THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, FEBRUARY 2, 1867.

WE now issue the first number of this Journal fully relying on the many assurances we have received of cordial support and co-operation; and our confidence in this respect is not the less when we bear in mind that this publication was first conceived solely with a view to the advancement of the interests of the profession in this country, and is now undertaken in the same spirit, and with the same paramount object, and not merely as a speculation that will be profitable to the promoters. For this reason, too, our first number, though not purely experimental, cannot be expected fully to satisfy the proposed object of this Journal, but must be regarded as chiefly intended to entitle us to receive that full measure of support, which is an essential condition of its more complete organization and success.

Although the prospectus already issued fully explains the objects proposed to be attained, the present appears to be a fitting occasion to place before our readers, in a more permanent form, the motives which have induced us to embark in this undertaking, and the principles on which we propose to conduct it.

The want of a publication exclusively devoted to the interests of our profession has never been so much felt as at the present time, when new powers and privileges of vast extent and importance have been, by a recent legislative enactment, conferred on the representatives of the general body of the attorneys and solicitors of this country.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL has been undertaken to supply this want, with the view of aiding the Incorporated Law Society in the faithful and satisfactory discharge of its duties; and affording, at the same time, to every member of the profession the means of fully and freely discussing all subjects of importance to the general body.

Although mainly designed, in the first instance, for the legal public, this Journal will be found to embrace a far more extended sphere of utility. It will contain much that will prove interesting and important to the general public, but more especially to the mercantile community.

The plan we have proposed to ourselves is to supply early and accurate information, obtained from the most authentic official sources, as to the particulars and progress of the various matters pending in the several courts and offices, besides the earliest intimation of any circumstance in connexion with such proceedings which may be of general interest and importance. And this information is not intended to be limited to a mere list of names and cases, as an arrangement has been effected, under the sanction of the Council of Law Reporting in

Digitized by Google

Ireland, with the gentlemen of the Bar now engaged in reporting (for that body) in the several courts of law and equity, by which the subscribers to this Journal will be furnished with short notes of current decisions in the shape of weekly notes, which will be found by both branches of the profession to form a most useful supplement to the Irish reports now in progress.

Each number will contain short comments upon current and general topics of legal interest; and in each will be given, so far as same may have been fixed for the ensuing week, the business of the courts, especially of the Landed Estates' Court and the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

It is also intended to publish, from time to time, reports of points of practice decided at the Assizes, and such decisions of Courts of Quarter Sessions as will prove valuable to the practitioners in these courts.

It will be our especial care to supply to Law Students the earliest and fullest intelligence as to examinations and lectures.

While we freely open our columns to correspondents it must be understood that every communication shall be carefully excluded from our pages which is of a purely personal nature, or calculated in any way to disturb that good understanding between the different branches of the legal profession, which is so essential to their well-being.

Our subscribers will thus be furnished with information upon all public matters connected with the profession which can either serue or interest them.

WE publish in another column the particulars of the prizes which the Council of the Incorporated Society of Attorneys and Solicitors propose to establish, to be competed for both at the preliminary and final examination of apprentices. It is gratifying to see that the Society are prepared so soon to redeem the pledges given to the public in their statement in support of the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act of last session. They then insisted with great force on the claims of the profession to an improved and higher test of education, and urged that much might be effected in that direction when the interest of those most directly concerned were allied with powers of self-government and proper and fitting inducements to higher exertion held out to candidates. It is obvious that the very great advantages which must result, both to the profession and the public, from the educational tests now required, will be largely enhanced by making the examinations competitive, and thus creating among the candidates a healthy spirit of emulation and anxiety for distinction. Of the utility of an examination (immediately previous to admission to practice) in subjects exclusively professional we do not believe any one has ever expressed a doubt; objections have, however, occasionally been urged against the expediency of requiring from candidates for apprenticeship a certain degree of proficiency in the elements of a liberal education. These objections are two-fold, and, indeed, opposite: one class of objectors urge that the required standard is so low as not to be a sufficient test of general education and capacity. Now, although we should much prefer to see the standard higher, and believe the move made by the Incorporated Law Society to be a step in the right direction, yet we cannot admit that the fact of the present test not being in every respect perfectly satisfactory is any valid reason for its total abolition. To the other class of objectors, who urge that the required standard is so high as to prevent many deserving young men, who fail to qualify, from entering the profession, the answer is plain—such is the very object of the examination, to exclude from the ranks of a profession that requires a high degree of intelligence men who do not possess faculties capable of mastering the very rudiments of a liberal education, or who have not the energy and perseverance sufficient to enable them to do so, whose admission would bring little credit to the profession, and who would be by no means fitted for its varied and responsible duties. This whole subject was, in the year 1846, very fully considered by a select committee of the House of Commons. We extract from their excellent report the following remarks upon the subject of the qualifications then proposed, and which were much higher than those at present required:—"If the requirements demanded are somewhat higher than what might be expected from opportunities at present within the reach of the generality of young clerks—they assuredly are not higher than what are found to be indispensable in after-life for even a decent discharge of professional duties." And the committee go on to say, that the conclusion at which they had arrived, after the most careful consideration, was, that "The establishing thus, at the outset, a high standard of education for apprentices would effect in a marked manner the entire remainder of their course—it would enable them to profit by such instruction as might be within their reach—it would lay a foundation on which they might build future acquisitions, which, without such foundation, might probably never have been thought of; and though not of itself synonymous, with those gentlemanly principles and conduct upon which so much stress was laid, it would at least furnish a high probability that they had not been neglected." On the passing of the Act of 1861, conferring on law clerks of ten years' standing the privilege of admission after three years' service, it was sought to introduce clauses which (had they passed into law) would, in a great degree, have rendered the rules regarding these examinations inoperative; but this intention was defeated by the exertions of the Law Society; and such clerks were, by that Act, expressly required to be examined in pursuance of the Benchers' rules. Subsequently the law clerks presented a memorial to the Benchers, seeking to have these rules relaxed in their case; but the Benchers wisely and properly made no concession in their favour, nor did they in any instance, that we are aware of, dispense with the preliminary examination. We earnestly hope that the judges who themselves, as Benchers, were the first to sanction these rules, and to whom is now reserved a discretionary power of controlling the action of the Incorporated Law Society, will adhere to these principles on which they have hitherto acted, and will warmly support the efforts of the Council to raise the intellectual and social status of the profession, and thus secure its true efficiency and influence.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

We publish elsewhere the Report which has just been adopted at the Annual Meeting of this Association; it deserves the attention of our readers The Association has been in existence some three or four years, and appears to have been enabled, even in that short time, to afford considerable relief. It is, however, to be regretted that the funds at the disposal of the Committee have been insufficient to admit of their granting aid in very many instances where the circumstances were such as to call for it; but which, in the exercise of their trust—administering a very limited fund—they were forced to refuse. We trust this will not be so in future; and we are happy to have the opportunity afforded us in this, our first number, of making known to such of the profession as may have been in ignorance of it, that such a society is in operation. It can scarcely need anything we could say to recommend it; and we refer those who feel an interest in its object to the Report itself.

CURRENT TOPICS.

At the inaugural dinner at the Mansion house on New Year's Day, the Right Hon. William L. Joynt, Lord Mayor, signalized the occasion by giving as a toast "The Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland." We take the report of his remarks from Saunders:—

"He was sure it was not too much to ask them to drink the health of the honoured profession to which he belonged. Possibly, as they were unaccustomed to the toast, they were a little surprised at his audacity in proposing it. Any success that he himself had had in life he owed to that profession. Fifteen years ago he began in its humblest walks; and by patience, perseverance, and honourable attention to his duties, he had found himself able to realize the best and proudest hope that any man could have in this life, as far as worldly prosperity went—the proud privilege of being independent. He was very glad to see many distinguished gentlemen belonging to his profession in the room. He could not ask them all to respond; but he would join with the toast the name of one of them, Mr. Durdin, an alderman of the city, a gentleman of considerable attainments, of very high personal character, and, probably, whose proudest boast was that he did not share a single political principle in common with himself. He was all the prouder to see him there that night; and he called on them to drink prosperity to him, and to the solicitors, who on a late occasion had obtained a charter for themselves, and had escaped from the protecting care of a body who thought much more of themselves than they did of the solicitors."

It is, we understand, the intention of Sir Colman O'Loghlin, M.P., to re-introduce into Parliament at the earliest opportunity, a Bill for the abolition of arrest for debt on final process. By this measure the person of the debtor will be altogether freed from attack, but it is probable that his property, income, &c., will at the same time be rendered more assailable. We cannot but think, however, that the laws which should regulate the important relations between debtor and creditor ought not to be dealt with crudely, or by piecemeal, or, we may add, by private legislation. It is a matter requiring comprehensive treatment, and deserving the attention of the Government.

In the address of Mr. Vance, M.P. for the borough of Armagh, when returning thanks to the electors, the following observations occur with reference to the law of Bankruptcy in Ireland:—

"There are some other measures likely to engage the attention of Parliament in the next session, and one is upon the subject of bankruptcy. It is not generally known that we have different systems in the Three Kingdoms as regards bankruptcy. Besides which, there is a different law of debtor and creditor in each country (hear, hear.) It would be very desirable to assimilate them, and it is because I feel the necessity of such a measure that, as a mercantile man, I was particularly anxious to be placed in Parliament this session. In any measure that passes I trust the most tender consideration will be given to men who by sheer misfortune have been driven into the court. At the same time, I should be willing to see a severe punishment enacted for those who should be proved to have fradulently dissipated the property of their creditors. It is also extremely desirable that the assets should be promptly and inexpensively divided. At present they are generally frittered away in law courts and proceedings in which the creditors have no interest. I trust (with due regard, of course, to vested interests) that the creditors will be first consulted in any arrangement of the sort that may be made" pool—Mr. Bateson and Mr. Lowndes; Manchester—Mr. Baker and Mr. Bunting; Birmingham—Mr. Ryland, Mr. Beale, and Mr. Allen; Hull—Mr. Roberts and Mr. Thorney; Sunderland—Mr. Robinson.

LAW SOCIETIES AND LEGAL REFORMS.

Mr. Bateson, president of the Liverpool Law Society, in the chair.

Letters were read from several of the provincial law societies concurring in the general objects of the meeting. After a lengthened discussion the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. That in the opinion of the meeting the increasing business of the country urgently demands the appointment of additional common law judges.

2. That the number of additional judges should be five; and that a fourth common law court should be constituted, to consist of a chief justice and four puisne judges.

3. That it would facilitate the administration of justice if each of the puisne judges were appointed a judge of all the common law courts.

4. That instead of the present mode of disposing of business at chambers, the following changes be recommended: that all summonses not attended by counsel or special pleader shall be heard by one of the masters, subject to appeal to a court, to be called "The Practice Court," and that all summonses attended by counsel or special pleader shall be heard by that court; and that such practice court be presided over by one of the puisne judges, who shall have jurisdiction in all matters of practice and pleading arising in any of the courts, subject to an appeal to the full court, as at present existing, from chambers.

5. That a provision should be made for holding a third or Winter assize for the trial of civil causes throughout the country; and that in those circuits where the business is not sufficiently large to justify a separate assize for each assize town, it is desirable that a central town should be fixed upon where the third assize for the whole circuit shall be held.

The following re-arrangement of the legal year was recommended:—

Michaelmas Term, to begin 24th Oct.; to end 22nd Nov.; number of days 30.

Sittings after Michaelmas Term, to begin 23rd Nov.; to end 21st Dec.; number of days 29.

Christmas Vacation, to begin 22nd Dec.; to end 6th Jan.; number of days 16.

For the Winter Circuits, to begin 7th Jan.; to end 14th Feb.; number of days 39.

Easter Term, to begin 15th Feb.; to end 16th March; number of days 29.

Sittings after Easter Term, to begin 17th March; to end 13th April; number of days 28.

For the Spring Circuits, to begin 14th April, to end 18th May; number of days 35.

Easter Vacation, to begin 19th May; to end 26th May; number of days 7.

Trinity Term, to begin 27th May; to end 25th June; number of days 30.

Sittings after Trinity Term, to begin 26th June; to end 23rd July; number of days 28.

For the Summer Circuits, to begin 24th July; to end 27th Aug.; number of days 35.

Long Vacation, to begin from end of Circuits; to end 23rd Oct

The following resolutions were also agreed upon:—

That in the opinion of this meeting, it is desirable that the number of Judges in Chancery should be increased; and that the best mode of making such increase of Judges available would be by assigning two Judges to each court, one to sit in court while the other is sitting in chambers; each Judge to work out his own decrees in conformity with the policy of the Acts of 1852.

That a deputation from this meeting do wait upon the Lord Chancellor for the purpose of presenting him with a copy of the above resolutions.—Law Times.

LAW REFORMS FOR THE SESSION.

We learn that the Government is actively engaged in the preparation of important measures of law reform, which will be introduced to Parliament early in the ensuing session. Foremost among them is a reconstruction of the law of Bankruptcy. The law of master and servent is to be amended The Merchant shipping law will be revised and improved. Considerable changes will be proposed in the administration of the Poor-law. The law of landlord and tenant in Ireland will give to the latter better security for positive improvements. Some amendments, suggested by the recent experience of its working, will be made in the law of joint-stock companies. The provisions of the Factories Acts are to be extended to the protection of women and children in all other employs. A Bill will embody the principal recommendations of the Capital Punishment Commission. The promise is magnificent, out experience proves how far short of it performance usually falls. It is one thing for a Government to produce an imposing array of good measures, it is another thing to carry them through the multiplied obstacles that thwart their passage through the Legislature. Least of all is it permitted to us to be sanguine, now that Reform threatens to engross the attention of Parliament, whether adopted by the Government, or used for its overthrow.—Law Times.

IMPORTANT RAILWAY CASE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER.

(Sittings in Banco, before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE BLACKBURN, MR. JUSTICE MELLOR, and MR. JUSTICE LUSH.)

In the Matter of an Attorney.

This was an application against an attorney, under these circumstances. A person named Hill had brought an action against the Great Western Railway Company to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been received while a passenger on their line. The jury found for the company, and almost immediately afterwards the plaintiff went through the Bankruptcy Court at Birmingham upon his own petition, and on that occasion the circumstances were disclosed which were now stated as the ground for the present application. He stated that the attorney who had taken up his case had done so on an arrangement that he should receive £20 on every £100 that might be given by the jury as damages, the attorney stating that he had brought nearly 50 actions against railway companies, and had recovered in all but one of them. Upon these facts—

Mr. Huddleston (with him Mr. H. James) now moved, on the part of the company, for a rule calling on the attorney to show cause why he should not be struck off the roll for misconduct. Such an arrangement, the learned counsel said, was clearly illegal, for it was champerty in its grossest form, and such corrupt agreements were calculated to produce the most pernicious and mischievous consequences, fostering, as they did, a system of speculative litigation, which there was reason to believe had produced already most grievous results.

The Court granted a rule nisi.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Gore v. O'Grady.

Jan. 16, 17, 22.—Injunction—Waste—Bog—Cutting Turf for Sale—Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act.

This was a cause petition filed by Colonel Knox Gore to restrain the respondent, Richard O'Grady, from cutting turf for sale on the lands of Carrowkerribly, in the county of Mayo. The lands, which were described as containing "310 acres profitable land, together with the Great Bog, containing 633 acres," were demised in 1782 by Sir Richard Steele to Edmund Moore, for lives renewable for ever, and this lease was converted into a fee-farm grant in 1854, under the provisions of the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act. The estate of the grantor was now vested in the petitioner, and that of the grantee, in the respondent; and the latter had been for many years in the habit of cutting turf for sale on the bog in question, and claimed the right to do so from an alleged uninterrupted user since the date of the original lease of 1782, and from the legal operation of the fee-farm grant of 1854. It appeared that a bill had been filed in Chancery in 1849, to restrain the then tenant of these lands and his under-tenants from committing similar waste; and that a conditional order for an injunction was made absolute in March, 1850. Upon behalf of the respondent, however, it was alleged that the tenant had never been served with notice of these proceedings, and that there was no cessation of cutting turf for sale in consequence.

The Solicitor-General, Warren, Q.C., and Owen, for the petitioners.

Sullivan, Q.C., Flanagan, Q.C., and Romney Foley, for the respondents.

The LORD-CHANCELLOR said, that as to the question of user, the presumption which the parol evidence might possibly warrant was defeated by the absolute order negativing the right claimed. That it appeared that the agent of the tenant had been served in the injunction proceedings; and it was fairly presumable, therefore, that the tenant himself had notice of them. With respect to the effect of the conversion of the lease into a fee-farm grant, the policy of the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act was to leave all pre-existing rights just as they were; and, as a tenant under a lease of lives renewable for ever would have been impeachable for waste for cutting turf for sale, his rights and liabilities in that respect would remain unaltered upon the execution of a fee-farm grant under the provisions of the Act. The petitioner was therefore entitled to the injunction prayed.

Solicitor for the petitioner, R. Peyton.

Solicitors for the respondent, Dillon & Hart.

Sinnot v. Kehoe.

Jan. 16.—Evidence—Memorial—Settlement—Search.

The petitioners in this case claimed each a share of certain lands, as not having been duly appointed under a deed of 1843, purporting to carry out a power of appointment contained in a marriage settlement of 1817. By this indenture of settlement, executed on the marriage of Bryan Murphy with Dorothea Murphy. Catherine Murphy assigned to trustees certain lands upon trust, amongst other purposes, to provide for the issue of the marriage. In the year 1843, Bryan Murphy appointed to the respondents a portion of these lands; but the petitioners contended that this appointment was invalid, as being in excess of the power given by the settlement.

The original settlement was not produced, nor was there any satisfactory proof of a search having been made for it. The power of appointment, was, however, recited in the deed of 1843, and the memorial of the settlement of 1815, which was executed by Catherine Murphy, was offered as evidence of the contents of the deed.

Lawson, Q.C., and J. A. Byrne, on behalf of the respondents, objected to the admission in evidence of the memorial, on the ground that it was only secondary evidence, and that there had not been any proof of a search for the original deed.

Sullivan, Q.C., and Ryan, for the petitioners, submitted that, as against Catherine Murphy and those claiming under her, the memorial was primary evidence of the contents of the deed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR allowed the memorial to be read in evidence.

Solicitor for the petitioners, Laurence W. Corcoran.

Solicitor for the respondents, Chas. Thorpe.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Vacating Receiver's Recognizance—Notice of Motion.

Grogan v. Pierce.—A motion exparte having been made to vacate a receiver's recognizance, dated in 1846, His Honour said that several motions to vacate old recognizances had been made before him, and he should in all cases where applications were made to vacate recognizances dated more than ten years ago, require notices of the motion to be served.

Mr. J. A. Byrne, for the motion.

Solicitor, Mr. Malcolmson.

Funds in Court—Change of Investment.

Jan. 16, 23.—In re Boyces, minors. A petition was presented in behalf of three ladies formerly wards of Court, who were entitled for life to the dividends of certain funds, which stood to their separate credits in New Three per cent. Stock, to change the investment of them into Bank Stock. The Court, following Cockburn v. Peel, 3 D. F. & J. 170, M. 3, refused to change the investment as to two of the petitioners, as to whom no special reason, except an increase of income, was assigned; but made an order for the change of investment in the case of the other petitioner, in whose case a special ground for the change existed, which was satisfactory to the Court.

Mr. M. B. Smyth, for the petitioner.

Solicitor, Mr. M. Bourke.

Attorney—Admission as Solicitor—Solicitors' Act.

In the Matter of James Riordan.

Jan. 18.—Mr. James Riordan had passed his examination for admission as an attorney in July last. On the 6th of August, 1866, the Attorney and Solicitors' (Ireland) Act, 29 and 30 Vic., c. 84, received the Royal assent, and it became necessary, under that act, that he should, before admission, pass an examination according to the regulations prescribed by the 19th section. Having already passed, he made an application for admission without further examination, which was complied with; and on the 15th of January, 1867, he was sworn in an Attorney of the Court of Common Pleas, and his certificate was signed by the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and enrolled in that Court. He now desired to be admitted a Solicitor of the Court of Chancery.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Exham, Q.C., applied to His Honour. He referred to the 21st section of the Act, which required that "the oath now required by law to be taken by persons requiring to be admitted as Attorneys and Solicitors" should be taken; "and after such oath taken" the party applying is to be admitted, if he has served his apprenticeship, and has obtained a certificate of the Examiners that he is fit and competent. Before the late Act there was a form of affidavit which stated that the applicant had served his apprenticeship—that he had a fixed residence in Dublin—that he had been admitted and sworn in as an attorney of one of the Courts of Common Law, and that while he was a solicitor of this Court he would not suffer any other person to practise in his name. On that affidavit being filed, and a copy of it produced to one of the Masters, he signed his certificate, which was countersigned by the Registrar, and the name of the applicant was entered in the Solicitors' Book. No form of affidavit had been yet prepared under the late Act, although the 26th section provided for the appointment of persons before whom it was to be taken. Many other gentlemen were in the same position as Mr. Riordan, and it was of great importance to them to be admitted without delay, as under the 38th section they must be admitted solicitors of the Court of Chancery before they could practice in Bankruptcy.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that he would speak to the Lord Chancellor about the matter, and mention it again.

A form of affidavit has since been settled.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WM. WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Cadiz and Oporto Wine Company (Limited) v. Cunningham.

January 11. Motion for Security for Costs. The action was brought on the Summary Procedure Act, to recover £64 10s. 6d., amount of a promissory note. Defendant served the preliminary notice for security on the 3rd of January. On the 5th plaintiff replied by notice, stating that if liberty was given to defend he would be ready to give security. On the 8th defendant obtained leave to defend for £32, he bringing the residue of the amount of the note into Court. He then at once and before lodging the £32 10s. 6d., served notice of the present motion, grounded on the order of the 8th, but not on any affidavit.

H. O'Neill Bourke, for defendant.

William M. Johnson, for plaintiff, referred to the 52nd G. O. and the 44th rule, under the Process and Practice Act, to show that the motion could not be carried except on an affidavit mentioned in the notice.

Per curiam.—Defendant undertaking to bring in the £32 10s. 6d., and the plaintiff offering to let it remain in Court as security. So be it; costs of the parties to be costs in the cause.

Attorney for defendant, J. D. MacDermott.

Byrne v. Doyle.

January 11. — Slander — Particulars. — This was a motion, in an action for slander, for particulars of times when, and places where the alleged slander was spoken. The words complained of were, "He is constantly stealing my bricks," without any averment of time or place of speaking the words. Defendant's affidavit stated that he had never used the words. On the 7th of January notice was served on the plaintiff asking for particulars. Plaintiff replied, stating that the words were spoken, "as nearly as he could specify them," in certain streets named, "about" certain months mentioned.

Coates, for defendant.

Palles, Q.C., and Keogh, contra.

The Court held that the case came within Early v. Smith (12 W. C. & A. app. xlv.), that the particulars given were insufficient, and that the defendant was entitled to more specific information, and granted the motion. Costs, costs in the cause.

Attorney for plaintiff, D. Nolan.

Attorney for defendant, Archer Coates.

Manning v. The Gresham Hotel Company.

January 12, 16.—Obstruction of Light—Setting aside verdict as being Against Weight of Evidence. Motion to set aside a verdict as being against the weight of evidence. The action was for obstruction of light by raising certain buildings which darkened the windows of plaintiff's wareroom. The defences were a traverse of the right to the light, a plea of leave and licence, and a traverse of the obstruction. It was upon the issue on the last traverse that the present question arose. The jury found for the defendants, there being evidence on the part of the plaintiff that the light of his wareroom was sensibly diminished; and there being evidence on the part of the defendant that the diminution of light was not sufficient to injure plaintiff in his business. The jury found for the defendant upon the issue. The jury had viewed the premises, and the learned judge was satisfied with the verdict.

Dowse, Q.C., and Byrne, for plaintiff.

Palles, Q.C., and S. Walker, for defendant.

The Court granted a new trial, being of opinion that if the plaintiff proved a sensible diminution of light, and that his enjoyment of his premises was so interfered with, he was entitled to succeed, even though he was not injured in his business. The Court also held that the fact of the jury having viewed the premises did not entitle defendant to succeed on this motion. Defendant's costs of first trial to be costs in the cause.

No costs of this motion.

Attorney for plaintiff, William Hitchcock.

COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Guinea v. Allen.

Taxation.—This was a motion to review taxation. The defendant had pleaded to cause of action, an accord and satisfaction by acceptance of a promissory note. To this plaintiff filed, by leave of the Court, two replications, one traversing the acceptance of the note as accord and satisfaction, the other alleging fraud; and issues were knit upon these two replications.

At the trial the issue on the non-acceptance was found for the plaintiff, and that on fraud for the defendant. The plaintiff succeeding in the action. The taxing master had allowed plaintiff the costs of the motion, &c., for leave to file the replications.

The Court held that as the jury had found against the plaintiff on the replication alleging fraud, and as plaintiff could have taken issue on the acceptance in accord and satisfaction without any replication, that the costs of the motion to file the replications should not have been allowed to the plaintiff.

Tisdall v. Humphrey.

Setting aside Judgment for Want of Service of Summons and Plaint. In this case judgment was marked on the 4th December, 1866, on the affidavit of the process server, alleging service under the 32nd sec. of the Common Law Procedure Act, by leaving a copy of the summons and plaint with defendant's servant, at his residence, he being then within the jurisdiction. There was no affidavit on the part of the defendant of merits, or denial that the process had come to the hands of the defendant.

It appearing from the affidavits of the defendant and his wife, that he was not within the jurisdiction at the time of the alleged service, the Court set aside the judgment.

Before Fitzgerald, Hughes, and Deasy, B.B.

Judgment by Default—Compromise pending. Action for balance of an account.—On the 22nd November, A., a relative of defendant, called on plaintiffs, and urged a settlement; plaintiffs offered to take £25, which A. declined to give. On the same day A. sent a cheque for £20, which was returned on the day following, plaintiffs saying, if you send £27 and costs, and get us a dividend out of B.'s estate we will withdraw our writ; if not judgment will be marked. On the 24th November A. sent £25, which was returned on the 26th, plaintiffs saying it was too late to stop further proceedings. On the 28th A. wrote, offering to pay in full, but judgment had been marked in the meantime.

Harrison, Q.C., and J. Monroe, for the defendant, now moved to have the judgment set aside as marked, compromise pending.

Falkner and Seeds, contra.

Motion refused.

Attorneys for plaintiffs, H. and W. Seeds.

For defendant, James Murphy.

Cassidy v. Firman.—Jan. 16.

Before Fitzgerald, Hughes, and Deasy, B.B.

Statute of Limitations—Acknowledgement. Action for balance of an account. Plea, the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff gave in evidence two letters of the defendants. In the first defendant said, "I should be very sorry that Mr. Cassidy or anyone else should lose by me; and if I can get hold of the groom I had then, and can prove satisfactorily to myself that he is due anything, I should be very sorry that he should not get it, but if he chooses to take me to Court he may do so, and do his worst." In the second letter defendant said he would appoint some third person to confer with plaintiff's attorney, and added, "but at the same time I might repudiate the account, as I know nothing of it; but if Mr. Cassidy has any claim on me, which I much doubt, I would wish the matter arranged."

The jury found for the plaintiff, and the judge directed a verdict to be entered for the defendant, reserving leave to move to have the verdict entered for the plaintiff. A conditional order having been obtained pursuant to the leave reserved.

Palles, Q C., for defendant, now showed cause.

Battersby, Q.C., Hemphill, Q.C., and F. L. Dames, for the plaintiff, relied on Holmes v. Smith, 8 Ir. C. L. R., 424; Leland v. Murphy, 16 Ir. C. L. R., 500; and Lee v. Wilmot, C. L. R., Ex. 364.

The Court held that these letters were not sufficient to establish an acknowledgement to take the case out of the statute.

Attorney for plaintiff, Robert Courtenay.

For defendant, John E. Roach.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. Miller, Esq., LL.D.

Fry v. Draper.

Jan. 24.—Will—Revocation—Insanity—Onus probandi.

In the case of a testator becoming, after the execution of his will, which he kept in his own custody, of unsound mind, and at his death the will not being forthcoming, the onus of showing that it was destroyed animo revocandi by the testator when of sound mind, lies on the party who opposes the will; and in the absence of such evidence the contents of the will, if clearly proved, will be established.

The declaration propounded a will of C. E. D., dated 16th December, 1865, that it was not forthcoming, but was not revoked; and alleged the contents as set forth in a script B.

The defendants pleaded a revocation by destruction of that will by the testator when of sound mind.

Replication—that the will was not revoked, and that if revoked, it was revoked by the testator when of unsound mind.

The evidence, on the hearing before the Court, showed clearly that the will was made when the testator was quite competent, and on the day of its date; and that in March following he showed symptoms of derangement, and in April became quite insane, and continued so to his death.

His delusions were that he was robbed, and would be a pauper, and that his firm would be unable to meet its engagements—all of which were clear delusions. The will had been left in the custody of the deceased, and he told his solicitor in April that he had destroyed it. It could not be found on his death, but the solicitor had the draught.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., and Price, cited Harris v. Berrill, 1 S. & Tr., 153.

Dr. Miller, for the defendants, offered no opposition—the case having been compromised.

Keatinge, Judge.—There are materials in this case proved to enable me to make the decree asked for, establishing the will as set forth in script B.

The onus lies on those opposing the will to show that the revocation was at a time when deceased was of sound mind.

Decree accordingly.

In the Goods of Lawrence Kelly.—31st Jan.

Heir-at-law—citing—suit pending.

In order to get an order for leave to cite an heir-at-law, there must be a suit actually instituted to try the validity of a will affecting the real estate.

E. Gibson moved for liberty to cite the heir-at-law.

[Keatinge, J.—Is there any suit pending on which you move?]

No; we are about to issue a citation on the next of kin to see the will proved specially.

Keatinge, J.—The 65th section of the 20 & 21 Vic., c. 79, is, that where proceedings are taken for proving a will in solemn form, or for revoking a probate, or where in any other contentious cause or matter the validity of the will is disputed, the heir-at-law shall be cited in the manner there provided.

In England the judge has held that a plea impeaching the will must be on the file. I do not go so far as that, but I hold that there must be at least a citation issued calling on the next of kin to see the will proved.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

(Before JUDGE BERWICK.)

IN INSOLVENCY.

In re Hannon.

Future acquired property. Policy of insurance effected for the benefit of the children of the party effecting it, of whom the insolvent is one, and to whom by the terms of the policy it is made payable, subject to a parol trust.

Where the mother of an insolvent effects a policy of insurance on her life for the benefit of her children, share and share alike, the amount at her death to be paid to her son, who in the meantime becomes insolvent, and nothing with regard to the policy of insurance appears in his schedule. Upon the death of the mother the assignees are not entitled to receive the amount.

Kernan, Q.C., applied to the Court to have a sum of £223 paid into Court, being the amount of a policy of insurance effected on the life of Elizabeth Hannon, the mother of the insolvent. It appeared that the insolvent had obtained his discharge two or three years previously, and that nothing whatever was stated in his schedule about the policy of insurance, or his right to receive the amount—in fact, all notice of it was omitted. The policy was effected in the year 1857, on the life of the insolvent's mother, and to be payable at her death to the insolvent, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Now if the insolvent had a right to receive it, his assignees had the same right—the insolvent claimed the amount, and the assignees also claimed it; and the company were ready to pay it into Court, and there let the rights of the parties be dealt with. In the first place, the assignees had a right to receive it. In the second place, as regarded the insolvent's share of it, according to an alleged parol trust, it clearly came under the head of future acquired property, and the Court had a right to deal with it; and upon those admitted facts he believed he had a right to ask the money to be brought into Court, and then let the parties claiming it establish their right to it as best they could.

Mr. John M'Mahon opposed the motion on the part of the insolvent. He relied upon an affidavit made by the insolvent, in which he stated that his mother, at the time of effecting the policy, had four children, of whom he, the insolvent, was one—that it was in trust for herself and children, and payable to the insolvent at her death, to be divided amongst them equally. The premium on the policy was always paid by Mrs. Hannan, during her life, and the proceeds of the policy were of course liable to her debts, the amount of which had not been clearly ascertained. It was known that she owed £50 at least, but how much more did not at present appear. The motion was wholly untenable—the proceeds of the policy should be regarded as assets of the deceased, subject to her debts, and also to the trusts that were created by her.

JUDGE BERWICK said he thought the motion ought not to be granted, but as to costs there was no fund out of which they could be paid, and he thought the application was bonâ fide on the part of the assignee. There was no doubt but the proceeds of the policy were to be regarded as assets of the deceased, and were subject to her debts, and also to the trusts with regard to her children. Suppose he were to consider the insolvent's share (if there should be any) as future acquired property, the present application was not made under the section to make future acquired property available—it was made to compel the payment into Court of a sum of money to which the assignees were not entitled, or if entitled to anything it could only be to the distributive share of the insolvent when it was ascertained, and then that would be subject to the insolvent's subsequent debts.

Before JUDGE MILLER.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Re Conroy.

Bringing an unfounded action. Debt fraudulently contracted.

Where party brings an action that appears of a very frivolous character, and the plaintiff, when the case is in the list for trial, withdraws the record. He is afterwards arrested for the costs of the day, for which he seeks to be discharged by the Insolvent Court. Will not be deemed a debt fraudulently contracted.

Graves, Solicitor, opposed the discharge of the insolvent on the ground of having contracted the debt fraudulently, by bringing an action which, on the face of the pleadings, appeared of a most frivolous and unfounded character. The action was against his landlord for alleged trespass, and when the case was ready for trial, and the briefs given out, he then withdrew the record. The costs of the day were taxed to £12, for which he was arrested, and he now sought to be discharged. Besides the costs for which the insolvent was arrested, the defendant would have about £30 in addition to pay for his general costs. In the case of Dunne v. Couts it was held that the costs of an action of that kind was a debt fraudulently contracted, and the insolvent got a long remand.

Mr. Levy, for the insolvent.—The case of Dunne v. Couts had no analogy to the present case.

JUDGE MILLER said that, under the circumstances of the present case, he could not hold that it was a debt fraudulently contracted. No action had been tried, and he could not tell what the verdict might have been. There were many causes or accidents which made it necessary to withdraw a notice of trial, but even if it had gone on, and that there was a verdict against the plaintiff, the case should be of a very peculiar character where it would be held that the costs of an unsuccessful action would be deemed a debt fraudulently contracted. In the present case no action was tried, and he could not for a moment hold that the mere costs of the day was a debt fraudulently contracted.

The insolvent was discharged.

The "Black List."—An action was tried yesterday in the Court of Queen's Bench, which is of interest from its connexion with the publication known as the "Black List." The plaintiff, a trader in the County of Waterford, complained that he had been libelled by the publication, in Stubbs's Weekly Gazette, on the 28th of March, 1866, of a statement that a certain judgment had been obtained against him by default. The defendant, Mr. M'Govern, is a solicitor, residing in this city, and is the agent for the publication in question. It appeared that no such judgment as that alleged had been obtained against the plaintiff, and the error had been corrected in the next ensuing publication of the Gazette. The jury found for the plaintiff, and gave him £150 damages. The Chief Justice observed that the Court did not pronounce any opinion on the abstract question as to the legality of the "Black List."

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

A general meeting of the members of this Association was held, on Friday, the 18th January, in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts.

R. J. T. Orpen, Esq., the President, in the Chair.

There were also present—Messrs. P. M'Evoy Gartlan, Arthur Barlow, William Roche, Charles Gaussen, Graves C. Colles, Wm. Milward Jones, E. D. Atkinson, George H. Belas, A. D. Kennedy, Henry J. P. West, Henry T. Dix, John H. Nunn, J. F Goodman, George Beamish, George W. Shannon, Edward De Moleyns, &c.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:—

It is now three years since the establishment of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association.

The idea of such a provision for the necessitous members of the profession and their destitute and helpless families had long been felt and frequently suggested, but until the testimonial to the late Richard Meade took that shape there never had been any practical attempt to realize it. The necessity for such an association must be painfully evident to everyone who has any experience of professional life. The incessant mental toil and the unavoidable anxiety incident to the laborious and responsible duties of a solicitor are every year thinning the ranks of the profession. In many cases those who thus fall leave a wife and family partly, and often wholly, unprovided for. Some one will, perhaps, say that improvidence, in not providing by insurance for such a contingency, is the real cause of this melancholy result; but those who are acquainted with the difficulties attendant upon success in the profession of a solicitor well know that it often requires all the capital a man of small means can command to forward his business, any failure in the prosecution of which would result in immediate ruin, and that this circumstance often renders any or substantial insurance out of the question.

If any one is sceptical as to the existence of real distress such as we have referred to, we could speedily satisfy him as to its bitter reality. It has been our painful duty to consider applications from the near and dear relatives of those who once held a high and honourable place in the profession, and who have been obliged, from the dire necessity that cannot be evaded, to apply for help to this association.

We will mention one or two instances. The widow of a solicitor of many years standing, practising in Dublin, died, leaving four children totally unprovided for. Two of the sons have gone to Australia in search of employment, one of them died, and the other is unable to contribute anything to his mother's support. Two daughters, one in wretched health, and the other earning a scanty livelihood as a governess, are left dependent on their mother for support, she herself being in most delicate health. The widow of a solicitor, thirty years practising in the profession at Cork, left by his death with two sons totally destitute and unprovided for. One of these sons went to Australia and has not been heard of for eight years, and the other is imbecile, and consequently left a burden upon his mother for support. Widow of a solicitor 40 years practising in his profession, left by his death with three daughters totally unprovided for; applicant is herself confined to her bed with spinal disease, and requires constant attendance, while two of her daughters are in a most precarious state of health, and the third is hopelessly blind. The daughter of a solicitor 30 years practising in his profession, and who was for many years Clerk of the Peace for a county; applicant is a single woman and advanced in years, was left by her father's will £500, charged upon his property, which was sold in the Incumbered Estates' Court for payment of his debts, for which purpose it proved insufficient, and consequently the £500 were lost. It has been with feelings of deep regret that we have been obliged, from want of funds, to refuse many such applications, and to leave cases of real distress unrelieved; for while some members of the profession have come forward with most commendable generosity to assist the association, we regret to say many others have not as yet afforded us any support. The present amount of our annual subscriptions is £213 8s., which, with £37 5s. 2d., dividends upon part of our funds invested in stock, forms the entire income placed at our disposal by our professional brethren for the benevolent purposes of this association and the relief of such cases as we have mentioned. Such harrowing cases of poverty are worthy of the generous aid of the general public, but how much more of the profession of which the bread-winner thus unhappily cut off was a member. We are aware that our professional brethren have to meet cases of charity from various quarters, but surely if there is any professional esprit de corps among the solicitors of Ireland they should not allow an association which has such special claims upon their benevolence to drop for want of support. If God has spared them to their families, and blessed them with means to support them in comfort and prosperity, surely they will not turn a deaf ear to the claims of those whom the removal of less prosperous members of their profession has cast upon the bounty of their brethren.

On the motion of Mr. Belas, seconded by Mr. Jones, the report was unanimously adopted.

The statement of accounts showed the receipts for the year, including an arrear account from the previous year, to be £348 5s. 9d.

Mr. Kennedy, one of the auditors, explained why they put in the account of arrears as a separate account. He said that they had found those arrears occurring from year to year, and it was now thought better to leave them out of the general balance sheet and put them in a separate account, by which means their exact income might be more clearly seen. He also expressed his regret that the society was not more liberally supported. He found that on the roll of practising attorneys there were 1,250 names. Of these only 200 subscribed to the society, and of the 200 who did subscribe 38 were in arrears. Their report brought forward instances of extreme distress. Yet, during the past year they had only been able to extend relief amounting to £75. It was a great pity that the profession at large was not more alive to the importance of the society. He thought that the directors should, even if it were to give them some personal trouble, take steps to get in more subscriptions. He believed an appeal to the country practitioners would be attended with success.

Mr. Gartlan concurred with Mr. Kennedy in thinking that the society was not receiving that support which they had a right to expect. He found by the report that the annual income of the society did not much exceed the sum of £200. It had been stated that the profession reckoned amongst its working members upwards of 1,200 persons. He, therefore, thought that the number of annual subscribers to this association bore an undue disproportion to the number of men earning money in their profession. He thought that the sum of £213, subscribed during the past year, should have been trebled. It was not unreasonable to expect that from a profession like theirs at least £600 per annum should be subscribed for the benevolent purposes for which that association was founded. (Hear, hear).

The members of the profession generally should be called on to render more active assistance to the association, and he thought there was no man connected with the profession, or who had derived benefit from it, who should turn a deaf ear to the claims which this association had on him. It was no answer for a man to say, "I am no longer a member of the profession." Every man who had benefited by it was called on to subscribe to an association founded for the relief of its poor members, their wives, and families. It had been suggested that an application should be made to the Judges, and to all the officers connected with the law. This was a matter worthy of their serious consideration. (Hear, hear.) He hoped that there was not on the Irish bench a single Judge who would not most gladly, if the matter were brought before him, give substantial assistance in the good work which they had in hands. There were men in the profession many of whom very rarely entered that hall, or only upon an occasion like the present. He saw there Mr. Gaussen, who, he believed, was in advance in every good work connected not only with the profession but with the public at large, and he thought that when such men as Mr. Gaussen came forward in this good cause the members of the profession scattered over the country should not forget the poor members of the profession to which they belonged. He confessed that he was disappointed in finding that the association did not meet with more encouragement from the profession at large. Mr. Gartlan concluded by expressing a hope that when they should next meet they would be able to give an account of the great success of the society.

The Chairman said that the Lord Chancellor and Baron Fitzgerald were already subscribers to the association.

Mr. Henry Dix moved that the report should be printed and circulated amongst the members of the profession in town and country.

Mr. Jones seconded the motion, which passed.

Mr. Jones said that this society was got up as a memento of one of the most respected members of their profession, Mr. Meade; and he was afraid that, owing to that name being wholly omitted from their report, it would be lost sight of and forgotten.

Mr. West said that the committee of the association never lost sight of the respected name of Mr. Meade, for they had it under consideration whether the association should not bear his name. They, however, decided, in accordance with the course adopted by the profession in England, to call the association by the name by which it was at present known.

Mr. William Roche said that the name of Mr. Meade would be handed down with respect to their children's children. He regretted that the association did not meet with that support which the association in England obtained. He thought that their income ought to reach £600 a year; for that amount was fully required to meet the pressing claims that daily came under their notice. The society had a strong claim on the Judges of the land, and he hoped that a majority of them would become subscribers to it. He was perfectly sanguine that they would respond to a call in a manner which would enable the association to extend relief towards their distressed brethren. So late as the previous day a gentleman who was not aware of the existence of this association waited on him to ask for a subscription for the daughter of a solicitor, a lady, who, twenty years ago, drove her own carriage. That lady was now in such want that she had to get a person to beg a subscription of five shillings for her. Her case would, he believed, be immediately considered by this association.

Mr. West begged to suggest that at the Summer Assizes of this year the association should hold its next half-yearly meeting in Cork, and that during the next year they should hold it in Belfast. He had no doubt the solicitors of Cork and Belfast would give their hearty support to the association. The association had a special claim on the Cork solicitors, for within the last few weeks they extended considerable relief to the widow and family of a solicitor of that city.

The Chairman, in reference to the remark made by Mr. Jones, pointed out that the report of last year stated that the association was founded in memory of Richard Meade.

Mr. Barlow having been moved to the second chair, Mr. Gartlan proposed a vote of thanks to the president.

Mr. Shannon, in seconding the motion, begged to say that he believed the Lord Chancellor would place the money-box of the Court of Chancery at their disposal, if it could be shown to him that he might hand it over to them. The Box-money of the Court of Chancery, he believed, amounted to about £400 annually.

A vote of thanks to the Press having been passed, the proceedings terminated.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY AS TO PRIZES TO BE GIVEN ANNUALLY AT PRELIMINARY AND FINAL EXAMINATIONS.

That with a view to encourage an advanced standard of answering in the subjects prescribed for the preliminary examination of apprentices, prizes be given annually to be competed for by gentlemen who may have exhibited a satisfactory degree of proficiency at such examination.

That such prizes shall be as follows:—

For the best answerer, a gold medal, together with a sum of £10.

For the second best answerer, a silver medal, together with a sum of £5. No candidate to be given a prize unless the examiners shall be of opinion that he has answered sufficiently well to entitle him thereto.

That a special examination for these prizes be held in or about Michaelmas Term in each year, at such times and in such manner as may be approved of by the Court of Examiners for the time being.

That in addition to the course prescribed for the preliminary examination, candidates for prizes shall be examined in the following:—

Virgil's Æneid, 4th and 5th books.
Horace's Odes and Satires.
Livy, 1st three books.
Dr. Smith's Grecian History.
Liddell's Roman History.

That at each preliminary examination the Court of Examiners do recommend such of the candidates as from their superior answering may be deemed qualified to compete for these prizes.

That the candidates so recommended from the four examinations preceding the month of June in each year, be at liberty to compete for prizes at the examination for prizes so to be held in the Michaelmas Term following.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

That at each final examination a gold medal be awarded to the best answerer, provided, in the opinion of the Court of Examiners, such answering shall be sufficiently good to entitle him to such premium.

CALLED TO THE BAR.

Although an examination in professional knowledge has been established by the Council of Legal Education for candidates for the bar, the preliminaries to a call still consist chiefly in dining and paying for dinners. The examination is optional, and students can evade it by attending a specified number of lectures. But the dinners must be eaten—there is no escape from that, although the period during which the condition is enforced is in some instances shortened. In price and quality the dinners vary at the different inns. On the whole, those of the Middle Temple are said to be about the best. At Gray's Inn, however, where the number of members is comparatively limited, not only barristers but sometimes even students, it is said, are invited to the bencher's table, and there is a tradition of apoplexy having befallen one unhappy youth who had too frequently been subjected to this tremendous ordeal. Having kept his terms, paid his fees, and found a couple of benchers to vouch for his good character, the student is ready to be called. Here again there is a difference in the ceremonies at the various inns. At the Inner Temple after dinner the benchers retire to their room, and the candidates, forthwith donning a pair of bands rather larger in dimensions than those used by the clergy, and a gown of serge, are conducted to the Parliament Chamber where sit the benchers over their wine and nuts. Their conductor, or "whipper in," marshals them in order of seniority, and a glass of wine is given to each. The senior bencher rises, and, addressing them (the wine cups being in their hands the while) in a few grave and courteous sentences welcomes them to the bar and wishes them success in their profession, concluding by drinking their health. The senior of their number having returned thanks, they bow and retire. They leave the room full-blown and "utter" barristers. The speeches made by senior students vary in quality of necessity, and are not always graceful. There is a tradition that a student once replied in the following manner:—"Gentlemen, whilst I on the part of my compeers thank you for the honour you have done us, I cannot conceal from myself the fact that when we shall be raising in our professions, you will be rotting in your graves." At the Middle Temple the candidates, dressed in wig, gown, and bands, enter the hall with the benchers, and, standing at the high table, take an oath; they afterwards retire to their separate "messes" for dinner. At Lincoln's Inn the "proposed" are "introduced" to the bar present in hall on three separate occasions previous to the call. The name, parentage, and description are read out by an official at the head of the bar tables upon these occasions, and the nominee walks up, bows to the bar, and, so to speak, runs the "gauntlet" of them down the hall. On the day of the call the new barristers are admitted to take wine with the benchers in their private room, and thither they adjourn with the benchers. To this party each has the privilage of inviting two guests. The benchers, having drunk the health of those present, soon retire and leave the wine-bowls to the younger members. These parties serve in the place of "call" suppers, and are often as noisy.—Pall Mall Gazette.

31st January.

Before MASTER BURKE and a Jury.

Maria Jane Remmer v. George Farmer.

This was an action to recover the amount of £319 due on foot of I O U's and promissory notes. One of the promissory notes had on it the following rather novel endorsement:—"The condition on which the within note is passed is that said Maria Jane Remmer is not to enforce payment without first giving one month's notice of her intention to do so, nor as long as she shall board and lodge with the said George Farmer; and said Maria Jane Remmer agrees to accept for interest on said note her board and lodging as above, and George Farmer agrees to give same." Judgment was allowed to go by default. Mr. Falkner, instructed by Messrs. Findlater and Collins, stated plaintiff's case; and, after the learned Master had summed up, the jury found for the plaintiff £319, with 6d. costs.

POINTS OF PRACTICE.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

Substitution of Service of a Summons and Plaint, or Writ of Revivor, where the Defendant is within the jurisdiction of the Court, but cannot be served personally, or as required by the 32nd Section of the Common Law Procedure Act.—The affidavits of the process server in a case of this nature must set forth the efforts made to effect personal service, or the service required by said section. And the affidavits of the plaintiff or his attorney should aver that the cause of action, or a portion thereof, arose in Ireland, and clearly show the agency or privity with the defendant of the party or parties on whom substitution of service is sought. An averment that A. B., attorney, was acting for defendant is too general; it should be so positive and precise that the judge, before whom the application be made, shall to some extent be satisfied that as an attorney, the duty is cast upon him of attending to defendant's interests. In cases of this nature absolute orders are sometimes granted, with the direction that same shall be forthwith served.

Substitution of Service—Defendant out of the Jurisdiction.—When the defendant is out of the jurisdiction no effort to effect service on an agent, &c., in the first instance need be made, as conditional orders only are granted, as a general rule. Consequently any such service would be valueless, and should be repeated. The affidavit, however, should aver the agency, &c., and be precise, if substitution of service be sought upon an attorney; as before mentioned, with the additional averment that defendant is more than temporarily out of the jurisdiction.

Conditional Orders.—As all conditional orders must be served within one week from the date thereof (133 General Orders, 1854), an application should be made to have the time extended if difficulty in effecting any of the required services be anticipated—to effect a service within the week will not keep the order in force, if another or others thereon directed to be made be not effected within that time; nor can the officer under such circumstances make the order absolute. And the invariable directions in cases of this kind of the learned judges who in rotation preside at the Consolidated Chamber Sittings, have been, that new orders should issue, usually upon the production of an affidavit averring that no change has taken place in the circumstances of the case since the first order was made.

In an action against a corporate body when substitution has been directed, the order is made absolute without reference to the Gazette or newspaper notices, but the proper officer will not mark judgment on production of the order marked absolute (as he would in other cases), without an affidavit of the due insertion of said notices. The plaint may be filed after the services have been made, or within eight days from the order being made absolute. If the Gazette notice be not inserted until after the order is made absolute the time to plead, of course runs from the period of the due insertion.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, FEBRUARY 9, 1867.

AMONG the various measures proposed for the consideration of Parliament during the present Session, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, there are several of peculiar interest to the legal profession.

The attention of the legislature is particularly called to the amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy; to the consolidation of the Courts of Probate and Divorce, and Admiralty; and to the means of disposing, with greater despatch and frequency, of the increasing business in the Superior Courts of Common Law, and at the Assizes. It is evident from this portion of the Speech that it is contemplated that England alone shall, for the present, at least, have the advantage of these measures of legal reform. This fact, however, should not prevent us from scrutinizing with the utmost care the changes proposed to be made in these respects, as it is known from past experience, and from the growing desire to assimilate the laws of both countries, that measures once passed in England are likely to be, as far as possible, extended to us.

With regard to the amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy, an assimilation of the law throughout the United Kingdom would be peculiarly acceptable to the mercantile community; but the subject is a large and comprehensive one, involving questions of serious importance, and well worthy the careful attention of those most familiar with the working of the Acts at present in force; and we trust that when the matter comes under the notice of Parliament, the entire subject of the laws regulating the relations between debtor and creditor, and especially the state of the law with respect to Insolvency, will be maturely and anxiously considered.

In the Probate Act of Ireland is contained a provision which will, we believe, eventually have the effect of consolidating the Courts of Probate and Admiralty in this country; grave doubts are entertained by many as to the expediency of doing so, but we think it a matter of much more pressing importance that the jurisdiction and practice of the latter Court, which were, in 1864, considered and reported upon by a Special Commission appointed for that purpose, should receive the early attention of the Legislature. It was then suggested that the practice of this Court should be assimilated to that of England, and there is no reason why this desired reform should be any longer delayed.

The proposed amendment of the law regulating the relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland, is a subject which we do not conceive to be exactly within our province to discuss, especially as this vexed question has been on every side so thoroughly investigated.

Digitized by Google

But, in considering any measure regulating the law of landlord and tenant, the practical working of the Act of 1860 should be taken into consideration, as many of its provisions have met with very general condemnation.

We trust that, in addition to the foregoing measures, our law officers will find time to devote some attention to the very important questions of the reform of the Procedure of the Courts of Chancery and Common Law in this country.

THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

In another column we have published the first of a series of letters upon this subject from one of the warmest supporters of the system. As we desire that this Journal should be open to the expression of independent opinion upon all topics of interest to the legal profession, we have gladly placed our columns at the disposal of our correspondent, and have given him the opportunity of discussing the merits of the system in our pages. We beg expressly to be understood as offering no opinion of our own upon the question at the present time. Without doing so, however, we think it right to add that, to our judgment, the Council of the Law Society were perfectly justified in the opposition which, on grounds of public policy, they gave to the measure when passing through Parliament. The reasons urged in the printed observations which, on that occasion, the Council published on the subject, while they led, we believe, to very many amendments of considerable importance in the Bill, amply justified the Council in such opposition. It is unnecessary for us to add that as we have opened our columns to an advocate of the system, our pages are equally open to its opponents.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

We are gratified at being enabled to announce that a Bill will be introduced early in the present Session for the abolition of the Stamp Duty, at present payable on the annual certificate of an attorney, and in lieu thereof to impose in respect of every such certificate a nominal duty of five shillings. It is to be hoped that the efforts so persistently made by the Law Society to get rid of this unjust, degrading, and oppressive tax will now, at length, be crowned with success. No exertion should be spared in the endeavour to accomplish so desirable an object; and with this view we would earnestly impress upon the members of the Profession throughout the United Kingdom the necessity of bringing all possible local and other influence to bear upon their various Representatives in Parliament, in order that the Bill may be successfully carried through both Houses during the present Session.

ENGLAND.

Opening of Parliament—Tuesday, Feb. 5.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

In again recurring to your advice and assistance, I am happy to inform you that my relations with Foreign Powers are on a friendly and satisfactory footing.

I hope that the termination of the war in which Prussia, Austria, and Italy have been engaged may lead to the establishment of durable peace in Europe.

I have suggested to the Government of the United States a mode by which questions pending between the two countries, arising out of the civil war, may receive an amicable solution, and which if met, as I trust it will be, in a corresponding spirit, will remove all grounds of possible misunderstanding, and promote relations of cordial friendship.

The war between Spain and the republics of Chili and Peru still continues, the good offices of my Government, in conjunction with that of the Emperor of the French, having failed to effect a reconciliation. If either by agreement between the parties themselves, or by the mediation of any other friendly Power, peace shall be restored, the object which I have had in view will be equally attained.

Discontent prevailing in some provinces of the Turkish Empire has broken out in actual insurrection in Crete. In common with my allies, the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of Russia, I have abstained from any active interference in these internal disturbances, but our joint efforts have been directed to bringing about improved relations between the Porte and its Christian subjects, not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Sultan.

The protracted negotiations which arose out of the acceptance by Prince Charles of Hohenzollern of the government of the Danubian Principalities, have been happily terminated by an arrangement to which the Porte has given its ready adhesion, and which has been sanctioned by the concurrence of all the Powers, signataries of the Treaty of 1856.

Resolutions in favour of a more intimate union of the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, have been passed by their several Legislatures, and delegates duly authorized, and representing all classes of colonial party and opinion, have concurred in the conditions upon which such a union may be best effected. In accordance with their wishes a Bill will be submitted to you which, by the consolidation of colonial interest and resources, will give strength to the several provinces as members of the same empire, and animated by feelings of loyalty to the same Sovereign.

I have heard with deep sorrow that the calamity of famine has pressed heavily on my subjects in some parts of India. Instructions were issued to my Government in that country to make the utmost exertions to mitigate the distress which prevailed during the Autumn of last year. The blessing of an abundant harvest has since that time materially improved the condition of the suffering districts.

The persevering efforts and unscrupulous assertions of treasonable conspirators abroad have, during the last Autumn, excited the hopes of some disaffected persons in Ireland, and the apprehensions of the loyal population; but the firm, yet temperate exercise of the powers entrusted to the Executive, and the hostility manifested against the conspiracy by men of all classes and creeds, have greatly tended to restore public confidence, and have rendered hopeless any attempt to disturb the general tranquillity. I trust that you may consequently be enabled to dispense with the continuance of any exceptional legislation for that part of my dominions.

I acknowledge with deep thankfulness to Almighty God the great decrease which has taken place in the cholera, and in the pestilence which has attacked our cattle; but the continued prevalence of the latter in some foreign countries, and its occasional reappearance in this will still render necessary some special measures of precaution; and I trust that the visitation of the former will lead to increased attention to those sanitary measures which experience has shown to be the best preventive.

Estimating as of the highest importance an adequate supply of pure and wholesome water, I have directed the issue of a Commission to inquire into the best means of permanently securing such a supply for the metropolis, and for the principal towns in densely peopled districts of the Kingdom.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

I have directed the estimates for the ensuing year to be laid before you. They have been prepared with a due regard to economy and to the requirements of the public service.

You will, I am assured, give your ready assent to a moderate expenditure calculated to improve the condition of my soldiers, and to lay the foundation of an efficient army of reserve.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

Your attention will again be called to the state of the representation of the people in Parliament; and I trust that your deliberations, conducted in a spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance, may lead to the adoption of measures which, without unduly disturbing the balance of political power, shall freely extend the elective franchise.

The frequent occurrence of disagreements between employers of labour and their workmen causing much private suffering and public loss, and occasionally leading, as is alleged, to acts of outrage and violence, has induced me to issue a Commission to inquire into, and report upon, the organization of trades unions and other associations, whether of workmen or employers, with power to suggest any improvement of the law for their mutual benefit. Application will be made to you for parliamentary powers which will be necessary to make this inquiry effective.

I have directed bills to be laid before you for the extension of the beneficial provisions of the Factory Acts to other trades specially reported on by the Royal Commission on the Employment of Children; and for the better regulation, according to the principle of those Acts, of workshops where women and children are largely employed.

The condition of the Mercantile Marine has attracted my serious attention. Complaints are made that the supply of seamen is deficient; and the provisions for their health and discipline on board ship are imperfect. Measures will be submitted to you with a view to increase the efficiency of this important service.

I have observed with satisfaction the relaxations recently introduced into the Navigation Laws of France. I have expressed to the Emperor of the French my readiness to submit to Parliament a proposal for the extinction, on equitable terms, of the exemptions from local charges on shipping, which are still enjoyed by a limited number of individuals in British ports; and his Imperial Majesty has, in anticipation of this step, already admitted British ships to the advantage of the new law. A Bill upon this subject will forthwith be laid before you.

A Bill will also be submitted to you for making better provision for the arrangement of the affairs of Railway Companies which are unable to meet their engagements.

Measures will be submitted to you for improving the management of sick and other poor in the metropolis, and for a redistribution of some of the charges for relief therein.

Your attention will also be called to the amendment of the law of Bankruptcy; to the consolidation of the Courts of Probate and Divorce and Admiralty; and to the means of disposing, with greater despatch and frequency, of the increasing business in the Superior Courts of Common Law, and at the assizes.

The relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland have engaged my anxious attention, and a Bill will be laid before you which, without interfering with the rights of property, will offer direct encouragement to occupiers of land to improve their holdings, and provide a simple mode of obtaining compensation for permanent improvements.

I commend to your careful consideration these and other measures which will be brought before you; and I pray that your labours may, under the blessing of Providence, conduce to the prosperity of the country and the happiness of my people.

HOUSE OF LORDS—THURSDAY, FEB. 7.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

COURTS OF CONCILIATION.

Lord ST. LEONARDS laid upon the table a Bill for the establishment of courts of conciliation and arbitration. He explained that the bill was similar to one which he had introduced last session, and its object was to provide for the settlement of disputes between masters and workmen. Courts of conciliation already existed in France, and had been found to work satisfactorily. He believed that the establishment of similar institutions in this country would tend greatly to put a stop to strikes.

The Bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—THURSDAY.

INSOLVENT RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Sir S. NORTHCOTE, in moving for leave to bring in a Bill to make better provision for the arrangement of the affairs of Railway Companies unable to meet their engagements, pointed out the importance which this question had recently attained, and said there were not only the interests of individual creditors to consider, but those of the public at large and of society, whose convenience was mixed up with the efficient working and continuance of the railways. It was only reasonable that railway companies, when insolvent, should resign the charge which they were unable to manage into more competent hands, which might not be necessarily those of their creditors, for railways were not only private but public undertakings, to which special privileges were granted for the public advantage. In many cases it would be found that the public had a greater interest in the maintenance of the line than the creditors, and for this reason railway companies could not be wound up like ordinary joint-stock companies, but must obtain an Act of Parliament. It was extremely unlikely that Parliament would concede to the Court of Chancery powers to provide for the future arrangement and working of the lines of insolvent companies; and, in his opinion, that court would not be able to prepare schemes of the kind, involving the accommodation and safety of the public. It would be almost impossible to provide for all cases by an Act of Parliament. The popular idea was that the debenture-holders could foreclose, and carry on the railway; but he could not agree to this view, for Parliament had a right to provide that the purposes for which the line was authorized by it were adequately carried out; for it was not likely that where the original company had failed, a body constituted as the debenture-holders usually were would be more successful. He objected to the proposal that the Government should take up the charge of insolvent lines, and pay up the creditors. It was not the duty of the Government, at least in this country, to take upon itself to discharge the liabilities of railway companies, and carry on their duties. The present method was by private bills, but there was no power to compel the insolvent company to apply for a bill, and if it did many parties interested. probably, would not be represented before the committee, or the public heard at all, in addition to the other evils of private bill legislation. Under these circumstances it would be desirable (to a certain extent) to call in the aid of the Executive, and the method proposed was as follows:—The Board of Trade would, when any railway company committed an act of bankruptcy, on the application of a certain number of shareholders and creditors, be empowered to appoint inspectors. If a prima facie case were made out, the latter would have full power to institute an investigation into the whole of the affairs of the company. Acting on their report, it would be the duty of the Board of Trade to bring in a public bill for which the head of that department would be responsible, and for this purpose he indicated certain alterations in the mode of passing bills of this kind, which it would be desirable to effect.

Mr. WATKIN felt that all the evils arose from Parliament having sanctioned ill-advised schemes. He objected to the principle laid down by Sir S. Northcote, and said that if Parliament would make debentures really debentures, any railway would be able to retrieve its position.

Mr. MILNER GIBSON considered it would be unwise to trust such important judicial functions to the Board of Trade.

Digitized by Google

Sir R. PALMER was of opinion that the proposed measure was utterly inadequate to meet the case, and would give no real security to the creditors of railways.

Sir S. NORTHCOTE deprecated a discussion until the bill was before the House, for he believed that its provisions would be found to obviate the objections now raised.

Leave was then given to bring in the bill, which was subsequently read a first time.

THE NEUTRALITY LAWS.

(From the London Gazette of Tuesday Evening.)

WHITEHALL, FEB. 2.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. Robert Monsey, Baron Cranworth; the Right Hon. Richard Monckton, Baron Houghton; the Right Hon. Sir Hugh M'Calmont Cairns, Knt., a Judge of the Court of Appeal in Chancery; the Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, Doctor of Civil Law, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty; the Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt.; Sir George William Wilshire Bramwell, Knt., one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer; Sir Robert Joseph Phillimore, Knt., Doctor of Civil Law, Her Majesty's Advocate-General; Sir Roundell Palmer, Knt.; Travers Twiss, Doctor of Civil Law; William George Granville Venables Vernon Harcourt, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel; Thomas Baring, Esq., William Henry Gregory, Esq., and William Edward Foster, Esq., to be her Majesty's Commissioners to inquire into and consider the character, working, and effect of the laws of the realm available for the enforcement of neutrality during the existence of hostilities between other States with whom her Majesty is at peace; and to inquire and report whether any and what changes ought to be made in such laws, for the purpose of giving them increased efficiency, and bringing them into full conformity with international obligations. The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Francis Phipps Onslow, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, to be Secretary to the Commission.

From the Law Times.

THE SOLICITORS' ACT.

A new question under this Act has been decided by the Admiralty Court. In the case of The Phillipine, Mr. V. Lushington, on behalf of Messrs. Howard and Co., the solicitors in the suit, applied for a declaration by the Court that they were entitled to a charge for their costs on the amount recovered as wages. Dr. Lushington held that, by the terms of the interpretation clause of the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, it applied to this Court; that property had been recovered or preserved by the suit, and therefore the solicitors were entitled to their charge upon the property so recovered.

LAW OF MASTER AND SERVANT.

Last week we announced that, among the many law reforms to be submitted during the coming session, an amendment of the Law of Master and Servant held a prominent place. This has now been confirmed by the Government. We understand that the Bill will adopt all the suggestions of the committee which reported upon it in the last session.

LAWYERS OUTLAWED

A telegram from the United States reports that Congress has passed a Bill disabling all lawyers in the Southern States who took part in their struggle for liberty and independence from henceforth practising their profession. As every Southern lawyer then in practice falls within this category, the entire practice of the law, with all its profits and dignities, must pass to immigrants from the North. Even amid the fury of the French Revolution, no such tyrannical measure as this was devised. And yet is this but one of a series equally despotic—another specimen of democracy in its full development.

THE JAMAICA PROSECUTIONS.

APPLICATION TO ARREST COLONEL NELSON AND LIEUTENANT BRAND.

An application was made at Bow-street, London, on Wednesday, before the chief magistrate, Sir Thomas Henry, by Mr. Fitzjames Stephens, for warrants for the apprehension of Colonel Nelson and Lieutenant Brand, on the charge of the wilful murder of Mr. Gordon, at Morant Bay, in the county of Surrey, in the island of Jamaica, in October, 1865.

Mr. Stephens, with whom was Mr. J. Horne Payne, was instructed by Messrs Shaen and Roscoe. He stated that the actual prosecutors were Mr. John Stuart Mill, the member of Parliament for Westminster, and Mr. P. A. Taylor, the member for Leicester, both now present. The name of Governor Eyre was not at present included, because that gentleman was not at the present moment within the jurisdiction of the court. There was no doubt, however, that he would be ready and willing to meet the charge, and they had an intimation from his solicitor that he would attend upon due notice. He was desirous of doing perfect justice to all parties, and must therefore state that Mr. Eyre had shown the most honourable and courageous determination to meet most fully and fairly every responsibility properly devolving upon him. He (Mr. Stephens) was sorry that the great questions at issue could not be decided on a less grave charge than that of murder, the parties who instituted the prosecution being actuated solely by motives of public justice, and not by any petty party or personal ill-feeling. But he should contend that the act, if, as he alleged, illegal, was an act of murder, and not of manslaughter. The deliberate putting of a man to death illegally was murder, and was not excused either by the good faith or ignorance of the parties, or that they acted under order of superiors. Mr. Stephens went into an elaborate statement of the motives of the prosecutions, the facts and the law of the case, contending that the question at issue was whether the law of England was supreme, or whether the Sovereign had power in time of rebellion to suspend all laws, and set up a military despotism with absolute power over the lives of the subjects of the realm.

Dr. Alexander Fiddes, examined by Mr. Horne Payne—I am a medical man, residing at Kingston, in the island of Jamaica, and was medical adviser to the late Mr. George William Gordon; the last time I saw him before the outbreak at Morant Bay was on the 26th September, 1865; he called at my house very sick; I did not see him again, to the best of my recollection, till the day of his arrest, the 17th October, but on the 16th I received a letter from him; on the 17th October I went to seek for him, and found him in the house of his cousin, in the parish of Kingston; with him was his wife, a male friend, and the inmates of the house; I informed him that Government had issued a warrant against him, and he concurred in the propriety of going to the Government.

Sir Thomas Henry—You can hardly go into that unless they were present.

Mr. Payne: Did you go anywhere?

Witness: I went to General O'Connor's, when Governor Eyre told him to apprehend him, as it was his duty, and take him into custody; I saw him taken from the house with Dr. Bowerbank; a few mounted Volunteers accompanied the carriage; there was not any disturbance at all in Kingston at that time; the general's house, in which Mr. Gordon was arrested, was in the parish of Kingston; I knew Mr. Gordon; he was not in the military service nor in the militia.

Mr. Andrew Henry Lewis: I was in Jamaica in 1865; I was a member of the Assembly and Justice of the Peace in three parishes; I was summoned to attend a Council of War to be held on the 12th of October, 1865, at the King's house—(correcting himself)—at the general's house; the Council decided to proclaim martial law, and I was an assenting party on the representation of Governor Eyre of the state of that part of the country; martial law was proclaimed in the county of Surrey, with the exception of Kingston; copies of the proclamation were printed at Fort Morant, in the parish of St. Thomas-in-the-East; I accompanied Governor Eyre and General Nelson on board the French steamer the Garroelle, and proceeded to Morant Bay, where we arrived, I think it was on the 13th of October; Govenor Eyre afterwards went back to Kingston, leaving General Nelson in command at Morant Bay; I did not see Mr. Gordon land at Morant Bay; I saw him on board the Wolverine several days after I arrived at Morant

Bay; he was then in custody; when he left the Wolverine he was landed at Morant Bay; I saw him there; there were several other prisoners; on the following day, about the 21st, I was present at the court composed of Lieutenant Brand, R.N., Lieutenant Errington, R.N., and Ensign Kelly; Mr. Gordon Ramsay was provost marshal: had attended the court; witnesses were examined and documents produced.

Mr. Stephens: Was he called upon to plead?

Witness: I saw him tried, but I was not there at the commencement.

Mr. Stephens: Was he called upon for a defence?

Witness: He made a defence; Mr. Brand was president; at the close of the evidence the court was closed, and I did not hear the sentence of the court until very shortly before it was carried into effect; I saw Mr. Gordon hung, under the orders of the provost marshal, who was present; it was done by sailors to whom he gave the orders; the body hung for a considerable time, there can be no doubt until he was quite dead; he was not a soldier; I do not know whether he had ever been in the militia, but that force had not been called out for some years; I was at Morant Bay from the time I arrived until the execution, and during that period there was no armed resistance to the authorities, or breach of the peace.

Charles Saville Roundell: I was secretary to the Jamaica Royal Commission, and was present at their sittings; I have custody of the documents which were produced before them, and have them here.

Mr. Roundell being called upon to produce those documents, stated that as they came into his possession as secretary to the Commission, and for public purposes, he wished to produce them only on proper authority, and therefore asked the magistrate if he was bound to do so now.

Sir Thomas Henry said he was.

The documents were then put in.

Mr. Roundell here explained that the documents which he had put in were the notes of the evidence taken before the Court-martial, and that he had also other documents in his possession which he could produce if called upon.

Mr. Stephens said these included the whole of the evidence before the Court-martial.

Mr. Beaumont, of Chancery-lane, shorthand writer—I was present and took notes of a great portion of the proceedings of the Jamaica Royal Commission in 1866; I took the evidence of Mr. Brand; the transcript, as printed in the Blue Book produced, is correct; I have compared it with my notes.

Mr. Stephens was then proceeding to read the evidence given by Lieutenant Brand before the commission.

Sir Thomas Henry observed that it would appear that Lieutenant Brand was appointed President of the Court-martial by General Nelson.

Mr. Beaumont, jun., who assisted his father as shorthand writer, produced the notes of the evidence of Colonel Nelson (acting as Brigadier General at the time of the insurrection in Jamaica) before the Commission; the transcript was correct; heard the witnesses cautioned by the Court that they were not bound to answer any questions to their own prejudice.

Mr. Stephens then read over from the Blue Book the evidence of Colonel Nelson.

Mr. Roundell produced the letter of Colonel Nelson reporting to the governor the sentence of the Court-martial.

In answer to Mr. Stephens, Mr. Lewis stated that General Nelson was present at the execution.

Mr. William Wallett West, clerk to Messrs. Shaen and Roscoe, the solicitors in the case—I have made inquiries, and from information I have received, General Nelson may be found within the jurisdiction of the court, at the United Service Club.

Sir Thomas Henry thought that was too vague.

Mr. Stephens submitted that it was sufficient to show that the person was known or suspected to be within the jurisdiction.

Sir Thomas Henry said that he could not apply under the 24th and 25th Vic., under which alone he could act.

After some discussion, Mr. Stephens applied for an adjournment, in order to produce witnesses who had actually seen Brigadier Nelson going in and out of the United Service Club, and Lieutenant Brand in Regent-street.

Sir Thomas Henry consented to this course, and adjourned the proceedings till Thursday.

London, Thursday.—Warrants have been ganted by Sir Thomas Henry, chief magistrate of the Bow-street Police-court, London, for the arrest of Colonel Nelson and Lieut. Brand for the murder of Mr. Gordon, executed by sentence of Court-martial in Jamaica.

Mr. Roebuck on the Bankruptcy Law.—At the annual meeting of the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce, in the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, Mr. Roebuck, M.P., addressed the assemblage, in response to a vote of thanks carried to him on account of his services in the House of Commons. He observed, in the course of his speech:—"Nothing could be worse than our original bankruptcy law. It was a great improvement that Lord Brougham brought in, but there were great mistakes in his Bill; but the most mischievous thing ever done to trade by legislation, excepting the protection, was Lord Westbury's Bankruptcy Bill. That has been found out, and you well know, sir, that the mercantile world were up in arms at the present state of the bankruptcy law of England; we shall now have to make another experiment, and we are going to try the Scotch system. I hope the Scotch system may succeed. My belief is that it will not. I shall take the opportunity, which I suppose will be afforded me, of stating my views upon the bankruptcy laws whenever the matter comes before the House of Commons."

False Economy.—There is the State extravagance that wastes on sinecures taxes wrung from the resources of wealth, or the scanty providence of the struggling middle classes, and while almost fictitious offices, even in courts of justice, have been within the earlier period of the present century paid by £8,000 and £10,000 a year, the circle had so enlarged itself that Hood tells us he knew a baby who already drew a pension as a superannuated postman, while boys at school drew their pay as officers in regiments of the line. But while these gross abuses existed, many practical and useful branches of the public service were starved out; and Sydney Smith was not more truthful than indignant when he remarked that he often found payment made in State departments in an inverse ratio to the amount of the work done. The law declares that in its eye all men are equal—that every man has a right to be tried by his peers; and this principle is carried to so great an extent that even a foreigner accused of a crime has a right to have half the panel of foreigners. But while this is the theory, what is the practice? At the assizes there are two counsel instructed by the Crown Solicitor to prosecute, and two additional counsel, designated supernumeraries, but all nominated by the Attorney-General, to act with them in a heavy case, or in the second court should the record judge have disposed of his especial business. But while it might be presumed that all her Majesty's subjects would have an equal claim to have a protection of their property or an attack on their persons prosecuted by some of the staff, a selection is made, and the Crown Solicitor, while he gives his intelligence and has the aid of Crown counsel as to prosecutor A and B, leaves unfortunate C and D to drift along, collecting his witnesses as best he may, and having an indictment drawn up by a rural functionary from some precedent of Archbold entombed in a legal Nineveh, and as useless as would be a postal guide of 1800 to tell when a railway train first started in the morning. This paltry economy, only leading to ultimate expense—this shabby distinction in the administration of justice, has been not more emphatically than indignantly commented on by the Judges of the Queen's Bench in the case of the Queen v. O'Brien, reported in another part of our Journal, and the sooner this anomaly be removed the better.—Saunders's News-Letter.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

MACNAMARA v. CAREY.

Jan. 14, 1867.—Trustee—Registration—Breach of Trust—Recitals—Omission.

This was an appeal from a decretal order of the late Lord Chancellor, dismissing the cause petition in this matter without costs. The petition was filed by Richard F. Macnamara, the son of Connell W. Macnamara, charging Henry Carey, one of the trustees of the settlement executed on the marriage of Connell W. Macnamara and Esther J. Carey, with breach of trust, for omitting to register this settlement, and for allowing certain premises mentioned in the recitals of the deed to be omitted in the granting part, and neglecting to take any steps to have the deed reformed.

The settlement was prepared by Connell W. Macnamara, who was a solicitor, no other solicitor being employed either on behalf of Esther J. Carey or the trustees; and the deed remained, after the marriage, in the possession of Macnamara, who took advantage of its non-registration to incumber some of the premises put in settlement.

Henry Carey, who was the brother of Esther J. Carey, was a practising barrister at the date of the marriage, but did not act professionally, or interfere in any way in the preparation of the settlement. He stated in his answering affidavit that Connell W. Macnamara expressly undertook to register the deed, and that he believed that it had been so registered until four years after the execution of the deed, when he learned for the first time of Connell W. Macnamara's dealings with the property. Connell W. Macnamara had died long prior to the commencement of the present suit; and the petitioner's title was derived under an appointment made to him by his mother, pursuant to the provisions of the settlement. The petitioner sought to make Henry Carey answerable for the loss which the trust estate had sustained in consequence of the incumbrances created by Connell W. Macnamara, and affecting not only the premises actually settled, but also those which, although recited as being intended to be put in settlement, had been omitted in the operative part of the deed.

Warren, Q.C., Ormsby Q.C. (with them R. W. Gamble) for the appellant, Richard W. Macnamara.

Sullivan, Q.C., and Palles, Q.C. (with them S. Walker) for the respondent, Henry Carey.

W. Barlow, for the respondent, Esther J. Macnamara.

The COURT* held that without laying down any general rule as to the duty of a trustee to register the deed creating the trust, there was special circumstances in the present case which rendered the non-registration of the settlement a breach of trust on the part of Henry Carey. As to the denominations omitted from the granting part of the deed, they were not bound by the trusts of the settlement, and the trustees, therefore, were exempt from all liability in respect of them. The order of the Court below should be reversed in part, but without costs.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Jan. 26.—Practice—Lunacy—Court of Appeal Act.

The LORD JUSTICE OF APPEAL (who sat for the LORD CHANCELLOR) refused to entertain motions or petitions in lunacy, upon the grounds that although under the 18th section of the Court of Appeal Act (19 & 20 Vic., c. 92) he was empowered to sit for the Lord Chancellor "for the hearing and determining of causes and matters," yet he had no jurisdiction to act in matters of lunacy, as in these the Lord Chancellor's authority was exercised not by virtue of his office as Lord Chancellor, but by a warrant from the Crown, under the sign manual.

Feb. 2.—Practice—Reference under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, 1850.

The LORD JUSTICE OF APPEAL (who sat for the LORD CHANCELLOR) refused, in several instances, to refer cause petitions, under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, upon the ground that there were serious questions of law, such as the construction of wills and deeds, involved in these cases, and that these points ought to be decided by the Court, in the first instance, before any reference was made to the Master.

HODSON v. LYSTER.

Feb. 4.—Practice—Costs of the day—Objection for want of Parties.

This was a cause petition, filed by Ed. M. Hodson, and Octavia Hodson, his wife, to compel Anna S. Lyster to make good waste alleged to have been committed on the lands of Fairymount, in the County of Roscommon, and to restrain her and Augusta Daly, her tenant, from using and otherwise injuring the said lands. Anna S. Lyster was tenant for life, in possession of these lands, under the will of Edward Mills; and the petitioner, Octavia Hodson, and the respondent, Augusta Daly, were tenants for life in the remainder of the said lands, under the same will. Augusta Daly, by her answering affidavit, objected that the inheritor of the land should have been made a party to the suit, but no such objection was raised by the answering affidavit of Anna S. Lyster.

When the cause came on for hearing, the COURT held the objection good, and directed the case to stand over until the necessary amendment should be made. His Lordship having some doubt as to whether Anna S. Lyster was entitled to the costs of the day, as she had not raised any objection for want of parties by her answering affidavit, the question of costs was fully discussed on a subsequent day, when the COURT held that Augusta Daly was entitled to the costs of the day, and that Anna S. Lyster was entitled to these costs, as costs in the cause, as she was willing to have the case disposed of on the merits, without taking advantage of the objection.

Counsel for the petitioners: Lawless, Q.C.; and Roper. Solicitor, Joseph Burke.

Counsel for the respondent, Anna S. Lyster: Butt, Q.C.; W. Bourke, Q.C.; and W. Hickson. Solicitor, William Jameson.

Counsel for the respondent, Augusta Daly: Walsh, Q.C.; and Richey. Solicitors, Findlater and Collins.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by Edward S. Trevor, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the Hollyford Mining Company, Limited, and the Joint Stock Companies' Act, 1862.

Paid-up Shareholders—Contributories—Joint Stock Companies Act, 1862.

January 16, 1867.

Messrs. Smyth and Cash, the petitioners at the time of the formation of the Hollyford Mining Company, in 1863, were lessees of the Hollyford Mine, and they agreed to sell their interest to the projected Company in consideration of 2,000 shares each, which were to be considered as paid up shares, and £400 in cash. The nominal capital of the Company consisted of 24,000 shares of £1 each. The Company went into possession, and worked the mine until the 10th of January, 1866, when it was resolved at a general meeting that it should be voluntarily wound up under the authority of a clause in their memorandum of association. An official liquidator was appointed, and the interest in the lease and the plant, &c., were sold. The liabilities of the Company in December, 1865, considerably exceeded the assets. Calls had been made, from time to time, on the other shareholders, amounting to 6s. 3d. per share. The liquidator having omitted the names of the petitioners from the list of contributories, they presented a petition under the Companies Act, 1862, charging that the sale of the lease was at an undervalue, and praying that he might be ordered to place their names on the list as contributories whose shares were fully paid up, and that their rights might be ascertained, and that he might be ordered to make a call on the other shareholders of such amount as would be sufficient for the purpose of adjusting and equalizing the rights of the paid up shareholders and the other shareholders, so that the former might be recouped the excess of capital which they had subscribed.

The petition was supported by the case of In re Anglesea Colliery Company, L. R. 2, E. 379, S. C. an appeal, L. R. 1 Ch., Ap. 555, and resisted by the official liquidator on the ground that the petitioners had on interest in the winding up of the Company—being under no liability as their shares were paid up—and likely to derive no benefit, as the Company was insolvent. In re Lancashire Brick and Tile Company, 34 Beav. 330; In re Artificial Stone Company, 34 Beav. 185; In re National Savings' Bank Association, L. R., 1 Ch., Ap. 547.

His Honour directed the names of the petitioners to be placed on the list of contributories as members of the Company; but declined, on the materials before him, and in the absence of the other shareholders, to make any order or to express any opinion on the rest of the petition.

In the Matter of the Belfast Central Railway Company and the Railways' Acts, 1851-1862.

Money Lodged on Security under the Railways' Act, 1862—To whom to be Paid Back.

January 23.

A sum of £171 was lodged in court by the Belfast Central Railway Company, under Sec. 2 of the Railways (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1862, to enable the Company to enter into certain lands in Ballymacarrett, in the county of Down. The arbitrator, made his final award, fixing the price at £171, which the owner accepted, and conveyed the lands to the Company. The Company presented a petition praying that the sum lodged might be paid to the owner, founded on a consent signed by him, and by an incumbrancer.

The Master of the Rolls declined to make an order to pay the money to the owner, but directed it to be paid back to the Company, they undertaking that it should be applied according to the consent.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by William Woodlock, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Nolan v. Brennan.

Jan. 12.—Costs—Motion to Refer for Taxation.

Shekelton, for defendant, moved to refer the bills of costs, the subject of the action, for taxation, and then that it should be referred to the Master of the Court to take the account between the parties; and that in so doing he should have regard to whether portion of the work was done without or against defendant's instructions, and should also have regard to the amount due by plaintiff to defendant for goods sold and money paid. The motion was made before plea pleaded.

O'Driscoll, for plaintiff.

The order was made that the costs should be referred for taxation, and that within one week after certificate obtained, the defendant should plead as he might be advised. No rule on rest of the motion. Costs, costs in the cause.

Attorney for plaintiff, D. Nolan.
Attorney for defendant, James Burke.

Jones v. M'Govern.

Jan. 12.—The Black List.—Embarrassing Pleadings.

Motion to set aside the fourth, fifth, and sixth counts of the summons and plaint as embarrassing. The action was brought to recover damages for a publication in the The Black List. The first three counts were in libel. The fourth complained of a false and malicious publication that a judgment had been marked against the plaintiff, whereby special damage had accrued. The fifth complained of a false publication by printing the matter contained in The Black List (setting out the matter verbatim), whereby special damage had accrued. The sixth stated the existence of The Black List—the object with which it was published—its being sent to subscribers—and that defendant, conspiring with others, had sent it, containing among other matters, the matter complained of, to certain persons contrary to law. The objection to the fourth count was that it was uncertain whether it was an informal count for slander or libel, or a count for false representation; that if it was the former, the actual words complained of should have been given—while if it was the latter, it was a form of action unknown to the law. The fifth count was objected to on the ground that it was uncertain whether it was a count in libel or for false representation—that if it was the latter it was demurrable; but that the defendant could not safely demur, as on demurrer it might be held to be a good, though informal, count in libel. The sixth count was objected to as uncertain.

For the plaintiff it was argued that both were counts for false representation, and that such an action would lie for a publication in The Black List. M'Nally v. Oldham (8 Ir. Jur., N. S., 86; S. C, 16 Ir., C. L. R.), was referred to to establish this, and the observations of Lefroy, C. J., in that case, were particularly adverted to, as warranting counts in the form used. The sixth count was abandoned.

Butt, Q.C., and Webb, for the plaintiff.

The Attorney-General and Roper, for the defendant.

The Court decided that the fourth and fifth counts were clearly counts for false representation, and were not embarrassing; and that the defendant, if so advised, would be safe in demurring to them. The language of Lefroy, Q.C., in M'Nally v. Oldham, appeared to warrant these counts. As to the sixth it was plainly embarrassing, and indeed, until abandoned, had been treated in two different senses by the two counsel for the plaintiff. As the motion had succeeded in part and failed in part, costs to be costs in the cause.

Attorney for plaintiff, Parkers.

Attorney for defendant, M'Govern.

THE GRESHAM HOTEL COMPANY v. MANNING.

Jan. 12th, 16th.—Evidence—Declarations of Third Parties in Connexion with Acts.

Motion for a new trial on the ground of the reception of illegal evidence. The action was for obstruction of plaintiffs' light. There was no allegation of special damage in the summons and plaint. On the trial plaintiffs produced evidence to show that persons had refused to take certain rooms in hotel, which had been darkened, and had given the darkening as a reason for not taking them. The late Lord Chief Justice admitted the evidence.

Counsel for plaintiffs, Palles, Q.C., and S. Walker.

Counsel for defendant, Dowse, Q.C., and Byrne.

The Court held that the declarations of third parties refusing to take the rooms could not be received, and set aside the verdict.

COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

DELACHEROIS v. DELACHEROIS.

This was a motion on behalf of James and Robert Strain that a writ of restitution should issue, commanding the Sheriff of the County Down to restore them to the possession of a farm from which they had been evicted in July last, under a writ of habere in this cause. The summons and plaint, which was issued so long back as 1856, had been served on one William Graham, who was then in possession of the farm, and whose assignee the Strains were; subsequently the plaintiff served a notice on Graham informing him that he had been served with the summons and plaint by mistake, as his farm was not included in the lands sought to be recovered, and requiring him not to take defence to the action. The judgment when made up contained a statement that Graham had been served with the summons and plaint by mistake. In 1866, the plaintiff being of opinion that the farm was included in the lands to which he had established his right by the judgment, executed the writ of habere against the Strains, who were then in possession. On the part of the plaintiff who opposed the motion it was urged that the farm in question did form part of the lands sought to be recovered in the ejectment.

The Court directed a writ to issue to the Sheriff to restore the lands, the plaintiff to pay the costs of the motion, and £10 in satisfaction of any damages the Strains might have suffered—the Strains to bring no action; and liberty was also reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh ejectment, the Strains to avail themselves of no defence of the Statute of Limitations, or otherwise, which would not have been open to them in 1856, when the former ejectment was served.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

THE ULSTER RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE NEWRY AND ARMAGH RAILWAY COMPANY.

Jan. 15.—Parliamentary Costs—Special Procedure.

The 28th and 29th Vict., c. 27., provides that where a Parliamentary Committee has declared a party entitled to certain costs, and said party shall have obtained a certificate of the amount as therein mentioned, he may recover the same by action of debt, and in such action it shall be sufficient in England and Ireland for the plaintiff to declare that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum mentioned in such certificate; and the said plaintiff shall, upon filing the said declaration together with the said certificate and an affidavit of such demand as aforesaid, be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of a plea by nil dicit, and take out execution, &c. Plaintiffs had been declared entitled to certain costs against the defendants pursuant to the provisions of the act.

A. M. Porter moved that the officer of the Court be directed to mark judgment for the plaintiffs on the plaintiffs filing a writ of summons and plaint, a certificate of the sum found due, and an affidavit of demand. Since the Common Law Procedure Act there is no such thing as a declaration in an action of debt. If we serve our plaint in the ordinary way there may be a defence filed which is contrary to the object of the act.

The Court were of opinion that they had no power to comply with the application, but suggested that plaintiffs should serve the writ of summons and plaint in the usual way. They declined, however, to express any opinion as to what course they should adopt if defendants put in defence.

No rule on the motion.

Attorney for the plaintiffs, Newtons and Armstrong.

Feb. 6.—Change of Venue—Delay.

O'Moore, on behalf of the defendant, moved to change the venue from Naas to Dublin. The action was for slander; and the defendant's affidavit stated that the plaintiff was an insolvent; that all the witnesses resided in Dublin; that one of defendant's witnesses would be Mr. O'Donnel, the police magistrate, and that it would be difficult to procure his attendance at Naas without inconvenience to the public. There was generally a great number of records at Naas.

J. A. Curran, senior—The plaint in this case was served in November, the defence was filed on November 27th. The defendant had lain over a whole term. Naas is so near Dublin that it would be more convenient to have a trial there than to be waiting day after day for one in town. Proximity is of importance in these motions, Doyle v. Hammond, 6 Ir. Jur. O. S. 306.

Deasy, B.—The dates are against the application. A whole vacation and term have been lost, and if this motion were granted now, the plaintiff could not have a trial before the Easter after-sittings. The plaintiff should not be exposed to this delay in a matter affecting character.

Holmes v. Waterford and Passage Railway Company.

Vacating Judgment marked by mistake.

P. Martin, for plaintiff, moved to vacate the judgment in this case, under the following circumstances detailed in the affidavit of plaintiff's solicitor. That judgment was entered in this cause on the 29th June last, but no writ of execution has been issued on foot of said judgment, nor any subsequent proceeding taken thereon; that an arrangement was being made by the plaintiffs with the defendants, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to stay judgment for some time; that when said judgment was entered, deponent was not aware of such arrangement; plaintiffs have written to their attorney requesting him to cancel said judgment, so as to enable plaintiffs to complete the arrangement.

Deasy, B.—Have you served notice?

No; it is our judgment, and we seek to have it vacated in order to settle with defendant.

Deasy, B.—Even so, you must serve notice. It might be defendant's interest to keep the judgment. For instance, he might want to plead it to another action for the same cause.

Motion refused.

Grogan v. M'Connell.

Jan. 26.—Issues—Codicil—Alleged Mistake in Reference to Will—Amendment.

A codicil referred to a will of Nov., 1863, which were propounded by the plaintiff.

Some defendants pleaded a will of Jan., 1864, as the last will which had revoked the former, and averred that the codicil was intended to be a codicil to it, and that the testator did not intend by the codicil to declare an intention to confirm and revive the first will.

Other defendants, in addition to a similar plea, pleaded undue execution of the codicil and undue influence as to it.

Held that the proper issue was whether the will of Nov., 1863, was revived by the codicil, and also that the special plea should be amended by omitting the latter branch of it.

This was a motion to amend one of the pleas filed to a declaration propounding a will of Margaret Hollywood, dated 23rd November, 1863, and a codicil dated 9th June, 1864, and also to settle the mode of trial.

The plea was, that the said M. H., did not, by the said codicil, declare her intention to confirm or revive the said will, as alleged; and it never was her wish or intention, by said codicil, to confirm or revive that will. With that plea were also added the usual pleas of undue execution and of undue influence as to the codicil.

Some other defendants pleaded another will, made in January, 1864, as the last will of M. H., and that the codicil was a codicil to it and not to the will of November, 1863, which was revoked.

Harrison, Q.C., for the motion.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., for some defendants.

Dr. Townsend, Q.C., for others, asked for separate issues on the plea.

Keatinge, J.—The plea must be amended by omitting the last branch of it, which is involved in the first. And the proper issue on all the pleas will be whether the will of the 23rd November, 1863, was revived by the paper-writing dated the 9th June, 1864.

Eastwood v. Eastwood.

Jan. 30.—Legitimacy—Evidence of Marriage—Letters—Reputation—Acts—Costs.

Letters from the alleged husband to the alleged wife, and from other members of the alleged husband's family, and statements in the will of the alleged husband and of other members of the family, in all of which the alleged marriage was recognized, were not considered sufficient, per se, to prove a marriage; there was no record, in any shape, of a marriage, and the acts of the issue being inconsistent with a valid marriage; and no intimacy was proved between the alleged wife and the husband's family, but the reputation in his family was against a marriage.

This was a case which arose on a declaration of interest, filed by the defendant and intervenient, alleging that Samuel Eastwood, the father of the intervenient and the grandfather of the defendant (the daughter of James Robert Eastwood, the eldest son of Samuel) had been lawfully married to Margaret Javoux, by whom he had issue the said James Robert Eastwood, and George Joseph Eastwood (the intervenient) and other children.

The plaintiff pleaded and traversed the fact of the alleged marriage, and alleged that at the time alleged M. J. was the lawful wife of a man named Morrin, who was then alive.

The case came on for hearing before the Court. Parol and also written evidence was given of the fact of the parties having been living and cohabiting together as man and wife, and being considered as married; and numerous letters of the alleged husband were read, in which he described her as his wife. His will also did the same, and several other wills of other members of his family also did so. There was no record whatever of any marriage in fact. S. E. was an attorney in practice. Evidence was given of the reputation in the family of S. E. of no valid marriage.

Keatinge, J., held that the evidence relied on was not sufficient to establish a marriage in law. The letters that were proved showed that Samuel Eastwood lived on the most affectionate terms with Margaret Javoux, and that he would, if he could, make her his lawful wife; and his will confirms that; and the only bar that can be conceived was that Moran was alive; but these, or the other letters or wills referred to, do not, per se, constitute evidence of a marriage in fact. It is a most important fact in the case, that James Robert Eastwood, the father of the defendant, Maria Louisa Eastwood, would have been, if legitimate, absolutely entitled, under his uncle, the Rev. James Eastwood's will, to a legacy of £3,000 on his father's death. And yet it was proved that after his father's death, his mother being alive, he sold that legacy and all interest then due—in all about £5,100—for a sum of £300. That proved that he was not in a condition to prove the marriage, although his mother, a competent witness, was alive. Then there is no proof of an intimacy with the alleged husband's family; on the contrary, the reputation in the family is that there was no marriage in fact, and there was some evidence that Morrin was alive and had been married to Margaret Javoux. On the whole, his Lordship decided that as there was no legal evidence of any marriage in fact, and referring to the fact that Samuel Eastwood, a solicitor, never had any record made of a marriage; and on the acts of the parties, which were inconsistent with the fact of a valid marriage, the parties, defendant and intervenient, were illegitimate, and he dismissed the caveat and ordered the costs to be paid by them.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Before Judge Dobbs.

Jan. 22.—Claim of Purchaser to be Discharged—Compensation.

Leslie, for W. G. Browne, the purchaser of the lands sold in this matter, applied that the sale might be set aside, or that the purchaser should be compensated on the following grounds. The rental, which was prepared for previous occasions on which the lands were set up for sale, described one Samuel Goode, jun., as tenant of two of the denominations of (about) 16 acres and (about) 3 acres, at the rents respectively of £20 and £3, and his tenure was stated to be, "tenant for one year; tenancy determinable 1st November, 1865." The descriptive particulars contained the following:—"The out-offices consist of dairy, coach-house, stabling for 4 horses, and out-houses for 30 head of cattle. There is also a large and productive fruit garden, surrounded by a ten feet wall, and a flower garden running down to the river. The entire of the lands, with the exception of 10 acres, is laid down in grass." The lands were sold to the purchaser by private sale, on the 8th November, 1866. The affidavit made by the purchaser to ground this motion stated that Samuel Goode had never been a tenant, but a labourer in the owner's employment; that the lots of which he was stated to be tenant could not be identified, and if identified could not be of the value stated in the rental; that there was no dairy; that the coach-house was partly unroofed and much dilapidated; that there was only stabling for 8 head of cattle; that instead of the garden wall, stated to be 10 feet high, there was only a partial wall, varying in height from 4 to 7 feet, while the garden itself contained very little; that there was no flower garden; and that a crop of oats had been taken out of a portion of the lands, containing between 30 and 40 acres, without any manure having been laid out on it; and no grass seeds planted.

Flanagan, Q.C., for the solicitors having the carriage of the proceedings.

Leslie replied.

Dobbs J. considered that the purchaser had no claim to be discharged, as he got the number of acres the rental professed to give, and as there was nothing to lead the purchaser to suppose that Goode was a tenant at the time of the sale. With reference to the question of compensation, his Lordship directed the motion to stand over, to give the owner an opportunity to bring forward evidence as to the dairy, the coach-house, the accommodation for cattle, and the garden.

Feb. 2nd.—The motion was renewed, and affidavits having been read on the part of the owner and the purchaser,

Dobbs, J. observed that there was no statement in the rental as to the state of repair of the premises, or of any portion of them, and disallowed the purchaser's claim to be compensated in respect of any of the matters complained of, except the garden wall. With reference to this, he said that the solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings ought not to have stated that there was a garden surrounded by a ten feet wall, when part of the garden had no wall at all, and part of it a low wall; and he allowed the purchaser £25 as compensation, with the costs of the motion.

The solicitor for the owner applied that these costs should be paid, not by the owner, but by the solicitor having carriage of the proceedings.

Dobbs, J. said he could not alter the ruling he had made, but if the owner could bring forward a case of misdescription, he would make the solicitor pay the costs; adding that it was difficult for an incumbrancer to describe the exact state of the premises.

In the matter of the Estate of the Assignees of E. R. Hunt, Widow, an Insolvent, Owners; J. Jackson and W. Jackson, Petitioners.

Before Judge Dobbs.

Feb. 4.—Rescission of Absolute Order for Sale.

In this case an absolute order had been made on the 17th January, 1867, for the sale of one undivided third part of the house known as No. 34, Westmoreland-street, and one undivided third part of the house known as No. 22, Fleet-street. The petitioners had obtained a judgment against E. R. Hunt for £38 14s. 1d., which was registered as a statutable mortgage against the premises.

Flanagan, Q.C. (with him Wheeler), for J. E. Hunt, applied to have the order for sale discharged. His client had been in partnership with the late husband of E. R. Hunt, and subsequently to his death had become the purchaser of the interest in the premises, though the widow had not executed the conveyance to him, and had since died. The petitioners' judgment had been obtained after the death of the husband of E. R. Hunt, and upon a debt due by herself personally.

Macdermott for the petitioners.

Dobbs, J. said that in the course of the discussion a circumstance had turned up which rendered it contrary to the rule of the Court to sell this property. The creditor being a judgment mortgagee stated all he knew, and said he was unable to state who was in receipt of the rents and profits. It turned out that a person was in receipt of them who claimed adversely as to title, and therefore the Court could not sell the premises. He would stay proceedings till the party named as owner got possession, or till the petitioner (if he could) amended his petition by stating who was in possession as owner, and proving that he had an incumbrance affecting the property of such owner. A new conditional order should then be obtained and served on the owner. The order would be that the proceedings be stayed, inasmuch as the nominal owner was not in possession of the rents and profits; and if the petitioner asked it he would give him liberty to amend his petition by stating as owner the person who was in possession of the rents and profits; and the question of costs should be reserved.

BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Berwick, J.

February, 1867.—Re Beck an arranging trader—Arrangement Clauses of the Bankruptcy Act—mortgaging Property Supplied by one Particular Creditor—Discretionary Power of the Court.

An arranging trader has an overwhelming majority of creditors to sanction the proposal for a composition offered by him, but it turns out that property to a very large amount, in the shape of machinery, which was erected by a particular creditor, had been mortgaged by the trader at the very time that such machinery was in process of erection without giving the slightest intimation to that creditor, the Court will, notwithstanding that majority, and without speculating whether more or less will be had in bankruptcy, adjudicate the trader bankrupt, and adjourn the proceedings into the open Court, and give the creditor opposing his costs.

The 353rd section of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act provides, that if at any time after the filing of any petition for protection of a trader, it shall be shown that the affidavit filed with the petition was wilfully untrue, so far as concerned the assets ready to be produced by him, or that he has not made a full disclosure of his debts and credits, estate and effects, and is not desirous of making a bona fide arrangement with all his creditors, or that his proposal to that effect is not reasonable or proper to be executed under the direction of the Court, &c., it shall be lawful for the court to adjudge the petitioner bankrupt, and to adjourn all further proceedings in the matter into the public Court.

In this case Heron, Q.C., was for the trustees, by whom the arrangement was to be carried out.

Kernan, Q C., was for the petitioner, and Serjeant Barry and Doctor Seeds were for creditors, named Musgrave, to oppose the arrangement. Their opposition rested on two grounds—first, because the proposal made was not reasonable or proper to be executed under the directions of the Court; in fact, that it would be paying a composition to the general creditors partly at the expense of one particular creditor; secondly, that the conduct of the petitioner, as far as Messrs. Musgrave were concerned, was such as to amount to legal, if not actual fraud. It was stated on the part of Messrs Musgrave that in September, 1865, Beck entered into an agreement with them for the erection of two steam engines to move the machinery of his flax mill, for which they were to get a sum of £360. In pursuance of this agreement the Messrs. Musgrave proceeded to make the engines, and in June, 1866, had done work upon Beck's premises to the amount of £4,700. On the 18th of June, 1866, Beck executed a mortgage to Johnson and Carlisle of the entire mill premises, including the machinery put up by the Messrs. Musgrave, and all machinery to be erected. Beck never informed the Messrs. Musgrave of the mortgage, and they continued to erect the machinery and expend considerable sums of money up to the very day upon which Beck presented his petition under the arrangement clauses of the Act. The value of the work done by the Messrs. Musgrave from the 16th of June until the petition was presented was £5,100. There was paid to the Messrs. Musgrave altogether a sum of about £1,300, and that was for work done previous to the execution of the mortgage. It was contended that Beck must have known that he was in insolvent circumstances when he made the agreement with the Messrs. Musgrave to erect the machinery, and that he then permitted them to expend large sums of money upon works that he was about to pledge, and that he knew they had no prospect of being paid; this was fraudulent conduct within the meaning of the Act. It was contended that the proposition was unreasonable because it admitted the validity of the mortgage to Johnson and Carlisle, upon which a question might arise on the ground that if the mortgagees entered into possession of the mortgaged property Beck would not have been able to carry on his trade, and that therefore the execution of the mortgage was an act of bankruptcy, and such a question should not be decided in a summary way; for if the mortgage were set aside there would be a large fund for distribution amongst the general creditors. It was part of the proposed arrangement that Beck should be allowed to retain his furniture, value £250, and get a bonus of £300 over and above the allowance a bankrupt would be entitled to receive in case of bankruptcy, and in addition to get an immediate certificate. On the whole, it was contended that the proposal was not only unreasonable, but fraudulent, as regards the Messrs. Musgrave, and the case ought to be turned into bankruptcy.

Kernan, Q.C., for Beck.—The petitioner, had an overwhelming majority of the creditors to vote for the arrangement, and was entitled to carry it. No good could arise from turning it into bankruptcy; the creditors would not get as much as they would get under the arrangement, and as to the mortgage to Johnson and Carlisle being an act of bankruptcy, that was out of the question, as it was more than six months since it was executed. The case of the Messrs. Musgrave was not one of the peculiar hardship represented, they had got considerable sums of money on foot of the work they had done, and, on the whole, they were not worse off than other creditors.

Judge Berwick said the case was a very important one, as regards that portion of the Bankruptcy Act that came under the head of the Arrangement Clauses, and as regarded creditors sought to be made parties to such arrangements. In the present case it was admitted that there was an overwhelming majority to entitle the trader to carry his arrangement under the statute, and the question for the Court was, notwithstanding that majority, whether the proposal was reasonable or proper as regarded all his creditors, to be sanctioned by the Court. Now, he was of opinion that it was not a reasonable proposition, as regarded the opposing creditors. On the contrary, he thought it was most unjust, with regard to them; and whether creditors got more or less in bankruptcy, he believed it was a case where the Court ought to exercise the discretionary power given to it by the 353rd section, and turn the case into bankruptcy (his Lordship read the section). It could not be said that Mr. Beck was desirous of making a bona fide arrangement with all his creditors when one creditor was to be subject to very gross injustice. It could not be said that the proposal was reasonable or proper where the property of one creditor to a very large amount was taken by the trader and pledged, to raise money, not for the purpose of paying the creditor who supplied it, but to put it completely out of his reach. It could not be said to be reasonable or proper that a man in evidently insolvent circumstances should contract for the supply of property of a very valuable description, and then as soon as it was supplied and before it reached his possession at all pledged it, for he not only mortgaged the machinery erected but all that was to be erected, and this without the slightest intimation to the firm supplying that property to him. He (Judge Berwick) could not believe that the Legislature intended that the Arrangement Clauses could be turned to a purpose that would work such injustice to even one particular creditor; and although he was always anxious to meet the wishes of the majority of creditors in every case, he was forced to come to the conclusion in the present case that the proposal was not reasonable or proper to be sanctioned by the Court, and he would adjudicate the petitioner bankrupt, and adjourn all further proceedings into the public Court. His Lordship gave the Messrs. Musgrave their costs of the opposition.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the "Irish Law Times."

THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

SIR—I propose to consider shortly the Registration of Title question—the circumstances which led to the creation of a permissive Register or Record of Indefeasible Title in Ireland (partly modelled on that existing since 1862 in England), the objections urged against the measure, and its probable effects as regards the profession and the public.

Few persons are now indisposed to admit that it is a positive advantage to the owner of land to be able to sell any portion of it, or to grant a valuable lease or annuity, or to procure a loan, in a short time and at a slight expense. The impediments to dealings with land in the United Kingdom have, for a long series of years, been such as to diminish its value to the owners, and to limit the number of persons bound by ties of property to the cause of order and loyalty. In this inquiry I will take it as an axiom, that all artificial hindrances to dealings with land ought to be removed.

To Mr. R. R. Torrens, and to Mr. Vincent Scully is chiefly due the credit of effectually calling public attention to this question. They demonstrated that existing systems might safely be applied to landed property in this country. Registration of Title is no new invention. In this country the title to Government Stock has been registered for more than a century; and there has been a perfect system as regards shipping property in operation for many years. Mr. Torrens actually applied the method to landed property in our colonies. Lord Westbury and Sir H. Cairns—the two greatest lawyers of our time—saw that the method was applicable to landed property at home; and they framed measures for so applying it. The public mind was unprepared for compulsory measures; and therefore permissive ones only were passed, mainly through the influence of those two most eminent jurists. The English Act was passed in 1862, and the Irish Act in 1865; the latter applying only to titles conferred by the Landed (or Incumbered) Estates' Court. Such is very briefly the history of the Registration of Title question in this country.

There are, however, intelligent critics who are in the habit of regarding the Registry of Deeds in Ireland as an institution calculated to accomplish every useful object. With more careful supervision, and a larger staff, the Registry might (they say) be kept free from arrear, the indexing and entering might be done every day, the searches might be completed in a short space of time. There is reason for supposing that the inherent defects of the Registry are such as to render those results impossible. The best Registry of Deeds that ever existed supplies but very partially the place of a Registry of Title. Could a "Registry Search" be obtained at a day's notice, and at a trifling expense, it would still, as an evidence of title, be unsatisfactory for the following reasons:—The search against names discloses acts by all other persons of the same name as the person searched against; but even when limited to certain lands there remain the "general acts," or deeds not affecting a particular denomination of land. Thousands of deeds on the Registry affect in general terms "all the lands of the grantor" in the County of L——, or in Ireland, as the case may be. Even supposing all these acts to be satisfactorily explained (and this cannot be done without delay and additional expense) a search does not demonstrate a perfect title unless carried back to the coming of age of the person searched against—for before acquiring the property the person in question may possibly have covenanted to settle all his after acquired lands, or to charge all the lands he may die possessed of. And the ordinary search directed by counsel would not disclose a deed of this nature. When to these objections it is added that a search of the safest kind, i.e., that against both names and lands, is very expensive and takes a long time to complete; and that solicitors who wish to complete transactions speedily are every day obliged to rely on "hand searches" and "common searches," and thereby incur considerable risk, which has not unfrequently led to their personally losing considerable sums of money; when to all this is added the remote position of the Registry Office, at the northerly extremity of the city, and the fact that other searches have also to be made in another office for judgments, recognizances, and Crown debts—when it is also remembered that all projected measures for improving and reforming the Registry of Deeds have failed by reason of the difficulty and complexity of the subject, and are likely to fail—it appears to me to have been a simpler and completer reform to withdraw, at least lands held under Parliamentary Title, from the old Registry of Deeds, and to register them in such a way that a search shall disclose all that affects the estate, and nothing but what does affect the estate. In these words is summed up the essence of the "Record of Title."

An incidental benefit, of no slight importance, is conferred by the existence and powers of the Landed Estates Court, which is enabled by the Act to correct any error that may happen to be discovered in the Record of Title. This power of rectification is one which does not exist as regards the Registry of Deeds; and one which perhaps could not exist conveniently, excepting in the case of titles created by the Court, and remaining under the charge of its own officer. Other critics have objected that the Record of Title is not a register of simple ownership, like that kept by the Bank as regards Government Stock, but one that may be complicated by trusts and limitations. The objection, if admitted as having some force, can hardly be urged by the owner of land, for the answer to him would be conclusive—"You are not required to encumber the Record with trusts in any case. The Act merely allows you to do so." As the measure was prepared in 1864, property could only have been recorded in the names of absolute owners, or of trustees having power of sale. The late Judge Hargreave, as is well known, strongly approved of this scheme; and he expressed his regret when a number of landowners procured the alteration of the measure in this particular, by representing to the Government their partiality for settlements, and their wish to be able to record the interests under them. But the common sense of the proprietors of recorded estates may be trusted to, for telling them that a Record of Title can be of little use unless it enables a transfer or other dealing to be at once effected. And, in point of fact, nearly all the estates now placed on the Record (about 120 in number*) are recorded in the names of persons who are legally capable of transferring or mortgaging at once. So far little use has been made of the power of putting trusts on the Record; and therefore that objection to the measure practically falls to the ground. The first legal effect of recording an estate, is to withdraw it completely from the operation of the Registry Acts, which no longer affect it. Consequently no act by the recorded owner of an estate is registered in Henrietta-street; and no search need be made against him.

The next effect is, that no judgment recognizance or Crown debt of any kind affects the estate unless specifically entered on the Record under the title. If a person possessed of some common name (as Wilson, Johnson, Murphy, &c.) wishes to show title under the old system, he must furnish a Judgment Search on which, probably, one hundred or more items may appear, as to all of which he has to show that they are satisfied or paid off, or that they are against other persons similarly named. Where the name is a more unusual one the inconvenience is less heavily felt. In all cases the necessity of preserving the various Searches in safe custody, so that they may be available in case of a future transaction, and that their loss may not involve the expense of making them over again, is a minor grievance of which few professional men have not had experience. Another incidental advantage, therefore, is that no documents have to be preserved excepting one—the Duplicate or Certificate of Title—which is, by the Act, rendered perfect evidence of the title as of its date. This instrument, although its issue is not compulsory, is, in point of fact, taken out by all owners of recorded property, for their own satisfaction. Its production is called for whenever any act or dealing by the owner is to be put on record; and a note of every act or dealing is entered (in precisely similar terms) on it, and on the original Record, before it is handed out. This is the machinery by which a Record of Title is maintained.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
LEGULEIUS.

* It is worthy of mention that of the recorded owners, nine are solicitors who have placed their own property under the Act.

NORTH EAST BAR.—The members of this circuit, in accordance with ancient usage, entertained the going Judges of assize, the Right Hon. Barons Fitzgerald and Deasy, at a grand banquet on Tuesday evening, in the hall of the King's Inns, Henrietta-street. Amongst the guests present were the Lord Chief Justice, the Right Hon. J. Napier, Mr. Justice O'Hagan, &c. About forty members of the Bar sat down. The chair was occupied by Thos. M'Donnell Esq., Q.C., and the vice-chair by John Norwood, Esq., M.A., in the unavoidable absence of David Pigott, Esq., the steward of the circuit. The dinner was supplied by Mr. Seymour, the caterer for the Inns, and the wines from the cellars of Messrs. Thompson and D'Olier.

THE "BLACK LIST."
Friday, Feb. 1.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and a Special Jury.

GEORGE WILSON JONES v. THOMAS M'GOVERN.

This was an action to recover damages for libel and for falsely representing that Sir John Arnott and Company had, in March, 1866, recovered a judgment against the plaintiff, who is a trader, for the sum of £60 12s. 2d., with £7 4s. 11d. costs. The plaintiff declared that no such judgment had been recovered, and the defendant pleaded that he did not publish the statement in question, and also that the names of Sir John Arnott and Company had been inserted by mistake in Stubbs' Weekly Gazette instead of those of Messrs. Parker, solicitors, and that the mistake had been corrected in the next number of the Gazette.

Butt, Q.C., and Webb for the plaintiff. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Heron, Q.C., Dowse, Q.C., and Roper for defendant.

The case of the plaintiff was that he carried on business as a general dealer, in Tallow, in the county of Waterford, and having been engaged in litigation with the Duke of Devonshire, in reference to the right of possession to a toll-house, the plaintiff was furnished with a bill of costs by his own solicitor, the amount of which he controverted. A judgment was, however, given in blank, afterwards filled up for £60 12s. 2d., and registered, and this judgment was afterwards published in what is popularly known as the "Black List," as having been recovered by Sir John Arnott and Company. The result, as the plaintiff alleged, was that his credit had been most seriously injured by this false statement of a judgment recovered by a firm engaged in trade, and not by a solicitor for unascertained costs, and the result was that he had been called on to pay large sums of money by parties who previously carried on business with him on credit.

The plaintiff was examined, and stated that after the publication in question in the "Black List," he received letters from wholesale houses requiring a settlement of their accounts, or an explanation, and the reason why he did not pay the amount of the judgment recovered against him by Arnott and Co.

Heron, Q.C., objected that these letters were not evidence, as the writers of them ought to be produced.

The plaintiff swore that he has been called upon to pay up £1,741 1s. 7d. since his name appeared in Stubbs' Gazette.

Mr. Alexander Parker, Mr. Thompson, manager of the late firm of Lyons and Company, and Mr. Bradley were examined in order to show that the result of the publication was either to lead them to call for an explanation or to ask for a remittance.

On cross-examination Mr. Parker said that the explanation given by the plaintiff as to the judgment being for a controverted bill of costs was considered as perfectly satisfactory.

The publication by the defendant being strenuously denied, Mr. White was examined and deposed to printing the Gazette in question. The defendant, Mr. M'Govern, he knew very well. The number printed was usually from 1,400 to 1,800. He always got the copy to set up from the defendant, or messenger from the office in Dame-street. He always returned the copy to Mr. M'Govern. It never remained in his office.

Cross-examined—There were boys in Stubbs' office who used to come to him. Printers were not infallible, and mistakes might be made in the copy sent. The defendant used to make corrections in the lists.

Heron, Q.C., addressed the jury for the defendant, and submitted that there was no proof of the publication by his client. He was employed to do what could only be done by an attorney or solicitor, obtain a list of the judgments entered up against individuals in the superior courts, and he was no more answerable for the subsequent publication in Stubbs' Gazette than a reporter who furnished copy which was afterwards printed and published by the proprietor of a newspaper. The plaintiff had failed to fix liabilities upon Mr. M'Govern, and it was his duty to prove his case before the other party was called upon to answer it. It was by a mere mistake, in the next issue corrected, that the name of the creditor of Mr. Jones was stated to be Sir John Arnott, instead of Messrs. Parker, and the witnesses examined failed to prove that the plaintiff had been in any respect injured in his credit by the publication in question.

The defendant was examined, and deposed that he was an attorney, and had offices in 54 Dame-street, which were paid for by the proprietors of Stubbs' Gazette, but nothing was done in his office but his own business. Stubbs' Gazette was published in the same house. Mr. Thorpe was the manager of the publication in Dublin, and had four or five clerks employed, but now had no control over them. Defendant was feed for searching the records of the court for judgments against parties.

On cross-examination, the defendant said that in printed announcements he was mentioned as a person to be consulted at the office of Stubbs' Gazette in Dublin. It was not true that his entire attention was to be given to the communications of the subscribers to the Gazette—they might consult him.

Dowse, Q.C., spoke to evidence for the defendant. Webb replied.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE charged the jury with his wonted clearness, and, in the course of the trial, when the legality of the publication of the "Black List" was assumed by defendant's counsel, intimated that the Court was not to be considered as pronouncing in this case an abstract opinion that such a publication was protected.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with £150 damages and 6d. costs.

Parker, attorney for plaintiff. Defendant, attorney in person.

COMMON PLEAS

In Re RICHARD DAVOREN AND THE ATTORNEYS' (IRELAND) ACT, 1866.

Palles, Q.C., on behalf of Mr. Davoren, moved the Court that he should be permitted to present himself at the final examination, to be held in Trinity Term next, and that, upon passing it, and producing the necessary certificates, he might be sworn in an attorney in Trinity Term. It appeared that Mr. Davoren was bound an apprentice for five years to Mr. Larkin, on the 10th January, 1863, but claimed that he would have served 20 full terms in June next, because he had served Mr. Larkin from the commencement of Michaelmas Term, 1862, and the Benchers had granted his petition to be taken as an apprentice in that term. The indentures, however, were not executed until the 10th January, 1863. Counsel contended that Mr. Davoren would have served 20 terms at the end of Trinity Term next; that, but for the recent Act, he would have been entitled, under the Benchers' rule, to be admitted an attorney on the last day of that term; and that the court should now exercise its discretion in his favour, so as to place him in the same advantageous position that he would have occupied if the late statute had not been passed.

W. Barlow, on behalf of the Law Society, stated that they would not oppose an application to be admitted in Michaelmas Term next, but that, even under the Bencher's rule, this application should be refused, since the terms were to be reckoned from the date of the indentures, so that the 20 terms would not expire until the end of Michaelmas Term.

The Court were of this opinion, but permission was given to the applicant to be admitted as an attorney on the last day of Michaelmas Term, 1867, if he passed the necessary examination.

Wednesday.—Before MASTER BURKE.

FITZGIBBON v. O'BRIEN.

R, W. Shekleton, for plaintiff.
W. O'Brien, for defendant.

This case came before the Master pursuant to an order of reference to take an account of all matters in controversy between the parties in an action for costs between attorney and client. The chief question that arose was, whether the following letter from defendant to plaintiff took the plaintiff's case out of the Statute of Limitations.

"Mount Eagle, 7th December, 1858.

"My dear Michael,

"You will oblige by furnishing me with your bill of costs between us to the present day. I have already received the costs in civil bill cases, and only now require any other law costs that you may have against me, 'as short accounts make long friends.' Let me have this account, at all events, before Christmas next. Please also to have the accounts relating to Condon v. King sent to me, as I require them, and you will oblige by letting me have them within the next ten days, to remain in my custody. Let me have a few lines on the foregoing from you."

The learned Master held, upon the authorities, that such was its effect, and ruled accordingly.

Attorney for the plaintiff, Thos. Ware.
Attorney for the defendant, Carroll and Barry.

Yesterday.

Before the RIGHT HON. the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE in Chamber.

Re JOHN GRAHAM, WM. GIBSON, and ROBERT ARMSTRONG, all of Enniskillen,

Seeking to be appointed Commissioners under 4th and 5th Wm. IV., c. 92, for the County Fermanagh.

