so as to give to judges — of whom he had several in his pocket — greatly increased latitude in deciding what was contempt of court. When this attempt failed Tweed's agents started the story that the land on which the Times Building was situated, and which had been occupied before by the Brick Presbyterian Church, had been sold under a restriction binding it for all time to church uses. The effort to eject the paper from its home also came to nothing, but it gave Jones a good deal of worry for some time.

Worse still, he had not only enemies without but some lukewarm supporters in his own camp. Ravmond had been dead less than a year and a half, but already his family wanted to get rid of their stock in The Times. The interest of the Taylor estate could hardly be counted as hostile to Tweed, and merchants afraid of the ring had begun to withdraw their advertising from the paper, which was continuing its fight in spite of the testimony of New York's most reputable business men that the city finances were "administered in a correct and faithful manner." As a matter of fact the decline in the paper's income was not large, but it was exaggerated by rumor, and Tweed might hope that some of the stockholders would begin to put pressure on Jones.

It was evidently in the conviction that Jones either would be willing or would be compelled to withdraw from a losing fight that Tweed formed, early in 1871, a company to buy the control of The Times—one of the most curiously assorted companies that was ever brought together for publishing a newspaper, or for anything else. The science and art of politics were represented by Tweed, Oakev Hall, and Sweeney; finance high and low by Fisk, Gould, and Cyrus W. Field; and the necessary flavoring of probity and rectitude was provided by Peter Cooper and Moses Taylor. Just what these gentlemen would have done with a newspaper if they had had it would be hard to say, but one thing they would certainly have done - they would have silenced the only journalistic critic of the ring. may be that sooner or later thievery on such a grand scale would have been exposed and defeated, but there is no certainty that anything but death would have interrupted Tweed's activities. And, as it happened, the final exposure by The Times came just as the ring was preparing a new scheme, the Viaduct Railroad, which was to begin with a theft of five million dollars and might have gone ten times farther before it was finished. Perhaps if The Times had been put out of the way a champion would have been raised up in the course of time, but no candidates for the position were visible in 1871. And even two or three years more might have enabled Tweed to do as much damage to New York as could be accomplished by anything but an earthquake and tidal wave.

All this was plain enough to George Jones, and he refused to sell. And since rumors that The Times was to be bought and put out of the way had been widely circulated, he published in the paper, on March 29, 1871, a statement over his signature which disposed of Tweed's hopes in that direction for all time.

No money that could be offered me [he wrote] should induce me to dispose of a single share of my property to the Tammany faction, or to any man associated with it, or indeed to any person or party whatever until this struggle is fought out. I have the same confidence in the integrity and firmness of my fellow proprietors.

Rather than prove false to the public in the present crisis, I would if the necessity by any possibility arose immediately start another journal to denounce those frauds upon the people which are so great a scandal to the city, and I should carry with me in this renewal of our present labors the colleagues who have already stood by me through a long and arduous contest.

After that The Times continued with redoubled vigor, but without much more success until well in the summer. A new reform organization was established. It held a mass meeting in Cooper Union, it commented upon the fact that the city debt had gone up something like a hundred million dollars in two years; but the masses remained unaffected, proof of what everybody believed was not forthcoming, and Tweed and his friends looked forward with confidence to the time when, having stolen everything in New York that was not tied down, they could go on to Albany and Washington.

For the benefit of those who believe that the right is sure to triumph in the end it may be observed that the actual exposure of Tweed was due to an accident — the overturn of a sleigh in which the County Auditor, one of Tweed's most useful subordinates, was riding. This was in December, 1870; the Auditor died of his injuries some weeks later and was replaced by the County Bookkeeper, and into the Bookkeeper's office went Matthew I. O'Rourke, a political follower of James O'Brien in a Democratic faction on bad terms with Tweed. Whether the actual discovery of the thefts should be credited to O'Rourke himself, or to one Copeland, an accountant in his office, is somewhat doubtful; but at any rate there was an investigation of some of the claims which proved at once what ought to have been evident even from the most superficial inspection, that millions were being stolen. The evidence gathered in O'Rourke's office and later published in The Times showed that six million dollars had been spent for repairs on the county courthouse (payment being authorized by Mayor Hall and Controller Connolly), of which ninety per cent was pure graft, and that there had been frauds of almost equal magnitude in the renting and furnishing of armories. This was a dangerously large matter — too large for minor officials to handle; but the discoveries were promptly reported to O'Brien. In the somewhat discouraging history of that period, when high officers of city, state and federal governments regarded their positions as nothing more than opportunities for grand larceny. it is pleasant to come upon this instance of obscure public servants, receiving modest salaries, who apparently out of no other motive than a sense of fidelity to their trust gave away information which Tweed would undoubtedly have paid them a million dollars to conceal.

O'Brien now had the facts, but it was something of a question what he could do with them. Eventually he gave them to The Times, but The Times was not his first choice. The transcript of Connolly's books was the biggest exclusive local story ever offered to a New York newspaper; but it was offered to one newspaper which refused it. Then, realizing that nobody else would take it, he gave it to The Times, but at first would not give his consent to its publication. Knowledge of the facts fortified The Times in its denunciation of the report of the six respectable citizens, and eventually O'Brien's reluctance disappeared.

By the time he gave his consent for the publication of the evidence Tweed had found out what was going on. He had failed to scare Jones out or to freeze him out; now there remained but one recourse, to try to buy him. One afternoon in the early summer of 1871 a lawyer with whom Jones was on friendly terms asked the publisher to come to his office for a business consultation. When Jones entered he found to his surprise that only one man was in the room — Controller Connolly; and Connolly promptly came to the point and offered Jones five million dollars to suppress the news.

"I don't think," Jones remarked, "that the devil will ever bid higher for me than that." Connolly seems to have taken this as encouragement, for he at once added: "Think of what you could do with five million dollars! Why, you could go to Europe and live like a prince."

Thereupon Jones made his refusal unmistakable, and Connolly went away sorrowing, for he had great possessions.

But before entering on a fight which with the publication of the evidence would become a death struggle Jones felt it desirable to make his own position somewhat safer. The Raymond family still wanted to sell its stock. Undoubtedly that stock could have been sold to Tweed, and the fact that it was not, directly or indirectly, is proof enough that though the Raymonds were getting out of The Times they were still loyal to its interests. But Iones was afraid that somehow Tweed would get control of this stock; and while it would not give him a dominating influence on the paper, it would enable him, by alleging that the interests of the stockholders were being injured by the campaign, to start litigation which could have given one of Tweed's pocket judges an excuse for appointing a receiver. Jones had to make sure that the Raymond share could be counted on the right side; and he found invaluable support in E. B. Morgan of Aurora, N. Y., who had owned two shares of stock when The Times was founded, had aided in the financing of the building project, and had recently taken a more vigorous interest not only in his property but in the fight which Iones was making against Tweed. July 8 The Times published a long digest of some of its evidence relating to frauds in the rental of armories, and in the succeeding days there were repeated editorial attacks on the ring and promises of greater exposures to come. But Jones was not ready to go on till he had fortified his position, and that was soon done. On July 19 the editorial page of The Times began with a short statement to the effect that the thirty-four shares of Times stock held by the Raymond estate had been purchased by Morgan, who would thereafter be associated with Jones in the management of the paper. The statement continued:

It has been repeatedly asserted that the Raymond shares were likely to fall into the possession of the New York ring, and it is in order to assure our friends of the groundlessness of all such statements that we make known the actual facts. The price paid in ready money for the shares in question was $375,000. Down to the time of Mr. Ravmond's death the shares had never sold for more than $6000 each. Mr. Morgan has now paid upward of $11,000 each for 34 of them, and this transaction is the most conclusive answer which could be furnished to the absurd rumors sometimes circulated to the effect that the course taken by The New York Times toward the Tammany leaders had depreciated the value of the property.

Immediately following this was a double-leaded editorial headed "Two Thieves," in which Jennings threw his hat into the air with a loud and joyous whoop and declared that evidence which The Times was about to publish would prove that at least two of the four leaders of the ring were criminals. Of these gentlemen, one eventually escaped conviction by flight to Europe and the other by grace of a hung jury; that both were what Jennings called them nobody has ever seriously doubted.

The next day The Times published another long analysis of some of its evidence, this time relating to the furnishing of armories. This article, like its predecessor, was written by John Foord, and was accompanied by a fiery editorial by Jennings. And on the 22d The Times opened up with all its batteries. When it came to the evidence afforded by the Controller's books as to the money spent (ostensibly) on the new court house, the figures themselves spoke more forcibly than any summary or any comment - those very figures which had been audited and approved by the six respectable citizens. The previous articles had been published on the editorial page, running over into the page opposite; and even on the 21st the front page of The Times had begun, in the usual style, with a single-column head, "General News."

But on the 22d The Times published a chapter of figures from the Controller's books on the front page, in broad measure, and under a three-column head. So far as can be ascertained this was the first time a real display heading had ever appeared in The Times, but the editors felt apparently that the facts they had to set before the public deserved the aid of all the resources of the typography of the period. Jennings's editorial accompanying the first chapter of the accounts also employed full-face type for emphasizing some of the figures, and the small capitals in which then as now the names of individuals appeared in editorials were also used for some of Jennings's epithets, such as scoundrels, swin-THIEVES and other terms which evidently felt were synonymous with some of the personal names mentioned.

THE FOURTH TIMES BUILDING, PARK ROW, 1888-1905.

That editorial demanded immediate criminal prosecution of some of the city officials, and it contained the observation, fully justified by the conditions of the time, that "if the public does not come to the same conclusion before we have finished our extracts from the Controller's books, then facts have lost their power to convince, and public spirit must be regarded as dead."

The facts were convincing enough. It appeared, for example, that for carpets in the courthouse enough money had been paid out to cover City Hall Park three times over with the finest carpet that could be bought in New York. A single carpenter, according to the books, had received more than $360,000 within a month for his work in repairing a courthouse which was not yet finished. Of course, the carpenter never got it. Whatever the name in which the bill was made out — and the assurance of the ring may be gauged by the fact that one of the city's creditors was put down as "Philip F. Dummev" - the checks given in payment were indorsed by members of a few firms in which Tweed and some of his accomplices were partners. together, the Controller's books fully supported The Times's editorial assertion that a man who had a bill of $5000 against the city for work honestly done could not get it paid until he raised it to $55,000. with the balance going by one means or another to Tweed and his friends.

Readers of The Times were allowed one day to think over the first chapter from Connolly's books, and on the 24th another followed. There was still another before the end of the week, and on Saturday the 29th all the evidence, with some editorial comment, was put into a special four-page supplement. This document was printed in both English and German; for the German-Americans at that time were a much more distinct racial group than at present, and one which furnished valuable aid to municipal reform. But, for various motives of which partisanship was the most worthy, the German-American press had hitherto given its support to Tweed; so The Times let the Germans read the evidence in their own language.

It had been announced beforehand that two hundred thousand copies of that supplement would be issued — a wholly unprecedented edition for a New York paper in those days. As a matter of fact the edition ran to 220,000, and a few hours after the presses had stopped it became apparent that this had not begun to meet the demand. The presses started again, and for a whole week were run continuously, except when getting out the regular issues of The Times, in printing the famous supplement. Altogether more than half a million copies were issued. The people of New York now had the proof; it remained to be seen if they were capable of defending themselves.

At first the ring was confident enough. Tweed's famous comment, "Well, what are you going to do about it?" epitomized their reaction to the exposure. Mayor Hall seemed to think that he could meet the accusations by declaring that the papers were "surreptitiously obtained from a dishonest servant," and it says a good deal for the standards of the time that the charge of dishonesty against the man who had exposed the theft of millions by city officials was seriously received by a large part of the public. Hall further remarked that the animus of The Times could be found in the delayed payment for the advertising contract already mentioned. Neither he nor anybody else made other reference to the story told by the figures than an occasional remark about "alleged records" or "garbled accounts."

All over the country the revelations made by The Times were the chief topic of news, and of editorial comment. Only in New York City did the newspapers appear to know nothing about it. Greelev, to be sure, who belatedly remembered that he was not only a moral man but a Republican, ventured to suggest that Tweed and his associates might sue The Times for libel, a procedure which The Times earnestly invited; but the other papers did not even by this much dignify the disclosures with any comment that might be twisted into an admission that they amounted to anything. The papers of London and Paris published long editorial comments on New York politics, but the New York papers seemed to see in them only what Mayor Hall called them. "the gross attacks of a partisan journal upon the credit of the city."

Nevertheless, the public, or a part of it, was awakened. The claims, it will be remembered, which were authorized by the Board of Audit—and which, it was now apparent, contained anywhere from sixty to a hundred per cent of pure graft—were to be met by the issuance of revenue bonds payable during the year. For two years there had been no statement of city finances. As Foord writes, "Nobody save the men in power and those in their immediate confidence knew at what figure city bonds were being negotiated, or at what rate the debt was increasing." The first consequence of the revelations was the sudden and very natural refusal of bankers to lend any more money to an administration which was getting no one knew how much, but pretty certainly was stealing most of what it got. And there, for some weeks, matters rested. Public indignation was steadily rising as The Times brought out more evidence; most of the tax money had been spent, and the city could no longer borrow money; municipal employés were getting their pay. Already the summer of 1871 had seen one serious riot, when several hundred members of an Irish mob which had attacked the Orangemen's parade had been shot down by militia. and it seemed that this might be only a beginning. Now mobs of unpaid laborers gathered every day in City Hall Park; and Tweed and his friends, with the aid of his newspaper supporters, were trying with some success to transfer the blame for the shortage of city money from the thieves to the reformers who had exposed the thefts. And while there was not much money left in the city treasury, there was no guarantee that Tweed and his friends would not steal what little had escaped them. For they calmly refused to resign, and under the Tweed charter they could not be removed.

On September 4 there was a mass meeting of citizens in Cooper Union, with former Mayor William F. Havemeyer presiding, and a committee of seventy was appointed to investigate the frauds and prosecute the criminals. But Tweed and his friends were not asleep; immediately after this meeting there was a "robbery" in the Controller's office. The vouchers which would have furnished evidence that no jury could have disregarded were taken out of the glass case which had been thought sufficient to protect them, and it was later found that they had been removed, and burned, by a Tweed official. Something desperate had to be done, and John Foley, a prominent figure in reform movements of the time, did it. Bringing suit as a taxpayer, he got an injunction on September 14 restraining the Controller from paying out any more money on claims against the city.

This meant that not only the fraudulent claims could not be paid, but the honest claims of contractors, the wages of laborers, even the wages of the police. If the four chief conspirators had had the courage to hang on and wait for the inevitable riots, it is possible that they could have escaped with no other punishment than the compulsion to be a little more moderate thereafter; for the rioters would undoubtedly have turned their attention to The Times and the reformers before going on to the more profitable investigation of the stores of Broadway and the residences of Fifth Avenue, leaving the homes of Tweed and his friends untouched under their guards of "shoulder hitters." But luckily the conspirators lost their nerve, and then came one more proof of the familiar fact that the principal advantage of the forces of law over the criminal classes lies in the absence of honor among thieves.

The Mayor suggested to Controller Connolly that inasmuch as his administration had been somewhat discredited by the voucher theft, he had better resign. Connolly rightly thought that resignation just then would be taken as confession, and he also concluded that Tweed, Hall and Sweeney had decided that somebody would have to be thrown to the wolves. Being in some perplexity, he asked the advice of Samuel J. Tilden and William F. Havemeyer, with whom he had been associated in the more respectable activities of the Democratic party; and they promptly told him that he had better appoint Andrew H. Green as Deputy Controller and turn over the office to him. There were few men in the city who knew more than Green about the city government, and none who was more certainly above suspicion. Connolly took the advice, and Green's appointment on September 16 marked the beginning of the end of the Tweed ring.

In the second phase of the fight The Times had more assistance, for reform was beginning to become not only fairly safe, but somewhat popular. But it was also less spectacular, and Green's tenure of office took the form of a long trench war against all forms of corruption, intimidation, and chicanery. The Mayor at first refused to recognize the appointment, and then tried to turn him out; the office had to be guarded by armed men. Under the injunction the Deputy Controller could pay out no city money, and the funds left in the treasury were not sufficient to meet the interest on city bonds which would be due in six weeks. While valid claims were being sorted out from the mass of fraudulent charges no pay rolls could be met, and the danger of riot disappeared only very slowly and gradually. Before it disappeared The Star, a paper which had received a good deal of money from the ring, published the home addresses of Jennings and Jones, with a hardly veiled suggestion to city employés whose families were starving that these men were responsible for the stoppage of wages. When The Times made some comments on this The Star had the hardihood to declare that not The Star but The Times was inciting to riot — by trying to prevent Tweed and his friends from collecting what little was left.

Not all the newspapers of the city attempted to stir up riots, but virtually all of them were hostile to Green's administration of the city finances. reason was simple enough; among the bills which he refused to pay until their validity had been certified were those for newspaper advertising. quence of this the man who actually put a stop to the thefts and brought the city finances into as near order as was possible after two years of wholesale brigandage — who had borrowed money on the strength of his own reputation for integrity to meet immediate and unavoidable obligations, at a time when he had no legal authority to make commitments in the name of the city - who eventually saw that all honest creditors got their money, and that as little as possible was paid out for suspicious claims, had to fight through the greater part of his term of office with practically no newspaper support except from The Times.

Green had the hardest and most thankless part of the work; even of the papers which still opposed him some had begun before election day to denounce Tweed and all his doings except those by which the papers stood to profit. The investigations of the Citizens' Committee and Mr. Tilden's study of the accounts in the Broadway bank, showing how the stolen money was divided, had driven some of the more timorous members of the Tweed combination to seek foreign parts; and it was clear that if the election went against Tweed the ring was broken. And it did go against him. Tweed's own district sent him back to the State Senate, but almost all of his candidates elsewhere were beaten; and The Times jubilantly asserted that the result "justifies our confidence in the capacity of the people, even in large cities, for self-government."

That was a long time ago; men had not learned then that though St. Michael may slay the dragon on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, that old serpent will probably be crawling about as vigorous as ever by the middle of June. The Tweed ring, to be sure, was broken, and the consequences of the prosecution were fairly typical of what has happened in a hundred similar cases in American municipal history. Because Tweed was the chief offender, because the evils of his time had become embodied, in the popular imagination, in his person, he was pursued with vigor through a long and tortuous career of indictments, hung juries, convictions, prison terms unduly shortened by technicalities, flights to California, Spain, and Cuba, rearrests, civil suits, and finally commitment in

The New-Bork Times.

VOL. XIV.....NO. 4230.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1865.

PRICE FOUR CENTS

President Lincoln AWFUL EVENT.

Assassin.

Shot by an siming "Hang bim! bang him!" The Deed Done at Ford's Theatre Last Night.

escription, and of course there was an abrupt termination of the theatsiest perform THE ACT OF A DESPERATE REBEL

There was a rush toward the Prasident's box, when aries were hand: "Bland back nd give bim slr." "Has any one stimulants." The President Still Alive at Last Accounts.

On a hasty examination, it was found that the President had been shot through the brad, thore and back of the temporal bone, and thet ome of the brain was could out. He was moved to a private house opposite to the No Hopes Entertained of His agaire, and the Sargeon-General of the army. ed other surgeons sent for to attend to his On an examination of the private hor shood was discovered on the back of the dent had been sitting, also on the partition ed on the floor. A common single-bursted porket platel was found on the carpet. A military guard was piaced in front of the grats residence to which the President had Attempted Assassination of Secretary Seward.

unbioned rocking chair on which the Presi-

DETAILS OF THE DREADFUL TRAGEDY. Washington, April 16-3.30 & M. [OFFICIAL.]

ot all hoped otherwise. The shock to the ront of it, all desply anxions to learn the conition of the Prasident. It had been previous y announced that the wound was mortal : The Prasident was to a state of aynoupe en canveyed. An imments orewed was ! emmently was terrible. This evenlog at about 2.00 P. M., at Ford's Thenter, the President, while sliting in bis private box with Mrs. Larbour, Mrs. Banns, and Major Rayments, was shot by an assame elo, who saddenly entered the box and ap-

The plated ball sectored the back of the Pro-The assessin then lasped upon the stage, brandiablog a large dagger or knife, and mad his escape in the rest of the thesire. presched behind the President.

Department and two make nurses, disabling Secretary, who was lying to bed to the same room, and inficted three bem all, he then rushed upon the stabs in the neck, but severing, it is hought and hoped, no arteries, though he hied profusely. was to the second tier, to the stage beneath, and ran across to the opposite side, making his escape amid the bewilderment of the box, waving a long dagger to his right andience from the rear of the theatre, and, need, and exclaiming " Sic remper lyrannis," and immediately leaped from the box, which nounted his borse at the door, and rode off gione an alaym could be sonnded, and in the same mannor an the sassansto of the Presi-The assassin then reshed down slaim, had been abot, when all present rose to thair tet, rushing toward the slage, munt ex-The acreams of Mrs. Lincoln first disclosibe fact to the andlence that the Presider nounting a horse, fied.

It is helieved that the injuries of the Secstary are not fetal, nor those of cithor of the there, although both the Secretary and the asistent Secretary are very nerlocaly in-The excitement was of the wildest possible the Sorgeon-General anye be eannot live not yet dead, but is wholly lasenable, and seross the stage by a geotleman, who sprang not from an erobestra chalr. Be rosher ill day-break. The assausin was followed into his condition, and there heard of the Secretaries Stanton and Waters, and salled at Secratary Sawann's bouse to inquire other prominent officers of the government, if an accomplice, dashed up P, toward the back that he effectually eluded parault. The avo the avanue and mounted a dark hay hores, part of the oily. The escaps was so andder which he apparently received from the han through the side door into an alley, then ere, many persons evidently supposing he was gathered in front of the President's once, and a strong guard was also statiourd They then proceeded to the house where he was tylog, exhibiting of course intenso anglety and solichinds. An immense crowd tangelpation of the President.

roley, as he jumped to the stage, and dropped Two or three officers were in the box with sain cried " sic sempre" in a sharp, elear his tat and a glove. aseltement, accompanied by vio-The entire city to-night presents a scone of and be brought to his home.

cessful, and received some brothes. The whole affar, from his cutrance into the ox to his escape from the theafre, he President and Mrs. Lincons, who made forts to alop the canasto, but were unanclispaiched monntod patrols in every alection, in order, if possible, to acrest the eastains. The whole metropotitan police are expressions of tadigaction, profoundest sorrow-many The military anthorities of the same moment as that upon the ion with his recept lojuries. The two assanles have both endeavored to leave the wholy noprepared. The anacols upon Mr. SEWARD appeares to have been made almost gerous in itself, hat may prove so in connacscarcely a minute, and the Pracident. Mr. SEWARDS Wound is not dantrongest of the notion found everybody Vice-President Joanson is in the city, and he same hour—10 o'clook—thus showing a arty who allached the Presidunt are in the The attachs, both of the theatre and at Senrelary Sawann's bonse, took place at about connerted plan to conmeinate those genmas. Some evidence of the guilt of the likewise vigitant for the same purpose.

though every body supposes them to have EUROPEAN NEWS. Legistrates. In the section of dentity to

A private Calcutta telegram of Merch 37 re-botts commercial affaire to count the some signs so to the Mil, whomalight improvement had taken place. The Beaulist meil has resched Lieban, bring The Insutt to Our Cruisery

TWO DAYS LATEB BY THE EUROPA.

The person who shot the President is ropotes loches to height, sparely built, of light

PATCHERY MORNING -1 O'CLOCK.

escaled as about 80 years of age, 67e feel emplexion, dressed in dark elothing, and ered the box, which is known an the State hand side from the dress-circle in the regular manner, and shot the President from behind.

Recharge Lings france, Stunder, March 11, Corres Chings of the state of the Shipming Corres Corres of the Shipming Corres Corres of the Shipming Corres of the Shipming Corres of the Shipming Correspondence of the Ship The American Minister at Lisbon Dvy Portugal. nenda Satisfaction.

> box, being the upper box on the right the ball cotering the skull about in the middle, eblad, and going to the direction of the left ere ; If did not pass through, but apparently having a genteel appearance. Ro en

Hechange Milder.
Montiveden has presented to Con. Protes. The Brailings now compy the city. Coulon dominal.

Coulon dominal.

Property: Heach II.

LATEST VIA LIVERPOOL Dismissal of the Communder of Fort

Times to-day has an aditorial on the Belan Requested.

Fueiber Advance in Five-Tyenbroke the frontal boos and forced out the brain to some extent. The President by ded incliniew of the United States. Restys to japosethie to find an ansuse forth. Trist If tropleally aredig the framets of the peham with prouder window in polecting the lated Apr light of reaton or by the racults of experi

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL. HALIPAX, Priday, April 16.

The Army & Mary Garatte saye: " The work The steamship Surge, from Liverpool on the sit, at Queenstown on up fit tast, arrived here at a wice, this morning. Sie has 42 passengers for his port, and 30 tor Bosion. Her dutes une two day The stanged by Cade, from New-York, Melend

ang langen ibet in the hande all Pas

States Navy has sow has accord.

and Poseus the tigh rentielles which the and assess of that Power ariskilthed and

LATEST YIA QUEENPTOWE.

Pann, Priday, Murch 91-P. M. The Benton eleved at There is no cause of Importance this morning A Liebon disputed, of the viet of thurch, tays the ragneste the diemieral of the Co. of Fart Solan, and a salate of twenty-THE STOREWALL APPAIR.

CONTRECTAL

Nothing as yet an been decided in regard in the

The Musthelier market was firmer with an upwell ermanse—The market is downward. Warries is Co., man others, report lines than a Gorgan ner. Park berry and declined '2- at the man of the tend believer dermad an edecuted. Inset dail's s. st. Gorger ins. and declines. That ervyys. The market is easier. Hener. Munds 12.5 & Co., and others, proof. Front dail of 12.5 Ext quies too quantities see barrels mannis. 17.5 Ext quies de soil. One juscities, echi nun-Cours, Engliss & Barness report : ? —Ashme extler at Ma. zd. for Pete, and Bergut, fig. Codies, godes and steady. Mittages, Choung Society, Jack file at Uniquies at Sid. Society Will make the Conf., Resta. very dull. Spirits Turpbald.

Parliementery procendings on the 30th alt. In the Rouse of Constons, an the Not. Lord C. sore tele that the Admirally had received no proole. He way, therefore, onshie elly to the northward, apparently not expect-his headquarters are guarded by troops.

effort of medical skill, but all home was gone.

bis head. The surgeous exhausted every dood coxed from the wound at the back of otally inappoints, and breathing slowly. The na to atella the civer. Bran as low down

GHEAF BRITAIN.

right resees, and when it will be rantized that rams will not be played not, eave to the times of out the first stage of this coloural revolution on mill then by completed. There will south and Jonneyou are driven frem the fiel ulya to be hald by a Yanket garrison, when and more someloced that it Rickes when every important town of the Board. mon the 4th of Murch, unyo prescription, was thown to the Scereiary's rashed to the bed, and inflerted two or three The nurse alarmed Mr. Parneince Sawasn. dek, chamber. The assurals immediately is haped the wonnds may not be mortal. My uprehension is that they will prove fatal., sents, and under the grainnes of having dake so the threat and two an the face.

Abeci the same hour an assessin, whether he same or not, entered Mr. Sawage's apart nore daogerous wounds. The recovery o he assasio, who indicted apon him one beancales Sawano is daubiful.

to the deer of his father's room, when he met the was in an adjoining toom, and thatene at the theatro this evening, but he started to Oen. Ceast and wife were advertised to be It is not probable that the President will ive throughout the slebt.

nan had made other engagements, and with dr. Ashman, of Massachusells, bid bim zood

ir. Corran to go with dim , but that gentle-

Rewest with apparent relociance and nige

the andlence to be disappointed.

atterbated. At a Cabingt meeting at which Gan. Gasar was present, the subject of the state of the manty and the prospect of a speedy peace eas discussed, The President was very theerful and hopeful, and apoke very kindly Igrilagion at 6 o'clock this evening.

Everyhody there was so sacited that scarce. y an intelligible word could be gathured, but he facts are substantially as follows . he reports were based on truth, All the members of the Cabinet except Mr. kwan, are now in attendance upon the

Gen. Las and others of the Confederacy, nd of the establishment of government in

I have seen Mr. Sewann, but he and President.

Becretary of War. EDWIN M. STANTON. Parcasics, were both necessions.

DETAIL UP THE OCCURERNOR.

The President was shot in a theatre to-Wassianter, Priday, April 14-12:10 A. M. ight, and is, perhaps, mortally wounded.

Secretary Sawan was also ansassinated. RECORD DISPANCE.

anter the chamber. The man pushed the nervant aside, and walked heavily President Lacets and wife, with other riende, this evening visited Ford's Theatro Wassington, Priday, Aprill& or the parpose of wilmansing the perform-

It was announced in the papers that Gan, Jases would also be present, but he took he tato train of cars for New-Jareey. ance of the " American Cousin."

to enter, a uharp report of a there was a temporary pause for one of the ar-The thestro was densely ecowded, and before them. During the thud act, and walle everyhody seemed delighted with the noune

9 rie, Gor, Gollen, Gen. Muna, Dol. Har. and a iew personal friends, with Surgeontart for the theatre antil diffees minnies after General Bassasand his immediata assistada The President and Mrs. Lucets did were around his bedalde.

the city in instant rains could not have Ford's Theairs a balf honr ago that the resident had been shot. It daw every where It is impossible to get at the full facts of A stroke from Huaven laying the whole of startled us as did the word that broke from to ave minutes, and set ave thousand people a swift and excited enotion on the instant. White House at the time, and the President stated to him that he was going, ight o'clock. Specker Corys, was at the

The audience heard the shot, but supposing I fired to the regular course of the play, did not heed it till Mrs. Lincoln's screams drew their attention. The whole affair occupied scarcely half" a minute, and then the as tassin, was gone. As yet he has not been When the excitement at the flicatre was hat Secretary Sawan had also heen as-On reaching this gentleman's residence of at its wildest height, reports wars circulated nd dropping a kid glove on the stage.

The President's wound is exported mortal He was at once taken into the house oppo He the theatra. rowd and a military guard were found at the oos, and on entering it was ancertained that the ages moment the story ran through the city that Mr. Sawann had been murdered in As if this norror was not enough, almost ble bed. About 10 o'clock a man rang the bell.

Inquiry showed this to be so far true also. It appears a man wearing a light cout, dark pants, slouch hat, called and asked to see and the call having been asswered by colored asyant, he said he had one from Dr. Venn, Secretary Stwans's

Mr. Stwann, and was shown to his nursed, and with one atroke out Mr. Sawani's ble wound, but not severing the jugular veln. iom. He delivered to Major Brwann, near his father, what purpotted to be a physician's prescription. throat as he lay on his bed, indicting a hornwho eat see the Secretary, as he was entrested with mily physician, with a prescription, at he same time holding in his thand small plece of folded paper, and saying in answer to a refusal that he musparticular directions concerning the medicine. He gill forlated on going up, although reseatedly informed that no one could Monie papers of the 4th fact, senounce 184 app-ture of Seings, Alubama, with 23 pieces of scillery, Adji Gra, Tuttas briting at New-Orietos on ibi it unandwis, Quiet algestied on the unandwise of Quiet incops on the graph in State Retrievable, the unite gath the State Retrievable, the unite gath the State Retrievable, the unite gath the State Retrievable, the Spanner Fort of the gath incops amount in the State and the College of the C noraton of the Ita. tairs, mounted the first home on which he In the struggle that followed, Major Savano was also badly, but not seriously, wounded in coveral places. The assessin rushed down and not producing a mortal wound.

The restoration of the Ohl Ping to Port Sumte 14 14002, Me., Friday, April 18. Say: Samer Coletration to Buegar and a large amount of Covermment property. ame, drove his spars late him, and dashed Reports have prevailed that an attempt as also made on the life of Mr. Branton.

way before any one could slop him.

representation which he did to the servant not known, but the enen struck him on the akull and felling bim almost sensolers, The assessin thee rushed toto the chamber the United States stray and Mr.

oward the Secretary's room, by on the Secretary, mahing the earn What further passed in the way of colleges is the head with a "hilly," severely lajuring and attacked Major Sawand, Paymaste was then met by Mr. Taxovan

awann, of whore he demanded

oge thousand fest above the city between of ignerical party. are buildingt, and be the rafeton of the Stere of on by a display of all the figs on public and was crimbrated here to-day by a mattern and

> The President is reported dead. Cavalry and infantry are accouring the city to very direction for the marderous assuesing and the city is overwhelmed with excitement Who the assassing were no one knows of the State

MINNIGHT.

Hannan, a mensenger

a man reabed to the front of the President's plated was heard, which merely attracted atteotion, but suggesting nothing serions, until

The Madrid Malas says is the Pope should loave gone, upalo would coaler upon bun ibe Balanic faier. The Patrice aren the Pone would rather laberit. the Montpraver Polace at Sectific.

The President silli lives, but lien intensible, yen at this hope.

Proposition and Continuous and stady. Putro them dies at Stroff and My for Monthly and the Continuous Continuous Statements Again In-Eventure. Continuous Statements Again In-Eventure Autoriors Trappatorioristic Continuous Continuous Statements and Continuous Continuous Statements and Continuous Continuous Statements and Continuous Continuous Statements Continuous Continuo

STANTOR, WELLS, McCulloca, Speep and Usa-

he Surgeon-Osceral, and other Burgeons-

The President etill lieb innenalbie. Mbnure. ra are With him, as also the Vlos-Persident There is a greet throng about the boase her. Les le Biabocad-The Cart of Alle-Bichmond Whig of yesterdsy contains The bear publishes the asin of plieglands which serincas, Grider, April 14.

11.16 P. M.

as he has since the first moment, and no The most extravagant stories peevall, mong which one le to effect, that denhaser wer shot wille on his was to Phila sopes are entertained that he can entries. notered the President's box from the thesire. he case, but it appears that a young man during the last act of the play of " Our Amer ces Cousin," with pistol in hand. He shell > slibough Mrs. Lincour had not been well, he. Gasars and they were to be protent, and, as Cea. Onswr had goos North, he did not wish sure the papers had announced that Gen.

it says ciliarte will be required to weer and sta-notine to. The Pracent-warnist's office is corrected with propie englore to like it, and the call question angua triares seems to see who whall be dist to re-cent that enterebly.

ded, the Ports

our India and general of importages. It encounces the extress of Lee on the sites of

4 •

The solegroup set the reasonable Con-tering and more Control Research to the New wind find Control Research to the set prints, and have set to present the reduced in the Control of the Wind Control of the control at the set of the Control of the control of the Control of the Control of the spine louds, and Control of the Control of the spine louds, and Control of the Control of an's family was wounded in the stroggio, were wounded, neither of them dangeronely. Another is, that every member of Mr. Saw with the assaceln there. This also is nairus Mr. Parb. Sawan, the Assistant Scoretary and Major Claasper Sawaun, of the army hia, of course this is not true. from the box upon the stage, and immediately lleguneared through the side scenes and car of the theatre, brandlphing a dirk knife in Prantient to the bend and lestantly sumper an facteans of cash on hane of over tan and a hal TRE CONDITION OF TREPESSIOUNT Watergorer, April 19-2-13 A. M.

Machin returns from the Bonk of France abow, the Franch, Chambers of the 4thb. 'M. Joine sons. All the belts in the olty were rang, and the wave first at 8 p.clock this sweaths. To-play of Braworks.

activates a prevelled. The procession was at imone, Honega and Wattren, with their staffe, four bid orgunisotions, the Poplen Brottnerbond, the slesmer had arrived, with and along

THE ATLABLIC TRIBORATE.

Creeinnan, Priday, Autiffe. Business wee entirely auspended in day. The ify mas noirereally decorated with dage, and grea. siments of Notladel Oasrds, dispherged ealercos Department, and a large unsuber of colured Rejetoluge at Cinetanati.

The President is still alive . but he legrowng wesher. The bull to lodged in his brain, three inches from where it entored the skull, ife remains insensible, and his condition rterly hopeless.

but all company, except the members of the Cabinet and of the family, to rigidly excluded The Vice-President has been to see him

Large crowde still confinue in the street, ft, flore, eedgiery and burdware dealure, des ides noy of the Awerbenn Tract Moolen, were dem-ed. Total fast, $70,000 i negrence, $20,004. The reampole upon the mercanite for sollided liberth, which interpreted the Transfer and stelline with the mercanite of the Transfer of the Transf

agad. Total lass, $70,000; in anoy of the Awark

The remains of Brig. Gen. T. A. Bavrs strived ness in day at 1 Solock, and will be letered as Randay affectant with appropriate corewoolin.

The Spoon states that the Minister of Was ben-red his revenation, and uses Ove. Lunurum re-

tien says the ministes of Was year

Des. Baras anceseded in the office. DEMMARK.

The Banural of Gon. T. A. Stoyrib.

To the Etter of the Ken-York Train : Buryon Barne, Va., Wednedder, April 13, 1665. This vessel has enturned to this part, havi

ga Occamerchy War Discher

The cabinet warehouse of Jakes E Raynon, was parifally sectroyed by ate this rateg. The stocke of Boupassy Bener & Co.,

Rockmars, N. Y., Prider, April 14.

ne near to the house as the line of guards Flores Hambardmanger ibn Bonutat Bert-THE SIRGE OF MODILE.

dables Papers Assessed the Capterer

The King relieved M HelingR, Minister of Jouoppings. Manuer represented the supplemental that it is supplement that all percentages that the percentages the percentages that the percentages the percentages that the percentages the percentages that the percentage that the percentages A special disputch to the New-Orleans Times Nam-Ontrant, Calurday, Antil &.] the Spanish Port, deltes April 6, seys.

naton ella bas prosed harsell int. On der last trist sto desco-ni la che Galf Stream, Cuolou-t of her officers: pietes publis

alivered at the fast censis

Litt of officers attached to the V. S. stantage 48 ARTHUR BURTIS, Jr., Papmarter

Apricals to the Diry.

A Olleans, Courced, N. H., is Moppella areas Horin.

K. Shanca, Claiscall Gan. B. F., K. Shanca, Claiscall Gan. B., F., Ghibner Br., T. Oreace, Lonville, Grire old. Yarre Badas, viz stopming ab. of Chambers, the

r had made some ministerial

Continue.-The steamahly La Papovete, while standing from a trial trip end paratog un the Eusk prog. collined who the Catharion Perry-boat Nowanteriog ber eith on ton Grooklym. Polis damen to ton Manassette, pariod of the sentences of cools. alone with lists, be self the good opening the work of the self th default of payment of a judgment to Ludlow Street jail, where he died. Of the other principals in the ring all in one way or another escaped jail; a few minor personages were convicted and locked up, and of the numerous millions stolen from the city a few hundred thousand dollars was recovered. And that was all.

THE TIMES AND THE TWEED RING

Three years later the Tammany ticket once more swept the city. To be sure, it was a somewhat deodorized Tammany. It was ruled by Honest John Kelly, and its ticket contained so considerable an infusion of respectable men that it might be a matter of some doubt whether the tiger was a black beast with yellow stripes or a yellow beast with black stripes. But it was the same old tiger, and before long it was up to the same old tricks. In view of all this, municipal reformers may be excused if they occasionally become faint with weariness and the heat of the day; if they wonder whether their efforts really serve any useful end but their own personal pleasure, and incline to suspect that while they may be hedonists, they are certainly not utilitarians.

Nevertheless, experience has shown that this same prematurely triumphant Times editorial was accurate when it said that "the theory that government is only organized robbery has received its death blow." No other administration has ever been so bad as that over which Oakey Hall presided and which was ruled by Tweed. Even the worst governments of later decades did give the city some value for at least a good part of the money spent, and there has never been any parallel to the astounding robberies committed under the guise of repairs and furnishings for the Tweed courthouse. Reform movements are bolder now; they have behind them something of a tradition of occasional victory. They are no longer beaten before they start; they need no longer fear that there is serious danger of voters being terrorized by mobs of gangsters, or of regularly elected candidates being counted out. That a majority of the residents of New York City still prefer a bad government to a good one might be assumed from election results now as ever. but some of them change their minds occasionally, and the minority which wants a decent administration no longer stays away from the polls from sheer hopeless conviction that it could accomplish nothing. No city administration of these times could dream of attempting to conceal its accounts from the public; and certainly no future Tweed, if there shall ever be any, would find that respectable newspapers are willing, as they were in 1871, to eat the bread of infamy and earn the wage of shame.

For these ameliorations, such as they are, no single man can claim the credit. They are the work of many public-spirited men working through many years. But no one man has contributed so much to this improvement as George Jones.

CHAPTER IV

National Politics, 1872–1884

THE victory over Tweed was such a success as no American newspaper had ever scored before. It raised the prestige of The Times to a height that had been unheard of even in the most prosperous periods of Raymond's editorship, and gave it a world-wide renown eclipsing that which The Herald had won by its lavishness and eccentricities, while establishing it solidly in the favor of friends of good government in the United States. In the year after Tweed's fall The Times received still further accessions of influence and prosperity through the defection of The Tribune from the Republican party. that time, only seven years after Appomattox, partisan animosities burned with a fierceness such as Americans of a later generation can hardly realize, and even in the case of newspapers which as purveyors of the news were as good as The Times and The Tribune, a large if not a predominant part of the constituency valued the paper as a political organ rather than as a vehicle of information. Greeley split off from his party and accepted a presidential nomination not only from the Liberal Republicans but from the Democrats, The Tribune suffered as The Times had suffered in 1866, and considerably more. In 1872 The Times could and did advertise itself as "the only Republican morning paper in New York," and the support of the faithful flowed to it accordingly. Its influence in the early seventies was greater than it had ever been before, and its prosperity may be judged by the fact that some of its stock sold in 1876 at fifteen times the face value.

Yet the prosperous and powerful Times of the seventies had a circulation only about a tenth of that enjoyed by The Times today. Evidence for the entire period is not available, but in the fall of 1871 - at the height of the campaign against Tweed, just before the election in which The Times led the reform forces to victory - the circulation never exceeded 36,000. The circulation of the supplement with the extracts from the Controller's books is, of course, an exception, and now and then on the morning after election the paper might have shown a higher figure; but on the whole it may be said that the leading Republican paper of the East at least, if not of the entire United States, in those years of prosperity sold anywhere from 31,000 to 35,000 copies a day.

It would be interesting to learn just what was the true circulation of The Times's contemporaries. Whatever it may have been, it was certainly not what they asserted. But statements of circulation fifty years ago belonged to the field of relativity rather than of conventional mathematics, and the circulation managers of that day have long since gone to face the final audit of the Recording Angel.

And even on this small circulation The Times paid regularly a dividend of eighty, ninety, or a hundred per cent on its capitalization of $100,000. There was no reason why it shouldn't have paid dividends. Salaries were lower, as were living costs. The expense of news getting was still very moderate. During the later months of 1918 The Times often had a bill for cable tolls of $15,000 a week, but in the seventies $15,000 would have paid the cable tolls of all the New York newspapers for a whole year. And while the circulation of daily papers was not large, most of them had weekly editions; and the ethical standards of the time permitted papers to allow the national committees of the great parties. in presidential years, to buy and distribute the weekly edition by the hundred thousands. That source of revenue has disappeared with the disappearance of weekly editions, and with the spread of a newer conception of newspaper ethics for which the present management of The Times may perhaps claim some degree of credit. A similar improvement has led to the exclusion of certain kinds of advertising which in the seventies were regarded as unobjectionable.

It may be observed that the business conscience of The Times in the seventies was notably higher than that of some of its contemporaries. By all the standards of the time, its prosperity was well deserved, as was its political influence. Nevertheless, there was from the first a certain insecurity in this lofty position — an insecurity due to the character which Raymond had given The Times from its very first number; indeed, even from that prospectus which had promised that it would be free from "bigoted devotion to narrow interests." For there had been a painful degree of truth in Oakey

Hall's observation when The Times first published the figures from Connolly's books, that such an eminent Republican newspaper might be able to keep itself busy investigating the corruption in its own party. To the scandals which flourished in Washington, invisible to the somewhat too longsighted eve of President Grant, the editors of The Times could not be blind; and seeing them they could not fail to condemn them, even though their Republican principles made them sometimes delay such condemnation rather too long in the hope that the party would do its own housecleaning. Unfortunately, the party was not so minded; and The Times, which had always maintained a measure of independence unusual in its day, was compelled on occasion to express itself with a frankness which met with disfavor from more extreme partisans.

So the chief interest in the history of The Times in the thirteen years between the overthrow of Tweed and the campaign of 1884 lies in the struggle of its editors, continually more difficult and finally hopeless, to reconcile their principles with their party allegiance. To one who studies the evidence of that struggle in the columns of the paper for those years there is apt to be suggested the simile of a loyal wife doing her best to get along with a scandalously dissipated husband. The Times had not exactly married the Republican party to reform it, but it did what it could to bring the party back to the strait and narrow path, and without success. Its reproaches were dignified; they never sank to the level of nagging; perhaps, indeed, they were too dignified to be effective, as The Times's readiness to believe in the reformatory intentions of its errant partner was certainly too complaisant. But at last the connection became unendurable, and under the final affront of the nomination of Blaine The Times walked out of the party and slammed the door. After that it would have taken a miracle of miracles to bring it back.

When the Liberal Republicans met in 1872, The Times saw in their convention a strange assortment of well-intentioned but impractical doctrinaires. and of practical politicians who were disappointed because their rivals had crowded them away from the trough. That reform was needed The Times did not deny, but it could not see that it was likely to be accomplished by these gentlemen. And when the Cincinnati convention nominated Horace Greeley, the paper which had known Greelev and enjoyed his hostility for twenty years had no further occasion to seek for any concealed merits in the Liberal Republican organization. Greeley's attitude toward Tweed had weakened his standing as a reformer; and when he permitted the Democrats to accept him as their candidate the paper which Greeley had so fiercely denounced, only six years earlier, for favoring a policy of reconciliation with the South could hardly place as much faith in his sincere desire for better things as perhaps it merited. Persons so violently and assiduously sincere as Greeley in a variety of contradictory causes can hardly expect to be understood by their fellows who are less gifted in moral fervor and metaphysical tergiversation. In view of the standards of newspaper controversy prevalent at the time, it says a good deal for the editors of The Times that they confined their attacks on Greeley to his political views and affiliations, and did not drag out the old scandal of Fourierism and free love.

Yet The Times did not deny during that campaign that something had to be done. On October 29, 1872, in the course of an editorial devoted chiefly to the prediction that the reëlection of Grant in the following week would mean the disappearance of the Democratic party, there appeared this observation:

With the exception of one or two unfounded flings or insinuations at the present administration, there is nothing in the Cincinnati platform [Liberal Republican] to which any Republican will not heartily assent, nor on the other hand is there anything in the platform adopted at Philadelphia [by the regulars] to which any supporter of Horace Greeley can take exception.

However, it could well have seemed to honest and patriotic men in 1872 — and indeed it did seem to several millions of them — that it was safer to give the Republican organization another chance. Though The Times was at that time probably the strongest and most influential Republican paper in the country, though its editors could have solidified their position and made still more certain their prosperity by becoming an out-and-out party organ, they did not fail in the succeeding years to denounce the misdeeds of men in Washington, even when close to the administration.

As a collector and distributor of news, too, The Times maintained in the early seventies the high standard of past years, and often surpassed it. The cable was now working at last, though its capacity was small. The Franco-German war had seen the first use of its facilities for the transmission of important news, and even then only two or three columns a day of condensed bulletins and official statements had come in this way, with the mails bringing the detailed accounts of the defeats of the French army, the heroism of the Defense Nationale, the fall of one empire and the rise of another.

JOHN NORRIS, Business Manager, 1900-1911.

 $_{2j}^{d}u$

The Times covered that war thoroughly and well. If it was somewhat outshone by The Tribune, it had an honorable excuse; for The Times in 1870-71 was giving up a good deal of its space, and of its energy, to attacks on Tweed, while The Tribune had no interest in this particular field of the news. Great domestic news stories of the period were also handled exceptionally well. In the case of the fires at Chicago in 1871 and Boston in 1872 The Times gave more than a page on each of the first two days to stories of the disaster, and at the time of the Boston fire issued special editions through the afternoon of Sunday while the fire was at its height.

Much of the credit for the excellence of The Times news service at this period must go to John C. Reid, who came to the paper in 1872 and served for seventeen years thereafter as managing editor. He was one of the greatest news editors of the time, a pioneer of the new age which has seen the news department take over a good deal of the predominance which formerly belonged to the editorial page. Under Reid, The Times performed in 1874 and 1875

a feat without parallel in New York journalism up to that time, the reporting in full of the court proceedings in the suit of Theodore Tilton against the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher for alienation of Mrs. Tilton's affections and misconduct with her. Editorial comment, at the time and later, suggests that the editors of The Times did not have that complete faith in the reverend gentleman's innocence which was entertained by his congregation, and the prevalence of doubt in the community was suggested by the eventual disagreement of the jury. But they handled the news with full appreciation of its value. Each day's story began with a "lead" of two columns or so, followed by a complete stenographic transcript of evidence and argument, the whole sometimes taking up as much as three pages in what was by that time a twelve-page newspaper. It was an expensive proceeding, but it was a great achievement in giving the public the news.

No doubt a good many readers of The Times thought that the paper was giving an undue amount of space to this chronicle of sin and suffering. Those complaints come in often enough even in these days from readers who appreciate the paper's general reluctance to display news of this sort, and wonder why a good general rule should occasionally be violated. But there was a reason in the Beecher case, as there has usually been a reason in similar affairs since. Dr. Beecher was one of the most prominent clergymen in the country; there was a natural curiosity as to whether he was practicing what he preached. One of the counsel at the trial declared that "all Christendom was hanging on its outcome."

Full reporting of its course was not a mere pandering to vulgar curiosity, but a recognition of the value of the case as news.

But always in the background was the horrendous ghost of Republican corruption and misgovernment, a ghost which refused to be laid and which was every now and then uttering hollow groans such as could not fail to be heard by the editors even of a good Republican paper. General Grant's second administration failed to be that Saturnian reign which The Times had hoped in 1872. The great panic of 1873, though no doubt a natural reaction from the violent expansion just after the Civil War, provided a background of economic dissatisfaction for political discontent. A bad business kept getting worse, and it was becoming apparent that the country might not be willing to wait much longer for the often-deferred reforms within the party. And a warning, strong and unmistakable, was given by the election of 1874 when the Democrats recaptured the House of Representatives, and elected governors in a number of states, including New York.

Looking back from the vantage point of half a century later, one is compelled to admit that The Times seems to have been somewhat unjust to Samuel J. Tilden, whose great accomplishments in exposing and prosecuting members of the Tweed group had won him the Democratic nomination for the governorship in 1874. The Times felt that Tilden had only climbed on the band wagon of reform when it had become safe to do so. During the early and critical days of the struggle against Tweed, before the publication of the Controller's accounts, Tilden had given The Times no help; but neither had anybody else except Thomas Nast. And it could not be denied that the beginning of the end had come when Connolly turned over his office to Andrew H. Green, on Tilden's advice and insistence. This alone would have given Tilden an honorable place in the gallery of reformers, and his later services in analyzing the accounts of the Broadway Bahk which showed the disposition of the plunder, and in forcing the impeachment of the worst of the Tweed-Fisk judges. had been of great and enduring value. Against this The Times could set off his tolerance of Tweed before the exposures, and of the undoubted fraud which had procured the Democratic victory in the state and city elections of 1868. Tilden had kept his eyes shut when they should have been open; but he was not the only man who did that in the gilded age. He had opened them at last, and opened them quite as widely as the eyes of The Times were open toward similar misconduct in the Republican party. He was in pretty bad company before 1871. and when he accepted the support of Kelly in 1874. But a politician who wanted to keep out of bad company in those days would have had to climb to the top of an ivory tower and pull his ladder up after him.

When Tilden was nominated for the governorship The Times had given cordial enough recognition of his ability and character, and its opposition to him during the campaign was directed only against his associates. Indeed, Tilden suffered like many respectable candidates from the distrust of some of his supporters; and he set an excellent precedent by showing very promptly that he was his own master. Unlike many of the western leaders of his party, he was a sound-money man. He was as firm against Tammany as ever. And presently he uncovered, prosecuted, and broke up the bipartisan ring of canal grafters which had for years past maintained pleasant and profitable relations with administrations of both parties. The Times gave Tilden hearty support against the canal conspirators, and at the same time it was compelled to condemn the scandalous abuses which had been disclosed in Washington, abuses not only ignored by the national administration, but oftentimes actually shared in by men more or less close to the throne. In 1875 the prospect of the coming elections was enough to discourage any honest Republican. A Democratic governor of New York was sending political crooks to iail without caring what party they belonged to, while a Republican president of undoubted personal integrity was blindly standing by his friends, and every week or so brought some new evidence that his friends were profiting by his confidence.

The men who managed the Federal government behind the respectable figure of Grant could neither learn nor forget. The Times was compelled to repeat that the third-term movement was folly; that there was no reason for breaking an old and sound precedent for the sake of a man whose executive abilities were obviously not of a class with his military talents. The third-term movement eventually subsided, to rise again in later years; but with its subsidence came the growth of the probability that James G. Blaine would become the Presidential candidate. And most of the editors of The Times were convinced that Blaine would not do. Reform was needed, was demanded; and it would be an insult to the country to pretend that Blaine was the man to bring it about.

By giving expression, even with due caution, to these opinions, The Times had by the beginning of 1876 fallen pretty well into the bad graces of an administration which on the whole it had supported much more steadfastly than that administration deserved, and dissatisfaction with The Times's independence led to another scheme to take the paper away from George Jones, whom the friends of the administration regarded as chiefly responsible for The Times's unwillingness to exculpate a thief merely because he was a Republican. Jones was the largest stockholder, but he was not a majority stockholder. He had been saved from a similar attempt during the fight against Tweed by the opportune assistance of E. B. Morgan, but in 1876 he had to save himself. And, unfortunately, he had enemies within the office. Louis J. Jennings, the editor-inchief, whose Republicanism was of a more blazing and reckless type than Jones's, entered into a plan with certain Republican politicians affiliated with the Grant administration to get control of the paper and make it a real organ of the party. Apparently they had some support among the stockholders; and the ten shares belonging to the estate of James B. Taylor were now on the market and might be used to solidify the control of The Times in the hands of Jennings and his friends.

But on February 4, 1876, it was announced that Jones had bought the Taylor stock, thus becoming for the first time owner of a majority of the shares. The price paid for Taylor's ten shares was $150.000. and this fact had become known in financial and newspaper circles. Rivals of The Times, unwilling to admit that this represented the real value of the stock, had circulated the report that part of the price represented "back dividends," or that it had been unduly inflated by bidding up against the friends of Jennings. It was also said that The Times had spent $40,000 in reporting the Beecher trial; if so, it got it all back in increased circulation. At any rate, Jones took the occasion of the announcement of this purchase to deny all these rumors, and to inform the public that in 1875 The Times had paid a dividend of $100,000, or 100 per cent of the par value of its stock. At that rate $15,000 a share was a reasonable enough price.

Further the announcement informed The Times readers that at no time during the last fifteen years [that is, since the beginning of the Civil War] has the paper paid a less dividend than 80 per cent on the original capital, and in some cases the dividend has been 100 per cent. During the same period the entire indebtedness on The Times Building and property has been paid off, and the paper is now in the satisfactory position of owing no one anything.

It was added that the circulation was larger than ever before in The Times's history.

The conspiracy being thus defeated, and Jones left in unhampered control of the paper, Jennings resigned in the following month and went back to England, where he became a member of Parliament, and passed his later years in the writing of books about the joys of the rural pedestrian. One of the illustrated papers at the time celebrated Tennings's departure by a cartoon which represented Iones standing on the roof of the Times Building and administering to his late editor-in-chief a kick which had sent him clear across the Atlantic, so that he might be seen in the distance dropping on the sod of Great Britain. Jennings had made many enemies in New York, who were glad to see him go; but it must be said that this scurrilous caricature somewhat unduly simplified and dramatized the transaction.

John Foord, who had made his reputation by his work on the Connolly books, succeeded Jennings as editor and held that position until 1883.

So The Times came into the campaign of 1876 still a Republican paper, but a paper with a shade of independence unpleasing to true zealots of the party. It was a campaign in which the paper played a very important part, and in whose outcome one of its executives, acting on his own responsibility and outside of office hours, had a part which was probably decisive. The Times's attitude toward both the threatened nomination of Blaine, and what many have always believed to have been the election of Tilden, has been the subject of some misconception and of a certain amount of interested misrepresentation. The ac-

The New-Dork Times.

NEW-YORK, SATORDAY, JULY 22, 1871.

RICE FOUR CENTS.

Proofs of Undoubted Frauds Brought to Light, THE SECRET ACCOUNTS.

Warrants Signed by Hall and Connolly Under False Pretenses.

THE ACCOUNT OF INGERSOLL & CO.

port in alays the amount paid during 1868 and 1878, for repairs and familians for the New Court-house. It will be seen that the warrants Such warrand was signed by Controller Connairs and Mayor Hill. What amount of money was actually paid in the persons in whose ayer the warrants were nomically drawn, we have no means of knowing. On the face of them accounts; however, it is clear that the us denwn in different names, dut thiey were all indexed to "Lymmeter & Co."--otherwise, J. H. Incresott, the speet of the Ring. The following accounts, copied with scrapulous fidality from Cantuller Coursoury's books, require little explansation. They pur-

We nadortake in prove whenever we are afferded the opportunity, that the following account is copied literally from the Controllar's talk of the money somehow or other got back to the Bing, as each warrant would not have been indorsed over in its agent.

The dates given for the work done are obvioualy finanduland. For example: On July 4, 1869, a warrant was drawn for familians supplied for Connky Course and offices, from Oct.19 in Nov. 23, 1863, for $42,500 6s. On July 16-fourteen days afterward-mother warmeds was In we for $94,88813 for furnitare supplied to the same offices from Mer. The Death. That is in easy, the bill was fully raid by the feriod Dose two warrants down to Nov. 20. And yet a fortalght afterwardjanether warrant was drawn paying the littl over senia from yoke, and forms a part of the documents to which the public is antitled in have accounfor ?. It is obvious that the firthform dates were not remembered by the City sutherniles when these warrants were drawn. Many

It will be seen that on one day furniture is supposed in have been supplied in the amount of $155,400 49-- at least a warrant for that me was signed by Hall and Counques he favor of C. D. Bollan & Co., and indoned by Incereou. & Co.

INGERSOLL & CO.

Iron Ratifing, Cases, Stairs, &c., Check to name of M. W. Davia, Indoned by Ingersoil & Co., July 28, '98..... 23.201 16 for Carreta, &c., in Co. Course and Offices, Check in manne of J. A. Smith, indured by Ingersoll & Co., Aug. 10, 98... 37,154 63 cas from Nov, 7 in Dec. 21, 1968.....

April 16.—Paid for Pitting up Armorice and Drill-rooms, Ock.2, 1986 flar, 28.—Paid for Depatrs in Armories and Drill-rooms, Aug. 28,

Carpois, &c., in O. Couris and Offices, Cheek in summ of J. A. Bettle indexed by faceroril & Co. April 4 W. Met 20 Carpois, &c., in O. Couris and Offices, Other in meet of J. A. Seith indexed by Interved & Co. April 4 W. Met 21 Carpois, &c., in O. Couris and Offices, Other in meet of J. A. Bettle, indexed by Interved & O., in U. S. W. Seit 18 Carpois, &c., in O. Couris and Offices, Cheek in mans of J. A. Bettle, indexed by Ingered & O., in U. Sp. W. Seit 8 Purniture, &c., in Co. Courts and Offices, Chenk in name of C.D. Bollar & Co., in'd. by Ingerrell & Co., Aug. 17, 98. 23,236 6... Pard for Furniture, &c., in Co. Courts and Offices, Check in name of C. D. Bollar & Co., in & by In secretif & Co., 16ay 8, '99. 139,889 Parf for Carpets, &c., 19 Now Court-Hopes, Cheek in name of J. A. Smith, indored by Ingersoll & Co., April, 18, 1989., 12,308

saosa et Mr. Gladstone's Sensational Flonk AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The Constitution Declared to be Violently Wrenched. Parliament Brunght into Cantempt Before the Peaple.

Movement Against the Lords.

Gormeo Troops Ordered to be Withdraws from Amieus and Rouse.

......

sairs in County Buildings and Offices, Jan. 25, 1870.....

ars in Conety Buildings and Offices, March 29, 1970..

u este

Formstian of a Spanish Cabinet by Marshal Serreno.

Tumultuous Scene on the Adjourn nent of the Cortes.

DREAT BRITAIN

A. C. MILLIER-Claim Informiby Inserted of Co.

June 37.—Paid for Cabinet-work in County Buildman and Offices, March 39, 1870......

$2 594,69 66,663,643 63

windlesting the dignity of ver could not explain, but at the the Depositule members this air or more others were recum-graph to spreak before the Com-

ASIRROTOR, July 21.-It will be remempecial Dispatch to the New-York Times.

count which follows is based upon office tradition and the recollection of surviving members of the staff, together with a study of the files of the period.

If Blaine, whom The Times had shown to be clearly unfit for the Presidential chair, had actually been nominated in 1876, there would undoubtedly have been some beating of the breast in The Times office, but the balance of probability seems to indicate that the paper would have supported him. But the Mulligan letters disabled Blaine for the time being, and the convention set a precedent by selecting a respectable gentleman from Ohio, who was not handicapped by a record, bad or good. The Times supported Hayes with an enthusiasm undoubtedly enhanced by the memory of what had so narrowly been escaped, and attacked Tilden with a bitterness which can be explained only by the combination of an honest conviction that he was the less desirable candidate with a deadly fear that he was going to be elected. The sentiments of the editors concerning the great issues of the time, when those issues could be separated from questions of partisan preference and personal hostility, may be read in an editorial on November 10, headed "Republican Responsibilities." This was two days after the election. The first awful sinking of heart that had come with the early returns on election night had passed away: latest returns — at least Republican returns — from the doubtful states indicated victory; and it was not yet apparent that the Democrats would be unsportsmanlike enough to object to any measures by which the Grand Old Party that had saved the Union might find it necessary to perpetuate its beneficent sway. Two days after the election Republicans could speak their honest feelings with a freedom that would have been unsafe before and afterward, and in the editorial of that day The Times denounced the carpet-bag governments, and declared that the party would not have had such a narrow squeak if its leaders had paid attention to the popular demand for reforms in the civil service and the national finance. That editorial of November 10, in fact, is a sound and well reasoned Democratic campaign document.

The Times's news service during the campaign was full and able. It was, unfortunately, dominated by political prejudice: but to a large degree that was the rule in those days, and though political correspondence was full of vituperation of the enemy. The Times was generally first with the news, good or bad. Something must also be allowed for the temperament of John Reid, the managing editor. Reid had served in the war and had spent some time in Libby Prison. According to an office tradition. a Virginian who had known him before the war observed as he was entering: "There goes John Reid. He'll never come out alive." Unfortunately, Reid overheard him, and upon coming out alive he transferred his resentment from this lone rebel to the entire Democratic party. Whatever weight may be given to this legend, Reid's partisanship was certainly rather exceptionally bitter even for those days. and was reflected to some degree in the news columns of The Times.

The paper had had a number of political correspondents in the South, and its readers were pretty well informed of the conditions likely to surround the election. It was a time of bitter feeling, a trial of strength between the reviving forces of southern self-government and the carpet-bag administrations which saw themselves facing a long postponed and heavy accounting. The result of the polling at any given point would pretty obviously turn on the question whether the Ku Klux would keep the negroes away from the polls or the regular army would keep the Ku Klux away from the polls. both sides were very earnest men, so firmly convinced of the eternal justice of their purpose that they felt that the end legitimized any means that might be necessary. So the election of 1876, all through the South, could be accurately described. in Clausewitz's famous phrase, as "the continuation of politics by other means."

Early reports from all sources on election night indicated that Tilden was winning. But early reports on election night do not always, though they do generally, furnish an accurate forecast of the result, as is evident from the recent example of 1916. The other papers conceded the election of Tilden — even The Tribune, which was trying to atone by excess of zeal for its heresy of 1872. But the first edition of The Times — which went to press at a considerably later hour in those days than is now customary — began with the headline: "A Doubtful Election."

And it was a doubtful election, some of the states being still claimed by both sides, with that pertinacity which campaign managers exhibit when they have any excuse at all. The first-edition editorial contained the statements that the result was still in doubt and that both parties had "exhausted their full legitimate strength," together with some observations on Democratic election methods in New York City and in the South, "where there is only too much reason to fear that they have been successful." Then some analysis of the electoral vote, conceding most of the South to the Democrats and ending in the conclusion that to elect Tilden the Democrats would have to carry, of the states where the contest had been hardest, New York, New Jersey, and either Oregon or Florida. New York they had beyond dispute; at the time of sending the edition to press the result in New Jersey was uncertain; Oregon had not been heard from; and Florida was claimed by the Democrats.

The final election extra, which went to press at six o'clock in the morning, contained the same statements as to the doubtful result. New Jersey was conceded to the Democrats; Oregon was claimed for the Republicans. The tabulation assigned 184 votes to Tilden and 181 to Haves, including Oregon, Louisiana and South Carolina, with the four of Florida still in doubt: and the editorial ended with the statement that, "if the Republicans have carried that state, as they claim," Hayes would win by one vote. John Bigelow, in his life of Tilden, saw a deep and dark significance in the fact that ungenerous references to the Democratic shotgun tactics in the South. and the fear that they had been successful, had been removed from the editorial in the last edition. Having been a newspaperman once himself, Mr. Bigelow might have appreciated the fact that something had to be taken out in order to insert the tabulation of the vote by states, which appeared in the last edition and not in the first, while still leaving the article of approximately the same length.

It will be seen that the essential differences between the first and last editions consist in the ascription of Oregon, previously not heard from, to the Republicans, the substitution of a Republican assertion of victory in Florida for the Democratic claim made in the earlier edition, with the final result set down as doubtful, and the transfer of Louisiana and South Carolina from Tilden to Hayes.

Any number of profound and elaborate explanations have been offered for these changes, as well as for The Times's assertion that the result was doubtful. One story, first published in The Sun in 1887, was that Zachariah Chandler, chairman of the Republican National Committee, and William E. Chandler, who seems to have been a sort of deckhand and general roustabout for that body, sent a message to The Times in the early morning hours instructing the paper to "claim Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina at all hazards, through thick and thin." Aside from the fact that The Times was not under the orders of these gentlemen, this story is disposed of by the circumstance that at that time Zack Chandler was asleep in his room at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and probably troubled by nightmares, while William E. Chandler was just arriving by train from New Hampshire, and reading in The Tribune of the great Tilden victory.

More widely circulated, and more generally believed, has been the tale that The Times would never have thought of casting any doubt on the election of Tilden if Abram S. Hewitt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, had not incautiously sent a message to the office, toward morning, asking what figures The Times had from Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina. According to this version, Reid decided that if the Democratic National Committee didn't know what had happened, it might still be possible to save the sinking ship; a point of view which certainly Reid did impress on Zack Chandler after the last edition had been put to bed.

But in supposing that this message had a decisive influence on The Times, some chroniclers of the episode have forgotten that a newspaper office on election night receives news from other sources than national committees. It is true that about midnight Hewitt sent to The Times office to ask what majority the paper was conceding to Tilden, and Reid defiantly answered, "None!" As the first edition shows, the other editors were not quite so positive in their confidence; but at least this fact pretty well refutes the allegation that when the first edition went to press The Times had no doubt of the election of Tilden.

The other message, asking for The Times's figures from the doubtful states, did indeed come in from the Democratic headquarters — not from Hewitt, but from Arthur Pue Gorman — between editions; and it did undoubtedly gladden the heart of John Reid. But its influence on the men who declared in the final edition that the election was in doubt was only subsidiary. That the Democrats had no news of glorious victories in the doubtful states was a fact to be taken into consideration, but along with, and subordinate to, the other facts which had come into the office in the telegraphic dispatches of early morning.

The truth is, in the words of an article printed in The Times on June 11, 1887, that on the morning after the election of 1876 The Times had the news — which no other paper in the United States had, and which the Republican National Committee did not have. It obtained it through its own enterprise and sagacity, and it paid for it.

And the news was that the result was still in doubt.

When the last edition went to press that morning, there were present in The Times office John Foord, the editor-in-chief, George Shepard and Edward Cary, political editorial writers, and John Reid, managing editor; besides Charles R. Miller, the present editor of the paper, who was then at the telegraph desk, and labored under the added handicap of being the lone supporter of Tilden in a company whose other members were all Republicans. The editorial council passed upon the news.

What was the news? Oregon had been heard from. An Associated Press dispatch from Portland, by way of San Francisco, reported that the Republicans claimed the state by a majority of five hundred. That was the only news from Oregon, and it is the sort of news which has been accepted provisionally, in default of better, in every newspaper office in the country on every election night. Florida was still in doubt. An early morning dispatch from Augusta, Georgia, said that the Democrats claimed Florida by a small majority; a dispatch from the same place just before midnight had said that "both sides claim the state." If Reid's enthusiasm carried the council out of line, it was in the weighing of those two dispatches.

South Carolina had been put by The Times in the Republican column. An Associated Press dispatch from Charleston at 2:15 A.M. said that the election was very close, and that it seemed probable that the Republican Presidential ticket and the Democratic state ticket would win. An earlier message from the same source said that the Democrats claimed the state by four thousand, but that the result depended on some of the coast counties which could not be reached by telegraph. A special dispatch to The Times from Columbia reported that the Republicans had probably carried the state by 10,000, and that the Republican state committee claimed it by from 15,000 to 20,000.

Louisiana The Times also assigned to Hayes. A message from the chairman of the Republican state committee declared that the state had gone Republican by six or eight thousand; an Associated Press dispatch from New Orleans said that the Democrats claimed the state by 20,000, "the best informed moderate Republicans" by 4000; but that the returns were "meager and insufficient for an accurate estimate."

This was the evidence. It certainly seems that it offered reasonable ground for thinking that the election was still in doubt; and if the Democratic National Committee itself was not informed as to the result in some of the doubtful states, that fact hardly justified news editors in giving them off-hand to the TIMES SQUARE, WORLD SERIES BASEBALL CROWD.

Democrats. In The Times Jubilee Supplement the chief influence in making this decision was assigned to Edward Cary, who was certainly not a bigoted Republican, and who could hardly be suspected of much sympathy with the sort of methods that might, and presently did, commend themselves to Zack Chandler.

To working newspapermen who know upon what slender grounds election night estimates are sometimes made up, and how generally these hazardous estimates are justified by the event, the decision of The Times editors will arouse little of the suspicion that was drawn upon this transaction by the proceedings of the Republican leaders in the following weeks.

Undoubtedly, The Times incurred unwarranted suspicion on this occasion from the enterprises subsequently undertaken, motu proprio, by its managing editor. But when John Reid left The Times office at daybreak on Wednesday, woke Zack Chandler out of his troubled sleep, and presented that surprised but delighted statesman with his own analysis of the election returns, he was acting as an unterrified Republican and not as managing editor of The Times. The paper can hardly be held responsible for the telegrams which he presently dispatched to Republican leaders in the doubtful states, over Chandler's signature, containing such pointed suggestions as "Don't be defrauded" and "Can you hold your state?" Those telegrams were charged to The Times because at the telegraph office where Reid filed them the Republican National Committee had no charge account. In the circumstances, Mr.

John Bigelow's indignant comments on the conspiracy in The Times office are somewhat beside the point. But then Mr. Bigelow, besides having a very real ground for indignation in the proceedings which eventually put Hayes in the White House, had perhaps, through the unhappy though innocent experience with the gold corner which ended his career as editor of The Times, acquired a somewhat exaggerated impression of the susceptibility of the paper to the schemes of conspirators.

Thursday's paper began with the joyful heading, "The Battle Won," and contained the declaration that Florida was Republican by 1500 or 2000. But it must be confessed that the dispatches on which this was based all came from Republican campaign managers, and it requires no very fantastic imagination to see in them the prompt response to the messages which Reid had dispatched in the name of Zack Chandler on Wednesday morning. Thereafter the paper stuck to its guns; it believed honestly that Hayes had been elected and it said so. Newspaper custom of the period did not require that the election night's news should contain any statements from the authorities of the opposition party, or any account of the manner in which the opposition candidate received the returns. On Wednesday The Times had published a dispatch from Columbus on Haves's reception of the news, but not till Friday did it notice the Democrats at all, and then only to denounce as fabrications some assertions of the "outrage mill, otherwise the press bureau of the Democratic National Committee, which continued to maintain the he-retical opinion that Tilden had been elected. On Saturday an editorial headed, "Let the Count Be Honest" expressed approval of Grant's ordering regulars to the disputed states, and echoed his statement that it would be infinitely better for the party to lose the election than to win a victory "tainted by the suspicion of fraud." There can be no doubt that the man who wrote these lines was quite as sincere as when he went on in the next paragraph to declare that an honest count would show that Hayes was elected.

The editors of The Times could see no merit in the proposal of an electoral commission. To The Times it was indubitable that the President of the Senate alone had the right to count the votes as received from the states, and that the two Houses had no more privilege in the matter than any other spectators. There was a good deal of force in The Times's criticisms of the electoral commission. Proposed as a method for reconciling the conflicting claims of the two Houses of Congress, it was easily reducible in fact to the shifting of the whole burden of decision to a single Justice of the Supreme Court. Not without reason The Times observed that it would be simpler, and equally fair, to let Tilden and Hayes cut for the high card; and the paper's disapproval of the measure as bringing the Supreme Court into politics was entirely justified by the event.

It appears, however, that objections to the electoral commission were based in some degree on the fear that some of its Republican members would double-cross Hayes. The Times was obviously relieved when David Davis, who was expected to become the nonpartisan fifteenth member of the commission, resigned his seat on the supreme bench to go into the Senate, but it did not breathe easily till the first of the cases from Florida had been decided. The Times editorial the next day expressed regret that the decision had been reached by the partisan vote of eight to seven, but the explanation was easy: "Not one Democratic Senator, not even one Democratic Justice, could be found impartial enough to sustain the decision which was finally reached"—by the eight Republicans.

Though for some of President Hayes's policies The Times's praise could be only damningly faint, it supported him vigorously when it could in his efforts to improve the standard of public service, and it found reason for jubilation in at least one event which happened during his administration—the resumption of specie payments. The Times had fought so steadily and vigorously for the maintenance of sound principles of national finance and currency that it could see in this one more sign that hope for better things in public life was not wholly illusory.

One effect of Hayes's conduct of the Presidential office was to give The Times a higher opinion of his predecessor, and when the campaign of 1880 came in sight the paper gave some encouragement to the movement to bring General Grant in for a third term. But this support seems to have been due largely to the returning fear of Blaine, and lack of confidence in some of the other competitors for the nomination. At any rate, when the Republican convention nominated Garfield The Times gave him hearty support. If the statement that he was "strong in his freedom from intrigue to gain the nomination" hardly seems as indisputable after forty years as it did when it was written. The Times's approval of his soundness on financial issues was as creditable to him as to the paper. And if the editorial on the civil service plank in the Republican platform was compelled to admit that the party leaders were against any reform in this direction, the editors could soothe their suspicions of the Grand Old Party by turning their eyes to the familiar spectacle of the iniquitous opposition. News dispatches from the Democratic convention were full of such violent denunciations and such bitter sneers as would not now be likely to appear even in editorial criticism of the opposition party. When Hancock was nominated The Times called him "a pretentious blockhead," "an inflated Franklin Pierce," and remarked that the convention had "nominated a Northern General to resurrect a Confederate government." Hayes, to the great dissatisfaction of The Times, as well as of a good many northern Republicans who were not yet certain that the South was back in the Union, had withdrawn the Federal troops from the southern states, and it was evident that this election could not be won either before or after the counting of the vote by the methods that had succeeded in 1876. Perhaps fear of the outcome may account for the vigor with which The Times derided Tilden's refusal to let his name go before the convention, and continued its attacks on "the great claimant" until Hancock was actually the candidate.

However, there was no uncertainty as to the result of the election of 1880. The story of the election of Garfield and Arthur in The Times of Wednesday morning, November 3, was headed "The Great Trust Renewed," and the editorial comment as usual referred to the "great responsibilities" which lay on the leaders of the Republican party. "The momentous issues of the past are decided," said The Times, in remarking that sectional questions were disappearing and that an election was once more turning on problems which did not depend on the climate for their impression on the voters. How true that was The Times itself was to show four years later.

In the quarrel over patronage in New York State which led to the fight between Garfield and Conkling The Times sided with the President, and made some severe criticisms of the part played in support of the New York Senators by Vice-President Arthur — whom, when he was nominated, it had described as "a man eminently worthy of a wider sphere for his abilities." That description is not usually applied to the Vice Presidency, but when Arthur exerted his abilities in the extra-official sphere of manipulations at Albany a great many people felt that this was rather beneath the dignity of the second officer of the Federal government. And then Garfield was shot.

The Times's editorial comment on the morning after very naturally pointed the moral of the evil results occasioned by the demoralization of the civil service, which had led a disappointed office seeker to shoot the President of the United States. Also there was some rather stern castigation for political leaders whose bitter attacks on the President might have had their effect on the mind of Guiteau, which in The Times's opinion was "not remotely akin" to those of Conkling and Platt. The next editorial, headed "To Whom It May Concern," contained these somewhat pointed observations:

When James A. Garfield was reported yesterday as lying at the point of death, new bitterness was added to the poignancy of public feeling by the thought that Chester A. Arthur would be his successor. . . . No holder of the vice-presidential office has ever made it so plainly subordinate to his self-interest as a politician and his narrowness as a partisan.

When Garfield died, however, The Times expressed approval of the correctness of Arthur's attitude during the interim in which there had been much discussion of the President's "disability." But it added:

The moment he selects an administrative officer because the nominee is his friend, and not at all because he possesses qualities which render him obviously fit to perform certain public duties, that moment his administration will be discredited.

Arthur's record made this admonition somewhat desirable, but if it should be taken literally, one must fear that a good many administrations would have been discredited.

Arthur as President turned out a good deal better than there had been reason to fear, but by no means as well as could have been desired; and throughout his term The Times was slowly drawing farther away from what politicians would call reliability. The great causes in which the paper had long been interested now absorbed still more of its attention; civil service reform, though progressing slowly, was having a hard fight against the sturdy opposition of political leaders; tariff reform was still for most of the country a matter of religious sentiment and not of common sense, as Hancock discovered to his misfortune: and prevalent through much of the country, especially those parts of the West in which a whole generation was working itself to death to bring in civilization, there was a conviction that most of the problems of poverty would be solved if by some formula men could borrow hundred-cent dollars and pay their debts in fifty-cent dollars, or in pieces of paper which the United States government might see fit to regard as dollars.

To educate the public on these issues took up much of the energy of the editors of The Times, and the perception that their efforts were regarded as a rule with positive hostility by the leaders of the party gradually cooled that fierce Republican enthusiasm which had burned highest in the office in 1876. Moreover, corruption at Washington was not yet a matter of ancient history; and The Times in 1881, by exposing the Star Route frauds, accomplished a public service which deserves to be ranked next to the overthrow of Tweed in the paper's res gestae.

The contracting for the delivery of mails on certain routes (marked with a star on post-office records) lying for the most part in remote and thinly settled

					Kew-Hork	dimes.	क्रां •
VOT. XXVI NO. 7849.				NEW-YO	NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1876.	9, 1876.		PRICE FOUR CENTS.
TOTAL STREET,						realism . The order Bouchies ticket in	to the Siste will rath over 30,000. The Democrata	I shall frequently recall this with during the ties.
THE BATTLE WOR.	C. Horrato Benes, Jr. (1) I	14. Groves M. Earbe	Ontario	TOTAL TRANSPORT	jority. The total cate will reach 50,500, the great		elect biett Congressmen, insvins am digrict—his Bearth—in donbt, with a very strong medability of	Inhall we the smooth you, with plannes. I his year good cirbt.
de de de la company de la comp	1 Jeliah Bertridge.	it, Terms J. Quiest.	Drings 1050	357	ect crar pulled to the State.	Managed to an Assessed Press.	the election of forganess, Roy, over Hauton, Dom,	CONTRACT, May, S.—The value in Heagilton states, as follows: Titlers, 52,408; Harte, 26,779; Concess
A REPUBLICAN VIOLUAL : A 125	4. Heary R. Harris	A America B. James.	Cown. 2807	- 5 m	A MAJORITY OF WULLT FIVE TROUBLAND FOR	Vietnia Cire, Nov., says Novoke to norm for in	Nonrota, Mor. E. Betures tapich suntry ton re-langua of Goods Dem. to Charges, from this	Sr. Smlas (Prophb.) 1.
DEST AND WILL	2. Walkers H. Baston T.	R. Osbrye A. Buder.	Petaga 200	T	MAYES—THE LEGISLATURE REPUBLICAN.	propried repositions may write. San Flatterior, No. 6.—Seniarior returns from Neuton inner on doubt that the Sinte has reed for	district, by $,000 majority.	ILLINOIS.
LIAM A WHEREIGH VION PRESIDENT.	S. Menghager H. Andl. S. S. Mark.	Witten E. Belez.	Others Returning	2000	Churshia, Mov. 8,-There is no double	poblican by a lake feetern's	TIMES'S MAJORITY, 8000 - Republican	DULLOW RIECTED GOVERNOR BY 35000
THE REPORTICANT CARRY THENTS-ONE	L Wilbum Atarteb.	H. John H. Camb.	Riebthwad	164	abona South Careline. With two Kappendorn annuffer to bear from the weaddrift for Mayes	WISCONSIN SURE FOR HAYES	торь — думенацию стато до него	. MAJORITY—A GAIN IN CONDENSAMES. CHICAGO, Nov. 8—11:30 A. M.—Return-beve
STATES, CASTING AN ELECTORAL VOICE	William Laterop.	S John R. Hungarluck	3t. Lawrence 7300	0880	to over 2,000. The Republican Committee	CONORESEDNAL DELEDATION.	DESCRIPTION AND CRATIC, 13 BOTH	beta resolved up in Ale hole from 401 towns, and
NAME OF TAXABLE PARTY.	7. Philin C. Hayes.	1. Oberier R. Benedict.	Saratogo 200	15 day	fully $,000. The Demourate conclude the State	Miller Attenta May, 8,-The Chalman of	The falcet relution show that Widen's major-	of Chicago. Four bandred and Openty-ux 61 thein
The dispatches received alone our last leans	S. Grandary E. Fort.	energy Contract	Sonarie	EIE- 1 7112	to Hayes. The Congressional deloration will stand three Banchinees and two Democrata.	the Bepublican State Committee claims a Re-	ily ta the State, in much loss than the Develorates first classed, and tentered of being 15,000 to probably	give Mayes 20,577; Tildes, 20,214. Thirty-fier either towns, returning mederalise any. give verifiers the reports on which Tax Tuezs yes-	In R. M. Marro.	Curio E. Brordon	Sounce	300	a Republican loss of two. The Lagislature	well in the Second Bistrint, is cleated to Cob-	ont over 8000. Gav. Bedin, Demecrat, caarled the State in 1875 by 42,623.	Thinks a uniforting of 451. These returns give Haves a net unsketly of 21,621.
parday claimed 181 electoral volue for Gov.	A Jenny C. Toron.	A Aires A. Derice	Standben 1100	- Sec	and he tapped the same of a same	grees, making prokecity five Republicans from	The Contrastional delocation study three	Deducting 0,000 es the probable Den-
HATEL Do Wednesday the following States	13. July R. Melecoll.	T. Widges L. Liebbles.	Suldwa	1000	SERIOUS BIOT IN CHARLESTON.	Thenty fire Minutes Part Kight P. M -Three	Republicana and fron Democrata, as follows:	nemality to Sele 11,001. If the same rate a
Age. California, Dinais, Jowa, Kansas,	if, Belanta L. Wilet.		Tourstine 1000	53	TIRED UPOR BY DEMOCRATE ONE MAN	hundred and forty-one towns give a Bepublisher majority of 2,876, a Republican not gale of 7.371.	Datalett. Lilament H. Storichern, Hep. 2. 11. Linearn Park. Rev.	kept up to the remainder of the flats the majorite will be, as compared with the vite of 1972, from
Maine, Massachmetts, Mohlips, Min-	TOTAL	I Heart & Barning	Uniter	1361 912	RELEASE AND SEVERAL, WELLING.	Veryea and other Bepublican anoactes still to	4. Mines Ronn, Durn.	30,000 to 32,000, Collam is nedombtedly elected.
nihota, Nevada, Nebruska, New-Eastp-	2 James M Cold	L. Jakes A. He Mahon.	Warren 500		Caintarron, Nov. 8. A serious rios arous	. Diffeen Montes Part Atte P. M The Ro	6. Angustas W. Coller, Dom.	bank vote. Gru. Parasugaria concession the careties
chire, Oregon, Ohio, Pennari vanie, Rhide	L. Leonidya Bexton.	1. Henry L. Dicker.	9 ayns 1500	962	bare about fire velock this afternoon in Aroust aftern and Course the Reas and Courser office, where it	publicant clear fice Congressmen, as follows:	7. Aogustos A. Hardseburg, Dom.	of Lather, the regular Republican in the Fourth, District, sever binass? and Sturbink, Later returns
Land, Vermont, Wisconsin, Louisians, and	L. Milers C. Robinson.	E. Jernes S. June.	Westoberier 1300	98	Abroag has been collected all day savestow the bul-	Caspil, h the Scood, 740; Hasleton, in the	The Republicant sleet their Sector Milhs Coun-	from the Third District leave 19 th deads believen
South Carolion. Some of these States, more	St. Morton C. Runion.	II. Hanny S. Heal.	Yates. 1100	S2	Mackey, Leothilean, and or member of Gengroom,	Third, 2,500; Humpbrey, to the Savauth, 6,000,	Uns of Passalo to gwie, and Caps Mar. The Domo-	Cmcaso, Nov. 6.—Complete retorns from Cofe
elitined by the Democrate, but and	I been L Brank	13 Miles L Sombank	Total 27762	5000 sales 20073	their convergible with some fructioned about the	and Pound, is see highly, by a small majoray. The Democrate elect Lynde, in the Fourth Dis-	arete carry bein anidelesses and montation—core gales—Sasses sod Burlington	Conney, except a ten districts und Beratifous towns given Haves Mills William Middle Connes 257
where that the above estimate was	12 John B. Baker.	15. Melaca Ves Verbia.	Estimated majority for Til	Titten	and the group arena has effectig to ber that	tries, by 5100, Bragge, in the Pitth, 5,000;	The Sensity to Fast in the Secreta, is Democratic by S. making a Democratic material of S on a total	Collien, Rap., for Generoo, received Mills, and. Montes Rem for Deverous Mills. The mentals.
Surrect, but that Florida, which	M. J. C. Siene.	12. William McKlubby.	THE ASSENT	PARET.	Demograt, who were listening to the talk with	Whoseness delegation the same as last year.	ballot. The Logislainer will da vary diese.	sistering and towns will it to called although the training to the called the
we left in doubt, hun gone Republican by	4. M. O. Deering.	A Amos Townsed	The returns received.it	dicate that the follow-	bear, to the opposite side at the street, and	The Sepublican gains to the, Sinte are con- stantly increasing. There is no doubt of a Re-	Coorty, Marriell Name, Name,	majority is Cook County. The wast of the city of Chenge in: Bayes, 48,317; Tilden, 33,947; Cooper, at feast 1,500 confurity—our ladest dis-	C. Lanks Sampson	L. Bickers Walters.	ply, the mone of Bereit	tiens being printed to	Man. The state mere heard coveral squares of, and hoberths of males and neternal most can howard	publims majority of avet 3,000.	Bergen Lohn E. Winger, Den.	The Tribupe status that the Republicans been stated that while small county to be around Clean?
the Commenter are also should. Etc.	S. W. F. Sang.	L Chapter Present		A John Diment.	the scene, In a thort time the sprous were filled.	Depotat to the Associated Press.	Bornegioni. Heary Street Dem.	thresholders for Barrill. Thus claim is based but on early complete charges in each case.
Actual Conferences are seen account.	I. Willen A Pallipe.	2 Kenned / Mandall	L. John Smyrr.	R. Francis E. Spinola.	of an extensive risk. The fitting continued for sev	MENABLES, Nov. 8The Confidences successfrom the State are as follows: Williams, Rep-	A Regular Tabler Rep. C. John Courteer, Rep. Landan A John C. Monte West	Receipts from Ma towers and precious, mitches to the city of Chicago, sive Heyes the Milke Titlan We.
early restorday morning, and in the after-	3. Thomas Cran.	William Ward.	S. William J Mahar.	R. Righton J. O'Hors. 2. Thur. Q. R. Rickerina.	eral minutes. The pulleamed so duly in the nega- berhood, were find at, end, ane or ten of them	Caseell, Rop., Haslaton, Rop. Lynds, Dom.; Bragg, Dom., Bonck, Dom.; Murphiret, Rop., 404	B Oliver Lond, Rep.	CO, Espe majorty 1923. Pitte-live water soon came she decides nave that the	L. deafrey R. Dorne	S. Hender Chiner.	Bemne Bidefa.	R. J. C. J. Launder.	wounded. A detachmed of Potton arroad with	Frank, Rep. Mayer majority to from 1,000 to 2,000.	Canbelland Leas T. Michael, Rep.	transe in the agreement role of nearly fifty then send over the water for President to 1920.
Democrats conceded the Blate, without	4. J. Prodor Knot.	10. Francis Iv. Calenta.	Edwin C. Moody.	L. Award A. Dinnell.	from the station-forms, and succeeded in	PENNSTLY ANIA.	Lastz Albert B Trapkase, Rep.	Returns from the Congressional districts an fer- as received, about the election of Aldrich. Heparter one thomsand, and galned a	E. Chart & William	13. James G. Knilly.	1. Thomas J. King.	Country.	driving the mob swaff ling, qualities for riol. Arotae mes hilled, one	GRESSMEN AND THE LEDGELATINE BE-	A Branch K. Drawell, Brit.	to the Prest; Hartleen Dath, in the Night
Republican Congressman. In Mabriella	S. Millon J. Durham	IN Edward Overland	1. Ocorge 1. Pest.	L. Bretett Cone.	nagro wer mortelly and eight others perionally	PUBLICAN IN BOTH BRANCHES-TRE	3. Jaseph H. Van Wightman, Rep. 6. Godfried Ermann. Della.	Lakeng in the Southal Birchard, App. in the Mith. Handston, New, in the State, Funy
There the Republican majority rose to 8,000.	10. John U Charles	17. Jacob M. Camberd.	S, Jubo S, Brown.	ONOSDAGA.	Bust nes mareded to the Mallyndouse. There is	DENOCRATS.	7. Kitansh Draka, Rep.	Ben, to the Twelft, Conen, Rep.
Dispatches from Navada made is certain	2. R. John Elfe	13 Lerd A. trackey.	g Theodore A. Case	L Currell & Smith.	olobe &are armed themselving, The feeling be-	Appeted Digasted in the New-York Than.	Glostonited It States Majoret, Deba.	in the Pourteenthy Marrison Dum, Is. 180 Seventamnth, Wiley. Bod., in the Engineenthy
lates the black had good for dayon. And	C. J. B. Alem.	H. Rangel Erreit	Black it. Sectable.	1. H. C. Durmon.	teres the Repositions and Remission is very strong Related at the collection and being madely to allay the cit-	State of Penegrieunts will be reduced sounderably	Dudson Meetin M. Druban Dem.	Extractly, Surfacett and Municipal to Confirm Processing Surfacett in Confirmation and Confirmation of the Republican victory, the Democrate conced-	6. Charles S. Mark.	M. W. D. Senienberger	CLINTOR.	L Jones il Guitan.	citement by promisent man of healt parides, but the armost is threstraint.	by the literary correction the presecutive countries deline of the frapects the cirtary is users complete	Alternology This Bey,	men and pomenty four.
makes claims 5.000 majority. Louis-	2. William F. Pere.	W. Lauls F. W. 1840.	L. Jene H. Preper.	E. Miret D. Durland.	THESE AND THE PERSON	than was anticionied. The gains is mumbers of	M. Anne Storman Jenson	pahlosa, for Congress.
	4 Lienally Pounts	L Bearing T. Bear	E John T. Heroborm.	Joseph D. Britisgs.	THE STATE REPUBLICAN-LANGE REPUBLI-	porubly stee, siter dedocator a loss of one. It	G. Bright T. Parrell, Dem.	INDIANA
ernts have claimed; but our dispatches,	A MARTINE	COURS CAROLDIA.	Deleg alcirat.	I George II Door	CAN GAINS IN THE PURCEPAL PAR-	tries, is detected by Wright. This is a Lapshitter	Margar,, Heratle N. Barroughe, Esp.	A MAJORITY OF SEVEN. THOUSAND FOR show that it has gone Republican. The latest	2. Politica H. Roberta.	J. R. Spire 4. Calb.	S. Jean of Mayners.	Onstade & Da prisorie	demail Disputed to The New York Trees.	losa. The reaches for the same district, aniethm in the present Congress by the resignative of Jadge	R. V. Hours, North Den.	Indianapolis, Nov. 8.—Ratarus from 385
threlligence points to the certain election of	5. Sick. Beatle.	3. Kaberl Streits	3. Dewitt Webh.	A. Simont E. Barben.	New Onigana, May, 6.—Belarus soutines to	Relation, to files by Mr. Jones, a Republicate,	R. Charles A. Carepbell, Dem.	townships and wards, which cast forty-three gard, ond a Republicar victory in the cation.	AL TROUTERS.	1. Jene H. Kasellph.	1. John R. Orensey.	Paralling Figh. Jr.	Parish, where Mobells resides, given 300	Allegieser City; Brrut, in Pitteborg, Walta. in	Manmouth Jeines L. Bon, Dom.	des 3,491, but which is a Damocratic gein of 902, Tox
All the Congressionsi distrible have not	2 Ecolomia W. Harring	a Ocerys O Intraff.	E. Rivard Calibrat.	E Jon B Van Newtonnell	against him. The estue parish went	Tanapam, in Marses Conff.; Watere, is	Morris. Abraham C Vas Doyen Ber.	gien Thiden 7,000 unfolibit? Hives Demecration
Then heard from definiting, our the navious	A Sucesay Power	L. John H. Bright.	R. Bernend Chafes.	2 John J. Pilline.	Parishes which also went Democratic in 1674.	Brie Consty; Overgen, 10 Bradlord Consty, and Marting, in Sabsylkii Consty. There is	A Cornellost, Cornellost, Dom.	connition to have from inay increases this settlerated of The same about Demos in the present House. The indica-	T. Beeren F. Rouler.	ft John D. C. Stlene.	Benjamio D Clappy	3. Elchard & Bernett Mcuncity.	and to one parish, as far as beated from, aroupt	doubt about the election of Mabon urver Stanger The rate will do ever close, and the result is set	Passio. J. John W. Grage, Ber.	cratte majority to Outbor tast.
Actes now are that the Asphonicion new	C. William W. Rate.	la M. Cuny Ioung.	POLYOR AND DARRING	George W. Wotch	the five pariabse selected by the Democratio	est positively known. There is tackared to be	Salem Defined A. Salem May.	MICHIDAN
Shown its September and October,) and	M. George D. M. Printerst.	R. David M. Underport	The Tarnet.	1. David Maffulla.	stree patighes, whose we keen overwhelming	Control and be given with and present . Marting	Bomerste Lingen & Lorgen Den.	PARON MATORITY OF SOME MALLOT IN this first, with the first space being the manner. The Logislature space was fifty to	particular integration of the control of the contro	about twelve handred majority.	ables and fire precised to the margain.	over 1872. The same towns give Couvel, Bep. De	iterated a net migning of a.m., which, help, for Congress in the Second District, his 700 major-	live Madowan, Roy, for Custrum or the Third District ban 10. majority. The Democrats claim	the election of Williams in two Piret Qualities by about 1,000.	Midnight. Later returns Indicate that the new jorier for the from 15,000	to fighth. Crowell's majority in Corbinst will be security that the Thologists will be Republicate.	the anglattic of shoot 30 on joint ratio. The Ling with tenter of a Cangrapheni	Dialesten, The Demogratie elege Williams is the Right Dialester of all and majority.	The Rights District as elabored by Min purvey, Ornerse County pleate the entire Democrade abert.	Total the experience forfer, Rep. with it elected	lap, ter Sheriff.	MINNESOTA.	A DEPUBLICAN MENDRING OF 15,000-A GAUS	OF TWO REPUBLICAN CONORESSER.	by I'abl, fight 5-150 satur with 51 de retained Estates County along Tilling a majority of	1,184, and Stewart, Boys, for Congress, 365 major-	ligh.	and Melkir, Dem, for Congress 35 majority.	The vote throughout the State, excent in Estimation	centry, generally stown normal parts. Only, stand twenty of the samethy-phe contribes have risk	made complete returns, bot these, with fragmenting	esturgs from other potute, indicate fast that themby	TE DOG.	Duenell, Bep. to elected in 10th Flers Diacrici be.	from 1,000 to 7,000 majority. Struct to elected in the	the Thirt by 1,000 majority.	1004	- TINDENS CHOOSEN TOTAL TINDENS	LICAN GAIN OF ORR CORPRESSION.	theretal Disputes to the New-York Times.	The Months, Nov. B Lakery considers then	amenating to 30,903, and two sounder give Til-	den LEGGEN na Republican amjerity for	18,882, a gain of 8,820 over the vote of last year.	tionale mis will make Bayes' majority 33,000.	All the Cohgressens cleated are Bepublicans	Disputed to the Junganism Print	Day Month, For. &-Littling from seven	n majerity ete Kayes of R.W. a Republican sale eff	4.777. The Spain will go in many 50,000 Augustings. Respired	Cupleto, Egg. 1.—Rectras from 12s form town.	5,000 Jose bimocratle gain ad 343.	MINOUNT.	SECURES FIGURE ALL PARTS OF THE STATE—	OF THEM. DONDERSKING	Specific Department in Men Town There.	of the three at Louis Congressmen and the	agenty tighen Chausery L. Prings.	Departs to the Associated France	mergrag soly Sity of the devanty-shad precipately.	completed the whoth. These presents give Tries, restricted not Haves 11986. Phylos. Bern. for the	ernor, 10,000 , Flateliburg, Rop. 19,262. Thuman.	Rep., for Blank, Mills J. Brown, Don., Line, Fab.	2.773, ood Kelte, Donn, 3,677, In tan Second D.s.	Contract of Party Party	***************************************

Address of the Courty - Spine and a chief of the degry by	177. Pagi the J. Or Congress pale 316 majority. 187. Pagi the J. Or Congress pale 316 majority. 18. Republican malo of 37. Aubin (Lop.) to elected.	to the Astrology by which approximate part of the The World by the Astrology of the Astronomy of the Astrono	Memberla Louviy - 1.00 to presence a sect to me are to the Assembly in the Taled District of Also- nearly (one) of the Majority, a Begrabiles and	one Arremotivana and of D veta. The Memorius electric two Accomplyings. The solicity in partition to	Ernes E.166.	570, Rora, Cam, for Dongeres, has 600 majorite, Lod. inw Don., for State Sensia, To. Wellerin, Dom.,	for Assembly, E3, Computed, Diffic, 107 Assembly, 100, Marcia, Dam, for Assembly, 363, Ture county	Gasan County.—This county alves It ages 1.941 cm.	Lepublica prio of LWA an Congression and 15th	placted to the Assembly from Paterson, Instead of	Maken County - Alexander M. Martin Dec. in	alected in the Ansantal Horn the Fours Course	neat Brit reported.	The Cottage of Deat. 1st Congress, 176.	Educors alon a Democratic gulb of 350 on Mayor.	Cococil and Board of Points then stand the same so	Detrourate clost, W. liters Z. Day Mayor by shoul	Sign, ben, by a large majority. The because him	Dainer re-tacts Test. New. by 34. Eluxbeth	the Board stand-Deportment Combitants 7.	Requiring Season - Tota county has cleated a Requiring Season of the County of the Cou	Lightlington County.—Rale way. Dr 90., for Sension.	one Handbliete, and one Assembly Dulmes remains	Merry Occasiv Enledteson, Rop., for the Assess-	one steel in Demerate and hen Republican.	Parch, E.p., is rieging to Congress in the Second. District hy a majority of 500.	DELATER	THE PROPERTY MAISTER STATE	2,600.	WILMINGTON, Nov. 8The Democratic ma-	jority to talk Mane will reach 9,800.	ENTRUSTANT LA DEIO,	A MAJORITE FOR BATES CLAIMED BA THE	RIECTORAL COLLEGE - PERTINERY	Prect by the REST Passibles.	clamont have over the automatest that	Boy. Hayes is elected. His private sportlary	is sending out t. lograms of a large a majority of	street, in front of the Bepublican band-quar-	ters, is closely pecked with shonands of poo-	plo, all wild with excitement. In the mines of	complete returns of the Ohio election by sonn-	the have signally lailed. Thus far returns	ten. It le, hawever, conceded by both the	Stars Committees that the Mapublican majority will be from $.000 to 10,000.	After bearing the news at the Republican	head-quarters, the crown numberry several thousand, formed these presession and merched	to Gov. Hages' residence. In vastemento	repeated unite Gov. Hayes appeared to the	spoke as follows	My Fairere, Intents 970 J no obliged for this Assay demonstration, but it you will also guist	about bait a mamrat, I will say something to yan	etgore to asy. White our prizers about	throughly, we must remain bur that reversal of the States makes here send considered dentities a	tergeterritory remete from rational or telegraphia	time to receive definite returns from them I	cherefites take this call as an estract of year loyalty on the Consolinate Party, and west Gostin Collinates	success. It is tor advices should change the rounit	i finan what it is addressed to broassi. Laberty rev.	1
tar beite in and the state of t	Crewins, two in Verseau, tead in Weshinston, Sen to Luperus, two to Dokaway, and two to Frenklin.	The Republicant here large gales to many of that weedles. the principal being about	ne faltewn Atlantery Coulety, 2,560; Bearer, 200; Lewsque, 600; Reline, 600; Blair, 4,00;	Lanuater, 1,600; Chester, LODO; Bradiand, 600; Tigge, 1,000; Warren, 600, The follow	Detectable gales are, to Morthamehelund County, 10th, Parts, 10th Tech, 300, Organ, 300, Loranta.	1.00. The experity on the Presidential State in Personal chief on them. Make it now leave at	though the Sists, opinion the city, would consider the not complete	except to warriet a statement by seconds. The	all the fruits of agrees majoring are goldened. The	mount by the Demecrate Bringhadt the blate, no.	can, general in a few legalitten. Ene discount of the franchisms, receipts, on death, presented the State	going for Niden. There are come facts in release	which is will an profitable to examine when the ex-		THE REDLY OF CONCUMENTS.	DUTLER, Nov. EThompson, Ben, is sleeted	in the Tweely-axed Cengrossican District by 2000	Constructive. Roy. R. Balorza resettesh un tanoma	Indicate the pleation of Belly, Dem., for Congress	by 100 casjonary.	this county is 1 10th. Col. "Oreston. for Congress,	bas E. filt unfartig fo the comety, and E.000 in the	WALERS, Nov 6 Per Cappres, Wolling us.	Mich Danes 3,000.	Recutatan Nov. 8. Intentalists relative bolicates the election of W. S. Shalles becare for Congress by	prosjectity of 2000 je the district.	gressmal Historic, Campball, Rep., has n majority or yet. This statuted in a gress of twartesmiss by n	Democrat.	for Congress will succeed 1,000 to this district.	MINCELLANEOUS RETURNS.	Pullabutonia, Nov. 8-3:30 P. MPull re-	Large from Leaders look countries in this Stable in-	of 2.43. This does not include Allegoony Coonty	Igiure in the county, electing seven at the plan	Joseph Mappellers, is elected to the Congress.	in fact. 616 Course. Teo Republicana clost	the District Atlonesy to this county, and principly Prothepolary. They also also live State Schalors,	which is made of one.	Thirteasth District by a majority at Ma.	MAJORITIES BY COUNTRE.	the majorities in Posseyfrants by outblies on far	as beard from. All the townships are not in, but	Daves, Tilden, Len Gen.	Allegued.	Harts 1009 MG	Chaster 3075 Ibis	Parentie 173	Houseon. Co.	To an	Variation 725	Printer. Sect. 1000	Laborater (specimelete), 74th 1200	Nerthampton 1018	Carbon.	200	PIBGINIA	THEORY'S MAJORITY OVER SUMMER STREET	Ricmonn, May 1.—Incomplete returns from	gently evers on the inchests that Ander b malecter then forgonit a committee double Reterns commissionly, but large Republish gains are reported overwhere, except in five scall	partition.	Series Character, Apr. S.—Plane ser, as yet no definite related, and features asked as at 11.20 last	Might. Both parties claim the State. Indications noted to Demodratic cales to the territor parish as	The Democrats speed Ham for Courses over Smith is the Teach Court Desired. The olivership archi-	ble give 10,000 Democrade enjarity.	Pomor	CLINTON, Mars Foliciaca Pariab, Nov. 8.—Owing by June Godges of the Registre to fill by amount	summer, a large nearber of velety wave cal regia-	tered. Serenteen handred and jerty-losse regit- tered vetes uner polite, of which Reves set three	and Tilden ine beloom. At a pall expensed na-	der the Unique Sinten funerrane 463 rotaes who had	esparete box, all Demerrita. The Repoblicans	refrains them exting. There was no include that,	the namber at the last alection. Many Democratio	voters were delerred by want of registration. The	water and believed transcripted, and we are replying	The above tes carity at 1,740 shows a Demostrade	gale of 2345 aver the vote of 1674. Problem We workly was not the voting to Reaf Follows was for	formal, and the sales will nest pe connect by the	Returning Beard, al Inc Registrar nest three was	inhee will be treated in the ease way for cloning	reasons. Charges of intimidation, frans, &a., will	he made. One-hite Parish of see a Demostratio melective of	LOT, belon a Bomperatte galn of 1.015 over the	vote of Cfft, when Dabueblet, Eing. regelraß 608	The following official and medicial returns a	garlabes have been received burn:	Tharis.—Sagabhésa 1.63, Democrado 1,846—a Re-	CalcarmaDieneers de 1,941, Reproficas 63e.nst	West Pelician-Democratic by 800 is 300 en-	Jackson, Demparie, 1,545; Republiana, 339-e	Democratio gain of 850. Compartment are made with the 1874 retains of	shelles werpesseable and gairt. Mediantes. The	has been reported from nov quarted of the State.	THE PICTORY IN DREGON.	A CLEAN SWEET-THE DEMOCRATS CONCRDS	A REPUBLICAN WICTORY-1,000 MAJOR-	Arrests Densitati na. Non-Tork Thus.	PORTLAND, Nov. 7.—Indications are we	have made in sides sweep, electing our Fresh-	D. A. STEELE, Chalman.	PORTLA'D, Nas. BOrogen has gano ter	cleated to Congress. We claim 1,000 majority:	and the December of semestra Republican vin-	Holted Stales Sepalor.	Dipata to tax associated Press.	BAN FLANCISCO, Nov. 6.—Leises returns from	Demograte may concede that State to 100 Bepab-	heath are Transfer Nov. 5-10 P. MOrung le see.	coded thoughters by a small meterity. A dispatch	for frem 2,000 to 3,000 B-ontifiers majority.	NEVADA WILL POTA FUR RAYES.	THE STATE SURE FOR A DECIDED HAPPILL.	Special Disputed to tax New York Plants.	Vincinia Cirr, Nov. 8.—Novada givas a	Cinkrata Republican State Committee.	Visconta City, Nev. 8-Neveda bus gone	singled Congression; Leonard, Ray., elected	Saprame Court Judge. Tan Lerfeledure is Bea pulling Acres, and a pulling of the pulling of th	L. James G. Toka. R.W. W. Emphasses. Albert Childs.	1. Cherte L. Lyon. It. Tutters R. Reprint. It. Aurthol. M. Marras . R. Jorry H. D. Santon.	Tilliam W. Kies, Stories B. Statis,	Justing It Adress. Bresset I dem	L. Albert J. baseling. Silas B. Visites.	L Willard Medges. Stames Mandles.	A Park that L. Booker L. Pare V. Longwer.	Educate Remain Rabort Waldell	L. James Honing. 1 Townsend J. Polley.	Tilliam E. from	Peter Michell. S. Joen. Threilewalth.	T. Janus L. Harve. L. Ambrose H. Parite.	R. Martin Nachiman, R. William F. Mollar.	12. Cartelepher Placks. Arthur Class.	12. Manrie P. Holshan Mason L. Ballerta.	M. Lubs F. Otensa.	The same of the sa	PLOKIDA POR HAYES AND PREEDOM.	THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY RETWEEN FIF-	Amende Disserting to the Tack Class.	TAXLARASSEE, Rov. 8Our State Boket and	the Mayes electoral tickies are unfo by at loan!	About on Comments to the First District	and probably in the Sessad, Parisot order	provabled throngbont the State.	M. HANTEL	LACKAGE VILLE. Nov. B.—The Republicans	will short four Electors and two Congression	and the entire Sista troket. Parits Jours, .	Secretary Compating Committee.	JACKSONVILLE, NOT. AFIOTIGE IS LESTING.	1574. Persa Jorea.	Secretary Campaign Committee	Wantscroy, Nov. & -The following dispatch	the Beauthonn Congressional Congrittee:	Tathanan, Nor. 8-6 P. M.	We have carried the States by not less than	Folicetorous are not yet in, but stole as an ne-	ostred make the above figures contain.	Challeng Boundillans Committee Committee	JACKSONVILLE, NOV. S.—In sixteen manufes	the Republican majority is 6,000, an aggregate	The Roundifficat aniesticy is the State will got	be less thank 000. Perms Joses,	The state of the s	LANE CITY, Hort BReigmann being made to	on the Amend Dariett, is elected at $60 materia.	Columbia Cenety alrea tad Dameeratic medority, a	Descriptional of about MR. Bural County of sea m Rapublican enjoye of Sec. m Rapublican	ities gain of 300 over the rote of tifts.	jority of 432 a Democratic guln of 119. Mallam	County gives a Recabilious majority of Dr. m Dreme evelts gain at 77. Names County green a Reproblem	nationity of St. & Democratio wate of 48. St. Johns	October Hard and the control of the	an estimated Democrable teafortig of 73 m Demo- eratorate of G. Beker-County gives a Demo-	crade majority of 56, a Republican galo of 2,	THE POTE IN NEW-HAMPSHIRE.	Courses No. 5 Retern from 210 towns	ging Have MANA. Thinks MANA with its inwest in
B. Cararina Co-Manmertia, "A. Green's W. Manden, S. M. Bubbell, L. Mrawll, M. Joseph M. Longham. 1. Mars d. Daniell, M. John Occode, Mr.	A denote in the second of the	1. H. A. Meldren. 1. J. Annologh traine. 2. New M. Agantique. 2. John F. Werrie. 2. Herrando D. Meng. 1. Appa Husten.	L. Older M. adaptata. C. Auberta L. 174 Constru. C. Olderick M. 174 Construction C. Auberta M. 174 Construction P. Mariento in Princes	1. Anthony lanes. 1. John S. Keene.	A. Kichard Colle. J. Kichard G. Freet. J. Kohret A. Flesher. J. Kohret A. Flesher. J. Zamen B. Zamen.	S. Auckers P. Bland. A therite is exception.	2. thomas F. Orlitmass. 3. Advand R. Bragg. B. Action Brack.	St. M. P. March. St. Theodora C. Penel.	II. Juke J. Clark	Gentre Pracet	Republisher 110	To be abdused.	Meanlines had gain 45.		THE MESOLI LA CARRELL CO.	TORAL VOTE.	The official returns have been received	from conve than half the mantice in the State,	showing the sonjustify given by each on the	from these estures, from our private diseased as	and from careful estimates based on the Presi-	dential vote of 1672. It may be railed upon an	being greatly correct. It is not probable that	reind at gew deen. The nomplete	credutes of the wate on Governor have	bem received from anly a few scentisa	So far as received, they them take both candi-	nort tickets. In nearly all instances the Re-	publican county tickets bays been elected. In	the next Legislature the Republicaes will have	a majority of 15 Assemblymen. The Sonate	there make two washedes to fill, and a Demo-	ornt and a Republican have been elected to all	them. This leaves a Republican majority of	als, of the Congressional defecation there are nitations Hentiblicans and Aftern Demo-	grats, a Republican gain of four. Following is	the table of among majoration:	Albany 2200 GH	Allegany 2800 3170		Cagupa 3008 3277	Chantangua tool	CDetable 1236 1236	Crimina 600 460	Cortind 1620 1229	Delaware 300	Erte 900 3063	150 178	Fulca 550 691	Gunesea 1000 1454	Hawilton 50 130	Nertherf 800 1447	Atlanta 18301 (770	Learlie 200 373	Medicon 2000 2198	Heoros 1675 3772	Mcw.York. 51459 23147	Rights 200 1006	Obendage 3530 2503
saroups to Now-Hampahire, which is now represented by one Edphilion and two	. The fullowing table summarises the result	of the election, showing the votes cast by seach State, in the Electoral Collage, and to	when they will go:	_		_			_	_			9 14	Ī	_	_	_	Bouth Caroling			_										Montelled	North Caroline	Tennesse	Texas.	Virginia.		Whale number of water	Necrosary to sloth	FORTY-FIFTH CDNGREER.	TO PROBABLE COMPLEXION - INCREASED	INPUBLICAN GAIN CO MEMBERSHIP.	And probably the same Congress thing for elected, ye-	wised by non latest advices. The names of Royals.	Candidates whom selection is not scanned are	marked with a (1) and tames where nest will probe	a w o Received Int. 12 Autof of Students	S. Milety A. Herbort. Pract Votes.	4. Janua J. Marser (i) Ravana.	1. William M. Persey. Lore and March, 1878.	A. W. W. David. S. Chewat H. Chernett Company	W. Cheng P. Mondon, N. Mich Rose,	g. Mounts M. Cunder. A Augusting W. College,	2 Horse Dale . T. App. A. Herberty	A. January McK-una. 1. Jones W Crears.	James B. Benerd. 4. Articolar M. Siles.	1. Gerrae M. Landers. B. comust S. Uni.	A John F Water B. Acres G. McCode.	LEAD WALE IN About 6 Proof.	L. W. Land Physics 12 John J. Sochan parts of the country, had provided an opening for some enterprising grafters. The stealing had been going on for years, and the money abstracted from the public treasury seems to have amounted to something like eight or ten million dollars. The guilty officials were to be found in almost every branch of the service, and their confederates outside the department included several politicians of national eminence.

The frauds were discovered by some of those eccentric persons who, holding public office in that period, regarded it as their duty to live on their salaries and treat their offices as a public trust. Like the men who exposed Tweed, they knew there was not much use in reporting their discoveries to high officials; and like those men they offered the facts to a newspaper. The parallel goes one step farther; in each case The Times was the second choice. Information as to the Star Route peculations was offered to the Washington correspondent of another New York newspaper, who sent to his office a synopsis of the evidence. It was plain to the editors that the trail led pretty high up in the post-office department and in political life outside, and it seems to have been feared that in the rarefied atmosphere of those lofty altitudes investigating journalists might find the climbing uncomfortable. So the paper first selected by the discoverers declined their offerings with thanks, and they came to The Times.

The work of following up their leads and analyzing the methods of the conspirators was given to Frank D. Root of The Times Washington office, who is still with the paper. He did his work very thoroughly, and by way of a greeting to the new administration The Times in the spring of 1881 published the whole history of the frauds with appropriate comment. In the early days of the exposure, Root's stories sometimes occupied the entire front page of the paper and most of the second; and they had their effect in indictments, resignations, and a clean-up, of the department. The eventual result, of course, was not wholly satisfactory. Four years later, in editorial comment on the end of the last of the numerous prosecutions arising from the disclosures, The Times was compelled to record that the case had closed with "not one cent recovered and not one guilty man punished." But the stealing had been stopped, and one more piece of evidence had been offered that with the development of investigative journalism the way of the transgressor was at least a little harder than in the past.

In another instance in that same year The Times showed that it could crusade when it found occasion. Justice Theodoric R. Westbrook of the state Supreme Court had been lending his valuable support to Jay Gould in the financier's effort to get control of the Manhattan Elevated Railway Company. The jurist had even gone to the length of holding court in Gould's office, and had written to Gould that he would "go to the very verge of judicial discretion" in the aid of Gould's schemes. The Times investigated and exposed these transactions, which were promptly taken up in the Assembly in the hope of impeaching the judge. One of the leaders in the effort to get the Assembly to impeach Westbrook was a young man of good family just beginning his official career, to whom the city editor of The Times furnished the evidence on which he based his first attack on a misbehaving public servant and a malefactor of great wealth. As usual, justice flashed in the pan; the Assembly, for certain devious but not very dark reasons, finally refused to bring charges against Westbrook; but the judge thereafter walked as delicately as Agag when he was dealing with Jay Gould, and Assemblyman Theodore Roosevelt found himself well started on a career as a reformer, which The Times always thereafter regarded with interest even when it could not give it support.

Another enterprise of the paper at about that time was of a less bellicose nature, but equally praiseworthy—the raising of a $250,000 fund for General Grant. First suggested in 1880 by John M. Forbes of Boston, it was taken up by The Times immediately after the election. George Jones took a deep personal interest in the campaign, and succeeded in pushing it through to complete success by the following March. Thereafter he served as one of the trustees of the fund until his death.

Accomplishments such as these, together with the general high standard of the paper's news service and editorial expression, kept The Times prosperous and powerful in the early eighties. New influences were coming into journalism; changes which were perhaps deplorable, but probably inevitable, were bringing papers of a different type into prominence; but The Times maintained its distinction as a conservative paper — a Republican paper, to be sure, but never subservient to the party managers, interested in a number of causes essentially nonpartisan and so drifting steadily away from partisan allegiance. That it would actually break away from the party nobody expected until it actually happened, but the ground was prepared by the whole history of the paper and of the party in the previous years.

By 1884 a good many men were getting ready to break away from the Republican party. Those promises of reform had been too often made and too regularly forgotten to carry much conviction. party's reputation was no longer sufficient to carry a weak candidate; by the beginning of 1884 sensible men were beginning to realize that it would need a very strong candidate and a lot of luck. And when it became apparent that James G. Blaine, carrying all the handicap of the Mulligan letters and the rest of his past, was likely to get the nomination, and that the most hopeful of his competitors was President Arthur, it was evident that the party might have to carry a heavier load than it had borne for a number of years. The first efforts of The Times were devoted to a fight against either of these nominations, and all through the spring of 1884 the paper conducted an editorial campaign designed to remind Republicans who wanted to win that this year the head of the ticket might have to carry the party instead of riding free on its record.

By that time the editor of The Times was Charles R. Miller, who had succeeded John Foord as editor-in-chief in April, 1883, and who has held that position ever since. Mr. Miller was born in Hanover, N. H., in 1849, graduated from Dartmouth, in 1872, and after several years on The Springfield Republican came to The Times in 1876. Though of Democratic origin, he was at that time an independent in politics. His influence must be counted as considerable in determining the course of the paper in the campaign, but most of the other editors and Mr. Jones were in agreement that this year at any rate it would be impossible to support an obviously unfit nominee. An exception should be made of the everfaithful Reid, who continued to believe that the Republican party was the sole repository of eternal truth, and thought that even a hint of departure from its ranks was the unpardonable sin. But nearly everybody else on The Times felt that though the paper ought to support the Republican ticket if it could, there were circumstances in which its duty to the public demanded a different course.

The deciding voice, however, had to be that of Mr. Jones. The editors who had grown tired of apologizing for the party's record, who had felt the gradual turning away of many of the most honorable and intelligent Republicans from the leaders of the party, and who had seen with misgiving the failure of efforts to head off the drift to Blaine — these men did not own the paper. In fact, none of them had any stock in it at all, and the certain financial penalties of secession from the party must be borne by Jones. These considerations were laid frankly before the owner of the paper by its editor, and with equal frankness he declared that he could not and would not support a candidate whom he regarded as deplorably unfit for the Presidential office.

The Times published on May 23 an editorial headed "Neither Blaine nor Arthur." The text of that sermon lay in this sentence:

The list of men to choose from is not a long one. We do not believe that this is a year when "any good Republican will do."

But there was still hope in the office that the Republican convention would select a satisfactory candidate, and on the same page appeared an editorial calling attention to the blunders which the Democrats had committed, as usual, in the House of Representatives.

The next day the campaign was continued in an article headed "Neither Arthur nor Blaine." In this, Mr. Miller spoke aloud an opinion which a good many Republicans had been almost afraid to whisper in private, but which they knew to be true: "The party is not strong enough to elect a President by the votes of what may be called its regular members." The notorious defects of Blaine were briefly mentioned, and President Arthur was dismissed with the remark that he has done better than was expected, and is reported to have been a modest, quiet, inoffensive occupant of the executive office.

But this was no time for modesty and inoffensiveness; the country needed something more than that.

Neither Blaine nor Arthur [the editorial continued] is a possible President. The choice of a candidate must start from that fact. That once clearly recognized, it ought not be difficult to find a man who can poll the full Republican vote, and with it enough of the independent vote to keep the government in the hands of the party which, we are convinced, is the safest and best.

When the suspicion gradually arose that The Times might not swallow Blaine, people began to ask questions. One of these — a query from an indignant subscriber who asked outright "if The Times will support the nominee of the Chicago Republican Convention" — was answered on the editorial page May 29.

If the nominee of the Chicago Republican Convention [said the editorial reply] is a man worthy to be President of the United States, The New York Times will give him a hearty and vigorous support. If he shall be a man unworthy to hold that high office, a man who personally and politically, in office or out, represents principles and practices which The Times abhors and has counseled the party to shun, we shall watch with great interest the efforts of those responsible for such a nomination to elect the candidate, but we shall give them no help.

There it was in plain language: Raymond's paper, Jones's paper, the paper that had led the Republican journalism of the nation for a decade, would not support Blaine. That it would support the Democratic nominee was as yet by no means certain, even to its editors, and in the spring of 1884 nobody looked on the possible departure from the Republican party as anything but a temporary absence without leave; but absence of any kind, for any reason, was certain to displease a great many readers, and it was yet to be seen whether the paper's defection would do more harm to the Republican party or to The Times.

At any rate, the decision was soon made. Blaine was nominated June 6, on the fourth ballot, and on the following morning a Times editorial headed "Facing the Fires of Defeat" announced that the paper would not support him, but would watch the party's adventures in the ensuing canvass with the interest of a friend and physician. Blaine, in the opinion of The Times, represented "the average of Republican principles and purposes, of Republican honor and conscience, as they now are"; and it was suggested that "defeat will be the salvation of the Republican party." The editors of a Republican paper which had just made such a difficult and costly decision might be expected to hope and believe that one sad experience would purge the party, and that thereafter intelligent and patriotic men could return to it without qualms. That The Times never has returned to the party, and that for the next twelve years it leaned toward the Democrats, was due partly to the unexpectedly large amount of original sin remaining in the Republican party even after the purgatorial experience of 1884, and partly to the new spirit that was coming into American politics, and was embodied by Grover Cleveland.

CHAPTER V

The Times in Transition, 1884-1896

THE campaign of 1884 definitely closed an epoch in the history of The Times. It is hardly likely that anybody foresaw how complete would be the break with the party which for twenty-eight years had commanded the loyal support of the paper. The Republicans had no monopoly of corruption and incompetence, and it was quite possible that the Democrats might make a nomination as bad as that of the party in power. But they did not. Cleveland was not very well known in 1884, but his good record as Governor had given the editors of The Times confidence in his principles and his capacity. At that time they were not personally acquainted with him; the long personal friendship between Mr. Miller and the President was a later growth. But what they knew of his public record was satisfactory, and they soon came to the conclusion that he deserved the paper's support. And they had a good deal of company; in the latter part of July a considerable number of the best men in the Republican party decided to support Cleveland, and the Mugwump campaign was on.

So, if The Times had left the party with which it had so long been associated, it found itself almost at once recognized as the principal spokesman for a group which represented much of the best of the old

Republican party and practically none of its undesirable elements. And for years thereafter the paper retained this position, and found its independence not only more comfortable and satisfactory than its former party allegiance, but for a time almost as lucrative. The rejection of Blaine did indeed bring losses, which were considerable but not disastrous. And as an offset to the defections the paper won many new readers who had previously found its intense Republicanism somewhat unpalatable.

The income did indeed drop a long way in that vear. The net profits of the paper were $188,000 in 1883 and only $56,000 in 1884. But much of this decrease was due to the reduction in price from four cents to two, in the hope of meeting the competition of the two-cent World and Sun, which took effect in September, 1883. And within a few years The Times, despite the loss of circulation income which followed the change to two cents, had recovered most of the lost ground and was very nearly as prosperous as it had been in its best years of the past. The decline of its fortunes in the early nineties was due to a complex of reasons, which will be analyzed presently; but it does not seem that in the long run it lost very much by abandoning the Republican party.

What those readers missed who left it in 1884 was, it may be presumed, not so much Republican editorials as Republican news. Though deeply aggrieved by the alteration in the paper's political allegiance, John Reid stuck to the ship, and before the campaign was over the political correspondents were speaking of the Grand Old Party in pretty much the same uncomplimentary language that had been poured out in previous years on the Democrats. Apparently political writers of the period were moved more by loyalty to the paper than by their predilections for any party.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884-1896

The result of the election was a little doubtful in 1884 — not so doubtful as some of the Republican leaders pretended, to be sure, but Cleveland carried New York by only 1100 votes, and without New York he could not have won. On election night his supporters thought his majority was considerably larger, but some of the Republicans believed that Blaine had carried the state, and certain eminent stock speculators kept the wires busy with alleged news to that effect.

The judgment of The Times rested on the reports of its own unequaled election news service. Those reports in 1876 had indicated that the election was in doubt: and while at this distance one may believe that the Republican claims were unjustified, the evidence gathered by The Times correspondents did point to a conclusion borne out by the results. This was what happened in 1884. If three days after the election The Times insisted that there could no longer be any doubt of Cleveland's victory, it was because the reports of correspondents in whom the office had learned to have faith, and of the County Chairmen who wired their figures every night, gave New York to Cleveland by a majority of 1276. This was less than two hundred off the final and official figure; and to have come so close as that in a vote of over a million, in those more primitive days and in such a hotly contested election, was a really remarkable feat of news-gathering.

President Cleveland turned out even better than The Times had hoped. He fought persistently, and in great measure successfully, for the causes in which the paper was most deeply interested reform of the tariff and the civil service, and maintenance of sound ideas of public finance. With him. indeed, a new era began; the war was over, and the folly of partisan divisions based on memories of the war was becoming more apparent. The old names, the old forms, survived; but there were new issues and new ideas, and for the next decade The Times had an important part in forming the public opinion of the new day. In 1888 The Times, still an independent paper, gave Cleveland its support for reëlection without any hesitation; he had earned it. But David B. Hill, the Democratic candidate for governor, had not earned, in The Times's opinion, the support of the paper. Accordingly the paper's influence in the state campaign was thrown to the support of the gubernatorial candidacy of Warner It was The Times's luck to back the loser in each case: Cleveland was beaten, and Miller went down in history as "the intrepid leader who fell outside the breastworks." The Republican party was coming back hungry after a long fast, and outside the breastworks was a poor place to fall. Nothing occurred in Benjamin Harrison's administration to change The Times's opinion that Grover Cleveland was the most competent and trustworthy man in American public life, and in 1892 it supported his presidential candidacy once more with the conviction born of long acquaintance and complete confidence.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884-1896

In Cleveland's second term the paper had fallen on evil days, financially, and its support was perhaps no longer so powerful as it had been; but it was whole-hearted and unhesitating through a period of years when the President most needed friends. Republicans had luckily been turned out in time to escape the blame for the panic of 1893, and were prospering by the misfortunes and division of their opponents. A good deal of the Democratic party had gone out to eat grass like Nebuchadnezzar, and the rest of it was mainly occupied in doing the work of the Republicans in the tariff struggle. President's support was distinguished by quality rather than by quantity. But The Times saw a man fighting against desperate odds to preserve the credit of the nation, to win more and more of the public service away from the spoilsmen, and to keep faith with the people on the tariff issue; and it did what it could to hold up his hands.

What is perhaps even more to its credit, the paper stood by Cleveland in the Venezuelan question, when many who had supported him on domestic issues thought that his rashness was likely to provoke a needless war. The Times maintained throughout that crisis that Cleveland's Venezuelan message to Congress was not a war message but a peace message; that the resources of routine diplomacy had already been exhausted without result, and that decisive and arresting action was needed to prevent the dispute from drifting to a point where there would have been nothing to do but give up the Monroe Doctrine or fight. The event showed that this view was correct. When the British government realized that America took the Monroe Doctrine seriously neither the Ministry nor the people was willing to make an issue in support of a petty intrigue of colonial policy, and Cleveland not only won his point but succeeded in making both America and England realize that they were worth a good deal more to each other than they had suspected. This happy consequence could not be foreseen at the time by most Americans, and some of the most bitter opponents of the President were men who had hitherto given him their support. The position of The Times was due not only to well-grounded confidence in Cleveland's insight, but to a correct interpretation of the issues; it is easy to praise it now. but it took both wisdom and courage to adopt it then.

In 1896 the paper was in something of a quandary as to the Presidential campaign. For the ideas and the principles of William Jennings Bryan it had no use; it had seen in past decades a good many Messiahs from the tall grass who promised to make two dollars grow where one had grown before. But it saw no particular reason for confidence in the party of Mark Hanna. On the tariff question the leaders of the Republican party stood for everything The Times abhorred, and while eventually the party and its candidate took the right position on the overshadowing issue of the currency, they were a long time in making up their minds. So The Times gave its support to the Gold Democratic ticket of Palmer and Buckner. In a sense, of course, its efforts were wasted; everybody knew that Palmer and Buckner could do nothing but make a gesture of protest. But a protest was badly needed in that year.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884-1896

At the end of Cleveland's second administration, on March 2, 1897, The Times published a six-column editorial signed with the initials of Charles R. Miller—so far as can be discovered, the only signed editorial that has ever appeared in the paper except in discussion of the paper's own affairs—reviewing the President's record. Today, when hardly anybody denies Cleveland's claim to greatness, this contemporary estimate can be studied with some profit. In the history of The Times there is nothing more creditable than the steadfast and loyal support which the paper gave to Abraham Lincoln and Grover Cleveland in dark days when it could not be foreseen that the faith of its editors would be approved by the judgment of posterity.

American journalism was changing fast in the eighties. The first influence in bringing in new ideas, that were destined to work more powerfully than their originators realized, was that of Charles A. Dana; the most powerful influence was that of Joseph Pulitzer. Between them, they eventually succeeded in inflicting mortal injuries on the old type of political newspaper that had flourished in the age of the slavery issue, the Civil War and reconstruction. Of the old-timers The Times survived longest — with the possible exception of The Tribune, which passed a good many years in a state of coma with only occasional signs of persisting vitality.

The modern type of newspaper in which the news side is predominant, though not to the exclusion of a vigorous editorial page, has taken form during the control of The Times by the present management, and it may not unfairly be said that that management has had a considerable influence in establishing the character of such papers; but in the late eighties and early nineties American journalism was headed in a different direction, and The Times stood out as almost the last representative of the old school. That it retained its influence in a changing world so long as it did, and indeed that it survived its extraneous misfortunes and lived to rise again, is sufficient evidence of the vitality of its old organization even when compelled to meet conditions for which it was not wholly prepared.

Though "personal journalism" in the old sense had passed, the editorial page was still for perhaps the majority of Times readers the most important part of the paper; but the news service was still good. As an instance may be cited an episode which was remembered in The Times office because of the fact that it produced the most expensive cable message which the paper has ever received. In 1884 there was under negotiation a commercial treaty with Spain, which would have an important effect on American trade with Cuba and Porto Rico. John W. Foster, the American Minister in Madrid, was conducting negotiations with the Spanish Foreign Ministry; but the provisions of the expected treaty were carefully kept a secret. Since they were of great importance to all exporters and merchants doing business with the Spanish West Indies,

		he Wel	The New-York Times	e Aime	्रम् इं
VOL XXXNO. 9258.		NEW.	NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1881	1881,		PRICE FOUR CENTS.
THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS	on Ansistant Attornoy-General for the depart- ment has been bendered, but one yes accompled by the Postmander-General, will, it stated,		and can get. Contract was closed at $11,000 for strings. "Though Dorsey telegraphed Wilcom that he		be tatal to Mr. Dillon. Mr. Gledrons sup- ported Mr. Forster's rethant, and said the Gov- ernment would be propared to make a direct	DINING WITH MERCHANTS
SENATORS HOPEFUL OF AVOIDING PART.	8 IS	SHOWING UP THE STAR ROUTE SWINDLES IN OREGON.	was interested outs in the Bridge Creek and Looking-sham route to Oregon, the sintement is providely to be understood only as a cookee to Wilcox that these were the only routes that	THE MARCH OF PUENTS IN THE BUSSIAN EMPIRE MONDICARCE AND EXTERN OF THE WHITE	Welcoment, but objected in bung led into a varue discussion on a motion for adjournment. After a general discussion, in which Mr. Joseph Cower, Radion Reformer, joined the	SPERCHES OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE GUESTE
		ING AN GORRY—THE DIRECTIONS OFFER TON OFFER TON OFFER THE PETITIONS AND MAKING	be (Wilcox) was to work upon, for the greatest swindle of all is to the route from Dalbe to Baker City, by way of Cafoo City, which	MOMENT THE JEWS-THE CRASS MODI-	irlib members in condensing the Govern- ment, the motion for adjournment was agreed to.	PECHETALNY WINDOM; ON DECENT STOCKED WITH BOMPS AT THEMES AND A MALE PERSONAL OFFICE AND A MALE PERSON
	AND RECEIPMEND OF BATTLE STOOMS AND AND PARTIES AND AND PARTIES. TAKEN	BIDS-DORSEX POLLS IDENTIFIED WITH THE BUSINESS.	brother in the state of the sea of the from from Paules to Baker City, and from Pauleton to Legentary, or parallel	ING POR VEANITYRES TO THE WORKING CLAMES.	arr. vonn arran, wa fell speech in the Bonse of Commons last night, said their if a great flesh smembled as Cork or Guleny, offered free names to the whole norminion of Con-	FALL FAMILY AND OTHER STRONGS papers met agnin bhis afternoom about 1 has Velock, mod after a sesion of four bound, ad- 1 has Instructed without deciding the constiton that is n've-	late Gen. Emory Upiton, who died in Presidia, Cal. last March from a pistol-abot wound infilted by Named was standard to market in the German	SAN FRANCISCO, May 10.—A dappend from Forland, Oragon, says: "The telegrams from Degree, Col., which have been poblished,	to this one, which carried and atill carries all the mails between the two points. This roots from Dalles in Baker City.	Messenger says: "Disturbances at Kied began at boon on the 8th inst. Beraral Jews ware	haught, (noe ireland,) it was probable that all, certainly balf, would find their way to the United States.	The can bundred and thirteenth anniversary of the Champer of Commerce of the City of New-York was calched an effect for the medianous possing so much trouble. There seems to have Com- form a better feeling among the Senators than, day,	aty furnesses offer, in this riflage, rester- The will was drawn by then. Opton on Joly	giving information that legal proceedings had been commenced against ex-Schator Dorsey.	the nonipolation of the ring in focusion the nervice in a kix times a week, which was what wholly connectants and the new was raised from	injured and same booths and thops were pli- laged. The military restored order and ar-	atteraction among the frish in London at Car- diant barming's order forbidding any Cathollo	direct of the charles of Definesion, Twenty- statisctual and Pilasavara. The layer hanges but on the sound was armibled at the meeting of yearstoay, and a, the speechas to-day were free from those surf. In	the was as we wante as parent the town previous to thartles at tone arend the world. If it a	or Avrances, now novetary or use rendered Republicus Committee, for services rendered to obtain an formance of medicardon and goal	sky23 in 37,530. J. M. Frek also has another expedited routs, viz., from Caffor City to	named on Monday, but were suppressed by the troops, when a woman was billed and several	Land League Bone public expression re- garding the matter is probable."	or haftitus to common. The walls were draped with American face, and the tables were at all for the ta instruction for immersions and the Robert state and scarcingful and scarcingful. The delate was participated and	also decument. His fare E. Opton, the Gen.	additional pay therefor on the star routes in Oregon, attracted much attention here, the	country without population, and forepuble of sentencing without population, and forepuble of sentencing was aspectived	other persons were injured. The Journal de St. Pelerabirny states thet	Portument's to-day, has been ordered immedi- ately to notiver these companies of maxing to	hatten of flower, bounted, and please regre- sorting the industries of the nation. The main- table reserved for the
in by nearly all the Senators present, but fath there were on long specches, the desire are sear-	re and mother, who yet lies here, and other obers of the femily, which constituted of ingivers	more, so from the fact that it was stated the stated that the papers on which the	brother of S. W. Dorsey, has the contract on the routs from Bulles to Lakeriew, in Souts-	the Russian troops encoting the family of the Ameer, Abdurrahmen Khen, will only pro-	DONAR, May 10 - The Gasette declares that the metropolism district of Dollin, Bellast,	men distinguished meet, was spread on the was adde of the hall receing north and worth. Over dently being to avoid saying anything calcu- lated to largie a controversy.	from, are all remembered. The value of the fair malanche as $20,000, the greater portion which is invested in a majorimetation conserts.	mit had been inefficied at Denver had been received there from a well-known attorney	orn Creeken, which they are superior form $3.00 to $20.00 if is probable, berefore that they would be they are the they will be they are the are they are the are they are the are they are they are they are they are they are they	flows. The plane relative to possents' racts, the	and the barreiss of Upper had Middle Dan- gaption have been proclaimed under the pro- visions of the Arms act.	this hing the great seal of the Chamber of Com- merce, and upon it rested bashets of Sovers and
Mr. Congier made one of those humorous as its meethes for which he was so wall known in Their Their	attle Creat, Mich. The became from the copy. to of Own. Upcon's "United States Infantry for and "Twetter for Mon-united States Infantry.	will-known politician bere. The Oregonian	part of the boatenes of the Dorsey ring in Oregon." The Oregonian of to-normwell may of the	to be issued in a few days. Our Million and M. d'Abres have been in principal promoters.	At the Land Laures meeting bers to-day, the meeting was armed all of which was from American the meeting which was from American	extensive proces, process, pro
he House of Representative, and succeeded beq. beq. beq. beq. beq. beq. beq. beq.	position to bis states flars, provided the income not accord $1,000. The residue of the income aftern constitution after paying enveral small	before at the transaction, and the history of it	developments in the star route frauds: "Ex-benater Densy will hardly set the Post maniar-General new to write a letter experition	Experience of its years has shown that the payments for land received at the time of the amendingston of the	vers decided that a convention should be being	The baloney in which the band was entained was draped with the American flag, and in
Cocking, whose parteristin, ability, and great with	ors to be styling to the successful of said of orbits as the styling to the successful of the successful of the successful or the successful of the successful or the successf	day roots busines. The claimans to the soit is Frank R. Wilson, who, though formerly	blur, George A. Streeke, who has been nominished for the Postanakership of Portland, was like Special Agent of the Post Office Depart	sorts brought much more brought to the landed proprietors than to the personne. In many cases these payments among to more than the	Mr. Parcell has written to Archbeloop. Croks that he would have besiteted	mentation of the B property of everyments rose from the reality, completely hiding the must- class from fairly, as such carse a better-heis
Party he complimental in high terms. He torn	so mere of the meone is seeded for the above one, they are empowered to apply the care for the apply the care for the security of security the security of security the security of security the security of security s	connected with politics in Arkansas, has not appeared promibently in politics here. He	ment the trying a management of the trying on many to knyely expedited, and the trying on many	whole income esouble of teing derived from the land. The ultrae will derive that proprie-	the Land bill, but to was abundantly clear that is would not enderger	bouquet was parity estwined in the foaks of the naptic, and these small bunches of favores com-
but that Smaker could do much more for him- pal, and this was his greek opportunity. He size	on or persons residing in Consess County, T., as may be destroit of a colle- s educative end shall have pushed a saidsho-	went to Arkansas from Dinnis in 1860, and became acquainted with S. W. Dorsey there.	He knew all about these transactions, as he had his afternion safety to the ratio from Helpe, to these ratio from Helpe, to Balley City, sin Caffor City.	ogreement for the complete transfer of owner-	able declaration by the Government, be were bound to urge the meintenance	black with the hashest which were distributed as over the tables, ander the air frequent with perhould, upon this occasion, display some of tory has a magnanising for which he was noted one and New-York and elementers, and walking all gener	it is supplied that not more than $600 on in chall be so applied, upon the farber condi-	He man the Berrefary of the State Republican Committee of Arientess, though be caver held	which routs was expedited from $4.55 to $42.00 its weed to a portuged laquity to learn white was the steam of the reports to the department on	to the meaning, the annual perments will be teduced forthwith to a rate which the	of the attitude of antennion and take our bast the fact our bast the fast claims of his party ware not compromised by the too easy acceptance of an	from the main table, were lettered A. B. C. In and B, and each mecommodated 45 greats. The healing of pride and disappointment, all desire by it for violeticion and recongs, some forward. All mon the note of the Freedont and extend	Controversion of the control of the	other effect, and here a promisers part in the election of homey to the Benete. Descript to	their region and what recommended in the made. Mit he half the confractors to work up there region and set their southeast her water from	possents are able in pay, and assistants will: Es afforded them to redeem their boldings. The Covernment will assume the payment of	imperfect, and, in some cases, parhays, mis- chievous measure.	main table was presided over, in the absence of Fresident & B. Rabook, by James M. Brown, Vice-President of the Assentia longiveness to that high officer for nominaring 50.0 longiveness to that high officer for nominaring 50.0 longiveness (Contribute about foreign 1980)	Oper year. a steel matter warn by Gan. Opton to the Not- at Manahburn's Ford, Bull. Run. Galant's Mill.	to Oraçon to 1877. When Dorsey began to onemia in star routes in Oraçon be remem-	Just now, alone he expects to he Postmuter of Perigad, them are portired incultion. We wan- terr the combion, and that without special hazard.	V.OU. UU rouse sommaly to indemnity the proprietors for the reduced payments received from the passants, which will be taken from	OUBRENT POREIGN TOPICS	were the Hot. William Window, Secretary, of the Treasury; the Hot. Lari P. Marton.
be Predent the country would forgive Mr. Cha.	ies City Cross Roads Crampton's Gen. Antio- Frederickborn, Chancelleswills, Getryburg, patennock Station. Migs Jun. Wilderset.	bered that Wilom had come to this State, and, as he relations with him had been	that, as a post official, he threw no obstacles in the way of the "mapped in the "cobractor."	the accommissed profits of the State Benk, now amounting to about 100,000,000 rubbs. Prof. Descretoriff wells to the Part Mail	CAPETOWE, May 10The Cape Time has a tajegram stating that the Barate have re-	the Ear. Dr. W. F. Waither, the Mon. Henrik Shelord, Chameer M. Depew, W. E. Dra.
Robertson, se made happy, ser. Configer sports specific to the formation of the formation policy terms and the formations policy terms are policy for the Conking as well as the formation of the	Speicetweele therebouse, Cold Harbor, and Pe- tarioning is bereathed to his heether James & Up- ton, of Bastas Creak, Mch., to be by him gives to	of the most fattings that, he fixed upon Wil-	saft was begun at Denver for the reason that	Gasette from Genera: "The significants of the recent and Je whe ridge in Busine is much ondertained. It extends themes the Thesis.	jected the award of Sir Barenies Robinson. Mewcastle, Notal, May 10.—The Royal	per. B. D. 12e Hot. Rainanial Rainman, Oct. S. L. Woodierit, Judge A. B. Lewreton, and Parin God- win. On the left were Postmassac-General Themas
sibre Senators thought it was still probable of U. Other Benators thought it was still probable of U. Sandars a contest over Robertson's nomination offset	ston who may be gradent to at steep Point and rette Army. His sworth, commission, and at papers see because had in his father one.	Spures the mail roubed to which 50 had 30- come interested. Dorsoy first takersphod in	ney who emt the claim from Portland to Den- ear to be said is J. H. Wandward, formerly	which is full of Jown, between whom and the peauntry there has been an undying hebred for centuries. The broadle does not originate	all points left to absymbe as the treaty of these with the Boars has formally meany of	L. Jumma, Judges Road Davis, the Mon. R. R. Chile bredges, the Ber. Dr. W. M. Taylor, Frof. J. J. water, the Ber. Dr. W. M. Taylor, Frof. J. J.
	t proper.	bers. Having ascertaints that he was, he wrote him, stating what hereins he wanted	The original documents printed above are bern in curtody of the agent of the Associated	in religious animotive. It is purely social. It is the beginning at a social way, long foreseen by those familiar with the condition of the	session. It has been decided to enclude repre- entatives of the press from the sittings of the	thall fewell, Jodge Enech L. Freedow, and Gas- troller Allan Campbell. The following avenuous,
	RUNGRED INDIAN OUTHAGE	parformed, and directed Mm to go to Eugens City, giving him instructions at the same time	UBELESS BERVICE STOPPED.	Usraine, It may assume frightful propor- tions, Of the 2,000,000 June in Bresie, an	Countierion, Louron, May 10.—Adalina Patti bas recov-	the granteness who contribed the first other tables: Jones B Stobbles, Daniel Drake Stelly, Josephys, Schools, Martinell, B. Sammer, Jones S.
stead immediately to dispose of the A.M. Robertson case, on the Ropathican Pearty in A.S. School of the A.M. States was balked over.	i e	how to get up politions, have them signed, and make sub-contracts for carrying the male.	AN CHULK DISCONTINUISO BIGHT STRANG BOAT ROUTER IN THE SOUTH	the towns and office of the South and West. In many towns they form a majority of the	ered from her recent illness, and has arrived in London for the opers season.	Wheeler, Daniel E. Applican Gen. Amen G. He-and all agreed that no effort should be spared by the no secure harmony of action. We one at the	DEFYER, Col., 449 UA tengram received by the Governor states that no May's to Le Plate Comic o. retch was attached, 30 bind of eatile	The petitions were to be forwarded to West- ington to be used in getting service and the	Watmacron, May 10.—Orders were is-	population. Introductions perceitary won- tions as univers, spirit dealers, brakers and they have under themselves mesters after of	The broach lost by Baronass Burdath-Contin at the Quean's "deswing-room" on Tumday	Joseph B. Brown, M. W. Ocoper, Postmanter Essays G. Pearson, Daniel C. Robbins, Chaton H. Fish, emplose to reply to the spectrumon yearstany of the continuous section that we continuous section that are continuous said mothing except to reply $2 1200.	was een oft, and three mandition named Thur-	ony increased for the service required. Wil-	discontinuing steam-best mail service forth- with on the following routes in the South and	the indebted landfords and of the unfortheast, parants. It is the deep-rooted detectation of the parants for the money-lander which is	The papers warmly praise the tone and mai-	Milet J. Chaperd, Entry C. Koldman, John Augler Biornes, Ass W. Yunner, Rouse Porter, Thomas Thomas J. James J. J. J. J. J. J. J. J.
mestions propounded by Mr. Scharman End who she are two others. No proposition was someth forward to-day and and formal wars	wase the attaching pany. Some think ther Indians and others white desperadou. The	Before starting for Engine Lief to receive the following telegram:	South-west: Memphis, Tann., to Without, Ark., 140 miles; cost of service, $19,138 per	breaking out to the Ulrulus." The Roselan imperal yachs Livedia has laft	Composs yesterday on moving a memorial to Lerd Besconfield.	Jusich M. Fales, David M. Bleass, Bratter Brooks, 62as W. Burt, Gen. Edwin A. Morritt, conclusion was reacted as to any low script low state before that should be had in the Senata (100: The low Senata state and maintainfunging that on a	A sept surgition that controlled produced morning too; The Covernor's fall-grain was dated Duran- and, and said this follows committed the morners.	F. R. Wester: A strain written to Bagus City.	miles, vert of service, $20,000, Jacksonport,	Lownon, Mry 11.—A correspondent at Paris telegraphs a letter from a well-informed con-	The party tratalled is power by the proofs- mation of Prince Alexander of Bulgaria is Russian and Conservation. The charlesed	J. Reinon Trapez, Charles L. Minny, Georges Jones, Prancis B. Tjurber, A.S. Iniliana, Preferrior during the next two or three days each been and i for shall, to such a manner as to him next seem. Upon	he rench was the property of John Thursan.	"Money baing received for expenses, Willow	vice, to be seen in Arts, to mine; the vice vice vice vice vice vice vice vic	respondent in finals, who says is would be value to alternoon as Ellerbeitgrad. The town looks as if it	Ministers are the landers of the Radioal Tonny Bolgarian Party.	L. Tukorit, John T. Agewy, Franklin Ecook, Custar Schwar, Luther Kountha, Adrian Ledin, Geo. B. H.
Leaf, do when he and to firstly about the result of the me manch destruct. While on definite plan of course agreed upon, it is said that Sane truck	simpled to parent to fare. Pope and also sent a courier to Darence to accorda the truth, and, if truth, what band of indiana and how many of them	went in Eugene City, where he received Dor- sey's other letters, with memoranda directing	the following steam-boat routes will be distantianed on Ang. 1: Elizabeth City to Pairfuld,	had been devastated by a hurricane. Whole streets are literally raned. All the Jows' houses and above have been	cial press rates the runous about Mr. Otel- stoons partial or compiler returnent. The	The thylad greats begin to assemble in the pariot ed 6:10, and a half-forward passed in scotta tors, individually, are expected to consult wars, with each other road with the President, with liens, and the construction of	ensaged in the margest and about the course of the footbarn Agency with the body of the future, its reply one pos-	him how in proceed. The route Dorsey Him whiled to operate on was one from Buggare	ennus, and from Elizabeth City to Williams.	szeked. Bouds nave besn stolen and destroyed. People hitherto wall off are	Throws are probably occasioned by the recent Throws. For the Chalmanahlo of the Congressional	converse before the marek to the dishup-room be- gra. Alf o'clock the graillemen attered the ban-will be settefactory to the President and no soul	it to thought the murden mer be	City, across the Carcade Bombana, to measure to the the way of	Point Clear to Oasque, Ala, 47 miles; cost of	and are robusting on charity, Many were	Union of England and Weber, which has need	other Ball, James M. Brown, the Wos-Treatdent, the the precedent, with Secretary Whiten on his

1 - 11 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	· 美元春春日日日日日
	reculating process Resultations Resultatio
A COLLEGE OF THE PROPERTY OF T	self-acting, self, acting, self, acting, self, acting, and acting, act was a nort of gradient in hap President in welch bester of ally, we of ally, was given shot desired to happ desired to
The state of the s	PRIZE. 10.—Equiporation of Marsa- in will speak set and will speak set and will speak. The off sittle. The off sittle. In our sittle of the off sittle.
Martin Ma	OFFERS MEM The Company of the Compa objection of the property of t	Bray and Bra
the property of the property o	the Govern- of the Govern- for which Mr. ar, Chief Sto- to make such Mr. Dilon. Mr. Dilon. Mr. Dilon. declared that
The street of th	7 10.—Jo the H r. Farnell sake a precise acts said, Mr. Forst to know of them moved them moved them moved them moved them moved them moved
WANTE MESS AND	Lowron, May mone to tight M ment to sake th Dillon was arre rebary for feel as samption as samption as samption as samption of the mant of the in the state of th	Expendence of Expendence of Marketon of Ma
week of the control o	a House, Mr. al, nowher for like to know it d Morbache's as d Morbache's as the supplied that the bould not be mid be gave as a proceedings of put and card adapted that it which is supported by the property of the prop	the Braddauge be the bear of the bar of the Advanced Libra on said as would up of said as would as the Braddauge of the Braddauge of the Braddauge of the Advanced to the district by the motion was related to the Braddauge of th
The state of the s	CONTRACTOR NO. 1 WILCOX. In an reburned; in the contractor of the and all all and and all all all and all all all all all all all all all al	for the first of t
The state of the s	we word often are the word of the word of the colling of the colli
TALLER OF THE PROPERTY OF THE	missioners to unit to the committee. The committee of the committee of the committee of the the the the committee of the co
A control of the cont	Mayor and Com- ticket was not to complicated. In such that the com- ticket of the com- t
The state of the s	day. The "regular for day. The "regular Board. Brayes and Board. Brayes the old boar Beauth Edoughest Layon as the Loop Brayes Layon as the Loop Brayes are supported Court. The special Dobblus, Citaries Brayes Dobblus, Citaries Brayes
The state of the s	elizard de la constanta de la decrease that it is a possible of an in- the standard of the s	m En. (venue Third Assistant of Third Assistant of Third Assistant Assista
with the figures when the standing of the political country and the standing of the standing o	went here added, size 31, forth extend to be seen by a position of Third America; Forth extends the seen of Third America; Forth extends the seen of t
A THE STATE OF THE	crange crange for the for the vithdr

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884–1896

all the papers had been trying hard to find out the contents of the treaty in Washington and Madrid; but both governments were extremely reticent. At last it became known that the treaty had been completed, and that Minister Foster was bringing it home for presentation to the Senate.