On hearing counsel for the respective parties—the SOLICITOR-GENERAL for Mr. Graham; Sullivan, Q.C., for Mr. Gibson; and Dowse, Q.C., with J. H. Monahan, for Mr. Armstrong—and it appearing from the testimonials and certificates produced, that the applicants were well and equally qualified—and it also appearing that there were originally four Commissioners resident in Enniskillen, his Lordship was pleased to grant the three several applications as aforesaid.

Before MASTER BURKE—Yesterday.

BERGIN v. ROCHE.

This was a reference to the Master to take an account under the provisions of the Solicitors' Act, 12 and 13 Vic., cap. 53, of the credits to be given the defendant.

The learned Master, after hearing the case, found the Plaintiff entitled, after all deductions, to £121 8s. 10d. Counsel for the defendant stated his intention of applying to the Court to stay proceedings in the cause. Thereupon the Master ruled to withhold his certificate of sum due, till Tuesday next.

Counsel for plaintiff, E. T. Bewley, instructed by Daniel J. Bergin.

Counsel for defendant, P. M'Kenna, instructed by Michael Macnamara.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Substitution of Service.

Although the defendant has twelve days to plead from the time the conditional order to substitute service is made absolute, yet he has no intimation given him of this precise time, and consequently is compelled to make frequent searches, which are often fruitless, always attended with expense.

Settlement of Debt with Costs pursuant to General Order. 22nd January, 1856.

That a defendant can settle the action, pursuant to the foregoing order, within six days from the order to substitute having been made absolute—reason and analogy warrant us in asserting, though we believe the point is so far new that it has not yet received the sanction of a Court or Chamber decision.

Personal Service—Written Undertaking to Appear.

In cases where regular service has not been effected, such as, "where the plaintiff's attorney, through courtesy, encloses a copy of the writ by post to defendant," or gives an intimation that a writ has been issued, and lies ready for service should the defendant give an undertaking to appear, and not fulfil it, the only remedy will be to effect service in the ordinary way. But if an attorney give an undertaking, for himself or client, its performance can be compelled, or leave to mark judgment obtained by motion; the Court having power over its officer which it has not over a defendant not in Court. As no affidavit of service of the writ could be made, no judgment could be marked without such a motion.

The Summary Procedure in Bills of Exchange and Mesne Process.

It cannot be assumed for a moment that the Legislature intended to give to a plaintiff two summary modes of procedure against a defendant at one and the same time. Consequently the Judges may have some difficulty in allowing a plaintiff to avail himself of them; and there is no portion of the practice of the Courts on which the Judges have more discretionary power than in granting or refusing Fiats. Indeed in a recent case, one of our most eminent judges endorsed on the affidavit to hold to bail. That in itself it was sufficient; but the plaint having issued under the beforementioned Summary Procedure Act, he should refuse the fiat for the reason aforesaid. The proper course for the plaintiff would, therefore be (time being of consequence) to strike the notice, required by said Act, out of the plaint before issuing it; or rather issue a plaint without notice; or, if issued, to apply to the Judge for leave to strike it out, should he be pressed by the difficulty alluded to.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850."

In the Matter of the Estate of DAVID TROTTER, Executor of THOMAS WALSH, deceased.
Petitioner;
ELIZA WALSH, THOMAS WALSH, and SAMUEL WALSH, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors or Pecuniary Legatees of THOMAS WALSH, late of Phepotstown House, Kilcock, in the county of Meath, Esq., deceased, on or before the 18th day of February next, to furnish (in writing) to DAVID TROTTER, of Summerhill, in the county of Meath, Medical D.ctor, Acting Executor, or to WILLIAM GEORGE BRADLEY, No. 11, Lower Ormond-quay, in the city of Dublin, his Solicitor, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

I also require all persons having Claims affecting the real and freehold Estate of the said Thomas Walsh, to file same at my Chambers, Inns-quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before the 18th day of February next, in order that same may be proceeded on, and proved according to the General Orders of the 19th May, 1857.

Dated this 19th day of January, 1867.

LOT 1 will be sold subject to two annuities of £20 and £30, for a life aged about 64 years, and to an annuity of £17 10s. 0d., for a life of about 56 years, and to a contingent annuity of £40 a year for life of a lady, aged about 47 years, to commence from death of her husband, now aged about 51 years, should she survive him, as particularly mentioned in printed rental.

The Biddings will be taken by the Auctioneer, on the day and at the place above mentioned, commencing exactly at One o'clock in the afternoon, and will be submitted to the Honourable Judge Longfield, at his Chambers, Inn's-quay, Dublin, on Wednesday, the 20th day of February, 1867, at Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, without further notice to any person.

Dated this 24th day of December, 1866.

HENRY ROBERT GREENE, Chief Clerk.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

LOT 1, KIRKISTOWN OR BROOKHALL.

Mr. Cooper, the tenant, holds all the farm (with the exception of a small portion); the houses thereon are all in the best order, and the land could not be surpassed for quality and situation. The Railway Train passes Coleraine several times daily, from Belfast to Derry and Portrush. The portion held by owner comprises the dwelling-house, office houses, lawn, plantings, and garden; the houses on which are also in the best order. The dwelling-house is large, fronting towards Coleraine, and commanding a most extensive prospect, two storeys, with cellars, parlour, drawing-room, breakfast parlour, five bed-rooms, servants' apartments, &c., &c., &c.; altogether the situation could not be exceeded, and the plantations add much to the beauty of the place. The lands are situated two miles from Coleraine, on the North East side, and three and a-half miles from Portrush. There is a large supply of the best spring water on the premises.

LOTS 2 AND 3, HARPUR'S HILL.

These Lots are quite close to the town of Coleraine and Railway Station; the lands are of the best description, and are all let as town parks; when the tenants' leases expire there will be considerable advance.

LOT 4. CHURCH-STREET.

The houses comprised in this Lot are in the centre of the town of Coleraine, and in the principal street; from this it will be observed that they are most valuable.

LOT 5, HIGHLAND-ROW.

This Lot comprises a block of buildings between the Railway Station and Coleraine, just facing the station and quite close thereto, and yields a well-secured yearly rent.

LOT 6, GATE END.

The Premises are quite close to the town of Coleraine and Railway Station; the land is of the very best quality, and no doubt will be more valuable after some time, when it i[illegible] likely it will be used for building purposes, being so near the Railway Station, and the town is extending very much in that d[illegible]ection.

LOT 7, TULLANS.

This Lot is situat[illegible] about one and a-quarter or one and a-half miles from Coleraine, on the road leading to Ballymoney. The tenants' houses are all in goo[illegible] order, and the land of prime quality; the situation could not be bett[illegible], being quite close to the public road.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, FEBRUARY 16, 1867.

WE do not believe that amongst those sincerely interested in the welfare of the profession of an Attorney and Solicitor there was one person who was not favourable to the establishment of the literary examination, such as now exists, previous to admission as an apprentice to that profession. When, at the instance of the Council of the Law Society, the Benchers, in whom was then vested the control of admission to the profession, determined upon establishing such an educational test for candidate apprentices, every one felt that a step had been taken eminently calculated to elevate the social status and improve the general tone of the profession.

One of the results which followed this reform was the passing of the Act of 24th & 25th Victoria, cap. 68, by which it was enacted, that law clerks who had bonâ fide served ten years to an attorney might be admitted into the ranks of the profession on a three years' apprenticeship, provided they first passed the preliminary educational examination. The Bill which introduced this measure met the approval of the Law Society, on behalf of the Irish solicitors, because the condition precedent to apprenticeship, imposed by the Act, was the very best protection against the admission into the profession of ignorant and objectionable persons. To any well-conducted and intelligent law clerk, who could lift himself above his fellows and qualify himself to pass the preliminary examination, the Act was a great boon, while those who were incapable of preparing themselves for this educational test remained at their natural level. Thus, while the illiterate and ignorant were excluded from the profession, an opportunity was given to law clerks to raise themselves to a higher grade in society by self-improvement and education, of which opportunity some have gladly availed themselves.

We regret to say that an attempt is now being made to do away with the benefits thus conferred upon the profession and upon the law clerks, by members of the latter body, who are too illiterate to pass the very moderate literary examination we have mentioned, trying to force their way into the profession without being subjected to this educational test.

By a provision in the 19th sec. of the recent Solicitors' Act (29th & 30th Vict., cap. 84), in which is embodied the 24th & 25th Vict., cap. 68, the Lord Chancellor, Chief Justices, Chief Baron, and Master of the Rolls are empowered, "under special circumstances," to dispense with any of the regulations respecting the examination of candidate apprentices. Under this section some law clerks, seeking the benefit of the Act in admission on a three years' apprenticeship have applied to the judges, by memorial, accompanied by certificates of good character for liberty to be bound without passing the preliminary examination on the ground of "special circumstances," which generally consist in the fact that their employment does not leave them time for the study necessary to acquire such a moderate education as will enable them to pass it. Notwithstanding the remonstrance of the Council of the Law Society we are informed that the judges have in one instance exercised the discretion conferred upon them by the proviso we have referred to, and (as might be reasonably expected) the consequence has been that a number of law clerks, finding their "circumstances" to be very "special," have memorialized the judges to dispense with any educational requirement in their cases. In fact, judging from the number of applicants, we may say, "more Hibernico," that the law clerks, in "special circumstances," seem likely to form the rule to which those not so placed are to be the exceptions. However, the fact that several law clerks, who have the ability and industry to qualify themselves for the examination by diligent self-improvement and mental culture, have passed that ordeal with the highest credit to themselves, demonstrates at once that such qualification is not impossible to persons fully engaged in the duties of their calling. Such men, who prefer overcoming the educational difficulty in the way of their admission into the profession to which they aspire, to creeping into it under the shadow of the proviso we have mentioned, will, no doubt, do credit to themselves and their profession; and it is a gross injustice to them to dispense with the examination in instances such as we have mentioned.

It requires no very powerful logic to prove that if such applications are granted, all that the Council of the Law Society have been doing for years towards raising the social status of their profession will be undone. If the exception to the rule respecting the requirements of the educational test is to be the case of the person who, from deficiency of education, is unable to comply with them, then the sooner the examinations at the Solicitors' Hall are abolished the better. If the sons of gentlemen who desire to enter the profession are obliged to be educated at considerable expense, to enable them to pass the preliminary examination, ought this barrier against the admission of illiterate persons into its ranks to be lowered in the case of law clerks? Is it, we would ask, common justice to the gentlemen who are subjected to this educational ordeal to exempt from it those who are their inferiors in social position merely because they have attained to some knowledge of the purely mechanical details of a solicitor's office? We have no hesitation in saying that we do not believe it ever was contemplated by the 19th section of the Solicitors' Act to dispense with the preliminary examinations in cases such as we have referred to; and we feel assured that to do so will be not only deeply injurious to the profession in whose interests we write, but to the general administration of the law in this country.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

THE Hon George Denman has given notice that he will, on Tuesday, the 26th inst., move for leave to bring in a Bill to reduce the annual duty upon the certificates of attorneys and solicitors to the nominal sum of 5s.

IN another column will be found an abstract of an able and highly interesting paper read before the Royal Irish Academy on the evening of the 11th inst. The subject selected by the lecturer was "The Rudiments of the Common Law Discoverable in the Published Part of the Senchus Mor." The subject was treated with great ability; and will prove interesting not alone to the mere lovers of the curiosities of ancient literature, but to every Irishman who knows anything of the history of his country, as affording conclusive evidence of early superior civilization.

ENGLAND.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LIBEL.

A Bill to Amend the Law of Libel, and thereby to secure more effectually the Liberty of the Press. (Prepared and brought in by Sir Colman O'Loghlen and Mr. Baines).

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of libel, and thereby to secure more effectually the liberty of the press: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

PART I.—AS TO SPEECHES AT PUBLIC MEETINGS.

1. In any action or prosecution for an alleged libel in any public newspaper or periodical publication, proof that the alleged libel was a true report of a speech or part of a speech spoken at any public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, open to reporters for the press, and that the report was published in the newspaper or other periodical publication bona fide without actual malice and in the ordinary course of business, shall amount to a defence, unless it shall be proved that the defendant declined or omitted, if required so to do, to publish in his newspaper or other periodical publication, and in a portion of the same as conspicuous as that in which the said alleged libel was published, an explanation or contradiction of the alleged libel of not unreasonable length, immediately after such contradiction or explanation shall have been furnished to the said defendant by or on behalf of the party complaining of the alleged libel.

2. Any person who shall speak at a public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, open to reporters of the press, any defamatory matter of any other person, which, if written, would amount to a libel, shall be liable, if the same shall be reported in any public newspaper or periodical publication, to be proceeded against by indictment, information, or action in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had written and published the same; and on such indictment or information, or in such action, the proceedings shall be in all respects the same as to defences, pleadings, and costs as if the defamatory libel complained of had been written and published by the defendant.

3. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken, held or construed, directly or indirectly, by interpretation or otherwise, to affect the privilege of Parliament or of courts of justice, or of any other public body entitled to privilege, in any way whatever.

PART II.—AS TO ACTIONS FOR LIBEL.

4. In actions for libel the defendant shall be at liberty to pay into court a sum of money by way of amends for the injury sustained by the publication of such libel, and such payment into court shall be of the same effect, and available in the same manner and to the same extent, and shall be subject to the same rules and regulations as payment of money into court is now available and subjected to in other personal actions.

5. If the plaintiff in any action for libel, where money shall have been lodged in court, shall decline to accept the sum paid into court in satisfaction of his action, the court or a judge may, on the application of the defendant, at any time order that the plaintiff shall give to the defendant security for the payment of the defendant's costs, and that all further proceedings shall be stayed in the cause until such security shall be given.

6. In all actions for libel, unless the jury shall give damages exceeding five pounds, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to more costs than damages.

PART III.—AS TO PROSECUTIONS FOR LIBEL.

7. It shall be lawful for a private prosecutor, without the sanction of her Majesty's Attorney-General, or, in case that office be vacant, of her Majesty's Solicitor-General, to prefer an indictment for the publication of any defamatory libel other than a libel published with intent to extort any money or security for money, or any valuable thing from such private prosecutor or any other person, or with intent to induce such private prosecutor or any other person to confer or procure for any person any appointment or office of profit or trust.

8. On the trial of any indictment or information for a defamatory libel the defendant shall be allowed, if he or she shall so think fit, to offer himself or herself as a witness on his or her behalf, and the husband or wife of such defendant shall be allowed, if he or she shall so think fit, to offer himself or herself as a witness on behalf of the defendant.

PART IV.—AS TO PLEADINGS IN CASE OF LIBEL.

9. In all cases, civil or criminal, where a defendant is or shall br allowed to plead the truth of the matters charged in the defamatory libel, as a justification or otherwise, it shall be sufficient for the defendant to plead that the said alleged libel is true in substance and matter of fact, to which plea the plaintiff or prosecutor shall be at liberty to reply generally.

10. When a defendant shall plead the truth of the libel in the form allowed by this Act, a court or a judge may, if they or he shall so think fit, on the application of the plaintiff, order the defendant to give a bill of particulars of the facts, circumstances, or acts on which he intends to rely in proof of his plea, and on the trial the defendant shall not be at liberty to prove other facts, circumstances, or acts than those mentioned in his bill of particulars.

PART V.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

11. This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

12. For all purposes this Act may be cited as "The Libel Act, 1867."

IRISH ESTATES.—In the House of Commons, on Tuesday, Mr. O'Beirne gave notice that on Tuesday, the 19th March, he should move that the House resolve itself into a committee to consider an address to be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will take into consideration the expediency of recommending to the House to grant a sum, by way of loan, not exceeding one million sterling, to be employed in the purchase of estates which may be offered for sale in the Landed Estates Court in Ireland, such estates to be resold in subdivided farms of not less than 10, or more than 100, acres each to the occupying tenants of such estates, or, in the event of such tenants declining to become purchasers, to such other persons as may be willing to purchase the same in such subdivided farms, the purpose being to assist and encourage an independent proprietary of small freehold estates in Ireland.

THE JAMAICA PROSECUTIONS.

Mr. FITZJAMES STEPHEN has published the following skeleton of his argument on the question of martial law as applied to the Jamaica Prosecutions.

My propositions, right or wrong, were these:—

1. The legality of the proceedings depends upon the meaning of the Jamaica Acts.

2. The Jamaica Acts do not define martial law.

3. The common law prevails in Jamaica except in so far as it is altered by the island legislation.

4. Therefore we must resort to the common law to ascertain the meaning of the expression "martial law" in the Jamaica Acts.

5. Martial law may mean one of two things:—

(a) It may mean a system of rules enforced by sanctions of their own which can be substituted for the common law by proclamation when anything happens which the Government chooses to call rebellion, the common law being, for the time, altogether abolished.

(b) It may mean the exercise of military power for the purpose of suppressing armed resistance, such exercise of power being authorized and limited by the common law.

6. If the first meaning is the true one, those who execute martial law are not responsible for any excess which they may commit, except to their own officers, because the common law being suspended, no offence against it can be committed.

If the second meaning is the true one, then those who execute martial law are responsible for any excess which they may commit, for they are acting as ministers of the common law, and in discharge of a duty imposed upon them by it, and excess in the discharge of such a duty is a crime.

7. Martial law is legal in England only in the second and not in the first sense, and therefore by propositions 1 to 4, it is legal in Jamaica, also, in the second sense only, and not in the first.

8. Therefore the proposition that those who put Mr. Gordon to death have a right to rely simply on the fact that they acted under martial law without proving before a jury that what they did was necessary in fact, involves the proposition that the Crown may suspend the common law at pleasure, and substitute for it a different system, called martial law in cases of rebellion.

9. But, if this be true, the Sovereign is above the law, and is able to suspend it when he thinks such a step necessary for his own safety; and this is absurd.

(From the Law Times.)

It is reported that Mr. DUDLEY FIELD, so well known to many of our readers personally, and to all of them by his speeches and addresses on law reform, and by his admirable code for New York, is about to be appointed to the American Embassy in London. He knows England and the English well, and his appointment to this post would be heartily welcomed here, and largely tend to maintain friendly relations between the two great Saxon families on either side of the Atlantic.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

OFFICE COPY ORDER.—An office copy of an order is for all practical purposes the same as the original order (Davenport v. Townsend, 15, L. T. Rep. N. S. 528. V. C. W.)

MARRIED WOMAN—NO APPEARANCE ON PLEA OF COVERTURE.—A married woman pleaded coverture to an action upon a bill of exchange, but did not appear at the trial. She was taken into custody upon judgment and execution. An application was made for her discharge on the ground that she was a married woman without separate estate. It was held that, as she had allowed judgment to go against her by default, she could not claim to have it set aside upon her affidavit (Poole v. Canning, 15, L. T. Rep. N. S. 537. C. P.)

WRONGFUL DISMISSAL—NOTICE.—Where a written agreement to employ a person as an advertising and canvassing agent contained no provision as to the notice which should determine the agreement, a month's notice was held a reasonable and proper one for that purpose (Hiscox v. Batchellor, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 543. N. P.)

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

TALBOT v. TALBOT; TALBOT v. KENNEDY.

Feb. 2.—Taxation—Costs as between Attorney and Client—Costs against Fund.

This was a motion on behalf of Mrs. Charlotte Talbot, that the taxing master might be directed to review the taxation of her costs in these matters.

It appeared that there had been a long litigation between the different members of the Talbot family in reference to their respective claims on the Castle Talbot estate, in the county Wexford, in the course of which Mrs. Charlotte Talbot sought to establish her right to a jointure, and an annuity in præsenti, and a reversionary interest expectant on the death of Mr. John Talbot, a minor. This litigation was ultimately brought to an end by a decree, dated the 18th of June, 1864, the result of a compromise between all the parties, by which Mrs. Charlotte Talbot's right to her jointure was established, she relinquishing all claim to the annuity and the reversionary interest The decree declared that Mrs. Charlotte Talbot and certain other parties were entitled to the costs incurred by them in these suits, and also in the matter of Rorke v. Talbot, "all said costs to be taxed between party and party, save the said Charlotte Talbot's costs, which are to be taxed between solicitor and client;" and the decree further declared Mrs. Charlotte Talbot entitled to her costs in these suits as between solicitor and client, and a provision was thereby made that these costs should be paid from a fund to be raised by a mortgage of the Castle Talbot estate.

The taxing master, upon the taxation of the costs under this decree, refused to allow Mrs. Charlotte Talbot a larger sum for the costs of a motion in Rorke v. Talbot than a fixed sum, which, upon the hearing of the motion, had been ordered to be paid to her, by the receiver in the cause, for these costs. He also taxed her costs in these suits as costs between solicitor and client, against a fund belonging to an adverse party, and not as full costs between solicitor and client, as they would be taxed when payable by the client.

Pierce Creagh and G. O. Malley in support of the motion.

O'Hara, Q.C., and J. Harris contra.

The COURT* held that the taxing master had taxed the general costs upon a correct principle, but that in taxing the costs of the motion in Rorke v. Talbot the same principle should have been observed, and that the amount of these costs was not restricted to the sum fixed by the order. As it would not be worth while to refer back the costs to the taxing master upon this point only, Mrs. Talbot should be declared entitled to the difference between this fixed sum and the amount which those costs would have been properly taxed to, which could be settled by agreement between the solicitors for the parties.

Solicitor for Mrs. Talbot, Simon Creagh.

Solicitor for the other parties, W. C. Hogan and Sons.

CLARKE v. CLARKE,

Feb. 6.—Practice—Partition—Reference to Master.

This was a cause petition for the partition of certain leasehold interests in the lands of Thomastown and Ballymacwilliam, in the King's County, to which the petitioner, John Clarke, and the respondent, Daniel Clarke, were entitled in equal moieties under the wills of John Clarke and Thomas Clarke.

Buchanan and Shekleton for the petitioner.

Ormsby, Q.C., and E. Gibson for the respondent.

The COURT, following the cases of Clarke v. Clayton (2 Giff. 333) and Kirk v. Flood (not reported), instead of directing a commission of perambulation to issue, made a declaration that the lands should be divided into equal moieties, and referred it to the Master to make such partition, with liberty to receive proposals and to adopt any of them he should think fit, the parties to enjoy the moieties in severalty, according to such allotment, and to execute mutual assurances.

Solicitor for the petitioner, Henry C. Stephens.

Solicitor for the respondent, Thos. T. Mecredy.

* BREWSTER, L. J., who sat for the LORD CHANCELLOR. The motion had been made in the first instance in the Rolls, but the MASTER OF THE ROLLS refused to entertain it, as he had been engaged as counsel in these suits when at the Bar,

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

LYLE v. SANTA CROW.

Jan. 14, 1867.—Practice—Petition of Revivor and Supplement—Notice of Motion.

J. B. Murphy having moved, without notice, for leave to file a petition of revivor and supplement,

His HONOUR said that whenever a petition contained supplemental matter notice of a motion for leave to file it should be served. He had found the practice so, and he should adhere to it.

Solicitor, J. B. Kennedy.

FINLAY v. BARTON.

FINLAY v. WESTENRA.

Feb. 4, 1867.—Practice—Service out of the Jurisdiction—Statutes, 2 Wm. IV., c. 33; 3 and 4 Wm. IV., c. 82—Administration Suit.

These were administration suits. Part of the assets in Finlay v Barton consisted of chattels real and Government Stock, in Ireland. Part of the assets in Finlay v. Westenra were lands in Ireland. The petitions were referred under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act.

Leech moved for an order to serve several of the respondents in each suit, who resided in England, under the 2 Wm. IV., c. 33, and 3 and 4 Wm. IV., c. 82.

The Master of the Rolls took time to consider, and after reviewing the authorities here and in England, which were conflicting, was of opinion that the preponderance of authority was in favour of the applications, and accordingly made orders in each case.

The practice hitherto established by Freeman v. Freeman (4 Ir. Ch. R., 39) may, therefore, be considered as changed in accordance with Cohen v. Alcan (1 D. J. and S., 398).

T. W. Hardman, solicitor for petitioners.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WILLIAM WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

COPELAND v. HUMPHRY.

Jan. 15.—Practice—Nullity of Service of Summons and Plaint—Setting aside Judgment.

This was a motion to set aside a judgment on the ground that the summons and plaint had never been served upon the defendant. The action was brought upon bills of exchange. Previous to the issuing of the writ a correspondence had passed between the defendant and the attorneys for the plaintiffs. In this correspondence the defendant dated his letter from "4, Brighton-terrace, Bray," and directed plaintiffs' attorneys to write to him, "Care of Mrs. Humphry," at that address. On the 17th November the writ was left by the process-server at the house in Bray, and on the same day Mrs. Humphry wrote to the plaintiffs' attorneys apprising them that Mr. Humphry did not reside at the house, and was not then in this country. Notwithstanding this letter, judgment was marked on the 7th December. There was an affidavit that the house at Bray belonged altogether to Mrs. Humphry, and not to her husband.

Monroe, for the defendant.

S. Walker, for the plaintiffs.

The Court held that it was a clear case to set aside the judgment. The service was utterly null and void, and after Mrs. Humphry's letter of the 17th November, the plaintiffs' attorneys had acted at their peril in marking judgment. There ought to have been a motion either to substitute service or to have the service deemed good. The marking of the judgment had been done in good faith, but as plaintiffs' attorneys had chosen to go on with what was an ex parte proceeding after the letter of the 17th, without mentioning the letter to the officer, the plaintiffs should pay the costs of the motion.

Attorney for plaintiffs, Orpen and Sweeny.

Attorney for defendant, J. Mathews.

THE QUEEN v. MULCAHY.

November—January 17.—Writ of Error.

The prisoner was indicted for treason-felony at the Special Commission in Green-street, in November, 1866, and was tried on the 19th January, 1867, the Commission having been adjourned from time to time to the latter day.

The indictment contained three counts, each count being supported by twenty overt acts. The first nine of the overt acts charged the prisoner with "conspiracy," with others, to do certain unlawful acts. When called on to plead the prisoner demurred to the indictment, on the ground, amongst others, that an allegation of a bare conspiracy without an allegation of acts done in pursuance of it, was not sufficient to support an indictment for treason or treason-felony. Upon this demurrer judgment of respondeat ouster was given against the prisoner, who then pleaded not guilty. Upon the Court directing a jury to come the prisoner challenged the array, upon the ground that the panel was made out from the jurors' book of 1866, there being a jurors' book of 1867 in existence. To this challenge the Crown counterpleaded that the panel was made out in pursuance of a precept of the justices of Oyer and Terminer issued at the commencement of the Commission, and that the commission had been duly adjourned. To this the prisoner demurred, and judgment was given for the Crown. Upon the jury being called, one juror, Mr. James Booth, was challenged as being above the age of sixty years. To this the Crown demurred, and judgment was given for the Crown. Another juror, Mr. Henry Fry, was challenged upon the ground that his name did not appear upon the jurors' book for 1867, there being a book for 1867 in existence. Counterplea and judgment as in the case of the challenge to the array. The prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced upon each count of the indictment, and error was now brought upon the record.

The Attorney-General and Lawson, Q.C., argued the case on behalf of the Crown.

O'Loghlen and Butt, Q.C., (with them Molloy) for the prisoner.

The Court gave judgment for the Crown, holding unanimously that the overt acts objected to were sufficient, and that the challenges on the points as to the jurors' book were bad, and (O'BRIEN, J., dissenting) that over-age in a juror was not a ground of challenge.

O'BRIEN, J., while concurring on the other points, held that the challenge to Mr. James Booth was good.

THOMSON v. MILLER.

Jan. 18, 19, 25.—Award — Communication — New Trial—Terms.

This was a new trial motion. The case had been tried before O'HAGAN, J., at the Monaghan Summer Assizes. At the trial it appeared that disputes having arisen between the plaintiff and defendant, all matters in dispute between them were referred to the arbitration of Thomas Harrison; the submission did not require that the award should be in writing or should be published. The summons and plaint stated an award for £222 16s. 10d. The parol award relied on comprised two sums, one of £122 16s. 10d., for the value of certain stock, the other of £100, compensation for the giving up of a shop in Castleblaney, by the plaintiff to the defendant. Harrison, the arbitrator, swore that on Saturday, October 18, after the submission had been made and the arbitration gone into, he communicated to the defendant the substance of his award. The defendant said that what occurred on the occasion referred to was this—that Harrison came to his shop in the evening, half drunk, and told him he intended to make him pay £100 in addition to the £122 16s. 10d. which had been arrived at as value of stock. On Monday, October 20, plaintiff revoked arbitrator's authority.

At the close of the case it was submitted on behalf of defendant that there was no evidence of an award to go to the jury. His Lordship refused to hold that there was no such evidence, and in charging the jury, told them that no publication of the award to anybody was necessary, and that if the arbitrator had made up his mind conclusively and finally before his authority was revoked it was sufficient to make the award good. There was no objection taken to the charge.

The Court held that the mere mental act of a single arbitrator not communicated to any one would not be a good award, but that he should evidence his having made up his mind by some external act, and as the jury might possibly have been misled by a portion of the charge, that, to prevent the possibility of injustice being done, there should be a new trial, but inasmuch as the objection had not been specifically taken at the trial, on the terms of the defendant paying all the costs of the former trial.

Infant Defendant—Security for Costs.

This was an action on a bill of exchange. The plaintiff resided in London. The motion before the court was to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs. It appeared from the affidavit of the defendant, who had not appointed any next friend, that he was still a minor.

being heard, as an infant could not appear by attorney, and no next friend had been appointed.

The Court, in the absence of any authority that an infant could not appear on interlocutory motion, and referring to the words of Sec. 51, C. L. P. Act, 1853, requiring proceedings to be taken to appoint a guardian for a minor "before filing any defence," were of opinion that an infant could appear without a next friend, on a motion of this nature, which should be prior to filing any defence.

LANDED ESTATES COURT.

Reported by J. Field Johnston, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Judge Lynch.

In the matter of the Estate of C. M. Dillon, Owner; D. M. Davis, Petitioner.

Feb. 8.—Ability of Receiver to become the Purchaser of Incumbrances upon the Property over which he is Receiver—Application for Inquiry as to Sums Paid for such Incumbrances by such Receiver—Want of Notice to Parties affected.

This was a motion on behalf of the petitioner that the Examiner, in proceeding under an order which had been made by the Court, do inquire and report what sums had been paid by Theobald Dillon as and for the consideration for the incumbrances numbered respectively 7, 8, 9, and 10 in the schedule, and when the said Theobold Dillon became the purchaser of said incumbrances respectively, and what were the sums now due on said respective incumbrances, having regard to the said inquiry, and that it might be declared that the said Theobald Dillon was only entitled, on foot of said incumbrances respectively, to such sums as should be found to have been paid by him on foot of said respective incumbrances, with interest, from the time of such payment.

Theobald Dillon was the brother of the owner of the lands sold in this matter, and under the will of a former owner had a reversionary interest in them. He had also been appointed receiver over these lands by the Court of Chancery in the matter of Ennis v. Dillon, and when they were sold in the Landed Estates Court he became the purchaser. The motion, however, was not made in reference to the purchase of the lands, but only in reference to the purchase of the incumbrances. The purchase money for the lands had not been paid, nor had any assignment of the incumbrances been executed. The affidavit of Theobald Dillon stated that the owners of these incumbrances had consented to afford him such accommodation in respect of their said incumbrances as would facilitate him in effecting the purchase of the owner's life estate in said lands in the event of his being enabled to obtain a loan sufficient for the completion of the purchase upon the security of the said life estate and of his own reversionary interest, with such other security as might be necessary and available; and with such object he made such arrangements with them as he was advised and believed would entitle him to absolute credit for the amount due on foot of said incumbrances, or so much thereof as would be requisite to enable him to make up the surplus of said purchase money over the amount which he should otherwise procure; and in reliance on such arrangements he entered into an agreement with other parties to obtain a loan of the sum requisite to make up such amount of purchase money as he should bid for said estate; and upon the faith of the said several arrangements he bid for the said estate the sum of £6,020.

Sherlock, Q.C., for the motion, contended that a receiver who purchased judgments in this way must be looked on in a fiduciary capacity, and could be a creditor only for the sums he had paid; that a receiver could not purchase, and that that could be taken advantage of not only by the person from whom the property was bought, but by a creditor also. He cited Fox v. Mackreth (White and Tudor's Leading Cases), Eyre v. Macdonnell (15 Ir. Chanc. Rep. 534), Rowan's Estate, before Hargreave, J. (13 I. Chanc. R., 434).

G. Fitzgibbon, for the trustees of the Patriotic Insurance Company, who had had carriage of the proceedings, and who were the principal incumbrancers, contended that the Court ought not to decide the question till the purchase money was brought into Court, or enough to pay the claim of the Patriotic Insurance Company.

Flanagan, Q.C., and Palles, Q.C., opposed the motion. 1. There is no pretence of fraud. 2. The general doctrine as to a receiver in the Court of Chancery does not apply to the case of a purchase in the Landed Estates Court. 3. Sec. 47 of the Act expressly disqualifies certain persons from purchasing, and therefore all others may purchase. 4. Both the transactions are in fieri, and if one be impeached the other must be set aside. 5. The motion is irregular in point of form, because it is without notice to parties who have a better equity.

Sherlock, Q.C., replied.

Lynch, J., said that he ruled the schedule in this case on the 17th Jan., and found he declared as to these particulars charges, "allow, compute, and vouch," and then this motion was instituted, not by way of objection to the schedule as it was settled, but as between the petitioner and the purchaser, asking him, in the absence of these parties, to direct an inquiry which could be advantageous to the petitioner only if it resulted in ignoring the rights of these parties already declared on the face of the schedule; that the motion had been brought forward on a general equity that no receiver who had been a receiver in another case could ever be a purchaser in that court; that it seemed a strong proposition to hold the reasons which applied to a receiver in the Court of Chancery applicable to the Landed Estates' Courts; but it was unnecessary to decide that; that it would be unjust to the purchaser to say, "I will hold you to one part of the bargain; you made a bargain with other persons to procure the money to purchase, and I ask to have that money appropriated to a different purpose;" but it was unnecessary to decide even that; that the petitioner's case was, that by virtue of an equity he was entitled to oust the right of parties as settled upon the schedule in their absence, and without giving them notice; and that the motion should be refused, with costs.

This was a motion that the petitioner be declared entitled to credit upon the schedule for a further sum of £42 18s 7d. The petitioner had filed his petition on foot of an equitable mortgage to sell the owner's estate on the 10th March, 1865. A conditional order was made on the 29th April. On the 7th June the owner filed an affidavit as cause against making the order absolute, which alleged that the petitioner owed him a large sum for untaxed costs, and that he believed upon their being taxed no sum would be found due by the owner to the petitioner. On the 19th June the order for sale was made absolute, with a stay of proceedings till Jan. 11th, 1866. The costs were not certified within the appointed time, and the stay was taken off. The costs were subsequently certified. Of £369 costs in equity £219 was taken off, and of £52 law costs £44 was deducted on taxation. About one-third of the sum claimed as costs was allowed upon taxation. The petitioner made an affidavit stating that of the amount certified £42 18s. 7d. was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before BERWICK, J.

In re SAMUEL BRADLEY.

February, 1867. — Certificate — Reckless Trading— Marriage Settlement—Priority of certain Creditors— Claims by Accountants appointed by English Creditors.

This was a meeting for final examination, and to consider the granting of the bankrupt's certificate. The case had been frequently before the Court, and all the facts fully investigated.

His Lordship said he had fully considered the facts of the case, and his conclusion was that he ought, besides passing the final examination, to grant a certificate to the bankrupt. No doubt his conduct had been characterized by a great deal of carelessness and ignorance; and, in particular, there was the fact of his executing a settlement for £3,000 on the occasion of his marriage—an act which, were it not for other instances in the case, he would have marked his condemnation of by postponing the certificate for a lengthened period. However, no charge had been made by any creditor that the bankrupt had made away with any property, and he had given every assistance to the official assignee in the bankruptcy proceedings, which were circumstances in his favour. In 1865 he had, no doubt, laid before his creditors what turned out to be a very delusive statement of his affairs, but he (his Lordship) believed the bankrupt had done it honestly and in ignorance; and the reason he so concluded was this, that the accountants who were employed by the creditors to examine the bankrupt's affairs, after a very lengthened investigation, came to the conclusion that the statement made by the bankrupt was substantially correct; and therefore, though no doubt the estimate of the value of the property made by the bankrupt was delusive and incorrect, there was fair ground to believe that the bankrupt made the statement honestly and in good faith. His conduct in executing a marriage settlement, settling £3,000 for the use of his wife, was a very improper act. He had got no fortune with her, though her family was in a position to give her one had they pleased, and the result of the bankrupt executing the settlement was to take out of the pockets of the creditors a great deal of their honest property. The reason the Court did not punish the bankrupt for it was this, that in 1865 he brought the fact fully before the creditors, yet they did not then make it a ground of opposition; on the contrary, they adopted his statement, and allowed him to go on in trade under an arrangement with themselves. No doubt that arrangement was one under which the creditors would get 20s. in the pound, and consequently they might have supposed that the marriage settlement would not affect their interests; and he (Judge Berwick) saw circumstances in the case leading him to believe that the trader was himself under the same impression, and that when he executed the marriage settlement he did so under the belief that he could afford it. In 1866 the bankrupt's affairs were again before his creditors, but even then they did not make the marriage settlement a ground of opposition, and in fact the only reason why the case was turned into bankruptcy instead of (as the trader proposed) settling it under the arrangement clauses, was for the purpose of, in concert with the bankrupt, putting an end to the priority which the banks sought to obtain. He was of opinion, therefore, that the affair of the marriage settlement had been condoned by the creditors, and that the Court need not, so far as that was concerned, withhold the certificate. The bankrupt had acted carelessly and improperly, but his conduct arose from the erroneous estimate he formed of the extent of his property; and bearing in mind the good character he had hitherto borne, and the fact that he had honestly given up every shilling of his property to his creditors, he did not think it was a case in which he was called on to withhold the certificate. His Lordship then alluded to the fact of a letter having been written to Messrs. M'Laren and Co., creditors of the bankrupt, containing statements calculated to mislead them, and said if it had appeared that the letter had been written with the bankrupt's knowledge or consent he would certainly have severely punished him; but on an investigation of the matter it turned out that the letter was written without the bankrupt's knowledge by an over officious clerk, and that the bankrupt was not responsible for it. He would, therefore, pass the final examination and grant a certificate. His Lordship also directed the assignee to take immediate steps to try the question as to the priority claimed by the bank. He also referred it to the assignee to investigate the claim of Messrs. Harvey and Humphries, the accountants who had investigated the bankrupt's affairs by direction of the English creditors, and that their reasonable expenses should be paid them.

PROVINCIAL COURT OF ARMAGH.

Before JOHN THOMAS BALL, V.G., LL.D., and Q.C.

Reported by W.R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law.

PULLMAN, Appellant; RAWLINS, Respondent.

Pews in Parish Churches—Allocation of by Churchwardens—Evidence of Appointment of Churchwardens, and their Rights—Vestry Act—Declaration.

This was an appeal by the appellant, who had been the respondent below, from a sentence pronounced on the 1st day of August, 1866, by the Rev. Dr. Carson, V.G. of the United Dioceses of Kilmore, Elphin, and Ardagh.

The suit was instituted on the 31st May, 1866, by Rawlins, by way of petition against Pullman, in respect of an alleged perturbation of a right to a pew, No. 7, in the Parish Church of Templemichael, in Longford.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Miller, for the appellant, contended—1st. That the respondent had not any beneficial interest in the parish, and was not in law an inhabitant of it, and therefore not eligible to the office of churchwarden; and that his acts were void (Prid. Churchw. 5). 2nd. That no declaration under the 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 62 had ever been made by any of the churchwardens (Somer v. Bray, 2 Best. and Sm. 374). In that case it was held in England that until the new churchwardens made that declaration, the old churchwardens continued, in law, in office even after the expiration of their year of office. And the canon 118 in England is the same as the 89 in Ireland. So also Dr. Stephens lays down the law that until that declaration is taken every act of the churchwardens is illegal and void (1 Steph. Ch., 341). 3rd. That the petitioner had served the office of churchwarden the year before, and it was proved that the rector, and curate, and churchwardens knew that many other persons were at the vestry competent and willing to act, and in fact the rector had canvassed for votes to oppose some of them (7 Geo. IV., c. 72, s. 49). 4th. There never was any instance in which the pew in question was filled by the petitioner's family. In the case of The Cathedral of St. Columb, Derry (8 Ir. Jur., N.S. 115) it was held the churchwardens could only allot sittings, and not pews, unless the parties could fill them; and in that case all the English cases on the subject are cited.

Browne, for the petitioner, argued that the sentence below was correct. The Ecclesiastical Court could not inquire into the validity of the appointment of the churchwardens. The Vestry Act (7 Geo. IV., c. 72, s. 44) makes the entry in the vestry book complete evidence of the election, and any objection to it is only ground for applying to the Queen's Bench. The allocation, however, was made on the 7th Dec., 1865, and on the 24th Dec., 1865, the appellant had full notice of it; and the letters of the Bishop amount fully to an adoption and ratification of it.

As to the declaration, in Ireland it is not necessary to be made, since the abolition of parish cess and rates. The oath under the 7 Geo. IV., c. 74, was expressly made applicable to such rates, and the Act of 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 62, should be read in like manner.

The circumstance of having been a churchwarden for the previous year cannot affect the allocation, no proceedings having been taken at law to question the appointment.—Cur. Adv. Vult.

2nd Jan.—Dr. Ball, Q.C., V.G.—The suit is what is technically termed "a suit for perturbation of seat," and the facts, or at least such of them as are relevant to a suit of that character, appear to be very clearly ascertained.

Both Mr. Rawlins and Mr. Pullman reside in the parish of Templemichael, the church of which is in the town of Longford. Mr. Pullman resides in the town, and Mr. Rawlins, who is governor of the county gaol, in a house adjacent to the town. and which is appropriated to his office. Upon the 17th of April, 1865, at a vestry then held, Mr. Rawlins and Mr. Brunskill the local manager of a branch of the Bank of Ireland, were elected churchwardens, and they acted as such, but without ever making the statutable declaration substituted for the oath required by the Vestry Act, 7th Geo. IV., ch. 72. About December of the same year, Mr. Brunskill removed from Longford to Wexford. Until that period Mr. Brunskill and his family sat in pew No. 7; Mr. Rawlins in pew No 27; and Mr. Pullman in pew No. 10, in the parish church. Previous to leaving Longford, Mr. Brunskill, with the assent of Mr. Rawlins (and, as he says in his evidence) also with the concurrence of the Rector of the parish, allotted to Mr. Rawlins the pew No. 7; and soon after the sexton removed into this pew cushions and hassocks belonging to Mr. Rawlins. The pew affords accommodation for six persons, and Mr. Rawlins' family consists of five. For some Sundays (Mr Pullman says three) after the departure of Mr. Brunskill, no person occupied pew No. 7. On Sunday, 24th December, Mr. Pullman, accompanied by two daughters, before the service began, took possession of pew No. 7; and they were in possession when Mr. Rawlins and his wife, at a somewhat later period, arrived at the church. To prevent a repetition of this, Mr. Rawlins caused the sexton to give notice to Mr. Pullman that the pew had been allotted to him; but Mr. Pullman not acquiescing, attempted again, on Sunday the 31st December, to obtain admittance, although Mr. Rawlins and his wife were seated in the pew; and then and subsequently by letter, Mr. Rawlins informed Mr. Pullman that he claimed the pew as assigned to him, and that if Mr. Pullman required sittings he should apply to the churchwardens. On Sunday, the 7th January, the pew was locked, in order to prevent Mr. Pullman seating himself before service commenced; but Mr. Pullman obtained access by climbing in from the next pew. Again, on the 14th, he entered in a similar way. On the 19th, the Bishop of Kilmore wrote to the local surrogate a letter, which was shown to Mr. Pullman, and in which he distinctly intimates his opinion that the latter had no right, as the two churchwardens had agreed otherwise to dispose of the pew. For some time afterwards Mr. Pullman seems to have desisted from his claim; but on the 11th March he again took his seat in the pew, notwithstanding the opposition of Mr. Rawlins. On the 2nd April (Easter Monday) Mr. Rawlins and Mr. Addey were elected churchwardens at a Vestry then held, and an entry was made in the vestry book recording, among other matters, that during the last year pew No. 7 had been allotted to Arthur Rawlins and family. The two churchwardens then elected, appear, like their predecessors, to have acted without making the statutable declaration. On the 7th April, the new churchwardens allotted to Mr. Pullman sittings in pew No. 10; but he notwithstanding, upon the 22nd April, and thence to the institution of this suit, persisted in sitting in pew No. 7. Mr. Rawlins in his evidence states that his children have not sat in the pew since the dispute arose; but that this was lest anything unpleasant should occur.

The general principles applicable to the case have not been disputed. Pews in a parish church belong to, and are for the use and accommodation of the parishioners; and as far as there is room, every parishioner has a right to be seated. But how he is to be seated, and the order and distribution of sittings among those who attend divine worship, are to be determined by the ordinary, and unless and until he interferes, by the churchwardens, who for this purpose are viewed as his officers. It is usual to consult the incumbent; it is also not unusual to pay attention to the wishes of the parishioners in vestry; but neither the incumbent nor the vestry can control the discretion of the churchwardens. Should the exercise of that discretion be such as to create dissatisfaction, the parishioner who feels himself aggrieved, can by a proper proceeding bring his claims before the diocesan court, and obtain its decision upon them. But he cannot be allowed to take the law into his own hands, and intrude himself into a seat, which by a competent authority has been conferred upon another.

Mr. Rawlins founds his title upon the allocation of pew No. 7 to himself and his family, originally made by the churchwardens for 1865; subsequently affirmed by the churchwardens for 1866; and recorded by the Act of Vestry at the time of their election. Mr. Pullman does not allege any title. What he relies upon is not his own right, but a supposed infirmity in the title of the party complaining.

Digitized by Google

The principal ground of objection put forward to Mr. Rawlins' title is, the omission (which I have already mentioned) by both sets of churchwardens, those elected in 1865 and those elected in 1866, to make the declaration which, by the Act for the abolition of unnecessary oaths (5 & 6 Wm. IV., c. 62), has been substituted for the oath formerly required from churchwardens. The canon, 118 English and 87 Irish, declares "that the office of churchwardens and sidesmen shall be reputed to continue, until the new churchwardens, that shall succeed them, be sworn." In consequence of this canon, in England where its operation has not been affected by legislation, the authorities hold that a person elected to the office, is not de jure churchwarden, until he has made the proper declaration; and one decision has gone the length of affirming a fine imposed by magistrates upon a churchwarden of a previous year, as being responsible until a successor shall make the proper declaration. I refer to Rex v. Inhabitants of Whitchurch, 7 B. and C. 584; Bray, appellant, Somers, respondent, 8 Jur. N.S. 718; Bremner v. Hull, in the current number of the Common Pleas Reports, 749.

It is, however, by no means clear, even upon these authorities, that the acts of persons who being duly elected take upon themselves to discharge the duties of churchwardens without making the requisite declaration (especially when, as here, they relate to and are in aid of order in the church, and have the approval of the Bishop) are absolutely invalid. There are instances of the acts of officers de facto although not de jure being supported. But these considerations in my opinion need not be further pursued, because in Ireland it is in the provisions of the Vestry Act (7 Geo. IV., c. 72), and not in the canon, that the law applicable to the office of churchwardens is to be found.

The 44th section of this statute enacts that a vestry shall be called on the Monday or Tuesday in Easter week, for the election or nomination or appointment of churchwardens, and that such election or nomination or appointment shall be duly entered in the vestry book; and, that every person who shall be so elected, nominated, or appointed (and not being exempted or disqualified under the Act), shall be deemed, and taken to be, and is thereby declared to be a legal churchwarden of such parish, to all intents and purposes, and shall be compelled and compellable (unless in cases exempted by the Act) to take upon him such office, and to perform its duties. These latter words appear to me to have been introduced in order to remove the doubts, and obviate the inconveniencies arising from the canon, and to have had in view to protect the public from the necessity of inquiring into anything except the fact of election or appointment in order to ascertain with whom to deal as the proper officers. And, taking this view, I cannot regard the force of these words as at all abridged by the language of the 46th section, which requires every churchwarden to take and subscribe an oath of office, in the form there prescribed; for this, it appears to me, is to be considered as a mandatory direction, but not as constituting a condition precedent.

Other objections of less importance, and affecting the title of one only of each set of churchwardens, namely of Mr. Rawlins, have also been made. That he was not duly qualified for the office; and that he was illegally elected a second time in 1866. In the first I cannot at all concur. His being employed in the public service, and having a residence provided by the public, may form a ground on which he himself might claim exemption; but neither in the statute nor the general law do I find anything making these disqualifications. As to the second—the title to the pew was conferred before the election of the second set of churchwardens, and for the decision of the case, its consideration becomes unnecessary. But, as the point has been argued, I take the opportunity to express my opinion, that the section of the Vestry Act (49) which prohibits the same person being elected a second time in succession, was intended to give an exemption, and not to create an incapacity; and that if, as here, no other candidate being proposed, he chooses to assume the office, there is nothing to render his acts invalid. Besides, the section enjoins as a condition to its application, that "it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the vestry, that there is any other person liable to serve and duly qualified to exercise such office in the parish;" and the evidence in the present case, does not, in my judgment, establish as a fact that this was done at the vestry.

It only remains to notice one other suggestion, which was made in the course of the argument for the appellant—that, as pew No. 7 holds six persons, and Mr. Rawlins' family consists of but five, the vacant place cannot be claimed by Mr. Rawlins. But a matter of this kind is a matter of discretion for the distributors of seats, with which, in a proceeding like the present, I have not jurisdiction, and if I had, I should decline to interfere. Were I to express any opinion upon the subject, it would be that it was by no means an unwise exercise of discretion to place Mr. Rawlins and Mr. Pullman in different pews.

For these reasons I am of opinion that either set of churchwardens had authority to allocate pew No. 7 to Mr. Rawlins and his family, so as to confer title on him and them good against a mere disturber; and that as they have done so, and as no right has been shown, or indeed even alleged, in Mr. Pullman, he was properly monished and ordered to pay the costs by the Court below. I therefore affirm the decision of the diocesan court of Kilmore, and order the costs of the appeal to be paid by the appellant.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

To The Editor of "The Solicitors' Journal."

12th February, 1867.

Sir—Observing in the Solicitor's Journal of 9th instant an appeal for that support hitherto denied to "the Record of Title" by the Irish solicitors, it appears but proper that a profession which rarely takes, or omits to take, action, on legal changes without good reason, should have a few words to say in explanation of that neglect under which this Registration Office pines, as does its English sister, Lord Westbury's pet, of 1862.

Those who considered the observations of the Law Society by its Council, dated 16th May, 1865, could have little doubt that the prediction of failure would be fulfilled, and those who did not see that print need only to read the elaborate anatomy therein, to learn how disregard of professional suggestions produced its usual result—when on the Shipping Acts and Mr. Torrens' Australian experience was founded an Irish Land Act.

Ask any eminent solicitor in the hall whether he "records" his client's conveyances, and the answer will be almost invariably that he has never done so; and, although each may give a different reason, the result is the same.

It may be asked, whence comes it that any titles have been recorded, and the answer is supplied by the 7th Section of the Act, taken with the General Order, that unless within a very short time registration of a conveyance is stopped, it must be impounded to be recorded, and every mistake thereafter becomes indefeasible, which being unknown to many of us, and especially of our country brethren, several deeds were caught in the meshes of the Act before the practice was adopted of lodging the prohibitory notice at once on execution by the Court; but so careful have been some of our ablest members in this matter that the execution of a conveyance has been known to be delayed for six months, while the purchaser from absence or ill-health was unable to sign this "stop" notice.

I need not dwell on "the meddling and muddling" of inexperience which produced a statute uncalled for while we possess a system of registry in Henrietta-street so perfect now as to leave little to desire, nor the additional expense occasioned by having to register there an entire conveyance with its schedule of tenants, running to the same or even a greater length than the deed itself, besides the trouble entailed by that strange direction for compulsory record unless stayed by the party, but leaving those who wish to learn wherefore the twin offices have failed in London and here to the solicitor's reasons of May, 1865.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
A SOLICITOR.

FINAL EXAMINATION OF APPRENTICES.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL."

SIR—I was very glad to see, in the first number of your new journal, with which I hope you may have every success, that the Incorporated Law Society had determined to award certain prizes to distinguished answerers at the examinations of attorney's apprentices, by whom I am sure they will be highly valued and eagerly contended for. But I would like to call attention to one circumstance, which I fear will prove a serious obstacle to the very laudable objects of the Law Society in this matter, if it do not entirely defeat them; but which I think they may be able to overcome if they think proper to do so. At present an attorney's apprentice is kept employed during almost the whole day in his master's office; so that, no matter how willing or desirous he may be of studying his profession more deeply and acquiring an amount of sound legal knowledge, he has really no time to do so except during an hour or two, snatched after he leaves his office, when he is fatigued with his day's work, and perhaps scarcely able to work his mind as hard as is necessary; and which, sir, takes, as you doubtless well know, a greater amount of resolution than some men possess. Now this does not arise merely from his master insisting on his time being so spent, for I am sure there are very few gentlemen in the profession who, from a mere greedy desire of gain by their labour, would object to their apprentices occupying a reasonable portion of their time in so proper a manner; but the affidavit required to be taken by both the master and his apprentice, before the admission of the latter, is so strict that it seems to me that no conscientious man would like to take it, if the apprentice had spent much of his time out of the office. Although this affidavit is enjoined by the late Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, still both by it and some of the other Acts passed from time to time for the regulation of the profession, some, at least, of the powers formerly possessed by the judges are reserved to them. I do not know whether these powers as affected by the Act are such as to enable them to alter the rule as to this affidavit, though if unrestrained by it I have no doubt they are; however, there can be no doubt that an additional Act of Parliament can do so. Now it ought not surely to be a difficult thing to frame an affidavit, such that it would allow of an apprentice spending a reasonable portion of his time in the study of those parts of his profession which it is quite beyond the province of his office to impart, and which indeed never can be acquired in an office, or in any way but by hard labour and hard reading, but which at the same time would secure evidence that his time had been really spent in acquiring a knowledge of his profession, and not in following other pursuits, which can be the only object of any affidavit, and as has indeed been said to be the object of the Legislature by a learned judge in a certain case.

It seems to me that if the Incorporated Law Society are really desirous, as I believe they are, that the apprentices, and therefore the profession itself, which is recruited from them, should possess a high standard of legal knowledge, they will find their power and influence such as will enable them to effect so desirable a reform; and even if the judges should not possess the power, or not deem it advisable if they do, to make such an alteration as I have proposed, I think it would be found not impossible to obtain a supplementary Act of Parliament amending the Attorneys' Act in this important particular. Doubtless, there are many young men apprenticed to the profession not devoid of ambition, who, if they were given moderate encouragement, would show themselves possessed of both energy and resolution to master the difficulties of the law, and who would prove an honour not only to themselves but to those who had afforded them an opportunity of doing so; but it is impossible for any man to work unless he has time to do so.

I merely venture to offer these suggestions, and to draw the attention of the proper persons to the matter, leaving it to them to consider the question more thoroughly; but as I stated in the beginning of this letter, I fear the efforts of the Law Society will hardly have as much success as they would deserve until some amendment is made in this respect. It should be remembered that I do not propose any radical change of the system of education as it at present exists, though that may possibly be found necessary in the course of time, but merely that the apprentice should be allowed a moderate and reasonable time for the study of the law, as, for instance, a few months in the middle of the long vacation, when in most offices business is generally somewhat slack. If the Law Society should deem this question worthy of their consideration, I would earnestly hope that they would proceed to do so at once, as there are many men to whom it would otherwise be useless. I have not time now, as I fear I have already trespassed too much upon your space, to attempt to excuse my apparent boldness in proposing to change a rule, which has sufficed for the profession, I suppose ever since it was a profession, but if I had, I feel sure that I could satisfactorily show, not only the propriety, but the absolute necessity, of some such change as is here proposed, if the profession is to fill that rank and perform those duties to society which it should.

Hoping that the importance of the subject will prove my excuse for trespassing on you with so long a letter, I beg to subscribe myself,

Your obliged and obedient Servant,
AN ATTORNEY'S APPRENTICE,
Who would like to raise both his own position and that of the profession.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

Feb. 11th.

A paper was read by SAMUEL FERGUSON, Esq., LL.D., on "The Rudiments of the Common Law discoverable in the published part of the Senchus Mor." The following is an abstract:—

After remarking on the indisposition of English jurists to accept any element of the social constitution of Britain from the Britons themselves, and the grounds on which the traces of manorial jurisdictions, and of an incipient feudal polity in the early Welsh laws have been supposed to have been borrowed from the Anglo-Saxons, the lecturer cited as the latest and most matured judgment of English cultivated opinion the conclusion of Mr. Hallam—that any resemblances between the Irish Brehon law and the law of England arose from the degenerate Anglo-Norman families of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries having imported the traditions of a superior civilisation into the native customs to which they conformed. The material for forming an estimate of the real value of the Brehon code was fragmentary and imperfect before the recent publication by the Brehon Law Commission, and several volumes still remain to be published. The commissioners' present volume comprises part of the Senchus Mor, treating of the law of distress. This work claims to be of the fifth century, and is frequently cited in "Cormac's Glossary," a compilation not later than the twelfth. The internal evidences of its antiquity arise from the absence of any reference to writing, or to any person or event later than the ninth century. The legal system contained in it, while corresponding in a remarkable manner with the common law processes of distress and replevin, has no resemblance in its technical terms to any other European code. Hence it was concluded that it presents us with the fragments of laws unmodified by Anglo-Saxon or Norman influence, and that such rudiments of the common law as it contains, if not referable to Roman origin, are at least the common property of the insular Celts and their conquerors. A singular tale of the stratagem by which the first lapdog was brought into Ireland was cited from "Cormac's Glossary," to show that one of the laws of the twelve tables, as known in Britain, was regarded as something extraneous by the early Irish, who possessed a law of their own on the same subject; and other examples of such differences between analogous Roman and Irish laws as displace the theory of a Roman origin were adduced. The course of distress described in the Senchus Mor was for the claimant, whatever was his demand, after notice, and in some cases fasting against his debtor (as is the practice to the present day in India), to lay on a lien or attachment on the debtor's cattle; and, after a given time, to drive them to pound, where, if the debt and costs of keeping were not paid, the cattle, after another space of time, became forfeited according to a certain scale of value. The party distrained on might, at any time before forfeiture, regain the possession of his goods by giving security to try the validity of the distress at law. It was pointed out that traces remain from which it may be inferred that the sale or forfeiture of the distress was originally a part of the common law, and that the Irish Parliament, as late as the 18th Edward IV., in effect re-enacted the Irish custom by permitting the landlord to take the distress at an appraisement; that the owner was first excused from the costs of keeping by statute 51st Henry III.; that various species of actions were commenced by distress at common law in England and Scotland down to the 13th and 14th centuries; that it was not until after the 11th century in England that the right of the plaintiff to take the law to this extent into his own hands was confined to distress for rent, and the execution of process committed to the hands of ministerial officers; that the Irish course corresponded with the summons, attachment, and distress, which were the regular process of the common law; and that by inattention to the distinction between districtio, an attachment, and distractio, a sale, Lord Bacon and succeeding law writers had been led to suppose the law of distress and replevin to have been borrowed from the civil law, and to be of post-feudal origin; that the action of replevin, constituting part of the old Irish code, has been supposed to be the invention of Glanvil, Chief Justice of Henry II.; that though Spelman supposes the native British to have derived their knowledge of the use of a pound from the Ripuarian Franks through the Saxons, the older Irish system required seven open pounds in each district; and that the provisions of the statute of Marlbridge, prohibiting the driving of distresses out of the county, and of the Scottish statutes of Robert I., by which a distrainer not exhibiting the cattle to witnesses at the border of the lordship might be treated as a thief, are in effect anticipated by the rules of the Brehon code. "How shall we account," said the lecturer, "for the Irish of the eighth or ninth century having had a law against removing distresses from the districts in which they were taken, and for the English and Scotch having remained without regulations of such obvious convenience until the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries? The explanation of so strange an appearance of superior social arrangements in this country is doubtless to be found in the declaratory nature of these English and Scottish statutes; and we must suppose the historians to be mistaken who from the introductive appearance of such enactments have concluded that, before their passing, no law existed against the mischief which they profess to remedy." The lecturer then proceeded to examine in detail the story of the case of the lands of Inbher Ailbhine, as stated in the original text of the Senchus Mor. The legal processes and principles indicated by the text, as explained by the gloss, were—Entry, ouster, prescription, time of memory, acknowledgement of title, distress, constructive rescue, fresh pursuit, taking in withernam, replevin, sureties in replevin, account, set off, Welsh mortgage, and ultimate recovery of possession by the real claimants. On this singular case the lecturer observed—"The received idea of the origin of actions of trespass and ejectment is that they were invented by the judges in the reigns of the Edwards, and it is said that it was some time in the reign of Edward IV. that possession of the land was first recovered in a proceeding of this kind. When we consider that one of the manuscripts of the Senchus Mor, still in existence, was transcribed from older documents more than a century before the accession of Edward IV., and when we find there the story of a case having all the substantial elements of an action of trespass and ejectment alleged to have been adjudicated on more than sixteen hundred years ago, and find the text of that story regarded as a record of authentic antiquity prior to the twelfth century, the mind is filled with amazement at the vast obscurity which still overshadows the origin of the English common law, and the hopelessness of penetrating which has caused men of the utmost learning and candour to ascribe to the invention of judges of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries modes of proceeding and methods of attaining justice which, if they existed in Ireland, must have been equally in existence in Britain more than a thousand years before." The third part of the paper was directed to show the analogies between the early English manorial system and the Irish lordship or chiefery. The resolutions of the Irish judges in the reign of James I., from which it has been inferred that by the native system of gavelkind the whole country was subjected to an annual hotch-potch which prevented any permanent habitations or enclosures, should be understood as applying only to the commons or Folkland, there being numerous traces in the published volumes of the commissioners of settled and inheritable possessions in the other parts of each territory corresponding to the Boc land of the Anglo-Saxon manor. Possessions of this kind were necessary to give the right to take distress, and those so qualified were also the judges of the court, to which they were compellable to give suit. Numerous other instances were cited of social arrangements, in all respects similar to what we may conceive to have existed in the early manor, while the Folkland continued still so far unappropriated to exclusive ownership as to afford room for common tillage as well as for common pasture. The paper concluded thus:—"If these observations shall have disclosed a substantial resemblance between the ancient Celtic law of Ireland and some considerable portion of the common law as it existed before the doctrine of continental feuds had altered its simplicity, candid legal minds will not rest satisfied with the traditions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, but will examine for themselves these fresh fountains of legal and historic knowledge, now in part laid open, and which we may hope will soon be wholly unsealed by this commission; and if the result of a careful consideration of these be to confirm the views which I have ventured to put forward, it will become the duty of those who can speak with authority to teach our countrymen the wholesome social and political lesson that all our insular populations have a common inheritance in the common law."

On the motion of Mr. Harding, seconded by Chief Baron Pigot, in a complimentary speech, the paper was referred to council for publication.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

KING'S INNS

GENERAL EXAMINATION:

Easter Term, 1867.

The Education Committee of the Benchers of the King's Inns in Ireland have approved of the following Rules for the Public Examination of the Law Students.

The attention of the Students is requested to the following Rules of the Society adopted by the Benchers on the 15th April, 1864:—

"That Students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar, who, without qualifying by attendance at Lectures, as heretofore required, shall have satisfactorily passed a General Examination.

"That as an inducement to Students to propose themselves for such Examinations, Prizes of Ten Guineas, and Five Guineas, shall be awarded to the two best answerers at the General Examination, and a list of the Students who have passed the Examination shall be prepared by the Examiners, placing them in the order of merit according to their answering at such Examination.

"That to the Student whose name shall appear first on the list at such General Examination, there shall be awarded a Prize of Ten Guineas, and he shall also be entitled, if so recommended by the Members of the Education Committee attending at such Examination, to be excused from keeping two of the Terms in Ireland, and which would otherwise be required for his admission to the Bar.

"That to the Student whose name shall appear second on the list, there shall be awarded a Prize of Five Guineas, and he shall also be entitled, if so recommended by the Members of the Education Committee attending at such Examination, to be excused from keeping one of the Terms in Ireland, and which would otherwise be required for his admission to the Bar.

"Provided however, that the Examiners or the Education Committee shall not be obliged to confer any such Prizes or Privileges unless they shall be of opinion that the Examination of the Students has been such as entitles them thereto. And provided also, that the Examiners may give special Certificates of Honor to Students failing to obtain the first or second Prize, where the Examination of any Students may merit such distinction.

"That the list of all the Students passing the General Examination and arranged in the order of merit, and stating the Prizes, Privileges, and Distinctions conferred on them, respectively, shall be placed in the Hall of the Four Courts, in the Law Library, and in the Lecture Room of the King's Inns.

"That at any call to the Bar, those Students who have passed a General Examination, and who have obtained Prizes thereat, shall take rank in seniority over all other Students who shall be called on the same day, and those who have obtained Prizes shall take rank respectively in seniority, according to the rank and date of the Prizes obtained by them.

"That the Students intending to present themselves at the General Examination shall give in their names at the Under Treasurer's Office, seven clear days before the day of holding such examination."

Rules for the Public Examination of Students for Prizes and for Certificates entitling them to be called to the Bar.

An Examination will be held before next Easter Term to which any Student of the King's Inns who is desirous of becoming a Candidate for Prizes, or of obtaining a Certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each Student proposing to submit himself for Examination will be required to enter his name at the Under Treasurer's Office, King's Inns, Henrietta-street, on or before the 1st day of April next, and Students merely seeking to qualify in one subject will be required to state in writing their intention so to offer themselves in one subject for a Certificate of Fitness, specifying same.

The Examination will commence on Monday, the 8th day of April, and will be continued on Tuesday, the 9th day of April.

It will take place in the Hall of the King's Inns, and the doors will be opened half an hour previous to the hour, and closed at the hour appointed for the Examination, and no Student can be admitted after the doors have been so closed.

The Examinations will be conducted by the Members of the Education Committee and the King's Inns Professors, and will be in the following order:—

On Monday the 8th of April, from the hour of 10 o'clock in the morning till 12 o'clock, on the Law of Personal Property and Evidence; and from 2 o'clock, afternoon, to 4 o'clock, on Equity.

On Tuesday, the 9th of April, from the hour of 10 o'clock, a.m., to 12 noon, on Constitutional and Criminal Law; and from 2 o'clock, p.m., to 4 o'clock, on Real Property.

Printed Questions on the respective subjects for Examination will be given to the Students at the commencement of the two hours sittings, to be handed up by them to the respective Examiners before leaving the Hall, at the conclusion of the two hours sittings.

Oral Examinations will be conducted in the same order, at the respective hours, and in the respective subjects appointed for those hours.

The Oral Examination of each Student will be conducted apart from the other Students, and the character of the Examination will be varied so as to test the fitness for merely gaining the Certificate for call to the Bar, or the proficiency in the subject entitling the Candidate to a Prize.

The Oral Examination and Printed Questions will be founded on the books mentioned below; but the Student merely desirous of obtaining a Certificate of Fitness for Call to the Bar, may select any one of the four subjects of Personal Property and Evidence, Equity, Real Property, and Constitutional and Criminal Law, together with the four volumes of STEPHENS' Commentaries.

The Examination for Prizes will be in all the branches; and in order to obtain a Prize, the Candidate must answer so as to qualify in two courses at least out of the four appointed.

A Student may present himself at any number ef Examinations until he shall have obtained a Certificate of Fitness.

Any Student obtaining a Certificate of Fitness for Call to the Bar, may, at the next succeeding General Examination, but not afterwards, present himself for competition for a Prize.

1st.—EXAMINATION IN PERSONAL PROPERTY AND EVIDENCE.

Lot 1 will be sold subject to two annuities of £20 and £30, for a life aged about 64 years, and to an annuity of £17 10s. 0d., for a life of about 56 years, and to a contingent annuity of £40 a year for life of a lady, aged about 47 years, to commence from death of her husband, now aged about 51 years, should she survive him, as particularly mentioned in printed rental.

The Biddings will be taken by the Auctioneer, on the day and at the place above mentioned, commencing exactly at One o'clock in the afternoon, and will be submitted to the Honourable Judge Longfield, at his Chambers, Inn's-quay, Dublin, on Wednesday, the 20th day of February, 1867, at Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, without further notice to any person.

Dated this 24th day of December, 1866.

HENRY ROBERT GREENE, Chief Clerk.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Lot 1, Kirkistown or Brookhall.

Mr. Cooper, the tenant, holds all the farm (with the exception of a small portion); the houses thereon are all in the best order, and the land could not be surpassed for quality and situation. The Railway Train passes Coleraine several times daily, from Belfast to Derry and Portrush. The portion held by owner comprises the dwelling-house, office houses, lawn, plantings, and garden; the houses on which are also in the best order. The dwelling-house is large, fronting towards Coleraine, and commanding a most extensive prospect, two storeys, with cellars, parlour, drawing-room, breakfast parlour, five bed-rooms, servants' apartments, &c., &c., &c.; altogether the situation could not be exceeded, and the plantations add much to the beauty of the place. The lands are situated two miles from Coleraine, on the North East side, and three and a-half miles from Portrush. There is a large supply of the best spring water on the premises.

Lots 2 and 3, Harpur's Hill.

These Lots are quite close to the town of Coleraine and Railway Station; the lands are of the best description, and are all let as town parks; when the tenants' leases expire there will be considerable advance.

Lot 4, Church-street.

The houses comprised in this Lot are in the centre of the town of Coleraine, and in the principal street; from this it will be observed that they are most valuable.

Lot 5, Highland-row.

This Lot comprises a block of buildings between the Railway Station and Coleraine, just facing the station and quite close thereto, and yields a well-secured yearly rent.

Lot 6, Gate End.

The Premises are quite close to the town of Coleraine and Railway Station; the land is of the very best quality, and no doubt will be more valuable after some time, when it is likely it will be used for building purposes, being so near the Railway Station, and the town is extending very much in that direction.

Lot 7, Tullans.

This Lot is situate about one and a-quarter or one and a-half miles from Coleraine, on the road leading to Ballymoney. The tenants' houses are all in good order, and the land of prime quality; the situation could not be better, being quite close to the public road.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, FEBRUARY 23, 1867.

THE County Courts of Ireland, originally founded as Courts for the recovery of small debts in a summary way, have steadily grown in public estimation and importance, and, from various causes, their nature has entirely changed. Small debts have nearly ceased to exist; and where they do, the Acts for abolishing imprisonment for debt, and transferring the levying of decrees to the sheriff have rendered them irrecoverable. The first Act was a wise and humane one; the second was (we think) a mistake, aggravating what it was meant to cure; however, from these causes, coupled with the tide of emigration, the original vocation of the County Courts has gone, and they are now the Record Courts of Ireland, in which the vast majority of the rights of the people are decided, and their civil wrongs redressed; they are courts eminently adapted to the people, and prized by them, and they possess a body of practitioners enjoying, because most justly deserving, the confidence of the public.

There are some measures of reform urgently required for perfecting the operation of these Courts which we would desire to see carried into effect. The first and most important of these is to confer upon the local Courts a moderate equity jurisdiction in partnership cases. The existing state of the law is a disgrace to the legislative powers of this country. At present, if an industrious man, who has saved a couple of hundred pounds, enters into partnership with a clever dealer in any of the staple products of the country—corn, cattle, flax, &c.—he is wholly at the mercy of the active partner; should any difference arise in their accounts, or should the active partner be dishonest, the unfortunate co-partner has no remedy open to him except a suit in Chancery, which would, in most cases, be worse than the loss of his capital.

This is a case of every-day occurrence in every part of Ireland, and trading is greatly hindered by it. At every quarter sessions, in every county, there are cases brought forward where the chairman is obliged to say:—"I am sorry that I have not any jurisdiction, as this case arises from a partnership dealing, and there cannot be any remedy except in Chancery." One would think that so great a general evil as this would have long since been redressed; but, unfortunately, the parties who suffer from this defect in the law are poor and humble, and, although very numerous, have not power to make their voice felt in the Legislature.

The remedy is as simple as the necessity for it is obvious. All that is required is to give the local courts authority (where the capital engaged shall not exceed £200) to decree for the same amount to which their jurisdiction at present extends in other cases.

It may be asked what is the difficulty in getting such an Act passed; the answer is, the difficulty of getting any reform.

Measures upon great and exciting subjects will always command extensive support, but a really simple reform, such, for example, as the penny postage, which comes home to the daily life and business of every man, has to battle its way, year after year, before it can be accomplished; and it is only after it is accomplished that people wonder why it was not done long before. We venture to say that there are few simple measures that would give greater relief to honest creditors, or more encourage general trading in Ireland, than that now suggested. And if the local practitioners bring their united energies to bear upon it, it must be carried.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have had the matter under their consideration, and unanimously concur in the necessity and value of such a measure, but they consider that it is not within their province to originate legislation upon any subject that does not directly affect the profession they represent, and that they could not apply the funds at their disposal for the purpose of carrying such an Act of Parliament They have, however, respectfully called the attention of Her Majesty's Attorney-General to the subject, in the hope that he may find time to render a great service to his country by introducing and carrying this simple measure.

The only parties whom we have heard raising any objection to it are the recorders of boroughs and chairmen of counties. They will all, if you ask them, admit the existence of the evil, and the necessity for a remedy, but many of them honestly say that they do not want to have more work thrown on their hands than they have at present. This objection is really an argument in favour of such a measure, and is only a matter of detail between these gentlemen and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but we are happy to say it is not the universal feeling. On the contrary, a member of the Council of the Law Society—whose signal abilities, a just source of honourable pride to that branch of the profession which they have for many years adorned, are now zealously exerted for its welfare and advancement—has furnished to us the outline of a Bill to carry out the reform required, drawn by the chairman of a county, who fully feels the necessity of the measure, and who is second to none in experience in such matters. The draft Bill (which we will publish in our next number) is short and simple, and would, without any cumbrous machinery, give effectual relief in all such cases.

The next amendment required in the local courts is to give plaintiffs a right of appeal from decrees where they consider the amount decreed inadequate. In this respect there appears to have been an oversight in the last Civil Bill Amendment Act which frequently works great injustice. A single clause in an Act of Parliament will correct it, and remove the excuse which parties now have for not proceeding in the local courts.

The only other amendment urgently required to make the county courts all that we could wish them, is to provide a satisfactory mode of levying decrees instead of the very inconvenient method established by the last Sheriffs' Act; it can be very easily done; and should a Civil Bill Amendment Act be introduced, we are confident a plan will be submitted for levying decrees, which will effectually answer the purpose, and give satisfaction to the creditor without, in any way, oppressing the debtor.

A NOVEL and important point arose in the Court of Probate in this country some days since, a report of which will be found in our legal reports of this number, respecting the effect of a protection order granted by the judge of the Divorce Court in England, by which he, under the Acts of Parliament authorizing him to do so, granted an order to protect the earnings of a wife, deserted in England, from her husband or his creditors.

The difficulty in the case arose from the fact that the wife, having been deserted in England, came to Ireland, and by her separate industry acquired earnings here, which the husband, on her death, intestate, sought to appropriate to himself. There is, no doubt, considerable difficulty in giving the Acts of Parliament referred to in the discussion of the case a suitable construction. But it is plain that if the order for protection made in England does not apply to earnings made in Ireland, when the desertion occurred in England, there is a casus omissus which it behoves the Legislature promptly to remedy; more especially, as the converse case—of a wife deserted in Ireland, and acquiring, after a protection order there, under the 28 & 29 Vic., c. 40, earnings in England would stand on the same grounds. The case is of considerable importance to married women; and we would be glad that the proper authorities would direct their attention to it, and the more especially as the learned Judge of the Court of Probate evidently had great doubts on the point, as he declined to decide the point on motion.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

WE are glad to see that the Waterford Law Society have already taken action in this matter. We publish in another column resolutions passed by them on the subject. We called attention in our last number to the fact, that on the 26th inst. the Hon. George Denman will move for leave to bring in a Bill, sanctioned by the Incorporated Law Societies of this country and of England, for reducing the duty to 5s.; and we cannot too strongly impress upon the profession the necessity of prompt and vigorous action to ensure the success of this measure.

ENGLAND.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

CHANCERY DECREE—BANKRUPTCY—COSTS.—Where a decree made in favour of the plaintiff had been carried into effect, but the plaintiff had become bankrupt before the taxation and payment of costs, the Court granted an order for the revival of the suit. (Farrall v. Davenport, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 559. V. C. S.)

PRACTICE—PARTITION.—Where an estate had been devised to twelve persons (four of whom were infants) as tenants in common, and there was evidence to show that there would be great difficulty in making partition, and that a sale would be greatly for the advantage of all parties, the Court ordered a sale instead of a partition. (Rickards v. Rickards, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 562. V. C. W.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.—Plaintiff had advertised his farming stock and effects for sale; he was arrested at the suit of B. on a judge's order to hold to bail, made upon the affidavit of C. that plaintiff had stated his intention to go to Jersey to avoid his creditors; he was discharged upon paying the amount to the officer. On the day following he was arrested at the suit of the defendants upon a like order made upon the affidavit of their London agent, which was to the effect that he had read and believed C.'s affidavit to be true. It turned out that it was untrue, and plaintiff was discharged. It was held by the court that there was reasonable and proper cause for the arrest, and that there was no duty on the defendants or their agent to make inquiry into the truth of the facts stated in C.'s affidavit before making an application based thereon for an order to hold plaintiff to bail. (Gibson v. Veasey, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 586. Ex.)

FALSE IMPRISONMENT—NOTICE OF ACTION.—Where a statute requires a month's notice to be given to a defendant before commencement of an action, a letter written to defendant six weeks before action threatening proceedings is not such a notice as required. (Winyard and wife v. Marks, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 591. Nisi Prius.)

DIVORCE PRACTICE—COMPROMISE.—If an order be made that the damages be paid to the petitioner in a suit there is nothing to prevent him from coming to terms with the co-respondent, and accepting a less sum than that assessed. (Dale v. Dale, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 595. Div. & Mat.)

ALIMONY—PRACTICE.—A suit was instituted by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights. She also filed a petition for alimony, and then applied on the ground of present distress and destitution that the respondent be ordered to pay her a small sum of money pending its hearing. The Court declined to entertain the application. (Forde v. Forde, 15 Rep. N. S. 595. Div.)

ARBITRATOR—APPOINTMENT OF.—It is not illegal to choose an umpire by lot; and where the appointment of an umpire is signed by two arbitrators at different times and places the appointment is good. (Wrighson v. Hopper, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 566. Q. B.)

COMPULSORY REFERENCE—FRAUD.—Although a question of fraud may incidentally arise in the settlement of an account, the judge yet has discretionary power to order a reference. (Imhof v. Sutton, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 578. C. P.)

AWARD—MATTERS UNNOTICED.—The silence of an arbitrator in his award upon some of the minor matters referred is no evidence that they were disregarded, and such an award was held good. (Jewell v. Christie, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 580, C. P.)

INTERROGATORIES.—The plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment had been tried and acquitted on a charge of stealing books from the defendants. Evidence was given at the trial that certain books, with the defendant's mark upon them, were found in the plaintiff's house. Held, that an interrogatory desiring the plaintiff to state the time when, and the places where, and the persons from whom he obtained these books, was within the rule laid down in Zychlinski v. Maltby, 10 C. B., N. S., 838, and might be served under the 51st section of the C. L. P. A. 1854. (Stewart v. Smith, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 580. C. P.)

(From The Globe.)

NEW LAW LORDS.—Three months ago we intimated that the Government had been urged to strengthen the Judiciary Court of the House of Lords, and that, in the event of her Majesty's Ministers yielding to the demand for an efficient appellate tribunal, there was little doubt that, from their acknowledged ability and profound legal erudition, the honours would fall upon Lord Justice Sir Hugh Cairns, and Lord Chief Baron, Sir Fitzroy Kelly. But the Times then met us with the contradiction that no such promotions were intended. It seems, however, that, after all, our contemporary was less correct than The Globe; for this morning it announces that "it is the intention of her Majesty to confer the dignity of the peerage on two eminent lawyers," one of them being Sir Hugh Cairns, whom we named, and the other the Right Hon. Duncan M'Neill, Lord Justice General of Scotland. The Times has also come to acknowledge the necessity which we formerly pointed out of strengthening the Supreme Court of Appeal. For the present session, when there is a large number of appeals, it appears that, excepting the new legal peers, and with Lord Westbury abroad, and four law lords incapacitated by age and infirmities from taking part in legal business, there is only Lord Cranworth, with the Lord Chancellor, to compose the tribunal; and, with the many appeals of standing waiting to be decided, it is still considered by the legal profession whether, even with the two additional Law Lords, seeing that Mr. M'Neill has nearly attained a patriarchal age, the Government would not also be justified in calling to the supreme judiciary that eminent lawyer the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

MR. SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND.—Bill to amend the constitution, practice, and procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

Bill to amend the pleading, practice, and procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland.

Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to Petit Juries in Ireland.

Bill to amend the law of charitable Donations and Beqests in Ireland.

GENERAL DUNNE.—To call attention of the House to the Act constituting the office for the Registration of Deeds in Ireland, and the application of the surplus fees collected by virtue of that Act.

For Tuesday, 26th Feb.

MR. DENMAN.—Bill to reduce the annual Duty upon the Certificates of Attorneys and Solicitors and others,

For Thursday, 28th Feb.

MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL (for England).—Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to Insolvent Traders, and Non-Traders in England; and for other purposes connected therewith.

Friday, 22nd Feb.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL for IRELAND obtained leave to bring in a bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to petit juries in Ireland; to amend the constitution and practice and procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland; to amend the pleading, practice, and procedure of the Court of Common Law in Ireland; and to amend the law of charitable donations and bequests in Ireland.

THE JAMAICA PROSECUTIONS.

The proceedings in this case were resumed on Tuesday before Sir Thomas Henry, at Bow-street.

Mr. Fitzjames Stephen and Mr. Horne Payne, instructed by Messrs. Shaen and Roscoe, conducted the prosecution; and Mr. Bristowe, solicitor to the Admiralty, defended Mr. Brand as before. On behalf of the War Office, Mr. Poland now attended to defend Colonel Nelson.

Colonel Nelson and Lieutenant Brand, on entering the court, were accommodated with seats on the floor of the court, in front of the prisoner's box.

Mr. Poland observed that he had been instructed to appear with Mr. Hannen, who, however, was not able to attend. He should proceed as far as he could to-day, and he trusted the case might be again adjourned for the attendance of Mr. Hannen. He wished now to put a few questions in cross-examination to Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Fitzjames Stephen said it would be necessary to put some further questions to Mr. Lewis in chief.

Mr. Lewis was then recalled and examined by Mr. Horne Payne. He said that in Jamaica the parishes were, he would not say analagous to the counties in England, but under the control of a custos, who corresponds with the custos rotulorum in England. In his absence the senior magistrate takes his place. Witness was a member of the Legislature for the parish of St. Katherine's. He remembered the issue of the document spoken of in the evidence at the court-martial as the Queen's advice to the people of Jamaica. He saw the placards posted about the town of St. Ann's previously to May.

Cross-examined by Mr. Poland—was present at the counsel of war, which was attended by more than thirty persons. The council was called for the express purpose of proclaiming martial law. Witness was summoned to attend that counsel in his capacity as a member of the Legislature, as a magistrate, and also a colonel of militia. Under the Act 9th Vic., c 35, the proclamation of war was agreed to unanaimously. It was originally proposed to proclaim the whole county of Surrey, but the Governor thought it unnecessary to include Kingston. Went to Morant Bay as a full colonel of militia. Was present at several courts-martial, and was president of several. The court-martial on Gordon consisted of Lieutenant Brand, Lieutenant Errington, and Ensign Kelly. Ensign Kelly, is from thirty-five to forty years of age.

Mr. Stephen cautioned the witness that he was not bound to answer these questions.

Upon the qusetion whether persons were hanged in consequence of the decisions of these courts-martial,

Mr. Lewis said he would answer that question at a proper time, but must now oject.

Sir Thomas Henry said he was at liberty to decline, but to qualify the refusal.

Mr. Lewis—Then I will answer the question. Several persons were hanged—men and women—murderers. The first I attended was at Fort Antonio, on the 14th of October; and I attended another the same day at Morant Bay. The first I presided at was also at Morant Bay. I attended courts-martial up to the 20th. In most cases the other members of the courts-martial were persons connected with the Island. I cannot recollect whether Colonel Nelson said that he appointed to the court-martial on Gordon the members of whom it consisted, because he thought that Gordon ought to be tried by independent officers rather than by persons connected with the island. I cannot say that I did, or that I did not, hear that said. The court was held in a large building on the wharf or landing place. I was presiding over another court in the same building, and during intervals of adjournment I was in and out of the court held on Gordon. I was present at Gordon's defence. I heard a person named Portead examined for him. I had seen him in the town, sick. I did not hear Gordon apply to have the trial postponed. I knew Gordon as a member of the Assemby, but I knew nothing of his affairs. I don't know that he lived at Cherry Garden. I don't recollect tne date of the last court martial. I tried Paul Bogle. I do not remember whether it was before or after the trial of Gordon. I do not know that he was not taken till after the trial of Gordon. I sat at courts-martial after Gordon's trial. Bogle was the leader of the insurrection. He was brought to Morant Bay. It might have been the 23rd or 24th that I tried him, but I will not swear. It may have been after Gordon's execution. I think it was.

The witness was much pressed on the question whether he had any doubt of it, to which he could give no answer but that he thought it was. Bogle was brought to the court-martial in custody of the Provost-Marshal. I don't recollect the date of the execution, but it was the same evening he was tried, or the next morning. I saw both the Bogles hanged. Bogle's brother, William Bogle, was executed after Gordon's trial. They were both tried together, and executed at the same time.

Here he was again pressed as to whether he had any doubt that both were hanged after Gordon's trial, but would not give any more direct answer than that he thought it was. The last court-martial he held was a few days after that. He then obtained leave of absence. Was present in the Legislature, and proposed a vote of thanks to Colonel Nelson for his services in putting down the insurrection, which was carried unanimously. Also proposed that he should have a sword of honour, of the value of 200 guineas, presented to him for his services rendered in the colony. That also was carried unanimously. Witness believed he had the money from the Colonial Fund. The vote was a sword, but it was left to him to say if he preferred plate or anything else.

By Mr. Bristowe—Mr. Brand was not present at the council. I held the courts-martial by order of Colonel Nelson.

Re-examined by Mr. Fitzjames Stephen—The prisoners who were tried before me and executed were convicted of murder, burglary, arson, and been seen at Morant Bay taking part in the murders committed there.

Mr. Stephen—In short, for taking part in the actual insurrection?—Witness—Yes. I satisfied myself of that by examining witnesses, allowing them to put any questions, to make any statements, and to call any witnesses, and offering to adjourn the case to call further witnesses. Paul Bogle was hanged for murder and being present at the riot and burning at Morant Bay, taking part and giving orders, and being concerned in the murder of Baron Kettleholdt and the Rev. Mr. Herschel. William Bogle was also present at the murders at Morant Bay. The council of war was held at the suggestion of Governor Eyre. The secretary to the Executive Committee was present, but I cannot say whether any minutes were taken or not. The proceedings were chiefly verbal, communicated round the table. Gordon, as a member of the Legislature, was entitled by law to be summoned to the council of war. I can't tell whether he was summoned or not. He was not there. I cannot say whether there was an outbreak at Torrington, or whether that place was attacked by Maroons. Cannot say whether I did or did not try persons for any acts of rebellion at Torrington. I tried prisoners brought from all parts of the country.

Mr. Augustus Walter Howitt Lake, reporter, recalled—I remember the placard about the state of the island being put in evidence at the court-martial. It was produced, to the best of my recollection, by the Provost-Marshal. It is my impression that the document contained the date. One was put in, and one was read aloud. I think the one that was read aloud did contain the date—the 29th of July—as the day of the meeting to be held.

Much discussion arose on the admissibility of this evidence, Mr. Poland contending that the document put in was the evidence before the court-martial, and Mr. Stephen maintaining that anything said at the trial was admissible. The copy put in did not contain the date.

Mr. Lake read portions of his notes containing the evidence of James Gordon and others before the court-martial. It was understood that the object of this evidence was to vary on some points of detail the minutes as returned by the court-martial.

The witness was cross examined at considerable length, and afterwards Mr. Lewis was recalled, and Dr. Fiddes.

Other evidence was given, and the proceedings were adjourned till this day (Saturday).

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

MASSY v. HAYES.

Jan. 14.—Will—Construction—"Sole Use"—Separate Estate.

Joseph Evans, by his will, devised all his real and leasehold estates to trustees, upon trust to pay thereout certain annuities to his sister and his son; and the will then proceeded to declare that as to the residue and remainder of the rents and the other lands to which the testator should be entitled, the trustees should stand seized thereof in trust for the sole use of the testator's daughter, Hannah Evans, and her assigns, subject to the annuities charged thereon. This was followed by a trust that his executors should, within twelve months after his death, pay to the trustees £2,000, to be invested by them, and the interest paid to the testator's daughter, Bess Massy, for her life, "and her receipt to be a sufficient discharge for the same."

At the date of this will Bess Massy was married, and Hannah Evans unmarried; and the question for the decision of the Court in the present case was whether the language of the gift to Hannah Evans was sufficient to create separate estate.

Sullivan, Q.C, and Ryan, for the appellant.

Sherlock, Q.C., and R. Ferguson, for the respondent.

The Court,* reversing the decree of the late Lord Chancellor, held that the mere use of the word "sole" did not sufficiently indicate an intention that Hannah Evans should have a separate estate, to the exclusion of the marital right, and that a comparison of the language used in the two bequests to the testator's two daughters showed a difference in the nature of the interests intended to be conferred.

Solicitor for the appellant, Daniel Thorp.

Solicitor for the respondent, William D'Alton.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

BEECHER v. DOWNING.

Feb. 11.—Setting aside Sale—Solicitor—Suppression of Facts.

This was a cause petition to set aside a sale of certain lands, sold to the respondent, M'Carthy Downing, in the Landed Estates' Court, in the year 1854, upon the grounds that the lands had been sold at an under value; that the late Edward B. Beecher, the father of the respondent, who was tenant for life of the land at the time, had received large sums of money from the respondent for consenting to the sale; and that material facts had been suppressed from the Judge of the Landed Estates' Court on the occasion of the sale. The first two of these charges were not substantiated by evidence at the hearing.

Counsel for the petitioner, Lawson, Q.C., Warren, Q.C., and J. S. Townsend.

Counsel for the respondent, the Solicitor-General, Sullivan, Q.C., and Jackson.

The LORD CHANCELLOR set aside the sale, on the grounds that Judge Hargreave, when directing that M'Carthy Downing's offer should be accepted upon the consent of the owner, Edward B. Beecher, had not been made aware of the fact that Downing was then the solicitor of Beecher, and that the latter was a man in needy and embarrassed circumstances.

Solicitor for the petitioner, H. Fitzsimons.

Solicitor for the respondent, the Respondent in person.

* BLACKBURN, C., and CHRISTIAN, J.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law

TOBIN v. REDDIN.

Feb. 19.—Practice—Notices—Liberty to Sue in Forma Pauperis.

Keys, for the petitioner, moved for leave to continue the proceedings in this matter in forma pauperis.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that the 8th General Order of 1843 required such an order to be made on special motion, and that notice of the motion would therefore be served.

Petitioner's solicitor, J. Mathews.

BLAKE v. BLAKE.

Feb. 19.—Practice—Bill to Perpetuate Testimony—Order to Examine a Witness de bene esse.

This was a suit by bill to perpetuate testimony. A conditional order had been obtained for substitution of service of the subpœna. The time for showing cause had not expired.

Oliver Burke (with him P. J. Blake, Q.C.) moved for an order to examine a witness de bene esse, on an affidavit stating that the witness was 85 years old, and was ill; and that her life was very precarious.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS made an order to examine the witness de bene esse. The order to be served on the person on whom the service of the subpœna was directed to be substituted by the conditional order, or on the solicitor entering the appearance if the defendant appeared.

E. Stapleton, solicitor for the petitioner.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WILLIAM WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

PICKERING v. DUNNE.

Jan. 21.—Liberty to Defendant to Proceed—Stet Processus—178th G. O.

Motion to make absolute a conditional order that the defendant should be at liberty to take down a cause for trial, plaintiff not having proceeded. It appeared that the defendant was a retail tobacco dealer, and had been in the habit of buying tobacco from a Mrs. Murray, a wholesale dealer, in Belfast, whose agent Pickering, the plaintiff, was. Plaintiff's attorney, in March, 1865, applied, by letter, for payment of a particular sum then due; and payment of that sum was made on the 5th April, 1865; but defendant did not, with the amount, forward the costs of the letter applying for payment. On the 6th April, plaintiff's attorney again wrote demanding payment of the costs of the previous letter, and also putting in a claim for any amount due by defendant to Mrs. Murray. To that letter no answer was given, and on the 10th April, 1865, a writ was issued in the present action, in the name of Pickering, for the sum of £9 0s. 8d., for goods sold and delivered on the 21st March, 1865. That writ was served on the 12th April. After the service defendant forwarded the £9 0s. 8d. to Mrs. Murray, and on the 25th April put in a defence to Pickering's action, simply traversing the sale and delivery of the goods. On the 17th May, 1865, notice of trial and issues were served. On the 30th May plaintiff served a notice calling upon defendant to consent to withdraw his defence, and pay the costs of the action. This was refused, defendant stating that the action had been wrongly brought in the name of Pickering. On the 2nd June plaintiff served another notice similar to the first, which notice was also met with a refusal. Notice of trial was withdrawn, and nothing was further done until the 6th December, 1866, when defendant entered a rule that he should be at liberty to proceed, unless cause shown, in eight days; and it was this rule which it was now sought to make absolute. Defendant stated in his affidavit that he had never dealt with plaintiff except as agent for Mrs. Murray, and submitted that the action should have been brought in the name of the latter. He also stated that by the course of dealing he had always had a month's credit, and that the credit had not expired when the action was brought. For the plaintiff it was contended that the action had been rightly brought in the name of the agent, and that defendant had acted wrongly in paying Mrs. Murray behind plaintiff's back. All the circumstances of the case, it was contended, showed that the defendant knew that he could have safely paid, and ought to have paid, the plaintiff.

The COURT granted the motion, holding that the defendant had a right at all events to have the question tried; and by consent it was ordered that plaintiff should be at liberty to enter a stet processus. The defendant to get his costs of the defence, of the notice of trial, and £3 for the costs of the present motion.

THE QUEEN v. O'BRIEN.

Jan. 24, 27.—Previous Conviction—Form of Indictment.

Writ of error. The prisoner was indicted, at Waterford, on an indictment containing three counts. The first stated a previous conviction of the prisoner for larceny, and a subsequent larceny by him. The second was for larceny. The third was for receiving. The record stated that when the prisoner was arraigned, so much only of the first count as charged the subsequent felony was read to him, and that he pleaded guilty thereto, and to the second count. That then so much of the first count was read as stated the previous conviction, and that he pleaded guilty thereto also. He was then sentenced to five years' penal servitude on the second count, and judgment was given that a nolle prosequi should be entered on the third. On this record the Crown brought a writ of error, assigning as error that as it appeared that there had been a previous conviction the sentence of five years' penal servitude was wrong, and that that sentence should now be increased to seven years' penal servitude.

Monroe, assigned as counsel for the prisoner, contended that the record was bad in consequence of the position of the statement as to the previous conviction, and that the fact of there being a good count for larceny did not make the sentence good.

Longfield, Q.C., for the Crown.

The COURT held that the indictment, as it appeared on the record, was wrongly framed, and that in these cases, since the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, the count alleging the previous conviction should follow, and not precede the others. However, the sentence which had been passed was a sentence upon a good count, and should stand; but the Court recommended an application to the Executive, to have the sentence, under the circumstances, reduced to two years; the Crown to consent now to have a nolle prosequi entered on the third count.

SHEA v. SEYMOUR.

Feb. 15.—Practice—Consent to refer to Arbitration.

O'Riordan moved to make a consent to refer this case to arbitration a rule of Court. He stated that it was not a consent to refer the case generally, but only the amount of damages, and it was provided that the award should have the effect of a verdict of a jury. Under those circumstances he thought that, under the 139 Gen. Ord., 1854, it could not be made a rule of Court by side-bar rule, or that at all events it was safer to move it in Court.

Boyd moved for a garnishee order on a debtor of the defendant in this case.

Monroe, for defendant, took a preliminary objection that the notice of motion was for Friday, the 12th February, and that there was no such day.

KENNEDY v. WOODS.

Jan. 15.—Ejectment—Adverse Possession—Landed Estates' Court Conveyance.

Lease of September, 1817, expired 25th March, 1838. Defendants were then in adverse possession. A new lease was made, 30th August, 1838. The lessee's interest in this lease was conveyed to plaintiffs by Landed Estates Court Conveyance of June, 1861. No enjoyment was ever had under this lease, and defendant's adverse possession continued uninterrupted down to the bringing of the action.

The Court held that defendant's title by adverse possession having accrued previous to the conveyance of 1861, the lessee's interest could not be revived by that conveyance, as the Landed Estates Court was only empowered to convey "the interest then remaining unexpired"—21 & 22 Vic., c. 72, sec. 61.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

In re SMALLMAN'S Estate.

Feb. 14th.—Application to Set Aside Leases.

This was a motion on behalf of Catharine Kennedy, a simple contract creditor of the late W. Smallman, that certain leases made by his widow of portions of the premises ordered to be sold in this matter might be set aside, and the lands sold discharged of them. By the affidavit made to support the motion, it appeared that W. Smallman, who died on the 22nd March, 1863, by his will devised all his property to his wife for life, and after her decease unto and amongst his children as she should appoint, with power to her to make leases. The property in question consisted chiefly of houses and premises near Roscrea, part of which the testator held under a fee-farm grant. He left debts behind him to the amount of £14,349, and to Catharine Kennedy (for whom he had been acting as agent) he owed £1,900 on the foot of promissory notes and rents unaccounted for. E. Smallman, the testator's widow, proved the will, and on the 7th January, 1864, in execution of the power, made three leases of portions of the property to her three daughters, Anne, Eliza, and Dora Smallman for 999 years, from the 1st November, 1863, respectively. On the 14th January, 1864, E. Smallman filed a petition to administer the assets of her deceased husband, in which matter the charge of Catharine Kennedy was taken as proved. On the 25th January, 1864, a petition to sell the premises was filed in the Landed Estates' Court; the affidavit alleged that these leases were made at an undervalue; and an affidavit made by a land valuator and surveyor stated the value of a portion of the premises; adding, that the estimate was based on the assumption that immediate possession was to be given. The three daughters made three affidavits, which were all to the same effect, that the rent reserved in these leases was as much as any solvent tenant would give; and on their behalf two surveyors made affidavits as to the value of the lands. Other portions of the testator's property had been already sold under the order of the Landed Estates' Court, and it was alleged on behalf of Catharine Kennedy that the entire fund, when realized, would be insufficient to pay the testator's debts. The motion had been made previously before Longfield, J., and he directed the parties to go to the Court of Chancery and get leave from the Master to make the application to the Landed Estates' Court. Master Litton, when the matter was brought before him, made an order that the party should take such proceedings as she might be advised.

Brady, Q.C., in support of the motion, contended that it was prejudicial to the estate to make these leases, whether at an undervalue or not—that they were made at an undervalue—that they were made fraudulently—that, whether E. Smallman was devisee or executrix her character as a trustee was the same—that these lands were assets for the payment of the testator's debts—that it was incumbent on the lessees to show that these leases were for the benefit of the creditors, and that they were purchasers with notice. He cited Williams on Executors, Vol. ii., p. 874.

F. Walsh, Q.C., for the lessees, contended that Catharine Kennedy, being a simple contract creditor, had no more lien on these leases than any other person in the community, and proposed that she should file a cause petition in the Court of Chancery to set them aside as fraudulent; this portion of the property, in the meanwhile, to remain unsold. He cited Simpson's case (2 Kay and J. 71).

LYNCH, J., said he would act on that suggestion.

Mahon, for the Bank of Ireland, who were creditors to the amount of £4,000, stated that the Bank did not mean to question these leases, provided that the fund was sufficient to pay them; but in a contrary event he wished to have the right to do so reserved to them, as these leases were made under suspicious circumstances.

F. White, for the petitioner, did not object to the course proposed, but desired to have the order without prejudice to the rights of the mortagees to impeach these leases if they should think fit.

LYNCH, J., made an order that the other portions of the property should be sold first, and that, within one month after the sale, Catharine Kennedy should take such proceedings, by cause petition or otherwise, as she should think necessary to have these leases set aside without prejudice to the rights of the mortagees, if any, to seek to set them aside. If not taken within one month after the sale, this motion to stand refused, with costs.

Mahon applied for costs.

LYNCH, J., reserved the question of costs.

COURT OF PROBATE.

IN THE GOODS OF MRS. ARABELLA MUNROE, DECEASED.

Feb. 16.—Protection Order from English Divorce Court. Quere, Does it Operate to Protect the Wife's Earnings in Ireland, the Desertion having occurred in England?

Dr. Miller, for Jane Kemp, the mother of Mrs. Munroe, and one of her next of kin, moved, on notice to Mr. Munroe, the husband of the deceased, for letters of administration of the goods of the deceased. She had, when resident at Northampton, in England, been deserted, in 1854, by her husband; and in 1860 she got an order from the late Sir C. Cresswell, protecting from her husband and his creditors, her earnings since the time of the desertion. The words of the order were general, and did not specify any locality in which the earnings might be made. After that order was made, Mrs. Munroe removed to Ireland, and settled in Dublin, where, as a hotel keeper, she acquired, by her own industry, about £500, as was alleged, and she died in 1866, leaving her husband surviving, but no issue or father, and leaving Jane Kemp, her mother, and also a brother, her sole next of kin.

The 20 & 21 Vic., c. 85, s. 21, was the first act which authorized protection orders, and the words of that section are, as to locality, quite general:—"Any money or property she may acquire by her own lawful industry, and property which she may become possessed of after such desertion," and also enacts that after such order, she shall be in the like position as to property as if she had obtained a decree of judicial separation. Then the 25th section defines what the effect of such a decree is, viz., that the wife shall, as to property, be considered a feme sole, and that if she should die intestate, her property should go as if her husband were dead.

The 21 & 22 Vic., c. 108 (the Amending Divorce Act) s. 6, creates the difficulty, by enacting that every wife deserted by her husband, wheresoever resident in England, may get an order to protect "any money or property in England, she may have acquired or may acquire by her own lawful industry, and any property she may have become possessed of, or may become possessed of after such desertion, against her husband and his creditors," and then the act expressly gives the judge ordinary all the powers conferred on him by the former act. Counsel contended that there was nothing in the latter act to prevent the order operating on Irish earnings; and as there was at the time of the wife's death, no corresponding Irish act, if the construction relied on by the other side prevailed, the greatest injustice would result, when the desertion occurred in England, but the earnings were realized here. The 28 and 29 V., c. 40, follows the words of the early English act, so far as when the desertion occurs in Ireland, but even that act would not have aided the case, as the desertion here was not in Ireland but in England.

The Goods of Farraday (2 S. and Tr., 369), the Goods of Stevenson (15 L. T., N.S., 269), were cited.

George Keys, for the husband. The statutes referred to clearly apply only to earnings realized in England, and do not deprive the husband of his marital rights as to any other property accruing to the wife.

KEATINGE, J.—I do not like to dispose in a summary way, on motion, of so very important and novel a point as arises here. If the parties insist on the point being ruled I will require the caveat to be warned, and an appearance to be entered, and so a suit will be before me, and the parties may appeal from my order; but, under the circumstances, I would recommend to the parties to come to an amicable arrangement.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before MILLER, J.

Re PATRICK GREHAN.

Order and Disposition — Reputed Ownership — Scrip Certificates of Shares—The Lodgement of the Scrip Certificates of Shares in a Joint Stock Company will not take them out of the Order and Disposition of the Owner, whilst they still Remain Registered in his Name in the Books of the Company, and in case of his Bankruptcy they will Pass to his Assignees.

JUDGE MILLER, in delivering judgment, said:—This case has come before me upon the charge of the Royal Bank, and the discharge of the assignees. The facts appear to be as follows:—On the 24th of December, 1857, before any act of bankruptcy had been committed, the bankrupt had deposited with the Royal Bank, by way of equitable mortgage, the certificates of three shares of the capital stock of the Derwent Mining Company (Limited), and standing in the name of the bankrupt, and also handed over to the Royal Bank a written memorandum of the same date, and signed by the bankrupt, stating the purposes for which the deposit had been made. The Royal Bank, upon these instruments, opened an account with the bankrupt, and at the date of the bankruptcy there was a balance due to the Royal Bank, on foot of that account, of about £200. The title alleged by the Royal Bank, as against the assignees of the bankrupt, to the three mining shares, is that of equitable mortgagee thereof; and in support of that case they allege that, according to the rules of the Company, the scrip certificates handed over to them gave no valid transfer of such shares. That no party would be recognized as the owner of such shares by whom such certificates were not produced. The assignees of the bankrupt, in their discharge, put the Royal Bank upon proof of the rules of the Mining Company, as alleged by the charge, denying that any notice of the title of the Royal Bank as alleged, as equitable owners or mortgagees of the three mining shares, was given to the Mining Company previous to the filing of the petition in this matter. Secondly, that the three mining shares stood, up to and at the time of filing the petition, in the name of the bankrupt, and that up to and at the time of filing the petition, the bankrupt was the registered owner of these shares, and that such shares were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, with the consent and permission of the Royal Bank, who did not give notice of these claims before the bankruptcy. I may here observe that no proof was, in fact, given that any such rule existed as regarded the Mining Company, as of the nature alleged by the Royal Bank, although the assignees by their discharge, put the Royal Bank distinctly upon proof of the existence of such rules; but that is not of much importance in the view which I take of the case. The first question raised before me was as to the party upon whom the onus of proof lay, as to the fact that notice of the claim by the Royal Bank, as equitable mortgagees, had or had not been given to the Mining Company; there not having been any positive proof, in fact, given by either party, in any way, either in support of the charge or discharge. I have, however, upon this question been relieved from all difficulty by the admission most properly made by the solicitor for the Royal Bank of the fact (which was known to both parties to be capable of proof), namely, that no notice, in fact, had been given by the Royal Bank of their alleged claim as equitable mortgagees of those mining shares, prior to the bankruptcy in this case. The only question that remains on that state of facts for my decision is, whether, under the circumstances stated, the bankrupt had, at the time he became bankrupt, those shares in his order and disposition, with the consent of the true owner, he being at the time the registered owner. There is no law authorizing the legal transfer of the scrip certificates of shares apart from the shares of which they are evidence, or making such scrip certificates, of themselves, negotiable instruments. It may also be stated as a general rule, before considering the facts of the case, that in order to take out of the reputed ownership of a bankrupt within the meaning of the 313th section of the Bankrupt Act, such chose in action or chattel which was once in the possession of such bankrupt as against his assignees in bankruptcy, it would be necessary that the change of possession should be made as complete as it is capable of being made, and that in order to take it out of such ownership, order, and disposition of the bankrupt, notice of any transfer thereof should be given to the debtor, or person liable to pay, and that until such notice should be given to the debtor, a payment made by him to the bankrupt would be a good discharge to the debtor as against any transferree who had omitted to give notice of the transfer to the debtor. That being the general rule, is there anything in the nature of the claim of the Royal Bank to exempt them from its operation? The legal title in the three mining shares consists of being the registered owner of those shares upon the books of the company, whilst the scrip certificates issued to such owner cannot be regarded otherwise than as the evidence of such legal title, and which may be said to be the mere incidents to that title, and follow it as a shadow. It is alleged that by the rules of the Mining Company, with which the Royal Bank never put themselves into privity, or in respect of which they never incurred any liability, no transfer of any share could be made without the production of the scrip certificates, it seems to me enough to say that it is not alleged that such rules were in the nature of bye-laws, made under the authority or in pursuance of any provision of the company's act; or that such rules, if any, were more than rules for the convenience of the directors and managers of the company.

His Lordship, after delivering an elaborate judgment, decided that those mining shares were, at the time of the bankruptcy, within the order and disposition of the bankrupt within the meaning of the 313th section of the Bankrupt Act, and consequently the property of the assignees; and that the mere lodgement of the scrip certificates with the bank gave them no valid claim to the shares.

CIVIL BILL APPEAL.

M'INERNY, appellant; GRIFFIN, respondent.

This was an ejectment under the title (79) section of the Civil Bill Act (14 & 15 Vic., c. 57).

The facts of the case were these:—In 1790 Mr. G. Stackpoole made a lease of the lands, which were the subject of the ejectment to Michael M'Inerny, grandfather of the appellant, and his heirs for three lives, of which one was still in being. The eldest son of the original lessee, who was long since dead, went to America nineteen years ago, taking his eldest son, Michael, with him. His wife and daughter, and his two younger sons, Francis and Mortimer, remained in Ireland. After his departure his wife managed the farm, and paid the rent. He died in America shortly after his arrival. In 1857, on the occasion of the marriage of her daughter with the respondent, Griffin, Mrs. M'Inerny executed a marriage settlement, by which she gave half the farm to respondent at once, and the remainder to him at her death, respondent paying for her a sum of £15. Soon after the marriage Francis, the second son, went to America, and had been heard of as lately as 1865. Respondent went into possession of his half of the farm, and on the death of the widow, Mrs. M'Inerny, in June, 1866, claimed possession of the other half; the claim was resisted by appellant, Mortimer M'Inerny, and respondent brought an ejectment. The ejectment was originally framed claiming the interest under the lease of 1790, but was amended by the Chairman, and, as altered, claimed a tenancy from year to year under the eldest brother of appellant, created by implication from the widow's payment of the rent after her husband's death. A decree was given by the Chairman; from this decree M'Inerny appealed.

Serjeant Barry, with him Cleary, in support of the decree, submitted that payment of rent by the widow after her husband's death, made her tenant from year to year to her son, that she could not have been evicted without notice to quit.

O'Loghlen, with him Fitzgibbon, for the appellant.

FITZGERALD, J., held that if the elder son came home he could have gone in and taken possession without any notice to quit. That there was no tenancy created by implication between Mrs. M'Inerny and her son; that whatever title at will she had was determined by her death, if not previously, by her attempted assignments, and his Lordship reversed the decree.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR—As you have opened your columns to free discussion upon the above subject, I avail myself of the opportunity thus afforded to make a few observations upon the letter of your correspondent "Leguleius" which appeared in your second number.

The first part of his letter is, I may say, in the nature of a "preamble" to an Act of Parliament; and is intended to lay a foundation for the measure of which your correspondent is so warm an advocate. His first proposition, that every owner of land desires to deal with it by sale or mortgage with economy and rapidity is, I take it, a self-evident one, and needs no argument to support it. Whether this great facility in dealing with land which is the desideratum of supporters of the Record of Title system, would be a benefit to the landed and agricultural interests of the country is another question. It may be sought to establish an analogy between Government Stock, or even between ships and landed property, but a little consideration will show that it fails in most essential particulars, one of which, however, is sufficiently important to destroy the fabric built upon this uncertain foundation The relation of landlord and tenant, which has been of late absorbing so much public attention both in and out of Parliament, and on the right condition of which hangs the welfare not only of the agricultural interests but of society itself in this country, has no counterpart in the funds or in shipping property. The man who buys Government Stock takes it with no obligation, legal or moral. What Iago says of cash in currency may be as truly said of money in the funds—"'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands." Not so the purchaser of land. He takes his purchase not only burdened with more duties, which he must be insensible to all principle to neglect, but also with legal obligations which he cannot evade. What, I would ask, Sir, would be the condition of a country in which land in the hands of occupying tenants was transferred from one person to another with the frequency of transfer of Government Stock, and in which a tenant might have a dozen different landlords between May and November? Nor has the relation of landlord and tenant any counterpart in the shipping interest. The ship's crew are seldom the same for two voyages; and the sailor has no tie binding him to any ship longer than the voyage for which he is engaged. Another distinction between funded and landed property is, that the latter is subject to the creation of various interests which are unknown in the former. Land may be held in fee by one man, subject to a contingent jointure to his wife, a charge for younger children, mortgages, annuities redeemable and perpetual, and be also subject to leases for lives renewable for ever, or long terms of years, which in their turn are subject to like incumbrances, or it may be also to sub-leases. Now what analogy has property capable of being made the subject of such varieties of interests to Government stock, which is in fact but security equivalent in value to a variable market price, and therefore capable of the most simple transfer.

The second part of your correspondent's "preamble" is certainly rather strong in statement. He says, that the impediments to dealings with land for a long series of years have been such as to diminish its value to the owners, and to limit the number of persons bound by ties of property to the cause of order and loyalty. Now I would like to know how your correspondent proposes to prove this very strong proposition. Does he mean to contend that if the "artificial hindrances" and impediments he refers to were totally removed, and land could be as easily bought and sold in the market as Government Stock, that the price of land would be increased? Common experience teaches us otherwise, and tells us that the greater facility of transfer would affect the land market, by thrusting a quantity of property into it, and that the price of land would thus be depreciated rather than enhanced. But by what principle of ratiocination can "Leguleius" prove that the absence of such facility "limits the number of persons bound by ties of property to the cause of order and loyalty." If the tie of property binds to the cause of order and loyalty, then are the present proprietors of land so bound, and if by the greater facility of transfer their estates are sold to others, the number of persons bound to the cause of order and loyalty remains the same. If the facility of transfer has any affect upon the cause of law and order, I would say it would be to make the proprietor sit looser to the land, and view it rather as a mercantile commodity which he could readily dispose of to a purchaser in the market. Perhaps (and I really see no other solution of his meaning) your correspondent intends that by this greater facility the land is capable of being cut up into small parts, and that thus a numerous proprietory may be attained. If this is his meaning I think he will find few of the gentry, at least, to agree with him, or to believe that such sub-division of property would be a national benefit.

So much for your correspondent's "preamble." Had he made it a little more moderate, and merely stated that it was desirable, so far as practicable, to reduce the expenses and delays in connexion with the transfer of landed preperty, I for one could not have differed from him; but when he makes such very startling assertions one is disposed to question them, and to declare his "preamble" as not proved.

Passing by his historical sketch of the Registration of Title—upon which, however, I think some cross lights might be thrown—I now come to his strictures upon the Registry of Deeds in Ireland, and the "inherent defects" in that system, which render it "impossible" that searches could be completed in a short space of time, or the useful objects of that institution be carried out. The first of these defects is what is known by the profession as "general charges," that is, deeds in which the lands intended to be affected are described in general terms, as, for instance—"All the lands of the grantor in the County of Leitrim." Now any one who will take the trouble to read the Act of 2nd and 3rd Wm. IV., cap. 87, will, I think, see that it was never contemplated that such deeds should be received in the Registry Office, and that, on the contrary, it was intended that every deed to be registered there should state the barony or parish in which the land comprised in it are situated. The practice of receiving such general charges has been adopted; but were conformity to the Act enforced, or a new stature passed forbidding the reception of such deeds, this difficulty would be overcome, and I cannot, therefore, consider it an "inherent defect" in the Registry of Deeds. The real objection, namely, that you have to search from the coming of age of the person searched against, seems to me scarcely worth referring to, as it merely makes the search a few years longer, which, if the Registry of Deeds system were properly carried out would be comparatively nothing in the way of trouble. As to the ordinary search directed by counsel not disclosing "post obit" deeds, I must beg to differ from your correspondent, and can appeal to the experience of your numerous professional readers, who, I am sure, are quite familiar with direction of search from the attaining of age of the party searched against. I apprehend the counsel must be a novice in "title" who would omit such a necessary direction. I cannot look upon this objection of your correspondent as disclosing an "inherent defect" in the registry system. The delay in obtaining searches I believe to be capable of removal, at all events, as regards modern searches, i.e., for more recent periods. I made suggestions to this end in a paper I read at the Social Science Congress here, in 1861; but of course, any reform in the registry system should be fully carried out, and a liberal expenditure allowed for that purpose, to bring it at all near perfection. Your correspondent's last objection to the Registry of Deeds, if novel, is not certainly very weighty, namely, that it is situated at the northerly extremity of the city, this "northerly extremity" being about ten minutes' walk from the Record of Title Office. It seems to me, then, upon the whole, that if there be "inherent defects" in the Registry of Deeds system, your correspondent has failed to expose them.

Having trespassed so much on your space, I must reserve the discussion of the Record of Title, which your correspondent "Leguleius" would substitute for the Registry of Deeds, to another letter, and Remain, Sir,

Yours faithfully,
Henry T. Dix.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Waterford Law Society, held on the 18th February, 1867, the Vice-President in the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"That the petition for the abolition of the Annual Certificate Duty now read, be, and the same is hereby, adopted by the society, and that our secretary do forward same to Sir H. W. Barron, Bart., M.P., for presentation to the House of Commons, and that his colleague, J. A. Blake, Esq., and our county members, John Esmonde, Esq., Charles R. Barry, Esq., and Edmond de la Poer, Esq., be earnestly requested to support the prayer thereof."

"That our secretary be directed to communicate with the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland, and the other Provincial Law Societies, and inform them of the adoption of the petition and foregoing resolution, and request their co-operation in making arrangements for a deputation of solicitors, from the respective law societies, to proceed to London, to urge upon the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the members of the House of Commons, the immediate abolition of this Certificate Tax, so very obnoxious in principle, and degrading to us as members of a learned profession."

John O'Brien, V.P., Chairman.
Joseph W. Howard, Hon. Secretary.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE FOLLOWING IS A COPY OF THE EXAMINATION PAPER GIVEN TO CANDIDATES FOR ADMISSION AS ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS ON THE FIRST DAY OF THEIR FINAL EXAMINATION HELD FOR LAST HILARY TERM.

[Every answer is to be accompanied by reasons concisely stated.]

Common Law.

1. What is the meaning of a deed working a merger of a simple contract liability? Give instances.
2. What is an escrow? May a deed be delivered to a party to it to hold as an escrow?
3. Define accurately a legal "consideration."
4. Is consideration necessary to support a covenant?
5. Illustrate the maxim, "Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio."
6. A and B being joint debtors, the acceptance by the creditor of the sole and separate liability of A was held to be a good consideration for an agreement to discharge B from liability, and it was remarked that the sole security of A might be a better thing than the joint security of A and B.
Explain the reason of this and the grounds of the decision.
7. A country attorney sends a sum of money belonging to a client to his town agent who misapplies it. Can the client sue the town agent? Why?
8. Are any and what words necessary to constitute a warranty? What is the distinction between warranty and representation?
9. What contracts in restraint of trade are enforceable?
10. What are the provisions of the 17th section of the statute of frauds?
11. Can an auctioneer sign as agent for both parties, so as to satisfy the statute?
12. What is a patent and what a latent ambiguity? Are both, or is either, and which of them, allowed to be explained by oral evidence?
13. Can evidence be given of an agreement antecedent to a written contract for the purpose of varying it? Can a written contract be varied by a subsequent oral one?
14. State in what particulars bills of exchange and promissory notes differ from other simple contracts?
15. Mention some of the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act conferring on the courts of law an equitable jurisdiction?
16. What steps are necessary to render a bill of sale available against creditors of the person who gives the bill of sale?
17. What are the provisions of "The Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act?"
18. In what class of ejectments can the plaintiff require the defendant to give security for payment of costs and damages, and what steps must plaintiff take to avail himself of that privilege?

Real Property and Equity.