Early in December, 1884, The Times received information that certain persons in Madrid were able, and would be willing, to communicate the text of the treaty, which they seem to have obtained through financial connections, to an American newspaper. At once The Times cabled a credit of $8000 to these men to cover cable tolls, necessary expenses, and whatever personal remuneration might be found suitable. The full text of the treaty was cabled back to The Times, at a cable rate of 66 cents a word, translated in the office, and published on December 8. It occupied five columns of the front page; and the rest of the page was taken up with as many expressions of opinion from business men as could be obtained on Sunday.

John W. Foster, on that morning, woke up in the downtown hotel to which he had been driven from the pier the night before, and upon opening his copy of The Times dived hastily under the bed and looked in his bag. To his certain knowledge the only copy of that treaty in the United States had been brought in by him the night before, and he could explain the publication in The Times only on the theory that somebody had gone through his baggage in the night. But his copy of the treaty was still there; and it was duly taken to Washington and laid before the Senate. By that time, however, men who had studied the treaty had come to the conclusion that it did not give sufficient protection to American commercial interests; and its rejection by the Senate may be taken as the result principally of the prompt and full publication in The Times.

Another foreign news story on which The Times beat the town was the revolution in Brazil which overthrew the Emperor, Dom Pedro II. A feature of The Times which its readers could count on every Sunday was Harold Frederic's cable letter from London. In those simpler days only exceptional events in Europe were reported at any length as soon as they happened; the daily cables carried only a sort of skeleton of the news, and every New York paper depended on the weekly cable letters from London and Paris for general interpretative discussion of foreign affairs. In this field, of great importance in those days, Harold Frederic was in the eighties and nineties without superior, and his correspondence from London was one of the great features of The Times.

Toward the very end of Mr. Jones's life — in the early summer of 1891 — The Times undertook another crusade, this time against certain abuses in the New York Life Insurance Company. W. C. Van Antwerp, then a member of The Times's Wall Street staff and later president of the Stock Exchange, followed up a tip which had come to the paper with such amazing exposures that before long the officers of the company had filed personal libel suits against Jones and Miller for millions of dollars. These suits, naturally, had no consequence except to make The Times more diligent in proving its case; and the affair ended in the board of directors of the company coming in a body to the office of the editor of The Times, and asking him to tell them how to clean house. As a result of this visit John A. Mc-Call was elected president of the company and the necessary reforms were carried out.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884–1896

The building which in 1857 had seemed preposterously expensive and unnecessarily large for a newspaper office was by this time too small. Construction of the second building erected by The Times, and the fourth home of the paper - which, like the first, was in its day the finest newspaper structure in the country - was begun in 1888 from designs by George B. Post, and involved an engineering feat which aroused much astonishment at the time. was found impossible to move out temporarily while the old building was razed and a new one erected on the same spot, and it became necessary to tear down the old building and put up the new one at the same time, while the work of getting out the paper continued in the midst of the wreckers and rebuilders. Thus as the old building disappeared the new one gradually took shape in its place, and by April, 1889, the work of reconstruction was completed.

Mr. Jones was fond of saying in his later years that this building would be his monument. He was mistaken in that; it was soon surpassed in size and splendor by new skyscrapers, and before long it passed out of the control of The Times, though it continued to house the paper for a decade after it had ceased to be in fact the Times Building. He may have thought that the paper itself would be another monument, but in that, too, he was mistaken; The Times fell into misfortune and had to be rebuilt by other men. His true monument is a house not made with hands; it is to be found in a better informed public opinion, a higher standard of public morality; in a city and a nation where workers for good government are no longer hopeless or afraid.

He died on August 12, 1891, at the age of eighty, having spent the last half of his life in The Times office. In the editorial appraisal of his work which appeared in the paper after his death it was said that his wish was that the newspaper should pay more attention to the worthy than to the unworthy side of human nature, that it should commend itself to right-thinking persons of some seriousness of mind and judgment rather than strive to satisfy the desire to know what the sinful and frivolous are about.

Further in that editorial it was stated that "no writer of The Times was ever required or asked to urge upon the public views which he did not accept himself." This ought to be true on every newspaper, and it is true on a good many — on more today than thirty years ago.

To the best of the knowledge and belief of the oldest members of the staff, it has always been true on The Times.

It is often supposed that the decline in the financial prosperity of The Times which set in in the early nineties had its origin years earlier, in the loss of Republican readers in 1884 and the reluctance of

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884–1896

Jones to adopt the new methods of a new age. As already suggested, there does not seem much ground for this belief. The ground lost in 1884 had been pretty nearly recovered within three or four years. What really started The Times downhill was the heavy expense of the new building. The annual profit dropped from well over $100,000 in the middle eighties to only $15,000 in 1890.

It was true that the business system of The Times was out of date. It had done well enough in the sixties and seventies, when making a newspaper was a much simpler and less expensive matter; but times had changed. Expenses — necessary expenses were rising every year. Competition was keener. abler, and more vigorous than ever before; and The Times was at a disadvantage with some of its competitors whose methods of advertising themselves, and of gathering and presenting the news, were not handicapped by any ethical scruples. A business organization of the modern type the paper had never had — and had never needed so long as George Iones was alive. There was no sound system of cost accounting; nobody knew just what the paper was getting out of the money it spent. But if the machine was antiquated and rusty, Jones knew every peculiarity of its workings, and so long as he lived to run it he could get results. When he died and a new man took the wheel, the defects of the mechanism became painfully apparent.

The great majority of The Times stock was owned by Mr. Jones at his death, and left by him to his children, with the injunction, embodied in his will, that the paper should never be sold. Its active direction was assumed by his son Gilbert, and his son-in-law, Henry L. Dyer. Gilbert E. Jones had been trained in The Times office for twenty years, but there are some things about newspaper management that cannot be learned, but must come by the gift of God. In one respect, indeed, Gilbert Jones was an expert. He knew a great deal about newspaper mechanics; but neither he nor Dyer could operate an outworn business mechanism and recover the money that had been sunk in the new building.

Also, The Times under George Jones had paid so well that his children were left with a good deal of property outside their stock in the paper. Naturally, when The Times began to lose they were somewhat reluctant to throw into it the money which would enable them to live on in independence and comfort aside from any consideration of its fortunes. It is hardly surprising that when it became apparent that the new management could not make the paper pay, the heirs began to think of disregarding the stipulation that they should hold on to the paper whether it proved to be a source of profit or a drain upon the fortunes of the family.

The reduction of the price to two cents, in 1883, had not brought the expected increase in circulation and had materially reduced the income. The two-cent Times was soon forced to compete with one-cent papers; and the stroke of genius which saved The Times in 1898 by reducing the price to one cent, and discovering a new army of readers in a field where it had been supposed there was no appetite for anything but the variegated and somewhat too highly flavored menu offered by some of the other papers, was beyond the vision of the heirs of George Jones. The best they could do was to raise the price, and it was set at three cents in December, 1891. The result was a further loss in circulation, and before Jones had been dead a year his children were preparing to get rid of a property which had been a gold mine in his hands, but which they found only a burden.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884-1896

It came to the knowledge of the editors of The Times late in 1892 that the paper was likely to be sold, and sold to a gentleman who, whatever his good qualities, could hardly be regarded as an entirely desirable chief by the men who had served Raymond and Jones. There were men on The Times who understood and valued its great traditions, who had given the best part of their lives as a contribution to its work, and who were unwilling to let that work come to nothing; and it was as a desperate resort that they undertook to buy the paper themselves, with the aid of their friends.

On April 13, 1893, The Times was sold to the New York Times Publishing Company, of which the president was Charles R. Miller, the editor of the paper. Mr. Miller and his associates, Edward Cary and George F. Spinney, had been the organizers of the new company. Some of the men associated with them in the ownership had come in because of personal friendship, others because they appreciated the continuing need for such a paper as The Times.

The price paid to the Jones estate was $1,000,000, and it bought virtually nothing but the name and good will of the paper. The real estate was transferred to another company controlled by Mr. Jones's heirs, and his newspaper continued as a tenant in the building erected with its profits and its credit. In order to recoup themselves for the losses sustained in the past two years, Jones and Dyer had also retained the outstanding accounts receivable. The presses were old and dilapidated; the linotype machines were only leased. A million dollars was a good deal of money to pay for the privilege of continuing the business at the old stand, but the men who paid it were those who knew, loved, and appreciated the merits of the paper. The heirs of Mr. Jones were naturally more interested in getting a price which would set them back in the position they had occupied before they had essayed to publish The Times themselves, while its editors were chiefly concerned to prevent it from being "sold down the river." This difference in purpose also accounts for the fact that the new owners were willing, when they found it necessary, to pay cash. As a matter of fact, one man who had promised and expected to invest $50,000 in the enterprise found at the last moment that he could not get the money, so Jones and Dyer, appreciating the lovalty of the men who wanted to continue George Iones's paper and who could not possibly scrape together more than $950,000, decided to accept that sum.

Though the editors of The Times held only a small minority of the stock in the new company, it was understood that they were to undertake the editorial and business management of the paper. Unfortunately, it could not be managed without money. All the money still due The Times was to be paid to the Jones estate; and the editors had put into the purchase price every cent they had or could raise among their friends. They had no outside properties such as would have enabled Jones and Dyer to carry the paper, for a time, at a loss. And then came the panic of 1893.

THE TIMES IN TRANSITION, 1884–1896

Not only did that panic make it all but impossible to find money to carry on the paper, but it led to a great and ruinous decrease in advertising - especially financial advertising, in which The Times had always been preëminent. The new company never had a chance to get started; the only surprising feature of its history is that it managed to hold on for three years. Eventually it managed to sell $250,000 of debenture notes, and the money thus received carried the paper along; but it was losing more heavily every day. As it lost money it became less able to incur expenditures for the gathering and presentation of news; and becoming thus a less valuable newspaper it lost still more money. The editorial page was as good as ever, and its valiant support of President Cleveland is one of the brightest spots in the history of The Times; but it is the only bright spot between 1893 and 1896.

For the restoration of the paper to its former state various schemes were devised by the men who had invested in the new company, but none of them gave much ground for confidence, and it began to seem that the great institution built up by Raymond and Jones might fall into unworthy hands, or lose its individuality by consolidation with another paper. Hope that The Times could be restored while retaining its character had almost vanished, when there appeared in New York a small-town newspaperman from Tennessee, who became interested in the problem and presently set himself to find a solution. This was Adolph S. Ochs, of Chattanooga.

CHAPTER 1

Restoration of The Times, 1896-1900

THE history of The New York Times since 1896 should properly be written with a somewhat different emphasis and from another viewpoint than the story of the paper under Raymond and Jones. In their day, a newspaper was first of all a vehicle of political opinion; and, as has been noted, The Times retained that character longer than most of its contemporaries. The art of gathering and presenting news was primitive in Raymond's day, and indeed in Jones's day; and the ideal of impartial and disinterested news was less generally respected. So the history of The Times before 1896 must in large part be the history of a political newspaper, and its interaction with the changing feelings of the period.

In the story of The Times as it is today, a paper which was born again in 1896, discussion of political views takes a secondary position. For most newspaper readers of the present the news department is of more importance than anything else, and in the modern history of the art of getting and presenting news The Times has a prominent part. Another department of the paper, subordinate but essential, also claims a share of interest. In the time of Raymond and Jones the volume of business even of the most successful paper was small, by modern standards, and its organization had none of the intricacy of development essential for the paper of today. Nor were the ethical standards of the midnineteenth century as exacting as those of today. The modern newspaper has to find revenue, free from subvention of any kind and particularly in the shape of political patronage, to provide for the enormous expenditures for news. The history of the development of the business affairs of The Times in the past twenty-five years offers a good deal of instruction and interest; it is the story of the rise of a paper exemplifying certain principles from destitution to a degree of prosperity almost without parallel, and one which seemed to a good many newspapermen beyond the reach of a paper conducted on those principles.

Moreover, the editorial character of The Times has always been pretty much the same, in prosperity and in adversity. In 1851, in 1871, in 1884 and in 1921 it was a sober, conservative, dignified paper, always American, with its special position in the esteem of readers who valued sobriety of discussion and intelligent and balanced judgment. The principal interest in the history of the modern Times lies in the process by which this paper, which in its best days of old had seldom had more than 35,000 subscribers, came to appeal to more than ten times that number. Its rise surprised even its conductors; the best they hoped, twenty-five years ago, was that a paper conducted on the principles which they held might attain as large a circulation as 50,000.

The story of this astounding rise to prosperity and influence has been told by other writers, but only in fragments. This history will attempt for the first time to tell it as a whole, and with fuller and more authentic details than have previously been presented to the reader, in the belief that it will be found instructive by men engaged in making newspapers and of some interest even to the general public, which believes more and knows less about newspaper making than about almost any other business on earth. The story is unfinished; its action is still going on; its chief actors, or most of them, are still on the stage. This fact perhaps imposes some restraint on the historian, but it is his belief and the belief of the conductors of The Times that no relevant detail of the story has been omitted. Because it is an unfinished story, however, the narrative must be treated as a record rather than as a critical history. It is too early for detached judgment on most of the work of the past twenty-five years in The Times office, and in any case the men who have done that work, and whose views are represented in this part of the narrative, are not the men to pass judgment on what they themselves have done. The rise of The Times possesses, to a rather unusual degree, that romance which attaches to the growth of most great business enterprises: but that side of the story must be left for treatment by persons outside the institution. It could, moreover, easily lead to a distorted view of some of the phases of that growth. The fact that The Times was often, in past years, desperately hard up. has some romantic and dramatic value; but for the purposes of this narrative the fact, which may be assumed, is less important than the policies pursued by the management of the paper in that situation. Essentially, then, this story must be something in the nature of a report of a laboratory experiment, presented by those who have done the work for the critical judgment of the public outside.

Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of The Chattanooga Times, who came into the history of The New York Times in the spring of 1896, had been first actively interested in New York City papers by a hasty summons from a friend in New York, who had telegraphed, "The opportunity of your life lies before you." This opportunity, it was presently discovered, was the business management of The New York Mercury, a publication which maintained a rather precarious existence in somewhat the same field as that now occupied by The Morning Telegraph. The great free silver campaign of 1896 was about to begin, and a group of "silver Senators" had planned to buy The Mercury and establish it as a free silver daily in New York.

Mr. Ochs's informant was a personal friend, Leopold Wallach, a prominent member of the New York bar, who later was for many years, until his death, legal adviser of The Times. He, though hostile to the free silver cause, had become acquainted in a professional way with some of these gentlemen, and when he learned that they were seeking an experienced newspaperman as business manager of the enterprise he at once thought of his friend in Chattanooga.

To the execution of this plan, however, there was an insuperable obstacle. Mr. Ochs believed in the

that his election is not expressed and that charter for the Greater New-York ought really to be fixed in the Constitution instead of being left liable to continual diaturbance by legislative action at Albany As it is now, the whole charter in its outlipus and in its details is a matter of legistation, subject to amendment as any Another inference is that the speculators who bought aliver bullion in the bethat the eliver trace would at least for a time be general enough to promute a plas in prior, have abandoned that bethe success of his policy is not looked for. The New-Hork Times PUBLISHED SYERT DAY IN THE YEAR. bleated, ... Triating firms Sparn, Stw. Tot. Town. ... 1986 Breaten, GM 843 starting District Triating Office.

lef and are either aminading or threst-. A15 Pourteeum St.

THE BOY OBATOR AND THE MAS There has very seldom been offered in contrast than was furnished in Madison-Square-Genden a week nen to-night and There are of course other pluscif. pucely commercial, which affect the price of allver as that of any other commodity is affected. With these it is not now necessary to concern ourselves. Mr. Buran refuse's to recognise their existence, and those who understand them are exgard-Sobsaription Rates—Specimen Copies Free.

Publication ... Printing

Lister, with Smaley. Fr. score lifeting Males and Lister without library and Lister with library and Lister with library librar the speeches, but in the audiences and the acrangements. Last night the arlast night. The contrast was not only rangements both on the part of the orspling of the meeting and of the police THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC AD-" For mare than a century no man was them without reference to politica.

> be Times will be sent to agy address in Buriga. postage technical, tor 21,20 per month. It is sold perage is I once per copy; in all let, 2 cents per copy per day, sayhope, what would be the wonder of the powers that Mr. Butan was a candidate > queer and pictoresque element sodded to wite abaset last right, the spectacle of a were immeasurably improved from the previous occanion. Nobody who wes furnished with a ticket had any counidecable delay or trouble in finding his seat. The ever to doubt sa to what constituted Denocracy." This is the besis of the statenent of the Executive Committee of the National Democratic Party just Insued from Chleage. The statement founded upon it is admirably simple and complete.

poly every Democrat, but to all esregaeds every sendible and pairl-> desired. In terderling a change of all-is the old and the new address MUST adrance at each. Resultances at the risk a subscriber, under mates by Repirted Check, Monry Opier, or Express Order, is to "The New-York These Publish-

& Ch. there will be chaused provided an efficient ambetliute for it tast night by furnisking every seat with a life. tie American flag, which produced an ellect equally biastre and more aftractive. But the easin, pontent was to the ntie elithen, can accept it. "Every Demourst helieved," saye the address. " in the rate of law and the cole of an impartial to the unbesitating protection not only of the lives of citisens, but of priwate rights of property, and in the en-speeches themselyes. Nabody who was this contrast was an trightfully to the disadvantage of Mr. Erran that he'will hoth mentings needs to be told-that not only very bold, but cery ill adfortement of obedience to duly constiaben as the same rate as at the Publication on. Rate earth mailed on application in 1889

CATHETRENTS nor to left as after Fork City, and at regal of allow, when the

computen to confront ad audience to this part of the "enemy's country." He was vised, if he presumes again during the While every Democrat believed this, " be protoundly disbelieved to the ability of Government, through paternal legisletton or anpervision, to increase the happineas of the Nation." "He battered that R is the function of Govecoment to pro-ing him at body, it not of entirely sone Platta" and as the man whose sudden aloquence had stampeded this nominalpersons, at least of adult regies who wom at large. To hear the elegocupe which had performed such a feat was the motive which assembled the most respectaniently in every market of the world. He reprohessed givery allempt to supply to money by means of legislation that volue which it can passess only by exturn of these qualities that emder it acceptable the world when unsupported by legis-of orstory were the most disappointed ferment in the excat of his election, and blo of his auditors. These connolsseurs and the most resentful of all his hearers, him, so to speak, the men who expected either commercial profit or political preexcept those who had their money What can a Democrat with these be-Popullst policy' represented by BHTAM. BEWALL, and Warson? Every festure of that/pollry violates some honored Demoeratic principle. Ils chief measure, the liefs and diabellefe have to do with The New-York Times will be malled, dally and Sauding, for yo ceals per moath, and the address changed as offen as desired, to whom a dollar is owing, from the capfree and unlimited colnage of silver at 10 to 1, as proposed, openly dedes marly all those poinciples. It invades private rights forcisz inferior money on every man T. New-York Times Publishing Com-BUSINESS ANNULACEMENT.

1000

had made sattiffee of gnoney or of reputation in view of that exect.

peoprietor of THE NEW-YORK Tigue, han bein reorganized. The new lay. Mr. Apolrus 8. Octos of Chattaorganization assumes the ownership toitalist to the wage eacher. It destroys the right of contract. It assumes power would have abhorned. It is class legislanoga, Tenn, la, the foterest of the new notments in oratory felt, who had gong to hear bitm in the hope of exceluing the expanion that elequence gives, the Goveenment which Jerranson tion for the direct profit of the mise own-enter our examinations, ut they pass them, they will be admitted strictly an their morita and without regard to per-Every word of this statement is ablosons or political induceres of any kind." lutely true. It shows such a change that it would be quite impossible to get adorns, we tried to explain the neal without engard to the aculiments any of them to hear Buyan ugalo. not date five years sho to hope for, And

. The most conclusive criticism of him, ers solely. It threatens public eredit and The address declares, and justly, that peners, becomes the poblisher and gen-

rel manager. Mr. CHARLES R. MILLER

will continue to be the editor.

agement of the backs, and the cost of SILVER BAS RETARDED PROCEESS. SAVY 1ARD ACCIDENT INQUIRE umendment, but the gararal lines of the him, incomuch that he haves it doubtful 4 ly his, the weiling drollery of which the e dissyllable. What is more to the purpeac, the Milesian " twinkle " is sydnentwhether he really regards " Batan."

investing, and repaying the funds, is only one-thied of a cent on the dollar. No Populty candidate has not a sirgle trace debasing the standard of value and savings-bank depositor who understands his own interest can cast a voto in favor producing financial disturbance. 2

the baid commercial English of the Newould be alluring on the wrong aide, and Mr. Baran a proser who would be intolerable on the right. If the sound-money Democrata could invelore the Populist candidate into a joint debete with his critic, of which there is unjuckly no nearers of that debate at the reflection that it was on account of his pretorical

Moreover, his language, instead bennkan, lu the English of a sg of unexpectedness and allusion. Mr. Bourne Cocknaye in an olor. full In ahort, orator who

Respansibility Rents un 11 top 180 Allies of The New York Planes.

country has been configuous, subject impocary retardations, such as best to temporary retardations, such as such always occur in the ordinary conduct of business. In 1862 that progress souden-From that date down rated protectly morning as wear dock.

There white was such its in A dock.

A current imposition of its calons will be made to-day, to security the cruse of its accident if possible.

Calenda and Commundage

Fanken

Athliant Naval Con

that there is the present day there have been from that there to the present day there have been fromthal chaos, depression, assists, and compalisory idences. Although specific day there is the present was asspecified from 1652 to 1633, quotation which the Boy Orator was group-

Hoto, from whith to the control of the property of the control of manner in which it was being done pri to the secident?"
"Not knowing anything more than I of netroding a pything more than it arms, and harding had no expended arms, and having had no expended you'll go it from relecants. I would not have alternited it. The facts to mat end the following statement of facts to supmitted, covering the period in part from 1933, on an earlier period, to 1990, and to near and the second of the second o added that had be been engaged

> Š F N.

of the American people regarding have, "in great degree, been run on expathy the coposite principle, often with esculiacoatless crowd colleving harlf, by the of fant. But the management that no sane and honest American could this roises a calon's does not know much than he does about I

It was the simple notion of our old-fash. torefuthers that the office should seek-the man. For comething like two graciations the politics of this country look upon without disgust. Even at the highest tide of patriolic feeling that the Republic has ever known Mr. Lincolds was pront to declare that the office honders bothered him as much as the lesurgenus in erma. And Sonly, a floren years the men, who balleved that the sound rule of the fathers was practicable were sneered at an theorists, idealists, and no way disturbed was Tugoons Roomthen a member of Assembly from this city. To his energy, seal, and skill for the Presidency of the United States?

LORD RESSELL IN SARATOGA Attend the Menting of

R. Appen

tilty of thinking is not so to to. Baran thinks. It is the parales him, and will purp men whom these ancors in-Donas Fener, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Lard Chief Mastle Rassal of Engined and his party left. Mr. Willard's rendesco this merming (or Rudhom, N. Y. Pas party embatical as J. Perpont Morgel's great Covani. The party on arriving at Rudson 100k a 1198.

The state of the s

11. Property 1965 to 1865 to

Of course the Park Commissioners

4 4 4

polal to drive all acheses care of America by Inreducing Entree Natura's before an aura. If the adventees of Kraatye are 50 have favored and an adventee of all other systems of an other protects of all other systems of an other must be irraned with the secure for all other systems of an other systems of all other systems of an other systems of an other systems of an other systems of modition on the parameter of the secure industries.

law, the chief object of which was to put end to the use of offices as the spoils pofitient victory. At that time and until wery recently there was no department of the city or-State sorytce in which party politics of the worst sart had sp To-day Mr. Roosnvat.r. spasking for the Police Commissionsia, gives public notice that in the next four months 800 appointments will be made to the police force, and inviles young men who are fit for these places to enter competition for them. "There probably naver has been," anys, " such a chance offered in New-Tork for the employment of young men of good intelligence, of bodily vigor, and of good character. We dester all aden to the State largely owed the civil stryles known on his first appearance, apart from his character of the chosen champles of repudiation, as the "Boy Orator of the wide the people with an honeat and sluble medium of exchange, thus enabling them leaneact their business safely and con-

FIG. TORK, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 19, 1800. be Timm does not andertake to refuer enfected Brunnerergite. In all mate mierre a section of the publishes. Best base The Times of relived faths or sie-Industrial is desired postage was be inclosed.

TWELVE PAGE

To Renders Golding Out of Tawas

presibily Central P.

such mischievous unfluence

ter at their posit, and had the party above housest he budding. A committee of the National Bur Association accompanied the intingulated porty, which, after he four the for because at 715 to attend the an east negating of the Auspicen Bar Association With Market and the control of the c

IS. Na.

atanding of the design, and property of flowing garden for all, not see flowing garden for all, not see poor or rich or modificately

19. Worker

Two Congressional Committees CAMPAIGN LITEBATURE DEMANDED

Mave Their Hands Fall of Bustmeat.

Much Bank It Will Da the Murty

which while it is proved to the country and th	The state of the s
SHEAD THINKY SAIPED SONTAINED AND AND AND AND AND AND AND AND AND AN	A Day of a Cheen Protect The restorts of Arcenes v. B. C. and Jacobs of the Protect of Arcenes v. B. C. and Jacobs of the Arcenes v. B.
mark oglosen session or Besselzers De- mark oglosen session or severalezers be no insperent Anthrio Episada University and a twinter to be no insperent Anthrio Episada University and a twinter to be no insperent Anthrio Episada University and a twinter to be no insperent and a twinter to be not only the series of the serie	when we want to the work with the state of the price of t
The wew cover advance and a state of the work of the and a state of th	mindion The includes at one of the mindion and could be asset of the state of the s
Of course,choods in the nationer length, which was about as have as large as large as large as a sar at 4 the e.d. knew, that Mr. Baynas Georgia yings low to talk him the baynas Georgia yings low to talk him the object of the baynas Georgia yings low to talk him the object of the baynas Georgia yings low to talk him the object of the baynas of t	he supposed in the American control of the second of the s de follow that the county baucheria mai, venale for county parceses. "A de certainte in seir of a get he county déficie II paulle. Escua en ferreira noi de paul in Senaire de Supervises et gourne and Robment have to be re- gourne and Robment have to be re- derent a main of the county of the co- partie of the county of the county and leave to he reverted a believe readile and leave to he reverted. I believe readile and leave to he reverted a believe readile and leave to he countries and noise and any leave to heave the concerned- leave the county of the county of the county de a read a these of the Mandipality of the readile reverted to the senaire and departer. The county question is come problem, and it is possible tability to a many be calminated by a Constitutional bright the harry which Risers 27 Rack- not catteredulary tack in the active collection have given it is an extracedulary tack in the active collection and in the active collection and in the active collection and quality which collection are active to the active has been active to the active has been active to the active that the high animate that the part which a part models in the high animate that the part would possible have see had of The New-York Three sits the total active the active that the New-York Three sits the total active the active that the New-York Three sits the transfer in the partitionalisty is good for the active that the New-York Three sits the high animate that the New-York Three sits the high active and intentive form, it has it is no blanced in collection and yet the collection of Three New Increase, and the proposed of the Person of the New-York Three sits the highlight disease. The way the order of the testing of the consideration of the New-York Three will dreve the editors of the New-York Three will be to eculation the active the editor. The way will continue to be the editors of the New-York Three will dreve the editors of the New-York Three will dreve the editors of the New-York Three will dreve the editors of the New-York Three and prevaled on the activation of the New-York Three will the the editors of the Person of the New-York Three will the west of the testing of the Constant of Three New-York Three will the we will dreve the desire and prevaled on the administrating paths with the standard that the Constant with good preventing and powellon in administrating paths with the provision of the New-York Three and powellon in administrating paths with the standard public the standard publication of the public the standard provided in the standard publication of the public the standard publication of the standard publication and administrating paths with the standard publication and administrating paths with the standard publication and administrating paths with the standard publica	NEW-YORK, AND IN 18 GODEN THE PRICE OF SHAPE. THE PRICE OF SHAPE. THE PRICE OF SHAPE. THE PRICE OF SHAPE. THE gold standard, and his newspaper, The Chattanooga Times, was its most consistent advocate in the southern states at a time when most of the southern Democrats were making a fetish of 16 to 1. When he learned the nature of the enterprise, after arriving in New York, he declined to consider the offer; and for various reasons the plan was presently abandoned. The owner of The Mercury, however, was still eager to get rid of his property; and after some conversations with Mr. Ochs he offered to sell it to him. Mr. Ochs saw what he thought was an opening in New York City for a small strictly news paper at one cent. Although he was not particularly interested in The Mercury as it then was, it seemed to him that The Mercury might be transformed into a newspaper of this sort, for it was a client of the associated newspapers of New York and received their full service. This service was at that time quite complete, as The New York Sun, Times, Herald and Tribune were directing the United Press organization in a bitter contest with the Associated Press, which at that time was composed chiefly of western papers. But the negotiation for the purchase of The Mercury came to nothing when the owner found he could not give an assurance for a continuance of the press association news service of the other New York dailies. The Mercury shortly thereafter ceased publication, but the negotiations had caused Mr. Ochs to make several trips to New York, and in the meantime a rather academic interest which he had previously expressed in the affairs of The Times had been awakened.

It happened that in 1890 Harry Alloway, a member of The Times Wall Street staff, had been entertained by Mr. Ochs while on a trip through the South and had heard him remark that The New York Times offered the greatest opportunity in American journalism. Long after this - on March 12, 1896, Mr. Ochs's thirty-eighth birthday — he received a telegram from Mr. Allowav saving that if he was interested there seemed likely to be an opportunity of acquiring The New York Times with no very large outlay of money. Alloway knew of the financial difficulties of The Times, and of some plans for its reorganization, and telegraphed to Mr. Ochs purely as a friendly act, without authority from any one. Mr. Ochs did not take the matter very seriously; but it happened that the next day he had occasion to go to Chicago. While there he took lunch with his friend, Herman H. Kohlsaat, publisher and proprietor of the Chicago Times-Herald, to whom he incidentally mentioned the telegram from Alloway. A general discussion of the New York newspaper situation ensued, and Mr. Kohlsaat observed that he thought The Times was Mr. Ochs's opportunity. To this Mr. Ochs objected that he didn't think he was a big enough man for the job. "Don't tell anybody," Mr. Kohlsaat advised him, "and they'll never find it out."

Arriving in New York a few days later, Mr. Ochs met Mr. Alloway and learned from him the information he had gathered about the situation in The Times office—that a plan of reorganization was being discussed, that several newspaper managers in New York had been approached with the suggestion that they try to rebuild The Times, and that for an investment of $250,000 it might be possible to secure control. Mr. Ochs having displayed interest, Mr. Alloway arranged an interview with Charles R. Miller, the editor-in-chief. Mr. Ochs and Mr. Miller met for the first time that evening at Mr. Miller's residence. The interview had been arranged for a few minutes after dinner, as Mr. Miller had an engagement to accompany his family to the theatre. Two kindred souls met. The discussion of the situation of The Times and of Mr. Ochs's ideas of newspaper making was so absorbing that the family went ahead to the theatre on the understanding that Mr. Miller would join them later. The performance ended, they returned and found the discussion still in progress. It lasted until midnight, and resulted in convincing Mr. Miller that the man from Chattanooga had some pretty sound ideas about the reconstruction of The Times.

Mr. Miller arranged for Mr. Ochs to meet the next day the men who were working out a plan of reorganization for which they had secured some promises of new capital. Charles R. Flint and Spencer Trask, who were at the head of this movement, were both favorably impressed, and invited Mr. Ochs at once to join the syndicate they were forming, which had only a day or so left to make its plans operative and hold the tentative subscriptions. But the plan required more money from Mr. Ochs than he could command, or would have cared to endeavor to secure. When he declined to become financially interested, Mr. Flint had acquired such confidence in his ideas that he offered Mr. Ochs the management of the proposed reorganized company, and intimated that a salary of $50,000 a year was not beyond the possibilities. In other circumstances Mr. Ochs might have been willing to go down in history as the first Tennessean who ever got such a salary, but he was of the opinion that if he tried to manage The Times for somebody else the most probable result would be the speedy disappearance of the job, the salary and The Times.

The failure of this plan left the way clear for that faction of the stockholders which wanted to consolidate The Times with The New York Recorder, a daily newspaper on which several millions had been spent in a fruitless effort to establish it. They had even gone so far as to file at Albany application for a charter for "The Times-Recorder Company," with a capital of $2,500,000, when Charles R. Miller and Edward Cary, who were the chief editors of the paper and members of its Board of Directors, obtained the appointment of a receiver and circumvented this plan.

All those interested in the reorganization who had met Mr. Ochs seemed agreed that he was the man The Times needed, and the receiver, Mr. Alfred Ely, was selected by those friendly to Mr. Ochs. But it should be remembered that before his appearance it had been the conviction of most of those interested in The Times that it needed a man experienced in New York journalism to do the work. Every ambitious managing editor in town had long ago been approached and invited to attempt the restoration of The Times, and with one accord they had all made excuses. Not till the whole field of metropolitan journalism had been searched in vain for a rescuer, not till every one of the men who ought to have known had declared that The Times could not be restored, did Mr. Ochs get his chance. These experienced men, with intimate knowledge of the New York newspaper situation, were of one opinion—that it would require several million dollars to resuscitate The Times and place it in a position to compete with The Herald, The World, The Journal, The Tribune and The Sun, all having men of great wealth as owners or interested in their success.

Mr. Ochs's experience, to be sure, had been varied enough. He was thirty-eight years old; he had started in the newspaper business at the age of eleven as a carrier of papers, had graduated from that position to printer's devil, and had worked up through every position which either the news, the editorial, or the business department of Tennessee journalism had to offer until at the age of twenty he had become proprietor and publisher of The Chattanooga Times. In eighteen years he had brought this paper to a degree of prosperity remarkable in a city of that size, and to a position in public confidence perhaps still more unusual - for the obstacles to journalistic virtue are perhaps most formidable in the smaller cities. Among southern newspaper men he was already widely known, but Chattanooga is a long way from New York; and the gentlemen who were trying to dig The Times out of the drifts were slow to admit that a problem which was by this time too much for them, and which had been politely evaded by some of the ablest newspaper managers in New York, could be solved by an unknown from a small town. Fortunately, Mr. Ochs was able to gather a formidable volume of letters of recommendation. They came from the President of the United States, from Senators, Governors and bishops; from bank presidents, railroad presidents, editors of rival newspapers and people who had known him in Chattanooga. That he was able to produce so many of them was perhaps due to the fact that he had been semi-officially recognized as the entertainer of distinguished visitors to Chattanooga, and thus had become fairly well acquainted with a wider circle than the ordinary newspaper man of the interior could know. At any rate he had many letters and their tone was convincing. They served to reinforce the confidence which had gradually been established by personal contact.

It was expected that the receivership, which was a friendly one, would be required for only a few days, pending the adoption of a plan of reorganization fathered by Mr. Spencer Trask. But this scheme also miscarried, and with Mr. Trask's encouragement Mr. Ochs submitted a new plan which he presented personally to nearly every stockholder and creditor of The New York Times Publishing Company. It was approved and accepted, and Mr. Trask consented to act as Chairman of the Reorganization Committee, whose other members were Marcellus Hartley, Alfred Ely, James T. Woodward, and E. Morā Davison. The plan was declared operative on July 2, 1896.

It was a pretty large undertaking for Mr. Ochs to buy control of The Times, even though he was buying it mostly with his ability rather than his money; but it was not much larger, in proportion, than the effort he had made eighteen years before, when, not yet old enough to vote, he had bought The Chattanooga Times by paying $250 in cash—borrowed—and assuming its debt of $1500. It seemed to him that the principles which had succeeded in Chattanooga might succeed equally well in New York; at any rate they were the only principles which he felt competent to put into practice. Only one new resolution did he make on coming to New York—a firm resolve not to have any other outside interest, but to give all his attention, and employ all the resources of his credit, for the interests of The Times.

The plan of reorganization has already been told in various publications, but may perhaps here be given in outline. A new organization, The New York Times Company, was formed, with a capital of 10.000 shares of par value of $100. Two thousand of these shares were traded in for the 10,000 shares of the old company. The holders of the outstanding obligations of The Times, amounting to some $300,000, received in exchange an equal amount of 5 per cent bonds of the new company; and perhaps the most exacting part of the financing of the reorganization was accomplished when $200.000 more of these bonds were sold at par, to provide that operating capital the lack of which had been so severely felt in past years. As a persuasive, fifteen shares of stock were offered to each purchaser of a $1000 bond. Mr. Ochs himself, scraping together all the money he had or could borrow, bought $75,000 of these bonds, receiving with them 1125 shares of stock. Of the remaining capital stock of the company 3876 shares were put into escrow, to be delivered to Mr. Ochs whenever the paper had earned and paid expenses for a period of three consecutive years. Thus he would have — and within less than four years did have — 5001 of the 10,000 shares and $75,000 in bonds, the whole acquired by the payment of $75,000 for the bonds and by his personal services. That $75,000 was the financial investment, and the only investment, aside from his own labors, which the controlling stockholder of The Times made for his majority interest.

The company thus organized bought The Times at public sale on August 13, 1896. The receivership was terminated by court order; on August 18, 1896, the property was formally transferred to the reorganized company, with Mr. Ochs as publisher in unrestricted control; and the saddest chapter in the history of The Times was closed.

It may be well at this point to puncture a few bubbles of fantasy which have been widely blown about. The Times probably has the distinction of having been more generally misrepresented than any other newspaper in the United States. Some of these misrepresentations are due to malice, some to the somewhat painfully widespread inability of members of the human race to believe in the honesty of their fellows; a good many of them, one must suppose, have no other origin than the myth-making instinct whose pervasiveness is perhaps not fully appreciated by any but newspaper men. The rejuvenated Times succeeded so rapidly and so brilliantly that people who could not understand its success found it most convenient to suppose that great sums of money had been poured into it from some secret and probably discreditable reservoir. Ignorance was soon reinforced by hostility; persons who disagreed with the conservatism of The Times editorial policy, and who were quite unable to conceive the idea that a man, and even a newspaper, might honestly believe in conservative principles, thought that the explanation could be found in the theory that The Times had been bought by Wall Street bankers. It is unfortunately true that a large percentage of the all too human race can find no explanation for disagreement with its opinions except that those who disagree have been bought by somebody. And the ascription to various eminent financiers of the honor of being the man behind the throne on The Times is probably due quite as much to credulity as to malice. It is more romantic and entertaining to suppose that a newspaper is the mouthpiece of a mysterious malefactor of great wealth, who gives his orders to its editors in a few pregnant monosyllables, than to accept the prosaic truth that it represents the views of its owners and conductors.

ADOLPH S. OCHS, August 18, 1896.

In more recent years the legend of British gold offered a convenient explanation of The Times's attitude on the Great War to Irish and German enthusiasts who were used to the idea of subsidized newspapers, but the force of this view was somewhat diminished when the Irish and Germans extended it from The Times to all other American newspapers which failed to see in Sinn Fein and Kaiserism the sum of human perfection. The secret ownership or control of The Times has been ascribed to so many different men that one might suppose some doubt would have arisen in the minds of the most credulous; at any rate they couldn't all own it at once. But the number of people who can be fooled all the time is regrettably large.

A few of the more important myths will here be cited and explained, in so far as they can be explained by anything except the credulity of human nature. It is not to be supposed that the explanations will be accepted by Sinn Feiners, admirers of the late Kaiser or devotees of the principles of Karl Marx or Nikolai Lenin. To convince these gentlemen is beyond the power of human logic. But some explanation may perhaps be of interest to the large number of readers of The Times who have heard these various rumors and have perhaps been inclined to believe them because the paper has not thought them worthy of explicit denial.

President Cleveland, for example, did not bring Mr. Ochs up from Chattanooga to set a good Democratic paper on its feet. Mr. Cleveland had no more idea, when Mr. Ochs came to New York, that he was going to buy The Times than did Mr. Ochs himself. The only possible basis for this legend lies in the fact that when Mr. Ochs found New Yorkers somewhat reluctant to accept the views of a man about whom they knew nothing, he collected a large number of letters of recommendation, as noted above, from everybody whose endorsement seemed likely to be of value. Naturally a recommendation from Mr. Cleveland, then in the White House, would carry a good deal of weight. The President wrote that

* * * * in your management of The Chattanooga Times you have demonstrated such a faithful adherence to Democratic principles, and have so bravely supported the ideas and policies which tend to the safety of our country as well as of our party that I would be glad to see you in a larger sphere of usefulness. * * * *

This was Mr. Cleveland's sole contribution to the reorganization of The Times.

Of the various bankers who have been mentioned as the controlling influence in The Times, August Belmont has perhaps the distinction of having been named most often. Mr. Belmont, as a matter of fact, owned $25,000 of the debentures of the old company, which he exchanged for bonds of the new organization, and these bonds were bought by The Times long ago, at par, and retired.

The assertion that he controlled The Times was some years ago spread rather widely by the Hearst papers, which eventually retracted it when its untruth was demonstrated. It is doubtless often repeated by persons who do not realize how it came to be diffused.

Before the inventive German propagandist supplied the more brilliant explanation of British gold, it was a favorite doctrine of Socialist thinkers that The Times was an organ of the Morgan firm. J. P. Morgan & Co. held $25,000 of the debentures of the old company, like Mr. Belmont, and like him accepted for these obligations an equal amount of the bonds of the new company, which were also bought and paid for by The Times at par value and retired years ago. Numerous other financiers, traction magnates and politicians, shady and otherwise, have also figured in these romances, but none of them ever owned a dollar's worth of The Times Company stock or in any manner had the power to influence the policies of The Times, editorial or other. Nor did any of them ever get anything out of The Times except such information as they may have obtained from its news columns or such moral elevation as they may have derived from the study of its editorial page. And it might be added that none of them was ever in a position to control, influence or affect the paper's policies.

But theorists who have been unwilling to display favoritism by believing that any one man was the secret master of The Times, when so many have been mentioned, have cherished the belief that the paper was dominated by its bondholders as a group. It is not. The outstanding bonds amount to less than $600,000. The name of every person or institution holding more than I per cent of this not very formidable amount may be found on the editorial page of the paper, twice a year. These bonds represent the residue of an issue of $1,200,000 put out some years ago in financing the construction of The Times Building after retiring the bonds of 1896. The bonds were bought, just as any other bonds are bought, by people who thought they were a good investment; who believed, that is to say, that The Times would be able to pay interest and principal. It will be noted that more than half that issue has already been retired out of earnings.

As The Times grew and moved into new quarters

it had to make heavy investments in real estate and machinery. The Times Building, like any other new building, was mortgaged during its construction. The mortgage was placed like any other mortgage because those who made the loan thought that the Times Building was a safe risk. It is being constantly reduced, and is now less than a million dollars - on property worth several times that amount. So bonds and mortgage, the total indebtedness of the company, amount to something like $1,500,000. The cash resources of the company are more than sufficient to pay this off at any time. The value of the company's real estate and paper-mill properties, entirely apart from plant, good will and other resources, is several times the indebtedness. So virtually The New York Times as a newspaper entity is free of any indebtedness of any kind or description.

Where did the money come from which built up the institution? Aside from $100,000 of the $200,000 of new capital provided by the sale of bonds in 1896, it came out of the earnings. Of the money which the paper has earned during the last twenty-five years, in round figures $100,000,000, 97 per cent has been put into the operation and development of the property and 3 per cent has been kept for the owners in dividends. There have been commercial borrowings from time to time, as in any business; but the loans have always been paid promptly, and in no case were the lenders influenced by any other consideration than the belief that they would be paid promptly.

Indeed, why should the owners of The Times

submit to outside influence? They own a large and prosperous institution, out of debt, which brings them in all the income they can reasonably require. Quite aside from moral considerations and the reluctance which many men feel to sell their souls, the owners and controllers of The Times have no particular use for "British gold," or Wall Street gold, or any other gold that might be offered for the control of the paper. They have all the "gold" necessary for their requirements.

It is perhaps a tribute to the prosperity of The Times that it is rarely accused of being controlled by its advertisers. It is accused of about everything else, but this charge would be too obviously ridiculous. It may be in order to observe, however, that even in the days when it was struggling desperately The Times was never controlled by its advertisers. Certain advertisers, on occasion, may have made efforts to influence the business policy of the paper. They never succeeded; sometimes they withdrew their advertising, but they nearly always came back, and came back knowing that they were buying advertising space and nothing more.

The Times is sometimes called the organ of the investing classes. The concept of a class organ is somewhat more familiar in Europe than in the United States, where about its only true exemplars, aside from trade journals, can be found in those socialist papers which speak for the modest number of sectarians who consider themselves the whole working class. The Times can be called the organ of the investing class only in the sense that most investors read it because of the volume and reliability of its financial news. Because most investors read it, it is the favored medium for financial advertising. But financial advertising, like any other advertising, buys only advertising space. As a matter of fact, the belief that newspapers as a class are controlled by their advertisers is a popular delusion not much more respectable than the belief that breaking a mirror brings bad luck. Breaking some mirrors does bring bad luck—in restaurants and barrooms, for example; and some newspapers may be controlled by their advertisers. The proportion is considerably smaller than it was twenty-five years ago, and it is growing smaller every year.

No, The Times is not owned or controlled by Lord Northcliffe or Wall Street bankers or traction interests or the owners of department stores. It is owned by the men and women whose names appear in the list of stockholders, officially published every six months, and controlled by the owner of its majority stock, Adolph S. Ochs.

As has been said, the $200,000 obtained by the sale of bonds for cash was supposed to provide the working capital for the newspaper. Mr. Ochs discovered after taking charge that unfunded obligations of the paper would eat up half that sum. He had, then, about $100,000 to go on; and that is all the fresh capital that has been put into The Times since 1896. It has paid its way out of its earnings.

The purpose of the new management was announced in the following salutatory published on the editorial page over Mr. Ochs's signature on August 19, 1896:

To undertake the management of The New York Times, with its great history for right-doing, and to attempt to keep bright the lustre which Henry J. Raymond and George Jones have given it is an extraordinary task. But if a sincere desire to conduct a high-standard newspaper, clean, dignified and trustworthy, requires honesty, watchfulness, earnestness, industry and practical knowledge applied with common sense, I entertain the hope that I can succeed in maintaining the high estimate that thoughtful, pure-minded people have ever had of The New York Times.

It will be my earnest aim that The New York Times give the news, all the news, in concise and attractive form, in language that is parliamentary in good society, and give it as early, if not earlier, than it can be learned through any other reliable medium; to give the news impartially, without fear or favor, regardless of any party, sect or interest involved; to make of the columns of The New York Times a forum for the consideration of all questions of public importance, and to that end to invite intelligent discussion from all shades of opinion.

There will be no radical changes in the personnel of the present efficient staff. Mr. Charles R. Miller, who has so ably for many years presided over the editorial page, will continue to be the editor; nor will there be a departure from the general tone and character and policies pursued with relation to public questions that have distinguished The New York Times as a non-partisan newspaper — unless it be, if possible, to intensify its devotion to the cause of sound money and tariff reform, opposition to wastefulness and peculation in administering public affairs and in its advocacy of the lowest tax consistent with good government, and no more government than is absolutely necessary to protect society, maintain individual and vested rights and assure the free exercise of a sound conscience.

It will be seen that this platform was in large degree a reaffirmation of the traditional principles of The Times. From the ideal of impartiality of news and of discussion the paper had indeed departed considerably in its most Republican days, but it had returned after its declaration of independence in 1884. The emphasis upon certain features of this newspaper policy, however, was dictated by conditions of the times. Reference to The Times's appeal to "thoughtful, pure-minded people" and the promise that news would be given "earlier than it can be learned through any other reliable medium" were the first guns in the aggressive war against "yellow journalism," which The Times now undertook. and which it carried through to entire success. But at the outset that fight seemed all but hopeless. "Yellow" journalism was a good deal more powerful in the nineties than today; and it was a good deal vellower.

Mr. Pulitzer, who had awakened the eighties by his development of The World, had been followed and imitated in the early nineties by Mr. Hearst, who made prodigal expenditures of money and was not hampered by any of the restraints which modified some of the enterprises of his rival. If in some details of outward appearance the journals then called "vellow" are in our day even more excruciating, their character is not so offensive — and it must be remembered, of course, that The World has undergone such a development in the last two decades that it long ago lost the character of a "yellow" journal as that phrase was understood when the "Yellow Kid" cartoons first brought it into currency. The World and The Journal in 1896 were considered quite deplorable from most points of view. But they were prosperous; they sold for one cent, and had enormous circulations as circulations went in those days; they made a great deal of noise about themselves and about each other. and attracted a corresponding amount of attention; they spent money wildly for new features, or even to get news. And they embellished the news with such unsavory details as are perhaps less often given to the public today, and in any event are less offensive to the somewhat broader tolerance of our time than they were in the nineties.

The consequent reaction of a considerable part of the reading public was very much the same as forty-five years before, when Raymond had set out to conduct a paper which should be welcomed into the homes which found no interest in the trivialities of The Sun, and were repelled by the vulgarity of The Herald and by what was regarded as the insidious immorality of The Tribune. A good many homes, schools and clubs deliberately excluded The World and The Journal in 1896; but their fierce rivalry, their reckless expenditure, and even in some degree the quality of the brains which they had been able to obtain, gave them a certain advantage over their competitors. Of the other papers of the period, The Sun was brilliantly written, and was read chiefly by people who liked brilliant writing. It printed as much news as its reporters and correspondents, in the pressure of more important business, had time to get, and as its make-up men found it necessary to admit to the columns as an offset to literature. Aside from that, its energies were principally devoted to the contentions that New Yorkers could never be persuaded to ride in subway trains, and that Whitelaw Reid had driven Horace Greeley to the madhouse and the grave. The Herald was a daily directory, had an excellent foreign service, but otherwise had no particular claim on the attention of readers unless they happened to be interested in the doings of a somewhat curiously defined "society" or in premature burial, dogs, and more dubious topics of interest. The Tribune carried a small but genteel stock of Republican ideas, most of which had lain for a considerable time on the shelves. There was room for a paper whose first object was to get the news promptly and publish it with due attention to its relative value — a paper so conducted that nobody need be ashamed to be seen reading it, but containing all the solid content which intelligent readers wanted, and for which, in desperation, they sometimes had to burrow in the muck heaps of the "vellows."

This ideal of The Times was presently expressed in the motto "All the News That's Fit to Print," first published on the editorial page on October 25, 1896, and carried in a box on the front page from February 10 of the following year down to the present day. Probably no newspaper motto has ever aroused more discussion or more obstinate difference of opinion - a difference, it may be observed, which is to be found in The Times office as well as outside. In its most literal and narrowest interpretation it of course suggests that terrible crime widely discussed under the title of "suppression of news." This phrase itself is something of a begging of the question, for no newspaper is large enough to publish accounts of all happenings even if anybody would read them. In every newspaper office every day there must be a selection of the most interesting or important happenings, as many of them as can be crowded into the paper. In the sense that the less interesting or important items have to be left out there is "suppression of news" in every newspaper office all the time, as many self-admiring persons have discovered.

"All the News That's Fit to Print," however, has been criticised, even by more or less friendly commentators, as implying the exercise of editorial judgment as to what news may be too horrible or obscene for the public — a right which, it is assumed, no editor possesses. But no newspaper ever published all the harrowing details of the Armenian massacres, for instance. The essential facts were published; the decorative trimmings could well be left to the imagination. It has been argued that if it is news of sufficient importance it is fit to print. The Times has never held otherwise. The fact of an atrocious crime or a deplorable scandal is news. The sordid particulars have sometimes a legitimate news value, but more often their only appeal is to the salacious curiosity.

The motto has often been contrasted with Dana's remark that "whatever Divine Providence permits to occur I am not too proud to report." But there are certain details of events permitted by Divine Providence which have never been and will never be printed in The Sun, even though mention of the events in a general way may be published as news. It is a question of methods, of treatment, of emphasis — a fact which may easily be proved by the protests which The Times often receives against items published in its columns which seem to some of its readers unfit to print. There is often a difference of opinion among editors of The Times as to whether the unassailable general principle that what is news should be printed justifies the inclusion of certain details which are of dubious fitness: and no doubt the practice of the paper occasionally fails to agree altogether with this excellent principle. But the influence of the motto is present none the It has been described as "a silent monitor at the copy desk"; and in the course of years its influence has been sufficient to keep a good deal of contaminating and worthless material out of the paper.

If it be held that a doctrine so difficult to define precisely is a rather unsafe guide, it should be remembered that it was first adopted in somewhat unusual circumstances. In effect, "All the News That's Fit to Print" was a war cry, the slogan under which the reorganized Times fought for a footing against the formidable competition of The Herald, The World and The Journal. What it meant, in essence, was that The Times was going to be as good a vehicle of news as any of those papers, and that it would be free from their indecency, eccentricity, distortion or sensationalism. The publisher of The Times once answered a question as to what news is unfit to print with the brief definition, "What's untrue." A great deal of the so-called news published by some of The Times's contemporaries in 1896 was untrue - sometimes, though not verv often, deliberately invented; more frequently mishandled, edited or colored until it conveyed an entirely inaccurate impression. There was to be none of this sort of thing in The Times, and so far as its editors are humanly able to live up to their good intentions, there never has been. Moreover, the columns of The Times were not to be filled with matter which depended for its interest to the public purely on its appeal to prurient cravings or to unwarranted suspicion. The motto selected in 1806 might have been restated as "The news, all the news and nothing but the news." This was the sort of paper, and the only sort of paper, which the new publisher of The Times would or could produce: it was still to be seen whether he was right in believing that New York in the nineties offered a living for such a paper, and the experiment was begun under a heavy handicap - with an outworn plant. a tradition of misfortune and a discouraged staff. to say nothing of the general opinion that the new venture had little chance of success.

The new publisher was quite as well aware as anybody else of the difficulties which he had to face, but he was of the opinion that there were some counterbalancing advantages which had been overlooked by some of the men who had thought The Times beyond hope of recovery. In the first place, it did have a great tradition. Within the memory of many thousands of newspaper readers — indeed until a few years previously — it had been one of the great newspapers of the country. Its name and standing had by no means been destroyed by its comparatively brief period of misfortune. In a sense, the good will was still there.

It was not on the surface, of course; it would have to be dug out and cultivated, as the experience of the previous management showed. Nevertheless, the gentlemen who had sold the name and good will of the paper for a million dollars in 1893 had, perhaps, given better value than they realized. The Times had fallen into a situation from which it could work out only by showing merit, but once that merit was shown it would find a welcome in many homes where it had been a valued friend in the past. A new paper with a new name would have had to spend an enormous amount of money to establish this friendly disposition which the new management of The Times would find ready to welcome it - if The Times could succeed in recovering the attention of these readers.

And it should be observed that the reconstruction of The Times involved no change in the essential character of the paper. The new publisher indulged in no eccentric experiments, no efforts to emulate prominent and profitable features of rival publications. It is perhaps fortunate that his capital was so small, for he did not have the money to do this sort of thing, even if he had wanted to. He felt that the chief asset of The Times was its character, its tradition, its good will. That character was to be preserved. The remnant of old readers who continued to buy The Times because they liked that kind of paper were not to be driven away by any sudden alteration of the paper's character in the vain effort to emulate its competitors. The Times was to be the same kind of paper as of old, a kind of paper which a large part of the reading public was known to like; the changes under the new management were intended only to make it a better paper of that kind.

Another item of value was the paper's staff. The new publisher intended to make no changes unless experience showed him that change was necessary, for he had a high admiration for the staff as he found it. Indeed, the men then getting out The Times were, on the whole, the men who had produced and edited it in the days of its greatness. They were no longer getting the results which they had got then; but this was due to a complex of reasons in which the inexperience of the heirs of George Jones, the bad luck of their successors in taking over the paper without any working capital on the eve of a financial panic, and the lack of a sound business organization were most important. Given even a little breathing space from importunate financial obligations, and a somewhat better direction of energy, and they could make it a great paper once more.

THE TIMES EDITORIAL COUNCIL.

Left to right: Osmond Phillips, Edward M. Kingsbury, John Corbin, Rollo Ogden, Charles R. Miller, E. A. Bradford, F. C. Mortimer, John H. Finley, F. T. Birchall, Adolph S. Ochs, Carr V. Van Anda, Elmer Davis, H. E. Armstrong, Julius O. Adler, Louis Wiley, Arthur Hays Sulzberger and Ralph H. Graves.

Nevertheless, the situation was bad enough. When Mr. Ochs assumed the control of The Times, an old and trusted employé, to whom had been confided some of the details of the paper's management too painful to be widely disseminated, took him into his office, unlocked his rolltop desk, and with tears in his eyes imparted to the new publisher his shameful secret. The Times was printing 19,000 copies a day, and 10,000 of them were coming back unsold. The net circulation was 9000, and it was growing smaller every day. Mr. Ochs said something to the effect that he thought the circulation would be increased before long. "Increased!" said his astounded hearer. "Increased! Mr. Ochs, if you could keep it from going down any further you'd be a wonderful man."

However, the new publisher set to work to see what he could do. One item of waste which was soon reduced, though it was a long time before it was entirely eliminated, was the printing of papers that came back to the office old paper bin from the news stands where they had vainly waited for purchasers. While staying in New York and making arrangements for the purchase of The Times Mr. Ochs had noticed that at the news stand he patronized he was always offered The Sun. At first he felt rather flattered at the idea that the keen-eyed newsdealer had judged him to be the sort of man who would want The Sun; for this was in the height of Dana's fame as a producer of newspaper literature, and to be seen reading The Sun was, at that time, a mark of intellectual distinction. But inquiry discovered that the newsdealer was actuated by a more sordid motive. The Sun circulation system allowed no returns; and in consequence the first thing the newsdealer thought of was to sell off his stock of Suns. When they were gone he could turn to the distribution of the other papers with the restful assurance that such copies as he could not sell could be sent back to the office and would cost him nothing. It seemed to Mr. Ochs, upon reflection, that the papers which permitted the return of unsold copies were in effect supplying the capital for the promotion of The Sun.

So The Times first reduced the return privilege to 10 per cent, presently abolished it entirely for the Saturday issue with the literary supplement, and eventually eliminated it altogether. Thereafter the bills for print paper could be paid with the consoling assurance that, at any rate, The Times was paid for every copy sent out to the newsdealers. Meanwhile the new publisher had been finding his way about the He had the idea that the essentials of successoffice. ful newspaper publishing were pretty much the same in New York and in Chattanooga; that, as he afterward expressed it, the best policy was "no policy" — a reliance on honesty, industry and unhampered judgment. In time this doctrine proved its worth by its practical success, but it seemed so strange at the time that years afterward the editor of another New York paper said that Mr. Ochs had come to town and "taught us something new." It did not seem so to him; he thought he had merely reminded New York newspaper men of something they had forgotten.

In a sense, of course, that statement could be applied to the rise of almost any successful newspaper. Perhaps the history of journalism could be expressed in a formula of rotary motion. Every twenty years or so somebody achieves a great success by digging up an old truth that had been discarded. One truth rediscovered on The Times in the nineties, however, has perhaps a more generally useful application than the secrets of the success of other newspapers. This is the ancient but still somewhat surprising fact that thorough knowledge and unremitting diligence are likely, barring accident, to bring results. The new publisher of The Times, who had come from the interior of the country to undertake the solution of a problem which to veterans of New York journalism seemed entirely hopeless. was regarded by a good many observers as a man with more money than brains - a judgment which, in view of the actual state of his fortunes, was anything but complimentary. But he knew every department of the newspaper business from the ground up.

It was his opinion that The Times staff, as it then existed, was as competent and well equipped a body of men as could be found on any newspaper in the country, and that the paper could be rehabilitated by those men. What they needed was more coordination and a little more enthusiasm. Too many of the subordinates had allowed themselves to slip into a groove and were conducting their own particular duties in a routine grown familiar with years of practice without paying much attention to the relation of their work to the whole. Men were apt to stick to themselves and ignore what went on about them.

The arrival of the new publisher brought a good deal of encouragement to men at the top who had become acquainted with him and had caught something of his enthusiasm, but for most of the staff enthusiasm had to wait for acquaintance. When Mr. Ochs came in with the intention of turning The Times around and starting it uphill the majority of the staff watched him with interest, but at first without any great amount of confidence. He was a new man and unknown, and he had undertaken a job which seemed to be too much for anybody. He was welcome, because the ruin of the paper, without some new stimulus, seemed only a question of time; but it was still to be seen if he could give it that stimulus.

As for the publisher, he experienced a certain diffidence as he began to familiarize himself with his new associates. He was now set as commanding officer over men, a good many of them older than himself, of whom he had been hearing for years with a certain amount of awe. These great names of New York journalism had resounded rather thunderously in Chattanooga, and it required a considerable time for Mr. Ochs to get over his conviction that they were persons of a somewhat different order of professional eminence, or that, at any rate, they were New Yorkers, while he was fresh from a small town. Nevertheless, he set to work to invigorate the staff, to inspire it with new courage, and to find out in the meantime what was the matter with The Times. Much was done from the very first in bringing the members of the staff together; but it may serve as an illustration of the necessity of beginning pretty much from the ground up that the publisher found that one of his first tasks was to educate the staff into reading the paper.

They were induced to read The Times by the somewhat roundabout expedient of giving to each man the task of comparing each day's issue of The Times with one of its contemporaries. The publisher had discovered that the writers had preferences among the other morning papers, and he assigned each man to find out every morning what his pet paper had discovered that was unknown to The Times. It perhaps goes without saving that this task of comparison was already part of the work of the news department; it was laid upon the editorial council for purely educational reasons. And it worked. Before long the men who were reading The Times because they had to know if it had been beaten on the day's news found themselves compelled to admit that there was a good deal in it that was worth reading.

This instance may illustrate the work which had to be done in coördinating the work of the various members of The Times staff. The work was done, because there was a directing influence to see that it was done; and before long The Times had an organization, still rudimentary, but more deserving of the name than anything it had ever known before. There was a man at the head who understood the work of every department from his own experience, and who not only knew whether that work was being well done, but had been able to inspire the workers with a more vivid interest in the welfare of the whole institution. And another element in their confidence, perhaps of slower growth, was the realization that the new chief was in complete and absolute control, unhampered by any external influences whatever. It is unfortunately true that outside influence on many newspapers has been — a past tense is used because this condition though still existing in some newspaper offices, is much less general now than it used to be - so strong that a good many newspaper men of wide experience find it hard to believe that it is not universal. The Times has had a good deal of difficulty in persuading some of its employés that news is not to be handled in deference to editorial policy, just as it had trouble in the nineties in convincing them that news was not to be treated with a view to the supposed prejudices of influential outsiders. The new publisher was to a certain extent regarded for a time as the representative of the men who had sunk their money in The Times a few years before; and it took time for the employés to realize that he was conducting it himself, without any orders from outside. When they did realize it, as he took care they should, it gave a tremendous impetus to the industry of a staff which had been afraid of shadows for some time past, and now at last began to realize that they were only shadows.

Meanwhile there had been some experiments with the contents of The Times. Certain departments had continued for years by the force of inertia, and it was suspected by the new publisher that they no longer served any useful purpose. One of the daily features of the paper was a feuilleton, which Mr. Ochs suppressed as soon as he took charge. The paper happened on that day to be publishing the next to the last instalment of a continued story. Mr. Ochs did not want fiction, and he insisted that the story stop right there, but was persuaded to let the concluding chapters appear next day.

It is true that the largest newspaper circulation in the world has been built up by the Petit Parisien on the basis of serial fiction and human interest, and it is true that even so dignified a paper as the Temps lately gave up much of its scanty space to the serial publication of Florence Barclay's novel, "The Rosary." But, aside from the question of the difference in French and American ideas of a newspaper, it must be remembered that the American institution of the popular fiction magazine is unknown in France. The newspapers are both newspapers and fiction magazines, in effect. Whatever may or may not have been the increment in circulation gained by various American newspaper magazine sections through the publication of fiction, it may be doubted if any American paper ever accomplished much by printing fiction in its daily issue, unless it be that peculiar type of fiction which is written for and found only upon the woman's page of evening newspapers. At any rate, The Times never suffered from its abandonment of the popular fiction field to the new venture of Mr. McClure, which was just then opening a new epoch in American magazine history.

Another department which was abolished was the detailed report of prices in the commodity markets. Again Mr. Ochs found dissent from his opinion that these had no place in The Times, and that people who were interested in this item were a good deal more likely to get it out of the trade papers. So strong was the opposition of the circulation department to the abandonment of this feature that the publisher finally decided to try dropping out these reports a little at a time. A stick here and a stick there, the space given to commodity markets was reduced without any expected clamors of protest from readers who had learned to look for it every morning. At last, when four whole columns of what is technically known as "punk" had been excised from the paper, The Times did hear from a subscriber at Haverstraw, who wrote that he missed the quotations on naval stores. And that was all. It was demonstrated to be a sheer waste of valuable space.

Some of this material eventually found its way back into the paper, but in better form. Where the new management found a legitimate field of the news which existing papers had left uncovered it took up and gave some attention to it, but there was to be no more competition with trade journals on their own ground. And when "punk" came back, the deadening routine which had gradually deprived these old departments of their usefulness had disappeared. It is probable that by the publication of the complete court calendars, for instance, The Times has gained a considerable number of readers, and the great development of the page of business news, which began early in the history of the present administration but grew gradually through many years, has made The Times the favorite daily of many men in businesses which are served by extraordinarily good trade papers. But the entire process, both of subtraction and of addition, has been a matter of special judgment in individual cases.

an existing department seemed to be serving no useful purpose, it went out; if the addition of a new department promised to justify the effort and expense, it was introduced. How to decide what was needed and what could be abolished? Well, it is betraying no trade secret to say that this was a matter of judgment based on experience.

But the mere cutting out of dead wood was only a part, and a small part, of the work. The rise from 9000 to 350,000 was not accomplished by mere elimination of useless items, nor by tightening up the business office, establishing a sound accounting system and cutting losses. There had to be some positive achievements. One of the most useful of these was the wide advertisement of the policy expressed in the motto, "All the News That's Fit to Print." That motto, when adopted, aroused a good deal of discussion which was fostered and abetted by the management of the paper. For some months a huge electric sign at Twenty-third Street and Broadway made known to the passing throng the legend of The Times. There were some editorial expositions of the ideals expressed by the motto, and after these had made Times readers familiar with the intentions of the new publisher a prize of $100 was offered for any ten-word motto which seemed better to express those ideals. Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century, was asked to act as judge in the contest, which brought out some 20,000 suggestions, of which 150 were thought good enough to publish. The prize was given to "All the World's News, but Not a School for Scandal"; but to the editors of The Times this did not seem as satisfactory as their own device, so though the inventor of this motto got his $100, "All the News That's Fit to Print" continued to be the motto of the paper. All this attracted a certain amount of attention to the new methods on an old paper, and a certain number of readers were drawn to buy The Times and find out what all the disturbance was about. It is hardly necessary to say that the advertisement would have been useless if they had not discovered, on examining The Times, that it was living up to its promises; that it was giving the news and presenting it with sanity and decency.

Meanwhile some new and valuable features had been added to the paper. The first of these, and one of the most important, was the illustrated Sunday magazine, first published as part of the Sunday paper on September 6, 1896, three weeks after Mr. Ochs took control. Newspaper Sunday magazines in that day were distinguished chiefly by the socalled comic supplement — a feature which The Times has never had, never needed, and never desired. The magazine section, in the narrower sense of the word, was also influenced chiefly by the "vellow" journals; the type is still represented by some belated survivals, rather less flambovant than twenty-five years ago. Against this The Times offered a pictorial supplement printed on good coated paper and illustrated with half-tone photographs. It was as great an advance in its day as the more recent rotogravure pictorial supplement, and it gave a real illustrated news magazine to the New York newspaper public.

This magazine was popular from the very first.

Perhaps its greatest accomplishment was the publication of the pictures of Queen Victoria's jubilee in Fifty photographs of the procession on June 22 were bought at 10 guineas apiece from the official photographer and rushed to New York; and on July 4 The Times Illustrated Magazine published sixteen pages of them. They were not only published in The Times before any other New York paper had them, but they were well printed so that the reader could see what they were - something which a reproduction on ordinary newsprint could hardly have accomplished. That feat, which cost altogether $5000 — a considerable sum to The Times of 1897 - is still remembered in the office as one of the first of a long series of beats, and it added greatly to the reputation of the illustrated magazine. But week in and week out that magazine was widely prized; and when it was discontinued in September, 1899, after three years of existence, chiefly because The Times had attained so large a circulation that the magazine could no longer be produced by the inadequate plant then available, it left a good many mourners, who only in recent years have found an adequate substitute in the present pictorial and magazine supplements of the Sunday paper.

Perhaps the most important service of that magazine in the long run was its effect on other newspapers, many of which were inspired to imitate it. This was true in a still higher degree of the next feature of the rejuvenated Times — the Saturday Review of Books, first published on October 10, 1896, and edited then and long afterward by Francis W. Halsey. In this publication was carried out an idea of the publisher of The Times that a newspaper book review should be a literary newspaper, treating newly published books as news and containing besides other news of literary happenings. While open to criticism from several standpoints, the treating of books as news is certainly more in accordance with the function of a daily newspaper, as well as somewhat easier to do well, than more serious effort at literary criticism. And in The Times Saturday Review the news of the literary world was assembled and presented better than ever before in an American daily. Moreover, the new tabloid form, with the excellent typography and good quality of paper used, attracted the attention of readers to book news which they might have passed by in the columns of the regular edition.

As an example of the conviction of students of literature that it did meet a long-felt want may be cited the action of Professor C. Alphonso Smith, then at the Louisiana State University, who required all members of some of his classes in English literature to take The Times Book Review in order to keep up with current events in the literary field. This publication, too, has since been imitated, and in some instances improved upon, but in 1896 it was a new idea which once more made the New York public realize that something was happening on The Times. Its ultimate service to the cause of book reviewing in the United States - a cause which still needs all the help it can get, but which is considerably better off than it was in 1896 — was perhaps even greater than its contribution to the well-being of The Times.

For a considerable time, indeed, it seemed that this new publication was to be a gratuitous and disinterested contribution to American letters. found immediate favor with readers, but not with advertisers. Book publishers argued that when the book reviews were embodied in the regular news columns of the paper, as had previously been the custom, they and the adjacent advertising would be seen by the general reader; whereas if they were segregated in a special supplement they would receive the attention only of the limited and presumably impecunious section of the reading public which was interested in books. Only very slowly did the publishers realize that people who were interested in books were more likely to buy books when they had any money to buy them with than those who irritably turned over the sheet in order to escape from the book reviews to the sporting news on the next page. After the first publisher tried the experiment of advertising in the Book Review others soon followed, and before long the publication was paying its way.

There were disadvantages about the publication of the literary supplement on Saturday. It had to be in the form of loose sheets, folded into the rest of the paper. If the reader did not want the Book Review he merely opened up the paper and let the sheets flutter out — and they fluttered well. The Saturday morning paper, naturally, was read by people on their way downtown to work. Those who didn't care to carry the Book Review about with them — they rarely failed to "look over" it — let it blow away in the wind, so one morning the management of The Times was attracted, and rather aggrieved, by a cartoon in Life entitled "The Littery Supplement," and depicting a citizen desperately trying to struggle out of an elevated station through a heap of discarded sheets of The Times Saturday Book Review.

This was publicity, though not of the most favorable sort; but it was finally decided that the Book Review would go better with the Sunday paper, in most instances delivered at the home, where it could be conveniently laid aside for reading at leisure. Once more, however, the book publishers were disturbed by the change. Some of them had scruples against advertising in a Sunday paper. One or two publishers held out for a little while and insisted on advertising only in the regular issue of Saturday; but their rivals soon began to get results which gradually drew all the book advertising into the Book Review supplement to the Sunday edition.

The more recent history of The Times Book Review is another matter. Superficially, its combination with the magazine section may seem to be a reversal of the principle on which the literary supplement was originally separated from the body of the paper; but the present-day Book Review and Magazine is still in a process of development whose event, it is hoped, will justify the belief of the management of The Times that a still better literary newspaper is attainable than has ever yet been produced. If the history of the various transformations of The Times literary supplement shows anything, it shows that books are, generally speaking, bought by the people who like to read about books; and that literary advertising will bring results if placed alongside literary news, wherever that may be.

Still another feature was added to The Times on November 8, 1897, in the weekly financial review which was published for a number of years thereafter as a supplement to the Monday morning paper. Each of these additions to the paper brought new readers, and others were constantly being attracted by the slow and steady improvement of the quality of the paper.

Another innovation of the new management was the giving over of much of the space allotted to letters from readers to the views of those who disagreed with the editorial opinions of the paper. was not wholly a novelty in American journalism, but The Times now began to do it on a scale previously unknown. Not so very many years before 1896 most American newspapers (The Times among them) had been reluctant to print even news which did not accord with editorial policy. That time had passed, and the new management of The Times now made a point of opening its columns to the presentation of views on any side of any subject, as a matter of news and as a contribution to the formation of well-grounded opinion. Almost all decent newspapers do that now, but it was a novelty in the nineties.

It has, perhaps, some perils; certain inveterate self-advertisers have nothing to do but flood the columns of all newspapers with their letters, and if the editors occasionally feel that other people have a right to be heard these correspondents at once conclude that they are being suppressed for unworthy reasons. Also, if a book review opens its correspondence page to all comers, that page is likely to be filled with complaints from authors who feel that the reviewers did not do justice to their works. Nevertheless, the practice is now universally recognized as useful and necessary, an opinion which was a rarity in the days when The Times first began to invite letters from people who disagreed with it.

The editorial page was as good as ever. In the campaign of 1896, when the paper supported the Gold Democratic ticket of Palmer and Buckner, The Times's editorial arguments for sound money were powerful and effective. The publisher and the editors took the issues of that campaign so seriously that they all marched in the great gold parade, the biggest New York had ever known; and they had the satisfaction of feeling at the end of the campaign that The Times's editorial attitude had counted for a good deal in the sound money discussion. The improvement of the news columns in the direction of impartiality, which had made much progress since the secession of The Times from the Republican Party, was carried still further under a new publisher who was interested in politics only as an external observer and good citizen. The loss of subscribers had been stopped; in the first year and a half of the new management the circulation had more than doubled; and the deficit was now rapidly approaching the vanishing point.

Advertising was coming to the paper in increasing amounts. It had been the boast of Mr. Jones that no man had ever been asked to subscribe to The Times or to advertise in The Times. If he chose to do either, that was his own affair; but nobody would give him any provocation. Whatever the merits or demerits of this attitude, the time for it had passed by 1896. If a newspaper owner of that period chose to regard his paper as something which he published for his own personal pleasure there was considerable danger that the public would respect his reticence. The new management of The Times had space to sell for legitimate advertising, which in its opinion would satisfy the purchaser and give him his money's worth, and they did not regard it as beneath their dignity to tell him about it.

LOUIS WILEY, Business Manager.

Nevertheless, certain types of advertising were from the first carefully excluded. While not all patent medicines are kept out of The Times's advertising columns, the rules adopted under the new management were so strict that almost all of this matter was automatically rejected. Patent medicine advertising was much more general, of course, twenty-five years ago; today it survives in a few metropolitan journals of somewhat antediluvian standards, and is a welcome guest of many publications in the smaller towns. Some of it is legitimate advertising, but so much of it is not that The Times felt that its publication could do no good, while in many instances it did positive harm.

Word puzzles and similar schemes in which prizes were offered for something which looked easy, but was generally impossible of accomplishment, were also excluded. Persons who offered something for nothing, who guaranteed the cure of illnesses or the payment of large dividends, also found themselves compelled to display their wares in other papers. It was and is the conviction of the publisher of The Times that honesty is the best policy, and that business success cannot be securely founded on misrepresentation and fraud. There is doubtless a considerable part of the public which will always be too stupid to know that it is being deceived, or too listless to care; but The Times was not aiming at that class of readers.

It has sometimes been objected that discrimination against objectionable advertising should logically be carried to the point of investigating all advertising before publication. The Times does not do this. It does investigate all advertisements as to which it has any reason to entertain suspicion; and if the suspicion remains after investigation, even though nothing is proved, the reader is given the benefit of the doubt and the advertising is excluded. principles above mentioned result in the wholesale exclusion from The Times of those classes of advertisements in which there is most likely to be misrepresentation. In other fields a sharp watch is maintained for fraudulent advertising, with results which may be fully appreciated if The Times's financial advertising, for example, be compared with that of some of its contemporaries.

Elimination of questionable material is, of course, considerably easier in financial than in mercantile advertising. In this latter field it has seemed to The Times that the exercise of ordinary vigilance is about all that can be expected of a newspaper. The newspaper may do a good deal in the suppression of improper claims by advertisers, but it cannot do all the reader's thinking.

Two instances of rejection of advertising by The Times, very early in the history of the present management, deserve special notice. As permitted, though not enjoined, by the election laws of 1896, the Board of Aldermen in that year voted that the complete canvass of the vote in the city should be published in six daily newspapers. The Times was one of the six papers selected, but it promptly attacked the decision as a waste of public money and urged that publication be confined to the one paper mandatory under the law - which would not have been The Times. This report was of enormous volume, and its publication, at the ordinary rates, would have brought to every paper carrying it some $33,600 - a total of over $200,000. The Times needed $33,-600 rather badly just then, but it declined the advertisement in an editorial which called the election canvass "a waste of public money." The members of the Board of Aldermen professed to be startled and horrified by the discovery that the expense would be so heavy. Certainly they were horrified by this proclamation to the public that so much money was being thrown away, and the publication was finally reduced to the smallest amount permitted by law, none of which came to The Times - a result, of course, which had been expected.

Some months later all the regular advertising of the city government was unexpectedly offered to The Times. This amounted to about $150,000 a year, a sum which would have made a tremendous difference to The Times of that period. Moreover, assurances were brought to the management of the paper by a gentleman who was a friend both of the publisher and of the Tammany leaders that this offer was made with absolutely no strings. It was neither the expectation nor the desire of Tammany that The Times should feel itself influenced in any way, and it was understood that the allotment of the advertising did not in any way involve a modification of The Times's general hostility to Tammany in local politics. The only reason for this sudden windfall, said the gentleman who brought the news, was the conviction of the Tammany leaders that it was a good thing for the general interests of the Democratic Party to have a conservative Democratic paper maintained in New York City. That paper's feelings about Tammany did not enter into the case.

The publisher of The Times had entire confidence in the good faith of the gentleman who gave him these assurances, and saw no need for questioning the good faith of the Tammany leaders. whether or not their intentions were honorable, their proposal was unacceptable. It was asking too much of human nature to suppose that thereafter when The Times had reason to attack Tammany, as it certainly would (its exposures of graft payments for gambling-house protection were not very far in the future), the subconscious, if not the conscious minds of those in The Times office might be affected by the thought that $150,000 was at stake. By that time the paper might have got accustomed to living on a higher scale, and would have missed the $150,000 more than if it had never had it. Moreover, The Times was still far behind its rivals in circulation. If this considerable revenue were suddenly awarded to the smallest in circulation of New York morning papers, everybody would believe that Tammany had bought The Times, no matter how pure the motives of the organization or of the paper's management. The shadow was as bad as the substance, in this case; from any point of view the offer was unacceptable.

Years later, in Mayor McClellan's administration, The Times was designated for a large part of the city advertising—the greater part mandatory in connection with condemnation proceedings in the matter of the Ashokan water supply. By that time the paper's circulation was large, and was growing by leaps and bounds. Its revenues were also large and increasing; there could no longer be any serious suspicion that The Times had reason to sell its soul for advertising patronage, and its selection as an advertising medium was a natural choice, for that selection had in the meantime been made by great numbers of private advertisers who had found that advertising in The Times would sell their goods.

Principles of this sort temporarily cost the paper a good deal of money. But on the whole it was fighting its way slowly back to prosperity. In its antagonism to "yellow" journalism it was beginning to find a good many friends. It was not alone in its attack upon the methods of The Journal and The World; The Sun and The Press, for example, made much more of a crusade out of it. But their effort was chiefly destructive; they devoted a good deal of space to attacks upon the personalities and practices of the "yellow" press. The Times was less concerned in holding up to the public view infamies already quite apparent to those who were capable of being disturbed by them than in demonstrating to persons who did not like "yellow" journalism that The Times was the sort of paper they wanted.

The "yellows" fought back, of course. The World graciously referred to some of its journalistic critics as "doomed rats struggling in a pit," and endeavored to make it clear that a monopoly of journalistic purity was possessed by The World. In The World's opinion. The Times was owned by the trusts; it had been bought up by Wall Street speculators for their own selfish purposes. The basis of this legend, started in a quarter where it would probably be promptly repudiated today, was the very moderate amount of obligations of The Times held by certain bankers mentioned in the earlier part of this chapter. The World, of course, saw some advantages in circulating the suspicion that Mr. Ochs was not solely directing The Times, and it chose to regard him. and to speak of him, as "caretaker of the deficit."

The Times was making its way, slowly, but with increasing sureness among those who were disturbed by the tendencies of The World and The Journal. It was advertised by the assertion that "It does not soil the breakfast cloth." And this negative virtue no less than its positive excellences was winning it new readers all the time. Mr. Jason Rogers of The New York Globe has said that "If ever a newspaper was built brick upon brick, through the recommendation of one reader to a friend who was not yet reading, The New York Times was so built." This description, which could be generally applied to the growth of The Times in the last twenty-five years, is especially accurate as a description of the paper's recovery in its first year and a half under the new management. It might have gone on growing at this steady pace, with no sudden mutations of fortune, had it not been for an event which, if not exactly unforeseen, could hardly have been provided against, which subjected the paper to an almost ruinous strain, and put it in jeopardy from which there was no escape but by the desperate expedient that, almost overnight, made its fortune. This event was the Spanish War.

The very first issue of The Times, on September 18, 1851, had carried an editorial on the Cuban question. Crittenden's filibusters, who had gone to aid the Lopez rebellion, had lately been captured and shot, and the rising itself had been put down. The Times saw in the failure of the Lopez rising proof that the Cubans did not want independence, and it opposed the annexationist agitation of that day on very solid grounds. For of course the Cuban question, in the fifties, was only part of the larger question of the slave empire of the Golden Circle. Annexation was desired by those who wanted another slave state, and opposed in the North precisely because that was the motive of those who wanted it. Even the article above referred to took a couple of paragraphs to explain that Americans would always sympathize with any people struggling to be free.

By 1898 the Cuban question was on a wholly different basis. Cuba was no longer a partisan interest in American politics, nor was there any doubt as to the popular support of the revolution which had begun in 1895. The Times had held in Cleveland's Administration, and in the first year of McKinley's, that the distress and disorder in the island must be ended, and that if they could not be ended by Spain on a basis satisfactory to Cuba there might be need of American intervention. As the situation became more critical The Times editorial page discussed the right of intervention according to international law, coming to the conclusion that the United States Government would undoubtedly be justified in taking that step, should it prove impossible to settle the Cuban question by other means, on the ground of safeguarding the peace and safety of our own people who could not be persuaded to sit quietly by while the Cubans were fighting for freedom. President McKinley afterward acknowledged that these articles had been of great value in helping him to clarify his own views about the rights and duties of our Government in the crisis. In the weeks leading up to the declaration of war The Times had maintained a temperate attitude, hoping that some satisfactory solution might be reached without hostilities, but insisting that the Cuban question must now be settled, and finally settled. When the course of the war brought unexpected acquisitions of territory in the Pacific and the Caribbean, The Times could see little merit in the arguments of the anti-imperialists. In its opinion there was not much use talking about the desirability of expansion. Expansion had happened; it had come as an incident in an apparently inevitable historical development; and it had to be accepted as a fact. Mr. Bryan's zealous anti-imperialism only reinforced in the minds of the editors of The Times the impression that his attitude on the currency had already created, and his personality and the two major issues which he had selected led The Times to give its support to the Republican Presidential ticket in 1900, for the first time in sixteen years.

But if The Times's editorial reaction to the issues of the Spanish War honorably carried on the traditions of the paper's history, the other departments found the war all but disastrous. Advertising fell off ruinously in the spring and summer of 1898, when a good many excitable persons expected to be awakened any morning by the roar of Cervera's guns bombarding Coney Island. This loss, borne by all the papers, naturally fell with particular weight on the one which was just beginning to struggle back to financial security. The Times, indeed, managed to enliven the early period of the conflict by a private war of its own with certain advertisers. The North German Lloyd Steamship Company had sold a vessel to the Spanish Government, for use as a troopship or converted cruiser. The Times observed editorially that whatever the legal aspects of this sale of war material to the enemy, it was pretty poor business in the North German Lloyd thus to affront the people which was its best customer. This observation stirred up a too zealous official of that company not only to withdraw his own advertising from The Times, but to endeavor to persuade other steamship lines to follow his example, on the ground that this was unwarranted and intolerable criticism of a foreign transportation company.

This coming to the attention of The Times, its editors were moved to the comment, several times repeated on the editorial page, that this transaction involved something which looked very much like criminal conspiracy. The right of the North German Lloyd to withdraw its own advertising was conceded, but when it attempted to form a combination against The Times it was taking a pretty long chance. The German line had chosen a highly unpopular issue, and before long friends of its managers were coming to The Times office and begging the paper to let up on them. The attempted combination was abandoned. Even if the German line had been successful, the loss of steamship advertising would have made no very great diminution in the income of any newspaper; but just then, in 1898, The Times needed all it could get — and indeed a good deal more.

Nor was it able to recover any of the lost ground on the basis of enormous increases in circulation. Some increase there was; The Times was growing from week to week — but growing slowly. And the war had suddenly forced it into a situation where it could not hope to compete against its more prosperous rivals.

The Spanish-American War was probably, from the viewpoint of a certain type of newspaper man, the most convenient war ever fought. It was a little war; it was a short war, and it was near at hand. Nor had there been any great conflicts in recent years which might have overshadowed it or enabled the country to view it in proper perspective. And, though the fighting was on a small scale, the issues were indeed important — important to the whole country. Here was a war, almost on the front doorstep, in which a people which had been at peace for a third of a century had an overwhelming interest. This alone made it a tremendous news story. Moreover, it did not last long enough for the enthusiasm of the early weeks to be cooled. It was brilliantly successful; there were no defeats to sober the country, no long casualty lists to divert attention. Its history could be, and was, what was called a few years later a "glory story."

And, above all, it was a war on a small scale. It was not so big that the doings of the armies overshadowed the competitive enterprise of the newspapers. As a happy hunting ground for war correspondents it has seldom been equaled. The armadas of dispatch boats loaded with reporters, feature writers and photographers sent down by some of the New York papers were about as formidable as Sampson's fleet, and their doings took up pretty nearly as much space in dispatches. As for the campaigns ashore, the readers of some papers might justifiably have been in doubt whether the war was primarily a field for the doings of eminent personages who had volunteered from civil life or a convenient arrangement for exploitation of the famous correspondents who happened to write about the eminent personages. The fact that a battle had been fought, and that we had won it, was less important than that Mr. A, the renowned politician, and Mr. B, the noted Yale halfback, had taken part in the battle; and this again was of less consequence (according to some newspapers) than that the doings of Mr. A and Mr. B had been reported by the famous correspondent X, and depicted by the celebrated artist Y. And before the public had time to tire of this sort of thing the war was over, and everybody but the few thousand victims of "canned horse" and the Cuban climate had come home.

In all this The Times had no part, for the painful reason that it had no money. It was laboriously paying its way; it could manage to meet current expenses, but it could not plunge into any of the wild expenditures undertaken by the more prosperous New York papers. As an example of what those papers which could afford it were doing may be mentioned The Herald's dispatch of some 2000 words on the night of July 3, which alone of special dispatches to individual newspapers brought, in time for publication next morning, the details of the destruction of Cervera's fleet. It was filed at Port Antonio, Jamaica, for transmission via Kingston and Panama, and to take precedence of the hundreds of thousands of words of press dispatches piled up at the Port Antonio telegraph office it was sent at double the commercial rates, prepaid, the total cost being $3.25 a word, paid in gold.

The Times could not do this or anything like it. Even dispatch boats and special cables were an impossible luxury. When the news came The Times displayed it as intelligently and satisfactorily as anybody, and its editorial comment on the news was sound and well informed; but the news itself was everybody's news—it came from The Associated Press. The Times did, indeed, have a little mail correspondence, but that counted for nothing in a time when the victories of Schley and Shafter were less important in themselves than the opportunities which they afforded for shrieking headlines, signed cablegrams in twelve-point full face and smudgy pictures by staff artists. The Times was still a good newspaper, but it couldn't compete in calling the attention of the public to its excellence.

RESTORATION OF THE TIMES, 1896–1900

So the end of the war found the management of The Times facing the possibility that the work of the past two years had been in vain. The meagre hundred thousand dollars of operating capital with which Mr. Ochs had started was gone, and the receipts of the paper, though gradually improving, were not sufficient to make it up. It was apparent that something had to be done, but when the publisher put forward his idea of the proper remedy many people thought that it meant sudden and irretrievable ruin. He proposed to cut the price to one cent. It had been forty-seven years since The Times had sold at that price, and the one-cent field among morning newspaper readers had long been left to The World and The Journal. It had come to be the general opinion that that was the sort of thing people wanted for one cent; that those who thought that no newspaper was worth more than that would be quite content with what was offered them and had no appetite for anything else.

The publisher thought otherwise. It was his belief that a great many people who found the difference between three dollars and ten dollars for a year's newspaper bills sufficient to be worth considering were reading The World and The Journal only because they were cheap. Give them a choice and a good many of them might prefer a paper of the character which The Times had established. It was not to be doubted that there were a good many objections to the proposal. There would be an immediate and considerable decrease in circulation revenue, though at the low price of paper in those days it would still be possible for The Times to get more than enough income from a one-cent circulation to pay for the paper on which the news was printed. The question, of course, was whether the circulation would increase sufficiently to bring in advertising. There was a danger that advertisers who had been used to regarding The Times as appealing to a constituency small in quantity but high in quality would come to the conclusion that it had merely lowered the quality without corresponding increase in quantity. What The Times hoped to do was to increase the quantity while retaining the same quality.

In other words, it did not expect to cut in on the natural field of The World and The Journal. It was not going to be a "yellow" journal; it was not going to compete for the favor of those who wanted "yellow" journals. Mr. Ochs said in an interview published in a trade paper a few months later (January, 1899):

Such papers as The World and The Journal exist because the public wants them. I hold that some of their features are open to criticism, but each of them has done infinitely more good than harm.

It was quite clear to the publisher of The Times that there was a large part of the one-cent public which wanted precisely what it was getting for one cent. The question which could be decided only by trial was whether there might be also a part of the one-cent public that wanted something of a different sort. And The Times resolved to find out.

RESTORATION OF THE TIMES, 1896-1900

In the editorial announcement of the change of price on October 10, 1898, some of the aspects of the matter as they appeared to The Times management were stated as follows:

It is the price of the paper, not its character, that is changed. In appealing to a larger audience The Times by no means proposes to offend the taste or forfeit the confidence of the audience it now has, already large, discriminating, and precious to it as lifelong friends. That statement we make in full sincerity and with firm resolution. We wish to make it with all possible emphasis, so that no reader of The Times in the past need scan the columns of this morning's issue, or of any subsequent issue, with the least misgiving or apprehension lest the reduction in price may be concurrent with a lowering in tone and quality. The old readers of The Times and the new shall find it a clean, truthful, carefully edited newspaper at one cent, a paper that recognizes its obligation to give its readers all the news, but values its own good name and their respect too highly to put before them the untrue or the unclean, or to affront their intelligence and their good taste with freaks of typographic display or reckless sensationalism. . . .

During the past two years The Times has made a large advance in circulation. . . . No paper, however, ever increases in circulation fast enough to satisfy its conductors. It has seemed to the management of The Times that while the growth of its sales was steady and substantial, it was too slow; that, while its circulation has reached a large figure for a newspaper of its character, it ought to be larger. . . .

The proposition that many thousands of persons in this city of three and one-half million souls buy and read one-cent newspapers chiefly on account of their price and not on account of their character and quality seemed sound. We believe these thousands would like to read a newspaper of the character and quality of The Times in preference to, or let us generously suppose in conjunction with, the papers they have been reading. The Times has determined to extend its appeal beyond those readers with whom quality is indispensable and price a matter of no consequence to the presumably much larger number of persons to whom both price and quality are of consequence.

This emphasis on the unaltered character and quality of the paper now offered at one third of the former price was terribly necessary. Many readers would be certain to feel that only a "yellow" paper could be produced for one cent and would look with cynical eagerness for the expected deterioration in quality. Indeed, this view seems to have been held by some people in The Times office. On the night the change was announced one of the reporters came in with what he joyfully heralded to the night city editor as "a beautifully sensational story." It did not appear in the paper; indeed, the publisher afterward observed that he wouldn't have had a "sensational" story in that day's issue for any consideration. And, little by little, doubting readers of The Times became convinced that their fears were needless. It was the same paper they had been getting; nothing had been changed but the price.

THE PRESENT HOME, THE TIMES ANNEX, WEST 43RD ST.—TIMES SQUARE.

RESTORATION OF THE TIMES, 1896-1900

Some unfriendly comment, however, was occasioned by the change, and for other reasons. must have been known to anybody in the newspaper business in New York that the editorial observation of October 10 that "it has seemed to the management of The Times that while the growth of its sales was steady and substantial, it was too slow," was certainly not an overstatement. Newspaper men pretty generally suspected what was indeed the fact, that The Times had virtually been driven to the step; and there were some who ungenerously attributed it to base reasons. A gubernatorial campaign was going on at the time, and the newspaper was supporting Augustus Van Wyck, the Democratic candidate. The suspicion not unnaturally sprang up in many minds that this reduction of income was only possible because there was some compensating revenue which had suddenly been opened to the paper. Only one newspaper, The Evening Mail, came boldly out and said that The Times had been subsidized by Tammany; and when The Times promptly called that paper to account, it as promptly apologized. But the suspicion persisted among some readers, and one of them, who was frank enough to express his opinions in a letter to the editor, was answered by an editorial statement which pointed out that it would be rather transparently stupid to take this step in the middle of a political campaign if its reason were that which the political position of the paper might suggest.

Stronger than the conviction that The Times had sold out to Tammany was the belief of most practical newspaper men that this meant the beginning of the end. The changes of price in the eighties, which had such unhappy results, were recalled, and it seemed to be the general conviction that The Times would find it impossible to retain its quality at one cent. The Tribune and The Herald, whose comments on the change were in a friendly tone which bore evidence of the more civilized spirit which was coming into New York journalism, nevertheless expressed their conviction that high quality could not long be given at low price. One may surmise that their conviction was perhaps strengthened by the fear that if it were possible, their own readers might wonder why they couldn't do it; and though the suspicion is perhaps ungenerous, one cannot help feeling that the friendly tone of their references to the subject was perhaps due to the conviction that this meant the speedy disappearance of an old rival.

More gratifying to The Times, among the numerous remarks on the change in other papers, were those of The Philadelphia Record, which expressed a belief based on its own experience that The Times would find, as The Record had found, that it was possible to be both decent and cheap. Since The Record, selling at one cent, was at that time one of the most profitable newspaper properties in the country, this encouragement was welcome as a hopeful token of what might be ahead of The Times.

And The Record's prediction was right. At first the reduction applied only to sales in the city; outof-town customers still paid three cents, as they had paid before. But with the announcement came an immediate demand from these subscribers for a reduction of The Times to two cents out of town. which was the price charged in those parts for The World and The Journal. It had been the intention to make this change eventually; it had been delayed because the presses were barely able to take care of the increased city circulation anticipated from the reduction. But the protests of out-of-town subscribers made it apparent almost at once that there was opportunity to make great gains in that field The change was made one week after the original announcement, with the assistance of other papers who lent The Times the use of part of their mechanical plant until its own could be appropriately expanded. It might be remarked for the benefit of the nonprofessional reader that newspapers have always, even in the days of their most bitter vituperation of each other, been ready for such reciprocal assistance in case of any really serious need - a fact which might have suggested to their readers long before the smoke began to blow away that a good deal of the harsh language was emitted merely for the joy of battle.

The Times's circulation began to jump. It no longer climbed slowly and laboriously; it vaulted from pinnacle to pinnacle. Less than a month showed that the reduction of price had done all that had been hoped, and it continued to do more in the following months. The most skeptical eventually had to admit that the quality of The Times was as good as ever — indeed, better than ever, for the renewed prosperity of the paper made it possible to spend more money for news. And the gain in circulation was astounding. In September, 1898, the daily average circulation was 25,726. In September, 1899, one year later, it was 76,260. There are few if any parallels to this sudden rise in American newspaper history.

The gain in advertising was commensurate. 1898 the advertisements printed amounted to 2,433,-193 agate lines. In 1899 they had risen to 3,378,750. And the increase had not been accompanied by any loss in character. Some of the advertisers supposed that the drive at a one-cent circulation meant reduction of rates, since the increase in circulation might be offset by the lower buying power of the new readers. It did not seem so to the management of The Times; in a single month, shortly after the change, more than $50,000 worth of advertising was refused because it was offered below the regular rates of the paper. The Times was preparing to build up a high-class constituency at a low price. It succeeded amazingly, and long before it had achieved the full measure of its intent the late Andrew Carnegie, as shrewd a judge of values as ever came from Scotland, pronounced it "the best cent's worth in the world."

It may be admitted that when the change was made it was not supposed by the management of The Times that the one-cent price would be long retained. Newspapermen in the latter part of 1898 knew that The World and The Journal, by their enormously expensive competition, which came to a climax in the covering of the Spanish War, had eaten heavily into their profits. The fight was beginning to cost more than it was worth, and it was generally understood that the papers were preparing, by agreement, to raise their price to two cents. When that time came, The Times was going to two cents with them; but the management believed that it would be more profitable to come up to two cents than down to it — that most of the readers who had learned to like The Times at one cent would stay with it when the price was increased, especially as there would be no one-cent morning papers left. But The World and The Journal, faced with this sudden and amazingly vigorous competition in their own field, did not dare to try it; they were quite possibly afraid that if they went to two cents The Times would stay at one cent and attract many of their readers. As suggested above, the publisher of The Times was not of this opinion; but since his competitors stuck to the old price he did the same, and there was no change until the unprecedented expenses of the World War, nearly twenty years afterward, forced all the morning papers to go back to two cents.

RESTORATION OF THE TIMES, 1896-1900

From the morning of October 10, 1898, the prosperity of The Times was assured. It had turned the corner and the old penniless days were soon to become only a memory. It was thereafter only a question of the degree of the paper's success, and it presently increased beyond the dream of any one in the office. Of the fact of success there was never, from the end of 1898, any doubt.

Though the rate of progress was slower for a few years after that, the progress was without intermission. So well was The Times getting ahead that the paper was able in 1900 to undertake at an expense of $50,000 the publication of a special edition at the Paris Exposition. This younger sister of The New York Times, to which it bore a very strong family likeness, was published within the Exposition grounds in June, July, August, September and October under the editorship of George W. Ochs, a brother of the publisher. It showed the French a good deal about American newspaper methods and aroused their respect, even if it did not excite their emulation, and it furnished American visitors to the Exposition with a plentiful supply of home news and world news such as they were quite unable to get from the old established competing publication which devoted most of its space to the doings of the European aristocracy and the mathematical perplexities of the Old Lady from Philadelphia. It was a good newspaper, and it was an excellent advertisement for The New York Times.

By this time, however, The Times was getting to the stage where it hardly needed any longer to advertise itself. Its reputation was attending to the advertising. The general belief among the newspaper men of 1896 that The Times could not be revived had been so strong that some of the paper's competitors did not realize that it was catching up with them until it was some distance ahead.

The old United Press, which had been maintained at heavy expense by The Sun, The Herald, The Tribune and The Times, and whose drain on The Times's resources had done a good deal to bring the paper into its financial misfortunes, went to pieces soon after the new management assumed control of The Times. The Times, The Herald and The Tribune at once applied for admission to The Associated Press, then incorporated under the laws of Illinois, and The Herald and The Tribune were admitted with full rights and privileges, but The Times was able to get in only as a sort of stepchild. on what was known as a Class B membership, with no right of protest. Fortunately for the paper, the Supreme Court of Illinois decided in 1900 that The Associated Press was a public utility and compelled to furnish its news to anybody. This forced a reorganization under the laws of New York. Mr. Ochs, through his Chattanooga Times membership, was one of the leading members of The Associated Press and had been active in the work of the organization. Now that there was to be a reorganization in New York, The Times received full membership, and he was welcomed to the councils of the leaders and became one of the charter members of the new body. And for twenty years past he has been a member of the Board of Directors and of its Executive Committee.

RESTORATION OF THE TIMES, 1896-1900

By that time the prosperity of The Times was securely established, and the reorganization committee was dissolved on July 1, 1900. The 3876 shares which had been held until the publisher should have made the paper pay its way for three consecutive years were transferred to him. The experiment, regarded as hopeless by all the experts, had succeeded in less than four years, and it was already evident that bigger things were chead. In this recovery many men played their parts, but the contribution of the new publisher may be suggested by the remark made, years later, by one of the veterans of The Times staff: "He found the paper on the rocks, and made them foundation stones."

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

THE WEATHER.

VOL. LVIII ... NO. 18,856.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1909.-TWENTY PAOES.

Warmer, increasing cloudiness to-day; showers to-morrow.

sgiven to the world.

Dressait Pera Poshito Glassest Affer. Cook has no peord in CoronWhen it was surgarded to him that hagen to give the nuiversity, and if the could a man be ruined by popular syldence whatever, as Prof. Stromsren SAYS "! HAVE COOK NAILED"

Cables His Wife Not to Worry common casiling him an imposter when About the Ooctor's Claim

another friend the day after he isnded dence from one of the most distinguished men of science in Europe, whose word cannot be doubted, and Frederick Cook himself. I will give briefly the giet of two remarkable interviews, first with Dr. do Querlain

here that he hoped there would be no whose store cannot no counters, obting the hoped there would be no who still believes, or the store with the victors of and 1 had had evidence from the cycle. The number of the property that he had found some precedent Cook humani. I will yet SOOK TO ASK FOR AN INOUIRY

Pesry's men in possession of one of Says He Will Submit His Ob- his depots and had turned them out

It is settled that Cook will send a ship back to bring to America the two gervations to Competent Scientists.

DOUBT OF HIS STORY GROWS

Sook's Supporters Hare and Through. out Europe Orestly Worried by His Failure to Refute Peary.

Other men of the tribe corroborate

Cas Sapply Them.

Liefs statements. Kindly give this seems to seem the seems to all home and foreign news 2000- measure to all home and foreign news 2000- measure to an east of the seems to seem the seems the He did not get out of sight of land. Other men of the tribe corroborate

| Cape Columbia 4 | SUMMARY OF NORTH POLAR EXPEDITION | Rosewelt April 27. | Det Gare Dust is Part that the days being being and my operated of THE DEADY.

This message from commander the poor, he proves to the poor of the Cape Columbia April 23, arriving on board

Tread not be seen. He had a be seen. He had a be seen. He had a be seen as had a be seen. He had a be seen which he had seen to be seen and be seen and be seen and be seen and be seen as the seen of seen and seen and seen and seen and seen and seen and seen as the seen of seen and seen as the seen of seen and seen as the seen as the seen of seen as the The Roosevelt left Cape Sheridan July 18;

OF HIS SUCCESSFUL VOYACE TO THE NORTH POLE Two Eskimos Cited by Cook Told proces that he had valued the smooth swaptibles and a shall prove the facility of the world.

Pagary He Never Went Fair world.

Pagary He Never Went Fair world.

Pagary He Never Went Fair world. COOK NOT NEAR POLE, SAYS PEARY; | COMMANDER PEARYS PRELIMINARY ACCOUNT PROOFS STILL HELD BACK BY COOK

the removed unities by made a settletic limition stays. We are notified that the control of the Full Report-Record of His Swift Progress to the Utmost North his chances of proving his case might committee which is to make the examwas gatistied without proof or evidenc he has proved to the case wheth commer it has arrived to the relief profess of Marvin, of Cornell, Drawned on April 10, Forty-five Miles North of Cape and was possibled, and has been selected as a part of the content of the cape of th at Cape Columbia March 1; passed British record March 2: delayed by open water March 2 and 3; held up by open water March 4 to 11; crossed NOTICE TO PUBLISHES.

Columbia, While Leading the Supporting Party.

tha 84th parallel March 11; encountered upen lead March 15; crossed 85th parallel March 18; crossed 86th parallel March 23d; encountered the coloring particulary recent by Companies of the message of the message of the recent properties of the New York Companies of the New York Companies of the recent of Companies the New York Companies of the New York Companie gy the pennitics for visiniton of this form of engyshibt include imprisonment for any person nicial or absential visities. isst stage of his journey to the pole they speck correspondent of a London isse stage of his journey to the pole the specks correspondent of a London as well as some of the party who were logarithe forms of the London seen back when the start of the last jail, The following questions were and joint Director of the Swize Centrol Meteorological Institute, This inter-Chief of the Swins-German expedition Eskimos who accompenied him on the view was before three witnesses and open lead March 23d; passed Norwegian record

The state of the s

The sledge expedition left the Roosevelt Reb- tude in command or the ROBERT E. PEARY. MAP SHOWING PEARY'S ROUTE TO THE, POLE STRAIT LAND SEA DAVIS EAST CHEENLANDA GREENLAND G R E ENI ARCTIC OCEAN BAFFIN BAY AUG. 187 1908 AE TURNED AUG. 26 1909 ruary 15, 1909, and started for the North. Arrived LAND ANCASTER SOUR NORTH POLE * APRE 27 A POLE S BOOTHIN-GULF/ 110 PEARY! Railly, Florel Downtown Rentagran, Orabil Opens and music spee & avg. 14-18 Tork Pl.—Adv. Walte and Grees Sdir, Excerding Very low lares Sapt. 11th to Oct. 16. City Tacket Office, 171 Breatway. Booklet free. -Adv. Lattet Shipping News.
Arrived-Steamer Pepcsylvania, Hatte-burg, Aug. 23 . "I have in Copenhagen seaults of my observations only, but my instruments Cook himself. This reorging I put the "Have you any original observations and the workidg out of thy observations have been packed with great care you not shown your obevidence. The essential point to the above interview to Cook's serious to following questions to bim in the pres-"At first Cook refused to answer Didn't Tell of Mysifug Ramanson. The tater part of his elatement is hands I first saw this lotler. I heard the words that Mr. Rasmumen does not believe to Cook's cinim. They have This, however, to not pare of my main show Querlein bis observations after his premise to do so, and Quarisin's state ment that Cook's instruments and mos Cakimes who knew two men who socempanied Cook and believes Cook has startling. Cook nessy referred to bis neeting with Rasmussen upon his diction of Cook upon a material point, "Has he brought his instruments in of his books have been sent to Amorie by way of Greenland. I now come were sow tail of the most targlate with him?" double, The lecture was a fixed of the "He had a seatant and chronomer-"He told me it was a hetter sextant and from the lips of Mrs. Rasmuss "I have not done so because I pro of the latter frem the pole, has recelfavorable evidence of Coek's elong in Continued on Page 3. this question. He then said ence of Comta de Lesdain. repealed that to others. In Copenhagen?"

"No, he sent them to America." instruments before the value of the ob-"Strictly openium, that is so."
After this interview, in which every anayor was drawn painfully and soluct servations can be proved?

within twenty-four hours they tuced the strongest evidence of his ild denounce him se an imposter.

"BERT."

tell the truth. De. de Querlain stgraed a antly from k man destring in chiefd his friend but compelled by ornacience to sequment to which he made this reskable statement. The following an recognise that Cook, with whon Hans Reeds, bus given me the impersome time with Cook after the entuwell how to take observations. will produce any proofs within Immediately after that declaration Copenhagen. The effect was immediatily seen in the Danish newspapers. They fad upbeld Dr. Gook, and had Cook an Impostor?" and Danish fournalists came to interview the English. hibeling. That was the only amuting

one with articles

nouncement that will effortually dispel fact that I reached the note.

joint tribunal of the scientific bo submit at the

must prevell I will

Cook's raply to Commander Peary: maid test night when I heard of Comhas been to the north pole, I believe " I am willing to place facts, figures. of the world. In due course I shall be perpared to make public an anknowing that I am right and that right Won't Eafer late a Controversy.

Still Declares He Has Proofs-With-COPENHAGEN, Sept. 8-This is Dr.

holds Them, Despite Urging.

COOK DEMANDS A TRIBUNAL

Me calls me his enemy, but I have no will any honestly that I am filled with If he is an imposior he is also a very things to do. I had first of all to see Cook himself and sek him what he had "I shall say very little about what Peary says. It does not matter to me. I must now say that this man Frednal animosity against bim, and & I had many erick Cook, is the most remarkable, sey about Peary's words. He said Wait a little while and you will see." ing in a day which had been titing and too strannous. rener time my full atory to the court to last resort-the people of the world. "I will not enter into any controeary, further than to say that if he reray over the subject with Con

been to the pole.

among the grantest impostors of the world, That and not the discovery of the north pole thall be his claim to brave man-a man with such lean nerve, such mirmenlous self-control, and ble game, that he will count for ever auch magnificent courses in private property of either Coldmander him, my reply to that Peary took my previous, obtaining them from the gaged by me were paid ten times what "As to the story that Commander Peary says I took provided a stored by restodian on the ples that I had been so long absent that he was going to irganite relief stations for me to oass skould he alive. For this I have says I have taken his Eskimos my reare owned by nobody and are not the ply is that Enkines are nomads.

Here was this man doubted by all who had seclaimed him a here, with his story strongly, discented by Peury. ses by the almost certain possibility In Copenhagen beyond the lot of any other private person, has been read here with feelings of anazement and Coming an quickly apen other dra-Dr. Cook had schieved the triumph for which he has been felod and honored Convern in Copenhages. mendar Peary's dispatch Socumentary proof."

by , ctreumstantial evidence

I was in the same room with him for he took a cup of tes and still he smilled. given by the explorers and eclentlate the world, defind criticism, and smiled two hours to-day, a drawing room into which name a strain of distinguished these were deep lines apon his face, Now what its Cook's spawer' to the challenge of Peary; to that ultimatum and smiling. . He was haggard, but'his hand was perfectly Pin as But Dr. Cook himself seems in

" Why have will produce my observations and records and instruments before the university to-morrow. They shall see Denmark? His answer is: anged in the slightest from the day is and at Copenharen. The Point of Vive for Theliase-Pulta feet rep-tant in from the DAY LING assement. Send for sealth: Water Partners pool noor Heritoir Eige-Dr. Cook's friends had urged him to fronted to-light peth telegrams from their utmost to make any etalement possible for the public, but he had said epeatedly that all he had to say for the present was that he possessed

mander Peary had denjunced

ly a story of the imagination, wildly improbable and unsupported by a shred of scientific facts, that those many anplocars who were present in this city of explorers and who stood by Cook of there went to Cook saily this mornfirst magnitude and neemed so blylous-Me., yesterday, telling her not to worry about Dr. Cook's assertions: " Qood morning. Delayed by Don't let Cook story worry " Vie Cape Ray, N. F., Sept. 8.

" Indian Herbor, Labrador, ron. Have him nailed.

CHAPTER II

Conservatism, Independence, Democracy: 1900-1914

ON September 18, 1901, The Times celebrated its golden jubilee, which was commemorated on September 25 in a special historical supplement whose publication was deferred for a week on account of the funeral of President McKinley. The advertisements published in that supplement, 224 in number, were all representative of firms which had been doing business in New York City on September 18, 1851, and ever since, a convincing demonstration that even in this city of rapid and enormous changes there was still a commercial substratum of old traditions with prospects of something like permanence. In the editorial comment on the anniversary there was of course some discussion of the changes in the character of journalism between 1851 and 1901, the chief of which was the extensive publication by papers at the beginning of the twentieth century of what may be called "personal news," the chronicle of happenings in the lives of individuals themselves of no great importance. The reading public had become interested not only in the big news, in public affairs and events of great importance, but in the reporting of things on which the reader could make the comment, "That might have happened to me."

It might have been supposed in 1901 that the development of the art of news-getting in future decades would be chiefly in this same direction. But the editors of The Times suspected even then that this was not wholly true, for in their editorial remarks on the future of the paper they gave their principal attention to the "alliance for mutual benefit" which had just been concluded with The London Times—an arrangement of which more will presently be said—by which The New York Times obtained all rights to the world news service of its English contemporary. Said a Times editorial article on the jubilee day:

The occasional triumph known in the lingo of journalism as a "beat" may shed a fleeting lustre on the name of a newspaper. Of those The Times has had its share in the half century of its life. But the daily habit of gathering into its columns from the four corners of the earth all the news which vigilance and faithful effort can obtain and in which intelligent minds are likely to be interested gives enduring character and reputation and determines the public judgment.

And indeed the remarkable growth of The Times in the following years was largely due to its diligence in obtaining, and sound judgment in handling, the big news, much of it foreign news. This had been notably true even before the outbreak of the war of 1914–1918 gave to American journalism a test from which The Times emerged perhaps more brilliantly than any of its competitors. Even so early as 1901 it was apparent that the American people were in the world, whether they liked it or not;

that the long introversion of the decades after the Civil War had at last come to an end. The world was visibly drawing into a closer interrelation, and the years between 1901 and 1914 were to see the development of a peaceful internationalism, an assimilation of all nations, or at least of the upper and middle classes of all nations, to a common standard of life, such as had not been known since the Roman Empire broke down.

It was to be the destiny of The Times to find its most brilliant opportunities in responding to the demands of this new age for news from far wider fields than those in which the majority had had any interest in the latter part of the nineteenth century. The isolation of the seventies and eighties, an isolation always more apparent than real, had ended when Dewey's guns boomed in Manila Bay. "Personal news" had reached its utmost popularity in the nineties; with a new era of international peace it may once more come back, as it has begun to come back since the war, to overshadowing importance; but the editors of The Times in 1901 judged rightly the tendencies of the age which was beginning. For a third of a century the American people, like some orders of mediaeval monks, had been trying to find peace by gazing at its own navel, and it was just awakening to the discovery that the world contained sights of somewhat more absorbing interest.

The Times set forth upon this new era in the enjoyment of a higher degree of material prosperity than it had ever known in its best days of old. Its paid circulation in its jubilee month averaged 102,472 per day - a stupendous figure by the standards of Raymond and Jones, but one which the conductors of the paper could already see was only a beginning. Even they hardly realized in 1901 that the circulation of The Times would reach the figures of today, which are seldom much below, and often above, those of its most aggressively "popular" contemporaries in New York morning journalism. That some New York papers have a circulation of 300,000 or 400,000 a day is not surprising; the only surprising circumstance is that they do not sell a million a day, for there is nothing in them which anybody cannot understand. That a paper such as The Times, which, though not aiming expressly at a limited number of intelligent readers. does give up its pages rather to the news of general interest and high importance than to items which tickle the fancy, should have a circulation of 350,000 is somewhat more remarkable, and those who produce The Times may be pardoned if they regard it as rather encouraging for the future of a democracy which is likely to get into a good deal of trouble unless it knows what is going on.

The Times in 1901 was firmly on its feet; it had won back its old position and somewhat more. The history of that recovery has been told; the chronicle of the years that were to come before the outbreak of the World War is a somewhat different story, the story of the paper's emergence from the crowd, so to speak, to a position which may at least be described as that of a primus inter pares in the prompt and reliable presentation of the news of the world. Some of the war cries of the earlier years were to be heard less frequently in the future. The crusade against "yellow" journalism, for example, gradually died away. There was no longer so much need for a crusade, for the bright orange journalism of the nineties was, in some quarters at least, slowly fading into a somewhat more respectable color.

The Times had of course contributed a good deal to the war against "yellow" journalism, but its war aims were of a somewhat different sort from those of its associates. To use a terminology familiar to present-day readers, it was not fighting a war of conquest or annihilation. It might aspire to some disannexations of those portions of the reading public which had been attracted into the sphere of influence of the "yellow" journals, though they rightfully belonged to The Times, but that had been accomplished by the reduction of price in 1898. Its conductors never had the desire which was apparently cherished by some of their contemporaries to blot out certain others.

The object, and the only object, of The Times's criticism of "yellow" journalism was to familiarize every newspaper reader with the fact that The Times would give him what its conductors regarded as the good elements that were to be found in their more sensational contemporaries, and would give them at the same low price, without the other features which many readers found objectionable. It was their purpose to see that nobody should read the "yellows" under the misapprehension that there and there alone could he get the news, and get it for one cent. When this fact had been advertised, when everybody knew what The Times offered, then it was the reader's business to decide what kind of paper he wanted. After that The Times was content with the steady growth that came year by year as more and more readers came to find The Times more satisfactory than the papers which had previously been their favorites.

The history of this intervening period between 1900 and 1914 can perhaps best be told in compartments; by taking up first the editorial views of The Times and their reactions on the public, then the development of the news side of the paper, and finally some episodes in its business history which are pertinent to the story of the paper's rise to power, and interesting also as having some bearing on the rising ethical standards of the newspaper business.

The Times's position as an independent Democratic newspaper was maintained in the early years of the twentieth century, with the qualification that it was somewhat more independent than Democratic. For Mr. William Jennings Bryan The Times has never had much admiration, except in so far as it welcomed him as imparting to politics something of that character, at once hilarious and consecrated. which the Rev. Dr. Billy Sunday gives to religion. The Times supported the Republican Presidential ticket in 1900 because at last the Republican Party had been driven into genuine support of the sound money issue, and because the Republicans, though by no means united in their opinion on the future duties and responsibilities of the United States as a world power, were free from that academic sort of anti-imperialism which pleased Mr. Bryan. Mr. McKinley, though by no means a giant among statesmen, was learning more about the business of being President, and his latest utterances indicated that he understood some of the demands of the day a little better than the gentleman who so soon was to succeed him.

For Mr. Roosevelt's character, energy and patriotism The Times always had the highest respect, and its editors would not deny that on the whole he was an immensely valuable asset to the America of his time. But the President of the United States has to be not only the worshiper and preacher of ideals but an official performing certain functions. For many of Mr. Roosevelt's actions The Times had only praise, but its editors were inclined to think that the effect of much of his radical teachings went a good deal further than he himself would have liked to believe, and they could not fail to note that one of the great problems of the time, tariff reform, was an issue when he came into office and an issue that had got no further forward when he went out.

The Democratic Party in 1904 had repudiated most of the heresies which Mr. Bryan had raised to the level of dogmas, and seemed to be turning back toward the sounder positions of Cleveland's day. The Times accordingly supported Alton B. Parker. As in 1872 and 1880, the people were once more inclined to trust the Republican Party, and unhappily the Democratic leaders seemed to think after the defeat of 1904 that the only way to overcome Roosevelt's popularity was by adopting his doctrines. When Mr. Bryan was once more the Democratic candidate in 1908, The Times supported Taft, but the betrayal of pledges by the Republican Party which followed immediately drove away from it all its independent supporters, as well as a considerable fraction of the party membership. the agitation which beset the Democratic Party during the years when every aspiring politician had his eve on a nomination that carried more prospect of election than those of previous campaigns, The Times was chiefly interested in keeping the party from running off the track. In the preconvention campaign of 1912 it had no favored candidate, but when it became apparent that the nominee must be either Woodrow Wilson or Champ Clark The Times declared its opinion that Mr. Wilson was as well equipped for the Presidency as any man the party could nominate, and considerably better equipped than any one else whose nomination could be regarded as a possibility. After the convention Mr. Wilson believed, and said in a telegram to the publisher of The Times that that editorial had greatly contributed to his nomination. His record Governor of New Jersey, his speeches during the preconvention campaign, and the character of much of his support had marked him as a radical candidate. Some of the leaders in the Baltimore convention believed, or allowed themselves to be convinced by enemies of Mr. Wilson, that the conservative elements in the party would not support him if he was nominated. These fears were blown away by this editorial in The Times. If the leading conservative paper in the party, a paper which had shown its independence by supporting the Republican candidate in two elections out of the last three, was satisfied with Mr. Wilson, there could be no fear of any serious bolt.

The Times was not wholly in sympathy at that time with Mr. Wilson's ideas of government, but its conductors realized that the choice lay between him and Champ Clark. Speaker Clark's conservatism, in the opinion of The Times, consisted rather in a certain antiquity of manner, and a resolute indifference to things that had happened in recent decades, than in any real understanding of conservative ideas; and Mr. Wilson's intellectual equipment was so far superior that The Times thought it wiser to trust a man competent to fill the Presidential office, who might be expected to learn as he went along.

The subsequent history of The Times's editorial support of President Wilson is sufficiently well known. No newspaper ever gave an administration more loval support; no favors were received in return and none would have been accepted. Times has never been willing to pose as an amplifying transmitter for whispers from the lips of authority. To become recognized as the mouthpiece for any administration would have meant the surrender in some measure of the paper's independence, or at any rate of its reputation for independence; it would have required a somewhat different attitude on the part of its conductors, a complaisance toward tendencies in the administration with which they were dissatisfied, a willingness to shut their eves to some things that existed, and to pretend to see things that were mere figments of the imagination.

But it may be said by critics of the Wilson administration that on the major issues of these eight years the paper supported the President. did so in many cases because it happened to agree with the President. The Underwood-Simmons tariff The Times regarded as the most satisfactory that had been enacted in many years, and for Mr. Wilson's services to the country in obtaining the passage of the Federal Reserve act it felt that no praise could be too high. There was much room for criticism and dissatisfaction in Mr. Wilson's first year, but, as a rule, on minor points. Mr. Bryan's disruption of the diplomatic service, for example, was deplorable in itself, but it was part of the price of the Federal Reserve act. Had Mr. Bryan been left outside the administration that enactment might have been impossible over his opposition.

In the principal crises of the later years of Mr. Wilson's administrations The Times supported the President because the choice was not between Mr. Wilson and ideal perfection, but between Mr. Wilson and concrete alternatives which seemed less desirable. In the opinion of its conductors he was a President who rose to most of the unusually heavy responsibilities laid upon him, and on the dominant issues of his day took a position against which nothing could be said except that he was perhaps a few years ahead of the average voter. And in its editorial summary of his eight years in office, on February 27, 1921, The Times took the position that Mr. Wilson had been a great President, whose true importance and usefulness would be increasingly apparent as time went on. As was said in that article:

It made a world of difference whether throughout the war and at the end of the war we had in the White House a common man, or a man above the common. A President content to patch up the shattered world and set it spinning again in the old grooves would have been overlooked altogether. He never would have helped the nation to find its soul, he would not have found his own. . . . As if by predestination, when the war came, one was at the post of duty and of trial who, by his gifts and abilities, seemed to be designated above all others for a service such as no American had ever before been summoned to undertake.

Yet, because the paper was not always able to agree with the administration, it incurred the usual inconveniences of those who see some right on both sides. To most Republicans it was a rabid Democratic paper, to be abhorred for its partisanship; and by thick-and-thin, for-better-for-worse adherents of Mr. Wilson, it was accused of damning the administration with faint praise.

Most of the matters, however, on which The Times criticised those in office between 1913 and 1921 were questions outside the President's own field of activity. The election of 1912 had brought not only Woodrow Wilson but the Democratic Party into power, and on many issues the President was wiser than his party. The criticism has been made that The Times was a consistent supporter of Wilson, yet was opposed to almost everything that Wilson did. That is a mistake. The Times was a consistent supporter of Wilson, though disagreeing with his attitude on some of the less important issues of his administration; its opposition was for the most part directed against the eccentricities of the Democratic majority in Congress, which the President was often compelled, for political considerations, to ignore, or to meet with an acquiescence which must at times have come hard.

It may be asked, then, why The Times in recent years has consistently supported the Democratic Party. The answer is, first, that the publisher of The Times is a Democrat not by geography though Mr. Ochs spent his early life in Tennessee, his father had been a Captain in the Union Army — but by conviction, and so is its editor-inchief, Mr. Miller, who comes from New Hampshire. But that answer, after all, does not explain much, for there are no longer very many Democrats left in the Democratic Party. That party once meant something; it meant that one of the great political organizations of the country believed that the people in a democracy could better be trusted, in the long run, than any group whatever of benevolent oligarchs, and that the federal organization of the United States was more than a mere historical accident — that it met the needs of a numerous people occupying a country of enormous extent, with wide differences in natural conditions and in the public sentiment of far distant localities. In that sense the conductors of The Times are among the few Democrats surviving. And it might be added that this fundamental concept of the Democratic Party's philosophy explains the fact that the two chief Democratic papers of the country, The Times and The World, can both be Democratic while disagreeing on most details. The World is liberal and The Times conservative, but they are agreed in the opinion that the union of these states is and of a right ought to be a Federal union, as well as in the view that political wisdom and capacity for government, even if not bestowed very liberally on the people at large, are not to be found more highly concentrated in any particular economic, religious or geographic subdivision of the people.

These doctrines were once the distinguishing mark of a Democrat. They are now conspicuous chiefly by their rarity; about the only distinction between a Democrat and a Republican today is that the Democrat is generally out of office. The centralizing movement of recent years, which has pretty well blotted out state lines and tended to turn over the control of Government more and more to bureaucrats, has been promoted quite as much by Democrats as by Republicans. The Republicans, to be sure, have been inclined to favor oligarchies whose claim to superiority was their possession, real or pretended, of executive ability; while the Democrats have generally bowed down before oligarchies of pretended superiority of moral virtue. whether the favored few are protected manufacturers or officials of the Anti-Saloon League, the effect is the same.

What is the duty of a Democrat in such a time? It might be held that his motto should be, "My party, right or wrong; if right, to keep it right; if wrong, to make it right." The Times has not been able to go quite so far as this; sometimes the Democratic Party has been so wrong that the only way to make it right was by supporting the Republican ticket. But, generally speaking, the conductors of the paper have believed that the Democratic Party needed all the intelligent support it could get and all that could conscientiously be given by those who hold to the old Democratic doctrines. So long as old-fashioned Jeffersonian Democrats and conservative Democrats found it possible to stick to the party they could act as a brake on the exuberant and misdirected energies of those Democrats whose chief representative in recent history has been Mr. Bryan. By clinging to the party and doing their best to remind it that it is, or ought to be, something more than a mere aggregation of jobless politicians, these Democrats could perhaps do a real service to the country in holding the party to certain standards, and thus making it a really effective check on the Republicans.

For the genius of the Democratic Party shines best in adversity. Out of office the party often displays public spirit and sometimes real statesmanship. Once in control of the Government, the Democrats are likely—in the opinion of the management of The Times—to forget their own principles and become mere imitators of the Republicans. Opinions may differ as to whether it is admirable to be a Republican, but certainly it is better to be a real Republican than a poor carbon copy. Republicanism can best be practiced by men who are Republicans year after year, in office or out, and not by diluted imitations who no sooner find themselves in control of the Government than they begin to wonder, rather frantically, how the Republicans would do it, and then try their best to do the same.

Ninety years ago the Democratic Party, or that controlling faction of it led by Andrew Jackson, really meant something in national affairs. When it came back after the misfortunes under Van Buren and the Whig interlude that followed, it had bound itself to the service of a sectional oligarchy, and it remained in bondage till the Civil War. Since then the party has always been, in effect, the opposition. Even the great vote that ought to have carried Samuel I. Tilden to the White House was largely a protest vote. By undeserved good luck the Democratic Party had as its leader in the '80s and '90s one of the strongest and wisest statesmen of American history. What did it do with him? It nominated him, to be sure, and renominated him twice, but that was because Grover Cleveland had shown that he could be elected, and no other Democrat since the war had been able to do that. When he was once in office some of his own followers were the first to stick their knives in his back.

But whether or not the country would be best served by a condition in which the Republicans, perpetually in power, would be prodded into virtue and efficiency by a Democracy perpetually in opposition, such a condition is impossible. Ambitious young men join the party which has the offices at its disposal. A few Democrats have to be elected now and then to encourage the others. This may perhaps explain why The Times, though Democratic, is apt to be more critical of the Democrats in office than of their opponents. Nothing surprising or out of the ordinary is to be expected from the Republican Party - except under such unusual leaders as Roosevelt, and, after all, Roosevelt kept the country expecting great and wonderful things for seven and a half years, few of which happened. In ordinary times everybody knows what the Republican Party is; good or bad, it is a fixed quantity. There is more exhilaration in supporting and criticising the Democrats, whose worst can be incredibly bad, whose best is sometimes surprisingly good, and who are just as likely to display the one as the other. At any rate, there is always the possibility that with the proper support, and the proper amount of well-timed castigation, the Democrats may be driven to do something which ordinarily would be entirely beyond their vision - the Federal Reserve act, for instance. It is the difference between marrying a domestic disposition and an artistic temperament.

So it will be observed that The Times is Democratic both because its principal personages believe in the traditional Democratic doctrines, and because they think the public welfare is best served by giving the paper's support to the Democratic Party in the hope that, being constantly reminded of its basic principles, it may occasionally go back to those doctrines. This attitude would in itself make it impossible for The Times ever to become the organ of an Administration even if other and decisive considerations did not prevent it. And it may be noted that The Times has never, under the present management, had a candidate whom it pushed vigorously for the nomination. Its support of Wilson during the 1912 convention was, as explained above,

HONOR ROLL

- ★ HAROLD J. BEHL.
- ★ WILLIAM BRADLEY
- ★ JOYCE KILMER
- ★ W. S. MANNING
- ★ EDWARD B. PIERCE

A. R. ADDISON JULIUS OCHS ADLER ABRAHAM FRANK AGMAN RICHARD ALDRICH EDWARD ROSCOE ALLEN ROBT. K. ALLISON RICHARD F. AMES CHARLES WALTER ATKINSON EDWARD A. ATKINSON CARL E. BARTLETT WALLACE A. BAWER W. BERRYMAN H. M. BJORCK GORDON BLAIR JOS. F. BLAND THOMAS S. BOSWORTH FRANCIS J. BOYLAN FREDERICK A. BOYD, JR. CHARLES W. BOYLE FRED BRAZONG MICHAEL BRIENZA WILLIAM F. BROSNAN LÉE D. BROWN H. M. BUGGELYN E. BURQUIST JESSE S. BUTCHER ARTHUR G. CAMPBELL S. M. CHAMBERS ANTHONY CITRO ROBERT C. COCHRANE WILLIAM D. COLGAN, JR. WALTER H. COLLINS THOMAS COOK GEORGE COOPER WALTER COULTER CHARLOTTE HOLMES CRAWFORD GUSTAV HANSON, JR.

BENJAMIN CULLEN EDW. B. CUMMERFORD JOHN WEBSTER CURLEY LEE CURTIS GEORGE CUSACK CHARLES DALY CLARENCE H. DEBAUN LOUIS DECOLLE PATRICK S. DELANEY EDWIN F. DELANO JOSEPH DIXON EDWARD DOYLE HUGH PENTLAND DUNN ALBERT ELDRED HERBERT ELLUM EDWARD WALDO EMERSON MORRIS FACTOR C FARRELL JOHN FEY HAROLD FINCH EARL N. FINDLEY JOHN FINN EDWARD J. FITZSIMMONS GEORGE H. FLANAGAN SIMEON T. FLANAGAN GERALD E. FORCE ROBERT J. FORESMAN BENTLEY J. GEIGER ARTHUR GORTON CHARLES GOTTSCHALK JEANETTE C. GRANT FRANK B. GRISWOLD EDWARD GROSS WM. A. GROTEFELD L. A. GUNDERSON

HONOR ROLL-Continued

H. HARMAN ROLAND H. HARPER ALFRED HARRIS EDWARD J. HARRIS, JR. A. E. HARTZELL FRANKLIN A. HARWOOD HAROLD B. HAVILAND WILLIAM J. HEGARTY ELLIOTT P. HENRY THOS. J. HERLIHY JOHN HIMPLER ULRICH HOFELE PHILIP D. HOYT C. F. HUGHES L. HUGHES MICHAEL A. HUGHES HOWARD HUMPHREY GEORGE E. HYDE CHAS. JENKS CARL O. JOHNSON W. R. JOYCE RUDOLPH C. KARR EDWARD J. KEAN ROBERT F. KELLEY WM. JAY KELLEY JOHN F. KIERAN JOHN KIMBALL EDWARD KLAUBER MORTIMER J. KROLL MAURIC LANGERMAN WM. LANIGAN WM. LEARY GEORGE LEHMAN GEORGE LEONARD GERSON LEVY JOSEPH LISSON G. C. LOHSS CLARENCE E. LOVEJOY WILLIAM H. LUBRECHT ALLEN LUTHER WILLIAM F. LYNCH WRIGHT McCORMICK JAMES McCANN THOMAS McCANN NEIL MacNEIL ANDREW E. MAGNUSON CHARLES P. MAILE AUSTIN M. MALONE EDWARD F. MANNIX LOUIS J. MERRELL JAMES D. MILLS ROBERT C. MORTON EDWARD MOTIZZ MATTHEW J. MURPHY PATRICK J. MURPHY WILLIAM MURPHY

FRANK L. NELSON JOHN NELSON JAMES E. NIX JACK NYDICK GEORGE F. O'CONNER JAMES W. OSBORNE, JR. FRANCIS XAVIER PAVESICH GEORGE PAYNE ARTHUR H. PENNEY JOHN PETERS EDW. J. POLOQUIN MICHAEL PROZAN RAPHAEL J. REARDON EDWARD REYNOLDS ROBERT H. ROESEN MARTIN L. ROMAN GEORGE L. ROONEY R. ROWAN REGINALD G. RUSSOM TRACY J. RYAN OSCAR SALVAIL J. J. SANFORD J. ARNOLD SAVAGE GEORGE H. SCHNEIDERMAN SAMSON H. SHAHBOODAGHIAN CHARLES J. SHARKÉY J. SHARKEY JOHN SIMONS A. LEONARD SMITH, JR. JAMES JOSEPH SMITH WILLIAM SMITH R. J. SPRAGUE EDWARD J. STEWART JOSEPH F. SULLIVÁN ARTHUR HAYS SULZBERGER WILLIAM A. SWANSON PAUL LELAND SWIGART JAMES M. TAYLOR GROVER C. THEIS FREDERIC D. THOMAS, JR. BERNARD S. THOMSON BERNA D TRACEY CHARLES B. VOLCKENS H. H. WALKER CHARLES J. WALSH C. C. WEAVER H. C. WEAVER SAMUEL WEISS MICHAEL WEISSMAN E. B. WELLS JAMES A. WHITEHOUSE S. T. WILLIAMSON EDWARD A. WIRTH ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT RICHARD B. WRIGHT EZRA WRIGHT

due to specific circumstances which had not been present in the pre-convention campaign.

In the Spring of 1920, to be sure, The Times did suggest John W. Davis as a man worthy of the consideration of the Democratic National Convention. But it was a suggestion and no more, and inspired chiefly by a desire to remind the delegates that all the talent of the party was not embodied in the persons of William G. McAdoo, James M. Cox and A. Mitchell Palmer. Mr. Davis was not personally known to the conductors of The Times; but he was, as Baedeker says, well spoken of. He was suggested to the party without much expectation that he would be nominated - and indeed it would have been rather unfortunate to waste him in a year when no Democrat could have been elected. was mentioned in the hope that some Democrats might be stirred to remember that their party had after all more talent than its leadership often allowed to become visible.

The more important aspects of the editorial position of The Times in recent years are, however, those lying outside of party affiliations or partisan doctrines. It will probably be generally admitted that The Times for years past has been regarded as the most eminent champion of so-called conservatism in the American press. This is by no means the same thing as saying that it is the most conservative newspaper; it is not, by a good deal. But its wide circulation, its consistency of doctrine, its vigorous adherence to views which have often been unpopular, have given it a certain primacy among those marshaled on the conservative side. This position became more clearly defined, perhaps, during the World War and in the discussion of subsequent issues; but it was established years before that. And its conservatism is partly, though not wholly, responsible for the distinction which The Times undoubtedly enjoys — and that word is used advisedly — of being more thoroughly hated by Communists, Socialists and radicals, to say nothing of pro-Germans and Irish extremists, than any other newspaper in the United States.

It is not to be supposed that the editors of The Times are so eccentric as to take pride in a measure of intellectual isolation, or so inhuman as to derive a fiendish pleasure from the disapproval of their fellows. If they are proud of their enemies, it is because they believe that the widespread antagonism to the editorial views of the paper is in more ways than one directly due to its merits. The readers of The Times represent a far wider range of political opinion than the ordinary newspaper constituency. A great many people who cordially despise the political and economic opinions of its editors feel that they have to buy the paper in order to get the news. If any one doubts this, let him observe that the radical weeklies, for example, cite The Times news columns as authority for most of their statements of fact. There is no doubt a certain crafty precaution in this; if the news report should happen to be wrong, the radical commentator can offer the apology that he was misled by the untrustworthy "capitalist" press. Nevertheless, the radical weeklies continue to get their news from The Times. Similarly, many stalwart Republicans and convinced opponents of the League of Nations have in the past two years started the day by hating The Times over the breakfast grapefruit; but they find that they have to have it in preference to papers which might better reflect their own political opinions, and thus start them to the office with a pleasant sense of the rightness of the world. Forty years ago, when newspapers were chiefly political, these men would not have taken The Times; today, when a newspaper is first of all a newspaper, they feel that they have to have it to find out what is going on.

A second reason for the dislike for The Times which is felt among radicals, at least, is that The Times stands for something. When the Socialist orator comes to the congenial theme of the iniquity of the "capitalist" press, he thinks of The Times as its most prominent representative. The Times is frankly and pretty consistently conservative - not so consistently, of course, as radicals seem to think; no human institution could be so regularly of one mind as that - but on the whole always to be found on the Right (it being understood that for obvious reasons of delicacy this word is used in the sense familiar in European politics, and not necessarily with an ethical implication). Certain newspapers, which need not be mentioned, represent pretty nearly the same general opinions on politics and economics as The Times, but nobody ever wastes much hostility on them. There are other iournals whose political views are so variable, or so negligible, that you might as well hate the city directory. Much of this antipathy to The Times is, then, mere recognition of the fact that the paper has opinions of which it is not ashamed, and which it advocates with all the vigor that its editors are able to command. In the frequent denunciations of its policies, which its editors read with interest, there are many which are quite obviously not directed at The Times as an individual newspaper, but at The Times as the most prominent, powerful, and easily recognizable representative of a whole school of opinion.

Furthermore, a great many critics of The Times are persons of whose friendship the paper would be ashamed. It is sufficient to cite in this connection the bitter attacks made upon it during the war by German agents or their Irish sympathizers. even before the war The Times had many critics whose hostility it could not regard as anything but a badge of merit. Not all of them, by any means, could be included in this classification, but a sufficient number to explain the fact that almost any radical orator can move his audience to wild cheers by a few maledictions on The Times. The paper has never had much confidence in efforts to remove all human evils overnight by a magic formula. has distrusted patented and proprietary remedies for political and economic ills. In both minor and major matters it has usually managed to awaken the fiery hostility of the long-haired. It has not believed and does not believe in socialism, Fourieristic, Marxian or Leninist; in Greenbackism, Free Silver, or the political-economic system of the Nonpartisan League; in putting the Government into business; in the medical sociology of anti-vivisection or the artistic philosophies of dadaism. And since it is the common peculiarity of most of these gospels that their devotees become somewhat intolerant and think that unbelievers might as well be hurried to the stake, those who are moved to cast doubt on the saving virtues of the new doctrine naturally come in for a good deal of denunciation.

Yet this conviction throughout all the various divisions of liberalism and radicalism that hatred for The New York Times is one of the essentials of salvation is in large measure a somewhat recent growth. Why was not The Times so cordially disliked fifty years ago? It was, of course, by Democrats; but this was an ordinary manifestation of partisan animosity and involved no real conviction on the part of the enemies of the paper that it was Satan's right arm. And however poor an opinion its editors may entertain of their antagonists of today, there is no doubt that these antagonists, or nearly all of them. are wholly sincere. Why this difference? It is largely due, perhaps, to a change of emphasis in the issues; the violence of political opinion has been steadily dying away in the United States ever since the end of the great political upheaval of the Civil War. It is not all gone, but it has been growing less every year since the impeachment of Andrew John-People who hate violently today are apt to do so for economic reasons, or for reasons which, though partly political, racial, or temperamental in origin, they have been taught to regard as economic.

Yet The Times's general position on economic questions has always been pretty much the same. In economics as in politics, it has never thought it advisable to burn the barn in order to get rid of the rats. No doubt those who think ill of the paper might represent this general continuity of doctrine on The Times's editorial page by saying that the paper has stood still while the country has moved on. But neither of these statements would be true. The paper has stood still only on certain fundamental issues, such as that two and two make four, or, at any rate, have made four in all past human history, and that it is somewhat unlikely that by virtue of some mystic gospel from Kansas, North Dakota or Russia, two and two can be made to add up to six and a half. Nor is it true that the rest of the country, or the rest of American journalism, has moved away to the Left while The Times remained in splendid isolation in its old position just beyond the Right Centre.

Radicalism is nothing new in America; not even economic radicalism. But there has been a considerable change in the character, if not in the volume, of American radicalism, due largely to the changing racial composition of the American people. Economic radicalism in the early days of The Times was largely a matter of agrarian or easy-money agitation. It was conducted, as a matter of course, chiefly by native Americans; recent immigrants, less numerous than now and mostly of a different racial provenance, were too busy graduating from the pick and shovel to capitalistic comfort to stop and remember that America was the country where no poor man had a chance. Dilettante radicalism of the wealthier classes had not yet appeared, or rather had sunk out of sight after its manifestation by such men as Jefferson in the early days of the Republic.

The radical movements in the earlier days of The Times found most of their support among farmers; they were native products; and their votaries usually recovered their balance after two or three good crop years. The general characteristic of these delusions was a conviction that economic evils could be ended by the printing of unlimited paper money, or the validation of unlimited token money; and this conviction usually disappeared as men and the country grew older, and the specific grievance faded away in periods of prosperity. Passing of hard frontier conditions brought better times to the prairie states; young men who had followed some peerless leader of the day in the earnest conviction that poverty could be cured by happy improvisation often discovered, as they grew older, that in default of more palatable remedies poverty could be cured by work. Radicalism in those days was apt to be only a form of wild oats.

But the newer radicalism is different in quality. It is not a question of removing specific grievances, real or fancied; the whole world, to the contemporary radical, is only one great grievance. And the cure of this painful condition must be exactly thus and so, otherwise it is no cure. This radicalism is a matter of dogma — at least the most popular and conspicuous of its manifestations, Marxian Socialism, is a matter of dogma. The world is divided into the true believers and the infidels; and the infidels shall not see salvation.

The influence of socialist intolerance even on nonsocialist radicalism has probably contributed a good deal to the conviction of most radicals that no man can honestly be conservative. Those who disagree with the radicals are actuated only by the desire to continue grinding down the faces of the poor, or to preserve their ill-gotten gains from those who would like to pass them around. And it should not be forgotten that these doctrines, and most of their adherents, came from parts of the Continent of Europe where the give-and-take of political activity has been unknown till quite recent years. Granting the numerous faults of Anglo-Saxon institutions, it remains true that the races who have lived for a considerable time under those institutions are able to find other explanations for difference of political opinion than the innate and total depravity of the opposition.

It may be conjectured that these considerations explain, in large measure at least, the embittered tone of most current radicalism. All conservatives, of course, are the targets of its wrath; The Times happens to be a conspicuous target, standing out above the crowd. Also, the reasons suggested above for the paper's unpopularity among opponents of its political views are valid in considerable measure in the field of economic controversy. Some Socialists prefer to get the news from their own sectarian organs; but a good many of them, with praiseworthy eagerness to find out what is happening, look for pleasant as well as unpleasant information in the columns of The Times. It may be held, indeed, that only a devout Bolshevik can get full pleasure out of reading The Times; for after he has read the news he can turn to the editorial page and enjoy a complete catharsis of the emotions, ending with the gratifying conviction that The Times editors are a gang of scoundrels and that his own moral purity is positively dazzling by contrast.

In the period now under discussion The Times gradually won its way to this position of conservative leadership. It had and still has a conviction, which the little experience available has justified, that the Government is about as poor a business manager as can be found.

During the trust prosecutions, which offered such lavish and innocuous entertainment to the public for a decade or so, The Times was inclined to regard each case on its merits. In some few of these cases the paper was of the opinion that misconduct had been proved and that the offending corporation should suffer the penalty, such as it was, of dissolution: but it was unable to admit that size alone was a crime, or that the power to do evil was to be regarded as no less criminal than the actual doing of evil; and the view on this point has since been accepted by the courts. It seems probable that on both of these issues the position taken by The Times is much more generally accepted today than a few years ago. For several years The Times labored to show that bench and bar had fallen under the spell of an ancient legal phrase, "restraint of trade." The courts have now come to the view that the restraint must be actual, not potential.

The direct primary, the initiative and referendum, the recall of Judges and other officials, and similar mechanical devices by which, it was widely believed ten years ago, the purity of political life could be automatically safeguarded, also found The Times

somewhat incredulous as to their merits. This incredulity, it may be observed, was based principally on a study of politics not only in the present but in the past, and on the conviction that political improvement must usually be effected by raising the standard of civic consciousness in the electorate. It is one of the misfortunes of most radicals that they think, or appear to think, that the beginning of the world was contemporaneous with the beginning of their consciousness of the world. Very often that is why they are radicals; it is unknown to them that their panaceas have already been tried on the patient without producing much improvement. Conservatism, in its literal meaning, implies an inclination to preserve the good that has come down from the past, and a reluctance to discard institutions that have worked at least well enough to survive until there is strong reason to believe that substitutes would be more satisfactory. But American conservatism, thanks to the character of most of the opposition, has rarely been forced back to this defensive line. Most of its campaigns have been in the nature of outpost fighting; its principal work has been to remind the public of the existence of the past when so many thinkers of contemporary public life appear to believe that history begins with the Communist Manifesto

The Times's attitude toward socialism, syndicalism, and similar movements is sufficiently well known to need no particular mention here. On other issues, however, it should be remarked for the sake of the record that the conservatism of the paper has not been so unvarying as some of its critics seem to think. At the time of the State Constitutional Convention of 1915, for example, The Times thought there was need of a far more extensive revision of the fundamental law than the convention even attempted. The document finally produced, though it seemed to The Times a rather inadequate response to the opportunity, nevertheless received the paper's support on the ground that it was a considerable improvement over the Constitution of 1894, and made some much needed changes in the direction of simplification and economy, and making the government of the State more easily controlled by the voters. On this occasion the mass of the electorate was considerably more conservative than The Times, preferring the old Constitution with all its imperfections to a new one against which no serious argument was ever attempted except that it had been made by a body in which Elihu Root was one of the leaders.

CONSERVATISM, INDEPENDENCE, 1900-1914

In the matter of prohibition the paper has expressed a good deal of dissatisfaction with the theory of Constitutional prohibition as well as with the practice of the Volstead act. The basis of this is not so much a belief that in questions such as this action by the several states is more likely to result in an approximation of the popular will, though some of the editors of The Times do believe that. Whatever the merits of our Federal system, it is dying; every day the states are losing more of such power as is left them to a centralizing Federal Government, and not very many people seem to care. The doubts of The Times about the wisdom of prohibition arise rather from a skepticism as to the readiness of the people for any such drastic measures, and a belief that it is poor policy to make such a sweeping change practically irrevocable by its embodiment in the Constitution.

The judgment of history is at best a somewhat uncertain criterion, even after some centuries have afforded opportunity for inspection of the results of political action and reaction. To appeal to the judgment of history, after a decade, is a little too hazardous. The archaeologist from the Island of Yap, excavating the pyramidal ruins of Manhattan in the year 4921, may perhaps understand just where the United States was headed in the beginning of the twentieth century; he will certainly know whether or not it got there. Contemporary observers can only guess. Still, taking the evidence for what little it is worth, the editors of The Times may feel that there is no great reason to fear that their position on the issues of these years was mistaken.

This period, between the Spanish War and the World War, was the age of muckraking; the day of a great emotional revival in American public life; of a new infusion of morality into politics, and of politics into morality.

The Times during this carnival of purity was compelled to preserve its attitude of conscientious skepticism, and consequently was as unpopular with followers of the new gospel as the village infidel at protracted meeting; for it steadfastly refused to stagger down to the mourners' bench. And now the revival is over, and most of those who hit the sawdust trail have fallen from grace and gone back to walk in darkness till the next day of Pentecost. The Times contemplates their side-slips without exultation; rather with a certain sadness. It would be a wonderful thing if life were what the reformers thought it was, but experience has shown that it is not. It was the painful duty of The Times, at the height of the revival, to remind the reformers of the lessons of experience; to express its doubts as to the value of measures which introduced new evils without curing the old; and to suggest that neither was the past as black as it was painted, nor could the future reasonably be expected to be one unspotted smear of rose-color. This is what conservatism means, and The Times is not ashamed of it.

The attitude of The Times toward union labor has been pretty widely misrepresented. The Times believes in trades unionism as a valuable contribution to the national well being. It does not think, however, that the followers of the organized trades are the whole people, or a specially privileged part of the people. It believes that the American Federation of Labor has rendered very great services to the nation at large as well as to the men enrolled in it, but it believes that the members of the Federation are part of the people, and that their interests cannot be considered apart from the general interest.

For those movements, mostly outside the Federation, which tend toward syndicalism The Times has no sympathy, for it believes that syndicalism is morally and economically unsound. When the railroad brotherhoods hold up the Government as they did in 1916, the Government is more to blame than the railroad brotherhoods; but The Times has been unable to regard the railroads as existing solely for the interest of their employés.

The Times does not pretend to have a patented cure for industrial ills, nor to know where that cure can be found. It does have a pretty strong suspicion, however, as to where it cannot be found. Socialists and syndicalists object to the trades union philosophy that it implies a constant state of industrial war, or at best of industrial truce, between employer and employé. The Times has not found it so in practice.

When the new publisher took over The Times in 1896 he discovered that the composing room was heavily, even ruinously, overmanned. The publisher felt that as a matter both of right and of expediency this condition should be discussed with the union officials, and a conference with the then head of Typographical Union No. 6 made it plain that that gentleman's ideas of a fair day's work for a fair day's pay coincided with those of the publisher of The Times; so the payroll of the composing room was reduced $1000 a week without any lessening of its efficiency. The composing room has since found plenty of work for several times the number of men then employed, but relations have always been good, and such differences as arose have always been settled in an amicable manner.