19. Can a voluntary conveyance of land made bonâ fide be disturbed by the act of the grantor?
20. If one of three joint tenants in fee simple die, how does his interest go? If one of three tenants in common?
21. What is the principal use in practice of a joint tenancy in fee simple?
22. What estates in land may now be created without writing?
23. What estate should a man have in land to entitle his wife to dower?
24. What is a reversion? What a remainder?
25. What is the best form of taking a mortgage of a leasehold, and why?
26. In case of the death of a mortgagor leaving personality to A and the mortgaged estates to B, out of what fund is the mortage debt to be paid? Was this always the law? When was the change made?
27. What is the proper form of a clause to increase the rate of interest on a mortgage debt, if not punctually paid?
28. In an assignment of a mortgage by the mortgagee, should the mortgagor be made a party to the deed? Why?
29. What is an "equity of redemption?" Is a mortgagor barred of his equity of redemption by any and what length of time?
30. What is the meaning of a devise "lapsing?" Who takes lapsed devises or bequests?
31. In what cases does the devise remain unaffected by the death of the devisee in testator's life time?
32. Mention some of the principal heads of equitable jurisdiction?
33. What is the distinction between succession "per stirpes" and "per capita?"
34. In a devise of real estate to A without words of limitation, before the Wills Act, what estate does A take? What estate if the devise were after the Wills Act?
35. Do the contracts of a married woman, neither referring to her separate estate, nor professing to bind it, bind her separate estate?
36. How is a guardian ad litem appointed when a respondent is under disability?
37. Who are the necessary parties in the first instance to a cause petition—
   (a) for foreclosure?
   (b) by a creditor for the administration of personal estate?
   (c) for the appointment of a receiver?

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

RECORD OF TITLE, IRELAND.

In the Matter of

The Record of Title Act (Ireland), 1865, section 51, and of Richard John O'Grady, Esq., an owner of Lands under Parliamentary Title.

WHEREAS the Commissioners for Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, on the 5th day of August, 1850, conveyed to the late Francis Richard O'Grady, Esq., of Tavrane, Kilkelly, in the County of Mayo, the Lands of Sallyernan, otherwise Sallyernon, held by lease for a term of 950 years, from 1791; and on the 7th day of August, 1851, the said Commissioners conveyed to James Dillon Meldon, the Lands of Ballyhaunis, otherwise Tubber, including Houses and Plots in the Town of Ballyhaunis, and the Lands of Hazlehill and Cloonbullig, which last mentioned Lands were afterwards sold, and conveyed by the said James Dillon Meldon, to the said Francis Richard O'Grady, deceased; and on the 28th day of July, 1853, the said Commissioners conveyed to said Francis Richard O'Grady, the Lands of Cahir, called Cloonfallagh, and subdenomination, called Derrynane; and on the 2nd day of December, 1857, the said Commissioners conveyed to the said Francis Richard O'Grady, deceased, part of the Lands of Cahir, otherwise Caher Higgins, all the said several Lands and Premises, being situate in the Barony of Costelloe, and County of Mayo.

And whereas Richard John O'Grady, Esq., by his application (which may be inspected at my office, by any person interested) claims as nephew and heir-at-law of the said Francis Richard O'Grady, who died unmarried, and intestate, in the month of March, 1863, to be absolutely entitled to the said Estates.

This is to give Notice, that unless cause be shown to the contrary within one month from the publication of this Notice, the said Richard John O'Grady will be entitled to be recorded, pursuant to the 51st section of the Act, as owner of all the said Estates, subject only as to the Lands of Sallyernan, to the lease particularly mentioned in said application, and as to the Lands of Ballyhaunis, to the leases and agreements for leases mentioned in the conveyances from said Commissioners.

Dated this 15th day of February, 1867.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MARCH 2, 1867.

THE reason which induced the Lord Chief-Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, at the late after-sittings, to change the order in which the list of Records is usually heard, and to take the Special Jury cases first, opens up a question of very serious importance to both branches of the profession and to the public.

It may not be generally known that the object of this change was to obviate as much as possible the serious inconvenience which so frequently arises from Senior Counsel being engaged in a number of cases, three of which, at least, may be at the same moment actually at hearing in the different courts.

In a recent case, tried in the Exchequer Nisi Prius, an eminent counsel made the following remark—"It has been suggested that the reason for my not having opened this case was that I have been reserved for the last, in order to work upon the sympathies of the jury. I have only to say that unless an Irish barrister enjoyed that peculiar privilege which is said to belong to birds, and could be in two places at once, I could not be here and elsewhere at the same moment." He alluded to the fact of two Courts of Exchequer sitting at Nisi Prius simultaneously. He might also have alluded to the like state of things in the Common Pleas during the late after sittings.

Of course the only motive of the Chiefs of these Courts, in thus subdividing the list of Records, is a desire to speed the course of justice; but this so greatly increases the evil complained of that on the whole we think delay would often be less prejudicial to litigants than an immediate trial in which they had not the advantage of the Counsel retained by them.

A correspondent, in a letter which we publish in another column, calls our attention to this subject, and mentions what certainly appears to be an extreme case; we trust, however, that his leading counsel's brief although "unnoted" was not unread, and that had he not been engaged elsewhere he would have been perfectly prepared to state the case; the public should remember when condemning members of the bar for retaining fees for which they have rendered no services, that eminent men in extensive practice are always taken at a risk; they merely undertake to prepare their cases and make the best effort they can to be present at the hearing; it is, however, very difficult to persuade an unsuccessful suitor, smarting from the effects of an adverse (and, as he believes, unjust) verdict, that the advocate on whose skill he relied is altogether free from blame, in having been necessarily absent during the greater part, or perhaps the entire, of the trial.

Besides particular instances of inconvenience and injustice caused by this state of things, the multitudinous demands upon the time of an Irish Barrister necessarily preclude that undivided attention to special branches of legal study and practice which is necessary for the production of legal works of literary merit, the dearth of which in this country is so often lamented.

We fear that the really effectual remedy for these grievances, by a subdivision of labour which would enable practitioners to confine themselves exclusively to particular courts, seems to be in Ireland wholly impracticable; and we agree with our correspondent in thinking that a discussion upon the subject is extremely desirable, feeling confident that the Members of the Bar would cordially co-operate in carrying out any feasible plan that can be suggested to lessen the grievances complained of.

THE CROWN SOLICITORSHIP FOR THE NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

BY the death of the late Maxwell Hamilton, Esq., this office is now vacant. The emoluments attached to it are considerable, but it is intended to divide the Circuit into districts, as has been done in similar instances, and thus to make two or three appointments instead of one. This course would have many advantages to recommend it to the Profession, the Government, and the country. It would confer appointments upon three or four Solicitors, instead of giving all to one; it would extend the area of public patronage; and, by causing a division of responsibilities and labours, it would aid in promoting the efficient discharge of the various important professional duties to be performed.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE LORD MAYOR'S BANQUET.

The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, at his inaugural banquet last week, in proposing the toast of "The Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland," called the public attention to a number of topics of interest to the Profession; we give a full report of his Lordship's admirable speech, for which the thanks of the Profession are eminently due to him.

It now becomes my duty to propose to you the toast of the profession to which I am proud to belong, and by which I first learnt to know the privilege of being independent—"The Solicitors of Ireland." (Applause). It is a noble and an honourable profession, one requiring talent, skill, perseverance, and honour to succeed in. (Applause). It is a profession which has contributed more than a fair share to the honour and prestige of the Bar; and the painstaking, and hardworking Solicitor's labours are often overlooked, and seldom acknowledged, by those who rise to eminent positions, and then too often disregard the men, whose patronage and support enabled them to climb to the loftiest positions in the Common Law and Equity Benches. (Hear, hear). But I am proud to believe that the solicitors of Ireland are entering on a new career. (Hear, hear). The Act of last Session gives them a separate corporate existence, and a right to manage their own affairs, though it must be admitted Parliament and the benchers took a long time to find out that they could be entrusted to manage their own affairs, though they are employed, trusted, and relied on to manage the affairs of others. (Laughter and applause). Yet better late than never, and I hail the passing of the Act to which I refer as a proof that the profession is advancing in public confidence and regard. It is making the tests for admission such as any gentleman ought not to be afraid to encounter. (Applause). In this it acts wisely. Yet I regret to say another aspect of the profession fills me with profound anxiety. I mean the state of the County Courts of Ireland. They now perform much of the legal local business of the country; their jurisdiction in several important matters has been, and ought to be still further, increased, but the scale of fees payable to the solicitors who practise there is insufficient in the extreme, contemptible when compared with the fees paid in the County Courts in England and Scotland; and considering the wisdom of maintaining gentlemen of high character and position as practitioners there, is most unwise. (Applause). You drive the best men out of such courts by the insufficient nature of the fees, while at the same time you are hedging the profession round with greater safeguards in the shape of examinations. (Applause). The Right Hon. gentleman, the Attorney-General for Ireland, is present, and I say to him he would embalm himself in more than Egyptian glory (laughter) if he will introduce and carry a good measure to improve the County Courts of Ireland. (Applause). But the truth is the solicitors of Ireland ought to have representatives of their own body in Parliament to protect their interests, and by this save also the public. (Hear, hear). I am glad, to night, to be surrounded by some of the most eminent members of that profession. I shall not refer to more than one, but I will ask you to drink his health—that of Mr. Orpen, the President of the Incorporated Society of Solicitors of Ireland. (Applause).

The following is the draft of the Bill (alluded to in our last number) to confer upon Courts of Quarter Sessions a limited jurisdiction in cases of partnership accounts:—

Act to Amend "An Act to Consolidate and Amend the Law relating to Civil Bills and the Courts of Quarter Sessions in Ireland, and to Transfer to the Assistant Barrister Certain Jurisdiction as to Insolvent Debtors."

Preamble. WHEREAS upon the hearing of Civil Bills at Quarter Sessions in Ireland it frequently happens that the demand of the plaintiff appears founded upon some unsettled partnership account, by reason whereof the Court is under the legal necessity of dismissing such processes, although the defendants in same are justly indebted to the plaintiffs;

AND WHEREAS the sole remedy of plaintiffs in such cases would be in the Court of Chancery, which being ill adapted to suits of a trifling nature, is practically unavailable in such cases;

14 & 15 Vic., ch. 57, secs. 5, 49–50, 51–52. AND WHEREAS the said Civil Bill Courts already possess equitable jurisdiction with respect to the administration of the assets of deceased persons, where such assets do not exceed £200;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient to confer upon the said Civil Bill Courts a corresponding equitable jurisdiction in respect of demands between partners.

BE IT THEREFORE ENACTED by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Civil Bill may be maintained although between partners.

1. That though upon the hearing of any Civil Bill at Quarter Sessions it shall appear that the defendant or defendants has or have a joint interest with the plaintiff or plaintiffs in relation to the subject matter of the demand contained in the process, or that there is a partnership between them in relation thereto, it shall nevertheless be competent for the Chairman of the Sessions of the Peace to entertain such process, and to take any account between the parties in relation to such partnership which he may deem necessary for the purpose of ascertaining whether any, and what, balance be due from the defendant or defendants to the plaintiff or plaintiffs on foot of such partnership transactions, or to direct such account to be taken by such person or persons as he shall appoint for that purpose; and if it shall appear to the Chairman that any balance is due from the defendant or defendants to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, he shall, and may, make a decree for payment thereof with costs; but if no such balance shall appear, then the said Chairman shall, and may, dismiss the Civil bill with costs.

Account may be taken if necessary.

Money may be ordered in to be paid by parties.

2. That if in the course of said hearing, or such inquiry as aforesaid, it shall appear to the Chairman that the case is not ripe for a final decree by reason of there being outstanding debts due by the said partners as such; the Chairman may, if he see fit, order such sum of money as shall seem just to be paid by any of the parties to the process by a day to be named by him into the Bank of Ireland, or such branch of the Bank of Ireland as he shall direct, in the name of the Clerk of the Peace for the county, to the credit of the cause in question. And such order shall direct that, in default thereof, the said sum shall be levied by execution against the body or goods of such party or parties, in like manner, and under like restrictions, as provided in the case of ordinary decrees on Civil Bills, and such order shall be executed accordingly. Provided nevertheless that the sheriff shall not proceed to execute such order, unless an affidavit be deposited with him stating that no such payment in bank has been made pursuant to the exigency of such order, which affidavit may be sworn before the Clerk of the Peace or any Justice of the Peace for the county. And such Clerk of the Peace, or such Justice (as the case may be), is hereby authorized to administer such oath.

14 & 15 Vic., ch. 57, sec. 54.

Debts due to partnership to be enforced.

3. That if it be alleged by any party to such Civil Bill that any debt is then due to such partners by any person or persons residing in the county, and if such party shall so require, then the Chairman may, if he see fit, but at the peril of the party so requiring, make an order upon such alleged debtor or debtors to show cause, by a day therein to be named, why he, she, or they should not pay the sum so alleged to be due as aforesaid, and such order shall be served in like manner as aforesaid, and such order shall be served in like manner as Civil Bill Processes; and if no cause, or no sufficient cause, be shown, then the Chairman may make an absolute order upon such debtor or debtors, to pay such sum, or so much thereof as appears to him to be actually due, together with costs, to be taxed by the Chairman, by a day therein to be named, into the Bank of Ireland, or such branch of the Bank of Ireland as he shall direct, in the name of the Clerk of the Peace for the county, to the credit of the cause in question; and such order shall direct that, in default thereof, the said sum shall be levied by execution against the body or goods of such debtor, in like manner and under like restrictions as are provided in the case of ordinary decrees on Civil Bills; and such order shall be executed accordingly.

Provided nevertheless, that the Sheriff shall not proceed to execute such order unless an affidavit be deposited with him, stating that no such payment has been made pursuant to the exigency of such order; which affidavit may be sworn before the Clerk of the Peace, or any Justice of the Peace, for said county.

And said Clerk of the Peace, or such Justice (as the case may be), is hereby authorised to administer such oath. But if the Chairman shall allow the cause shown by such alleged debtor or debtors, then it shall be lawful for him to make a decree or order against such person making such application in relation to such alleged debt, for payment to such debtor of the costs incurred by reason of such application, and of showing cause in relation thereto; which costs shall be taxed by the Chairman.

Money to be paid out of bank by order 14 & 15 Vic., ch. 57, sec. 54.

4. That all such money so lodged in or paid into Bank to the credit of any cause as hereinbefore provided shall be applied and disposed of according to the order and directions of the Chairman, and all such monies shall vest in the Clerk of the Peace for the time being, and shall be made upon an order in writing under the hand of the Clerk of the Peace, countersigned by the Chairman, which order shall be a good and sufficient warrant to all intents and purposes, and that said Chairman may (if necessary) make such decree on such Civil Bill against the defendant or defendants with costs, or may dismiss the same with costs, as to him may seem just.

Demand not to exceed existing jurisdiction of £40.

14 & 15 Vic., ch. 57, sec. 35.

Or where assets of partnership exceed £200.

Sec. 49.

5. Provided that nothing hereinbefore contained shall authorize the Chairman to entertain such Civil Bill as aforesaid if the demand shall exceed the sum for which the Chairman already has jurisdiction to hear and determine by Civil Bill a demand for any ascertained and unpaid balance of a partnership account, or shall authorize the Chairman to entertain any Civil Bill under this Act where the available assets of such partnership shall exceed £200.

This Act to be incorporated with Civil Bill Act, 14 & 15 Vic., ch. 57.

6. That this Act shall be taken and deemed as incorporated with the said hereinbefore in part recited Act, and that all the provisions therein contained shall be applied to this Act, as if its provisions were herein repeated, save so far as same may be inconsistent with the provisions herein contained.

The Belfast Recorder's Court was opened on Wednesday, before J. Hastings Otway, Esq., Q.C., Recorder, who delivered a lengthened address to the grand jury.

ENGLAND.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, Feb. 26th.

ATTORNEYS, ETC., CERTIFICATES DUTY.

Mr. DENMAN, in moving for leave to introduce a Bill upon this subject, said that although the House had on several occasions affirmed the principle of the abolition of the duty, the Bill proposed only to reduce the annual payment to the nominal sum of 5s. He proposed the reduction instead of the abolition because the latter course would necessitate the alteration of a good many Acts of Parliament, and the repeal of others, things that could only be effected at great inconvenience.

Mr. BASS did not intend to oppose the second reading of the Bill, but thought that all trade licences ought to be abolished. The licence duty on the common brewers (a laugh) was incomparably more serious than that on attorneys or solicitors' certificates, and weighed the heavier, inasmuch as it was levied not upon profits, but upon the quantity produced. As a brewer, he paid more than 1,100 or 1,200 attorneys or solicitors in the shape of duty, and believed, therefore, that he had a much stronger cause of complaint, and had infinitely greater right to demand relief.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.—I congratulate the hon. member for Derby upon the large sum he pays for licences to carry on his trade. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) I can only say, that under the same conditions we all should be perfectly willing to pay an equal tribute to the national Treasury. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) I believe the system of licences to be a most enlightened scheme for national taxation, and therefore I am not at all inclined to favour the proposition of the hon. and learned member who asked for leave to introduce a Bill to reduce the annual duty upon the certificates of attorneys and solicitors. I know that the Chancellor of the Exchequer stands in a very difficult position when he is attacked at the same time by attorneys and by brewers. (A laugh.) In the course of the Crimean war, Henry Drummond—alas, poor Yorick!—speaking in this House of the different Powers then in conflict throughout the world, said, "After all, what is their power to the power of attorney?" I feel the force of that remark at the present moment. ("Hear," and a laugh.) Feeling myself, however, bound to some extent by the decision of a majority—a very small majority of this House which sanctioned the principle of the Bill, I shall not oppose its introduction by the hon. and learned member. While expressing my disapproval of this attack by the hon. and learned member upon the Consolidated Fund, I must say that he has scarcely chosen the fitting moment for the introduction of his Bill. The proper time to bring forward subjects of this nature is after the Chancellor of the Exchequer has made his annual statement to the House, when, if there be any surplus—an event always problematical until that statement has been made—those who believe that they have any claim may come forward and ask for it. It is rather too much to suppose that, as a matter of course, these assaults upon the national resources are to be invariably successful. It would be an act of discourtesy in me were I to oppose the introduction of the Bill under the circumstances to which I have referred, but I do not wish that the hon. and learned member should suppose that by assenting to the introduction of the Bill I in any way sanction its principle. The hon. and learned member represents a class of gentlemen to whose intelligence and patriotism he can always appeal when circumstances render such an appeal necessary; and after he has heard the financial statement of the year, he will be in a better position than he is at present to advise them as to the propriety of proceeding with the Bill.

Leave having been given to introduce the Bill, it was brought in and read a first time.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

For Tuesday, March 12.

SIR COLMAN O'LOGHLEN.—Arrest for Debt (Ireland).—Bill to abolish arrest for debt on Mesne and final Process, except in certain cases, and to amend the law of debtor and creditor in Ireland.

A BILL introduced by Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Q.C., and Mr. Baines, on the 8th instant, proposes to alter and amend the law of libel, in order to secure more effectually the liberty of the press. So long as it is considered important to the public that the proceedings of courts of Justice and of other public conclaves should be published in the newspapers, so long will the necessity exist that the law of libel should be well ascertained. That it is not so appears plainly from the result of the numerous actions for libel which are from time to time brought before the Courts. The case of Pinero v. Goodlake, which we noticed last week,* arose out of a practice which prevails universally with editors of shortening copy supplied to them by their reporters, so that at any time the proprietor of a newspaper may be rendered liable to a prosecution by reason of the omission of some part of the evidence from the report of a case. To remedy this monstrous abuse the first clause of this bill provides that proof that an alleged libel was a true report of a speech spoken at a public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, open to reporters of the press, and published bona fide without actual malice in the ordinary course of business, shall be a defence unless the defendant has declined to publish an explanation or contradiction furnished to him for the purpose. If a court of law comes within the designation of "a public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, open to reporters of the press," we have here a protection for those who cater for the public information by reporting law proceedings, but it is doubtful whether this clause points to the publication of such reports, for it only refers to "a speech or part of a speech," and not to the evidence of witnesses which would have assuredly come under a different description.

Every report of proceedings had in a court of law ought to be privileged, not only so far as it is absolutely true but so far as it is a bona fide report of what actually occurred, although very much curtailed so as to slightly vary its general tenor, provided it be done without malice. That is to say, an editor may be required to state the truth generally without being bound to give a full report of all that occurred on the occasion treated of. However, the clause is good pro tanto and is very usefully followed up by the second clause, which provides that any person who shall, at such a meeting, speak of any other person, such defamatory matter as would, if written, amount to a libel, shall, if his words be reported in a newspaper, be liable to be proceeded against, as if he had written and published the same. Undoubtedly a great protection is here afforded to reporters and proprietors of newspapers who, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, have no feeling in the matter, but are only actuated in their mode of reporting such meetings by a desire to do their duty to their constituents and themselves.

The fourth clause provides that the defendant, in an action for libel, may pay money into court by way of amends for the injury sustained by the plaintiff, and in case the plaintiff declines to accept the amount in satisfaction, it is provided by the fifth clause that the judge may require him to give security for costs.

No private prosecutor is to be permitted, without the sanction of the Attorney-general, to prefer an indictment for the publication of a libel other than one published with the intent to extort money, &c. Occasionally it seems as if indictments for libel were preferred maliciously in order to taint the defendant with the greatest possible public disgrace. Such a proceeding ought not lightly to be passed over, and this clause, if passed into law, will assist in stopping all ill-advised prosecutions for libel.

In altering the law of libel, the difficulty lies chiefly in steering between too much leniency to bona fide reports, and too great severity in construing the definition of libel as applied to such reports. If it be permitted to publish any report of a case, however damaging such a report may be to the character of any individual, it would obviously be open to any newspaper to print all the parts that tell only one way without giving those which contradict the unfavourable statements. Probably malice would be inferred from such a course of action, but we have put the worst possible case. There are many and various tints in the colour which may be infused into the report of a case, and it is essential that the press should be protected from the results of accidental or even intentional, omissions if no malice be shown. So far, then, as it extends, this bill tends to the supply of a remedy, but we cannot consider it absolutely effectual to attain the desired end.

* 11 Sol. Jour. 325.

Digitized by Google

THE LAW PEERAGE MONOPOLY.

Before the Union the Lord Chancellor of Ireland was invariably (or with so few exceptions as but to prove the rule) raised to the peerage; since the Union, Lord Plunket alone among Irish barristers has attained that honour, and it was conferred upon him rather for political purposes than as a recognition of his great professional distinction. Before the Union, the chiefs of the three common law courts were, upon their retirement, ordinarily, if not invariably, raised to the peerage; since that time the practice has languished, until now it may be said to be extinct. Similarly with regard to Scotland: the roll of the peers down to Anne shows a frequent supply of Lord—Justice—Generals and Chief Barons, who have adorned at once the profession and their order; since the Act of 1707 removed the Legislature to London, we do not recollect a single instance of such promotion. And yet the House of Lords is the Ultimate court of appeal for both Scotland and Ireland; and that, in the case of Ireland at least, expressly on the ground that it represents the Upper House of the old Irish Parliament, the court of last resort before the Union. Surely this is an anomaly which may well be removed, with advantage at once to the theory of the system, the efficiency of the House, the practical working of the court, and the dignity of the profession in the sister countries. Why should the Bar of England enjoy a monopoly of the right to afford an entrance to the Upper House of the United Parliament? Why should English lawyers sit, unaided, to review the decisions of Scotch and Irish courts, and settle, at a manifest disadvantage, disputed questions of Scotch and Irish law? A proper admixture of Scotch and Irish Judges in the composition of this high court would not only vastly increase and improve its working power, but would afford greater facilities than can be supplied by any other measure for that assimilation and "unification" of the law of the United Kingdom which is so devoutly to be wished.—Solicitors' Journal.

THE NEW LAW LORDS.—The peerages of Lord Justice Cairns and the Lord Justice-General of Scotland have been gazetted. Their lordships will bear the titles respectively of Baron Cairns, of Garmoyle, in the county of Antrim; and Baron Colonsay, of Colonsay and Oronsay, in the county of Argyle.

NEW JUDGES.—The Bill laid before the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor provides that, on the next vacancy in the office of Judge of the Admiralty Court, the present Judge of the Probate Court shall become the first Chief Justice of the Admiralty, Divorce, and Probate Courts, and two puisne judges of these courts are also to be appointed. The Chief Justice is to have rank next after the Lords Justices of Appeal; the two puisne judges with the other puisne judges. The salaries are to be £6,000 a-year for a Chief Justice, and £5,000 for a puisne judge; the retiring pensions £3,750 and £3,500. An appeal is to lie to the Privy Council in an Admiralty cause, and to the House of Lords in a divorce or probate cause. Any of these judges may, at the request of the Lord Chancellor, sit in any of the superior courts of law or equity with any judge or judges thereof. The Archbishop of Canterbury may appoint one or more of these judges to execute the office of Dean of the Arches, for which there is to be no remuneration other than the fees, if any.

APPOINTMENT.

The Right Hon. the Attorney-General has appointed William B. Kaye, Esq., LL.D., to be one of the supernumerary Crown Prosecutors for the county of Down.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

Consequent on the appointment of Dr. Lloyd to the Provostship, the following changes will take place:—The Rev. J. L. Moore, D.D., will succeed to the Vice-Provostship; and the Rev. John Malet, D.D., to the Senior-Fellowship vacated by Dr. Lloyd.

Examination for Degrees and License in Medicine in HILARY TERM, 1867.

LAW SCHOOL—CIVIL LAW CLASS.

The subjects of examination for Trinity Term, 1867, is as follows:—Institutes of Justinian, first two books. Merival's Romans under the Empire, vol. 3, chap. xxxi. Milman's Latin Christianity, book 3, chap. v. Heron's History of Jurisprudence, books 1, 2, 5. Creasy's Rise and Progress of the English Constitution. Story's Conflict of Laws, second chapter.

Candidates for the degree of LL.B., in addition to the books above mentioned, to be examined in "Erotius de Jure Belli et Pacis," Prolegomena, and First Book.

TRINITY COLLEGE THEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—There will be a general meeting of this society on Monday next, the 4th inst., when an essay will be read "On Objections to the Book of Common Prayer," by A. M. Dobbs, A.B. Speakers—W. F. Nash, A.B., and E. Patman, A.B. Chair to be taken at seven o'clock (College time).

COLLEGE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—The subject for debate on next Wednesday evening, the 6th instant, will be "That Agitation has done more detriment than service to the best interests of Ireland." Speakers—affirmative: Mr. A. E. Bagot, A.M.; Mr. Benjamin Eyre, A.B., Sch. Negative: Mr. J. B. Falconer, A.B.; Mr. H. O'Hea, treasurer. Mr. J. Clarke Lane, A.B., Sch., will reply. Chair to be taken at eight o'clock (College time).

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR IRELAND.—The London correspondent of the Cork Examiner, in noting the debate on Lord Naas's Land Bill, says:—"The other feature of the debate was the debut of Mr. Chatterton, the Solicitor-General. You will be glad to hear that it was most successful; for, whatever his politics, it is always pleasant to be told of the success of a fellow-townsman, and most of all, of success achieved in such an assembly as the House of Commons. The occasion, it is true, required of him to say but little; but that little was said in a way to cause all who heard him—your correspondent among the number—to predict for him still greater success in his career of an Irish law officer. What he may prove on a general debate remains to be seen. Few lawyers, English or Irish, who have had seats in the House in modern times have distinguished themselves as such; but this I think may be predicted of Mr. Chatterton—in all matters relating to his office, he will sustain his reputation as a sound lawyer and an educated and enlightened man."

THE MAGISTRACY.

The Lord Lieutenant has approved of the appointment of Major Andrew Nugent, to be a Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Down, in the room of Arthur Hill Montgomery, Esq., deceased.

COUNTY SLIGO.—Robert A. Duke, Esq., Newpark, Ballymote, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Sligo, on the recommendation of Colonel Knox Gore, lieutenant of the county.

COUNTY CORK.—Captain Henry Eustace Leader, of Mount Leader, Millstreet, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Cork.

COUNTY WEXFORD.—Captain John D'Olier George, of Cahore, Gorey, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Wexford.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

COSTELLOE v. MARTIN.

Jan. 10, Feb. 4.—Deposit Receipt—Married Woman—Trust—Interpleader.

The petition was filed by the public officer of the National Bank, under the following circumstances:—

Various sums had been lodged on deposit receipts from 1863 to the 23rd May, 1866, in the Dublin and Kingstown branches of the National Bank, by Eliza Margaret Fitzpatrick, the wife of James Fitzpatrick. She represented herself at the time of the lodgments to be a widow. On the 23rd of May, 1866, she and James Martin, who was her son-in-law, and was aware that she was a married woman, went to the Kingstown branch of the bank, to which bank all the sums previously deposited, amounting to £1,709, had been transferred, and took out a new deposit receipt for the entire in the name of James Martin alone, Eliza M. Fitzpatrick still representing herself to be a widow. At that time no notice to the bank that she was a married woman had reached the Kingstown branch of the bank, though a notice by James Fitzpatrick to that effect had, by mistake, been sent to the Castlepollard branch. Claims to the money were afterwards made on behalf of James Fitzpatrick, the husband of Eliza M. Fitzpatrick, and by a Mr. Webb, whose housekeeper she was, and who stated that the money was his, and had been lodged in the bank in trust for him. Actions at law were brought against the bank by Martin and Fitzpatrick. The petition prayed that the £1,700 for which the deposit receipt was given to Martin might be declared to be a trust fund, that the trusts of it might be ascertained, and that the actions might be stayed.

A conditional order for an injunction to restrain the actions, on lodgment of the £1,700 in court, having been obtained by the petitioner, cause was now shown and the case fully argued by

O'Hagan, Q.C., and Bewly for James Martin; and Palles, Q.C., and S. Walker for the petitioner.

Carton appeared for James Fitzpatrick.

The main argument relied on for the respondent, Martin, was that the petition was in substance an interpleader suit which would not lie by reason of the deposit receipt given to Martin, and the contract thereby entered into by the bank with him, according to Crawshay v. Thornton (2 M. R. Cr. 1).

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS held that there having been misrepresentation of a material fact, viz., that Eliza M. Fitzpatrick was a widow when the deposit receipt was given to Martin on the 23rd of May, 1866, the bank were entitled to relief in equity, and made absolute the conditional order; the costs of the motion to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Mahony and Howe.

Solicitor for the respondent Martin, George D. Fottrell.

Solicitor of the respondent, James Fitzpatrick, William Mooney.

IN THE MATTER OF SHEILS' TRUSTS AND THE TRUSTEE RELIEF ACT.

Feb. 18.—Trustee Relief Act—Appointment—Surviving Children.

A fund was lodged under the Trustee Relief Act by the trustee of a settlement of the 18th of June, 1827, whereby it was limited in trust for the separate use of Frances O'Donnell, for life, and after her decease in trust for her children, as she should by deed or will appoint, the shares to be vested on their attaining twenty-one; and in default of appointment for her issue, share and share alike. There were now five children of Frances O'Donnell; and by a deed of the 28th of November, 1866, she appointed the fund in different shares among them. They now presented a petition to be paid according to this appointment. It appeared that there had been other children who had died, but it did not appear whether they had attained twenty-one before their deaths.

His Honour at first felt some difficulty in making the order, but on being referred to Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Ves. B. 79, and Boyle v. the Bishop of Peterborough, 1 Ves. Jun. 299, made the order, the solicitor stating that there were only five children living.

S. Y. Johnstone for the petitioner. Solicitor, Robert Keys.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by WILLIAM WOODLOCK, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

EAGAR v. MAUNSELL.

Jan. 26.—Ejectment—Temporary Bars.

Motion for an order, under section 89 of the Common Law Proceedure Act of 1856, to compel the defendant in an action of ejectment on the title to waive temporary bars, and that the real title in the action should be tried. The action was brought to recover certain lands in the county of Kerry. The plaintiff stated that there had been incumbrances on the lands which were paid off, but that he was not aware if there had been any reconveyances. He also stated that there were settlements affecting the lands, but that he did not know which of the trustees in those settlements were living, or who were the heirs of those, if any, who were dead. The motion was merely "to waive temporary bars," without mentioning any particular bar. It had, originally, been moved in Chamber before Fitzgerald, B., who had refused it, and it was now renewed before the Full Court. The defendant resisted the motion. First, upon the ground that it had been adjudicated upon by Fitzgerald, B.; and, secondly, upon the ground that it was too vague—that some particular bar should have been stated which was to be removed—that the Court could make the order only where the Court of Chancery would make a decree—and that in Chancery proceedings it was necessary to allege some bar which it would be inequitable for the defendant to set up as a defence to the action.

Murphy, Q.C., and Hickson for the plaintiff.

Jellett, Q.C., and M B. Smith for the defendant.

The Court granted the motion, holding that it was not necessary that the notice should specify any particular bar, and that no harm could be done to the defendant by making the order, which would only have the effect of securing the trial of the real question and preventing inequitable and merely technical defences from being set up. Costs of both parties to be costs in the cause.

Jan. 24, 25, 30.—New Trial—Verdict against Weight of Evidence.

Motion to show cause against conditional order for a new trial, solely on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence. The action was brought upon a bill of exchange by indorsee against drawer; defence, a traverse of the drawing. The case was first tried before Christian, J., and the evidence was very conflicting, defendant swearing positively that he had never put his name upon the bill, and plaintiff swearing as positively that he had. The question reduced itself to a question of identity of the defendant with the drawer of the bill, defendant's case being that he had been personated by another party. The jury found for the plaintiff. There was a motion for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence; and Christian, J., reported that he was dissatisfied with the verdict. The new trial was granted, and the case was again tried before Fitzgerald, J., when a verdict was found for the defendant. Thereupon another conditional order was obtained, against which cause was now shown.

FITZGERALD, J., reported his dissatisfaction with the present verdict.

Counsel for plaintiff, Clarke, Q.C., and S. Walker.

Counsel for defendant, Butt, Q.C., and Heron, Q.C.

O'BRIEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; and GEORGE, J., held that the verdict should be set aside, the verdict, in their opinion, being, on the evidence, very unsatisfactory; and Fitzgerald, J., stating that he was, as a rule, opposed to setting aside verdicts on this ground, unless the evidence preponderated very much—as he considered it did in this case—against the verdict.

WHITESIDE, C. J., dissented, holding that it was the province of the jury to decide upon the facts, and that they had done so; and also holding that the fact of their having been already two trials was a reason against allowing a third.

New trial granted on terms of plaintiff paying to defendant the costs of the last trial and of this motion.

Feb 26, 1867.—Rule to Proceed Irregularly Obtained.

Defence filed 14th December, 1865. On 4th June, 1866, order of reference, under the Common Law Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1856, Sec. 6. Nothing was done under that order; and on the 19th February, 1867, defendant obtained a rule on plaintiff to proceed to trial. This rule was obtained on an affidavit in the ordinary form, and omitted all mention of the order of reference.

Molloy now applied on behalf of the plaintiff to have the order of February, 1867, set aside.

Beytagh, contra—The plaintiff took no step under the order of reference; he never brought it into the office, and we had no other course to have the action proceeded with but to obtain this order.

DEASY, B.—The order of reference ought to have been mentioned in the affidavit. Set the order aside; with costs.

R. DILLON'S ESTATE.

Jan. 30—Feb. 16.—Order of Priority of Costs of Sale where the Owner is the Petitioner.

In this case the petition for sale had been filed by the owner. The costs of sale having been placed on the schedule as the first charge on the estate after the duty, Wardham, an incumbrancer, objected to this on the ground that they should be paid only in the same order of priority with any surplus coming to the petitioner.

Flanagan, Q.C., for the owner.

Exham, Q.C., for the objection.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 16.—DOBBS, J., said that he had had to consider this question before, and he allowed the costs of sale to be the first charge—on this principle, that where an owner acted bona fide, and endeavoured to have the estate sold to the best advantage, he considered he should place him at the top of the schedule. His Lordship referred to sec. 64 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 72, which directed the costs of sale to be paid according to the provisions of sec. 12 of 16 and 17 Vic., c. 64, and stated that by the latter statute the costs were directed to be paid in the same order of priority with the demand of the incumbrancer—that the words of that 12th section were nearly identical with those of sec. 78 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 72, which latter section clearly applied to a petition by an incumbrancer; but that he did not think it applied to a petition by an owner, the words in it being nearly identical with those of sec. 12 of 16 and 17 Vic., c. 64, which must have made a change in the law, and which limited that change to the case of an incumbrancer.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before MILLER, J.

In re JOHN ORR.

February, 1867.—Fraudulent Preference—Necessity for an Assimilation between the English and Irish Bankruptcy Law with regard to Executions founded upon Preferential Payments.

In this case the bankrupt, on the very eve of bankruptcy, gave a promissory note to his uncle payable on demand, upon which the uncle sued, obtained judgment, and issued execution, under which the bankrupt's property was seized and sold. He now came up for final examination. Kernan, Q.C., for the assignees, opposed on the ground of this undue preference, and also on the ground of reckless trading. Dr. Seeds for the bankrupt.

JUDGE MILLER said that in the present case he found that the bankrupt had given a promissory note, payable on demand, to his uncle, which was followed forthwith by a judgment and execution, under which the bankrupt's property was swept away; that such a fact in itself was sufficient to impress on the Government the necessity of introducing a similar provision into the bankruptcy law in Ireland to that which existed in the English Bankruptcy Act of 1861. The 73rd section of the 24 and 25 Victoria, provided that an execution obtained under such circumstances as appeared in the present case, should be deemed an act of bankruptcy. If such a provision existed in the Irish Bankruptcy Act, he believed there would be almost an end of preferential payments followed by executions. The section to which he referred further declared, that in case of bankruptcy supervening, the costs and expenses of such execution should come out of the proceeds of the sale, and the balance paid over to the assignees, which would be no more than common justice. The effect of the English statute was to defeat preferential intentions, and it prevented particular creditors sweeping away the whole proceeds of a bankruptcy estate. If the law of the two countries were assimilated in that respect, all imputations of fraudulent preference would be in a great measure at an end; and he hoped measures would be taken to have the law in Ireland changed. As the the bankrupt had given a full disclosure of his trade dealings and estate, he thought he was bound to pass his examination. Still expressing a hope that some compensation would be made to the creditors by distributing amongst them the proceeds of the execution.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Before MILLER, J.

Re JOHN HOARE.

Feb. 1867.—Proceeding with a Frivolous Action after a full Apology given—Costs of Non-suit—Promotion of Bubble Companies.

Where an Insolvent brings an Action for alleged Slander and lays the Venue in a Distant County after an ample Apology is given, and then when the Venue is changed to Dublin does not proceed with the Action, the Costs of a Non-suit in such a case will be deemed to be a Debt Fraudulently Contrncted. A Debt incurred in the Promotion of a Bubble Company where the Promoter has no means whatever of his own to pay it, will be held to be a Debt Fraudulently Contracted. Obtaining Forbearance from a Creditor on the allegation that a large Debt was due to the Insolvent which he does not return in his Schedule will be grounds for a Remand for Twelve Months.

The insolvent was opposed by O'Driscoll, on the part of a Mrs. Connell, on the ground of having obtained forbearance, and deluded the creditor by representing that there was a large debt due to him which did not exist, or which he did not return in his schedule. He was opposed by Rosenthal, solicitor for Mr. Rothschild, for the costs of non-suit, on the ground of having brought an action merely for being called a swindler, and persisting in going on after an ample apology was made. He was opposed, by Browne and Nolan, on the ground of having contracted a debt with them for printing work done for a bubble company of which he, with others, was a promoter.

Levy supported the insolvent. If failing to float company was ground of remand some very respectable men would be in prison that moment. In the action against Rothschild he acted under the advice of his attorney. Obtaining forbearance was never made a ground of remand unless property was made away with, or something done to put the creditor in a worse position.

JUDGE MILLER said the case was a very lamentable one, and the conduct of the insolvent such as should be severely punished. It was contended on his part that the question of obtaining forbearance did not apply, as there was no making away with property in the meantime. There was a debt alleged to be due by Harvey Wadge, and time was asked until it could be got in. The creditor might in the meantime have obtained judgment and issued execution, and might have got something. That was obtaining forbearance of the debt in the legal sense of the word; and although the counsel for the opposing creditor did not go the length of insisting that the debt was originally contracted by false pretences, as the creditor was dead and could not prove it, he (Judge Miller) thought that the evidence of Mrs. Connell, who was present when the money was borrowed, proved it, and that he might deal with the case on both grounds. With regard to the debt to Rothschild, he thought it was a debt fraudulently and wantonly contracted, inasmuch as Rothschild offered to make a full and ample apology, but nothing would do the insolvent but an action. As to Browne and Nolan's debt it was almost the worst case. It could not be tolerated that parties without any money getting up bubble companies, should take the property of respectable tradesmen, and then dischage their liabilities by passing through that court. He would be unworthy of a seat on the bench if he allowed such conduct to go unpunished. He would remand the insolvent for twelve months from the date of the vesting order at the suit of the three opposing creditors, so that his career would be arrested, and he might learn prudence for the future.

CIRCUIT CASES.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

Reported by W. Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Clare Assizes—Spring, 1867.

In re Spaight's Presentment.

In this case Mr. Spaight had made a new road in substitution for part of the old road from Limerick to O'Brien's Bridge. A presentment for stopping up the old road was passed by the Presentment Sessions; and after it had also been passed by the Grand Jury, Mr. Spaight built up the ends of the part in question of the old road; but on being told by the county surveyor that he had no right to do so until the presentment had been fiated at the assizes, he took down the walls again. The presentment was traversed by a Mr. Skehan, and the traverse now came to be tried before Mr. Justice O'Brien. From Skehan's evidence it appeared that the old road was shorter and more convenient for him to O'Brien's Bridge; but, on all the evidence, the new road was more convenient for the rest of the public. It was urged in support of the traverse that if the old road was more convenient for even one person who had been in the habit of using it, that it was not useless, within the 60th sec. of the 6 & 7 Wm. IV., c. 116; and that on the evidence the presentment should be rejected.

O'Brien, J. refused to hold in accordance with this view, and considered it a question to be determined on the circumstances of each case, what amount of convenience afforded by the old road, and to what number of persons would prevent its being useless within the meaning of the section.

Presentment passed.

Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, appellant; Dillon, respondent.

The respondent, Dillon, was travelling from Manchester to Ennis, but had a ticket only as far as Limerick. He left Dublin by the mail, arriving at the Limerick Junction at 12·12 at night. He slept at the junction, having been informed by a porter, that by the train to Limerick which started from Waterford at 6 o'clock, and passed the junction at 8·47 a.m., he would reach Limerick in time to catch the train which starts from Limerick for Ennis at 10 a.m. According to the plaintiff's evidence the train next morning was late at the junction, and lost more time between the junction and Limerick, so that it did not get in until 10·25, though due at 9·50. On defendant's evidence it appeared that the morning was foggy, and the rails greasy, so that it became necessary to sand them. There was some necessary delay at intermediate stations, it being market day, and from the number of passengers it being necessary to hook on additional carriages, but that the train was only 20 minutes late. There was also a controversy as to whether the Ennis train had or had not started before the arrival of the train from Waterford. On the part of the plaintiff the time table of the company was put in, and the defendant also relied on the usual condition at foot of the time table, that the company would not be responsible for the arrival or departure of the trains at the times specified, &c. The plaintiff, who had special business in Ennis that day, and could not get on by rail until 2 p.m., was obliged to take a car, which cost 10s. more than the railway fare, and he obtained a decree for 10s. below.

Fitzgerald, J., did not attach any weight to the conversation with the porter at the junction, nor did he, on the other hand, consider the plaintiff bound by the condition in the time table, which had not been expressly brought under his notice; but held that the question was, had there been negligence and unreasonable delay in the conducting of the train—which was quite independent of whether the Ennis train had started before the arrival of the train from the junction. The plaintiff had no through ticket, and there was no contract whatever to bring him in any particular time—only a contract to bring him in in a reasonable time. The loss of time might be prima facie evidence of negligence, but on the whole case it did not appear there was unreasonable delay or negligence.

Decree reversed.

NAAS PETTY SESSIONS—Feb. 18, 1867.

Reported by Edmund Bewley, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Thomas Brazil, complainant; Great Southern and Western Railway Company, defendants.

In this case Mr. Brazil, County Surveyor for the County Kildare, complained that the roadway over the bridge carrying the public road over the defendant's railway at Yeomanstown, in the County Kildare, and the immediate approaches to the said bridge, were out of repair, and in a condition dangerous to the public, and that the bridge itself was not of the inclination which according to the Act of Parliament it ought to be.

Mr. Ryan instructed by Mr. William Lewis, appeared for the complainant.

Mr. Montgomery, instructed by Messrs. Barrington and Jeffers, appeared for the railway company.

Mr. Ryan said that by the 46th Section of the 8 and 9 Vic., c. 20 (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act), it was enacted that where a railway crosses a public carriage-road, the road must be carried over the railway, or the railway over the road, by a bridge, which bridge, with its immediate approaches, should be executed, "and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company" In the present case the road was carried over the railway, and by the 50th section of the same act it was enacted, among other matters, that the ascent of such bridge should not be more than one foot in twenty. It would be proved that the inclination of the bridge in question was greater than one foot in twenty, and that the bridge and its approaches were out of repair. The company were clearly liable to make good these deficiencies, and under the 65th section of the same act the justices had power to order them to do so.

It was then proved by the evidence of Mr. Brazil that the roadway over Yeomanstown bridge, and its immediate approaches (altogether 150 yards from the centre of the bridge on each side), were very much out of repair—that the iron girders on top of the bridge were exposed and dangerous, and the inclination of the bridge in many places greater than one foot in twenty; that the bridge had probably been originally built (sometime in 1845 or 1846) of the proper inclination, and that the present error in that respect was caused by the want of repair, and that if the repairs were properly executed all the present causes of complaint would be remedied.

Mr. Montgomery submitted that the part of the complaint which related to the inclination of the ascent of the bridge was not within the jurisdiction of magistrates at petty sessions; such a complaint should be the subject of a mandamus. The magistrates could only make an order for repairs. But the Great Southern and Western Railway Company were not liable to repair the bridge in question. The application of the Railways' Clauses Act (passed 8th May, 1845), was, by its first section, expressly limited to railways "which shall, by any act hereafter to be passed, be authorized to be constructed." The portion of the company's railway on which Yeomanstown bridge is situate, viz., the line from Dublin to Cashel, was authorized by, and constructed under, the 7 and 8 Vic., c. 100 (Public Local), passed 6th August, 1844, and by the 261st section of that act the railway company were obliged, when their railway crossed a public carriage-road, to construct such a bridge as had been described, but they were not by that or any other section obliged afterwards to keep the roadway over the bridge, &c., in repair; and, in point of fact, although the bridge in question had been built more than twenty years ago, the company had never been called upon to repair this bridge or any bridge on the line from Dublin to Cashel, although they were obliged to repair bridges on the line from Cashel to Cork, because the act authorizing the latter line passed after the Railways' Clauses Consolidation Act.

Mr. Ryan said that the line from Dublin to Cashel was brought within the operation of the Railways' Clauses Act by the 355th section of the defendants' own act (7 and 8 Vic., c. 100), which enacted that nothing in that act should exempt the railway from the provisions of "any general act relating to railways which may pass during the present or any future Session of Parliament."

Mr. Montgomery contended that the Railways' Clauses Consolidation Act was not "a general act relating to railways" within the meaning of the 355th section of the company's act.

The Magistrates made an order that the Great Southern and Western Railway Company should repair the roadway over the Yeomanstown bridge and its immediate approaches within one month.

Mr. Montgomery applied to have a case stated for the opinion of one of the superior courts of law, under the provisions of the 20 and 21 Vic., c. 43.

It was arranged that a case should be agreed upon by counsel on each side, and transmitted to the magistrates for their approval and signatures.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT.

(Second Letter.)

To the Editor of "The Solicitors' Journal."

Sir,—In my last I traced briefly the history of Registration of Title up to the time when, under the auspices of some of the most eminent of living lawyers, permissive Acts came into operation in England and in Ireland. In England the system has been in operation for four years, and about 500 applications to register titles under it have been received. In Ireland it has been in operation for a much shorter period; but here, as in England, several of the many estates recorded are those of members of the legal profession—a weighty fact which the most flippant and reckless assailant of the system cannot displace.

Proceeding to the actual working of the system in this country, we find that a Parliamentary Title, granted by the Landed Estates Court, must form the groundwork of every recorded title. Every conveyance or declaration now issued by the Court passes into the Record of Title Office, unless the new owner, by a written requisition, lodged during the period of seven days, allowed him for exercising his option, declines to come under the Act. That form of requisition is not so worded as to give much information to a non-professional reader of it; and there have been instances of it having been signed by persons who were desirous of coming under the Act, but appended their signatures to a printed document emanating from the Court without observing that its effect was to exclude them from the Act. No blame can, of course, be given to professional men who know little about a new system, and are indisposed to try experiments. Still I submit that where the Solicitor sends the form of requisition to be signed, the client ought to be supplied with well-defined, tangible objections against a measure which became law with the concurrence and by the aid of eminent men of all parties, and was opposed in its progress through Parliament by only one voice.

Usually a solicitor, while preparing a conveyance, ascertains at an early stage whether his client wishes to "record" it; and by this he is guided as to the preparation of one or of two originals on parchment for the signature of the judge. In practice, when the deed is not to be recorded, one original and a printed memorial are bespoken; and where the deed is to be recorded, two originals are bespoken and no printed memorial. The duplicate is stamped as such, and it involves no extra expense beyond that stamp. In point of fact, in most cases it is much cheaper to have the deed recorded, for the following reason:—The memorial for registry, under the 16th section of the Record of Title Act, is invariably a very short one, containing no schedule of tenancies, and the deeds registry fund stamp on it rarely exceeds eleven shillings. The full printed memorial of a deed which is not recorded is, on the other hand, an exact transcript of the deed, whatever be the length of the latter; and the deeds registry fee frequently amounts to two or three pounds or more; and in a well-known case actually amounted to over forty pounds, owing to the number of leases and tenancies.

Now, as duplicates of the deeds are bespoken when the deed is intended to be recorded, and are not bespoken when the deed is not to be recorded, it follows that the duplicates furnish distinct and incontrovertible evidence of a deliberate intention to take advantage of the Act. Any person who is willing to receive demonstration on this point has only to inquire "what proportion of the recorded estates were conveyed to the new owners by deeds in duplicate," and he will, as I am informed, learn beyond question that about one hundred of such cases have occurred, representing property of the value of £300,000. It is possible that in a very few other cases, perhaps in ten or a dozen, the deeds have passed into the Record of Title Office, without the wish, or even against the wish, of the proprietors; but they seem to have become reconciled to the system, for no application has been made under the 32nd section of the Act, to remove a property from the Record of Title, although the process is simple, and the expense of so doing could hardly exceed fifty shillings.

While the Act was in progress objections against it, of various kinds, were suggested by professional men; but, discarding such as were merely grounded on the supposed danger of a new system, and the imaginary perfectness of the deeds registry, the objections which usually had weight and were worthy of serious consideration resolved themselves into this—that a transfer or charge, if fraudulently placed on the record, might be ruinous to the recorded owner of the property. Hence, Parliament was careful to introduce numerous and cumulative safeguards against fraud or forgery; and the practice of the new office embraces other safeguards of an important character. The recorded owner must have notice of every attempted dealing with his property, and his duplicate or certificate of title must also be produced on every such dealing. As transfers, &c., are accepted in writing, the officer has, moreover, the means of comparing the handwriting on such occasions; and, again, every transfer in the office must be in the presence of a solicitor, and every deed executed elsewhere must be proved to have been duly executed, by the affidavit of a solicitor. Would it not require more than the ingenuity of a Sadleir and a Stephens combined to evade all these safeguards, and by a network of personation, robbery, and forgery to falsify the record of title? And, be it remembered, that no person but an innocent mortagee or purchaser for value could take advantage of the fraud, even were it accomplished. Another preventive against fraud, although one of minor value, was the withdrawal of the Record of Title, which contains all the particulars of the property, charges, ownership, &c., from public inspection. By the Act, it can only be seen by some person directly interested, or by his solicitor. The Law Society objected, that the Record of Title ought to be regarded as a public document; but the legislature affirmed the opposite view taken by the framers of the measure, and by keeping the Record closed against strangers diminished the temptation to fraud and increased the probability of detection in the event of a forged deed being presented. This suggests a question concerning the registry of deeds, the utility of which is much impaired through the natural unwillingness of owners of property that their family arrangements should be open to general inspection. What has been the result of a registry of deeds which is open to inspection by any person who is willing to pay a small fee? Simply this—that it has been usual in memorials to suppress the trusts of settlements and other deeds, thus neutralizing, to a great degree, the object and purpose of the registry, and in several recent instances, where the deeds themselves have been lost, rendering titles, at least during many years, hopelessly bad.

To resume our review of the mechanism of the Record of Title. The conveyance or declaration of title gives a perfectly new root of title, and declares in almost every case an absolute ownership. When the recorded owner desires to sell or mortgage, his title appears at once on production of his duplicate or certificate of title, which can at any time be brought down and re-dated. Or the intending purchaser or mortgagee may, by permission of the owner, satisfy himself of the title by an inspection of the record, in which every act affecting the property will be found entered under the proper heading. The mode of entry is by an "official note," or summary of the purport of every deed. It is, of course, easy to frame a short "official note" of a simple transaction. Of a complicated one the official note may be longer; and it remains to be seen whether such notes will in that case attempt a summary of the deed, or will merely refer to the deed, the original or a copy of which must in every case be deposited in the office. In the English office it is understood to be the practice to make a note of reference only to any instrument which is not a simple transfer or charge. Where an estate is put in settlement by deed or will, the simplest and most effective mode of recording will be to enter the names of the trustees, supposing that they have a power of sale. Modern settlements usually contain such a power.

If, however (as in the case of a great family mansion), it is not intended that the property should, under any circumstances, be sold, probably the best course would be to remove the estate from the operation of the Act, under the 32nd section Evidently the object of the Act is to facilitate sales and transfers by condensing the evidence of title; it is intended to apply to land legally capable of being sold or mortgaged; and therefore strictly settled estates, incapable of being sold, do not fall properly within its scope. Nothing is gained by claiming for any system more than it is well fitted for accomplishing; and it may be that some advocates of this system have gone too far in predicting that it will supersede the deeds registry, and absorb into itself, some day or other, all the landed property of the country. It can only claim to facilitate very greatly all transfers, charges, leases, and other usual dealings with property which is not in settlement, or which, being in settlement, is intended to be capable of being sold.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
LEGULEIUS.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR—I see, by your leader of the 23rd inst., that a move is being made to give Chairmen of counties jurisdiction in partnership cases. This has been long felt to be necessary. I could wish that the gentleman who has taken up this good work would make his amendments still more liberal and give jurisdiction in cases of "libel, slander, crim. con., and breach of promise of marriage" to the extent of £40. I know the poor people for whose benefit these courts were established have, substantially, no redress in these class of cases. owing to their inability to resort to the superior courts, A poor man may be slandered, or his peace and happiness destroyed, and he has no redress except taking vengeance in his own way. I venture to say a change in the law in this respect would be hailed as a great boon by the poorer classes in Ireland.

The words, excepting the jurisdiction in such cases, are in the 35 section of the 14 and 15 Vic., c. 57, and could be repealed by a section of five lines.

If the Sheriffs' Act is abolished or amended, may I suggest that I would allow the plaintiff to employ his own bailiff as he might have done before the passing of the late Sheriffs' Act. The bailiff to be paid as follows:—One shilling in the pound by the defendant as part of the execution, and sixpence in the pound to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund, on the certificate of the chairman that the bailiff therein named had executed the decree to the satisfaction of the plaintiff or his attorney. This would be a premium on good conduct, and the process-servers would find it worth while to act as bailiffs. I found before the new Act that one shilling in the pound did not pay the bailiff. The result was that he got into difficulties and appropriated other people's money. Besides, there was no inducement for him to conduct himself well. The chairman's certificate would, of course, be grounded on a certificate of the plaintiff or his attorney. The poundage payable by the consolidated fund would be paid to the bailiff at same time as his quarterly salary.

Yours,
J. GLOVER.

Magherafelt, 26th Feb., 1867.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL."

SIR—The "Solicitors' Journal" appears to offer the most available means of calling the attention of our profession to the urgent necessity of some arrangement to save the ruinous consequences which at Nisi Prius sittings are found to result from the absence of senior counsel when records are at trial.

The complaints of suitors and attorneys have brought this matter so prominently before the public that I only mention a case now for the purpose of producing discussion as to the remedy which our most experienced members may suggest, without at present offering my own opinion, although I entertain a strong one on the subject.

I lately instructed a senior counsel as leader at Nisi Prius, and gave a liberal fee, but when called on he did not appear on the trial, being in another Court; this obliged the second counsel, at a moment's notice, to state the case—and the junior counsel, on the same day, had to reply generally, instead of his leader.

I afterwards found my leader's brief unnoted, and I believe it was unread, so that the value given consisted in his initialing the receipt for his fee.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
GEO. SHANNON.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE SOCIETY OF THE ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS OF IRELAND,

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

INSTRUCTIONS TO APPRENTICES.

1.—Apprentices are informed that the necessity still exists for keeping Terms in Dublin as heretofore, during period of their apprenticeship, and that as the Lectures which they are also required to attend, are delivered by the Professor of Law during each Term, they can thus keep Terms and attend Lectures concurrently.

2.—Each Apprentice must attend two courses of the Lectures delivered by the Professor of Law; each course commences in Michaelmas Term, and is continued during Hilary, Easter, and Trinity Terms, and portions of the respective Vacations; each Apprentice must thus attend Two Legal Years of Lectures, each year commencing in Michaelmas Term.

3.—Apprentices are referred for detailed information as to the Lectures, to the 21st of the Rules, made pursuant to the 29 and 30 Vic., c. 84, which states the time of the commencement of each Session, and the number of Lectures to be delivered in each Session; also to the 26th and 27th of said Rules which specify the courses of Lectures to be attended by each Apprentice, and for which attendance Certificates must be produced, and the Council desire it to be distinctly understood that they will require from Apprentices a strict compliance with said Rules.

4.—A Notice stating the day on which the Lectures of each Session will commence, will be posted previously thereto, in the Entrance Hall of the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, and also published in the Irish Law Times and Solicitors' Journal.

5.—Two Lectures in each week of the session are delivered on Tuesday and Friday mornings, commencing at 20 minutes before Ten o'clock, a.m., and lasting for one hour.

6.—All Apprentices bound since the passing of the 29th and 30th Vic., c. 84, are reminded that their Indentures, and all assignments thereof, must be enrolled and registered in, at least, one Law Court, and in the Court of Chancery, in the manner and within the period of Six months next after the execution of said Indentures and Assignments respectively, as set forth in the 12th section of said Act; and that within Three months after such enrolment and registration, they must be produced to the Secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, to be entered by him pursuant to the 29th section, under the penalty upon each Apprentice therein contained.

7.—The period of service of each Apprentice reckons from the day of the date of his Indentures, and no person who shall have been, or shall be bound as an Apprentice, either before or after the passing of the 29 and 30 Vic. c. 84, can get credit for any particular Term, as part of his Apprenticeship, unless his Indentures shall have been executed within, or previous to said Term.

By Order,
JOHN H. GODDARD,
Secretary.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MARCH 9, 1867.

WE are glad to see that the present Government have adopted the measure which their predecessors introduced for reform of the Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland. No one is more competent to carry such a measure through the House than the present Solicitor-General for Ireland, who has brought in the Bill, and whose large Chancery practice and great experience in that Court give him a command of the subject, both in principle and detail, to which no mere theorist could attain.

It is now more than sixteen years since the inauguration of that most unhappy legislative experiment, "The Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850." We do not for a moment assert, that at the period of its introduction the condition of the Court of Chancery in this country was such as to make any reform or alteration in its procedure undesirable; but we do say, that a more ill-considered or incongruous attempt at reform was never attempted than that initiated by the Act in question. We cannot suppose that Sir John Romilly (although the reputed parent of the measure) is answerable for its provisions, and are rather disposed to attribute them to some of the inexperienced theorists who believe that alteration is reform, and that a great public boon must necessarily be effected by any change in what has long been established. Practical men here are continually suffering from the effects of the legislative "reforms" with which "'prentice hands" are disfiguring the statute books, but from none more keenly than the measure which, by a most singular misnomer, is called the Chancery (Ireland) Regulation (!!) Act. If by regulation is meant the total disorganization of Chancery proceedings, then this statute is worthy of its name; but if it was intended to be the means of promoting uniformity, order, and certainty in the procedure of the Court, then has it most grievously failed in its design. We do not desire to become apologists for the verbose pleadings of the old Court of Chancery, nor for the vexatious delays which brought suitors to despair and the law into disrepute; but we maintain that a reform in pleadings might readily have been effected without the introduction into our Chancery proceedings of those vague and shapeless documents denominated "Cause Petitions" and "Answering Affidavits." In fact, such a reform was actually effected in England; and while we have been for sixteen years groping and stumbling through the irregularities of our "Regulation" Act procedure, the legal profession in England have been enjoying the facilities afforded by a truly reformed system, in which the Bill and Answer are retained, but stripped of all that made them objectionable. It is to this system the Chancery Reform Bill just introduced by the Solicitor-General proposes to assimilate the proceedings of our Irish Court of Chancery.

One of the leading features of the reform thus to be effected is the abolition of the present system of reference to the Masters, and the consequent abolition of their offices, which were abolished in the Court of Chancery in England when the English Chancery Regulation Act, to which we have referred, was introduced. With this change falls the whole "15th section" system, which was introduced by the Irish Chancery Regulation Act, and has been so decidedly condemned by all Chancery lawyers of eminence and experience, and which conferred on the Masters in Chancery, in cases referred under it, the functions of the Lord Chancellor; while in those not so referred they still were limited to purely administrative duties. Out of this system has arisen a diversity of practice that makes the experience of one Master's office no assistance in carrying on business in another, and renders it impossible for any Chancery practitioner to master the varieties of practice which meet and puzzle him at every step. Instead of this system, the business of the Court of Chancery is to be carried out by a Vice-Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls, each assisted by a Chief Clerk (who is to be a Solicitor), upon whom will devolve all the matters of detail, which now occupy so much of the valuable time of the Masters. All questions in which legal points are involved will be decided by the Vice-Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls, to whom the practitioners may also appeal against any ruling of the Chief Clerks to which they object. This division of labour, by which the learning of the Judge is reserved for the discussion of legal questions, and the details and routine are left to those more competent, from the character of their professional experience, to deal with them, seems natural and expedient, and we shall be disappointed if it does not work for the advantage of the suitors.

One of the great benefits of the measure is, that, by the assimilation of the practice to that of the Court of Chancery in England, all the decisions and precedents of that country are thrown open to us. This will be of immense importance in enabling us to settle the practice under the system which the present measure is to inaugurate, which, although new to us, has been working in England for about sixteen years with complete success.

There are several provisions in the Bill which we should be glad to notice did our space permit, and perhaps on some future occasion we may have an opportunity of doing so.

CURRENT TOPICS.

MICHAEL MURPHY, Esq., one of the Official Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, has resigned his office in consequence of failing health and bodily infirmities. Whilst regretting, as we do, the cause of his retirement, we are glad to learn that in the matter of pension he will not be unfairly dealt with. Ever remarkable for an amiable kindliness of disposition and affability of manner as well as for the honourable integrity of his character, we but echo the general sentiment in assuring him that he carries with him into private life the esteem and good wishes of the profession, and of that portion of the public with whom his duties brought him into more immediate contact. As to his successor, we are confident that the Lord Chancellor (with whom the appointment rests) will duly regard not only the business abilities but the character and the position of the gentleman to be selected. If, we will add, he be as efficient and popular as the present Assignee, the choice will be quite satisfactory.

On Monday last a deputation from the Council of the Incorporated Law Society waited upon Mountifort Longfield, Esq., LL.D., to present him with an address on the occasion of his retirement from the office of Judge of the Landed Estates Court.

The deputation consisted of Arthur Barlow, vice-president, and Messrs. William Read, Henry T. Dix, William Roche, Edward T. Stapleton, and J. H. Goddard, secretary.

The following is a copy of the address and reply.

TO MOUNTIFORT LONGFIELD, ESQ., LL.D., LATE JUDGE OF THE LANDED ESTATES COURT, IRELAND.

Sir,—On the part of the attorneys and solicitors of Ireland we desire, on the occasion of your retirement, to express not only our sentiments of respect for your great ability and learning, but also our appreciation of the manner in which you have filled the high and difficult judicial position which you have just vacated, as well as regret at your retirement.

We also desire to thank you for the kindness and consideration which we received at your hands during your judicial career, and to bear testimony, as we gladly do, to the fact that in the discharge of our professional duties in your Court we have ever received a patient hearing, and had a confidence reposed in our good faith which was both flattering and encouraging, and which we believe is calculated to strengthen and elevate the tone of professional honour and rectitude, not only to the benefit of the profession but also of the interests of the suitors of the Court.

I remain, Sir,
On behalf of the Council,
Your faithful Servant,
RICHARD JNO. THEO. ORPEN, President.
JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

REPLY.

Gentlemen.—I return you my sincere thanks for the address with which you have honoured me on the occasion of my retirement from the Landed Estates' Court.

I am perfectly conscious that for several flattering expressions in that address I am indebted solely to your kindness; and it gives me great pleasure to believe that such friendly feelings are entertained towards me by the profession with which my duties in Court brought me into constant intercourse.

I am happy also to have this opportunity of returning thanks for the assistance which you afforded the Court in the difficult and important task which it was called upon to perform.

Some persons affected to think that your profession was more interested in the abuses of the law than in the administration of justice, and they predicted that you would show some hostility to a Court which, rejecting ordinary and expensive forms, should endeavour to make the road to justice safe, simple, cheap, and expeditious.

Their predictions were disappointed. From the commencement we had the advantage of your active cooperation, and I have to acknowledge gratefully that I received from members of your profession some valuable suggestions, which have become incorporated in the rules and practice of the Court.

You have alluded to the confidence which I always placed in your good faith.

I believe that it was expedient to the administration of justice that I should do so, and that you were well deserving to have that confidence reposed in you, and experience has justified that opinion, for I found no instance in which that confidence was abused.

I remain, Gentlemen,

Yours very truly,

Mountifort Longfield.

A Bill to Amend the Constitution, Practice, and Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

The following is an abstract of the clauses of this Bill now before Parliament, brought in by the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for Ireland. [We give it so far as space permits, and will give the remainder in our next Number.]

Preamble recites that it is expedient to alter the Constitution and amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding of the Court of Chancery, in Ireland, with a view of establishing Uniformity of Practice and Procedure in the Courts of Chancery in England and Ireland.

Clause

1. Title of Act—"The Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867."

2. Interpretation of terms.

3. Act to consist of five parts, relating to:—I. The appointment of a Vice-Chancellor. II. The abolition of the office of Master in Ordinary. III. Procedure and Practice. IV. Stamps and Fees. V. Miscellaneous matters.

Part 1.

Appointment of Vice-Chancellor.

4. Vice-Chancellor to be appointed to be a Judge-assistant to the Lord Chancellor, a barrister of at least 15 years standing, and to be incapable of sitting in the House of Commons.

5. Appointment of successors of Vice-Chancellor.

6. Jurisdiction and powers of Vice-Chancellor; to hear and determine suits; decrees, orders, and acts of the Vice-Chancellor to be deemed decrees, orders, and acts of the Court of Chancery.

7. To sit for Chancellor when required.

8. Vice-Chancellor to rank after Lord Justice of Appeal, provided the latter shall not have held office of Lord Chancellor. In that case to rank after Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

9. To hold office during good behaviour.

10. Oath of Vice-Chancellor—"duly and faithfully to execute the office."

11. Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, with approbation of Lord Chancellor, may appoint one chief clerk each to assist in general business of the Court.

12. Qualification of chief clerks—a solicitor or attorney of 10 years standing, or one who shall have held the office of Master's Examiner.

13. Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor may appoint two junior clerks to each chief clerk.

14. No officer under the Act to take any fees or profit, save salary.

15. Solicitor accepting office to cease to be solicitor.

16. Chief clerk to hold office during good behaviour.

17. Junior clerk to hold office at the pleasure of the Judge to whose Court he shall be attached.

18. Chief and junior clerks to be under the control of Judge.

19. Chief and junior clerks subject to the same penalties as are imposed by 4 Geo. IV., c. 61.

20. Lord Chancellor, with concurrence of Judge, may remove chief clerk without stating any cause for such removal.

21. Salary of chief clerk, £800 per annum, to be increased by £25 annually to £1,000. Salary of junior clerks, £250 per annum, to be increased by £10 annually to £350—payable out of the funds as after provided.

22. Salary of Vice-Chancellor, £4,000 per annum, payable out of Consolidated Fund.

23. Retiring pension to Vice-Chancellor.

24. Vice-Chancellor may appoint Court-keeper, crier, and tipstaff.

25. Lord Chancellor may, should the business of his Court render it expedient, appoint a chief clerk and junior clerk to be attached to himself and his successors.

26. Lord Chancellor, with consent of Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, may (subject to the approbation of the Commissioners of the Treasury), appoint additional chief or junior clerks.

Part 2.

Masters' Abolition.

27. Office of Master, except that of Receiver Master, abolished, but subject to execution by the present Masters of the duties thereinafter provided, for which purpose powers vested in them to continue until released.

28. Vacancies not to be filled.

29. Masters may be released from their duties as such when state of business in their Courts allows.

30. Each Master so released to be entitled, as retiring pension, to the full amount of his salary.

31. In order expeditiously to wind up suits at present pending before them, Masters may summon parties or their solicitors, and proceed to give directions for settling and winding up such suits.

32. If Master unable finally to dispose of any suit he may give report or certificate, on which Lord Chancellor may make order for prosecution or final disposal of suit and payment of costs.

33. Notwithstanding suit abated or defective, Master may proceed.

34. Master may certify abatement of suit, or change, or transmission of interest.

35. Certificate to be filed and notice served, and parties served to be bound as if an order of revivor or supplemental decree had been made.

36. If Master unable to obtain information for his guidance in certifying, as aforesaid, the Lord Chancellor may dispose of suit.

37. Master may certify specially any decision.

38 In case of neglect of parties or their solicitors within time fixed, to file certificate, or report, or cause order, solicitors for minors and lunatics may proceed.

39. No further references to be made to Masters, but Masters to finish business at present pending.

40. On retirement of Masters, their examiners and clerks, to be entitled to retiring pensions of the same amount as salary.

41. Appointment of second Assistant Registrar at a salary of £800 per annum to be increased by £25 annually to £1,000 per annum; Masters' examiners, according to seniority, to have the option of accepting this office. In case they decline, Lord Chancellor to appoint a barrister of ten years' standing, or a person having such qualification as before prescribed for chief clerks.

42. The Masters' registrars to be three of the junior clerks, and to hold during good behaviour.

43. Power to the Lord Chancellor to make temporary provision for offices vacated.

44. Assistant Registrar, chief and junior clerks, to be entitled to superannuation allowances.

46. Appropriation of Masters' offices.

47. Rights and establishments of the present Masters to continue till released. 15 and 16 Vic., c. 80, s. 58.

48. Office of Receiver Master to be maintained for the discharge of the duties therein specified.

49. Powers of Receiver Master, with reference to all matters relating to receivers and the management of estates under receivers, and with respect to auditing and keeping accounts, and with respect to inquiries in lunacy matters.

50. References to Receiver Master.

PART 3.

Procedure and Practice.

51. Acts and portions of acts repealed—13 and 14 Vic., c. 89, ss. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32; 23 and 24 Vic., c. 38, s. 14.

52. Practice of engrossing bills on parchment to be discontinued, and printed bills to be filed instead.

53. Writs of subpœna to be abolished.

54. Defendant to be served with a printed bill of complaint in lieu of writ of subpœna, with endorsement as in schedule [requiring appearance to be entered within eight days].

55. The filing and service of a printed bill to have the same effect as the filing and issuing of a writ of subpœna.

56. Service of printed bill to be effected in same manner as service of writ of subpœna is now effected, with liberty to Court to direct substitution of service.

57. Written copies of bill may be filed and served, in cases of injunction, or for a writ of ne exeat regno, on personal undertaking of plaintiff or his solicitor to file printed copy within fourteen days.

58. Plaintiff to deliver to defendant or his solicitor printed copies of bill at rate prescribed by General Order.

59. Provisions as to filing, &c., prints of original bill extended to amendments. In certain cases bill may be amended by written alterations.

60. Bills of complaint to contain concise narratives of material facts, &c., divided into numbered paragraphs, but not to contain interrogatories.

61. Next friend of any infant, &c., before name used in any suit to sign written authority to solicitor, to be filed with bill.

62. Demurrers abolished except for want of equity and multifariousness.

63. Pleas abolished.

64. Interrogatories to be filed in office of Deputy Keeper of the Rolls by plaintiff, within time prescribed (should he require answer from defendants), and copy to be delivered to defendants or their solicitor. No defendant to be required to answer unless interrogatories so filed and copy delivered.

65. Defendant may answer without leave within time fixed by General Order, but after that time must have leave of the Court.

66. Defendant's answer may contain not only answer to interrogatories, but statements material to his case.

67. No objection for want of parties in any case to which the rules next therein, set forth, extend.

Rule 1. Residuary legatee or next of kin to have decree for administration of personal estate, without serving remaining residuary legatees or next of kin.

Rule 2. Legatee interested in legacy charged on real estate, or person interested in proceeds of real estate directed to be sold, to have decree for administration without serving any other legatee or person interested in the proceeds of the estate.

Rule 3. Residuary devisee or heir may, without serving any co-residuary devisee or co-heir, have the like decree.

Rule 4. One of several cestuis que trust under any deed or instrument may, without serving any other of such cestuis que trust, have a decree for the execution of the trusts of the deed or instrument.

Rule 5. In cases of suits for protection of property pending litigation, and in cases in the nature of waste, one person may sue on behalf of himself and all having the same interest.

Rule 6. Any executor, &c., may obtain a decree against any one legatee, next of kin, or cestui que trust for the administration of the estate, or the execution of the trusts.

Rule 7. Mortgagee may have a decree for sale, without serving any other mortgagee, unless in receipt of the rents of the mortgaged lands.

Rule 8. In all the above cases, Court may require any other person to be made a party to the suit, and give conduct of the suit to such person as it may deem proper.

Rule 9. In all the above cases, persons, who before the passing of the Act of 1850, would have been necessary parties to the suit, to be served with notice of the decree, and unless cause shown to be bound by proceedings.

Rule 10. In suits concerning real or personal estate vested in trustees; such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested to the same extent as executors, &c., in suits concerning personal estate; and not necessary to make persons beneficially interested parties.

68. The practice of setting down a cause merely on objection for want of parties, abolished.

69. Plaintiff may, on expiration of time for answering, but before replication, move for a decree or decretal order. Affidavits may be filed.

70. Court may grant or refuse such motion, or make order for further prosecution, &c.

71. Exceptions for insufficiency and objections for prolixity or scandal, to be heard and determined by the Court itself; and practice of excepting to bills, answers, &c., for impertinence, abolished. Costs may be ordered to be paid by party introducing impertinent matter.

72. Court may order Defendant to produce documents, &c. on oath.

73. Defendant in suit commenced by bill, may (after answer), file interrogatories for examination of plaintiff, or may exhibit a cross bill instead thereof.

74. Upon application of defendant after answer, plaintiff may be required to produce documents on oath.

75. Practice of issuing commissions to take answers, &c., within the jurisdiction of the Court abolished.

76. Masters Extraordinary to cease to be so styled, and to be designated Commissioners.

77. Lord Chancellor may appoint solicitors residing within ten miles of Dublin as Commissioners to administer oaths and take affidavits in Chancery. Fee of 1s. 6d. to be paid to them on each affidavit.

78. Clerk of affidavits and clerk of recognizances may administer oaths and take affidavits.

79. Commissioners may be appointed to administer oaths for the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.

80. Appointment of Commissioners to bear a Chancery fund stamp in lieu of other charges or fees.

81. Power of Lord Chancellor of appointing persons to administer oaths, &c., not to be abridged. References to Masters Extraordinary in acts to apply to Commissioners.

82. Answers, affidavits, &c., in Chancery, how to be sworn and taken in England, Scotland, the Channel Islands, &c.

83. Penalties for false swearing.

84. Penalty for forging signature or seal of judge, &c., empowered to administer oaths under this act.

85. Answers to be filed without oath of messenger.

86. Issue shall be joined (in suits commenced by bill) by filing a replication [form in schedule].

87. Defendant not having been required to answer and not having answered, may move to dismiss bill for want of prosecution.

88. Practice of Court as to and mode of examining witnesses abolished. Court may order particular witnesses to be examined upon interrogatories.

89. Judge may upon application, order that the evidence as to certain facts and issues shall he taken vivâ voce at the hearing.

90. Defendant not having been required to answer and not answering may move for dismissal of bill for want of prosecution.

ENGLAND.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From the Law Times.

CHANCERY PRACTICE—DEMURRER.—When an agreement is in its terms so uncertain as to raise a doubt as to its true effect, whether to be considered as a purchase of premises or a lease, a demurrer will lie to a bill for specific performance of it: (Dolling v. Evans, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 604. V.C. W.)

LIEN—FAILURE OF TITLE.—Where a plaintiff in a vendor's suit for specific performance failed to make a good title and abandoned the suit, the Court gave the defendant a lien on the property for his deposit, interest, and costs of suit: (Turner v. Marriott, 15 L. T. Rep. N.S. 607. V.C. M.)

RELATION OF ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—COMPROMISE.—The Court, though bound by the decisions establishing, will not extend the operation of, the strict technical rule that the relation of attorney and client and the effect of a retainer are at an end, and that the authority of an attorney to bind his client ceases, the moment judgment is obtained, without some act on the part of the client to re-establish the relation. If, after judgment signed, the plaintiff in the action forbids his attorney to compromise or to take less than the full amount of the judgment, that is evidence of a continued or re-established authority between attorney and client, so as to give effect to the acts of the attorney with reference to the rights, liabilities, and powers of the plaintiff and defendant in the action; and a compromise subsequently effected by the attorney with the defendant in such action binds the plaintiff as against such defendant, but gives the plaintiff a right of action against the attorney for compromising in breach of direct instructions to the contrary: (Butler v. Knight, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621. Ex.)

COMPULSORY REFERENCE—COSTS.—An action of debt, in which the plaintiff claimed more than £20, was referred compulsorily. By the terms of the order, the costs were to abide the event, and the costs of the reference to be in the discretion of the master. The master found for the plaintiff for less than £20, and directed that the defendant should pay the costs of the reference. It was held that sect. 11 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 16, is imperative, and that the plaintiff having recovered less than £20, was not entitled to the costs of the reference: (Moore v. Watson, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 662. C. P.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—CITING HEIR-AT-LAW.—For the future the party propounding a will in a testamentary suit, commenced by caveat, may, after declaration filed, and before the time for pleading has expired, obtain leave to cite the heir-at-law to all proceedings, on filing an affidavit that he intends to prove the will in solemn form: (Peacock v. Lowe, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 634. Prob.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—COSTS.—The Court granted a writ of sequestration for costs against money payable to a retired officer of the Indian navy as a pension for past services The practice of the court does not require that a writ of attachment should be applied for or obtained before a writ of sequestration will be allowed to issue: (Dent v. Dent, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 635. Div. & M.)

EQUITY PRACTICE—REVIVOR—COSTS.—An abatement of the suit having been caused by bankruptcy, no revivor can be allowed simply for costs: Ellison v. Sharp, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 651. V. C. W.)

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

From the Law Times.

An expectation was expressed in the number of the Law Times which preceded the opening of the session, that, in connexion with bankruptcy reform, some relief would probably be afforded by a further mitigation of imprisonment in favour of the large class who fall under County Court judgments. This was offered among other "legislative hints." The Government have now given their notices on the subject, from the language of which it would appear that our anticipation was not ill-founded. On Thursday, the 7th, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL is to move for leave to bring in two Bills, one to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to Bankruptcy in England, the other, "to abolish arrest on final process in civil actions in England, except in certain cases, and otherwise to amend the law relating to judgments, decrees and orders." The exception is referred to in language scarcely large enough to include County Court judgments. "Certain cases" is a form of speech indicating that individuals under certain circumstances, rather than that classes, are to remain subject to the arrest to be in other respects abolished. Most likely debtors who are guilty of fraud, or who have attempted to abscond, or the like, are meant by the exception. The present LORD CHANCELLOR, in the debate on the second reading of Lord WESTBURY'S Bankruptcy Bill, approved especially of the clause by which bankrupts who have no means to pay the fees of application in the ordinary way may, by the interference of the registrar, on making an affidavit that they have not the means of paying the expenses, obtain their discharge. He thought that this was a humane and wise provision, but the object was thwarted by the clauses that it should not be applicable to parties committed by a County Court Judge, but that in such cases the party must be imprisoned forty days before he could be discharged; and when after that he was discharged, the debt must still remain as a hopeless clog upon him. He advised that these clauses should be struck out of the Bill. They, however, remained. Four years afterwards Lord WESTBURY introduced his Bill for abolition of arrest on final process, and bore testimony to the beneficial operation of these prison adjudication and discharge clauses. One of the immediate effects was that the Queen's Bench prison was closed, and no one complained that the bonâ fide creditor's remedy had been abridged. It was at that time ascertained that debtors in prison generally were persons who found their way there for the purpose of being discharged under the bankruptcy law, and the consequence was there was a great number of applications for discharge. The opinion has gained ground through Europe, that the old practice of imprisoning a debtor merely on account of a debt not being paid was neither quite just nor expedient. Lord Chelmsford, on that occasion also, showed anxiety that there should be taken away from the County Courts the power to commit in default of satisfaction of judgment, but Lord WESTBURY'S Bill reserves the existing County Court system.

From the Solicitors' Journal.

RAILWAY DEBENTURES have, within the last few months, been the subject of much discussion and litigation, and an attempt is being made to settle their value by means of legislation. The Railway Debenture Holders' Bill provides that "the undertaking, as defined by the Companies, Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and all the engines, carriages, waggons, and other plant, movable and immovable (including workshops) used or required for the proper management and working of the railway, and belonging to the railway company," shall be security for the payment of interest and principal of the debenture debt, but that these may not be taken in execution for that debt. In his judgment, delivered in the case of Gardiner v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 15 W. R. 325, Lord Justice CAIRNS expressed his regret that securities, such as railway debentures, upon which so many millions of money have been invested, should have been left, at their creation, in a state to admit of so much argument as that which had taken place in this case; and that their legal operation and extent should come to be defined—not at the time when they had been given as security, but after difficulties had arisen in their repayment. One of the great difficulties which had arisen in this and in the kindred cases was that of ascertaining what property the debentures were secured upon, and we are at a loss to see that this is cleared up by the measure now before the House. The "Undertaking," as defined by the 2nd section of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 16), means the "Undertaking or works, of whatever nature, which shall, by the special Act, be authorised to be executed;" and while this bill abstains from laying down a positive definition of the term "Undertaking," it carefully adopts that term as defined by the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, thus perpetuating an uncertainty when a really favourable opportunity of settling a definition was at hand. In the judgment already referred to, the same learned judge said—"A railway is made and maintained by means of its capital—by means of its borrowed money, of its land, of its proceeds of sale of surplus land, of its permanent way, of its rolling stock—all of these may be said in a sense to be connected with—to be part of—to make up—the undertaking." Again, "The term 'undertaking' is the proper style—not for the ingredients, but for the completed work."

As the operation of the measure is not to be applicable to existing mortgages by means of debentures, but only to those created in the future, it does not, in fact, hold out much prospect of good. If all existing debentures are made under Parliamentary powers, what then would be more easy than to define precisely what those powers were—that is to say, to define in terms the word "undertaking," as used in the Companies Clauses Act, 1845. We by no means would be supposed to advocate the giving to debenture-holders any greater powers than they now possess, nor the depriving them of what they are now entitled to; only let the property, and classes of property, on which their securities are based, be accurately defined, and the rest of the difficulty may be left for time to settle. Unless the term "undertaking" is explained in the new act, it can scarcely be expected to set at rest the disputed points on which the appeal motion, in the case before referred to, was founded.

NOTES OF CASES.

CHANCERY.

Reported by Edmund T. Bewley, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Master Fitzgibbon.

Luby v. Dixon. Hone v. Dixon.

Feb. 20.—Judgment Mortgage.

In this case a question arose between the petitioner in the first matter and the petitioner in the second matter as to whether a judgment could be registered as a mortgage, under the 13 and 14 Vict., c. 53, against an ecclesiastical benefice.

F. L. Dames for the petitioner in the first matter.

R. J. Robertson for the petitioner in the second matter.

Master Fitzgibbon delivered an elaborate judgment, reviewing the cases and statutes bearing on the subject, and held that the 13 and 14 Vict., c. 53 was only a substitution for the older remedies for enforcing judgments, and that, as a judgment creditor could not, before the passing of this Act, have sued out an elegit against an ecclesiastical benefice, a judgment mortgage was not now a charge upon ecclesiastical property.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by Edward S. Trevor, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the Belfast Dock Act and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1865.

Jan. 14, 1867. — Patent — Construction — Evidence — Acts of Ownership.

A piece of land on the Shore-road, at the mouth of the river Lagan, at Belfast, was taken by the Belfast Harbour Commissioners, under the powers of their Act. The land, before it was reclaimed, was between high and low water mark in ordinary tides. The purchase money was lodged in Court. On the 21st of February, 1859, an order was made by the late Master of the Rolls referring it to Master Litton to inquire and report who was entitled to the fund in Court. There were three claimants before the Master:—1st, The Commissioners of Woods and Forests, claiming in right of the Crown. 2nd, The Marquis of Donegall, who claimed under two patents, of the 9th of May, 1604 (2 Jac. 1), and the 20th November, 1620 (19 Jac. 1.), whereby "the fisheries and fishing places of what kind soever, of all the river of Lagan, and the ground and soil of all the said river, &c.," were granted to Sir Arthur Chichester. 3rd, The Earl of Ranfurly, Lord Templemore, and Mr. Thomas M'Clure, who claimed under a patent of the 5th November, 1605 (3 Jac. 1), a grant to James Hamilton of the territory of Clandeboy, which is adjacent to the land in question, and is described in the patent as bounded by "the bank of the Bay of Knockfergus (now Carrickfergus) towards the North."

The Master made his report in February, 1861, finding in favour of the last-mentioned claim, and the Crown and Lord Donegall both moved to vary the report. The motions came before the late Master of the Rolls, in February, 1862, and were directed to stand over until the decision of the House of Lords in Donegall v. Templemore, in which the same questions of title as those in this case were involved. That appeal was compromised, and the motions were renewed in last Michaelmas Term, and were at argument for several days.

The Master of the Rolls gave judgment, deciding against Lord Donegall's title, in accordance with the decision of the majority of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber,* on the ground that what was called the river Lagan, in 1620, terminated at the ford of Belfast, higher up the river than the land in question, which he therefore held not to pass by the patent to Sir A. Chichester. His Honour held that acts of ownership on other parts of the shore of the Bay of Carrickfergus were admissible to show that the shore passed by the patent to James Hamilton, and decided on the construction of that patent, and the evidence of user, in favour of the title of Lord Ranfurly, Lord Templemore, and Mr. M'Clure.

The Master's report was accordingly confirmed without costs of either motion to vary it.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

In re Graham seeking to be a Commissioner.

Jan. 31.—Commissioner for taking Affidavits—Attorney.

In this case there were three applications for the office of Commissioner for taking affidavits, in the town of Enniskillen. The first applicant was Mr. Graham, a solicitor; the second, a Mr. Armstrong, a brewer; and the third, a Mr. Gibson, a Clerk of Petty Sessions. It was objected to Mr. Graham that there was a rule in the superior courts against appointing an attorney to the office, if there was any other eligible candidate. Mr. Gibson was objected to on the ground that the duties of his office, as Petty Sessions' Clerk, took him away frequently from Enniskillen; but to this it was answered that the places at which he had to attend were all within the district over which his commissionership would extend.

The Solicitor-General for Mr. Graham.

Dowse, Q.C.. and Richardson for Mr. Armstrong.

Sullivan, Q C., and S. Y. Johnstone for Mr. Gibson.

The Court appointed Mr. Gibson; Whiteside, C.J., dissenting, and expressing an opinion that the rule against the appointment of solicitors, if it existed, rested on no reasonable foundation, and that Mr. Graham should be appointed. The other judges expressed their opinion that the rule existed, that it was a proper one, and that no persons were more anxious to have it adhered to than attorneys themselves. Fitzgerald, J., and George, J., considered that the fact of Mr. Gibson already holding an office which required him to travel about in his district, and so made him more accessible to many classes of the people, made him the most eligible candidate; and Fitzgerald, J., especially considered it wise for public purposes that the person holding the responsible office of Petty Sessions' Clerk should have as much dignity as possible added to his position.

KANE v. MULLOY.

Feb. 11.—Ejectment—Liberty to defend.

Concannon, LL.D, for the defendant, moved for liberty to file a defence to an action of ejectment on the title, the time to plead having expired.

The defendant alleged that he held under a subsisting lease. It appeared that before action brought the defendant agreed to give up possession upon getting a receipt for a year's rent. On the 8th of December last the landlord's agent attended to receive possession. The receipt, however, had not been given, and the tenant, did not attend. The ejectment was then served. Defendant wrote complaining of the service, but still asking for the receipt, and offering possession. This letter was not answered, and the landlord persevered in his ejectment.

The Court granted the motion, and in consequence of the tenant's delay, plaintiff's costs to be costs in the cause.

CORRIGAN v. WOODS.

Before THE FULL COURT.

Jan. 14.—Use and Occupation — Evidence — Invalid Contract.

Action for use and occupation. The defendant traversed the permission of the plaintiff. The jury found that the defendant had entered into possession of the premises in 1856, under a verbal contract of sale, and had paid a sum of money then, not as rent, but as purchase money. The judge directed a verdict for the defendant, holding that the contract of sale, though not valid under the statute of frauds, was good evidence to rebut the implication of a contract for use and occupation sought to be raised by the plaintiff; but reserved leave for the plaintiff to move the Court above. Plaintiff having obtained a rule accordingly, Palles, Q.C., and Richardson, now showed cause.

Butt, Q.C., Purcell, Q.C., and Houston, contra.

The Court discharged the rule, holding the judge's direction right.

M'KNIGHT v. MACARTNEY.

Feb. 12.—Substitution of Service.

This action was for seduction of plaintiff's daughter, and the defendant was in Australia, and out of the jurisdiction of the Court. The seduction took place in Ireland, in November, 1865. The daughter had recently received a letter from defendant, asking her to give her photograph to his brother William, who resided in county Antrim, to be forwarded to defendant, or to post a letter to his address in Australia. Defendant's father had left property, to a portion of the rents of which the defendant was entitled under his father's will. Defendant would be entitled, on the 1st of November next, to a moiety of said property and to considerable personal property. The affidavit stated the names and addresses of the executors, both of whom resided within the jurisdiction, and that they were now acting as such executors.

E. H. Dix now moved to substitute service, on defendant by serving his brother William and the executors.

DEASY, B.—There is nothing to show that the brother will communicate with the defendant, or that he is under any obligation to do so; neither does it appear that the executors are receiving these rents as the agents of, or the trustees for, the defendant. Refuse the motion.

Plaintiff sued on a bill of exchange for £10 1s., and described himself as of Townsend-street, in the county of the city of Dublin; his residence was at Sandymount, though his place of business was at Townsend-street. Defendant resided at Blackrock.

O'Moore, for the defendant, now moved to have the summons and plaint set aside or amended, so that if plaintiff sued in the Superior Courts instead of the County Courts he might not escape the operation of sec. 97 Common Law Procedure Act, 1856.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law.

Goods of MICHAEL KELLY, Deceased, Intestate.

Feb. 27.—Administration—Minors—Wards of Chancery.

Dr. Townsend, Q.C., moved that letters of administration of the goods of the deceased should be granted to John Harte, a maternal uncle of the minor children of the deceased, who had died intestate, a widower, in January, 1867. Such grant to be limited durante minoritate.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., also applied for a similar grant to be made to Thomas Kelly, a paternal uncle of the minors.

The assets were, in value, about £2,000. The deceased had left three minor children.

Dr. Miller—for the next friends in Chancery of the minors, viz., John Kelly and Marianne Kelly, his wife, who was a maternal aunt of the minors—applied that the case should stand over until a guardian or receiver should be appointed in Chancery on a matter now pending, in which the minors were made wards of Court. The appointment would, in a few days, be made by Master Brooke, and the same person would be the proper person to be named by this Court as administrator.

KEATINGE, J.—When minors, next of kin, are made wards in Chancery this Court usually appoints the guardian or receiver appointed by that Court to be the administrator of the personal estate of the deceased. I will, therefore, wait until such person is appointed, and will then appoint him administrator. Motion adjourned.

CARBERRY and DALY v. CODY.

Feb. 27.—Executors Propounding a Will for Proof specially—Whether Entitled or not afterwards to Withdraw?

Dr. Townsend, Q.C., moved that Daly—one of the plaintiffs—an executor named in the will of the deceased made in 1866, might be allowed to withdraw from the suit. The plaintiffs, as executors, had propounded that will, and the defendant had impeached it as claiming an interest under a former will as principal devisee. A consent had been entered into in the cause, by which all parties agreed that the plaintiffs should get probate of the last will; but on certain terms as to carrying out the trusts mentioned in the former will respecting the payment of charges, which, in effect, were that if the personal estate should prove deficient to pay the charges that the deficiency should be made up out of the real estate.—Long v. Symes, 3 Hag., 774. M'Donald v. Prendergast, H. 214. Jackson v. Whitehead, 3 Phillim, 579.

Harris, Q.C., contra.

KEATINGE, J., refused the motion, considering that the institution of a suit—and more especially the entering into a consent which had provisions in it that dealt with the assets—was in law an intermeddling in the assets; and therefore rendered the executor liable to act.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Before JUDGE DOBBS.

IRWIN'S ESTATE.

Jan. 15, Feb. 18.—Statute of Limitations—Effect of Petition for Sale Presented in the Landed Estates' Court.

This case came on upon settlement of draft schedule of incumbrances. The claim, No. 6 on the schedule, was made in respect of a judgment obtained in the year 1805 against A. Irwin, a subsequent judgment of the year 1812, obtained against D. Irwin, and a deed of mortgage of 1833, in which D. Irwin acknowledged that there was a certain sum due on account of these judgments. The trustees of the incumbrancer, No. 10 on the schedule, objected to this claim being paid, on the ground that more than twenty years had elapsed since any sum was paid on the judgments or mortgage; and the question was, if the petition in this matter, which was filed in 1849, took the case out of the Statute of Limitations.

Purcell, Q.C., in support of the objection.

Hemphill, Q.C., for the incumbrancer No. 6.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 18.—DOBBS, J., gave judgment, holding that the effect of the petition for sale being presented, was to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. His Lordship stated the principle upon which suits in the Court of Chancery had that effect in respect to creditors; and said that when a petition was presented in the Landed Estates' Court, not only could creditors come in, but they were all invited by notice to do so, by filing their claims; and thus every petition presented became a petition on behalf of all the incumbrancers of the estate. His Lordship added, that independently of that, the question had been decided in Colclough's Estate (8 Ir. Chanc. Rep., 330), and he quoted the observations of Brady, C., and Blackburne, L. J., in that case.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

CANTWELL'S ESTATE.

Feb. 21.—Objections—Costs of Litigation.

This case came on upon argument of objections to the schedule. With regard to one of the objections, it was decided that a cause petition should be filed in the Court of Chancery. A second objection was that made by one Murphy, and the question upon it was if there had been a surrender by operation of law of a particular lease, and the counsel for the parties having the carriage of the sale not being prepared with present evidence to satisfy the Court, LYNCH, J., said he would send an issue to the assizes. A third objection was that of Sweeny, who claimed to hold a portion of the lands in fee simple by possession for forty years without payment of rent, or recognizing any person as landlord. The same observation applying to that, it was decided to let it stand till the first day of next term, when LYNCH, J., said he would not then listen to any statement of there being evidence which was not forthcoming.

A party, who stated that he represented the owner, objected to these proceedings, the expense of which would fall on the estate.

LYNCH, J., said that under these circumstances, where the creditors were saved, and where the owner objected to these questions being tried at the expense of the estate, he would accede to the application in a case where the parties came forward to argue the objections without producing evidence, and he gave the party a few days to ascertain from the owner if he persevered in his objection.

Hickson for the party having carriage of the proceedings.

Murphy, Q.C., for the objections.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before MILLER, J.

Re J. T. FERRALL.

Feb. 26th.—Creditor holding Mortgage receiving a Dividend in an Arrangement Matter—Acquiescence.

Where a Trader Petitions the Court, under the Arrangement Clauses, and returns a Creditor having a Mortgage as an unsecured Creditor, but that Creditor apprises the Solicitor for the Arranging Trader that he has a Mortgage, and will rely on it; and although he takes no part in the Arrangement Proceedings, the Assignees send him a Dividend Warrant for his Composition, which he receives and puts to the Credit of his Mortgage Debt, this will not be held to be such an Acquiescence in the Arrangement Proceedings as to level his Security to the same position as ordinary Creditors, and he will be allowed to put the Dividend to the Credit of his Mortgage Debt, and to prove on the Estate for the difference, on the Trader afterwards becoming Bankrupt.

This case came before the Court upon charge and discharge.

Purcell, Q.C., for Mr. M'Dermott, a mortgagee, in support of the charge.

Kernan, Q.C., for the assignees.

JUDGE MILLER said it appeared by the charge filed by Mr. M'Dermott, a mortgagee, that on the 14th of September, 1855, the bankrupt gave him a bond, and warrant of attorney, on which judgment was entered, which judgment was registered as a statutable mortgage.

Digitized by Google

The discharge of the assignees stated that on the 20th of March, 1863, the bankrupt petitioned the Court as an arranging trader, offering a certain composition, which was ultimately paid; that Mr. M'Dermott was returned in the schedule of the trader as an unsecured creditor; that he had regular notice of the whole of the proceedings; and that subsequently he was sent the amount of his dividend upon foot of the composition, which he kept; and that, under those circumstances, he ought not to be allowed to prove on the estate of the same trader who became bankrupt. So far the discharge of the assignees was true; but Mr. M'Dermott made an affidavit that he apprised the agent for the arranging trader, and his manager, that he had a mortgage, and would rely on it, and that he would take no part whatever in the arrangement proceedings; and he did not take any part. That affidavit was uncontradicted. Notwithstanding all this the assignees sent him his dividend like the other creditors, which he kept, and gave credit for on foot of his mortgage debt. Judge Miller, after delivering a very elaborate judgment, decided that the mortgagee had a right to prove on the bankrupt's estate for the sum due on foot of his mortgage, after giving credit for the dividend received.

LEITRIM ASSIZES—26th February.

Before HUGHES, B.

PEYTON v. CONNELL.

A Notice to Quit, to a Tenant from Year to Year, Signed by the Mortgagor of the Lands Demised to said Tenant before the Mortgage, and to which Notice the Mortgagee was no Party, is defective.

This was an action of ejectment on the title brought against the defendant for certain lands which he held as tenant from year to year, to the plaintiff. It appeared in evidence that the tenancy commenced in the month of November, 1859. A notice to quit had been served upon the tenant, signed by the agent and by the authority of the plaintiff. Plaintiff was, at the time of the making of said letting, seized of an estate in fee simple in said land, and subsequent thereto he mortgaged same; and upon the trial a memorial of the deed of said mortgage, executed upon the 16th of August, was produced by the defendant. Both the handwriting of Mr. Peyton (the plaintiff), in the memorial, and of the attesting witness to same, were duly proved, both by Mr. Peyton and by said attesting witness.

Carleton, Q.C., and Jordan called for a non suit upon the grounds that the tenancy, having been created before the mortgage, that the effect of the mortgage was not only to assign the reversion, but amounted to an attornment by the tenant to the mortgagee, and that the notice to quit was insufficient, inasmuch as the legal estate had passed out of the mortgagor (the plaintiff in this action) to mortgagee; and the mortgagee was no party to the notice.—Wilson v. Lord Crofton (10 Ir. Jur., N. S. 200).

Robinson, Q.C., with whom was Concannon, LL.D., and Harkan, for the plaintiff, admitted that the non suit point was fatal.

HUGHES, B.—Of course, we must follow that case just cited in the 10th Irish Jurist, N.S.

The plaintiff was accordingly nonsuited.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

LIMERICK ASSIZES—Spring 1867.

MOLONY, Appellant; DORE, Respondent.

The process in this case was for contribution to the rent under a lease setting out the lease, &c., specially; and there was also a count for money had and received.

The respondent proved a lease dated 1807, and that certain parties had for many years been in possession of part of the premises demised by it, and were liable to contribute to the rent. The appellant was the assignee of one of these parties.

In the course of the case it appeared that there had been a new lease made in 1858, and counsel for the respondent asked the judge to amend, under the 27th & 28th Vic., cap. 99, sec. 48, by substituting in the process the lease of 1858 for that of 1807, and altering such other particulars as should be necessary. Counsel for the appellant objected to this amendment as it had not been asked for in the Court below, and as it would make it necessary to alter the entire process and date of lease, parties, rent, &c.

O'BRIEN, J.—The process contains a count for money paid which would have been sufficient; and even if this were not so I think it is a case in which I ought to amend to meet the justice of the case.

KERRY ASSIZES—Spring, 1867.

GREAT SOUTHERN AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appellants; DALY, Respondent.

In this case there was a decree by the Chairman against the Railway Company for £35, with costs, and £4, expenses of witnesses. The Company appealed, under the 14 and 15 Vic., c. 57, sec. 130, which regulates appeals where the parties appear by attorney, but do not attend in person. That section enables a party to appeal without entering into personal recognizance upon paying the defendant, or depositing with the clerk of the peace double the costs of the decree, and upon a recognizance in double the sum decreed being entered into upon his behalf by two sureties to prosecute the appeal and pay the amount decreed, with costs.

The appellants had lodged double the amount of the costs of the decree, not including the expenses of witnesses given below, and a recognizance had been entered into for an amount more than double the sum decreed and the costs, including the expenses of witnesses given by the Chairman. A preliminary objection was taken to the appeal on the ground that the costs which the Act required to be lodged included the expenses given for witnesses; and section 101 of 14 and 15 Vic., c. 57, and Fitzgerald, J.'s answer in Kelly v. —— Johnson CC. Practice, p. 114, was referred to.

For the appellant, it was argued, that the language of the 130 sec. was different from that of the 127, on which Kelly's case was decided, the words in sec. 127 being defendant first paying or depositing "the costs allowed by this Act," and those in sec. 130, "costs of such decree." The amount of the recognizance as being for double the sum decreed, including costs and expenses, was also relied on. As to the latter point, it was submitted on behalf of the respondent that if the recognizance was put in suit only the costs of the appeal could be recovered, and that he could not recover the costs below, which the Act provided should be paid or lodged with the clerk of the peace before the appeal.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CIVIL BILL COURTS, EXTENDED JURISDICTION.

To the Editor of "The Irish Law Times."

SIR—In addition to the very excellent suggestions contained in Mr. Glover's letter, I would beg to add that in any new or amended Civil Bill Act, a clause should be inserted enabling plaintiff to obtain judgment by default in undefended cases; which would be the means of saving trouble and expense to both plaintiffs and defendants. Many traders are now in the habit of having recourse to the superior courts for recovery of small sums, because they need not send their witnesses and account books into Court.

There is no reason why a limited jurisdiction in Equity to administer assets should not be given. The chairmen of the different counties are engaged for a very short time in their respective courts; and with the continuance of the "Sheriffs Act" for another year their duties at the civil side of the Court will be almost nominal; fancy fourteen civil bill entries forming the entire bill of fare at a recent session of a first class county—Galway.

I believe it is beyond contradiction that "the said Act" is a decided failure and pleases nobody. The Sheriff is thereby shielded from actions: the much abused bailiff of former times is now "the Sheriff's man;" and dignified official, while scorning the control of plaintiff in decrees, he is not above the temptation of the defendant.

The plaintiff's attorney is the unpaid medium for collecting for the Sheriff nearly as large a fee (for doing nothing) as he himself is entitled to for pleading the case, &c.

Would that the Attorney-General, or some of the legal gentlemen representing Irish constituencies, could turn their attention to these matters, and confer a boon on the public and the ill-paid practitioners at Quarter Sessions. I congratulate the members of my profession in having an organ for ourselves in which this and other kindred subjects can be ventilated, and I trust that they will afford it that support it appears so well entitled to.—Dear Sir, your obedient Servant,

St. Cronan's, Roscrea. FRANK SHEPPARD.
6th March, 1867.

To the Editor of "The Irish Law Times."

SIR—It is with pleasure that I observed in the last number of your journal that a measure is being introduced for the amendment of the County Courts Acts, embracing two most important matters. Believing the present is a most opportune time to remedy another grievance which has been referred to by yourself, and also by a letter from Mr. Glover—I mean the present inconvenient method of levying decrees, I beg you will permit me to draw the attention of the profession thereto, with the view of obtaining the abolition or amendment of the "Sheriff's Act" in the proposed bill. Although there were many points in the old act which were objectionable, yet the grievances that arise from the one now in force are so numerous and obvious that nothing short of its abolition will give satisfaction to the public. Indeed, it is almost universally condemned by the chairmen of the several counties as well as by the professional men generally. The present unsatisfactory way of executing decrees inflicts a serious wrong upon the public, and imposes additional trouble and inconvenience, without any remuneration, upon the practitioners. Having had considerable experience in the working of the old and present acts, I would beg to bring under your notice a few of the many disadvantages under which both plaintiffs and defendants now labour. By 27th and 28th Vic., chap. 99, sec. 4, all decrees must now be executed by the sheriff and his bailiffs; and by sec. 16, the time allowed for such execution is two months. The sheriff too often allows this time (perhaps longer) to elapse previous to discharging his duty, and this gives rise to serious loss to suitors, many of whom are struggling tradesmen, by affording opportunities to defendants, if so disposed, to make away with their goods. No doubt, in such cases the sheriff would be liable, but this entails no end of trouble and delay upon the trader. When the decree is executed, it not unfrequently happens that the sheriff forgets to remit the cash received, and often makes his seizure at a time when the defendant is least of all able to meet his demand, greatly to the prejudice of the plaintiff, who thereby loses his customer; whereas, if the facts were made known to him, he would probably have given indulgence, and take a part of his debt. Very considerable annoyance and unprofitable labour is given to practitioners in satisfying the enquiries of their clients relative to the execution of their decrees, while they themselves are totally ignorant on the matter, not being able to get any information or return from the sheriff often for months after the decree is put in his hands. In many instances it happens the plaintiff is able to inform his attorney that the decree has been actually levied some months previously; and when the attorney is unable either to give him his money or any account of it, he imagines that it is being held by the attorney, while in reality it is in the hands of the sheriff and his bailiffs.

The fees chargeable by the sheriff are at present excessive, particularly in small sums, and where the defendant is a poor man the fees and expenses in many instances are more than the debt, and often his whole goods are sold by the sheriff, who is not empowered to make any settlement, and who will not leave till all his claims are satisfied. Thus it frequently happens that when a poor man's goods are sold out they are barely sufficient to defray the sheriff's fees alone, and the unfortunate debtor is no freer of his liability than at the outset. From the foregoing facts it will be seen that a great and grievous error was committed by the introduction of the Sheriffs' Act, and great loss inflicted on suitors generally, who often prefer to lose the debt to being put to such trouble and inconvenience. Were the plaintiffs allowed, as formerly, to employ their own bailiffs (of course, paying them proper remuneration,) great hardship to both plaintiffs and defendants would be obviated. Compromises in most instances could, and would, be effected, giving the debtor time to pay off his debt without the addition of the excessive costs now chargeable by the sheriff. Debts of fraudulent debtors could be more speedily and more satisfactorily secured than by giving the power into the hands of the sheriff, who, having the business of a whole county, is often too slow to do his duty. The sooner the existing state of the law in this matter is remedied the better; which would confer a great benefit upon county court practitioners, and more especially upon the public generally. I therefore trust that the attention of the Attorney and Solicitor-General may be directed to this subject, with a view to its speedy remedy. I am certain they will be supported by the public, the chairmen, and practitioners of the courts.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,
Belfast, 6th March, 1867. JOHN DINNEN.

THE COURTS, AND COURT PAPERS.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Amendment of Writ of Summons and Plaint before Service, after Service, after Filing, and after Defence.

Should any amendment be required in the plaint before service it will be allowed on motion (ex parte). The order usually being "To amend as advised." After service (before filing) it can also be amended in like manner; the order to amend directing re-service and payment of costs (if any) occasioned by the amendment. Should the plaint be served and filed, a like order, and in like manner, can be obtained, with the addition "that the officer be at liberty to hand back the writ (from the file) for the purpose of such re-service."

In exceptional cases, amendments of technical errors or omissions have been allowed, upon service of a copy of the order directing the amendments and dispensing with re-service; but the judges have uniformly ruled that in no case can any omission or error in the endorsement of service, as required by the 31st Section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1853, be rectified, therefore; in this case the writ must be re-served.

After defence, if notice of motion be served to set aside the writ, on the ground of irregularity any such notice should set out the irregularity complained of (179th Gen. Order, 1854). Should it appear manifest, a consent to amend ought at once to be served, offering liberty to defendant also to amend his defence if so advised, and to pay all costs occasioned by such amendments. Special demurrers being abolished, and sharp practice condemned, if such consent be not accepted, its production on the motion will materially affect the result thereof, with reference to the costs.

The foregoing paragraph is equally applicable to a defendant seeking to amend his defence.

And should a plaint be issued under the Bills of Exchange Act when the bill or note is more than six months due, though no defence be taken, but notice of motion served, the foregoing is also applicable, the consent being drawn to suit the circumstance of the case.

Although not coming strictly under the head of amendment, the following is by no means exceptional:—Should the affidavit and certificate, under 4 and 5 Wm. 4, c. 92, and General Orders, 1834, be not filed within one month from the date of the acknowledgment of the deed, an application must be made to a judge of the Common Pleas for liberty to the officer to receive the documents, grounded on a search (verified by affidavit), showing that no later act has been done by the party.

IN CHANCERY.

ADVERTISEMENT TO CREDITORS, LEGATEES, AND INCUMBRANCERS.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850." section 15.

In the Matter of
PATRICK JOSEPH KELLY,
Petitioner;
The Right Honourable the ATTORNEY-GENERAL and another, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all persons claiming to be Creditors or Pecuniary Legatees of Miss EMMA MARIA AYLMER, late of Hardwicke-street, in the County of the City of Dublin, Spinster, and formerly of Emmavale, Skerrymount, in the County of Meath, deceased, on or before the 4th day of APRIL next, to furnish in writing to P. J. KELLY, of No. 12, Blessington-street, Dublin, Petitioner, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allownnce or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

I also require all persons having claims affecting the real and freehold estate of the said Emma Maria Aylmer, to file same, at my Chambers, Inn's quay, in the city of Dublin, on or before the 15th day of April next, in order that same may be proceeded on, and proved according to the General Orders of the 19th May, 1857.

Dated this 15th day of February, 1867.

EDWARD LITTON, Master in Chancery.

HORAN & BOURKE, Solicitors for the Petitioner, No. 47, York-street.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY,

In the Matter of
of No. 4, Lower Dorset-street, in the County of the City of Dublin, Grocer and Spirit Dealer, a Bankrupt.

THE Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency will sit at the said Court, Four Courts, Dublin, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of MARCH, 1867, at the hour of Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the admission and proof of debts, and the final examination of the Bankrupt in this Matter.

Whereupon, if no prosecution shall have been directed by the Court, nor any charge of fraud entered on the proceedings, nor any objection to the signing of the Bankrupt's Certificate be entered in the Court, such Certificate will be forthwith prepared by the Chief Registrar, and signed by the Judge.

All Creditors are required to send to the Office of the Official Assignee, the affidavit of debt, or precise particulars of their claims, specifying any securities held by them, two days at least before said sitting, and of which sitting all persons concerned are to Take Notice.

Dated this 6th day of March, 1867.

HUGH DOYLE, Deputy Assistant Registrar.

HAMILTON & CRAIG, Agent to the Bankruptcy, No. 30, South Frederick-street, Dublin.

PATRICK BINGHAM, late of Patrick-street, in the City of Limerick, Grocer, a Bankrupt.

THE Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency will sit at the said Court, Four Courts, Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 22nd day of MARCH, 1867, at the hour of Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the admission and proof of debts, and the final examination of the Bankrupt in this Matter.

Whereupon, if no prosecution shall have been directed by the Court, nor any charge of fraud entered on the proceedings, nor any objection to the signing of the Bankrupt's Certificate be entered in the Court, such Certificate will be forthwith prepared by the Chief Registrar, and signed by the Judge.

All Creditors are required to send to the Office of the Official Assignee, the affidavit of debt, or precise particulars of their claims, specifying any securities held by them, two days at least before said sitting, and of which sitting all persons concerned are to Take Notice.

Dated this 5th day of March, 1867.

HUGH DOYLE, Deputy Assistant Registrar.

BLOOMFIELD & LEAHY, Agents to the Bankruptcy, No. 33, Kildare-street, Dublin.

MICHAEL MURPHY, Official Assignee, No. 33, Upper Ormond-quay.

TRUST DEED.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MARCH 16, 1867.

IN a recent number of this paper, we directed the attention of the public, and more especially of the Law Advisers of the Crown, to the ambiguity in the law as to the right of succession to the earnings of a feme coverte who had obtained in England, where she was deserted, a protection order, but who had afterwards removed to Ireland, and had there, by her separate industry, acquired some property, and died intestate, her husband surviving her. We were glad to find that our observations on this subject met the cordial approval of our able English contemporary, The Law Times, and we hope that such grievance will be remedied.

Another cause of complaint, it appears to us, is also open to married women, and one which we think is also well deserving of the attention of the law authorities in this country, as also in England. It is this:—A wife procures from the proper Ecclesiastical Court a divorce a mensâ et thoro, from her husband, either on account of his cruelty or of his adultery, and she also obtains from the same Court an order for permanent alimony. The husband is possessed of ample landed estates at the time of that order having been made; but as they are, or may be, in his absolute power, he may at once dispose of them, and, with the proceeds in his possession, abandon the jurisdiction, and so leave his unfortunate wife a pauper. Is not this a hard, if not a cruel, state of the law? And yet it appears to be so, merely on account of the Legislature having—whether designedly or not, we pause not to enquire—omitted from a section of an Act of Parliament the words "and shall have the effect of," or similar words. The Act of Parliament that we allude to is the 28th and 29th Vic., c. 43, s. 4, and it is this:—"Every decree or order for alimony "and costs, made or pronounced after the passing of "this act, by any court in Ireland, having authority for "that purpose, may be enforced in the same manner as "if the said decree or order was a judgment or order "of one of the superior courts of law in Ireland." Observe, the words in the section are "may be enforced;" and the important words "shall have the effect of," or similar words, are left out. The consequence is, that the decree or order for alimony may be enforced as to any arrears by means of writs, such as are issued by the common law courts; but as to creating a charge on the lands of the husband, so as to bind purchasers or mortgagees, and so afford a protection to the wife for her future gales of alimony, it is, we fear, valueless.

Digitized by Google

The husband may sell or mortgage the lands, and then the wife must trust to her remedy against his person, when, it may be, that such remedy is equally unavailable and valueless.

This point has been mooted in England before judges of the highest order. The first case that occurred was not precisely on the same point, but on an analogous one. It arose on a similar clause in the English Probate Act, 20 & 21 Vic., c. 77, s. 25, which enacts "that the Court shall have the like powers, &c., for enforcing all orders, decrees, and judgments made or given by the Court, &c., as are by law vested in the High Court of Chancery for such purposes, &c.;" and a similar clause is contained in the Irish Probate Act, 20 & 21 Vic., c. 79, s. 30.

A decree, it appears, was made in the Probate Court in England, and it was registered as a judgment in the Court of Common Pleas. By the decree an annuity was made payable to Mary Ann Bull, a defendant in the Probate Court, by the plaintiff therein, and the question then arose, first, before Sir J. Stuart, V.C., and next on appeal before Lord Westbury, Ch., whether such registration operated under the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 110, to make the decree a charge on the real estate of the person against whom such order was made; and it was held by both those learned judges that such registration of such decree had not the effect of making it a charge on the lands. That was the case of Pratt v. Bull, (1 De G. J. & Sm. 141; also 9 Jur. n. s., 239); and the words of the section which came before the Court there were nearly the same as those in the section to which we are inviting attention; and the judges clearly distinguish between the ordinary powers of enforcing decrees, and the effect of a decree being made a charge on the lands.

Another case also occurred in England, and on the corresponding clause in the English act, 20 & 21 Vic., c. 85, s. 52, which is similar to the one in the Irish act, save that the words Court of Chancery are used instead of Court of Law; and also that the words "put in execution" come after the words "shall be enforced," and which words (put in execution) are not in the Irish Act.

In that case, a decree for alimony had been registered in the Common Pleas in England, and a motion was made in that court to expunge from the roll the entry of the registration. The case was very fully discussed by the respective counsel, as well as by the judges,—and Pratt v. Bull was freely canvassed; but the judges unanimously held that they would not decide the point, and refused the motion; thus leaving the question, so far as that case went, undecided. Under these circumstances, we think that it is our duty to direct the attention of our readers to the state of the law on the subject, in the hope that a few plain words embodied in a short act of the Legislature, may relieve married ladies, who have been "more sinned against than sinning," from the unfortunate prospects before them, of either a poorhouse or "the cold hand of charity" to shelter and support them.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

THE HON. GEORGE DENMAN will, on the 2nd April next, move the second reading of the Bill for the abolition of this unjust tax. It is gratifying that the mover of this Bill did not yield to the insidious appeal made to him in such flattering terms by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the occasion of the introduction of the Bill, and declined to postpone the second reading until after the financial statement of the year had been made.

The profession do not seek for the repeal of this duty as a matter of favour, in the event of there being any surplus revenue. They demand its abolition as a matter of right. The principle of the Bill, and the justice of the measure have been already, on four different occasions, affirmed, upon division, by a large majority of the House of Commons; and it cannot now, except through neglect or mismanagement, fail to be carried triumphantly. On former occasions the Bill was lost owing to the financial statement for the year having been prepared, and the House being unwilling to embarrass the Chancellor of the Exchequer. This reason can, at the present period of the session, have no weight; and if the measure do not pass the profession will have only themselves to blame. Its success now depends solely upon the personal exertions of each individual member of the profession. If every solicitor throughout the United Kingdom brings his personal influence to bear upon the Members for his County, or others with whom he may be acquainted, to induce them to attend in their places in the House, on the second reading, the Bill must pass. We are aware that the different Law Societies are already doing everything in their power, by memorials, deputations, and otherwise, to ensure the success of the measure.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE appointment of Mr. WM. LANE JOYNT, the present Lord Mayor of Dublin, to the office of Deputy Lieutenant for the city of Dublin has given rise to a considerable amount of discussion. It is not our province to canvass the merits of any appointment, this Journal being purely professional, and all its energies devoted to the advancement of the interests of the profession, wholly regardless of personal or political feelings. On the subject of this appointment, however, we feel bound to notice an error which has found its way even into the columns of some of our contemporaries, who are generally well informed as to the matters upon which they write—namely, that a practising attorney cannot hold a "Commission of the Peace." This is a total misapprehension, there not being any such absurd law, and many practising attorneys holding at this moment a Commission of the Peace; amongst them we may mention Mr. John Litton, brother to Master Litton, who has for many years held the Commission of the Peace for the counties of Cavan and Fermanagh; and Mr. Joynt himself is a Magistrate for Clare. We merely mention these as prominent instances, there being many others; and we are acquainted with several members of the profession who have declined the honour. In England it is nothing uncommon to find a practising attorney holding the Commission of the Peace, and also being a Deputy Lieutenant.

At a Nisi Prius trial in Dublin last year, a gentleman was called as a witness, and the opposing counsel, intending to demolish him for having acted with rather a high hand, asked him:—"Are you an attorney?" "Yes, I am." "Are you a magistrate?" "Yes." "A deputy lieutenant, I hope?" "Yes, I am," was the answer, to the discomfiture of the counsel, and certainly a little to the surprise of the Court. The fact is, that these things and the true position of the profession are better understood in England. Happily, the profession in this country is rapidly advancing to a full measure of social position and importance with their brethren in England—and we trust we have heard the last of the exploded prejudice, that a practising attorney cannot be a magistrate or deputy lieutenant, or fill any other post of dignity and honour which is equally open to members of the other learned professions.