CHAPTER III

Modern News-gathering, 1900-1914

SO much for the editorial policies from 1900 to 1914. The period under discussion was, however, above all a period of development in the news service of The Times. All the newspapers in New York had a better idea of what was news in 1914 than they had in 1900, all of them knew more about what to do with news when they had it, and though they made less noise about the getting of the news than they had been inclined to do in the nineties, they got more news and more reliable news than they had ever done before. In this gradual improvement The Times led the way. Whatever its relative position in New York journalism - which is a matter of opinion, perhaps — that position was higher in 1914 than in 1900. It was to become higher still during the war, but in the years before the war was laid the foundation of the great organization for getting and publishing the news which is the chief distinction of The Times today.

The history of the paper's growth in this period is not easy to tell, for it is not a matter of isolated "beats," of great individual achievements rising from a level plain of daily routine, of great crusades or magnificent exposures. The Times has had plenty of "beats" and has shown its enterprise in digging up more than one neglected field of the news. but its real preëminence is a matter of high average rather than of scattered peaks of achievement. Day in and day out it gets more news, and handles it more intelligently, than any paper knew how to do a decade or two ago; and this implies, obviously, the slow assembling of an especially competent staff, the indoctrination of every man with a gradually evolved set of principles, as well as unusually efficient direction from above. The Times as a newspaper is far from perfect; its conductors know that better than anybody else. Its news-gatherers may overlook some things; its editors may make mistakes in dealing with what they have to give the public. But there can be no very serious doubt that The Times makes fewer mistakes of this sort than its contemporaries.

In the building of this news organization credit must be given to the men at the top — to Henry Loewenthal, at present in charge of the business news department, whose connection with The Times began in 1875 and who was managing editor from 1896 to 1904; to Arthur Greaves, city editor from 1900 to 1915; to William C. Reick, who from 1906 to 1912 was associated with the general management of the paper, and chiefly to Carr V. Van Anda, who has been managing editor since 1904 and has been most directly concerned with the extraordinary development of the news department and with reaching its highest peak. Under all these men The Times was steadily coming into prominence as a paper which, while giving less attention than some of its contemporaries to spectacular demonstrations of its enterprise, was learning how to get

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

THE WEATHER.

ONE CENT In Gentler New York | Risembara

NEW YORK, TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1912.-TWENIY-FOUR PAOES.

ISMAY SAFE, MRS. ASTOR MAYBE, NOTED NAMES MISSING 866 RESCUED BY CARPATHIA, PROBABLY 1250 PERISH; TITANIC SINKS FOUR HOURS AFTER HITTING ICEBERG;

Col. Astor and Bride, sidor Straus and Wife, and Maj. Butt Aboard.

RULE OF SEA" FOLLOWED Vomen and Children Put Over

in Lifeboats and Are Supposed to be Safe on Carpathia.

JCKED UP AFTER 8 HOURS

Incent Astor Calis at White Star Office for News of His Father and Leaves Weeping.

RANKLIN HOPEFUL ALL DAY Manager of the Line Insisted

Ttanio Was Unshikable Even

After She Had Cone Down.

TEAD OF THE LINE ABOARD

I. Sruce lamay Making First Trip on Mantic Ship That Was to

The admission that the Titruic, the Biggest Liner Plunges

ESCUERS THERE TOO LATE

Except to Pick Up the Few Hundreds Who Took to the

WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST

Cunarder Carpethía Rushing to

Vew York with

SEA SEARCH FOR OTHERS ha California Standa By on Chance of Ploking Up Other DLYMPIC SENDS THE NEWS

Then P. A. E. Franklin, Vice President calved early this moroing tended to and General Manager of the Internaflonal Mercantile Marins, conceded that only stangard and those paceages who were picked up by the Cunarder Carsathla had been saved. Adrices reacrease the number of adretvers by thir, but surely with the help of the admission followed a day th which the White Star Line officials and been optimistic to the extrems. At no time was the admission reads that svery one aboard the huge eleamer.was not safe, The ship itself, it was confi dently asserted, was unstable, and aquirers were informed that she would each port, under her own steam prob-Allan liner Virginian, which was reported to be towing helt.

Figinian le much less, and as they lish w further and further out of shore refere. Kroup the Titanic's position at the time of the dissater it is doubitul ter ship, the Dlympic. The wireless range of the Olympic is 500 miles. Thes of the Carpethia, the Paristan, and the neared the position of the Titanio they 19W guthently reports from the Titanic to have responded to her wireless call for help, it became apparent that authentle name of the distator probably cauld come only from the Titoplo's sisor any of the ships which were knows edgre. Citanta fighk at 2:20 A. M. Monday. establish communication with were made to get into nommanication with that liners. Until such commu-nication, was established the White in the While Blar offices the hopo was held cut all day that the Porisies and the Virginian had taken off some of the Titanic's passengers, and efforts

Caps Race, Newfoundlend, talling of the foundaring of the Titanio and of the rescue of 655 of her passengers by Pitenic's passengers about them. But by nightall enme she message from Capt. Maddook of the Olympic to Star officials refused to recognize 1.20 possibility that there were none of the wireless measuge said, reached the posi-tion of the Titanie at daybreak. All they found there, however, was lifuthe Cunaeder Carpathia, which, the from 18to boate by the Carpathia had dicated that none but the 655 taken Mr. Frankilo admitted into last night though they were among the first to in the world had sunk at 2,20 o'eldels that the Parising and the Virginia, the Titanic's cells for help. uried her ness benneth the waver and nd a ball bours after the big Titax ould not have reached the scene bet bonts and wreckage. The

As the day passed, bewayer, with no

CAPT. E. J. SMITH,

Commander of the Titable. hours before the excected arrival of the Virginian and the Parisian.

2.20 By the Carpathla..... 695 First eaths Becond cable Strenge THE PROBABLE LOSS. Namber Abdard. Tolai It is unbelievable, so White Star Line flagily, that the Carpathia should have failed to pick up every inchoat which gene, it was because the others of the still floated on the waves. It they failed to pick up more than 635 passenabip's complement had gone with her . 1.465 Lives Lout First Report.

ayed immediately to the White Sixr to make the text of the message public. He offered still the hope that passengers were about the Paristan and the Virginian, and evan that there seemed little hope of saving of any others than the aboard the Curpethia, he clueg to when the comission was wrung from The bottom.

If we have been and the series and the log in the log in the series of the disonster of the disonster of the series of the series of the building the series of the s to quiet the team of those who had relatives or friends aboard the unfertunate ship and to prevent wide-Capt. Haddock's measage from the Olympic, which is printed in another append belief to a serious disaster.

anchest 2:20 A. M., after all the pea-sengers and crew had been lowered to life hous and transferred to the Viv-ginian. The steamble Carpethin, with ar offices. Capt, Enddook of the Olympic ands g wirelass message to the White fiter offices here that the etemer Titunlo Theoughout the day there hed been reseasurances that the Titanic was bethe hope that in some unexplained Piret Megartes Titania in Taw. abroad the two Allan linera.

This message was rearpathia, so the wireless dispatch includes Bruco Ismay, Mrs. Widener, Mrs. H. B. Harris, and an incomplets name, suggesting dren, the message acid, and if con-cludeds "Orave lears are felt for the eafely of the balence of the

SAVED

THE

OF

PARTIAL LIST

Special to The New York Trace. passengers and crew."

Mrs. Astor's.

CAPE RACE, N. F., Tuesday, April 16.—Following is a partial list of survivors among the first-class passengers of the Titanic, received by the Marconi wireless station this moraling from the Carpa-. Mrs Special to The New York Times. IN. C. ROLMANE. hia, via the steapship Olympid; - and maid.

Mrs. SUSAN P. ROGESBON. (Prob-MIM EMLY B. RODERSON. MISS NINETTE PANHART, Master ALLIBON and nurse. Mr. and Mrs. D. BISKOP. Miss K. T. ANOREWA Miss A. BABSINA. Mr. M. OLANIC.

> ME ED. W. APPLETON. HILL D. D. CASSEBERE.

Mr. ROSE ABBOTT. (re. B. CHIBINACE.

Kiss G. M. BURNS.

Mrs. J. M. BROYK. Mrs. B. C. BOWEN. Mr. and Mrs. S. L. BECKWYTH Mrs. RUTH (PARAIO). Mr. and Mrr. E. Z. TATLOR. OILBERT M. TUCKER. Mr. GEORGE A. BAYT MCB. JAMES BAXTER. MIN ELLA THOR. Miss C. DONNELL

and Mrs. BD. KIMBERLET.

Mr. F. A. KENNTHAN.

MARK HALVERSON Miss MAROARET BAYS. Mr. BRUCH IGHAY. Mr. and Mrs. RO. (CIMBE Mice PHILD RENCHER, Ming'D. F. LONGLEY. JES BERTHA LAVORY.

Miss R. D. CROSSBIE.

Miss MADELEINE NEWELL Mr. JOHN B. RODERSON. Mrs. M. ROTHSCHILD. MARJORIS NEWSLL MILE MANCALL J. RENAGO MING MELEN R. OSTBY Hr. FIENNAD OMOND, Mr. E. C. OSTOR.

MILE OTOROETTA: A MADILLA

Mrs. TUCKER and, maid.

MILS MARY CLINES.
MP. SINGSID LINDSTROM. MA GUSTAVE J. LESNEUR

OR ERNEST LIVES.

LEAUER.

Mr. PIEGRE MARECHAL Mrs. W. E. MINEKAN. MISS RUBERTA MAINT Mr. PHILIP EMOCK. MR. D. W. MERVIN.

MIN ANNA WARD. Mr. RICHARD M. WILLIAMS.

Mr J. B. TEAYER, Jr. Mr RBNRT WOOLMER.

MIRE RELEN A. WILSOM,

KILD MARY WICKS.

MIS. P. M. WARNER.

It can be positively stated that which was answered by a number The first news, of the disastor Marconl wireless station here at 10:25 d'clock inst night (#5 told The Titanic was first heard giving to the Titanic was received by the in yesterday's New York Times.] the distress signal "C. O. D..

The Marconi station reports that it first, suggesting that the name of Mrs. John Jacob Astor is latended. This sup-position is attempthense by the fact that, except for Mrs. M. J. Allison, Mrs. umn of the ship's pasenger list atlanded BOSTOK, April 15.-Among the ed the word after "Mrs. Jacob P." In a list received by the Associated Press this enocoing this name appeared wall down, but in Ties Times list it to ż 12 by wireless from the steamer Carpathia here to-night were the follow-VAMES PICKED UP AT BOSTOR. Astor is the only lady in the "A" Mrs. O. H. BARMWORTH. Mrs. H. B. STEFFASON Mrs. ELSIE BOWERMAN Mr. and Mrs. L. MENRY. MIS W. A. HOOPER, hy a mald.

presumably women and children, There were about 2, 100 persons board the Titanic.

pathia is returning to New York with the survivors. First News of the Disaster.

prove to be title, and that there wished will turn up with some of the passarmager. It is the loss of He that makes this thing as a will Wo as a registration to the money lust, but dot the lust of the will have and year down.

CAPE RACE, N. F., April 15. -The White Star liner Olympic reports by wireless this evening reached, at daybreak this mornng, the position from which wireless calls for help were sent out last night by the Titanic after her collision with an iceberg. The Carpathia found only the lifeboats and the wreckage of what had been the biggest steamship affoat, The Titania find foundered at about 2:20 A, M., in latifude 41:16 north and loogitude 50:14 west. This is about, 30 minutes of latitude, or about 34 miles, dua south of the position at which sho struck the Iceberg. All her-boats are accounted for and about 655 souls have been saved of the crew and passengers, most of the latter Cunarder Carpathia MIN LUCILLE CARTER. Er. WILLAM CARTER. Mrs. FLORENCE MARK ALE ROBERT DOUGLAS MIN ALICE FORTUNE. MISS ALICE PHILLIPS. MILE HILDA BLATTER MOWARD B. CARR Miss MINEHAN. Miss BERTRA MIRS CUMMINOS. Mrs. JANE Mire PHYLLIE O. Mr. J. FLENK, KIN P. SMITH.

The Leyland liner California is cemaining and searching the posttion of the disaster, while the Carup to 41 o'clock to-night noth-Ing whatever had been received at or beard by the Marconi station bern to the effect that the Parislan, Virginian or any other ships had picked up any survivors, other than those picked up able to resume quantum or matter or to not any of the Timotes passengers are about to Man liners as the Anna liners which we are thousand het the ramors which have excluded as by ristruph from Ball. It was that there are passengers becaut the yirghian and has Peristan will serious ions of 10fe, but it is impossible for us to say definitely concerning this Dark of the altuation until we are by the Carpathia.

A. Dice awe know the admission, burn-here been runner from Mallica that three adentess were at the sense of Ma Titorie's studied, agency, the Virgin-cia, ine Farlian, and the Garpstide, We have bested from Capit Raddock of the Opinitic who see that the Tr-tinnic suck at 2200 closes the monthly is very difficult to say whether the virginian and the Paristica have any survivors on board until we san got a copper from those vessels.

wireless had been given at the White less of life on the Titanic.

Maddock also informs us that pathin has 676 survivors on bo

But the inference was not that all the passengers had been eared. Rather it was that many of them that died, and presently Mr. Franklin confitted the faut that there had been a terribia This version of Capt. Haddock's erveral hundred possengers of the Tr-table, is now en route to Rew Yach. At 3 o'clock, however, he modified mission was made at the White Star At 0 o'clock bowever, ordices that the Titanic had math. Mr. this starement, darkaring: Franklin said that Capt. Edddocks.

meaning was brief and "neglected to tay that all the crew had been saved."

and when Capt. Haddock's massers proved this to be untrue only the ad-

Mrs. BORA S. ROBERTS. Countem of ROTHES.

Major ARTUR PEUCHEN Mer KARL II. BERR. Mer DESSRITE.

Mrs. OEO. D. WIDENER and maid. Mrs. J. STEWART WHITE. Mis. MARIE FOUNG. Mrs. THOMAS POTTER, Jr.

total 1,800 souls." This sentence when not in the massive received by Evin Thigh from Cape Race nor in that Another version at the message from the Olympic was current has night and Included the mantence.

Pears Serious Loss of Life.

of ships, including the Carpathia, sent to the White Biar line offices. Continued on Page 2, 4ale

We have asked for that recent from Capt. Haddock, and we are especifor a reply at any time. The Carpathla OREAT DRAE SPRING WATER. red Cigi. Riedels to Cisa Red in Profability Were present and the Cisa Research of the sea down course, create the Translation of the Cisa season which the season of the Translation is considered the Cisa season which is the Cisa Research of the Cisa Season which is the Cisa Season of the Cisa Sea the news wherever it happened and about as soon as it happened, and to present it to the public with some appreciation of its relative importance and interest.

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

A business connection which has already been mentioned deserves somewhat more detailed notice here, for in the earlier years of this period it proved of considerable value. This was the "alliance for mutual interest and advantage" with The London Times, begun on September 2, 1901. No doubt this alliance has been the pretext — it could hardly be called the excuse — for much of the belief that The New York Times is owned or controlled by Lord Northcliffe. In fact, it was precisely what it was called at the time, an alliance for mutual benefit. The alliance consisted only of this — that The New York Times bought the full rights for publication in North America of The London Times news service, The London Times receiving reciprocal rights to The New York Times news service for publication in England. It was an arrangement of the same general character as those which the paper now maintains with The London Daily Chronicle, the Paris Matin and The Chicago Tribune. To suppose that it involves ownership of The New York Times in England is very much the same as saying that a man is owned by the restaurant where he occasionally dines.

As for Lord Northcliffe, a genius in newspaper making, he had nothing to do with The London Times when this contract was concluded. That paper was then owned by the Walter family, and managed by the Walters and Moberly Bell. The arrangement was continued for some years after Lord Northcliffe bought The London Times, but relations with him were sharply broken off at the beginning of the World War because of some difference of opinion between him and the management of The New York Times with respect to news exchange arrangements. This has been told so often that very few of those who still repeat the story of a Northcliffe influence on The New York Times have even the poor excuse of ignorance.

Aside from its effect in furnishing nonexplosive ammunition for credulous Sinn Feiners, the connection was on the whole a useful one. It was most useful at the beginning, when the relative position of the two papers was not quite what it is today. In the early years of the twentieth century it gave The New York Times a connection with a worldwide news service of much intrinsic value and still greater reputation, which proved particularly valuable in the Russo-Iapanese War. Later on it was less important, for The New York Times was becoming able to collect the news of the world on its own initiative; not so much by means of a widely traveling staff of special correspondents as by a few centralized offices which had learned how to get the earliest reports from almost anywhere.

Much of the development of The Times news department has a purely technical or intramural interest, but a good deal of it has such bearing on the general improvement in journalistic methods that it deserves to rank almost as a public service. This is especially true of the paper's share in the development of wireless telegraphy. To Marconi and the other men who were perfecting that invention in the early years of the twentieth century The Times gave not only publicity and encouragement but sometimes a rather insistent support which drove them on to do more than they would ever have dreamed they could do if there had been nobody there to tell them. The war would undoubtedly have forced the development of long-distance wireless in any case, but it is due in some degree to The New York Times that the art was so far advanced as it was when the war began.

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

In the early years of wireless the interest of The Times was chiefly, if not wholly, that of a newspaper eager to give the news. Marconi's announcement on December 14, 1901, that transatlantic communication had been established between Poldhu, Cornwall, and St. John's, Newfoundland, received the display in the news columns, and the enthusiastic comment in the editorial columns, which its importance warranted. But these first transmissions went no farther than the sending across the Atlantic of a single letter - S - whose three dots in the Morse code, repeated at stated intervals, did indeed convince the inventor that he could send a message from Europe to America, but left him far short of the goal of a service which would be commercially useful. His experiments were continued, without much publicity; and by a curious accident The New York Times was deprived of the news of one of the most interesting of these experiments, the dispatch of the first transatlantic wireless press message.

On December 16, 1902, Dr. (afterward Sir) George

R. Parkin, then one of the correspondents of The London Times, visited Marconi at his new station at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. By this time Marconi was able to send matter eastward across the Atlantic with fair success, though he had had little luck with westward messages. Dr. Parkin wrote out and sent a twenty-five-word Marconigram to The London Times, expressing the sentiments proper to the occasion, and then came back to New York and told for the first time the thrilling story of the epochmaking event, of the successful transmission of a message, without wires, across the Atlantic, and of the progress Marconi was making. The conductors of The New York Times, however, were deeply interested in what Marconi was doing, and they were delighted to learn that Dr. Parkin had written an account, some two thousand words in length, of what he was the first newspaper representative permitted to witness.

Since the alliance between the two papers was hen in force, Dr. Parkin had the story typed on New York Times stationery and mailed it himself, in a plain envelope, to his paper in London. A carbon copy was left in The New York Times office, to be published simultaneously with the London publication; The New York Times was to be advised by cable of The London Times's receipt of the story. The editors waited for days and weeks and the message did not arrive. And at last Dr. Parkin's original story came back through the dead letter office, refused at The London Times office because of insufficient postage calling for the payment of surtax refund. Years later one of the managers of The

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

London Times explained this by saying that that paper received an enormous amount of unsolicited correspondence from all over the world, and that such of it as did not have enough postage paid was declined. Whatever Lord Northcliffe may have done to The London Times, it is probable that its mail no longer goes back to the Post Office unopened.

It was years later before Marconi was able to open up a regular transatlantic service, and in the meantime The New York Times had so unfailingly displayed its confidence in him that when regular service was begun between Clifden, Ireland, and Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, on October 17, 1907, the first message accepted for transmission westward came to the paper from its London office. Of the ten thousand words or so sent by wireless that night a good deal was New York Times news, and one of the dispatches from the Paris office carried a message of greeting from Georges Clemenceau, then Premier for the first time. Naturally The Times made a great display story of the opening of regular wireless communications, and among the "follows" which it printed the next morning was Dr. Parkin's account of his experience nearly five years before.

For some years thereafter a considerable proportion of The Times European news for the Sunday issue came through by wireless, but the delays in transmission were so great that the most important news was generally sent by cable. When the regular Marconi service was first opened most of the cable company officials had taken it rather lightly, and some were incredulous. Others professed to believe that its competition would not be dangerous; and for a matter of four years they were justified. Some of them foresaw that eventually wireless might carry a much higher percentage of transatlantic messages than it could handle in 1907, but they were optimistic enough to think that there would be plenty of business for all. And they were right; the war and the continuing interest in European news which survived the war have kept both wireless and cables busy enough.

But from 1907 to 1912 the wireless service could not be depended on for sure and speedy transmission of important news. Since the wireless rate was only five cents a word, and the minimum cable rate on press messages was double that, the wireless was used wherever possible. In those days The Times published two or three pages of general European news in one of its Sunday sections - society and fashion notes, the movements of American tourists, and such similar items as occupied most of the little attention that was given by Americans to European affairs before the war - and the wireless was useful and cheap for this sort of service. A story written on Thursday did not need to get to the office on Friday if it was intended for the Sunday paper. those days The Times did a great deal more for the wireless companies than the wireless companies did for The Times; every dispatch was carefully marked "By Marconi Wireless Telegraph," and the value of this acknowledgment was undoubtedly great.

Still the wireless remained distinctly a secondary matter; anything urgent had to be put on the cables. And this might have continued indefinitely if The Times had not been moved to some reflections, early in January, 1912, by the chance consideration of a wireless message which had come through from London in five hours. This was considerably less than the average time required for ordinary press messages by the Marconi service, and on reflection no reason was seen why there should be even this much delay. The Hertzian waves traveled fast enough for any taste; the delays, then, must be in the land connections from European capitals to Clifden, and from Glace Bay to New York.

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

It was the old story of the early days of newsgathering, when the utmost speed in getting European news to Cape Race might be nullified by the indolence of a telegraph operator in the Maine woods. Once smooth out the land connections and there was no reason why wireless could not come as fast as So The Times suddenly informed the officables. cials of the Marconi company that on an appointed date, about two weeks ahead, it would give them its entire London business. Suggestions for the prompt handling of this business were offered by The Times. Wires to Glace Bay were arranged for by the paper, and after much insistence by The Times the Marconi officials managed to get better service to Clifden. At the time named the new service was begun, and was a success from the start. From the middle of January, 1912, to the outbreak of the war virtually all of The Times dispatches from London came by wireless; they arrived in good time: and in the beginning nobody was so surprised at the achievement as the officials of the wireless company.

Present-day readers of The Times will remember the page - usually the third or fourth - headed "By Marconi Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times" — which in those days contained each morning all the European news of interest to American readers, except in the cases when something was important enough for the front page. If the wireless companies were startled, the cable companies were scandalized. The suspicion that this matter did not come by wireless at all was rather widely expressed; every cable company thought it was sent over the lines of its competitors. One of the chief cable experts in Germany, with truly German inability to realize that what had once been true was not necessarily still true, insisted weeks after the new plan was adopted that The Times was still getting all its foreign news by cable. There were men in Germany, however, who understood well enough the possibilities of the wireless telegraph, and the time was not far away when Germany was to make more use of it than anybody ever dreamed in 1912.

When the war broke out the military importance of the wireless telegraph caused considerable restrictions to be placed on its use, but it proved invaluable, particularly to American correspondents in Germany before 1917. It would probably have come into general use during the war in any case, but its importance would not have been so promptly recognized if The Times had not demonstrated two years earlier that the wireless was capable of doing a great deal of work in very good time. It is not pretended that the paper's motives in giving invaluable advertising and a very necessary stimulus to the wireless com-

MAJOR JULIUS OCHS ADLER. © Underwood & Underwood

KATE L. STONE.
ASSISTANTS TO THE PUBLISHER.

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

panies were entirely altruistic; when it had shown the wireless experts what they could do it got its European news at half the price of cables. As soon as other newspapers woke up sufficiently to realize what could be and was being done, they shared in the benefit.

In other uses of the wireless The Times was again a pioneer. The naval fighting off Port Arthur in the Russo-Japanese War was covered for The London Times and The New York Times by Capt. Lionel James in a dispatch boat equipped with the De Forest wireless, through which he maintained communication from 150 miles out at sea with the cable station at Wei-Hai-Wei. The naval battle of April 13, 1904, for instance, in which the Russian flagship Petropavlovsk was sunk, was reported to The Times from both land and sea - the official Russian version from Port Arthur coming by wav of Petrograd, and Captain James's eyewitness reports sent by wireless from his boat and cables from Wei-Hai-Wei. Throughout the fighting around Port Arthur The Times thus had a long lead over its competitors — for though the Japanese Army was the first to break the long domination of war by the correspondents who wrote about it, and to introduce the modern idea that the war correspondent's place is in the home, their naval authorities had not yet sufficiently realized the importance and possible danger of wireless communication to put any restriction on James's activities. Perhaps, too, in that particular war the Japanese felt a certain reluctance to hamper the correspondent who represented the leading newspaper of an allied country, and what was becoming one of the most important papers in the most friendly neutral nation.

The COD call from the White Star liner Republic, sinking in collision on January 23, 1909, which brought up other ships in time to save her 1600 passengers, may have been obliterated from the memory of most readers by the greater and more spectacular marine disasters of more recent years; but it was a great news story in its day, and the more so since it was the first prominent instance in which wireless had proved of immense value in saving life at sea. All the papers had that story, of course, though the Republic's wireless operator as a matter of course sent his story to The Times. If The Times handled the news somewhat better than some of the others, it was only because by that time The Times was learning the art of handling big stories with a thoroughness which had not vet been known in New York journalism. As a matter of fact, the first actual wireless call for help had come nearly three years earlier - from the Nantucket lightship, battered by storms, on December 10, 1905. There again it was everybody's story. But The Times shares with The Chicago Tribune the distinction of having printed the first news story sent by wireless of a rescue at sea. The freighter St. Cuthbert, afire off Cape Sable, on February 2, 1908, was sighted by the liner Cymric, which managed to rescue in a heavy sea thirty-seven of her crew of fifty-one. A correspondent of The Chicago Tribune aboard the Cymric sent the story to his own paper as soon as the liner was near enough to shore for the short-distance wireless of those days to communicate with shore stations, and having sent the news he remembered that The New York Times was interested in anything connected with wireless telegraphy, and accordingly sent a query by wireless to find out if the paper wanted the story. It did, and it got it.

MODERN NEWS-GATHERING, 1900-1914

These episodes of the past seem commonplace enough today, when the wireless is as much a matter of course as the telegraph; when The Times has, as it has had for more than a year past, its own receiving station just off the news room on the third floor of the Times Annex, and receives there in addition to its own dispatches everything else that comes through the air, even from such a distance as the Russian frontier, where the Bolshevist wireless operators are sending out the daily fiction feuilleton of the Soviet Government. But in their day they were considerable achievements, requiring not only a good deal of work but a good deal of imagination and faith.

Somewhat similar to certain of these demonstrations of the possibility of wireless telegraphy was the round-the-world cable message sent by The Times to itself on August 20, 1911. The Commercial Cable Company had then lately opened its Pacific line, and The Times wanted to see just what could be done in the way of getting a message from New York across the country, across the Pacific, up through the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean and back to New York. A brief dispatch was received in the office sixteen and a half minutes after it was sent, and this without any preliminary smoothing of the way such as speeds the congratulatory messages of Kings and Presidents opening a new line. To the nonprofessional reader this may seem pur-poseless, a mere advertising of The Times and incidentally of the cable companies. But it was not. It was a test of the possible speed of transmission of messages under ordinary conditions; it gave the editors of The Times some data by which they could estimate what ought to be expected in the case of real news, and thereby would necessarily keep the cable companies somewhat more alert to see that in the sending of news messages there would be no inexplicable delays.

Perhaps, to complete the record of The Times interest in wireless telegraphy, it should be mentioned that the publisher of The Times bought some shares of stock in the American Marconi Company. bought them at the market price, of course; bought them partly because he believed in the future of wireless telegraphy and thought they would be a good investment, and largely because he wanted to promote the development of an industry that promised increased facilities and reduced rates for international communications. This stock he eventually sold at a considerable loss. It deserves mention here only because the incident was distorted to make it appear that Mr. Ochs was in some mysterious way "involved in the English Marconi scandal." And although he never owned, bought or sold a single share of English Marconi stock, there are no doubt some people who have believed the story. As has been observed above, the people who will believe anything are regrettably numerous.

Another of the modern arts in whose development The Times took a keen interest was aviation. In the decade before the war, indeed, aviation and wireless were the two chief special interests of the office. The Times published more news about their progress than its contemporaries, and gradually acquired a sort of special position in both aviation and wireless news, which attracted to it automatically a good deal of information about the progress of these arts. But in aviation as in wireless The Times did more than merely give publicity to what was going on. promoted and inspired a good deal of the development in the early years of the new invention, and more than once was able to incite the experts to the accomplishment of things which of their own accord they would never have attempted. For in those days the art of aviation and of airplane construction was rather primitive. An airplane was a dangerous and incalculable machine, just how dangerous and incalculable fliers alone knew. Editors of The Times, who did not have to do the flying, were perhaps rather insistent that the aviators should crowd their luck and see how far they could develop their art: but the fact remains that many of these enterprises would not have been attempted if the aviators had not been prodded - and none of them met with any misadventure while working for The Times.

One of the first big display stories about aviation which The Times printed dealt with an exhibition promoted by another paper. On May 29, 1910, Glenn Curtiss flew from Albany to New York for a prize offered by The World. With an entirely reasonable caution, Mr. Curtiss was rather slow in getting away — so slow that The World apparently lost faith in him and announced that another aviator was on the way to Albany and would probably make the flight before Curtiss did. The Times had more confidence in Curtiss, as well as a fuller realization of the importance of this demonstration of the powers of the airplane; so when Curtiss did start, The Times was right under him with a special train and covered the whole story much more fully than The World. A fortnight later, on June 13, 1010, Claude Hamilton flew from New York to Philadelphia and back in a single day for a prize offered by The Times. Eleven years have brought such progress in aviation that it is hard to realize what an achievement this was at the time; as a matter of fact, Hamilton's machine broke down in Jersey on the return trip, had to be patched up, and was brought back to New York at very great risk to the flier.

In October of the same year The Times and The Chicago Evening Post promoted an aviation meet at Chicago, at the end of which there was to be a race from Chicago to New York for a $25,000 prize offered by the two papers. The meet was a great success, artistically and financially; so great a success in the latter respect that the aviation company which got the gate receipts was rather reluctant to hazard its machines and its fliers on a trip to New York even for $25,000. At last, however, on October 10. Eugene Elv did make the attempt, only to come down just over the Indiana line. engineers tinkered with his engine for days and finally concluded that it was impossible to go on; not till later was it discovered that nothing was the matter with it except that a clot of mud had stopped up an air valve and prevented ignition. But for that, there is a chance that the flight from Chicago to New York — possibly even a non-stop flight might have been completed without mishap.

It was six years before The Times again tried to promote a flight from Chicago to New York. This time it was to be a non-stop flight, with Victor Carlstrom of the Curtiss staff trying it alone. In that interval the war had forced aviation to an unexpected development, and fliers in Europe were doing things that could not have been dreamed of three or four years earlier. But once more the attempt was unsuccessful as a non-stop flight, and again because of a trivial mishap — a loose nut on a feed pipe which had somehow escaped the attention of the battalion of engineers and mechanics who had examined the machine. Carlstrom spent the night at Hammondsport, N. Y., and finished the flight to New York next day. This episode is notable also in that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company developed for The Times a quite efficient news service, having instructed all its agents along the line of Carlstrom's flight to keep watch for the aviator and report instantly when he appeared.

Always in those years The Times was eager to find out what aviators were doing, and to encourage them to do still more. Among its other endeavors to promote aerial navigation may be mentioned the offer of a cup for a flight from Boston to Washington in July, 1911, which was won by Harry Atwood, and its promotion of an air race around Manhattan Island in October, 1913, in connection with the Aeronautical Society's meet. Not long after that the war broke out, and aviation was forced to a development which no longer needed any journalistic stimulus.

The two great special interests of The Times were combined in an enterprise which the paper promoted in conjunction with The London Daily Telegraph and The Chicago Record-Herald in October, 1910 -Walter Wellman's attempt to fly across the Atlantic in a dirigible balloon. Wellman succeeded in flying about a thousand miles, but unfortunately not in a straight line, as a northeast wind caught him off Nantucket and drove him down to the latitude of Hatteras, where he and his companions were rescued by a passing steamer. Though the attempt to cross the Atlantic was unsuccessful, Wellman's dirigible. of course infinitely more primitive than the airships which finally did make the flight in 1919, made a record creditable enough for that period. In the first hours of the flight Wellman kept in communication with The Times by wireless — the first time, as far as can be learned, that an aviation story was covered by wireless from the air - and the wireless again brought the news of his rescue out at sea. though in this case the messages were dispatched from the rescuing steamer.

The automobile business was at this period going through the transition from a dangerous sport of the idle rich to a basic industry meeting the needs of the proletariat. Automobile news for a long time was prominent in every paper, more prominent than it is now, because the automobile attracted both a sporting and a commercial interest. Its promotion, however, was being taken care of by so many people that The Times, though publishing very full and trustworthy automobile news, had no occasion to do in this field anything like its work in aviation and wireless. One event, however, it did promote—a New York-to-Paris automobile race, in collaboration with the Paris Matin, early in 1908.

If one single news story published in The Times in this period were to be marked out as more famous than all the rest, it would have to be Admiral Peary's story of the discovery of the North Pole. Before Peary started north on his final trip The Times had arranged for exclusive news publication of his story in New York and had agreed to act as his agent in selling other rights. It had advanced $4000 to him, as he needed that much to make the expedition possible, to be repaid out of the profits from the use and sale of the rights to Peary's story of the trip. As it turned out, Peary's story sold so well that he realized through The Times nearly three times this amount.

It was, accordingly, a good deal of a disappointment to the conductors of The Times when early in September, 1909, Peary being still absent beyond communication in the north, the little known Dr. Frederick Cook suddenly appeared en route to Copenhagen and announced that he had discovered the Pole on April 21 of the previous year.

The Times's reaction to the news was, however, about the same as the reaction of nearly everybody else. It was inclined to give Dr. Cook the benefit of the doubt, and, when more details of his alleged exploit began to come in and proved to be vague, confusing and rather suspicious, The Times was still, like most other people, inclined to wait for proof before discrediting the story.

But all this was changed when on September 6, while Cook was dining with the King of Denmark and receiving all the honors that Copenhagen could bestow, Peary reached Indian Harbor and sent word to The Times by wireless and cable that he had found the Pole. Everybody believed Peary; he was an explorer and scientist of the highest standing, and the whole world took his word. The trouble began a day or two later when Pearv informed his family, and the public, that Cook's story need not be taken seriously. By that time Cook had sold the right of publication of his narrative to The New York Herald, which had syndicated it everywhere. It turned out to be a bad bargain for The Herald, but it was an excellent bargain for Cook in more wavs than one. Aside from the price he received which, according to rumor, was, through a mistake in cable transmission, ten times what he had asked, but which to James Gordon Bennett seemed not exorbitant for what Cook had to offer -- he found at once a large number of newspapers enrolled on his side and compelled in their own interest to advocate his claims to the very last.

It may be said that The Times was in luck and The Herald was out of luck. But it was not a question of luck; The Times had reason for putting up money for Peary's story before he started north, for he was the most experienced and probably the most renowned of Arctic explorers. In so far as success in reaching the Pole was not a matter of chance, Peary was a better bet than anybody else. Bennett's purchase of Cook's story, after Cook had asserted that he had discovered the Pole, was natural enough, for nobody knew much about Cook then. It must be regarded as an unfortunate lapse from impartiality of judgment, however, that the papers which had published Cook's story for the most part felt that they had to believe it, or at any rate to pretend that they believed it.

Peary's detailed story came through by wireless rather slowly, and was published in The Times on September 9, 10 and 11, 1909. In the meantime a correspondent of The London Chronicle, Philip Gibbs, who was to become famous as a war correspondent a few years later - and more famous through the American publication of his work in The New York Times and papers which bought the news from The Times than even his home paper made him — had subjected Dr. Cook and his story to an intensive study, and had come to the conclusion that there was nothing in it. For a few days Gibbs was almost alone in saving this outright, but Peary's heated denunciations of Cook forced the issue and the worldwide civil war was on. In the promotion of domestic strife in every nation, in the setting of households against each other and bringing not peace, but a sword to every breakfast table, Cook and Peary did better than Lenin and Trotzky ever dreamed of doing.

That war is ancient history, and there is no longer any doubt as to who was right. The Times, which had obtained the North Pole story on its own initiative, was equally successful in obtaining the accounts of the two discoveries of the South Pole by Amundsen and Scott, though in both cases it could do no more than buy the American rights from British owners - in the case of Scott, the Central News; in the case of Amundsen, The London Chronicle. Of course, exclusive rights to American publication of great news stories of this sort were not any too widely respected. The narratives of Amundsen and Scott were stolen and published by other newspapers, though The Times owned the copyright. Naturally, The Times sued all the New York newspapers that republished these stories without permission. The suits failed on technical points. common-law sanction of a right of prior publication by the purchaser or gatherer of news, finally established in the litigation by which The Associated Press compelled the Hearst services to stop the practice of "lifting" Associated Press bulletins, had not vet been established when these cases were tried, and The Times got no material compensation from those who had infringed its rights. But its lawsuits did have one important and valuable result; at each successive stage of the suits, when technical decisions went against The Times, the appropriating newspapers gleefully announced their victory, telling their readers over and over how The Times had bought the news but they had been able to take it and "get away with it." This unintentional advertisement of The Times was quite helpful.

Of the great news stories of the period to which everybody had access, and in dealing with which an individual newspaper could distinguish itself only by specially competent treatment, the one most vividly remembered in The Times office is the sinking of the Titanic in April, 1912. The Times was more fortunate than other papers in handling that story correctly from the moment when the news of the first wireless call for help was received in newspaper offices. "More fortunate" is the proper term, for the general conviction that the Titanic was unsinkable was so strong, and so gallantly maintained for twenty-four hours after the disaster by the officials of the White Star Line, that there was good excuse for reluctance to believe that the disaster had been serious.

It happened that The Times by careful comparison of the first dispatches about the collision with the iceberg and by repeated inquiries of its own promptly made up its mind that the Titanic was gone. It held to that view all through the confused reports of the next day, even though officials of the line still asserted that there was no news confirming the suspicion; and it was right.

When the Carpathia landed with the survivors The Times covered the story more completely than any other New York paper, though they all did their best. One feature, the stories told by the Titanic's two wireless operators, though arranged for by wireless before the Carpathia's arrival, could not have been obtained when the ship docked but for the opportune assistance of Senator Marconi; but the rest of the news was gathered by the diligence of The Times's own reporters, who performed feats of interviewing on that night which showed the high standard of news-getting ability to which the staff had been brought. Altogether, the paper printed fifteen pages of news about the Titanic the next morning. Its work on this famous story excited widespread admiration, and members of The Times staff visiting the offices of European newspapers have been gratified to learn that some of them had considered copies of The Times of that period worthy of preservation as models to be studied. Even certain New York editors wrote to friends in The Times office expressing ungrudging admiration.

The Times's political news in this period was steadily gaining wider recognition for trustworthiness. Like everything else on The Times, the political correspondence was less spectacular than that of some other papers, but in the long run it was apt to be more trustworthy. There were, however, a number of outstanding feats of news enterprise which supplied the spectacular element from time to time. Such was, for example, the publication in advance of the draft of the Republican national platform of 1908, as drawn up by the leaders of the Roosevelt forces at the convention. President Roosevelt at once went into eruption upon seeing this news in The Times, and declared that it was not a correct version. But when the platform was adopted and made known to the world it was found to differ only in half a dozen minor points of phraseology from the version printed in The Times — which, of course, was presented as nothing more than the draft agreed on by the dominating Roosevelt faction at the time of publication. This achievement set a precedent to which Times political reporters have managed to live up ever since; in most subsequent campaign years The Times has managed to obtain the platform of one or the other national conventions before it was formally given out to the press at large.

Accomplishments such as this are the result of long preparation; they imply a well-organized staff of veteran political reporters with a wide acquaintance, with many friends in high place, and with qualities that command confidence. An illustration of the competence of The Times political staff under different circumstances was afforded at Mr. Taft's inauguration in 1909. It may be remembered that in that year a blizzard suddenly descended on Washington on the night of March 3, and by the time the inauguration ceremonies had been concluded the next day practically all the telephone and telegraph wires leading out of the town were out of commis-The stories of the day's events written by The Times staff were prepared in quintuplicate. One copy was kept on file in the office of the Washington correspondent of The Times, and all through the evening desperate but unavailing efforts were made to get this through on the leased wires or by telephone. Another was filed with the Western Union for transmission on any other wires they might be able to open. Two more were dispatched by messengers on trains for New York. Both trains were held up by snowdrifts, but one of them reached Philadelphia late at night and the copy was telegraphed on by The Times correspondent there. But before it reached the office, most of the news had already arrived. The Times managed to find a telegraph wire open from Washington to New Orleans, and the fifth copy of each story was sent over that wire to New Orleans, thence to Chicago, thence to Albany, and finally into the office in New York, circling the area devastated by the blizzard. The Times had all its special dispatches about the inauguration in its first edition the next morning.

The Times was able on occasion not only to get news from politicians but to send news to politicians. During the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore in 1912 special trains brought down every morning the city edition of The Times, so that before the morning sessions had begun the delegates were reading the news of what they had been doing up to four or five o'clock that morning - and since the work of national conventions is mostly done after midnight in smoke-filled rooms, there is a big difference between the first edition and the last edition in convention week. It might be mentioned here that during the Republican convention at Chicago last year The Times sent a moderately late edition, carrying news received up to three A.M., to Chicago by airplane.

In 1903 Thomas A. Janvier wrote for The Times a series of articles on the early history of New York, and the paper announced a competition for the school children of the city in the writing of essays based on Janvier's articles. The interest aroused by this was enormous. In thousands of homes the entire family was excited by the son's or daughter's effort to win one of the prizes or medals offered for the best compositions, and the result was not only an increase in the circulation of The Times, which, of course, was the principal purpose of the competition, but the educating of a great many children, and a great many parents, in the past of a city whose history is less known to its inhabitants than probably any other in America. It hardly needs to be said that the increase in circulation created by this competition would have been only temporary and illusory if new readers attracted to The Times, who first read it in order to see what chance Johnny or Gladys was likely to have of getting a medal, had not found that it was worth reading all the time. The contest was a good piece of advertising, but it would not have brought results if the merchandise advertised had not been satisfactory.

LAYING THE CORNERSTONE, TIMES BUILDING, JANUARY 18, 1904.

TIMES SQUARE, THE CENTRE FOR NEWS.

The results which it did bring were so gratifying that The Times has done the same thing on several occasions since then — notably in 1909, when in commemoration of the Lincoln centenary there was a competition of essays based on a series of articles on the life of Lincoln by Frederic Trevor Hill. But though these competitions were always useful, both to The Times and to those who participated in them, none of the later ones had the effect of the first. For in 1903 the idea had been new and striking in its novelty; and it was so effective that all the other papers soon imitated it.

But the story of those years is, after all, the story of a steadily improving news service, a staff constantly more alert for news, and better educated in the handling of news. There are other stories, many of them, that were important enough at the time, but are hardly relevant to the history of The Times as a whole. One or two of them may be mentioned as indicative of certain tendencies which have become more prominent in the character of The Times in more recent years. When Theodore Roosevelt, returning from Africa, made his famous speech at the Guildhall, London, on June 18, 1910, The Times had a verbatim report of it sent by cable. The idea that the public would be interested in every word of a speech delivered at a great distance was then a novel one; it was still novel years later, in the war, when The Times developed the habit of publishing in full the speeches of Lloyd George, of Bethmann-Hollweg, Hertling and Czernin, and other leaders of the European Governments. this process, which may be described as the documentation of current history, The Times has always maintained a long lead over its rivals. Other papers may think that the public does not want to read long speeches, and will be satisfied with a summary and a few quotations. The Times has found that at least in such a crisis as the World War a large part of the public is interested in long speeches, verbatim speeches; that on some occasions every word of such speeches is news. Roosevelt's Guildhall speech was news, and deserved to be printed in full. As a matter of fact, the idea that a speech which would be printed in full if it were delivered in New York, with an advance copy sent to the city editor. can be dismissed with a column summary if it is delivered in London or Paris, has no sound foundation. It rests on a tradition coming down from the davs when cables were few and press cablegrams necessarily brief and expensive. With modern facilities of communication, there is no reason why news from London, Paris and Berlin cannot be handled as its importance deserves.

The great development of The Times sporting news has come since the end of the war, but on certain occasions before the war it covered big sporting events rather more fully than was its custom. One of these was the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno in 1910, when the stories sent by regular members of The Times staff were supplemented by expert criticism contributed by John L. Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan, though then appearing for the first time as a journalist, knew enough about prize fighting to make, and defend, the prediction that Johnson was going to win; which, being contrary to the wish and belief of a majority of the public, brought to The Times a considerable volume of protest. However, Sullivan was right. On the value of these occasional contributions from outside experts there may be divergent opinions; but at any rate the paper which published the first literary works of Henry Adams and John L. Sullivan may be credited with a certain breadth of taste, as well as with a keen realization of the variety of belletristic talent produced in Boston.

Perhaps two matters of special interest to The Times may here be mentioned, although their most notable development falls in a later period. One of the hobbies of the paper has been the protection of the city parks. Special interests of this sort are more in the line of some other New York papers; in general The Times has not given much attention to them, for while realizing that they offer considerable opportunities for public service it considers them outside the field of straight newspaper work to which it is devoted. Its interest in the parks, however, has seemed necessary, since it is a duty which has been neglected by others.

The number and variety of the schemes for the invasion of city parks, especially Central Park, would be inconceivable to those who have not had occasion to study them. From such magnificent schemes as the cutting up of the whole park into building lots down to trivial incursions, ostensibly for special or temporary purposes, almost every use has been suggested for Central Park by persons who call themselves practical men. It has seemed to the management of The Times that the most practical use of Central Park, or any other park, is to keep it as a park — as a place where residents of the city may get into the open air and make some effort to get back to a sort of nature. Some of the other plans for using the park space have been well enough intended, but The Times has always thought that New York needed it as a park more than as an athletic field, a site for public buildings, or anything else.

The most notable incident in this long and measurably successful struggle to preserve the park against encroachments, and the most difficult, because the aims of those who wanted to invade the park were excellent in themselves, was the "park trench" episode in the spring of 1918. The members of the Liberty Loan Committee, then in the fourth loan campaign, had allowed themselves to be persuaded by an enthusiastic publicity man that popular interest could be aroused by the exhibition in New York of a model trench sector such as those in which American soldiers were fighting in France - which was correct - and that the place for this exhibition was the Sheep Meadow in Central Park - which to The Times seemed entirely erroneous. The damage that would have been done to the park by the digging of trenches, though considerable, could have been repaired; the harm done to the idea of the integrity of the park could not have been repaired. For that was in the palmy days of drives — drives for all sorts of causes, most of them worthy. The Liberty Loan campaigns being the greatest and most obviously necessary drives, minor enterprises were inclined to follow their lead. Had the precedent once been established of using the park for visual education of this sort, every drive that followed would have come forward with the same demand; and it would have been as difficult to draw the line between drives which wanted to get into the park as it was later found to discriminate between campaigners who wanted space on the steps of the Public Library, or the privilege of soliciting contributions in the public schools.

The fight to keep the trenches out of the park is perhaps remembered chiefly because it produced Mayor Hylan's memorable remark about "art artists." But it is worthy of remembrance because it succeeded in keeping the trenches out of the park. In the course of the campaign The Times had occasion to do a good deal in the way of educating the public in the elementary philosophy of parks—a task it had undertaken before, but never at such length or with such earnestness. It may be hoped that this effort was not without effect, and that a somewhat larger percentage of the population of New York City now understands that the purpose of setting aside land for a park is to have a park, and not to provide a convenient building site for some structure intended for a worthy purpose, whose promoters do not want to pay the current prices of real estate.

The defense of the parks is a matter in which The Times has felt under obligation to take up a public duty neglected by others. The other special interest of the paper mentioned above is still more peculiarly its own, for it was invented by the publisher of The Times. This is the annual Christmas appeal for the Hundred Neediest Cases, chosen from the lists of four of the leading charitable societies in the city. The appeal was first made in 1912, and aroused an interest that increased from year to year. By 1920 the individual contributions had mounted into the thousands, and a total of more than $111,000 was raised — every cent of which goes directly to the relief of the cases whose history is told in The Times, or others like them, and only less needy, when the first hundred have been relieved; for in several years the response was sufficient to cover more than two hundred cases, comprehending about a thousand persons each year. The administrative expenses come out of the general funds of the charitable societies, so that all the money raised by the appeals goes directly for relief. total of contributions in each year's appeal is here tabulated.

1912	•		•	•	•	•			$	3,630.88
1913	•		•	•						9,646.36
1914		•	•	•			•	•		15,032.46
1915	•		•	•						31,819.92
1916			•			•	•			55,792.45
1917			•	•		•	•	•		62,103.47
1918				•		•	•	•		81,097.57
1919			•		•	•		•	I	06,967.14
1920									I	11,131.00

What has been accomplished by this appeal? First of all, of course, the relief of hundreds of destitute families — the raising of hundreds of thousands of dollars, most if not all of which would never have been contributed to charity if The Times had not, day after day, in the weeks before Christmas of each year, presented the stories of these families who were in desperate need. With few exceptions, the cases selected for presentation in these appeals have been families, or individuals, who needed only temporary help in order to get back on their feet again and become able to pay their way. That this result has been achieved in hundreds of instances is proved by the records of the charitable societies. orphan children have been adopted into kindly homes. Some of those who were aided in the earlier vears have since been listed among the contributors to the fund. More and more of them will appear in this character as time goes on, and children who have been aided to get an education, or whose disabled parents have been enabled to bring them up properly, become self-supporting members of society.

But the wider usefulness of the annual campaigns lies in the education of the public. Many people who have never given to organized charity before are stirred by this Christmas appeal; and when they have once begun to learn something about the destitution which is always to be found in New York City, their interest is apt to continue and they become regular contributors. Some of them go further and give personal attention to charitable work; and all of them learn something about the nature of that work, and the conditions which it is trying to improve. The conductors of The Times do not know the solution of the problem of poverty, nor even if there is a solution; but they think that a solution is more likely to be found if everybody studies the problem.

These considerations were in large part responsible for the refusal, by the management of The Times, of the offer of $1,000,000 as a standing endowment, the interest on which should be applied to the relief of the Hundred Neediest Cases, on condition that The Times should undertake the investigation of the cases and the administration of the fund. A sufficient reason for refusing this offer was the fact that The Times is a newspaper and not a charitable society, and that its conductors find that getting out a newspaper takes all their time and ability. It was felt that the gentleman who made this offer could do more effective work for the relief of poverty if he allowed his money to be handled by the people who have given a lifetime of study and practice to relief work.

Such a magnificent gift might have inclined other possible contributors to think that the need had already been met. And it can never be fully met,

"All the News That's

The New York Times.

Generally fate today and Monday: gentle to moderate south winds. PAGE 5. SPORTS SECTION.

Fit to Print."

PRICE FIVE CENTS. FRANCE IS MOBILIZING AND MAY BE DRAWN IN TOMORROW; GERMANY DECLARES WAR ON RUSSIA, FIRST SHOTS ARE FIRED; NEW YORK, SUNDAY, AUGUST 2, 1914.-88 PAGES, In Seven Parts, "serical binness, and ferrous actions, and ferrous actions actions actions VOL. LXIII...NO. 20,644.

PLANS TO RESCUE THE 100,000 AMERICANS NOW IN EUROPE

Germany's War Challenge Chronology of Yesterday's Fatefal Events

.12 Mishight.—Germany demands that Russia cease mobilization and gives a twelve-hour limit. 13 Near-The time limit of Germany's ultimatum to Russia expires. 5.15 P. M.—Emperor William signs an order for the mobilization of the German Army.

7.59 P. M.—The German Ambassador at St. Petershung delivers to the Musian Government & Sederation of war in the mans of Germany and leaves St. Petersburg.

Enrollment of Reservists Begun

SERLIN, Aug. 1.—A German patrol near Prostten was fired on this atthenous by a. Sumian franție; patrol. The Germans returned the fire. There were no tessea. Prosition is a village of 2,300 inhebitants, in East Prussia. It is situated about two and one-half miles west of the international

STIRRING SCENES ATTEND IT

Angalous of the Angalous Charles of the Special of the superat-tion of the Angalous of the Angalous of the Angalous of the Particles and resident at reseal that in the served dup if it did not take this measure, the Government has fixed by decrea.

And and the Angalous of Angalous of the Angalous of the Angalous of Angalous

First Shots Fired in the Rossb-German War.

Transports for Refugees ENGLAND HESITATES France Orders Mobiliza Poincare Orders Mobilization, Transports for Refugees ENGLAND HESITATES France To Refuse France to 16 Not War Yet Delivered to Russia at Grey Wants to Throw the Weight of Great Nary at Once in Fa-or of Russia and France. Appropriation Will Probably Be so good authority that the Cabiset is Asked from Congress to Reseue Stranded Americans.

Str Edward Grey, according to this President and Cabinet Issue MIGHT SEND OVER GOLD To Ralieve Those Unable to Get

EW WARSHIPS NOW THERE Consuls Being Confronted with Obtain Passage.

Librd George Jeach the other fac- PLAIN WORDS TO GERMANY and an access series of artificial a proceeded solution of the celebrate the Generalization and construction of the celebrate is discounted to excess. To come upon the celebrate is discounted to excess. To come upon the celebrate celebr is now as no longer any parties. There is an starnal France-a in peaceful and resolute. There is a fatherland of peace and jumples.

> "You Are Mobilizing; We Know H," Saye Prime Minister liself outside and not engage to a can with honor and advantage hold land and the United States can to- OROERS TO FOREIGNERS to Cerman Envoy.

> MIXIOUS INQUIRIES POUR IN Washington Can Only Reply That

Many Urgent Calls

Americans May Stay on Getting ment in such fashien as to reduce to tword will entergo victorious in the right,"

the Casic anight to a crowd of $0,000 beneath, who cheered and sang particle congr must be appeared. He said is "I thank you for the love and loyalty shown no: When I enter

Reply to Cermeny Due Than,

RANCE HAS TILL MONDAY

The speech was thrick interrupted by veriforous charring. At its conclusion the Kaiser bowed in all directions, setting amid a frenzied upon a fight let all party strife cease. We are German heelbers and nothing else. All parties have attacked on in times of peace. I for-give then with all my heart. I hope and wish that the good German

WARRINGTON ARE L. The Association for seeks that the part of the component arthurs of the component and the part of the component and the component arthurs from the law and the component arthurs from the law and the component arthurs from a component from a component arthurs from a component arthurs from a component arthurs from a component arthur from a component arthurs from a component arthurs from a component arthurs from a component arthur from a component arthur from a component arthurs from a component arthurs from a component arthur from a component arthur or our creeds. I am sure that all the young German men see ready to shed their blood for the fame and greatons of Germany. We can only trust in God, Who hitherto his silvays given us yelvery." LUXEMBURG INVADED.

id invess on posters work and the most experience of the most form of delivers of the most form of delivers of the most form of the most form of the most form into the most form into the most form of the children are proported to all the hands, kinetify a bourght indicate the hands, kinetify a bourgh into the hands, kinetify a function of the hands.	3 8 5,5 0 5 5 5 5	it is be diversely could south con- riterative in Section 1. Therefore, the resolute to resolution in Landon the resolute to resolution in Landon the resolution that resolution the re- linear to resolution and resolution that the resolution is a resolution to resolution the resolution that the resolution is a resolution that the resolution is a resolution to resolution the resolution in the resolution that the resolution is a resolution to resolution that the resolution that the resolution is a resolution to resolution that the resolution t	bloods. In the grately of the fact True in the grately of Pattern French of Pattern	chine decorate in section 711. chine consent is section 711. p. ARIR Sunday. Mr. 2—778. p. ARIR Sunday. Mr. 2—778. chine in the section of the section o	I vera aire searthiness we seem to be in this country. I vera aire searthiness we seem to be in the country of the term to search we seem to be in the country of the term to search we seem to be in the term to seem to be in the search we seem to be in the search we were the sea	As I rem, and to prevent any possibility and a removal with the ratio commany and a removal with the ratio commany and a removal with the ratio commany and a removal with the ratio of	Many applications were received of increase and to pre- table gibbs Department from per weat increasement with the first force seekers and construction artists ing American Council or the deficient artists ing American Council or the deficient artists of the first of the first of the seekers artists the first of the
er. Perter tertion is no mobilisation the aight till of the city the reservisi population as	int of the motived have from The fullest no all mobilisation in by the last reath Fembara	Franca's ruply & quest ne to the fo case Germany and Rusela is stated is ratisfactory to Brn	a store to force a will take the force neclance in the k d not seek war. Ar for our ealed titlens benor to d	direct your phonon proper in the Cabi- vinal has made contrar in the Cabi- ment of the contrar of the cabi- ter of War, and Georgea Characters, ter of War, and Georgea Characters, ter of War, and Georgea Characters at Delcase is one of the Breagh and Capital in the cabi- ment of Characters, when the Breagh and comment. He many factors of the and comment.	of the state of th	had a more to metrice a motor, mero to see sevelent from the orders siven in and for the metric state of the orders siven in med, German Horra, the blow is apprehen of in derman? The orders in the Transfer of the orders of the orders of the Transfer of the orders of the orders of the presence of the order of the order orders of the presence of the order of the order orders of the presence of the order of the order orders of the presence of the order of the order orders of the presence of the order of the order orders of the presence of the order order order or The order of the order order order or The order order order order order or The order	subdimental appropriation would be abuilty to service of contract electronists to the an electronists of the abundance of the
Russia al Russia al	was ent for an is order to pro- cave. Up to 2 o'clos	antirely completed. We the first blow will be unetter of the widest a	tam has bren daroled to the main- tenance of posce. To the last hour hp has worked for peace in Europe, and he is still working for it. Should	Dermila roum was intenter. LONDON, Aug. 1.—A Parts dile-be osteb to the Center Name by far parts of the be	within whith France must answer in Buren von Schön called at the French of Foreign Office at 11:40 A. M. to re-	Thanhs to the recall upintees represent the view by the King. Orest Britain ort. Idea preclamation of mobilisation would not only readly affect the second 'line. I only readly affect the second 'line. I	randors, with a street of the bat- transfer and crew of the bat- transfer of the top- transfer of the core by the Orces Government. The Mains will have Villefranche today for An- only selly affect.
agreete alaging hympa. ' The Municion Council of Waresy: The Municion Council of Waresy: I are voted 1,000,000 roundes (about and noted 1,000,000 roundes of	BOKE		peace in the empire water we de- dayaloged in forty-four ware of peaceful labor. The whole work of Emperor Will- "The whole work of Emperor Will-		3 Å g	nen in England know what is orders nen are are.	expenn waters are the little guiceau. Ecorpion, station able at Constontinopie, and the bettleship Mains at Ville- franche, with Annapolla midshipmen to the assembling stational while principle avoid where the rader.	Prench Government had terued origination for graderal mobilization. This came a few hours after the	either aggompanied of processeral stroke of war. In London this morning	von Molti pire for u	192	h haron von Schön, was directed by to his Government to sak what west were to the Intentions of France about Rus-	seighborhood of C sricint of the Adm	ing samption from science if used cally for transportation of Americana. The only American warnings in En-
aure at 6	warfare many and Acatela. war is The thirs imparts development of war is the control of the con	cially barun. In the history of modern on afficial declaration of	give expression to your feelings for your Fatherland you have come to the house of Bismarck, who with Emperor	10	irion to know he St. Petersh flarondous 'th	be on to what the fleet wilt do first. and The First Mome Fleet, which mailed the under sealed orders, is believed to be	Angustana bane. By special arrangement, officials be at to what the first were first through the the American Government could under sealed owdern.
moves forward and the demonstration than are remuined with greater artists. Encouraged of the reservision artists.	perform a manuar which indicated the the the the the tenths and the the tenths and the war to	log all her anarans to use un the first blow, which joight a whele course of the war, z	is official residence, mahin lag appecb, in which he sai	day of requirements of the late of the lat	criter has svening and formally day, notified him that Germany had ad- by a creased an utilizatum to Rusta, "de- tw	ter of the apurious spligaton, of recent of the Chine event of the Cabino ing years. In the event of the Cabino ing	that the Ourserment sould that bornedstaly some of the big on
sion, are heard, and the crawda listed atlantly with bared heads. On the	Allance, but it was given some care of vralsemblance by the fact that the British and Italian Ambassadors in		The German Imperial Chanceller, Dr., von Bethmann-Hollwag, ad- dressed a huge procession of dam-	enlate. All foreigners reay have Farty of	1 2 9	tor that will probably influence the deciding is the total absence of indi-	of Agrecian register. Amarican war- ahips would be of litth um, on they have hardly any expandly for pussen-
2 5		and Russla, France would requin nou-	orced him to take of	those from Washington, to then over the affairs of the deferant Embany. while Alesander H. Thacker, the while Alesander H. Thacker, the	The course of diplomatio events the gard a grant a grant at ternion can be white	to It is said that the Cabinet is likely like	American find themselves unable to preferant find themselves unable to per memory on the overcowded boats
Speakers fired with patrictic ferror barangus the crewds. In front of the Karan Cathedral each procession	rent th	Viciant calling upon France to inform Garmany whether to the event of the	Willen a Empera	3 2	sulcided to allow Germany to pur France to jurther expense with fegard to war preparations without actual	on day to desert France. Then they will set, strike us out of the list of callends. In that any prover can trust.	Thus are balog besiged on all store day of the requests for themsels essistance, sire
there is an o	1 2 2	74 £	Agreed Germany, on that mobiliar- Runda had ordered the full mobiliar- tion of her forces, Upon this Emperor	Holbing is known known to see here are public as to what is going as behind the geong the hind the geong the	mobilisation, but that the views of	or than that of France. Our hours are	congrates, legations and embassus are divoid of funds for the spergen constons, carrying portraits of the Emperor, with figgs waving and	3 5 6		calon was to have can a today in regard proposals in which G	The Control	A runner to territori that there were 11 o	is of last west, we months our continues in more we shall be too late to influence in an arbitrariant which to infractly but an arbitrariant which to increase the continues in a second continues on the continues of the continue	tion of European sechange has made it transferly impossible to east above or letters of cradit. American
The Revoky Propect, and all the leading thoroughtens are diled with	have capsed an imit to Italy.		andangured. If not made impossible. The communication adds that a de-		stated, the German Ambastador was	n Near East.	Plat at least 100,000, and possibly as many on 300,000, while abstract hours often it had been received. The city immediately presented a spec-	the taking up of arms of August in a quarret, pros	could reply to the German utili-	in, and Emperor William tele- phed to the Emperor of Russia phed to the Emperor of Russia	tanight with departing reservice in the parting reservice in the parting reservice.	Austria and between France and Gar- to many, continued this evening.	of great artism may duride the float.	ted tout a most serious problem was to confronting them in the pught of W Americana abroad. They estimated gr
the expired and its actually. Amouncement of the declaration of	Coremponder Covernment	Germany had antunded for forty-eight hours, that is, until Monday poon, the	on was initiated in Vienes. This this was in progress the naws	The response to the state of the stations made of all the railways, particularly thuse W	relations between France and Ger- many. Conversations between the less many.	A decisive Cheatre of	who wished to leave. State Department officials admit-
12	was aggined that her indices is mere not menaced.	dispetch from Paris had raised the	Emperor William raplied that he real willingly take up the lask of	Then a general mobilization in posted.	by a preciamation by the President and the Cablest to the patien. Don	the die on their frontiers. John in inghtfall, or even before these lines are	spers on palen in caring for Ameri-
the Fu	The second development was a con- his Gor firmation of the report that Italy was to make senate parties as ions as the older	against Rumla resched Lopdon from Rt. Pelamburg late lust arendost, odiy bay an bace after s Cantral Nove	he anistratum of a European way and to try to restrain his ally Amelia-	oreing to the year in which they en- ored the army. Precise instructions for always in the possassion of every are always in the possassion of every	The degree of mobilication of the	says:	president Mr. Bryan cabled all con- quistes, legations and embassics to
ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1The	interview, with Fremie 2 o'clock ynsterday mo-	LONDON, Bunday, Aug. 2.—The	the Russian Emperor on July 29 tel- agraphed to Emperor William urgent-	The date of the mobilication was a set for temerrow, but it really begine manufataly. The man are called out a	On the addendary were many working the woman and entities. All the stores and entities.	with reference to the Cablast's po-	ten vessels abread with gold for ceedings for the Por- the raise of Americans. Immediate With reference to Served by the Rettring Ambariador		The Party Com Visible	An erricial communication published in the North German Gazette mys	thin a few missing afterward, or-	Hare and there the cry, "On to Ber-	a half hours yesterd Grey left in the ral	If necessary the Washington Gov-monteston via the contest of cont	the terms of the Eing's telegram a guarded, as the arrictest scorpt informations Tate Tracks corre-	dam oh Germady and Pranse. A straight and fraym between Berlin and Payer between Berlin and Payer would pass through the	It was officially achounted that the me limit of the Garman ultimatum b Russia axulted at noon.	The Garman roply was submitted to the The Garman roply was submitted to	other national employing and commission and and and and and and and and and an	reach. South hape in ing an a respita The Cahinot Coun	epinjon of the bankare who unuany meres the State Department, abroad in norming. Talephonic and telegraphic com-	that can affort made by King George to bring influence to bear on the Cast'	Luxamburg je a neblral State	newitable, owing to the requirements of the military sutherities.	used he concluded from this that If in incidents occurred they could only be incidents occurred they could only be incidents of the common military of	araded r and	the Ministers are red trit then, and none	a friel decision until tomorrow, when they will confer again and gat the satisgy of military secrets could pos-	The established racts, bearing on the crisis in yesterday's developments, in important to sole. The first is	The news reached hard to a Near- ter telephone message from Grus-	rictions, therefore, on the postol.	The Prefater proceeded to paint out in last the German troops were at the at	bated on the Faris houlevards which		The President and Mr. Bryan disnaide most aleborate arrangements obtain a special wire, ender a gian-	your Trans correspondent mantlons of for what it is worth.	Lubernbarg. They sained the Gov-	ken for the protection of the Gar-	resolt troups from the immediate to	1:50 o'clock Sunday Bight. The widom! enthellams was think go	Cabinet to Beet Tentant.	Congress for an apprepriation is an ant that a London paper which had	is nurs speculation, and The New of		a threatening dangar of war neces-	to the withdrawal of the	arcial Guerra, in to de Complesed at	1

at least not until everybody in New York has come to understand it. The educational value of the annual campaigns has certainly been great, and is greater every year. Indeed, they have already won their place in literature; Mr. Robert W. Chambers presented as the heroine of one of his recent novels an orphan who had been adopted by a wealthy gentleman after he had read her story as one of the Hundred Neediest Cases.

On April 1, 1913, The Times abandoned the sevencolumn page which it had presented to its readers for the past forty-eight years and went to eight columns. The change was chiefly due to a conviction that the narrower column was somewhat easier to read, but it was also based in some degree upon the need of getting more reading matter into the paper without increasing the size of the page. Already the number of pages had increased, though it was not yet foreseen that the time would come when the paper would print forty pages on a week day, as happened occasionally in 1919.

But The Times, increasing the quantity of its offering to readers, had maintained the same quality which it had always presented. It was still the same solid, dignified, reliable paper; the only difference was that it was appealing to more and more readers every year.

The average circulation, which had been more than 102,000 in the jubilee year, rose gradually to 143,460 in 1907; leaped the next year to 172,880; passed 200,000 in 1911; reached 225,392 in 1912, and was around the quarter-million mark at the outbreak of the war, when the great achievements of The Times news service sent it leaping once more.

Though its worldwide renown was chiefly a growth of the war years, The Times was already recognized as one of the great newspapers of the country, great not only in circulation and volume of business, but in character. A good many people did not like the kind of paper which The Times was and always had been, but they had to admit that it was an excellent paper of the kind, and more and more people every year were coming to prefer that kind.

In the articles on New York journalism written by Will Irwin for Collier's Weekly in 1911 The Times was called a "commercial newspaper" - a somewhat curious epithet, since all newspapers are conducted with the purpose, even if that object is not always attained, of making a profit. Mr. Irwin was compelled, however, to admit that The Times came "the nearest of any newspaper to presenting a truthful picture of life in New York and the world at large," and indeed his only criticism was that it did not crusade. This, of course, was during the muckraking epoch, and it is a striking tribute to The Times that in that day when every institution was being violently assaulted a muckraker could find nothing to say against the paper except that it did not wield the muckrake

The great news feats mentioned above all played their part in attracting attention to the paper and winning new readers, but it cannot be repeated too often that in the newspaper business as in any other business customers who are attracted by advertising can be held only by the quality of the merchandise. For whatever reason people began to read The Times, they continued to read it because they found it an enterprising and trustworthy newspaper. The essay competitions had taken it into the public schools, where in many cases it came to be regarded as the best guide to current events. And in private schools, too, The Times was always welcomed where some of its competitors were regarded with a suspicious eye. The proprietor of its ablest rival in the morning newspaper field once graciously called attention to the fact that The Times was the only morning newspaper taken at the select school which his daughter attended.

CHAPTER IV

Some Aspects of Business Policy

THE TIMES had begun to gain circulation very soon after the new publisher took charge. With this, of course, went an enormous increase in the business of the paper. There was built up an unusually efficient business department, managed for many years past by Louis Wiley and previously by the late John Norris. Within four years after the assumption of control by the new management the circulation of The Times, at the beginning of the new century, had reached 100,000; ten years later it had passed 200,000, and now in the twenty-fifth year of the present management it circulates an average of 330,000 copies on week days and 500,000 on Sundays.

And this is a genuine circulation. There are no return privileges which permit of subtle distinctions between the number of papers distributed and the number sold, nor has the circulation been padded or inflated by any irregular methods. Some illustrations of the principles of The Times on this point may here be offered with apologies to the well-intentioned friends of the paper with whose ideas the management was unable to agree.

One day during the Presidential campaign of 1900 the Republican National Committee happened to be meeting in New York. That morning The Times carried an editorial on the issues of the campaign which struck the Republican managers as about the most forcible presentation of the case which they had seen anywhere. Mr. Luther Little of the Committee was accordingly instructed to call on the publisher to express the Committee's thanks and appreciation and to order one million copies of that issue for distribution.

SOME ASPECTS OF BUSINESS POLICY

To his profound surprise, the publisher of The Times refused to accept the order. He felt that the wide free distribution of a marked newspaper might easily create, in the minds of many who received it, a false impression to the effect that the appearance of the article and the purchase of the copies might be in some way a bargain. The Times, of course, would not receive payment of any sort for what appeared in its reading columns, and it did not want to incur even the suspicion. Mr. Little argued, not without plausibility, that The Times must have printed that editorial hoping that people would read it, and here a million more readers were offered. But the publisher of the paper felt that readers of that sort would do the paper little good, while the accompanying suspicions would do positive harm.

The conductors of The Times were publishing a paper for the people who liked the sort of paper they were publishing. They did not want it forced on anybody's attention or given away free because it contained something which happened to strike the fancy of gentlemen who were able to order and distribute a million copies. Circulation of such character, it was felt, could do the paper no good and might do a great deal of harm. The only readers

The Times sought were readers who would buy the paper because they wanted it. They did not wish it to be classed with the sort of campaign literature that is distributed free.

A somewhat similar issue arose in the same campaign when the Republican State Committee of New Jersey wanted to buy 20,000 copies of The Times every day during the last three months of the canvass. This proposal also was declined. This sort of thing had been a commonplace of the political journalism of an earlier period. The weekly editions of such New York newspapers as had strong partisan sympathies, in the sixties and seventies had been in campaign years little more than campaign pamphlets, full of praise of the party's candidates, violent attacks on the opposition, and argument in defence of the party's position; and for their circulation in those years they had depended largely on the party committees, which bought and distributed many thousands of copies.

This, of course, was in effect a subsidy from the party to the paper, but according to the journalistic ethics of past years there was nothing irregular about accepting it. By 1900 newspaper standards in some quarters were somewhat higher, but still the action of the management of The Times surprised a good many newspaper men, as well as the party managers, who had supposed that the paper would regard the proposed arrangement as advantageous to both sides.

The reluctance of The Times was not due simply to the fact that it was not a Republican paper and did not want to become identified in any way with the party leadership. Its conductors felt that The

SOME ASPECTS OF BUSINESS POLICY

Times had no right to accept compensation in any form for its editorial opinion, even though that compensation was after the fact and the opinion had been formed without any expectation of it.

This question has been raised several times since in somewhat different form, and without political connections. A number of requests have been made for a considerable number of copies of the paper for free distribution on account of an article appearing in the editorial or news columns. Always the request has been refused, though permission to reprint articles from The Times for distribution has been freely granted, on condition that the reprint contain some statement making it clear that The Times had no hand in the distribution. It has been the publisher's opinion that this policy prevented growth of mistaken opinions not only outside, but more particularly within The Times office. He was seeking the confidence of the public, but he regarded as still more essential the confidence of those who were associated with him in making the newspaper. Mr. Ochs has always felt that he need not be concerned about public opinion with respect to The Times if its editors believe in his sincere desire for clean, honest work.

Some years ago a prominent Western manufacturer wrote to The Times and ordered the paper sent daily for a year to fifty clergymen in his town. His reason was that he regarded The Times as a good newspaper, in fact, the best newspaper, and he thought that ministers in a small city of the interior might have their outlook on the world broadened by the study of its pages.

The Times refused to send the papers to the addresses he had forwarded. The publisher held that the orders could be filled only if they came with the knowledge and consent of the recipients, that is, if they really wanted the paper. The Times was not to be forced on anybody who had not asked for it, and it was not to be distributed in quantity by outsiders, thereby perhaps incurring the suspicion that it was in some way an organ or a mouthpiece for the views of the individuals or classes accelerating its distribution.

More recently the same question was raised by a banker in South Carolina, who admired The Times financial news and its editorial discussions of financial problems. He thought that the bankers of his state, inclined to be absorbed in their own local affairs, would be better off for learning something about world trade and world finance, and, accordingly, ordered The Times sent regularly to 450 of them at his expense. In this case, again, The Times could not but regard this as a compliment, and had no doubt whatever of the correct intentions of the man who wanted to pay for the papers. But again the publisher felt that, while it might be good for South Carolina bankers to read The Times, it was not good for The Times to be distributed gratis.

The banker who had made the offer still thought that his colleagues needed education, so when The Times refused to fill his order he attempted partially to carry out his purpose through the medium of a Charleston newsdealer. The sudden increase of 450 copies in this dealer's order at once aroused suspicion in the office, and when this suspicion was verified

JOHN H. FINLEY, Associate Editor.

The Times, although rather gratified by this evidence of the persistent conviction of the banker that it was a good paper, refused to fill the order.

It may be added that in the belief of the management these principles are not in conflict with the action of certain large hotels which see advantage to themselves in providing each guest in his room with a copy of The Times every morning.

It can be assumed from these illustrations that there is nothing artificial about The Times's circulation. Its subscribers are people who desire it, who want it, and who know why they want it.

Of course, the increase in circulation brought with it a great increase in advertising. The volume of advertising published in 1896 had been more than quadrupled by 1914, and the rates were several times increased during this period. The Times has not been always a single-rate paper in the strictest sense of the word, but it has always been a single-rate paper to the extent that everybody paid the same price for the same service.

The advertising rates have been very slowly advanced with the greatest consideration for the advertiser's problem in adjusting his appropriation for space in The Times to the increased rates. And whereas the net return to The Times per column in 1896, with a circulation of less than 20,000, was $45, in 1921 the rate for a circulation of 340,000 — more than seventeen times larger — was only $150.

The management of The Times has always felt that all good advertising, that is honest advertising, has a certain news value. It is information for the public, of some interest and advantage to the public. In discriminating between advertisements, when limitations of space compelled discrimination, it has been the policy to give preference so far as possible to advertising which possessed news interest in a higher degree.