Last Saturday week we were enabled to inform our readers of the intentions of the Government with reference to the subdivision of the North-East Circuit, and the re-arrangement of the duties appertaining to the office of its late Crown Solicitor. That subdivision has since been accomplished, and accordingly the following districts have been assigned, at the salaries mentioned, to the solicitors whose names we append:—Louth and Monaghan—£600 a year, to Thomas Henry Parkinson, Esq. Down—£600 a year, to James Murland, Esq. Antrim (including Carrickfergus)—£600 a year, to James Greer, Esq.; and Armagh—£400 a year to John Kilkelly, Esq.

It is not often that a gentleman commences his official career amid such universal approval as that with which the appointment of Lucius H. Deering, Esq., as one of the Official Assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, has been already greeted. Amongst the professional and the mercantile classes his popularity seems to be unquestioned; whilst to the public at large he has long been favourably known as the courteous and obliging Government Agent for Foreign Office Passports from this country. There is a circle of more intimate friends who speak warmly of his deeds of charity on behalf of the orphan children of deceased Freemasons. Nor is he distinguished only by a charitable nature, sociability of disposition, and suavity of manners. His experience in business, as partner in the firm of Deering and Handcock, and as secretary and accountant to three or four Insurance companies, has been very considerable, and such as will, doubtless, peculiarly fit him for the post to which he has now been named. We therefore heartily join with our contemporaries in congratulating the community, and the Lord Chancellor, upon the manner in which the latter has dispensed his patronage on this occasion.

On enquiry this morning we are glad to learn that there is a considerable improvement in the health of the Lord Chancellor.

A Bill to Amend the Constitution, Practice, and Procedure of the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

RAILWAY — PUBLIC CONVENIENCE — BREACH OF CONTRACT.—Suit by landowner to compel a railway company to make a road and bridge and other structures over a certain specified portion of plaintiff's land in the manner in which they had by deed agreed to make them, the company having, on motion for an injunction, been allowed to proceed with the works in another way, under the usual undertaking. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants, who were bound by the contract "to interfere with and obstruct the then present lodge-road as little as possible, consistent with the deviation thereof thereby authorised," had not made their railway at the level and in the direction of the line mentioned in the plans of their works; and that the bridge and road which they had constructed were not in accordance with the specifications in the contract, and in other respects interfered with the plaintiff's access to the house and grounds. The M. R. dismissed the bill without prejudice to the plaintiff's bringing such action or actions for breach of contract by the defendants as he might be advised: Held, on appeal (reversing the decree of the M. R.), that, even admitting that the road and bridge could not be made in the way laid down in the plan in the deed without going over the plaintiff's land, yet, as the company had before the M. R. given their consent to that, the objection was gone. Then as to danger to the public, that was not to deprive the plaintiff of his right to enforce the agreement. If the injunction had been granted the railway could not have been made, and the utmost inconvenience which the public could suffer now would be that the traffic must be suspended. The company had deliberately entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, and it did not follow that the injury occasioned by the breach could be compensated for by damages. The plaintiff retained his right to have the agreement specifically performed: (Raphael v. The Thames Valley Railway, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1 L. C.)

DEBENTURE-HOLDERS.—The debenture-holder, who has obtained a judgment for the amount of his debt and interest, secured by a mortgage of the company, will be considered only as a trustee for the other debenture-holders in the same position as himself, and an inquiry will be directed in chambers if it will be for the benefit of the debenture-holders generally that a receiver, who had appeared in the cause, should interpose to make the judgment available for all: (Bowen v. The Brecon &c., Railway Comyany, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 8. V. C. W.)

ATTORNEYS—PARTNERSHIP—AUTHORITY.—In the absence of evidence of particular or general authority to draw, indorse, or accept bills of exchange, or of any recognition of the particular bill, an action is not maintainable against an attorney upon a bill of exchange indorsed by his partner in the name of the firm, on the ground laid down by Hedley v. Bainbridge, 3 Q. B. 320; 11 L. J., N. S. 293, Q. B., that an attorney has no authority to draw, accept, or indorse bills in the name of the partnership so as to bind his partner. A post-dated cheque, if it be post-dated, not by mistake, but intentionally, is in effect for all practical purposes a bill of exchange; and, therefore, where an attorney on the 13th July drew and handed to the plaintiff a cheque in the name of the partnership firm for £90, dated the 20th July, and payable to bearer, and received from the plaintiff in exchange for such cheque £80, for the purpose, as he informed the plaintiff, of a client of the firm, it being arranged that plaintiff was to have £10 for the week's forbearance: it was held that this was not distinguishable from giving a bill of exchange at seven days' date, and consequently, according to Hedley v. Bainbridge (ubi sup.), it was a transaction not binding on the defendant, the non-assenting partner of the firm, and no action was maintainable against him thereupon: (Forster v. Mackreth, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 23. Ex.)

SECOND AGREEMENT.—In order that a second agreemen which is not within the Statute of Frauds, may supersede a prior agreement which is, it must amount to an absolute and not an implied rescission: (Noble v. Ward, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 672. Ex. Ch.)

NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING.—A declaration alleging negligence must show a duty upon the part of the defendant, otherwise it is bad on demurrer: (Gantret v. Egerton, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 17. C. P.)

BILL OF SALE.—A bill of sale duly registered, but afterwards abandoned, has no operation: (Robertson v. Morley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 7. V. C. W.)

THE LAW OF BANKERS' CHEQUES.

From The Law Times.

A new point arose for discussion during the last Guildhall after-sittings in the Court of Common Pleas, before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and a Special Jury, as to the reasonable time for presenting a banker's cheque, in the casè of Fenwick and another v. Dewer. The facts shortly were, that defendant, on Friday, 22nd June, 1866, gave plaintiff's clerk a check for £187, payable to order on the bank of Sir Charles Price and Co., and crossed "Barclay and Co." The plaintiff, Fenwick, was out of town, so was his partner; the cheque was sent by post to the plaintiff Fenwick on the day it was received, and reached London on the following Monday morning indorsed, but on the Monday Sir Charles Price's Bank did not re-open; this action wa now brought against the drawer. The defence set up was first, that no notice of dishonour had been given; this the Judge overruled, no evidence being given of prejudice thereby, but giving leave to defendant to move. Th second defence was, that the cheque had not been presented within reasonable time, that it should have been presented on the Saturday. Sir George Honyman, Q.C., for plaintiff, asked that this question might be left as a matter of fact to the jury. The learned Judge, that there might be no difficulty in finally settling the question, consented to do so, giving defendant leave to move, asking the jury whether in their view additional time for presentment should be given. first, where a cheque was made payable to order; secondly, where it was crossed. The question was rendered more vague for the jury by the fact that neither party was able to give evidence of the present usage of the city of London. This usage has been declared in Boddington v. Schlenker (4 B. & Ad. 752) to be, that a banker sends a crossed cheque to the clearing house the day he receives it, if received in time; this the Judge ruled could not be received as evidence of the present usage. Now, the general and well-established propositions of law, as stated by the learned judge are, first, when the drawee and the holder of the cheque live in the same town the holder has all the business hours of the day after he receives it to present it; secondly, if they do not live in the same town, the holder has until the next day to send it by post to his agent, and he again has the whole of the business hours of the next day after its receipt within which to present it. He further told the jury that he held the fact of a cheque being made payable to order did not give any extension of the time for presentment; and that the fact of a clerk having the power to accept bills per proc. did not enable him to sign cheques. As to the question whether the crossing of a cheque should have the effect of increasing the time, the Judge said it was clear, had the cheque not been crossed, it should have been presented on the Saturday; if it had been crossed by plaintiff he could not thus have extended his own time; but in the present case it was crossed by defendant with plaintiff's consent, for that was the usual course of business between them. Finally, his opinion was, that where a cheque was crossed by the drawer, the holder should have the whole of the next day to pay it into his banker, and the banker the whole of the next day after he receives it to send it to the clearing-house. The jury found for the plaintiff, expressing their opinion that in both cases additional time should be given.

The opinion of the learned judge on both points seems to be the reasonable and correct one. In the first place the endorsing of a cheque is the work of a moment, and assuredly, as the holder has the evening on which it is paid, and the whole of the business hours of the next day to do it in, it would be absurd to allow him additional time for this purpose. It is true he may be from home, but this cannot be admitted for a moment as a ground for extension; for put a wide case—he might be in the Highlands, or on the Continent, and is the time to be extended till a reply be got from him thence?

It is not unreasonable to expect that any one engaged in trade shall either be present within the two days to indorse cheques, or leave a clerk with authority to do so; in the second case, again, the holder of a crossed cheque, having the whole of the day after he receives it to pay it into his bankers, may do so at a time too late for its being conveniently dispatched to the clearing house. So, on the whole, it is reasonable that they too should have an additional day. Of this there can be no doubt, that where we have no established usage, the law must be founded on the consideration of what is most convenient to the mercantile community, and on this principle the learned judge evidently based his decision.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, March 14.

COURT OF CHANCERY (Ireland) BILL.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL for IRELAND, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said that in 1861 and 1862 commissions were issued to some of the most eminent judges and practitioners of England and Ireland, to inquire into the practice and procedure of the courts of law and equity. Among the members of the Commission were the present Lord Romilly, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland, the Lord Justice of Appeal, Lord Cairns, the Attorney-General for Ireland of that day, and Vice-Chancellor Wood, and having made their inquiry they reported in July, 1863. In consequence of that report Bills were prepared by his hon. and learned friends on the opposite side of the House, and it was one of those Bills of which he had now the honour to move the second reading. The object of the Bill was to reform the practice of the Court of Chancery in Ireland by assimilating it to the practice which prevailed in England. The measure was based upon the unanimous report of the Commission, and was in almost every particular the same as the Bill which had been introduced by his right hon. and learned friend the member for Portarlington. He was happy to say that he had always been a strong advocate of the measure, and in support of that assertion he might refer to the evidence which he had given on the subject, having come to the conclusion from his experience in the Court of Chancery in Ireland that such a reform was imperatively required. He believed he had the concurrence in that remark of as good an authority as any one could be, his hon. and learned friend the member for Mallow. When the Bill was introduced last Session it received in its earlier stages opposition from some who were then members of the House. If they were now present they would be able to explain the grounds on which they opposed the Bill in its earlier stage; but when it came on for second reading on the 14th of May last year the present Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in Ireland (Mr. Whiteside) stated that upon due consideration he withdrew his opposition, and was anxious to give the measure his best support. He begged to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

Mr. SULLIVAN, in supporting the second reading, said he thought it his duty to relate to the House the circumstances under which this Bill had been delayed in its passage through the House for more than three years. The Royal Commission, upon which, as his hon. and learned friend stated, the most eminent lawyers of England and Ireland sat, reported in 1863 that the practice of the Court of Chancery in Ireland required serious amendment, and suggested what that amendment should be. He need scarcely say, that as a matter of fact, the administration of the law was of the highest moment to every subject—that it should be simple, that the rights of parties should be quickly adjudicated upon, and that this should be done at the smallest possible expense. The practice of the Irish Court of Chancery, which the Commission condemned, was vicious in the extreme in all these respects. The delays and expenses were enormous, and the decisions were slow, not from want of attention or promptitude on the part of the judges, but because the system was so embarrassed and complicated that it was almost impossible that the rights of parties could be adjudicated upon quickly. Nothing more ruinous could be imagined than the practice of the Irish Chancery Court, and the Royal Commission recommended that it should be assimilated to that of England —a recommendation which was supported by the whole Chancery Bar of Ireland. Notwithstanding that, a Bill similar to this, introduced in 1863, met with the most decided opposition of the present Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, and another hon. and learned gentleman, who now filled the office of puisne judge in that court. The effect of that opposition was that the Government could not pass the Bill, which, from the same cause, was also thrown out in 1865 and 1866. There was great reason to complain of the conduct on this question of those two right hon. and learned gentlemen, whom he could not say he regretted not to see present (laughter), because they were enjoying high judicial offices in Ireland, on the ground that they offered this opposition without the qualification of personal experience. This was the Bill of the late Government; it was of immense importance to pass it; it was of vital importance to the profession; and he would support it and promote its progress in every possible way.

MR. WALPOLE hoped that, instead of going back to former transactions, they would all do their best to pass into law a measure which, by universal admission, would prove a useful act of legislation.

The Bill was then read a second time.

NOTES OF CASES.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by J. Lowry Whittle, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Lauder v. Seery.

Before Fitzgerald, Hughes, and Deasy, B.B.

Jan. 17.—Ejectment on Title—Landed Estates' Court Conveyance—Notice to Quit.

The plaintiff claimed under a Landed Estates' Court conveyance of the 5th June, 1866. This deed conveyed the lands to the plaintiff subject to a tenancy in the defendant, of which the gale days were the 1st May and 1st November. The schedule to the conveyance contained the following, under the heading of "Tenure and observations":—"Tenant from year to year; tenancy determinable on the 1st November in each year. Notice to quit on the 1st November, 1865, has been served on this tenant."

Leslie Montgomery, for the defendant, contended that the notice to quit having expired in November, 1865, and the deed of June, 1866, having conveyed subject to a tenancy from year to year, such a tenancy was now subsisting, and the statement in the schedule as to the notice to quit was a mere "observation."

Palles, Q.C., and Bewley, contra.

The Court held the plaintiff entitled to recover. The conveyance described the tenancy as one from year to year, but liable to be determined by a notice to quit, should such prove to be valid.

March 1.—Liberty to Withdraw Defences—Delay—Costs.

Shekleton moved, on the part of the defendant in this case, for liberty to withdraw the defences filed, and to ubstitute others. The action was for obstruction of a watercourse. The defences originally filed were traverses of the acts complained of and justifications under different rights; issues were knit on them, and notice of trial given, on February 23, for the coming assizes for the county of Cork, and abstract and issues served for February 26. Defendant served a consent to withdraw the defences filed and substitute ones of payment into Court; and, providing that the defendant would go to trial at the ensuing Assizes, and then pay the plaintiff all costs incurred by reason of the defences withdrawn, and with it a notice of motion for March 1 to the same effect, the motion not to be moved if the consent was signed. The plaintiff sent back the consent unsigned.

Shekleton now moved pursuant to the notice.

Woodlock, contra.—The consent does not offer to return our abstract and issues amended, nor to pay the costs of our notice of trial. The consent was served after we had sent our case for advice of proofs to counsel. An attorney should not be called upon to make such a material alteration in the record without the protection of the order of the Court.

Fitzgerald, B.—The motion must be granted, but I cannot say the plaintiff was not justified in appearing here. The consent served does not offer to return the abstract and issues amended. There is force also in the observation that the alteration in the record is a very serious one for an attorney to make without the order of the Court. Under the circumstances I think that the plaintiff ought to have his costs as his costs in the cause. The defendant not to have any costs.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Goods of Gordon.

Feb. 14.—Practice—Letters of Administration limited to substantiate Proceedings in Chancery.

Petition should be filed in Chancery before the application is made to the Court of Probate.

J. A. Phillips applied on the part of Robert Glenny for a grant of administration of the goods of the deceased limited to proceedings intended to be taken in Chancery, to enforce specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a rent charge entered into by the deceased and his son with Robert Glenny. The deceased had died in April, 1866; he had left a will, but no executor was named in it. The next of kin were cited by Glenny to accept or refuse a grant, but did not appear.

Keatinge, J.—It is not the practice of the Court to make a grant to substantiate proceedings to be taken in Chancery. The proceedings in Chancery must be actually pending. Let the motion therefore be renewed when a petition shall be actually filed.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Before Judge Lynch.

In the matter of the Estate of C. M. Wilson.

Feb. 25, 28.—Order of Priority of the Costs of Sale of an Insolvent Estate where the Owner is the Petitioner.

In this case the solicitors having carriage of the sale objected to the schedule, on the ground that the costs of sale were placed No. 23 upon it, instead of being placed in priority to the incumbrances.

Flanagan, Q.C. (with him Leech), in support of the objection, stated that a different practice had prevailed in the different courts. Judge Hargreave and Judge Dobbs holding that the owner was entitled to his costs as a first charge on the estate, and Judge Longfield being of a different opinion. The first Incumbered Estates' Act gave the petitioner his costs as a first charge, whether he was owner or incumbrancer. Subsequent statutes took away that right in the case of an incumbrancer, and placed his costs in the same priority with his demand. The view taken by Judge Hargreave and Judge Dobbs of the case of an owner was the right one.

O'Brien, for the sisters of the owner, contra.

S. Walker, for a subsequent incumbrancer, contra.

Leech replied.

Lynch, J., said he would confer with Dobbs, J.

Feb. 28.—Lynch, J., delivered a written judgment, stating that a different opinion on this question had existed amongst the judges of the Landed Estates' Court. That the question was of importance only in the case of an insolvent estate, that the first Incumbered Estates' Act treated the costs of sale as salvage or necessarily incident charges; that they were removed out of that category by the subsequent acts; that by the analogy of the statute and according to the practice of courts of equity the owner was only entitled to the costs in the same priority with any residue coming to him; that in the case of an insolvent estate the owner was virtually a stranger dealing with the property of others, that though it was said an owner could more expeditiously bring the estate to sale, on the other hand, it appeared doubtful to him if an owner should always have the power to do so, perhaps against the wishes, but certainly at the expense, of the incumbrancers, and it was also doubtful if a sale so circumstanced would be conducted in the manner most advantageous for the creditors; that these latter considerations, however, were speculations, and that if he felt more doubt than he did, he should hesitate before he arrived at a conclusion different from the opinion of Longfield, J.; that that opinion had been for a long time the law of that court.

Objection overruled.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Miller, J.

Re Marks.

Feb., 1867.—Petition by Trader for adjudication against himself—Opposition by Creditor.

Where a Trader petitions for Adjudication against himself, and is opposed by a sole Creditor on the ground that it would be inequitable to take the Costs of a Bankruptcy out of an Estate to which that Creditor was entitled, that Estate not being sufficient to pay him his debt, if there is no fraud attributable to the Trader he will be entitled to obtain the Adjudication, so that he may be in a position to obtain his Certificate and get into Trade again.

In this case Kernan, Q.C., applied on the part of the trader to have him adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition. It was admitted that all the legal requisites to entitle the trader to have himself adjudicated bankrupt upon his own petition existed.

Heron, Q.C., on the part of a creditor, opposed the application. He admitted that all the legal requisites existed, and that the trader had assets amounting to about eight hundred pounds; still, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, he thought the adjudication ought not to be granted. There was a sum of £2,500 due to his client; Marks owed no other debt but a small sum for rent, which the creditor was willing to pay upon having the chattels assigned to him; it would be inequitable to put the creditor to the costs of a bankruptcy under such circumstances.

Miller, J., said he thought where no fraud existed, and in the present case there was none proved, the trader had a right to take advantage of the provisions of the statute enabling him to obtain an adjudication on his own petition. In the present case the trader was examined, and the examination satisfied him that the case was one of merits: a few days before his failure he made the opposing creditor a payment of upwards of £800, and there being no fraud or mala fides attributable to him, he was entitled to an adjudication, so that he might obtain his certificate and go into trade again.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.

Reported by W. Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Kerry Assizes—Spring, 1867.

M'Namara, Appellant; Great Southern and Western Railway Company, Respondent.

The process was for not delivering pigs which appellant brought to the Farranfore station, on the Great Southern and Western Railway, to be carried to Cork. It appeared that there had been a fair near Farranfore, and that, on the fair day, appellant, who had bought 58 pigs, brought them to the station and put them into some empty waggons, as he asserted, with the assistance of the railway porters. but that he had not booked them—that afterwards they were taken out by the order of the station master, and pigs belonging to other persons put in and sent off—that next day 46 of his pigs were sent off, and the remaining 12 not until the second day—that he lost his market, and that the pigs were injured, and some of them died. The station master deposed, that, on the day before the fair, a pig dealer, named Cronin, gave him notice that he would want 5 or 6 waggons—that he accordingly procured 5 waggons, which was all he could get—and that, when appellant came to him, he told him that all the waggons were engaged—that when he found appellant had put his pigs in the waggon he ordered them to be taken out, which was accordingly done—that 46 of appellant's pigs were sent off by the next cattle train—and that it was owing to appellant and other men at the station fighting amongst themselves that the remainder were not sent off at the same time—and that he believed that all the pigs sent off in the 5 engaged waggons were Cronin's. He admitted there was no contract to bind Cronin to pay anything if he did not send any pigs to the station to be carried; but stated that the company had had dealings with him, and received notice from him before.

It was urged for the appellant that Cronin had never engaged the waggons; that he only said, I may want 5 or 6; and, therefore, when the plaintiff came to the station and offered to pay the fare for his pigs—and the company had waggons and facilities for taking them—they were bound to do so, notwithstanding the notice from Cronin.

FITZGERALD, J.—If I were to rule that point of law in the appellant's favour it would deprive the company of the power of acting on the notice which Cronin had very prudently given them the night before. The notice was, that he would want 5 or 6 waggons. I will not give any decision which would deprive the company of the power of exercising their discretion in such a case, when, in fact, it was in consequence of Cronin's notice that there were any waggons at the station at all. I think the company were justified in acting as they did, even though there was no contract with Cronin, and were entitled to give him precedence, his notice having been given bona fide to the servants of the company, and acted upon bona fide by the company.

Though common carriers are bound to carry, they are only bound to do so if they can be reasonably expected to have waggons at the station from which the cattle are to be carried, and they are only bound to forward them with reasonable diligence. I think, therefore, that the chairman was right, there being no contract with appellant, and there being no breach of duty in giving precedence to the party who had given notice the night before. If there had been any trick, or connivance, or caprice in giving the waggons it would be a different matter.

Dismiss affirmed.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

The Practice of the Court of Probate and of Quarter Sessions in Ireland, respecting Testamentary and Intestate Business; with an Appendix of Statutes, New Rules, and Copious Bills of Costs, &c. By WILLIAM ROWLEY MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law. 2nd edition. Dublin: T. Connolly, Upper Ormond-quay.

This is the second edition of a text book which is now well known to both branches of the legal profession, and deservedly stands high in the estimation of the practitioners and Judge of the Court of Probate. The promulgation of the new rules of February, 1865, and the abolition of the former rules and orders, both in contentious and non-contentious business, have rendered the first edition of Dr. Miller's treatise of little use as a book of reference. The present edition is not merely an adaptation of the former work to the new rules, but contains, in addition, a vast amount of valuable original matter.

The author has spared no exertions to make this treatise accurate and complete; and although some of the subjects—for instance, testamentary capacity—are too extensive for a practical treatise of this nature, the practitioner is furnished with able summaries on this and other difficult topics connected with testamentary practice, and abundant references to the different learned writers who have treated specially of such particular branches of the law.

Dr. Miller's great experience in the Prerogative Court has proved of good service to him in the execution of this important work; for it will be borne in mind that the Act of 1857 provides that the practice of the Court shall, except where otherwise provided by the Act or by the rules or orders, be so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, according to the practice then prevailing in the Prerogative Court. We have had occasion, in a former number, to advert to the dearth of literary productions in this country, and we mentioned as one of the principal causes the distracting demands on an Irish barrister's time. Dr. Miller has, however, devoted considerable attention to this particular department of law, and the result is the production of a work which ranks second to none, either in this country or in England, in point of accuracy, ability, and research. Some objections have been urged against it on the grounds of its being too voluminous. We confess the convenience of having under one's hand the statutes themselves so constantly referred to (especially in the case of country practitioners), effects a saving of time and trouble which amply compensates for any trifling extra cost. As we intend to recur again to this subject, and to notice the book more in detail, we content ourselves with saying that no legal practitioner can dispense with Dr. Miller's treatise; and as its merits have been already tested, we can more confidently recommend it, as affording a concise, clear, and at the same time, exhaustive exposition of the law and practice of the Court of Probate in Ireland.

A Concise Guide to the Practice of the Court of Probate, Ireland, in Contentious Cases (intended for the use of Solicitors and their Assistants). By GEORGE HILL SMITH, First General Clerk in Her Majesty's Court of Probate, Ireland. Dublin: Hendrick & Co.

The object of this hand-book is to present, in a cheap and compendious form, an outline of contentious proceedings in the Court of Probate. The work is designed for the use of solicitors and their assistants, to save them the necessity of applying at the Registry for information as to every step of procedure in testamentary matters and causes. It does not profess to treat of common form business, and merely glances at the subject of the Assistant Barrister's jurisdiction, when pointing out the mode of procedure necessary to initiate proceedings in the County Court.

At page 4 this passage occurs:—"For although a suitor is empowered to select whether he shall have his cause tried by the superior or inferior tribunal, the Court has, hitherto, in every possible way, discouraged the practice of incurring the heavy expense of a trial in Dublin, when the circumstances are such as to give the cheaper and more local tribunal power to deal with the case." If this statement is intended to convey that a suitor can, as a matter of right, insist upon having a case, which comes within the assistant barrister's jurisdiction, tried by the Court of Probate, we do not think the 63rd section of the Act is capable of that construction; it provides that applications for probate and administration may be made through the principal registry, no matter where the deceased had his fixed place of abode; but if contentious matter arises out of such application, the Court of Probate may send the cause to the barrister's court.

At page 20 Mr. Smith says, "If the witness resides out of Ireland the ordinary subpœna ad testificandum may be of no use to enforce his attendance, and a commission be the only mode available to the parties for obtaining the evidence." This question has been solemnly argued in this country, and the judge was of opinion that although it was the intention of the Legislature to give to the Court of Probate all the powers of the Courts of Chancery and Law, yet that it was not sufficiently clear that it had the power to issue a writ to compel the attendance of witnesses residing in England upon the trial of an issue in Ireland. In Coote and Tristam's book on the Probate Practice in England (5th Edition), Doctor Tristam, at page 266, suggests no doubt as to the power of the judge to compel the personal attendance of witnesses resident out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Thus it would seem the point may be yet doubtful enough to warrant the language used in the passage referred to. In the appendix are given the rules, forms, and a schedule of court and professional fees (classified and arranged) applicable to contentious cases.

The work does very accurately, and in a thoroughly practical way, what it professes to do, and will be found a handy and portable guide book in contentious business.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE COUNTY COURTS OF IRELAND.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR—The law and practice of the Civil Bill Courts of Ireland require many an amendment besides those noticed in your last week's number. The difficulties raised by amateur legislators—such as my Lord Clanricarde—against recovery of their just debts by creditors in Ireland, operate most unjustly. We must bear in mind that, in this country, large transactions are the exception and not the rule, as compared with the business dealings in England and Scotland; and yet what can be more unrighteous than to tie the hands of a struggling creditor for perhaps three months, and to prevent, during that period, his recovery of his trade debts under £20. In Ireland, a farmer or trader may be seriously inconvenienced or ruined by the return to him, unpaid, of two or three small endorsements sent back to him dishonoured, discounted by him at a bank, or, perhaps, endorsed to a warehouseman at London or Manchester, or a merchant at Dublin, Belfast, or Cork. The bank, by joining two or three bills, or the warehouseman or merchant, by adding a book account, may possibly, in the superior courts, in a fortnight press to execution or bankruptcy against the trader, but the poor creditor is without a remedy until the next Civil Bill Court sits, two or three months off. His debtor may be preparing to abscond, and may be selling his assets, but still the creditor, for a sum less than £20 can do nothing; nor can the endorsee of a bill or note aid him by suing the primary debtor. The statute law, as it stands, provides no county court which sits more frequently than once a quarter, "an annexe" of the quarter sessions criminal court, and yet it imposes a heavy penalty on any creditor who, for a debt of less than £20, dares to sue in the superior courts at Dublin. If the creditor and debtor reside in the same county no costs whatever are recoverable; if in different counties, half costs only can be enforced, the other half the creditor has to pay out of his debt, if he get it, or the whole if the debt be lost. But this is not all. The Civil Bill Court cannot, even on a bill of exchange, promissory note, or cheque, enter a "judgment by default." In the superior courts, no defence is allowed to an action on these negotiable instruments unless by "special leave of a judge." In the inferior court no decree can be granted even in undefended cases without strict proof. Is not this a gross hardship? The evil extends further and higher, and affects even the wealthiest creditors in Ireland and Great Britain. They would gladly use the Irish county courts for recovery of small debts, but they are equally unsuited for their purposes, and they are forced to use the superior courts at Dublin, to the loss of all parties. If the debts be recovered, the debtors are mulcted in half the costs of an expensive suit, the creditors in the other half; if the money be lost, or both parties are in the same county, the creditor has to pay the whole costs. Why are creditors thus forced to abandon the proper tribunal—the Civil Bill Courts?

First—As stated because these courts sit but quarterly.

Secondly—Because throughout Ireland the several courts of the different counties sit concurrently, and creditors cannot possibly prove their cases in remote localities on the same day.

Thirdly—Because even on bills, notes, or cheques, the debts must be proved, the courts gives no judgment by default.

Fourthly—Because witnesses expenses are not usually allowed.

Fifthly—Because from the miserable scale of costs allowed, the profession of attorneys cannot generally practice in the Civil Bill Courts.

Debtors and creditors all suffer by the present deplorable system. Before the procedure of the superior courts be further tampered with the Civil Bill tribunal should be reformed. As in England, the judges of these courts, in fixed circuits, should sit once every two or three weeks; a liberal scale of fees should be adopted; and judgment by default should be entered and executions issued "in the office," if no defence filed; and a bankruptcy jurisdiction should be added for small estates. If the county courts be thus amended, and tried for a few years, a better opinion can be formed of the changes of practice required in the superior courts of law I have enquired into the statistics of judgments entered in the law courts for the last two months and find the number of judgments entered from the first January was about 688

Of which there were entered on bonds and warrants, ...	145
Leaving judgments entered in adverse suits,	543
Of these the cases within jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Courts were	331
Leaving of suits not cognizable by the county courts only	212

being at the rate for each court of about 35 judgments monthly, and these chiefly in undefended cases. Of the 331 suits, properly county court cases, half costs only were awarded in 156, and in these a loss of above £500 was imposed on plaintiffs (or, perhaps, on their attorneys) for not suing in courts which are, in truth, unavailable for the purpose, and this loss is quite irrespective of the much larger sum lost in suits wherein writs were issued and served, and which were settled before judgment. It is very obvious that were there in Ireland properly constituted local tribunals for recovery of debts, the reforms in the practice of the Superior Courts of Law would be very different to those now proposed to be effected.

Yours, truly,

March 7th, 1867. HENRY OLDHAM.

THE CIVIL BILL COURTS.

To THE EDITOR OF

"THE IRISH LAW TIMES, AND SOLICITORS' JOURNAL."

SIR—The fourth number of your ably conducted paper having been kindly forwarded to me, I observe in the leading article statements condemnatory of the present mode of executing Civil Bill Decrees under the recent Sheriff's Act, alleging that, owing to the statutes abolishing arrest for debt, and the Act in question, the debts of the county courts have been rendered practically irrecoverable. In the concluding part of the article, you state that you have no doubt this state of things could be amended, and that an improved method of executing decrees could easily be suggested and carried out more satisfactorily to the creditor, and less oppressive to the debtor. You will excuse my taking exception to these statements.

In the first place, I may state that, anxious to give the new machinery every fair trial, I made the best arrangements I could when the Act came into operation, and I can state that, in one county at least, in the first year, there was collected and paid over upwards of four thousand pounds of such debts, and in the last year more than three thousand pounds; and this without being subjected to any action except in cases of disputed claims to goods, which are inevitable, owing to a defect which was pointed out to the introducer of the measure, viz., the want of an interpleader section properly applicable to the altered state of the law.

With respect to an improvement in the system which you consider so feasible, you would be conferring a benefit by giving an outline of such amendment, so that it might be well considered; but you must bear in mind that frequent legislation has been tried respecting it. I am far from saying it is perfect; but from long experience, I would say there is one difficulty which appears to me insurmountable, and that is the expense of such collection of small debts which must, as the law at present stands, fall on the debtor. It is necessary to employ as trustworthy and respectable men as can be procured, both for the safety of debtor and creditor. Now, in Ireland, it is well known the very name of bailiff is abhorred, and those bearing it are subjected to all manner of obloquy and reproach. The price of all kinds of labour has very much increased of late, and to induce men to enter on an office so distasteful an extra price must be paid. Hence the difficulty. I know that in most of the counties in Ireland the sheriffs give not only the keeper's fees provided by the Act, but the poundage also (which should be an emolument of their office, and go into their own pockets) to these bailiffs as an inducement for faithful service, and yet most of the irregularities, delays, and complaints arise from the rapacity and negligence of these men, while the trouble of incessantly looking after them falls on the sheriff.

There is but one suggestion that occurs to me, and that one was made to, but rejected by, the framers of the measure, namely, to give plaintiffs the option of still employing special bailiffs, and not driving them to execution by the sheriff. This, and a properly framed interpleader section, would be some improvement.

As it is, if this much abused Act has, in some degree, put a stop to the mischievous system of small credit at usurious profit, I believe it has fulfilled one of the objects for which it was passed, and has proved a real benefit to the poorer classes in Ireland.

Apologizing for trespassing so much on your space,

I am,
Yours obediently,
A Sub-Sheriff.

To the Editor of the "Irish Law Times."

Dear Sir—I have read with much pleasure your able article of 23rd February, on the County Courts of Ireland. I awaited your issue of the 2nd inst. to see if the proposed Bill would remedy the evils complained of. In my humble opinion it does not sufficiently do so.

It proposes only to give jurisdiction in unsettled partnership accounts where the original capital did not exceed £200, and does not provide for a recovery of any claim where the working capital might have exceeded that sum, though the balance sued for might be much less than £40.

By the second clause it requires lodgments to be made in the Bank of Ireland. There are many counties in Ireland, such as this, where there is no branch of this bank; this would therefore be very inconvenient.

The third clause gives a very summary remedy against an innocent debtor to a firm which is altogether unnecessary, and in my opinion, very injurious.

The bill does not propose to give jurisdiction in cases of slander, libel, crim. con., and breach of promise of marriage, which the public much require.

It does not give a remedy by appeal, as suggested by you, nor does it provide for an increased scale of fees; and were the proposed bill put forward by the profession it would be taken to be their only objection to the existing laws which regulate county courts.

I have taken the liberty of forwarding for your consideration a draft bill which I have prepared, and which I fancy will be likely to meet the approval of county court practitioners.

I am, dear Sir, very truly yours.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE SOCIETY OF THE ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS OF IRELAND,

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

INSTRUCTIONS TO APPRENTICES.

1.—Apprentices are informed that the necessity still exists for keeping Terms in Dublin as heretofore, during period of their apprenticeship, and that as the Lectures which they are also required to attend, are delivered by the Professor of Law during each Term, they can thus keep Terms and attend Lectures concurrently.

2.—Each Apprentice must attend two courses of the Lectures delivered by the Professor of Law; each course commences in Michaelmas Term, and is continued during Hilary, Easter, and Trinity Terms, and portions of the respective Vacations; each Apprentice must thus attend Two Legal Years of Lectures, each year commencing in Michaelmas Term.

3.—Apprentices are referred for detailed information as to the Lectures, to the 21st of the Rules, made pursuant to the 29 and 30 Vic., c. 84, which states the time of the commencement of each Session, and the number of Lectures to be delivered in each Session; also to the 26th and 27th of said Rules, which specify the courses of Lectures to be attended by each Apprentice, and for which attendance Certificates must be produced, and the Council desire it to be distinctly understood that they will require from Apprentices a strict compliance with said Rules.

4.—A Notice stating the day on which the Lectures of each Session will commence, will be posted previously thereto, in the Entrance Hall of the Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, and also published in the Irish Law Times and Solicitors' Journal.

5.—Two Lectures in each week of the session are delivered on Tuesday and Friday mornings, commencing at 20 minutes before Ten o'clock, a.m., and lasting for one hour.

6.—All Apprentices bound since the passing of the 29th and 30th Vic., c. 84, are reminded that their Indentures, and all assignments thereof, must be enrolled and registered in, at least, one Law Court, and in the Court of Chancery, in the manner and within the period of Six months next after the execution of said Indentures and Assignments respectively, as set forth in the 12th section of said Act; and that within Three months after such enrolment and registration, they must be produced to the Secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, to be entered by him pursuant to the 29th section, under the penalty upon each Apprentice therein contained.

7.—The period of service of each Apprentice reckons from the day of the date of his Indentures, and no person who shall have been, or shall be bound as an Apprentice, either before or after the passing of the 29 and 30 Vic., c. 84, can get credit for any particular Term, as part of his Apprenticeship, unless his Indentures shall have been executed within, or previous to, said Term.

By Order,
John H Goddard,
Secretary.

HENRY ROBERT GREENE, Chief Clerk.

TOWNLEY WM. HARDMAN, Solicitor.

Proposals for the purchase of all or any of the Lots will be received by the Solicitor having the carriage of the Sale, up to the 15th day of April next, and if approved of will be submitted to the Honourable Judge Lynch, for acceptance.

The above Lands are well circumstanced in all respects, and are situate within a few miles of Clones, Ballybay, and Newbliss, all important towns, where markets for flax, corn, butter, and pork (the principal agricultural produce in that part of the country) are constantly held. There are also Railway Stations at each of these towns. The Lands are Let at moderate rents, and are occupied by a solvent and industrious class of tenantry, who have considerable interest in their holdings. The Lands comprise both tillage and pasture, and are, for the most part, of good average quality.

LOT 1.

This townland is situate in the parish of Aghabog, in the Monaghan Union, and lies about four miles from Clones, and two of Newbliss.

LOTS 2, 3, and 4.

These Lots are respectively situate in the Parishes of Ballybay and Aughnamullen, in the Unions of Castleblayney and Cootehill, in the immediate proximity of Ballybay, and are intersected by the "Irish North Western," and "Cootehill and Ballybay" lines of Railway.

The Junction Station of these lines being upon Lot 2 (Shantonagh). On Lot 2 there is an excellent corn and flax mill in full working order, with an abundant water power.

LOT 5.

This Lot consists of two Fee-Farm Rents, payable out of the Lands of Drumfaldra, situate in the parish of Aughnamullen and Cootehill Union, about two miles from Ballybay. The tenant has a very valuable interest in these Lands, on which have been erected a first class dwelling house, and two extensive corn mills, for the working of which there is an abundant supply of water.

For Rentals Maps, and all further particulars apply at the Landed Estates' Court, Four Courts, Dublin; to

ANDRE ALLEN MURRAY KER, Esq., Newbliss House, Newbliss; or to TOWNLEY WILLIAM HARDMAN, Solicitor for the Owners and Petitioners, having the carriage of the Sale, No. 22, Bachelor's-walk, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MARCH 23, 1867.

WE believe we may now at length congratulate the public and the profession on the prospect of the Bill for the Amendment of the Practice of the Court of Chancery becoming law. After a fitful fever, it sleeps well and seems likely to pass through the ordeal of Committee without encountering the motions for adjournments or the other devices of party warfare, by which its passage through the House has been hitherto obstructed. We trust that the measure for the reform of the Practice of the Courts of Law will not be suffered to lag behind the sister Act; and that, although the Bill introduced for the purpose by the Government does not involve the creation of patronage, yet that no time will be lost in giving effect to so necessary a reform, and one supported by the unanimous opinion of both branches of the legal profession.

The Irish Common Law Procedure Act of 1853 is, we believe, one of the most curious, and when the circumstances under which it became law are considered, one of the most unaccountable pieces of legislation that has ever appeared on the Statute Book. In the year 1850 the First Report of the English Common Law Commissioners was presented. When we state that this document bore the signatures of Sir John Jervis, the late Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, of Baron Martin, Baron Bramwell, and Mr. Justice Willes, we have said everything which we should have thought was necessary to render the recommendations contained in this Report deserving the respectful consideration of every lawyer; and when we add that the measure 15 & 16 Vic., c. 76, in which these recommendations are embodied, was prepared under the immediate superintendence of the present Mr. Justice Willes (then the most distinguished lawyer at the Common Law Bar of England), we should have thought we had given a sufficient reason why that Act might have been accepted as a model for a similar Act in this country. This, however, was not to be—something original must be produced, and accordingly without even inviting the opinion of the Irish Bench, or either of the branches of the Legal Profession in this country on the subject, the recommendations of the English Commission were set aside, and the Irish Common Law Procedure Act of 1853 was introduced on the sole authority of the Crown Officers of the day, and under their auspices became law. The measure has now been in operation for over thirteen years, during which period there has been ample opportunity of testing its value as a measure of legal reform; and we believe we are but recording the unanimous opinion of both branches of the profession in saying that in all the essential points in which the Irish Common Law Procedure Act differs from the English the former has been a complete miscarriage.

The first alleged improvement introduced by the Irish Common Law Procedure Act, of 1853, was the abolition of the writ of summons for the commencement of an action, and the incorporation of the writ and declaration with the summons and plaint. We believe that the system of incorporating the writ and declaration, and thus requiring a plaintiff to state his entire cause of action in the first instance, is a serious mistake. In many instances a plaintiff has only a short and unexpected opportunity of serving a writ upon his opponent, which will, in all probability, be lost if he is obliged to wait until a formal statement of his complaint can be prepared in the form of a summons and plaint. The experience of older practitioners will attest the fact that when actions were commenced by writ the necessity for a pleading did not arise in one out of a dozen cases, and that the power of lodging money on appearance is a vast saving of time and expense. The first important improvement in the existing practice will be to assimilate, in this particular, the practice in Ireland to that which now exists in England.

A most essential feature of English Common Law Pleading, and one by which it is distinguished from all other systems of judicature, has been that the pleadings should be so conducted as to develop some question or issue, whether of law or fact, by the effect of the reciprocal allegations of the contending parties, and to agree upon this question as the point for decison in the cause. This important feature of English jurisprudence, which was carefully preserved by the English Act, was by the Irish Act obliterated from the rules of pleading, with the object, as the author of the measure stated in his speech in introducing it, "of having a simple question, which, under the existing system, would be buried under a mass of paper, stated in a small compass." "Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatu." We believe the experience of every person conversant with proceedings in the Common Law Courts of this country is that the system of developing the questions to be tried by issues to be settled by a Judge in Chamber, has been to produce for the first time the very evil so strongly deprecated by the author of the measure, and to introduce into Common Law Pleadings an amount of prolixity and confusion which was unknown before. One essential feature of the New Common Law Act is to restore the old rule of pleading in this respect. The parties will, henceforth, be bound to conduct their allegations on the record in such a manner as to arrive at some assertion of fact or law at one side, and a denial of it on the other. We believe this will be felt by both branches of the profession to be a vast improvement on the existing practice. We shall no longer witness the scandal of thirty or forty issues being submitted to the jury—which the jury state they are unable, and the Judge informs them they are not required to understand. Neither shall we have to deplore the frequent miscarriages of justice which arise from a judge who is ignorant of the case settling in Chamber, in presence of counsel, who are usually at this stage of the proceedings imperfectly instructed as to the facts, an issue, upon the form of which the whole result of the case may afterwards be found to depend.

The next important feature in the new Bill is the restoration of local venues. At present the power of selecting a venue, the most inconvenient to the defendant, is constantly resorted to for the purpose of injustice and oppression. The only course open to a defendant who wishes to escape the consequences of this oppressive power, vested in the plaintiff, is by a special application to the Court. This preliminary contest, in which the Court is required to decide to which side the balance of inconvenience inclines, always involves expense, and frequently results in the Court refusing the motion, on the ground that the plaintiff has the right to select his own venue, and that the facts deposed to on behalf of the defendant do not sufficiently displace this right. The Common Law Bill proposes to restore local venues—that is, that actions for trying rights of way or watercourses, actions of trespass to lands, and the like, shall be tried in the locality where the evidence applicable to the case can most readily be found; at the same time giving to the Court the power to change the venue in case the balance of convenience inclines to the selection of some other county. It further enables the Court, in cases in which a view may be necessary, to provide for a view being had out of the county in which the venue is laid. A case recently tried in Dublin in the Court of Exchequer at enormous expense and with no result, arising out of a disputed right to water, which might have been settled in half an hour by an inspection of the premises, sufficiently illustrates the evils of the existing system in respect of venues, and the value of the proposed alterations. Our space forbids us to pursue the subject further at present, but we shall take an early opportunity of reverting to the Government Bill, and some of the most important improvements which we consider it will effect in the existing system of pleading and practice.

Mr. Ralph Earle, the Secretary to the Poor Law Board, has tendered his resignation to Lord Derby.

RESIGNATION OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

The resignation of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne on yesterday was positively announced. We subjoin a few particulars of his eventful career. He was born at Footstown, in the county of Meath, and received the rudiments of his education in the village of Dunshaughlin. Owing to the disturbed state of the country his family removed to Dublin; and in 1798 he entered as a student of Dublin University. He obtained first scholarship in 1802, and graduated at the spring commencements of 1803, upon which occasion he obtained the gold medal. In the Historical Society he obtained its medals both in oratory and history. He was called to the bar in Hilary 1808, and selected the Home Circuit. In about a period of ten years he was in good business as a junior, and was called to the inner bar in 1822. In 1823 he was selected by Lord Wellesley to administer the Insurrection Acts in the counties Clare and Limerick. In 1826 he was appointed His Majesty's third Sergeant-at-law. In 1830, in the breaking up of the Duke of Wellington's Ministry, and the accession to power of Lord Grey, Joy and Doherty were promoted one to the Exchequer, and the other to the Common Pleas; and the Attorney-Generalship was conferred on Mr. Blackburne. Mr Stanley (now Lord Derby) was Chief Secretary for Ireland at this time.

"For four years," says a writer in the Dublin University Magazine, speaking of Mr. Blackburne, "he continued to hold his place during times of extraordinary excitement, when the power and prerogatives of the Attorney-General could not slumber with safety to the public peace. The Winter of 1830 was marked by the commencement of the agitation for repeal in the face of the Algerine enactment, which gave the Lord Lieutenant the power of suppressing meetings by proclamation." For a sketch of these remarkable times we refer our readers to the Dublin University Magazine, Vol. XXIV., page 470. Then came the indictment of O'Connell in 1830 and 1831. With the progress of the Reform struggle arose the agitation against tithes. In 1833 the celebrated case of the King v. Barrett was brought before the King's Bench. In 1834, on Sir Robert Peel's accession to power, Mr. Blackburne continued as Attorney-General, Mr. Pennefather being Solicitor-General; and on the return of Sir Robert Peel to office in 1841, Mr. Blackburne resumed his office as Attorney-General, and continued so until the death of Sir Michael O'Loghlen in Sept., 1842, when he became Master of the Rolls. In the year 1846 he became Lord Chief-Justice of Ireland, and in 1852 Lord Chancellor; Lord Justice of Appeal in 1856, and a second time Lord Chancellor in 1866. Mr. Blackburne was acknowledged by all to have held the first rank of his profession, and as Attorney-General was a perfect model of what a public prosecutor ought to be. In his style he was brief without being sententious, eloquent without being vehement or inflated, and always clear, dignified, and forcible. He now retires, full of years and honours, in the enjoyment of vigorous faculties, leaving a reputation, rarely surpassed, for learning, ability, and integrity.

The subject of the appointment of a practising solicitor to the post of Deputy Lieutenant for the City of Dublin having been again noticed by some of our contemporaries, we think it right to call attention to the provisions of the 1st and 2nd Wm. 4, c. 17, being the Act establishing and regulating the appointment to these offices.

This enactment, after providing for the appointment of lieutenants of counties, cities, and towns by the Lord Lieutenant, gives to such lieutenants authority to appoint (subject to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant for the time being) fit persons, duly qualified as thereinafter provided, to be Deputy Lieutenants of such counties or places. The qualification of Deputy Lieutenant for a county is that he shall be seized or possessed of real estate situate in such county, or next adjoining county, of the annual value of £200, or be heir apparent of some person seized or possessed of a like estate of the annual value of £400. The qualification required for Deputy Lieutenants of cities or towns is different, being the possession of real estate within such city or town of the annual value of £150, or personal property of the value of £3,000.

Section 6 enacts that in cities or towns where there shall be no Lieutenant the chief magistrate for the time being shall appoint Deputy Lieutenants within such city or town; the appointment, therefore, the conferring of which upon the chief magistrate of our city has given rise to such vehement discussion, might actually have been at his own disposal.

On five different occasions within the last few years, as vacancies have occurred among the Deputy Lieutenants of our city the post has been conferred upon gentlemen who have filled the office of Lord Mayor; and on the present occasion had the name of our chief magistrate been passed over merely on account of his being a solicitor a slight would have been cast upon an honorable profession, the respectability and dignity of which it is eminently for the advantage of the public to uphold.

The Government Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to bankruptcy in England has been introduced, and the second reading fixed for next Thursday. Of course, until the document be actually printed, it would be premature to criticise and discuss its details; but as its general principles, if adopted, are pretty certain, at no distant day, to be applied to Ireland, we would briefly point out the salient features of the measure as indicated in the introductory statement of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The law of debtor and creditor, as it has prevailed for some dozen years in Scotland, is evidently that upon which the principal portions of this bill are modelled. The realization and distribution of the bankruptcy assets are to be placed entirely in the hands of the creditors, acting by their own trustee, who will be chosen and paid by them in each separate matter. The business of the Court will be greatly diminished—in short, "reduced to the adjudication, or determining whether a man has become insolvent within the meaning of the bankruptcy law, the examination of the bankrupt, the proof of disputed debts, and the question of discharge." This business is to be done by the local County Courts, and in London by the judges, who will act in the same way as County Court judges. The Registrars of the County Courts are to act as provisional trustees until the creditors appoint their trustee. By a separate bill imprisonment for debt is to be abolished, one of the effects of which, it is thought, will be to considerably reduce the number of bankrupts. Lastly comes the question of the bankrupt's discharge, with regard to which the Attorney-General, after reviewing the law as it stands, and the various plans for its improvement, comes to the conclusion that "there is no alternative but to resort to the principle of the Insolvent Debtors Act—that is, to make his future property liable at the discretion of the Court, and let him have his discharge at once."

While refraining at present from expressing our opinion as to the merits or demerits of the proposed enactment, we subjoin, in conclusion, that of our contemporary The Times:—"Upon the whole, the measure is creditable to the Government. The questions of the greatest importance are agreed upon, and those which remain, though difficult, are of secondary moment, and need not postpone the passing of a really useful and practical measure."

CIVIL BILL COURTS.

Mr. Joseph Burke, Sessional Crown Solicitor for Roscommon, whose letter on this subject we published in our last number, has forwarded to us a very carefully-prepared Draft Bill to amend the law relating to Civil Bills and Courts of Quarter Sessions, of which the following is an abstract:—

Preamble recites the several classes of cases at present excepted from the jurisdiction of these Courts, and that it is expedient to facilitate suitors in such excepted and unsettled partnership account cases, and recites that the fees payable to the attorneys who conduct the business of suitors in said Courts are wholly insufficient, and that it is desirable to regulate a scale of fees so as to assimilate them to those payable in the County Courts in England.

Sec. 1. Provides that so much of the 14th and 15th Victoria, chap. 57, sec. 35, as excepts the cases of slander, libel, breach of promise of marriage, and crim. con. from the jurisdiction of the chairman, be repealed, and chairman to hear and determine by civil bill all disputes and differences between party and party for any sum, damages, or penalty not exceeding £40 sterling in all cases whatsoever, and for any ascertained or unascertained and unpaid balance, not exceeding £40 of a partnership account, for which purpose the said chairman shall exercise all such equitable jurisdiction as might be now exercised by the Court of Chancery in Ireland for taking and ascertaining partnership accounts.

Sec. 2. Provides for an increase of the fees payable to attorneys as set forth in a schedule prepared from the English County Court Acts.

Sec. 3. Appeal to lie from any decree or dismiss upon a certificate of the attorney that he considers there is reasonable ground to reverse, alter, or vary such decree or dismiss, and that such appeal is not as he believes made or to be made for the purpose of delay, upon appellant's entering into the recognizance of appeal and lodgment or payment of costs, as provided for by the 122nd section of the 14th and 15th Vic., chap. 57, and without requiring the attorney to make the affidavit required by the 129th section of said Act.

Sec. 4. The Act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, to be construed as one with the said 14th and 15th Vic., chap. 57, and all the provisions thereof, shall be applicable hereto.

Sec. 5. Short title of Act.

A Bill to Amend the Pleading, Practice, and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland.

The following is an Abstract of the Clauses of this Bill, introduced by the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for Ireland. The Bill contains 380 Clauses. We give a portion of them, so far as our space permits, and will continue them in our next number.

ENGLAND.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

INTERPLEADER—COSTS.—Under a writ of fi. fa. obtained by A. from this court, the goods of B. were seized by the sheriff, and advertised for sale; pending the sale B. became bankrupt, and thereupon the sheriff received notice from the official assignee in the bankruptcy not to remove or sell the goods. Shortly afterwards the sheriff was ordered by this court to make a return to the writ, and accordingly the sale took place. Subsequently the sheriff filed an interpleader bill against A. and the assignee in bankruptcy, alleging that both were threatening proceedings against him for the amount realized by the sale, and praying to be allowed to pay it into court, and for costs. Held, that it was a proper case for interpleader, and that the sheriff was entitled to his costs: (Child v. Mann, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 49. V.C.S.)

TESTAMENTARY SUIT—PRACTICE.—A testatrix, a married woman, executed a will by virtue of a power reserved to her. The marriage was subsequently dissolved, and the will destroyed, but under circumstances which, it was alleged, did not amount to a revocation. The husband having become bankrupt, a caveat was entered by his assignee, but a difficulty was raised in the registry as to its warning by the plaintiff, the residuary legatee, who propounded the will. The Court held that the caveat ought to be warned: (Ming v. Ming, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 69. Prob.)

COVENANT RUNNING WITH THE LAND—PURCHASER WITH NOTICE.—B. was entitled to the benefit of certain covenants with the owners of all the land on which several houses in a row stood, with reference to a garden at the back of each house. A purchaser of one of the houses, with notice of the covenants, was held to be bound by them in equity. It was held also that a passive acquiescence in one breach of a covenant is not a waiver of all future right to complain of any other breach, and that the party injured might sue alone to restrain a breach of the covenants, without joining the other owners: (Western v. Macdermot, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641. Ld. Ch.)

PROBATE DUTY—CONTINGENT REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—Where, at the time of taking out probate, no duty is paid in respect of a contingent reversionary interest, which afterwards falls into possession, probate duty must be paid upon its value at the time of falling into possession, and not upon its value at the date of the probate. But if the interest is valued at the time of taking out probate, and duty then paid thereon, such duty is sufficient: (Lord v. Colvin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 53. V. C. M.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—COVENANT TO REPAIR.—Lessee covenanted to repair, and keep in repair the demised premises, and also, within three months after notice, to repair all such damage, &c., as should be specified in such notice. There was the usual proviso for re-entry on breach of covenants by the lessee. On Jan. 29, the lessor gave notice to the lessee to repair the premises, "in accordance with the covenants in the lease," stating that he had "left the specification with the under-tenant on the premises for that purpose." The premises not being repaired, the lessor brought ejectment on the 27th April, and he was held to be entitled to do so for breach of the general covenant to repair, without waiting for the expiration of three months from the date of his notice, and that forfeiture by that breach was not waived by such notice: (Few v. Perkins, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 62. Ex.)

REPUTED OWNERSHIP.—The existence of a custom, so notorious as to raise the presumption of knowledge of its existence on the part of all persons dealing with agriculturists, that purchasers of live stock from a farmer have the option of leaving the animals for a reasonable time, more or less, to suit their own convenience, in the vendor's hands, is sufficient to take the case out of the operation of sect. 125 of the B. L. C. A. 1849, and consequently, lambs and pigs purchased of a farmer on the 10th, and left by the purchaser in the seller's hands and on his premises until the 18th July, did not upon the intervening bankruptcy of the seller pass to his assignees under the above-mentioned section: (Priestley v. Pratt, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 64. Ex.)

CONDITIONAL ORDER OF DISCHARGE, PLEA OF.—A plea which sets forth a conditional order of discharge is good, even though evidence be given showing that the condition of the discharge has not been fulfilled : (King v. Watson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 67. N. P.)

TRADING WITHOUT CAPITAL.—A trader who, without capital, undertakes extensive contracts for building ships, and neglects by his own admission, to make any previous calculation as to the probability of their being profitable or otherwise. Held, to be guilty of gross carelessness, and his insolvency so occasioned, to be fairly attributable to rash and hazardous speculation : (Re George Gardner, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 70. Bank.)

DEPOSIT OF RAILWAY SHARES.

The reliance commonly placed on a mere deposit by way of security of the certificates of railway and other shares makes the case of Re Grehan, reported from the IRISH LAW TIMES, in the present volume of our Reports, p. 39, worthy of attention—[See IRISH LAW TIMES, No. 4, page 66]. A merchant or trader, or whoever it may be, desirous of covering an advance to him by his banker by placing his certificate in the banker's hands, is unwilling that the transaction should be published by notice to the secretaries of half a dozen companies, and the bankers are equally desirous that their own course of business should not be disclosed to strangers. Notice in such cases is seldom or never given to a company, the banker preferring to trust to the insight which he gains into his constituent's pecuniary affairs in the course of their mutual dealings or otherwise, and thus to judge of the time when it will be expedient on his part to force an assignment or sale of the shares themselves. If, meanwhile, any contest should arise between the parties or any adverse equitable claim be set up in the shares, the possession of the certificates, without the production of which the shares can not be made available on the Stock Exchange, is treated as a sufficient practical safeguard, whatever may be the rights technically involved. But bankruptcy of the shareholder may supervene, and the question then arises, what is the position of the banker or depositary? In considering the question it should be borne in mind, as respects companies under the Companies Clauses Act, that every person who becomes entitled to a share, and whose name is entered on the register of shareholders, is deemed a shareholder ; and that the provisions in relation to the certificate are, that on demand of the holder of a share, the company is to cause a certificate of the proprietorship of the share to be delivered to him. The certificate is to be admitted in all courts as primâ facie evidence of the title of the shareholder, his executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, to the share ; nevertheless the want of such certificate is not to prevent the holder from disposing of the share. If a certificate be worn out, damaged, lost, or destroyed, a similar certificate is to be given to the party in whom the property of the certificate and of the share is at the time vested, and the issue of such certificate is to be registered. On the request of the purchaser of a share, an indorsement of the transfer is to be made on the certificate, instead of a new certificate being granted, and the indorsement is to be considered as a new certificate.

By these provisions the certificate is made an auxiliary document of title to the share, and the property in the certificate is contemplated as accompanying the legal title to the share, the intention apparently being that the certificate, as primâ facie evidence of the title existing by the registration of the share, shall, in the hands of the owner of the share, or in support of his title, obviate the necessity of a resort to the register to ascertain the fact of registration. The certificate itself is not invested with a character such as to make it a subject of assignment or disposition, for on a sale of a share a new certificate or an indorsement in lieu of it is to be given to the purchaser, at his request. The title to the share is independent of the certificate, inasmuch as the want of it is not to prevent a disposition of the share. Nevertheless the documentary character given by the Act to the certificate has sometimes in business caused the deposit of it to be considered, like a deposit of title-deeds, to create a lien on the share, and therefore to put a depositary who gives no notice to the company on a better footing in case of the shareholder's bankruptcy than the assignee of a debt or a reversionary interest in a trust-fund who does not give notice to the debtor or to the trustee. The text-books on the subject have, it is true, generally spoken of notice of a deposit of a share certificate as necessary, or at least as prudent, but we are not aware that they have been able to support the position by any decided case.

Re Grehan supplies such authority. It was a case of deposit of scrip certificates of a mining company with the Royal Bank by a registered shareholder by way of equitable mortgage, no notice being given to the company. A rule was alleged, but was treated by the Court as not legally established, but as being merely for the convenience of the directors and managers of the company, that no transfer of any share could be made without the production of the scrip certificate. The rule, therefore, may be disregarded, and the scrip certificates, in this respect, may be looked on in the same light as certificates under the Companies Clauses Act. After the deposit, the depositor became bankrupt. Then, were the shares left by the bank in his order and disposition? Was there, the Court asked, anything in the nature of the claim of the bank to exempt them from the operation of the general rule, that the change of possession of a chose in action or a chattel ought, by notice, to be made as complete as it was capable of being made. The legal title in the mining shares, the Court reasoned, consisted of being the registered owner of those shares upon the books of the company, while the scrip certificates issued to the owner could not be regarded otherwise than as the evidence of such legal title, and which might be said to be the mere incidents to that title, and to follow it as a shadow. It was accordingly held that the mere lodgment of the scrip certificates with the bank gave them no valid claim to the shares, but that they passed to the assignees in the bankruptcy.

JURIES.—The Solicitor-General has put his finger upon an abuse the popular endurance of which has always struck us as wonderful. He said, in the house of Commons, that common jurymen ought to be paid for their services ; and he implied that one result of the present state of things is that trials are often cut too short for the attainment of the ends of justice through the impatience of the jury to get away from their irksome task. The more, in fact, the matter is looked into, the more preposterous does the existing arrangement appear. Special jurymen are paid a guinea for each trial—an absurdly small sum ; common jurymen are paid nothing, but are allowed eightpence a mile for their travelling expenses. Can anything be more ridiculous? Judges are paid many thousands a-year for their services; attorneys and barristers divide portentous sums between them; but the unlucky juryman, who is summoned from his counter whether he will or no, to the damage of his business—that is, to the injury of his pocket—is locked up and starved while he wearily decides on his verdict, and gets nothing for his pains. The non-payment of jurymen, like so many of our other venerable follies, is a relic of a state of things long gone by. When trial by jury was the great bulwark of popular freedom against the power of the Crown, it was but natural that men who came forward to stem the tide of tyranny should account the work they did as carrying its own reward. As one does not pay a martyr or a confessor for his sufferings in a good cause, so it would have been scarcely consistent to pay the men who courageously stood up for the freedom of their fellow-countrymen. But a juryman to-day is anything but a martyr or a hero. He suffers only from the long-windedness of the Bar, from the uncomfortableness of the jury-box, and from the annoyance of being called against his will from selling calicoes and sugars, to decide on the fate of men for whom he cares not a straw. And for this, while the special juryman, a richer man than he is, gets his guinea, he himself is consoled with eightpence a mile to pay his omnibus fare.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE LONDONDERRY UNION v. THE LONDONDERRY BRIDGE COMMISSIONERS.

Jan. 15, 16; Feb. 16.—Poor-Rate—Exemptions from—Hereditaments dedicated to Public Purposes.

Special case, the question being as to the liability of the Londonderry Bridge Commissioners to poor-rate in respect of their toll-house and the tolls of their bridge. The liability was resisted on the ground that the toll-house and tolls were hereditaments dedicated to, or used for public purposes. The Commissioners were appointed and acted under "The Londonderry Bridge Act, 1859" which empowered them to borrow on mortgage of the tolls £90,000, to be applied in the construction of the bridge. As soon as the bridge was completed the tolls were to be applied under the Act—1st. In payment of the interest on the money borrowed—2nd. In forming a sinking fund for payment of the principal money borrowed—and 3rd. In forming a fund to make the bridge toll free.

M'Causland, Q.C. and Carson, appeared for the Guardians. M'Donogh, Q.C. and J. P. Hamilton, for the Commissioners.

The Court held that the Commissioners were liable, the toll-house and tolls not coming within any of the exemptions from poor-rate.

Feb. 12.—New Trial Motion—Freight—Pleading.

Motion to show cause against a conditional order for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The summons and plaint claimed £30, freight earned by plaintiff in conveying goods of the defendant. Defendant pleaded that the contract was that plaintiff was to make four voyages, and that he had not made the fourth. On the trial he failed to prove the contract as to the fourth voyage, and a verdict was directed for the plaintiff for £30.

Thomas Wall applied for a garnishee order in this case. The defendant was separated from her husband under a deed of separation, by which the husband charged certain lands with an annuity of £100 a year in favour of his wife, for her separate use.

The plaintiff now sought an attachment order against the husband for the amount of his judgment, £20 1s. 6d., and costs. The deed of separation bore date November 20, 1865, and made the annuity payable by monthly instalments. It was also provided that if T. L. Leader, the husband, should be obliged to pay any debts of the defendant, it should be lawful for him to deduct the amount so paid from the said annuity.

GEORGE, J.—How does it appear that there is anything due upon foot of the annuity? You must show that there is a debt owing or accruing.

Sparks v. Young, 8 Ir. C. L. R., 351, supports my application.

GORGE, J.—There is nothing to show here that there is any debt now existing. The annuity is of very peculiar nature. There is no statement that any gale is now due, no certainty that any gale will be due. There are a variety of circumstances under which there might be nothing payable at all here.

March 18—Trustees for Sale.

In this case the petition for sale had been filed by the trustees of the will of a deceased party, and Dobbs, J., had declined to fiat the petition, as the petitioners were not trustees for sale.

Jackson, for the petitioners, now sought to vary the order made by the Judge dismissing the petition, upon the following statement of facts. A former trustee of this will had committed a breach of trust by investing a portion of the funds bequeathed by the will in the purchase of the lands now sought to be sold. Subsequently the Master of the Rolls appointed new trustees. These trustees were the petitioners. Under these circumstances Jackson submitted that it was their duty to realize the value of these lands, and that without

This case came on upon the ruling of the schedule. There was no appearance for a party interested in respect of one of the incumbrances. He was a solicitor. It was alleged that notice had been left at his registered place of business in Dublin.

DOBBS, J., said that by one of the rules which had the force of an Act of Parliament the service of the notice must, except where otherwise directed, be personal, or at the residence of the party—that this applied to a solicitor, an officer of the Court, as well as any one else—that service at his registered place of business in Dublin was not service at his residence, and he directed notice to be served accordingly.

CIRCUIT CASES.

ROSCOMMON ASSIZES—4th March.

Reported by OLIVER J. BURKE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before HUGHES, B.

NOONE v. MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Plaintiff Delivered to the M. G. W. R. Co., at their Station at Boyle, certain Goods directed to Plaintiff at Belfast, for which said Company gave a Consignment Note as follows:—" Goods Consigned to self at Belfast, viâ Cavan, which we Promise to Deliver at Cavan." Said Company's Line terminated at Cavan. The Chairman at Sessions held that the Company were liable for the Detention of said Goods between Cavan and Belfast, on the Line of another Company.

Decision of the Chairman reversed.

This was an appeal from a decree given by FRANCIS W. BRADY, Esq., Q.C., the Chairman of the County of Roscommon, whereby the said Chairman decreed that the plaintiff, who was a dealer in flax, was entitled to recover from the defendants damages under the circumstances following:—It appeared that the plaintiff, who was a dealer in flax, went to the station of the Midland Great Western Railway Company at Boyle, and delivered to them a quantity of flax to be forwarded to Belfast, when he stated to the station master that he would himself receive the goods at Belfast, whither he was about proceeding by train, and he did in fact leave by the half-past four o'clock train for Belfast upon that day. He was informed before starting, by the station master, who received the goods, that he might pay the freight either there or at Belfast, on the delivery of same, and the plaintiff stated that he would pay on delivery at Belfast. The station master then handed him a consignment note, which was in the words following:—" Goods consigned to self at Belfast, viâ Cavan, which we promise to deliver at Cavan." Upon the back of the consignment note was an endorsement that delivery would be complete when the goods were delivered up to the consignee at Belfast. It appeared in evidence that the Midland Great Western Railway Line terminated at Cavan—that the goods, though sent on, were not delivered in Belfast in due time, and the only question now for the decision of the Court was, whether the said Company were liable for the detention and delay which admittedly did not occur on their said line.

MacDermot, on behalf of the plaintiff, argued that the company were liable, inasmuch as it is settled law that if a company have undertaken the carriage of goods to a point beyond their own line, they are liable throughout as well for losses that occur on their own as well as on the lines of other companies over which the goods had to pass; and that there was nothing in the consignment note that would take the case out of the general rule. There was a verbal agreement or contract between the plaintiff and defendant—that the goods were to be delivered to him at Belfast—and he went to Belfast to receive them—and on the face of the note they were consigned to him at Belfast, viâ Cavan, and the promise of the company to deliver the goods at Cavan was repugnant to the rest of the consignment note, which was a consignment to the consignee at Belfast. Counsel then relied on the conditions inscribed on the back of the consignment note, which stated that the delivery would be complete when the goods were delivered up to the consignee; and that, therefore, delivery could not be completed except at Belfast. That, inasmuch as the other lines, over which the goods were carried, could not be made liable to the plaintiff for the want of privity of contract, the plaintiff's only remedy was against the company with which he had contracted.—Crouche v. The London and North Western Railway Company, 14 C. B. 255.

Carleton, Q.C., admitting the above facts, contended that the liability of the company terminated at Cavan—that it was decided to be a reasonable condition for railway companies to limit their responsibility to the portion of the line which belonged to themselves, and that that was done in this case, by confining their promise to deliver at Cavan,

His LORDSHIP reserved judgment until next day, when he reversed the decision of the Court below; and he was of opinion that the consignment note was the proper evidence of the contract; and that, in his opinion, the contract was confined to delivering the goods at Cavan, and not at Belfast.

MacDermot then applied to his Lordship to state a case to the Court of Queen's Bench, as the decision involved matters of high public importance.

His LORDSHIP declined to state a case, as he felt no doubt on the subject.

the justice by Mr. D'Alton, on the part of the fishery conservators, for a breach of the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 106, sec. 78. The magistrates dismissed the charge, and Mr. D'Alton appealed. The appeal now came on for hearing before O'BRIEN, J.

Mr. P. Murphy, for the respondent, insisted that the offence charged being one against the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 106, the appeal should have been to quarter sessions under the 100 and 101 secs. of that statute.

Mr. P. Lynch referred to the 52 sec. of the 13 & 14 Vic., c. 88, which gives form of dismissal of complaint under authority of "this Act or of the recited Acts," and gives an appeal from dismissal to next going judge of assize.

O'BRIEN, J., heard the appeal, and reversed the decision, but as it was the first offence charged against the respondent, only inflicted a mitigated penalty of 10s.

March 8th, 1867.—Ejectment on the Title—Alien Plaintiffs—Disclaimer—Evidence.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover the possession of part of the lands of Corravelish, otherwise Farthabeg, situate near Bailieborough, in the county of Cavan. The defendants, who were the tenants in occupation of the lands, filed separate defences.

The case was tried at the Cavan Spring Assizes, in the present year, before the Lord Chief-Baron and a special jury. An order had been made on the 12th June, 1866, subsequently to the filing of the defences, for a commission to be issued to the British Consul and Vice-Consul, at Vigo, in Spain, to examine witnesses; and by the depositions made on that commission it appeared that John O'Dogherty, being at the time in receipt of the rents of the lands in question, emigrated to Spain, early in the present century, and entered the Spanish naval service; that he married a Spanish lady, and had by her six children; and that he afterwards settled at Redondela, near Vigo, where he died, intestate, on the 16th of December, 1847. John O'Dogherty's family consisted of Ramona, born in 1808, Juan in 1813, Aurora in 1815, Frederico, in 1818, Josefa in 1820, and Charles Henry in 1825. None of O'Dogherty's children were alive at the commencement of the action, except Ramona. Juan, the eldest son, married a Spaniard, and had five children, Ramon Salvador, Ulpiano, Jose, Ernesto, and Ricardo, and died, intestate, in the year 1845. Both Ernesto and Ricardo died in infancy. Ramona married a Spaniard, Jose Antonio Arines. Aurora married Juan Climaco Seoane, a Spanish Notary Public, and had two daughters, Petronilla and Adelayda, and died in the year 1862. Frederico died in 1864, unmarried, having previously made a will, whereby he devised the lands, the subject of the ejectment, to Ramona Arines. Petronilla Seoane, and Adelayda Seoane. The other children of John O'Dogherty died intestate, and unmarried. The three devisees of Frederico O'Dogherty were the only descendants of John O'Dogherty, named as plaintiffs, and were called, for distinction, the Spanish plaintiffs. The title of the Irish plaintiffs may be stated shortly thus:—When John O'Dogherty emigrated to Spain he left behind him in this country three sisters, Margaret, Amelia, and Elizabeth, all of whom married and had issue. The plaintiff, Henrietta Chester, represented Margaret; Emily Henrietta Davies represented Amelia; and Eliza Browne and Anne Tottenham represented Elizabeth. John O'Dogherty, and all his children and grandchildren, were members of the Roman Catholic church. It appeared, also, that an ejectment had been brought in the month of January, 1863, in which Ramon, Salvador, Ulpiano, and Jose O'Dogherty were named as plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs contended, in the first place, that the Spanish plaintiffs were entitled to recover; and, secondly, that if the latter were incapable of maintaining an ejectment, as being alien-born, the Irish plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict. The argument for the Spanish plaintiffs was as follows:—By the 7th Anne, c. 5, it was enacted that the children of all natural-born subjects born out of the ligeance of her Majesty should be deemed to be natural-born subjects of this kingdom, to all intents and purposes whatsoever. By the 4 G. II., c. 21, which was passed for the purpose of explaining doubts arising on the construction of the Act of the 7 Anne, c. 5, it was enacted that all children born out of the ligeance of the Crown of England or of Great Britain, or which should thereafter be born out of such ligeance, whose fathers were or should be natural-born subjects of the Crown of England or of Great Britain at the time of the birth of such children respectively, should and might, by virtue of the said recited clause of the Act of 7th Anne, c. 5, and of the present Act, be adjudged and taken to be, and all such children are hereby declared to be natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain to all intents and purposes whatsoever. By the 13 G. III., c. 21, which recited that whereas divers natural-born subjects of Great Britain, who profess and exercise the Protestant religion, through various lawful causes, especially for the better carrying on of commerce, have been and are obliged to reside in several trading cities and other foreign places, where they have contracted marriages and brought up families; and whereas it is equally just and expedient that the kingdom should not be deprived of such subjects, nor lose the benefit of the wealth that they have acquired; and therefore that not only the children of such natural-born subjects, but their children also should continue under the allegiance of his Majesty, and be entitled to come into this kingdom, and to bring hither and realize or otherwise employ their capital, it was, by the first section, enacted—That all persons born, or who thereafter should be born, out of the ligeance of the Crown of England or of Great Britain, whose fathers were or should be, by virtue of a statute made in the 4th year of the reign of King George II., to explain a clause in the 7th Anne, c. 5, for naturalizing foreign Protestants, which relates to the natural born subjects of the Crown of England or of Great Britain entitled to all the rights and privileges of natural-born subjects of the Crown of England or of Great Britain, should and might be adjudged and taken to be, and were thereby declared and enacted to be natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as if he and they had been and were born in this kingdom. The 3rd section provided that nothing in the Act contained should be construed to repeal, abridge, or in anywise alter any law, statute, custom or usage whatsoever now in force concerning aliens, duties, customs, and impositions, nor to cause any privilege, exemption, or abatement relating thereto in favour of any person naturalized by virtue of this Act, unless such person took and subscribed the oaths, and made, repeated, and subscribed the declaration appointed by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of his late Majesty George the First, and also received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England. Section 4 provided that no person should be enabled hereby to defeat any estate, right, or interest which upon the last day of this Session shall be lawfully vested in any other person; or to claim or demand any estate or interest which shall hereafter accrue, unless such claim or demand be made within five years next after the same shall accrue. All these were English statutes, and no corresponding statutes had ever been passed by the Irish Parliament. It was argued on behalf of the Spanish plaintiffs, first, that the statutes applied to Ireland, on the ground that, being statutes passed for the purpose of regulating the status of the subject, they extended to all the subjects of the Crown; and the case of Jack d. Rea v. Buchanan, tried at the Londonderry Assizes in the year 1835, but not reported, was cited. Secondly, that they applied to Roman Catholics (but this branch of the argument was more fully opened by the defendants); and thirdly, that by the 4th section of the 13th Geo. III., c. 21, the right of Ramon Salvador O'Dogherty to maintain an ejectment was barred at the expiration of five years after the death of John O'Dogherty in 1847; that thereupon the right passed to his next brother, Ulpiano O'Dogherty; that at the expiration of five years after Ulpiano's right accrued it was barred; and the right then accrued to Jose O'Dogherty; that his right was barred at the expiration of five years, viz., on the 17th December, 1862, and that the right then passed to Frederico O'Dogherty, whose devisees the Spanish plaintiffs were. No title deeds of the O'Dogherty family were produced; but receipt of rent by the agent of John O'Dogherty from the then tenants of the lands was proved up to October, 1847. This was the case for the Spanish plaintiffs. For the Irish plaintiffs it was contended, that if the Spanish plaintiffs were not entitled to the benefit of the statutes, and were therefore aliens and incapable of maintaining an ejectment, they, the Irish plaintiffs, were entitled to recover as co-heiresses of John O'Dogherty, the Spanish branch of the family not stopping the descent to them.

The defendants adopted the same view of the statutes as the plaintiffs, except upon the construction of the 4th section of the 13 G. III., c. 21; but they contended that by the 1st section of that statute Ramon Salvador was made a natural born subject of this country to all intents and purposes, and that, by virtue of that section, he still is a natural born subject, and capable of inheriting real property in this country; and that, although the effect of the 4th section may have been to deprive him of the right to maintain an ejectment for the lands, the subject of this ejectment after the expiration of five years from the time when the right accrued, it did not take out of him the estate which descended to him from his grandfather, John O'Dogherty, in 1847; and the defendants relied on that outstanding legal estate as a defence to the ejectment. They also contended that the 13 G. III., c. 21 extends to Roman Catholics, on the ground that the 3rd section, the only section which imposes a religious test, applies solely to matters of a fiscal nature, that the words are to be read "aliens' duties, customs and impositions," and not "aliens, duties, customs and impositions," and that the grandchild is entitled to the benefit of the statute in respect of holding lands, although he has not complied with the formalities of the 3rd section; and they cited Barrow v. Wadkin, 24 Beav. 327. The defendants also relied on a tenancy from year to year in themselves, created by receipt of rent from them by John O'Dogherty, which tenancy they contended was still existing, never having been put an end to by a notice to quit. The plaintiffs went into evidence to prove that the defendants had disclaimed tenancy to them; and the effect of that evidence may be shortly stated as follows. One class of the defendants had clearly disclaimed; a second had stated they would be guided by what the other tenants did; and a third gave evasive answers; one of the defendants, Edward Gargan, had not been served with the notice at all With respect to him, the evidence of the process server was, that he left the notice at his house with his wife, that he had afterwards seen him and spoken to him about the notice, but he (Edward Gargan) had said nothing about the land. The case having closed, his Lordship told the jury that in considering the effect of the answers given by the defendants—whether they constituted a disclaimer or not—they were to take into consideration the position of the parties when the demand was made, that the period of 20 years, at the expiration of which the defendants would be entitled to the lands under the Statute of Limitations, was then fast approaching; and that they (the jury) were entitled to assume that the defendants became acquainted with that fact in the course of the former ejectment proceedings. With respect to the first and second classes of the defendants, his Lordship left the question to the jury whether there had been a disclaimer or not; and with respect to the third class he told them that if they believed the words used by them were used honestly, they did not constitute a disclaimer; but if they meant, "Knowing you, the plaintiffs, to be in a difficulty, we will stand on our possession," they were evidence of a disclaimer. His Lordship then directed the jury to find for the plaintiffs in each case where they believed there had been a disclaimer, and for the defendants where they believed there had been no disclaimer.

The jury having retired, the plaintiffs' counsel called on his Lordship to tell the jury that there was evidence of disclaimer on the part of the defendant, Edward Gargan; that it was proved that the notice was served on his wife, and that he took no steps to set himself right with the plaintiffs in case he had no intention of disclaiming their title.

The defendants' counsel also called on his Lordship to direct the jury that there was no evidence of disclaimer with respect to the 2nd and 3rd classes of the defendants.

The jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiffs in every case.

The learned Chief-Baron then reserved liberty to the defendants to move that that verdict should be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant in each case where the Court above should be of opinion that there was no evidence of a disclaimer. His Lordship also extended the time for the plaintiffs to elect for which of the plaintiffs they would enter the verdict to a day in next term; and reserved liberty to the defendants to move to have that verdict set aside, and a verdict entered for them if the Court above should be of opinion that the legal estate was not in the plaintiffs, for whom the verdict should be entered or any of them.

March 14.—Presentment Sessions—Lowest Tender—Surety—Associated Cesspayer.

This was an application, on behalf of Patrick Brennan, that the contract of John Dunne, for the maintenance and repair of 1,142 perches of the West Narrogh-road, should be declared void, and that the next lowest tender, which was that of the applicant, should be accepted. It appeared that at the presentment sessions the lowest tenders for this work were the following:—John Burke, at 1s. per perch; Patrick Brennan, at 1s. 2d. per perch; and John Dunne, at 1s. 11¾d. per perch. Burke's tender was rejected in consequence of his inability to enter into the requisite security, James Darwin, one of his sureties, having withdrawn, alleging as a reason, that he did not consider the contract could be carried out at so low a rate. Darwin, who was an associated cesspayer, was also a surety for Brennan, whose tender was the next lowest in amount; but when the presentment sessions came to take this tender into consideration they were of opinion that Darwin was "interested in the contract," within the meaning of the 47th section of the 6th & 7th Will. IV., c. 116; and they accordingly adopted the tender of Dunne.

J. A. Curran, for Patrick Brennan.—The 22nd section of the Grand Jury Act (6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 116.), provides for advertising for tenders and proposals for works of maintenance, and, under the 23rd section of that Act, the lowest tender sent in must be accepted, if the party making it complies with the statutable conditions. The fact of Darwin being an associated cesspayer is no disqualification; for so far from his having any interest in the contract, the only way in which he could be affected by it is by being held liable in the event of Brennan failing to carry out the contract. His interest is not a beneficial one, such as is contemplated by the 47th section of the Act. The saving to the county in accepting Brennan's tender will be con-considerable; and as the proposal was not made for "any unfair or fraudulent purpose," the acceptance of it was not discretionary, but imperative.

F. L. Dames, for James Dunne.—Quite independently of the question as to whether an associated cesspayer is disqualified from being a surety, the presentment sessions came to the conclusion that Darwin (who was surety for the two lowest tenders) had some beneficial interest in the contract; and the Court will not interfere with the discretion which can be exercised by the sessions, under the 23rd section of the Act.

MONAGHAN, C.J., having ascertained from the county surveyor that his estimate for the work was 2s. 6d. per perch, stated that the presentment sessions were not, in his opinion, bound to accept the lowest tender; and that he would not interfere with the discretion which they had exercised in the present case.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR—The habit of recommending individuals for appointments by letters in the public press has become so inveterate in Ireland that perhaps I may be excused for a suggestion of this nature, made solely in the public interest.

I have read in the papers of this week speculations as to the appointment of the present Lord Justice of Appeal as Chancellor, the transfer of Baron Fitzgerald to the Lord Justiceship, and the elevation of the Attorney-General to Baron Fitzgerald's seat on the Bench.

I do not inquire into the probability of these changes, but I believe I express the opinion of many when I say that if a vacancy occurs in the place of Lord Justice of Appeal, the best arrangement that could be made for the public would be to place Lord Chief-Baron Pigot in that place.

In the best days of the Irish Court of Chancery, when Lord St. Leonards presided there, Mr. Pigot was one of the most distinguished leaders in that Court. It is no disparagement to the Irish Bench to say that there is not upon it at present a judge who, on the whole, equals the Chief-Baron in the very highest qualities of the judicial mind.

No one can deny that in the ordinary business of Nisi Prius even these great qualities are sometimes marred in their usefulness by the habit of insisting on the thorough investigation of the most minute details of every case.

This habit of mind, unsuited for the general duties of a Nisi Prius, is exactly that which is required in an appellate tribunal, where, as Lord Brougham has said, the very object is that every case may be so sifted that nothing can escape notice.

Such an appointment would reflect credit on the Government. It would be like English judicial appointments, one made solely from the fitness of the person chosen to fill the place. It would of course leave the place of Chief-Baron to the Government to dispose of as they may think fit.

I have the honour to be,
Your faithful Servant,
A BARRISTER.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR—While the Irish legal element is so fully represented in Parliament, as it at present is, allow me to suggest the necessity of an amendment in the present law relating to a certain class of negotiable instruments.

There are few, if any, commercial practices from which more mischief arises than the system, which, to a considerable extent prevails, of signing in blank bills of exchange stamps.

It is not an uncommon practice when a commercial firm is failing in credit to support it by sending to its customers, for the most part country traders, blank bill stamps for signature, generally supposed only to represent the amount of the debt which the trader may owe to the firm; frequently these stamps, when returned signed, are filled up for the full or nearly the full sum which the stamp on the bill will carry. And, invariably, these bills are passed into the hands of third parties, to whom, of course, no intimation is given of their real nature, and who are, therefore, not bound by the equities existing between the parties to the instrument. In the great majority of cases the persons so imposed upon would never sign such bills to any considerable amount if the actual extent of the liability they were incurring was placed before them on the bills, while the persons seeking the bills would, if the amounts were stated, rarely attempt to ask such a liability to be incurred.

Unfortunately it too often happens that it is not the persons who are careless or foolish enough to incur such liabilities that suffer most, but their honest legitimate creditors, whose goods have been obtained, and who are frequently, in the end, the victims of recklessness on the one hand, and fraud on the other. There are few wholesale trading firms who have not suffered by this practice. Surely the system of accommodation bills is dangerous and disastrous enough to trade without leaving open to the fraudulent such a facile mode of raising a fictitious credit, and making negotiable instruments—otherwise a most useful and necessary assistance to legitimate trade—a means of working the greatest possible injury.

It must, I think, be admitted that there is no greater injury to commerce than the system of fictitious credit obtained by means of accommodation bills, and there is no respectable merchant who would not hail with approval any amendment in the law which would have the effect of checking this system. It is injurious to the banker whose money has been obtained on a security which, on failure of the principal debtor, is rarely paid; it is injurious to the merchant who supplies his goods to the trader on the understanding that he has only legitimate trade liabilities; and, generally speaking, it is positive ruin to the unfortunate dupe whose savings for years usually fall short of satisfying his liability, and who is ultimately driven to the Bankruptcy Court.

I would not propose that any change should be made which would deprive innocent holders of their remedies on negotiable instruments, but I would propose that the presenting for, or otherwise procuring the signature to a bill stamp not stating the amount for which it is drawn, should be a criminal offence. Such an enactment would materially check, if not altogether put an end to, the system to which I have referred, and would, I have no doubt, be gladly accepted by the commercial public as some safeguard against the too numerous risks of trade.

It may be urged that the course suggested would be attended with a certain amount of inconvenience to respectable merchants; grant that it may, still there are, I think, few such merchants who would not gladly suffer an inconvenience in order to put an end to such a system.—I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

R. D.

Within a few days the attention of the public will be almost totally absorbed by a proceeding, the necessity for which must be regretted, whatever may be its results. The ordinary exercise of the criminal jurisdiction incident to Assizes and Commissions of Oyer and Terminer will be superseded by a Special Commission, not to try offences arising from the depraved tendencies of dishonest or violent dispositions manifested in crimes of a separate and distinct character, but to adjudicate on an alleged intention and on actual attempts to subvert all the authority of the Queen, by levying war on her, and slaying her loyal subjects. Treason, although it may affect a republican designation, assumes a guilty pre-eminence above all other infractions of the law; for, although it avails itself of almost every other crime to further its designs, it considers them servants and not associates. History seldom condescends to chronicle murders or robberies, even as exponents of the state of society at the period of their prevalence; but she regards treason, whether it appears in infantine or gigantic proportions, as a subject demanding the closest and most accurate description, and consequently all those who have to discharge public duties incident to trials for treason have the lights of history from very remote periods to guide them in their course. The legal and constitutional learning and personal characteristics of our judges must dissipate every apprehension of the slightest prejudice being permitted to aggravate or distort evidence adduced against the accused; and the jurors, by whom facts are to be considered, cannot but feel that a verdict intentionally wrong, and influenced by fear, favour, or affection, or by hatred, malice, or ill-will is an outrage against Divine law and human civilization. They may be required to exercise a patient and close attention to a lengthened detail of circumstances, condemnatory or exculpatory, but all will terminate to the satisfaction of their country, and of their own consciences, if they take into their box a cool and dispassionate and sworn determination, and "a true verdict give, according to the evidence." Whether ultimate judgment may be favourable to an accused party, or fearfully conclusive as to his guilt, he should have, through every intermediate stage, the benefit of all principles of constitutional law that apply to his case, and the further benefit of every rational doubt upon the facts sought to be established against him. The late Chief-Justice Bushe said in our hearing, on a criminal trial of some importance, that he wished the people to feel convinced that the law took better care of them than they took of themselves. Fully prepared to endorse the maxim, that it is better that many guilty persons should escape than one innocent person should suffer, we would offer a few observations on the hypothesis of some convictions for treason occurring at the approaching Special Commission. A duty will in such case devolve upon the Government, from which they should not, from which they cannot, shrink. Whatever the law awards should be promptly and unhesitatingly enforced. The law officers of the Crown would never have advised the issue of the Commission if they did not feel the necessity for meeting disaffection with the most speedy repression, and restoring peace and confidence throughout the community by subjecting treason, whether of home production or of foreign importation, to the heaviest consequences. The application of martial law has been totally withheld, and full time has been afforded for all accused parties to prepare for their trials before courts specially convened, but administering justice under authority purely and constitutionally civil. Hitherto in dealing with the treasonable manifestations which have disturbed our country, and seriously injured its industrial interests, the Government have displayed a most praiseworthy energy. We expect them to show the same energy in protecting the loyal and well-disposed people of this country, by consigning those whose guilt may be established to immediate punishment. We can see no reason why a Special Commission should be protracted more than in former times, except for the alteration in the statute law respecting treason in Ireland, which has been recently made in the interest of the accused, and which was introduced to the consideration of the Legislature by a member of the House of Commons who is now one of the judges named for the approaching trials in Dublin. But allowing every latitude for the thorough investigation of each case, and heartily desirous that the most perfect impartiality may mark all stages of the proceedings now impending, we hope that every instance of guilt, fully ascertained and established, shall be also an instance of prompt and exemplary public punishment. For the expression of these sentiments we have no motive except a sincere wish for the maintenance of future peace and tranquillity. Whether in the acknowledgement of meritorious service, or in the chastisement of detected and convicted criminality, "Bis dat qui cito dat."—Saunders's New-Letter.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In the Matter of JOSEPH FLANN,
of Donegall-place, Belfast, in the County of Antrim, Draper and Haberdasher, a Bankrupt.

THE Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency will sit at the said Court, Four Courts, Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 5th day of APRIL, 1867, at the hour of Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the surrender of the said Bankrupt, proof of debts, and choice of an Assignee in this Matter, of which sitting all persons concerned are to Take Notice.

All persons indebted to the said Bankrupt in any sum whatever, or who have any of his estate or effects, are not to pay or deliver same except to CHARLES HENRY JAMES, Esq., 30, Upper Ormond-quay, Dublin, the Official Assignee.

And all persons knowing of the concealment of any property of the said Bankrupt are requested to give notice thereof to the Agent.

Dated this 22nd day of March, 1867.

HUGH DOYLE, Deputy Assistant Registrar.

HUGH GRAHAM, Agent to the Bankruptcy, No. 90, Lower Gardiner-street, Dublin.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In the Matter of
THOMAS H. M. BELL, of No. 18, Waring-street, Belfast, in the County of Antrim, Commission Agent, a Bankrupt.

THE Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency will sit at the said Court, Four Courts, Dublin, on FRIDAY, the 29th day of MARCH, 1867, at the hour of Eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the admission and proof of debts, and the final examination of the Bankrupt in this Matter.

Whereupon, if no prosecution shall have been directed by the Court, nor any charge of fraud entered on the proceedings, nor any objection to the signing of the Bankrupt's Certificate be entered in the Court, such Certificate will be forthwith prepared by the Chief Registrar, and signed by the Judge.

All Creditors are required to send to the Office of the Official Assignee, the affidavit of debt, or precise particulars of their claims, specifying any securities held by them, two days at least before said sitting, and of which sitting all persons concerned are to Take Notice.

Dated this 15th day of March, 1867.

IN CHANCERY.

ADVERTISEMENT TO CREDITORS, LEGATEES, AND INCUMBRANCERS.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

In the Matter of
WILLIAM BOYD,
one of the Executors of JAMES WILKIN, deceased,
Petitioner;
ANNE WILKIN, and others,
Respondents.

I HEREBY require all persons claiming to be Creditors or Pecuniary Legatees of JAMES WILKIN, late of Lakeview, near Armagh, in the County of Armagh, Farmer, deceased, on or before the 30th day of APRIL, 1867, to furnish in writing to WILLIAM BOYD, of Armagh, the Petitioner in this matter, or to GEORGE CREBBIN COCHRANE, of 43, Dame-street, Dublin, and Armagh, his Solicitor the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

Dated this 19th day of March, 1867.

WM. BROOKE, Master in Chancery.

GEORGE C. COCHRANE, Solicitor for Petitioner, No. 43, Dame-street, Dublin, and Armagh.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT, IRELAND.

COUNTY OF CLARE.

In the Matter of the Estate of EDWARD FINCH, Owner and Petitioner.

TO BE SOLD, before the Honourable Judge Lynch, on TUESDAY, the 7th day of MAY, 1867, at the hour of Twelve o'clock noon, at the Landed Estates' Court, Inn's-quay, Dublin, in One Lot, part of the Lands of Cragroe, containing 172 acres and 31 perches, statute measure, situate in the Barony of Tulla, Upper, and County of Clare, held in Fee-simple, and producing the net annual rent of £65 18s. 6½d.

Dated this 15th day of March, 1867.

R. DENNY URLIN, Examiner.

That part of the Lands of Cragroe, to be Sold in this matter, forms portion of the townland of that name, which has been partitioned to the Owner, by order of the Landed Estates' Court of the 22nd January, 1867. They are situate about fifteen miles distant by railway from the City of Limerick, and eight miles from the Town of Ennis. The Lands are of good quality, and are at present let considerably below their value to yearly tenants.

For Rentals, Maps, and further particulars, apply at the Registrar's Office, Landed Estates' Court, Dublin; to

TIMOTHY BUNTON, Esq., Solicitor, Ennis; or to Messrs. GALLOWAYS & CONNOR, Solicitors having carriage of the Sale, 55, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MARCH 30, 1867.

THE first and paramount object proposed by the New Common Law Bill is the complete assimilation of pleading and practice in the Superior Courts of Law in Ireland to that which exists in the corresponding Courts in England. This is a point upon which the views of both branches of the Profession in this country have been so strongly and so unanimously expressed that it is hardly necessary to adduce reasons to support so popular an opinion. At present the House of Lords is the tribunal of ultimate resort for the review of the decisions of the Courts of Common Law in both countries, and the advantages which English and Irish jurisprudence derive from its being so are so great that no effort should be spared to render the common appellate tribunal as efficient as possible. In this way, and in this way alone, can the harmony which ought to exist between the decisions of the Courts in the two countries be preserved, and that equality in the administration of the law which is essential to the prosperity of the country be attained. To secure these important advantages it is, however, indispensable that the Appellate Court should not be overburdened with business. From the constitution of the House of Lords, and the comparatively short period of its sittings, it is quite essential, if it is to maintain its position as the Appellate Court of the two countries, that it should only be resorted to for the decision of important questions of principle; and that in considering such questions the Law Lords, and the Judges who assist their deliberations, should not be embarrassed by a strange, and to them unintelligible, system of procedure. For this reason, if for no other, uniformity of practice and procedure in the English and Irish tribunals is attended with such advantages that to the attainment of this object all minor details should give way. But, as we have before said, in almost every point of difference the advantage preponderates in favour of the English system. For example, the Irish Common Law Procedure Act, s. 5, purports to abolish all forms of action, while, with singular inconsistency, it makes the plaintiff's right to costs depend upon the form of action which he adopts for the statement of his complaint. The English Act, on the contrary, preserves the forms of action, while it abolishes the technicalities of pleading, which rendered necessary a strict adherence to the forms of expression appropriated to each action. A moment's reflection will show the necessity, in the present state of the law, of preserving the substantive distinctions between classes of actions and the embarrassments which must arise from attempting to reduce all personal actions to the same category. The Court is called upon to decide on the validity of a defence of the Statute of Limitations, or to review the direction of a Judge at Nisi Prius as to how far such a defence has been sustained in evidence at the trial. For the decision of this point the Court must, in the first instance, determine whether the cause of action is for a direct or a consequential injury. In the one case the period of limitation must, in all probability, be computed from the act complained of; in the other, from the period when the injury arose; or it may become necessary to determine, with a view to the proper assessment of damages, whether the plaintiff is suing for a liquidated penalty, or unliquidated damages arising from the breach of some Statute or Contract. Hours of fruitless discussion are wasted in determining the nature of the plaintiff's complaint which might all be saved by his having adopted one or other of the recognized forms of action. The inevitable consequence of such discussions is the substitution of disputes about words for disputes about ideas. Instead of counsel endeavouring to convey to the Court and to each other their conceptions of justice and common sense, the time which might be profitably employed in this purpose is wasted in discussing the due interpretation of the formula in which these conceptions are embodied. We believe the assimilation of the Irish to the English pleading, in this branch, will be found a most beneficial reform.

The next important change which we notice, as introduced by the new Bill, is the power, in cases in which the cause of action has arisen with the jurisdiction, of serving the defendant abroad. The power of substituting service, as it at present exists, is only available where the defendant has an agent in this country, and thus fails to provide for the very class of cases in which a just demand is least likely to be satisfied without legal process. The defendant may be an annuitant or a mortgagee, residing abroad, drawing a large income from this country, which is remitted to him direct from the person liable to pay without passing through the hands of any person who can be considered as his agent, or he may have gone abroad for a temporary purpose when the debt is nearly statute run. In all such cases the debtor can effectually set his creditor at defiance, unless the creditor have at law the power which he already possesses in a large class of cases in equity—of serving the defendant with process at his residence abroad.

We also believe the check, which we observe is imposed by the Bill, to the excessive multiplication of counts on the same cause of action, will be found a vast simplification of the existing practice. With the ample powers of amendment possessed by the judges, there seems no reason why the plaintiff should be permitted to ring the changes on the same state of facts in a half dozen different counts. By the present Bill no more than one count will be permitted on each distinct cause of action, except by permission of a Judge. We forbear to notice several matters of detail in the Bill—such as the restoration of a limited general issue in all classes of actions, which has worked well in England for the last thirty years, and the power of paying money into Court, in all classes of personal actions, which, we believe, will be found to have a beneficial effect in checking that class of frivolous actions by which the records of our Courts have latterly been too often disgraced. We have said enough to indicate the general nature of the Government Bill, and, we believe, it will be received as a valuable measure of reform by both branches of the legal profession in Ireland.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE RECENT LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

The recent legal appointments consequent on the resignation of the Right Honourable Francis Blackburne, have been already very fully discussed both here and in England; and it is gratifying to us to be able to congratulate the public and the profession upon the satisfaction with which the leading journals, representing every shade and variety of political opinion, have, with one voice, expressed themselves as to the selections made by the Government. This singular unanimity of opinion is the best proof that can be given that these appointments were not bestowed as a reward for mere political services without regard to the merits or peculiar suitability of the individuals upon whom they were conferred.

The Right Honourable Abraham Brewster, as Lord Chancellor of Ireland, is unquestionably the right man in the right place. A writer in an English Review, alluding to the Irish legal appointments consequent on the change of Government, speaks of our Irish establishments as affording "a safe and lucrative retreat for ex-politicians;" but in reference to Mr. Brewster's elevation to the office of Lord Justice of Appeal, the same writer says:—"Here, it must be confessed, was a rare instance of promotion by merit; of his appointment no complaint can be made, except by those extreme politicians, of a class by no means extinct in Ireland, who regard party services as alone worthy of being estimated." We feel it would simply be a piece of impertinence to the readers of this journal to expatiate on the subject of Mr. Brewster's fitness for the high and important duties which he is now at length called upon to discharge. It must, however, be admitted that some feeling of disappointment was produced among many members of both branches of the profession, immediately upon Mr. Brewster entering upon his duties as Lord Justice of Appeal. But we feel confident that this feeling, if it still exists, will be very soon effaced, and that there will be no ground to apprehend that the advantages to be derived by the public from ability of the highest order, vast experience, and profound learning shall be marred by anything resembling an exhibition of impatience during the progress of a cause. Many great judges have at first forgotten that "'Tis excellent to have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant," and that great mental acuteness often generates a "habit of interruption by frequent questions, and of intimating a decided opinion during the progress of the argument."

It is to be remarked of Mr. Brewster, when at the bar, that it was almost impossible to take him by surprise. His great learning was always ready at his command, and any interruption from bench or bar seemed only to give him additional strength. His very style was indicative of his great powers, and his arguments wore the appearance of expositions of the law, drawn, for the time, from his great resources, rather than of systematic preparation for the particular occasion. Hence he never experienced any inconvenience from any sudden derangement of a line of argument elaborately arranged. Our space will not at present permit us to consider the other appointments, but we will recur to the subject at a future time.

At a meeting of the Attorneys and Solicitors of the City and County of Londonderry, held in the Court-House, Londonderry, on the 28th day of March, 1867, HENRY M'CAY, Esq., LL.D., in the chair,

It was proposed by Robert Knox, and seconded by Hugh Lane, Esqrs., and carried unanimously:—That the petition to Parliament for the Repeal of the Attornies' Certificate Duty, read by the secretary, be adopted.

Proposed by Thomas Chambers, and seconded by Isaac Colquhoun, Esqrs., and carried unanimously: That the Secretary do transmit to the representatives in Parliament of the County of Londonderry, the City of Londonderry, and Borough of Coleraine, the copy of the petition, and the accompanying statement in support of it, with a request that they will severally attend in their places in Parliament on the 2nd April next, and support Mr. Denman's motion for the second reading of the Bill introduced by him into the House of Commons to effect the above object.

Proposed by Thomas Chambers, and seconded by John M'Intyre, Esqrs., and carried unanimously:—That Henry M'Cay, Hugh Lane, George Proctor, Robert Crookshanks, and John Glover be appointed a committee on behalf of the Londonderry Law Society, to draw up suggestions for the amendment of the Civil Bill Acts; such suggestions to be printed and furnished to the members of the Society as soon as possible.

That the secretary be instructed to request the Council of the Incorporated Law Society to use its influence to procure the withdrawal of the Bills now before Parliament for the amendment of the Civil Bill Acts, in order that a complete measure may be framed for introduction during next session of Parliament.

Proposed by George Proctor, and seconded by Isaac Colquhoun, Esqrs., and carried unanimously:—

That it is desirable that there should be a general meeting of the Quarter Sessions' Practitioners of Ireland, held in Dublin on an early day during next Term, for the purpose of considering the present Civil Bill Acts, with a view to have the same amended, and that means be taken to have the profession in every county in Ireland represented at such meeting.

GEORGE PROCTOR, Secretary.

The promotion of THOMAS KENNEDY LOWRY, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., to a Judgeship in the Island of Jamaica has caused two vacancies on the North-East Circuit. These have been filled by the appointment of WILLIAM B. KAYE, Esq., LL.D., to the Crown Prosecutorship for the County of Armagh, and of WILLIAM CROZIER, Esq., to that for the County of Antrim and Town of Carrickfergus.

A Bill to Amend the Pleading, Practice, and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland.

166. Two Judges may sit at same time for trial of causes pending in the same Court.
167. Power to the Court or Judge to direct trial to take place before Chairman or Recorder, where plaintiff's claim is for debt or liquidated demand under £20.

Arbitration.

168. If matter in dispute consists of matters of account which cannot conveniently be tried in the ordinary way, Court or Judge may direct arbitration by arbitrator to be appointed, or by an officer of the Court.
169. Special case may be stated, and question of fact tried.
170. Arbitrator may state special case.
171. Power to Judge to direct arbitration at time of trial, when issues of fact left to his decision.
172. Proceedings before and power of such arbitrator.
173. Power to send back to arbitrator.
174. Application to set aside the award to be made within first seven days of term next following publication.
175. Enforcing of awards within period for setting them aside.
176. If action commenced by one party after all have agreed to arbitration, the Court or judge may stay proceedings.
177. On failure of parties or arbitrators, Court or Judge may appoint single arbitrator, or umpire.
178. When reference is to two arbitrators, and one party fail to appoint, other party may appoint arbitrator to act alone.
179. Two arbitrators may appoint umpire.
180. Award to be made in three months, unless parties or Court enlarge time.
181. Rule to deliver possession of land pursuant to award to be enforced as a judgment in ejectment.

Satisfaction of Judgments.

242. Satisfaction of judgments by party.
243. Court may order satisfaction to be entered on judgment fully paid.

It is reported that Sir Colman O'Loghlen intends to bring before the House the fact that the representatives of Irish, Scotch, and English provincial journals are thought unworthy to mingle with the aristocracy of the Reporters' Gallery, and that he will move that, for the future, three seats be set apart for the accommodation of the representatives of these journals. The habit of "burking" or "cushioning" the statements made by members who represent Irish constituencies has long been complained of, and a general desire exists that some remedy may be applied.—London Correspondent of Daily Express.

ENGLAND.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

Error—Practice.—After a verdict and judgment in the court below, a party is precluded from raising in a court of error any question of fact which is inconsistent with the record. The record, in such a case, impliedly states the contrary of the errors alleged, and if the party has any remedy it is by applying to the court below within four days to set aside the verdict: (Irwin v. Grey, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 74. H. of L.)

Equity—Pleading.—Where the plaintiff, in disputing the right of the defendants to certain land, averred that no act of ownership had been exercised by them until within a recent period, and interrogated them as to the circumstances of their possession and acts of ownership, it was held that a mere allegation of acts of ownership from time immemorial, and possession generally, was not a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's interrogatories: (The Marquis of Bute v. Lewis, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 82. V. C. S.)

Where it appeared there was not sufficient time subsequently to settling the bill for all of the plaintiffs to make the usual affidavit as to collusion between themselves and the defendants, the Court permitted the bill to be filed upon the affidavit of some only of the plaintiffs: (Glover v. Reynolds, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 84. V.C.S.)

Where an order had been made to take a bill pro confesso against a defendant resident at New York, and an injunction granted, the Court allowed his answer sworn before a notary public (the notarial signature being attested by the English consul), on being signed by counsel, to be filed: (Stamford v. Lloyd, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 84. V.C.W.)

A foreign sovereign state seeking relief in an English Court of equity must put forward some individual from whom discovery could be compelled if a cross bill for that purpose were filed by the defendants: (United States of America v. Wagner, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 87. V.C.W.)

Probate Practice.—The Court ordered, in granting administration pendente lite in a testamentary suit, that the administrator should not remove certain diamonds which were deposited in the Bank of England by the executors after the death of the testatrix: (Smith v. Tebbitt, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 96. Prob.)

Power of an Executor of an Executor to question Validity of Will.—An executor of an executor has no power to question the validity of the first testator's will; and the Court refused to allow him to cite the legatees named in the will to prove it in solemn form of law, or to show cause why it should not be declared null and void: (In the Goods of G. I. Chamberlain, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 97. Prob.)

Will—Conversion.—B. directed that the interest and dividends of all the remainder of her property should be applied for the benefit of her sister during her life. Part of the residue consisted of terminable annuities. It was held that they must be converted, and the income derived from the investment paid to the tenant for life: (Pidgeon v. Spencer, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 83. V.C.S.)

Vendor and Purchaser—Tenant—Compensation for Drainage on Sale of the Estate.—Where A., B., and C., joint owners in fee of an estate, of which C. was in the occupation as tenant, sold the same to a purchaser, under an agreement containing a clause that "the tenant rights are to be ascertained by valuation in the usual manner, and paid for on completion of the purchase," they are entitled to recover from the purchaser, as one of such "tenant's rights," two-thirds of the sum expended by C. in drainage of the estate during his occupation, that being the amount which C. would have been entitled to receive from his co-owners, A. and B., on the expiration of his tenancy. Had the tenant not been an owner, the purchaser would have been bound to pay for the whole drainage; but, on the other hand, if all the three owners had been occupiers of the estate as well, the purchaser would not be liable for the cost of the drainage, which in such a case ought to be taken as done by the owners qua owners and not qua occupiers. It is no answer to the claim of the plaintiffs in this case that at the time of the sale the estate was represented to the purchaser to be thoroughly well drained; first, because if such an objection were good, it would vary by parole the written agreement; and, secondly, it is not a good objection because it was a reason for recommending the land that it was already well drained, though the draining had to be paid for. The purchaser should have inquired by whom it was drained: (Ward and others v. Moss, 16 L. T. Rep N. S. 91 Ex.)

POLICY OF INSURANCE—ORDER AND DISPOSITION.—W. assigned, by way of mortgage to S., a policy of insurance upon his life, but S. gave at the time no notice of his incumbrance to the insurance office. W. became bankrupt, but his assignee was not made aware of the existence of the policy, which W. kept on foot till his death. Upon W's death S. gave a notice of his incumbrance to the office, and claimed the proceeds of the policy, but the office acquainted the bankrupt's assignee with the existence of the policy, and paid the proceeds into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The Court of Bankruptcy made an order for sale on being made acquainted with the existence of the policy. The policy was held to be in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and the order for sale having relation back to the date of the bankruptcy, the assignee was entitled: (Re Webb's Policy, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 89. V.C.M.)

ASSIGNEE—CHOSE IN ACTION.—No act of an assignee for value of a chose in action done after the bankruptcy of the assignor, can give effect to his assignment as against the assignees in bankruptcy, unless his title is perfected before the bankruptcy by notice to the legal holder of such chose in action: (Ibid.)

BANKRUPTCY LAW REFORM.

From The Law Times.

The Bill of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL is an improvement upon that of his predecessor; but it will prove in practice an equal failure with all that have been tried, because it is based, like them, upon an erroneous principle, or, more properly, it fails to recognize the true principle of a bankruptcy law.

That principle may be thus stated: Not to pay a debt is a wrong for which the debtor ought to be punished, unless he can show that his insolvency was caused by unavoidable misfortune and by no fault of his. The burden of proof of this is upon the debtor.

If law reformers would start with an explicit recognition of this principle, it would not be difficult to frame a good law of bankruptcy in accordance with it. All the many failures to make and to amend that law have resulted from neglect to recognize the truth that to procure your neighbour's property under promise to pay for it, to appropriate it to your own use and then not to pay, is prima fácie a crime in moral turpitude as great as that of a hungry boy who tells the baker that Mrs. Smith has sent him for a loaf, and by that false pretence procures a dinner.

The Bill of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL is based upon the assumption that insolvency is a question only between the debtor and the creditor, and that the law has nothing more to do with it than to provide facilities for the getting in and distribution of the estate. If this be granted the provisions appear well adapted for that end. The insolvent's entire property is to be handed over to his creditors, who are to deal with it by trustees elected by themselves. We presume the Bill will contain provisions for giving the trustees special powers for this purpose, and subjecting them to supervision by some higher authority than careless creditors, and giving them liberal payment for their services. But if the trustees are to be merely a reproduction of the creditors' assignee under another name, experience tells us what will be the results. The work will be ill done; men who have their own business to attend to will not devote their time to the business of other people, and the costs will, as hitherto, be found to swallow up the estate. We trust the ATTORNEY-GENERAL will even yet entertain our suggestion, that the winding-up should be entrusted to solicitors, paying them a percentage on the moneys that pass through their hands and costs out of pocket. This would save to many estates the expenses sure to be thrown upon them by creditors' trustees, who will prudently avoid responsibility by consulting their solicitor on all occasions. The advantage to the profession of such an extensive business would be great, of course, but the benefit to creditors would be greater still. An insolvent estate would be more cheaply and more efficiently wound-up by a solicitor alone than by an accountant and a solicitor. It is the fashion to complain of a solicitor's charges, but what are they compared with the bill of an accountant!

This is the primary feature of the scheme; and until the Bill is before us, it is impossible to say how it is to be carried out. But it is not to be through the medium of a bankruptcy court, but by the County Courts, even in the metropolis. This, however, is doubtful, and if proposed is not likely to be adopted. The metropolitan County Courts could not add to their present work the enormous business of bankruptcy, at least without a considerable increase in their number. Besides, it would be for the convenience of the trading public in London to have one court devoted to the business of bankruptcy, at one locality, and where all the work can be done at the same offices. A Court perpetually sitting, with two registrars (a Judge would not be required) might well perform all the administrative work of bankruptcy, and questions of law could be taken to the Lords Justices, as now, upon the statement of a case by the registrar. The old notion of appointing a judge in bankruptcy is very properly abandoned. There would not be half work enough for him as things are, and under the new Bill there will be still less work. The punishment of bankruptcy wrongs is to be left to the criminal law, which is practically to give to them impunity. Roguedom will have a fine time of it unless Sir JOHN ROLT can devise some means by which the contraction of debt without reasonable means of payment may be punished by some more facile medium than indictment at the assizes. The County Court Judge should be invested with some power of imprisonment, not for the debt, but for the fraud, with an appeal against the decision on security given for costs.

Then for the discharge.—We do not gather from the speech of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL that any provision is to be made for this. Probably he designs no formality for this purpose—the estate being surrendered, the debtor is to be thereby discharged. This is a logical conclusion from the principle of the Bill itself: Get all you can out of deceived creditors; eat, drink, and be merry at their expense; when you can obtain credit no longer, give up to them all you have left (which is nothing), and then you will be free from their impertinent importunities; you will be no worse than you were before you run into debt—penniless; but you will be at liberty to play the same pleasant and profitable game over again, if by lying and plausibility you can find fresh dupes in a new locality.

Such encouragement to robbery can be avoided only by requiring that, upon the completion of the winding-up, the trustees shall be bound to certify to the Judge of the County Court whether they are satisfied with the conduct of the bankrupt, stating the cause of his insolvency; that thereupon the bankrupt shall appear before the Judge, who shall either give him a certificate of honourable discharge, if the history of the case justifies it, or inflict upon him a limited sentence of imprisonment for the fraud (if any) which the trustees have discovered and certified.

From any such sentence of imprisonment an appeal should lie to a jury either of the County Court or at Quarter Sessions, the appellant giving security for costs; the issue in such case to be, whether the allegation of the bankrupt that his failure was caused by unavoidable misfortune is true, and the burden of proof being upon him, and himself and all other persons to be competent and compellable witnesses.

The existing criminal law is wholly unfitted to deal with such cases. To meet them it would be necessary to alter the law of fraud, and this is encompassed with difficulties. To punish wrongful insolvency only by indictment is in truth to pass it without punishment; being a special case, it can be met only by a special law adapted to its special circumstances as to procedure, proof, and punishment. Unless this be provided for, the new bankruptcy law will be the source of even greater peculation than is the present law.

Imprisonment for debt, quâ debt, is to be abolished. As it is now, it is a mere mockery. An effort will be made to abolish it also in the County Courts. But there it is maintained of necessity, for without it the small debts of the small tradesmen would be absolutely confiscated. The ready answer given to this is, "So much the better, it will put a stop to the credit system." They who thus argue are ignorant of the ways and wants of the poor. To be denied credit would be to them destruction. With persons living on weekly wages ready money is not always at command. Illness, accident, being out of employ, stops their revenue, while their expenses proceed; they must eat and pay rent. Their only resource in such contingencies is the credit given to them by the small shopkeeper; cut off this source of supply, they must pawn their poor furniture or their wretched clothing to buy the bread to sustain life from day to day, till work and wages return. If the small shopkeeper cannot recover his debt, he cannot give credit, and the consequences will fall, not upon him, but upon his customers, for whose sake this supposed boon is to be enacted. We suspect that the persons who speak claptrap and write sensation articles against credit would not like to have their principles applied to themselves. Many a mob orator and many a leader writer would look very blank, and swear very lustily, if his baker or butcher were to say to him, "I like your principle of restricted credit, and will adopt it. I cannot send you the beef without the money." It would be inconvenient to him; but it would be positive starvation to the poor.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, March 22.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

On the order of the day for going into committee upon this Bill being read,

Mr. LAWSON hoped that the government would introduce without delay a second Bill upon this subject, embodying the recommendations contained in the Report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the constitution of the Irish Court of Chancery, which was published last June.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL for IRELAND stated, in reply, that the second Bill, embodying the recommendations of the commissioners, was now in actual preparation, and would be introduced in a very short time.

The House then went into committee upon the Bill.

General DUNNE inquired whether the passing of the Bill would render Chancery law better and cheaper?

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL for IRELAND replied that the administration of the law in the Irish courts would be rendered more effective than it was at present, and that the cost to the suitors would be considerably diminished.

On clause 5,

Mr. LAWSON said there was now much unnecessary expense, attended with delay, owing to the needless multiplication of documents and meetings, which might be avoided by a single judge taking a case throughout; and he would suggest that there should be two scales of costs, the lower one for cases involving sums below a certain amount.

The clause was agreed to, as were clauses up to 10 inclusive.

On clause 11,

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN, after referring to the abolition of Masterships in England, proposed an amendment, which, he said, had been formerly proposed by the present Attorney-General for Ireland. Its object was to prevent the delegation of duties, resulting in the creation of bastard Masters, and in form it was to omit certain words, and to insert others requiring that the chief clerk "shall assist the judge in business not of a judicial character."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL for Ireland accepted the principle of the amendment.

It was adopted, and the clause, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 40,

The CHAIRMAN was ordered to report progress, and the House resumed.

It will be seen by our advertising columns of last week that the "Society for the Preservation and Amendment of Trial by Grand Jury," are about, publicly, to award prizes for essays on this subject. In its prospectus the society states that its objects are of a strictly practical nature, and it proposes to deal at the outset with the payment, summoning, liability to serve, and treatment of jurors. That much may be said on all these points is as true as that much has been already said and written; and, assuredly, the laudable objects this society has in view are of interest, not only to the legal profession, but also to all classes of the community. The innumerable complaints made, by judges on the one hand, of the non-attendance of jurymen, and by jurymen themselves, on the other, of the unequal mode of summoning them, and of their loss of time and the inadequate payment made to them—as well as the many suggestions made for the amendment of the law relating to jurymen—give ample materials for a profitable discussion of the whole matter. Taken up with a proper spirit, and with a view to assist the ends of justice, while ameliorating the wrongs of jurymen, a discussion on the existing system of juries is needed, in order to make the public fully alive to its inherent evils. The fact is, that so many are exempt from service on juries that the minority who suffer are unable to make their voices heard, and it is only through the inconveniences caused to suitors through the utter absence of organization exhibited by the ordinary jury lists, that the necessity for the amendment, which is the object of this society, is brought home to the minds of the British public. We are well assured that continuous agitation of the subject is alone calculated to bring about the desired alteration in the jury system, and we heartily wish the society success in their efforts to that intent.—Solicitors' Journal.

The late WILLIAM J. FFENNELL, Esq., J.P.—William Joshua Ffennell, Esq., her Majesty's Senior Inspector of Fisheries, has suddenly been taken from among us. For a few weeks past he had been suffering from the effects of the cold weather, which, at the age of sixty-seven, obliged him to take more care of his health than was his usual custom. On Saturday morning last he was seized with a fit of paralysis, from which he never recovered. His loss, both to his friends and to his country, is very great. Having devoted his time and attention to the subject of fisheries—first as Inspector and Commissioner in Ireland, and then as Inspector of Salmon Fisheries in England—he had acquired a vast amount of sound knowledge as to the legislation and practical working of the British fisheries—a subject to which he had devoted upwards of twenty-two years of incessant labour and watchfulness. As a public man, Mr. Ffennell was conscientious and earnest in his duties, a valiant champion for law and justice, at the same time respecting and duly weighing in the balance the private rights of individuals. He had a happy talent of "throwing oil upon the waters" when "Greek met Greek" in fishery warfare, and on occasions when members of the legal profession required a little judicious handling to keep them within bounds. With all this he was firm, singularly clear-headed, and determined for the right; and we have been present on occasions when arguments and pleadings innumerable have been rolled like the waves of an angry sea against him, only to be dissipated and broken into spray against the firm granite rock of his high intelligence, sound judgment, and comprehensive views. In private life, he was a devoted father to his large, and now bereaved, family. He was ever welcomed by his friends, whether as inspector to give his opinion upon a legal or practical point in the cultivation of a river—as adviser in matters of business—or as a friend at a social gathering. As a magistrate in his native county of Tipperary, where his family have been settled for many generations, he was formerly distinguished by the active and energetic performance of his duties when Ireland was in a very disturbed state. His services to the country at large have been more than once alluded to by members of both Houses of Parliament when questions as to the development of the fisheries were made a subject of debate, and hence his death is a national loss, while the numerous friends who were attracted to him by his amiable character will deeply regret his removal from amongst us.—Land and Water.

MR. SPENCER WALPOLE has been appointed Inspector of Fisheries, in succession to the late Mr. Ffennell.—The Owl.

O'BRIEN v. ENRIGHT.

Jan. 28, Feb. 18.—Easement—Prescription—Damage.

Demurrer. The first paragraph of the summons and plaint complained that plaintiff was possessed of meadow lands adjoining the River Deel, and was entitled to have the river flow by and away from the lands, and that defendant obstructed the stream, whereby the lands were flooded. The second paragraph complained that plaintiff was possessed of lands, and that defendant flooded them. To these paragraphs defendant pleaded that he was possessed of a mill adjoining the river, and that the occupiers of the mill for twenty years enjoyed the right of maintaining a weir and penning up the water of the river for working the mill as to the said mill appurtenant; and that the alleged grievances were a use by the defendant of the said right. To this the plaintiff demurred.

Feb. 6.—Quo Warranto—Time—Sufficiency of Notice.

Information in the nature of a quo warranto to try the right to the Treasurership of the County of Leitrim. The present question arose upon the sufficiency of the defendant's plea, from which it appeared that the notice of election to the office, required by St. 4, Geo. IV., c. 33, s. 1, was dated on the 2nd March, 1866, and was published in the Dublin Gazette on the 6th March, giving notice that the election would be held on the 16th. To this notice there were two objections; 1st, that the 16th March was not "a day not less than fourteen days distant" from the 2nd March, and that the days mentioned in the statute were clear days; 2nd, that the date of the notice was the date of its first publication in the Dublin Gazette.

Monahan and Butt, Q.C., for the prosecutor.

The Solicitor-General, Heron, Q C., and Malley, for the defendant.

The Court held that the days mentioned in the Act were clear days, and therefore that the statute had not been complied with; and, secondly, GEORGE J., hesitating, that the true date of the notice was the date of its publication in the Dublin Gazette, not the date of its signature.

BROWN v. JULIAN.

Jan. 11, 1867.—Withdrawing Plea to Action and Paying Money into Court—Costs incurred by Defendant after Payment into Court, and before notice of Trial withdrawn.

In this case the defendant had pleaded an issuable plea, and after issue joined and notice of trial served, had applied for leave to withdraw plea and pay money into Court. On this motion an order was made allowing him to do so on terms of paying the costs of the motion if the plaintiff did not accept the sum so paid in, and the order to be without prejudice to plaintiff's notice of trial. This order was made, and the money paid into Court on Friday, Nov. 23. On the following day plaintiff took out the money in satisfaction of his claim, but did not give notice of his doing so or withdraw his notice of trial until Monday. The case was last in the list of common jury cases, which were to commence on the following Tuesday. The motion before the Court was that the defendant should be allowed costs incurred after the money was paid into Court and before notice of trial was withdrawn.

Court ordered that such costs necessarily and properly incurred by defendant up to service of plaintiff's notice withdrawing notice of trial should be taxed and set off against plaintiff's costs in the cause, and that plaintiff should pay defendant £4 costs of the motion.

HILL v. BALFE.

Jan. 30.—Pleading—I O U.—Parol Agreement.

Plaint that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum, &c., for money payable by the defendant to plaintiff for money due by an instrument in writing under the defendant's hand, commonly called an I O U, bearing date, &c.

Defence, on equitable grounds, stating a parol agreement that the money was not to be recoverable within eighteen months from the date of such I O U, on the fulfilment of certain conditions by the defendant; that defendant had fulfilled such conditions, and the eighteen months had not yet expired.

To this defence plaintiff demurred.

M'Donogh, Q.C., and Shegog, for plaintiff.

Hemphill, Q.C., and Hamill, for defendant.

The Court held that the plea was clearly bad, that the plaint was also bad, but not on general demurrer; and that as the defendant had pleaded over instead of moving to set plaint aside, the plaintiff was entitled to uc ceed in the demurrer.

WYBRANTS v. CRAWFORD and OTHERS.

Feb. 15—Ejectment—Redemption.

The 23 & 24 Vict., c. 153, sec. 70, directs the application for redemption to be made to the Court, or a Judge, within six months after the issuing of the writ, or at the earliest opportunity after, on which an application can be reasonably made. The six months here expired on the 31st Jan., the last day of term. The defendant, thinking he had nine months instead of six, did not apply till this day.

The Court held that the application was now too late.

ATKINSON v. GREGORY.

Costs, Taxation, Settlement of Action within Six Days of Service of Summons and Plaint.

In this case plaintiff had obtained an order to substitute service. Within six days of the substituted service, the defendant tendered the sum due, and £2 10s. for costs, under 1st General Order, 22nd Jan., '56.

Coppinger now moved that the taxing officer might be directed to tax plaintiff's costs of the motion to substitute service, and submitted that such costs are not covered by the general order. Plaintiff cannot proceed in the action after tender of the sum due, and £2 10s. for costs, so that this motion is necessary. He wants an order under 34 sec. of 16 & 17 Vic., c. 113, C. L. P. Act.

O'BRIEN, J.—I cannot make such an order. The General Order is express that £2 10s. should be sufficient in all cases. Sec. 34 of the C. L. P. Act applies to cases where there may be a taxation of costs in the cause. Here there can be no taxation at all.

Motion refused.

DAVIS v. DAVIS.

March 15.—Practice—Security for Costs—Affidavit by Attorney.

J. B. Murphy moved in this case, which was an action of ejectment, that the plaintiff, who resided out of the jurisdiction, might be ordered to give security for costs.

S. Walker, for plaintiff, objected that the affidavit on which the motion was founded was made by the attorney and not by the party.

J. B. Murphy in reply—The affidavit states that there is a good defence and that the attorney is better acquainted with the title than the party.

O'BRIEN, J.—The affidavit shows that the attorney is intimately acquainted with the case and the defence, and that from his own knowledge there is a good defence. I think I must hold the affidavit sufficient.

Motion granted.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law

In Chamber—Before KEATING, J.

FITZPATRICK v. WEBB.

28th March.—Practice—Parties—Married Woman—Security for Costs.

O'Hagan, Q.C., (E. T. Bewley with him) moved that a person named should be allowed to appear and conduct the suit, as the next friend of the plaintiff, who was a married woman, and whose husband had conflicting interests with her, and who had not been made a party to the suit.

The plaintiff was principal and residuary legatee to her separate use, in a will of the deceased, which was in litigation, and which was opposed by the defendants, who were the brothers and sole next of kin of the deceased. They had duly appeared, as caveators, to the warning of the plaintiff, but at the same time had given notice to the plaintiff to amend the proceedings by making her husband a party to the suit. The notice of motion in the present case was then given by the plaintiff.

It appeared that the plaintiff's husband had, in some Chancery proceedings when the deceased was alive, endeavoured to get some fnnds that were lodged in Chancery, in his wife's name, transferred to himself; and that she and the deceased resisted his attempt, on the ground that the wife was in reality only a trustee for the deceased, and differences had resulted between them in consequence.

Counsel cited and relied on Clarkson v. Waterhouse, (2 S. & T. 497).

Dr. Miller, for the defendant, opposed the motion, as contrary to the practice of the Court. He relied on an affidavit to show the inability of the proposed next friend to pay costs, and cited Copeland v. Rivers (3 Hag. 279), to show that the practice in the Prerogative Court was against appointing a next friend, and consented to dispense with the presence of the husband as a party, provided the wife gave proper security for costs.

KEATINGE, J.—I will, in that case, make an order that the plaintiff do either give security by bond in a penal sum of £100, or lodge that amount in Court as security for costs, and will allow her a week's time to make her election. Of course, being a married woman, she must, if she elects to give security, get a solvent person to sign the bond, to whom the defendants will not object.

Order accordingly.
(See rule 117—Contentious).

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by J. FIELD JOHNSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

Assignees of G. R. WATTS'S ESTATE.

March 9.—Application to Sell discharged of Lease—Directions as to Sale.

Wilson, for the assignees of Watts, who was an insolvent, applied that the lands ordered to be sold in this matter might be sold discharged of a lease of portion of them situate in 21, Aungier-street, Dublin, or for directions as to sale. By the marriage settlement of Watts, executed in 1863, he conveyed all his interest in this and other estates to trustees for himself for life, with a jointure of £100 a year for his wife, in case of her surviving him, and for his children. By a deed of even date with the settlement the trustees had authority to make leases of the premises, for twenty-one years in the case of a farming lease, and ninety-nine years in the case of a building lease, at the best rent and without fine. On the 9th July, 1865, Watts, a few weeks before he filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, signed an agreement for a lease of the premises in Aungier-street, to one Boulger, for 999 years, and at a rent which was not the best rent. Boulger paid a fine. Wilson submitted that Watts had no estate in the premises and no title to make this lease.

LYNCH, J.—It is a good lease during his life. There must be a suit in equity to set it aside before I can sell the premises discharged of it.

Wilson said that the motion was in the alternative—for directions as to sale.

Carton, for the lessee, Boulger, contended that the assignees took Watts's estate subject to all its equities, and that the lease, if good against Watts, was good against his assignees. The lessee was served with notice requiring him to consent to a sale discharged of this lease, and at the peril of costs. He served a notice in reply requiring evidence that Watts had not power to make this lease. In answer to this a notice was served stating that the deed referred to provided that the trustees, on request of Watts, were to make leases not exceeding 99 years, at the best rent, and without a fine. If the lessee could not rely, as he could not, on the want of power in Watts to make the lease, the assignees of Watts could not rely on it as against the lessee. Watts had an estate in remainder in the premises in the event of there being no children of the marriage, and there were no children to the present.

Lynch, J., said that the rental must state that Watts made this lease, and that he had only power to make a lease for his own life. The motion must be refused with costs. Boulger was brought into Court to defend his title to that which he got from Watts. The assignees, however, would be allowed these costs out of the estate.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN INSOLVENCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before Judge Berwick.

Re John Barrett.

March, 1867.—Annuitant in Possession of Insolvent's Property—Reference to Chief Clerk—Revesting Order—Death of Annuitant pending Reference.

Lawless, Q.C., Levy with him, applied to the Court for a revesting order of the insolvent's property under the following circumstances. The insolvent, in the month of May, 1840, granted to a person named Lillis an annuity out of certain freehold lands in the county Clare; and in some seven years after Lillis arrested the insolvent under a fiat, but afterwards proceeded to obtain judgment against him. Barrett filed his petition and schedule, and was discharged as an insolvent in December, 1847, no creditors' assignee having been appointed. Insolvent soon after emigrated to America. Nothing was done until the month of June, 1863, when a creditor's assignee was appointed, Lillis remaining all the time in possession of the property and receipt of the rents. In June, 1865, an order of reference was obtained to the Chief Clerk to take an account of what Lillis received; and, after several adjournments, the Chief Clerk made up his report, finding that Lillis was paid, and that a certain sum of money was in his hands, subject to certain special findings. From the appointment of the creditor's assignee, in 1863, Lillis ceased to receive the rents, which were received by an agent of the assignee. Shortly before the Chief Clerk made up his report Lillis died; and Mr. Lawless submitted that, notwithstanding the death, the Court could grant a revesting order on the insolvent lodging in Court whatever sum might be reported by the Chief Clerk to be unpaid on foot of the debts.

Gerald Fitzgibbon, for the friends of Lillis, objected to any order being made until a personal representative was raised to Lillis. He understood it was intended to object to the Chief Clerk's report; and he apprehended that nothing could be legally done until a representative of Lillis was brought before the Court.

Judge Berwick said he might grant the revesting order upon the sum being lodged which was found by the Chief Clerk to be due on foot of the debts; but thought it would be more satisfactory to all parties to have a representative to Lillis raised, which he would direct to be done without delay, and then let the whole case be decided at the same time.

Fitzgibbon said that in about six weeks they would be able to obtain probate to the will of Lillis.

The case was adjourned for six weeks.

Reviewing the Costs in an Insolvency of 1838—Money due by Assignee—Order on an Attorney to Lodge Money received on foot of Costs.

This case came before the Court upon a motion to review the Chief Clerk's report. It appeared that he had ascertained that a considerable sum of money was due by Mrs. Maryanne M'Donogh, who had been appointed creditor's assignee, and also a sum of £35, due by James Barret, solicitor.

His Lordship, after reviewing all the circumstances of the case, reduced the amount due by the assignee to £11, and allowed the report to stand as regarded Mr. Barret, who was directed to lodge a sum of £35, which had been paid to him on foot of costs.

Making away with Property—Raising Money at Loan Offices—Going Security for Others.

The insolvent was a coach smith, whose wages appeared to have been 30s. a week, and was represented to have lived comfortably by the help of letting furnished lodgings. He was opposed by Mr. Bloomfield, solicitor, on the part of a loan office, in which, with several others he raised small sums of money upon joint promissory notes. Evidence was given that upon a decree being obtained against him his furniture disappeared. Evidence also was given that the valuable portion of it did not belong to him, and that the entire was not worth more than £20, which he would be entitled to under the head of excepted articles.

Mr. Levy, for insolvent, contended that these loan offices were a moral nuisance that ought to be abated. Cabmen, letter-carriers, men earning weekly wages or having any property in their possession, were caught up by them, and several names got on the one note, so that they made about cent. per cent. on these unfortunate people, amongst whom they spread ruin. They were their own insurers, and when disappointed they had no right to come to that Court to complain.

Judge Berwick said there was much in Mr. Levy's observations in which he concurred; and if there was nothing in the case but contracting a debt with a loan office, who took care to have several sureties on their notes, he would not remand a man merely because he was unable to pay it, although he would punish a man like the insolvent, who was earning wages by which he could live comfortably, for having anything to do with bills or loan offices; and if, in the present case, he had acted honestly and not attempted to make away with his furniture by pawning it, he would give him a free discharge. There was no doubt that the furniture had been put out of the way as soon as he had notice of the decree, and he could not even tell where it was pawned. He found that the debts in the schedule were due to loan offices, and what right had a poor tradesman, earning wages by which he could live respectably, to go to loan offices? or to become security for others? To mark his censure of such conduct he would remand the insolvent for two months from the day of his arrest, which would leave him another month in prison.

LEITRIM ASSIZES—26*th Feb.*, 1867.

Before CHRISTIAN, J.

Reported by OLIVER J. BURKE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Presentment for Malicious Injuries.

Claimant's house had been maliciously burned down. The Presentment Sessions had made a presentment for £5 compensation for the actual loss sustained. The Grand Jury now made a presentment for a further sum of £6 10s. for expenses incurred by claimant in attending at Sessions, posting and serving notices, &c. On the matter being brought before the Judge by the Cess-payers,

His LORDSHIP said that the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 116, sec. 135, did not empower the Grand Jury to present for expenses incurred by claimants in seeking for compensation for malicious injuries. The only question the Grand Jury had power to deal with was, the actual loss incurred. The practice which had hitherto prevailed in this county (as it was stated), of presenting for expenses, was a very improper one.

ROSCOMMON ASSIZES.—4th March, 1867.

THE MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appellants; M'GARRY and OTHERS, Respondents.

These were appeals taken by the M. G. W. Railway Company from decrees made by FRANCIS W. BRADY, Esq., Q C., Chairman of the county, whereby said Company were condemned in damages and costs at the several suits of eleven plaintiffs, who complained that they had suffered damage and loss by reason of the non-delivery of their pigs at the Company's terminus, at the North Wall, on the evening of the 23rd of April, 1866, in time for the sailing of the London and North Western boat for Holyhead, by reason whereof they lost the Wolverhampton market on Wednesday, the 25th. The facts are shortly these. The UP train left Westport punctually, and it arrived at Ballyhaunis within a few minutes of its time. There, however, multitudes of emigrants got in, and a dense crowd of their friends thronged about the carriages, the consequence of which was, that they were an hour and a half late coming into Castlerea; and the plaintiffs having at that station put their pigs, 740 in number, into the Company's trucks, the train proceeded. There being only a single line of rails from Westport to Athlone, the train had to run into a siding near Roscommon, where it was detained for a space of 50 minutes, in order to allow the DOWN passenger train from Athlone to pass. From thence to Dublin the journey was accomplished with the usual speed, and they arrived at the North Wall terminus at 9 o'clock in the evening, just one hour after the vessel had left for Holyhead, instead of being there at 6 o'clock, the usual advertised time of arrival. Had they caught the boat, the pigs would have left that night, and have arrived on Tuesday morning at Holyhead—be then fed, and would have reached Wolverhampton on Tuesday evening, and again fed, would be at the market on Wednesday morning. But what did happen was this: the train having arrived late, the pigs were put into a yard, and there being no arrangements made for feeding them, they were shipped unfed for Holyhead, on Tuesday morning, and arrived there in due time. Then they were (still unfed) sent on by next train to Wolverhampton, where they arrived on Wednesday just as the market had closed. At once the plaintiffs fed and trained them for Birmingham, and there they were sold, in a miserable condition, on Thursday, at the market, at a great loss, and for that loss these several actions were brought. No contract whatever was made with the Midland Great Western Railway Company to take them beyond Dublin, neither was there a contract to have them in time for the sailing of the boat—yet the Chairman gave those several decrees against the Company. For the plaintiffs it was urged that the Company ought to have arrived at Castlerea before the time they did—that the engine was a bad, leaky one, and that it came to a stand-still within five miles of Castlerea—that it had to be then detached and sent on five miles for water—that then it returned, was again attached, and took the train on—that thus defendants in this were guilty of gross negligence, by reason whereof they lost the market.

His LORDSHIP reversed all the eleven decrees. He said that the only question for the consideration of the Court was, whether the defendants had performed the journey in a reasonable time. If the plaintiffs had intended to sell their pigs in Dublin on Tuesday, would they have brought this action against the Company? The train was due at 6 o'clock at the North Wall, and it was three hours late (and that caused by the crowd at Ballyhaunis), and in the meantime the vessel had sailed. There was no contract whatever to have the pigs on board the boat that night, and the civil bill was not even brought for a breach of such contract, though it avers that by reason of the delay they lost the Wolverhampton market. It was the duty of the Company to carry the pigs safely, and in a reasonable time, to Dublin; the obligation ceased when they brought them in at nine, ten, or eleven o'clock at night. The loss that the people incurred, then, cannot fall on the Company. No doubt the pigs must have been deteriorated greatly from hunger, having had no food from Sunday until Wednesday. The Company's average time for arrival was at six; that was the time to which it approximates, and it is merely in approximation to the time that the Company contract with the public to carry and deliver their goods in the ordinary course. Under these circumstances the decree of the Chairman must be reversed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LAW REFORM.

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR,—I take the liberty of submitting to the consideration of the law officers of the Crown, and to the public generally, through the medium of your Journal, the propriety of having the exceptions in the 243rd section of the 16 and 17 Vic., cap. 113, repealed as to the costs of the actions therein mentioned being given in full, and not allow them to abide the result of the amount of damages awarded by the jury. There does not appear to be any just or rational ground for making these exceptions; but, in my opinion, the contrary. The damages are an equivalent to the person injured for the injury he has sustained; and if the jury consider that a small sum is sufficient compensation, it is certainly contrary to common sense to make the defendant give the person to whom he has done no injury—that is, the plaintiff's attorney—five times the amount they have given to the plaintiff in the shape of full costs. It makes the course of justice, so far from being just, the greatest instrument of oppression and ruin to the unfortunate defendant. It may be said that juries take into consideration that the defendant is to be punished partly by the damages and partly by having to pay the costs; but that very consideration, if true, is the cause of the oppres-

Digitized by Google

siveness of the law; for, when an injury is sustained, either in person or character, the first impulse is to go to the attorney, state the case, and take advice. If the attorney wishes to maintain a character for sound judgment he advises a settlement, but some are to be found who will not do so; and, as many of these are speculative actions, proceedings are taken in the superior courts, where, no matter how small the damages above one farthing may be awarded, the costs are given in full, and, as I have said, the attorney, who has not sustained any injury, gets the reward for leading his client into litigation. In this city there must, of necessity, be numerous accidents; and from the peculiar temperament of the Irish there are often hasty expressions used which are a great source of litigation for compensation, and, of course, every encouragement for hard swearing when the amount of the damages may depend upon the oath of the plaintiff; but if the costs were measured by the amount of the damages this fertile source of litigation and swearing would soon be dried up, and parties would be driven to a cheaper tribunal. The Recorder's Court and Quarter Sessions are fully competent to decide all such questions; and if jurors were not so generous their time would not be so much taken up. Look at the reports of the Nisi Prius trials and observe the number of actions brought against railway companies for the most trivial accidents, and what exorbitant damages are given. But if the Dublin jurors limited their generosity they would save themselves considerable loss of time, for actions which arise in the country are tried in Dublin, as it is felt that the parties bringing such actions would either not get verdicts, or for such trifling amounts, where they are well known, that they prefer coming before the Dublin juries, to whom they are total strangers. It is notorious that there are numberless cases in which persons are mulcted, and have to pay, not for injuries inflicted, but to get rid of threats of being obliged to defend actions where they know that, whether they win or lose, they must be at enormous expense and loss of time. Every Nisi Prius trial costs from £70 to £100.—Your obedient, JUSTITIA.

INSTALLATION OF THE PROVOST.

The Rev. Humphrey Lloyd, D.D., was on Tuesday installed as Provost of Trinity College. By the College statutes the prescribed oaths must be administered to the Provost-Elect by the Vice-Provost. In the present case, Dr. Lloyd, before his appointment to the Provostship, filled that office, and a question was raised whether a Vice-Provost could be legally appointed in his place while the Provostship was vacant, which, in its turn, could not be filled up if there were no Vice-Provost. A case in point, however, was found so far back as the year 1795, when Vice-Provost Murray, the well-known logician, was appointed to the Provostship, and the precedent then made was followed on Tuesday. Dr. Lloyd, in the first instance, resigned the Vice-Provoship and his Fellowship. Dr. Moore was then elected Vice-Provost.

In the morning the new Provost attended before his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, by whom, in his capacity of Visitor of the University, the oath of allegiance and the other requisite oaths of office were administered.

At half-past twelve o'clock the newly-appointed Provost, with the members of the Board, attended by the Chief Steward bearing the patent of appointment, entered the College Chapel. The Senior Fellows who attended were the Vice-Provost, the Rev. Thomas Luby, D.D.; Andrew Searle Hart, LL.D.; John Toleken, M.D.; and the Rev. Joseph Carson, D.D. On entering the chapel the Provost and Vice-Provost took their seats in front of the reading-desk, the other members of the Board occupying seats on the benches at either side. Dr. Toleken, Registrar of Trinity College, read the patent of appointment. The Vice-Provost then rose, and, standing before the Provost, who remained seated, read the oath prescribed by the statutes, which was duly subscribed by the Provost.

The Vice-Provost then tendered to Dr. Lloyd the roll of Provosts, which, having been signed by him,

CONSOLIDATED NISI PRIUS COURT.

EASTER TERM, 1867.

This Court will commence its Sittings on Tuesday, the 16th day of April, and will sit continuously, or by adjournment, as occasion may require, until the end of Easter Term.

The Hon. Baron Fitzgerald will preside, and the Registrar appointed in pursuance of the 21st & 22nd Vic., Cap. 52, will attend as Registrar of the Court.

The Court will sit each day at Eleven o'clock precisely, and every case will be struck out in which the plaintiff's attorney does not attend when called on, or is not ready to proceed.

ORDERED—That no case shall be entered for trial unless a docket be lodged with the Registrar Four clear Days before the day for which notice of trial shall have been served, stating the names of the parties—in what capacity they sue and are sued—the general nature of the cause or causes of action, and of defence, and other pleadings, and the names of the attorneys of the parties; and all abstracts for trial shall be sealed and lodged with the Registrar the day before the same shall be called on; and in all cases wherein a confession or consent of judgment shall subsequently be given, the plaintiff's attorney shall immediately give notice to the Registrar that such cause will not proceed to trial.

All dockets of appeals must be entered with the Registrar Two clear Days before the day for which notice of hearing shall have been given, stating the names of the parties—the attorneys—the nature of the decree, dismiss, or order

GENERAL ORDER

In relation to the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court,

18th JANUARY, 1862.

That no certificate of counsel shall be requisite in order to enable plaintiffs to have cases coming within the terms of the 237th section of the Common Law Procedure Act (1853) tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court for the future; and that, in addition to the cases specified in that section, all cases may be tried in that Court which shall be ordered to be tried therein by any of the three Superior Courts of Common Law, or by any Judge of any of such Courts. Provided, however, that nothing in this order contained shall be deemed to interfere with the discretion of the Judge sitting in that Court to postpone the trial of any case to the After Sittings, on his being satisfied that it cannot be conveniently tried in the Consolidated Nisi Prius Court.

PURSUANT to the Decretal Orders made in this Matter, bearing date respectively the 29th day of June, 1865, and 12th May, 1866, I will, on THURSDAY, the 3rd day of MAY next, at the hour of One o'clock in the afternoon of said day at my Court, Four Courts, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin, SET UP and SELL BY PUBLIC AUCTION, to the highest and best bidder, all the Estate and Interest of MICHAEL BRENNAN, deceased, and of PATRICK BRENNAN, his eldest son and heir-at-law, also deceased, of and in all that and those the Concerns, formerly called Saint Francis' Abbey Distillery, with the Malthouse, Stores, Brewhouse, Forge, Stables, Garden, Yard, and Water Courses thereunto belonging, together with the Distillery and other Utensils, Vessels, and Implements, mentioned in a Schedule annexed to an under-lease of said Premises, from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, Esq., dated the 25th day of April, 1827; and also all that and those the Dwelling-house, Alehouse, Brewery, and Malthouse Stores, Stables, Offices, Gardens adjoining, together with that part of said Brewery Concerns adjoining to, and formerly part of Coals-yard of said Brewery, called in the under-lease the Coal-yard, all which Premises are now held by said Edmond Smithwick, under two leases,, one thereof from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, dated 25th April, 1827, and the other from Patrick Brennan, deceased, to said Edmond Smithwick, dated 12th August, 1833, for the respective terms of 999 years, as set out in the Rental of said Premises, and are now known as Saint Francis' Abbey Brewery, and are situate in the City of Kilkenny, or a competent part thereof, for the purposes in said Decretal orders mentioned.

Dated this 21st day of January, 1867.

EDWARD LITTON.

These premises are held under two distinct leases, for lives renewable for ever, one of them dated the 5th of July, 1753, from William Archbeld, and Anne, his, wife, to Ambrose Evans, and the other of said leases, dated 21st July, 1780, from the Rev. George Evans, to Edward Evans, which has been converted into a fee-farm grant. The entire premises now produce a profit rent of £252 8s. 4d., as more particularly set out in the rental thereof. The present tenant has expended several thousand pounds on permanent improvements on the premises, which are now in perfect order, and amongst the most thriving establishments in the south of Ireland.

To small capitalists, whose object is a well-secured income, with a safe and adequate return for capital, these premises offer an investment rarely to be met with.

For Rentals and further particulars application to be made to
HENRY THOMAS DIX, Esq., Solicitor for Respondents, BRENNANS, No. 9, Upper Gardiner-street;
Messrs. CHARLES GAUSSEN & SON, No. 12, Gardiner's-place;

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, APRIL 6, 1867.

NUMEROUS cases have occurred, in England and in Ireland, on the law of Light. The question generally arose with respect to the quantity of light to which a party was entitled, and how far such right was interfered with or infringed upon by adjacent buildings or obstructions; but in several recent cases attempts have been made, both at law and in equity, to get the aid of the Courts, either by way of damages or of injunction, with reference to an alleged interference or infringement of light, so far as regarded its degree or quality.

It has been a maxim long established in law that the elements of light, air, and water, are publici juris; or, as is expressed by Blackstone, they belong to the first occupant, during the time he holds possession of them, and no longer; and which a man may occupy by means of his windows, his gardens, his mills, and other conveniences (2 Bl. Com. by Christ. 14)—a maxim that has been ably expanded by Littledale, J., in one of the leading cases on this subject (Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C., 340) as follows:—"Every man on his own land has a right to all the light and air which will come to him, and he may erect, even on the extremity of his land, buildings with as many windows as he pleases, in order to make it lawful for him to appropriate to himself the use of the light; he does not require any consent from the owner of the adjoining land. He therefore begins to acquire the right to the enjoyment of the light by mere occupancy" (3 B. & Cr., 340). But in order to secure this as a legal presumption of right it must exist uninterrupted for twenty years, in the specific mode in which it was at first acquired; for it is clear that, within that period of time, the owner of the adjoining land may, by building on it, obstruct the light passing to his neighbour's windows. However, the same learned judge, in another case, thought that where there was nothing to show that the windows did not exist prior to that period of time, proof of eighteen years uninterrupted occupation might be enough to found the presumption of a grant (Cross v. Lewis, 2 B. & Cr., 690).

But in cases of substantial damage accruing by reason of a person erecting a building that would obstruct the light to a particular trade, as that of a watchmaker, eight years occupation was held enough (Lyon v. Dillimore, 14 W. R. 511). But the consequence of the law to which we have referred was, that the assent of the owner of the adjacent, or, as it is called, servient, tenement, was the foundation of the presumption of an exclusive right to light or air; and therefore it was plain that if the person whose assent was or should be implied was incapable of giving it—as in the case of minors, femes covertes, lunatics, &c.; or if the party to be bound did not, in fact, know of the user, or if it was not proved that he did, he would not be considered bound or estopped by such occupation or user (Daniel v. North, 11 East., 372); and, on the same ground, it was held that such occupation or user would not bind the successor of a tenant for life, where the user or occupation had been gained by the implied consent of such tenant for life (Barker v. Richardson, 4 B. & A., 579).

Several presumptions were adopted by the Courts in order to sustain this acquired right to light or air.

Sometimes they presumed a grant of permission from the owner of the adjacent land. "If a man has been in possession of a house with lights belonging to it for fifty or sixty years, no man can stop up those lights; possession for such a length of time amounts to a grant of the liberty of making them; it is evidence of an agreement to make them" (Wilmot, C. J., in Lewis v. Price, 2 Saund., 175, a.) In other cases it was considered, however, that length of time did not imply that the consent was given by way of grant, but that it more properly arose by means of a covenant to be implied by law, not to interrupt the free use of light and air (Littledale, J. 3 B. & Cr., 340).

But those considerations are now of little importance, as the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W., 4, c. 71, extended to Ireland by 21 & 22 V., c. 42, enacts, that when the access and use of light to and for any dwelling-house, workshop, or other building shall have been actually enjoyed for the full period of twenty years without interruption the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it appear that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing (section 3); and the next section enacts, that no act is to be deemed an interruption of the enjoyment unless submitted to or acquiesced in for one year, after the party interrupted shall have had notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made (s. 4); and then, in section 7 is a most important clause—viz., that the time during which persons shall have been under disabilities (infants, &c.) shall be excluded in the computation of the periods in the Act before mentioned, except only in cases where the right or claim is by the said Act declared to be absolute and indefeasible.

It would therefore follow, that even as to persons under disabilities, the twenty years uninterrupted enjoyment of the easement would, as to them, be absolute and indefeasible.

So much as to the right to light as regards the quantity.

Another question, as we remarked, has, both in England and in Ireland, been raised, as to the quality of light. In England the case came recently before Malins, V.C. (16 L. T. n. s. 114). where an injunction was applied for, but was refused, and the bill dismissed, to restrain the erection of a building, which it appeared at times gave to the plaintiff's windows an increased light, by reason of the reflection of the sun's rays of light. The windows, in that case, were not, in the legal sense, ancient, having been but fourteen years in existence; but the plaintiffs claimed a right to an extraordinary degree of light, for the purposes of their trade as silk merchants, and for the purpose of examining samples of raw silk; and they relied on a diminution of light in certain parts of the day, and in others that a reflected and unsteady light was, by reason of the defendant's building, cast on the plaintiffs' windows, and that such light was quite unfit for the purpose of examining samples of silk. But the Vice-Chancellor refused the injunction, and asked pertinently:—"Has any case occurred in which the Court has interfered to restrain the erection of a building which gives an increased light by reason of the sun's reflection?" And again—"I have the power to prevent a material diminution, but there is no rule that a plaintiff has a right to every particle of light which he had before the erection of the obstruction which he complains of." And he also seemed to consider that even if the twenty years provided by the Prescription Act had elapsed, the plaintiffs would not be entitled to relief unless they could show actual knowledge by the defendants of the extraordinary user for the particular purposes relied on by the plaintiffs. A similar case occurred in Ireland, in the Queen's Bench (Manning v. Gresham Hotel Co.), but the case was compromised after a new trial had been directed; and in Clarke v. Clarke (1 L. R. Ch. app. 16) the mere obstruction, in a large city, of the direct rays of the sun, for two hours in the day in winter, was held an insufficient ground for an injunction.

Another, and not unimportant question has been in several cases discussed, as to the right to light, and it is this—Whether a person who was entitled to ancient lights lost the right thereto by making alterations in his building, and by introducing new lights or windows into his structure, and so gave to his neighbour the right to obstruct both the old and the new lights. In several cases, in the English law courts, it was held that in such cases the right to the ancient lights was lost where the old and new lights were so intermixed that it was impossible to obstruct the one without interfering with the other, and on the ground that the owner of the servient tenement was entitled to obstruct the new lights, and that the obstruction of the ancient lights was unavoidable (Renshaw v. Bean, 18 L. R., 112; Hutchinson v. Copestake, 9 C. B. n. s. 826). However, those cases were fully considered in the House of Lords, in Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. C. 290, and were expressly overruled by the unanimous judgment of all the Law Lords present, viz., Lord Westbury, C., Lord Cranworth, and Lord Chelmsford; and the Lord Chancellor in that case says:—"The opening of the new windows is in law an innocent act, and no innocent act can destroy the existing right of the one party, or give any enlarged right to the other, namely, the adjoining proprietor."—P. 307 And to the same effect is Lord Cranworth's remark in p. 312:—"But what ground is there for contending that because his (a neighbour's) building so as to obstruct a new light would afford no ground of complaint; therefore, if he cannot so build without committing a trespass he may commit a trespass? I can discover no principle to warrant any such inference."

In that case, it was also held, that the old law of the presumption of a grant was, by the Prescription Act, no longer applicable, but that since that act twenty years user of light was matter of strict and settled law, requiring for its support no presumption or fiction of license; and thereby become absolute and indefeasible. "The Prescription Act turned this presumption into an absolute right, founded upon user on one side, and acquiescence on the other."—P. 318.

CURRENT TOPICS.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

The second reading of the Bill introduced by Mr. Denman has been adjourned to the 28th May next.

Although it would have been, in the highest degree, satisfactory to have this question finally disposed of, yet the result of Tuesday evening's debate cannot be regarded as other than eminently satisfactory. The Chancellor of the Exchequer did not venture to divide the house upon the principle of the Bill. Had he done so, we have reason to know that many members who voted for the adjournment would have voted in favour of the Bill. It will be borne in mind that the motion supported by the Government, and carried by a majority of one, was merely that the question should stand over till after the introduction of the budget. Very many members pledged to support the Bill, although present during the debate, did not take part in the division, not wishing to vote against the Government on the bare question of adjournment. We may therefore safely say that it now is a mere question of time as to when this obnoxious tax shall cease.

RECENT LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

The appointment of Mr. Justice Christian to the office of Lord Justice of Appeal seems to have met with unqualified approbation from all quarters. Mr. Christian held the first rank at the Chancery Bar for many years, and his promotion to the Solicitor-Generalship was altogether the result of merit. He became Justice of the Common Pleas in 1858; and although the Common Law Bench loses in him one of its most brilliant and efficient judges, his appointment to the Lord Justiceship of Appeal is peculiarly acceptable to the profession and the public.

On one or two recent occasions Mr. Justice Christian sat for the Lord Justice of Appeal in cases in which Mr. Brewster had been counsel for some of the parties, and his judgments, which appear in the first and second numbers of the Irish Reports, are masterly specimens of ability and learning, and will give a good idea of his qualifications for his present high and important duties.

Mr. Justice Morris is, we believe, the youngest judge on the bench either in England or Ireland. Mr. Justice Keogh at the time of his elevation enjoyed the same honourable position. The advancement of Mr. Justice O'Hagan, although not so rapid as that of Mr. Morris, was looked upon as something extraordinary; but we feel we are justified in saying, that if Mr. Justice Morris acquits himself as satisfactorily as his brother-Justice O'Hagan, there will be no grounds to complain of his rapid elevation. For eighteen years Mr. Morris has been a practising barrister, and at an early period was in full junior business. He fully maintained his position on being called to the inner bar, and few (if any of the common law leaders) were doing more business at the time of his being made Solicitor-General. Taking these matters into consideration, there can be no doubt that he will prove himself thoroughly qualified for the judicial functions which he has been called on so early to discharge, and that his appointment will give satisfaction to the public for these reasons, and not alone on the grounds of his great popularity.

Mr. Chatterton's elevation to the first place at the Irish bar has met with an amount of approbation rarely bestowed on legal appointments in this country. The estimation in which he is held for every quality that is desirable in a man and a lawyer, stands deservedly high with the public and the legal profession. Honest in heart and conduct, courteous and obliging to all, without being weak or too facile, he has gained an extraordinary popularity, not alone with the members of his own circuit, but with the whole legal profession in Ireland. Of his great learning and ability as a lawyer there cannot be a second opinion. Few men were more capable of commanding the attention and respect of the bench, not alone by the force of his arguments on a particular occasion, but also by the well-known weight of his general character. As the best proof that the opinion we now express is not merely confined to this country, we subjoin an extract from the Law Magazine, in which the writer, who is by no means an indulgent critic in the matter of Irish legal establishments, alluding to Mr. Chatterton's appointment to the Solicitor-Generalship, thus expresses himself on the subject:—

"His steady progress to the first rank of the Bar—the fair result of ability and industry—and his reputation for all good qualities that may adorn life, combine to fit him for the distinguished honour of representing his University in Parliament, and for any subsequent promotion that may be within his reach."

We have now had, during the short interval that has elapsed, good proof of his efficiency in the House of Commons; and the manner in which he has there discharged his duties has even already won for him the confidence and respect of men to whom, before his return to Parliament, he was known merely as an eminent Irish lawyer.

We have now only to notice Mr. Warren's appointment; and, we have no doubt, that he, too, will be found fully equal to discharge efficiently the duties of his new position. Mr. Warren's reputation at the Bar is too well established to require any comment from us; and in promoting him to a post where his admitted ability and learning can be made usefully available for the public service, the choice of the Government in this instance, too, will prove to have been singularly happy and unexceptionable.

A Bill to Amend the Pleading, Practice, and Procedure of the Courts of Common Law in Ireland.

316. Special case may be stated.

317. Trial of issue as in other actions.

318. Verdict when title appears to have expired before trial.

319. Trial may be ordered to take place in any county.

320. Nonappearance at trial.

321. Mesne rates may be recovered by ejectment to the day of trial.

322. Amount of rent due where judgment by default, or defendant shall not appear at trial, may be ascertained by affidavit of plaintiff or his agent.

323. Jury may find special verdict, or either party may tender bill of exceptions.

324. Judgment and execution upon finding for claimant.

325. Judgment upon finding for defendant.

326. Execution for recovery of possession, and costs may be joint and separate.

327. Defence by joint tenants, tenants in common, or comparceners.

328. Trial and judgment in ejectment against joint tenants, tenants in common, and coparceners.

329. Claimant, in second ejectment, for same premises against same defendant may be ordered to give security for costs.

330. Action not to abate by death.

331. If right of deceased claimant survive to another claimant (before trial), suggestion may be made of death, and action may proceed at the suit of surviving claimant.

332. Upon death of one of several claimants, before trial, where right does not survive, suggestion may be made of death, and action may proceed at suit of surviving claimant for his share of the property and costs.

333. Upon death of one of several claimants having obtained a verdict, survivors may suggest the death, and proceed to judgment and execution.

334. In case of death of a sole claimant, or before time, of one of several claimants, where right does not survive, legal representative of such claimant may (by leave) enter a suggestion, and action shall thereupon proceed.

335. Upon death of one of several joint defendants suggestion may be entered and action may proceed against survivors.

336. Upon death of all the defendants in ejectment before trial, suggestion may be entered and claimants to be entitled to judgment for recovery of possession unless some other person appear and defend within a time to be appointed by order.

337. Upon death of all defendants in ejectment after verdict, claimants to be entitled to judgment as if no such death had taken place.

338. Upon death, before trial, of defendant in ejectment, who defends separately for part, same proceedings may be had as to such portion as in case of death of sole defendant, or claimants may proceed against survivors in respect of part for which they defend.

339. On death, before trial, of defendant defending separately for property in respect of which others also defend, Court may allow person in possession or legal representative of deceased to appear and defend, if no such application be made, or leave granted claimant suggesting death may proceed against survivors.

340. Claimant may discontinue by notice.

341. If one of several claimants be desirous to discontinue, he may apply to Court or Judge, and an order may be made thereon.

342. If claimant allow time for going to trial, as in ordinary cases after issue joined to elapse, defendant may give twenty days' notice to claimant to proceed, and if not proceeded with may sign judgment [form in schedule].

343. Defendant may confess the action.

344. One of several defendants, defending separately for part, may confess the action as to such part.

345. One of several defendants, who defend for same property, may confess the action, and claimant may thereupon sign judgment against him, and proceed in action against the others.

346. Court or a Judge may in action of ejectment on the title direct temporary bars to be waived.

347. Judgment in ejectment to have no greater effect than before 13 & 14 Vic.

348. Error may be brought, as in other actions, upon any judgment in ejectment, after a special verdict, or a bill of exceptions, or by consent after special case stated, but except in case of such consent execution not to be stayed unless bail as therein.

349. On trials, after bail found, Judge shall not stay the execution except by consent, or on tenants finding security. Bail in error to discharge such security.

350. Recognizances to be taken as other recognizances of bail; actions on them limited.

351. Saving of former remedies.

352. In ejectment by mortgagee, the mortgagors rendering the principal, interest, and costs in court shall be deemed a full satisfaction, and the Court may compel the mortgagee to re convey.

353. Not to extend to cases where the right of redemption is controverted, or the money due not adjusted; or to prejudice any subsequent mortgage.

354. Courts and Judges to exercise over the proceedings the like jurisdiction as heretofore exercised in the action of ejectment.

355. Relief against forfeiture for non-insuring.

356. Minute of relief granted.

357. Appeal to the Court from order of Judge.

358. Power to appeal from Order of Court.

359. Proof of title in one or more claimants to be sufficient to entitle a verdict to be entered for him or them, not necessary to produce on trial affidavit of service of writ of summons.

Action for Replevin of Goods.

360. Action for replevin to be commenced by writ of summons.

361. Plaintiff may sue out also a writ of replevin.

362. If plaintiff in replevin be nonprossed or nonsuited, defendant entitled to judgment and execution for his rent.

363. Plaintiff in replevin may pay money into Court in satisfaction, &c., as defendant in other actions.

Real Actions.

364. Dower, writ of right of power, and quare impedit abolished as real actions, and to be commenced by writ of summons.

365. Writ, and all proceedings thereupon, to be same as in ordinary actions.

Error on Special Case.

366. Error may be brought on a special case.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

367. Injunctions and orders to stay proceedings to have a specific effect.

368. Person wilfully and corruptly giving false evidence to be liable to penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

369. Courts may appoint sittings in term or vacation (except between 1st August and 20th October), and this to apply to the business at the Crown side of the Queen's Bench.

370. Courts or Judge may amend all defects and errors in any writ, pleading, record, or other proceeding in civil causes.

A Bill to Render Policies of Insurance Assignable at Law, and to Enable Assignees of such Policies to Sue thereon in their Own Names. (Prepared and brought in by Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr. Sergeant Barry, and Mr. Pim.)

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to render Policies of Insurance assignable at Law, and to enable Assignees of such Policies to Sue thereon in their Own Names:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows:

Policies of Insurance shall be assignable at Law. 1. After the passing of this Act, every Policy of Insurance shall be assignable at Law, and the Assignee or Assignees of such Policy shall be at liberty to sue in his or their own Name to recover the Amount of such Policy.

How a Policy of Insurance may be assigned. 2. Any Policy of Insurance may be assigned by an Endorsement on the Policy, duly stamped, or by a separate Deed; and such Assignment may be in the Form in the Schedule to this Act annexed.

Assignee to have no greater Right than his Assignor. 3. In an Action by an Assignee on a Policy of Insurance any Defence which would be valid against the Assignor may be relied upon, and shall be valid against the Assignee.

Bonâ fide Payment of a Policy without Notice of Assignment valid against Assignee. 4. Any Payment bonâ fide made of the Amount of, or on account of, or in satisfaction of a Policy of Insurance to a Party who would be entitled to receive the same in case the Policy was not assigned shall be valid against an Assignee if the party making the Payment had no Notice of such Assignment.

Short Title. 5. For all purposes this Act may be cited as "The Policy of Insurance Act, 1867."

SCHEDULE.

I A.B. of, &c. in consideration of, &c., do hereby assign unto C.D. of, &c., his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, the [within] Policy of Insurance granted, &c., [here describe the Policy]. In witness, &c.

Debrett's House of Commons informs us that the Legal Profession is represented by 128 members, 95 of whom have been called to the English Bar, 18 to the Bar in Ireland, and 6 to the Scottish Bar, while 9 are, or have been, in practice as attorneys; 5 are serjeants-at law, and 30 are Queen's counsel; 47 were students at the Inner Temple, 36 at Lincoln's-inn, 9 at the Middle Temple, and 3 at Gray's-inn. No other profession or employment is so largely represented in the House, the nearest approach to it being the army, which has 112 members, There are 81 literary men, 128 directors of public companies, and 109 business men in the present Parliament.—Law Times.

ENGLAND.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, APRIL 2, 1867.

Petitions in favour of the reduction of the annual duty on Solicitors' certificates were presented by Mr. Smollett, from the Procurators in the Sheriff's Court, Dumbarton; by Mr. Leeman, from attorneys at Wallingford, Dunstable, and Luton; by Mr. Sullivan, frum solicitors and attorneys of Mallow and Fermoy, county Cork; by Captain Kearsley, from Ripon; by Mr. A. H. Baring, from Skibbereen, county Cork; by Mr. Schreiber, from Cheltenham; by Mr. Tite, from the solicitors of Bath; by Mr. Robertson, from solicitors, procurators, and notaries public in Berwickshire; by Mr. Herbert, from the attorneys and solicitors of Killarney, county Kerry; by Mr. M'Lagan, from the Dean and Faculty of Solicitors of Linlithgowshire; by Mr. Holden, from the attorneys and solicitors of Knaresborough; by Mr. P. Wyndham, from Whitehaven; and by Mr. Merry, from the Society of Solicitors of Hamilton; and against the Bill by Mr. Oliphant, from the Faculty of Procurators of Stirlingshire.

ATTORNEYS, &c., CERTIFICATE DUTY BILL.

Mr. DENMAN, in moving the second reading of this Bill, recapitulated the grounds on which the repeal of that duty had been previously advocated. The hon. and learned member proceeded to refer to the decided opinion given against the tax by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, when a member of that House. Upon a former occasion the hon. member for Derby opposed his motion on the part of the brewers. If the licences paid by the brewers were unjust let them be abolished. There was nothing to prevent the brewers from being relieved next week, but at all events let this tax be repealed if it were just and right to repeal it. He moved that this Bill be now read a second time.

Mr. BASS said that the arguments in favour of the present tax equally applied to the repeal of every licence, and the House would thus get rid of £2,500,000 of revenue. If the hour were not so late (ten minutes past 12) it would be easy to show that this ought to be one of the licence duties that should be last repealed. The attorneys, having great influence in the constituencies, and particularly with the profession of which the hon. and learned member for Tiverton was so distinguished an ornament, had the power of making themselves heard in that House, while the other classes who paid licence duties, including the brewers, had very little chance of making themselves heard. (A laugh.) The auctioneers, appraisers, and horse dealers were compelled to pay a much higher tax than the attorneys, while the tax paid by the brewers was one of the most unjust, and the nearest approximation to confiscation ever proposed by a Chancellor of the Exchequer. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. AYRTON said that as the Chancellor of the Exchequer was to bring forward the Budget in two or three days, he thought his hon. and learned friend would do well to leave the matter in the hands of the right hon. gentleman. If, after that, his hon. and learned friend thought he was entitled, upon any grounds of justice, to proceed with the Bill, he could do so. He moved the adjournment of the debate.

Dr. BRADY opposed the adjournment.

Mr. DENMAN hoped his hon. and learned friend would not press his amendment.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: I think the proposition of the hon. member for the Tower Hamlets is very reasonable, and that the argument of the hon. member for Tiverton is erroneous. The proper time to propose the remission of a tax is after the financial statement is made, and I see no reason why that is not the proper time. If the remission of a particular tax is not included in the financial statement, the hon. gentleman who seeks its remission can challenge it, and the House can give an opinion on the subject. (Hear, hear.) I don't want to go into the merits of this particular question, but if a licence is brought under our consideration, we must go into the entire question of licenses. I put it to the House, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer has given notice that he is on the eve of making his financial statement, whether it is a proper course to raise now the question of the proposed remission of a particular tax. I think the hon. gentleman will do well to comply with the motion of the hon. member for the Tower Hamlets; and if he is not satisfied with the proposition I am going to make on Thursday, it will be for him to challenge the proposition, and I am sure the House, as at present constituted, will give him a hearing, and will come to such decision as, on the whole, they may think best. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, the best course is to adjourn the debate to this day fortnight.

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN: That will be during the holidays. (Laughter.)

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: It might be adjourned for a month; that will be after the holidays.

Mr. CRAUFURD considered the motion for adjournment a mere attempt to shelve the bill by a sidewind.

THURSDAY—April 4.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said it was not proposed to take the discussion on the present occasion, but on the motion to go into committee. It was of great importance that there should be a full discussion on the question that the Speaker leave the chair, but by taking the present stage to-night the passing of the Bill during the present Session would be much facilitated.

Mr. NORWOOD hoped that an early day would be named for going into committee.

The Bill was then read a second time.

JUDGMENT DEBTORS' BILL.

This Bill was read a second time.

BANKRUPTCY ACTS REPEAL BILL.

This Bill was also read a second time.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

The consideration of this Bill in committee was resumed at clause 40, and

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND proposed an amendment, reserving the rights of the present clerks to retiring pensions, the object, as he explained, being that they should continue in office, and that new appointments should not be necessary.

Digitized by Google

Mr. LAWSON objected to the amendment, contending that a separate clause ought to be introduced to carry out the object proposed.

The Committee divided.

For the motion,	- - - -	61

Majority,	- - -	—16

The clause as amended was then agreed to.

In clause 41.

General DUNNE proposed an alteration, the effect of which would be to increase the salary of the Second Assistant-Registrar from £800 to £1,000 immediately, with a gradual prospective increase to £1,250.

Upon this motion considerable discussion ensued, Mr. Monsell insisting that no valid reason could be assigned why two officers of equal rank should be paid differently for the discharge of similar duties; the Attorney-General for Ireland and Mr. Hunt explained that they had followed strictly the principle laid down in the Bill of the late Government, that the object of this measure was to render the services of officers whose situations were abolished available in other capacities, and that the particular officer of the court in this case was willing to undertake the duties for the sum named.

The amendment was negatived without a division.

After some discussion, in which Mr. Sergeant BARRY and Mr. LAWSON took part,

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN moved that the Chairman report progress.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND opposed the motion.

The Committee divided, when the numbers were—

Ayes,	- - - - - -	44
Noes,	- - - - - -	68
Majority	- - -	—24

Sir P. O'BRIEN moved that the Chairman do now leave the chair.

The motion was negatived without a division.

Mr. ESMONDE moved that the Chairman report progress.

The motion was negatived without a division.

Clause 88 was agreed to, as were also clauses up to 170, when the Chairman was ordered to report progress, and the House resumed.

The Petty Sessions (Ireland) (1851) Amendment Bill was read the second time.

The Alimony Arrears (Ireland) Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Policies of Insurance Bill passed through Committee.

From The Times.

The Attorney-General's Bill relating to Bankruptcy and Imprisonment for Debt (with a separate Bill for repeals) have been printed, and the following is an outline of their provisions:—

The Bankruptcy Bill contains numerous amendments, and consolidates the statute law on the subject, the provisions of existing statutes having been condensed and to a great extent re-written. The constitution of the Courts of Bankruptcy is to remain as at present, but the country District Courts will be discontinued as their Commissioners die or retire. The London Court is to have jurisdiction over all England, which will be concurrent with the jurisdiction of the County Courts and of the country District Courts in their respective districts. The three Judges of the Court in London are to have power to sit together to hear important points. Appeal will be, as now, to the Court of Appeal in Chancery. The official assignees of the London Court are to be abolished from the commencement of the Act, those of the country District Courts from the discontinuance of their Courts; but there is to be a provisional trustee for each Court, who in the London Court will be one of the present official assignees selected by the Lord Chancellor, and in the County Courts will be the Registrar. In the country District Courts the present official assignee or assignees will be provisional trustee or trustees. The Bill introduces a novelty in the method by which a debtor may make himself bankrupt, by providing that he may only do so by filing a declaration of insolvency, which is not to be an act of bankruptcy till 21 days after its filing, after which time any creditor may petition for adjudication, or, if the creditors do not move, the debtor may himself petition. This will give the creditors time to meet and determine on the best course for protection of their interests. The declaration will be accompanied or followed by a list of the debts, creditors, and assets of the debtor, verified by his oath, and immediately on the filing of the declaration the provisional trustee is to become receiver of the debtor's property, with power to protect it, and during the 21 days no execution or process is to issue against the debtor or his property without leave of the Court, and the Court may stay actions against the debtor. Delay on the debtor's part in filing this declaration may be made a ground for suspension of his order of discharge in case of subsequent bankruptcy. In every case, immediately on adjudication, the estate is to vest in the provisional trustee, but (as recommended by the Select Committee of the House of Commons) at the first meeting of creditors they are to choose a trustee and inspectors, and upon the choice of a trustee being confirmed by the Court the estate will be shifted from the provisional trustee to the creditors' trustee. The creditors are to decide on the security to be given by the trustee, and (subject to the approval of the Court) on his remuneration. The inspectors are to exercise a general superintendence over the trustee, but failure to choose inspectors will not interfere with the prosecution of the bankruptcy; and if no trustee is chosen, the provisional trustee will have all the trustee's powers. The provisional trustee will be entirely subject to the orders of the Court, and the Court will have power to control the creditors' trustee, if necessary, and the accounts of the latter must be periodically audited, and until such audit he will not be allowed to receive any remuneration awarded to him by the creditors. The bankrupt's order of discharge is never to be wholly refused, but may be suspended for any time not exceeding three years in certain specified cases of misconduct, or for any time not exceeding one year if the Court sees any other good reason for suspension. Notwithstanding the order of discharge, the Court is to have the power of making after-acquired property available (subject to a reasonable allowance for maintenance of the debtor and his family, and to the payment of subsequent debts) towards discharge of debts proveable under the bankruptcy until the estate has paid 10s. in the pound. All the provisions as to future property will also apply (mutatis mutandis) to cases of arrangement by deed. There are to be, as now, three modes of arrangement with creditors, two operating after adjudication of bankruptcy, and the third and principal one being arrangement by deed without adjudication. A debtor arranging by deed is to file in the Court a deed within seven days after he has executed it (unless he is abroad, when further time is given). Notice of the filing is to be gazetted, and thereafter no process against the debtor's person or property is to be available without leave of the Court, and actions against him may be stayed. A list of the creditors, and of the debts and assets, is to be filed and sworn to by the debtor. As soon as a majority in the number, representing three-fourths in value, of the creditors have executed or assented to the deed, the Court may make a declaration that it is completely executed, but such declaration must be applied for within three months, and made at the latest within four months, after the filing, otherwise the deed is an act of bankruptcy. Creditors holding securities on the debtor's property are to be computed in value only after deducting their securities. The declaration of complete execution (subject to appeal like every order in bankruptcy) is to be conclusive as to the validity of the deed, and thus all interference of courts of law with these deeds will be stopped. The Court in which the deed is filed (which will include County Courts and the country District Courts in Bankruptcy) is to have full powers from the filing of the deed, and, both before and after its complete execution, to examine the debtor, creditors, and others, to test the truth of the alleged debts, examine the accounts of any trustee or inspector, and generally to enforce the trusts and provisions of the deeds. Safeguards against the debtor's misconduct are created by providing (1) that if before declaration of complete execution the Court thinks that the debtor has filed the deed frivolously or for delay, or has been guilty of fraud in relation to the arrangement, it may declare the deed an act of bankruptcy; (2) that within 12 months after the declaration of complete execution the Court, on being satisfied that the debtor has been guilty of fraud in relation to the arrangement, may deprive him of the benefit of any release contained in the deed (without disturbing the arrangement); and (3) that certain specified acts on the part of the debtor are to be misdemeanours, as in bankruptcy. The offences in bankruptcy which are to be misdemeanours are in substance the same as now.

The second Bill, which is called the Judgment Debtors Bill, abolishes imprisonment for debt, except (1) for damages for libel, slander, assault, seduction, and some other social offences; (2) where the debt was incurred by fraud, false pretences, or breach of trust; or (3) where the debtor is about to abscond. In the excepted cases the imprisonment is not to last more than six months, but is not to be a satisfaction of the debt. This Bill also regulates proceedings under a judgment debtor summons, and contains other provisions relative to the enforcement of judgments, decrees, and orders.

INJUNCTION—LEGAL PROCEEDINGS FOR RENT.—Pending an interpleader suit to determine the respective rights of the defendants to the rent of premises occupied by the plaintiffs, the Court granted an injunction to restrain legal proceedings for payment of the rent, and ordered it to be paid into Court until further order: (Glover v. Reynolds, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 113. V. C. S.)

LIBEL—JUSTIFICATION.—Attorneys writing in defence of their client who has been publicly aspersed, will be protected in an action brought against them for libel: (Reg. v. Veley and another, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 122. Nisi Prius.)

ATTORNEY'S LIABILITY FOR CLIENT.—Where an attorney says he shall be prepared in a few days to take up a bill given by his client he is to be understood as incurring no personal responsibility: (Allaway v. Duncan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. Nisi Prius.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—EXECUTION OF POWER.—Where the question turns upon the due execution of a power, it is the duty of the Court to see that every properly executed testamentary paper which is material to enable the Court of Ch. to pronounce judgment upon it is before the Court: (In the Goods of Charlotte Fenwick, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S 124. Prob.)

CHOSE IN ACTION—PERSONAL ESTATE—SOLICITOR—NEGLIGENCE.—A right of action against a solicitor for negligence in the preparation of an agreement on behalf of his client to take a farm in omitting to make therein certain alterations agreed to by the landlord, reserving to the tenant compensation for tillage and dressings at the determination of the tenancy, and whereby the fund divisible amongst the creditors of the tenant upon his bankruptcy is diminished, passes to his assignees as part of his personal estate: (Ex parte The Assignees, re Daines 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 127. Bank.)

EASEMENT OF LIGHT—PRESCRIPTION—SPECIAL USER.—The plaintiffs, who had occupied their business premises in Crown-court, Old Broad-street, London, as silk merchants, for about fourteen years, sought to restrain the defendants from raising their house in the same court to a greater height than would permit of the free access of light to a window in the plaintiff's premises in the same degree as the plaintiffs had theretofore enjoyed it. The defendants' building was completed before the hearing of the cause. The plaintiffs had used the room with the window in question, which faced to the west, as a sample room, and they maintained that, an even light being necessary for the purpose of inspecting samples of raw silk, the effect of the new buildings was, before midday to diminish their light, and, in the afternoon, to cast upon their window an increased and reflected light, which was uneven, and unfit for the purposes of their trade. Held, first, that, assuming the room in question to have been used for any purpose requiring an ordinary amount of light, the plaintiffs had failed to establish a case for the interference of the court; and, secondly, upon the question whether they were entitled to an injunction on account of the particular kind of light which they required for the special purposes of their trade, the plaintiffs had no case, inasmuch as they had not proved an open and uninterrupted enjoyment of their special user of light for a period of twenty years: (Lanfranchi v. Mackenzie, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114. V. C. M.)

The Metropolitan Building Act gives no power to a building owner to obstruct the light of an adjoining owner: (Crofts v. Haldane, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 116. Q.B.)

LAW OF WILLS.—B., a married woman, charged by will a fund over which she had a power of appointment, with an annuity to her husband, C., and gave the residue to her son on coming of age. By a codicil she revoked the annuity to C., from whom she was afterwards divorced. She then married D., and executed a second will, by which she again bequeathed all her property to her son, subject to an annuity to her husband. It contained no clause of revocation or reference to her former will, and did not purport to to be executed in pursuance of any power. The Court granted probate to all the three testamentary papers as constituting one will: (Re Fenwick, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 124. Prob. Ct.)

MORTGAGE OF SHIP—REGISTRATION IN AMERICA—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASE IN ENGLAND—LACHES.—Shipbuilders in the United States were in the habit of building vessels, mortgaging them to the plaintiff H. and others, and then sending them to England with a power of attorney to sell. The American law requires, in order to render valid a sale or mortgage of a ship, that it shall be recorded in the proper office of the port where the ship is registered, and does not require notice of the mortgage to be indorsed on the certificate of the ship's registry. H.'s mortgages were duly recorded, and in some cases the certificates were indorsed, but the evidence showed that as this had hindered a sale, the practice was, with H.'s consent, not adhered to in the case of the ship E. E. This vessel was sent to England for sale in the usual way, and was there sold to G., but neither H., nor a subsequent mortgagee, M., was paid, and the builders having failed, two bills were filed to establish the mortgages against the purchaser. Held, that the law of this country will recognize and give effect to rights acquired under the laws of foreign states, where it is not contrary to English law and policy to do so; but that the rights arising from the sale in England must be determined according to the lex loci contractûs; that accordingly the legal title to the ship was in the plaintiff H. at the time of the purchase; but that by joining the builders in the intentional concealment of the mortgage, he had misled the purchaser, and his bill must be dismissed. Turner, L. J. was very strongly inclined to think that in the purchase of a foreign ship an English purchaser ought not to rely merely on what the ship's papers may show, but that he is bound to make further inquiry into the title: (Hooper v. Gumm, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 107. L. C. and Turner, L. J.)

PROVINCIAL COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

A bill has been printed by order of the House of Commons, entitled an "Act to Facilitate the Recovery of Arrears of Alimony in certain cases under Decrees and Orders of the Provincial and Diocesan Courts in Ireland." The act provides for the substitution of the decree or order in cases in which it has been found impossible to effect personal service, and where substitution of service cannot be carried out; it further provides that advertisements in two or more public newspapers touching the enforcement of such decree or order shall be sufficient and as effectual as if served upon the person liable for the payment of the moneys.

NOTES OF CASES.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

KANE v. KANE.

Jan. 14.—Administration with the Will annexed—Estoppel.

Thomas Kane, by his will, stated that he was entitled, among other property to a sum of £1,000, Government stock, £600 of which was invested in the joint names of himself and his wife, and £400 in his own name. And he bequeathed the same to the trustees, whom he appointed executors in trust, to pay the dividends to his wife, Anne Kane, for her life, and after her death, upon certain trusts as to the principal. The testator died on the 31st of July, 1865, and the executors having renounced administration with the will annexed was granted to Anne Kane, the testator's widow. The administration was in the ordinary form, and she made the usual affidavit in the Probate Court.

The petition was filed for the administration of the personal estate of the testator. The widow, by her charge, claimed the £600 which had been invested in 1865, in the joint names of herself and her husband—as her absolute property alleging that it was intended as a provision for her in case she survived him. The Master, by an order of the 16th November, 1866, declared that she was estopped by the administration, from disputing that the £600 stock, was the property of the testator, on the authority of an unreported case of Moody v. Canning, before the Lord Chancellor, in January, 1854. The respondent, Anne Kane, appealed. The report and decree in Moody v. Canning were produced, and it appearing that the question of estoppel had not been decided in that case, his Honour reversed the Master's order.

LOFTUS v. STONEY.

Dec. 4, 6, 7, 8, 1866.—Feb. 16, 1867.—Will—Construction—Next Male Heir—Duplicate Will—Residuary Clauses.

The petition was filed for the administration of the real and personal estate of Robert Fannin.

He made his Will on the 14th of December, 1841, by which, after various bequests, he left all his remaining properties to trustees, on trust, upon the death of his wife, to divide his plate among his surviving children; and he left and bequeathed to all his daughters then unmarried, his house in Leeson-street, in the city of Dublin (which he held for lives renewable for ever) furniture, fixtures, &c. and to have and enjoy the same, and to the last married as long as she pleased, or any one of them in succession; then in remainder to the next male heir; upon the express condition that the house should be kept in repair, same being intended as a residence for two of his grand-daughters, it being his will and wish and desire that it should be maintained as a family mansion. The testator bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of his properties, debentures funded, and securities, &c., to be equally divided, share and share alike, amongst his then surviving children as residuary legatees.

The testator on the same day, made a duplicate Will, attested by the same witnesses. There was no direct evidence as to which of the documents was signed last. Both were endorsed in the handwriting—one with the words "The last Will and Testament of Robert Fannin, 14th December, 1841"—the other with the words "Duplicate Will of Robert Fannin, Dec., 1841."

The testator died in January, 1842. At his death he had five daughters, one of whom (Mrs. Stoney) was married; and two grand-daughters (now Mrs. Peacock and Mrs. Molony) who were the daughters of a deceased son and the testator's coheirs. Mrs. Stoney, at the testator's death, had a son, who afterwards died under age, leaving his father, Thomas Butler Stoney, his heir-at-law. The testator's widow died in 1865. All the daughters of the testator who were unmarried at his death married in the widow's lifetime. Lady Adam Loftus, who with her husband was the petitioner, was the last married. Probate was obtained of the documents marked "the last will and testament." The duplicate, which differed materially from the will, was not propounded.

Under these circumstances, the following parties claimed the house in Leeson-street and the property bequeathed with it. 1st, Lady Adam Loftus claimed as the last married daughter of the testator, either for life or in tail, contending that the words "right male heir" were to be construed as referring to the last married daughter. 2ndly, T. B. Stoney claimed as heir of his deceased son, contending that "right male heir" meant "next male descendant," and that the remainer vested in his said son at the testator's death. 3rdly, the eldest son of T. B. Stoney at the widow's death also claimed. 4thly, the five daughters of the testator contended that the previous devises had failed, and that the property passed to them under the residuary clause. 5thly, Mrs. Peacock and Mrs. Molony, the coheiresses of the testator, claimed the property as undisposed of by the will.

The case was argued for several days in Michaelmas Term, 1866, and the Master of the Rolls now (Feb. 16, 1867) delivered judgment. His Honour held that there was sufficient evidence on the documents themselves to show that the document marked as the last will and testament was signed last, that the gift to the daughters was confined to daughters unmarried at the widow's death and had failed; that the devise to the "next male heir" had also failed if the words were to be taken as words of limitation referable to the last married daughter, because the gift to her had failed, and if they were words of purchase, because there was no person to answer the description of male heir of the testator; and he held that the property in question being undisposed of by the previous part of the will, passed to the testator's daughters under the residuary clause.*

O'NEILL, Appellant; MAGUIRE, Respondent.

February 16, 18.—Fishery Appeal—License—Several Fishery—Agent.

Appeal from a decision of the Fishery Commissioners abating appellant's weir, known as the Woodstown Weir. By lease of the 8th January, 1842, Lord Carew demised to appellant his fishery at Woodstown, with the right of erecting and maintaining a weir. This was done under the impression that Lord Carew had a several fishery, which turned out not to be the fact. He was, however, owner of the land adjoining. Appellant erected a weir, and Lord Carew always received the rent under the lease.

It was argued in support of the appellant that the weir ought to be looked upon as Lord Carew's, and that the appellant should be taken as acting only as his agent in using the weir.

February 16, 18—Fishery Appeal—St. 5 & 6, Vict., c. 106, s. 19—Lease for Lives Determinable.

Appeal from a decision of the Fishery Commissioners abating appellant's weir, known as the King's Channel Weir. Appellant claimed title, under s 19 of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 106, to erect and maintain his weir by virtue of a lease of 28th October, 1796, of lands adjoining, for three lives and thirty-one years. One of the lives was still in being, and appellant's contention was that he was "a tenant for life or lives" within the first part of the section. Against this it was insisted that he was a tenant "under a lease for a life or lives determinable" within the proviso in the section, and that as he had not the consent, in writing, of the landlord or lessor, he had no right to maintain the weir.

Butt, Q.C., and P. F. White, for the appellant

Shaw, Q.C., for the respondent.

The Court (FITZGERALD, J., dissenting) held that the appellant did not come within the proviso, and that the order of the commissioners should be reversed.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JONH LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before JUDGE BERWICK.

ROBERT HUMPHREY, a Bankrupt.

April 5.—Discharge of Bankrupt when in Custody at the time of Adjudication—Costs bringing up from the Country.

The 133rd section of the Bankrupt Act provides that whenever a bankrupt is in custody under any process, attachment, execution, commitment, or sentence, the Court may, by warrant directed to the person in whose custody he is confined, cause him to be brought up before it at any sitting, either public or private; and if he be desirous to surrender, he shall be so brought up, and the expense thereof shall be paid out of his estate. The statute then provides that the Court may release him from custody, unless confined for debts of a particular character, which are set out in the 133rd section.

Levy, for the bankrupt, said his client was in attendance, ready to surrender, and he would ask the Court to have him discharged. He made the usual affidavit, that he was not confined for any debt contracted by fraud, breach of trust, or by reason of any prosecution against him, &c.

Seeds, for the petitioning creditor, examined the bankrupt with regard to his property, and then applied that he should pay the costs of his removal from Belfast to Dublin, accompanied by the governor of the prison. The bankrupt was brought up on his own application, and he had a right to pay the costs. It would be a great hardship on the petitioning creditor to have to pay them.

Levy said there was no such thing as making an order on a bankrupt to pay the costs of removal in such case; on the contrary, his solicitor would be entitled to the costs if there was a fund to pay them out of.

JUDGE BERWICK ruled that the petitioning creditor should pay the costs in the first instance, to be repaid when funds come into the estate. The bankrupt was discharged.

Attorney for the petitioning creditor, Nelson.

Attorney for the bankrupt, Crawley.

CIRCUIT CASES.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

MAYO ASSIZES—6th March, 1867.

Reported by OLIVER J. BURKE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

The Custody of the County Court-Houses is vested in the High Sheriff of the County, and not in the Grand Jury.

Before HUGHES, B.

The Foreman of the Grand Jury applied to his Lordship for a direction in the matter of a resolution adopted by them to prohibit the Sub-Sheriff from allowing the Court-houses of the county to be used for private purposes, to which resolution the High Sheriff had taken exception. The Grand Jury had, at a former assizes, passed a resolution directed to the Court-house keepers, prohibiting the use of the Court-houses for theatrical representations, or for private purposes, without an order from the local magistrates; still it appeared that the Court-house has been used as private lodgings with the consent of the Sub-Sheriff.

The COURT said it was to be regretted that Court-houses should be used for any such purposes as theatrical representations or private lodgings. It interferes with the due administration of justice to have the Court-houses used by itinerant performers, for it tends to degrade the law, and desecrate the temple of justice in the eyes of the people. The Grand Jury, however, themselves have merely a right to the use of the Grand Jury Room, while acting as a Grand Jury, but no more. The Grand Jury of this assizes do not represent a future Grand Jury, and when discharged, are merely private gentlemen. That being so, they had no power whatever to direct the Court-house keepers how to act in reference to the keeping or using of the Court-house.

The High Sheriff said he fully agreed with the observations of his Lordship, that it was a desecration to have the Court-house used for improper purposes. He merely objected to the resolution as an infringement on the rights of the High Sheriff, and one which he considered the Grand Jury had not a power to enforce, and that it was a direction to local magistrates which they had not a right to exercise. He did not intend to allow the Court-houses to be used for any such objectionable purposes.

His Lordship expressed his approval of the spirit of the resolution of the Grand Jury, but not as to their legal powers. The custody of the Court-houses is entirely vested in the High Sheriff of the county; the Sub-Sheriff has no power but that delegated to him by the High Sheriff, who is legally and morally accountable to the Government and the public.

SLIGO ASSIZES.

Before HUGHES, B.

February 28th, 1867.—Grand Jury—Coroners' Inquests—Surgeon on Inquest Allowed his Fees—Coroners' Fees Disallowed.

Harkan applied in this case, on behalf of John M'Donough, one of the coroners of the county, to the Judge to direct the Grand Jury to reconsider his, the said coroner's, account, out of which they had struck the sum of £19 10s., being the amount claimed by him for holding 13 inquests. Strange to say, the surgeon's fees for making post mortem examinations had been allowed, and the fees of the coroner, who had held the inquests, had been disallowed. The office of coroner would be worthless if their fees were cut down in this manner, and the holding of inquests was quite discretionary with him, the only element for his consideration being, whether the deceased met with his death under suspicious circumstances or not. In those cases the inquests had been held actually on the requisition of the police, and such frequent interference with the discretion of the coroner would totally paralyze justice.

The Foreman of the Grand Jury thought that it was incumbent upon them to see that no inquest should be held except when the cause of death was, to say the least, doubtful; here they had used their discretion, and had disallowed the coroner's fees accordingly. As to the medical men, they had known nothing of the cause of death until they had been actually employed, the Grand Jury thought they must be paid. (Vide Foot's Grand Jury Law, p. 372, note.)

Hughes, B, considered, in the first place, that the giving the fees to the coroner should depend upon this, whether an inquest was necessary or not. As to the medical men, they should have a contract with the coroner for the payment of their fees, which would obviate the necessity of the Grand Jury placing themselves in the anomalous position of presenting fees for the medical men, and disallowing the coroner his fees. In those cases his Lordship declined to interfere with the discretion of the Grand Jury.

QUARTER SESSIONS CASES.

Cork (East Riding) Quarter Sessions.

Before R. D. Kane, Esq., Q.C., Chairman.

Re O'Connor.

Mallow, March 27.—Spirit License—Notice—Clear Days.

This was an application for a spirit license. The notice to magistrates, church-wardens, and Clerk of the Peace was given on the 5th March; the sessions commenced on the 26th. St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 68, s. 2, requires the notice to be given "twenty-one days at least before the first day of the then next General Sessions of the Peace."

Wynne appeared as attorney for the applicant.

The Chairman held that the days mentioned in the Act were clear days, and that the notice was late.

COUNTY WESTMEATH—MULLINGAR.

Before John O'Hagan, Esq., Q.C., Chairman.

Bond v. Murray.

April 2, 1867.—Ejectment—Tenancy from Year to Year—Notice to Quit—Gale Days.

This was a civil bill ejectment for over-holding which had been adjourned from the last sessions. It appeared from the evidence that in May, 1852, the defendant, George Murray, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to take part of the lands of Joanstown, in this county, as a yearly tenant, and that the terms of the agreement were embodied in a proposal in writing, dated the 15th of May, 1852, signed by the defendant and accepted by parol by the plaintiff. By this the defendant proposed to take the lands in question, at the yearly rent of £13 4s., payable by two equal and half yearly payments on the 1st of May and 1st of November in each year, the first gale of rent or payment to be due on the 1st of May inst.; and the defendant thereby proposed to commence as a tenant from the first of November, then last past.

The defendant having gone into possession of the lands under this agreement the first payment of rent was made in November, 1852, when a receipt was given for a half year's rent, due on the 1st of May, 1852. Sometime in the following year the plaintiff's agent, for his own convenience, altered the gale days from the 1st of May and the 1st of November to the 25th of March and the 29th of September, which arrangement was tacitly assented to and adopted by the defendant; and the next receipt for rent was expressed to be for a year's rent for the year ending on the 25th of March, 1853. From that time down to the last receipt, which was dated the 21st of May, 1866, the gale days were treated by both parties as being the 25th of March and the 29th of September. Upon the 30th of April, 1866, a notice to quit was served by the plaintiff on the defendant, requiring him to give up possession of the lands on the 1st of November, 1866, or at the end of the year of the tenancy, which should expire next after the end of half a year from the service of the notice. An ejectment for over-holding, grounded on this notice to quit, was brought at the January Quarter Sessions, and was adjourned, by consent of both parties, to the present sessions.

E. T. Bewley, on behalf of the defendant, submitted, at the close of the plaintiff's case, that the ejectment should be dismissed, on the ground that the notice to quit did not expire at the proper time. Counsel contended that by the acts of the parties a new tenancy had been created, of which the gale days were the 25th of March and the 29th of September, and that in an action for rent, treating those as the gale days, the defendant could not have set up as a defence that the gale days were those fixed by the original proposal.

L. S. Montgomery, for the plaintiff, argued that such alterations in the terms of a tenancy as a change of the gale days, or in the amount of the rent, would not create a fresh tenancy, and that the notice to quit was regular as it expired at the time at which it was expressly provided that the tenancy should commence. There was no evidence of any agreement to alter the gale days. It was a matter merely for the convenience of the plaintiff's agent.

The Chairman dismissed the case, considering that the receipts for rent and acts of the parties showed that a new tenancy from year to year had been created, commencing on the 25th of March, 1852.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ON THE AMALGAMATION OF THE LEGAL PROFESSIONS.

To the Editor "Solicitors' Journal."

Sir,—That the present system of Bar advocacy imperatively calls for reform can scarcely be denied in the face of recent experience, nor can the most sanguine longer hope for such reform to originate where the evil exists. Case succeeds case wherein suitor and attorney appeal vainly from the ruinous consequences of senior counsels' absence from Court (especially at the Nisi Prius sittings), on the ground of attendance elsewhere, and the plain principle is ignored that with receipt of the fee the contract is made to attend, prepared for advocacy, just as every other compact is made between members of the community, the breach of which would subject an attorney to an action for damages. Various suggestions, made with the view of stopping this grievance, appear to have some fundamental weakness, and the result of legal experience, strengthened by the tendency of our age to consolidation of energy, point to the severance of the profession of barrister and solicitor as the true cause, not only of the mischief we have touched on, but of other evils equally deplorable.

When Irish statistics startle us by a population diminished three millions, a national capital diminished twelve millions, and taxation doubled on each individual since 1841, the evil we deal with is one claiming the gravest consideration, and that it lies at the root of much which puzzles the inquirer into the ramifications of Irish discontent, while, notwithstanding its magnitude, the mischief can be easily remedied, many, whose opinions are valuable, fully believe.

In the original constitution of any social fabric it is clear that the innumerable causes of difference between man and man must be anticipated, and means afforded for just arbitrament; in the promptitude and consonance of adjudication to the first principles of reason must be found its title to popular approval; but as society becomes more artificial, as the soldier becomes a paid necessity to enable the citizen to bring all his energies to bear on his craft or business, it is found analogously that a profession springs up which offers to the litigant a means whereby his property, his character, or his life, can be protected, and his wrongs redressed, without exposure to the undue advantages resulting from accidental superiority of intelligence or training in his antagonist, while the time and labour of the tribunals are economized by having a responsible body before them accustomed to denude questions of extraneous or angry matter; but here, on first principles, a delegated advocacy should stop, and when the client has told his story, has had his means of attack or defence sifted by one inured to such a task, it would appear that the man to whom the case of another has been confided should be the representative of that other in his pleading and progress through the stages of the cause; should act and speak on the instructions directly gotten from the principal—and that to distil through another brain, to commit to another tongue, the case of the client would jeopardize his interests, or be at best mere supererogation. This objection appears to possess such weight, that only in a country of the resources of England could the system work satisfactorily, while to a people poor, yet litigious, quick, subtle, and fond of the keen encounter of sharp wits, yet anxious for finality in such conflicts, this doubled advocacy would appear to present so complicated, cumbrous, and costly a machinery, that even long usage could scarcely palliate its daily inconveniences.

In an age which boldly questions all antiquity has decided, rehearing causes which centuries acquiesced in considering concluded, and even exhuming fresh evidence to disturb their verdicts, it does appear that a period has arrived when, not to be inconsistent, we may ask why Ireland has two legal professions, and why, although a wealthy community chooses to adopt a costly system, an impoverished community must continue it.

Again, while several generations of Englishmen were of opinion that to permit the parties litigant to tell their own story would lead to gross perjury and frustrate the ends of justice, for ages the common law refused to listen to plaintiff or defendant, and took facts at second-hand rather than touch a stiffnecked fallacy, dignified by ancient approval, until Lord Brougham set to work for reform in this matter. The old system has been proved mistaken; and he would be a daring individual who should attempt a repeal of the law, opening those lips so long sealed by absurd legislation; yet, so strong was the apprehension of allowing principals to depose in a court of justice that even the attorney was made a mute also, lest contract with the client should render him the subject of prejudice or passion, but a fortiori, the principal himself being thus at length allowed to speak, surely his attorney can no longer be muzzled.

In consequence of the growing feeling in England favourable to a fusion of the professions, the London Times some time since grappled with this matter: it asked why the distinction of professions should be kept up, and said:—"Why should not I, the client, see you, the barrister, face to face; why, if I want a question mooted must I go to an attorney, when you who plead for me get only one item out of the costs; or why, if I, the client, do not want a double representation, must I have a strange gentleman mixed up in my affairs, whom I never saw before, and may never see again?"

The gravity the question has assumed in the sister island must be considerable when The Times opened its columns to the discussion; let us, therefore, consider the general theory of distinction between the two branches of the legal profession, which may thus be summed up. That the one is, and the other is not, a liberal profession; that the barrister is the superior, and the attorney the inferior; that the one requires the good breeding, the accomplishments, and the education of a gentleman, and that those things are not to be expected of the other; that on all public occasions whatever the barrister is the conspicuous person; he sits in high places, and wears the professional uniform; the attorney comes to him, and he is fenced off from going to the attorney, with a degree of care seeming to indicate that his virtue requires external fortification; again the attorney sends in his bill, and if it is not paid, may bring an action for it, but the Barrister has no claim whatever for his fees: indeed, according to the strictest view of the subject, he ought hardly to notice them—that is to say, he cannot in any way proportion the work to the money; a tariff is provided, specifying the prices, below which he is not allowed to go, but beyond that he ought, by right, to take what comes, and make no bargain.

Now, it is allowed that while the most distinguished members of the Bar occupy a higher position than the most eminent attorney or solicitor, yet the lower class of barristers would stand very low indeed amongst attorneys, and it is childish to look on a man who passes his life in prosecuting and defending petty criminals at a Police-office, or at the Quarter Sessions, as in any respect the superior of the solicitor, who has to manage the most important affairs of private families and public bodies; and there are probably very few barristers who have to transact business so important as that which comes before the solicitor to a great railway company, or any other great trading body in England or Ireland.

On what grounds, then, it is asked, can the existing distinction between the two branches of the profession of the law be maintained, and what meaning has it; for it has undoubtedly produced a foolish notion that the profession of a barrister is more fit for a gentleman than that of an attorney, and that the latter profession does not form one of the few callings between which a young man has to choose after completing his education at a public school and the University? He may become a clergyman, a barrister, a doctor, or a soldier; or he may try to get an Indian appointment. But for various reasons the number of youths who become clergymen is rapidly decreasing, and is not likely to increase. To be a doctor requires special tastes; and though the profession of a soldier is an excellent one to die in, it holds out little prospect of living with comfort, except to those who could live as well without it. Lastly, the Indian Service is not very popular, and the number of those who can enter it is strictly limited, hence year after year the long list of loungers at the Bar of both countries increases. What such men (and they number many of talent) do with themselves is not easy to say: if the profession of an attorney stood as it ought, that is, on the same footing, in regard of social consideration, as that of a barrister, numbers of these gentlemen might be both usefully and profitably employed in it.

In the United States, and in some of our own colonies, the distinction between barristers and attorneys being unknown, a lawyer is a lawyer; he sits in his office, and goes to his clients, as they find it convenient; and he goes into Court and there pleads the cause which he has prepared for trial, whenever it is advisable to do so.

On first principles, then, we deny that there is any fundamental distinction between the professions, or that they require a different education, or a different set of rules, or are governed by a separate code of morality; and aver, after much deliberation, that the Bar etiquette is based on an antiquated fallacy.

It may be said that there is an advantage in preserving a class apart for legal advocacy, as the attorney would be incompetent for it, but this plainly ignores the necessary effects of the new demands on a profession which has hitherto kept abreast of all requirements, and would educate up to its status as it did under its new charter of 1866.

Abolish the exclusive audience in the Superior Courts as at Quarter Sessions, and free trade in representation would place litigation on the basis of common sense and market value; then in ordinary matters the litigant would directly instruct my young friend Boanerges, without the intervention of an attorney, or instruct the attorney to plead the matter given him, without the expense, the delay, and the trouble, double representation involves, while in weighty cases the client would not be prohibited from risking the heavy fee with Mr. Sergeant Buzfuz on the chance of his not being in another Court, or in the House of Commons.

Each member of a consolidated profession would thus have, and take, his place, to the incalculable advantage of the bench, the juror, the suitor, and the public.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
4th April, 1867. GEORGE WILLIAM SHANNON.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

PRELIMINARY AND FINAL EXAMINATIONS.

NOTICE.

The preliminary examination of candidates for apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Friday, the 12th, and Saturday, the 13th days of April, 1867, at eleven o'clock.

The final examination of candidates seeking admission as attorneys will be held at the same place, on Monday, the 15th, and Tuesday, the 16th days of April, 1867, at the same hour.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY AS TO PRIZES TO BE GIVEN ANNUALLY AT PRELIMINARY AND FINAL EXAMINATIONS.

That with a view to encourage an advanced standard of answering in the subjects prescribed for the preliminary examination of apprentices, prizes be given annually to be competed for by gentlemen who may have exhibited a satisfactory degree of proficiency at such examination.

That such prizes shall be as follows :—

For the best answerer, a gold medal together with a sum of £10.

For the second best answerer, a silver medal, together with a sum of £5. No candidate to be given a prize unless the examiners shall be of opinion that he has answered sufficiently well to entitle him thereto.

That a special examination for these prizes be held in or about Michaelmas Term in each year, at such times and in such manner as may be approved of by the Court of Examiners for the time being.

That in addition to the course prescribed for the preliminary examination, candidates for prizes shall be examined in the following :—

Virgil's Æneid, 4th and 5th Books.
Horace's Odes and Satires.
Livy, 1st three books.
Dr. Smith's Grecian History.
Liddell's Roman History.

That at each preliminary examination the Court of Examiners do recommend such of the candidates as from their superior answering, may be deemed qualified to compete for these prizes.

That the candidates so recommended from the four examinations preceding the month of June in each year, be at liberty to compete for prizes at the examination for prizes so to be held in the Michaelmas Term following.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

That at each final examination a gold medal be awarded to the best answerer, provided, in the opinion of the Court of Examiners, such answering shall be sufficiently good to entitle him to such premium.

THE COURTS, AND COURT PAPERS.

CONSOLIDATED NISI PRIUS COURT.

NOTICE.

Wednesday next, the 10th day of April instant, will be the last day for lodging dockets of abstracts of records for trial on the first day of the sittings of this court, commencing on Tuesday, the 16th day of April, 1867.

ORDERED—That no case shall be entered for trial unless a docket be lodged with the registrar four clear days before the day for which notice of trial shall have been served, stating the names of the parties—in what capacity they sue and are sued—the general nature of the cause or causes of action and of defence and other pleadings, and the names of the attorneys of the parties ;—and all abstracts for trial shall be sealed and lodged with the Registrar the day before the same shall be called on ; and in all cases wherein a confession or consent for judgment shall subsequently be given, the plaintiff's attorney shall immediately give notice to the registrar that such cause will not proceed to trial.

All dockets of appeals must be entered with the Registrar Two clear Days before the day for which notice of hearing shall have been given, stating the names of the parties—the attorneys—the nature of the decree, dismiss, or order appealed from—and from what Court the appeal is brought, the decree or dismiss must be in Court, as also a certificate of the appeal.

HENRY J. MONAHAN,
Registrar, Office Common Pleas.

In the Matter of
CHARLES ROLLESTON,
Executor of CROASDAILE MOLONY, Esquire, deceased,
Petitioner;
The Reverend CHARLES WALKER MOLONY, Respondent.

I HEREBY require all persons claiming to be Creditors or Unpaid Legatees of CROASDAILE MOLONY, late of the City of London, in England, Esq., deceased, on or before the 25th day of APRIL, next, to furnish, in writing, to CHARLES ROLLESTON, of Springfield House, Dalkey, in the County of Dublin, Esquire, the Petitioner; or to Messrs. In the Matter of ANNE BYRNE,
Petitioner;
ELIZABETH BYRNE, Administratrix of WILLIAM BYRNE, deceased, and CHARLES BYRNE, her husband, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors or Next of Kin of WILLIAM BYRNE, late of Gilford in the County of Down, Farmer, deceased, the intestate in the Petition in this Matter mentioned, on or before the 26th day of APRIL next, to furnish, in writing, to the said administratrix, ELIZABETH BYRNE, of Gilford, aforesaid, or to HUGH GLASS, Esq., of 43, Dame-street, in the City of Dublin, her Solicitor, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as she shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

Dated this 28th March, 1867.

E. LITTON, Master in Chancery.

THOMAS M'CLELLAND & SON, Solicitor for Petitioner, 43, Dame-street.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, APRIL 13, 1867.

IN our last number we made some observations on a question that is every day assuming more importance, viz., as to the right of a party in respect of his occupation of a house to light and air, and we referred concisely to the authorities, as well in England as in Ireland, with regard to the law that regulates, not alone the quantity, but the quality of light that each person has a right to.

In continuation of that subject it appears to us desirable to notice briefly—First, what are the remedies afforded to such person for an infringement of his right to light or air? And, secondly, how his right to such acquired property or easement may be lost?—questions, it must be admitted, of considerable importance to all persons, but especially to those who may invest, or who have invested, money in houses.

First, then, as to the appropriate remedies which are open to the party whose right to light or air has been infringed on.

The most obvious one, and that generally adopted, was in olden times an action for damages, or, as it was technically termed, an action on the case at law to recover damages for the obstruction of the light or air; and the principles on which such action rested have been too long settled to be now questioned, and such principles still are in full vigour. In Aldred's case, 9 Co. 102, it was resolved that the action was maintainable, "for in a house four things are desired—habitatio hominis, delectatio inhabitantis, necessitas luminis, et salubritas aeris;" and further, "for hindrance of the light the ancient form of an action on the case was significant, sc. quod messagium horridâ tenebritate obscuratum fuit," and a case well known to jurists, is cited in support of that proposition, Bland v. Moseley, reported in half a dozen of the old reports that are referred to, and in that case WRAY, C. J., laid it down "that for stopping, as well of the wholesome air, as of light, action lies, and damages shall be recovered for them, for both are necessary; for it is said, et vescitur aurâ œthereâ, and the said words horridâ tenebritate, &c., are significant, and imply the benefit of the light; and that view of the law was adopted in many subsequent cases (See 2 Saund., 175 a, 175 b. Riviere v. Bower, 1 R. and M., 24; Compton v. Richards, 1 Pri., 27).

However, an important exception has been always made to that rule. It is this, that as regards a prospect to the windows of a house, no action lies for its obstruction or stoppage, and the reason is given by the same ancient judge (WRAY, C. J.), "but for prospect, which is matter only of delight, and not of necessity, no action lies for stopping thereof, and yet it is a great commendation of a house if it has a long and large prospect, unde dicitur, laudaturque domus longos qui prospicit agros. But the law does not give an action for such things of delight." In modern times, however, the form of the action is not material, but the principles regulating it still remain.

In an action of the kind referred to, it, however, will lie on the plaintiff to show not merely that the light has been obstructed, but that it has been so obstructed to a degree that will render the occupation of his house uncomfortable, or if in trade, that it will interfere with his carrying on his trade as advantageously as he had previously done (Back v. Stacey, 2 C. and P., 465).

Or, suppose a person alters the nature and purposes of his building, as, for example, converts a malt house into a dwelling house, the right to light is limited to what was necessary for it in its original, and not in its altered, state (Martin v. Goble, 1 Campb., 322, and see also Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Ib., 80).

Another remedy frequently resorted to, is in equity by way of injunction, where the party is able to show a title, either by prescription or from agreement (Morris v. Buckley, 2 Ves. Sr., 452), but equity will not interfere to stay the erection of buildings interfering with a prospect, so following the law as already referred to (Atty, G., v. Doughty, 2 Ves. Sr., 453). There are some other remedies mentioned in the books, as by abatement or by indictment, &c., but they are out of date and seldom resorted to.

The next inquiry we propose to make is, how the right in question may be lost. There are several modes for this, either by express release or by implied release; and the latter is generally subdivided into several classes, as—first, extinguishment by necessity, as where an act is done which necessarily puts an end to the enjoyment; second, by merger, as where the dominant and servient tenements are united in the same person; and third, by abandonment. We shall make a few remarks on the latter mode.

It has been long since settled that the right in question may be lost by abandonment or discontinuance of the user, or enjoyment; and this principle is clearly enunciated by LORD TENTERDEN, then ABBOTT, C. J.:—"If a person entitled to ancient lights pulls down his house, and erects a blank wall in the place of the wall in which there had been windows, and suffers that blank wall to remain for a considerable period of time, it lies upon him at least to show, that at the time when he so erected the blank wall, and thus apparently abandoned the windows which gave light and air to the house, that was not a perpetual but a temporary abandonment of the enjoyment, and that he intended to resume the enjoyment of those advantages within a reasonable time. I think that the burden of showing that lies on the party who has discontinued the use of the light" (3 B. & Cr., 336). And so, also, BALEY, J.. remarks:—"It is a wholesome and wise qualification of the rule (that enjoyment gives the right) to say that the ceasing to enjoy destroys the right, unless at the time when the party discontinues the enjoyment he does some act to show that he means to resume it within a reasonable time" (Ib. p. 337.). And the other Judges, HOLROYD and LITTLEDALE, also concurred in that view of the law.

Nevertheless, it is not quite so clear what, in law, amounts to an abandonment of the right. Thus it may be admitted that the cessation to use a light, if accompanied, as ABBOTT, C. J. reasoned in the case already cited, by some evidence of an intention to resume the enjoyment within a reasonable time, will not be held an abandonment of such right. The party may, for example, build on the same site, and place windows in the same position, or by other acts show that he does not intend to apply the ground to a different purpose (per LITTLEDALE, J., 3 B. & Cr., 341). But in cases of cessation of such enjoyment, and not accompanied by any such acts, or by any evidence of intention that such cessation should be only temporary, a difficulty must, of necessity, arise, and Lord Tenterden's act—the Prescription Act, already referred to—does not, as it occurs to us, meet or remedy the difficulty.

Before that act it was the law that, as the uninterrupted enjoyment or user, for a certain period, of the right gave the title to it, in like manner the cesser of that enjoyment, or user, destroyed the right, unless, indeed, some act was proved to evince the intention of resuming the right within a reasonable time; in fact, as the right was considered to exist only in consequence of occupancy, so it was held to cease when such occupancy was discontinued.

Then, has the Prescription Act altered that law? We think not. All that it has done is to enact that after twenty years' enjoyment without interruption the right to light shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible; but in the 4th section it expressly adds that such period of time is to be deemed and taken to be the period next before some suit or action wherein the claim or matter to which such period may relate shall have been, or shall be, brought into question; so that if the user or enjoyment has not continued for a period covering twenty years before such suit or action has been, or shall be, brought, it would follow that under that act such user could not be relied on as evidence of title, and therefore, it appears to us that the observations of LITTLEDALE, J., on the case referred to, are still extremely important and significant, viz.:—

"It would be most inconvenient to hold, that the property in light and air which is acquired by occupancy, can only be lost where there has been an abandonment of the right for twenty years. If a man pulls down a house and does not make any use of the land for two or three years, or converts it into tillage, I think he may be taken to have abandoned all intention of re-building the house, and consequently that his right would cease. But if he builds upon the same site and places windows in the same spot, or does any act to show that he did not mean to convert the land to a different purpose, then his right would not cease" (3 B. and Cr. 341), and so the same learned judge considered that the erection of a blank wall instead of one which had ancient windows in it, indicated such intention. However, we must admit, that those observations are not strengthened by HOLROYD, J., or TENTERDEN, C. J., the former of whom considered that the building of a blank wall was only a stronger circumstance to show that he had no intention to continue the enjoyment of his light than if he had merely pulled down the house, and the latter made the observations that we have already cited in the commencement of this article, in which he throws on the party building the blank wall the onus of proving that he only intended a temporary, and not a perpetual, abandonment of his right.

It would, therefore, from the authorities already cited, and from others to a similar effect, appear that the question must resolve itself into one of intention, and that the burden of proving an intention of only a temporary abandonment lies on the party who so discontinued the user.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE LATE MASTER OF THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Robert Hitchcock, Esq., Master of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, expired on Wednesday last, at Chester, where he had been staying for a short time previous to his death. Mr. Hitchcock commenced public life as a practising attorney and solicitor in Dublin. Leaving this country he became connected with the English Press, and to that step must be attributed his attaining in after life to the high civil appointment he held under the Crown. Mr. Hitchcock was for some time editor of The Yorkshireman, and subsequently occupied the same position on two other provincial newspapers—one in Devonshire and the other at Chichester. We believe it was while attached to the former publication that Mr. Hitchcock was enabled to enlist the warm friendship of many influential politicians—amongst others, a noble duke, whose esteem for him in after years enabled him to climb to the position we have already adverted to. Severing himself from his editorial duties, Mr. Hitchcock returned to this country, and was appointed to the comparatively humble position of "Stamp Distributor" of the Court of Exchequer. While acting in that capacity he conceived, and took a most prominent part in preparing the Bill for the re-construction of the offices of the Common Law Courts, which, after being defeated twice in two successive Parliamentary sessions, narrowly escaped the same fate on its third introduction; and although passing the Commons, barely received its third reading in the House of Lords by a majority of one vote. The Act we allude to passed in 1844, when Sir Robert Peel was Premier, and is probably better known to the profession and the officers of the several courts as the 7 and 8 Vic., cap. 107, than by any other title. It may not be uninteresting to our readers to know that on the occasion of its third reading in the "Lords," the last person to enter the House just as the division was about taking place, was the late Duke of Wellington. However, the bill passed, and received the Royal assent. The old title of Prothonotary was abolished, and the new one of Master substituted, and Mr. Hitchcock became the "Master" of the Court of Exchequer under the Act which he so assiduously applied all his clever energies to carry, backed by the powerful influence which his pen in former days had gained him. At one period of his career Mr. Hitchcock possessed most powerful interest with the Treasury; and if, as is true, that power waned in later years, the tradition that such a privilege existed, is still a pleasing item in the history of the Court of Exchequer, to which its officers, both young and old, cling with warm affection. Mr. Hitchcock was the only Master of the Exchequer since the Act of 1844 passed. In conclusion, we may remark it is more than possible that during the present session a new measure will become law which will have the effect of changing the constitution of the "Establishments" of the Common Law Courts; and, if so, a strange coincidence occurs—the projector of the "forty-four" Act and his creation together pass from us, both having performed 23 years of public service.

THE SPECIAL COMMISSION for the trial of Fenian prisoners in Dublin was opened on Monday last, at the Court-house in Green-street, by the Lord Chief Justice, Mr Justice Fitzgerald, and Mr Baron Deasy.

The following is an abstract of the charge delivered to the Grand Juries on this occasion :—

The Lord Chief Justice began by expressing his satisfaction at being associated in the Commission with two Judges so experienced and judicious. The circumstances under which they were met to perform a solemn duty were painful. It was scarcely two months since the Judges discharged the gaols, yet the prisons were now crowded. That Gaol Delivery was preceded by a Special Commission, which lasted for several weeks, and a similar Commission held its sittings in the South of Ireland for three weeks. Yet the evils meant to be suppressed by those proceedings continued to exist; tranquillity was not restored, and further disturbances had occurred. These crimes against the State were committed by persons not reduced to want or compelled by necessity. No less than 230 prisoners were specified in the calendar for such offences, while there were but three cases of the usual character to try. The present aspect of the country was depressing, the retrospect gloomy, but good men must not therefore despond. It should be recollected that for years past systematic efforts had been directed by the emissaries of sedition to poison the minds of the youth of the country with disaffection and disloyalty. If the very liberty which our free Constitution bestows had been perfidiously turned against the Constitution itself, it could not be expected that the seeds of mischief sown broadcast through the land should not have produced bitter fruits. The crime of high treason is the greatest crime against faith, duty, and society, because it aims at the subversion of all lawful authority, because it may involve a whole people in the horrors of civil war, and lead to the destruction of the owners of property. His Lordship proceeded to sketch the history of high treason, explaining the nature of the crime, and expounding the laws of evidence regarding it. He knew nothing of the Fenian conspiracy judicially, and he was sceptical as to the possibility of its existence, save that he was painfully conscious that there are scarcely any limits to human credulity, human folly, and human wickedness. There was an air of improbability that the attacks on the civil forces of the Queen were preliminary to a general assault upon all the institutions of the State, upon the whole fabric of society, upon the Monarchy, upon the institution of property itself. The amazing wickedness and the prodigious folly of such designs compel us, he said, to be doubtful of the possibility of the existence of an association with such designs, until proved by credible evidence. One item in the black catalogue of crime he had supposed but not believed would alone shock the common sense, while it would inflame the indignation of millions of our countrymen—namely, the deposition of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, the lawful Sovereign, under God, of this United Empire, beloved and revered, as she deserves to be, in order to substitute a republic, with a teacher of French or a linendraper's apprentice for a President. The mind recoils from the grotesque mockery, and revolts at the bare conception of such an absurdity. But there have been in all ages political enthusiasts. Wolfe Tone, who would have landed a French army in this island, to slaughter half-a-million of his countrymen, and introduce the principles of the French Revolution among us, compared himself with Washington and Kosciusko; and Thistlewood, who meant to murder His Majesty's Ministers as they sat at dinner, compared himself to Brutus and to Cassius. Whether these desperate men believed themselves what they said, or merely desired to hoodwink posterity, as they had blinded their followers, might be doubtful; however, such men, with such ideas, had lived, and shocked the world with their crimes. If the jury could conceive individuals living among them who had long ceased to look upon treason as a crime—who had preached that rebellion was a school of virtue and revolution, the reward of perseverance in patriotic exertions; that they had been in the habit of frequenting seditious clubs, listening to inflammatory harangues, pondering over lists of imaginary grievances, invented by factious men in furtherance of their not less treasonable designs; that they had been fed with false hopes of assistance in their treason by foreign emissaries; that they were seduced by false representations of the numbers and discipline of the conspirators; that they were day by day talking with each other, until they believed what one said or promised to the other; that they learnt to hate their superiors, and to covet their property; that they were wearied of industry, and preferred the rank of General in an imaginary army, or of President in an imaginary republic; that their vanity grew out to be excessive, and that they abjured all the old-fashioned maxims of loyalty and religion—if the jury could believe that such persons had been dwelling among them—their feelings inflamed, their passions exasperated, their judgment, their reason overborne—then they might imagine that to such persons their scheme of revolution would appear probable, though success would seem impossible to minds free from similar delusions. After some further remarks, his Lordship concluded his address in the following terms:—

"The cattle plague, which desolated the fields of England and Scotland, was a terrible visitation, from which Ireland has been mercifully spared. But, gentlemen, a moral plague might infest our society and corrupt the minds of our young men—nay, poison their very nature, which would be more fatal because more incurable, which would be destructive, not of the beasts that perish, but of intelligent accountable beings, endowed with high faculties and aspirations, and which would also be destructive of the present prosperity and future hopes of a nation. Gentlemen, I have detained you too long from the weighty business which is before you. You will dispose of it without undue haste, but with reasonable expedition, in order that the innocent may be set free, the guilty punished, and the supremacy of law maintained and asserted. You will be governed in your inquiries only by the evidence, uninfluenced by anything you may have heard or read before you entered that box; in a word, you will, I am satisfied, disregarding every other consideration, perform your duty."

FENIANISM AND THE WHITEBOY ACT.

MEMORANDUM TO IRISH MAGISTRATES.

From The Freeman's Journal.

On Tuesday was printed a copy of the circular lately issued to the Irish magistrates, in which their attention is directed to the following summary of their powers and duties under the Whiteboy Acts, "the provisions of which," writes Lord Naas, "will be found very valuable in the present circumstances." It will be seen that prominence is given in the summary to the fact that the various classes of offenders are liable to whipping.

1. All persons armed with fire-arms or any other weapon, or appearing in any disguise, or wearing any unusual uniform or badge, or assuming any name or denomination not usually assumed by ordinary persons in their lawful occasions, who shall assemble, or who shall appear, alone or with others, by day or night, are guilty of a high misdemeanour, subjecting them to penal servitude, imprisonment, and whipping. 2. All persons who assemble and unlawfully compel, or by force or threats attempt to compel, any one to quit his dwelling or employment, or who shall maliciously assault any dwelling-house, or who shall break into any house or outhouse, or cause any door to be opened by threats, or shall carry off any horse or mule, or any gun or other weapon, money, or other property, or shall by threats cause same to be given up to them, are equally guilty, and liable to the same punishment. 3. Any person who shall write, post, publish, or give any notice, letter, or message, exciting, or tending to excite, any riot or unlawful assembly, or combination, or threatening any violence to person or property, or demanding arms, ammunition, money, or other property, or requiring any person to quit any employment, is liable to the same punishment. 4. All persons aiding and abetting others in the commission of any of the above offences are equally guilty, and liable to the punishments above mentioned. 5. All persons who by drum, horn, fire, shouting, or any signal, excite, or promote, or attempt to excite or promote, such unlawful meetings, are also guilty of a high misdemeanour. 6. Any persons who, by force or threats, unlawfully impose on or tender to any person any oath or solemn engagement are guilty of a grave misdemeanour, and are liable to whipping and imprisonment. 7. All magistrates and constables are empowered and bound to apprehend, disperse, and oppose all persons so engaged, and may call upon and command all persons who are not disabled by age or infirmity to assist them in so doing; and are fully indemnified for happening to kill, maim, or hurt any person in discharging such duty. 8. Any two magistrates having reasonable cause to suspect any person to be guilty of such unlawful rising, assembling, or appearing as above mentioned, or of having been at any such unlawful assembly, or of intending so to be, may and are required to summon before them any such person, and bind him over in his own recognizance to appear at the next assizes, and to be of good behaviour in the meantime; and, in case of refusal, such magistrates have power to commit such person to gaol. 9. Every magistrate has authority to summon any person within his jurisdiction whom he thinks capable of giving material evidence as to any such offence, and examine him or her, on oath, and bind such person in recognizance to appear and give evidence, and on refusal to answer or to enter into recognizance, to commit such person to gaol.

THE CUSTODY OF THE IRISH RECORDS.

From The Chronicle.

Much misapprehension of Irish questions has arisen from the want of accurate knowledge of the historical antecedents of the people of Ireland. The views generally current respecting the Irish race have, to a certain extent, originated from works more replete with theories and declamation than sustained by authentic evidence. The histories of Ireland now in circulation are, in reality, but trade compilations; while the works purporting to treat special portions of Irish history may in truth be described as merely archæological, ecclesiological, or political. The few Irish historical writers whose productions evince a true scientific spirit deplore the fact that their labours are almost insuperably impeded by the chaotic state of the Public Records of Ireland. Even apart from all consideration of the native Irish or Gaelic documents, it is obvious that no accurate view can be formed of any period of the history of Ireland since the Anglo-Norman settlement, while the records which contain the true materials for its elucidation lie undeciphered and uncalendared in obscure Dublin repositories.

Some of these documents are entrusted to clerks whose entire official time is occupied with the everyday business of the law courts to which they belong; and, incredible as it may seem, a mass of important records has been for a time allowed to remain in the hands of professional pedigree makers. These facts are the more discreditable, because the archives which are thus dealt with have an important bearing on historical and genealogical questions connected with every part of the empire, and possess a value, not inherent in the English records, as evidence of the descent of landed property. To the deplorable rule there is an important exception in the large collection in the western wing of the Custom House buildings in Dublin. This repository, with its imposing array of presses filled with rolls, books, maps, and parchments, has been managed most satisfactorily, and to the great advantage of the public, under the regulation by which its control was confided entirely to a keeper, directly responsible to the Treasury, untrammelled by the interference of Boards or nominal judicial heads, and totally dissociated from the Law offices.

For many years the concentration and arrangement of the Records of Ireland have been urged upon the Imperial Government, which expends large sums annually for such purposes in England; and, owing to these representations, a Record Repository has at length been completed in Dublin. At the opening of the present session the Secretary for Ireland promised to submit to the House of Commons on a very early day the scheme proposed by the Government for this Record Department; and, according to the present arrangement of Parliamentary business, the question will come on immediately.

It is obvious that the work of concentrating, arranging, and calendaring the documents in the new repository should be confided to archivists in whose skill, experience, and impartiality the educated Irish public have full confidence; and fortunately there are scholars in Ireland whose works display all the keenness of critical knowledge, and the complete mastery of difficult archivistic questions, which such a task demands. In addition to a capacity for administration and arrangement, it is essential that the heads of the department should possess that special minute and recondite learning which can be acquired only by long familiarity with the multiform palæographic peculiarities of every class of Anglo-Irish muniments from their commencement in the twelfth century. In defining the external relations of the department, it will be desirable to profit by the teaching of experience, and to adopt the only arrangement which has hitherto worked well in Ireland. The new Public Record Office should, therefore, be placed under a Keeper, not shielded either by a Board or by such a nominal head as a Master of the Rolls of Chancery, but personally responsible to the Treasury, to the world of archivistic learning, and to the public, for the working of the department, the full details of which should be annually submitted in a printed report to the House of Commons. On this keeper should be laid the duty of training a practical staff, not only scientifically to decipher, expound, and calendar archives, but also to satisfy promptly and accurately every inquiry connected with the Public Records of Ireland, whether bearing upon history, law, genealogy, or the inheritance of landed property.

THE MAGISTRACY.

Henry James Viscount Stuart, of Oaklands, Cookstown, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Tyrone.

John F. Dillon, Esq., eldest son of Sir John Dillon, Lismullen, Bart., has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Meath, on the recommendation of the Right Hon. the Earl of Fingall.

ENGLAND.

THE JAMAICA PROSECUTIONS.

The charge to the Grand Jury in the case of Colonel Nelson and Lieutenant Brand, who stand committed for the wilful murder of George William Gordon, at Morant Bay, Jamaica, on the 23rd October, 1865, was delivered on Wednesday morning, at the Central Criminal Court, by the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND, who was accompanied by Mr. BARON CHANNELL.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said it had been necessary for him to come to the court to address them in reference to this case, in place of the learned Recorder, for reasons which that gentleman explained to them on Monday. This case was based on the fact of a person having been brought before a court-martial presided over by Lieutenant Brand, one of the accused; that that person was sentenced to be executed, and that the sentence was approved of by Colonel Nelson. Taking first the question of the jurisdiction of the court-martial, he would state to them the facts. It appeared that in 1865, in the island of Jamaica, a turbulent disposition—a disposition to riot—had arisen among the negro population. On the 10th October it was thought necessary for the local authorities at Morant Bay to communicate with the Governor. On the 11th the insurgents made their appearance, more or less in arms. They appeared to have stormed the Court-house at Morant Bay, in which the magistrates were then sitting, and no less than eighteen persons were killed. This state of things excited among the white population the greatest alarm, the military force being small. In these circumstances, the Governor, on the 13th, declared martial law in the whole of the county of Surrey, with the exception of Kingston, the capital town. A military force was collected, and went out against the rebels, who dispersed and fled. For some days before his arrest Mr. Gordon was living in Kingston, and he was thought by many persons to be a prime mover in the insurrection. He had told them that Mr. Gordon was living in Kingston, where martial law had not been declared, but warrants were issued for his apprehension, and he was taken into custody in General O'Connor's house by the Governor and the Custos of Kingston. He was then taken on board a war steamer, and conveyed to Morant Bay, where he was tried on a charge of high treason by a court-martial, presided over by Lieutenant Brand. Of this charge he was found guilty, and the sentence was approved of by Colonel Nelson. The Governor-General was communicated with, and he was of opinion that the sentence ought to be executed, which was accordingly done. The first question arising here was whether the Governor had authority to declare martial law, and this, of course, was a question of great importance in this and other cases of a similar nature which might arise. The authority must be based on some commission of the Crown, or some imperial or local act of legislature. Before coming to the question whether his commission gave the Governor power to declare martial law, it was important to consider the history of this colony. There were two classes of colonies. A Crown colony was either acquired by force of arms or by cession from some other country. In such a colony the power of the Sovereign was absolute. Very different was a settled colony, where land had been claimed in behalf of England and settled by Englishmen. The residents in such a colony claimed all the rights of Englishmen. They must consider to which of these classes Jamaica belonged. There was no doubt that it was acquired by force, having belonged to Spain. Upon the occasion of its conquest the best portion of the Spaniards left, but there remained a free, independent black race

In 1587 the Spaniards attempted to regain possession of the island, but they were repulsed, and at that time the remaining portion of the Spaniards disappeared. It was after this period that the English went from the West Indies to settle in the island, and, after the Restoration, Charles II. sent out a commission declaring that the children of English subjects who went to settle in Jamaica, though born out of the King's dominions, should have all the rights and privileges of free born Englishmen. Under these circumstances he could entertain no doubt that Jamaica was a settled colony. The land was conquered, but the original inhabitants never. In the year 1784 a great question arose in reference to the taking of a conquered colony without their consent, and on that occasion Lord Mansfield, after great consideration, also affirmed that Jamaica was a settled colony. They (the grand jury) had nothing to do with the political view of the question, whether or no martial law ought to be declared in particular cases. They had only to consider whether in Jamaica martial law had or had not been lawfully proclaimed. Martial law was, in short, the suspension of all law but the will of the military rulers in the districts proclaimed. Let them consider if there was such a thing as martial law thus defined, and, to arrive at a solution, it was of the last importance that they should trace the history of the matter. They had remarkable instances of martial law in the times of Mary and Elizabeth, and of Edward the Sixth, on the occasion of popular insurrections—times when the whole social fabric seemed shaken to the very foundation. In the reign of Queen Mary introducing heretical books into the kingdom was made punishable by martial law, and in the reign of her sister Elizabeth, any one bringing in Papal bulls was liable to be punished in like manner. But still they could not doubt that she was exceeding the powers given her by the Constitution by issuing such a proclamation. In the time of James I. proclamations were issued, giving to the Lords Lieutenant of counties power to inflict martial law at their own discretion; this he had no hesitation in saying was illegal. In the reign of Charles I. the King endeavoured to raise compulsory supplies to carry on his wars, and proclaimed martial law on any one who refused to comply with his demands; but the Parliament which assembled shortly afterwards vindicated the right of the subject. Since that time martial law has never been exercised in the realm of England. He could find no such thing as martial law used to put down rebellion in this country in all his researches. In 1798 martial law was carried out in Ireland by order of the Lord Lieutenant, affairs being in such a terrible state in that country. But what is martial law? To explain this he could not do better than trace the military history of this country. The safety of an army depends upon strict subordination and discipline, for when a large body of men are drawn together it is most necessary that they should be kept in a state of perfect subjection. When the Scottish army invaded England the generals issued articles of war for the government of the forces, and such a course was usually followed. In the earliest periods of history that law was always administered by a properly constituted tribunal. If a man enters your house by force, you are entitled to take the law into your own hands, and do anything in your power to protect your property. If a mutiny breaks out in a regiment, it may be stopped by the measures deemed necessary. But this was not martial law at all; it was the common law of England. The island of Jamaica had seen more insurrection than any other, for he found that during a period extending from the formation of the colony to the year 1832 there had been no less than twenty-eight insurrections of the negro population, all accompanied with more or less barbarity. He would now consider whether George William Gordon was amenable to martial law. From precedents which he enumerated, he came to the conclusion that the Governor had no power to arrest Mr. Gordon. The only purpose for which they could have legitimately apprehended him was to hand him over to the civil tribunal. He considered that the course pursued by the authorities was most unjustifiable. Mr. Gordon should never have been even tried before a civil tribunal on such evidence as was given; for he had no hesitation in saying that three-fourths of the evidence on which he was convicted and hanged could never have been received by a competent judge. It was a most unwarrantable act to move Mr. Gordon from a place where he would not have been found guilty to another where they thought he would, and yet this in reality was the course pursued. If Mr. Gordon had done nothing culpable after martial law had been proclaimed he did not see how he could be tried by it for offences committed before it was in force. Having described the regulations of court-martial, both in the army and navy, he concluded that the trial was not a legal one. He next read some of the evidence given at the trial, and commented on its inconclusiveness, giving it as his opinion that much of the principal part of it was totally inadmissible, and not sufficient to convict on. He thought there could be no doubt that the systematic agitation kept up by Mr. Gordon did lead to the unhappy consequences which followed. He might have been influenced, being himself a man of colour, by the feeling that the negroes were being actually wronged, or he might have been led on by the desire of popularity so often experienced by agitators. He could not, however, have contemplated that a rebellion would really have taken place, as such an event would have been as disastrous to himself as to any one else. He was morally responsible for the insurrection, and ought to have suffered punishment for it, but he was, nevertheless, not liable to martial law. He considered that, looking to the disturbed state Jamaica was in, to the proportion the blacks bore to the whites, and the inadequate number of soldiers on the island—looking to these facts, there never was a case which justified more the proclamation of martial law. In conclusion, his Lordship urged upon them to dismiss all feeling on the subject, and give an impartial judgment.

LONDON, Thursday Evening.—The Grand Jury at the Central Criminal Court, this morning, ignored the bills against Col. Nelson and Lieut. Brand, for the murder of George William Gordon.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

EQUITY PRACTICE — DAMAGES — JURISDICTION. — The Court of Ch. has not jurisdiction to deal with the question of damages where a plaintiff has failed to establish by proper evidence a bill for the specific performance of a contract. (Lewers v. Earl of Shaftesbury, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 135. Chan.)

COMMON LAW PRACTICE—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.—C., as executor of the mortgagee of tolls of a turnpike-road, brought an ejectment against the trustees to recover the interest, &c., due. At the trial, C. failed to prove that deceased was a mortgagee, and the defendants alleged that deceased had become bankrupt, which was admitted to be the fact. The plaintiff was nonsuited for failing to prove that the deceased was a mortgagee. A fresh Act of Parliament was obtained by the trustees, and deceased's name was inserted in the schedule among the mortgagees of the tolls. C., without paying the costs of the nonsuit, brought a fresh action against the trustees, and claimed a writ of mandamus to compel the trustees to give C. a fresh mortgage in lieu of the former one to the deceased, alleged to have been lost: Held, that the second action being ancillary to one similar to the first action of ejectment, the defendant was entitled to stay the proceedings till the costs of the former action were paid. (Cobbett v. Warner, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 150. Q. B.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—EXECUTOR.—An executor, who was also universal legatee, obtained probate of an asserted will. On being cited to show cause why it should not be revoked, he brought in the probate, but entered no appearance. The Court revoked the probate so granted, and decreed probate in common form of an earlier will to the executor therein named. (Crosby v. Noton, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 153. Prob.)

MINOR—ADMINISTRATION TO CREDITOR OF FATHER.—The Court granted administration under the 73rd section of the Probate Act of the estate of a deceased minor to a creditor of the father (also dead), the widow and executrix of the father, who had proved his will, having filed a renunciation and consent. (In the Goods of Emma Frazer, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154. Prob.)

INFANT—LEGITIMACY.—Where a suit is proposed to be instituted under the 21 & 22 Vic. c. 93, by the next friend of an infant to establish his legitimacy, the Court, following the practice of the Court of Ch., will refer it to the registrar to report whether such suit is for the benefit of the infant or not. (Chaplin v. Chaplin, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154. Div. & Mat.)

NOTICE TO QUIT—SUNDAY.—A notice of his intention to quit given by a tenant on Sunday is good and binding on him. (Sangster v. Noy, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 157. Co. C.)

LIABILITY OF SECRETARY TO AN UNREGISTERED COMPANY.—B., the secretary to a company not yet registered, gave an order signed, "B., secretary pro. tem.," for advertising the prospectus of the company. He was held to have made himself personally liable, the company being then non-existent. (Hopcroft v. Parker, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. M. Smith, J.)