It is not to be supposed that anybody seriously believes any longer that The Times is in any way controlled or influenced in its editorial policies by its advertisers. Some papers may be so influenced, though it may be doubted if this could be said of any important one in New York City. The papers which are too tender of advertisers' feelings are, naturally, poor papers, financially poor, which cannot afford to lose advertising. In recent years The Times has sometimes been compelled to refuse advertising, offered for insertion in a single day, the total amount of which would have filled many pages and yielded perhaps $20,000, because it did not have room enough to hold all that was offered; so no sane man is likely to suppose that its policies are affected by the wishes of any advertiser.

However, The Times has not always been prosperous. In poverty as in affluence, none the less, it has always held the same principles, and in consequence it has had a number of disagreements with advertisers who thought that somehow their business dealings with The Times gave them the privilege of complaining of its editorial positions, its news publications, or its business policies.

In one instance, at least, and a rather important one, in the early history of the present management twenty years ago, an advertiser came into conflict with the paper on a point of advertising policy. A regular advertiser called the attention of The Times to the advertisement of a competitor which in his opinion was so misleading as to be downright fraudulent. Investigation showed that in this particular case he was right, and the objectionable advertisement was refused thereafter. But the complainant, not satisfied with this, began to ask some humiliating promises from the management of The Times with respect to its policies. The conductors of The Times were even more anxious than this overzealous advertiser to keep their columns free from undesirable matter, but they were unwilling to enter into an argument with an advertiser about the policies of the paper. The position taken by the management of the paper was set forth in the letter given below, which closed the incident until years later the gentleman found it desirable, in the interests of his business, to bring his advertising back to The Times without asking for anything more than space in the paper.

The publisher of The Times set forth his views in this letter as follows:

THE NEW YORK TIMES
OFFICE OF THE PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, Nov. 21, 1901.

You must excuse me from discussing with you the policy of The New York Times. It is a subject we do not care to discuss with an advertiser. We consider it a privilege to any one to be permitted to make an announcement in the columns of The Times aside from the fact that our rates for advertising space are far from commensurate with the service rendered. If The New York Times as it appears every day is not a sufficient recommendation for the use of its columns by advertisers (such as we will accept), assurance otherwise would be of little or no value.

We do not want to sail under false colors. The New York Times is not published solely for the purpose of attracting advertisers. We hope, however, to attract by the number and the class of our readers. We are seeking to secure the good-will and confidence of intelligent, discriminating newspaper readers. The advertiser is a secondary consideration. We take great pride in the knowledge of the fact that we have succeeded in impressing the honesty of our efforts upon the largest number of the best citizens of this city, representing both readers and advertisers. Of course, there are some exceptions. Among the latter class a conspicuous example is yourself. You seem to wish that The New York Times should go about as a mendicant, begging for advertising patronage. We will never do anything of the kind and are happy to say there is no occasion for our doing so.

This all leads to the statement that if your advertisement remains out of The New York Times until you have some assurance other than the paper as it appears every day, as to the policy of the publisher, The Times, as long as it is under its present management, will endeavor to get along without your business.

Some of the differences of opinion with the book publishers have already been told. A later episode, however, involved something far more serious than a mere disagreement on the advertising value of The Times literary supplement; it was, indeed, perhaps the most formidable attempt ever made by advertisers to coerce The Times. The Book Publishers' Association threatened to withdraw, and then withdrew, all of its members' advertising from The Times because of the insertion of cut-rate prices of their books in the advertisement of a department store.

While admitting that the competition of a department store selling certain articles at cut rates offered some formidable problems to business men dealing only in these articles, the publisher of The Times had occasion to ask the publishers how it happened that the store could get these books. That was a matter between the book publishers and the store; the advertising of the dealer's wares was the affair of the store and The Times. Indeed, the management of the paper observed that if the fact was not advertised that books could be purchased at lower prices than those charged by the publishers, it would deserve to be given to the readers of The Times as news.

This concept of a paper's responsibility as being first of all to its readers rather than to any advertiser or group of advertisers was somewhat novel to the book publishers, but they presently found that The Times could not be moved by the loss of their advertising, and that in fact they were hurting nobody but themselves. After a few weeks they came back, content to let the paper run its own business without further interference and recognizing the wisdom of The Times's attitude.

Another heavy advertiser's custom was lost, in this case forever, through a difference of opinion on the relative value of advertising and news. This gentleman had arranged for the publication of what he considered an important announcement in a halfpage advertisement on June 16, 1904, the morning after the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum, with the loss of more than a thousand lives. At that time the mechanical facilities of The Times did not permit the printing of more than sixteen pages. The advertisement was omitted on the ground that the space was needed for news and that the paper's duty to its readers demanded that news be given the right of way.

Perhaps the most notable difference with advertisers was a disagreement with one of the largest and best advertisers in the country, who withdrew his advertising from The Times because of a personal grievance, arising out of an incidental publication in another paper controlled by the publisher of The Times. This item was mistakenly attributed to the publisher, and some exacting demands were accordingly made which could not be complied with. Although it involved the loss of more than a million dollars' worth of the most desirable advertising, the management of The Times was adamant in its refusal to make the publication requested. After ten years' absence the advertiser returned to The Times without any conditions, and good relations were happily restored.

It was in a later period, in 1915, that an attempt was made to control The Times's dramatic criticism by somewhat different methods. A producer conceived the mistaken impression that the chief dramatic critic of The Times was prejudiced against his productions, and in spite of the fact that very few of the reviews responsible for this impression had been written by the critic in question, the producer suddenly refused to admit him to his theatres. time the critic managed to review the producer's plays under the protection of an injunction, but this was presently vacated. While the doors of the theatres were closed to The Times critic, the advertising columns of The Times were closed to the producer, and publication of his offered announcements was refused.

In the legal fight the paper was beaten. It was developed that while the laws of New York regard the theatre as a public institution to the extent that its owner cannot exclude classes or racial groups of the public, it is sufficiently private to permit him to keep a man out if he does not like him. The lessee of a theatre cannot refuse to admit a negro, but he can refuse to admit a critic, provided the critic is Having no colored critics on its staff, The Times was compelled to continue to ignore the producer as the producer ignored The Times; and after the ignoring had gone on for several months the producer discovered that he was cutting off his nose to spite his face. Consequently the critic was readmitted to the theatre, and the advertising was readmitted to The Times. It need hardly be said, however, that this restoration of peace by joint resolution did not imply any change in the critic's attitude. He continued to judge these productions, as all other productions, on their merits as he saw them; and by that time the producer had cooled off and recognized that his notion that the critic was prejudiced had no foundation. So that even in this case, when beaten in the courts, The Times achieved the substance of victory.

These are old, unhappy far-off things. It is now established and well known that The Times will not accord special favors to advertisers, nor permit them improperly to influence its news, editorial or busines policies; it is so well known that in recent years nobody has tried it. But it was not so well known in the past, and the management of the paper sometimes paid pretty heavily for the retention of its independence. In this matter, too, however, the conductors of the paper have always felt that good business and good morals were identical. If it is morally dishonest to permit advertisers to dictate the policies of the paper, it is likewise commercially ruinous in the long run — at least for a paper such as The Times. There are readers who can be fooled all the time, but The Times does not appeal to very many of that class.

The unexpectedly rapid growth of the paper had very early begun to make it uncomfortable in its cramped quarters in the old Times Building, and its conductors presently began to look around for a new building site. While they were looking they had to move (in 1904) to temporary new quarters at 41 Park Row, around the corner from the site which The Times had occupied for forty-six years. The old Times Building was still owned by the estate of George Jones. A difference with it about the terms of the lease compelled the paper to move, but it was known that this change was only for a short time until a new and greater Times Building could be erected.

The Times Building is a landmark in the history of the paper no less than in the course of Broadway. The move uptown was one of Mr. Ochs's intuitions; and the building which was erected was a monumental piece of architecture, and gave invaluable publicity to the paper. Its construction involved some important and interesting engineering problems, and incidentally it put a heavy strain upon the resources of The Times. But the perilous paths were traversed successfully without The Times forming any embarrassing associations or commitments; and the enterprise required the expenditure of several millions in cash.

In a history of this character, however, the Times Building can be given little more than passing mention. The Herald had set the example in moving uptown from Park Row, but the publisher of The Times showed an accurate prevision of the direction of growth of the city's uptown centre by selecting for his new building the triangle between Broadway, Seventh Avenue and Forty-second Street. What is now the Times Square district was then a region of no particular importance or distinction, occupied for the most part by lodging houses and flats, with some few hotels and restaurants, mostly second or third class, scattered among them. Broadway—the Broadway of tradition—still had its centre of gravity somewhere between the Flatiron Building and Herald Square. Yet it was evident that the corner where the Interborough subway, then under construction, met several surface car lines would become the pivotal point of transportation distribution whenever the subway was opened. The conductors of The Times were right in their judgment of the future of the Times Square district, but a very brief experience was to show that they had fallen far short of foreseeing the great development that was coming to The Times. If they had known in the early years of the century how the paper was going to grow they would never have put up the new building on that narrow plot of ground, which allowed so little space on each floor that The Times had outgrown the building almost before it was settled in it.

However, the erection of that building offered serious problems enough. Part of the land was purchased in fee simple from the Subway Realty Company, part had to be obtained by the purchase of a long-term lease from Charles Thorley. But the purchase of the land was only a beginning; the building had to be erected in a sense straddling the subway, for some of the pillars supporting it are planted right between the old subway tracks. This called for a good deal of engineering ability and implied a good deal of expense; and the construction involved an endless series of annoyances to the owners of The Times.

The building cost several hundred thousand dollars more than was anticipated, as buildings have a way of doing, and at one time it looked as if, while the seventeen stories of the building proper could be completed, there would be no money left to finish the tower which gave to the structure its chief architectural distinction. It was suggested to the publisher that he had room enough in the building as it stood, and that he could finish the tower later. But he felt that to leave the tower unfinished was only a proclamation to the whole town that he had bitten off more than he could chew. By desperate effort the money was raised; and the building, the cornerstone of which had been laid with the collaboration of Bishop Potter on January 18, 1904, was occupied by the paper on January 1, 1905.

It had cost a great deal of money, and a great deal of effort to get the money, but it was worth it. It filled one of the most commanding positions in the landscape of New York City with a structure adequate in every way. At the time of its construction it was the tallest structure in town, except the Park Row Building — and taller than that if extension beneath the pavement were included. But it was more than a tall building — it was a beautiful tall building, and erected in a period when very few architects had come to realize that a skyscraper could just as easily be beautiful as well as useful. C. L. W. Eidlitz and Andrew C. Mackenzie, who designed the building, had found their inspiration in Giotto's campanile at Florence, and their plans provided not only for splendid lines but for ornamentation which was effective — and expensive. It was hard to build and hard to finance, but it was a magnificent signpost calling attention to the paper, at a point which was soon to become the centre of midtown business and of the night life of the city. Everybody in New York saw the Times Building when they came into the midtown district; it was a standing reminder that the paper was doing great things.

A still greater advertisement was given to the paper when in 1904 the Board of Aldermen gave the name of Times Square to the previously nameless open space between Forty-third and Forty-seventh Streets at the intersection of Seventh Avenue and Broadway. Some name was needed, for the subway had two stations on Forty-second Street and had to differentiate between them somehow; and the precedent already set by the naming of Herald Square led the city authorities and the owners of the subway to agree that this new centre of the city's life deserved to be named for the paper which was doing so much to develop the neighborhood and contributing an architectural monument to the city. Naturally, this change passed unnoted by the other morning newspapers, most of which to this day ignore the fact in the geography of New York City which is obvious to anybody who has ever been in the neighborhood and prefer the name of Longacre Square, which never had any official standing. It was a local designation like San Juan Hill, owing its origin to the fact that some carriage builders who formerly had shops on the square named it after the London Street where carriage factories predominate.

As an advertisement it is believed that the Times Building has been worth every cent it cost, and more, besides the reward that comes from the consciousness that its erection, in that place and at that time. was a public service. Times Square fulfilled all the expectations which the management of the paper had entertained when selecting it as the location of the paper's new home. It became and has remained the pivotal centre of the city and is the hub of its transportation systems.

But the conductors of The Times, accurately estimating the future development of New York, had far underestimated their own future. The paper grew so fast that the Times Building was soon cramping it. The next move was to a site as near as possible to Times Square, to the structure known as the Times This building, of 147 feet front, at 217-229 West Forty-third Street, was designed by Mortimer J. Fox, and if not so architecturally ambitious as the Times Building, was considerably more extensive. When virtually all departments of the paper were moved into it, on February 2, 1913, it was the largest, finest and most completely equipped newspaper home in North America. It is probably architecturally unsurpassed by any newspaper building in the world, except the magnificent structure which houses La Prensa at Buenos Aires. But, though it was planned on such a large scale that when the paper first moved in, five of its thirteen floors had been set aside as a reserve for growth - though the men who had had to move twice in ten years thought that this time they would make sure of allowing room for all the expansion likely to be needed in many years to come - after eight years this building is already far too small, and some departments of The Times have overflowed into temporary quarters in five reconstructed apartment houses next door, which The Times has purchased anticipating further growth.

while those that remain are beginning to be cramped and crowded.

The years before the war and the early months of the war saw the establishment of some subsidiary publications of The New York Times Company which in effect cover more fully certain outlying fringes of the newspaper field which had previously been handled by the newspaper itself. The weekly financial review was in January, 1913, raised to the dignity of an independent magazine, The Annalist, appearing every Monday, dealing with commerce, economics, and finance. After eight years it has a larger circulation than any other magazine in its field.

In April of the same year the paper for the first time began the publication of The New York Times Index, which from that time on was much more complete than it had ever been before, and which, published quarterly in convenient form, provided a chronological guide to the news which has become absolutely indispensable to students of contemporary history, and is a useful index, as to dates, for any American morning newspaper.

The war caused the production, in August, 1914, of The Current History Magazine, which began as a mere repository for long articles on the war, some of them reprinted from The Times and others too extensive for publication in a newspaper. But as it developed it became a sort of reservoir of documentary exhibits on current history, and in its present form it includes a review of the month's news from every country in the world, comments descriptive, explanatory, or apologetic on the news by experts or by partisan pleaders (and both kinds have their use), and finally a collection of original records and documents which make it perhaps the most valuable of periodical source books.

A great development in pictorial illustration was made possible by the introduction in April, 1914, of the rotogravure presses. A German newspaper containing pictures printed by this process, then unknown in America, came by chance to The Times some months before that, and the management was at once struck by the fact that this method made possible much better reproductions of photographs than any then in use. A special trip to Germany resulted in the purchase of rotogravure presses and their installation in The Times office. The superiority of the pictorial supplement printed by this process was so apparent that other papers soon followed The Times's example. The Times, however, which was the first in the field, developed a greater interest in pictorial illustrations than it had had before that time. The paper has never done much in the way of printing photographs in its news section on ordinary newsprint paper, and consequently had never needed the staff photographers who were so important a part of other newspaper organizations. But the rotogravure presses not only gave the conductors of The Times a greater interest in the Sunday pictorial supplement; they made possible the establishment of a new and independent publication of The New York Times Company, The Mid-week Pictorial, first issued in September, 1914. This, like The Current History Magazine, began as a war publication and has survived the war as a pictorial weekly newspaper. To serve the increasing needs of the Sunday and mid-week pictorials The Times Wideworld Photo Service was organized in 1919, under the direction of Charles M. Graves, and already has some notable feats to its credit.

In at least one use of the rotogravure presses The Times is still without competition. The Annalist and The Times Sunday Book Review and Magazine are now printed by this process, which makes possible an excellence of typography otherwise unattainable in such publications, and a fineness and fidelity in the reproduction of photographs which had never previously been achieved in any newspaper supplement.

THE TIMES BUILDING, ILLUMINATED FOR VICTORY

© Brown Bros.

CHAPTER V

The Times in the War, 1914-1918

To the biggest news story of modern times the American press as a whole reacted in a manner highly creditable. It would almost be safe to say that there was not a single newspaper in the country which was not a better paper, from the technical point of view, at the end of the war than at its beginning. That is to say, its editors knew more about what news was, how to get it, and how to present it to their readers. Also, the great majority responded honorably to the secondary but sometimes highly important duty of interpreting and clarifying the news by editorial comment. Most of the influential papers of the country understood at the outset at least the general causes of the war, and were able to assess rightly the responsibility for its outbreak.

In general, the service of The Times during the war consisted in its doing what the other papers, or most of the other respectable papers, did, but doing it better. The merit of its war news is sufficiently well known. It was thanks chiefly to the excellence and the universal scope of its news service that the circulation of the paper, which was about 250,000 at the beginning of the war, had risen to some 390,000 at its close. But it should not be forgotten that The Times in editorial analysis of the causes of the war was amazingly accurate from the very outset, so accurate that it brought down on itself almost at once the wrath of the Germans and their sympathizers, and within a few months had earned the honorable distinction of being the principal focus of the vituperation which the Germans and pro-Germans fired at an unsympathetic American press.

The news department of a paper should not be, and that of The Times is not, influenced by editorial policies. But it is sometimes forgotten by amateur critics of journalism that the editorial page has a function going somewhat beyond the mere assertion of opinion. It is often the duty of the editorial writers to interpret the news, to discriminate between the probable and the improbable, the tendentious and the more or less impartial, in the great volume of news reports which come to the office. Since human nature is fallible, it has been found advisable to print all the news and leave to the editorial page the assessment of its relative worth, rather than exercise discrimination at the news desk and suppress everything that fails to accord with the news editor's judgment of the probabilities.

The general reader may disagree with the editorial interpretation. That is his privilege, for it is presented only as an interpretation. But editorial writers are somewhat better informed than the average reader. They probably know more of the news than he does, for they read half a dozen papers a day where he reads one or two; a newspaper prints all the news it gets, so long as that news is not libelous, but a single paper does not always get it all. But the editorial writers have read much outside of the daily papers; they have a background of solid information which enables them to understand a good deal that is dark to the man in the street. Elucidation based on wider and more thorough knowledge is probably the most important function of the editorial page today.

THE TIMES IN THE WAR, 1914-1918

There has rarely been a better example of the performance of this function than The Times's editorials on the outbreak of the war. Information available then was far from complete; it consisted only of vague and scanty official statements on the diplomatic exchanges. The accounts of the secret conferences in which every Government of Europe was going over the situation in the last week of July, 1914, as well as the story of much of the actual diplomatic negotiation, did not come to public knowledge till much later. But after the lapse of seven years, despite all the voluminous publication of secret archives which since the armistice has informed the world of what went on behind the scenes in those days, there is not one line of The Times editorial analysis of the responsibility for the war, written in the days when the war was being made, which would have to be retracted today.

The Times, to be sure, like all the world, was slow to believe that the conflict that had been so long expected that it had come to seem impossible was at last at hand. It held the same hope that everybody held in the summer of 1914 in the moderating influence of financiers and business men, and above all it believed, until belief was no longer possible, that the German Emperor had the will to avert the war as he undoubtedly had the power. But the events of the week leading up to the declaration of war convinced The Times that Austria was responsible for the war in the sense that the criminal recklessness of Austrian statesmen had deliberately provoked it, and that Germany was responsible in that if the Kaiser had forbidden it there would have been no war.

On July 27, 1914, when Austria had refused to accept the Serbian reply to the ultimatum and had stood out before the world as plainly determined to fight, The Times said in an editorial article:

It will be freely said that Count Berchtold has seized what seemed to him a most propitious moment for dealing a blow at Pan-Slavism and strengthening Pan-Germanism, and incidentally reviving the German party in Austria. . . . The only hope of peace seems to be in the awakening of the German conscience.

Four days later, when it was evident that the German conscience either had not awakened or was unable to affect the consciences of the rulers of Germany, The Times observed:

Now is the very best of all times for taking account of the frightful wrong involved in governmental systems which permit great and prosperous peoples to be dragged into the war without consulting their will and their welfare.

On August 2 The Times pronounced the famous speech of the German Emperor about the sword which had been forced into his hand "a piece of pompous humbug," and after deploring the fact that evidently some European peoples, even those which had been regarded as highly cultured, were no more than a dumb herd which could be driven, physically and psychologically, where the leaders willed, went on to say that there is a possibility, historically justified, that a general European war would be followed by changes which would make the herd vocal.

THE TIMES IN THE WAR, 1914-1918

Four days later it resumed this same argument, going so far as to make the prediction, later sustained in every particular, that the war was very likely to result in revolution in Russia, revolution in Germany and the break-up of Austria-Hungary.

Again, on August 6 The Times observed that while every nation going into the war found plenty of excuse for justifying its course of action, the historian will have no trouble in placing his finger on the cause of the war, and there are men in Vienna today whose descendants for many generations will redden at the verdict.

The peculiar German mind was of course not so well understood in those days. It takes a good deal to make the average German redden, even today, as the trials of war offenders at Leipzig showed. Nevertheless, even the Germans are likely to accept the truth of this judgment in time; the rest of the world has already ratified it. But in the summer of 1914 it did not command universal acceptance, even though the majority of Americans thought Germany in the wrong. The chief public service of The Times in the war was that from the very beginning it understood where the rights and wrongs of the conflict lay, it was able to justify its position by sound argument, and it never ceased to maintain that position with all the vigor which its editors were able to command. The furious hostility toward the paper which the Germans and their sympathizers soon displayed is the best measure of its success in performing this duty.

However, there was an equally important duty to be performed in giving to the public every bit of information as to the underlying causes, as well as the immediate occasion, of this vast and multiplex conflict. It is not too much to say that before the war had been going on three months The Times had become the principal forum for debate on the issues of the war. Despite the fact that its editors were firmly convinced that Germany was in the wrong, The Times realized the necessity of hearing everything that could be said on both sides. As was said on the editorial page a few months after the war began, "access to its columns has been denied to no German sympathizer, if reputable, responsible and literate." Some of them, indeed, were neither reputable nor responsible, but if they seemed to have anything of value to contribute to the discussion The Times heard them.

The principal item in this discussion was unquestionably the publication in full of the arguments of the various European Governments—the White Papers, Yellow Books, Orange Papers and so on, consisting of the diplomatic correspondence leading up to the outbreak of the war, or as much of it as the several governments were inclined to give out to the public. Long extracts from these were, of course, sent to The Times by cable as soon as they were issued, but it seemed to The Times that the importance of the issue made it imperative to present the whole case, or as much of it as the governments themselves had given out.

THE TIMES IN THE WAR, 1914-1918

The first copy of the British White Paper was brought to this country at the end of August, 1914, by the Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch, who had received it in advance of publication from an official friend just as he was boarding his steamer at Liverpool. He gave it to a Times reporter, and it was published in full on the following Sunday. The presses were still printing it when, in the small hours of Sunday morning, Frederic William Wile, Berlin correspondent of The Times, arrived with a copy of the German White Paper. A corps of translators was set to work at 2 A.M.; by 10 o'clock Sunday evening they had finished their task, and the document was printed in full in Monday morning's Times. Thus early in the war The Times presented to its readers on two successive days all that was obtainable from official sources on both sides of the case. The two documents were reprinted in pamphlet form and distributed at cost to some hundreds of thousands of eager readers throughout the United States and Canada.

After the British and German statements came the official documents of the French, Russian, Austrian and Belgian governments, giving to the world what each saw fit to publish of its diplomatic records, and having set the precedent The Times published them all, in full. Again they were republished in tabloid form, and before the end of 1914 The Times was in effect running an extension university on the issues of the war. At that time its war news was on the whole about the same as the war news of other papers, so far as related to the actual fighting; but from the very start it surpassed all its competitors in giving the news about the reasons for the war.

Here was the official brief of each government; it seemed to the management of The Times that the next thing was argument from the briefs. An attempt was made to have eminent American lawyers discuss the White Papers as attorneys for the two governments, but this proved to be impossible for the somewhat significant reason that the three or four American lawyers known to be sympathetic with Germany, or inclined to entire neutrality, who were asked to present the German side of the argument refused to argue the German case if they were restricted to the evidence put forward in these official documents. Clearly they were realize that the German White Paper presented a pretty poor case. When it proved impossible to present this debate, the publisher of The Times finally persuaded James M. Beck to analyze alone all the arguments, not as a representative of either side, but as an impartial reviewer.

Mr. Beck was a former Assistant Attorney General of the United States and was one of the leaders of the New York bar, but his discussion of the case presented by the White Papers before "the supreme court of civilization" made him internationally famous. Arguing from the briefs presented by the

"All the News That's Fit to Print,"

The New York Times.

EXTRA

ONE CENT James City and Actions

TWICE TORPEDOED OFF IRISH COAST; SINKS IN 15 MINUTES: LUSITANIA SUNK BY A SUBMARINE, PROBABLY 1,260 DEAD;

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1915.-TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

WASHINGTON BELIEVES THAT A GRAVE CRISIS IS AT HAND CAPT. TURNER SAVED, FROHMAN AND VANDERBILT MISSING:

CAPITAL FULL OF RUMORS Washington Deeply Stir-SULLETINS AT WHITE HOUSE Vilson Reads Them Closely, HINTS OF CONGRESS CALL Loss of Lusitania Recalls Firm teports That Liner Was to be Sunk red by the Loss of Tens of Our First Warn-Ware Heard Bofore Abtual American Lives. is Silent on 1 Nation's Course. ng to Carmany.

ors at Queenstown and Kinsale

Several Hundred Surviv

SOME DEAD TAKEN ASHORE

TEWAROTELLS OF DISASTER

One Torpedo Crashpe Into the loomed Liner's Bow, Another nto the Engine Room.

HIP LISTS OVER TO PORT

fakes it impossible to Lowe Many Boats, So Hundreds Must Have Gone Down.

TTACKED IN BROAD DAY

fore the Ship Laft Nays York

Few Cabin Passengers Only 650 Were Saved,

Fate of 1,918 on Lusitania Long in Doubt mann. atthough they are problemed. Cunard Office Here Besieged for News; ean citizens, is likely to bring about ragedy, involving the loss of Amer-

a cristy to the totardational relations

Nothing Heard from the Well-Known Passengers Board-Story of Disaster Long Unconfirmed of the Lustiants is the outcome of m It to pointed out that the sinking While Anxious Crowds Seek Details.

Official news of the similars of the denity a distress call from the line; Louisanty broughes realth frow Total wide find.

to frequentiary reports, and exceed frow Total works, list the Fourier to the frequentiary reports are several forms with first toward. A third districts from Domestreen, have the first worst? A third districts from Domestreen. naries of fletitudies that have been the cause of conern to this Government and it is against the maintain is strictly anount position to the great Ruropean for war.

haurs elapsed, between the first unvert- A third of fled rumor of the disaster and the cable stated: Ratteri's Course in Doolt.

meanages that told at night of the and; | No Administration of the store disputable into of the passessers and area. Leader colored to the passessers and area. | No Administration of the area of the passessers and area. | Passesser of the arterior on the area inspection of the arterior on the area inspection of the area. | Passesser of the about in the war. | No Administration of the arterior on the area inspection. | No Administration of the arterior on the area. | No Administration of the arterior of th It is impossible to say tonight what the Language and American two of age of manifest of the should of the should be the same created by the should be the same created by the should be the same created by the should be the same created to the

The Lucitation, so regret to addition on mentional transfer and to have been united by a solding-find of T. N. M. Milley, from offer from Nichole and rank 2.3. There is no news as to 1th anisisty productive to the news as to 1th anisisty productives of a term.

The next bulletin was

Those were reports this a cutility mounts.

That Douglass though accurded in serial size in the season, but these was no justified without and the season to justified in Livery and the season to partially one. The while the Government is greatly one. The while the Government is greatly one with a curied over the attacked than shown write many many many content of the season of

NEE, also NEE, also PEE, ATPROCK AN JAMES, Terrato SLIT, Mrs. CVIIUS THERTON, Mis. CVIII H NS. A 1. New York TTER, Mrs. II R. of Sod-Australia, wife of General of pastilizes the dispatch there was a missage, which had been parked up by the wireless station at Land a knd ewi-ferator W J Blone, Chaleman of the Committee on Foyelin Itelations, and longth

DIRECT C

List of Saved Includes Capt. Tarneri Vanderbilt and Frohman Reported Lost small proportion of those rescued were saloon passen-and Watched Torpedo as It Strack Ship

Saw the Sabmarine 100 Yards Off

Ericat Cowper, a Toronto Newspapar Man, Describes

Attack, Seep from Ship's Rail-Poison Gas Used in Torpedoes, Say Other Passangers.

-A dispatch to the State Department early today from American Consul Lauriet: at Queenstown stated that the total num-> in an orderly, prompt, and efficient manner Miss Helen sharp Isokout for sub- Smith appealed to me to save

May 8, 8:18 A. M. Queenstown, Saturday, ber of survivors of the LONDON, Saturday, May

Lusitania was about 700,

LONDON, Saturday, May 8, 6:30 A. M.—The Press Bursau has received from the Brillin Adminity at "descapatory b report that bill the larged beats and ture and armed traviting, straight the Markel which went out from Government to the railer of the Lusitasia have marines was kept oboard the her. I placed her in a boat and marines was kept coourd the saw her safely away I got into Lusiania as she approached one of the last boats to leave. the Irish coast, according to "Some of the boats could not These womes now inside the discrete and forty dead. Fifth-year three services are reported about an entering which the services and the services of the control and the services of the control and the services of the control and the service of the control and the service of the services to the control and the service that the services the control and the service of the services to the control and the service of the services and the service of the servic . The Central News says that the number of the Lustiania's passancers who dieg' of injuries while being taken to Queenstown will reach 100 ABRANCWIZ, S. Montreal, LANE O. B.

ģ

newspaper man, who was ainking. There was a large newspaper man, who was ainking. There was a large among the survivors landed at number of women and children among the survivors landed at lumber of women and children and the second cabin. Forty of He said that after the ship was torpedoed there was no Queenstown. GUEENSTWWW, Emindae, May R. 445 A. M.—The list of the Lust-transfer Comman. After an compiled, Johnson, Tr. Creating E., 20; 300-265. The Comman. And Comman. And The May The May The May THE AND COMMAN. And THE COMMAN. And THE MAY THE MAY THE COMMAN. AND THE COMMAN. AN THE STATE OF THE S

the children were less than a aboard, lies at the bottom of year old."

the ocean off the Irish coast.

-The Consrd liner Lusitania which sailed out of New York last Saturday with 1,918 soul She was sank by a German passe among the craw, but that Polson Punes from Torpedoes one was again by a termat passe are about the worst of From interview with a summarino, which east two they work about the worst is appears that when polsone creating this ber also assumers into the pergers it appears that when polsone creating this per also as a present a single per also as a prempt and effici his corposes, burst thay sent 2:30 o'chock yesterday after-EINSALS, Irdand May 9.

Bacer meriphes a gam desileration in the bodies of free persons who is a feet of the persons which is a feet of the person

SALTIL, J. RESTON New York BOTTOLIKY, EPIDERICK HOTLINES, CHARLES, HOTLINES, CHARLES, HARRIVAN, CORRELUE LIVERNORD, VERNAL SCILLIVAN, MR. F.

reland," said Mr Cowper, " we sengers, causing some of them "As we neared the coast of had their effect on the pasall joined in the bokout, fmr a to lose consciousness. Country List of Sared. Laurint at Quennatown sends this seepingly confident that the great; awift vessel could elude forth suffocating fumes which possible attack by a submarine. Two takens. Byrae and Hus. the German underwater traft, passible attack by a submarine. Two takens. Byrae and Hus. were having hunchen. A submarine to the submarine and the submarine train. "Total saved by all sationalities, 70 Total saved by all sational sarrivous affection of the collection of the collectio and Mrs. and 89 A. H. A. F. London B. M. Pillite Mantrel S. M. A. F. London S. E. Geolduce S. M. A. A. A. M. M. A. M.

"I was shatting with a friend ribe gave no notice and fired caused the liner to list beavily are the rist shoult 2 obtack when I we topendo, no hitting No to port, a both she sould not sudderly I caustr a glimpse of 1 sloke hole and the second the lamen many or her likeboats. the chuning fower of a sub-engine noom. The first tough many or her likeboats, marrine about a thousand yucid, do was discharged at 2 olcick.

The chuning fower of a sub-engine noom. The first tough.

About 1260 of those on marrine about the tought of those on the first sub-engine noom is the sub-engine noom to the great ship, including disput. I mensitately suited in twenty-like minutes the board the great ship, including my friend's attantion to it. Im. great liner disappeared mediately we poll as we the Signals have been received at track of a tarpado followed al. Queenstown that an armed most instantly by an explosion. Irawler, believed to be the then another torpedo atruck, bodies. The ship began to list to star- The C

FU MISS WILLIAM SERTY, MAR WILLIAM

KY MAS.
ATAND. MAS.
ALLAND. MAS. JOSEPHING.

PRINCE

W O Sand daughter.

The Cunard Line agent states on board the steamship, in-Portions of aplintered hull were Heron, and two fishing trawl, number of survivors is sent flying into the air, and ers are bringing in 100 more

by the Admirolty says the total

There were 1,253 passengel went down with her, as a state ment assued late this morning The crew at once proceeded sons aboard the Ensitiania was ferred to her from the atome get the passengers into boats 2,160

MORPH MANAGEMENT OF THE STATE O

O. H. New York

of the Lasitania Fills London

It is believed that only a few bered 665.

With Horror and Utter Amazement gaved so they thingut the ship

Speci (New Work Yare York Tarks deed ofted be committed as as set of would remain afford, and made LONGON assuming May Secure to 1 secuper

| the in the west with her described to the second to the several governments, he reached the conclusion that Germany was in the wrong, and supported his opinion by an able and searching analysis. First presented in The Times of Sunday, October 25, 1914, his articles were reprinted in pamphlet form under the title of "The Evidence in the Case," by several governments, notably the English, and millions of copies distributed over the world in many languages. Extracts and summaries of his argument were published the world over, and gave to millions of readers the foundation for opinions which had been somewhat confused by the volume and the obscurity of the official documents.

Second only in importance to the White Papers and their like were the innumerable arguments conducted in the columns of The Times by sympathizers of the two sides. All papers had their share of such discussions, of course, but The Times had more of them, and of more distinguished authorship. Notable among these were the letters exchanged between Charles W. Eliot and Jacob H. Schiff, published in The Times in December, 1914; the arguments presented by G. K. Chesterton and various other British authors on the side of the Allies, and those of Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, Arthur von Briesen, Professor William Milligan Sloane and Professor John W. Burgess on the German side. Throughout most of the war military experts, usually officers either active or retired of the United States Army, analyzed each day the military operations from the technical standpoint. German sympathizers in the fall of 1914 complained that the military critic showed too much partisanship for the Allies, so for some months

The Times published frequent comments on the military situation by a former officer of the German Army.

All these discussions, of course, took place either on the editorial page or in the Sunday magazine, and were supplementary to the voluminous arguments which were part of the news of the day. There were in addition a number of important contributions on the war as affecting purely American interests, of which the most notable were a series by Theodore Roosevelt in the fall of 1914 on "What America Should Learn From the War," the articles contributed toward the end of 1916 by a publicist who concealed his identity under the signature of "Cosmos," and the later series signed by "An American Jurist," who, as has since been announced. was Robert Ludlow Fowler, Surrogate of New York County and one of the most accomplished scholars on the bench. In quieter times Judge Fowler's series of brilliantly written articles would have been generally accepted as something of a classic.

Of course, partisans of each side were often indignant that any space should be given to the other side; and because the Germans were Germans their indignation was most violent, and most inclined to the imputation of base motives. Before the war was two months old a group of more or less authentic Americans in Munich saw fit to send to the German press a protest against the "prejudiced and unfair" attitude of The Times, which was duly sent abroad by the industrious German wireless. Before long the most notorious German propagandists in America were accusing The Times of suppression of news, and beginning that vast campaign of calumny which was taken up by the Socialists and Sinn Feiners when prudential motives imposed silence on the Germans, later in the war, and joyfully resumed by the whole crew when they came out of their holes after the armistice. Every honest and patriotic American newspaper was the target of these attacks; the assertion that the whole American press had been bought by British gold seemed reasonable enough to persons who were unfamiliar with the idea of any but a purchased press; and these accusations against any paper were only proof that that paper was honestly and fearlessly doing its duty. But The Times was probably honored by more denunciation than any other paper in the country, though The World and The Tribune were close behind it in this honorable competition. Fortunately, the American people were making up their minds, and most of them knew exactly what all this Teutonic clamor was worth.

THE TIMES IN THE WAR, 1914-1918

However, not all the criticism came from one side. Just as half a century before some superheated northern patriots had accused The Times of sympathy with secession because it had a correspondent who sent the news from Charleston, so in the World War some sympathizers with the Allies could see nothing but sympathy with Germany in any inclination to give the Germans a hearing. In November, 1914, for instance, a reverend clergyman wrote to The Times that he couldn't stand "such dishes of German arrogance and insolence as you are serving daily to your readers." His emotional reaction was wholly creditable, but he and some others like him forgot that it was highly important that the American people should learn what the Germans really were and learn it by the most convincing and convicting evidence, that which proceeded out of their own mouths.

It is possible that in the early months of the war The Times gave up nearly as much space to German arguments as to those of the opposition, for the Germans saw from the first that the balance of opinion was against them, and they made desperate efforts in their tactful way to turn the scales. arguments were apt to be convincing, but in the opposite direction; and, anyway, the actions of the Germans always spoke louder than their words. Even before the Lusitania, the Germans had realized that their cause before American public opinion was lost, and had already begun to supplement their arguments and persuasions with sabotage and violence. What part the editorial columns of The Times may have had in the formation of American public opinion can best be determined by those outside the office, but attention may be called to one editorial, one of the most forceful and important which has ever appeared in The Times, which deserves special mention as an example of historical and political insight. This article, two columns in length, was written by Charles R. Miller, the editor in chief, and appeared on December 15, 1914. It was headed "For the German People, Peace with Freedom."

That editorial began with the flat statement, "Germany is doomed to sure defeat." It analyzed the military situation, the probabilities of the future; but its argument was founded chiefly on moral considerations, on the belief that the world would not let Germany win; that a German victory meant the negation of all human progress, and that every free people, if forced to the issue, would find itself compelled to resist the German attack on civilization. "Yet," the article continued, "the downfall of the German Empire may become the deliverance of the German people, if they will betimes but seize and hold their own." And then it analyzed the situation of the German people, paying all the cost of the war, sure to endure the consequence of defeat, yet unable to win anything from victory in a conflict which they had undertaken at the command of their rulers and whose issues, even if successful, would profit those rulers alone.

THE TIMES IN THE WAR, 1914-1918

"If," the article continued, "Germany chooses to fight to the bitter end, her ultimate and sure overthrow will leave her bled to exhaustion, drained of her resources, and under sentence to penalties of which the stubbornness of her futile resistance will measure the severity. We could wish that the German people, seeing the light, might take timely measure to avert the calamities that await them."

The article created a sensation. It was republished and commented on throughout the world, and is generally regarded as one of the greatest editorials ever appearing in an American newspaper. It is reproduced in full in an appendix to this volume.

This analysis of the issue raised by German aggression, of the relations between the German masses and the oligarchy that ruled them, of the only possible escape for the Germans and the inevitable consequences of refusal to take that way of escape, was justified in every detail by the history of the next four years. Some two years and four months later the President of the United States came around to these opinions, which he expressed in his speech of April 2, 1917; and a year and seven months after that the German people were at last convinced of the soundness of this reasoning, by the only argument they were able to understand—and, unfortunately, too late to be able to escape the penalties of delay.

This editorial may stand as a summary of The Times's position on the war, so far as it was purely a European war. New issues were raised in the spring of 1915, both by the sinking of the Lusitania and by Germany's transference of the war, so far as possible, to American soil; but before that had happened The Times had recognized German aggression as a menace to the whole world, and though continuing to publish all the arguments on the German side, was using all its influence to convince the American people that the world could not let Germany win the war. As has been said, the German propagandists and their American sympathizers already looked on The Times as their chief antagonist, and were flinging at it every accusation, old and new, which their active imaginations could devise. To most of the readers of the paper these charges were evidently only a satisfying proof that the Germans felt that The Times was dangerous. But a good deal can be forgotten in three or four years, and already memory of the ways of German propagandists before 1917 is fading, as well as the recollection of the influence which they had, for a considerable time, in circles where they should have been better understood.

The culmination of these attacks upon The Times came in March, 1915 — not in a meeting of German singing societies or the Clan-na-Gael, but in a hearing before a committee of the United States Senate, where all the enmity that had been aroused by The Times's criticisms of impromptu statesmanship flared into open view, and all the calumnious whispers that had been spread abroad by persons unable to imagine that any man or any newspaper could advocate any opinions except for a cash consideration were dignified by the attention of eminent Senators.

This episode deserves extended notice, for it is important not only in the history of The Times but in the history of modern journalism; perhaps, even. it has some interest as an illustration of recent tendencies in the United States Senate. Because the editors of The Times had expressed their opinions on some questions of public policy, opinions not altogether in agreement with those of the Senators on the committee, they were summoned to Washington and asked if anybody was paying them for those opinions, and if so, who. The pretext for this inquisition — in view of the course taken by the committee, it can hardly be called anything else - was The Times's opposition to the administration bill for the purchase of foreign ships interned in American harbors. The paper opposed this because it opposed the intrusion of the government into business, and because it had its doubts whether the purchase in time of war of ships interned to escape capture by the enemy was valid in international law. There was much, and reasonable, opposition to this measure; The Times had no monopoly of its opinion. But the Senate appointed a committee to inquire "if influence had been exerted" against the bill. The possibility that there might be room for two honest opinions on the subject did not seem to occur to the Senators.

However, this suspicion, if not very creditable to the collective intelligence of the Senate, was at least more legitimate than some of the innuendoes with which the members of the committee decorated the sessions devoted to questioning editors of The Times. For the information of the Senators, who displayed a great deal of curiosity about the ownership of The Times, the managing editor furnished not only the list of all persons owning more than one per cent of the capital stock, which was published anyway twice a year, but a table showing how much each one of them owned. The discovery that the publisher of The Times owned 62 per cent of the stock, that its editor owned something more than 14 per cent, and that nearly half the residue was owned by other persons who had no occupation excepting contributing their bit toward getting out The Times, was apparently something of a disappointment to the committee; but the Senators still had a good many questions to ask.

The next session of the committee, in which the editor-in-chief was examined, began very much in the form of a class in elementary journalism. The Ship Purchase bill was forgotten; Senators asked

MAIN ENTRANCE TIMES BUILDING.

THE TIMES BUSINESS OFFICE.

Mr. Miller why The Times opposed parcel posts; why it thought this and that about the railroads and about the trust prosecutions; why certain stories were not put on the front page. The Times by that time was virtually on trial for all its opinions, and its editor no doubt experienced some weariness as he laboriously explained that the editors of a newspaper advocate certain policies because they believe them best for the public interest, that not all the news can be put on the front page, that the relative value of different news stories is a matter of judgment and that the judgment of all newspapers is not always identical.

Having got through this, however, the committee took up another line of argument. Senator T. J. Walsh of Montana, its Chairman, asked if The Times had "any business connections of any character in England." Mr. Miller said that it had none aside from maintaining its own correspondents there. Then Senator Walsh wanted to know if Mr. Ochs had "any financial support of any kind in England." Mr. Miller said that he had none whatever, whereupon Senator Walsh explained, rather apologetically, "I asked because I was informed that that was the case."

Mr. Miller's denial was made still more emphatic by an editorial next day, on March 17, which contained this statement:

That there may be no cause to believe that Mr. Miller's answer to the impertinent inquiry about Mr. Ochs's private affairs does not fully and satisfactorily end the inquiry, Mr. Ochs wishes to make the assertion as broad and sweeping as language will permit that he is in possession, free and unincumbered, of the controlling and majority interest of the stock of The New York Times Company, and has no associate in that possession, and is not beholden or accountable to any person or interest in England or anywhere else in the world, nor has he ever been beholden or accountable in any form, shape or fashion, financial or otherwise, for the conduct of The New York Times, except to his own conscience and to the respect and confidence of the newspaper-reading public, and particularly the readers of The New York Times - and more particularly to the respect and confidence of those who are associated with him in producing The New York Times and expressing its opinions.

The conductors of The Times could say no more on the question of English ownership, but they still had something to say about Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who "had been informed that that was the case." Who had informed him? The Times asked this question, rather insistently, and bit by bit the truth came out. Just before that session of the committee opened there had come a letter, addressed to "The Hon. Chairman," signed by a name which Senator Walsh read as "Arthur M. Abbey." The writer said that he had just come back from England, where he had heard at the Junior Constitutional Club in London that "a well-known Englishman has been backing Mr. Ochs with money to get control of The New York Times," and that "I understand that Mr. Miller is also mixed up in some way with this Englishman." So that nobody would go astray, the writer added, "the name of Lord Northcliffe was mentioned," and he threw in for good measure that "Mr. Ochs has also been mixed up in the English Marconi scandal."

The Times again denied each and every one of these charges and asked for more information about "Arthur M. Abbey." Who was he? What did Senator Walsh know about him, that he regarded his communication as sufficiently important to spread on the record of a Senate committee the suggestion that The Times was controlled by foreigners? At the Junior Constitutional Club in London he was unknown; and it presently appeared that he was equally unknown to Senator Walsh. The Senator finally sent The Times the original letter, and in the office the handwriting and style were soon recognized as identical with those of a whole series of scurrilous letters which had been coming regularly to The Times office from New York - and not from London. Of the hardly legible signatures to these letters some seemed to resemble "G. M. Hubbell" and others "A. M. Abbey"; some of the letters were not signed at all. But they were all abusive, all plainly the work of one writer, and all the work of the same man who had informed Senator Walsh that "such was the case."

No doubt this spreading of the facts upon the record did something to weaken the legend of British ownership of The Times. This fiction continued to be one of the staples of German, Irish and Socialist argument; but it is significant that the next attack made on The Times from a source pretending to reputability, more than five years later, began with the rejection of all suspicion of outside influence and developed the entertaining theory that the editors of The Times were simply constitutionally incapable of understanding the truth. It was admitted that they, like all men, needs must love the highest when they see it, but it was argued that they were pretty poor judges of altitude. Perhaps not all enemies of the paper are so generous, but belief in the Northcliffe ownership has in general been confined, in recent years, to circles where it is still asserted that President Wilson was owned by Wall Street and that Germany fought a defensive war.

However, the chief importance of this incident does not lie in its bearing on the reputation of The Times. As was said in the paper's editorial columns at the time:

This is not a personal issue. It is a question of the extent to which a government's machinery may be privately misused to annoy and attempt to discredit a newspaper whose editorial attitude has become distasteful and embarrassing.

And it was in the name, not of The Times, but of the whole American press — a press which for nearly two centuries had been free from governmental control — that Mr. Miller, at the close of his interrogation by the committee on The Times's editorial attitude toward every subject of public interest, addressed some remarks to the committee:

I can see no ethical, moral or legal right [he said] that you have to put many of the questions you put to me today. Inquisi-torial proceedings of this kind would have a very marked tendency, if continued and adopted as a policy, to reduce the press of the United States to the level of the press in some of the Central European empires, the press that has been known as the reptile press, that crawls on its belly every day to the Foreign Office or to the Government officials and Ministers to know what it may say or shall say — to receive its orders.

Questions of that kind, he said, "tend to repress freedom of utterance and to put newspapers under a sort of duress." Nor was it to be supposed that newspapers would be free from all restraint if a Senatorial committee did not now and then turn aside to give publicity to the commonplaces of German propaganda. "We appear before the jury every day," said Mr. Miller.

We appear before the grand inquisition, one of the largest courts in history; we are judged at the breakfast table. We feel that, if we were improperly influenced by anybody outside of the office, there is none so quick to discover that as the reader of the paper.

That The Times, in this case, was fighting for the freedom of the entire American press was pretty generally recognized. There was much editorial comment on Mr. Miller's statement and on the committee's procedure. The World called the questions "a public inquisition without an open arraignment"; The Baltimore American said that the hearing was "the most extraordinary exhibition of bad judgment, peevishness or evil motives the country has had from a Senate committee for years."

Bad judgment and peevishness, no doubt, had more to do with it than evil motives. For more than a year thereafter Congress, a timorous body at best, was extraordinarily sensitive to the compulsions of bought-and-paid-for German propaganda, as witness the Gore and McLemore resolutions. Only very slowly, in response to the obvious feeling of the country, and under the leadership of a few men of patriotism and courage, did Congress gradually recover the hardihood to call its soul its own. The chief criticism against this particular committee is that it was willing to believe, and to give currency to, anything it heard from anybody, anonymous or otherwise.

No doubt the Senators took a certain very human joy in getting newspaper editors up before them and putting them through a third degree; no doubt they felt entirely justified by the argument that newspaper editors often criticise Senators. But no newspaper ever accused a Senator of selling his soul to foreigners, on no better evidence than an anonymous letter.

From the sinking of the Lusitania the war became a domestic issue. On that issue The Times consistently supported President Wilson. The election of 1916 proved that the President had judged public sentiment pretty well. There will always be room for argument as to how the country would have responded if the Lusitania issue had led to war in the spring of 1915. But it should be remembered that the President's middle-of-the-road policy was being assailed from two sides, as too pusillanimous and as too aggressive. The Times stood with the President against those who for one reason or another thought that the Lusitania incident ought to be passed over in silence, in the full confidence that he would not be unduly precipitate, but would not yield on essential issues of American rights.

It was the pinion of The Times that in the spring of 1915 the American public, as a whole, was not ready to fight over the Lusitania. Whatever may have been the effect of the German arguments based on the fact that the ship carried some ammunition in her cargo, and that the passengers had been warned, it was not believed by the conductors of The Times that the mass of the people, particularly in the West and in the rural districts, had as yet sufficiently appreciated the fundamental issues of the war to make them willing to fight Germany. It was doubted if Congress could be persuaded to declare war, and, even if it could have been, the conductors of The Times felt that the division of public sentiment, and the evidently lukewarm feeling of a good part of the public, would have given much aid and comfort to the enemy. Besides, America was notably unprepared for war in the spring of 1915. By 1917 great war industries had been built up, and two years of prosperity had given the nation financial and industrial strength which made its intervention decisive. These conditions were not present when the Lusitania was sunk, and The Times felt that the President should be supported in his efforts to preserve peace, so long as that was honorably possible.

It took nearly two years more of the demonstration of German methods to convince the majority that America could not honorably and safely keep out of the war. Through those years The Times supported the President, holding, as he did, that there must be, after the war, some sort of world organization which should, in so far as possible, prevent this thing from happening again. had opinions far more decided than the President's on the need for a righteous settlement of this war as a foundation for any durable peace, and by 1917 the President had got around to this view. evidence available suggests that the editors of The Times had perhaps a more logical interpretation of the President's position in 1915 and 1916 than he had himself; but from 1917 on, at any rate, there was rarely occasion for disagreement. Perhaps one exception should be made to this. In the winter of 1917-18 The Times, though it did not exactly support Senator Chamberlain against the President, supported the substance of Chamberlain's views that more energy was needed in the executive departments if the war was to be won.

The Times realized, however, what a good many even of the friendly critics of the Wilson administration forgot in those days, that public officials are human beings and have to be accepted more or less as they are, failings and all. Its editors believed not only that President Wilson was a trustworthy and able leader, but that he was on the whole more trustworthy and more able than any other man in sight. Above all, he was President, he was the head of the State, the nation's leader; and in war times it is the duty of every citizen to support the leader.

The New York Times. NEW YORK, TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 1917.- TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

FULL CO-OPERATION WITH GERMANY'S FOES DATE TACK City. | TVPO CENTS | TWENTS CENTS | TWO CENTS | TWO TACK CENTS | TWO STRONGER NAVY, NEW ARMY OF 500,000 MEN PRESIDENT CALLS FOR WAR DECLARATION. VOL., LXVI...NO. 21,619.

STEAMSHIP SUNK:

ARMED AMERICAN

11 MEN MISSING

The Aztec to First Gun-Bearing Vessel Under Dur Flag to te Torpedoed.

12 Navy Mon and Their Chief Among 17 Survivors Picked

SURPRISE ATTACK AT NIGHT

HIN A LIFEBOAT THAT SANK

Up by a Patrol.

Liner St. Paul, with Canners, Reaches PARIS April 2.- The American eleam British Part in Safety-er Aries has been suck by a submarine majer an island gif Brest. Some strike gent with rescued and are being pers and missing, and unto hope is their than they to the state of the granger was terpedoble at alph while s. property into Breat. A number of the Text of the President's Address

nion becames there are serious, very statons, choices of policy to be made, and made unmediately) which On the 3d of February last 1 officient, laid bators German Government that on and after the Brst day seriare sariles to the war, but show April of last efraints of law or of humanity and use its submarines to sind every vessel that sought to approach sither the pacts of Greet Dritain and Ireland or the western coarts of Europe or any of the ports controlled by the positive of Germany within the Mediterraness. That earmed to be the object of the German enbinaring of Petruary it was its purpose to put aside all re-

Orders repeated to dieter actives when such stift of orders repeated by the second activities of the control of the second activities the second activities of the second a year the Impirital Government had nomewhat regralged the commanders of the sto trees craft. In nonformity with its promise, then given to us., this passenger boats should not be sunk and that due warning would be given to all other vessels width its mbmarines might seek to destroy, when no resistants that graws ferre given at least-a feir chance to mave their lives to their open hasts. The prescutions taken distressing instance after instance to the progress of the crest and unmanly husbase, but a certain degree Fessels of seary kind, whataver chair Dag. their char warning and without thought of help or marcy for those we board, the vensels of friendly neutrals slong

A French patrel picked up niceteen of the crow of the Assoc. Tweedy-sight and are reported miralis wediess Graves phosp, the Appertus agter, their cargo, their destination, their errand, produce with 10 was menter to prove 11 to 14 stell, period or with 10 was menter to be weekled taken to prove the weekled taken to produce to the receivers of by trights or has receivers or the was to these was conso make a few as to companion and the weekled to the produce of the produce of the produce of the produce of the produce to the produce t gainst which we now array ourselves are no common rebugs; they cut th the very route of human life. With a production enter of the softmon and seen righted istanctor of the step I am tabide and of the r of little groups of ambitious men who were ac-Apir-govednaß antions do not till their neighbor Gesten with killes or est ins course of intrigue to bring and poopla of the United States; that it formuly accent the artisture of hatting has which has that been truent upon it; and that it take immediate atops not eaty to put the country in a more; therough stalls of defaule, but take to ever all its power and employ all its securities in order to the country and the defaule. grave responsibilities which it involves, hat in un-bestsating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duly, I adviso that the Congress declare the recool course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government the plant period to the period of the period of the plant period o

MUST EXERT ALL OUR POWER

To Bring a "Govern ment That Is Running

Amuck to Terms."

because we note that it may be government, nigrow-ing a nin middles we can arrive have a feetile and clear to in hereauses of the quantitudes forces, parts yield. In what it decomminds we have not exact yield we have not the control of the contr he peace of the world is involved and the treedom of tarpappies, and the meases to that peace and free-tom lies in the axistence of autocrafts Geveromenia, stances. We are at the beginning of an age in which it will be institled that the anne standards of conduct and of responsibility for wrong done shall be observed. Endong notibes and their dioversiments that acked by organised force which is controlled wholly or their will, not by the will of their people. We observed among the individual citizeds of civilally seem (Ne last of neutrality in such circum-

The veed must be made as the demonstract, the present part to planted upon the issued foundations or while large part to planted upon the issue of service.

We deally not conquest, no domithem. We seek in which comparable of the planted componention for the secritices we shall need made. We are not cort the secritices we shall need made. We are not cort the secritices we shall need made. We are not cort the secritices we shall need made. We are not controlled to the spirits of madelies. We have have been of the champles of the spirits of madelies. We We have a coursely who has comman provise. We have a command provise that the set of command provise that the control of coursels are an expension to the framework that the coursels are set of coursels are control of coursels are a control of the cont

Just because we fight without ouncer and without selfish to just a saking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to stace with all free peoples, we shall, as secess as the falth and the fresdom of nations can Sanala and House and Invited It we consider the fact that Germany had beca making war upon us and to take action in recognition of that (act in ac-cordance with his recommendations; ice, the releing of an arroy of 300,000 offich included universal military serv-duced-Acts Today. Indial to The Side reed Place.

TUMULTUOUS GREETING

and Universal Service, for "the World Must Be Made Safe

WANTS LIBERAL CREDITS

Congress Adjourns After "State of War" Resolution Is intro-tugly made its entrance into the war.

At that hour President Wilson ago'closk tonight the United States vir-WABBUNGTOK, April 2.-At provided with sets conduct through the protecthed areas by the Carnan government their and were dis-tinguistic by thrombeshable endrs or identify. have been entry with the sungy-restries told to companion. Hoppensantatives of the American Gov-rament will preced in Brust to take to depositions of survivors of the dis-

I weit hat he little while unable in ballete that such things "would in fact he does by day Govarioness that he higher dependent of the heavy of the such that he was a laterabilities have he little either the new parties and was the weight of the best in the billething in an up annee haw weich would he reappoints and giverned upon the man, where no nation that the site of the site ', This unknown or right its German Goreanest has everly, sight, under the time of retailable and rigomity out, pleasest its aid no weapons which its much turn of any scools them. Which it is impossible what the heart, and renstlance of mankind demanded. to employ, us it is amploying them, without throwing when you can be the read to the company of the comp to the wind all serupies of humanity or of resher for the underkinhdings that were supposed to underlike the intercourse of the world.

("We not the workshipe of the the Myrither of the Western Commission and targeted as that it, which every the workships are interested at this work as agreementability, argue, women, and collitions unspised of descriptor which were already of the descriptor which were already of the descriptor which were considerable to the Myrither and American and Myrither and Myrither and American and Myrither and American and Myrither and Myr

seris are agreements more, at war with dermany, and, was inclinate to that, the estembin to these Gov-ermants of the most liberal Mondail ricelly, fit, and, that our resources may so fit so possible be

He will unytoo the regardation and solutionals of all included parameters of all included persons of the secondary of all the control of the secondary of the s

I take the latter of the Direct latter on the sense of 1 take the latter, of our containers with its an interest of an element of the latter o the spiritual of the spiritual of the spiritual of the ship of the spiritual of the spiritu untillin resciulion drawn up atter-conference with the Preferent, and in texturer appeared not probably dis-tacked by him, and they will come tex-frite in a text of Perfert. After Expensi-pries a markets with the will us able to declarations of was their the United which it has been engaged aince if the came a needen. They are the Admits theresentative Flood and Senator Mar. Un, both of the President's birth-Staar

frow morning and will be exacted the sardies practical moresit. Unrespressly teles the Altip.

the analyzegity cell have an operatority to years can it forested to our daily cellulate and games to can it forested to our daily cellulate and games and allow an our cellulate and select the can be compared to the cellulate and select the cellulate and select to prove it ments of the programmer of the cellulate and the poperatories of the cellulate for the cellulate and the cellulate of the cellulate and the selection of the cellulate and selection of the cellulate selection of the cellulate selection of th wast of the time the marging of his sensition in the countries in the coun

All a description by add spiritually collections by the section of the Compress, which have performed to the contrast of the Compress, which have performed to the said of surprise that it will be a found for your but a section about of our All as found in the said of the section about the said of the section about the section of the section about the section about the section about the section about the section and section about the section and section the section about the section and section and section as a section of the section about the section is set the section that the section are all the section is the section to the section and the section and the section is the section to the section and the section is the section to the section that the section is the section to the section and the section and section as the section to the section and the section as the section to the section and the section as the se

Before a residence has directly for all by the story does do not be Option and All and ublassanting, Paritinte Barred.

The such a than we can judicate our lives and our fortunes generating that we are such that we have a such a print of the set that we have a such a print of the set that when the such a part of the set that when the properties of the set to the set that a part is printed to the set to the set that a present the properties and that a present that had beginness and the power which has been the best both that had beginness and the power which has been its; blood and this man-its; blood and this man-treature.

God belping her, she can do no other.

The War Resolution Now Before Congress defined in the House, of Representative less the Representative Flood, Chairman of the Portun Affaire Committee, immediately, after the Presi

All the nation of the west taken from the furthest steam directs hear Delight Addition to he pieced on the Addition to the pieced on the Addition tention that the direct heart and the distant would not added the polity of semined high words would be seen head to the polity of semined the following the polity of the pol

Jeneils A. Rucies, Manners, ornardian, Jeneils W. Rucies, Rangits, Ais, Caroscer W. Whiteny, Quaris-mages British, James H. William, Frances. British Chickenski, Ohlo.

"the bast does II"—that's her Postaline as an annual versions in a standard with the standard and the standa

The American steemship Aster. the Pret Armed American this Sont. Continues as Page 34.

Mr. Wilson had a way of doing more seasonably, better and more efficiently than they ever dreamed of, the things his critics blamed him savagely for not doing. His injustice to Chamberlain in the beginning of 1918, like his desertion of Garrison in the beginning of 1916, might create a very bad impression; but it did not prove that in the long run either Chamberlain or Garrison could have done better than Wilson, even had they been in a position to try.

During 1918 The Times editorial page, continuing its general policies on the war and support of the administration, opened up one or two special lines of discussion. It gave rather more room than other papers to consideration of the political readjustments in Europe that might be expected to follow the end of the war, and to presentation of the claims and possibilities of the various nationalistic revolutionary movements. It took, too, the most prominent place in denunciation of the behavior of the Russian Bolsheviki. It is sometimes forgotten that the Bolshevist revolution in Russia first affected the world as a phase of the war. Western Europe and America might have afforded to stand off and watch the Bolsheviki reconstruct society, if they had not begun by destroying the eastern front and releasing hundreds of thousands of German troops for service in France, and if they had not at once begun to talk of promoting revolutions in the countries fighting Germany. To be sure, they were going to start a revolution in Germany as well, but Brest-Litovsk showed how little they could or would accomplish against the German military group. In Germany, as in Russia, they began their revolution only after the imperial power had been broken by a less radical revolution; and in Germany only after the way had been prepared by Foch's armies.

So when The Times argued, as it did with vigor and persistence in 1918, for the sending of allied troops to Siberia, it was chiefly in the hope that they might get through to reëstablish an eastern front. For Bolshevism as a political and economic gospel The Times had no use, but it regarded this aspect of the movement as less important than Bolshevism as a practical factor in a war whose decision was still in doubt.

Toward the end of the war occurred an incident which brought The Times more criticism, probably than anything else in its history — the publication on September 16, 1918, of an editorial favoring the consideration of the Austrian proposal for a "preliminary and non-binding" discussion of peace terms. The opinion which found expression in this article was first, that the Austrian proposal meant the beginning of the end — which was true; and second. that it was worth considering, on the theory that when conferences had begun the enemy would rapidly give way to complete surrender. Whether that would or would not have happened is, of course, a question to which there can be no answer. shiftiness of the Germans in their subsequent negotiations with Mr. Wilson suggests that this preliminary conference might have given opportunity for a good deal of intrigue, it is true on the other hand that the rapid caving in of the German morale in the fall of 1918 might have led to exactly the same result as did occur. It was not generally foreseen in the middle of September that the war would be over in less than two months; but the editor of The Times had become convinced from his study of the German press, and the other sources of information available, that Germany was on the verge of collapse, and was confident that if peace delegates once met, the people of the Central Powers would insist on peace at any price. In the Austrian proposal he recognized evidence that Austria and Germany were exhausted and would soon be ready to surrender on any terms at all. And The Times declared that the Allies must insist on such peace terms as were finally imposed on Germany at Versailles. was convinced that if negotiations began Germany would soon be forced to accept whatever terms the Allies might lay down.

That may have been a mistake, but it was at least a tenable view. It was, unfortunately, a somewhat too long-sighted view for the popular mind in the tenseness of the time, when everybody's blood was at fever heat and there was general apprehension that peace negotiation might lose the fruit of victory. The deviousness of German diplomacy was well known, and the exhaustion of German endurance was not generally understood. Perhaps some of the phrases in the editorial were chiefly responsible for the unfavorable criticism, phrases expressing a feeling such as everybody exhibited a few weeks later on armistice day. If the editor of The Times gave premature expression to that feeling, it was because he saw further ahead than most people and knew that this appeal meant that peace was near.

It must be added that the wide discussion of this editorial, and the unfavorable reaction to it, was in considerable part the work of other New York newspapers, who talked of "The Times's white flag" and even ventured on some insinuations about "Austrian gold," against the paper which every German propagandist for four years past had been accusing of subserviency to British gold.

No doubt these competitors of The Times were inspired in part by vigilant patriotism, but other motives may have had something to do with their agitation. The Times had been making enormous gains in circulation. It was within a very few thousands of the largest circulation in New York, and it had already distanced all the other morning papers. The Herald — then, of course, a different paper and under different ownership than at present - undertook a great circulation campaign to win over Times readers under such slogans as "Read an American Paper." As had happened fifty-two years before, when Raymond took the unpopular step of advocating conciliation of the beaten South, The Times's spotless record for loyalty during the war was ignored by iournals which had found it a dangerously successful business rival. But this loyalty, and the leadership in news and opinion which The Times had won, was not forgotten by the public. The circulation of the paper was not affected, the clamor soon died away, and the assaults of jealous and failing competitors were as futile as they were groundless.

At the outbreak of the war the military authorities of all the nations engaged had the idea, correct enough from a purely military viewpoint, that the newspapers and the public need know nothing about what was going on until it was all over. The success of the Japanese in keeping war correspondents out of the way in Manchuria had shown other army officers what could be done, and the strategic advantage that was to be derived from doing it. Some months passed before it began to be apparent to the various governments, and in time even to the military commanders, that every nation wanted to know what was going on, and would fight better if it knew. In the early months the task of news getting was hard enough, and the news that was obtained was mostly official and open to considerable suspicion.

Eventually, of course, all this was changed. Before the end of the war the correspondent had become a personage universally respected — if not, like MacGahan and Forbes and Russell and the men of their day, respected because he was more important than the war he was covering, at any rate respected and treated with some deference because Ministers and Generals knew that the public wanted to know what was happening and that this man was going to tell it.

The New York Times at the outbreak of the war was getting its war news from The London Daily Chronicle, and from its own correspondents in London and Paris. It was unable to get the other side of the case from its own correspondent in Berlin, for the German Government had locked up and then expelled this gentleman on the ground that, though an American citizen, he was correspondent not only for The Times but for The London Daily Mail, and consequently might be engaged in espionage. But the war was only a few weeks old when The Times got another correspondent into Germany, a correspondent who through school and family acquaintances had unusual facility of access to German military circles, and who, during 1914, 1915 and 1916, succeeded in presenting probably the best picture given in the American press of the operations of the German Army on all fronts. This correspondent was Cyril Brown, at present The Times correspondent in Berlin, who almost at the beginning of his career in Germany managed, partly by his own ingenuity and partly by the assistance of a trainman whom he had met while covering a strike in Iersev City some years before, to get to German Great Headquarters at Mezières-Charleville and send to The Times the first account anywhere published of the scenes there. Brown's subsequent operations took him to every German battle front, and in addition, with the assistance of Joseph Herrings, he covered the political news from Berlin.

Other American correspondents in Germany performed a brilliant and useful work in interviewing the leaders of the German Government and sending out to the world their opinions on the progress of the war, though it is to be regretted that some of them eventually came to believe a good deal of what was said to them; but Brown, while doing comparatively little of this sort of thing, outdistanced all other American writers in his reporting of the German Army in action.

Now and then he had assistance, as for example 360

during Mackensen's Serbian campaign in the fall of 1915, and in the early days of the Verdun offensive, when The Times obtained by special arrangement the reports of the staff correspondents of several Berlin dailies in addition to the news gathered by its own men. To make sure that nothing going on in Germany was overlooked, The Times sent Garet Garrett in 1915 and Oscar King Davis at the end of 1916 to write special articles on the economic situation and the wearing qualities of German morale.

Besides getting the news out of Germany, The Times now and then got some news into Germany - notably in February, 1917, when the German Government had been aroused by rumors that Ambassador Bernstorff was being detained in America after the rupture of diplomatic relations and that all German ships in American ports, and their crews, had been seized. These false reports had inspired the German Government with the idea that Ambassador Gerard and all Americans in Berlin might be detained by way of retaliation. A private message from the managing editor of The Times to O. K. Davis, correcting these false impressions, was shown by the correspondent to the German Foreign Office and was chiefly responsible for the release of the Americans in Berlin.

On other fronts, as the war went on, The Times was better and better served. Of the numerous and usually able correspondents of The London Chronicle the most distinguished was Philip Gibbs, whose dispatches from the British front in the later years of the war were perhaps the most generally popular war correspondence of the period. Gibbs's peculiar talent happened to meet a very general psychological need of the public in 1917 and 1918; and he was more widely read, and probably on the whole more generally admired, in America than even in England.

Of The Times's own correspondents with the allied armies Wythe Williams, head of the Paris office in the early days of the war, wrote a number of excellent stories from the battle-fronts in France and Italy. Edwin L. James, at present Paris correspondent of The Times, was the principal correspondent with the American armies in 1918, and supplied thrilling accounts of their achievements. Walter Duranty brilliantly described the successful resistance of the French armies to the German onslaught of 1918. Charles A. Selden sent the political news from Paris in the same year. Charles H. Grasty of the executive staff of the paper, possessing a wide acquaintance among both soldiers and statesmen, wrote a great deal from the British, French and American battle-fronts, though the greater part of his correspondence was political. Of the many others who at various times and from various fronts sent dispatches to The Times, perhaps special mention should be given to Georges Le Hir, who wrote from Verdun in the spring of 1916 some of the best battle pictures of the war.

The news from the battle-fronts was constantly supplemented by all kinds of news about the war from the writers, newspapers, and press agencies of every country in Europe presented each morning for what it was worth to the readers of The Times. The most important contribution to the assembling of this news was that of the London office, headed by Ernest Marshall, which without making much parade of its merits acquired an extraordinarily high standard of all-round efficiency. Mention should be made also of Enid Wilkie, correspondent at The Hague, who was responsible for most of the news about what was going on in Germany after America declared war.

VIEWS OF THE COMPOSING ROOM

A VIEW OF THE NEWS ROOM OF THE TIMES.

The amount of news received by The Times, by cable and wireless, from its own correspondents, on a number of days in the latter part of the war surpassed in the total number of words the dispatches of the largest news associations, and often exceeded all the special dispatches to all other American newspapers combined. The handling of this mass of news in the office naturally involved problems unexampled in magnitude if not new in kind, and in the delicate technical question of make-up, the arrangement of news with due consideration of its relative importance, as well as of the appearance of the page on which it is printed, The Times in the course of the war developed a general style to which many of its competitors paid the compliment of imitation. was impossible, in the war period, to get all the big news on the front page, but The Times usually got more of it there than other papers, and in an arrangement which was at once pleasing to the eye and calculated to make it easy for the reader to see at once what had happened, as well as to give him some idea of the importance of the various dispatches.

The war make-up involved a considerable development in the art of headline composition. The limitation of the width of the column is one of the chief technical difficulties in the presentation of news to a public which has learned to look for headlines that tell the story. And even when the head is extended to two or three columns, or seven or eight, the wider room for display does not remove all the difficulties. The Times in its headlines tries, and its conductors hope with a fair degree of success, to be fair and accurate; to pack the substance of the story, without prejudice, into the four or five words which may be all of the story that some readers will ever read.

Carr V. Van Anda, the managing editor, was in charge not only of the great organization which was collecting the news all over the world, but of the no less intricate and efficient organization within the office which had the work of arranging and presenting the news. In this latter field he was ably assisted by F. T. Birchall, assistant managing editor. The mechanical department under the very competent supervision of Charles F. Hart successfully responded in those days to a heavy strain and made an important contribution to the success of the paper.

From the day the Lusitania was sunk the war was no longer a European question, and thereafter, week in and week out, it pretty steadily dominated the news in every New York paper. Even then, of course, most papers of the interior found it less important than events closer home, and continued to give it rather limited space until America came in. As the war went on more and more of the most intelligent class of readers all over the country found that if they really wanted news about the war they could find it in greatest volume and most satisfactorily presented in The Times.

The first award of the Pulitzer gold medal for "disinterested and meritorious service" by a newspaper was made by the School of Journalism of Columbia University to The New York Times in June, 1918, "for publishing in full so many official reports, documents, and speeches by European statesmen relating to the progress and conduct of the war." The editors of The Times believed that their circulation contained an unusually high proportion of readers who were willing to give the time to reading long speeches and long documents, not necessarily because they had superfluous time on their hands, but because they realized that in a war of this kind full understanding required careful study, and that study of the evidence was the most important business of any intelligent man. The editors thought, too, that The Times more than any other paper was read by people who were capable of forming their own opinions from study of the original evidence in full, and who would rather have every word available for their own study than accept a summary made by somebody else.

An illustration of the methods of The Times in getting together these documents from the most widely scattered sources may be found in the history of the publication of Prince Lichnowsky's famous memorandum on German diplomatic methods and the outbreak of the war. Parts of this had been published in various German and Swedish papers, and in The New Europe of London, and many extracts from these publications had been cabled to the American press. But the document was for the first time printed in full in The New York Times, the text having been laboriously assembled from the five or six partial publications in Germany, Sweden and England. Something like this The Times was doing constantly during 1918, and by industry and vigilance succeeded in piecing together a good deal of evidence which other publications, both in America and abroad, had been content to accept in fragmentary form.

Every one was calling on his reserves in 1918, from Foch and Ludendorff down to the humblest citizen on the internal front who was setting his teeth and accustoming himself to new privations, and the human race as a whole was probably living more intensely and putting more of its potential abilities into action than ever before. It is perhaps natural, then, that The Times was at its best in this last year of the war. Its conductors are not conscious of any particular deterioration since that time, but there was more opportunity for excellence to display itself in the conditions of this last war year.

In the interchange of speeches that made up the most visible though by no means the only phase of the "peace offensives" of the winter of 1917–18 The Times had scored again and again by printing the addresses in full, by a make-up and typography which put the news out where the reader could see it and gave him some hints about its relative importance, and in the case of speeches delivered by German or Austrian statesmen very often by getting the news a day earlier than the other papers. The peace offensive broke down and Ludendorff began a new offensive of a different kind on March 21, 1918. In The Times office it was recognized on the evening of that day that this was the great and decisive conflict of the war, although elsewhere, and even in London, it was some days before the magnitude and importance of Ludendorff's operations was perceived. From that time on The Times was generally a day ahead of the crowd. Every correspondent had been instructed on the evening of March 21 thenceforward to spare no expense or effort to get his news into the office promptly. The result was that day after day The Times was the only American paper which had its own dispatches describing the fighting of the day before. The Associated Press news arrived on time, for the Associated Press had, properly enough, received special facilities for getting its news through. Other American papers had special dispatches from their own correspondents, but for two or three months they generally got them and published them a day late. Within a few weeks after March 21 The Times was able to announce that since that date it had scored more than one hundred beats, including such items of news as Foch's appointment as generalissimo, the removal of General Gough after the defeat of the British Fifth Army, and Count Czernin's speech against Clemenceau, which had the result of bringing to the light the Austro-French peace negotiations of the previous year.

The official censorships of the various European governments interfered considerably, of course, with the news dispatches of The Times, as they did with those of all other papers. No effort was made to circumvent these censorships, but in one instance the censorship was evaded by a sort of impromptu code, with the result that The Times beat all other papers, in America and elsewhere, on two highly important news stories. Under cover of the ostensible discussion by cable of some changes in The Times's European staff information was obtained of the decision to supplant Joffre as generalissimo of the French armies, of the consideration of various men for his position and finally of the appointment of Nivelle. A few months later the same formula brought to The Times office, again in advance of the official announcement, the news that Nivelle was to be replaced by Pétain.

Like all other newspapers, however, The Times tolerated foreign censorships because it had no choice, and not because it liked their methods or admired their results. When America came into the war and the first draft of the Espionage Act contained a provision for an American censorship, The Times was one of the most vigorous opponents of any such measure. The experience of European governments had shown that, while censors may occasionally be necessary, they are always stupid, and the likelihood that personal or political considerations would influence a censor in Washington was quite as strong as the certainty that such considerations had already played their part in Europe.

Eventually the clause was deleted from the Espionage Act, and in place of Government regulation came the "voluntary censorship," by which American newspapers refrained from printing news that might be of military advantage to the enemy.