CONTRIBUTORY—PRACTICE.—The Court will not remove a name from the list of contributories on the ground that there is no valid company, nor valid winding-up order, at least until the order to wind-up has been discharged. (Re Overend, Gurney, and Co., 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148. V.C.M.)

CONTRIBUTORIES—TRANSFER OF SHARES—REGISTRATION.—A transfer duly executed was left at the offices of the company. The day after, and before it was registered, the company stopped payment, and a winding-up order was made. The liquidator registered the transfer. The articles of association empowered the directors to refuse to register a transfer unless the transferee was approved by them. The Court held that the transferee was a contributory. (Ex parte Ward, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148. V.C.M.)

CANAL COMPANY—JURISDICTION.—The Court has jurisdiction, under the Companies Act, 1862, to order the winding-up of a canal company incorporated by special Act of Parliament. (Re The Wey and Arun Canal Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 150. V.C.M.)

A JUDGE AND HIS BAR "SNOWED UP."

The following, apparently extracted from a local paper, has been forwarded to us:—

The eminent judge, Mr. Justice Keating, with a portion of the talented Bar belonging to the Welsh Circuit, left the Swansea Assize on Tuesday last, for the purpose of opening the commission in Brecon on that evening. A start was made from Neath by the Neath and Brecon Railway towards Brecon, a distance of some thirty miles, over a wild and mountainous district of country, as wild and beautiful in summer as it is cold and forbidding in winter. For a while all went on "merry as a marriage bell;" but on nearing the top of the mountain, they found Old Mother Christmas in earnest feathering her geese. Such a crop of "flaky down was almost unknown to the "oldest inhabitant." The old lady, being for many ages in league with her invisible friend, got up a storm at a moment's notice on the top of the mountain, which so scattered her feathers that they flew in all directions for shelter, and those that did not find it had to "move on" very unceremoniously. Wherever there was shelter the packing was complete, so much so as to make mortals imagine there had been a universal sheep-shearing, and that all the wool was packed at Onllwyn. Whatever the cause, the effect was soon visible, by bringing the train, judge and all, to a standstill. The order was given to clear the line. "Easier said than done, my Lord," was the rejoinder of a stalwart navvy. However, they all set to work in good earnest, to help the engine out of her difficulties. The efforts were Herculean, large masses of snow were rolled over, and, gaining in their transit great accessions at every stride, they rolled like pigmy mountains into the valley below. No matter how fast or how big was the navvy's spadeful thrown over, the wind and snow defied all efforts, and filled up every nook and cranny in an instant. During this unequal combat, the judge and some Q. C.'s were in the little station of Onllwyn, close by, endeavouring to be jolly under the circumstances. Presently, a gnawing sensation was felt about the seat of the human portmanteau, and an impromptu foraging party was organized and led by a leading Q. C. of the circuit. A house or two close by was laid siege to, and in an instant surrendered to the "strong arm of the law." The Q. C. being at that moment briefless, for the want of sheepskin, seized rather voraciously a pigskin suspended from the roof, which fortunately was no "gammon." Jolly slices of ham were the reward, and in another moment were crackling before the fire. Whilst this pleasant operation was going on, the hen-roost was invaded, and whether the eggs were brought in the nest or in a wig we do not know, but the peasants declared that the "big wigs" were "awful" hungry. Things outside were now becoming serious, and and after a trial of more than four hours, a verdict was given in favour of the "defendant." It began to be whispered also that there was no chance of retreat. A council of war was called, and those learned in the law were consulted by the judge as to whether, being in the county of Brecon, they could not open the commission there. No one present knew the law on the point. The clerk was next called upon to produce the statute bearing on this complicated point. Of course the book had been left at home, so nothing remained but to make a desperate effort to return. This was done, and after many delays of cutting and sweeping, the train reached Neath again that night too late for his lordship to proceed. The next day he was obliged to go round through Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford, to reach Brecon, which we are happy to say he did in safety. A record of the adventure may still be seen on the wall of Onllwyn station. It runs as follows:—

> On that 'ere chair sat Justice Keating,
> And close by the counsel who put the meat in,
> And eggs a score boil'd soft, but if hard
> Were quickly gobbled up by Q. C. Giffard.

—Law Times.

"A COUNTY COURT JUDGE" has addressed an important letter to The Times on the subject of Imprisonment for Debt:—

SIR,—In your leading article of this day on the proposed new Bankruptcy Act, you advocate "the abolition of imprisonment for debt" in the county courts, and you add, with much apparent justice, that "it is intolerable that we should abolish imprisonment for debt in the courts of superior jurisdiction, and continue to apply it in inferior tribunals, thus making the magnitude of the penalty vary inversely as the magnitude of the offence."

As what you term "imprisonment for debt," but which might more justly be termed, "imprisonment for contempt of court," is the very backbone of the County Court system, perhaps you will allow me to say a few words in favour of its continuance.

In all debts under £20 the county court judge has the power to order that the amount proved to be owing shall be paid by instalments. The periods of payment and the amount of each instalment are fixed by the judge after due examination into the circumstances and position of the defendant. Take an every day case. John Brown, a labourer, is summoned for a debt of £3 for groceries; the debt is proved, and he is ordered to pay it off by instalments of 4s. a month, but despite the order, he does not pay. He is then summoned again to show cause why he has not paid in obedience to the order, when it is shown either that by altered circumstances he is unable to pay his instalments, or that by unaltered or improved circumstances he is able to pay them. In the former case either the amount of the instalment is diminished or the period of its payment postponed, or both; but in the latter case the same order is continued, or a heavier order is made, together with a warrant of commitment to gaol for a period of from seven to forty days, according to the requirements of the case; but in practice the warrant is never put in force so long as the instalments are paid, and except in cases of great culpability the term of imprisonment is invariably short.

I believe, sir, that I express the opinion of everyone conversant with county court practice when I say that this system works admirably well in securing payment to the creditor with the least possible amount of privation to the debtor.

The feeling of the day seems to be in favour of an extension of the county court system, but you may as well close our courts at once as to take away from us the power of imprisonment, for, that gone, the dishonest debtor would snap his fingers at the order of the judge, and the creditor, unable to distinguish beforehand the honest from the dishonest debtor, would soon cease to trouble the judge to make an order incapable of enforcement and free from punishment for breach.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND F. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

BUTLER v. BRACKEN.

Feb. 23.—Practice—Costs—Number of Counsel Allowed on Hearing of Cause Petitions.

This was a suit to set aside a deed and a judgment. The Court made a decree setting aside the deed with costs, but dismissed, without costs, so much of the petition as sought to set aside the judgment.

Lawless, Q.C., and P. M. Kelly, on behalf of the petitioner, now applied to the Court to certify that the case was a fit one for three counsel. They cited Pearce v. Lindsay (8 W. R. 383; S. C. 1 D. G., F. & J. 573), and Cloran v. Clancarty (13 Ir. Ch. Rep. 1). They referred to Beecher v. Downing, and Dinnen v. Donegal, decided by the Lord Chancellor in the present Term, in both of which cases three counsel had been allowed.

A. Duggan, for the respondent, resisted the application, contending that it had been decided in Collis v. Stuart (6 Ir. Jur. 51) that the Court had no discretion to allow the costs of more than two counsel as between party and party. It appeared also in the present case that two counsel only had been heard on behalf of the petitioner. Counsel referred to the Attorney-General v. Munro (1 McN. & G. 213).

The LORD JUSTICE OF APPEAL (who sat for the LORD CHANCELLOR) refused to certify, on the grounds that it was not a case of sufficient importance or magnitude for three counsel, and that the petitioners had failed in a very material portion of the case made by the cause petition. His Lordship stated that he had been engaged as counsel in the case of Collis v. Stuart, and that it had been argued for four days, and was a case of great difficulty. Dinnen v. Donegal, and Beecher v. Downing were also cases of importance. His Lordship at the same time expressed his satisfaction that the Lord Chancellor had put a less rigid construction on the rule than that which was acted on in the time of Lord Chancellor Brady.

Solicitor for the petitioners, T. Burke.

Solicitor for the respondent, Wm. Kelly.

COMMON PLEAS.

HILARY TERM, 1867.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

SEYMOUR v. BROOKS and OTHERS.

Jan. 31st.—Pleading—Duplicity.

This was an action for maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, obtaining a Judge's special order to hold the plaintiff to bail in an action in the Court of Exchequer, by falsely and maliciously representing to the said Judge, by means of a false affidavit, that the plaintiff was about to quit Ireland unless forthwith apprehended; and in pursuance of said order, suing out a writ of capias, and causing the plaintiff to be arrested under said writ. The plaintiff had applied to the Court to be discharged, on the ground that he was not about to quit Ireland, and his motion had been granted, with costs.

The defendants, by their first plea, admitting that they had brought the action and procured the order in the plaint mentioned by representations contained in the affidavit in plaint mentioned, said that they did not do so maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause; and that said affidavit was not false, nor did it contain any false representations as alleged.

The defendants' second plea, admitting as in first defence, said they did not do said admitted acts maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause; and that said affidavit was not false in any particular, to the knowledge and belief of the defendants, or any of them, nor did it contain any representation which was false to the knowledge and belief of the defendants, or any of them.

Plaintiff's counsel moved to set aside both pleas. The first, on the ground of duplicity or triplicity; and the second, on the additional ground that the issue tendered on the falsity of the affidavit, to the knowledge and belief of the defendants, was immaterial and was embarrassing to the plaintiff, and one on which he ought not to be obliged to join issue, as defendant's ignorance of the falsity of the affidavit or belief in its truth would not afford an answer to the action if he had acted recklessly, and formed that belief without making proper enquiry.

The Court overruled the first ground of objection, and declined to decide the further question raised by the second plea on the present motion, leaving plaintiff's counsel to demur if they were of opinion it was ill pleaded.

CONSOLIDATED CHAMBER.

Reported by R. R. KANE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Mr. JUSTICE O'BRIEN.

KING v. POE.

April 5.—Practice—Extension of time for handing in Bill of Exceptions—Jurisdiction.

E. Gibson moved that the time for handing in the bill of exceptions in this case might be extended. The action was tried before the Lord Chief Baron at the sittings after Hilary Term, and a verdict for the plaintiff had on February 13. On February 25 instructions to prepare a bill of exceptions were sent to Mr. Ryan. Before the circuit was over Mr. Ryan was obliged to go to London as counsel before a committee of the House of Commons, and had not yet returned. He was unable consequently to prepare the bill of exceptions till now. Under these circumstances E. Gibson now moved that the time might be extended till the first day of term.

H. Lover contra.

This motion should be made to the Lord Chief Baron himself, or at least to the Court of Exchequer. A judge sitting in the Consolidated Chamber has no jurisdiction to entertain it. Even if the judge sitting here has jurisdiction, the time within which application might be made has long passed. The time from the 13th to the 25th of February is unaccounted for.

E. Gibson, in reply, was stopped as to question of jurisdiction. As to delay counsel are not bound to settle bills of exception on circuit.

O'BRIEN, J.—I am not disposed to agree to this motion. I shall, however, consult the Chief Baron as to whether he considers that the justice of the case requires that the time should be extended.

Later in the day, on the matter being mentioned,

O'BRIEN, J.—I have consulted the Lord Chief Baron. He agrees with me that the exceptions being mere points of law, can be as well discussed on new trial motion.

There are two advantages in a bill of exceptions; first, that there is an appeal even if the Court be unanimous; second, that advantage can be taken of every point in a bill of exceptions, even though not raised below.

As to the first it is easily provided for; and the second, a party who asks a favour of the Court can hardly ask for.

The affidavit here is clearly insufficient by not accounting for the interval between the 12th and 27th of February.

The order I shall make is, no rule on motion, defendant to have leave to move for a new trial, with leave to appeal, even if the Court should be unanimous, and defendant to pay plaintiff's costs of this motion.

G. Bolton, attorney for defendant.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before BERWICK, J.

Re THE DUBLIN CATTLE MARKET COMPANY.

April, 1867.—Winding up of Joint Stock Company—Duties of Official Liquidator and Official Assignee—Payment of Dividends.

In the winding up of a Joint Stock Company in Bankruptcy, a considerable sum of money is declared to be due to the former Solicitor of the Company, as a dividend on foot of his claim, and he gives to several creditors to whom he is himself indebted orders on the Official Liquidator in whose hands the fund is, for payment of those creditors; the Court will consider that having such a duty cast upon either the Official Assignee or Official Liquidator, will be foreign to the legitimate purposes for which they were appointed; and as one of the parties to whom such orders were given filed a cause petition in Chancery to compel the Official Liquidator to pay it, the Court will refuse the application, and direct the Official Liquidator to retain the funds until further order.

This case came before the Court in the form of application made by several Creditors of Mr. James Malley, Solicitor for the promoters of the Cattle Market Company, to whom that gentleman had given orders on the official liquidator. to pay certain sums of money out of dividends to which he was declared entitled, and who now sought to obtain orders of the Court directing the official liquidator to pay the amount of those claims.

P. Martin was for the official liquidator.

Kernan, Q.C., for the European Bank.

Carton for Mr. David M'Birney, and Leech for Mr. David Gaussen. The facts fully appear in the following very elaborate judgment:—

BERWICK, J.—This case comes before me on notice of Mr. David Gaussen, asking the Court to pay to him out of the moneys of Mr. James Malley, who, as a creditor of this company, has been declared entitled to a dividend which is now in the hands of the official liquidator, two sums of £200 and £210, or that an order shall be made that no part of the funds to which the said James Malley is or shall be so entitled be paid out without notice to him. This application is grounded on two orders in favour of Mr. Gaussen, signed by Mr. Malley, and directed to and lodged with the official liquidator, requiring him to honour the drafts of Mr. Gaussen to those amounts, dated, respectively, 1st and 30th December, 1865. This application has been resisted on the part of Mr. Malley on the grounds stated in an affidavi of the 16th January, 1867, to which it is unnecessary for me further to refer. At the time of hearing this application, several other notices were moved on part of other creditors of Mr. James Malley, in particular one on part of Mr. John Wallis, acting under power of attorney, founded on orders of a similar nature, each claiming to be paid the amount of their orders, and requiring to be paid according to the priorities in which those orders were lodged with the official liquidator. Applications of a similar nature were made at the same time by certain creditors of Mr. James Malley, who put forward certain equitable rights which they considered entitled them to attach the said fund in the hands of the official liquidators, according to certain priorities; and I am told by the official liquidator that other parties whose cases have not yet been brought before me, have required from him payment of orders of a like description; all these several claims amounting to much more than the whole dividend to which Mr. Malley is entitled, and of course, therefore, the official liquidator, being placed in the greatest embarrassment to know how to act, and he who is only anxious to discharge his duty in such a manner as not to be involved in any personal responsibility by deciding these disputed claims, has called on the Court to define his duties in cases like the present, and to give such directions as will save him harmless and free from the burden of duties foreign to the purposes for which he has been appointed, the discharge of which would seriously interfere with the legitimate business of his office. I should have been perfectly willing to have heard and decided the relative claims of the several parties interested in the distribution of the fund, although strictly speaking, it may be outside the duties devolved on me and the administration of this estate, were it not that it appears that one party (the European Bank) to whom a similar order was given by Mr. James Malley, has filed a cause petition in the Court of Chancery to establish his claim as an equitable charge on this fund, to which he has made the official liquidator a party, and I conceive that pending this proceeding, I ought to make no order which might affect the fund on which that charge is sought to be established. However, as it is the wish of this Court to save to all parties, who are interested in the funds realized therein, both expense and time in establishing their right, I offered to hear and dispose of all these conflicting claims in case all parties, including the European Bank, submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court; but as the European Bank have not adopted that course, I shall not make any order on any of the motions pending before me, save by directing that the fund shall not be paid over by the official liquidator without further order of the Court, and I shall authorize him to appear to the cause petition and inform the Court of the sum now in his hands belonging to Mr. James Malley, the various conflicting claims made on him by creditors of Mr. Malley, and to act as either the Court of Chancery or this Court shall direct. I might content myself with this simple statement of what I purpose for the present to do were it not that these applications to the Court have been grounded and pressed on me very much, if not mainly, on the presumption that it is the duty of the official assignees and official liquidators of this Court to recognize and act on all orders for payment directed to them by creditors who have been declared entitled to dividends on the estates entrusted to their management, and that they will be held responsible for refusing to do so, and I am informed by the official liquidator, who happens also to be the official assignee in bankruptcy of this court, that unless the Court shall state definitively what it considers the limit of his duty in similar cases, he will require to meet the additional duty sought thus to be imposed upon him by increasing the staff and expense of his office, and will be embarrassed by inquiries quite foreign to the purposes for which he has been appointed. Now this is a matter on which I should not allow any doubt to exist which it is in my power to solve, and I therefore make the following additional observations. The question to which my attention is thus called is simply this:—A creditor of a bankrupt estate, which is either under the ordinary jurisdiction of, or has been sent to be wound up by this Court, being declared entitled to a dividend on the amount of his debt, or anticipates that he will be so, and being himself indebted to other parties, gives to one or more of his creditors orders on the official assignee or the official liquidator for the payment of certain sums out of the moneys to which he is or shall be so entitled, and it is said that the service of these orders on the official assignee, or official liquidator imposes a duty on these officers which they must attend to at their peril. Now, in my opinion, neither in the case of an official assignee or of an official liquidator is any such duty imposed on them, and I conceive that the adoption of any such principle would be attended with the most injurious consequences to the due discharge of their legitimate duties, namely, the due administration of the estates placed under the jurisdiction of this Court. As to the official assignee, it is perfectly established that he is merely a ministerial officer of this Court, acting under and bound by its directions and the General Orders of the Court, and only responsible to the Court for what he does in discharge of his duties. By sec. 59 of the Act under which he is appointed, he shall be subject to such rules, and act in such manner, and perform such duties as may from time to time be directed by any General Order of the Court. By sec. 65, no official assignee shall be personally liable in respect of his receipt in his official capacity of any moneys, provided he shall not have dealt with the same otherwise than as directed by the Court, or required by the Act, or any order made in pursuance of this Act. By sec. 66, if an official assignee is made defendant in any action in respect of such moneys, a Judge of the Court in which such action is brought may, on an affidavit of the facts, stay or set aside the proceedings in such action so far as the assignee is concerned. By sec 277, the Assignees shall be subject to the orders of the Court in their conduct as Assignees. By sec. 284, if persons discharged out of court without an adjudication being made by the Court, all acts done before the discharge by the Assignees acting by authority of the Court, shall be good and valid. And by sec. 293, no action for any dividend shall be brought against any assignee, but if the assignee shall refuse to pay any such dividend, the Court may order payment thereof with interest for the time it shall have been withheld, and may also order the costs of the application." Thus the duties and responsibilities of the official assignees in bankruptcy are clearly defined; and on reference to the General Orders of the Court, it will be found that he is to pay the dividends which shall from time to time be declared, by a check for the exact amount of the dividend so declared, either to the creditor himself, or to any person duly authorized under his hand to receive his dividend cheque, who shall produce such securities, if any, as the creditor exhibited at time of his proof.

It, therefore, is plain that the official assignee can recognize no other parties than those thus pointed out by the General Orders, and unless stopped by an order of the Court, must hand over the dividend cheque to one or other of these parties, and I have no doubt that the Legislature intended to confine his duties to the realizing of the assets of the bankrupt estate, and distribute them among the creditors of that estate, and that it never was intended that he should be embarrassed with any claims or equities affecting the parties entitled to those dividends.

The reasoning of the Judges in the cases of Boyse v. Simpson, 8 Ir. Law Rep. 523, and Gilmour v. Simpson, in the Appendix to the same volume, show very clearly this to be the principle which they adopted; for although that case merely decided that a dividend in the hands of an official assignee could not be attached by a garnishee order under the Com. Law Procedure Act, yet the reasoning is applicable to the general question which I am now discussing. It is, however, said that an official liquidator, in the case of a joint stock company in course of being wound up under the jurisdiction of this Court, is in a different position, and subject to greater responsibilities than an official assignee; but whatever other differences may exist between the course of procedure or the principles by which the Court may be governed in cases of winding up of joint stock companies from those in bankruptcy, yet I think that an official liquidator, once appointed by the Court, must be considered in an analogous position to that of an official assignee, and is only subject to the orders of the Court which he is bound to obey and by which he is limited, and that it would militate against the due discharge of his office, and interfere with his proper duties to throw on him any other duties than those prescribed by the rules of court. I was at first inclined to doubt the correctness of this view by a reference to the case of ex parte Turner in re Warwick and Worcester Railway Company, 2 De Gex Fisher and Jones, in which it appears to have been decided that a sum of money in the hands of the official managers of the company for the payment of a debt due by the company to a creditor might be attached under the garnishee clauses of the Com. Law Proc. Act, but in looking to the report of that case in the 30 L. I., 1861, p. 92, it will be found that it was stated, on the hearing of that application, that the officer of the court refused the common garnishee order, alleging that the judges had refused to grant them against official managers of companies, and the Judge (Willes), who made the Garnishee order in that case, distinctly refused to make any order which could be enforced against the official manager, who, he stated, "was acting under the order of the Court of Chancery," and he gave the order to the judgment creditor only against the company who owed the debt which was sought to be attached, directing that no step should be taken without an application to the Court of Chancery, and the party who obtained it undertook not to act in any way except under the order of the Court of Chancery, and that Court then heard the claim of the parties and distributed the fund according to its own equitable principles and original jurisdiction. I conceive, therefore, that no duty is imposed or ought to be imposed on either the official assignee or official liquidator to decide or act upon claims of this irregular description which are wholly outside of their ordinary duties and of the objects for which they are appointed, and that wherever orders or claims of this description are presented to or made on them, they should inform the parties that they cannot recognize any such demand without an order of this Court; and that unless such order be obtained, the dividends which shall come to their hands for payment of the creditors of the bankrupt estates, will be paid when struck to the parties designated by the General Orders of the Court, and to none others. In saying this, however, I am not to be understood as intimating to them any opinion that they are not bound to give to the party who holds any such orders, direction, or equitable charge, full and reasonable time to apply to this Court for its assistance, which, as I have already said, the Court will be prepared and willing to exercise in proper cases. Were it not for the reason I have already stated, I should have disposed of these claims at once without involving them in the expense of a process in Chancery, but under the circumstances of the case I do not feel at liberty now to make any order, and I therefore now simply direct that the liquidator shall suspend the payment of the dividend in his hands struck in favour of Mr. Malley till further order of this Court.

CIRCUIT CASES.

CONNAUGHT CIRCUIT.

MAYO ASSIZES—6th March, 1867.

Reported by OLIVER J. BURKE, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

SIR ROBERT LYNCH BLOSSE v. THE MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Before CHRISTIAN, J.

Plantation of Timber Alleged to have been Set on Fire by Sparks Issuing from a Passing Engine.

This was an appeal taken by Sir Robert Lynch Blosse from a dismiss of the Chairman of the County of Mayo. The Civil Bill was for £15 damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendants, as common carriers and owners of the railway carriages plying between the towns of Castlebar and Athlone on the 19th of May last, when passing through the townland of Athnavilla, in said county, negligently and incautiously setting fire to the plantation of the plaintiff, which was then growing on said lands, and thereby damaged and consumed the same, by reason whereof the plaintiff suffered damage, &c.

Evidence was then given in support of the plaintiff's case:—William Ruth, a shepherd, was keeping watch over his flocks when the train came up; before it passed the timber was not on fire; after it passed it was all in a blaze, though neither did he nor did any other witness see the sparks flying from the engine.

Concannon, LL.D., for the plaintiff, cited Pigot v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, with a view to show that if sparks issued from the engine it was prima facie evidence of negligence. There should have been some method of intercepting flying sparks, so as to prevent timber, hay stacks, and crops along the line from being destroyed. The Court will presume that the plantation, which was safe and sound before the train had passed, and which in a moment after was in flames, must have been set on fire by the passing engine.

Carleton, Q.C., for the defendants—It will be impossible to work railways if this dismiss be reversed. The Court will not presume that it was the engine ignited the plantation, and nobody saw a single spark flying from the chimney.

CHRISTIAN, J., could not, in the absence of evidence, arrive at the conclusion that it was the engine set the timber on fire; and even if it did so appear, the Legislature having sanctioned the use of locomotives, and the locomotives requiring fire to propel them, he was not at all satisfied that sparks flying from the engine (which, perhaps, no mechanical contrivance could intercept), would necessarily imply negligence. There was a very modern case on that subject, the name of which his Lordship did not at that moment remember. It was not, however, necessary that he should consider whether or not the flying of sparks from an engine going at a high velocity implied negligence, inasmuch as there was no evidence here that any sparks did fly. That being so, the dismiss below must be affirmed

Carleton, Q.C., asked for costs, and the expense of his witnesses, which were granted.

Concannon, LL.D., instructed by Myles Jordan, appeared for the plaintiff.

Carleton, Q.C., instructed by W. P. Kirwan, appeared for the defendants.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

On Insanity and the Criminal Responsibility of the Insane. By THOMAS MORE MADDEN, M.R.I.A., Licentiate of the College of Physicians in Ireland; Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, &c.

The law of lunacy is confessedly in a very unsatisfactory state; and in the Report of the Capital Punishment Commission, presented to Parliament last session, we find the necessity for an inquiry into this branch of jurisprudence thus urged:—"There are other questions," observe the commissioners, "of great importance upon which we have taken evidence, viz. :—(1). The propriety of allowing an appeal on matters of fact to a court of law in criminal cases. (2). The mode in which the Crown is advised to exercise the prerogative of mercy by the Home Secretary. (3). The present state of the law as to the nature and degree of insanity, which is held to relieve the accused from penal responsibility in criminal cases. It is obvious that these difficult questions are not confined to capital crimes only, but pervade the whole administration of criminal law. They therefore require a more general and comprehensive treatment than the terms of the commission under which we act will admit. We think, therefore, that while we should not be justified in making any recommendation to your Majesty on any of these points, we should fail in our duty did we not humbly solicit your Majesty's attention to them as requiring further investigation."

Although we do not coincide with the writer's views on some of the points he discusses, we must admit that he evinces considerable research on a subject of great difficulty. Dr. Madden enters at some length into the history of the law of lunacy, and gives the opinions of eminent judges on the subject. We need not follow him into this enquiry; the law being clearly pointed out in the reply of the judges to the queries of the Lords, the reply to the 2nd question being in these words:—"That before a plea of insanity should be allowed, undoubted evidence ought to be adduced that the accused was of diseased mind, and that at the time he committed the act he was not conscious of right or wrong." . . "Every person was supposed to know what the law was, and therefore nothing could justify a wrong act, except it was clearly proved the party did not know right from wrong. If that was not satisfactorily proved the accused was liable to punishment." Dr. Madden argues very forcibly against the justice of this law. He says:—"This 'knowledge of right and wrong' which is made the legal proof of criminal responsibility is, perhaps, as fallacious a test of mental sanity as could well be devised. The majority of the inmates of our lunatic asylums have, to a certain extent, the power of distinguishing between right and wrong. For they often adopt precautions and practise concealment when doing what they know to be wrong, clearly showing that they are aware of the impropriety of their conduct, and are anxious to escape its punishment. And yet such patients may in other respects be obviously insane."

The writer, in his pamphlet, objects strongly to the phrase "moral insanity," and proposes that for "medico-legal purposes unsoundness of mind, not including mental deficiency or idiocy, should be divided only into the two classes of general and partial insanity, the latter being the only one in which medical evidence is needed in cases of crime ascribed to insanity." The alterations in the law of lunacy suggested by Dr. Madden are, in the first place, the adoption of a principle of the French penal code, the 64th article of which enacts:—"Il n'y a ni crime ni delit, lorsque le prévenu etait en etât de démence au temps de l'action." A similar law prevails in the State of New York. "No act," says this statute, "done by a person in a state of insanity can be punished as an offence, and no insane person can be tried or sentenced to any punishment for any crime committed in that state."

Digitized by Google

Speaking of the present mode of determining the question of insanity, when it is raised in the course of a criminal trial, he observes :—"No rational man would be likely to take the opinion of a jury of grocers, publicans, or tallow chandlers, as to whether his lungs were sound, or his watch in order, in preference to those of a physician or a watchmaker. And yet a question far nicer than either of those, the question of a man's healthy or diseased psychological condition—of all scientific investigations the most delicate and difficult—is, by the laws of England, left to the decision of such persons, assisted by a judge whose knowledge, however extensive it may be in legal matters, is hardly, if at all greater than theirs on any department of medical science."

To meet these difficulties Dr. More Madden suggests that medical "assessors in lunacy should be appointed to fulfil functions analogous to those of the nautical assessors in maritime cases. This would to a great extent do away with the necessity for the examination of numerous witnesses in lunacy cases, save the public time, and would avoid the perplexing contradictions of conflicting professional opinions."

This suggestion has already been fully discussed, and we wish to refer Dr. Madden, and the readers of his pamphlet, to articles contained in a recent number of the Law Magazine on the subject of the "Criminal Responsibility of the Insane," and on the proposed remedy of medical assessors. We also direct their attention to a paper on the subject of "Responsibility and Mental Competence," by F. Fitzjames Stephens (barrister), 1864.—Law Magazine, Vol. 20 (1865-6). "Court of Enquiry into the Medical Evidence of Crime." A paper by Robert Stuart, Esq., read at the general meeting of the society for the amendment of the law, held on the 22nd of June, 1863.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT."

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

SIR,—Having dealt with that part of the letter of "Leguleius," which is in the nature of a "preamble" to the measure which he would commend to your professional readers, I will now, with your permission, enter upon the discussion of the system which is the subject of his laudatory remarks.

I think I can scarcely be mistaken if I take your correspondent as a high authority upon the subject on which he writes. He has evidently made it his particular study, and I am sure is most competent, from his ability and experience, to become an apologist of the measure. I may say further that one who is so enamoured of the system will, no doubt, be the best authority upon its charms and virtues. First among these, in your correspondent's opinion, is the separate account, as it were, opened in the Record for each Title, so that, in the words of your correspondent, which he has italicized to give them greater importance, "a search shall disclose all that affects the Estate, and nothing but what does affect the Estate." "In these words," he tells us, "are summed up the essence of the Record of Title." We may therefore fairly assume that this peculiarity constitutes its chief attraction. Now, what is the great merit of this plan as contrasted with the present system of Title? In the present system an abstract of Title is presented to the solicitor for purchaser or lender, which contains nothing but what affects the estate to be sold or mortgaged, and this is offered as the true history of the dealings with the lands. To test its accuracy, searches are made in the Registry of Deeds Office, and if the abstract has been accurately prepared, nothing appears upon the search beyond what is found in the abstract, save some few "general charges," which, on being examined, are at once seen not to affect the lands. Your professional readers know that the routine I have mentioned is part of their every-day experience, and that the mountain of difficulties which the advocates of Record of Title speak of are chiefly in their own imagination.

The great simplicity of the Record of Title, which your correspondent seems to attach so much weight to, will just continue so long as the transactions and dealings with the estate remain simple; but once they depart from that simplicity, the Record will become as complicated as the same title would become under the Registry of Deeds system, and will completely baffle unprofessional intelligence to unravel or explain it. Let any one examine the "Model Records" contained in the "Report of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Registration of Title Association," in which, of course, any really knotty and difficult titles are avoided, and he will readily see that the Record of Title may become as difficult to understand as a complicated abstract of title under the old system. In fact, the unfitness of the system for everything but the very simplest transactions is evidenced by the letter of your correspondent; for he meets the objection that it becomes "complicated by trusts and limitations," by saying to the owner of land so objecting, "You are not required to encumber the Record with trusts in any case. The Act merely allows you to do so." This may seem to your correspondent a highly satisfactory answer, but I doubt exceedingly if, to an owner intending matrimony, and desirous to make a provision by settlement for his wife and the children of the marriage, it would be considered equally so. However, it is an admission of a fact which is of the greatest importance in respect to this Record of Title system, namely, that it is totally unfit for lands, or charges upon lands, which are ever to be put into settlement. This was the opinion, as Leguleius admits, of one of the ablest real property lawyers we ever had in this country, namely, the late Judge Hargreave, and who would have excluded all trusts from the Record. The landowners, however, as your correspondent states, and who knew their own requirements, very naturally objected to this arrangement, which would have had the effect of destroying one of the greatest advantages of landed, over funded property, namely, its safety as a security for trust purposes. This unsuitability of the Record of Title for property, that is ever to be the subject of settlement (and let any one of experience in title say what property is not so subject in the course of time), is so candidly admitted in the last paragraph of your correspondent's second letter, that it is unnecessary for me to dwell longer on that branch of the subject. The Record of Title, he says, "can only claim to facilitate very greatly all transfers, charges, leases, and other usual dealings with property, which is not in settlement, or which, being in settlement, is intended to be capable of being sold." If, therefore, you want the property you have settled for the benefit of your children to be kept for them, and not sold, you will, of course, not have it recorded.

The next ground of objection to the Record of Title, and which was very strongly pressed by the Council of the Law Society in their memorial against the measure, is the danger of clothing every act under its provisions with an indefeasible character. This principle of indefeasibility applies to erroneous as well as to correct entries upon the Record. That errors of importance may occur is evident, as in your correspondent's first letter he says :—"An incidental benefit of no slight importance is conferred by the existence and powers of the Landed Estates' Court, which is enabled by the Act to correct any error that may happen to be discovered in the Record of Title." But suppose this error did not "happen to be discovered" until after the mischief had been done, and it had been acted on as an infallible Record, and the property dealt with accordingly, what would be the use of correcting the Record then? In the present system there is no necessity for correcting any mistake of the kind, as the deeds registered in the Registry of Deeds Office have not an indefeasible character, and consequently if the mortgage or judgment of A is registered against the estate of B, the latter is nothing the worse for it, as it is not a bit more a charge upon his estate on that account. Not so in the Record of Title. There, a similar registry or recording would saddle B's estate with an indefeasible charge which may not "happen to be discovered" to be erroneous, until after it has been assigned to a "bona fide" purchaser for value, who, under the Act, must be protected at the expense of the unfortunate owner whose estate is thus erroneously charged.

Another objection felt by many to the Record of Title system is, that once a proprietor puts his estate into it, it is practically in the Landed Estates' Court as much as if it were going to be sold. It is subject to the rules and orders of the Court for the Record of Title, and every step taken is liable, should there be any difficulty in it, to be brought before a Judge of the Court for adjudication. In the case of deaths, too, public notices are required, and proceedings have to be taken, which are quite unnecessary and unknown in ordinary dealings with real estate, so that if a recorded owner really appreciates his position, he must have the uncomfortable consciousness that he is always a suitor "in Court."

Admittedly there have been comparatively few purchases recorded, but how are we to account for even those few having been put on the record? Simply by the exceedingly unfair clause in the Act which declares every purchase in the Landed Estates' Court recorded unless the purchaser shall, within seven days from the date of his conveyance, protest against being put on the Record. There could not be stronger proof of the infirmity of the whole system, and the consciousness of the promoters of such infirmity, than the insertion in the statute of this trap to catch purchasers. If they could trust to the merits of the system why not leave it to those who desire to be recorded to say so. Your correspondent's second letter contains, it seems to me, an exceedingly unfair charge against solicitors in respect to this matter, and one which it is very easy to displace. He says that when purchasers intend to record their estates they take out duplicate conveyances, and hence that the fact of about one hundred duplicate conveyances having been taken out, is "incontrovertible evidence" of a deliberate intention on the part of purchasers to take advantage of the Act. The insinuation here is evidently that purchasers so intending have been dissuaded by their solicitors, who ought, in that case, your correspondent reprovingly tells us, to supply their clients with well-defined, tangible objections against the system. Now the fact is perfectly well known to every solicitor of experience that duplicate conveyances were frequently taken out of the Landed Estates' Court before the Record of Title had existence, being required for various purposes, but most commonly to hand to a mortgagee who may be lending part of the amount with which the estate is purchased. So much for your correspondent's "incontrovertible evidence." As to the insinuation that solicitors, who advise their clients against recording, do not give well-defined, tangible reasons for such advice, I can only say that it is a gratuitous assumption on the part of your correspondent, for which I am not aware of any foundation. May I not as justly say that those who advise their clients to record, should give equally good reasons for that advice. The truth is, that many of the cases recorded are put upon the Record because the solicitor for the purchaser, not having looked into the question, hesitates to pass an opinion pro or con, and meantime the client is recorded by operation of the trap clause I have referred to. With the assistance of this very ingenious contrivance, I have no doubt that for some time to come there will be occasional purchasers caught and caged in the Record of Title, but I do not believe that a system of registry of real property, which admittedly fails when applied to trusts and limitations, and which is unequal to transactions of a complicated nature, while it is dangerous in those of a more simple character, will ever be accepted by the Jolicitors of Ireland, the friendly recommendations of your clever correspondent notwithstanding.

I remain, Sir, your obedient Servant,
HENRY T. DIX.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

The preliminary examination, pursuant to the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act (Ireland), 1866, for Easter Term, of candidates, seeking to be bound apprentices, commenced yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, in the Solicitors' Hall. Eighteen candidates presented themselves, four of whom had been postponed at former examinations.

The candidates received printed papers of questions in history, geography, arithmetic, and book-keeping, to which they were expected to give written answers.

The examination closed for the day at half-past 3 o'clock, and will be resumed on this (Saturday) morning, when the candidates will be examined in writing from dictation, composition, and vivâ voce in Latin.

Candidates are to attend at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, 17th inst., to hear decision of Court of Examiners.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

The final examination of candidates seeking admission as attorneys will be held at the Solicitors' Hall on Monday, the 15th, and Tuesday, the 16th inst., commencing each day at 11 o'clock.

Seven gentlemen have applied for liberty to present themselves at the examination. Candidates will on the first day receive printed papers of questions on common law, real property, and equity, to which they will be expected to give answers in writing, and on the second day will be examined vivâ voce in the practice of the Court of Chancery, the practice of the Common Law Courts, Landed Estates' Court, and Probate Court, Bankruptcy and Insolvency, and Conveyancing.

Candidates to attend at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, 17th inst., to hear decision of Court of Examiners.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

PURSUANT to the Decretal Orders made in this Matter, bearing date respectively the 29th day of June, 1865, and 12th May, 1866, I will, on THURSDAY, the 3rd day of MAY next, at the hour of One o'clock in the afternoon of said day at my Court, Four Courts, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin, SET UP and SELL BY PUBLIC AUCTION, to the highest and best bidder, all the Estate and Interest of MICHAEL BRENNAN, deceased, and of PATRICK BRENNAN, his eldest son and heir-at-law, also deceased, of and in all that and those the Concerns, formerly called Saint Francis' Abbey Distillery, with the Malthouse, Stores, Brewhouse, Forge, Stables, Garden, Yard, and Water Courses thereunto belonging, together with the Distillery and other Utensils, Vessels, and Implements, mentioned in a Schedule annexed to an under-lease of said Premises, from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, Esq., dated the 25th day of April, 1827; and also all that and those the Dwelling-house, Alehouse, Brewery, and Malthouse Stores, Stables, Offices, Gardens adjoining, together with that part of said Brewery Concerns adjoining to, and formerly part of Coals-yard of said Brewery, called in the under-lease the Coal-yard, all which Premises are now held by said Edmond Smithwick, under two leases., one thereof from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, dated 25th April, 1827, and the other from Patrick Brennan, deceased, to said Edmond Smithwick, dated 12th August, 1833, for the respective terms of 999 years, as set out in the Rental of said Premises, and are now known as Saint Francis' Abbey Brewery, and are situate in the City of Kilkenny, or a competent part thereof, for the purposes in said Decretal orders mentioned.

Dated this 21st day of January, 1867.

EDWARD LITTON.

These premises are held under two distinct leases, for lives renewable for ever, one of them dated the 5th of July, 1753, from William Archbold, and Anne, his, wife, to Ambrose Evans, and the other of said leases, dated 21st July, 1780, from the Rev. George Evans, to Edward Evans, which has been converted into a fee-farm grant. The entire premises now produce a profit rent of £252 8s. 4d., as more particularly set out in the rental thereof. The present tenant has expended several thousand pounds on permanent improvements on the premises, which are now in perfect order, and amongst the most thriving establishments in the south of Ireland.

To small capitalists, whose object is a well-secured income, with a safe and adequate return for capital, these premises offer an investment rarely to be met with.

For Rentals and further particulars application to be made to
HENRY THOMAS DIX, Esq., Solicitor for Respondents, BRENNANS, No. 9, Upper Gardiner-street;
Messrs. CHARLES GAUSSEN & SON, No. 12, Gardiner's-place;
HENRY FALLS, Esq., No. 7, Lower Dominick-street;
RICHARD BAILLIE, Esq., No. 116, Lower Baggot-street, Solicitor for Creditors; or to ANDREW CHRISTOPHER PALLES, Solicitor for Petitioner, having Carriage of Sale, No. 12, Belvidere-place, Dublin; or to JOHN M'CREERY, Esq., Larch Hill, Kilkenny, the Receiver.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, APRIL 20, 1867.

A CORRESPONDENT, in our publication of the 6th inst., drew attention to a very important subject, and one which was sometime since deemed worthy of being made the theme for a leader in The Times—namely, the amalgamation of the two legal professions. While desirous to open our columns to the expression of every shade of opinion upon topics of common interest we feel bound in this matter to express our entire dissent from the opinion of our correspondent. We do not believe that any benefit would accrue from such an amalgamation of the professions, whose separate existence is the result of convenience in the administration of the law. There can be no doubt that originally there was no division of the legal profession, and that the "attorney" was the delegate of his client in Court as the advocate, as well as in the other duties which now more particularly belong to that profession; but as the difficulties of advocacy increased, and the learning and study necessary for its efficient discharge became more exacting, it was found impossible any longer to combine the two classes of duties. It would, however, be a great mistake to suppose that because one of the branches into which the profession of a lawyer became thus divided requires deeper learning and has more eclat associated with it, therefore the functions of the other branch are unimportant, and require neither education nor ability; on the contrary, we believe that there is every occasion for the exercise of both, in the profession of a solicitor; and we do not hesitate to say that there is no profession in which a good liberal education is more serviceable, not only to the members of it but to the public, whose interests are confided to them. We deny, that there is anything either arbitrary or unreasonable in the distinction between the two legal professions, and we are quite at a loss to understand how any really practical man can be of any other opinion. Will any solicitor in full practice hesitate to admit that his professional avocations totally preclude his entering upon anything like a deep course of legal study, and prevent his becoming familiar with the current decisions of the day, yet without the information thus to be acquired how is it possible for him to do justice to his client as an advocate in Court, unless his opponent be as ignorant as himself? True, he may be gifted with fluency of speech, or readiness of reply; but these qualifications are but poor substitutes for a thorough knowledge of the principles of law in all their technicalities and refinements, and an acquaintance with the ever-multiplying decisions which govern its administration.

It is true, that in the United States, and also in some of our own colonies, there is but one legal profession, but practically there is there the same division of labour which separates it into two branches at home; and while one partner of a legal firm manages the conveyancing and office business, the other devotes himself entirely to Court practice and the duties of an advocate. Our correspondent speaks of the disadvantages of the present system by which the instructions received directly by the attorney from the client have to be "distilled through another brain" than that to which they are just communicated. We believe, on the contrary, that experience confirms the utility of this very system of "distillation" (which, however, takes place in the brain of the solicitor and not in the brain of the barrister), and that the interests of the suitor benefit materially by the process. There is no part of the responsible duty of a solicitor in which there is greater room for judgment and intelligence than in instructing counsel. The materials for that purpose, as he receives them from his client, are often crude and confused, crowded with facts of no value, incumbered with statements totally irrelevant to the real issue. It is for his acumen and experience to disentangle these confused materials, to disembarrass the case of what is useless, and by a careful and methodical arrangement of the data so received to present the matter to counsel in such a way as to make his advocacy most available. We remember, a few years ago, an old gentleman, who had much experience as a suitor, advising a friend who was about to enter upon legal proceedings, above all things to take care who was his attorney; for he added—"My experience tells me that in legal proceedings the best part of the battle is fought in the attorney's office." We have every reason to believe that he was right in that opinion, and that all the learning and eloquence of the Irish Bar could not save a case in which the attorney's part of the work was negligently or ignorantly performed.

When so much admittedly depends upon the attorney —on his talent, his experience, and his integrity—we cannot for a moment assent to the opinion put forward by our correspondent, that the present system is degrading to the profession. It certainly throws upon the attorney important and responsible duties, in the faithful discharge of which he has not the encouragement of public applause, but we feel very sure that there are many who can work well and zealously without that stimulus, however agreeable it may be to receive it. Solicitors have to learn a lesson in the practice of their profession which many out of it might equally profit by, namely, that duty should have some higher motive for its performance than public acknowledgment. Every day's experience brings them into that trial of principle which arises from a conflict of their own interests with those of their clients; when to advise one course is more profitable, and to advise the other is more honest. Beyond the general effect of a good character, the solicitor passes through such crucial ordeals as this unnoticed and uncommended; but we do not believe that, in the judgment of those whose opinion is worth having, his path is less honourable because less brilliant and distinguished than that of the other legal profession. That he has far more confided to him, and that he is placed in a position far more trying to principle, must be admitted; and we think, therefore, that so far as he discharges the duties of his profession faithfully, he is entitled to as much honour and respect as those who have never been placed in a position of such responsibility.

We need scarcely say that we do not mean to disparage the profession of the Bar by these observations. Far from it. On the contrary, we desire to uphold its rightful dignity, and rejoice at whatever is calculated to elevate the tone of that profession to a standard worthy of the great names that have shed a lustre upon its ranks; but we desire clearly and plainly to repudiate the opinion that the present relation of the Bar to the Attornies of Ireland is in any way degrading to the latter body, as our correspondent seems to think.

Reason, convenience, and utility originally led to the present division of the legal professions in this country, and will, we have no doubt, in time effect a similar separation in the colonies and the United States. For our part we should be sorry to see a division of labour abolished which has worked so well for the administration of the law in this country, and the character of both branches of the legal profession. We neither desire to see the barrister encroach on the practical and responsible duties of the solicitor, nor the solicitor encroach on the functions of the more learned legal profession.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE RIGHT HON. FRANCIS BLACKBURNE.

A meeting of the Bar was held on Wednesday, at three o'clock, in the Library of the Four Courts, for the purpose of taking measures to present an address from the Bar to the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, late Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Henderson, Q.C.

The Solicitor-General moved that an address be presented to Mr. Blackburne, of whom he spoke in the most complimentary terms.

The Rt. Hon. James Lawson, Q.C., M.P., seconded the resolution, and paid a warm tribute to the merits of the right hon. gentleman.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. Pennefather, Q.C., then moved the appointment of a committee to prepare the address, to be submitted to a future meeting of the Bar.

Mr. Heron, Q.C., seconded the resolution, which was also adopted unanimously.

The following are the names of the committee:—The Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Lawson, Q.C., M.P.; Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Q.C., M.P.; Mr. Sherlock, Q.C.; Mr. Leslie, Q.C.; the Hon. David Plunket; and Mr. G. Fitzgibbon.

The meeting then adjourned to the 24th inst.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Some short time since a movement was set on foot amongst the members of the Incorporated Society of Attorneys and Solicitors, Ireland, to give expression to the feelings of esteem and respect entertained for the President of that Society, Richard J. T. Orpen, Esq., not alone by its members, but by the profession generally. It affords us much pleasure to give publicity to the great success attendant upon this measure. The decision arrived at by the committee to whom the question was referred was, that the most suitable manner in which to carry out the wishes of the promoters, would be to place in the Solicitors' Hall a portrait of the President. Mr. Catterson Smith was the artist selected, and his efforts have been eminently successful, and have added fresh laurels to his fame. The portrait is an admirable likeness, and an excellent work of art.

There was a large attendance of the profession and the public at the Solicitors' Hall on Wednesday last, to hear the declaration of the report of the Court of Examiners appointed to conduct the late examination, when Mr. Orpen took advantage of the occasion to thank the various members who interested themselves in paying him the compliment, to which he is so justly entitled.

Mr Orpen, having observed that the portrait had been placed in the Solicitors' Hall, said that he should be wanting in gratitude to the profession if he let the opportunity pass without endeavouring to express the feelings with which he was influenced by their kindness to him at all times; that he was always anxious to promote the best interests of the profession; and that this new proof of their appreciation of his services would (if anything could) be an additional stimulus to his exertions.

Amongst our reports will be found two cases from Petty Sessions. If the regular practitioners in the Courts of Petty and Quarter Sessions would furnish us with Notes of any cases likely to be of use to the profession, they would supply a want that is frequently felt and complained of. With great respect to the justices who decided the case of Cinnamon v. Farley, their decision was clearly wrong; and the Court of Queen's Bench, if resorted to, will, as a matter of course, issue a writ of mandamus to compel them to adjudicate. That Court has also the power to award costs against the magistrates, and has frequently exercised it, even in cases where the justices took a wrong view of a difficult question of law.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.

John Francis Waller, Esq., LL.D., has been appointed one of the Readers of the Court of Chancery, in the place of Thomas Berry, Esq., resigned.

The Right Hon. the Attorney-General for Ireland has appointed Edward Spencer Dix, Esq., barrister, of the North-East Circuit, to be his counsel; and Abraham Chatterton, Esq., solicitor, to be his clerk.

COMPENSATION FOR ANNOYANCE BY TRAINS.

From the Law Times.

The fact was noticed in this Journal as soon as it occurred, that the Exchequer Chamber, overruling the judgment of the Queen's Bench, had decided in favour of compensation under the Lands Clauses Act for injury to the comfortable occupation of house property from the ordinary working of a railway, no part of the property having been taken by the company. The reasons of the court of error have now appeared in the report of the case (Brand v. The Hammersmith Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 101). The circumstances were, that about a month after the railway was opened for public traffic the claim for compensation for present and future injury was made; and before the jury, which was summoned according to the Act upon the company's warrant, issued under protest, the particular ground laid was, that the working of the railway and the running of trains over it had occasioned, and always would occasion, vibration, noise, and smoke, and that the premises, by reason of their being subjected to such vibration, noise, and smoke from passing trains, were, and always would be, affected and further depreciated in value. The jury found for the claim, and a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench was stated by consent.

The way to a right understanding of such decisions as the present will be smoothed by recollecting that there are two classes of compensation cases: one, where the property injured is part of property taken or entered by the company; the other, where the only relation between the parties is the injury from proximity to the railway works. The former class has been held to be governed by the 68th and other sections of the Lands Clauses Act, the latter by the 6th and 16th sections of the Railways Clauses Act. In the one, the groundwork of the whole matter is the right given by statute to take or interfere with the ownership of the property itself; and for the damage done, springing thus from the statute, compensation may always be had under the statute whether the injury be of such a nature that, according to the common law, it could or could not be the subject of an action. But, in the other class of cases, where the injury is unconnected with any taking of or entry on land, and springs from the mere working of the railway, the landowner can only proceed in respect of common law injuries, the company being, with regard to him, themselves proprietors. Admitting then that, as in the present case, an injury of an actionable character has been sustained, what remedy has been left by the Railways Clauses Act against companies authorised to construct and work railways? If they are guilty of negligence in the exercise, or professed exercise, of these statutory powers, they are no doubt liable to an action. The difficulty in the law is, when the injury is occasioned by the ordinary, careful, running of the trains, from which it is needless to say that the injury may be of any magnitude, even to the burning of a homestead or the shaking down of a dwelling-house.

In such cases it has long been settled that by the operation of the Railways Clauses Act the right of action, which would lie at common law, is gone: (R. v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30). The only doubt has been between actual and implied negligence. Thus where a wood, lying along the line, was set on fire by sparks from the engine, the Exchequer, in Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, held it not to have been a misdirection of the judge to tell the jury that no care or skill used by the company in preventing the escape of fire from the engine would be an answer to the charge of negligence, if the company did not succeed; but, on appeal (2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 394), Chief Justice COCKBURN, in the Ex. Ch., could not adopt that view. If a private person used any means for effecting any purpose of his own, from which more or less danger might arise, he would be responsible to those injured if any accident occurred from the use of those means; but if the Legislature had thought fit to interfere, and had sanctioned the use of particular means for a given purpose, so long as those means were used for the purpose for which their use was sanctioned, provided always every precaution was taken which the nature of the case required, then if, notwithstanding all reasonable care and diligence, an accident did occur, the parties were not liable for any injury which was a consequence of the use of the means so sanctioned, unless they had contributed to it by some negligence. Williams, Crompton, Willes, Byles, and Blackburne, J.J., were of the same opinion.

As vibration, noise, and smoke from a railway train are unavoidable, Brand v. The Hammersmith Railway Company was clearly within the authorities against a remedy at law, and the plaintiff's resource was in the Railways Clauses Act. The 6th and 16th sections provide for compensation, but, as they are both in that part of the Act which is headed "and with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith," they would seem rather to refer to matters of or incidental to the construction than consequent on it, particularly when attention is paid to the order of the several headings. That one is the first of the headings; the next relates to the temporary occupation of lands during the construction; the third to the crossing of roads; the fourth to works for the accommodation of lands. Therefore, according to the general frame of the Act, in its successive divisions, "construction" would appear to mean actual construction. Again, of the two sections mentioned, the 16th will, primâ facie, refer to the actual construction, as it defines the works which may be executed in constructing the railway, and makes provision for satisfaction for damage done in the exercise of such powers. The question is rather as to the meaning of the 6th section, which is the opening section under the heading relating to the construction, and provides that "the company shall make to the owners and occupiers of and all other parties interested in any lands taken or used for the purposes of the railway, or injuriously affected by the construction thereof, full compensation for the value of the lands so taken or used, and for all damage sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties, by reason of the exercise, as regards such lands, of the powers . . . . vested in the company." There is some obscurity here in the use of the term "such lands," when lands have been twice mentioned before, but if it be referred to "any lands taken or used, &c.," then the company is bound to make compensation to the owner of land injuriously affected by the construction of the railway, for damage by the exercise, as to such land, of the statutory powers. Was the inconvenience in question, arising to the house from the working of the Hammersmith Railway Company, an injuriously affecting within this section?

Mr. Baron Bramwell noticed in his judgment in the Court of Error that the words of the 6th section are not "in" or "during," but "by" the construction, and besides that the vibration was a damage sustained in the exercise of the company's powers. The very words, it may be conceded, ought to be minutely scanned, for the reason which will be presently mentioned, and as regards the scope of the language, it may fairly be contended that "damage sustained, &c.," interprets the meaning of "injuriously affected." How injuriously affected? By damage sustained in exercise of the "statutory powers." Running trains is undoubtedly a power vested in the company; but let us not forget always to reserve the point, whether this part of the Act, under the head of construction, does not relate entirely to the actual construction. Further, Mr. Baron Bramwell reasoned on the language "by the construction" that as, according to Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, it was established that there was no right of action immediately on the construction of the railway, and by the construction a right accrued to do the damage, consequently the damage was by the construction of the railway.

There was a reason for the exercise by the court of this astuteness to bring the damage to the house within the language of the 6th section. In the Queen's Bench Mr. Justice Mellor had held that it was damnum absque injuria, arguing that the Legislature might have thought that for injuries from the ordinary use and exercise of the power conferred on railway companies to run locomotive engines it was expedient to exempt railway companies from the multitudinous claims which might be made in respect of such injuries; and therefore they might have supposed that the public convenience was a matter which would not be allowed to be sacrificed in respect of rights, or, rather, an injury of that description. He came to the conclusion decidedly that the compensation which the statutes gave was compensation for damage resulting from the execution of the works. Mr. Justice Lush, in the court below, had concurred, relying much on the heading to which we have referred, under which the 6th section falls. But in the Appeal Court, Mr. Baron Bramwell scouted in a charitable way the argument of private damage for the public benefit, as one which he could "treat with respect only on account of the respect due to those who had used it." It was absurd, he thought, to suppose that if a house was damaged to the extent of one pound a year, by its light and air being diminished, compensation should be given, and yet intended that it should not be where the damage was ten times as great, but caused by the noise and vibration of the trains. He approached the consideration of the case, therefore, with the certainty that it was not meant that the plaintiffs should be without remedy, and with strong belief that one would be found for them. Being of this opinion, and finding, upon authority, that no action would lie, he thought it right to hold any words in the Act that were capable of it to mean to give a remedy by implication. Hence the construction put by him on the 6th section.

If all the eight Judges who heard the cause in the Exchequer Chamber had concerred in this judgment, we should scarcely have ventured to ask whether it was not of an a priori kind. But two of them, Chief Justice Erle and Chief Baron Pollock, had left the bench since the argument; two, Byles, J., and Pigott, B., were oblig ed to go to chambers during the argument, and Channell, B., dissented. Only Keating and M. Smith, J J., concurred with Mr. Baron Bramwell. M. Smith, J., would certainly "expect to find" that when the rights of one man were prejudicially affected by legislation for the benefit of others, provision would be made for compensation. He found such provision, in the present case, in the 16th section. The commencement of that section purported to give certain powers to the company for the execution of the works, and would apply only to the process of construction, but the general power at the end of the section to "do all other acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering, or repairing, and using the railway," coupled with the provisions for making satisfaction for damage sustained in the exercise of the powers, would favour the right to compensation. We would respectfully suggest, on this construction of the power to do acts necessary for "using the railway," that such a power is different and distinct from the power given by the 86th section to use locomotives to draw carriages and waggons. The words quoted from the 16th section would appear to refer to acts to be done to keep the line itself in a fit state for use. If acts necessary for using the line only had been done by the Hammersmith Company, the enjoyment of the house would not have been damaged. The injury arose from the actual use of the line. Indeed the powers under the 16th section might be given to one company, and those under the 86th to a different company, respecting one and the same railway. Both the 6th and 16th sections were considered by Mr. Baron Channell to relate to the execution of the works, and damage from vibration to be too remote, when regarded as caused "by the construction" of the railway. "It might," he said, "be improbable that the Legislature should have intended to take away a right without giving a claim for compensation; but can it be said to be impossible? Reasons may be stated which the Legislature may possibly have acted upon. . . . . But as it seems to me it is not for us to find reasons for the law enacted by Parliament; I prefer to put the best construction I can on the words of the Act."

An adverse decision by three puisne Judges only against one dissentient and two in the court below, and that decision based on a presumption of legislative intention, and proceeding on the meaning of words isolated, as we have seen, from the whole context, can, we suppose, scarcely remain without a further appeal. The magnitude of the railway interest involved is so great that, on that ground alone, the question of right to compensation for damage of a kind actionable at common law, done by the working of the railway at any time to the enjoyment of any property along the line, should be submitted to the highest tribunal. The present position of the question is, to say the least, unsatisfactory. If such compensation be just, we had rather see it provided for by Parliament by new legislation, than the whole framework of an existing Act strained to do a kind of legislative justice from the bench. There can be little or no certainty in the construction of Acts of Parliament if, on some a priori theory of abstract justice, sections "with respect to the construction of the railway" are to have their meaning ascertained with respect to its working, and if one of those very sections, purporting to give powers "for the purpose of constructing the railway," is to be forced into intending to give powers for the purpose of working the railway.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

EQUITY PRACTICE—REVIVOR—SUBSTITUTED SERVICE.—A defendant, after appearing to the bill, died. The residence of his personal representative could not be discovered. Substituted service of order to revive the suit was allowed to be made on the solicitor who had originally appeared for the deceased defendant, and upon the proctors who had solicited probate to the deceased. (Kent v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 171. V.C.M.)

COST OF EVIDENCE.—As a general rule, where a bill is dismissed with costs, charges for evidence upon which the descision turned cannot be disallowed. In accordance with this rule, £220 was allowed to an antiquarian and translator of ancient documents. (Churton v. Frewen, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 171. V. C. M.)

PROBATE PRACTICE—ADMINISTRATION—PREFERENCE.—Where the only assets were the probable fruits of a suit, the Court granted administration de bonis non to the executrix of the administrator, in preference to the intestate's niece, who was entitled in distribution, but lived with the defendant in the suit. (In the Goods of Mary Carr, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 181. Prob.)

DIVORCE PRACTICE—INSANITY—NULLITY.—A suit for nullity was promoted by the relatives of the wife on the ground of her insanity at the time of the marriage, and the allegation was sustained. The husband having asserted that she had recovered, and was then (the date of the hearing and judgment) in a sound state of mind, the Court suspended its decree until the question was settled, and intimated that it would afford the respondent every facility for that purpose. (Hancock v. Peaty, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 182. Div.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

WINDING-UP.

PRACTICE.—The Court may remove liquidators, whether acting under a voluntary winding-up or a winding-up under inspection. The Court, however, will not carry out the commercial transactions of a large concern; as a general rule, the management of such must be left to the shareholders. (Re The United Merthyr Collieries Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 170. V. C. W.)

GENERAL.

RAILWAY—ORDER TO INSPECT WORKS.—B. had filed a bill against a railway company for an injunction to restrain them from proceeding with their works to the detriment of his premises until they should have properly entitled them selves to do so. The company had put up a boarding, which prevented B. from inspecting the progress of their works. The Court made an order that access should be given to the plaintiff, his surveyors and builders, at all reasonable times to view with his surveyors and builders such parts of the works as were carried on near his premises. (Saul v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 169. V. C. W.)

INTERESTED SHERIFF—SHAREHOLDERS IN A COMPANY.—The B. railway company was authorized by statute to make a line of railway. By a later statute two other companies were enabled to acquire an interest in the line by payment of a certain portion of the cost. The B. company had issued their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess compensation to C. for land required, and the inquisition, verdict, and judgment had been completed. Afterwards C. discovered that the sheriff was a shareholder in one of the two railways, but at the time of the inquest taken these two companies had not paid their quota of the costs, nor acquired any direct interest under the statute. The sheriff was held not to be disabled from holding the inquisition. (Reg. v. The Manchester, &c., Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 173. Q. B.)

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.—DEED OF INSPECTORSHIP.—B. when solvent, by a voluntary post-nuptial settlement, covenanted to assign leaseholds in trust for his wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage, with ultimate remainder to himself, and he executed the assignment. Three days after, and a year from the date of the settlement, B. and his partner executed a deed of inspectorship containing a general provision for the conveyance of the whole of their joint and several estates for the benefit of creditors. It was held that the trustees could not be considered as purchasers for value within the meaning of 27 Eliz. c. 4, and consequently the settlement was valid. (Cadell v. Bewley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 141. V. C. S.)

COVENANT RUNNING WITH THE LAND.—B. demised to C. a right and licence to kill and take game over certain lands, with the use of a cottage thereon for a keeper. C. covenanted to leave the estate as well stocked with game as it was at the commencement of the term. The covenant was held to run with the land, and that the assignee of the reversion could in his own name sue for a breach of it. (Hooper v. Lane, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 152. Q. B.)

WILL—SUBSTITUTIONARY GIFTS—PERIOD OF DISTRIBUTION.—A testator gave real estate upon certain trusts in favour of his two sons, and in the event of their death without issue upon trust for sale; and he bequeated the proceeds "unto and equally amongst such of his five daughters as should be living at the decease of the survivor of his said sons, and to the children, grandchildren, and issue of such of his said daughters as should then happen to be dead, such children, grandchildren, and issue respectively to take and have equally amongst them, if more than one, the part or share, parts or shares, of and in the said moneys which their, his, or her parent respectively would have been entitled to had such parent been then living." The two sons survived the testator, but died without issue. M., one of the testator's daughters amongst whose children, grandchildren, and issue a portion of the fund became divisible at the death of R., the surviving son, had ten children, six of whom predeceased their mother, and seven of whom predeceased R. One of these seven had four children all living at the period of distribution, and another of them had one child who survived her parent, but predeceased R. The other five had no issue. Held, that the gift to the children, grandchildren, and issue was an original gift, and that it was not necessary that the objects of the gift should survive the period of distribution; but, held, further, that the children, grandchildren, and issue took per stirpes inter se, and that the grandchildren of M. took only the shares to which their respective parents would have been entitled, and not equal shares with the children of M. (Re Orton's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 146. V. C. M.)

AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—B., being desirous of renewing his lease applied to C., his landlord, for that purpose, and thereupon C. instructed his surveyor to report as to the value of the lease. The surveyor in his report suggested that, if certain contemplated improvements were carried out by B., a lease might be granted to him for fourteen years at a rent of £150 a-year, otherwise at £170. This report was forwarded to B., who wrote, stating his willingness to do the repairs and pay the rent proposed, but suggested that the lease should be for twenty-one years. C., however, declined to extend the term beyond fourteen years, and B. then accepted the offer, but still pressed for a longer lease. Numerous letters afterwards passed between the parties, in reference to the matter, and eventually C. wrote to B., saying that "he had no objection to give his promise of a new lease for fourteen years at the rent and terms agreed upon." B.

Digitized by Google

accepted this offer, and on C.'s subsequently refusing to grant the lease, filed a bill for specific performance. Held, that B. was entitled to specific performance of the agreement disclosed in the correspondence. (Baumann v. James, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 165. V. C. S.)

LAW OF WILLS—MARRIED WOMAN.—B., a married woman, executed under a power of appointment, a will, whereby she appointed her husband and two others executors. Afterwards she executed a second will, also under power of appointment, and named her husband sole executor. Both papers were held to constitute one will, and probate was granted of both to all the executors. (Re Morgan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 181. Prob.)

SUCCESSION DUTY—TENANT IN TAIL.—By the will of B., C. became entitled, on the death of D., on the 4th Sept., 1860, as tenant in tail in possession. On the Nov. 5, C. executed a disentailing deed, and died on the 15th March, 1861, leaving a will, dated in 1841, by which the estate was devised to E. None of the instalments of succession duty payable by C. had become payable before his death. These instalments were held to be a continuing charge on the estate in E.'s hands. (Lord Lilford v. The Attonery-General, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 184. H. of L.)

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

MARRIAGE-SETTLEMENT — COVENANT TO SETTLE THE WIFE'S AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.—A settlement contained a covenant that if the wife then was, or if she became entitled to property of the value of £400, for any estate or interest whatever, husband and wife should concur in conveying and assigning it to the trustees of the settlement. The wife was then entitled to one-seventh of £3,278 Consols in her own right, and to one-seventh of another seventh, as one of the next of kin of a deceased brother, but subject to a prior life-interest in the whole, upon the determination of which husband and wife petitioned for payment of the two sums (together £535 Consols) to the husband. Held (affirming the decision of the M. R.), that the whole of her interest, original and derivative, was property to which she was entitled at the date of the settlement; that, although she was so entitled under different titles, the value of the whole must be regarded; and further, that the covenant referred not to the value of her interest in the fund, but to the value of the fund in which she had an interest. The shares of the fund were therefore ordered to be paid to the trustees of the settlement. (Re Makenzie's Settlement Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 138. L. JJ.)

JOINT POWER—NEW APPOINTMENT.—A settlement empowered husband and wife during their joint lives by deed or will to appoint among children of the marriage. The power was exercised by both in favour of a daughter, but the deed also contained a power enabling husband and wife, or the survivor, by deed or deeds "from time to time during their joint lives" to revoke that appointment and appoint new trustees. The wife died before the exercise of the power of revocation: the husband, purporting to act in exercise of that power, revoked the trusts declared by the appointment, and re-appointed the fund to trustees for certain purposes. The second appointment was held to be inoperative, for that it was reasonably possible to give due effect to the above words by viewing the power exercised as one which might be exercised by husband and wife jointly, or by the survivor, if the revocation were made by that one during the life of the other. (Re Twiss's Trusts, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 139. L. JJ.)

From the London Gazette.

WHITEHALL, April 8.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the undermentioned gentlemen, and the respective heirs male of their body lawfully begotten, viz.:—The Right Hon. Joseph Napier, of Merrion-square, in the city of Dublin; William Bagge, of Stradsett Hall, in the county of Norfolk, Esq.; Benjamin Lee Guinness, of Ashford, in the county of Galway, and of Saint Stephen's-green, in the city of Dublin, Esq.; William Lawrence, of Ealing Park, and of Whitehall-place, in the county of Middlesex, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Sergeant Surgeons.

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL

PRELIMINARY AND FINAL EXAMINATIONS.

The preliminary examination of candidates seeking to be bound apprentices to Attorneys, was held in the Solicitors' Hall, on Friday and Saturday last, by the Court of Examiners of the Incorporated Law Society. Eighteen candidates presented themselves, four of whom had been postponed on former occasions. Of the eighteen, the eleven whose names are given below passed, and seven were postponed.

The final examination of apprentices seeking to be admitted attorneys, was held in the same place, by the Court of Examiners, on Monday and Tuesday last. Six candidates presented themselves for examination, of whom five passed; one was postponed.

The candidates at both examinations attended before the Court of Examiners on Wednesday last, when they were informed of the result of the examinations by Mr. Orpen, the President of the Society, who addressed them as follows:—

"The Court of Examiners having considered the result of the recent preliminary examination of applicants for admission to apprenticeship, I shall now proceed to inform you of their decision.

"The following gentlemen have been allowed the examination, and their names are arranged in order of merit, viz.:—

No. 1. William Joseph Ryan,
2. Standish O'Grady,
3. Lucas Cecil Walker,
4. John Risk,
5. James Robinson,
6. Charles Hoey,
7. Townley B. C. Hardman,
8. William Stevenson,
9. John Thos. O'Connor,
10. Cornelius Keily,
11. Richard Barry O'Brien.

"Mr. William Joseph Ryan is to be allowed to compete for the Prize in November next.

"With respect to the answering generally, the Court of Examiners desire me to express regret that the answering was not so good as it has been on former occasions, although we had hoped for improvement.

"The Court will permit Mr. Gilbert P. Cooper to come up previous to next Trinity Term, as his papers show improvement, but his answering in Latin was not sufficiently good to entitle him to pass.

"The other gentlemen are postponed to next November.

"The Court also regret that those whose answering in Latin would have qualified them to be recommended to compete for a prize, were so deficient in their papers as to prevent our being able to recommend them.

"As to the final examination, the Court of Examiners have decided that Messrs.—

1. Ambrose Plunkett,
2. George C. Stapleton,
3. William Irwin,
4. John R. Lloyd,
5. William Croker—do pass.

"The other candidate to be postponed for the present; the Court consider him to have improved, but not sufficiently to entitle him to pass on the present occasion.

"Mr. Plunkett's papers were very good, and would have entitled him to a gold medal, but that the Examiners were not satisfied with his vivâ voce answering. They have, however, awarded him a silver medal.

"Messrs. Stapleton, Irwin, and Lloyd are to receive special certificates of merit."

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by William Woodlock, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

The Queen v. Smith.

April 15.—New trial in case of misdemeanour.

Randal M'Donnell, on behalf of the prisoner, moved that Fitzgerald, B. should send in a copy of his notes of evidence, &c., with a view to a new trial. The indictment was for an assault, and the case was tried before Fitzgerald, B. at the last assizes for the County of Monaghan, when the prisoner was convicted. There was no affidavit.

The court held that they had no materials on which to make any order; there was no record in court, nothing to show even that such a case existed. It would be necessary, at all events, to remove the proceedings by certiorari, and the Court did not think that a certiorari would be granted in such a case after verdict and judgment.

On the next day M'Donnell referred to Rex v. O'Neill, referred to in Hayes's Criminal Law, p. 123, as showing that a certiorari would be granted even after verdict, in the case of a misdemeanour to remove proceedings from the assizes to the Court of Queen's Bench with a view to having a new trial.

No order was made.

Craig v. Beattie.

Embarrassing Defence—Uncertainty.

April, 16.—Motion to set aside a defence as embarrassing. The action was brought to recover damages for the non-fulfilment of a contract by the defendant to sell to the plaintiff certain lands and premises in the County of Antrim. Defendant's second defence was that he held under a lease which contained a clause against alienation, that at the time of the agreement both parties were aware of this, and that plaintiff purchased "subject to the contingency," that the landlord would refuse his consent to the sale, and that the landlord had so refused his consent.

Bruce, for the plaintiff, contended that the words "subject to the contingency" were embarrassing. They might mean that this was a condition in the agreement itself.

Jackson, contra.

The court set aside the defence with costs.

Attorney for the defendant, John Lawless.

COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by William Griffin, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Smith v. M'Cormack.

April 15.—Embarrassing Defence—Duplicity.

This was a motion to set aside a defence as embarrassing and traversing more than one material fact, and as being double.

The second count of the summons and plaint complained that the defendant, being the owner of a waggon, hired and employed one Patrick Fox, to drive and manage said waggon, and that the said Patrick Fox, while in the course of such his employment by the defendant, so negligently and unskilfully drove, &c., the said waggon in a certain highway, that the waggon was driven against plaintiff's husband, and that injuries were thereby inflicted on plaintiff's said husband, by reason whereof he died within twelve months before action brought.

To this special count defendant filed, with others, a plea that "he did not do or commit the several acts in the second count of the summons and plaint mentioned, or any of them" as alleged.

H. M'Dermott for the plaintiff.

The second count is a special one framed for the purpose of putting admissions in the record by setting out the facts, and leaving defendant to his traverses. It contains four material averments. 1st, that Fox was the servant of the defendant; 2nd, that he did these acts complained of in the course of his employment; 3rd, that there was negligence and consequent injury; and, 4th, that the action is brought within twelve months from death of party injured. Defendant's plea, without leave of the Court to plead several matters, which could only be obtained on affidavit, traverses that the defendant committed the said acts, or any of them. On this plea plaintiff cannot tell what is put in issue, and must come prepared to prove everything. A defence that defendant "did not commit the breaches of covenant in summons and plaint complained of, or any of them," was set aside in Midland Railway v. Nugent, 10 Ir. J., N.S. 192

J. A. Curran, in support of the defence.—We only traverse one material averment. The averment of the hiring of Fox is immaterial; qui facit per alium, facit per se. We are liable for our servants' acts.

The Court was of opinion that the plea might prove embarrassing at the trial as it might put plaintiff on proof that Fox was the servant of defendant. Defendant allowed to amend by traversing negligence. Plaintiff's motion granted with costs.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. Miller, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law

In the goods of John Sheehy, deceased.

Dec. 13, 1866.—Execution at foot or end of Will.

A will written on the first and third pages of a sheet of note-paper, and the names of the testator and the witnesses written longitudinally on the second page, held, on affidavits of the attesting witnesses, a valid execution, save as to a clause written below the names of the testator and the witnesses.

T. P. Lynch, for Mary Hayes, a legatee named in a will of John Sheehy, made on the 27th April, 1866, moved for letters of administration of his goods, with his will annexed.

The will began on the first page of an ordinary sheet of note-paper, and was continued on and ended at the foot of the third page, and the testator and the witnesses all wrote their names longitudinally along the second page, which was, in other respects, blank, save that an executorial clause had been written below the testator's and witnesses' names.

The will gave to the testator's daughter, Anne Sheehy, his house and grounds, with his money, in the Provincial Bank and Savings' Bank, subject to his debts, and to support a person mentioned, for his life; and after disposing of a farm and crops, the testator gave £300 equally amongst his three married daughters, one of whom was Mrs. Hayes.

The two attesting witnesses made an affidavit deposing to the due execution of the will by the testator, by the signature of his name on the second page in their presence, and of their attestation at the same time in his presence, and in the presence of each other. Sweetland v. Sweetland, 34, L. J., Pr. 42., Hunt v. Hunt, 1, L. R., Pr. 209, were cited as bringing the case within Lord St. Leonard's Act 15 & 16 Vic., c. 24.

KEATINGE, J.—The Will is valid, save as to the executorial clause, and I grant the motion.

In the Goods of ANTHONY KENNEDY, deceased.

Dec. 13th, 1866.—Lost Will—Probate.

Probate given to the executors of the contents of a lost will, which, in fact, only appointed executors. The affidavits showing the due execution, capacity, the loss of the will and its contents.

Geo. Price, on behalf of Thomas Kennedy, James Tierney, and Thomas Tierney, the executors named in the last Will of the said Anthony Kennedy, dated the 28th day of October, 1862, moved for probate of the contents thereof, as set forth in the affidavit of the said Thomas Kennedy, filed in the principal Registry, on the 6th day of December, 1866, to be given to the said executors.

The affidavit of Thomas Kennedy stated that the deceased was his cousin, and was intimately acquainted with him for more than thirty years.

In the end of October, 1862, the deceased had been found on the road near Thurles, much injured in his back by a fall from a car, and paralysed.

He was taken to the police barrack at Thurles, and was thence removed to his own house at Killahagan, near Thurles. Thomas Kennedy was sent for by the deceased, and on the morning after the accident, he recommended the deceased to settle his affairs, to which he agreed; and Thomas Kennedy then wrote out a will for him, being the one in question—which he read for him, and which the deceased approved of, and which Thomas Kennedy gave to Mary Kennedy, the deceased's daughter, with directions to get two persons to witness the deceased's signature to it. The will was dated the 28th October, 1866, and was in three or four days afterwards executed by the deceased in the presence of three witnesses. Mary Kennedy, about 12 months since, brought the will into Thurles to said Thomas Kennedy, who identified it as the paper that he had drawn, and that it was in the same plight and condition, save as to the execution and attestation, as when he had prepared it. He made out then an inventory, and enclosed it and the will in an envelope, with a letter he had just had from America, and placed them in his pocket, and went home. In a few days after, on searching for said will, it could not be found, though the letter and inventory were in the envelope. The contents were set out in this affidavit, and in fact only amounted to the appointment of the three persons already mentioned as executors.

The deceased was a widower, and left seven children, some minors, and some in Australia.

The assets amounted to about £200 in value.

The attesting witnesses, and the testator's daughter Mary, made affidavits as to the due execution of the will and the competency of the testator, and Mary Kennedy corroborated Thomas Kennedy as to her giving him the will to keep.

(M'Cracken v. M'Cracken, 11 Ir., J. N. S., 380. Wharram v. Wharram, 3, S. and Tr., 301).

KEATINGE, J.—The will in fact amounts to nothing more than the appointment of executors, and the property will go in the same way as in case of intestacy. I will make the order, giving probate to the executors as asked.

Order accordingly.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by JOHN LEVY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before BERWICK, J.

Re WILSON and BEERE.

April, 1867.—Application to remove Assignee—Mortgagee in possession—Calling for an Account.

Where an application is made to remove an Assignee who is perfectly solvent, and against whom no complaint exists, except that he refused to take proceedings to make an alleged Mortgagee in possession account, and where that Mortgagee is brought into court upon notice, the application will be refused with costs.

Kernan, Q.C., and John M'Mahon with him, applied on the part of the bankrupt, Wilson, (who had purchased the debts of several creditors), and of some other creditors besides, for an order to remove Mr. Valentine O'Brien O'Connor, the trade assignee of the estate of the bankrupts, Wilson and Beere, and that a meeting should be taken out for the appointment of an assignee in his stead. It appeared that Beere was dead, and that Wilson had not obtained his certificate.

Heron, Q.C., Michael Barry, and P. Martin appeared for Mr. Thomas M. Gresham, the alleged mortgagee in possession, who was the party sought to be made account to the Court. It appeared from the statement of Mr. Kernan that Mr. Valentine O'Brien O'Connor, the assignee, was quite willing to be removed, and it was with his consent that the application was made; he was originally one of the creditors of Wilson and Beere, but he assigned his debt, and having no interest in the matter, he was quite willing to allow some creditor to be appointed in his stead, who had really some interest in the matter. He was frequently called on to account, but he said he had nothing to account for, that nothing came into his hands, in fact he would do nothing. Mr. Gresham was the original owner of the hotel, and was for many years a mortgagee in possession, and was really the party to account, but it was likely Mr. O'Connor did not wish to have any conflict with his old friend Gresham, and the creditors wanted to have a person appointed assignee who would have no hesitation in acting. Messrs. Wilson and Beere purchased the Gresham Hotel in the year 1836, at the price of £30,000; they paid £10,000 in cash, and granted a mortgage to Mr. Gresham for £20,000, to be paid by certain yearly instalments. In 1840, Mr. Wilson being unable to pay the instalments regularly, with the assent of Mr. Gresham, raised a sum of £10,000 from the European Insurance Company, by which it was applied to the payment of Gresham, he taking a mortgage for the balance due to him puisne to the Insurance Company, Gresham and the Insurance Company going in under a joint possession, and an agreement to apply the receipts of the hotel to the payment of the mortgages according to their priority. Subsequently the hotel was sold to a Mr. Horne for £5,000, as a trustee for Mr. Gresham. It was contended that Mr. Gresham was during the whole time a mortgagee in possession, and was bound to account, and the assignee having refused to take proceedings to make him account, it became absolutely necessary to have him removed.

Heron, Q.C.—The present motion and mode of proceeding were wholly misconceived, and on the part of Mr. Gresham, for whom he appeared, he asked it to be refused with costs. He cited Kirkwood v. Thompson, 2 De Gex., Jones and Smith.

M'Mahon contended that the sale to Horne, which was an arrangement with Gresham, could not relieve him from the liability he incurred as a mortgagee in possession; he cited Murphy v. O'Shea. 2 Jones and Latouch, 422. Lewis v. Hillman. 3 House of Lords cases, 606.

JUDGE BERWICK said that a great deal of irrelevant matter had been gone into in the discussion of the motion, which was simply an application to remove an assignee, and to name a day for the appointment of another, which he would not do. Mr. O'Connor was a most highly respectable and perfectly solvent gentleman against whom no fault was alleged but that he would not take proceedings against Mr. Gresham. It was quite evident that the proceeding was on the part of Wilson the bankrupt, who bought up some of the debts, and who wished to have a nominee of his own appointed in order to deal with Mr. Gresham. If Mr. O'Connor was in any default, or refused to account as trustee under that Court, he would soon make him do so, but it was not Mr. O'Connor was sought to be made accountable. He thought the motion was untenable, and he would refuse it with costs; but if the parties thought proper to go into the Court of Chancery, and it became necessary to use the name of the trade and official assignees, upon giving a proper indemnity, he would allow them to be parties, but he would refuse the present motion with costs.

CIRCUIT CASES.

LEINSTER CIRCUIT.

KILKENNY ASSIZES.

Reported by CHAS. H. FOOT, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Ex parte DAVIS.

Grand Jury Law. 6 & 7 Wm. IV., cap. 116, secs. 133–138.

When a presentment which has been traversed is withdrawn by a Grand Jury, the costs incurred by the traverser, when preparing for the trial of the traverse, cannot be obtained by presentment.

At the Summer Assizes, 1866, the Grand Jury of the County of the City of Kilkenny, presented a sum for the widening of a street under the 6 & 7 Wm. IV., cap. 116, sec. 50.

The presentment was traversed by Mr. Davis, the head landlord of premises intended to be removed in the process of widening the street in question.

T. Purcell, Q.C., appeared for the traverser.

W. L. Hackett, and C. H. Foot, for the Grand Jury of the city of Kilkenny.

Upon the application of Mr. Purcell, Q.C., the Right Hon. JOHN T. BALL, Q.C., acting as Judge of Assize, postponed the trial of the traverse to the ensuing Spring Assizes, upon the ground that the traverser had not had time to prepare evidence of the value of the premises, &c. His Lordship made an entry of the postponement of the trial, the reason of it, and upon whose application it was done, in the Crown Book. At the Spring Assizes, 1867, Mr. Purcell applied to the Right Hon. Mr Justice George, to direct the Grand Jury of the city of Kilkenny to present for the sum of £18, costs incurred by J. P. Hartford, Mr. Davis's attorney, in preparing for the trial of the traverse. The Grand Jury had abandoned the intention of widening the street in question in consequence of the expense with which the work would be attended.

Counsel relied upon the words of the 133rd section of the 6 & 7 William IV., cap. 116. "Provided that although there shall be a verdict against such traverser yet if the Court shall be of opinion that there was reasonable and probable grounds for traversing such presentment, the costs shall be paid by the treasurer of the county, and the Grand Jury shall present the same."

His LORDSHIP refused the application upon the ground that a traverse must be tried before his jurisdiction as to costs could arise. No trial had taken place here, therefore he had no jurisdiction.

Attorney for Traverser, J. P. Hartford.

Attorney for Grand Jury, P. Waters.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

DOWNPATRICK—March 15, 1867.

Reported by J. L. WHITTLE, Esq.

IN THE MATTER OF JOHN MAGOWAN.

Coram FITZGERALD, B.

John Magowan made an application for compensation for malicious burning at the Presentment Sessions, at Saintfield, in the County of Down, prior to Summer Assizes, 1866, before three magistrates and four cess-payers, when malice was declared proved, and £100 awarded as compensation. On the matter coming before the Grand Jury at the Summer Assizes, 1866, the solicitor of the Grand Jury, instructed by one of the body opposed, and the application was rejected. Applicant then applied to the Judge of Assize to have the question of malice determined by a Petty Jury, and this application was granted, though opposed by the Grand Jury. In consequence of the non-attendance of the witnesses a further application was made to postpone the inquiry till the next Assizes. This application was also granted.

The 6 & 7 Wil. IV., c. 116, sec. 138, enacts that all such applications whatsoever for compensation for loss or damage sustained by malicious injury, shall be laid by the Acting Clerk of the Crown before the Judge of Assize upon his arrival; and in case any person paying Grand Jury cess for the county or barony, chargeable with the sum presented by the Grand Jury upon any such application, shall be desirous of opposing any such presentment, or in case any person whose application for compensation shall have been disallowed by the Grand Jury shall wish to have his or their application reconsidered, such cess-payer or person or persons applying for compensation shall be heard; and in either of such cases the judge, if he shall so think fit, shall direct a jury to be forthwith empannelled to try the matter of such presentment or application respectively, and according as the issue shall be found for or against such cess-payer, the judge shall discharge, alter, or fiat such presentment; and in case of application disallowed, if the issue shall be found for the person or persons applying for compensation, the judge shall direct the Grand Jury to make presentment thereupon accordingly, otherwise such application shall be discharged; and all verdicts of juries empannelled as aforesaid to try any such issues shall be final and conclusive to all persons whatsoever; and the section further provides for costs.

Frazer now applied to have the jury empannelled.

Murland, solicitor to the Grand Jury, objected that even if the jury found for the applicant, it would be nugatory as the Grand Jury had no power to make the presentment now should the judge direct one. Section 136 provides for the time of making such applications and disposing of them, and its last provision is that "it shall not be lawful for any Grand Jury to make any presentment for compensation for malicious injury under the provisions of this Act, except at the assizes next ensuing the sessions, where application shall have been made therefor." This application should have been disposed of at the assizes after the Presentment Sessions at Saintfield.

SESSIONS CASES.

JULIANSTOWN PETTY SESSIONS.

Before the Hon. T. PRESTON (Chairman), W. WALSH, Esq.; and R. TAYLOUR, Esq., LL.D., Justices.

CINNAMON v. FARLEY.

April 16th.—Dismiss without Prejudice—Declining Jurisdiction.

Summons for an assault. The same complaint was heard at a previous sessions, and dismissed without prejudice. The case now came before the Court on a fresh summons.

CHAIRMAN.—We cannot hear this case again. We have already adjudicated upon it.

Boston, for complainant, contended that by a dismiss without prejudice the Court meant that there was not sufficient evidence to enable it to decide the case one way or the other upon the merits; and the same case might be brought again, on a fresh summons, before the same Court. "Without prejudice to a further complaint"—that is, before the same tribunal (Petty Sessions Act, s. 21).

Mr. TAYLOUR.—No; it means without prejudice to proceedings in another Court.

Boston then called on the Bench to adjudicate, with a view to ulterior proceedings; and an order was made to the effect that the Court declined to adjudicate, having by a previous order dismissed the same complaint without prejudice.

DUBLIN AND DROGHEDA RAILWAY COMPANY v. FARLEY.

Wilfully Obstructing an Officer of a Railway Company in Execution of his Duty—3rd & 4th Vic., c. 97, s. 16—Procedure thereunder—Bye-Laws.

Summons for obstructing an officer of the Company in the discharge of his duty.

CHAIRMAN.—This is, in fact, the same as the first case, upon which we have adjudicated.

Boston, for the complainant.—No; it is between different parties, and for a different offence.

Cinnamon, the complainant in the first case, was then examined, and proved that on the 20th of February last, on the arrival of an up train at the Drogheda station, he was engaged in removing the passengers' luggage to the entrance platform; that the defendant, Farley, crossed the line, and approached the luggage van; that he requested defendant to leave, and upon his refusing put his hand on his shoulder, and was pushing him away, when defendant turned round and struck him twice on the shoulder with a stick; the station master then gave defendant into custody; that he had, on previous occasions warned the defendant off the platform; that defendant was a railway runner, who used to get jobs from passengers; that witness was directed by the station master to keep Farley, and persons of the same class, off the premises.

The station master proved that, on the day in question, he had warned defendant off, just before the train had come in, and he pretended to go away.

CHAIRMAN.—We certainly had not this evidence before us when we decided the assault case.

Mr. TAYLOUR.—There is no case made out of obstructing the officer in discharge of his duty. The defendant was merely on the platform, and he might have had a ticket.

Boston.—The porter had orders to turn this man off, and that became part of his duty. The refusal, and subsequent assault, clearly constituted an obstruction within the meaning of the Act. The porter, too, had to leave the duty he was then engaged in for the purpose of putting defendant off. If defendant had a ticket he should have said so, and produced it. [Mr. TAYLOUR.—The Act under which you prosecute directs a particular mode of proceeding. It enacts that the offender may be seized and taken before a justice who is required to act summarily. This has not been done. How can we act under the 16th section?]

Boston.—Under the Petty Sessions Act, s. 8, which prevails over the Railway Acts, although it does not take away the power of the railway officers, under this 16th section, to arrest the offender and convey him before a justice, and it is still the duty of such justice to act on the complaint, and if no guarantee can be given that the prisoner will be forthcoming, the justice can take an information on oath, and commit him until the hearing of the complaint (14 & 15 Vic., c. 93, sec. 11). The defendant was, in this case, taken before a justice. But, besides, we have given our bye-laws in evidence, by which a penalty is to be imposed for obstructing an officer in the discharge of his duty, and the 8 Vic., c. 16, and 8 Vic., c. 20, provide that all penalties imposed by the Special Act, or any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices; summons to issue in first instance; distress warrant; and in default of distress, imprisonment.

CHAIRMAN.—We have decided on convicting in this case; and the Company not pressing for a heavy penalty, we impose a fine of 6d. and costs.

R. D. Kane, attorney for complainants in both cases.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

The Law and Practice of the Taxation of Costs in Common Law Business, with an Appendix containing the General Directions of the Taxing Officers, Forms, Schedules of Fees, The Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act (12 & 13 Vic., c. 53), and other Matters. By EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Dublin: Edward Ponsonby, Grafton-street, 1867.

We gladly welcome the appearance of this really useful and valuable, though unpretending, little volume upon a subject of such great importance to the profession that it is a matter of surprise no practical treatise upon it has hitherto been published. The author states his object to be to collect and classify the principles upon which the taxation of costs is conducted; but while treating of the rights and liabilities to costs, so far as questions in reference to them arise on taxation, it has not been within the limited scope of his book to deal further with the general law of costs.

To carry out this object the author, in the first chapter, treats of the general rights and liabilities of parties to costs, and of the mode of recovering them; and having in the next chapter treated of the Taxing office, the general duties of the Masters, and the proceedings on taxation, has then taken, "as far as possible, the proceedings in an ordinary personal action as a basis, discussing in succession the matters relating to each stage of the suit." A separate chapter is devoted to costs in ejectment and replevin proceedings.

The limitation of costs by particular statutes and orders is very carefully considered, and a number of authorities referred to. The very important subject of the restrictions imposed upon the right of a successful plaintiff to costs is fully discussed, and this being a question which almost every day arises in practice, the author has appended a table by which, at a glance, can be ascertained the plaintiff's right to costs in any personal action, and the necessary certificates.

In the appendix is published (now for the first time) the schedule of fees allowed on taxation on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench. The appendix also contains, the general directions of the taxing masters, the general orders, schedule of fees, the attorneys' and solicitors' Act, and other matters of practical use. To this is added a very carefully compiled index.

The conciseness and care with which the questions of law, so frequently arising on taxation, are discussed, and the accuracy with which the authorities, bearing upon each point, are collected, will render this little treatise an acceptable boon to members of the Bar, while the practical nature of the information contained in it will make the publication indispensable to members of the other branch of the legal profession.

THE COURT AND COURT PAPERS.

OPENING OF EASTER TERM.

Monday, being the first day of Term, the Lord Chancellor held a levée of the Judges and members of the Bar, at his residence, Merrion-square, South.

The Lord Chief Justice and the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas also held similar levees at their residences.

The Lord Chief Baron, being engaged in the Nisi Prius Court, did not hold a levée.

The Lord Chancellor afterwards held a levée of the Judges and Benchers, &c., in the Hall of the Four Courts, which was densely crowded by the members of the legal profession and the general public. Upon the entrance of the Right Hon. Mr. Justice Morris, his lordship was greeted with applause. The learned Recorder was also received in a similar manner.

The various courts of law and equity were opened with the usual formalities.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

The Lord Chancellor, accompanied by the Lord Justice of Appeal, the Master of the Rolls, and Master Murphy, as Master for the week, entered court about one o'clock.

The Lord Chancellor having taken his seat alone, the Right Hon. Hedges Eyre Chatterton, Q.C. appeared at the side-bar, when the Lord Chancellor said he had much pleasure in requesting him to take his seat within the bar as Her Majesty's Attorney-General for Ireland.

Robert Richard Warren, Esq., Q.C., having also appeared at the side-bar, the Lord Chancellor said he had much pleasure in asking him to take his seat within the bar as Her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Ireland.

BUSINESS OF THE COURT.

The Lord Chancellor, addressing the Attorney-General, stated that he and the Lord Justice of Appeal were willing to leave it in the hands of the Bar to settle the time for the sittings of the Court of Appeal, as they were aware that, in consequence of the public business, the Attorney and Solicitor-General could not be in court next week, at all events, and before the last day of term a time might be arranged for the sittings of the Appeal Court.

IN CHANCERY.

Sale.

Estate of John R. Somers, Esq., executor of John Wade, deceased, petitioner; the Rev. James Kirby and others, respondents.—A sale of the leasehold interest of the testator in the premises known as Nos. 60, 61, and 62, Ranelagh-road, facing Mountpleasant-square, took place on Monday, the 15th inst., before Master Murphy, at his Chambers, Four Courts. These premises, which were held for a term of 200 years from 2nd September, 1843, produce a profit rent of £35 per annum. The poor law valuation is £80. They were sold to Mr. John Kelly for £350, Cathcart and Hemphill, solicitors having carriage of sale.

ROLLS COURT.

JUDGMENT.

Tuesday, April 16.—M'Cormack and Others v. The Queen's University.

At the sitting of the Court, judgment was delivered in this case.

The Master of the Rolls, in delivering judgment, said that the suit had been instituted by three graduates of the Queen's University, who were the petitioners. The respondents were the Corporation of Queen's University, several individual members of the Senate, and their secretary. The petition prayed for a declaration that the provisions of a Supplemental Charter, dated in 1866, were inconsistent with the provisions of a previous charter of 1864, and that a resolution, whereby the majority of the Senate, present at a meeting in October, 1866, purported to accept the supplemental Charter, was null and void, and of no force and effect in relation to the Queen's University. It also prayed an injunction to restrain the respondents from surrendering the Charter of 1864, and from accepting or acting upon the Supplemental Charter, or any Charter inconsistent with that of 1864, and from matriculating or conferring degrees upon any persons other than those qualified under the Charter of 1864, and from doing any act whereby the rights and privileges of the petitioners might be interfered with. After the passing of the statute 8 & 9 Victoria, chap. 65, under which the Queen's Colleges were founded by a Royal Charter dated in October, 1850, some provisions of which were slightly marred by another in 1852, these were surrendered, and a new one granted in October, 1864. In referring to the several clauses of this Charter, his Honour said that the thirteenth clause, which was very important, defined the powers of the Senate. It ordained that the Senate for the time being should have the entire management of and superintendence over the affairs, concerns, and property of the University, and in all cases unprovided for by the Charter it should be lawful for the Senate to act in such manner as should appear to them best calculated to promote the purposes intended by the University; and it gave the Senate power from time to time to make and alter any by-law and regulation, not repugnant to the laws of the realm, or the general objects and provisions of the Charter, touching the examinations and qualifications for degrees or other University distinctions, and the mode of convening the meetings of the Senate, and in general touching all other matters whatever regarding the University, not otherwise expressly provided for by the Charter. The Supplemental Charter, which was referred to in the petition, bore date the 25th of June, 1866. It recited the Charter of 1864, and the provisions in it authorizing the Senate to grant degrees to person who had studied wholly or partially in the Queen's Colleges. It then recited that it was expedient to extend the benefits of the University, and for that purpose to enlarge its power, by enabling it to grant degrees and distinctions to persons deemed qualified, although they might not have matriculated, or pursued any part of their studies in any of the Queen's Colleges. It ordained that all persons, though not educated in the Queen's Colleges, should be admitted as candidates for degrees subject to rules to be made by the Senate. With the policy of the change introduced by this Charter he had nothing to do, but the change was obviously a very fundamental one. It empowered the University to confer degrees on classes not only different from those defined in the 7th clause, but to whom the University was previously expressly prohibited from granting them by the 16th clause of the former Charter. The petition, after referring to the material clauses of the two Charters, submitted that the provisions of the Supplemental Charter were inconsistent with and repugnant to the provisions of the Charter of 1864, and, if acted on, would derogate from the privileges conferred upon and vested in the petitioners, and the other graduates, members of the Queen's University, as constituted by the Charter of 1864, by admitting to equal rights and privileges in connexion with the University, and with the Convocation, persons not included in or contemplated by the provisions of the Charter of 1864. The petition also submitted that a valid acceptation of the Supplemental Charter could not be effected save by the consent of the entire corporate body of the University. The steps taken in relation to the Charter were shortly these. On the 27th June six vacancies were filled up in the Senate. On the 11th July the Senate met, and, amongst other business, the consideration of the question respecting the acceptance of the Charter was adjourned, and a meeting of the Convocation was appointed to take place on the 12th October. A warrant issued authorizing the Convocation, and on the 6th October, and before the meeting of Convocation could take place, the Senate met again, and by a majority of eleven to nine votes passed a resolution that the Supplemental Charter be accepted, and appointed a committee to report as to the proper mode of carrying it into effect. The meeting of Convocation took place on the 12th October, and at that meeting a resolution was passed without division, that, in the opinion of Convocation, the acceptance of the Supplemental Charter was inexpedient. A cautionary notice was then given to the Senate not to proceed on the Charter. After mentioning in detail the legal proceedings that had been adopted in reference to the question, his Honour said that the result now was simply that the Charter had been accepted by the Senate by a majority of votes, at a regularly constituted meeting, but it had not been accepted by the corporation at large. So far as there was evidence of the assent or dissent of the entire body, he thought there was sufficient to show that a considerable majority of its members were opposed to accepting the Charter. Two questions had been raised—one whether the new Charter, having been accepted by the Senate, was binding on the University; and the other, whether the petitioners were entitled to call for the interference of the Court in this suit? He should first consider the latter point. In an earlier stage of the case there was some discussion whether the Court had any jurisdiction to interfere, but it was not subsequently disputed, and it appeared plain that the Court had jurisdiction to give the relief sought upon an information filed by the Attorney-General. The question was, therefore, narrowed to this—whether a suit could be maintained, framed as this was, in which the parties putting the Court in motion were three graduates, who, as such, were members of the corporate body of the University, and to which the Attorney-General was no party. The petitioners insisted, and it was not disputed, that the acceptance of the Supplemental Charter, in whatever form the law allowed or required it should be accepted, was essential to its validity. If the petitioners were right in their view—that there had been no valid acceptance of the Charter, neither the University, nor the Senate acting for it, had any right to confer degrees; and if they, notwithstanding, affected to exercise the power of conferring them, they were arrogating to themselves the exercise of the Queen's prerogative, just as any other unauthorized body of persons who should take upon themselves to confer such honours; and besides that assumption of the Royal prerogative, there was the injury to the public by giving titles which were represented to be valid degrees, but which were on this supposition worthless. If, on the contrary, the petitioners were wrong in their view, they were in this suit seeking to interrupt the due exercise of the Queen's prerogative by those to whom she had deputed it, and to deprive all the Queen's subjects who might claim degrees under the powers conferred by this Supplemental Charter of the advantages to which they were entitled. Thus the rights either to be asserted by the petitioners or to be defended against them were those of the Queen and the public. The Attorney-General was (save in the case of some rare exceptions not applicable here) alone recognized by the law as the proper litigant to represent such rights. He was of opinion that the petition in the cause was unsustainable, on the ground that the Attorney-General was not a party to it. If that were the only defect in the suit, it might be remedied by bringing the Attorney-General before the Court as a defendant; but he had come to the conclusion that the suit could not be maintained at all by the present petitioners, even if the Attorney-General were a defendant. In order to maintain a suit as a plaintiff, a litigant must show some injury to himself as an individual, to be redressed or prevented. If no private right of his, such as the law recognizes, is violated, and no loss has been or is about to be suffered by him as an individual, he cannot become plaintiff in a suit, merely because others do not perform their duty to the public. When the act complained of is that of a corporate body, or the governors or committee of such a body, it can make no difference in the application of the rule that the party complaining is a member of the body, unless there be some private interest or privilege attached to his membership. It had been argued that the effect of accepting the new Charter would be to intrude improperly into the corporate body new members in the persons of the new graduates. A subsidiary question was discussed: Whether the graduates so admitted would or would not be members of the corporate body? In his opinion, they would not. But, even if he had come to a different conclusion, he was not sure it would have advanced the case of the petitioners. He doubted if the injury done to them by attempting to allow others to share their privileges was as strong a case of individual injury as excluding the petitioners from the right they claimed to take part in deciding upon the question, Whether the new Charter was to be rejected or accepted. It appeared to him that each petitioner had only the same grounds for maintaining the suit which any of the public might assert. His Honour then went on to say:—It may be that, in the present case, the right to institute a suit is not confined to the Attorney-General, as representing the public. It may be, as I before mentioned, that the acts of the Senate are an injury to the corporate body of the Queen's University, in respect of which the corporation in its corporate name may be entitled to institute a suit; but that consideration certainly does not help to remove the objection to a suit by the present petitioners. There is a class of authorities in which, when the whole corporate body have power to validate the act complained of—as they have in the present case—individual members, even in cases where they had clearly a private interest otherwise sufficient to sustain the suit, have been held incompetent to sue. Having, therefore, come to the conclusion that the matters complained of are not a private injury to the petitioners—such as the court can recognize—that there is no grievance to them as individuals, I must hold that they have no locus standi in this suit, and I can only act upon what I find to be the established doctrine of the court, and refuse to interfere on their application. I accede to the force of the arguments that were raised, that the court has jurisdiction to decide the question raised on the construction of the charter of 1864, and to restrain the Senate from exceeding their powers, but only in a suit properly constituted, and on complaint made by a party entitled to make it. Indeed I do not understand the respondents now to dispute the jurisdiction to entertain these questions at the suit of the Attorney-General. In conclusion, his Lordship said:—As I have come to the conclusion that the petitioners cannot sustain the present petition, it becomes unnecessary to decide the question, whether the power of accepting or rejecting the Charter is vested in the Senate or in the corporation at large of the University; but after the very elaborate discussion which this question has undergone, I cannot say that I have not formed an opinion upon it. It is certainly not free from difficulty, but my present impression is in favour of the view pressed by the petitioners, that the charter of 1864 does not vest the power of accepting or rejecting the new charter in the Senate exclusively. It is useless to state at length the reasons which led me to this result, for any view which I have formed or may express on the point must be, of course, extra-judicial, and not binding upon any one, and I cannot say that I entertain it so confidently that it might not be changed. The conclusion to which I have come on that point is, however, an additional reason why I should be glad that the decision which I feel bound to make against the petitioners on the other branch of the case should, if it be erroneous, be corrected by a higher tribunal. It does not, however, enable me to excuse the petitioners from paying the costs of the defendants, who have successfully resisted the suit. The petition must be dismissed with costs to Mr. Lawson's clients; that is, one set of costs. I give no costs to the other defendants.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, APRIL 27, 1867.

A CASE, as regards the administration of justice, of considerable interest, especially as to the jurisdiction and powers of the Court of Probate over persons summoned to give evidence in that Court, recently arose during the progress of a trial there. A note of the case will be found in our legal reports, in this number.

The question raised in that case, in this respect, was simply this:—Has the Judge of the Probate Court the power to order the discharge, from arrest, of a person who had been duly summoned to give evidence on a trial in that Court, and who had been arrested under civil process when proceeding from his residence to the Court, to obey the subpœna of the Probate Court. That the Court of Probate is a Court of Record there can be no doubt; the 28th section of the Probate Act so enacts. And it certainly ought to have, as such, as extensive a jurisdiction in this respect as any of the other Superior Courts of Record; but the difficulty or objection that was raised by counsel, who argued against such jurisdiction, and in support of the arrest, in the case referred to, was that the Court of Probate is in fact the creature of a particular statute, and that the act omitted to give to the Court the jurisdiction in question.

However, it would occur to us that as the Act in express terms gives to the Court "the like powers, jurisdiction, and authority, for enforcing the attendance of persons required by it as aforesaid, &c., &c., as are by law vested in the Court of Chancery" (30 s.); and as the words "as aforesaid" refer to the previous section (29th), which authorizes the Court to require the attendance of any person whom it may think fit to be examined in any suit or other proceeding, in respect of matters or causes testamentary, and may examine, or cause to be examined, on oath, parties and witnesses, we can, therefore, not easily apprehend the doubt that is said to exist on those sections as to the power in question of the Court, first, to compel the attendance before it of a witness, and secondly, to protect such witness, eundo, morando, et redeundo, from the interference of the sheriff or his bailiffs in the execution of civil process upon him. During the discussion of the case it seems to be assumed that the Court had no power to issue a writ of Habeas Corpus. Now it occurs to us that there is authority for holding that such power is inherent in the Court—we mean the power to issue a writ of Habeas Corpus, to bring up a prisoner who was arrested under civil process while obeying a subpœna to give evidence in court. The grounds of this position are, that by the 30th section of the Probate Act the Court is invested with the same powers as the Court of Chancery in this respect; and, therefore, the simple question is, has the Court of Chancery power to issue such a writ, in the case of an arrest of a witness duly subpœnaed in that Court, and arrested under the process of a Law Court?

Now, as to the right of the Court of Chancery to protect, by its own authority, persons who may be arrested under civil process out of a court of law, the law appears to be clear, and to have been settled a considerable time ago.

Thus, in the year 1800, an action was brought against the sheriffs of London for an escape. The grounds of action were, simply, these:—That a bankrupt had been, when attending the Commissioners at Guildhall for examination, arrested by the defendants, at the suit of the plaintiff, under an execution at law, but was, on the remonstrance of the Commissioners discharged; and Kenyon, C. J., in giving judgment, making absolute a rule which the defendants had obtained to change the verdict for the plaintiff into a non-suit, observed:—"The Commissioners are a court of justice sufficient for the purpose of having their witnesses protected, at least, by the Court of Chancery, if not by themselves. If so, I cannot distinguish between the case of a witness, and that of a party himself, whose presence may be equally necessary to explain his own case; et ubi eadem est ratio idem est jus."—Arding v. Flower, 8 T. R. 373.

That case was decided in the King's Bench, in England, and was fully approved of, and acted on, by Lord Eldon. In 1812 a petitioning creditor, under a commission of Bankruptcy, was also arrested at Guildhall, immediately after proving his debt. The process of arrest was also a law process; and an application was, in the first instance, made to a law Judge (Le Blanc), who refused the application, as it is said, "either on the consideration of the authorities, or as not having jurisdiction." An application was then made to the Court of Chancery, and Lord Eldon made the order for the discharge, remarking:—"If a person going to make an affidavit before a master was arrested, this Court would discharge him; but a Judge would not, as the application must be to that Court of which the proceeding is a contempt;" and again, "In that case (Arding v. Flower) the Court of King's Bench stated the principle upon which all courts have since acted, and I have no doubt that the principle reaches this case." And he, moreover, gave costs against all the parties concerned in the arrest, the attorney, the officer, and the client.—(List's Case, 2 V. & B. 273). That case is cited in the last edition of Daniel's Ch. Pr., 2 Vol., 965, to sustain the same doctrine.

So, in Ireland, in Mahon v. Mahon, 2 I. E. R.: 440, a defendant in equity, who was arrested by law process when on his way to attend the hearing of his cause, was discharged by the Master of the Rolls; and we must also add that a similar order was made in a law court.—(Rooney v. Cooke, 10 I. L. R., 469.) So that it would appear, notwithstanding Lord Eldon's decision, that either the Court out of which the process issued, or the Court which has been treated with contempt are alike competent to make the order.

It was, no doubt, for some time questioned, whether, in such cases, of witnesses in Chancery who were arrested by law process, the party should not resort to the court of law; and it was thought that the Court of Chancery could not interfere. That misconception—if it was so—arose from the words of the 14 G. III., c. 102, which confers that power on any of the Judges or Barons in England or Ireland; and it was thought the Legislature meant to point to law Judges; but it would appear that there was no ground for that opinion, as Kindersley, V. C., in the case of Buckeridge v. Whalley, 6 W. R., 180, following some unreported cases, one before Lyndhurst, C., and the other Re Hanbury, before the Master of the Rolls, said:—"We had considered the point a good deal, and had applied to Mr. Murray, the Clerk of the Records and Writs, upon the subject, who stated that he recollected a similar case before Lord Lyndhurst, in which he had made such an order. In the present case, taking all things into consideration, there would be, in truth, no interference with the Court of Common Law to have the defendant brought up as was asked. The order must be that he should be brought up de die in diem, as the proceedings at which he was required to attend should render it necessary." See also other cases cited in a note to that case, and also 1 Smi. Ch. Pr., 611; and the same remarks apply to a Habeas Corpus in general. As we said at starting, the points that we have touched on appear of considerable importance, and are well entitled to the attention of the profession; and if any rational doubt exists on the point a speedy remedy should be applied, in order to obviate in some cases the expense, delay, and inconvenience of making the application to a court of law.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS BILL.

A Bill to provide for the more effectual Prevention of Corrupt Practices and Undue Influence at Parliamentary Elections. [Prepared and brought in by Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Secretary Walpole, and Mr. Hunt.]

This Act may be cited for all purposes as "The Corrupt Practices at Elections (Trial) Act, 1867."

Interpretation of the terms "Election," "County," "Borough," "Voter," "Candidate," "Bribery," &c.

Where any candidate returned to serve in Parliament at any election for a county or borough is charged with having committed at such election, by himself or his agents, the offence of bribery, treating, and undue influence, or any of such offences, a petition complaining of the return of such candidate on the ground of his having committed such offences, or any of them, may be presented to the returning officer by any candidate at such election, or by any three voters of such county or borough, or by any such candidate and voters, and such petition may or may not claim the seat or any other candidate at such election.

Regulations as to petition.

The petition to be forwarded to the Speaker.

As soon as may be after the passing of this act the Speaker shall form a list of persons willing, and, in his opinion, able to investigate any charges of bribery, treating, or undue influence made in election petitions under this act; and such list is hereinafter referred to as the panel of election commissioners. The Speaker may from time to time add any name to the panel of election commissioners, or take any name of such panel. The Speaker shall from time to time report to the house the panel of election commissioners, and any alteration made therein, but such panel shall remain in force notwithstanding the prorogation or dissolution of Parliament.

No person shall be placed on the panel of election commissioners to serve in England unless he is qualified as follows:—viz.—Is a barrister or serjeant-at-law of not less than seven years' standing, and is in actual practice, or is or has been a judge in one of her Majesty's Superior Courts in England, or of the Court of Admiralty, or a commissioner in Bankruptcy, or a judge of a County Court, or a Recorder of London, or a stipendiary magistrate, or a judge of some supreme court in some part of her Majesty's colonial dominions, or in India.

Within seven days after the receipt of an election petition, the Speaker shall select from the panel of election commissioners three persons to be commissioners, for the purpose of investigating the charges contained in the petition, and shall name one of such persons to be chairman.

At the time and place appointed the commissioners shall proceed to investigate the charges contained in the petition, and shall, as far as practicable, continue such investigation from day to day. On the termination of the investigation the commissioners shall report to the Speaker whether, in their opinion, the candidate whose return is complained of has or has not been guilty of the charges made against him, or of any of them; they shall also, where the petition claims the seat for any candidate, and the claim is insisted on, inquire and report whether such last-mentioned candidate has or has not been proved guilty of the offences of bribery, treating, and undue influence, or of any of them, and if not, whether he has or has not a majority of legal votes at such election. The commissioners shall also report whether it has been proved to them that the offences of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or any of them, have prevailed extensively in the county or borough the election for which they have been investigating.

Where any candidate is reported guilty of the offences of bribery, treating, and undue influence, or any of them, the report shall state whether he is guilty personally or by his agents.

The report of the commissioners may be in the form marked (C) in the schedule hereto.

On the receipt of the report the Speaker shall, as soon as practicable, communicate it to the House of Commons, and lay the report on the table. The House of Commons shall order the report to be entered in their journals, and shall, if no such motion is made and resolution passed as is hereinafter mentioned, give the necessary directions for either confirming or altering the return, or entering a writ for a new election to be issued.

Any member of the House of Commons may, within the period of fourteen days after the report has been laid on the table, exclusive of any time during which the house is not sitting move the house that the report of the commissioners be referred to an election committee on grounds to be stated by him to the house, and the house may resolve accordingly; and in the event of such resolution being carried, the petition on which the report has been made shall be deemed to be an election petition within the meaning of the act of the session of the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter ninety-eight, and to have been presented within the time limited forthe presentation of election petitions, and shall be dealth with accordingly, with these exceptions:

1. That, in addition to the recognizances required by the said act, the petitioner must prove to the satisfaction of the examiner of recognizances that he has paid all costs, charges, and expenses due from him on account of the investigation by the election commissioners of the charges contained in such petition.
2. That on the hearing of the petition by the select committee, no evidence shall be received except that taken by a shorthand writer as hereinafter mentioned on the investigation by the commissioners.

Where a report has been presented by the election commissioners under this act before the candidate whose return is complained of takes his seat, and the report is to the effect that such candidate has been guilty of the offences of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or any of them, he shall not take his seat until and unless he is declared by an election committee, in manner hereinbefore mentioned, not to have been guilty of the said offences, or any of them.

Any candidate for a county or borough who is found guilty of the offences of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or any of such offences, by a report of the election commissioners under this act, and whose return is in consequence made void, shall, in addition to any penalties to which he is otherwise subject by law, be disqualified as follows—that is to say, if found personally guilty of any of the above offences, he shall, the first time that he is so found guilty, be incapable of being elected, or sitting in the House of Commons, for a period of five years, and if found personally guilty of such offence a second time, he shall henceforth be incapable during the remainder of his life of being elected or sitting in the House of Commons. If found guilty by his agents of any of the above offences, his election shall be void, and he shall be incapable of being elected or sitting in Parliament for the same county or borough during the Parliament then in existence.

The commissioners shall report specially to the Speaker the names of any persons, other than the candidate complained of, who have been proved before them to have been guilty of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or of any of such offences, and who have not been furnished by them with certificates of indemnity, in pursuance of the power hereinafter given; and such report, with the evidence thereon shall be laid before the Attorney-General, with a view to his instituting, at the public expense, a prosecution against such persons, if the evidence is, in his opinion, sufficient to support a prosecution.

If any candidate knowingly employs at any election the services of any person who, before the passing of this act, has been, or may hereafter be, found guilty of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or any of such offences, by any competent court, or by any committee of the House of Commons, or by the election commissioners under this act, or by any commissioners appointed under any other act to inquire into the conduct of elections, the election of such candidate shall be void.

There shall be paid to each election commissioner the sum of pounds for his services in respect of each election petition.

The election commissioners may appoint a secretary, who shall be paid a sum of pounds for his services in respect of each election petition, and shall perform such duties as may be required by the commissioners.

The commissioners appointed to investigate the charges contained in an election petition shall have all such powers, rights, and privileges as on the occasion of any action or suit are vested in or exerciseable by any of her Majesty's superior courts, or in any judge thereof, in any of the matters following; that is to say—1. The enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and examining them on oath, affirmation, or otherwise, as they or he may think fit; 2. The compelling the production of documents; 3. The punishing persons guilty of contempt; and a summons under the hand or hands of one or more of the commissioners may be substituted for and shall be equivalent to any form of process capable of being issued at law in any action or suit for enforcing the attendance of witnesses or compelling the production of documents.

Any warrant of committal to prison issued for the purpose of enforcing the powers conferred by this section shall be under the hand or hands of one or more of the commissioners, and shall specify the prison to which the offender is to be committed, and shall not authorise the imprisonment of any offender for a period exceeding three calendar months.

The investigation under this act of the charges contained in an election petition shall be conducted in public, and due notice shall be given by the election commissioners of the time and place of holding the same.

All questions before the commissioners shall be decided by a majority of voices.

The returning officer shall provide a court, with all necessary accommodation for the sittings of the commissioners.

The commissioners may adjourn from time to time as occasion may require.

The proceedings of the commissioners shall not be affected by any prorogation of Parliament.

The commissioners shall throughout their investigation be attended by a shorthand writer appointed by the Speaker, and sworn by the chairman of the commissioners faithfully and truly to take down the evidence.

Expenses of witnesses. Indemnity to witnesses.

Fees of returning officer. Expenses of returning officer.

The salaries of the commissioners and their secretary, together with a reasonable sum for lodging and travelling expenses, shall be defrayed by the Treasury, except in cases where the commissioners report that the offences of bribery, treating, and undue influence, or some one or more of the said offences, have prevailed extensively in the county or borough the election for which they have been investigating, in which case the salaries and expenses provided for by this section shall be deemed to be expenses incurred by the returning officer in carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and shall be defrayed accordingly.

All costs, charges, and expenses of and incidental to the presentation of a petition under this act, and to the proceedings consequent thereon, with the exception of such costs, charges, end expenses as are by this act otherwise provided for, shall be defrayed by the parties to the petition in such manner and in such proportion as the commissioners may determine, regard being had to the disallowance of any costs, charges, or expenses which may, in the opinion of the commissioners, have been caused by vexatious conduct, unfounded allegations, or unfounded objections on the part either of the petitioners or the respondents, and regard being had to the discouragement of any needless expense by throwing the burden of defraying the same on the parties by whom it has been caused, whether such parties are or not on the whole successful.

The commissioners shall, at the conclusion of the hearing of the petition, or as soon afterwards as they conveniently can, estimate the amount of costs, charges, and expenses due to the several parties to the petition, and certify under their hands the parties by whom and the parties to whom such costs, charges, and expenses are to be paid.

Certificate of commissioners to be conclusive.

The Speaker may also correct any informality in any petition, recognizance, or other document required by this act in cases where it is proved to his satisfaction that no injustice will be done to any party by such correction, on payment of such costs and subject to such conditions as he thinks just.

No action shall be brought against any commissioners appointed under this act, or any other person whomsoever, for anything done in the execution of this act, unless such action be brought within six calendar months after the doing of such thing.

APPLICATION OF ACT TO IRELAND.

This act shall apply to Ireland, with the modifications following ; that is to say—No person shall be qualified to be an election commissioner for Ireland unless he is a Barrister-at-law of not less than seven years' standing, or is or has been a Judge of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts, or is or has been Recorder of Dublin, or Judge of the Landed Estates Court, or an Assistant Barrister.

SIR COLMAN O'LOGHLEN'S Bill, "To Abolish Arrest for Debt, except in certain Cases, and to Amend the Law of Debtor and Creditor in Ireland," has been introduced and read a first time without observation. Upon the second reading, which is fixed for the 15th May, the discussion of its provisions will, doubtless, take place. These are of an important nature, and, should the measure become law, they will cause very fundamental changes in the present code—changes, however, in harmony with the principles of the law as proposed for England. The following is an outline of the provisions of the Bill, which comprises sixty-eight sections :—

After the passing of the Act arrest for debt in Ireland shall be abolished, and all prisoners for debt shall be forthwith discharged out of custody, but such discharge is not to prevent the judgment under which the party was arrested from remaining in full force against the property of such debtor. The property of a non-trader debtor shall always remain liable to his debts, from the payment of which the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency shall not have the power to exonerate or exempt it. Nor shall the Court in future be able to discharge any person as an insolvent debtor.

In certain cases, before judgment, a writ of ne exeat regno may issue against a debtor, under which, when arrested, he shall remain in custody until he give sureties in the amount marked tha the will not leave Ireland for the time mentioned on the writ.

In certain cases, also, before judgment, a writ of fieri facias may issue against defendants' goods, which, when seized, are to be safely kept to abide the order of the Court, or, if the Court think proper, may be sold and the amount paid into Court.

As to the effect of judgments for the payment of money entered either before or after the passing of the Act, they are not to continue in force for a longer period than seven years from the passing of the Act, or from the date of their being entered, unless proceedings for enforcing same be actually pending at the time, when such seven years would expire. No such judgment shall be capable of being revived, but nothing shall prevent a new security in writing being given for the original debt secured by the expired judgment. This, however, is not to affect judgments which shall be, before the passing of the Act, charges on land as respects such land. As to executions under such judgments, they shall attach any income payable out of property in Ireland, or any money to which debtor may be entitled in any Court, or any money lodged by or to the credit of any debtor, or any trustee for him, in any Bank, or with any person or company in Ireland, in same way as joint-stock property is now attachable under "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1853."

With regard to property of a Non-trader debtor, any salary, wages, pension, or income which cannot be seized or attached, or when he has made away with or conceals his property, a judgment ereditor, unable to realize by execution, "may present a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, praying such relief in respect of his debt against the respondent as such petitioner shall think proper." Upon such petition, duly verified, an order for hearing shall be made and notice given to the debtor. If debtor shall not appear at time appointed for hearing such petition, a warrant for his arrest may issue to bring him before the Court. At the hearing he shall be examined on oath as to his property, and if he refuse to answer questions he may be committed to prison for a period not longer than six months. On the other hand, if at such hearing it appear that he has made away with or concealed property, he may be committed for a period not exceeding twelve months, while the Court may issue a warrant to search for and seize any property of the debtor anywhere concealed. Such property, or part of it, when seized may be ordered to be sold for the benefit of the petitioner, and the surplus of such sale or property shall be handed over to the debtor. A debtor's benefice may be sequestrated by the Conrt in favour of the petitioner. The Court may order that petitioner shall receive so much of the debtor's pay, half-pay, salary, emolument, or pension as the Court (with consent of head of the department under which pay is enjoyed) shall think proper, and same shall be paid to the petitioner accordingly until further order of the Court." Two or more creditors may join in one petition, or proceedings under two or more petitions may be consolidated. If creditor's petition be maliciously filed, Court may order satisfaction to the party aggrieved. If a debtor against whom such petition has been filed be about to quit Ireland, Court may order his arrest and seizure of his monies, books, and documents.

Any Non-trader debtor unable to meet his engagements, but capable of making proposal for payment or arrangement of his debts by instalments or otherwise, may petition the Court for protection of his property from sale for a limited time. With such petition a schedule shall be filed, when a time for hearing shall be fixed and notice thereof given to the creditors. At the hearing petition may be adjourned or dismissed, or protection to the debtor's property granted for period not exceeding five years, provided a majority in number and value of the creditors shall assent in writing, but not otherwise.

Protected property exempt from seizure without leave of Court; but any creditor may apply for rehearing of petition, when Court may alter or vary order made. At the expiration of the protection, any creditor may proceed for his debt; and, if his judgment shall have expired, he may issue a fieri facias out of Court of Bankruptcy to enforce his debt for such period as he might have issued same if no protetion had been granted.

The Court of Bankruptcy may direct certain petitions of or against non-trader debtors to be heard before chairmen of counties, but from their decisions an appeal may be made to Court of Bankruptcy.

As to the discharge of Trader-debtors, a bankrupt's certificate shall hereafter be either Absolute or Provisional; an absolute certificate shall free future acquired property in respect of debts proveable under the bankruptcy; a provisional certificate shall not. No such absolute certificate shall be granted unless 6s. 8d. in the pound be paid to the creditors, or three-fourths (in value) of the creditors shall in writing consent.

As to the mode of making available the future property of a bankrupt, it is to be by summons requiring him to appear and be examined on oath. On hearing of the summons the Court may order him to pay money into Court for dividend amongst the creditors, but only after a reasonable allowance for his and his family's maintenance, and after full payment of all debts not proveable under the bankruptcy. For the purposes of this dividend the Court may, "if it thinks fit," appoint the official assignee to act and account as receiver of the bankrupt's property. If such money be not paid into Court the estate shall vest in the official assignee, and may be sold for benefit of creditors.

As to Civil Bill Courts, decrees for sums not exceeding £10 are not to be affected by the Act. But such decrees shall specify the period, not exceeding three months, for which debtor shall remain in custody if amount of decree be not paid. Debtor obtaining discharge by payment of instalment may be arrested for subsequent instalment or for balance of debt.

The Judges of Common Law Courts are empowered to frame the necessary writs, and the Judges of Court of Bankruptcy to make general orders for carrying the Act into effect. There is also power given to the latter Court to discharge debtor from custody if further imprisonment would endanger health. The Act is to be cited as "Arrest for Debt Abolition Act (Ireland), 1867."

ENGLAND.

MARTIAL LAW.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, in his marvellous charge to the grand jury, occupying five hours and a half, without pause or hesitation, although assisted only by a few brief notes, established this important fact, that martial law, as popularly understood, is unknown to the law of England. The army is governed by martial law; but that is not a capricious law; it administers a military code to which soldiers are subject, but it has no jurisdiction over civilians. That, however, is not the martial law contemplated when we speak of a province being placed under martial law. What we really mean by this expression is, that in a certain lawless condition of a country the ruling power is by the Constitution of England authorised to place the civil courts in abeyance, and to subject all persons to the jurisdiction of the military power upon any charges connected with the insurrection.

On this, says the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, in effect, popular opinion errs. The law of England vests no such power in any authority, even the very highest. The QUEEN herself cannot proclaim martial law, and therefore she cannot delegate such a power to any governor. If Ireland were in a blaze to-morrow, the Lord Lieutenant could not place it under martial law, nor could the Commander-in-Chief try a single civilian at the drum-head, though taken red-handed, with a torch in one hand and a sword in another, a mansion before him kindled by the one, a corpse by his side slain by the other. If then actually resisting, he might be bayoneted, but he could not be taken prisoner, tried by a court-martial and shot, however necessary to the safety of the country might be the example of prompt and severe punishment. In rebellion, force may be employed to any extent to put it down—all engaged in a breach of the peace might be slain while in the act of breaking the peace, if necessary for the suppression of the disturbance; but that is all. No tribunal but a special commission, save the regular courts of justice, could try a single prisoner.

Such is the law of England, and it is a splendid proof of the general concord of her sons that no domestic occasion has arisen to require an alteration of that law. Long may it be before there is a necessity for a change. But it may well be doubted if such a state of the law is adapted to the condition of our colonies and dependencies. At home the Government has overwhelming strength, and rebels are sure to be a minority. But in many of our colonies, as in Jamaica, the ruling race are but a handful among the multitude of the subject race; they can govern only by the fear of superior force; they are surrounded with foes, who want only the opportunity to annihilate them, as is proved by the numerous attempts made for their destruction, there being an insurrection in Jamaica once in five years upon an average. If the authorities there and elsewhere are not armed with martial law, or something like it, it is difficult to see how the whole population is to be preserved from extinction by the superior numbers of the enemies by whom they are surrounded.

But, it is said, though you may not try by military tribunals, the soldiers may use any amount of force, and kill any number of rebels, that may be requisite for the suppression of insurrection; but there their function ends, and it is not their business to punish, nor to make examples. That is the duty of the civil power.

May it not be questioned whether humanity profits by this limitation? If martial law, as it is popularly understood, were to be sanctioned in certain contingencies, some justice would be done. There must be some delay, some proof of guilt, some time for passion to cool, and some proportion of punishment to guilt. The soldiers would take prisoners. But if there is no tribunal, if themselves are to be judges and executioners, they will be tempted to inflict summary vengeance, and, in the doing of their legal duty of suppressing insurrection by force of arms, to do what they would otherwise have reserved for the drum-head, and shoot and cut down without mercy or discrimination. The grand jury expressed their hope that martial law, as it is called, may be better defined by statute; or rather, we suppose, that definite powers should be given by positive law to colonial governors, that they may know what they may and what they may not do when placed in the perilous position of Governor EYRE, who saved us a colony, snatched thousands of his countrymen from death, and hundreds of English-women from a worse fate, and is rewarded by an indictment for murder and ruinous lawsuits. In this request of the grand jury the whole country will join, for, as it is, the hands of our colonial governors are everywhere paralysed, and must continue to be so, as long as they see before them a prosecution for murder if they put down a rebellion, and an impeachment if they do not.—Law Times.

COVENANT AGAINST BUILDING—ACQUIESCENCE.—A purchaser of a plot of building ground entered into a covenant between himself and the vendor (the plaintiff) and all and every other the persons who should, as similar purchasers, execute the indenture, and their respective heirs and assigns, to leave open and unbuilt upon certain portions of the land coloured blue, on the plan annexed to the indenture. The defendant became a purchaser of this plot, and executed the deed in Aug., 1863. Previously to this, in 1860 and 1862, other purchasers of similar plots had built upon land so marked blue. The defendant also was proceeding to build upon his plot, when the vendor filed his bill for an injunction to restrain him from so doing. Held, that, as the vendor had allowed other purchasers of similar plots to depart from the terms of the covenant, and as any uniformity of design had been destroyed, he could not now restrain the defendant from proceeding to build upon his plot of land. (Peek v. Matthews, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S., 199, V. C. N.)

WINDING-UP.

CONTRIBUTORY.—B., a stockbroker, in 1855 bought fifty shares in a company which had no register of shareholders, the shares passing by delivery of the certificates. He alleged that he bought them for C., a customer, who was his solicitor, and the certificates were by him delivered to C. In 1857 the company was wound-up. In 1859 the official manager applied to B. to ascertain if he was still the holder of the shares at the date of the order. B. gave this letter to C., requesting him to answer it. In 1861 he received notice that he was placed on the list of contributories for the fifty shares. This letter he took to C., requesting him to give it proper attention. C. wrote assenting on B.'s behalf to his (B.'s) name being retained on the list, and the call was paid by C., who afterwards died, and then B. received notice of a further call. The official manager knew nothing of the circumstances, nor by whom the call was paid. The M. R. had decided that B. was not entitled to have his name removed by reason of his laches; but the Lords Justices on appeal held that laches was no bar where the party had never been a shareholder. (Ex parte Shewell, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 194. L. JJ.)

WILL.—REMOTENESS.—B. directed his trustees to pay the income of a trust-fund to C. for life, and after her death to her children generally for their lives, and gave the fund, after the deaths of such children, on certain trusts. At the date of the will C. was past child-bearing. The gift of the fund, after the death of the children, was nevertheless held to be void for remoteness. (Re Sayer's Trust, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 203. V. C. M.)

COVENANT—MINING LEASE—E. and S. by deed in 1857 granted and released lands to R. and his heirs, reserving therefrom all the coal and minerals under the lands so granted, with power to win, work, and carry away the same to X., or the persons entitled thereto, they paying to R. compensation for the damage so caused. The deed also contained a covenant by E. and S. for themselves, so far only as related to their own acts, that they had not done any act whereby the premises conveyed should or might be encumbered or prejudicially affected. And a further covenant by X., that notwithstanding any act by him or Y. deceased, E. and S., or one one of them, had good title to grant and release to R., free from all incumbrances by X., or any of his ancestors, or other person claiming under them. In 1844 Y., an ancestor of X., had granted a lease of the coal mines and minerals under the premises so conveyed to R.; and the lessees covenanted to work and carry on the collieries in a fair manner according to the most approved method, so as to produce the greatest quantity of merchantable coals. The lessees were bound to provide support for certain specified houses, but not for houses to be thereafter built. R., under the grant of 1857, built houses on the surface land conveyed to him, and the lessees of the minerals under the lease of 1844 subsequently so worked the mines in accordance with the covenant in the lease as to cause the surface to subside, and the foundations of R.'s houses to become weakened. Held, that there was a breach of X.'s covenant for title under which R. was entitled to recover for the damage. (Taylor v. Shafto, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 205. Ex. Ch.)

PLEA OF WAIVER.—In an action to recover against a tenant double the value of the premises for holding over after the expiration of a notice to quit, it is not necessary, in order that the defendant may avail himself of a waiver on the part of the landlord, that such waiver should be specially pleaded. (Rawlinson v. Marriott and another, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 207. Nisi Prius.)

ATTORNEYS IN THE OLDEN TIME.

A curious legal treatise, about 200 years old, is in the possession of Mr. Registrar Harris, F.S.A., who is the owner of several rare and interesting works relating to our legal and constitutional history. The book in question is entitled, "The Practicle part of the Law: shewing the office of an attorney, and a guide for Solicitors. London: printed for Henry Twyford, in Vine Court, Middle Temple, 1676." The writer observes that "the attorneys are very many, not being limited to any set number." General directions are given to the practitioner, not omitting the subject of fees, respecting which he is told, "The fees you are to pay at the assizes are as follows: to each counsel you retain, at the least, 10s.; for the jury 8d. apiece." There is also a charge "for lights, if the cause be tried by candle-light." In the City of London Sheriffs' Court at that time the fee to counsel was 3s. 4d., and that to the attorney 1s. 8d.

By the rules and orders for the King's Bench, "formerly appointed by the Judges, and still in practice, it was provided "that all officers and attorneys of this Court be admitted of some Inns of Court or Chancery, wherein they were admitted officers or attorneys, and be in commons one week in every term, and take chambers there; or in case that cannot be conveniently, yet to take chambers or dwellings in some convenient place, and leave notice with the butler where their chambers or habitations are, under pain of being put out of the roll of attorneys. 2. That officers of this court appear in person in this court upon or before the 14th day of Michaelmas Term, and upon or before the 7th day of every other term, upon pain of 10s. for the first default, 20s. of the second default, and putting out of the roll upon the third default." As regards the admission of attorneys of that court, it is provided "That none be admitted unless he hath practised as a common solicitor for five years, or hath served, or shall serve, by the space of five years, as a clerk to some judge, serjeant-at-law, practising counsel, attorney, clerk, or officer of one of the courts of Westminster." We also find it "Ordered that a jury of able and credible officers, clerks, and attorneys, once in three years be impannelled, and sworn to inquire of such who have been admitted attorneys or clerks, and are notoriously unfit, their names to be presented to the court, and they to be punished or removed, as the case shall require." On his admission the attorney had to take an oath, and, among other things, was made to promise, "You shall increase no fees, but you shall be contented with the old fees accustomed." Connected with this part of the subject there was an order of the court that "in actions of slander, long preambles be forborne."

Appended to this work is a concise treatise on "The Law and Customs of London, which appears to have been intended as a sort of guide to country practitioners how to conduct themselves so as to keep out of scrapes when they visited the metropolis. We are here told that "every one who bringeth victuals to London may sell it without disturbance to fishmongers, butchers, poulterers, and others."

Note, the allowance for finding of orphans according to the ancient rate and customs of London, or other city where the like custom is, shall not be taken for usury.

No man shall blow any horn in the night within this city, or whistle after the hour of nine o'clock in the night, under pain of imprisonment.

No man shall use or go with vizards disguised by night, under like pain of imprisonment.

Every householder whose houses adjoyn unto or is next the street, from Michaelmas till our Lady day yearly, shall set or hang out candles or lights in lanthorns, or otherwise, in some part of his house next the street, to enlighten the same for passengers, from such time as it shall grow dark till nine of the clock in the evening, upon pain of one shilling for every default.—Law Times.

In the Matter of the Companies' Act, 1862, and Kingstown Royal Marine Hotel Company, ex parte Cockburn.

April 24.—Companies' Act, 1862—Winding-up—Bankruptcy.

The petition was presented for winding-up the Kingstown Royal Marine Hotel Company, The petitioners were creditors of the company for a balance of £3,400, under a contract with them to build the hotel. Several of the creditors of the company appeared; among others, Messrs. Jameson and Sons, who had brought an action for their debt. They served the summons and plaint on the 16th of March, 1867, and received an undertaking from the solicitor of the company to confess judgment on the 1st of April following. Before the latter date the petition in this matter was presented, and on the 30th of March the Lord Chancellor made an order directing all proceedings by execution against the company to be stayed until the 17th of April, but refusing to prevent such creditors as were entitled to do so from marking judgment or registering their judgments as mortgages. The Messrs. Jameson opposed the order unless it was made without prejudice to their right to issue execution.

Pallas, Q.C , for the petitioners.

Daniel, for Messrs. Jameson, contended that an order under this act had not the same effect as an order in bankruptcy, and relied on In re Great Ship Company, 10 Jur., N S. 4; In re London Cotton Company, L. R., 2 Eq., 53; Anderson's case, L. R., 3 Eq., 337, as entitling them to have their right to issue execution reserved.

The Master of the Rolls said that there was nothing to distinguish the Messrs. Jameson's claim from that of any other creditors who had brought an action and refused to annex any qualification in their favour to the order.

The other creditors of the company did not oppose the making of the order; but a discussion arose whether the winding-up of the affairs of the company should be referred to the Court of Bankruptcy, under the 81st section of the Act, or carried on in this Court under the 73rd section.

Palles, Q.C., for the petitioners, and Martin for another creditor, said that the majority of the winding up cases which had occurred in this Court had been referred to the Court of Bankruptcy. No rules had been made here as there had been in England, under the Companies' Act, 1862.

Kernan, Q.C., for the Directors, Lawless, Q.C., Graydon, S., Walker, Daniel, and Coates, for other creditors, preferred that the proceedings should be carried on in this Court.

The Master of the Rolls (April 25) said that, on consideration, he saw no advantage in sending the case to the Court of Bankruptcy. On the contrary, questions might, and probably would, arise in this case which it would be more convenient to have decided by this Court. He should, therefore, make an order of reference for winding up the Company in this Court, and direct that the practice under the former winding up Acts should be adopted.

His Honour directed notice of the motion to be served.

In the Matter of the Appointment to the Office of Local Inspector of Prisons.

April 24.—Dublin Improvement Act—Presenting Terms.

This matter came before the Court upon a question as to whether the appointment to the office of Local Inspector of Prisons in Dublin lay with the Town Council or with the City Grand Jury. It appeared that a vacancy occurred in the office in the month of March, and that the Town Council thereupon made an appointment ad interim. On the part of the Town Council it was now contended that, whatever might ultimately be the decision upon the point, it was premature to discuss the matter at present; that upon the construction of the various statutes relating to the City of Dublin, where a vacancy occurred "between two presenting terms" the Town Council had the right to appoint a person to fill the office until the next presenting term; that by the Dublin Improvement Act there was now only one presenting term, namely—Michaelmas Term—and that the office was filled till then, and therefore the question could not arise until then. On the other side it was contended that Easter and Michaelmas were the ordinary presenting terms, that the effect of the Dublin Improvement Act was only to make Michaelmas the single term in which money could be levied, and for other fiscal purposes, and that this was the proper time for having the question discussed.

Monahan and Hartigan appeared to support the right of the Grand Jury.

Serjeant Barry, Q C., for the Town Council.

The Court held that the expression "presenting terms" did not mean any particular terms, such as Easter and Michaelmas, but the terms at which fiscal business was to be done; that the effect of the Dublin Improvement Act was to make Michaelmas the only term at which that could be performed, and therefore there was but one presenting term for the City of Dublin. Until then, therefore, the office was full by the ad interim appointment which the Town Council had power to make; and accordingly the discussion of the question was premature.

Attorney for the Town Council, Morgan.

COMMON PLEAS.

Gibbons v. M'Evelly.

April 16.—Replevin, Count for Trespass, not Praying Return of the Goods.

Motion that the writ of replevin sued by the plaintiff out of the Court be quashed, and all proceedings had thereunder set aside, and that plaintiff return to defendant the goods replevined. The summons and plaint complained that the defendants, in a certain dwelling house in the townland of Driskilane, in the Co. of Mayo, took the goods of the plaintiff, that is to say three beds, &c. (describing the goods), and unjustly detained the said several goods against sureties and pledges, until, &c., whereby the plaintiff has sustained £100 damages; and the plaintiff prayed judgment against the defendant to recover the said sum of £100 and his costs.

Jellet, Q.C., and Wilson.—This is not a count on which a writ of replevin should have issued. Summons and plaint in replevin should pray a return of the goods, and here the plaintiff only prays judgment for damages. The Common Law Procedure Act, sec. 228, directs that where the plaintiff seeks to replevy he shall commence his proceedings by a "personal action for the recovery of the goods." The count here is only one for trespass.

Palles, Q.C., and Carton.—The summons and plaint contains particulars of the property taken, and the place of the taking complained of, which are not required in a count in trespass, and shows it to have been drawn under the 228th sec. The Act does not say that the plaintiff should pray judgment for the recovery of the goods, and by the nature of the case he must get back the goods before judgment.

The Court considered that the count sufficiently complied with the 228th sec of the Common Law Procedure Act, and refused the motion.

Attorney for the plaintiff, George Lynch.

Attorney for the defendant, W. J. Bourke.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law

BLOOMFIELD v. CLANCY.

Dec. 11, 1866.—Plea that the deceased did not know the contents of the Will.

A plea that the alleged testator did not know and did not give any instructions for a residuary clause, directed to be pleaded, in addition to those of undue execution, want of capacity, and undue influence.

This cause was at hearing before a jury respecting the validity of the will of Dr. Frederick Drought, dated the 13th July, 1866, in which the plaintiff was named sole residuary legatee.

The defendant, as sister and sole next of kin, impeached the will, on the grounds of want of capacity, and undue influence, and fraud, and coercion exercised by the plaintiff on the deceased.

The plaintiff himself proved that he took the instructions from the deceased and drew the will, naming himself sole residuary legatee, subject only to two annuities of £50 and £70, for the lives of a Mrs. Ryan and her child.

When the defendant's case was proceeding it was intimated by the Court to Dr. Ball, Q.C., counsel for the defendant, that the pleas should be amended by adding a plea that the deceased did not know or give any instructions for the residuary clause in said will contained.

Dr. Ball having acquiesced, the plea was accordingly added, but the jury could not agree to a verdict. (See O'Reilly v. O'Reilly, 11 I. Jur., N. S. 216).

EASTWOOD v. EASTWOOD.

Dec. 17, 1866.—Witness—Arrest—Discharge.

Quere—Has the Judge of the Probate Court power to discharge from custody a person who was subpœnaed as a witness to attend the Court, and was arrested on his way to Court under civil process.

Semble—That he has. But the affidavit as to the party's residence being defective, no rule was made.

W. O'Driscoll moved for the discharge from custody of Thomas Reid, a prisoner in the Four Courts Marshalsea, under a civil bill decree. He had been duly served with a subpœna ad testificandum in this case, on the part of the defendant and intervenient. The case was in the Legal Diary on the 29th November for hearing, and was adjourned on that day to Hilary Term next. The witness swore that he was under the belief that the case was still at hearing on the 4th December, and that he on that day left his lodgings in Gardiner-street, Dublin, to attend as a witness on the trial of the said cause, but was on that day arrested on his way down, and was taken to the Marshalsea under a civil bill decree from the Recorder's Court against him for £26 6s. 6d.; and that he had no other business to attend to on said occasion save attending as a witness in said case.

The affidavits on the part of the applicant were not satisfactory as to his residence in Gardiner-street. The answering affidavits stated that his residence was in Nicholas-street at the time of his arrest, and for some time previously.

Counsel for the applicant submitted that the Court, as a superior Court of record, had full power to enforce the attendance of witnesses (29, 30, and 37 sections of 20 & 21st V., c. 79), and therefore, as a necessary consequence, had power to discharge a witness arrested when on his way to attend the Court. The Court out of which the process issued for the attendance of the witness is the proper Court to apply to. Even inferior courts have exercised this power without any special provision. (1 Ch. Archb. 771).

If a Court has power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, it must, of necessity, have the power to protect them, and to order their discharge from custody when arrested on their way to give evidence in the Court.

The following cases were cited—(Atkinson v. Kirkwood, Hayes & J., 546, in which Joy, C. B., said that the Court of Quarter Sessions could discharge a magistrate who had been arrested under process out of the Exchequer, while attending as a suitor in the Court of Quarter Sessions, and also as a grand juror there). Mahon v Mahon (2 Ir. E. R., 440); Att. G. v. Skinners' Co. (1 Coop. 1); List's case (2 V. & B., 373); Rooney v. Cooke (10 I. L. R., 469); Arding v. Flower (8 T. R., 534).

Geo. Waters, for the detaining creditor, contra.

This is a case of the first impression. The proper course would be to apply to a law Judge for a Habeas Corpus to bring up the prisoner. By the 30th s. of the Probate Act, the powers of the Court appear to be limited to the following cases:—1st, to enforce the attendance of witnesses; 2nd, to punish persons not attending; 3rd, to punish persons guilty of contempt.

The Court is one of limited jurisdiction, and in such cases Courts of limited jurisdiction must be strictly held within the terms of their charter or statute. (2 Inst., 548, 3 Bl. Comn. 85).

Next.—Another question is, whether this power to discharge is incident to all Courts. No doubt that the very lowest tribunals have the power to summon persons as witnesses. But that leaves untouched the question—have they power to discharge persons who, when summoned as witnesses, have been arrested under civil bill process?

KEATING, J.—Does not the power to enforce attendance imply the power to discharge?

No; unless the arrest was made in the face of the Court. That was held in the case of Wilson v. Sheriffs of London (1 Brownl. & Gouldsb., 15), where it was held in the Common Pleas, in England, that where a defendant was arrested when going to the Court of the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to defend an action there depending, in which he was a defendant, unless the arrest were made in the face of the Court, it could not discharge the prisoner.

Webb v. Taylor (1 D. & L. 676), where the applica- to discharge a witness who was arrested when summoned to give evidence before arbitrators was made to the Court of Queen's Bench, out of which the process issued, a similar rule was made as to persons summoned to attend before the Insolvent or Bankrupt Courts (1 Ch. Archb. 771), and where a party was attending as a witness in the Prerogative Court, and was arrested under process out of the Court of Exchequer, the application for his discharge was made to the latter court.

[Keatinge, J.—I have no recollection of any application having been ever made to me as Judge of the Prerogative Court to discharge a witness]

A similar application was made to the Common Pleas in England to discharge a witness attending before a police magistrate to give evidence on a charge of felony and arrested on his way to the police court. The application was there made to the Court of Common Pleas.—(Montague v. Harrison, 27 L. J., C. P. 24.)

2 Tayl. Ev. 1132. Tidds Pr. 200, Astbury v. Belbin, 3 Car. & K. 20. Tilly v Irwin, Armstr. M. & Ogle, 170. Where the Chief Baron held that he had at Nisi Prius no power to discharge a witness who had been arrested. In Atkinson v. Kirkwood the point was not argued, and it involves only a dictum that was unnecessary to the decision of the case. The distinction to be attended to is, between the case of a contempt of court and the power to discharge from arrest.—(Hare v. Hide, 16 L. B., n. s. 394.

Keatinge, J.—The affidavits filed by the applicant are quite defective as to his residence, and on that ground I say no rule on the motion, but I may add that the strong inclination of my mind is in favour of the jurisdiction, that if I have power to summon I have also power to discharge from arrest; but on this motion I do not decide the point.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before Berwick, J.

Re Doyle, a bankrupt.

April 26, 1867.—Reckless trading—Fraudulent preference—Debt fraudulently contracted.

The bankrupt, who was a grocer, came up for final examination.

Kernan, Q.C., appeared for creditors.

Perry, Attorney for the bankrupt.

It appeared that in November last the bankrupt executed a mortgage to his brother for a debt previously due to him; that he had gone on trading at a ruinous loss, and that after his bill had been dishonoured, he bought a cask of sugar from a merchant named Glennon, with whom he never had a previous transaction; he bought it for cash, and on the day it was to be paid for he called a meeting of his creditors, and handed over to a favoured creditor certain shares in the Dublin Brewery.

Berwick J., said the conduct of the bankrupt was reckless and fraudulent, and he would adjourn the granting of the certificate for nine months, with protection for a month.

Agent to the bankruptcy, Hamilton and Craig.

Agent for the bankrupt, Perry.

CIRCUIT CASES.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

Belfast—March 20, 1867.

Reported by J. Lowry Whittle, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Coram Fitzgerald, B.

Moore v. Reid.

Jurisdiction—Question of Title.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Chairman of the County Antrim. The process was for trespass on a limestone quarry of the plaintiff's, at Greenland, Larne. The plaintiffs claimed under a lease from the Earl of Antrim, of July 1859, by which certain quarries on the Antrim property were demised to the plaintiffs for the term of 40 years. This demise included the quarry at Greenland.

By another lease the surface of the lands at Greenland were demised by the Earl of Antrim to Mr. Chaine; but the quarries all were reserved out of this demise. Moore, the defendant, was a yearly tenant of Greenland, under Mr. Chaine, and proved, at the assizes, that he, and his father before him, had, from time to time, used the quarry without permission from any one, for more than a period of 40 years. In March, 1865, plaintiff's attorney wrote to defendant, threatening proceedings; and it was alleged that defendant then promised to cease working the quarries, and to pay costs. On this point there was some conflict of testimony. The defendant contended that a question of title being involved, the jurisdiction of the Chairman was ousted. The Chairman gave a decree for 1s., on the understanding that there should be an appeal.

W. H. Kisbey, for the respondent.

H. Fitzgibbon, for the appellant.

Fitzgerald, B., confirmed the decree, holding that the two leases from Lord Antrim, one to the plaintiff, the other to the defendant's landlord, removed all question as to the title.

Money Paid to Defendant's Use—Principal and Agent.

The defendant was a farmer; and on the farm there was a shop belonging to him, but which was managed, and the goods for which were ordered, by plaintiff, who was his son. Differences arose between the plaintiff and defendant; and on one occasion, when one M'Causland, by whom some goods for the shop had been supplied, called at the shop and requested payment of his bill, the defendant said to plaintiff, "You have taken money out of the till and robbed me, and you may pay that bill." The plaintiff accordingly paid the amount of the bill, and processed the defendant to recover the amount as money paid to his use. The Chairman dismissed the process.

Law, Q.C., and Frazer, Q.C., for defendant.

Falkiner, Q.C., for plaintiff.

Falkiner argued that plaintiff paid the money as agent for his father.

Fitzgerald, B.. held that there was no agency—that plaintiff was under no legal compulsion to pay the bill, and therefore affirmed the dismiss.

A Barrister and his Fee.—Mr. Lilly, of the Surrey circuit, was summoned last week to recover the fee of five guineas paid him on a brief to defend a prisoner at Maidstone, but which he had to hand to a brother barrister. The Judge ruled that, the fee being an honorarium, plaintiff could not sue, and non-suited her with £2 costs.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, ENGLAND.

Ex parte BUCHANAN.—Field, Q.C., moved the court to allow the applicant, who had been articled to an attorney, to enter into fresh articles. The applicant was articled in Nov. 1861, and served under his articles until 13th April, 1865, when, designing to be called to the bar, his articles were rescinded. He then entered at one of the Inns of Court, but subsequently decided to renew his service under articles in his former branch of the profession.—The COURT considered that they had no jurisdiction in the matter.

Application refused.

ADDRESS TO THE RT. HON. F. BLACKBURNE.

At a meeting of the Bar, held in the Law Library, Four Courts, on Wednesday,

WM. C. HENDERSON, Esq., Q.C., in the chair.

The address of the Bar to the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne on his retirement from public life, having been brought up by the committee appointed to settle same, and read, Sergeant Armstrong (in the absence of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, who were engaged elsewhere, owing to their public duties) proposed that the address, as approved of, be engrossed, and signed by the Father on behalf of the Bar, and that he do arrange with the Right Hon. F. Blackburne as to the time and manner of presenting same.

Mr. Wall, Q.C., seconded the motion, which was passed unanimously.

The thanks of the meeting having been awarded to the committee who prepared the address, and also to the chairman, the meeting separated.

APPLICATION FOR A PATENT FOR A NEW THEATRE.

The Attorney-General and Solicitor-General sat on Monday, at eleven o'clock, in the Council Chamber at the Castle, to hear an application on behalf of the Winter Garden and Exhibition Palace Company for a patent to use a portion of their building as a theatre for dramatic and operatic representations.

Heron, Q.C., with Hudson, solicitor, appeared in support of the application.

It was opposed by Purcell, Q.C., and Walker, as counsel, with W. Keatinge Clay, solicitor, on behalf of Mr. Bicknell, the patentee of the Theatre Royal, Hawkins-street; also of General Sir Frederick Smyth and another, trustees for parties having annuities charged upon that theatre; also by Exham, Q.C., with same solicitor, on behalf of Mr. Harris, the lessee of the Theatre Royal; by Dowse, Q.C., and Keatinge Clay, on behalf of Mr. Joseph, the patentee of the Queen's Theatre; and by Lloyd, Q.C., and Nunn, solicitor, on behalf of Trinity College, who are the lessors of the Theatre Royal.

Heron, Q C., stated the case for the petitioners, and at the close of his statement intimated his intention to go into evidence in support of it, when

The Attorney General observed that if it were necessary to go into evidence he would be obliged to adjourn the enquiry to some other time, as, having regard to his other pressing duties, it would be impossible for him to spare just then the time requisite for that purpose.

Purcell, Q.C., said that on a former occasion when a similar application was made by Mr. Boswell to the then Attorney-General, the present Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, the inquiry occupied two entire days.

A discussion then arose as to whether the further hearing of the case should be at once adjourned, or whether counsel for the several opposing parties should be then heard; but the Attorney-General having expressed his opinion that the latter would be the most convenient course, as it would enable him and the Solicitor-General to form some opinion as to the nature and extent of the evidence which might be required, the several counsel were accordingly heard on behalf of their respective clients. At the close of their statements the case was adjourned by the Attorney-General to a future day to be named, and reasonable notice of which would be given by the law officers to the several parties concerned, for the purpose of going into evidence. He also intimated to Mr. Heron that, after what had been urged by those opposing the application, the parties applying should be prepared at the next hearing to satisfy himself and the Attorney-General, in the clearest manner and beyond doubt, of the necessity for another theatre in Dublin, and that additional theatrical accommodation was required by the public. He did not by any means intend to convey that even, if satisfied on this point, they would recommend the Crown to grant a patent; but this was a preliminary matter on which they would require to be fully satisfied before going further into the case of the parties opposing the grant. They would also require the most satisfactory evidence that there was a suitable building for the establishment of a theatre. The applicants must remember that it was a full patent, entitling them to perform the highest dramatic and operatic performances, that was sought for— not a licence for the representation of theatrical pieces, which the Crown in this country had no power to grant; and the applicants should also be prepared with the names of individuals who would take the grant, and become responsible for the good conduct and management of the theatre. If a case were made out for the grant, he did not consider that a company or a fluctuating body like a committee were proper persons to whom a grant should be made.

The proceedings then terminated.

SIR C. O'LOGHLEN—THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

The newspaper press is placed under no common obligations to Sir Colman O'Loghlen. His bill to amend the law of libel is the first step towards a bold and rational mitigation of a code which is a scandal to a free country. For more than a century the nation has been entertained with the cant of "a free press," and while statesmen have charmed the Senate with musical periods and exalted sentiments on this theme, and even the vulgarest mob-orators have vaunted the same imaginary liberty, the press has been in reality impeded and coerced by legal liabilities the most absurd, vexatious, and barbarous that could well have been devised for the suppression of news and the extinction of discussion. The proprietor of a newspaper may be sued for the language of a judge whose charge he reports, for the speech of a member of Parliament printed in the debate of last night, for the phraseology of a public official document reproduced in his paper among the news of the day. He is liable to have his time and money wasted by the first thin-skinned, or foolish, or ill-conditioned person who, taking personal offence at the charge, or the speech, or the document, chooses to pester him with ridiculous litigation. And not only is he liable to be civilly sued, but to be criminally prosecuted for the language of the judge, or the senator, or the pleader. And this monstrous code subsists in a country whose entire government rests upon the principles of publicity and discussion! That, under these preposterous conditions, the newspaper press exists at all is due solely to the decency and manliness of public men and to the courage of the proprietors of newspapers. Even the elementary principles of the Constitution are systematically reversed, for the purpose of overpowering the action and destroying the obvious rights of the press. In no other case is the preposterous phrase "exemplary damages" ever heard from the Bench, as if the object of a civil action were to punish the defendant instead of to compensate the plaintiff. In no other case, excepting in that of the newspaper proprietor, is any British subject held criminally liable for the act of his salaried officer. Are the proprietors of a railway liable to be fined and incarcerated for the negligence or mistakes of their paid officials? This stupid and flagrant contempt of the first principles of English liberty is practised in no solitary case but in that of the newspaper proprietor. While this code continues in force, whatever else we may boast in our after-dinner speeches and senatorial clap-trap, let us, at all events, cease to celebrate the "freedom" of our abused, and outraged press. With those sympathies with the interests of civilization and with the rights of discussion, which are inherent in every true gentleman and liberal mind, Sir Colman O'Loghlen has commenced the emancipation of the fettered press of these countries—Dublin Evening Mail.

IN CHANCERY.

Columbus Drake, Petitioner;
Dudley Brennan and others, Respondents.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850," section 15.

PURSUANT to the Decretal Orders made in this Matter, bearing date respectively the 29th day of June, 1865, and 12th May, 1866, I will, on THURSDAY, the 3rd day of MAY next, at the hour of One o'clock in the afternoon of said day at my Court, Four Courts, Inn's-quay, in the City of Dublin, SET UP and SELL BY PUBLIC AUCTION, to the highest and best bidder, all the Estate and Interest of MICHAEL BRENNAN, deceased, and of PATRICK BRENNAN, his eldest son and heir-at-law, also deceased, of and in all that and those the Concerns, formerly called Saint Francis' Abbey Distillery, with the Malthouse, Stores, Brewhouse, Forge, Stables, Garden, Yard, and Water Courses thereunto belonging, together with the Distillery and other Utensils, Vessels, and Implements, mentioned in a Schedule annexed to an under-lease of said Premises, from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, Esq., dated the 25th day of April, 1827; and also all that and those the Dwelling-house, Ale-house, Brewery, and Malthouse Stores, Stables, Offices, Gardens adjoining, together with that part of said Brewery Concerns adjoining to, and formerly part of Coals-yard of said Brewery, called in the under-lease the Coal-yard, all which Premises are now held by said Edmond Smithwick, under two leases,, one thereof from Michael Brennan, deceased, to Edmond Smithwick, dated 25th April, 1827, and the other from Patrick Brennan, deceased, to said Edmond Smithwick, dated 12th August, 1833, for the respective terms of 999 years, as set out in the Rental of said Premises, and are now known as Saint Francis' Abbey Brewery, and are situate in the City of Kilkenny, or a competent part thereof, for the purposes in said Decretal orders mentioned.

Dated this 21st day of January, 1867.

EDWARD LITTON.

These premises are held under two distinct leases, for lives renewable for ever, one of them dated the 5th of July, 1753, from William Archbold, and Anne, his, wife, to Ambrose Evans, and the other of said leases, dated 21st July, 1780, from the Rev. George Evans, to Edward Evans, which has been converted into a fee-farm grant. The entire premises now produce a profit rent of £252 8s. 4d., as more particularly set out in the rental thereof. The present tenant has expended several thousand pounds on permanent improvements on the premises, which are now in perfect order, and amongst the most thriving establishments in the south of Ireland.

To small capitalists, whose object is a well-secured income, with a safe and adequate return for capital, these premises offer an investment rarely to be met with.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In the Matter of Edward Cahill, of Aungier-street, in the City of Dublin, Builder, a Bankrupt.

TO BE SOLD BY TENDER, by Order and subject to approval of said Court, all the Estate, Right, Title, and Interest of the Bankrupt and Assignees, of, in, and to the equity of redemption, in all that lot, piece, or parcel of ground, being part of the Lands of Rathgar, situate in the Parish of Rathfarnham, Barony of Rathdown, and County of Dublin, containing in front to Brighton-avenue, 158 feet, or thereabouts, and facing the Harold's Cross road 142 feet, or thereabouts; bounded on the north-east by a plot of ground in possession of John Dudley, and on the south-east by Kenilworth-square avenue, on the north-west by Harold's Cross road to Brighton square; held under an Indenture of Lease, dated 13th day of April, 1864, for the term of 890 years, at the yearly rent of £26 5s., payable half-yearly. Together with the Two New Dwelling-houses and Out-offices, which have been lately erected on part of the ground, called and known as Nos. 1 and 2, Brighton-terrace.

The Vendors will sell subject to a Mortgage of £300, dated 17th June, 1864, to be repaid in 14 years by half-yearly payments, on the dates and in the manner therein mentioned, and in respect of which the Vendors will discharge all payments due prior to date of the Sale.

CHEYNE BRADY, Chief Registrar.

Dated this 17th day of April, 1867.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

Mr. Cahill has erected on the above Premises Two Handsome Two-storey Houses, at a cost of upwards of £1,000, which are most advantageously circumstanced in one of the best localities in Rathgar. There is ground suitable for the building of three other houses, and with trifling outlay a very handsome property can be made.

The charge of the Mortgages is only payable by instalments of £35 11s. a-year, without interest, which the Purchaser will have the advantage of.

Sealed Tenders endorsed "Re Edward Cahill, a Bankrupt," addressed to Lucius H. Deering, Esq., Official Assignee, No. 33, Upper Ormond-quay, will be received up to Saturday, the 4th day of May next, at the hour of One o'clock in the afternoon, when they will be opened in the presence of the parties tendering, and the highest bidder declared, subject to the approval of the Court.

For Statement of Title, Conditions of Sale, and further particulars, apply to

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MAY 4, 1867.

WE propose in this, and some subsequent articles, to discuss the powers which tenants in tail possess of alienation of the estates of which they are seized; powers derived, as most of our readers are aware, from the statute called "The Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more Simple Modes of Assurance in Ireland" (4 & 5 Wm. IV., c. 92). Such Act being, in fact, a copy of the previous English statute on the same subject (3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 74).

Now, the first important consideration is this:—What tenants in tail are, by the Act referred to, authorized to make a disposition of their estates? The 12th section is the one that answers that question. It enacts that "every actual tenant in tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, shall have full power to dispose of, for an estate in fee simple absolute, or for any less estate, the lands entailed." But here we must revert to the first section for a definition of what is meant by the words an "actual tenant in tail;" and we there find them defined to be "the tenant of an estate tail which shall not have been barred," and that too, "although the estate tail may have been divested or turned to a right."

Now, it is obvious that those expressions are comprehensive enough to include, besides those persons usually looked on and considered as ordinary tenants in tail, also several other kinds of extraordinary tenants in tail—for instance, women entitled in tail, ex provisione viri, under the 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 8 (11 H. 7, c. 20 Eng.); so also, tenants in tail, after possibility of issue extinct.

In the former case, an alienation by the widow of such an estate tail was held void, unless the person who would be entitled to enter if she were dead, consented or concurred, by an instrument recorded or enrolled; and the Act in question leaves the law just as it stood previously to it, as regards all settlements made before the passing of that Act. But by the 14th section it swept away altogether the 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 8, as to all subsequent settlements; and, consequently, such cases are now placed on the level with all ordinary estates in tail.

As to the other case—that of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct—the law formerly was, that he was, in fact, but a tenant for life, with certain privileges—as that of committing waste, the consequences of his former estate of inheritance, and the 15th section accordingly expressly excludes such persons altogether from the operation of the 12th section.

Such, then, is the meaning of actual tenant in tail, within the statute; but the words of the Act are significant—viz., "in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise." Now, as to estates in possession, or as to vested estates in remainder, no difficulty occurs; but there are contingent remainders, and there are executory estates tail, proceeding or springing from executory devises or shifting uses. Are these comprised within the 12th section? It is apprehended that they are; provided the persons to take, in a contingent event, are ascertained; for the 45th section of the Act prevents a disposition of an estate cognizable only in equity; to be valid it must be effectual at law; and the Act, so operating, converts the former contingent or executory estate into a base fee, or a fee simple, as the case may be; besides, the rule of estoppel, and the doctrine of the feeding of estoppels, would also apply to make the estate pass, on the happening of the future event. (See Doe v. Oliver, 16 B. & Cr. 181).

If the person or persons, however, be not ascertained, as those who represent the class intended to take as tenant in tail of a contingent or executory estate, it can scarcely be contended that such a case is within the 12th section, so as to justify a disposition of such estate tail, even if afterwards the estate vested in him or them—unless, indeed, the doctrine of estoppel, to which we have already referred, should be held, as it might, to govern the case.

The Act has, however, by the 17th section, expressly taken away from issue, inheritable to an estate tail, all power of disposing thereof; whereas, before that Act, such issue could have, by means of a fine, with proclamations, bound themselves and all persons deriving or claiming through them, if the estate tail afterwards vested in them or their issue.

It would furthermore appear, from the language of the Act, that though an estate tail has been divested or turned to a right, still the disposition of the tenant in tail is valid; this is plain, from the 12th section, which authorizes a disposition by every actual tenant in tail, &c., against all persons claiming by force of any estate tail, which shall be vested in or might be claimed by, or which, but for some previous Act, would have been vested in or might have been claimed by the person making the disposition.

DEATH OF THE HON. EDMUND HAYES.

It is with extreme regret we have to announce the death of the Hon. Edmund Hayes, Ex-Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland. The melancholy event took place at the late residence of the lamented gentleman on Sunday morning, in Crinken House, near Bray, where he had been residing since his failing health obliged him to retire from the judicial bench. The late Judge Hayes was called to the Bar in the year 1827, and practised on the Home Circuit up to the period of his elevation to a judgeship of the Queen's Bench in 1859—a position which the state of his health obliged him to resign in the course of last year, his brain having become affected. Deceased was a Conservative, always consistent in his principles, and was highly esteemed for his integrity of character, social qualities, as well as the manly energy and skill with which he conducted his business as a lawyer. He was a very able advocate in criminal cases, and has left a work on criminal law behind him which has already become a text-book in the courts of law. He was appointed to his late position by the Conservatives during their short tenure of office in 1859, and he again resigned it into their hands on their accession to power in 1866, when he found it impossible longer to retain it. He died at about 64 years of age, and will be deeply regretted. Judge Hayes was a native of Banbridge, where his father and brother were extensive linen manufacturers. Deceased was a most expert conveyancer—in this branch of the profession he was eminent—and as a general lawyer he was beyond the average.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER (IRELAND).

Lord Dunkellin, in the House of Commons on Tuesday night asked the Attorney-General for Ireland whether, with regard to the vacant Mastership of the Court of Exchequer, it was intended to adopt the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Courts of Common Law and Equity, who in their second report stated that one Master was sufficient for the three Law Courts.

The Attorney-General for Ireland said that the subject was under the consideration of the Government, but no definite conclusion had been finally arrived at; he hoped in a short time to be better prepared to answer the question.

COLLEGE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

There was a very full meeting of the Society on Wednesday evening, May 1st, in the Dining-hall of Trinity College, when the following address was presented to the President:—

To the Right Hon. Sir JOSEPH NAPIER, Bart.,
President of the College Historical Society.

SIR,—You have, as our President, so long identified yourself with the interests and objects of our Society, that we gladly seize the occasion presented by the mark of Royal favour which you have lately received to renew to you the expression of our gratitude and esteem.

We are grateful for the assistance and support which you have uniformly afforded, for the encouraging hopes you have held out, and for the counsels of moderation you have consistently impressed upon us.

Not less do we value the close sympathy you have ever shown with the objects at which we aim, and the kindly appreciation you have bestowed on our efforts to carry them into effect.

Conscious that not a little of the success which the Society now enjoys is owing to the united feeling which binds its members together, it is with considerable pride that we accept the confidence which you have so frankly reposed in us as at once a testimony of approbation upon your part, and an incentive to exertion upon our's.

Our best wishes for your prosperity and welfare have been always with you, and we heartily rejoice at each fresh recognition of your private worth and public usefulness.

The Address was read by the Auditor, and then handed to the President, who made the following REPLY.

MR. AUDITOR AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COLLEGE HISTORICAL SOCIETY,—I thank you from my heart for the graceful tribute which you have presented to me on this occasion. The mark of Royal favour to which you have alluded, and which was graciously conferred on me by her Majesty the Queen, has been made the more gratifying to me by the kindness of your appreciation.

Digitized by Google

It cannot but be a source of much satisfaction to me to be assured by you that in the office of President (which I have had for years the privilege and the honour to fill), I have contributed to the success of the College Historical Society. From the day on which I was elevated to this office, it has been my unceasing desire to make the Society more and more a school of manly discipline for invigorating youthful intellect by the practice of free and fair discussion; for acquiring excellence, not only in debate, but in the more chastened exercise of written composition; and for forming habits of cautious discrimination in the adoption or rejection of opinions.

I am happy to be enabled to say, that in all your proceedings, these objects have been steadily and conscientiously kept in view. The fresh and earnest feeling of ingenious youth is blended with the moral thoughtfulness of the more advanced student; and the mutual deference that concedes to others the allowance and the forbearance which we all claim on our own behalf is cultivated and practised as a cardinal virtue. This thoroughly accords with the spirit of enlightened liberality that pervades the educational system of Trinity College,—a system of open, equal, and honourable competition, in which all are taught to respect the equities of social intercourse and the charities of Christian life. It requires not the compromise of one conscientious conviction; it forbids the intrusion of an unkindly feeling.

Gentlemen, I am proud to preside over a Society with such a prestige from the past, such a prospect for the future, and such an established position in the University to which I am bound by many ties of gratitude and affection. Separated as I am from the strife of party, I may hope to be the more free and the better qualified to guide and encourage you in dealing with those principles of political philosophy and of social science, those laws of order and progress, which are independent of party altogether.

The discharge of my duties as your President must always be regarded by me as a high and pleasing privilege. Your co-operation, and, above all, your success is an ample recompense for any efforts on my part. The spirit of unity and of kindly feeling by which your address to me is inspired, the emphatic approval of those counsels of moderation which I have urged upon you as conducive to the stability as well as to the success of the society, and the distinguished position which some of you have attained by the self-elevating power of high intelligence and virtuous industry,—all combine to make the address which you have here presented to me honourable to your feelings and deeply gratifying to mine. No honour could be more genuine, no tribute can be more grateful than that which is bestowed by minds candid, generous, and cultivated as your's.

MARK OF RESPECT TO THOMAS KENNEDY LOWRY, ESQ., Q.C., LL.D.

The Right Hon. Mr. Justice O'Hagan and the Hon. Judge Miller having joined their former brethren of the North-East Circuit in offering a tribute of respect to Thomas Kennedy Lowry, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., on his leaving their society, to which he had belonged for thirty years, to become a judge in Jamaica, a meeting was held on Monday, at which Mr. Justice O'Hagan did his former brethren the honour of taking the chair, when a cup and claret jug, with an inscription, were submitted for presentation. The jug bore the following inscription:—

"Presented to Thomas Kennedy Lowry, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., by members of the North-East Circuit of Ireland, on his leaving their society to become a judge in Jamaica, where they feel assured he will do honour to their profession in the office he has accepted, or to any other to which he may hereafter be advanced.—Four Courts, 1st of May, 1867."

Judge O'Hagan having taken the chair, Mr. M'Mechan said that in the absence of three of his seniors who had subscribed to the testimonial, and of a fourth who, he was sure, would do so, it devolved upon him to propose a resolution. These seniors were Mr. Thomas M'Donnell, the father of the North-East Bar; Mr. H. Holmes Joy, Mr. James Gibson, and Mr. John Adams. The brethren had joined him (Mr. M'Mechan) with great alacrity in the purpose for which they were met, and in purchasing the cup and claret jug now on the table. As the object of their regard was so well known to them, he should merely read the resolution, which, referring to the inscription, was that it but feebly and imperfectly expressed the feelings of this meeting towards their brother, Thomas Kennedy Lowry. "We are confident that he will administer justice in Jamaica to the honour of his Sovereign and the welfare of her subjects, and we sincerely hope he may find in seasons of relaxation society there in which hilarity with harmony shall prevail as uniformly as they have ever done during hours of conviviality among the members of the North-East Bar. We regret that his unexpectedly sudden departure has deprived us of an opportunity of meeting him as our guest, but we hope the jug and cup which we now send him will be accepted in remembrance of the happy circuit evenings we have spent when he was an esteemed companion of our festivity."

James Kernan, Esq., Q.C., said it gave him great pleasure to second the resolution, which expressed everything proper to be said on the subject.

Judge O'Hagan said he would not go through the form of putting the resolution, as it entirely expressed their feelings and met their approbation. He had known their brother Lowry all his life, and always felt for him the greatest regard, having found him a most sincere friend. He felt deeply obliged to his brother M'Mechan for having originated the subscription, which, owing to his absence from town, he could only do on Friday last. It was owing to his energy that the matter had been so well and tastefully accomplished, and he was convinced that their friend would highly prize this mark of their regard, and that to his family it would be equally gratifying.

The claret jug, mounted on a stand of black oak embossed with shamrocks, and thickly and elegantly ribbed with silver, was supplied with the cup, by West, of Dame-street.

The committee on Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, and the second reading of the Common Law Courts (Ireland) Bill, stand deferred to Thursday next, the 9th May.

The second reading of Sir Colman O'Loghlen's "Arrest for Debt Abolition (Ireland) Bill" is set down for Wednesday, 15th May instant.

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the "Attorneys', &c., Certificate Duty Bill," is fixed for Wednesday, the 29th May instant.

ENGLAND.

Recovery of Important State Papers.—Lord Romilly, the Master of the Rolls, writes to a contemporary:—"In the autumn of last year Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in his tour through America, visited the public library of Philadelphia, and was shown four volumes of original State papers, bearing the Royal sign-manual of James I. and the signatures of the Lords of his Privy Council, addressed to the Lord Deputy of Ireland. Mr. Hepworth Dixon, being naturally surprised at finding documents of that valuable nature in so distant a part of the world, made further inquiry, and was informed by the librarian that these papers had been originally taken away by the Chancellor of James II., evidently for some political purpose, and at his death were sold to the founder of the Philadelphia Library, by whom they were presented to the library in question. On inspecting the papers, Mr. Dixon at once saw their value, not only for the historical information they contained, but also as supplying a missing link in the State papers of Ireland. He, therefore, ventured to suggest to the Library Company of Philadelphia that it would be a graceful act on their part to restore to the British Government papers of such national importance. Mr. Dixon's suggestion was at once received, and he was informed that if a proper application was made by the British Government, in all probability it would be acceded to. On his return to England Mr. Dixon communicated these facts to me, and I immediately brought the matter before the notice of her Majesty's Government. The Lords of her Majesty's Treasury lost no time in taking the proper steps, and the Library Company have, in the most handsome manner, restored these valuable State muniments to Great Britain. A case has been received by me containing the four volumes in question, and also the original MS. of the Marquis of Clanricarde's Memoirs from October 23, 1641, to August 30, 1643, mentioned in Mr. Hardy's valuable report on the Carte and Carew Papers, and which has long been supposed to be lost. This work was actually presented to Mr. Dixon for himself, who, as soon as he discovered its contents, and that it belonged to the same set of State papers, thought proper to restore it to the series from which he considered it unfit that it should be separated. I need scarcely say that it is of great value. The Lords of the Treasury have presented to the Philadelphia Library Company a complete set of all the works published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, as a mark of their sense of the liberal act performed by the directors of that company."

A NEW POINT IN THE LAW OF RAILWAYS.

In November last Mrs. Austin and her infant travelled by the Great Western Railway; she paid nothing for the child, infants in arms being permitted by custom to be carried free. An accident occurred, the child was injured, an action was brought, and the jury gave £50 for damages. The defendants applied to the Queen's Bench for a new trial, upon the ground that the infant, having been carried free, was nothing more than so much luggage taken in the hand of the passenger, for which the company was not answerable, as it had not contracted for its transit. But the court held otherwise. The officials of the railway had allowed the child to pass with its mother, and they had tacitly agreed to carry both, and by that contract they had incurred the same liabilities in respect of the child as towards other passengers. With this decision before them, the railways will not in future permit the gratis carriage of infants. If they are to be answerable for injuries, they must be paid for their risk. One-fourth of the full fare would probably be just.—Law Times.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER, LONDON.

SLADE v. SLADE.

The case of Sir Marcus Slade, Bart, v. Alfred F. A. Slade (who has appeared as Sir Alfred Frederick Adolphus Slade, Bart.), which is now before the Court of Exchequer, London, is in the form of a special case, and involves a question of the very greatest importance to the plaintiff and defendant, as it places in issue the title to certain landed estates and a baronetcy. "It is to be remarked," says The Times, "that both gentlemen are trying to enforce what they really and conscientiously believe to be their strict rights. The plaintiff maintains that his brother, the late baronet, died without leaving lawful issue, and that he is entitled to succeed to the title and property. The defendant contends that he is the lawful male issue of his late father, Sir Frederick Slade, and consequently his heir." The journal named gives the subjoined interesting statement of the case:—An action of ejectment was brought by General Marcus Slade, Colonel of the 50th Regiment, and brother of the late Sir Frederick Slade, Bart., Q.C., against Sir Alfred Slade, the eldest son of Sir Frederick, to recover possession of the manor of North Petherton, in the county of Somerset, and certain other lands entailed in the Slade family. By a settlement executed by Sir J. Slade in 1832, certain estates in Somersetshire and Dorsetshire were settled on the sons of Sir John Slade successively for life, with remainder to their issue in tail male. Sir John Slade had several sons—John Henry, the eldest, died without issue, as also did Charles, the second son; and the third was Frederick William, who, on the death of Sir John Slade, succeeded, under the limitations of the settlement, to the estates and title. Sir Frederick had a twin brother, Marcus, the present plaintiff. Sir Frederick married in December, 1833, at St. George's Hanover-square, Maria Barbara, the daughter of Mr. Charles Browne Mostyn, of Kiddington, and had by her several children, of whom Alfred, the present defendant, is one, and is the eldest of the sons. On the death of Sir Frederick Slade in 1863 his son Alfred entered into possession of the family estates, and assumed the title of Sir Alfred Slade, Bart. This right, however, to the estates and title was disputed by his uncle, General Marcus Slade, the present plaintiff, and the action was brought to try that right. The case on the part of the plaintiff is, that the marriage between Sir Frederick Slade and his wife was void, because the lady had previously contracted marriage at Milan in the year 1825, with an Austrian gentleman named Baron C. Von Korber, who survived till the year 1853. It is alleged by the plaintiff that the first marriage of Lady Slade was a valid marriage according to Austrian law, and consequently as Baron Von Korber was alive when she was married in 1833 to the late Sir Frederick Slade, that second marriage was bigamous and void, and the issue of it, including the defendant, were illegitimate. On the part of the defendant it is alleged that the marriage of Lady Slade at Milan was a void marriage by Austrian law, and that she was consequently free to marry again, as she did in 1833. The validity of Lady Slade's first marriage turns entirely upon the Austrian law, which was the law in force in Milan in 1825, and on this subject many expert gentlemen practising as lawyers in Austria have been examined under a commission on both sides. Mr. George Herbert, an English barrister residing at Bonn, acting as commissioner. Their evidence, and that of a few witnesses to facts, is very voluminous, and fills two large printed volumes, which are laid before the court as an appendix to the special case now being stated and being argued before their lordships. As may be very readily imagined, the legal arguments of these foreign experts are far too technical and abstruse for general interest; but the essential facts to be used in the case, and the points for decision, may be stated in a short compass. It seems that in 1824 Miss Barbara Mostyn accompanied her mother, then lately a widow, to the continent, and the two ladies at the close of that year fixed their residence at Milan. There Miss Mostyn made the acquaintance of Baron Von Korber, an Austrian officer of engineers. An engagement was soon made between them, and they were married at the Church of St. Fedele, at Milan, on October 6, 1829. According to the evidence given by Lady Frederick Slade, they had some difficulty in accomplishing their union at Milan, for Miss Mostyn was a Catholic and Baron Von Korber a Protestant. In Lombardy mixed marriages between Protestants and Catholics are forbidden by the Church. Accordingly, Pietro Zerbi, the parish priest of St. Babyla, at Milan, the parish in which Miss Mostyn lived at the time of her marriage, refused to perform the ceremony. After some delay a military priest at Milan, called Feld Superior Nagy, undertook to perform it, and did so. There is, it appears, in the Austrian army a hierarchy of military ecclesiastics, consisting of a Feld Bishop at Uicana, Feld Superiors who preside over different military districts throughout the empire, and the Feld Chaplains for the several military regiments. Feld Superior Nagy was a Hungarian presiding over the district of Lombardy. He, as well as other military chaplains, depended upon the Feld Bishop of Vienna, and not on the local ordinaries, and therefore did not consider themselves bound, as the Lombard parish clergy did, by the prohibition of mixed marriages, but followed the custom of the German provinces of Austria, where such marriages are allowed. Following Lady Slade's evidence, the marriage was not a happy one. The married pair left Milan for Gratz, when Lieutenant Von Korber was ordered on service. Thence they moved on to Vienna. During this journey Lieutentant Von Korber gave his young wife great uneasiness, by exhibitions of temper and violence, such as drawing his sword on the servants who displeased him, and by convivial habits, indulged in somewhat intemperately with brother officers whom he chanced to meet. At Vienna graver causes of complaint were added. Madame Von Korber had the most painful proof that her husband neglected her for the society of women of disreputable character. Upon this, she and her mother, who had accompanied her from Milan, determined to seek a separation from the baron. The Austrian lawyer whose assistance they sought advised them that the Milanese marriage was void, but Mrs. Mostyn was of opinion that it was inexpedient to seek for a declaration of nullity, and by her directions a suit was instituted for separation from bed and board. Baron Von Korber at first resisted this suit; he came with a file of soldiers to the hotel where his wife was staying with her mother, and threatened to carry her off by force. The ladies were protected from his violence by Mr. Frederick Slade, who happened to be in Vienna as a casual visitor, and who had some acquaintance with them. The separation proceedings were carried on, and ultimately terminated in an agreement between Mrs. Mostyn and her daughter and Baron Von Korber, by which Mrs. Mostyn agreed to pay him an annuity, and he agreed no longer to molest her daughter. This agreement was come to in February, 1826, only six months after their ill-starred union. Baron Von Korber and his wife never met again. He lived, as has been stated, till 1853, when he died a Major-General in the Austrian service. Madame Korber returned with her mother, after a sojourn in France, to England. There her acquaintanceship with Sir Frederick Slade was resumed, and ripened into great intimacy. Ultimately, having been advised by ecclesiastical authorities in England and Italy that the Milanese marriage was null and void, she married Sir Frederick Slade in December, 1863, and had by him a family of eight children, of whom the defendant, as already stated, is the eldest of the sons. The grounds on which the Milanese marriage is impeached are as follows:—It is said that the banns were not duly published, and that the priest who performed the ceremony was not competent to do so. As already stated, the arguments upon this point will be hardly intelligible to the general reader. It is enough to state that by the Austrian law banns are necessary for a valid marriage. Banns must be published for the bride as well as the bridegroom, and if the bride has not dwelt six weeks in the parish in which she is to be married, her banns must be published not only there but in the parish in which she last had an uninterrupted residence of at least six weeks. For the defence the argument will be that Miss Mostyn had not lived six weeks in St. Babyla, that her last parish of six weeks' residence was St. Maria; that her banns ought, therefore, to have been published in both these parishes; and that they were, in fact, published in neither. Lady Slade being almost the only person surviving who was at Milan, and knew anything about the marriage there in 1825, the facts on this subject have to be gathered chiefly from the contents and from the silence of the marriage register, and of certain vouchers and documents which accompany it, and from which the plaintiff insists that the banns were published, while the defendant draws an inference the opposite way. Again, it is said that Feld Superior Nagy was incompetent to marry Miss Mostyn to Baron Von Korber. There is no dispute that the only person competent by Austrian law to celebrate a marriage is a clergyman who has the cure of souls over one of the bridal persons. The defendant's contention is that Feld Superior Nagy, being a Roman Catholic priest, had no cure of souls over a Protestant officer. The plaintiff concedes that this would be true in the case of civilians, but he maintains that the special legislation for the Austrian army creates an exception for the case of Protestant military men. It is further contended by the defendant, and denied by the plaintiff, that by Austrian law, whenever a Protestant marries a Catholic, the marriage can be validly performed only by the priest who has cure of souls over the Catholic party, and that, as Feld Superior Nagy has certainly not cure of souls of Miss Mostyn, the marriage was void. Lastly, it is contended by the defendant, and denied by the plaintiff, that at the time of the marriage, on the 6th of October, 1825, Lieutenant Von Korber had been transferred from Milan to Cratz, and had thus passed under the jurisdiction of another Feld Superior, by whom (if by any Feld Superior) his marriage ought to have been celebrated. Another point on which a good deal of evidence has been given on both sides is this—the plaintiff contends that whether the alleged impediments to the Milanese marriage existed or not, it is too late to set them up now; that by Austrian law there is one appointed way of obtaining a declaration of invalidity of marriage at the suit of determinate persons, and by a prescribed mode of procedure; and that now, after the death of Baron Von Korber, it is too late to obtain such a declaration of invalidity, so that the Milanese marriage must remain and be considered valid. To all this a direct and elaborate contradiction is offered by the defendant; and on this point, more perhaps than on any other, the arguments on both sides will deal with technical points of the Austrian law of procedure, which would be without interest to the general reader. With regard to that part of the case which rests on the evidence of Lady Frederick Slade as to events connected with her marriage in 1825, and the refusal on the part of the priest Zerbi to perform the service, certain documentary evidence has been discovered since her examination was taken, which renders her evidence, it is contended on the part of the plaintiff, wholly and entirely worthless.

Among the not uncommon superstitions which are entertained by schoolboys and uneducated persons, the notion that a person can avoid committing perjury by pretending to "kiss the book," while not really doing so, is apparently still prevalent. A woman who was last week charged at the Central Criminal Court with perjury in having sworn, at a previous Surrey Session, that her nephew who was then convicted had never been convicted on a former occasion, whereas there was distinct evidence to show that he had been an old and convicted offender, sought to excuse herself by saying that when she was sworn she had kissed her thumb, and not the book.

Seriously to entertain the idea that such an evasion, or such an excuse, would avail to relieve the perpetrator from the penalties of perjury, stamps the character of anyone who would set it up as an act morally permissible. Supposing, indeed, that any species of sophism is available to ease the conscience of such a person, it must be admitted that, if the act do not amount to perjury, the offence of deceiving the ministers of justice under the false pretence of taking an oath, and thereby obtaining the end which truthful evidence would obtain, is as deserving of the penalties of perjury as perjury itself. In the case we have referred to, the learned Recorder took, and we think rightly, the view that actual perjury had been committed, and utterly ignored the plea of kissing the thumb. It would be but playing with justice if such an excuse were to be admitted as available to discharge a witness from the duty of speaking the truth, however meritorious it might be thought to try and save a relative from the penalties due to his crimes, in the hope that he might yet reform. Such considerations must be left to the judge, who will always be found willing to listen to anything that can be urged in a prisoner's favour. The more distinctly it is laid down that the offence of perjury consists in wilfully misleading a court of justice by false evidence as to matters of fact, irrespective of the form in which such evidence is tendered, the better for the interests of public morality and the due administration of justice.—Solicitors' Journal.

In illustration of the point often raised incidentally by railway and other companies carrying passengers, as to whether a ticket issued by the company and paid for by a passenger, is a contract without the possession of which the rights of the passenger as against the company cannot be enforced, and in the absence of which the company can demand a fresh payment for a journey, we may refer to a decision of Mr. Commissioner Kerr made at the Sheriff's Court on the 16th inst. The plaintiff in this case had taken a return ticket from London to Boulogne and back, and his name was entered on the company's books as having taken that ticket. He lost the second or return half, and on his arrival in London, the company made him pay the return fare. He now brought his action to recover the amount so paid. In pronouncing his decision, the learned Commissioner said that, as the contract was of a personal character, it was clear that the mere non-production of the ticket could not stop plaintiff's passage; and, if he had transferred the ticket to any other person, the company could have prevented the passage of that other person. As the facts of the case stood, however, he should decide that the plaintiff had personally contracted with the company to be taken to Boulogne and brought home again, and the company had not fulfilled the terms of their contract. The pieces of paper given to the plaintiff when he paid his money were merely proof that such money had been paid, and could have no effect upon the present judgment. The company had taken the plaintiff's money to bring him back to London, and they would not bring him back until he had paid the money over again. The company had no right, this being a personal contract, to enforce that second payment; and, therefore, the verdict would be for the plaintiff, with costs.

In like manner, whenever a passenger takes a return ticket by railway, the contract is a personal one in so far as the holder of the ticket is not permitted to transfer it, and although his name is not taken down in a book when he takes his ticket, he has a right to travel for its full value. The production or non-production of a ticket may, indeed, be taken as prima facie proof of payment or non-payment of the fare; but inasmuch as the production of a ticket fraudulently obtained, would vest no rights in its holder, so the absence of the ticket is not any proof that he has, in the words of the 103rd section of the 8 Vict., c. 20, "used the railway without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof." And this was the principal point in the case of Bridge v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (11th Solicitors Journal, 543). The officers of the company had inferred fraud in the plaintiff by reason of his not showing a ticket (it will be remembered the plaintiff declared he had given it up to the collector), while there was at hand ample means of showing that he had already paid his fare. One of the large companies having a terminus in London issues to its season ticket-holders a periodical notice to the intent that, unless an expiring ticket is renewed so that the holder is able to present his new ticket the first time he travels, he will be charged full fare, which will not be returned. That is to say, if from any cause whatever, whether through the default of the company or otherwise, and even though the passenger may have paid for his new ticket on ordering it, and that, in ample time, yet he will be required to pay again for that which the company was already under contract to supply him with. We have never heard of this preposterous notice being carried out, but it serves well to show the exalted notions such companies hold of the powers conferred on them by the Legislature. It is not then superfluous to declare that a railway ticket is not a contract, but only evidence of a contract.—Solicitors' Journal.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

AGREEMENT—ARBITRATION.—Opposition to a Railway Bill was withdrawn on condition (inter alia) that certain level crossings should be made if notified within a month. This notification was not made, but negotiations were continued. The company subsequently refused to carry out the agreement, and it was held, on appeal, that time was of the essence of the agreement, and the agreement could not be enforced.

It would seem that, if parties attend before an arbitrator after the time for making his award has expired, and one take up an award so made, he does not thereby admit that the arbitrator had power to make the award: (Earl of Darnley v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 217. H. of L.)

LORDS AND COMMONERS.—BILL ON PEACE.—A bill of peace may be filed by a lord against one copyholder, on behalf of himself and other copyholders, being numerous, to have their rights of common ascertained; but one copyholder not suing on behalf of all cannot maintain such a bill: (Phillips v. Hudson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 221. Ch.)

EVIDENCE—CROWN SURVEY.—A survey recorded in the Augmentation-office for the purposes of the Crown is just as much privileged as a survey made by a private owner, and cannot be made available as evidence for the tenants of a manor against the title of the lord: (Ibid.)

COSTS OF APPEAL.—Where there is no foundation for a bill, the Court of Appeal, in reversing the decree of the court below, and dismissing the bill with costs, will usually give the costs of the appeal: (Ibid.)

PLEADING SON ASSAULT DEMESNE.—Issue cannot be joined upon a plea of son assault demesne, if it is intended to rely upon excess. There must be a new assignment of the excess. This is contrary to Dean v. Taylor, 11 Ex.: (Rimmer v. Rimmer, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 238. Mellor, J.)

BROKER AND PRINCIPAL.—A bought bank shares for B "for the account," but before the settling day a petition was presented to wind up the bank, and B thereupon declined to pay the value of the shares. A resisted the claim of the selling broker, and had to pay the value of the shares and the costs of the action. In an action by A against B to recover the amount, it was held that he could not recover the costs of the action: (Clegg v. Townshend, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180. Nisi Prius.)

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—DELIVERY—UNPAID VENDOR.—Delivery of a cargo into the ship of the purchaser is complete, and the cargo cannot be stopped in transitu. It would make no difference whether the vessel was a ship trading generally, or was specially sent to receive the flour, the vendor being aware that the ship was the property of the purchaser. A court of equity has jurisdiction to settle this question, the case depending on the ordinary principles regulating in equity the relations between mortgagor and mortgagee. It appears that stoppage in transitu does not rescind the contract, but only gives or restores to the vendor a lien for the price: (Schotsmanns v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 189. Ch.)

FREIGHT—PRINCIPLE OF MEASUREMENT.—Although a cargo expand greatly upon delivery, the measurement for calculation of freight is that made at the port of loading. Evidence of custom in such a case was held to be properly admissible. Parties entering into a contract relating to a particular trade must be assumed to be cognizant of all the usages connected with that trade: (Buckle v. Knoop, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 231. Ex.)

WILL—LEASING POWER.—The testator, by his will, dated 1798, devised to his daughter for life certain real estates without impeachment of waste, except as thereinafter restricted, with remainders over in tail. Then followed clauses against anticipation and granting powers, among which was a power to grant leases of the surface, reserving to the possessor for the time being of the reversion the right to search for and take minerals; then followed clauses restricting the cutting down of timber, and a power to the tenant for life "to work or contract for lease, and set out to be worked all the mines and minerals . . . all the issues and net proceeds and profits arising therefrom" to be paid to the trustees and applied to the purchase of land in five parishes named by the testator. The daughter, the tenant for life, granted a mining lease for twenty-one years, or, if she had power under the will, for sixty years, and died soon after making the lease: Held (reversing the decision of the Court of C. P.), that the daughter had no power to grant a lease beyond the term of her own life, and that the lease in question expired at her death: (Jegon v. Vivian, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 236. Ex. Ch.)

WINDING-UP.

CONTRIBUTORY — MISREPRESENTATION.—The dangerous doctrine that shareholders may repudiate their liabilities because they have been induced to become such by misrepresentation in the prospectus, or change in some of the objects of the company, has been to some extent restricted by the condition now introduced that they shall repudiate the contract immediately on obtaining knowledge of the misrepresentation. In Lawrence's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 222, the facts were, that in Aug., 1865, B received from his broker a prospectus of the company; he applied for shares on Sept. 4. The company was incorporated on Sept. 11, and the shares were allotted to him on Oct. 7. The memorandum of association differed considerably from the prospectus, but he did not procure a copy of it till May, 1866, and to that time was ignorant of the variance. A call was made in Sept., 1866 (that is to say, after the panic had commenced, and then he repudiated the shares, and gave notice that in next term he should move to have his name removed from the register. He was held to have lost his right to repudiate by his delay. It was to be assumed that a person becoming a member of a company would know that a memorandum of association was required, and he was bound to see to it. In Kincaid's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 223, a similar application had been made. The shares were allotted in April, 1865; he paid sums on application and allotment; a call was made in April, 1866; he was ignorant of a variance between the prospectus and memorandum of association; it did not appear when he became acquainted with it, but he applied in July to rectify the register. The Lords Justices held that he also had forfeited his right by this delay.

PRACTICE—INTEREST ON CALLS.—The official liquidator can enforce payment of interest on a call made by him, if the notice of call contained an intimation that if it were not paid on or before a given day interest would be payable; (Ex parte Lintott, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 228. V.C.M.)

FIRE INSURANCE—OPTION TO REINSTATE OR PAY.—An insurance company by their policies reserved an option to reinstate or pay. A fire having occurred they exercised the option and paid. It was held that, although there was no implied promise on the part of the assured to apply the money to reinstating, the court would enforce an express promise, although only made by parol: (The Queen Insurance Company v. Vey, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 239. Mellor, J.)

CALL TO THE ENGLISH BAR.—The undermentioned gentleman was, on Tuesday, called to the degree of the Outer Bar by the Hon. Secretary of the Middle Temple: Wade Shenton Garnett, Esq., B.A., Trinity College, Dublin.

THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.—The following is taken from a recent number of the Chicago Republic:—"It is with unfeigned pleasure that we announce to our readers the gratifying intelligence that a law has been passed by our legislature which practically abolishes capital punishment. This law places in the hands of juries the right to prescribe the penalty of death, imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for a term of years not less than fourteen. Under this law we believe no jury will say death.

THE PROPAGANDA OF INFIDELITY.—The John Bull commends to those who rejoice in going as far towards actual infidelity as is respectable, the admirable remarks of the Lord Chief Baron this week in the case of "Cowan v. Melbourne," an action in which the plaintiff, who had distributed blasphemous placards at Liverpool, advertising lectures, endeavoured to obtain damages from the defendant for breach of agreement in refusing to allow him the use of his assembly rooms. The Chief Baron said, and it is refreshing in these days to hear such words from the judicial bench:—"Whatever contract might have been entered into by the defendant, no doubt could be entertained that he was justified in preventing his rooms being used for the purpose mentioned. It needed no authority to show that Christianity was part and parcel of the law of England, and to publicly attempt by argument and reasoning to prove that the character of our Saviour was defective and His teachings misleading was blasphemy and impiety. Not only was the defendant justified in refusing the use of his rooms for the purpose in question, but he was bound by the laws of his country to do all in his power to prevent their being so used."

LIABILITIES OF SHAREHOLDERS.

From The Law Times.

The predicted consequences of the too hasty decision in Ship's case, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 256, are showing themselves in all directions. Looking too exclusively to the relationship of members of a company inter se, and not sufficiently to the relationship of the individual shareholders to the creditors, a shareholder was permitted to escape from his liability to the latter on proving that he was induced by misrepresentation to ally himself with the former. He was brought into the company by a fraudulent prospectus, and as fraud vitiates a contract, the agreement to become a member of the company was void. In so deciding the courts appear to have forgotten that other parties than the trapping and entrapped partners were concerned; that innocent persons, who had nothing whatever to do with the alleged fraud, would thus be subjected to a greater wrong than the shareholder who had suffered himself to be imposed upon, and who had no possible means by which they could protect themselves. The creditors of the company, who had given credit on the faith of the published list of shareholders, were left out of the account altogether. Yet were they the victims, not the wrong-doers. By relieving the shareholder, who protested that he had been deceived into becoming such, no punishment was inflicted upon those who had practised that fraud upon him, for they were protected by their limited liability; but the loss falls upon the hapless creditors, who suddenly find the list of shareholders, on whose liability they relied, to be a sham, and the promise of the law that every name in the register of shareholders should be a security to them for the amount of their shares, an imposition upon them quite as great as was that practised upon the entrapped shareholder by his brother shareholders.

It is difficult to discover the principle that has governed these extraordinary decisions. The law of partnership, in strict accordance with justice and reason, was, that if a man held himself out to the world as a partner he was liable to all who had trusted him as a partner. whatever the frauds of his partners, or however he might have been entrapped into the partnership. He could not plead to an action by a creditor that he had been induced to join the firm by a false description of the business. Wherefore should a different principle be applied to a partnership under the Companies' Act? It may be said, perhaps, that by incorporation the individual liability is merged into the corporate liability, and that a creditor should look to the company and not to individual shareholders. But it is not so. The law requires the registration of the names and addresses of the shareholders, the number of shares held by them, and the amount paid upon those shares, for the express purpose of enabling those who deal with the company to learn at any time what is the security to which they may look for payment. If that register of shareholders is illusory, a deception is practised upon creditors, and the law would do well to prevent further wrong by at once enacting that no debt shall be recoverable from a company by process of law, and then creditors will know what they are about.

For the present unsatisfactory state of things the Times proposes the very insufficient remedy of a liquidator to protect creditors as well as a liquidator to wind-up the company. But that would not answer the question, "Who is a shareholder?" For this, we fear, there is now no remedy but a short declaratory Act, to the effect that no person on the register of shareholders shall be exempt from liability as a contributory towards the payment of debts, if he shall have subscribed for or otherwise obtained any shares, notwithstanding that he may have been induced to subscribe or otherwise obtain such shares, by fraud, misrepresentation or otherwise, and that no name shall be removed from any list of contributories for any other cause than that it was placed on the register of shareholders without the knowledge or authority of the alleged shareholder.

The remedy for misrepresentation and imposition should be against those who practised it, and in the form of an action for damages, the measure of which would be the liability the plaintiff had thereby incurred.

BOYD v. KELLY; KELLY v. CAMPION.

April 27.—Practice—Reference under 15th section of Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850—Signature of Junior Counsel to Pleadings.

J. F. Walker moved in the first of these causes for an order of reference to the Master to take a general administration account of the assets of the late Mr. Kelly.

Piers White, who appeared for the petitioner in the second matter (which was also a suit for the administration of Mr. Kelly's assets), objected to any order of reference being made on Mr. Boyd's petition, as he was only a simple contract creditor of the late Mr. Kelly, while the petitioner in the second matter was his executor.

J. F. Walker submitted that no order should be made in the second matter, as the petition was signed by senior counsel and not by junior counsel, contrary to the rules of the Bar and the practice of the Court. Counsel referred to Cannon v. Bourke (5 Ir. Ch. Rep., 226).

The LORD CHANCELLOR stated that he would always expect the counsel who prepared the petition to move it, and as it had been decided that such motions could not be made by senior counsel without a junior, the case of Kelly v. Campion should be struck out of the list.

HEWAT v. ARMITAGE.

April 29.—Practice—Reference under 15th section of Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850—Interrogatories.

This was a suit to raise the amount due on foot of a statutable mortgage, and W. M. Johnson now moved on behalf of the petitioner for the usual summary order of reference to the Master, under the 15th section of the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850. Counsel at the same time applied for liberty to annex interrogatories to the petition, stating that although an application of this nature had been refused in the case of Ryan v. Mulligan (1 Ir. Ch. Rep., 20), the decision there was probably founded on the fact of its being a petition for the appointment of new trustees.

The LORD CHANCELLOR referred the petition to the Master, but made no rule on the motion for liberty to attach interrogatories to the petition, considering that this application should properly be made to the Master to whom the order of reference was made.

SCOTTISH NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY v. EYRE.

April 29.—Practice—Petition by Corporation—Verifying Affidavit.

Price moved in this case for a summary order of reference. The petition was verified in extenso by the affidavit of the Solicitor of the Insurance Company, but the affidavit omitted to state that the Solicitor was the proper officer to verify the petition on behalf of the petitioners, or that he was acquainted with the affairs of the company.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In the case of a corporation it is immaterial who makes an affidavit on their behalf, provided it appears that the party making it has a knowledge of their affairs. Let the Solicitor for the company in the present case make a short affidavit, stating, if such be the fact, that he has knowledge of the affairs of the company and of the matters referred to in the cause petition.

April 26.—Criminal Law—Bail—Postponement of Trial.

This was a motion to admit a prisoner to bail. The prisoner had been arrested shortly before the last Spring Assizes for the County of Tyrone; informations had been sworn against him, and a true bill had been found for a felonious assault. At the instance of the prisoner the trial had been postponed.

W. Irvine for the prisoner.

Longfield, Q.C., for the Crown, opposed the application.

The Court held that the motion could not be granted, chiefly on the ground that a bill had been found, and that it was at the instance of the prisoner that the trial had been postponed.

THE BELFAST BANKING COMPANY v. STANLEY.

April 26, 30.—Promissory Note—Surety.

Demurrer. The action was brought against the defendant as maker of a joint and several promissory note, payable one month after demand. The defendant pleaded on equitable grounds that he had made the note jointly with two other persons; that he and one of those persons made it as sureties only for the other; that at the time it was made by them the Bank was aware of this, and agreed that they should be sureties only; and that the Bank had delayed an unreasonable time—to wit, ten years—to demand payment of it from the principal. To this the plaintiffs demurred.

ASHTON v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

April 16.—Substitution of Service—Cause of Action arising within Jurisdiction.

Motion, that the conditional order for substitution of service on the defendants in this case be made absolute.

This was an action brought by George Ashton and Maryanne Ashton, his wife, against the London and North-Western Railway Company. There were two counts in the summons and plaint; in the first count the plaintiffs complained that the defendants were carriers of passengers from London to Dublin—by railway from London to Holyhead, and thence to the North Wall Quay in Dublin—and that the plaintiff, M. A. Ashton, was received as a passenger to be carried by them, with due and reasonable care, and in a reasonably safe and proper manner, from London to Dublin by the route aforesaid; yet that defendants did not carry said plaintiff with due and reasonable care, &c., from London to Dublin by the route aforesaid, but so negligently conducted themselves, &c., upon the said first-mentioned railway, &c., that the said plaintiff was thrown with great force on the floor of the said carriage, and was permanently injured.

In the second count the plaintiff, George Ashton, stating the same contract and facts, laid as damage that the said plaintiff thereby lost the comfort and services of the said Maryanne Ashton for a long time, and would be permanently deprived thereof, and incurred expenses, and was prevented from attending to his business.

The affidavit of J. W. Coffey, attorney for defendants, filed as cause, stated that the defendants had their place of business in England; that the contract relied on in the summons and plaint was entered into in England; and that the breaches complained of occurred in England.

Palles, Q.C., and Carton in support of the motion.

The contract was one that could not be entirely performed outside the jurisdiction.

The breaches complained of occurred out of the jurisdiction.

The Court made absolute the conditional order for substitution of service.

P. Keogh, for the plaintiff, applied for a garnishee order under the following circumstances:—There was a sum due from the Dublin Cattle Market Company to the defendant.

April 18.—Non-attendance of Witness—Attachment.

The plaintiff had obtained a conditional order for an attachment against one Kelly for non-attendance at the trial during the last after sittings.

Armstrong, Serj., with him M'Laughlin, now moved to make absolute the conditional order. He had received 30s. viaticum, but refused to come unless some provision was made for the care, during his absence, of two children, whose guardian he had been appointed under the Court of Chancery. The eldest child was fourteen years of age, and such a demand showed he did not mean to attend.

J. T. Ball, for Kelly, showed cause against making absolute the conditional order. It appears from the affidavits that Kelly's evidence would not only have been no service to plaintiff, but on the contrary, have been fatal to him; he was responsible to the Court of Chancery for the care of these children, and the viaticum was not sufficient to enable him to take them with him.

M'Laughlin in reply was not called on.

The Court made the order for attachment absolute.

April 25.—Pleading—Breach of Contract.

This was an action for negligence in carrying geese of the plaintiff's. The first count was in contract to deliver within a certain time, and alleged special damage, as follows, "and the plaintiff lost market for the said merchandise and large profits which he would have made by the sale thereof, and the said merchandise was greatly injured, damaged, and deteriorated in value, and the plaintiff was put to great expense in keeping over said merchandise, and in endeavouring to make a sale of same, and in sending said merchandise to other markets, and ultimately was obliged to sell said merchandise for a much less price than but for the aforesaid breach," &c. The second count was not delivering within a reasonable time. In the third count the plaintiff complained that the plaintiffs delivered to the defendants as and being carriers as in first count mentioned, and said defendants as such carriers received and had from the plaintiff certain geese of the plaintiff to be by the defendants carried with all due and reasonable diligence, expedition, and care, from Dublin to Liverpool, for reward to the defendants, yet the defendants did not carry the said geese with all due and reasonable diligence, expedition, and care on the said voyage, for the plaintiff says, that, owing to the negligence and default of the defendants in loading said geese on board a certain steamer of the defendants', which was unfit for the said voyage, from Dublin to Liverpool, and forwarding same from Dublin therein, and further, in consequence of the faulty and deficient state of the boilers, machinery, and appliances of said steamer, the said geese were for a long time delayed on the voyage, and were greatly injured and deteriorated in condition, and whereby also the plaintiff claimed the special damage in the first count complained of.

J. R. Robertson moved to set aside the third paragraph as embarrassing. The plaintiff may claim under this in respect of delay and of injury.

April 26th.—New Trial—Reception of illegal evidence.

This was an action by a shop-assistant against his former master for wages. The master pleaded a set-off of certain moneys and goods received by plaintiff on his master's account, and applied by him to his own use. It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff had been in defendant's employment for four years, and had been each year debited with the amount of the goods entrusted to him from time to time for sale at the prices at which they were to be afterwards sold by retail. The defendant was debited with the sums actally paid over to him, and the sums due for the goods sold as credit. On this account there was a difference in each year against the plaintiff. This deficiency the plaintiff explained by the necessary waste occasioned by the sale of small quantities of the goods entrusted to be sold at retail. Plaintiff produced one Campbell, who kept a shop of the same description as defendant's in a village in the same neighbourhood; he heard the mode in which defendant's business was conducted as decribed at the trial, and was asked, "according to your experience in the trade would it be possible to realize by the sales the amount of retail prices on the entire quantity?" This was objected to but admitted, and witness answered, "It is a moral impossibility that you could take out the same amount of money in smalls; no man could do it by weighing it in smalls." In explanation, he said, "I could not weigh out a chest of tea so as to bring out the exact result. You are obliged to turn the beam at every draught; the same answer applies to all goods sold. In selling sugar by retail, sugar lost a great deal. It is damp, and the damp will steal down to the bottom. The loss is in weight and in the weighing it in smalls. The bottom is all right. It will be a little damp." According to your experience would you consider that a loss of £223 in a sale of £4,651 12s. 2½d. would be more than ordinary causes would produce? Answer: "I consider 5 per cent. not too great a loss; not an exorbitant loss from my experience in my own trade." On cross-examination he stated that his own losses were about 5 per cent.

This evidence was objected to on the ground that the experience of the witness in his own shop was no evidence of the reasonableness of the deficiencies in the defendant's shop. The jury found for the plaintiff. The defendant having obtained a conditional order for a new trial on the ground of the reception of illegal evidence.

Palles, Q.C., and Falkner, Q.C., for the plaintiff, now showed cause.

BRUNKER v. DICKSON.

May 1.—Evidence.

This was a suit instituted to establish the will of a Miss Steele, made on the 30th Oct. 1866. She died in the month of December of the same year. The will was principally in favour of the plaintiff, who was a cousin of the testatrix.

The defendant was a sister, and one of the next of kin of the deceased, and she impeached the will chiefly on the grounds of undue influence exercised by the plaintiff.

The due execution of the will, and the capacity of the testatrix, were not merely proved by the plaintiff's witnesses, but were admitted by the counsel for the defendant in his statement.

Harrison, Q.C., (Munroe with him), in his address stated his intention of offering as evidence letters written by the testatrix to the defendant shortly before her death, but undated, to show affection and regard; and also a letter of the plaintiff, written a few days before the death of the testatrix to the defendant, in order to show his influence over her.

KEATINGE, J.—The due execution of the will and the perfect capacity of the testatrix have not only been abundantly proved, but are admitted. I will, therefore, not allow evidence to be given of any subsequent transactions. There are cases in which such evidence might reflect back on the execution of the will, but this is not a case of that class. I therefore will direct the jury to find a verdict for the will.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE RECORD OF TITLE ACT."

To THE EDITOR OF "THE IRISH LAW TIMES."

(Third Letter.)

SIR,—When I undertook, at your request, to furnish, for the information of your readers, some account of the Record of Title Act of 1865, and of the practice under it, I had no intention of engaging in controversy. My object is not to wrangle about collateral points; and to the objections of your correspondent, Mr. H. T. Dix, I shall reply in the briefest manner that the case will admit of. First, let me thank him for completing the proof of my assertion that there are inherent defects in the registry of deeds. He shows that an Act of Parliament, passed more than thirty years since, has proved wholly inadequate to prevent the incumbering of the Registry with those "general charges" which are productive of so much trouble and expense. He further shows that his own suggestions, publicly made six years since, for remedying some of the defects complained of, have received no attention. A report of a committee of the Law Society (to which are appended, amongst others, the esteemed names of the president and vice-president), thus forcibly summed up the question in 1862:—"The present system is so tedious and embarrassing that in practice it imposes undue responsibility on the profession, without giving to the public the protection and security it was originally intended to afford." A Bill was, I believe, brought in several years since by the Government of the day for reforming the system of the registry of deeds; but it broke down, so to speak, from its own weight. So much for improving the deeds registry. Your readers will have observed that Mr. Dix's zeal in defence of a system which he ably attacked in 1861, and which remains unchanged, has led him into the error of stating that a search, as usually made, is a sufficient evidence of title. Now let A B, aged sixty years, be supposed to have purchased an estate with a parliamentary title ten years since, and to be now obtaining a loan on mortgage. The search to be procured and furnished on such an occasion will be a search against A B from the date of his purchase in the Court to the present time. If Mr. Dix, in a case like this, insists on any more extensive search, he is singular, and he does that which is not only contrary to usual custom, but which adds very considerably to the expense of the search. But it will be admitted by any lawyer that A B, at any time after attaining age, may have covenanted to charge all his after-acquired lands, and that such a covenant is considered to be binding if duly registered. Therefore the title in the case supposed is not complete without a search, carried back for nearly forty years, against A B. Again, Mr. Dix airily disposes of all the acts appearing on a search, by saying that they "are at once seen not to affect." He may possess the secret of some mode of enchantment which shall discover in a moment that all the "acts" relate to other matters; but ordinary mortals are compelled carefully to peruse and tediously to scrutinize for fear of mistakes. Examples are valuable in this discussion; and I shall now adduce, from my own recent experience, some examples of the difficulty of making out title under the present system. A search lately made against a Mr. Kennedy disclosed 85 acts on the registry, which were only shown after a patient and minute investigation, not to affect the property in question. Still greater embarrassment was caused in the same case by the return of 95 acts on one judgment search, many of which appeared very doubtful, and some of which, to this day, I believe, have not been satisfactorily proved "not to affect." A recent search against "William Kelly," in the judgment office, disclosed 134 acts, many of them against a person whose place of abode is not stated. Among them appears a judgment against "—— Kelly, gentleman," which I recognized as an old friend, for it, of course, turns up on every judgment search made against any male person of the name of Kelly. A recent search against the name of Wm. M'Dermott discloses 84 acts. A recent search against the name of John Wilson discloses 181 acts. A recent search against the name of John Johnston discloses 199 acts.

Such instances naturally lead one to appreciate a system of registry from which, to use the words of Lord Westbury, "a landowner can at any time procure a certificate showing the exact state of his title." Such a document Mr. Dix can hardly be serious in comparing with an ordinary abstract of title, which is of infinitely inferior value as an evidence of title for many reasons. Among them the following:—An abstract must be fortified by searches, certificates of birth and burial, affidavits, and other evidence; and it must contain the particulars of transactions which are now at an end and have ceased to affect the title. For example, A B, some years since, we will suppose, mortgaged to C, who assigned the mortgage to D, on whose decease the mortgage money was paid off by A B, and a release and reconveyance obtained from E, the heir-at-law, and from F, the executor of D. Now all these persons must figure on the abstract, and the deeds executed by them must be set out; and, in short, it is necessary for the security of any intending mortgagee or purchaser that all these bygone transactions should be carefully and thoroughly investigated. A certificate of title, on the one hand, is silent as to paid-off mortgages and all other completed transactions, which no longer affect the title; for mortgages and other matters, as soon as they are satisfactorily shown to be paid off and put an end to, are treated as things of the past, into which no further examination is in any sense necessary.

In my last letter I admitted that the utility of a Registry or Record of Title was chiefly shown in simple transactions; and that property which is not intended, under any circumstances, to be capable of sale, &c., is not likely to derive much benefit from the new system. Mr. Dix is, however, quite in error in supposing that the system is not adapted for the great majority of settled estates. He will find that all standard conveyancing books of modern date suggest a power of sale as a convenient, a usual, and a proper clause in any marriage settlement; and that nearly all modern settlements, if well drawn, contain that power. He will find, also, that all the eminent lawyers who have expressed themselves as in favour of a Registry of Title, have contemplated the entry of trustees of settled estates having a power of sale, as owners, for the purpose of transfer, &c. Any owner of a recorded estate who makes a settlement of it, should, therefore, have the trustees entered ("without survivorship") as owners, and should have his own name entered as that of a person whose consent is required, or who must have notice before any sale can be effected. This is all provided for by the Act.

Mr. Dix, whose experience of Parliamentary titles will extend over a course of years, during which the I. E. Court has never exercised, even if it ever claimed, the power to rectify errors in its own conveyances, seems alarmed that such power is at last conferred; but it will be seen at once that this power of amending the record is fraught not with danger, but with safety. For there is the same probability as ever that mistakes will not be committed, while there is a strong probability that if there should be a mistake it will be discovered and rectified before mischief has been done. And in the extreme case of a loss of property occurring (though how such an occurrence could take place, I am unable to imagine), its owner will derive some consolation from the reflection that Lieutenant-Colonel J. H. Keogh, who was the victim of the most important error made throughout the long history of the Incumbered or Landed Estates' Court, was fully recompensed by the Legislature.

Mr. Dix is also in error in saying that "few purchases have been recorded." Duplicate conveyances are not in practice bespoken for any purpose, except for the Record of Title; and the fact that they have been taken out in more than a hundred instances, where the conveyance has afterwards been recorded, furnishes as incontestable evidence on the point, as the previous taking out of a ticket can do of the intention of a passenger to proceed by a railway train. Mr. Dix's supposition that the passengers have been carried off against their will, is, therefore, unfounded; perhaps equally so is his anticipation that other passengers will, when they understand the subject, prefer the old stage coach to the railway. There have been more than a hundred purchases deliberately recorded, not by mistake or inadvertence, but with a clear intention of taking advantage of a measure which is the rational corollary of the Landed Estates' Act. The objection to the 7th section falls to the ground, now that every solicitor knows, or ought to know its effect: and I venture to express an opinion that a solicitor should not content himself with writing a mandatory note, like one I lately saw, merely desiring the client "to sign the enclosed requisition [against recording a conveyance] and return it immediately." If the clients had been informed of the nature of the measure, there is every reason to conclude that their conveyances would have been entered on record in still greater numbers. The requisition against recording has in fact been signed by numerous persons in entire ignorance of its nature and effect.

It is difficult to understand why any proprietor should feel uneasy (as Mr. Dix intimates) because the Registry of Parliamentary Titles is under the control of a court usually supposed to possess the confidence of the profession and of the public. I never heard that any tenant-in-tail felt it objectionable that his deed to open the estate is required to be enrolled in Chancery; nor are married women alarmed at the jurisdiction of the Court of Common Pleas over their legal transactions. Fines and recoveries, bills of sale, probates and administrations, and fifty other common incidents, are or were, more or less, under the control of courts of justice. Nearly all dealings with property are in some way liable to judicial control. Mr. Dix also objects to a public notice, forgetting that it has lately become the established custom for executors and administrators to advertise for claimants, as inspection of the columns of any newspaper will show. An advertisement, will, it is true, be required before any dealing by an heir at law with the recorded estate of his ancestor. And I mistake much if an experienced and cautious solicitor would recommend a client to lend on mortgage to an heir-at-law immediately after the decease of the ancestor, unless after an interval had elapsed, and publicity given to the claim founded on an alleged intestacy.

On this point it is worthy of remark, that an heir-at-law, who has lately experienced difficulty in procuring a loan (for it is proverbially hard to prove a negative, such as the non-existence of a will) has actually applied to have his estates entered on the Record of Title, in order to facilitate dealings with them. Such an instance proves the utility of enabling the heir-at-law, after public notices, to obtain a formal recognition of his title; and it is almost incredible that any person should object to publicity in such case.

In concluding this letter, I venture to recommend Mr. Dix and other gentlemen, who are prejudiced against this method of preserving the indefeasible character of Parliamentary titles, to satisfy themselves as to its nature and capabilities, by actual inquiry and investigation. As the carefully considered initiation of an important law-reform, the Record of Title commends itself to the attention of solicitors. As a reform in real property law, I hold it to be as valuable, as it is full of public interest; but beyond this it is, let me add, a matter of indifference to me whether the majority of the past and future purchasers of estates in the Court avail themselves of it or not. If they and their legal advisers, through prejudice or through inadvertence, neglect to obtain, by means of this Act, the clear and substantial advantages which it is calculated to afford them, the loss is their own. Of this I am certain, that before many years have elapsed there will be a general adoption of conclusions resembling those to which a long and careful study of the subject has brought your obedient servant,

LEGULEIUS.

SIR.—I take the liberty of addressing a few lines to you respecting both the impropriety and misconduct which is carried on at "The Lectures for Attorneys' Apprentices," such as "laughing," talking, and creating a disturbance to the great annoyance of those who wish to attend to the talented and painstaking lecturer, Mr. Hickson. I would like to know how can this be remedied. If it is not, I deem it quite useless in attending aforesaid lectures, inasmuch as "law" is so deep and intricate, it requires its student to pay to it the deepest attention and application. Your insertion of this will much oblige, Mr. Editor, your obedient servant,

ADVERTISEMENT TO CREDITORS, AND LEGATEES, AND INCUMBRANCERS.

Cause Petition under "The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850."

In the Matter of Margaret Carroll, Petitioner; John Carroll, and by amendment, George Cooke, and the Official Assignees, Respondents.

I HEREBY require all Persons claiming to be Creditors or Pecuniary Legatees of Peter Carroll, late of Tullow, in the County of Carlow, Shopkeeper, deceased, on or before the 25th day of MAY, to furnish, in writing, to Margaret Carroll, the Petitioner, of Tullow, in the County of Carlow, or to Thomas Crawford Butler, her Solicitor, of Carlow, and 9, Upper Gardiner-street, Dublin, the amount and particulars of their several demands (accompanied, in case of simple contract debts, by a statement of the consideration of such debts), in order that the Petitioner may, without any expense to them, prove in this matter such or so much of their demands as he shall think just, of the allowance or disallowance of which, or any part of same, said Creditors shall receive due notice. And all such Creditors whose demands shall be disallowed, either wholly or in part, shall, at the peril of costs, be at liberty to file charges in my Office, in respect of the claims or amounts so disallowed, within one fortnight after they shall respectively have received notice of such disallowance.

Dated this 25th day of April, 1867.

WILLIAM BROOKE, Master in Chancery.

THOMAS C. BUTLER, Solicitor for Petitioner, No. 9, Upper Gardiner-street, Dublin.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY & INSOLVENCY.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MAY 11, 1867.

IT is a matter of some importance to the general public, and of great importance to the members of the profession, whose views it is the main object of this Journal to represent, that the rights and privileges of the Junior Bar should be clearly defined and understood. We, therefore, propose in the present article to consider these rights and privileges, as far as we are acquainted with them, and to indicate the grounds on which they are, or at least seem to be, founded. These privileges may, we think, be conveniently divided into two classes, namely—

First. Privileges conferred by rules promulgated by the Judges for regulating the practice in their several Courts; or, those that have been made the subject of express judicial decision.

Second. Privileges founded on the etiquette (so to speak) of the profession, and a general understanding among its members.

The institution of the Bar seems to be based on no positive law, but rather on its legal recognition for many centuries, and the exercise of the general authority, possessed by all superior Courts of Justice, of regulating the privilege to practice in them. "The principle of the law is, that the practice of the Court can only be known in the Court itself, and cannot be judged of by any other Court" (per Lefroy, C. J., Rea v. Nagle, 9 Ir. Jur., N. S., 81). All who feel the rights and duties of Counsel, and the relation in which they have for centuries stood to the public, will, we think, agree with these observations. Admitting, then, the right of Superior Courts to regulate their practice, let us proceed to examine what they have done in the exercise of this jurisdiction, so far as relates to the matter now before us.

As regards the course of practice in Common Law Courts, we find but one general order having reference to the privilege of the Junior Bar. It is in the following terms:—"On the last day of Term only, members of the Bar shall take precedence according to their juniority, without prejudice to the Attorney or Solicitor-General moving officially in Her Majesty's causes at any time they may see convenient" (4 Gen. Order, 1854.) This privilege, although re-enacted by the above general order, is, we believe, of very ancient date, and has conferred on the last day of Term the appellation of "Junior day."

Again, it is a well established rule that all motions of course must be moved by members of the Outer Bar (O'Brien v. Gaskin, 2 Leg. Rep., 263; Smith v. Codrington, 1 Ir. Jur., N. S., 296). To the Junior Bar also belongs the privilege of opening all Law Arguments, both in the Court of Error and in the Court below (Lefanu v. Malcomson, 8 Ir. Law Rep., 418), as well as all pleadings at Nisi Prius. In the category of Law Arguments seem to be included bills of exceptions (Hemphill v. M'Kenna, 7 Ir. Law Rep., 395), argument in a special verdict case (Conlan v. Eyre, 1 Ir. Jur., N.S., 18; Nixon v. Blake, 5 Ir. Law Reps., 581), argument on a case stated by Justices of the Peace (under 20 & 21 Vic., c. 43, sec. 2) for the opinion of the Court (Reg. v. Brophy, 6 Ir. C.L. Reps., Ap. 11). In an argument on a certiorari, Junior Counsel must be retained; but Counsel may arrange among themselves which of them will argue the case, and in what order (Reg. v. Hamilton, 6 Ir. Jur., N.S., 154).

Again, the late Mr. Justice Crampton refused to permit Senior Counsel to settle issues without a Junior (Dunne v. Gumley, 8 Ir. C.L. Rep., Ap. 6); and in every case of a settlement of issues before a Judge, whether a question may arise thereon or not, Junior Counsel must be instructed (Howley v. Richey, 5 Ir. Jur. N.S., 348; Anon. 2 Ir. Jur., N.S., 26). These seem to us to be the only privileges possessed by the Junior Bar in our Courts of Law, which are recognized by judicial authority, and they may therefore be considered as part of the common law of the country.

Next, with respect to the privileges conferred on the Junior Bar in our Courts of Equity, all cause petitions must be opened and motions of course moved by members of the Outer Bar (see Anon. 5 Ir. Eq. Rep., 595, per Lefroy, B.) We have heard that one exception to the latter privilege has been allowed in the Rolls Court; the late Master of which is said to have permitted Senior Counsel to move that consents be made rules of Court, on the ground, it seems, that the Counsel, whether Senior or Junior, who advised the consent is the proper person to explain its terms to the Court. We believe, however, we are correct in stating that the Senior Bar, as a body, has never taken advantage of this licence, and that, as a matter of practice, all consents are moved in the Rolls, as in the other Courts of Law and Equity, by Junior Barristers. We may, therefore, look upon this exception to the general rule, if ever it existed, as now quite obsolete.

Again, at the hearing of all general Cause Petitions the proofs must be read by a Junior.

Also Junior Counsel must be retained in moving for an order of reference of Cause Petitions, under the 15th sec. Court of Chancery (Ireland) Regulation Act, 1850 (Cannon v. Burke, 5 Ir. Ch. Rep. 226), and Senior Counsel cannot sign such petitions unless a Junior also sign (Kelly v. Campion, IRISH LAW TIMES, 246). This case, which we have reported in our last impression, sets at rest a question which was much debated among the members of the legal profession, but upon the merits of which, we are led to believe, an all but unanimous opinion prevailed. The privilege conferred by this decision of the Lord Chancellor now stands, we presume, on the same grounds as those other privileges which we have already enumerated.

We now come to consider the second class of privileges of the Junior Bar, to which we referred at the outset. We mean those privileges conferred by rules which, although never made the subjects of judicial decision, are, nevertheless, to be considered as equally binding on the members of the Bar.

These rules owe their force partly to the etiquette and long-established usage of the Bar, and partly to the direct and well-considered resolutions of that entire body. We allude in particular to that rule which forbids Senior Counsel to sign pleadings either in Law or in Equity, unless first signed by a Junior. The privilege of preparing Common Law pleadings seems to have belonged to the Junior Bar from time immemorial, and we have never heard it disputed. Not so, however, with respect to pleadings in Equity. For a long time the opinion of the profession seemed divided as to the propriety of Senior Counsel drafting such pleadings without the assistance of a Junior, and accordingly the course of practice in this respect was by no means uniform. Many eminent members of the Inner Bar thinking it consistent with their professional dignity to prepare Equity pleadings without such assistance, while others, equally eminent, were of a contrary opinion, and declined to do so.

This question, however, is now set at rest. In the year 1864 a committee of members of the Inner and Outer Bar was selected by that body for the purpose of considering this and other questions affecting the course of practice of the Profession. Among the members of this committee were the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and the present Attorney and Solicitor-General, names which should add weight to any suggestions emanating from such a source. After much consideration it was resolved by this committee (which resolution was afterwards adopted at a general meeting of the Bar)—"That for the future no Senior Counsel shall sign any pleading at Law or in Equity, or any affidavit in the nature of a pleading in Equity, to which the signature of Counsel is required, unless a Junior Counsel also signs."

It is not our purpose in the present article to consider the abstract justice or injustice, if any such there be, of this resolution, which, in its terms, is plain and unambiguous. The interests of each section of the Bar were ably represented on the committee in question, and we are bound to assume that the above resolution was passed and adopted with a due regard to the high honour and dignity of the Legal Profession and the interests of the public. Nor is it our intention to express an opinion on the merits or demerits of the other privileges we have enumerated, which are well understood by the Bar and sustained by the decision of the Bench. But this we will say, that as long as these privileges continue to be thus recognized, so long it will be the duty, and we are certain also the advantage of the Profession which this Journal represents, to assist in maintaining them inviolate.

CURRENT TOPICS.

TREASURY MINUTE AS TO THE USE OF POLITICAL INFLUENCE BY PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The following is a copy of a Treasury minute upon this subject, dated the 2nd instant:—

"My lords have observed with much regret a growing practice on the part of gentlemen employed in the Public Service to endeavour to influence this board to accede to their applications for increase of salary or additional retiring allowance by means of the private solicitation of members of Parliament, and other persons of political influence. It is the duty, as well as the wish, of their lordships to give the most careful consideration to every representation made to them in the recognized way on behalf of any public servant (whatever be his social status or his official rank), with regard to his position, salary, and prospects of promotion, and also with regard to the amount of his retiring allowance on his quitting the Public Service. It is the practice of their lordships to consider questions of salary with reference to the duties and responsibilities of the individual or class whose case is brought before them, and to decide upon them after communication with the heads of the department concerned. In fixing the amount of retiring allowance in those cases where the Legislature has left them a discretion, my lords are in the habit of proceeding upon certain principles which they have prescribed for themselves, and within the limit of those principles they endeavour to deal with each case impartially upon its merits. It appears to their lordships that any attempt on the part of an officer to approach them on these matters through the private intercession of persons unconnected with his department, is virtually imputing to this board either that it is likely to turn a deaf ear to a reasonable application, unless supported by political influence, or that it may be induced to accede to an unreasonable application if such influence be brought to bear upon it. My lords disclaim either alternative, and, in order to prevent for the future any misapprehension upon this subject, they wish it to be understood by every public officer that any attempt made by him to obtain the sanction of this board to his application by a. y such solicitation as is hereinbefore referred to will be treated by them as an admission on the part of such officer that his case is not good upon its merits, and such application will be dealt with by their lordships accordingly. Let a copy of this minute be sent to every public department."

LEGAL APPOINTMENT.

We note with much pleasure the appointment of John Maunsell, Esq., to the important office of Solicitor to the Commissioners of the Dublin Metropolitan Police. The appointment is looked upon with much satisfaction by the profession, evincing as it does an anxiety to promote efficient men.

The high position which Mr. Maunsell holds in his profession, which is due as well to his thorough knowledge of its duties as to the courteous manner in which he discharges them, will show how much the Attorney General wishes to consult the public interest.

Dinner to the Recorder and Stipendiary Magistrates of Belfast.—On Tuesday evening the newly-appointed borough magistrates entertained the Recorder (J. Hastings Otway, Esq., Q.C.) and the Stipendiary Magistrates (E. Orme, Esq., R.M., and J. C. O'Donnell, Esq., R.M.) at dinner in the Town Hall. The entertainers were—The Mayor (David Taylor, Esq., J.P.) in the chair; Charles Lanyon, M.P.; Samuel George Getty, M.P.; Sir Edward Coey, William Dunville, &c.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Monday, May 6.

THE QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY IN IRELAND.

Mr. C. Fortescue asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland what course the Government proposed to take with respect to the Queen's University in Ireland, and whether they intended to bring in a bill to remove doubts as to the validity of the acceptance by the Senate of the Supplemental charter of last year, and to be admitted to degrees under that charter upon an equal footing as members of the corporate body of the University with other graduates?

Lord Naas—In answer to my right hon. friend, I have to say that a case was tried in the Rolls Court, in Dublin, some months ago, when the whole question of the right of the Crown to grant this supplemental charter was raised, and the further question was also raised as to whether the Senate of the Queen's University could accept the charter without the consent of the whole corporate body of the University. On the 10th of April the Master of the Rolls decided that the parties who had instituted that suit were not the proper parties to institute it; they had no locus standi, and on that ground the Master of the Rolls dismissed the case. But he also stated that the Court had, in his opinion, jurisdiction to decide the question as to the construction of the charter of 1864, provided that the question was raised in a proper and technical form. He further said, though he was not called on to decide the point judicially, that, in his opinion, the charter of 1864 does not vest the power of accepting or rejecting the new charter in the Senate exclusively. So the matter stands, but I have been informed that an information is now in the hands of the Attorney-General, which will probably give rise to a new suit in this matter, in which case the whole question will be raised again. Under these circumstances, I do not think it would be wise for the House to interfere by legislation in a question of great doubt and difficulty. The question, I believe, can only be satisfactorily settled by the ordinary tribunals of the country.

Mr. C. Fortescue—Am I to understand that the Attorney-General, on the part of the Government, has given his sanction to the renewed proceedings? I understand that they cannot be taken without his assent.

Lord Naas—I speak with great diffidence on this matter, being a purely legal question; but I understand that the action of the Attorney-General is purely ministerial, and that if an application be made to him to become a party, he has no option in the matter.

NOTES OF CASES.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

PRENDERGAST v. IZOD.

April 30.—Ejectment for Non-payment of Rent—Redemption—Lodgement of Rent and Costs—23 & 24 Vict., c. 154, s. 70.

The cause petition in this case was filed by the personal representatives of Mary Prendergast for the redemption of certain premises in the county of Kilkenny, held by the petitioners from the respondent, Lorenzo Izod, and now evicted for non-payment of rent. At the Kilkenny Quarter Sessions of June, 1866, an ejectment for non-payment of rent was brought against the present petitioners by the respondent, and a decree for possession granted, which was duly executed on the 2nd of August, 1866. One day before the expiration of six months from the execution of the decree the present petition was filed, and it sought for a reference to the Master to take an account of the profits of the lands from the time at which the respondent obtained possession of them under the decree, and to a certain the amount due for rent and arrears of rent and costs, and to strike a balance. The rent payable and the costs of the ejectment had not been lodged in Court.

The respondent, by his answering affidavit, submitted that the lodgment of the rent and costs, within six months from the execution of the ejectment decree, was a condition precedent to the granting of the relief sought, and that the petitioners' right to redeem was now barred.

Ryan, Q.C., and J. W. Harris, for the petitioners.

Prior to the passing of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 154 (the Landlord and Tenant Law Amendment Act, 1860), a tenant could file a bill to redeem and for an account without lodging the rent and costs in Court, and there is no real distinction in this respect between that Act and the old ejectment statutes. Beasley v. Darcy (1 Sch. & Lef. 403); Burroughs and Gresson's Eq. Plead 154. The language of the 11 Anne, c. 2, s. 2, and the 4 Geo. I., c. 5, s. 3, was as stringent as that of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 154, s. 70; and yet it was held under the earlier statutes that where the landlord got possession of the lands, and the tenant filed a bill for redemption, either before execution executed, or within six months afterwards, he would not be required to lodge any money in Court, either for rent or costs, before the hearing of the cause. 2 Furlong's L. & T. 1158; M'Ineherny v. Galway (Jones & C. 247). The 48th Section of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 154, was also referred to.

Hemphill, Q.C., and Phillips, for the respondent, were not called on.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The petitioners' rights in the present case are governed wholly by the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 154, and the 70th section of that Act declares, that if the rent and costs are not lodged or paid within the time limited, the defendant in the ejectment "shall be debarred from all relief or remedy in law or in equity." In Beasley v. Darcy the tenant had a claim against the landlord for timber for which he could not get credit in a court of law, and therefore the bill in that case was sustained by a well-known principle of equity. But in ordinary cases of redemption, whether under the old statutes or the late Act, where there are no cross demands, the lodgment or payment of the rent and costs must be considered a condition precedent to any application for redemption. The petition, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the petitioners, Michael Shortall

Solicitor for the respondent, Geo. H. Lowe.

M'DONNELL v. O'SULLIVAN.

April 30.—Suit beneath the Dignity of the Court—Value of Subject Matter of Suit.

This was a suit to enforce payment out of the separate estate of the respondent, Mrs. O'Sullivan (a married woman), of a sum of £19 8s. 10d. due by her to the petitioner on foot of shop goods supplied by him to her order during her coverture. A civil bill for the amount of the debt had been brought at the Athlone Quarter Sessions of April, 1866, against her husband, Mr. O'Sullivan; but it appearing that Mrs. O'Sullivan was entitled to a separate income of her own, and that her husband had privately warned her not to contract any debts, the case was dismissed upon the authority of Jolly v. Rees (15 C. B., N. S. 628).

Monahan for the petitioner.

There was no appearance for the respondent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Can a decree be made by this Court for so small an amount? In Lambert v. Lambert (2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 210), Lord Plunket dismissed a bill to restrain waste, when the damage done was trifling.

Monahan.—In that and other similar cases the Court refused to entertain the suit because the party might have proceeded by civil bill; but here there is no remedy except by a cause petition in this Court. In England, the Consolidated Order IX. 1, provides that "every suit, the subject matter of which is under the value of £10, shall be dismissed, unless it be instituted to establish a general right, or unless there shall be some other special circumstances which, in the opinion of the Court, shall make it reasonable that such suit should be retained." In Ireland there is no general order dealing with the amount for which a decree may be made.

The LORD CHANCELLOR made a decree for payment of the debt, with costs.

Solicitor for the petitioner, William Kelly.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

IN THE MATTER OF KENAH'S TRUST AND THE TRUSTEE RELIEF ACT.

Affidavit Sworn before Notary Public—Certificate of Consul.

W. Roper moved on petition for funds lodged in Court in this matter under the Trustee Relief Act. The petition was verified by an affidavit sworn before a Notary Public at New York, and annexed to the affidavit was the certificate of the British Consul, certifying, under the Consular seal, that the person before whom the affidavit was sworn, was a Notary Public.

The MASTER of the ROLLS expressed some doubt whether the affidavit should not have been sworn, before the British Consul. But on referring to Taylor on Ev. 1253, 3d. Ed., he afterwards made an order, as prayed by the petition.

Solicitor, R. Ponclue.

BUTLER v. MILLER.

Jan. 20; Feb. 7; April 16.—Deed of Sale—Fraud—Evidence.

The petition was filed by Frederick Butler against Robert Miller. It prayed that a deed of sale, dated the 16th of March, 1863, whereby Frederick Butler conveyed to Robert Miller forty-five acres of the lands of Ratharney, in the county of Longford, might be declared to be fraudulent and void, and might be delivered up to be cancelled; and that a fee farm grant of the said lands, which Robert Miller had obtained since the sale, might be declared to be held in trust as to the said lands for the petitioner. Fraud and under-value were the grounds relied on for setting aside the deed.

The petitioner, at the time of the sale, was entitled to the lands under his father's will, who devised them to the petitioner, subject to £60 to his eldest son, Richard Butler, and £200 as a portion for his daughter, Anna Maria Butler; and in the event of the petitioner marrying without the consent of the trustees of the will, he devised the lands to Anna Maria Butler, and he also devised them to her in case of the death of the petitioner, provided that the children of the petitioner should succeed her. In November, 1859, the petitioner had made a lease to Simpson, who was the brother-in-law of the respondent Miller, for sixteen years, at a rent of £36 6s. 2d., in consideration of a fine of £250, and had sold his stock and crops to Simpson for £113. He was of reckless and improvident habits, had a family of seven children, was deeply in debt, and owed money to the petitioner, who kept a grocery and provision shop about a mile from the petitioner's residence. The petition alleged that the respondent gave the petitioner credit for shop goods for the purpose of forcing him to sell the lands, and in the early part of 1863 refused to give him credit, alleging that his elder brother was coming home, and was going to law for the property, and the petitioner would lose it, as he would have no means to defend it, and suggested that he should sell the property to him. The petitioner also stated that two persons, whom he named, were in treaty with the petitioner, but that they and others were deterred from buying by statements of the respondent that the title was defective. The opinion of counsel had been obtained, favourable to the title, which the respondent was aware of at the time of the contract, but which the petitioner was not informed of till long after the conveyance. The petitioner had no independent professional advice in the transaction, and it appeared from two letters, one written by Robert Butler, and dated the 19th of February, 1863, and an answer written by the respondent to Robert Butler, dated the 10th of March, 1863, after the date of the conveyance, that there had been considerable management and contrivances between Robert Butler and the respondent to induce the petitioner to sign the agreement for the sale. Four witnesses proved the value of the interest sold to be £800. The consideration actually paid was £200 in cash, from which a deduction of a shop account of £11 19s., due to the respondent, was made, and debts paid amounting, according to the respondent's account, to £220 16s. 5d., and according to the petitioner's account, to £160 3s. 11d.