One hundred and eighty-nine members of The Times staff, including two women, served in the armed forces of the United States during the war. Of these the following five were killed or died in service:

Major William Sinkler Manning, of the Washington Bureau;

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM BRADLEY, of the business office;

SERGEANT JOYCE KILMER, of the Sunday magazine staff;

Private Harold J. Behl, proofreader;

PRIVATE EDWARD B. PIERCE, of the composing room.

CHAPTER VI

The Times Today

THE end of the war found The Times at the height of its influence and power, but the peak of its business prosperity was still to come. In the boom of 1919 and the early months of 1920 The Times at last expanded in size from the 24-page issue which had been the limit for the week-day paper up to the end of the war, and often since then has printed 32, 36 or even 40 pages a day. Even so, the volume of advertising offered was so great that day after day much of it had to be refused on account of lack of space. Yet the total printed in 1920 was more than 23,000,000 agate lines — nearly 80,000 columns, and almost ten times the amount printed in the first year of the new management. The greatest volume of advertising ever carried in the paper was on Sunday, May 23, 1920, when The Times printed in all 767 columns of advertisements. The paper on that day contained altogether 136 pages, including 24 pages of rotogravure pictorial supplement and 16 pages of tabloid book review. It weighed two pounds and ten ounces, and no doubt it felt like ten pounds and two ounces to the weary householder who picked it off the doorstep; but experience has shown that even in a paper of that size there is nothing that a good many readers do not want.

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

THE WEATHER Fair today and Turaday; diminishing destinant winds.

TWO, CENTS Martille Miches | Within the Mile | FOLTH CLEATER NEW CHANCELLOR BEGS FOR ORDER; BERLIN SEIZED BY REVOLUTIONISTS; ARMISTICE SIGNED, END OF THE WAR! NEW YORK, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1918, TWENTY-FOUR PAGES. VOL. LXVIII...NO: 22,206.

SUN RIES WITH EX-KAISER Faiser Frank Hindenborg's Call for Abdication; Failed to Get Army's Sapport in Keeping Throne Hindenburg Also Believed to be Among Those

Reds Shell Building in

AMBTERDAM, Nov. 16.—I laine ontwerp good authority that the Kalesy made a determined affort to pays off abdomine. He well to handquarder with the deliberate independent of bringing the army around to his side, "In this he to lained maintendy." His main expropt consisted of a number of afflects, nearly all of Prusian residents, who formed themselves into less regiments and gives themselves as his Majesty disposal. To do anything with nucle purply was seen, a course, lo se Olibertian. ILL ARE HEAVILY ARMED

THRONGS DEMAND REPUBLIC

Revolutionary Flag on Royal Palace—Crown Prince

Lutomobiles Bristle with Rifles

as Fugitives Arrive at

Dutch Frantier,

Ordings fally supported Hindenburg's view, has when the conference being and Relate represented the properties of the advantage of the defending of abelian boris, its is said to here come to his filed decision on hour or no letter. ang said be must refuse responsibility the Crewn Prince, it is said, was the first to given way. General ON THEIR WAY TO BE STEED atter saveral communications had rearried him from Berlin and after savether shart and stormy talk with Kindenburg.

discussible, his ancionies to those of Discussible, the Mandal and his had selected. Therefore the State Children was forced that the selected the World February of State Children moreometric for the State Children moreometric beautiful for the repulsions moreometric beautiful for the repulsion moreometric configuration. The state of the sta

LONDON, Nov. 10-Both.

Belgiane Yell to Tham, "Are

You On Your Way. to

Kaner Shivered as He Signed Abdication

| BERLIN TROOPS JOIN REPORT | Socialist Chancellor Appeals to All Germans | WAR ENDS AT 6 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING

OUSTED KAISER FLEES TO HOLLAND

Oftunes: The acclassional price Max Galles, he are spine Max Price Max Galles, he are given the Max Galles over to not place the Madden of Relating San Englands. I have not be suffer a Careful and December 1 and Dece BERNE, Nov. 10, (Associated Press.).-In an address to the people, the new German Chancellor, Friedrich Eberi, says:

ARMISTICE WAS SIGNED IN FRANCE AT MIDNIGHT I know it will be difficult for some to wark with the new man who have been churte so it to employ, but I appeal to their lyre of the prapile. Lead to organization would in this beavy time impan anarchy in Germany and the surrented of the country to transaction entering.

JENERAL STRIKE IS BEGUN

The State Department in Washington Made the Announcement at 2:45 o'Clock.

Threston, the jour nature and the fearban, insight graft washed.

I demain every one at his point.

I demain every one support to the and to exactly the n. Con.

I demain everyon's opport to the and to exactly the n. Con.

I show have perspect to the the provided part of the provided of the properties of the properties. The people, and the his control of the properties of the properties of the properties of the people of the people

Food interiors signifies pillage and robbers, with great missiry. The potential worker will be followed and the industrial worker will be followed and the industrial worker will be followed but date. All who illedity lay bends on food supplies no other mapplies of prime supersight or the means not transport recensors yet when characteriors will be mainte fat. the habitest desses seement yet.

Terms Include Withdrawal from Alsace-Lorraine, Disarming and Demobilization of Army and Navy, and Occupation of Strategic, Naval and Military Points.

crossed the Dutch rontier Sunday morning, acording to advices from The ion is De Steeg, near Utrecht. His reported desting-hand, and the allied Governments and the The State Department announced at 2:45 o'clock this morning that Germany had The department's announcement simply

United States, on the other, has been signed.

M.—The armistice between Germany, on the one

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 10.-The new Berlin Government, sc-cording to a. Welff Burean dispatch, has issued the following proc-

Socialist Chencellor, has taken command of the altuation. The revolt is apreading throughout and Friedrich Ebert, the new hurg, according to a dispatch from Amaterdam to the Exchange Tele-graph Company

The Crown Princer algaed his renunciation of the throns shortly o'clock, Washington time, 11 o'clock Paris time, The armistice was signed by the German This announcement was made by the State The announcement was made verbally by "The armistice has been signed. It was

Department at 2:50 o'clock this morning.

ed Press.)-The German People's Government has been instituted in BERLIN, Nov. 9, (German Wire

Reds Anneunce Suress.

the greater part of Besilm. The gar-rison has gone over to the Govern-

The Workmen's and Soldiers' Council has declared a genoral onists.

There was severe fighting in roth.

ast night and a violent cannon- maintaining order.

ade was heard from the heart of the city.

Berlin between S and 10 o'clock

Thuse Protecting Mines in the

GUARDSHIPS ALSO GO OVER

also in possuesion of the revolue of the workmen's leaders tioniste.

Brandenburg Gate. The for- killed in the fighting at the mer Crown Prince's palace is "Cockchafer" Barracks was one

The red flag has been hoisted mined that other buildings over the royal palace and the were under fire. Among those representatives at midnigh

gen. The other pasts will be occu-

The world war will end this morning at said: "The armistice has been signed."

tred from the windows. Live Serious food difficultias are es-Signed. Reds then began shelling the prefer in Germany, owing to the building. Many pursons were isopage of trains. The Guasai of Trh killed and wounded before the the Regeasy will take the most drag-tic steps to re-establish order.

When the cannonade began here will be only three represents to people thought the Reicht- tives of the majority parties, name

Socialist representative. The bank was being dombarded, and hy graberer, Golben, and Richlicofficial Wolff telegraphic thousands rushed to the aguare fee, says a displich from Copenia.

egency has been taken over by in front of the Crown Prince the Reds.

Four Dreadnoughts in Kiel Har-

for Espouse the Revolutionary Cause.

It was later deter-

only when countersigned by a the people thought the Reichs-

The War Ministry has sub officers surrendered, .

cers were concealed shots were in the solution of demobilization fired from the windows. The problems.

ing developments. The Workmen's and Soldiers' Council is now edministering the municisel government of the German mitted, and its arts are valid

Dispatches received in Londen teday announce thuse start-

Germany with great capidity.

Thed. The Social Democratio Party has undertaken to form a Government. It has fowered the independent Socialist Party to enter the Government with equal rights. Fallow-Culzens: This day the people's deliverance has been ful-

"I hank to for the good of thermany". Then ye to for the good of thermany. "I hank to for the good of thermany". The number of the foreign of the foreign of the hank to the foreign of the hank to work in the weigner. The exclusive was special to have fine the foreign of the hank recent in the way appeared to have fine the foreign of maintain, but another and then feeting the set settled. Chilips Scheidzmann, who was a Schallet member without corr-in the Imperial Cabinet, was handed to the Emperor Ne read it. Defore nincing his signature to the document, an urgent message rith a ablver. Then he signed the caper, asying" The former German Emtror's party, which is believed include Field Marshel von egarding their future movements. midway between Lidge and Hndenburg, arrived at Eysden Eastricht,] on the Dutch fron

GERMAN DYN STIES norming, according to Deily ier, at 7:50 o'clock Sunday

MORE WARSHIPS

he automobiles were bristling King of Weerttemberg Abdi-BEING WIPED OU dan General Staff eccompanied former Emperor, and ten ntomobiles carried the party. Practically the whole cates -- Sovereign of Saxony to Follow Suit. ofth rifles, and all the fugitives

The ex-Kaiser was in uni-erm. He alighted at the Eys-en station and paced the plat-

PRINCES MAY BE EXILED Many photographs were taken orm, smoking a cigarette.

Socialists Are Demanding That [of I] the members of the mperial party. On the whole he people were very quiet, but not "En voyage a Paris." (Are delgians among them yelled Every Sovereign In the Empire Shall be Dethroned.

Great Selt and the Baltio

LONDON, Nov. 19,-The crawe of Burgomaster and Police Join. Abandon Their Posts. LONDON, Nov. 10,-A Havas states that Dr. Liebkurcht, the caived in the tign on that attensor in Frederic best (the Frenders Lord (for the Frenders Lord) and formous Socialist, who sport with general releting which we the Social beneatified by the face that it had from out the Connectional for an extension for an extension of the face that it had from out the Connectional to the face that it had from out the Connectional to the face that it had from the face that had from the face that it had from the face A Copenhegen dispetch states that Dr. Liebknecht, thmany months in prison for antegooizing the German Imthe revolution, says a. Copenhagen dignatch. Marines occupied tile leck Nassan, and Oldenbarg, in Kiel Harbor, have joined the German dreadnoughts Posen,

King of the monnrchy of Würt-

"Wilhelm 11, the reigning temberg, abdicated on Friday A Wolff Bureau dispatch from Stuttgart, by way of Amsterdam, says that the King dispatch from Basie says:

ou on your way to Paris?) Chatting with the members not look in the least dis-A few minutes later in imperial train, including res-

the staff, the former Emror, the correspondent says, other buildings have been with New York time,] and hostilities will cease at 11

the Soldier's and Workman. Conc. have two things of it the disposal of the concern of the Sharinger thereone, sweet the Concil. Cuents which had been by to a World Bureau spect for instead at the public efficies and lay of the World Concil. When the concern the concern

Brith was occupied by forces of strike. Twops and machine gues the Soldiers and Workman's Cour. have beep placed at the disposal at signed at 5 o'clock A. M., Paris time, [midnight an officila of the State Department in this form o'clock this morning, Paris time, [6 o'clock, New The terms of the armistice, it was annonnced, will not be made public until later. Military men here, however, regard it as cer-

York time.

perial Government and who was recontly released, bas isment in Berlin in behalf of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Conosued the following announcehas ingued a proclamation say- Service three German destroyers gates at Ostmoor and fought down a coast artillary division which of-According to the British Wireless fered resistance.

nto the station. Only servants The engine returned to Vise, leigium, and brought back a ere aboard.

surent and sleeping cars, ran ressed.

How far the example of the Rus-sian Bolzheviki influenced the Ger-

Rassians Ald in Gutbresk.

come too late.

The shoulder steeps were torn from the uniforms of officers man upbeavel is an interesting quention. Red flags figured fre-quently in the various righgs and hancellor Ebert's motor unr floate "The Presidency of the po-Is said, have joined the revolutionary lice, as well as the Chief Comij

serve to hinder the development All the guardablys in the Baltic, it ing that his person would never have anchored outside of Stockholm.

in a number of German cities and even the soldiers' insignia wece mand, is in our hends. Our A dispatch from Berne states every dynasty in Germany be says a Wolff News Agency dispatch that the Burgomaster of Berlin has placed himself and his staff romredes will be released."

Socialists are demanding that flag arrived at Bamburg last night,

The preparations began for morning, but at 10:40 o'clock

caived from Berne, the German Six more erulears flying the red Acrocding to a report re-movement.

of the wishes of the prople.

econd train, in which were a irge number of staff officers and others, and also stores of he departure at 10 o'clock this train was still at Eysden. the blinds of the train were all The Daily Mail remarks that, the party arrived in Holland While other dispetches con-NAME OF STRUCKSESS.

1 to Mon. a R. CINALOUM LOSENDER

1 to Mon. a R. CINALOUM LOSENDER

1 to Mon. a R. CINALOUM

1 to Mo

nas pieces numest end nis staff naicentes of the revolutionary at the disposal of the new Gov- German navy serived to Berlin on stripped from them. Bushan pris-oners played a part in the demon-strations in two or three towns.

Friday, according to a dispatch from Copenhagen. They conferred for several hours with the Minister of ple's Coveroment, Interceds in thron-of the maintenance of order. There-upon in the offices and public holid-

The business of the Imperial Chancellor is being carried on by the Social Damocratic Deputy, Herr the gaards which had been sta-

It is presented that, apart from the representatives of the recent majority group, three independent Social Democests will enter the ful-

Scheldemann Exhorts Calm.

Gevernment.

is stated that Hugo Nause, a stuntion of Hamburg in hand.

public!" and singing the "Mar-When revolutionary soldiers attempted to enter a building posed that a number of offi-

Here is a list of the roles, unit several fact incorption or the revolution at the comment area, of the results are not the result of the data fact in the result of the r rmed, all of them must be in-

Contrard on Page Three.

geillaise."

Up to Friday night the number of persons kalled at Klel was twentyeight, according to information re-

LNHALT-Duke Edward, son of the Dake Friedrich of Anhalt and of an Antolosite of Bust-Altsaberg. aded his brother April 19, 1981. BADEN-Priedrich 11., succeeded to Officers Shelled by Reds.

rine and with members of the Speinlist leader in the Reichstag, has

Some German newspapers

ernment.

An Amsterdem dispatch states and Vorwarts confirm the fact that received in Copenhagen.

Kings of Bavaria and Saxony, that the Berlin Vossische Zeitung exiled. It is reported that the intend to abdicate soon.

suppressed and all the Princes describe the movement as Bol-The people are shouting "Long live the Re-

Reichstag majority, parties.

Continued on Page Pour

ancellor Ebert. This action was visioning of the army and asslating in Berlin in which they sup-man armies.

Disarming and demobilization of the Ger-

Alsace-Lorraine.

military forces from France, Belgium, and Immediate refirement of the German

tain that they include:

In the course of the teeranon of Scientisty the formation but a new German Peoples Boverment was followed by the grant of the property of the present of the temporarity, went over lot he new German, over to the new German the People's Government reads:

The teaders of the deputations of against the people. They said they would, in accordance with the Peo-

the Social Democratid Pasty de-clared that they would not ahnot

Occupation by the allied and American forces of such strategic points in Germany as will make impossible a renewal of hostilities.

Delivery of part of the German High Seas Fleet and a certain number of submarines to the Disarmament of all other German yarships The Value on the County allied and American naval forces. Deputy Scheidemann, Cander of the majority Socialists in the Belcha-

The impression is widely prevalent that as the paper increases in size the publisher loses money on account of the high price of newsprint. This, however, is a mistake. The advertising rates include the cost of the paper on which advertisements are printed, so that the increased cost involves only pages devoted to news. The only danger in increasing the size of the paper is that it may possibly become so bulky as to dissatisfy the reader, and The Times has not yet felt that handicap. Some of its readers complain that it is too large, but nobody complains that it prints too much news about the things in which he is interested. man whose chief interest is in the stock market may think there is too much news about sports, and vice versa: but there is not too much financial news for the investor, nor too much sporting news for the follower of sports. From the four-page paper of six short columns which Raymond got out in 1851 to The Times of forty eight-column pages which has occasionally appeared in recent years is a long jump; but no greater than the increase in the extent of the intelligent reading public, nor in the variety of that public's interests.

The most important feature of The Times's editorial policy since the war has been its championship of the League of Nations, a cause in which its editors were interested long before the armistice, and which they regard as destined to ultimate triumph in some form — most probably in a form very much like that which was adopted by the Paris peace conference. Throughout that conference The Times steadily supported the general policies of President Wilson, though it could not agree with him on some details. Its editors felt that it was a mistake for him to go to Paris in person, but later they came to the conclusion that the President had been right, and that by his presence at the conference he had obtained some results which would have been impossible for any negotiator of less eminence. thought, and still think, that he made a mistake in not taking with him representative leaders of the Republican party, as well as in showing too plainly an opinion reasonable enough in itself of the endowments and the character of some eminent Senators. On some of the territorial, political or economic items of the peace settlements, too, The Times could not accept the President's views.

But its conductors thought that these objections were all of minor importance and irrelevant to the principal issues. With the President's opinion that the League was all-important they were in entire accord, as well as with his position on most of the territorial and economic questions in dispute. They thought the Treaty of Versailles was not ideally perfect, but about the best treaty that could have been obtained. And they held the opinion, none too common in the United States in 1919, that after all the President was the representative of the entire American people at the peace conference, that it was impossible for him to get his way on every point of difference with the other delegates, and that an enlightened view of national interest, to say nothing of those more general considerations of universal welfare which his opponents so vehemently dis-claimed, made it advisable for the American people to forget trivial objections and give their consideration rather to the things the President had done. He had, after all, won the chief points for which he was contending as the constitutionally designated negotiator for the American people, and won them, if at the price of some concessions, over strenuous opposition. It was unlikely that any other American official would ever be able to impose American views so extensively on the other great powers of the world.

There can be no doubt that much of the antagonism which finally wrecked Mr. Wilson's peace plans was due to his personality rather than his accomplishments, to his methods rather than his results. seemed to The Times that ordinary common sense might suggest that the people whom he represented should give first consideration to the work which he had done, and to the effect of that work upon their own interests, rather than to their opinions of Mr. Wilson as an individual. No doubt, some conscientious opponents of the League took this point of view, and based their opposition to the Treaty on an honest conviction that it was harmful to American interests. But there is evidence everywhere in plain sight that a good many people opposed the Treaty merely because they disliked the President.

Throughout the fight in the Senate and through the campaign of 1920 The Times gave its utmost support to the cause of the League and to those public men who promised to support that cause. The violent debate within the Republican Party as to whether the election of Mr. Harding meant a victory for the League or the utter rejection of the League it viewed with sympathetic but detached interest, convinced that the logic of facts would presently bring to reason those Republican leaders who are capable of reason. Until that time shall come The Times's view of the particular accomplishments of the Republican Administration is determined by its judgment of their specific merits and not by general or doctrinal considerations.

Yet, in spite of its conviction that the League is necessary and indeed inevitable, in spite of its support of the Democratic ticket in the 1920 campaign, The Times has given its support to many of the policies of President Harding. This does not mean that The Times is always an administration paper. It does mean, however, that the conductors of The Times realize that the President of the United States is the President of the whole people and not of a single party, that his public acts affect the whole people and that it is to the interest of every citizen to get as effective and competent an administration as possible. With the type of partisanship which sees the entrance of the opposition into power as meaning nothing but opportunity for criticism The Times has little sympathy. It preferred Mr. Cox to Mr. Harding; but Mr. Harding having been elected it realized that he was going to be the Chief Magistrate of the United States for the next four years, and that sensible citizens would do well to encourage all the praiseworthy policies which his administration might pursue without stopping to fear that they might bring prestige to the Republican Party.

Whether Republican, Independent or Democratic, The Times has never been able to convince itself that opposition must mean consistent hostility to everything done by the party in power. Its conductors regard the interests of the nation as somewhat more important than the record of any party, and they have been genuinely glad to be able to commend many of the works accomplished or attempted by President Harding and the leading members of his Cabinet. With some of the elements in the Republican Party The Times is entirely out of sympathy, and had representatives of those factions been chosen to direct the executive functions of the government, the paper would no doubt have had occasion to criticize their conduct rather severely; but, considering the record of the administration purely on its merits, the editors of The Times have been pleased to be able to recognize the fact that its performance, in the early months at least, has been meritorious in a rather high degree.

Several changes in the personnel of the paper in recent years may call for special mention. Mr. George McAneny resigned as President of the Board of Aldermen on February 1, 1916, to become executive manager of The Times. His duties were chiefly confined to the study of the newsprint paper situation which gave so much concern to all American papers during the war period and which is The Times's chief item of expenditure. In 1920 The Times spent for print paper $5,963,839.42. In 1897, the first full year under the present management, that item cost only $45,955.63. On January 1, 1918, the Tidewater Paper Company, of Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, with a capacity of 30,000 tons of newsprint per year, was acquired by the New York Times Company in order to insure a supply of paper in New York free from outside interruptions by strikes, weather, etc.

With The Times's paper supply contracted for and assured for the next five years, Mr. McAneny withdrew from the Times organization in March, 1921, and soon afterward was appointed chairman of the Transit Commission.

Mr. Samuel Strauss, well known as one of the liveliest of magazine critics of current affairs, was with The Times as treasurer of the company from 1912 to the end of 1915. Mr. Rollo Ogden, editor-in-chief of The New York Evening Post for many years, came to The Times on May 15, 1920, as associate editor; and Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner of Education of the State of New York, resigned that office and joined The Times staff, also as an associate editor, on January 17, 1921.

Note may be made here of the following members of The Times's staff who died either in its service or after long years with the paper:

EDWARD CARY, for forty-six years an editorial writer and for much of that period associate editor; died May 23, 1917.

THEODORE LAWRENCE PEVERELLY, for forty-three years a member of the business staff; died February 4, 1904.

ARTHUR GREAVES, city editor from 1900 and a reporter for many years before; died October 19, 1915.

CHARLES WELBORNE KNAPP, treasurer of The New York Times Company and formerly publisher of The St. Louis Republic; died January 6, 1916.

EDWARD AUGUSTUS DITHMAR, whose forty years of service as dramatic critic, London correspondent, literary editor and editorial writer, ended with his death on October 16, 1917.

Montgomery Schuyler, for twenty-four years an editorial writer; died July 16, 1914.

JACOB H. THOMPSON, for thirty-seven years with the paper, much of the time as exchange editor; died September 8, 1905.

JOHN HEBARD PAINE, for fourteen years with The Times, the last four years as night city editor; died October 2, 1920.

JOHN NORRIS, for many years business manager, died March 21, 1914.

Barnet Phillips, whose thirty-three years of service included editorial work on the Sunday edition and book reviewing; died April 8, 1905.

LEOPOLD WALLACH, general counsel of The Times from August 18, 1896, to his death on January 25, 1908.

ELBRIDGE G. DUNNELL, Washington correspondent of The Times from 1879 to 1902; died February 3, 1905.

Leonard B. Treharne, on The Times staff for twelve years, most of that time as night city editor; died October 17, 1904.

MAJOR JOHN M. CARSON, in The Times Washington office from 1874 to 1882 and 1902 to 1905, and for several years chief Washington correspondent; died September 29, 1912.

GEORGE BUTLER TAYLOR, for twenty-six years a reporter, died November 2, 1905.

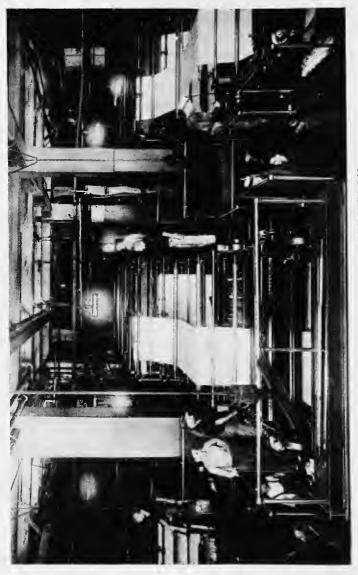

FIELD LYNN HOSMER, forty years in service as reporter and editorial auditor; died January 8, 1914.

GEORGE B. MOYER, for twelve years superintendent of The Times buildings, died December 9, 1915.

As to the news service of The Times there is little to add to what has been written in the last two chapters. It has continued as it was during the war, though perhaps with a somewhat higher degree of efficiency, due to experience. The Peace Conference was covered for The Times by members of the paper's own staff - Richard V. Oulahan, head of the Washington Bureau; Ernest Marshall, head of the London office; Charles A. Selden and Edwin L. Iames, of the Paris office, and Charles H. Grasty of the executive department - and by Gertrude Atherton, until she fell ill and had to return to America. They scored a number of "beats," notably on the occasion of President Wilson's threat to abandon the Peace Conference, but most of the leading American papers scored "beats" during the negotiations. As before, the excellence of The Times was rather in a higher average than in outstanding single achievements. Indeed, it could be said that the war and the Peace Conference both proved the value of the American system of newspaper training. Generally speaking, the best war correspondents and the best political correspondents at the Peace Conference were men who had gone through the ordinary routine of the American reporter, rather than experts who had specialized in war correspondence or international politics all their lives. Most American reporters found that they could learn what they needed about war and international politics; while the sense of news values.

THE FIRST PRESS OF THE TIMES, 1851.

A VIEW OF THE TIMES PRESSROOM, With a Capacity of 360,000 24-Page Papers Per Hour.

and the diligence in getting news, which is developed by the ordinary reportorial training in America, and which, of course, had been very highly developed in the men who were selected for the important assignments of the war and the peace negotiations, cannot be improvised by specialists when they are suddenly faced by extraordinarily keen competition.

Perhaps there should be special mention of the Washington correspondence of The Times, which is probably not only more voluminous, but more impartial, than that of any other paper. The practice of coloring the news to suit editorial policy, which was once too common in the American press, has pretty generally disappeared in recent years except in a minority of papers. But it has tended to survive longest in the Washington correspondence, where there is still, in the case of most newspapers, a tendency to hunt out first of all such news as agrees with the paper's prejudices.

This does not involve suppression of news, nor even distortion. The relativity of truth is a commonplace to any newspaper man, even to one who has never studied epistemology; and, if the phrase is permissible, truth is rather more relative in Washington than anywhere else. Now and then it is possible to make a downright statement; such and such a bill has passed in one of the houses of Congress, or failed to pass; the administration has issued this or that statement; the President has approved, or vetoed, a certain bill. But most of the news that comes out of Washington is necessarily rather vague, for it depends on the assertions of statesmen who are reluctant to be quoted by name, or even by description. This more than anything else is responsible for the sort of fog, the haze of miasmatic exhalations, which hangs over news with a Washington date line. News coming out of Washington is apt to represent not what is so but what might be so under certain contingencies, what may turn out to be so, what some eminent personage says is so, or even what he wants the public to believe is so when it is not.

For an illustration one need go no further back than the various semi-official assertions on high authority of the intentions of the Harding administration about coöperation with Europe, which turned out to be pretty nearly 100 per cent untrue. The explanation is that most of these assertions came from irreconcilable Senators who honestly thought they could speak for the administration and who were accepted by correspondents as speaking for the administration; but who, as a matter of fact, knew less about the real intentions of the administration than the White House doorkeeper.

Obviously, then, the Washington correspondent has a pretty wide field of choice. On almost any question he can get directly opposite opinions—and most "news" from Washington is a matter of opinion—from equally high authority, and from authority which he is not permitted to identify. It is not strange that between two stories of apparently equal merit he is inclined to prefer the one which will be most welcome in the office. Generally speaking, The Times Washington correspondence has been very little open to criticism on this point. No paper supported the League of Nations more vigorously than The Times; its editorials consistently favored the League, and its columns once more, as during the war, became the principal forum for the debates of publicists. Yet it was evident through the entire discussion, to those who read The Times Washington correspondence, that there was little chance of the League finding favor in the Senate. The Times supported Cox in the 1920 Presidential campaign, but its political correspondence made it fairly plain long before the election that Harding was certain to win.

It should be added that The Times, alone of prominent Democratic papers, denounced as false, slanderous and contemptible the "campaign of whispers" against Mr. Harding during the last weeks of the campaign.

The year 1919 gave The Times, always so keenly interested in aviation, a chance to cover very fully the news of the first flights across the Atlantic. Its interest in wireless telegraphy had already been vindicated, and at present all newspapers are enjoying wireless service which might have been somewhat longer delayed if The Times had not been so fully convinced of the possibilities of this art a decade ago. The end of the war brought, of course, an increase in the amount of space devoted to local news, which had been somewhat reduced in the days when the dispatches from the battle-fronts were of supreme importance; as well as a great expansion in The Times sporting department, responding to the great increase of interest in sports which followed the coming of peace.

The Times was the only paper in the United States, or in the world, which printed the full text of the draft of the peace treaty. As will be remembered, the document was given to Senator Borah on June 9, 1919, by a correspondent of The Chicago Tribune, and by vote of the Senate was spread upon the Congressional Record. That night the Washington correspondents of The Times got proof sheets from the government printers as fast as the copy was set up, and dispatched the text to New York on twenty-four telegraph and telephone wires obtained for the occasion. On the morning of June 10 The Times had all of it—sixty-two columns, occupying most of the first eight pages of the second section of a forty-page paper.

The news service of The Times today is pretty well known to several hundred thousand readers who prefer The Times to any other paper. If anything further is to be said about its quality it may best be said by the mention of one or two instances of The Times's methods and their results. During the political conventions of 1920 The Times pretty regularly had more news and more reliable news than the other papers, and had it first. These conventions were covered by a staff of nine men, all regular employés of the paper. The Times saw no need for hiring renowned experts, humorists, or fiction writers to supplement the work of its own men; and if any of its readers missed these features they did not say so.

The Democratic National Convention at San Francisco offered some technical problems of exceptional difficulty. Because San Francisco is 3000 miles west of New York, and because New York saves daylight while San Francisco does not, San Francisco time is four hours earlier than that of New York. That meant that the first edition of most New York morning papers was going to press at a little past midnight, only a few minutes after the night sessions of the Democratic Convention were beginning in San Francisco. Despite this fact, The Times had some news from the beginning of the night sessions in its first edition on every night of the convention, and its second edition, coming off the presses shortly before 2 o'clock, had about as much news as other papers were able to get on the streets at daylight.

Another difficulty in getting the news out of San Francisco was due, or rather seemed likely to be due. to the limited telegraphic facilities. Even the highest officials of the Western Union and the Postal did not realize, in advance, just how much their local organizations were going to be able to accomplish. As it turned out, the Western Union wire arrangements were more than sufficient to handle all the news of the convention: but this was not known beforehand. As a matter of precaution The Times, which was unable to obtain the lease of direct wires into its office from the telegraph companies, finally made a roundabout connection through Canada. A telephone wire was leased for night service from San Francisco to Vancouver and another from New York to Mon-Between these two cities connection was established by a lease of a Canadian Pacific railroad telegraph wire, and the whole circuit was operated by telegraph with a "relay" at Vancouver - operated so well that news dictated to a telegraph operator in the convention hall at San Francisco was in The Times office in New York within two minutes.

The long-distance telephone was used every night during the convention, and was responsible for the publication in the first edition, on the final night, of news which foreshadowed Palmer's withdrawal a little later in the evening.

All these are things such as all papers do, now and then, and the only distinction of The Times is that it does them more regularly, more smoothly and, on the whole, with more success. As a final instance of the operation of The Times news service today may be mentioned the handling of the news of the German reparations proposals of April 26 last — proposals which, it will be remembered, were sent to the United States Government in the vain hope of obtaining American mediation in some form, and which embodied the last German effort at compromise before the surrender to the allied demands, which took place a few days later.

The American declaration that all previous German offers were unsatisfactory reached the German Cabinet at 11 A.M. on April 26—that is, 5 A.M. New York time. It was known that the answer would be prompt; that, as a matter of form, it would be sent to the American government; but that, since Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes would not even transmit to the allied governments any proposal which those governments were likely to receive with disfavor, there would be informal inquiries, as soon as it was received, to find out if it were acceptable. If not, it would wither and die in a Washington pigeonhole, so far as official transmission was concerned.

The German note came to Washington on the evening of Wednesday, April 26, and a vague and general intimation as to its contents was given out to all the correspondents there. A summary of the note was also given to The Associated Press in Berlin, and on the morning of Thursday, April 27, that was all that the other New York Papers had about the German offer.

But The Times realized that the text of the note might be available not only in Berlin, where it was written, and in Washington, where it was received, but also in London and Paris, where the governments would be informally acquainted with its text before the note was officially transmitted. Consequently The Times correspondents in Washington, London, Paris and Berlin were all instructed to try to get the note verbatim. In Washington and Berlin only inadequate summaries were obtainable; the summary given out by the German government was in one or two points seriously misrepresentative and tended to represent the offer as larger than it actually was.

But The Times correspondents both in London and in Paris obtained and cabled the full text of the note on Wednesday night, the Paris copy arriving first, but only ten minutes ahead of that from London. The Times alone of New York papers published it in full on Thursday morning. The Times alone of New York papers published the fact that the French government had officially refused to consider the offer and had notified Secretary Hughes of its decision to this effect. Two other papers in New York had Paris dispatches predicting, on the basis of Premier Briand's speech in the Chamber that afternoon, that the French Government would reject the note; the others had not even that much. The Times was also the only New York paper which printed on Thursday morning the comments of the Paris press in their issues of the same day — comments, of course, which could be transmitted only because of the five-hour difference in time, but which no other New York paper received in time for publication.

Thus on one of the most important pieces of world news in the year 1921 The Times alone, except for the papers which purchase The Times's news service for publication in other cities, published the contents of the German proposal and the fact of the French refusal to consider it. An achievement of this sort tells a good deal more about the quality of a paper than the exclusive publication of a single story acquired by the wide acquaintance of some member of its staff. It is a feat which cannot be performed on the spur of the moment; it implies an intricate and highly trained organization. That organization is the chief distinction of The Times today.

The story of the modern Times has been told—inadequately and imperfectly, but as fully and impartially as it can be told by its own family. In those twenty-five years The Times has gone further and grown faster than even the men who controlled it foresaw, and its growth is not yet ended. There is room for improvement, and the men who get it out every day are constantly trying to improve it; there wer of the cowardice and imbeditty

Ohe New York Gimes.

VOL. LXIX...No. 22,786

MEW TORK, SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 1803.

Upon a platform that has produce energal dissatisfaction, the Chicago PES NOMINATION OF BARDING convention presents A candidate whose mishment and dismay by the party

10W THE CONVENTION DID IT editician of the second class. He has semination will be received with an shore spiffrages he invites. Watter mortes of Punkers, he rose to a Delegates. Had World errer beah a leader of men or A sporthate office by favor of " Boss " B. HARDING Is a very respectable Ohio prector of policies. For years a

Early That Leaders Dox of Cincinnati. Beaten by Juneon Lanox in the contest for the Gover-Merably in 1910, he has never shown mdependent strength in his own State in 1914, having a majority of a little RECESS HASTENED CHANGE such strength as he now derives Two Ballots Taken After Re-Were for Harding. spre than 100,000 ever his Democratic perpetitor: and outside of Obio he has from his place at the head of the Re-

Man's Nomination. secord at Wathington has been faint

The bed and individual to be the beauty of the beauty of the beauty Big Block of New York Votes shediently followed Mr. Longs in the

Also Helped to Decida the Struggle.

stitual stature, is the fine and perfect vasion on its lifth day, which reached 1 President who magnitudes down to his preside of the Republican National Con-

REPUBLICAN NOMINEE FOR PRESIDENT

COOLIDGE CHOSEN FOR VICE PRESIDENT

4 NAMED FOR SECOND PLACE But Tired Delegates Turn To Coolidge and First Ballot Is Decisive.

LENROOT NEXT IN FAVOR

Votee Cast Also for Johnson, Allen, Anderson, Pritchard DELEGATES EAGER TO LEAVE Adjourned at 7:30 P. M., Many

Republican Cenvention tonight by an overwhelming voit in the first hallot. The nomination was immediately made nated for the Vice Presidency by the CHICAGO, June 12,--Governor Calvit Special to The Now Fork Plates. Roll Call Was Ended.

As seen as the Presidential nomination hed been made, the call for Vice Frasi-dential nominations was made by Chair-

fused to Yield at That Time-GOVERNOR CALVIN COOLIDGE OF MASSACHUSETTS

realing. Calvin Coolidge, Governor of G. Rarding of Marton, Ohio, was nominated for President of the United States by the Republican Party repre-CHICAGO: June 12.-Senator Warre

ON THE TENTH BALLOT AT CHICAGO: The Rew Burk Times Harbins HARDING NOMINATED FOR PRESIDENT

Deal for Harding, Goes ARRANGED DURING RECESS farough When Lowden When the New York Delegates Swing to Him the Shout-

316 GAIN ON NINTH BALLOT

JRGED AT MIGHT COUNCILS

But Laaders in the Raco Re-

Later, the Break Came. Special to file New Work Truca

The membrane is the state of th

meet by called aid mad doug haves stands	residente es camptoca una capat partiri-	- 	ø,	Legistic the audience.			ing-and the friending began frame-
Seato of that nomination. Boust was of the dashlock summanding and truewlent because by effects of G. O	ditament. And all the	Delivered 68 to Hardhip on Last But Intimates Ho. May Have	But intimates He' May Have k	by A. T. Hort, National Combitteeman	Proud to Receive "This Great Deugherty, His Campaign Man-	Deugherty, His Campaign Man-	Sanator Harding's nomination was the
have that he had to dead with a group as if did ady	modern and nowe at	Ballet: Acting with Senate	Semething to Say Today	York had ex-Gebernet Matrick for	Honor from the Repub-	ager, Said Fifteen Tired Mon	not begin to clear until just evening
*Helens. If Mapublican Indepublic And the	by the line, wet, were men ballob	Leaders	on Combination	The Chaltenan of the Ocean delega-	lioan Perty."	Would Put Him Dver.	the convention had adjuncted until this not fulled into the hands of piguities said	" the tide rightly was cumulat strang.			vin coolings of Managerhopers, and the			morning. Your additional ballots in the
the chief men at Chicago would have mil	make very sure.			sention presented a scene of disorder	SESTIMATE ACCORDED OF ACCOUNTS AND MARKET SESTI	CCUATE "INUTA" MADE DEAL	had developed Marding evengith but dan- eral Leginard Wood and Covernor Frank
All tunen the lexue of the Learn's they	- Starte Barty.	TO REMAINED UNBOSSED	REMAINED UNBOSSED THANKS HIS SUPPORTERS	while various delegations were shokever- ing to make theoreteen hinted to second	CUULIQUE ACCELIS CENCE	SEARIE JUNIA MADE DEAL	O. Lowdon hed remained in ton load. A
	The and fenty reviving Marting borns at the morning season. From		1	the nomination. Assessment of the deventor. The demonstration for its Governor. The circles in dependent of the name of the circles in the name of the na			during that short period combinations
	the cod it was a pro-	Organization Man Assert That	Sava There is No Rancor and	of Colonel henry J. Anderson of Virginia tor the post, in the bage that the	Taff, Hughes, Hoover and		were formed that made alerding's month
Zones floady throwing off all distributed from	in graultode at getting	They Alone Prevented	That Their Hands Are Clean	Republicans would turn to the Bouth for	. Others Congratulate Head-	hind Scenes and Blocked Move	The real stampeds of delegates :>
and standing out as the open for of no	mean element	Wood's Nomination.	Boreh Also Refuses Comment.	The most efficient to compare the warm	of Ticket.	to Lat Wood Balster Forces,	shandoning his toleration to address the the Coverant of the Lague of Na. Hi	hone of the stampeds tricks of time- honored reliability worked this time. The			them, and the nomination for the Vice	-		neurogram that his delegates were :-
What has befollen the Republican rate	and the delegates to their sepa-	Special to The New York Times,	Special to The New York Times.	of a thrill. Thoma who, attempted to phake seconding addresses received stant	Special to The New York Limes.	Openiof to The New York Times.	leased from their pledges to him intereging, eathwas thilling, as the Party of the parly days, the party of par-	para themselves for the floats,	CHICAGO, June 12. + The delegates	CHICAGO, June L. Benator Illram d	delegates wanted most of all was to get away. In fact, many left the hell ladues	Ocheral Wood and Gaverner Lowden	thre after Republican National Conveg-	open greenedings to the convention was.
ME toors purposes or of forty and	tree that Senator Marding was to be	pendence until the last bare of reday's		the relicuit on the construction was com-	rooms adiology t	tion merts some fifteen men, bleary	of the convention have nathing, had thirty years ago, when it could still age	ement was set in motion. The gal-	ronvation session, but than, when orders	of Schater	Coolidge had a Tonavary for led vice	during the tient balloting foldsy. They	profusely with the excessive heat, will	ing sandidate for President was ar-
prefess to have them; and flad be. beri	los, in which were many of Mayor Warn Wale Thompson's supporting.	were given by the traders of the organi-	conding to his close friends and auso-	Delibility began. And the angle of the state	Annea. The result of sach ballet was	alt down in partuaton around a big table.	ranged in conference is hold resem- The predicted made in Washington
Whore are its lenders that can be about	to were Johnson men out of antago-	and voted for Harding. Their choice	nomined.	and he also got a heavy vote to the	delivered to the	I will be with them and will progent	remain ago that the denominan would
Compared to Mounta, Salvano, Hale, ebe	bugh to lead themselves to the usel of	tay chewhere, but they followed in-	the neon recess of the convention by "	When Wisconsin was passed ligans two voice for Learned and twenty-four for	association that gave left. Blatding the	and before we get through they will	would necessitate a combination ar-
PLATE of Connecticut, Otiver P. Mon. form	formishing an appropriate setting for the drame. But with all the stage manage-	the organization tenders assign, yet they	emissaries from the Bugding camp with	Idae gained a lead or reputily that the	thrill of his life. It	put, bin over."	party's deminating spirite was fulfilled soon, bulleting, mindre, Contraction and ment	ent and all the willingness of the	delegates had they been pocuratery.	deat. He seld to have turned down	When it became obvious that Coulder	When the name was given to the first	here, was made by Marry K. Daugharty,	to the fetter, the the party councils? And, if the bee	at ed its ability when the awnehing of	After Harding's nomination was assured these delegates we're not asked to engine	that he was after the Presidency, not	The vote was:	lican Party for President he did	compaign manager for Schniter Warren	Johnson's strangth in the caprention.
question he not too unfeeling, where the	the night ballot was being tailted, that	the engrittles. Attors the urboased deferator who	the Vice Presidency. Mis remarks, how-	Vote for Vice President.	lear his equapitative. He said he was	O. Harding, Ohlo. shortly before the Presidential primaries were held to that	never very potent, and begun to disin-bays? Party control, nasreleed by a and	d later, when the tenth ended the tiny	stood fut on the final ballet were aix	will support Senator Barding.	A L C N	Later he said:	State, Daugherty afterward entered the	ence of the understanding that Hardton group of Seunters, is divided between for	remaining apeck of supprise, the per-	Wood men. Robert in Bacon of the First District, Henry L. Stingen of the	npmination feet been offered to Mr.	iron rite sha ndr den den colt	would be to receive this great hoom	primaries as a candidate for defaute	ed by the State Breats Brougs. All alone it
Longs on the one hand and Boaks	Victory Oatbabet Smen Over.	Stateenth District, Occupal Henry Payne,	Johnson was, in line with the report,	hare rand	from the Republican Farty I am not unmindful of the obligations and respon-	Marding He was besten but the utter-	had been taken for granted that when Johnson may that he could not be adm-
thum, none of their accomplices to	Parhaga two-thirds of the deterates got	Twenty-second Matrict, and Lansing O.	done plank, that he (Johnson) could		athinine that come with it.	in his own State to oppose him in where	lagged he prough not. his emporture to
Barty degradation, would have come on	on rhairs. A few women waved damp	sixth District. They veted for Wood	have about anything he wanted in the A	Arizona de de la	Manager Frequency pathons man-	of unfolding events at the national	took part fast night, however, he falled
Within halling distance of the forement has	handkerchicfe in a valient effort to add the erhodes frining touch to the first	threughout and refused th yield to the wishes of Barnes. Vederworth and the	President, His friends said tonight that A	California, 25 15	ager for Banatar Harding, tioned the	been full of prophetic meaning.	to intracts that he was willing to abun- don his residiesty, and sig of efect was national convention to which they had	other tenders.	Senitor, Rarding's namination tomer-	Colorado 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12 12	On behalf of the Republicans of	in the Collegum the morning gailed an	made to persuade him
efplen, they have only hatred of Mr. D	But theen was no frenzy, no bat.	LaOdardia, President of the New Tork	When Johnse	Northwest of the second	Onto, and especially on becalf of game, for Habding, his family and friends, I	the usual presume or a manage with the	greggier ptema. to have been brought
Warson and a revening hunger for am	name, and so just theretor that three	Board of Alfermon, His choice pras-	"Battallon of Death" at his head in	Idaho	daries to express th Republican of the	business of nominating a cardidate for the President of the United States and	MORE OF SOME OUTER ADJUNE TO: the Connada for Vice Pred-	inutes after the nomination was sur- unced those in their feet, including	Defen delegator why were not relied	he was greeted with For He's a Jolly in	Iodiana 26 14 12 3 44 1	graditeds for the confidence expressed	preparing to go back home. That pic-	Presidential honor. It is the no anderstand-
deat really edines by comparison with virt	rtuelly every one in the specialors	uper to suppert Harding were two who	Good Pellow The growd seng lightly K	Kentucky. 20 1 24 20 1	in this wonderful man by nomicaling for he he candidate of the party for	enlockers as one fraught with unitarial	equed, that he was not sertained with the head of the ticket. He at land to her	Herbank	favored Buller-Miss Kniherins Bras- mer, alteriate from Buller's district,	eon gald: There are no limits to be shed. There is	Maline 32 32	the Presidenty.	of this final day of Republican Conver-	as other public quasions. So Johnson the party and to the nation. When Los	Lodge had elected to pound once with	and Wittham Bries Thompson, one of	is no rancer. We come out of this light a	Michigan, 35 35	sidersible, reluctante becausa Senator	you was really made owner the scene	Kent brom.
the police force of Boston went on his	his combergons gared, which looked to	Continued on Fage Tires.	Cantaged on Pase Thras.	Minnesota 24 24 Ninstandon 12 12	powered organisation employed for the	gested in Druguerty's electron.	Schaigt Bornh amered the conference of the schainten
Mente as the menter to the author got	potato magher, the Nall yould have been	Inuden Defends Release of Delanater	Ten of Delameter.	Mandana 9	Presidency. Our plan, as is now woll known, was tracted out, wheeled we	fight was looked upon as a ferforn hope	and asked them to consider Knoz. Mo safety with murning and determination,	Assessed Lowden by Mistabe.	Hant Can Wood Won	Host Sam Wood World Ham W. Other	Normal of State of St	enducted rather a modest campaign	observer at the convention. In lact, tto	Johnson. Borat answered that he acted and the nation rang with praise of T	There was just one tauch of humor-	House the state of	in time 17 on Other wise	M. Jeney, 26 25 2 2 1.	same of the country without too much	to the vary moment the convention tops it a adjournment test night his prosperio	objections to bir. Knox as a Presiin to be said acainst the character of did	In't see it in that way. In announc-	CHICAGO, Jane 12-Fear of a dead-	CHICAGO, June 12Post of a dead-; publicen Party has not had such an on-	N. Car line 22 P. 4. 7	prefettion. The have throughout the removier	mane not regarded as case. As recently on last right Senate Hardles bimest	dential candidate were raised. He was wither candidate. They are irrepreach-	I that Sension Marcing had the negative majority the Secretary insiderity the	lock which he believed would prove	portunity for service in half a century.	Onto Date of 10 a 10 a 10 c	hod the fighter respect to opposition candidates and for their ashborters. At	could not have entertained much hope	in good numily. He had voted numined for the lack of arbitraries? for the the	used the name of Low-ten instead of	delrimental to his party extined Gover-	- 4	Oregon 10 10 10	so time have we made any attacks upon	utes before midalpht he filed with the	He was from a Glate that did not need riesmess of the candidate for Brai	was a how of protest and very mani-	after convention floor at teday's session, according to a statement made by him	of an many time particule men and in women I aball never come to be grate-	The Carting 19 10	porters, and Bennior Harding will re-	the necessary papers to qualify him as	denjial Uchet to keep it in the Repub-place, or for the manner in which his the	e mistake was fung.	maight, Governor Lowdon and	P1.4	Tennesser 20 20	and woman in the country who desires	a candidate for re-election to his pres-	then Party. And the Kink Boom then will be felt and said everywhere that nor	Senator Lodge made the former an-	I received a plurality of all voles cast.	terest of porty harmany,"	Vermoni a s	to vote the Republican ticket. The nicket will be elected overwhelmingly	412	Thought Out of the Mace.
The Democrate at San Francisco have been	become the party choice in a tired voice	It was expressible to me that the dele-	National Committeeman from Kentucky	Whington M. 7 7	In November.	The conference at which atten were	Harding pained the Fresidaniist nomi- named wilden (wenty-four hours after,
Received from their opponents at class	sette and dark-riged cyce. It didn't	delay. Fouring a protracted deadlock,	tonight. Hert was a prime tonice in	Wiscontin, 18	With his accordence emphicity of	taken to brukk the deadlock by steering	he was tecked upon as out of the pice.
	Jin that the grai, genuine Harding men	mental to the interests of the country. I	ing and mat Kentucky's 78 for the	Allera C. to a second	manner Senator Harding received the	begun soon after it flotshed its big day's	tion balloting peaterday and last before into of frant the aembiance of a great	vised them to use their best judgment be	Asked if he believed Lowden had I	Philippines 2 2	fifth floor of the Hobel La Salle, in a	genera divided thus several amail groups,	Aled at Columbus entering bim as a
The Carleson Sprace south to ten of the oc-	Accepted McCorrados of Hillands then	to when they should support. I have	reached the height of his etrength on I	Porto Suco 2 2	were a number of eld friends, including	other by menders interciping, in two	States Strate.
March 20 Mars Cartered Inventor Co. ster.	strong to a point of strategic advantage	acter of the successful condidate, shall appreciate him with all hyarithms and be-	"It is my judgment that Wood would	Abrent California & Conoccution 1.	Will H. Haye, Just re-elected Chairman of the Republican National Committee.	the Congress Hotels	Three outputs had been prepared in ad-
BAN DEPARTMENT OF THE PARTY OF	Confidence of the party of the	lies o the ticket will be elected. The Be-	stayed in the fight."	Not roung—Hawali 2.	The Banator made it plant that he re-	Continued on Page Three.	lumbus to whem Senator Marding gave worm Anna water trans trans the control	The state of the state of the state of	WHITE COLLECTION SPAINS OF VA.	PAIN'S EIGEN DRAW FOR THE FOURTH.	The Minole deligation moved that	alfact the new responsibilities which	BIX (1) BYLLLAND IN CALL OF STREET	and Lit. These friends, probably ad-
Lauri to the flora. Lairs bod, N. J Afre, rened to skape-	such to staye-pists enter-advi-	man pirepert. Bookings Plant. Advi.	The Park Plant, M. X-adra	Casilaced on Page Theology	Confidence on Fador Four is room for still greater increase in prosperity and influence.

No more than anything else on earth will American journalism ever again be the same as before 1914. What the opportunities and demands of the future will be no newspaper man can see very clearly, though some of them think they can see after a fashion; but it is safe to say that they will require a higher standard of merit from all newspapers than that which was sufficient from 1865 to 1914. It will probably be impossible for American newspapers of the future to achieve greatness, or even much notoriety, by mere vigorous expression of partisan political views. No New York paper, at least, will ever again become great and prosperous by excellence merely in local news. Newspapers of the future must give the news, and the news of the world. They must combine in proper proportion the covering of the news in their home town, as they have learned that art in the last half century, with the presentation of the news from every continent as some of them have learned to present it since 1914.

Modern science has made news-gathering more difficult in the sense that it has broadened immeasurably the possibilities of getting news and thus enabled the most enterprising newspapers to set a very high standard for their competitors. The example given above will suggest that when a news story may be covered simultaneously by cable, wireless or telegraph, in London, Paris, Berlin and Washington, the paper which expects to cover it merely by a telegram from the Washington office is sometimes going to be left behind. A good newspaper of today needs a larger, more intricate, more efficient and more expensive organization than the best editors of twenty years ago could have imagined.

It is possible that the progress of invention will make competition still keener in another direction. Last year, during the Republican Convention at Chicago, The Times sent its city edition out by airplane mail and delivered it at Chicago in the course of the afternoon. Before many years have gone this may be a matter of course; and thus for the first time it may be possible to have in America something approaching a really national newspaper. There can never be national newspapers in this country as in France and England, because of the limitations our vast distances impose upon delivery; but when New York papers are delivered everywhere east of the Mississippi on the day of publication, as they certainly will be within a decade or so, they will have an opportunity for taking on a good deal more of a national character than they have ever had in the past.

Undoubtedly The New York Times today approaches the character of a national newspaper more nearly than any other in America. It does so, of course, because of its copious presentation of general news, national and international, which is made possible by the fact that The Times is fortunate enough to have in the city where it is published a large clientele which will be interested in this news. One of the obstacles in the way of establishing a sort of generalized national newspaper such as is sometimes talked of by doctrinaires is the fact that every newspaper has to be printed and published somewhere; that the difficulties of distribution make it inevitable that a very large proportion of its reading public will be local; and that most people want to find in their paper a good deal of news about the town in which they live. The Times attempts to cover the local news as adequately as its competitors, but it is fortunate in being the favorite with that part of the New York reading public which is also keenly interested in the news of the world. It is, accordingly, able to devote a great deal more of its space to the presentation in extenso of news of general interest, and consequently has a larger circulation outside the metropolitan district than any other New York paper. It is widely read in Washington; and in California it probably has a larger circulation than all other New York papers combined.

It is only a guess, but probably a safe guess, that The Times is also more generally read over the world than any other American paper. It has mail subscribers in the Aland Islands, in Mauritius, and all over the South Seas; in almost every state or colony of Africa; in Sivas of Anatolia, in Tarsus of Cilicia, in Bagdad and in Bandar Abbas. And by no means all of its Asiatic subscribers are wandering Americans; even outside of Japan and China, a good many of them are Asiatics who find something of interest in The New York Times.

The newspaper business in the future will not be a game for pikers. The Times today has some 1800 employés; its daily pay roll exceeds $10,000; it uses a daily average of nearly 200 tons of paper. The cost of news-getting may be surmised from the fact that some $25,000 was spent by The Times in covering the two national conventions of 1920. It would be rather hazardous to assert that nobody could come into the New York newspaper field today on a "shoestring," as Mr. Ochs did in 1896, and succeed—hazardous, because even in 1896 all the experts said that he could not rehabilitate The Times without spending millions of dollars. But at least it seems quite unlikely that anything like this could be done now.

In the past twenty-five years five New York papers have died. The Advertiser, The Mercury, The News and The Press have all disappeared. Neither The Herald nor The Sun has disappeared in name, but at any rate there is only one morning paper where both The Herald and The Sun grew before. Of the papers which were in existence in 1896 and are still appearing today some have survived because they have made money, and some because they are owned by wealthy men who can stand the loss. And it is significant that the only new daily paper which has been established in New York in the past twenty-five years — a paper, it should be observed, which is of a somewhat specialized character, predominantly a "picture paper," and can be produced much more cheaply than a daily of the ordinary type - is owned by the wealthy corporation which publishes The Chicago Tribune, and which could not only supply The Daily News with its telegraph and cable news and its features without added cost, but could put up the money to keep it going till it got on its feet.

The increased cost of production has reduced the number of papers in most of the other cities of the country as well as in New York. It takes money not only to start a paper but to keep it going if it does not pay its way - more money than was needed twenty-five years ago. The natural result is concentration, the absorption of failing papers by their more prosperous competitors. That perhaps may not be altogether in the public interest, especially in a city of secondary rank which used to support two or three morning papers and now has only one. Even Chicago has now only two morning newspapers in the English language. It is conceivable that in a city of two and three quarter million people there are a good many readers who are not wholly satisfied with either of those papers, but to start another in successful competition would require both unusual ability and a great deal of money.

New daily papers, unless supported by men who are quite willing to go on throwing millions into them until they get on their feet in competition with established papers whose annual income already runs into the millions, are more likely to renounce all hope of competing with those already established in the covering of general news, and restrict themselves to particular interests. Even that will imply some serious disadvantages; for example, with two or three such publications competing with newspapers of the more usual type there is bound to be a good deal of waste in advertising. With certain newspapers confining their energies to only a part of the field, advertisers will be in doubt just how to reach the public they want, and a good deal more of their money will be required. In the opinion of the management of The Times, advertising which does not bring results is disadvantageous not only for the advertiser, but for the newspaper; and the most satisfactory situation for both is that in which the actual situation of every newspaper both as to quantity and quality of circulation is well known.

These dangers may not be imminent, in view of the high cost of establishing a newspaper of any kind in a large city; but in somewhat modified form evils of this general character exist in present-day advertising. In the opinion of the publisher of The Times the most widespread defects of advertising today are lost motion and low visibility; and it may be in order to quote some of his thoughts on this subject delivered to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in their convention at Philadelphia on June 26, 1916:

It may startle you if I say that I doubt if there is any business in the world in which there is so much waste of time, money, and energy as in advertising and its correlative instrumentalities. It may be rank heresy for me to say this, yet I affirm that more than 50 per cent of the money spent in advertising is squandered, and is a sheer waste of printer's ink, because little thought and less intelligence are applied, and ordinary common sense is entirely lacking; too frequently the dishonesty stamped on its face is about all the intelligent reader discerns.

The first essential of successful advertising is something to advertise; the next, to know how to advertise, and when and where. Too many advertisers have naught to advertise save their impotence and their folly. Too often the impelling reason is vanity—to see their names in print—and the greatest damage results when business prudence is dethroned and the advertising is done for ulterior reasons, either to favor some individual or to promote some sinister purpose. But it is not of that kind of wastage I wish to speak, for we have no interest in that sort of advertiser. I have in mind some well-intentioned advertisers' lost motion and consequently low visibility.

I say some advertisers — though I should say many advertisers. To my mind the worst evil is the thoughtless and careless method in buying advertising space. If the advertiser wishes to build a house or a factory he investigates and informs himself: employs an architect; usually invites proposals and awards the construction to a responsible builder. When he buys his supplies he studies the markets; he informs himself; he engages efficient assistants. To sell his goods or products, he concentrates all his faculties to study the trade and meet competition. But when comes to advertising, his business judgment seems atrophied; his conceit predominates; his prejudices have full sway; favoritism and personal feelings are potent influences. The care and scrutiny he exercises in all other branches are woefully lacking in his advertising department. The attitude assumed toward the publication favored — I use the word favored advisedly is one of benevolence.

Let me illustrate the advertiser's lost motion by an example. He decides to advertise. He consults various agencies; he too often selects the cheapest—lost motion. A list of publications is selected; too often the controlling factors are extra commission or rebate, personal friendship, low rates—lost motion. In the preparation of copy: little time and poor talent employed—lost motion. Finally, cheap papier-maché impressions of the advertisement are sent to the publications instead of good electrotypes, resulting in bad printing—lost motion, and certainly low visibility, if any visibility at all.

There are few acts of advertisers more stupid than to give time and thought to the preparation of copy, to fuss and fume with artists and compositors for an effective display, pay large sums for space, and then, to save a few pennies or a little time, mar the whole effect by supplying the publication a matrix from which to make a stereotype plate. You often see evidence of that kind of advertising shortsightedness, for it stands out like a sore thumb.

Now, about lost motion and low visibility by the advertising agent. The most glaring fault is when the agent uses his credit and standing beyond his personal resources and speculates in the result of his client's business. That's low visibility, for if he would look beyond his nose he would discover breakers ahead and about them frightful wreckage of some of the stoutest ships, even when steered by the ablest mariners. It is the exception that proves the rule if an advertising agent, departing from his legitimate business, avoids disaster.

An agent mars his reputation as a safe adviser and counselor when, for the small

A VIEW OF THE TIMES ROTOGRAVURE PRESSROOM, Which Prints About 2,000,000 Rotogravure Supplements Per Week

THE AUTOMOBILE TRUCKS
Which Hauled More Than 50,000 Tons of Paper to The Times During the Year 1920.

immediate profit in sight, he takes the business of an advertiser who has nothing to advertise except, perhaps, a bad name; or one whose advertising a tyro in the business should know would bring no results. Here's where truth should prevail, and the proposed advertiser warned against wasting his money.

"I only handle advertising which my expert knowledge and experience cause me to believe will justify the expenditure." What a drawing card that would be for an agent if he could succeed in making those interested know its truth.

Now, as to the publisher—the third party to the transaction. How about his lost motion and low visibility? I cannot even begin to catalogue his delinquencies under that head; it would consume too much time. But this I will say, that there is no other business in which there is so much lost motion and low visibility as in the publishing business. The wastage is frightful, appalling, and disheartening to those who have the temerity to acquaint themselves with the facts.

I refer especially to newspaper publishers, and it is of their bad practices I shall say a few words, for I cannot trust myself to unloose my pent-up feelings on that subject, in fear lest it largely partake of self-condemnation.

In the matter of advertising rates there seems to be only one established rule, viz., "All the traffic will bear." There seems to be no standard, no basis from which to begin, and consequently rates are altogether arbitrary. Common sense and ordinary rules of logic play little part. Rates are fixed in the easiest way; that is, along the line of least resistance. Is it any wonder that the advertiser is disquieted and not trustful when he is asked to sail the uncharted seas?

The besetting sin is low rates. If you wish to see intelligent advertising, effective advertising, advertising that attracts the reader, where there is the least lost motion in space and words, you will find it in the publications maintaining what the advertiser considers high rates; and, on the other hand, the thoughtless, worthless advertising predominates where the rates are low.

I am not comparing largely circulated publications with those of small circulation. I have in mind publications of relatively the same circulation. When rates, in a desirable medium, are what the advertiser thinks comparatively high, he must consider quality, and nine times out of ten the quality or character of the circulation is the deciding factor. Cheap rates destroy more advertising than they create, for they encourage useless and profitless advertising.

I have a theory that the basic rate should be one cent a line per thousand circulation, in a publication where the advertising columns are given the consideration to which they are entitled, and the advertising placed to the best advantage for results with regard to the publication's good reputation and the reader's interest. There may be less advertising space in the publication, but what there is would be better done and more effective. I am discussing advertising in its broadest aspect; cases in which there is something to advertise and advertising space is purchased with a view to the result of its direct appeal.

THE TIMES TODAY

I wish to make clearer what I have just said regarding the placing of advertising with reference to the publication's good reputation and the reader's interest. I mean the advertisement should not be disguised; the reader should recognize it as an advertisement; no sailing under false colors. Advertising that cannot pay one cent a line per thousand circulation is hardly worth doing.

Newspapers have a variety of rates, usually the highest for the business that naturally comes to them, and the lowest for such as prefer another medium; not infrequently this discrimination is against the interests of the best clients.

The ideal newspaper advertising rate is a flat rate—one rate for all kinds of advertising; no time or space discount; a space limitation and extra charge for permissible exceptions and preferences.

There is no good excuse for reducing the rate because the advertisement has news value, for the greater the news value the stronger the justification for remunerative rates.

A word with reference to the belief in some quarters that the advertiser bears too great a proportion of the expense of publication. This creates the popular delusion of an unequal division of the expense between advertisers and readers. An established newspaper is entitled to fix its advertising rates so that its net receipts from circulation may be left on the credit side of the profit and loss account. To arrive at net receipts, I would deduct from the gross the cost of promotion, distribution, and other expenses incidental to circulation. I affirm this on the principle that the advertiser wishes to encourage the widest distribution, for without impairing its merits the less costly the publication the larger its circulation, hence the more valuable and less costly the advertising; so, the less the reader pays, the less the advertising costs, and if circulation augments profits the publisher is rewarded for stimulating it. To assert that therefore the newspaper is solely or dangerously dependent on the advertiser is to declare that advertising has no value, that advertisers have no intelligence, and that the publisher does not know independence when he enjoys it. It is an axiom in newspaper publishing - "more readers, more independence of the influence of advertisers; fewer readers and more dependence on advertisers." It may seem like a contradiction (yet it is the truth) to assert: the greater the number of advertisers, the less influence they are individually able to exercise with the publisher.

A lot of nonsense is circulated about the advertiser's control of the newspaper. A newspaper improperly controlled by an advertiser is the exception that proves the rule.

There are some compensations for those disadvantages which modern conditions have brought. The high cost of establishing a newspaper or of conducting an unsuccessful newspaper makes it rather unlikely that in the future papers will be maintained, as they have sometimes been in the past, for ulterior reasons — that is, with some other purpose than the presentation of the news. Financial or political interests are not likely to buy papers to support their views if they are going to have to spend millions on this type of publicity — a type which is apt to be unremunerative, since a paper subservient to external interests is usually very soon recognized for what it is, and loses all standing in consequence. Nor will it be so easy in the future as it has been in the past for wealthy men to buy newspapers as playthings.

THE TIMES TODAY

The larger scale of present-day journalism has some other advantages. It has pretty nearly removed some of the temptations, such as subservience to advertisers or to political subsidies, which were constantly present with the publisher of past years. The perils of journalism today are those of most other human activities — slackness, routine, over-confidence, shortsightedness. They are most serious, perhaps, on the most successful papers, where the temptation to ride on a great reputation is most seductive. If American newspaper history teaches anything, it teaches that riding on a reputation is the surest road to ruin. Every paper in New York can read that in its own record.

For these consolations, such as they are, all newspaper men who take their business seriously should be thankful. In a sense, perhaps, the newspaper business is a public utility, but it differs from other public utilities in that competition is essential to its usefulness. Theoretically, there can be too much competition in the newspaper field, but there is not likely to be in the next few decades. And it is a bad thing for any business to become so expensive that only a rich man can even dream of coming into it and shaking it up, for experience has shown that men who have acquired wealth in other occupations rarely provide very formidable competition when they go into the newspaper business; and, like all other businesses, it needs shaking up now and then. In the larger cities at least the newspaper field is virtually closed, restricted to those who now occupy it. The responsibility on them is all the heavier, for unless they do their work well it will not be done. And it has to be done in a democracy.

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

The recovery of The Times since 1896 is without parallel in modern newspaper history, and for the reasons given above it is likely to remain without parallel. Yet it may be that its history has some useful lessons for newspaper makers. What those lessons are any reader may infer from the story which has here been told. In the opinion of the management of The Times, perhaps the most important lesson is that integrity, common sense and good judgment are more likely to bring success than wild extravagances, constant experimentation and the frantic following of each new fashion. The fact that a particular policy or a particular feature has been a success on one paper is no guarantee that it will be successful everywhere. In the newspaper business, as in most other businesses, the surest road to success — in the opinion of the management of The Times is to know what you want to do and know how to do If the new publisher who took charge of The Times in 1896 had tried to imitate The Herald, The World or The Journal—the three brilliantly successful papers of the day—he would merely have accomplished his own ruin; and he could not have rebuilt The Times if he had not known his business from the ground up. Contrary to the opinion held in some quarters, newspaper making is skilled labor; it cannot be performed by any well-intentioned amateur.

THE TIMES TODAY

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

Twenty-five Years' Record of Advertising Growth of "The New York Times"

YEAR	2									AGATE LINES
1896		•	•	•	•	•		•		2,227,196
1897	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	2,408,247
1898		•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	2,433,193
1899	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	3,378,750
1900	•	•	•				•	•	•	3,978,620
1901	-	•	•	•	•	•	-		•	4,957,205
1902	•	•	•	•	•		•	•	•	5,501,779
1903	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	5,2 07 ,964
1904	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	5,228,480
1905	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	5,958,322
1906	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•		6,033,457
1907	•	•	•	•	•	•	•			6,304,298
1908	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	5,897,332
1909	•	•	•	•	•	•	•		•	7,194,703
1910	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	7,550,650
1911	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	8,130,425
1912	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	8,844,866
1913	•		•	•	•	•	•	•	•	9,327,369
1914	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	9,164,927
1915	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	9,682,562
1916	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	11,552,496
1917	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	12,509,587
1918	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	13,518,255
1919	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	19,682,562
1920	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	23,447,395

HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

Twenty-five Years' Record of Circulation Growth of "The New York Times"

YEAL	R								COPIES
October,				-					21,516
"	1897								22,456
"	1898								25,726
"	1899								76,260
"	1900								82,106
"	1901								102,472
46	1902	•							105,416
"	1903								106,386
46	1904		•						118,786
"	1905		•	•					120,710
"	1906								131,140
"	1907								143,460
"	1908			•					172,880
"	1909							•	184,317
"	1910	•				•			191,981
"	1911								197,375
"	1912						•		209,751*
66	1913	•		•			•	•	230,360*
66	1914	•		•			•		259,673*
66	1915	•	•	•	•	•		•	318,274*
66	1916	•	•	•	•	•			340,904*
66	1917	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	357,225*
66	1918	•	•	•	•	•			368,492*
"	1919		•	•	•			•	362,971*
"	1920		•	•		•			342,553 *
April	1921	•	•			•		•	352,528*

^{*}Average net paid daily and Sunday circulation reported to the Post Office Department for the six months immediately preceding, in accordance with Act of Congress August 24, 1912.

The New York Times

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DEC. 15, 1914.

FOR THE GERMAN PEOPLE, PEACE WITH FREEDOM.

Germany is doomed to sure defeat. Bankrupt in statesmanship, overmatched in arms, under the moral condemnation of the civilized world, bofriended only by the Austrian and the Turk, two backward-looking and dying nations, desperately battling against the hosts of three great Powers to which help and reinforcement from States now neutral will certainly come should the decision be long deferred, she pours out the blood of her heroic subjects and wastes her diminishing substance in a hopeless struggle that postpones but cannot alter the fatal decree. Yet the doom of the German Empire may become the deliverance of the German people if they will betimes but seize and hold their Leipsic began and Waterloo achieved the emancipation of the French people from the bloody, selfish and sterile domination of the Corsican St. Helena made it secure. Sedan sent the little Napoleon sprawling and the statesmen of France instantly established and proclaimed the Republic. Will the Germans blindly insist on having their Waterloo, their Sedan-their St. Helena, too? million Germans have been sacrificed. a million German homes are desolate. Must other millions die and vet other millions mourn before the people of Germany take in the court of reason and human liberty their appeal from the imperial and military caste that rushes them to their ruin?

They have their full justification in the incompetence and failure of their rulers. German diplomacy and German militarism have broken down. The blundering incapacity of the Kaiser's counselors and servants in statecraft at Berlin and in foreign capitals committed Germany to a war against the joined might of England. France and Russia. BISMARCK would never have had it so. Before he let the armies take the field, before he gave Austria the "free hand," he would have had England and Russia by the ears, he would have isolated France, as he did in 1870. The old Emperor, a man not above the common in capacity, surpassed the wisdom of his grandson in this, that he knew better than to trust his own judgment and he was sagacious enough to call great men to his aid. WILHELM II. was wretchedly served at Vienna by an Ambassador blinded by Russophobia, at St. Petersburg by another who advised his home Government that Russia would not go to war, and at London by the muddling Lichnowsky. whose first guesses were commonly wrong and his second too late to be serviceable. Germany literally forced an alliance for this war between England and Russia, two Powers often antagonistic in the past and having now no common interest save the curbing of Germany. The terrible misjudgment of the General Staff hurled Germany headlong into the pit that incompetent diplomacy had prepared. The Empire went to war with three great nations able to meet her with forces more than double her own.

Then the worth of that iron military discipline and of the forty years of ceaseless preparation to which Germany had sacrificed so much of the productive power of her people was put to the test. Again the colossal imperial machine broke down. It was not through incompetence. The German Army was magnificent in its strength, in equipment, and in valor. It was overmatched, it had attempted the impossible. That was the fatal blunder. The first rush upon Paris was intended to be irresistible; that was the plan of the General Staff: France crushed. Russia could be sentabout her business. It was not irresistible, it was checked, it was repulsed. When the invaders were driven back from the Marne to the Aisne and the Belgian frontier Germany's ultimate defeat was registered in the book of fate and heralded to the watching world. Germany's battle line has been forced back to where it stood when it first encountered the French. Calais is freed from her menace, Tannenberg was but an incident to the swarming hordes of Russia. What boots it if she enters Lodz, if she seize Warsaw, what even if by some unlooked for turn of fortune she again approach the walls of Paris? KITCHENER'S new million of trained men will be in France before the snows have melted in the Vosges, and Russia is inexhaustible.

There is within the German view an even more sinister portent. world cannot, will not, let Germany wln in this war. With her dominating all Europe peace and security would vanish from the earth. A few months ago the world only dimly comprehended Germany, now it knows her thoroughly. So if England, France and Russia cannot prevail against her, Italy, with her two millions, the sturdy Hollanders, the Swiss, hard men in a fight, the Danes, the Greeks and the men of the Balkans will come to their aid and make sure that the work is finished, once for all. For their own peace and safety the nations must demolish that towering structure of militarism in the centre of Europe that has become the world's danger-spot, its greatest menace.

The only possible ending of the war is through the defeat of Germany. Driven back to her Rhine strongholds, she will offer a stubborn resistance. Even with the Russians near or actually in Berlin she would fight on.

But for what? Why? Because the German people, the very people, are resolved to get themselves all killed before the inevitable day of the enemy's triumph? Not at all. The weary men in the trenches and the distressed people merely obey the orders given by imperial and military authority. For the men in those high quarters defeat would be the end of all. Desperation, with some possible admixture of blind confidence, will continue the war. But why should the German people make further sacrifice of blood to save the pride and the shoulder straps of German officialdom? It means a million more battiefield graves. It means frightful additions to the bill of costs and to the harshness of the terms. Since the more dreadful ending is in plain view. why not force the better ending now?

But this is revolution. That may be so; call it so. Definitions are useful, they are not deterrent. Is there in all history any record of a whole people rising against their rulers in the midst of a great war? Let the historians answer the question. Is it conceivable that the loyal German people, made one by the love of the Fatherland and devoted to the accomplishment of the imperial ideals. could be stirred to revolt while still unconquered? That concerns the prophets. We are concerned neither with precedents nor with prophecy. We have aimed here to make clear the certainty of Germany's defeat and to show that if she chooses to fight to the bitter end her ultimate and sure overthrow will leave her bled to exhaustion, drained of her resources, and under sentence to penalties of which the stubbornness of her futile resistance will measure the severity. We could wish that the German people, seeing the light, might take timely measures to avert the calamities that await them.

It may well be doubted that they will see the light. But have not the men of German blood in this country a duty to perform to their beleaguered brethren in the old home? Americans of German birth or of German descent should see and feel the truth about the present position of Germany, the probability for the near, the certainty for the remoter, future. At home the Germans cannot know the whole truth; it is not permitted them 'to' know it. It will be unfraternal and most cruel for German-Americans further to keep the truth from them. or to fail in their plain duty to make known to them how low the imperial and militaristic ideal has fallen in the world's esteem, and to bring them to understand that the enemies they now confront are but the first line of civilization's defenses against the menace of the sword that forever rattles in its scabbard. The sword must go, the scabbard, too, and the shining armor. If the Germans here have at all the ear of the Germans there, can they not tell them so? They have come here to escape the everlasting din of war's trappings; they have come to find peace and quiet in a land of liberty and law, where government rests on the consent of the governed, where the people by their chosen representatives, when there is a question of going into the trenches to be slain, have something to say about it. Have they ever tried to get into the heads of their friends in the Fatherland some idea of the comforts and advantages of being governed in that way? Instead of vainly trying to change the well-matured convictions of the Americans, why not labor for the conversion of their brother Germans?

The State is Power, said TELITSCHKE. He would have written TENNYSON'S line "The individual withers, the State is more and more." In the German teaching the State is everything, to the State the individual must sacrifice everything. With us the State is the social organization by which men assure to themselves the free play of individual genius, each man's right in peace and security to work out his individual purposes. If the German-Americans prize the privileges they have enjoyed under our theory of the State, ought they not to tell the Germans at home what it means for the individual to be free from quasi-vassalage? There is no people on earth more worthy to enjoy the blessings of freedom than the Germans. Germany has taken her place in the very front of civilization, freed from the double incubus of imperialism and militarism the German genius would have a marvelous development. It is not in the thought of Germany's fees to crush the German people, the world would not let them be crushed. It has for them the highest esteem, it will acclaim the day when it can resume friendly and uninterrupted relations with them. But the headstrong, misguided, and dangerous rulers of Germany are going to be called to stern account, and the reckoning will be paid by the German people in just the proportion that they make common cause with the blindly arrogant ruling When representative Americans and men of peace like Dr. ELIOT and Andrew Carnegie insist that there can be no permanent peace until an end has been made of German militarism, sober-minded Germans, here as well as in Germany, ought not to turn a deaf ear to such voices, for they speak the opinion of the world. The bill of costs mounts frightfully with every month's prolongation of the war and the toll of human lives is every day ruthlessly taken. It may be a counsel of unattainable perfection to say that the German people ought now to end the war. But for their own happiness, for their own homes, for their interests and their future, it is true. The truth of the counsel is unconquerable.

Roster of The New York Times Company

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Adolph S. Ochs Charles R. Miller Ben. C. Franck G. W. Ochs Oakes Iphigene Ochs Sulzberger

PUBLISHER

*Adolph S. Ochs

Executive Council

Adolph S. Ochs Tulius Ochs Adler CHARLES R. MILLER LOUIS WILEY

CARR V. VAN ANDA ARTHUR HAYS SULZBERGER

Assistants to the Publisher

JULIUS OCHS ADLER ARTHUR HAYS SULZBERGER *BEN. C. FRANCK *KATE L. STONE, Secretary to the Publisher

Secretaries and Clerks

ALICE M. JENKINS PETER BROWN JOHN O'BRIEN MAURA L. O'SULLIVAN JOHN R. HOUSTON JOHN O'DONNELL J. BENTLEY SQUIER, JR.

C. R. SAFFORD ANDREW JORDAN ANNA CARROLL

Attorney

ALFRED A. COOK, General Counsel GEORGE NORRIS, Associate Attorney

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

*Charles R. Miller, Editor-in-chief Rollo Ogden, Associate Editor John H. Finley, Associate Editor

Editorial Staff

HENRY E. ARMSTRONG *E. A. BRADFORD JOHN CORBIN EDWARD M. KINGSBURY *F. C. MORTIMER FRANK D. ROOT CHARLES H. GRASTY

NEWS DEPARTMENT

CARR V. VAN ANDA, Managing Editor

Frederic	ek T. Birci	LALL								•	Assistant Managing Editor
Alden M	ARCH PHILLIPS .
OSMUND :	PHILLIPS .										City Editor
DAVID H	JOSEPH .		. ,								Assistant City Editor
I. W. PH	OEBUS										Night City Editor
ERNEST V	Joseph . oebus /. Chambei	RLIN									Accident Night City Editor
Тоѕерн Е	. TEBEAU										Telegraph Editor
Wilson	. Fairban	KS .									Assistant Telegraph Editor
IOHN F.	O'NEIL .										Make-up Editor
H. T. LEA	TEBEAU L. FAIRBAN O'NEIL ROYD GRAVES										Assistant Make-up Editor
RALPH H	GRAVES										Sunday Editor
HENRY I	RVING BROO	ck .									Assistant Sunday Editor
CHARLES	M. GRAVE	8									Editor Rotogravure Pictorial
VICTOR V	V. TALLEY										Asst.Ed.RotogravurePictorial
ALFRED). Noves										Financial Editor
FRANKLI	N K. SPRAG	WE .									Assistant Financial Editor
*HENRY I	OEWENTHA	I									Business Editor
BERNARI	THOMSON	-: :								٠	Sports Editor
WILLIAM	I. SLOCUM										Assistant Sports Editor
CLIFFORI	SMYTHE.										Book Review Editor
TAMES B.	STEWART						Ċ				Real Estate Editor
RICHARD	RVING BROG M. GRAVE V. TALLEY D. NOYES N. K. SPRAG OEWENTHA J. SLOCUM D. SMYTHE . STEWART ALDRICH JER WOOLLI FINLEY FAI							·			Music Editor
ALEXAND	ER WOOLL	COTT						·			Dramatic Editor
WILBUR	Finley Far H Luther N. Dart . Iarcus	ULEY						Ĭ		Ĭ	Society Editor
ELIZABET	H LUTHER	CARY	7		•	:		Ĭ		:
EDWARD	N. DART .					:	•	·	•	•	Director Art Department
EDWIN N	ARCUS	•			•	•	•	•	•	•
LAURENC	F V. HPDE	GRAFI	F	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Editor Correspondence
CHARLES	V. VANDE	RHOOI	R	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Syndicate News
WALTER	Littleriei	מי		•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Foreign Publications
HARRY T	SMITH			•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Foreign Publications
*R. W. W	FICH	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	American Publications
TENNIE V	VELLAND .	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	•	•	Manager Library and Index
THOMAS	RRACKEN	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Dibrary and Index
IRVING F	PERIODER	, •	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Subject Index
FREDERI	CK MEINHO	177	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	Manager Wireless Station
RICHARD	V OTTAB	A NT	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Wileless Station
HAT H	SMITTE	AN .	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Aget Man Washington Office
ERNEET	A Maderia		•	•	•	•	•	•	٠	•	Manager London Office
FOURTH I	TAMES	LL.	•	•	•	•	٠	•	٠	•	Cattoonist Editor Correspondence Manager Syndicate News Foreign Publications Foreign Publications American Publications Manager Library and Index Manager News Index Subject Index Manager Wireless Station Manager Washington Office Asst. Mgr. Washington Office Manager London Office Manager Paris Office
ADWIN L	· JAMES .	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Faris Office

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

News and Editorial Staff

*ABRAHAMS, MICHAEL B. ACKERMAN, JOHN D. ANDREWS, HENRY V. AUSTIN, FREDERICK A. BARCLAY, GEO. E. BEAN, RODNEY BECAN, JOHN BELL, JEFFERSON G. BERONOWSKI, ANDREW BLAKE, GEO. W. BLANPIED, RALPH D. BLYTHE, WALTER E. BOND, F. FRAZER BRADY, EDWARD BRANNAN, DANA BROADWELL, ARTHUR BROWN, CYRIL BROWN, JOHN BROWN, PERCY BURGESS, ARTHUR BUTCHER, JESSE S. CAMPBELL, JOHN R. CASARIO, EUGENE CHASE, W. B. CHESTERTON, GEO. L. CLARKE, HAZEL CLARKE, VINCENT COLLINS, WILLIAM CONNERY, TIM CORTESI, ELIZABETH CORUM, MARTENE W. CRANE, F. W. CROUCH, H. C. CURLEY, JOHN W. DAVIDSON, CHARLES M. DAWSON, JAMES DAWSON, ROBERT P. DAY, JOSEPH T. DELANO, EDWIN F. DE NARDO, ANTHONY DE PUY, FRANK A. DICKEY, CARL DONLON, J. S. DURANTY, WALTER EATON, MALCOLM EVERETT, ETHEL W. FARDON, JAMES FELD, ROSE C. FELLEMAN, HAZEL FINCH, TOLITA MAY

FISCHER, ELIZ. M. FISKE, D. W. FOLEY, MAURICE FORD, COREY H. FOX, ARTHUR GLEASON, LILLIAN GOBETZ, ARTHUR GODDARD, PERCIVAL S. GORDON, JOHN J. GORMAN, HERBERT S. GRANT, J. C. GROVE, J. H. HAGERTY, JAMES A. HAGGERTY, MICHAEL F. HALLIGAN, EDWARD HAMBIDGE, C. G. HAMEL, GASTON HAMILTON, THOMAS C. harding, john w. HARRIS, FRANCES D. HARRISON, JAMES R. HAYS, GENE HEATH, ELIZ. M. HEDDEN, GEORGIANA HERTEL, H. H. HINTON, HAROLD B. HIRSCHEL, IRVING HIRSCHEL, TOBIE HOLLAND, JAMES HOLME, LEONARD R. HOYT, PHILIP D. HUGHES, CHARLES F. HUNTER, FRANK HUNTINGTON, WM. R. HUTCHISON, PERCY A. IRWIN, JR., F. N. IVERSON, REGINALD JAEGER, FRED A. JANNET, ADY JOHNSTON, ALVA JONES, WATKIN KAUFMAN, GEO. S. KEARNEY, AGNES KEARNS, FRANK KEENAN, WALTER M. KELLY, MRS. F. F. KELLY, JOHN KEPPLE, ERNEST P. KING, EARL KLAUBER, EDWARD

KNOX, PURVES T. KROLL, MORTIMER J. KURTH, JR., OTTO KURTZ, HENRY LANE, MILTON LARITY, THOMAS LARNED, RICHARD M. LAVIN, JOHN LAWSON, WILLIAM E. LEA, J. H. LEWIS, HENRY N. LINN, JR., THOMAS C. LONG, E. JOHN LOTT, ELLA K. LYMAN, LAUREN D. Macneil, Neil MARSHALL, FRANCES W. MARTIN, WALTER T. MASON, JOSEPH *MCCAHILL, W. J. MCDONALD, ANNA MCDONALD, GEORGE MCDOWELL, R. K. MCGINITY, LEO A. MCGILL, FRED W. MCMANUS, JOHN MCSWEENBY, EDWARD MICHAEL, C. R. MILLAR, H. PERCY MORAN, STEVE MUELLER, LOGAN E. MUENCH, FRED MULLER, WILLIAM NAINOR, ANDREW NETZER, JACK NIXON, WILSON K. O'CONNELL, JOHN J. O'CONNOR, F. J. OWEN, JOHN OWEN, RUSSELL D. PHILIP, P. J. PORTER, R. S. PRAET, JAMES J. RAE, BRUCE RAUCH, MAY RICHARDSON, WILLIAM D. RIDDELL, BEATRICE ROBINSON, F. H. ROBINSON, JOHN E. ROSENBERG, R.

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

News and Editorial Staff — Continued

ROSENTHAL, DELPHINE ROWLAND, EDITH RYAN, JOHN SACKETT, WILLIAM E. SAPIA, JANE SCHLOSSER, WILLIAM SCHOCH, WALTER SCHUMANN, CHARLES SCHWARTZ, SADIE SHAPS, JACK SNYDER, FRANCES SOULE, H. P. SPEARING, JAMES O. SPEERS, L. C. SPENCER, H. S. STARK, LOUIS STAUB, WILLIAM STEFFEN, CHARLES STEFFEN, J. HAL.

STEPHENS, DOLORES STEWART, EDWARD J. STRUSINSKI, NICHOLAS SUETTER, BENJAMIN SULLIVAN, JOS. F. SWARTZ, ARTHUR TAFT, MARY A. TALLEY, TRUMAN H. THOMPSON, C. W. THORNE, VAN BUREN TURPIN, RUFUS E. VAN NESS, FRED A. VULTEE, L. H. WADE, MARGARET WALL, FLORENCE WALSH, LEONARD WAMSLEY, WILBUR F. WARN, W. A. WATERS, JOSEPH

WEAVER, JOS. A. WEBER, ABRAHAM WELDON, M. L. WHITE, EDITH WHITNEY, C. H. WIDLIZKA, ANTAN WILKIE, ENID WILL, ALLEN S. WILLIAMS, FLORENCE E. WILLIAMS, T. W. WILLIAMSON, S. T. WILSON, WILLIAM R. WIMBROUGH, A. C. WOOD, LEWIS WRIGHT, JEAN WRIGHT, WILLIAM C. YERION, RUTH YOUNG, JAMES C. ZOLOTOW, SAMUEL

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

*Louis Wiley, Business Manager

	EDWIN S. FRIENDLY .						Assistant Business Manager
	Hugh A. O'Donnell						Bus. Manager Representative
	B. T. BUTTERWORTH.						Advertising Manager
	HARRIS H. WALKER .					Ċ	Assistant Advertising Manager
	FRANK W. HAROLD .						Advertising Censor
	ARNOLD SANCHEZ						Manager Credit Department
	JAMES M. KIRSHNER						Manager Charge Department
	R. ALEXANDER LAWE					Ċ	Manager Bookkeeping Department
	WILLIAM W. MILLER					Ť.	Classified Advertising Manager
	IRMA KORY		Ĭ.	Ċ	Ċ	•	Assistant Classified Advertising Mgr.
*	Charles A. Flanagan						Circulation Manager
	Louis O. Morny	_	_	_			Subscription Manager
	WILLIAM TOHNSON .				•	•	Chief Circulation Inspector
	MICHAEL A. O'REILLY		•	•	•	•	Chief Circulation Bookkeeper
	WILLIAM A. HURLEY	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Annex Publication Office
	EDWARD H. TAYLOR .	•	•	•	•	:	Supervisor Branch Offices
	EDWARD B. WELLS .	•	•	•	•	:
	WILLIAM KEAN	•	•	•	•	•	Mgr. Times Building Publication Office Manager Downtown Office
	A. H. Mandelberg .	•	•	•	•	•
	CHESTER M. GOODE .	•	•	•	•
	BERNARD VAN CAMP.	•	•	•	•	•
	SADIE L. MCNULTY .	•	•	•	•	•	Manager Messenger Department
	Anna Chou	•	•	•	•	•	Incoming Mail Department
	Anna Groh	•	•	٠	•	•	Outgoing Mail Department
	ANNA VONDO	•	•	•	•	٠	Manager File Department
	ANNA KUTIMAN						Circulation Manager Index
	MAIHERINE WAGUIRE	•	•	•	•	•	Chief Telephone Operator

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Business Department — Continued

ADAMS, WALTER C. AGOADO, JOSEPH ALLUISI, GEORGE APPLEGATE, GERTRUDE G. CLARK, NOBERN C. ARDELL, HERBERT S. ASTON, HENRY H. BABCOCK, FRANCIS M. BACHRAN, JOHN E. BACON, MRS. HATTIE BALL, E. SULLIVAN BANGS, GILBERT M. BANKS, HARRIET D. BARNETT, GEORGE F. BASILOWITZ, MICHAEL BAXTER, IRVING C. BECK, AUGUSTUS BEERE, SEYMOUR BELL, ROBERT BENDER, WILLIAM BENNETT, MAE V. BERGEN, MARGARET BERGEN, PHILIP BERGER, HELEN BERKERY, ROSE BIGELOW, BURT M. BIGGS, RICHARD BISSETT, WILLIAM BLOCH, LENA BOEHM, HULDA M. BOLEI, EVELYN BOND, FRANK BRADLEY, MARGARET BRENNEN, CATHERINE BRENNEN, CHARLES J. BRENNEN, MAY BROSNAN, AGNES BROWN, HARRY W. BRUMER, FRANCES BUCHOLZ, CLAIRE BURKE, ANNA BURNES, MARJORIE BZENAK, ANNA CAHILL, JOSEPH CAMERON, WILSON CANFIELD, THOMAS CANSE, EDWARD CARMODY, AGNES CARVILLE, ARTHUR J. CAVANAGH, JAMES T. CHESTON, ESTHER CLARK, ELIZABETH

CLARK, GRACE CLARK, HELEN M. CLARK, MARGARET E. CLARKE, JAMES J. COCHRANE, ROBERT C. COHEN, GEORGE COLLIER, EDNA COLLINS, HAZEL CONNELL, ANNA CONNELL, MARY CONNORS, HELEN COOPE, JOSEPHINE COSTOSA, RAYMOND COX, HARRY F. COX, HARRY S. CUNNINGHAM, FLORENCE CUSACK, GEORGE J. DALGIN, BEN DALTON, GERALD J. DALTON, MRS. G. J. DALY, JOSEPHINE DAMON, ALBERT H. DAVIS, PAUL DE COSTA, LUCILLE DE GWECK, GRACE DELANEY, WINIFRED DE MARRAIS, JOSEPH A. DEMPSEY, KATHERINE DENNY, VICTOR J. DE ZAYAS, HENRIETTA DIX, ADELAIDE B. DOESSERECK, WILLIAM DONAHUE, CLAIRE DONNELLY, ELIZABETH DONOVAN, KATHERINE DORGAN, JOHN DOWLEY, MAY DU BLAN, CARMEN DUFFY, JOHN T., JR. DULLAGHAN, DOROTHY DUNN, HUGH P. DUNN, MARY A. EGAN, CATHERINE EISEL, THERESE C. ELFERS, HERBERT EMERIC, RAYMON ENGLANDER, BLANCHE ERB, CATHERINE EVANS, H. WILSON FANCIULLI, ROMOLA

FARRELL, THOMAS FINNEY, CHARLES A. FITZMAURICE, ANNA FOOTE, ANNA FOOTE, IRENE FOX, ELEANOR FRANK, MINNIE FRY, BERNARD H. FRYER, THOMAS H. FURY, JOSEPH FYBUSH, ELBERT GALL, CLARA GALLAGHER, CATHERINE GAW, JOSEPH GOERICKE, HARRY GOLD, EVA GOLDFINE, JEANNETTE GOMBAR, FRANK GORDON, HELEN GRAHAM, ROSE GRETSCHEL, CHARLES GRISWOLD, FRANK B. GROSS, EDWARD A. HAGEN, MABEL HAHN, GEORGE M. HAINES, EDNA HALLIGAN, FLORENCE HAMBERGER, FLORENCE HAMILTON, JOHN K. HAMMERMAN, ELIZABETH HANDBURY, MILDRED HARLAN, ANNA S. HARTMAN, ALICE HERLEHY, FRANCES HESLIN, MATTHEW J. HETFIELD, JAMES HICKEY, MARGARET HICKEY, ROSE HOLBERT, A. RUGGLES HOLLAND, JOHN HOLLOWAY, MURIEL HOLMES, AGNES HOOPER, DUDLEY R. HORAN, ALICE HORAN, MRS. J. J. HORAN, WINIFRED HUBBARD, CARLETON S. HUGHES, MICHAEL HULL, MRS. GERTRUDE HUNT, EDWARD HUTCHINSON, LAURA C.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT - Continued

HYNES, IRENE IZAGUIRRE, LORETTA JACKSON, CHARLES J. JAEGER, HENRY JAGELER, JOHN JAROS, CHARLES JOHNSON, ANNA W. JOHNSON, JOHN JOHNSON, MRS. MATILDA MALONEY, HARRY JONAS, STELLA JUDGE, MARY G. KALB, AUBREY KAUFER, OLIVE KAUFMAN, HENRY KENNEY, HUGH J. KING, WILLIAM W. KINGSMORE, HOWARD P. KIRCHER, BERTHA B. KIVLAN, FRANK J. KRAMPETZ, HELEN KRASNER, ROSE LACEY, ROSE LAURI, ROSE LEAHY, THOMAS LECK, ANNA LEDBETTER, WILLIAM LEEMAN, GEORGE LEIPSIG, ROSE LIGHTENBERG, ISAAC LIYINGSTON, BELLE LOCKARD, MRS. RAY LOW, ETHEL LYNCH, WILLIAM MCALOON, JOHN MCAVOY, META MCCANN, LUCINDA MCCOY, JOSEPH MCDERMOTT, MARY McDowell, wm. J. MCGAHAN, FLORENCE MCGOWN, HENRY MCGRAM, HELEN MCGRANN, ALFONSO MCGRAW, WILLIAM MCGUINNESS, JOHN MCINTOSH, MCQUEEN MCINTYRE, EWEN C. MCKENNA, JOS. L. MCMAHON, JOHN MCNAMARA, ALBERT MCNAMARA, BLIZABETH

MCNAMEE, FRANCIS MCNEILL, JOHN MCNULTY, FRANK L. MacDonald, Joseph MAHER, BEATRICE L. MAHNKEN, MRS. A. MAINARDY, FRANK MALONE, RICHARD A. MARABLE, JUNIUS MARKS, SARA MASSEY, GEORGIANNA L. MATTIMORE, ANNA *MAUBORGNE, EUGENE C. MAYER, MARGARET MEIERS, WALTER MERZ, HARRY MEYERS, FLORENCE MEYERS, GERTRUDE MEYERS, HELEN MOPPETT, MARY MONT, ROBERT MOONEY, FLORENCE MOOREHOUSE, ISA J. MORGAN, ALFRED MUDSE, ANTHONY J. MUHLKER, HERBERT C. MULCAHY, MARY MULLANEY, MARIE A. MUNROE, ALBERT E. NAUGHTON, WILLIAM J. NEEL, WILLIAM H. NEUMANN, ANTHONY NICHOLS, GERTRUDE E. NICOLL, EMANUEL NIEMAN, CHAUNCY W. NILSON, FRANK NOBLE, WALTER H. NOLAN, WARREN C. NORTON, ELLEN O'BRIEN, LILLIAN O'CONNELL, THOMAS o'connor, josephine O'LEARY, JOSEPH R. O'NEILL, ALBERT O'NEILL, DONALL O'NEILL, JAMES OLDSEN, MINA OLMSTEAD, ALFRED H. PACCIONE, MARY P. PATTERSON, MARGARET

PETERS, CARL PHILLIPS, HARRY S. PICCIRILLO, MAE PORTENAR, ABRAHAM J. POWERS, RAY M. QUINNELL, EDNA RABEY, DOROTHY REDMOND, JOHN REED, LORA H. REGAN, HELEN REGAN, THOMAS D. REILLY, HELEN REILLY, JOHN H. REILLY, JOHN REINHARDT, LEON RENNEISEN, MILDRED J. REYNOLDS, HELEN RICHARDS, YERNON RIORDAN, JULIA RITTER, HARRY E. ROBINSON, JAMES J. RODGERS, DAVID S. RODRIGUEZ, GERTRUDE ROSENBERG, NELLIE ROSS, ADOLPH R. ROTHMUND, CATHERINE RUGGER, MAY RYAN, HELEN RYAN, JOHN A. SAMBORN, JOHN A. SANDLER, JACOB K. SANSEVERINO, GODFREY SAUSE, EMMA SCHATTELES, SAMUEL SCHERB, LILLIAN SCHULTZ, P. RICHARD SCHWAB, ELIZABETH SEIDLER, CARLTON SERVER, EDWARD A. SETZER, ABRAHAM M. SEWING, ALMA SHAW, SAMSON H. SHEEHAN, KATHERINE SHEEHY, MABEL E. SHEPPARD, STANLEY R. SLOCUM, WILLIAM W. SMITH, CHARLES SMITH, CLARA M. SMITH, CLEVELAND G. SMITH, EDITH

SMITH, HARRY W.

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Business Department - Continued

SMITH, LAURA M.
SMITH, THOMAS M.
STANDISH, CLIFFORD STEERS, ROBERT STORER, ELEANOR M.
SUCHARIPA, FRANCES SUFFIN, SIMON SULLIVAN, JAMES SUPPLE, JULIA
SUTCLIFF, BEATRICE M.
SVEC, FRANK SWORMSTED, WOODBURN
TAUSTINE, IRVING
THOMPSON, CAREY R.

THORNE, FLORENCE
TIMMONS, MARY
TROUT, MILDRED F.
TRUEPER, JOHN H.
UBERROTH, VIOLA
VAN SLYKE, WINFRED
VAN WENKLE, FANNY D.
VOS, ANDREW Y.
WALSH, F. BAGLEY
WALSH, RAYMOND WALTERS, ANNA
WARD, ETHEL
WEINBERG, FLORENCE
WEISHAAR, AUGUST

WEIS, RUTH WELCH, ESTELLE
WELLS, PAULINE R.
WHITEHOUSE, LOUISE M.
WIGGINS, MRS. DONNA
WILD, MATILDA
WILLIAMS, WILLIAM WILSTRUP, ALEXIS WOLFF, HEDWIG
ZANDER, STANLEY C.
ZANK, DAVID ZUCHTMANN, VERA

MECHANICAL DEPARTMENTS

CHARLES F. HART, Superintendent Lewis Cochrane, Assistant Superintendent

Annex Building and Mechanical Department

WALTER S. BARNES . Superintendent Annex Building WALTER E. PALMER . Chief Electrician JOHN CONNELL . . Chief Stationary Engineer JUDSON DUNLOP . Master Carpenter Chief Watchman JAMES McCauley . GLENN DONALDSON Head Porter WILLIAM DURRANT . . . Foreman Machinist Elsie Taussig . Chief Stencil Department

ADAMS, CLAUDIE BELL, DEE BLAKE, PERCY BLANKEN, CHARLES BLUMENFIELD, ELSIE BLUNT, RICHARD BOLDEN, JOHN CALLAHAN, LILLY CHANDLER, LEDGER CHISHOLM, WILLIAM CHURCHMAN, GEORGE CLARK, AGNES COLEMAN, JAMES COLLEARY, MARY CONLON, LILLY CROCKETT, JOHN CROKE, THOMAS

CUMMINGS, GEORGE CURCIO, LOUIS CURTIN, PATRICK DALTON, MARY DALY, FLORENCE DART, JAMES DE NICOLA, HARRY DINSENBACHER, JOSEPH DOUGHERTY, JOHN DU BOIS, JESSIE EIDENBERG, TILLIE ELLIS, LULU ENGLISH, WILLIS EVANS, JOHN FARLEY, FRANCIS J. FENN, CATHERINE FENTON, JAMES

FRANCIS, RUPERT PREBMAN, LILLIAN GALLAGHER, MARY GEEHAN, JOSEPH GEOGHAN, PATRICK GORDON, PETER C. GRADEL, ELIZABETH GRAVES, ROBERT HANSBURY, CLIFFORD HARD, CATHERINE HART, KATE HEILIG, MARGARET HEINS, ALICE * HOUSTIN, JOHN HUGHES, PHILIP HUMPHREY, HOWARD ISAACS, ROSE

MECHANICAL DEPARTMENTS - Continued

JOHNSON, HENRY JOHNSON, JOSEPH JOHNSTON, EUGENE JOHNSTON, JAMES KAPLAN, VICTORIA KARZAN, HENRY KELLY, MARY KENNEDY, MOSES KILKENNY, MICHAEL KOCH, FRIEDA KRAUS, CHARLES KUSTER, ALBERT LATIGUE, AUGUST LEE, ALICE LENTIN, REBECCA LEY, JOHN MARSHALL, JABEZ MCDERMOTT, ALLEN MCGARRY, PATRICK MCGARY, MARY MCGINLEY, JAMES MCINERNEY, TIMOTHY MEILLY, N.

MINSTER, ROSE MUNZER, JOHN MURRAY, TAYLOR PALMER, WARREN E. PEARSALL, EUGENE PETERSON, ANDREW REEVES, JOHN REID, FRANK L. RHODES, HENRY ROBERTSON, FRANK ROTH, SARAH SAVAGE, JOHN SCHURMAN, ARTHUR SCOTT, ROBERT SHEA, CATHERINE SHORT, SAUL SIMPSON, YANCEY SMIDILI, PAOLO SMITH, GEORGE SMITH, JOHN SMITH, MARY SMITH, WILLIAM STARKS, JOHN

STERLING, JAMES TAYLOR, ERNEST TEDESCO, MINNIE TRIBBETT, GEORGE UTZ, EVA VANDERVALL, JAMES VAN NEST, MARY VOIGTLANDER, ERNEST WALKER, GEORGE WALSH, TIMOTHY WESSON, WILLIAM WESSTROM, ISAAC WHITTAKER, M. WIPFLER, LOUIS WILLIAMS, CHAS. C. WILLIAMS, JAMES L. WILLIAMS JOHN W. WILLIAMS, JOSEPH WILSON, JAMES WOLPERT, IDA WOODBY, GEORGE YOUNG, ALBERT

Composing Room

*WILLIAM A. PENNEY, Superintendent

*Thomas J. Dillon				Foreman Night Shift
CHARLES I. WILLEY .				Foreman Day Shift
JAMES A. BAIRD				Foreman Third Shift
HARRY W. DAIL				Foreman Ad Room
*WILLIAM G. DEVERICKS				Assistant Foreman Ad Room
*Chris. Fadum				Foreman Machinists
Walter C. Johnson .				Assistant Foreman Machinists
*JOHN F. McCabe				Foreman Proof Room, Day
WILLIAM H. MICHENER				Foreman Operators
HARRY WILLIAMS				Foreman Proof Room, Night

ABRAHAM, BEN ADLE, RICHARD
ALEXANDER, EDW.
AMEND, JOSEPH APOSTLE, CARL APOSTLE, NICK
ASHE, FRED R.
ASHLEY, HARRY BAER, LOUIS
BARNETT, CHARLES BARNETY, RALPH

BARRETT, HARRY BEATTY, JAMES
BECKER, WM. H.
BENNETT, A. B.
BENSON, RAYMOND
BILLMAN, FRED H.
BLOOM, S.
BOEDECKER, WM. C.
BOWERMAN, HARRY C.
BOYCE, ARTHUR J.
BOYD, JOSEPH J.

BRADY, ROET. J.
BRILEY, JAMES C.
BRUSH, ROET.
BUCKINGHAM, A. C.
*BURR, FRED. E.
CAIRNS, A. G.
CAMP, WILBER E.
CAMPBELL, ALEX.
*CARROLL, MARTIN J.
CARSON, JOS. E.
CARSWELL, WM. D.

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Composing Room — Continued

CARVER, WM. CITRO, ANTHONY CLARK, BEVERLY CLARK, JOSEPH CLASS, PAUL T. CLEMMITT, EDWARD B. CLIFTON, LEO COLANGELO, PETER *cole, wm. b. COMERFORD, W. CONWAY, D. F. COOGAN, P. G. COWLEY, WM. J. CROSBY, THOS. N. CROSS, FRANK G. CURRAN, THOS. F. DAVIDSON, CHAS. DEANE, JOHN A. *DESMARAIS, OSCAR DEW, JOHN S. DILLON, Jos. F. DILLON, THOS. M. *DITCHIE, FRED. *DOYLE, EUGENE *DUGAN, PATRICK DUGAN, WILLIAM DUNNE, FRANCIS EBY, SAM. C. ECKART, CHAS. ECKERLEIN, ALFRED EDWARDS, A. H. *EDWARDS, EDWARD ENDERES, A. G. FARRELL, WM. FERGUSON, EDWARD FISHER, FRANK J. FISHER, WALTER *fitzpatrick, john m. FITZPATRICK, JOS. FLEMING, J. S. FLYNN, CLARENCE FOSTER, FRANK L. PRANCK, RUSSELL FRANK, JULES FRUCHTER, MAX GALVIN, EDWARD GALVIN, PATRICK GANNON, J. R. GARRAMONE, ROBT. GEIGER, BENTLEY J. GEORGE, ROBERT

GERSTINE, BENJ. *GOUGH, MARTIN GRADY, WM. GRAHAM, JOS. GRANAT, WM. *GREEN, FAUL GREENSTONE, G. GREGORY, STANLEY GRESKIEWICH, JOS. GRIFFIN, E. GUARD, JACK GUNTHER, CHAS. HAGOOD, EARL V. [‡]HALL, ALBERT G. HAMILTON, P. HANSELMANN, FRED. HARRIS, DANIEL HATCH, JOHN M. HEARN, JOHN E. HEGARTY, GEO. HEGARTY, WM. H. HENRY, WM. *HESSON, HORACE W. HIGGINS, RAYMOND HILL, WALTER HOLMAN, E. J. *HOLMGREN, CHAS. *HOLZER, JOHN C. HOREY, MADELEINE HUNTER, GEO. R. JAEGER, CHAS. JAMES, EUGENE W. *jensen, peter JOHNSON, E. W. JOHNSTON, WILLIS JORDAN, THOMAS J. JOUBERT, ANDREW KARRER, CONRAD KAUCHER, GEO. L. KELLY, ENOS J. KELLEY, JAMES KENNEDY, DAVID KENT, TIMOTHY KIRCHNER, JOS. *KLEIN, DAVID LAFFERTY, FORREST *LAUER, THEODORB C. LAVERTY, EDGAR LAWLOR, JOHN T. LEACH, SAM LEEPER, J. W.

LEMENTRY, WALTER LEY, WILLIAM *lockwood, charles LUSHBAUGH, EDWARD B. MCCANN, THOMAS J. MCCONNELL, MICHAEL *MCCRANEY, JAMES MCELDARY, JOSEPH MCGING, P. *McGINN, JOSEPH MCKEAN, WILLIAM S. MCMONAGLB, ROGER P. MCNAMEE, MICHAEL MCPARTLAND, FRANCIS MCPHERSON, JOHN W. MCWILLIAM, HENRY MacDonald, EDGAR Mackenzie, carrie MABBETT, A. W. MALONE, AUSTIN MALONEY, J. MARKEY, E. J. MARTELL, RICHARD MARTIGNETTI, FHILLIP *MARTIN, ALFRED D. MAURICE, RICHARD S. MEACHAM, LAWRENCE MEADE, CHARLES MEIKLE, JOHN K. *MEINERT, GUSTAVE MELLEN, WILLIAM MENSHON, W. *MERZ, FRED. MINNAUGH, JOSEPH MITCHELL, ROBERT B. MONTGOMERY, VIRGIL MORGAN, A. J. MORTON, ROBERT C. MOSS, GEORGE A. MOYER, CHARLES MOYNIHAN, DENNIS MULLER, J. HERBERT MURRAY, CHARLES T. NEALE, R. NOWLAN, FRANK *o'brien, joseph o'connor, charles O'GORMAN, EDWARD L. O'GORMAN, LAWRENCE T. *O'ROURKE, DANIEL OLSON, OSCAR

Composing Room — Continued

ORF, ULRICH OWENS, A. E. PASSUTH, GEORGE PATON, WILLIAM PATTON, ALFRED PEFUND, JOHN PENNEY, HORACB PEYTON, CHARLES *PIERCE, H. CLARK PIKE, ALFRED POHL, JOSEPH POIRIER, HECTOR POLLOCK, NATHANIEL POLOQUIN, EDWARD PYM, PERCY A. *RANDOLPH, CLARENCE *REAGAN, JOHN T. ROACH, WALTER ROBERTS, A. E. ROCHE, DAVID ROONEY, PATRICK ROSLOFSKY, A. RUBINSTEIN, ALBERT RUDOLPH, THEODORE *RYAN, FRANCIS

SALVAIL, OSCAR SAUDER, HARRY *schuyler, fred j. SCOTT, EDWARD C. SHIELDS, ROBERT SIMON, CHARLES SIMONS, JOHN SINGER, LUCIAN SINGLE, HERBERT SOKEL, EMIL G. *sротн, јони с. *STACK, EDWARD STAFFORD, JOHN STALLEY, RICHARD STASNEY, EMANUEL STOCKER, RALPH SUTHERLAND, ALAN *swick, fred n. *symmons, jacob TALBOYS, GEORGE TAYLOR, IRA C. TAYLOR, JAMES TAYLOR, THOMAS TENAGLIA, LOUIS THAYER, E. J.

TOBIN, ROBERT B. TOURK, HARRY M. TULLY, JOSEPH *TURNEY, JACOB M. VAN BENSCHOTEN, F. VOGEL, WILLIAM WAAGE, FRED W. WALWORTH, RUSSEL B. WARMINGHAM, G. H. WASHBURN, FRED E WEEKS, FRED M. *WELLS, ARTHUR WHEELHOUSE, WILFRED. WHITE, F. *white, william h. WHITEHEART, JAMES A. WILLEY, LEWIS A. WILSON, HARRY *wiseman, edward WOLFF, ADA WOLTZ, WILLIAM H. *woods, william ZOGRAPHOS, M. E. ZOGRAPHOS, PYTHAGORAS

Stereotype Room

JOHN H. DUNTON, Superintendent

BERNHARD, ADOLPH
BOYLE, CHAS. W.
ENSWORTH, GEO. P.
ESTEY, GEO. L.
MA

FARMER, HARRIS FREESTONE, JAS. HENDERSON, IRVING HOPE, JOS. J.

HUMPHREY, NAT.

JOHNSON, DAVID KRAENGEL, WM. P. MCMAHON, JAS. A. MACK, JOS. A. MANN, THOS. MURRAY, R. S. O'BRIEN, WM. A. O'CONNOR, JAS. A. RAUNICKER, ROBT.

Edward T. Duffy Assistant Foreman

RICHARDSON, GEO.
ROBINSON, W. E.
SHEHAN, MICHAEL R.
STEIBER, SAUL
STOPPLEWORTH, LOUIS
VOGLER, JOHN N.
WEAYER, WM.
WHITE, J. W.
WINSLOW, D. E.

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Press Room

JOHN R. HAYS, Superintendent

FREDERICK VAN TASSEL Assistant Superintendent *Robert Lichenstein . Foreman John Blint, Jr. . . Foreman Harry F. Albeck Edward J. Dolan . . . Foreman . . . Foreman DECATUR F. MARMION Assistant Foreman ADOLPH, FRED DEACON, DAVID HARRIS, ALBERT ALBECK, CHAS. Decolle, Louis HARRIS, EDWARD ALBECK, WALTER DELANEY, PATRICK HENDERSON, GEORGE AMSTER, SAMUEL DELVENTHAL, ARTHUR HENDERSON, GEORGE I. ANDERMAN, HENRY DELVENTHAL, FRED. HEYER, JOSEPH ATKINSON, EDWARD DERBY, JOSEPH HEYER, JOSEPH F., JR. AUBER, WILLIAM DIODINE, FRANK HEYER, LAWRENCE AYERS, CHAS. DONNELLY, DANIEL HIMPLER, JOHN BAKER, LOUIS DONOHUE, JAMES HIRSHBERG, I. BARRINGER, HERBERT DONOHUE, PETER HOGAN, JOSEPH BENNETT, WILLIAM DONOHUE, PHILIP HOGAN, WALTER BERNDT, HERMAN DONOVAN, EDWARD HOLLAND, GEORGE HOPKINS, HENRY BIRCH, JOSEPH DRISCOLL, DAVID BISHOP, CHARLES ECKEL, CHARLES HORAN, EDWARD BLANEY, RUSSELL ELLISON, CHARLES HORN, WILLIAM BLINT, JOHN, SR. ERHARDT, BARTHOLOMEW HORNER, LOUIS BODUKY, JOSEPH FERRY, GEORGE HUNGERFORD, CHAS. BOGAN, WILLIAM FEY, EDWARD HYSLOP, WILLIAM FEY, JOHN H. JENNINGS, JOHN BOYD, J. BOYLAN, FRANK FINNERTY, MARTIN JOHNSON, FRANK KALMAN, HARRY FINNERTY, THOMAS BRANDON, JOHN FISHER, OTTO KARR, RICHARD BRANT, CHARLES BRODERICK, ARTHUR FITZGERALD, EGBERT KEAN, ELWOOD BRODERICK, JOHN FITZGERALD, J. KEARNS, GEORGE FITZSIMMONS, EDWARD KEENAN, OWEN BROSNAN, WILLIAM BURK, THOMAS FLANNIGAN, GEORGE KENNEDY, JOHN BURNS, JAMES FLINN, HENRY KENNELLY, DANIEL FOLEY, JOSEPH KENNELLY, JAMES BUTLER, JOHN KENNENGEISER, GEORGE CAMPBELL, ARTHUR FOLEY, STEPHEN FRANKLIN, JULIUS KENNY, WILLIAM CAMPBELL, LESTER KEYSER, E. CASEY, HAROLD FRENCH, JAMES CASSIDY, EDWARD GAMMON, WALTER KUHN, JOHN LANE, ALBERT GERRITY, GEORGE CLARK, GEORGE LANIGAN, KENNETH GERRITY, JAMES CLIFFORD, CORNELIUS LAYERY, DANIEL CONNERS, MICHAEL GILL, THOMAS LEAHY, JOHN CONROY, JOSEPH GOLD, EDWARD LEAHY, WILLIAM COOPER, GEORGE GORVEN, JOHN LEONARD, GEORGE GRAHAM, THOMAS COTTER, EDWARD GROTE, LOUIS LOGAN, GEORGE COTTER, THOMAS HAASE, HARRY LYONS, WILLIAM COULTER, WALTER MacDonald, Joseph HANSON, C. COYNE, EDWARD HARDY, RAYMOND MCCARTHY, EDWARD DALY, CHARLES

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Press Room — Continued

MCEVOY, EDWARD MCGUIRE, ARTHUR MCKEE, JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, B. MCPARTLAND, RICHARD MCQUADE, JOHN MACKIN, CHARLES MALLON, THOMAS MALONEY, FRANK MANN, JAMES MARR, DAVID MAXWELL, JOHN MAZZIE, ROBERT MEILLY, JOHN MOORE, MATHEW MOORE, PIERCE MORITZ, EDWARD MUFFIN, FRANK MULLANE, JOHN MULQUEEN, JOHN MURICE, PATRICK MURPHY, CHARLES MURPHY, WILLIAM MURRAY, RICHARD MYERS, LOUIS NEUMAN, THOMAS NIX, JAMES NOLTING, GEORGE

NORRIS, WILLIAM O'CONNOR, GEORGE o'connor, michael O'DEE, THOMAS O'HARA, JOHN O'MALLEY, MALARCKI O'SULLIVAN, PAUL PARDEE, ARTHUR PEPERSACK, JOHN PETERS, CHARLES PFISTER, FRANK PIASECKI, ED. POWERS, MICHAEL PURCELL, THOMAS QUINN, THOMAS RANDELL, GEORGE REDMOND, CHARLES REDMOND, PHILLIP REILLY, FRANK REYNOLDS, CLARENCE ROMMENS, LAWRENCE ROWE, JAMES SCHNEIDER, JACOB SCOTT, JAMES SHARKEY, CHARLES SHARKEY, JAMES A. SHARKEY, JOHN F. SHARKEY, JOHN, SR.

SIEGEL, ALFRED SMILEY, FRANK SMITH, J. SMITH, WILLIAM SPENCE, JOHN STEELE, WILLIAM STENGER, LOUIS STOESSER, LEONARD SULLIVAN, FRANK SULLIVAN, J. SULLIVAN, LEO SWIGART, PAUL TIERNEY, JOHN TOOMEY, JOSEPH TOOTH, NATHAN VALANTI, JAMES VOLCKENS, CHAS, WALSH, CHAS. WALSH, JOHN WATSON, JOSEPH WEBB, ROYAL WEBSTER, FRANK WESTON, CHARLES WHITEHORNE, GEORGE WHITEHOUSE, JAMES WILSON, ALBERT WOODARD, CLEMENT WRIGHT, WILLIAM

Roto Etching Department

EUGENE F. ELLIS, Superintendent

Frank Dimmock . John Hutchinson John B. Johnson

ANDRIE, FRED A.
BARRETT, WILLIAM COOPER, RAY CULLEN, PAT
DANIELS, THOS. V.
DEFOUR, JEAN C.
DIXON, JOS. C.
ERLER, CHARLES GILLICK, JOHN HANDWERK, HUGO

HARPER, ROLAND H.
HERRINGTON, RAY JOHNSON, W.
LANDO, FRANK MAGNUSON, ANDREW MILES, FORDHAM C.
MOONEY, CHRIS E.
MORGAN, WALTER A.
MUNZ, HAROLD NIEDERLE, MAX

PATTERSON, DAN J.
PAYNE, GEORGE QUANN, JOHN SCHWARTZ, JEAN SCHWENGER, FRED SHEA, THOMAS
TIERNEY, CHARLES VOELKER, ALBERT C.

Foreman

Foreman

Assistant Superintendent

Mail Room

Dan Corcoran, Superintendent

ARIS, JOHN ASTWOOD, EDWIN BARTLETT, CARL BEAVER, WILLIAM BECKER, CHARLES BEGGINS, CHRIS. J. BELABIN, LOUIS BENDER, CHARLES BEROLDT, MEMO BIDEAUX, LOUIS BIMMINGER, ERNEST BLACK, HARRY BOSS, ED. J. BOYCE, J. N. CAFFERTY, EARL P. CANGRO, JACOB CANTOR, HARRY CANTOR, LEO CASALASPRO, ANTHONY CASALASPRO, LOUIS CASALASPRO, MICHAEL *COCHRANE, DAVID COFFEY, JAS. J. CONNERS, JOHN CONNERS, THOMAS DALY, JOHN DICKSON, RICHARD DIGNEY, FRANK *DONOHUE, MICHAEL DONOYAN, ANDREW DONOYAN, JOHN A. DOUGHTY, CLARENCE DROGE, GEO., SR. DROGE, GEO., JR. EICHENBUSH, JOHN FARLEY, JOS. FERRIS, JOHN FLANAGAN, WM. J. FLETCHER, GEORGE POLEY, J. FRAZEE, JOHN GALLAGHER, MIKE

GLADMAN, ARTHUR GLEICH, LOUIS GOLDMAN, EMIL GOLDMAN, JOS. GORDON, SIDNEY GORELICK, PHIL GRAY, WILLIAM J. GREENHAUSE, ABE GROSS, CHAS. GROSS, HARRY GROSS, MAX GROSSMAN, ALEX GROVES, ED. HAUFF, DAVID HENRY, MICHAEL O. HINCK, HENRY HOFFSCHMIDT, WALTER ISAACS, JACOB JOHNSTON, ED. JONES, ROBERT KAST, JOHN KEOUGH, JOS. A. KIMBELL, JOHN KINWALD, SAM'L KLEIN, GUS KRENTZMAN, DAVE KRENTZMAN, SAM'L LARESCH, MICHAEL LARSON, RICHARD LEVY, ISIDOR LOCKARD, C. MCCAFFERTY, THOS. MCELROY, THOMAS MCSHERRY, WM. MAJER, CHAS. MARKS, MARKEY MARTIN, CLAUDE MAYHEW, CHAS. MAYROSE, WM. MILLER, REX MOONEY, JOHN MUIR, WM. F.

MULLER, ALEX. MURPHY, ED. MURPHY, PATRICK MYERS, C. O'KEEFE, DENIS PALTER, HARRY PATRICK, RAY PERREM, PAUL PETRY, PAUL PLUNKETT, JOHN POWERS, JOHN REDA, ANTHONY RODGERS, JULIAN ROHRBACKER, GEO. ROSE, WILLIAM ROSOFF, SAM'L ROWAN, RAY RUBENSTEIN, DAVID SCHWEITZER, FRED J. SCOFIELD, CHAS. SEMRICK, CARL SHAINE, LOUIS SIMON, SAM'L SNIZEK, ANTHONY STERN, DAVID STETTNER, THEO. STOLOFF, ABE STONE, CHAS. TAUSTINE, EMANUEL TULLY, FRANK VALENTINE, JOS. VER PAULT, GEO. WATSON, SAM'L WEED, ROY WEISMEYER, CHAS. WHITEMORE, FRANK WILLINS, MICHAEL WINDSOR, CHAS. WOLF, LOUIS WOLFSON, MICHAEL

^{*} Twenty-five years or more with The Times.

Transportation Department

THOMAS TALLON, Superintendent

BARNEY McTague Foreman of Dockloaders
James Sherry Foreman of Day Paper Handlers Maurice O'Connell Foreman of Night Paper Handlers

BACKUS, JAMES BACKUS, WM.
BOTTINY, WALTER
BRADBURY, J.
BUCKLEY, MICHAEL BURNES, ARTHUR BYRNE, HARRY CARROLL, J.
CLARK, FRANK CONOLLY, FRANK DAWSON, ROBT.

DOIG, HARRY FALLON, JAMES FISHER, JOHN
FITZSIMMONS, N.
GAYIGAN, JOHN
GRADY, WM.
GRAHAM, THOS.
HOPKINS, JOHN JOHNSON, FREDERICK KEARNS, JAMES LANE, JOSEPH

LENNON, PATRICK
LENNON, WM.
MCELWAIN, PATRICK
MCKENNA, PATRICK
MORIARITY, PATRICK
OLSEN, CHRIS.
SHEEHY, MICHAEL SULLIYAN, DENNIS
WOODS, FRANK
WOODS, FRANK

Times Building and West 43rd St. Addition

GEO. L. ECKERSON, Agent and Manager

FRED BRAZONG Foreman Elevators Michael Fallon Chief Stationary Engineer

ARCHER, JOSEPH ARMSTRONG, SAM BARRETT, KATE BICKEL, ANTON BOOTH, ELIJAH CARLEY, MINNIB CHAPMAN, E. CONNELLY, JAMES COUGHLIN, ELIZ. CRONIN, ANNIE CUNNINGHAM, MARY DALTON, JAMES DEHATE, MAIGON DOCKERY, STEPHEN DURKIN, MARGARET FARROLL, MARY GRANT, J.

HIGGINS, THOMAS JENKINS, BERT JACOBI, CHARLES JOHNSTON, NELLIE KENNEDY, BRIDGET KILKENNY, PATRICK LEARY, CATHERINE LEONARD, JOHN LORUM, GEO. MCCARTHY, JOHN MCCORMACK, EDWARD MCCUTTE, NELLIE MCGUIRE, JOHN MCKIERNAN, HUGH MCTAGUE, NELLIE MANCHESTER, ANNIE MENDRLA, MARIE

MERZ, JOHN MILLER, LOUISA MINOGUE, EDWARD MONAHAN, JAMES
MCDONNELL, THOS. J.
O'NEILL, PATRICK
O'TOOLE, PATRICK
PATTERSON, ANNIE
PATTERSON, MARY RYAN, FRANK SMITH, AGNES SNOW, M.
SULLIVAN, PATRICK
WALSH, RICHARD
WARD, THOS. P.

AUDITING DEPARTMENT

HARRY H. WEINSTOCK, Auditor

RUDOLPH WEINACHT					Mgr. Auditing Staff
					Mgr. Editorial Payroll Dept.
					Mgr. Accounting Dept.
CLIFFORD H. PYLE.
					Mgr. Receiving Dept.
FRANK SCHMIDT		٠			Mgr. Paper and Ink Dept.

ABEL, MARGARET AGMAN, ABRAHAM BELMAR, MAURICE BERLINGHOFF, WILLIAM BROWN, WILLIAM B. COHN, MYRON CONNOLLY, HUGH CULLEN, JOHN C. DAWSON, ALLAN DUNLOP, JOSEPH ENGLANDER, BENJAMIN FRANK, MIRIAM GLASSBERG, PHILLIP GOLDSTONE, EVELYN JOHNSON, OSCAR KABAKOW, MINNIE KAISER, GEORGE

KATZ, JOHN LAKE, SAMUEL LAWLER, EDWARD LEHRHAUPT, MORRIS LEWIS, ALFRED LEWIS, ELSIE MATTISON, EDWARD MENZER, NETTIE MILLER, HARRY MOORE, WALTER NETZER, ANNA OEHLER, RICHARD PEMBLETON, FRED ROTH, JOSEPH SCHENK, EDWARD SCHLEICHER, ANNABELLE WHITTAKER, JOSEPH SKINNER, ARTHUR

SMITH, HELEN SOLOMONS, HARRY STANGER, MARGARET STERLING, CAMILLA STRAIN, SAMUEL STROBEL, LOUISE TEAGUE, CRESTWELL TERRIBERRY, NATHAN THOMPSON, WILLIAM VOGEL, HERMAN WAGNER, STANLEY WASSERMAN, DAVID WASSERMAN, HARRIET WEINBERGER, DOROTHY WHEELER, FREDERICK WORMSER, LEON

GENERAL DEPARTMENTS

Purchasing Agent LUCIEN FRANCK CARL HOTOPP . Assistant Purchasing Agent EDWARD A. HEGI . . MILDRED C. SMITH . WILLIAM M. JACKSON Cashier . Assistant Cashier . Manager Personnel Department Walter A. Madigan . Manager Restaurant

ALVAREZ, JOHN BRONDOLO, TONY BROWN, WILLIAM COLGAN, WILLIAM D. DE PASS, ADRIAN FAHERTY, MARY A. PLASCH, SYLVIA FONTANA, LOUIS FOYE, HARRY, JR. FOYE, HENRY P. GEHRIG, GEORGE

GERSHENSON, L. HEGEDUS, HENRICH JACOBUS, PHEBE JUPITER, EDWARD KEARNEY, CATHERINE LEMMER, ANNA LORENZEN, ELIZABETH A. MCDERMOTT, JOHN MCNEELEY, MARY O'SHEA, WILLIAM J. SCHNURRER, CHRIS.

SCHUTTINGER, KATHERINE SHEEHAN, KITTY SMITH, B. TORCHIO, LAWRENCE TORINO, JOSEPH TUCKER, KENNETH WAKELEY, DELBERT WALTERS, HILLIS WEAVER, MRS. JOSEPHINE WINSTON, ANDREW ZIMMERMAN, ALBERT

CURRENT HISTORY, MIDWEEK PICTORIAL AND WAR VOLUMES

GEORGE W. Ochs Oakes Editor and Manager

Editorial Staff

BLYTHE, WALTER E. DUFFIELD, J. W. KURTH, OTTO PRESTON, THOS. B. SHUMAN, EDWIN L. SNOW, DR. F. H.

WALSH, MATTHEW J. WATERBURY, IVAN C. WHITE, CAPT. MICHAEL A.E.

> Manager Sales Manager

Bookkeeper

Business Office

Kresge, Homer D. . Burgess, Frank T. . Hechelheim, Louis .

EDMUNDS, L. M. LYNCH, ERGER, LOUISE MCELDA:

ADAMS, ARTHUR R. ALBERT, MIRIAM ALLAN, MURIEL ANDERSON, HILDA BARRETT, ADELE V. BERGLING, ANNA BLOOMER, W. BOLSTAD, EDW. BOTNER, PAULINE BROWN, WM. M. BURKETT, R. M. BURNS, EDW. M. CONVISER, ELLA CORRELL, JOHN I. CRAIG, LILLIAN DICKINSON, CARRIE

ERGER, LOUISE ESPOSITA, MARGARET EZECHEL, KATHERINE FECHNER, LEON FERNEEKES, ELSA M. FINGER, SHIRLEY FINKHOUSER, FRED A. FINKHOUSER, JAS. A. GREEN, CHAS. J. HALL, GERTRUDE JACKSON, MORRIS LAMB, VINCENT D. LASHER, MORRIS LAUBER, SAMUEL LEVY, ROBT. SAM'L LOCKLEY, ROSE

LYNCH, G. M. MCELDARRY, MAY MELLINGER, EDW. D. MORRIS, KATHERINE NEUMANN, J. A. O'BRIEN, MARION O'SULLIVAN, MARGARET QUINN, S. T. RODENBERG, G. ROSE, LILY SALCEDO, WM. SUSSMAN, MOE TALIMER, BERNARD VRADENBURG, ARTHUR WARNOCK, M. C. WEISS, SAMUEL

ANNALIST

Louis O. Morney alden, john ames, richard

DONAHUE, ELIZABETH

Edward G. Rich, Editor

CULLUM, WELCOME H. HARMS, AUGUST A.

Manager Business Office POLLOCK, JOHN

WIDE WORLD PHOTO DEPARTMENT

Jules Dumas Sales Manager

CANFIELD, JOHN DEVLIN, JAMES GLUCKMAN, RAE
GOTTLEIB, GERALD
LEVY, ARTHUR

LUBBEN, PAUL
METZGER, JOHN F.
NESENSOHN, C. D.
NESENSOHN, JOHN A.
NEWTON, WILLIAM

O'MEARA, JAMES PEYROULET, JOHN ROSE, RICHARD STERN, NATHAN
TAYLOR, M. M.

TIDEWATER PAPER MILLS COMPANY Brooklyn, N. Y.

A C O				- · · ·
Adolph S. Ochs		• •		President
ARTHUR HAYS SULZBERGER	₹	• •		Vice-President and Treasurer
Ben. C. Franck		• •		Secretary
ARTHUR F. A	LLEN .			General Manager
JOHN B. WEST				Superintendent
Robert O. Sternberger				Plant Engineer
IRWIN H. COPELAND				Pulp Expert
A. F. McCoy				Chemist
F. P. Ashworth		• •	: :	Purchasing Agent
W. S. CHAMBERLAIN			• •	Cachier
A. E. Davies				Master Mechanic
A. Mercier				Chief Millwright
John J. Lee				Chief Electrician
Wm. Brown
Var A Canana				Chief Steam Engineer
VAN A. SBEBER				Boss Machine Tender
WM. COLE	• • •	• •		Boss Machine Tender
P. J. KILAWEE
H. Baker				Beater Engineer
F. E. VINING				Beater Engineer
D. J. MURPHY				Beater Engineer
				Foreman Shipping Room
Geo. A. LEAVITT				Yard Superintendent
BARNEY ALFONZA	JEAN DEC	ARLE		THOS. ILLINGWORTH
	EDW. DEL			JOHN JACKAS
•	JOS. C. DE
	JOHN DEV			CHARLES JOHNSON
	GEORGE I			JOHN JONES
	JOHN DON RICHARD :
	JULIUS D			STENLI KEIRMARSKI
	M. DZYOV			JOHN KENNY
	THOS. J. 1		1	PRANK KINGSTON
ADDRESS - DOWN			•

ARTHUR BROWN ARTHUR F. BROWN THOS. BROWN J. CAPEN ALEX CLARK THOS. COCHRAN JOHN CORLISS ROBERT CORNWALL T. COSTENO JOHN COUGHLIN GUS CARLSON PATRICK DALEY THOS. DALEY JAS. W. DAVIS J. E. DAVIS

FRANK FABER THOS. FEWER M. FOGARTY PETER PRAGENT VINCENZO FRAGNITO WALTER FREDERICKSON M. LINDEMANN JAMES GAIGOL JAS. GALLANAUGH ROCCO GERVASE THOMAS GIBBONS JAMES GRANT J. GRAVES IGNATZ GREGOR ROBERT HAMMINGTON HENRY J. HITT

T. KINGSTON WALTER KONAPACKI STANLEY KURARSKY MOSES LANCTO PETER LANGMAN LEON MCDOUGAL FRANK MCGEENEY DANIEL MCLOON A. MAELES S. MAESTR E. M. MASKELL GEORGE MAYHEW FAHECK MEHMED CHAS. MERKELS

TIDEWATER PAPER MILLS COMPANY - Continued

L. C. MERRITT
JOHN MILLER
HENRY MULLEN
M. NADLER
CHRIS NAGEL
GEORGE NEWBY
EDW. NORDENBERG
PETER OSMANSKI
JAMES PETERSON
T. PETTONE
JOS. PITTULE
STEVE POLICKEL
CHARLES PROSSER
F. RHOOP
JNO. RIORDAN

BENJ. ROSS
A. J. RUDOLPH
ALFRED RUEL
ALBERT SAGATAS
AUGUST SANDSTROM
AUGUST SCEMEL
JOHN SCHICK
CARL SCROXTON
E. F. SEEMS
GEORGE SEILER
FRANK SHIMSAW
F. J. SIMON
GEORGE SLATER
ORVILLE SLATER
T. STANKOWITZ

HARRY STRINGER
NICK TROICKY
GEORGE TURNER
T. VELCH
J. WALSH
D. WARD
L. W. WHETSTONE
O. WHITMAN
A. T. WILLIAMS
JOHN WILLE
T. WILLISITISKI
I. WYEROSKI
JOHN WYZLINSKI

"Abbey Arthur M " 240	Brest-Litovsk, 355
Adama Hanny 76: "Education	Bright Promier 496
"Abbey, Arthur M.," 349 Adams, Henry, 76; "Education of Henry Adams," 76	Briand, Premier, 386
of Henry Adams, 70	Brisbane, Albert, 11
Advertiser, The, 390	Brisbane, Arthur, 11
Advertising, 26, 192, 193, 219 et	British "White Paper," 337, 338
seq., 238, 317, 319 et seq., 370,	Brook Farm, 10
392, 402	Bryan, William Jennings, 74, 226,
Albany Evening Journal, 3, 4, 31	248, 249, 252
"All the News That's Fit to	Bryant, William Cullen, 82
Print," 197, 198, 199, 212	Buchanan, James, 37
Alloway, Harry, 180	Buchanan, James, 37 Bull Run, battle of, 55
Annalist, The, 328 Antipathy to Times, 260 et seq.	Burgess, John W., 339
Antipathy to Times, 260 et seq.	Burns, George H., 36
Anti-Saloon League, 255	Burnside, General, 57
Appomattox Courthouse, battle of,	Business policy of Times, 310 et seq.
ξτ
Arctic, disaster, 35, 36	Cabell, southern orator, 31
Arthur, Chester A., 152	Cable, ocean, 37, 43, 119, 162,
Associated Press, 43, 179, 230, 241,	163, 164, 231, 283
11350ciated 11css, 43, 179, 230, 241,	Campaign Times, 24
367, 385 Astor, John Jacob, 97	Capital of Times, xv, 17, 27, 169,
Aston, John Jacob, 97	Capital Of 11mes, 14, 17, 27, 109,
Atherton, Gertrude, 378	170, 185, 191, 193
Aviation, development of, 287 et	Caricatures, 64
seq.; prizes, 288, 289	Carson, Major J. M., 377
D 1.1. 4	Cartoons, 130, 196
Baltimore American, The, 351,	Cary, Edward, xiv, 73, 78, 137,
Barnum, P. T., 10	169, 182, 376
Beck, James M., 338, 339	Censorship, American, 368
Beecher, Henry Ward, 61, 124	Century, The, 211
Behl, Private Harold J., 369	Chamberlain, Senator, 354
Bennett, James Gordon, 7, 8, 9, 10,	Chandler, Zachariah, 135
21, 63, 77, 79	Charities fostered by Times, 304
Bernstorff, German ambassador to	et seq.
U. S., 361	Chattanooga Times, The, Adolph S.
Bigelow, John, 134, 140; 1869, 81,	Ochs, publisher of, in 1896,
83; 82	178
Birchall, F. T., 364	Chesterton, G. K., 339
Blaine, James G., 128, 131, 150,	Chicago Daily News, 390
151	Chicago Evening Post. The. 288
Blanket sheets, 6	Chicago Evening Post, The, 288 Chicago Record-Herald, The, 290
Board of Supervisors, New York,	Chicago Tribune, The, 275, 284,
1869, 90 Palabardi Bussian ass	382, 390 Christmas contributions, 304
Bolsheviki, Russian, 355	Circulation of Times, xviii, 26, 27,
Book reviews, 38, 213 et seq.
Borah, Senator, 382	64, 118, 169, 203, 211, 245,
Bradley, Lieut. William, 369	246, 307, 310, 315, 389, 402

Civil War, 14, 16, 46, 48 et seq., 84, Eliot, Charles W., 339 Ely, Alfred, 182, 184 263 Clark, Champ, 250, 251 England, relations with, 160 Clemenceau, Georges, 367 Erie Railroad conspiracy, 82, 98 Cleveland, Grover, 154, 155 et seq., Espionage Act, 368 171, 189 Collier's Weekly, 308 European news, 24, 25, 38, 275, 279 et seq. Evening Mail, New York, 235 Columbia School of Journalism, Everett, Edward, 61 Commercial Cable Company, 285 Expenses of Times, 26, 63, 77, 240, Confederacy, southern, sympathy of New York papers with, 59 Conkling, 144 Connolly, Richard B., 90, 95, 97, Federal Reserve Act, 252, 258 Field, Cyrus W., 100 Fillmore, Millard, 29 Financial News in Times, 217, 98, 102, 103, 106, 126 Conservatism of Times, 266 et Fire report in Times, 25 Fisk, James, Jr., 75, 82, 100, Cook, Dr. Frederick, 291 et seq. Cooper, Peter, 96, 100 "Copperheads," 68, 71, 72 Flint, Charles R., 181 Foch, Marshal, 366 Foord, John, 98, 106, 130 et seq., Courier and Enquirer, 4, 11, 13 Court calendars, reports of, 210 Cox, James M., 259, 374, 381 Forbes, John M., 149 Foster, John W., 162 Croker, 86 Crounse, Lorenzo, 58 Fourieristic Socialism, 10, 79 Cuban question, 225 Fowler, Robert Ludlow, 339 Fox, Mortimer J., 327 Franco-Prussian War, 37, 123 Current History Magazine, 328 Curtiss airplane, 288 Czernin, Count, 367 Free Silver, 74, 178 Dana, Charles A., 6, 77, 94, 95, Free-Soil Democrats, 15 161, 203, 199 Davidson, E. Mora, 184 Free-Soil Whigs, 14 Freedman's Bureau Bill, 66 Davis, Jefferson, 66, 71 Davis, John W., 259 Davis, Oscar King, 361 Garfield, James A., 144 et seq. Garrett, Garet, 361 Garrison, William Lloyd, 48 De Forest wireless, 283 Democratic Party, 9, 32; and Gold standard, 74, 160; National Convention in San Francisco, Gatling gun, 60 German propaganda, 187, 189,

Dyer, Henry L., 168 Editorials, 218; during World War, 335; editorial attacks, Eidlitz, C. L. W., 325

1920, 382; policies of, 253, et seq.; and Sun and Herald, 9 Dernburg, Dr. Bernhard, 339 Dithmar, E. A., 376 Douglas, Stephen A, 50 Dunnell, E. G., 377

262, 340 et seq. German "White Paper," 337, 338

Golden jubilee of Times, 1901,

243 Gould, Jay, 75, 82, 100, 148 Grant, U. S., General, 39, 56, 65,

Gibbs, Philip, 293, 361 Gilder, Richard Watson, 211 Globe, New York, 224 Gold Democratic ticket, 74

Grasty, Charles H., 362, 378 Greaves, Arthur, xv, 274, 376

82, 125, 149

Greeley, Horace, 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11, Jones, George, 3, 4, 5, 12, 13, 17, 18, 19, 26, 27, 65, 77, 80, 81, 83, 92, 100, 102, 116, 126, 129, 13, 21, 22, 32, 59, 69, 70, 80, 83, 85, 121, 197 Green, Andrew H., 112, 126 149, 164; death, 166 Jones, Gilbert, 168 Journal, New York, 196, 200, 222, Hall, A. Oakey, 89, 93, 95, 100, 102, 109, 115 Halsey, Francis W., 213 224, 231, 232, 237, 238, 239, Hamilton, Claude, 288 Hanna, Mark, 160 Journalism, history of, 79 Jubilee Supplement of Times, vii Harding, Warren G., 373, 381, Kansas-Nebraska Act, 32 Kilmer, Sergeant Joyce, 369 Knapp, C. W., 376 Kohlsaat, Herman H., 180 Harper's Weekly, 93, 95 Hart, Charles F., 364 Hartley, Marcellus, 184 Kossuth, Louis, 28, 29, 40 Havemeyer, William F., 112 Hayes, Rutherford B., 131 et seq. La Prensa, 327 League of Nations, 261, 371, 378 Headlines, display, 39, 106 Hearst, William Randolph, 294 Herald, New York, 7, 8, 9, 12, 19, 22, 26, 33, 34, 35, 36, 50, 64, 76, 117, 197, 200, 236, 241, Le Hir, George, 362 Lee, Robert E., 39, 56, 58, 59, 70 Letters from Readers, 217, 235 Liberty Loan Committee, 303 292, 323, 390, 400 Hewitt, Abram S., 136 Lincoln, Abraham, 16, 49, 62, 65, 66, 299 Lloyd George, David, 300 Loewenthal, Henry, xv, 274 Hill, David B., 158 Hill, Frederic Trevor, 299 Hoffman, John T., 89, 95 Honor Roll of Times, 369 London Daily Chronicle, 275, 293, 359 London Daily Mail, 360 London Daily Telegraph, 290 "Hubbell, G. M.," 349 Hughes, Charles E., 384 Hurlburt, William Henry, 45 London Times, 42, 84, 244, 275 et Ludendorff, 366 Lusitania, 344, 352, 353, 364 Lynch, Rev. Dr. Frederick, 337 Income of Times, 118, 156 Index, New York Times, 328 Irish question, 12, 262 Italy, War in 1859, 41, 44 Mackenzie, Andrew C., 325 "Malakoff" (Dr. W. E. Johnston), Jackson, Andrew, 257 James, Edwin L., 362 42, 44 Manhattan Elevated Railway James, Lionel, Capt., 283 Company, 148 Manning, Major William Sinkler, Janvier, Thomas A., 298 Japan, in World War, 359
"Jasper," 54
Jennings, Louis J., 84 et seq., 105 et Marconi, 277, 278 Market reports, 209 seq., 128, 130 Jerome, Leonard W., 27, 59, 81 Marshall, Ernest, 378 Matin (Paris), 275 Maverick, Augustus, vii, 6, 14, Joffre, General, 28, 368 John Brown's Raid, 49 20, 23, 36, 47 McAdoo, William G., 259 Johnson, Andrew, 15, 68, 73 Johnston, Albert Sidney, 41 McAneny, George, 375 McCall, John A., 160

Johnston, W. E., 42

McClure, S. S., 209
McDowell, General, 55
McKinley, William, 226, 243
Meade, General, 56
Mercury, New York, 178
Miller, Charles R., xiii, 137, 150, 161, 169, 181, 182, 194, 254, 342, 347, 350, 351
Miller, Warner, 158
Morgan, Christopher, 11
Morgan, E. B., 17, 18, 104, 128
Morgan, J. P. & Co., 189
Mormons, 41
Morning Telegraph, The, 178
Moyer, G. B., 378
"Mugwump" campaign, 155

Nation, The, 78
Neanderthal Socialism, 11
New Harmony, 10
New York City, historical articles on, 298; government of, 75; politics, 86 et seq., 89, 110
New York Life Insurance Company, 164
New York Printing Company, 92
New York Times Publishing Company, 169, 184, 185, 348
News-gathering, 274 et seq.
Nivelle, General, 368
Norris, John, xiv, 377
North American Review, 77
North German Lloyd Steamship Company, 227, 228
Northcliffe, Lord, 275, 349
Norwell, Caleb C., 83

O'Brien, James, 102, 103 Ochs, Adolph S., 6, 172, 178 et seq., 203 et seq. 254, 347, 389 Ogden, Rollo, 376 Oneida Community, 10 O'Rourke, Matthew J., 182 Oulahan, Richard V., 378

Paine, J. H., 377
Palmer, A. Mitchell, 259
Paper, cost, 26, 375
Paris Exposition edition of *Times*1900, 240
"Park Trench" scheme of Liberty Loan Committee, 303

Parker, Alton B., 249 Parkin, Dr. George R., 278 Payne, George Henry, 79 Peace Conference, 378 Peary, Admiral, 291 et seq. Personal journalism, 162 Perain, General, 368 Petit Parisien, 209 Peverelly, T. L., 376 Philadelphia Record, 236 Phillips, abolitionist, 1860, 49 Phillips, Barnet, 377 Pictorial Supplement of Times, Pierce, Private Edward B., 369 Plumb, J. B., 17 Political news, 296 et seq. Post, George B., 165 Press, New York, 223 Price of Times, 27, 169, 233, 239 Prohibition, 269 Pulitzer, Joseph, 161, 195

Radicalism in America, 264 et seq. Railroad, use of in journalism, 8
Raymond, Henry J., vii, 3 et seq., 11 et seq., 14, 26 et seq., 39, 48 et seq., 55, 56, 65 et seq., 71, 74, 77, 78, 358
Recorder, New York, 182
Reick, William C., xv, 274
Reid, John C., 123, 132, 137, 139, 151, 156
Republic (White Star Liner), 284
Republican Party, 15, 16, 32, 253 et seq.
Restoration of Times, 1896-1900, 175 et seq.
Richardson, Albert D., 84
Roosevelt, Theodore, 149, 249, 258, 296, 300, 340
Root, Frank D., 147
Ruggles, Francis B., 17
Russo-Japanese War, 276, 283

St. John, Daniel B., 17
Saturday Book Review, 213 et seq.
Schiff, Jacob H., 339
Schuyler, Montgomery, 377
Scott, Winfield, 19, 29, 30
Selden, Charles A., 362, 378
Semi-weekly Times, 24

Senate, U. S., inquisition of Times	Times-Recorder Company, 182
	Times, The New York, character
in 1915, 345, 351 "Sensational" journalism, 234	of, ix et seq., 6, 24, 176, 188,
Coward William U 76 40	01, 12 et 3eq., 0, 24, 1/0, 100,
Seward, William H., 16, 49	243 et seq., 370 et seq.; estab-
Shepard, George, 84	lishment of, 5; first issue, 20,
Ship Purchase Bill, 345, 346	225; policies, ix, 48, 53, 154,
Simonton, James W., 41	219 et seq., 243 et seq., 310 et
Sinn Fein, 187, 341	seq., 370 et seq., etc.; staff, 48,
Size of page of Times, 371; of issue,	60, 370 et seq., etc.
27, 370	Titanic disaster, 295
Slavery 7 14 21 48 et sea	Tracy, Benjamin F., 74
Slavery, 7, 14, 31, 48 et seq. Sloane, William Milligan, 339	Track Compar ver ver
Carialiam a60	Trask, Spencer, 181, 184
Socialism, 268	Tribune, New York, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9,
Spanish War, 226 et seq.; 238	11, 12, 19, 20, 23, 26, 33, 59,
Speeches reported in full, 300	76, 83, 84, 94, 123, 133, 135,
Spinney, George F., 169	196, 236, 241, 341
Sporting News of Times, 301,	Truman, Ben C., Major, 57
371	Trusts, 267
Springfield Republican, 151	Trusts, 267 Tweed, W. M., 40, 75, 81 et seq.,
Star, The, 113	89, 110
Star Route frauds, 1881, 146	Typographical Union, 274
	Typograpinear Onion, 2/4
Steamship, use of in journalism,	II. J
8, 37 Stevens, Thaddeus, 65	Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act,
Stevens, I naddeus, 05	TT : 252
otrauss, Samuel, 370	United Press organization, 179;
Sumter, Fort, attack on, 51, 62	end of, 240
Sun, New York, 6, 7, 9, 19, 94, 203,	United States as world power, 248
204, 223, 224, 390
Sunday Magazine of Times, 212	Van Anda, Carr V., xiii, 274, 364
Sunday Times, The, first issue, 63	Venezuelan question, 159
Sweeney, Peter B., 90, 100	Verdun, battle of, 362
Sweeney, Peter B., 90, 100 Swinton, William, 58	Versailles, Treaty of, 372
Syndicalism, 268	Viaduct Railroad scheme, 100
	Victoria, Queen, 37; jubilee of,
Taft, William Howard, 250, 297
	Von Prioren Arthur 440
Tammany Hall, 8, 12, 18, 59, 76,	Von Briesen, Arthur, 339
86, 88, 97, 115, 222, 235,	W-1. D. C.
236	Wade, Ben, 65
Tariff, 74, 146, 249	Wall Street, 75, 83, 164
Tariff, 74, 146, 249 Taylor, G. B., 377	Wallach, Leopold, 178, 377
Taylor, James B., 81, 92, 128	Walsh, T. J., Senator, 347
Telegraph, use of in journalism, 8,	War Department, in Civil War, 57, 59
33, 37, 43, 53, 289, 297, 383 Temps, Le (Paris), 209	Weather, 25
Thompson, J. H., 377	Webb, James Watson, 4, 5, 9, 28,
Tilden, Samuel J., 74, 112, 114,	29, 30
125, 130, 133 et seq.	Webster, Daniel, 29
Tilton Theodore 124	Weed, Thurlow, 4, 16, 17
Tilton, Theodore, 124 Times Buildings, first, 47, 322;	Weekly Family Times, 23, 24
cound 16r 202 proces	Wellman, Walter, 290
second, 165, 322; present,	Wells David A -
191, 322 et seq.	Wells, David A., 74
Times for California, 24	Wesley, E. B., 5, 12, 17, 26, 27
Times Illustrated Magazine, 213	Westbrook, Theodoric R., 148

Whig, 9, 14, 29, 32
"White Paper," British, 373;
German, 337, 338
Wile, Frederic William, 337
Wiley, Louis, xiv
Wilkie, Enid, 363
Williams, George F., 57
Williams, Wythe, 362
Wilson, Woodrow, 250, 251, 252, 350, 352 et seq., 372
Wireless, use of in journalism, 277 et seq.

Wood, Fernando, 88 Woodward, James T., 184 World, New York, 183, 195, 196, 200, 222, 231, 232, 237, 238, 239, 255, 287, 341, 351, 390 World War, 187, 246, 253, 300, 331 et seq.

Yancey, William L., 50 "Yellow" journalism, 7, 195, 234, Young, Brigham, 41

CONSERVATION 2001