The respondent's letter of the 18th of March, 1863, which was a very important document in the case, was not put in issue by the petition. The letter of Robert Butler, to which it purported to be a reply, was referred to by the respondent in his affidavit in answer to the petition. The petitioner afterwards filed, by way of evidence, an affidavit of Robert Butler, in which the letter of the 18th of March, 1863, was referred to by him. The respondent called for and got a copy of said letter, and afterwards filed an affidavit, without in any manner alluding to it.

Sullivan, Q.C., Lawless, Q.C., and E. M. Kelly, for the petitioner, contended that the letter of the 18th of March, 1863, was admissible in evidence, though not put in issue by the petition. Rice v. O'Connor, 12 Ir. Ch. The MASTER of the ROLLS admitted the letter in evidence, and afterwards (April 16) delivered judgment, setting aside the deed with costs, holding that there was pressure and deception practised by the respondent, which, coupled with the other circumstances of the case, viz., inadequacy of price, inequality between the parties, and want of professional assistance to the petitioner, constituted in equity fraud such as would vitiate the sale.

May 4.—Sheriff—Writ—Erasures.

This was a motion to set aside the ordinary side bar rule on a sheriff to return a writ of fi. fa. The writ was delivered to the sheriff on the 6th March. It appeared that at the time the sheriff was absent, but on the 11th March he wrote to the attorneys for the execution creditor, declining to execute the writ, upon the ground that it was erased in fourteen different places, including the county, the attorneys' names, and the amount for which the levy was to be made. The attorneys for the execution creditor wrote, in answer, stating that the writ had been delivered as it had been issued by the officer of the Court, and calling upon him to execute. From the affidavit of the attorneys for the creditor it appeared that the writ had been taken to the office to be sealed; that the officer had called attention to certain alterations which should be made; that those alterations had been made; and that the erasures had occurred in that way; and that none of the erasures had been made after the writ had been sealed. It also appeared that, at the time when the sheriff wrote his letter of the 11th March, another writ, at suit of another party, was in his hands, which was immediately afterwards executed.

Edward Gibson, for the sheriff, argued that the sheriff could not safely proceed on such a writ as that which had been delivered.

Purcell, Q.C., contra, argued that it was the sheriff's duty to have executed the writ. He had been told that it had not been altered after sealing; and if he had had any doubt upon the matter he should have made inquiries at the office.

It appeared that there was still property upon which a levy could be made, and ultimately no rule was made upon the motion, the sheriff to return the writ at once; no costs of the motion, and O'BRIEN, J. expressing an opinion that there had not been sufficient activity on the sheriff's part, but hoping that a writ would never again be allowed to issue out of Court so erased as the present one.

May 8.—Sheriff—Interpleader.

Wilson, for the Sheriff of Mayo, appeared upon a summoning order, which had been obtained by him some days ago, and should have been served upon the parties on the 4th instant. He stated that by a fatality the order, instead of being served on the claimant in the country, had, with other papers, been sent up to Dublin from Westport, and accordingly the claimant did not now appear.

Meldon appeared for the execution creditor.

The Court (O'BRIEN and GEORGE, J.J.) said that it would be necessary for the Sheriff to obtain a fresh summoning order, which was then granted.

Adding Defendants—Plea in Abatement.

Action for goods sold and delivered, &c. The defendant had pleaded, issues had been served by the plaintiff and returned.

Griott, for the defendant, now moved that, as the cause of action, if any, arose against the defendant jointly with the Very Rev. A. O'Loghlin and James J. M'Carthy, who, at the commencement of this suit were, and still continued within the jurisdiction, the summons and plaint should be amended, by making the said persons co-defendants.

There was an affidavit, by the defendant, that he was advised and believed that the cause of action, if any such existed, arose against him jointly with the persons mentioned in the notice. The motion, which had been previously mentioned before a Judge in Chamber, now was moved before the full Court.

Butt, Q.C, and M'Mahon, against the motion.

The COURT entertained no doubt of the bona fides of the application, and considering special circumstances in the case, gave leave to file a plea in abatement, if the plaintiff refused to add the persons named, as co-defendants; but did not consider they had any jurisdiction under the C. L. P. Act, secs. 84 to 90, to compel the plaintiff to add any parties as defendants on the record; nor was the case to be cited as an authority that parties might first plead in bar, and then come in for leave to file a plea in abatement instead.

FLEMING v. GUY.

May 7th.—Heir-at-Law—Costs.

This was a suit in which two wills of the deceased, John Jones, were in issue. The first bore date the 22nd May, 1865, under which the plaintiff's family would be entitled to all the real and personal estate of the deceased, on his wife's death, subject to some legacies; and the second bore date the 27th May, 1865, under which the defendant would be entitled to all the real and personal estate, on the death of the wife of the deceased. The defendant was the heir-at-law of the deceased, but not next of kin, and he, in his declaration, propounded the last will, which the plaintiff in his plea impeached as invalid, chiefly on the ground of no instructions having been given by the deceased for it, and of undue influence; and he further relied on the former will as the true last will of the deceased. To that plea the defendant replied, impeaching such will as obtained by undue influence, and for want of instructions, and as revoked.

The case was tried before a special jury. The deceased was a very old man, over 90, when he made each will, and died in a few days after the making of the last, from the effects of diarrhea. The jury found in favour of the first will, and condemned the last.

On the question of costs, KEATING, J. held—The defendant is the heir-at-law; as such he had a clear right to impeach the first will, and to put the plaintiff on full proof of it; and if he had only done that, I think it is a case in which he should have got costs. But he has, as a devisee and legatee, put forward another will, and has failed to sustain it. I think, under all the circumstances, he should pay costs. I therefore make a decree establishing the first will, and order the defendant to pay the costs of the suit to the plaintiff.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Before MILLER, J.

In re AN ARRANGING TRADER.

May 3.—Arrangement Clauses of the Bankruptcy Act—Discretionary Powers of the Court to adjourn the Case into Bankruptcy, notwithstanding that there may be a large majority of Creditors in favour of the arrangement.

The trader came before the Court offering a composition of four shillings in the pound.

Larkin, Solicitor, appeared for him. He said he had a very large majority of creditors in favour of the arrangement, and he thought he was entitled, ex debito, to carry it. No doubt the composition offered was small, but it was well secured, and would be paid, and the creditors knew that if it went into bankruptcy, it would not pay sixpence in the pound.

Purcell, Q.C., was for a creditor named Nixon, who had a special ground of complaint.

Daniel was for a creditor named Delagano.

They contended that there was a principle involved in the case of much more importance to the mercantile community than any amount of dividend. They cited Beck's case decided by Judge Berwick, 1st Irish Reports 69, and referred to the 353 section of the "Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act."

MILLER, J., said he fully approved of the principle on which Beck's case was decided. The Court could not sanction an arrangement, and pronounce it satisfactory to all the creditors, where one or more creditors were treated with the greatest injustice and fraud when seeking for their just rights, and he could not shut his eyes to the fact that the most vexatious opposition was given to the claim of Nixon, who in the end took two bills for debt and costs, and just when those bills became due, a bill of sale or mortgage was effected evidently to defeat the payment of them. He would set aside the arrangement, and adjourn the case into bankruptcy.

Re AN ARRANGING TRADER.

May 7.—Arrangement Clauses—Discretionary Power of the Court to turn an Arrangement Case into Bankruptcy, Obtaining Credit by false representations as to solvency.

This was a case similar to the foregoing; the trader was a draper in the country, and came before the Court under the arrangement clauses of the Act; he had a large majority of creditors to support his proposal.

Larkin, Solicitor, appeared for him; he said his failure was caused by the failure of the great house of Porteous and Paul, of Manchester, who used to draw bills on him far above the amount of goods supplied; in fact, for their accommodation. The composition offered would be secured, and he believed all the creditors but one were quite willing to take it.

Mr. Vance, merchant, opposed the arrangement on the ground that the debt was contracted by false representations as to his solvency. His traveller called on trader to solicit an order in the way of his trade, when he stated that he was a cash purchaser, and that he would pay for the goods in cash; the traveller wrote this account to his employers, Messrs. Vance and Beere, and the goods were accordingly supplied, and in eight or ten days after the trader called a meeting of creditors. It was alleged that the failure of Porteous and Paul was not known to the trader at the time he gave the order, but there was no doubt that he must have known he was in insolvent circumstances.

MILLER, J., said the case was a painful one to him, but he was determined to pursue a course that would lead to the most perfect truth and confidence between the wholesale merchants and the retail traders, and if Mr. Vance insisted on it, he would turn the case into bankruptcy. He thought it would be a great abuse of the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act, to permit a trader, when in a state of insolvency, to contract a debt upon the promise that he would pay for the goods in cash, and in a week after come into that Court and tell that creditor with whom he never had a transaction before, you must take four or five shillings in the pound, or whatever the debtor chose to offer, because he had a majority of all his other creditors with whom he had been long dealing willing to take it. He (Judge Miller) did not think that the arrangement clauses were ever intended to be used for a purpose that would work great injustice to any one creditor, and where that would be the result, the case should be dealt with in bankruptcy. All that was said in favour of the trader and of the hardship of his case by the failure of Porteous and Paul, was more for the consideration of Mr. Vance than for the Court, and if Mr. Vance pressed it, he would turn the case into bankruptcy.

Mr. Vance said the example set by the case would be of more value to him and wholesale merchants than any dividend he could get under the arrangement. He felt perfectly satisfied that the debt was contracted with fraudulent intention. Adjourned into bankruptcy.

A Bill to Regulate and Improve the Tenure of Land in Ireland between Landlord and Tenant.

The following is an abstract of the clauses of the above Bill, prepared and brought in by Sir Colman O'Loghlen and Mr. Gregory.

PREAMBLE recites that certainty and security of tenure is the best encouragement to honest industry and the application of capital and labour in the cultivation of land.

And that the land of Ireland let for agricultural purposes is in a great measure held by the occupying tenants as tenants from year to year, or for other uncertain period, who have thus no security for the continuance of their possession or certainty for the enjoyment of the fruit of their labour.

And that it is expedient to induce proprietors to give to tenants in Ireland a more permanent occupation of their farms, by discouraging tenancies from year to year, or for other uncertain periods, and encouraging tenancies, under contracts in writing, for fixed terms of years.

PART I.

As to Constructive or Parol Tenancies of Land let for Agricultural Purposes after the passing of this Act.

1. For the future no tenancy from year to year in respect of agricultural land shall be created by parol agreement or by legal construction.

2. After the passing of this Act tenancies from year to year in respect of agricultural land shall only be created by a contract in writing.

3. In the absence of any written contract to the contrary, a tenancy created in respect of agricultural land after the passing of this act shall be deemed to be a tenancy for twenty-one years.

4. Such construction of law shall not apply to a tenant overholding after the expiration of his lease unless left in undisturbed possession of his farm for two years after such expiration.

5. In the case of a constructive tenancy for twenty-one years, either party may, during the tenancy, compel a lease to be executed for the unexpired term.

6. In case of dispute such lease shall be settled by the chairman of the county in which the lands shall be situated.

PART II.

As to Tenancies from Year to Year of Land let for Agricultural purposes created after the passing of this Act.

7. To determine a tenancy from year to year of agricultural land, twelve months notice shall be necessary.

8. Tenants from year to year of agricultural land shall be entitled to deduct half the county cess.

9. In cases of tenancies from year to year the landlord shall not be entitled to distrain, or to claim a year's rent, under 9 Anne, c. 8. (Ir).

10. A tenant from year to year, if dispossessed by notice to quit, shall be entitled to compensation for growing crops and unexhausted manure.

11. And also to compensation for his tenant right in county where such custom exists, and where no such custom exists, to compensation for any loss or injury sustained by being deprived of the possession of said land, in case he shall have been in possession for five years at least, and from time to time have paid all rent, and used said land in due course of husbandry.

12. Such compensation shall be recoverable by civil bill, and shall be a charge on the farm from which the tenant shall be dispossessed, in addition to the ordinary remedies for its recovery.

PART III.

As to Tenancies from Year to Year of Land let for Agricultural Purposes, created before the passing of this Act.

13. Tenancies from year to year of agricultural land created before the passing of this Act, and in existence on the 1st of January, 1870, shall be subject to the provisions of Part II. of the Act.

PART IV.

As to who may grant and as to the Effect of Leases for Twenty-one Years of Agricultural Land.

14. In addition to the persons now by law entitled to make such leases, every landlord shall have power to make leases in possession of land, for agricultural purposes, for twenty one years, unless only a lessee himself, and in that case no lease made by him shall continue after the term granted by his lease.

15. A new lease for twenty-one years, granted by a landlord to an occupying tenant, under a lease of twenty-one years within four years of the expiration of such tenant's existing lease of twenty-one years, shall be deemed to be a lease in possession, although said new lease not to begin to run until the expiration of the then subsisting lease.

16. All such leases shall be valid against the grantor and every future owner of the land, and all other persons interested, unless same shall be impeached in manner after mentioned.

17. If within two years after making such lease the person making same shall be evicted for defect of title existing at the time of making the lease, or if within said period of two years proceedings grounded on said defect of title shall have been commenced, on which possession shall be afterwards recovered, the party recovering possession may, at his discretion, treat the tenant as holding under the said lease, or as tenant from year to year only; but in case party recovering possession, shall not, within six months, by notice in writing served on the tenant, elect to treat him as tenant from year to year, the lease under which the tenant held previous to said recovery shall be valid.

18. A successor to a limited owner may object to a lease for not having had reserved the best rent, and in that case the chairman may increase the rent, and the tenant shall pay the increased rent, or the lease shall be void.

19. Landed Estates' Court may set aside and sell the land discharged of such lease, or, at option of the tenant, increase the rent in case, on the application of any party interested in said land except the grantor of the lease, the Court shall be of opinion that such lease was made at a low rent collusively.

20. In cases of sales in the Landed Estates' Courts, tenancies from year to year may be converted into tenancies under a 21 years lease.

21. Before doing so notices shall be served on the parties interested.

22. On settlement of rental Judge shall hear any objections to said conversion, and determine whether all or any of the tenants from year to year appearing on said rental shall obtain leases for twenty-one years, and, if so, at what rent; and tenants declared entitled to such lease shall be stated on the rental as tenants holding under a lease for twenty-one years, and a lease shall be granted for said period to such tenants under the seal of the court.

23. No lease for twenty-one years, or counterpart, shall be liable to any stamp duty.

Part V.

As to Tenancies under Leases for Twenty-one Years of Land let for Agricultural Purposes.

24. No tenant holding under lease for twenty-one years to subdivide or sublet his land, without consent in writing.

25. If lessee sublet, he shall be liable to a penalty of two pounds an acre for each acre he parts possession of.

26. And shall not recover rent from any sub-tenant, and the sub-tenant may recover back any money paid in advance, as the consideration for any subdivision or subletting.

27. The letting of conacre, or grazing or meadowing, shall not be deemed subletting or subdivision.

28. Under a lease for twenty-one years, trees, mines, minerals, quarries, and game shall belong to the landlord in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.

29. In the case of an eviction for non-payment of rent of a lease for twenty-one years, the tenant shall have only three months to redeem.

30. And the landlord shall not be liable to account for the profits of the land during the period allowed for redemption.

31. A twenty-one years lease shall not operate as an outstanding legal estate.

Part VI.

As to Rent and the Recovery of Rent of Land let for Agricultural Purposes.

32. After six years all arrears of rent shall be barred, whether reserved by deed or not.

33. Grazing stock shall not be liable to a landlord's distress for rent beyond the amount of the grazing money, unless in case of fraud.

34. Under a distress it shall not be lawful to seize household furniture, nor any agricultural implements or imported manure found on lands, or any materials for building or draining, not being the produce of the farm, or used on the farm at the time of the seizure.

Part VII.

As to Tenants overholding after the Expiration of their lease, and as to the Mode of recovering possession from them.

35. No occupying tenant of land who, after the passing of this Act, shall overhold after the expiration of his lease shall acquire any greater estate than a tenancy at will without a contract in writing, unless he shall be left in occupation for more than two years after the expiration of his lease without a demand of possession.

36. Within two years after the expiration of any lease a landlord of any farm may recover possession from any occupying overholding tenant, on proof of a demand of possession of said farm or land, but no demand of possession shall be valid if tenant left in possession for six months or upwards after the expiration of his lease, unless such demand be in writing, and if tenant left in possession for six months or upwards after expiration of lease, he shall not be bound to deliver possession until last gale day for the current year in which such demand of possession shall be made.

37. All ejectments to recover possession of land let for agricultural purposes to an occupying tenant overheld after the expiration of a lease may be brought in the Civil Bill Court of the county in which the land may be situate without reference to the amount of the rent reserved by the expired lease.

Part VIII.

As to Compensation Agreements.

38. Every landlord shall have power to make agreements to compensate tenant for improvements, which shall bind his successors.

39. But no agreement made by a limited owner shall bind his successor for any greater sum than four years rent of farm unless the improvements be sanctioned by and executed to the satisfaction of the Board of Works.

40. No sum paid by any incoming tenant to a landlord to recoup such landlord for any sum he may have paid an outgoing tenant for improvements and compensation shall be deemed to be a fine or foregift to invalidate any lease.

Part IX.

General Provisions.

41. Act not to apply to demesne lands or land in boroughs, or to holdings under £4 annual value.

42. Holdings under £4 annual value in existence on 1st January, 1870, shall be deemed "cottier tenancies," under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 151.

43. For the purposes of Act ordinary covenants in lease shall be deemed to be covenants to pay the rent reserved, to maintain and deliver up the premises in good repair, and to till the land in a husbandlike manner, and all other covenants shall be deemed to be special covenants.

44. Chairmen of counties to make rules and frame forms.

45. Short title of Act to be "The Land Tenure (Ireland) Act, 1867."

THE GOVERNMENT BILL RESPECTING MEETINGS IN PARKS.

On Monday morning was printed a copy of the bill respecting the parks, introduced into the House of Commons on Friday night by Mr. Walpole. The bill has on a fly-leaf the words, "Meetings in Royal Parks," which words are followed by the description of the object of the bill, viz., "For the better and more effectually securing the use of certain Royal parks and gardens for the enjoyment and recreation of her Majesty's subjects." It is prepared and brought in by Mr. Secretary Walpole, Lord John Manners, and the Attorney-General. The bill is as follows:—

"Whereas it is expedient to provide for the better and more effectually securing the use of certain Royal parks and gardens for the enjoyment and recreation of her Majesty's subjects:—Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

"1. This act shall apply to all the Royal parks, gardens, and possessions the management of which is vested in the ommissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, nd which are situate within the limits of the metropolis.

"2. The metropolis shall mean the area for the time being subjected to the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

"3. No meeting of a public character shall take place or be held without the permission of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in any of the parks, gardens, and possessions to which this act applies.

"4. Any person convening, or aiding or assisting in convening, any meeting to be held in contravention of the act (whether such meeting shall be actually held or not), and any person knowingly joining or taking part in any such meeting contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be liable to be forthwith arrested, without further warrant or authority, and to be summarily convicted before any magistrate sitting in any police court within the metropolis, and shall, on such conviction, either be liable to a penalty not exceeding £10, or, in the discretion of the magistrate, may be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one calendar month.

"5. Nothing in this act contained shall de deemed to prejudice or affect any prerogative or other right of her Majesty, her heirs or successors, in respect of the said parks, gardens, and possessions.

"6. This act may be cited for all purposes as 'The Meetings in Royal Parks Act, 1867.'"

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

From The Law Times.

OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR A WITNESS—PRACTICE.—The official liquidator of the C. Company resisted the insertion of his name on the list of contributories of the B. Company, on the ground of fradulent misrepresentations in the prospectus of that company as to the value, assets, and position of a firm whose business the B. Company had taken over. The liquidator of the B. Company was a witness, and the C. Company called upon him to answer questions and produce documents, which he refused to do on the ground of privilege. The objection was held untenable, as he was in the position of a defendant in a suit instituted by a contributory against the company and the liquidator to be relieved from liability. (Re Barned's Banking Corporation, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 240. Ch.)

WINDING-UP—PRACTICE.—When the time limited for appeal has expired, the Court of Appeal will not enlarge it upon an ex parte application, but will require notice to be given to the intended respondent. (Re The Lama Italian Coal Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 258. Rolls.)

SETTLEMENT—GIFT—COSTS.—A suit was instituted by a trustee of a settlement for the execution of the trusts of it, and the respective claimants were defendants. It was held that the costs of the suit must be dealt with as if they were costs of an interpleader suit, and that the claimants of the subject of the gift must pay the plaintiff's costs in equal moieties. (Farrington v. Parker, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 258. Rolls.)

LORD CAIRNS' ACT—PRACTICE.—Where the relief sought by plaintiffs in a suit of equity, though arising out of, is not identical with, that also sought by them in an action at law against the same parties, this Court will not put the plaintiffs to their election, but will allow them to sue both here and at law. The object of the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27 (Lord Cairns' Act) was neither to compel this Court to award damages in the cases mentioned in it, nor to limit or take away the original jurisdiction of this Court, but to extend the rights and remedies of suitors in it. The plaintiffs in a suit in equity filed a bill praying a decree for the delivery up of certain bills of exchange; an injunction to restrain the negotiation of them, and for payment of a sum of £2,000, and of the costs of the suit. The bill originally prayed also for damages for the breach of an alleged agreement by the defendants; but that was afterwards struck out by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then sued the same defendants at law for the damages for the breach of the agreement, making no mention in the declaration in the action of the bills of exchange. The defendants obtained the common order for the plaintiffs to elect between the proceedings in equity and those at law. A motion was then made to discharge that order on the ground of irregularity. Held, that the order must be discharged, and with costs. (The Anglo-Danubian, &c., Company v. Rogerson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 262. Rolls.)

PERSONAL LIABILITY OF ATTORNEY.—The defendant, an attorney, wrote the following letter to the plaintiff:—"Sir,—Mr. Wright has handed me your letter of the 3rd respecting the non-payment of the bill for £91 due on Saturday. I am now making arrangements for an advance to Mr. Wright, to enable him to pay this and other claims upon him, and if you will have the goodness to hold the bill for a few days, I shall be prepared on his behalf to take it up." The plaintiff had no further communication with the defendant, and on the receipt of the letter was not aware that the defendant was an attorney. Held, in an action against the attorney as surety for the amount of the bill of exchange, that this letter did not render the defendant personally liable. (Allaway v. Duncan, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 264. Q. B.)

WILL—SCOTCH CONFIRMATION—ASSETS ABROAD.—M., a domiciled Scotchman, died, leaving a will, whereby he appointed executors. The executors proved the will in Scotland, and authorized F. and Co. to take out administration as their agents in India, where the deceased possessed considerable property. F. and Co. did so, and having realized the assets, they paid the money for their own protection into the Court of Chancery in England. On a suggestion that personal representation was also necessary in this country to enable the executors to take the money out of the Court of Chancery, the Court expressed its willingness to grant probate of the will, but declined to allow the executors' oath to be altered to meet the facts of the case by having the property sworn under £20. (In the Goods of James Murray, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 266. Prob.)

INSOLVENT INTESTATE.—Where an intestate died insolvent, and the only assets were a fund in Chancery which bore no interest, while the two principal debts which exceeded it in amount bore interest at the rate of five per cent., the Court, notwithstanding, declined to grant administration to a creditor until the next of kin who were in India were cited. (In the Goods of J. Gerrard, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 267. Prob.)

TESTAMENTARY SUIT—COSTS.—Where, in a testamentary suit a next of kin, who resisted probate on the ground of undue execution, proceeded to trial, despite of notice by the executor that it was not intended to support the will, the Court refused to allow him costs out of the estate, other than such as the registrar, having regard to the duty cast upon him, might think reasonable. The disposition of the Court is to grant administration to the party who has upset a will, provided it has the discretion, and the testator has left no other will; but, in the absence of special circumstances, it refused to pass over the widow in favour of a next of kin who established the intestacy. (Fritchley v. Fritchley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 267. Prob.)

CONTRIBUTORY—SUBSCRIBERS OF MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION.—Sect. 23 of the C. A. provides that subscribers of the memorandum of association shall on registration be members of the company. This is compulsory and not permissive. B. subscribed the memorandum of association for ten shares, acted as interim director, though he had never applied for an allotment and no shares had been formally allotted, and his name had not been entered on the share register. There were many unallotted shares, and the Court held that he must be regarded as if he had been an allottee of ten of these. But if all had been allotted, how then? (Ex parte Evans, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 252. L. JJ.)

CONTRIBUTORY—DEATH OF SHAREHOLDER—SUBSEQUENT CALL.—At the time of his death B. had thirty shares in a banking company standing in his name. He died in 1855, having bequeathed the shares to certain legatees, and leaving C. his executor. The company was wound up in 1866, when the shares were still standing in B.'s name. Upon the question who was to pay the calls, it was held that, as between all the legatees, those who took the shares were primarily liable; but as between the legatees and the company the liability was on the general estate of the testator. (Turquand v. Kirby, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 260. M.R.)

CANAL COMPANY — MINERALS. — Stone is a mineral within the term "mines and minerals" in a statute which gave a canal company power to stop all working of mines adjacent to or under their canal, if dangerous to it, and they are the sole judges, within reasonable limits, of what is such dangerous working. (The Midland Railway Company v. Checkley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 260. M.R.)

BOW-STREET POLICE COURT.

TUESDAY, APRIL 30.

Forging the Seal of the Writ Office of the Queen's Bench.

Joseph Lowe Smithe, described as an attorney's clerk, was brought up in custody of Buck, one of the summoning officers of the court, upon a warrant charging him with forging the seal of the Writ Office of the Court of Queen's Bench to a subpœna, pretended to have been issued in a case pending in that court.

Pollard, from the offices of the Solicitors to the Treasury, conducted the prosecution.

Mr. Burnaby, the chief clerk, read over the informations, which were to the following effect:—

Michael Henry Fox, a dresser at Astley's Theatre, stated: In consequence of something he had been told, he went on the 19th Feb. to the Trinity Arms Tavern, Swan-street, Borough, where he saw the prisoner, Joseph Lowe Smithe, and told him he wanted a lawyer's letter written to a person named Jest, who had defamed his character. The prisoner agreed to write the letter, saying the charge would be one shilling. Witness paid him the shilling, and he wrote the letter, which witness posted. Receiving no answer from Jest, he went to the same public-house a few days afterwards, and meeting the prisoner there, said he wanted to take proceedings against Jest, and asked how much a writ would be? He said it would be 8s. Afterwards the prisoner introduced him to a person named Foggo, who, he understood, was an attorney. Foggo agreed to take the case up, but said witness must arrange with Smithe about the costs out of pocket. A few days afterwards witness received a note from the prisoner, to the effect that Jest was defending the action. In consequence of that he went to the Trinity Arms, and saw the prisoner and Foggo together. One of them said, "Jest has pleaded, and the case must be gone on with. We must get out subpœnas against your witnesses to secure them." A few days after that he had a letter, asking him to meet them again, and requiring him to pay 10s. for getting out subpœnas. He met them at the Trinity Arms, and told them he could not pay the money that day, not having received his wages, but he would do so on the following Monday, which was the 18th March. On that day witness met the prisoner at the Trinity Arms, and they went to the Queen's Bench Office in the Temple. The prisoner obtained a form of subpœna, and filled it up with the names of the two witnesses, and gave it to him (Fox) to read. He said he should want 4s., being 2s. for each witness. Witness gave him the 4s. The prisoner went out and presently returned with the subpœna and two copies. He observed, "I need not go to serve them, you can serve them yourself," to which witness assented. The prisoner told him to "take care of the parchment one." On the 22nd March witness gave him 2s. to take out a subpœna against another witness. The prisoner filled in the writ, and brought it back to witness with a copy. Witness served the copies of the subpœnas himself upon the persons required to attend as witnesses, and showed them the originals. Subsequently a further demand was made for 10s. for filing the record. Witness objected to this, as he had begun by that time to have suspicions, and expressed a wish to go with the prisoner to file the record. The prisoner objected, and ultimately witness gave him the money, and consented to wait while he went to file it. After a short absence the prisoner returned, and read to him a document, which he said was the record. The prisoner also said he must have another sovereign not later than ten o'clock the next Tuesday, as the trial was coming off on Wednesday, which would be the 27th March. After this witness showed the subpœnas to a friend, by whose advice he took them to the Queen's Bench Writ Office. The clerk there detained them. They were the same now produced. He believed the seals were forgeries.

Henry William Stowell, chief clerk in the Queen's Bench Writ Office, said he had examined the præcipes in the office for the month of March, and found none on either the 18th or 22nd, for any subpœna or subpœnas, in action of Fox v. Jest, or in any other in which Mr. Foggo was attorney. But he did find on the 22nd of March a præcipe for a writ of summons in a case in which the attorney's name was Foggo.

On the application of Mr. Pollard, the further hearing of the case was adjourned to a future day.

MR. DOWSE.—A correspondent of The Cork Examiner gives the following description of Mr. Dowse's speech in defence of Burke:—"After Mr. Butt, and when the evidence for defence had been tendered, Mr. Dowse rose to address on the same side. The beaming humorous countenance and burly person of the learned gentleman fixed the attention of his hearers at once, and with a prefatory 'hem' of portentous resonance he commenced, at first slowly and with deliberation. From the first he was listened to with attention, but as he proceeded, warming with his subject, and by terms pathetic, humorous, sentimental, or sarcastic, the mere attention which is accorded to the meter out of correct sentences soon merged on the interest which the orator commands. It is impossible in this space to notice properly the splendid effort which has placed Mr. Dowse among the very foremost forensic orators at the Irish Bar to-day. From one to long after four o'clock a crowded audience hung with every manifestation of delight and emotion on his phrases. In addition to a fine full voice, Mr. Dowse possesses a most decided Northern accent, which adds a by no means insignificant charm to his delivery, mitigated moreover as it is by a residence in the softer South. And as sentence after sentence passed his lips without hesitation, but also without hurry, and passages gleaming with absolute poetical fire or delicate sentiment were succeeded by some unexpected denunciation or sarcasm, not the less effective because expressed in a quick dry manner, and in a different tone, the increasing stillness and fixity showed very sufficiently the effect on the feelings of the audience. Throughout the judges listened with the deepest attention, and with evident admiration—the Chief Justice frequently pausing when making a note to look at the orator and give ear to some striking phrase. Nobody seemed more delighted or more interested than Mr. Butt, and the Counsel for the Crown listened with particular attention. When Mr. Dowse at length sat down, after a peroration in keeping with the rest of his speech, an irrepressible murmur, the full-bodied ghost of a cheer, expressed the applause of all who heard."

A MAHOMETAN BARRISTER.—Among the names of those called to the English Bar on 30th April, 1867, in the Middle Temple, appears that of Budroodeen Tyabjee. This gentleman is a Mahometan, and the first ever called to the English Bar. The oaths of allegiance, &c., were administered to him in the usual terms, but he was sworn on the Koran. He intends to practise at the Bar in Bombay, where he will be the first disciple of the Prophet who has ever held such a position in India.

A French law court has been occupied for two days in hearing arguments as to whether the heirs of persons deceased have the right to take legal proceedings against any one who shall have defamed the departed, and whether the offender be liable to the penalties enacted by the law, as if the party were still alive. After a long deliberation, the court decided in the affirmative.

COURT OF CHANCERY—Monday, May 6.

MASTER EXTRAORDINARY AT COLERAINE.

Palles, Q C., applied that Mr. Alexander Carson, a physician, residing in the town of Coleraine, might be appointed a Master Extraordinary for taking affidavits there, in the place of Mr. John Tagart, deceased.

Harrison, Q.C., applied that Mr. William Warke, a merchant in that town, might be appointed.

Wilson applied that Mr. James Hay, the petty sessions clerk in Coleraine, might be appointed.

The Lord Chancellor said that he had read all the certificates, and thought that Mr. Warke was the best person to fill the office; but he hesitated to appoint him in consequence of his having written a private letter to him (the Lord Chancellor) soliciting the appointment. Such a course of proceeding was extremely objectionable. He was afraid, however, that Dr. Carson's profession was, to some extent, an objection to his being appointed, as he should necessarily be away from the town attending to his professional calls. He (the Lord Chancellor) would not appoint a petty sessions clerk to be a Master Extraordinary in any case in which he could possibly avoid it. He thought that Mr. Warke would be the best person to appoint, and he would therefore appoint him; but he wished that gentleman to be apprized that the letter he had written was the cause of his hesitation to appoint him.

THE JUDGES AND CORPORATION AT ST. PAUL'S.—On Sunday afternoon last, according to ancient custom, the ceremony of churching the judges in Easter Term was performed in St. Paul's Cathedral. At one time nearly all the judges were in the habit of attending, but during the last few years the number has dwindled down to five or six, sometimes only four, but on no previous occasion has there been so small an attendance as there was on Sunday, only two of her Majesty's judges being present. The Lord Mayor, with Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Waterlow, and Sheriff Lycett, proceeded in state to the Cathedral, where they were joined by the Very Rev. Dr. Milman, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Rev. W. W. Champneys, the canon in residence, the Rev. J. H. Coward, the Rev. J. Lupton, the Rev. H. Milman, and the Rev. B. M. Cowie, who received Lord Chief Justice Bovill and Mr. Justice Blackburn at the south door; Serjeant Robinson, Serjeant Tindal Atkinson, Serjeant Payne, and two or three other serjeants followed the judges. The procession moved into the choir, where there was a full choral service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. W. Champneys, M.A., vicar of St. Pancras.

IS AN INFANT IN ARMS A "PERSON"?—It seems as if this question would never be decided. It has been lately further complicated by the decision of a magistrate at the Greenwich Police-court. Two ladies, having taken a cab, happened to have a child nine months old with them. For this child an extra fare was demanded, and the ladies refused to pay it. It came before the magistrate, who decided that although the Court of Queen's Bench had decided that two children under ten years of age would count as one adult, one child in excess of the two persons, for carrying whom the tariff is fixed at sixpence per mile, constitutes a third person, and must be paid for accordingly.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MAY 18, 1867.

IN our number of the 4th inst., we explained who the persons are who, under the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries (Ireland) can, as "actual tenants in tail," avail themselves of the provisions of that statute for the disposition of their estates. In this paper we propose briefly, and in continuation of the subject, to consider under what circumstances a tenant in tail can, with the consent of other persons, and under the Act in question, make a disposition of his estate, and convert the same into an estate in fee.

Now the 12th section of the Act of 4th and 5th Wm. IV., c. 92, imposes no qualification whatsoever of consent, and consequently that section must be understood as giving or authorizing, to the extent mentioned in it, a power of disposition, save so far as such power may be restricted by the other clauses in the same statute. And we find in the 32nd section this important restriction of such right, viz., that where there is what the Act calls a protector of a settlement, under which the tenant in tail derives, then, unless the tenant in tail be entitled to the remainder or reversion in fee immediately expectant on the determination of his estate tail (in which case no consent is necessary), the consent of such protector is essential to give validity to any disposition by such tenant in tail of his estates. So, also, in the case we already, in our former number, adverted to, of a tenant in tail, ex provisione viri, under settlements made previously to the Act, such assent is required to a disposition by such tenant in tail, as the Act, 10 Car. I., s. 2, c. 8 (11 H. VII., c. 20, Eng.) required, as to a fine or recovery levied or suffered by her of such lands—that is, in effect, the consent of the next heir inheritable under the entail. It, therefore, is important to see who is to be the protector of such settlement, and also who is excluded from being protector—and then, what is the office of such protector?

Now, it is necessary to observe that an important distinction is by this statute made in reference to protectors—some of the clauses on the subject referring to regular protectors—or having a general application in this respect; whereas others are applicable to facts or cases that existed before the Act either was passed or took effect, and the protectors in the latter cases may, therefore, be termed transitory protectors. As to the former class—namely, regular protectors, the 19th section defines such persons, by enacting that if at the time when there shall be a tenant in tail of lands under a settlement, there shall be subsisting in the same lands, or any of them, under the same settlement, any estate for years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or any greater estate (not being an estate for years) prior to the estate tail, then the owner of the prior estate or of the first of such prior estates, if more than one, then subsisting under the same settlement, or who would have been so if no absolute disposition thereof had been made, shall be the protector of such settlement, so far as regards the lands in which such prior estate shall be subsisting, even though that estate has been charged or incumbered, or the rents exhausted, or the estate absolutely disposed of, either by the owner, or by reason of bankruptcy or insolvency, &c.; and an estate by curtesy, in respect of the estate tail, or of any prior estate, is to be deemed a prior estate; and also an estate by way of resulting use or trust for the settlor.

It is quite plain that, under the section just cited, either an estate for the life of a person himself, or an estate pur auter vie, is included, and so also would have been, unless expressly excluded, an estate for years absolute. But a most important change in the law was by that section effected. It is this. Before that Act, it was essential that the tenant to the præcipe should have been the owner of a freehold, whereas now he may be termor for years, provided that term is determinable with a life or lives. Furthermore, before that Act, if the person who would have been the proper tenant to the præcipe, in order to give validity to a recovery [that is a recovery at law, for as to an equitable recovery the rule was different] had made a disposition by deed of his lands, then the assignee, and not the assignor, should have been the tenant to the præcipe. But by the Act that we are discussing, actual ownership is thrown overboard; and the loss or alienation of the estate does not disentitle the alienor or the former owner to the office of protector. Now this is a most important improvement in the law, for, by the old law, this absurdity, if not injustice, existed, that it depended on the whim or caprice of, in many cases, a total stranger to determine whether an arrangement should be made for a family, and one that may have been by all the members of such family considered beneficial and for their advantage. There are, however, several exceptional cases—three in all—in which the Act makes the person in possession of the lands the protector. The first is where the lands were disposed of before the 31st October, 1834. The second is where a reversion or remainder in fee, or any estate in such reversion or remainder, was disposed of before the same date; and the third is, where a bare trustee, under a settlement made before that Act, would have been the tenant to the præcipe.

In those cases we may presume that the Legislature thought that there were vested rights that ought not to be interfered with, and those cases are provided for in the 27th, 28th, and 29th sections. In all other cases the Act in question makes the office of protector a quasi personal one, not depending on the ownership of the lands, although such ownership must originally have created the duty or office. This is obvious from the section that we have already referred to, viz., the 19th section, which in distinct terms enacts that the charging, or incumbering, or alienation of an estate by the owner, or the loss through bankruptcy or insolvency of such estate, shall nevertheless not operate to prevent such former owner being the protector.

An important consequence of that provision is the termination of many subtle questions that in former times arose respecting the validity of some equitable recoveries, on account of the difficulty of ascertaining in whom the equitable freehold was vested, and for that purpose investigations were necessary, in order to compare the income of the estate with the charges and incumbrances upon it. All this is swept away by the clause, that the owner of the prior estate shall still be the protector, although the rents may be exhausted, or the lands aliened, or lost in the modes mentioned in the 19th section.

The protector then is, under the statute, to be ascertained by reference to the prior estate, and such estate should be limited under the same settlement as the estate tail.

But it is plain, that an estate by the curtesy, could not in strictness be considered as one limited by the same settlement, as, for example, in the case of a female tenant in tail with remainders over, and she marries and has issue inheritable to the entail, and dies leaving her husband surviving. Here the husband is, by the express words of the Act, made the protector, and without his consent the issue in tail cannot make a disposition to the full extent authorized by the Act. And so too, an estate by way of resulting use, or trust for the settlor, the same not being an estate limited or created by the settlement, but one arising by construction of law, or an estate omitted to be disposed of by the settlement, is also expressly, by the Act, included under the terms of "an estate created under the settlement."

Now as to tenants in common, or joint-tenants for life, with remainders to their respective issue in tail, the Act (20 s.) applies the words "prior estate" to the undivided shares of such tenants; in fact, making each undivided share a separate estate under the settlement, and so making each tenant in common, or joint-tenant, as regards their respective issue, the sole protector, though as regards joint-tenants for life, it is plain, that after the death of one, the other, or others, can, for the life or lives of the surviving joint-tenants, dispose of their share of such estate.

As to femes covertes entitled to prior estates to their separate use, the law formerly was that their husbands alone were good tenants to the præcipe; now, however, by the 21 s. the wife's concurrence is most justly made essential to give validity to the alienation in order to bar the entail.

Who are by the Act excluded from the protectorship, we shall reserve for another article.

CURRENT TOPICS.

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Certificate Duty Bill is fixed for the 28th inst. We trust that the Irish members will be found one and all voting in favour of the reduction of this most grievous tax, which has too long been imposed upon this particular profession, amongst whose members are so many gentlemen of education and position, and by whom this tax is considered as an indignity. The reduction sought for is to render this tax merely nominal.

SOCIETY OF THE ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS OF IRELAND.

The general half-yearly meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday, in the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin. The chair was taken at two o'clock by R. J. T. Orpen, Esq., President.

Also present were: Messrs. Reeves, Beamish, Rea, Nunn, Findlater, Taaffe, Daly, Kift, Lord, Goodman, Lyle, Lambert, Hazlett, Ponclue, Kennedy, Fetherston H., Hinds, Roche, Macrory, O'Carroll, Jones, Oldham, Ellis, Anderson, &c.

The Secretary (Mr. Goddard) read the statement of accounts, which was very satisfactory, and showed an increase in the receipts. He said there was no notice of motion on the books with regard to any change in the rules.

The Chairman said he was glad to see that they had a balance in their favour in the bank.

Mr. John Rea asked had any report been received from the deputation appointed to wait on the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with respect to the abolition of the attorneys' certificate duty?

The Secretary said the matter had been postponed in Parliament until the 28th May, inst. The deputation had waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The second reading of the Bill for the Abolition of the Duty was brought before the House of Commons, and a majority of one decided on the postponement.

Mr. Rea thought the meeting should not break up without giving an expression of opinion on the subject. They should endeavour to give every possible support to Mr. Denman, who was entitled to the warmest thanks of the solicitors of the three kingdoms. There were 1,250 attorneys in Ireland, and they had power enough to hold their own against any Chancellor of the Exchequer in a case where justice was obviously with them. If they could not be permitted to practise without the payment of a tax, they ought to insist that the other learned professions (medicine, the bar, and he would not exclude the clergy) should be obliged to bear a similar burden. He (Mr. Rea) believed that the Belfast Society would give every aid in its power to the Dublin body. He would endeavour to have a public meeting convened in Belfast, from which a deputation should be sent, in connexion with the Dublin deputation, to the leading members of the House of Commons. He was of opinion that by decided action on the part of the attorneys of Ireland alone, the certificate duty could be abolished.

Mr. Hinds remarked that everything the Law Society in Dublin could do, had been done for the purpose of furthering the object in view. He thought there was a great want of exertion and agitation in the country districts, and that if Dublin had been more supported, they would have been more advanced in the effort to remove the matter of objection than they were at present. Personal exertion should be used, and efforts should be brought to bear on individual members of Parliament. Deputations had already gone to London from Dublin, Cork, Waterford, and Belfast, so that he must admit that, to a certain extent, the country districts had exerted themselves. The tax in question was insulting and invidious. It was not of the amount of money it cost attorneys that they complained, but of the distinction which was drawn between them and other professions, and which was a slur upon their body. So long as the tax existed, they were persons licensed to the profession as to a trade. They might call themselves a profession, but they were simply a trade. In a schedule he had seen lately of dues paid, he first read, "Asses (Spanish)," so much, and next, "Attorneys," so much (laughter). He thought the English solicitors, who numbered about 14,000, had not exerted themselves as they might. He hoped that everybody present would see the necessity of getting freed from such a tax.

The Chairman said that the Council of the Society had taken and was taking every possible step in the matter. He believed that the subject had been most properly broached by Mr. Rea. Some two years ago a resolution had been carried in the House of Commons to the effect that the tax ought to be abolished. However, they wanted something more than a resolution—an Act of Parliament.

Mr. Macrory said what they wanted was the spirit to work individually. If the attorneys of the three kingdoms had their hearts in any common object, and united with a genuine desire for its advancement, no body could do more than they. He would be inclined to trust in their own exertions to remedy the matter, and not to wait on their English brethren. In a schedule of taxes he had read, the attorneys were classed with hawkers, auctioneers, brokers, appraisers, and the like. He looked upon the tax as not only oppressive but degrading, while it did not keep the profession free from parties who were not entitled to be members.

Mr. Ellis said that he was sure a little more energy on the part of the London Society would provide a settlement of the question. The motion for postponement the other night was considered a very fair one by their most ardent supporters. Several of those on whom they chiefly depended did not vote; and yet the Government only carried the motion by a majority of one. That fact promised favourably as regards what the result would be when the question came formally before the Government on the 28th instant. He hoped their supporters would attend in the House on that occasion. The English provincial societies unanimously supported the measure for abolition, as did also the Scotch societies, and on the last vote, all the Scotch members of Parliament voted in their favour.

Mr. Rea congratulated himself and those present on the information which he had elicited. The game was in their hands. They knew the specific time, and would be perfectly prepared when it arrived. The people of Scotland were sensible, and they might be sure of them (laughter). They also had the provincial districts of England as a certainty, and he considered that metropolitan apathy was owing to want of information. It was almost impossible to create public feeling in London except by some great demonstration —some tremendous meeting in Hyde Park (laughter). Some measures should be taken to overpower the apathy of the London branch of the society. He (Mr. Rea) and others in Belfast practically knew nothing about the matter, until by accident he met the deputation in the House of Commons. In these days when justice was so lavished that the British workmen got a great deal too much of it (laughter), he did not see why the attorneys should be isolated.

The Chairman had no doubt that the Council would use every exertion between that time and the 28th to get as many votes as possible in England in support of the measure.

Mr. Lord said he had forwarded a petition on the subject to Lord Otho Fitzgerald and his colleague for their approval, and they had endorsed it.

Mr. Rea—How many members are there in the Society?

Secretary—451.

Mr. Rea said he had been an attorney since 1848, and he never paid a subscription with greater pleasure than that which he annually forwarded to the society. He thought it deserved more support amongst the profession than it received.

The Chairman said that the circulars of the society had been sent to the country districts.

Mr. Findlater hoped that Mr. Rea would exert, on behalf of the society, that energy for which he was remarkable.

Mr. Rea said that newspaper notice was far more valuable to the society than circulars.

After some further conversation,

Mr. Roche moved Mr. Orpen from the chair, and Mr. Reeves thereto.

A vote of thanks having been passed to Mr. Orpen, and acknowledged by him, the meeting adjourned.

ADMIRALTY COURT JURISDICTION.

Some weeks since the Government gave a substantial proof of its desire to further legislation in which the interests of maritime commerce are directly involved by the introduction of two Bills for enlarging the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, and for affording facilities for the litigation of causes arising out of the operations of the carrying trade, by conferring an Admiralty jurisdiction on some of the local courts, or on courts specially established for hearing and determining causes of the nature referred to. These measures have been criticised from various points of view, their chief assailants being members of the legal profession; but it is admitted that both bills are called for, and that, with certain alterations, by no means invalidating their principle or their purpose, they may be made useful, as they are certainly necessary, pieces of legislation.

There is, however, another measure which we should hope the Government has not lost sight of, though it has not as yet made its appearance this session. We refer to the Bill for amending the practice and procedure in the Irish Court of Admiralty. It is now four years since Mr. Maguire, then member for Dungarvan, introduced a bill on this subject, which he subsequently handed over to the Government. The bill was not then proceeded with, on the plea that it was expedient to refer the whole question to a Royal Commission at that time inquiring into the condition and procedure of the superior courts in Ireland. The commissioners reported without, it should be stated, any needless delay, and their recommendations, which differed but little from the proposals in Mr. Maguire's bill, were, it was understood, to have been embodied in a new measure. But beyond this nothing was done. The commissioners reported early in the session of 1864. Two sessions have since passed, and no progress has been made towards legislating upon a question affecting merchants, shipowners, and others concerned in the business of maritime trade. The evils inherent in the Court of Admiralty in Ireland have been so fully exposed in these columns, that we need not recapitulate them now. It is sufficient to say that the Court in question exists in the same condition as to practice and procedure, antiquated forms, delays, embarrassments, and cost to suitors, in which the commencement of the present century found it. The commission above adverted to did but repeat the condemnation pronounced by a commission that had been charged with an inquiry into the same subject thirty-five years previously. There is the less cause for any further delay in dealing with the question of the Irish Court of Admiralty, that the subject is, and has been for the past three years, absolutely ripe for legislation. The Government Bill of 1864 had been adopted as to its principle by the House of Commons. There was no difficulty even as to details. The clauses relating to salaries and compensations had passed the Treasury, and the measure, to all appearance, was about to become law when it was suddenly shelved. We are fully conscious of the value of the two measures of Admiralty reform before Parliament, and we trust to see them proceeded with, now that the hands of the Government are comparatively free; but we should be concealing our sincere opinion if we did not say that none of the changes contemplated by these bills are matters of such pressing necessity at the present moment as the amendment of the law in respect to the Irish Court of Admiralty. Notwithstanding the defects and abuses in that Court, its practice and procedure, the business has increased, for the simple reason that commerce is gradually expanding, and the Court of Admiralty at Dublin is the only tribunal in Ireland before which suitors can bring a maritime cause with any chance of its bearings being understood. But, in its present condition, it would be in many cases a wiser course on the part of litigants to abandon even good causes and to submit to wrong rather than to the delays, expense, and inconvenience inseparable from the existing mode of procedure in the Irish Court. This is a matter which touches our merchants and shipowners on this side of the Channel, as well as our friends in Ireland. No man can say when he may have a collision, or a salvage-claim to meet, originating in Irish waters, and referred to the Irish Court of Admiralty. It is, therefore, the common concern of the shipping and mercantile interests that there shall be in Ireland a court as competent to deal with maritime causes as that in this country, that its procedure shall be unembarrassed by antiquated and useless forms, and that justice shall be administered promptly, and at a reasonable cost. If we are about to afford additional facilities for the administration of maritime law in this country by the establishmect of local tribunals, or by conferring an Admiralty jurisdiction on those already established, it is surely somewhat inconsistent to have suitors in Ireland to be dealt with by a court which has been condemned, both as to its constitution and procedure, by no less than two Royal Commissions. We feel that this is a matter which should not be suffered to rest, and that it is the duty of those Irish members, more particularly who represent maritime constituencies, to see that it is no longer overlooked by the Government.—Mitchell's Maritime Register.

CONNOLLY v. CONNOLLY.

May 16.—Practice—Signature of Junior Counsel to Pleadings—Privileges of Junior Bar.

When this case was called on, J. A. Phillips on behalf of the Junior Bar, mentioned that the petition of appeal had not been signed by Junior Counsel, nor had any Junior Counsel been instructed on behalf of the appellants up to a few minutes before the hearing.

Sullivan, Q.C., who appeared with Sherlock, Q.C., and Meldon, for the appellants, stated that no one was more anxious to protect the rights of the Junior Bar than he was, and that he had directed a brief to be given to Junior Counsel, and that the brief had been given.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said that he was not prepared to say that the petition of appeal was a pleading. With respect to the question as to the time at which the brief had been given to junior counsel he could not enter into that.

BOURKE v. FETHERSTON.

May 13.—Practice.—Notice served out of Court.

Berkeley, Q.C., was about to move a motion, notice of which had been served out of Court, when the Registrar stated that the notice was irregular in not stating that the motion would be made "at the sitting of the Court."

May 14.—Receiver—Vacating Recognizance.

Falloon, on behalf of the receiver in this cause and matter, moved for an order to vacate his recognizance and discharge him as such receiver. It appeared that the lands over which the receiver had been appointed had been sold in the Landed Estates' Court two years ago, and side bar orders had been entered discharging him as receiver off the lands. There was now produced a ruling of the Receiver Master, directing the receiver's account to pass, and, as it was a final account, that he should retain the balance in his hands until further order. The account also was produced, but as the account was not certified by the Receiver Master to be a final one, His Honor was of opinion he could not vacate the recognizance till that certificate was given.

The matter was mentioned to Master Fitzgibbon, who stated that by his ruling "until further order" was meant that as there was no order directing the investment or application of the balance in the receiver's hands, the further order meant the order of the Rolls Court, which Court, being satisfied that the receiver had properly dealt with such money in his hands, would then direct the vacating the recognizance; and on this order being produced in the Receiver Master's office, the account was then marked final. It was not the practice except in cases under the 15th section to mark the receiver's account as final unless on an order of the Court directing the receiver's recognizance to be vacated. In 15th section petition matters the account was marked final, the Master having entire jurisdiction.

The MASTER of the ROLLS, on this statement being made to him, made the order as sought.

MAY 9, 11.—Certiorari—New Trial in Criminal Cases.

This was a motion on behalf of the prisoner for a conditional order for a certiorari to bring up the proceedings with the view of obtaining a new trial. The prisoner was indicted for an assault, and tried at the last Monaghan Assizes before Fitzgerald, B. He was found guilty, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. It was now alleged that the learned judge had misdirected the jury, and that on that ground there should be a new trial.

M'Mahon and Randall M'Donnell for the prisoner.

The Court (O'BRIEN and GEORGE, J.J.) held that after judgment and sentence pronounced and in course of execution, a certiorari could not be granted as sought. There was no case in which the Court had ever interfered where the proceedings in the inferior Court had been completed as here.

May 10.—Making Absolute Conditional Order—134 G. O., 1854.

Kisbey, for the plaintiff, moved to make absolute a conditional order for substitution of service of the writ of summons and plaint.

W. D. Andrews, contra, submitted that without hearing the motion the conditional order should be discharged. The conditional order had been obtained on the 16th of April and served in due time. On the 25th of April an affidavit had been filed as cause, and notice of it had been served. The 2nd of May was the last day under the 134th G. O., of 1854, for serving notice of motion to make the order absolute, and the notice was not served until the 4th of May; then it was served for the 10th of May. When the time for serving notice of motion to make the conditional order absolute expired, the party showing cause went to the office to enter the side bar rule allowing the cause shown, but the officer refused to enter the rule, upon the ground that an affidavit had been filed by the plaintiff since the affidavit filed as cause.

The Court refused the plaintiff's motion with costs, and expressed its opinion that the side bar rule should have been allowed to be entered, notwithstanding the filing of the plaintiff's further affidavit.

COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LINDSAY v. CROTTY.

Costs incurred by Defendant after Payment of Money into Court.

Motion that the plaintiff be ordered to pay to the defendant all costs properly incurred by the defendant subsequent to the lodgment of money in Court by the defendant on the 22nd of February, 1867, or that the defendant's costs, when taxed, be set off against plaintiff's costs.

The defendant had brought £26 into Court, on the 22nd of February, and pleaded that it was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. On the same day, notice of the lodgment was given to the plaintiff, and at the same time, notice was served of a motion to change the venue.

The plaintiff appeared on the motion, and it was postponed on his application.

On the 8th of March, plaintiff drew out the money lodged on account, and, on the 18th March, he elected to accept the £24 in full satisfaction of his claim.

Bewley, in support of the motion.

We are entitled to the costs of the venue motion. In the case of Browne v. Julian, in this Court (IRISH LAW TIMES, page 156), the defendant got costs under similar circumstances.

Meldon, against the motion. The costs incurred here are the costs of the venue motion, and the notice was served, and those costs must have been incurred before the plaintiff had any opportunity of determining whether he would accept the money lodged in satisfaction.

The Court granted the motion with costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

LORD DE FREYNE v. FRENCH.

April 24—Action for Rent—Plea of Set Off—Order of reference to Master of the Court under the 6th sec. Common Law Procedure Act, 1856, "to take an account between the parties on foot of the defendant's plea of set off, and to strike a balance, and that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to enter judgment for the balance (if any) that shall appear to be due to him on the taking of such account."

On the matter coming before the principal Assistant, in the absence of the Master, he found a balance due, and declared his intention to grant a certificate to enable plaintiff to mark judgment, and refused to order the party having carriage of the proceedings to make up a report.

Palles, Q.C., and Harkan, for the defendant, now applied for an order to compel the Master to withhold his certificate until he had made up a report.

Hemphill, Q.C., and J. B. Murphy, for plaintiff, contended that the reference under this section, though made to the Master, was not made to him qua Master, but qua arbitrator, that his decision could not be reviewed by the Court, and that the words of the order contemplated the plaintiff's obtaining a certificate at once.

The Court held that the defendant was entitled to have a report made up, and that this Court could compel the Master to make it up; but they expressed no opinion as to the power to review the rulings embodied in the report.

May 6.—Practice—Costs incurred by Defendant after Payment of Money into Court.

Action for Goods Sold and Delivered—Defence filed and money paid into Court, December 18, 1866. December 21st defendant served notice of motion to change the venue. January 3rd, 1867, plaintiff's attorney wrote to defendant's attorney in Belfast, stating intention to draw money out of Court in full satisfaction of claim. This letter was received on the 4th January in Belfast, and the defendant's notice was served same day in Dublin, and granted without opposition.

Weir, for defendant, now sought to obtain the cost of that motion.

Monroe, contra.

The Court held that the plaintiff had had time enough to make up his mind between the 21st December and 4th January, and that defendant was entitled to costs of the motion.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by VAL. J. COPPINGER, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

In the Matter of JAMES BOYCE and SAMUEL BOYCE, Owners and Petitioners.

May 1st, 1867.—The rule laid down in Re Wilson's Estate, 1, I., R. Eq., does not in all cases deprive the owner of an insolvent estate of the costs of sale. Circumstances under which such costs were allowed in priority to the incumbrances, there being a deficient fund.

In this case the Examiner in settling the final schedule of incumbrances, had placed the owners and petitioners' costs of sale last upon the schedule, upon the ground that the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to discharge all charges thereon. The solicitors for the owners and petitioners, filed an objection to the schedule, and claimed to be placed upon the schedule.

F. Dames, in support of the objection, relied upon two grounds put forward by the affidavit of the solicitors, who stated that before the petition was presented, the owners had been greatly pressed by some of the creditors for payment, and that, being unable to meet the demands, they, with the assent of the creditors, presented the petition for sale. They further stated that the owners, or one of them, were, or was entitled to equitable interests in certain charges on the estates, which would be defrayed out of the purchase money, and inasmuch as a petition, presented by them in their capacity of incumbrancers, would have entitled them to the costs with their demand, they should not be deprived of them by reason of the petition having been presented by them as owners, and not as incumbrancers.

James Wilson, for an incumbrancer upon the schedule, argued that the circumstances did not form any special ground for a departure from rule in Re Wilson, 1 Ir. Rep. Eq. 92.

The Court allowed the objection on both grounds.

May 15.—Opening Sale, 27th Rule—Landed Estates' Act, sec. 55.

Boston, for the owner, moved that Lot No. 3 on the rental should be again set up for sale. It appeared from the affidavit of E. Burke that the estate was advertised for sale on Friday, the 10th inst., and the sum bid for Lot No. 3 having been deemed inadequate, it was withdrawn, and the sale adjourned by the Court. At the time the sale was so adjourned, a Dr. Cloran, of Loughrea, was the highest bidder. After Dr. Cloran had left court, under the impression that the sale was adjourned, and other estates were disposed of, the solicitor having the carriage of the sale received a private offer of £2,900 from a Mr. Dalton out of court, which was submitted to the Judge, and accepted. Dr. Cloran was prepared to bid a considerably larger sum for the lot than it was sold for.

M'Dermott for the purchaser, contended that the sum bid was the fair value of the lot, as Lot No. 2, being of greater value in the rental, was sold for the same sum. That the Court announced at the time that, if a sum of £2,800 was offered, the lot would not be withdrawn; that Dr. Cloran did not offer that sum.

Boston—Mr. Dalton was in court, and did not outbid Dr. Cloran. Lot 3 was the house and demesne lot, and is not to be valued as Lot 2, by the quantity of land.

Dobbs, J.—By the 27th rule, which has the same force as the Act, no sale can be opened solely by reason of an advance being made in price.

Boston—We seek to re-open the sale, not alone on the grounds of an advance in price, but on the grounds of surprise. The sale was publicly adjourned, and purchasers, who had come to bid, left under the impression that nothing further would be done without public notice. The present purchaser was in court, and did not outbid Dr. Cloran; but, after all competition was out of the way, he makes a private bid out of court. This was a surprise, of which the owner and the creditors have reason to complain. The question is one of great importance to the public. It is a hardship on intending purchasers, after the trouble and expense of inquiry into the value of an estate, and attending the sale, to be subjected to inconvenience and disappointment as in this case.

Dobbs, J.—I cannot listen to this argument from inconvenience or surprise. This Court has power, under the Act, to sell by public sale or private contract, at any time and in such manner as it may think fit. The present motion is pressed on the grounds that an intending purchaser has been disappointed. Being satisfied that the price was fair, I cannot consider this inconvenience or disappointment grounds for opening this sale, and I refuse the motion, the purchaser to have his costs out of the estate.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Reported by John Levy, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before Miller, J.

Re Bell, a Bankrupt.

April 29.—Reckless Trading—Obtaining Credit by false Representations—Suspension of Certificate.

The bankrupt was a trader and commission agent in Belfast, and came up for final examination.

Dr. Seeds for the assignees, Messrs. Watkins and Company, brewers.

M'Namara, Solictor for the bankrupt.

It appeared that the bankrupt commenced to sell porter on commission for the Messrs. Watkins; he was to get ten per cent. on all of the sales, and to secure the debts. He went on until the account ran up to three or four hundred pounds, when he was required to give some security besides his own; he wrote to them stating that his mother would give the required security, and, on that representation, they increased the debt considerably, and, subsequently, his mother refused to go security for any amount. On this ground, and on the ground that he traded recklessly, the passing of his examination was opposed. It was stated that, by those false representations, he had obtained porter to the amount of about five hundred pounds, and there were very little assets to divide amongst his creditors.

Miller, J., said the fact of a man engaging in a trade which he did not understand was no extenuation; if he did not understand the trade, he should not have engaged in it. 'It appeared that by misrepresentation, he obtained goods from Messrs. Watkins to the amount of five hundred pounds. If such a course were permitted, there would be an end to all credit between merchants and retailers. Although he had received a favourable report from the official assignee, still he felt it was a case where he should suspend the certificate for twelve months, with liberty, at the expiration of six months, to apply to the Court to obtain the certificate. He thought it hard to keep a young man out of trade for any time; but it was necessary, for the sake of example, that every deviation from commercial rectitude should be punished, and he had no doubt that Messrs. Watkins opposed the bankrupt on the same principle. Certificate suspended for twelve months.

Final Examination—Want of Books—Collusion with one Creditor to defeat another—Alleged making away with property.

The bankrupt was a trader in Longford, and came up for final examination

Kernan, Q.C., for creditor.

Levy for the bankrupt.

Miller, J., after hearing the evidence, said the case was one where he could not, consistently with the interest of trade, pass the final examination. Evidence had been given of the removal of property, and although none had been discovered, yet where the bankrupt had no books or accounts to prove the truth of his schedule, which appeared to be almost wholly unvouched, the fair presumption was that property had been made away with, and that bankrupt had not given a full and true discovery of his estate and effects. As to his conduct with regard to Mr. Wilson, the petitioning creditor, nothing could be worse; he made a composition of ten shillings in the pound with his creditors in 1865, but he gave Wilson nothing, and then when he took a step to get something, the bankrupt entered into collusion with his father-in-law, and had a writ served so as to come in before Wilson's; that writ was followed by a judgment and execution under which his father-in-law sold them out, leaving nothing for Wilson. He would adjourn the examination, sine die, with liberty to apply to open it at any time the bankrupt could make a better case.

NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT.

ARMAGH ASSIZES, April 12.

Reported by R. DAMES, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before FITZGERALD, B.

MURPHY v. BURNS.

CIVIL BILL APPEAL.

This was an ejectment on the title brought by the official and trade assignees of Mary M'Mahon and Hugh M'Mahon, her husband, against the said Hugh M'Mahon and persons claiming under him.

It appeared that the premises in question were held under a lease for three lives, two of which were still in being, made to one Bernie, and that Bernie had, many years ago, by an agreement not under seal, disposed of his interest to one Mageny; that Mageny had died intestate, leaving the said Mary M'Mahon (then Mageny), his widow, and that she had remained in possession after his death, and had married the defendant, Hugh M'Mahon; that Hugh M'Mahon had become insolvent, and that his interest (whatever it might be) in the premises had passed to his assignees; there had been a decree below for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed.

Harrison, Q C., on the part of defendants, contended that the interest in the lease to Bernie being a freehold interest, and having passed to Mageny, could not pass to Mary M'Mahon, but to the heir-at-law of Mageny; that such heir-at-law of Mageny should have been the plaintiff, and that for this reason the decree must be reversed.

FITZGERALD, B., however, held that the agreement between Bernie and Mageny operated at law to make the latter tenant-at-will to the former, and that the payment of rent by Mageny to the head landlord under this agreement being in ease of Bernie's covenant in the lease contained to pay said rent, operated to make Mageny tenant from year to year to Bernie, and that for this reason the plaintiffs on the record were the proper persons to maintain the ejectment.

MONAGHAN, March 10.

Before FITZGERALD, B.

In the matter of a presentment for constabulary police and the 6th Wm. IV., c. 13.

A sum of £69 10s. 1d. having been claimed for an extra force of police stationed in the county of Monaghan, the Grand Jury refused to present for the said sum, on the ground that the whole number of constabulary employed in the county was below, and had not at any time been above the ordinary Parliamentary establishment.

Law, Q.C., appeared for the Crown, and the learned Baron having intimated his opinion that the certificate of the Chief Secretary, given under the provision of the 6th Wm. IV., c. 13, was conclusive as to the legality of the claim made by the Crown, the Grand Jury undertook to make the presentment.

ENGLAND.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, MAY 16.

PETIT JURIES (IRELAND) BILL.

This Bill passed through Committee.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.

The House went into Committee on this Bill.

On clause 177 being proposed,

An HON. MEMBER moved that the Chairman do report progress.

The Committee divided, when the numbers were—

Ayes	53
Noes	92
Majority	—39

The clause was ordered to stand part of the Bill.

On clause 197,

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN pointed out that it was provided that the Act should come into operation next autumn, with the exception of the first part relating to the appointment of the Vice-Chancellor, which was to come into force immediately. Now, he felt perfectly satisfied that his right hon. and learned friend the Attorney-General for Ireland would discharge the duties of that office admirably, but then he did not think it well that there should be such an acceleration of the appointment as was proposed (hear, hear). The present Government had had an amount of legal patronage such as had fallen to the lot, in so short a time, of no previous Administration, and they could, he thought, afford to be in no hurry in the matter. Besides, he should be sorry to lose the services of his right hon. and learned friend in that House. The changes which had of late taken place in the office which he occupied by no means tended to facilitate the progress of the Irish business, and besides, he believed, the door-keepers had great difficulty in recognizing the faces of the various Attorney-Generals for Ireland, so rapidly had they succeeded one another during the last nine or ten months. (A laugh). He begged, under these circumstances, to move the insertion of words the effect of which would be to postpone the appointment of the Vice-Chancellor until the 1st of September, between which day and the 1st of November there would be ample time to draw up the general orders required by the Act.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND repudiated the idea that in framing the Bill he had any view to his own advancement. The fact was that he had no wish to cease to be a member of that House. Under the provisions of the Bill it was required that certain general orders should be drawn up, and in accordance with the 172nd clause of the measure of the late Government on which the corresponding clause in the present Bill was founded, it was provided that these general orders should be framed by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal, and the Vice-Chancellor, whose appointment for the purpose was, therefore, rendered a matter of immediate importance. (Hear, hear.)

Sir C. O'LOGHLEN observed that the clause went on to say that the general orders might be drawn by the officers named "or any two of them."

After some further conversation the Attorney-General for Ireland's amendment was agreed to, with the substitution of the words "1st of August, 1867," instead of immediately after the passing of the Act.

The clause, as amended, was ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The Chairman was then ordered to report progress, and the House resumed.

The COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL was read a second time.

The PUBLIC RECORDS (IRELAND) BILL—"to provide for keeping safely the Public Records of Ireland." The second reading of this Bill is fixed for Thursday next, the 23rd May, instant.

(From The Solicitors' Journal.)

The British juryman is a personage whose reputation is just now rather at a discount, and sooth to say, he has done many things of late years which have not raised him in the public estimation. We cannot say that he has not faults; he is obstinate—it is very hard indeed to get him to comprehend any abstract reasoning, in consequence of which he is apt to be led away by plausibilities, and so commit injustice—and it is almost impossible to induce him to confine his mind to one issue, so prone as he is to decide from a general or vague reference other considerations about which his opinion is not asked, and which will not be regarded in the result of his answer. Moreover, he is looked upon as not inaccessible to the influence of a pretty face. Occasionally, too, stories get afloat which hint that the juryman does not always go through even a form of deliberation. A tale was current upon a certain circuit, not very long ago, of a juryman who was overheard whispering to his foreman, "Well, I give you my vote now, but mind, you must vote for my man next time."

Whatever may be the defects of the juryman, he gets credit for most of them; it is both easy and fashionable to laugh at him, and of course in civil cases it is equally easy for the losing side to throw the blame upon him. Punch pokes fun at him every now and then, and a burlesque-writer hard up for a joke is always sure of a laugh, from the gallery at any rate, if he can manage a fling at the British juryman. In spite of all this, which we should be sorry to say is undeserved, the juryman solidly pursues his way, gets through his cases, grumbling at the work, and the arrangement of the panel—does, on the whole, a very good average of justice, and is, secretly, rather a favourite with the public. For although we, the great British public, abuse our juryman unmercifully, and although he sometimes tries our patience and our prisoners very badly, we are rather proud of him on the whole. We don't know whether or no he dates back to the days of Alfred the Great; historians tell us not, though we incline to think that they know nothing about it; we do know that we have had good reason, in past centuries, to be very thankful for the obstinacy of a few British jurymen who had their backs up and refused to be brow-beaten; and we believe that our juryman is honest.

It is to this last belief that he is indebted for the favour which, as we have said, he really enjoys, and the patience with which his occasional vagaries are borne; and we believe that he is fully entitled to the benefit. We do think that the juryman is thoroughly honest. Whatever the same individual might do as an elector, we may rely on it that he will never take a bribe as a juror. It would be too much to say that he will be always impartial in the strictest sense of the word; that he will never, in civil cases, be influenced by the consideration that the case may be his own tomorrow; or that he will never award too ample compensation against a board of works or a railway company from such motive; but we may say this—that he will not take a downright bribe, and that if we compare him with jurymen in some other parts of the world, we shall find reason for being well contented with our own. The juryman, however, has had rather a hard time of it lately, and we will do him a good turn by giving our readers the opportunity of comparing him with a certain jury whose verdict was recently set aside by the Court of Common Pleas at Philadelphia, U.S.

The jury in question were what is called a "road jury," viz., a jury empannelled to assess the compensation in respect of the property to be taken under compulsory powers or for public works. Certain private property being required by the city of Philadelphia for the formation of a public park or pleasure-ground, a jury was empannelled to assess the compensation. In due time they delivered their report, which, at the instance of the city solicitor, was afterwards set aside by the Court of Common Pleas. The case is reported at another page, but as that report merely states the conclusion of the court, upon the evidence, we give a few of the particulars.

Mr. Wheeler, the owner of the Fairmount Rolling Mill, one of the properties which had to be valued by the jury, deposed that, while the case was pending, one of the jury came to him, holding in his hand, and showing a list of the claimants' names, with awards written against them, and, pointing to his name, said—"This is what we intend to do for you;" and his superintendent also found upon his desk, a note, in the following terms:—

"Philadelphia, December 2, 1864.

"Mr. Ervin—Dear Sir,—At a conference of a few of the jury, it was thought that your case would be a hard one to put through. Now, as an outsider, not wishing to say a great deal on the subject, I would state that if Mr. Wheeler expects to get his damages, he ought to do as I have done, come down. I wish the rhino. I am a property owner. They and your firm are better able to stand the press than I am. You can deposit the same in the bank in some other man's name, and then send them cheques, and all will be right.

"Yours, respectfully,
"P. O."

In addition to this, said the superintendent, "one of the jury came to the mill at Fairmount, in company with a strange gentleman whom I did not know, and I took him through the mill, explaining, as best I could, the different parts and their relative value, as submitted by the witnesses who were called on behalf of Mr. Wheeler; and as we walked out of the mill, he talked about the duties of road jurors in cases of this kind, and cited an instance where, I think, he had been on a jury, where the jury had been liberally treated, and the party that treated the jury liberally got good damages, whereas the others were small. I am not positive he said he was on that jury, my opinion is he said he was."

Some little while afterwards, three or four of the jury came to view the property, and the superintendent took them over the grounds, and afterwards, it being then night, gave them a supper. Nothing, he says, was said about money then, but a few days afterwards some other jurymen called, and "suggested that, inasmuch as all the jury did not get the good supper, he ought to take them out again." Which he did. There was a good deal of other evidence before the Court of instances in which members of the jury had come to those whose property they had to value, and "asked for something," and one of the owners appears to have spent an evening in treating the jury to lager-beer and similar arguments; he declared, however, that he had refused to give them money.

Upon this evidence the court set aside the report—i.e., the valuations of the jury, the ground of the decision being, not that the valuations were the result of bribery, for there was no evidence that money had actually been given them; but that the valuation of such persons as they had shown themselves to be, could not in any case be allowed to stand.

This case then shows to what a juryman may come. Our own juryman, we believe, is a long way as yet above this point. As an elector he might, perhaps, accept, if not "ask," for something; but as a juror he is incorrigibly honest. Whatever may be his faults, obstinate, dull, though he sometimes may be, let us give him credit for his incorruptibility, and rejoice that in this respect he is what he is.

NOTES OF ENGLISH DECISIONS.

(From the Law Times.)

Taxation of Costs—Master's Discretion.—The Master refused, upon taxation, to allow—1. Counsel's fees for consultation on demurrer. 2. Costs of a conference concerning special admissions, which saved the necessity of a commission. 3. A larger fee to junior counsel than a nominal one to take notes. 4. The refresher usual for a Q. C. to the junior counsel: Held, upon application to review the taxation, that these matters were within the Master's discretion, and that he had exercised that discretion properly: (Kidstone v. The Empire Marine Insurance Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 286. C. P.)

Breach of Agreement—Penalty.—Where a sum is mentioned as a proper sum to be paid under an agreement for a breach thereof the court will not grant an injunction to enforce the conditions of the agreement: (Young v. Chalkley, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 286. C. P.)

Security for Costs.—In an action brought by an administrator under Lord Campbell's Act for the benefit of the deceased's widow and children, the court refused to order security for costs to be given merely on the ground that the plaintiff was suing wholly for the benefit of others. Bramwell, B., says that the rule is not to order security for costs unless it is shown that the plaintiff, besides being merely the nominal plaintiff, is also in insolvent circumstances. And Martin, B., observed that the court ought not to order security for costs in an action brought under the Act by an administrator unless there has been something like practice in the case: (Larsen v. The Monmouth- shire Railway and Canal Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289. Ex.)

Error—Amendment of Pleadings—Where on a motion in arrest of judgment the court below has amended the pleadings, the Court of Error will not consider the propriety of the amendment, but will consider the pleadings as amended: (Indermaur v. Dames, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 293. Ex. Ch.)

Married Woman—Separation.—Where a married woman having separate property was living with her daughters away from her husband without his consent, but occasionally seeing him, it was left to the jury to determine whether a rupture had taken place between the husband and wife of such a kind as to deprive her of her authority to pledge his credit for necessaries supplied to herself and daughters: (Crocker and another v. Napper, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 295. Nisi Prius).

Retaking Goods—Excess.—A tradesman from whom goods are fraudulently obtained may retake them, but must not remain in possession of the house whilst the goods are being taken away: (Dixon v. Hewetson and another, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 295. Nisi Prius).

False Imprisonment—Payment into Court.—In an action for false imprisonment a plea of payment into court is not a valid plea. The refusal of a judge at chambers to strike out the plea on an opposed application decides nothing as to the validity of the plea: (Bennett v. Smerdon 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 296. Nisi Prius).

Newspaper—Registration of Proprietors.—The object of registration is not only to fix a person in case of libel, but also for goods supplied for the use of the paper: (Glennisson v. Robertson, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 298. Nisi Prius).

Probate Practice.—The executors under a will cited the executors and residuary legatees named in an alleged codicil, which revoked their appointment and altered the disposition of the real estate, to show cause why it should not be pronounced null and void. The executors cited appeared, but filed no declaration propounding the codicil. The Court, under these circumstances, allowed the executors under the will to cite the heir-at-law and parties interested in the real estate under the alleged codicil to see proceedings, and to appear and be made defendants thereto if they or either of them considered it their interest so to do: (Corner v. Parnell, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 299. Prob.)

Attesting Witnesses.—Where the parties whose names appeared as attesting witnesses on the face of a will which was disputed by the widow, declined to state the circumstances under which it was executed, the court refused to order their attendance for the purpose of examination, or to allow of interrogatories being put to them on the subject by the widow: (Evans v. Jones, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 299. Prob.)

Prosecution for Fraud—Costs.—Where a fraud has been committed by a bankrupt and other persons jointly, and they are successfully prosecuted, the costs of prosecuting all the persons charged jointly with the bankrupt in the perpetration of the fraud will be allowed out of the chief registrar's account: (Ex parte Allen, re Levi, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 270. Chan.)

Marriage-Settlement—Costs.—B. previously to marriage agreed to settle after marriage all of his household furniture on his wife for her sole use and benefit. At the time of the marriage B. had some furniture, his wife had some, and some was purchased subsequently. Three years after the marriage B., when in debt, settled on his wife and children all of the furniture then in his possession. Shortly afterwards he became bankrupt, and on the assignee in bankruptcy claiming the furniture on behalf of the creditors, a suit was instituted by the trustees of the settlement for a declaration that the furniture had been validly settled on the wife and children. It was held that the furniture was subject to the trusts of the settlement, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration to that effect with costs: (Brashier v. Wyatt, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 275. V. C. S.)

Composition Deeds—Assents.—It is not necessary that a composition-deed should be in existence when the creditors in writing assent to it, as required by sect. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; but it is necessary that the terms of the assents should be precise, and that the deed should correspond with them in every material particular: (Rutty v. Benthall, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 287. C. P.)

Contributory—Subscriber of Memorandum of Association—B. signed the memorandum of association for five shares, but never executed the articles of association. The shares were not entered in any of the company's books, and B. never paid anything in respect of them; but the directors afterwards allotted to him five paid-up shares. These were held to be in addition to and not in substitution for the five shares agreed by the memorandum of association to be taken, and that he was liable as a contributory for the amount of such shares: (Ex parte Migiotti, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 271. M. R.)

Misrepresentation in Prospectus—Acquiescence.—In June, 1855, B. took shares. In Jan., 1866, he instituted inquiries and found that the shareholders were dissatisfied, and that a meeting was to be held to discuss the affairs of the company, which he attended, but left in the middle of it. On July 3 the directors made a report, a copy of which was sent to B., which clearly showed falsehood in the prospectus. On July 6 B. paid calls, and on the 7th went abroad. On his return he made further inquiries, and found that a winding-up order was to be applied for, that if he supported it he would be a loser, but otherwise if he joined the directors in opposing in it. He was held to have precluded himself by acquiescence from claiming exemption on the ground of alleged misrepresentation in the prospectus: (Ex parte Blackstone, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 273. M. R.)

Contributory—Name wrongly upon the Register.—B., without authority from C., applied as his agent for shares, and C. was thereupon registered as a shareholder. On allotment C. wrote to B., repudiating the transaction, and calling upon him to "rectify the mistake." A call being made, B. wrote to the secretary informing him of the mistake, and requesting that C.'s name might be taken off the register. This was not done, and the company was afterwards wound-up. The Court removed C.'s name from the list of contributories, with costs: (Ex parte White, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 276. V. C. S.)

Practice.—Where a winding-up order has been made by the Court of Ch., a judge at Nisi Prius will not stay further proceedings in an action against the company after the cause has been called on and the jury sworn: (Henderson v. The Peruvian Railway Company, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 297. Channell, B.)

Contributory—Contract to take Shares.—Before incorporation the promoter of a hotel company requested E. to supply necessary articles to the proposed hotel, saying that he would be expected to accept shares for £1,500, and that the order would amount to £3,000. E. by letter assented to the offer, stipulating that scrip should be at once delivered to him, and that it should be in no way different from ordinary shares, and should be as readily negotiable; and that he should incur no liability, nor be called on to sign the articles of association, nor to pay calls, until all the goods were supplied and paid for in cash. He sent in the usual form of application for 150 shares, and paid the deposit of £75. The promoter replied at once, agreeing in the main to the terms, but introducing some variations, which were in the end acceded to by E. The company was then incorporated, and soon after a letter of allotment for 150 shares was sent to E. Nearly four months later E. paid 30s. per share, which was required to be paid on allotment; the certificates of the shares were handed to, and have ever since been retained by him, and his name was put upon the register as the owner of the shares. From that time he appears to have been treated as a shareholder, except that no calls were demanded of him. The hotel was never finished, no goods were ordered, and the company was now being wound-up: Held (reversing the decision of Wood, V. C.) that E., whatever his intention and understanding, had by his conduct concluded a complete contract with the company to take, and had taken the shares, and had thereby rendered himself liable to contribute to the payment of the creditors. Whether E. had a right to an indemnity from the company against calls or otherwise might be a question depending upon the consideration whether the agreement was or was not ultra vires of the directors: (Elkington's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301, L. J.J.)

RECTIFICATION OF REGISTER.—A shareholder seeking to have his name removed from the register on the ground of misrepresentation in the prospectus, and its difference from the memorandum and articles of association, must satisfy the court that he used due diligence to repudiate his shares, and immediately on knowledge of the fact, made his application to the court: (Jackson's case, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 278. V. C. W.)

RAILWAY COMPANY—ASSIGNMENT OF ROLLING STOCK—ILLEGALITY—LLOYD'S BOND.—The plaintiff, to whom a Lloyd's bond, given by a railway company, had been assigned in consideration of money advanced, and without notice of any illegality in connexion therewith, sued the company upon the bond in the name of the obligee. The action was compromised before judgment upon the terms that the company should execute an assignment of their rolling stock to secure the money advanced by the plaintiff, which they accordingly did. The defendant, an execution-creditor of the company, subsequently took part of the stock assigned in execution: Held, that upon the trial of an interpleader issue to ascertain whether the property in the goods seized was in the plaintiff as against the defendant, evidence tending to show that the bond was illegal was rightly rejected. And also that, whether an assignment by a company of all its rolling stock was ultra vires and illegal or not, as against the defendant, an execution-creditor, the assignment in question being a substitute for judgment and execution, the plaintiff was entitled to the goods: (Blackmore v. Yates, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 288. Ex.)

THE LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

NOTICE.

The preliminary examination of Candidates for Apprenticeship will be held at the Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin, on Friday, the 24th and Saturday, the 25th days of May, 1867, at eleven o'clock.

The final examination of Candidates seeking admission as Attorneys will be held at the same place, on Monday, the 27th, and Tuesday, the 28th days of May, 1867, at the same hour.

By order of the Council,
JOHN H. GODDARD, Secretary.

Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
18th April, 1867.

All Candidates to attend on Wednesday, the 29th of May, at three o'clock, p.m., to hear decision of Court of Examiners.

The following instructions to Candidates have been printed by the Court of Examiners:—

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR CANDIDATES.

1. The Preliminary Examination will commence each day at eleven o'clock, a.m., and conclude at half-past three, p.m. Candidates not in attendance at eleven o'clock, ready to be placed by the special examiner, will not, after that hour, be allowed to present themselves for examination.
2. On the first day printed papers, containing questions in history, geography, arithmetic, and book-keeping, will be handed to each candidate.
3. The answers to questions under the above-mentioned heads are to be written concisely, in a plain and legible manner, on separate sheets of paper for each subject, on one side only, leaving a margin on the left hand side of each sheet, and the name of each candidate to be written at the head of each paper.
4. The candidates are not required to answer all the questions in these papers. They will give such time only to each subject as will enable them to answer as many of the questions as possible within the time limited.
5. Candidates will not be allowed to consult any book during the examination, nor to communicate with, receive assistance from, nor copy from the paper of another; and in case this rule be infringed, the names of such persons will be immediately struck out of the list of candidates, and their examination will be forfeited.
6. After the examination has commenced candidates shall not leave the hall (without permission from the Examiners) until they shall have delivered in their answers; and any candidate who leaves the hall without such permission will not be allowed to return.
7. When each candidate has concluded his papers he is to fold up and endorse each set separately with his name and the name of each subject, and hand them to the Special Examiner at the Examiners' table.
8. Candidates postponed at Easter Term Examination in any year shall not be allowed to present themselves for examination until the next Michaelmas Term, unless the Court of Examiners, under special circumstances, see fit to dispense with this rule.

On the second day, the candidates will be required to write from dictation a passage to be selected by the Special Examiner.

Also to write a short English composition from a given subject.

And to read, translate, and parse short passages from first three books of Virgil's Æneid, Sallust, and Cæsar's Commentaries. Scanning, though not absolutely necessary, will be taken into account.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR CANDIDATES.

1. The Final Examination will commence each day at eleven o'clock, a.m., and conclude about three o'clock, p.m. Candidates not in attendance at eleven o'clock will not, after that hour, be allowed to present themselves for examination.
2. On the first day, papers of questions in common law, real property, and equity will be handed to each candidate.
3. The answers to questions under the above-mentioned heads, are to be written concisely, in a plain and legible manner, on separate sheets of paper for each subject, on one side only, leaving a margin on the left hand side of each sheet, and the name of each candidate to be written at the head of each paper.
4. The candidates are not required to answer all the questions in these papers. They will give such time only to each subject as will enable them to answer as many of the questions as possible within the time limited.
5. Candidates will not be allowed to consult any book during the examination, nor to communicate with, receive assistance from, nor copy from the paper of another; and in case this rule be infringed, the names of such persons will be immediately struck out of the list of candidates, and their examination will be forfeited.
6. After the examination has commenced candidates shall not leave the hall (without permission from the Examiners) until they shall have delivered in their answers, and any candidate who leaves the hall without such permission will not be allowed to return.
7. When each candidate has concluded his papers he is to fold up and endorse each set separately with his name and the name of each subject, and hand them to the Special Examiner at the Examiners' table.

On the second day, the Examiner will propose questions vivâ voce in Practice of the Court of Chancery and Common Law Courts, Probate Court, Landed Estates' Court, and Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

THE IRISH LAW TIMES.

DUBLIN, MAY 25, 1867.

WE proceed, in continuation of the several articles that we have already published on the law of entail, to point out who the several persons are who, by the Fine and Recovery Abolition Act (Ireland), are either expressly or by implication excluded from being protectors of the settlement, and who are, consequently, incapable of giving, by their assent or concurrence, validity to an alienation of the estate by the "actual tenant in tail." But before doing so, we would wish to refer to the 48th and following clauses of the Act, down to the 61st, which provide for the cases of the Commissioners (now Judges) in Bankruptcy, being the protectors as to bankrupt tenants in tail, and to the nature, form, and effect of the conveyance; and more especially, that by the 60th section the provisions in question are made applicable to lands of any tenure of the bankrupt in England, but in such case the deed must be enrolled in Chancery there. A similar provision is in the English Act as to Irish estates of English Bankrupts.

As to the persons who are excluded from the office of protector, it will be found that it was, by the 23rd section of the Irish statute, enacted that estates which, by the settlement creating the entail, were limited by way of confirmation, or estates that were by such settlement merely restored, should (save as to the case that we shall presently mention), so far as regards the protector, be deemed estates subsisting under the settlement. But the next section provides that where a lease at a rent should be created or confirmed by a settlement, the person in whose favour such lease should be created or confirmed should not, in respect thereof, be the protector of such settlement. This is the first class of persons excluded by the Act, in express terms, from being the protector; and that is in analogy to the English Act of 14th Geo. II., c. 20, s. 1 (called Pigott's Act), which permitted a valid tenant to the præcipe, in order to the suffering of a recovery, notwithstanding an outstanding lease for lives, otherwise the persons holding under the lease would have been, as entitled to the prior estate, whether for lives, or years determinable on lives, and contrary, in most cases, to the plain intentions of the settlor, the protector.

The next class of persons who are by the Act in terms excluded from the office of protector of the settlement, are women entitled in respect of dower, and save as hereinafter mentioned, a bare trustee, heir, executor, administrator, or assignee, in respect of any estate taken by them respectively in such respective characters. The apparent reason for this exclusion, as regards the heir, executor, &c., is manifestly the absence of any beneficial interest that they have in the objects of the settlement; and, as to the dowress, it is quite apparent why she should be excluded—viz., her interest, even if set out by metes and bounds, is limited to only a portion of the entailed estate. The Act having thus excluded the persons we have mentioned, found it necessary, of course, to make a provision for the supplying of their places, and we find, accordingly, that the 26th section directs that where there shall be more than one estate, prior to an estate tail, and the person who, but for the preceding clauses of exclusion, would be the owner, within the meaning of the Act, of the prior estate, the person, if any, who, if such estate did not exist, would be the protector, shall be the protector.

As for example:—A person may be either a lessee at a rent, or a lessee as a bare trustee, heir, executor, &c., and such estate may be recognized and confirmed by the settlement, but the remainder or reversion may be in another person for his life, with remainder to his issue in tail; here the tenant for life in remainder or reversion, would be the proper protector of the settlement.

But the case may obviously arise of there being, in fact, no other person in existence, who could be a protector; the case then would, we apprehend, fall under the last clause of the 31st section, and the Court of Chancery should, in such cases, be the protector.

Besides the persons who are thus in express terms excluded from the office of protector, it will appear that the settlor may, by the settlement itself, by implication, also exclude the persons who would be otherwise entitled to such office; for, by the 30th section, he may in the settlement appoint any number of persons in esse, not exceeding three, and not aliens, to be protector, and either for the whole or any part of the period for which the ordinary protector might have continued protector; but the ordinary protector may be in that manner also appointed, and the settlor may, by means of a power, perpetuate the protectorship, by authorizing the donee to appoint others, but enrolment in Chancery of the deed of appointment, or of the deed of relinquishment of the office of protector, within six months, is necessary, otherwise such deeds are to be void. But in case the persons so appointed should all die, or should all relinquish the office, then the ordinary protector, under the Act, is to act as sole protector.

This provision is, when considered carefully, of considerable importance in the settlement of estates. It is generally a matter of course to give to the parents, or at least to the father of issue in tail, a life estate; but in many cases it would be desirable to give to the issue the protection of disinterested and indifferent persons, in order to guard them against the designs of the parent who might desire to extort from his children a price or a premium for his consent to the alienation; for the proctector, it is to be observed, is subject to no control in the exercise of his consent; and the rules of equity are, by the 35th section of the Act, "declared not to apply to the dealings or transactions between the protector and the tenant in tail, on the occasion of such protector giving his consent to a disposition under the Act." And it would therefore appear that any bargain made by a protector for his consent would be beyond the reach of the equitable interference of the Court, which in other cases protects children from their parents' undue influence. (See Banks v. Le Dispenser, 11 Sim., 508, where a trustee of a settlement, with trusts to make a settlement in tail, was held a settlor, and so entitled to appoint a protector.)

There is yet another class of persons who are, of necessity, excluded from being protectors; we mean those who by reason of lunacy, idiotcy, or unsound mind, are incompetent to act. In such cases the Lord Chancellor, or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, or the person or persons intrusted with the care and commitment of the custody of persons found lunatic, is, or are, to be the protector; so in cases of the proper protector being convicted of treason or felony (see Re Wainwright, 1 Ph. 258), or of any person not being the owner of a prior estate under the settlement, being the protector, and being an infant, or if it is uncertain whether such last mentioned person be living or dead, then the Court of Chancery is to be the protector, and so if the settlor should declare in the settlement, that the ordinary protector shall not be the protector, but should omit to nominate any other protector, or in any other case, where there shall be subsisting under a settlement an estate prior to an estate tail, but there happens to be, at the time, no protector, as to the lands in which such prior estate shall be subsisting, in all such cases the Court of Chancery is also to be the protector.

It is thus enacted, that in six cases the Court of Chancery is to be the protector, but in the last case the office is to continue only so long as there shall be no ordinary protector, and so long as the prior estate shall be subsisting. It will be seen in the reports that in several cases this jurisdiction has been acted on. It is sufficient to mention the case of Grant v. Yea, 3 M. & K., 245, where in a case of lunacy, the Lord Chancellor, as protector, made the order to enable the tenant in tail to make the necessary alienation.

It may be further remarked that it has been said, and said judicially, that although the lunatic was resident in Ireland, but the estates were situate in Great Britain, then the Lord Chancellor of England, and not of

Digitized by Google

Ireland, is the proper protector (Re Graydon, 1 M'N. & G., 655); but we may observe that the order in that case never was acted on, and the language of the 31st section is by no means free from obscurity, and we do not mean to say that the case just cited is a conclusive authority on the point.

CURRENT TOPICS.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS OF IRELAND.

The following Address has been presented by this Society on behalf of the Profession, and the following Reply received:—

To the Right Honourable Francis Blackburne, late Lord High Chancellor of Ireland.

Sir,—We feel that we would not properly represent the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland, if we allowed an event of such importance in our Legal Annals, as your retirement from public life, to pass by, without an expression of our sincere esteem and admiration for your high judicial character.

We have seen you fill four eminent positions, any one of which would have tested the qualities of a Judge, and in each we have experienced the benefit of your great ability, acumen, and learning, as well as your incomparable patience, courtesy, and impartiality. As Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice, Lord Chancellor, and Lord Justice of Appeal, you have ever upheld with firmness the dignity of the Bench, while you extended to the practitioners of the Courts every reasonable indulgence, consideration, and confidence. In your hands both Law and Equity were, in their respective spheres, administered with equal power and ability, and with that calm unbiassed judgment which ever inspires confidence in the minds both of the suitors and the Legal profession.

We desire, at the close of a judicial career, so long, so eventful, and so distinguished, to express, on behalf of our profession, our best wishes for your future welfare, and to assure you that you will carry into your retirement the highest esteem and respect of the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland.

I remain, Sir,
On behalf of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland,
Your faithful servant,
Richd. J. Theo. Orpen,
President.

John H. Goddard, Secretary,
Solicitors' Hall, Four Courts, Dublin,
24th April, 1867.

To the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland.

Gentlemen,—It is to me a source of the most unfeigned gratification to receive such a mark of approbation as that which has been presented to me by the Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland.

Brought for many years, both as Barrister and Judge, into intimate connexion with members of your profession, I should indeed be wanting if I did not express the deep sense which I have always entertained of their high character and honour, and of the talents and skill which they brought to the discharge of their arduous and responsible duties.

For the manner in which you have alluded to my public services, I cannot feel too grateful. It affords me the deepest pleasure to find at the close of a long, and, I may add, of an eventful career, that I retire from the cares and responsibilities of public life, having gained the approbation and esteem of those whom I so highly value.

I should have wished (had my illness not prevented it), to have replied to your address in person, but my failing health forbids it, and I am, therefore, reluctantly obliged to send these few lines to your Secretary.

(Signed) Francis Blackburne.

There is no subject in which the public are more interested, and none for which less provision has been made by the Legislature, than the auditing of the accounts of bodies responsible either to the public generally, or a large and fluctuating number of shareholders, for the due administration of funds intrusted to their care. If such a system had existed in the case of Railway Companies, for example, many of the disastrous occurrences of the last few months would have been impossible.

An excellent model will be found by reformers in the Poor Law system of accounts and audit. There are five Commissioners (including the Chief and Under Secretaries, who are ex-officio members), and by them four permanent auditors are appointed, whose duty it is to examine each half-year the accounts of the several Poor Law Unions in their respective districts. Notice of the audit is publicly given, the accounts being previously open for the inspection of all ratepayers, who can, if they please, take copies or extracts. They can also attend at the audit, and object to any item of expenditure, when it becomes the duty of the auditor to examine into the matter, and decide on the legality or illegality of the item objected to. It is the duty of the Auditor to disallow all sums illegally expended, and to reduce exorbitant charges, and also to proceed for recovery of all disallowances or surcharges, his certificate of disallowance or surcharge being sufficient evidence. He is bound to certify as to the correctness of each half-year's accounts. All accounting officers are compelled to produce their accounts, and attend the audit, and any shortcomings are reported by the Auditor. To enable him to act with effect, he is armed with the important power of examining all officers or other parties on oath, in relation to any item in the accounts. If a similar system of audit had been adopted in reference to banks, railways, and other public companies, it is probable that the serious crash of the past twelve months would not have occurred; for, although it would be possible to deceive the Auditor as to one or two things, the power of examining on oath, and the prosecution for perjury afterwards, would have a deterring effect where moral considerations would have no avail. All Government departments, we may add, have to submit their accounts to the Audit Board, and the Ballast Board, who have been so strongly taken to task by the public and by the Corporation on this point, also submit their accounts to the Audit Commissioners. But their appears to be a great defect in the system of audit and keeping of accounts in the case of most of the public bodies, municipal and others. In the year 1835, the Commissioners on the State of the Irish Corporations reported to Parliament that out of 71 bodies the accounts of only 12 were kept, audited, and published; and that in the remaining cases the accounts were ill-kept, or not kept at all. Now, it seems perfectly clear that where auditors are appointed by the very bodies whose expenditure they are called on to examine, they cannot act with that independence which is so absolutely essential to the proper discharge of their duties; nor would they venture to disallow items or charge them to any of their employers. In the case of the Poor Law it is different. Formerly the boards of guardians paid half the salaries of the auditors, the Government paying the other half; but, in order to make the auditors wholly independent of the guardians, it was subsequently decided that the whole of their salaries should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. The result is no guardian now signs a cheque for what he is not perfectly satisfied to be a legal expenditure, as he would be obliged to pay the amount if the expenditure should turn out to be afterwards illegal, and not sanctioned by Act of Parliament. We believe that the Ballast Board are prepared to retort the charges brought against them by the Municipal Corporation as to the keeping of accounts. But whichever body may be found to deserve the palm in this respect, the public are the sufferers. No more useful practical improvement of our institutions could engage the attention of the Government than a thorough revision and remodelling of the provisions made for the audit of the accounts, not only of Municipal and other Corporations, but of other bodies of men intrusted by the public with the management of their money.—Daily Express.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY, MAY 20.

ADMIRALTY COURT, IRELAND.

Mr. PIM asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether it was his intention to introduce any measure respecting the Court of Admiralty in Ireland during the present session of Parliament; and, if not, whether he could promise that the subject would receive his early attention, with a view to legislation, next year?

Lord NAAS—We propose to wait till we see what course Parliament is likely to take with regard to the Court of Admiralty in England. As soon as the House has come to a decision upon that point we shall introduce a Bill for Ireland. I do not think it possible that the measure can pass this session, but by laying it on the table an opportunity will be afforded for the consideration of its provisions.

REGISTRY OF DEEDS IN IRELAND.

General DUNNE called attention to the fact that the fees received for the registration of deeds in Ireland were paid into the Consolidated Fund. He contended that this was an illegal appropriation of those fees, and expressed a hope that the Government would put an end to it.

Mr. HUNT said that of late years there had been no surplus at all, but, on the contrary, they had been obliged to make good a deficiency. No doubt, during some years there had been a surplus, and the money had been paid into the Treasury, but as that surplus was owing to the fact that certain work which ought to have been done, and for which payment ought to have been made, was postponed until the years when the account showed a deficiency, his hon. and gallant friend had not, as far as he could see, any cause of complaint.

THURSDAY, MAY 23.

PUBLIC RECORDS (IRELAND) BILL.—On the motion for the second reading of this Bill,

MR. CHILDERS and MR. LAWSON having made some remarks,

Lord NAAS said that if the House would permit the Bill to be read a second time he would take care to fix the Committee for such a day as would leave ample time to discuss the matter.

The Bill was then read a second time.

COURT OF CHANCERY (IRELAND) BILL.—Amongst the petitions presented to the House of Commons is one from Gerald Fitzgibbon, Esq., Master of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, for protection of his right to appoint to the offices of examiner and assistant clerk on the occasion of every vacancy.

COURTS OF LAW OFFICERS (IRELAND) BILL.

NOTES OF CASES.

[Specially reported for this Journal by the Reporters of the Council of Law Reporting in Ireland.]

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by EDMUND T. BEWLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

CONOLLY v. CONOLLY.

May 16, 17.—Joint-Tenancy—Severance—Merger.

Richard Conolly being possessed of the lands of New Haggard, in the County of Meath, for a term of years, by his will bequeathed his interest in those lands to his mother, Cecilia Nangle, for life, and after her death, to his nephews, John and James Conolly. After the death of the testator, and during the life-time of Cecilia Nangle, the parties interested in this term assigned the lands to John Conolly as trustee for them, to enable him to make a lease of a portion of the premises. In 1860 Cecilia Nangle died, and John and James Conolly became entitled, in possession, to the said term as joint-tenants. In the following year John Conolly died intestate, and a cause petition having been filed to administer his assets, a question arose as to whether there had been a severance of the joint-tenancy subsisting between John and James Conolly.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that the joint-tenancy had been severed, and from his decision the present appeal was brought by James Conolly.

Sherlock, Q.C., and Sullivan, Q.C. (with them Meldon), for the appellant.

Lawless, Q.C., Palles, Q.C. (with them Coppinger), for the respondents.

The COURT* affirmed the decision of the MASTER of the ROLLS, holding that on the death of Cecilia Nangle, there was a merger of the equitable interest which John Conolly derived under his uncle's will, and the legal estate which he already had in the lands, and that as John Conolly became thus absolute owner of one undivided moiety of the lands, and owner-at-law of the other undivided moiety in trust for his brother, James Conolly, there was a severance of the joint-tenancy.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by EDWARD S. TREVOR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

In the Matter of the 11 & 12 Victoria, c. 68, and the Trusts of the Settlement of NATHANIEL P. CAMERON and C. M. CAMERON, his wife, dated the 24th of May, 1859.

May 15.— Practice — Trustee Relief Act — Costs of Petition for Payment of Dividends.

Two sums of £4,000 invested in stock were by an order of the Landed Estates' Court of the 1st of December, 1866, transferred to the credit of this matter.

The trusts of the settlement as to the said sums, were to pay the dividends during the joint lives of Nathaniel Pryce Cameron and Charlotte Mary Cameron, his wife, for the separate use of C. M. Cameron, and after the decease of such one of them as should first die, to the use of the survivor for life, and, after the death of the survivor, in trust for the benefit of the issue of the marriage, as C. M. Cameron should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, for C. M. Cameron absolutely. There was no issue of the marriage living.

A petition was presented by Mr. and Mrs. Cameron for payment of the dividends to Mrs. Cameron, and a question arose whether the costs of the petition should be paid out of the dividends, or the corpus of the fund.

The MASTER of the ROLLS following In re Marner's Trusts, 1 W. N., 329, directed the costs to be paid out of the dividends.

J. F. Walker, for the petitioners.

KNARESBOROUGH v. EDMUNDSON.

May 17.—Practice—Ejectment—Endorsement of Service of Writ of Summons and Plaint—Amendment.

This was an action of ejectment. The endorsement of service of the writ on one of the defendants named Theophilus C. Moncrieffe, was "served on Moncrieffe, Brothers, by their servant, at their office, &c."

Daniel now moved for liberty to amend the endorsement, by erasing the words "Moncrieffe, Brothers," and substituting "Theophilus C. Moncrieffe." He cited Goff v. Fenlan (6 Ir. Jur., N. S., 41.)

FITZGERALD, B.—I cannot take upon myself to make the endorsement which the process server ought to have made.

Motion refused.

SHINE v. DILLON.

May 6 and 9.—Use and Occupation—Assignment.

This was an action for the use and occupation of certain premises up to 1st November, 1866.

The defence was a traverse.

Plaintiff proved receipt of rent from defendant up to 1864, and after that rent was received from one Sinnott, but the receipts were given to Sinnott in defendant's name. Defendant proved an assignment to Sinnott in December, 1864, and that plaintiff was aware of it.

The Judge directed the verdict for plaintiff, reserving leave for the defendant to move to enter the verdict for him.

A conditional order having been obtained by the defendant pursuant to leave reserved,

Sergeant Barry and Waters now showed cause.

S. W. Flanagan, Q.C., and Leech, in support of the conditional order.

The COURT, allowed the cause shown.

May 11.—Practice—Endorsement of Particulars.

The summons and plaint contained paragraphs in detinue and trover for certain goods enumerated, and also a paragraph for money received by defendant for the use of the plaintiff as such administrator, &c. No particulars were endorsed.

Gibson moved to have the third paragraph struck out, or to have an endorsement pursuant to the 11th sec., Common Law Procedure Act, 1853.

HUGHES, B.—Why did not you ask to administer interrogatories to the defendant? That would have been the proper course.

April 26, 29, 30, and May 9.—Equitable Defence.

This was action for injury to the plaintiff's watercourse by certain works of the defendant. The defendant pleaded an equitable defence, setting out that the injury arose from the removal of an embankment, which removal was necessary for the carrying out of some costly works of the defendant; that the plaintiff knew of these works during their progress, and of the necessary consequences of them, and raised no objection to them.

To this defence plaintiff demurred.

Frazer Harrison, Q.C., and Fulham, Q.C., for defendant.

Davis v. Marshall, 10 C. B. N. S. 697, discussed.

The COURT, held the defence was bad, inasmuch as it did not aver that the plaintiff knew that the defendant was acting on plaintiff's acquiescence, or that the acts relied on were such as would induce any reasonable man to think that the plaintiff acquiesced.

COURT OF PROBATE.

Reported by W. R. MILLER, Esq., LL.D., Barrister-at-law.

In the Goods of MARGARET EMILY POWER.

May 16.—Administration to Creditor—Married Woman—Separation—Order to Pay Pro Rata.

Mr. Porter moved, on behalf of a creditor of the deceased, to set aside caveats, and to get administration. The deceased, a married lady, had, under a separation deed, an allowance of £1,000 per annum, and had died intestate in November, 1866, leaving no issue, but her husband surviving, and leaving furniture, jewellery and other assets.

Dr. Ball, Q.C., for the solicitor of the deceased, asked for the grant; a large sum was due to him for costs, and he would be more likely to realize the assets, from his knowledge of her affairs.

Mr. Daniel, for another creditor, cited Proudley v. Fielder, 2 M. and K., 57, to show that the monies of the wife dying intestate vested in the husband surviving, against whom his client had an action pending.

KEATINGE, J.—The solicitor who conducted the business of the deceased is the proper person to get the grant, on giving security for the assets, and undertaking to distribute the assets among the creditors pro rata.

LANDED ESTATES' COURT.

Reported by VAL. J COPPINGER, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Before JUDGE LYNCH.

In the Matter of the Estate of MARIA LYNCH, Owner; Ex parte THOMAS WOODBYRNE.

Jurisdiction—Wife's Equity to a Settlement.

In this matter the petitioner applied to the Court for an order to have transferred to his credit a sum of £250, paid in on foot of a mortgage debt, to which the petitioner became entitled in right of his wife. On the part of the wife a claim was put in to an equity to a settlement. This was resisted on the part of the petitioner, on the ground that although no settlement was executed on the marriage that by a consent which was made a rule of the Provincial Court of the Archbishop of Dublin, Mrs. Woodbyrne had been awarded £52 a year, as permanent alimony; and also on the ground that the 37th section of the Landed Estates' Court Act gave no jurisdiction to the judges thereof, concerning a wife's equity to a settlement.

For the petitioner, John O'Hagan, Q.C., and Daniel

For Mrs. Woodbyrne, Samuel Walker.

His Lordship said that he was not prepared at present to decide that he had jurisdiction under the Landed Estates' Court Act to adjust the rights of the parties, and directed that the case should stand for a month for the purpose of having proceedings taken in Chancery for that purpose.

In the Matter of the Estate of CHARLES MOREL WILSON, Owner and Petitioner.

Order of Priority of Costs of Sale—Insolvent Estate—Owner Petitioner.

In this case, which has already appeared in our columns, S. W. Flanagan, Q.C. (with him Charles Leach), applied on the part of Henry A. Dillon, Esq., the owner's solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings, by way of further objection to the final schedule of incumbrances.

It will be recollected that on a former occasion Mr. Dillon had objected to the final schedule, on the ground that his costs were not placed in their proper priority, and Judge Lynch overruled the objection, on the ground that the general rule of his Court was that the costs of a petitioner should be in the order of his claim. The objection was subsequently re-entered, and a further objection, to a similar effect, was added, setting out the special circumstance that all the charges in priority to which the costs were sought to be inserted, had been created subsequently to the commencement of the proceedings—that the petition had been originally presented with the assent and approval of the creditors, and that the subsequent incumbrancers were all through aware of the pendency of the proceedings.

William O'Brien, as counsel for Mrs. Wilson, was heard contra.

His Lordship granted the application, remarking that it was to be distinctly understood that the general rule was, as he had before decided, the owner's costs should stand with his demand, but this was a case in which the rule might be modified in the discretion of the Court, inasmuch as he considered that the sale was necessary and approved of by the creditors, and was brought about under circumstances in which the Court could fairly say that it was prudent and necessary to bring the estate to sale. He also intimated that he understood that for the future Judge Dobbs would act upon the same general rule.

Solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings, H. A. Dillon.

ENGLAND.

(From The Times.)

The Digest of Law Commission, appointed last autumn, has arrived at the inevitable conclusion "that a Digest of Law is expedient," and has supported that conclusion by reasoning of almost superfluous cogency. It scarcely needed the authority of a Royal Commission to convince the educated public that what every one is bound to know, but no human being does or can know, ought if possible to be made intelligible. Sir Samuel Romilly long ago pointed out the difficulty of reconciling the well-known legal maxim, "Ignoratio juris neminem excusat," with that other maxim, "Lex neminem cogit ad impossibilia." The Statute Law fills some 45 quarto volumes; the judicial decisions which may be cited as precedents are scattered over 1,300 volumes; and the customs and principles of the Common Law must sometimes be sought in ancient records or treatises which are not included in either of these divisions. The result notoriously is that no one but a lawyer knows where to look for the law on any practical case, and that, as George III. used to say, a lawyer, however learned, knows little more than this. That such a state of things should have been allowed to get worse and worse for several centuries, and that even now there should be prejudices against improving it among some members of the legal profession, is surely a marvellous proof of that vis inertiæ which constitutes the vitality of chaos. To the people at large the obscurity and complexity of English law are like an ordinance of Providence, to which they submit, as they submit to the caprices of an English climate, not without grumbling, but without hope of redress. As no class suffers by it more than any other class, and as one very influential class profits by its maintenance, Law Reform has never become a hustings question, and it is probable that not a single petition has yet been presented in its favour. The House of Commons, therefore, has never made the effort necessary to grasp the evil, much less to grapple with it. Moreover, it is only the most successful and eminent lawyers who could obtain a hearing for any comprehensive measure of this kind, and few successful lawyers, whether before or after their elevation to the Bench, possess sufficient leisure, energy, or public spirit to undertake it. Thus it has come about that above thirteen hundred years after the publication of the great Digest of Roman Law by Justinian, and two generations after the publication of the French Code, since adopted by several European nations, when a great part of our own law has already been codified in the State of New York, and we have ourselves established an excellent code in India, a Royal Commission has just been instructed "to inquire into the expediency"—not of a Code, for that is still in the remote future, but—of a simple "Digest of Law."

A Digest, as defined by the Commissioners, is "a condensed summary of the law as it exists, arranged in systematic order, under appropriate titles and subdivisions, and divided into distinct articles or propositions, which would be supported by references to the sources of law whence they were severally derived, and might be illustrated by citations of the principal instances in which the rules stated had been discussed or applied." The Report proceeds to adduce several arguments in support of such a Digest. In the first place, it would be of especial value in legislation, of which the most essential condition is a clear exposition of the existing law, and which must needs conform, in respect of arrangement, to the system on which it reposes. Again, the labours of all concerned in the administration of the law would be vastly lightened by the existence of an authoritative Digest, while the student would for the first time realize that which Blackstone vainly endeavoured to supply. There is, however, a third advantage to be expected from the construction of a Digest, to which the Commissioners allude with more reserve than we need maintain. "It would give the ready means of considering, in connexion with one another, branches of the law which involve similar principles, though their subject matters may widely differ." In other words, it would bring out into bold relief the anomalous and, for the most part, arbitrary distinctions between the law of real and personal property, as well as between legal and equitable doctrines. It may safely be predicted that an artificial conflict of rights, such as is involved in the dualism of Common Law and Equity, could not live in the light af a Code, and would not long survive the appearance of a Digest. But even this is not all The process of compilation could not fail to disclose many flaws, ambiguities, and inconsistencies as yet but little known, yet pregnant with future perversions and failures of justice. To popularize law, in the highest sense, by publishing it in a compendious and accessible form, is to bring to bear upon its structure and operation that searching and exacting vigilance of public opinion which alone secures the efficiency of any institution in this country. It will not, indeed, enable every man to be his own lawyer, nor is it desirable that it should, but it will diffuse among all classes, except the most ignorant, a general knowledge of the rights and duties which attach to them, and if it does not diminish wilful breaches of the law, will almost certainly diminish litigation.

The report does not advert to the objections, such as they are, which have been alleged against stereotyping our so-called unwritten law. One of them, however, deserves consideration, if it were only because it suggests its own refutation. It is said that many principles and rules of law which govern judicial decision are too subtle to be moulded into definite propositions. Upon this point we are justified in expressing the most unqalified scepticism. We read in poetical literature of thoughts which are too deep or too exquisite for words, but that any conceptions which are directly to affect our persons and property should partake of this character seems to us a flagrant absurdity. A ratio decidendi which is incapable of lucid statement implies a pernicious confusion of ideas in the judicial mind, and reminds us of the tyrannical discretion claimed by ecclesiastical judges. Any "flexibility" which a series of precedents may possess, and which would be inconsistent with the precise language of a digest, is a necessary source of uncertainty and possible instrument of oppression. It must be remembered that no English judge is permitted to make the law, but only to declare it. The Commissioners justly observe that, in some instances, and especially in Equity, this difference is almost illusory, since the application of one analogy rather than another to a new combination of facts nearly resembles legislation upon it. The Judge, however, invariably states the legal premisses from which he draws the practical inference embodied in his judgment. These premises, then, admit of statement, and, if so, it is highly desirable that they should be stated once for all under legislative sanction, leaving the power of deduction or interpretation the same as heretofore.

The Commissioners do not enter into a detailed consideration of the second question referred to them—the best means of elaborating a Digest. Such a work, in their opinion, could only be accomplished at the national expense, under the superintendence of a new Commission. They submit that, whatever plan be adopted, "a certain number of functionaries must be employed at a high remuneration," and "there must be a considerable expenditure on the services of members of the legal profession employed from time to time in the preparation of materials to be ultimately moulded into form by or under the immediate supervision" of the Commission itself. To avoid the necessity of a large immediate outlay, they recommend that a portion of the Digest, sufficient to serve as a specimen, should be prepared in the first instance under their own direction. So modest a proposal will hardly provoke any hostility, but we fail to see any good reason why the great enterprise should not be commenced and prosecuted to its completion at once. It would, probably, not take so long as the building of the Houses of Parliament, or cost one-fifth of the sum expended on that single edifice. A grant of £30,000 or £40,000 a year for ten years would amply suffice for the production not only of a Digest, but of a Code worthy of the nation, and an imperishable monument of our jurisprudence. Half that time and money would give us a perfect Digest, which, if it be the first step towards a Code, is still more urgently required in the event of codification being abandoned. Why should we hesitate to give the order for it, or waste time in experiments which have already been tried for us in the United States? The utility of the end is beyond dispute; the proper means are indicated by the Commission, the composition of which could hardly be altered for the better; and nothing remains but to obtain the consent of Parliament, which is not likely to be refused.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.—The Attorney-General's Bills relating to bankruptcy and imprisonment for debt have been printed as amended in committee. Many of the amendments relate to the judicial and other members of the Courts. The office of the accountant in bankruptcy, which, under the Act of 1861, is to be abolished on the first vacancy, is now proposed to be retained, the important duty of auditing the accounts of the trustees of bankrupt's estate being assigned to that officer, in strict accordance with the Scotch system. Vacancies in the offices of judges and registrars of the court in London are to be filled by selection, in the first instance, from among the commissioners and registrars of the court in the country districts. Compensation to the holders of abolished offices is given on this principle: if the officer has served 15 years he is to retire on full salary; if less than 15 years, on two-thirds. Provisions are introduced for preventing the power of bringing a debtor to London from a distant part of the country by trader-debtor summons being used oppressively. The lists of creditors to be filed by the debtor are made more comprehensive. The time and place of the meeting for the choice of creditor's trustee are left unrestricted, to be determined by the Court according to the circumstances of each case. The remuneration of the trustee is to be fixed by the creditors, with interference by the Court. The trustee is to keep minutes of proceedings at the creditors' meetings, like the sederunt-book in Scotland. The grounds of suspension of the order of discharge are, in some points, made more clear, and the time previous to actual bankruptcy within which the commission of mercantile offences will entail punishment on the debtor is enlarged in various instances. The powers of the Court to deal with questions of reputed ownership and with adverse claims to parts of the bankrupt's property are usefully extended, so as to concentrate the jurisdiction in a bankruptcy as much as possible in one tribunal. The trustee is empowered to act on his own judgment with respect to suing for debts under £20. The mode of proof of debts against the bankrupt's estate is still further simplified. The allowance to the bankrupt for maintenance is left to the creditors, instead of to the Court, subject, however, to a general power in the Court to interfere in cases of hardship. A new power is inserted authorizing the payment of small sums due for dividend, without probate or administration, where the creditor dies before actual receipt of his dividend. The parts relating to arrangement by deed and to the liability of after-acquired property seem also to have received much consideration and improvement in detail since the introduction of the Bill.

THE LAW OF TRESPASS.

(From the Law Times.)

The following are the opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown, under two successive Governments, upon the law as applicable to the removal of trespassers upon the public parks. As it is equally the law as regards trespassers on all private property, the opinions of so many distinguished lawyers on a subject of frequent recurrence will be acceptable for future reference.

The first is the opinion of Sir A. COCKBURN, Sir R. BETHELL, and Mr. WILLES.

CASE.

1. Is there any authority to close the gates of the inclosures and exclude the public altogether during the day?

2. The gates of the inclosures being open, is there any authority to prevent the ingress of persons to the inclosures, those persons conducting themselves properly and orderly in their attempt to obtain ingress?

3. Supposing persons to have entered, and to preach, or play upon musical instruments, or to sing, does any authority exist to turn persons so preaching, or playing, or singing, out of the parks, supposing they do not obstruct a thoroughfare or cause a disturbance? and, if so, you are particularly requested to state what is the nature of the authority, and how is it derived.

OPINION.

1. We think that there is a right in point of law to close the gates and exclude the public from the parks.

2. We think that, the gates being open, there is a right on the part of the Crown to exclude persons attempting to gain admission; but we do not think this right should be exercised against particular individuals, unless in case of previous misconduct.

3. If persons who have entered commence to preach or play they cannot be turned out without proper notice to them that the permission or licence of the Crown to the public to enjoy the park is conditional only, and does not apply to persons who so conduct themselves; and the best way of giving such notice is by posting it up at the entrances of the parks. The authority to close and exclude the public from the parks is that which every landowner has to prevent the public from trespassing on his lands, for we are of opinion that the public have not acquired any legal right to use the parks by reason of the continued user under the licence and by favour of the Crown.

The other is the opinion of Sir HUGH CAIRNS and Mr. BOVILL, Q.C.:
